Date and Time: Monday, October 23, 2023 11:31:00 AM CST

Job Number: 208661110

Documents (100)

1. [TYR Sport, Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153406]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

2. [In re Ebay Seller Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19480]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

3. [Precision CPAP, Inc. v. Jackson Hosp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20336]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

4. [Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23057]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

5. [Midwest Agency Servs. v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22457]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

6. Dicar, Inc. v. Stafford Corrugated Prods., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23667

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

7. Kearse v. Kaplan, Inc., 692 F. Supp. 2d 398

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

8. Korea Kumho Petrochemical Co. v. Flexsys Am. LP, 370 Fed. Appx. 875

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

9. Microsoft Corp. v. Franchise Tax Bd., 2010 Cal. Super. LEXIS 2977

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

10. Plush Lounge Las Vegas LLC v. Hotspur Resorts Nev., Inc., 371 Fed. Appx. 719

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

11. Westfield Ins. Co. v. Gil Behling & Son, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24328

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

12. TYR Sport, Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear, Inc., 709 F. Supp. 2d 802

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

13. Flores v. El Maint. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25583

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

14. Grant v. Adventist Health Sys. Sunbelt Health Care Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29241

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

15. Shipp v. Donaher, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28409

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

16. Kroger Co. v. Sanofi-Aventis, 701 F. Supp. 2d 938

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

17. In re TFT-LCD Antitrust Litig., 267 F.R.D. 583

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

18. Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel Ltd., 122 Haw. 423

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

19. Fox v. Good Samaritan L.P., 801 F. Supp. 2d 883

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

20. King Drug Co. of Florence v. Cephalon, Inc., 702 F. Supp. 2d 514

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

21. Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp. (In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig.), 699 F. Supp. 2d 730

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

22. Winn v. Alamo Title Ins. Co., 372 Fed. Appx. 461

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

23. Active Disposal, Inc. v. City of Darien, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32687

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

24. Bayer Schering Pharma Ag v. Watson Pharms., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 161986

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

25. Boyd v. J.E. Robert Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140905

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

26. In re Title Ins. Antitrust Cases, 702 F. Supp. 2d 840

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

27. Mun. Revenue Serv., Inc. v. Xspand, Inc., 700 F. Supp. 2d 692

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

28. Univac Dental Co. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 702 F. Supp. 2d 465

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

29. Animal Sci. Prods. v. China Nat'l Metals & Minerals Imp. & Exp. Corp., 702 F. Supp. 2d 320

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

30. LaFlamme v. Societe Air Fr., 702 F. Supp. 2d 136

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

31. Compliance Mktg. v. Drugtest, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34315

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

32. In re Evanston Northwestern Healthcare Corp. Antitrust Litig., 268 F.R.D. 56

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

33. Kilgore v. KeyBank, N.A., 712 F. Supp. 2d 939

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

34. Perinatal Med. Group, Inc. v. Children's Hosp. Cent. Cal., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36694

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

35. Cottage Emporium, Inc. v. Broadway Arts Ctr., L.L.C., 2010 N.J. Super. Unpub. LEXIS 835

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

36. Fayus Enters. v. BNSF Ry., 602 F.3d 444

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

37. [Golden Gate Pharm. Servs. v. Pfizer, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47896]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

38. [Howard Hess Dental Labs. Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 602 F.3d 237]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

39. [Lopez v. Wash. Mut. Bank, F.A., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38307]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

40. [Durell v. Sharp Healthcare, 183 Cal. App. 4th 1350]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

41. [EcoDisc Tech. AG v. DVD Format/Logo Licensing Corp., 711 F. Supp. 2d 1074]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

42. [Datel Holdings Ltd. v. Microsoft Corp., 712 F. Supp. 2d 974]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

43. Leggett v. Duke Energy Corp., 308 S.W.3d 843

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

44. Tyr Sport, Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153408

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

45. Advanced Ion Beam Tech., Inc. v. Varian Semiconductor Equip. Assocs., 721 F. Supp. 2d 62

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

46. Pa. Dep't of Banking v. NCAS of Del., LLC, 995 A.2d 422

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

47. Ark. Carpenters Health & Welfare Fund v. Bayer AG, 604 F.3d 98

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

48. [POURfect Prods. v. KitchenAid, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42890]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

49. [TYR Sport, Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear, Inc., 709 F. Supp. 2d 821]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

50. [Chavez v. Bank of Am., N.A., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44369]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

51. [Wynne Sys. v. Mobile Storage Grp., Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153722]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

52. [Antoine v. Star Ledger, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44294]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

53. DCI Solutions, Inc. v. Urban Outfitters, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44438

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

54. Shell Co. (P.R.) v. Los Frailes Serv. Station, 605 F.3d 10

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

55. City of New York v. Group Health, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60196

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

56. E-Z Roll Off, LLC v. County of Oneida, 2010 WI App 76

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

57. Integrated Sys. & Power, Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 713 F. Supp. 2d 286

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

58. [ADA v. Cigna Corp., 605 F.3d 1283]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

59. [Tese-Milner v. Diamond Trading Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143934]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

60. [Rochester Drug Coop. v. Braintree Labs., 712 F. Supp. 2d 308]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

61. [AstraZeneca AB v. Mylan Labs., Inc. (In re Omeprazole Patent Litig.), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50049]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

62. [Halton Co. v. Streivor, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50649]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

63. [Am. Needle, Inc. v. NFL, 560 U.S. 183]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

64. Colonial Med. Group, Inc. v. Catholic Healthcare West, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51350

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

65. Varian Semiconductor Equip. Assocs. v. Advanced Ion Beam Tech., Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51376

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

66. Yakima Valley Mem. Hosp. v. Wash. State Dep't of Health, 717 F. Supp. 2d 1159

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

67. Ice Cream Distribs. of Evansville, LLC v. Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52985

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

68. Watkinson v. MortgageIT, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53540

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

69. Downs v. Insight Communs. Co., L.P., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54577

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

70. Emulex Corp. v. Broadcom Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153231

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

71. Warren Gen. Hosp. v. Amgen Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56220

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

72. Danner Constr. Co. v. Hillsborough County, 608 F.3d 809

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

73. United States v. Coleman, 609 F.3d 699

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

74. In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61160

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

75. Rectrix Aerodrome Ctrs. v. Barnstable Mun. Airport Comm'n, 610 F.3d 8

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

76. Sterling Merch., Inc. v. Nestle, S.A., 724 F. Supp. 2d 245

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

77. Manabat v. Sierra Pac. Mortg. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70377

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

78. Deutscher Tennis Bund v. ATP Tour, Inc., 610 F.3d 820

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

79. [Romero v. Philip Morris Inc., 148 N.M. 713]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

80. [In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65023]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

81. [In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65037]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

82. [Fox v. Good Samaritan L.P., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70447]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

83. [In re Wholesale Grocery Prods. Antitrust Litig., 722 F. Supp. 2d 1079]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

84. [Coalition for ICANN Transparency, Inc. v. VeriSign, Inc., 611 F.3d 495]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

85. Clayworth v. Pfizer, Inc., 49 Cal. 4th 758

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

86. In re Puerto Rican Cabotage Antitrust Litig., 269 F.R.D. 125

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

87. Whelan v Toughman, Inc., 28 Misc. 3d 1207(A)

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

88. Sullivan v. DB Invs., Inc., 613 F.3d 134

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

89. Xcaliber Int'l v. AG La., 612 F.3d 368

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

90. United States v. Daily Gazette Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85553

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

91. Facebook, Inc. v. Power Ventures, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93517

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

92. Ackerman v. Coca-Cola Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73156

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

93. Advanced Microtherm, Inc. v. Norman Wright Mech. Equip. Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152477

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

94. Baker v. Aegis Wholesale Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73760

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

95. [Championsworld LLC v. United States Soccer Fedn., Inc., 726 F. Supp. 2d 961]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

96. [Fleischman v. Albany Med. Ctr., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73220]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

97. [Trailer Bridge, Inc. v. Ill. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73970]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

98. [Fleischman v. Albany Med. Ctr., 728 F. Supp. 2d 130]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

99. [Race Tires Am., Inc. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corp, 614 F.3d 57]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

100. [Bodet v. Charter Communs. Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87088]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Apr 23, 2009 to Dec 31, 2022

TYR Sport, Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear Inc.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

March 3, 2010, Decided; March 3, 2010, Filed

SACV 08-00529-JVS (MLGx)

Reporter
2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153406 *

TYR Sport Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear Inc., et al.

Prior History: TYR Sport Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear Inc., 679 F. Supp. 2d 1120, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66118 (C.D. Cal., May 27, 2009)

Core Terms

swimmers, Swimming, wear, Team, disparagement, antitrust, suits, summary judgment, coach, competitors, promotion, coercion, switched, Lanham Act, endorsement, induce, antitrust violation, trade association, genuine issue, consumers, elite, contractual relationship, nonmoving party, anti trust law, material fact, collaboration, swimsuit, argues, coerce, faster

Counsel: [*1] Attorneys for Plaintiffs: Not Present.

Attorneys for Defendants: Not Present.

Judges: James V. Selna.

Opinion by: James V. Selna

Opinion

CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

Proceedings: (IN CHAMBERS) Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Defendant Speedo USA's Motion for Summary Judgment , or in the alternative, for Summary Adjudication of Claims (Fld 12-29-10) and Defendant United States Swimming and Mark Schubert's Motion for Summary Judgment (Fld 1-20-10)

Defendant Warnaco Swimwear, Inc. dba Speedo USA ("Speedo") moves for for summary judgment under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 on the remaining claims for relief asserted against it by Plaintiff TYR Sport, Inc. ("TYR"). Defendants United States Swimming, Inc. ("USA Swimming") and Mark Schubert ("Schubert") also move for summary judgment under Rule 56 on TYR's remaining claims. Speedo and USA Swimming and Schubert (collectively, "Defendants") join each others' respective motions. TYR opposes both motions.

I. BACKGROUND

TYR and Speedo both design and manufacture high-end swimwear and accessories sold to competitive swimmers. (Statement of Genuine Issues in Opp'n to USA Swimming ("SGI USA") ¶ 3.) USA Swimming is the national governing body ("NGB") of the sport of swimming, per the Ted Stevens Amateur Sports Act [*2] ("Sports Act"), 36 U.S.C. § 220522. (Id. ¶ 1.) In 2006, USA Swimming hired Schubert to be the National and Olympic Team head coach and general manager, though Schubert was and remained a paid spokesperson for Speedo. (Id. ¶¶ 2, 9-10.) Speedo also has a sponsorship agreement directly with USA Swimming, as the exclusive swimwear equipment sponsor of USA Swimming since 1984. (Id. ¶¶ 6, 115.)

TYR alleges a combination between Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert that makes USA Swimming a de facto sales agent for Speedo. Specifically, TYR contends that Schubert, wielding extraordinary influence in the swimming community, made false statements in promoting Speedo's products and disparaging TYR's.

Much of the controversy centers on the run-up to the 2008 Olympic Games in Beijing. At the time, high-end swimsuit manufacturers were engaged in something of an arms race. (See id. ¶¶ 13-16, 173.) Each was attempting to market suits that could significantly reduce the swimming times of elite swimmers. (See id.; Young Decl., Ex. B ¶¶ 6-9.) Speedo had just released its newest suit, the LZR Racer, in February 12, 2008, an upgrade from its previous suit, the Fast Skin Pro ("FS Pro"). (SGI USA ¶¶ 13; Young Decl., Ex. B ¶¶ [*3] 3-6.) TYR, one of Speedo's primary competitors in the American market, was working to develop its own elite racing suit, the Tracer Rise, in time for the run-up to the Beijing Games. (SGI USA ¶¶ 14-15.)

Schubert, paid spokesman for Speedo and head coach and general manager of the National and Olympic swim teams, touted the advantages of the just-released LZR Racer. Just prior to a swim meet in Manchester, England, Schubert gathered the swimmers on the National Team and encouraged them to wear the LZR Racer, stating that it offered a "2% advantage." (Id. ¶ 17.) Schubert was also quoted in a newspaper and magazine article written by a reporter covering the meet that, "[i]f you take [the] best times of world record holders and their new times [in the LZR Racer], the difference is 2% percent." (Id. ¶¶ 22-23; Young Decl., Ex. O.) Schubert was also allegedly quoted as saying that he "would strongly advise [the swimmers] to wear the [Speedo] suit at trials, or they may end up at home watching [the Olympics] on NBC." (Complaint ¶ 16(l).)[1]

Erik Vendt ("Vendt"), a swimmer who signed an endorsement deal with TYR in 2006, got caught up in the arms race. (SGI USA ¶ 215.) In late 2007, training to [*4] make the U.S. Olympic Team and win a medal in Beijing, Vendt was dissatisfied with the suit TYR had provided. (Id. ¶ 216.) In fall 2007, he made several calls to Schubert, his coach on the National team and formerly his coach at the University of Southern California ("USC"), to complain about his TYR suit. (Id. ¶¶ 214, 216.) Schubert recalls telling Vendt to talk to TYR and to his agent. (Schubert Depo. 214:6-7, 215:4-6.)

In December 2007, Vendt and his agent met with TYR. (SGI USA ¶ 220.) TYR invited him to test the yet-to-be released Tracer Rise. (Id.) He was apparently very happy with it. (Id.) However, two weeks later, he informed TYR that he planned to wear the Speedo FS Pro at a January 2008 meet in Long Beach, California. (Id. ¶ 221.) TYR responded by canceling Vendt's endorsement deal. (Id.)

By the time of the U.S. Olympic Trials, only one of the TYR-sponsored swimmer present at the Manchester meet, Katie Carroll ("Carroll"), had switched from wearing a TYR suit to Speedo. (Statement of Genuine Issues in Opp'n to Speedo (SGI Speedo) ¶ 34.) Several swimmers wore a TYR suit at the Trials and qualified for the Olympic Team. (Id. ¶ 45.) Matt Grevers won two gold medals, a silver [*5] medal, and set a world record in Beijing while wearing the Tracer Rise. (Id. ¶ 164.) The Speedo-wearing swimmers experienced unparalleled success. All told, 86% of the swimming medals in Beijing, including 91% of the gold medals, were won by swimmers wearing the LZR Racer. (Id. ¶ 55.)

After the games, the arms race continued, with other market entrants gaining ground, and sometimes overtaking, Speedo and TYR. (Id. ¶ 64.) Schubert continued his promotion of the Speedo brand, at one point advising two swimmers on the Junior National Team to wear the LZR Racer because it was "faster." (Id. ¶ 155.)

---

[1] Neither party pointed the Court to evidence that Schubert actually made this statement. However, as the Defendants to not contest the issue, the Court will accept the allegation as true for summary judgment purposes.

However, everything came to an end in July 2009, when FINA, the sport's international governing body, decided to ban from competitions the high-performance full body suits, including the LZR Racer and the Tracer Rise, starting on January 1, 2010. (Id. ¶ 67.) USA Swimming, meanwhile, decided to move the deadline for banning suits in its own competitions up to October 1, 2009. (Id.) This effectively ended the market for the high-performance swimsuits.

At this stage in the litigation, TYR has seven remaining claims for relief against Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert.[2] TYR's First and Third claims, [*6] asserted against all three Defendants, allege a violation of the Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq. The Second claim, against Speedo alone, alleges a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. The Fourth claim, against Speedo, alleges false advertising in violation of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a). The Sixth, Ninth, and Tenth claims, against all three Defendants, allege tortious interference with contractual relations, violation of the California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., and seek injunctive relief.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

Summary judgment is appropriate only where the record, read in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, indicates "that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(2); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The burden initially is on the moving party to demonstrate an absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323. If the moving party meets its burden, then the nonmoving party must produce enough evidence to rebut the moving party's claim and create a genuine issue of material fact. See id. at 322-23. If the nonmoving party meets this burden, then the motion will be denied. Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Fritz Co., Inc., 210 F.3d 1099, 1103 (9th Cir. 2000).

Material facts are those necessary to the proof or defense of a claim, and are [*7] determined by reference to substantive law. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). "[A] complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322.

A fact issue is genuine "if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. To demonstrate a genuine issue, the opposing party "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts.... [T]he nonmoving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). In deciding a motion for summary judgment, "[t]he evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor." Id. at 255. Nevertheless, inferences are not drawn out of the air, and it is the opposing party's obligation to produce a factual predicate from which the inference may be drawn. Am. Int'l Group, Inc. v. Am. Int'l Bank, 926 F.2d 829, 837 (9th Cir. 1991).

III. DISCUSSION

The Court considers two summary judgment motions, one brought by Speedo, the other by USA Swimming and Schubert. Because of significant overlap between the motions, the Court treats them here together. The Court considers the challenged [*8] claims in turn.

A. Federal and State Antitrust Claims (First through Third Claims)

TYR alleges a conspiracy among Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert to restrain trade such that USA Swimming acted as a de facto sales agent for Speedo, promoting Speedo's products to the detriment of Speedo's competitors.

1. Coercion

---

[2] The claims are numbered here as they are in the body of the Complaint, rather than on the cover page.

In the Court's prior order on the Defendants' motions to dismiss (Docket No. 72), the Court clarified exactly what TYR would have to prove to demonstrate an unlawful conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act. (See id. at 6-9.) The Defendants had argued that TYR could not maintain a Sherman Act § 1 conspiracy claim where the alleged combination was between a market participant, Speedo, and an ostensibly neutral party, USA Swimming. (Id. at 6.) The Court rejected the challenge, noting that the Supreme Court in American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 102 S. Ct. 1935, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 (1982), recognized a species of Section 1 conspiracies involving a market participant and an ostensibly neutral party. (Docket No. 72 at 7.)

Hydrolevel involved an antitrust suit by a manufacturer of low-water fuel cutoffs for boilers against a nonprofit trade association which promulgated codes and standards for the industry. 456 U.S. at 558-59. Although the association's codes and standards were only [*9] advisory, many were incorporated into federal regulations, state laws, city ordinances, and the laws of all the Provinces of Canada. Id. at 559. "Obviously, if a manufacturer's product cannot satisfy the applicable [association] code, it is at a great disadvantage in the marketplace." Id. The association, therefore, wielded a "powerful influence" over designers of boiler systems. Id.

An employee of the plaintiff's competitor, who also served on the association, prepared an "unofficial communication" on association letterhead, suggesting that the plaintiffs's product failed to satisfy the association's code governing low-water fuel cutoffs. Id. at 561. This interpretation, purportedly made by the association itself, was disseminated to potential customers, thereby discouraging the purchase of the plaintiff's product. Id. at 562. The Supreme Court found that the competitor "successfully used its position with [the association] ... to thwart [the plaintiff's] competitive challenge," and held the association liable under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id.

On their motions to dismiss in this case, Defendants countered with Schachar v. American Academy of Ophthalmology, Inc., 870 F.2d 397 (7th Cir. 1989), which held that a trade association's speech critical of a product does not constitute an antitrust violation [*10] absent some mechanism to actually enforce a restriction on the availability of the product. Id. at 399. In Schachar, a trade association labeled a particular eye surgery procedure performed by the plaintiffs as "experimental." Id. at 398. However, as the court noted:

> [The association] did not require its members to desist from performing the operation or associating with those who do. It did not expel or discipline or even scowl at members who performed radial keratotomies. It did not induce hospitals to withhold permission to perform the procedure, or insurers to withhold payment; it has no authority over hospitals, insurers, state medical societies or licensing boards, and other persons who might be able to govern the performance of surgery.

Id. (emphasis added). Because the association did not attempt to use any enforcement mechanisms to prevent consumers from getting the surgery, i.e., did not restrict the supply, there was no antitrust violation, only speech. Id. at 399.

The distinction between Hydrolevel and Schachar is whether the association or neutral party actually attempts to enforce some standard—whether it punishes or threatens to punish a market actor for deviating from the standard. This distinction [*11] has been recognized by numerous other circuits in similar cases. See, e.g., Int'l Healthcare Mgmt. v. Haw. Coal. For Health, 332 F.3d 600, 606 (9th Cir. 2003) (finding no antitrust violation from comments made by professional association where it did not act to constrain anyone to follow its advice); Santana Prods., Inc. v. Bobrick Washroom Equip., Inc., 401 F.3d 123, 132-33 (3d Cir. 2005) (finding no antitrust violation where trade association criticized plaintiff's products, but did not coerce or restrain market actors); Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. Am. Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., 323 F.3d 366, 373-74 (6th Cir. 2003) (finding that defendant professional association did not violate antitrust laws under Hydrolevel because, like Schachar, lacked mechanism to enforce standards); Consol. Metal Prods., Inc. v. Am. Petroleum Inst., 846 F.2d 284, 296 (5th Cir. 1988) (finding no antitrust violation where influential trade association delayed certification of the plaintiff's product because association did not coerce customers). It is not enough to simply point out that an association has influence over the purchasing decisions of consumers: "An organization's towering reputation does not reduce its freedom to speak out." Schachar, 870 F.2d at 399; accord Consolidated Metal, 846 F.2d at 296 ("Even if user reliance gives [the trade association] significant influence over the market, that influence may enhance, not reduce, competition and consumer welfare."). Such influence does not prevent an association from promoting a particular product, or disparaging another. Schachar, 870 F.2d at 400.

TYR attempts to distinguish Schachar [*12] and other trade association cases because USA Swimming, as an NGB, exercises "monolithic control" over its sport, see JES Props., Inc. v. USA Equestrian, Inc., 458 F.3d 1224, 1231-31 (11th Cir. 2006), unlike trade associations, which often lack comparable control over the respective trade. However, the distinction between Hydrolevel and Schachar was not the ability to restrain trade; it was that the defendant in Hydrolevel actually used its de facto force of law to do so.

TYR also argues that Schachar is inapplicable because it did not involve the "dual role" present here and in Hydrolevel, where an employee of a competitor also served as member or officer within the neutral NGB or trade association. The Court does not find this distinction relevant. See Santana, 401 F.3d at 132 (analogizing to Schachar where plaintiff alleged a dual role). At most, it goes to motive, but TYR must show that Defendants actually restrained trade, not just that it wanted to.[3]

In short, TYR must prove actual coercion—that USA Swimming and Schubert set a standard with the threat of punishing actors for deviating from that standard. "There can be no restraint of trade without a restraint." Schachar, 870 F.2d at 397. Promotion and persuasion are not actionable as antitrust violations, even where the speaker holds extraordinary [*13] prestige and influence. Such speech is just part of the "[w]arfare" of competition. Id. at 399.

With these principles in mind, the Court turns to TYR's evidence that Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert coerced elite swimmers to wear Speedo suits as opposed to those of competitors.

i. The Beijing Olympics Comment

On the motion to dismiss, the Court identified a single allegation that presented the necessary coercive conduct. Schubert was quoted as saying, "I would strongly advise [the swimmers] to wear the [Speedo] suit at trials, or they may end up at home watching [the Olympics] on NBC." (Complaint ¶ 16(l).) The Court, at that time, recognized that this statement could be interpreted two ways: (1) a swimmer wearing a non-Speedo suit would be at a competitive disadvantage, thereby risking a loss at the Trials, or (2) Schubert would exclude a swimmer from the Olympic Team if they chose to wear a non-Speedo suit. (Docket No. 72 at 8-9.) At the pleading stage, the Court was required to accept TYR's interpretation—that the statement was a threat intended to coerce swimmers into wearing Speedo gear.

Now, on summary judgment, the defendants have presented evidence that Schubert's statement could not be [*14] interpreted as a threat because Schubert lacked the authority to exclude swimmers from the Olympic team. First, the defendants note that USA Swimming's Olympic International Operations Procedures Manual specifically allows swimmers to freely choose the own equipment: "Swimsuit Policy: Athletes may wear the competitive swimsuit of his/her choice." (Young Decl., Ex. D at 16.) This is consistent with the guidelines adopted by the United States Olympic Committee ("USOC"), applicable to all NGBs: "An Athlete shall have the exclusive right to select his or her Specialized Equipment for use in all Protected Competition."[4] (Id., Ex. E.) Thus, at least under USA Swimming and the USOC's rules, Schubert lacks the authority to mandate that a particular suit be worn by swimmers. TYR concedes as much. (Opp'n to USA Swimming 5.)

---

[3] Furthermore, the Court notes that the plaintiffs in Schachar did allege a dual role: "Plaintiffs say that the Academy is in the grip of professors and practitioners who favor conservative treatment, forever calling for more research (the better to justify the academics' request for grants)." Id. at 399.

[4] The parties do not dispute that swimsuits are "Specialized Equipment" and that the Olympic Trials and Olympic Games are "Protected Competition."

Furthermore, under the official Selection Procedures for the 2008 Olympic Team, Schubert had no discretion with respect to who made the Team. The only criterion for selection is the athlete's swim time at the Olympic Trials—"the wall" decides who goes to the Olympics, not the coach. (See Young Decl., Ex. I.) Under the Selection Procedures, Schubert could not exclude a TYR-sponsored [*15] swimmer whose time was fast enough to qualify, even if he wanted to. Indeed, several TYR-sponsored swimmers qualified at the Trials and swam at the Beijing Olympics. (Zimmer 9/30/09 Depo. at 113:16-25.)

Every witness deposed in this suit on this issue has acknowledged that swimmers were free to wear the suit of their choice at the Olympic Trials and that Schubert had no say on who made the pool swimming team. (See, e.g., Descenza Depo. at 48:14-49:7; Furniss Depo. at 148:7-13, 149:15-150:10; Van Wie Depo. at 53:24-54-4; Zimmer 9/30/09 Depo. at 204:18-205:1.) In fact, Mary Descenza ("Descenza") directly told Schubert that she intended to continue wearing TYR suits, and he did not object or pressure her to change her mind. (Descenza Depo. at 60:6-61:14.)

The Defendants having shown evidence that Schubert lacks any coercive power—any means to punish non-Speedo swimmers—with respect to the composition of the Olympic pool team, the burden falls to TYR to produce evidence rebutting the Defendants' showing. TYR concedes that it cannot make this showing, at least with respect to the pool swimmers.[5] (SGI Speedo ¶ 40.) TYR admits that the Olympic pool swimming team is determined by who is "first [*16] to the wall."[6]

Instead, TYR notes that Schubert has discretion to choose swimmers for the Olympic open water swim team, which is not governed by the same "first to the wall" rules. Therefore, TYR argues, Schubert's statement could reasonably be interpreted as a threat to open water swimmers hoping to make the Olympics. Putting aside the fact that Schubert's comment was made within the context of a pool swim meet, the actual selection of the open water team belies TYR's claim of coercion. Schubert and Bill Rose, the TYR-sponsored head coach of the open water team, chose Chloe Sutton to represent the United States in Beijing over Micha Burden. (Rose Decl. ¶ 9.) Both swimmers wore TYR suits.[7] (Id. ¶ 5.) Although Burden bested Sutton at the Trials, Burden failed to qualify for the Olympics at an international Olympic qualifying competition, placing 31st. (Id. ¶¶ 4, 8.) Rose, who was the personal coach of both Burden and Sutton, told Schubert that he felt that Sutton had the best chance to succeed in Beijing. (Id. ¶¶ 9.) There is no evidence that suit choice played a role, or that either swimmer was pressured or coerced by Schubert to wear Speedo.[8]

Considering the above evidence, Schubert's [*17] statement that swimmers not wearing the Speedo suit "may end up at home watching [the Olympics] on NBC," cannot be reasonably interpreted as a threat to exclude swimmers who did not wear Speedo. The evidence establishes that Schubert did not have such authority, that the swimmers and other relevant persons understood that Schubert did not have such authority, and that TYR-sponsored swimmers made the U.S. team and competed in Beijing. There is no triable issue of fact as to whether Schubert's statement constituted an unlawful restraint of trade.

ii. Schubert's Attempts to Persuade Elite Swimmers

TYR argues that Schubert restrained trade by attempting to persuade several elite swimmers to wear Speedo suits from his position of "extraordinary influence." However, as discussed above, statements from a position of influence

---

5 However, TYR points out that an extra swimmer was added as an alternate, even though she had not qualified based on her time at the Trials. (SGI Speedo ¶ 40.)

6 TYR offers the argument that Schubert could influence who reached the wall first through psychological means by "planting in swimmers' minds that the [Speedo suit] is superior and that other suits are inferior." (Opp'n to Speedo 7-8.) This supposed psychological trick does not constitute coercion.

7 Burden was sponsored by TYR and Sutton was an amateur that chose to wear TYR.

8 A swimmer for the men's open water team was also sponsored by TYR. (Zimmer Depo. at 113:16-21.)

alone do not constitute "restraints." A person or organization having prestige or respect does not lose the right to promote or criticize products in the market place. A statement must set some standard backed by a threat to punish to be actionable as an antitrust violation.

TYR points to several instances of Schubert attempting to persuade swimmers to switch to Speedo. [*18] At the Junior Pan Pacific meet in January 2009, Schubert approached Patrick Murphy ("Murphy") and Nick D'Innocenzo ("D'Innocenzo"), two swimmers on the Junior National Team who wore non-Speedo suits.[9] (King Depo. at 13:8-12, 16:6-17:1, 18:3-20:21.) Schubert "suggested in a roundabout sort of way that [the LZR Racer] was the best suit to wear, the fastest suit or the faster suit out of the suits that the boys were wearing." (Id. at 18:25-19:2.) Both swimmers subsequently switched to the LZR Racer. (Id. at 23:7-24:2.) However, Murphy immediately switched back to his TYR suit after a single race, as he did not like the feel of the LZR Racer.[10] (Id. at 24:25-25:10. 61:6-23.) TYR emphasizes that Brian King ("King"), Murphy's coach, said that Murphy "said he felt that he had to wear the LZR suit and would do it, but he didn't want to."[11] (Id. at 24:17-19.)

Schubert's statement to Murphy and D'Innocenzo that the Speedo suit was "faster" is not a restraint on trade. Schubert did not threaten to take any action against them if they chose not to wear Speedo and, as far as the record shows, no action was taken when Murphy did not so chose. Murphy continued to wear the TYR suit, after one go with the [*19] LZR, without repercussion. That Murphy felt pressured to wear the suit after Schubert's comments does not evidence the impropriety of Schubert's actions. Murphy did not explain why he felt pressured—whether it was pressure to conform, awe of the National Team head coach, or some other pressure—and he clearly felt free to disregard the LZR after one race. Schubert's "faster" comment was simply promotion of Speedo's product, which Schubert is entitled to do regardless of how influential he is within the swimming community.

Later in the meet, Schubert told King that Murphy was not allowed to wear his TYR swim cap at the meet and had to wear the National Team cap, which had a Speedo logo. (Id. at 20:25-22:2.) However, Schubert's objection was due to the fact that Murphy's personal cap had his name on it, which, according to Schubert, was against team rules. (Id. at 53:20-54-24.) This does not establish that Murphy was coerced to wear a Speedo swimsuit.[12]

TYR also points out efforts by Schubert to convince swimmers sponsored by Nike, including Jason Lezak, Brendan Hansen, Aaron Peirsol, Cullen Jones, and Kaitlin Sandeno to wear Speedo suits at the Beijing Games. (Young Decl., Ex. K ¶ 12-14.) [*20] Again, however, TYR fails to point to any threat Schubert made. Without a threat, Schubert's statements constitute mere promotion, not coercion.

TYR presents evidence that a Romanian swimmer, Razvan Florea, switched from TYR to a Speedo suit because of Schubert's comments about the LZR Racer's superior performance. (Florea Decl. ¶¶ 5-6.) TYR fails to explain how Schubert or USA Swimming could have any enforcement power against a Romanian swimmer.

Finally, TYR points to the Manchester National Team meeting where Schubert touted the advantages of the latest Speedo suit.[13] Descenza, one of the swimmers at the meeting, testified that Schubert "tried to make a very highly persuasive case and influence. He does have a lot of influence over swimmers because he is such a prominent figure in USA swimming." (Descenza Decl. at 19:23-20:1.) Two other swimmers tried the Speedo suit after the meeting. (Marshall Depo. at 56:11-13; Van Wie Depo. at 16:14-15.) However, as above, Schubert's statements at the meeting do not establish coercion. Schubert tried to be persuasive, tried to convince swimmers to try the suit,

---

[9] Murphy wore a TYR and D'Innocenzo wore a Blue 70 suit. (King Depo. at 19:3-4.)

[10] The record is silent on whether D'Innocenzo stuck with the Speedo suit.

[11] This testimony presents an obvious hearsay problem. Fed. R. Evid. 801(c).

[12] In any case, Murphy disobeyed Schubert and wore his personal TYR cap for the remainder for the meet, apparently without punishment. (King Depo. at 55:4-19.)

[13] The parties dispute whether Schubert was referring to an advantage the LZR Racer had over the old Speedo suit, the FS Pro, or over all suits currently in the marketplace.

but nothing indicates that he ever attempted to constrain their choice. His prominence [*21] within the swimming community does not lessen his ability to legally promote Speedo's product.

iii. Athlete Compensation & Non-Olympic Competitions

In their attempt to establish that Schubert could coerce swimmers to wear Speedo, TYR points to all the discretionary power Schubert has to potentially punish swimmers: (1) he has access to a discretionary fund to pay swimmers; (2) he can choose which swimmers compete on the relays in competition;[14] (3) he has discretion to designate certain swim clubs as "Post-Graduate Training Centers," entitling them to funding from USA Swimming and the USOC; and (4) he has the power to choose swimmers for certain non-Olympic Events, such as the "Duel in the Pool."

The problem is that TYR has failed to connect any threat made by Schubert to the hypothetical powers to punish. It is not enough to show that Schubert could restrain trade—TYR must come forward with evidence that he actually did so. The only potential threat Schubert made was regarding a spot on the Olympic team. However, as discussed above, Schubert lacked the authority to follow through on the supposed threat. All of the other actions identified by TYR constitute mere promotion—statements [*22] to swimmers that the Speedo suit was faster or provided an advantage. TYR has failed to identify any evidence demonstrating that Schubert threatened, even implicitly, to use his discretionary powers to punish a swimmer for not wearing Speedo.

iv. Research Collaboration

TYR also argues that Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert restrained trade by collaborating to develop faster swimwear, to the exclusion of Speedo's competitors. TYR cites no authority that such collaboration violates antitrust laws. A joint research venture alone does not violate the antitrust laws. See United States v. Line Material Co., 333 U.S. 287, 310, 68 S. Ct. 550, 92 L. Ed. 701 (1948); see also 15 U.S.C. § 4302 ("In any action under the antitrust laws ... the conduct of any person in making or performing a contract to carry out a joint venture ... shall not be deemed illegal per se."). This is particularly true where one of the collaborators, USA Swimming, is not even a market participant. TYR has pointed to no anticompetitive effect of the joint research project. Indeed, such joint research is likely to have procompetitive effects.[15]

Nor does the fact that USA Swimming kept secret information gleaned from the collaboration demonstrate a restraint of trade. Secrecy is a necessary part of the collaboration; if the results [*23] were immediately made public, the manufacturer would have no incentive to expend the time and effort to collaborate with an NGB on research, an activity potentially beneficial to competition. Manufacturers are not required to be altruistic when working in a joint venture with a non-profit.

v. Schubert's Role as Technical Advisor

Finally, TYR complains of Schubert's role within USA Swimming to disseminate technical information to the public. TYR argues that Schubert, as "gatekeeper," only disseminated information favorable to Speedo, misstated information, and withheld information unfavorable to Speedo and favorable to Speedo's competitors. These complaints do not make out a claim of coercion. The antitrust laws do not require an ostensibly neutral party to praise competitors equally or to refrain from disparaging a competitor, subject to the limits discussed below with regard to TYR's disparagement theory. See Schachar, 870 F.2d at 399.

---

[14] The swimmers sometimes receive bonuses from sponsors for being chosen to the relay team. (See, e.g., TYR Exs. 18 at 18, 19 at Ex. A.)

[15] The combination of resources and expertise of USA Swimming and Speedo is likely to help innovation in swimsuit technology, thereby benefitting the consumer.

Because TYR has failed to show a genuine issue of fact with regard to coercion, the Defendants are entitled to summary adjudication on that issue. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(d). While not agreeing with the Court's application of Schachar, TYR conceded at oral argument that the Defendants were entitled to [*24] this relief on its compulsion theory.

2. Disparagement

At the hearing, TYR argued that the Defendants had not addressed TYR's disparagement theory of antitrust liability and therefore failed to carry their initial burden under Celotex of demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact as to an essential element of TYR's claim. 477 U.S. at 323. This argument was not specifically advanced in either of TYR's opposition briefs. It was, however, alluded to in the opposition to USA Swimming and Schubert's motion.[16]

The Defendants argue that, because they moved for summary judgment on the entire claim, the burden shifted to TYR to raise a genuine issue of material fact; in this case, raise the alternative theory of antitrust liability. However, TYR was not obligated to produce anything unless and until the Defendants carried their initial Celotex burden. "If a moving party fails to carry its initial burden of production, the nonmoving party has no obligation to produce anything, even if the nonmoving party would have the ultimate burden of persuasion at trial." Nissan Fire, 210 F.3d at 1102-03 (emphasis added). By failing to squarely address TYR's disparagement theory, the Defendants have not carried their initial Celotex burden. [*25] Thus, TYR's burden of production with regard to the disparagement theory was never triggered.

This is not a new theory raised for the first time to prevent or delay summary judgment. TYR's Complaint specifically alleges that the Defendants engaged in a campaign of false disparagement using the prestige and apparent impartiality of USA Swimming and Schubert. (Compl. ¶¶ 13-17.) The disparagement theory was also squarely teed up following the motions to dismiss, as evidenced by the Court's discussion of American Professional Testing Service, Inc. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal, 108 F.3d 1147 (9th Cir. 1997), in denying dismissal of TYR's disparagement claim. (Docket No. 72 at 10.) By completely failing to address a live issue, the Defendants failed to carry their Celotex burden.

Nor has TYR waived its argument by saving it for the hearing. Although the Court has discretion to refuse to consider arguments not raised in a timely manner, see, e.g., Brass v. County of L.A., 328 F.3d 1192, 1197-98 (9th Cir. 2003), the Court does not consider the argument waived here, where the disparagement theory is clearly set forth in the pleadings, remained a live issue following the Court's order on the motions to dismiss, and is alluded to—albeit rather obliquely—in TYR's opposition papers. Cf. United States v. Fay, 545 F. Supp. 2d 1067, 1071 (E.D. Cal. 2008) ("[T]here are cases where the Ninth Circuit has found no waiver if the issue [*26] was at least minimally raised in the pleadings and developed at oral argument....").

The Defendants also argue that the disparagement claim fails because TYR lacks evidence demonstrating that elite swimmers or consumers were ever restrained from purchasing TYR products. However, an antitrust disparagement claim in the Ninth Circuit does not depend on actual coercion or restraints on consumers. It stems from the recognition that "[f]alse statements about rivals can obstruct competition and possess no off-setting redeeming virtues," even if consumers are not actually constrained in their purchasing decisions. See Harcourt Brace, 108 F.3d at 1152 (quoting 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law ¶ 737b at 280-81 (1978)).

---

[16] "USA Swimming and Schubert misread the [Court's order on the motions to dismiss] (and the referenced authorities), and they fundamentally mischaracterize—i.e., narrow the focus—of the allegations and evidence establishing defendants' coordinated anti-competitive conduct. USA Swimming and Schubert try to cast TYR's claims as limited to the 2008 Olympic team and limited to the rules regarding swimwear of choice. However, the anticompetitive conduct shown by TYR is much broader: it predates the Olympics by more than a year and encompasses behavior unrelated to team selection and technical equipment rules. Put in summary judgment parlance, USA Swimming and Schubert fail to meet their burden of negating an essential element of TYR's claims or demonstrating an absence of evidence supporting them because they miscast them in the narrow range they think falls within the 'undisputed evidence.'" (Opp'n to USA Swimming 13.)

Accordingly, the Defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on TYR's antitrust claims to the extent they rely on a disparagement theory.

3. Illegal Agreement

The Defendants contend that TYR's Sherman Act § 1 and Cartwright Act claims fail because they lack evidence of an illegal agreement. Relying on Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) and Matsushita, the Defendants argue TYR fails to raise a triable issue of fact as to whether the various agreements between Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert are illegal, because those agreements are entirely [*27] consistent with legal sponsorship agreements.

The Defendants misapply the holdings of Monsanto and Matsushita. These cases stand for the proposition that, in an antitrust conspiracy case, one cannot reasonably infer a combination or conspiracy solely from conduct that is consistent with independent action, without additional evidence of an actual agreement. See Matushita, 475 U.S. at 588; Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-64. Here, in contrast, there is unquestionably evidence of an agreement between the parties; TYR need not rely on an inference of agreement from evidence consistent with independent competition.

4. Market Definition

Finally, the Defendants argue that they are entitled to summary judgment because TYR cannot show a genuine issue of fact as to the relevant geographic market. TYR alleges a market for "high-end competitive swimwear and accessories" in the geographic market of "the entire United States and its territories." (Compl. ¶ 9.)

The relevant geographic market is the "area of effective competition ... where buyers can turn for alternate sources of supply." Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1490 (9th Cir. 1991) (citation and quotation marks omitted). It can be demonstrated by the existence of certain barriers to entry, or insulation from a larger geographic market, such that supply [*28] and demand are inelastic with the larger market. Id. The boundaries of a market can also be shown by "such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Image Tech. Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1204 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). Market definition is generally a factual determination left to the jury. Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1476 (9th Cir. 1997).

TYR has sufficient evidence of the United States as a geographic market to overcome summary judgment on the issue. Internal emails and memos at both Speedo and USA Swimming indicate that they consider the United States market as distinct from the international market. (TYR Exs. 37-39.) Steve Furniss ("Furniss"), the Executive Vice President of TYR and who has worked for 34 years in the performance swimwear industry, testified as to numerous barriers to competition:[17] (1) the ability to provide local technical support; (2) on-the-ground customer service networks able to quickly respond to the needs of elite swim teams; (3) relationships with athletes, coaches, and swim directors; (4) cultural differences in suit preferences; (5) [*29] differences in the physiology of swimmers from country to country; (6) differences in sizing and labeling requirements; (7) differences in local regulations regarding consumer protections, packaging, and the environment; and (8) differences in currency and pricing. (Furniss Decl. ¶¶ 4-6.)

Accordingly, the Court finds that the Defendants are entitled to summary adjudication on the issue of antitrust coercion, but not on TYR's antitrust theory of antitrust disparagement.

B. False Advertising Claim (Fourth Claim)

---

[17] Speedo, citing Morgan, object to Furniss's declaration on the grounds that it is impermissible lay witness testimony on the technical subject of the relevant geographic market. See 924 F.2d at 1490. This is objection is overruled because Furniss testifies only as to factual characteristics of the geographic market, which is within his competency as an industry veteran. He does not give an conclusory opinion on market definition, unlike the witnesses in Morgan. See id.

Speedo seeks summary judgment on TYR's false advertising claim under the Lanham Act. TYR's false claims are based on two statements made by Schubert: (1) a statement he made to swimmers at a swim meet and a reporter, that the LZR suit offered "a 2% advantage"; and (2) a statement to two youth swimmers that the LZR suit was "faster" than their non-Speedo suits.

For a prima facie case under the Lanham Act, the plaintiff must demonstrate the following: "(1) the defendant made a false statement either about the plaintiff's or its own product; (2) the statement was made in commercial advertisement or promotion; (3) the statement actually deceived or had the tendency [*30] to deceive a substantial segment of its audience; (4) the deception is material; (5) the defendant caused its false statement to enter interstate commerce; and (6) the plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as a result of the false statement, either by direct diversion of sales from itself to the defendant, or by a lessening of goodwill associated with the plaintiff's product." Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1052 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Jarrow Formulas, Inc. v. Nutrition Now, Inc., 304 F.3d 829 (9th Cir. 2002)).

1. Schubert's Statements to Swimmers

Speedo argues that, even assuming that Schubert's statement can be proven false or misleading, TYR cannot demonstrate injury. His statement at the Manchester swim meet was to an audience of 25 swimmers, only one of whom switched from a wearing TYR to a Speedo on a regular basis.[18] (Kerska Decl. ¶¶ 1-4; Carroll Decl. ¶¶ 4-16.) The one swimmer, Katie Carroll, who did switch did so months later, at the Olympic Trials, after she had swam a poor first race in her TYR Tracer Rise suit. (Carroll Decl. ¶¶ 11-15.) She testified that Schubert's 2% comment had nothing to do with her decision. (Id. ¶ 13.)

Schubert's statement to the two youth swimmers, Murphy and D'Innocenzo, similarly failed to result in lost sales to TYR. Murphy tried the LZR Racer for one race and then [*31] switched back to the TYR suit, because he did not like the feel of the Speedo suit. (King Decl. at 24:25-25:10. 61:6-23.) D'Innocenzo was not a TYR customer and, instead, wore a Blue 70 suit. (Id. at 19:3.)

TYR contends that it need not prove injury because Schubert's statements were literally false. In the Ninth Circuit, "[p]ublication of deliberately false comparative claims gives rise to a presumption of actual deception and reliance." Southland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d 1134, 1146 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting U-Haul Int'l, Inc. v. Jartran, Inc., 793 F.2d 1034, 1040-41 (9th Cir. 1986). The presumption, however, is of "deception and reliance," i.e., causation, not injury. The presumption does not cure TYR's failure to show evidence of any actual loss of sales.

Moreover, the presumption is rebuttable. See Jartran, 793 F.2d at 1041. The only injury fairly traceable to Schubert's comments was Carroll's defection to Speedo several months after the Manchester comments. However, Carroll specifically stated that her choice to switch sponsors had nothing to do with Schubert's comments. TYR has no evidence rebutting this testitmony. Cf. Bradley v. Harcourt, Brace and Co., 104 F.3d 267, 270 (9th Cir. 1996) ("To avoid summary judgment, [the plaintiff] must do more than establish a prima facie case and deny the credibility of the [defendant's] witnesses. She must produce specific, substantial evidence [rebutting defendant's [*32] evidence].")

Finally, any claim for injunctive relief under the Lanham Act is moot, as it is undisputed that there is no market for the technical swimsuits among elite swimmers following FINA's ban.

Because TYR cannot demonstrate injury based on Schubert's statement at the Manchester meet and the statements to Murphy and D'Innocenzo, TYR's Lanham Act claim based on those statements fails as a matter of law.

2. Schubert's Statement to Craig Lord

Speedo argues that Schubert's claim of a 2% advantage made to swim reporter Craig Lord ("Lord") cannot constitute a Lanham Act violation because it is not "commercial advertising or promotion." To constitute commercial advertising, a statement must be: (1) commercial speech; (2) intended to influence consumers to buy defendant's goods or services; and (3) disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public. Boule v. Hutton, 328 F.3d 84 (2d Cir. 2003).

[18] At the elite level, most swimmers are sponsored by a swimwear company and do not purchase their own suits.

Speedo, citing Boule, contends that Schubert's statement to Lord fails the first prong because the statement was made to the press about a matter of public concern. In Boule, the defendants, son and daughter-in-law of the late Russian avant garde painter Lazar Khidekel, made some statements to an art reporter questioning the authenticity [*33] of the plaintiffs' Khidekel collection. Id. at 86, 88. At the time, the defendants were attempting to sell their own collection of Khidekel works. Id. at 87. The statements were quoted in the reporter's magazine article about fraudulent artwork. Id. at 88.

The Second Circuit found that the statements in the magazine article did not constitute commercial speech:

> We have little hesitation in deciding that as a matter of law the [magazine] article, and the [defendants'] statements quoted in that article, are not commercial speech. The article itself addresses a matter of public concern—fraud in the art market—and is certainly protected. The [defendants'] statements contained in the article are inextricably intertwined with the reporters' coverage of their topic. The statements by the [defendants] in [the magazine] contribute to reporters' discussion of an issue of public importance and occur in a forum that has traditionally been granted full protection under the First Amendment. As always with the public expression of opinion, "we have been careful not to permit overextension of the Lanham Act to intrude on First Amendment values." Consequently, the defendants were entitled to a grant of summary judgment on that portion of the Lanham Act claim that [*34] addressed the statements by the [defendants] in [the magazine].

Id. at 91-92 (footnote and citation omitted).

Likewise, Lord's article in SwimNews.com addressed a matter of public concern; namely, the public debate, "confusion, doubt and denial" about the effect of Speedo's new high performance suit on the performance of swimmers. (Young Decl., Ex. O.) The article is clearly protected speech. And like the defendants' statements in Boule, Schubert's statement regarding the performance of athletes in the Speedo LZR Racer is "inextricably intertwined with the reporter['s] coverage of [the] topic." See 328 F.3d at 91. As such, under Boule, Schubert's statement to Lord cannot constitute a Lanham Act violation.

In its opposition brief, TYR did not address Boule or the statement to Lord, apparently conceding that it does not constitute commercial speech actionable under the Lanham Act. Accordingly, Speedo is entitled to summary judgment on TYR's fourth claim.[19]

C. Intentional Interference with Contractual Relations (Sixth Claim)

TYR's tortious interference with contractual relations claim is predicated on the termination of the endorsement deal between TYR and swimmer Erik Vendt. During his endorsement deal with TYR, Vendt [*35] decided to wear a Speedo suit at a swim meet. TYR canceled his endorsement deal in response.

The elements of a tortious interference with contractual relations claim are "(1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage." Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal.3d 1118, 1126, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587 (1990).

The Defendants contend that they cannot be liable because (1) TYR, not Vendt, breached the contract, and (2) TYR has not demonstrated an intentional act on the part of any of the Defendants "designed to induce a breach or disruption." The Court need not reach the breach of contract issue, because TYR does not have sufficient evidence to create a triable issue of fact as to whether any of the Defendants intentionally induced Vendt to breach or disrupt his relationship with TYR.[20]

[19] The Court does not reach the question of whether Schubert's statement can be proven literally false.

TYR admits that it does not have direct evidence that the defendants induced Vendt to breach. However, it points to circumstantial evidence that it claims raises a triable issue of fact as to whether Schubert and Stu Isaac, a Speedo-sponsored [*36] swim coach, induced Vendt to terminate his contract with TYR.

Schubert testified that Vendt called him several times in the fall of 2007 to complain about his TYR suits. (Schubert Depo. at 213:9-215:23.) He also testified that he told Vendt to talk to his agent and communicate his dissatisfaction to TYR directly. (Id. at 214:6-7, 215:4-6.) However, Vendt stated in an interrogatory response that he never discussed his TYR suits with Schubert. (TYR Ex. 47 at 2.) When pressed at a deposition, he stated that he did not recall discussing TYR suits with Schubert in 2007, but that he may have around March 2008.[21] (Vendt Depo. 148:24-149:18.)

TYR contends that a reasonable jury could find that during the calls in fall 2007, Schubert urged Vendt to end his relationship with TYR based on the following facts: (1) Vendt's evasiveness during discovery regarding the calls; (2) Schubert's public comments urging swimmers to use the LZR Racer; (3) that Schubert used money from his discretionary account to pay Vendt after TYR canceled the contract; (4) Schubert's failed negotiations with TYR for an endorsement deal in 2004; and (5) the fact that Vendt claimed to have secured an endorsement deal with [*37] Speedo after TYR canceled his deal.

This circumstantial evidence is insufficient to create a triable issue of fact. First, it is undisputed that Vendt initiated the calls to Schubert, not vice versa. This is, of course, not dispositive, but certainly weighs heavily against the notion that Schubert acted to intentionally induce Vendt to switch vendors.

Second, Schubert's public promotion of Speedo products does not establish that he ever urged a swimmer to breach an endorsement deal. At most, it establishes that he urged swimmers to wear Speedo suits, which Vendt had a contractual right to do. (Speedo Ex. 283 § 3.5.) Thus, assuming that the jury could infer that Schubert, during the 2007 phone calls, urged Vendt to wear a Speedo suit, that would still not establish tortious inducement, as Vendt has a right to do so under the contract.

Finally, the remaining evidence is too tenuous to establish a genuine issue of fact. The Court fails to see how Vendt's evasiveness establishes Schubert's intentional tortious conduct. The actions taken by Schubert and Speedo after the Vendt lost his TYR deal shed little light on their actions before.[22] And Schubert's alleged motive to injure TYR because of the [*38] failure to secure a TYR endorsement deal in 2004 is far too tenuous to provide significant probative value.

TYR also points to a meeting Vendt allegedly had with Isaac, his Speedo-sponsored coach at Club Wolverine. Vendt testified that he had only visited Isaac's home when Isaac was not there; Vendt's girlfriend at the time was good friends with Isaac's wife. (Vendt Depo. at 96:7-12.) TYR contends that this is inconsistent with Isaac's testimony that Vendt and his girlfriend once came over to cook a turkey for Thanksgiving. (Isaac Depo. at 227:1-

---

[20] It is worth noting that it appears that TYR terminated Vendt—not vice versa. (See TYR Ex. 45.) TYR's action was predicated on Vendt's choice to wear a competitor's suit, but he had appears to have had a unilateral contractual right to do so. (Speedo Ex. 283 § 3.5.)

[21] Vendt's testimony is unclear as to whether the March 2008 calls were with TYR or Schubert; Vendt appears to have been confused by the question. (See Vendt Depo. at 149:2-12.). However, the Court accepts TYR's interpretation for summary judgment purposes.

[22] This is especially true because Schubert did not use his discretionary fund to pay Vendt until April 2008, roughly three months after TYR canceled his endorsement deal. (Schubert Depo. at 218:22-219:3.) And although Vendt claimed to have a Speedo deal in March 2008, (Vendt Depo., Ex. 295), Speedo did not propose a sponsorship deal until May 2008, four months after the end of his TYR deal, and, because of this suit, no deal was ever reached. (Supp. Isaac Decl. ¶¶ 4-6.)

11.) However, Isaac's testimony does not, in fact, establish that he was there or met with Vendt at that time.[23] In any case, nothing indicates that swimsuits were ever discussed.

To overcome summary judgment, TYR needs to show more than a scintilla of evidence. But that is all they have here; disconnected bits of circumstantial evidence. Even if those bits are summer, no reasonable jury could find by a preponderance of the evidence that Schubert or Isaac intentionally induced Vendt to breach his contractual relationship with TYR. Therefore, the defendants are entitled to summary judgment on TYR's [*39] Sixth claim.

D. Remaining State Law Claims (Ninth and Tenth Claims)

The Defendants argue that TYR's UCL claim fails because it is predicated on the TYR's other causes of action. However, because TYR's antitrust disparagement claim survives, TYR can base its UCL claim on the Defendants' alleged "unlawful" business practices constituting violating the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act, and "unfair" business practices that "threaten[] an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violate[] the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

TYR's tenth claim seeks only injunctive relief and does not state an independent cause of action. However, because TYR's antitrust claims and UCL claim survive summary judgment, TYR's claim for injunctive relief remains as well.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the motions for summary judgment are GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. Speedo is entitled to summary judgment with respect to TYR's Fourth and Sixth Claims, and USA Swimming and Schubert are entitled to summary judgment on TYR's Sixth Claim. Speedo, USA Swimming, [*40] and Schubert are entitled to summary adjudication on the remaining claims to the extent they rely on a coercion theory of antitrust liability.

As noted above, the Court concludes that the Defendants failed to carry their initial Celotex burden with respect to TYR's theory of antitrust liability for disparagement. However, the case law imposes a high burden before speech in the marketplace becomes actionable antitrust conduct. Such statements "must have a significant and enduring adverse impact on competition itself in the relevant markets to rise to the level of an antitrust violation." Harcourt Brace, 108 F.3d at 1152. In fact, the Ninth Circuit "insist[s] on a preliminary showing of significant and more-than-temporary harmful effects on competition (and not merely upon a competitor or customer)." Id. at 1151 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The Court believes that the issue of the requisite preliminary showing should be tested before the matter proceeds to trial. To that end, the Court is willing to entertain a further summary judgment motion, even if that requires a slightly collapsed motions schedule[24] or a brief delay in the trial. The Court schedules a telephonic status conference for March 8, 2010 at 11:00 a.m. to discuss [*41] the issue.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

End of Document

[23] "I do believe that one time over a Thanksgiving [Vendt and his girlfriend, Kim] ... wanted to try to roast a turkey for the first time in their lives, and they brought a turkey over. And my wife helped them, and even went back to their apartment to help them finish off cooking the turkey. I was not involved in that process, thank goodness." (Issac Depo. 227:4-11.)

[24] The combination of Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Local Rules results in a minimum 49-day motions cycle.

In re Ebay Seller Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California, San Jose Division

March 4, 2010, Decided; March 4, 2010, Filed

Case Number C 07-01882 JF (RS)

Reporter

2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19480 *; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,937; 2010 WL 760433

IN RE EBAY SELLER ANTITRUST LITIGATION

Subsequent History: Sanctions disallowed by In re Ebay Seller Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52331 (N.D. Cal., May 25, 2010)

Affirmed by Malone v. eBay, Inc. (In re eBay Seller Antitrust Litig.), 433 Fed. Appx. 504, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 9676 (9th Cir. Cal., 2011)

Prior History: In re Ebay Seller Antitrust Litig., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96531 (N.D. Cal., Oct. 16, 2009)

Core Terms

eBay, auction, online, sellers, antitrust, format, Plaintiffs', market power, fixed-price, Reply, class certification, anticompetitive, listings, platform, relevant market, prices, overcharge, buyers, summary judgment, monopolization, submarket, elasticity, monopoly power, supracompetitive, products, causal, card, summary judgment motion, transactions, retailers

Counsel: [*1] Judge Read Ambler, Special Master, Pro se, San Jose, CA.

For Michael Malone, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Michael Andrew McShane, LEAD ATTORNEY, Aaron H. Darsky, Audet & Partners, LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; Beverly Tse, Christopher S. Studebaker, Daniel Hume, David E. Kovel, Kenneth G. Walsh , Kirby McInerney, LLP, New York, NY; Christine Pedigo Bartholomew, Rosemary M. Rivas, Finkelstein Thompson LLP, San Francisco, CA; Elaine T. Byszewski, Hagens Berman Sobol Shaprio LLP, Los Angeles, CA; George W. Sampson, Steve W. Berman, PRO HAC VICE, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; I. Stephen Rabin, Rabin & Peckel LLP, New York, NY; Jeff D Friedman, Shana E. Scarlett, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Berkeley, CA; Jeffrey Squire, Bragar Wexler & Eagel, P.C., New York, NY; Joseph P. Garland, Klein & Solomon LLP, New York, NY; Joseph V. McBride, Rabin and Peckel, New York, NY; Karina Kosharskyy , PRO HAC VICE, New York, NY.

For Ann Farmer, Todd Van Pelt, Plaintiffs: Beverly Tse, Christopher S. Studebaker, Kenneth G. Walsh , Kirby McInerney, LLP, New York, NY; Elaine T. Byszewski, Hagens Berman Sobol Shaprio LLP, Los Angeles, CA; George W. Sampson, [*2] Steve W. Berman, PRO HAC VICE, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Seattle, WA; Jeff D Friedman, Shana E. Scarlett, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Berkeley, CA; Karina Kosharskyy , PRO HAC VICE, New York, NY.

For James Donohue, Plaintiff: Aaron H. Darsky, Audet & Partners, LLP, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; Jeff D Friedman, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Berkeley, CA.

For Jeffrey Enebely, Plaintiff: Christopher S. Studebaker, Kirby McInerney, LLP, New York, NY; Karina Kosharskyy , PRO HAC VICE, New York, NY; Kenneth G. Walsh , Kirby McInerney LLP, New York, NY; Reginald Von Terrell, The Terrell Law Group, Oakland, CA.

For eBay, Inc., Defendant: Julie Dawn Wood, LEAD ATTORNEY, O'Melveny & Myers, San Francisco, CA; Thomas Patrick Brown, LEAD ATTORNEY, Brynly R. Llyr, Dixie Lee Noonan, Katherine Robison, Michael Frederick Tubach, Randall W. Edwards, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For AOL, LLC, Attorneys for Interested Party AOL, LLC, McGuireWoods LLP, Los Angeles, CA, Interested Party: Susan L. Germaise, McGuireWoods LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Visa Inc., Non-Party Visa Inc., Holme Roberts & Owen LLp, San Francisco, CA, Miscellaneous: Robert L. Stolebarger, LEAD ATTORNEY, Holmes Roberts & Owen [*3] LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: JEREMY FOGEL, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: JEREMY FOGEL

Opinion

ORDER [1] GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND DENYING AS MOOT PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

[re: docket nos. 217, 397]

Plaintiffs, on behalf fo themselves and a putative class, assert claims against Defendant eBay, Inc. ("eBay") pursuant to § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act") and §§ 1620 & 17200 of the California Business & Professional Code. The operative complaint asserts six claims: (1) abuse of monopoly power and monopoly maintenance for online auctions; (2) attempted monopolization of the market for online auctions; (3) abuse of monopoly power and monopoly maintenance in the market for person-to-person online payment systems; (4) attempted monopolization of the market for person-to-person online payment systems; (5) unlawful trust, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce; and (6) unfair business practices. [2] On December 1, 2009, after extensive discovery over a period of more than two-and-a-half years, the Court heard argument on Plaintiffs' motion for class certification [*4] and Defendant's motion for summary judgment. For the reasons set forth below, the Court will grant the motion for summary judgment and deny as moot the motion for class certification.

I. BACKGROUND

Unless otherwise indicated, the following facts are undisputed for the purpose of the instant motions.

A. eBay's Business Model

eBay is a well-known online marketplace for the sale of goods and services. eBay's website facilitates exchanges between prospective buyers and sellers listing items for sale. Originally, eBay was designed solely as an auction platform where buyers could bid for and purchase a range of products offered by sellers. However, after the company went public in September 1998, it expanded by adding a hybrid feature called "Buy It Now" in 2000 and a fixed price format in 2002.

---

[1] This disposition is not designated for publication in the official reports.

[2] In an order dated March 4, 2008, the Court dismissed a seventh claim alleging per se unreasonable tying under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

The fees eBay charges for all of its services, including the auction format, are listed and published in its "rate cards." For the online auction format, sellers' fees depend on the initial listing price for a product ("insertion fee") and final value of the item sold ("final [*5] value fee"). Ranges for insertion fees and final value fees are listed on the rate card. The rate card is applicable uniformly to all eBay sellers.

B. PayPal

In July 2002, eBay purchased PayPal for $ 1.5 billion. Paypal is an online payment system that enables individuals and businesses to send and receive payments online by means of credit cards and bank transfers. Such systems are known as person-to-person ("P2P") online payment systems. PayPal users set up accounts that can be funded by the user's credit card or by an electronic debit from a bank account and can either establish a PayPal deposit account or receive payments through electronic transfer or checks from PayPal. Though PayPal provides the preferred payment method on eBay, it serves many other companies and institutions as well.

The Named Plaintiffs in this action are three individuals [3] who sell products actively through eBay's online marketplace and seek to represent a class of all auction sellers on eBay and a subclass of all auction sellers on eBay who accept PayPal.

C. Other eBay Acquisitions

. In 1999, prior to acquiring PayPal, eBay [*6] acquired Billpoint, another online payment system company. eBay publicly launched Billpoint in March 2000. Billpoint was shut down following eBay's acquisition of PayPal in 2002.
. In August 2004, eBay purchased a twenty-five percent interest in Craigslist, a provider of online classified advertisements.
. In the fall of 2005, eBay acquired Verisign's payment gateway business for $ 370 million. At the time, "Verisign's network had the most active online merchants using its payment service to transact sales online--112,000 in 2004." (Pls.' Mot. for Class Cert 16 (citing Friedman Decl. Ex. 55 at 611).)

. In October 2008, eBay acquired BillMeLater, "an online transactional credit service that instantaneously provides consumers with credit on a transaction-by-transaction basis for online purchases." (Id. at 17 (citing Friedman Decl. Ex.62).)

D. eBay Agreements

. Since 1997, eBay has entered into a series of agreements with America Online ("AOL"), a global internet services and media company. By 1999, the operative agreement provided for payment of $ 75 million by eBay to AOL to establish eBay as the exclusive auction site on AOL.

. In May 2006, eBay and Yahoo!, Inc., an internet services company, [*7] agreed to form a strategic partnership. Among other things, the agreement established eBay as the exclusive third-party provider on Yahoo! Wallet, the payment system used by Yahoo! for its various services.
. In August 2006, eBay entered into an international agreement with Google that provided that Google would be the exclusive text-based advertising producer for eBay outside the United States and that eBay and Google would integrate and jointly launch a "click-to-call" advertising platform.

E. PayPal and the Online P2P Payment System Competition

In July 2006, eBay added Google's payment service, Google Checkout, to the list of online payment methods not permitted on eBay. This list includes other online payment services such as alertpay.com, sendmoneyorder.com, and Moneygram.com. Use of one of the prohibited services can result in listing cancellation, forfeiture of eBay fees on cancelled listings, limits on account privileges, loss of earned seller status on eBay, or suspension of the user's eBay account. In October 2008, eBay changed its policy to prohibit sellers from accepting any form of paper payment, such as cash, cashier's checks, and money orders.

---

[3] A fourth individual, James Donohue, voluntarily dismissed his claims without prejudice.

eBay also has changed its online [*8] payment policies by reducing the monthly limits on less expensive personal (as opposed to merchant) PayPal accounts, offering buyer protection only for PayPal users, requiring sellers with PayPal accounts to offer and accept all payment options (including credit card transactions), and requiring sellers registering after January 2007 to offer PayPal or have an alternate merchant credit card account.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Motion for Summary Judgment

A motion for summary judgment should be granted if there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). Material facts are those that might affect the outcome of the case under the governing law. Id. at 248. There is a genuine dispute about a material fact if there is sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to return a verdict for the nonmoving party. Id. The moving party bears the initial burden of informing the Court of the basis for the motion and identifying portions of the pleadings, depositions, admissions, or affidavits that demonstrate the absence of a triable issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). [*9] Where the party moving for summary judgment would not bear the ultimate burden of persuasion at trial, it must either produce evidence negating an essential element of the nonmoving party's claim or defense or show that the nonmoving party does not have enough evidence of an essential element to carry its ultimate burden of persuasion at trial. Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Fritz Cos., 210 F.3d 1099, 1102 (9th Cir. 2000). If the moving party meets its initial burden, the burden shifts to the nonmoving party to present specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue of material fact for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e); Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324.

The evidence and all reasonable inferences must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pac. Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 630-31 (9th Cir. 1987). Summary judgment thus is not appropriate if the nonmoving party presents evidence from which a reasonable jury could resolve the material issue in its favor. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 248-49; Barlow v. Ground, 943 F.2d 1132, 1134-36 (9th Cir. 1991).

eBay moves for summary judgment as to each of Plaintiffs' claims.

1. Monopolization and Attempted [*10] Monopolization of the Online Auction Market Under § 2 of the Sherman Act

"To prevail on a claim of monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate: '(1) [p]ossession of monopoly power in the relevant [market or] submarket; (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury.'" Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1475 (9th Cir. 1997) (citing Pac. Express, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 959 F.2d 814, 817 (9th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1034, 113 S. Ct. 814, 121 L. Ed. 2d 686 (1992)). Similarly, to prevail on a claim of attempted monopolization under Section 2, "a plaintiff must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed toward accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury." Id. at 1477 (citing Rebel Oil Co., v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995)).

eBay moves for summary judgment as to all of Plaintiffs' Section 2 claims involving eBay's online auction platform on the grounds that: (1) Plaintiffs improperly define the relevant market; (2) eBay does not have monopoly power in a [*11] properly defined market; and (3) Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate causal antitrust injury.

a. Monopoly Power and Relevant Market Definition

Plaintiffs bear the burden of proving that eBay has monopoly power. Monopoly power [4] is "the power to control prices or exclude competition." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966).

> A plaintiff may demonstrate market power either by direct evidence or by circumstantial evidence. Direct proof of market power may be shown by evidence of restricted output and supracompetitive prices. Such a showing "is direct proof of the injury to competition which a competitor with market power may inflict, and thus, of the actual exercise of market power."

Forsyth, 114 F.3d at 1475 (citing Rebel Oil Co., 51 F.3d at 1434) (internal citations omitted). Only when there is a failure of direct proof must the plaintiff provide circumstantial evidence, which requires defining the relevant market. Id. at 1476.

i. Direct Evidence of Market Power

Plaintiffs contend that they have presented sufficient direct evidence of eBay's market power in the online auction market. First, they claim that the record contains empirical evidence that eBay behaves as a monopolist in the online auction market. They cite the findings of The Parthenon Group, a consulting service hired by eBay to examine price elasticity on its marketplace platform, as proof that eBay's fees for its online auction services are monopolistic. Specifically, [*13] Plaintiffs point to Parthenon's finding of a -1.0 price elasticity for the online auction format. They contend that Parthenon's finding that elasticities for the auction platform are different from those for the fixed-price platform demonstrates market power in the online auction format, because that difference "would not persist if sellers and buyers viewed the[] two platforms as close substitutes." (Pls.' Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. for Summ. J. ("MSJ") 5.)

Second, Plaintiffs argue that eBay's maintenance or increase of its price levels throughout the class period and eBay employees' recognition of eBay's ability to do so constitute direct evidence of market power. Third, Plaintiffs assert that other empirical evidence in the record demonstrates low cross-elasticity of demand between online auctions and fixed-price transactions. Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Glenn Woroch ("Woroch"), examined data on a sale on fixed-price fees in July 2008. According to Woroch, "[i]f the two formats were close substitutes, auction listings would fall significantly as sellers shift to the temporarily lower fixed-price format." (Pls.' Opp'n to Def.'s MSJ 6.) However, Woroch concluded that the data showed no such [*14] change; Plaintiffs contend that this shows that the two formats are not economic substitutes for one another.

Fourth, Plaintiffs claim that The Parthenon Group's analysis of own-price elasticity of demand is further evidence of eBay's market power in online auctions. While Woroch asserts that own-price elasticity should not differ if auctions and fixed-price listings are close substitutes, The Parthenon Group's data show that own-price elasticity does differ between the formats.

eBay offers two principal arguments in response. First, it contends that Plaintiffs incorrectly define "market power." Second, it asserts that both Plaintiffs and Woroch misinterpret their own evidence, and that Plaintiffs define the concept of market power too broadly. In his declaration in opposition to eBay's motion for summary judgment, Woroch states:

---

[4] "The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and the district courts of the Ninth Circuit have routinely treated 'monopoly power' and 'market power' as synonymous terms in the context of a § 2 Sherman Act claim." *IGT v. Alliance Gaming Corp., No. 2:04-CV-1676-RCJ-RJJ, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111770, 2008 WL 7071468, at 10 (D. Nev. Oct. 21, 2008) [*12] ; see, e.g., United States v. LSL Biotechs., 379 F.3d 672, 696 (9th Cir.2004) ("The power relevant to antitrust is market power, or as some economists put it 'monopoly power.'"); Image Technical Servs., Inc. v. Wash. Natural Gas Co., 99 F.3d 937, 950 n.15 (9th Cir. 1996) (stating, in a § 2 action, that "[t]he terms 'market power' and 'monopoly power' are used interchangeably herein"); Cyntegra, Inc. v. Idexx Laboratories, Inc., 520 F. Supp. 2d 1199, 1209 (C.D. Cal.2007) ("The first element of a § 2 claim requires monopoly power (also known as market power), which is 'the power to control prices or exclude competition.'").

> I do not draw conclusions about whether eBay has monopoly power in any market, which I understand to mean it would have the ability to exclude all, or nearly all, competitors from those markets. My analysis is limited to the determination of market power by which I mean the ability to raise price above the competitive level.

(Woroch MSJ Opp'n Decl. 2 n.3 (emphasis [*15] in original).) eBay contends that Woroch's definition equates market power with "the power over price possessed by every producer of a non-fungible good," a formulation that has been rejected explicitly in the antitrust literature. Instead, relying upon Judge Posner's treatise on the subject, eBay argues that "'market power' in an exclusionary conduct case means something close to monopoly power." (Def.'s MSJ Reply 17 (citing Richard A. Posner, Antitrust Law 195 (2d ed. 2001)).) According to eBay, Judge Posner has warned against adopting the definition used by Woroch precisely because "even firms 'in highly competitive markets will often have some power over price as long as they are not selling a fungible commodity.'" (Id. (citing Posner, Antitrust Law 195).)

eBay also challenges Plaintiffs' empirical evidence. Among other things, it argues that Plaintiffs' reliance on own-price elasticity is misplaced. In the opinion of eBay's expert, Dr. Kevin Murphy ("Murphy"), "a finding of -1.0 price elasticity is simply a reflection of the fact that eBay's marginal costs are approximately zero, and that it 'tells us nothing about the level of competition. . . . If marginal costs are zero, 100% [*16] of any price is a markup, no matter what the level of price.'" (Id. (citing Murphy Supp. Decl. PP 42, 44).) In addition, eBay argues that Woroch misinterprets the results of the July 2008 sale on fixed-price fees. According to eBay, Woroch's own analysis "show[s] that auction listings did in fact fall by 3.44% during the fixed price insertion fee sale, based on just two days of listing data (one before the sale and one during)" (Id. at 18 (citing Woroch MSJ Decl. Ex. 2) (emphasis in original)) and that the formats thus are substitutes for one another.

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to them, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to show "direct evidence of the injurious exercise of market power" from the facts in the record. As discussed above, the Ninth Circuit has recognized that market power "may be shown by evidence of restricted output and supracompetitive prices." Forsyth, 114 F.3d at 1475 (emphasis added). Evidence that eBay has raised prices over a period of years, and that several of its employees believe that the company may have raised them too high, proves nothing with respect to whether the prices are supracompetitive. Plaintiffs have provided [*17] no evidence of either restricted output or supracompetitive prices, let alone both. See, e.g., id. at 1476 (holding that "plaintiffs have failed to present direct evidence of market power" where they submitted evidence of supracompetitive prices but made "no accompanying showing of restricted output"). Nor have Plaintiffs cited any authority for the proposition that the type of evidence they have provided constitutes direct proof of market power. [5]

ii. Circumstantial Evidence of Market Power

While antitrust plaintiffs are permitted to present direct evidence of a defendant's market power, "[t]he more common type of proof is circumstantial evidence pertaining to the structure of the market." Rebel Oil Co., 51 F.3d at 1434. To meet their burden with circumstantial evidence, Plaintiffs must "(1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show [*18] that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Id. eBay argues that Plaintiffs have failed to define the relevant market correctly or to show, when the market is defined correctly, that eBay has a dominant share of the market.

(1) Defining the Relevant Market

Market definition is a threshold issue. Resolution of Plaintiffs' claims both for monopolization and for attempted monopolization is "dependent upon a definition of the relevant market. Without such a determination, [a court] cannot assess whether challenged activity was anticompetitive." Forsyth, 114 F.3d at 1477; see also id. at 1476 ("It is impossible to determine market share without first defining the relevant market."). As the Ninth Circuit has held:

---

[5] eBay raises evidentiary objections to certain documents cited in Plaintiffs' opposition papers as direct evidence of market power. Because the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to show that there is a triable issue of fact even with the contested evidence, the objections are moot.

> Definition of the relevant market cannot be performed with mathematical accuracy; it is simply the recognition of a field in which meaningful competition is said to exist. We have previously defined the relevant market as the group of sellers or producers who have the "actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business."

Id. at 1476 (citation omitted). [*19] Put another way, "[t]he product market includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand." Tanaka v. Univ. of S. Cal., 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th 2001) (citation omitted).

eBay argues that Plaintiffs' proffered "online auctions market" is not a proper relevant market because it does not include all reasonably interchangeable substitutes. It points to evidence in the record that the named Plaintiffs as well as other eBay buyers and sellers substitute regularly among online auctions and other sales platforms and that its online auction format is priced competitively both with its own fixed-price platform and with Amazon, its fixed-price competitor.

Plaintiffs do not dispute eBay's claim of competitive pricing, relying instead upon Brown Shoe, Inc. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). In Brown Shoe, the Supreme Court held that "within [a] broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes" and that "[t]he boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate [*20] economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325. Plaintiffs contend that application of Brown Shoe's "practical indicia" leads to the conclusion that the online auctions market is an economically distinct submarket within the broader category of online marketplaces. [6]

Industry or Public Recognition

According to Plaintiffs, the record demonstrates that eBay employees, industry analysts, potential competitors such as Yahoo!, and internet bloggers all recognize the online auction market as a separate economic entity distinct from the fixed-price format. However, eBay points to Woroch's acknowledgment in his deposition testimony that such evidence "is not germane to defining the relevant market for antitrust purposes." (Def.'s MSJ Reply 11.)

Peculiar Characteristics or Uses

Plaintiffs contend that eBay's online auctions possess several characteristics and uses that make them distinct from fixed-price sales. First, they cite record evidence that online auctions are "particularly useful to enable a market for hard-to-find or [*22] unique types of goods, different from goods that are commodity-type goods." (Pls.' Opp'n to MSJ 11.) Second, they highlight the lack of time constraints for online auctions in comparison to offline auctions and

---

[6] eBay objects to each document cited by Plaintiffs in support of the Brown Shoe factors. eBay asks that the documents be excluded or, in the alternative, that eBay be given the opportunity to supplement some of them to put the documents in context, on one or more of the following grounds: relevance, authentication, inadmissible hearsay, or lack of context.

The objections are overruled. Each of the documents cited meets the relevance standards of Rules 401 and 402. Similarly, the statements challenged as hearsay either are not offered for the truth of the matters asserted; are admissions by eBay, its employees, or its agents within the scope of the employment or agency; or are admissible under Rule 803. The documents all are properly authenticated either [*21] by virtue of their production by eBay or by a third party pursuant to discovery requests in this litigation, their publication in newspapers or periodicals, their issuance as official government reports, or through the submission of a voice recording. While Rule 106 allows eBay to supplement the record with material it believes should be taken into consideration contemporaneously with any of Plaintiffs' submissions, it has not done so.

transactions with traditional retailers. Third, they note that online auction sellers and buyers face minimal geographical constraints, as nearly all of the transactions that occur on eBay are not local. Fourth, they argue that online auctions offer a unique and fun experience to buyers and sellers distinct from other sales formats.

While conceding that the online auction format may be unique, eBay disagrees strongly that the format represents a separate market for antitrust purposes. It argues that market definition is controlled by "commercial realities," as demonstrated by consumer behavior, and it cites unambiguous evidence in the record--particularly the testimony of the Named Plaintiffs that the relevant market for eBay sellers includes alternatives to the online format.

Unique Production Facilities

Plaintiffs claim that because eBay provides a service or venue rather than goods, the question of whether eBay has unique production facilities is irrelevant to market definition. [*23] eBay contends that Plaintiffs ignore this factor because it weighs against them. It notes that "eBay online auctions were born from a computer and internet connection, just like the services provided by, among others, Amazon.com, Craigslist, and Google that Plaintiffs place outside their relevant market." (Def.'s MSJ Reply 13.)

Distinct Customers

Plaintiffs assert that online auctions have distinct customers--both buyers and sellers. First, they contend that eBay's auction platform is dominated by a "core group of consumer sellers," the majority of whom, as shown by eBay's own marketing studies, sell exclusively on eBay. Second, they point to eBay survey data from 2005 showing that more than half of eBay buyers bought exclusively on the auction format while only twenty percent bought from both the fixed-price and auction formats. Third, they refer to comments by eBay employees about eBay sellers as evidence that sellers are captive to eBay because of a lack of viable alternatives. Fourth, they offer eBay corporate documents to prove that the alternatives to eBay's auction format that do exist--Amazon, Craigslist, and Overstock--are not genuinely close substitutes.

eBay points to evidence [*24] in the record showing that its buyers and sellers do not specialize in one format or another, either online or offline, and that, in fact, twenty-seven percent of online auctions are listed simultaneously in the fixed price format. eBay also disputes Woroch's finding that there is only small percentage of overlap between eBay's auction and fixed-price listings and claims that, when the statistics relied upon by Woroch are analyzed correctly, the overlap actually is eighty percent.

Distinct Prices

Plaintiffs argue that sales on eBay's auction platform have distinct prices (i.e., fees) that eBay itself has recognized are not competitive with alternatives. Plaintiffs attribute the similarities between pricing for the fixed-price and auction formats in previous years to "the historical development of eBay's business model rather than the conclusion that eBay's auction fee levels were competively restrained by fixed-price platforms" and point to evidence that in October 2008 "eBay finally responded to the fixed price competitive landscape by only reducing its fees for fixed-price sales, while leaving auction fee levels unchanged." (Pls. Opp'n to Def.'s MSJ 18.)

eBay notes that its fees for [*25] the auction and fixed-price formats have been the same for the majority of the class period, and it also argues that "as a matter of law, price differences do not establish the existence of separate product markets, when, as here, price varies along with product characteristics." (Def.'s MSJ Reply 14.) Citing authority from this district, eBay contends that "[c]ourts have repeatedly rejected efforts to define markets by price variances or product quality variances. Such distinctions are economically meaningless where the differences are actually a spectrum of price and quality differences." In re Super Premium Ice Cream Distribution Antitrust Litig., 691 F. Supp. 1262, 1268 (N.D. Cal. 1988).

Sensitivity to Price Changes

Reasserting their earlier arguments with respect to elasticity of demand, Plaintiffs contend that this factor weighs toward finding a submarket of online auctions. eBay again asserts that Woroch's analysis of the fixed-price fee sale actually shows that auction sellers are sensitive to changes in price. eBay also relies on the deposition testimony of Ann Farmer, one of the Named Plaintiffs, who testified that price increases for auction listings induced her to choose [*26] the fixed-price format instead. (Farmer June 3, 2009, Dep. 31:14-23.)

Specialized Vendors

Plaintiffs contend that this factor favors finding a submarket for online auctions because the auction platform, which "connects millions of sellers to millions of buyers to engage in online auctions," (Pls.' Opp'n to Def.'s MSJ 9), is a "specialized method of retailing distinct from other conventional methods." Photovest Corp. v. Fotomat Corp., 606 F.2d 704, 714 (7th Cir. 1979). Plaintiffs emphasize that eBay's marketplace is different from that used by traditional retailers because eBay never takes possession or ownership of the products sold.

While it agrees that it offers a unique way of retailing, eBay points out that its "specialized method" applies equally to its fixed-price format, in that eBay never takes ownership of the products sold through either format.

Summary

The Ninth Circuit has held that the Brown Shoe factors are > practical aids for identifying the areas of actual or potential competition and that their presence or absence does not decide automatically the submarket issue. [citations omitted] Whether isolating a submarket is justified turns ultimately upon whether the factors used [*27] to define the submarket are "economically significant." [citation omitted]

Thurman Indus., Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1375 (9th Cir. 1989).

In Thurman Industries, the plaintiff competitor alleged that the defendant retailer exercised market power in a submarket comprised of "home center" retail stores. Relying upon Brown Shoe, the plaintiff argued that home center stores were specialized vendors, that they catered to distinct customers known as "do-it-yourselfers," that they were recognized in the industry as a discrete product market, and that consumers recognized them as a discrete submarket. In rejecting plaintiffs' market definition, the Ninth Circuit held that:

> [t]he factors advanced by Thurman represent but two fundamental assumptions of fact: (1) that home centers are perceived as distinguishable from other stores by the variety of products and the trained sales staffs that home centers offer, and (2) that customers engaged in major home remodeling or home repair projects patronize home centers because of this distinction. But these factual assumptions, even if true, form an inadequate basis for concluding that home centers and other retailers lack the ability [*28] to attract substantial amounts of business away from each other. Stated more concretely, the factors identified by Thurman are wholly inadequate to allow a finding that specialty stores selling house paint are unable through price reductions or other marketing strategies to lure significant numbers of do-it-yourself builders into buying paint at a specialty store even if they purchase all their other supplies at a home center. This analysis applies with equal force to the marketing overlap of all other products sold both by home centers and by other retailers.

Id. at 1376.

Here, however, Plaintiff's evidence with respect to the Brown Shoe indicia is at least sufficient to create a triable issue of fact as to whether other, non-auction platforms have "actual or potential ability to deprive [providers of online auction formats] of significant levels of business." Id. at 1374 (citation omitted). Many of eBay's challenges to Plaintiffs' factual showing go to the weight rather than the materiality or legal sufficiency of the evidence. Market definition "is a factual inquiry for the jury; the court may not weigh evidence or judge witness credibility." Id. (citation omitted). [7]

(2) Ownership of a Dominant Share of the Market

A determination as to whether eBay owns a dominant share of the market obviously depends on the definition of the relevant market. In this instance, each party has presented evidence of eBay's market share using its own definition. Accordingly, because it concludes that Plaintiffs' have presented evidence sufficient to raise a triable issue of fact as to their proposed market definition, the Court also concludes that Plaintiffs have demonstrated a triable issue of fact with respect to whether eBay controls a dominant share of that market. Indeed, eBay does not dispute Plaintiffs' assertion that it owns between eighty and ninety-nine percent [*31] of the online auction market. See Image Tech. Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1206 (9th Cir. 1997) ("Courts generally require a 65% market share to establish a prima facie case of market power.").

(3) Barriers to Entry

Plaintiffs assert that there are significant barriers to entry to the online auctions market because of network effects. eBay does not contest this assertion.

b. Causal Antitrust Injury

To survive summary judgment on the issue of causal antitrust injury, Plaintiffs must "offer some evidence demonstrating the existence of an antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendant's acts unlawful." Forsyth, 114 F.3d at 1477 (internal citations and quotations marks omitted). eBay claims that Plaintiffs have failed to present any such evidence.

Plaintiffs allege that they have suffered antitrust injury through eBay's charging of "supracompetitive" fees for its online auction platform. (See Consol. Class Action Compl. ("Compl.") P 128 ("EBay auction sellers have paid or are likely to pay artificially inflated and supra-competitive fees."); Dec. 1, 2009, Oral Arg. Trans. 105:16-20 [*32] ("THE COURT: BUT THE BOTTOM LINE IS THAT THE CUSTOMER IS PAYING MORE THAN THE CUSTOMER SHOULD BY VIRTUE OF THE MONOPOLISTIC POSITION[?] [PLAINTIFFS' COUNSEL] MR. SAMPSON: THAT IS THE ESSENCE OF AN OVERCHARGE CASE. THIS IS AN OVERCHARGE CASE.").)

---

[7] In response [*29] to eBay's reliance on the experience of the individual Named Plaintiffs, Plaintiffs argue that the substitutability of products should be viewed in the aggregate rather than at the individual level. To support this contention, Plaintiffs rely upon the decision of the District of Columbia Circuit in F.T.C. v. Whole Foods, 548 F.3d 1028, 383 U.S. App. D.C. 341 (D.C. Cir. 2008). That case held that "in some situations core consumers, demanding exclusively a particular product or package of products, distinguish a submarket." Id. at 1041. Plaintiffs contend that with online auctions, as with the speciality grocery stores at issue in Whole Foods, the existence of "fringe customers" who may not use the format exclusively does not defeat the existence of a submarket. Plaintiffs also claim that economic theory typically calculates cross-elasticity of demand in the aggregate rather than at the individual level.

eBay argues that Whole Foods is inapposite because, unlike the FTC, Plaintiffs have provided no evidence that eBay has discriminated against any online auction users, let alone users Plaintiffs would consider to be in the "core" subset for whom online auctions have no substitute. eBay also argues that the testimony [*30] of all three Named Plaintiffs demonstrates that none of them is a member of Plaintiffs' proposed "core" of eBay sellers and thus none of them has standing to assert the instant claims.

Because there are triable issues of fact as to Plaintiffs' proposed market definition based on the Brown Shoe factors, the Court does not address the applicability of a single out-of-circuit decision. Because eBay has not challenged the Named Plaintiffs' standing other than within the Whole Foods context, that issue is moot.

As a preliminary matter, the parties disagree over the appropriate measure of injury in a two-sided market such as eBay's. Consistent with their theory of recovery, Plaintiffs contend that the appropriate measure of damage is the alleged overcharge itself--that is, "the difference between the price paid for goods actually purchased and the price that would have been paid absent the illegal conduct." (Pls.' Reply in Support of Class Certification Mot. ("Pls.' Class Cert. Reply") 17 (citing 2 Phillip E. Areeda, Herbert Hovenkamp & Robert D. Blair, Antitrust Law P 394, at 521 (2d ed. 2000)).) Plaintiffs point to the Third Circuit's statement in Howard Hess Dental Laboratories, Inc. v. Dentsply International, Inc. ("Dentsply"), that "the standard method of measuring damages in price enhancement cases is overcharge, not lost profits." 424 F.3d 363, 374 (3d Cir. 2005).

eBay maintains that overcharge is not the appropriate measure of injury and that [*33] the Court should look instead to seller profit. eBay argues that unlike the one-sided market scenario considered in Dentsply and the cases cited therein, "in a two-sided market such as eBay's seller platform, changes to eBay's fee structure affect more than just the charge imposed on customers; there is no dispute that the level of eBay's fees determines what goods are listed, how quickly they sell and at what price they sell." (Def.'s MSJ Reply 7.) eBay cites two antitrust tying cases, Kypta v. McDonald's Corp., 671 F.2d 1282 (11th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 857, 103 S. Ct. 127, 74 L. Ed. 2d 109 (1982), and Siegel v. Chicken Delight, Inc., 448 F.2d 43 (9th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 955, 92 S. Ct. 1173, 31 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1972), in support of its position. Explaining the Siegel court's holding, which it then applied to the facts before it, the Kypta court opined that:

> Siegel, then, stands for the proposition that injury resulting from a tie-in must be shown by establishing that payments for both the tied and tying products exceeded their combined fair market value. The rationale behind this requirement is apparent: A determination of the value of the tied products alone would not indicate whether the plaintiff indeed suffered any net [*34] economic harm, since a lower price might conceivably have been exacted by the franchisor for the tying product. Unless the fair market value of both the tied and tying products are determined and an overcharge in the complete price found, no injury can be claimed; suit, then, would be foreclosed.

Kypta, 671 F.2d at 1285. While recognizing that the instant case does not involve tying, eBay contends that Kypta and Siegel are relevant because they stand for the proposition that "when an antitrust plaintiff complains about the effects that flow from an allegedly anticompetitive act, injury is determined by the net effect of the act." (Def.'s MSJ Reply 8.)

While Plaintiffs contend that the same standard that courts routinely have applied in one-sided markets should apply to eBay's two-sided market, both parties acknowledged at oral argument that there is no case law that addresses directly the issue presented here. As the Third Circuit recognized in Dentsply, "[a] court might potentially use a lost profits measure of damages, as '[t]he Supreme Court has not explicitly held that any particular measure of damages is required or precluded.'" 424 F.3d at 374 (citing ABA Section of Antitrust Law, [*35] Proving Antitrust Damages: Legal and Economic Issues 184 (1996)). Ultimately, however, this Court need not decide which measure of damages is appropriate here, because even assuming arguendo that overcharge is the correct measure, Plaintiffs have failed to raise a triable issue of fact as to whether they have been injured by eBay's alleged anticompetitive acts.

In their opposition to eBay's motion for summary judgment, Plaintiffs incorporate by reference their discussion of antitrust injury in their class certification motion and reply, together with Woroch's declarations in support of that motion. Plaintiffs emphasize repeatedly--and correctly--that in seeking class certification they "are not required to present completed damages models at the class certification stage, but merely [to] present a plausible methodology by which they will demonstrate impact on a common basis to the class." (Pls.' Class Cert. Reply 11:26-28 (citing In re Diamonds Antitrust Litig., 167 F.R.D. 374, 384 (9th Cir. 1996)); see also Pls.' Class Cert. Motion 42:11-13 (citing In re Tableware Antitrust Litig., 241 F.R.D. 644, 652 (N.D. Cal. 2007) ("It is not necessary that plaintiffs show that their expert's methods [*36] will work with certainty at this time. Rather, plaintiffs' burden is to present the court with a likely method for determining class damages.")).) However, to defeat eBay's motion for summary judgment, Plaintiffs still must point to admissible evidence that would permit a reasonable jury to find that they have suffered injury that was caused by eBay's alleged anticompetitive acts. Plaintiffs' proffered evidence of causal antitrust injury consists entirely of the two models Woroch offered in support of their motion for class certification.

i. Dominant-firm Model Entry Deterrence with Network Externalities Model

Using Woroch's first method, "antitrust impact may be measured through a dominant-firm model entry deterrence with network externalities model, where eBay's alleged anti-competitive actions have the effect of reducing competitive threats, enabling eBay to raise its fees (as reflected in its rate cards)." (Pls.' Mot. for Class Cert. 41 (citing Woroch Class Cert. Decl. PP 8, 73-80).) According to Plaintiffs, "[t]he key insight of the [deferred entry] model is the tradeoff facing the dominant firm between current price level and future entry." (Pls. Class Cert. Reply 11.) Woroch proposes [*37] that the model can "determine impact on class members by comparing eBay's actual fees with fees it would have charged if it faced competitive threats unencumbered by the anticompetitive actions." (Woroch Class Cert. Decl. P 77.)

However, while Woroch describes how his first model might work in theory, Plaintiffs make no attempt anywhere in their briefing to show that the model actually works in practice in this case and would permit a reasonable jury to conclude that Plaintiffs have been injured as a result of eBay's alleged anticompetitive acts. To the contrary, Woroch concludes the section of his declaration discussing this model with the following paragraph:

> To fit a dominant-firm model of entry deterrence to the facts of the online auction market would require rather detailed data. Detailed figures on the listings and transactions by eBay and by its active competitors would be needed along with complete fee structure over the sample period. It is possible, however, to characterize this equilibrium with access to reliable estimates of buyer and seller behavior, such as the price elasticity of auction listings.

(Woroch Class Cert. Decl. P 80 (emphasis added).) While Plaintiffs claim [*38] in their class certification papers that they did not "have the requested transactional data important to populate Plaintiffs' models" at the time they filed their motion (Pls.' Class Cert. Reply 13), they do not contend at any point in their opposition to the motion for summary judgment, nor did they indicate at oral argument, that they lack sufficient data with respect to Woroch's first model to raise a triable issue of fact as to causal antitrust injury.

ii. Reduced-form Treatment Effects Regression Model

Woroch's second method of determining antitrust injury is "a reduced-form treatment effects regression model [which] relat[es] eBay's auction 'take rates' to market conditions, comparing the take rates under different degrees of anti-competitive conduct during the class period." (Pls.' Class Cert. Mot. 41 (citing Woroch Class Cert. Decl. PP 8, 81-86).) The term "take rate" refers to "eBay's revenues as a percentage of total merchandise sold using eBay.com" and is used by Woroch as "a proxy for the amount of seller overcharge experienced by members of the class." (Pls.' Class Cert. Reply 10.) Woroch proposes that the model can determine how much sellers were overcharged by eBay as [*39] a result of one or more of its anticompetitive acts by comparing the actual take rate with the take rate in a "but-for world" in which eBay did not engage in these acts. Plaintiffs offer several specific examples based on the available data, including one that purports to demonstrate the overcharge associated with eBay's acquisition of PayPal. (See id. (citing Woroch Class Cert. Reply Decl. PP 19-20; Ex. 1).)

Plaintiffs devote several paragraphs of their class certification reply brief to lauding the merits of regression analysis in antitrust cases. However, the problem with Woroch's second model is not its general methodology but what the model purports to show. As discussed above, Plaintiffs' theory of causal antitrust injury is that they were injured by paying supracompetitive fees, or, in other words, by being "overcharged" by eBay for its services. Woroch's model explicitly uses take rate as a proxy for overcharge. Take rate, however:

> although a measure of fees collected by eBay across all transactions, is not actually a measure of the fee paid by any of the three Named Plaintiffs or any class member. eBay's take rate is determined by the volume of the goods sold on its site, the [*40] number of total listings, the number of successful listings, the features that sellers use to present their listings to potential buyers, and its rate schedule. Of these, only the last is of antitrust interest.

(Def.'s MSJ Reply 7.) There is no material dispute that take rate "can move up as eBay sellers add features to their listings in pursuit of higher average selling prices" or "if listings increase more rapidly than successful listings."

(Def.'s MSJ Reply 5.) Even assuming that Woroch's model shows an increase in take rate following an allegedly anticompetitive act by eBay, the model cannot--nor is it designed to--determine whether that increase resulted from an increase in fees or the imposition of supracompetitive fees.

eBay's expert, Dr. Robert Topel ("Topel"), explains this problem as follows:

> [T]he Take Rate is affected by sell-through rates--the fraction of listed goods that actually sell. Lower sell-through rates raise the Take Rate by reducing the average sale value per listing, even if fees are unchanged. Sell through rates, in turn, are influenced by sellers' own decisions. If these changes are correlated with the existence of challenged [that is, alleged anticompetitive] [*41] acts, then Professor Woroch's analysis will attribute impact to acts even if there is none.
> The Take Rate also increases when the average selling price for completed transactions declines, holding the levels and structure of the fees constant. If a challenged act had no anticompetitive impact on fees, but attracted more low-value items to the platform, then this association would also wrongly attribute an anticompetitive impact to the act.

(Topel Class Cert. Decl. PP 139-40.)

In response to Topel's declaration, Woroch makes the following statement:

> Dr. Topel does raise the possibility that the discrepancy between the rate card [i.e., the fees charged to eBay sellers] and take rate could be correlated with [average selling price] or with the sell through rate which, in turn, are related to the challenged act(s). Accepting for the moment that take rate is a proxy for antitrust impact, and that it is subject to such measurement error, standard techniques exist for avoiding bias that could arise as a result of correlation. The correlation that arises between an explanatory variable is a very common occurrence in applied econometrics. Perhaps the most popular remedy is to perform 'instrumental [*42] variable estimation.' Use of a good instrument will accommodate correlation that arises between the included indicators of the anticompetitive acts and the error term in the regression.

(Woroch Class Cert. Reply Decl. P 25.)

Woroch's response highlights the problems with Plaintiffs' attempt to show antitrust injury. First, Woroch responds to the criticism that he is using take rate as a proxy for anticompetitive injury with an explanation that assumes the same proxy. Second, as is the case with his first model, Woroch merely describes how he might use econometric techniques to reduce the error rate. While such a hypothetical analysis might be sufficient to meet the "plausible methodology" standard required for class certification, it is too indefinite and speculative to enable Plaintiffs to survive summary judgment.

Despite Plaintiffs' repeated assertion that a class certification motion is not the appropriate forum for a "battle of the experts," Plaintiffs and their expert devote an inordinate number of pages in their class certification reply to challenging Topel's theories and opinions. However, even if Topel's analysis is flawed, that fact does not help Plaintiffs carry their burden [*43] on summary judgment. Despite the voluminous briefing permitted in connection with both of the instant motions--which includes hundreds of pages of supporting documents--Plaintiffs have not drawn the Court's attention to any actual proof of antitrust injury caused by eBay's alleged anticompetive acts--on an individual or a classwide level. It is undisputed that Woroch's model does not measure fees, or at the very least does not measure them alone. His comparison between actual take rate and take rate in the but-for world thus is insufficient to permit a jury to determine whether the Plaintiffs were overcharged as a result of eBay's alleged anticompetitive acts. Absent any probative evidence as to this element of Plaintiffs' antitrust claims, eBay is entitled to summary judgment.

2. Monopolization and Attempted Monopolization of the Person-to-Person Online Payment Market

The foregoing discussion of causal antitrust injury applies equally to Plaintiffs' claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization of the P2P online payment market.

3. State Law Claims

As Plaintiffs acknowledge in their motion for class certification, "[t]he analysis under California's antitrust law mirrors the analysis [*44] under federal law." (Pls.' Class Cert. Mot. 43 (citing County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1160 (9th Cir. 2001)).) As Plaintiffs' state law claims are predicated on violations of the federal antitrust laws, eBay is entitled to summary judgment on these claims as well.

B. Motion for Class Certification

In light of the disposition of the motion for summary judgment, Plaintiffs' motion for class certification is moot.

III. ORDER

The motion for summary judgment will be granted. The motion for class certification will be denied as moot. Judgment will be entered accordingly.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: March 4, 2010

/s/ Jeremy Fogel

JEREMY FOGEL

United States District Judge

Precision CPAP, Inc. v. Jackson Hosp.

United States District Court for the Middle District of Alabama, Northern Division

March 8, 2010, Decided; March 8, 2010, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 2:05cv1096-MHT (WO)

Reporter

2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20336 *; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,939; 2010 WL 797170

PRECISION CPAP, INC.; MEDICAL PLACE, INC.; PHASE III VANS, INC. d/b/a EAST MEDICAL EQUIPMENT AND EQUIPMENT AND SUPPLY; and MED-EX, Plaintiffs, v. JACKSON HOSPITAL; MED-SOUTH INC.; JMS HEALTH SERVICES, LLC, d/b/a JACKSON MED-SOUTH HOME HEALTH, LLC,; BAPTIST HEALTH, INC.; BAPTIST VENTURES-AMERICAN HOME PATIENT; Defendants.

Core Terms

patients, providers, antitrust, Sherman Act, Ski, plaintiffs', anti trust law, consumers, submarket, allegations, monopolization, monopoly, relevant market, damages, captive, profits, antitrust violation, defendants', rivals, staff, enforcers, factors, joint venture, competitor, discharged, reciprocal, mountains, prices, terms, advertising

Counsel: [*1] For Precision CPAP, Inc., Med-Ex, Phase III Vans, Inc., doing business as East Medical Equipment and Supply, Medical Place, Inc., Plaintiffs: Brian Michael Clark, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wiggins Childs Quinn & Pantanzis, PC, Birmingham, AL; Dwayne Lamar Brown, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Office of Dwayne L Brown PC, Montgomery, AL.

For Jackson Hospital, Defendant: Dennis Ray Bailey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Rushton Stakely Johnston & Garrett PC, Montgomery, AL; James Eugene Williams, LEAD ATTORNEY, Melton Espy & Williams, PC, Montgomery, AL.

For Med-South, Inc., Defendant: Dennis Ray Bailey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Rushton Stakely Johnston & Garrett PC, Montgomery, AL; James Eugene Williams, LEAD ATTORNEY, Melton Espy & Williams, PC, Montgomery, AL; Robert Brett Adair, Carlson & Adair, LLC, Birmingham, AL.

For JMS Health Services, LLC, doing business as Jackson Med-South Home Health, LLC, Defendant: Dennis Ray Bailey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Rushton Stakely Johnston & Garrett PC, Montgomery, AL; James Eugene Williams, LEAD ATTORNEY, Melton Espy & Williams, PC, Montgomery, AL; Robert Brett Adair, LEAD ATTORNEY, Carlson & Adair, LLC, Birmingham, AL.

For Baptist Health, Inc., Defendant: Dennis Ray Bailey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Rushton Stakely [*2] Johnston & Garrett PC, Montgomery, AL; Glenn B. Rose, J. David Mcdowell, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Harwell Howard Hyne Gabbert & Manner, P.C., Nashville, TN; James Eugene Williams, LEAD ATTORNEY, Melton Espy & Williams, PC, Montgomery, AL.

For American Home Patient, Inc., Baptist Ventures-American Home Patient, Defendants: Dennis Ray Bailey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Rushton Stakely Johnston & Garrett PC, Montgomery, AL; , Glenn B. Rose, J. David McdowellLEAD ATTORNEYS, Harwell Howard Hyne Gabbert & Manner, P.C., Nashville, TN; James Eugene Williams, Melton Espy & Williams, PC, Montgomery, AL.

For Lincare Inc., Defendant: Gregory Scotch Ritchey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Ritchey, Simpson & Glick, PLLC, Birmingham, AL; Richard Stephen Walker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Ritchey & Simpson, PLLC, Birmingham, AL.

Judges: Myron H. Thompson, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: Myron H. Thompson

Opinion

The plaintiffs, which are in the durable medical equipment (DME) business, bring this private antitrust suit against the defendants, which are hospitals, corporations, and affiliates, claiming violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2, as privately enforced through §§ 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 & 26, as well as [*3] violations of Alabama state antitrust law, 1975 Ala. Code § 6-5-60. The plaintiffs are as follows: Precision CPAP, Inc.; Medical Place, Inc.; Phase III Vans, Inc., d/b/a/ East Medical Equipment and Supply; and Med-Ex. The defendants are as follows: Jackson Hospital; Med-South, Inc.; JMS Health Services, L.L.C., d/b/a Jackson Med-South Home Health, L.L.C.; Baptist Health, Inc.; American Home Patient, Inc.; and Baptist Ventures-American Home Patient. Specifically, the plaintiffs allege that the defendants have illegally excluded them from the DME market. Jurisdiction over the plaintiffs' federal claims is proper pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 (federal question) and 15 U.S.C. § 4 (antitrust); supplemental jurisdiction over the state claims is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1367.

Now before the court is the defendants' motion to dismiss the plaintiffs' first amended complaint. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). For the reasons that follow, the motion will be granted.

I. MOTION-TO-DISMISS STANDARD

In considering a defendant's motion to dismiss, the court accepts the plaintiff's allegations as true, Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984), and construes the complaint in the plaintiff's favor, Duke v. Cleland, 5 F.3d 1399, 1402 (11th Cir. 1993). [*4] "The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974). To survive a dismissal motion, a complaint need not contain "detailed factual allegations," Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), but rather "only enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face," id. at 570.

II. BACKGROUND

The relevant facts as alleged by the plaintiffs are as follows. The plaintiffs are corporations engaged or formerly engaged in the business of providing DME (including beds, walkers, wheelchairs, and oxygen tanks) for the home-health care of patients in and around Montgomery, Alabama. The vast majority of the plaintiffs' business results from the sale or lease of DME to patients who have been discharged from local hospitals and prescribed DME by their physicians.

Defendant Jackson Hospital, in Montgomery, and defendant Baptist Health, which operates two hospitals in Montgomery as well as a hospital in nearby Prattville, Alabama, are the primary source of hospital services for a majority of Montgomery-area residents. Until the late 1990s, the plaintiffs [*5] focused their DME marketing efforts on the staff at these hospitals and on patients awaiting discharge. When patients did not choose a DME provider, they were assigned to a provider on a rotating basis.

In the late 1990s, Jackson Hospital and Baptist Health each decided to enter the DME market. Jackson entered into a joint venture with defendant Med-South, Inc., a DME provider, to operate JMS Health Services. Similarly, Baptist Health entered into a joint venture with defendant American Home Patient, Inc., a DME provider, to operate Baptist Ventures-American Home Patient. Each joint venture created an in-house provider of DME for the patients at Jackson's and Baptist's respective hospitals. [1]

---

[1] The amended complaint does not allege that Jackson Hospital and Baptist Health cooperated in any way with each other, only that they both entered similar joint ventures with different DME providers.

Once these joint ventures were formed, Jackson Hospital began referring its patients with DME needs to JMS, and the hospitals operated by Baptist Health began referring their patients with DME needs to Baptist Ventures. The hospitals ended their practice of assigning DME providers on a rotating basis [*6] to patients who do not choose a provider. Unless patients specifically requested an outside DME provider, they were referred to the hospital's affiliated DME provider.

The plaintiffs allege that their referrals from hospitals have almost vanished and that they have suffered a loss of revenue as a result of the defendants' actions. Plaintiff Med-Ex sold the assets of its business and alleges that the sale price of the assets was depressed as a result of the defendants' actions.

III. FEDERAL CLAIMS

A. Antitrust Standing

As a threshold matter, the court must address whether the plaintiffs have standing to sue under the Sherman and Clayton Acts. Section 4 of the Clayton Act defines the class of persons who may bring a private-damages action under antitrust laws. It states:

> "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefore in any district of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

15 U.S.C. § 5. [*7] Despite this language, which could conceivably "encompass every harm that can be attributed directly to the consequences of an antitrust violation," Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 529, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983), the courts have interpreted this statute more narrowly. In considering whether a party has standing to bring suit under the antitrust laws, a court should first determine "whether the plaintiff suffered 'antitrust injury.'" Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1449 (11th Cir. 1991). Antitrust injury is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Specifically, "[t]he injury should reflect the anticompetitive effects either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Id. Second, "the court should determine whether the plaintiff is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws." Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1449. This requires an examination of factors including:

> "1) the existence of a causal connection between the antitrust violation and the alleged injury; [*8] 2) the nature of plaintiff's alleged injury; 3) the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative; 4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and, finally, 5) the existence of a more direct victim of the alleged anticompetitive conduct."

Austin v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Alabama, 903 F.2d 1385, 1388 (11th Cir. 1990). To determine antitrust standing, "a court must review the allegations contained in the complaint." Id. at 1387.

The plaintiffs allege that the hospitals and their captive DME providers combined to restrict access to the market for DME sales and rentals to patients discharged from their hospitals. Specifically, the hospitals ceased the rotational assignment of patients to the plaintiffs and other DME providers; denied the plaintiffs access to the hospital staff and patients; and instructed case workers on staff to refer patients to the captive DME providers. The plaintiffs allege that, as a result, in most cases patients know of only one choice of DME provider. According to the plaintiffs, this has led to an increase in the captive DME providers' market power to the [*9] point where they can cut services and raise prices without any corresponding drop in usage or revenues.

The defendants contend that the plaintiffs' allegations are insufficient to establish antitrust standing. In particular, the defendants argue that the plaintiffs lack antitrust standing because they are unable to show that prices have actually risen for DME not covered by Medicare or that the quality has eroded for DME covered by Medicare. According to the defendants, the plaintiffs did not suffer an antitrust injury and, even if they had, the plaintiffs would not be the most efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws.

1. Antitrust Injury

The defendants rely on the reasoning in Todorov to support their contention that the plaintiffs did not suffer an antitrust injury. There, the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals held that a doctor lacked antitrust standing to sue a hospital for failure to grant privileges in the radiology department.

Todorov was a practicing neurologist who relied on CT scans to diagnose his patients. Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1442. He referred many of his patients to DCH Healthcare Authority for the procedure. DCH would receive a fee from patients' insurance companies for [*10] the CT scan, even though Todorov usually examined the film himself. To obtain some of the profits from the procedure, Todorov applied for privileges at DCH to administer and officially interpret CT scans. DCH, however, denied his application. Todorov brought suit against defendants for conspiracy under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Specifically, he alleged that radiologists controlled the market and were reaping supercompetitive profits.

The court held that Todorov's alleged injury was not the "type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Id. at 1453. Todorov "applied for privileges in the radiology department so that he could reap the profits that the radiologists received" from the inflated prices that patients were charged. Id. at 1452. Thus, his primary objective in bringing suit was to benefit from supercompetitive prices rather than create competition for consumers. This was not a cognizable antitrust injury because "[t]he antitrust laws were not enacted to permit one person to profit from the anticompetitive behavior of another person." Id. at 1454.

Contrary [*11] to the defendants' contention, this case is distinguishable from Todorov. Whereas Todorov failed to allege any injury to competition from DCH's denial of access to radiologist privileges, the plaintiffs' allegations in this case, that the hospitals were channeling patient choice to their captive DME providers, are sufficient to show the necessary injury to competition. See Advanced Health-Care Servs, Inc. v. Radford Cmty Hosp., 910 F.2d 139, 149 (4th Cir. 1990).

In addition, the failure of the plaintiffs to allege an actual increase in prices or an actual deterioration in the quality of DME does not defeat the claim of an antitrust injury. In making a determination of whether a plaintiff has alleged antitrust injury, "a court must consider the effect on competition and not simply the effect on the ultimate consumer." Key Enterprises of Delaware, Inc. v. Venice Hospital, 919 F.2d 1550, 1559 (11th Cir. 1990), vacated as moot en banc, 9 F.3d 893 (11th Cir. 1993). [2] If the allegations of the plaintiffs are proven true, competition has been injured because competing DME vendors no longer have access to the discharged-hospital patients who require DME.

Finally, this court disagrees with the defendants' contention that the plaintiffs, through this action, seek only to increase their profits and therefore have not alleged a cognizable antitrust injury. Unlike Todorov, the plaintiffs' damages in this case are not premised on their ability to profit while patients "paid an artificially inflated price." Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1454. Instead, the plaintiffs seek to ameliorate the potential for an increase in price and erosion in the quality of DME by reintroducing competition into the DME market for discharged-hospital patients. While an increase in the plaintiffs' profit will be a likely byproduct of a successful suit, it does not come at the continued detriment of consumers and competition.

2. Efficient Enforcer of the Antitrust Laws

The second issue that must be addressed to determine the plaintiffs' antitrust standing is whether they would be "efficient [*13] enforcer[s] of the antitrust laws." Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1449. As stated, there is a non-exhaustive list of five factors that should be assessed in determining whether a plaintiff is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws.

---

[2] The defendants correctly assert that Key [*12] Enterprises has no precedential authority since it was vacated on mootness grounds. However, a court can find the reasoning in vacated cases to be of persuasive value. See e.g., United States v. Johnson, 399 F.3d 1297, 1298 n.1 (2005) (concluding that a vacated opinion can have persuasive value).

The defendants, without addressing any particular factor, contend that the plaintiffs would not be efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws. The court will address each of the factors in turn.

The first factor this court must address is "the existence of a causal connection between the antitrust violation and the alleged injury." Austin, 903 F.2d at 1388. In this case, the plaintiffs allege that violations of the Sherman Act have caused a loss of business and create the potential for an increase in price and an erosion in the quality of DME. This court finds that the allegations are sufficient to show a causal connection between the asserted antitrust violation and the alleged injury. See 2A Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law P 338 (hereinafter, "Areeda") ("It is … enough that the antitrust violation contributes significantly to the plaintiff's injury, even if other factors amounted in the aggregate to a more substantial cause.").

According to the second [*14] factor, this court must look to "the nature of plaintiff's alleged injury," Austin, 903 F.2d at 1388, "including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market," Potters Medical Ctr. v. City Hosp. Ass'n, 800 F.2d 568, 575 (6th Cir. 1986), to determine whether plaintiff is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. The plaintiffs in the instant case are clearly competitors in the relevant market as they allegedly lost profits as a result of the defendants' exclusionary practices. Therefore, this second factor supports a finding of antitrust standing.

The third through fifth factors raise more difficult issues. In a case that is most analogous to the present case and that addresses these three factors, Park Ave. Radiology Assocs., P.C. v. Methodist, 198 F.3d 246, 1999 WL 1045098 (6th Cir. 1999) (table), [3] plaintiffs, providers of outpatient-radiologist services for patients referred to them by primary-care physicians, appealed from a dismissal of their claims for lack of antitrust standing. The physicians with staff privileges at the Methodist Hospitals were members of Metrocare, Inc., a company that negotiated with third-party payors of managed health [*15] care programs on behalf of its member physicians. Metrocare was a member of Health Choice, Inc., which operated a preferred-provider organization. Plaintiffs alleged that Health Choice contracted with employers and insurance companies to make Methodist Health's hospital services and Metrocare physician services available at a discounted rate to beneficiaries in the relevant groups. After entering into the contract, Metrocare stopped making referrals of patients to plaintiffs. This resulted in a loss of business to the plaintiffs.

Addressing the third factor ("the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative," Austin, 903 F.2d at 1388), the Park Avenue court held that the injury to plaintiff radiologists was indirect because "their claimed lost profits [were] derivative of the alleged harm inflicted on third parties--the health care consumers and their third-party providers," that is, insurance companies and employers. *Park Avenue, 198 F.3d 246, 1999 WL 1045089, at *5-6. The court also held that the damages were speculative because the number of lost referrals was difficult to measure. *198 F.3d 246, Id. at 6.

Analogously, in the instant case, the injury of lost profits to [*17] the plaintiffs is indirect and derivative of the alleged harm inflicted on the discharged patients. In addition, the damages are speculative because it would be difficult for the plaintiffs to measure the number of lost referrals resulting from the hospitals' allegedly exclusionary conduct. This factor therefore weighs against affording the plaintiffs antitrust standing.

---

[3] Park Avenue, although unpublished, obviously still can have persuasive value. Based on the similarities between Park Avenue and the present case, this court will look to the Sixth Circuit's treatment of the antitrust standing issue (particularly the issue of whether the plaintiffs were efficient enforcers of the antitrust law) as a guide to resolution of the question of standing in this case. To support their argument that there was antitrust standing, the plaintiffs looked to two cases that addressed whether a competitor DME provider had antitrust standing to bring suit. See Key Enterprises, 919 F.2d at 1559-60; Advanced Health-Care Services, Inc. v. Radford Community Hospital, 910 F.2d 139, 149 (4th Cir. 1990). [*16] However, in neither of the cases did the court address the second prong of the antitrust-standing determination: whether the plaintiff would be an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. Todorov, which was decided after these two cases, requires that this court look to whether plaintiffs would be efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws in order to determine whether they have antitrust standing. Therefore, this court will look to Park Avenue because it provides more relevant guidance on this issue.

Addressing the fourth factor, the Park Avenue court explained that "the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages exist if Plaintiffs were allowed to go forward inasmuch as the parties directly harmed would also have a cause of action." *198 F.3d 246, Id. at 7. Here, in the instant case, if the plaintiffs were allowed to go forward with the suit, there is a risk of duplicative recovery because the patients that are directly harmed by the exclusionary conduct could also bring suits against the hospitals and the captive DME providers. In addition, if plaintiffs were awarded damages, this court would face the difficult prospect of identifying damages and apportioning them among directly victimized patients and the indirectly affected plaintiffs. See Associated General, 459 U.S. at 545. This factor therefore [*18] weighs against affording the plaintiffs antitrust standing.

Addressing the fifth and final factor ("the existence of a more direct victim of the alleged anticompetitive conduct," Austin, 903 F.2d at 1388), the Park Avenue court identified the healthcare consumers and third-party insurers as the direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations. *198 F.3d 246, Id. at *6-7. Similarly, in this case, the patients are the direct victims of the allegedly exclusionary conduct that limits their choice of DME providers and could have the potential of increasing the price and eroding the quality of DME.

Thus, three of the five factors identified in Austin (including the indirectness of the asserted injury and the speculative nature of the damages; the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and the existence of a more direct victim of the anticompetitive conduct) weigh against judicial enforcement of the plaintiffs' antitrust claim. However, as discussed above, the factors identified in Austin should not be considered exhaustive.

Prominent antitrust commentators Phillip Areeda and Herbert Hovenkamp have identified additional factors that are relevant to this case. These commentators [*19] argue that competitor antitrust standing serves antitrust policy when "(a) the rival is in a position to detect a violation earlier than consumers are; or (b) the rival's injury is large, while the injuries of individual consumers are likely to be very small or the consumers have collective action problems making their suit cumbersome or less likely." 2A Areeda P 348.

Addressing first whether the plaintiffs are in a position to detect a violation earlier than the patients, the plaintiffs allege that patients rarely have a preferred DME provider. As a result, the system of hospital-staff referral to the captive DME providers combined with the denial to competing DME providers of access to hospitals to market their services results in a situation in which patients, "with very few exceptions, know of only one choice for durable medical equipment." Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at P 24 (doc. no. 21). Without knowledge of alternatives, patients will not be able to detect the evidence of an antitrust violation, including higher prices and an erosion in the quality of services.

The Park Avenue court addressed a similar issue and explained that the role of third-party payors (employers [*20] and insurance companies) was an important element not addressed in the radiologists' argument that they were the most efficient enforcers of antitrust law. In particular, the court surmised that, "if Plaintiffs are providing a superior and more cost efficient product as they allege, then the third-party providers … will direct their members to Plaintiffs, and those patients who may not have any third party coverage will do the same in a competitive market." *Park Avenue, 198 F.3d 246, 1999 WL 1045098, at 5.

For those covered by insurance, such as Medicare, the holding in Park Avenue is persuasive that the third-party payor would be as well positioned as rivals to detect an antitrust violation. However, for those not covered by insurance, it is not clear how the method of detection identified in Park Avenue would operate. In cases involving uninsured patients who do not have knowledge of DME prior to their entry into the hospital and to whom non-captive DME providers are unable to market their services in the hospital, there is no third-party payor to direct patients to the most cost-efficient DME provider. Thus, uninsured patients are poorly positioned relative to rival DME providers to detect an [*21] antitrust violation.

In addition, even if the captive DME providers ultimately raised the prices or allowed their services to erode, the harm to individual patients is likely to be very small in comparison to the plaintiffs' loss of profits resulting from the defendants' anticompetitive conduct. As a result, the likelihood that patients will bring suit to ameliorate the allegedly anticompetitive conduct is minimal.

While it is a close call, this court finds that the plaintiffs are efficient enforcers of the antitrust law. The plaintiffs are much better positioned than consumers to detect an antitrust violation earlier. In addition, consumers would suffer from collective-action problems in bringing a suit because of the relatively small injury experienced by individual consumers by the rise in price or decline in the quality of DME.

On the basis of the finding that the plaintiffs are efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws combined with the finding above that the plaintiffs have demonstrated antitrust injury, this court concludes that the plaintiffs have antitrust standing to sue for damages under the Sherman and Clayton Acts. This court now addresses whether the plaintiffs have stated [*22] claims under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act for which relief can be granted.

B. Sherman Act § 1

Under § 1 of the Sherman Act, "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. [4] "Although the Sherman Act, by its terms, prohibits every agreement 'in restraint of trade,'" the Supreme Court "has long recognized that Congress intended to outlaw only unreasonable restraints." State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997). The plaintiffs bring a claim of coercive reciprocity and concerted refusal to deal under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

1. Coercive Reciprocity

Count I of the plaintiffs' amended complaint alleges restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act; more specifically, the plaintiffs allege that the defendants have engaged in an illegal restraint of trade by contracting, combining, or conspiring to use their control of hospital [*23] services to coerce patients into buying or renting DME from their joint-venture affiliates. The plaintiffs term their claim "coercive reciprocity," or "the practice of using economic leverage in one market coercively to secure competitive advantage in another." Plaintiff's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss (doc. no. 33) at 3 (citing Intergraph Corp. v. Intel Corp., 195 F.3d 1346, 1360 (Fed. Cir. 1999)).

Courts have recognized that reciprocal dealing can constitute an illegal restraint of trade under § 1. Typically, reciprocal dealing involves two parties who "face each other as both buyer and seller. One party offers to buy the other party's goods, but only if the second party buys other goods from the first party." Spartan Grain & Mill Co. v. Ayers, 581 F.2d 419, 424 (5th Cir. 1978). [5]

Reciprocal dealing is not, by itself, illegal. Spartan Grain & Mill, 581 F.2d at 423. Rather, reciprocal-dealing arrangements illegally restrain trade only [*24] when they are coercive--that is, only when a defendant uses its market power, or leverage, over one product to induce the purchase or sale of a second product, a transaction that would not otherwise take place in a competitive market. "In each case one side of a transaction has special power in the market place. It uses this power to force those with whom it deals to make concessions in another market." Spartan Grain & Mill, 581 F.2d at 425.

Here, the plaintiffs allege that the defendant hospitals use their market power over hospital services to coerce patients into dealing exclusively with the hospitals' respective affiliated DME provider. That is, patients who receive hospital services at Jackson Hospital are coerced into buying or renting DME from JMS, and patients who receive hospital services at Baptist hospitals are coerced into buying or renting DME from Baptist Ventures, even though those patients would buy or rent from the plaintiffs in a competitive market.

---

[4] Although the Sherman Act itself does not provide a private right of action, the Clayton Act permits private parties to seek damages or injunctive relief for antitrust violations. 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26.

[5] In Bonner v. Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206, 1209 (11th Cir. 1981) (en banc), the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals adopted as binding precedent all of the decisions of the former Fifth Circuit handed down prior to the close of business on September 30, 1981.

As support for their argument, the plaintiffs rely on the holding in the vacated Eleventh Circuit opinion, Key Enterprise. In that case, the defendant hospital pressured home-health-care nurses to refer patients to the hospital's [*25] DME provider. 919 F.2d at 1561-63. The home-health-care nurses were not employees of the hospital and relied on access to patients to remain in business. The court determined that the act of the hospital constituted coercive reciprocity as it involved a buyer (the hospital) conditioning the purchase of services from the sellers (home-health-care nurses) on the sellers' marketing of the buyers' service.

Here, the plaintiffs argue that the defendants "coerce, pressure, or otherwise unduly influence the patients, doctors, nursing homes and home health care agents to select or recommend only the captive DME companies to the exclusion of Plaintiffs." Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, at P 37 (doc. no. 21). The only factual allegation that the plaintiffs make to support this conclusory statement is that the hospitals have instructed "case workers and staff to steer patients to the captive DME companies." Id. at P 24. This factual allegation is not sufficient to support a coercive-reciprocity claim. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570 (requiring at the pleading stage factual allegations that plausibly suggest a violation of the antitrust laws). Unlike the independent home-health-care nurses in [*26] Key Enterprise who felt that their access to the hospital was conditioned on patient referrals to the DME provider, the plaintiffs in this case make no allegations that the hospitals similarly coerced hospital staff or case workers into referring the hospital's DME providers to patients; in particular, there is no allegation that the hospital staff's continued employment, pay, or benefits at the hospital or access to the hospital were in any way conditioned on them referring patients to their hospital's DME providers. Moreover and perhaps most importantly, there is nothing the complaint to suggest that the hospitals and their staff otherwise had a buyer-seller or other comparable commercial relationship. See Spartan Grain & Mill, 581 F.2d at 423 ("A reciprocal dealing arrangement exists when two parties face each other as both buyer and seller."). In the absence of any such factual allegations in the complaint of coercion arising out of a buyer-seller relationship or something comparable, the plaintiffs' coercive-reciprocity claim fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

2. Concerted Refusal to Deal

Count II of the amended complaint alleges [*27] that the defendants have acted in concert in refusing to deal with the plaintiffs by failing to provide access to the discharged patients in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The plaintiffs in their brief opposing the dismissal motion have clarified that it is the concerted actions of the hospitals and their respective captive DME providers that is at issue; they do not allege that the four hospitals engaged in any illegal concerted actions among themselves.

The plaintiffs have made sufficient allegations of agreements between the three hospitals and their captive DME provider to state a claim that they were acting in concert. However, the more difficult question is whether the allegation in the complaint that the hospitals and captive DME providers refused to deal with the plaintiffs states a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act for which relief can be granted. This court concludes that it does not.

The plaintiffs allege that the hospitals unilaterally ceased the DME rotational assignment that existed prior to the entry into the market of their DME providers. In addition, the plaintiffs allege that, since the hospitals entered into the joint ventures, they have refused to provide the [*28] plaintiffs with access to the hospitals so that they can market their DME. The plaintiffs contend that these acts constituted a refusal to deal in violation of the Sherman Act.

The plaintiffs rely on two Supreme Court cases to support their refusal-to-deal claim. In Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 72 S. Ct. 181, 96 L. Ed. 162 (1951), the Court held that a newspaper publisher that enjoyed a substantial monopoly in the mass dissemination of news and advertising in Lorain, Ohio, engaged in unlawful exclusionary conduct when it refused to accept any local advertisements from any entity that advertised on a radio station run by the Elyria-Lorain Broadcasting Company. As a result, numerous advertisers refrained from advertising on the radio. The Court explained that the newspaper publisher's actions "not only reduced the number of customers available to [the radio station] in the field of local Lorain advertising and strengthened the Journal's monopoly in that field, but more significantly tended to destroy and eliminate [the radio station] altogether." Id. at 149.

The newspaper publisher argued that it had a right "to select its customers and to refuse to accept advertisement from whomever it pleases." [*29] Id. at 155. The Court agreed that there was such a right, but explained that the right was not unqualified. In particular, the Court explained that the publisher could not exercise that right in a manner contrary to the Sherman Act. Id. The Court therefore held that the publisher's action violated the Sherman Act.

In the second case cited by the plaintiffs, Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985), the Court added greater specificity to the refusal-to-deal standard. In Aspen Skiing, two ski companies, Ski Co. (which operated three ski mountains) and Highland (which operated a fourth ski mountain), offered an all-Aspen ski ticket, in which customers could ski on any of the four mountains. The revenues from sales were divided between the companies based on usage of the mountains. This arrangement lasted for 15 years, when Ski Co. proposed a fixed-revenue-sharing arrangement that it knew Highland would not accept. As expected, Highland rejected the offer. Ski Co. discontinued the all-Aspen ski ticket and instead offered ski tickets limited to the three mountains that it operated.

In addition to the discontinuance of the all-Aspen ski ticket, Ski Co. also refused [*30] to sell any lift tickets to Highland either at the tour operator's discount or at retail. Id. at 593. Highlands then developed the "Adventure Pack," which consisted of a three-day ski pass at Highlands and three vouchers equal to the price of a daily lift ticket at a Ski Co. mountain. Ski Co. refused to accept the vouchers. Unable to offer a package that included access to the Ski Co. mountains, Highlands' share of the market for downhill skiing services declined dramatically.

The Court reiterated that "[t]he high value that we have placed on the right to refuse to deal with other firms does not mean that the right is unqualified." Id. at 601. A firm's refusal to deal is unlawful "[i]f [it] has been attempting to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency." Id. at 605 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Court identified two indicators that Ski Co. was attempting to exclude rivals on a basis other than efficiency. First, Ski Co. "elected to make an important change in a pattern of distribution that had originated in a competitive market and had persisted for several years." Id. at 603. Such a change was contrary to consumer demand, as "skiers demonstrably preferred four mountains [*31] to three." Id. at 606. Second, Ski Co. decided to forgo daily ticket sales from vouchers obtained by Skiers contained in Highlands' Adventure Pack. From this conduct, it was proper to infer that "Ski Co. elected to forgo these short-run benefits because it was more interested in reducing competition in the Aspen market over the long run by harming its smaller competitors." Id. at 608.

In the present case, the plaintiffs, relying on the reasoning in Aspen Skiing, argue that the defendants can point to no increased efficiency resulting from refusing to deal with the plaintiffs. However, the plaintiffs ignore the subsequent modification of the refusal-to-deal standard in Verizon Communications, Inc. v. Trinko, 540 U.S. 398, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004), where the Court broadened the right of firms to refuse to deal with rivals.

In Trinko, the Court explained that "[c]ompelling … firms to share the source of their advantage is in some tension with the underlying purpose of antitrust law, since it may lessen the incentive for the monopolist, the rival, or both to invest in those economically beneficially activities." Id. at 407-08. The Court was concerned about the fact that "[e]nforced sharing also requires antitrust [*32] courts to act as central planners, identifying the proper price, quantity, and other terms of dealing--a role for which they are ill suited." Id. at 408. Therefore, the Court held that, "as a general matter, the Sherman Act does not restrict the long-recognized right of a trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom it will deal." Id. (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). The Court explained that only under certain circumstances will a refusal to deal with rivals constitute an antitrust violation under the Sherman Act.

The Court identified Aspen Skiing as being "at or near the outer boundary of [antitrust] liability." Id. at 409. This Aspen Skiing exception applies only if: "(a) the defendant engaged in a prior course of dealing with its rival; and (b) the unilateral termination of a voluntary (and thus presumably profitable) course of dealing suggested a willingness to forsake short-term profits to achieve an anticompetitive end." Id. (emphasis added).

In the present case, there allegedly was a prior course of dealing between the plaintiffs and defendant hospitals as demonstrated [*33] by the rotational system. However, the unilateral termination of a voluntary course of dealing by the hospitals in this case does not suggest a willingness to forsake short-term profits. The hospitals terminated the course of dealing after entering into a joint venture with their respective DME providers, and there is nothing in the plaintiffs' complaint, outside of conclusory allegations, plausibly suggesting that the decision to cease the rotational system and exclude competitor DME providers from access to the hospital was for any purpose other than increasing both the short-term and long-term profits of their DME providers. This case is thus distinguishable from Aspen Skiing in which Ski Co. decided to forgo short-term profits in the form of redeeamable vouchers provided by its competitor.

In light of the clear direction from the Supreme Court not to extend the refusal-to-deal exception beyond Aspen Skiing, the plaintiffs' concerted-refusal-to-deal claim fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

C. Sherman Act § 2

The plaintiffs assert four claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act. Under § 2, it is unlawful to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, [*34] or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Section 2 "covers behavior by a single business as well as coordinated action taken by several businesses." Spanish Broad. Sys. of Florida, Inc. v. Clear Channel Communications, Inc., 376 F.3d 1065, 1074 (11th Cir. 2004). A violation of § 2 "requires harm to competition that must occur within a relevant ... market, with a specific set of geographical boundaries and a narrow delineation of the products at issue." Id. Therefore, this court must first identify the relevant market in this case.

1. Relevant Market

A relevant market consists of both a product market and a geographic market. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). The parties agree that the geographic market is Montgomery and Prattville, Alabama. The dispute concerns the definition of the product market.

"The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." T. Harris Young & Assocs., Inc. v. Marquette Elecs., Inc., 931 F.2d 816, 824 (11th Cir. 1991). [*35] Within broader product markets, "well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves constitute product markets for antitrust purposes." Id. The boundaries of a submarket are determined by "examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Id.

The plaintiffs allege that the relevant product market in this case includes two submarkets that consist of the sale and rental of DME for patients discharged from Jackson Hospital and the Baptist Health hospitals, respectively. The defendants contend that the plaintiffs' definition of the relevant market is implausible and the market should instead be understood more broadly to consist of the sale and rental of DME to all outlets in the geographic market.

Based on an examination of the practical indicia for determining a relevant market, the court finds that the plaintiffs have identified the relevant product submarket as the rental and sale of DME in hospitals. However, the plaintiffs' argument that the submarket [*36] is disaggregated as between the two sets of hospitals, such that two product submarkets exist within the one geographic market, lacks merit.

The complaint alleges that the market is bounded by a distinct method of distribution to a distinct segment of customers. In particular, it is a method of distribution whereby hospital patients are prescribed DME while in the hospital, and those DME needs are arranged through staff at the hospital.

Several courts have found a method of distribution to be a relevant submarket for antitrust purposes. See e.g., Henry v. Chloride, 809 F.2d 1334, 1342 (8th Cir. 1087) (batteries sold by route salespersons are a distinct submarket from batteries sold from warehouses or stores); Greyhound Computer Corp., Inc. v. Int'l Bus. Mach. Corp., 559 F.2d 488, 494 (9th Cir. 1977) (lease of computers a distinct submarket from the sale of computers); Columbia Broad. Sys., Inc. v. F.T.C., 414 F.2d 974, 979 (7th Cir. 1969) (records sold through record clubs are a distinct submarket); F.T.C. v. Staples, Inc., 970 F.Supp. 1066, 1080 (D.D.C. 1997) (sale of consumable office supplies through office supply superstores a distinct submarket from the sale of consumable office [*37] supplies through other outlets); Eastern Dental Corp. v. Isaac Masel Co., Inc., 502 F.Supp. 1354, 1361 (E.D. Pa. 1980) (sale of facebows wholesale a distinct market from sale of facebows retail).

This court finds this case law persuasive and finds that the method of distribution of DME to hospital patients is the relevant product submarket for antitrust purposes. The indicia that the sale and rental of DME in hospitals constitute a relevant submarket include the plaintiffs' allegations that there is industry recognition that the sale and rental of DME to hospitals is a distinct market. In addition, the hospital DME providers service a distinct class of discharged patients, and there is allegedly less sensitivity of consumer demand to changes in the price or quality of the DME to discharged patients in hospitals.

However, the court cannot agree with the plaintiffs' suggestion that the sale and rental of DME in the two sets of hospitals represent two separate and distinct submarkets. The plaintiffs seek not only to define the submarket by the method of distribution, which as described above is recognized in the case law, but also on the basis of the position or location of the consumers. [*38] In particular, they argue that the two sets of hospitals constitute two separate submarkets because the hospitals have two separate sets of discharged patients that are referred to two different DME providers. This court has not found any cases in which the relevant product market is defined on the basis of the position or location of consumers.

The one case cited by plaintiffs is inapposite. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Greyhound Computer Corp. held that the leasing of computers constitutes a distinct submarket separate from other methods of distribution of computers, including the sale of computers. 559 F.2d at 494. The court did address whether leases and sales served different customer needs; however, this was in the context of an examination of one of the indicia for determining the existence of a leasing submarket. The court ultimately defined the submarket in terms of the leasing method of distribution, not in terms of the class or group of consumers to whom computers were leased.

The only case that this court has been able to find that is somewhat analogous holds that submarkets cannot be defined in terms of the location or position of the consumers. In Rohlfing v. Manor Care, Inc., 172 F.R.D. 330 (N.D. Ill. 1997), [*39] the plaintiffs alleged that the relevant market consisted of "the sale of pharmaceutical products to residents of Manor Care nursing home facilities." Id. at 345. The court explained that "it is improper to define a market simply by identifying a group of customers who have purchased a given product; rather the market consists of the array of 'interchangeable' products that those consumers confronted when making their product selection, plus those products which could quickly be supplied as interchangeable alternatives." Id. The court recognized that it was particularly inappropriate to define the market on the basis of a particular set of consumers in that case because Manor Care residents who are unhappy with the pharmaceutical service supplied by their nursing home could simply transfer to a different nursing home that does not utilize that service. Id. at 346.

This court finds the reasoning in Rohlfing persuasive. It is inappropriate to define the product submarket on the basis of a particular set of patients because the market is defined by the interchangeability of the use of the product itself, not the users of the product. Patients in hospitals are in a sense a captured audience; [*40] nonetheless, if they are dissatisfied with the DME supplied by their hospital, they could either express their preference for an alternative DME provider to the hospital staff or transfer to another hospital that does not utilize that DME provider. This ability of hospital patients to access DME from other sources demonstrates that the relevant market, at the very least, includes both of the DME providers that are involved in joint ventures with the respective sets of hospitals.

In sum, this court concludes that the relevant market for purposes of determining whether defendants have violated § 2 of the Sherman Act is the distribution of DME through hospitals in Montgomery and Prattville, Alabama.

2. Shared Monopoly

On the basis of this definition of the relevant market, the court concludes that the plaintiffs' four asserted claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act should be dismissed. As discussed above, in order to prove a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs must demonstrate either that a single entity or multiple entities acting in concert engaged in monopolizing activity. The plaintiffs have not alleged a violation of § 2 by a "single hospital" or concerted activity by the [*41] two hospital distributors of DME.

The relevant market consists of two hospital distributors of DME, Jackson Med-South and Baptist Ventures-American Home Patient. [6] Plaintiffs have not alleged any agreement or concerted activity between the two distributors. The only allegation is that of parallel conduct derived from the fact that the hospitals entered into the joint ventures with their respective DME providers during the same broadly defined time period (the late 1990s). The Supreme Court has clearly held, that, "[w]hile a showing of parallel business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement, it falls short of conclusively establishing agreement or itself constituting a Sherman Act offense." "While a showing of parallel 'business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement,' it falls short of 'conclusively establish[ing] agreement or … itself constitut[ing] a Sherman Act offense.'" Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553 (quoting Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540-41, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273 (1954)). Allegations of parallel conduct, without more, are not sufficient to survive [*42] a motion to dismiss. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556-57.

The complaint vaguely alleges that defendants have engaged in a series of unlawful and wrongful activities and communications that constitute monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize. In the absence of any [*43] allegations of concerted activity between the hospitals' two DME providers, the only theory that could possibly support these claims would be one based on shared monopoly.

Under a theory of shared monopoly, "a group of firms that collectively possess monopoly power can be found liable for joint monopolization." ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments (5th ed. 2002), at 312. The former Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, consistent with other courts that have addressed the issue, has rejected any claim of violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act predicated on a theory of shared monopoly. See American Tel. and Tel. Co. v. Delta Communications Corp., 579 F.2d 972 (5th Cir. 1978), adopting opinion, 408 F.Supp. 1075 (S.D. Miss. 1976) (rejecting a claim that networks constituting an oligopoly can violate § 2 of the Sherman Act and explaining that "[t]he Sherman Act neither mentions nor regulates oligopolies."); [7] see also Kramer v. Pollock-Krasner Foundation, 890 F.Supp. 250, 256 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (rejecting a shared monopoly claim and explaining that "the offense of monopolization under Section 2 refers to market dominance by a 'single firm.'"); Sun Dun, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 740 F.Supp. 381, 391 (D. Md. 1990) [*44] ("An examination of the history of the Sherman Act reveals that Congress' concept of 'monopoly' did not include 'shared monopolies' or 'oligopolies' at all, but rather the complete domination of a market by a single economic entity."); H.L. Hayden Co. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 672 F.Supp. 724, 741 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) ("Two competitors could conspire to oligopolize … but it would not constitute an offense under a literal reading of section 2 [of the Sherman Act]."); Consolidated Terminal Systems, Inc. v. ITT World Communications, Inc., 535 F.Supp. 225, 228-29 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) ("An oligopoly or a shared monopoly, does not in itself violate § 2 of the Sherman Act.").

Not only must the monopolization and attempted monopolization claim fail as a result of this court's rejection of a theory of shared monopoly, but so must any claim of conspiracy to monopolize. The court in Sun Dun, addressing a conspiracy to monopolize claim in a similar context, persuasively held that

---

[6] Because there are two hospital distributors in the relevant market, this case is distinguishable from the cases relied upon by that plaintiffs that involved claims of monopolization of DME markets under § 2 of the Sherman Act. In Key Enterprise, the claim of monopolization was brought against a single hospital, with monopoly power in the relevant market, and its affiliated DME supplier. 919 F.2d at 1552. In Advanced Health-Care Services, the claim of monopolization was brought against three separate hospitals and their affiliated DME suppliers in three different geographic markets in which the hospitals had monopoly power. 910 F.2d at 141-43. Finally, in M&M Medical Supplies and Services, Inc., v. Pleasant Valley Hospital, Inc., the claim of monopolization was brought against a single hospital, with monopoly power in the relevant market, and its affiliated DME supplier. 981 F.2d 160, 162 (4th Cir. 1993).

[7] See supra note 5.

> "[w]hen … two or more competitors conspire to create a market environment in which competition and market entry is improperly restricted, but in which market power continues to be shared among these otherwise [*45] unrelated entities, … there is no conspiracy to monopolize claim stated under Section 2, and the claim must therefore be dismissed."

740 F.Supp. at 392. In other words, a conspiracy to monopolize claim requires either actions by a single firm or concerted activity by multiple firms. Neither has been alleged in the complaint.

In sum, the plaintiffs' Count III claim of monopolization, Count IV claim of attempted monopolization, Count V claim of conspiracy to monopolize, and Count VI claim of conspiracy to monopolize based on the so-called essential facility doctrine all fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Each of these claims requires either allegations of concerted activity or sufficient monopoly power by a single firm that are not set forth in the complaint.

IV. STATE CLAIMS

In Count VII, the plaintiffs assert violations of Alabama Antitrust Law. They state that their state claims and their governing law are the same as their federal claims and their governing law. See Ex parte Rice, 259 Ala. 570, 67 So.2d 825, 829 (1953) (per curiam) ("The federal statutes … prescribe the terms of unlawful monopolies and restraints of trade as they should also be administered [*46] in Alabama."); see also Avery Freight Lines, Inc. v. Alabama Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 267 Ala. 646, 104 So.2d 705, 709 (1958) ("In construing the terms and provisions of Alabama statutes derived from federal statutes, such terms and provisions will usually be considered as having the meaning given by the federal courts."). Therefore, the plaintiffs' state claims fail for the same reasons that their federal ones do.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the defendants' motion to dismiss will be granted on the plaintiffs' federal and state claims.

An appropriate judgment will be entered.

DONE, this the 8th day of March, 2010.

/s/ Myron H. Thompson

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Delaware

March 11, 2010, Decided; March 11, 2010, Filed

Civil Action No. 09-80-JJF-MPT

Reporter

2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23057 *; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,016

MASIMO CORPORATION, Plaintiff, v. PHILIPS ELECTRONICS NORTH AMERICA CORPORATION and PHILIPS MEDIZIN SYSTEME BOBLINGEN GMBH, Defendants. PHILIPS ELECTRONICS NORTH AMERICA CORPORATION, Counterclaim-Plaintiff, v. MASIMO CORPORATION, Counterclaim-Defendant.

Subsequent History: Motion denied by Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27530 (D. Del., Mar. 23, 2010)

On reconsideration by, Reconsideration denied by, in part, Modified by, in part Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38520 (D. Del., Apr. 19, 2010)

Motion granted by Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38518 (D. Del., Apr. 20, 2010)

Motion denied by Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 742 F. Supp. 2d 492, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106637 (D. Del., 2010)

Magistrate's recommendation at Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18277 (D. Del., Feb. 18, 2011)

Motion granted by, Stay denied by Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52941 (D. Del., Apr. 16, 2012)

Later proceeding at Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 918 F. Supp. 2d 277, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8716 (D. Del., 2013)

Magistrate's recommendation at Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. North America Corp., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47469 (D. Del., Apr. 2, 2013)

Magistrate's recommendation at Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70745 (D. Del., May 20, 2013)

Magistrate's recommendation at Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83704 (D. Del., June 14, 2013)

Magistrate's recommendation at Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123134 (D. Del., Aug. 29, 2013)

Motion denied by Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elec. North Am. Corp., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90034 (D. Del., July 2, 2014)

Motion denied by, Motion denied by, As moot, Request granted, Motion granted by Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elec. N. Am. Corp., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 195264 (D. Del., Aug. 27, 2014)

Motion granted by, Request granted Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elec. North America Corp., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121840 (D. Del., Sept. 2, 2014)

Later proceeding at Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elec. North Am. Corp., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127847 (D. Del., Sept. 12, 2014)

Motion denied by Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elec. N. Am. Corp., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64462 (D. Del., May 18, 2015)

Findings of fact/conclusions of law at Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elec. N. Am. Corp., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64464 (D. Del., May 18, 2015)

Motion denied by, Motion for new trial denied by Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elec. N. Am. Corp., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64468 (D. Del., May 18, 2015)

Patent interpreted by Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160645 (D. Del., Dec. 1, 2015)

Motion denied by Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elec. N. Am. Corp., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107476 (D. Del., Aug. 15, 2016)

Summary judgment granted, in part, summary judgment denied, in part by, Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part Masimo Corp. v. Philips Elecs. N. Am. Corp., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 154520 (D. Del., Oct. 31, 2016)

Core Terms

patent, antitrust, counterclaims, pulse, sensors, bifurcation, oximetry, discovery, cables, monitors, technology, oximeter, anticompetitive, patient, anti trust law, third party, exclusionary, Electronics, manufacture, infringing, settlement, contends, products, juror

Counsel: [*1] For Masimo Corporation, Plaintiff: Jack B. Blumenfeld, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeremy Alexander Tigan, Julia Heaney, Morris, Nichols, Arsht & Tunnell, Wilmington, DE; Deborah Croyle, Douglas G. Muehlhauser, Irfan A. Lateef, Jon Gurka, Joseph S. Cianfrani, Joseph R. Re, M. Lawrence Popofsky, Michelle E. Armond, Perry D. Oldham, Robert A. Rosenfeld, Scott A. Westrich, PRO HAC VICE.

For Philips Electronics North America Corporation, Defendant: Richard L. Horwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, David Ellis Moore, Doungamon Fon Muttamara-Walker, Potter Anderson & Corroon, LLP, Wilmington, DE; Brian Rosenthal, Clayton Scott Hataway, Russell B. Hill, PRO HAC VICE.

For Philips Medizin Systeme Boblingen Gmbh, Defendant, Counter Claimant: Richard L. Horwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, David Ellis Moore, Doungamon Fon Muttamara-Walker, Potter Anderson & Corroon, LLP, Wilmington, DE.

For Philips Electronics North America Corporation, Counter Claimant, Counter Defendant: Richard L. Horwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, David Ellis Moore, Doungamon Fon Muttamara-Walker, Potter Anderson & Corroon, LLP, Wilmington, DE; Brian Rosenthal.

For Masimo Corporation, Counter Defendant, Counter Claimant: Jack B. Blumenfeld, LEAD ATTORNEY, Julia Heaney, Morris, [*2] Nichols, Arsht & Tunnell, Wilmington, DE; Irfan A. Lateef; Jon Gurka, Joseph S. Cianfrani, Joseph R. Re, PRO HAC VICE.

Judges: Mary Pat Thynge, UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE.

Opinion by: Mary Pat Thynge

Opinion

MEMORANDUM ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Masimo Corporation ("Masimo") and defendants Philips Electronics North America Corporation and Philips Medizin Systeme Boblingen GMBH manufacture competing products in pulse oximetry. Pulse oximetry is a non-invasive procedure for measuring the level of oxygen saturation in a patient's arterial blood. Pulse oximtery systems are standard equipment in many clinical settings, either as stand-alone devices, or, more commonly, as components of integrated multi-parameter patient monitors which track pulse, temperature, and other physiological vital signs. Pulse oximetry systems are composed of a sensor, which collects data by shining a light through a patient's tissue, a "monitor," also sometimes referred to as a "board," "socket," or "pulse oximeter," which contains the electronics that process the signal and produce a saturation reading, and sometimes a cable which connects the sensor and monitor.

II. BACKGROUND

On February 3, 2009, plaintiff Masimo filed a complaint for [*3] infringement of its pulse oximetry-related patents, including its patent on signal extraction technology, [1] against defendants Philips Electronics North America Corporation and Philips Medizin Systeme Boblingen GMBH. Masimo filed a first amended complaint on May 12, 2009. Philips Electronics North America Corporation and Philips Medizin Systeme Boblingen GMBH filed their answer and Philips Electronics North America Corporation ("Philips") filed its counterclaims on June 15, 2009. Philips' counterclaims include seven antitrust counterclaims, which focus on four purported categories of misconduct by Masimo. First, Philips' antitrust counterclaims allege that Masimo inserted anticompetitive restrictions into its licensing agreements with independent pulse oximeter companies and distributors. Second, Philips contends that Masimo improperly excludes competition from the sensor and patient cable markets via ProCal, a proprietary interface that creates a technological tie between Masimo oximeters and sensors and thereby precludes customer use of non-Masimo sensors and patient cables. Third, Philips alleges anticompetitive effects of a 2006 Masimo-Nellcor settlement agreement. Fourth, Philips [*4] alleges that Masimo has engaged in exclusionary pricing and bundling practices designed to lock hospitals into Masimo pulse oximetry products. On July 9, 2009, Masimo filed its answer to Philips' counterclaims, asserting its own counterclaims and defenses. On August 3, 2009, Philips filed its answer to Masimo's counterclaims and a motion to strike certain of Masimo's antitrust affirmative defenses. On August 8, 2009, Masimo filed a motion to bifurcate and stay discovery of Philips' antitrust counterclaims. The court heard arguments from the parties on this motion on September 24, 2009. This is the court's decision on Masimo's August 8, 2009 motion.

III. DISCUSSION

A. MOTION TO BIFURCATE

---

[1] According to Masimo, signal extraction technology was the first pulse oximetry technique that could measure through motion. D.I. 23.

The court has broad discretion to order separate trials "for convenience, to avoid prejudice, or to expedite and economize." [2] "Courts, when exercising their broad discretion to bifurcate issues for trial under Rule 42(b), [*5] should consider whether bifurcation will avoid prejudice, conserve judicial resources, and enhance juror comprehension of the issues presented in the case." [3] "In the context of patent cases, experienced judges use bifurcation and trifurcation both to simplify the issues in patent cases and to maintain manageability of the volume and complexity of the evidence presented to the jury." [4] Bifurcation of patent and antitrust claims is not mandatory, but is common. [5]

The court's interest in juror comprehension weighs in favor of bifurcation in this case. There are currently 24 patents involved in this litigation. A jury will be called upon to determine whether these patents are valid and infringed. If Philips' antitrust counterclaims are tried at the same time, the jury will have to consider, at a minimum, intricate factual and economic analyses regarding (1) the alleged relevant markets before and after Masimo's purported anticompetitive behavior; (2) actual and potential shares in such markets; (3) barriers to entry in such markets; (4) the terms of Masimo's contracts with multi-parameter patient monitor manufacturers and whether such contracts violated antitrust laws; (5) antitrust damages; and (6) all remaining concomitant antitrust considerations. [6] To add such issues to the patent case "would pose a difficult task for even the most astute of juries." [7] Masimo also maintains that it possesses non-asserted patents which provide defenses to Philips' counterclaims. Explanation and presentation [*7] of the existence and relevance of these non-asserted patents to the jury would only further complicate trial and inevitably lead to juror confusion. In addition, the court notes that, at trial, Philips' allegations of monopolization could bias the jury when it evaluates Masimo's patent claims. [8]

The court's interest [*8] in efficiency also weighs in favor of bifurcation. First, "[t]here is a strong likelihood that consideration of the patent validity issues will be delayed significantly if tried together with the antitrust issues. Major antitrust litigation is often enormously time-consuming." [9] Second, the court finds, as discussed in more detail below, that there is a possibility that a trial on Masimo's patent claims will simplify some of Philips' antitrust

---

[2] Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(b); see also *Ricoh Co., Ltd. v. Katun Corp., No. 03-2612, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46493, at 3 (D.N.J. July 14, 2005) ("The court has broad discretion in deciding whether to separate issues and claims for trial, in accordance with its broad power to manage its trial calendar.") (citing *Enzo Life Sciences, Inc. v. Digene Corp., No. 02-212, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10202, at 4 (D. Del. June 10, 2003); Barr Labs. v. Abbott Labs., 978 F.2d 98, 115 (3d Cir. 1992)).

[3] Ciena Corp. v. Corvis Corp., 210 F.R.D. 519, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20826, 3 (D. Del. 2002).

[4] *Ricoh Co., Ltd., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46493, at 3 (citing *Enzo Life Sciences, Inc., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10202, at 5).

[5] See id. (noting, while deciding whether [*6] to bifurcate and stay a defendant's antitrust counterclaims, that "[b]ifurcation of complex patent disputes has become a common occurrence.") (citation ommitted).

[6] See *Dentsply Intern. Inc. v. New Technology Co., No. 96-272, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19846, 1996 WL 756766, at 5 (D. Del. 1996) (deciding to bifurcate patent and antitrust claims in part due to the risk that the jury would be confused if called upon to consider patent validity and infringement along with a host of antitrust issues).

[7] *Ricoh Co., Ltd., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46493, at 4.

[8] See *Monsanto Co. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., No. 4:09CV00686, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84512, at 7 (E.D. Mo. Sept. 16, 2009) ("[T]he court agrees with Plaintiffs that Defendants' allegations of monopolization could bias the jury when it evaluates Plaintiffs' patent claims.") (citing Hunter Douglas, Inc. v. Comfortex Corp., 44 F. Supp. 2d 145, 154 (N.D.N.Y. 1999), where the court noted that other courts had accepted a "prejudice-from-a-'negative label' theory" in deciding whether to sever infringement and antitrust claims).

[9] Akzona, Inc. v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 607 F. Supp. 227, 236 (D. Del. 1984); see also Dsm Desotech Inc. v. 3D Sys. Corp., No. 08-CV-1531, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87473 (D. Ill. Oct. 28, 2008) ("As the Supreme Court, the Seventh Circuit, and this court have all recognized, discovery in any antitrust case can quickly become enormously expensive and burdensome to defendants.") (collecting cases).

counterclaims. [10] A trial will determine, at the very least, the validity and scope of Masimo's asserted patents, and the scope of Masimo's patent protection may affect its liability under antitrust laws. [11]

Finally, there is little indication that bifurcation will substantially prejudice Philips. Masimo correctly asserts that Philips could have brought its antitrust counterclaims years ago, yet instead waited until this litigation. Thus, Philips' claim that it [*10] will be substantially prejudiced from bifurcation and any resulting delay in the trial of its antitrust counterclaims "rings somewhat hollow." [12] The court recognizes that one of the bases for Philips' antitrust counterclaims--the allegedly anticompetitive 2006 Masimo-Nellcor settlement agreement--is relatively recent, but the court nonetheless finds that its interest in efficiency and in enhancing juror comprehension outweighs any purported prejudice to Philips that might result from bifurcation. Bifurcation will limit the number of legal issues the jury must address at any particular time and will result in the presentation of evidence in a manner that is easier for the jurors to understand. [13]

For the above reasons, Masimo's motion to bifurcate Philips' antitrust counterclaims is granted.

B. MOTION TO STAY DISCOVERY

"Although separate trials have been ordered, [*11] there remains a distinct and important issue: whether the Court should order a stay in discovery on the antitrust counterclaims." [14] On one hand, the court fears that a stay in discovery on Philips' antitrust counterclaims will "most likely devolve into a series of time-consuming and expensive discovery disputes as to whether particular discovery is directed at the patent or antitrust claims." [15] On the other

---

[10] See *Monsanto Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84512, at 5 (deciding to bifurcate patent and antitrust claims in part because of the possibility [*9] that trial of the plaintiff's patent claims would simplify some of the defendant's antitrust counterclaims). See also *Dentsply Intern. Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19846, 1996 WL 756766, at 3, where the court discusses how a jury's resolution of patent claims can moot antitrust counterclaims:

> There is a possibility that all aspects of the antitrust counterclaim . . . could be resolved by a first trial on patent infringement. A patent gives a patent owner the right to exclude others from the marketplace for a statutory number of years. Accordingly, a patent confers upon its owner the ability to bring monopolistic characteristics to the marketplace--the very antithesis of a prime purpose of antitrust legislation.

[11] SCM Corp. v. Xerox Corp., 645 F.2d 1195, 1206 (2d Cir. 1981), cert denied 455 U.S. 1016, 102 S. Ct. 1708, 72 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1982) ("[W]here a patent has been lawfully acquired, subsequent conduct permissible under the patent laws cannot trigger any liability under the antitrust laws.").

[12] See *ASM Am., Inc. v. Genus, Inc., No. 01-2190, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1351, at 18 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 9, 2002) ("[Defendant's] allegation of irreparable harm rings somewhat hollow, however, in light of its failure to bring its antitrust claims against [Plaintiff] independently.").

[13] *Ricoh Co., Ltd., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46493, at 4

[14] *Dentsply Intern. Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19846, 1996 WL 756766, at * 5*.

[15] *1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19846, [WL] at 6. In Densply, the court decided to bifurcate patent and antitrust claims but not to stay discovery on the antitrust counterclaims:

> [A] stay of discovery on antitrust issues would most likely devolve into a series of time-consuming and expensive discovery disputes as to whether particular discover is directed at the patent or antitrust claims. Efficiency dictates that discovery on all claims, including the antitrust counterclaims, continue apace.

Id.

hand, the court is cognizant of the need to prevent the parties from conducting discovery that will ultimately prove unnecessary. [16]

Philips asserts that staying its antitrust counterclaims is inadvisable because resolution of Masimo's patent claims will have no impact on the viability of its antitrust counterclaims. Philips maintains that (a) Masimo's "system claims" do not immunize Masimo from antitrust liability; (b) Masimo's patents do not confer any right to "police" the sale of sensors and cables through exclusionary conduct; (c) Masimo's separate patent protection for its oximetry components confers no independent right to violate antitrust law; and (d) Masimo's license agreements, settlement agreements, and other contracts are plainly subject to antitrust scrutiny. [17]

Masimo contends that a stay should be ordered because resolution of Masimo's patent claims will moot or at least simplify many of Philips' antitrust claims. First, Masimo contends that, assuming its asserted system patents are valid, "the licensing and distribution agreements of which Philips complains . . . [*13] cannot have an anticompetitive effect." [18] Masimo maintains that an agreement between Masimo and a third party manufacturer of pulse oximetry equipment prohibiting the third party from selling non-Masimo sensors or cables for use with Masimo pulse oximetry monitors could not violate antitrust laws as it would be within the scope of Masimo's patent rights. [19] Masimo recognizes that "a patent owner may not take the property right granted by a patent and use it to extend his power in the marketplace improperly," [20] but contends that its patents cover pulse oximetry systems as an integrated whole and therefore entitle it to exclude all others from a market covering monitors, sensors, and cables which incorporate its pulse oximetry technology. [21]

The scope of Masimo's patents will be determined at trial. Although a patent does not permit a patentee to condition use of the patented product on the surrender of a monopoly in some other unpatented product, should Masimo's patents on signal extraction technology and pulse oximetry equipment cover using such [*14] patented products in concert with unpatented products (say, sensors and cables) in pulse oximetry systems, then Masimo may be entitled to monopolize those systems. [22] Accordingly, there is a possibility that a trial on Masimo's patent claims will

---

[16] *Cf. Monsanto Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84512, at 8 ("Because these claims cannot be mooted by resolution of the infringement action, allowing [*12] discovery to proceed does not increase the potential that the parties will conduct discovery that will ultimately prove unnecessary, and such a course will likely reduce delay in resolving all issues before the court.").

[17] D.I. 31 at 6-16.

[18] D.I. 23 at 13.

[19] Id. at 12-13.

[20] Atari Games Corp. v. Nintendo of America, Inc., 897 F.2d 1572, 1576 (Fed. Cir. 1990).

[21] D.I. 23 at 12-13.

[22] Cf. Schor v. Abbott Labs., 457 F.3d 608, 614 (7th Cir. Ill. 2006) (discussing, in dicta, how Abbott's patents could potentially shield it from antitrust liability).

> Abbott's patents do more to support its position than to assist Schor. Recall that the patents cover not only ritonavir administered by itself but also ritonavir administered in combination with another protease inhibitor. Abbott therefore could take control of the market in combination treatments until the patents expire. A patent does not permit its owner to condition use of the patented product on the surrender of a monopoly in some other unpatented product. But the product "ritonavir in combination with another protease inhibitor" is patented to Abbott, which therefore is entitled to monopolize the [*15] combination.

Id. (internal citations omitted).

potentially eliminate or simplify Philips' antitrust counterclaims alleging anticompetitive licensing restrictions. It follows that discovery on such claims should be stayed. [23]

Second, Masimo argues that there can be no illegal tie or any other possible antitrust claim based on Procal, its allegedly exclusionary technological interface, because (a) as Masimo has a right to exclude third parties from its entire pulse oximetry system under [its] patents, there is no potential antitrust violation from Masimo requiring that hospitals using its pulse oximetry monitors also use Masimo sensors and connector cables and (b) "[i]f using an unlicensed sensor with a Masimo-technology monitor infringes--and it does--then a technology that identifies an unauthorized combination merely reinforces the patent right." [24] Once again, the validity of this argument and its resulting capacity to provide Masimo with a defense to Philips' antitrust counterclaims turns, at least in part, on the scope of Masimo's patents. The court therefore finds that Philips' [*17] antitrust counterclaims alleging that Masimo illegally uses exclusionary technological interfaces should be stayed.

Third, Masimo maintains that its 2006 settlement agreement with Nellcor could not support antitrust liability as alleged by Philips. Masimo argues that it has the right under its patents to preclude Nellcor from permitting third parties to manufacture and sell sensors for use with Nellcor's pulse oximeter monitors because such third party sensors would be infringing products and Nellcor would thus be a contributory infringer. [25] Should Masimo's patents entitle Masimo to exclude others from its allegedly patented pulse oximetry system (including monitors, sensors and cables using its signal extraction technology), then Maximo may be entitled to restrict both Nellcor's continued sale of its allegedly infringing pulse oximeter and its manufacture of such pulse oximeters that are compatible with third-party sensors. It follows that Philips' antitrust counterclaims concerning the 2006 Masimo-Nellcor settlement agreement may potentially be eliminated or narrowed by a determination of the scope of Masimo's patents. Thus, again, a stay of discovery is warranted.

Lastly, [*18] Masimo contends that it is entitled to offer hospitals a package price for its patented system without raising any issue under antitrust law. [26] Philips' antitrust counterclaims concerning Masimo's dealings with hospitals are primarily concerned with the effect that Masimo's alleged tying of cables and sensors to its oximeters has on the market for non-Masimo sensors and cables. As explained above, the legality of this allegedly anticompetitive action may be affected by the scope of Masimo's patents, which will be determined at the trial of Masimo's patent claims. Thus, a stay of Philips' antitrust counterclaims alleging exclusionary pricing and bundling is warranted.

IV. CONCLUSION

---

[23] See *Monsanto Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84512, at 5 (deciding to stay discovery on defendants' antitrust counterclaims alleging sham litigation, fraud on the patent office, misrepresentations of patent rights, and anticompetitive licensing restrictions). At the September 24, 2009 hearing on the present motion, counsel for Philips asserted that the court in Monsanto Co. (1) distinguished between patent-related antitrust claims that are sham litigation or Walker Process-based and independent antitrust claims and (2) "decided to go ahead and proceed with those independent antitrust claims staying discovery only on the sham litigation claims." D.I. 65-1 at 7. The distinction drawn in Monsanto Co., however, is more accurately characterized as one between antitrust counterclaims that could potentially be eliminated or narrowed by resolution of the plaintiff's patent claims and those that could not be so affected. The court in Monsanto Co. notes that through a separate trial on the plaintiffs' patent claims "there is the possibility of simplifying those claims alleging that Plaintiffs' license restrictions are anticompetitive." *Monsanto Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84512, at 5. [*16] The court later concludes, "In sum . . . a stay of discovery and a separate trial of Defendants' antitrust counterclaims is warranted. Discovery should proceed, however, on Defendants' antitrust counterclaims that will not potentially be eliminated or narrowed by resolution of Plaintiffs' patent claims . . . ." *Id. at *8-9.

[24] Id. at 14.

[25] Id.

[26] Id.

For the foregoing reasons, Masimo's motion to bifurcate and stay discovery of Philips' antitrust counterclaims (D.I. 22) is hereby GRANTED. The patent and antitrust issues in this case will be bifurcated. Discovery of the antitrust issues will be stayed pending trial on the patent issues.

Date: March 11, 2010

/s/ Mary Pat Thynge

UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

Midwest Agency Servs. v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, Northern Division

March 11, 2010, Decided; March 11, 2010, Filed

Civil Action No. 2: 09-165-DCR

Reporter

2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22457 *; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,940; 2010 WL 935450

MIDWEST AGENCY SERVICES, INC., Plaintiff, v. JP MORGAN CHASE BANK, N.A., et. al., Defendants.

Core Terms

gap, credit transaction, insurance product, tying arrangement, antitrust, buyer, alleges, approved list, dealers, financing, purchases, fails, Sherman Act, reciprocal-dealing, exclusive-dealing, vendor, lending, subsidiary, bank holding company, anti trust law, tied product, sells, alleged facts, extend credit, car dealer, car buyer, products, counts, buy

Counsel: [*1] For Midwest Agency Services, Inc., Plaintiff: Matthew D. Hemmer, Scott Rowland Thomas, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Hemmer, Pangburn, DeFrank PLLC, Fort Mitchell, KY.

For Premier Dealer Services, Inc., Intervenor Plaintiff: Scott Rowland Thomas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew D. Hemmer, Hemmer, Pangburn, DeFrank PLLC, Fort Mitchell, KY.

For JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., Chase Auto Finance Corp., Chase Insurance Agency, Inc., Defendants: Matthew C. Blickensderfer, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Frost Brown Todd LLC - Cincinnati, Cincinnati, OH; Sheryl G. Snyder, LEAD ATTORNEY, Frost Brown Todd LLC - Louisville, Louisville, KY.

Judges: Danny C. Reeves, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Danny C. Reeves

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This matter is pending for consideration of the motion to dismiss filed by Defendants JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., Chase Auto Finance Corporation, and Chase Insurance Agency, Inc. [Record No. 14] The Defendants assert that Plaintiff Midwest Agency Services, Inc.'s ("Midwest") Complaint does not contain sufficient facts to plausibly suggest that Plaintiff is entitled to relief. [Record No. 14] However, Midwest contends that its has alleged enough facts to permit a reasonable inference that it is entitled [*2] to relief. [Record No. 19, p. 1] After reviewing the relevant authorities, the Court agrees that the claim should be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

I.

Defendant JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. ("Chase") is a wholly-owned subsidiary of JP Morgan Chase & Co. ("JP Morgan"). Chase is also one of the largest banking institutions in the United States and one of the world's largest financial service firms. [Record No. 1, P 7] Defendant Chase Auto Finance Corporation ("CAF") is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Chase. CAF purchases retail installment contracts from automobile dealers across the United States. [Record No. 1, P 8] Defendant Chase Insurance Agency, Inc. ("CIA") is a wholly-owned subsidiary of JP Morgan Insurance Holdings, LLC, which is a wholly-owned subsidiary of JP Morgan. [Record No. 1, P 9] Midwest sells different types of insurance, including gap insurance products. [Record No. 1, P 18]

When purchasing a car, buyers typically have a number of financing options including funding the purchase through "indirect auto lending." [Record No. 1, P 10] This occurs when a dealer sells the vehicle on credit to the buyer ("Credit Transaction"). [Record No. [*3] 1, P 11] In this situation, the dealer is the creditor, and the buyer is the debtor. [Record No. 1, P 11] However, dealers typically enter into these transactions with the expectation they will be able to transfer the rights and obligations under the Credit Transaction to another entity. [Record No. 1, P 11] Chase is the largest institution that acquires Credit Transactions from automobile dealers. It usually acquires these Credit Transactions shortly after the original transaction is completed. [Record No. 1, P 12] Chase acquires the Credit Transactions directly and indirectly through CAF, its agent and subsidiary. [Record No. 1, P 12] Before purchasing Credit Transactions, Chase and CAF notify dealers of the terms on which they are willing to conduct the purchase. [Record No. 1, P 13] Midwest alleges that because of their size and presence within the market, Chase and CAF do not negotiate with dealers over purchase terms. [Record No. 1, P 13]

In any vehicle sale, dealers will generally offer to sell the buyer ancillary products and services, including gap insurance. [Record No. 1, P 14] Gap insurance protects the car buyer from certain risks in the event of loss. [Record No. 1, P [*4] 15] In the event that a car is "totaled," the buyer's primary insurance carrier will generally only pay the market value of the vehicle at the time of loss, which may be less than what the buyer owes under the Credit Transaction. [Record No. 1, P 15] Gap insurance covers the difference between the market value and the amount owed under the Credit Transaction. [Record No. 1, P 15]

Many gap insurance products are available in the Kentucky vehicle market, and vehicle buyers decide whether to purchase gap insurance. [Record No. 1, P 16] If the buyer decides to purchase the insurance product, he or she will usually purchase whichever product is suggested by the dealer at the point of sale. [Record No. 1, P 16] If the buyer purchases gap insurance, the purchase price is included in the total amount financed by the dealer, and in turn, sold to the entity purchasing the Credit Transaction. [Record No. 1, P 17]

Both Midwest and CIA sell gap insurance products and compete against each other in this market. [Record No. 1, P 19] Midwest sells a product called "Premier Gap." Its customers include more than 300 motor vehicle dealers in Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Tennessee, and West Virginia (collectively, [*5] the "Territory"). [Record No. 1, P 18] CIA sells two gap insurance products, but does not dominate the gap insurance market, having less than a ten percent market share in the relevant Territory. [Record No. 1, P 19] Midwest alleges that its gap insurance products are superior to those of CIA in every commercial respect. [Record No. 1, P 22] Specifically, Midwest's gap insurance product is backed by an insurance company with a superior rating to the insurance carrier backing CIA's gap insurance. [Record No. 1, P 22]

On or after June 1, 2009, Chase and/or CAF announced an "internal policy change" regarding Credit Transactions they would be willing to acquire. [Record No. 1, P 20] Specifically, CAF advised Kentucky dealers it would not purchase Credit Transactions that included gap insurance products unless the product was included on CAF's Approved List ("Approved List"). [Record No. 1, P 21] Midwest's products were not included on this Approved List, but other vendors' products including CIA gap insurance products were listed. [Record No. 1, P 21] Midwest alleges that the criteria used by the Defendants to determine which gap insurance products to include on the Approved List have nothing [*6] to do with the reliability of the product, strength of the company backing the product, or any other factor affecting any risk undertaken by Chase and/or CAF. [Record No. 1, P 23] The company also asserts that the Defendants' Approved List is simply a way to funnel business to their affiliate, CIA. [Record No. 1, P 24]

Midwest contends that the Approved List is a tool Chase and CAF use to coerce dealers into refraining from offering car buyers other gap insurance products, including Midwest's gap insurance products. [Record No. 1, P 24] It further contends that Defendants have rejected Credit Transactions that contained Midwest gap insurance products, have returned the paperwork to the dealer, and have verbally suggested that the dealer substitute the CIA gap insurance product. [Record No. 1, P 25] Once this substitution was made, Defendants then purchased the Credit Transaction from the dealer. [Record No. 1, P 25]

Midwest's Complaint contains six claims. Count one contends that the Defendants violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. Count two alleges that the Defendants violated the Bank Holding Company Act ("BHCA"). Counts three and four are brought pursuant to K.R.S. § 304.9-135 and K.R.S. § 304.12-140(1). [*7] Count five is based on a claim of unfair competition under Kentucky common law. Finally, count six asserts a claim of tortious interference with a business relationship.

II.

Under Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a court must construe the complaint in a light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept all the factual allegations as true, and determine whether the plaintiff undoubtedly can prove no set of facts in support of his claims that would entitle him to relief. See Ley v. Visteon Corp., 540 F.3d 376, 380 (6th Cir. 2008); Lillard v. Shelby County Bd. of Educ., 76 F.3d 716, 724 (6th Cir. 1996). However, the Court is "not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949-50, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "Factual allegations contained in a complaint must raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Bassett v. Nat'l Coll. Athletic Ass'n, 528 F.3d 426, 430 (6th Cir. 2008) (citing Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). In other words, a plaintiff's arguments "require[] more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Heightened [*8] fact pleading of specifics is not required -- only enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. See Bassett, 528 F.3d at 426. The Court may consider the complaint as well as "any exhibits attached thereto, public records, [and] items appearing in the record of the case." Amini v. Oberlin Coll., 259 F.3d 493, 502 (6th Cir. 2001) (citation omitted).

III.

A. The Sherman Act

Midwest alleges the Defendants violated the Sherman Act through an unlawful tying arrangement, an unlawful reciprocal-dealing, and an unlawful exclusive-dealing arrangement. An a preliminary matter, to avoid dismissal, a plaintiff must have standing to assert this claim. And to have standing, a plaintiff must allege an antitrust injury. On the substantive claims, the complaint also fails to allege the necessary facts to establish a prima facie case that Defendants violated the Sherman Act by an unlawful tying arrangement, an unlawful reciprocal-dealing, or an unlawful exclusive-dealing arrangement.

1. No Antitrust Injury

As noted above, to have standing to assert an antitrust violation, the plaintiff must allege an antitrust injury. See Buyer's Corner Realty, Inc. v. N. Ky. Ass'n of Realtors, 410 F. Supp. 2d 574, 579 (E.D. Ky. 2006). [*9] This element is so important that it is specifically required even when a plaintiff can demonstrate an unlawful tying arrangement. Id. The elements of an antitrust injury are: (1) the injury is the type of injury that antitrust laws were intended to prevent, and (2) the injury must flow from the characteristic which makes the defendant's acts unlawful. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977); see also CTUnify, Inc. v. Nortel Networks, Inc., 115 F. App'x 831, 835-36 (6th Cir. 2004) (citing Valley Prods. Co. v. Landmark, a Div. of Hospitality Franchise Sys., Inc., 128 F.3d 398, 402-03 (6th Cir.1997)) (noting that the Sixth Circuit has been "reasonably aggressive" in dismissing cases where the injury flows from conduct that is not an antitrust violation). Moreover, an inference of consumer injury is essential. See 2 Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law,* § 358d, at 467 (2000). In Jefferson Parish, the Supreme Court dismissed the plaintiff's complaint because it failed to show that consumers were worse off as a result of the arrangement. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984). If the market remains competitive, then an antitrust injury [*10] has not occurred. See Areeda, § 358d, at 467-68. Furthermore, a complaint alleging only that an individual competitor is injured, but not the market, does not establish an antitrust injury. See B&H Med. v. ABP Admin., 526 F.3d 257, 265 (6th Cir. 2008); Care Heating & Cooling, Inc. v. Am. Standard, 427 F.3d 1008, 1014 (6th Cir. 2005).

Applying these principles in the present case, Midwest has failed to allege an antitrust injury. Midwest alleges only that it incurred damages as a result of Defendants' efforts "to unreasonably restrain competition in the gap insurance industry," [Record No. 1, P 27] and that Plaintiff's injury is "a consequence of the diminished competition proximately caused by Defendants' scheme." [Record No. 1, P 48] It has failed to allege an injury that is the type of injury that antitrust laws were intended to prevent. Midwest's allegation of an injury only to its ability to sell gap insurance products is not an antitrust injury. Care Heating & Cooling, Inc., 427 F.3d at 1014. The law is settled that injury only to a competitor and not to the market does not create an antitrust injury because the purpose of antitrust laws is to protect competition, not competitors. [*11] See Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 488. Therefore, even if Defendants' actions cause Midwest to lose business, this alleged injury alone is not an antitrust injury because no injury occurred either to the consumer or to competition as a whole. See B&H Med., 526 F.3d at 265-66; Care Heating & Cooling, Inc., 427 F.3d at 1014.

Although Midwest does allege that the Defendants' conduct decreased competition within the market, it does not allege facts that demonstrate that competition was actually diminished. Midwest has failed to state how many gap insurance providers exist and how many were listed on the Defendants' Approved List. Therefore, it is impossible to tell the extent to which competition may have been affected. See Norte Car Corp. v. Firstbank, 25 F. Supp. 2d 9, 21 (D. P.R. 1998) (noting that alleging that competition was reduced, without citing specific facts demonstrating this decrease would not carry the pleading burden). Rather, Midwest only alleges facts that demonstrate that it was removed from competition in the market -- not that competition within the entire market was diminished. Therefore, it fails to allege an injury that is of the type that antitrust laws were intended to [*12] prevent because the facts do not demonstrate that competition was harmed, as required to establish an antitrust injury.

Midwest also fails to allege an injury that flows from that which makes the Defendants' acts unlawful. It alleges that the Defendants were engaged in an unlawful tying arrangement. However, Midwest's alleged injury flows from its exclusion from the Approved List, not from the alleged tying arrangement itself. Use of an approved list by a buyer of a product is not an antitrust violation and does not cause an antitrust injury. See CTUnify, Inc., 115 F. App'x at 836 (noting that the plaintiff's injuries flowed from its exclusion from a preferred vendor list, not an alleged tying agreement). Further, Section 1 of the Sherman Act does not restrict a buyer's freedom to select the entity from whom it will purchase products. See Expert Masonry, Inc. v. Boone County, 440 F.3d 336, 347 (6th Cir. 2006). Rather, such selections are the nature of the marketplace. Id. Therefore, the Defendants' actions were not unlawful but were part of the normal environment of business and competition. As a result, Midwest has failed to allege facts that demonstrate an antitrust injury. Such failure [*13] if fatal to its first claim for relief.

2. The Tying Arrangement Claim

The Defendants also contend that Midwest has failed to establish a prima facie case that it created an unlawful tying arrangement and that this failure constitutes an alternative ground for dismissing this claim. The relevant part of Section 1 of the Sherman Act states: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. This section has been interpreted to restrict only "unreasonable" restraints of trade, and thus is the section used as the basis for a tying arrangement claim. See Buyer's Corner Realty, 410 F. Supp. 2d at 578. A tying arrangement is defined as "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Eastman Kodak v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). A tying arrangement violates antitrust law only if a "substantial volume of commerce is foreclosed thereby." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16.

Accordingly, [*14] a plaintiff must allege that a tying arrangement exists and must demonstrate that the arrangement is unlawful. The elements required to demonstrate an unlawful tying arrangement claim are: (1) the seller has "appreciable economic power" in the tying product market; (2) the tying arrangement "affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market"; (3) "the seller has a direct economic interest in the sale of the tied product"; and (4) the plaintiff has suffered an antitrust injury resulting from the tying arrangement. See Buyer's Corner Realty, Inc., 410 F. Supp. 2d at 578 (citing CTUnify, 115 F. App'x at 834). In the present case, Midwest has failed to demonstrate that a tying arrangement exists.

Midwest alleges that the Defendants condition their purchase of Credit Transactions on the dealers' use of gap insurance products from an Approved List. Accordingly, it alleges that the tying product is the service of purchasing of the Credit Transactions, and the tied product is the gap insurance product. However, this alleged arrangement fails to satisfy the definition of a tying arrangement. First, the Defendants are the purchasers of the Credit Transactions. They are not selling a [*15] product in this situation and, therefore, do not have the requisite selling power to coerce buyers to accept a tied product as required in a tying arrangement. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 13 (noting that the "essential characteristic" of an unlawful tying arrangement is the seller's "exploitation of control" to force the buyer to purchase the tied product). This situation, in which a buyer uses his power to induce a supplier to buy his product, is arguably reciprocity, not a tying arrangement. See Areeda, § 17G, at 448. Defendants have created certain standards for Credit Transactions they would be willing to buy, which is not an antitrust violation. See Expert Masonry, Inc., 440 F.3d at 347 (noting that a buyer can decide with whom they do business without running afoul of the Sherman Act). Midwest has cited no authority which applies a tying arrangement to a situation in which a buyer is the one allegedly tying products.

Second, even if the court accepts Midwest's argument that the Defendants are supplying a service, they do not require the purchase of any gap insurance product and, therefore, there is no coercion. Midwest admits that car buyers may or may not choose to purchase [*16] gap insurance. [Record No. 1, p. 16] The Defendants do not require the Credit Transactions they purchase to include gap insurance. Thus, by definition, a tie cannot exist because a "tied product" is not being forced on the buyer. However, if a car buyer purchases gap insurance products and the car dealer intends to sell the Credit Transaction to Defendants, the gap insurance product must be from a vendor on the Approved List. Further, the Approved List includes several vendors, only one of which is CIA. This is an example of a buyer creating terms on which it is willing to do business. Therefore, Midwest has failed to allege an unlawful tying arrangement in violation of the Sherman Act.

3. Reciprocal and Exclusive Dealing Claims

Midwest also alleges that the Defendants' arrangement constitutes both an unlawful reciprocal-dealing and an unlawful exclusive-dealing arrangement. A reciprocal-dealing arrangement exists when one party agrees to buy a second party's goods, provided that the second party buys a particular product from the first party. See Areeda, § 1775a, at 448-49. Reciprocal-dealing arrangements are only unlawful when one party employs its market power to "coerce" the second [*17] party to buy the first party's product. Id. at 449. An exclusive-dealing arrangement exists when one buyer agrees to purchase a product from only one supplier for a specific amount of time. See Norte Car Corp., 25 F. Supp. 2d at 17.

In this case, Midwest does not establish that either a reciprocal-dealing arrangement or an exclusive-dealing arrangement exists because the Defendants did not require the purchase of CIA gap insurance products. The Defendants agreed to purchase Credit Transactions that either: (1) did not include a gap insurance product, or (2) if it did, the gap insurance product must have been purchased from a vendor on the Approved List. Although CIA was on the Approved List, it was not the only vendor listed. Because the Defendants did not condition their purchase of Credit Transactions on the purchase of CIA gap insurance product, a reciprocal-dealing arrangement did not exist. Similarly, because the Defendants purchased Credit Transactions that included gap insurance products from any vendor on the Approved List, not just those that included CIA gap insurance products, an exclusive dealing agreement did not exist.

The Court also notes that even if it were to find that [*18] an exclusive-dealing agreement exists, it would not be unlawful. An exclusive-dealing arrangement is unlawful when "the competition foreclosed by the contract [is] found to constitute a substantial share of the relevant market." Tampa Elect. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 328, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961). As a matter of law, courts have concluded that foreclosure levels of less than 30 or 40 percent are not a substantial share. See B&H Med., 526 F.3d at 266. Plaintiff alleges in its complaint only that "the tie foreclosed a substantial amount of commerce in the market for the tied product." [Record No. 1, P 42] However, this assertion includes no percentages or other evidence supporting this statement. As such, it constitutes a conclusory statement of law which does not carry the pleading burden. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

In summary, Midwest's first claim fails for two separate reasons: (1) it fails to allege an antitrust injury and (2) it fails to allege the necessary facts to establish a prima facie case that Defendants violated the Sherman Act by an unlawful tying arrangement, an unlawful reciprocal-dealing, or an unlawful exclusive-dealing arrangement.

B. The Bank Holding Company Act ("BHCA")

Midwest [*19] alleges in the second count of its Complaint that the Defendants violated the BHCA by establishing an unlawful tying arrangement. The BHCA provides, in relevant part, that:

> (1) A bank shall not in any manner extend credit, lease or sell property of any kind, or furnish any service, or fix or vary the consideration for any of the foregoing, on the condition or requirement--
>
> > (A) that the customer shall obtain some additional credit, property, or service from such bank other than a loan, discount, deposit, or trust service;
> >
> > (B) that the customer shall obtain some additional credit, property, or service from a bank holding company of such bank, or from any other subsidiary of such bank holding company; . . .
> >
> > (E) that the customer shall not obtain some other credit, property, or service from a competitor of such bank, a bank holding company of such bank, or any subsidiary of such bank holding company, other than a condition or requirement that such bank shall reasonably impose in a credit transaction to assure the soundness of the credit.

12 U.S.C. § 1972(1) (2010). The elements of an unlawful tying arrangement under the BHCA are: (1) the bank imposed an anti-competitive tying arrangement by [*20] conditioning an extension of credit upon borrower's obtaining additional credit or services from the bank; (2) the arrangement was unusual or nontraditional in the banking industry; and (3) the practice benefitted the bank. Highland Capital, Inc. v. Franklin Nat'l Bank, 350 F.3d 558, 565 (6th Cir. 2003).

Midwest is unable to establish the first of these elements because the Defendants did not extend any credit or provide a service. The Defendants purchased Credit Transactions that had already been completed between the car dealer and the car buyer. Accordingly, the Defendants' purchase of the Credit Transaction from the car dealers does not constitute an extension of credit or provision of a banking service to satisfy the first element of a BHCA claim. In addition, as discussed above, Midwest cannot demonstrate that a tying arrangement existed. While the standard for a tying arrangement under a BHCA claim does not require coercion, the statutory language prohibits the "extension of credit" based on a "condition or requirement" of additional actions. See 12 U.S.C. § 1972(1) (2010). Accordingly, Midwest must establish that the Defendants required car dealers to purchase certain gap insurance [*21] products in order for the Defendants to purchase the Credit Transactions. See Highland Capital, Inc., 350 F.3d at 567-68 (noting that demonstrating that borrowers purchased additional products because it pleased the lender did not establish that the purchase was a requirement for purposes of establishing a claim).

Even assuming that the purchase of the Credit Transaction constitutes an extension of credit for the purposes of the BHCA claim, the Defendants did not require car dealers to include any gap insurance products in the Credit Transactions they purchased. Rather, the Defendants required that if a gap insurance product was included in the Credit Transaction, it must be from a vendor on the Approved List. Because the Defendants would purchase Credit Transactions without a gap insurance product, the purchase was not conditioned on the inclusion of CIA gap insurance products.

C. K.R.S. § 304.9-135

The Defendants argue that Midwest's claim based on K.R.S. § 304.9-135 should be dismissed because the insurance statute does not apply to the facts alleged. The statute states: "An officer or employee of a financial institution shall not directly or indirectly delay or impede the completion [*22] of a loan transaction or any other transaction with a financial institution for the purpose of influencing a consumer's selection or purchase of any insurance." K.R.S. § 304.9-135(3) (2010). In its Complaint, Midwest asserts that the Defendants' conduct violates this statute but it fails to allege specific facts concerning what conduct violated the statute.

The Defendants' alleged actions, taken as true, do not violate the statutory language. The Defendants were not involved with a loan transaction. Instead, they purchased Credit Transactions after the loan was completed. Additionally, the Defendants did not require the purchase of any gap insurance products, as demonstrated by the fact that they purchased Credit Transactions that did not include gap insurance products. Because the loan was completed before the Defendants purchased the Credit Transactions, the Defendants could not delay or impede the completion of such transaction. Accordingly, Midwest cannot establish a violation of K.R.S. § 304.9-135.

D. Counts Four and Five

Midwest alleges in count four that the Defendants violated K.R.S. § 304.12-140(1). [Record No. 1, p. 15] This statute restricts coercion in requiring insurance. [*23] It states:

> (1) No person engaged in the business of financing the purchase of real or personal property or of lending money on the security of real or personal property shall require, as a condition to financing or lending, or varying the terms and conditions of the financing or lending, or as a condition to the renewal or extension of any loan or credit or to the performance of any other act in connection with financing or lending, that the purchaser or borrower, or his successors, shall negotiate through a particular insurer, agent, or type of insurer, any policy of insurance or renewal insuring the property or the life or health of the borrower.
> (2) This section shall not prevent the reasonable exercise by any vendor or lender of its right to approve or disapprove the insurer selected to underwrite the insurance, and to determine the adequacy of the insurance offered.

K.R.S. § 304.9-135 (2010). Count five alleges that the Defendants committed unfair competition under Kentucky common law. Both of these counts are premised on the alleged tying arrangement claim which, as discussed above, is legally insufficient. Midwest did not allege any additional facts to support these counts.

In addition, [*24] K.R.S. § 304.12-140(1) prohibits the conditioning of lending or financing on the purchase of a particular insurance product. And as discussed above, the Defendants did not lend or finance the purchase of the car. Instead, they purchase Credit Transaction after the lending occurs. Also, count four alleges that the Defendants' conduct injured Midwest by "taking its business or impairing its good will." [Record No. 1, P 74]. However, Midwest fails to allege any facts that demonstrated that it lost business or that the Defendants' creation and/or use of the Approved List impaired its goodwill. Accordingly, these counts will also be dismissed.

E. Tortious Interference With a Business Relationship

The Defendants assert that Midwest's claim of tortious interference with business relationships also should be dismissed. To state a claim for tortious interference, a plaintiff must allege facts that the interference occurred through "unlawful means, such as fraud, deceit or coercion." Henkin v. Berea Bank & Trust Co., 566 S.W.2d 420, 425 (Ky. Ct. App. 1978); see also *AMC v. Cincinnati Milacron, Inc., No. 3:97-CV-343-H, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22918, 2000 WL 33975582, at 7 (W.D. Ky. Jan. 25, 2000) (noting that "impropriety should [*25] not be confused with aggressive, competitive business practices). Midwest's Complaint alleges that the Defendants "improperly and intentionally interfered" with existing business relationship, but the basis that Midwest cites for the impropriety is the alleged tying arrangement scheme. Again, because an unlawful tying cannot be established under the facts presented, Midwest cannot prove that any alleged interference was the result of unlawful means.

IV.

Midwest correctly notes that the appropriate standard for dismissal is that the complaint contains enough information to permit "the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft, 129 S. Ct. at 1937, 1940. Here, however, Midwest's Complaint fails to allege an antitrust injury and fails to allege the necessary facts to establish a prima facie case that the Defendants violated the Sherman Act by an unlawful tying arrangement, an unlawful reciprocal-dealing, or an unlawful exclusive-dealing arrangement. In addition, Midwest's Complaint does not allege facts necessary to establish an unlawful tying arrangement. Finally, even if the Defendants' actions are taken as true, they would [*26] not violate K.R.S § 304.9-135. Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

1. Defendants JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., Chase Auto Finance Corporation, and Chase Insurance Agency, Inc.'s motion to dismiss [Record No. 14] is GRANTED.

2. All claims asserted in this action by Plaintiff Midwest Agency Services, Inc. are DISMISSED, with prejudice.

3. This case is DISMISSED and STRICKEN from the Court's docket.

4. A final, appealable Judgment will be entered this date.

This 11th day of March, 2010.

/s/ Danny C. Reeves

United States District Judge

Dicar, Inc. v. Stafford Corrugated Prods.

United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

March 12, 2010, Decided; March 12, 2010, Filed

Civil Action No. 2:05-cv-5426 (DMC)(MF)

Reporter

2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23667 *; 2011-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,482

DICAR, INC., and ROBUD, Plaintiffs, v. STAFFORD CORRUGATED PRODUCTS, INC., and RODICUT ROTARY DIECUTTING, Defendants.

Notice: NOT FOR PUBLICATION

Prior History: Dicar, Inc. v. Stafford Corrugated Prods., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52245 (D.N.J., June 22, 2009)

Core Terms

blanket, locking, patent, compressible, counterclaims, anvil, coupled, specification, Defendants', antitrust, channel, motion to dismiss, die cutter, Plaintiffs', geographic, interlock, relevant market, probability, cutting, invention, consumer, manufactured, rotary, failure to state a claim, disputed term, allegations, inequitable conduct, extrinsic evidence, monopoly power, elasticity

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > Scope of Claim

HN1[] Infringement Actions, Claim Interpretation

Claim construction is a matter of law to be determined solely by the court. Analysis of a patent infringement claim is a two-step process. A court must first construe the meaning and scope of the patent claims and then compare the claims as construed to the alleged infringing product. At this stage, the court will only engage in the first step. To construe the terms of a patent, a court should look first to the language of the claim itself. Terms within a claim are generally given their ordinary and customary meaning. The ordinary and customary meaning of a claim term is the meaning that the term would have to a person of ordinary skill in the art in question at the time of the invention, i.e., as of the effective filing date of the patent application.

Patent Law > ... > Claims > Claim Language > General Overview

HN2[] Claims, Claim Language

To determine how a person of skill in the art would understand a patent's claim language, a court must first examine the intrinsic record----the patent itself, including the claims, the specification and the prosecution history. The specification acts as a dictionary when it expressly defines terms used in the claims or when it defines terms by implication. Indeed, the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has explained that the specification is usually dispositive and is the best guide to the meaning of a disputed term. It is proper for a court to rely heavily on the written description for guidance as to the meaning of the claims.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

HN3[] Claim Interpretation, Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

A patent's prosecution history is a critical source of guidance, as it provides evidence of how the United States Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) and the inventor understood the patent. The prosecution history is the complete record of the proceedings before the PTO, and can often inform the meaning of the claim language by demonstrating how the inventor understood the invention and whether the inventor limited the invention in the course of prosecution, making the claim scope narrower than it would otherwise be. The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has repeatedly emphasized the need to consult the prosecution history to exclude any interpretation that was disclaimed during prosecution. In exchanges with the PTO, a patent applicant may disavow or disclaim certain claim coverage, thereby precluding any claim interpretation that would encompass the disavowed or disclaimed subject matter.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

HN4[] Claim Interpretation, Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

After consulting intrinsic evidence, a district court may also examine extrinsic evidence--i.e., all evidence external to the patent and prosecution history. The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has authorized district courts to rely on extrinsic evidence. Such evidence consists of testimony by the inventor or by experts, dictionaries, and treatises. However, extrinsic evidence is generally less significant than the intrinsic record in determining the legally operative meaning of claim language. Extrinsic evidence, when relied upon, must be considered in view of the specification and prosecution history. Extrinsic evidence may be useful to the court, but it is unlikely to result in a reliable interpretation of patent claim scope unless considered in the context of intrinsic evidence.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

HN5[] Claim Interpretation, Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

To determine the proper construction of a disputed term, the court will consider the intrinsic evidence, the (1) claims/specification; and (2) the prosecution history of the patent; as well as (3) relevant extrinsic evidence, e.g., dictionaries and treatises.

Patent Law > Claims & Specifications > General Overview

HN6[] Patent Law, Claims & Specifications

The patent specification is the single best guide to the meaning of a disputed term, and that claims should be construed so as to be consistent with the specification.

Patent Law > Claims & Specifications > General Overview

HN7[] Patent Law, Claims & Specifications

35 U.S.C.S. § 112 states that the specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

HN8[] Claim Interpretation, Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

With respect to the prosecution history, an alleged statement or modification must strictly demonstrate the applicant's intent to limit the claim to have such effect: the alleged disavowing actions or statements must be both clear and unmistakable. A statement that is vague or ambiguous as to whether the applicant intended to limit his or her claim will not give rise to a disclaimer of claim scope.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > General Overview

HN9[] Infringement Actions, Claim Interpretation

Terms within a patent must be read in view of the specification (i.e., the written description of the invention, its embodiments, and the drawings), of which they are a part.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The New Jersey Antitrust Act was patterned after the Sherman Act, and courts have previously acknowledged the significance of federal antitrust decisions in the interpretation of state antitrust law. Indeed, the New Jersey Antitrust Act itself requires that it be construed in harmony with federal antitrust laws.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN11[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In deciding a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), all allegations in the complaint must be taken as true and viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. If, after viewing the allegations in the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, it appears beyond doubt that no relief could be granted under any set of facts which could prove consistent with the allegations, a court shall dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim. In Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly the United States Supreme Court clarified the Rule 12(b)(6) standard. Specifically, the court "retired" the language contained in Conley v. Gibson, that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim, which would entitle him to relief. Instead, the Supreme Court has instructed that factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level. Ultimately, the question is whether the claimant can prove a set of facts consistent with his or her allegations that will entitle him or her to relief, not whether that person will ultimately prevail.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN12[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Although the Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) pleading requirements are liberal, facts must be pleaded with reasonable particularity in order to permit an inference that an antitrust claim is cognizable. In an antitrust case, a district court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in the pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed. It is not proper to assume that the plaintiff can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN13[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

A claim for monopolization/attempted monopolization under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 of the Sherman Act requires allegations (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with; (2) a specific intent to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in the relevant market. Accordingly, to determine whether a claim of monopolization or attempted monopolization exists, an inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market is required. An antitrust plaintiff, then, must plead facts sufficient to demonstrate a viable relevant market so that the effects of the allegedly anticompetitive conduct can be measured. A plaintiff bears the burden of defining the relevant market which is comprised of a relevant product market and a relevant geographic market. Both markets must be defined in the pleadings.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN14[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

With regard to a claim of monopolization, once a relevant market is properly established, a plaintiff must plead facts indicating that there is a dangerous probability that the defendants will achieve monopoly power in the relevant market. To determine whether there is a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power, a court considers the Barr Labs., Inc. v. Abbott Labs., factors: the size of the defendant's "market share" as well as the strength of competition, probable development of the industry, the barriers to entry, the nature of the anticompetitive conduct, and the elasticity of consumer demand.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN15[] Private Actions, Sherman Act

With regard to an antitrust claim, a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of "antitrust injury."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

HN16[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

To prevail on its antitrust claim, Defendants must established that (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with; (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN17[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

With regard to an antitrust claim, to determine the bounds of a relevant geographic market, elasticity is the paramount consideration. In other words, the question is how far consumers will go to obtain the product or its substitute in response to a given price increase and how likely it is that a price increase for the product in a particular location will induce outside suppliers to enter that market and increase supply-side competition in that location. A party must plead the geographic market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN18[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

With regard to an antitrust claim, where there is no indication that a consumer would be unable to purchase a product abroad, the court will not arbitrarily limit the geographical market to the United States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN19[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

With regard to an antitrust claim, a mere assertion that market access is restricted, without more, is insufficient to withstanding a motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN20[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

With regard to an antitrust claim, dismissal is appropriate where a plaintiff has failed to provide a plausible explanation as to why a market should be limited in a particular way.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

HN21[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

To assess whether a dangerous probability that a party will achieve monopoly power exists, a court considers the Barr Labs factors: (1) the size of the defendants' market share; (2) the strength of competition; (3) probable development of the industry; (4) the barriers to entry; (5) the nature of the anticompetitive conduct; and (6) the elasticity of consumer demand.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

HN22[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

To prevail on its antitrust claim, a plaintiff must established that (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with; (2) a specific intent to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

HN23[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

With regard to an antitrust claim, a plaintiff must show that there was some significant reduction in the number of manufacturers in the market during the relevant time period because of the plaintiffs' allegedly anti-competitive conduct, for instance, by showing that a competitor was forced out of the market or that prices fluctuated.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

HN24[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

Motions for reconsideration are governed by D.N.J., Civ. R. 7.1(i). A motion pursuant to Local Rule 7.1(i) may be granted if (1) an intervening change in the controlling law has occurred; (2) evidence not previously available has become available; or (3) it is necessary to correct a clear error of law or prevent manifest injustice. Such relief is "an extraordinary remedy" that is to be granted very sparingly.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

HN25[] Inequitable Conduct, Burdens of Proof

To state a claim of inequitable conduct, a party must allege that the patent applicant: (1) made an affirmative misrepresentation of material fact, failed to disclose material information, or submitted false information; and (2) intended to deceive the United States Patent and Trademark Office (PTO). Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that a pleading set forth: (1) who made the misrepresentation to whom and the general content of the misrepresentation; and (2) either the date, place, or time of the misrepresentation or other measure of substantiation of the allegations.

Counsel: [*1] For DICAR, INC., ROBUD, Plaintiffs: JOHN G. GILFILLAN, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, CARELLA, BYRNE, BAIN, GILFILLAN, CECCHI, STEWART & OLSTEIN, PC, ROSELAND, NJ; STEPHEN R. BUCKINGHAM, LEAD ATTORNEY, DAVID L. HARRIS, LOWENSTEIN SANDLER, PC, ROSELAND, NJ.

For STAFFORD CORRUGATED PRODUCTS, INC., Defendant: ANTHONY R. MAUTONE, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, MAUTONE & HORAN, WEST ORANGE, NJ.

For STAFFORD CORRUGATED PRODUCTS, INC., Counter Claimant: ANTHONY R. MAUTONE, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, MAUTONE & HORAN, WEST ORANGE, NJ.

For DICAR, INC., Counter Defendant: MICHAEL J. HAHN, LEAD ATTORNEY, DAVID L. HARRIS, STEPHEN R. BUCKINGHAM, LEAD ATTORNEY, LOWENSTEIN SANDLER, PC, ROSELAND, NJ.

For ROBUD, Counter Defendant: STEPHEN R. BUCKINGHAM, LEAD ATTORNEY, DAVID L. HARRIS, LOWENSTEIN SANDLER, PC, ROSELAND, NJ.

For DICAR, INC., ROBUD, Counter Defendants: JOHN G. GILFILLAN, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, CARELLA, BYRNE, BAIN, GILFILLAN, CECCHI, STEWART & OLSTEIN, PC, ROSELAND, NJ; STEPHEN R. BUCKINGHAM, LEAD ATTORNEY, DAVID L. HARRIS, LOWENSTEIN SANDLER, PC, ROSELAND, NJ.

Judges: Hon. Dennis M. Cavanaugh, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Dennis M. Cavanaugh

Opinion

DENNIS M. CAVANAUGH, U.S.D.J.:

This matter comes before the Court upon motions of Plaintiffs [*2] Dicar, Inc. and Robud ("Plaintiffs"). Plaintiffs move to dismiss Counts Two and Three of the Amended Counterclaims of Defendants Stafford Corrugated Products, Inc. and Rodicut Rotary Diecutting ("Defendants") for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6). Plaintiffs also move for reconsideration of a portion of this Court's June 22, 2009 Opinion, wherein Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss Defendant's First Counterclaim and Second and Third Affirmative Defenses was denied. A hearing was held on March 2, 2010. Prior to addressing Plaintiffs' motions, however, the Court must construe a term contained in claim 13 of U.S. Patent No. 5,720,212 (hereinafter "the '212 patent").

After carefully considering the written and oral arguments of the parties, and based upon the following, it is the finding of this Court that Plaintiffs' Motion to dismiss Counts Two and Three of Defendants' Amended Counterclaims is granted (see Section III), Plaintiffs' motion for Reconsideration is granted (Section IV), and the disputed term of claim 13 is construed as set forth below (Section II).

I. BACKGROUND [1]

A. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiff Dicar is in the business of manufacturing and selling products for use in the rotary die cutting industry. One such product is the die cutter blanket. Plaintiff Robud is the owner of patents related to the die cutter blanket. Robud has sold an exclusive license to Dicar to manufacture the die cutter blanket. Defendants Stafford and Rodicut are also in the rotary die cutting industry. Stafford sells and imports a die cutter blanket manufactured by Rodicut.

In 1997, Robud prosecuted a patent application that eventually became the '212 Patent entitled "Locking Arrangement For Die Cutter Blanket." On April 15, 1997, during prosecution of the '212 patent, the patent examiner rejected claim 18 of the patent application. Robud, in claim 18, described a discrete portion of the locking arrangement as a "locking member including a compressible means." On April 25, 1997, in response to the rejection, Robud amended the language of claim 18 to read: "a locking member and compressible means coupled to the locking member." After Robud's amendment, the patent examiner approved claim 18 (which later became claim 13 of the patent). On February 24, [*4] 1998, the United States Patent and Trademark Office ("USPTO") issued the '212 patent.

---

[1] The facts set forth in this Opinion are taken from the [*3] parties' moving papers.

On November 16, 2005, Plaintiffs commenced an action alleging infringement of the '212 patent against Stafford. After proceeding through discovery for approximately two years, Plaintiffs moved on November 28, 2007 for summary judgment on their '212 patent infringement claim. At the Court's instruction, and after Plaintiffs withdrew their motion, both parties filed amended pleadings. Discovery continued until May 5, 2008, at which time Plaintiffs filed an Amended Complaint and added Rodicut as a Defendant. Defendants Stafford and Rodicut filed their Answer and Counterclaims on July 3, 2008.

Stafford and Rodicut's counterclaims consist of: (1) declaratory judgment of non-infringement, invalidity and unenforceability of the '212 patent; (2) violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (3) violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; and (4) violation of New Jersey Antitrust laws, N.J. Stat. §§ 56:9-1 et seq. Stafford and Rodicut also assert the following affirmative defenses: (1) laches and estoppel; (2) invalidity and unenforceability of the '212 patent; (3) [*5] inequitable conduct before the USPTO; and (4) unclean hands as a result of Plaintiffs' impermissible broadening of the scope of the '212 patent.

On November 3, 2008, Dicar and Robud filed a motion to dismiss the counterclaims and strike the affirmative defenses. On June 22, 2009, the Court dismissed the antitrust counterclaims, and permitted Defendants to replead. In the same Opinion, the Court denied Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Defendants' First Counterclaim and Second and Third Affirmative Defenses (relating to inequitable conduct). Defendants subsequently replead, and Plaintiffs moved to dismiss the claims on September 4, 2009.

B. DIE CUTTER BLANKETS

A continuous sheet of material, such as corrugated paperboard, can be cut to a desired shape and size using a machine called a rotary die cutter. Once cut, the paperboard can be folded into, for example, cardboard boxes. A typical way to cut the corrugated paperboard is by passing it between a cutting roller and an anvil (i.e., a cylindrical drum). Cutting blades, which are commonly called dies, are attached to, and rotate along with, the cutting roller. Eight to twelve die cutter blankets are wrapped around the length of the anvil. [*6] The spacing between the cutting roller and the anvil is set so that the cutting blades penetrate the surface of the die cutter blanket--this ensures that the blades completely cut through the corrugated paperboard. If the blanket was formed from a material that was too hard, the blades would quickly become dull since the blades are positioned to cut into the blanket. If, on the other hand, the blanket was too soft or spongy, the corrugated paperboard could move while being cut and thereby cause either incomplete or improper cutting of the paperboard. Accordingly, the die cutter blanket needs to be constructed of a deformable material that is sufficiently rigid to give adequate support to the paperboard, yet soft enough so that the cutting blades will not wear or be damaged when they impact the blanket. The material that has been favored in the industry for fabricating blankets is polyurethane. Polyurethane blankets are fabricated by pouring liquid polyurethane into a mold that is designed to produce a blanket of the desired dimensions. The polyurethane cools, shrinks, and hardens to form the blanket.

The penetration of the cutting blades into the blankets causes more wear in some areas [*7] than others. The life of the blankets can be extended by rotating them on the anvil so that the dies' impact is distributed to various locations of the blankets. Even with periodic rotations of the blankets, after a few rotations the blankets need to be replaced. The rotation and replacement requires stopping production. This is of particular concern because, in the rotary die cutting field, the machines normally operate at relatively high speeds, thereby generating enormous output with relatively small labor requirements. Any work stoppages or added labor can be very costly.

A problem that has received attention over the years is the mechanism that attaches (i.e., locks) the blanket to the anvil. Before the invention disclosed in the '212 patent, the typical way to attach the blanket to the anvil was through the use of bolts. To accommodate the bolts, a slot (often called a channel) with threaded holes is formed in the anvil. These holes accept bolts that are inserted through the blanket. The time and labor required by bolting and unbolting the blankets caused the machine to be out of service for an hour or more.

Another method of attachment was to design the ends of the blanket to [*8] interlock with one another. In this design, one end of the blanket is physically held in place in the anvil's channel while attempting to wrap the other end around the anvil. The interlocking ends are then pushed together. A problem with this design is that the end of the blanket may pop out of the channel while the other end is being wrapped around the anvil.

C. THE '212 PATENT

The '212 patent discloses a unique design for a die cutter blanket. In the claimed blanket, one end contains a projection that is designed to deform/compress when it is inserted into a channel in the anvil. The compression of the projection causes enough friction so as to retain the end of the blanket within the channel, and prevent the blanket from sliding along the anvil while the machine is operating. Figure 1 of the '212 patent, which is reproduced below, discloses one embodiment of the invention. In the Figure the anvil is labeled with the number 6 and its channel is labeled with the number 8. Here, a locking mechanism, which is called a "composite structure" in the '212 patent, is formed of two components (i.e., a "member" and an "element," which are labeled with the numbers 30 and 46, respectively). Figure [*9] 1 of the '212 patent shows the composite structure partially inserted into the anvil's channel.

[SEE DRAWING IN ORIGINAL]

As depicted in Figure 2 of the '212 patent, shown above, although the composite structure (30 and 46) is wider than channel (8), the structure can be fully inserted in the channel. This occurs because element (46) is made from a compressible material. The compression of element (46) forces the composite structure (30 and 46) to become tightly engaged (i.e., locked) within the channel when inserted. Once the first end (22) is locked to the anvil, the second end (24) can be wrapped around the anvil.

Figure 10 of the '212 patent, which is reproduced below, discloses another embodiment of the invention. Here, the composite structure is formed from one piece of material--in fact, the entire blanket (130) is formed from one piece of material. Thus, in this embodiment, the locking mechanism that projects from one end of the blanket (136) is formed from one single piece of material.

[SEE DRAWING IN ORIGINAL]

II. CLAIM CONSTRUCTION

Prior to considering Plaintiff's motion to dismiss and motion for reconsideration, the Court will construe a disputed term in the '212 patent. The term, [*10] contained in claim 13 (previously claim 18 during prosecution), is: "compressible means coupled to the locking member." The claim containing the disputed term is provide in Section II.B, infra.

A. APPLICABLE LAW

HN1[] Claim construction is a matter of law to be determined solely by the court. Phillips v. AWH Corp., 415 F.3d 1303, 1312 (Fed. Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1170, 126 S. Ct. 1332, 164 L. Ed. 2d 49 (2006). Analysis of a patent infringement claim is a two-step process. Tate Access Floors, Inc. v. Interface Architectural Resources, Inc., 279 F.3d 1357, 1365 (Fed. Cir. 2002). A court must first construe the meaning and scope of the patent claims, Markman v. Westview Instruments, Inc., 52 F.3d 967, 978 (Fed. Cir. 1995) (en banc), aff'd, 517 U.S. 370, 116 S. Ct. 1384, 134 L. Ed. 2d 577 (1996), and then compare the claims as construed to the alleged infringing product. Tate, 279 F.3d at 1365. At this stage, the Court will only engage in the first step. To construe the terms of a patent, a court should look first to the language of the claim itself. Vitronics Corp. v. Conceptronic, Inc., 90 F.3d 1576, 1582 (Fed. Cir. 1996). Terms within a claim "are generally given their ordinary and customary meaning." Id. "[T]he ordinary and customary meaning of a [*11] claim term is the meaning that the term would have to a person of ordinary skill in the art in question at the time of the invention, i.e., as of the effective filing date of the patent application." Phillips, 415 F.3d at 1313.

HN2[] To determine how a person of skill in the art would understand a patent's claim language, a court must first examine the intrinsic record----the patent itself, including the claims, the specification and the prosecution history. Vitronics, 90 F.3d at 1582 (citing Markman, 52 F.3d at 979). The specification "acts as a dictionary when it expressly defines terms used in the claims or when it defines terms by implication." Id. Indeed, the Federal Circuit has explained that the specification is "usually . . . dispositive . . .[and is the] best guide to the meaning of a disputed term." Phillips, 415 F.3d at 1315 (quoting Vitronics, 90 F.3d at 1582)(internal quotations omitted). It is proper for a court to "rely heavily on the written description for guidance as to the meaning of the claims." Id. at 1317.

HN3[] A patent's prosecution history is also a critical source of guidance, as it "provides evidence of how the PTO and the inventor understood the patent." Id. The prosecution [*12] history is the complete record of the proceedings before the PTO, and "can often inform the meaning of the claim language by demonstrating how the inventor understood the invention and whether the inventor limited the invention in the course of prosecution, making the claim scope narrower than it would otherwise be." Id. The Federal Circuit has repeatedly emphasized the need to consult the prosecution history to "exclude any interpretation that was disclaimed during prosecution." See Rhodia Chimie v. PPG Indus., 402 F.3d 1371, 1384 (Fed. Cir. 2005) (recognizing that, in exchanges with the PTO, a patent applicant may disavow or disclaim certain claim coverage, thereby precluding any claim interpretation that would encompass the disavowed or disclaimed subject matter).

HN4[] After consulting intrinsic evidence, a district court may also examine extrinsic evidence--i.e., "all evidence external to the patent and prosecution history." Markman, 52 F.3d at 980; Phillips, 415 F.3d at 1317-18 (stating that the Federal Circuit "ha[s] authorized district courts to rely on extrinsic evidence"). Such evidence consists of testimony by the inventor or by experts, dictionaries, and treatises. Markman, 52 F.3d at 980. [*13] However, extrinsic evidence is generally "less significant than the intrinsic record in determining the legally operative meaning of claim language." C.R. Bard, Inc. v. U.S. Surgical Corp., 388 F.3d 858, 862 (Fed. Cir. 2004) (quotations omitted). Extrinsic evidence, when relied upon, must be considered in view of the specification and prosecution history. Phillips, 415 F.3d at 1320. ("[E]xtrinsic evidence may be useful to the court, but it is unlikely to result in a reliable interpretation of patent claim scope unless considered in the context of intrinsic evidence.")

B. THE DISPUTED TERM

The '212 patent is titled "Locking arrangement for die cutter blanket." The '212 patent contains 20 claims, dependant and independent. Claim 13 of the patent recites:

> A blanket for mounting on a cylindrical anvil means rotatable about an axis, the anvil means having a channel in a surface thereof extending substantially parallel to said axis, said channel having opposing side walls, said blanket comprising:
>
> a flexible strip having first and second ends, said flexible strip for wrapping about the anvil means such that the ends are adjacent to each other;
>
> a locking member connected to the first end for insertion [*14] into said channel and for locking said first end to said anvil means;
>
> compressible means coupled to the locking member, said locking member and compressible means for compressive interference engagement with and between said channel side walls for locking the locking member and said first end of the strip to the anvil means in compressive interference friction engagement with the channel side walls; and
>
> interlock means for locking said ends together.

The parties disagree as to the meaning of the highlighted term. Specifically, they dispute the meaning of the term "coupled."

C. ANALYSIS

Plaintiffs assert that, in accordance with claim 13, the compressible means can be "coupled" to the locking member by either: (a) fabricating the compressible means and the locking member together from the same material so that they are permanently joined to each other, or (b) fabricating the compressible means and the locking member separately and thereafter joining them together. Defendants assert that only the latter definition is a correct construction of the claim. That is, Defendants argue that for the compressible means to be "coupled" to the locking member, they must be fabricated separately and then [*15] joined together.

HN5[] To determine the proper construction of the disputed term, the Court will consider the intrinsic evidence, the (1) claims/specification and (2) the prosecution history of the '212 patent, Vitronics, 90 F.3d at 1582 (citing Markman, 52 F.3d at 979), as well as (3) relevant extrinsic evidence, e.g., dictionaries and treatises. Phillips, 415 F.3d at 1320.

1. The Claims/Specification of the '212 Patent

As the Federal Circuit has explained, HN6[] the patent specification is "the single best guide to the meaning of a disputed term," and that claims should be "construed so as to be consistent with the specification." Accordingly, the Court will begin its analysis with the specification. Id. at 1315-16.

The term "coupled" is used in the patent's specification to mean "attached." Based on the usage of the term throughout the patent specification, this Court finds that the term need not refer to the attachment of two separately manufactured elements. The Court finds that "coupled," here, can refer to the attachment of two elements of a single structure. Three specific instances with the patent support such a construction.

First, the specification, in one instance, explains that "interlock [*16] means [are] coupled to the first and second ends for locking the ends together." See '212 Patent, at col. 2, lines 49-50 (emphasis added). The "interlock means" are the male and female interlocking portions depicted in many of the figures contained in the patent. See, e.g., Figs. 1, 2, 10, supra. In Figure 1, for example, the interlock means are the ends of the blanket themselves----i.e., the portion of Figure 1 that is cross-hatched with heavy stripes. [2] As the Figure illustrates, the interlock means are formed from the same structural element as the blanket. Indeed, the specification describes the female interlocking member as "a molded integral homogenous one piece depending member." Id. at col. 4, lines 35-38. Despite the fact that the female interlock portion is "integral" to the blanket portion, in describing the interlock portion, the specification states that the means are "coupled" to the first and second ends of the blanket. Accordingly, the specification uses the term "couple" to mean attached--even where the two "coupled" elements are not structurally distinct units. See Phillips, 415 F.3d at 1314 (observing that "the usage of a term in one claim can often illuminate the [*17] meaning of the same term in other claims").

Second, the term "coupled" is utilized in the same way in claim 17. In claim 17, the patent claims interlock means that are, again, integrally-molded to the ends of the blanket. The claim recites "interlock means coupled to the first and second ends for locking said ends together." Id. at col. 10, lines 46-47 (emphasis added). This confirms the Court's previous discussion regarding the term "coupled" in the '212 patent specification. The specification, then, uses the term couple to mean attached, and does not impart a requirement that the attached portions be structurally separate (i.e., manufactured separately and then attached to each other).

Third, the Court notes that the "interlock means" are depicted in the patent as part of the blanket structure (i.e., attached to the ends of the blanket). See '212 patent, at Fig. 10. If possible, the Court should construe the term "coupled" in a manner which would not exclude examples in the specification. See Verizon Servs. Corp. v. Vonage Holdings Corp., 503 F.3d 1295, 1305 (Fed. Cir. 2007) [*18] (construing terms in a manner that does not exclude examples in the specification); Oatey Co. v. IPS Corp., 514 F.3d 1271, 1277 (Fed. Cir. 2008) (same). Accordingly, the Figure supports the Court's construction.

In construing the term "coupled," the Court must utilize a definition that is broad enough to cover all uses of the term "coupled" within the patent. See Acromed Corp. v. Sofamor Danek Group, Inc., 253 F.3d 1371, 1381-82 (Fed. Cir.

[2] In Figure 1, the male and female portion of the interlocking means are labeled as (24) and (42), respectively.

2001) ("These three uses of the term require a meaning broad enough to apply to each of these [uses]."). The Court finds that the '212 patent's claims and specification indicate that the "compressible means" need not be structurally separate from the locking member in order for the two elements to be accurately described as "coupled."

2. The Prosecution History

Defendants assert that the prosecution history supports their assertion that the term "coupled" in claim 13 indicates that the "compressible means" and the locking member must be structurally distinct elements. The Court does not agree.

On September 27, 1996, claim 13 of the '212 patent (appearing in the patent application as claim 18) [3] read as follows:

> A blanket for mounting on a cylindrical [*19] anvil means rotatable about an axis, the anvil means having a channel in a surface thereof extending substantially parallel to said axis, said blanket comprising:
> a flexible strip having first and second ends, said flexible strip for wrapping about the anvil means such that the ends are adjacent;
> a locking member connected to the first end for insertion into said channel and for locking said first end to said anvil means;
>
> said [locking] member including compressible means for compressive interference engagement with said channel for locking the locking member and said first end of the strip to the anvil means in said compressive interference friction engagement with the anvil means; and > interlock means for locking said ends together.

The claim was amended in response to the examiner's rejection. The relevant portion of the amended claim, reads:

> compressible means coupled to the locking member, said locking member and compressible means for compressive interference engagement with and between said channel side walls for locking the locking member and said first end of the strip to the anvil means in compressive interference friction engagement with the channel side walls; . . .

Defendants [*20] argue that this modification shows that the compressible means must, post-modification, be separate structures which are then attached to each other. The Court cannot agree.

The examiner made the rejection under 35 U.S.C. § 112. This provision explains HN7[] that "[t]he specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention." This rejection, then, was for a lack of clarity in the claim language rejection under § 112 (in contrast to a rejection under § 103, where an applicant might modify the claim language to distinguish the invention from the prior art). [4] Accordingly, the Court will not find that the applicants were intentionally limiting their claim.

Moreover, HN8[] with respect to the prosecution history, the Court notes that an alleged statement or modification must strictly demonstrate the applicant's intent to limit the claim to have such effect: "[T]he alleged disavowing actions or statements … must be both clear and unmistakeable." Omega Eng'g v. Raytek Corp., 334 F.3d 1314, 1325-26 (Fed. Cir. 2003). A statement that is vague or ambiguous as to whether the applicant intended to limit his or her claim will not give rise to a disclaimer of claim scope. Id. at 1324-25. Here, the Court cannot find an unambiguous intention to limit the scope of the claim.

---

[3] The claim herein referred to as claim 13 was previously claim 18. Prior to several modifications, the patent contained additional claims that were subsequently removed.

[4] The examiner's focus during examination of claims for compliance with the requirement for definiteness of 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, is whether the claim meets the threshold requirements of clarity and precision. Manual of Patent Examining Procedure § 2173.02. [*21] In responding to an obvious rejection under 35 U.S.C. 103, an applicant would amend his claims and argue against the references that form the basis for the rejection. See, e.g., Unique Concepts, Inc. v. Brown, 939 F.2d 1558 (Fed. Cir. 1991). Frequently, this would consist of narrowing the claim to distinguish over the prior art. See, e.g., id.

The prosecution history of the '212 patent's does not indicate that the "compressible means" must be structurally separate from the locking member in order to be "coupled" to each other.

3. Lexicographical Sources

As to the extrinsic evidence, Defendant [*22] provides a number of citations to dictionaries and scientific treatises. Regarding the verb "couple," the sources generally indicate that the word means to connect, link, join, or associate two things. Here, the "locking member" and the "compressible means" can be considered connected, linked, joined or associated, regardless of whether they are two separate structures or are one physical structure (comprised of two elements). See Cannon Rubber Ltd. v. First Years, Inc., 163 Fed. Appx. 870, 877 (Fed. Cir. 2005) ("[T]he court's construction of those limitations requires that both be embodied by the same single structure, . . . [; t]ellingly, TFY does not cite any case law prohibiting a claim from reciting two limitations embodied by the same structural component"); Intellectual Property Development, Inc. v. UAColumbia Cablevision, 336 F.3d 1308, 1320 n. 9 (Fed. Cir. 2003) (noting that two limitations hypothetically can read on the same structure) (citing In re Kelley, 305 F.2d 909, 915-16, 49 C.C.P.A. 1359, 1962 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 681 (C.C.P.A. 1962)).

The extrinsic evidence is, at best, ambiguous as to whether the verb "couple" requires a connection of two structurally distinct elements.

* * * *

Having considered the intrinsic and [*23] extrinsic evidence, the Court finds that the '212 patent uses the term "coupled" to mean the attachment of two elements, that (1) are separately manufactured and then attached or (2) are both part of a single structural unit. [5] Accordingly, claim 13 of the '212 patent includes within its scope locking members and compressible means that are formed together at the same time from the same material, as well as locking members and compressible means that are formed separately and later mechanically/physically joined together

III. PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO DISMISS DEFENDANTS' ANTITRUST COUNTERCLAIMS FOR FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

As noted above, Plaintiffs brought this suit alleging infringement of the '212 patent. In response, Defendants [*24] asserted a number of counterclaims, including: (1) declaratory judgment of invalidity of the '212 patent based upon inequitable conduct before the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO"); (2) violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; and (3) violation of New Jersey Antitrust laws, N.J. Stat. §§ 56:9-1, et seq. [6]

Plaintiffs move to dismiss Defendants' Second and Third counterclaims (i.e., the antitrust counterclaims). Plaintiffs previously moved to dismiss counterclaims two and three for failure to state a claim. On June 22, 2009, the Court dismissed Defendants' counterclaims pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6). Defendants, however, were permitted to [5] As discussed above, the Court found the specification to be the most instructive source in defining the term. See Phillips, 415 F.3d at 1314-16 (explaining thatHN9[ ] terms within a patent "must be read in view of the specification [(i.e., the written description of the invention, its embodiments, and the drawings)], of which they are a part."). As such, the specification and the other claims in the patent were relied upon to arrive as the construction set forth above.

---

[6] Plaintiff moved to dismiss Defendants' first Counterclaim, and this motion was denied on June 22, 2009. Plaintiff requests reconsideration of this motion, which the Court will address in Section IV, infra.

replead. The Court will now consider Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Defendants' antitrust counterclaims in light of the Amended Complaint. [7]

A. Standard of Review

HN11[] In deciding a motion to dismiss pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6), all allegations in the complaint must be taken as true and viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. See Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 501, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (1975); Trump Hotels & Casino Resorts, Inc., v. Mirage Resorts Inc., 140 F.3d 478, 483 (3d Cir.1998). If, after viewing the allegations in the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, it appears beyond doubt that no relief could be granted "under any set of facts which could prove consistent with the allegations," a court shall dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984). In Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly the Supreme Court clarified the Rule 12(b)(6) standard. 550 U.S. 544, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). [*26] Specifically, the Court "retired" the language contained in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957), that "a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim, which would entitle him to relief." Twombly, at 1968 (citing Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46). Instead, the Supreme Court instructed that "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Id. at 1965. Ultimately, the question is whether the claimant can prove a set of facts consistent with his or her allegations that will entitle him or her to relief, not whether that person will ultimately prevail. Semerenko v. Cendant Corp., 223 F.3d 165, 173 (3d Cir. 2000).

HN12[] Although the 12(b)(6) pleading requirements are liberal, facts must be pleaded with reasonable particularity in order to permit an inference that an antitrust claim is cognizable. See Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526 n.17, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) (in an antitrust case, "a district court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in the pleading before allowing [*27] a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed"); Commonwealth of Pennsylvania ex. Rel. Zimmerman v. PepsiCo, Inc., 836 F.2d 173, 179 (3d Cir. 1988) ("'It is not … proper to assume that the [plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged.'") (quoting Associated General, 459 U.S. at 526 n.11).

B. Applicable Law

HN13[] A claim for monopolization/attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act requires allegations "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power" in the relevant market. Spectrum Sports v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). Accordingly, to determine whether a claim of monopolization or attempted monopolization exists, an inquiry "into the relevant product and geographic market" is required. Id. at 459; see Schuykill Energy Resources, 113 F.3d at 415; Ideal Dairy Farms, 90 F.3d at 750. An antitrust plaintiff, then, must plead "facts sufficient to demonstrate a viable relevant market." Syncsort Inc. v. Sequential Software, Inc., 50 F.Supp.2d 318, 327 (D.N.J. 1999) [*28] (citations omitted), so that the effects of the allegedly anticompetitive conduct can be measured. See, e.g., Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984); U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 994 (11th Cir. 1993). A plaintiff bears the burden of defining the relevant market, see Brokerage Concepts, 140 F.3d at 513; Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436; Pastore, 24 F.3d at 512; Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715,

[7] The Court will consider Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Defendants' federal and state antitrust claims together. HN10[] The New Jersey Antitrust Act was "patterned after the Sherman [*25] Act, and [courts] have previously acknowledged the significance of federal antitrust decisions in the interpretation of our State antitrust law." Monmouth Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 102 N.J. 485, 494, 509 A.2d 161 (1986); Cosmetic Gallery, Inc. v. Schoeneman Corp., 495 F.3d 46, 50-51 (3d Cir. 2007). Indeed, the Act itself requires that it be construed in harmony with federal antitrust laws. See N.J.S.A. § 56:9-18.

726 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 505 U.S. 1221, 112 S. Ct. 3034, 120 L. Ed. 2d 903 (1992), which is comprised of a relevant product market and a relevant geographic market. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). Both markets must be defined in the pleadings. Syncsort, 50 F.Supp.2d at 327

HN14[] Once a relevant market is properly established, a plaintiff must plead facts indicating that there is a dangerous probability that the defendants will achieve monopoly power in the relevant market. Spectrum, 506 U.S. at 456. To determine whether there is a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power, a court considers the Barr Labs factors: the size of the defendant's "market share" as well as "the strength of competition, probable development [*29] of the industry, the barriers to entry, the nature of the anticompetitive conduct, and the elasticity of consumer demand." Barr Labs., Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 978 F.2d 98, 112 (3d Cir. 1992).

HN15[] In addition to the elements of an antitrust claim discussed above, a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of "antitrust injury." Trans World Techs., Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82118, at *13-15 (D.N.J. November 1, 2007); Tunis Bros., 952 F.2d at 728 ("[T]he plaintiffs must have demonstrated some harm to the competitive landscape from Ford Motor's termination of the Tunis Brothers franchise.").

C. Analysis

Plaintiffs assert that Defendants' antitrust counterclaims must be dismissed for failure to state a claim. Specifically, Plaintiffs assert that Defendants failed to adequately plead (1) the definition of the relevant geographic market, (2) the basis for inferring that there is a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in said market, and (3) antitrust injury. Defendants respond that their Amended Complaint now satisfies the pleading requirement of 12(b)(6).

For the reasons stated below, Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Defendants' antitrust counterclaims is granted. [8]

1. Definition of a Relevant Geographic Market

HN16[] To prevail on its antitrust claim, Defendants must established that "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power" in the relevant market. Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456. Defendants have defined the relevant product market as covering "die cutter blankets for rotary die-cutting machines." Amended Counterclaim ("Am. Counterclaim") P 13.

Defendants assert that they have properly plead the relevant market, as they must. With respect to the relevant product market, they contend that "[t]here are no reasonably interchangeable products for the die cutter blankets, [and t]herefore, there is no cross-elasticity of demand as there is [*31] no other product that a purchaser can buy if the price of the rotary die cutter blanket increases." Id. With respect to the geographic market, Defendants explain that "[t]he geographic market is the United States, as that is the geographic scope of the alleged patent protection asserted by Plaintiffs Robud and Dicar." Id.

HN17[] To determine the bounds of a relevant geographic market, elasticity is the paramount consideration. In other words, the question is "how far consumers will go to obtain the product or its substitute in response to a given price increase and how likely it is that a price increase for the product in a particular location will induce outside suppliers to enter that market and increase supply-side competition in that location." Heerwagen v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, 435 F.3d 219, 227 (2d Cir. 2006). Defendants must plead the geographic market. Cf. Queen City Pizza,

[8] The [*30] Court has determined that Defendants failed to adequately plead (1) the definition of the relevant geographic market, and (2) the basis for inferring that there is a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in said market. See Sections III.C(1)-(2), infra. Accordingly, the Court need not assess Plaintiffs' argument regarding Defendants' alleged failure to plead antitrust injury.

Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997) (requiring dismissal where a plaintiff fails to plead cross elasticity of demand). Here, Defendant has failed to do so.

Defendants assert that the relevant geographic market is the United States. They argue that the market is restricted to the U.S. [*32] because that is the area wherein Plaintiffs can assert patent protection over their die cutter blanket product. This market definition focuses impermissibly on the specific geographic market in which Plaintiffs (i.e., manufactures) conduct their business [9] --as opposed to the geographic market that consumers would be willing to access to purchase die cutter blankets. See Borough of Lansdale v. Philadelphia Elec. Co., 692 F.2d 307, 311-13 (3d Cir. 1982) (rejecting plaintiff's argument that, as a matter of law, the geographic market was defendant utility's service area to the exclusion of nearby utility companies); Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., Inc., 952 F.2d 715, 726 (3d Cir. 1991) ("Consequently, the geographic market is not comprised of the region in which the seller attempts to sell its product, but rather is comprised of the area where his customers would look to buy such a product."). Defendants have not focused on the elasticity of demand (i.e., consumer behavior), and therefore have not adequately plead a geographic market.

Moreover, the Court is unaware of any circumstances that limit consumers to the U.S. market. As both parties acknowledge, "numerous other entities compete in the international market." Am. Counterclaim P 25; see Brief in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss ("Pl. Br.") at 10. HN18[] Where, as here, there is no indication that a consumer would be unable to purchase a product abroad, the Court will not arbitrarily limit the geographical market to the U.S. See *E&E Co., Ltd. v. Kam Hing Enterprises, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65323, 8 (N.D. Cal. August 25, 2008) (dismissing a plaintiff's antitrust claims because the "plaintiff fail[ed] to indicate why similar bed coverings originating from other countries would not be reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes"). Defendants have asserted that there are barriers to entry into the U.S. market. However, the Court has not been apprised of any facts indicating that it would be cost-prohibitive [*34] to have goods sold/shipped to the U.S. In fact, it appears that a foreign distributor (Max Dura) has in fact established a small presence in the U.S. market. [10] In any case,HN19[] a mere assertion that market access is restricted, without more, is insufficient to withstanding a motion to dismiss. See *St. Clair v. Citizens Fin. Group, 340 Fed. Appx. 62, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 16465, 8-9 (3d Cir. July 23, 2009) (finding that plaintiff's allegation that the defendants "effectively barricaded entry into the market," was too conclusory to be sufficient under Twombly).

For the reasons stated, the Court cannot find that Defendants' pleadings sufficiently delineate [*35] the geographic market. See *Bansavich v. McLane Co., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89071, at 7 (D. Conn. Oct. 31, 2008) ("Thus, HN20[] dismissal is appropriate . . . [where] a plaintiff has failed to provide a plausible explanation as to why a market should be limited in a particular way."); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. at 324; Syncsort, 50 F.Supp.2d at 327. As such, Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Defendants' Sherman Act counterclaim must be dismissed for failure to state a claim.

2. A Dangerous Probability of Achieving Monopoly Power in the Relevant Market

Even if the Court found that the relevant geographical market for die cutter blankets is the United States, as Defendants' contend, Defendants must also plead facts suggesting that there is a dangerous probability that Plaintiffs will achieve monopoly power in said market. [11] HN21[] To assess whether such a probability exists, a

---

[9] For example, Defendants assert that their "designation of the relevant geographic market as the United States" is proper because "the unfair actions [*33] taken by Dicar, and the impact of those actions on competitors, stem from Dicar's unlawful and bad-faith assertion of two United States Patents." See Defendants' Brief in Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss ("Def. Opp."), at 9.

[10] The fact that Max Dura has not gained a significant share of the market does not alone demonstrate that there are barriers to entry--the fact that it has a U.S. presence indicates the opposite. See *Korkala v. Allpro Imaging, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70727, 16-17 (D.N.J. August 12, 2009) (unpublished) ("Korkala has not set forth facts sufficient to demonstrate that the Scanx System is unique. In fact, Korkala has inconsistently provided that Logos Imaging, LLC, FUJI NDT…are all companies that manufacture products in 'competition' with the Scanx System.") court considers the Barr Labs factors: (1) the size of the defendants' market share (2) the strength of competition, (3) probable development of the industry, (4) the barriers to entry, (5) the nature of the anticompetitive conduct, and (6) the elasticity of consumer demand. See 978 F.2d at 112.

Defendants plead facts as to the first factor. They emphasize, significantly, that Plaintiffs' control a 70% share of the relevant market. Beyond this allegation, however, Defendants' pleadings are conclusory. As this Court explained in its previous dismissal of Defendants' antitrust counterclaims, market share alone does not establish a threat of monopoly.

With respect to the second and third factors----strength of competition and probable development of the market--Defendants assert that "Dicar has substantial market power in the relevant market, including the power to exclude competitors, control pricing, and limit output." Am. Counterclaim P 15. [12] They contend that "[t]he relevant [U.S.] market is highly concentrated[; as u]pon information [*37] and belief, three companies--Dicar, Inc., Day Incorporated, and Custom Urethane Elastomers--account for more than 90% of the commerce in the relevant market, while Stafford accounts for less than 10% of the commerce in the relevant market." Id. P 17. [13] Day, Inc. and Custom Urethane Elastomers each control between 15% and 20% of the U.S. market for rotary die-cutter blankets. Id. P 21. These facts alone, however, do not indicate that there is a lack of competition in the U.S. market. Moreover, these market share figures do not account for the numerous other entities that compete in the international market, such as Astan and Max Dura. Id. P 25. Although market share is significant, as the Third Circuit explained, HN23[] a plaintiff must show "that there was [some] significant reduction in the number of manufacturers in the market during the relevant time period because of [plaintiffs'] allegedly anti-competitive conduct," for instance, by showing that a competitor was forced out of the market or that prices fluctuated. See Barr Labs., 978 F.2d at 114; U.S. v. Empire Gas Corp., 537 F.2d 296, 305 (8th Cir. 1976) (finding no dangerous probability of success in absence of evidence that competitors [*38] decided not to enter or leave market because of defendant's actions). [14]

With respect to barriers to market entry, the fourth Bars Labs factor, as noted above, Defendants have not made any specific assertions that could suffice to demonstrate that there are barriers to entry into the U.S. market. The Court is particularly reluctant to accept the pleading as sufficient where, as here, it appears that a foreign [*39] distributor (Max Dura) has in fact established a small presence in the U.S. market. As such, the Court finds that Defendants' assertions are not enough to show that Plaintiffs "effectively barricaded entry into the market." See *St. Clair v. Citizens Fin. Group, 340 Fed. Appx. 62, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 16465, 8-9 (3d Cir. July 23, 2009).

As to the fifth factor, the nature of the anticompetitive conduct, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs are asserting their patent rights in bad faith. The only assertion regarding such conduct is that Robud and Dicar have an exclusive license arrangement with each other, and that there are previous and present court actions regarding Robud's patents. This Court previously determined that these statements were insufficient to plead the "barrier to entry" Barr Lab factor. See *Dicar, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52245, at 22-23 (citing Ethyl Gas Corp. v. U.S., 309 U.S. 436, 456, 60 S. Ct. 618, 84 L. Ed. 852, 1940 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 758 (1940)).

---

[11] HN22[] To prevail on its antitrust [*36] claim, Defendants must established that "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power" in the relevant market. Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456; see *Dicar, Inc. v. Stafford Corrugated Prods., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52245, at 21-22 (D.N.J. June 22, 2009). The dispute, here, is with respect to the third element. See id.

[12] Plaintiffs assert that "Dicar's claimed exclusive licenses under Robud's patents enhance Dicar's market power while also raising barriers to entry in the relevant market." Id. P 16.

[13] Robud and Dicar acknowledge that Dicar controls more than 50% of the market for die-cutter blankets. Id. P 19.

[14] The only allegation indicating that any market player was restricted or removed from the market is Defendants' contention that "[upon] information and belief, when Alan Kirkpatrick, Jr. developed a diecutter blanket to compete with Dicar, Dicar initiated a lawsuit against Mr. Kirkpatrick[; and o]n information and belief, although Mr. Kirkpatrick prevailed in that lawsuit, the resulting litigation expenses made it impossible for him to continue to develop and market his blanket." Id. P 24.

Lastly, as to the elasticity of consumer demand, Defendants assert that "there is practically no elasticity of consumer demand, as there is no substitute for the diecutter blankets." This allegation is conclusory, and in any case, the pleadings themselves indicate that there are other sources for [*40] the die cutter blankets. See Am. Counterclaim P 12 (noting that Day, Inc. and Custom Urethane Elastomers each control between 15% and 20% of the U.S. market for rotary die-cutter blankets.).

In summary, Defendants have not adequately alleged facts suggesting that there is a dangerous probability that Plaintiffs will achieve a monopoly. Therefore, Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Defendants' antitrust counterclaims is granted.

IV. PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OF THIS COURT'S DISMISSAL OF THEIR MOTION TO DISMISS DEFENDANTS' SECOND AND THIRD AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES AND FIRST COUNTERCLAIM

Plaintiffs previously moved to dismiss Defendants' First Counterclaim and Second and Third Affirmative Defenses (all based upon inequitable conduct), for failure to state a claim. This motion was denied on June 22, 2009. See *Dicar, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52245, at 21-22, and Plaintiff requests reconsideration of this decision.

A. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN24[] Motions for reconsideration are governed by L. Civ. R. 7.1(i). See U.S. v. Compaction Sys. Corp., 88 F. Supp. 2d 339, 345 (D.N.J. 1999). A motion pursuant to Local Rule 7.1(i) may be granted if (1) an intervening change in the controlling law has occurred; (2) [*41] evidence not previously available has become available; or (3) it is necessary to correct a clear error of law or prevent manifest injustice. Database Am., Inc. v. Bellsouth Adver. & Pub. Corp., 825 F. Supp. 1216, 1220 (D.N.J. 1993). Such relief is "an extraordinary remedy" that is to be granted "very sparingly." See NL Indus. Inc. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co., 935 F. Supp. 513, 516 (D.N.J. 1996).

B. APPLICABLE LAW

HN25[] To state a claim of inequitable conduct, a party must allege that the patent applicant: (1) made an affirmative misrepresentation of material fact, failed to disclose material information, or submitted false information and (2) intended to deceive the PTO. Cargill, Inc. v. Canbra Foods, Ltd., 476 F.3d 1359, 1363 (Fed. Cir. 2007). Rule 9(b) requires that a pleading set forth: (1) who made the misrepresentation to whom and the general content of the misrepresentation and (2) either the date, place, or time of the misrepresentation or other measure of substantiation of the allegations. Lum v. Bank of America, 361 F.3d 217, 223-24 (3d Cir. 2004).

C. ANALYSIS

Defendants assert that '212 patent is void or unenforceable by reason of Robud's inequitable conduct before the PTO. Defendants [*42] allegations consist of the following:

> Robud, through its attorneys, employees, and agents, intentionally misrepresented the invention to the examiner in that on April 25, 1997, Robud amended claim 18 of the application to call for a separate locking member and compressible means for its invention. Robud's amendment was made in response to the examiner's April 15, 1997 rejection of that claim because the claim previously called for a locking member "including" a compressible means. After Robud amended the claim to call for a separate locking member and compressible means, the examiner allowed the claim. Now, after the patent has issued, Robud . . . states that the locking member and compressible means are not necessarily separate.

Am. Complaint, at 5 (emphasis added). Defendants, then, assert that statements made in connection with Plaintiffs' claim construction argument illustrate that Robud (the patent applicant) made false statements to the PTO.

Specifically, they argue that Robud initially indicated to the examiner that the "locking member" and "compressible means" were separate, and now are asserting that the two components need not be separate.

The Court must reject Defendants' contentions [*43] for two reasons. First, the Court disagrees with Defendants' characterization of the applicants' statements before the PTO. As discussed above, the applicants did not assert that the "locking member" and "compressible means" must be separate components----just that they could be. See Section II, supra (finding that the "locking member" and "compressible means" could be either separate elements that are part of the same structure or two separate structures attached after individual manufacture). [15] Accordingly, the positions taken before the PTO and this Court are not necessarily inconsistent.

Second, and more importantly, even if the Court were to find that the two statements are inconsistent, Defendants' claim must still fail. Defendants have not alleged that the patent applicant breached its duty of candor to the PTO "by failing to disclose material information, or submitting false material information." Kingsdown Medical Consultants, Ltd. v. Hollister, Inc., 863 F.2d 867, 872 (Fed. Cir. 1988). Instead, the only allegation of misconduct is premised entirely on attorney arguments----i.e., arguments regarding the meaning of proposed patent claims during prosecution, and arguments relating to claim construction after the patent was granted. Such statements, even if inconsistent, do not constitute inequitable conduct, as it is "clear that an applicant is free to advocate its interpretation of its claims and the teachings of prior art." Innogenetics N.V. v. Abbott Laboratories, 512 F.3d 1363, 1379 (Fed. Cir. 2008); see Rothman v. Target Corp., 556 F.3d 1310, 1329 (Fed. Cir. 2009).

For [*45] the reasons discussed, Plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration is granted.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Counts Two and Three of Defendants' Amended Counterclaims is granted; Plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration is granted; and the disputed term of claim 13 is construed as set forth above.

/S/ Dennis M. Cavanaugh

Dennis M. Cavanaugh, U.S.D.J.

Date: March 12, 2010

End of Document

[15] The Court will not repeat the analysis above, however, to summarize: the patent applicants initially claimed a locking member wherein "said [locking] member includ[ed] compressible means for compressive interference engagement with said channel." After rejection for lack of clarity, the applicants claimed "compressible means coupled to the locking member." Defendants assert that this was a statement by the applicants that the locking member/compressible means were initially one unit, and then the applicant modified their claims to indicate that the two elements are separate structural units. [*44] The Court disagreed and determined that under these circumstances, the locking member and compressible means do not have to be two structurally distinct units to be "coupled" to each other. See Section II, supra

Kearse v. Kaplan, Inc.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

March 12, 2010, Decided; March 12, 2010, Filed

09 Civ. 4176 (LAK)

Reporter

692 F. Supp. 2d 398 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23201 ; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,948

COREY KEARSE, Plaintiff v. KAPLAN, INC., Defendant.

Core Terms

preparation, fraudulent concealment, four year, courses, allegations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN1[] Sherman Act, Defenses

The statute of limitations governing private damage actions under the federal antitrust laws is four years. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(b). A person injured by an antitrust violation therefore must sue within four years after the date of the injury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN2[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fraudulent concealment claims are averments of fraud and must be alleged with the particularity required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Specifically, plaintiff does not get the benefit of a fraudulent concealment toll absent particularized allegations that: (1) a defendant concealed the challenged conduct; (2) plaintiff was ignorant of the conduct until less than four years prior to the commencement of this action; and (3) plaintiff exercised due diligence in discovering the challenged conduct. Where fraudulent concealment is established, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the plaintiff knew, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, of the existence of his cause of action.

Counsel: [1] For Plaintiff: Gary B. Friedman, Tracey Kitzman, FRIEDMAN LAW GROUP LLP; Richard Rouco, Sara C. Hacker, Joe R. Whatley, WHATLEY DRAKE & KALLAS, LLC.

For Defendant: Gordon Schnell, David A. Scupp, CONSTANTINE CANNON LLP.

Judges: Lewis A. Kaplan, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Lewis A. Kaplan

Opinion

[*399] MEMORANDUM OPINION

LEWIS A. KAPLAN, District Judge.

Plaintiff took a Law School Aptitude Test ("LSAT") preparation course offered by defendant Kaplan, Inc. ("Kaplan"), the well known test preparation company, in August 2003. He brought this action in 2009. He here claims that the price he paid for the LSAT prep course six years before was greater than otherwise would have been the case as a result of an alleged 1996 market allocation agreement between Kaplan and BAR/BRI, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, pursuant to which BAR/BRI is said to have agreed to withdraw from the LSAT prep course business. Kaplan moves to dismiss the complaint on the grounds, among others, that it is barred by the statute of limitations and by a release in a prior class action settlement.

Facts

As this is a motion to dismiss, the Court assumes the truth of the well pleaded factual allegations of the complaint and, in certain [2] instances specifically noted below, facts of which it takes judicial notice and materials effectively incorporated in the complaint by reference.

The Alleged Antitrust Violation

In or about 1995, West Publishing Corporation ("West"), through a division or subsidiary called West Bar, competed with the well known BAR/BRI in offering bar review courses to candidates for admission to the bar. [1] BAR/BRI in addition offered other examination preparation courses, including courses to prepare aspiring law students for the LSAT. [2]

In 1996, Thomson Corporation, now Thomson Retuers, acquired West, decided to sell West Bar and negotiated a letter of intent to sell West Bar's assets to defendant Kaplan. [3] At that point, BAR/BRI allegedly learned of the impending sale of West Bar and contacted Kaplan. This allegedly resulted in an agreement pursuant [*400] to which BAR/BRI agreed to cease offering LSAT preparation courses. Kaplan, for its part, allegedly agreed to withdraw from its impending acquisition of West Bar and to keep out of the bar examination preparation course business. [4] According to plaintiff, this eliminated BAR/BRI as a competitor in and allowed Kaplan to dominate the

[1] Cpt P 2.

[2] Id.

[3] Id. P 3.

[4] Id. P 4.

LSAT preparation [3] business while cementing BAR/BRI's alleged dominance over the bar examination preparation business. [5]

Plaintiff's Alleged Grievance

Plaintiff claims that he purchased an LSAT preparation course from Kaplan during the time period covered by the complaint and that the price he paid was negatively affected by the lack of competition from BAR/BRI. [6] While the complaint does not disclose the date of his purchase, the Court takes judicial notice of the fact that it took place on August 12, 2003. [7]

The Rodriguez Action

On April 29, 2005, Ryan Rodriguez sued defendant, BAR/BRI and West under the antitrust laws in the Central District of California on behalf of himself and other purchasers of BAR/BRI bar review courses. The complaint and amended complaint in that action, in very similar language, alleged precisely the market division scheme between BAR/BRI and Kaplan that is alleged in this complaint -- the alleged agreement to eliminate Kaplan as a competitor [4] in the bar examination course business and to eliminate BAR/BRI as a competitor in the LSAT examination course business. [8]

In 2006, the Rodriguez court certified a plaintiff class comprised of all persons who had purchased a bar review course from BAR/BRI. [9] In February 2007, the parties agreed upon a settlement of Rodriguez. [10] Under its terms, West and Kaplan agreed to pay the plaintiff class $ 49 million and terminate their co-marketing relationship. [11] In return, plaintiffs released West and Kaplan from all claims "that have been asserted or could have been asserted . . . for any conduct alleged in the [Rodriguez] complaint." [12] The district court approved the settlement on April 23, 2009, and the Ninth Circuit subsequently affirmed. [13]

Discussion

HN1[] The statute of limitations governing private damage actions under the federal antitrust laws is four years. [14] A person [5] injured by an antitrust violation therefore must sue within four years after the date of the injury. [15]

---

[5] Id. PP 5-6.

[6] See id. PP 10, 53.

[7] Defendant furnished a document so indicating and requested that the Court judicially notice that fact. Def. Mem. 6 n.6. Plaintiff neither disputed the date nor objected to its judicial notice.

[8] Scupp Decl. Ex. C (Rodriguez complaint) PP 4, 34-35, 58-63; Ex. D (Rodriguez amended complaint) PP 4, 37-38, 64-69.

[9] Id. Ex. F, at 3.

[10] Id. at 4; Ex. G (settlement agreement).

[11] Id. Ex. F, at 7-8; Ex. G PP 27-28.

[12] Id. Ex. F, at 7-8; Ex. G P 56 (emphasis added).

[13] Rodriguez v. West Publ'g Corp., 563 F.3d 948 (9th Cir. 2009).

[14] 15 U.S.C. § 15(b).

Here, plaintiff allegedly was injured on August 12, 2003, the date of his Kaplan LSAT purchase for which he claims to [*401] have paid an inflated price. [16] He therefore had four years from that date within which to bring suit. His April 28, 2009 filing was one year and eight months too late.

Plaintiff seeks to avoid the bar of the statute by alleging fraudulent concealment which, if sufficiently alleged, might toll the running of the four year period. HN2[] Fraudulent concealment claims, however, are averments of fraud and must be alleged with the particularity required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). [17] Specifically, plaintiff does not get the benefit of a fraudulent concealment toll absent particularized allegations that (1) Kaplan concealed the challenged conduct, (2) plaintiff was ignorant of the conduct until less than four years prior to the commencement of this action, and (3) plaintiff exercised due diligence in discovering the challenged conduct. "Where fraudulent [6] concealment is established, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the plaintiff knew, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, of the existence of his cause of action." [18]

The fraudulent concealment allegations in this complaint are limited to the following:

> "37. Throughout the relevant time, the Defendant and its co-conspirators have affirmatively and wrongfully concealed their unlawful conduct from Plaintiff and the Class.
>
> "38. Plaintiff and members of the class had no actual or constructive knowledge until April 29, 2005 of the illegal contract, combination or conspiracy that is the subject of this Complaint or of any facts that might have led to the discovery thereof in the exercise of reasonable diligence.
>
> "39. Because Defendant's conspiracy was actively [7] concealed and kept secret by Defendant and its co-conspirators, Plaintiff and Class members were unaware of Defendant's unlawful conduct that is the subject of this complaint and did not know that they were paying artificially high prices for LSAT test preparation services."

It is apparent almost at inspection that these allegations do not satisfy Rule 9(b).

Paragraph 37 is entirely conclusory. Moreover, it is in considerable tension with paragraph 30 of the complaint, which alleges that Kaplan and BAR/BRI "publicly announced" their joint marketing relationship within weeks of their accession to the Co-Marketing Agreement, with Kaplan's open promotion of BAR/BRI's bar review courses, and with BAR/BRI's conspicuous absence from the LSAT prep course business.

Paragraphs 38 and 39 likewise are entirely conclusory. And they too are in tension with the known facts. The Rodriguez action was filed on April 29, 2005. Common sense suggests that the complaint in that action was not born, fully grown and fully armed, from the brow of Zeus in an instant on that day. Rather, its filing on April 29, 2005 approaches conclusive proof that the plaintiffs in that case and their attorneys knew of the alleged [8] market division agreement that is the common root of Rodriguez and this case at least as early as April 27, 2005 and thus more than four years before the filing of [*402] this action on April 28, 2009. And if the Rodriguez plaintiffs and counsel knew of it by April 27, 2005, plaintiff and his counsel in this case quite likely also could have known of it. At any rate, their burden under Rule 9(b) would seem to include a showing that they could not have known it by then had they exercise due diligence.

---

[15] See e.g., Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Res., Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338-39, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971).

[16] See Cpt P 53.

[17] See e.g., Four Seasons Solar Prods. Corp. v. Southwall Techs., Inc., 100 Fed. Appx. 12 (2d Cir. 2004); Caputo v. Pfizer, Inc., 267 F.3d 181, 191 (2d Cir. 2001); Breiner v. Stone, No. 96-9091, 122 F.3d 1055 (table), [published in full-text format at *1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 19236, 1997 WL 416942, at 1 (2d Cir. July 25, 1997); Armstrong v. McAlpin, 699 F.2d 79, 88-90 (2d Cir. 1983).

[18] ABA SECTION OF ANTITRUST LAW, ANTITRUST LAW DEVELOPMENTS 866 (6th ed. 2007).

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint on the ground that it is barred by the statute of limitations is granted. As I cannot exclude the possibility that plaintiff could sufficiently allege fraudulent concealment, the dismissal is without prejudice to the filing, on or before March 25, 2010, of an amended complaint amending only the fraudulent concealment allegations.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: March 12, 2010

/s/ Lewis A. Kaplan

Lewis A. Kaplan

United States District Judge

Korea Kumho Petrochemical Co. v. Flexsys Am. LP

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

February 10, 2010, Argued and Submitted, San Francisco, California; March 15, 2010, Filed

No. 09-15003

Reporter

370 Fed. Appx. 875 *; 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5347 ; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,930

KOREA KUMHO PETROCHEMICAL CO., LTD., Plaintiff - Appellant, v. FLEXSYS AMERICA LP; FLEXSYS N.V., Defendants - Appellees.

Notice: PLEASE REFER TO FEDERAL RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE RULE 32.1 GOVERNING THE CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. D.C. No. 3:07-cv-01057-MMC. Maxine M. Chesney, Senior District Judge, Presiding.

Korea Kumho Petrochemical v. Flexsys Am. LP, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68559 (N.D. Cal., Mar. 11, 2008)

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

district court, alleges, amend, anti trust law, leave to amend, manufacturers, competitors, threats, seller, third amended complaint, patent infringement, illegal conspiracy, high prices, horizontal, customers, effective, chemical, commerce, buyers, futile, volume, costs, fails

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN1[] Sherman Act, Claims

Injury to competition is a requisite of claims under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. It is competition, not competitors, which the Act protects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN2[] Sherman Act, Claims

To assess injury to competition, courts should take into account the relative strength of the parties, the proportionate volume of commerce involved in relation to the total volume of commerce in the relevant market area, and the probable immediate and future effects which pre-emption of that share of the market might have on effective competition therein.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN3[] Sherman Act, Claims

Allegations of facts that could just as easily suggest rational, legal business behavior by the defendants as they could suggest an illegal conspiracy are insufficient to plead a violation of the antitrust laws.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN4[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Although district courts should freely give leave to amend when justice so requires, where amendment is futile, leave may be denied. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2). When a district court has already granted a plaintiff leave to amend, its discretion in deciding subsequent motions to amend is particularly broad.

Counsel: For KOREA KUMHO PETROCHEMICAL CO., LTD., Plaintiff - Appellant: William H. Forman, Esquire, Attorney, Robert G. Badal, Esquire, Attorney, Bethany Marvin Stevens, Attorney, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale & Dorr LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For FLEXSYS AMERICA LP, FLEXSYS N.V., Defendants - Appellees: D. Jarrett Arp, Esquire, Adam Joseph DiVincenzo, GIBSON DUNN & CRUTCHER, LLP, Washington, DC; Andrew Edelstein, Daniel Glen Swanson, Attorney, GIBSON DUNN & CRUTCHER, LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Ann Stewart Robinson, Counsel, Office of the Chief Counsel for Employment, United States Senate, Washington, DC.

Judges: Before: HALL, THOMPSON and McKEOWN, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

[876] MEMORANDUM []

Plaintiff-appellant Korea Kumho Petrochemical Co., Ltd. ("KKPC"), a seller of the rubber chemical 6PPD, appeals the dismissal of its third amended complaint alleging that the defendants (collectively, "Flexsys") [2] violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and California antitrust law, California Business and Professions Code § 16700 et seq. KKPC specifically alleges that Flexsys, a competing seller of 6PPD, coerced two potential buyers of 6PPD into boycotting KKPC and publicly threatened a patent infringement lawsuit to further intimidate customers.

We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and we AFFIRM.

I. Injury to Competition

[*] This disposition is not appropriate for publication and is not precedent except as provided by 9th Cir. R. 36-3.

HN1[] Injury to competition is a requisite of claims under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988), and of KKPC's claims under California antitrust law, County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cmty. [*877] Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1160 (9th Cir. 2001) (explaining that the analysis under state law "mirrors the analysis under federal law"). "It is competition, not competitors, which the Act protects." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 344, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962).

KKPC argues that it adequately alleged an injury to competition by identifying two potential customers that allegedly succumbed to Flexsys's threats. In support of this argument, KKPC relies on Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959).

In Klor's, several manufacturers [3] and distributors conspired among themselves and with a major retailer, Broadway-Hale, either not to sell to Klor's or to sell to it only at discriminatory prices and highly unfavorable terms. Id. at 208-09. Klor's is distinguishable in that it alleges a widespread vertical and horizontal combination. KKPC fails to allege any such widespread combination and specifically fails to allege the existence of a horizontal agreement among competitors.

In its operative complaint, KKPC alleges that: (1) the market of 6PPD purchasers consists of only a handful of major tire manufacturers; (2) Flexsys dominates that market with a 48-55% share; and (3) KKPC itself suffered injury. KKPC also alleges that certain costs (e.g., tariffs and costs of constructing chemical plants) limit entry into the market. KKPC does not, however, plausibly allege that it is a low price competitor or that it provides a superior product. Compare Pinhas v. Summit Health, Ltd., 894 F.2d 1024, 1032 (9th Cir. 1989) ("[If Pinhas provides cheaper services], the preclusion of Pinhas from practicing could conceivably injure competition by allowing other similar doctors to charge higher prices for their services.").

Nor are KKPC's [4] additional allegations sufficient to allege an injury to competition. KKPC does not allege that it lacks market strength relative to Flexsys, nor that a substantial portion of the 6PPD market was foreclosed by Flexsys's threats. KKPC does not allege any injury to other sellers of 6PPD or to the 6PPD market. See Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 329, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961) (explaining that, HN2[] to assess injury to competition, courts should take into account "the relative strength of the parties, the proportionate volume of commerce involved in relation to the total volume of commerce in the relevant market area, and the probable immediate and future effects which pre-emption of that share of the market might have on effective competition therein"). Furthermore, KKPC does not allege that 6PPD buyers suffer from higher prices or the lack of access to a superior product. Thus, the decisions of two manufacturers to buy from Flexsys do not suggest an illegal conspiracy. See Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1049 (9th Cir. 2008) (HN3[] "Allegations of facts that could just as easily suggest rational, legal business behavior by the defendants as they could suggest an illegal conspiracy [5] are insufficient to plead a violation of the antitrust laws."). Because KKPC has failed to allege an injury to competition, we affirm the district court's dismissal of the complaint on this ground. [1]

II. Motion to Supplement

KKPC challenges the district court's denial of KKPC's motion to supplement its complaint with allegations that Flexsys subsequently initiated sham patent infringement litigation and an improper [*878] associated publicity campaign. We disagree. The district court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the proposed supplemental allegations would address only the nature of the threats directed at KKPC, not an injury to competition, which is needed to save the complaint.

III. Leave to Amend

---

[1] Because we affirm the district court's dismissal on this ground, we need not and do not consider Flexsys's contention that alternate grounds support dismissal.

HN4[] Although district courts should "freely give leave [to amend] when justice so requires," where amendment is futile, leave may be denied. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2); Zucco Partners, LLC v. Digimarc Corp., 552 F.3d 981, 1007 (9th Cir. 2009). See also Chodos v. West Publ'g Co., 292 F.3d 992, 1003 (9th Cir. 2002) ("[W]hen a district [6] court has already granted a plaintiff leave to amend, its discretion in deciding subsequent motions to amend is particularly broad." (quotation marks omitted)).

The district court denied leave to amend on the ground of futility. The district court criticized KKPC for its inability to allege an injury to competition after two dismissals and five iterations of amendment, despite clear case law and a previous warning that the district court would not be inclined to permit further amendment. Moreover, both in the district court and in this court, KKPC has failed to assert how it might remedy the complaint. We conclude that the district court acted within its discretion in denying KKPC an additional opportunity to amend the complaint.

CONCLUSION

We AFFIRM the district court's dismissal of KKPC's third amended complaint. We also AFFIRM the district court's denials of KKPC's motions to supplement and to amend.

AFFIRMED.

Microsoft Corp. v. Franchise Tax Bd.

Superior Court of California, County of San Francisco

March 15, 2010, Decided; March 15, 2010, Filed

CASE NO.: CGC-08-471260

Reporter

2010 Cal. Super. LEXIS 2977 *

MICROSOFT CORPORATION, Plaintiff, Vs. FRANCHISE TAX BOARD, Defendant.

Subsequent History: Reversed by, Remanded by, Petition denied by Microsoft Corp. v. Franchise Tax Bd., 212 Cal. App. 4th 78, 150 Cal. Rptr. 3d 770, 2012 Cal. App. LEXIS 1284 (Cal. App. 1st Dist., Dec. 18, 2012)

Core Terms

disqualified, antitrust, entertain, disqualification, impartial, anti trust law

Judges: [*1] WILLIAM H. FOLLETT, J.

Opinion by: WILLIAM H. FOLLETT

Opinion

RULING ON MOTION TO DISQUALIFY JUDGE; ORDER (CCP § 170.3(c)(2))

Plaintiff's motion to disqualify the trial judge presents a difficult question involving the tension in discerning the line between the duty of a judge to hear all cases assigned to him unless disqualified and the disqualification of the judge whenever "a person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial." Compare Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 170 with Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1 subd. (a)(6)(A)(iii.

FACTUAL BASIS

The objective, underlying facts in this case are not in dispute, having been admitted in the Verified Answer. Judge Karnow of the Superior Court of California, County of San Francisco, was assigned on January 19, 2010, by the Master Calendar Judge to preside at the trial of the above-entitled matter. The case involves Microsoft Corporation's claim to recover corporate taxes paid in fiscal years 1995 and 1996. In off-the-record discussions and later on the record shortly after the case was assigned for trial, Judge Karnow disclosed that he briefly owned Microsoft stock in late 2009 but had disposed of it in December 200.

He did not disclose at that time that he had served as one of multiple attorneys representing [*2] Sun Microsystems, Inc. against Microsoft more than eight years ago in multidistrict litigation in federal court. Plaintiff in that case claimed Microsoft violated antitrust laws. Judge Karnow states he was one of "many dozens" of lawyers from several law firms representing Sun Microsystems, Inc. Judge Karnow states his responsibility in the litigation dealt with "marketing and technical design" of the Internet Explorer web browse.

The antitrust litigation was "long and contentious," but settled before trial. According to a press release issued by Judge Karnow's former law firm when he was appointed to the bench, he was a member of the trial team in this "landmark antitrust litigation which resulted in one of the largest antitrust recoveries in history." The press release mentioned no other specific case Judge Karnow handled in his tenure with the fir.

When the instant case was called for trial on January 21, 2010, two days after the initial meeting with Judge Karnow, Microsoft's counsel moved for the Judge to recuse himself based upon his representation of Microsoft's adversary in the antitrust litigation and due to public comments that Judge Karnow made before taking the bench opining [*3] that Microsoft violated antitrust law.

After review of the relevant statutes, Judge Karnow denied Microsoft's request to disqualify himself. Both the Judge and Microsoft's counsel agreed, after discussion, that a peremptory challenge under California Code of Civil Procedure section 170.6 would not then have been timel.

Judge Karnow, before taking the bench, authored a number of published articles and a book of essays on computer technology and the law. In analyzing whether he was disqualified, the Judge stated that he had expressed views before taking the bench five years ago that Microsoft had "done things in the past that indicated antitrust intent - that is, intent to monopolize the market or continue a monopoly or to have an illegal monopoly of a market." He stated that his writings with regard to Microsoft dealt with antitrust law.

> "I think a person who read my materials would probably believe that I felt that… up to a couple of years ago when I was in practice, that Microsoft has intentionally done actions which are in violation of federal and state antitrust law.

Reporter's Transcript of Proceedings of January 21, 2010, pp. 6-7. Microsoft herein also complains that before becoming a judge that he was quoted in an Associated Press [*4] report as stating that Microsoft was "guilty" of antitrust allegations investigated by the U.S. Justice Departmen.

Judge Karnow states in his Verified Answer to the charge that his views were shared by many others at the time (pp. 2-4) but that he has no views today as to whether Microsoft is in compliance with antitrust or any other laws. (Verified Answer ¶ 7) In his analysis Judge Karnow notes that the issues in the case at bar, having to do with refund of corporate taxes previously paid to the state, are not pertinent to whether Microsoft violated antitrust laws. Judge Karnow specifically avers that he is not biased against Microsoft and denies that Microsoft cannot receive a fair trial before hi.

ANALYSIS

As stated above, unless disqualified, a judge must hear all cases assigned to him. Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 170; Cal. Code of Jud. Ethics, canon 3B(2), But a judge is disqualified if a "person aware of the facts might reasonably entertain a doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial." Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 170.l(a)(6)(A)(iii) "The duty of a judge to sit where not disqualified is equally as strong as the duty not to sit when disqualified." Flier v. Superior Court (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 165, 17.

Judge Rothman in his treatise briefly discusses the general situation at issue:

> "Occasionally [*5] a judge will see a party in court that the judge has sued or prosecuted before becoming a judge. In such a situation, absent actual bias, the judge is not required by any of the specific provisions in Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1 to disqualify himself or herself. A judge should, however, consider whether the particular circumstances of the prior case and contact with the party was such that disqualification is appropriate under Code of Civil Procedure section 170.1, subdivision (a)(6)(A)(iii). Only after concluding that disqualification is not necessary would disclosure be necessary." Rothman, California Judicial Conduct Handbook § 7.38 (3d ed. 2007.

Thus, while having represented a former adverse party against a current litigant usually does not require recusal, the "particular circumstances" of the prior case and relationship with the party may trigger disqualification because a person aware of the facts might entertain a doubt about whether the judge may be impartial. No actual bias is required for the judge to be disqualified. "If an average person could entertain doubt about the judge's impartiality, disqualification is mandated." California Judge's Benchguide No. 2 § 2.15 (citing Catchpole v. Brannon (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 237, 246, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 440 (disapproved on other grounds in People v. Freeman (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 993, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 723, 222 P.3d 177). This is an objective standard, not dependent upon the [*6] judge's subjective bias or lack thereof. Briggs v. Superior Court(2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 312, 31.

This statutory ground:

> "…represents a legislative judgment that due to the sensitivity of the question and inherent difficulties of proof as well as the importance of public confidence in the judicial system, the issue is not limited to the existence of an actual bias. Rather, if a reasonable man or woman would entertain doubts concerning the judge's impartiality, disqualification is mandated." Catchpole v. Brannon, supra, at 246 (citations, internal quotations, and brackets omitted.

In this case, the Judge had a history before taking the bench as an adversary and public critic of one of the parties. As a litigator he was on the trial team in "landmark" antitrust litigation that resulted in one of the "largest antitrust recoveries in history." That litigation was long and contentious, and apparently so significant in the Judge's prior career that it was the only case mentioned in the press release issued when he was appointed to the bench. As a news source he was quoted by a wire service as opining that Microsoft was "guilty" of antitrust allegations investigated by the U.S. government. In his published articles on technology and the law, Attorney Karnow at least implied that [*7] Microsoft intentionally violated antitrust laws and illegally monopolized some aspect of the technology marke.

All the comments predated Judge Karnow taking the bench. There is no evidence presented that the comments and opinions were unfounded or resulted from anything other than reasoned and informed analysis. Nevertheless, such public and repeated statements that Microsoft intentionally violated the law, combined with his involvement in suing the corporation in particularly contentious litigation, might cause a reasonable person to entertain a doubt as to whether the Judge could be impartial to Microsoft in the present proceedings. While there is no hint that the Judge is prejudiced in any way with regard to the issues in the case at bar, prior statements may indicate that the Judge has negative opinions as to Microsoft's predilection to follow the laws and in general act as a responsible corporate citizen. How exactly that would play out in deciding the issues in the case at bar is unclear; however, doubts about the Judge's impartiality toward the plaintiff might be reasonably entertained. Judge Karnow's belief that Microsoft's perceived law breaking was intentional, rather than [*8] some inadvertent transgression, lends force to this conclusio.

Counsel for Judge Karnow argue that Code of Civil Procedure section 170.2, subdivision (6), provides "that it is not grounds for disqualification that a judge has expressed an opinion on a legal or factual issue, even when the legal or factual issue is presented in the proceeding." The undersigned has not been able to find where section 170.2 has been applied to comments made by a judge other that in performance of the judge's duty in some official capacity. While the statute does not clearly so state, it appears intended to provide a judge is not disqualified in a proceeding once he has expressed views or made a ruling in that case or a related case. Thus a judge is not disqualified for statements arising from the judge's participation in the case, such as hearing evidence, ruling on an issue, or presiding at a settlement conference. See Rothman California Judicial Conduct Handbook. supra, at § 7.1.

Nothing herein should be taken to indicate that the undersigned believes that Judge Karnow is prejudiced against Microsoft or that the parties could not receive a fair trial before him. The decision herein merely reflects that a reasonable person might entertain a doubt on that issu.

ORDER

For [*9] the reasons set forth above, Judge Karnow is hereby disqualified from sitting and acting in the above-entitled matte.

DATED: MAR 11 20.

/s/ William H. Folle.

WILLIAM H. FOLLE.

Judge of the Superior Court, County of Del Norte, Sitting on Assignmen.

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE BY MAIL [Code of Civil Procedure 1013a(4)]

I, Alisa Hollander, Secretary to the Presiding Judge of the San Francisco Superior Court, certify that I am over the age of 18 years and not a party to the within actio.

On March 15, 2010, I served the attached Ruling on Motion to Disqualify Judge; Order (CCP § 170.3(c)(2)) on all parties in said action by placing a true copy in a sealed envelope with postage thereon fully prepared in the United States mail at San Francisco, California, addressed as follow.

James P. Kleier, Es.

Reed Smith L.

101 Second Street, Suite 18.

San Francisco, CA 941.

David L.

Office of the Attorney Gener.

1515 Clay Street, Suite 20.

Oakland, CA 94612-05.

and .

Hon. Curtis E.A. Karn.

San Francisco Superior Cou.

400 McAllister Street, Department 6.

San Francisco, CA 941.

By interoffice mail on March 15, 2010, at San Francisco, California 9410.

DATED: March 15, 20.

/s/ Alisa Holland.

ALISA HOLLAND.

Secretary to the Presiding Judge of the San Francisco Superior Cou.

End of Document

Plush Lounge Las Vegas LLC v. Hotspur Resorts Nev., Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

March 5, 2010, Argued and Submitted, Pasadena, California; March 15, 2010, Filed

No. 08-56953

Reporter
371 Fed. Appx. 719 *; 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 5331 ; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,938

PLUSH LOUNGE LAS VEGAS LLC, Plaintiff - Appellant, v. HOTSPUR RESORTS NEVADA INC., Defendant - Appellee.

Notice: PLEASE REFER TO FEDERAL RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE RULE 32.1 GOVERNING THE CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of California. D.C. No. 2:06-cv-02626-GW-JTL. George H. Wu, District Judge, Presiding.

Plush Lounge Las Vegas LLC v. Hotspur Resorts Nev. Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128840 (C.D. Cal., Sept. 23, 2008)

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

declarations, district court, resort, summary judgment, jury verdict, antitrust, expert testimony, relevant market, legal standard, large portion, lay opinion, Sherman Act, illogical, purported, portions

Counsel: For PLUSH LOUNGE LAS VEGAS LLC, Plaintiff - Appellant: John C. Kirkland, Esquire, Luce Forward Hamilton & Scripps, LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Steven S. Fleischman, Esquire, Attorney, ROBIE & MATTHAI, APC, Los Angeles, CA.

For HOTSPUR RESORTS NEVADA INC., Defendant - Appellee: Andrew Stuart Pauly, GREENWALD PAULY FOSTER & MILLER, Santa Monica, CA.

Judges: Before: GOULD, IKUTA and N.R. SMITH, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

[720] MEMORANDUM []

Plush Lounge Las Vegas, LLC appeals the district court's grant of summary judgment to Hotspur Resorts Nevada, Inc. on Plush's antitrust action under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and we affirm.

---

[*] This disposition is not appropriate for publication and is not precedent except as provided by Ninth Circuit Rule 36-3.

Plush argues that the district court erred in granting Hotspur summary judgment on Plush's Sherman Act claim. At summary judgment, an antitrust plaintiff asserting a claim under Sherman Act Section 2 must submit admissible evidence of the relevant product [2] and geographic market that would be sufficient to sustain a jury verdict on the issue of market definition. Rebel Oil Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1435 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). Absent such evidence, summary judgment is appropriate. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1435.

Plush submitted the declarations of Roland Katavic and Jerrold S. Pressman in support of a proposed market definition of "cocktails and hors d'oeuvres in an entertainment atmosphere within the [Hotspur] Resort." The district court ruled that neither Katavic nor Pressman qualified as an expert under Federal Rule of Evidence 702 and struck the portions of each declaration that purported to define the relevant market. We review the district court's decision to exclude expert testimony for an abuse of discretion. Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 152, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999). A district court abuses its discretion when it applies an incorrect legal standard, or when it applies the correct legal standard but does so in a manner that is illogical, implausible, or without support in the record. United States v. Hinkson, 585 F.3d 1247, 1261-62 (9th Cir. 2009) [3] (en banc).

The district court did not abuse its discretion in striking large portions of the Katavic and Pressman declarations. Neither declarant provided adequate foundational information about what training--whether in the classroom or on the job--gave rise to their ability to define a market for antitrust purposes. The declarants' reference to their business experience, without more, was insufficient. The declarations presented legal conclusions without underlying factual support, and therefore constitute "unsupported speculation." See Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 590, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993). Finally, neither declarant provided an explanation of the methodology used to arrive at the proposed market definition. See Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 151. Given these deficiencies, it was not illogical for the district court to determine that the declarations fell short of the reliability and relevancy [*721] requirements for the admissibility of expert testimony under Rule 702. See id. at 152. The district court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining Hotspur's objections to the portions of the Katavic and Pressman declarations that purported to define the relevant market.

With large portions [4] of the Katavic and Pressman declarations stricken, Plush had insufficient evidence to sustain a jury verdict on its proposed market definition. The applicable market definition is not an opinion based on Katavic's or Pressman's sensory perception, so, contrary to Plush's argument, the district court could not have admitted their market definitions as lay opinions. See Fed. R. Evid. 701(a); United States v. Durham, 464 F.3d 976, 982 (9th Cir. 2006) (explaining that an admissible lay opinion must be predicated on facts perceived with the witness's own senses). Outside of the Katavic and Pressman declarations, Plush's only evidence of market definition was a citation to two statements made by Hotspur's managers during their depositions. In these statements Mr. Roberts stated "yes" when asked whether there was a market within the resort and a larger market outside the resort, and Mr. Roughley stated that 75-85% of hotel guests and conventioneers use the resort's food and beverage services. Neither statement, however, refers to the relevant product market, so even if the statements were admissible at trial they would be insufficient to sustain a jury verdict on the issue of market definition. [5] [1]

AFFIRMED.

End of Document

---

[1] Because we resolve this appeal on the basis of affirming the evidentiary rulings and our view of the lack of admissible evidence on relevant product market, we need not and do not reach other issues of antitrust law raised by the parties and urged to be pertinent to the summary judgment.

Westfield Ins. Co. v. Gil Behling & Son, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana

March 15, 2010, Decided; March 15, 2010, Filed

CAUSE NO: 2:08-CV-317-TS

Reporter

2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24328 *; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,040; 2010 WL 989933

WESTFIELD INSURANCE COMPANY, Plaintiff, v. GIL BEHLING & SON, INC., et al., Defendants.

Core Terms

coverage, disparagement, advertising injury, duty to defend, Antitrust, bodily injury, property damage, bidding, damages, insured, defamation, allegations, products, personal injury, occurrence, summary judgment, seek damages, Umbrella, no duty, indemnify, slander, libel, provisions, defamatory, policy period, reputation, collusion, summary judgment motion, treble damages, bidders

Counsel: [*1] For Westfield Insurance Company, Plaintiff: Mark R Smith, LEAD ATTORNEY, Smith Fisher Maas & Howard PC, Indianapolis, IN.

For Gil Behling & Son Inc, Larry Behling, Defendants: Stephen M Maish, LEAD ATTORNEY, Maish and Mysliwy, Hammond, IN.

Judges: THERESA L. SPRINGMANN, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: THERESA L. SPRINGMANN

Opinion

OPINION AND ORDER

In this action, Plaintiff Westfield Insurance Company (Westfield) seeks a declaratory judgment that it has no duty to defend or indemnify Defendants Gil Behling & Son, Inc. (GBS) and Larry Behling in a state court civil action brought by Defendant Gariup Construction Company (Gariup) against Defendants GBS and Larry Behling and others. This matter is before the Court on a Verified Motion for Default Judgment Against Gariup Construction Company [DE 15], filed by Westfield on August 21, 2009; a Motion for Summary Judgment Against Gil Behling & Son, Inc. and Larry Behling [DE 16], also filed by Westfield on August 21, 2009; and a Cross-Motion for Partial Summary Judgment [DE 20], filed by Defendants GBS and Larry Behling on September 19. These Motions are now ripe for ruling.

BACKGROUND

On March 13, 2008, Gariup filed a Complaint for Damages [DE 1-7] (Gariup Complaint) [*2] in Cause Number 45C010803PL00037 in the Lake Circuit Court, Crown Point Division. In this state civil action, Gariup sued Carras-Szany-Kuhn & Associates, P.C., Thomas Kuhn, Dan Szany, GBS, and Larry Behling. The Complaint alleges that on or about September 20, 2007, Gariup and GBS submitted separate bids for a public construction project; that Carras-Szany-Kuhn & Associates, P.C., worked as the project architect and was responsible for receiving and evaluating bids and recommending contract awards to the owner of the project; and that Gariup submitted the lowest bid on the project. It also claims that the defendants in that action "schemed and/or combined to restrict bidding in relation to the Project," and "intentionally violated numerous requirements relating to public work bidding statutes and otherwise wrongly rejected Gariup's bid for the Project all in order to restrict bidding such that the second lowest bidder, . . . Gil Behling & Son, Inc. received the contract . . . rather than Gariup, despite having submitted a higher bid." (Gariup Compl. P 10, DE 1-7.) Gariup claims to have suffered substantial damages as "a result of this scheme and combination to restrain bidding perpetrated [*3] by the Defendants on the Project." (Gariup Compl. P 11, DE 1-7.) As relief in that action, Gariup requests "a judgment against the Defendants which includes compensatory damages, treble damages pursuant to I.C. 24-1-2-7, attorney fe[e]s and all other just and proper relief in the premises." (Gariup Compl. Prayer for Relief, DE 1-7.)

On October 29, 2008, Westfield instituted this action by filing its Complaint for Declaratory Judgment [DE 1], seeking a declaration that it has no duty under the policy issued to GBS to defend or indemnify GBS or Larry Behling against the state court civil lawsuit. Westfield also named Gariup as a Defendant based upon its interest in the resolution of these disputed duties.

On January 5, 2009, the Clerk entered Default [DE 9] against Gariup because it has not defended in this action. On August 21, Westfield filed a Verified Motion for Default Judgment Against Gariup Construction Company [DE 15] and a Motion for Summary Judgment Against Gil Behling & Son, Inc. and Larry Behling [DE 16]. Westfield also filed a Brief in Support of Its Motion for Summary Judgment [DE 19] and evidentiary materials. On September 19, GHS and Larry Behling filed a Cross-Motion for [*4] Partial Summary Judgment [DE 20] as well as a Response Brief in Opposition to Westfield's Motion for Summary Judgment and in Support of [Their] Cross-Motion for Partial Summary Judgment [DE 21]. On October 3, Westfield filed a Reply Brief in Support of Its Motion for Summary Judgment [DE 22] and additional evidentiary material. On November 4, GBS and Larry Behling filed a Reply Brief in Support of [Their] Cross-Motion for Partial Summary Judgment [DE 25].

SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide that motions for summary judgment should be granted "if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). A genuine issue of material fact exists when "'there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party.'" AA Sales & Assocs. v. Coni-Seal, Inc., 550 F.3d 605, 608-09 (7th Cir. 2000) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). Under Rule 56(e)(2), a party opposing a properly made and supported motion for summary [*5] judgment "may not rely merely on allegations or denials in its own pleading; rather its response must--by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule--set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial." If appropriate, summary judgment should be entered against a party who fails to so respond. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986) (holding that a court should enter summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery, against a party "who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial"). A court's role on summary judgment is not to weigh the evidence, make credibility determinations, or decide which inferences to draw from the facts, but instead to determine whether there is a genuine issue of triable fact. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255; Washington v. Haupert, 481 F.3d 543, 550 (7th Cir. 2007); Payne v. Pauley, 337 F.3d 767, 770 (7th Cir. 2003). Thus, a court in ruling on a summary judgment motion construes all facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and draws all reasonable inferences in [*6] that party's favor. AA Sales & Assocs., 550 F.3d at 609. However, the court is not required to draw every conceivable inference from the record--only reasonable ones. Spring v. Sheboygan Area Sch. Dist., 865 F.2d 883, 886 (7th Cir. 1989). Under local rule, facts that are submitted by the moving party and supported by admissible evidence are considered to exist without controversy, except to the extent that such facts are controverted in a "Statement of Genuine Issues" filed in opposition to the motion. L.R. 56.1.

FACTS

On or about January 1, 2007, Westfield issued GBS Commercial Package Policy No. TRA 3 816 339. GBS was the named insured, and the dates of coverage were January 1, 2007, to January 1, 2008. The Package Policy included a Commercial General Liability (CGL) policy and a Commercial Umbrella policy.

A. The Commercial General Liability Policy

Under the CGL Bodily Injury and Property Damage (BI/PD) coverage, which is known as Coverage A in the insurance industry, Westfield agreed to the following:

> a. We will pay those sums that the insured becomes legally obligated to pay as damages because of "bodily injury" or "property damage" to which this insurance applies. We will have the [*7] right and duty to defend the insured against any "suit" seeking those damages. However, we will have no duty to defend the insured against any "suit" seeking damages for "bodily injury" or "property damage" to which this insurance does not apply. We may, at our discretion, investigate any "occurrence" and settle any claim or "suit" that may result. But:
>
> (1) The amount we will pay for damages is limited as described in Section III -- Limits Of Insurance; and
>
> (2) Our right and duty to defend end when we have used up the applicable limit of insurance in the payment of judgments or settlements under Coverages A or B or medical expenses under coverage C.
>
> No other obligation or liability to pay sums or perform acts or services is covered unless explicitly provided for under Supplementary Payments -- Coverages A and B.
>
> b. This insurance applies to "bodily injury" and "property damage" only if:
>
> (1) The "bodily injury" or "property damage" is caused by an "occurrence" that takes place in the "coverage territory;"
>
> (2) The "bodily injury" or "property damage" occurs during the policy period . . . .

(Policy, DE 18-2 at 29.) The term "occurrence" is defined as "an accident, including continuous or repeated [*8] exposure to substantially the same general harmful conditions." (Policy, DE 18-2 at 42.) The term "bodily injury" is defined as "bodily injury, sickness or disease sustained by a person, including death resulting from any of these at any time." (Policy, DE 18-2 at 41.) The term "property damage," in relevant part, is defined as follows: "Physical injury to tangible property, including all resulting loss of use of that property[, and a]ll such loss of use shall be deemed to occur at the time of the physical injury that caused it"; or "Loss of use of tangible property that is not physically injured[, and a]ll such loss of use shall be deemed to occur at the time of the 'occurrence' that caused it." (Policy, DE 18-2 at 43.)

Under the CGL Personal and Advertising Injury (PAI) coverage, which is known as Coverage B in the insurance industry, Westfield agreed to the following:

> a. We will pay those sums that the insured becomes legally obligated to pay as damages because of "personal and advertising injury" to which this insurance applies. We will have the right and duty to defend the insured against any "suit" seeking those damages. However, we will have no duty to defend the insured against [*9] any "suit" seeking damages for "personal and advertising injury" to which this insurance does not apply. We may at our discretion investigate any offense and settle any claim or "suit" that may result. But:
>
> (1) The amount we will pay for damages is limited as described in Section III -- Limits of Insurance; and
>
> (2) Our right and duty to defend end when we have used up the applicable limit of insurance in the payment of judgments or settlements under Coverages A or B or medical expenses under Coverage C.
>
> No other obligation or liability to pay sums or perform acts or services is covered unless explicitly provided for under Supplementary Payments - Coverages A and B.

> b. This insurance applies to "personal and advertising injury" caused by an offense arising out of your business but only if the offense was committed in the "coverage territory" during the policy period.

(Policy, DE 18-2 at 33-34.) The term "personal and advertising injury" is defined as "injury, including consequential 'bodily injury' arising out of one or more of the following offenses":

> a. False arrest, detention or imprisonment;
> b. Malicious prosecution;
>
> c. The wrongful eviction from, wrongful entry into, or invasion of the [*10] right of private occupancy of a room, dwelling or premises that a person occupies, committed by or on behalf of its owner, landlord or lessor;
> d. Oral or written publication, in any manner, of material that slanders or libels a person or organization or disparages a person's or organization's goods, products or services;
> e. Oral or written publication, in any manner, of material that violates a person's right of privacy;
> f. The use of another's advertising idea in your "advertisement"; or > g. Infringing upon another's copyright, trade dress or slogan in your "advertisement".

(Policy, DE 18-2 at 43.)

B. The Commercial Umbrella Policy

Under the Commercial Umbrella policy, Westfield agreed to the following:

> a. We will pay "ultimate net loss" in excess of the "retained limit" that the insured becomes legally obligated to pay as damages because of "personal injury" or "property damage" to which this insurance applies. We will have the right and duty to defend the insured against any "suit" seeking those damages. However, we will have no duty to defend the insured against any "suit" seeking damages for "personal injury" or "property damage" to which this insurance does not apply. We may, at our discretion, [*11] investigate any "occurrence" and settle any "claim" or "suit" that may result. But:
>
> > (1) The amount we will pay for damages is limited as described in (Section III) LIMITS OF INSURANCE; and
> > (2) Our right and duty to defend end when we have used up the applicable limit of insurance in the payment of judgments or settlements.
>
> No other obligation or liability to pay sums or perform acts or services is covered unless explicitly provided under Defense, Settlement and Supplementary Payments.
>
> b. This insurance applies only if the "personal injury" or "property damage" occurs during the policy period and is caused by an "occurrence" and prior to the policy period, no insured listed under Paragraph 1. of Section II - Who Is An Insured and no "employee" authorized to give or receive notice of an "occurrence" or claim, knew that the "personal injury" or "property damage" had occurred, in whole or in part. If such a listed insured or authorized "employee" knew, prior to the policy period, that the "personal injury" or "property damage" occurred, then any continuation, change or resumption of such "personal injury" or "property damage" during or after the policy period will be deemed to have been known [*12] prior to the policy period.

(Policy, DE 18-4 at 17.) The term "occurrence" is defined as "an accident or offense resulting in 'personal injury' or 'property damage'" and as follows:

> a. With respect to "bodily injury" and "property damage", an accident includes continuous or repeated exposure to substantially the same general harmful conditions.
> b. With respect to subsections b., c., d., e., f., g., and h. of the definition of "personal injury", an offense includes a series of offenses of the same or similar nature.
> c. With respect to subsections e., f., g., and h. of the definition of "personal injury", an offense includes a series of offenses in which the same or similar advertising material is used regardless of the number or kind of media used.
> All "personal injury" and "property damage" resulting from an accident or offense shall be considered as resulting from one "occurrence".

(Policy, DE 18-4 at 30.) By endorsement, the Commercial Umbrella policy defines the term "personal injury" as "any of the following offenses including death and care and loss of services resulting therefrom: A. 'Bodily injury' or B. "'Personal and Advertising injury'." (Policy, DE 18-4 at 39.) The term "bodily [*13] injury" is defined as "bodily injury, sickness or disease sustained by a person, including death resulting from any of these at any time." (Policy, DE 18-4 at 28.) The term "property damage" is defined as follows:

a. Physical injury to tangible property, including all resulting loss of use of that property. All such loss of use shall be deemed to occur at the time of the physical injury that caused it; or

b. Loss of use of tangible property that is not physically injured. All such loss of use shall be deemed to occur at the time of the "occurrence" that caused it.

(Policy, DE 18-4 at 31.) The term "personal and advertising injury" is defined as "injury including consequential 'bodily injury', arising out of one or more of the following offenses":

a. False arrest, detention or imprisonment;

b. Malicious prosecution;

c. The wrongful eviction from, wrongful entry into, or invasion of the right of private occupancy of a room, dwelling or premises that a person occupies, committed by or on behalf of its owner, landlord or lessor;

d. Oral or written publication, in any manner, of material that slanders or libels a person or organization or disparages a person's or organization's goods, products [*14] or services;

e. Oral or written publication, in any manner, of material that violates a person's right of privacy;

f. The use of another's advertising idea in your "advertisement"; or

g. Infringing upon another's copyright, trade dress or slogan in your "advertisement".

(Policy, DE 18-4 at 30-31.)

C. The State Lawsuit, Denial of Coverage, and Additional Undisputed Facts

On or about May 30, 2008, GBS and Larry Behling provided Westfield with a copy of the Complaint filed in the state court civil action and requested that Westfield defend and indemnify them under the policies. Westfield has denied coverage and declined to defend GBS and Larry Behling in the state court civil action. Any of the relevant conduct of GBS and/or Larry Behling that provides the basis for the Gariup Complaint occurred during the policy period and within the coverage territory. GBS and Larry Behling, as an officer and owner of GBS, are insureds covered under the CBL and Commercial Umbrella policies provided by Westfield. Westfield is not relying or basing its denial of coverage or its denial of its duty to defend or indemnify on any specific coverage exclusion under the CGL policy or the Commercial Umbrella policy.

DISCUSSION

A. [*15] The Parties' Arguments

Westfield argues that it is entitled to summary judgment on the following issues: that, under the CGL bodily injury/property damage coverage, the Gariup Complaint does not allege a covered "occurrence," a covered "bodily injury," or covered "property damage"; that the Gariup Complaint does not trigger the CGL personal and advertising injury coverage; that, under the Commercial Umbrella coverage, the Gariup Complaint does not allege a covered "occurrence," a covered "bodily injury," covered "property damage," or a covered "personal and advertising injury"; and that the treble damage claim is not covered. Thus, Westfield contends that, under the language of the policy, it does not have any duty to defend or indemnify Defendant GBS and Larry Behling in the state court civil action brought by Gariup. GBS and Larry Behling argue that they are entitled to summary judgment on the following issues: that Westfield has a duty to defend them under the personal and advertising injury provisions of the policy; and that a determination of Westfield's obligation to indemnify is premature and not ripe for adjudication in the absence of a finding of liability on the claims in [*16] the underlying dispute with Gariup. GBS and Larry Behling also assert that because Westfield has a duty to defend them under the personal and advertising injury provisions, it is unnecessary for the Court to determine whether Westfield has a duty to defend under other provisions of the policies. Westfield responds that the Gariup Complaint does not allege a covered personal and advertising injury offense of disparagement and that the duty to indemnify issue is ripe. GBS and Larry Behling reply that the Gariup Complaint does not clearly show facts that bar recovery under the personal and advertising injury provisions based on disparagement of another's goods or services and does not relieve Westfield of its obligation to defend them from even unmeritorious claims, that Indiana and federal case law concerning personal and advertising injury coverages supports a finding that Westfield has a duty to defend them against Gariup's claims, and that a lack of specificity in the Gariup Complaint does not excuse Westfield from its duty to defend against damages claimed by Gariup.

Because the focus of the parties' submissions is on the personal and advertising injury provisions, the Court will [*17] address the duty to defend issues relative to those provisions and then address Westfield's duties under other policy provisions. However, the Court will begin by setting forth the relevant standards governing insurance contracts.

B. The Relevant Standards Governing Insurance Contracts

As a federal court siting in diversity, this Court applies state law to resolve substantive questions. Harper v. Vigilant Ins. Co., 433 F.3d 521, 525 (7th Cir. 2005). The parties agree that Indiana law applies, and thus this Court will apply the substantive law of Indiana in addressing the pending summary judgment motions. Mass. Bay Ins. Co. v. Vic Koenig Leasing, Inc., 136 F.3d 1116, 1120 (7th Cir. 1998) (stating that "the operative rule is that when neither party raises a conflict of law issue in a diversity case, the federal court simply applies the law of the state in which the federal court sits"). When the Indiana Supreme Court has not confronted a particular issue, this Court is to predict how that court would decide the issue if presented with it. Harper, 433 F.3d at 525.

Generally, the interpretation or construction of a written contract such as an insurance policy is a question of law for which [*18] summary judgment is appropriate. Cinergy Corp. v. Associated Elec. & Gas Ins. Servs., 865 N.E.2d 571, 574 (Ind. 2007); see also Fed. Ins. Co. v. Stroh Brewing Co., 127 F.3d 563 (7th Cir. 1997) (interpreting insurance policy and determining insurer's duty to defend as a matter of law). Under Indiana law, insurance policies are subject to the same rules of construction as other contracts. See Motorists Mut. Ins. Co. v. Wroblewski, 898 N.E.2d 1272 (Ind. Ct. App. 2009). Contracts are interpreted to ascertain and effectuate the intent of the parties as reasonably manifested in the agreement, and if the language of the contract is clear and unambiguous, it should be given its plain and ordinary meaning. Reuille v. E.E. Brandenberger Constr., Inc., 888 N.E.2d 770, 771 (Ind. 2008). Courts give effect to the intentions of the parties as expressed in the four corners of the agreement, and courts determine the meaning of a contract from an examination of all of the contract's provisions, and not from a consideration of individual words, phrases, or paragraphs read alone. Moore, 903 N.E.2d at 531. Parol, or extrinsic evidence, is inadmissible to add to, vary, or explain clear and unambiguous [*19] terms of a written instrument. Evan, 873 N.E.2d at 101. An ambiguity does not arise simply because the parties disagree on the interpretation; rather, contract language is ambiguous only if reasonable people could come to different conclusions about its meaning. Id. at 98; Simon Prop. Group, L.P. v. Mich. Sporting Goods Distribs., Inc., 837 N.E.2d 1058, 1070 (Ind. Ct. App. 2005).

Accordingly, clear and unambiguous words in insurance contracts are given their plain and ordinary meaning, but ambiguous language is construed in favor of the insured. Beam v. Wausau Ins. Co., 765 N.E.2d 524, 528 (Ind. 2002); Eli Lilly & Co. v. Home Ins. Co., 482 N.E.2d 467, 470 (Ind. 1985); see also Schenkel & Shultz, Inc. v. Homestead Ins. Co.., 119 F.3d 548, 550 (7th Cir. 1997) (applying Indiana law and instructing that courts must enforce unambiguous insurance contracts according to their plain meaning, even if that limits the coverage available). Ambiguity in an insurance contract exists when it is reasonably susceptible to more than one interpretation and reasonable people would honestly differ as to its meaning. Beam, 765 N.E.2d at 528; Indiana Bell Tel. Co. v. Time Warner Commc'ns of Ind., 786 N.E.2d 301, 309-10 (Ind. Ct. App. 2003).

An [*20] insurer's duty to defend is a contractual duty, and this duty is broader than its duty to indemnify. Federal Ins., 127 F.3d at 566 (citing Seymour Mfg. Co. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co., 665 N.E.2d 891, 892 (Ind. 1996)); Nat'l Fire & Cas. Co. v. West By & Through Norris, 107 F.3d 531, 535 (7th Cir. 1997); Hoosier Ins. Co. v. Audiology Foundation of Am., 745 N.E.2d 300, 306 (Ind. Ct. App. 2001). Although an insurance company can limit its duty to defend, cf. Walton v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 844 N.E.2d 143, 147 (Ind. Ct. App. 2006) (stating that if the pleadings reveal that a claim is excluded under the policy, then no defense is required), an insurer is generally obligated to defend its insured against suits alleging facts that might fall within the coverage of the policy, Federal Ins., 127 F.3d at 566.

Under Indiana law, an insurer's "duty to defend is determined solely by the nature of the complaint," and "[w]hen the nature of the claim is obviously not covered by the policy of insurance, there is no duty to defend." Transamerica Ins. Servs. v. Kopko, 570 N.E.2d 1283, 1285 (Ind. 1991). When a complaint sounds in intentional tort as well as in negligence, "the insurance company is [*21] required to defend even though it may not be responsible for all of the damages assessed, so long as there is an element of negligence to be determined." Id. Furthermore, "[w]here an insurer's independent investigation of the facts underlying a complaint against its insured reveals a claim is patently outside of the risk covered by the policy, the insurer may properly refuse to defend." Freidline v. Shelby Ins. Co., 774 N.E.2d 37, 42-43 n.6 (Ind. 2002). If proof of any of the allegations could lead to coverage, then a duty to defend exists regardless of the merits of the allegations, making the duty to defend broader than the duty to indemnify. Federal Ins., 127 F.3d at 566 (stating that "there is essentially only one standard--that the allegations of the complaint, including the facts alleged, give rise to a duty to defend whenever, if proved true, coverage would attach"). [1]

C. The Duty to Defend Under the Personal and Advertising Injury Coverages

The parties largely [*22] agree that the personal and advertising injury coverages under the CGL policy and the Commercial Umbrella policy are essentially the same. However, the parties have very different views of whether the Gariup Complaint alleges a claim that would come within the personal and advertising injury coverages so as to trigger Westfield's duty to defend. Westfield contends that the Gariup Complaint alleges a state antitrust violation that does not trigger any duty to defend under these coverages, and GBS and Larry Behling argue that Gariup Complaint seeks damages that involve or relate to a disparagement of a competitor's services that triggers Westfield's duty to defend.

In order for Westfield to have a duty to defend (and indemnify) under the personal and advertising injury coverages, the damages sought in the Gariup Complaint must result from a "personal and advertising injury" that arises out of one of seven enumerated offenses, which are identified in the Facts Section of this Opinion and Order. Although GBS and Larry Behling argue that courts have broadly interpreted personal and advertising injury coverage in favor of insureds and although they cite cases addressing various offenses that [*23] constitute personal and advertising injury, their argument comes to rest on one particular offense (the defamation/disparagement offense), and thus they argue that the Gariup Complaint alleges injury that arises out of the offense of an oral or written publication, in any manner, of material that disparages a person's or organization's goods, products, or services. [2] GBS and Larry Behling propose the following "publication" in an attempt to trigger a duty to defend under this coverage: "the essence of Gariup's allegations are that GBS[] and Behling allegedly promoted GBS[] through oral or written statements (which is within the definition of 'advertising') in a manner that wrongfully discredited Gariup's goods, products and/or services (which is within the definition of 'disparages')." [3] (GBS Resp. Br. & Br. in Supp. 13, DE 21.)

---

[1] The Court finds persuasive Judge Tinder's reconciliation of Kopko, Freidline, and similar authorities. See *Trinity Homes LLC v. Ohio Cas. Ins. Co., No. 1:04-CV-1920, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24370, 2007 WL 1021825, at 4-7 (S.D. Ind. Mar. 30, 2007).

[2] This offense also includes an oral or written publication, in any manner, of material that slanders or libels a person or organization, but GBS and Larry Behling focus on the aspect of the offense related to disparaging goods, products, or services.

They also argue that "the basic premise of Gariup's claims must be that GBS[] and Behling participated in communications of some sort with the Library Board that served to disparage Gariup's bid for services, so that the Library Board would not accept Gariup's bid for services." (GBS Reply 5, DE 25.) Additionally, they seek a broad reading of the Gariup Complaint [*24] so that the complaint is understood to seek both relief under the Indiana Antitrust Act and more general damages, and in support of this broader reading, they point to the demand for "compensatory damages" in the prayer for relief. They also argue that no language or allegation in the Gariup Complaint "expressly limit[s] such claims" to the Indiana Antitrust Act. (GBS Resp. Br. & Br. in Supp. 13-14, DE 21.) Nevertheless, they contend that Westfield has a duty to defend against antitrust claims under the personal and advertising injury coverages.

1. The Gariup Complaint and the Indiana Antitrust Act

Turning first to the Gariup Complaint, the Court notes that the allegations focus on the submission of bids by Gariup and GBS for a public construction project; Gariup's lower bid; GBS's higher bid; the conduct of GBS, Larry Behling, and other defendants in scheming or combining to restrict bidding; the intentional violation of bidding statutes by GBS, Larry Behling, and other defendants; the wrongful rejection of Gariup's bid to restrict bidding and to ensure that GBS received the contract; and the damage sustained by Gariup as a result of scheme and combination of GBS, Larry Behling, and other defendants to restrain bidding. The Gariup Complaint specifically [*26] references Indiana Code § 24-1-2-7 in seeking treble damages, but it also seeks damages and attorney's fees. Nothing in the Gariup Complaint suggests that Gariup is seeking damages or proceeding against any of the defendants on a theory of negligence.

The statute referenced in the Gariup Complaint is part of the Indiana Antitrust Act (Indiana Code § 24-1-2). Indiana Code § 24-1-2-1 makes illegal (a Class A misdemeanor) schemes, contracts, or combinations in restraint of trade or commerce. Indiana Code § 24-1-2-2 prohibits any person "monopoliz[ing] any part of the trade or commerce" in the state. Indiana Code § 24-1-2-3 provides that a "person who engages in any scheme, contract, or combination to restrain or restrict bidding for the letting of any contract for private or public work, or restricts free competition for the letting of any contract for private or public work, commits a Class A misdemeanor." Indiana Code § 24-1-2-4 addresses remedies for "collusion or fraud" among contract bidders "as provided in section 3." Indiana Code § 24-1-2-7(a) authorizes any "person whose business or property is injured by a violation of this chapter [to] bring an action . . . , and is entitled [*27] to recover a penalty of threefold the damages awarded in the action, together with the costs of suit, including reasonable attorney's fees."

The Indiana Supreme Court has provided the following discussion regarding this statute:

> Sections 1 and 2 of the Indiana Antitrust Act, I.C. § 24-1-2-1, et seq., are comparable to the federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. sections 1 and 2, respectively. Like section 1 of the Sherman Act, Indiana Code section 24-1-2-1 addresses combinations in restraint of trade. Similarly, section 2 of the Sherman Act and Indiana Code section 24-1-2-2 both deal with monopolization. Indiana has two additional provisions for which there is no federal counterpart. Section 3, I.C. § 24-1-2-3, prohibits the restraint of bidding for letting of contracts whether public or private, and Section 4, I.C. § 24-1-2-4, addresses remedies for "collusion or fraud" among contract

---

[3] In discussing issues related to Westfield's duty to indemnify, GBS and Larry Behling provide additional indications of their theory for how Westfield's duty to defend is triggered. They state:

> [T]o determine if Westfield is obligated to indemnify GBS[] or Behling under its policy, it must first be ascertained whether GBS[] or Behling is legally obligated to pay any damages arising out of the lowering [*25] in esteem or discrediting (i.e., disparagement) of Gariup's goods, products or services that were offered to be performed under Gariup's bid to the owner of the project.
>
> Such a determination necessarily involves adjudicating whether GBS[] or Behling are responsible for alleged statements concerning Gariup's bid that may have caused Gariup's bid to be rejected by the owner, or that caused the owner to accept GBS[]'s bid over that of Gariup's bid.

(GBS Resp. Br. & Br. in Supp. 17, DE 21.)

> bidders. Specifically, Section 4 of the Indiana Antitrust Act provides that in cases of "collusion or fraud . . . among the bidders at the letting of any contract or work as provided in [Section 3] . . . the principal who lets the contract . . . shall not be liable for such letting or on account of said contract [*28] . . ." Section 4 thus frees the principal who lets a contract tainted by "collusion or fraud" among bidders from liability on the contract. By its terms, Section 4 applies only if there is "collusion or fraud . . . as provided in [Section 3]." It thus does not prohibit any conduct. Rather, it deals with remedies for violations of Section 3.
> Section 3 of the Indiana Antitrust Act does not use the term "collusion or fraud," but does prohibit certain conduct. . . .

Brownsburg Cmty. Sch. Corp. v. Natare Corp., 824 N.E.2d 336, 339 (Ind. 2005). The Indiana Supreme Court also indicated that Sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Indiana Antitrust Act are the only portions of the act that "contain substantive prohibitions" and that these "sections are framed similarly to provisions of the Criminal Code and provide that it is a Class A Misdemeanor to engage in the actions prohibited." Id. at 341. In discussing Section 7, the court explained that this "section, tracking section 15 of the Clayton Act, provides treble damages and attorneys fees for those injured in their 'business or property' by a violation of the Indiana Antitrust Act. This section purports to give a right to treble damages to any 'person' [*29] injured by any 'person' doing 'any thing forbidden or declared to be unlawful' by any of the first three sections of the Indiana Antitrust Act." Id. at 343. The Indiana Court of Appeals has more recently stated:

> Indiana Code section 24-1-2-3 makes unlawful acts which operate to restrain open and free competition in bidding to obtain contracts for public and private work. Pursuant to I.C. § 24-1-2-7, a person injured in his business or property by a violation of this statute may bring a civil action seeking treble damages, costs and attorney fees. Due to the dearth of decisions under the Indiana statute, our courts use decisional law under the similar federal antitrust law, section 4 of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 15. City of Auburn Through Bd. of Public Works and Safety v. Mavis, 468 N.E.2d 584, 585 (Ind. Ct. App. 1984). Federal case law requires a plaintiff to prove three essential elements: 1) a violation of the statute, 2) injury to a person's business or property proximately caused by the violation, and 3) actual damages. Id.

Thompson v. Vigo County Bd. of County Comm'rs, 876 N.E.2d 1150, 1155 (Ind. Ct. App. 2007).

Considering the allegations (including the facts [*30] alleged) and the prayer for relief in the Gariup Complaint, the Indiana Antitrust Act, and the Indiana appellate court opinions interpreting that act, the Court finds that the Gariup Complaint premises Gariup's legal theory and claim to recover on the Indiana Antitrust Act, which is a state law claim. The Gariup Complaint seeks damages from GBS and Larry Behling for unlawfully scheming and combining to restrain or restrict bidding on the public construction project. The allegations include specific statutory terminology from the Indiana Antitrust Act, and the prayer for relief references a specific statutory section in the Indiana Antitrust Act and seeks damages, treble damages, and attorney's fees, as contemplated by Section 7 of the act. Indeed, Gariup's claim fits well within the statutory paradigm for an Indiana antitrust claim brought pursuant to Indiana Code § 24-1-2-7 for an alleged violation of Indiana Code § 24-1-2-3. As the Indiana Supreme Court in interpreting the Indiana Antitrust Act has explained, a claim under Indiana Code § 24-1-2-7 for a violation of Indiana Code § 24-1-2-3 seeks remedies for "collusion or fraud" in the letting of any contract for private or public [*31] work. Natare Corp., 824 N.E.2d at 339. Consequently, the Court disagrees with GBS and Larry Behling's assertion that the Gariup Complaint "is a bare bones notice pleading that alleges no operative facts within its eleven (11) rhetorical paragraphs from which one can discern any particular legal theory or basis for any claim of damages that Gariup is seeking against [them]" and "is a generic pleading that seeks monetary relief from [them] for alleged damages to Gariup's business services, without relying on any particularized legal theory or stated cause of action." (GBS & Behling Reply Br. 2, DE 25.)

2. The Personal and Advertising Injury Coverage and the Defamation/Disparagement Offense

Westfield's policies broadly define the publication component of the defamation/disparagement offense such that it includes any manner of oral and written publication of material that qualifies under the defamation (slander or libel) component or the disparagement component. To understand the defamation/disparagement offense, it is helpful to begin by considering defamation law. Under Indiana defamation law, a plaintiff must prove a communication with defamatory imputation, malice, publication, and damages, [*32] and any statement actionable for defamation must not only be defamatory, but also false. Trail v. Boys & Girls Clubs of Northwest Ind., 845 N.E.2d 130, 136 (Ind. 2006); see also Schrader v. Eli Lilly & Co., 639 N.E.2d 258, 261 (Ind. 1994) ("To maintain an action for defamation, a plaintiff must show a communication with four elements: 1) defamatory imputation; 2) malice; 3) publication; and 4) damages."); Ind. Code § 34-15-1-1 ("In an action for libel or slander, it is sufficient to state generally that the defamatory matter published or spoken was about the plaintiff. If the defendant denies the allegation, the plaintiff must prove at trial the facts showing that the defamatory matter was published or spoken about the plaintiff."); Ind. Code § 34-15-1-2 ("In an action for libel or slander, the defendant may allege: (1) the truth of the matter charged as defamatory; and (2) mitigating circumstances to reduce the damages; and give either or both in evidence."). "'Defamatory' means 'defaming or tending to defame,'" and "[t]o 'defame' is [] 'to attack or injure the reputation or honor by false and malicious statements; malign, slander, or libel.'" Ind. Ins. Co. v. North Vermillion Cmty. Sch. Corp., 665 N.E.2d 630, 635 (Ind. Ct. App. 1996) [*33] (quoting Webster's New World Dictionary 361 (3d ed. 1988)). "Defamatory words are not actionable unless they refer to some ascertained or ascertainable person, and that person must be the plaintiff." Schrader, 639 N.E.2d at 261. Additionally, "'[d]efamation is that which tends to injure reputation and to diminish esteem, respect, goodwill or confidence in the plaintiff, or to excite derogatory feelings or opinions about the plaintiff.'" *Sanderson v. Ind. Soft Water Servs., Inc., No. IP 00-0459, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15671, 2004 WL 1784755, at 6 (S.D. Ind. July 23, 2004) (quoting Branham v. Celadon Trucking Servs., Inc., 744 N.E.2d 514, 522 (Ind. Ct. App. 2001)). Thus, defamation is a tort that "seeks to redress reputational harm suffered by a *person." Sanderson, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15671, 2004 WL 1784755, at 6 (emphasis in original).

As for disparagement of goods, products, or services, the plain and ordinary meaning of the term "disparage" is "'[t]o dishonor (something or someone) by comparison' or '[t]o unjustly discredit or detract from the reputation of (another's property, product or business).'" *Rain v. Rolls-Royce Corp., Cause No. 1:07-cv-1233, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1258, 2010 WL 107270, at 5 (S.D. Ind. Jan. 7, 2010), and Heritage Mut. Ins. Co. v. Advanced Polymer Tech., Inc., 97 F. Supp. 2d 913, 932 (S.D. Ind. 2000) [*34] (both quoting Black's Law Dictionary (7th ed. 1999)). "To disparage is to 'lower in esteem; discredit'." Ind. Ins. Co., 665 N.E.2d at 635 (quoting Webster's New World Diction 135 (3d ed. 1988)). "Disparagement" is "[a] derogatory comparison of one thing with another"; "[t]he act or an instance of castigating or detracting from the reputation of, esp. unfairly or untruthfully"; "[a] false and injurious statement that discredits or detracts from the reputation of another's character, property, product, or business"; and "[r]eproach, disgrace, or indignity." Black's Law Dictionary (9th ed. 2009).

Judge Hamilton has provided the following discussion of the nature of disparagement of goods, products, and services claims:

> What [the plaintiff] calls "product disparagement" has also been described by commentators as "disparagement of property," "slander of goods," "commercial disparagement," "trade libel," and "injurious falsehood." See Prosser and Keaton on the Law of Torts § 128, at 963 (5th ed.1984); Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 623A, 624 (1977). Although [the plaintiff] has not cited any application of the tort in Indiana, it appears that there is at least some limited recognition of [*35] the cause of action in the state. See generally, Raybestos Products Co. v. Younger, 54 F.3d 1234, 1236 (7th Cir.1995) (applying Indiana law; affirming without discussion of relevant merits jury's verdict in favor of plaintiff on defamation and injurious falsehood claims). The tort differs from defamation in that it seeks to protect economic interests rather than reputational interests. American Academic Suppliers, Inc. v. Beckley-Cardy, Inc., 922 F.2d 1317, 1323 (7th Cir.1991) (applying Illinois and Ohio law). But as under the law of defamation, a statement is not actionable unless it is clear from its content and context that it refers specifically to the plaintiff's products. See Speiser, Krause & Gans, The American Law of Torts § 33.5, at 1021 (1992); see also Heritage Mut. Ins. Co. v. Advanced Polymer Tech., Inc.., 97 F. Supp. 2d 913, 932 (S.D.Ind.2000) (collecting cases interpreting "product disparagement" in the context of insurance policies insuring against advertising injury; "[t]he insured's lack of any direct reference to a competitor's goods or products repeatedly has compelled courts to find that the underlying plaintiff has not alleged an advertising injury under this [*36] disparagement offense.").

Sanderson, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15671, 2004 WL 1784755, at *7. Thus, disparagement of goods, products, or services involves the denigration, discrediting, or belittling of a person's or organization's goods, products, or services. See Heritage Mut. Ins. Co., 97 F. Supp. 2d at 932.

Considering the "personal and advertising injury" terms of the Westfield policy and the defamatory/disparagement offense, the "slanders or libels" term would apply if Gariup (as a person or organization) alleged reputational harm or injury based upon alleged defamation by any manner of oral or written publication by GBS. The "disparages" term would apply if Gariup alleged harm or injury to economic interests by any manner of oral or written publication by GBS that denigrated, discredited, or belittled Gariup's goods, products, or services.

The Court must now determine whether the allegations of the Gariup Complaint seek damages for this sort of personal or advertising injury, and thus the Court must compare the nature of the claim and the facts alleged in the Gariup Complaint to the personal and advertising injury provisions of the policies. In performing its analysis, the Court looks beyond any labels used by [*37] Gariup in its complaint to the substance of Gariup's claim and the facts alleged in the complaint. As determined above, the Gariup Complaint presents a claim under the Indiana Antitrust Act, is brought pursuant to Indiana Code § 24-1-2-7 for an alleged violation of Indiana Code § 24-1-2-3, and seeks damages from GBS and Larry Behling for unlawfully scheming and combining to restrain or restrict bidding on the public construction project. The Gariup Complaint contains no factual allegation that GBS or Larry Behling made any false, libelous, slanderous, misleading, or defamatory statement that disparaged Gariup's goods, products, or services. Even liberally construed, the complaint provides no possible factual basis upon which Westfield might eventually be obligated to indemnify under the policy. Simply put, the Gariup Complaint does not contain any allegations of defamation or disparagement and states no claim for defamation or disparagement against GBS or Larry Behling. Furthermore, no defamatory or disparaging communication is required (or even suggested) to establish a Section 3 violation and entitlement to relief under Section 7 of the Indiana Antitrust Act. Additionally, the theory [*38] of "publication" offered by GBS and Larry Behling is speculative and unsupported by the facts alleged in the Gariup Complaint. For the Court to find a duty to defend based upon the disparagement offense as GBS and Larry Behling propose, the Court would be required to speculate about extraneous "facts" regarding potential liability and stretch the allegations beyond reason to impose a duty on Westfield.

GBS and Larry Behling's suggestion that a disparagement claim is somehow implicit in the state antitrust claim advanced by Gariup under the Indiana Antitrust Act also fails. See BASF AG v. Great Am. Assurance Co., 522 F.3d 813, 822 (7th Cir. 2008) (emphasizing the need to focus on the allegations in the underlying complaint and stating that "[i]f we allow [the insured] to shoehorn these collateral claims into the umbrella policies' coverage of slander, libel, or disparagement, then an insured could easily transform a run-of-the-mill antitrust or securities action into a suit seeking redress of libel, slander, or disparagement"). Section 7 of the Indiana Antitrust Act permits unsuccessful bidders to challenge the award of a contract when a plaintiff alleges collusion or fraud. Natare Corp., 824 N.E.2d at 340 [*39] (discussing Shook Heavy & Envtl. Constr. Group v. City of Kokomo, 632 N.E.2d 355, 358 (Ind. 1994)). It "purports to give a right to treble damages to any 'person' injured by any 'person' doing 'anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful' by any of the first three sections of the Indiana Antitrust Act." Natare Corp., 824 N.E.2d at 343. Thus, Section 7 of the Indiana Antitrust Act permits unsuccessful bidders to seek recovery for injury and harm to their businesses and property and to obtain treble damages, costs of suit, and attorney's fees from those who, among other things, unlawfully scheme, contract, or combine to restrain or restrict bidding for the letting of contracts for private or public work or who restrict free competition for those the letting of such contracts. See Shook, 632 N.E.2d at 358 (stating that Section 7 "confers on private individuals the right to challenge the award of a government contract where the governmental entity and successful bidder have engaged in collusion" and "addresses the concern . . . that a 'bidder invests considerable time, effort and money in submitting a bid and is pecuniarily damaged if illegal procedures are used to his disadvantage.'") [*40] (citing City of Auburn v. Mavis, 468 N.E.2d 584, 585 (Ind. Ct. App. 1984), and quoting Gariup v. Stern, 254 Ind. 563, 261 N.E.2d 578, 581 (Ind. 1970); Mavis, 468 N.E.2d at 586 ("The purpose of the antitrust act is to: '. . . prevent fraud and collusion in the letting of contract and to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies. To accomplish these ends the legislature has seen fit to incorporate into the statute different remedies and drastic measures for the punishment of those who violate its provisions, and for the relief of those who suffer on account thereof."). The act does not seek to promote the interest a business has in preserving the reputation of its goods, products, or services such as a disparagement action would protect. Cf. BASF AG v. Great Am. Assurance Co., 522 F.3d 813, 821 (7th Cir. 2008) (applying Illinois law (including the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act, 815 ILCS 505/1, et seq.), finding no implicit claim for disparagement, determining that personal injury and advertising injury coverage was not triggered, and stating that "[t]he [act] seeks to vindicate the rights of consumers by creating a cause of action that protects [*41] consumers from deceptive trade practices, fraud, and other abusive acts by businesses that market products to the public. In other words, the [act] allows consumers to recover damages for the economic injuries they suffer. It does not directly advance the interest another business has in preserving the reputation of its products that a disparagement action protects. Thus, the [act] does not expand a common-law disparagement plaintiff's avenues for legal relief . . . . Instead, the [act] fortifies the economic interests of consumers, who would not have standing to pursue relief for the libel, slander, or disparagement injury of a third party.") (internal citations omitted). Accordingly, it "seems extremely unlikely" that Westfield and GBS (the parties to this insurance contract) intended antitrust claims "to be covered--or even potentially covered--by a policy definition that sounds in libel, slander, and disparagement." Id. at 822.

For these reasons, the Court finds that the Gariup Complaint alleges no facts that GBS or Larry Behling defamed or disparaged Gariup's goods, products, or services through any manner of oral or written publication, and that the facts alleged in the Gariup [*42] Complaint do not fall within, or potentially within, the personal and advertising injury coverages. [4] Because there is no allegation of disparagement of Gariup's goods, products, or services, the Court finds that the personal and advertising injury coverage is not triggered under the CGL policy or the Commercial Umbrella policy and that Westfield has no duty to defend.

D. The Duty to Defend Under the Bodily Injury, Property Damage, and Personal Injury Coverages

---

[4] GBS and Larry Behling cite a number of Indiana Court of Appeals and Seventh Circuit opinions in support of their view that personal and advertising injury coverage is triggered because, in their view, the Gariup Complaint comes within the defamation/disparagement offense. However, the cases cited by GBS and Larry Behling are distinguishable from this case in important respects that render the holdings and reasoning in those cases inapplicable here. Some cases are distinguishable because they involved different offenses from the defamation/disparagement offense at issue in this case. See, e.g., Stroh Brewing Co., 127 F.3d at 566-68 (finding a duty to defend under personal injury or advertising injury provision if caused by an offense of humiliation or discrimination, which was found to include alleged price discrimination, [*43] which was alleged in the underlying complaint); *Auto Owners Ins. Co. v. La Oasis, Inc., No. 2:04-CV-174, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43565, 2005 WL 1313684, at 5-10 (N.D. Ind. May 26, 2005) (analyzing advertising injury coverage based upon offenses of misappropriation of advertising ideas or style of doing business and infringement of copyright, title, or slogan); Audiology Found. of Am., 745 N.E.2d at 306-08 (finding a duty to defend under advertising injury provision based upon the offense of misappropriating advertising ideas or style of doing business, not the defamation/disparagement offense). Other cases are distinguishable because the facts alleged in the underlying complaints in those cases involved allegations of defamation and disparaging statements. See, e.g., Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Eastern Atl. Ins. Co., 260 F.3d 742, 744-45 (7th Cir. 2001) (finding a duty to defend under coverage involving the defamation/disparagement offense because of allegations of the underlying counterclaim referenced a letter that expressed concern over a particular person's character, suggested defamation by false notification and disparagement of services, and charged tortious interference with an agreement); Tews Funeral Home, Inc. v. Ohio Cas. Ins. Co., 832 F.2d 1037, 1040-41 (7th Cir. 1987) [*44] (per curiam) (finding a duty to defend under personal injury and advertising offense coverage in a case alleging federal and state antitrust claims in addition to common law business torts including claims that the insured conspired to make false, misleading, and defamatory statements disparaging plaintiffs' products and services and wilfully disparaged goods, services, or business of plaintiffs in advertisements); Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. OSI Indus., 831 N.E.2d 192, 199 (Ind. Ct. App. 2005) (finding a duty to defend under personal injury provision that included the defamation/disparagement offense because the underlying complaint alleged that the insureds disparaged a particular product, technology, and ownership of the product or technology; North Vermillion Cmty. Sch. Corp., 665 N.E.2d at 634-35 (finding a duty to defend under personal injury coverage when policy provided coverage for the publication or utterance of a libel or slander or of other defamatory or disparaging material and when underlying complaint alleged humiliation, embarrassment, and damages to reputation caused by defendants' conduct, which included impugning plaintiff's good reputation, harassing plaintiff, subjecting [*45] plaintiff to ridicule and humiliation, making derogatory evaluations, and alleging incompetency and neglect of duty by plaintiff).

Westfield sought summary judgment against GBS and Larry Behling as to coverage for bodily injury and property damage under the CGL policy and the Commercial Umbrella policy. As Westfield correctly notes, GBS and Larry Behling "did oppose Westfield's contention that Gariup's Complaint failed to allege 'bodily injury' or 'property damage' caused by an 'occurrence'." (Westfield Reply Br. 2, DE 22.) Because there appears to be no genuine issue of material fact, the Court will determine as a matter of law whether Westfield is entitled to judgment on these coverage issues.

Under the CGL policy, Westfield agreed to defend and indemnify GBS in a suit seeking damages because of "bodily injury" and "property damage" caused by an "occurrence" in the coverage territory and during the policy period. Under the Commercial Umbrella policy, Westfield agreed to defend and indemnify GBS in a suit seeking damages because of "personal injury" (i.e., bodily injury or personal and advertising [*46] injury) or "property damage" caused by an "occurrence" during the policy period. Westfield argues that Indiana has not yet addressed whether a claim under the Indiana or federal antitrust statutes qualifies as a covered "occurrence," but the Court does not need to determine that issue because the Gariup Complaint does not seek damages for "personal injury" (that is, bodily injury or personal and advertising injury), "bodily injury" (that is, bodily injury, sickness, or disease sustained by a person) or "property damage" (that is, physical injury to tangible property, resulting loss of use of that property, and loss of use of tangible property) as these terms are defined in the policies. Because Gariup is not seeking damages for "personal injury," "bodily injury" or "property damage" as defined in the policies, the Court finds that the personal injury, bodily injury, and property damage coverages are not triggered under the CGL policy or the Commercial Umbrella policy and that Westfield has no duty to defend.

E. The Duty to Indemnify

Having determined that Westfield has no duty to defend under the CGL policy or the Commercial Umbrella policy and considering that the duty to defend is [*47] broader than the duty to indemnify, it follows that Westfield has no duty to indemnify GBS or Larry Behling. Consequently, Westfield is also entitled to a declaration that it has no duty to indemnify GBS or Larry Behling in the state civil lawsuit instituted by Gariup.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Westfield's Verified Motion for Default Judgment Against Gariup Construction Company [DE 15] and Westfield's Motion for Summary Judgment Against Gil Behling & Son, Inc. and Larry Behling [DE 16], and the Court DENIES GBS and Larry Behling's Cross-Motion for Partial Summary Judgment [DE 20]. The Court DECLARES:

(1) Westfield has no duty to defend GBS or Larry Behling under Commercial Package Policy No. TRA 3 816 339 in the lawsuit brought by Gariup as Cause Number 45C010803PL00037 in the Lake Circuit Court, Crown Point Division.

(2) Westfield has no duty to indemnify GBS or Larry Behling under Commercial Package Policy No. TRA 3 816 339 in the lawsuit brought by Gariup as Cause Number 45C010803PL00037 in the Lake Circuit Court, Crown Point Division.

The Court ORDERS the Clerk of this Court to enter judgment accordingly.

SO ORDERED on March 15, 2010.

/s/ [*48] Theresa L. Springmann

THERESA L. SPRINGMANN, JUDGE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FORT WAYNE DIVISION

TYR Sport, Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear, Inc.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

March 16, 2010, Decided

CASE NO: SACV 08-529 JVS (MLGx)

Reporter

709 F. Supp. 2d 802 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27566 ; 2011-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,494

TYR SPORT, INC., Plaintiff(s), v. WARNACO SWIMWEAR, INC., et al., Defendant(s).

Subsequent History: Summary judgment granted by, Motion denied by TYR Sport, Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear, Inc., 709 F. Supp. 2d 821, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47582 (C.D. Cal., May 3, 2010)

Prior History: TYR Sport Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear Inc., 679 F. Supp. 2d 1120, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66118 (C.D. Cal., May 27, 2009)

Core Terms

swimmers, Swimming, wear, Team, disparagement, suits, summary judgment, antitrust, competitors, promotion, endorsement, switched, Lanham Act, coercion, antitrust violation, trade association, genuine issue, consumers, induce, elite, contractual relationship, nonmoving party, anti trust law, material fact, collaboration, comments, swimsuit, argues, coerce, faster

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is appropriate only where the record, read in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, indicates that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(2).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

Upon summary judgment, the burden initially is on the moving party to demonstrate an absence of a genuine issue of material fact. If the moving party meets its burden, then the nonmoving party must produce enough evidence to rebut the moving party's claim and create a genuine issue of material fact. If the nonmoving party meets this burden, then the motion will be denied.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Absence of Essential Element

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN3[] Burdens of Proof, Absence of Essential Element

Material facts are those necessary to the proof or defense of a claim, and are determined by reference to substantive law. A complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN4[] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

A fact issue is genuine if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. To demonstrate a genuine issue, the opposing party must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. The nonmoving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN5[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In deciding a motion for summary judgment, the evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor. Inferences are not drawn out of the air, and it is the opposing party's obligation to produce a factual predicate from which the inference may be drawn.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

There can be no restraint of trade without a restraint. Promotion and persuasion are not actionable as antitrust violations, even where the speaker holds extraordinary prestige and influence. Such speech is just part of the warfare of competition.

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

HN7[] Business & Corporate Law, Joint Ventures

A joint research venture alone does not violate the antitrust laws.

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

HN8[] Business & Corporate Law, Joint Ventures

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 4302.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The antitrust laws do not require an ostensibly neutral party to praise competitors equally or to refrain from disparaging a competitor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN10[] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

If a moving party fails to carry its initial burden of production upon summary judgment, the nonmoving party has no obligation to produce anything, even if the nonmoving party would have the ultimate burden of persuasion at trial.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN11[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

There are cases where the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has found no waiver if the issue was at least minimally raised in the pleadings and developed at oral argument.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN12[] Sherman Act, Claims

Under the Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, an antitrust disparagement claim in the Ninth Circuit does not depend on actual coercion or restraints on consumers. It stems from the recognition that false statements about rivals can obstruct competition and possess no off-setting redeeming virtues, even if consumers are not actually constrained in their purchasing decisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN13[] Sherman Act, Claims

Under a claim for antitrust disparagement under the Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the relevant geographic market is the area of effective competition where buyers can turn for alternate sources of supply. It can be demonstrated by the existence of certain barriers to entry, or insulation from a larger geographic market, such that supply and demand are inelastic with the larger market. The boundaries of a market can also be shown by such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors. Market definition is generally a factual determination left to the jury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

HN14[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

For a prima facie case under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a), the plaintiff must demonstrate the following: (1) the defendant made a false statement either about the plaintiff's or its own product; (2) the statement was made in commercial advertisement or promotion; (3) the statement actually deceived or had the tendency to deceive a substantial segment of its audience; (4) the deception is material; (5) the defendant caused its false statement to enter interstate commerce; and (6) the plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as a result of the false statement, either by direct diversion of sales from itself to the defendant, or by a lessening of goodwill associated with the plaintiff's product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Presumptions

HN15[] Consumer Protection, False Advertising

In the Ninth Circuit, publication of deliberately false comparative claims gives rise to a presumption of actual deception and reliance. The presumption, however, is of deception and reliance, i.e., causation, not injury. The presumption is rebuttable.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Credibility of Witnesses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN16[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

To avoid summary judgment, the plaintiff must do more than establish a prima facie case and deny the credibility of the defendant's witnesses. She must produce specific, substantial evidence rebutting defendant's evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

HN17[] Consumer Protection, False Advertising

To constitute commercial advertising, a statement must be: (1) commercial speech; (2) intended to influence consumers to buy defendant's goods or services; and (3) disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN18[] Intentional Interference, Elements

The elements of a tortious interference with contractual relations claim are (1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

HN19[] Consumer Protection, False Advertising

The case law imposes a high burden before speech in the marketplace becomes actionable antitrust conduct. Such statements must have a significant and enduring adverse impact on competition itself in the relevant markets to rise to the level of an antitrust violation. The Ninth Circuit insists on a preliminary showing of significant and more-than-temporary harmful effects on competition, and not merely upon a competitor or customer.

Counsel: [1] For Tyr Sport Inc, a California corporation, Plaintiff: Christopher W Arledge, LEAD ATTORNEY, One LLP, Costa Mesa, CA; Jennifer Sun, Lawrence J Hilton, William E Halle, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Neil LLP, Irvine, CA.

For Warnaco Swimwear Inc, a Delaware corporation, doing business as Speedo USA, Defendant: Stuart M Richter, Zia F Modabber, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Gregory S Korman, Katten Muchin Rosenman, Los Angeles, CA.

For United States Swimming Inc, an Ohio corporation, Mark Schubert, an individual, Defendants: Adam Paul Brezine, Jonathan G Fetterly, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Holme Roberts & Owen LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jennifer Bielak, Richard R Young, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Colorado Springs, CO.

For Erik Vendt, an individual, Defendant: Richard J Foster, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Office of Richard J Foster, Seal Beach, CA.

Judges: JAMES V. SELNA, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: JAMES V. SELNA

Opinion

[*805] FINAL ORDER RE MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Defendant Warnaco Swimwear, Inc., dba Speedo USA, ("Speedo") moves for summary judgment under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 on the remaining claims for relief asserted against it by Plaintiff TYR Sport, Inc. ("TYR"). Defendants United States Swimming, Inc. ("USA Swimming") and Mark Schubert [2] ("Schubert") also move for summary judgment under Rule 56 on TYR's remaining claims. Speedo and USA Swimming and Schubert (collectively, "Defendants") join each others' respective motions. TYR opposes both motions.

I. BACKGROUND

TYR and Speedo both design and manufacture high-end swimwear and accessories sold to competitive swimmers. (Statement of Genuine Issues in Opp'n to USA Swimming ("SGI USA") P 3.) USA Swimming is the national governing body ("NGB") of the sport of swimming in the United States, per the Ted Stevens Amateur Sports Act ("Sports Act"), 36 U.S.C. § 220522. (Id. P 1.) In 2006, USA Swimming hired Schubert to be the National and Olympic Team head coach and general manager, though Schubert was and remained a paid spokesperson for Speedo. (Id. PP 2, 9-10.) Speedo also has a sponsorship agreement directly with USA Swimming, and has been the exclusive swimwear equipment sponsor of USA Swimming since 1984. (Id. PP 6, 115.)

TYR alleges that Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert formed a combination [*806] to make USA Swimming a de facto sales agent for Speedo. Specifically, TYR contends that Schubert, wielding extraordinary influence in the swimming community as the Olympic and National [3] Team head coach, made false statements in promoting Speedo's products and disparaging TYR's.

Much of the controversy centers on the run-up to the 2008 Olympic Games in Beijing. At the time, high-end swimsuit manufacturers were engaged in something of an arms race. (See id. PP 13-16, 173.) Each was attempting to market suits that could significantly reduce the swimming times of elite swimmers. (See id.; Young Decl., Ex. B PP 6-9.) On February 12, 2008, Speedo released its newest suit, the LZR Racer, an upgrade from its previous suit, the Fast Skin Pro ("FS Pro"). (SGI USA PP 13; Young Decl., Ex. B PP 3-6.) TYR, one of Speedo's primary competitors in the American market, was working to develop its own elite racing suit, the Tracer Rise, in time for the run-up to the Beijing Games. (SGI USA PP 14-15.)

Schubert, a paid spokesman for Speedo and the head coach and general manager of the Olympic and National Swim Teams, touted the advantages of the just-released LZR Racer. Just prior to a swim meet in Manchester, England, Schubert gathered the swimmers on the National Team and encouraged them to wear the LZR Racer, stating that it offered a "2% advantage." (Id. P 17.) Schubert was also quoted [4] in a newspaper and magazine article by a reporter covering the meet that, "[i]f you take [the] best times of world record holders and their new times [in the LZR Racer], the difference is 2 per cent." (Id. PP 22-23; Young Decl., Ex. O.) Schubert was also allegedly quoted as saying that he "would strongly advise [the swimmers] to wear the [Speedo] suit at trials, or they may end up at home watching [the Olympics] on NBC." (Complaint P 16*(l).)* [1]

Erik Vendt ("Vendt"), an American swimmer who signed an endorsement deal with TYR in 2006, got caught up in the arms race. (SGI USA P 215.) In late 2007, as he was training to make the U.S. Olympic Team and potentially win a medal in Beijing, Vendt was dissatisfied with the suit TYR had provided. (Id. P 216.) In fall 2007, he made several calls to Schubert, his coach on the National Team and previously at the University of Southern California, to complain about his TYR suit. (Id. PP 214, 216.) Schubert recalls [5] telling Vendt to talk to his agent and TYR about his concerns. (Schubert Depo. 214:6-7, 215:4-6.)

In December 2007, Vendt and his agent met with TYR. (SGI USA P 220.) TYR invited him to test the yet-to-be-released Tracer Rise. (Id.) He was apparently very happy with it. (Id.) However, two weeks later, he informed TYR that he planned to wear the Speedo FS Pro at a January 2008 meet in Long Beach, California. (Id. P 221.) TYR responded by promptly canceling Vendt's endorsement deal. (Id.)

By the time of the U.S. Olympic Trials, only one of the TYR-sponsored swimmers present at the Manchester meet, Katie Carroll ("Carroll"), had switched from wearing a TYR suit to Speedo. (Statement of Genuine Issues in Opp'n to Speedo (SGI Speedo) P 34.) Several swimmers wore a TYR suit at the Trials and qualified for the Olympic Team. (Id. P 45.) In particular, Matt Grevers won two gold medals, a silver medal, and set a world record in Beijing

[1] Neither party has pointed the Court to evidence that Schubert actually made this statement. However, as the Defendants do not contest the issue, the Court will accept the allegation in the Complaint as true for summary judgment purposes.

while wearing the Tracer Rise. (Id. P 164.) Meanwhile, the Speedo-wearing swimmers experienced unparalleled success at the Olympics. All told, 86% of [*807] the swimming medals in Beijing, including 91% of the gold medals, were won by swimmers wearing the LZR Racer. (Id. P 55.)

The [6] arms race continued after the Olympics, with other competitors--including Arena, Jaked, and Blue 70--gaining ground on, and sometimes overtaking, the performance of the suits designed by Speedo and TYR. (Id. P 64.) However, Schubert continued his promotion of the Speedo brand, at one point advising two swimmers on the Junior National Team to wear the LZR Racer because it was "faster" than the TYR and Blue 70 suits they were wearing at the time. (Id. P 155.)

However, everything came to an end in July 2009, when FINA, the sport's international governing body, decided to ban from competitions the high-performance full-body suits, including the LZR Racer and the Tracer Rise, starting on January 1, 2010. (Id. P 67.) USA Swimming, meanwhile, decided to move the deadline for banning the full-body suits in its own competitions up to October 1, 2009. (Id.) This effectively ended the market for the high-performance swimsuits.

At this stage in the litigation, TYR has seven remaining claims against Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert. [2] TYR's First and Third claims, asserted against all three Defendants, allege a violation of the Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq. [7] The Second claim, against Speedo alone, alleges a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. The Fourth claim, against Speedo, alleges false advertising in violation of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a). The Sixth, Ninth, and Tenth claims, against all three Defendants, allege tortious interference with contractual relations, violation of the California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., and seek injunctive relief.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

HN1[] Summary judgment is appropriate only where the record, read in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, indicates "that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(2); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). HN2[] The burden initially is on the moving party to demonstrate an absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323. If the moving party meets its burden, then the nonmoving party must produce enough evidence to rebut the moving party's claim and create a genuine issue of material fact. [8] See id. at 322-23. If the nonmoving party meets this burden, then the motion will be denied. Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Fritz Co., Inc., 210 F.3d 1099, 1103 (9th Cir. 2000).

HN3[] Material facts are those necessary to the proof or defense of a claim, and are determined by reference to substantive law. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). "[A] complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322.

HN4[] A fact issue is genuine "if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. To demonstrate a genuine issue, the opposing party "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical [*808] doubt as to the material facts . . . . [T]he nonmoving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). HN5[] In deciding a motion for summary judgment, "[t]he evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences [9] are to be drawn in his favor." Id. at 255. Nevertheless, inferences are not drawn out of the air, and it is the opposing party's obligation to produce a factual predicate from which the inference may be drawn. Am. Int'l Group, Inc. v. Am. Int'l Bank, 926 F.2d 829, 837 (9th Cir. 1991).

III. DISCUSSION

---

[2] The claims are numbered here as they are in the body of the Complaint, rather than on the cover page.

The Court considers two summary judgment motions, one brought by Speedo, the other by USA Swimming and Schubert. Because of significant overlap between the motions, the Court treats them here together. The Court considers the challenged claims in turn.

A. Federal and State Antitrust Claims (First through Third Claims)

TYR alleges a conspiracy among Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert to restrain trade such that USA Swimming acted as a de facto sales agent for Speedo, promoting Speedo's products to the detriment of Speedo's competitors.

1. Coercion

In the Court's prior order on the Defendants' motions to dismiss (Docket No. 72), the Court clarified exactly what TYR would have to prove to demonstrate an unlawful conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act. (See id. at 6-9.) The Defendants had argued that TYR could not maintain a Sherman Act § 1 conspiracy claim where the alleged [10] combination was between a market participant, Speedo, and an ostensibly neutral party, USA Swimming. (Id. at 6.) The Court rejected the challenge, noting that the Supreme Court in American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 102 S. Ct. 1935, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 (1982), had recognized a species of Section 1 conspiracies involving a market participant and an ostensibly neutral party. (Docket No. 72 at 7.)

Hydrolevel involved an antitrust suit by a manufacturer of low-water fuel cutoffs for boilers against a nonprofit trade association which promulgated codes and standards for the industry. 456 U.S. at 558-59. Although the association's codes and standards were only advisory, many were incorporated into federal regulations, state laws, city ordinances, and the laws of all the Provinces of Canada. Id. at 559. "Obviously, if a manufacturer's product [could] not satisfy the applicable [association] code, it [would be] at a great disadvantage in the marketplace." Id. The association, therefore, wielded a "powerful influence" over designers of boiler systems. Id.

An employee of the plaintiff's competitor served on the association committee that prepared the standards for boilers. Id. at 560. [11] He conspired with the committee chairman to prepare an "unofficial communication" on association letterhead, suggesting that the plaintiffs's product failed to satisfy the association's code governing low-water fuel cutoffs. Id. at 560-61. This interpretation, purportedly made by the association itself, was disseminated to potential customers, thereby discouraging the purchase of the plaintiff's product. Id. at 562. The Supreme Court found that the competitor "successfully used its position with [the association] . . . to thwart [the plaintiff's] competitive challenge," [*809] and held the association liable under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id.

On their motions to dismiss in this case, Defendants countered with Schachar v. American Academy of Ophthalmology, Inc., 870 F.2d 397 (7th Cir. 1989), which held that a trade association's speech critical of a product does not constitute an antitrust violation absent some mechanism to actually enforce a restriction on the availability of the product. Id. at 399. In Schachar, a trade association labeled a particular eye surgery procedure performed by the plaintiffs as "experimental." Id. at 398. However, as the court noted:

> [The association] did not [12] require its members to desist from performing the operation or associating with those who do. It did not expel or discipline or even scowl at members who performed radial keratotomies. It did not induce hospitals to withhold permission to perform the procedure, or insurers to withhold payment; it has no authority over hospitals, insurers, state medical societies or licensing boards, and other persons who might be able to govern the performance of surgery.

Id. (emphasis added). Because the association did not attempt to use any enforcement mechanisms to prevent consumers from getting the surgery, i.e., did not restrict the supply, there was no antitrust violation, only speech. Id. at 399.

The distinction between Hydrolevel and Schachar is whether the association or neutral party actually attempts to enforce some standard--whether it punishes or threatens to punish a market actor for deviating from the standard. This distinction has been recognized by numerous other circuits in similar cases. See, e.g., Santana Prods., Inc. v.

Bobrick Washroom Equip., Inc., 401 F.3d 123, 132-33 (3d Cir. 2005) (finding no antitrust violation where trade association criticized plaintiff's products, but did [13] not coerce or restrain market actors); Int'l Healthcare Mgmt. v. Haw. Coal. For Health, 332 F.3d 600, 606 (9th Cir. 2003) (finding no antitrust violation from comments made by professional association where it did not act to constrain anyone to follow its advice); Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. Am. Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., 323 F.3d 366, 373-74 (6th Cir. 2003) (finding that a professional association did not violate antitrust laws under Hydrolevel because, like Schachar, it lacked a mechanism to enforce standards); Consol. Metal Prods., Inc. v. Am. Petroleum Inst., 846 F.2d 284, 296 (5th Cir. 1988) (finding no antitrust violation where an influential trade association delayed certification of the plaintiff's product because association did not coerce customers). It is not enough to simply point out that an association has influence over the purchasing decisions of consumers: "An organization's towering reputation does not reduce its freedom to speak out." Schachar, 870 F.2d at 399; accord Consolidated Metal, 846 F.2d at 296 ("Even if user reliance gives [the trade association] significant influence over the market, that influence may enhance, not [14] reduce, competition and consumer welfare ."). Such influence does not prevent an association from promoting a particular product, or disparaging another. Schachar, 870 F.2d at 400.

TYR attempts to distinguish Schachar and other trade association cases because USA Swimming, as an NGB, exercises "monolithic control" over its sport, see JES Props., Inc. v. USA Equestrian, Inc., 458 F.3d 1224, 1231-31 (11th Cir. 2006), unlike trade associations, which often lack comparable control over the respective trade. However, the distinction between Hydrolevel and Schachar was not the ability to restrain trade; it was that the defendant in Hydrolevel actually used its de facto force of law to do so.

[*810] TYR also argues that Schachar is inapplicable because it did not involve the "dual role" present here and in Hydrolevel, where an employee of a competitor also served as member or officer within the neutral NGB or trade association. The Court does not find this distinction relevant. See Santana, 401 F.3d at 132 (analogizing to Schachar where plaintiff had alleged a dual role). At most, it goes to motive, but TYR must show that Defendants actually restrained trade, not just that it wanted to. [3]

In short, TYR must prove actual coercion--that USA Swimming and Schubert set a standard with the threat of punishing market participants for deviating from that standard. HN6[] "There can be no restraint of trade without a restraint." Schachar, 870 F.2d at 397. Promotion and persuasion are not actionable as antitrust violations, even where the speaker holds extraordinary prestige and influence. Such speech is just part of the "[w]arfare" of competition. Id. at 399.

With these principles in mind, the Court turns to TYR's evidence that Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert coerced elite swimmers to wear Speedo suits as opposed to those of competitors.

i. The Beijing Olympics Comment

On the motion to dismiss, the Court identified a single allegation that potentially presented the necessary coercive conduct. Schubert was quoted as saying, "I would strongly advise [the swimmers] to wear the [Speedo] suit at trials, [16] or they may end up at home watching [the Olympics] on NBC." (Complaint P 16(/).) The Court, at that time, recognized that this statement could be interpreted in two ways: (1) a swimmer wearing a non-Speedo suit would be at a competitive disadvantage, thereby risking a loss at the Trials, or (2) Schubert would exclude a swimmer from the Olympic Team if the swimmer chose to wear a non-Speedo suit. (Docket No. 72 at 8-9.) At the pleading stage, the Court was required to accept TYR's interpretation--that the statement was a threat intended to coerce swimmers into wearing Speedo gear.

Now, on summary judgment, the Defendants have presented evidence that Schubert's statement could not possibly be interpreted as a threat because Schubert lacked the authority to exclude swimmers from the Olympic Team.

[3] The Court [15] also notes that the plaintiffs in Schachar did allege a dual role: "Plaintiffs say that the Academy is in the grip of professors and practitioners who favor conservative treatment, forever calling for more research (the better to justify the academics' request for grants)." 870 F.2d at 399.

First, the Defendants note that USA Swimming's Olympic International Operations Procedures Manual specifically allows swimmers to freely choose the own equipment: "Swimsuit Policy: Athletes may wear the competitive swimsuit of his/her choice." (Young Decl., Ex. D at 16.) This is consistent with the guidelines adopted by the United States Olympic Committee ("USOC"), applicable to all NGBs: "An [17] Athlete shall have the exclusive right to select his or her Specialized Equipment for use in all Protected Competition." [4] (Id., Ex. E.) Thus, at least under USA Swimming and USOC rules, Schubert lacks the authority to mandate that a particular suit be worn by swimmers. TYR concedes as much. (Opp'n to USA Swimming 5.)

Furthermore, under the official selection procedures for the 2008 Olympic Team, Schubert had no discretion with respect to who made the Team. The only criterion for [*811] selection is the athlete's swim time at the Olympic Trials--"the wall" decides who goes to the Olympics, not the coach. (See Young Decl., Ex. I.) Under the selection procedures, Schubert could not exclude a TYR-sponsored swimmer whose time was fast enough to qualify, even if he wanted to. Indeed, several TYR-sponsored swimmers qualified at the Trials and swam at the Beijing Olympics. (Zimmer 9/30/09 Depo. at 113:16-25.)

Every witness deposed in this case on this issue has acknowledged that swimmers were free to wear the suit of their choice at the Olympic Trials and [18] that Schubert had no say on who made the pool swimming team. (See, e.g., Descenza Depo. at 48:14-49:7; Furniss Depo. at 148:7-13, 149:15-150:10; Van Wie Depo. at 53:24-54-4; Zimmer 9/30/09 Depo. at 204:18-205:1.) In fact, Mary Descenza ("Descenza"), a TYR-sponsored swimmer, directly told Schubert that she intended to continue wearing TYR suits, and he did not object or pressure her to change her mind. (Descenza Depo. at 60:6-61:14.)

The Defendants having shown evidence that Schubert lacks any coercive power--any means to punish non-Speedo swimmers--with respect to the composition of the Olympic Team for pool swimming, the burden falls to TYR to produce evidence rebutting the Defendants' showing. TYR concedes that it cannot make this showing, at least with respect to the pool swimmers. [5] (SGI Speedo P 40.) TYR admits that the pool swimming Olympic Team is determined by who is "first to the wall." [6]

Instead, TYR notes that Schubert has discretion to choose swimmers for the open water swimming Olympic Team, which is not governed by the same "first to the wall" rule. Therefore, TYR argues, Schubert's statement could reasonably be interpreted as a threat to open water swimmers hoping to make the Olympics. Putting aside the fact that Schubert's comment was made within the context of a pool swim meet, the actual selection of the open water team belies TYR's claim of coercion. Schubert and Bill Rose, the TYR-sponsored head coach of the open water team, chose Chloe Sutton to represent the United States in Beijing over Micha Burden. (Rose Decl. P 9.) Both swimmers wore TYR suits. [7] (Id. P 5.) Although Burden bested Sutton at the Trials, Burden failed to qualify for the Olympics at an international qualifying competition, placing 31 st. (Id. PP 4, 8.) Rose, who was the personal coach of both Burden and Sutton, told Schubert that he felt that Sutton had the best chance to succeed in Beijing. (Id. PP 9.) [20] There is no evidence that suit choice played a role, or that either swimmer was pressured or coerced by Schubert to wear Speedo. [8]

---

[4] The parties do not dispute that swimsuits are "Specialized Equipment" and that the Olympic Trials and Olympic Games are "Protected Competition."

[5] However, TYR points out that an extra swimmer was added as an alternate, even though she had not qualified based on her time at the Trials. (SGI Speedo P 40.)

[6] TYR offers the argument that Schubert could influence who reached the wall first through psychological means by "planting in swimmers' [19] minds that the [Speedo suit] is superior and that other suits are inferior." (Opp'n to Speedo 7-8.) This supposed psychological trick does not constitute coercion in any sense of the word.

[7] Burden was sponsored by TYR and Sutton was an amateur who chose to wear TYR.

[8] A swimmer for the men's open water team was also sponsored by TYR. (Zimmer Depo. at 113:16-21.)

Considering the above evidence, Schubert's statement that swimmers not wearing the Speedo suit "may end up at home watching [the Olympics] on NBC," cannot be reasonably interpreted as a threat to exclude swimmers who did not wear Speedo. The evidence establishes that Schubert did not have such authority, that the swimmers and other relevant persons understood [*812] that Schubert did not have such authority, and that TYR-sponsored swimmers made the U.S. team and competed in Beijing. There is no triable issue of fact as to whether Schubert's statement constituted an unlawful restraint of trade.

ii. Schubert's Attempts to Persuade Elite Swimmers

TYR argues that Schubert restrained trade by attempting to persuade several elite swimmers to wear Speedo suits from his position of "extraordinary influence." However, as discussed above, statements from a position of influence alone do not constitute "restraints." [21] A person or organization having prestige or respect does not lose the right to promote or criticize products in the marketplace. A statement must set some standard backed by a threat to punish to be actionable as an antitrust violation.

TYR points to several instances of Schubert attempting to persuade swimmers to switch to Speedo. At the Junior Pan Pacific meet in January 2009, Schubert approached Patrick Murphy ("Murphy") and Nick D'Innocenzo ("D'Innocenzo"), two swimmers on the Junior National Team who wore non-Speedo suits. [9] (King Depo. at 13:8-12, 16:6-17:1, 18:3-20:21.) Schubert "suggested in a roundabout sort of way that [the LZR Racer] was the best suit to wear, the fastest suit or the faster suit out of the suits that the boys were wearing." (Id. at 18:25-19:2.) Both swimmers subsequently switched to the LZR Racer. (Id. at 23:7-24:2.) However, Murphy immediately switched back to his TYR suit after a single race, as he did not like the feel of the LZR Racer. [10] (Id. at 24:25-25:10. 61:6-23.) TYR emphasizes that Brian King ("King"), Murphy's coach, said that Murphy "said he felt that he had to wear the LZR suit and would do it, but he didn't want to." [11] (Id. at 24:17-19.)

Schubert's statement to Murphy and D'Innocenzo that the Speedo suit was "faster" is not a restraint on trade. Schubert did not threaten to take any action against them if they chose not to wear Speedo and, as far as the record shows, no action was taken when Murphy did not so chose. Murphy continued to wear the TYR suit, after one go with the LZR, without repercussion. That Murphy felt pressured to wear the suit after Schubert's comments does not evidence the impropriety of Schubert's actions. Murphy did not explain why he felt pressured--whether it was pressure to conform, awe of the National Team head coach, or some other pressure--and he clearly felt free to disregard the LZR after one race. Schubert's "faster" comment was simply promotion of Speedo's product, which Schubert is entitled to do regardless of how influential he is within the swimming community.

Later in the meet, Schubert told King that Murphy was not allowed to wear [23] his TYR swim cap at the meet and had to wear the National Team cap, which had a Speedo logo. (Id. at 20:25-22:2.) However, Schubert's objection was due to the fact that Murphy's personal cap had his name on it, which, according to Schubert, was against team rules. (Id. at 53:20-54-24.) This does not establish that Murphy was coerced to wear a Speedo swimsuit. [12]

[*813] TYR also points out efforts by Schubert to convince swimmers sponsored by Nike, including Jason Lezak, Brendan Hansen, Aaron Peirsol, Cullen Jones, and Kaitlin Sandeno to wear Speedo suits at the Beijing Games. (Young Decl., Ex. K P 12-14.) Again, however, TYR fails to point to any threat Schubert made. Without a threat, Schubert's statements constitute mere promotion, not coercion.

---

[9] Murphy [22] wore a TYR and D'Innocenzo wore a Blue 70 suit. (King Depo. at 19:3-4.)

[10] The record is silent on whether D'Innocenzo stuck with the Speedo suit.

[11] This testimony presents an obvious hearsay problem and may not be admissible at trial. Fed. R. Evid. 801(c).

[12] In any case, Murphy disobeyed Schubert and wore his personal TYR cap for the remainder for the meet, apparently without punishment. (King Depo. at 55:4-19.)

TYR presents evidence that a Romanian swimmer, Razvan Florea, switched from TYR to a Speedo suit because of Schubert's comments about the LZR Racer's superior performance. (Florea Decl. PP 5-6.) TYR fails to explain how Schubert or USA Swimming could have any enforcement power against a Romanian [24] swimmer.

Finally, TYR points to the Manchester National Team meeting where Schubert touted the advantages of the latest Speedo suit. [13] Descenza, one of the swimmers at the meeting, testified that Schubert "tried to make a very highly persuasive case and influence. He does have a lot of influence over swimmers because he is such a prominent figure in USA swimming." (Descenza Depo. at 19:23-20:1.) Two other swimmers tried the Speedo suit after the meeting. (Marshall Depo. at 56:11-13; Van Wie Depo. at 16:14-15.) Again, Schubert's statements at the meeting do not establish coercion. Schubert tried to be persuasive, tried to convince swimmers to test the suit, but nothing indicates that he ever attempted to constrain their choice. His prominence within the swimming community does not lessen his ability to legally promote Speedo's product.

iii. Athlete Compensation & Non-Olympic Competitions

In their attempt to establish that Schubert could coerce swimmers to wear Speedo, TYR points to all the discretionary power Schubert [25] has to potentially punish swimmers: (1) he has access to a discretionary fund to pay swimmers; (2) he can choose which swimmers compete on the relays in competition; [14] (3) he has discretion to designate certain swim clubs as "Post-Graduate Training Centers," entitling them to funding from USA Swimming and the USOC; and (4) he has the power to choose swimmers for certain non-Olympic Events, such as the "Duel in the Pool."

The problem is that TYR has failed to connect any threat made by Schubert to the hypothetical powers to punish. It is not enough to show that Schubert could restrain trade--TYR must come forward with evidence that he actually did so. The only potential threat Schubert made was regarding a spot on the Olympic Team. However, as discussed above, Schubert lacked the authority to follow through on the supposed threat. All of the other actions identified by TYR constitute mere promotion--statements to swimmers that the Speedo suit was faster or provided an advantage. TYR has failed to identify any evidence demonstrating that Schubert threatened, [26] even implicitly, to use his discretionary powers to punish a swimmer for not wearing Speedo.

iv. Research Collaboration

TYR also argues that Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert restrained trade by collaborating to develop faster swimwear, to the exclusion of Speedo's competitors. TYR cites no authority that such collaboration violates antitrust laws. HN7[] A joint research venture alone does not violate the antitrust laws. See United States v. Line Material Co., 333 U.S. 287, 310, 68 [*814] S. Ct. 550, 92 L. Ed. 701 (1948);HN8[] see also 15 U.S.C. § 4302 ("In any action under the antitrust laws . . . the conduct of any person in making or performing a contract to carry out a joint venture . . . shall not be deemed illegal per se."). This is particularly true where one of the collaborators, USA Swimming, is not even a market participant. TYR has pointed to no anticompetitive effect of the joint research project. Indeed, such joint research is likely to have many procompetitive effects. [15]

Nor does the fact that USA Swimming kept information gleaned from the collaboration secret [27] demonstrate a restraint of trade. Secrecy is a necessary part of the collaboration; if the results were immediately made public, the manufacturer would have no incentive to expend the time and effort to collaborate with an NGB on research, an activity potentially beneficial to competition. Manufacturers are not required to be altruistic when working in a joint venture with a non-profit.

[13] The parties dispute whether Schubert was referring to an advantage the LZR Racer had over the old Speedo suit, the FS Pro, or over all suits currently in the marketplace.

[14] The swimmers sometimes receive bonuses from sponsors for being chosen to the relay team. (See, e.g., TYR Exs. 18 at 18, 19 at Ex. A.)

[15] The combination of resources and expertise of USA Swimming and Speedo is likely to help innovation in swimsuit technology, thereby benefitting the consumer.

v. Schubert's Role as Technical Advisor

Finally, TYR complains of Schubert's role within USA Swimming to disseminate technical information to the public. TYR argues that Schubert, as a "gatekeeper," only disseminated information favorable to Speedo, misstated information, and withheld information unfavorable to Speedo and favorable to Speedo's competitors. These complaints do not make out a claim of coercion. HN9[] The antitrust laws do not require an ostensibly neutral party to praise competitors equally or to refrain from disparaging a competitor, subject to the limits discussed below with regard to TYR's disparagement theory. See Schachar, 870 F.2d at 399.

Because TYR has failed to show a genuine issue of fact with regard to coercion, the Defendants are entitled to summary adjudication on that issue. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(d). [28] While not agreeing with the Court's application of Schachar, TYR conceded at oral argument that the Defendants were entitled to this relief on its compulsion theory.

2. Disparagement

At the hearing, TYR argued that the Defendants had not addressed TYR's disparagement theory of antitrust liability and therefore failed to carry their initial burden under Celotex of demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact as to an essential element of TYR's claim. 477 U.S. at 323. This argument was not specifically advanced in either of TYR's opposition briefs. It was, however, alluded to in the opposition to USA Swimming and Schubert's motion. [16]

The Defendants argue that, because they moved for summary judgment on the entire claim, the burden shifted to TYR to raise a genuine issue of material fact; in [*815] this case, to raise their alternative theory of antitrust liability. However, TYR was not obligated to produce anything unless and until the Defendants carried their initial Celotex burden.HN10[] "If a moving party fails to carry its initial burden of production, the nonmoving party has no obligation to produce anything, even if the nonmoving party would have the ultimate burden of persuasion at trial." Nissan Fire, 210 F.3d at 1102-03 (emphasis added). By failing to squarely address TYR's disparagement theory, the Defendants have not carried their initial Celotex burden. Thus, TYR's burden of production with regard to the disparagement theory was never [30] triggered.

This is not a new theory raised for the first time to prevent or delay summary judgment. TYR's Complaint specifically alleges that the Defendants engaged in a campaign of false disparagement using the prestige and apparent impartiality of USA Swimming and Schubert. (Compl. PP 13-17.) The disparagement theory was also squarely addressed following the motions to dismiss, as evidenced by the Court's discussion of American Professional Testing Service, Inc. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal, 108 F.3d 1147 (9th Cir. 1997), in denying dismissal of TYR's disparagement claim. (Docket No. 72 at 10.) By completely failing to address a live issue, the Defendants failed to carry their Celotex burden.

Nor has TYR waived its argument by saving it for the hearing. Although the Court has discretion to refuse to consider arguments not raised in a timely manner, see, e.g., Brass v. County of Los Angeles, 328 F.3d 1192, 1197-98 (9th Cir. 2003), the Court does not consider the argument waived here, where the disparagement theory is clearly set forth in the pleadings, remained a live issue following the Court's order on the motions to dismiss, and is alluded to--albeit rather obliquely--in TYR's [31] opposition papers. Cf. United States v. Fay, 545 F. Supp. 2d 1067, 1071 (E.D. Cal. 2008) ("HN11[] [T]here are cases where the Ninth Circuit has found no waiver if the issue was at least minimally raised in the pleadings and developed at oral argument . . . .").

---

[16] "USA Swimming and Schubert misread the [Court's order on the motions to dismiss] (and the referenced authorities), and they fundamentally mischaracterize--i.e., narrow the focus--of the allegations and evidence establishing defendants' coordinated anti-competitive conduct. USA Swimming and Schubert try to cast TYR's claims as limited to the 2008 Olympic team and limited to the rules regarding swimwear of choice. However, the anticompetitive conduct shown by TYR is much broader: it predates the Olympics by more than a year and encompasses [29] behavior unrelated to team selection and technical equipment rules. Put in summary judgment parlance, USA Swimming and Schubert fail to meet their burden of negating an essential element of TYR's claims or demonstrating an absence of evidence supporting them because they miscast them in the narrow range they think falls within the 'undisputed evidence.'" (Opp'n to USA Swimming 13.)

The Defendants also argue that the disparagement claim fails because TYR lacks evidence demonstrating that elite swimmers or consumers were ever restrained from purchasing TYR products. However, HN12[] an antitrust disparagement claim in the Ninth Circuit does not depend on actual coercion or restraints on consumers. It stems from the recognition that "[f]alse statements about rivals can obstruct competition and possess no off-setting redeeming virtues," even if consumers are not actually constrained in their purchasing decisions. See Harcourt Brace, 108 F.3d at 1152 (quoting 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P 737b at 280-81 (1978)).

Accordingly, the Defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on TYR's antitrust claims to the extent they rely on a disparagement theory.

3. Illegal Agreement

The Defendants contend that TYR's Sherman Act § 1 and Cartwright Act claims fail because they lack evidence of an illegal agreement. Relying on Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) [32] and Matsushita, the Defendants argue TYR fails to raise a triable issue of fact as to whether the various agreements between Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert are illegal, because those agreements are entirely consistent with legal sponsorship agreements.

The Defendants misapply the holdings of Monsanto and Matsushita. These cases stand for the proposition that, in an antitrust conspiracy case, one cannot reasonably infer a combination or conspiracy [*816] solely from conduct that is consistent with independent action, without additional evidence of an actual agreement. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588; Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-64. Here, in contrast, there is unquestionably evidence of an agreement between the parties. TYR need not rely on an inference from circumstantial evidence consistent with independent competition.

4. Market Definition

Finally, the Defendants argue that they are entitled to summary judgment because TYR cannot show a genuine issue of fact as to the relevant geographic market. TYR alleges a market for "high-end competitive swimwear and accessories" in the geographic market of "the entire United States and its territories." (Compl. P 9.)

HN13[] The relevant geographic market is the [33] "area of effective competition . . . where buyers can turn for alternate sources of supply." Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1490 (9th Cir. 1991) (citation and quotation marks omitted). It can be demonstrated by the existence of certain barriers to entry, or insulation from a larger geographic market, such that supply and demand are inelastic with the larger market. Id. The boundaries of a market can also be shown by "such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Image Tech. Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1204 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). Market definition is generally a factual determination left to the jury. Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1476 (9th Cir. 1997).

TYR has sufficient evidence of the United States as a separate geographic market to overcome summary judgment on the issue. Internal emails and memos at both Speedo and USA Swimming [34] indicate that they consider the United States market as distinct from the international market. (TYR Exs. 37-39.) Steve Furniss ("Furniss"), the Executive Vice President of TYR and who has worked for 34 years in the performance swimwear industry, testified as to numerous barriers to competition: [17] (1) the ability to provide local technical support; (2) on-the-ground customer service networks able to quickly respond to the needs of elite swim teams; (3) relationships with athletes, coaches, and swim directors; (4) cultural differences in suit preferences; (5) differences in the physiology of [17] Speedo, citing Morgan, objects to Furniss's declaration on the grounds that it is impermissible lay witness testimony on the technical subject of the relevant geographic market. See 924 F.2d at 1490. This objection is overruled because Furniss testifies only as to factual characteristics of the geographic market, which is within his competency [35] as an industry veteran. He does not give a conclusory opinion on market definition, unlike the witnesses in Morgan. See id.

---

swimmers from country to country; (6) differences in sizing and labeling requirements; (7) differences in local regulations regarding consumer protections, packaging, and the environment; and (8) differences in currency and pricing. (Furniss Decl. PP 4-6.)

Accordingly, the Court finds that the Defendants are entitled to summary adjudication on the issue of antitrust coercion, but not on TYR's antitrust theory of antitrust disparagement.

B. False Advertising Claim (Fourth Claim)

Speedo seeks summary judgment on TYR's false advertising claim under the [*817] Lanham Act. TYR's false claims are based on two statements made by Schubert: (1) a statement he made to swimmers and a reporter at a swim meet, that the LZR suit offered "a 2% advantage"; and (2) a statement to two youth swimmers that the LZR suit was "faster" than their non-Speedo suits.

HN14[] For a prima facie case under the Lanham Act, the plaintiff must demonstrate the following: "(1) the defendant made a false statement either about the plaintiff's or its own product; (2) the statement was made in commercial advertisement or promotion; (3) the statement actually deceived or had the tendency to deceive a substantial segment of its audience; (4) the deception is material; (5) the defendant caused its false statement to enter interstate commerce; and (6) the plaintiff has been [36] or is likely to be injured as a result of the false statement, either by direct diversion of sales from itself to the defendant, or by a lessening of goodwill associated with the plaintiff's product." Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1052 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Jarrow Formulas, Inc. v. Nutrition Now, Inc., 304 F.3d 829 (9th Cir. 2002)).

1. Schubert's Statements to Swimmers

Speedo argues that, even assuming that Schubert's statement can be proven false or misleading, TYR cannot demonstrate injury. His statement at the Manchester swim meet was to an audience of 25 swimmers, only one of whom switched from a wearing TYR to a Speedo on a regular basis. [18] (Kerska Decl. PP 1-4; Carroll Decl. PP 4-16.) The one swimmer who switched, Katie Carroll, did so months later at the Olympic Trials after she had swam a poor first race in her TYR Tracer Rise suit. (Carroll Decl. PP 11-15.) She testified that Schubert's 2% comment had nothing to do with her decision. (Id. P 13.)

Schubert's statement to the two youth swimmers, Murphy and D'Innocenzo, similarly failed to [37] result in lost sales to TYR. Murphy tried the LZR Racer for one race and then switched back to the TYR suit, because he did not like the feel of the Speedo suit. (King Decl. at 24:25-25:10. 61:6-23.) D'Innocenzo was not a TYR customer and, instead, wore a Blue 70 suit. (Id. at 19:3.)

TYR contends that it need not prove injury because Schubert's statements were literally false.HN15[] In the Ninth Circuit, "[p]ublication of deliberately false comparative claims gives rise to a presumption of actual deception and reliance." Southland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d 1134, 1146 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting U-Haul Int'l, Inc. v. Jartran, Inc., 793 F.2d 1034, 1040-41 (9th Cir. 1986). The presumption, however, is of "deception and reliance," i.e., causation, not injury. The presumption does not cure TYR's failure to show evidence of any actual loss of sales.

Moreover, the presumption is rebuttable. See Jartran, 793 F.2d at 1041. The only injury fairly traceable to Schubert's comments was Carroll's defection to Speedo several months after the Manchester comments. However, Carroll specifically stated that her choice to switch sponsors had nothing to do with Schubert's comments. TYR has no evidence [38] rebutting this testimony. Cf. Bradley v. Harcourt, Brace and Co., 104 F.3d 267, 270 (9th Cir. 1996) ("HN16[] To avoid summary judgment, [the plaintiff] must do more than establish a prima facie case and deny the credibility of the [*818] [defendant's] witnesses. She must produce specific, substantial evidence [rebutting defendant's evidence].")

[18] At the elite level, most swimmers are sponsored by a swimwear company and do not purchase their own suits.

Finally, any claim for injunctive relief under the Lanham Act is moot, as it is undisputed that there is no market for the high-performance swimsuits among elite swimmers following FINA's ban.

Because TYR cannot demonstrate injury based on Schubert's statement at the Manchester meet and the statements to Murphy and D'Innocenzo, TYR's Lanham Act claim based on those statements fails as a matter of law.

2. Schubert's Statement to Craig Lord

Speedo argues that Schubert's claim of a 2% advantage made to swim reporter Craig Lord ("Lord") cannot constitute a Lanham Act violation because it is not "commercial advertising or promotion." HN17[] To constitute commercial advertising, a statement must be: (1) commercial speech; (2) intended to influence consumers to buy defendant's goods or services; and (3) disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public. Boule v. Hutton, 328 F.3d 84 (2d Cir. 2003).

Speedo, [39] citing Boule, contends that Schubert's statement to Lord fails the first prong because the statement was made to the press about a matter of public concern. In Boule, the defendants, son and daughter-in-law of the late Russian avant garde painter Lazar Khidekel, made statements to an art reporter questioning the authenticity of the plaintiffs' Khidekel collection. Id. at 86, 88. At the time, the defendants were attempting to sell their own collection of Khidekel works. Id. at 87. The statements were quoted in the reporter's magazine article about fraudulent artwork. Id. at 88.

The Second Circuit found that the statements in the magazine article did not constitute commercial speech:

> We have little hesitation in deciding that as a matter of law the [magazine] article, and the [defendants'] statements quoted in that article, are not commercial speech. The article itself addresses a matter of public concern--fraud in the art market--and is certainly protected. The [defendants'] statements contained in the article are inextricably intertwined with the reporters' coverage of their topic. The statements by the [defendants] in [the magazine] contribute to reporters' discussion of an issue of [40] public importance and occur in a forum that has traditionally been granted full protection under the First Amendment. As always with the public expression of opinion, "we have been careful not to permit overextension of the Lanham Act to intrude on First Amendment values." Consequently, the defendants were entitled to a grant of summary judgment on that portion of the Lanham Act claim that addressed the statements by the [defendants] in [the magazine].

Id. at 91-92 (footnote and citation omitted).

Likewise, Lord's article in SwimNews.com addressed a matter of public concern; namely, the public debate, "confusion, doubt and denial" about the effect of Speedo's new high-performance suit on the performance of swimmers. (Young Decl., Ex. O.) The article is clearly protected speech. And like the defendants' statements in Boule, Schubert's statement regarding the performance of athletes in the Speedo LZR Racer is "inextricably intertwined with the reporter['s] coverage of [the] topic." See 328 F.3d at 91. As such, under Boule, Schubert's statement to Lord cannot constitute a Lanham Act violation.

In its opposition brief, TYR did not address Boule or the statement to Lord, apparently conceding [41] that it does not constitute commercial speech actionable under the Lanham Act. Accordingly, Speedo is entitled to summary judgment on TYR's fourth claim. [19]

[*819] C. Intentional Interference with Contractual Relations (Sixth Claim)

[19] The Court does not reach the question of whether Schubert's statement can be proven literally false.

TYR's tortious interference with contractual relations claim is predicated on the termination of the endorsement deal between TYR and swimmer Erik Vendt. During his endorsement deal with TYR, Vendt decided to wear a Speedo suit at a swim meet. TYR canceled his endorsement deal in response.

HN18[] The elements of a tortious interference with contractual relations claim are "(1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage." Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal.3d 1118, 1126, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587 (1990).

The Defendants contend that they cannot be liable because (1) TYR, not Vendt, breached the contract, and (2) TYR has not demonstrated [42] an intentional act on the part of any of the Defendants "designed to induce a breach or disruption." The Court need not reach the breach of contract issue, because TYR does not have sufficient evidence to create a triable issue of fact as to whether any of the Defendants intentionally induced Vendt to breach or disrupt his relationship with TYR. [20]

TYR admits that it does not have direct evidence that the Defendants induced Vendt to breach. However, it points to circumstantial evidence that it claims raises a triable issue of fact as to whether Schubert and Stu Isaac ("Isaac"), a Speedo-sponsored swim coach, induced Vendt to terminate his contract with TYR.

Schubert testified that Vendt called him several times in the fall of 2007 to complain about his TYR suits. (Schubert Depo. at 213:9-215:23.) He also testified that he told Vendt to talk to his agent and communicate his dissatisfaction directly to TYR. (Id. at 214:6-7, 215:4-6.) [43] Vendt, however, stated in an interrogatory response that he never discussed his TYR suits with Schubert. (TYR Ex. 47 at 2.) When pressed at a deposition, he stated that he did not recall discussing TYR suits with Schubert in 2007, but that he may have around March 2008. [21] (Vendt Depo. 148:24-149:18.)

TYR contends that a reasonable jury could find that during the calls in fall 2007, Schubert urged Vendt to end his relationship with TYR based on the following facts: (1) Vendt's evasiveness during discovery regarding the calls; (2) Schubert's public comments urging swimmers to use the LZR Racer; (3) that Schubert used money from his discretionary account to pay Vendt after TYR canceled the contract; (4) Schubert's failed negotiations with TYR for an endorsement deal in 2004; and (5) the fact that Vendt claimed to have secured an endorsement deal with Speedo after TYR canceled his deal.

This circumstantial evidence is insufficient to create [44] a triable issue of fact. First, it is undisputed that Vendt initiated the calls to Schubert, not vice versa. This [*820] is, of course, not dispositive, but certainly weighs heavily against the notion that Schubert acted to intentionally induce Vendt to switch vendors.

Second, Schubert's public promotion of Speedo products does not establish that he ever urged a swimmer to breach an endorsement deal. It would be unreasonable to infer that Schubert privately urged Vendt to withhold performance of the endorsement deal from his public comments promoting Speedo.

Finally, the remaining evidence is too tenuous to establish a genuine issue of fact. The Court fails to see how Vendt's evasiveness establishes Schubert's intentional tortious conduct, especially given that Schubert himself appears to have been entirely forthcoming about the calls. The actions taken by Schubert and Speedo after the Vendt lost his TYR deal shed little light on their actions before. [22] And Schubert's alleged motive to injure TYR

---

[20] It is worth noting that it appears that TYR terminated Vendt--not vice versa. (See TYR Ex. 45.) TYR's action was predicated on Vendt's choice to wear a competitor's suit, but he appears to have had a unilateral contractual right to do so. (Speedo Ex. 283 § 3.5.)

[21] Vendt's testimony is unclear as to whether the March 2008 calls were with TYR or Schubert; Vendt appears to have been confused by the question. (See Vendt Depo. at 149:2-12.). However, the Court accepts TYR's interpretation for summary judgment purposes.

because of the failure to secure a TYR endorsement deal in 2004 is far too tenuous to provide any significant probative value.

TYR also points to a meeting Vendt allegedly had with Isaac, his Speedo-sponsored coach at Club Wolverine. Vendt testified that he had visited Isaac's home several times, but only when Isaac was not there--Vendt's girlfriend at the time was good friends with Isaac's wife. (Vendt Depo. at 96:7-12.) TYR contends that this is inconsistent with Isaac's testimony that Vendt and his girlfriend once came over to cook a turkey for Thanksgiving. (Isaac Depo. at 227:1-11.) However, Isaac's testimony does not, in fact, establish that he was there or met with Vendt at that time. [23] In any case, nothing indicates that swimsuits were ever discussed.

To overcome summary judgment, TYR needs to show more than a scintilla of evidence. But that is all they have here; disconnected bits of circumstantial evidence. Even if those bits are summed, no reasonable jury could find by a preponderance of the evidence that Schubert or Isaac intentionally induced Vendt to breach his contractual relationship with TYR. Therefore, the defendants are entitled to summary judgment on TYR's Sixth claim.

D. Remaining State Law Claims (Ninth and Tenth Claims)

The Defendants argue that TYR's UCL claim fails because it is predicated on the TYR's other causes of action. However, because TYR's antitrust disparagement claim survives, TYR can base its UCL claim on the Defendants' alleged "unlawful" business practices constituting violating the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act, and "unfair" business practices that "threaten[] an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violate[] the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its [47] effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens [*821] or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

TYR's tenth claim seeks only injunctive relief and does not state an independent cause of action. However, because TYR's antitrust claims and UCL claim survive summary judgment, TYR's claim for injunctive relief remains as well.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the motions for summary judgment are GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. Speedo is entitled to summary judgment with respect to TYR's Fourth and Sixth Claims, and USA Swimming and Schubert are entitled to summary judgment on TYR's Sixth Claim. Speedo, USA Swimming, and Schubert are entitled to summary adjudication on the remaining claims to the extent they rely on a coercion theory of antitrust liability.

As noted above, the Court concludes that the Defendants failed to carry their initial Celotex burden with respect to TYR's theory of antitrust liability for disparagement. However, HN19[] the case law imposes a high burden before speech in the marketplace becomes actionable antitrust conduct. Such statements "must have a significant [48] and enduring adverse impact on competition itself in the relevant markets to rise to the level of an antitrust violation." Harcourt Brace, 108 F.3d at 1152. In fact, the Ninth Circuit "insist[s] on a preliminary showing of significant and more-than-temporary harmful effects on competition (and not merely upon a competitor or customer)." Id. at 1151 (internal quotation marks omitted).

---

[22] This is especially true given that Schubert did not use his discretionary [45] fund to pay Vendt until April 2008, roughly three months after TYR canceled his endorsement deal. (Schubert Depo. at 218:22-219:3.) And although Vendt claimed to have a Speedo deal in March 2008, (Vendt Depo., Ex. 295), Speedo did not propose a sponsorship deal until May 2008, four months after the end of his TYR deal, and, because of this lawsuit, no deal was ever reached. (Supp. Isaac Decl. PP 4-6.)

[23] "I do believe that one time over a Thanksgiving [Vendt and his girlfriend, Kim] . . . wanted to try to roast a turkey for the first time in their lives, [46] and they brought a turkey over. And my wife helped them, and even went back to their apartment to help them finish off cooking the turkey. I was not involved in that process, thank goodness." (Issac Depo. 227:4-11 (emphasis added).)

The Court believes that the issue of the requisite preliminary showing should be tested before the matter proceeds to trial. To that end, the Court is willing to entertain a further summary judgment motion, even if that requires a slightly collapsed motions schedule [24] or a brief delay in the trial. The Court schedules a telephonic status conference for March 8, 2010 at 11:00 a.m. to discuss the issue.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: March 16, 2010

/s/ James V. Selna

JAMES V. SELNA

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

[24] The combination of Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Local Rules results in a minimum 49-day motions cycle.

LexisNexis

Flores v. EI Maint. Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

March 18, 2010, Decided; March 18, 2010, Filed

No. C 09-3613 CW

Reporter
2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25583 *; 2010 WL 1010013

MANUEL FLORES and ALEJANDRO SICAJAU, Plaintiffs, v. EI MAINTENANCE COMPANY and KEN IRWIN, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Amended by, On reconsideration by Flores v. EI Maint. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30086 (N.D. Cal., Mar. 29, 2010)

Core Terms

allegations, overtime, minimum wage, meal, failure to pay

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN1[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

A complaint must contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim is appropriate only when the complaint does not give the defendant fair notice of a legally cognizable claim and the grounds on which it rests. In considering whether the complaint is sufficient to state a claim, the court will take all material allegations as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. However, this principle is inapplicable to legal conclusions; threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, are not taken as true.

Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Remedies > Private Suits

HN3[] Remedies, Private Suits

In actions to enforce Fair Labor Standards Act provisions, no employee shall be a party plaintiff to any such action unless he gives his consent in writing to become such a party and such consent is filed in the court in which such action is brought. 29 U.S.C.S. § 216(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN4[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., prohibits any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. The UCL incorporates other laws and treats violations of those laws as unlawful business practices independently actionable under state law. Violation of almost any federal, state or local law may serve as the basis for a UCL claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN5[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Claims under California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., do not require allegations of anticompetitive conduct; the UCL borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable.

Counsel: [*1] For Manuel Flores, Alejandro Sicajau, Plaintiffs: Adam Lee Pedersen, Adam Wang, Law Office of Adam Wang, San Jose, CA.

For EI Maintenance Company, also known as E.I.M Demolition, Ken Irwin, Defendants: James Louis Kohl, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of James Louis Kohl, Walnut Creek, CA.

Judges: CLAUDIA WILKEN, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: CLAUDIA WILKEN

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS AND ALTERNATIVE MOTION TO STRIKE

(Docket No. 18)

Defendants EI Maintenance Company and Ken Irwin move to dismiss or, in the alternative, to strike claims asserted by Plaintiffs Manuel Flores and Alejandro Sicajau. Defendants also move for a more definite statement. Plaintiffs oppose the motion. The motion was taken under submission on the papers. Having considered all the papers submitted by the parties, the Court GRANTS in part Defendants' motion to dismiss and alternative motion to strike, and DENIES them in part. The Court stays all proceedings as to Defendant Ken Irwin because of his ongoing bankruptcy case.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs allege that, for some period of time over the past four years, they worked for Defendant EI Maintenance Company, a "construction clean-up company" [*2] based in Foster City, California. First Am. Compl. (FAC) P 7. They claim that they worked regularly in excess of eight hours per day and forty hours per week. Plaintiffs allege that they were not compensated for their overtime hours, as required by California and federal law. They aver that they did not perform duties that would have exempted Defendants from compensating them for overtime.

Plaintiffs assert the following claims against Defendants: (1) failure to pay overtime, in violation of California Labor Code section 510; (2) failure to pay overtime, in violation of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA); (3) failure to pay wages due, in violation of California Labor Code section 201; (4) violation of California Business and Professions Code section 17200; and (5) providing inadequate pay statements, in violation of California Labor Code section 226.

Defendant Ken Irwin, who allegedly had control over Plaintiffs' working conditions, has filed a notice stating that he has a pending bankruptcy petition in the United States Bankruptcy Court. Mr. Irwin asserts that, under 11 U.S.C. § 362(a)(1), he is entitled to an automatic stay of Plaintiffs' proceedings.

LEGAL STANDARD

HN1[] A complaint must [*3] contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). HN2[] Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim is appropriate only when the complaint does not give the defendant fair notice of a legally cognizable claim and the grounds on which it rests. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). In considering whether the complaint is sufficient to state a claim, the court will take all material allegations as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. NL Indus., Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir. 1986). However, this principle is inapplicable to legal conclusions; "threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements," are not taken as true. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, ___ U.S. ___, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949-50, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555).

DISCUSSION

In their opening brief, Defendants argue, among other things, that typographical errors in Plaintiffs' original complaint rendered some claims vague, warranting their dismissal. To address these issues, Plaintiffs filed a FAC to address the errors complained of by Defendants. In [*4] their reply, Defendants state that the FAC corrects the purported pleading deficiencies based on the typographical errors. Defendants maintain that, despite these corrections, Plaintiffs' complaint remains susceptible to dismissal.

I. Plaintiffs' Failure to Consent

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' action must be dismissed for failure to state a claim and for lack of subject matter jurisdiction because Plaintiffs have not consented to participate in this suit. HN3[] In actions to enforce FLSA provisions, no "employee shall be a party plaintiff to any such action unless he gives his consent in writing to become such a party and such consent is filed in the court in which such action is brought." 29 U.S.C. § 216(b).

Plaintiffs have not consented in writing to be parties in this action. Neither their FAC nor any other written declaration provides their consent. As a result, they have not met the requirements to bring suit under the FLSA. [1] To proceed on their claims, Plaintiffs must file, in writing, statements indicating their consent.

II. Sufficiency of Plaintiffs' Claims under California Business and Professions Code Section 17200

Plaintiffs claim that Defendants' failure to abide by state and federal wage-and-hour laws constitutes a violation of California Business and Professions Code section 17200, which is also known as California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL). HN4[] The UCL prohibits any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. The UCL incorporates other laws and treats violations of those laws as unlawful business practices independently actionable under state law. Chabner v. United Omaha Life Ins. Co., 225 F.3d 1042, 1048

[1] Plaintiffs' FAC asserts that this Court's jurisdiction, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331, rests on their FLSA claims. If Plaintiffs fail to state such claims, the [*5] Court would lack federal-question subject matter jurisdiction over their action.

(9th Cir. 2000). Violation of almost any federal, state or local law may serve as the basis for a UCL claim. Saunders v. Superior Ct., 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838-39, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1994).

Defendants maintain that Plaintiffs' UCL claims must be dismissed because Plaintiffs do not allege any facts that tend to show monopolistic or anti-competitive practices. They cite two cases, both of which address antitrust claims. See Gonzales v. Proctor and Gamble Company, 247 F.R.D. 616 (C.D. Cal. 2007); [*6] Breakdown Services, Ltd. v. Now Casting, Inc., 550 F. Supp. 2d 1123 (C.D. Cal. 2007). However, Plaintiffs do not assert that Defendants violated state or federal antitrust law; they allege that Defendants committed wage-and-hour violations. HN5[] UCL claims do not require allegations of anti-competitive conduct; the UCL "borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable." Blanks v. Shaw, 171 Cal. App. 4th 336, 363-64, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 710 (2009) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

Plaintiffs aver that Defendants violated section 17200 by failing to compensate them for overtime pursuant to state and federal law. This allegation sufficiently supports Plaintiffs' claims under section 17200.

III. Allegations Concerning Deprivation of the Minimum Wage and Meal Premiums

In connection with their UCL claims, Plaintiffs assert that they have "been illegally deprived of the minimum wage, overtime pay and missed meal premiums to which they were legally entitled . . . ." FAC P 42. Defendants assert that Plaintiffs do not allege facts to support the allegations concerning the failure to pay a minimum wage or meal premiums and, as [*7] a result, these allegations should be stricken. [2] Plaintiffs acknowledge that they are not bringing claims concerning the minimum wage or meal periods. Accordingly, because the allegations concerning the minimum wage and meal periods are immaterial to Plaintiffs' claims for overtime pay, the Court strikes them from the FAC. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS in part Defendants' motion to dismiss and alternative motion to strike, and DENIES them in part. Within three days of the date of this Order, Plaintiffs shall file declarations that formally state their consent to sue. Their failure to do so will result in the dismissal of their FLSA claims. If Plaintiffs file consents, Defendant EI Maintenance Company shall file its answer within twenty-one days of the date of their filing. In addition, the Court [*8] strikes the allegations contained in paragraph forty-two of Plaintiffs' FAC concerning Defendants' failure to pay the minimum wage and missed meal premiums.

The Court stays all proceedings as to Defendant Ken Irwin because he has an ongoing bankruptcy case.

A case management conference is scheduled for May 4, 2010 at 2:00 p.m.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: March 18, 2010

/s/ Claudia Wilken

CLAUDIA WILKEN

United States District Judge

End of Document

[2] Defendants also argue that, because Plaintiffs do not plead facts to support the allegations concerning Defendants' failure to pay a minimum wage or meal premiums, Plaintiffs' UCL claim must be dismissed. However, as noted above, Plaintiffs state a UCL claim based on their allegations that Defendants failed to compensate them for overtime.

Grant v. Adventist Health Sys. Sunbelt Health Care Corp.

United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina, Asheville Division

March 25, 2010, Decided; March 25, 2010, Filed

CIVIL CASE NO. 1:09cv79

Reporter
2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29241 *; 2010-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,203

GREGORY GRANT, M.D., BENJAMIN FANN, M.D., and DAVID HAYES, M.D., Plaintiffs, vs. ADVENTIST HEALTH SYSTEM SUNBELT HEALTH CARE CORPORATION d/b/a Park Ridge Hospital a/k/a Fletcher Hospital, Incorporated, PARK RIDGE MEDICAL ASSOCIATES, and DOE PHYSICIANS 1 through 30, Defendants.

Prior History: Grant v. Adventist Health Sys. Sunbelt Health Care Corp., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126766 (W.D.N.C., July 27, 2009)

Core Terms

Recommendation, motion to dismiss, state law claim, magistrate judge, Memorandum, Sherman Act, district court, portions, allegations, privileges, grounds, novo

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

HN1[] Magistrates, Pretrial Referrals

With regard to a magistrate judge's report and recommendation, a district court shall make a de novo determination of those portions of the report or specified proposed findings or recommendations to which objection is made. 28 U.S.C.S. § 636(b)(1)(C). The district judge may accept, reject, or modify the findings or recommendations and may, but is not required to, receive further evidence.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

HN2[] Magistrates, Pretrial Referrals

A party objecting to a magistrate judge's memorandum and recommendation must specifically identify the portions of the memorandum and recommendation to which objections are made and the basis for such objections. Frivolous, conclusive or general objections need not be considered by the district court.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

HN3[] Magistrates, Pretrial Referrals

With regard to a magistrate judge's report and recommendation, a general objection, or one that merely restates the arguments previously presented is not sufficient to alert the court to alleged errors on the part of the magistrate judge. An "objection" that does nothing more than state a disagreement with a magistrate's suggested resolution, or simply summarizes what has been presented before, is not an "objection" as that term is used in this context.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

HN4[] Magistrates, Pretrial Referrals

With regard to a magistrate judge's report and recommendation, to the extent that a party asserts claims in the objections which were not asserted in support of or in opposition to the motion, de novo review is not warranted. Claims cannot be raised for the first time in objections to a memorandum and recommendation.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

HN5[] Magistrates, Pretrial Referrals

With regard to a magistrate judge's report and recommendation, where no objection has been raised, the court need only satisfy itself that there is no clear error on the face of the record in order to accept the recommendation. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN6[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) requires only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, in order to give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. While a complaint attacked by a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the "grounds" of his "entitlement to relief" requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause action will not do. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN7[] Sherman Act, Claims

At least for the purposes of adequate pleading in antitrust cases, the United States Supreme Court has specifically abrogated the usual "notice pleading" rule, found in Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) and Conley v. Gibson, which requires only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, to give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN8[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion, factual allegations must be strong enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level and have enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. The court need not accept the plaintiff's legal conclusions drawn from the facts, nor need it accept as true unwarranted inferences, unreasonable conclusions, or arguments.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN9[] Sherman Act, Claims

Proof of concerted action requires evidence of a relationship between at least two legally distinct persons or entities. Thus, it is perfectly plain that an internal "agreement" to implement a single, unitary firm's policies does not raise the antitrust dangers that § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, was designed to police. The officers of a single firm are not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, so agreements among them do not suddenly bring together economic power that was previously pursuing divergent goals. Moreover, § 1 is not violated by the internally coordinated conduct of a corporation and one of its unincorporated divisions. For similar reasons, the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly-owned subsidiary are legally incapable of conspiracy with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN10[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

By statute, a district court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims when all claims over which it has original jurisdiction are dismissed. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1367(c)(3).

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN11[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

Trial courts enjoy wide latitude in determining whether or not to retain jurisdiction over state claims when all federal claims have been extinguished. Among the factors that inform this discretionary determination are convenience and fairness to the parties, the existence of any underlying issues of federal policy, comity, and considerations of judicial economy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN12[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

When the only federal claims are dismissed early in the litigation, a federal court has a powerful reason to choose not to continue to exercise jurisdiction.

Counsel: [*1] For Gregory Grant, MD, Benjamin Fann, MD, David Hayes, MD, Plaintiffs: C. William Hinnant , Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Medicolegal Consultants, LLC, Anderson, SC; Joel B. Stevenson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Swain, Stevenson & Moore, Asheville, NC.

For Fletcher Hospital, Incorporated, Defendant: Jacqueline D. Grant, LEAD ATTORNEY, Roberts & Stevens, P.A., Asheville, NC; James Larry Jones , W. Davis Frye , LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Baker Donelson Bearman Caldwell & Berkowitz, Jackson, MS.

For Park Ridge Medical Associates, Defendant: Jacqueline D. Grant, LEAD ATTORNEY, Roberts & Stevens, P.A., Asheville, NC.

Judges: Martin Reidinger, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Martin Reidinger

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION AND ORDER

THIS MATTER is before the Court on the Defendant Fletcher Hospital Incorporated's Motion to Dismiss [Doc. 11] and the Amended Motion to Dismiss [Doc. 17] of the Defendant Fletcher Hospital Incorporated (Fletcher).

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(b) and the Standing Orders of Designation of this Court, United States Magistrate Judge Dennis L. Howell was designated to consider the motion and to submit recommendations for its disposition. [1] On July 28, 2009, the Magistrate Judge filed an Amended [*2] Memorandum and Recommendation in which he recommended that the motion to dismiss be granted. [Doc. 28]. The Plaintiff filed timely objections to portions of that recommendation. [Doc. 29].

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On February 24, 2009, the Plaintiffs initiated this action alleging that the Defendant Fletcher was engaged in antitrust activities in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, et. seq., was involved in a federal civil rights conspiracy and had committed various state law torts. [Doc. 1]. The Plaintiffs, who are practicing physicians, claim that they were subjected to bad faith professional peer reviews by Fletcher resulting in the revocation and/or restriction of their hospital privileges. [2] [Id.]. According to the Complaint, the motive for the revocation and/or restriction of privileges was to allow physicians employed by a wholly-owned subsidiary of the hospital to take over the Plaintiff's patient base and ultimately, to allow Fletcher to monopolize the field of obstetrical medicine in the [*3] Hendersonville area. [Id., at 5-7].

Fletcher moved to dismiss for failure to state claims upon which relief may be granted pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) (Rule 12(b)(6)). [Doc. 17]. In response to that motion, the Plaintiffs admitted that four claims should be dismissed: (1) the claim pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1981; (2) the claim pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1985; (3) the state law claim for tortious inteference with present and future contractual advantages and relationships; and (4) the common law claim for conversion. [Doc. 22, at 1].

The Magistrate Judge recommended the following:

---

[1] Although both an original and amended motion were filed, the parties and the Magistrate Judge treated the amended motion as superseding the original motion. [Doc. 22; Doc. 28; Doc. 29].

[2] Plaintiff Fann sought administrative review but neither of the other two plaintiffs did so. [Doc. 1, at 5].

1. that Fletcher be substituted as the real party defendant for Adventist Health System Sunbelt Health Care Corporation d/b/a Park Ridge Hospital a/k/a Fletcher Hospital, Incorporated and Park Ridge Medical Associates;

2. that the Doe Physicians 1 through 30 be dismissed from this action for lack of service or proof of service within the time provided by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4(m);

3. that the Amended Motion to Dismiss [Doc. 17] be granted as to the federal claims which should [*4] be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6); and

4. that the Amended Motion to Dismiss [Doc. 17] be granted as to the remaining supplemental state law claims which should be dismissed without prejudice pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c); [3] and, in the alternative, that the state law claims be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6).

[Doc. 28].

The Plaintiffs have objected to discrete portions of the Memorandum and Recommendation. They first argue that the Magistrate Judge applied the incorrect standard to a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). They urge this Court to allow them to dismiss this lawsuit without prejudice to allow re-filing in state court. In the alternative, the Plaintiffs ask that the remaining supplemental state law claims be dismissed without prejudice so that they may pursue relief in state court.

The Defendant did not file any objections to the Memorandum and Recommendation. [Doc. 30]. It does, however, urge the Court to dismiss the supplemental [*5] state law claims with prejudice. [Id.].

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] The District Court "shall make a de novo determination of those portions of the report or specified proposed findings or recommendations to which objection is made." 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(C). The district judge may accept, reject, or modify the findings or recommendations and may, but is not required to, receive further evidence. [4] Id.

HN2[] A party objecting to a Magistrate Judge's Memorandum and Recommendation "must specifically identify the portions of the [Memorandum] and Recommendation to which objections are made and the basis for such objections." Thomas v. Westinghouse Savannah River Co., 21 F.Supp.2d 551, 560 (D.S.C. 1997). "Frivolous, conclusive or general objections need not be considered by the district court." Battle v. United States Parole Commission, 834 F.2d 419, 421 (5th Cir.1987), overruled on other grounds Douglass v. United Ervs. Auto. Ass'n, 79 F.3d 1415 (5th Cir. 1996).

> HN3[] A general [*6] objection, or one that merely restates the arguments previously presented is not sufficient to alert the court to alleged errors on the part of the magistrate judge. An "objection" that does nothing more than state a disagreement with a magistrate's suggested resolution, or simply summarizes what has been presented before, is not an "objection" as that term is used in this context.

Suntrust Mortgage, Inc. v. Busby, 651 F.Supp.2d 472, 476 (W.D.N.C. 2009), quoting Aldrich v. Bock, 327 F.Supp.2d 743, 747 (E.D.Mich. 2004).

---

[3] That statute provides that "district courts may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over [state law] claim[s] … if … the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction[.]" 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3).

[4] Since this matter is before the Court on a motion pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), which only pertains to the sufficiency of pleadings, there is no evidentiary issue before the Court, and thus no further evidence was or could have been presented.

HN4[] To the extent that a party asserts claims in the objections which were not asserted in support of or in opposition to the motion, de novo review is not warranted. Price v. Dixon, 961 F.Supp. 894 (E.D.N.C. 1997)(claims cannot be raised for the first time in objections to a memorandum and recommendation); Wells v. Shriners Hospital, 109 F.3d 198, 200 (4th Cir. 1997)(boilerplate objections will not avoid the consequences of failing to object altogether). This Court therefore does not conduct a de novo review of those portions of the Memorandum and Recommendation to which non-specific objections have been filed. Nor will it conduct a de novo review of issues which were not [*7] raised before the Magistrate Judge.

HN5[] Where no objection has been raised, the Court need "'only satisfy itself that there is no clear error on the face of the record in order to accept the recommendation.'" Diamond v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 416 F.3d 310, 315 (4th Cir. 2005), certiorari denied 546 U.S. 1091, 126 S. Ct. 1033, 163 L. Ed. 2d 855 (2006), quoting Fed.R.Civ.P. 72, Advisory Committee note.

DISCUSSION

Those portions of the Memorandum and Recommendation to which no objections were made.

As noted, the Plaintiffs did not oppose the Defendant's motion to dismiss the claims pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981 & 1985, the state law claim for tortious interference with present and future contractual advantages and relationships, and the common law claim for conversion. As a result, those claims are dismissed with prejudice.

The parties also did not object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the real party defendant is Fletcher and that the Doe Physicians should be dismissed from the action. Having satisfied itself that "there is no clear error on the face of the record," the Court accepts those recommendations. Diamond, 416 F.3d at 315. Fletcher is substituted as the real party [*8] Defendant and the Doe Physicians 1 through 30 are dismissed from the action.

Concerning the Sherman Act claims, the Plaintiffs' objection is limited to the Magistrate Judge's discussion of the Section 1 claim for conspiracy in restraint of trade. [Doc. 29, at 3-6]. They do not object to the recommendation that the Section 2 claim for monopolization be dismissed. Again, the Court has satisfied itself that there is no clear error on the record and this recommendation is accepted.

The Magistrate Judge's Application of the Rule 12(b)(6) Standard

The Plaintiffs assign error to the Magistrate Judge's citation to the recent Supreme Court decision in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007), because that was "a case decided at the summary judgment stage after extensive discovery." [Doc. 29, at 2]. They also note that although "Twombly has changed the landscape, it would be more appropriate to analyze Defendant's Rule 12(b)(6) motion according to principles derived from cases which shared the same procedural posture (pleadings) as that now under consideration." [Id.]. The case suggested is Wuchenich v. Shenandoah Memorial Hospital, 215 F.3d 1324 (4th Cir. 2000), [*9] an unpublished case decided prior to Twombly.

The Court first notes that the Plaintiffs cited Twombly as the correct standard in their response to the motion to dismiss. [Doc. 22, at 2]. As a result, this is technically an issue raised for the first time in the objections and de novo review is not required. Price v. Dixon, 961 F.Supp. 894.

Plaintiffs are nonetheless incorrect in their assertion that Twombly was decided at the summary judgment stage. In Twombly, the district court, in ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), dismissed the complaint alleging Sherman Act violations because "the allegations of … the defendants' actions, taken by themselves, are not sufficiently probative, on a motion to dismiss, of conspiratorial intentions that would support a finding of antitrust-law violations." Twombly v. Bell Atlantic Corp., 425 F.3d 99, 104 (2nd Cir. 2005), discussing Twombly, 313 F.Supp.2d 174, 179-82, 184, 189 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (emphasis provided; history omitted).

On appeal, the Second Circuit reversed the District Court because it had "appl[ied] this Circuit's case law with respect to Sherman Act claims at the summary judgment stage" and [*10] by so doing, had increased the burden of pleading beyond that specified in Fed.R.Civ.P. 8 which requires only a "short and plain statement of the claim." Twombly, 425 F.3d at 104-05. The Supreme Court reversed the Second Circuit and reinstated the standard adopted by the District Court; thus, changing the "landscape" as applied to Rule 12(b)(6) motions. This Court therefore rejects the Plaintiffs' contention that Twombly should not apply because it was not in the same procedural posture as this case. As noted in Twombly, > [t]his case presents the … question of what a plaintiff must plead in order to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act. HN6[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) requires only "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," in order to "give the defendant fair notice of what the … claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the "grounds" of his "entitle[ment] to relief" requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause action will not [*11] do. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact). In applying these general standards to a § 1 claim, [the Supreme Court] h[e]ld that stating such a claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. Asking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it simply calls for enough fact[s] to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement. … [A]n allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice.

Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555-56 (citations omitted). Thus,

> HN7[] [a]t least for the purposes of adequate pleading in antitrust cases, the [Supreme] Court specifically abrogated the usual "notice pleading" rule, found in Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) and Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S.Ct. 99, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957), which requires only "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," to "give the defendant fair notice [*12] of what the … claim is and the grounds upon which it rests."

Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047 n.5 (9th Cir. 2008).

The Fourth Circuit has embraced the Twombly standard and announced, in a case brought by a physician against a hospital challenging the suspension of his privileges, that in order

> HN8[] [t]o survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, "[f]actual allegations must be strong enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level" and have "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." [T]he court "need not accept the [plaintiff's] legal conclusions drawn from the facts," nor need it "accept as true unwarranted inferences, unreasonable conclusions, or arguments."

Philips v. Pitt County Memorial Hospital, 572 F.3d 176, 180 (4th Cir. 2009), quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570 (other citations omitted).

Despite the clear language of these cases, the Plaintiffs' argue that the "any set of facts" standard is appropriate in this case and conclude that "the court should be governed by Rule 8(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which requires that the complaint need only contain a 'short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is [*13] entitled to relief.'" [Doc. 29, at 3]. The Court finds that it would be clear error to adopt the standard of review urged by the Plaintiffs and dismisses this objection.

The Plaintiffs have not made an objection to the recommended dismissal of the Section 1 Sherman Act claim. [Doc. 29, at 2] (noting specific objections). They did make an ambiguous statement that because the Magistrate Judge adopted the wrong standard, his recommendation that the restraint of trade claim be dismissed is wrong. As noted, the correct standard was applied by the Magistrate Judge.

Although the Plaintiffs failed to object to the recommendation that this claim be dismissed, the Court concludes that the Magistrate Judge correctly concluded that the Complaint failed to allege concerted action between two distinct persons that imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade. The Plaintiffs stated that the individual physicians employed by Fletcher's wholly-owned subsidiary had independent and competing interests which rendered them distinct from Fletcher. [Doc. 29, at 5]. The Fourth Circuit, however, has rejected this argument.

> HN9[] "Proof of concerted action requires evidence of a relationship between at least two legally [*14] distinct persons or entities." Thus, it is perfectly plain that an internal "agreement" to implement a single, unitary firm's policies does not raise the antitrust dangers that § 1 [of the Sherman Act] was designed to police. The officers of a single firm are not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, so agreements among them do not suddenly bring together economic power that was previously pursuing divergent goals. Moreover, "§ 1 is not violated by the internally coordinated conduct of a corporation and one of its unincorporated divisions." "For similar reasons, the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly-owned subsidiary are legally "incapable of conspiracy with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act."

American Chiropractic Ass'n v. Trigon Healthcare, Inc., 367 F.3d 212, 223 (4th Cir. 2004), certiorari denied 543 U.S. 979, 125 S. Ct. 479, 160 L. Ed. 2d 356 (2004), citing Okasanen v. Page Memorial Hospital, 945 F.2d 696 (4th Cir. 1991), certiorari denied 502 U.S. 1074, 112 S. Ct. 973, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137 (1992) (other citations omitted). To the extent the Plaintiffs claim the physician employees of the subsidiary had an independent financial stake [*15] in depriving the Plaintiffs of their hospital privileges, they have not alleged that those physicians had any control over the hospital's decisions concerning privileges. Id., at 224-25.

In fact, the Plaintiffs concede defeat as to the Sherman Act claims by acknowledging in the objections that they "have not sought to amend their complaint to salvage any of their federal claims (which they readily recognize as an option, but do not intend to pursue)[.]" [Doc. 29, at 6]. The Court therefore finds that the Plaintiffs failed to raise any objection to the recommended dismissal of either of the Sherman Act claims. The Court concludes that dismissal should be granted.

The Magistrate Judge's Alternative Recommendation Regarding Dismissal of the State Law Claims for Failure to State a Claim

The Magistrate Judge recommended that supplemental jurisdiction be declined and the state law claims be dismissed without prejudice. HN10[] By statute, a district court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims when all claims over which it has original jurisdiction are dismissed. 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3). Neither party has objected to this recommendation and the Court finds that it should [*16] be accepted.

> HN11[] [T]rial courts enjoy wide latitude in determining whether or not to retain jurisdiction over state claims when all federal claims have been extinguished. Among the factors that inform this discretionary determination are convenience and fairness to the parties, the existence of any underlying issues of federal policy, comity, and considerations of judicial economy.

Shanaghan v. Cahill, 58 F.3d 106, 110 (4th Cir. 1995) (citations omitted). This case is in its earliest stages; no answer has been filed and discovery has not commenced. HN12[] When the only federal claims are dismissed early in the litigation, a federal court has a "powerful reason to choose not to continue to exercise jurisdiction." Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 351, 108 S.Ct. 614, 98 L.Ed.2d 720 (1988). Continuing the case here is no more convenient or fair to the parties than allowing a state court action to go forward. Daly v. Zobel, 311 Fed.Appx. 565 (4th Cir. 2008). From the standpoint of federal judicial economy, however, allowing state law claims to proceed in state court is more economical. Cohill, 484 U.S. at 351-52. The Court will therefore dismiss the state law claims without prejudice to [*17] refiling in state court. See, 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d).

ORDER

IT IS, THEREFORE, ORDERED that Fletcher Hospital, Incorporated is hereby SUBSTITUTED as the real party defendant for Adventist Health System Sunbelt Health Care Corporation d/b/a Park Ridge Hospital a/k/a Fletcher Hospital, Incorporated and Park Ridge Medical Associates.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Defendants Doe Physicians 1 through 30 are hereby DISMISSED for lack of service or proof of service within the time provided by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4(m).

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Defendant Fletcher Hospital Incorporated's Motion to Dismiss [Doc. 11] and the Amended Motion to Dismiss [Doc. 17] of the Defendant Fletcher Hospital Incorporated (Fletcher) is hereby GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as follows:

1. The Plaintiffs' claims pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981 &1985 are hereby DISMISSED with prejudice;

2. The Plaintiffs' state law claims for tortious interference with present and future contractual advantages and relationships and conversion are hereby DISMISSED with prejudice;

3. The Plaintiffs' claims based on the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, et. seq. are hereby DISMISSED with prejudice; and

4. The Plaintiffs' remaining [*18] state law claims are hereby DISMISSED without prejudice.

Signed: March 25, 2010

/s/ Martin Reidinger

Martin Reidinger

United States District Judge

Shipp v. Donaher

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

March 25, 2010, Decided; March 25, 2010, Filed

CIVIL ACTION No. 09-2475

Reporter
2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28409 *; 2010 WL 1257972

WILLIAM and STACY SHIPP, Plaintiffs, v. DONNA DONAHER, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: As Amended April 1, 2010.

Vacated by, in part, Reconsideration granted by, in part, Reconsideration denied by, in part Shipp v. Donaher, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59202 (E.D. Pa., June 11, 2010)

Core Terms

confession of judgment, plaintiffs', antitrust, allegations, notice, state court, Counts, defendants', state actor, properties, deprivation, harms, collection, provisions, loans, private right of action, federal claim, meanwhile, motions, rights, complaint alleges, motion to dismiss, state action, partnership, proceedings, violations, intervene, injuries, merits, dismissal with prejudice

Counsel: [*1] For WILLIAM SHIPP, STACY SHIPP, INDIVIDUALLY, PROFESSIONALLY, AND AS EXCLUSIVE RESIDUAL CO-OWNERS OF ALL RIGHTS PREVIOUSLY HELD BY THE 560 COATES STREET PARTNERSHIP BETWEEN WILLIAM SHIPP AND JASON FYK, Plaintiffs: NORMAN SHAPERO, LEAD ATTORNEY, WEST CHESTER, PA.

For DONNA DONAHER, INDIVIDUALLY, PROFESSIONALLY, AND AS A REPRESENTATIVE MEMBER OF CLASS A, TUCKER ARENSBERG, PC, Defendants: WILLIAM F. MCDEVITT, CHRISTIE PABARUE MORTENSEN $ YOUNG, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For JOHN ROACH, INDIVIDUALLY, PROFESSIONALLY, AND AS A REPRESENTATIVE MEMBER OF CLASS B, PNC BANK, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION, Defendants: DANIEL B. HUYETT, LEAD ATTORNEY, STEVENS & LEE, READING, PA.

JASON FYK, AS AGENT FOR PNC BANK, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION AND THE PNC/TA CLAN, Defendant, Pro se, COCHRANVILLE, PA.

FOR YOUR KIDS, INC., Defendant, Pro se, COCHRANVILLE, PA.

Judges: Louis H. Pollak, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Louis H. Pollak

Opinion

Pollak, J.

OPINION

Plaintiffs William and Stacy Shipp have sued (1) PNC Bank, N.A. ("PNC"), (2) Tucker Arensberg, PC ("Tucker"), (3) PNC's Chief Executive Officer, James Rohr, [1] (4) Donna Donaher, an attorney at Tucker, (5) Jason Fyk, (6) For Your Kids, Inc., [2] a company owned by Fyk, (7) an association identified in [*2] the complaint as "the PNC/[Tucker] Clan," and (8) Doe defendants, alleging that defendants' actions in connection with two confessed judgments in the Pennsylvania state courts violated various laws and constitutional provisions. Plaintiffs' complaint includes seventy-six counts in all, [3] including (1) violations of the federal constitution and 42 U.S.C. § 1983, (2) violations of various federal statutes, including (a) the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., (b) the Bank Holding Company Act ("BHCA"), 12 U.S.C. § 1841 et seq., (c) the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act ("FDCPA"), 15 U.S.C. § 1692 et seq., (d) the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq., and (e) numerous criminal provisions of Title 18 of the U.S. Code, (3) state constitutional violations, and (4) state tort claims. Defendants PNC and Rohr and, in a separate motion, Donaher and Tucker, now move to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. [4]

I.

Although the complaint in this case is lengthy and convoluted, the history of plaintiffs' dispute with the moving defendants [5] may be concisely stated. Plaintiff William Shipp and defendant Jason Fyk purchased a property on Coates Street in Coatesville, Pennsylvania in December 2003. Compl. P 72. They took out a mortgage on that property from the National Bank of Malvern, at which Shipp is an employee. See id. P 75. The title to the property and the mortgage were both listed "in Shipp's and Fyk's individual names." Id. P 76. Fyk subsequently purchased another property in Coatesville, this one on Jane Street. Id. P 84.

In April 2005, Fyk incorporated defendant For Your Kids, id. P 88, and later that month, For Your Kids received Small Business Administration ("SBA") loans from [*5] defendant PNC, id. P 89. Fyk "executed [a] personal surety agreement[] in favor of PNC on" those loans. Id. P 90. The relationship between Fyk and Shipp subsequently soured, see id. PP 117-33, and, at some point, Fyk "defaulted against another creditor," id. P 105, leading PNC to seek confessed judgments, apparently against the Coates Street and Jane Street properties, see id. PP 26, 213, 217. Donaher, on behalf of Tucker, represented PNC in those proceedings. See id. P 26.

---

[1] Rohr is identified in the complaint as "John Roach," but both parties refer to him as James Rohr in [*3] their memoranda of law.

[2] The parties divergently spell the name of this corporate entity as "For Your Kids, Inc." and "Four Your Kids, Inc." I adhere to the former, which is the spelling in the official caption of this case and in the answer filed by Fyk.

[3] The complaint, which runs to 143 pages, is of a kind that should be firmly discouraged. Among other things, the complaint (1) is filled with needless repetition and irrelevancies, (2) alleges violations of multiple nonexistent statutes, (3) pleads the existence of diversity jurisdiction even though it lists both plaintiffs and numerous defendants as Pennsylvania residents, and (4) is larded with footnotes to legal authorities better found in a memorandum of law. While none of these infirmities bears on the merits of the arguments made in defendants' motions to dismiss, both this court and all parties to this litigation would have been better served by a shorter, plainer statement of plaintiffs' claims. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a).

[4] Fyk has filed a pro se answer, which he seeks to submit on behalf of both himself and For Your Kids. See Docket No. 11. Normally, this court would strike the answer insofar as it purports to be submitted by [*4] a pro se litigant on behalf of a corporation. See, e.g., *Penn Graphics Equip. Co. v. Globaltec Innovations, Corp., No. 06-cv-3247, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79149, 2006 WL 3144398, at 1 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 30, 2006) (striking all filings made on behalf of a corporation by a non-lawyer). Because of the view I take of this case, however, the propriety of Fyk's answer is moot.

[5] For convenience, I will use "defendants" to refer to the moving defendants.

Shipp, who also brought a state-court contract action against Fyk, see id. P 19, sought to intervene in the confessed judgment proceedings, see id. P 20. PNC "moved to dismiss Shipp's intervention petition," and that motion was granted. Id. P 21. Shipp appealed, but "the Superior Court quashed [the] appeal," id. P 22, and the Pennsylvania Supreme Court "denied Shipp's allocatur petition as moot," id. P 23, after PNC issued what plaintiffs call "partial and conditional release documents" on both properties, id. PP 213, 217. The Shipps then filed the complaint in this action on June 1, 2009. The complaint alleges that defendants' actions in seeking the confessed judgment, as well as their actions more generally with [*6] regard to Pennsylvania's confessed judgment procedures and SBA loans, deprived William Shipp of numerous constitutional and statutory rights. [6]

II.

In order to survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a complaint need only include "'a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief,' in order to 'give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)). While a complaint "requires more than labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action," "detailed factual allegations" are unnecessary. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Rather, plaintiffs must simply include enough facts to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570.

In reviewing a 12(b)(6) motion, "the facts alleged [in the complaint] must be taken as true and a complaint may not be dismissed merely because it appears unlikely that the plaintiff [*7] can prove those facts or will ultimately prevail on the merits." Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 231 (3d Cir. 2008). "[R]easonable inferences" are also drawn in favor of the plaintiff, id., but this court need not "'accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation,'" Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

III.

As a threshold matter, Tucker and Donaher argue that the Rooker-Feldman doctrine deprives this court of jurisdiction to hear plaintiffs' claims. See Tucker Mem. at 37-38. The Rooker-Feldman doctrine, under which federal district courts and courts of appeals "lack subject matter jurisdiction to review, directly or indirectly, state court adjudications," In re Diet Drugs, 282 F.3d 220, 240 (3d Cir. 2002), "'precludes a federal action if the relief requested in the federal action would effectively reverse the state decision or void its ruling,'" Whiteford v. Reed, 155 F.3d 671, 674 (3d Cir. 1998) (quoting FOCUS v. Allegheny Court of Common Pleas, 75 F.3d 834, 840 (3d Cir. 1996)). It thus "applies to cases 'brought by state court losers complaining of injuries caused by state-court judgments rendered before the district court proceedings commenced and inviting district [*8] court review and rejection of those judgments.'" *Stoss v. Singer Fin. Corp., No. 08-cv-5968, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16514, 2010 WL 678115, at 3 (E.D. Pa. Feb. 24, 2010) (quoting Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Indus. Corp., 544 U.S. 280, 284, 125 S. Ct. 1517, 161 L. Ed. 2d 454 (2005)).

In particular, the Rooker-Feldman doctrine bars review by this court of "'claims that have been previously adjudicated in state court or that are inextricably intertwined with a state adjudication.'" Whiteford, 155 F.3d at 674 (quoting Gulla v. N. Strabane Twp., 146 F.3d 168, 170 (3d Cir. 1998)). "The actually litigated prong is principally useful where the claims before the state and federal courts are in all respects identical." ITT Corp. v. Intelnet. Int'l, 366 F.3d 205, 211 (3d Cir. 2004). "State and federal claims are inextricably intertwined," meanwhile, "'(1) when in order to grant the federal plaintiff the relief sought, the federal court must determine that the state court judgment was erroneously entered [or] (2) when the federal court must . . . take action that would render [the state court's] judgment ineffectual.'" ITT Corp., 366 F.3d at 211 (quoting Desi's Pizza, Inc. v. City of Wilkes-Barre, 321 F.3d 411, 421 (3d Cir. 2003)) (internal quotation marks [*9] omitted).

---

[6] Plaintiff Stacy Shipp is mentioned primarily with reference to both of the loss of consortium claims in the complaint. See Compl. PP 695, 697.

The doctrine is thus "narrow [in] scope," Turner v. Crawford Square Apartments III, L.P., 449 F.3d 542, 547 (3d Cir. 2006): "[W]here a state action does not reach the merits of a plaintiff's claims, . . . Rooker-Feldman does not deprive the federal court of jurisdiction." Whiteford, 155 F.3d at 674; accord, e.g., ITT Corp., 366 F.3d at 211. More specifically, when a denial of intervention is not effectively a decision on the merits, the denial of intervention does not trigger the application of Rooker-Feldman. See FOCUS, 75 F.3d at 841.

Tucker and Donaher contend that plaintiffs' claims reduce to the proposition that "the trial court, the Superior Court and the Pennsylvania Supreme Court improperly denied [plaintiffs'] right to intervene in the" confessed judgment proceedings "based upon the alleged acts of the defendants." Tucker Mem. at 38. This argument, however, slightly misunderstands what I take to be the nub of plaintiffs' grievances. Although plaintiffs clearly disagree with the state courts' ruling, the complaint's primary focus is on the alleged actions of the various defendants in instantiating and carrying out the confessed judgment action -- which is to say that [*10] the complaint attempts to put before this court the merits of issues that the state courts declined to consider. This fact alone is a sufficient basis to conclude that the state courts did not "previously adjudicate" plaintiffs' claims.

The question of whether plaintiffs' claims are inextricably intertwined with the state courts' ruling is slightly more complex. The state courts' opinions denying intervention -- which have been provided by plaintiffs as exhibits to the complaint [7] -- go beyond merely "asserting that [the state courts] lacked jurisdiction" to entertain the intervention. FOCUS, 75 F.3d at 841. Rather, the Court of Common Pleas' October 1, 2007 order addresses two additional issues -- (1) whether or not a partnership of Shipp and Fyk owned the properties at issue, and (2) whether "PNC . . . made false averments to the Court and otherwise committed 'obstructionist malfeasance.'" Compl. Ex. 4, at 2-3. The Superior Court memorandum affirming the denial of intervention, while focused on jurisdictional issues, expresses the view that PNC did not have actual notice that the properties were owned by a partnership at the time it instituted the confessed judgment actions. See id. [*11] Ex. 8, at 9. This aspect of the Superior Court's decision was based on the conclusions that (1) "[t]he deed to the property does not indicate the property is owned by a partnership," id. at 8, and (2) "[u]nder the circumstances of the present case . . . the court would be limited to the four corners of the deed in determining whether the property was really partnership property," to the exclusion of parol evidence, id. at 9 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The claims in the complaint are, however, largely independent of the Pennsylvania courts' decisions that (1) a partnership did not own the properties, titled as they were in the individual names of Shipp and Fyk, (2) PNC's conduct in the Court of Common Pleas was unimpeachable, and (3) Shipp was not entitled to intervene. Count 1 of the complaint provides a convenient illustration. That count, pled as a violation of [*12] the Privileges and Immunities Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, alleges variously that (1) "[d]efendants seized [one of the properties] . . . without bringing charges against Shipp or the [alleged] Partnership," (2) "[d]efendants . . . forc[ed plaintiffs] to continue in a hostile and dangerous business relationship with Fyk", in part by "fr[eezing Shipp] out of the courts," (3) "[d]efendants knowingly took and retained Shipp's property by ex parte action," and (4) "[t]here can be no greater abridgement of rights and immunities than being told that your legal interests were subordinated to the one who illegally subordinated your interest in ex parte proceedings." Compl. PP 339-41, 344. Whatever the merits of this claim, it is not one that was ever decided by the state courts, and ruling on its merits would not entail a decision that the state courts were incorrect to deny intervention or that the expressed grounds for the denial were incorrect. [8] Moreover, insofar as plaintiffs' allegations do "den[y] a legal conclusion that a state court has reached," the result is simply that "there [*13] is jurisdiction and state law determines whether the defendant prevails under principles of preclusion." Exxon Mobil, 544 U.S. at 293.

---

[7] Plaintiffs failed to attach the exhibits to the originally-filed version of the complaint. Plaintiffs did, however, petition to supplement the complaint with exhibits a week thereafter, and no defendant has objected to that request. The petition will therefore be granted as uncontested pursuant to Local Rule 7.1(c).

[8] Given that the complaint alleges that PNC subsequently released the properties, there is no way that this court could, at present, render the state courts' judgment on intervention "ineffectual."

Accordingly, I conclude that the Rooker-Feldman doctrine does not deprive this court of jurisdiction over plaintiffs' claims, and I turn to the question of whether the complaint states one or more claims on which relief may be granted.

IV.

Counts 1-12 of the complaint allege federal constitutional violations, and Count 22 alleges an additional claim pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983. All of plaintiffs' federal constitutional claims must, of course, be brought under § 1983, e.g., Arpin v. Santa Clara Valley Transp. Agency, 261 F.3d 912, 925 (9th Cir. 2001), which "provides redress for certain violations of rights arising under the federal constitution or laws of the United States which are caused by persons acting under color of state law," Mosley v. Yaletsko, 275 F. Supp. 2d 608, 612 (E.D. Pa. 2003). Thus, "[t]o establish a valid claim under § 1983, a claimant must [*14] show: (1) that the conduct complained of was committed by a person acting under color of state law; and (2) that the conduct deprived a person of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States." Robb v. City of Phila., 733 F.2d 286, 290-91 (3d Cir. 1984).

Here, the defendants are private parties. Thus, plaintiffs must satisfy "a two-part inquiry" in order to maintain claims against the defendants under § 1983. Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, 20 F.3d 1250, 1265 (3d Cir. 1994). "'First, the deprivation must be caused by the exercise of some right or privilege created by the State or by a rule of conduct imposed by the State or by a person for whom the State is responsible.'" Id. (quoting Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 937, 102 S. Ct. 2744, 73 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1982)). "'Second, the party charged with the deprivation must be a person who may fairly be said to be a state actor.'" Id. (quoting Lugar, 457 U.S. at 937). A state actor is one who is "'a state official,'" or who "'has acted together with or has obtained significant aid from state officials,'" or whose "'conduct is otherwise chargeable to the State.'" Id. (quoting Lugar, 457 U.S. at 937).

Defendants [*15] do not argue that the first prong of this test is not met, and it is. Plaintiffs' claims are largely based upon a confessed judgment action in the state courts, and "[t]he power to confess judgment depends on a state statute and the procedure for doing so depends on state procedural rules of general application." Jordan, 20 F.3d at 1265. A "right or privilege created by the State" is thus at issue.

The pertinent question is therefore whether or not defendants may fairly be said to be state actors. They are not state officials, so defendants are state actors only if the "state [has] significantly contribute[d] to the [alleged] constitutional deprivation," by, for instance, "authorizing its own officers to invoke the force of law in aid of the private persons' request." Id. at 1266. Both plaintiff and defendants rely on the Third Circuit's decision in Jordan for support on this score. In Jordan, the Court of Appeals held that "a state procedure permitting private parties to file a complaint and confess judgment essentially involves acquiescence by the state, not compulsion," and that "[i]n such circumstances, private conduct is not attributable to the state." Id. (internal quotation marks [*16] omitted). Nor does a "confession of judgment itself . . . so intimately involve [landlords] and their Attorneys in state action that they could be treated as acting under color of law." Id. The Third Circuit's holding was grounded in the fact that while "entry of the [confessed] judgment" has "consequences," "[i]t involves no immediate seizure or deprivation of property under force of law." Id. at 1266 n.17.

By contrast, the Court of Appeals held that "a judgment creditor who uses Pennsylvania's procedure for executing on a confessed judgment acts under color of law and becomes a state actor." Id. The relevant distinction between the institution of a confessed judgment action and the issuance of writs of execution is, the Third Circuit held, that "writs of execution and attachment involve actions by state officials that plainly involve or threaten the use of legal force." Id. at 1267. Thus, under Jordan, otherwise-private parties who merely seek and receive confessed judgments are not state actors, while those who execute on confessed judgments are state actors.

Under the facts alleged in plaintiffs' complaint, PNC, via its attorneys at Tucker, filed a confessed judgment action against [*17] two properties -- presumably the Coates and Jane Street properties, at least one of which was titled in the names of Shipp and Fyk. Compl. PP 18, 76. An "execution notice[]" was then sent to Fyk as to each property.

Id. P 31; see also id. P 28. The complaint does not, however, allege that PNC ever sought to execute on the confessed judgment; rather, it reveals that PNC "issued . . . purported releases of [the properties]" in 2008. Id. P 58.

Under Jordan, defendants' action of filing for confessed judgments is an insufficient basis for the conclusion that defendants acted as state actors. [9] The complaint, meanwhile, fails to allege that defendants took the step -- execution of a confessed judgment -- that Jordan held was sufficient to transform judgment creditors into state actors. Thus, if defendants were state actors, it was because "execution notices" were sent to Fyk.

The sending of such notices was not considered in Jordan, and this issue is left somewhat murky by the complaint, which -- despite purporting to include the relevant notices as attachments, see Compl. P 31 -- neither attaches nor describes the notices. Plaintiffs do, however, include numerous allegations concerning Pennsylvania's confessed judgment procedure, see, e.g., id. PP 274-96. This court will therefore take judicial notice of the relevant state Rules of Civil Procedure. *See, e.g., Pennsylvania v. Lockheed Martin Corp., No. 09-cv-0821, 684 F. Supp. 2d 564, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8052, 2010 WL 456810, at 1 n.2 (M.D. Pa. Feb. 1, 2010) (noting that "the court may take judicial notice of public records"). [10] Pursuant to those rules, notice [*19] of the confessed judgment action may be served either prior to or contemporaneously with a writ of possession -- which writ is the instrument by which a confessed judgment is executed. See Pa. R. Civ. P. 2973.1-.3. Because the complaint alleges that notice was served but not that a writ of possession was served, plaintiffs' allegations only support the inference that PNC served Fyk with a pre-writ notice pursuant to Pennsylvania Rule of Civil Procedure 2973.2 -- or some other kind of notice unaccompanied by an actual execution.

Like the entry of a confessed judgment itself, the sending of pre-execution notice does not "involve[] [the] immediate seizure or deprivation of property under force of law." Jordan, 20 F.3d at 1266 n.17. Such notice essentially gives the confessed judgment defendant time in which to "petition for relief from a confessed judgment," Note to Pa. R. Civ. P. 2973.2(a), and therefore [*20] is not a means of state compulsion; it merely is notice that such compulsion may follow. Accordingly, under Jordan, the mailing of notice does not so entangle the state in the enforcement of private claims to property as to transform the otherwise private actions of the confessed judgment plaintiff or its attorneys into state action. Nor can I conclude that the fact that Shipp, not Fyk, brings this suit makes any difference as to the existence vel non of state action: Although Shipp was denied leave to intervene in the confessed judgment action, any injuries inflicted on Shipp as co-owner of Coates Street by the confessed judgment actions were, at worst, identical to Fyk's as co-owner of the properties in question. Nothing in the confessed judgment procedure invoked by defendants, in other words, supports a finding of state action in this case.

Nor does anything else in the prodigiously prolix complaint form a sufficient basis for determining that the moving defendants were state actors. The only actions allegedly taken by the state courts, for instance, involve the denial of Shipp's motion to intervene in the confessed judgment action itself. The complaint further alleges that there [*21] were "radical changes to [Pennsylvania's] confessed judgment lien law" "[i]n 1996 and 2003," Compl. P 279, but there is no indication of how these changes render defendants state actors with regard to their actions concerning the properties at issue -- especially given that plaintiffs believe that the moving defendants were not aided by state officials but rather "collaborated and conspired to defraud the Civil Procedures Rules Committee," id. P 295. (The Court of Common Pleas is also referred to as "an unknowing target of deception." Id. P 321.) Nor do

---

[9] Jordan differs factually from this case in certain ways -- it (1) concerned personal and not real property, see 20 F.3d at 1258, (2) occurred before certain changes were made to Pennsylvania's confessed judgment procedures, see Compl. PP 274-96, and (3) did not concern a third party to the confessed judgment action. [*18] But the rules for confessed judgments of real property concern the same two steps described in Jordan, the rules changes described in the complaint are not relevant to the core procedures held by Jordan to be pertinent to defendants' status as private or state actors, and while plaintiffs' interest in the proceedings may differ from the interests of a judgment debtor, that distinction is irrelevant to the degree of state involvement in the alleged constitutional deprivations.

[10] This court may take judicial notice of appropriate items without converting defendants' motions into motions for summary judgment. *See, e.g., Lord v. Erie County, No. 08-cv-213, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 308, 2010 WL 56095, at 6 n.10 (W.D. Pa. Jan. 5, 2010) (quoting Pryor v. NCAA, 288 F.3d 548, 560 (3d Cir. 2002)).

plaintiffs' repeated assertions that defendants were, in fact, "state actor[s]" or "[s]tate [p]rosecutor[s]" suffice to demonstrate that those labels are correct. E.g., Compl. PP 162-68, 170, 175, 178, 180, 182-83, 225, 388-90.

Accordingly, defendants' motions will be granted as to Counts 1-12 and 22 of the complaint.

V.

The federal statutory causes of action in plaintiffs' complaint invoke (1) the Sherman Act, (2) the BHCA, (3) the FDCPA, (4) RICO, and (5) various criminal provisions in Title 18. I consider these claims in turn.

A.

Count 13 of the complaint alleges a violation of the Sherman Act. It is unclear whether plaintiffs intend [*22] to plead a violation of § 1 or § 2 of the Act; the complaint lists § 2 as the relevant statute but speaks in terms of restraint of trade, which is governed by § 1. Whether plaintiffs intend to proceed under § 1 or § 2, however, they must show that they have standing to bring an antitrust claim. In the Third Circuit, five factors are used to determine whether or not a plaintiff has antitrust standing:

> "(1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; (3) the directness of the injury, which addresses the concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages."

Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm, Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 320 (3d Cir. 2007) (applying these factors in the context of § 2) (quoting Barton & Pittinos, Inc. v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 118 F.3d 178, 181 (3d Cir. 1997)); [*23] see also City of Pittsburgh v. W. Penn Power Corp., 147 F.3d 256, 264 (3d Cir. 1998) (applying the same factors in the context of a § 1 claim). Antitrust standing is thus "'essentially a balancing test comprised of many constant and variable factors.'" W. Penn Power Corp., 147 F.3d at 265 (quoting Merican, Inc. v. Caterpillar Tractor Co., 713 F.2d 958, 964-65 (3d Cir. 1983)). Nevertheless, the Third Circuit has instructed that a district court "should first address the issue of whether the plaintiff suffered an antitrust injury," and if no such injury "is . . . found, further inquiry is unnecessary." Id.; see also, e.g., id. ("[A] showing of antitrust injury is a necessary but insufficient condition of antitrust standing.") (internal quotation marks omitted).

An antitrust injury is one "'of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.'" Mathews v. Lancaster Gen. Hosp., 87 F.3d 624, 641 (3d Cir. 1996) (quoting Alberta Gas Chems. Ltd. v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 826 F.2d 1235, 1240 (3d Cir. 1987)). Specifically, "'[a]n antitrust plaintiff must prove that challenged conduct affected the prices, quantity or quality of goods or services,' not just his own welfare," id. (quoting [*24] Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 728 (3d Cir. 1991)), because "'antitrust law aims to protect competition, not competitors,'" id. (quoting Alberta Gas Chems., 826 F.2d at 1241). The injury must be the "direct effect of" "the antitrust violation," which requires more than "a mere causal link," and "whether the plaintiff has experienced an antitrust injury depends in part on its source -- did the injury flow from that which makes the defined acts unlawful." W. Penn Power Corp., 147 F.3d at 265, 268. Thus, as a general matter -- though not, perhaps, as a hard and fast rule -- "only competitors and consumers will suffer antitrust injury." Carpet Group Int'l v. Oriental Rug Importers Ass'n, Inc., 227 F.3d 62, 77 (3d Cir. 2000).

It is somewhat difficult to garner from the complaint what, precisely, plaintiffs claim amounts to an antitrust violation. Whatever plaintiffs' intent, however, nothing in Count 13 alleges an antitrust injury. The only claimed harms to plaintiffs are that defendants (1) "assert[ed] priority over superior prior contract rights," Compl. P 431 -- presumably rights allegedly held by plaintiffs -- and (2) "maligned [William] Shipp's title, reputation, and [*25] control of his property and finances," increasing the risk he faced "while claiming no effect," id. P 432. These are injuries only to plaintiffs' "own welfare," not "the prices, quantity or quality of goods and services," Mathews, 87 F.3d at 641, and are therefore not the type of injuries the antitrust laws are meant to prevent.

Further, any injury suffered by plaintiffs is necessarily an indirect, not a direct, result of defendants' actions. The allegations in the complaint most plausibly tied to an antitrust theory imply that defendants control the market for SBA loans. Plaintiffs are neither competitors of defendants nor, as far as the complaint discloses, consumer-debtors of SBA loans. Indeed, William Shipp's only relationship to the defendants is as (1) the co-owner of a property subjected to a confessed judgment under the terms of the other co-owner's loan, and (2) a failed state-court intervenor. Plaintiffs therefore cannot have been directly harmed by any actions defendants took in the SBA loan market. It is the debtor -- which is to say Fyk, not the Shipps -- who would feel the direct effects of those actions. Plaintiffs, in other words, have not alleged either an antitrust [*26] injury or a sufficient causal link. In light of these shortcomings, I need not consider the other factors in the antitrust standing analysis. [11] See W. Penn Power Co., 147 F.3d at 269 (affirming the dismissal of antitrust claims after determining that plaintiffs had not satisfied these two prongs of the analysis).

Because plaintiffs lack standing to maintain Count 13, defendants' motions will accordingly be granted as to that count.

B.

Count 14 seeks to allege a violation of the anti-tying provisions of the BHCA, 12 U.S.C. § 1972. Pursuant to 12 U.S.C. § 1975, "[a]ny person who is injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in section 1972 . . . may sue therefor in [the] district court[s]." See also, e.g., Baggett v. First Nat'l Bank of Gainesville, 117 F.3d 1342, 1345-46 (11th Cir. 1997) (noting that in 1970, "Congress enacted § 1975 of the BHCA, creating a private right of action in favor of individuals [*27] harmed by virtue of violations of the anti-tying provisions of the BHCA"). Thus, in order to have standing to sue under the BHCA, a plaintiff must at least allege an injury that is caused by the allegedly unlawful tie. See, e.g., Baggett v. Fist Nat'l Bank of Gainesville, 117 F.3d 1342, 1346 (11th Cir. 1997); Sundance Land Corp. v. Cmty. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 840 F.2d 653, 660 (9th Cir. 1988); Sterling Coal Co. v. United Am. Bank of Knoxville, 470 F. Supp. 964, 965 (E.D. Tenn. 1979); see also Mid-State Fertilizer Co. v. Exchange Nat'l Bank of Chi., 693 F. Supp. 666, 669 (N.D. Ill. 1988) (limiting standing to those who allege "direct" injuries). Further, pursuant to the language of the statute, the injury must be one to "business or property."

Defendants correctly argue that plaintiffs have not alleged an injury caused by the tie. See PNC Mem. at 25-26. Plaintiffs' BHCA allegations are limited to the allegations that (1) "[d]efendants illegally require that its SBA borrowers provide vigilante bailout services upon PNC's decision to confess judgment, whereby the debtor is made the collections enforcer against third parties who are unprepared and unprotected from such attack," [*28] and (2) "PNC does not properly screen these debt collection recruits nor train them adequately, leaving defaulting debtors free to wreak havoc on the marketplace." Compl. PP 438-39. These allegations are bereft of any suggestion that the alleged tie between SBA loans and "vigilante bailout services" harmed plaintiffs.

Moreover, even reading the phrase "injured in his business or property" broadly to include any injury to business or property, none of the other allegations in the complaint are sufficient to confer § 1975 standing on plaintiffs. Plaintiffs do allege that (1) Fyk threatened them, see id. P 144, (2) he did so at the behest of the other defendants, see id. PP 392-93, 400, 649, (3) plaintiffs suffered "financial exposure" as a result, id. P 399, (4) "[i]n response to Fyk's threats, [William] Shipp recused himself from [the] Board of Directors decisions" at the bank for which Shipp works, id. P 230, and (5) Fyk was used by the defendants "to extort funds from unsuspecting members of the general public," id. P 495, see also id. P 499. But the only harms to plaintiffs -- as opposed to the general public -- actually alleged in these portions of the complaint are (1) the presumably [*29] personal psychic harm from financial exposure and (2) the need to recuse. These are not harms to business or property. Any other harms alleged in the complaint, meanwhile, are not tied to anything that can be construed as "vigilante bailout services" provided by Fyk. Accordingly, nothing in the complaint establishes plaintiffs' standing to sue for a BHCA violation, and defendants' motions will be granted as to Count 14.

---

[11] I also note that Fyk and other debtors, as the direct victims of any anticompetitive activity, would be better suited to challenge any antitrust violations by the defendants. The fourth factor of the standing test thus also weighs against plaintiffs in this case.

C.

Count 15 of the complaint alleges that the defendants violated the FDCPA, 15 U.S.C. § 1692 et seq. This count must be dismissed as to PNC and Rohr, because "the FDCPA's provisions generally apply only to 'debt collectors,'" not creditors. Pollice v. Nat'l Tax Funding, L.P., 225 F.3d 379, 403 (3d Cir. 2000). Thus, "[c]reditors who collect in their own name and whose principal business is not debt collection . . . are not subject to the Act." Id. (quoting Aubert v. Am. Gen. Fin., Inc., 137 F.3d 976, 978 (7th Cir. 1998)). The act also exempts "any officer or employee of a creditor while, in the name of the creditor, collecting debts for such creditor." 15 U.S.C. § 1692a(6)(A). Here, the complaint reveals that PNC originated the loan to For Your Kids on which it later [*30] tried to collect. See Compl. P 89 ("PNC granted two SBA guaranteed loans to For Your Kinds totaling $ 85,000"); PP 109-10 (speaking of "the time that PNC issued SBA loans to Fyk"), P 162(b) (noting the "PNC-Fyk lien-generating contract") (emphasis supplied), P 303 (alleging that PNC was aware of various pieces of information "prior to Fyk loan issuance"), P 304(f)(vi) (discussing "PNC's assessment of Fyk's character prior to loan origination"), P 372 (noting "PNC's private contract with Fyk"), P 383 (alleging that "Fyk conveyed contingent property interests to PNC in December 2006"), P 466 (alleging that "Fyk was insolvent at loan origination, and PNC could have identified this risk at time of loan origination"). The FDCPA claim may therefore not be asserted against PNC. Rohr, meanwhile, is an officer of PNC, and there are no allegations in the complaint to suggest that he attempted to collect any debts for any other institution or for PNC under a different name. The claim is thus also precluded as to Rohr.

Tucker and Donaher, meanwhile, argue that plaintiffs "do[] not allege that [Tucker or Donaher] attempted to collect any debt from [them]." Tucker Mem. at 28. This argument is well-taken. [*31] Plaintiffs' FDCPA claims arise under 15 U.S.C. § 1692d, e, f, and g, see Compl. PP 444-47, 449, and each of these sections applies only if statements or communications are made "in connection with the collection of any debt," 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692d, 1692e, 1692g(a), or "to collect or attempt to collect any debt," id. § 1692f. See also Piper v. Portnoff Law Assocs., Ltd., 396 F.3d 227, 232 (3d Cir. 2005) (noting this feature with regard to §§ 1692e and 1692g). Nothing in the complaint alleges that any communications between Donaher and Shipp were related to the collection of a debt.

In fact, all of the facts and factual allegations currently before this court are to the contrary: According to the complaint, the attorney defendants (1) sent William Shipp a letter rejecting a check sent by Shipp to PNC, (2) conversed with Shipp before oral argument in the Superior Court, and (3) filed documents in opposition to Shipp's petition to intervene in the state court proceedings. See Compl. PP 189-90. But (1) the letter merely returns the check and refuses to disclose information in discovery, see Compl. Ex. 5A, (2) the conversation consisted only of "Donaher's rejection of Shipp's offer to discuss [*32] lien resolution," id. P 190, and (3) Tucker's judicially-noticed filings in the Superior Court do not attempt to collect a debt from plaintiffs. [12] Thus, as the plaintiffs have "allege[d] no facts to support the contention that" communications they received from Donaher and Shipp "constituted a collection or attempt to collect" the debt, the allegations that the attorney defendants violated the FDCPA will be dismissed.

D.

Count 23 of the complaint alleges that the defendants violated 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), the portion of RICO that makes it "unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." The same count alleges that defendants violated 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d), which outlaws conspiracies to violate the other provisions of § 1962.

RICO provides a private right [*33] of action to "[a]ny person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962." 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). The Third Circuit has interpreted this language "as requiring a RICO plaintiff to make two related but analytically distinct threshold showings relevant in this appeal: (1) that the plaintiff suffered an injury to business or property; and (2) that the plaintiff's injury was proximately caused by the defendant's violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962." Maio v. Aetna, Inc., 221 F.3d 472, 483 (3d Cir. 2000). Moreover, "'a showing of injury requires proof of a concrete financial loss and not mere injury to a valuable intangible property interest.'" Id. (quoting Steele v. Hosp. Corp. of Am., 36 F.3d 69, 70 (9th Cir. 1994)). This requirement "can be satisfied by allegations and proof of actual monetary loss," id., or by a "fail[ure] to perform under the parties' contractual arrangement," id. at 490.

[12] Further, the Court of Common Pleas, in an opinion attached to the complaint, held that Tucker's filings in that court contained no "false averments." Compl. Ex. 4, at 2.

Nowhere in the extraordinarily lengthy complaint do plaintiffs allege that they suffered any such concrete harms. The RICO count, in fact, does not allege any harm to the plaintiffs. See Compl. PP 492-96. Elsewhere, plaintiffs claim that they suffered injuries such as (1) "a cloud [*34] over every personal decision that [they] have to make in every facet of their lives," id. P 140-41; see also id. PP 145-46, (2) "threats against Shipp's person, employment, [b]usiness relationships, reputation, and health," id. P 144, (3) recusals from decisions made by the bank of which William Shipp is a director and the need to "subordinate [Shipp's] own . . . claims" against Fyk to those held by Shipp's bank, id. PP 230-31, see also id. P 673, (4) "premature" concerns about the plaintiffs' "ability to endure market pressures" and ability to "care for their children," id. PP 543-44, (5) "the indignity of being toyed with before the courts," id. P 546, and (6) being "frozen out of the legal process," P 176. None of these injuries is concrete and financial. [13]

Plaintiffs also allege that defendants' "activities unreasonably caused injury, harm, damage, inconvenience, annoyance, and [*35] discomfort to [William] Shipp's reasonable enjoyment and use of his reasonable rights in" the property at issue. Id. P 628. This statement never specifies what damage plaintiffs suffered, and therefore does not allege a concrete financial injury. Paragraph 628 is also nothing more than a legal conclusion, which is insufficient to overcome defendants' motions to dismiss. See *Weiss v. First Unum Life Ins., No. 02-cv-4249, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27863, 2003 WL 25713970, at 5 (D.N.J. Aug. 27, 2003) ("Plaintiff's vague and conclusory assertion that he was damaged because he deferred purchases and lost medical benefits are wholly insufficient to establish a compensable injury to business or property."); *Heimbecker v. 555 Assocs., No. 01-cv-6140, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6636, 2003 WL 21652182, at 14 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 26, 2003) (dismissing a RICO count where the allegations of injury amounted to "bald assertions, subjective characterizations, and legal conclusions"). Finally, the allegations that "Fyk breached contractual obligations to Shipp," id. P 643, and that "[d]efendants and[/]or their agents irreparably harmed the Plaintiffs in their businesses," id. P 647, are equally conclusory and therefore insufficient to state an injury that is cognizable [*36] under RICO. [14]

Accordingly, I find that plaintiffs have not established standing to sue under RICO, and defendants' motions will be granted as to Count 23.

E.

Counts 16-21 and 24-29 of the complaint allege that the defendants violated various federal criminal statutes contained in Title 18 of the United States Code. As a general matter, "Title 18 is a federal criminal statute which does not create civil liability or a private right of action." *U.S. ex rel. Stafford v. Luongo, No. 85-cv-1642, 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4733, 1989 WL 45910, at 2 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 19, 1989). Thus, private parties may not maintain suit under most provisions of Title 18.

This general rule applies to almost all of the remaining statutes invoked in the complaint. Count [*37] 17, for instance, alleges that the defendants acted as accessories after the fact in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 3. That statute,

---

[13] Plaintiffs do not allege that they suffered financial harm because William Shipp subordinated his claims against Fyk to those against NBM. Even if the complaint included such allegations, however, it would be unclear how that particular harm was proximately caused by defendants' alleged RICO activities.

[14] The complaint veers toward attempting to state claims on behalf of Shipp's bank in several places. The bank, however, is not a plaintiff in this action, and "[t]hat an individual shareholder or employee may sustain harm incidental to the injury to [a] corporation does not confer [RICO] standing upon him." Jordan v. Berman, 792 F. Supp. 380, 386 n.11 (E.D. Pa. 1992), vac'd in part on other grounds sub nom. Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, 20 F.3d 1250 (3d Cir. 1994).

however, "do[es] not provide a private right of action." Keyter v. Bush, No. 08-cv-97, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17045, 2008 WL 613129, at *2 (D. Del. Mar. 5, 2008); accord, e.g., Thomas v. Bryant, No. 09-cv-5189, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77031, 2009 WL 2473662, at *2 (W.D. Wash. Aug. 7, 2009). Neither does (1) the bankruptcy fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 157, see Carpenter v. Young, No. 04-cv-927, 2005 WL 1364787, at *4 (E.D. Pa. June 1, 2005); (2) 18 U.S.C. §§ 286 and 371, which criminalize conspiracies against the United States, see, e.g., Jones v. Lockett, No. 08-cv-16, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63381, 2009 WL 2232812, at *8 (W.D. Pa. July 23, 2009) (§ 371); Dugar v. Coughlin, 613 F. Supp. 849, 852 n.1 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (§ 286); (3) the mail, wire, and bank fraud statutes, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343, & 1344, [15] see, e.g., Jones, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63381, 2009 WL 2232812, at *8 (§ 1341); Beale v. Rubin & Rothman, LLC, No. 08-cv-4279, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55384, 2009 WL 1916322, at *5 (D.N.J. June 29, 2009) (§§ 1341 and 1344); Kovalev v. City of Phila., No. 07-cv-4875, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103552, 2008 WL 5377625, at *7 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 23, 2008) (§§ 1341 and 1343); Fleishman v. Scilley, No. 03-cv-4639, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20066, 2004 WL 2203746, at *1 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 30, 2004) [*38] (same); (4) 18 U.S.C. § 876, which concerns mailing threatening communications, [16] see, e.g., Weiss v. Sawyer, 28 F. Supp. 2d 1221, 1227 (W.D. Okla. 1997); Bryant v. Yellow Freight Sys., 989 F. Supp. 966, 968 (N.D. Ill. 1997); (5) 18 U.S.C. § 880, which concerns the proceeds of extortion, see Giron v. Abascal, No. 07-cv-110, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38582, 2007 WL 1722404, at *1, *4 (D.N.M. May 3, 2007), or (6) the attempt and conspiracy statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1349, see Rogerson v. United States, No. 08-cv-5060, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40339, 2009 WL 1361875, at *1, *5 (D.S.D. May 13, 2009). Defendants' motions will therefore be granted as to counts 17-20 and 24-29.

Further, although it appears that no federal court has yet addressed the question of whether or not 18 U.S.C. § 893, which criminalizes the willful lending of "money or property . . . for the purpose of making extortionate extensions of credit," contains a private right of action, this court concludes that it does not. There is no such right in the language of the statute, and § 893 is once again a "criminal statute [that] do[es] not support civil causes of action." Carpenter, 2005 WL 1364787, at *4. For this reason, the motions will also be granted as to Count 21.

Finally, while 18 U.S.C. § 1031 [17] "does permit a private cause of action, [that] private cause of action is limited to employee whistle blowers." Jones, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63381, 2009 WL 2232812, at *9; see also 18 U.S.C. § 1031(h)(1) (providing a cause of action for individuals who are "discharged, demoted, suspended, threatened, harassed, or in any other manner discriminated against in the terms and conditions of employment by an employer because of lawful acts done by the employee"). Plaintiffs do not allege [*40] that they are or ever were employees of the moving defendants, and defendants' motions will therefore also be granted as to Count 16 of the complaint.

VI.

The preceding sections conclude that all of the federal claims against PNC, Rohr, Tucker, and Donaher must be dismissed. [18] As noted above, Fyk and For Your Kids have filed an answer to the complaint, and the alleged "PNC/[Tucker] Clan" and the as-yet unidentified defendants have filed no response to the complaint. Nevertheless, the federal counts will be dismissed as to all defendants. Plaintiffs' claims under the federal constitution, the [15] Count 25 of the complaint, which alleges a wire fraud violation, is pled as a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1342, not 18 U.S.C. § 1343. Because § 1342 concerns sending and receiving mail under fictitious names, I assume that plaintiffs intended to list § 1343 as the relevant statute. In any case, § 1342 also lacks a private right of action. See, e.g., Weiss v. Sawyer, 28 F. Supp. 2d 1221, 1227 (W.D. Okla. 1997); Drance v. Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, No. 96-cv-5729, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11361, 1997 WL 442071, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 5, 1997).

---

[16] Count 27 of the complaint actually refers to 18 U.S.C. § 876, which does not [*39] exist. Because that count deals with the mailing of threatening communications, I assume that plaintiffs meant to plead a violation of § 876.

[17] On its face, Count 16 attempts to plead a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1931, which does not exist. Both that count and 18 U.S.C. § 1031 are, however, captioned "major fraud against the United States," so I construe that count as attempting to state a violation of § 1031.

[18] Because I reach this conclusion for the reasons given above, I will not address the numerous additional arguments presented in defendants' motions.

Sherman Act, the BHCA, RICO, and Title 18 cannot proceed against the non-moving defendants for precisely the reasons enunciated in Sections III, IV.A-B, and IV.D-E above. The FDCPA count, meanwhile, is subject to dismissal because the nonmoving defendants, like Tucker and Donaher, are not alleged to have attempted to collect a debt [*41] from the Shipps. [19] Because it therefore appears that all federal claims against all defendants are precluded for reasons substantially identical to reasons raised in the moving defendants' memoranda of law, to which plaintiffs have had an opportunity to respond, this court will sua sponte dismiss the federal claims against the non-moving defendants. See *Grine v. Colburn's Air Conditioning & Refrigeration, No. 09-cv-11, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75344, 2009 WL 2634179, at 1 (W.D. Pa. Aug. 25, 2009); Freedom Med. Inc. v. Gillespie, 634 F. Supp. 2d 490, 507 n.6 (E.D. Pa. 2007); see also, e.g., Bryson v. Brand Insulations, Inc., 621 F.2d 556, 559 (3d Cir. 1980) (noting that this court "may on its own initiative enter an order dismissing the action provided that the complaint affords a sufficient basis for the court's action").

With no federal claims remaining in this case, the pendent state claims will be dismissed without prejudice pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3). In deciding whether to retain jurisdiction over state claims once all of the federal claims in a case have been dismissed, this court considers "judicial economy, convenience, fairness, and comity." Annulli v. Panikkar, 200 F.3d 189, 202 (3d Cir. 1999), [*43] abrogated on other grounds by Rotella v. Wood, 528 U.S. 549, 120 S. Ct. 1075, 145 L. Ed. 2d 1047 (2000). Because this court is dismissing the complaint before discovery, judicial economy strongly weighs in favor of dismissal of the remaining claims. Comity, meanwhile, counsels allowing the Pennsylvania state courts to determine these issues, and I can perceive no unfairness or inconvenience to plaintiff if these claims are litigated in the appropriate state forum. [20]

VII.

Finally, I consider whether dismissal of plaintiffs' federal claims should be with or without prejudice to amendment of the complaint. Amendment of Counts 16-21 and 24-29 would be futile, because the statutes involved in those counts either contain no private right of action at all or no private right of action that encompasses plaintiffs. Those counts will accordingly be dismissed with prejudice. Similarly, because I can not imagine any set of facts broadly consistent with the current complaint that could sufficiently allege state action on the part of the defendants, Counts [*44] 1-12 and 22 will also be dismissed with prejudice. See, e.g., *Thompson v. Eva's Village & Sheltering Program, No. 09-cv-1510, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100504, 2009 WL 3486050, at 7 (D.N.J. Oct. 28, 2009). Count 13 will be dismissed with prejudice because plaintiffs would be unable to state an antitrust injury in an amended complaint, and Count 15 must be dismissed with prejudice as pled against PNC and Rohr, given that those defendants may not be considered debt collectors with regard to the SBA loan. By contrast, Counts 14 and 23, and Count 15 insofar as it applies to the remaining defendants, are being dismissed for pleading deficiencies that may potentially be remedied by amendment of the complaint; those counts will accordingly be dismissed without prejudice. Plaintiffs will be afforded thirty (30) days in which to file an amended complaint, with the proviso that the complaint must, this time, strictly comply with Rule 8(a)(2)'s mandate that it include "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief."

An appropriate order accompanies this opinion.

---

[19] Plaintiffs repeatedly assert that the other defendants used Fyk "to enforce collections." Compl. P 304(e); see also, e.g., id. P 313. The complaint does not allege, however, that Fyk ever attempted to collect a debt from Shipp, and the communications [*42] from Fyk to Shipp attached as exhibits also give no hint that Fyk was attempting to do so. See id. Exs. 1, 2, 7. A letter from Fyk to Shipp's counsel that is attached to the complaint is a settlement offer that asks, inter alia, that Shipp pay him "$ 967 for materials and work to the property." Id. Ex. 11. The courts in this circuit that have considered this question have determined that communications to a debtor's attorney do not fall within the ambit of the FDCPA. See, e.g., *Wright v. Phelan, Hallinan & Schmieg, LLP, No. 09-cv-3538, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21977, 2010 WL 786536, at *4-6 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 8, 2010) (citing further cases). Further, the letter to Shipp's counsel is manifestly not an attempt to collect any debt for the other defendants, and it is PNC's alleged collection attempts -- directly and via Tucker and Fyk -- that underpin plaintiffs' FDCPA claim.

[20] In this regard, I note that plaintiff has not alleged that defendants have complete control over the state courts -- only that Pennsylvania's confessed judgment procedure is tainted.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 25th day of March, 2010, for the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

(1) Plaintiffs' [*45] Petition to Supplement the Complaint with Exhibits (Docket No. 2) is GRANTED;

(2) Plaintiffs' request for judicial notice (contained in Docket No. 20) is GRANTED;

(3) Plaintiffs' Requests for Document Production (contained in Docket Nos. 16 and 20) are DISMISSED AS MOOT;

(4) The motion to dismiss filed by defendants PNC Bank, N.A. and James Rohr (Docket No. 14) is GRANTED;

(5) The motion to dismiss filed by defendants Donna Donaher and Tucker Arensberg, P.C. (Docket No. 15) is GRANTED; and

(6) (a) Counts 1-13, 16-22, and 24-29 of the Complaint, and Count 15 insofar as it applies to defendants PNC Bank, N.A. and James Rohr are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE; (b) Counts 14 and 23, and Count 15 insofar as it applies to the remaining defendants, are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE to refiling an amended complaint within thirty (30) days of the date of this Order; and (c) Counts 30-76 are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE to inclusion in an amended complaint or refiling in the appropriate state court.

BY THE COURT:

/s/ Louis H. Pollak

Pollak, J.

End of Document

Kroger Co. v. Sanofi-Aventis

United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, Western Division

March 26, 2010, Filed

Case No. 1:06-CV-163; Case No. 1:06-CV-202; Case No. 1:06-CV-427

Reporter

701 F. Supp. 2d 938 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45101 ; 2011-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,361

THE KROGER CO., et al., Plaintiffs, v. SANOFI-AVENTIS, et al., Defendants. IN RE: PLAVIX DIRECT PURCHASER ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Document Relates to: All Actions; CVS PHARMACY, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. SANOFI-AVENTIS, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Reconsideration denied by Kroger Co. v. Sanofi-Aventis, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164380 (S.D. Ohio, Nov. 23, 2010)

Related proceeding at In re Plavix Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8940 (S.D. Ohio, Jan. 31, 2011)

Core Terms

patent, generic, antitrust, purchasers, Plaintiffs', manufacturer, anticompetitive, antitrust violation, infringement, speculative, anti trust law, Sherman Act, Defendants', procompetitive, damages, flows, cases, district court, pharmaceutical, complaints, injunction, launch, competitors, consumers, alleged injury, allegations, indirect, patent infringement, predicate, invalid

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > Judicial Records

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Although typically courts are limited to the pleadings when faced with a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a court may take judicial notice of other court proceedings without converting the motion into one for summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Standing, Requirements

In order to survive a motion to dismiss for failure to allege antitrust injury, a plaintiff must allege either (1) that the antitrust violation was a necessary predicate to their injury; or (2) that the defendants could injure plaintiffs only by engaging in the antitrust violation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A claim survives a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) if it contains sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. A complaint's factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, on the assumption that all of the complaint's allegations are true.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

A court must construe a complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. In doing so, however, plaintiff must provide more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice. Particularly in the antitrust context, a district court must retain the power to insist on some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed. A naked assertion gets a complaint close to stating a claim, but without some further factual enhancement it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility. Something beyond the mere possibility of relief must be alleged, lest a plaintiff with a largely groundless claim be allowed to take up the time of a number of other people, with the right to do so representing an in terrorem increment of the settlement value.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Although Section 1 read literally prohibits every agreement in restraint of trade, it is well settled that the statute was intended to outlaw only "unreasonable" restraints. Thus in order to establish a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs must allege that the defendants entered into an agreement to unreasonably restrain trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN6[] Private Actions, Standing

To establish any antitrust claim, a plaintiff must have standing under the antitrust laws. Antitrust standing is a threshold, pleading-stage inquiry and when a complaint by its terms fails to establish this requirement courts must dismiss it as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

HN7[] Private Actions, Standing

In the traditional sense, standing is a U.S. Const. art. III requirement needing injury-in-fact, a casual connection between the injury and the conduct complained of, and the redressability of that injury by a favorable decision. Antitrust standing and Article III standing are not one and the same, and courts not only may--but must--reject claims under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) when antitrust standing is missing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN8[] Standing, Requirements

There are certain factors to be analyzed in determining whether a plaintiff has established antitrust standing. These factors include: (1) the casual connection between the antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market; (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative; (4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and (5) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation. The five factors are to be balanced, with no one factor being determinative.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN9[] Private Actions, Standing

As antitrust standing is a threshold, pleading-stage inquiry, when a complaint by its terms fails to establish this requirement courts must dismiss it as a matter of law--lest the antitrust laws become a treble-damages sword rather than the shield against competition-destroying conduct that Congress meant them to be. It is reasonable to assume that Congress did not intend to allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN10[] Standing, Requirements

An antitrust claimant must prove antitrust injury, which is to say (1) injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and (2) injury that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. A naked assertion of antitrust injury is not enough and an antitrust claimant must put forth factual allegations plausibly suggesting, not merely consistent with, antitrust injury. A claimant must allege more than that an injury is causally related to an antitrust violation; an injury will not qualify as antitrust injury unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny. The antitrust injury doctrine bars recovery where the asserted injury, although linked to an alleged violation of antitrust laws, flows directly from conduct that is not itself an antitrust violation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN11[] Justiciability, Standing

The constitutional minimum for general standing consists of (1) an injury-in-fact which is concrete and particularized, and actual or imminent not conjectural or hypothetical, (2) a casual connection between the injury and the conduct complained of, and (3) it must be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. A complainant must allege an injury to himself that is distinct and palpable not merely abstract and the alleged harm must be actual and imminent not hypothetical. Plaintiffs are denied standing where they rely on little more than the remote possibility, unsubstantiated by allegations of fact, that their situation might have been better had respondents acted otherwise, and might improve were the court to afford relief. To satisfy U.S. Const. art. Ill's standing requirement, a plaintiff must have suffered some actual or threatened injury due to the alleged illegal conduct of the defendant; the injury must be fairly traceable to the challenged action; and there must be a substantial likelihood that the relief requested will redress or prevent the plaintiff's injury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN12[] Standing, Injury in Fact

For standing, although a plaintiff need not show that the defendant's wrongful actions were the sole proximate cause of his injuries, the causal link must be provided as a matter of fact and with a fair degree of certainty.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

HN13[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The per se rule is a method of determining whether § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, has been violated, but it does not indicate whether a private plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN14[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Section 2 of the Sherman Act states that every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce shall be deemed guilty of a felony. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. To establish a § 2 violation, plaintiffs must demonstrate (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > General Overview

HN15[] Defenses, Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

Walker Process claims are based on a fraudulently obtained patent. In Walker Process, the U.S. Supreme Court held that although a patent is an exception to the general rule against monopolies and to the right to access a free and open market and is generally immune from a suit for antitrust liability, the enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office may be violative of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. Typically, Walker Process claims are brought as counterclaims in patent infringement lawsuits; for instance, a plaintiff claims the defendant is infringing his patent and the defendant counterclaims that the patent was obtained fraudulently and is invalid. Walker Process claims are based on a fraudulently obtained patent, and are typically brought as counterclaims in patent infringement suits: the plaintiff claims the defendant infringed his patent, and the defendant responds that the patent was invalid as fraudulently obtained, and that the plaintiff's enforcement efforts violate Walker Process.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Particular Parties

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > General Overview

HN16[] Justiciability, Standing

Outside the context of an infringement suit counterclaim, a patent's validity can be challenged only by a party (1) producing or preparing to produce the patented product, and (2) being threatened or reasonably likely to be threatened with an infringement suit.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Particular Parties

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > General Overview

HN17[] Defenses, Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

The U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Ohio finds the reasoning of In re Remeron and In re Ciprofloxacin more persuasive than the holding of Molecular Diagnostics. Significantly, the balance of the courts interpreting standing of consumers in Walker Process claims deny such parties standing.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Particular Parties

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > General Overview

HN18[] Defenses, Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

There is no case in which a federal court has concluded that purchasers of a patented product have standing to assert a Walker Process claim against a patent holder where the underlying patent has been upheld as valid and enforced against an infringer. In such circumstance, the infringer itself would be unable to substantiate a Walker Process claim.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > General Overview

HN19[] Defenses, Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

If a patent is valid, a Walker Process claim cannot stand.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Bad Faith

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

HN20[] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Bad Faith

Under Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures a sham suit must be both subjectively brought in bad faith and based on a theory of either infringement or validity that is objectively baseless. Accordingly, if a suit is not objectively baseless, an antitrust defendant's subjective motivation is immaterial. In contrast with a Walker Process claim, a patentee's activities in procuring the patent are not necessarily at issue. It is the bringing of the lawsuit that is subjectively and objectively baseless that must be proved. If an objective litigant could conclude that a suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized from antitrust liability, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. A winning lawsuit is by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and therefore not a sham.

Counsel: [1] For Kroger Co, Plaintiff: Wilbert Benjamin Markovits, LEAD ATTORNEY, Waite, Schneider, Bayless & Chesley, Cincinnati, OH; William Henry Blessing, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cincinnati, OH; Gregory Alan Harrison, Dinsmore & Shohl -1, Cincinnati, OH; Jean M Geoppinger, Waite Schneider Bayless & Chesley Co LPA, Cincinnati, OH; Richard Alan Arnold, Scott E Perwin, Kenny Nachwalter, P.A., Miami, FL.

For Sanofi-Aventis, Defendant: Joseph P Thomas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Ulmer & Berne - 1, Cincinnati, OH; Richard J. Stark, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP, New York City, NY; Alan R Dial, Kevin R Sullivan, Peter M Todaro, King & Spalding LLP, Washington, DC; David Greenwald, Evan R. Chesler, Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP, New York, NY; Jeffrey Francis Peck, Ulmer & Berne LLP - 1, Cincinnati, OH.

For Bristol-Myers Squibb Co, Defendant: Gregory Alan Harrison, LEAD ATTORNEY, Dinsmore & Shohl -1, Cincinnati, OH; Richard J. Stark, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP, New York City, NY; Alan R Dial, Kevin R Sullivan, Peter M Todaro, King & Spalding LLP, Washington, DC; David Greenwald, Evan R. Chesler, Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP, New York, NY.

For Apotex Corporation, Defendant: Robert Alan Klingler, LEAD [2] ATTORNEY, Cincinnati, OH; Gregory Alan Harrison, Dinsmore & Shohl -1, Cincinnati, OH; Howard Langer, PRO HAC VICE, Langer & Grogan, P.C., Philadelphia, PA; John James Grogan, Langer & Grogan, P.C., Philadelphia, PA; Kathleen Mary Brinkman, Cincinnati, OH; Robert S Silver, Caesar, Rivise, Bernstein, Cohen & Pokotilow, Ltd., Philadelphia, PA.

For Sanofi-Synthelabo, Inc., Sanofi-Aventis U.S. L.L.C., Bristol-Myers Squibb Sanofi Pharmaceuticals Holding Partnership, Defendants: Joseph P Thomas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Ulmer & Berne - 1, Cincinnati, OH; Gregory Alan Harrison, Dinsmore & Shohl -1, Cincinnati, OH; Jeffrey Francis Peck, Ulmer & Berne LLP - 1, Cincinnati, OH.

Judges: Michael H. Watson, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: Michael H. Watson

Opinion

[*940] OPINION AND ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter arises from actions against Defendant pharmaceutical manufacturers, Sanofi Aventis and Sanofi-Synthelabo, Inc. ("Sanofi Aventis") and Bristol-Myers Squibb Company and Bristol-Myers Squibb Sanofi Pharmaceuticals Holding Partnership ("BMS") (collectively "Sanofi") and Apotex Corporation ("Apotex") (collectively

"Defendants"). These cases involve Plavix, a pioneer clopidogrel bisulfate drug used to treat patients at risk for heart [3] attacks and strokes. Sanofi manufacturers Plavix. Apotex was the first generic applicant to seek Federal Drug Administration ("FDA") approval to market a generic version of Plavix in the United States.

Plaintiffs have brought antitrust claims for alleged violations under §§ 1 and 2 [1] of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2. Plaintiffs claim that they have suffered antitrust injuries as a result of Defendants' alleged illegal agreements. Plaintiffs assert the alleged illegal agreements prevented Defendants from entering into a legal competitive agreement which would have permitted the generic version of Plavix to enter the market at an earlier date thus allowing Plaintiffs to purchase the drug for a lower price.

The Court has subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337(a). Venue is proper in this Court pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 22 because each Defendant transacts business here.

Defendants Sanofi and Apotex have moved the Court to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Plaintiffs have responded to the motions, [4] and Defendants have replied. For the reasons that appear below, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motions to dismiss (Case No. 1:06-CV-163 Docs. 67 & 68; Case No. 1:06-CV-202 Docs. 97 & 98; Case No. 1:06-CV-427 Docs. 60 & 61).

II. BACKGROUND

A. The Parties

1. Defendants

(a) The Sanofi Defendants

Defendant Sanofi-Aventis is a French corporation engaging in the development, [*941] manufacture, and sales of brand-name pharmaceutical drugs throughout the United States. Defendant Sanofi-Synthelabo is a Delaware corporation and an affiliate of Sanofi-Aventis. Defendant Sanofi-Synthelabo is the holder of the U.S. patent 4,847,265 ("the '265 patent") for Plavix, the pharmaceutical drug at issue in this litigation.

Defendant Bristol-Myers Squibb is a Delaware corporation engaging in the development, manufacturing, and selling of brand-name pharmaceutical drugs throughout the United States. Defendant Bristol-Myers Squibb Sanofi Pharmaceuticals Holding Partnership is a partnership registered in the state of Delaware. Under this business arrangement with Sanofi-Aventis, Bristol-Myers Squibb and Bristol-Myers Squibb Sanofi Pharmaceuticals Holding Partnership engage in the marketing and selling of Plavix throughout [5] the United States.

(b) The Apotex Defendant

Defendant Apotex is a Delaware corporation and is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Apotex, Inc., Canada's largest generic drug manufacturer. Apotex was the first generic applicant to seek FDA approval to sell generic Plavix.

2. Plaintiffs

(a) Direct Purchasers

---

[1] Section 2 claims are not brought against Defendant Apotex. See, e.g., Second Am. Compl. at P 132 (Case No. 1:06-cv-163, Doc. 62).

The Direct Purchasers consist of the Kroger Plaintiffs, [2] The Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs, [3] and the CVS Plaintiffs. [4] The Direct Purchasers purchase pharmaceutical products for distribution and sale throughout several states. The Direct Purchasers own and operate retail stores with pharmacies throughout several states [5] and these pharmacies dispense pharmaceutical drugs, including Plavix, to the public. [6]

(b) Indirect Purchasers

The Indirect Purchasers [7] consist of end-payors who seek to represent in this class action "[a]ll persons and entities throughout the United States and its territories who purchased Plavix for themselves, their families, or their members, employees, insureds, participants, or beneficiaries" during the relevant time period. End-Payor Pls.' First Am. Consol. Class Action Compl. P 148 (Case No. 1:06-cv-226, Doc. [*942] 81). The Indirect Purchasers consist of individual consumers, health and benefit funds, and private insurance companies that are third-party payors. Such third-party payors pay some or all of the cost of prescription drugs, specifically Plavix, purchased for consumption by themselves, their families, or their members, employees, insureds, participants, or beneficiaries.

B. Regulatory System Governing the Drug Approval Process

Before a drug can be sold in the United States, the FDA must approve the drug. 21 U.S.C. § 355(a). A pioneer drug manufacturer files a new drug application ("NDA") with the FDA as part of the process of proving the drug is safe and effective, and to obtain premarket approval. The NDA must reference those patents that claim the new drug and for which a claim of patent infringement could reasonably be asserted against an unauthorized manufacturer or seller. After the [8] FDA approves the NDA, the NDA and its related patents are listed in the Approved Drug Products With Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations publication, also known as the "Orange Book."

The Hatch-Waxman Act of 1984 ("Hatch-Waxman Act") regulates the approval of generic pharmaceutical drugs through an expedited FDA approval process. 21 U.S.C. § 355). This expedited process allows generic versions of brand-name drugs previously approved by the FDA to reach market more quickly by allowing the generic manufacturer to forego clinical trials in reliance on the test results of the brand name manufacturer.

A generic drug company files an Abbreviated New Drug Application ("ANDA") if it seeks to utilize the expedited approval process. The ANDA Application must include a statement certifying that the generic drug will not infringe on the brand name manufacturer's drug. [8] See 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii)(I-IV). A Paragraph IV certification

---

[2] The Kroger Plaintiffs: The Kroger Co., Walgreen Co., Eckerd Corporation, Maxi Drug, Inc. d/b/a Brooks Pharmacy, Albertson's, Inc., Safeway, Inc., Hy-Vee, Inc. and American Sales Company, Inc.

[3] The Direct Purchaser Class Plaintiffs: Meijer, Inc., Meijer Distribution, Inc., Rochester Drug Cooperative, Inc., SAJ Distributors, Inc., Stephen L. LaFrance Holdings, Inc. on behalf of themselves and a proposed class of direct purchasers of Plavix

[4] CVS Pharmacy, Inc., et al.: CVS Pharmacy, Inc., [6] Rite Aid Corporation, and Rite Aid Hdqrts. Corp.

[5] Except for American Sales Company, Inc. American Sales Company, Inc. purchases pharmaceutical goods and distributes such goods to retail stores owned by affiliated companies.

[6] The Direct Purchasers have each filed a separate complaint. The Direct Purchasers have collectively responded to Defendants' motion to dismiss.

[7] Indirect Purchasers: American [7] Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees District Council 47 Health and Welfare Fund, Kenneth A. Franklin, International Association of Fire Fighters Local 22 Health and Welfare Fund, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 98 Health & Welfare Plan, Painters District Council No. 30 Health and Welfare Fund, Richard Parker, Plumbers and Pipefitters Local Union 630 Welfare Fund, Joel Scheckner, United Food and Commercial Workers Unions and Employers Midwest Health Benefits Fund, United Food and Commercial Workers Union Local 1776 and Participating Employers Health and Welfare Fund, Vista Healthplan, Inc., Charles S. Watson, and Antonette Williams.

[8] Four types of certifications exist:

triggers a 45-day time frame in which the NDA holder can file an action against the generic manufacturer for infringement of the patent which is the subject of the certification. 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii). Pursuant to statute, upon filing such a suit, the FDA's [9] approval of the ANDA is automatically stayed for up to 30 months, until the expiration of the pioneer patent, or until judicial resolution of the patent litigation. 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii)(I-III).

The FDA grants the first generic manufacturer to file a Paragraph IV certification with an ANDA for a specific drug an 180-day exclusivity period to sell its version of the generic drug without other generic competitors entering the market. The 180-day exclusivity period begins to run from (1) the day the court determines the pioneer drug's patent is invalid, or (2) the day the initial holder of the ANDA application first markets the generic. 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv)(I), (II). During the 180-day exclusivity period other generic manufacturers are prevented from receiving ANDA approval.

Much controversy [10] surrounds the potential for companies to collude to subvert the Hatch-Waxman Act during this 180-day exclusivity period. If a brand name manufacturer pays a generic manufacturer to stay off the market, the 180-day period is [*943] not triggered and thus the time never begins to run. Therefore, neither the generic manufacturer paid by the patent holder nor other generic manufacturers waiting in line for the 180-day period to run can enter the market. Such so-called "reverse payment" agreements have been heavily scrutinized for being anti-competitive. Furthermore, when settlement agreements end the patent litigation initiated by the filing of the ANDA with Paragraph IV certification, the patent's validity is never litigated. See, e.g., Alan Devlin, Exclusionary Strategies in the Hatch-Waxman Context, 2007 MICH. ST. L. REV. 631 (2007); James C. Burling, Hatch-Waxman Settlements: The Battle for a Benchmark, 20-SPG ANTITRUST 41 (2006); Herbert Hovenkamp, Mark Janis & Mark A. Lemiey, Anticompetitive Settlement of Intellectual Property Disputes, 87 MINN. L. REV. 1719(2003).

C. Sanofi's Patents and Product

Sanofi is the patent assignee of several patents, including: U.S. patent 4,529,596 issued July [11] 16, 1985, and U.S. patent 4,847,265 ("the '265 patent") issued July 11, 1989, and Canadian patent 1,194,875 issued on or about October 15, 1985. Sanofi submitted the NDA for Plavix on April 28, 1997, and it was approved by the FDA on November 17, 1997. Plavix is listed in the Orange Book as covered by the '265 patent, U.S. Patent 5,576,328 ("the '328 patent"), U.S. Patent 6,429,210 ("the '210 patent"), and U.S. Patent 6,504,030 ("the '030 patent"). Sanofi and BMS under a business partnership jointly market the pharmaceutical drug Plavix in the United States.

Plaintiffs' complaints allege the '265 patent is invalid because of misrepresentations and omissions made to the Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") as part of the patent application, resulting in inequitable conduct by Sanofi, thereby rendering the '265 patent unenforceable. The Court takes judicial notice of United States District Judge Sidney Stein's decision, Sanofi-Synthelabo v. Apotex Inc., 492 F. Supp. 2d 353, 397 (S.D.N.Y. 2007), aff'd, 550 F.3d 1075 (Fed. Cir. 2008), cert denied, 130 S. Ct. 493, 175 L. Ed. 2d 346 (2009), finding no clear and convincing evidence that Sanofi engaged in inequitable conduct before the PTO regarding the '265 patent [12] valid, finding the '265 patent valid and enforceable, and issuing a permanent injunction barring Apotex from engaging in any activity that infringes the '265 patent. See *Buck v. Thomas M. Cooley Law Sch., 597 F.3d 812, 2010 WL 935364, 3 (6th Cir. 2010) (HN1[] "Although typically courts are limited to the pleadings when faced with a motion under Rule 12(b)(6), a court may take judicial notice of other court proceedings without converting the motion into one for summary judgment." (citing Winget v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., 537 F.3d 565, 576 (6th Cir. 2008))).

---

(1) "Paragraph I" certification: no patent information has been filed with the FDA;

(2) "Paragraph II" certification: the patent has expired;

(3) "Paragraph III" certification: the date the patent will expire in the future, or;

(4) "Paragraph IV" certification: the patent is invalid or not infringed by the generic product,

See 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii)(I-IV).

D. Apotex's ANDA and the Patent Litigation

On November 16, 2001, Apotex became the first manufacturer to seek FDA approval to market a generic version of Plavix in the United States. Apotex filed an ANDA with a Paragraph IV certification to sell a generic version of Plavix and gave notice to Sanofi of such Paragraph IV certification. Apotex claimed that each patent listed in the Orange Book that related to Plavix was unenforceable, invalid, and would not be infringed by Apotex's generic drug. Pursuant to the Hatch-Waxman Act, Apotex, as the first generic manufacturer to file an ANDA with Paragraph IV certification, was entitled [13] to the 180-day exclusivity period once it began marketing its generic version of Plavix.

Following this ANDA filing by Apotex, Sanofi filed a lawsuit on March 21, 2002, in the United States District Court for the [*944] Southern District of New York asserting Apotex had infringed on two of the patents covering Plavix, the "265 patent and the '328 patent, pursuant to 35 U.S.C. § 271(e)(2)(A). [9] Thus the lawsuit triggered a 30-month delay during which the FDA could not approve Apotex's ANDA. Subsequently, Sanofi dismissed with prejudice its claims based on the '328 patent; therefore only the claims for infringement of the '265 patent remained.

In addition to its suit against Apotex, Sanofi also filed suit against Dr. Reddy's Laboratory, Ltd., Dr. Reddy's Laboratories, Inc., and Teva Pharmaceutical Industries, Ltd., for alleged infringement of the '265 patent through their potential [14] selling of generic Plavix.

E. Agreements between Sanofi and Apotex

Apotex received final FDA approval for its generic version of Plavix on January 20, 2006; the automatic 30-month stay expired in May 2005. The patent trial was scheduled for April 2006. Because of the gap in time until trial, Apotex was faced with launching its generic drug "at-risk" (i.e., without resolution of the patent's validity). A launch at-risk exposed Apotex to the danger that Sanofi would file for a preliminary injunction enjoining Apotex from selling generic Plavix while the lucrative 180-day exclusivity period continued to run, and subjected Apotex to possible infringement damages if the patent was upheld.

Apotex began planning for a launch at-risk. It entered into purchase contracts for raw materials in anticipation of the launch of generic Plavix and also began obtaining pre-release orders from customers, including many Plaintiffs in this case. Apotex offered to indemnify its customers from any potential liability they might face as a result of selling generic Plavix. Apotex's Chief Executive Officer, Dr. Bernard Sherman, also issued a press release after Apotex received final FDA approval of its generic [15] Plavix stating that Apotex was confident the '265 patent would be held invalid.

Outside the two companies, independent professionals in the patent field also believed the validity of the '265 patent was questionable. For instance, when Aventis was subject to a hostile bid from Sanofi, Aventis hired Jeffrey Lewis, a patent attorney from Patterson, Belknap, Webb & Tyler LLP, in New York, to review the information surrounding the '265 patent litigation and to advise Aventis shareholders on the risk of the Plavix litigation. In March 2004, Mr. Lewis represented to shareholders and analysts that he believed the challenge to the '265 patent to be very valid. See Second Am. Compl. (Case No. 1:06-cv-163, Doc. 62) at P 75.

In addition to the risk of the invalidity of the '265 patent, Plaintiffs in this case allege Sanofi was concerned that even if Sanofi ultimately did prevail on the patent suit, Sanofi risked billions of dollars in lost profits, long term damage to their business prospects, and lowering of their stock price, compounded by the danger that Apotex might not have the resources to pay substantial infringement damages. Thus, Plaintiffs maintain both Sanofi and Apotex were motivated [16] to enter into a settlement agreement by risk and uncertainty. Prior to any negotiation of an agreement, Apotex and Sanofi agreed that Sanofi would not seek a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction [*945] and Apotex would be protected in selling its generic Plavix for at least 75 days before any patent trial.

[9] In this case, Plaintiffs assert that because of its alleged omission and misrepresentations to the PTO, Sanofi had reason to believe that the '265 patent was invalid as anticipated by prior art under 35 U.S.C. § 102, for obviousness under 35 U.S.C. § 103, and under the doctrine of obviousness-type double patenting.

1. The March Agreement

Sanofi and Apotex began to negotiate a settlement agreement between the parties. On March 21, 2006, Sanofi and Apotex announced a tentative agreement ("the March Agreement") which required approval by the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") and a consortium of state attorneys general. The alleged terms of the agreement were: (1) Sanofi would not launch an authorized generic of its own during the 180-day exclusivity period; (2) Sanofi would pay Apotex for the cost of its generic Plavix inventory, up to $ 40 million; (3) Sanofi would pay Apotex $ 60 million if the FTC and the state attorneys general did not approve the agreement on or before June 30, 2006; if the agreement was approved by that date, Sanofi had the option of paying Apotex $ 20 million, $ 30 million, or $ 40 million per month (depending on the month) through December 31, 2006; (4) Sanofi [17] would make similar payments to Apotex in the event that Sanofi was unable to negotiate an agreement with Dr. Reddy's by the time regulatory approval was obtained; and (5) Sanofi would compensate Apotex in the event that Plavix sales fell below certain specified amounts once Apotex entered the market with its generic version. [10]

The March Agreement was submitted to the FTC and the state attorneys general on March 30, 2006. Sanofi and Apotex issued press releases regarding the March Agreement to settle the '265 litigation, but noted a significant risk existed that the settlement would not be approved by the FTC and the state attorneys general and thus would not be finalized.

On May 5, 2006, the state attorneys general notified Sanofi and Apotex that the March Agreement failed to obtain approval.

2. The May Agreement

Sanofi and Apotex submitted a second agreement ("the May Agreement") to the FTC and state attorneys general on May 26, 2006. The May Agreement also required approval by the Federal Trade Commission and a consortium of state attorneys general. The May Agreement contained the following modifications [18] to the March Agreement: (1) the effective date of Apotex's license was moved forward to June 1, 2011 from September 17, 2011; (2) if the patent litigation resulted in a judgment that the "265 patent was valid, damages borne by Apotex would be capped at 50% of its net sales (the March Agreement had capped the damages at 70% of sales) and Sanofi would not be entitled to seek attorneys' fees; and (3) Sanofi would not be prohibited from launching its own authorized generic during Apotex's 180-day exclusivity period. On July 28, 2006, the state attorneys general notified Sanofi and Apotex that the May Agreement would not be approved.

Plaintiffs in this case allege the existence of additional verbal side agreements to the May Agreement that were not disclosed to the FTC or the state attorneys general. On July 27, 2006, one day prior to the announcement that the May Agreement was not approved, the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice launched a criminal probe into the proposed settlement. The offices of BMS' (former) Chief Executive Officer and the Senior Vice President for Strategy and External Affairs were searched by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. On June 11, 2007, BMS [19] entered a plea agreement wherein it pleaded guilty to two counts of making false [*946] statements to government officials in connection with the proposed settlement.

3. The Generic Launch by Apotex

---

[10] The facts of the March Agreement are alleged in each of Plaintiffs' complaints,

On August 8, 2006, Apotex initiated a launch at-risk of its generic version of Plavix. Five days later Sanofi filed a motion for preliminary injunction which was granted on August 31, 2006. Apotex halted sales on its generic 23 days after it launched.

F. Plaintiffs' Allegations in the Antitrust Litigation

Plaintiffs filed various amended complaints against Defendants alleging violations of antitrust laws. The Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs assert two causes of action, violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2.

The thrust of Plaintiffs' allegations is that but for Defendants entering into the March and May Agreements described above, Defendants would have instead entered into an agreement with more favorable terms than the March and May Agreements. Plaintiffs claim Defendants would have either (1) entered into a licensing agreement granting Apotex a license to market its generic version of Plavix for a continuous and sustained period before the 2011 patent expiration date; or, alternatively [20] (2) Sanofi would have given up some of its patent life in exchange for delayed entry of Apotex's generic after Apotex received FDA approval. Plaintiffs allege this alternative, allegedly procompetitive agreement would have avoided the '265 patent trial and would have allowed Plaintiffs to receive the benefits of generic competition through cost savings.

G. Cardizem

The seminal case in the Sixth Circuit involving reverse payment agreements between a brand manufacturer and a pharmaceutical generic is the Cardizem case. In re: Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 332 F.3d 896, 906 (6th Cir. 2003). In Cardizem, direct and indirect purchasers of diltiazem hydrochloride, a heart medication commonly referred to as Cardizem CD, sued the manufacturer of the drug and the potential manufacturer of the generic version of the drug for an alleged antitrust violation arising from an agreement entered into by the defendants. Essentially, the agreement provided that the brand name manufacturer, Hoescht Marion Roussell, Inc., would pay Andrx, the generic manufacturer, quarterly payments of $ 10 million in return for Andrx not marketing its FDA-approved generic. The Sixth Circuit held that such a settlement agreement [21] was per se illegal. Id.

The Caridzem case occurred under the statutory framework established by the Hatch-Waxman Act. Hoescht held a patent for a time-released version of Cardizem CD that was listed in the Orange Book. Andrx filed an ANDA with a Paragraph IV certification asserting its generic did not infringe on any of Hoescht's patents. Because Andrx was the first to file an ANDA, upon FDA approval it was entitled to the 180-day exclusivity period. In January 1996, Hoescht immediately filed a lawsuit asserting that the generic version infringed its patent, thus triggering the 30-month stay of approval.

Over a year later on September 15, 1997, Andrx obtained tentative approval of its ANDA, and asserted that it would market its generic as soon as either the 30-month stay expired in July 1998 or the court in the patent infringement suit determined Hoescht's patent was not infringed.

Soon thereafter on September 24, 1997, however, and prior to the possible entry date for the generic, Hoescht and Andrx entered into an agreement. The interim settlement agreement provided that Andrx would not market its generic version of the [*947] drug until the patent litigation was decided and would not relinquish [22] its 180-day period of exclusivity. In return, Hoescht would make payments of $ 40 million per year beginning on the date Andrx received final FDA approval. Essentially, in return for Andrx parking its 180-day period of exclusivity and thereby preventing competition to Hoescht by other generics, Hoescht would make substantial reverse payments to Andrx. Significantly, the agreement extended to other drugs not included in the patent litigation.

The 30-month statutory stay expired on July 8, 1998; pursuant to the agreement, Andrx did not bring its generic drug to market and Hoescht began making $ 10 million quarterly payments.

The plaintiffs in Cardizem filed claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act seeking treble damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. Specifically, the plaintiffs alleged that the agreement and payments caused Andrx not to bring its generic to market and that competition was not introduced to Hoescht's brand name drug thereby keeping the price for Cardizem elevated. The plaintiffs asserted the agreement precluded other generics from entering the market because Andrx parked its 180-day exclusivity period.

In several motions to dismiss, the defendants argued, inter alia, [23] that the plaintiffs had failed to allege a cognizable antitrust injury. The district court denied each motion to dismiss, concluding the plaintiffs had adequately asserted an "antitrust injury."

Subsequently, the plaintiffs moved for partial summary judgment on the grounds that the agreement was a per se illegal restraint of trade. The district court granted the plaintiffs' motion, holding that the agreement, and specifically the payments not to enter the market, was a naked, horizontal restraint of trade and thus was per se illegal.

On interlocutory appeal, the district court certified two questions for the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals:

> (1)… In determining whether Plaintiffs have properly pled antitrust injury, does the language of the Sixth Circuit's decisions in Valley Products Co. v. Landmark, 128 F.3d 398, 404 (6th Cir. 1997) and Hodges v. WSM, Inc., 26 F.3d 36, 39 (6th Cir. 1994) require dismissal of Plaintiffs' antitrust claims at the pleading stage if Plaintiffs cannot allege facts showing that Defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct was a "necessary predicate" to their antitrust injury; i.e., that dismissal is required unless Plaintiffs plead facts showing that the alleged [24] antitrust injury could not possibly have occurred absent Defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct?
>
> (2). . . In determining whether Plaintiffs' motions for partial judgment were properly granted, whether the Defendants' September 24, 1997 Agreement constitutes a restraint of trade that is illegal per se under section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and under the corresponding state antitrust laws at issue in this litigation.

Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 900.

The Sixth Circuit initially addressed the second question and held the agreement was a per se illegal restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The court stated the agreement guaranteeing Andrx money in return for abstaining from marketing their generic and preventing other generics from entering the market through misuse of the 180-day exclusivity period was, "at its core, a horizontal agreement to eliminate competition in the market for Cardizem CD throughout the entire United States, a classic example of a per se illegal restraint of trade." Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 908. The court rejected the defendants' characterization of the [*948] agreement as merely an attempt to enforce patent rights, stating that [25] the payments and the parked 180-day exclusivity arrangement were tantamount to bolstering the patent's effectiveness. Furthermore, the court rejected as irrelevant the defendants' characterizations of the agreement as having procompetitive benefits. Citing Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, the court reiterated that the per se rule allows courts to presume certain behaviors are per se anticompetitive without needing to evaluate any proposed procompetitive justifications. Arizona v. Maricopa Cty. Medical Soc, 457 U.S. 332, 351, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982). "Thus, the law is clear that once it is decided that a restraint is subject to per se analysis, the claimed lack of any actual anticompetitive effects or presence of procompetitive effects is irrelevant." Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 909.

In turning to the question of antitrust injury, the court applied the Brunswick test. The Brunswick test establishes a two part test to determine antitrust injury. Antitrust injury is (1) "injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent" and (2) injury "that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977).

The court found [26] prong one easily fulfilled by the plaintiffs' allegations that as consumers of the drug Cardizem, they were deprived of an alternative, less expensive generic and thus were forced to purchase the higher priced brand name. The court opined that "[p]reventing that kind of injury was undoubtedly a raison d'etre of the Sherman Act." Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 909 (citations omitted). Yet whether the injury "flows" from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful" required more discussion.

The defendants, relying on Hodges v. WSM, Inc., 26 F.3d 36, 39 (6th Cir. 1994), [11] argued that in order to adequately allege an antitrust injury, a plaintiff must allege that the only way the defendant could have caused the plaintiffs injury was by engaging in the antitrust activity. Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 912. As applied to the Cardizem case facts, the defendants maintained Andrx could have unilaterally and legally decided on its own not to market its generic and thus plaintiffs had not suffered an antitrust injury.

The Sixth Circuit disagreed with this argument and clarified Hodges, holding that HN2[] "in order to survive a motion to dismiss for failure to allege antitrust injury, a plaintiff must allege either. (1) that the antitrust violation was 'a necessary predicate' to their injury; or (2) that the defendants could injure plaintiffs only by engaging in the antitrust violation." Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 913 (citing Hodges, 26 F.3d at 39) (emphasis added by Cardizem court). Thus, despite the defendants' allegations of an alternative legal reason for Andrx's decision not to market its generic, the complaint could survive a motion to dismiss because it asserted a viable antitrust injury that flowed from the per se illegal agreement. Id.

III. STANDARD ON MOTION TO DISMISS

HN3[] A claim survives a motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) [*949] if it "contain[s] sufficient factual matter, accepted as [28] true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "The plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement," but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. A complaint's "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, on the assumption that all of the complaint's allegations are true." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555-56, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (internal citations omitted).

HN4[] A court must also "construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Inge v. Rock Fin. Corp., 281 F.3d 613, 619 (6th Cir. 2002). In doing so, however, plaintiff must provide "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555; see also Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 ("Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice."); Ass'n of Cleveland Fire Fighters v. City of Cleveland, Ohio, 502 F.3d 545, 548 (6th Cir. 2007). Particularly in the antitrust context, the Supreme Court cautions that "a district [29] court must retain the power to insist on some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed." Mich. Division-Monument Builders of N. Am. v. Mich. Cemetery Ass'n, 524 F.3d 726, 731-32 (6th Cir. 2008) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 558). The Supreme Court reminded courts that "it is one thing to be cautious before dismissing an antitrust complaint in advance of discovery, but quite another to forget that proceeding to antitrust discovery can be expensive." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 558 (internal citations omitted). "[A] naked assertion . . . gets the complaint close to stating a claim, but without some further factual enhancement it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility. . . ." Id. Thus, "something beyond the mere possibility of [relief] must be alleged, lest a plaintiff with a largely groundless claim be allowed to take up the time of a number of other people, with the right to do so representing an in terrorem increment of the settlement value." Id. (internal citations omitted); see also NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Co., 507 F.3d 442, 450 (6th Cir. 2007) (en banc).

IV. DISCUSSION

Defendants Sanofi and Apotex seek dismissal of Plaintiffs' [30] Sherman Act Section 1 Claim. Defendants Sanofi and Apotex argue Plaintiffs' Section 1 restraint-of-trade theory is flawed because Plaintiffs fail to allege an antitrust [11] In Hodges, the Sixth Circuit Court affirmed the district court's dismissal for failure to allege an antitrust injury and stated: "[b]ecause plaintiffs did not allege, nor could they, that the illegal [27] antitrust conduct was a necessary predicate to their antitrust injury or that defendants could exclude plaintiffs only by engaging in the antitrust violation, it was appropriate to dismiss the case pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6)." Hodges, 26 F.3d at 39 (emphasis added).

---

violation and lack standing to bring an antitrust claim for failure to allege an antitrust injury flowing from the alleged anticompetitive behavior.

Defendant Sanofi seeks dismissal of Plaintiffs' Sherman Act Section 2 Claim based on a Walker Process theory of monopolization through the "enforcement of a patent procured by fraud" on the PTO. Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 174, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965) ("enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office may be violative of [section] 2 of the Sherman Act provided the other elements necessary to a [section] 2 case are present"). Defendant Sanofi argues Plaintiffs as consumers fail to establish their standing, as Walker Process claims are typically permitted by courts only for actual or would-be patent infringers.

Plaintiffs oppose dismissal of any of their claims arguing they pleaded each claim sufficiently to withstand a motion to dismiss.

[*950] A. Section 1 Claims

In their motions to dismiss, Defendants argue Plaintiffs fail to adequately plead [31] a Section 1 claim. Specifically, they assert that Plaintiffs fail to plead a violation of antitrust laws, fail to plead a cognizable antitrust injury, and the attempt to connect their alleged injury to the settlement agreements is hypothetical and speculative.

Plaintiffs assert the agreements are per se illegal agreements in violation of antitrust laws and assert an antitrust injury of "overcharges on their purchases of Plavix" flowing from such. Joint Resp. in Opp'n to Mot. to Dismiss (1:06-cv-163, Doc. 74) at 46. Plaintiffs claim that Defendants violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by entering into unlawful anticompetitive agreements which prevented Defendants from entering into a legal procompetitive agreement. See 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiffs allege this legal procompetitive agreement would have resulted in an earlier and sustained entry of generic Plavix into the market place. Plaintiffs allege by entering into these unlawful anticompetitive agreements Defendants sought to restrain trade by keeping generic Plavix out of the market. Id.

HN5[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or [32] commerce … is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Although Section 1 read literally "prohibits every agreement in restraint of trade", Maricopa Cty., 457 U.S. at 342, it is well settled that the statute was intended to outlaw only "unreasonable" restraints. State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997). Thus in order to establish a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, Plaintiffs must allege that Defendants entered into an agreement to unreasonably restrain trade. Id.; Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 906.

HN6[] To establish any antitrust claim, however, a plaintiff must have standing under the antitrust laws. See NicSand, 507 F.3d at 450 ("[A]ntitrust standing is a threshold, pleading-stage inquiry and when a complaint by its terms fails to establish this requirement we must dismiss it as a matter of law.").

1. Standing

Defendants assert Plaintiffs' complaints fail to establish they have antitrust standing because the complaints fail to assert an antitrust injury that flows from the allegedly anticompetitive agreements. See, e.g., Valley Prods. Co., Inc. v. Landmark, A Div. of Hospitality Franchise Sys., Inc., 128 F.3d 398, 402 (6th Cir. 1997) (quoting Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489). Specifically, [33] Defendants argue Plaintiffs' alleged injury is not of the type antitrust laws were intended to prevent, does not flow from the alleged violation, and the injury is speculative. Defendants assert the complaints fail to allege an antitrust injury because the agreements on which Plaintiffs hinge their injury never took effect, as evidenced by the fact that the agreements required government approval, never were approved, and Apotex launched at-risk. Instead, Defendants claim Plaintiff's current inability to purchase a generic version of Plavix if it constitutes any type of injury, does not flow from that which supposedly violated the antitrust laws--namely the alleged anticompetitive agreements--but results from the permanent injunction issued after a bench trial in which the court ruled that Sanofi's patent was valid and enforceable. Sanofi-Synthelabo v. Apotex Inc., 492 F.

Supp. 2d 353 (S.D.N.Y. 2007), aff'd, 550 F.3d 1075 (Fed. Cir. 2008), cert denied, 130 S. Ct. 493, 175 L. Ed. 2d 346 [*951] (2009). As such, Defendants argue Plaintiffs' theory--that in the absence of the actual proposed settlement agreements the Defendants would have reached a "procompetitive agreement" resulting in the sustained presence [34] of generic Plavix on the market--is entirely speculative and conjectural.

Plaintiffs contend they have adequately pleaded an antitrust injury and a valid injury exists and flows from Defendants' agreements. Plaintiffs argue their alleged injury is not speculative. Plaintiffs assert their injury is paying heightened prices for Plavix and this is precisely the type of injury the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.

(a) Requirements for Antitrust Standing

HN7[] In the traditional sense, standing is an Article III requirement needing injury-in-fact, a casual connection between the injury and the conduct complained of, and the redressability of that injury by a favorable decision. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351; Fednay, Ltd. v. Chester, 547 F.3d 607, 614 (6th Cir. 2008). "Yet antitrust standing and Article III standing are not one and the same, and we not only may--but we must--reject claims under Rule 12(b)(6) when antitrust standing is missing." NicSand, 507 F.3d at 449.

HN8[] "The Supreme Court has articulated certain factors to be analyzed in determining whether a plaintiff has established antitrust standing." Indeck Energy Servs., Inc. v. Consumers Energy Co., 250 F.3d 972, 976 (6th Cir. 2000) [35] (citing Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 537-45, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)). These factors include:

> (1) the casual connection between the antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused;
> (2) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market;
> (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative;
>
> (4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and
>
> (5) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation.

Indeck, 250 F.3d at 976. The five factors are to be balanced, however, "with no one factor being determinative." Id. (citing Peck v. Gen. Motors Corp., 894 F.2d 844, 846 (6th Cir. 1990)).

HN9[] As "antitrust standing is a threshold, pleading-stage inquiry, … when a complaint by its terms fails to establish this requirement we must dismiss it as a matter of law--lest the antitrust laws become a treble-damages sword rather than the shield against competition-destroying conduct that Congress meant them to be." NicSand, 507 F.3d at 450. [36] As the Sixth Circuit noted in NicSand, > [l]t should come as no surprise that, in the seminal antitrust standing case, the Supreme Court dismissed the claim under Rule 12(b)(6). See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 545-46,103 S.Ct. 897. And our court has dismissed numerous lawsuits for lack of antitrust standing under Rule 12(b)(6). See Indeck Energy Servs. v. Consumers Energy Co., 250 F.3d 972, 977 (6th Cir. 2000); Valley Prods., 128 F.3d at 407; Hodges v. WSM, Inc., 26 F.3d 36, 39 (6th Cir.1994); Peck v. Gen. Motors Corp., 894 F.2d 844, 848 (6th Cir. 1990); Apperson v. Fleet Carrier Corp., 879 F.2d 1344, 1351-52 (6th Cir.1989); Tennessean Truckstop, Inc. v. NTS, Inc., 875 F.2d 86, 90 (6th Cir.1989); Axis, S.p.A. v. Micafil, Inc., 870 F.2d 1105, 1111 (6th [*952] Cir. 1989); Southaven Land Co. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1088 (6th Cir.1983); see also N.W.S. Mich., Inc. v. Gen. Wine & Liquor Co., 58 Fed. Appx. 127, 129-30 (6th Cir. Feb. 6, 2003); *Park Ave. Radiology Assocs., P.C. v. Methodist Health Sys., 198 F.3d 246, 1999 WL 1045098, at 7 (6th Cir. 1999); *Dry v. Methodist Med. Ctr. of Oak Ridge, Inc., 893 F.2d 1334, 1990 WL 3489, at 5 (6th Cir.1990).

Id. As the Supreme Court [37] pointed out, it "is reasonable to assume that Congress did not intend to allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property." Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc., 459 U.S. 535 (citation omitted).

(b) Existence of Antitrust Injury

Antitrust injury is the most hotly disputed element of antitrust standing in this case.

HN10[] An antitrust claimant must prove antitrust injury, which is to say (1) "injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent" and (2) injury "that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489; see also NicSand, 507 F.3d at 450. A "naked assertion" of antitrust injury is not enough and "an antitrust claimant must put forth factual 'allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with)' antitrust injury." NicSand, 507 F.3d at 451 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553-54). A claimant must allege more than that an injury is "causally related to an antitrust violation[;]" an injury "will not qualify as antitrust injury unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny. . [38] . ." Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990) (internal citations omitted); see also NicSand, 507 F.3d at 451. "The Sixth Circuit. . . has been reasonably aggressive in using the antitrust injury doctrine to bar recovery where the asserted injury, although linked to an alleged violation of antitrust laws, flows directly from conduct that is not itself an antitrust violation." Indeck, 250 F.3d at 976 (quoting Valley Prods., 128 F.3d at 403.)

Defendants rely upon the Sixth Circuit's decisions in the Axis trilogy of cases for the proposition that Plaintiffs failed to plead an injury that flows from the alleged violations but instead pleaded an injury that flows from the patent as a valid legal barrier. Axis, 870 F.2d at 1105; Hodges, 26 F.3d at 36; Valley Prods. Co., 128 F.3d at 398. In Axis, the Sixth Circuit found that Axis' alleged injury--lost sales and profits resulting from its exclusion from the U.S. market--did not result from the corporate acquisition the plaintiff challenged on antitrust grounds, but rather from the defendant's patents to which the plaintiff was not licensed. 870 F.2d 1105. For its analysis, the court assumed that the acquisitions violated [39] the antitrust laws. The Sixth Circuit held that even if the defendant's acquisition violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by reducing competition, the plaintiff did not suffer an antitrust injury because its exclusion from the United States market was not caused by the acquisition, but rather resulted from the enforcement of the patents and the patent controller's refusal to license Axis. Thus even if the violation had not occurred, the plaintiff would have suffered the same injury because the defendant's patents "were an impenetrable barrier" to the plaintiffs entry to the U.S. market. Id. The "claims of injury by reason of antitrust violations are compensable only when the injury flows directly from the unlawful act." Id. at 1109 (emphasis added). Thus, the court held the plaintiff was [*953] not entitled to damages or injunctive relief absent a showing of antitrust injury. Accordingly, the Sixth Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal.

Similarly, in Hodges, the Sixth Circuit held plaintiff's alleged injury, which stemmed from defendant's agreement to refuse certain shuttle services entry to Opryland theme park, was not caused by a violation of antitrust laws, but instead by a legal [40] right to refuse entry onto private property. 26 F.3d at 36. Thus even if the agreement was anticompetitive and in violation of Section 1, id. at 38, the court reasoned the illegal antitrust conduct was not the "necessary predicate" of the plaintiff's injury as the defendant exercised a lawful property right to exclude the plaintiff. Accordingly, the Sixth Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal of the action for failure to state a claim.

And in the final case in this trilogy, Valley Products, a case about soap embossed with hotel logos, a manufacturer alleged an antitrust action against a hotel franchiser for terminating the manufacturer's license to produce products and for deciding to choose other manufacturers as its preferred vendors. 128 F.3d 398. The Sixth Circuit held the alleged antitrust violation was not a "necessary predicate" to the plaintiffs injury as the alleged injury would have been suffered whether or not the defendants entered an anticompetitive agreement because of plaintiff's loss of its vendor agreement. Thus, the plaintiff had not suffered an antitrust injury. Id. at 404.

The Sixth Circuit further illuminated this line of cases in Cardizem when it explained [41] that the Axis plaintiffs' > complaints were dismissed for failure to allege antitrust injury because each of the Defendants had taken an action that it was lawfully entitled to take, independent of the alleged antitrust violation, which was the actual, indisputable, and sole cause, of the plaintiff's injury. In Axis, the antitrust injury was not the "necessary predicate" because the plaintiff's alleged injury--its exclusion from competing in the armature winding machine market--admittedly flowed not from the anticompetitive effects of the allegedly illegal purchase, but from its lack of access to the "impenetrable" patents.

> * * *
> Thus, in reality, we have only dismissed a case for failure to allege that an antitrust violation is the "necessary predicate" for the plaintiff's injury where it has been apparent from the face of the complaint that actual and unequivocally legal action by the defendant would have caused plaintiffs injury, even if there had been no antitrust violation.

Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 914.

In Cardizem, however, the court distinguished the Axis trilogy, finding that the complaint alleged that the per se illegal agreement with its payment to the generic manufacturer, rather [42] than the patent, constituted the "necessary predicate" for the generic manufacturer's decision to keep generic product off the market. Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 914-15. The Cardizem court held that the fact that the generic could have unilaterally, and legally, decided not to bring its generic product to a manifestly profitable market had no relevance in assessing whether the plaintiffs adequately alleged that the antitrust violation was the necessary predicate for their injury. Id.

In distinguishing the Axis trilogy of cases, the Cardizem court clarified that in "none of [the Axis trilogy of] cases was a complaint dismissed for failure to allege antitrust injury based on a defendant's claim that it could have caused the same injury without committing the alleged violation." Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 914 (emphasis [*954] in original). Instead, the Cardizem court found that the Axis trilogy's complaints were dismissed for failure to allege antitrust injury because each of the "defendants had taken an action that it was lawfully entitled to take, independent of the alleged antitrust violation, which was the actual, indisputable, and sole cause of the plaintiffs injury." Id. (emphasis added). The Cardizem [43] court reasoned that unlike the Axis' defendants, the Cardizem defendants failed to "identify a lawful right that they had and exercised and that indisputably caused plaintiffs' injury." Id. at 914-15.

Plaintiffs would have the Court find this case analogous to Cardizem. The Court, however, finds the instant case analogous to the Axis trilogy of cases because Plaintiffs' allegations, taken as true and construed in their favor, preclude the possibility that their injury flowed from the anticompetitive effects of the agreements "which make [D]efendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489. While the instant case is somewhat factually similar to Cardizem in that it involves a reverse payment agreement, in Cardizem, the agreements and reverse payments kept the generic from entering the market. Not so in this case. The complaints establish Apotex's launch at-risk flooded the clopidogrel bisulfate market with generic product and the dissemination of this generic drug was stopped by the preliminary and permanent injunctions obtained by Sanofi against Apotex. The complaints themselves state that the alleged anticompetitive agreements neither precluded Apotex from selling clopidogrel bisulfate [44] nor prevented these Plaintiffs from buying it. The complaints claim that the injunction stopped Apotex from putting anymore generic Plavix on the market.

Defendants identify a lawful right that they had and exercised--litigation of the '265 patent to determine its validity resulting in a preliminary and permanent injunction--independent of the alleged antitrust violation, which was the "actual, indisputable, and sole cause of Plaintiffs' injury." Id. (emphasis added). Had the New York district court not issued the injunctions, Plaintiffs would still have access to generic clopidogrel bisulfate and would have no injury. Thus, Plaintiffs' injury of being "overcharge[d] on their purchases of Plavix" resulted when the generic was pulled from the market as a result of the injunction, notwithstanding the allegedly anticompetitive agreements. The injunctions barring infringement of the '265 patent and the '265 patent itself are impenetrable legal impediments to the sale of generic Plavix, resulting in Plaintiffs' inability to "purchase Plavix and its generic equivalents for a sustained and continuous period of time." Direct. Puch. Compl. P 162(b). Such alleged "injury, although causally related [45] to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as 'antitrust injury,'" Atl. Richfield, 495 U.S. at 333 (citations omitted), since it "flows directly from conduct that is not itself an antitrust violation." See Indeck, 250 F.3d at 976.

Since antitrust injury is a necessary component of antitrust standing, dismissal is appropriate.

(c) Injury is Speculative

As addressed above, the Supreme Court instructs in Twombly that a naked assertion of antitrust injury is not enough and an antitrust claimant must put forth factual allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) antitrust injury. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555-56.

Defendants argue Plaintiffs' "but for" theory attempts to fill in missing links between the alleged anticompetitive agreements and the injury of being "overcharge[d] on their purchases of Plavix" [*955] and that such missing links are fatal to Plaintiffs' case. Defendants state that Plaintiffs' theory that but for the alleged anticompetitive March and May agreements, Defendants would have reached a procompetitive agreement allowing early entry of the generic onto the market obviating the need for a patent trial is pure speculation. Defendants argue conjectural and [46] hypothetical injuries such as this are insufficient to establish the injury-in-fact required to establish the constitutional minimum for standing.

Plaintiffs contend the Court must accept as true the allegation that "were it not for the unlawful agreements, . . . given the pressure and incentive to settle faced by all of the Defendants, the Defendants would have reached a procompetitive agreement." Joint Resp. in Opp'n to Mot. to Dismiss (Case No. 1:06-cv-163, Doc. 74) at 47. Plaintiffs allege the illegal agreements prevented Defendants from entering into a different agreement which Plaintiffs aver would have been more procompetitive than the negotiated agreements. Plaintiffs argue the lack of agreement compelled the generic to enter the market, forcing the subsequent injunction, and instigating the eventual finding of the validity of the challenged patent. Plaintiffs argue that the anticompetitive agreements injured them by preventing a true, procompetitive agreement from being reached between Sanofi and Apotex. Plaintiffs state this procompetitive agreement would have allowed the entry of generic clopidigrel bisulfate "well before 2011 [the patent's expiration]… at a price materially [47] below the branded version." Third Consol. Am. Compl. (Case No. 1:06-cv-202, Doc. 92) at P 136. Plaintiffs claim the procompetitive agreement would have "permitted Apotex to enter the market immediately … in return for royalty payments from Apotex reflecting the parties' contemporaneous valuation of Sanofi's patent rights," or it would have permitted "early-entry settlement in which Sanofi would have given up some portion of its patent life in exchange for Apotex agreeing to delay its entry for some period of time. . . ." Id. at P 137.

In Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 519, the Supreme Court dismissed a Section 1 claim for lack of standing where the claimant's injury and the alleged restraint in the market contained several "somewhat vaguely defined links" and was "highly speculative." The "tenuous and speculative character of the relationship between the alleged antitrust violation" and the injury claim weighed "heavily against judicial enforcement of the [claimant's] antitrust claim." Id. at 542-43, 545-46. "The indirectness of the alleged injury also implicates the strong interest, identified in our prior cases, in keeping the scope of complex antitrust trials within [48] judicially manageable limits." Id. at 542-44. See also Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560-61 (finding that HN11[] the constitutional minimum for general standing consists of (1) an injury-in-fact which is concrete and particularized, and actual or imminent not conjectural or hypothetical, (2) a casual connection between the injury and the conduct complained of, and (3) it must be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision (internal citations omitted)); Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 156, 110 S. Ct. 1717, 109 L. Ed. 2d 135 (1990) (A complainant must allege an injury to himself that is distinct and palpable not merely abstract and the alleged harm must be actual and imminent not hypothetical); Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 507, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (1975) (the plaintiffs denied standing where they "rely on little more than the remote possibility, unsubstantiated by allegations of fact, that their situation might have been better had respondents acted [*956] otherwise, and might improve were the court to afford relief); Coyne v. Am. Tobacco, 183 F.3d 488, 494 (6th Cir. 1999) ("To satisfy Article Ill's standing requirement, a plaintiff must have suffered some actual or threatened injury due to the alleged [49] illegal conduct of the defendant; the injury must be 'fairly traceable' to the challenged action; and there must be a substantial likelihood that the relief requested will redress or prevent the plaintiff's injury.").

Defendants argue Plaintiffs cannot satisfy standing requirements by merely asserting that but for a challenged action, Defendants would have proceeded in a way that benefitted Plaintiffs. Defendants rely on American Federation of Government Employees v. Clinton, 180 F.3d 727 (6th Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1018, 120 S. Ct. 1417, 146 L. Ed. 2d 310 (2000). In that case, the plaintiffs challenged an administrative determination which allowed only private contractors to bid on work at Air Force bases. The plaintiffs alleged that if work at the Air Force bases were bid on by other military bases and not just private contractors, those other military bases would have won the bids and plaintiffs would have better employment opportunities. Id. The Sixth Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal of plaintiffs' claims for lack of standing, finding the asserted "injuries too speculative, and insufficiently concrete and particularized, to establish Article III standing." Id. at 731. The court indicated [50] the injuries alleged tended to "involve a potential loss of job benefits, not an actual one. . . . [and] any benefit loss results most clearly from the unchallengeable and unchallenged decision to close bases", not the decision to limit bidding to private contractors. Id. at 732.

The Court finds American Federation analogous to the current Plaintiffs' "but for" world. HN12[] Although a plaintiff "need not show that the defendant's wrongful actions were the sole proximate cause of his injuries, the causal link must be provided as a matter of fact and with a fair degree of certainty." Ezzo's Inv., Inc. v. Royal Beauty Supply, Inc., 243 F.3d 980, 990 (6th Cir. 2001) (citations omitted). Here, the causal link is strewn far: but for the alleged anticompetitive agreements, Sanofi not only would have entered into a different settlement agreement with Apotex but one with more procompetitive terms than the March and May agreements actually negotiated between Sanofi and Apotex which allowed early entry of Apotex's generic onto the market; the hypothetical agreement would receive regulatory clearance; and such events would have prevented the preliminary injunction, prevented the determination of the [51] validity of the patent by the patent court, and prevented the permanent injunction which prevented Apotex from selling generic Plavix before the expiration of the patent.

In order to connect the alleged injury--lack of access to generic Plavix--to the anticompetitive agreements, and to circumvent the launch at-risk and subsequent injunctions, Plaintiffs weave a circuitous "but for" scenario which would have resulted in sustained early entrance of generic Plavix thus preventing their alleged injury. This indirect causal link between Defendants' alleged wrongful actions--the March and May anticompetitive agreement--and Plaintiffs' injuries is not a matter of fact [12] and rests on a purely hypothetical early-entrance agreement that would provide Plaintiffs the benefit of earlier access to generic Plavix. Plaintiffs [*957] cannot satisfy standing requirements by merely asserting that but for a challenged action, Defendants would have proceeded in a way that benefitted Plaintiffs. See Warth, 422 U.S. at 507. The Court finds the claim for an injury deriving from the failure to reach a hypothetical procompetitive agreement is "nothing but speculation." Assoc. Gen. Contactors, 459 U.S. at 542-43, 545-46; [52] Indeck, 250 F. 3d at 977 (affirming the district court's dismissal of the Section 1 claim because the claimed injury and the antitrust damages alleged by plaintiff from defendant's acts were, among other things, too indirect and speculative).

Furthermore, the difficulty in determining damages for speculative claims supports a finding that such claims cannot meet the requirements of antitrust standing. Assoc. Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542-44 ("Partly because [the injury] is indirect, and partly because the alleged effects on the [claimant] may have been produced by independent factors, the [claimant]'s damages claim is also highly speculative"). In remarking on the difficulty of ascertaining damages of such a speculative injury, the Supreme Court noted that "any attempt to ascertain damages with such precision 'would often require additional long and complicated proceedings involving massive evidence and complicated theories.'" Id. at 544 (citations omitted).

The Court notes that if the injury began to [53] accrue at the time the agreements were made, or at the time an alternative procompetive agreement would have been reached, the alleged injury would still be occurring notwithstanding Sanofi's valid patent and the permanent injunction preventing entry of Apotex's generic onto the market. Essentially, the injury would only end when the patent expired and Plaintiffs gained access to the generic

---

[12] See, e.g., Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary, 2009 (defining fact as "a thing done"; "the quality of being actual"; "something that has actual existence"; or "an actual occurrence").

Plavix. It seems illogical to suggest that a patent-holder must pay consumers for being injured by not having access to a generic when the patent holder possesses a valid patent preventing entrance of such a generic onto the market. The relief requested by Plaintiffs would not redress or prevent Plaintiffs' alleged injury. Furthermore the damages theory relies on speculation as to what might have been negotiated in a hypothetical agreement and such damages would be impossible to define. Such difficulty in ascertaining damages of such a speculative injury is outside Congress's intent for enacting the Sherman Act. See Axis, 870 F.2d at 1107 (citing Hawaii v. Standard Oil, 405 U.S. 251, 263, 92 S. Ct. 885, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1972) ("Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might [54] conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation")).

Instead, reading the complaint in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, the injuries alleged tend to involve a loss of potential access to generic Plavix if a hypothetical procompetitive agreement were reached, not an actual one, and any benefit lost results from the preliminary and permanent injunctions. Id. at 731. Plaintiffs' complaint hinges on a purely conjectural theory of antitrust injury. The Court finds such injury is speculative and insufficiently concrete and particularized to establish standing.

Plaintiffs, however, rely on the New Jersey district court decision in In re K-Dur for their "but for" proposition. In re K-Dur, 338 F. Supp. 2d 517 (D.N.J. 2004). In K-Dur, the state of Pennsylvania and various direct and indirect purchasers of K-Dur, a pioneer potassium chloride supplement used to treat patients with depleted potassium levels, sued the manufacturer and generic manufacturers alleging the defendants entered into an unlawful agreement [*958] in restraint of trade in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The district court found that "a reasonable trier of fact could conclude that but for the allegedly anti-competitive [55] agreements, generic drugs may have entered the market sooner." Id. at 532, 535. Accordingly, the district court found the plaintiffs pleaded "sufficiently the anti-competitive behavior (an agreement in restraint of trade) and injury (higher prices) required to state a Sherman Act violation." Id.

The Court is unpersuaded by the reasoning in K-Dur. K-Dur is distinguishable because, that case, like Cardizem, involved actual reverse payments. Neither involved a generic manufacturer prevented by injunctions from continuing to provide generic product to the market. Here, in contrast, the Court has already held that these Plaintiffs have neither pled a cognizable injury nor a direct relation between Plaintiffs' alleged injury and Defendants' alleged misconduct. In this case, the "but for" theory is an attempt by Plaintiff to circumvent the reality of the permanent injunction that removed the generic from the market and produced the level of competition--or more aptly lack of competition--as it currently exists. Lastly, K-Dur was decided under the older Con/ey-standard which was heightened by the Supreme Court's rulings in Twombly and Iqbal.

In this case, Plaintiffs do not allege their injury--lack [56] of access to generic Plavix--derives directly from the alleged anticompetitive agreements. On the face of the complaint, Plaintiffs assert their injury hinges on the failure to enter a hypothetical agreement. In an attempt to skirt the injunctions as the source of its injury, Plaintiffs allege a speculative link of acrimony that flowed from the anticompetitive agreements which in turn prevented entrance into a procompetitive agreement. Plaintiffs cloud the issue through discussion of Sanofi's criminal sanctions in support of the alleged "acrimony."

Plaintiffs' complaints state the agreements were per se illegal, but the alleged competition-destroying conduct did not destroy competition, as evidenced by Plaintiffs' allegations that Apotex went to market notwithstanding the agreement. See Sanjuan v. Am. Bd. of Psychiatry & Neurology, Inc., 40 F.3d 247, 251 (once a claim for relief has been stated, a plaintiff "receives the benefit of imagination, so long as the hypotheses are consistent with the complaint"). Indeed, Plaintiffs cannot satisfy their pleading burden by ignoring the course of action that did occur--i.e. a launch at-risk followed by an injunction and a subsequent trial--and [57] in a conclusory fashion asserting Defendants would have procompetitively settled instead of proceeding to trial. Plaintiffs' asserted "but for" scenario presupposing arrangements is not fact and the Court will not accept unwarranted inferences of fact cast in the form of factual allegations. See Blackburn v. Fisk Univ., 443 F.2d 121, 124 (6th Cir. 1971); see also Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555-56.

Plaintiffs point to an FTC study and law review articles saying many similar type disputes are settled, however, conduct of others does not bespeak conduct by these Defendants. See Joint Resp. in Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss (Case No. 1:06-cv-163, Doc. 74) at 59-60 and Ex. E. An allegation of anticompetitive agreements and a naked assertion of the mere possibility of injury tied to these agreements is not adequate. Conclusory allegations will not suffice, absent "further factual enhancement," to propel Plaintiffs' complaints across the "line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557. Instead the complaints make a series of speculative links of what could, would, or [*959] should have happened that would allow Plaintiffs to currently have access to a generic [58] version of the patented Plavix drug. The antitrust laws are not designed to ensure the most productive competition or the most procompetitive agreement that could be reached, they are designed to ensure a market free from inappropriate restraints on competition. And the Supreme Court requires more than "naked assertion[s]" of antitrust injury to establish antitrust standing. See NicSand, 507 F.3d at 451 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557).

(d) Conclusion

The Court finds Plaintiffs lack antitrust standing to bring a Section 1 claim against Defendants because Plaintiffs fail to demonstrate that the alleged antitrust violation was a necessary predicate of Plaintiffs' injury and the asserted injury is speculative. In balancing these factors,

> (1) the casual connection between the antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused;
> (2) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market;
> (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative;

Indeck, 250 F.3d at 976, each factor supports dismissal of Plaintiffs' Section 1 [59] claim for failing to allege an antitrust injury that flows from the pleaded anticompetitive behavior.

2. Violation of Antitrust Laws / Per se Violation of Antitrust Laws

Although the parties dispute whether Plaintiffs have adequately alleged a violation of the antitrust laws, the Court need not reach this argument as Plaintiffs' failure to allege an antitrust injury and their lack of antitrust standing disposes of Plaintiffs' Section 1 claim. A conclusion that the March or May Agreement was a "per se illegal restraint of trade does not obviate the need to decide whether the plaintiffs adequately alleged antitrust injury." Cardizem, 332 F.3d at 909 FN15 (citing Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 341-42, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990) (HN13[]) "The per se rule is a method of determining whether § 1 of the Sherman Act has been violated, but it does not indicate whether a private plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury. . . .")).

Accordingly, since antitrust injury was insufficiently pleaded, the Court declines to analyze whether Plaintiffs adequately pleaded that the March and May settlement agreements violated the antitrust laws.

B. Section 2 Claims

Defendant Sanofi argues it is entitled to have the Sherman [60] Act Section 2 claims, 15 U.S.C. § 2, against it dismissed because Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue the Section 2 claims. Specifically, Sanofi asserts that Plaintiffs' Walker Process claims, claims based on a fraudulently obtained patent, must fail as Plaintiffs cannot challenge the patent directly and therefore should not be able to challenge the patent's validity under Walker Process. Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 174, 177 ("enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office may be violative of [Section] 2 of the Sherman Act."). Sanofi argues that the Walker Process decision did not contemplate direct consumers as suitable plaintiffs in this type of action. Rather, it contends, the only entity with standing to bring a Walker Process claim is an entity against whom a fraudulently obtained patent is, or could be, enforced.

Plaintiffs maintain that Sanofi unlawfully monopolized the clopidogrel bisulfate [*960] market by enforcing the '265 patent, a patent procured by fraud, in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Specifically, Plaintiffs allege Sanofi violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act by committing fraud on the PTO, listing the fraudulently obtained patent in the FDA's [61] Orange Book, filing and prosecuting patent infringement actions against Apotex and other prospective generic competitors, and entering into the illegal agreements with Apotex described above. Because Plaintiffs are direct purchasers of Plavix, Plaintiffs assert that they have standing to prosecute a Walker Process claim as an injured party under the antitrust laws.

HN14[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act states that "[e]very person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce . . . shall be deemed guilty of a felony …" 15 U.S.C. § 2. To establish a Section 2 violation, plaintiffs must demonstrate "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966); Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992); Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. Am. Bd of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., 185 F.3d 606, 622 (6th Cir. 1999).

1. [62] Walker Process Claim

HN15[] Walker Process claims are based on a fraudulently obtained patent. In Walker Process, the Supreme Court held that although a "patent… is an exception to the general rule against monopolies and to the right to access a free and open market" and is generally immune from a suit for antitrust liability, the "enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office may be violative of [Section] 2 of the Sherman Act." Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 174, 177. Typically, Walker Process claims are brought as counterclaims in patent infringement lawsuits; for instance, a plaintiff claims the defendant is infringing his patent and the defendant counterclaims that the patent was obtained fraudulently and is invalid. See Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1067 (Fed. Cir. 1998) ("an antitrust claim premised on stripping a patentee of its immunity from the antitrust laws is typically raised as a counterclaim by a defendant in a patent infringement suit); see also In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 585 F.3d 677, 689-90 (2d Cir. 2009) ("Walker Process claims are based on a fraudulently obtained patent, and are typically brought as counterclaims [63] in patent infringement suits: the plaintiff claims the defendant infringed his patent, and the defendant responds that the patent was invalid as fraudulently obtained, and that the plaintiff's enforcement efforts violate Walker Process.").

HN16[] Outside the context of an infringement suit counterclaim, a patent's validity can be challenged only by a party (1) producing or preparing to produce the patented product, and (2) being threatened or reasonably likely to be threatened with an infringement suit. In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 690 (citing Cordis Corp. v. Medtronic, Inc., 835 F.2d 859, 862 (Fed. Cir. 1987)). As purchasers of Plavix, the plaintiffs do not satisfy these requirements and cannot directly challenge the '265 patent's validity.

Whether a direct purchaser that cannot directly challenge a patent's validity can instead allege a Walker Process claim or if such Walker Process claim is [*961] available only to actual or would-be infringers is not as clear, as cases litigating the issue show. For example, Sanofi points to In re Remeron Antitrust Litigation, 335 F. Supp. 2d 522 (D.N.J. 2004), among others, for the proposition that district courts have dismissed Walker Process claims brought by direct [64] purchasers, finding that direct purchasers lack standing to pursue Walker Process claims challenging a patent. In In re Remeron, the district court dismissed the Walker Process claim brought by the direct purchasers of mirtazapine against the drug's manufacturer. The district court reasoned that "Walker Process and its progeny involve antitrust counterclaimants who were potential or actual competitors in patent infringement suits." Id. at 529. As the direct purchasers "neither produced mirtazapine nor would have done so . . . [and] Plaintiffs were not party to the initial patent infringement suits," the court concluded the direct purchasers lacked standing to pursue a Walker Process claim. Id. See also In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 363 F. Supp. 2d 514 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) (recognizing a "serious question [as to] whether indirect plaintiffs have standing to assert a Walker Process claim"); Asahi Glass Co. v. Pentech Pharms., Inc., 289 F. Supp. 2d 986, 995 (N.D. Ill. 2003) (J. Posner sitting by designation) (the fraud at issue in a Walker Process claim is directed at a patentee's competitors and therefore suppliers of inactive pharmaceutical ingredients for those competitors [65] lacked standing). Cf. Associated Gen.

Contractors of Cal., 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (not every and any party connected with an antitrust violation has standing to bring an antitrust claim).

Conversely, Plaintiffs point the Court to Molecular Diagnostics Labs v. Hoffmann-La Roche Inc., 402 F. Supp. 2d 276 (D.D.C. 2005). In Molecular Diagnostics, the district court specifically disagreed with the In re Remeron court, and instead found that direct purchasers have standing under Walker Process despite the direct purchasers lack of status as a competitor or party to an infringement suit. Id. The court reasoned that because the harm in a Walker Process claim is the antitrust violation through the fraudulently procured patent, and not the fraud itself, a direct purchaser who can meet the traditional antitrust standing requirements satisfies standing in a Walker Process claim. Accordingly, the Molecular Diagnostics district court proceeded to analyze the direct purchasers' standing under the "standing requirements in more conventional antitrust actions." Id. at 281. See also In re Netflix Antitrust Litig., 506 F. Supp. 2d 308, 316 [N.D.Cal. 2007] (finding Molecular Diagnostics persuasive for the proposition [66] that "even though Walker Process claims are predicated on enforcement of a fraudulently-obtained patent, the harm still accrues directly to consumers").

Further convoluting standing in a Walker Process context is a recent decision from the Second Circuit, In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litigation. 585 F.3d 677 (2d Cir. 2009). In In re DDAVP, the Second Circuit reversed the district court's ruling that direct purchasers lack standing to pursue Walker Process claims against a drug manufacturer. Id. The district court relied primarily on In re Remeron and In re Ciprofloxacin. Id. In addressing "a question of first impression" of "whether the plaintiffs have standing to bring their Walker Process claim, when a court has yet to find [a] patent fraudulently obtained," the Second Circuit fashioned a narrow ruling. Based on the fact the purchaser plaintiffs were challenging an "already tarnished patent," the Second Circuit stated "[w]e therefore hold only that purchaser plaintiffs have standing to raise Walker Process claims for patents that are already unenforceable due to inequitable conduct." Id. at 690-91 (emphasis [*962] added). The Second Circuit specifically declined to decide "whether [67] purchaser plaintiffs per se have standing to raise Walker Process claims." Id. at 691-92. Notably, the Second Circuit addressed that "[i]f a patent is valid, a Walker Process claim cannot stand." Id. at 690. In styling their limited ruling, the court recognized the defendants' argument that:

> giving Walker Process standing to the plaintiffs, who cannot directly challenge the '398 patent's validity, could result in an avalanche of patent challenges, because direct purchasers otherwise unable to challenge a patent's validity could do so simply by dressing their patent challenge with a Walker Process claim. It would be relatively easy, the defendants argue, for these purchasers to allege an antitrust injury, as patent protection inherently leads to supra-competitive prices. ... Given that Walker Process fraud converts this fundamental feature of the patent system into a potential antitrust violation, the defendants contend that finding purchaser standing could significantly increase the costs of defending and enforcing patents by greatly expanding the universe of potential challenges.

Id. at 690. The court balanced the defendants' argument against its concern that antitrust violations would [68] go unremedied if > direct purchasers would be able to recover antitrust damages from a fraudulent patentee only after that patentee first loses on a fraudulent procurement claim. This asks too much of the generic competitors and other potential patent challengers, who may not have the strategic interest or the resources to start or win such a battle, or who may be presented with strong incentives to settle their challenge by patent holders seeking not only to preserve their patent's enforceability, but also to avoid potential Walker Process liability.

Id. at 691. Accordingly, as to "not pass lightly over the defendants' objections to expanding the universe of patent challengers [and without] disturbing the incentives for innovation," the Second Circuit "tread carefully" by holding "only that purchaser plaintiffs have standing to raise Walker Process claims for patents that are already unenforceable due to inequitable conduct." Id. at 691-92.

None of the above discussed cases are binding precedent on this Court, however, each is persuasive. In comparing the case subjudice and taking all the facts in a light most favorable to Plaintiffs, HN17[] the Court finds the reasoning of In re Remeron and In [69] re Ciprofloxacin more persuasive than the holding of Molecular Diagnostics. Significantly, the balance of the courts interpreting standing of consumers in Walker Process claims deny such parties standing.

Sanofi points out, and the Court agrees, that HN18[] there is "no case in which a federal court has concluded that purchasers of a patented product have standing to assert a Walker Process claim against a patent holder where the underlying patent has been upheld as valid and enforced against an infringer." Def. Sanofi's Memo. in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss (Case No. 2:06-cv-163, Doc. 68-2) at 38. In such circumstance, the infringer itself, in this case Apotex, would be unable to substantiate a Walker Process claim. E.g., Kemin Foods, L.C. v. Pigmentos Vegetates del Cento S.A. de C.V., 384 F. Supp. 2d 1334, 1353 (S.D. Iowa 2005) (finding of patent validity necessitates dismissal of defendant's Walker Process counterclaim as unsupportable as a matter of law because it is premised on a finding that the patents-in-suit are invalid and unenforceable).

In this case, Apotex litigated the validity and enforceability of the '265 patent through the Federal Circuit; the Federal [*963] Circuit affirmed the district [70] court's ruling that Sanofi's '265 patent was valid and enforceable. See Sanofi-Synthelabo v. Apotex Inc., 492 F. Supp. 2d 353, 397 (S.D.N.Y. 2007), aff'd, 550 F.3d 1075 (Fed. Cir. 2008), cert denied, 130 S. Ct. 493, 175 L. Ed. 2d 346 (2009). Apotex failed to establish by clear and convincing evidence that Sanofi engaged in inequitable conduct when prosecuting the drug patent before the PTO. Id. Those counterclaims by Apotex are almost identical to the claims brought in this case by the direct purchasers. Subsequent to the Federal Circuit's ruling upholding the validity and enforceability of the '265 patent, the other cases brought by Sanofi against potential generic manufacturers Dr. Reddy's and Teva resulted in a stipulated judgment of the parties that the '265 patent was valid and enforceable. See Consent J. and Order at 1-2, Sanofi-Synthelabo v. Dr. Reddy's Labs, Case No. 1:02-cv-03672 (S.D.N.Y June 30, 2009) (J. Stein); Stipulation of Order of Dismissal, Sanofi-Aventis v. Teva Pharmaceuticals USA, Inc., Case No. 1:04-cv-07548 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 15, 2005) (J. Stein).

Given the facts of this case, the Court declines Plaintiffs' invitation to stray beyond the realm of Walker Process cases denying direct [71] purchasers standing. In re Remeron, 335 F. Supp. 2d at 522; In re Ciprofloxacin, 363 F. Supp. 2d at 514. Persuasively, the policy concerns noted by the Second Circuit for its narrow holding, such as fear a claim would go unlitigated by an alleged infringer, do not exist in this case. As eloquently stated in In re Ciprofloxacin:

> Given that consumers are often subjected to monopoly prices for invalid patents, it is tempting to suggest that, as a policy matter, a rule should be fashioned giving consumers of drugs--and perhaps patented goods generally--the right to challenge the validity of patents. ... Under the proposed rule, the consumers would have to show by clear and convincing evidence--as accused infringers must--that the subject patent was invalid. This proposal would have the effect of allowing non-infringing consumers of a patented product to seek to invalidate the patent in order to allow price-reducing competitors to enter the market. The desirability of such a change is a complex issue which . . . should be made by Congress, and not by the courts.

In re Ciprofloxacin, 363 F. Supp. 2d at 542.

The Court is loathe to grant such an expansion of potential patent challengers by conferring [72] standing to direct purchasers of a drug for which the patent has been judicially determined to be valid and enforceable. Cf. In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 690 (HN19[] "If a patent is valid, a Walker Process claim cannot stand."). While the Court recognizes Plaintiffs were not parties to the original challenge to the '265 patent, the Court in this case does not find reason to disrupt the delicate balance between patent law and antitrust law that Walker Process delineated. The Second Circuit's decision specifically crafted a narrow holding so to not disturb this balance, and such narrowing is telling of the Second Circuit's hesitation to expand standing in Walker Process cases to all direct purchasers. Id. at 691-92 (Second Circuit specifically declined to decide "whether purchaser plaintiffs per se have standing to raise Walker Process claims."). This Court too will tread carefully so as not to open the door to all direct purchasers otherwise unable to challenge a patent's validity being able to do so by dressing their patent challenge with a Walker Process claim. Accordingly, the Court finds Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue their Walker Process claims.

2. Other Section 2 claims

In addition to [73] its Walker Process claim, Plaintiffs assert Defendants violated Section 2 [*964] by "enforcing the fraudulently procured '265 patent by submitting it to the FDA for listing in the FDA's Orange Book and by filing and prosecuting patent infringement actions against Apotex and other prospective generic competitors." Second Am. Compl. (Case No. 1:06-cv-163, Doc. 62) at P 135. Plaintiffs argue that Sanofi conducted sham litigation by the filing of the infringement actions against Apotex, Teva, and other prospective generic competitors, and by listing the patent in the Orange Book of patents which Plaintiffs argue was done for delay.

> HN20[] "[Under Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures] a sham suit must be both subjectively brought in bad faith and based on a theory of either infringement or validity that is objectively baseless. Accordingly, if a suit is not objectively baseless, an antitrust defendant's subjective motivation is immaterial. Id. In contrast with a Walker Process claim, a patentee's activities in procuring the patent are not necessarily at issue. It is the bringing of the lawsuit that is subjectively and objectively baseless that must be proved."

Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1072 [74] (citing Prof'l Real Estate Investors v. Columbia Pictures, 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993)).

"If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized [from antitrust liability], and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail." Prof'l Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60. The Supreme Court then noted that a "winning lawsuit is by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and therefore not a sham." Id. at 60 n.5.

In construing the complaints in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs, it does not follow that Sanofi's lawsuit against Apotex was subjectively and objectively baseless. Sanofi successfully won the lawsuit and thus exerted reasonable effort to petition for redress. Prof'l Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60 n.5. Likewise, it follows that Sanofi's listing of the '265 patent in the Orange Book was not in bad faith, merely a standard action under the Hatch-Waxman Act.

In regard to the argument by Plaintiffs that Defendants conspired to restrain trade through the March and May agreements, this argument fails for the reasons stated above for failure to plead an antitrust injury [75] that flows from that which makes Defendants' acts unlawful.

3. Conclusion

The Court finds Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue their Walker Process claim. The Court also finds Plaintiffs fail to state a Section 2 claim for submission of the '265 patent for listing in the FDA's Orange Book and for filing and prosecuting patent infringement actions against Apotex and other prospective generic competitors.

V. DISPOSITION

The Court finds Plaintiffs lack antitrust standing to bring a Section 1 claim against Defendants as Plaintiffs fail to allege that the asserted antitrust violation was a necessary predicate of Plaintiffs' injury and any injury alleged is speculative. The Court further finds that Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs do not have standing to bring Section 2 Walker Process claims against Sanofi.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motions to Dismiss (Case No. 1:06-CV-163, Docs. 67 & 68; Case No. 1:06-CV-202, Docs. 97 & 98; Case No. 1:06-CV-427, Docs. 60 & 61). The Clerk of Court is DIRECTED to enter final judgment with prejudice against Plaintiffs in [*965] the following cases and to close these cases: Case Nos. 1:06-CV-163, 1:06-CV-202, and 1:06-CV-427. The Clerk of Court is DIRECTED to [76] enter final judgment with prejudice against the plaintiffs in the following consolidated cases and to close these cases: Case Nos. 1:06-cv-224; 1:06-cv-518; 1:06-cv-533; 1:06-cv-545; and 1:06-cv-550. The Clerk is further instructed to remove all the aforementioned cases from this Court's Civil Justice Reform Act Report.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

/s/ Michael H. Watson

MICHAEL H. WATSON, JUDGE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

In re TFT-LCD Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

March 28, 2010, Decided; March 28, 2010, Filed

No. M 07-1827 SI; MDL. No. 1827

Reporter

267 F.R.D. 583 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85000 **

IN RE: TFT-LCD (FLAT PANEL) ANTITRUST LITIGATION;This Order Relates to: ALL CASES

Subsequent History: Motion granted by Tracfone Wireless, Inc. v. AU Optronics Corp. (In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig.), 270 F.R.D. 535, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120298 (N.D. Cal., Nov. 2, 2010)

Prior History: In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38111 (N.D. Cal., Mar. 28, 2010)

Core Terms

panels, purchaser, assigned, indirect, products, prices, conspiracy, antitrust, defendants', plaintiffs', entities, Display, televisions, monitors, manufacturers, co-conspirators, indirectly, resale, own use, employees, residents, local government entity, legal representative, immediate family, judicial officer, pass-through, affiliates, heirs, juror, staff

Counsel: [1] For Fern M Smith, Special Master: Fern M. Smith, JAMS, San Francisco, CA.

Martin Quinn, Special Master, Pro se, San Francisco, CA.

For Martin Quinn, Special Master: Martin Quinn, JAMS, San Francisco, CA.

For ATS Claim, LLC, 09-1115, Plaintiff: David Paul Germaine, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chicago, IL; David Paul Germaine, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Chicago, IL; Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: Daniel L. Warshaw, LEAD ATTORNEY, Pearson, Simon, Warshaw & Penny LLP, Sherman Oaks, CA; Eric B. Fastiff, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Hilary Kathleen Ratway, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hausfeld, LLP, Washington, DC; Andrew Scirica Kingsdale, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, San Francisco, CA; Brendan Patrick Glackin, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bruce Lee Simon, Jessica L. Grant, Pearson, Simon, Warshaw & Penny, LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For BellSouth Telecommunications, Inc., 09-4997, Pacific Bell Telephone Company, 09-4997, Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, 09-4997, Plaintiffs: Christopher T. Leonardo, Kenneth L. Adams, R. Bruce Holcomb, Adams Holcomb LLP, Washington, [2] DC; Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jeffrey H. Howard, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Jerome A. Murphy, Crowell & Moring LLP, Liaison Counsel for Direct Aciton Plaintiffs, Washington, DC; Joshua Courtney Stokes, Crowell & Moring, Los Angeles, CA; Joshua C. Stokes, Crowell & Moring LLP.

For Nokia Corporation, 09-5609, Nokia Inc., 09-5609, Plaintiffs: Brian Parker Miller, Donald MacKaye Houser, Joann Elizabeth Johnston, Peter Konito, Alston & Bird LLP, Atlanta, GA; Lisa Kathleen Bojko, Alston & Bird, Atlanta, GA; Randall Lee Allen, Alston and Bird, Menlo Park, CA; Richard W. Stimson, Alston & Bird LLP, Dallas, TX; Valarie Cecile Williams, PRO HAC VICE, Alston & Bird LLP, Atlanta, GA; Donald M. Houser, Alston Bird LLP.

For AT & T Corp., 09-4997, AT & T Datacomm, Inc., 09-4997, AT & T Mobility LLC, 09-4997, AT & T Operations, Inc., 09-4997, AT & T Services, Inc., 09-4997, Plaintiffs: Christopher T. Leonardo, Christopher H. Wood, Kenneth L. Adams, R. Bruce Holcomb, Adams Holcomb LLP, Washington, DC; Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jeffrey H. Howard, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Jerome A. Murphy, Crowell [3] & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Joshua Courtney Stokes, Crowell & Moring, Los Angeles, CA; Joshua C. Stokes, Crowell & Moring LLP.

For Motorola, Inc., 09-5840, Plaintiff: Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jeffrey H. Howard, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Jerome A. Murphy, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Joshua Courtney Stokes, Crowell & Moring, Los Angeles, CA; R. Bruce Holcomb, Adams Holcomb LLP, Washington, DC.

For Electrograph Systems, Inc., 10-117, Electrograph Technologies, Corp., 10-117, Plaintiffs: Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Philip J. Iovieno, Boies, Schiller & Flexner LLP, Albany, NY; William A. Isaacson.

For Dell Inc., 10-1064, Dell Products, L.P., 10-1064, Plaintiffs: Debra Dawn Bernstein, Elizabeth Helmer Jordan, Michael P. Kenny, Rodney J Ganske, Alston & Bird LLP, Atlanta, GA; Matthew David Kent, Alston + Bird LLP, Atlanta, GA; Steven Daniel Hemminger, Alston & Bird LLP, Menlo Park, CA.

For Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: Joseph M. Alioto, Sr., LEAD ATTORNEY; Stephen Gerard Larson, Girardi & Keese, Los Angeles, CA; Gregory W. Landry, LaMarca & [4] Landry, P.C.; Marvin A. Miller, Miller Law LLC.

For Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: Andrew Scirica Kingsdale; Eric B. Fastiff; Jessica L. Grant.

For Tracfone Wireless, Inc., 10-3205, Plaintiff: David Bedford Esau, West Palm Beach, FL; James Blaker Baldinger, Carlton Fields PA, West Palm Beach, FL; Robert L. Ciotti, Carlton Fields, Tampa, FL.

For LG Display Co., Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), formerly known as, LG Philips LCD Co., LTD., Defendant: Jerome Cary Roth, LEAD ATTORNEY, Munger Tolles & Olson LLP, San Francisco, CA; Michael Robert Lazerwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton, Washington, DC; Jeremy James Calsyn, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton LLP, Washington, DC.

For Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Simon J. Frankel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeffrey Michael Davidson, Covington & Burling LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel M Suleiman, Robert D. Wick, Covington & Burling LLP, Washington, DC; Derek Ludwin, Washington, DC; Michael W. Scarborough, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Timothy C. Hester, Covington & Burling, San Francisco, CA.

For Sharp Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Jacob R. Sorensen, LEAD ATTORNEY, Ryan Takemoto, [5] Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Alex Santana, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw & Pittman, San Francisco, CA; Anne Benton Kaldor, Bingham McCutchen, San Francisco, CA; Colin C. West, McCutchen, Doyle, Brown & Enersen, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Erin Alysa Smart, Bingham McCutchen LLP, San Francisco, CA; John M. Grenfell, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw PittmanLLP, San Francisco, CA; Kenneth I. Schacter, Bingham McCutchen LLP, New York, NY; Richard S. Taffet, Bingham McCutchen, New York, NY; Jon R. Roellke, Bingham McCutchen.

For Sharp Electronics Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Jacob R. Sorensen, LEAD ATTORNEY, August Orval Stofferahn, Ryan Takemoto, Susan Greenberg, Tara Michele Desautels, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Alex Santana, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw & Pittman, San Francisco, CA; Anne Benton Kaldor, Bingham McCutchen, San Francisco, CA; Colin C. West, McCutchen, Doyle, Brown & Enersen, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Erin Alysa Smart, Bingham McCutchen LLP, San Francisco, CA; Fusae Nara, Pillsbury Winthrop LLP, San Francisco, CA; John M. Grenfell, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw PittmanLLP, San Francisco, CA; Kenneth I. Schacter, Bingham McCutchen LLP, New [6] York, NY; Richard S. Taffet, Bingham McCutchen, New York, NY; Jon R. Roellke, Bingham McCutchen.

For Toshiba Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Toshiba America Information Systems, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendants: Christopher M. Curran, LEAD ATTORNEY, White & Case, Washington, DC; John H. Chung, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wayne A. Cross, White & Case LLP, New York, NY.

For Toshiba Matsushita Display Technology Co., Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: John H. Chung, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wayne A. Cross, White & Case LLP, New York, NY.

For Hitachi Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Hitachi Displays, Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendants: Courtney Lynn Landis, Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, San Francisco, CA; Kent Michael Roger, Michelle Minju Kim-Szrom, Morgan, Lewis & Bockius LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Hitachi America Ltd., (I), Defendant: Candice Simone Petty, Kent Michael Roger, William James Taylor, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Hitachi Electronic Devices (USA), Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Candice Simone Petty, Kent Michael Roger, William James Taylor, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Michelle Minju Kim-Szrom, Morgan, Lewis & Bockius LLP, San Francisco, CA; Courtney Lynn Landis, Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, [7] San Francisco, CA.

For NEC LCD Technologies, Ltd., (D, I), Defendant: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For NEC Electronics America, Inc., (D, I), Defendant: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA; Edward G. Biester, III, Duane Morris LLP, Philadelphia, PA.

For AU Optronics Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Christopher Alan Nedeau, LEAD ATTORNEY, Allison Marie Dibley, Esq., Bryan B. Barnhart, Carl Lawrence Blumenstein, Nossman LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For AU Optronics Corporation America, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: John C. McGuire, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sedgwick, Detert, Moran & Arnold, Newark, NJ; Matthew Clark Lovell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sedgwick Detert Moran & Arnold, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Allison Marie Dibley, Esq., Carl Lawrence Blumenstein, Christopher Alan Nedeau, Nossaman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bryan B. Barnhart, Nossman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jason Haruo Wilson, Willenken Wilson Loh & Lieb LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Michael F. Healy, Esq., Sedwick Detert Moran & Arnold LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Chi Mei Optoelectronics, Chi Mei Optoelectronics Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendants: Gordon Pearson, Wilmer Cutler Pickering [8] Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC.

For Chi Mei Optoelectronics USA, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Nathan Loy Walker, LEAD ATTORNEY, WilmerHale, Palo Alto, CA; Brent J. Gurney, PRO HAC VICE, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Gordon Pearson, Cristina Carlucci Ashworth, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Steven F. Cherry, Therese Lee, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale & Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Wilmer Cutler, Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC.

For Chunghwa Picture Tubes Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Joel Steven Sanders, Joshua David Hess, Rachel S. Brass, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Hannstar Display Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Christoher M. Wyant, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hugh F. Bangasser, K&L Gates LLP, Seattle, WA; Hugh Frederick Bangasser, Julie Anne Halter, Ramona M. Emerson, K&L GATES, Seattle, WA; Jeffrey L. Bornstein, K&L Gates LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Samsung Semiconductor, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Gary L. Halling, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael W. Scarborough, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Simon J. Frankel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeffrey Michael Davidson, Covington & Burling LLP, [9] San Francisco, CA; Daniel M Suleiman, Robert D. Wick, Covington & Burling LLP, Washington, DC; Derek Ludwin, Washington, DC; Timothy C. Hester, Covington & Burling, San Francisco, CA; Tyler Mark Cunningham, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton, San Francisco, CA.

For Epson Imaging Devices Corporation, (D), terminated on 1/15/08, Defendant: Stephen P. Freccero, LEAD ATTORNEY, Morrison & Foerster LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For CMO Japan Co., Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Chi Mei Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Nexgen Mediatech, Inc. ("Nexgen"), (D, 09-1115), Chimei Innolux Corp., Defendants: Gordon Pearson, Cristina Carlucci Ashworth, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC.

For NEC Electronic America, Inc., Defendant: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Nexgen Mediatech USA Inc, (D, 09-1115), Defendant: Caren K. Khoo, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale & Dorr, New York, NY; Brent J. Gurney, PRO HAC VICE, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Gordon Pearson, Cristina Carlucci Ashworth, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Steven F. Cherry, Therese Lee, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale & Dorr LLP, [10] Washington, DC; Wilmer Cutler, Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC.

For LG Electronics Inc., (D), Defendant: Samuel R. Miller, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert Brooks Martin, III, Ryan M. Sandrock, Sidley Austin, LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Royal Phillips Electronics NV, Defendant: Garrard R. Beeney, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sullivan & Cromwell, New York, NY.

For NEC Display Solutions of America, Inc., Defendant: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, LEAD ATTORNEY, George Dominic Niespolo, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Samsung Electronics America, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Gary L. Halling, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael W. Scarborough, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Simon J. Frankel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeffrey Michael Davidson, Covington & Burling LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel M Suleiman, Robert D. Wick, Covington & Burling LLP, Washington, DC; Derek Ludwin, Washington, DC; Timothy C. Hester, Covington & Burling, San Francisco, CA.

For Phillips Consumer Electronics North America, Defendant: R. Dale Grimes, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joshua Ray Denton, Bass, Berry & Sims, PLC, Nashville, TN; Brendan P. Cullen, Sullivan & Cromwell, Palo Alto, CA.

For LG Electronics U.S.A., Inc., (D), Defendant: A. Scott [11] Ross, LEAD ATTORNEY, Neal & Harwell, Nashville, TN; Samuel R. Miller, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert Brooks Martin, III, Ryan M. Sandrock, Sidley Austin, LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For IPS Alpha Technology, LTD., IPS Alpha Technology, LTD., (D), dismissed from IP amended complaint on 2/21/08, Defendants: Kent Michael Roger, Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Chungwa Picture Tubes Ltd. ("CPT"), Defendant: Patrick J. Ahern, Baker & McKenzie, Chicago, IL.

For Mitsubishi Electric & Electronics USA, Inc., Defendant: Donald R. Harris, Terrence Joseph Truax, Jenner & Block LLC, Chicago, IL; Kenneth E. Keller, Krieg Keller Sloan Reilley & Roman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Michael T. Brody, Robert J. Blazejowski, Jenner & Block, LLP, Chicago, IL; Michael David Lisi, Krieg Keller Sloan Reilley & Roman, San Francisco, CA.

For Samsung Electronics Company, Ltd., Defendant: Gary L. Halling, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael W. Scarborough, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jeffrey Michael Davidson, Covington & Burling LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Seiko Epson Corporation, Defendant: Stephen P. Freccero, Morrison & Foerster LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Epson Electronics America, Inc., (D, 09-1115), [12] Dismissed as a indirect purchaser defendant on 4/1/08, Defendant: Kevin C. McCann, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chad A. Westfall, Sean David Unger, Paul, Hastings, Janofsky & Walker LLP, San Francisco, CA; Derek Francis Foran, Stephen P. Freccero, Morrison & Foerster LLP, San Francisco, CA; Melvin R. Goldman, Morrison & Foerster, San Francisco, CA; David Lawrence Meyer, Morrison & Foerster, Washington, DC.

For Syntax-Brillian Corp., Defendant: Herman Samuel Palarz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Tyre Kamins Katz & Granof, Los Angeles, CA.

For Toshiba America, Inc., Toshiba Corp., doing business as, Defendants: Wayne A. Cross, White & Case LLP, New York, NY.

For Tatung Company of America, Inc. ("Tatung America"), (D, 09-1115), Defendant: Bruce H. Jackson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Baker & McKenzie, San Francisco, CA; Nancy Chung Allred, Robert Walter Tarun, Baker & McKenzie LLP, San Francisco, CA; Patrick J. Ahern, PRO HAC VICE, Baker & McKenzie, Chicago, IL; Roxane C. Busey, PRO HAC VICE, BAker & McKenzie LLP, Chicago, IL.

For Koninklijke Philips Electronics N.V. ("Philips"), (D), Defendant: Bradley P. Smith, Garrard R. Beeney, Theodore Edelman, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Sullivan & Cromwell LLP, New York, NY; Brendan P. Cullen, Sullivan [13] & Cromwell, Palo Alto, CA.

For Toshiba America Electronics Components, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Christopher M. Curran, LEAD ATTORNEY, White & Case, Washington, DC; John H. Chung, Wayne A. Cross, LEAD ATTORNEYS, White & Case LLP, New York, NY; Kristen J. McAhren, LEAD ATTORNEY, White & Case LLP, Washington, DC.

For LG Display America, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), formerly known as LG Philips LCD America, Inc., Defendant: Jerome Cary Roth, LEAD ATTORNEY, Munger Tolles & Olson LLP, San Francisco, CA; Michael Robert Lazerwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeremy James Calsyn, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton LLP, Washington, DC; Katerina S Colitti, PRO HAC VICE, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton LLP, Washington, DC.

For Toshiba Mobile Display Co., Ltd., Defendant: Christopher M. Curran, LEAD ATTORNEY, White & Case, Washington, DC; Wayne A. Cross, LEAD ATTORNEY, White & Case LLP, New York, NY.

For Au Optronics Corporation America, Inc, 09-4997, Defendant: Allison Marie Dibley, Esq., Nossaman LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Mitsui & Co. (Taiwan), Limited, (D), Defendant: Lisa Cox Ghannoum, Baker Hostetler, Cleveland, OH; Peter Wethrell James, Baker Hostetler, Los Angeles, CA; Ernest E. Vargo, Baker & Hostetler [14] LLC, Tracy Lynn Cole, Baker & Hostetler LLP.

For Sanyo Consumer Electronics Co., Ltd., (D), Defendant: Allison Ann Davis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sam N. Dawood, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, San Francisco, CA; Nick Steven Verwolf, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, Bellevue, WA.

For Samsung SDI America, Inc., Samsung SDI Co., Ltd., Defendants: Michael W. Scarborough, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Philips Electronics North America Corporation, Defendant: Brendan P. Cullen, Sullivan & Cromwell, Palo Alto, CA.

For Tatung Company, Defendant: Patrick J. Ahern, LEAD ATTORNEY, Baker & McKenzie, Chicago, IL.

For Apple Inc., Interested Party: Caroline Nason Mitchell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For Hewlett-Packard Company, Interested Party: Beatrice B. Nguyen, Gregory D. Call, Esq., LEAD ATTORNEYS, Crowell & Moring LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For State of California, Amicus: Emilio Eugene Varanini, IV, State Attorney General's Office, San Francisco, CA.

For United States Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, Intervenor: Peter K. Huston, LEAD ATTORNEY, Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, San Francisco, CA; Alexandra Jill Shepard, David J. Ward, Niall Edmund Lynch, [15] Heather S. Tewksbury, United States Department of Justice, Antritrust Divsion, San Francisco, CA; U.S. Department of Justice, Antritrust Divsion, San Francisco Field Office, San Francisco, CA; Michael L. Scott, Antitrust Division, San Francisco, CA; U.S. Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, San Francisco, CA.

For State of Illinois, Intervenor: Blake Lee Harrop, LEAD ATTORNEY, Office of the Attorney General, Antitrust Bureau, Chicago, IL.

For State of Washington, Intervenor: Brady R. Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Attorney General of Washington, Seattle, WA.

For State of Oregon, Intervenor: Michael E. Haglund, Michael K. Kelley, Haglund Kelley Horngren Jones & Wilder, LLP, Portland, OR.

Judges: SUSAN ILLSTON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SUSAN ILLSTON

Opinion

[*587] ORDER GRANTING INDIRECT PURCHASER PLAINTIFFS' MOTION for CLASS CERTIFICATION; DENYING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO STRIKE MODIFIED CLASS DEFINITIONS; GRANTING MOTIONS TO STRIKE UNTIMELY DECLARATIONS

Now before the Court is the indirect purchaser plaintiffs' motion for class certification, defendants' motion to strike the modified class definitions and declarations filed with the reply brief, and plaintiffs' objections to the declaration of Shane Gregorczyk. [16] For the reasons set forth below, the Court GRANTS the indirect purchaser plaintiffs' motion for class certification, DENIES defendants' motion to strike the modified class definition, GRANTS defendants' motion to strike the declarations of Chien-Ming Kuan, Yin-Hua Hsu, and Fu-Chia Hsu as untimely, and GRANTS plaintiffs' motion to strike the Gregorczyk declaration as untimely.

BACKGROUND

I. The TFT-LCD market

This multidistrict litigation stems from allegations of a global price-fixing conspiracy in the market for Thin Film Transistor Liquid Crystal Display ("TFT-LCD") panels. TFT-LCD panels are used in a number of products, including but not limited to computer monitors, notebook computers, and televisions. TFT-LCD panels are made by sandwiching liquid crystal compound between two pieces of glass called substrates. The resulting screen contains hundreds of thousands of electrically charged dots, called pixels, which form an image. The panel is then combined with a backlight unit, a driver, and other equipment to create a "module" allowing the panel to operate and be integrated into a television, computer monitor, or other product.

TFT-LCD panels are sold in a variety of sizes, and vary [17] across a number of technical dimensions. For example, larger panels used for televisions require high contrast ratios for vibrant colors and wider viewing angles, while smaller panels used in mobile phones require small size and low weight. TFT-LCD panels have no independent utility, but have value only as components of other products. When a TFT-LCD panel is incorporated into a finished product, the panel is not modified, and remains a discrete, physical object within the finished product. TFT-LCD panels are purchased by many different types and sizes of customers through different manufacturing and distribution channels. The parties dispute the complexity of the distribution chain, with defendants contending that it is multi-layered, complex, and heterogeneous, and plaintiffs asserting that the distribution chain is relatively simple and not materially different [*588] from the distribution chains in other high-tech industries.

Between 1996 and 2006, defendants collectively dominated the market for TFT-LCD panels and products, and the top six companies (Samsung, LG, Chi Mei, AU Optronics, Sharp, and Chunghwa) currently control in excess of 80% of the TFT-LCD panel market. Indirect Purchaser [18] Plaintiffs' Second Amended Consol. Compl. ¶ 116. During this period, the TFT-LCD industry experienced significant consolidation, including the creation of defendant AU Optronics in 2001 through the merger of Acer Display and Unipac Electronics; the creation of defendant Toshiba Matsushita in 2002; Fujitsu Ltd.'s transfer of its TFT-LCD business to defendant Sharp in 2005; and the joint venture for the production of TFT-LCD panels for televisions by Hitachi, Toshiba, and Matsushita in 2004. Id. ¶ 117. The TFT-LCD industry is also marked by a number of cross-licensing agreements, joint ventures, and other cooperative arrangements which plaintiffs allege facilitate collusion. Id. ¶¶ 111-14.

Although panel prices vary according to the finished product, the panel is usually a significant cost component in finished TFT-LCD products. Plaintiffs have submitted evidence showing that a panel can constitute 50%-80% of the price of computer monitors, 33%-70% of the price of televisions (and more for televisions exceeding 40"), and 10%-25% of the cost of a notebook computer. Necessarily, however, the price-component of a panel in a finished product varies both by product and manufacturer. Defendants [19] cite different estimates, asserting that TFT-LCD panels reflect approximately 35 to 40% of the finished television price, and 10 to 15% of the price for notebook computers. The complaint alleges that computer monitors now comprise approximately 50% of revenues for the "large LCD products market," with TVs and notebook computers accounting for approximately 27% and 21% of revenues, respectively. Id. ¶ 101.

Plaintiffs allege that during the class period, defendants formed a cartel to interfere with the normal cycle of supply and demand for TFT-LCD panels. According to plaintiffs, defendants agreed on prices, agreed to limit production, and agreed to manipulate the supply of TFT-LCD panels and products so that prices remained artificially high. Plaintiffs allege that defendants executed their price-fixing scheme by participating in surreptitious group and bilateral meetings, as well as communicating with each other by telephone and e-mail. Id. ¶¶ 130-48.

Plaintiffs allege that some group meetings were formalized and known as "Crystal Meetings." Id. ¶¶ 133-35. These meetings were attended by employees at three levels of defendants' corporations, including "CEO" or "top" meetings, attended [20] by Chief Executive Officers and/or Presidents; "commercial" or "operation" meetings, attended by management-level personnel; and working group meetings attended by lower-level sales and marketing personnel. Id. ¶¶ 133-41. Plaintiffs allege that at these "Crystal Meetings," as well as in other communications, participants discussed supply and demand and general market conditions for TFT-LCD products; exchanged fabrication plant and production capacity information; reached agreements on target prices, floor prices, and price ranges for TFT-LCD panels and products; planning consistent public statements on anticipated supply and demand; and disciplined new market entrants and pressured them to abide by agreed-upon pricing and production. Plaintiffs have submitted considerable evidence in the form of detailed meeting reports, e-mails and memoranda documenting numerous meetings between various defendants at which defendants shared price information and agreed on pricing and production levels. See e.g., Zahid Decl. Ex. 95-103; see also Netz Errata Decl. Ex. 23 (listing meetings in which defendants met to share plans for future prices and supply, and to agree on prices). [1]

[*589] II. The Department of Justice Investigation

In about 2006, the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice began investigating a number of the defendants' alleged participation in a global conspiracy to fix prices of TFT-LCD panels. The investigation is ongoing. To date, seven corporate defendants in this action have pled guilty to Sherman Act violations relating to suppressing and eliminating competition by fixing the prices of TFT-LCD panels. Those defendants are Sharp Corporation (CR 08-802 SI); LG Display Co. Ltd. and LG Display America, Inc. (CR 08-803 SI), Chunghwa Picture Tubes, Ltd. (CR 08-804 SI); Hitachi Displays Ltd. (CR 09-247 SI); Epson Imaging Devices Corporation (CR 09-854 SI) [2] ; and Chi Mei Optoelectronics Corporation (CR 09-1166 SI). [3] The DOJ has also confirmed that it has signed a conditional [22] leniency agreement with a company in the TFT-LCD industry; price-fixing cartel participants may qualify for amnesty under the Antitrust Criminal Penalty Enhancement and Reform Act of 2004, P.L. 108-237 ("ACPERA") by providing concrete evidence of a price-fixing agreement. See Lynch Decl. ¶ 6 (Docket No. 966).

No defendant has, as part of its criminal plea, made or promised any restitutionary payments to entities or individuals injured by the wrongful acts.

---

[1] Plaintiffs have [21] submitted extensive evidence in support of their allegations that defendants engaged in a price-fixing conspiracy. This evidence has all been submitted under seal, and is found at the following: Zahid Decl. 95-103; Supp. Zahid Decl. Ex. 8-15. This list is not intended to be exhaustive, as plaintiffs have submitted well over 100 exhibits, all under seal, in support of their motion.

[2] Epson Imaging Devices Corporation is not named as a defendant in the Indirect-Purchaser Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Complaint. This entity is named as a defendant in the Third Amended Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Consolidated Complaint. Docket No. 1416 ¶ 21.

[3] In addition, several individual executives from LG Phillips and Chunghwa Pictures Tubes, Ltd., have pled guilty to criminal violations of the Sherman Act. See CR 09-44 SI, CR 09-45 SI and CR 09-437 SI.

Four of the defendants (LG Display Co., Ltd., LG Display America, Inc., Chunghwa Picture Tubes, Ltd., and Chi Mei Optoelectronics Corporation) pled guilty to participating in a conspiracy from 2001 to 2006 among "major TFT-LCD producers, the primary purpose of which was [23] to fix the price of certain TFT-LCD sold in the United States and elsewhere." Three of the defendants (Sharp Corporation, Hitachi Displays Ltd., and Epson Imaging Devices Corporation) pled guilty to participating in price-fixing conspiracies with "major TFT-LCD producers" with regard to sales of specific types of products to specific entities. For example, Sharp pled guilty to participating in a conspiracy to fix prices of TFT-LCD panels sold to Dell, Inc. for use in computer monitors and laptops from April 2001 to December 1, 2006; participating in a conspiracy to fix prices of TFT-LCD sold to Apple Computer Inc. for use in iPod portable music players from September 2005 to December 2006; and for participating in a conspiracy to fix prices of TFT-LCD sold to Motorola Inc. for use in Razr mobile phones from the fall of 2005 to the middle of 2006. See CR 08-802 SI.

III. This litigation

The indirect purchaser plaintiffs filed this multidistrict antitrust class action on behalf of all persons and entities who indirectly purchased TFT-LCD panels (contained in TFT-LCD products) manufactured, marketed, sold and/or distributed by one or more of the defendants, for the indirect purchasers' end [24] use and not for resale. Second Amended Consol. Compl. ¶ 16. The indirect purchaser plaintiffs bought TFT-LCD products containing TFT-LCD panels either from (1) TFT-LCD panel direct purchasers, such as Dell, Hewlett-Packard, and Apple, that incorporate TFT-LCD panels into final, branded TFT-LCD products and sell directly to the public, or (2) retailers, such as Best Buy, Wal-Mart, or Target, that acquire the TFT-LCD products from TFT-LCD panel direct purchasers or distributors. Defendants argue that there can be many intermediaries between defendants and the final indirect purchasers, including inter alia, Original Equipment Manufacturers ("OEMs"), Original Design Manufacturers ("ODMs"), system integrators, contract manufacturers, electronic parts distributors, resellers, and retailers. Defendants argue that each intermediary may add value by, among other things, combining a TFT-LCD panel with other components to make a finished product.

[*590] The indirect purchaser plaintiffs allege a "long-running conspiracy extending from at least January 1, 1996 through at least December 11, 2006, at a minimum, among defendants and their co-conspirators, the purpose and effect of which was to fix, raise, [25] stabilize, and maintain prices for LCD panels sold indirectly to Plaintiffs and the members of the other indirect-purchaser classes defined below." Id. ¶ 1. The indirect purchaser plaintiffs seek equitable relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, based on alleged violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, as well as restitution, disgorgement, and damages under the antitrust, consumer protection, and unfair competition laws of 23 states. [4]

The indirect purchaser plaintiffs seek certification of the following classes:

(1) A nationwide class for injunctive relief under Rule 23(b)(2):

> All persons and entities residing in the United States as of the date notice is first published, who indirectly purchased in the United States between January 1, 1999 and the present, LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors and/or laptop computers, from one of more [26] of the named Defendants, for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from this Class are the named Defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; any entity in which any defendant has a controlling interest; and any affiliate, legal representative, heir or assign of any defendant. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officers presiding over this action and members of their immediate families and judicial staffs, and any juror assigned to this action.

---

[4] The "indirect purchaser states" are Arizona, California, the District of Columbia, Florida, Hawaii, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

(2) Separate indirect-purchaser state-wide classes for equitable relief (restitution and disgorgement) under Rule 23(b)(2) and damages under Rule 23(b)(3), in accordance with the laws of 23 states, with the following definitions:

> All persons and entities in [Indirect Purchaser State] who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of [Indirect Purchaser State], purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in [Indirect Purchaser State] indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from this Class are the named Defendants; the officers, directors, [27] or employees of any defendant; any entity in which any defendant has a controlling interest; and any affiliate, legal representative, heir or assign of any defendant. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officers presiding over this action and members of their immediate families and judicial staffs, and any juror assigned to this action.

In the course of briefing the class certification motion, the indirect plaintiffs modified the class definition in two ways to address standing objections raised by defendants: (1) the end of the class period was extended from December 11, 2006 to December 31, 2006 to account for two indirect purchaser plaintiffs who purchased TFT-LCD products between December 12, 2006 and December 31, 2006, and (2) the class definition was modified from "all entities and persons residing in [the indirect purchaser state] as of the date notice is published . . ." to "all entities and persons who, [during class period], as residents of [indirect purchaser state], purchased . . ." to account for plaintiffs who purchased LCD products in an indirect purchaser state during the class period but who have since moved out of the indirect [28] purchaser state.

Defendants have moved to strike the proposed modifications to the class definitions on the ground that plaintiffs should be required to seek leave of Court and/or the consent of defendants in order to modify the class definition. Defendants rely on this Court's decision in Jordan v. Paul Financial LLC, No. C 09-4496 SI, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7592, 2009 WL 192888 [*591] (N.D. Cal. Jan. 27, 2009), in which the Court denied the plaintiff's request, made at the class certification hearing, to withdraw the pending class certification motion in order to substantively redefine the class and conduct additional discovery. However, Jordan is distinguishable in that there the proposed redefinition of the class was significant, and would have required additional discovery. Here, the proposed modifications are minor, require no additional discovery, and cause no prejudice to defendants. The Court DENIES defendants' motion to strike the modified class definitions.

LEGAL STANDARD

Plaintiffs bear the burden of showing that each of the four requirements of Rule 23(a) and at least one requirement of Rule 23(b) have been met. Zinser v. Accufix Research Inst., Inc., 253 F.3d 1180, 1186, amended, 273 F.3d 1266 (9th Cir. 2001). [29] A district court may certify a class only if: "(1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; (2) there are questions of law and fact common to the class; (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a). The court must also find that one of the requirements of Rule 23(b) has been satisfied. Plaintiffs contend the class should be certified pursuant to Rule 23(b)(3), which requires the court to find that "questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3).

The Ninth Circuit has recently reaffirmed the principle that "'[i]n determining the propriety of a class action, the question is not whether the plaintiff or plaintiffs have stated a cause of action or will prevail on the merits, but rather whether the requirements of Rule 23 are met' and 'nothing in either the language [30] or history of Rule 23 . . . gives the court any authority to conduct a preliminary inquiry into the merits of a suit in order to determine whether it may be maintained as a class action.'" United Steel, Paper & Forestry, Rubber, Mfg. Energy, Allied Indus. & Serv. Workers Int'l Union, AFL-CIO v. ConocoPhilips Co., 593 F.3d 802, 808 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 177-79, 94 S. Ct. 2140, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732 (1974)); see also Staton v. Boeing Co., 327 F.3d 938, 954 (9th Cir. 2003). "Although certification inquiries such as commonality, typicality, and predominance might properly call for some substantive inquiry, the court may not go so far as to judge the validity of these claims." United Steel, 593 F.3d at 808 (internal quotations omitted); see also Blackie v. Barrack, 524 F.2d 891, 901 (9th Cir. 1975). However, although the Court may not require preliminary proof of the claim, it "need not blindly rely on conclusory allegations which parrot Rule 23 requirements. Courts may also consider the legal and factual issues presented by plaintiff's complaint." 2 Alba Conte & Herbert B. Newberg, Newberg on Class Actions, 7.26 (4th ed. 2005). Sufficient information must be provided to form a [31] reasonable and informed judgment on each of the requirements of Rule 23. See Blackie, 524 F.2d at 901 n.17. In order to safeguard due process interests and the judicial process, the Court conducts an analysis that is as rigorous as necessary to determine whether class certification is appropriate. See Chamberlan v. Ford Motor Co., 402 F.3d 952, 961 (9th Cir. 2005); see also Gen. Tel. Co. of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161, 102 S. Ct. 2364, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740 (1982).

The Supreme Court has long recognized that class actions play an important role in antitrust enforcement. See Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 344, 99 S. Ct. 2326, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 (1979); Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co. of Cal., 405 U.S. 251, 262, 266, 92 S. Ct. 885, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1972). "Accordingly, when courts are in doubt as to whether certification is warranted, courts tend to favor class certification." *In re Static Random Access (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., C 07-1819 CW, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107523, 2008 WL 4447592, at 2 (Sept. 29, 2008) ("SRAM") (citing In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 209 F.R.D. 251, 258 (D.D.C. 2002), and In re Playmobil Antitrust Litig., 35 F. Supp. 2d 231, 238 (E.D.N.Y. 1998)). [*592] "Courts have stressed that price-fixing cases are appropriate for class certification because a class-action lawsuit is the most fair and [32] efficient means of enforcing the law where antitrust violations have been continuous, widespread, and detrimental to as yet unidentified consumers." In re Rubber Chem. Antitrust Litig., 232 F.R.D. 346, 350 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (internal quotations and citation omitted).

DISCUSSION

I. Rule 23(a)

A. Ascertainability

Defendants contend that the proposed classes are not ascertainable because the classes include indirect purchasers who bought TFT-LCD products incorporating panels manufactured by "one or more of the named Defendants." Defendants assert that in most instances, the parties will not be able to determine whether a particular TFT-LCD product contains a panel manufactured by a defendant, as opposed to a third-party manufacturer. Defendants argue that "there is no way to determine who manufactured the panel contained in a finished product by looking at the product, and defendants are not aware of any sources of information available to end users that consistently identify the manufacturer of the LCD panel contained in a finished product." Opposition at 51:17-52:2.

A class definition is sufficient if the description of the class is "definite enough so that it is administratively feasible [33] for the court to ascertain whether an individual is a member." O'Connor v. Boeing North American Inc., 184 F.R.D. 311, 319 (C.D. Cal. 1998). "The identity of class members must be ascertainable by reference to objective criteria." 5 James W. Moore, Moore's Federal Practice, § 23.21[1].

The Court finds that the class definition is objective and ascertainable. Class members must live in one of the listed states, must have made a purchase during the class period, the purchase must have been for the class member's own use and not resale, and the product must contain a TFT-LCD panel made by one of the defendants. These are objective criteria. Whether a class member purchased a product containing an TFT-LCD panel made by a defendant can be determined by the model number or serial number of the product. Plaintiffs have submitted evidence showing that typically this determination can be made based on the model number alone because most models contain panels made by a single manufacturer. For those few models using different panels from different manufacturers, the model number will determine class membership unless the model used panels made by defendants and non-defendants. Plaintiffs have [34] submitted evidence showing that during the class period, defendants made 89.7% to 96.3% of the panels used in televisions, computer monitors, and notebook computers, see Netz Rebuttal Report at 88 n. 356, and thus the universe of products containing non-defendant panels is very small. Further, plaintiffs state that they will obtain information from the OEMs identifying models using LCD panels made by non-defendants and the serial numbers of units with panels made by non-defendants for the rare models that used panels from both defendants and non-defendants.

The fact that class members will be required to submit some information in order to determine whether they are members of the class does not render the class definition unascertainable. Courts have rejected arguments similar to those advanced by defendants. See *In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., 264 F.R.D. 603, 2009 WL 4263524, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 25, 2009) ("SRAM") ("Plaintiffs will be able to identify all products that contain Defendants' SRAM by analyzing Defendants' documents, testimony from Defendants' personnel, third party transactional data, third party discovery responses that state whether their [35] products contain SRAM, [Bill of Materials] from OEMs and contract manufacturers, and publicly available information."); Dunnigan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 214 F.R.D. 125, 136 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (fact that class membership could be determined through "slow and burdensome" manual review of files did not defeat ascertainability); In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 169 F.R.D. 493, 506 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (certifying antitrust [*593] class of "investors who transacted through non-Defendant owned brokers where those brokers did not function as a distinct economic entity in the chain of purchase or sale" and stating that this determination would require evidentiary submissions).

B. Numerosity

Rule 23(a)(1) requires the proposed class to be "so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(1). Plaintiffs assert there are thousands of class members in each of the state-wide classes and hundreds of thousands of nationwide class members who purchased TFT-LCD products during the class period. Given the nature of the TFT-LCD market and the international scope of the alleged conspiracy, common sense dictates that joinder would be impracticable. Defendants do not contest [36] numerosity, and the Court finds that this requirement is met.

C. Commonality

For a proposed class to be certified, Rule 23(a)(2) requires that there be "questions of law or fact common to the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2) "Where an antitrust conspiracy has been alleged, courts have consistently held that 'the very nature of a conspiracy antitrust action compels a finding that common questions of law and fact exist.'" *In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39841, 2006 WL 1530166, at 3 (N.D. Cal. June 5, 2006) ("DRAM") (citing In re Rubber Chem. Antitrust Litig., 232 F.R.D. at 351). Plaintiffs assert that questions of law and fact common to the class include (1) whether defendants shared confidential pricing and production information regarding TFT-LCD panels; (2) whether defendants through meetings and communications reached agreements on pricing and production of TFT-LCD panels; (3) whether defendants developed and implemented measures to monitor each member's compliance with their unlawful agreements; (4) whether defendants' agreements resulted in an unlawful overcharge on the price of TFT-LCD panels; (5) whether the unlawful overcharge on the price of TFT-LCD panels [37] was passed-through to the indirect purchasers of TFT-LCD products; (6) whether the overcharge to indirect purchasers can be calculated using a common, formulaic method; and (7) whether there is an ongoing threat of injury to the members of the class as a result of defendants' unlawful conduct. Defendants do not dispute that there are some common issues of law and fact, and instead contend that plaintiffs cannot demonstrate the Rule 23(b)(3) requirement that common issues predominate over individualized questions. The Court finds that plaintiffs have established commonality, and addresses the issue of predominance infra.

D. Typicality

The typicality requirement of Rule 23(a)(3) is fulfilled when "the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3). Generally, the class representatives "must be part of the class and possess the same interest and suffer the same injury as the class members." Falcon, 457 U.S. at 156. Questions of class typicality focus on "whether other members have the same or similar injury, whether the action is based on conduct which is not unique to the named plaintiffs, and whether other [38] class members have been injured by the same course of conduct." Hanon v. Dataproducts Corp., 976 F.2d 497, 508 (9th Cir. 1992) (quoting Schwartz v. Harp, 108 F.R.D. 279, 282 (C.D. Cal. 1985)). "Under the rule's permissive standards, representative claims are 'typical' if they are reasonably co-extensive with those of absent class members; they need not be substantially identical." Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1020 (9th Cir. 1998).

"The typicality requirement does not mandate that the products purchased, methods of purchase, or even damages of the named plaintiffs must be the same as those of the absent class members." In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 209 F.R.D. 251, 261 (D.D.C. 2002). Instead, "[t]he overarching scheme is the linchpin of plaintiffs'. . . complaint, regardless of the product purchased, the market involved or the price ultimately paid. Furthermore, the various products purchased and the different amount of damage [*594] sustained by individual plaintiffs do not negate a finding of typicality, provided the cause of those injuries arises from a common wrong." In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 191 F.R.D. 472, 480 (W.D. Pa. 1999).

Defendants challenge the typicality [39] of named plaintiffs Kou Srimoungchanh, William Fisher, Judy Griffith, Chad Hansen, Gladys Baker, Ling-Hung Jou, and Jai Paguirigan. To the extent defendants contend that certain plaintiffs (Judy Griffith and Chad Hansen) lack typicality because their purchases occurred between December 12, 2006 and December 31, 2006, or that other plaintiffs (Gladys Baker, Ling-Hung Jou, and Jai Paguirigan) do not fulfill the residency requirement of the class definition, those arguments have been addressed supra in connection with the modified class definition. [5]

Defendants challenge Mr. Srimoungchanh on the ground that he did not personally purchase the product on which he bases his claim, but rather the product was purchased by First Secure Data, which defendants assert is a limited liability corporation owned by Mr. Srimoungchanh. However, plaintiffs have [40] submitted the deposition testimony of Mr. Srimoungchanh, in which he states that First Secure Data is a sole proprietorship, and thus he owns the TFT-LCD products purchased by First Secure Data. See Srimoungchanh Depo. at 74:20-25 (Supp. Zahid Decl., Ex. 53). Accordingly, defendants' objection to Mr. Srimoungchanh's standing lacks merit.

Defendants contend that Gladys Baker is not typical because she purchased a Dell monitor containing a panel manufactured by Quanta Display, a non-defendant. Quanta was an independent company until defendant AU Optronics acquired it in late 2006. Plaintiffs contend that Quanta Display is a co-conspirator, and they cite to documents showing that Quanta attended multiple group and bilateral meetings with defendants. Although plaintiffs are correct that case law holds that a conspirator is jointly liable for everything done during the period of the conspiracy's existence, the proposed class definition does not encompass purchases from co-conspirators, named or unnamed. Plaintiffs request permission to revise the class definition to include "LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or notebook computers, from one or more named Defendants and [41] Quanta Display, Inc." Plaintiffs also argue that Ms. Baker's purchase is a qualifying purchase because as the surviving company, AU Optronics assumed all rights and obligations of Quanta, including Quanta's liability for illegal overcharges. The Court finds that Ms. Baker's purchase does not render her atypical in light of the allegations that Quanta participated the alleged price-fixing conspiracy and AU Optronics' acquisition of Quanta. The Court also finds it appropriate to amend the class definition as proposed by plaintiffs.

E. Adequacy

---

[5] Plaintiffs concede that Mr. Fisher lacks standing because his February 10, 2007 purchase is outside the redefined class period. Mr. Fisher is a resident of North Carolina. Second Amd. Consol. Compl. ¶ 45. There is an additional named plaintiff from North Carolina, Donna Jeanne Flanagan, whose adequacy and typicality defendants do not challenge.

Rule 23(a)(4) requires that "the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4). "Resolution of two questions determines legal adequacy: (1) do the named plaintiffs and their counsel have any conflicts of interest with other class members and (2) will the named plaintiffs and their counsel prosecute the action vigorously on behalf of the class?" Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1020. The Ninth Circuit "does not favor denial of class certification on the basis of speculative conflicts." Cummings v. Connell, 316 F.3d 886, 896 (9th Cir. 2003).

Defendants do not challenge the qualifications of plaintiffs' [42] counsel, and the Court finds that the plaintiffs' counsel is qualified and able to litigate this case.

Defendants challenge the adequacy of plaintiffs Christopher Murphy, Martha Mulvey, Ben Northway, and Robert Watson on the ground that these plaintiffs' business and family relationships with counsel compromise their ability to represent the class. Mr. Murphy and Ms. Mulvey are represented [*595] by family members, Mr. Northway is employed by his counsel, and Mr. Watson's counsel is a customer of Mr. Watson's landscaping business. However, "[a]s the courts routinely observe, a named plaintiff will not be disqualified simply because of a close or familial relationship with one of the attorneys representing the class." In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 200 F.R.D. 326, 337 (E.D. Mich. 2001); see also Lewis v. Goldsmith, 95 F.R.D. 15, 20 (D.N.J. 1982) (observing that "it would seem a bit anomalous that an individual whose uncle has developed a reputation as a competent securities lawyer should be prohibited from turning to his uncle for assistance if he has a legitimate claim"). "Rather, there must be some evidence that the relationship at issue is likely to create a conflict of interest or [43] otherwise compromise the ability to vigorously prosecute the action on behalf of the class. The concern is that the financial interests of the class representative may conflict with those of the class; e.g., he may seek a settlement that is not good for the class as a whole." In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 200 F.R.D. at 337.

Here, defendants have not shown how any of these relationships have created a conflict. Plaintiffs assert that none of these plaintiffs or their counsel have any strategic or settlement authority, as none of the four challenged class representatives have any relationship with lead counsel in this case. The mere fact of the plaintiffs' familial and business relationships does not create a per se presumption of impropriety or conflict. In addition, there are over 30 other named plaintiffs, each represented by their own individual counsel. On this record, the Court finds that the named plaintiffs are adequate representatives, and the asserted conflicts are merely speculative.

Finally, defendants challenge certain plaintiffs' level of participation and knowledge about this litigation. For example, defendants state that Ms. Baker and Mr. Paguirigan could not recall [44] whether they had read the initial complaints before they were filed, and they argue that Ms. Mulvey is inadequate because she could not define terms such as "class action," "class representative," or "overcharge." "While class representatives must be familiar with the basics of, and understand the gravamen of, their claims, it is not necessary that they be intimately familiar with every factual and legal issue in the case." *SRAM, 264 F.R.D. 603, 2009 WL 4263524, at 6 (internal quotations and citation omitted). Here, the plaintiffs have searched for products and documents, provided answers to written discovery, given deposition testimony, and followed the progress of this litigation through communication with counsel, and have demonstrated their ability to serve as class representatives. See Supp. Zahid Decl. Ex. 55-58. The Court is satisfied that these plaintiffs can serve as adequate class representatives.

II. Rule 23(b)(2)

A. Nationwide injunctive relief class

Plaintiffs seek certification of the following nationwide class for injunctive relief under Rule 23(b)(2):

> All persons and entities residing in the United States as of the date notice is first published, who indirectly purchased in the United [45] States between January 1, 1999 and the present, LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors and/or laptop computers, from one of more of the named Defendants, for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from this Class are the named Defendants; the officers, directors, or > employees of any defendant; any entity in which any defendant has a controlling interest; and any affiliate, legal representative, heir or assign of any defendant. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officers presiding over this action and members of their immediate families and judicial staffs, and any juror assigned to this action.

Plaintiffs "seek to enjoin Defendants' collusive practices and policies that violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1), and operate to artificially inflate LCD panel prices in the U.S." Motion at 13:14-17. "[I]ndirect purchasers are not barred from bringing an antitrust claim for injunctive relief against manufacturers." Lucas Auto. [*596] Eng'g Inc. v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 140 F.3d 1228, 1235 (9th Cir. 1998).

Rule 23(b)(2) provides for certification where "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to [46] act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief if appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2). Plaintiffs argue that certification of a nationwide class under Rule 23(b)(2) is appropriate because defendants' collusive conduct was market-wide and not specific to individual customers. "It is possible to certify the injunctive aspects of the suit under Rule 23(b)(2) and the damages aspects under Rule 23(b)(3), achieving both consistent treatment of class-wide equitable relief and an opportunity for each affected person to exercise control over the damages aspects." Jefferson v. Ingersoll Int'l Inc., 195 F.3d 894, 898 (7th Cir. 1999); see also *SRAM, 264 F.R.D. 603, 2009 WL 4263524, at 6-7 (certifying nationwide injunctive relief class under Rule 23(b)(2) and 27 statewide classes for monetary relief, including disgorgement, under Rule 23(b)(3)).

Defendants contend that plaintiffs lack standing to obtain injunctive relief because they do not, and cannot, allege a threat of future injury from the alleged conspiracy. Defendants argue that plaintiffs have not shown an "imminent threat of irreparable injury" because [47] the "plaintiffs, their expert, and the government agree that there has been no anticompetitive conduct since 2006." Opposition at 55:2-3. Defendants note that the complaint does not contain substantive allegations of anticompetitive conduct after December 2006, and that plaintiff's expert, Dr. Netz uses the time period of 2007 to the present as a "competitive period" for the purpose of her "before and after" price regression. Defendants also emphasize that none of the criminal plea agreements on which plaintiffs rely mentions anticompetitive conduct occurring after 2006. Finally, defendants argue that it is particularly improbable that any anticompetitive conduct continued after the government's antitrust investigation became public in December 2006.

The Court finds that at this stage of the litigation, the indirect purchaser plaintiffs have alleged facts sufficient to establish standing to seek injunctive relief. Contrary to defendants' assertions, plaintiffs need not show an "imminent threat of irreparable injury," to be entitled to injunctive relief under the Sherman Act. Section 16 of the Clayton Act provides, "Any person . . . shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief [48] . . . against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws . . . under the same conditions and principles . . . [usually employed by] courts of equity." 15 U.S.C. § 26; see also Lucas Auto. Eng'g, 140 F.3d at 1235 ("[A]n antitrust plaintiff seeking injunctive relief need only show a threatened injury, not an actual one.").

Plaintiffs have alleged a multi-company cartel that operates in a market with high barriers to entry, and that engaged in frequent clandestine meetings and employed sophisticated monitoring devices to ensure compliance. The complaint alleges that beginning in 1996 and continuing through the filing of the second amended complaint, defendants and their co-conspirators entered into a "continuing agreement, understanding and conspiracy in restraint of trade artificially to fix, raise, stability and peg prices for LCD panels and LCD products in the United States, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1)." Second Amended Consol. Compl. ¶ 251. Plaintiffs assert that they will be able to show at trial that defendants could very quickly resume their unlawful pricing activities, even on short notice.

Courts have found similar allegations [49] sufficient to establish standing for a nationwide class seeking injunctive relief. In SRAM, the plaintiffs sought to certify a nationwide injunctive class from November 1, 1996 through December 31, 2006. The defendants contended that the plaintiffs had impliedly alleged that the conspiracy ended in 2006, and thus that the plaintiffs lacked standing to seek injunctive relief. Judge Wilken rejected that argument and certified a nationwide injunctive class:

> IP Plaintiffs allege that the same market conditions that facilitated the conspiracy from 1996 to 2006 continue today. They allege that Defendants' price-fixing resulted from a systematic, repeated pattern of [*597] sharing sensitive competitive information which was greatly facilitated by the cross-competitor business relationships that still exist. Thus, there is alleged a significant risk that the conspiracy will persist or reform in the future.

*SRAM, 264 F.R.D. 603, 2009 WL 4263524, at 7; cf. In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6, 14 (1st Cir. 2008) (class did not have standing for injunctive relief where the record showed that the "'perfect storm' that allegedly precipitated massive arbitrage opportunities for selling [50] Canadian cars in the United States ceased long ago.").

Neither the fact that plaintiffs' expert assumed that the conspiracy ended in 2006 for the purpose of her regression analysis, nor the fact that the time periods covered by the criminal pleas do not extend past 2006 means that plaintiffs do not have standing to seek injunctive relief. As plaintiffs' expert explained in her report, she chose 2007 to the present as the "after" period for her "before and after" analysis on the assumption that defendants' price-fixing ended after the DOJ announced its criminal investigation. She did not determine the "after" period based on any affirmative evidence of the absence of a price-fixing conspiracy during that time period. Similarly, the fact that various defendants have pled guilty to Sherman Act violations into 2006 does not obviate the threat that a conspiracy will persist or resume in the future.

Accordingly, the Court certifies a nationwide injunctive class under Rule 23(b)(2).

B. Statewide classes for equitable restitutionary claims

Plaintiffs also seek certification under Rule 23(b)(2) of 23 statewide classes for equitable relief, namely disgorgement and restitution under state law. Plaintiffs [51] assert, without citation to authority, that because these remedies are equitable, certification is appropriate under Rule 23(b)(2). "The distinction made in Rule 23(b)(2), however, is not one between equitable remedies and compensatory damages; rather, it is between "final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole" and all other forms of relief. Therefore, Plaintiffs' claim for restitution must be merely incidental to the claim for injunctive or declaratory relief." In re Paxil Litig., 218 F.R.D. 242, 247 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (denying certification under Rule 23(b)(2) where restitution was predominant relief sought) (internal citation omitted); see also In re School Asbestos Litig., 789 F.2d 996, 1008 (3d Cir. 1986) (upholding district court denial of certification under Rule 23(b)(2) when class sought restitution).

Here, the Rule 23(b)(2) statewide classes would be seeking solely disgorgement and restitution, and not injunctive or declaratory relief. Thus, certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is inappropriate. Rather, plaintiffs' claims for disgorgement and restitution are properly considered claims for monetary relief, and thus the Court will [52] consider certification of these claims under Rule 23(b)(3).

III. Rule 23(b)(3)

Plaintiffs seek certification of 23 statewide classes for money damages pursuant to Rule 23(b)(3). "To qualify for certification under Rule 23(b)(3), a class must meet two requirements beyond the Rule 23(a) prerequisites: Common questions must 'predominate over any questions affecting only individual members'; and class resolution must be 'superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.'" Amchem Prods. Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 615, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3)). "When common questions present a significant aspect of the case and they can be resolved for all members of the class in a single adjudication, there is clear justification for handling the dispute on a representative rather than on an individual basis." Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1022 (internal quotations omitted).

Defendants contend that plaintiffs cannot show that "questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members," as required by Rule 23(b)(3). Specifically, defendants contend that individual issues predominate because (1) some [53] if not all class members are subject to a jurisdictional defense under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements [*598] Act; (2) plaintiffs cannot show antitrust impact on a class-wide basis due to complex distribution channels, wide variations in purchasers' market power and negotiation abilities, changes in the TFT-LCD market over time, variation in panel specifications, and the value added to TFT-LCD products as they move through the supply chain; and (3) the evidence and criminal pleas show that there were multiple separate conspiracies, not a single overarching conspiracy.

A. Subject matter jurisdiction/FTAIA

Defendants contend that the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over most, if not all, of the indirect purchaser plaintiffs' claims because the alleged anticompetitive conduct occurred overseas. The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act, 15 U.S.C. § 6a ("FTAIA"), amends the Sherman Act and "excludes from [its] reach much anti-competitive conduct that causes only foreign injury." F. Hoffman-LaRoche, Ltd. v. Empagran (Empagran I), 542 U.S. 155, 158, 124 S. Ct. 2359, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226 (2004). The FTAIA establishes a general rule that the Sherman Act "shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than [54] import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 6a. The FTAIA then "provides an exception to this general rule, making the Sherman Act applicable if foreign conduct '(1) has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on domestic commerce, and (2) such effect gives rise to a [Sherman Act] claim.'" In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., 546 F.3d 981, 985 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Empagran I and 15 U.S.C. § 6a). This exception is known as the "domestic injury exception" of the FTAIA. Id. The Supreme Court has explained that the FTAIA, > initially lays down a general rule placing all (nonimport) activity involving foreign commerce outside the Sherman Act's reach. It then brings such conduct back within the Sherman Act's reach provided that the conduct both (1) sufficiently affects American commerce, i.e., it has a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on American domestic, import or (certain) export commerce, and (2) has an effect of a kind that antitrust law considers harmful, i.e., the "effect" must "giv[e] rise to a [Sherman Act] claim."

Empagran I, 542 U.S. at 162 (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 6a, emphasis in original).

Defendants [55] argue that the indirect purchaser plaintiffs fall into two groups, those who allegedly bought (1) foreign-panel products (finished products incorporating panels where the panels were initially sold by defendants overseas); and (2) domestic-panel products (finished products incorporating panels where the panels were initially sold directly into the United States). Defendants argue that those who purchased "foreign-panel products" account for the vast majority of the indirect purchaser class, and that those class members' claims are barred by the FTAIA because the alleged antitrust injury occurred overseas and is too attenuated from the ultimate sale in the United States to have a "direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect" on American commerce. In contrast, defendants argue, the FTAIA would not apply to claims based on domestic-panel products because there the defendant's conduct involved import commerce, i.e., a defendant shipped the panel directly into the United States from abroad, or domestic commerce, i.e., a defendant's U.S. subsidiary shipped the panel to a U.S. customer. Defendants argue that individual issues of fact and law predominate over common ones with respect [56] to the applicability of the FTAIA because plaintiffs have not offered a class-wide means for sorting the purported class members into foreign-panel product purchasers and domestic-panel product purchasers.

Plaintiffs respond that the applicability, if any, of the FTAIA will be resolved with common evidence of defendants' conduct, and that defendants never explain why application of the FTAIA to the claims of the indirect purchaser class would involve individualized questions of fact or law. Plaintiffs note that defendants' own chart purportedly listing the percentage of panels sold from 2001-2006 shows that almost all of the class members' purchases of LCD products would be subject to the threatened FTAIA defense. [*599] Thus, plaintiffs argue, even accepting defendants' argument that the FTAIA bars claims by purchasers of foreign-panel products, the applicability of the FTAIA can be decided for all such class members. See Kruman v. Christie's Int'l, 284 F.3d 384, 398 (2d Cir. 2002), abrogated on other grounds by Empagran I, 542 U.S. 155, 124 S. Ct. 2359, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226, (the FTAIA "clearly reveals that its focus is not on the plaintiff's injury but on the defendant's conduct"). Plaintiffs also argue that defendants' FTAIA [57] defense lacks merit. Plaintiffs argue that the plain language of the FTAIA states that the Sherman Act does not apply to "conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations . . . .", and that here all of the defendants shipped some panels directly to the United States. Further, plaintiffs argue that even if the claims in the indirect purchaser classes were found to be subject to the FTAIA's "domestic effects" test, this case would meet that standard.

The Court concludes that the FTAIA defense can be resolved on a class basis, and thus the possibility of this defense does not provide a basis for denying certification. Courts have emphasized that the FTAIA analysis focuses on the defendants' conduct. See Kruman, 284 F.3d at 398; see also Carpet Group Int'l Oriental Rug Importers Ass'n Inc., 227 F.3d 62, 71 (3d Cir. 2000). The Court will be required to determine whether defendants import goods, whether defendants' conduct is "foreign" [58] and outside the scope of the Sherman Act, and, if foreign conduct is involved, whether that foreign conduct sufficiently affects domestic commerce: these questions that can be decided on a class-wide basis.

The cases cited by defendants do not address the FTAIA in the context of class certification, and are also factually distinguishable. For example, in United Phosphorus Ltd. v. Angus Chemical Company, 131 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1013 (N.D. Ill. 2001), the court dismissed an action brought by foreign plaintiffs for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The foreign plaintiffs were prospective manufacturers of a drug (AB) used in the manufacture of tuberculosis medication (ethambutol), and they alleged Sherman Act monopolization claims against an American company that had brought a trade secret action in state court against the foreign plaintiffs to prevent its employee from disclosing technology needed to manufacture AB. After reviewing an extensive factual record, the court dismissed the antitrust claims, finding that the foreign plaintiffs had no intent or ability to sell AB in the United States. Id. at 1013. The court also held that the foreign plaintiffs could not claim domestic injury [59] by supposing that their exclusion from the foreign AB market had an effect on domestic sales of ethambutol because there was no evidence of a link between alleged misconduct in the foreign AB market and the supply or price of ethambutol in the United States. Id. There was also no evidence that the foreign plaintiffs intended to make ethambutol, or that they were prevented from making a single sale of ethambutol. Id. United Phosphorus is distinguishable in that it was decided upon a full factual record, did not involve imports, and the court found no effect in the domestic market. Here, merits discovery is underway, imports are at issue, and plaintiffs have alleged an anticompetitive effect in the United States.

The other cases cited by defendants are similarly inapposite. See In re DRAM, 546 F.3d at 988-89 (affirming dismissal of complaint by foreign consumer that made its purchases entirely outside of the United States and that alleged that super-competitive prices in the United States may have affected prices in foreign markets where plaintiff purchased); In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig., 452 F. Supp. 2d 555, 559 (D. Del. 2006) (dismissing AMD's claims based on AMD's [60] lost sales of German-made microprocessors to foreign customers); In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig., 476 F. Supp. 2d 452, 456-57 (D. Del. 2007) (dismissing class plaintiffs' claims to the extent they were derivative of AMD's dismissed foreign-based claims); Papst Motoren GMbH v. Kanematsu-Goshu (U.S.A.), Inc., 629 F. Supp. 864, 869 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (dismissing Section 2 claim by Japanese corporation [*600] where all lost sales occurred in Japan). [6]

B. Antitrust impact

To determine whether the predominance requirement is satisfied, the Court must identify the issues involved in the case, and determine which are subject to common proof and which are subject to individualized proof. "Liability in an antitrust case is based on: (1) whether there was a conspiracy to fix prices in violation of the antitrust laws; (2) whether the plaintiffs sustained an antitrust injury, or the 'impact' [61] of the defendants' unlawful activity; and (3) the amount of damages sustained as the result of the antitrust violations." *SRAM, 264 F.R.D. 603, 2009 WL 4263524, at 7. Defendants primarily challenge the second element of plaintiffs' antitrust claim, and they contend that plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that common proof can be used to establish class-wide impact.

---

[6] The parties also dispute whether the FTAIA must be interpreted consistently with state law such that state law could not reach conduct that is barred by the FTAIA. These legal questions can be decided after, or in conjunction with, determinations about the applicability of the FTAIA to plaintiffs' claims.

As the DRAM court stated,

> [D]uring the class certification stage, the court must simply determine whether plaintiffs have made a sufficient showing that the evidence they intend to present concerning antitrust impact will be made using generalized proof common to the class and that these common issues will predominate. The court cannot weigh in on the merits of plaintiffs' substantive arguments, and must avoid engaging in a battle of expert testimony. Plaintiffs need only advance a plausible methodology to demonstrate that antitrust injury can be proven on a class-wide basis.

*DRAM, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39841, 2006 WL 1530166, at 9; see also *SRAM, 264 F.R.D. 603, 2009 WL 4263524, at 8; *In re Bulk (Extruded) Graphite Products Antitrust Litig., No. Civ. 02-6030 (WHW), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16619, 2006 WL 891362, at 14 (D.N.J. Apr. 4, 2006); In re Indus. Diamonds Antitrust Litig., 167 F.R.D. 374, 384 (S.D.N.Y. 1996). [62] The Ninth Circuit recently emphasized that "[a]lthough certification inquiries such as commonality, typicality and predominance might properly call for some substantive inquiry, the court may not go so far . . . as to judge the validity of these claims." United Steel, Paper & Forestry, Rubber, Mfg. Energy, Allied Indus. & Serv. Workers Int'l Union, AFL-CIO v. ConocoPhilips Co., 593 F.3d 802, 808 (9th Cir. 2010) (holding district court abused discretion in denying certification based on court's assessment of validity of plaintiffs' claims).

Plaintiffs argue that they are entitled to a presumption of class-wide antitrust impact with regard to three of the proposed state classes: California, Minnesota and Florida. As a threshold matter, the parties dispute whether the inference of impact is procedural or substantive. "Rules governing presumptions and burdens of proof are generally regarded as substantive for purposes of Erie R. R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188 (1938)." Johnston v. Pierce Packing Co., 550 F.2d 474, 476 n.1 (9th Cir. 1977). Defendants do not cite any authority holding that the existence of a presumption of antitrust impact is a matter of procedural [63] law, and indeed a number of courts have held that such a presumption is substantive. See *SRAM, 264 F.R.D. 603, 2009 WL 4263524, at 9 n.5.; In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 235 F.R.D. 127, 133 (D. Me. 2006), rev'd on other grounds, 522 F.3d 6 (1st Cir. 2008); see also Computer Econ., Inc. v. Gartner Group, Inc., 50 F. Supp. 2d 980, 990 (S.D. Cal. 1999) ("State rules that define the elements of a cause of action, affirmative defenses, presumptions, burdens of proof, and rules that create or preclude liability are so obviously substantive that their application in diversity actions is required.").

"California courts routinely recognize a presumption of class-wide impact for indirect purchaser antitrust price-fixing claims." *SRAM, 264 F.R.D. 603, 2009 WL 4263524, at 8. "[W]hen a conspiracy to fix prices has been proven and plaintiffs have established they purchased the price-fixed goods or services, the jury can infer plaintiffs were damaged." *B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois [601] Inc., 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1351, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228 (1987); see also In re Cipro Cases I and II, 121 Cal. App. 4th 402, 413, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (2004) ("Petitioners assert that the trial court erred in finding that injury to the class may be assumed [64] when a horizontal market-wide restraint of trade is alleged. However, this is ordinarily a permissible assumption in cases where consumers have purchased products in an anticompetitive market, even if some consumers did not actually have to pay the overcharge because of their individual circumstances.").

However, regardless of whether certain state laws permit an inference of antitrust impact, plaintiffs still have the burden of demonstrating that "there is a reasonable method for determining on a class-wide basis whether and to what extent that overcharge was passed on to each of the [indirect purchasers] at all levels of the distribution chain." In re Methionine Antitrust Litig., 204 F.R.D. 161, 164 (N.D. Cal. 2001) ("Methionine I").

In support of their argument that antitrust impact can be proven on a class-wide basis, plaintiffs have submitted the expert report of economist Dr. Janet S. Netz. Dr. Netz has examined the TFT-LCD industry and market to determine if the indirect purchaser plaintiffs would have suffered impact as a result of the alleged price-fixing conspiracy. Dr. Netz assumes that there was a conspiracy among TFT-LCD manufacturers as plaintiffs have alleged, and her [65] report asserts that there are a number of characteristics that make the TFT-LCD industry highly susceptible to cartelization and price-fixing, including (1) the lack of an alternative source of supply of TFT-LCD panels and the lack of an alternative technology; (2) the existence of barriers to entry; (3) regular meetings and interactions that allowed defendants to exchange information, come to agreements, and police cheating; and (4) difficulty in cheating due to the use of most-favored customer clauses. Netz Errata Decl. at 3. Dr. Netz's report examines the price targets set by the cartel and actual market prices, and finds that these prices match well. Based on these analyses, Dr. Netz concludes that the cartel was successful in increasing prices. Id. at 33-60.

Next, Dr. Netz considered the commonality of the impact on direct purchasers. Id. at 61-70. Dr. Netz examined the pricing strategies used by defendants, including the use of most-favored customer clauses, the centralization of pricing decisions, and price negotiations starting from a common basis. Dr. Netz also analyzed the prices for TFT-LCD panels to determine whether the prices are related by market forces, and concludes [66] that there is a common pricing structure for TFT-LCD panel prices. Id. at 67-71. In reaching this conclusion, she examined the correlation between panel prices, and found that 76% of panel price correlations (approximately 50,000 of 66,000 correlations) are positive and statistically significant. Id. at 70 & Ex. 32, 33. Dr. Netz then used regression analysis to examine the determinants of panel prices, and found that 77% of price variation is determined by five variables that describe the panel characteristics (panel size, resolution, volume, application, and time-period). Id. at 68 & Ex. 30; Netz Rebuttal Decl. at 31-35. Based on these analyses, Dr. Netz concludes that most of the variation in transaction prices is driven by common factors rather than individual ones, and that these common influences on price are susceptible to being estimated using a formula.

Finally, Dr. Netz considered whether the higher price imposed on direct purchasers translates into higher prices - the pass-through - to indirect purchasers. Dr. Netz discusses the economic theory of pass-through, and states that it is the shape of the demand curve and the degree of competition that determines the pass-through [67] rate. When an industry is perfectly competitive, [7] the pass-through rate of an industry-wide cost is positive, and when the industry also displays constant costs, [8] the pass-through [*602] rate is 100%. Netz Errata Decl. at 73. Dr. Netz states that even with imperfect competition, the pass-through rate is positive, and "it may be less than 100%, 100%, or greater than 100% depending on the shape of the demand curve." Id. at 74. The more competitive the industry, the closer the pass-through rate is to 100%. Id. at 74-75.

Dr. Netz evaluated documentary evidence and industry information, and concludes that the pass-through can be calculated through the multiple levels of the TFT-LCD distribution channel. "The more competitive each of these [68] levels is, the closer the pass-through rate at each level is 100%, and thus the more likely the channel-length pass-through rate is 100%. Each of the distribution levels for monitors, notebooks and TVs - panel distributors, product manufacturers, product distributors, and retailers - is highly competitive." Id. at 76-77; see id. at 77-80 (discussing competitive features of TFT-LCD distribution channel). [9]

Dr. Netz proposes three types of regression models that will establish that antitrust impact to direct purchasers can be shown on a class-wide basis using common proof: the before-and-after approach, the structural model of supply approach, and the conjectural variations approach. Id. at 91-102. [69] [10] The before-and-after method involves identifying two similar periods in which the only significant difference in factors affecting supply and demand is the alleged collusive activity, and comparing the two periods to determine the "but-for" price. Id. at 91-95 (describing before-and-after approach). Dr. Netz describes the structural model as follows:

---

[7] According to Dr. Netz, a perfectly competitive market "is one in which there are many buyers and sellers, such that no individual buyer or seller can affect prices in any significant manner; there is a homogenous good; there is perfect information; and there is free entry and exit." Netz Errata Decl. at 73 n.210.

[8] Dr. Netz states that "constant costs" means that the industry can grow to any size without driving up the costs of inputs. Netz Errata Decl. at 73.

[9] Dr. Netz also states, "That the LCD product manufacturing industry is highly competitive is not inconsistent with Plaintiffs' claims that Defendants fixed the price of LCD panels and LCD products. By fixing the price of panels, the Defendants in effect are fixing the price of products because product prices are a function of panel prices; an increase in the price of LCD panels leads to an increase in the price of LCD products, as discussed in Section VI.D [of the Errata Declaration]." Id. at 77 n.224.

[10] In a separate order, the Court has certified a class of direct purchaser plaintiffs, and found that the direct purchaser plaintiffs have demonstrated, through their expert, plausible methodologies for proving antitrust impact on the direct purchaser class.

> The first step is to determine the oligopoly model that reasonably approximates the characteristics of the LCD industry. The model is then used to derive the supply equations that describe the firms' conduct when competing independently, rather than colluding. I can then use data from the actual world - the world in which there was an LCD cartel - to calculate the response of demand to changes in price, and derive the parameters of a demand function for the products at issue. These parameters can be used in conjunction with the structural model to calculate the but-for price; the but-for price is a result of the interaction implied by the model of demand and supply. The but-for price is then compared to the actual price in order to calculate overcharges.

Id. at 95; see id. at 95-100 (describing structural model). The third method, the [70] conjectural variations approach, "estimate[s] firm conduct and use[s] these estimates to model what prices would be if firms set prices and quantities independently, rather than collusively." Id. at 100; see id. at 100-01 (describing conjectural variations approach).

Dr. Netz then describes the common method that can be used to measure the pass-through of the overcharges to indirect purchasers. Id. at 102-07. "In order to estimate the pass-through rate, I regress the price of the product at the bottom of the channel (the amount the end customer pays) on its cost at the top of the distribution channel (the amount Defendants charge direct customers)." Id. at 102. Dr. Netz proposes two different regression approaches to measuring pass-through over the entire distribution channel, the "top and bottom" approach and the "top to bottom" approach. Id. at 108-12. The choice of approach depends on the data available. Id.

Dr. Netz conducted [71] 53 pass-through studies: 5 complete pass-through studies that measure pass-through from defendants down the distribution channels to the end user, and [*603] 48 partial pass-through studies that measure pass-through in different segments of the distribution channel. Rebuttal Netz. Decl. at 70-86. Dr. Netz ran separate regression analyses for each of the three TFT-LCD products at issue, which took into account panel size, panel manufacturer and resolution, when that data was available. Errata Decl. at 102-114. To conduct these analyses, Dr. Netz used transaction data produced by some defendants, as well as (separately) price data from DisplaySearch, a third-party market research firm.

Defendants raise a number of challenges to Dr. Netz's analyses and conclusions, and have submitted the expert report of Dr. Edward Snyder. Dr. Snyder is the dean and a professor of economics at the University of Chicago Booth School of Business. Defendants contend that the complexity and heterogeneity of the TFT-LCD market makes common proof of impact impossible. Dr. Snyder states that determining impact involves an individualized analysis because the alleged overcharges paid by direct purchasers are not common [72] due to a number of factors, including the industry growth during the class period, the customized nature of some TFT-LCD panels, the significant competition with non-LCD technologies in particular applications, and the recent history of major entry and substantial shifts in shares among manufacturers. See Snyder Decl. ¶ 25. Dr. Snyder also states that pass-through decisions differ by customer, model, stage of distribution, and over time, and he emphasizes that "[t]he distribution chains that move LCD panels from the defendant manufacturers to products that are purchased by individual end users are extraordinarily complex and varied. While some simple distribution chains may involve only one pass-on decision, more complex chains . . . may involve six-pass on decisions by intermediaries." Id. ¶ 28. Dr. Snyder critiques Dr. Netz's economic analyses, and performs his own regression analyses, reaching conclusions diametrically opposed to those of Dr. Netz.

Numerous courts have held that variations in products and complexities in a distribution chain do not preclude an estimation of whether an overcharge impacted end purchasers. In SRAM, the indirect purchaser plaintiffs alleged a ten year [73] price-fixing conspiracy in the market for Static Random Access Memory, a type of memory device. Similar to the industry here, there are multiple types of SRAM, and SRAM is used in a variety of product markets, including the communications market in cell phones and Voice Over Internet Protocol technology, the computer market in, inter alia, servers, mainframes, and high-end computer workstations, and the networking communications market in, inter alia, routers, modems and firewalls. *SRAM, 264 F.R.D. 603, 2009 WL 4263524, at 1 (listing additional SRAM products). Also similar to this case, the defendants in SRAM sold to various customers, large and small, through a variety of distribution paths. "SRAM manufactured by Defendants can be purchased by an SRAM distributor and resold to an original equipment manufacturer (OEM) or purchased by a contract manufacturer. Contract manufacturers create individual SRAM components and finished products containing SRAM for OEMs. Thus, OEMs purchase SRAM directly from SRAM manufacturers, distributors and contract manufacturers. OEMs then sell SRAM directly to consumers or to consumers through a reseller, distributor or retailer." Id. The SRAM defendants argued that [74] the distribution chain was too complex to discern evidence of pass-through. The court rejected that argument, finding that the "divergent pricing and sales practices are not necessarily an impediment to measuring pass-through" and that "many other markets have the same features as the markets at issue here, and those markets are routinely tested for relationships among variables of interest." *264 F.R.D. 603, Id. at 11.

Also instructive are the numerous antitrust cases filed against Microsoft in which Microsoft argued that injury could not be proven on a class-wide basis due to the complexity and changing nature of the software industry and the multi-layered and variable distribution chain. For example, in opposing certification of two California classes of indirect purchasers, Microsoft argued "Because the software represents only a small percentage of the cost of the computer, and because there are many other factors which may [*604] inhibit passing on price changes . . . whether, and the extent to which, any given OEM passed on the excess will differ from case to case. The amount passed through by distributors or retailers purchasing from the OEMs, or purchasing directly from Microsoft, may also vary, [75] so the fact, much less the amount, of any overcharge reaching a consumer will be a function of so many variables . . . that the impact of any violation cannot possibly considered collectively." Microsoft I-V Cases, 2002-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 73,013 at 88,561 (Cal. Sup. Ct. Aug. 29, 2000) (Docket No. 1024-10, Ex. 9). Judge Pollak rejected that argument, finding that the plaintiffs' expert described one method for estimating the "but for" price to direct purchasers, and two methods for measuring pass-through to indirect purchasers. Id. at 88,562. Judge Pollak recognized the complexities posed by multiple products, multiple distribution channels, and the "extraordinary rate at which changes ha[d] occurred in the relevant markets over the six year class period," but held that "the court is not persuaded that a comprehensive analysis of the issues cannot be made within the context of properly managed trial proceedings." Id. at 88,563; see also In re Florida Microsoft Antitrust Litig., No. 99-27340, 2002 WL 31423620, at *13-15 (Fla. Cir. Ct. Aug. 26, 2002); *Gordon v. Microsoft Corp., No. MC 00-5594, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26360, 2001 WL 366432, at 12 (Minn. Dist. Ct. Mar. 30, 2001); see also In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 169 F.R.D. at 499, 523 [76] (certifying a direct purchaser class where plaintiffs accused 33 defendants of conspiring through Nasdaq market-makers, making markets in 5,393 stocks with "11 market-makers for each Nasdaq stock" because "neither a variety of prices nor negotiated prices is an impediment to class certification if it appears that plaintiffs may be able to prove at trial that . . . the price range was affected generally.").

The Court is satisfied that, for class certification purposes, plaintiffs have put forth a feasible methodology to show that the channel-length pass-through rate can be measured, regardless of the path or the number of steps the panel went through from defendants to class members. As other courts have recognized, "the issue at class certification is not which expert is the most credible, or the most accurate modeler, but rather have the plaintiffs demonstrated that there is a way to prove a class-wide measure of [impact] through generalized proof." In re Ethylene Propylene Diene Monomer (EPDM) Antitrust Litig., 256 F.R.D. 82, 100 (D. Conn. 2009). Plaintiffs are not required to "prove the merits of their case-in-chief at the class certification stage. They need not demonstrate that [77] their multiple regression analysis captures all the proper variables and thus reaches the 'right' answer, as the defendants would require them to. . . . It is unnecessary to delve further into the merits by going point-by-point through each expert's theory to decide who has designed the 'better' multiple regression equation." Id. at 101.

The cases relied on by defendants are distinguishable. In Somers v. Apple, Inc., 258 F.R.D. 354 (N.D. Cal. 2009), the plaintiffs' expert "ha[d] not yet developed a model or worked with any data in the context of this case," and had presented "nothing more than a vague five-paragraph long collection of proposals for accomplishing what the Court sees as a daunting task." Id. at 360. Methionine I involved a proposed class "that includes all methionine indirect purchasers in Wisconsin at all levels of the distribution chain. The class includes those indirect purchasers who purchased methionine from a direct purchaser in the same form as the direct purchaser bought the methionine from a defendant; those who purchased methionine from another indirect purchaser who in turn may have purchased the methionine from a direct or indirect purchaser; and those who [78] purchased from a direct or indirect purchaser any one or more of dozens of different products that contain methionine and are ultimately incorporated into feed for a variety of livestock and pets. The class also includes indirect purchasers who are resellers at various levels in the distribution chain and indirect purchasers who are ultimate consumers." Methionine I, 204 F.R.D. at 162. The court denied certification, finding that the plaintiffs' expert did not point to any evidence in the record to support his proposed formula for measuring pass-through, and that the [*605] expert had not advanced any methodology for determining how resellers (who were included in the class) were injured. Id. at 165. The court subsequently certified a much narrower class of indirect purchasers. In Methionine II, the court decertified that class because the plaintiffs' expert's methodology, which had changed, no longer took into account any of the complexity of the market at issue. In re Methionine Antitrust Litig., No. 00-1311 CRB, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14828, 2003 WL 22048232, at *5 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 23, 2006).

In re Graphics Processing Units (GPUs) Antitrust Litigation, 253 F.R.D. 478 (N.D. Cal. 2008), is also distinguishable. In that [79] case, "[h]undreds if not thousands of GPU products were sold during the limitations period [and] each graphics product varied not only as to performance level but also as to its ultimate application. Many of the graphics products sold were particularly customized to the needs of a specific purchaser, meaning they could not be interchanged with any other GPU product sold by defendants. . . . In short, these products were not fungible commodities." GPU, 253 F.R.D. at 491 (emphasis in original). Here, plaintiffs have submitted considerable evidence - disputed by defendants - that TFT-LCD panels are fungible, interchangeable, and largely homogenous. The GPU court also distinguished the Microsoft cases, noting that while in Microsoft, the prior government litigation against Microsoft consisted "extrinsic evidence of harm," in GPU the DOJ had ended its criminal investigation without returning any indictments. Id. at 500. Here, seven defendants have pled guilty to Sherman Act violations, there is an amnesty applicant, and the DOJ's investigation is ongoing.

Defendants also criticize Dr. Netz for using average prices and third party data from a market research company in her analyses, rather [80] than disaggregated "more precise" transactional data. Defendants argue that such data masks relevant differences in the individual transaction data. As an initial matter, however, defendants' arguments are undercut by the fact that Dr. Snyder uses average data in his own analyses. More importantly, a number of courts have held that averaged and aggregated data may be used to demonstrate pass-through. In Gordon v. Microsoft Corporation, a Minnesota court certified two classes of indirect purchasers in an antitrust suit against Microsoft. The court denied Microsoft's motion to decertify the classes, and rejected Microsoft's arguments, similar to those made by defendants here, about the use of average and aggregate data:

> The damages question for trial is presumably not about whether a specific Microsoft price increase found its way through the distribution chain and resulted in an increase in the price paid by a specific class member. Rather, the question is how a series of Microsoft price increases, and/or a series of Microsoft failures to reduce prices, impacted the price each consumer paid. The question of what would have happened but for Microsoft's monopoly overcharge is a hypothetical, [81] and a hypothetical question generally cannot be answered by historical data about what actually happened, but must often be answered by general principles about what generally tends to happen. Thus, average pass through rates appear reasonable and even necessary to prove damages here.

Gordon, 2003 WL 23105550, at *3; see also SRAM, 264 F.R.D. 603, 2009 WL 4263524, at *11 (rejecting the defendants' criticism that the indirect purchaser plaintiffs' use of average and aggregated data in their structural model could yield "false-positive pass-through"); In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 169 F.R.D. at 523; In re Commercial Tissue Products, 183 F.R.D. 589, 595 (N.D. Fla. 1998) ("[E]ven if there is considerable individual variety in pricing because of individual price negotiations, class plaintiffs may succeed in proving class-wide impact by showing that the minimum baseline for beginning negotiations, or the range of prices which resulted from negotiation, was artificially raised (or slowed in its descent) by the collusive actions of defendants."). [11]

[*606] Defendants also challenge Dr. Netz's use of competitive benchmarks in the "before and after" method. Defendants argue that Dr. Netz's selection of 1996-1998 and 2007 to the present as competitive benchmarks is inconsistent with the allegations of the second amended complaint and undercuts the reliability of her regression analyses. Plaintiffs respond that Dr. Netz's selection of these periods as "competitive" is empirically sound because the evidence indicates that defendants' price-fixing agreement may not have begun to affect prices until 1999, and the DOJ's investigation into LCD price-fixing became public at the end of 2006, which should have had a chilling affect on defendants' illegal activities. In addition, Dr. Netz states that to the extent that either of these possible benchmarks was not competitive, this would mean that the prices in those periods were actually higher than competitive prices would have been, and thus Dr. Netz's overcharge estimates [83] would understate (to defendants' benefit) the overcharges that actually occurred. The Court agrees that there is nothing improper or necessarily inconsistent about Dr. Netz's use of the post-2006 time period as a competitive benchmark.

[11] With regard to the use of third party data from DisplaySearch, plaintiffs have submitted evidence that defendants regularly rely on DisplaySearch [82] data in the normal course of business. In addition, plaintiffs state that Dr. Netz used DisplaySearch data in large part because of defendants' failure to provide plaintiffs with timely answers to data interpretation questions.

In sum, the Court concludes that plaintiffs have presented plausible methodologies for demonstrating class-wide impact. Dr. Netz's report is supported by defendants' transactional data as well as industry data, and courts have accepted multiple regression analyses as means of proving antitrust injury and damages on a class-wide basis. Defendants' challenges to plaintiffs' evidence and Dr. Netz's analyses go to the merits of plaintiffs' claims, and will be resolved by the trier of fact.

C. Damages

In price-fixing cases, "[p]laintiffs are not required to supply a precise damage formula at the certification stage." *SRAM, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107523, 2008 WL 4447592, at 6. Plaintiffs need only demonstrate a proposed method for determining damages that is "not so insubstantial as to amount to no method at all." *DRAM, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39841, 2006 WL 1530166, 10; see also Yokoyama v. Midland Nat. Life Ins. Co., 594 F.3d 1087, 1094 (9th Cir. 2010) ("[D]amage calculations alone cannot defeat certification. '[T]he [84] amount of damages is invariably an individual question and does not defeat class action treatment.'") (quoting Blackie v. Barrack, 524 F.2d 891, 905 (9th Cir. 1975)); see also In re Rubber Chem. Antitrust Litig., 232 F.R.D. at 351.

Dr. Netz states that damages can be determined by multiplying the relevant revenues by the overcharge rate. The overcharge rate, in turn, is determined by the regression analyses discussed supra. To a large degree, defendants' arguments on this point are largely similar to those discussed supra, with defendants contending that the variability and heterogeneity in the TFT-LCD market prevents any calculation of pass-through and damages. Defendants also contend that plaintiffs' damages methodology is unworkable because it amounts to a fluid recovery model because it does not provide any way to calculate actual damages to the members of each subgroup. However, Dr. Netz states that the overcharge amount would be calculated for the different panel types, which would also have different revenue rates, and thus differentiated damages figures could be calculated for class members. Rebuttal Netz Decl. at 87.

Defendants have not shown that the methods are "so insubstantial [85] as to amount to no method at all." In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 159 F.R.D. 682, 697 (D. Minn. 1995). The validity of plaintiffs' methods "will be adjudicated at trial based upon economic theory, data sources, and statistical techniques that are entirely common to the class." In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 169 F.R.D. at 521. The Court finds that plaintiffs have met their burden to show that damages can be established using common proof.

D. Single conspiracy vs. many separate conspiracies

Defendants also argue that individual issues predominate because "plaintiffs present no evidence that shows the existence of a single conspiracy involving all defendants." [*607] Opposition at 45:16. Defendants argue that while plaintiffs' complaint contains "conclusory" allegations of a single, overarching conspiracy, plaintiffs' more specific allegations, certain defendants' guilty pleas, statements by the government, and the nature and history of the LCD panel industry all contradict the notion of a single overarching conspiracy. For example, defendants emphasize that Chunghwa's and LG Display's plea agreements cover panels sold in the United States and elsewhere from September 2001 to June [86] 2006 and December 2006, respectively, while Sharp's plea covers specific products sold only to Dell, Motorola and Apple during segmented times. Defendants also place great weight on the government's statements that its investigation has revealed that certain defendants (such as Hitachi and Sharp) were involved in a "separate" conspiracy that was "related" to, but distinct from, the "larger" conspiracy to fix prices in the LCD market. Relying on Alabama v. Blue Bird Body Co., 573 F.2d 309 (5th Cir. 1978), defendants argue that to the extent plaintiffs may have been harmed by different, unconnected alleged agreements, common issues of fact regarding liability do not predominate. In Blue Bird, the Fifth Circuit reversed the certification of a single nationwide class where it "appear[ed] from the limited record before us that the plaintiffs plan to proceed state by state and prove by varying evidence fifty different price-fixing conspiracies." Id. at 323.

Plaintiffs respond that, unlike the plaintiffs in Blue Bird, here there is considerable evidence of a single conspiracy in which defendants and their co-conspirators formed an international illegal cartel to restrict competition and fix [87] prices in the LCD market. Further, plaintiffs argue that proof of an antitrust price-fixing conspiracy is a class-wide issue because it is defendants' conduct that defines the alleged conspiracy. See, e.g., In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 80 F.R.D. 244, 250 (S.D. Tex. 1978) ("Whether the proof ultimately adduced will establish the existence of a national conspiracy among the defendants is not in issue here; it is not the court's function to weigh this evidence for its truth but merely to ascertain whether it is of a type suitable for class-wide use. The court is persuaded that the conspiracy issue . . . is susceptible of generalized proof, since it deals primarily with what the defendants themselves did and said."); see also SRAM, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107523, 2008 WL 4447592, at *5 ("[W]hether a conspiracy exists is a common question that predominates over other issues in this case and has the effect of satisfying the first prerequisite of FRCP 23(b)(3).").

Plaintiffs also argue that defendants have not provided any evidence that is inconsistent with, or that forecloses the possibility of, a single conspiracy, and that the Court should reject defendants' attempt to divide the alleged conspiracy into [88] smaller pieces. With regard to the criminal pleas, plaintiffs emphasize that several defendants have made binding admissions before this Court that, at least since 2001, they violated United States antitrust laws by fixing LCD panel prices. Plaintiffs also argue that the specific details of the criminal convictions cannot be used to defeat or narrow civil liability. See In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., No. Misc. 99-197, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7397, 2000 WL 1475707, at *18 (D.D.C. May 9, 2000) ("the criminal guilty pleas do not establish boundaries for this civil litigation").

The Court rejects defendants' attempts to recharacterize plaintiffs' allegations, as well as defendants' attempts to limit the alleged conspiracy by reference to the criminal guilty pleas and DOJ's statements. The Court agrees with plaintiffs that defendants may not recast plaintiffs' allegations, and plaintiffs have consistently alleged a single, overriding conspiracy spanning the entire class period. As plaintiffs note, the Supreme Court has held that "[t]he character and effect of a conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking at it as a whole." Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962). [89] In addition, the scope and nature of the criminal guilty pleas are not determinative of the plaintiffs' potential claims in a civil antitrust suit. Indeed, "[Sherman Act] civil actions may be brought in cases in which criminal prosecution would not have been justified . . . . Thus, a civil action may succeed ... [even] if the government [does] not show that [*608] the violation constituted a criminal act." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 741 F.2d 482, 501 n.51 (2d Cir. 1984), rev'd on other grounds, Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985).

E. Superiority

Rule 23(b)(3) also requires that a class action be superior to other methods of adjudication. "[I]f common questions are found to predominate in an antitrust action, . . . courts generally have ruled that the superiority prerequisite of Rule 23(b)(3) is satisfied." Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil Procedure § 1781, at 254-55 (3d ed. 2004). The SRAM court's analysis of this issue applies here: "In antitrust cases such as this, . . . damages . . . are likely to be too small to justify litigation, but a class action would offer those with small claims the opportunity for meaningful redress." SRAM, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107523, 2008 WL 4447592, at *7. [90] The Court finds that a class action is superior to other available methods of adjudication.

IV. Objections

Defendants object to the declarations of Chien-Ming Kuan, Yin-Hua Hsu and Fu-Chia Hsu on numerous grounds, including the fact that these declarations were filed in connection with plaintiffs' reply and that defendants have not had the opportunity to depose the declarants. Conversely, five months after the close of briefing on the class certification motion, defendants filed the declaration of Shane Gregorczyk, a Dell employee. Plaintiffs object to Mr. Gregorczyk's declaration on numerous grounds, including the fact that plaintiffs have not had the opportunity to depose Mr. Gregorczyk.

The Court finds that all four of the declarations are untimely, and STRIKES them on that ground.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS plaintiffs' motion for class certification. (Docket No. 1023). The Court DENIES defendants' motion to strike the modified class definition, and GRANTS defendants' motion to strike the declarations of Chien-Ming Kuan, Yin-Hua Hsu and Fu-Chia Hsu. (Docket No. 1326). The Court also GRANTS plaintiffs' motion to strike the Gregorczyk declaration. (Docket No. [91] 1583). The Court ORDERS as follows:

1. The following nationwide class is hereby certified pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a) and 23(b)(2) for injunctive and declaratory relief:

> All persons and entities residing in the United States as of the date notice is first published, who indirectly purchased in the United States between January 1, 1999 and the present TFT-LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or notebook computers, from one or more of the named defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

2. In addition, the following state classes are hereby certified for damages pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a) and 23(b)(3):

ARIZONA:

> All [92] persons and entities in Arizona who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Arizona, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Arizona indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives [*609] and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

CALIFORNIA:

> All persons and entities in California who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of California, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in California indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; [93] the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA:

All persons and entities in the District of Columbia who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of the District of Columbia, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in the District of Columbia indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding [94] over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

FLORIDA:

All persons and entities in Florida who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Florida, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Florida indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

HAWAII:

All persons and entities in Hawaii who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Hawaii, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Hawaii indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants [95] or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

IOWA:

All persons and entities in Iowa who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Iowa, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, [*610] monitors, and/or laptop computers in Iowa indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental [96] entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

KANSAS:

All persons and entities in Kansas who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Kansas, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Kansas indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

MAINE:

All persons and entities in Maine who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Maine, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Maine indirectly from one [97] or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

MASSACHUSETTS:

All persons and entities in Massachusetts who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Massachusetts, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Massachusetts indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. [98] Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

MICHIGAN:

All persons and entities in Michigan who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Michigan, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Michigan indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding [*611] over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

MINNESOTA:

All persons and entities in Minnesota who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Minnesota, purchased LCD panels incorporated [99] in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Minnesota indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

MISSISSIPPI:

All persons and entities in Mississippi who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Mississippi, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Mississippi indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives [100] and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

NEVADA:

All persons and entities in Nevada who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Nevada, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Nevada indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

NEW MEXICO:

All persons and entities in New Mexico who, from January 1, 1999 to [101] December 31, 2006, as residents of New Mexico, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in New Mexico indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

NEW YORK:

All persons and entities in New York who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of New York, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in New York indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta [*612] Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent [102] companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

NORTH CAROLINA:

All persons and entities in North Carolina who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of North Carolina, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in North Carolina indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror [103] assigned to this action.

NORTH DAKOTA:

All persons and entities in North Dakota who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of North Dakota, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in North Dakota indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

RHODE ISLAND:

All persons and entities in Rhode Island who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Rhode Island, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Rhode Island indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for [104] resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

SOUTH DAKOTA:

All persons and entities in South Dakota who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of South Dakota, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in South Dakota indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial [105] officer presiding over this action and the members of [*613] his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

TENNESSEE:

All persons and entities in Tennessee who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Tennessee, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Tennessee indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

VERMONT:

All persons and entities in Vermont who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Vermont, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Vermont indirectly from one or [106] more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

WEST VIRGINIA:

All persons and entities in West Virginia who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of West Virginia, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in West Virginia indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. [107] Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

WISCONSIN:

All persons and entities in Wisconsin who, from January 1, 1999 to December 31, 2006, as residents of Wisconsin, purchased LCD panels incorporated in televisions, monitors, and/or laptop computers in Wisconsin indirectly from one or more of the named Defendants or Quanta Display Inc., for their own use and not for resale. Specifically excluded from the Class are defendants; the officers, directors, or employees of any defendant; the parent companies and subsidiaries of any defendant; the legal representatives and heirs or assigns of any defendant; and the named affiliates and co-conspirators. Also excluded are any federal, state or local governmental entities, any judicial officer presiding over this action and the members of his/her immediate family and judicial staff, and any juror assigned to this action.

The following individuals and entities are hereby named as class representatives:

State	Plaintiff
Arizona	Allan Rotman
California	Frederick Rozo, Steven Martel, Robert Kerson, Byron Ho, Joe Solo, Lisa Blackwell
D.C.	David Walker
Florida	Robert Feins, Scott Eisler
Hawaii	John Okita
Iowa	Ben Northway
Kansas	Rex Getz, Kou Srimoungchanh
Maine	Patricia Giles
Massachusetts	Christopher Murphy
Michigan	Gladys Baker, Judy Griffith, Ling-Hung Jou
Minnesota	Martha Mulvey
Mississippi	Cynthia Saia
Nevada	Allen Kelley
New Mexico	Thomas Clark, Marcia Weingarten
New York	Tom DiMatteo, Chris Ferencsik
North Carolina	Donna Jeanne Flanagan
North Dakota	Bob George
Rhode Island	Dr. Robert Mastronardi
South Dakota	Christopher Bessette, Chad Hansen
Tennessee	Dena Williams, Scott Beall
Vermont	Robert Watson
West Virginia	John Matrich
Wisconsin	Joe Kovacevich, Jai Paguirigan

[*614]

3. [108] The following law firms are designated and appointed as Class Counsel for the indirect purchaser plaintiffs: Zelle Hoffman Voelbel & Mason LLP, and The Alioto Law Firm.
4. As soon as practicable after the entry of this Order, all parties shall meet and confer to develop a plan for dissemination of notice to the Class.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: March 28, 2010

/s/ Susan Illston

SUSAN ILLSTON

United States District Judge

End of Document

Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel Ltd.

Supreme Court of Hawai'i

March 29, 2010, Decided

NO. 29862

Reporter

122 Haw. 423 *; 228 P.3d 303 ; 2010 Haw. LEXIS 63 ***

DARYL DEAN DAVIS, MARK APANA, ELIZABETH VALDEZ KYNE, EARL TANAKA, THOMAS PERRYMAN, and DEBORAH SCARFONE, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs/Appellants, vs. FOUR SEASONS HOTEL LIMITED, dba FOUR SEASONS RESORT, MAUI and FOUR SEASONS RESORT, HUALALAI, and MSD CAPITAL, INC., Defendants/Appellees.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel, Ltd., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90877 (D. Haw., Aug. 31, 2010)

Prior History: [*1] CERTIFIED QUESTION FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF HAWAI'I. Case 1:08-cv-00525-HG-LEK.

Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel Ltd., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47519 (D. Haw., June 2, 2009)

Core Terms

employees, unfair methods of competition, unfair, service charge, deceptive act, practices, consumers, antitrust, amended complaint, public interest, anticompetitive, legislative history, allegations, customers, hotel, competitors, tips, per se violation, distribute, violations, deeming, consumer protection, anti trust law, damages, commerce, bring an action, oppression, beverage, plain language, majority opinion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Wage Payments

HN1[] Wage & Hour Laws, Wage Payments

See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481B-14 (2008).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Certified Questions

HN2[] Appellate Jurisdiction, Certified Questions

See Haw. R. App. P. 13(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN3[] State Regulation, Claims

See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2 (2008).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN4[] State Regulation, Claims

See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481B-4 (2008).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN5[] State Regulation, Claims

See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13 (2008).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > Federal Trade Commission Act

HN6[] State Regulation, Claims

Pursuant to Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481B-4 (2008), any person who violates Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 481B, including Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481B-14 (2008), shall be deemed to have engaged in an unfair method of competition and unfair or deceptive act or practice in the conduct of any trade or commerce within the meaning of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2 (2008). Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(a), which is virtually identical to Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTCA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 45(a)(1), declares that any unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN7[] State Regulation, Claims

Only consumers, the attorney general, or the director of the office of consumer protection are authorized to bring an action based on unfair or deceptive acts or practices. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(d) (2008). Actions based on unfair methods of competition, on the other hand, are not so limited. Instead, Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(e) (2008) provides that any person may bring an action based on unfair methods of competition declared unlawful by this section. Furthermore, Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13(a) (2008), which is similar to Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a), provides that any person who is injured in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 480 may sue for damages and may bring proceedings to enjoin the unlawful practices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN8[] State Regulation, Claims

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(e) (2008) provides that any person can sue for unfair methods of competition, while Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-1 (2008) defines "person" to include individuals, corporations, firms, trusts, partnerships, limited partnerships, limited liability partnerships, limited liability limited partnerships, limited liability companies, and incorporated or unincorporated associations. Therefore, under the plain language of Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 480-1 and 480-2(e), employees constitute "any person" within the meaning of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-1 because they are "individuals." Since the language of Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 480-1 and 480-2(e) is plain, clear, and unambiguous, the statute should be applied as written.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a), does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN10[] State Regulation, Claims

Employees are "individuals" within the meaning of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-1 (2008) and therefore qualify as "persons" under Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 480-2(e) and 480-13(a) (2008). Therefore, employees have standing to sue under Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 480-2(e) and 480-13(a) if they meet the additional requirements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN11[] State Regulation, Claims

In order to state a cause of action pursuant to Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(e) (2008) and recover money damages, a plaintiff must first satisfy the requirements of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13 (2008). Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13(a) provides that, with limited exceptions, any person who is injured in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 480 may sue for damages and may bring proceedings to enjoin the unlawful practices.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN12[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When analyzing whether a plaintiff has sufficiently alleged an injury, the court views the complaint in a light most favorable to plaintiff in order to determine whether the allegations contained therein could warrant relief. Haw. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN13[] State Regulation, Claims

While the phrase "injury to business or property" found in Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13(a) (2008) is not defined in that section or elsewhere in the chapter, the requirement is satisfied, for example, if plaintiffs allege that injury occurred to personal property through a payment of money wrongfully induced or through the diminishment of financial resources as a result of a defendant's unfair methods of competition or unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

HN14[] Clayton Act, Claims

Federal case law has interpreted the "injury to business or property" language of Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a), as a causation requirement, requiring a showing of antitrust injury. Plaintiffs must prove an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent, one that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause. Also known as the fact of damage requirement, the antitrust plaintiff need not prove with particularity the full scope of profits that might have been earned. Instead, it requires a showing, with some particularity, of actual damage caused by anticompetitive conduct that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN15[] State Regulation, Claims

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481B-4 (2008) declares that any person who violates Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 481B shall be deemed to have engaged in an unfair method of competition and unfair or deceptive act or practice in the conduct of any trade or commerce within the meaning of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2 (2008). However, although the deeming language of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481B-4 eliminates the requirement that a plaintiff prove that a defendant's conduct that violates Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 481B (including Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481B-14) constitutes an unfair method of competition, it does not purport to modify the causation requirement of Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13 (2008).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > Federal Trade Commission Act

HN16[] State Regulation, Claims

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(b) (2008) declares that, in construing this section, the courts and the office of consumer protection shall give due consideration to the rules, regulations, and decisions of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and the federal courts interpreting Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trace Commission Act (FTCA), 15 U.S.C.S.

§ 45(a)(1). However, Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2 differs from Section 5 of the FTCA in one essential aspect: enforcement. Section 5 of the FTCA contains no private remedy; rather enforcement of its provisions is vested in the FTC.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

HN17[] Clayton Act, Claims

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13(a) (2008) tracks the language of Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a), which provides in part that any person injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney fees. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN18[] State Regulation, Claims

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-3 provides that Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 480 shall be construed in accordance with judicial interpretations of similar federal antitrust statutes. Pursuant to this instruction, it is appropriate to look to the guidance of similar federal antitrust statutes as permitted in Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-3.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

HN19[] Clayton Act, Claims

In order to recover treble damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a), based on Section 7 violations, a plaintiff must prove antitrust injury, which should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. Additionally, where a plaintiff alleges a per se violation of the antitrust laws, the plaintiff must still allege and prove antitrust injury by alleging the nature of the competition in order to ensure that the injury results from a competition-reducing aspect of the defendant's behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN20[] State Regulation, Claims

Hawaii's requirement that a plaintiff allege the nature of the competition in his or her complaint in order to maintain an action for unfair methods of competition pursuant to Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(e) (2008), is consistent with the federal requirement that a plaintiff allege that his or her injury reflects the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation, in order to have standing pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a). Furthermore, this requirement reflects the underlying purpose of both the federal and Hawai'i antitrust laws, which is to preserve unrestrained competition.

Counsel: Ashley K. Ikeda (Weinberg, Roger & Rosenfeld); Harold L. Lichten and Shannon Liss-Riordan, pro hac vice (Pyle, Rome, Lichten, Ehrenberg & Liss-Riordan) for plaintiffs-appellants.

Wayne S. Yoshigai and Nathan B. Hong (Torkildson, Katz, Moore, Hetherington & Harris); Paul E. Wagner, pro hac vice (Shea Stokes Roberts & Wagner) for defendants-appellees.

Judges: MOON, C.J., NAKAYAMA, DUFFY, AND RECKTENWALD, JJ.; WITH ACOBA, J., DISSENTING.

Opinion by: RECKTENWALD

Opinion

[304] [*424] OPINION BY RECKTENWALD, J.

Plaintiffs-Appellants (collectively "Employees") have been or currently are employed as banquet servers at the Defendants-Appellees Four Seasons Resort, Maui or Four Seasons Resort, Hualalai on the island of Hawai'i. Employees filed a class action complaint against Defendants-Appellees [1] (hereinafter collectively referred to as "Four Seasons") in the United States District Court for the District of Hawai'i (district court), and subsequently filed an Amended Complaint. Employees claimed, inter alia, that Four Seasons violated Hawai'i Revised Statutes (HRS) § 481B-14 [2] by retaining a portion of a mandatory "service charge" [2] collected at banquets and other events and by failing to notify customers that it was doing so.

Four Seasons moved to dismiss the Amended Complaint, arguing, inter alia, that Employees do not have standing to assert their claims for monetary damages under HRS §§ 480-2(e) and 480-13, quoted infra, because they are not businesses, competitors, or consumers, and because they failed to adequately plead the effect of Four Seasons' alleged actions on competition and therefore did not sufficiently allege antitrust injury.

On June 2, 2009, the district court [3] certified the following question pursuant to Hawai'i Rules of Appellate Procedure (HRAP) Rule 13 [3] [4] :

> [305] [*425] Where plaintiff banquet server employees allege that their employer violated the notice provision of H.R.S. § 481B-14 by not clearly disclosing to purchasers that a portion of a service charge was used to pay expenses other than wages and tips of employees, and where the plaintiff banquet server employees do not plead the existence of competition or an effect thereon, do the plaintiff banquet server employees have standing under H.R.S. § 480-2(e) to bring a claim for damages against their employer?

This court entered an order accepting this certified question on June 12, 2009.

---

[1] Defendant-Appellee Four Seasons Resorts Limited operates the Four Seasons Resort, Maui and Four Seasons Resort, Hualalai, which are both owned by Defendant-Appellee MSD Capital.

[2] HRS § 481B-14 (2008) provides:

> HN1[] Hotel or restaurant service charge; disposition. Any hotel or restaurant that applies a service charge for the sale of food or beverage services shall distribute the service charge directly to its employees as tip income or clearly disclose to the purchaser of the services that the service charge is being used to pay for costs or expenses other than wages and tips of employees.

[3] The Honorable Helen Gillmor, United States District Judge, presided.

[4] HRAP Rule 13(a) states in pertinent part as follows:

> HN2[] When a federal district or appellate court certifies to the Hawai'i Supreme Court that there is involved in any proceeding before it a question concerning the law of Hawai'i that is determinative of the cause and that there is no clear controlling precedent in the Hawai'i judicial decisions, the Hawai'i Supreme Court may answer the certified question by written opinion.

For the reasons set forth herein, we answer the certified question as follows:

Employees are "any persons" within the meaning [4] of HRS §§ 480-1 and 480-2(e), quoted infra, and are within the category of plaintiffs who have standing to bring a claim under HRS § 480-2(e) for a violation of HRS § 481B-14.

However, based on the allegations contained in Employees' Amended Complaint, Employees have not sufficiently alleged the "nature of the competition" to bring a claim for damages against Four Seasons under HRS §§ 480-2(e) and 480-13(a) for a violation of HRS § 481B-14.

I. BACKGROUND

This factual background is based primarily upon the information certified to this court by the district court, as well as the allegations contained within Employees' Amended Complaint. See TMJ Hawaii, Inc., v. Nippon Trust Bank, 113 Hawai'i 373, 374, 153 P.3d 444, 445 (2007) (in answering a certified question, this court relied upon the information certified to the court by the district court and the facts set forth in the plaintiff's amended complaint).

Employees have all worked as food and beverage servers for Four Seasons. Daryl Dean Davis, Mark Apana, Elizabeth Valdez Kyne, Earl Tanaka, and Thomas Perryman have worked at the Four Seasons Resort, Maui, and Deborah Scarfone has worked at the Four Seasons Resort, Hualalai on the Big Island.

The [5] Amended Complaint, which sought money damages, alleged in relevant part [5] :

> 4. For banquets, events, meetings and in other instances, the defendants add a preset service charge to customers' bills for food and beverage provided at the hotels.
> 5. However, the defendants do not remit the total proceeds of the service charge as tip income to the employees who serve the food and beverages.
> 6. Instead, the defendants have a policy and practice of retaining for themselves a portion of these service charges (or using it to pay managers or other non-tipped employees who do not serve food and beverages).
> 7. The defendants do not disclose to the hotel's customers that the service charges are not remitted in full to the employees who serve the food and beverages.
>
> 8. For this reason, customers are misled into believing that the entire service charge imposed by the defendants is being distributed to the employees who served them food or beverage when, in fact, a smaller percentage is being remitted to the servers. As a result, customers who would otherwise be inclined to leave an additional gratuity for such servers frequently do not do so because they erroneously believe [306] [*426] that the servers are receiving [6] the entire service charge imposed by the defendants.
> . . .
>
> COUNT I
>
> (Hawaii Revised Statutes, Sections 481B-14, 481B-4, and 480-2 [6])

---

[5] Employees' Amended Complaint also included Counts II - V, in which Employees' alleged that Four Seasons' conduct constituted intentional interference with contractual relations and/or advantageous relations, breach of implied contract, unjust enrichment, and unpaid wages pursuant to HRS §§ 388-6, 10 and 11.

[6] HRS § 480-2 (2008) provides:

> HN3*[] Unfair competition, practices, declared unlawful. (a) Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful.

> The action of the defendants as set forth above are in violation of Hawaii Revised Statutes Section 481B-14. Pursuant to Section 481B-4, such violation constitutes an unfair method of competition or unfair and deceptive act or practice within the meaning of Section 480-2. Section 480-2(e) permits an action based on such unfair methods of competition to be brought in the appropriate court, and a class action for such violation is permitted and authorized by Section 480-13 [7] and Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

On January 30, 2009, Four Seasons moved to dismiss the Amended Complaint, arguing, inter alia, that Employees lacked standing under HRS § 480-2(e) to bring a claim for unfair methods of competition because they are not businesses, competitors, or consumers. Four Seasons also asserted that Employees failed to properly plead the nature of the competition.

The district court held a hearing [9] on the motion to dismiss on March 24, 2009. Following oral argument, Judge Gillmor denied Four Seasons' motion to dismiss with leave to renew the motion following receipt of a ruling by this court with respect to the issue of standing of the Employees to bring the action. An order certifying the question was entered on June 2, 2009, and transmitted to this court the next day.

In addition to the briefs of both parties, several amici curiae also filed amicus briefs in this case as follows: (1) Gustavo Rossetto (hereinafter "Amicus Curiae Rossetto"); (2) Fairmont Hotels and Resorts (U.S.), Inc., Oaktree Capital Management, LP, Kuilima Resort Company, Turtle Bay Resort Company, Turtle Bay Resort Hotel, LLC, TBR Property LLC, and Benchmark Hospitality, Inc.; (3) Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide, Inc.; and (4) HTH Corporation, Pacific Beach Hotel, and Pagoda Hotel.

> (b) In construing this section, [7] the courts and the office of consumer protection shall give due consideration to the rules, regulations, and decisions of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts interpreting section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45(a)(1)), as from time to time amended.
>
> (c) No showing that the proceeding or suit would be in the public interest (as these terms are interpreted under section 5(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act) is necessary in any action brought under this section.
>
> (d) No person other than a consumer, the attorney general or the director of the office of consumer protection may bring an action based upon unfair or deceptive acts or practices declared unlawful by this section.
>
> (e) Any person may bring an action based on this section.

HRS § 481B-4 (2008) provides:

> HN4[] Remedies. Any person who violates this chapter shall be deemed to have engaged in an unfair method of competition and unfair or deceptive act or practice in the conduct of any trade or commerce within the meaning of section 480-2.

[7] HRS § 480-13 (2008) provides:

> HN5*[] Suits by persons injured; amount of recovery, injunctions. (a) Except as provided in subsections (b) and (c), any person who is injured [8] in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter:
>
> (1) May sue for damages sustained by the person, and, if the judgment is for the plaintiff, the plaintiff shall be awarded a sum not less than $ 1,000 or threefold damages by the plaintiff sustained, whichever sum is the greater, and reasonable attorney's fees together with the costs of suit; provided that indirect purchasers injured by an illegal overcharge shall recover only compensatory damages, and reasonable attorney's fees together with the costs of suit in actions not brought under section 480-14(c); and
>
> (2) May bring proceedings to enjoin the unlawful practices, and if the decree is for the plaintiff, the plaintiff shall be awarded reasonable attorney's fees together with the costs of suit.
>
> . . .

[307] [*427] II. DISCUSSION

A. Introduction

1. Applicable Statutes

The Amended Complaint alleges that Four Seasons engaged in unfair methods of competition in violation of HRS § 481B-14 by withholding a portion of the service charge imposed on the sale of food and beverages at Four Seasons' resorts without advising customers that it was doing [10] so. In their Opening Brief, Employees argue that this conduct "leads customers to believe that the waitstaff are receiving a tip of 18-22% of the food and beverage bill and deters customers from leaving any additional gratuity . . . ."

HRS § 481B-14 provides that:

> Any hotel or restaurant that applies a service charge for the sale of food or beverage services shall distribute the service charge directly to its employees as tip income or clearly disclose to the purchaser of the services that the service charge is being used to pay for costs or expenses other than wages and tips of employees.

HN6[] Pursuant to HRS § 481B-4, any person who violates chapter 481B, including § 481B-14, "shall be deemed to have engaged in an unfair method of competition and unfair or deceptive act or practice in the conduct of any trade or commerce within the meaning of section 480-2." HRS § 480-2(a), which is virtually identical to section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTCA), 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1), [8] declares that any "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful."

HN7[] Only consumers, the attorney general, or the director of the office of consumer protection are authorized to bring an action based on unfair or deceptive acts or practices. HRS § 480-2(d). Actions based on unfair methods of competition, on the other hand, are not so limited. Instead, HRS § 480-2(e) provides that "[a]ny [12] person may bring an action based on unfair methods of competition declared unlawful by this section." (emphasis added). [9] Furthermore, HRS § 480-13(a), which is similar to section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), [10] provides that

---

[8] Section 5(a)(1) of the FTCA provides that "[u]nfair methods [11] of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, are hereby declared unlawful." 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1). HRS § 480-2 "differs from section 5 of the FTCA in one essential aspect - enforcement." Hawai'i Med. Ass'n v. Hawai'i Med. Serv. Ass'n, 113 Hawai'i 77, 109, 148 P.3d 1179, 1211 (2006). HRS § 480-2(e) provides a private right of action with regard to unfair methods of competition claims, id., while the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has sole authority to enforce the FTCA, see Robert's Hawai'i Sch. Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co., Inc., 91 Hawai'i 224, 249, 982 P.2d 853, 878 (1999), superseded by statute, 2002 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 229, § 2 at 916-17, as recognized in Hawai'i Med. Ass'n, 113 Hawai'i at 107, 148 P.3d at 1209; Star Markets, Ltd. v. Texaco, Inc., 945 F. Supp. 1344, 1346 (D. Hawai'i 1996).

[9] The availability of a private right of action for unfair methods of competition in Hawai'i has changed over the last several years. In Ai v. Frank Huff Agency, Ltd., 61 Haw. 607, 612, 607 P.2d 1304, 1308-09 (1980), overruled by Robert's Hawai'i Sch. Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co., Inc., 91 Hawai'i 224, 982 P.2d 853 (1999), and Island Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 63 Haw. 289, 300-01, 627 P.2d 260, 268-69 (1981), overruled by Robert's Hawai'i, this court held that HRS § 480-2 afforded plaintiffs a private right of action for unfair methods of competition. In Robert's Hawai'i, this court overruled Ai and Island Tobacco to the extent that they held there existed such a private right and instead [13] held that "there is no private claim for relief under HRS § 480-13 for unfair methods of competition in violation of HRS § 480-2." 91 Hawai'i at 252, 982 P.2d at 881. Thereafter, in 2002, the legislature amended HRS § 480-2 to add subsection (e) which makes clear there is such a private right. 2002 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 229, § 2 at 916-17. In Hawai'i Med. Ass'n v. Hawai'i Med. Services Ass'n, 113 Hawai'i 77, 107, 148 P.3d 1179, 1209 (2006), this court held that "[w]e do not believe the amendment 'overruled' Robert's Hawai'i . . . but instead simply provided a new right that did not previously exist."

[10] Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), provides:

"any person who is injured in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by [308] [*428] [chapter 480]: (1) [m]ay sue for damages . . . ; and (2) [m]ay bring proceedings to enjoin the unlawful practices[.]"

2. The Parties' Arguments

Employees allege that they have standing based on the plain meaning of the relevant statutes, the legislative history of HRS §§ 481B-14 and 480-2(e), [14] and relevant Hawai'i and federal law. Specifically, Employees argue that the plain meaning of "any person" as found in HRS § 480-2(e), and as defined by HRS § 480-1, does not limit standing to businesses, competitors or consumers, and that even if this court determines that the phrase "any person" is ambiguous, the legislative history of HRS § 480-2(e) demonstrates that "[e]ach one of the plaintiffs here qualifies as 'any person' under the law." [11] Furthermore, Employees argue that the legislative history of HRS § 481B-14 "reflects a specific legislative intent to protect plaintiff food and beverage servers." Additionally, Employees argue that based on the plain meaning of HRS §§ 481B-14 and 481B-4, "a violation of § 481B-14 is 'deemed' by the language of the statute to be an unfair method of competition . . . and no further proof that such a violation is an [unfair method of competition] is required." Finally, Employees argue that "[t]o the extent it is applicable, federal antitrust law supports the conferral of standing on plaintiffs." [12]

Four Seasons counters that Employees "lack standing to bring their damages claims under HRS § 481B-14 as that statute is currently written and based on the allegations (or lack thereof) in [their] Amended Complaint." Specifically, Four Seasons argues that the legislative history of HRS § 481B-14 shows that it is not a wage and hour law intended to protect employees or create a labor standard, [13] but is instead "a consumer protection law designed to prevent businesses from engaging in unfair and/or anticompetitive behavior." Furthermore, Four Seasons argues that the broad "any person" language of HRS § 480-2(e) "should [16] not be interpreted literally" and should instead be limited to businesses, competitors, or consumers [14] based on the legislative history of HRS § 480-2(e) and this court's holding in Hawai'i Medical Association v. Hawai'i Medical Service Association, 113 Hawai'i 77, 105,

> (a) Amount of recovery; prejudgment interest Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . , and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

[11] Employees also argue that a limited interpretation of "any person" so as to exclude Employees "risks violation the equal protection clause of the Hawaii Constitution (Article I, Section 5) [15] because it requires the court to deny the protection of Chapter 480 to employees, who may be [unfair methods of competition] victims similarly situated to other 'persons' receiving protection under the statute, without a reasonable basis." Because we conclude that Employees fall within the definition of "any person," we do not

[12] Employees also contend that Employees can enforce HRS § 481B-14 through HRS §§ 388-6, 10 and 11. However, this argument will not be addressed because it is beyond the scope of the certified question.

[13] Four Seasons also argues that if HRS § 481B-14 "was intended to create a wage claim for employees, it is strikingly - if not unconstitutionally - vague. Among other things, it does not specify which employees should be paid the service charge as tip income[,]" and "allows the employer to pick any employee to receive the monies in any amount."

This argument, however, does not relate to the issue of whether or not employees have standing under HRS § 480-2(e) to bring a claim for damages for a violation of HRS § 481B-14, but instead relates the merits [17] of such a claim. Accordingly, we do not address it here.

[14] At some points in its Answering Brief, Four Seasons also includes 480-2(e) is limited to businesses, competitors, consumers or "other market participants." At oral argument, counsel for Four Seasons argued that "businesses" may be broadly interpreted under this court's holding in HMA to include groups such as trade associations which are market participants, but did not further explain what other entities may be considered to be "market participants," see MP3: Oral Argument, Hawai'i Supreme Court, at 39:37 - 40:01 (Jan. 21, 2010), available at http://www.courts.state.hi.us/courts/oral_arguments/archive/oasc29862.html, other than indicating that employees are not, id. at 57:15 - 57:23.

148 P.3d 1179, 1212 (2006) (hereinafter "HMA"), as well as federal courts' interpretations of section 4 of the Clayton Act. Additionally, Four Seasons argues that both Hawai'i and federal case law require that Employees plead the nature of the competition, and that this requirement [309] [*429] must be satisfied even if a plaintiff alleges a per se violation of Hawai'i antitrust law.

As discussed below, Employees clearly qualify as "any person" within the plain meaning of HRS §§ 480-1 and 480-2(e), and the legislative history of HRS § 480-2(e) is consistent with this interpretation. Contrary to Four Seasons' assertions, standing to sue under HRS §§ 480-2(e) and 480-13(a) is not limited so as to preclude Employees from bringing suit. Moreover, both the plain language and legislative history of HRS § 481B-14 support the conclusion [18] that Employees can bring claims for violations of HRS § 481B-14, as long as all other requirements of §§ 480-2(e) and 480-13(a) are met.

Additionally, Employees have sufficiently alleged a direct injury in fact to their "business or property" within the meaning of HRS § 480-13(a). However, Employees have failed to allege the "nature of the competition" in their Amended Complaint, which is required in order to bring a claim for damages based on Four Seasons' alleged unfair methods of competition.

B. Employees are "persons" within the meaning of HRS §§ 480-1 and 480-2(e), and have standing to bring a claim under HRS § 480-2(e) for a violation of HRS § 481B-14

1. Employees are "persons" for purposes of HRS §§ 480-1 and 480-2(e)

HN8[] HRS § 480-2(e) provides that "any person" can sue for unfair methods of competition, while HRS § 480-1 defines "person" to include "individuals, corporations, firms, trusts, partnerships, limited partnerships, limited liability partnerships, limited liability limited partnerships, limited liability companies, and incorporated or unincorporated associations, ..." Therefore, under the plain language of HRS §§ 480-1 and 480-2(e), Employees constitute "any person" [19] within the meaning of § 480-1 because they are "individuals." Since the language of §§ 480-1 and 480-2(e) is plain, clear, and unambiguous, the statute should be applied as written. See, e.g., State v. Yamada, 99 Haw. 542, 553, 57 P.3d 467, 478 (2002) ("[i]nasmuch as the statute's language is plain, clear, and unambiguous, our inquiry regarding its interpretation should be at an end"); Cieri v. Leticia Query Realty, Inc., 80 Haw. 54, 67, 905 P.2d 29, 42 (1995) ("[w]here the language of the statute is plain and unambiguous, our only duty is to give effect to its plain and obvious meaning") (citation omitted).

However, even if the language of HRS §§ 480-2(e) and 480-1 is considered to be unclear or ambiguous and the legislative history of HRS § 480-2(e) is therefore examined, it confirms that "any person" is not limited to consumers, businesses, or competitors, and can in fact extend to Employees. HRS § 480-2(e) was enacted in 2002 in response to Robert's Hawai'i School Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transportation Co., Inc., 91 Hawai'i 224, 252, 982 P.2d 853, 881 (1999), superseded by statute, 2002 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 229, § 2 at 916-17, as recognized in HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 107, 148 P.3d at 1209, [20] in which this court held that "there is no private claim for relief under HRS § 480-13 for unfair methods of competition in violation of HRS § 480-2." See H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 1118, in 2002 House Journal, at 1665 (noting that HRS § 480-2 was amended in response to a "1999 Supreme Court interpretation of section 480-2").

The "any person" language initially proposed for HRS § 480-2(e) never changed from the time the bill was first introduced as S.B. 1320 until it was signed into law as Act 229. Compare S.B. 1320, 21st Leg., Reg. Sess. (2002) with 2002 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 229, § 2 at 916-17. Most of the committee reports suggest that the "any person" language is to be construed broadly so as to encompass plaintiffs like Employees who are neither consumers, businesses nor competitors. See S. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 448, in 2001 Senate Journal, at 1116-17 ("The purpose of [S.B. 1320] is to allow a private citizen to bring an action based on unfair methods of competition.") (emphasis added); S. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 931, in 2001 Senate Journal, at 1295 ("The purpose of [S.B. 1320] is to amend the antitrust and unfair competition law to allow any person to bring a lawsuit for enforcement [21] . .

.") (emphasis added); H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 1118, in 2002 House Journal, at 1665 ("The purpose of [310] [*430] this bill is to permit private actions for unfair methods of competition.") (emphasis added). This interpretation is also consistent with the Senate floor discussion of S.B. No. 1320. [15]

Four Seasons argues that standing under HRS § 480-2(e) is limited to businesses, competitors or consumers, so as not to include Employees, based on this court's statement in HMA that "[b]y its plain terms, HRS § 480-2(e) authorizes any person, i.e., businesses and individual consumers, to bring an action grounded upon unfair methods of competition[,]" 113 Hawai'i at 110, 148 P.3d at 1212 [22] (emphasis in original), which is a reference to a report of the House Consumer Protection & Commerce and Judiciary & Hawaiian Affairs committees, indicating that "[t]his bill amends the law to clearly give businesses and consumers the right to enforce the law . . . [,]" H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 1118, in 2002 House Journal, at 1665 (emphasis added). This argument must be rejected, however, because when viewed in context, the reference to "businesses and individual consumers" in the committee report does not appear to have been an exclusive definition of who may bring suit. [16] Similarly, when viewed in context, the foregoing passage in HMA appears to have been intended to explain that persons or entities in addition to competitors may bring an action under HRS § 480-2(e) as long as they meet the additional standing requirements discussed below, in part II.C. See HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 110, 148 P.3d at 1212 ("To require that the plaintiffs in this case be competitors of HMSA would contravene the plain language of subsection (e) and the intent of the legislature in amending the subject statute."). Additionally, a broad interpretation of "any person" is consistent with the principle that, [23] as a remedial statute, chapter 480 must be construed liberally. Cieri v. Leticia Query Realty, Inc., 80 Hawai'i 54, 68, 905 P.2d 29, 43 (1995) (HRS chapter 480 is a remedial statute, which is 'to be construed liberally in order to accomplish the purpose for which [it was] enacted . . . .'") (citation omitted).

Four Seasons also argues [24] that federal judicial interpretations of the phrase "any person" in similar federal antitrust statutes also limit standing to businesses, consumers, or competitors. For example, Four Seasons relies on Vinci v. Waste Management, Inc., 80 F.3d 1372 (1996), for the proposition that the Ninth Circuit has limited standing to "only certain plaintiffs[.]" Four Seasons further notes that HRS § 480-3 states that "[t]his chapter shall be construed in accordance with judicial interpretations of similar federal antitrust statutes, ..."

A review of federal case law interpreting the phrase "any person" in section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), which is analogous to HRS § 480-13(a), demonstrates that "any person" is not so limited. Instead, the Supreme Court has observed that HN9[] "[t]he statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. . . . The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated." *Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, [311] [431] 457 U.S. 465, 472-485, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982) (citation omitted) (plaintiff, who was an individual receiving health care coverage [25] under a health plan purchased by her employer from the defendant (Blue Shield), had antitrust standing to sue under section 4 of the Clayton Act for Blue

---

[15] In support of the bill, Senator Matsunaga stated that the bill "amends the antitrust and unfair competition law to allow any person to bring a lawsuit for enforcement." 2002 Senate Journal, at 626 (statement of Sen. Matsunaga) (emphasis added). Senator Hogue, who opposed the bill, expressed similar views about its scope in a subsequent debate: "This bill, if enacted, would open the floodgates and allow anybody to file such a suit, no matter how frivolous." 2002 Senate Journal, at 724 (statement of Sen. Hogue) (emphasis added).

[16] The committee report states that:

> Your Committees find that only the Attorney General may bring an action to enforce the antitrust, or unfair methods of competition law. This restriction was the result of a 1999 Supreme Court interpretation of section 480-2, Hawaii Revised Statutes. However, the Attorney General does not have the resources to investigate and litigate all price-fixing claims. This bill amends the law to clearly give businesses and consumers the right to enforce the law if the Attorney General declines to commence an action based on the claim.

H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 1118, in 2002 House Journal, at 1665.

Thus, the report was focusing on the question of whether persons other than the Attorney General should be able to bring suit, rather than providing an exclusive list of which persons would be able to bring suit if the statute was amended.

Shield's alleged failure to reimburse her for costs of treatment); see also Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 505 F.3d 302, 311-15 (4th Cir. 2007) (plaintiff was a software developer and had antitrust standing to sue a defendant manufacturer of computer operating system software even though the plaintiff was not a consumer or competitor and did not operate in the same market as the defendant); American Ad Mgmt., Inc., v. General Telephone Co. of California, 190 F.3d 1051, 1057 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding that authorized sellers of advertising space, who purchased advertising space in the defendant's Yellow Pages telephone directory and then sold the space to customers, had antitrust standing even though not consumers or competitors); Eichorn v. AT&T Corp., 248 F.3d 131, 141-42 (3d Cir. 2001) (former employees of a subsidiary corporation who challenged a no-hire agreement of the parent corporation, alleging that the agreement was a conspiracy to restrain competition in the relevant labor market, had federal antitrust standing because the [26] agreement precluded them from seeking re-employment from at least three divisions of the parent corporation within the competitive market).

The Ninth Circuit's holding in Vinci is not inconsistent with this analysis. In Vinci, the plaintiff was a former employee of a waste removal corporation who brought an action against his former employer, alleging that he was discharged for refusing to cooperate in the employer's anti-competitive scheme to drive a joint venturer out of business and engage in predatory price-fixing. 80 F.3d at 1373-74. Four Seasons relies on a passage from the Ninth Circuit's opinion which stated that "[a] plaintiff who is neither a competitor nor a consumer in the relevant market does not suffer 'antitrust injury.'" Id. at 1376 (citation omitted). However, the court's subsequent discussion indicates that although "antitrust standing is generally limited to customers and competitors," employees can be afforded standing in certain circumstances. Id. (emphasis added).

The court in Vinci focused on the narrow issue of when a terminated employee has antitrust standing to challenge the loss of his or her job as an antitrust violation. For example, the court recognized [27] that former employees who were "essential participants" in an anti-competitive scheme and whose termination is a "necessary means" to accomplish the scheme can obtain antitrust standing. Id. The court held that the plaintiff in Vinci did not fall within this category of former employees because he did not "allege any facts which suggest that he was essential to the alleged antitrust scheme or that his termination was necessary to accomplish the scheme." Id. at 1376-77; cf. Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., Inc., 740 F.2d 739, 745-46 (9th Cir. 1984) (former employee who had alleged that he had been discharged after refusing to engage in the employer's scheme to fix prices in violation of federal antitrust law had antitrust standing because he was "an essential participant in the scheme to eliminate competition" in the industry and "his discharge was a necessary means to achieve the [employer's] illegal end"); Ashmore v. Northeast Petroleum Div. of Cargill, Inc., 843 F. Supp. 759, 765-72 (D. Me. 1994) (former employees had federal antitrust standing to sue for alleged price discrimination by their employer since they were integral to the employer's anti-competitive scheme in that they either [28] had to take an active role in implementing the scheme or face discharge).

Vinci, therefore, does not stand for the proposition that the Ninth Circuit has limited antitrust standing to only businesses, competitors, or consumers, to the exclusion of employees or other individuals. 80 F.3d at 1376-77; see also American Ad Mgmt., 190 F.3d at 1057 (rejecting the defendant's claim that standing is limited to consumers and competitors, and recognizing that "[t]he Supreme Court has never imposed a 'consumer or competitor' test but has instead held the antitrust laws are not so limited"). Instead, Vinci indicates that antitrust standing may extend beyond businesses, competitors, or consumers and provides a specific framework [312] [*432] for analyzing the distinct issue of antitrust standing for a terminated employee.

In sum, based upon the plain language of the statute, HN10[] Employees are "individuals" within the meaning of HRS § 480-1 and therefore qualify as "persons" under HRS §§ 480-2(e) and 480-13(a). Additionally, the legislative history of HRS § 480-2(e) does not evince a clear intent by the legislature to preclude employees from filing an unfair methods of competition claim, but rather indicates that [29] the language is intended to be interpreted broadly. Finally, the federal case law would not require a contrary result. Therefore, Employees have standing to sue under HRS §§ 480-2(e) and 480-13(a) if they meet the additional requirements discussed below.

2. The plain language and the legislative history of HRS § 481B-14 establish that Employees have standing to bring a claim under HRS § 480-2(e) for a violation of HRS § 481B-14

Four Seasons argues that Employees lack standing to bring an unfair methods of competition claim for violation of HRS § 481B-14 because it "is a consumer protection law designed to prevent businesses from engaging in unfair and/or anticompetitive behavior." In making this argument, Four Seasons relies on the legislative history of HRS § 481B-14. Employees respond that the legislative history demonstrates that "one of the problems the statute is intended to remedy is that 'employees may not be receiving tips or gratuities' that customers intend to be distributed to the employees." Employees further contend that "nothing in the committee reports demonstrates a legislative intent to deny employees the ability to seek redress for violation of § 481B-14."

As a threshold [30] matter, we observe that the plain language of HRS § 481B-14 is inconsistent with Four Seasons' argument that Employees cannot obtain standing to sue for a violation of HRS § 481B-14. HRS § 481B-14 provides that any hotel or restaurant that applies a service charge "shall distribute the service charge directly to its employees" or "clearly disclose to the purchaser" that it is withholding some of the service charge. HRS § 481B-4 provides that "[a]ny person who violates [chapter 481B] shall be deemed to have engaged in an unfair method of competition and unfair or deceptive act or practice . . . ." Nothing in either provision purports to preclude employees from seeking to enforce those provisions pursuant to HRS § 480-2(e). Since we have concluded that employees are "persons" who may bring an action under HRS § 480-2(e), see section II.B.1, supra, the plain language of these provisions is inconsistent with Four Seasons' position. See Cieri, 80 Haw. at 67, 905 P.2d at 42 ("[w]here the language of the statute is plain and unambiguous, our only duty is to give effect to its plain and obvious meaning") (citation omitted). In any event, as we discuss below, the legislative history of HRS § 481B-14 [31] does not reflect an intent to preclude enforcement by employees.

In April of 2000, the legislature passed House Bill No. 2123 (H.B. No. 2123, H.D. 2), which was signed into law as Act 16, and codified within chapter 481B entitled "Unfair and Deceptive Practices" as HRS § 481B-14. Section 1 of Act 16 states that "[t]he legislature finds that Hawaii's hotel and restaurant employees may not be receiving tips or gratuities during the course of their employment from patrons because patrons believe their tips or gratuities are being included in the service charge and being passed on to the employees." 2000 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 16, § 1 at 21-22. It also states that:

> The purpose of this Act is to require hotels and restaurants that apply a service charge for food or beverage services, not distributed to employees as tip income, to advise customers that the service charge is being used to pay for costs or expenses other than wages and tips of employees.

2000 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 16, § 1 at 22.

The legislative history of HRS § 481B-14 includes three forms of the bill (original, House Draft 1 (H.D.1) and House Draft 2 (H.D.2)), three committee reports, and Act 16 as signed into law by the Governor. [32] H.B. 2123, H.D.1, H.D.2, 20th Leg., Reg. Sess. (2000); 2000 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 16, § 1 at 21-22. At all times, including when signed into law as Act 16, the bill was entitled [313] [*433] "Relating to Wages and Tips of Employees." [17] Id.

Initially introduced as HB 2123, the bill would have, inter alia, added a definition for "tips" in HRS § 387-1 that would include any service charges imposed by the employer, and amended HRS § 388-6 to prohibit employers from withholding tips from employees. See H.B. 2123, 20th Leg., Reg. [33] Sess. (2000). According to the report of the House Committee on Labor & Public Employment, which was the first committee to consider the bill, it was originally intended to "strengthen Hawaii's wage and hour law to protect employees who receive or may receive tips or gratuities from having these amounts withheld or credited to their employers." H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 479-00, in 2000 House Journal, at 1155.

[17] Employees argue that "[t]he title to the Act is pivotal in dismantling Defendants' claim that the law was not meant to benefit employees because the Hawaii Constitution provides at Article III, Section 14 that: 'No law shall be passed except by bill. Each law shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title.'" However, although we believe the title is instructive in that it appears to reflect the legislature's concern that employees may not always be receiving the service charges imposed by their employers, we do not believe it is dispositive of the issue of whether the legislature intended to afford Employees standing to sue for HRS § 481B-14 violations.

The Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees, Local 5, union testified in support of the proposed bill. Id. The Department of Labor and Industrial Relations [DLIR] and the ILWU Local 142, however, expressed concerns. [18] Based on those concerns, the House Committee on Labor and Public Employment "amended the bill by deleting its contents and inserting a new section regarding unfair and deceptive business practices." Id. Thus, H.D.1 reflects the Committee's decision to amend Chapter 481B (Unfair and Deceptive Trade Practices) rather than Chapter 387 (Wage and Hour Law). The new section, which eventually became § 481B-14, would "require[] that any hotel or restaurant applying a service charge to distribute it to the employees or clearly state that the service charge is being used to [34] pay for costs or expenses other than wages for employees." Id.

H.D.1 was then considered by the House Committee on Finance, which made only "technical, nonsubstantive amendments" to the bill, which, as amended, became H.D.2. See H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 854-00, in 2000 House Journal, at 1298. The Committee's report, dated March 3, 2000, indicated that the bill's purpose "is to prevent unfair and deceptive business practices." Id.

The bill was subsequently considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce and Consumer Protection, which recommended adoption of the bill without further amendment. [35] The Committee's April 3, 2000 report indicates that "[t]he purpose of this measure is to enhance consumer protection," and further noted that:

> Your Committee finds that it is generally understood that service charges applied to the sale of food and beverages by hotels and restaurants are levied in lieu of a voluntary gratuity, and are distributed to the employees providing the service. Therefore, most consumers do not tip for services over and above the amounts they pay as a service charge.
>
> Your Committee further finds that, contrary to the above understanding, moneys collected as service charges are not always distributed to the employees as gratuities and are sometimes used to pay the employer's administrative costs. Therefore, the employee does not receive the money intended as a gratuity by the customer, and the customer is misled into believing that the employee has been rewarded for providing good service.

[314] [*434] S. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 3077, in 2000 Senate Journal, at 1286-87 (emphasis added).

The report went on to state that "[t]his measure is intended to prevent consumers from being misled about the application of moneys they pay as service charges . . . ." Id.

In sum, the legislative [36] history of H.B. No. 2123 indicates that the legislature was concerned that when a hotel or restaurant withholds a service charge without disclosing to consumers that it is doing so, both employees and consumers can be negatively impacted. The legislature chose to address that concern by requiring disclosure and by authorizing enforcement of that requirement under HRS chapter 480. There is no clear indication in the legislative history that the legislature intended to limit enforcement to consumers, businesses, or competitors and to preclude enforcement by employees. Therefore, the legislative history of HRS § 481B-14 is consistent with the conclusion that Employees have standing to sue as "persons" under HRS § 480-2(e) for a violation of HRS § 481B-14 if they meet the additional requirements discussed below.

---

[18] Specifically, the Committee Report notes that:

> The [DLIR] expressed concerns that the bill, as drafted, would delete the tip credit in its entirety thereby disallowing employers from taking any offset from the employees' wages. DLIR testified that since the current rules concerning tips and gratuities are in line with federal regulations, changing the definitions would cause a lot of confusion for both employers and employees.

H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 479-00, in 2000 House Journal, at 1155. The ILWU Local 142 also expressed concerns that "changing the definition of tips would cause much confusion[.]" Id.

C. Employees have not sufficiently alleged the "nature of the competition," which is required to bring a claim for unfair methods of competition under HRS §§ 480-2(e) and 480-13(a)

HN11[] In order to state a cause of action pursuant to HRS § 480-2(e) and recover money damages, Employees must first satisfy the requirements of HRS § 480-13. Flores v. Rawlings Co., LLC, 117 Hawai'i 153, 162, 177 P.3d 341, 350 (2008) [37] ("In order for [the defendant's] failure to register [as a collection agency as required by HRS § 443B-3] to be actionable by private litigants [pursuant to HRS § 480-2], the threshold requirements of HRS § 480-13 must be satisfied."). HRS § 480-13(a) provides that, with limited exceptions, "any person who is injured in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by [chapter 480]: (1) [m]ay sue for damages . . . ; and (2) [m]ay bring proceedings to enjoin the unlawful practices[.]"

HN12[] When analyzing whether or not Employees have sufficiently alleged an injury to their "business or property," this court views Employees' Amended Complaint "in a light most favorable to [Employees] in order to determine whether the allegations contained therein could warrant relief . . . ." In re Estate of Rogers, 103 Hawai'i 275, 280, 81 P.3d 1190, 1195 (2003); see Hawai'i Rules of Civil Procedure Rule 12(b)(6).

In HMA, this court considered what a plaintiff must allege in order to bring an action for unfair methods of competition under HRS § 480-2(e). Specifically, this court addressed, inter alia, whether the Hawai'i Medical Association (HMA) sufficiently alleged [38] injury to itself under HRS § 480-13(a) as a result of the Hawai'i Medical Services Association's (HMSA) alleged unfair methods of competition. HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 107-115, 148 P.3d at 1209-1217. HMA alleged that HMSA deprived over 1,600 HMA physicians of reimbursement for services provided by HMA physicians to HMSA plan members. Id. at 83-84, 148 P.3d at 1185-86. These HMA physicians had become "participating physician[s]" in HMSA's network by entering into a "Participating Physician Agreement" (called a "PAR agreement") with HMSA "to provide medically necessary healthcare services to HMSA's plan members in exchange for HMSA's payments at specified rates." Id. at 81, 148 P.3d at 1183.

HMA, on its own behalf and on behalf of participating physicians in HMSA's network, brought suit against HMSA for violation of HRS § 480-2, and tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. [19] Id. at 81, 148 P.3d at 1183. HMA alleged that HMSA engaged in "an unfair and deceptive scheme to avoid making timely and complete payments owed to its physician members" after the HMA physicians had rendered medical care to HMSA members pursuant to their PAR agreements. Id. at 84, 148 P.3d at 1186. HMA [39] alleged that this "wrongful conduct [315] [*435] (1) constituted unfair methods of competition and (2) delayed, impeded, denied or reduced reimbursement owed to HMA's physician members. HMA further alleged that HMSA's wrongful conduct . . . resulted in direct and substantial harm to HMA and its members." Id. at 81, 148 P.3d at 1183.

HMSA filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, arguing that HMA's claims should be dismissed because HMA, inter alia, lacked standing to bring suit on its own behalf. Id. at 85, 148 P.3d at 1187. Moreover, in its reply to HMA's opposition to the motion, HMSA argued that HMA's claim under HRS chapter 480 failed because HMA had not pled any direct injury to its "business or property." Id. at 86, 148 P.3d at 1188. The circuit court granted HMSA's motion for judgment on the pleadings and HMA appealed. Id. at 87, 148 P.3d at 1189.

On [40] appeal, this court considered whether HMA sufficiently alleged injury to itself with respect to its post-June 28, 2002 [20] unfair methods of competition claims under HRS § 480-2. Id. at 107-15, 148 P.3d at 1209-17. This court acknowledged the three elements essential to recovery under HRS § 480-13: (1) a violation of HRS chapter [19] Individual physicians also sued HMSA on similar grounds and the cases were consolidated on appeal. HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 81, 148 P.3d at 1183. However, because this court's discussion regarding the requirements to sue under HRS §§ 480-2 and 480-13 arose in the context of the HMA suit, we focus here solely on the issues pertaining to that suit.

---

[20] HRS § 480-2(e) became effective on June 28, 2002. In HMA, this court held that § 2(e) cannot be applied retroactively because [41] "[n]either the language of the statute itself nor the legislative history of the amendment give any expressed indication that the amendment should be applied retroactively." HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 107, 148 P.3d at 1209.

480; (2) which causes an injury to the plaintiff's business or property; and (3) proof of the amount of damages. [21] Id. at 114, 148 P.3d at 1216 (citing Ai, 61 Haw. at 617, 607 P.2d at 1311); see also Robert's Hawai'i School Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transportation Co., Inc., 91 Hawai'i 224, 254 n.30, 982 P.2d 853, 883 n.30 (1999), superseded by statute, 2002 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 229, § 2 at 916-17, as recognized in HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 107, 148 P.3d at 1209 ("[W]hile proof of a violation of chapter 480 is an essential element of an action under HRS § 480-13, the mere existence of a violation is not sufficient ipso facto to support the action; forbidden acts cannot be relevant unless they cause [some] private damage.") (citation omitted).

This court, according to the majority opinion, first determined that HMA need not be a "competitor[]" of or "in competition" with HMSA in order to have standing under HRS § 480-13(a). [22] Id. at 110, 148 P.3d at 1212. This court also determined that a plaintiff "may bring claims of unfair methods of competition based on conduct that would also support claims of unfair or deceptive acts or practices." Id. at 111, 148 P.3d at 1213. In doing so, however, "the nature of the competition [must be] sufficiently alleged in the complaint." Id. at 113, 148 P.3d at 1215 (emphasis added). This court recognized that otherwise, "the distinction between claims of unfair [42] or deceptive acts or practices and claims of unfair methods of competition that are based upon such acts or practices would be lost where both claims are based on unfair and deceptive acts or practices." Id. at 111-12, 148 P.3d at 1213-14 (emphasis in original). This court held that HMA sufficiently alleged an unfair methods of competition claim based on conduct that would also [316] [*436] support a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices [23] because it sufficiently alleged the nature of the competition in its complaint. [24] Id. at 112-13, 148 P.3d at 1214-15.

---

[21] A fourth element--"a showing that the action is in the public interest or that the defendant is a merchant"--used to be required, but was eliminated by the 1987 amendment to HRS §§ 480-2 and -13. See HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 114 n.31, 148 P.3d at 1216 n.31 (citing S. Conf. Comm. Rep. No. 105, in 1987 Senate Journal, at 872).

[22] The majority opinion further stated that "notwithstanding . . . our holding that the plaintiffs need not be 'competitors' of, or 'in competition' with, HMSA, the question remains whether the nature of the competition must be sufficiently alleged. Contrary to the dissent, we conclude that it does . . . ." Id. at 111, 148 P.3d at 1213. Justice Acoba and Justice Nakayama, who concurred in the result, nevertheless characterized the majority's holding as requiring that plaintiffs be in competition with defendants and dissented on those grounds. Id. at 119, 148 P.3d at 1221 (Acoba, J. and Nakayama, J., dissenting) ("it is unnecessary to [43] allege, as the majority indicates, that HMSA and all the plaintiffs are in competition with each other for the same 'customers.'"). However, the dissent agreed that something more than an unfair or deceptive act or practice must be alleged in order to bring a claim for unfair methods of competition. Id. ("In my view it is sufficient that 'unfair methods of competition' adversely impact the plaintiffs and allegations in that respect are made, beyond any allegations of unfair and deceptive acts or practices.").

[23] This court specifically stated that

> HMSA facilitates access to the dispensing of medical services, and the plaintiffs provide medical services directly. Thus, in our view, HMSA and the plaintiffs share the same goal or mission, i.e., ensuring that medical services are accessible to their "customers." Their success in meeting the common goal-and, in turn, ensuring the profitability of their respective businesses-is dependent upon their ability to effectively provide medical services to their customers, i.e., the patients. However, if HMSA engages in acts or practices that impede or interfere with physicians' ability to provide effective healthcare services to their patients and/or [44] create incentives for patients to look elsewhere for medical services-that is, to other participating physicians who may be reluctant to challenge HMSA or to non-participating physicians-such acts or practices can, if proven, constitute unfair methods of competition, notwithstanding the fact that the same conduct could also support a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 112-13, 148 P.3d at 1214-15.

[24] This court held that HMA sufficiently alleged the "nature of the competition" by, for example, alleging in its complaint that:

> 11. . . . [HMSA's] conduct has adversely impacted, and continues to adversely impact, members of [HMSA's] plans by, among other things: (a) imposing financial hardships on, and in some cases threatening the continued viability of, the medical practices run by [the plaintiffs]; (b) threatening the continuity of care provided to patients by [the plaintiffs], as required by sound medical judgment; (c) requiring [the plaintiffs] to expend considerable resources seeking reimbursement that could otherwise be available to provide enhanced healthcare services to [HMSA's] plan members; (d) making it more

As to the injury in fact requirement, this court concluded that HMA established that it had been injured in its "business or property" by alleging a "diminishment of financial resources" as a result of HMSA's actions. Id. at 114, 148 P.3d at 1216. This [46] court quoted Ai v. Frank Huff Agency, Ltd., 61 Haw. 607, 607 P.2d 1304 (1980), for the proposition that "it is unnecessary for plaintiffs to allege commercial or competitive injury[;] it is sufficient that plaintiffs allege that injury occurred to personal property through a payment of money wrongfully induced." [25] Id. at 114, 148 P.3d at 1216 (quoting Ai, 61 Haw. at 614, 607 P.2d at 1310) (internal quotation and bracketed text omitted; brackets in original). Therefore, this court held that "HMA need only allege that, by reason of an antitrust violation, it has been injured in its 'business or property.'" Id. HMA clearly alleged a direct injury to its business where "HMA was required to divert substantial resources and time to deal with its members' problems created by HMSA's conduct - resources that otherwise would go to support its principal mission in service of its members." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

As discussed below, although Employees have sufficiently alleged a direct injury in fact to their "business or property," Employees [317] [*437] did not sufficiently allege the "nature of the competition" as required by HMA.

1. Employees have alleged an injury in fact to their "business or property"

Employees sufficiently alleged an injury to their "business or property" within the meaning of HRS § 480-13(a). HRS § 480-13(a)'s requirement of alleging an injury to business or property incorporates the fundamental standing requirement that a plaintiff must allege an injury in fact, [48] but narrows it so that a plaintiff must specifically allege an injury in fact to his or her "business or property." Employees argue that Four Seasons' alleged violation of § 481B-14 directly injures them in both their "business," which is working as banquet servers, and their "property," in the form of "loss of tip income."

HN13[] The phrase "injury to business or property" found in HRS § 480-13(a) is not defined in that section or elsewhere in the chapter. However, as discussed above, this court has established that the requirement is satisfied, for example, if "plaintiffs allege that injury occurred to personal property through a payment of money wrongfully induced," HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 114, 148 P.3d at 1216 (quoting Ai, 61 Haw. at 614, 607 P.2d at 1310), or through the diminishment of financial resources as a result of a defendant's unfair methods of competition or unfair or deceptive acts or practices, id. Therefore, because Employees have alleged that their tip income has been reduced due to Four Seasons' allegedly unlawful conduct, they have alleged an injury to their "business or property."

> costly and difficult for [the plaintiffs] [45] to maintain and enhance the availability and quality of care that all patients receive; and (e) increasing the costs of rendering healthcare services in Hawaii as a result of the additional costs incurred and considerable effort expended by HMA members in seeking reimbursement from HMSA for services rendered. . . .
>
> 26. HMSA dominates the enrollee market in Hawaii with over 65% of Hawaii's population enrolled in one of HMSA's plans. In this regard, HMSA is the largest provider of fee-for-service insurance in the State with more than 90% of the market and is the second largest HMO provider in the State. Similarly, HMSA dominates the physician market, with approximately 90% of Hawaii's physicians participating in HMSA's networks.
>
> 27. It is through such market dominance that HMSA is able to dictate the terms and amount of reimbursement HMA physicians will receive.

HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 112, 148 P.3d at 1214 (emphasis and brackets in original).

[25] Ai's suggestion that allegations of "competitive injury" are the requirement in HMA that a plaintiff allege the "nature of the competition" in order to plead an unfair methods of competition claim under HRS § 480-2(e). However, when this passage from Ai is viewed in [47] the context of the facts the case, it is apparent that this court was explaining that injury to "business or property" means that a private plaintiff does not need to allege that he or she suffered an injury to his or her business property or in a business activity, but rather can allege that he or she suffered an injury to personal property. Ai, 61 Haw. at 614, 607 P.2d at 1310. Moreover, Ai involved alleged unfair or deceptive acts or practices, not unfair methods of competition, id. at 611, 607 P.2d at 1308, and therefore this court did not address the requirements to properly plead an unfair methods of competition claim.

2. Employees failed to allege the "nature of the competition"

As noted above, Employees allege [49] in their Amended Complaint that Four Seasons failed to distribute the entirety of its service charge to its employees and to clearly disclose to the purchaser of the services that employees were not receiving the entire service charge as tip income, and further allege that such conduct constitutes a violation of HRS § 481B-14. Pursuant to HRS § 481B-4, such a violation would constitute both an unfair method of competition and an unfair or deceptive act or practice under HRS § 480-2(a). However, Employees cannot pursue a claim for unfair or deceptive acts or practices because such a claim can only be brought by consumers, the attorney general or the director of the office of consumer protection. See HRS § 480-2(d). Therefore, as was the case in HMA, in order to pursue a claim under § 480-2(e) for the unfair methods of competition of Four Seasons, Employees must allege the "nature of the competition." [26] HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 111, 148 P.3d at 1213.

Employees [51] allege that they have been directly injured by not receiving a portion of the service charge retained by Four Seasons, or by not receiving the tips hotel patrons might have otherwise left if they had known how the service charge was allocated. Even when viewed in a light most favorable to Employees, the Amended Complaint clearly does not contain any allegations concerning the nature of the competition. However, Employees are required to allege how Four [318] [*438] Seasons' conduct will negatively affect competition in order to recover on an unfair methods of competition claim. [27]

Amicus Curiae Rossetto suggests that this court's opinion in Island Tobacco Co., Ltd., v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 63 Haw. 289, 627 P.2d 260 (1981), "recognized that there need be no 'injury to competition' in order for [an unfair method of competition] claim to lie under HRS § 480-2." For support, Amicus Curiae Rossetto cites to the following passage from that case:

> [W]e view § 480-2 as being designed to aid "competitors," as much as to protect "competition." And unlike the Federal Trade Commission Act, the policy of the Hawaii law, as expressed in HRS § 480-13, is to foster private

---

[26] The dissent suggests that the present case is distinguishable from HMA because HMA involved an unfair methods of competition claim based on claim, and that the requirement in HMA that the plaintiffs allege the nature of the competition was "to [50] preserve the distinction" between the two claims. Dissenting Opinion at 15. The dissent therefore argues that because HRS § 481B-4 deems a violation of chapter 481 to be both an unfair method of competition and an unfair or deceptive act or practice under HRS § 480-2, the need for distinction between the two claims as articulated in HMA is not present in the instant case. Dissenting Opinion at 16-18.

However, this court in HMA did not indicate that a plaintiff alleging an unfair method of competition under HRS § 480-2(e) must plead the nature of the competition merely so there is a distinction between claims of unfair or deceptive acts or practices and claims of unfair methods of competition. While recognizing that such distinction is necessary, this court further indicated that "the existence of the competition is what distinguishes a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices from a claim of unfair methods of competition." HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 112, 148 P.3d at 1214. In other words, this court indicated that the pleading requirement is based on the differences in the nature of the underlying causes of action. Therefore, HMA's holding is equally applicable to the instant case.

[27] Thus, we respectfully disagree with the dissent's suggestion that the Amended Complaint sufficiently alleged the nature of the competition. Dissenting Opinion at 36-38. In HMA, after recognizing that the standard of review for a motion to dismiss or motion for judgment on the pleadings requires this court to accept the allegations in the complaint as true and construe the allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, we held that this standard does not relieve plaintiffs from the requirement of pleading the nature of the competition in the complaint itself. See HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 113, 148 P.3d at 1215 ("In [52] sum, we hold that any person may bring a claim of unfair methods of competition based upon conduct that could also support a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices as long as the nature of the competition is sufficiently alleged in the complaint") (emphasis added). In, we concluded that HMA sufficiently alleged the nature of the anti-competitive effect HMSA's alleged actions would have on the marketplace for healthcare services in Hawai'i and that HMA's injury directly resulted from these unfair methods of competition. See supra, section II-C and notes 23 > suits grounded on unfair or deceptive trade [53] practices, even where the unlawful acts to [sic] not culminate in injury to "competition."

Island Tobacco, 63 Haw. at 301, 627 P.2d at 269 (emphasis added).

This passage, however, does not support Amicus Curiae Rossetto's argument. Rather, this language was limited to claims of unfair or deceptive trade practices, rather than unfair methods of competition, and was used to explain that an act can constitute an unfair or deceptive practice if it injures a competitor, even if it does not injure competition itself. Id. This analysis does not extend to claims involving unfair methods of competition.

Employees argue that "since § 481B-4 'deems' a violation of [§ 481B-14] to be an 'unfair method of competition' under § 480-2, this Court should not require further proof that such a violation is in fact an [unfair method of competition]." Citing to this court's previous holding in Ai, Amicus Curiae Rossetto similarly contends that the legislature, "by 'deeming' a violation of Section 481B-14, through the operation of Section 481B-4, to be a per se [unfair method of competition] has found the necessary element of 'competition' by its legislative action." For the following reasons, these arguments [54] confuse the requirements necessary to bring an unfair methods of competition claim under HRS § 480-2(e).

The requirement that the plaintiff allege the "nature of the competition" in an unfair methods of competition claim is distinct from the requirement that a defendant's conduct constitute an unfair method of competition. The latter requirement stems from HRS § 480-2(a), which provides that unfair methods of competition are declared to be unlawful. See Robert's Hawai'i, 91 Hawai'i at 255, 982 P.2d at 884 ("Generally speaking, competitive conduct is unfair when it offends established public policy and when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers.") (internal quotations omitted; citation omitted); Cieri, 80 Hawai'i at 61, 905 P.2d at 36 ("It is impossible to frame definitions which embrace all unfair practices. . . . Whether competition is unfair or not generally depends upon the surrounding circumstances of the particular case.") (citation omitted).

In contrast, the requirement that a plaintiff allege that he or she was harmed as a result of actions of the defendant that negatively affect competition is derived from HRS § 480-13(a)'s [55] language that "any person who is injured in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared [319] [*439] unlawful by this chapter . . . [m]ay sue for damages . . . ;" (emphasis added).

In Robert's Hawai'i, this court discussed the elements that must be established to bring a claim under HRS § 480-13(a). 91 Hawai'i at 254 n.31, 982 P.2d at 883 n.31. We held that "the elements of (1) resulting injury to business or property and (2) damages" are "two distinct elements" of HRS § 480-13(a), and went on to note that:

> Indeed, HN14[] federal case law has interpreted the "injury to business or property" language of section 4 of the Clayton Act as a causation requirement, requiring a showing of "antitrust injury." "Plaintiffs must prove . . . [an] injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent[, one] . . . that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the 'type of loss' that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause."
>
> Also known as the "fact of damage" requirement, the antitrust plaintiff [56] need not prove with particularity the full scope of profits that might have been earned. Instead, it requires a showing, with some particularity, of actual damage caused by anticompetitive conduct that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.

Id. (internal citations omitted; ellipses and brackets in original); see also HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 114 n.30, 148 P.3d at 1216 n.30 (citing Robert's Hawai'i, 91 Hawai'i at 254 n.31, 982 P.2d at 883 n.31).

HN15[] HRS § 481B-4 declares that "[a]ny person who violates this chapter shall be deemed to have engaged in an unfair method of competition and unfair or deceptive act or practice in the conduct of any trade or commerce within the meaning of section 480-2." Amicus Curiae Rossetto contends that Employees do not need to allege the "nature of the competition" because Employees' claim is based upon a statutory violation deemed by HRS § 481B-4 to be "per se" an unfair method of competition, rather than a claim based on an unfair or deceptive act or practice that is also being alleged to be an unfair method of competition, as was the case in HMA. However, although the deeming language of HRS § 481B-4 eliminates the requirement that a plaintiff prove that [57] a defendant's conduct that violates chapter 481B (including HRS § 481B-14) constitutes an unfair method of competition, it does not purport to modify the causation requirement of HRS § 480-13.

Moreover, even if this court were to determine that the language of HRS § 481B-4 is ambiguous, the legislative history of HRS § 481B-4 does not reflect an intent to eliminate the causation requirement of HRS § 480-13(a). The current deeming language of HRS § 481B-4 ("deemed to have engaged in an unfair method of competition and unfair or deceptive act or practice in the conduct of any trade or commerce within the meaning of section 480-2") was added in 1996 pursuant to Act 59. 1996 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 59, § 4 at 83. Prior to the enactment of Act 59, HRS chapter 481B contained a variety of different enforcement provisions which were replaced by HRS § 481B-4. See, e.g., id. (replacing the provision in HRS § 481B-4 which provided that violators could be "fined not more than $ 500 for each violation or imprisoned not more than one year or both" with the present deeming language).

The Senate Judiciary Committee report indicates that:

> The purpose of the bill is to provide a consistent penalty for certain [58] specific unfair and deceptive acts or practices of regulated industries under chapter 480, . . . governing monopolies and restraint of trade.
>
> Your Committee finds that this bill is intended to delete duplicative or unnecessary penalty provisions and by deeming the violations to constitute unfair and deceptive business practices under section 480-2[.]

S. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 2103, in 1996 Senate Journal, at 1016-17.

The report of the House Consumer Protection & Commerce and Judiciary committees similarly provides that "[t]he purpose of this bill is to provide consistency in the consumer protection statutes by amending certain provisions [320] [*440] so that they uniformly relate to the unfair or deceptive acts or practices statute" and that the "bill is designed to remove duplicative or unnecessary recitation of penalty provisions in favor of a simple reference to the unfair or deceptive acts or practices statute." H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 1459-96, in 1996 House Journal, at 1610.

While the committee reports reflect a desire for consistency in enforcement, they do not indicate that the legislature intended to modify the causation requirements which are generally applicable to unfair methods of competition [59] claims under HRS § 480-13(a).

The dissent argues that because the legislative history indicates that HRS § 481B-14 was intended to prevent harm to employees, it can therefore be inferred that the legislature did not intend to require that a plaintiff plead the nature of the competition in order to bring an unfair methods of competition claim under HRS § 480-2(e). Dissenting Opinion at 30-32. However, as we discuss above in section II-B-2, the legislative history of HRS § 481B-14 indicates that both employees and consumers may be negatively impacted when a hotel or restaurant withholds a service charge without disclosing to consumers that it is doing so. Moreover, the legislature chose to place HRS § 481B-14 within Hawaii's consumer protection statutes and provided that it be enforced through HRS § 480-13. Therefore, while the legislative history of HRS § 481B-14 recognizes that employees are negatively impacted when a hotel or restaurant does not properly distribute the service charge, neither this recognition nor anything else in the legislative history of HRS §§ 481B-14, 481B-4, or 480-2(e) indicate that the legislature intended to eliminate the causation requirements of HRS § 480-13 [60] for unfair methods of competition claims brought under HRS § 480-2(e).

This analysis is consistent with Ai, which involved debt collection practices alleged to be unfair or deceptive acts or practices in violation of Chapter 443 and a "deeming" provision similar to HRS § 481B-4. 61 Haw. at 608-10, 607 P.2d at 1307-08. That provision provided that: "[a] violation of this part by a collection agency shall constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce for the purpose of section 480-2." Ai, 61 Haw. at 610 n.5, 607 P.2d at 1308 n.5 (citing HRS § 443-47). This court discussed the relationship between that provision and HRS § 480-2, recognizing that:

> the legislature . . . did not leave to the judiciary the unfettered discretion to independently determine in every case brought under [§] 480-2 whether a defendant's conduct had been "unfair or deceptive" within the comprehension of the statute. The legislature instead found it desirable to predetermine that violations of HRS Chapter 443 would constitute per se "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" for the purposes of § 480-2

Id. at 616, 607 P.2d at 1311 [61] (emphasis added).

Applying Ai's reasoning here, by "deeming" a violation of § 481B-14 to be an unfair method of competition, the legislature "predetermine[d]" that violations of HRS Chapter 481B would constitute per se unfair methods of competition for the purposes of § 480-2, and therefore a plaintiff with standing need not prove that conduct which violates HRS § 481B constitutes an unfair method of competition. See id. However, by so doing, the legislature did not determine that an injury suffered by "any person" as a result of a violation of chapter 481B necessarily stems from the negative effect on competition caused by the violation. In other words, the legislature was not making a determination that any person injured as a result of a violation of Chapter 481B automatically has standing to sue pursuant to HRS § 480-2 and 480-13. Instead, a private person must separately allege the nature of the competition in accordance with this court's holding in HMA.

At the time Ai was decided, HRS § 480-13 required the plaintiff to show that the suit would be in the public interest or that the defendant is a merchant. This requirement was eliminated by the 1987 amendment to HRS §§ 480-2 and [62] -13. See HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 114 n.31, 148 P.3d at 1216 n.31 (citing S. Conf. Comm. Rep. No. 105, in 1987 Senate Journal, at 872). In Ai, this court [321] [*441] held that "[s]ince plaintiffs herein have supplied allegations adequate to show that such a per se violation of [§] 480-2 has occurred, we accordingly find that the public interest has been sufficiently made out to confer standing to plaintiffs under § 480-13." Id. at 617, 607 P.2d at 1311. The dissent argues that this public interest requirement "is directly analogous to the . . . requirement that [Employees] plead the 'nature of [the] competition' inasmuch as both are aimed at addressing the anti-competitive effects of such conduct[,]" and therefore this court's holding in Ai indicates that in cases of per se violations of HRS § 480-2, a plaintiff need not allege the nature of the competition in order to assert an unfair methods of competition claim. Dissenting Opinion at 23. Amicus Curiae Rossetto similarly asserts that Ai indicates that when there is a per se violation of Hawai'i's antitrust or consumer protection laws, the plaintiff does not need to allege the nature of the competition in order to bring an unfair methods of competition [63] claim under HRS § 480-2(e).

However, this argument misconstrues Ai. As discussed above, Ai merely emphasized that when the legislature "deems" a practice to be a per se unfair method of competition or unfair or deceptive act or practice within the meaning of HRS § 480-2, a plaintiff with standing to sue does not need to prove that the defendant's action actually constituted either an unfair method of competition or unfair or deceptive act or practice, and does not need to make any additional showing that the suit was in the public interest. Id. at 616, 607 P.2d at 1311. Moreover, the now-repealed public interest requirement was not "directly analogous" to the nature of the competition, as the dissent suggests. Although this court in Ai indicated the public interest requirement can be satisfied when "the unfair method employed threatens the existence of present or potential competition[,]" we also indicated that the requirement can be satisfied in circumstances where there is no such threat, including when "the unfair method is being employed under circumstances which involve flagrant oppression of the weak by the strong." Ai, 61 Haw. at 614-15, 607 P.2d at 1310 (citing FTC v. Klesner, 280 U.S. 19, 28, 50 S. Ct. 1, 74 L. Ed. 138, 13 F.T.C. 581 (1929) [64] (explaining that the purpose of the public interest requirement is to ensure that a suit brought by the FTC under the FTCA is truly in the interest of the public as a whole, not merely private individuals); see Ailetcher v. Beneficial Finance Co., 2 Haw. App. 301, 306, 632 P.2d 1071, 1076 (1981) (finding the public interest requirement was satisfied in an unfair or deceptive practices case because, even though "the action of the [defendant finance company was not] such as to constitute an unfair method of competition, a restraint of trade or a monopolization of an area of commerce[,]" there was "flagrant oppression of the weak by the strong"), abrogated on other grounds by Hac v. Univ. of Hawaii, 102 Hawai'i 92, 105-06, 73 P.3d 46, 59-60 (2003); T.W. Electrical Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Electrical Contractors Assoc., 809 F.2d 626, 636 (9th Cir. 1987) ("Under Hawai'i law, an unfair act is committed, and the public interest requirement is met, whenever the unfair method is being employed under circumstances which involved flagrant oppression of the weak by the strong."). Therefore, contrary to the dissent's and Amicus Curiae Rossetto's assertions, this court's holding in Ai does not stand [65] for the proposition that where a statute deems an action to be a per se violation of Hawai'i's antitrust or consumer protection laws, the plaintiff is relieved of alleging the nature of the competition in order to have standing to sue under HRS § 480-2(e).

Amicus Curiae Rossetto also cites to Flores v. Rawlings Co., LLC, 117 Hawai'i 153, 177 P.3d 341 (2008), for the proposition that Employees do not need to allege the nature of competition because HRS § 481B-4 "deems" a violation of HRS § 481B-14 to be an unfair method of competition. However, Flores does not support this argument.

The plaintiffs in Flores were members of HMSA's benefit plans and brought an action against a company (Rawlings) that had contracted with HMSA to provide subrogation and "claims recovery services." Id. at 155-57, 177 P.3d at 343-45. The plaintiffs alleged that they were injured by Rawlings' failure to register as a debt collection agency as required by HRS § 443B-3(a) (1993), which, pursuant to HRS § 443B-20, would constitute [322] [*442] an unfair or deceptive act or practice within the meaning of HRS § 480-2. [28] Id. Similar to HRS § 481B-4, HRS § 443B-20 (1993) provides that "[a] violation of this chapter by a collection [66] agency shall constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce for the purpose of section 480-2." Id. at 162, 177 P.3d at 350. Because the plaintiffs alleged that Rawlings' actions constituted unfair or deceptive acts or practices rather than unfair methods of competition, HRS § 480-13(b) was applicable, requiring plaintiffs to show that they were "consumers" who were "injured" within the meaning of § 480-13(b) and HRS § 480-1. [29] Id. This court held that the plaintiffs were "consumers" without having to prove that they "purchased" something from the defendant. Id. at 162-66, 177 P.3d at 350-54.

This [67] court recognized that "[b]y deeming violations of HRS chapter 443B an unfair or deceptive act or practice for the purposes of HRS § 480-2, it is evident that the legislature wished to have chapter 443B be enforceable in the same manner as other unfair trade practices under chapter 480[,]" i.e., enforceable by individual consumers under HRS § 480-2(d). Id. at 164, 177 P.3d at 352. If private enforcement was limited to those who purchased from a collection agency, then as a practical matter consumers would not be able to enforce the statute and enforcement "would be left entirely in the hands of the state[,]" because consumers do not typically purchase goods or services from collection agencies. Id. This would be "an inconsistent, if not absurd, result that the legislature would not have intended." Id. Therefore, this court held that:

> Rather, in the context of consumer debt, the determination of whether the individual seeking suit is a "consumer" should rest on whether the underlying transaction which gave rise to the obligation was for a good or service that is "primarily for personal, family, or household purposes," HRS § 480-1. This reading is supported by the definition of "debt" [68] in HRS § 443B-1, as well as the fact that the statutory structure of HRS chapter 480 does not require that one be a "consumer" of the defendant's but merely a "consumer."

Id. at 164, 177 P.3d at 352 (emphasis in original).

Although this court held that the plaintiffs had established standing as consumers, we further concluded that the plaintiffs failed to demonstrate that they were injured as a result of Rawlings' conduct because, although Rawlings had failed to register as required by HRS § 443B-3, the underlying debt was nevertheless valid. Id. at 169, 177 P.3d at 357. We observed that "Rawlings's conduct in violation of HRS § 443B-3, while injurious to the state's interest in regulation of collection agencies, did not directly harm Plaintiffs." Id. at 171, 177 P.3d at 359.

---

[28] HRS § 443B-3(a) (1993) provides:

> No collection agency shall collect or attempt to collect any money or any other forms of indebtedness alleged to be due and owing from any person who registering under this chapter.

[29] HRS § 480-1 (1993) defines "consumer" as: "a natural person who, primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, purchases, attempts to purchase, or is solicited to purchase goods or services or who commits money, property, or services in a personal investment." Flores, 117 Hawai'i at 162-63, 177 P.3d at 350-51.

This court's analysis in Flores addressed alleged unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the area of consumer debt collection and did not extend to cases involving alleged unfair methods of competition. Unlike the present case, this court in Flores was construing HRS § 480-13(b), which provides the cause of action for unfair or deceptive acts or practices. Thus, Flores cannot be construed to mean that unfair methods [69] of competition claims may be brought under HRS § 480-2(e) and § 480-13(a) without any reference to the effect on competition simply because HRS § 481B-4 "deems" a violation of § 481B-14 to be an unfair method of competition. [30] In any event, even though Flores [323] [*443] involved a deeming provision similar to that here, this court acknowledged that the requirements imposed by HRS § 480-13 were nonetheless applicable. See Flores, 117 Hawai'i at 162, 177 P.3d at 350 ("In order for Rawlings's failure to register to be actionable by private litigants, the threshold requirements of HRS § 480-13 must be satisfied.").

Therefore, although Employees allege that they have suffered an injury resulting from Four Seasons' violation of § 481B-14, which is deemed to be an unfair method of competition by § 481B-4, Employees are additionally required to allege the "nature of the competition." HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 113, 148 P.3d at 1215. Employees have made no such allegation, and therefore have not satisfied the requirements to pursue a claim under HRS § 480-2(e). [31]

We note that this result is consistent with the principles of causation that have been developed in the federal antitrust context. In both Robert's Hawai'i and HMA, this court recognized that "federal case law has interpreted the 'injury to business or property' language [72] of section 4 of the Clayton Act as a causation requirement, requiring a showing of 'antitrust injury.'" Robert's Hawai'i, 91 Hawai'i at 254 n.31, 982 P.2d at 883 n.31; HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 114 n.30, 148 P.3d at 1216 n.30 (quoting Robert's Hawai'i, 91 Hawai'i at 254 n.31, 982 P.2d at 883 n.31). In Robert's Hawai'i, this court further noted that the antitrust injury "should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." 91 Hawai'i at 254 n.31, 982 P.2d at 883 n.31 (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)).

When examining HRS § 480-2, this court has recognized that "[t]he genesis of Hawai'i's consumer protection statute is in federal antitrust law," with a shared "concern for the preservation of unrestrained economic competition and free trade." Cieri v. Leticia Query Realty, Inc., 80 Haw. 54, 59, 905 P.2d 29, 34 (1995). HRS § 480-2(a), which declares that unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices are unlawful, is "a

---

[30] Amicus Curiae Rossetto additionally cites to Fuller v. Pacific Medical Collections, Inc., 78 Hawai'i 213, 891 P.2d 300 (App. 1995), in which the Intermediate Court of Appeals held that although the Director of the Department of Commerce and Consumer Affairs was designated to enforce HRS chapter 443, a consumer could maintain an action under HRS § 480-2(d) for an unfair or deceptive act or practice claim because HRS § 443B-20 provided that violations of chapter 443 constitute unfair or deceptive acts or practices. Id. at 218, 891 P.2d at 305. However, because Fuller involved only claims [70] of unfair or deceptive acts or practices pursuant to HRS § 480-2(d), it does not address the distinct issue of whether Employees must allege the nature of the competition in order to maintain an unfair methods of competition claim under HRS § 480-2(e).

[31] Without expressing an opinion regarding its sufficiency, we note that in their Reply Brief, Employees described how they would characterize the "nature of the competition" if they were required to allege it:

> [E]ven if there were some requirement that the unfair method of competition be asserted, the remedy would not be dismissal, but at worst, to allow the plaintiffs to allege such "unfair method". Indeed, it is obvious that if one hotel obeys the laws and remits the entire service charge to the employees [71] serving at the banquet and another hotel/competitor skims the service charge and keeps 4-5% for itself without disclosure, the hotel acting unlawfully can undercut its stated price for the banquet knowing that it will be receiving improper gains from the misleading description of its service charge. This is clearly a

Amicus Curiae Rossetto similarly states that:

> In this case, hotels and restaurants that do not inform customers that they are keeping the imposed service charge and not paying it to employees gain a clear competitive advantage because they have deceived their patrons. They are able to "reduce" the published cost of their food and beverages in order to entice patronage away from their honest competitors who either pay out the service charge to employees or frankly inform patrons that management is keeping all or a part of the service charge (thereby telling patrons that they will still have to tip employees).

virtual counterpart of [§] 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act [FTCA]." Island Tobacco, 63 Haw. at 300, 627 P.2d at 268. HN16[] HRS § 480-2(b) [73] declares that "[i]n construing this section, the courts and the office of consumer protection shall give due consideration to the rules, regulations, and decisions of the Federal Trade Commission [FTC] and the federal courts interpreting section 5(a)(1) of the [FTCA] . . . ." However, section 480-2 "differs from section 5 of the FTCA in one essential aspect - enforcement. Section 5 of the FTCA contains no private remedy, rather enforcement of its provisions is vested in the [FTC]." HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 109, 148 [324] [*444] P.3d at 1211 (quoting Star Markets, Ltd. v. Texaco, Inc., 945 F. Supp. 1344, 1346 (D. Haw. 1996) and citing Robert's Hawai'i, 91 Hawai'i at 249, 982 P.2d at 878) (internal parenthetical and quotation marks omitted). Therefore, federal interpretations of the FTCA, although helpful in determining whether a defendant's actions constitute an unfair or deceptive act or practice or an unfair method of competition, are of limited relevance in interpreting the standing requirements applicable to the private right of action provided by HRS § 480-2(e). [32]

HN17[] HRS § 480-13(a) tracks the language of section 4 of the Clayton Act, which provides in relevant part:

> Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor…., and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (emphasis added).

Additionally, HN18[] HRS § 480-3 provides that "[chapter 480] shall be construed in accordance with judicial interpretations of similar federal antitrust statutes." Pursuant to this instruction, this court [75] has indicated that it is appropriate to look to "the guidance of similar federal antitrust statutes as permitted in HRS § 480-3." Robert's Hawai'i, 91 Hawai'i at 251, 982 P.2d at 880. [33]

---

[32] When interpreting HRS § 480-2(e), Amicus Curiae Rossetto urges this court to only consider federal interpretations of section 5(a)(1) of the FTCA [74] pursuant to HRS § 480-2(b), and not interpretations of section 4 of the Clayton Act. Specifically, Amicus Curie Rossetto argues that section 5(a)(1) of the FTCA has been interpreted in FTC v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 405 U.S. 233, 92 S. Ct. 898, 31 L. Ed. 2d 170 (1972), to empower the FTC to define unfair practices to include practices without anti-competitive effects. However, this argument is misplaced, because as discussed above, interpretations of section 5(a)(1) of the FTCA are of limited relevance in analyzing standing requirements for HRS § 480-2(e) since the FTCA does not have a comparable private right of action. See supra, note 8.

[33] Four Seasons argues that because § 480-13(a) is similar to section 4 of the Clayton Act, this court should examine relevant federal judicial interpretations of that statute pursuant to HRS § 480-3, citing, for example, to Associated General Contractors of California v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) (hereinafter "AGC"). In AGC, the Supreme Court discussed the concept of standing under section 4 of the Clayton Act to sue for violations of federal antitrust law, and noted that standing in the antitrust context is more limited than the broad "any person" language of the statute would suggest. Id. at 534-35.

The Supreme Court identified a number of factors to assist courts in determining whether a plaintiff has established federal antitrust standing. The first factor, which was described by the Court in AGC as the "nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury[,]" and which considered whether the injury is the "type that Congress sought to redress," AGC, 459 U.S. at 538 (citation [76] omitted), has since been referred to as "antitrust injury," meaning an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful[,]" see, e.g., Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990); Eichorn v. AT&T Corp., 248 F.3d 131, 140 (3d Cir. 2001). The other factors identified by the Court in AGC are: the "directness or indirectness of the asserted injury," the "speculative measure of harm," the "risk of duplicate recoveries" or "danger of complex apportionment of damages" and "the existence of more direct victims of the alleged [violation]." AGC, 459 U.S. at 538-545; see also Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 334; American Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co., 190 F.3d 1051, 1054 (9th Cir. 1999).

Other than recognizing that federal courts have consistently applied the concept of antitrust injury when determining if a plaintiff has federal antitrust standing, this court has not expressly applied the AGC analysis to unfair methods of competition claims arising under HRS chapter 480. Robert's Hawai'i, 91 Hawai'i at 254 n.31, 982 P.2d at 883 n.31; HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 114 n.30, The Supreme Court first articulated the concept of "antitrust injury" in Brunswick. 429 U.S. at 489. Several bowling centers brought suit, challenging the acquisition of several of their competitors by Brunswick Corporation as creating a monopoly in violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, [34] and seeking treble [325] [*445] damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act for profits they would have received had the acquired centers gone out of business. 429 U.S. at 480-81. The plaintiffs "attempted to show that had [the defendant] allowed the defaulting centers to close, [the plaintiffs'] profits would have increased." Id. at 481. The Court noted that plaintiffs were not complaining that Brunswick's actions had reduced competition, but rather preserved it and therefore deprived plaintiffs of increased concentration. Id. at 488. Accordingly, the Court found that the plaintiffs' injury was not of "'the [78] type that the statute was intended to forestall.'" Id. at 487-88 (citation omitted).

The Court examined the underlying purpose of section 7, noting that although "[e]very merger . . . has the potential for producing economic readjustments that adversely affect some persons . . . Congress has not condemned mergers on that account; it has condemned them only when they may produce anticompetitive effects." Id. at 487 (emphasis added). Therefore, the Court held that HN19[] in order to recover treble damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act based on section 7 violations, "[p]laintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which . . . should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Id. at 489.

Additionally, the Supreme Court has clearly established that even where a plaintiff alleges a per se violation of the antitrust laws, the plaintiff must still allege and prove antitrust injury by alleging the nature of the competition in order to ensure that the injury results [79] from a competition-reducing aspect of the defendant's behavior. For example, in Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., [35] 495 U.S. 328, 341, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990), the Court "reject[ed] respondent's suggestion that no antitrust injury need be shown where a per se violation is involved." "The antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior. The need for this showing is at least as great under the per se rule . . . ." Id. at 344 (emphasis in original); see also Glen Holly Entm't, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 343 F.3d 1000, 1008 (9th Cir. 2003) ("If the injury flows from aspects of the defendant's conduct that are beneficial or neutral to competition, there is no antitrust injury, even if the defendant's conduct is illegal per se.") (citation omitted); Pace Elecs., Inc. v. Canon Computer Sys., 213 F.3d 118, 123-24 (3d. Cir. 2000) (in order to show standing for a per se antitrust violation, the plaintiff need not allege that its injury actually "produced an anticompetitive result," but instead must allege that its injury "resulted from the anticompetitive aspect of the challenged conduct").

The Ninth Circuit reviewed the purpose of requiring plaintiffs to allege loss stemming from an anticompetitive effect of the defendant's actions in Glen Holly. Two manufacturers of film editing equipment entered into an agreement to jointly market certain products, with the agreement also prohibiting one of the manufacturers from selling the products to certain customers, such as the [81] plaintiff. Id. at 1005-06. The plaintiff alleged that this joint venture caused the plaintiff to lose its customers and was "purposefully anti-competitive" in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and California antitrust law because it created a monopoly and destroyed competition in the relevant market. Id. at 1006-07. The court recognized that "[t]he central purpose of the antitrust laws, state and

---

148 P.3d at 1216 n.30. Since [77] we have decided, based on our analysis of HRS § 480-13(a) and Hawai'i caselaw, that Employees must allege the nature of the competition, we do not need to consider the applicability of the AGC approach in order to answer the certified question.

[34] Section 7 of the Clayton Act proscribes mergers whose effect "may be substantially to lessen competition, or tend to create a monopoly." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 485.

[35] It [80] is important to note that Atlantic Richfield involved a judicially recognized per se antitrust violation, whereas the per se violation of Hawai'i antitrust law in this case is established by HRS § 481B-4. However, this distinction has no bearing on the underlying analysis for the antitrust injury requirement in the circumstances here, where we have concluded that the legislature did not intend to modify the causation requirements imposed by HRS § 480-13. Thus, it makes no difference whether the courts or the legislature have "deemed" certain action to be anti-competitive, because the purpose of the antitrust injury requirement is to ensure that the plaintiff's alleged injury stems from this anti-competitive aspect, rather than some pro-competitive or neutral effect of the defendant's antitrust violation.

federal, is to preserve competition. It is competition . . . that these [326] [*446] statutes recognize as vital to the public interest." Id. at 1010 (quoting Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2000)) (emphasis added). The court then held that the plaintiff sufficiently alleged that the defendants' agreement to "unlawful[ly] remove[] a competitive product from the market" was the type of conduct the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that plaintiff's "allegation of 'loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of [defendants'] behavior,'" thus satisfying the antitrust injury requirement. Id. at 1014 (citation omitted; emphasis added).

This court has similarly recognized that Hawaii's consumer protection laws are also intended to preserve [82] competition. For instance, in Cieri, which involved claims that the vendors and broker involved in the sale of a residence engaged in unfair or deceptive practices in violation of HRS § 480-2 when they failed to disclose a plumbing problem, this court discussed the underlying purpose of Hawai'i antitrust and consumer protection laws:

> The genesis of Hawai'i's consumer protection statute is in federal antitrust law. Although the federal arsenal of antitrust laws is comprised of several differently worded statutes of varying scope that have generated volumes of case law, all of the acts have a common focus on trade, commerce, and business, and all share a concern for the preservation of unrestrained economic competition and free trade.

80 Hawai'i at 59, 905 P.2d at 34 (emphasis added).

"Embodied in Hawai'i's virtually word-for-word adoption of the prohibitions contained in the Sherman, Clayton, and FTC acts is the federal antitrust laws' focus on commerce, the economy, and competition." Id. at 60, 905 P.2d at 35. This court also recognized that HRS § 480-13 similarly reflects this focus on preserving competition. Id. at 61, 905 P.2d at 36.

Thus, HN20[] Hawaii's requirement that a plaintiff allege [83] the "nature of the competition" in his or her complaint in order to maintain an action for unfair methods of competition pursuant to HRS § 480-2(e), HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 113, 148 P.3d at 1215, is consistent with the federal requirement that a plaintiff allege that his or her injury "reflect[s] the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation," in order to have standing pursuant to section 4 of the Clayton Act. Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489. Furthermore, this requirement reflects the underlying purpose of both the federal and Hawai'i antitrust laws, which is to preserve unrestrained competition.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this court answers the certified question as follows:

Employees are "any persons" within the meaning of HRS §§ 480-1 and 480-2(e) and are within the category of plaintiffs who have standing to bring a claim under HRS § 480-2(e) for a violation of HRS § 481B-14.

However, based on the allegations contained in Employees' Amended Complaint, Employees have not sufficiently alleged the "nature of the competition" to bring a claim for damages against Four Seasons under HRS §§ 480-2(e) and 480-13(a) for [84] a violation of HRS § 481B-14.

Dissent by: ACOBA

Dissent

DISSENTING OPINION BY ACOBA, J.

I respectfully dissent.

The certified question presented is whether

> [w]here plaintiff banquet server employees allege that their employer violated the notice provisions of [Hawai'i Revised Statutes (HRS)] § 481B-14 by not clearly disclosing to purchasers that a portion of a service charge was used to pay expenses other than wages and tips of employees, and where the plaintiff banquet server employees do not plead the existence of competition or an effect thereon, do the plaintiff banquet server employees have standing under [HRS] § 480-2(e) to bring a claim for damages against their employer?

(Emphasis added.)

[327] [*447] As noted by Plaintiffs-Appellants, [1] the certified question arose as a result of a motion to dismiss filed by Defendants-Appellees Four Seasons Hotel Limited, dba Four Seasons Resort, Maui and Four Seasons Resort, Hualalai, and MSD Capital, Inc. [collectively, Defendants]. Hence, the standard pertaining to such motions applies. In this jurisdiction, a circuit court's ruling on a motion to dismiss is reviewed de novo. Wright v. Home Depot U.S.A., Inc., 111 Hawai'i 401, 406-07, 142 P.3d 265, 270-71 (2006). [85] In that review,

> [a] complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his or her claim that would entitle him or her to relief. [This court] must therefore view a plaintiff's complaint in a light most favorable to him or her in order to determine whether the allegations contained therein could warrant relief under any alternative theory. For this reason, in reviewing a circuit court's order dismissing a complaint[, this court's] consideration is strictly limited to the allegations of the complaint, and [this court] must deem those allegations to be true.

In re Estate of Rogers, 103 Hawai'i 275, 280-81, 81 P.3d 1190, 1195-96 (2003) (citations, brackets, and ellipsis omitted) (emphasis in original). [2] In my view, it is not beyond doubt that Plaintiffs can establish no set of facts under which relief could be granted. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' amended complaint should not be dismissed.

I.

HRS § 481B-14 (2008 Repl.) states:

> Hotel or restaurant service charge; disposition. Any hotel or restaurant that applies a service charge for the sale of food or beverage services shall distribute the service charge directly to its employees as tip income or clearly disclose to the purchaser of the services that the service charge is being used to pay for costs or expenses other than wage and tips of employees.

(Boldfaced font in original.) (Emphasis added.) In conjunction with HRS § 481B-14, HRS § 481B-4 (2008 Repl.), entitled [87] "Remedies," states that "[a]ny person who violates this chapter [(HRS 481B)] shall be deemed to have engaged in an unfair method of competition and unfair or deceptive act or practice in the conduct of any trade or commerce within the meaning of section 480-2." (Emphases added.) In that regard, HRS § 480-2(a) (2008 Repl.) states that "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful." Further, HRS § 480-2(e) (2008 Repl.) provides that "[a]ny person may bring an action

---

[1] Plaintiffs-Appellants are Daryl Dean Davis, Mark Apana, Elizabeth Valdez Kyne, Earl Tanaka, Thomas Perryman, and Deborah Scarfone, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, and are hereinafter [86] referred to collectively, as "Plaintiffs."

[2] The federal standard of review is the same.

> We review de novo the district court's decision to grant a motion to dismiss pursuant to [Federal Rules of Civil Procedure Rule] 12(b)(6). ASW v. Oregon, 424 F.3d 970, 974 (9th Cir. 2005). We accept as true all well-pleaded facts in the complaint and construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Id. A claim should be dismissed only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can establish no set of facts under which relief could be granted. Pacheco v. United States, 220 F.3d 1126, 1129 (9th Cir. 2000).

Watson v. Weeks, 436 F.3d 1152, 1157 (9th Cir. 2006).

based on unfair methods of competition declared unlawful by this section." HRS § 480-1 (2008 Repl.) provides in part that "'[p]erson' or 'persons' includes individuals[.]"

The amended complaint states in relevant part that:

> 4. For banquets, events, meetings and in other instances, the defendants add a preset charge to customers' bills for food and beverage provided at the hotels.
>
> 5. However, the defendants do not remit the total proceeds of the service charge as tips income to the employees who serve the food and beverages.
>
> 6. Instead, the defendants have a policy and practice of retaining for themselves a portion of these service charges (or using [88] it to pay managers or other non-tipped [328] [*448] employees who do not serve food and beverages).
>
> 7. The defendants do not disclose to the hotel's customers that the service charges are not remitted in full to the employees who serve the food and beverages.
> 8. For this reason, customers are misled into believing that the entire service charge imposed by the defendants is being distributed to the employees who served them food or beverage when, in fact, a smaller percentage is being remitted to the servers. . . .
> . . . .
>
> 9. . . . The class to be certified includes all food and beverage servers who . . . have served food or beverage at meetings, events, banquets, room service or other such instances where the defendants have added a service charge to the bill for food and beverage service, but have not remitted the entire amount of this service charge to the employees serving the food and beverage. . . .
> . . . .
>
> The action of the defendants as set forth above are in violation of [HRS §] 481B-14. Pursuant to Section 481B-4, such violation constitutes an unfair method of competition or unfair and deceptive act or practice within the meaning of Section 480-2. . . .
> . . . .
>
> WHEREFORE, the plaintiffs request [89] this Honorable Court to . . . (2) grant the plaintiffs make whole damage compensating them for the loss of service charge income which they are entitled to receive; . . . and (4) award the plaintiffs any other relief to which they are entitled.

(Emphases added.)

II.

HRS § 481B-4 is clear and unambiguous. "Under the canons of statutory construction, 'where the language of the law in question is plain and unambiguous courts must give effect to the law according to its plain and obvious meaning.'" County of Hawai'i v. C & J Coupe Family Ltd. P'ship, 119 Hawai'i 352, 362, 198 P.3d 615, 625 (2008) (quoting Mikelson v. United Servs. Auto. Ass'n, 108 Hawai'i 358, 360, 120 P.3d 257, 259 (2005)). Thus, "[i]t is well-settled in this jurisdiction that courts turn to legislative history as an interpretive tool only where a statute is unclear or ambiguous." T-Mobile USA, Inc. v. County of Hawaii Planning Comm'n, 106 Hawai'i 343, 352, 104 P.3d 930, 939 (2005) (citing State v. Mueller, 102 Hawai'i 391, 394, 76 P.3d 943, 946 (2003)).

Based on the plain language of HRS § 481B-4, any violation of 481B-14 is a violation of section 480-2(a). The term "deemed" is not defined in HRS chapter 481B. Accordingly, [90] "[t]his court has said that we may resort to legal or other well accepted dictionaries as one way to determine the ordinary meaning of certain terms not statutorily defined." Rapozo v. Better Hearing of Hawaii, LLC, 119 Hawai'i 483, 493, 199 P.3d 72, 82 (2008) (quoting Leslie v. Bd. of Appeals of County of Hawaii, 109 Hawai'i 384, 393, 126 P.3d 1071, 1080 (2006)) (brackets omitted).

Applying that principle, the term "deem" means

1. To treat (something) as if (1) it were really something else, or (2) it has qualities that it does not have <<although the document was not in fact signed until April 21, it explicitly states that it must be deemed to have been signed on April 14>. 2. To consider, think, or judge <<she deemed it necessary>.

> "Deem" has been traditionally considered to be a useful word when it is necessary to establish a legal fiction either positively by 'deeming' something to be what it is not or negatively by 'deeming' something not to be what it is[.]

Black's Law Dictionary 477-78 (8th ed. 2004) (emphasis added). Because it is "deemed," i.e., established, that a violation of HRS chapter 481B and, hence, of HRS § 481B-14, is an "unfair method of competition [(UMOC)] and unfair [91] or deceptive act or practice [(UDAP)]," HRS § 481B-4 renders a violation of HRS § 481B-14, in and of itself, both a UDAP and UMOC. To construe the statute as requiring further allegations or proof of a UDAP or UMOC in addition to the violation would render the term [329] [*449] "deemed" superfluous. "It is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that courts are bound, if rational and practicable, to give effect to all parts of a statute, and that no clause, sentence, or word shall be construed as superfluous, void, or insignificant if a construction can be legitimately found which will give force to and preserve all the words of the statute." Camara v. Agsalud, 67 Haw. 212, 215-16, 685 P.2d 794, 797 (1984) (citing In re Ainoa, 60 Haw. 487, 490, 591 P.2d 607, 609 (1979)); Lopez v. Bd. of Trustees, 66 Haw. 127, 657 P.2d 1040 (1983)). In order to give full effect to HRS § 481B-4, the phrase "shall be deemed" must be construed as establishing a UMOC violation. The drafters of HRS § 481B-4 did not insert conditional language or provide any additional limitations on access to the remedies in HRS § 480-13 (2008 Repl.) after a "deemed" UMOC violation has been established. Rather, the plain language of [92] the statute demonstrates an intent to allow those who have suffered a violation under HRS § 481B-14 to bring an action to enforce their rights under HRS § 480-13. The majority's construction of HRS § 481B-4 deprives the statute of its force and undermines the legislature's manifest intent in enacting the law.

Consequently, based on the plain language of HRS § 481B-4, the amended complaint need not allege any fact to establish Defendants' liability under HRS § 481B-14, other than a violation. In the amended complaint, Plaintiffs have alleged that Defendants have collected service charges relating to the sale of food or beverages but did not distribute the entire service charges directly to their employees and did not disclose this fact to the purchasers. Taking the allegations in the amended complaint as true, as this court is required to do, Plaintiffs have alleged a manifest violation of HRS § 481B-14. [3]

III.

A.

As to other matters raised by the parties, HRS § 480-2 explains who may bring an action for engaging in an unfair or deceptive act or practice or unfair method of competition. In relevant part HRS § 480-2 states:

> (a) Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful.
>
> . . . .
>
> (d) No person other than a consumer, the attorney general or the director of the office of consumer protection may bring an action based upon unfair or deceptive acts or practices declared unlawful by this section.
>
> (e) Any person may bring an action based on unfair methods of competition declared unlawful by this section.

(Emphases added.) HRS § 481B-4 allows a violation of HRS § 481B-14 to be brought as a UMOC action and a UDAP action. As a result, under HRS 480-2(d), a suit for the failure to remit tips may be brought by a consumer, the attorney general, or the director of the Office of Consumer Affairs as a UDAP. In contrast, any "person" is entitled to

---

[3] It should be noted that, at oral argument, Defendants conceded that portions of the service charge were not distributed to the servers as tip income and that notice of this practice was not given to the customers to whom the service charge was applied. Defendants also asserted that [93] this practice has since been changed, and the required HRS § 481B-14 notice given.

bring a UMOC action. As noted before, "person," as defined in HRS § 480-1 includes "individuals[.]" Plaintiffs [94] concede that they cannot bring a UDAP action because they are not "consumers" under HRS 480-2(d). However, Plaintiffs may bring an action against Defendants claiming UMOC inasmuch as employees individually do qualify as "any person" under HRS § 480-2. Thus, Plaintiffs' suit is correctly premised on their status as "individuals" allowed to bring suit as "persons" for a UMOC. HRS § 480-1.

B.

HRS § 480-13, which applies to HRS chapter 480, allows those harmed by either a UDAP or a UMOC to bring an action for damages and to enjoin the illegal practice. HRS 480-13 states in relevant part:

> (a) Except as provided in subsections (b) and (c), any person who is injured in the person's business or property by reason of [330] [*450] anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter:
>
> (1) May sue for damages sustained by the person, and, if the judgment is for the plaintiff, the plaintiff shall be awarded a sum not less than $ 1,000 or threefold damages by the plaintiff sustained, whichever sum is the greater, and reasonable attorney's fees together with the costs of suit . . . and
>
> (2) May bring proceedings to enjoin the unlawful practices, and if the decree is for the plaintiff, the plaintiff shall be awarded [95] reasonable attorney's fees together with the costs of suit.

(Emphasis added.) In the amended complaint, Plaintiffs have alleged that Defendants have collected service charges relating to the sale of food or beverages but did not distribute the entire service charges directly to its employees and did not disclose this fact to the purchasers. Plaintiffs' "Wherefore" clause in the amended complaint alleges that they did not receive the full amount of the service charge levied on purchasers. Taking the allegations as true, the language in HRS § 480-13 permitting a suit based on injuries to "business or property" manifestly includes the economic loss of withheld tip income. Because the disclosure was not made, the tip income did not belong to Defendants. If Plaintiffs are not recompensed as indicated under the statute, a windfall would accrue to Defendants by virtue of a violation of HRS § 481B-14. [4]

C.

The statutes also mandate that the courts look to federal case law when interpreting HRS chapter 480. HRS § 480-3 (2008 Repl.), entitled [96] "Interpretation," provides that "[t]his chapter shall be construed in accordance with judicial interpretations of similar federal antitrust statutes, except that lawsuits by indirect purchasers may be brought as provided in this chapter." HRS § 480-2(b) states that > [i]n construing this section, the courts and the office of consumer protection shall give due consideration to the rules, regulations, and decisions of the Federal Trade Commission [(FTC)] and the federal courts interpreting section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act [(FTCA)] (15 U.S.C. 45(a)(1)), as from time to time amended.

Moreover, HRS § 480-13 was modeled after section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), and, pursuant to HRS § 480-3, must be construed in light of federal decisions. However, HRS § 481B-14 contains no federal analogue and, as the statutory language indicates, was not enacted simply to prevent anti-competitive conduct that affects consumers and businesses, but was specifically intended to address the direct injuries to the "business and property" of employees such as Plaintiffs, caused by withholding service charges. See discussion infra. The enforcement provisions in HRS § 480-13 must also [97] be construed in light of the purpose of HRS § 481B-14. Thus, federal law is not a bar to Plaintiffs' action and a plain language construction of HRS § 481B-14 does not contravene HRS § 480-2(b) or HRS § 480-3.

D.

---

[4] As noted at oral argument, "consumers" and other "persons" may also sue, and an equitable apportionment of damages may be required in any particular case.

Defendants argue that "[i]f [Plaintiffs] are correct that [HRS] § 481B-14 was intended to create a wage claim for employees, it is strikingly - if not unconstitutionally - vague." [5] Defendants assert that the statute [331] [*451] "does not specify which employees should be paid the service charge as tip income." In other words, Defendants argue "the plain language of the statute allows the employer to pick any employee to receive the monies [derived from the service charge] in any amount."

However, HRS § 481B-14 is not vague. The text mandates that the hotel or restaurant "shall distribute the service charge directly to its employees as tip income[.]" HRS § 481B-14 (emphasis added). Although "tip" or "tip income" is not defined in HRS chapter 481B, the dictionary definition in this context is "a gift or a usu[ally] small [99] sum of money tendered in payment or often in excess of prescribed or suitable payment for a service performed or anticipated." Webster's Third New Int'l Dictionary 2398 (1961).

"[T]o constitute a deprivation of due process, [the civil statute] must be 'so vague and indefinite as really to be no rule or standard at all.'" Paul v. Dep't of Transp., State of Haw., 115 Hawai'i 416, 431, 168 P.3d 546, 561 (2007) (quoting A.B. Small v. Am. Sugar Refining, 267 U.S. 233, 239, 45 S. Ct. 295, 69 L. Ed. 589 (1925)). "To paraphrase, uncertainty in this statute is not enough for it to be unconstitutionally vague; rather, it must be substantially incomprehensible." Id. (citation omitted). Inasmuch as the tip is a gratuity given for service to those who perform such service and the service charge is to be distributed as tip income, it is manifest that the "service charge for the sale of food or beverage services," HRS § 481B-14, is to be given to the employees who provided that service. Hence, the term "employee" cannot be reasonably construed as "allow[ing] the employer to pick any employee to receive the monies in any amount," as Defendants argue. Defendants have not demonstrated a sufficient ambiguity or potential for misunderstanding [100] inherent in the term "employee" as it relates to the term "tip income." See also Tauese v. State, Dept. of Labor & Indus. Relations, 113 Hawai'i 1, 28 n.27, 147 P.3d 785, 812 n.27 (2006) ("Because this term is easily definable and allows a person of ordinary intelligence to obtain an adequate description of the prohibited conduct, the statute is not unconstitutionally vague."). Consequently, this argument is unpersuasive.

E.

Briefly summarized, Plaintiffs have alleged in their amended complaint that Defendants have violated HRS § 481B-14. HRS § 481B-4 permits all violations in chapter 481B to be brought as a UDAP and a UMOC pursuant to HRS § 480-2(d) and (e). Plaintiffs do not qualify as "consumers" to bring a UDAP action under 480-2(d), but do qualify individually as "any person" under HRS § 480-2(e), permitting them to bring a UMOC action against Defendants, provided they allege an injury to their business or property pursuant to HRS § 480-13. Plaintiffs have satisfied HRS § 480-13, which encompasses HRS chapter 480 and permits suits for money damages resulting from UMOC, by adequately pleading an economic injury. [6]

IV.

---

[5] The majority states that it declines to address this matter because it "does not relate to the issue of whether or not employees have standing under HRS § 480-2(e) to bring a claim for damages for a violation of HRS § 481B-14, but instead relates to the merits of such a claim." Majority opinion at 11 n.13. However, the certified question states that "[t]he [c]ourt's phrasing of the question should not restrict the [Hawai'i Supreme Court's] consideration of the problems and issues involved." Certified question [98] at 5 (citing Allstate Ins. Co. v. Alamo Rent-A-Car, Inc., 137 F.3d 634, 637 (9th Cir. 1998). Moreover, this court is not required to limit itself to the question certified. See Richardson v. City & County of Honolulu, 76 Hawai'i 46, 53, 868 P.2d 1193, 1200 (1994) (addressing the issue of whether the City of Honolulu had authority to enact an ordinance despite the fact that the question was "not expressly placed in issue by the federal court's certified question"). Also, whether Plaintiffs have "standing" in this case is substantially related to whether they are included in the category of employees described in HRS § 481B-14, a proposition Defendants argue is constitutionally barred. Finally, the constitutionality of the statute as disputed between the parties is obviously germane to the viability of the proceeding in federal court. Thus, it is addressed.

[6] Plaintiffs argue that they believe if the nature of the competition [101] must be pled, they can amend their complaint. However, that would not resolve the case law in this jurisdiction with respect to the application of the term "deemed" in HRS § 481B-4.

However, the majority requires that Plaintiffs allege "the nature of the competition" before they may bring a UMOC action for a violation of HRS § 481B-14 and, therefore, concludes that the amended complaint must be dismissed. The majority bases this additional requirement on four grounds: (1) the application of HRS § 480-13; (2) its interpretation of Hawaii Medical Ass'n v. Hawaii Medical Service Ass'n, 113 Hawai'i 77, 148 P.3d 1179 (2006) [hereinafter, "HMA"] and [332] [*452] certain other Hawai'i cases, (3) the legislative history of HRS § 481B-14, and (4) federal cases addressing federal antitrust law provisions.

A.

With respect to the first ground, the majority contends that "[t]he requirement that the plaintiff allege the 'nature of the competition' in [a UMOC] claim is distinct from the requirement that a defendant's conduct constituted [a UMOC]." Majority opinion at 38. According to the majority, the necessity that Plaintiffs plead a UMOC "stems from HRS § 480-2(a), which provides that" UMOCs are unlawful. Id. [102] The majority maintains that a plaintiff must also demonstrate that harm is "a result of actions of the defendant that negatively affect competition [] derived from HRS § 480-13(a)'s language that 'any person who is injured in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter . . . [m]ay sue for damages[.]" Id. at 39 (emphasis in original). The majority asserts that Plaintiffs have not met this burden.

To the contrary, Plaintiffs have met the requirements that they plead both a UMOC and an injury "by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by" HRS chapter 480. Plaintiffs have pled a UMOC in alleging that Defendants violated HRS § 481B-14 by withholding monies accrued from the service charge without notifying customers of that fact. The failure to distribute the service charge is unlawful inasmuch HRS § 481B-4 "deems" it a UMOC in violation of HRS § 480-2(e). Thus, Plaintiffs have alleged that Defendants' conduct constituted a UMOC.

Plaintiffs have also pled a resulting injury to "business or property by reason of" actions declared unlawful by HRS chapter 480. As stated previously, HRS 481B-4 specifically "deems" Defendants' [103] alleged conduct "an unfair method of competition . . . in the conduct of any trade or commerce within the meaning of section 480-2." (Emphasis added.) In paragraphs 5, 6, 9 and in the "Wherefore" clause of the amended complaint, Plaintiffs have alleged an injury to their "business or property" in the loss of income stemming directly from Defendants' failure to distribute the entire service charge or to notify customers that they were doing so. HRS § 480-13. According to the plain language of HRS § 480-13(a), a plaintiff who has demonstrated an injury that stems directly from the unlawful UMOC is entitled to sue for money damages and injunctive relief.

Thus, there is a direct causal link between the injury to property and the acts "forbidden or declared unlawful by" HRS chapter 480 on the face of the amended complaint. As noted before, to construe the statute as requiring plaintiffs to allege the "nature of the competition" in addition to a per se UMOC violation renders the term "deemed" superfluous.

B.

1.

As to the second ground, the majority derives from HMA the requirement that Plaintiffs allege the "nature of the competition" before they may bring a UMOC action. In HMA, a plaintiff [104] medical group consisting of physicians had entered into an agreement with defendant Hawai'i Medical Service Association (HMSA), to provide medical care to HMSA plan members at reduced rates. 113 Hawai'i at 81, 148 P.3d at 1183. The HMA physicians alleged that HMSA had engaged in unfair methods of competition in violation of HRS § 480-2(e). Id. at 82, 148 P.3d at 1184.

HMA determined that the plaintiffs' allegations against the defendants consisted of UDAP claims, which could only be brought by consumers. However, HMA allowed plaintiffs to bring a UMOC action for claims that would also support a UDAP action, provided the plaintiffs, in addition to identifying a UMOC, also alleged how their injury stemmed from the anti-competitive act, i.e., the "nature of the competition." Id. at 111-13, 148 P.3d 1213-15. The reason for this was to preserve the distinction between unfair methods of competition, on one hand, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices that may also constitute unfair methods of competition, on the other hand. Id. Thus, HMA [333] [*453] said that "the existence of the competition is what distinguishes a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices from a claim of unfair methods of competition." [105] Id. at 112, 148 P.3d at 1214.

According to this court, > notwithstanding . . . our holding that the plaintiffs need not be "competitors" of, or "in competition" with, HMA, the question remains whether the nature of the competition must be sufficiently alleged. Contrary to the dissent, we conclude that it does because, in the absence of such allegations, the distinction between claims of unfair or deceptive acts or practices and claims of unfair methods of competition that are based upon such acts or practices would be lost where both claims are based on unfair and deceptive acts or practices. In other words, the existence of the competition is what distinguishes a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices from a claim of unfair methods of competition.

Id. at 111-12, 148 P.3d at 1213-14 (emphases in original and emphases added). Otherwise, "[t]he distinction between a claim of unfair and deceptive acts or practices and a claim of unfair methods of competition that are based upon such acts or practices would be lost[.]" Id. at 111, 148 P.3d at 1213. This motivated the majority in HMA to require allegations that "sufficiently allege unfair competition claims" based upon "conduct that [106] would also support claims of unfair or deceptive acts or practices[.]" Id. at 111, 148 P.3d at 1213 (emphasis added). But that distinction is not controlling here.

The differentiation in HMA is wholly irrelevant under the plain language and inherent legislative intent of HRS §§ 481B-14 and 481B-4. See State v. Buch, 83 Hawai'i 308, 326, 926 P.2d 599, 617 (1996) ("This court derives legislative intent primarily from the language of the statute and follows the general rule that[,] in the absence of clear legislative intent to the contrary, the plain meaning of the statute will be given effect.") (Citing State v. Akina, 73 Haw. 75, 78, 828 P.2d 269, 271 (1992).)) (Brackets omitted.) HRS § 481B-4 renders the distinction and hence, any allegations of the "nature of the competition" unnecessary inasmuch as a violation of HRS § 481B-14, by virtue of HRS § 481B-4, establishes both a UDAP and UMOC under HRS § 480-2. Hence, no allegations in the amended complaint are necessary to draw the distinction made in HMA. Even if the word "and" in HRS § 481B-4 ("unfair method of competition and unfair or deceptive act or practice" (emphasis added)) is read as "or," the result is the same. In that event [107] the violation would qualify as either a UDAC or a UMOC. [7]

Under the facts of this case, allegations of competition are unnecessary because unlike in HMA, here the violation of HRS § 481B-4 established that the conduct, i.e., non-disclosure, was sufficient itself to constitute, i.e., be deemed, both an unfair and deceptive act or practice and unfair method of competition. In contrast, HMA did not involve conduct that the legislature had by statute deemed a per se UMOC. Rather, HMA allowed the plaintiffs to bring a UMOC action based on UDAP claims to demonstrate that anti-competitive conduct caused their injury. Hence, HMA is not determinative in this situation. Inasmuch as in the instant case a violation is deemed to be an unfair and deceptive act or practice and (or for the sake of argument, "or") an unfair method of competition, there is no requirement or need to distinguish between unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts that may also constitute unfair methods of competition.

Nevertheless, the majority maintains that the distinction between UDAP and UMOC claims is still relevant to the instant [108] case because HMA stated that "'the existence of the competition is what distinguishes a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices from a claim of unfair methods of competition.'" Majority opinion at 36 n.26 (quoting HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 112, 148 P.3d at 1214). Thus, according to the majority, the pleading requirement of HMA "is based on the differences in the nature of the underlying causes of action." Id. at 36 n.26. With all due respect, this view is taken wholly out of context.

[334] [*454] The circuit court in HMA had concluded that, although plaintiffs had brought their action as a UMOC, the claims were actually UDAP and, consequently, dismissed plaintiffs' action. HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 111,

[7] Obviously, as indicated supra, Plaintiffs may only bring a UMOC claim.

148 P.3d at 1213. However, as noted before, this court vacated the dismissal, holding that "plaintiffs may bring claims of [UMOC] based on conduct that would also support claims of [UDAP]." Id. (emphasis added) (citation omitted). In other words, HMA's holding was that UDAP and UMOC could be treated the same, provided that plaintiffs bringing UMOC claims also pled the nature of the competition. Thus, contrary to the majority's argument, the pleading requirement interposed between UDAP and UMOC is not "based [109] on differences in the nature of the underlying causes of action[,]" majority opinion at 36 n.26, but is necessitated in situations where they share a commonality.

Taken at face value, a difference "in nature" between UMOC and UDAP would have prevented this court from regarding the two causes of action under the facts in HMA as interchangeable. HMA expressly focused on whether UDAP claims could also be brought as UMOC claims. Therefore, the "nature of the competition" pleading requirement was to establish that because "a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices" could constitute "a claim of unfair methods of competition[,]" majority opinion at 36 n.26 (citing HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 112, 148 P.3d at 1214), it was necessary in such circumstances that the nature of the competition be alleged.

As previously discussed, HMA simply did not involve the deeming language in HRS § 481B-4. On its face and without qualification, HRS § 481B-4 states that violations of HRS § 481B-14 can be brought both as a UMOC and a UDAP. Thus, the "distinction" thought necessary in HMA is not presented in this case. As a result, there are no "differences in the underlying causes of action" upon which the majority [110] can premise its "pleading requirement." Because it nevertheless does so, the majority disregards the straightforward text of HRS § 481B-4 and, consequently, gives no effect to the legislative mandate that a violation of HRS § 481B-14 is already "deemed" a violation of HRS § 480-2.

2.

The majority further relies on this court's decisions in Ai v. Frank Huff Agency, 61 Haw. 607, 607 P.2d 1304 (1980), and Robert's Hawaii School Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transportation Co., 91 Hawai'i 224, 982 P.2d 853 (1999). The majority states that the "deemed" in § 481B-14 indicates the legislature "'predetermine[d]' that violations of HRS [c]hapter 481B would constitute per se unfair methods of competition for the purposes of § 480-2, and therefore a plaintiff with standing need not prove that conduct which violates HRS [chapter] 481B constitutes an unfair method of competition." Majority opinion at 42-43 (citing Ai, 61 Haw. at 616, 607 P.2d at 1311) (emphasis added). The majority thus excludes from consideration what in fact is a "standing" factor, i.e., that the violation itself establishes the negative impact on competition. HRS § 481B-4. With all due respect, the majority arrives at its position [111] by misconstruing this court's holding in Ai and concluding that "the legislature did not determine that an injury suffered by 'any person' as a result of a violation of chapter 481B necessarily stems from the negative effect on competition caused by the violation." Majority opinion at 43-44 (emphasis in original). According to the majority, "the legislature was not making a determination that any person injured as a result of a violation of [c]hapter 481B automatically has standing to sue pursuant to HRS §[§] 480-2 and 480-13. Instead, a private person must separately allege the nature of the competition in accordance with this court's holding in HMA." Id. at 44. Contrary to the majority's view, the holding in Ai does indeed support the conclusion of automatic standing and in that situation, HMA does not require a separate allegation regarding the nature of the competition. See discussion supra.

Ai involved the violation of HRS § 443-44(8) which "prohibit[ed] a [112] collection agency from making any representation that an existing [335] [*455] obligation of a debtor may be increased by the addition of attorney's fees when in fact such fees may not legally be added to the existing obligation of the debtor." 61 Haw. at 617, 607 P.2d at 1312. Furthermore, according to Ai, HRS § 443-47 established that HRS § 443-44(8) was a "per se" UMOC violation by stating that "[a] violation of this part by a collection agency shall constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce for the purpose of section 480-2." Id. at 615, 607 P.2d 1310-11 (emphasis added). The debtor plaintiffs in Ai alleged a per se violation of HRS § 443-44(8), claiming that the promissory note plaintiffs executed and delivered to defendant contained an illegal provision that plaintiffs would pay attorney's fees at the rate of 33-1/3% -- above the 25% chargeable under the law if a collection suit was filed. Id.

Ai stated that HRS "§ 480-13 establishes four essential elements: (1) a violation of chapter 480; (2) injury to plaintiff's business or property resulting from such violation; (3) proof of the amount of damages; and (4) a [113] showing that the action is in the public interest or that the defendant is a merchant." Id. at 617, 607 P.2d at 1311. Ai went on to decide that the plaintiffs had established a per se violation of the statute in that "[t]he representation that the [attorney fees] obligation of the debtor could be so increased was . . . in violation of § 443-44(8)." Id. at 618, 607 P.2d at 1312. However, Ai explained that, "[w]hile proof of a violation of chapter 480 is an essential element of an action under § 480-13, the mere existence of a violation is not sufficient ipso facto to support the action; forbidden acts cannot be relevant unless they cause private damage." Id. (citation omitted).

Ai concluded that injury under HRS § 480-13 required only a showing of economic loss. "[I]t is unnecessary for plaintiffs to allege commercial or competitive injury in order for plaintiffs to have standing under HRS § 480-13; it is sufficient that plaintiffs allege that injury occurred to personal property through a payment of money wrongfully induced." Id. at 614, 607 P.2d 1310 (citation omitted) (emphasis added). Likewise, in the instant case, a similar showing of injury to personal property is all that is required [114] under the same statute, HRS § 480-13. As noted before, Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that injury.

Ai further concluded that the fourth requirement inherent in HRS § 480-13, i.e., "a showing that the action is in the public interest[,]" had been satisfied because the plaintiffs had "supplied allegations adequate to show that such a per se violation of [§] 480-2 ha[d] occurred." Id. at 617, 607 P.2d at 1311. Thus, under Ai, "the public interest ha[d] been sufficiently made out to confer standing to plaintiffs under [HRS §] 480-13." Id. at 617, 607 P.2d at 1311. The public interest requirement is directly analogous to the majority's requirement that Plaintiffs plead the "nature of competition" inasmuch as both are aimed at addressing the anti-competitive effects of such conduct. However, contrary to the majority's position, the fact that Ai concluded that those harmed by per se violations need not show that the action is in the public interest supports the conclusion that plaintiffs harmed by a per se UMOC violation need not allege the "nature of the competition."

The majority's attempt to rebut the analogy between the "public interest" requirement in Ai and the majority's requirement [115] that the "nature of the competition" be pled is unpersuasive. The majority states that the public interest requirement was satisfied if a plaintiff pleads an effect on competition, or the UMOC "is being employed under circumstances which involve flagrant oppression of the weak by the strong." Majority opinion at 46 (quoting Ai, 61 Haw. at 614, 607 P.2d at 1310). However, the majority maintains that the presence of a second method of satisfying the public interest requirement, i.e., that the unfair methods employed "involve a flagrant oppression of the weak by the strong," id., undermines the analogy. But Ai expressly confirmed that the "public interest" was satisfied by showing a negative effect on competition. Ai, 61 Haw. at 614, 607 P.2d at 1310 ("To justify filing a complaint the public interest must be specific and substantial. Often it is so, because [336] [*456] the unfair method employed threatens the existence of present or potential competition."). Indeed, the majority concedes that the "public interest" requirement is satisfied by alleging a negative effect on competition.

Consequently, that there is an additional means of satisfying the "public interest" in no way affects the analogy. [116] In Ai, this court recognized that either a negative impact on competition or "flagrant oppression of the weak" would satisfy the "public interest" requirement. Id. at 614-15, 607 P.2d at 1310. In other words, the "nature of the competition" prong was encompassed by the "public interest" requirement. Inasmuch as the negative impact on competition described in Ai and encompassed in the public interest requirement is conceptually the same impact that the majority indicates must be pled in the instant case, the requirements are analogous.

However, in Ai, this court concluded that it did not need to determine whether there had been a negative impact on competition or "flagrant oppression of the weak" because there was a per se violation of the statute. Id. at 615, 607 P.2d at 1310-11. As Ai explained, HRS § 443-44(8) established a prohibition against adding interest on attorney's fees in contracts. In that connection, HRS § 443-47 stated that a violation of HRS § 443-44(8) "shall constitute" a UMOC or UDAP. Thus, Ai concluded that an allegation of a violation of HRS § 443-44(8) was sufficient to confer standing upon plaintiffs without any further showing of an effect on the "public interest" [117] by means of a negative impact on competition or oppression of the weak. Id. Moreover, the analysis in Ai made clear that, similar to allegations of an negative impact on competition, a plaintiff need not plead "flagrant oppression of the weak by the strong" to have standing in cases where there was a per se UMOC violation. Id. at 614, 607 P.2d at 1310.

None of the cases the majority cites compels a different conclusion inasmuch as those cases do not involve per se UMOC violations. In T.W. Electrical Service, Inc., v. Pacific Electical Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 636 (1987), the court of appeals for the ninth circuit concluded that plaintiff-contractor's UMOC claim under HRS § 480-2 against a defendant-trade association did not have merit because the defendant was not in competition with the plaintiff. The ninth circuit took note of the "flagrant oppression" prong as satisfying the "public interest" requirement, but did not apply that standard or in any way contradict this court's holding in Ai. In Ailetcher v. Beneficial Finance Co. of Hawaii, 2 Haw. App. 301, 306, 632 P.2d 1071, 1076 (1981), the ICA overturned the directed verdict against plaintiff-business owner who had alleged [118] an unfair practice in violation of HRS § 480-2 against the defendant. The plaintiff had argued that defendant had ordered a halt on all financing transactions at his car dealership, resulting in harm and loss to plaintiff's business. Id. at 303-04, 632 P.2d at 1074. The ICA applied the "flagrant oppression" standard, concluding that the circuit court erred in granting a directed verdict for defendant because plaintiff had presented facts sufficient to support a jury verdict that defendant's acts amounted to a "flagrant oppression of the weak by the strong." Id. at 304-05, 632 P.2d at 1075. However, the ICA expressly distinguished its holding from Ai inasmuch as there was "no statutory violation involved in [that] case." Id. at 306, 632 P.2d at 1076. In other words, Ailetcher did not involve a per se violation of the statute like that in Ai.

The majority also cites Federal Trade Commission v. Klesner, 280 U.S. 19, 50 S. Ct. 1, 74 L. Ed. 138, 13 F.T.C. 581 (1929), which Ai cited for the proposition that the public interest was satisfied by a showing of a "flagrant oppression of the weak by the strong." Id. at 30. In Klesner, the United States Supreme Court concluded that the "flagrant oppression" standard did not apply to the [119] facts before it. Klesner involved an action brought by the FTC against a business owner to enjoin him from using the name "shade shop" "as an identification of the business conducted by him" because that trade name belonged to another business. Id. at 22. The Supreme Court dismissed the FTC's action. Inasmuch as the case involved a purely private dispute between individuals with no discernable effect on competition, it did not satisfy the public interest requirement. [337] [*457] Id. at 30. Additionally, Klesner did not involve "flagrant oppression of the weak by the strong" or any of the issues presented in the instant case. Thus, Klesner does not contradict Ai's holding that an injury to the public interest need not be alleged in per se violations of HRS § 480-2. As a result, the majority's citation to these cases is inapposite inasmuch as the cases are not inconsistent with the central holding of Ai, i.e., that a per se violation of the statute obviates the need to plead a negative impact on competition or oppressive conduct.

The majority's attempt to draw distinctions between effects on "public interest" and "competition" aside, the majority plainly contravenes this court's decision in Ai regarding [120] per se UDAP and UMOC violations despite the presence of nearly identical provisions. Similar to the "deemed" language in HRS § 481B-4, the language in HRS § 443-47 at issue in Ai stated that "[a] violation of this part by a collection agency shall constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce for the purpose of section 480-2." Ai, 61 Haw. at 610 n.5, 607 P.2d at 1308 n.5 (emphasis added). In Ai, the plaintiffs thus established a per se violation of § HRS § 443-44(8), which the legislature had commanded "shall constitute" a violation of 480-2. Id. As noted before, a similar mandate for a violation of HRS § 481B-14 appears in the instant case under HRS § 481B-4. Consequently, as Ai concluded, "[s]ince plaintiffs herein have supplied allegations adequate to show that such a per se violation of § 480-2 has occurred, we accordingly find that the public interest has been sufficiently made out to confer standing to plaintiffs under § 480-13." Id. at 617, 607 P.2d at 1311. Likewise, Plaintiffs here have alleged, via HRS §§ 481B-14 and 481B-4, a "per se violation of HRS § 480-2 sufficient[] to confer standing to [P]laintiffs [121] under [HRS] § 480-13." Id.

Based on the foregoing, the rationale in Ai applies to the instant case. Nonetheless, the majority construes the nearly identical language regarding per se violations to mean that a plaintiff does not need to prove that an act is a UMOC, but must still prove that the UMOC causing plaintiff's injury negatively impacts "competition." If Ai had adopted the majority's construction of "shall constitute," then this court in Ai would have had to require that the plaintiffs additionally allege that the UMOC negatively impacted the "public interest." That obviously was not the case. Rather, Ai unequivocally held that an act that "constitutes" a UMOC violation was "all the law require[d]" to satisfy the "public interest" requirement. Id. at 615, 607 P.2d at 1310-11 (emphasis added). There is no basis for distinguishing the analysis and outcome in Ai from the instant case.

The less stringent requirement for alleging an injury in cases of per se UMOC violations in Ai also distinguishes this court's holding in Robert's Hawaii. Robert's Hawaii stated that the third requirement of HRS § 480-13, i.e., "proof of the amount of damages," Ai, 61 Haw. at 617, 607 P.2d at 1311, [122] sets forth a different requirement than merely injury to "business or property." "Also known as the 'fact of damage' requirement, the antitrust plaintiff need not prove with particularity the full scope of profits that might have been earned. Instead, it requires a showing, with some particularity, of actual damage caused by anticompetitive conduct that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Robert's Hawaii, 91 Hawai'i at 254 n.31, 982 P.2d at 883 n.31 (citation omitted) (emphasis added). However, as stated previously, the legislature has deemed the violation of HRS chapter 481B in the instant case to constitute a UMOC. Contrastingly, Robert's Hawaii did not involve a per se violation of the statute.

C.

With respect to the third ground, the majority's statement that "the legislative history of HRS § 481B-4 does not reflect an intent to eliminate the causation requirement of HRS § 480-13(a)," majority opinion at 40, incorrectly characterizes the importance of the legislature's findings. Similarly, the majority's statement that the legislative history does not reflect an intent "to eliminate the causation requirements of HRS § 480-13," id., misconstrues the issue. As noted previously, [123] the majority's rendering of "the causation requirement of HRS § 480-13" [338] [*458] includes proof that the Plaintiffs' injury stems from the anti-competitive effect of the UMOC. However, in enacting HRS § 481B-14, the legislature emphasized the importance of protecting employees, and through HRS § 481B-4, deemed the violation of the statute a UMOC. The plain language of HRS § 481B-14 evinces the legislature's rationale that if the entire service charge is not distributed to employees, customers should be notified that an additional gratuity would be necessary if their intent was to reward the employees serving them.

From its inception, HRS § 481B-14 related to a perceived injury to employees. Act 16, which became HRS § 481B-14, was entitled "A Bill for an Act Relating to Wages and Tips of Employees." 2000 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 16, § 1 at 21 (emphasis added). "In construing an act, the title may be resorted to for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of the act." Spears v. Honda, 51 Haw. 1, 16-17, 449 P.2d 130, 139 (1968). This court ay also consider the title of a statute in determining the group of individuals primarily covered by the statute. See Moyle v. Y & Y Hyup Shin, Corp., 118 Hawai'i 385, 412, 191 P.3d 1062, 1089 (2008) [124] (Acoba, J., concurring) ("As to the purpose of the [Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act], which is also pertinent to the construction of its language, the title of the statute--the Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act--clearly indicates to whom it is applicable.") (Emphasis added.)) (Citation omitted.) In that regard, the legislature stated that its reason for enacting HRS § 481B-14 was "to require hotels and restaurants that apply a service charge for food or beverage services, not distributed to employees as tip income, to advise customers that the service charge is being used to pay for costs or expenses other than wages and tips of employees." 2000 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 16, § 1 at 22 (emphases added).

The majority's own discussion of the Committee on Commerce and Consumer Protection's findings emphasized that "moneys collected as a service charge are not always distributed to the employees as gratuities and are sometimes used to pay the employer's administrative costs." S. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 3077, in 2000 Senate Journal, at 1287. The majority notes that when employers withhold a portion of the service charge, "the employee does not receive the money intended as a gratuity [125] by the customer, and the customer is misled into believing that the employee has been rewarded for providing good service." Majority opinion at 26 (citing S. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 3077, in 2000 Senate Journal, at 1286-87) (emphasis in original). But the result of the customers being misled was that they may "not leave additional tips for service employees." H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 479-00, in 2000 House Journal, at 1155 (emphasis added). In other words, the deceptive act practiced on the customer resulted in an injury to the employee because the customer's misapprehension of how the employee was compensated meant that the employee was deprived of an intended gratuity. The legislative history does not evince a concern with an injury to a consumer's personal, family, or household purchases, or investment. See HRS § 480-1.

As the legislature explained, "the problem lies with consumers who may not leave tips for the service employees, mistakenly thinking that the service charges they paid were tips, so they did not leave additional tips for service employees." H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 479-00, in 2000 House Journal, at 1155 (emphases added). In light of this history, it would be incongruous [126] to assert, as the majority does, that in addition to alleging injury for an already per se violation of HRS § 480-2(e), Plaintiffs must also allege "actual damage caused by anticompetitive conduct." Majority opinion at 39.

The majority further asserts that the legislature's placement of HRS § 481B-14 "within Hawaii's consumer protection statutes" does not indicate "that the legislature intended to eliminate the causation requirements," majority opinion at 43, that Plaintiffs "allege how [Defendants'] conduct will negatively affect competition in order to recover an [UMOC] claim[,]" id. at 36. As noted above, the legislature deemed a violation of HRS § 481B-14 a UMOC under HRS § 480-2, actionable under HRS § 480-13. The only [339] [*459] "causation" requirement necessary to satisfy HRS § 480-13 is that Plaintiffs' amended complaint allege facts sufficient to establish Defendants' liability under HRS § 481B-14. Plaintiffs have satisfied the necessary causation requirement because they have alleged a causal connection between their injury and the violation of HRS § 481B-14. The majority's additional requirement that Plaintiffs allege that their injury stems from the anti-competitive effect of the UMOC [127] is not present in the plain language of HRS §§ 480-13 or 481B-4 and not expressed in the legislative history.

D.

With respect to the fourth ground, the majority relies on federal court interpretations of federal statutes. The majority notes that, although HRS § 480-2 is based on Section 5 of the FTCA, the difference between the two statutes is that the former contains a private right of action, whereas the latter vests enforcement with the FTC. Majority opinion at 51 (citing HMA, 113 Hawai'i at 109, 148 P.3d at 1211). Thus, according to the majority, "federal interpretations of the FTCA, although helpful in determining whether a defendant's actions constitute [a UDAP] or [a UMOC], are of limited relevance in interpreting the standing requirements applicable to the private right of action provided by HRS § 480-2(e)." Id. at 53. The majority also points out that HRS § 480-13 is derived from section 4 of the Clayton Act, which states that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor[.]" 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). The majority argues that, as a result, this court must follow federal case law requiring plaintiffs [128] show "antitrust injury," "which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, (1990) (citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)).

According to the majority, "[t]he antitrust requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of defendant's behavior." Majority opinion at 56 (citing Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 344) (emphasis in original). However, as discussed previously, the "deemed" provision of HRS § 481B-14 obviates the need for Plaintiffs to allege a "competition reducing" effect inasmuch as such behavior is deemed to be anti-competitive. When an act is deemed to constitute a UMOC, the plaintiff is left to allege an injury that stems directly from that UMOC and damages. Thus, requiring that Plaintiffs demonstrate their injury stems from the anti-competitive effect of HRS § 481B-14 renders the term "deemed" in HRS § 481B-4 superfluous. Furthermore, as noted before, the legislative history of 481B-14 demonstrates that the legislature [129] was not simply concerned with the anti-competitive effect of the conduct on consumers and businesses; but, rather, took into account the direct effect of such conduct on employees. See S. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 3077, in 2000 Senate Journal, at 1286-87. As such, the federal requirement that plaintiffs demonstrate an antitrust injury even in cases of per se violations is not controlling.

Additionally, as the majority recognizes, "Atlantic Richfield involved a judicially recognized per se antitrust violation, whereas the per se violation of Hawai'i antitrust law in this case is established by HRS § 481B-14." Majority opinion at 56 n.33. However, the majority is incorrect in asserting that "this distinction has no bearing on the underlying analysis for the antitrust injury requirement in the circumstances here[.]" Id. Inasmuch as the legislative intent evinces concerns for economic injury to employees, this court must give due consideration to those concerns, especially since federal precedent does not contain any analogous provision to HRS §§ 481B-4 and 481B-14 or reflect the same concerns. The absence in federal case law and statutes of the considerations that motivated the legislature [130] in enacting HRS § 481B-14 is manifest grounds for distinguishing such case law from the instant case.

[340] [*460] E.

Finally, under our pleading rules anti-competitive conduct is readily apparent on the face of the amended complaint.[8] As Plaintiffs state:

---

[8] Plaintiffs' amended complaint reiterated in pertinent part, states as follows:

I. INTRODUCTION

. . . As set forth below, the [D]efendants have imposed a service charge on the sale of certain food and beverage . . . but have failed to distribute the total proceeds of the service charge to these employees as tip income, as required by Hawaii law. This conduct violates [HRS §] 481B-14 and is actionable under [§§] 481B-4, 480-2, and 480-13. . . .

. . . .

III. PARTIES

. . . .

2. . . . This class is brought pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and [HRS §] 480-13. . . .

. . . .

IV. FACTS

4. For banquets, events, meetings and in other instances, the [D]efendants add a preset service charge to customers' bills for food and beverage provided at the hotels.

5. However, the [D]efendants do not remit the total proceeds of the service charge as tip income to the employees who serve the food and beverages.

6. Instead, the [D]efendants [132] have a policy and practice of retaining for themselves a portion of these service charges (or using it to pay managers or other non-tipped employees who do not serve food and beverages).

7. The [D]efendants do not disclose to the hotel's customers that the service charges are not remitted in full to the employees who serve the food and beverages.

. . . .

V. CLASS ACTION ALLEGATIONS

9. This section is properly maintainable as a class action pursuant to [HRS §] 480-13 and Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. . . .

. . . .

COUNT I

([HRS §§] 481B-14, 481B-4, and 480-2)

The action of the [D]efendants as set forth above are in violation of [HRS §] 481B-14. Pursuant to Section 481B-4, such violation constitutes an unfair method of competition or unfair and deceptive act or practice within the meaning of Section 480-2. Section 480-2(e) permits an action based on such unfair methods of competition to be brought in the appropriate court, and a class action for such violation is permitted and authorized by Section 480-13 and Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

(Boldfaced font in original.) (Emphases added.)

> Indeed, it is obvious that if one hotel obeys the laws and remits the entire service charge to the employees serving at the banquet and another hotel/competitor skims the service charge and keeps 4-5% for itself without disclosure, the hotel acting unlawfully can undercut its stated price for the banquet knowing that it will be receiving improper gains from the misleading description of its service charge. This is clearly a form of unfair competition.

(Emphases added.) Thus, not only is the majority's additional pleading requirement wrong in light of HRS § 481B-4, it contravenes this court's notice pleading case law concerning liberal construction of pleadings. See Henderson v. Prof'l Coatings Corp., 72 Haw. 387, 399, 819 P.2d 84, 92 (1991) ("Pleadings should not be construed technically when determining what the pleader is attempting to set forth but should be construed liberally so as to do substantial justice.") (Citation omitted.); Perry v. Planning Comm'n, 62 Haw. 666, 685, 619 P.2d 95, 108 (1980) [131] ("Modern judicial pleading has been characterized as 'simplified notice pleading.' Its function is to give opposing parties 'fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" (Quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957).)).

Furthermore, the majority's suggestion that an effect on competition is [133] not related by the amended complaint is incorrect inasmuch as illegal competition may reasonably be inferred from the facts and the claims alleged. See supra note 8. Defendants facing allegations that they have engaged in methods of competition that are unfair, as described in the amended complaint, are, by dint of the allegations, given sufficient notice of the nature of the competition affected. Courts construing such allegations are required to view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. See Jou v. Dai-Tokyo Royal State Ins. Co., 116 Hawai'i 159, 164, 172 P.3d 471, 476 (2007) ("We must therefore view a plaintiff's complaint in a light most favorable to him or her in order to determine whether the allegations contained therein could warrant relief under any alternative [341] [*461] theory." (Quoting In re Estate of Rogers, 103 Hawai'i 275, 280-81, 81 P.3d 1190, 1195-96 (2003).)). As noted before, dismissal is appropriate only when it "appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his or her claim that would entitle him or her to relief." Rogers, 103 Hawai'i at 280, 81 P.3d at 1195 (citations omitted). Viewing the amended complaint in the light most [134] favorable to the Plaintiffs, it cannot reasonably be concluded that under the amended complaint Plaintiffs will be unable to "prove no set of facts," id. (emphasis added), i.e., a causal connection between the injury plaintiffs suffered and the UMOC, as their case progresses. Hence, requiring Plaintiffs to allege more is also inconsistent with this court's jurisprudence.

V.

Tracing the statutory language relevant to an action based on UMOC, Plaintiffs have set forth facts in their amended complaint sufficient to sustain their action against Defendants and are not required to allege the nature of the competition. Therefore, answering the certified question in the affirmative, I would hold that Plaintiffs' amended complaint should not be dismissed and that Defendants' motion to dismiss should be denied.

End of Document

Fox v. Good Samaritan L.P.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California, San Jose Division

March 29, 2010, Decided; March 29, 2010, Filed

No. C 04-0874 RS

Reporter

801 F. Supp. 2d 883 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29768 **

RICHARD B. FOX, Plaintiff, v. GOOD SAMARITAN L.P., et al, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion to vacate denied by, Motion denied by Fox v. Good Samaritan L.P., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70447 (N.D. Cal., June 30, 2010)

Affirmed by Fox v. Good Samaritan Hosp. LP, 467 Fed. Appx. 731, 2012 U.S. App. LEXIS 2229 (9th Cir. Cal., 2012)

Related proceeding at Fox v. HCA Holdings, Inc., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 151282 (N.D. Cal., Nov. 4, 2015)

Prior History: Fox v. Good Samaritan Hosp. LP, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111023 (N.D. Cal., July 17, 2008)

Core Terms

privileges, summary judgment, immunity, circumstances, antitrust, patients, damages, notice, summary judgment motion, defendants', pleadings, competence, suspension, contends, triable issue of fact, motion to dismiss, direct liability, loyalty oath, non-moving, undisputed, pediatric, suspend, argues, entity, second amended complaint, supplemental briefing, motion for judgment, material fact, patient care, retaliation

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment is proper if the pleadings and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The purpose of summary judgment is to isolate and dispose of factually unsupported claims or defenses.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN2[] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

The moving party always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its summary judgment motion, and identifying those portions of the pleadings and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN3[] Burdens of Proof, Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

If the moving party meets its burden, then the non-moving party must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). The non-moving party cannot defeat the moving party's properly supported motion for summary judgment simply by alleging some factual dispute between the parties. To preclude the entry of summary judgment, the non-moving party must bring forth material facts, i.e., facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law. Factual disputes that are irrelevant or unnecessary will not be counted. The opposing party must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN4[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Summary judgment will not lie if the dispute about a material fact is genuine, that is, if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. However, where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, there is no genuine issue for trial.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN5[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

See 42 U.S.C.S. § 11101(4).

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN6[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

The Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11101 et seq., plainly contemplates situations where a peer review committee has prompted an action against a physician's privileges based on concerns regarding the competency of the particular physician in question.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN7[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

See 42 U.S.C.S. § 11151(9).

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN8[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

See 42 U.S.C.S. § 11151(10).

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN9[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

The statutory definition in 42 U.S.C.S. § 11151(9) is disjunctive--it applies to decision relating to competence or professional conduct.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN10[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

42 U.S.C.S. § 11151(9)(D) excludes from the definition of "professional review action" any privileging decision based on a physician's association with, supervision of, delegation of authority to, support for, training of, or participation in a private group practice with, a member or members of a particular class of health care practitioner or professional. While the provision is certainly directed at excluding from statutory protection any privileging decision based on a physician's professional associations, it cannot be stretched to encompass the application of a rule which, by its terms, does not mandate the designation or exclusion of any particular doctor or group.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN11[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

42 U.S.C.S. § 11111 provides, among other things, that a professional review action will only qualify for immunity if it meets all the standards specified in 42 U.S.C.S. § 11112(a). Section 11112(a), in turn, requires that a professional review action must be taken (1) in the reasonable belief that the action was in the furtherance of quality health care; (2) after a reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter; (3) after adequate notice and hearing procedures are afforded to the physician involved or after such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances; and (4) in the reasonable belief that the action was warranted by the facts known after such reasonable effort to obtain facts and after meeting the requirement of § 11112(a)(3). Section 11112(a) goes on to provide that a professional review action shall be presumed to have met the preceding standards unless the presumption is rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN12[] Appellate Review, Standards of Review

As the Ninth Circuit has explained, because the reasonableness requirements of 42 U.S.C.S. § 11112(a) were intended to create an objective standard, rather than a subjective standard, this inquiry may be resolved on summary judgment. Moreover, the rebuttable presumption creates a somewhat unusual standard of review for summary judgment because the inquiry focuses on whether the plaintiff has provided sufficient evidence to permit a jury to find that he has overcome, by a preponderance of the evidence, the presumption that physicians in the defendants' position would reasonably have believed that their action was warranted by the facts. Evidence of bad faith or hostility towards the plaintiff on the part of the actual decision-makers is simply irrelevant and cannot serve to create a material issue of fact on this point.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN13[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

42 U.S.C.S. § 11112(b) lists procedures that will be deemed to satisfy § 11112(a), if provided. Section 11112(b), however, only provides a safe harbor--it also expressly provides that a failure to comply with all of its provisions shall not, in itself, constitute failure to meet the standards of § 11112(a). The text of § 11112(a) itself reveals that not even adequate notice and hearing procedures--much less all those specified in § 11112(b)--are necessarily required. Rather, such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances will suffice in appropriate circumstances. A hearing regarding a physician's suspension is not necessary in all circumstances for Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11101 et seq., immunity to apply. Rather, the statutory language, "such other procedures as are fair under the circumstances," reflects a congressional intent that a physician be afforded adequate and fair procedures with regard to professional review actions, which could be something other than a formal hearing in some circumstances.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN14[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11101 et seq., a hospital must report to the Board of Medical Examiners whenever it takes a professional review action that adversely affects the clinical privileges of a physician for a period longer than 30 days. 42 U.S.C.S. § 11133(a)(1)(A).

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN15[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

See 42 U.S.C.S. § 11111(b).

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN16[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Under 42 U.S.C.S. § 11111(b), failure to report can result in a loss of the protections provided by the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11101 et seq., against damages claims, but only after an involved investigation by governmental authorities and publication in the Federal Register. The failure to report in a specific case does not automatically result in a loss of immunity in that particular case.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN17[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Where the only evidence presented is of subjective biases or motives, it does not overcome the presumption of immunity under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11101 et seq.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN18[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, Health Care Quality Improvement Act

42 U.S.C.S. § 11111 once included a provision that § 11111(a) did not apply to state laws in a state for actions commenced on or after October 14, 1989, if the state by legislation elected such treatment. Congress, however, revoked that option in 1987.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN19[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

There is nothing that precludes a defendant from seeking to adjudicate by summary judgment issues that survived a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 motion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN20[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot. Of course, this does not mean summary judgment should never be granted with respect to antitrust issues.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN21[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

While a summary judgment motion does go beyond the pleadings in the sense that it tests the sufficiency of the evidence to support the allegations of the complaint, those allegations still serve to frame--and limit--the issues. For the same reason, it is not correct to say that a summary judgment motion should be deemed a motion for judgment on the pleadings simply because the movant has focused on those elements of the complaint that survived a motion to dismiss. In either a motion to dismiss or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the allegations of the complaint are presumed true, and the only question is whether those allegations would support liability. At summary judgment, however, the question is whether the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. The question is not whether there are other unpleaded facts or theories which might support liability.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Existence > Distinct & Separate Legal Entity

HN22[] Existence, Distinct & Separate Legal Entity

Without facts supporting an inference that the challenged conduct was undertaken for the benefit of the parent company, a party cannot overcome the presumption that an individual is wearing the hat of the subsidiary when conducting the business of the subsidiary.

Counsel: [1] For M.D. Richard B. Fox, Plaintiff: James A. Hennefer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hennefer & Wood, San Francisco, CA; Joseph H. C. Wood, Attorney at Law, San Francisco, CA.

For Good Samaritan Hospital Medical Staff, a California unincorporated association, Defendant: David Lee Perrault, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hardy Erich Brown and Wilson, A Professional Law Corporation, Sacramento, CA; Michael Li-Ming Wong, LEAD ATTORNEY, Thad Alan Davis, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA; Amy E Craig, PRO HAC

VICE, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA; David C. Hall, Hall Prangle & Schoonveld, LLC, Chicago, IL; Eric Peter Schoonveld, Hall Prangle & Schoonvled, LLC, Chicago, IL; Jane Allison Stevens, East Palo Alto, CA; Mary Kelly Persyn, PRO HAC VICE, Ropes & Gray, San Francisco, CA.

For Good Samaritan Hospital LP, a Delaware Limited Partnership, Defendant: David C. Hall, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hall Prangle & Schoonveld, LLC, Chicago, IL; David Lee Perrault, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hardy Erich Brown and Wilson, A Professional Law Corporation, Sacramento, CA; Michael Li-Ming Wong, LEAD ATTORNEY, Thad Alan Davis, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA; Amy E Craig, PRO HAC VICE, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA; Mary Kelly Persyn, PRO HAC [2] VICE, Ropes & Gray, San Francisco, CA.

For Samaritan, LLC, a Delaware limited liability company, Defendant: David Lee Perrault, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hardy Erich Brown and Wilson, A Professional Law Corporation, Sacramento, CA; Amy E Craig, PRO HAC VICE, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA; Mary Kelly Persyn, PRO HAC VICE, Ropes & Gray, San Francisco, CA; Thad Alan Davis, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For HCA, Inc, a Delaware corporation, Defendant: David C. Hall, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hall Prangle & Schoonveld, LLC, Chicago, IL; David Lee Perrault, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hardy Erich Brown and Wilson, A Professional Law Corporation, Sacramento, CA; Michael Li-Ming Wong, Thad Alan Davis, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA; Adam C Kiehne, George Albert Shannon, Jr., Megan Dean Richardson, Shannon Martin Finkelstein & Alvarado, P.C., Houston, TX; Alicia M. Matsuhima, Shannon Martin Finkelstein & Alvarado, Houston, TX; Carlos A. Mattioli, Elizabeth D. Alvarado, Houston, TX.

For William Piche, Defendant: David C. Hall, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hall Prangle & Schoonveld, LLC, Chicago, IL; David Lee Perrault, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hardy Erich Brown and Wilson, A Professional Law Corporation, Sacramento, CA; [3] Michael Li-Ming Wong, LEAD ATTORNEY, Thad Alan Davis, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For M.D. Paul N Beaupre, Defendant: David Lee Perrault, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hardy Erich Brown and Wilson, A Professional Law Corporation, Sacramento, CA; Michael Li-Ming Wong, LEAD ATTORNEY, Thad Alan Davis, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA; David C. Hall, Hall Prangle & Schoonveld, LLC, Chicago, IL.

For M.D. Arthur W Douville, M.D. Kenneth I Tan, Defendants: Michael Li-Ming Wong, LEAD ATTORNEY, Thad Alan Davis, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA; David C. Hall, Hall Prangle & Schoonveld, LLC, Chicago, IL; David Lee Perrault, Hardy Erich Brown and Wilson, Sacramento, CA.

For Mark S McConnell, Defendant: Michael A. Hurwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Michael A. Hurwitz, San Jose, CA; Michael Li-Ming Wong, LEAD ATTORNEY, Thad Alan Davis, Ropes & Gray LLP, San Francisco, CA; David C. Hall, Hall Prangle & Schoonveld, LLC, Chicago, IL; David Lee Perrault, Hardy Erich Brown and Wilson, Sacramento, CA.

Judges: RICHARD SEEBORG, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: RICHARD SEEBORG

Opinion

[*885] ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

I. INTRODUCTION

This action had its genesis in 1999 when plaintiff Richard B. Fox, who [4] by all accounts is a highly competent and well respected pediatrician, had his privileges to practice at Good Samaritan Hospital ("GSH") suspended. The ostensible basis for that action was Fox's refusal to comply with a then newly imposed rule requiring pediatricians to designate as "back-ups" two physicians holding privileges identical to those of the applying physician. Fox insists, however, that the true reasons for the adoption of the rule and its application to him were, (1) to retaliate against him for his having advocated patients rights and for criticizing some elements of patient care at the hospital in instances dating back to 1992, and (2) an effort by the [*886] hospital to impose a monopoly in the provision of pediatric intensive care services.

A decade of litigation has followed, both in the state courts and here, the tortuous history of which has been amply described in prior orders and need not be recounted. The Court is keenly aware of the significant resources the parties, and a number of courts, including this one, have devoted to this matter. Nevertheless, it has become apparent in this final wave of motion practice that Congress has by statute unambiguously and definitively [5] barred plaintiffs in Fox's position from recovering damages in actions like this, under the circumstances that exist here. Additionally, GSH's corporate parent, defendant HCA, Inc., has shown that under the undisputed facts and the Court's prior orders, there is no basis for imposing liability against it in any event. Accordingly, summary judgment will be entered in favor of all defendants.

II. BACKGROUND

The general factual and procedural background of these consolidated actions has been exhaustively set forth in numerous prior orders, and will not be repeated here. In a nutshell, Fox practiced pediatric pulmonology and pediatric critical care medicine at GSH as a member of its medical staff beginning in 1989. Fox's privileges to practice were subject to renewal every two years. In April 1999, GSH's Medical Staff Executive Committee, on recommendation of the Credentials Committee and the Department of Pediatrics, adopted the "identical privileges" rule, requiring that a physician's designated "back-ups" hold the same set of privileges as the applicant. [1] Fox declined to comply with the rule, resulting in the suspension of his privileges in June of 1999, "until such time as documentation [6] of call coverage by providers with identical privileges has been provided or a written request for waiver by the Staff Executive Committee has been approved." Although Fox was successful in having his privileges restored at certain later points in time, the issue never went away, and Fox no longer practices at GSH.

In 2001, Fox sought a writ of mandate in the state courts. The Santa Clara County Superior Court held that plaintiff was not entitled to a judicial review hearing and that "the alternate call coverage rule is rationally related to improving patient care, and is not arbitrary and capricious." Fox v. Good Samaritan Hosp., No. CV802341 (Cal. Superior Court February 28, 2002). In affirming the trial court, the Sixth District Court of Appeal stated, among other things, that the "Hospital's alternate call coverage rule was based upon 'professional criteria' and was 'uniformly applied to all medical staff applicants and members.'" *Fox v. Good Samaritan Hosp., 2003 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 6902, 2003 WL 21675515 * 5 (Cal. Ct. App. July 18, 2003)*. [7] This action followed in 2004.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

The standards on summary judgment are well settled. HN1[] Summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The purpose of summary judgment "is to isolate and dispose of factually unsupported claims or defenses." Celotex v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-324, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986).

[*887] HN2[] The moving party "always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of 'the pleadings and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any' which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Id. at 323. HN3[] If the moving party meets this burden, then the non-moving party "must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). The non-moving party cannot defeat the moving party's properly supported motion for summary judgment simply by alleging some factual dispute between the parties. To preclude the entry of summary [8] judgment, the non-moving party must bring forth material facts, i.e., "facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law . . . . Factual disputes that are irrelevant or unnecessary will not be counted." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

[1] A version of the rule was initially implemented in 1997, causing a delay in approving Fox's biennial application for reappointment in 1998, but his privileges were temporarily continued while the Medical Staff further considered the matter.

The opposing party "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). HN4[] "[S]ummary judgment will not lie if the dispute about a material fact is 'genuine,' that is, if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. However, "[w]here the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587.

These general standards are subject to some additional refinement both in the context of antitrust actions and in connection with the statute that extends immunity from damages in cases of this nature. Those specific considerations are discussed further where relevant below.

IV. DISCUSSION

A. The Motion for Summary Judgment [9] brought by all defendants [2]

1. HCQIA

Defendants contend that all of Fox's claims in this actions are barred under the provisions of the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C. §§ 11101, et seq. ("HCQIA"). Congress enacted that statute for the stated purpose of addressing the concern that, HN5[] "[t]he threat of private money damage liability under Federal laws, including treble damage liability under Federal antitrust law, unreasonably discourages physicians from participating in effective professional peer review." § 11101(4).

> [*888] The Act creates a form of protection from liability in damages for hospitals and peer review participants. Although it never actually uses the term "immunity," the Act provides that if a "professional review action" meets the Act's standards, the peer reviewers "shall not be liable in damages under any law of the United States or of any State … with respect to the [professional review] action." 42 U.S.C. § 11111(a)(1).

Manion v. Evans, 986 F.2d 1036, 1037-1038 (6th Cir. 1993).

The question, therefore, is whether the undisputed facts establish that HCQIA applies to all of the claims in this action and whether its [11] standards for immunity against damages have been satisfied.

a. Definitions

HN6[] HCQIA plainly contemplates situations where a peer review committee has prompted an action against a physician's privileges based on concerns regarding the competency of the particular physician in question. Here, it is undisputed that at no time did any questions arise as to Fox's own competency. Yet, until his supplemental briefing, Fox made no argument that the statute is so narrowly drawn that it cannot apply here for that reason. Review of the statutory definitions reveals HCQIA is in fact implicated under these circumstances.

---

[2] At the hearing on the motion brought by all defendants, Fox cited for the first time Williams v. University Medical Center of Southern Nevada, 688 F. Supp. 2d 1111, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23281, 2010 WL 668512 (D. Nev. Feb. 24, 2010). The Court authorized defendants to respond to Williams by post-hearing letter brief, and gave Fox permission to reply thereafter to such submission. Defendants filed a letter brief that arguably went substantially beyond merely responding to Williams, but which did not clearly violate any rule. Fox, in turn, filed a brief that went even further beyond the spirit of the leave that had been given for supplemental briefing, in that it raised several entirely new arguments. Predictably, defendants filed another brief crying foul, and urging the Court to strike the new arguments. Fox responded yet again, contending his prior brief was proper. When the fourth brief came in, the Court gave serious consideration to issuing a one word order: "STOP!" Fortunately, that did not prove necessary. While violations of the rules on unsolicited briefing are not to be ignored, given the enormous consequences of the issues raised in the additional briefing, the Court is exercising its discretion [10] to consider all of the substantive points raised by both sides therein.

At the outset, the decision to suspend Fox's privileges for failure to comply with the alternate coverage rules was a "professional review activity" as defined in the statute. § 11151(10). [3] Next, the term HN7[] "professional review action" is defined to include privileging decisions "based on the competence or professional conduct of an individual physician (which conduct affects or could affect adversely the health or welfare of a patient or patients) and which affects (or may affect) adversely the clinical privileges, or membership in a professional society, of the physician." § 11151(9). [12] In his supplemental briefing, Fox argues for the first time that this language precludes application of the statute here, where the concern related to the privileges of Fox's designated alternates, rather than his own medical competence. This argument fails for at least three reasons.

First, while Fox's own medical "competence" may not have been in question per se, the issue did involve the quality of care he was able to provide to his patients through his designees. [4] Second, even assuming the matter could not be characterized as implicating Fox's competence in any sense, the decision to suspend Fox's privileges for his refusal to comply with the identical privileges rule plainly was a matter involving Fox's own professional conduct. HN9[] The statutory definition [13] is disjunctive--it applies to decision relating to competence or professional conduct. Third, Fox's new argument that the statute is simply inapplicable is undermined by his own complaint in which he specifically [*889] alleged that HCQIA was available to immunize defendants' conduct provided its substantive provisions were met. Second Amended Complaint PP 77-78. Even assuming this does not rise to the level of a judicial estoppel, it serves as an additional basis to refuse to construe the statute as narrowly as Fox now urges, in a hyper-technical reading at odds with its general intent and purposes.

Fox's supplemental briefing makes the additional argument that the statute is inapplicable by virtue of HN10[] section 11151(9)(D) of HCQIA, which excludes from the definition of "professional review [14] action" any privileging decision based on "a physician's association with, supervision of, delegation of authority to, support for, training of, or participation in a private group practice with, a member or members of a particular class of health care practitioner or professional." Fox argues this provision is implicated because he refused to designate as his backups members of the NorCal PICU associates. While the provision is certainly directed at excluding from statutory protection any privileging decision based on a physician's professional associations, it cannot be stretched to encompass the application of GSH's identical privileges rule, which by its terms did not mandate the designation or exclusion of any particular doctor or group. Accordingly, the decision to suspend Fox's privileges was an action within the ambit of HCQIA such that its prohibition against damages is available if its provisions are otherwise satisfied.

b. Immunity

As noted, the immunity from damages is set out in section 11111. HN11[] That section provides, among other things, that the "professional review action" will only qualify for immunity if it "meets all the standards specified in section 11112(a)." Section 11112(a), [15] in turn, requires that a professional review action must be taken--

(1) in the reasonable belief that the action was in the furtherance of quality health care,

(2) after a reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter,

---

[3] That subdivision provides: HN8[] "The term "professional review activity" means an activity of a health care entity with respect to an individual physician--

(A) to determine whether the physician may have clinical privileges with respect to, or membership in, the entity,

(B) to determine the scope or conditions of such privileges or membership, or

(C) to change or modify such privileges or membership."

All three circumstances apply here.

[4] This is not to suggest that there was any concern that the physicians designated by Fox for his alternate coverage had ever demonstrated "incompetence" in the sense that they had deviated from the standard of care. That said, the identical privileges rule was directed to ensuring competence in the sense of appropriate qualifications, experience, and training on the part of the designated back-up doctors.

(3) after adequate notice and hearing procedures are afforded to the physician involved or after such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances, and

(4) in the reasonable belief that the action was warranted by the facts known after such reasonable effort to obtain facts and after meeting the requirement of paragraph (3).

Critically, however, section 11112(a) goes on to provide that "[a] professional review action shall be presumed to have met the preceding standards . . . unless the presumption is rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence. Furthermore, HN12[] as the Ninth Circuit has explained, "[b]ecause the 'reasonableness' requirements of § 11112(a) were intended to create an objective standard, rather than a subjective standard, this inquiry may be resolved on summary judgment." Smith v. Ricks, 31 F.3d 1478, 1485 (9th Cir. 1994). [5]

[*890] Moreover, "the rebuttable presumption 'creates a somewhat unusual standard' of review for summary judgment because the 'inquiry focuses on whether [plaintiff] has provided sufficient evidence to permit a jury to find that he has overcome, by a preponderance of the evidence, the presumption that physicians in the defendants' position would reasonably have believed that their action was warranted by the facts." Id. (quoting Austin v. McNamara, 979 F.2d 728, 734 (9th Cir.1992). [17] Importantly, evidence of bad faith or hostility towards Fox on the part of the actual decision-makers is simply irrelevant and cannot serve to create a material issue of fact on this point. Austin, 979 F.2d at 734 (Plaintiff's "assertions of hostility do not support his position because they are irrelevant to the reasonableness standards of § 11112(a). The test is an objective one, so bad faith is immaterial.")

The only argument Fox offered in his original opposition that the fairness standard of § 11112(a) was not satisfied here was the naked two-sentence assertion: "The fairness standards required, inter alia, that Dr. Fox have the right to a representation to a record [sic] and to call and examine witnesses. Dr. Fox was accorded none of these rights by defendants." It appears that Fox may have believed that "fairness" necessarily includes those rights in light of HN13[] § 11112(b), which lists such procedures, among others, that will be deemed to satisfy § 11112(a), if provided. Section 11112(b), however, only provides a "safe harbor"--it also expressly provides that a failure to comply with all of its provisions, "shall not, in itself, constitute failure to meet the standards of subsection (a)." [18] See Ricks, supra, 31 F.3d at 1485 n. 5 ("we reject as dicta any suggestion in Austin that a hospital [must] satisfy § 11112(b) in order to receive immunity.")

The text of section 11112(a) itself reveals that not even "adequate notice and hearing procedures"--much less all those specified in subsection (b)--are necessarily required. Rather, "such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances" will suffice in appropriate circumstances. Here, Fox's contention that he was entitled to something more than he was given was rejected by the California state courts. Even assuming the state court's determination is not binding in any res judicata sense, it undermines any claim Fox could otherwise now make that there is a triable issue of fact as to the procedural "fairness" of the professional review action.

At the hearing and in his supplemental briefing, Fox made the more nuanced argument that two separate decisions are actually at issue. First, the adoption of the "equal privileges" rule was, Fox contends, a quasi-legislative act. While Fox does not concede that he had adequate notice and hearing even with respect to the adoption of the rule, there is some merit to his [19] contention that the application of the rule to him requires a separate fairness analysis. Nevertheless, Fox has not met his burden to show that he was entitled to further notice or hearing before his privileges were suspended for failure to comply with the rule. In Wahi v. Charleston Area Medical Center, 562 F.3d 599 (4th Cir. 2009), the court expressly held that a hearing regarding a physician's suspension is not necessary in all circumstances for HCQIA immunity to apply. Rather, the statutory language, "such other procedures as are fair under the circumstances," reflects a Congressional intent that "a physician be afforded adequate and fair 'procedures' with regard to professional review actions, which could be something other than a formal hearing in some circumstances." Wahi, 562 F.3d at 609; see also [*891] Singh v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Mass. Inc., 182 F.Supp.2d 164, 173 (D.Mass. 2001) ("no hearing is required under the HCQIA").

---

[5] As explained in Bryan v. James E. Holmes Reg'l Med. Ctr., 33 F.3d 1318 (11th Cir. 1994): "A district court should [16] consider the issue of HCQIA immunity from damages at the summary judgment stage. If it determines that the defendant is not entitled to such protection, then the merits of the case should be submitted to the jury without reference to the immunity issue. If there are disputed subsidiary issues of fact concerning HCQIA immunity, such as whether the disciplined physician was given adequate notice of the charges and the appropriate opportunity to be heard, the court may ask the jury to resolve the subsidiary factual questions by responding to special interrogatories . . . . Under no circumstances should the ultimate question of whether the defendant is immune from monetary liability under HCQIA be submitted to the jury." 33 F.3d at 1333.

Here, it is highly relevant that the professional review actions at issue did not involve complicated factual issues as to whether Fox had met the standard of care in specific patient cases. The sole question to be decided was whether Fox had complied [20] with the rule, and there is no dispute that he had not. Fox was given multiple notices that he must comply. More fundamentally, Fox has not shown that a hearing, a right to representation, a right to call witnesses, and similar procedures were necessary to make the proceedings fair under the circumstances because he does not suggest that he would ever have been able to show either that the rule did not exist or that he was in compliance with it, regardless of how many witnesses he called. Thus, Fox was in circumstances wholly unlike that of a doctor who has been charged with an instance of deviating from the standard of care in one or more patient cases. The process Fox was given here was "fair to the physician under the circumstances," and he has not demonstrated a factual dispute to the contrary. [6]

Fox's bare assertion that the procedure was unfair because he did [21] not have representation, the right to call witnesses, and the like, is insufficient to meet his burden to "provide sufficient evidence to permit a jury to find that he has overcome, by a preponderance of the evidence, the presumption that physicians in the defendants' position would reasonably have believed that their action was warranted by the facts." Ricks, supra, 31 F.3d at 1485. It is not "evidence" at all, but mere unsupported argument.

c. Reporting requirement

HN14[] Under HCQIA, a hospital must report to the Board of Medical Examiners whenever it "takes a professional review action that adversely affects the clinical privileges of a physician for a period longer than 30 days." § 11133(a)(1)(A). Defendants grudgingly admit that this provision at least arguably required them to report Fox's suspension, and there is no dispute they did not do so. Nevertheless, Fox's argument that this defeats immunity under HCQIA is not well taken.

Section 11111(b), entitled "Exception," provides:

> HN15[] If the Secretary has reason to believe that a health care entity has failed to report information in accordance with section 11133(a) of this title, the Secretary shall conduct an investigation. If, after providing [22] notice of noncompliance, an opportunity to correct the noncompliance, and an opportunity for a hearing, the Secretary determines that a health care entity has failed substantially to report information in accordance with section 11133(a) of this title, the Secretary shall publish the name of the entity in the Federal Register. The protections of subsection (a)(1) of this section shall not apply to an entity the name of which is published in the Federal Register under the previous sentence with respect to professional review actions of the entity commenced during the 3-year period beginning 30 days after the date of publication of the name.

HN16[] In other words, failure to report can result in a loss of the protections [*892] provided by HCQIA against damages claims, but only after an involved investigation by governmental authorities and publication in the Federal Register. The failure to report in a specific case does not automatically result in a loss of immunity in that particular case. See Imperial v. Suburban Hosp. Ass'n, Inc. 37 F.3d 1026, 1030 (4th Cir. 1994) (rejecting argument of automatic loss of immunity from failure to report in the plaintiff's case as "frivolous.") [7]

[6] As noted above, at the hearing Fox submitted Williams v. University Medical Center of Southern Nevada, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23281, 2010 WL 668512 in support of his contention that he should have been given a hearing. In Williams, the doctor's conduct was in the context of specific patient medical care decisions, making it of little application here.

In his supplemental briefing, Fox asserts that he is not relying on the § 11111(b) "exception" to immunity per se. Rather, Fox argues, defendants should be estopped from now contending that the suspension of his privileges is eligible for immunity under HCQIA when they previously took the position that it was not a reportable event under the statute. Fox has not shown that this gives rise to an estoppel, particularly given that the statute contemplates that hospitals will sometimes fail to report and provides a specific remedy for such failures.

d. Clark v. Columbia/HCA Information Services, Inc.

Relying on the Nevada Supreme Court decision in Clark v. Columbia/HCA Information Services, Inc, 117 Nev. 468, 25 P.3d 215 (2001), Fox argues that HQCIA immunity cannot extend to [24] his claims for retaliation, allegedly against his protected "whistle blowing" activities. The Clark court, however, expressly recognized that the facts before it were "unique." 117 Nev. at 478. The hospital in Clark based its revocation of the plaintiff's privileges expressly on his having made complaints to outside agencies, and not on any issue of patient care. Id.

If defendants here had suspended Fox's privileges specifically citing the conduct he contends was "whistle blowing," Clark would be relevant, though still not controlling, authority. As the stated basis of Fox's suspension was his failure to comply with the alternative coverage rule, Clark has no application here, except to the extent that even it recognized and acknowledged that HN17[↑] where the only "evidence presented [is] of subjective biases or motives, [it does] not overcome the presumption of immunity." 117 Nev. at 478.

e. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 809

Finally, Fox contends his state law claims are not subject to HQCIA immunity because California exercised a right to "opt-out" of HQCIA by enacting California Business & Professions Code § 809, which governs peer review proceedings in this state. HN18[↑] Section 11111 once included [25] a provision that "Subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to State laws in a State for actions commenced on or after October 14, 1989, if the State by legislation elects such treatment." Congress, however, revoked that option in 1987. Whatever force California Business & Professions Code § 809 may continue to have in other settings, it does not serve to override HQCIA immunity now. Accordingly, for all of the reasons set out above, all defendants are entitled to immunity from damages in this action. As damages are a necessary element of all of Fox's claims, summary judgment in defendants' favor must be entered.

[*893] 2. Antitrust and other issues

As an initial matter, Fox contends that most of the other grounds proffered by defendants as a basis for summary judgment constitute an improper request for reconsideration of the Court's October 9, 2007 order granting in part and denying in part a motion for partial summary judgment, and/or a March 17, 2005 order granting in part and denying in part a motion for judgment on the pleadings under Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. As to the prior Rule 12 motion, HN19[↑] there is nothing that precludes a defendant from seeking to adjudicate [26] by summary judgment issues that survived a Rule 12 motion. As to the prior summary judgment motion, new defendants have been added to the case since then who are entitled to seek summary judgment on any grounds they believe may be viable. While perhaps technically those defendants who were party to the prior summary judgment motion are thereby evading the usual restrictions on seeking reconsideration, if summary judgment were [7] The Ricks court [23] listed the reporting requirement as one of the conditions for HCQIA immunity without discussing the further steps of an investigation by the Secretary and publication in the Federal Register. See 31 F.3d at 1485. As the reporting requirement was not at issue in Ricks, this appears to reflect a convenient shorthand for the Court, rather than a declaration that the provisions of Section 11111(b) are not applicable in this Circuit.

---

proper on any of the grounds put forward, it would elevate form over substance to grant it only in favor of the new defendants, and to require the prior defendants to go to trial on meritless claims.

That said, upon review of the present record, no sufficient reason appears to depart from the prior rulings. The 2007 summary judgment order found that Fox had shown, albeit narrowly, the existence of sufficient triable issues of facts to support antitrust standing, an antitrust conspiracy, and a relevant geographic market. The Court concluded that beyond injury to himself, Fox had produced some evidence that the quality and availability of pediatric services at GSH suffered when his privileges were revoked. Although the inferences Fox sought to draw to support the [27] existence of a conspiracy were "problematic," the timing of events precluded a conclusion as a matter of law that no conspiracy existed. Finally, Fox's reliance on a one-hospital geographic market was not fatal to his claims in light of the evidence as to how at least some patients obtain pediatric intensive care services, in an "after-market" upon entering GSH at the outset.

One main thrust of defendants' argument now is that despite the substantial additional written discovery and deposition practice that has taken place since the prior rulings, Fox cannot (defendants contend) point to any additional evidence to support his claims. To the extent that Fox does not have more evidence to support triable issues of fact, that does not somehow undermine the existence of triable issues of fact in the first instance.

Defendants are on more solid ground conceptually, however, when they argue that there is new affirmative evidence that refutes one or more of the Court's prior identifications of triable issues of fact. In this regard, defendants make four main points. First, defendants point to the deposition of Dr. R. Lawrence Berkowitz, who had previously offered a declaration that Fox's suspension [28] "may have" impacted his ability to treat his patients, but who has now testified that there was no such negative impact. While the Court's 2007 order did expressly refer to the Berkowitz declaration as one example of "evidence that suggests a reduction in the quality of services to patients," resulting from Fox's suspension, it was not the sole evidence on which the Court rested its conclusion that triable factual issues existed. See October 9, 2007 Order at 9:2-12.

Second, and similarly, defendants point to the fact that Dr. Mendoza has now testified that he alone decided to withdraw his application for additional privileges, and that he was not pressured to do so by anyone else. Again, the Court's 2007 order [*894] listed GSH's purported failure to approve such privileging applications as one example of evidence supporting an inference of conspiracy, but only one. See October 9, 2007 Order at 10:23-11:7.

Third, and to the same effect, defendants have now mounted a full-out assault on Fox's evidence that he was told "watch your back" after he had raised complaints about certain patient care incidents. Although the statement may constitute inadmissible hearsay were it offered to support the [29] existence of a conspiracy, taking it out of the equation does not result in a record devoid of any other evidence sufficient to create a triable issue of fact. [8]

Finally, defendants suggest that minutes of the Medical Quality Review Committee, recently produced over their objections, tend to show that Fox's complaints regarding patient care were actually taken as well-founded and addressed accordingly. While that may be so, the fact that the Committee agreed with Fox's concerns does not rule out the possibility that he might have suffered [30] retaliation for having brought the issues to light in the first place. [9]

---

[8] Defendants have filed a separate motion to strike regarding the "watch your back" statement, set to be heard on April 14, 2010. The Court has reviewed Fox's opposition to that motion, and agrees that the statement could be considered non-declarative, or non-hearsay, or otherwise admissible for certain limited purposes. In none of those circumstances, however, would the statement be probative of the existence of a conspiracy. As this order reflects, however, ultimately it is of little consequence, because there is other evidence sufficient to create a triable issue. More fundamentally, though, in light of the disposition of this order, the issue is moot.

[9] In one instance, the GSH Chief of Staff requested that Fox review a patient case. Contrary to defendants' suggestion, however, the fact that the review process was initiated by GSH does not conclusively establish that Fox was not the victim of retaliation for his resulting report. For example, Fox would be entitled to argue to a jury that defendants were unhappy that his report did not go far enough in attempting to defend or justify the patient care that had been given.

As the parties are aware, the Court's 2007 Order included language suggesting that the evidence supporting triable issues of fact was not particularly strong in many respects, and expressly observing that "persuasive alternative inferences can be drawn." In the present motion, defendants have perhaps kicked out a few more props supporting the case that the Court previously suggested was somewhat wobbly in the first instance. The Court's prior observations about summary judgment in the antitrust context, however, remain relevant.

> In overturning a summary judgment in an antitrust case, the Supreme Court noted HN20[] "[s]ummary procedures should be used sparingly [31] in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot." Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. U.S. Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 500, 89 S. Ct. 1252, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 (1969); see In re Citric Acid Litigation, 191 F.3d 1090, 1106 n.10 (9th Cir. 1999) ("[R]are is the antitrust case in which there is absolutely no evidence which could support some inference of an antitrust violation.").

October 9, 2007 Order at 7:10-16.

Defendants are of course correct that this does not mean summary judgment should never be granted with respect to antitrust issues. They have not persuasively shown, however, that it would be warranted here, were it not for HQCIA immunity.

3. Spoliation

Fox suggests that summary judgment should be denied based on his claim [*895] that defendants admit they destroyed certain records. Fox, however, has not established that any relevant documents were destroyed at any point in time when defendants should have been aware of their potential relevance. Nor has Fox otherwise shown that this would be a basis for denying summary judgment, particularly on the HCQIA immunity issue, to which any such destroyed documents [32] would necessarily be irrelevant.

4. Rule 56(f)

Fox generally requests that a ruling on summary judgment be deferred pending further discovery. Even if Fox had adequately shown the potential relevance of further discovery to the substantive claims, there is no basis to believe that further discovery could possibly serve to create a material factual dispute regarding HCQIA immunity.

B. The HCA Motion

In a motion separately noticed and heard, defendant HCA, Inc. argues that regardless of the outcome of the motion brought by all the defendants, separate and independent grounds warrant summary judgment in its favor. The undisputed evidence, according to HCA, demonstrates that Fox cannot prove the sole allegation in the complaint previously identified by the Court as support for direct HCA liability, and that the circumstances do not warrant piercing the corporate veil to impose indirect liability. Because Fox fails to raise a material issue of triable fact, summary judgment for HCA will be entered on that additional and independent ground.

1. Additional Background as to HCA

Pertinent to this motion is the fact that defendant HCA acquired ownership of defendant GSH in 1995, some years after the [33] earliest incidents giving rise to Fox's contention that he has suffered retaliation, but several years prior to his 2004 initiation of this action. Fox did not seek to add HCA as a defendant herein until March 31, 2006.

In 2008, HCA filed a motion to dismiss the operative second amended complaint, arguing, among other things, that the allegations did not support imposing direct liability on it for purported wrongdoing by GSH or other defendants. HCA expressly argued that under U.S. v. Best Foods, 524 U.S. 51, 64, 118 S. Ct. 1876, 141 L. Ed. 2d 43 (1998), Fox was obligated to plead (and ultimately prove) facts demonstrating that HCA, as a separate entity, was a "direct participant" in actionable conduct. HCA also argued that many of the alleged acts for which Fox sought to hold HCA directly liable were time-barred.

On October 30, 2008, the Court issued an order granting in part and denying in part HCA's motion to dismiss. The Court first found that Fox's claims against HCA did not "relate back" to the filing of this action, with the result that no conduct occurring prior to March 31, 2002 could serve as a basis for imposing liability against HCA. [10] The Court further found that Fox had alleged an adequate basis for imposing [34] direct liability against HCA with respect to only one series of alleged events, namely, the "efforts to mandate what Fox characterizes as the 2006 non-negotiable HCA corporate loyalty oath." See October 30, 2008 Order at 7:21-22 (referencing Second Amended Complaint PP 37-39, 43, 58-59). The Court explained that because Fox had alleged facts supporting an inference that those efforts were undertaken by GSH's CEO William Piche for the benefit of HCA (albeit not the [*896] sole benefit of HCA), there was a sufficient basis to proceed against HCA as a direct participant in the alleged wrongdoing. The Court expressly declined to reach Fox's alternate theories of indirect liability.

2. Standards

The standards for summary judgment have been discussed above. In connection with this motion in particular, Fox's written opposition reflects a misapprehension of the relationship among motions to dismiss, motions for judgment on the pleadings, and motions for summary judgment. Fox correctly [35] states that motions testing the sufficiency of a complaint, both motions to dismiss and motions for judgment on the pleadings, look only to what is contained within the four corners of the pleading (except where it is appropriate also to consider matters than can be judicially-noticed). Fox's apparent suggestion, however, that the contents of the complaint do not serve as a limitation at the summary judgment stage, is incorrect. HN21[] While a summary judgment motion does go beyond the pleadings in the sense that it tests the sufficiency of the evidence to support the allegations of the complaint, those allegations still serve to frame--and limit--the issues.

For the same reason, Fox is not correct that HCA's motion should be deemed a motion for judgment on the pleadings simply because HCA's has focused on those elements of the complaint that survived the motion to dismiss. HCA does not challenge the sufficiency of the allegations to state a claim; it has, for purposes of this motion, accepted the Court's prior rulings in that regard. Rather, HCA is now contending that the evidence establishes as a matter of undisputed fact that Fox is unable to prove any of the allegations of the complaint [36] that the Court previously found would support imposition of liability against HCA, if proven.

Thus, in either a motion to dismiss or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the allegations of the complaint are presumed true, and the only question is whether those allegations would support liability. At summary judgment, however, the question is whether the evidence "is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. The question is not whether there are other unpleaded facts or theories which might support liability. [11]

3. The evidence

Much of Fox's opposition is devoted to establishing that William Piche, the CEO of GSH was also an HCA employee, as was former CEO Thomas May, who is Piche's superior, and who remains an officer of GSH's general partner. From these facts, Fox contends, it can be inferred that any alleged wrongdoing by either Piche or May can be ascribed to HCA, or at least there is an issue of fact as to which "hat" these individuals were wearing at the time. These arguments, however, were considered and rejected in the context of the prior motion to dismiss. As reflected in the October 30, 2008 order, HN22[] without facts supporting an inference that the challenged conduct was undertaken for the benefit of HCA, Fox cannot overcome the [*897] presumption that an individual is wearing the "hat" of the subsidiary when conducting the business of the subsidiary. See Best Foods, 524 U.S. at 69-70.

---

[10] The statute of limitations on Fox's federal claims is four years. The state law claims have a two year statute of limitations, such that only conduct occurring after March 31, 2004 can support those particular claims.

[11] This is not to say that factual details beyond those explicitly set out in a complaint are out of bounds at the summary judgment stage, so long as those details do not represent new or different grounds for asserted liability beyond those properly noticed by the complaint. Fox is also correct that Rule 15 provides a mechanism for filing a supplemental complaint, to bring in conduct taking place after the date of the operative pleading. Fox has not sought leave to file a supplemental complaint, however, and the theoretical possibility that one could be filed is not a basis for considering post-complaint conduct [37] in evaluating this summary judgment motion.

Applying that principle, the Court previously concluded that the only non-time-barred matters alleged in the second amended complaint that could fairly be ascribed to HCA was the alleged imposition of the "loyalty oath." Even assuming it were appropriate for the Court [38] now to revisit the question of whether other matters, such as Piche's involvement in Fox's privileging between 2002 and 2004, theoretically could support direct liability against HCA, Fox has not pointed to any further facts or evidence giving rise to an inference that Piche was acting for the benefit of HCA in such matters.

Furthermore, regardless of which hat Piche or May was wearing, Fox cannot avoid summary judgment by pointing to purported factual issues related to conduct occurring prior to March 31, 2002 (four years prior to the time HCA was added as a defendant herein) or after the then-proposed second amended complaint was filed on April 18, 2008. Accordingly, HCA's focus on the issue of the "loyalty oath" as the dispositive question is appropriate.

On that point, HCA has produced undisputed evidence that defendants withdrew any requirement for Fox to sign the "loyalty oath" as a condition for obtaining privileges, and so informed Fox by letter dated May 25, 2006. Declaration of Carol Ostermann, Exhibits B & C. [12] The same letter informed Fox that his application for reappointment would be presented to the next meeting of GSH's Board of Trustees, with a recommendation that it [39] be approved. Ostermann Decl., Exh. C. Fox's application for privileges was in fact granted at that meeting. Declaration of William Piche, Exhibit B.

Fox does not dispute these facts. Instead, Fox points out that GSH failed thereafter to send him written notice that his reappointment had been approved. Defendants contend this was mere administrative "oversight," but Fox argues that in light of the entire history between him and GSH, there is a reasonable inference that it was the result of further retaliation. The shortcoming in this argument is that it at most might create an issue of fact as to whether GSH wrongfully withheld formal notification of Fox's reappointment. As the Court's October 30, 2008 order indicated, there may have been a reasonable inference that imposing the requirement of the "loyalty oath" was an act that benefited HCA, but once that [40] requirement was lifted, any connection to HCA was severed. Fox does not dispute he received notice that no "loyalty oath" to HCA would be required. Any subsequent failure to notify Fox of his reappointment was no more an act on behalf of HCA than any of the other matters involving Fox's privileging that the Court has found do not support direct liability against HCA. Accordingly, summary judgment in favor of HCA on all of Fox's direct liability claims is warranted. [13]

Finally, HCA's motion set forth evidence and argument that there is no basis to impose indirect liability against it under an alter ego theory. Fox's opposition elected not to offer any evidence or argument to [*898] the contrary, resting instead on his assertion that direct liability exists. Accordingly, summary judgment in favor of HCA on the indirect liability claims is also appropriate.

IV. CONCLUSION

Defendants' motions for summary judgment are granted. A separate judgment will be entered.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: 03/29/2010

/s/ Richard Seeborg

RICHARD SEEBORG

---

[12] Indeed, it appears that the GSH Medical Executive Committee eliminated the "loyalty oath" requirement precisely because it agreed with Fox's objections to it. The committee minutes state: "A physician's objections to language in the Confidentiality and Security Agreement were reviewed and found to be valid." Ostermann Decl., Exh. B.

[13] Fox's suggestion that the matter be continued under Rule 56(f) to permit further discovery fails to show with adequate specificity what further discovery might accomplish.

UNITED [41] STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

JUDGMENT

Based on the order issued herewith, granting defendants' motions for summary judgment, the Court enters judgment in favor of defendants and against plaintiff in the above-entitled action.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: 03/29/2010

/s/ Richard Seeborg

RICHARD SEEBORG

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

King Drug Co. of Florence v. Cephalon, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

March 29, 2010, Decided; March 29, 2010, Filed

CIVIL ACTION No. 2:06-cv-1797; CIVIL ACTION No. 2:06-cv-1833; CIVIL ACTION No. 2:06-cv-2768; CIVIL ACTION No. 2:08-cv-2141

Reporter

702 F. Supp. 2d 514 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29905 ; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,950

KING DRUG COMPANY OF FLORENCE, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. CEPHALON, INC., et al., Defendants. VISTA HEALTHPLAN, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. CEPHALON, INC., et al., Defendants. APOTEX, INC., Plaintiff, v. CEPHALON, INC., et al., Defendants. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Plaintiff, v. CEPHALON, INC., Defendant.

Subsequent History: Motion denied by Apotex, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 147205 (E.D. Pa., Apr. 8, 2010)

Motion denied by King Drug Co. of Florence v. Cephalon, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 147696 (E.D. Pa., Nov. 22, 2010)

Later proceeding at King Drug Co. of Florence v. Cephalon, Inc., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 182022 (E.D. Pa., Mar. 27, 2015)

Class certification denied by Vista Healthplan, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74846 (E.D. Pa., June 10, 2015)

Prior History: Apotex, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16940 (E.D. Pa., Feb. 23, 2010)

Core Terms

patent, generic, settlement agreement, modafinil, motion to dismiss, manufacturer, antitrust, Defendants', settlement, infringement, Plaintiffs', invalid, products, exclusionary, payor, allegations, complaints, cases, rights, FDA, anticompetitive, certification, licenses, pled, class action, generic drug, Purchaser, effects, sham, brand name

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

HN1[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

The Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act, commonly known as the Hatch-Waxman Act, 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(j), creates the Abbreviated New Drug Application process (ANDA), which allows a generic drug application to piggyback on safety and efficacy studies conducted for the pioneer drug. Under the Hatch-Waxman Act, the pharmaceutical company is still required to file a New Drug Application (NDA) with full-scale safety and efficacy studies listing the patents that generics might infringe in the future. § 355(b)(1). However, the Hatch-Waxman Act is designed to allow generic companies to bypass the studies required under a NDA and file an ANDA, which requires only that generic companies prove that the new drug is the bioequivalent of a brand name drug on the market. § 355(j)(2)(A).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > Aids & Extrinsic Evidence

HN2[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

An Abbreviated New Drug Application process (ANDA) filer must select one (1) of the following certifications: (1) that the patent information has not been filed on the generic's brand name equivalent, a Paragraph I certification; (2) that a patent on the branded drug has expired, a Paragraph II certification; (3) that a brand name patent exists, including the date on which such patent will expire, with a promise not to market until that date, a Paragraph III certification; or (4) that such patent is invalid or will not be infringed by the manufacture, use, or sale of the new drug for which the application is submitted, a Paragraph IV certification. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

HN3[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

If the generic Abbreviated New Drug Application process (ANDA) filer selects a Paragraph IV certification, it must consult the Orange Book and provide notification to each New Drug Application (NDA) or patent owner impacted by the ANDA certification not later than 20 days after the date of the postmark on the notice with which the Secretary informs the applicant that the application has been filed. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(j)(2)(B)(ii)(I). The filing of an ANDA Paragraph IV certification allows the patent holders to sue, as it is considered a technical act of infringement. The patent owners have 45 days to bring an infringement suit against the generic. If the affected patent owners do not file suit, the United States Federal Drug Administration can approve the ANDA without delay. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii). If an affected patent owner brings an infringement suit, approval of the application is automatically stayed for 30 months, or until a district court issues a final decision concluding that the patent has not been infringed or is otherwise invalid.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > Construction Preferences

HN4[] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

In order to provide generic drug makers with an incentive to incur the expense and risk of a potential infringement suit by the patent holder, the first Abbreviated New Drug Application process (ANDA) filer maintains a 180-day exclusivity period. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv). During that period, the United States Federal Drug Administration cannot approve any other generic manufacturer's ANDA until 180-days after the earlier of (1) the date of the first ANDA filer's commercial marketing of its generic drug; or (2) the date of a court decision that the patent is invalid or not infringed. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii)(I).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN5[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

With the ultimate goal of stimulating competition and innovation, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. Although the statute prohibits all restraints of trade, the United States Supreme Court has long recognized that the United States Congress intends to outlaw only unreasonable restraints. The Sherman Act also states that a monopoly of any part of trade or commerce is illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN6[] Actual Monopolization, Monopoly Power

In determining whether an alleged restraint of trade is unreasonable, courts generally apply either a per se rule or what is referred to as a rule-of-reason analysis. A per se analysis is applicable only where courts have previously considered the type of conduct at issue and have found that its expected effects are overwhelmingly anticompetitive. Id. In the rule-of-reason analysis, the question is whether the conduct at issue is anticompetitive taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed and the restraint's history, nature and effect. The rule-of-reason tests whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. By contrast, but also with the goal of stimulating competition and innovation, patent law grants an innovator the right to exclude others from making, using, offering for sale, or selling the invention throughout the United States or importing the invention into the United States. 35 U.S.C.S. § 154(a)(1) and (2).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

HN7[] Actual Monopolization, Monopoly Power

In focusing on the rights afforded by the granting of a patent, one court has noted that engrafted into patent law is the notion that a patent grant bestows the right to exclude others from profiting by the patented invention. Thus, the Patent Act essentially provides the patent owner with what amounts to a permissible monopoly over the patented work. Other cases have stressed, however, that patent rights cannot create a monopoly beyond the scope of the patent. The possession of a valid patent does not give the patentee any exemption from the provisions of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., beyond the limits of the patent monopoly. Thus, if the challenged activity simply serves as a device to circumvent antitrust law, then that activity is typically susceptible to an antitrust suit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

HN8[] Actual Monopolization, Monopoly Power

The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania will apply a framework which examines whether any of the agreements in question exceed the exclusionary patent rights granted to a patent owner. A patent grants its owner the lawful right to exclude others. The essence of a patent grant is the right to exclude others from profiting by the patented invention. That exclusionary right is granted to allow the patentee to exploit whatever degree of market power it might gain thereby as an incentive to induce investment in innovation and the public disclosure of inventions. A patentee can choose to exclude everyone from producing the patented article or can choose to be the sole supplier itself, or grant exclusive territorial licenses carving up the United States among its licensees. Within reason, patentees can also subdivide markets in ways other than territorial, such as by customer class. A patentee's allocation of territories is not always the kind of territorial market allocation that triggers antitrust liability. In a reverse-payment case, the settlement leaves the competitive situation unchanged from before the defendant tried to enter the market. At the same time, to the extent that the agreements in question improperly afford more rights than those granted under the patent, antitrust principles may apply.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN9[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted examines the legal sufficiency of the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN10[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) requires that a pleading contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. According to the United States Supreme Court, the Rule 8 pleading standard does not require detailed factual allegations, but it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN11[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Where a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN12[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A court must accept as true all of the factual allegations made in a pleading, but not the legal conclusions. Only a complaint that states a plausible claim for relief survives a motion to dismiss. Determining plausibility is a context specific task. In short, where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged-but it has not shown-that the pleader is entitled to relief. The Third Circuit has found that in light of Twombly, it is no longer sufficient to make an unsupported statement asserting an entitlement to relief; instead a complaint must state a claim and the grounds supporting the claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN13[] Standing, Requirements

The following test is applicable in determining antitrust standing: (1) the causal connection between antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; (3) the directness of the injury, which addresses the concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages. That standing analysis is essentially a balancing test comprised of many constant and variable factors and there is no talismanic test capable of resolving all standing problems.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Under Mississippi law, the plaintiffs need only have to plead facts that would lead to a reasonable inference that the defendant and its co-conspirators wanted the Mississippi vendors to charge Mississippi consumers a higher price as a result of the lack of competition. The Utah Antitrust Act, Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-913 (2010), has no such requirement, but instead bars all antitrust activity with regard to trade or commerce. The statute defines trade or commerce as all economic activity involving, or relating to, any commodity, service, or business activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

HN15[] Private Actions, State Regulation

The West Virginia antitrust statute, W. Va. Code § 47-18-16 (2010), specifically dictates that it is to be construed liberally.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

HN16[] Private Actions, State Regulation

Unjust enrichment claims are viable regardless of the applicable state antitrust laws. It has long been recognized that plaintiffs are allowed to plead alternative causes of action and unjust enrichment is commonly recognized as one of those permissible alternative causes of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN17[] Private Actions, State Regulation

It has been held in an antitrust case that the allegation that a name brand manufacturer brought a sham patent infringement suit against a generic manufacturer with the purpose of keeping it out of the generic drug market is sufficient to state a claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantages.

Counsel: [1] For VISTA HEALTHPLAN, INC., ON BEHALF OF ITSELF AND ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED, Plaintiff (2:06-cv-01833-MSG): JOSEPH H. MELTZER, TERENCE S. ZIEGLER, LEAD ATTORNEYS, BARROWAY TOPAZ KESSLER MELTZER & CHECK LLP, RADNOR, PA; KEVIN B. LOVE, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANZMAN CRIDEN & LOVE, P.A., SOUTH MIAMI, FL; LAWRENCE KENDALL SATTERFIELD, LEAD ATTORNEY, FINKELSTEIN THOMPSON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; THEODORE M. LIEVERMAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, SPECTOR ROSEMAN KODROFF & WILLIS, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; ROBERT W. SINK, LAW OFFICES OF ROBERT W. SINK, MEDIA, PA.

For PENNSYLVANIA TURNPIKE COMMISSION, ON BEHALF OF ITSELF AND ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED, PENNSYLVANIA EMPLOYEES BENEFIT TRUST FUND, ON BEHALF OF ITSELF AND ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED, DISTRICT COUNCIL 37 HEALTH & SECURITY PLAN, Plaintiffs (2:06-cv-01833-MSG): JOSEPH H. MELTZER, TERENCE S. ZIEGLER, LEAD ATTORNEYS, BARROWAY TOPAZ KESSLER MELTZER & CHECK LLP, RADNOR, PA; KEVIN B. LOVE, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANZMAN CRIDEN & LOVE, P.A., SOUTH MIAMI, FL; THEODORE M. LIEVERMAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, SPECTOR ROSEMAN KODROFF & WILLIS, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; LAWRENCE KENDALL SATTERFIELD, FINKELSTEIN THOMPSON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; ROBERT W. SINK, LAW OFFICES OF ROBERT [2] W. SINK, MEDIA, PA.

For AVMED, INC., Plaintiff (2:06-cv-01833-MSG): DAVID S. NALVEN, THOMAS M. SOBOL, LEAD ATTORNEYS, HAGENS BERMAN SOBOL SHAPIRO LLP, CAMBRIDGE, MA; JEFFREY C. SWANN, LEAD ATTORNEY, RAWLINGS & ASSOCIATES PLLC, LAGRANGE, KY; KENDALL SCOTT ZYLSTRA, LEAD ATTORNEY, FARUQI & FARUQI LLP, HUNTINGDON VALLEY, PA; MARK D. FISCHER, LEAD ATTORNEY, RAWLINGS & ASSOC., LOUISVILLE, KY; MARK M. SANDMANN, LEAD ATTORNEY, RAWLINGS & ASSOCIATES PLLC, LOUISVILLE, KY; RICHARD D. SCHWARTZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, FARUQI & FARUQI LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JOSEPH H. MELTZER, BARROWAY TOPAZ KESSLER MELTZER & CHECK LLP, RADNOR, PA.

For DEBRA LANGAN, INDIVIDUALLY AND ON BEHALF OF ALL OTHER SIMILARLY SITUATED, Plaintiff (2:06-cv-01833-MSG): KEVIN B. LOVE, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANZMAN CRIDEN & LOVE, P.A., SOUTH MIAMI, FL; ROBERT W. SINK, LEAD ATTORNEY, LAW OFFICES OF ROBERT W. SINK, MEDIA, PA; TERENCE S. ZIEGLER, LEAD ATTORNEY, JOSEPH H. MELTZER, BARROWAY TOPAZ KESSLER MELTZER & CHECK LLP, RADNOR, PA; THEODORE M. LIEVERMAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, SPECTOR ROSEMAN KODROFF & WILLIS, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; LAWRENCE KENDALL SATTERFIELD, FINKELSTEIN THOMPSON LLP, WASHINGTON, DC.

For CEPHALON, INC., Defendant (2:06-cv-01833-MSG): GREGORY [3] P. TERAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE & DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; PETER J. KOLOVOS, LEAD ATTORNEY, MARK A. FORD, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; ROBERT J. GUNTHER, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE DORR LLP, NEW YORK, NY; FRANK R. EMMERICH, JR., CONRAD O'BRIEN PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; JAMES C. BURLING, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE & DORR, BOSTON, MA; JOHN A. GUERNSEY, CONRAD O'BRIEN GELLMAN & ROHN PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; MICHELLE D. MILLER, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE AND DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; NANCY J. GELLMAN, CONRAD O'BRIEN GELLMAN & ROHN PC, PHILA, PA; PETER A. SPAETH, WILMER BUTLER PICKERING HALE AND DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA.

For BARR LABORATORIES, INC., Defendant (2:06-cv-01833-MSG): GREGORY L. SKIDMORE, JOHN C. O'QUINN, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KIRKLAND ELLIS LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; JAY P. LEFKOWITZ, LEAD ATTORNEY, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, NEW YORK, NY; KAREN N. WALKER, LEAD ATTORNEY, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, WASHINGTON, DC; LATHROP B. NELSON, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, MONTGOMERY MCCRACKEN WALKER AND RHOADS, L.L.P., PHILADELPHIA, PA; RICHARD L. SCHEFF, LEAD ATTORNEY, MONTGOMERY MCCRACKEN WALKER & RHOADS LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For MYLAN LABORATORIES, INC., Defendant (2:06-cv-01833-MSG): [4] C. FAIRLEY SPILLMAN, PAUL B. HEWITT, LEAD ATTORNEYS, AKIN GUMP STRAUSS HAUER & FELD LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DAVID L. COMERFORD, JEFFERY A. DAILEY, KATHERINE M. KATCHEN, MATTHEW RYAN VARZALLY, LEAD ATTORNEYS, AKIN GUMP STRAUSS HAUER & FELD LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For TEVA PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD., TEVA PHARMACEUTICALS USA, INC., Defendants (2:06-cv-01833-MSG): JEFFREY B. KORN, LEAD ATTORNEY, WILLKIE FARR GALLAGHER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JOSEPH E. WOLFSON, LEAD ATTORNEY, STEVENS & LEE, KING OF PRUSSIA, PA; WILLIAM H. ROONEY, WILLKIE, FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY.

For RANBAXY LABORATORIES, LTD., RANBAXY PHARMACEUTICALS, INC., Defendants (2:06-cv-01833-MSG): DANIELLE R. FOLEY, J. DOUGLAS BALDRIDGE, LISA JOSE FALES, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, VENABLE, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; VINCENT E. VERROCCHIO, LEAD ATTORNEY, VENABLE, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; ANTHONY S. VOLPE, JOHN J. O'MALLEY, VOLPE & KOENIG PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For ECKERD CORPORATION, Defendant (2:06-cv-01833-MSG): MONICA L. REBUCK, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY ARONCHICH SEGAL & PUDLIN, HARRISBURG, PA; STEVE D. SHADOWEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY ARONCHICK SEGAL & PUDLIN, HARRISBURG, PA.

For APOTEX, INC., Plaintiff (2:06-cv-02768-MSG): BRIAN J. SODIKOFF, [5] ROBERT B. BREISBLATT, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KATTEN, MUCHIN, ROSENMANN, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; EDWARD A. DIVER, LEAD ATTORNEY, HOWARD I. LANGER, LANGER & GROGAN P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; MARTIN S. MASAR, KATTEN MUCHIN ROSENMAN LLP, CHICAGO, IL.

For CEPHALON, INC., Defendant (2:06-cv-02768-MSG): AMY K. WIGMORE, WILMER HALE, WASHINGTON, DC; DANIEL M. ESRICK, GREGORY P. TERAN, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE & DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; FRANK R. EMMERICH, JR., CONRAD O'BRIEN PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; JAMES C. BURLING, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE & DORR, BOSTON, MA; JOHN A. GUERNSEY, CONRAD O'BRIEN GELLMAN & ROHN PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; MARK A. FORD, PETER J. KOLOVOS, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE

DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; MICHELLE D. MILLER, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE AND DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; NANCY J. GELLMAN, CONRAD O'BRIEN GELLMAN & ROHN PC, PHILA, PA; PETER A. SPAETH, WILMER BUTLER PICKERING HALE AND DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; ROBERT J. GUNTHER, JR., WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE DORR LLP, NEW YORK, NY; SARAH B. PETTY, PRO HAC VICE, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE & DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA.

For BARR LABORATORIES, INC., Defendant (2:06-cv-02768-MSG): KAREN N. WALKER, LEAD ATTORNEY, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, WASHINGTON, DC; LATHROP B. [6] NELSON, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, MONTGOMERY MCCRACKEN WALKER AND RHOADS, L.L.P., PHILADELPHIA, PA; RICHARD L. SCHEFF, LEAD ATTORNEY, MONTGOMERY MCCRACKEN WALKER & RHOADS LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; GREGORY L. SKIDMORE, JOHN C. O'QUINN, KIRKLAND ELLIS LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; JAY P. LEFKOWITZ, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, NEW YORK, NY.

For MYLAN LABORATORIES, INC., Defendant (2:06-cv-02768-MSG): C. FAIRLEY SPILLMAN, PAUL B. HEWITT, LEAD ATTORNEYS, AKIN GUMP STRAUSS HAUER & FELD LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DAVID L. COMERFORD, JEFFERY A. DAILEY, KATHERINE M. KATCHEN, MATTHEW RYAN VARZALLY, LEAD ATTORNEYS, AKIN GUMP STRAUSS HAUER & FELD LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For TEVA PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD., TEVA PHARMACEUTICALS USA, INC., Defendants (2:06-cv-02768-MSG): JEFFREY B. KORN, LEAD ATTORNEY, WILLKIE FARR GALLAGHER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JOSEPH E. WOLFSON, LEAD ATTORNEY, STEVENS & LEE, KING OF PRUSSIA, PA; WILLIAM H. ROONEY, LEAD ATTORNEY, WILLKIE, FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY.

For RANBAXY LABORATORIES, LTD., RANBAXY PHARMACEUTICALS, INC., Defendants (2:06-cv-02768-MSG): DANIELLE R. FOLEY, J. DOUGLAS BALDRIDGE, LISA JOSE FALES, LEAD ATTORNEYS, VENABLE, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; ANTHONY S. VOLPE, JOHN J. O'MALLEY, VOLPE & KOENIG [7] PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For CEPHALON, INC., Counter Claimant (2:06-cv-02768-MSG): AMY K. WIGMORE, WILMER HALE, WASHINGTON, DC; FRANK R. EMMERICH, JR., CONRAD O'BRIEN PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; GREGORY P. TERAN, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE & DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; JAMES C. BURLING, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE & DORR, BOSTON, MA; JOHN A. GUERNSEY, CONRAD O'BRIEN GELLMAN & ROHN PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; MARK A. FORD, PETER J. KOLOVOS, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; MICHELLE D. MILLER, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE AND DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; NANCY J. GELLMAN, CONRAD O'BRIEN GELLMAN & ROHN PC, PHILA, PA; PETER A. SPAETH, WILMER BUTLER PICKERING HALE AND DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; ROBERT J. GUNTHER, JR., WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE DORR LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For APOTEX, INC., Counter Defendant (2:06-cv-02768-MSG): BRIAN J. SODIKOFF, ROBERT B. BREISBLATT, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KATTEN, MUCHIN, ROSENMANN, LLP, CHICAGO, IL; EDWARD A. DIVER, LEAD ATTORNEY, HOWARD I. LANGER, LANGER & GROGAN P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; MARTIN S. MASAR, KATTEN MUCHIN ROSENMAN LLP, CHICAGO, IL.

For KING DRUG COMPANY OF FLORENCE, INC., ON BEHALF OF ITSELF AND ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED, Plaintiff (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): ANDREW [8] WILLIAM KELLY, STUART E. DESROCHES, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ODOM & DES ROCHES LLP, NEW ORLEANS, LA; BRUCE E. GERSTEIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN AND FISHER L.L.P., NEW YORK, NY; DAN LITVIN, JOSEPH OPPER, LEAD ATTORNEYS, GARWIN GERSTEIN & FISHER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL BERGER, LEAD ATTORNEY, DAVID F. SORENSEN, BERGER & MONTAGUE, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DAVID C. RAPHAEL, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, THE SMITH FOOTE LAW FIRM LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DAVID P. SMITH, W. ROSS FOOTE, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PERCY SMITH & FOOTE LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DIANNE M. NAST, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA & NAST, PC, LANCASTER, PA; ERIN C. BURNS, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA NAST PC, LANCASTER, PA; JOHN D. RADICE, LINDA P. NUSSBAUM, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KAPLAN FOX & KILSHEIMER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; SUSAN C. SEGURA, LEAD ATTORNEY, THE SMITH FOOTE LAW FIRM LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DANIEL C. SIMONS, BERGER AND MONTAGUE P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; RUSSELL A. CHORUSH, PRO HAC VICE, 600 TRAVIS STE 6710, HOUSTON, TX.

For J M SMITH CORPORATION, ON BEHALF OF ITSELF AND ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED doing business as SMITH DRUG COMPANY, Plaintiff (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): ANDREW WILLIAM KELLY, STUART E. DESROCHES, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ODOM & DES ROCHES LLP, NEW ORLEANS, [9] LA; BRUCE E. GERSTEIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN AND FISHER L.L.P., NEW YORK, NY; DAN LITVIN, JOSEPH OPPER, LEAD ATTORNEYS, GARWIN GERSTEIN & FISHER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL BERGER, DAVID F. SORENSEN, LEAD ATTORNEYS, BERGER & MONTAGUE, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DANIEL C. SIMONS, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERGER AND MONTAGUE P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DAVID C. RAPHAEL, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, THE SMITH FOOTE LAW FIRM LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DAVID P. SMITH, W. ROSS FOOTE, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PERCY SMITH & FOOTE LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DIANNE M. NAST, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA & NAST, PC, LANCASTER, PA; ERIN C. BURNS, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA NAST PC, LANCASTER, PA; JOHN D. RADICE, LINDA P. NUSSBAUM, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KAPLAN FOX & KILSHEIMER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; SUSAN C. SEGURA, LEAD ATTORNEY, THE SMITH FOOTE LAW FIRM LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA.

For MEIJER, INC., MEIJER DISTRIBUTION, INC., Plaintiffs (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): ALLEN D. BLACK, LEAD ATTORNEY, FINE, KAPLAN & BLACK, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ANDREW WILLIAM KELLY, STUART E. DESROCHES, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ODOM & DES ROCHES LLP, NEW ORLEANS, LA; BRUCE E. GERSTEIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN AND FISHER L.L.P., NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL BERGER, DAVID F. SORENSEN, LEAD ATTORNEYS, [10] BERGER & MONTAGUE, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DANIEL C. SIMONS, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERGER AND MONTAGUE P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DAVID P. GERMAINE, LEAD ATTORNEY, JOSEPH M. VANEK, VANEK, VICKERS, & MASINI, P.C., CHICAGO, IL; DAVID P. SMITH, W. ROSS FOOTE, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PERCY SMITH & FOOTE LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DIANNE M. NAST, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA & NAST, PC, LANCASTER, PA; ERIN C. BURNS, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA NAST PC, LANCASTER, PA; JOHN D. RADICE, LEAD ATTORNEY, LINDA P. NUSSBAUM, RICHARD J. KILSHEIMER, KAPLAN FOX & KILSHEIMER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JOSEPH OPPER, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN & FISHER LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For ROCHESTER DRUG CO-OPERATIVE, INC., ON BEHALF OF ITSELF AND ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED, Plaintiff (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): ANDREW WILLIAM KELLY, STUART E. DESROCHES, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ODOM & DES ROCHES LLP, NEW ORLEANS, LA; BRUCE E. GERSTEIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN AND FISHER L.L.P., NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL BERGER, DAVID F. SORENSEN, ERIC L. CRAMER, SARAH SCHALMAN-BERGEN, LEAD ATTORNEYS, BERGER & MONTAGUE PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; DAVID P. SMITH, W. ROSS FOOTE, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PERCY SMITH & FOOTE LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DIANNE M. NAST, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA & NAST, PC, LANCASTER, PA; [11] ERIN C. BURNS, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA NAST PC, LANCASTER, PA; JOHN D. RADICE, LINDA P. NUSSBAUM, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KAPLAN FOX & KILSHEIMER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JOSEPH OPPER, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN & FISHER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL C. SIMONS, BERGER AND MONTAGUE P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For STEPHEN L. LAFRANCE HOLDINGS, INC., Plaintiff (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): ANDREW WILLIAM KELLY, STUART E. DESROCHES, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ODOM & DES ROCHES LLP, NEW ORLEANS, LA; BRUCE E. GERSTEIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN AND FISHER L.L.P., NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL BERGER, DAVID F. SORENSEN, LEAD ATTORNEYS, BERGER & MONTAGUE, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DAVID P. SMITH, W. ROSS FOOTE, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PERCY SMITH & FOOTE LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; ERIN C. BURNS, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA NAST PC, LANCASTER, PA; JOHN D. RADICE, LINDA P. NUSSBAUM, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KAPLAN FOX & KILSHEIMER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JOSEPH OPPER, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN & FISHER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; MICHAEL L. ROBERTS, LEAD ATTORNEY, ROBERTS LAW FIRM, LITTLE ROCK, AR; DANIEL C. SIMONS, BERGER AND MONTAGUE P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DIANNE M. NAST, RODA & NAST, PC, LANCASTER, PA.

For BURLINGTON DRUG COMPANY, INC., Plaintiff (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): ANDREW WILLIAM [12] KELLY, STUART E. DESROCHES, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ODOM & DES ROCHES LLP, NEW ORLEANS, LA; BRUCE E. GERSTEIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN AND FISHER L.L.P., NEW YORK, NY; DAN LITVIN, JOSEPH OPPER, LEAD ATTORNEYS, GARWIN GERSTEIN & FISHER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL BERGER, DAVID F. SORENSEN, LEAD ATTORNEYS, BERGER & MONTAGUE, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DAVID C. RAPHAEL, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, THE SMITH FOOTE LAW FIRM LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DAVID P. SMITH, W. ROSS FOOTE, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PERCY SMITH & FOOTE LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DIANNE M. NAST, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA & NAST, PC, LANCASTER, PA; ERIN C. BURNS, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA NAST PC, LANCASTER, PA; JOHN D. RADICE, LINDA P. NUSSBAUM, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KAPLAN FOX & KILSHEIMER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; SUSAN C. SEGURA, LEAD ATTORNEY, THE SMITH FOOTE LAW FIRM LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DANIEL C. SIMONS, BERGER AND MONTAGUE P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For STEPHEN L. LAFRANCE PHARMACY, D/B/A SAJ DISTRIBUTORS, INC., Plaintiff (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): ANDREW WILLIAM KELLY, STUART E. DESROCHES, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ODOM & DES ROCHES LLP, NEW ORLEANS, LA; BRUCE E. GERSTEIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN AND FISHER L.L.P., NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL BERGER, DAVID F. SORENSEN, LEAD [13] ATTORNEYS, BERGER & MONTAGUE, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DANIEL C. SIMONS, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERGER AND MONTAGUE P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DAVID P. SMITH, W. ROSS FOOTE, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PERCY SMITH & FOOTE LLP, ALEXANDRIA, LA; DIANNE M. NAST, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA & NAST, PC, LANCASTER, PA; ERIN C. BURNS, LEAD ATTORNEY, RODA NAST PC, LANCASTER, PA; JOHN D. RADICE, LINDA P. NUSSBAUM, LEAD ATTORNEYS, KAPLAN FOX & KILSHEIMER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JOSEPH OPPER, LEAD ATTORNEY, GARWIN GERSTEIN & FISHER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; MICHAEL L. ROBERTS, LEAD ATTORNEY, ROBERTS LAW FIRM, LITTLE ROCK, AR.

For WALGREEN CO., THE KROGER CO., SAFEWAY INC., AMERICAN SALES CO., INC., HEB GROCERY COMPANY, LP, Plaintiffs (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): MONICA L. REBUCK, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY ARONCHICH SEGAL & PUDLIN, HARRISBURG, PA; SCOTT E. PERWIN, LEAD ATTORNEY, KENNY NACHWALTER, P.A., MIAMI, FL.

For RITE AID CORPORATION, RITE AID HDQTRS. CORP., JCG (PJC) USA, LLC, ECKERD CORPORATION, MAXI DRUG, INC., D/B/A BROOKS PHARMACY, CVS CAREMARK CORPORATION, Plaintiffs (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): MONICA L. REBUCK, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY ARONCHICH SEGAL & PUDLIN, HARRISBURG, PA; STEVE D. SHADOWEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, HANGLEY ARONCHICK SEGAL & PUDLIN, HARRISBURG, [14] PA.

For CEPHALON, INC., Defendant (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): GREGORY P. TERAN, LEAD ATTORNEY, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE & DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; JAMES C. BURLING, LEAD ATTORNEY, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE & DORR, BOSTON, MA; MARK A. FORD, PETER J. KOLOVOS, LEAD ATTORNEYS, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; MICHELLE D. MILLER, LEAD ATTORNEY, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE AND DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; PETER A. SPAETH, LEAD ATTORNEY, WILMER BUTLER PICKERING HALE AND DORR LLP, BOSTON, MA; ROBERT J. GUNTHER, JR., LEAD ATTORNEY, WILMER CUTLER PICKERING HALE DORR LLP, NEW YORK, NY; FRANK R. EMMERICH, JR., CONRAD O'BRIEN PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; JOHN A. GUERNSEY, CONRAD O'BRIEN GELLMAN & ROHN PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; NANCY J. GELLMAN, CONRAD O'BRIEN GELLMAN & ROHN PC, PHILA, PA.

For MYLAN LABORATORIES, INC., Defendant (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): C. FAIRLEY SPILLMAN, PAUL B. HEWITT, LEAD ATTORNEYS, AKIN GUMP STRAUSS HAUER & FELD LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DAVID L. COMERFORD, JEFFERY A. DAILEY, KATHERINE M. KATCHEN, LEAD ATTORNEYS, MATTHEW RYAN VARZALLY, AKIN GUMP STRAUSS HAUER & FELD LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For TEVA PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD., TEVA PHARMACEUTICALS USA, INC., Defendants (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): [15] JEFFREY B. KORN, LEAD ATTORNEY, WILLKIE FARR GALLAGHER LLP, NEW YORK, NY; JOSEPH E. WOLFSON, LEAD ATTORNEY, STEVENS & LEE, KING OF PRUSSIA, PA; WILLIAM H. ROONEY, WILLKIE, FARR & GALLAGHER, NEW YORK, NY.

For RANBAXY LABORATORIES, LTD., RANBAXY PHARMACEUTICALS, INC., Defendants (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): CHRISTOPHER K. DIAMOND, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, VENABLE LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DANIELLE R. FOLEY, J. DOUGLAS BALDRIDGE, LISA JOSE FALES, LEAD ATTORNEYS, VENABLE, LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; ANTHONY S. VOLPE, JOHN J. O'MALLEY, VOLPE & KOENIG PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For TADEKA PHARMACEUTICAL NORTH AMERICA, INC., Movant (2:06-cv-01797-MSG): NATALIE GRILL EINSIG, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, HARRISBURG, PA.

Judges: MITCHELL S. GOLDBERG, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: MITCHELL S. GOLDBERG

Opinion

[*517] MEMORANDUM OPINION

Currently pending are Defendants' motions to dismiss the antitrust complaints filed by numerous parties. [1] The issue raised in these motions is whether Plaintiffs [*518] have pled sufficient antitrust allegations pursuant to the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, to survive Defendants' motions to dismiss. The answer to this question necessitates a somewhat protracted review of divergent precedent regarding the appropriate [16] framework to apply in analyzing what is commonly referred to as a "reverse payment settlement." These settlements are typically entered into as a result of patent litigation between a brand name drug manufacturer and generic drug manufacturers. The multi-party antitrust litigation before the Court stems from four (4) such reverse payment settlements consummated in late 2005 and early 2006, regarding the drug Provigil(R). [2] The agreements at issue were between the pharmaceutical company Cephalon, Inc., and several generic drug manufacturers (hereinafter "the Generic Defendants"), all of whom are Defendants in the cases before this Court. Plaintiffs generally allege that these agreements constitute an unlawful restraint of trade. For the reasons detailed below, except for selected counts brought under several state statutes, Defendants' motions will be denied.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Structure of the Litigation and Parties

Sixteen (16) separate cases, many of which are class actions, commenced as a result of the patent litigation settlements noted above. These cases are now collectively referred to as the In re Modafinil litigation and were consolidated into four (4) subcategories pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a). These subcategories are: The King Drug Direct Purchaser Class Action; The Vista Healthplan End Payor Class Action; The Apotex Litigation; and The F.T.C. Litigation. A brief description of the Plaintiffs in each of the four (4) cases is as follows:

---

[1] The specific motions at issue are: "Defendant Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss the Direct Purchasers' First Consolidated Amended Complaint and the Rite Aid Complaint," (doc. no. 200); "Generic Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaints of the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs and End Payor Plaintiffs," (doc. no. 201); "Defendant [17] Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss the Walgreen Complaint," (doc. no. 211); and "The Generic Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Complaint Filed by Walgreen Co., et al.," (doc. no. 216), in King Drug Co. of Florence, Inc., et al. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-1797.

"Defendant Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss the Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint of End Payors and the Amended Complaint of Avmed, Inc.," (doc. no. 86); and "Generic Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaints of the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs and End Payor Plaintiffs," (doc. no. 87) in Vista Healthplan, Inc., et al. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-1833.

"Defendant Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss Counts III Through XIII of the Amended Complaint and to Strike Prayers for Relief," (doc. no. 157); and "Generic Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Apotex's First Amended Complaint," (doc. no. 158), in Apotex, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-2768.

"Defendant Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint," (doc. no. 43) in Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Cephalon, Inc., 2:08-cv-2141.

[2] These settlements were reached in the case of Cephalon, Inc. v. Mylan Pharms., Inc., et al., No. 2:03-cv-1394 [18] (D.N.J.).

All direct purchaser proposed class action cases were consolidated into King Drug Co. of Florence, Inc., et al. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-1797. [3] The Plaintiffs in these cases are companies who directly purchased Provigil(R) from Cephalon for re-distribution. The end payor proposed class action cases were consolidated into Vista Healthplan, Inc., et al. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-1833. [4] This [*519] group of Plaintiffs includes individuals who indirectly purchased Provigil(R) and companies who paid for those purchases. The third case involves a generic drug manufacturer, Apotex, [19] who has raised non-infringement and patent invalidity allegations, as well as antitrust claims in Apotex, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-2768. [5] Finally, the Federal Trade Commission (hereainfter "F.T.C.") has brought Sherman Act claims in Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Cephalon, Inc., 2:08-cv-2141.

The Defendants in each of these cases are the parties who entered into four (4) reverse settlement agreements: Cephalon [20] and the Generic Defendants - Barr Laboratories, Inc.; Mylan Laboratories, Inc.; Teva Pharmaceutical Industries, Ltd., and Teva Pharmaceuticals USA, Inc.; and Ranbaxy Laboratories, Ltd., and Ranbaxy Pharmaceuticals, Inc.

B. Procedural History - In re Modafinil Litigation

The In re Modafinil litigation commenced when The King Direct Purchaser Class Action was filed on April 27, 2006, in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. The Vista Healthplan End Payor Class Action was filed three (3) days later on May 1, 2006, followed by The Apotex Litigation on June 26, 2006. Nine (9) other related cases were filed later in 2006 and 2007. The F.T.C. Litigation was filed on February 13, 2008, in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and subsequently transferred to this Court on April 28, 2008. [6]

On April 28, 2009, all of the cases referenced above were re-assigned to the undersigned. At that time, eighteen (18) separate motions were pending, including the motions to dismiss at issue, which were denied without prejudice. The filing of amended consolidated complaints then followed as did Cephalon and the Generic [21] Defendants' filing of consolidated motions to dismiss which are currently before the Court. [7]

C. The Drug at Issue

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration (hereinafter "FDA") approved Cephalon's New Drug Application (hereinafter "NDA") No. 20-717 for Provigil(R) on December 24, 1998. Provigil(R) is a prescription drug used to promote wakefulness in adults with sleep disorders such as shift work disorder, obstructive sleep apnea and narcolepsy. Modafinil, the main pharmacological component of Provigil(R), is a psychostimulant that enhances wakefulness and vigilance. Modafinil is an acetamide that is prescribed in 100 mg and 200 mg tablets and has the efficacy and side effects similar to amphetamines and methylphenidates (e.g., Ritalin(R)), but those drugs are not reasonably interchangeable [22] with Provigil(R). Cephalon's sales of Provigil(R) exceeded $ 420 million in 2004,

---

[3] Rochester Drug Co-Operative, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-1868; Meijer, Inc., et al. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-1911; Burlington Drug Co., Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-2052; J. M. Smith Corp. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-2146; SAJ Distribs., Inc., et al. v. Cephalon, Inc., 2:06-cv-3450; Rite Aid Corp., et al. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:09-cv-3820 (opt out); and Walgreen Co., et al. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:09-cv-3956 (opt out).

[4] Pa. Tpk. Comm'n v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-2020; Langan v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-2507; Pa. Employees Benefit Trust Fund v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-2883; and Avmed, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:07-cv-3793 (opt out).

[5] Consolidated with Apotex, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., 2:09-cv-2416.

[6] Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Cephalon, Inc., 551 F.Supp.2d 21 (D.D.C. 2008).

[7] On February 23, 2010, after bifurcation of Apotex's patent invalidity/non-infringement and antitrust claims, the Court denied "Defendant Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss Counts III Through XIII of the Amended Complaint and to Strike Prayers for Relief," as it related to counts III-V. These counts included the bifurcated patent claims. Apotex, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16940, 2010 WL 678104 (E.D.Pa. Feb. 23, 2010).

$ 500 million in 2005, $ 690 million in 2006, $ 800 million in 2007, and $ 920 million in 2008. (See Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 20, 39-40, 75.)

D. Statutory and Regulatory Framework - The Hatch-Waxman Act

The circuit court cases that are reviewed later in this Opinion provide an extensive [*520] analysis of the statutory and regulatory framework of the Hatch-Waxman Act. Consequently, we will not re-plow the same ground here, but rather summarize portions of the Act that are pertinent to the issues currently before the Court.

Typically, through the submission of a NDA a pharmaceutical company must obtain approval from the FDA to market a prescription drug. This application details all safety and efficacy studies, the components in the drug, the methods used in "the manufacture, process and packaging" of the drug, and any patents issued on the composition or methods of using the drug. 21 U.S.C. § 355(b)(1). The FDA publishes the patent information in the "Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations," otherwise known as the "Orange Book." See FDA Electronic Orange Book (Jan. 2010), http://www.fda.gov/cder/ob/.

Prior [23] to 1984, a generic drug company also had to undertake its own costly studies regarding the efficacy and safety of a drug and file its own NDA. See Schering-Plough Corp. v. Fed. Trade Comm'n, 402 F.3d 1056, 1058-59 n. 2 (11th Cir. 2005). However, in 1984, Congress enacted the Drug Price Competition & Patent Term Restoration Act, commonly known as the Hatch-Waxman Act, Pub.L. No. 98-417, 98 Stat. 1585 (codified at various sections of Titles 21 and 35 of the United States Code). Among its key provisions, the Hatch-Waxman Act HN1[] created the Abbreviated New Drug Application process (hereinafter "ANDA"), which allows a generic drug application to piggyback on safety and efficacy studies conducted for the pioneer drug. See generally 21 U.S.C. § 355(j).

Under the Hatch-Waxman Act, the pharmaceutical company is still required to file a NDA with full-scale safety and efficacy studies listing the patents that generics might infringe in the future. Id. at § 355(b)(1). However, the Hatch-Waxman Act was designed to allow generic companies to bypass the studies required under a NDA and file an ANDA, which requires only that generic companies prove that the new drug is the bioequivalent of a brand name [24] drug on the market. Id. at § 355(j)(2)(A). HN2[] An ANDA filer must, thereafter, select one (1) of the following certifications: (1) that the "patent information has not been filed" on the generic's brand name equivalent (a Paragraph I certification); (2) that a patent on the branded drug has expired (a Paragraph II certification); (3) that a brand name patent exists, including "the date on which such patent will expire," with a promise not to market until that date (a Paragraph III certification); or (4) "that such patent is invalid or will not be infringed by the manufacture, use, or sale of the new drug for which the application is submitted" (a Paragraph IV certification). Id. at § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii).

HN3[] If the generic ANDA filer selects a Paragraph IV certification, it must consult the Orange Book and provide notification to each NDA or patent owner impacted by the ANDA certification "not later than [twenty] days after the date of the postmark on the notice with which the Secretary informs the applicant that the application has been filed." Id. at § 355(j)(2)(B)(ii)(I). The filing of an ANDA Paragraph IV certification allows the patent holders to sue, as it is considered a technical act [25] of infringement. The patent owners have forty-five (45) days to bring an infringement suit against the generic. If the affected patent owners do not file suit, the FDA can approve the ANDA without delay. Id. at § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii). If an affected patent owner brings an infringement suit, approval of the application is automatically stayed for thirty (30) months, or until a district court issues a final decision concluding [*521] that the patent has not been infringed or is otherwise invalid. Id.

HN4[] In order to provide generic drug makers with an incentive to incur the expense and risk of a potential infringement suit by the patent holder, the first ANDA filer maintains a 180-day exclusivity period. Id. at § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv). During this period, the FDA cannot approve any other generic manufacturer's ANDA until 180-days after the earlier of (1) the date of the first ANDA filer's commercial marketing of its generic drug; or (2) the date of a "court [decision] that the patent is invalid or not infringed." Id. at § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii)(I).

E. The Patent

The main patent protecting Cephalon's exclusivity over modafinil in the form of Provigil(R) is the RE'516 patent. Cephalon is the owner by assignment [26] of the RE'516 patent, which expires on October 6, 2014. The Patent and Trademark Office (hereinafter "the PTO") issued the RE'516 patent on January 15, 2002, as a reissue patent for the 5,618,845 patent (hereinafter "'845"), which Cephalon surrendered on that date. In December, 2002, Cephalon requested that the RE'516 patent be listed in the FDA's Orange Book. In addition to the FDA's approval of Provigil(R) in 1998, the FDA granted Provigil(R) pediatric exclusivity, as a result of studies in children, which extended the patent exclusivity to April 6, 2015. (See Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 22, 46.)

The FDA recognized modafinil as a new chemical entity, which under the Hatch-Waxman Act, extended the original date that generic drug companies could file an ANDA to December 24, 2002. [8] The FDA also granted Provigil(R) orphan drug exclusivity because it is indicated for the treatment of a rare disease - narcolepsy. Along with the pediatric exclusivity, the orphan drug exclusivity extended the date that the FDA could approve ANDAs to June, 2006. (See Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 41, 43, 51.)

The RE'516 patent does not cover all tablets that contain modafinil. Rather, the RE'516 patent is a formulation patent for an acetamide derivative, modafinil, having defined particle size. (See Apotex Second Am. Compl., P 52.) Specifically, the RE'516 patent covers a pharmaceutical composition comprised of a "substantially homogenous mixture of modafinil particles, wherein at least 95% of the cumulative total of modafinil particles in said composition have a diameter of less than about 200 microns ([mu] m)." U.S. Patent No. RE37, 516 E col. 10 l. 49-53 (filed Apr. 1, 1999). The modafinil particles have a median diameter ranging between 2 [mu] m and 60 [mu] m. Id. at l. 54-56. The composition and effective amount is between 50 milligrams and 700 milligrams a day. Id. at l. 57-59, 65-68.

In laymen's terms, the patent appears to cover a drug consumed orally, that is composed of at least 95% modafinil particles, which have a diameter less than 200 [mu] m. The drug can contain between 50 and 700 milligrams of the specified modafinil particles and is designed to alter a person's sleep state.

F. *Summary of the Settlement Agreements Between [28] Cephalon and the Generic Defendants

As noted above, Plaintiffs' antitrust allegations stem from Cephalon's four (4) settlement agreements with Teva, Ranbaxy, Mylan, and Barr. Cephalon filed the underlying patent infringement suit against all four (4) Generic Defendants on March 28, 2003, alleging that the Generic Defendants' ANDAs for generic Provigil(R) infringed on Cephalon's RE'516 patent. [*522] The Generic Defendants each asserted patent invalidity, patent unenforceability and/or non-infringement as defenses in that litigation. By February 1, 2006, Cephalon had reached settlement agreements with each of the Generic Defendants, resolving the underlying patent infringement suit.

In each of these settlements, the Generic Defendants agreed not to market their generic versions of Provigil(R) until a date certain in exchange for significant payments by Cephalon for various licensing agreements, supply agreements and research and development deals. The settlement agreements are substantially similar in terms of their relation to the RE'516 patent and Provigil(R), but different in terms of the side-term inducements. Cephalon was expected to pay Teva, Ranbaxy and Barr up to $ 136 million under [29] these agreements and $ 45 million to Mylan. (Apotex Second Am. Compl., P 136; King Second Am. Compl., P 122.) Although each respective agreement has many terms, the pertinent portions of each are discussed below.

Teva settled with Cephalon on December 8, 2005, agreeing that until April 6, 2012, Teva will:

> not make, use, offer to sell, or sell or actively induce or assist any other entity to make, use, offer to sell, or sell any finished pharmaceutical product containing modafinil that is manufactured and sold pursuant to (a) NDA 20-717 and all of its current and future supplements, or (b) an ANDA for which the reference listed drug is (i) Provigil, (ii) any other product that is the subject of NDA 20-717 and all of its current and future supplements, or (iii) any other finished pharmaceutical products that contain the compound modafinil, including, without limitation, its salts, esters, enantiomers, isomers and polymorphs, including without limitation, Provigil, Sparlon,

---

[8] On that date, the four (4) Generic Defendants filed Paragraph IV certifications with respect to the [27] RE'516 patent. (See Apotex Second Am. Compl., P 51.)

> and Nuvigil, sold by Cephalon, its Affiliates, distributors and resellers that is the subject of an NDA or supplemental NDA filed or held by Cephalon for which the RE'516 Patent is listed in the Orange Book . . . .

(Teva [30] Agreement, P 2.1 with definitions.) In turn, Cephalon paid Teva tens of millions of dollars for licenses to Teva's worldwide intellectual property relating to the manufacture, development and formulation of modafinil. (Teva Agreement, P 2.2(a).) Teva also agreed to manufacture and supply modafinil to Cephalon at a fixed price. (Teva Agreement, P 2.4.)

Ranbaxy settled with Cephalon on December 22, 2005, agreeing that until April 6, 2012, Ranbaxy will:

> not make, use, offer to sell, or sell, or actively induce or assist any other entity to make, use, offer to sell, or sell any product that is the subject of ANDA No. 76-595, or the subject of an ANDA filed or held by Ranbaxy or its Affiliates for which the reference listed drug is Provigil, within the United States, or to import or cause to be imported any product that is the subject of ANDA No. 76-595, or the subject of an ANDA filed or held by Ranbaxy or its Affiliates for which the reference listed drug is Provigil, into the United States, except as otherwise permitted under, and according to the terms of, the license granted by Cephalon in this Agreement . . . .

(Ranbaxy Agreement, P 2.1 with definitions.) Ranbaxy then agreed to supply [31] modafinil to Cephalon at a fixed price and gave Cephalon licenses to intellectual property rights related to modafinil. (Ranbaxy Agreement, PP 2.3, 2.5.)

Mylan entered into a settlement agreement with Cephalon on January 9, 2006, agreeing that until April 6, 2012, Mylan will:

> not make, use, offer to sell, or sell, or actively induce or assist any other entity [*523] to make, use, offer to sell, or sell any product that is the subject of the ANDA No. 76-594, or the subject of an ANDA filed or held by Mylan or its Affiliates for which the reference listed drug is (i) Provigil, (ii) any other product that is the subject of NDA 20-717 and all of its current and future supplements (provided that the RE'516 Patent has not been de-listed), or (iii) any other product that is the subject of an NDA or supplemental NDA filed or held by Cephalon for which the RE'516 Patent is listed in the Orange Book (provided that the RE'516 Patent has not been de-listed), within the United States, or to import or cause to be imported any product that is the subject of the ANDA No. 76-594, or the subject of an ANDA filed or held by Mylan or its Affiliates for which the reference listed drug is (i) Provigil, (ii) any [32] other product that is the subject of NDA 20-717 and all of its current and future supplements (provided that the RE'516 Patent has not been de-listed), or (iii) any other product that is the subject of an NDA or supplemental NDA filed or held by Cephalon for which the RE'516 Patent is listed in the Orange Book (provided that the RE'516 Patent has not been de-listed), into the United States, except as otherwise permitted under, and according to the terms of, the license granted by Cephalon in this Agreement . . . .

(Mylan Agreement, P 2.1 with definitions.) Cephalon and Mylan also entered into a production development collaboration agreement on January 9, 2006, for other unrelated products, under which Cephalon has paid Mylan $ 45 million. (King Second Am. Compl., P 122.)

Barr settled with Cephalon on February 1, 2006, agreeing:

> that the RE'516 would be infringed by making, using, offering to sell, or selling any product that is the subject of the ANDA No. 76-597, or the subject of an ANDA filed or held by Barr or its Affiliates for which the reference listed drug is Provigil (the commercial formulation of modafinil developed, manufactured and, as of the date of this Agreement, sold by [33] Cephalon pursuant to FDA approval of Cephalon's NDA 20-717) by Barr and/or its Affiliates within the United States, or by importing or causing to be imported any product that is the subject of the ANDA No. 76-597, or the subject of an ANDA filed or held by Barr or its Affiliates for which the reference listed drug is Provigil (the commercial formulation of modafinil developed, manufactured and, as of the date of this Agreement, sold by Cephalon pursuant to FDA approval of Cephalon's NDA 20-717) by Barr and/or its Affiliates into the United States, without a license to do so . . . .

(Barr Agreement, P 3.1 with definitions.) Barr also agreed that until April 6, 2012:

> it will not sell (a) any modafinil product that is manufactured or sold pursuant to an ANDA for which the reference listed drug is Provigil, or (b) any generic version of Cephalon's Provigil product manufactured pursuant to NDA 20-717, in the United States prior to the effective date of the license granted by Cephalon to Barr pursuant to the terms of the Modafinil License and Supply Agreement . . . .

(Barr Agreement, P 3.2 with definitions.) Cephalon agreed to buy modafinil from Barr through a supply agreement and Barr gave [34] Cephalon licenses to the Ahmed Application. (Barr Agreement, PP 3.4, 3.5.)

G. Summary of Arguments Raised in Defendants' Motions to Dismiss

With the exception of counts I and II of The Apotex Litigation (which relate to the declaratory judgment action on the RE'516 patent), Defendants have collectively moved to dismiss the complaints in [*524] their entirety. Defendants focus the bulk of their argument on the applicability of the scope of the patent test and assert that under this test, the settlement agreements do not go outside the scope of the patent because they do not include products beyond that scope and provide for generic market entry three (3) years prior to the end of the patent. Additionally, Defendants posit that the settlement agreements are pro-competitive and a natural consequence of the Hatch-Waxman Act. [9]

Plaintiffs have raised numerous responses. The F.T.C. in particular has urged that the Cephalon settlement agreements with the Generic Defendants be declared a per se antitrust violation. Collectively, Plaintiffs [35] have pointed to numerous examples where the agreements go beyond the rights afforded to Cephalon under the applicable patent.

II. PRECEDENT - REVERSE PAYMENT AGREEMENTS

A. General Precedent - Patent/Antitrust Cases

Plaintiffs have brought claims under the Sherman Act alleging that Cephalon used the settlements with the Generic Defendants to exclude its horizontal competitors in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. HN5[] With the ultimate goal of stimulating competition and innovation, the Sherman Act provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Although the statute prohibits all restraints of trade, the Supreme Court "has long recognized that Congress intended to outlaw only unreasonable restraints." State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3,10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997). The Sherman Act also states that a monopoly of any part of trade or commerce is illegal. 15 U.S.C. § 2.

HN6[] In determining whether an alleged restraint of trade is "unreasonable," courts generally apply either a per se rule or what is referred to as a "rule-of-reason analysis." [36] State Oil Co., 522 U.S. at 10. A per se analysis is applicable only where courts have previously considered the type of conduct at issue and have found that its expected effects are overwhelmingly anticompetitive. Id. In the rule-of-reason analysis, the question is whether the conduct at issue is anticompetitive "taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed and the restraint's history, nature and effect." Id. The rule-of-reason tests "whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition." Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Ind. Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986) (citations omitted).

By contrast, but also with the goal of stimulating competition and innovation, patent law grants an innovator "the right to exclude others from making, using, offering for sale, or selling the invention throughout the United States or importing the invention into the United States." 35 U.S.C. § 154(a)(1)&(2); see also Dawson Chem. Co. v. Rohm & Haas Co., 448 U.S. 176, 215, 100 S. Ct. 2601, 65 L. Ed. 2d 696 (1980).

---

[9] Defendants also moved to dismiss the complaints on other grounds such as lack of standing and other count specific arguments. (See generally, Defs.' Memo., supra n. 2.)

B. *Precedent [37] - Reverse Payment Agreements

To date, neither the Third Circuit nor any judge in this district has established a [*525] framework under which reverse payment patent settlements should be analyzed. Consequently, the applicable legal standard in this case rests in large part, upon our examination of how other courts have dealt with the issue. See Schaffer v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 301 F.Supp.2d 383, 388 (E.D.Pa. 2003). While the outcomes have varied, those courts that have considered reverse payment agreements all recognize the tension that these agreements create between patent rights and antitrust principles. HN7[] In focusing on the rights afforded by the granting of a patent, one (1) court has noted that:

> Engrafted into patent law is the notion that a patent grant bestows "the right to exclude others from profiting by the patented invention." Thus, the Patent Act essentially provides the patent owner "with what amounts to a permissible monopoly over the patented work."

Schering, 402 F.3d at 1066 (citations omitted).

Other cases have stressed, however, that patent rights cannot create a monopoly beyond the scope of the patent. Mallinckrodt, Inc. v. Medipart, Inc., 976 F.2d 700, 708 (Fed. Cir. 1992) [38] (the possession of a valid patent does not give the patentee any exemption from the provisions of the Sherman Act beyond the limits of the patent monopoly). Thus, if the challenged activity simply serves as a device to circumvent antitrust law, then that activity is typically susceptible to an antitrust suit. Asahi Glass Co., Ltd. v. Pentech Pharms., Inc., 289 F.Supp.2d 986, 991 (N.D.Ill. 2003).

In 2003, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals found a reverse payment settlement to be a per se illegal restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act. Subsequently, however, the Second, Eleventh, and Federal Circuits have taken a different approach and have adopted what is referred to as the "scope of the patent test." [10] In determining which framework to apply to this case, we first briefly review this precedent and its rationale.

1. Sixth Circuit - In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 332 F.3d 896 (6th Cir. 2003).

The [39] dispute in Cardizem arose after the generic manufacturer, Andrx, filed an ANDA with a Paragraph IV certification for a generic version of the drug Cardizem. Id. at 902. Because Andrx was the first generic filer, it obtained the 180-day market exclusivity rights. Id. The manufacturer responded by filing a patent infringement suit and, thereafter, the FDA conditionally approved Andrx's ANDA application, pending the outcome of the infringement litigation. Id.

The manufacturer and Andrx subsequently entered into an agreement that provided quarterly payments of $ 10 million to Andrx. Id. In exchange, Andrx agreed not to market a generic version of Cardizem until the earliest of the following occurred: (1) there was a final, unappealable decision in the patent infringement case allowing Andrx to market the drug; (2) the manufacturer and Andrx entered into a licensing agreement; or (3) the manufacturer entered into a licensing agreement for generic Cardizem with a third party. Id. at 903. Andrx also agreed to not "relinquish or otherwise compromise" its 180-day period of exclusivity. [11] Id. at 902.

---

[10] See also In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126249, 2009 WL 508869 (D.N.J. Feb. 6, 2009). This opinion, authored by a special master in the District of New Jersey, undertakes a comprehensive review of precedent regarding reverse payment settlements and also adopts the "scope of the patent" standard.

[11] The agreement in Cardizem is unique because it delayed the generic manufacturer's entry into [40] the market, but did not terminate the patent infringement suit. Id. at 902. Rather, the quarterly payments were designed to delay entry by the generic manufacturer from the expiration of the thirty (30) month waiting period (or earlier if a district court ruled against the patent) until the resolution of the patent infringement case by the Supreme Court of the United States, either by denying certiorari or hearing the case. Id.

The case was reviewed by the Sixth Circuit after the district court granted the [*526] plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment. Id. at 899-900. The Sixth Circuit held that the settlement agreements were per se illegal as classic horizontal and anticompetitive agreements. Id. at 908. In so ruling, the Sixth Circuit was particularly troubled by the bottleneck effect created by Andrx's agreement not to relinquish its 180-day market exclusivity rights. Id. at 907-08. Because no other competitor could enter the market for the generic drug, the court reasoned that:

> There is simply no escaping the conclusion that the Agreement, all of its other conditions and provisions notwithstanding, was, at its core, a horizontal agreement to eliminate competition in the market [41] for Cardizem CD throughout the entire United States, a classic example of a per se illegal restraint of trade.

Id. at 908.

2. Eleventh Circuit - Valley Drug Co. v. Geneva Pharms., Inc., 344 F.3d 1294 (11th Cir. 2003).

Several months after Cardizem was decided, the Eleventh Circuit reversed a district court's per se antitrust application and grant of summary judgment for the plaintiffs in a case which was factually similar to Cardizem. Id. at 1295. The Valley Drug case involved two (2) separate settlement agreements entered into within one (1) day of each other, whereby the manufacturer agreed to pay generic companies in exchange for the generic companies' agreements to refrain from selling the generic drug until the expiration of the applicable patents and to refrain from transferring their respective 180-day market exclusivity rights as first-filers. Id. at 1300. The district court found the agreements to be per se violations of the Sherman Act, because they were "part of a larger scheme to restrain the domestic sale of generic terazosin hydrochloride." In re Terazosin Antitrust Litig., 164 F.Supp.2d 1340, 1353 (S.D. Fla. 2000). In reversing and remanding, the Eleventh Circuit held that [42] while reverse payment agreements may be viewed as a restraint on competition, they also constitute an enforcement of the exclusivity rights held by the patent holder. Valley Drug, 344 F.3d at 1305-06. Focusing on the lawful rights of the patent holder, the court applied a threshold analysis to determine if the anticompetitive effects of the agreements were within the scope of the patent protection. Id.

In remanding, the Eleventh Circuit instructed the district court to consider the plaintiffs' challenge that the agreements prohibited the marketing of "any" generic terazosin and the generic's agreement not to waive its 180-day exclusivity. Id. at 1311-12. The court stressed that these issues "require consideration of the scope of the exclusionary potential of the patent, the extent to which these provisions of the [a]greements exceed the scope, and the anticompetitive effects thereof." Id. at 1312. The court concluded that any provision of the agreements that went beyond the exclusionary effects of the patent "may be subject to traditional antitrust analysis." Id.

3. Eleventh Circuit - Schering-Plough Corp. v. Fed. Trade Comm 'n, 402 F.3d 1056 (11th Cir. 2005).

The Eleventh Circuit further [43] clarified the standard set forth in Valley Drug when it reversed the F.T.C.'s determination that Schering had entered into illegal [*527] reverse payment agreements. Id. at 1065-66. The court emphasized that because of the inherent anticompetitive rights accompanying a patent, "an analysis of the extent to which antitrust liability might undermine the encouragement of innovation and disclosure, or the extent to which the patent laws prevent antitrust liability for such exclusionary effects" is required. Id. (quoting Valley Drug, 344 F.3d at 1311, n. 27).

The court reiterated that the threshold question was the extent to which the agreements exceeded the scope of the exclusionary potential of the patent and that a finding that the agreements did so would implicate an antitrust analysis. Id. at 1066. Because the agreements at issue allowed for the generic company to enter the market years prior to the expiration of the patent, and no other products were delayed by the agreements, the court found that such agreements were within the exclusionary scope of the patent. Id. at 1068-73.

Notably, the Eleventh Circuit's review encompassed the entire record and decision of the F.T.C. after a full hearing [44] before an administrative law judge, which included numerous witnesses and exhibits. Id. at 1061. This is an entirely different procedural posture than the cases that are before us.

4. Second Circuit - In re Tamoxifen Citrate Antitrust Litig., 466 F.3d 187 (2d Cir. 2006).

Tamoxifen continued the trend towards an analytical framework that examined whether the settlement agreement in question exceeded the scope of the patent. The Second Circuit upheld the district court's granting of the brand name manufacturer's motion to dismiss, reasoning that absent evidence of fraud or sham litigation, "there is no injury to the market cognizable under existing antitrust law, as long as competition is restrained only within the scope of the patent." Id. at 213. It is important to note that this is the only circuit case we are aware of involving a reverse payment settlement where the lawsuit was dismissed at the pleadings stage rather than on a motion for summary judgment.

The underlying agreements in Tamoxifen were entered into after the generic company obtained an order declaring the name brand manufacturer's patent invalid. Id. at 194. While that ruling was pending on appeal, the parties entered into [45] an agreement whereby $ 61 million was paid to the generic in return for their promise to not market the drug at issue, tamoxifen, until the expiration of the patent in 2002. Id. In upholding the district court's dismissal of the plaintiffs' claims, the Second Circuit concluded that while at first blush the reverse payments may seem suspicious, "suspicion abates upon reflection." Id. at 208. The court joined the Eleventh Circuit in holding that the mere fact that "a brand name pharmaceutical company holding a patent paid its generic competitor money cannot be the sole basis for a violation of antitrust law unless the exclusionary effects of the agreement exceed the scope of the patents protection." Id. at 212. The court also focused on the benefits of settlement and emphasized the court's "longstanding adherence to the principle that 'courts are bound to encourage' the settlement of litigation." Id. at 202 (citing Gambale v. Deutsche Bank AG, 377 F.3d 133, 143 (2d Cir. 2004)).

5. Federal Circuit - In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 544 F.3d 1323 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

In Cipro there were four (4) agreements at issue: three (3) settlement agreements between Bayer, the name [46] brand manufacturer and three (3) generic drug manufacturers in similar patent infringement suits, and one (1) supply agreement. Id. at 1328. The first three (3) agreements provided [*528] that the generic manufacturers would not challenge the validity of Bayer's patent covering the drug at issue, Cipro(R), in exchange for payment by Bayer. Id. at 1328-29. Under the fourth agreement, the "Cipro Supply Agreement," Bayer agreed to supply one (1) of the generics with Cipro(R) for resale or, alternatively, make quarterly payments to the generic until six (6) months before the expiration of the patent. Id. Subsequent to the agreements, but prior to the filing of the antitrust suit, Bayer successfully defended its patent in a bench trial. Bayer AG v. Schein Pharm., Inc., 129 F.Supp.2d 705 (D.N.J. 2001). None of the agreements under review implicated the 180-day exclusivity period because the generic manufacturers converted their ANDA filings to Paragraph III certifications under the settlement agreements. Cipro, 544 F.3d at 1329.

The Federal Circuit cited with approval to both the Eleventh and Second Circuits' analysis of reverse payments and applied a rule-of-reason analysis in affirming the district [47] court's grant of the defendants' motion for summary judgment. In so doing, the Federal Circuit found it unnecessary to go beyond the first step of the rule-of-reason analysis because it found no anticompetitive effects beyond the exclusionary zone of the patent. Id. at 1335-36. Further, the court found no evidence of fraud on the PTO or sham litigation, and no manipulation of the 180-day exclusivity period. Id. at 1336. However, the Federal Circuit left open the possibility that any of those three (3) factors, if present, may result in anticompetitive effects outside of the exclusionary zone of the patent. Id. at 1333.

III. APPLICABLE FRAMEWORK

A. The Scope of the Patent Framework Applies

After careful consideration, HN8[] we will apply a framework which examines whether any of the agreements in question exceed the exclusionary patent rights granted to Cephalon. We do so for several reasons.

First, a reflexive conclusion that the agreements in question are per se antitrust violations, as urged by Plaintiffs, and in particular the F.T.C., ignores the "exclusionary" patent rights afforded to Cephalon. Simply stated, a patent grants its owner the lawful right to exclude others. See 35 U.S.C. §§ 271(a) [48] (defining infringement) & 283 (providing injunctive relief for infringement); Dawson Chem. Co. v. Rohm & Haas Co., 448 U.S. 176, 215, 100 S. Ct. 2601, 65 L. Ed. 2d 696 (1980) ("[T]he essence of a patent grant is the right to exclude others from profiting by the patented invention."). As the Eleventh Circuit explained in the Valley Drug case:

> This exclusionary right is granted to allow the patentee to exploit whatever degree of market power it might gain thereby as an incentive to induce investment in innovation and the public disclosure of inventions . . . [A] patentee can choose to exclude everyone from producing the patented article or can choose to be the sole supplier itself, or grant exclusive territorial licenses carving up the United States among its licensees. Within reason, patentees can also subdivide markets in ways other than territorial, such as by customer class . . . .
>
> * * *
>
> [A] patentee's allocation of territories is not always the kind of territorial market allocation that triggers antitrust liability and this is so because the patent gives its owner a lawful exclusionary right.

Valley Drug, 344 F.3d at 1304-05 (citations omitted). Put another way in Asahi Glass, "in a reverse-payment case, the settlement [49] leaves the competitive situation unchanged from before the [d]efendant [*529] tried to enter the market." Asahi Glass, 289 F.Supp.2d at 994.

Adopting the scope of the patent framework takes into account the patent principles noted above. At the same time, to the extent that the agreements in question improperly afford more rights than those granted under the patent, antitrust principles may apply. This approach appears to strike the proper balance between competing patent and antitrust principles.

Second, adopting the scope of the patent framework does not preclude resolution of Plaintiffs' claims that the patent in question was procured by fraud. Indeed, several Plaintiffs have asserted that Cephalon misrepresented material facts regarding its clinical trials to the PTO and that the Generic Defendants were aware of these facts when they entered into the settlement agreements with Cephalon. (King Second Am. Compl., PP 62, 73-81; Rite Aid Compl., PP 50-51, 61-68, 70; Walgreen Compl., PP 52-53, 62-72; Vista Am. Compl., PP 63, 65, 72-78; Avmed Am. Compl., PP 52, 54, 64-70; Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 17, 21-37, 68-69, 71; F.T.C. Am. Compl., PP 44-46.) Applying the scope of the patent framework [50] allows exploration of these allegations.

Third, applying a rule that the reverse payment agreements in this case are per se anticompetitive would tend to ignore the long standing preference under the law favoring settlements. Several circuit courts have emphasized that while analyzing the rights protected by patent and antitrust principles, it is important to consider the general principles favoring settlement of litigation. This consideration also extends to the settlement of patent infringement suits. See Tamoxifen, 466 F.3d at 212 (settlement of patent litigation encouraged for a variety of reasons even if it leads to the survival of monopolies created by what would otherwise be weak patents); Cipro, 544 F.3d at 1333 (there is a long-standing policy in the law in favor of settlements, and this policy extends to patent infringement litigation); Asahi Glass, 289 F.Supp.2d at 994 ("If any settlement agreement is thus to be classified as involving a forbidden 'reverse payment' we shall have no more patent settlements.").

Finally, and as extensively detailed by the Second Circuit in Tamoxifen, reverse payment settlements seem to be a natural consequence of the Hatch-Waxman Act. Schering, 402 F.3d at 1074. [51] Prior to this Act, generic drug manufacturers had to run the risk of entering the market, subjecting themselves to a finding of infringement which would forever preclude them from selling the infringing product, loss of investment revenue, and possible payment of damages to the brand name manufacturer. However, under Hatch-Waxman, the patent holder typically brings suit after the Paragraph IV ANDA filing but before marketing revenues are expended and before the generic exposes itself to possible infringement damages. This framework significantly reduces the risks involved in challenging a patent held by a brand name manufacturer. Settlements of these patent suits seem to be a logical progression of the Hatch-Waxman regulatory framework. We agree with the Eleventh Circuit's reasoning that imposing a per se prohibition on reverse payment settlements would reduce a generic manufacturer's incentive to challenge patents. Id. ; Asahi Glass, 289 F.Supp.2d at 994.

IV. LEGAL ANALYSIS - MOTION TO DISMISS

A. Dismissal Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6)

With the applicable legal framework decided, we now turn to the pending motions to dismiss. HN9[] A motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) [52] for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted [*530] examines the legal sufficiency of the complaint. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) HN10[] requires that a pleading contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." According to the Supreme Court, the Rule 8 pleading standard "does not require 'detailed factual allegations,' but it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). The Iqbal Court recently summarized the pleading standard established in Twombly:

> HN11[] To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Where a [53] complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief.

Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949 (citations omitted).

The Iqbal Court articulated two (2) principles that underlie Twombly's holding. First, HN12[] a court must accept as true all of the factual allegations made in a pleading, but not the legal conclusions. Id. Second, only a complaint that states a "plausible claim for relief survives a motion to dismiss." Id. at 1950. Determining plausibility is a "context specific task." Id. In short, "where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged-but it has not shown-that the pleader is entitled to relief." Id. (citations omitted). The Third Circuit has found that in light of Twombly, it is no longer sufficient to make an unsupported statement asserting an entitlement to relief; instead a complaint must state a claim and the grounds supporting the claim. Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 233-34 (3d Cir. 2008) (citing Twombly, 127 S. Ct. at 1969 n. 8).

B. Allegations in the Complaints

Among the four [54] (4) groups of cases, there are seven (7) complaints before the Court. [12] The complaints are lengthy, some in excess of three hundred (300) paragraphs. They generally allege that the settlement agreements between Cephalon and the Generic Defendants are per se antitrust violations. In the alternative, the complaints also assert that the settlement agreements create antitrust liability because they go beyond the scope of the RE'516 patent. In summary, the complaints allege that the agreements exceed the patent's exclusionary authority in four (4) different ways: (1) the RE'516 patent was invalid, unenforceable, and/or non-infringed; (2) the Generic Defendants agreement not to relinquish their 180-day exclusivity period creates a bottleneck preventing other generic entry, a right not conferred through Cephalon's patent; (3) the individual settlement agreements were part of a larger antitrust conspiracy; and [*531] (4) the settlement agreements prevent the sale of generic equivalents of Provigil(R) that were not at issue in the underlying litigation. The specific allegations set forth in the complaints are summarized as follows:

1. The RE '516 Patent was Invalid, Unenforceable and/or Non-Infringed

---

[12] Specifically, there is one (1) complaint from each of the class [55] Plaintiffs, opt-out Plaintiffs Rite-Aid and related Plaintiffs, and opt-out Plaintiffs Walgreen and related Plaintiffs in The King Drug Direct Purchaser Class Action; one (1) complaint each from the class Plaintiffs and opt-out Plaintiff Avmed in The Vista Healthplan End Payor Class Action; one (1) in The Apotex Litigation; and one (1) in The F.T.C. Litigation.

Plaintiffs first pled that the settlement agreements exceeded the scope of the RE'516 patent because Cephalon knew prior to the underlying patent litigation that the patent was invalid, unenforceable and/or not infringed by the Generic Defendants' proffered products.

Specifically, the complaints assert that Cephalon knew the patent was invalid and/or unenforceable, and, therefore, any settlement agreements based on that patent were outside its scope, because the patent at issue had no scope and Cephalon's knowledge of that fact rendered the patent litigation a "sham." (Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 65-67.) Plaintiffs base these allegations on the following facts:

- Cephalon violated a duty of candor to the PTO, in that the modafinil compositions and methods were [56] developed by a French company, Labortoire L. Lafon, and not by Cephalon, which renders the RE'516 patent, as the reissue patent for the '845 patent, invalid or unenforceable;

- Cephalon bought modafinil from Lafon prior to its patent filing, which could make the patent invalid under the on-sale bar pursuant to 35 U.S.C. § 102(b); and
- Cephalon misrepresented material facts regarding its clinical trials to the PTO.

Plaintiffs allege that the Generic Defendants were aware of the above facts when they entered into the settlement agreements with Cephalon, because the Generic Defendants raised many of the same arguments in their answers and dispositive motions filed in the underlying litigation. Thus, Plaintiffs conclude that the settlement agreements on an invalid and/or unenforceable patent fall outside the scope of the patent, because a patent's scope is bound by its validity and enforceability. (King Second Am. Compl., PP 62, 73-81; Rite Aid Compl., PP 50-51, 61-68, 70; Walgreen Compl., PP 52-53, 62-72; Vista Am. Compl., PP 63, 65, 72-78; Avmed Am. Compl., PP 52, 54, 64-70; Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 17, 21-37, 68-69, 71; F.T.C. Am. Compl., PP 44-46.)

The complaints also allege that [57] if the patent was not infringed by the proposed generic products, then any settlement based on infringement is outside the scope of the patent. In opposition to Defendants' motions to dismiss, Plaintiffs focus on the fact that the RE'516 patent is a narrow formulation patent for modafinil, not a patent on modafinil itself. They assert that the patent for the compound modafinil was issued in 1979 and expired in 2001, and point out that the Generic Defendants' proposed generic products did not infringe on the RE'516 patent as stated in their ANDA's for generic Provigil(R) filed on December 24, 2002, because the generic products had different compositions and/or particle sizes of modafinil. Thus, according to Plaintiffs, if the proposed generic products did not infringe on the RE'516 patent, then settlement agreements based on the infringement of that patent are outside the scope of the patent. (King Second Am. Compl., PP 59-60, 65, 67-70; Rite Aid Compl., PP 48, 52-53, 55-58; Walgreen Compl., PP 50, 54-55, 57-60; Vista Am. Compl., PP 66-69; Avmed Am. Compl., PP 46, 50, 56, 58-61; Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 46, 72; F.T.C. Am. Compl., PP 34, 38-39.)

[*532] In summary, Plaintiffs claim that the [58] underlying litigation was nothing more than "sham" litigation, and that the settlement agreements based on the patent exceeded its scope. The complaints allege that if Cephalon knew its patent was invalid and/or not infringed, then the underlying patent litigation, and subsequent settlement, exceeded the exclusionary power of Cephalon's patent. Thus, Plaintiffs assert that Cephalon entered into the settlement agreements to obtain protection from competition precisely because they knew they could not have won an injunction preventing generic competition from a patent court. Therefore, Plaintiffs explain, Cephalon obtained "relief" above and beyond what it could have obtained from a patent court on the RE'516 patent, and thus, the settlement agreements affording Cephalon market security were outside the scope of the patent. (King Second Am. Compl., PP 83-88, 93; Rite Aid Compl., PP 6, 69, 71, 80, 101; Walgreen Compl., PP 6, 71, 73, 82, 103; Vista Am. Compl., PP 5, 71, 79-81, 83, 88, 107; Avmed Am. Compl., PP 6, 55-56, 63, 71-75, 80, 85, 104; Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 70-79; F.T.C. Am. Compl., P 47.)

2. The Settlements Created a Bottleneck

The second theory pled by Plaintiffs as to how [59] the settlement agreements fall outside the scope of the patent, is that the agreements created a bottleneck preventing entry into the market by other generic companies, such as Apotex. Under the Hatch-Waxman Act, the first ANDA filers, are awarded 180-days of market exclusivity after the RE'516 patent expires or is declared invalid, unenforceable and/or not infringed. Thus, Plaintiffs explain that if the 180-day period of exclusivity is never triggered for the first-filers - here, the Generic Defendants, then all subsequent generic companies such as Apotex will be blocked from the market. Plaintiffs posit that the settlement agreements included provisions in which the Generic Defendants agreed not to give up their 180-day exclusivity, thus preventing other generic companies from entering the market. Plaintiffs' complaints point out that even if the settlement agreements do not explicitly require the Generic Defendants to maintain their 180-day exclusivity, then there were secondary agreements between all of the companies who agreed not to relinquish their first-filer exclusivity. Plaintiffs contend that such agreements are outside the scope of the patent because they extended Cephalon's [60] right to market exclusivity by preventing generic entry beyond that which Cephalon would ordinarily be entitled to by the patent itself. (King Second Am. Compl., PP 49, 51, 56, 108-09, 116, 120, 124, 128, 131-37; Rite Aid Compl., PP 121-24; Walgreen Compl., PP 123-26; Vista Am. Compl., PP 128-30; Avmed Am. Compl., PP 39, 57, 124-27; Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 96, 99, 113-14, 122-24, 146, 159-60, 166, 171-72; F.T.C. Am. Compl., PP 87-90.)

3. The Agreements Were Part of a Larger Antitrust Conspiracy

The third theory pled by Plaintiffs as to how the settlement agreements were outside the scope of the patent is that all of the agreements were part of an overall elaborate horizontal agreement not to compete. Plaintiffs allege that this conspiracy and the ensuing reverse settlement agreements allocated all sales of modafinil in the United States to Cephalon, prevented the sale of generic versions of Provigil(R) for six (6) or more years, and fixed the price of Provigil(R) because there is no generic competition.

In support of these allegations, Plaintiffs highlight that each agreement contained a "most favored nation clause," which guaranteed that each of the Generic Defendants' licensed [61] entry date would be accelerated if any other Generic Defendant [*533] did not settle or entered early. Plaintiffs also point out that each of the agreements contain the same entry date of April 6, 2012. Thus, they assert that in order to induce any individual Generic Defendant to sign the settlement agreements, Cephalon had to induce all of the Generic Defendants to sign the agreements because no Generic Defendant would agree to stay off the market unless all its competitors did so as well. Plaintiffs also allege that agreements contain numerous side-term inducements related to intellectual property licenses, supply agreements, and co-development deals, which were not independent business transactions, but rather, were inexplicably related to the Provigil(R) agreements. In sum, Plaintiffs allege that all of the above amounts to anticompetitive behavior that goes well beyond the exclusivity rights Cephalon ordinarily would have had under the patent. (King Second Am. Compl, PP 7, 85-88, 104-09, 111-28, 180-84; Rite Aid Compl, PP 5, 75, 92, 94-97, 99, 104, 108, 111, 140, 147, 154, 161, 168; Walgreen Compl, PP 5, 77, 94, 96-99, 101, 106, 110, 113, 142, 149, 156, 163, 170; Vista Am. Compl, PP [62] 4, 97-99, 102-06, 111, 114-15, 118, 121, 123, 152; Avmed Am. Compl, PP 5, 79, 96, 98-99, 101-03, 107, 109-11, 113, 115-16, 118, 145; Apotex Second Am. Compl, PP 97, 99, 104, 106, 125-27, 133-40, 146, 168-70; F.T.C. Am. Compl, PP 58-60, 62-64, 66-69, 71-72, 74-77.)

4. The Agreements Prohibit the Sale of Other Products in Addition to Generic Equivalents of Provigil

The fourth theory pled by Plaintiffs as to how the settlement agreements extended beyond the scope of the patent is that the language of the agreements themselves prohibit the sale of products other than generic equivalents of Provigil(R). For instance, Plaintiffs alleged that the Teva and Mylan agreements prohibit the sale of all generic Provigil(R) and generic equivalents of successor products, not just the generic Provigil(R) equivalent at issue in the underlying litigation. As the Direct Purchasers point out in their responses to the Court's follow-up questions to counsel, the Teva agreement "provides that Teva will not sell 'Subject Modafinil Products - defined in P 1.19 to include any generic version of Provigil, any generic versions of drugs that may be subject to future supplements . . . and any other Cephalon modafinil [63] products.'" (Direct Purchasers' Resp. to Ct.'s Questions, p. 3.) Plaintiffs also claimed that the Ranbaxy and Barr settlement agreements prohibit the sale of not only the generic Provigil(R) at issue in the underlying litigation, but also any other generic versions of Provigil(R), which is also outside the scope of the patent. (King Second Am. Compl., PP 108, 116, 120, 124; Rite Aid Compl., PP 96, 104, 108, 111; Walgreen Compl., PP 98, 106, 110, 113; Apotex Second Am. Compl., P 147; F.T.C. Am. Compl., PP 79-81.)

C. Under the Scope of the Patent Test Plaintiffs Have Pled a Plausible Cause of Action

Having determined that the scope of the patent test framework applies, and viewing the complaints and the allegations contained therein in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, we find that sufficient facts have been alleged to establish that the agreements in question grant greater rights than those conferred under the patent. As detailed above, the complaints allege fraud and misrepresentations to the PTO, non-infringement, patent invalidity, "sham litigation," the creation of a bottleneck, antitrust conspiracy and agreements between Cephalon and the Generic Defendants regarding products [64] not protected by Cephalon's patent. Indeed, some of the terms of the agreements referenced in the complaints contemplate "future supplements" and "any other Cephalon Modafinil Products."

[*534] To the extent that a factual basis exists on any of these theories, Plaintiffs may be able to prevail under the scope of the patent test and move forward with their antitrust claims. Indeed, Cephalon seems to acknowledge, at least as it pertains to the issue of "side-term inducements," that a factual dispute may exist. In their motions to dismiss, Cephalon argues that the "record" will support that these "side-term inducements" were in fact "legitimate business arrangements for which fair consideration was paid." (Cephalon Memo., p. 8. (doc. no. 200 in 2:06-cv-1797).) The record in this case has not, however, been developed. If in fact, Cephalon and the Generic Defendants did have "side-term inducements," a fact we must accept as true at this stage of the case, those facts could sustain Plaintiffs' antitrust claims. Consequently, plausible antitrust allegations have been pled.

The reasoning of several cases previously discussed supports our conclusion that Defendants' request to have the case dismissed [65] at this stage should be rejected. For instance, in Valley Drug, in reversing the district court's determination that the settlement agreements were per se illegal, the Eleventh Circuit noted that on remand the district court should consider the allegations raised by plaintiffs that the agreements went beyond the scope of the patent. Valley Drug, 344 F.3d at 1312-13. Plaintiffs' allegations included claims that the agreements exceeded the scope of the patent due to the fact that they: (1) prohibited marketing of non-infringing products; (2) prohibited marketing of non-infringing products beyond a court's declaration of invalidity of the patents; and (3) prohibited the generic companies from waiving the 180-day exclusivity period. Id. at 1306 n. 18. The court stressed that, "these prohibitions may be beyond the scope of Abbott's lawful right to exclude, and, if so, would expose appellants to antitrust liability for any actual exclusionary effects resulting from these provisions that appellees can prove at the causation and damages stages of litigation." Id. The court also noted that the plaintiffs' allegations that the litigation that led to the settlement was a "sham" should also be [66] considered by the district court. Id. at 1306.

On remand, the district court did in fact conclude that the agreements exceeded the scope of the patent. The court reached this conclusion as the agreement by the generic companies to refrain from entering the market until there was a final, non-appealable judgment of invalidity against the patent, exceeded the exclusionary power of that patent because similar protection could not have been obtained by enforcing the patent through litigation. In re Terazosin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 352 F.Supp.2d 1279, 1307-08 (S.D.Fla. 2005).

Many of the same claims that were raised in Valley Drug that eventually led to a finding in favor of the plaintiffs are also pressed by Plaintiffs in this case. For instance, Plaintiffs allege that the agreements cover all generic modafinil products and include products not covered by any of Cephalon's patents. (King Second Am. Compl, PP 108, 116, 120, 124; Rite Aid Compl, PP 96, 104, 108, 111; Walgreen Compl, PP 98, 106, 110, 113; Apotex Second Am. Compl, P 147; F.T.C. Am. Compl, PP 79-81.) The Eleventh Circuit explicitly recognized that such agreements could expose the brand name manufacturer to antitrust [67] liability. Valley Drug, 344 F.3d at 1312 ("Any provisions of the [a]greements found to have effects beyond the exclusionary effects of Abbott's patent may then be subject to traditional antitrust analysis."). Further, Plaintiffs allege that Cephalon knew their patent was invalid from the beginning, and therefore any agreement exceeds the scope of the patent, because [*535] an invalid patent has no scope. (King Second Am. Compl, PP 62, 73-81; Rite Aid Compl, PP 50-51, 61-68, 70; Walgreen Compl, PP 52-53, 62-72; Vista Am. Compl, PP 63, 65, 72-78; Avmed Am. Compl, PP 52, 54, 64-70; Apotex Second Am. Compl, PP 17, 21-37, 68-69, 71; F.T.C. Am. Compl, PP 44-46.) While the Eleventh Circuit did not address the validity of this argument, they did state that "many lower courts" recognize that these claims are valid under antitrust law. Valley Drug, 344 F.3d at 1309.

In Schering, the Eleventh Circuit vacated a F.T.C. determination that reverse settlement agreements violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Schering, 402 F.3d at 1066-68. In reversing the F.T.C. and reiterating that "the scope of the exclusionary potential of the patent" must be considered, the court noted that the plaintiffs had not raised [68] allegations that the patent itself was invalid or that the resulting infringement suits were "shams." Id. Here, unlike Schering, Plaintiffs have alleged that the patent is invalid and that Cephalon committed a fraud on the PTO. (King Second Am. Compl., PP 62, 73-81; Rite Aid Compl., PP 50-51, 61-68, 70; Walgreen Compl., PP 52-53, 62-72; Vista Am. Compl., PP 63, 65, 72-78; Avmed Am. Compl., PP 52, 54, 64-70; Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 17, 21-37, 68-69, 71; F.T.C. Am. Compl., PP 44-46.) Moreover, at this stage of the litigation, wherein we are examining the complaints, we must accept as true Plaintiffs' contentions that the agreements were drafted as broadly as possible, affording Cephalon greater exclusionary rights than they may be entitled to under the patent. This is far different than the conclusions reached in Schering where the court found that the agreements in question "demonstrate an efficient narrowness," and did so after review of a comprehensive administrative court hearing. Schering, 402 F.3d at 1073.

In Tamoxifen, the court, in validating a reverse payment agreement, noted that "so long as the patent litigation is neither a sham nor otherwise baseless, the patent holder [69] is seeking to arrive at a settlement in order to protect that to which it presumably entitled: a lawful monopoly." Tamoxifen, 466 F.3d at 208-09. In the case before us, Plaintiffs have alleged sham litigation and, at this stage, we are obligated to view this allegation in a favorable light and allow discovery to proceed. (King Second Am. Compl., PP 83-88, 93; Rite Aid Compl., PP 6, 69, 71, 80, 101; Walgreen Compl., PP 6, 71, 73, 82, 103; Vista Am. Compl., PP 5, 71, 79-81, 83, 88, 107; Avmed Am. Compl., PP 6, 55-56, 63, 71-75, 80, 85, 104; Apotex Second Am. Compl., P 79; F.T.C. Am. Compl., P 47.)

Certain findings in the Federal Circuit Cipro case also support our decision to deny Defendants' motions to dismiss. There, the reverse payment agreements all required the generic companies to convert their ANDA filings to Paragraph III certifications, thereby alleviating any possible bottleneck by forfeiting any claim to 180-day exclusivity and clearing a path for other generic companies to challenge the brand name manufacturer's patent. Cipro, 544 F.3d at 1329. Here, Plaintiffs have alleged that the Generic Defendants have done just the opposite by maintaining their 180-day exclusivity with [70] no intention of going to market. (King Second Am. Compl., PP 49, 51, 56, 108-09, 116, 120, 124, 128, 131-37; Rite Aid Compl., PP 121-24; Walgreen Compl., PP 123-26; Vista Am. Compl., PP 128-30; Avmed Am. Compl., PP 39, 57, 124-27; Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 96, 99, 113-14, 122-24, 146, 159-60, 166, 171-72; F.T.C. Am. Compl., PP 87-90.) Indeed, there is no mention in any of Defendants' memoranda filed in support of their motions to dismiss that the agreements required the Generic Defendants to convert their ANDA filings [*536] from Paragraph IV certifications to Paragraph III certifications. Moreover, unlike the claims before this Court, in Cipro, there were no allegations of fraud or inequitable conduct before the PTO. Rather, the strength of the brand name manufacturer's patent was demonstrated multiple times when it successfully defended patent infringement suits against subsequent generic ANDA Paragraph IV filers. Cipro, 544 F.3d at 1329.

We also note that all of the circuit courts, except one (1), who have adopted the scope of the patent framework and dismissed the case, did so where the litigation was at the summary judgment stage of the proceedings. [13] In Valley Drug, the facts were [71] "largely uncontested by the parties," which is certainly not the case here. Valley Drug, 344 F.3d at 1298 n. 7. In Schering, the Eleventh Circuit's analysis was based upon review of an extensive administrative hearing which included numerous exhibits and witnesses, also not present here. Schering, 402 F.3d at 1061. Given the fact that a Rule 16 Conference in these cases has not yet taken place, the record before us is only Plaintiffs' complaints, which must be viewed in a light favorable to Plaintiffs, and the settlement agreements.

---

[13] Although the district court in Tamoxifen dismissed the complaint at the motion to dismiss phase, the facts of Tamoxifen are almost entirely different from those in the case sub judice. In re Tamoxifen Citrate Antitrust Litig., 277 F.Supp.2d 121 (E.D.N.Y. 2003). Most notably, the plaintiffs in Tamoxifen made no allegations whatsoever that the terms of the agreements went outside the scope of the patent, either by restricting the sale of additional drugs not implicated by the patent, or by virtue of fraud on the PTO by the patent-holder. Id. Rather, the Second Circuit's discussion focuses on the good-faith nature of the settlement after a district court [72] ruling of invalidity. Tamoxifen, 466 F.3d at 204-06. Those issues are simply not present in our case.

Lastly, we have carefully considered the costs of discovery and are cognizant of the admonition that if there is "nothing suspicious about the circumstances of patent settlement," a third party should not be permitted to haul the parties to a patent settlement "over the hot coals of antitrust litigation." Asahi Glass, 289 F.Supp.2d at 992. It may ultimately be proven that the agreements in question do not confer Cephalon greater exclusionary authority than the patent, and that any "suspicions" about the settlements are unfounded. Nonetheless, Plaintiffs have set forth sufficient, plausible allegations to establish the contrary.

IV. STANDING

Defendants also challenge Plaintiffs' standing to pursue antitrust claims. HN13[] The following te is applicable in determining antitrust standing:

> (1) the causal connection between antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; (3) the [73] directness of the injury, which addresses the concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144, 1165-66 (3d Cir. 1993). This "standing analysis is essentially a balancing test comprised of many constant and variable factors and that there is no talismanic test capable of resolving [*537] all § 4 standing problems." Bravman v. Bassett Furniture Indus., Inc., 552 F.2d 90, 99 (3d Cir. 1977).

The only argument raised by Defendants regarding standing is causation. Defendants assert that Plaintiffs' argument that "but-for" Defendants' settlement agreements a generic company would have entered the market is too speculative to satisfy the causation requirement for standing. (See, i.e., Cephalon Memo., pp.40-44 (doc. no. 200 in 2:06-cv-1797); Cephalon Memo., pp. 29-32 (doc. no. 157 in 2:06-cv-2768).) Plaintiffs respond that "but-for" Defendants' settlement agreements, companies such as the Generic Defendants and/or Apotex would have entered [74] the market resulting in Provigil(R) being available in cheaper generic form. Plaintiffs' claim that the overcharges on their purchases of Provigil(R) and Apotex's barrier to market entry are precisely the type of injuries which directly resulted from the specific type of antitrust activity the Sherman Act was intended to prevent. (See, i.e., Direct Purchasers Memo., pp. 57-62 (doc. no. 213 in 2:06-cv-1797); Apotex Memo., pp. 20-26 (doc. no. 161 in 2:06-cv-2768).)

In the In re K-Dur Antitrust Litigation, the court extensively addressed this very issue, and, consequently, we will not engage in a protracted analysis here. In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 338 F.Supp.2d 517, 534-35 (D.N.J. 2004). The court found that the plaintiffs' allegations that anticompetitive agreement(s) between a name brand manufacturer and generic companies, which blocked generic entry into the market causing higher prices on the name brand pharmaceutical product, could survive a motion to dismiss premised upon lack of standing. Id. at 535. The court reasoned that it was the alleged anticompetitive agreement(s) which caused the antitrust injury, not the Hatch-Waxman Act, because the Hatch-Waxman Act was designed to [75] promote competition between name brand manufacturers and generic companies. [14] Id.

Here, the direct purchaser and end payor Plaintiffs have alleged that absent the anticompetitive settlement agreements between Cephalon and the Generic Defendants, they would have been able to purchase generic Provigil(R) at significantly reduced prices. (King Second Am. Compl., P 8; Rite Aid Compl., P 10; Walgreen Compl., P 10; Vista Am. Compl., P 6; Avmed Am. Compl., P 8.) Therefore, the direct purchaser and end payor Plaintiffs have sufficiently pled an antitrust injury which stems from the Defendants' conduct, and accordingly, meet the pleading requirements for standing.

---

[14] The court distinguished the facts before it from those in City of Pittsburgh v. West Penn Power Co., 147 F.3d 256 (3d Cir. 1998), because of the distinctive designs of the applicable statutory framework. K-Dur, 338 F.Supp.2d at 535. That same analysis is applicable to the instant cases as well.

As to the Defendants' challenge to Apotex's standing in the antitrust context, we have previously addressed Apotex's standing to pursue a declaratory judgment action on the RE'516 and '346 patents in *Apotex, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16940, 2010 WL 678104, at * 3-6*. [76] There, we held that Apotex's injury was premised on the barrier to market entry as a result of Defendants' anticompetitive settlement agreements. The same analysis which applied in the patent declaratory judgment framework applies to Apotex's standing in the antitrust context and thus, Apotex's claims will be allowed to proceed.

[*538] V. ADDITIONAL ISSUES RAISED IN THE DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS

A. Vista Healthplan Class Action - Count IV - For Compensatory and Multiple Damages Under Antitrust and/or Consumer Protection Statutes of Indirect Purchaser States and Avmed - Count II - Violation of Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act

The class Plaintiffs in The Vista Healthplan End Payor Class Action have brought claims under the antitrust and/or consumer protection statutes of twenty-six (26) states, and Avmed has brought claims under the consumer protection statute of Florida. Defendants have moved to dismiss all of these claims for a litany of reasons. The end payor class Plaintiffs voluntarily withdrew their claims under the antitrust statutes of Louisiana, Massachusetts and New York, and their claims under the consumer protection statutes of Kentucky, Louisiana and Wisconsin, [77] and consequently, the motions to dismiss will be granted regarding those claims. (Plaintiff Memo., p. 65 n. 2 (doc. no. 92 in 2:06-cv-1833).) Additionally, Defendants moved to dismiss the end payor class Plaintiffs' claims under Florida's antitrust statute, Fla. Stat. Ann. § 542.15 (West 2010), and the end payor class Plaintiffs did not respond to that portion of the motion. Therefore, the Court will consider this issue conceded and the motions to dismiss will be granted on that claim as well. The remaining issues in the motions to dismiss will be addressed in the order in which they have been raised.

Defendants first assert that all consumer protection and antitrust claims brought where none of the named Plaintiffs reside should be dismissed for lack of standing. [15] (See Cephalon Memo., p. 22 (doc. no. 86 in 2:06-cv-1833).) In support of their argument, Defendants rely almost entirely on In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 260 F.R.D. 143 (E.D.Pa. 2009). This reliance is misplaced because, while the court in Wellbutrin held that it was proper to determine standing prior to class certification and considered only the named plaintiffs, the court went on to find the named plaintiffs [78] had standing in any state in which their member constituents resided. Id. at 156.

In this case, end payor class Plaintiffs have alleged that Plaintiff District Council 37 Health & Security Plan has members residing in forty-nine (49) states, while Plaintiff Pennsylvania Employees Benefit Trust Fund has over 270,000 members, residing in a number of states. (Vista Am. Compl., PP 16-17.) Therefore, Plaintiffs "have identified an injury in fact that is fairly traceable to conduct taking place in states where their members purchased" Provigil(R). Wellbutrin, 260 F.R.D. at 156. The injuries "would be redressed by a favorable determination under the laws of the states where their members purchased" Provigil(R). Id. Plaintiffs, therefore, have standing in forty-nine (49) states, including the twenty-six (26) named in their complaints.

Defendants next argue that all of the state law claims should be dismissed because the statutes must be construed consistently with federal antitrust law. (See Cephalon Memo., p. 25 (doc. [79] no. 86 in 2:06-cv-1833).) Accepting arguendo that Defendants are correct in their interpretation of the state statutes, this argument must still be rejected because the federal antitrust claims are proceeding.

[*539] Defendants next argue that the claims under the Mississippi, Utah, and West Virginia antitrust statutes should be dismissed because the statutes only apply to conduct which is primarily intrastate. (See Cephalon

---

[15] The named end payor class Plaintiffs reside in Pennsylvania and New York. (Vista Am. Compl., PP 13-17.) Avmed, an opt-out Plaintiff, resides in Florida. (Avmed Am. Compl., P 16.)

Memo., p. 34 (doc. no. 86 in 2:06-cv-1833).) The laws of Mississippi, Utah, and West Virginia, however, do not have such a requirement. Consequently, Defendants' argument on that point is meritless.

HN14[] Under Mississippi law, Plaintiffs need "only have to plead facts that would lead to a reasonable inference that the defendant and its co-conspirators wanted the Mississippi vendors to charge Mississippi consumers a higher price as a result of the lack of competition." Hood ex rel. State v. BASF Corp, 2006 WL 308378, at * 10 (Miss. Ch. Jan. 17, 2006). The allegations in Plaintiffs' complaint clearly allege such facts. (See Vista Am. Compl., PP 147-48, 175.)

The Utah Antitrust Act has no such requirement, but instead bars all antitrust activity with regard to "trade or commerce." [80] The statute defines "trade or commerce" as "all economic activity involving, or relating to, any commodity, service, or business activity." Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-913 (West 2010). The Defendants' citation to a definition of "commerce" from a separate section of the Utah Code is unconvincing. (See Cephalon Memo., p. 35 (doc. no. 86 in 2:06-cv-1833).)

With regard to West Virginia, Defendant asks this Court to find that the statute is limited to intrastate commerce based on a single line from Anziulewicz v. Bluefield Cmty. Hosp., Inc., 531 F.Supp. 49, 53 (S.D. W.Va. 1981), a case discussing federal jurisdiction and the Supremacy Clause. Id. This issue has not been specifically addressed in West Virginia; however, the West Virginia antitrust statute HN15[] specifically dictates that it is to be "construed liberally." W. Va. Code § 47-18-16 (West 2010). One (1) sentence from a case completely unrelated to the issues before this Court is insufficient to warrant a finding to the contrary.

Finally, Defendants argue that the end payor Plaintiffs have not alleged fraudulent or deceptive conduct, and, therefore, their claims under various consumer protection laws should be dismissed. (See Cephalon Memo., [81] p. 41 (doc. no. 86 in 2:06-cv-1833).) Accepting the Plaintiffs' claims as true, Plaintiffs have clearly alleged that Cephalon and the Generic Defendants engaged in fraudulent or deceptive conduct by entering into confidential illegal agreements with the goal of keeping the price of Provigil(R) artificially high. (See Vista Am. Compl., PP 97-124.) See, e.g., Cox v. Microsoft Corp., 8 A.D.3d 39, 778 N.Y.S.2d 147, 148 (N.Y.App.Div. 2004).

B. Vista Healthplan Class Action - Count V - Unjust Enrichment and Avmed - Count III - Unjust Enrichment

Defendants argue that the end payor Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims should be dismissed because Plaintiffs cannot establish a violation of state and/or federal law. As has been previously discussed, this argument fails because Plaintiffs have pled sufficient facts to establish violations of antitrust law at this stage in the litigation. Defendants also argue that the end payor Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim should be dismissed as an "end-run" around statutory limitations on remedies. (Cephalon Memo., p. 47 (doc. no. 86 in 2:06-cv-1833).) Several courts, however, have found just the opposite. End payor unjust enrichment claims survived motions to dismiss [82] in In re Terazosin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 220 F.R.D. 672, 679 n. 40 (S.D.Fla. 2004), and *In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 105 F.Supp.2d 618, [540] 669-71 (E.D.Mich. 2000). [16] The courts also explained that HN16[] unjust enrichment claims are viable regardless of the applicable state antitrust laws. Id. Furthermore, it has long been recognized that plaintiffs are allowed to plead alternative causes of action and unjust enrichment is commonly recognized as one (1) of those permissible alternative causes of action. See, e.g., Terazosin, 220 F.R.D. at 697 n. 40. Accordingly, we will not dismiss the end payors' unjust enrichment counts.

C. Apotex - Count XII - Patent Misuse

Cephalon has moved to dismiss Apotex's patent misuse claim but admits that "[t]he standard for patent misuse mirrors the scope of the patent test for an antitrust claim - i.e., the conduct is lawful so long as it does not restrain competition to any greater extent than the underlying patents." [83] (Cephalon Memo., p. 33 (doc. no. 157 in 2:06-cv-2768) citing Monsanto Co. v. McFarling, 363 F.3d 1336, 1341 (Fed. Cir. 2004); and Mallinckrodt, 976 F.2d

---

[16] The court in Cardizem also rejected the defendants' arguments regarding privity under New York law, and for the purposes of these motions, we will adopt the same analysis and ruling on that issue. Cardizem, 105 F.Supp.2d at 669-71.

at 704.) As we have thoroughly addressed the issue of the scope of the patent test and its application to the facts as pled by all Plaintiffs, including Apotex, we will not reiterate that analysis here. Given that Apotex has sufficiently pled facts establishing that the settlement agreements could go outside the scope of the patent (see supra Section IV, subsection C), we also find that Apotex has sufficiently pled facts to survive Cephalon's motion to dismiss the patent misuse claim.

D. Apotex - Count XIII - Tortious Interference with a Prospective Business Relationship

Cephalon has also moved to dismiss Apotex's tortious interference with a prospective business relationship claim. Cephalon argues that Apotex's claim fails because it has not identified any potential customer with whom the Defendants interfered, the settlement agreements do not restrict anything beyond the scope of the patent, and the claims cannot be based on mere speculation. (Cephalon Memo., pp. 36-38 (doc. no. 157 in 2:06-cv-2768).)

The second argument fails for the [84] very reasons extensively addressed above. (See supra Section IV, subsection C.) As to points one (1) and three (3) of Cephalon's argument:

> HN17[] it has been held in an antitrust case similar to this that the "allegation that [a name brand manufacturer] brought a sham patent infringement suit against [a generic manufacturer] with the purpose of keeping it out of the generic [drug] market [was] sufficient to state a claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantages."

Abbott Labs. v. Teva Pharms. USA, Inc., 432 F.Supp.2d 408, 433 (D.Del. 2006) citing SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Apotex Corp., 383 F.Supp.2d 686, 704 (E.D.Pa. 2004). Apotex has sufficiently pled that the underlying litigation was a sham and that the sham litigation resulted in agreements which were designed to keep other generic companies, such as Apotex, off the market and interfere with their prospective business relationships. (Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 79, 96, 99, 113-14, 122-24, 146, 159-60, 166, 171-72, 294, 296-300.) Therefore, we will not dismiss count XIII of Apotex's second amended complaint.

E. Apotex - Striking Prayers for Relief

Cephalon has moved to strike Apotex's prayer for relief which seeks a [85] Court order mandating that the Generic Defendants [*541] waive their 180-day first-filer exclusivity. (Apotex Second Am. Compl., P 301(i).) Cephalon suggests that this prayer for relief is not appropriate because under 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(D)(i)(V) only the F.T.C. or the Attorney General may seek such relief if they successfully challenge a violation of antitrust law. (Cephalon Memo., pp. 38-39 (doc. no. 157 in 2:06-cv-2768).) 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(D) provides several ways in which a generic company may forfeit their 180-day first-filer exclusivity, including section (i)(V) addressed above. Given the relatedness of The F.T.C. Litigation to The Apotex Litigation and the several different types of forfeiture events, the applicability of which has yet to be determined in the cases at hand, the Court will not strike Apotex's prayer for relief (i) at this point in the litigation.

Cephalon has also moved to strike Apotex's prayer for relief which seeks a Court order that "the provisions in the agreements between Cephalon and the Generic Defendants that allows for the Generic Defendants to launch generic versions of modafinil upon a third party launch of generic versions of modafinil" be stricken [86] and that "the Generic Defendants not be allowed to enter the market prior to April, 2012." (Apotex Second Am. Compl., P 301(j) & (k).) Cephalon's sole argument for striking this prayer for relief is that the entry provision in the settlement agreements is pro-competitive, so there is no injury justifying such relief by the Court. Apotex has pled, however, that the settlement agreements are anticompetitive and for the purposes of the motions to dismiss that is controlling. (Apotex Second Am. Compl., PP 96, 117.) Therefore, the Court will not strike Apotex's prayer for relief (j) and (k).

VI. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, Defendants' motions to dismiss will be denied in part and granted in part, as explained in this Opinion. Our Order follows.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 29th day of March, 2010, upon consideration of Defendants' Motions to Dismiss, Plaintiffs' responses in opposition, and for the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum Opinion, it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

1) In The King Drug Direct Purchaser Class Action - King Drug Co. of Florence, Inc., et al. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-1797, "Defendant Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss the Direct Purchasers' First [87] Consolidated Amended Complaint and the Rite Aid Complaint," (doc. no. 200); "Generic Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaints of the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs and End Payor Plaintiffs," (doc. no. 201); "Defendant Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss the Walgreen Complaint," (doc. no. 211); and "The Generic Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Complaint Filed by Walgreen Co., et al.," (doc. no. 216), are DENIED.

2) In The Vista Healthplan End Payor Class Action - Vista Healthplan, Inc., et al. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-1833, "Defendant Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss the Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint of End Payors and the Amended Complaint of Avmed, Inc.," (doc. no. 86); and "Generic Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaints of the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs and End Payor Plaintiffs," (doc. no. 87), are GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. The Motions are GRANTED in that the Vista Healthplan End Payor Class Plaintiffs' claims under the antitrust statutes of Florida (Count IV - P (d)), Louisiana [*542] (Count IV - P (i)), Massachusetts (Count IV - P (k)) and New York (Count IV - P (r)), and claims under the consumer protection statutes of Kentucky [88] (Count IV - P (h)), Louisiana (Count IV - P (i)) and Wisconsin (Count IV - P (z)) are DISMISSED. The Motions are DENIED in all other regards.

3) In The Apotex Litigation - Apotex, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., et al., 2:06-cv-2768, "Defendant Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss Counts III Through XIII of the Amended Complaint and to Strike Prayers for Relief," (doc. no. 157); and "Generic Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Apotex's First Amended Complaint," (doc. no. 158), are DENIED.

4) In The F.T.C. Litigation - Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Cephalon, Inc., 2:08-cv-2141 -"Defendant Cephalon, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint," (doc. no. 43), is DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendants shall file Answers to Plaintiffs' Complaints on or before April 19, 2010. A Rule 16 Conference is scheduled for 10:00 a.m. on Thursday, April 22, 2010, in a Courtroom to be assigned. Counsel should contact Chambers at (267) 299-7500, two (2) days prior for Courtroom assignment. Attendance is limited to two (2) counsel per party.

At any time, but no later than April 19, 2010, counsel may submit to the Court suggestions regarding the scheduling of fact discovery; expert discovery; depositions, including [89] coordination with depositions in the bifurcated Apotex patent declaratory judgment action; and dispositive motions. The submissions are limited to three (3) pages, and joint submissions are encouraged.

BY THE COURT:

MITCHELL S. GOLDBERG, J.

Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp. (In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig.)

United States District Court for the District of Maryland

March 30, 2010, Decided

MDL 1332; Civil No. JFM-05-1087

Reporter

699 F. Supp. 2d 730 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30756 ; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,983

IN RE MICROSOFT CORP. ANTITRUST LITIGATION; NOVELL, INC., v. MICROSOFT CORP.

Subsequent History: Reversed by, Remanded by Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 9062 (4th Cir. Md., May 3, 2011)

Prior History: Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 505 F.3d 302, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 24101 (4th Cir. Md., 2007)

Core Terms

operating system, anticompetitive, software, products, functionality, distributors, cooperate, license, anticompetitive conduct, competitor, consumers, discount, parties, percent, monopolist, namespace, assigned, monopoly, markets, relevant market, antitrust, tolled, monopoly power, foreclosure, foreclose, alleges, summary judgment, monopolization, resellers, argues

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

A motion for summary judgment should be granted when there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The materiality of facts is determined by the underlying substantive law. A genuine dispute about a material fact exists if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. When considering a motion for summary judgment, a district court draws reasonable inferences and views the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN2[] Regulated Industries, Communications

Although the summary judgment standard does not differ when applied to antitrust claims, because of the unusual entanglement of legal and factual issues frequently presented in antitrust cases, the task of sorting them out may be particularly well-suited for Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 utilization.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN3[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

Under Utah law, a court looks to the language of the contract to determine its meaning and the intent of the contracting parties. Only if the language of the contract is ambiguous will a court consider extrinsic evidence of the parties' intent.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN4[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

The Utah Supreme Court, while not disavowing the holding in Ward, has clarified its meaning and states that the Court did not intend that a judge allow surrounding circumstances to create ambiguity where the language of a contract would not otherwise permit and that a correct application of the Ward rule to determine what the writing means begins and ends with the language of the contract.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN5[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

Where the parties have attached the same meaning to a promise or agreement or a term of art, it is interpreted in accordance with that meaning. Under that rule, in determining the subjective intent of the parties to a contract, a court ordinarily looks only to their contemporaneous conduct, not to what they aver they intended after a controversy with a third party has arisen. The parties' intent must be gathered from the perspective of a reasonably intelligent person acquainted with the contemporary circumstances. That is both sensible and fair because there is no reason that the law should countenance the parties to an agreement retrospectively placing a subjective interpretation upon the agreement's language, contrary to its objective meaning, to the detriment of a third person who has become embroiled in a dispute with one of the parties to the agreement.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN6[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

Where the language within the four corners of the contract is unambiguous, the parties' intentions are determined from the plain meaning of the contractual language.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN7[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

Under Utah law where the language of a contract is not ambiguous, courts are to resolve its meaning by looking within its four corners. To attempt to identify the potentialities that were known to the contracting parties at the time the agreement was entered into would, in effect, be to inquire into their subjective intentions and undermine the principle that unambiguous contract language must be construed objectively and reasonably.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Contracts Law > Third Parties > General Overview

Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Assignments > General Overview

HN8[] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

Although the assignment of antitrust claims must be express, courts have found valid transfers where all-inclusive language was used.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN9[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

A complaint need only contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). Although specific facts are not necessary, the complaint must give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN10[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

To violate § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, the defendant must (1) have monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) engage in monopolizing conduct-that is, willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident. To prove the second element, the plaintiff generally must show that the defendant (a) engaged in anticompetitive conduct that (b) caused anticompetitive harm in the relevant market. The plaintiff must prove that the defendant (1) possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power through exclusionary conduct and (3) caused antitrust injury. Exclusionary conduct is defined as conduct, other than competition on the merits or restraints reasonably necessary to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power. However, those last two issues, anticompetitive conduct and causation/anticompetitive harm, are not neat, distinct inquiries, but often involve overlapping considerations and analyses.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

HN11[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, reads: Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN12[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Some courts break a monopolization analysis into three elements: (1) monopoly power, (2) willful acquisition/maintenance of monopoly power, or anticompetitive conduct, and (3) causation. Regardless of how the elements are organized, the substantive analysis remains the same.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN13[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Although a monopolist generally has a right to refuse to cooperate with a competitor, this right is not unqualified: a refusal to cooperate may be anticompetitive if it is an attempt to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency. That said, courts should be very cautious in recognizing exceptions to the right to refuse to cooperate because of the uncertain virtue of forced sharing and the difficulty of identifying and remedying the anticompetitive conduct by a single firm.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN14[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

In determining whether a refusal to cooperate is impermissible, a court may consider the entirety of the monopolist's pattern of conduct, the potential impact on consumers, and the monopolist's motive--for example, whether the monopolist had a legitimate business justification for its actions or sacrificed short-term profits in an effort to destroy a competitor. The unilateral termination of a voluntary and thus presumably profitable course of dealing suggests a willingness to forsake short-term profits to achieve an anticompetitive end.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN15[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

In explaining the right to refuse to cooperate, antitrust law generally only imposes negative, not positive, duties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN16[] Sherman Act, Claims

Even though exclusivity arrangements are often analyzed under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, such exclusionary conduct may also be an element in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim. Exclusive contracts, in certain circumstances, may give rise to a § 2 violation even though the contracts foreclose less than the roughly 40 percent or 50 percent share usually required in order to establish a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN17[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To prove a monopolization claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, the plaintiff generally must prove not only that the defendant's conduct was anticompetitive, but also that it caused anticompetitive harm in the relevant market. More specifically, the plaintiff must establish that it suffered injury caused by conduct which damaged the competitive process itself. In most § 2 cases, that analysis hinges on whether the exclusionary conduct harmed competition in the market in which the plaintiff was competing with the defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN18[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To satisfy this causation requirement, a plaintiff needs to show that the conduct at issue contributed significantly to a defendant's continued monopoly power. Exclusionary conduct is defined as conduct, other than competition on the merits or restraints reasonably necessary to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power. Section 2 liability requires that the pricing have a measurable impact on the plaintiff's overall viability as a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN19[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

Under the contributed significantly standard, the plaintiffs need not present direct proof that a defendant's continued monopoly power is precisely attributable to its anticompetitive conduct. To require such proof would require that the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 liability turn on a plaintiff's ability or inability to reconstruct the hypothetical marketplace absent a defendant's anticompetitive conduct, which would only encourage monopolists to take more and earlier anticompetitive action. When a firm has engaged in anticompetitive conduct, courts should be reluctant to demand too much certainty in proving that such conduct caused anticompetitive harm because to some degree, the defendant is made to suffer the uncertain consequences of its own undesirable conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN20[] Sherman Act, Claims

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, reads, in part, that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN21[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

Exclusive dealing occurs when a buyer agrees to purchase, license or lease all or a substantial portion of its requirements of a product or service exclusively from a particular seller. Agreements violate the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, when they unreasonably restrain trade. Exclusive dealing agreements that are alleged to violate § 1 are evaluated under the Rule of Reason, which balances the procompetitive justifications against the anticompetitive harm. The substantial foreclosure framework basically serves as a proxy for the Rule of Reason in analyzing exclusive dealing allegations. The Tampa Electric framework clearly is to determine the anticompetitive effects of exclusive-dealing arrangements. Under Tampa Electric, § 1 liability requires the plaintiff to prove that (1) the agreements in question were in fact exclusive, and (2) the exclusive dealing substantially lessened competition--that is, the agreements foreclosed competition in a substantial share of the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN22[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, only covers contracts, combinations or conspiracies. In contrast to the pattern of unilateral conduct that was considered in analyzing a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN23[] Sherman Act, Claims

To be considered exclusive under antitrust laws, an agreement must either expressly preclude a party from doing business with the defendant's competitors, or highly incentivize or have the practical effect of exclusivity. In analyzing a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim, the unilaterally imposed quantity discounts can foreclose the opportunities of rivals when a dealer can obtain its best discount only by dealing exclusively with the dominant firm. Exclusive dealing arrangements typically involve requirements contracts, non-competition clauses, and agreements giving discounts in exchange for exclusivity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN24[] Clayton Act, Claims

Section 5(i) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(i), provides that government antitrust proceedings toll the statute of limitations for private antitrust actions based in whole or in part on any matter complained of by the government. The governing test is whether the matters complained of in the private action bear a real relation to a matter complained of in the government suit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN25[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To succeed on a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claim under Tampa Electric, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant's conduct foreclosed competition in a substantial share of the relevant market. Substantial foreclosure depends on many factors, the parties' market strength, the degree of exclusivity, business justifications for the agreement, duration of the agreement, barriers to entry in the market, etc., but requires that the agreements at issue cover at least 20 percent of the relevant market, and usually significantly more than that. The roughly 40 percent or 50 percent share usually required in order to establish a § 1 violation. The lowest coverage courts and commentators have found significant is 20 percent and courts have found agreements covering up to 50 percent of the market to not be substantial. The relevant market for that purpose includes the full range of selling opportunities reasonably open to rivals.

Counsel: [1] For Blaine Cox, on behalf of himself and other consumers similarly situated (JFM-00-1242), Debra Cunningham, (JFM-00-1242), Elizabeth Strickland, (JFM-00-1242), Rene Gonzalez, (JFM-00-1242), Eric Ferrell, on behalf of themselves and others similarly sitiuated (JFM-00-1242), Plaintiffs: David D Shelby, Robert B Roden, Shelby and Cartee LLC, Birmingham, AL; M Shane Luckado, Law Office, Birmingham, AL.

For Wayne Mims, Individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1243), Plaintiff: Alan M Mansfield, PRO HAC VICE, Dennis Stewart, Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes and Lerach, San Diego, CA; Andrew Steven Friedman, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman and Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; David J Bershad, Robert A Wallner, Milberg Weiss Bershad and Schulman LLP, New York, NY; David Daniel Weinzweig, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman and Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Kenneth J Vianale, Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes and Lerach, Boca Raton, FL; Leonard B Simon, Lerach Coughlin Stoia Geller Rudman and Robbins LLP, San Diego, CA; Mark D Bogen, PRO HAC VICE, Law Office of Mark D Bogen, Deerfield, FL; Michael James Flannery, Carey and Danis LLC, St Louis, MO.

For Clay Tyler, (JFM-00-1244), Peter Haklar, on behalf of [2] themselves and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1244), Plaintiffs: Donald F Hildre, Dougherty Hildre Dudek and Haklar, San Diego, CA; Stanley M Chesley, Waite Schneider Bayless and ChesleyCo LPA, Cincinnati, OH.

For Gravity Inc, as class representatives and individually (JFM-00-1247), Plaintiff: Gregory Baruch, J Daniel Leftwich, Michael J Quinn, R Stephen Berry, Berry and Leftwich, Washington, DC; Mark C Hansen, Kellogg Huber HansenTodd Evans and Figel PLLC, Washington, DC; Michael K Kellogg, Steven F Benz, Kellogg Huber Hansen Todd Evans and Figel PLLC, Washington, DC; Nelson Roach, Nix Patterson and Roach, Daingerfield, TX; Scott K Attaway, Kellogg Huber Hansen Todd and Evans PLLC, Washington, DC.

For 403 West Loop 820 N, (JFM-00-1247), Plaintiff: Gregory Baruch, J Daniel Leftwich, Michael J Quinn, R Stephen Berry, Berry and Leftwich, Washington, DC; Mark C Hansen, Kellogg Huber HansenTodd Evans and Figel PLLC, Washington, DC; Michael K Kellogg, Steven F Benz, Kellogg Huber Hansen Todd Evans and Figel PLLC, Washington, DC.

For Eleaders Inc, a corporation (JFM-00-1248), Plaintiff: Thomas Graham Thompson, Jr, Finkelstein Thompson Loughran, Washington, DC; Tracy Diana Rezvani, Finkelstein [3] Thompson and Loughran, Washington, DC.

For Franklin L DeJulius, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-1249), Plaintiff: David J Frantz, Conlon Frantz Phelan and Varma, Washington, DC.

For Paul A Deiter, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1250), Plaintiff: Justin Witkin, Aylstock Witkin Sasser PLC, Gulf Breeze, FL; Paul T Gallagher, Law Office, Washington, DC; Robert J Wozniak, Jr, Freed Kanner London & Millen, LLC, Bannockburn, IL.

For Eric S Lazarus, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-1251), Plaintiff: Alan Michael Grunspan, Kaufman Miller Dickstein and Grunspan, Miami, FL; Alice McInerney, Kirby McInerney and Squire, New York, NY; Daniel Hume, Kirby McInerney and Squire LLP, New York, NY.

For To The Rescue Comprehensive Computer Services, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1252), Plaintiff: D Michael Campbell, Campbell and Associates, Miami, FL.

For Precision Billing Services Inc, (JFM-00-1256), MSC Systems Inc, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1256), Plaintiffs: William F Sasser, Carey and Danis, St Louis, MO.

For Gary Leach, on behalf of [4] themselves and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1256), Plaintiff: Douglas R Sprong, Carr Korein Tillery Kunin Montroy Cates, Belleville, IL.

For Elizabeth A Wilson, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-1257), Plaintiff: Daniel Hume, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kirby McInerney and Squire LLP, New York, NY; Alice McInerney, Kirby McInerney and Squire, New York, NY; Robert W Coykendall, Morris Laing Evans Brock and Kennedy Chtd, Topeka, KS.

For Jay S Quigley, individually and on behalf of all persons similarly situated in the USA (JFM-00-1258), Plaintiff: Frank C Dudenhefer, Jr, John J Cummings, III, Cummings Cummings and Dudenhefer, New Orleans, LA; Gladstone N Jones, III, Randall A Smith, Sarah R Ranier, Smith Jones and Fawer, New Orleans, LA; Spiro J Verras, Jones Verras and Freiberg LLC, New Orleans, LA.

For John W Redmann, individually and on behalf of all persons similarly situated in the USA (JFM-00-1258), Plaintiff: Gladstone N Jones, III, Randall A Smith, Sarah R Ranier, Smith Jones and Fawer, New Orleans, LA; Spiro J Verras, Jones Verras and Freiberg LLC, New Orleans, LA.

For D's Pet Supplies Inc, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-1259), [5] Plaintiff: Andrew J Morganti, Miller Faucher and Cafferty LLP, Ann Arbor, MI; Christopher Lovell, Lovell and Stewart LLP, New York, NY; Patrick E Cafferty, Miller Faucher and Cafferty LLP, Ste 885, Ann Arbor, MI.

For David Bach, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-1260), Plaintiff: Alice McInerney, Kirby McInerney and Squire, New York, NY; Daniel Hume, Kirby McInerney and Squire LLP, New York, NY; Elwood S Simon, Brimingham, MI; John P Zuccarini, Elwood S Simon and Associates PC, Brimingham, MI; Lance C Young, PRO HAC VICE, Birmingham, MI.

For The Rubbright Group, individually and on behalf of those similarly situated (JFM-00-1261), James M Burt, (JFM-00-1261), Reclaim Center Inc, individually and on behalf of those similarly situated (JFM-00-1261), Plaintiffs: Michelle K Enright, Law Office, Minneapolis, MN; Richard M Hagstrom, Law Office, Minneapolis, MN.

For Steven Nielsen, individually and as representative of all persons similarly situated (JFM-00-1262), Plaintiff: Ben Barnow, Barnow and Goldberg, Chicago, IL; Daniel J Petroski, Jr, Vahldiek Cano Grayson Hovenkamp Petroski, Houston, TX; David H Weinstein, PRO HAC VICE, Weinstein Kirchenoff Scarlato [6] and Goldman, Philadelphia, PA; George R Serdar, Madhulika Jain, Messerli and Kramer, Minneapolis, MN; James M Ziegler, Kenneth B McClain, Ralph K Phalen, Humphrey Farrington and McClain PC, Independence, MO; William R Steinmetz, Norris and Rieselbach, Milwaukee, WI.

For Raymond Pryor, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-1263), Plaintiff: Christopher Lovell, Lovell and Stewart LLP, New York, NY; Jonathan Kord Lagemann, Law Office, New York, NY.

For Seastrom Associates LTD, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-1264), Plaintiff: Christopher Lovell, Gary S Jacobson, Lovell and Stewart LLP, New York, NY.

For Chris Campbell, on his own behalf and through whom a class of persons similarly situated may also each appear despite their great numbers (JFM-00-1267), Plaintiff: Gregg Meyers, Gregg Meyers Attorney at Law, Charleston, SC; J David Flowers, Law Office, Greenville, SC; Michael S Seekings, Charleston, SC.

For Denise Davenport, individually and (JFM-00-1268), doing business as, D&D Staffing, Plaintiff: Robert L Lieff, Lieff Cabraser Heimann and Bernstein LLP, San Francisco, CA; Thomas Matthew Sobol, Hagens Berman LLP, Boston, MA; [7] William Gordon Ball, Ball and Scott, Knoxville, TN.

For Sara Cheeseman, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1269), Plaintiff: Jacob B Perkinson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Dennis J Johnson, Johnson and Perkinson, South Burlington, VT.

For Ronald Rodjenski, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1269), Plaintiff: Dennis J Johnson, Johnson and Perkinson, South Burlington, VT.

For Harold A Phillips, (JFM-00-1271), Plaintiff: Alice McInerney, Kirby McInerney and Squire, New York, NY; Daniel Hume, Kirby McInerney and Squire LLP, New York, NY; Joshua I Barrett, Rudolph L DiTrapano, Sean P McGinley, Ditrapano Barrett and Dipiero, Charleston, WV.

For Matthew W O'Neill, individually and as representative of all similarly situated individuals (JFM-00-1272), Plaintiff: Ben Barnow, Barnow and Goldberg, Chicago, IL; Daniel J Petroski, Jr, Vahldiek Cano Grayson Hovenkamp Petroski, Houston, TX; William R Steinmetz, Norris and Rieselbach, Milwaukee, WI.

For Robert Weinke, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1273), David Jaffee, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1603), Plaintiffs: Alan M Mansfield, PRO [8] HAC VICE, Dennis Stewart, Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes and Lerach, San Diego, CA; David J Bershad, Robert A Wallner, Milberg Weiss Bershad and Schulman LLP, New York, NY; Kenneth J Vianale, Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes and Lerach, Boca Raton, FL; Leonard B Simon, Lerach Coughlin Stoia Geller Rudman and Robbins LLP, San Diego, CA.

For Idy Klein, individually and on behalf of all of those similarly situated (JFM-00-1602), Dawn Brandt, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2146), Plaintiffs: Charles Selcer Zimmerman, Zimmerman Reed, Minneapolis, MN; Stanley M Chesley, Waite Schneider Bayless and ChesleyCo LPA, Cincinnati, OH.

For Avi Mandel, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-1604), Plaintiff: Joseph M Weiss, Law Office, New York, NY; Jules Brody, Stull Stull and Brody, New York, NY; Lynn Lincoln Sarko, PRO HAC VICE, Keller Rohrback LLP, Seattle, WA.

For John Glase, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-1605), Bruce Wright, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-1605), Plaintiffs: Edward W Cochran, Cochran and Cochran, Shaker Heights, OH.

For Johanna M McWhinney, individually [9] and on behalf of all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1606), Plaintiff: Kenneth P McKay, Law Office, Pittsburgh, PA.

For South Dakota Association of Plumbing Heating and Cooling Contractors, a non-profit corporation (JFM-00-1607), Plaintiff: James C Robbennolt, Olinger Lovald Robbennolt McCahren, Pierre, SD.

For Johnnie Moon, (JFM-00-1608), Plaintiff: Christopher Lovell, Lovell and Stewart LLP, New York, NY; F Thomas Olson, Hall Charne Burce and Olson, Milwaukee, WI.

For Robert Lee Colebank, individually and as representative of all persons similarly situated (JFM-00-1610), Plaintiff: Ben Barnow, Barnow and Goldberg, Chicago, IL; Daniel J Petroski, Jr, Vahldiek Cano Grayson Hovenkamp Petroski, Houston, TX; David H Weinstein, PRO HAC VICE, Weinstein Kirchenoff Scarlato and Goldman, Philadelphia, PA; James F Humphreys, James Humphreys and Associates LC, Charleston, WV.

For Bryan K Manson, (JFM-00-2302), Plaintiff: David W Dogan, III, Dogan and Wilkinson, Jackson, MS.

For Silverware Ltd, an English Corp. (JFM-00-1682), Datacrown LTD, an English Corp. on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1682), Plaintiffs: James P Ulwick, Kramon and Graham PA, Baltimore, MD; Melissa [10] H Maxman, Baker and Hostetler, Washington, DC; Michael M Baylson, Duane Morris and Hecksher, Philadelphia, PA.

For Data Unit AG, a Swiss Corp. (JFM-00-1682), Plaintiff: Melissa H Maxman, Baker and Hostetler, Washington, DC.

For Fred Luce, (JFM-00-1740), Plaintiff: Mario N Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump and Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Edward Michael O'Brien, (JFM-00-1817)(JFM-02-3832), Plaintiff, Pro se, Santa Barbara, CA.

For Cynthia M Aikens, (JFM-00-2132), Plaintiff: Ben Barnow, Barnow and Goldberg, Chicago, IL; Daniel J Petroski, Jr, Vahldiek Cano Grayson Hovenkamp Petroski, Houston, TX; David H Weinstein, PRO HAC VICE, Weinstein Kirchenoff Scarlato and Goldman, Philadelphia, PA; Kenneth B McClain, Humphrey Farrington and McClain PC, Independence, MO; Michael G Stag, Sacks and Smith LLC, New Orleans, LA.

For Clair Falgoust, (JFM-00-2133), Carlton Falgoust, on behalf of themselves and all other persons similarly situated (JFM-00-2133), Plaintiffs: Daniel E Becnel, Law Offices of Daniel E Becnel, Reserve, LA; Dianne M Nast, Roda and Nast PC, Lancaster, PA; Richard Joseph Arsenault, PRO HAC VICE, Alexandria, LA; Thomas J Kliebert, Jr., Kliebert and Heltz, Gramercy, LA.

For Manual Knight, [11] (JFM-00-2134), Plaintiff: Thomas Coffin Willcox, Law Office of Thomas Willcox, Washington, DC; William Charles Claiborne, III, Law Offices of William Claiborne, Washington, DC.

For Webster T Knight, (JFM-00-2134), James Rudasil, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2134), Plaintiffs: Thomas Coffin Willcox, Law Office of Thomas Willcox, Washington, DC.

For Aubrey Bernard, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2135), Plaintiff: Richard D Heideman, Heideman Nudelman and Kalik PC, Washington, DC.

For O'Sullivan Hicks and Patton LLP, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2137), Plaintiff: Justin Witkin, Aylstock Witkin Sasser PLC, Gulf Breeze, FL; Raymond Lawler, Law Office, Town and Country Professional Offices, Marion, IL.

For Carl C Conrad, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2138), Plaintiff: T Evan Schaeffer, Carey and Danis, St. Louis, MO.

For Geraldine Guice, (JFM-00-2140), Plaintiff: Charles E Griffin, Griffin and Associates, Jackson, MS.

For William Brand Pryor, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2141), Plaintiff: Christopher Lovell, Lovell and Stewart [12] LLP, New York, NY; Morgan W Bentley, Law Office, Newark, NJ.

For Pacific Coast Systems, (JFM-00-2142), Teri Gordon, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2142), Elham Shirzai, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2142 & 00-2145), Plaintiffs: Bennet McConaughy, Sandler Ahern and McConaughy, Seattle, WA; William M Audet, The Alexander Law Firm, San Jose, CA.

For Michael Shevekov, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2142 & 00-2144), Plaintiff: Bennet McConaughy, Sandler Ahern and McConaughy, Seattle, WA.

For Donald J Gianni, Jr, (JFM-00-2147), Rinaldo Veltri, (JFM-00-2147), Mario Traffichini, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2147), Plaintiffs: M Eric Frankovitch, Frankovitch Anetakis Colantonio and Simon, Weirton, WV.

For John F Siegenthaler, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated (JFM-99-3897), Caren M McCall, (JFM-99-3897), Plaintiffs: Ronald B Rubin, Circuit Court for Montgomery County, Rockville, MD.

For Larry A Penix, individually and on behalf of all those similarly situated (JFM-00-2148), Turner Corporation, (JFM-00-2139), Plaintiffs: Christopher Lovell, [13] Lovell and Stewart LLP, New York, NY.

For Pryce M Haynes, II, (JFM-00-2149), Plaintiff: Alan M Mansfield, PRO HAC VICE, Dennis Stewart, Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes and Lerach, San Diego, CA; Leonard B Simon, Lerach Coughlin Stoia Geller Rudman and Robbins LLP, San Diego, CA; Michael James Flannery, Carey and Danis LLC, St Louis, MO.

For John K Heidlage, (JFM-00-1265), Ryan D Reynolds, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-1265), Thomas McCaleb, (JFM-00-1265, 00-1266 & 00-2117), Vicki McCaleb, (JFM-00-1265 & 00-2117), Gale Ruffin, (JFM-00-1265, 00-1266 & 00-2117), Steven Master, (JFM-00-1266), Thomas Infante, (JFM-00-1266), James Woods, (JFM-00-1266), Leyton T Brown, (JFM-00-1266), Plaintiffs: Robert Heuck, II, Waite Schneider Bayless and Chesley Co LPA, Cincinnati, OH; Stanley M Chesley, Waite Schneider Bayless and ChesleyCo LPA, Cincinnati, OH; Wilbert B Markovits, Waite Schneider Bayless and Chesley Co LPA, Cincinnati, OH.

For Linda Dameron Kloth, (JFM-00-1265, 00-1266 & 00-2117, Plaintiff: Christopher Lovell, Lovell and Stewart LLP, New York, NY; Mary N Strimel, United States Department of Justice, Antitrust Division Networks and Technology Section, Washington, [14] DC; Michael D Hausfeld, Cohen Milstein Hausfeld and Toll PLLC, Washington, DC; Robert Heuck, II, Waite Schneider Bayless and Chesley Co LPA, Cincinnati, OH; Robert J Wozniak, Jr, Freed Kanner London & Millen, LLC, Bannockburn, IL; Stanley M Chesley, Waite Schneider Bayless and ChesleyCo LPA, Cincinnati, OH; Wilbert B Markovits, Waite Schneider Bayless and Chesley Co LPA, Cincinnati, OH.

For Daniel C Ray, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2441), Julie Tinkham, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2450), Plaintiffs: Charles Selcer Zimmerman, Zimmerman Reed, Minneapolis, MN; Robert Heuck, II, Waite Schneider Bayless and Chesley Co LPA, Cincinnati, OH; Stanley M Chesley, Waite Schneider Bayless and ChesleyCo LPA, Cincinnati, OH; Wilbert B Markovits, Waite Schneider Bayless and Chesley Co LPA, Cincinnati, OH.

For GTI System Integrators, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2443), Plaintiff: Daniel C Girard, Girard Gibbs LLP, San Francisco, CA, PRO HAC VICE; William A Kershaw, PRO HAC VICE, Kronick Moskovitz Tiedemann and Girard, Sacramento, CA.

For Tzirl Fine, on behalf of herself and others similarly situated [15] (JFM-00-2449), Plaintiff: Norman L Lippitt, Jyman and Lippitt, Birmingham, MI.

For Derek M Prentice, on behalf of himself and all other Oklahoma citizens similarly situated (JFM-00-2451), Kurt C Carter, on behalf of themselves and all other Oklahoma citizens similarly situated (JFM-00-2451), Plaintiffs: Larry Derryberry, Derryberry Quigley Solomon and Neifeh, Oklahoma City, OK.

For James T Brems, (JFM-00-2445), Plaintiff: Christopher Lovell, Lovell and Stewart LLP, New York, NY; Patrick M Roby, Elderkin Law Firm, Cedar Rapids, IA.

For Tim Applegate, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2448), Plaintiff: Alan M Mansfield, PRO HAC VICE, Dennis Stewart, Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes and Lerach, San Diego, CA; David J Bershad, Robert A Wallner, Milberg Weiss Bershad and Schulman LLP, New York, NY; Kenneth J Vianale, Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes and Lerach, Boca Raton, FL; Leonard B Simon, Lerach Coughlin Stoia Geller Rudman and Robbins LLP, San Diego, CA; Mark D Bogen, PRO HAC VICE, Law Office of Mark D Bogen, Deerfield, FL; Michael James Flannery, Carey and Danis LLC, St Louis, MO.

For Paul L Howard, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated (JFM-00-2446), [16] Plaintiff: James Fletcher Keller, Waite Schneider Bayless and Chesley Co, Cincinnati, OH; Robert Heuck, II, Waite Schneider Bayless and Chesley Co LPA, Cincinnati, OH; Stanley M Chesley, Waite Schneider Bayless and ChesleyCo LPA, Cincinnati, OH; Wilbert B Markovits, Waite Schneider Bayless and Chesley Co LPA, Cincinnati, OH.

For John A Supernovich, (JFM-00-3471), Marlene K Supernovich, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated (JFM-00-3471), Plaintiffs: Alfred G Yates, Jr, Law Offices of Alfred G Yates Jr, Pittsburgh, PA; Paul M Goltz, Law Office, Pittsburgh, PA.

For Sherwood, Plaintiff: Edmund L Carey, Jr, Barrett Johnston and Parsley, Nashville, TN.

For Automatik Design Inc, individually and on behalf of all persons similarly situated in the State of Louisiana(JFM-02-153), Plaintiff: Frank C Dudenhefer, Jr, Cummings Cummings and Dudenhefer, New Orleans, LA; Gladstone N Jones, III, Smith Jones and Fawer, New Orleans, LA; Spiro J Verras, Jones Verras and Freiberg LLC, New Orleans, LA.

For State of West Virginia, ex rel Darrell V McGraw Jr Attorney General (JFM-02-2091), Plaintiff: Benjamin L Bailey, Bailey and Glasser LLP, Charleston, WV; Douglas L Davis, West Virginia [17] Attorney Generals Office, Charleston, WV; John W Barrett, Barrett Law Firm PLLC, Charleston, WV.

For Netscape Communications Corp, Case transferred to MDL from D., D.C., C.A. No. 1:02-97, Plaintiff: James P Ulwick, Kramon and Graham PA, Baltimore, MD.

For Sun Microsystem, Plaintiff: John Bucher Isbister, William Stuart Heyman, Tydings and Rosenberg LLP, Baltimore, MD; Kirk Robert Ruthenberg, Michael Asher Schlanger, Sonnenschein Nath and Rosenthal LLP, Washington, DC; Robert M Galvin, Day Casebeer Madrid and Batchelder LLP, Cupertino, CA.

For Be Incorporated, Plaintiff: James T Southwick, Susman Godfrey LLP, Houston, TX; Parker C Folse, III, Susman Godfrey LLP, Seattle, WA.

For Burst.com Inc, Plaintiff: Bruce Joshua Wecker, Spencer Hosie, Hosie Frost Large and McArthur, San Francisco, CA; Robert J Yorio, Carr and Ferrell LLP, Palo Alto, CA.

For Keith F Cooper, as responsible person and liquidating trustee for CHS Electronics, Inc., on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated (JFM-02-3332), Plaintiff: Robert J Wozniak, Jr, Freed Kanner London & Millen, LLC, Bannockburn, IL.

For Conway, Mackenzie & Dunleavy, P.C., as Trustee of INCA Computer Company, u/a/d 12/10/98, on behalf of [18] itself and all others similarly situated (JFM-02-3331), Plaintiff: Christopher James Cormier, Cohen Milstein Hausfeld and Toll PLLC, Washington, DC; Robert J Wozniak, Jr, Freed Kanner London & Millen, LLC, Bannockburn, IL.

For Rhoda Henning, (JFM-02-3920), Plaintiff: Elwood S Simon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Brimingham, MI; Robert J Wozniak, Jr, Freed Kanner London & Millen, LLC, Bannockburn, IL.

For John Roby, (JFM-03-741), Henry Mascagni, (JFM-03-743), Hayley J. Gardner, (JFM-03-744), Steve Grubb, (JFM-03-745), Linda Stewart, (JFM-03-746), Murline Addington, (JFM-03-747), Travis D. McHann, Jr., (JFM-03-748), Billy Lewis, (JFM-03-749), Booker T. Bailey, Jr., (JFM-03-750), James Pigg, (JFM-03-751), Angela Brinkley, (JFM-03-752), Delanious Harried, (JFM-03-753), Gertrude Green, (JFM-03-754), Camelia Calvert, (JFM-03-755), Mary Wyatt, (JFM-03-756), Emma Walton, (JFM-03-757), Iletha Green, (JFM-03-758), Plaintiffs: Brent Hardy Hazzard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hazzard Law LLC, Jackson, MS; Christopher W Cofer, Cofer and Associates PA, Jackson, MS.

For Michael NMI Lewis, (JFM-03-742), Plaintiff: Brent Hardy Hazzard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hazzard Law LLC, Jackson, MS.

For Realnetworks, Inc., JFM-04-968, Plaintiff: G Stewart [19] Webb, Jr, LEAD ATTORNEY, Venable LLP, Baltimore, MD; John David Byars, Reeghan W Raffals, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar and Scott LLP, Chicago, IL; Eric R Olson, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar and Scott LLP, Denver, CO; James P Ulwick, Kramon and Graham PA, Baltimore, MD; Lynn Marie Engel, The Summit Law Group, Seattle, WA; Sean William Gallagher, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar and Scott LLP, Courthouse Pl, Chicago, IL.

For Birdsong Tractor and Supply, Inc., Plaintiff: Richard Lee Quintus, Roberts Law Firm PA, Little Rock, AR.

For City and County of San Francisco, County of Santa Clara, County of Los Angeles, City of Los Angeles, County of San Mateo, County of Contra Costa, Plaintiffs: Mark T Jansen, LEAD ATTORNEY, Townsend and Towsend and Crew LLP, San Francisco, CA; Craig C Corbitt, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason and Gette LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel J Furniss, Townsend and Townsend and Crew LLP, Palo Alto, CA; Eugene Chatham Crew, Louise E Ma, Townsend and Townsend and Crew LLP, San Francisco, CA; Steven F Benz, Kellogg Huber Hansen Todd Evans and Figel PLLC, Washington, DC.

For Novell, Inc., Plaintiff: Jeffrey M Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Milton A Marquis, R Bruce Holcomb, Dickstein Shapiro [20] LLP, Washington, DC.

For Michael I Mark, Plaintiff: Ben Barnow, LEAD ATTORNEY, Barnow and Goldberg, Chicago, IL.

For Go Computer, Inc., JFM-05-2413, S. Jerrold Kaplan, JFM-05-2413, Plaintiffs: Steven F Benz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michael K Kellogg, Kellogg Huber Hansen Todd Evans and Figel PLLC, Washington, DC; Eugene Chatham Crew, Townsend and Townsend and Crew LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Daisy Mountain Fire District, Plaintiff: Mark D Samson, Keller Rohrback PLC, Phoenix, AZ.

For Pradeep Sujan, Individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated (JFM-02-3397), Consol Plaintiff:

For Microsoft Corporation, Defendant: Matthew L Larrabee, LEAD ATTORNEY, Heller Ehrman White and McAuliffe, San Francisco, CA; Bradley S Phillips, Munger Tolles and Olson LLP, Los Angeles, CA; G Stewart Webb, Jr, Randolph Stuart Sergent, Venable LLP, Baltimore, MD; John A Jurata, Jr, PRO HAC VICE, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, Washington, DC; Jonathan H Blavin, Rohit K Singla, Samuel N Weinstein, Ted Dane, Munger Tolles and Olson LLP, San Francisco, CA; Michael James DeVinne, Venable LLP, Baltimore, MD; Charles B Casper, Montgomery McCracken Walker and Rhoads, Philadelphia, PA; Daryl A Libow, David B Tulchin, [21] Joseph E Neuhaus, Justin J Daniels, Richard C Pepperman, II, Sullivan and Cromwell, New York, NY; Maureen P Sheehan, New York, NY; Richard Wallis, Steven J Aeschbacher, Thomas W Burt, Microsoft Corporation, One Microsoft Way, Redmond, WA; Steve William Berman, Hagens Berman LLP, Seattle, WA.

For Compaq Computer Corporation, (JFM-00-1247 Gravity), Defendant: Gaynelle Jones, Compaq Computer Corporation, Houston, TX; John F. Cooney, Venable Baetjer Howard and Civiletti, Washington, DC; Martin L Saad, Venable LLP, Baltimore, MD.

For Dell Computer, (JFM-00-1247 Gravity), Defendant: Heather K Gerken, Jenner and Block, Washington, DC; Jerold S Solovy, Jenner and Block, Chicago, IL; Paul March Smith, Jenner and Block LLC, Washington, DC; Samuel R Miller, Folger Levin and Kahn LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Packard Bell Nec Inc, (JFM-00-1247 Gravity), Defendant: George Brian Busey, Morrison and Foerster LLP, Washington, DC; Penelope A Preovolos, Morrison and Foerster, San Francisco, CA; W Stephen Smith, Morrison and Foerster, Washington, DC.

For International Business Machines Corporation, International Business Machines Corporation, The Walt Disney Company, The Walt Disney Company, AOL Time Warner, [22] Inc., The Walt Disney Company, Defendants: Patrick M Shields, Quinn Emanuel Urguhart Oliver And Hedges, Los Angeles, CA.

For Radio Shack Corporation, Defendant: Martin L Saad, Venable LLP, Baltimore, MD.

For National Plaintiffs' Counsel, Movant: Brent W Landau, Christopher James Cormier, Cohen Milstein Hausfeld and Toll PLLC, Washington, DC.

Kevin Mitnick, Movant, Pro se.

Jonathan Lee Riches, Movant, Pro se.

Barry Worthington Keenan, Movant, Pro se.

Jonathan Lee Riches, Movant, Pro se, Lexington, KY.

For WildTangent Inc., (JFM-02-2739), Interested Party: Edward J Kessler, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sterne Kessler Goldstein and Fox PLLC, Washington, DC.

For Eastman Kodak Company, Interested Party: Charles S Fax, Rifkin Livingston Levitan and Silver, Greenbelt, MD.

For Gateway, Inc., Interested Party: John G Froemming, LEAD ATTORNEY, Howrey LLP, Washington, DC.

For Kirby, McInerney & Squire, LLP, Lerach Coughlin Stoia Geller Rudman & Robbins LLP, Lieff Cabraser, Heiman & Bernstein, LLP, Interested Partys: Andrew Marc Dansicker, Law Office of Andrew M. Dansicker, LLC, Hunt Valley, MD.

For Zelle, Hofmann, Voebel, Mason & Gette LLP, Interested Party: William P McGrath, Jr, Porter Wright Morris and Arthur LLP, [23] Washington, DC.

For Nortel Networks, Amicus:

For Software and Information Industry Association, Intervenor: Stephanie Ann Joyce, Kelley Drye and Warren LLP, Washington, DC.

For Clifford Kupperberg, Special Appearance of Previously Certified Classes of California Plaintiffs, Intervenor: Eugene Chatham Crew, Townsend and Townsend and Crew LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Gregg Lachterman, Intervenor: Robert J Wozniak, Jr, Freed Kanner London & Millen, LLC, Bannockburn, IL.

For Microsoft Corporation, Counter Claimant: G Stewart Webb, Jr, Venable LLP, Baltimore, MD.

For Sun Microsystem, Counter Defendant: Michael Asher Schlanger, Sonnenschein Nath and Rosenthal LLP, Washington, DC; Robert M Galvin, Day Casebeer Madrid and Batchelder LLP, Cupertino, CA.

Judges: J. Frederick Motz, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: J. Frederick Motz

Opinion

[*734] This lawsuit, brought by Novell, Inc. against Microsoft, Corp., is the last action pending in MDL 1332, In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litigation. Earlier in the litigation, on an interlocutory appeal, the Fourth Circuit affirmed a ruling I had made dismissing Counts II through V of Novell's complaint on limitations grounds. These Counts asserted antitrust claims for harm caused to Novell's [24] software applications as a result of Microsoft's monopolization and attempted monopolization of the word processing and spreadsheet markets. The Fourth Circuit held (as had I) that these claims were not tolled during the pendency of the action brought by the United States against Microsoft because, unlike the government case, they were based upon conduct committed by Microsoft in the software applications, not the operating system, market.

Two claims, asserted respectively in Counts I and VI, remain pending: (1) Microsoft violated § 2 of the Sherman Act by taking anticompetitive actions against, and causing damage to, software applications owned by Novell for the purpose of obtaining and maintaining its monopoly in the operating system market; and (2) Microsoft violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by entering into agreements with third parties "not to license or distribute Novell's office productivity applications or to do so only on terms that materially disadvantaged those products."

[*735] Discovery on the remaining claims has been completed, and the parties have filed cross-motions for summary judgment. The motions raise two questions: (1) whether Novell continues to own the claims it now asserts [25] or transferred them to Caldera, Inc., and (2) if Novell does continue to own the claims, whether they are viable under the Sherman Act. For the reasons stated in this Opinion, I find that Novell no longer owns the claims and may not pursue them here. As a matter of strict analysis, that is the end of the case. However, in light of the age of MDL 1332 in general and of this lawsuit in particular, I will also address the substantive viability of Novell's claims. This will enable the Fourth Circuit, upon an appeal of my rulings, to address the antitrust issues presented, in the event that it disagrees with my conclusion relating to the claims ownership issue. As to the antitrust claims, I find that, had Novell not assigned them to Caldera, Count I would have survived Microsoft's summary judgment motion but Count VI would not have survived Microsoft's motion.

I.

HN1[] A motion for summary judgment should be granted when there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c). The materiality of facts is determined by the underlying substantive law. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). A genuine dispute [26] about a material fact exists "if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Id. When considering a motion for summary judgment, a district court draws reasonable inferences and views the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Thompson Everett, Inc. v. Nat'l Cable Adver., L.P., 57 F.3d 1317, 1323 (4th Cir. 1995). HN2[] Although "[t]he summary judgment standard does not differ when applied to antitrust claims. . . . 'because of the unusual entanglement of legal and factual issues frequently presented in antitrust cases, the task of sorting them out may be particularly well-suited for Rule 56 utilization.'" Bepco, Inc. v. Allied-Signal, Inc., 106 F. Supp. 2d 814, 822 (M.D.N.C. 2000) (quoting Thompson Everett, 57 F.3d at 1322).

II.

Under an Asset Purchase Agreement ("APA") dated July 23, 1996, Novell assigned to Caldera claims "held by Novell at the Closing Date and associated directly or indirectly with any of the DOS Products . . ." [1] The term "DOS Products" was defined in the APA to include Novell's PC operating systems DR DOS and Novell DOS, among other products. Novell had previously sold to Corel Corporation its Business [27] Applications Division, which encompassed various software applications, including WordPerfect (its word processing program), Quattro Pro (its spreadsheet program), and PerfectOffice (a combination of WordPerfect and Quattro Pro). In its agreement with Corel, Novell expressly retained "the antitrust claims for harm that Microsoft caused" to those products.

In my earlier opinion dismissing Counts II through V, I ruled that Novell did not assign to Caldera the claims asserted in Counts I and VI because those claims focused upon harm suffered by Novell's software applications, not upon harm suffered [*736] by the operating systems transferred to Caldera. In reaching that conclusion I stated, "[i]t is a far stretch to infer (and Microsoft has presented nothing to establish) that simply because DOS [28] competed in the operating system market, such a claim [for damage to software applications] was either a 'direct' or 'indirect' claims intended to be transferred from Novell to Caldera." *In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig., Civ. JFM-05-1087, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11520, 2005 WL 1398643, 1 (D. Md. June 10, 2005). The Fourth Circuit did not review that ruling because it was not certified for interlocutory appeal. Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 505 F.3d 302, 306 n.10 (4th Cir. 2007).

Upon further reflection I have decided that my earlier ruling was wrong. Although the claims asserted by Novell in Counts I and VI are for damage caused to it software applications, the reason Microsoft allegedly engaged in the conduct causing the damage was to obtain and maintain its monopoly in the operating system market -- the market in which the DOS Products competed. Novell's theory as to those claims is that Microsoft intentionally took actions against Novell's applications because (1) if those applications had retained their popularity, consumers might insist upon purchasing operating systems with which the applications were compatible, thereby threatening Windows 95's market power; and (2) "PerfectOffice," developed by [29] Novell, constituted (or nearly constituted) "middleware," which could have been effectively used with any operating system and that therefore would have "commoditized" Windows 95 and undermined the monopoly Microsoft enjoyed in the operating system market.

[1] The APA also assigned to Caldera claims "associated directly or indirectly with . . . Related Technology," and "Related Technology" was defined to mean technology "that is necessary to the performance by the DOS of their intended function and purpose." Microsoft does not argue that the software application programs involved in this action constituted "Related Technology" within the meaning of the APA.

In short, Counts I and VI assert claims for damage inflicted upon Novell's software applications through the prism of the operating system market. Hybrid in nature, the claims were ingeniously designed to survive Microsoft's anticipated limitations defense by permitting Novell to argue that the pendency of the government case against Microsoft -- which was based upon Microsoft's antitrust violations in the operating system market -- tolled limitations. [2] Successful though that argument has been in defeating Microsoft's limitations defense, it is fatal to Novell's position on the claims ownership issue. By associating claims for harm to applications with the operating system market in which the DOS products competed, the argument establishes that the claims were transferred by Novell to Caldera under the APA.

Reduced to its essence, Novell's primary contention is that all that the APA meant to assign was claims for harm inflicted upon the DOS products. [3] As previously [*737] indicated, I accepted this argument when making my prior ruling. However, that is not what the APA itself actually says was assigned. The assignment clause does not mention "harm" but rather "associat[ion]." HN3[] Under Utah law, which the parties agree applies to this action by [31] virtue of a choice of law provision contained in the APA, a court "look[s] to the language of the contract to determine its meaning and the intent of the contracting parties." Cafe Rio, Inc. v. Larkin-Gifford-Overton, LLC, 2009 UT 27, 207 P.3d 1235, 1240 (Utah 2009). "Only if the language of the contract is ambiguous will . . . [a court]

---

[2] The record suggests, and the parties implicitly agree, that the claims asserted in Counts I and VI were not envisioned until [30] the complaint in this action was prepared, long after the APA was executed. Although contemporaneous memoranda reflect that Novell was aware prior to entering into the APA that it had potential claims against Microsoft for antitrust damage caused to Novell's software applications, these claims were based upon Microsoft allegedly having leveraged its monopoly in the operating system market into a monopoly or near monopoly in the applications markets. Such claims are qualitatively different from those asserted in Counts I and VI. Unquestionably, Novell retained the claims based on Microsoft leveraging its operating system market monopoly into a monopoly in the applications markets, but, as the dismissal of Counts II through V manifest, they are time barred.

[3] Novell also contends that the claims it is asserting in Counts I and VI are not "associated" with the DOS Products because although the DR DOS did compete in the operating system market, it was no longer being marketed and supported by Novell in October 1994, when the unlawful conduct alleged in this action began. This contention is not frivolous but it fails for several reasons. First, Novell owned DR DOS in October 1994 and its value certainly would have been affected by anticompetitive activity in the operating system market. Second, although Novell announced in September 1994 that it would exit [32] the DR DOS business, according to the allegations made in the Caldera amended complaint against Microsoft, Novell continued to sell some DR DOS products thereafter. Third, both in its original complaint and in the amended complaint filed in its action against Microsoft, Caldera sought, inter alia, an injunction "requiring Microsoft, for a period often years, to disclose to Caldera all [application program interfaces ("APIs")] for any operating system it produces, as well as any modifications, enhancements, updates, or new versions of such operating systems at the time that such products are released for beta testing." This request for relief necessarily was premised upon the fact that the failure of Microsoft to disclose APIs (an important part of Novell's claim asserted in Count I of this action) was damaging DR DOS. Fourth, the allegations of misconduct by Microsoft made in this action were undertaken in a market that already was dominated by Microsoft, allegedly in part because of anticompetitive actions it had previously taken against DR DOS. Just as Novell's expert concedes that in order to have antitrust significance the conduct Microsoft directed against Novell's software applications [33] must be considered in light of conduct that Microsoft directed against other competitors, (see Novell's Opp. to Microsoft's Mot. for Summ. J. ("Dkt. No. 1952"), Exh. 4 at 6 (Reply Report of Roger G. Noll); Microsoft's Mem. in Supp. of its Mot. for Summ. J. ("Dkt. 1947"), Exh. 3 at 40-43), so too the actions launched by Microsoft against various software application producers must be considered against the background of the anticompetitive conduct it directed against DR DOS in earlier years. Fifth, Novell's expert asserts that Microsoft was motivated to act anticompetitively against Novell in part because of Novell's purchase of DR DOS. (See Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 3 at 89 (Declaration of Roger G. Noll).) All of these facts establish the "association" between the claims asserted in this action and the DR DOS Product claims assigned to Caldera under the APA.

consider extrinsic evidence of the parties' intent." Id. Accord Webbank v. Am. Gen. Annuity Serv. Corp., 2002 UT 88, 54 P.3d 1139, 1144-45 (Utah 2002). [4] Here, there is no ambiguity in the APA. It encompasses all claims "associated directly or indirectly" with the DOS Products. [5]

[*738] Novell also relies upon the proposition stated in Restatement (Second) of Contracts Section 201(1) (1981), that HN5[] "[w]here the parties have attached the same meaning to a promise or agreement or a term of art, it is interpreted in accordance with that meaning.' Novell's contention that this rule would be adopted by the Utah Supreme Court is somewhat questionable in light of the fact that the case upon which Novell relies, Flying J Inc. v. Comdata Network, Inc., 405 F.3d 821, 834 n.6 (10th Cir. 2005), predicts that the Utah Supreme Court would adopt Section 201(3)(b), not Section 201(1), of the Restatement (Second). [6] In any event, under the Restatement rule, in determining the subjective intent of the parties to a contract, a court ordinarily looks only to their contemporaneous conduct, not to what they aver they intended after a controversy with a third party has arisen. See, e.g., Alvin Ltd. v. U.S. Postal Serv., 816 F.2d 1562, 1565-66 (Fed. Cir. 1987) ("The parties' intent must be gathered . . . from the perspective of a reasonably intelligent person [37] acquainted with the contemporary circumstances." (internal quotations and citations omitted)). This is both sensible and fair because there is no reason that the law should countenance the parties to an agreement retrospectively placing a subjective interpretation upon the agreement's language, contrary to its objective meaning, to the detriment of a third person who has become embroiled in a dispute with one of the parties to the agreement.

Furthermore, even if I were to consider the extrinsic evidence proffered by Novell, I would not find that it supports Novell's contention about the meaning of the assignment language in the APA because that evidence is itself ambiguous and inconclusive. [7] Novell points to the testimony [*739] of Novell's former General Counsel, David

---

[4] Ironically, during the discovery phase of this case, Microsoft took the position that it was entitled to inquire into matters concerning the negotiating history of the APA because under Utah law extrinsic evidence should be considered in making the threshold determination of whether contractual language is ambiguous. In Ward v. Intermountain Farmers Ass'n, 907 P.2d 264, 268-69 (Utah 1995), [34] a case now cited by Novell, the Utah Supreme Court did indicate that extrinsic evidence is relevant to an inquiry into ambiguity. However, in Daines v. Vincent, 2008 UT 51, 190 P.3d 1269, 1276-77 (Utah 2008), HN4[] the Utah Supreme Court, while not disavowing the holding in Ward, clarified its meaning and stated that "we did not [in Ward] intend that a judge allow surrounding circumstances to create ambiguity where the language of a contract would not otherwise permit" and that "a correct application of the Ward rule to determine what the writing means begins and ends with the language of the contract." Moreover, as stated in the text, infra, the extrinsic evidence cited by Novell as to the meaning of the APA is itself ambiguous and inconclusive.

[5] The inclusion of the word "indirectly" before the words "associated with" in the APA, while not dispositive, underscores the fact that there is no ambiguity in the agreement. Novell attempts to explain that "indirectly" was added to the APA on the ground that Novell did not want to be perceived as being connected with the suit filed by Caldera against Microsoft. According to Novell, a previous draft of the APA had defined the assigned claims as "any and all [35] claims or causes of action associated with any of the DOS Products or Related Technology, including but not limited to any claims or causes of action for copyright or patent infringement, trade secret misappropriation or violation of any applicable antitrust laws." Novell asserts that it was "worried that the specific reference to the antitrust claim would draw attention to Novell's role in instigating the lawsuit." (Mem. of Law in Supp. of Novell's Renewed Mot. for Summ. J. on Microsoft's Affirmative Defenses ("Dkt. No. 1948") at 19.) Apparently, the reason for this concern was that the commercial value of Novell's office productivity applications would be harmed if consumers were led to believe that Novell's applications were not compatible with Windows 95. Of course, to any reasonable person objectively reviewing the APA, "claims indirectly associated" with "DOS Products" does not mean "claims for copyright or patent infringement, trade secret misappropriation or violation of any applicable antitrust laws" related to those products. Moreover, the fact that Novell chose to obfuscate its role in the Caldera litigation, see Novell, Inc. v. Canopy Group, Inc., 92 P.3d 768, 2004 UT App 162 (Utah App. 2004), [36] hardly entitles it to challenge the objective meaning of the language it wrote by reference to its own subjective (and secreted) intent.

[6] For the Restatement (Second) Section 201(1) to be compatible with Utah case law, it would need to apply only where the express language of the contract is ambiguous. See, e.g., Cafe Rio, 207 P.3d at 1240 HN6[] ("Where the language within the four corners of the contract is unambiguous, the parties' intentions are determined from the plain meaning of the contractual language." (internal quotations and citation omitted)).

Bradford, [38] that Novell and Caldera never "discussed antitrust claims concerning damage caused to Novell's Business Applications business" in connection with the sale of DR DOS, and the similar testimony of Paul Graf, who represented Caldera when the APA was negotiated, that "[n] either party contemplated their claims 'directly or indirectly' related to 'the DOS Products or Related Technology' would include Novell's antitrust claims for harm to its business applications.'" The truth of this testimony may be assumed, but its meaning is limited. I have no doubt that the parties did not discuss -- and that the APA did not intend to assign from Novell to Caldera -- claims for harm to Novell's software applications caused by unlawful conduct engaged in by Microsoft for the purpose of monopolizing those applications' markets. Such claims were asserted in Counts II through V of this lawsuit, and they have been dismissed not because Novell does not continue to own them but because they are barred by limitations. Thus, Bradford's and Graf's statements beg the relevant question: whether claims for damage to Novell's applications caused by unlawful conduct designed to impact the operating system market were [39] encompassed within the "directly or indirectly associated with" language of the APA. As both parties implicitly agree, the fact of the matter is that any such claims simply were not contemplated, and thus were not discussed, when the APA was negotiated because they were conceptualized and formulated only when it became apparent they would be needed to defeat Microsoft's anticipated limitations defense via the tolling doctrine. [8]

In short, if Novell had intended, as it now argues, to assign to Caldera only claims for harm inflicted upon the DOS Products and Related Technology, it should have so stated in the APA. It did not do so, and the language it in fact employed encompasses the claims that it now seeks to assert in this action because these claims are "associated directly or indirectly with . . . the DOS Products." [9]

---

[7] There is at least one piece of extrinsic evidence that favors Microsoft. As indicated in note 3, supra, in the Caldera suit one of the claims for relief asserted by Caldera was for an injunction "requiring Microsoft, for a period often years, to disclose to all software developments the APIs for any operating system it produces, as well as any modifications, enhancements, updates, or new versions of such operating systems that the time that such products are release for beta testing." This request for relief manifests that Caldera was taking the position, as asserted by Novell in this action, that Microsoft's refusal to open APIs for its competitors constituted a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. Novell contends that this request for relief by Caldera is [40] irrelevant for present purposes because Caldera asserted that the refusal to open APIs was harming the DOS Products and that it was not concerned about harm being inflicted upon Novell's software applications by virtue of the same activity. That may well be true, but the fact that Caldera was requesting an injunction requiring the opening of APIs demonstrates the association (direct or indirect) between the claims assigned to Caldera that it was asserting in its lawsuit and Novell's claims in the present action.

[8] Of course, the fact that Novell had not yet envisioned the claims that it now asserts in this action at the time the APA was executed does not mean the claims were not assigned. As previously indicated, HN7[] under Utah law where the language of a contract is not ambiguous, courts are to resolve its meaning by looking within its four corners. To attempt to identify the potentialities that were known to the contracting parties at the time the agreement was entered into would, in effect, be to inquire into their subjective intentions and undermine the principle that unambiguous contract language must be construed objectively and reasonably. See generally IIE. Allan Farnsworth, FARNSWORTH ON CONTRACTS Section 7.9 [41] (3d Ed. 2004). Furthermore, this result is consistent with precedent regarding assignment of antitrust claims. HN8[] Although the assignment of antitrust claims must be "express," see, e.g., Sullivan v. Nat 'l Football League, 34 F.3d 1091, 1106 (1 st Cir. 1994), courts have found valid transfers where "all-inclusive" language was used. See, e.g., Lerman v. Joyce Int'l, Inc., 10 F.3d 106, 112 (3d Cir. 1993) (finding valid assignment where contract language purported to transfer "any and all . . . causes of action, claims and demands of whatsoever nature").

[9] Microsoft also argues that the claims asserted in Counts I and VI are barred by res judicata because they could have been, and were not, asserted in the Caldera suit. To the extent these claims were assigned by Novell to Caldera (as I find they [42] were), I agree with Microsoft that they are barred by res judicata. However, the res judicata argument adds nothing because the assignment of the present claims by Novell to Caldera itself prevents Novell from asserting them here, res judicata concerns aside. If, however, I am incorrect on the ownership of claims issue, in my judgment Microsoft's res judicata contention fails because (1) Caldera could not have asserted on behalf of Novell claims Caldera did not possess, and (2) Microsoft now concedes that although Novell had a financial interest in the Caldera litigation, it did not control that litigation.

[*740] III.

I now turn to the merits of the antitrust claims for monopolization in violation of § 2 (Count I) and unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of § 1 (Count VI). As stated at the outset of this opinion, I find that, had Novell not assigned them to Caldera, Count I would have survived Microsoft's Motion for Summary Judgment and Count VI would not have.

A.

From the early 1980s through the mid 1990s, Microsoft worked with Novell, and other independent software vendors ("ISVs"), to ensure that Novell's software applications could function properly on Microsoft's personal computer [43] ("PC") operating systems. (See, e.g., Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 1 (Expert Report of Ronald S. Alepin) at 33.) Such cooperation was in the interest of both parties: Microsoft's PC operating systems were able to support Novell's popular applications and Novell's applications were able to better function on the popular Microsoft PC operating systems.

In June of 1994, Novell acquired WordPerfect, Quattro Pro, and Group Wise (an e-mail application). By this time, Microsoft had acquired monopoly power in the PC operating system market, (see id. at 4 n.3.), and had begun developing a new operating system, Windows 95. However, particularly after Novell's acquisition of these three applications, Microsoft began to view Novell as a threat to its monopoly in the PC operating system market. (See Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 1 at 9-11 (Alepin Expert Report).) Specifically, the capabilities, popularity, number, and diversity of Novell's software applications "could make Microsoft's operating system irrelevant if [Novell's applications] achieved ubiquity":

> Future versions of WordPerfect combined with Novell's networking technologies . . . would make PerfectOffice a compelling proposition for users in the next generation [44] of computing. . . . [A] new operating system vendor would need only to recruit PerfectOffice to its platform to develop a credible threat to Microsoft's PC operating systems business.

(Id., Exh. 1 at 77 (Alepin Expert Report).) Microsoft executives were well aware of and concerned by this threat. (See, e.g., id., Exh. 54 (Microsoft executive explaining to investor Warren Buffet that "[i]f we own the key 'franchises' built on top of the operating system, we dramatically widen the 'moat' that protects the operating system").)

While Windows 95 was being developed, Novell's cooperative relationship with Microsoft began to fracture. First, Novell complains of Microsoft's conduct regarding Windows 95 "namespace extensions." In 1993 and 1994, prior to the Windows 95 launch, Microsoft "evangelized" among ISVs the use of APIs called "namespace extensions." [10] (Id., Exh. 1 at 12 (Alepin Expert Report).) These namespace extensions allowed "ISVs to integrate custom namespace objects into the Windows 95 shell namespace" and "provide rich, custom views of data." In the fall of 1993, Microsoft informed WordPerfect that it [*741] would publish/document the namespace extensions. (Id., Exh. 1 at 85-86 (Alepin [45] Expert Report).) In June of 1994, Microsoft disclosed to Novell and other ISVs "enough documentation of the namespace extensions 'for people to understand what we're doing and write some code.'" (See id., Exh. 1 at 87 (Alepin Expert Report) (internal citation omitted).) Novell began to rely on this documentation to develop versions of WordPerfect and Quattro Pro to function on Windows 95. (See id., Exh. 1 at 87-88 (Alepin Expert Report).) However, in the fall of 1994, Microsoft reversed course and Bill Gates "ordered the withdrawal of the documentation for the namespace extension mechanism . . . ." (Id., Exh. 1 at 91-92 (Alepin Expert Report).) Further, "Microsoft told ISVs that the namespace extensions' functionality would soon disappear from [Windows 95]: 'Applications that have architected themselves to achieve this functionality need to remove themselves from the [10] Access to information about Windows [46] 95's APIs-which are "hooks" in an operating system that allow applications to achieve functionality within that operating system-was critical for ISVs because it allowed them to develop programs that could function within Windows 95.

system . . . .'" (Id., Exh. 1 at 93 (Alepin Expert Report) (internal citation omitted).) Microsoft's reversal delayed the release and impaired the development of the versions of WordPerfect and Quattro Pro that were optimized for Windows 95. (Id., Exh. 1 at 11, 14 (Alepin Expert Report).)

Second, Novell alleges that as it was preparing WordPerfect's printing function for Windows 95, Microsoft misled it about what APIs and printing functionality Windows 95 would possess. (Id., Exh. 1 at 160-63 (Alepin Expert Report).) "Microsoft's failure to provide this functionality… cost Novell substantial resources and degraded its final products' functionality." (Id., Exh. 1 at 163 (Alepin Expert Report).)

Third, Novell alleges Microsoft improperly denied it a logo license for Windows 95. In September of 1994, Microsoft launched its "Designed for Windows 95" logo program, which allowed an ISV to display the Windows 95 logo if the ISV's product met various technical requirements. (Id., Exh. 1 at 144 (Alepin Expert Report).) These requirements included the ability to function properly on Windows NT 3.5, Microsoft's operating system for workstations, a market in which Microsoft had only limited success competing. (Id., Exh. 1 at 148-49 (Alepin Expert Report).) [47] However, Microsoft also allowed an exemption from the Windows NT-compatibility requirement for products that experienced "incompatibilities . . . attributable to functionality that is significantly different in architecture between Windows 95 and Windows NT." (Id., Exh. 1 at 151 (Alepin Expert Report) (internal quotations and citations omitted).) Despite "architectural differences" in fact being the "root cause" of Novell's inability to achieve Windows NT compatibility, Novell was denied an exemption and denied a Windows 95 logo license. (Id., Exh. 1 at 152-54 (Alepin Expert Report).)

Fourth, Novell alleges Microsoft injured Group Wise by "withholding and manipulating MAPI," an API designed to improve the functionality of e-mail applications. [11] Specifically, Novell alleges that Microsoft evangelized MAPI among ISVs, and then failed to document the MAPI extensions and failed to properly integrate MAPI with Windows 95. (See id., Exh. 1 at 120-23, 127-34 (Alepin Expert Report).) These actions allegedly impeded non-Microsoft e-mail applications, such as Group Wise, from achieving optimal functionality. (See id., Exh. 1 at 131-34 (Alepin Expert Report).)

Fifth and finally, Novell asserts that Microsoft pressured large application purchasers--such as original equipment manufacturers [*742] ("OEMs"), distributors, and resellers--to enter into agreements that precluded or strongly discouraged them from purchasing WordPerfect and Quattro Pro. [12] More specifically:

> (1) In 1995, under "Project Avalanche" agreements, Microsoft sought to "[i]ncrease and sustain North American share for Word and Excel by >10% points" and "[s]ustain Office share at >80% through Office 95 launch." (Id., Exh. 126 at 1; cf. id., Exh. 3 at 107-08 (Noll Expert Decl.).) These agreements (i) provided a 2 to 5 percent rebate to distributors and resellers who increased their "blended share" of Microsoft Word and Excel; (ii) provided a rebate (under 5 percent) to distributors and resellers who increased their overall sales of certain Microsoft software applications; (iii) required distributors and resellers to provide Microsoft with weekly reports of their sales of WordPerfect, Quattro Pro, and other competing products; and (iv) required distributors [49] and resellers to abide by various other requirements for marketing and selling certain Microsoft software applications. (See id., Exh. 3 at 107-08 (Noll Expert Decl.); id., Exh. 123 at B1-B7; id., Exh. 126 at 1, 12, 20-27.) These contracts were designed to reward distributors and resellers who increased their share of Microsoft software applications. (See id., Exh. 126 at 26; id., Exh. 128.)
>
> (2) Microsoft executed "per system" licenses with OEMs. Under per system licenses, an OEM paid "a negotiated royalty multiplied by a number equal to the larger of (a) the number of full or partial copies of the particular Microsoft product distributed by the OEM during the term of the license or (b) the number of Customer Systems shipped by the OEM during the term of the license." (Id., Exh. 136.) "Costumer Systems"

---

[11] For the reasons explained in infra [48] Section III.B, I have decided that the conduct directed at Group Wise should not be considered in analyzing of Novell's claims.

[12] Although these agreements are the crux of the § 1 claim (Count VI), they may also be considered as anticompetitive behavior in the § 2 analysis (Count I). See infra note 16.

were defined by characteristics such as microprocessor and model name. (Id., Exh. 136.) Novell contends that these agreements "effectively preclude[ed]" the OEMs that agreed to them from licensing Novell's products because "[o]nce under a per system license, an OEM had to develop and market a distinct product line if it wanted to pre-install Novell's applications." (Id. at 41.)

(3) "Microsoft [50] forced OEMs to sign contracts with minimum purchase commitments that substantially exceeded a realistic expectation by the OEM." (Id., Exh. 3 at 100 (Noll Expert Decl.).) If an OEM fell short of selling enough Microsoft applications to meet its minimum commitment, Microsoft had the right to retain what was the equivalent of a deposit amounting to the unpaid balance on the OEM's commitment. (See id., Exh. 3 at 100 (Noll Expert Decl.).) Microsoft often then gave the OEM the choice of forfeiting this deposit or using it as a credit on another contract with Microsoft, "thereby giving the OEM a financial incentive to renew its contract with Microsoft" at the expense of Novell's products. (See id., Exh. 3 at 100 (Noll Expert Decl.).)

In March of 1996, Novell sold WordPerfect and Quattro Pro, but retained ownership of GroupWise.

[*743] B.

Novell has raised an issue of triable fact as to whether Microsoft's Novell-injuring conduct was anticompetitive and whether that conduct caused anticompetitive harm in the PC operating system [51] market. I therefore find that, if Novell had not assigned its claims via the APA, summary judgment on Count I would have been inappropriate.

In Count I, Novell alleges that Microsoft violated § 2 of the Sherman Act by willfully and wrongfully maintaining its monopoly in the PC operating system market. The Fourth Circuit described Novell's theory as follows:

> Novell contends that the technological connection between operating systems and applications gives rise to a significant barrier to entry into the operating-systems market and thus protects Microsoft's Windows monopoly. Novell maintains that its office-productivity applications [such as WordPerfect and Quattro Pro] could perform well on a variety of operating systems and that, during the relevant time period, they were the dominant office-productivity applications in the market. The thrust of Novell's argument is that its popular applications, though themselves not competitors or potential competitors to Microsoft's Windows, offered competing operating systems the prospect of surmounting the applications barrier to entry and breaking the Windows monopoly. That is, Novell argues its products could provide a path onto the operating-system [52] playing field for an actual competitor of Windows, because a competing operating system, running the popular Novell software applications, would offer consumers an attractive alternative to Windows.

Novell, 505 F.3d at 308. Furthermore, Novell argues that its package of office productivity applications contained middleware and included a desktop shell which could potentially allow PC users to "live" in that desktop shell in lieu of operating in Windows 95, thereby "threat[ening] to become an alternative platform for applications programs that would reduce the need for end-users to upgrade their operating system in order to obtain new application features." (See Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 3 at 9 (Noll Expert Decl.).)

As a result of the threat Novell's applications posed, Novell argues, as detailed above, that Microsoft engaged in the following anti-competitive conduct:

(1) Withdrawing access to information about, and otherwise changing course regarding, the Windows 95 namespace extensions, thereby delaying and impairing Novell's development of the versions of WordPerfect and Quattro Pro that were optimized for Windows 95.

(2) Misleading Novell about Windows 95 print functionality, thereby increasing [53] WordPerfect's costs and decreasing its functionality.
(3) Refusing to grant a Windows 95 logo license for certain Novell software applications.
(4) Manipulating APIs to harm Group Wise.
(5) Entering into licensing agreements with OEMs, distributors, and resellers that discouraged and/or prevented OEMs and distributors from purchasing Novell's applications.

As a preliminary matter, I agree with Microsoft that the Complaint failed to provide notice that Novell was basing its claims in part on Microsoft's treatment of Group Wise, and therefore any such allegation is not properly a part of this action. HN9[] A complaint need only contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (2007) (quoting [*744] FED. R. CIV. P. 8(a)(2)). Although "specific facts are not necessary," the Complaint must "'give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" Id. (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). The Complaint in this case limits itself to anticompetitive conduct directed at applications sold by Novell in March of 1996, which would plainly exclude Group Wise. [54] (See Novell's Complaint ("Compl.") P 2 (emphasis added).) Although the Complaint refers to the anticompetitive treatment of multiple "office productivity applications" in addition to WordPerfect, (see, e.g., id. PP 5, 105), simply pluralizing "office productivity applications," without any further specificity, is insufficient to put Microsoft on fair notice that Novell would allege antitrust violations based on Microsoft's treatment of Group Wise. While WordPerfect and Quattro Pro were discussed in some detail (see, e.g., id. PP 32-37, 51-56, 62-63), Group Wise was not even mentioned in the Complaint. Nor am I moved by the fact, relied upon by Novell, that Microsoft pursued discovery about Group Wise. What material is subject to discovery and what conduct may serve as the basis of a claim are two distinct inquiries with different standards. Further, it would be unfair to penalize Microsoft for engaging in a cautious and thorough discovery strategy.

With that matter out of the way, I turn now to the applicable legal framework for this monopolization claim. HN10[] To violate § 2 of the Sherman Act, [13] the defendant must (1) have monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) engage in monopolizing [55] conduct-that is, "willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident." Verizon Commc'n Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)); Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 596 n.19, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985) (same). To prove the second element, the plaintiff generally must show that the defendant (a) engaged in anticompetitive conduct that (b) caused anticompetitive harm in the relevant market. [14] See MetroNet Servs. Corp. v. Qwest Corp., 383 F.3d 1124, 1131 (9th Cir. 2004) (noting that plaintiff must prove that defendant "(1) possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power through exclusionary conduct and (3) caused antitrust injury"); Data Gen. Corp. v Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1182 (1st Cir. 1994), abrogated on other ground by Reed Elsevier, Inc. v. Muchnick, 130 S. Ct. 127, 176 L. Ed. 2d 18 (March 2, 2010) ("'Exclusionary conduct' is defined as 'conduct, other than competition on the merits or restraints reasonably [56] necessary to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining [*745] monopoly power.'" (internal citations omitted)). However, these last two issues--anticompetitive conduct and causation/anticompetitive harm--are not neat, distinct inquiries, but often involve overlapping considerations and analyses. Cf., e.g., Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467.

Because Microsoft's monopoly power in the relevant market is undisputed (Dkt. No. 1947 at 4 n.3), Microsoft would [57] be liable for monopolization under § 2 if it willfully and wrongfully maintained its monopoly-that is, engaged in anticompetitive conduct that caused anticompetitive harm.

1. Microsoft's Anticompetitive Conduct

---

[13] Section 2 HN11[] reads: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

[14] HN12[] Some courts break a monopolization analysis into three elements: (1) monopoly power, (2) willful acquisition/maintenance of monopoly power (or "anticompetitive conduct"), and (3) causation. See, e.g., Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34,44, 50-79, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001); MetroNet Servs. Corp., 383 F.3d at 1131. Regardless of how the elements are organized, the substantive analysis remains the same.

Novell has raised a genuine question of material fact concerning whether Microsoft's behavior, taken as a whole, was anticompetitive.

Microsoft attacks Count I by arguing that that Novell has not presented evidence that Microsoft did anything beyond refusing to cooperate with Novell, and refusing to assist a competitor is not anticompetitive conduct in violation of § 2.

HN13[] Although a monopolist generally has a right to refuse to cooperate with a competitor, this right is not unqualified: a refusal to cooperate may be anticompetitive if it is an "attempt [] to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency[.]" See Aspen Skiing Co., 472 U.S. at 600-01, 605 (internal citations and quotations omitted); accord Data Gen. Corp., 36 F.3d at 1183 (citing Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)). That said, courts should be "very cautious" in recognizing exceptions to the right to refuse to cooperate "because of the uncertain virtue of forced sharing and the [58] difficulty of identifying and remedying the anticompetitive conduct by a single firm." Trinko, 540 U.S. at 407.

HN14[] In determining whether a refusal to cooperate is impermissible, a court may consider the entirety of the monopolist's pattern of conduct, the potential impact on consumers, and the monopolist's motive--for example, whether the monopolist had a legitimate business justification for its actions or sacrificed short-term profits in an effort to destroy a competitor. See id. at 409 (holding that a refusal to cooperate did not violate § 2 because (i) defendant did not remove itself from a previously voluntary course of cooperation or refuse to sell a product at its retail price, (ii) "the services allegedly withheld were not otherwise marketed or available to the public[,]" and (iii) "the existence of a regulatory structure [the Telecommunications Act of 1996] designed to deter and remedy anticompetitive harm [in the industry at issue]" diminished the likelihood of antitrust harm); Aspen Skiing Co., 472 U.S 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (holding that a monopolist-ski mountain owner's refusal to continue offering a multi-day lift pass with a competitor mountain could violate § 2 because (i) they had offered [59] the pass successfully for years; (ii) the monopolist refused to even let the competitor buy the monopolist's lift tickets at retail price; (iii) the pass had great appeal among consumers; (iv) elimination of the pass undermined the smaller competitor's ability to compete; and (v) the facts suggest that the monopolist "was willing to sacrifice short-run benefits and consumer goodwill in exchange for a perceived long-run impact on its smaller rival"). [15]

[*746] As an initial matter, it is not entirely clear that Microsoft's conduct was merely a refusal to cooperate: Novell has presented evidence that Microsoft affirmatively misled Novell about Windows 95 and entered into anticompetitive [60] agreements with OEMs. Cf. Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. W. Union Telegraph Co., 797 F.2d 370, 376-77 (7th Cir. 1986) HN15[] (in explaining the right to refuse to cooperate, noting that antitrust law generally only imposes negative, not positive, duties).

Even assuming Microsoft's conduct should be characterized as a refusal to cooperate, there is a question of fact about whether it was anticompetitive under Aspen and Trinko. Microsoft's conduct ran contrary to the preferences of operating system consumers. Just as skiers would have preferred the multi-day pass in Aspen, so too would PC users have preferred an operating system that could immediately and optimally support popular Novell applications such as WordPerfect.

Further, Novell has presented evidence of predatory motives. Just as consumer demand for the multi-day pass would have increased the monopolist's short-term profits in Aspen, refraining from misleading Novell about the namespace extensions and print functionality may have increased Microsoft's short-term profits by increasing Windows 95's consumer appeal via allowing Novell's popular applications to achieve better functionality on it. (Cf. Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 3 at 11 (Noll Expert [61] Decl.).) A fair inference arises that inhibiting WordPerfect's and Quattro Pro's ability to achieve functionality on Windows 95 was an effort to "sacrifice short-run benefits and [15] The Trinko Court noted that "Aspen Skiing is at or near the outer boundary of § 2 liability. . . ." The Court explained that "[t]he unilateral termination of a voluntary (and thus presumably profitable) course of dealing suggested a willingness to forsake short-term profits to achieve an anticompetitive end… [and] the defendant's unwillingness to renew the ticket even if compensated at retail price revealed a distinctly anticompetitive bent." Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409 (internal citations omitted) (emphasis in original).

---

consumer goodwill in exchange for a perceived long-run [anticompetitive impact]." See Aspen, 472 U.S. at 610-11. This inference is particularly believable in light of the substantial concern within Microsoft that popular applications might undermine Microsoft's monopoly in the PC operating system market. (See, e.g., Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 54.) Further evidence of this anticompetitive motivation is found in:

(1) The history of voluntary, and therefore presumably profitable, Microsoft-Novell cooperation--both generally over the years and specifically in sharing API information pertaining to Windows 95--to optimize application functionality on Microsoft's operating systems. See Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409; see also Olympia Equip., 797 F.2d at 377 (distinguishing Aspen in part because "[t]here is no evidence that suppliers [like the defendants] customarily provide their customers with [the information the deprivation of which plaintiffs allege gave rise to an antitrust violation] . . . .").

(2) The denial of the Windows [62] 95 logo license, despite the purported availability of an exemption for the type of problems that Novell alleges caused the incompatibility. Cf. Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409 (distinguishing Aspen in part because "the services allegedly withheld were not otherwise marketed or available to the public").

(3) The minimum purchase agreements and per system licenses with OEMs, both of which made it harder for WordPerfect and Quattro Pro to access the OEM market. [16]

[*747] Microsoft argues that "if a monopolist does extend [63] a helping hand, though not required to do so, and later withdraws it . . . does he incur antitrust liability? We think not." (Dkt. No. 1947 at 32 (internal marks omitted) (quoting Olympia Equip., 797 F.2d at 376).) Microsoft's alleged conduct here, however, is distinguishable from the conduct in Olympia Equipment. Microsoft did not just withdraw a charitable helping hand; rather, Microsoft allegedly first cooperated in an effort to improve its own product, subsequently misled Novell into relying on information provided pursuant to that cooperation, and then withdrew its cooperation after Novell reasonably relied on Microsoft's representations.

Microsoft also argues that it had legitimate business reasons--fostering and benefiting from innovative software development--for its actions. Although courts should be wary of interpreting antitrust laws in a way that hampers innovation, under the circumstances presented here I am not persuaded by Microsoft's argument. Fostering innovation did not require Microsoft to deny Novell the Windows 95 logo license, nor did it necessitate misleading Novell about the APIs and print functionality. In fact, API innovations arguably would have been more [64] valuable for both consumers and Microsoft if the ISVs had been able to use them to develop applications for Windows 95. See Data Gen. Corp., 36 F.3d at 1183 ("In general, a business justification is valid if it related directly or indirectly to the enhancement of consumer welfare."). As Novell's expert has explained, "Microsoft ha[d] no plausible business justification for its actions. The technical acts that undermined the functionality of competing applications were unnecessary and did not improve the functionality or reduce the cost of Microsoft products." [17] (Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 3 at 11 (Noll Expert Decl.).)

---

[16] HN16[] "Even though exclusivity arrangements are often analyzed under § 1, such exclusionary conduct may also be an element in a § 2 claim." LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 157 (3d Cir. 2003). Just because the agreements with the OEMs do not give rise to a § 1 claim, see infra Section III.C, it does not necessarily follow that those agreements do not amount to anticompetitive conduct, or are at least evidence of anticompetitive motives, under § 2. See Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 70 ("[E]xclusive contracts, in certain circumstances, may give rise to a § 2 violation even though the contracts foreclose less than the roughly 40% or 50% share usually required in order to establish a § 1 violation.").

[17] Microsoft points to two of my prior opinions to argue that "Microsoft is not required to disclose information to its competitors about new Windows operating systems under development." I have held, in cases brought under the "essential facilities" doctrine, that Microsoft had no antitrust obligation to share information about Windows 95 with IS Vs. See In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig., 274 F. Supp. 2d 743, 745-46 (D. Md. 2003) (in so holding, noting that "to require one company to provide its intellectual property to a competitor would significantly chill innovation" [65] and "the essential facility doctrine has never been interpreted to deny a person the right to gain temporary benefits from innovations to its own products"); see also Daisy Mountain Fire Dist. v. Microsoft Corp., 547 F. Supp. 2d 475, 490 (D. Md. 2008) ("[E]ssential facility claims involving tangible assets are

In short, although, after examining the evidence, a fact-finder may agree with Microsoft that its actions were not anticompetitive under § 2, Novell has presented sufficient evidence to raise a genuine question of fact on this issue.

2. The Anticompetitive Harm Caused by Microsoft's Anticompetitive [66] Conduct As discussed above, HN17[] to prove a monopolization claim under § 2, the plaintiff [*748] generally must prove not only that the defendant's conduct was anticompetitive, but also that it caused anticompetitive harm in the relevant market. See MetroNet, 383 F.3d at 1131; Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d at 78-80; Thompson Everett, 57 F.3d at 1325. More specifically, the plaintiff must establish that it suffered injury caused by conduct which damaged the competitive process itself. See, e.g., Thompson Everett, 57 F.3d at 1325 (describing when a private party may sue for violations of antitrust laws, pursuant to § 4 of the Clayton Act).

In most § 2 cases, this analysis hinges on whether the exclusionary conduct harmed competition in the market in which the plaintiff was competing with the defendant. See, e.g., Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d at 79; LePage's, 324 F.3d at 160-62. In this case, Novell's unique § 2 theory makes the inquiry more complicated: Novell must prove that the specific Microsoft conduct which caused injury to Novell's applications also caused anticompetitive harm in the PC operating system market.

HN18[] To satisfy this causation requirement, a plaintiff needs to show that the conduct at issue [67] "contribut[ed] significantly to a defendant's continued monopoly power." [18] See Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 80 (at least in an equitable enforcement action as opposed to an action for money damages, holding that to prove causation plaintiff must prove the conduct was "reasonably capable of contributing significantly to a defendant's continued monopoly power"); see also Data Gen. Corp., 36 F.3d at 1182 ("'Exclusionary conduct' is defined as 'conduct, other than competition on the merits or restraints reasonably necessary to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power.'" (internal citations omitted)); cf. Morgan, 892 F.2d at 1361-63 (in rejecting a § 2 claim arising from alleged predatory pricing, (1) suggesting that § 2 liability requires that the pricing have a "measurable impact on [plaintiff's] overall viability as a competitor[,]" and (2) "find[ing] insufficient evidence" that the pricing "had any more than a negligible impact on [plaintiff's] viability as a competitor").

HN19[] Under this "contributed significantly" standard, plaintiffs need not "present direct proof that a defendant's continued monopoly power is precisely attributable to its anticompetitive conduct." Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d at 79. To require such proof would "require that § 2 liability turn on a plaintiff's ability or inability to reconstruct the hypothetical marketplace absent a defendant's anticompetitive conduct[,]" which "would only encourage monopolists to take more and earlier anticompetitive action." Id. at 79. When a firm has engaged in anticompetitive conduct, courts should be reluctant to demand too much certainty in proving that such conduct caused anticompetitive harm because "[t]o some degree, 'the defendant is made to suffer the uncertain consequences of its own undesirable [69] conduct.'" Id. (quoting 3 PHILLIP E. AREEDA & HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW P 651C, at 78).

Microsoft argues that Novell's experts never expressly stated that, but for the actions that harmed WordPerfect and [*749] Quattro Pro, competition would have been enhanced in the PC operating system market. Rather, Dr. Roger Noll, Novell's expert on this issue, merely concluded that there was anticompetitive harm caused by the quite different from claims involving technical innovation, and plaintiff fails to provide a compelling argument for applying the doctrine to technological innovations or information."). However, in the case at hand, Novell is not proceeding under the essential facilities doctrine. Further, Novell has presented evidence that Microsoft did more than just refuse to disclose information about Windows 95. It has also raised a genuine question of fact about whether Microsoft mislead Novell about characteristics of Windows 95 and about what information it would provide in advance of Windows 95's launch.

---

[18] At times, Microsoft seems to argue that Novell must prove that Microsoft's conduct had a "substantial" anticompetitive impact [68] in the operating system market, (see Dkt. No. 1947 at 26), which I would view as a more rigorous test than the contributed significantly standard. Increasing this burden may risk undermining the principle that "antitrust laws are for the benefit of competition." Cf. Morgan v. Ponder, 892 F.2d 1355, 1360 (8th Cir. 1989) (quoting Ball Mem'l Hosp. v. Mut. Hosp. Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1338 (7th Cir. 1986)).

combination of the conduct directed at Novell's software applications and the anticompetitive conduct directed at Netscape, Java, and other third party applications.

Although Dr. Noll implied that the conduct that injured Novell's software applications by itself caused anticompetitive harm in the PC operating system market, [19] it is true that he only formally concluded that such conduct contributed significantly to anticompetitive harm in light of the conduct directed at third parties. (See Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 4 at 28 (Noll Expert Reply).) In his deposition--in response to repeated questioning from Microsoft's counsel about whether the conduct directed at Novell, in and of itself, caused "a significant or substantial impact on competition"--Dr. Noll stated, "I have not analyzed [70] the effect of each specific act by Microsoft on competition in the market for operating systems. I have analyzed the pattern, the totality of the actions by Microsoft on the market for operating systems." (Dkt. No. 1947, Exh. 3 at 40.) Shortly thereafter, the following exchange occurred:

> [Microsoft's Counsel:] Have you analyzed the aggregate of Microsoft's conduct that was directed against Novell's office productivity applications in order to ascertain whether that universe, that smaller universe, just conduct against Novell's office productivity applications, had some adverse impact on competition in the market for operating systems? . . .
>
> [Dr. Noll:] Had Microsoft behaved differently to all other kinds of applications of middleware vendors than it behaved towards Novell. . . . But all the other producers of middleware and applications had -- they had dealt with them in a pro-competitive way -- and facilitated the development that -- of high-quality applications of middleware that were not produced by Microsoft that ran on the Windows platform, then -- then I suspect there would have been no adverse effect of knocking Novell out of the industry from the actions against Novell, but that's [71] - that's counter [f]actual.

(Dkt. No. 1947, Exh. 3 at 40-43.)

Even taking that answer into account, I conclude that Dr. Noll's proposed testimony raises a genuine issue of fact regarding whether the conduct directed at Novell was a significant contributor to anticompetitive harm in the PC operating system market. Novell has no obligation to create some "hypothetical market place," in which none of the other ISVs or applications had been weakened by anticompetitive conduct, and then prove that the conduct at issue would still have significantly contributed to anticompetitive harm in that hypothetical market. Cf. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d at 79. It would be contrary to the purpose of § 2 to immunize a monopolist for anticompetitive conduct, which in fact significantly contributed to anticompetitive harm, simply because that harm was caused by conduct directed at multiple small threats, none of which could prove that the conduct directed at any single firm would have by itself significantly [72] contributed to the defendant's monopoly if none of the other small firms had been similarly weakened. See supra note 18; Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d at 79. [20] Rather, [*750] Novell need only prove that the conduct that harmed its software applications contributed significantly to Microsoft's monopoly in the PC operating system market considering all the characteristics of that market at the time, including the condition of other ISVs and applications.

---

[19] (Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 4 at 32 (Noll Expert Reply) ("I do not agree that Professor Murphy has proven that the acts against Novell alone had no effect on competition for the x86 operating systems . . . .").)

[20] (See also Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 4 at 27 (Noll Expert Reply) ("In a 1000-firm market, the harm to any one competitor would not cause harm to competition, but that is irrelevant to ascertaining whether the entire pattern of conduct against all 1000 firms caused anticompetitive harm.").)

Microsoft seems to concede that, under some circumstances, the anticompetitive harm caused by a defendant's anticompetitive conduct toward multiple small competitors could be aggregated to reach a significant contribution finding in the relevant market. Microsoft distinguishes itself from such a hypothetical defendant, however, by asserting that its conduct toward Novell was fundamentally different than the anticompetitive conduct Microsoft directed against other ISVs [73] and applications. This argument is unpersuasive. I am not convinced that the conduct directed at the other ISVs is distinguishable in any material way from the conduct directed at Novell. Regardless, I do not think a defendant can avoid antitrust liability by engaging in "different" anticompetitive conduct toward each of its small competitors.

To be sure, Novell cannot piggy-back on the anticompetitive harm caused by conduct directed at third parties without actually showing the conduct which injured its applications had an anticompetitive impact as well. But Novell is not doing so. Despite Microsoft's assertions to the contrary, implicit in Dr. Noll's opinion is the conclusion that conduct directed at Novell, in and of itself, caused some anticompetitive harm in the PC operating system market. Dr. Noll's deposition statement that knocking Novell out of the market alone would have "no adverse effect," when viewed in context, is properly understood as Dr. Noll agreeing that eliminating Novell's software applications from the market, on its own in some hypothetical market, would not have undermined Microsoft's monopoly position. Such a conclusion is not inconsistent with a finding that [74] Microsoft's actions toward Novell were a significant contributor to anticompetitive harm in the PC operating system market in light of the weakened state of other applications and ISVs. (Cf., e.g., Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 3 at 9-11 (Noll Expert Decl.); id., Exh. 4 at 6-7, 28 (Noll Expert Reply).) A reasonable person may disagree with Dr. Noll, but the decision whether or not to do so is within the province of a jury.

Accordingly, but for Novell selling its claims under the APA, I would have denied Microsoft's Motion for Summary Judgment on Count I.

C.

I will now finally address Count VI. I find that, even if Novell had not assigned this claim, Microsoft would be entitled to summary judgment because the agreements at issue either were not exclusive, were not otherwise anticompetitive, or did not substantially foreclose competition in any market.

Count VI alleges that Microsoft violated § 1 of the Sherman Act [21] by entering into "agreements with OEMs and others not to license or distribute Novell's office productivity applications or to do so only on terms that materially disadvantaged these products" thereby "unreasonably restrain[ing] trade by restricting the access of Novell's office productivity [75] applications to significant channels of distribution[.]" (Compl. P 175.)

There is some indication that the parties believe that Count VI concerns only restraining trade in the software applications markets, not the operating system market. Both parties have briefed the [*751] issue as if the operating system market was irrelevant and Microsoft argues that I, in response to Microsoft's earlier motion to dismiss, tolled Count VI at least in part because it concerned agreements with OEMs (suggesting that Microsoft may believe that Count VI's tolling was unrelated to its connection to the operating system market).

If this is the parties' view of the matter, it is understandable in light of (i) Count VI's failure to mention the operating system market, (Compl. PP 174-77), (ii) my brief explanation as to why Count VI was tolled, *In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11520, 2005 WL 1398643, at 1 ("Count VI is based upon Microsoft's exclusionary agreements with OEMs, which [76] allegedly were in [sic] unreasonable restraint of trade. Although Microsoft does not expressly concede the point, such agreements also were a subject of the government case. Thus, limitations has been tolled as to the claim asserted in Count VI."), and (iii) the fact that § 1, in comparison with § 2, is sometimes less focused on proving a particular anticompetitive impact in a particular market.

The Fourth Circuit, however, apparently believed that Count VI was tolled because Novell alleged unreasonable restraint of trade in the operating system market (though the court may not have actually reached the issue). [22] See Novell, 505 F.3d at 306-07. In contrast, the Fourth Circuit recognized that Counts II through V arose from allegations of anticompetitive impact in the software applications markets. Id. ("Because Counts II through V allege

---

[21] Section 1 HN20[] reads in part: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

[22] The Fourth Circuit explained: "Counts I and VI . . . are predicated on the theory that Microsoft's conduct injured competition in the market for PC operating systems, a market in which Novell did not directly compete. . . . Section 5(i) of the Clayton Act provides that government anti-trust proceedings toll the statute of limitations for private antitrust actions 'based in whole or in part on any matter complained of' by the government. Novell's Counts I and VI are indeed based on Microsoft's anticompetitive conduct in the PC operating-systems market, which was at issue in the DOJ complaint." See Novell, 505 F.3d at 306-07.

injury that is not specifically alleged in the DOJ complaint, Microsoft argued these claims were not tolled by the DOJ complaint and thus were time-barred. Microsoft sought dismissal of Novell's claims of injury to competition in the PC operating-systems market . . . in Counts I and VI on different grounds [antitrust standing and claim ownership].") [77] If Novell could prevail on Count VI by proving merely substantial foreclosure in the software applications markets, without proving restraint of trade in the operating system market, Microsoft would have had a persuasive argument that Count VI was not "based in whole or in part" on the government case and thus should not have been tolled. Accordingly, I am of the view that Novell must prove that the agreements at issue in Count VI have unreasonably restrained trade in the operating system market. [23]

[*752] Novell has not even attempted to present evidence on this point. [24] Rather, Novell has briefed the issue as if it [79] only needed to prove restraint of trade--in this case, substantial foreclosure--in the software applications markets. In any event, although I believe Novell's failure to show restraint of trade in the operating system market dooms Count VI, because of the confusion surrounding this issue I will nonetheless evaluate whether Microsoft's conduct substantially foreclosed competition in the software applications markets. I find Novell has failed to meet its burden here as well.

a. Substantial Foreclosure Framework

Although Novell never expressly frames it as such, I read Count VI as essentially an allegation of exclusive dealing. [25] More specifically, I understand Count VI as alleging that Microsoft violated § 1 by entering into agreements with [80] purchasers--OEMs, distributors, and resellers--which de facto committed those purchasers to buy software applications exclusively, or almost exclusively, from Microsoft.

Agreements violate § 1 when they unreasonably restrain trade. See, e.g., Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977). Exclusive dealing agreements that are alleged to violate § 1 are evaluated under the Rule of Reason, which balances the procompetitive justifications against the anticompetitive harm. See, e.g., HOLMES, supra note 25. The Tampa Elec. Co v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327-30, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961) substantial foreclosure framework basically serves as a proxy for the Rule of Reason in analyzing exclusive dealing allegations. [26] *Cf. Twin City Sportservice, [753] Inc. v. Charles O.

[23] In its brief before the Fourth Circuit, Microsoft explained [78] the procedural posture and history of Count VI:

> Because Counts I and VI allege harm in the same PC operating system market at issue in the DOJ Complaint, Microsoft did not argue that those two claims were time-barred. . . . There was some confusion in the district court concerning what market(s) are at issue in Count VI. Although Count VI does not specify a market, it alleges that Microsoft entered into exclusionary distribution agreements in violation of [§ 1]. . . . [S]uch a claim requires proof of harm to "competition as a whole within" at least one antitrust market. Novell provided no indication that Count VI might pertain to the PC operating system market (as opposed to the alleged applications markets) until oral argument, at which point Microsoft's counsel immediately responded that to the extent that were so, then Count VI should be dismissed for the same reasons as Count I.

Brief of Defendant-Appellant Microsoft Corp. at *12-*13, *13 n.4, Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft, Corp., Nos. 06-1134, 06-1238, 2006 WL 1348322 (4th Cir. Apr. 13, 2006) (internal citations omitted).

[24] Novell may have been able to prove restraint of trade in the operating system market by, in part, establishing substantial foreclosure in various software applications markets. To do so, however, Novell would have to prove more than just substantial foreclosure in those software applications markets; it would also have had to point to evidence showing how and why that substantial foreclosure in fact restrained trade in the operating system market.

[25] HN21[] "Exclusive dealing occurs when . . . a buyer . . . agrees to purchase, license or lease all or a substantial portion of its requirements of a product or service exclusively from a particular seller." WILLIAM C. HOLMES, ANTITRUST LAW HANDBOOK § 2:19 (2009).

[26] Although Tampa Electric involved a Clayton Act claim, its analysis pertains to exclusive dealing under § 1 of the Sherman Act as well. See Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 335 ("We need not discuss the respondents' further contention that the contract also violates § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act, for if it does not fall within the broader prescriptions of § 3 of the Clayton Act it follows

Finley & Co., 676 F.2d 1291, 1301 (9th Cir. 1982) (the Tampa Electric framework "clearly is to determine the anticompetitive effects of exclusive-dealing arrangements"). [81] Under Tampa Electric, § 1 liability requires the plaintiff to prove that (1) the agreements in question were in fact exclusive, and (2) the exclusive dealing substantially lessened competition--that is, the agreements foreclosed competition in a substantial share of the relevant market. [27] See, e.g., Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 327-30.

b. Project Avalanche Agreements Lacked Exclusivity and Anticompetitiveness [83] [28]

HN23[] To be considered "exclusive" under antitrust laws, an agreement must either expressly preclude a party from doing business with the defendant's competitors, or highly incentivize or have the practical effect of exclusivity. See LePage's, 324 F.3d at 157-58 (in analyzing a § 2 claim, noting that "unilaterally imposed quantity discounts can foreclose the opportunities of rivals when a dealer can obtain its best discount only by dealing exclusively with the dominant firm" (quoting 3A PHILLIP E. [*754] AREEDA & HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW P 768b2, at 148)); Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039, 1058-59 (8th Cir. 2000) (holding that discount that it is not forbidden by those of the former."). Some "[c]ourts and commentators disagree as to whether [the Tampa Electric test] outlaws a broader range of conduct than does the rule of reason drawn from § 1 of the Sherman Act." Bepco, 106 F. Supp. 2d at 827. I believe (1) that exclusive dealing claims under the Clayton Act and the Sherman Act (§ 1) are either subject to the same standard or that the Clayton Act is broader and (2) that the analytical framework for exclusive [82] dealing claims under § 1 is the same as that articulated in Tampa Electric. See, e.g., Twin City Sportservice, 676 F.2d at 1301-02 (expressly authorizing use of Tampa Electric to analyze exclusive dealing under § 1); United States v. Microsoft Corp., 87 F. Supp 2d 30, 52-53 (D.D.C. 2000), rev 'd on other grounds by 253 F.3d (utilizing Tampa Electric, or something close to it, in analyzing a § 1 claim); Masimo Corp. v. Tyco Health Care Group, L.P., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29977, 2006 WL 1236666, at *4 n.2, *4-*8 (C.D. Cal. 2006) (unpublished) (utilizing Tampa Electric, or something close to it, in analyzing a § 1 claim and noting "it is easier to meet the threshold of foreclosure for a [Clayton Act] violation that it is for a § 1 violation" (citing Twin City Sportservice, 676 F.2d at 1304 n.9)).

---

[27] Section 1 HN22[] only covers "contract[s], combination[s] . . ., or conspiracy[ies]." In contrast to the pattern of unilateral conduct that was considered in analyzing the § 2 claim in Count I, agreements between Microsoft and third parties are the only allegedly anticompetitive conduct that may be considered in assessing the anticompetitive harm in Count VI.

[28] Microsoft also argues that the Project Avalanche agreements may not form the basis of Count VI because (1) "[h]ad Novell alleged harm to competition in channels other than the OEM channel, that allegation would have been barred by the statute of limitations because it would not have been based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in the Government case" and (2) Novell did not include such allegations in its Complaint.

As to Microsoft's first argument, a claim arising from the Project Avalanche agreements may still have been tolled because Novell alleges that those agreements caused harm in the PC operating [85] system market. See Novell, 505 F.3d at 307 (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 16(i)) ("Section 5(i) of the Clayton Act HN24[] provides that government antitrust proceedings toll the statute of limitations for private antitrust actions 'based in whole or in part on any matter complained of' by the government. Novell's Counts I and VI are indeed based on Microsoft's anticompetitive conduct in the PC operating-systems market, which was at issue in the DOJ Complaint."); see also Novell, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11520, 2005 WL 1398643, at *3 (internal citation omitted) ("The governing test is whether the matters complained of in the private action 'bear a real relation' to a matter complained of in the government suit.").

I also am unpersuaded by Microsoft's second argument. Again, a complaint need only contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Erickson, 551 U.S. at 93 (quoting FED. R. CIV. P. 8(a)(2)). Although "specific facts are not necessary," the Complaint must "'give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). Novell's Complaint put Microsoft on fair notice that it would bring claims based on [86] agreements in the finished goods channel. The Complaint included a section entitled "Other Distribution Channels," in which Novell alleged "anticompetitive tactics" in "the following channels: independent retailers that sell to individual and small businesses; independent or loosely affiliated resellers that sell to larger organizations . . .; and direct sales to government agencies, large corporations, and other large organizations." (Compl. PP 132-33.) Presumably in an effort to strengthen its argument about the relatedness between Count VI and the government's suit, Novell only highlighted the OEM agreements in opposing the Motion to Dismiss, and accordingly both this Court and the Fourth Circuit focused on the OEM agreements as the crux of Count VI. Nonetheless, the fact that the Complaint itself challenges non-OEM agreements leads me to conclude that I should consider the allegations about the Project Avalanche agreements.

purchase agreements that did not require buyers to commit to buying a seller's products for any specified time period were not "exclusive" because buyers "were free to walk away from the discounts at any time"); *Masimo Corp., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29977, 2006 WL 1236666, at 3, 5-6 (holding that, where defendant gave substantially larger discounts to a hospital if it satisfied over 90 percent of its need for "pulse oximetry systems" with purchases from the defendant, the jury reasonably concluded that agreements were exclusive because defendant "in practical [84] effect, offered hospitals their best discount only if they dealt with [defendant] exclusively"); Microsoft Corp., 87 F. Supp 2d at 52-53, rev'd on other grounds by 253 F.3d 34, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (finding a contract to be exclusive where it imposed "severe shipment quotas and promotional restrictions for third-party [products]"); see also R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Phillip Morris Inc., 199 F. Supp. 2d 362, 387 (M.D.N.C. 2002) ("[Exclusive dealing] arrangements typically involve requirements contracts, non-competition clauses, and agreements giving discounts in exchange for exclusivity.").

Novell has not raised a genuine issue of fact about whether the Project Avalanche agreements with distributors and resellers were exclusive. These agreements were not typical exclusive agreements such as requirements contracts or non-competition agreements. Unlike [87] in Masimo, Microsoft did not offer its best discount only if distributors dealt exclusively, or close to exclusively, with Microsoft. Like any discount, the more the distributor purchased the discounted products, the greater it benefited from the discount; but there was no particularly appealing benefit hinging on exclusivity or anything close to it. Nor did these agreements directly penalize distributors and resellers for selling non-Microsoft products. Rather, Microsoft simply offered distributors a modest rebate for increasing their sales and "blended share" of Microsoft products. (See Dkt. No. 1952, Exh. 123.) Incentivizing increased sales and share, at least to the extent that these agreements did, hardly has the "practical effect" of exclusivity. In fact, as Microsoft points out, distributors subject to these agreements were also responsible for 48 percent of Novell's sales in 1995. Cf. R.J. Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 390 ("Plaintiffs . . . have been successful in securing merchandising contracts with [stores subject to a CMO3 contract with the defendant], which suggest that [the product] sold in CMO3 stores is an inappropriate figure for the foreclosure analysis.").

Although [88] their lack of exclusivity alone may doom their viability as a basis for § 1 liability, see supra note 26, the Project Avalanche agreements are also not anticompetitive by any other measure. First, these agreements warrant "less cause for anticompetitive concern" because they were "imposed on distributors rather than end users." Omega Envtl., Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1163 (9th Cir. 1997). "If competitors can reach the ultimate consumers of the product by employing existing or potential alternative channels of distribution it is unclear whether such restrictions foreclose from competition any part of the relevant market." Id. Accord Microsoft Corp., 87 F. Supp. 2d at 53 (finding exclusive agreements with distributors did not foreclose a substantial share of the market because internet browser developers could always sell browsers directly to end-users). Further, these agreements basically entail price-cutting, which is particularly likely to have procompetitive and pro-consumer benefits.

[*755] In short, because the Project Avalanche agreements were not exclusive or otherwise anticompetitive, they may not form the basis of Novell's § I claim.

c. Agreements with OEMs Did Not Substantially [89] Foreclose Competition

As discussed above, HN25[] to succeed on a § 1 claim under Tampa Electric, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant's conduct foreclosed competition in a "substantial" share of the relevant market. See, e.g., Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 327-28; R.J. Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 387. Substantial foreclosure depends on many factors--the parties' market strength, the degree of exclusivity, business justifications for the agreement, duration of the agreement, barriers to entry in the market, etc.--but requires that the agreements at issue cover at least 20 percent of the relevant market (and usually significantly more than that). [29] See Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 328-29, 334-35; Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 70 (noting "the roughly 40% or 50% share usually required in order to establish a § 1 violation"); Bepco, 106 F. Supp. 2d at 828 (21.5 percent and 18.5 percent "fall short of any value presumed to be substantial and lie on the margin of what is considered to be significant"); R.J. Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 387-

---

[29] "The relevant market for this purpose includes the full range of selling opportunities reasonably open to rivals . . ." Omega Envtl., 127 F.3d at 1162 (quoting 2A Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 570b1, at 278).

88, 391-92 (noting that the lowest coverage courts and commentators have found significant is 20 percent and that courts have found agreements covering up to 50 percent [90] of the market to not be substantial).

Because the Project Avalanche agreements are not exclusive or otherwise anticompetitive, to survive summary judgment on Count VI Novell must raise a genuine issue about whether the per system and minimum purchase agreements between Microsoft and OEMs resulted in substantial foreclosure. [30] But cf. R.J. Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 387-88 (holding that Phillip Morris offering retailers discounts in exchange for advantageous advertising space was not exclusive dealing but nonetheless "us [ing] the substantial foreclosure analysis typically used in exclusive dealing cases"). However, Novell has not presented evidence that these agreements covered close to twenty percent of any software applications market, and it has therefore failed to meet its burden. (See Dkt. No. 1947, Exh. 45.) In fact, Novell does not seem to contest Microsoft's assertion that the OEM agreements covered at most 10 percent of any relevant market. [91] (See id., Exh. 45; Dkt. No. 1952 at 43-45.) Even if 10 percent could ever amount to substantial foreclosure, which I do not believe it could, Novell has failed to point to any market factor significant enough to support a substantial foreclosure finding with such a small segment of the market covered. [31]

[*756] In sum, because Microsoft's agreements with OEMs did not foreclose a substantial share of any software applications market--and the Project Avalanche agreements were not exclusive or otherwise anticompetitive--a § 1 claim here would not survive summary judgment even if the issue was restraining trade in the software applications markets. Furthermore, Novell has not met its burden of providing evidence that Microsoft's conduct created an unreasonable restraint in the PC operating system market, and for that reason alone Count VI would have failed even if Novell had not assigned it to Caldera. [32]

DATE: March 30, 2010

/s/

J. Frederick Motz

United States District Judge

ORDER

For the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum, it is, this 30th day of March, 2010

ORDERED

1. Defendant's motion [93] for summary judgment is granted;
2. Plaintiff's cross-motion for summary judgment is denied; and
3. Judgment is entered in favor of defendant against plaintiff.

/s/

---

[30] This assumes, without deciding, that these agreements with OEMs would in fact be considered exclusive or anticompetitive.

[31] The § 1 legality of these minimum purchase and per system agreements is distinguishable from the Section 1 legality of Microsoft's minimum purchase, per system, per copy, and per processor agreements with OEMs covered by Judge Jackson's consent order in 1995. In that case, the OEM agreements concerned the distribution of PC operating systems, a market in which OEMs control a substantially greater percentage of the distribution channels than they do in the various software applications markets. See United States v. Microsoft, 159 F.R.D. 318, 1995 WL 505998 (D.D.C. 1995); see also United States v. Microsoft Corp, 159 F.R.D. 318, 322 n.9 (D.D.C. 1995) ("In the first half of 1994, 80% of Windows units sold by Microsoft were through OEMs."), rev'd by 56 F.3d 1448, 312 U.S. App. D.C. 378 (D.C. Cir.). Consequently, [92] anticompetitive or exclusive OEM agreements in the PC operating system market foreclosed a much greater amount of competition.

[32] Microsoft also argues that Novell "abandoned" Count VI because it failed to offer expert evidence of the damages it suffered as a result of the conduct alleged in Count VI. (See Dkt. No. 1947 at 44.) Because Count VI may be resolved on other grounds, I did not reach this issue.

J. Frederick Motz

United States District Judge

Winn v. Alamo Title Ins. Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

March 30, 2010, Filed

No. 09-50511

Reporter

372 Fed. Appx. 461 *; 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 6541 ; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,968

CHRISTOPHER WINN, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated; WILLIAM CUMMINGS, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated; CHRISTOPHER VILLEMARETTE, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated; NATALIE CUMMINGS, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs - Appellants v. ALAMO TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY; FIDELITY NATIONAL TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY; CHICAGO TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY; TICOR TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY; FIDELITY NATIONAL FINANCE, INC; FIRST AMERICAN TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK; UNITED GENERAL TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY; FIRST AMERICAN CORPORATION; COMMONWEALTH LAND TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY; LAWYERS TITLE INSURANCE CORPORATION; LANDAMERICA FINANCIAL GROUP, INC; STEWART TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY; STEWART INFORMATION SERVICES CORPORATION, Defendants - Appellees

Notice: PLEASE REFER TO FEDERAL RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE RULE 32.1 GOVERNING THE CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS.

Subsequent History: US Supreme Court certiorari denied by Winn v. Alamo Title Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. LEXIS 6905 (U.S., Oct. 4, 2010)

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas. USDC No. 1:09-CV-214.

Winn v. Alamo Title Ins. Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65889 (W.D. Tex., May 13, 2009)

Core Terms

filed-rate, homeowners, rates, district court, antitrust, charging, entities, title insurance company, title insurance, price-fixing, reasons

Counsel: For CHRISTOPHER WINN, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, WILLIAM CUMMINGS, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, CHRISTOPHER VILLEMARETTE, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, NATALIE CUMMINGS, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff - Appellants: Loren Kieve, Kieve Law Offices, San Francisco, CA; Louis Fox Burke, New York, NY; William Smythe Shepherd, Jr., Shepherd, Smith & Edwards, L. L. P., Houston, TX; Arun S. Subramanian, Susman Godfrey, L.L.P., New York, NY.

For ALAMO TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY, FIDELITY NATIONAL TITLE INSURANCE CO, CHICAGO TITLE INSURANCE CO., TICOR TITLE INSURANCE CO, FIDELITY NATIONAL FINANCE, INC., LAWYERS TITLE INSURANCE CORPORATION, Defendant - Appellees: Barry R. Ostrager, Kevin J. Arquit, Patrick Timothy Shilling, Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett, L.L.P., New York, NY; Chris A. Blackerby, Germer, Gertz, Beaman & Brown, L.L.P., Austin, TX; Lawrence Louis Germer, Charles W. Goehringer, Jr., Germer Gertz, L.L.P., Beaumont, TX.

For FIRST AMERICAN TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK, [2] UNITED GENERAL TITLE INSURANCE CO, FIRST AMERICAN CORP, Defendant - Appellees: George Allan Van Fleet, Greenberg Traurig, L.P., Houston, TX; James Ian Serota, Greenberg Traurig, L.L.P., New York, NY.

For COMMONWEALTH LAND TITLE INSURANCE CO, Defendant - Appellee: Barry R. Ostrager, Kevin J. Arquit, Patrick Timothy Shilling, Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett, L.L.P., New York, NY; Chris A. Blackerby, Germer, Gertz, Beaman & Brown, L.L.P., Austin, TX; Charles W. Goehringer, Jr., Germer Gertz, L.L.P., Beaumont, TX.

For LANDAMERICA FINANCIAL GROUP, INC., Defendant - Appellee: Barry R. Ostrager, Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett, L.L.P., New York, NY; Lawrence Louis Germer, Charles W. Goehringer, Jr., Germer Gertz, L.L.P., Beaumont, TX.

For STEWART TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY, STEWART INFORMATION SERVICES CORP., Defendant - Appellees: Layne E. Kruse, Fulbright & Jaworski, L.L.P., Houston, TX; David Marion Foster, Fulbright & Jaworski, L.L.P., Washington, DC; Mark Allen Robertson, Fulbright & Jaworski, L.L.P., New York, NY.

Judges: Before DAVIS, WIENER, and SOUTHWICK, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

[*462] PER CURIAM: *

Plaintiffs are Texas homeowners who purchased title insurance from one or more of the Defendant companies. The homeowners complain that they were charged artificially inflated rates as a result of a price-fixing scheme. In Texas, the rates for title insurance are set by the Commissioner of Insurance. Title insurance companies are required to charge these rates.

On April 3, 2008, the homeowners filed this suit as a class action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas. The case was later transferred to the Western District. No class certification has apparently issued.

The homeowners insist that the companies' actions constitute a per se price-fixing scheme in violation of the Sherman Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 1. They also allege that the companies violated the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act and the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act. They also make certain common law claims.

In August of 2008, the title insurance companies jointly moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Among the allegations was that the federal and state [4] claims were barred by the "filed-rate doctrine," which precludes actions against private entities for charging a rate set by the appropriate regulating authority.

On May 14, 2009, the district court dismissed on the sole basis that the filed-rate doctrine barred each claim. The homeowners timely appealed.

The filed-rate doctrine prevents state-regulated entities from charging rates other than those mandated by the proper [*463] authority. Ark. La. Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 (1981). The doctrine also prohibits suits by customers against entities charging government-prescribed rates. Keogh v. Chicago & Nw. Ry., Co, 260 U.S. 156, 162-65, 43 S. Ct. 47, 67 L. Ed. 183 (1922).

The homeowners assert three reasons the filed-rate doctrine does not bar their claims: (1) applying the filed-rate doctrine to the companies' alleged antitrust violations is contrary to Texas law; (2) the Texas Insurance

---

* Pursuant to 5TH CIR. R. 47.5, the court has determined that this opinion should not be published and is not precedent except [3] under the limited circumstances set forth in 5TH CIR. R. 47.5.4.

Commissioner's authority is too limited to justify application of the filed-rate doctrine; and (3) the companies' conduct violated federal and state antitrust law, making the filed-rate doctrine inapplicable.

In addition, the homeowners make various constitutional and state law arguments. Finally, they allege that they were improperly [5] denied a right to amend their complaint.

After a review of the record and the briefs filed on appeal, we conclude, largely for the reasons expressed by the district court, that the filed-rate doctrine bars each of the homeowners' claims. None of the arguments that would allow evading that doctrine has merit.

We AFFIRM.

Active Disposal, Inc. v. City of Darien

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

March 31, 2010, Decided; March 31, 2010, Filed

Case No. 09 C 2930

Reporter
2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32687 *; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,953; 2010 WL 1416461

ACTIVE DISPOSAL, INC; ALL WASTE DISPOSAL APEX INTERIORS, INC.; BOSMAN DISPOSAL; BOXCO, INC.; C.M. ROOF SYSTEMS, INC.; CFS ENTERPRISES, INC; CIRCLE M DUMPSTER SERVICE, INC.; DISPOSAL MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS, INC.; ECONOMY DISPOSAL SERVICES, INC.; FEZE ROOFING, INC.; LAWRENCE E. GUSTAFASON ROOFING, INC.; J.L. ROLL-OFF SERVICE, INC.; K. HOVING RECYCLING & DISPOSAL, INC.; LIBERTY WASTE & RECYCLING SERVICE, INC.; MBL RECYCLING, INC.; MOLENHOUSE ENTERPRISES, INC.; MURPHY ROOFING, INC.; NICHOLAS & ASSOCIATES, INC.; OMNI COMMERCIAL GROUP, INC.; OSTRANDER CONSTRUCTION, INC.; PRAIRIELAND DISPOSAL, INC.; PREMIUM DISPOSAL, INC.; RECYCLING SYSTEMS, INC.; ROLL-ON ROLL-OFF, INC.; TRASH CAN RECYCLING, LLC; WASTEBOX, INC.; and WASTE ONE, LLC, Plaintiffs, vs. CITY OF DARIEN; CITY OF EVANSTON; CITY OF OAK BROOK TERRACE; CITY OF PROSPECT HEIGHTS; VILLAGE OF ADDISON; VILLAGE OF HOFFMAN ESTATES; VILLAGE OF MT. PROSPECT; VILLAGE OF NILES; VILLAGE OF NORTHFIELD; VILLAGE OF WHEELING; and VILLAGE OF WILMETTE, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Count dismissed at Active Disposal, Inc. v. City of Darien, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62111 (N.D. Ill., June 23, 2010)

Core Terms

ordinances, municipalities, anticompetitive, exemption, contracts, state action, garbage, recyclable, exclusive contract, hauling, ashes, foreseeable, plaintiffs', collection, antitrust liability, containers, disposal, roll, motion to dismiss, state policy, state law, interfere, impaired, effects, challenged ordinance, Sherman Act, regulation, antitrust, hauler

Counsel: [*1] For Active Disposal Inc., Plaintiff: David A. Novoselsky, LEAD ATTORNEY, David A. Novoselsky & Associates, Chicago, Il; Brian Albert Schroeder, James J Ayres, Sr., Julie E Fox, Novoselsky Law Offices, Chicago, IL.

For All Waste Disposal, Waste One, LLC, Wastebox, Inc., Trash Can Recycling, LLC, Roll-On Roll-Off Inc., Recycling Systems, Inc., Premium Disposal, Inc., Prairieland Disposal, Inc., Molenhouse Enterprises, Inc., MBL Recycling, Inc., Liberty Waste & Recycling Service, Inc., K. Hoving Recycling & Disposal, Inc., J. L. Roll-Off Service, Inc., Economy Disposal Services, Inc., Disposal Management Systems, Inc., Circle M Dumpster Service, inc., Boxco, Inc., Bosman Disposal, Plaintiffs: David A. Novoselsky, LEAD ATTORNEY, David A. Novoselsky & Associates, Chicago, Il; Brian Albert Schroeder, Julie E Fox, Novoselsky Law Offices, Chicago, IL.

For Apex Enteriors Inc, Showalter Roofing, Inc., Ostrander Construction, Inc., Omni Commercial Group Inc, Nicholas & Associates, Inc., Murphy Roofing, Inc., Lawrence E. Gustafson Roofing, Inc., Feze Roofing, Inc., CFS Enterprises, Inc., C.M. Roof Systems Inc, Plaintiffs: Brian Albert Schroeder, Julie E Fox, Novoselsky Law Offices, Chicago, IL.

For [*2] Fred J. Smith Roofing, Plaintiff: Julie E Fox, Novoselsky Law Offices, Chicago, IL.

For City of Darien, The, an Illinois Municipal Corporation, Defendant: John B. Murphey, LEAD ATTORNEY, Rosenthal, Murphey, Coblentz & Donahue, Chicago, IL.

For City of Evanston, The, an Illinois Municipal Corporation, Defendant: Charles E. Harper, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Jacquelyn T. Pinnell, Quarles & Brady LLP, Chicago, IL; Jack M. Siegel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Holland & Knight LLP, Chicago, IL.

For City of Oak Brook Terrace, The, an Illinois Municipal Corporation, Defendant: William W. Kurnik, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kristen Diane Alkire, Knight, Hoppe, Kurnik & Knight LLC, Rosemont, IL.

For City of Prospect Heights, The, an Illinois Municipal Corporation, Defendant: Paul Alan Rettberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Brandon K Lemley, Christopher Paul Keleher, Querrey & Harrow, Ltd., Chicago, IL; Robert S. OMeara, LEAD ATTORNEY, Casey L Westover, Reed Smith LLP, Chicago, IL.

For Village of Addison, The, an Illinois Municipal Corporation, Village of Wilmette, The, an Illinois Municipal Corporation, Defendants: Paul Alan Rettberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Brandon K Lemley, Christopher Paul Keleher, Querrey & Harrow, Ltd., Chicago, IL.

For Village of [*3] Hoffman Estates, The, an Illinois Municipal Corporation, Defendant: Arthur L. Janura, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Arnstein & Lehr LLP, Hoffman Estates, IL; Charles E. Harper, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Jacquelyn T. Pinnell, Quarles & Brady LLP, Chicago, IL; Hal R. Morris, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jenifer Hitt Caracciolo, Arnstein & Lehr, LLP, Chicago, IL.

For Village of Mt. Prospect, The, an Illinois Corporation, Defendant: Gregory T. Smith, Klein Thorpe and Jenkins Ltd., Chicago, IL.

For Village of Northfield, The, an Illinois Municipal Corporation, Village of Wheeling, The, an Illinois Municipal Corporation, Defendants: John H. Anderson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Seyfarth Shaw LLP, Chicago, IL.

Judges: MATTHEW F. KENNELLY, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: MATTHEW F. KENNELLY

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

MATTHEW F. KENNELLY, District Judge:

The plaintiffs in this case are companies that provide hauling and disposal services to customers who use "roll off" containers for waste and recycling, and corporations that would like to use the services of those hauling and disposal companies. The defendants are Illinois municipalities that have adopted ordinances giving exclusive contracts for waste and recycling hauling to waste disposal firms [*4] other than the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs allege that defendants' exclusive contracts violate the Contract and Due Process Clauses of the United States Constitution and interfere with competition in violation of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs also allege that defendants have tortiously interfered with plaintiffs' contracts and prospective economic advantage and have committed antitrust violations under Illinois law. Defendants have moved to dismiss plaintiffs' claims for failure to state a claim pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). For the reasons stated below, the Court grants the motion with regard to all federal law claims and dismisses the state law claims for lack of supplemental jurisdiction.

Background

When considering a motion to dismiss a complaint, the Court accepts the facts stated in the complaint as true and draws reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Newell Operating Co. v. Int'l Union of United Auto., Aero., &

Agric., Implement Workers of Am., 532 F.3d 583, 587 (7th Cir. 2008). The Court takes the following facts from the allegations in plaintiffs' amended complaint.

There are two groups of plaintiffs in this case. The first group (the "hauler [*5] plaintiffs") consists of companies in the business of hauling and removing private and commercial waste containers, commonly referred to as "roll off" containers. The second group (the "customer plaintiffs") consists of businesses that have employed one or more of the hauler plaintiffs in the past and wish to retain their services in the future. The defendants are Illinois municipalities that have enacted ordinances that establish exclusive contracts with companies other than the hauler plaintiffs to conduct all of the hauling of roll off containers within their borders. These ordinances prohibit the hauler plaintiffs from removing roll off containers from property within the defendant municipalities and prohibit the customer plaintiffs from hiring any hauler other than the one that holds the exclusive contract for garbage removal in a defendant municipality.

The challenged ordinances were passed pursuant to 65 ILCS 5/11-19-1, which gives municipalities the authority to enter into exclusive contracts for waste disposal. Plaintiffs allege, however, that this statute prohibits exclusive contracts for materials that can be recycled. Because the defendant municipalities' ordinances include [*6] recyclable materials, plaintiffs argue, the ordinances are not permitted by the state law.

Plaintiffs allege that the ordinances passed by defendant municipalities interfere with their business operations and impermissibly restrict their rights to enter into contracts. In count 1, they allege that the ordinances violate article I, section 10 of the United States Constitution (the Contract Clause) and interfere with their substantive due process rights under the Constitution's Fourteenth Amendment. In counts 2 and 3, plaintiffs allege that the ordinances tortiously interfere with their existing business relationships and prospective economic advantage, in violation of Illinois common law. In count 4, plaintiffs allege that the ordinance violates section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. In count 5, they allege that the ordinances violate the Illinois Antitrust Act, 740 ILCS 10/3.

Discussion

Defendants have moved to dismiss all of plaintiffs' claims under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a) "requires that a complaint contain a 'short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Killingsworth v. HSBC Bank Nevada, N.A., 507 F.3d 614, 618 (7th Cir. 2007) [*7] (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)). The statement must be sufficient to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (citing Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)). Although the plaintiff is not required to give detailed factual allegations, she must allege facts that "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Id.

A. Contract Clause claim (count 1)

The Contract Clause prohibits a state from passing any law "impairing the Obligation of Contracts." U.S. CONST. art. 1 § 10. Plaintiffs allege that the defendants' ordinances granting exclusive franchise contracts for waste hauling preclude plaintiffs from maintaining their businesses in violation of the Contract Clause.

Courts employ a three part test to determine whether a law violates the contract clause. A court must determine whether the ordinance operates as a substantial impairment of existing contractual relationships; whether the municipality has a significant and legitimate purpose justifying the ordinance; and whether the effect of the ordinance on contracts is reasonable and appropriate given the public purpose behind [*8] the ordinance. Chicago Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. City of Chicago, 819 F.2d 732, 736 (7th Cir. 1987), citing Energy Reserves Group, Inc. v. Kansas Power & Light Co., 459 U.S. 400, 411-12, 103 S. Ct. 697, 74 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1983).

To satisfy the first element of the test, the contract allegedly impaired must exist at the time the challenged law is enacted. Texaco, Inc. v. Short, 454 U.S. 516, 531, 102 S. Ct. 781, 70 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1982). The plaintiffs' complaint identifies no contract of any plaintiff that existed at the time any of the defendant municipalities' ordinances were passed and was thereby impaired. The complaint makes passing reference to "maintaining existing contracts," Compl. P 65, but it says nothing about which (if any) plaintiffs held such contracts, the terms of those contracts, or how they were impaired by the contested ordinances. Though Rule 8(a)(2) does not require a complaint to include "detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atl. Corp., 550 U.S. at 555 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). The brief non-specific mention of "existing [*9] contracts" in the complaint is insufficient to allege a substantial impairment of an existing contract. [1]

B. Substantive due process claim (count 1)

Count 1 of the complaint also includes an allegation that the challenged ordinances "effectively [prohibit] Plaintiffs from enjoying their right to use their property and obtain and maintain a livelihood in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment" to the United States Constitution. Compl. P 66. To prevail on the claim that the ordinances interfere with their substantive rights, the plaintiffs must demonstrate "either that the ordinance[s] [interfere] with a fundamental liberty interest, or that the ordinance[s] [are] arbitrary and unreasonable, having no substantial relation to the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare." Pro-Eco, Inc. v. Bd. of Comm'rs of Jay County, Ind., 57 F.3d 505, 514 (7th Cir. 1995) (internal citations omitted).

All of the plaintiffs in this lawsuit are corporations. Though the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment may include the right of an individual [*10] to contract, Board of Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 572, 92 S. Ct. 2701, 33 L. Ed. 2d 548 (1972), "corporations do not have fundamental rights -- that term describes only personal liberties." Pro-Eco, 57 F.3d at 514.

Therefore, to prevail on their substantive due process claim, plaintiffs must demonstrate that the ordinance is arbitrary and unreasonable. Id. Each of the challenged ordinances identifies a public health or economic justification for its enactment. This is sufficient to satisfy the highly deferential rational basis test, which defeats the plaintiffs' substantive due process claim. Id. ("[G]overnmental action passes the rational basis test if any sound basis may be hypothesized.") (quoting Northside Sanitary Landfill, Inc. v. City of Indianapolis, 902 F.2d 521, 522 (7th Cir. 1990)). The Court therefore grants defendants' motion to dismiss the Fourteenth Amendment claim in count 1.

C. Sherman Act claim (count 4)

Plaintiffs allege that by enacting the challenged ordinances, the defendants "have engaged in anti-competitive conduct directed at accomplishing the unlawful purpose of creating and maintaining a monopoly in the Roll Off market to bar citizens from availing themselves of the service of Roll Off vendors [*11] of their choice." Compl. P 86. Plaintiffs maintain that this constitutes the creation and maintenance of a monopoly in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.

Defendants assert that they are exempt from antitrust liability under the "state action" exemption to federal antitrust law. In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), the Supreme Court construed the Sherman Act to exempt a state, acting through its legislature, from antitrust liability arising from anticompetitive conduct. Id. at 350-52.

A municipality's actions can qualify for the state action exemption if "[its] anticompetitive activities were authorized by the State pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service." Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 38-39, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985) (citing Lafayette v.

[1] For this reason, the Court need not address whether plaintiffs have adequately alleged the remaining elements of a viable Contract Clause claim.

Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 413, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978) (opinion of Brennan, J.)). In Town of Hallie, the Supreme Court considered "how clearly a state policy must be articulated to be able to establish that its anticompetitive activity constitutes state action." Id. at 40. At issue in Town of Hallie was a Wisconsin state law relating to provision of sewer services. The state [*12] law authorized Wisconsin cities to provide sewage services and gave the cities the authority to determine the area to be served. Id. at 42. Reasoning that "anticompetitive effects logically would result from this broad authority to regulate," the Court held that the anticompetitive effects were pursuant to a state policy and therefore fell within the state action exemption.

In Town of Hallie, the Court held that for the state action exemption to apply, a state law need not compel a municipality to act in the allegedly anticompetitive way, nor is it necessary that the state actively supervise the municipality's actions. Id. at 46. Rather, a municipality's anti-competitive actions need only be a "foreseeable result" of a state law to qualify for the exemption. Id. Foreseeability does not require that a statute or its legislative history expressly state that the legislature intended the delegated action to have an anticompetitive effect. Id. at 43. As the Supreme Court cautioned, "requiring such a close examination of a state legislature's intent to determine whether the federal antitrust law apply would be undesirable . . . because it would embroil the federal courts in the unnecessary [*13] interpretation of state statutes." Id. at 44 n.7. Rather, a court can infer that the legislature contemplated anticompetitive action if the state statute "clearly articulate[d] and affirmatively express[ed] state policy to displace competition with regulation." Id. at 44 (internal quotation marks omitted). Provided they were taken "pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to replace competition . . . with regulation," id. at 47, a municipality's anticompetitive actions are subject to the state action exemption from antitrust liability. [2]

The Seventh Circuit has broadly interpreted the concept of foreseeability in applying Town of Hallie. In LaSalle Nat'l Bank v. County of DuPage, 777 F.2d 377 (7th Cir. 1985), the court ruled that municipalities [*14] were exempt from federal antitrust liability for allegedly anticompetitive acts undertaken in the provision of sewer services. The court held that anticompetitive conduct was foreseeable based on an Illinois state statute that authorized municipalities to "furnish sewerage service to municipal corporations and enter into and perform contracts with any municipality for the furnishing of sewerage service" and a statute that authorized the Illinois Environmental Protection Agency to plan with municipalities how to reduce water pollution. Id. at 381-82 (internal citations omitted).

In the same case, the court held that municipalities were exempt from antitrust liability arising out of zoning decisions, even those made in alleged collusion with other municipalities, because the Illinois legislature had authorized them to "regulate and restrict the location and use of buildings, structures and land for trade, industry, residents, and other uses." Id. at 383 (internal citation omitted). In so ruling, the Court inferred foreseeability from the legislature's stated purpose for the law, which included: "the promotion of public health, safety, morals, comfort, and general welfare, conserving the [*15] values of property throughout the country, [and] lessening or avoiding congesting in the public streets and highways." Id. The court noted that "[t]hese purposes, although not necessarily in conflict with the policies of the antitrust laws, are not necessarily consistent with them either, and to that extent the legislature can be said to have foreseen anticompetitive effects." Id.

In Campbell v. City of Chicago, 823 F.2d 1182 (7th Cir. 1987), the Seventh Circuit held that the City of Chicago was exempt from antitrust liability for its actions to cap the number of available taxicab licenses, because an Illinois statute authorized it to "license, tax, and regulate hackmen, dragmen, omnibus drivers, carters, cabmen, porters, expressmen, and all others pursuing like occupations, and [to] prescribe their compensation." Id. at 1184. The court concluded that "as the anti-competitive effects would logically result from the authority to regulate," the state action exemption applied. Id. More recently, in Justice v. Town of Cicero, 577 F.3d 768, 775 (7th Cir. 2008), the court held that an Illinois law that authorized local governments to "make all needful rules and regulations concerning the

---

[2] Several of the defendants are home rule municipalities, which are granted broad power to legislate by the Illinois State Constitution. ILL. CONST. art. VII § 6. This does not change the antitrust analysis. Home rule municipalities' actions may be exempt from antitrust scrutiny if they constitute municipal action to carry out clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy." Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 52, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982).

[*16] use of water supplied by the waterworks of the city or village" and to fix and collect water rates "as the corporate authorities may deem necessary or expedient" was sufficient to exempt the town from antitrust liability. Id.

The defendants argue that their ordinances fall within the state action exemption. They rely on 65 ILCS 5/11-19-1(a), which provides that "[a]ny city, village or incorporated town may make contracts . . . with any person, corporation, or county . . . for more than one year and not exceeding 30 years relating to the collection and final disposition, or relating solely to either the collection or final disposition of garbage, refuse and ashes." The defendants argue that anticompetitive effects are a foreseeable result of the statute's express authorization for municipalities to enter into contracts for garbage collection.

Plaintiffs argue that to the extent the contested ordinances create exclusive contracts for the hauling and removal of materials meant to be recycled, they were not authorized by the Illinois legislature. Plaintiffs cite section 5 of the statute, which provides:

> Every city, village or incorporated town may provide such method or methods as shall be [*17] approved by the corporate authorities for the disposition of garbage, refuse, and ashes. Any municipality may provide by ordinance that such method or methods shall be the exclusive methods for the disposition of garbage, refuse and ashes to be allowed within that municipality. Such ordinance may be enacted notwithstanding the fact that competition may be displaced or that such ordinance may have an anti-competitive effect. . . . Material that is intended or collected to be recycled is not garbage, refuse, or ashes.

65 ILCS 5/11-19-5 (emphasis added). Plaintiffs argue that the statutory language italicized in the quotation means that the legislature did not authorize municipalities to enter into exclusive contracts for the collection of recyclable materials. Because the disputed ordinances apply to recyclable materials as well as garbage, plaintiffs argue, they are not permitted by the state statute and are therefore not within the state action exemption.

Defendants contend that section 5 of the statute, including its narrow definition of "garbage, refuse, and ashes," applies only to ordinances that establish a particular method of waste disposal, such as landfilling or incinerating. [*18] They argue that their ordinances were passed not pursuant to section 5 but under section 1, which permits them to enter into contracts with private entities for waste collection. The ordinances establishing exclusive hauling contracts for roll of containers bring them within the state action exemption, defendants argue, because the anticompetitive effect of the ordinances is a foreseeable result of section 1. Section 1 defines "garbage, refuse, and ashes" to include such items as cardboard, glass, paper, and tin cans, all of which are recyclable. 65 ILCS 5/11-19-1(d) & 5/11-19-2. Defendants argue that even if the ordinances cover containers that may include recyclable materials, they are still authorized by the statute, because such materials fall within the statutory definition of "refuse" as used in section 1.

The plaintiffs concede in their response to the motion to dismiss that 65 ILCS 5/11-19-1(a) "permits adoption of ordinances providing for the exclusive contracts for the 'collection and final disposition, or relating solely to either the collection or final disposition of garbage, refuse, and ashes.'" Pls.' Resp. to Mem. in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss at 7. Plaintiffs further state [*19] that "the enabling legislation very clearly and very properly permits exclusive contracts when the issue is the disposal and hauling of waste and garbage." Id. at 9. They go on to argue, however, that because the only mention of exclusivity is in section 5, which more narrowly defines "garbage, refuse and ashes" not to include recyclable materials, the narrower definition should be applied to the disputed ordinances, and the Court should find they are not authorized by the state legislature.

The Court concludes that the disputed ordinances fall within the state action exemption as defined by Town of Hallie. Section 1 of the statute permits municipalities to enter into contracts for the hauling and disposal of garbage, refuse, and ashes, (defined in Section 2 to include recyclable materials). 65 ILCS 5/11-19-1(a). This constitutes the kind of "state policy to displace competition with regulation" that the Supreme Court found sufficient in Town of Hallie to bring an otherwise anticompetitive statute to come within the state action exemption. Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 44. As in Campbell, "the [*20] anti-competitive effects [of the ordinances] . . . logically result from the authority to regulate." Campbell, 823 F.2d at 1182. Because the challenged ordinances are a foreseeable result of the authority granted by the Illinois state legislature in section 1 of the statute, they fall within the state action exemption. [3] The Court therefore dismisses count 4.

D. Remaining claims

All of the remaining claims in the plaintiffs' complaint are based on Illinois state law. Because the Court has dismissed all of the federal claims contained within the plaintiffs' complaint, the Court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c). Wright v. Associated Ins. Cos., Inc., 29 F.3d 1244, 1251 (7th Cir. 1994).

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court grants defendants' motion to dismiss as to counts 1 and 4 of the plaintiffs complaint. Because there are no remaining federal law claims, the Court declines to exercise jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims, and dismisses the remaining claims without prejudice. [*21] The Court will enter final judgment unless, on or before April 22, 2010, plaintiffs file a proposed amended complaint that states a viable federal claim. The case is set for a status hearing on April 27, 2010 at 9:30 a.m.

/s/ Matthew F. Kennelly

MATTHEW F. KENNELLY

United States District Judge

Date: March 31, 2010

End of Document

[3] For this reason, the Court need not resolve the parties' disputes regarding the precise interplay of sections 1 and 5.

Bayer Schering Pharma Ag v. Watson Pharms.

United States District Court for the District of Nevada

March 31, 2010, Decided; March 31, 2010, Filed

Case No. 2:07-CV-01472-KJD-GWF

Reporter

2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 161986 *

BAYER SCHERING PHARMA AG, et al., Plaintiffs, v. WATSON PHARMACEUTICALS, INC., WATSON LABORATORIES, INC., AND SANDOZ, INC., Defendants.

Core Terms

patent, infringement, monopolization, motion to dismiss, patent holder, certification, counterclaims, brand-name, generic drug, Sherman Act, manufacturer, allegations, antitrust claim, relevant market, Unfair, interchangeability, products, restraint of trade, leave to amend, cross-elasticity, conspiracy, cause of action, ethinylestradiol, substitutes, drugs

Counsel: [*1] For Bayer Healthcare Pharmaceuticals Inc., Plaintiff: Jonathan W Fountain, LEAD ATTORNEY, Howard & Howard Attorneys PLLC, Las Vegas, NV USA; Matthew R. Ford, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, Chicago, IL USA; Lewis Roca Rothgerber Christie LLP, Las Vegas, NV USA, Las Vegas, NV, USA; Peter B. Bensinger, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Sundeep K. Addy, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Denver, CO USA; Adam K Mortara, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Clark T. Thiel, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, Four Embarcadero Center, 22nd Floor, San Francisco, CA USA; Jeffrey A Mandell, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Nikkya G. Williams, Lewis and Roca LLP, Las Vegas, NV USA; Paul J Skiermont, PRO HAC VICE, Skiermont Puckett LLP, Dallas, TX USA.

For Bayer Schering Pharma AG, Plaintiff: Adam K Mortara, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Jeffrey A Mandell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Jonathan W Fountain, [*2] LEAD ATTORNEY, Howard & Howard Attorneys PLLC, Las Vegas, NV USA; Matthew R. Ford, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, Chicago, IL USA; Lewis Roca Rothgerber Christie LLP, Las Vegas, NV USA, Las Vegas, NV USA; Paul J Skiermont, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Skiermont Puckett LLP, Dallas, TX USA; Peter B. Bensinger, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Sundeep K. Addy, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Denver, CO USA; Clark T. Thiel, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, Four Embarcadero Center, 22nd Floor, San Francisco, CA USA; Nikkya G. Williams, Lewis and Roca LLP, Las Vegas, NV USA.

For Watson Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Watson Laboratories, Inc., Defendants: Cedric C.Y. Tan, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC USA; Kristin M Cooklin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell & Moring, Washington, DC USA; Neil M McCarthy, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Neil McCarthy, Esq., PC, Silver Spring, MD USA; Ryan E. Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watson Rounds, Las Vegas, NV USA; Byron R Chin, PRO HAC VICE, Townsend and Townsend and Crew LLP, Palo Alto, CA USA; Dan C. [*3] Bowen, Bowen Hall, Reno, NV USA; David J. Tsai, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA USA; Kenneth E. Jenkins, Townsend and Townsend and Crew LLP, San Diego, CA USA; Mark T. Jansen, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, San Francisco, CA USA; Michael D Rounds, Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck, LLC, Reno, NV USA.

For Sandoz, Inc., Defendant: Dan C. Bowen, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bowen Hall, Reno, NV USA; Delphine W. Knight Brown, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, Stamford, CT USA; Joseph A Boyle, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, Parsippany, NJ USA; Joseph Hynds, LEAD ATTORNEY, Rothwell Figg Ernst & Manbeck, Washington, DC USA; Lisa Phillips, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Rotwell Figg Ernst & Manbeck, Washington, DC USA; Paul W. Garrity, LEAD ATTORNEY, August T Horvath, Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, New York, NY USA; Steve Lieberman, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Rothwell, Figg, Ernst & Manbech, Washington, DC USA; Steven J Moore, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kelley, Drye & Warren, Stamford, CT USA; Vincent P Rao, II, LEAD ATTORNEY., Parsippany, NJ USA; Kristin M Cooklin, Crowell & Moring, Washington, DC USA; Mark T. Jansen, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, San Francisco, [*4] CA USA.

For Watson Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Watson Laboratories, Inc., Counter Claimants: Cedric C.Y. Tan, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC USA; Kristin M Cooklin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell & Moring, Washington, DC USA; Neil M McCarthy, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Neil McCarthy, Esq., PC, Silver Spring, MD USA; Ryan E. Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watson Rounds, Las Vegas, NV USA; Byron R Chin, PRO HAC VICE, Townsend and Townsend and Crew LLP, Palo Alto, CA USA; David J. Tsai, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA USA; Mark T. Jansen, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, San Francisco, CA USA; Michael D Rounds, Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck, LLC, Reno, NV USA.

For Bayer Schering Pharma AG, Bayer Schering Pharma AG, Bayer Schering Pharma AG, Counter Defendants: Adam K Mortara, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Jeffrey A Mandell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Jonathan W Fountain, LEAD ATTORNEY, Howard & Howard Attorneys PLLC, Las Vegas, NV USA; Matthew R. Ford, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, Chicago, IL USA; Lewis [*5] Roca Rothgerber Christie LLP, Las Vegas, NV USA, Las Vegas, NV USA; Paul J Skiermont, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Skiermont Puckett LLP, Dallas, TX USA; Peter B. Bensinger, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Sundeep K. Addy, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Denver, CO USA; Clark T. Thiel, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, Four Embarcadero Center, 22nd Floor, San Francisco, CA USA.

For Bayer Healthcare Pharmaceuticals Inc., Bayer Healthcare Pharmaceuticals Inc., Bayer Healthcare Pharmaceuticals Inc., Counter Defendants: Jonathan W Fountain, LEAD ATTORNEY, Howard & Howard Attorneys PLLC, Las Vegas, NV USA; Matthew R. Ford, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, Chicago, IL USA; Lewis Roca Rothgerber Christie LLP, Las Vegas, NV USA, Las Vegas, NV 89102-, USA; Peter B. Bensinger, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Sundeep K. Addy, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Denver, CO USA; Adam K Mortara, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL [*6] USA; Clark T. Thiel, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, Four Embarcadero Center, 22nd Floor, San Francisco, CA USA; Jeffrey A Mandell, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL USA; Paul J Skiermont, PRO HAC VICE, Skiermont Puckett LLP, Dallas, TX USA.

For Watson Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Watson Laboratories, Inc., Counter Claimants: Cedric C.Y. Tan, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC USA; David J. Tsai, LEAD ATTORNEY, David J. Tsai, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA USA; Kristin M Cooklin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell & Moring, Washington, DC USA; Neil M McCarthy, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Neil McCarthy, Esq., PC, Silver Spring, MD USA; Ryan E. Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Watson Rounds, Las Vegas, NV USA; Byron R Chin, PRO HAC VICE, Townsend and Townsend and Crew LLP, Palo Alto, CA USA; Kenneth E. Jenkins, Townsend and Townsend and Crew LLP, San Diego, CA USA; Mark T. Jansen, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, San Francisco, CA USA; Michael D Rounds, Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck, LLC, Reno, NV USA.

For Sandoz, Inc., Counter Claimant: Dan C. Bowen, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bowen Hall, Reno, NV USA; Delphine W. Knight Brown, LEAD ATTORNEY, [*7] Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, Stamford, CT USA; Joseph A Boyle, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, Parsippany, NJ USA; Joseph Hynds, LEAD ATTORNEY, Rothwell Figg Ernst & Manbeck, Washington, DC USA; Lisa Phillips, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Rotwell Figg Ernst & Manbeck, Washington, DC USA; Paul W. Garrity, LEAD ATTORNEY, August T Horvath, Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, New York, NY USA; Steve Lieberman, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Rothwell, Figg, Ernst & Manbech, Washington, DC USA; Steven J Moore, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kelley, Drye & Warren, Stamford, CT USA; Vincent P Rao, II, LEAD ATTORNEY., Parsippany, NJ USA; Kristin M Cooklin, Crowell & Moring, Washington, DC USA; Mark T. Jansen, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, San Francisco, CA USA.

Judges: Kent J. Dawson, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Kent J. Dawson

Opinion

ORDER

Presently before the Court is Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss Sandoz's Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth Counterclaim (#52). Defendant Sandoz filed a response in opposition (#83) to which Plaintiffs replied (#89).

I. Regulatory Background[1]

The Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act ("FDCA"), 21 U.S.C. §§ 301 et seq., governs the sale and manufacture of prescription drugs in the United States. Any entity seeking to distribute [*8] a new prescription drug must file a New Drug Application ("NDA") with the Food and Drug Administration ("FDA"). The application must include "full reports of investigations which have been made to show whether or not such drug is safe for use and whether such drug is effective in use." 21 U.S.C. § 355(b)(1)(A). Upon approval by the FDA, a drug may be manufactured and sold in the United States. Drugs approved by the FDA under the NDA process are commonly referred to as "brand-name" drugs.

Brand-name drugs are typically protected by patents at the time of their approval by the FDA, and for a number of years thereafter. A patent holder has the exclusive right to make, use and sell the patented invention during the life of the patent. See 35 U.S.C. § 154(a). A manufacturer of a brand-name drug protected by a patent is able to sell the drug at monopoly prices.

The Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act of 1984 ("Hatch-Waxman Act" or "Hatch-Waxman") was passed to facilitate the approval of generic versions of brand-name drugs. See 21 U.S.C. § 355. Under Hatch-Waxman, a manufacturer seeking FDA approval of a new brand-name drug must file with its NDA the patent number and expiration date of any patent which claims the drug for which [*9] the applicant submitted the application or which claims a method of using such drug and with respect to which a claim of patent infringement could reasonably be asserted if a person not licensed by the owner engaged in the manufacture, use, or sale of the drug. Id. § 355(b)(1). The brand-name drug and its associate patent or patents are then published in the "Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations," commonly referred to as the "Orange Book."

Under Hatch-Waxman, a drug manufacturer seeking FDA approval for a generic version of a brand-name drug may file an Abbreviated New Drug Application ("ANDA") showing that its proposed generic drug is the "bioequivalent" of an already approved brand-name drug. Id. § 355(j). The ANDA shall contain, with respect to patents for the already approved brand-name drug listed in the Orange Book, > a certification ...

> (I) that such patent information has not been filed,
> (II) that such patent has expired,

[1] The Court adopts the excellent description by Circuit Judge W illiam A. Fletcher of the regulatory process created by the Hatch-W axman Act found in Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, Inc. v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 552 F.3d 1033, 1036-38 (9th Cir. 2009).

(III) of the date on which such patent will expire, or
(IV) that such patent is invalid or will not be infringed by the manufacture, use, or sale of the new drug for which the application is submitted[.]

Id. § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii). Such a certification is referred to as a "Paragraph [*10] I," "Paragraph II," "Paragraph III," or "Paragraph IV" certification. The first ANDA applicant for approval of a generic version of a particular brand-name drug who makes a Paragraph IV certification is guaranteed a 180-day period of exclusive distribution of the generic drug if that drug is approved by the FDA. The 180-day period begins either on the date the applicant notifies the FDA of its first "commercial marketing" of the generic drug, or on the date of the judicial decision holding the patent invalid or not infringed, whichever is earlier. Id. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iv).

An ANDA applicant who makes a Paragraph IV certification must notify the patent holder of that certification. Id. § 355(j)(2)(B). If an ANDA contains a Paragraph IV certification, FDA approval of the proposed generic drug must be "made effective immediately unless ... an action is brought for infringement of the patent that is the subject of the certification" within forty-five days of the patent holder receiving notice of the certification. Id. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii). If a patent holder brings suit within forty-five days, FDA approval will not become effective until thirty months after the receipt of the notice, subject to certain exceptions. Id. This thirty-month delay [*11] is commonly referred to as the "automatic stay." An exception to the thirty-month automatic stay is a final court decision in the patent holder's infringement suit that the patent is invalid or not infringed. In the event of such a court decision, FDA approval "shall be made effective on the date on which the court enters judgment reflecting the decision" if the court decision is less than thirty months after receipt of the notice. Id. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii)(I).

If a patent holder fails to bring an infringement suit within forty-five days of receipt of a Paragraph IV notification, it loses the right to the thirty-month automatic stay of FDA approval of the proposed generic drug. However, the patent holder does not lose the right to bring an infringement suit against the generic drug manufacturer; the patent holder simply loses the right to bring the infringement suit under Hatch-Waxman.

A patent holder who misses the forty-five day deadline for bringing a Hatch-Waxman infringement suit suffers two significant disadvantages. First, the patent holder cannot bring an infringement suit immediately upon the filing of the ANDA; it must wait until the generic drug is sold commercially. See 35 U.S.C. § 271(e)(1). See generally, Merck KGAA v. Integra Lifesciences I, Ltd., 545 U.S. 193, 125 S. Ct. 2372, 162 L. Ed. 2d 160 (2005). Second, [*12] there is no automatic stay barring the FDA from approving the generic drug. Once approved, its manufacturer may sell the generic drug during the pendency of any infringement suit brought by the patent holder.

II. Background and Procedural History

Plaintiff Bayer Schering Pharma AG ("Bayer") owns U.S. Reissue Patent No. 37, 564 ("the '564 reissue patent") and U.S. Reissue Patent No. 37, 838 ("the '838 reissue patent")(collectively, the "Spona patents"). The Spona patents cover Bayer's oral contraceptive YAZ® ("YAZ") tablets. Defendant Sandoz filed an ANDA with the FDA for permission to market a generic version of YAZ tablets prior to the expiration of the Spona patents and made a paragraph IV certification as to '564 and '838.

Pursuant to Hatch-Waxman, Bayer sued Sandoz for patent infringement. In response Sandoz asserted counterclaims for violations of the Sherman Act and violations of state law. Specifically, Counterclaimant alleges in its seventh cause of action claims for attempted monopolization and monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act as well as conspiracy to monopolize and conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. In its eighth cause of [*13] action, Sandoz alleged claims for violations of Nevada's Unfair Deceptive Trade Practices Act and Unfair Trade Practices Act. The ninth cause of action seeks damages for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. Sandoz has agreed to voluntarily dismiss its tenth counterclaim for malicious prosecution.

Bayer has now moved to dismiss the antitrust counterclaims. Bayer asserts that Sandoz's antitrust claims must be dismissed because Sandoz has alleged a relevant product market that is implausibly narrow. For three of its antitrust counterclaims - i.e., monopolization, conspiracy to monopolize, and conspiracy in restraint of trade - Sandoz asserts narrow market definitions based on YAZ's active ingredients. Accordingly, Sandoz's market definitions are effectively based on brand.

Bayer has also moved to dismiss the eighth and ninth causes of action as failing to state a claim under Nevada law.

III. Standard for a Motion to Dismiss

In considering a motion to dismiss, "all well-pleaded allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in a light most favorable to the non-moving party." Wyler Summit Partnership v. Turner Broadcasting System, Inc., 135 F.3d 658, 661 (9th Cir. 1998) (citation omitted). Consequently, there is a strong presumption against dismissing [*14] an action for failure to state a claim. See Gilligan v. Jamco Dev. Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1997) (citation omitted).

"To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). Plausibility, in the context of a motion to dismiss, means that the plaintiff has pleaded facts which allow "the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id.

The Iqbal evaluation illustrates a two prong analysis. First, the Court identifies "the allegations in the complaint that are not entitled to the assumption of truth," that is, those allegations which are legal conclusions, bare assertions, or merely conclusory. Id. at 1949-51. Second, the Court considers the factual allegations "to determine if they plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief." Id. at 1951. If the allegations state plausible claims for relief, such claims survive the motion to dismiss. Id. at 1950.

IV. Analysis of Antitrust Claims

A. Relevant Market

For YAZ, Sandoz asserts that the relevant market is "the ethinylestradiol/drospirenone market, including any low-dose of ethinylestradiol/drospirenone submarket, given the unique properties of this contraceptive combination." [*15] Sandoz's Counterclaim, Doc. No. 20, ¶ 126, 2:08-cv-00995-KJD-GWF. The unique properties Sandoz alleges that separate YAZ into a separate and solo market are "a unique property allowing for the treatment of premenstrual dysphoric disorder (PMDD) . . . the ONLY birth control proven to treat the physical symptoms of PMDD . . . [and] [i]t may also be used to treat moderate acne in women who are able to and wish to use the pill for birth control . . . [and] its unique progestin/estrogen composition (that is, ethinylestradiol/drospirenone), in conjunction with the fact that its estrogen (ethinylestradiol) is of significantly lower dose due to its clatharation with betadex."

Bayer argues that by limiting the relevant product market to only low-dose ethinylestradiol/drospirenone, Sandoz has pleaded the "strange red-haired, bearded, one-eyed man with a limp[-type]" market, Belfiore v. The New York Times, Co., 654 F. Supp. 842, 846 (D. Conn. 1986)(aff'd 826 F.2d 177 (2d. Cir. 1987)), which are markets so narrow that they cannot sustain an antitrust claim. Bayer argues that Sandoz has not pled sufficient facts addressing potential substitutes, interchangeability of similar products, and cross-elasticity of demand to maintain a claim of a disfavored single-brand or unique market.

In order to state [*16] a claim under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must alleged that the defendant, in this case Bayer, has market power within a "relevant market." Sandoz brings the restraint of trade and antitrust claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the monopolization and attempted monopolization claims under Section 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2. The "relevant market" requirement applies identically under the two different sections of the Act. Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solutions, 513 F.3d 1038, 1044 n.3 (9th Cir. 2008). Therefore, there is no need to distinguish between Sandoz's various antitrust claims; its market allegations are either sufficient or insufficient.[2] Id. There is no requirement that the elements of antitrust claims be pled with specificity. Id. at 1045 (citing Cost Mgmt. Srvs., Inc. v. Wash. Natural Gas Co., 99 F.3d 937, 950 (9th Cir. 1996)). Since the validity of the "relevant market" is a factual element rather than a legal element, alleged markets may survive scrutiny under Rule 12(b)(6) subject to factual testing by summary judgment or trial, unless the alleged market suffers a fatal legal defect on the face of the complaint. See Id.; cf., Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436-37 (3d. Cir. 1997).

The relevant market must be a product market.[3] Id. The market must encompass the product at issue as well as all economic substitutes for the product. Id. (citing Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). "The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability [*17] of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes[.]" Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325. Accordingly, "the relevant market must include the group or groups of sellers or producers who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business." Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045 (internal quotes omitted). "[I]t is legally permissible to premise antitrust allegations on a submarket. That is, an antitrust claim may . . . allege restraints of trade within or monopolization of a small part of the general market of suitable products." Id. However, single brand markets are extremely rare and a company does not violate the Sherman Act by virtue of the natural monopoly it holds over its own products. See Apple Inc. v. Psystar Corp., 586 F. Supp.2d 1190, 1198 (N.D. Cal. 2008)(citing Green Country Food Market, Inc. v. Bottling Group, 371 F.3d 1275, 1282 (10th Cir. 2004)).

Here, the crux of Sandoz's argument is that YAZ is an independent market because of its uniqueness. However, Sandoz must plead facts regarding potential substitutes, interchangeability of similar products, and cross-elasticity of demand. See Apani Sw., Inc. v. Coca-Cola, Enters., 300 F.3d 620, 628 (5th Cir. 2002)(complaint must reference rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand and encompass all interchangeable substitute products); Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 200 (2d. Cir. 2001)(alleged product market must plausibly analyze interchangeability of use or cross-elasticity of [*18] demand). Merely alleging that a product is unique is insufficient to plead a relevant market. See, e.g., B.V. Optische Industrie De Oude Delft v. Hologic, Inc., 909 F. Supp. 162, 171 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

Therefore, the Court grants Bayers' motion to dismiss the antitrust claims for monopolization, restraint of trade and conspiracy to monopolize for Sandoz's failure to allege sufficient facts regarding potential substitutes, interchangeability of similar products, and cross-elasticity of demand, but grants leave to amend. Sandoz's counterclaims fail to meet the standard of pleading facts from which the court can determine whether a plausible claim for relief has been alleged.

V. State Law Claims

---

[2] Sandoz's counterclaim with respect to its attempted monopolization claim pleads that the relevant U.S. market is the entire U.S. oral contraceptive market. In its opening brief, Bayer argued that this alternative product market is implausible because Bayer only holds an inadequate 50% market share. In response, Sandoz correctly contended that it need not allege an existing dominant market share in order to plead an attempted monopolization claim. See Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1437 (9th Cir. 1995). In reply, Bayer abandoned the inadequate market share argument and asserted that Sandoz had failed to adequately plead several other elements. However, the Court will not consider new arguments raised in a reply brief. See Coos County v. Kempthorne, 531 F.3d 792, 812 (9th Cir. 2008). Accordingly, the Court denies the motion to dismiss the attempted monopolization claim.

[3] Antitrust law requires allegations of both a product and geographic market. Sandoz alleges the United States as the geographic market and Bayer does not challenge that allegation.

A. Claims for Violation of the Nevada Unfair Trade Practices Act

The Nevada Unfair Trade Practices Act ("UTPA") "tracks the provisions of the Sherman Act" and "adopts by reference the case law applicable to the federal antitrust laws[.]" See Boulware v. Nev. Dep't of Human Res., 960 F.2d 793, 800 (9th Cir. 1992); Nev. Rev. Stat. § 598A.050. Accordingly, the analysis under the UTPA is the same as the Sherman Act and the Court dismisses the same claims under the UTPA as it did the Sherman Act with leave to amend.

B. Claims for Common Law Unfair Competition

While Nevada does recognize a claim for unfair competition, Golden Nugget, Inc. v. Am. Stock Exchange, Inc., 828 F.2d 586, 591 (9th Cir. 1987), generally plaintiff must allege a traditional act such as appropriation of [*19] its property, deception, passing-off, dilution, confusion of goods, or confusion of source. See Custom Teleconnect, Inc. v. Int'l Tele-Servs., Inc., 254 F. Supp.2d 1173 (D. Nev. 2003); Wells Fargo & Co. v. Wells Fargo Express Co., 358 F. Supp. 1065, 1084 (D. Nev. 1973). Unfair competition is "nothing but a convenient name for the doctrine that no one should be allowed to sell his or her goods as those of another." 87 C.J.S. Trade-Marks, Etc., § 19 (2009). Accordingly, the Court grants Bayer's motion to dismiss this claim with leave to amend.

C. Nevada Deceptive Trade Practices Act

The Court finds that Sandoz has sufficiently stated a plausible claim for relief under the Nevada Deceptive Trade Practices Act and declines to dismiss this cause of action.

D. Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

In order to establish a claim for interference with prospective economic advantage in Nevada, a plaintiff must establish the following elements: 1) a prospective contractual relationship between the plaintiff and a third party; 2) the defendant's knowledge of this prospective relationship; 3) the intent to harm the plaintiff by preventing this relationship; 4) the absence of privilege or justification by the defendant; and 5) actual harm to the plaintiff as a result. See Leavitt v. Leisure Sports Inc., 103 Nev. 81, 734 P.2d 1221, 1225 (Nev. 1987). Privilege or justification can exist when defendant acts to protect his own interests. [*20] Id. at 1226. Sandoz has failed to allege a specific prospective contractual relationship between itself and a third party. Accordingly, the Court grants the motion to dismiss this claim with leave to amend.

VI. Conclusion

Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss Sandoz's Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth Counterclaim (#52) is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Sandoz's federal and state law claims for monopolization, restraint of trade and conspiracy to monopolize are DISMISSED with leave to amend;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiff's claims for unfair competition and interference with prospective economic advantage are DISMISSED with leave to amend;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiff's claim for malicious prosecution is DISMISSED;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Sandoz file its amended counterclaims no later than April 15, 2010.

DATED this 31st day of March 2010.

/s/ Kent J. Dawson

Kent J. Dawson

United States District Judge

Boyd v. J.E. Robert Co.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

March 31, 2010, Decided; March 31, 2010, Filed

05-CV-2455 (KAM) (RER)

Reporter

2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140905 *; 2010 WL 5772892

JOAN GRANT BOYD, et al., Plaintiffs, - against - J.E. ROBERT CO., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Adopted by, Objection denied by, Claim dismissed by Boyd v. J.E. Robert Co., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10099 (E.D.N.Y., Feb. 2, 2011)

Prior History: Boyd v. J.E. Robert Co., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72959 (E.D.N.Y., Sept. 24, 2008)

Core Terms

plaintiffs', equitable tolling, defendants', state law claim, consumer, amended complaint, motion to dismiss, allegations, payoff, recommended, practices, notice, tolling, deceptive, statute of limitations, collection, intervene, reasons, Trusts, amend, concealment, misleading, time-barred, diligence, untimely, grounds, courts, newly discovered, communications, pleadings

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss on statute of limitations grounds is properly viewed as a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. A plaintiff is required to plead enough facts to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face. Specific facts are not necessary for a pleading to satisfy the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2); rather, the complaint need only give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN2[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Bell Atlantic does not require a universal standard of heightened fact pleading, but instead requiring a flexible plausibility standard, which obliges a pleader to amplify a claim with some factual allegations in those contexts where such amplification is needed to render the claim plausible. Mere formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Rather, factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true, even if doubtful in fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN3[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

When considering a motion to dismiss, courts must assume all allegations asserted in the complaint as true and draw all inferences in favor of the non-moving party. However, the complaint must surpass the threshold of setting forth enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Although a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 motion seeks only to address the sufficiency of the pleadings, courts called upon to determine such a motion may rightfully consider written documents attached to the complaint as well as documents incorporated thereto by reference and those of which plaintiff had knowledge and relied upon in commencing her lawsuit.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN4[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Claims of fraud must be pled with particularity. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). To satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b), a complaint must adequately specify the statements it claims were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which plaintiff contends the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those responsible for the statements.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Debt Collection > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN5[] Consumer Protection, Fair Debt Collection

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act mandates that any action to enforce liability arising under the act be commenced within one year from the date on which the violation occurs. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1692k(d). Although no consensus has yet emerged among New York courts as to whether the cause of action accrues on the date the allegedly impermissible communication is sent or received, the courts are unanimous that the latest date upon which the one year period begins to run is the date when a plaintiff receives an allegedly unlawful communication.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Debt Collection > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Equitable Estoppel

HN6[] Consumer Protection, Fair Debt Collection

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1692k(d), statute of limitations is subject to equitable tolling where appropriate. The doctrine of equitable tolling enables courts in rare and exceptional circumstances to extend a statute of limitations where necessary to avoid inequitable outcomes. To benefit from equitable tolling, a litigant must allege that extraordinary circumstances prevented him from acting in a timely manner. Equitable tolling appropriate where plaintiff prevented in some extraordinary way from exercising his rights. Generally, equitable tolling is appropriate where a defendant has affirmatively engaged in conduct that conceals his wrongdoing, thereby preventing the plaintiff from discovering those facts that would give rise to a claim despite the exercise of reasonable diligence. Equitable tolling requires party to pass with reasonable diligence through period it seeks to have tolled; equitable tolling will stay running of statutory period only so long as the plaintiff has exercised reasonable care and diligence; equitable tolling not satisfied in the absence of affirmative action on the part of a plaintiff to preserve its right.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Equitable Estoppel

HN7[] Statute of Limitations, Equitable Estoppel

A plaintiff who would otherwise be entitled to equitable tolling on the basis of special circumstances can forfeit that right if he fails to exercise due diligence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN8[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In resolving a motion to dismiss a district court's consideration is limited to the factual allegations in the complaint, which are accepted as true, to documents attached to the complaint as an exhibit or incorporated in it by reference, to matters of which judicial notice may be taken, or to documents either in the plaintiffs' possession or of which the plaintiffs had knowledge and relied on in bringing suit.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > Notice Requirement

HN9[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When matters outside the pleadings are presented in response to a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion, a district court must either exclude the additional material and decide the motion on the complaint alone or convert the motion to one for summary judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 and afford all parties the opportunity to present supporting material.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Debt Collection > Communications With Debtors

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Debt Collection > Unfair Practices

HN10[] Fair Debt Collection, Communications With Debtors

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1692 et seq., was enacted to protect consumers from a host of unfair, harassing, and deceptive debt collection practices without imposing unnecessary restrictions on ethical debt collectors. With that purpose in mind, the FDCPA provides for a general prohibition against the use of false, deceptive, or misleading representations or means in connection with the collection of any debt, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1692e. That section enumerates a non-exhaustive list of practices deemed violative of its provisions, which includes: the use of any false representation or deceptive means to collect or attempt to collect any debt or to obtain information concerning a consumer. 15. U.S.C.S. § 1692e(10). In weighing whether a debt collector has run afoul of the FDCPA, courts apply an objective standard measured by how the least sophisticated consumer would interpret the communication. In order to reach this determination, however, the courts must a priori determine whether a given item of correspondence, for example, constitutes a communication within the meaning of the statute.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Debt Collection > Communications With Debtors

HN11[] Fair Debt Collection, Communications With Debtors

Under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, a communication is defined as the conveying of information regarding a debt directly or indirectly to any person through any medium. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1692(a)(2).

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Debt Collection > Communications With Debtors

HN12[] Fair Debt Collection, Communications With Debtors

Courts apply the so-called least-sophisticated-consumer standard in order to ensure the protection of all consumers, even the naive and the trusting, against deceptive practices, and (2) protect debt collectors against liability for bizarre or idiosyncratic interpretations of collection notices. No violation of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1692 et seq., occurs where a party alleges that his attorney has been misled to the party's detriment. Where an attorney is interposed as an intermediary between a debt collector and a consumer, the attorney, rather than the FDCPA, will protect the consumer from a debt collector's fraudulent or harassing behavior.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Debt Collection > Communications With Debtors

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Debt Collection > Unfair Practices

HN13[] Fair Debt Collection, Communications With Debtors

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1692 et seq., protections are not triggered by communications initiated by someone other than the debt collector. When a consumer initiates the conversation, many of the policy reasons behind the FDCPA disappear, and, accordingly, debt collector's mere response to a plaintiff's inquiries concerning her outstanding mortgage do to constitute collection activity under the FDCPA.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > Motions to Intervene

HN14[] Intervention, Motions to Intervene

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(c) a person desiring to intervene shall serve a motion to intervene upon the parties as provided in Fed. R. Civ. P. 5. The motion shall state the grounds therefor and shall be accompanied by a pleading setting forth the claim or defense for which intervention is sought. Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(c). However, an intervenor cannot simply rely on the pleadings previously filed by another party.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Equitable Estoppel

HN15[] Statute of Limitations, Equitable Estoppel

Equitable tolling is applicable where the original action is timely filed but dismissed due to the plaintiff's failure to name the proper party as a defendant; equitable tolling is appropriate where the plaintiff timely brought the first action that was thereafter dismissed without prejudice on grounds of improper joinder; equitable tolling is warranted where the plaintiff timely filed the first action in the wrong venue and promptly refiled it in the correct venue after the statute of limitations had run.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

HN16[] Preclusion of Judgments, Law of the Case

The law of the case doctrine is implicated when a court reconsiders its own ruling in the absence of an intervening ruling on that issue by a higher court. This doctrine requires that when a court has ruled on an issue, that decision should generally be adhered to by that court in subsequent stages in the same case unless cogent and compelling reasons militate otherwise. Cogent and compelling reasons include an intervening change of controlling law, the availability of new evidence, or the need to correct a clear error or prevent manifest injustice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN17[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(a) provides that deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state are hereby declared unlawful. The language and background of § 349 reveal that it is directed at addressing wrongs visited upon the public as consumers. Therefore, as a threshold matter, plaintiffs claiming the benefit of § 349 must charge conduct of the defendant that is consumer-oriented. Additionally, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the acts or practices have a broader impact on consumers at large. Private contract disputes, for example, are unique to the parties and would not fall within the ambit of the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN18[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Where a plaintiff succeeds in demonstrating that a defendant's conduct is directed to consumers, however, the inquiry is not at an end. A prima facie case of violation of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 requires an additional showing that the defendant is engaging in an act or practice that is deceptive or misleading in a material way and that plaintiff has been injured by reason thereof. And although the statute does not mandate that a plaintiff establish the defendant's intent to defraud or mislead, where proof that the defendant knowingly and willingly violated this section is offered, a court may, in its discretion, increase the award of damages to an amount not to exceed three times the actual damages up to $1,000. N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(h). Similarly, although proof of justifiable reliance on the plaintiff's part is not required, a plaintiff seeking compensatory damages is obligated to show that the defendant's material deceptive act or practice caused the plaintiff actual, though not necessarily pecuniary, harm.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN19[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

New York courts have adopted an objective definition of deceptive acts and practices, whether they be representations or omissions. They are those likely to mislead a reasonable consumer acting reasonably under the circumstances. Moreover, where a case involves omissions, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 surely does not require businesses to ascertain consumers' individual needs and guarantee that each consumer has all relevant information specific to its situation. A different outcome may be warranted, however, where the business alone possesses material information that is relevant to the consumer and fails to provide this information.

Banking Law > ... > National Banks > Interest & Usury > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Usury

HN20[] National Banks, Interest & Usury

The rudimentary element of usury is the existence of a loan or forbearance of money. N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 5-501; although the general usury statutes refer to the loan of any money, goods, or things in action, the statutes have been held to be applicable only to the loan or forbearance of money. Where there is no loan, there can be no usury. Payment of a commission of more than six 6 per cent for a loan of government bonds which are subject to market fluctuations and are bought and sold on the market as other securities is not in violation of the New York usury law and does not render a loan usurious, since the terms interest and forbearance, as used in the usury law are applicable only to a loan of money. Although the usury statute speaks of money, goods or other things in action, a necessary element of a statutory cause of action in usury is the existence of a loan of money. the law of usury that it must be founded on a loan or forbearance of money. If neither of these elements exist, there can be no usury, however unconscionable the contract may be.

Counsel: [*1] For Thomas Boyd, Randa Jones, Plaintiffs: Mark Samuel Kaufman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kaufman & Kahn, LLP, New York, NY; Curtis V. Trinko, Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, New York, NY; Paul Grobman, Paul Grobman, New York, NY.

For Joan Grant Boyd, Humberto Meneses, Sybil Taylor, Tonya Warters, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs: Curtis V. Trinko, Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, New York, NY; Mark Samuel Kaufman, Kaufman & Kahn, LLP, New York, NY; Paul Grobman, Paul Grobman, New York, NY.

For J.E. Robert Co., Inc., JER Revenue Services, LLC, Defendants: Jonathan David Elliot, LEAD ATTORNEY, Zeldes, Needle & Cooper, Bridgeport, CT.

For NYCTL 1996-1 Trust, NYCTL 1997-1 Trust, NYCTL 1998-1 Trust, NYCTL 1999-1 Trust, Defendants: Stephen Edward Kitzinger, LEAD ATTORNEY, New York Law Department, New York, NY.

Judges: Ramon E. Reyes, Jr., United States Magistrate Judge.

Opinion by: Ramon E. Reyes, Jr.

Opinion

REPORT & RECOMMENDATION

RAMON E. REYES, JR., Magistrate Judge:

Plaintiffs Joan Grant Boyd ("Boyd"), Randa Jones ("Jones"), Humberto Meneses ("Meneses"), Sybil Taylor ("Taylor"), and Tanja Warters ("Warters"), assert in their Second Amended Complaint ("Second Am. Compl."), individually and on [*2] behalf of a class of others similarly situated, five causes of action under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act ("FDCPA"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692 et seq., New York General Business Law § 349 (material deceptive or misleading practices), New York General Obligations Law § 5-501 (usury), as well as unjust enrichment and breach of contract under New York common law. Plaintiffs' claims all stem from defendants' J.E. Robert Co., Inc. ("J.E. Robert") and JER Revenue Services LLC ("JER") (collectively, "the JER defendants") alleged improper practices of demanding and collecting purported "debt cancellation" and other fees "in connection with the servicing of residential tax liens that the City of New York had assigned to" defendants NYCTL 1996-1 Trust ("1996-1 Trust"), NYCTL 1997-1 Trust ("1997-1 Trust"), NYCTL 1998-1 Trust ("1998-1 Trust"), and NYCTL 1999-1 Trust ("1999-1 Trust") (collectively, the "Trust defendants"). (Docket Entry No. 83 at ¶ 2.)

The JER and Trust defendants have moved separately to dismiss the Second Amended Complaint on a number of grounds, including failure to state a claim, failure to timely assert a claim prior to the expiration of the applicable statute of limitations, [*3] and lack of subject matter jurisdiction. (Docket Entry Nos. 113 and 115, respectively.) Defendants also argue that any and all remaining state law claims ought to be dismissed for lack of supplemental jurisdiction. (Id.)

For the reasons which follow, I respectfully recommend that defendants' motions be granted in part and denied in part.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The relevant facts of this case are amply set forth in Magistrate Judge Cheryl L. Pollack's thorough and comprehensive Report and Recommendation ("Report") of March 20, 2008, as well as in Judge Pollack's June 27, 2006 Report and Recommendation in Binson v. J.E. Robert Co., Inc., No. 03-CV-3562 (JG) ("Binson R&R"), and need not be repeated here. (Docket Entry No. 63.) In sum, defendants are alleged to have demanded and collected from plaintiffs certain fees in connection with the resolution of outstanding residential liens imposed as a result of plaintiffs' delinquent payment of various real property taxes, water rents, sewer rents, and surcharges owed to the City. Plaintiffs allege that these practices violate federal statutory, and state statutory and common law. Given the somewhat convoluted procedural history of this [*4] case, it is beneficial to set forth that history below.

The Binson Action

On July 22, 2003, Issac and Miriam Binson ("the "Binsons") commenced a putative class action against the JER defendants, the Bank of New York, Boland & Moskowitz, LLP (the "Boland firm"), and the 1998-1 Trust, alleging unlawful conduct in association with the resolution of outstanding liens for delinquent real property taxes that had been placed on the Binsons' properties. (Binson R&R at 4-5.) In the initial complaint, the Binsons alleged, among other things, that the defendants violated the Truth In Lending Act ("TILA"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1601 et seq, by collecting amounts in excess of those permitted by the parties' agreements or law, and by failing to provide adequate disclosure statements as required by the statute. (Id. at 5.) The Binsons also alleged that the JER defendants' and the 1998-1 Trust's conduct violated New York General Business Law § 349 and General Obligations Law § 5-501. (Id. at 5.)

On February 15, 2005, the Binsons sought to amend the complaint to join six new plaintiffs, Thomas Boyd and Joan Grant Boyd, Sybil Taylor, Randa Jones, Humberto Meneses, and Tanya Warters (collectively, the "Prospective [*5] Plaintiffs"), pursuant to Rules 15(a) and 20 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, as well as several new Trust defendants and claims of breach of contract and unjust enrichment under New York common law. (Binson, Docket No. 82 (the "2005 Motion.")) The Binson plaintiffs' proposed first amended complaint alleged that the Prospective Plaintiffs were charged debt cancellation or discontinuance fees in violation of sections 1692e and f of the FDCPA. (Id., Exh. A at ¶¶ 84, 100, 113, 129, 165, 172; Binson R&R at 8.)

On May 26, 2005, the Binsons voluntarily withdrew their claims with prejudice pursuant to Rule 41(a)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 41. The class having not been certified by that point, Judge Pollack concluded that the Binsons' Rule 41(a)(1) withdrawal mooted the entire action, and deprived the court of subject matter jurisdiction to consider any other matters, including the pending motion to amend the complaint. (Binson R&R at 20.) Although the Binsons attempted to characterize their motion to add the six Prospective Plaintiffs as a motion to intervene, Judge Pollack rejected that contention. Specifically, Judge Pollack found that apart [*6] from the Binsons' motion to amend, no separate motion to intervene had ever been filed by the Prospective Plaintiffs as required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24, nor had the plaintiffs in their moving papers ever discussed the issue of intervention. (Id. at 21.) Indeed, Judge Pollack found that "there is no question that the Binsons filed the then pending motion as a motion to amend pursuant to Rules 15 and 20 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (Binson R&R at 20.) (emphasis added.) Judge Pollack therefore concluded that no motion to intervene was then pending before the Court, and that even if the plaintiffs' motion could be construed as a motion to intervene, it was nevertheless mooted by the withdrawal of the Binsons' claims. (Binson R&R at 22.) District Judge John Gleeson agreed with the conclusions reached by Judge Pollack, and issued an Order adopting the Binson R&R in its entirety.

The Binson action was thereafter dismissed on January 19, 2007.

This Action

Prior to the dismissal of Binson, the plaintiffs commenced this action on May 20, 2005. In the Amended Complaint, plaintiffs asserted a variety of claims against the defendants. Each plaintiff alleged that the JER [*7] defendants and the 1997-1 and 1998-1 Trusts violated the FDCPA by attempting to collect a variety of improperly charged fees in connection with the resolution of the outstanding tax liens ("FDCPA claims"). (Docket Entry No. 20 ("Am. Compl.") at ¶¶ 129-144.) The Boyds alleged in separate causes of action that the JER defendants and the 1998-1 Trust violated TILA by (1) collecting amounts in excess of those permitted by the "relevant documents" and by failing to timely refund such amounts, and (2) providing an improperly drafted TILA disclosure statement (collectively, "Boyds' TILA claims"). (Id. at ¶¶ 142-144, 145-148.) All plaintiffs asserted claims against all defendants (1) alleging materially deceptive and misleading practices under New York General Business Law § 349, and (2) for unjust enrichment and breach of contract under New York common law. (Id. at ¶¶ 149-153, 154-160, and 161-163, respectively.) Finally, plaintiffs alleged that the JER defendants and the 1998-1 Trust violated New York General Obligations Law § 5-501 [1] by charging and collecting in conjunction with the Payment Plan and Forbearance Agreements a rate of interest deemed usurious under the statute. (Id. at ¶¶ [*8] 164-167.)

In April 2007, the Trust and JER defendants separately moved to dismiss the Amended Complaint for a variety of reasons. (Docket Entry Nos. 31 and 33, respectively.) The JER defendants argued that all of the individual and class claims failed to allege wrongful conduct by J.E. Robert, and therefore should be dismissed for failure to state a claim. (Report at 7.) The JER defendants also contended that plaintiffs' FDCPA and the Boyds' TILA claims were barred by the applicable statutes of limitations, and in any event, that neither JER nor J.E. Robert was a "creditor" as defined by TILA. (Id.) The Trust defendants joined in the JER defendants' motion to dismiss the FDCPA and TILA claims as time-barred. The Trust defendants argued additionally that the Court lacked original jurisdiction, and should refuse to exercise supplemental [*9] jurisdiction over any state law claims asserted against them.

In her Report, Judge Pollack recommended that defendants' motions be granted in part and denied in part. Specifically, Judge Pollack recommended that J.E. Robert's motion to dismiss all claims against it for failure to allege wrongful conduct be denied. (Report at 9-14.) Judge Pollack further recommended that the federal claims against the 1996-1, 1997-1, and 1999-1 Trusts be dismissed as time-barred. (Id. at 24-25.) Judge Pollack also determined that the motions to dismiss the federal claims against the JER defendants ought to be denied, [2] save

---

[1] It bears noting that although this claim is asserted on behalf of all plaintiffs, the only factual allegations in support of the claim are made by plaintiff Boyd. Boyd alleges that defendants violated this section by charging and collecting, in conjunction with the Payment Plan and Forbearance Agreements, a usurious interest rate. (Id. at ¶¶ 164-167.)

the Boyds' TILA claims and Taylor's and Warters's FDCPA claims, as to which she recommended dismissal. (Id. at 14-24.)

As for Taylor's FDCPA claims, Judge Pollack found that because Taylor failed to [*10] plead that she had acquired title to the property on or before October 1, 2003, she could not properly be considered a putative member of the Binson class and, as such, could not avail herself of the tolling doctrine enunciated in American Pipe & Construction Co. v. Utah, 414 U.S. 538, 94 S. Ct. 756, 38 L. Ed. 2d 713 (1974). (Report at 27.) According to American Pipe, "the commencement of a class action suspends the applicable statute of limitations as to all asserted members of the class who would have been parties had the suit been permitted to continue as a class action." American Pipe, 414 U.S. at 554. Judge Pollack also found that because Warters had requested and received the allegedly improper payoff quote in May of 2004, long after the Binson class period had ended, and the Amended complaint contained no other allegations of contact between Warters and the defendants prior to that time, Warters could not be considered a putative member of the Binson class either. (Report at 27-28.) Judge Pollack further rejected Taylor's and Warters's equitable tolling argument on the ground that plaintiffs were put on notice of their potential FDCPA claims by the filing of Binson. (Id. at 29-31.) Accordingly, Judge Pollack [*11] recommended that both Taylor's and Warters's FDCPA claims be dismissed as time-barred.

Finally, Judge Pollack recommended that the Court retain jurisdiction over all state law claims with the exception of Taylor's § 349 claims alleging overcharges of interest and material deceptive and misleading practices, which she found ought to be dismissed. (Id. at 31-33.)

On September 24, 2008, United States District Judge Joseph F. Bianco adopted the Report in its entirety, "with the exception of the recommended dismissal of plaintiff Taylor's Section 349 state law claim . . ." (Docket Entry No. 70 ("September 24th Order") at 2.) Judge Bianco agreed with Judge Pollack's determination that Taylor's FDCPA claims were untimely, but nevertheless granted Taylor "an opportunity to re-plead to more clearly articulate how and when she claims she became the beneficial owner of the property" and thereby possibly invoke American Pipe tolling. (September 24th Order at 9.) Similarly, Judge Bianco agreed with Judge Pollack that Warters's FDCPA claims were time-barred, but nevertheless granted Warters leave to amend the complaint a second time to plead sufficient grounds for equitable tolling. (Id.) Thus, in [*12] the wake of Judge Bianco's adoption of the Report, all that remained of plaintiffs' claims were: (1) the Boyds' and Jones's FDCPA claims against the JER defendants and the 1998-1 Trust; [3] and (2) all of plaintiffs' state common law and statutory claims against all defendants.

On November 12, 2008, plaintiffs filed their Second Amended Complaint. In the Second Amended Complaint, plaintiffs have asserted claims against (1) all defendants for violation of FDCPA § 1692e and f; [4] (2) all defendants for violation of New York General Business Law § 349 (material misleading or deceptive practices); (3) all defendants for unjust enrichment; (4) all defendants for breach of [*13] contract; and (5) JER and the 1998-1 Trust for violation of New York General Obligations Law § 5-501 (usury). [5]

---

[2] Specifically, Judge Pollack found that, because the Boyds and Jones alleged that they both owned property and received allegedly improper communications concerning their outstanding debts within one year of the filing of the Binson action, they are properly considered putative members of that class such that American Pipe tolling would apply to preserve their otherwise untimely claims.

[3] Although the applicable statute of limitations for the Boyds' and Jones's FDCPA claims had run by the time of the filing of the instant action, American Pipe tolling operated to save these plaintiffs' otherwise time-barred claims. Specifically, these two plaintiffs have satisfied the eligibility criteria for inclusion in the Binson class in that they allege in the Amended Complaint that they had requested and received the purportedly illegal payoff quotes during the Binson class period. (Am. Compl. at ¶¶ 53-54, 60, 61, 64.)

[4] Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint appears to contain claims asserted against all defendants for violation of the relevant FDCPA provisions, whereas, in plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, the FDCPA claims were brought solely against the JER, 1997-1 and 1998-1 Trust defendants. This issue is explored further in Point III.B.

[5] Plaintiff Meneses has since withdrawn from the case. (Docket Entry No. 153.)

Pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) and 9(b), J.E. Robert and JER again move to dismiss (1) Sybil Taylor's FDCPA claim and (2) Tanja Warters's FDCPA claim as time-barred. In addition, because plaintiffs Taylor and Warters have allegedly failed to state sufficient claims under the FDCPA, the JER and Trust defendants request that this Court decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over their remaining state law claims. Finally, the Trust defendants offer additional arguments in support of their contention that certain of plaintiffs' state law claims ought to be dismissed as being without merit.

DISCUSSION

I. Legal Standard Governing Motions to Dismiss

HN1[] "A motion to [*14] dismiss on statute of limitations grounds is properly viewed as a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Jowers v. Lakeside Family & Children's Servs., 435 F. Supp. 2d 280, 283 (S.D.N.Y. 2006). In Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), the Supreme Court rejected the time-enduring standard it had articulated in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957), that a complaint ought not be dismissed "unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Id. at 45-46. The Court instead chose to alter the existing regime of traditional notice pleading, substituting in lieu of the "no set of facts" language, the requirement that the plaintiff plead enough facts "to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp., 550 U.S. at 570. Indeed, just two weeks after issuing its opinion in Bell Atlantic, the Court cited it in support of the proposition that "[s]pecific facts are not necessary [for a pleading to satisfy the requirements of Rule 8(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure]"; rather, the complaint need only "'give [*15] the defendant fair notice of what the [...] claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (2007) (quoting Bell Atlantic's quotation from Conley, 355 U.S. at 47).

The Second Circuit interpreted the Supreme Court's holding in HN2[] Bell Atlantic as "not requiring a universal standard of heightened fact pleading, but [...] instead requiring a flexible 'plausibility standard,' which obliges a pleader to amplify a claim with some factual allegations in those contexts where such amplification is needed to render the claim plausible." Iqbal v. Hasty, 490 F.3d 143, 157-58 (2d Cir. 2007) (emphasis in original). Indeed, courts have recognized that while the Supreme Court did not prescribe a heightened standard of factual pleading in its holding in Bell Atlantic, mere "formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. [Rather], [f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Williams v. Berkshire Fin. Grp. Inc., 491 F. Supp. 2d 320, 324 (E.D.N.Y. 2007) (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp., 550 U.S. at 545).

HN3[] When [*16] considering a motion to dismiss, courts must assume all allegations asserted in the complaint as true and draw all inferences in favor of the non-moving party. Somin v. Total Cmty. Mgmt. Corp., 494 F. Supp. 2d 153, 158 (E.D.N.Y. 2007) (citing *Watts v. Servs. for the Underserved, No. 06-CV-2156 (NGG)(LB), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41209, 2007 WL 1651852, at 2 (E.D.N.Y. June 6, 2007)). As explained above, however, the complaint must surpass the threshold of setting forth "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp., 550 U.S. at 570. Although a Rule 12 motion seeks only to address the sufficiency of the pleadings, courts called upon to determine such a motion may "rightfully consider written documents attached to the complaint as well as documents incorporated thereto by reference and those of which plaintiff had knowledge and relied upon in commencing her lawsuit." Somin, 494 F. Supp. 2d at 158. See also Brass v. Amer. Film Techs., Inc., 987 F.2d 142, 150 (2d Cir. 1993).

Finally, HN4[] claims of fraud must be pled with particularity. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). "To satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b), a complaint must adequately specify the statements it claims [*17] were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which plaintiff contends the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those responsible for the statements." Cosmas v. Hassett, 886 F.2d 8, 11 (2d Cir. 1989).

II. Taylor's and Warters's FDCPA Claims

A. American Pipe Tolling Cannot Save Taylor's Untimely FDCPA Claims

HN5[] The FDCPA mandates that any action to enforce liability arising under the act be commenced "within one year from the date on which the violation occurs." 15 U.S.C. § 1692k(d). Although no consensus has yet emerged among New York courts as to whether the cause of action accrues on the date the allegedly impermissible communication is sent or received, the courts are unanimous that "the latest date upon which the one year period begins to run is the date when a plaintiff receives an allegedly unlawful communication." Somin, 494 F. Supp. 2d at 158. See also Bates v. C & S Adjusters, Inc., 980 F.2d 865, 868 n.2 (2d Cir. 1992) (acknowledging but declining to decide issue as to whether claim under FDCPA accrues upon mailing or receipt of allegedly unlawful communication); Seabrook v. Onondaga Bureau of Medical Economics, Inc., 705 F. Supp. 81, 83 (N.D.N.Y. 1989) [*18] (recognizing that there are "two possibilities" as to accrual of claims under FDCPA: date on which the allegedly impermissible communication was sent and the date on which it was received). A thorough and well-researched analysis of the origins and further refinement of the Supreme Court's holding in American Pipe & Construction Co. v. Utah is contained in Magistrate Judge Pollack's Report of March 20, 2008, to which the reader is directed. (Report at 17-24.) For the purposes of this motion to dismiss, my analysis is limited to an examination of whether Taylor has successfully re-pled facts to establish her membership in the Binson class, and thereby benefit from American Pipe tolling. I find that she has failed to do so.

The Binson class was limited to persons whose claims arose within a year prior to the commencement of that action on July 22, 2003. Therefore, in order to be considered a putative member of the Binson FDCPA class, Taylor must have both (i) owned property within New York City between July 23, 2002 and July 22, 2003 and (ii) been told during that same period that they owed fees or charges which defendants had no right to collect. (Report at 27.) Taylor has failed to [*19] position herself as a member of the Binson class because she has included in the Second Amended Complaint no new allegations that would alter Judge Pollack's analysis of defendants' prior motion to dismiss, which yielded the conclusion that American Pipe tolling was unavailable. Specifically, although Taylor included additional allegations in the Second Amended Complaint that she became a "beneficial owner" of the property in question at the time of her husband's death (Second Am. Compl. at ¶¶ 79-80), thereby seemingly establishing one of the two criteria for inclusion in the Binson class, [6] she nonetheless continues to lack standing to participate in the class because the misconduct she alleges as the basis of her FDCPA claim occurred subsequent to the filing of Binson on July 22, 2003. Indeed, the only conduct Taylor complains of that occurred prior to the filing of Binson was defendants' having provided her with a payoff quote on or about April 10, 2003. (Id. at ¶ 88.) Taylor has not, however, alleged any misconduct or impropriety with regard to the April 10, 2003 payoff quote, or that she suffered any injury as a result of the same. (Id. at ¶¶ 87-90.) Rather, the first wrongful [*20] or improper quote Taylor alleges she received was in November of 2003, which she subsequently paid in December of the same year. (Id. at ¶ 93 ("In characterizing these amounts as due and owing as of December 1, 2003 in the payoff quotes, JER and each of the Trusts violated ¶ 1692e of the FDCPA.")) As such, the prior Court Order ought to govern the disposition of this issue: "[t]o the extent Taylor [...] assert[s] that [she] made the allegedly 'illegal' payment pursuant to defendants' demand after the Binson case was filed, those claims cannot benefit from tolling under American Pipe." (Order at 7-8.) Quite notably, Taylor does not argue in her opposition brief that American Pipe tolling is available to her. Rather, she argues exclusively that her FDCPA claims are subject to equitable tolling (Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Defendants' Motions to Dismiss ("Pls. Mem. Opp.") at 9-26 ("Warters' And Taylors' FDCPA Claims Are Subject to Equitable Tolling")), which Judge Bianco did not grant her leave to assert. Accordingly, Taylor's FDCPA claims against both the JER and Trust defendants are time-barred and should be dismissed.

B. Warters's FDCPA Claims Are Untimely

1. Warters's FDCPA Claims Are Not Subject to Equitable Tolling

---

[6] It should not be overlooked that Taylor has failed [*21] to cite to any law to establish that her purported "beneficial ownership" of the property satisfies the first criteria for inclusion in the Binson class for the purpose of determining the availability of American Pipe tolling.

HN6[] The FDCPA's statute of limitations is subject to equitable tolling where appropriate. The doctrine of equitable tolling enables courts in "rare and exceptional" circumstances to extend a statute of limitations where necessary to avoid inequitable outcomes. Bertin v. United States, 479 F.2d 489, 494 n.3. (2d Cir. 2007); see also Smith v. McGinnis, 208 F.3d 13, 17 (2d Cir. 2000) (per curiam); Bowers v. Transportacion Maritima Mexicana, S.A., 901 F.2d 258, 264 (2d Cir. 1990). To benefit from equitable tolling, a litigant must allege that "extraordinary circumstances prevented him from acting in a timely manner." Somin, 494 F. Supp. 2d at 158. See Johnson v. Nyack Hosp., 86 F.3d 8, 12 (2d Cir. 1996) (equitable tolling appropriate where plaintiff prevented in some extraordinary way from exercising his rights). Generally, equitable tolling is appropriate where a defendant [*22] has affirmatively engaged in conduct that conceals his wrongdoing, thereby preventing the plaintiff from discovering those facts that would give rise to a claim despite the exercise of reasonable diligence. *Coveal v. Consumer Home Mtge. Inc., No. 04-CV-4755, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5003, 2005 WL 704835, at 4 (E.D.N.Y. March 29, 2005); see also Chapman v. ChoiceCare Long Island Term Disability Plan, 288 F.3d 506, 512 (2d Cir. 2002); Johnson, 86 F.3d at 12 (equitable tolling requires party to pass with reasonable diligence through period it seeks to have tolled); Dodds v. Cigna Sec., Inc.., 12 F.3d 346, 350 (2d Cir. 1993) (equitable tolling will stay running of statutory period "only so long as the plaintiff has exercised reasonable care and diligence" (internal quotations omitted)), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1019, 114 S. Ct. 1401, 128 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1994); Bowers, 901 F.2d at 264 (equitable tolling not satisfied in the absence of "affirmative action on the part of [plaintiff] to preserve its right").

In opposition to the prior motion to dismiss, Warters sought leave to amend the complaint and argued that she could assert additional facts demonstrating the 1997-1 Trust's active concealment, or at the very least the self-concealing nature, of the improper [*23] conduct. (September 24th Order at 9.) Judge Bianco granted her leave to do so. Of the twenty-nine paragraphs in the Second Amended Complaint concerning Warters, only nine contain new allegations. [7] Of the nine new paragraphs, two merely allege in conclusory terms that Warters lacked knowledge of defendants' improper conduct (Second Am. Compl., ¶¶ 136-37), and three contain pure conclusions of law:

> ¶142. In sum, Warters' claims against the 1997-1 and 1998-1 Trusts depended on information held internally by the Trusts that was otherwise unavailable to Warters, which information the Trusts did not disclose until well within one year of the filing of this lawsuit.
>
> ¶143. As a result, the claims brought by Warters were based on illegal actions by the 1997-1 and 1998-1 Trusts which were self-concealing.
>
> ¶144. Since Warters had no actual or inquiry notice of the basis for her FDCPA claims in this action until November 2004 at the earliest, the statute of limitations for her FDCPA claims should be equitably tolled until November 2004.

(Id. at ¶¶ 142-144). The four paragraphs that contain new assertions are listed here:

> ¶138. Indeed, November 12, 2004, when JER provided discovery in the Binson case [*24] about instances in which the 1998-1 Trust charged so-called "Debt Cancellation Fees", was the first time that JER and the 1998-1 Trust disclosed to Warters or to her counsel that a "Debt Cancellation Fee" had been assessed by JER and the 1998-1 Trust against Warters' account.
>
> ¶139. During depositions in the Binson case on March 24, 2005 and May 3, 2005, JER and the 1998-1 Trust for the first time disclosed that the so-called "Debt Cancellation Fee" charged Warters on May 19, 2004 was for purported "legal services".
>
> ¶140 Such alleged "legal services" had not yet even been rendered as of May 19, 2004.
>
> ¶141 To this day, the 1997-1 Trust has failed to disclose whether it charged Warters for a so-called Debt Cancellation Fee, or for legal fees for legal services which had not yet been performed, or for any legal fees and costs which the 1997-1 Trust allegedly was entitled to collect.

(Id. at ¶¶ 138-41.)

---

[7] Most of the factual allegations are identical to those previously asserted. (Compare Am. Compl., ¶¶ 109-128 with ¶¶ Second Am. Compl., ¶¶ 116-135.)

In opposition to the instant motion to dismiss, Warters appears largely to have abandoned her concealment theory, and instead argues that equitable [*25] tolling is warranted because she was "justifiably ignorant" and never put on notice of her FDCPA claims (Pls. Mem. Opp. at 9-20.) [8] Relying on Valdez v. United States, 518 F.3d 173 (2d Cir. 2008) and Veltri v. Building Service 32B-J Pension Fund, 393 F.3d 318 (2d Cir. 2004), Warters contends that neither concealment nor affirmative misconduct must be alleged in order to invoke the doctrine of equitable tolling. (Id. at 10-11). According to Warters, the relevant inquiry is whether and when a reasonable plaintiff in her position would have been aware of the existence of her FDCPA causes of action. (Id. at 11.) Warters's argument must be rejected for three reasons.

First, in adopting Judge Pollack's Report in relevant part, Judge Bianco agreed that Warters had failed to plead facts to support equitable tolling. (September 24th Order at 9 ("The Court agrees with the R&R's conclusion that the Amended Complaint does not plead sufficient grounds for equitable tolling.")) In so doing, Judge Bianco rejected [*26] the very same arguments, although phrased slightly differently, that Warters makes here — because of defendants' conduct she was not put on notice of her FDCPA claims during the statute of limitations period:

> Moreover, in opposition to the motion to dismiss, Warters not only alleged, but demonstrated through the introduction of evidence, that the 1998-1 Trust did not reveal that it had charged a "debt cancellation fee" to either Warters or Taylor until November 2004, and did not reveal that the 'debt cancellation fee' was charged for work which had not yet been performed until 2005. Indeed, the 1996-1, the 1997-1 and the 1999-1 Trusts still have not disclosed whether they charged Warters, Taylor or other delinquent taxpayers for 'debt cancellation fees' and legal fees and costs for services which have not yet been performed, which is why Taylor and Warters were forced to assert their allegations against these Trusts 'upon information and belief.' . . . Thus, clearly the claims by less sophisticated delinquent taxpayers such as Warters against the 1997-1 Trust cannot be dismissed on statute of limitations grounds until the Court addresses 'the question of what information was realistically [*27] available to Plaintiffs and when it was available.

(Plaintiffs' Objections to the Report and Recommendation Dated March 20, 2008, Docket No. 66 at 12 (emphasis added) ("Pls' R&R Object.").) Nevertheless, Judge Bianco granted Warters's request to amend the complaint to include "additional allegations demonstrating concealment" and "the self concealing nature of the wrongful actions of the 1997-1 Trust." (September 24th Order at 9 (emphasis added).) The Second Amended Complaint, however, contains no new or additional allegations of concealment or self-concealing conduct. Rather, it merely contains a reiteration in separate paragraphs (Second Am. Compl., ¶¶138-41) of what Warters argued in opposition to the prior motion to dismiss (Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss at 17, n. 8-9, Docket No. 36), and when objecting to Judge Pollack's Report (Pls' R&R Object. at 12). Judge Bianco rejected those very same allegations and arguments as a basis for equitable tolling. Having made no new or additional allegations concerning concealment, Warters's attempt to relitigate an issue she has already lost must be rejected.

Second, although both Valdez and Veltri recognize that fraudulent [*28] concealment is not "essential" to invoke the doctrine of equitable tolling, Valdez, 518 F.3d at 182, both cases are limited to their facts, were decided on narrow issues, and are therefore inapposite. Veltri was a case under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 ("ERISA"), 29 U.S.C. §§ 1001-1461, commenced eleven years after the plaintiff's claim for benefits was denied, and five years beyond the expiration of the applicable statute of limitations. Veltri claimed that he was neither aware of his right to take an administrative appeal of the initial adverse benefits determination, nor of his right to file a federal court action challenging that determination. Veltri, 393 F.3d at 322. While the defendants had provided Veltri with a booklet that notified him of his right to appeal, they did not comply with a federal regulation requiring that a notice of adverse determination also include "a statement of the claimant's right to bring a civil action." 29 C.F.R. § 2560.503-1(g)(1). The Second Circuit held that the defendants' failure to comply with this regulation established a "special circumstance" warranting equitable tolling, even though the failure to provide such notice [*29] would not otherwise "normally be held to mandate equitable tolling." Veltri, 393 F.3d at 324.

---

[8] Of the fifteen pages in her opposition brief devoted to the equitable tolling issue, only one page directly addresses the issue of concealment. (Pls. Mem. Opp. at 9-24, see part C. at 20-21.)

Valdez also involved "special circumstances" that warranted equitable tolling even in the absence of fraudulent concealment. 518 F.3d at 183. The tolling dispute in Valdez arose from the federal government's failure to disclose to patients that certain physicians who provide services in what appear to be private hospitals or clinics, are deemed to be federal employees. Patients receiving such treatment are not aware, because they are never told or put on any notice, that the clinics they attend are government-funded or that doctors treating them are government employees. The Court considered that although such an omission does not rise to the level of fraudulent concealment, it nevertheless creates a potential trap in states such as New York, which provide a longer statute of limitations period for malpractice claims than that of the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2679. The Court noted expressly the number of cases in which the United States sought to take advantage of this "trap", suggesting "that it is aware of the consequences of its failure to disclose the material facts of federal [*30] employment by doctors who might reasonably be viewed as private practitioners." Valdez, 518 F.3d at 183. The Court found the government's conduct "more problematic than the non-disclosure that justified invoking the doctrine of equitable tolling in Veltri."

Thus, although acts of fraudulent concealment did not exist in either Valdez or Veltri, other "special circumstances" were present that warranted equitable tolling. Here, Warters has failed to plead the existence of any such special circumstances sufficient to warrant equitable tolling in the absence of fraudulent concealment. Rather, she relies on a garden variety claim that equitable tolling is warranted because she was "justifiably ignorant" and never put on notice of her FDCPA claims. As discussed above, that argument has already been rejected by Judge Bianco.

Third, Warters has failed to allege any facts whatsoever to demonstrate that she engaged in the type of due diligence necessary to invoke equitable tolling even in the absence of fraudulent concealment. (Second Am. Compl. at ¶¶ 137-144.) In Veltri, the Court recognized that HN7[] a plaintiff who would otherwise be entitled to equitable tolling on the basis of "special circumstances" [*31] could forfeit that right if he failed to exercise due diligence. 393 F.3d at 326. Further, none of the cases cited in plaintiffs' opposition brief relieve Warters of her diligence obligation. Rather, plaintiffs appear to argue that because "defendants have not and cannot point to any facts which existed at the time plaintiffs Warters and Taylor paid off the delinquent tax liens which would have given either one of them any indication that they might be the victims of a scheme to recover improper attorneys' fees and costs," plaintiffs were effectively relieved of any such due diligence obligation. In the alternative, plaintiffs appear to argue that, given defendants' alleged failure to provide certain information requested by plaintiffs during the discovery process, even if plaintiffs had acted with the requisite diligence, they inevitably would have been stymied in their efforts to discover their claims. These two arguments must be rejected.

As to Warters's first argument, the Court is inclined to agree with defendants that plaintiffs improperly seek to have applied the legal standard that would govern had plaintiffs alleged fraud. Curiously, however, plaintiffs' pleadings contain no [*32] such allegation. (Second Am. Compl. at ¶¶ 77-144) Plaintiffs rely nearly exclusively on Shah v. Meeker, 435 F.3d 244 (2d Cir. 2006), in arguing that they were under no obligation to exercise due diligence to discover their claims as a condition precedent to the application of equitable tolling. Shah, however, is distinguishable in that it was a securities fraud case and, as such, allegations of fraud were central to the plaintiffs' theory of liability. Shah is, therefore, inapposite. Having failed to allege any fraud by defendants, Warters has done nothing to relieve herself of her diligence obligation.

Warters's second argument belies a clear understanding as to what a court may properly consider in determining a motion to dismiss. HN8[] In resolving a motion to dismiss the district court's "consideration is limited to the factual allegations in [the] complaint, which are accepted as true, to documents attached to the complaint as an exhibit or incorporated in it by reference, to matters of which judicial notice may be taken, or to documents either in plaintiffs' possession or of which plaintiffs had knowledge and relied on in bringing suit." See International Longshoremen's Ass'n, 518 F. Supp. 2d 422, 451 (E.D.N.Y. 2007) [*33] (quoting Brass, 987 F.2d at 150 (2d Cir. 1993)). Plaintiffs' reference to defendants' alleged refusal to produce information in discovery is, therefore, irrelevant to the Court's analysis of defendants' motion to dismiss.

2. Warters's Reliance on Matters Outside the Pleadings is Misplaced

In order to rescue her untimely FDCPA claims, Warters relies on purportedly "newly discovered" material outside the pleadings: (1) a Verrazano Closing Sheet dated May 19, 2004, indicating that at the closing on the sale of Warters's property $2,500 and $58,000 were placed in escrow to "payoff JER [9]"; (2) an escrow deposit sheet dated May 19, 2004 indicating that these amounts were placed in escrow to "pay to JE Roberts/NYCTL for tax liens"; (3) a history of communications relating to Warters's tax liens indicating JER's transmittal of additional payoff quotes to Verrazano on June 3, 18, and 22, 2004 ("CUBS notes"); (4) a copy of JER's June 22, 2004 payoff quote ("June Payoff Quote"); (5) copies of two checks dated July 2, 2004 by which Verrazano paid the amounts demanded in the June Payoff Quote; and (6) a JER "Check Request Form" indicating an overpayment on a payoff of July 6, 2004 for liens then [*34] still attached to the property Warters had sold on May 19, 2004. (Pl. March 19th Letter, Exhs. A, B, C, D, E, F.) Based on this material, Warters contends that her FDCPA claims accrued, at the earliest, in July 2004, well within one year of the May 20, 2005 filing of this action.

While the Court was initially inclined to convert the relevant portions of defendants' motions to dismiss into motions for summary judgment in light of this evidence, after hearing oral argument and reviewing the parties' subsequent submissions, [*35] the Court concludes that conversion is inappropriate. See Friedl v. City of New York, 210 F.3d 79, 83 (2d Cir. 2000) (HN9[] "[W]hen matters outside the pleadings are presented in response to a 12(b)(6) motion, a district court must either exclude the additional material and decide the motion on the complaint alone or convert the motion to one for summary judgment under [Federal Rule of Civil Procedure] 56 and afford all parties the opportunity to present supporting material.") (internal quotations omitted) (quoting Fonte v. Bd. of Managers of Cont'l Towers Condo., 848 F.2d 24, 25 (2d Cir. 1988)); see generally 5C Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1366 (3d ed. 2004). In any event, Warters's reliance on the "newly discovered" material is misplaced.

a. The Material is not "Newly Discovered"

It appears that much of the "newly discovered" information was previously known to Warters's counsel. For example, the CUBS notes indicating activity on Warters's account after May 19, 2004, have been in the possession of plaintiffs' counsel since the initial disclosures in this matter. (Defendants' March 19th Letter ("Def. March 19th Letter") at 2.) Similarly, information [*36] concerning the purported July 6, 2010 payoff as reflected in the Check Request Form was previously disclosed to plaintiffs' counsel in November 2004 as part of discovery in the Binson action. (Def. March 19th Letter, Exh. C.) As defendants further point out, that this information is not newly discovered is confirmed by the fact that plaintiffs' counsel quoted the amount noted in the overpayment log in a January 28, 2005 letter sent to Sarah Latham, Warters's predecessor in interest, [10] seeking to recruit her for the then-yet-to-be filed class action against defendants. (Def. March 19th Letter, Exh. B.) Finally, the two checks dated July 2 and 6, 2004, respectively, which indicate payment to JER on those dates in the amount demanded in the June 2004 Payoff Quote were produced by defendants' counsel during discovery and have since been in plaintiffs' counsel's control and possession. See Plaintiffs' January 26, 2010 Letter (Pl. Jan. 26th Letter") at 3.

Additionally, as defendants point out, plaintiffs' own submissions make clear that the facts Warters contends are "newly discovered" were known to her attorneys [*37] since the parties' initial discovery productions in this litigation. Indeed, plaintiffs' counsel possessed documents concerning the existence of the escrow arrangement with Verrazano, as well as Verrazano's payoff of the amounts demanded in the June 2004 Payoff Quote, as noted above. (Pl. March 19th Letter, Exhs. A, B, E.) Finally, plaintiffs' answers to interrogatories served May 1, 2009, further confirm plaintiffs' counsel's awareness that there occurred activity relative to Warters's account after May 19, 2004. Indeed, in response to Interrogatory No. 4 concerning the defendants' alleged failure to pay interest on the [9] As Warters was unable to satisfy the amounts of the outstanding liens at the time payment was demanded, the defendants commenced a foreclosure action against her in New York Supreme Court, Queens County. A buyer was found for Warters's residence, and the closing was set for May 19, 2004. As the seller, Warters was responsible for the satisfaction of any outstanding liens prior to transfer of title to the property. Accordingly, $60,500 of the purchase price was placed in escrow to cover the liens. Verrazano Closing Services ("Verrazano") was the closing company and escrow agent for all parties to the sale. See Plaintiffs' March 19, 2010 Letter ("Pl. March 19th Letter") at 2.

[10] Sarah Latham was a relative from whom Warters received the subject property.

refund of any overcharge associated with satisfaction of the outstanding liens, Warters indicated that "Defendants failed to pay interest on $5,210.21 from July 6, 2004 to September 9, 2004." (Def. March 19 Letter, Exh. E.) Similarly, in her response to Interrogatory No. 5, in which plaintiffs were asked to identify the date and amount of any "incorrect calculation" by defendants of "the final 'Total Due'" in order to satisfy the outstanding liens, Warters indicated that defendants had miscalculated by "at least $5,210.21 as of July 2, 2004." (Id.)

There being no "newly [*38] discovered" evidence to speak of, such having been in Warters's counsel's possession for quite some time, her eleventh-hour attempt to save her otherwise time-barred FDCPA claims must fail. Warters has failed to show good cause why at some earlier point she could not have sought leave to amend her complaint for a third time to assert these "new" allegations.

b. The "Newly Discovered" Material Does Not Salvage Warters's Untimely FDCPA Claims

The newly discovered evidence does not salvage Warters's untimely FDCPA claims. HN10[] The FDCPA was enacted "to protect consumers from a host of unfair, harassing, and deceptive debt collection practices without imposing unnecessary restrictions on ethical debt collectors." S. Rep. 95-382, at 1696 (1977). With that purpose in mind, the FDCPA provides for a general prohibition against the use of "false, deceptive, or misleading representation[s] or means in connection with the collection of any debt," 15 U.S.C. § 1692e. That section enumerates a non-exhaustive list of practices deemed violative of its provisions, which includes: "[t]he use of any false representation or deceptive means to collect or attempt to collect any debt or to obtain information concerning [*39] a consumer." 15. U.S.C. § 1692e(10). In weighing whether a debt collector has run afoul of the FDCPA, courts apply an objective standard measured by how the "least sophisticated consumer" would interpret the communication. See Clomon v. Jackson, 988 F.2d 1314, 1318 (2d Cir. 1993). In order to reach this determination, however, the courts must a priori determine whether a given item of correspondence, for example, constitutes a "communication" within the meaning of the statute.

HN11[] Under the FDCPA, a "communication" is defined as "the conveying of information regarding a debt directly or indirectly to any person through any medium." 15 U.S.C. § 1692(a)(2). In the case at bar, it is undisputed that the information contained in the June Payoff Quote concerned Warters's outstanding debt, [11] and therefore that the June Payoff Quote is a communication within the meaning of the FDCPA. Defendants argue, however, that the payoff quotes sent after May 19, 2004, were not directed to Warters herself, but to either Verrazano or Warters's attorney at the time, Charles Cipolla. [12] Therefore, defendants contend, these communications are not actionable under the FDCPA. [13]

As noted above, to effectuate the purposes of the FDCPA, HN12[] courts apply the so-called least-sophisticated-consumer standard in order to "ensure [ ] the protection of all consumers, even the naive and the trusting, against deceptive practices, and (2) protect [ ] debt collectors against liability for bizarre or idiosyncratic interpretations of collection notices." Clomon, 988 F.2d at 1320. It was on this basis that the Second Circuit determined that no violation of the FDCPA occurs where "a party alleges that his attorney has been misled to the party's detriment." Kropelnicki v. Siegel, 290 F.3d 118, 127 (2d Cir. 2002). Specifically, the Kropelniki Court concluded that "[w]here an attorney is interposed as an intermediary between a debt [*41] collector and a consumer, we assume the attorney, rather than the FDCPA, will protect the consumer from a debt collector's fraudulent or harassing behavior." Id. at 128; see also Tromba v. M.R.S. Assocs., Inc., 323 F. Supp. 2d 424, 427-8 (E.D.N.Y. 2004) (relying upon Kropelniki in holding that fax sent by debt collector solely and directly to debtor's attorney not actionable under FDCPA). Relying on the Court's reasoning in Kropelniki, any communications between JER and Warters's counsel are not actionable under the FDCPA, and are therefore insufficient to save her otherwise untimely FDCPA claims. Similar [11] Although Warters alleges that [*40] Verrazano received payoff quotes from JER on June 3, 18, and 22, 2004, Warters has only submitted the contents of the June Payoff Quote to the Court. See Pl. March 19th Letter, Exh. D.

---

[12] Warters retained Cipolla to represent her in connection with the sale of the subject property. See Trusts' March 19, 2010 Letter ("Tr. March 19th Letter") at 2, Exh. A.

[13] Warters does not contend that she had any direct communication with JER Revenue on or after May 19, 2004.

reasoning can be applied to any communications between JER and Verrazano. As a closing company/escrow agent, Verrazano cannot be considered the least-sophisticated consumer, and is interposed between the JER defendants and Warters. Thus, any communications between JER and Verrazanno cannot form the basis for liability under the FDCPA.

The post-May 19, 2004 communications between JER and Verrazano or Cippola are not actionable under the FDCPA for the additional reason that Warters has failed to allege, let alone present any evidence, that the JER defendants initiated any of these communications. [*42] If anything, it is beyond contention that the JER defendants were simply responding to inquiries made by Verrazano or Cippola concerning the outstanding amount then due and owing on Warters's account. HN13[] The FDCPA's protections are not triggered by communications initiated by someone other than the debt collector. *See Gorham-Dimaggio v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., No. 05-CV-0583, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34237, 2005 WL 2098068, at 2 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 30, 2005) (concluding that when the consumer initiates the conversation, many of the policy reasons behind the FDCPA disappear, and, accordingly, that defendant debt collector's mere response to plaintiff's inquiries concerning her outstanding mortgage did not constitute collection activity under the FDCPA); *Nichols v. Washington Mutual Bank, No. 07-CV-3216, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85936, 2007 WL 4198252, at 4-5 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 21, 2007) (FDCPA intended to protect consumers from communications initiated by debt collectors).

Finally, the "newly discovered" evidence has no impact on the timeliness of Warters's claims under § 1692f of the FDCPA — prohibiting "[t]he collection of any amount (including any interest, fee, charge, or expense incidental to the principal obligation) unless such amount is expressly [*43] authorized by the agreement creating the debt or permitted by law." Simply stated, Warters made the allegedly unlawful payment on May 19, 2004 in connection with the sale of her home. For the purposes of § 1692f, the defendants may properly be considered to have "collected" the outstanding debt from Warters on that day — the day the money was deposited in escrow. Indeed, Warters's own submissions confirm that on May 19, 2004, the date of the closing, the amount then due and owing on her account was placed in escrow for the express purpose of paying off JER. See Pl. March 19th Letter, Exhs A, B. That Verrazano thereafter requested updates as to the payoff quotes from JER, and paid to JER the amounts quoted therein after the date of the closing is irrelevant to the Court's analysis under § 1692f. These were not individual collection events, as Warters would have the Court believe, but mere ministerial acts associated with the resolution of Warters's liens in order to complete the sale of her home, and therefore gave rise to no new FDCPA violations that would cause the statute of limitatinos to start running anew. Accordingly, Warters's argument that her FDCPA § 1692f claims were timely [*44] asserted on this basis must be rejected.

C. Equitable Tolling is Unavailable to Taylor and Warters Based on Their Purported Attempt to Intervene in the Binson Action

Taylor and Warters contend that their "attempt to intervene" in Binson on February 15, 2005, is sufficient to equitably toll the statute of limitations on their FDCPA claims. The argument should be rejected for three reasons.

First, the argument is untimely, and should have been made when opposing defendants' prior motion to dismiss. Once served with the prior motion to dismiss, plaintiffs were on notice that defendants contended that they failed to comply with the FDCPA's one-year statute of limitations. At that time, plaintiffs were also aware of all of the facts necessary to support this particular equitable tolling argument. In opposing that motion, however, plaintiffs made no mention of their purported attempt to intervene in Binson as a basis for equitable tolling. Rather, they based their tolling arguments on American Pipe and defendants' purported concealment of the improper conduct. When deciding the motion to dismiss, Judge Bianco rejected all of plaintiffs' equitable tolling arguments, but gave them leave to replead [*45] additional facts concerning the 1997-1 Trust's active concealment, or at the very least the self-concealing nature, of the improper conduct. He did not give them leave to assert new, independent bases for equitable tolling, and the Court should reject their attempt to reargue the issue now.

Second, even if the argument were timely made, it would not salvage Taylor's untimely FDCPA claims, which arose at the latest in December 2003. Thus, even if she sought to intervene in Binson and put defendants on notice of her claims in February 2005, that was still well-beyond the expiration of the FDCPA's one-year statute of limitation.

Third, neither Taylor nor Warters ever filed a motion to intervene in Binson. Rather, it was the Binsons who filed the motion. (Binson R&R at 20 ("From the prior proceedings and papers filed in this case, there is no question that the Binsons filed this current motion [...]"). Perhaps more importantly, the Binsons' motion sought to amend the complaint and join additional parties pursuant to Rules 15 and 20 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, not intervene pursuant to Rule 24. (Id.) Indeed, Judge Pollack explicitly recognized that while the Binson plaintiffs [*46] attempted to characterize their motion to add the Prospective Plaintiffs (including Taylor and Warters) as a motion to intervene, nowhere in their motion papers did the Binson plaintiffs ever discuss the issue of intervention, choosing instead to address the requirements for joinder as set forth in Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 20. Judge Pollack noted that the first reference to "intervention" appeared in defendants' memoranda in opposition; plaintiffs only thereafter began using the term "intervention" in their reply. (Id. at 21.) Even in their reply, the Binson plaintiffs failed to invoke Rule 24 or directly address the requirements of Rule 24(a)(2) or 24(b)(2). (Id.) Finally, and perhaps critically, the Binson plaintiffs failed to comply with the procedural requirements of Rule 24. (Id.) HN14[] Under Rule 24(c) "[a] person desiring to intervene shall serve a motion to intervene upon the parties as provided in Rule 5. The motion shall state the grounds therefor and shall be accompanied by a pleading setting forth the claim or defense for which intervention is sought." Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(c). As the Binson Court noted, however, "an intervenor cannot simply rely on the pleadings previously [*47] filed by another party." (Binson R&R at 22); see also Werbungs Und Commerz Union Austalt v. Collectors' Guild, Ltd.., 782 F. Supp. 870, 874 (S.D.N.Y. 1991); 6 James Wm. Moore et al., Moore's Federal Practice § 24.20. Judge Pollack noted that, apart from the Binsons' motion to amend, no separate notice of a motion to intervene had been filed by the Prospective Plaintiffs (including Taylor and Warters), nor had there been a separate pleading setting forth the claims of the Prospective Plaintiffs. See Fed. R.Civ. P. 24(c). [14]

Having thus failed to properly file a motion to intervene, which may have put defendants on notice of their claims, plaintiffs reliance on Burnett v. New York Central R.R., 380 U.S. 424, 85 S. Ct. 1050, 13 L. Ed. 2d 941 (1965) and its progeny is misplaced. Burnett stands [*49] for the proposition that a plaintiff that otherwise properly files a timely action in the wrong venue may seek solace in the doctrine of equitable tolling and thereafter file a separate action in the proper venue. While the other cases plaintiffs cite may have extended Burnett to other procedural contexts, they all involved situations where the plaintiff properly filed an action, which was defective for some reason other than the filing itself. See Whittaker v. United States., 815 F. Supp. 764 (D. Vt. 1993) (HN15[] equitable tolling applicable where original action timely filed but dismissed due to plaintiff's failure to name proper party as defendant); In re Randall's Island Family Golf Center, Inc., 288 B.R. 701 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2003) (equitable tolling appropriate where plaintiff timely brought first action that was thereafter dismissed without prejudice on grounds of improper joinder); Clymore v. U.S., 217 F.3d 370, 375-76 (5th Cir. 2000) (equitable tolling warranted where plaintiff timely filed first action in the wrong venue and promptly re-filed it in correct venue after statute of limitations had run). Because neither Taylor nor Warters ever properly filed anything, let alone a proper motion [*50] to intervene, their argument in favor of equitable tolling on this basis must be rejected.

* * *

---

[14] Taylor's and Warters' argument that the Binson plaintiffs "service" of a proposed amended complaint containing the Prospect Plaintiffs' claims in connection with the motion to amend is sufficient to invoke equitable tolling must be rejected. (Pl. Mem. Opp. at 21.) In so arguing, Taylor and Warters seem to imply that the Binson's motion to amend constituted a motion to intervene, and complied with Rule 24's requirement that a motion to intervene "be accompanied by a pleading that sets out the claim or defense for which intervention is sought." Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(c). Not only did Taylor and Warters not file a motion to intervene, but the Binson's motion to amend fell [*48] far short of Rule 24(c)'s requirements. Plaintiffs have failed to establish that the proposed amended pleading was ever served on the JER defendants, as would have been required. (Pl. Mem. Opp. at 21) ("Each of the Trusts was served with a copy of the proposed Amended Complaint containing Warter's [sic] and plaintiff Taylor's claims." (emphasis added.)) Also, the proposed amended complaint was served on or after February 24, 2005 (date of amended summonses) — nine days after the Binson's motion to amend was filed on February 15, 2005. (Docket No. 117, Declaration of Mark S. Kaufman in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, Exhibit J.) Therefore, the motion was not "accompanied by a pleading that sets out the claim . . .." Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(c) (emphasis added). Warters and Taylor have simply failed to present any evidence whatsoever that service of the proposed amended complaint was properly effectuated, let alone that it complied with Rule 24(c).

In sum, Taylor's and Warters's FDCPA claims are time-barred, and neither American Pipe nor equitable tolling are applicable to save them.

III. Plaintiffs' State Law Claims

Both the JER and Trust Defendants contend that this Court should dismiss plaintiffs' state law claims for several reasons. The JER defendants, joined by the Trust defendants, contend that, should it be determined that plaintiffs' federal claims must be dismissed as time-barred, this Court ought to refuse to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiffs' remaining state law claims. The Trust defendants have offered additional arguments as to why certain of plaintiffs' state law claims ought to be dismissed as being without merit. Inasmuch as the defendants appear simply to reprise theories offered in support of their prior motions to dismiss, which sought to discourage this Court from retaining jurisdiction over plaintiffs' remaining state law claims, the doctrine of the law of the case mandates that these arguments be rejected.

A. This Court's Prior Determination to Exercise Supplemental Jurisdiction Over Plaintiffs' [*51] State Law Claims Was Not in Error and Should Not Be Disturbed

The JER and Trust defendants contend that, where a plaintiff's federal statutory claims fail, and there exists no other independent basis for the exercise of federal jurisdiction over accompanying state law claims, the court may decline to extend jurisdiction over the pending state law claims. (JER Mem. at 21; Trust Mem. at 20-21); see also 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3). Inasmuch as the JER and the Trust defendants have declined to offer new arguments on this issue, and appear merely to reprise arguments offered in support of prior motions to dismiss that were ultimately rejected by this Court, the doctrine of the law of the case mandates that these arguments be rejected.

HN16[] The law of the case doctrine "is implicated when a court reconsiders its own ruling in the absence of an intervening ruling on that issue by a higher court." United States v. Quintieri, 306 F.3d 1217, 1225 (2d Cir. 2002). This doctrine requires that "when a court has ruled on an issue, that decision should generally be adhered to by that court in subsequent stages in the same case unless cogent and compelling reasons militate otherwise." Id. (internal citations [*52] and quotation marks omitted). "Cogent" and "compelling" reasons include "an intervening change of controlling law, the availability of new evidence, or the need to correct a clear error or prevent manifest injustice." United States v. Tenzer, 213 F.3d 34, 39 (2d Cir. 2000).

Applying these principles, it is clear that defendants have offered no such "cogent" and "compelling" reasons. Indeed, defendants appear to simply repeat the same legal arguments offered in their prior motions to dismiss that this Court found unpersuasive. Accordingly, the doctrine of the law of the case dictates that this Court's prior determination that supplemental jurisdiction may properly be exercised over plaintiffs' remaining state law claims shall continue to control.

B. Taylor's State Law Claims Against the 1996-1 and 1999-1 Trust Defendant[15]

The Trust defendants argue that because no federal claims have been asserted against the 1996-1 and 1999-1 Trusts, the Court lacks jurisdiction to hear plaintiffs' state law claims asserted against them. As [*53] an initial matter, it bears noting that in their Amended Complaint, plaintiffs asserted FDCPA claims solely against the JER defendants, the 1997-1 Trust and the 1998-1 Trust. (Am. Compl. at 20.) Plaintiffs' most recent complaint, however, has been amended to assert FDCPA claims against all named defendants. (Second Am. Compl. at 22.) To the extent that Taylor has included additional federal statutory claims in the Second Amended Complaint that were not asserted in the prior Amended Complaint, these claims must be dismissed for several reasons.

First, Judge Pollack, in her thorough and well-reasoned Report, concluded that American Pipe tolling would be unavailable to toll any of plaintiffs' claims brought against the 1996-1, 1997-1, and 1999-1 Trusts, on grounds that these defendants, unlike the 1998-1 Trust, were never parties to the Binson action. See Arneil v. Ramsey, 550 F.2d [15] Taylor is the only plaintiff to have alleged misconduct on the part of the 1996-1 and 1999-1 Trusts. See 2nd Am. Compl. at ¶¶ 82, 86, 90, 92, 93, 95, 96-106, 112.

774, 782 n.10 (2d Cir. 1977) (noting that "nothing in American Pipe suggests that the statute be suspended from running in favor of a person not named as a defendant in the class suit," and declining to so extend the rule), overruled on other grounds, In re WorldCom Sec. Litig., 496 F.3d 245 (2d Cir. 2007). [*54] Indeed, to afford plaintiffs the benefit of American Pipe tolling against defendants that had never been placed on notice of the substantive claims asserted against them by being named in the prior class suit would undermine in a fundamental way the very purposes served by statutes of limitations. (Report at 24); See American Pipe, 414 U.S. at 554-55. Accordingly, Judge Pollack recommended, and Judge Bianco agreed, that these claims be dismissed as untimely. (Report at 24-25; September 24th Order at 9.)

Moreover, Taylor and Warters were never given leave by this Court to amend their complaint to assert additional federal claims against the 1996-1 and 1999-1 Trust defendants. In his Order, Judge Bianco was very specific: he afforded plaintiff Taylor the opportunity to recraft her pleadings to allege additional facts to invoke American Pipe tolling to preserve her otherwise stale FDCPA claims. He also granted Warters leave to amend her pleadings to allege concealment by defendants that would warrant the equitable tolling of her otherwise time-barred claims. (Order at 8-9.) The additional amendment having been made without authorization from this Court, it must be disregarded and the FDCPA [*55] claims as pled in plaintiffs' Amended Complaint revived.

Notwithstanding the dismissal of the federal claims, there remain compelling reasons for this Court's continued exercise of jurisdiction over Taylor's state law claims for unjust enrichment and breach of contract brought against these defendants. Indeed, Judge Pollack addressed this issue at length and in great detail in her Report. (Report at 31-33.) Succinctly stated, Judge Pollack concluded, and Judge Bianco agreed, that supplemental jurisdiction is warranted over these state law claims because the claims are closely intertwined with the state and federal claims asserted by the other plaintiffs in this action, and are alleged to have arisen from a common nucleus of operative fact in terms of the conduct and practices of the defendants with respect to the charging of fees in conjunction with the servicing of the then outstanding liens. (Report at 31-32; Order at 6.) In any event, the Trust defendants do not appear to offer any new theories in their moving papers as to why this Court should decline to hear plaintiff Taylor's New York common law claims (Trust Mem. at 18) and, therefore, defendants' recycled jurisdictional arguments [*56] may be rejected under the doctrine of the law of the case.

C. Plaintiffs Have Properly Pled Their Claim Under Section 349 of New York's General Business Law

HN17[] Section 349(a) of New York's General Business Law provides that "[d]eceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state are hereby declared unlawful." The language and background of section 349 reveal that it is directed at addressing wrongs visited upon the public as consumers. See Report of the Committee on New York State Antitrust Law of the Antitrust Law Section of the New York State Bar Association: A Proposed New State Law Making Deceptive Acts or Practices Unlawful, Bill Jacket, L. 1970, ch. 43, at 21-29; see also Letter of New York State Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz, dated February 18, 1970, Bill Jacket, L. 1970, ch. 43, at 5-6. Indeed, General Business Law article 22-A, within which section 349 may be found, is entitled "Consumer Protection from Deceptive Acts and Practices." That the statute provides for the Attorney-General alone to initially exercise enforcement power in the name of the State further attests to its public focus. See General [*57] Business Law § 349(b). Therefore, as a threshold matter, "plaintiffs claiming the benefit of section 349 [...] must charge conduct of the defendant that is consumer-oriented." Oswego Laborers' Local 214 Pension Fund v. Marine Midland Bank, N.A., 85 N.Y.2d 20, 25, 647 N.E.2d 741, 623 N.Y.S.2d 529 (N.Y. 1995). Additionally, a plaintiff must demonstrate "that the acts or practices have a broader impact on consumers at large." Id. Private contract disputes, for example, are "unique to the parties [and] would not fall within the ambit of the statute." Id.; see also New York Univ. v. Continental Ins. Co., 87 N.Y.2d 308, 662 N.E.2d 763, 639 N.Y.S.2d 283 (N.Y. 1995); Genesco Entertainment v. Koch, 593 F. Supp. 743, 752 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (negotiation for rental of Shea Stadium was a "'single shot transaction,'" not a typical consumer transaction, and therefore not covered by section 349).

HN18[] Where a plaintiff succeeds in demonstrating that a defendant's conduct is directed to consumers, however, the inquiry is not at an end. A prima facie case of violation of section 349 requires an additional showing that the defendant is "engaging in an act or practice that is deceptive or misleading in a material way and that plaintiff has been injured by reason thereof." Varela v. Investors Ins. Holding Corp., 81 N.Y.2d 958, 961, 615 N.E.2d 218, 598 N.Y.S.2d 761 (N.Y. 1993). [*58] And although the statute does not mandate that a plaintiff establish the defendant's intent to defraud or mislead, where proof that the defendant knowingly and willingly violated this section is offered, "[t]he court may, in its discretion, increase the award of damages to an amount not to exceed three times the actual damages up to one thousand dollars." General Business Law § 349(h). Similarly, although proof of justifiable reliance on the plaintiff's part is not required, a plaintiff seeking compensatory damages is obligated to show that the defendant's material deceptive act or practice caused the plaintiff actual, though not necessarily pecuniary, harm. Oswego, 85 N.Y.2d at 26.

HN19[] New York courts have adopted an objective definition of deceptive acts and practices, whether they be representations or omissions. They are "those likely to mislead a reasonable consumer acting reasonably under the circumstances." Id. Moreover, where a case involves omissions — as does the case at bar — "the statute surely does not require businesses to ascertain consumers' individual needs and guarantee that each consumer has all relevant information specific to its situation." Id. A different outcome [*59] may be warranted, however, "where the business alone possesses material information that is relevant to the consumer and fails to provide this information." Id.

Applying these principles, I find that the plaintiffs' pleadings suffice to establish, as a threshold matter, that the defendants' conduct falls within the "consumer-oriented" ambit of General Business Law § 349. The allegedly improper conduct in which the defendants are alleged to have engaged has impacted a large number of individuals, as evidenced by the fact that plaintiffs here assert class, as well as individual claims. It is plain on the face of the Second Amended Complaint that the conduct in question was not unique to the individual arrangements in place between the defendants and each of the named plaintiffs. Nor is the practice of demanding and collecting allegedly improper fees in association with the resolution of outstanding liens from a large segment of the population private in nature, or a "single shot transaction." Genesco, 593 F. Supp. at 752. Thus, plaintiffs have satisfied the threshold test in that the acts of which they complain are consumer-oriented in the sense that they potentially affect similarly [*60] situated consumers. Finally, plaintiffs have plead facts sufficient to allege that the conduct in which defendant engaged was of a misleading or deceptive nature, and that plaintiffs were injured therefrom.

Accordingly, plaintiffs have adequately stated a claim for relief under Section 349 of New York's General Business Law.

D. § 5-501 of New York General Obligations Law Does Not Apply to Tax Liens[16]

The Trust defendants contend that plaintiff Boyd's claim brought under New York General Obligations Law § 5-501 must fail as this section does not apply to tax liens. With this conclusion the Court must agree. HN20[] "The rudimentary element of usury is the existence of a loan or forbearance of money." Feinberg v. Old Vestal Road Associates, Inc., 157 A.D.2d 1002, 550 N.Y.S.2d 482 (3rd Dep't 1990) (quoting Matter of City of Binghamton [Ritter], 133 A.D.2d 988, 989, 521 N.Y.S.2d 140 (3rd Dep't 1987); see also General Obligations Law § 5-501; 73 NY Jur 2d, Interest and Usury, § 62 ("[a]lthough the general usury statutes refer to the loan of 'any money, goods, [*61] or things in action,' the statutes have been held to be applicable only to the loan or forbearance of money [...]"). Indeed, "[w]here there is no loan, there can be no usury." Oxhandler Structural Enters. v. Billard, 104 Misc. 2d. 38, 39, 427 N.Y.S.2d 569 (N.Y. Spec. Term 1980); see also Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Klein, 178 F. 689 (3d Cir. 1909) ("Payment of a commission of more than 6 per cent. for a loan of government bonds which are subject to market fluctuations and are bought and sold on the market as other securities was not in violation of the New York usury law [. . .] and did not render the loan usurious, since the terms "interest" and "forbearance," as used in the usury law [...] are applicable only to a loan of money."); DeSimon v. Ogden Associates, 88 A.D.2d 472, 454 N.Y.S.2d 721 (2nd Dep't 1982) (finding that "[a]lthough the usury statute in issue (General Obligations Law, § 5-511, subd. 1) speaks of 'money, goods or other things in action,' a necessary element of the tenants' statutory cause of action in usury is the existence of a loan of money."); Van Dyk v. Dujardin, 213 A.D. 791, 795, 210 N.Y.S. 737 (1st Dep't 1925) (concluding that "[u]sury laws are applicable only to a loan of money, and the terms 'interest' [*62] and 'forbearance' cannot be predicated of anything other than a loan of money."); Thomas v. Knickerbocker Operating Co., 202 Misc. 286, 108 N.Y.S.2d 234, 236 (N.Y. Spec. Term 1951) (quoting Meaker v. Fiero, 145 N.Y. 165, 170, 39 N.E. 714) ("it is a fundamental principle governing the law of usury that it must be founded on a loan or forbearance of money. If neither of these elements exist, there can be no usury, however unconscionable the contract may be.").

[16] Boyd is the only plaintiff to have alleged conduct on the part of certain defendants (JER and the 1998-1 Trust) in violation of section 5-501 of New York General Obligations Law.

Plaintiff Boyd argues that the arrangement her husband entered into with the defendants called precisely for forbearance and that, therefore, the charging of an interest rate in conjunction with these agreements that exceeded the permissible statutory limit must be considered usurious under New York law. This argument must be rejected. Boyd has alleged the existence of certain agreements between herself and defendants governing the resolution of the outstanding residential liens on her property that specifically make use of the word "forbearance." Nevertheless, the forbearance called for by these agreements does not appear on the face of the complaint to refer to the type of loan arrangement or forbearance of money to which New York's usury statute has been [*63] held to apply exclusively. In the absence of any such loan or forbearance of money, plaintiffs simply cannot, and have not, alleged facts sufficient to state a claim under section 5-501 of New York's General Obligations Law. Accordingly, this claim must be dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, I respectfully recommend that the JER and Trust defendants' motions to dismiss be granted in part and denied in part. Specifically, I recommend dismissal of (i) plaintiffs Taylor's and Warters's FDCPA claims brought against the JER and the relevant Trust defendants, and (ii) plaintiff Boyd's usury claim under New York General Obligations Law § 5-501. With respect to plaintiffs' state law claims, I recommend that the Court retain jurisdiction over plaintiffs' state law claims for unjust enrichment, breach of contract and misleading and deceptive practices under New York General Business Law § 349.

Any objections to this Report and Recommendation ("R&R") must be filed with the Clerk of the Court and the Honorable Kiyo A. Matsumoto within fourteen (14) days of receiving this R&R. Failure to file timely objections may waive the right to appeal the District Court's Order. See 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1); [*64] Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(a), 6(e), 72; Small v. Sec'y of Health & Human Servs., 892 F.2d 15, 16 (2d Cir. 1989).

Dated: March 31, 2010

Brooklyn, New York

/s/ Ramon E. Reyes, Jr.

Ramon E. Reyes, Jr.

United States Magistrate Judge

End of Document

In re Title Ins. Antitrust Cases

United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division

March 31, 2010, Decided; March 31, 2010, Filed

CASE NOS. 1:08CV677 AND RELATED CASES

Reporter

702 F. Supp. 2d 840 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30913 ; 2011-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,374

IN RE TITLE INSURANCE ANTITRUST CASES

Prior History: In re Title Ins. Antitrust Litig., 702 F. Supp. 2d 840, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104539 (N.D. Ohio, Sept. 7, 2009)

Core Terms

filed rate doctrine, rates, title insurance, Plaintiffs', regulations, insurers, Defendants', insurance business, Valentine Act, filings, antitrust, rating bureau, injunctive relief, Sherman Act, statutory scheme, McCarran-Ferguson Act, carriers, damages, Recommendation, courts, tariff, nonjusticiability, anti trust law, cooperative, nondiscrimination, claim for damages, state law, collaboration, Bulletin, motion to dismiss

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Standards of Review

HN1[] Magistrates, Standards of Review

28 U.S.C.S. § 636(b) requires a de novo decision as to those portions of a magistrate judge's report and recommendation to which objection is made.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > Approval Process

HN2[] Rate Regulation, Approval Process

Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.04(A) requires all title insurers to file with the superintendent of insurance every form of a policy, endorsement, rider, manual, minimum class rate, rating schedule, or rating plan, and every other rating rule, and every modification of any of them, which it proposes to use. Insurers may satisfy their obligation to make such filings by subscribing to, or becoming a member of, a licensed rating bureau. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.04(B).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > Approval Process

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > Supporting Documentation Requirement

HN3[] Rate Regulation, Approval Process

Where insurers belong to a rating bureau, they may permit the bureau to submit on their behalf proposed rates, along with supporting information, for consideration by the Department of Insurance. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.04(A). The superintendant shall review filings as soon as reasonably possible. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.04(C). A proposed rate becomes final 30 days after it is filed, unless it is disapproved by the superintendent within the waiting period. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.04(D). During the waiting the period, the superintendant may require the insurer, or its bureau, to submit additional information in support of its requested rate. He may also find that the filing does not comply with the Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.05(B). Once a rate submitted by a bureau has been approved by the Department of Insurance (or has not been disapproved after the expiration of the 30 day waiting period), however, the rate becomes the only legal rate. As such, the insurer members are not permitted to charge a different rate for title insurance, unless the insurer successfully petitions the superintendent for permission to deviate from the filed rate. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 3935.04(H), 3935.07.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > Approval Process

HN4[] Rate Regulation, Approval Process

At no time does the State of Ohio relinquish its right to monitor and control the rates charged for title insurance. At any time after the waiting period has expired, the superintendant may find that the filed rate no longer meets the requirements of Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.01 to § 3935.17, and he shall, after a hearing and upon due notice, issue a determination that the rate is no longer effective. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.05(C). Any person or organization aggrieved by a filed rate may submit a written application requesting a hearing before the superintendant. If (after the hearing) the superintendant finds the application to have merit, he shall issue a decision setting forth his reasons for finding that the rate is no longer effective. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.05(D).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When reviewing a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept all well-pleaded factual allegations as true, and determine whether the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. To survive a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the complaint must contain enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Although this is a liberal pleading standard, it requires more than the bare assertion of legal conclusions. Rather, the complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine precludes an award of damages under antitrust laws where recovery is premised on payments made under rates approved by a regulatory agency.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN7[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine does not create an antitrust immunity. A critical distinction remains between an absolute immunity from all antitrust scrutiny and a far more limited nonavailability of the private treble-damages remedy. The filed rate doctrine is merely a judicially created restriction on remedies and standing under which private plaintiffs are barred from suing for a damage recovery. It does not preclude injunctive relief or prohibit the Government from seeking civil or criminal redress.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN8[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

Two companion principles lie at the core of the filed rate doctrine: first, that legislative bodies design agencies for the specific purpose of setting uniform rates, and second, that courts are not institutionally well suited to engage in retroactive rate setting. Under the first, the "nonjusticiability" principle, the filed rate doctrine preserves the regulating agency's authority to determine the reasonableness of rates. Under the second, the "nondiscrimination" principle, the filed rate doctrine insures that the regulated entities charge only those rates that the agency has approved or been made aware of as the law may require. The filed rate doctrine is applied strictly to prevent a plaintiff from bringing a cause of action even in the face of apparent inequities whenever either the nondiscrimination strand or the nonjusticiability strand underlying the doctrine is implicated by the cause of action the plaintiff seeks to pursue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN9[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The nonjusticiability principle preserves an important purpose of the filed rate doctrine: to prohibit courts from second-guessing a regulating agency's determination as to the reasonableness of a given rate. As compared with the expertise of regulating agencies, courts do not approach the same level of institutional competence to ascertain reasonable rates. Courts are simply ill-suited to systematically second guess the regulators' decisions and overlay their own resolution. The doctrine therefore precludes claims for damages where a court would be required to substitute its judgment as to reasonable rates for that of an agency with specialized knowledge of the area.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN10[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine applies whenever either the nondiscrimination strand or the nonjusticiability strand underlying it is implicated by the cause of action the plaintiff seeks to pursue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN11[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The nondiscrimination principle underlying the filed rate doctrine holds that allowing a court to bind a regulated entity to a rate that was neither filed nor found to be reasonable would undermine legislative schemes premised upon uniform rate regulation. The U.S. Supreme Court has rejected the suggestion that the development of class actions, which might alleviate the concern about nondiscrimination, made the nondiscrimination principle of the filed-rate doctrine inapplicable to a putative class action. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has similarly rejected the argument that the filed-rate doctrine is inapplicable to class actions. The filed rate doctrine serves the purpose of nondiscrimination by prohibiting a court from entering a judgment that would serve to alter the rate paid by a plaintiff. Even if such a challenge does not, in theory, attack the filed rate, an award of damages to the customer-plaintiff would, effectively, change the rate paid by the customer to one below the filed rate paid by other customers. Therefore, no claim can be permitted to go forward that, if successful, would require an award of damages that would have the effect of imposing different rates upon different consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN12[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The U.S. Supreme Court has rejected the argument that the filed rate doctrine can only be predicated on a minimum level of agency review.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN13[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

It is unnecessary for a rate to undergo a certain "meaningful" level of scrutiny to fall within the gambit of the filed rate doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN14[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

Defining the contours of an agency's review of a filed rate is an inappropriate area for a court's inquiry. But for a court to consider a rate to be a "filed rate," the statutory scheme must provide the regulatory agency with the authority to deem a rate "filed," that is, to assess the rates' compliance with statutory requirements for filed rates.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN15[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

There is no exception to the filed rate doctrine for fraudulent or wrongful conduct.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > Supporting Documentation Requirement

HN16[] Rate Regulation, Supporting Documentation Requirement

See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.03(C)(5).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > Supporting Documentation Requirement

HN17[] Rate Regulation, Supporting Documentation Requirement

See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.04(A).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > Supporting Documentation Requirement

HN18[] Rate Regulation, Supporting Documentation Requirement

Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.04(A) (which is phrased in the conjunctive) allows for the superintendent of insurance to determine that a filing meets the requirements of the code in the absence of the accompanying information. Thus, while Ohio law requires the "consideration" of past and prospective expenses, it does not require any affirmative filing of supporting documentation about those expenses for a filing to be valid, but rather gives the superintendent the right to call for supporting documentation if he or she determines necessary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN19[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine acts to preclude actions for damages under the Sherman Act regardless of whether the regulating agency is state or federal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN20[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The question of whether the filed rate doctrine acts to preclude their state law antitrust claims for damages as to rates filed with a state regulatory agency is a matter of state law.

Governments > Courts > General Overview

HN21[] Governments, Courts

Where the state supreme court has not spoken, a federal court's task is to discern, from all available sources, how that court would respond if confronted with the issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN22[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine bars damage awards premised on payments made under rates approved by a regulatory agency. Under the doctrine, a private plaintiff may not challenge the reasonableness, or validity, of the filed rate. Simply put, the filed rate is unassailable in judicial proceedings brought by ratepayers. But in addition to acting as an insurmountable bar to damage recoveries by private plaintiffs, the filed rate doctrine mandates, as a corollary, no one may bring a judicial proceeding to enforce any rate other than the rate established by the filed tariff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN23[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The Ohio Supreme Court would respond to the question of whether the filed rate doctrine precludes a private plaintiff's claim for damages under the Valentine Act, Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1331.01 et seq., where premised on payments made under rates approved by a state regulatory agency in the affirmative.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN24[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

A district court can properly enjoin activity to prevent future conduct where doing so would not affect rates already filed and would not encroach on the agency's authority to determine the reasonableness of a given rate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN25[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

Just as the filed rate doctrine precludes injunctive relief that results in the alteration of a filed rate due to nonjusticiability concerns, so too must the filed rate doctrine preclude injunctive relief where such relief would displace the statutory scheme and authority of the regulating agency to determine the reasonableness of rates.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN26[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The starting point in a case involving construction of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, like the starting point in any case involving the meaning of a statute, is the language of the statute itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN27[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN28[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN29[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Federal law provides for reverse preemption in the realm of regulating the insurance business. As such, a federal law that does not directly relate to the business of insurance cannot be construed to "invalidate, impair, or supersede" a state law enacted to regulate the business of insurance. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(b). The McCarran-Ferguson Act, however, contains an "antitrust exception" to the reverse preemption rule. After setting forth the rule, the Act specifically identifies the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, and states that these laws shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN30[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

To determine whether the McCarran-Ferguson Act applies, a court generally begins with the threshold question of whether the federal statute at issue specifically relates to the business of insurance. If it does, the Act does not allow for reverse preemption. If not, then the two remaining questions that must be answered in the affirmative if the federal law is reverse preempted by the state statute are: (1) whether the state statute at issue was enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance; and (2) whether the application of the federal law would invalidate, impair, or supersede' the state statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN31[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The antitrust exception expressly exempts from Sherman Act liability activity that constitutes the "business of insurance" to the extent it is regulated by state law. A defendant in an antitrust case need not show that the Sherman Act would "invalidate, impair, or supersede" a state's regulation. Instead, the court need only find that the activity of which a plaintiff complains constitutes the business of insurance, regulated by state law, and not a boycott. The language of the McCarran-Ferguson Act distinguishes preclusion analysis where antitrust laws are at issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN32[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The U.S. Supreme Court has announced the test for determining whether a particular practice is part of the "business of insurance" exempted from the antitrust laws by 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(b): first, whether the practice had the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry. No one factor is outcome determinative and must be considered along with the whole body of evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN33[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

For the purpose of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, title insurance is "insurance."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN34[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The setting of rates for title insurance premiums satisfies the Supreme Court's definition of the "business of insurance," within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > General Overview

HN35[] Industry Practices, Rate Regulation

See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3935.06.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN36[] Legislation, Interpretation

When there is no state case law construing a state statute, a federal court must predict how the state's highest court would interpret the statute. In Ohio, the essential goal of statutory construction is to give effect to the intent of the General Assembly. The intent may be inferred from the particular wording the General Assembly has chosen to set forth the substantive terms of a statute. Intent may also be revealed in the procedural passage of the legislative act under consideration, when that body passes legislation that enacts, amends, or repeals a statute. Where the lawmaking body declares its own intention in the enactment of a particular law, or defines the sense of the words employed, it is within the exercise of its legislative power, and its own construction of its language should be followed.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN37[] Legislation, Interpretation

Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1.51 provides that if general and special provisions conflict, the specific provision takes precedent as an exception to the general provision unless the legislature provides otherwise.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN38[] Legislation, Interpretation

See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1.51.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN39[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The Ohio Supreme Court has repeatedly noted that the Valentine Act, Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1331.01 et seq., was patterned after the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and has consistently interpreted the Valentine Act in accordance with federal judicial construction of the federal antitrust laws--without regard to when the federal court announced the case law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN40[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is a judgment on the merits, and is therefore done with prejudice.

Counsel: [1] For Jordan Katz, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Bruce K. Cohen, Daniel B. Allanoff, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick, Philadelphia, PA; Christopher L. Lebsock, Michael P. Lehmann, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Hausfeld, San Francisco, CA; Barbara J. Felt, Vincent J. Esades, Heins, Mills & Olson, Minneapolis, MN; Daniel R. Karon, Goldman, Scarlato & Karon - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH; Jennifer Sarnelli, Joseph J. DePalma, Lite DePalma Greenberg & Rivas, Newark, NJ; Todd B. Naylor, Murdock, Goldenberg, Schneider & Groh, Cincinnati, OH.

For Gaby Hasrouni, Plaintiff in Member Case 5:08cv1289, Plaintiff: Aaron M. McParlan, James S. Reece, Michael E. Jacobs, Richard M. Hagstrom, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Zelle, Hofmann, Voelbel, Mason & Gette, Minneapolis, MN; Chris T. Nolan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Perantinides & Nolan, Akron, OH; Daniel B. Allanoff , Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick, Philadelphia, PA; Todd B. Naylor, Murdock, Goldenberg, Schneider & Groh, Cincinnati, OH.

For Gina Hasrouni, Plaintiff in Member Case 5:08cv1289, Plaintiff: Chris T. Nolan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Perantinides & Nolan, Akron, OH; James S. Reece, Michael E. Jacobs, Richard [2] M. Hagstrom, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Zelle, Hofmann, Voelbel, Mason & Gette, Minneapolis, MN; Daniel B. Allanoff, PRO HAC VICE, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick, Philadelphia, PA; Todd B. Naylor, Murdock, Goldenberg, Schneider & Groh, Cincinnati, OH.

For Craig Mintz, Plaintiff in Member Case 1:08cv678, Plaintiff: Anthony D. Shapiro, Steve W. Berman, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Hagens, Berman Sobol, Shapiro, Seattle, WA; Bruce K. Cohen, Daniel B. Allanoff, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Steven J. Greenfogel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick, Philadelphia, PA; Daniel R. Karon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Goldman, Scarlato & Karon - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH; Todd B. Naylor, Murdock, Goldenberg, Schneider & Groh, Cincinnati, OH.

For Sean Nightingale, Plaintiff in Member Case 1:08cv741, Plaintiff: Eugene A. Spector, Jonathan M. Jagher, William G. Caldes, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Jay S. Cohen, PRO HAC VICE, Spector, Roseman, Kodroff & Willis, Philadelphia, PA; Jeffrey S. Goldenberg, John C. Murdock, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Todd B. Naylor, Murdock, Goldenberg, Schneider & Groh, Cincinnati, OH; Daniel B. Allanoff, PRO HAC VICE, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick, Philadelphia, PA.

For Micah [3] Watts, Plaintiff in Member Case 1:08cv803, Plaintiff: Andrew L. Mackerer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mager & Goldstein, Philadelphia, PA; Daniel R. Karon, LEAD ATTORNEY, Goldman, Scarlato & Karon - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH; Jayne A. Goldstein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Shepherd Finkelman Miller & Shah - Weston, Weston, FL; Lee Albert, LEAD ATTORNEY, Murray, Frank & Sailer, New York, NY; Natalie Finkelman Bennett, LEAD ATTORNEY, Shepherd Finkelman Miller & Shah - Media, Media, PA; Roger J. Bernstein, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bernstein Nackman & Feinberg, New York, NY; Daniel B. Allanoff, PRO HAC VICE, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick, Philadelphia, PA; Todd B. Naylor, Murdock, Goldenberg, Schneider & Groh, Cincinnati, OH.

For Carol A. Rhamy, Plaintiff in Member Case 1:08cv750, Plaintiff: Brian P. Kopp, LEAD ATTORNEY, Betras, Maruca, Kopp & Harshman - Canfield, Canfield, OH; Chad A. Carder, Gerald J. Rodos, Jeffrey B. Gittleman, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Barrack, Rodos & Bacine, Philadelphia, PA; Daniel B. Allanoff, PRO HAC VICE, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick, Philadelphia, PA; Todd B. Naylor, Murdock, Goldenberg, Schneider & Groh, Cincinnati, OH.

For Katherine A. Wirkus, Plaintiff in Member Case 1:08cv1021, Plaintiff: [4] David R. Scott, LEAD ATTORNEY, Scott & Scott - Colchester, Colchester, CT; Walter W. Noss, LEAD ATTORNEY, Scott & Scott - Chagrin Falls, Cleveland Heights, OH; Daniel B. Allanoff, PRO HAC VICE, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick, Philadelphia, PA; Todd B. Naylor, Murdock, Goldenberg, Schneider & Groh, Cincinnati, OH.

For Adam C Falkner, Plaintiff in Member Case 1:08cv1836, Plaintiff: Krishna B. Narine, LEAD ATTORNEY, Huntingdon Valley, PA; Christopher J. Gray, New York, NY; Daniel B. Allanoff, PRO HAC VICE, Meredith Cohen Greenfogel & Skirnick, Philadelphia, PA; Kirk G. Smith, Samuel D. Edwards, Shepherd Smith Edwards & Kantas, Houston, TX; Leslie Wybiral, Louis F. Burke, Law Office of Louis F. Burke, New York, NY; Roger W. Van Deusen, Van Deusen & Wagner, Cleveland, OH; Todd B. Naylor, Murdock, Goldenberg, Schneider & Groh, Cincinnati, OH.

For Fidelity National Title Insurance Company, Chicago Title Insurance Company, Ticor Title Insurance Company, Security Union Title Insurance Company, Ticor Title Insurance Company of Florida, Fidelity National Financial, Inc., Commonwealth Land Title Insurance Company, Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation, Defendants: Arthur M. Kaufman, Deborah [5] A. Coleman, Robert J. Fogarty, Steven A. Goldfarb, Hahn, Loeser & Parks - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH; Patricia A. Screen, Brouse McDowell - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH.

For First American Title Insurance Company, United General Title Insurance Company, Ohio Bar Title Insurance Company, Port Lawrence Title and Trust Company, T.A. Title Insurance Company, Censtar Title Insurance Company, First American Corporation, Defendants: James I. Serota, Kenneth A. Lapatine, Stephen L. Saxl, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Greenberg Traurig - New York, New York, NY; Patricia A. Screen, Brouse McDowell - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH.

For Transnation Title Insurance Company, Defendant: Phillip E. Stano, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Sutherland, Asbill & Brennan - Washington, Washington, DC; Tim L. Collins, LEAD ATTORNEY, Brendan R. Doyle, Thomas J. Scanlon, Collins & Scanlon, Cleveland, OH; Arthur M. Kaufman, Deborah A. Coleman, Robert J. Fogarty, Steven A. Goldfarb, Hahn, Loeser & Parks - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH; Patricia A. Screen, Brouse McDowell - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH; Scott Wilson, Collins and Scanlon, Cleveland, OH.

For LandAmerica Financial Group, Inc., Defendant: Phillip E. Stano, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO [6] HAC VICE, Sutherland, Asbill & Brennan - Washington, Washington, DC; Tim L. Collins, LEAD ATTORNEY, Brendan R. Doyle, Thomas J. Scanlon, Collins & Scanlon, Cleveland, OH; Deborah A. Coleman, Hahn, Loeser & Parks - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH; Patricia A. Screen, Brouse McDowell - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH; Scott Wilson, Collins and Scanlon, Cleveland, OH.

For Stewart Title Guaranty Company, National Land Title Insurance Company, Stewart Information Services Corporation, Defendants: David M Foster, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Fulbright & Jaworski - Washington, Washington, DC; Gerard D. Kelly, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Kevin M. Fee, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sidley Austin - Chicago, Chicago, IL; Kerin L. Kaminski, Giffen & Kaminski, Cleveland, OH; Mark A. Robertson, Fulbright & Jaworski - New York, New York, NY; Patricia A. Screen, Brouse McDowell - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH.

For Old Republic National Title Insurance Company, Old Republic International Corporation, Defendants: David G. Greene, Kevin J. Walsh, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Locke Lord Bissell & Liddell - New York, New York, NY; Patricia A. Screen, Brouse McDowell - Cleveland, Cleveland, OH; Russell J. Kutell, Frost Brown Todd - Columbus, [7] Columbus, OH.

Judges: HONORABLE SARA LIOI, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: SARA LIOI

Opinion

[*843] MEMORANDUM OPINION

On September 7, 2009, Magistrate Judge Benita Pearson filed a Report and Recommendation (Doc. No. 102) resolving the Defendants' dispositive motions. Both Plaintiffs and Defendants filed timely objections to the Report. (Doc. Nos. 104 and 105, respectively.)

Upon de novo review of those portions of the Report to which the parties have made objection, this Court hereby ADOPTS, in part, and REJECTS, in part, the Report and Recommendation of the Magistrate Judge. As set forth more fully below, Defendants' Joint Motion (Doc. No. 43) and Defendant Old Republic International Corporation's motion to dismiss (Doc. No. 41) are GRANTED, and these consolidated cases are DISMISSED.

This Court's review of the Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation is [*844] governed by HN1[] 28 U.S.C. § 636(b), which requires a de novo decision as to those portions of the document to which objection is made. Because the parties objected only to those portions of the Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation relating to the application of the filed rated doctrine and the McCarran-Ferguson Act to the claims in the Consolidated Complaint, [8] as well as the manner in which the claims were to be dismissed, the remainder of the Report -- including its account of the factual and procedural history of the case -- is hereby accepted as written. Thus, the Court will only provide a brief review of the facts and procedural posture sufficient to adequately frame the issues presented by the various objections.

BACKGROUND

The named Plaintiffs in these consolidated cases [1] are individuals who have purchased title insurance from certain Defendants at some time between March 2004 and the present. These Plaintiffs seek to bring a class action on behalf of all individuals who have purchased title insurance in Ohio during the relevant time period. (Case No. 1:08CV677, Doc. No. 36, Consolidated Complaint at P 10(a)-(h).) Defendant insurers are alleged to have sold title insurance in Ohio during the relevant period, either directly or through subsidiaries. (Id. at PP 11-19.) Plaintiffs further allege that a number of the Defendant insurers are members of Defendant Ohio Title Insurance Rating Bureau (OTIRB), and that Defendant insurers charge the rates set by the OTIRB for their insurance policies. (Id. at PP 11-19, 21, 24; insurers and OTIRB [9] shall be collectively referred to as "Defendants.")

The Ohio Revised Code governs the sale of title insurance in the State of Ohio, and, particularly, those regulations set forth in Title 39. While a review of the relevant regulations appears in the Magistrate's Report, the Court finds it necessary to briefly sketch out the administrative landscape. HN2[] OHIO REV. CODE § 3935.04(A) requires all title insurers to file with the superintendent of insurance "every form of a policy, endorsement, [10] rider, manual, minimum class rate, rating schedule, or rating plan, and every other rating rule, and every modification of any of them, which it proposes to use." Insurers may satisfy their obligation to make such filings by subscribing to, or becoming a member of, a licensed rating bureau. OHIO REV. CODE § 3935.04(B). The parties agree that OTIRB is a licensed rating bureau under § 3935.04(B).

HN3[] Where insurers belong to a rating bureau, they may permit the bureau to submit on their behalf proposed rates, along with supporting information, for consideration by the Department of Insurance. OHIO REV. CODE §

[1] There are eight cases in all, with the lead case filed on March 18, 2008. (See Case No. 1:08CV677, Doc. No. 1 Class Action Complaint.) The other cases are: 1:08CV678, 1:08CV741, 4:08CV750, 1:08CV803, 1:08CV1021, 5:08CV1289, 1:08CV1836. Originally assigned to the dockets of numerous judges in the Northern District of Ohio, the cases were eventually transferred to the docket of the Hon. David D. Dowd, Jr. The cases were consolidated on July 11, 2008, and Plaintiffs' Consolidated Class Action Complaint was filed on July 31, 2008. Following Judge Dowd's recusal on February 2, 2010, these consolidated cases were reassigned to the undersigned's docket. All docket references are to the lead case: 1:08CV677.

3935.04(A). The superintendant "shall review filings as soon as reasonably possible […]." § 3935.04(C). A proposed rate becomes final thirty (30) days after it is filed, "unless it is disapproved by the superintendent within the waiting period." § 3935.04(D).

During the waiting the period, the superintendant may require the insurer, or its bureau, to submit additional information [*845] in support of its requested rate. He may also find that the filing does not comply with the OHIO REVISED CODE. § 3935.05(B). Once a rate submitted by a bureau has been approved by the Department of Insurance [11] (or has not been disapproved after the expiration of the 30 day waiting period), however, the rate becomes the only legal rate. As such, the insurer members are not permitted to charge a different rate for title insurance, unless the insurer successfully petitions the superintendent for permission to deviate from the filed rate. §§ 3935.04(H); 3935.07.

HN4[] At no time does the State of Ohio relinquish its right to monitor and control the rates charged for title insurance. At any time after the waiting period has expired, the superintendant may find that the filed rate no longer meets the requirements of § 3935.01 to § 3935.17, and he shall, after a hearing and upon due notice, issue a determination that the rate is no longer effective. § 3935.05(C).

Any person or organization aggrieved by a filed rate may submit a written application requesting a hearing before the superintendant. If (after the hearing) the superintendant finds the application to have merit, he shall issue a decision setting forth his reasons for finding that the rate is no longer effective. § 3935.05(D).

At the heart of these consolidated actions is the allegation that Defendants have conspired to fix prices for title insurance [12] in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and Ohio's Valentine Act, Ohio Rev. Code § 1331.01 et seq. (Cons. Compl. at PP 49, 58, 66.) According to Plaintiffs, Defendant insurers use the OTIRB to set and charge "supracompetitive" rates. (Id. at PP 49-50, 52.) Allegedly hidden within these inflated rates are unlawful kickbacks and other charges unrelated to title insurance or the services provided in connection with title insurance. (Id. at PP 49-50.) These allegations form the basis of Plaintiffs' sole causes of action under the Sherman Act ("the federal claims") and the Valentine Act ("the state claims"). Plaintiffs seek damages and injunctive relief for both the federal and state claims.

Defendant Stewart Information Services Corporation (Stewart) filed a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction (Doc. No. 40); Defendant Old Republic International Corporation (Old Republic) moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim under the Sherman and Ohio Valentine Acts, and for improper venue and personal jurisdiction (Doc. No. 41); and all Defendants filed a joint motion to dismiss on the grounds that Plaintiffs' claims were barred by the filed rate doctrine and by the [13] McCarran-Ferguson Act (Doc. No. 43). The Court permitted Plaintiffs to conduct limited discovery prior to responding to these dispositive motions.

Once fully briefed, the motions were referred to Magistrate Judge Benita Pearson for the preparation of a Report and Recommendation. The Magistrate Judge conducted a hearing on the motions on May 26, 2009. Thereafter, she issued a Report and Recommendation, wherein she recommended that Defendants' joint motion be granted on the grounds that the federal and state antitrust claims were barred by the filed rate doctrine and/or the McCarran-Ferguson Act, and that Old Republic's motion to dismiss be granted on the ground that Plaintiffs failed to state a claim against it. She also recommended that all corporate parent Defendants be dismissed without prejudice, that both of the claims in the Consolidated Complaint be dismissed without prejudice against the remaining Defendants, and that Stewart's motion be denied as moot. (Report at 56.)

Plaintiffs object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that their claims are barred by the filed rate doctrine and/or [*846] the McCarran-Ferguson Act. Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation that the [14] claims be dismissed without prejudice. The Court heard oral argument on the objections on December 17, 2009. After the hearing, the Court permitted the parties to file supplemental briefs. (Doc. No. 115, Exs. 1, 2.) Now, with the benefit of multiple hearings and the parties' extensive briefing, the Court is prepared to rule.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Defendants bring their joint motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). [2] HN5[] When reviewing a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the Court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept all well-pleaded factual allegations as true, and determine whether the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Commer. Money Ctr., Inc. v. Ill. Union Ins. Co., 508 F.3d 327, 336 (6th Cir. 2007) (citing United States v. Moriarty, 8 F.3d 329, 332 (6th Cir. 1993)). To survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the complaint must contain "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "Although this is a liberal pleading standard, it requires more than the bare assertion of legal conclusions. Rather, the complaint must contain [15] either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory." First Am. Title Co. v. DeVaugh, 480 F.3d 438, 444 (6th Cir. 2007) (quoting Se. Tex. Inns, Inc. v. Prime Hospitality Corp., 462 F.3d 666, 671-72 (6th Cir. 2006)).

ANALYSIS

I. THE FILED RATE DOCTRINE

HN6[] The filed rate doctrine [3] precludes an award of damages under antitrust laws where recovery is premised on payments made under rates approved by a regulatory agency. In her Report and Recommendation, the Magistrate Judge held the filed rate doctrine applied to preclude both Plaintiffs' federal and state claims for damages, but did not operate to bar Plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief.

In their objection, Defendants assert that the filed rate doctrine bars Plaintiffs' causes [16] of actions in their entirety, including Plaintiffs' claims for injunctive relief. In their objections, Plaintiffs first claim that the filed rate doctrine is inapplicable to the Ohio title insurance industry. Alternatively, Plaintiffs claim that the filed rate doctrine is inapplicable to this case because Defendants' rate filings do not comply with Ohio's rate filing requirements. Finally, Plaintiffs assert that even if the filed rate doctrine bars their claims for damages, it does not bar their claims for injunctive relief. Each of these arguments is addressed seriatim.

Application of The Filed Rate Doctrine to the Ohio Title Insurance Industry is Appropriate

Keogh, Square D, and the Continued Vitality of the Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine made its first substantial appearance in an antitrust context in 1922, in Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 43 S. Ct. 47, 67 L. Ed. 183 (1922). In Keogh, the Supreme Court held that a private shipper could not maintain a cause of action [*847] against an association of freight carriers that had collectively agreed on shipping rates that had been filed with, and approved by, the Interstate Commerce Commission ("ICC") under authority derived by the Interstate [17] Commerce Act ("ICA"). Id. at 161. The rates were approved by the ICC as reasonable and non-discriminatory, and were therefore legal under the ICA. Id. The Court reasoned that once the ICC approved the rate, it became legal -- and a legal rate is not actionable as an antitrust injury, even if the rate resulted from an illegal combination of the carriers to fix rates. Id. at 162-3 ("A rate is not necessarily illegal because it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the [Sherman] Act. What rates are legal is determined by the [ICA].").

---

[2] Stewart brings its motion under Rule 12(b)(2), while Old Republic relies upon Rule 12(b)(2), (3), and (6). Because the Court's ruling is largely guided by its application of Rule 12(b)(6), the Court will not devote space to setting forth the standards for the other relevant provisions of Rule 12.

[3] Interchangeably referred to by courts as the Keogh doctrine, or the filed tariff doctrine.

In Keogh, the Supreme Court reasoned that if it were to grant relief based on an antitrust violation, the authority of the ICC would be undermined. Id. at 164 ("The powers conferred upon the Commission are broad. It may investigate and decide whether a rate has been, whether it is, or whether it would be discriminatory."). Moreover, granting relief would require a court to speculate as to what the proper rate should be, a task for which courts are ill-suited. Id. Finally, an antitrust remedy in the form of damages would be discriminatory, providing relief to plaintiffs, but not to other consumers, which was contrary to the ICA's [18] goal of uniform rates. Id. at 163.

The filed rate doctrine is not without its critics. In Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, 476 U.S. 409, 106 S. Ct. 1922, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413 (1986), the Supreme Court recognized that, as extensively noted by Judge Friendly in the Second Circuit decision under review, several developments had undermined the reasoning of Keogh in the six decades since its pronouncement. For example, the Court acknowledged:

> the development of class actions, which might alleviate the expressed concern about unfair rebates; the emergence of precedents permitting treble-damages remedies even when there is a regulatory remedy available; the greater sophistication in evaluating damages, which might mitigate the expressed fears about the speculative nature of such damages; and the development of procedures in which judicial proceedings can be stayed pending regulatory proceedings.

Square D, 476 U.S. at 423 (citing Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc., 760 F.2d 1347, 1356 (2d Cir. 1985) (Friendly, J.)). While the Court praised Judge Friendly's analysis as "characteristically thoughtful and incisive," it declined his invitation to overrule Keogh and instead reaffirmed the filed rate doctrine [19] on stare decisis grounds for the sake of stability in the law. "If there is to be an overruling of the Keogh rule, it must come from Congress, rather than from this Court." Square D, 476 U.S. at 424. Other courts that have questioned the filed rate doctrine have also adhered to it stare decisis principles. See, e.g., Security Servs. v. Kmart Corp., 511 U.S. 431, 440, 114 S. Ct. 1702, 128 L. Ed. 2d 433 (1994) (holding that the filed rate doctrine is "not subject to discretionary enforcement" even though "some may debate in other forums about [its] wisdom"); Goldwasser v. Ameritech Corp., 222 F.3d 390, 402 (7th Cir. 2000) (applying filed rate doctrine in a telecommunications act case, noting that "[a]lthough the doctrine had come under some criticism, the Supreme Court reaffirmed it in Square D [], and we are bound to follow it."). The Sixth Circuit, in one of its few opinions that addresses the filed rate doctrine, commented on Square D as follows:

> [*848] We do not read [Square D's] deferential language as an adoption of Judge Friendly's rationale, for on its face it is a polite refusal of an invitation. Since the Supreme Court did in fact uphold the ruling in Keogh we construe its cited language to be that the Keogh rationale, [20] whatever else might be said of it, still commands, in the Supreme Court's view, the support of Congress. Justice Stevens emphasized "Keogh's role as an essential element of the settled legal context in which Congress has repeatedly acted in this area." Square D, 106 S. Ct. at 1930. Furthermore, we do not believe that either Keogh or Square D was intended to be limited solely to antitrust damage claims brought by shippers.

Pinney Dock & Transp. Co. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1452 (6th Cir. 1988). Although free to do so, Congress has not acted to abrogate the filed rate doctrine. [4]

---

[4] Cf. Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 65 S. Ct. 716, 89 L. Ed. 1051 (1945). The Reed-Bulwinkle Act was enacted at least in part in response to Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 65 S. Ct. 716, 89 L. Ed. 1051 (1945). In Pennsylvania R. Co., the Supreme Court restated Keogh and held that, "although Georgia could not maintain a suit under the antitrust laws to obtain damages, it could obtain injunctive relief against the collective ratemaking procedures employed by the railroads." Square D, 476 U.S. at 418. The Reed-Bulwinkle Act created an absolute immunity from the antitrust laws for certain specific activities, including the one at issue [21] in Pennsylvania R. Co., and thereby superseded that holding. Square D rejected the contention that Keogh "was implicitly rejected in the Reed-Bulwinkle Act" and rather held that "[p]articularly because the legislative history reveals clear congressional awareness of Keogh, far from supporting petitioners' position, the fact that Congress specifically addressed this area and left Keogh undisturbed lends powerful support to Keogh's continued viability." Id. at 419.

Plaintiffs Misapprehend the Nature of the Filed Rate Doctrine

In their opposition, Plaintiffs correctly assert that the filed rate doctrine has never been applied to the Ohio title insurance industry. While Plaintiffs acknowledge that the Supreme Court has applied the filed rate doctrine to areas outside the ICC, see AT &T Co. v. Central Office Tele., Inc., 524 U.S. 214, 118 S. Ct. 1956, 141 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1998) (applying the filed rate doctrine to the Communications Act, noting that its provisions "share [the ICC's] goal of preventing unreasonable and discriminatory charges"); Ark. La. Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 (1981) (applying filed rate doctrine based upon rates filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission), they insist that an extension of the filed [22] rate doctrine to the Ohio title insurance industry is improper because the Supreme Court "has repeatedly held that implied exemptions to antitrust liability are strongly disfavored." (Doc. No. 77 at 17.) Plaintiffs also correctly argue that "[r]epeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are strongly disfavored, and have only been found in cases of plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350-51, 83 S. Ct. 1715, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915 (1963). While Plaintiffs are correct in their general assertion, and courts indeed must be extremely reluctant to imply antitrust immunity, Plaintiffs fundamentally misapprehend the nature of the filed rate doctrine, which is not an immunity at all.

HN7[] The filed rate doctrine does not create an antitrust immunity. Square D squarely rejected the proposition, advanced by petitioners in that case, that the filed rate doctrine is properly characterized as an immunity. [5] Square D, 476 U.S. [*849] at 422 (stating that Keogh's holding that an award of damages is not an available remedy claiming that a filed rate was the product of an antitrust violation "is far different from the creation of an antitrust [23] immunity"). "A critical distinction remains between an absolute immunity from all antitrust scrutiny and a far more limited nonavailability of the private treble-damages remedy." Id. at 422 n.28 (emphasis in original). The filed rate doctrine is merely a judicially created restriction on remedies and standing under which private plaintiffs are barred from suing for a damage recovery. It does not preclude injunctive relief [6] or prohibit the Government from seeking civil or criminal redress. Therefore, this Court rejects Plaintiffs' contention that applying the filed rate doctrine to the Ohio title insurance industry would be an impermissible extension of antitrust immunity. [7]

---

[5] Thus, the filed rate doctrine is different than the State Action Doctrine, sometimes called the Parker State Action Doctrine, which holds that state-mandated or state-directed restraints are exempted from antitrust liability, see Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), and the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, which immunizes from antitrust liability those who petition the federal or state government to take actions that may impose restraints on trade. See, e.g., Eastern R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961).

[6] Although [24] it may in certain circumstances, as discussed infra.

[7] As noted by the Magistrate Judge in her Report and Recommendation (Doc. No. 102 at 18-19), federal courts have long applied the Filed rate doctrine to a wide spectrum of insurance actions. See, e.g., Rios v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 469 F.Supp.2d 727, 737 (S.D. Iowa 2007) (applying filed rate doctrine to common law claim seeking return of insurance premiums); Mullinax v. Radian Guar. Inc., 311 F. Supp. 2d 474, 484 n.6 (M.D.N.C. 2004) (filing of rate by defendant with state Department of Insurance bars plaintiffs from challenging reasonableness of those rates); Kirksey v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co., 114 F. Supp. 2d 526, 529 (S.D. Miss. 2000) (applying filed rate doctrine to common law claim seeking return of insurance premiums); *Stevens v. Union Planters Corp., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22630, 2000 WL 33128256, at 3 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 20, 2000) (allegation of kickbacks in forced hazard insurance scheme barred by filed rate doctrine); Allen v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 59 F. Supp. 2d 1217, 1229 (S.D. Ala.1999) (filed rate doctrine barred claim challenging unlawfulness of rate filing by insurance company); Korte v. Allstate Ins. Co., 48 F. Supp. 2d 647, 651 (E.D. Tex. 1999) [25] (applying filed rate doctrine to claim asserting insurance rates improper due to submission by defendant of illegal subsidy factor accounts to state insurance regulator because state agency determined reasonable rates pursuant to statutory scheme); Morales v. Attorney's Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 983 F. Supp. 1418, 1429 (S.D. Fla. 1997) (dismissing plaintiffs' kickback claim against title insurer pursuant to filed rate doctrine because claim was nothing more than challenge to title insurance rates set by state regulators); *Calico Trailer Mfg. Co., Inc. v. Ins. Co. Of N. Am., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20750, 1994 WL 823554 at 6 (E.D. Ark. Oct. 12, 1994) (filed rate doctrine barred plaintiffs' challenge to insurance rates as inflated as result of conspiracy among defendant insurance companies).

Nonjusticiability and Nondiscrimination: The Policies Underlying the Filed Rate Doctrine Support its Application to the Ohio Title Insurance Industry

HN8[] "[T]wo companion principles lie at the core of the filed rate doctrine: first, that legislative bodies design agencies for the specific purpose of setting uniform rates, and second, that courts are not institutionally well suited to engage in retroactive rate setting." Wegoland Ltd. v. NYNEX Corp., 27 F.3d 17, 19 (2d Cir. 1994). [26] Under the first, the "nonjusticiability" principle, the filed rate doctrine "preserve[s] the regulating agency's authority to determine the reasonableness of rates," H.J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 954 F.2d 485, 488 (8th Cir. 1992). Under the second, the "nondiscrimination" principle, the filed rate doctrine "insure[s] that the regulated entities charge only those rates that the agency has approved or been made aware of as the law may require." Id. The filed rate [*850] doctrine "is applied strictly to prevent a plaintiff from bringing a cause of action even in the face of apparent inequities whenever either the nondiscrimination strand or the nonjusticiability strand underlying the doctrine is implicated by the cause of action the plaintiff seeks to pursue." Marcus v. AT&T Corp., 138 F.3d 46, 59 (2d Cir. 1998) (emphasis added). This Court therefore turns to determine whether or not either of the principles underlying the filed rate doctrine are implicated here.

a) Nonjusticiability

Defendants maintain that Plaintiffs' asserted request for relief "would inescapably require this Court to make a new determination of what the multitude of different title insurance rates would have been [27] absent Defendants' alleged 'illegal conduct.'" (Doc. No. 115-2 at p. 30.) As to Plaintiffs' request for damages, this Court agrees.

HN9[] The nonjusticiability principle preserves an important purpose of the filed rate doctrine: to prohibit courts from second-guessing a regulating agency's determination as to the reasonableness of a given rate. "As compared with the expertise of regulating agencies, courts do not approach the same level of institutional competence to ascertain reasonable rates." Wegoland, 27 F.3d at 21. "Courts are simply ill-suited to systematically second guess the regulators' decisions and overlay their own resolution." Id. This doctrine therefore precludes claims for damages where a court would be required to substitute "its judgment as to reasonable rates for that of an agency with specialized knowledge of the area." County of Suffolk v. Long Island Power Auth., 154 F. Supp. 2d 380, 385 (E.D.N.Y. 2000).

Turning to the specifics of this case, Plaintiffs' claim for damages is addressed in paragraph 68 of their complaint:

> During the period of the antitrust violations by defendants and their coconspirators, plaintiffs and each member of the Class they represent, have purchased [28] title insurance and, by reason of the antitrust violations herein alleged, paid more for such than would have been paid in the absence of said antitrust violations. As a result, plaintiffs and each member of the Class they represent, have been injured and damaged in an amount presently undetermined.

(Doc. No. 36 at P 68.) [8] At the December 17, 2009 oral argument, Judge Dowd pointedly asked counsel for Plaintiffs to explain their theory on damages:

> THE COURT: Right. I don't have this question on here, but if [t]he Court were to determine this case could go forward and that eventually plaintiffs would prevail, it would be in a class action structure, the individual plaintiffs would be entitled to some recovery? Play out for me how this case would work out in terms of remedy.
> MR. COHEN: Bruce Cohen, Your Honor.
> THE COURT: Go ahead.

---

[8] The Court notes that the Plaintiffs' theory that lower prices would necessarily result absent the asserted 'antitrust violations' is by no means a certainty. See, e.g, Scott Harrington, Competition and Health Insurance, Wall Street J., Nov. 6, 2009 (analyzing recent Congressional proposals to remove antitrust exemptions in the healthcare insurance industry and suggesting that, [31] contrary to popular belief, prohibiting collaboration between insurers might actually cause premiums to increase rather than fall).

MR. COHEN: It would depend [on] the way the case went forward, Your Honor. If Your Honor were to find that the filed rate doctrine does not apply in Ohio title insurance and if Your Honor found McCarran-Ferguson was not applicable [*851] and we went forward on the damage case, at that point--
THE COURT: You still have to show conspiracy.

MR. COHEN: That would be a matter [29] of proof because we alleged an antitrust violation in section 1. So we go forward and should we prevail, then there would be a damage analysis, damage finding.
THE COURT: First off, there would have to be a finding of conspiracy.
MR. COHEN: There are three elements for a Section 1 case. There's a finding of conspiracy, a finding of impact from the conspiracy, and finding of damages.
THE COURT: Right.
MR. COHEN: The class would go forward on that basis. There would be a damage finding if we were successful and --
THE COURT: How would you establish damage?
MR. COHEN: By expert testimony.
THE COURT: What the rates should have been had there been competition?
MR. COHEN: At this point I haven't gotten that far into it.
THE COURT: I'm trying to figure out.

(Doc. No. 114, Transcript from December 17, 2009 oral argument (hereinafter designated as "TR at __") at 82-83.) The Court ordered each side to simultaneously submit post-hearing memorandums, with no page restrictions and no content restrictions. (Id. at 101-102.) Plaintiffs offered no additional argument as to how damages might be calculated absent an inquiry into the reasonableness of the rates determined by the Ohio Department of Insurance. [30] Plaintiffs' attempt to avoid this difficult question is telling, and the answer is inescapable. As alleged repeatedly in their complaint, and reiterated multiple times in pleadings and at oral argument, Plaintiffs' theory is that Defendants' illegal conduct caused Plaintiffs to pay higher title insurance rates, instead of what the rate would have been "in the absence of said antitrust violations." The only way to quantify this harm would require this Court, at some point in the future and assuming liability is proven, to make a determination of "what the rate would have been." This quantification is the very relief the filed rate doctrine expressly forbids. Therefore, because Plaintiffs' complaint implicates the nonjusticiability principle, the filed rate doctrine applies to preclude their claim for damages.

b) Nondiscrimination

As discussed above, HN10[] the filed rate doctrine applies "whenever either the nondiscrimination strand or the nonjusticiability strand underlying [it] is implicated by the cause of action the plaintiff seeks to pursue." Dolan v. Fid. Nat'l Title Ins. Co., No. 09-2697-cv, 365 Fed. Appx. 271, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 2814 (2d Cir. Feb. 11, 2010) (citing Marcus, 138 F.3d at 59). Therefore, the Court's conclusion that the nonjusticiability principle is implicated by Plaintiffs' complaint is sufficient alone to apply the filed rate doctrine. The Court also finds, however, that nondiscrimination concerns are implicated and will briefly address that principle here.

HN11[] The nondiscrimination principle underlying the filed rate doctrine holds that allowing a court to bind a regulated entity to a rate that was neither filed nor found to be reasonable would undermine legislative schemes premised upon uniform rate regulation. Ark. La. Gas Co. 453 U.S. at 579. In Marcus, the Second Circuit observed that "the Supreme Court has rejected the suggestion that the development of class [32] actions, which might alleviate the [. . .] concern about nondiscrimination, made the nondiscrimination principle [of the filed-rate doctrine] inapplicable to a putative class action." 138 F.3d at 61 (internal quotation marks & alterations omitted) (citing Square D, 476 U.S. at 423). [*852] The Ninth Circuit has similarly "reject[ed] the argument that the filed-rate doctrine is inapplicable to class actions." Enns v. NOS Communs. (In re NOS Communs.), 495 F.3d 1052, 1059 (9th Cir. 2007).

The filed rate doctrine serves the purpose of nondiscrimination by prohibiting a court from entering a judgment that would serve to alter the rate paid by a plaintiff. See Hill v. BellSouth Telecomms., Inc., 364 F.3d 1308, 1316 (11th Cir. 2004). "Even if such a challenge does not, in theory, attack the filed rate, an award of damages to the customer-plaintiff would, effectively, change the rate paid by the customer to one below the filed rate paid by other customers." Id. Therefore, no claim can be permitted to go forward that, "if successful, would require an award of damages that would have the effect of imposing different rates upon different consumers." Bryan v. BellSouth Comm's., 377 F.3d 424, 430 (4th Cir. 2004).

In [33] this case, it is undisputed that Defendants are only permitted to charge the filed rate approved by the Department of Insurance, OHIO REV. CODE § 3935.04(H), such rates having been reviewed by the Department to ensure that the rates "shall not be excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory." § 3935.03(B). Examining Plaintiffs' allegations reveals that, if Plaintiffs succeed in their claims for damages, Defendants "would, in essence, be forced to refund to [Plaintiffs] the amount allegedly overcharged." Taffet v. Southern Co., 967 F.2d 1483, 1491 (11th Cir. 1992) (Taffet II). While this Court recognizes that "concerns for discrimination are substantially alleviated in [a] putative class action," Wegoland, 27 F.3d at 22, those concerns, albeit diminished, still exist. See Marcus and In re NOS Communs., supra. Therefore, Plaintiffs' complaint also implicates the nondiscrimination principle, and the filed rate doctrine applies to preclude their claim for damages on this independent ground as well.

Plaintiffs' Contentions that the Filed Rate Doctrine is Inapplicable Because the Ohio Department of Insurance Conducts "No Meaningful Review" of Filed Rates and the Ohio Title Insurance [34] Scheme is not a "Pervasive Regulatory Regime" are Without Merit

Plaintiffs next argue that the filed rate doctrine should not be applied to the Ohio title insurance industry because the Ohio "regulatory regime [is] not sufficiently pervasive to ensure adequate regulatory oversight of those rates" and "there is no attempt by the [Ohio Department of Insurance] to meaningfully regulate title insurance filings." (Doc. No. 77 at p. 19.) The Court disagrees.

c) The Filed Rate Doctrine Applies Regardless of the Level of Agency Review

HN12[] The Supreme Court has rejected the argument that the filed rate doctrine can only be predicated on a minimum level of agency review. In Square D, the Supreme Court rejected the petitioner's contention that the filed rate doctrine was inapplicable due to the fact that, unlike Keogh, no ICC hearing reviewing the rate had been held. The Court held that the Second Circuit decision "properly concluded that Keogh was not susceptible to such a narrow reading," Square D, 476 U.S. at 417 n.19, and approvingly cited Judge Friendly's decision: "Rather than limiting its holding to cases where, as in Keogh, rates had been investigated and approved by the ICC, the Court said [35] broadly that shippers could not recover treble-damages for overcharges whenever tariffs have been filed." Id. (quoting Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc., 760 F.2d 1347, 1351 (2d Cir. 1985)) (emphasis added). Thus, it is the filing of the rates with the regulating [*853] agency that triggers the filed rate doctrine, not any minimum level of review undertaken by the agency.

Square D's decision to apply the filed rate doctrine irrespective of the level of agency review has been widely followed by other federal courts. In Goldwasser, the Seventh Circuit rejected the notion that the filed rate doctrine does not apply because a reviewing agency "rarely exercise[s] [its] muscle and thus give[s] no meaningful review to the rate structure." Goldwasser, 222 F.3d at 402. Going even further, the First Circuit explained that "it is the filing of the tariffs, and not any affirmative approval or scrutiny by the agency, [. . .] that triggers the filed rate doctrine." Town of Norwood v. New England Power Co., 202 F.3d 408, 420 (1st Cir. 2000) (emphasis in original). A district court in this circuit, under the assumption that "rates were never subjected to meaningful agency review," drew [36] on Square D and held that "[e]ven so, the filed rate doctrine retains a sound basis. It applies to all duly submitted, lawful rates regardless of the extent of the regulatory agency's inquiry into the appropriateness of those rates." Daleure v. Kentucky, 119 F. Supp. 2d 683, 689 (W.D. Ky. 2000) (emphasis added). See also In re Pa. Title Ins. Antitrust Litig., 648 F. Supp. 2d 663, 675 (E.D. Pa. 2009) (holding that where the statutory scheme provides for agency review of title insurance rates, "the filed rate doctrine applies irrespective of the degree of agency inquiry, scrutiny, or exercise of regulatory muscle").

Plaintiffs contend that two Ninth Circuit decisions, Wileman Bros. & Elliott, Inc. v. Giannini, 909 F.2d 332 (9th Cir. 1990), and Brown v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 982 F.2d 386 (9th Cir. 1992) (which relies primarily on Wileman Bros.), dictate a different conclusion. In Wileman Bros., nectarine and plum producers served as members or employees of administrative committees appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture to issue and enforce standards for marketing nectarines and plums. "The committee members promulgated the regulations themselves rather than making recommendations to [37] the Secretary." Brown, 982 F.2d at 393 (citing Wileman Bros., 909 F.2d at 337). The Ninth Circuit rejected defendants' contention that, under the statutory scheme, "the Secretary tacitly approved the [filed rate] by failing to disapprove them as provided for in the regulations governing the committees." Wileman Bros., 909 F.2d at 337. The statute in question, 7 C.F.R. § 917.62, provided "[e]ach and every regulation, decision, determination, or other act of the committee shall be subject to the continuing right of the Secretary to disapprove of the same at any time."

The Ninth Circuit held that Square D and Keogh mandated that "governmental approval was required before there could be any effect from the collective activity and it was such approval that legitimized the allotments and the rates." Wileman Bros. 909 F.2d at 337-38. The court continued to hold that "the mere fact of failure to disapprove, however, does not legitimize otherwise anticompetitive conduct [. . .]. [Nondisapproval] does not guarantee any level of review whatsoever." [9] Id.

The Ohio title insurance scheme is readily distinguishable from the Agricultural Marketing Agreement and Act of 1937 at issue in Wileman Bros. The Ohio title insurance does mandate that proposed rates become final thirty days after being filed "unless disapproved by the superintendent within the waiting period." OHIO REV. CODE. § 3935.04(H). [*854] But unlike the statute in Wileman Bros., the Ohio statutory scheme demands an affirmative duty of the superintendent. The superintendent "shall review filings as soon as reasonably possible." § 3935.04(C) (emphasis added). While the agricultural marketing statute in Wileman Bros. gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to review the committee's filings, review of rates submitted by the rating bureaus in Ohio to the Department of Insurance is mandated. While rates become effective "unless disapproved by the superintendent within the waiting period," the superintendent's affirmative duty to review rate filings warrants the conclusion that rates that become effective as a result of approval by the Department of Insurance, and not as the [39] result of the "mere fact of failure to disapprove." [10]

Brown v. Ticor Title Insurance involved Arizona and Wisconsin title insurance regulations which permitted the filing of rates by rating bureaus. Relying on Wileman Bros. (and failing to even mention Square D), the Ninth Circuit held:

> if those rates were the product of unlawful activity prior to their being filed and were not subjected to meaningful review by the state, then the fact that they were filed does not render them immune from challenge. The absence of meaningful state review allows the insurers to file any rates they want. Therefore, the act of filing does not legitimize a rate arrived at by improper action.
>
> The regulations of Arizona and Wisconsin require only "non-disapproval" of the rates and do not require compliance with strict guidelines such as those set forth under the ICC regulations. This case falls within the holding of Wileman, and we therefore hold the filed tariff doctrine is [40] not applicable under either the Arizona or Wisconsin regulatory schemes.

Brown, 982 F.2d at 394. In the first instance, other than stating the regulations require only "non-disapproval and do not require compliance with strict guidelines" Brown offers no meaningful discussion of either the Arizona or Wisconsin regulatory schemes and is nearly devoid of analysis. Given Brown's exclusive reliance on Wileman Bros. and its conclusion that "this case falls within the holding of Wileman," however, one reasonable conclusion is that the Arizona and Wisconsin regulatory schemes at issue do not require any affirmative review by an agency whatsoever. As discussed above, however, the Ohio statutory scheme clearly contemplates more than mere non-

---

[9] The court in Wileman Bros. also suggested that, although it could not consider it on a motion to dismiss, "evidence of participation [in the [38] non-disapproval process] by representatives of the Secretary" might suffice to apply the Filed rate doctrine.

[10] Indeed, approval by the superintendent is clearly what the statute comprehends: "[. . .] the superintendent may authorize a filing which he has reviewed to become effective before the expiration of the waiting period." § 3935.04(D).

disapproval by the Department of Insurance. Moreover, the Ohio statutory scheme requires compliance with strict guidelines. See OHIO REV. CODE. § 3935.03 (detailing regulations as to how "rates shall be made") and § 3935.04(C) (requiring the superintendent to "review filings as soon as reasonably possible after they have been made in order to determine whether they meet the requirements of sections 3935.01 to 3935.17"). While Brown characterized the Arizona [41] and Wisconsin regulatory schemes as lacking meaningful state review, which it interpreted to mean allowing "insurers [to] file any rate they want," the Ohio regulatory scheme would clearly disallow such filings. § 3935.03(B) ("Rates shall not be excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory."). Finally, to the extent Brown even warrants any consideration from this Court, it is clearly an outlier case. McCray v. Fid. Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 636 F. Supp. 2d 322, 329 (D. Del. 2009) ("Other [*855] than the Ninth Circuit in Brown, no other court has taken such a narrow view of the applicability of the filed rate doctrine.").

Plaintiffs also rely on Blaylock v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 504 F. Supp. 2d 1091 (W.D. Wash. 2007). In Blaylock, the court declined to apply the filed rate doctrine to a challenge to practices by the Washington title insurance industry under state antitrust law. Again, Blaylock is easily distinguishable from this case. In Washington, "title insurance is specifically exempted" from the comprehensive scheme for setting insurance premiums generally, and, "[c]omparatively, title insurance rates are subjected to a relatively superficial system of regulation." Blaylock, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1095-96. [42] "The most salient difference is that the Code does not require the [Office of the Insurance Commissioner] to review title insurance rates. Although the rates are submitted, and the Commissioner has 15 days in which review could occur before the rates go into effect, the Code does not actually mandate review." Id. (emphasis added). As discussed above, however, the Ohio title insurance scheme mandates affirmative review by the superintendent.

At most, Wileman Bros., Brown, and Blaylock stand for the proposition that where no review is mandated by a statutory scheme, the filed rate doctrine may be inapplicable. Even if true, the Ohio title insurance regulatory scheme's mandate of affirmative review of filed rates by the superintendent distinguishes it from the schemes in those cases. The Sixth Circuit has not ruled on whether "meaningful review" is a predicate for applying the filed rate doctrine to a regulatory scheme. This Court believes that the reasoning of cases that opine that HN13[] it is unnecessary for a rate to undergo a certain "meaningful" level of scrutiny to fall within the gambit of the filed rate doctrine very persuasive, believes the Sixth Circuit would so hold, and hereby adopts [43] that view. This view is consistent with the overarching nonjusticiability policy underlying the filed rate doctrine. Just as courts do not have the "same level of institutional competence to ascertain reasonable rates," see Wegoland, supra, nor are courts well-suited to make ex post inquiries as to whether or not an agency's review of a particular rate was "meaningful." Defining the contours of an agency's review of a filed rate is a task best left to the legislative branch. Therefore, even assuming as true Plaintiffs' contention that the Ohio Department of Insurance's level of review, which clearly and unlike Wileman Bros. contemplates more than mere non-disapproval, does not "meaningfully regulate title insurance filings," the filed rate doctrine still applies.

d) The Ohio Statutory Scheme Provides the Department of Insurance With the Authority to Review Rates

HN14[] Defining the contours of an agency's review of a filed rate is an inappropriate area for a court's inquiry. But for a court to consider a rate to be a "filed rate," the statutory scheme must provide the regulatory agency with the authority to deem a rate "filed," that is, to assess the rates' compliance with statutory requirements [44] for filed rates. See Tex. Commer. Energy v. TXU Energy, Inc., 413 F.3d 503, 510 (5th Cir. 2005) (applying filed rate doctrine to statutory scheme because the scheme provided agency "oversight over the market [] sufficient to conclude that [the rates in question] are 'filed' within the meaning of the filed rate doctrine"); Town of Norwood, 202 F.3d at 419 (holding market-based rates are still "filed rates" for purposes of the filed rate doctrine because agency "is still responsible for ensuring 'just and reasonable' rates and, to that end, wholesale power rates continue to be filed and subject to agency review"). Compare Williams v. Duke Energy Int'l, Inc., 606 F. Supp. 2d 783, 790-791 (S.D. Ohio 2009) (hypothesizing that if an agency did [*856] not have "the authority to determine whether the rates are discriminatory or involve unlawful discounting of charges [. . .] the filed rate doctrine would be inapplicable").

Plaintiffs do not dispute the mechanics of the Ohio title insurance scheme as discussed by the Court, supra, but contend that courts refuse to apply the filed rate doctrine to situations where there is "no pervasive regulatory regime." While Plaintiffs never inform the Court what [45] exactly a "pervasive regulatory regime" might entail, Plaintiffs suggest that Hanson v. Acceleration Life Ins. Co., No. A3-97-152, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23298, 1999 WL 33283345 (D.N.D. May 20, 1999) (unpublished) is informative. In Hanson, the court declined to apply the filed rate doctrine to the North Dakota long-term care insurance scheme. The court in Hanson noted the uncontroversial principle that the underlying conduct of the defendant "does not control whether the filed rate doctrine applies. Rather the focus for determining whether the filed rate doctrine applies is the impact the court's decision will have on agency procedures and rate determinations." H.J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 954 F.2d 485, 489 (8th Cir. 1992). The court then determined that, under the North Dakota code, "there is a lack of statutory language requiring approval of rate increases" and "[s]imply put, the North Dakota Insurance Commissioner does not have the authority to establish long term care insurance policy rates." *Hanson, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23298, 1999 WL 33283345 at 4. Against this backdrop, the court in Hanson's conclusion that the filed rate doctrine was inapplicable is hardly surprising and is consistent with Tex. Commer. Energy and Town of Norwood, supra.

Under [46] the North Dakota statutory scheme, neither of the underlying principles of the filed rate doctrine is implicated. First, long-term care insurance providers were not required to adhere to any rate, but instead could increase rates without the approval of the insurance commissioner. This obviates any concerns surrounding the applicability of the nondiscrimination principle of the filed rate doctrine, which "insure[s] that the regulated entities charge only those rates that the agency has approved or been made aware of as the law may require." H.J., 954 F.2d at 488. Second, where an agency has no authority to establish rates, there are no nonjusticiability concerns -- a court need not worry about "second-guessing" a regulating agency's reasonableness determination when that agency is not permitted to make the "first guess" at all.

Plaintiffs' attempt to analogize a statute where the "regulating" agency in question need not approve, and does not have the authority to establish, insurance rates to the Ohio title insurance scheme fails, and fails miserably. The Ohio title insurance scheme clearly gives the Department of Insurance the authority to assess rates' compliance with statutory requirements. [47] The superintendent is specifically tasked with determining whether the rates are excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory. It is this authority that allows this Court to consider an Ohio title insurance rate a "filed rate." See Tex. Commer. Energy, 413 F.3d at 510. Therefore, this Court rejects Plaintiffs' unsupported contention that application of the filed rate doctrine is inappropriate because the Ohio title insurance scheme is "not sufficiently pervasive."

No "Fraud or Wrongful Act" or "Improperly Filed" Exception Exists to Preclude the Application of the Filed Rate Doctrine to Plaintiffs' Action for Damages

Plaintiffs next argue that the filed rate doctrine should not be applied to the Ohio title insurance regulatory scheme because (1) the rates submitted by the title insurance companies are fraudulent and (2) the [*857] rates submitted by the title insurance companies do not comply with Ohio requirements. Neither argument holds merit.

e) No Fraud or Wrongful Act Exception Applies to the Filed Rate Doctrine

Plaintiffs allege that "[d]efendants' design in all of this has been to effectively 'hide' the cost basis for their artificially high and collective title insurance premiums [48] from the regulatory scrutiny that Ticor demands." (Am. Compl., Doc. No. 36 at P 50.) Even assuming as true that the rates submitted by the Defendant were fraudulent or the product of unlawful conduct, the filed rate doctrine still applies to bar Plaintiffs' claim for damages.

The Supreme Court has not specifically addressed whether or not a fraudulent conduct or wrongful act exception applies to the filed rate doctrine. See Ark. La. Gas Co., 453 U.S. at 571 ("We save for another day the question whether the filed rate doctrine applies in the face of fraudulent conduct."). See also Maislin, 497 U.S. at 129 (noting in dicta that although "we need not resolve this issue today" the Supreme Court has "never held that a carrier's unreasonable practice justifies departure from the filed tariff schedule"). While no Sixth Circuit case addresses this issue, courts have uniformly rejected the notion that such an exception exists.

In Wegoland, the complaint alleged that two companies "gave regulatory agencies and consumers misleading financial information to submit the inflated rates they requested." 27 F.3d at 18. The court first noted that "every court that has considered the plaintiffs' argument [49] has rejected the notion that there is a fraud exception to the filed rate doctrine." Id. The court held "any attempt to determine what part of the rate previously deemed reasonable was a result of the fraudulent acts would require determining what rate would have been deemed reasonable absent the fraudulent acts, and then finding the difference between the two." Such an approach would squarely implicate the nonjusticiability concern underlying the filed rate doctrine and would enmesh courts in the rate-making process. The court also noted that, as a practical matter, "regulators who are intimately familiar with the industry are best situated to discover when regulated entities engage in fraud on the agency and to remedy the wrongdoing when the specter of fraud arises." Id. at 21.

In H.J., the Eighth Circuit went so far as to "reject the H.J. class's argument that the filed rate doctrine does not apply in the face of fraudulent conduct" even where the wrongful conduct alleged was the bribery of the very regulatory officials responsible for approving the submitted rates. H.J., 954 F.2d at 492. See also Taffet II, 967 F.2d at 1494 ("Given that the [regulatory agency is] equipped to take the [50] defendants' fraud into account in setting future rates, a court's award of damages against a utility for 'fraudulent rate-making' would be unnecessarily disruptive to the state's scheme of utility regulation."); Lifschultz Fast Freight, Inc. v. Consol. Freightways Corp., 805 F. Supp. 1277, 1295 (D.S.C. 1992) (although plaintiff characterized his injuries as resulting from "acts of fraudulent manipulation" of the regulating agency, "it is clear to the court that Lifschultz is attempting to collaterally attack the lawfulness or reasonableness of the rates. This is exactly what the Keogh doctrine was created to prevent. The fact that the rates were allegedly set based on fraudulent information is immaterial.").

This Court holds, in accord with every other court that has confronted this issue, that HN15[] there is no exception to the filed rate doctrine for fraudulent or wrongful conduct. Therefore, Plaintiffs' contention that the title insurance rates submitted by Defendants [*858] to the Ohio Department of Insurance were part of a design to "effectively hide the cost basis" of the premiums and resulted in an artificially high rate is irrelevant. The filed rate doctrine still applies.

f) No "Improperly [51] Filed" Exception Applies Plaintiffs next contend that the filed rate doctrine should not apply to this case because Defendants' "filings are defective and improperly filed." (Doc. No. 104 at 6 n. 3.) Plaintiffs argue that "a filed rate which is 'incomplete' or lacks an 'essential element' does not comply with the rate filing regulatory regime, and therefore does not invoke the filed rate doctrine." (Doc. No. 77 at 26 (citing Sec. Servs v. Kmart Corp.., 511 U.S. 431, 440, 442, 114 S. Ct. 1702, 128 L. Ed. 2d 433 (1994)). In the first instance, Plaintiffs have flyspecked language from Security Services. The holding of that case was that "rates filed with the Interstate Commerce Commissions which became 'void as a matter of law' under that commission's regulations could not be enforced." See *Dolan, 365 Fed. Appx. 271, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 2814 at 4 (citing Sec. Servs., 511 U.S. at 437).

In Security Services, the defendant motor carrier filed a rate with the ICC, which received and accepted it. The application made reference to, and relied on, a specific mileage guide, filed by a rating agency to which the defendant belonged. Sec. Servs., 511 U.S. at 433. Under ICC regulations, such mileage guides only applied to those carriers who were participants [52] in the rating agencies that issued them. After defendant had filed its rate with the ICC, the rating agency cancelled the defendant's participation in the rating agency for failure to pay fees. By statute, once the tariff "is filed or amended to note cancellation of the carrier's participation, the carrier's tariff is void as a matter of law." Id. at 440 (citing 49 C.F.R. § 1312.4(d)) (emphasis added). Therefore, once cancellation occurs, the tariff becomes "incomplete" and "ceases to satisfy the fundamental purpose of tariffs; to disclose the freight charges due to the carrier." Id. Under these circumstances, the filed rate doctrine did not apply, because the shipper "could not determine the carrier's rates, since under the regulations, distance tariffs are incomplete once the carrier's participation in the Mileage Guide has been cancelled by the agent's filing." Id. at 443. See also Atlantis Express, Inc. v. Associated Wholesale Grocers, Inc., 989 F.2d 281, 284 (8th Cir. 1993) (holding filed rate doctrine inapplicable where ICC regulation voids tariffs).

Plaintiffs also rely on TON Servs. v. Qwest Corp., 493 F.3d 1225 (10th Cir. 2007). In TON, the court held the filed rate doctrine [53] inapplicable to a situation where plaintiffs sued to enforce a specific "command of the very regulatory statute giving rise to the tariff-filing requirement." 493 F.3d at 1236. TON involved a complex regulatory structure involving Payphone. Relevant (and simplified) here, as it existed in 1996, entities known as local exchange carriers (including defendant in TON) owned payphone lines. These payphone lines were used, however, by both the local exchange carriers' own payphone services and by independent payphone service providers (including plaintiffs in TON). Id. at 1229. The local carriers "routinely subsidized and discriminated in favor of their own payphone services." Id. In 1996, in an effort to increase competition, Congress directed the FCC to put a stop to this practice. The FCC did so by implementing the so-called "New Services Test," which mandated that tariff rates should be based solely on a carrier's overhead costs. Id. (citing 47 C.F.R. § 61.49(g)(2)). The FCC also established the method by which the local carriers would demonstrate their compliance, [*859] namely by accompanying tariff filings with "supporting cost data" as provided for by statute. Id. at 1231. Further, the [54] local exchange carriers had to certify that its tariff rates were compliant with the New Services Test in order to receive "per-call compensation," which compensated payphone line owners for allowing calls from its payphones to be connected to long distance carriers. Id. The effective date for New Services Test compliance was April 15, 1997.

On April 10, 1997, five days before the FCC's orders went into effect, a group of local exchange carriers petitioned the FCC to delay the effective date because they were not prepared to file cost-based rates and other necessary data. Id. at 1231. The FCC acquiesced, but with a caveat. If, after the local exchange carriers became fully compliant with the FCC's new orders, the newly calculated compliant rate was lower than the non-compliant rate, the local exchange carriers were ordered to reimburse or credit any independent payphone service providers for the difference (calculated between the April 15, 1997 compliance deadline and the date the local carrier became fully compliant). The defendant in TON did not file any new rate or cost-data until 2002. The 2002 rate was substantially lower than the rates that had been charged by defendant since [55] April 1997, and plaintiff sued to recover the difference in rates. As a defense, defendant argued the filed rate doctrine precluded a monetary recovery, because the defendant had filed its previous rates with the appropriate regulatory body. The Tenth Circuit rejected this defense, holding the filed rate doctrine did not apply because plaintiff sought to enforce existing regulatory orders that made damages available to those in the plaintiff's position.

Turning to this case, Plaintiffs broadly allege that Defendants' rate filings do not comply with Ohio's rate filing requirements. Plaintiffs assert that "Ohio law requires that title insurers support their rates with information about past and prospective expenses to aid the ODI [Ohio Department of Insurance] in determining whether or not those rates comply with Ohio law" and claim that Defendants' rate filings lack that data. (Doc. No. 77 at 26-27.) Further, Plaintiffs cite OHIO REV. CODE § 3953.26, which prohibits payments to induce title insurance, and claim that Defendants' rate filings "include hidden costs which are largely comprised of kickbacks and other inducements forbidden by Ohio law." (Id.) First, even if Plaintiffs could [56] prove that Defendants' rate filings incorporated illegal commissions paid to title insurance agents in violation of § 3953.26, the Court is directed to no statute or regulation that would void those filed rates. See *Dolan, 365 Fed. Appx. 271, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 2814, at 5.

Next, and even more problematic for Plaintiffs, is Plaintiffs' contention that Ohio law "requires that title insurers support their rates with information about past and prospective expenses." (Doc. No. 77 at 26-27.) The section to which Plaintiffs refer, § 3935.03(C)(5), states that "HN16[] [c]onsideration shall be given to [. . .] (5) Past and prospective expenses both countrywide and those specially applicable to this state." Id. Plaintiffs' contention that the failure of Defendants' filings to include essential cost data somehow renders those filings invalid or "improper" is flawed -- the statute only states that "consideration" shall be given to such information. Moreover, § 3935.04 is illuminative, and expressly contemplates insurers filing rates in the absence of accompanying data:

> HN17[] When a filing is not accompanied by the information upon which the insurer supports the filing, and the superintendent does not have sufficient information [57] to determine whether the filing meets the requirements of sections 3935.01 to 3935.17 [*860] of the Revised Code, he shall require the insurer to furnish the information which supports the filing [. . .].

§ 3935.04(A). HN18[] This statute (which is phrased in the conjunctive), therefore, allows for the superintendent to determine that a filing meets the requirements of the code in the absence of the accompanying information. Thus, while Ohio law requires the "consideration" of past and prospective expenses, it does not require any affirmative filing of supporting documentation about those expenses for a filing to be valid, but rather gives the superintendent the right to call for supporting documentation if he or she determines necessary. Therefore, even if Defendants' rate filings are not accompanied by supporting documentation regarding past and prospective expenses, that absence does not render the filing deficient, and, again, certainly does not warrant considering the rates "void" so as not to apply the filed rate doctrine.

Moreover, the Ohio statutory scheme expressly provides for the manner in which Defendants submit their rates to the Department of Insurance. It is uncontested that certain [58] Defendants are members of the OTIRB, which files title insurance rates on behalf of its members. Section 3935.04(B) allows an insurer to "satisfy its obligation to make such filings" by becoming a member of a rating bureau and authorizing the superintendent to accept filings from the rating bureau on the insurer's behalf. Id. Therefore, even if an insurer had an obligation to submit supporting expense documentation to the Ohio Department of Insurance alongside rate filings (which it does not, see supra), an insurer can "satisfy its obligation" by joining a rating bureau. This is exactly what Defendant insurers have done in this case.

Plaintiffs direct the Court's attention to Ohio Department of Insurance Bulletin 91-1 (hereinafter "Bulletin 91-1"). [11] Bulletin 91-1 "specifies the framework under which rating bureaus and participating insurers in rating bureaus will operate in a loss cost system in the State of Ohio." Id. Under the "loss cost system," "each insurer must individually determine and file the rates it will use as a result of its own independent company decision-making process." Id. Defendants contend that Bulletin 91-1 applies to only those rating bureaus that submit only [59] "loss cost" information on behalf of their members, and not those rating bureaus such as the OTIRB that files rates on behalf of their members. [12] Plaintiffs, alternatively, insist that Bulletin 91-1 demonstrates that Defendants' rates "have not been properly filed," and that the filed rate doctrine should therefore not apply. (Doc. No. 77 at p. 26.)

This Court holds, however, no matter the scope of its intended application, Bulletin 91-1 cannot be read to render Defendants' rate filings improper so as not to apply the filed rate doctrine. A bulletin issued by the Ohio Department of Insurance can "provide guidance to the reader [60] about the topic covered." See Ohio Dep't of Insurance Policy and Legislation, Bulletins, available at: http://www.insurance.ohio.gov/Legal/Bulletins/Pages/BulletinIndex.aspx.

A bulletin cannot, however, displace the unambiguous text of the Ohio Revised [*861] Code. The Code expressly permits rating bureaus to file rates on behalf of their members. Bulletin 91-1 cannot ban what the code specifically allows. Moreover, and again, even if Bulletin 91-1 does stand to show that Defendants' rates are noncompliant with Ohio law (which it does not), no statute voids those filed and approved rates so as to preclude application of the filed rate doctrine under Security Servs, supra.

The Filed Rate Doctrine Also Applies to Preclude Plaintiffs' State Law Claims for Damages

In their objection, Plaintiffs argue that even if the filed rate doctrine applies to preclude their claims for damages under the federal Sherman Act, Ohio does not recognize the filed rate doctrine and therefore the filed rate doctrine does not preclude Plaintiffs' state Valentine Act claim for damages. The Court disagrees.

---

[11] Available at http://www.insurance.ohio.gov/Legal/Bulletins/Documents/91-1.pdf.

[12] This Court granted Plaintiffs' request to conduct limited discovery on October 15, 2008. (Doc. No. 52.) Pursuant to this order, Plaintiffs deposed Maureen Motter, a representative of the Ohio Department of Insurance. (Transcript at Doc. No. 77-2.) While Defendants support this contention with the deposition testimony of Ms. Motter, this Court has not relied in any manner on Ms. Motter's testimony in reaching its consideration of the effect of Bulletin 91-1 on Plaintiffs' claims.

First, it is important to reiterate that, as to the federal claims, it is irrelevant that the regulating agency in [61] this case is a state, and not a federal agency. HN19[] The filed rate doctrine acts to preclude actions for damages under the Sherman Act regardless of whether the regulating agency is state or federal. *See, e.g., Dolan, 365 Fed. Appx. 271, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 2814 at 11 (holding "the [filed rate] doctrine applies to any 'filed rate,' including rates filed with state agencies") (internal citations and quotations omitted); Crumley v. Time Warner Cable, Inc., 556 F.3d 879, 881 (8th Cir. 2009) ("The filed rate doctrine also applies to rates filed with state agencies."); H.J., 954 F.2d at 494 (holding there is "no reason to distinguish between rates promulgated by state and federal agencies. We are persuaded that the rationale underlying the filed rate doctrine applies whether the rate in question is approved by a federal or state agency."); Taffet II, 967 F.2d at 1494 (holding the filed rate doctrine "applies with equal force to preclude recovery [. . .] whether the rate at issue has been set by a state rate-making authority or a federal one.").

Plaintiffs are correct, however, that HN20[] the question of whether the filed rate doctrine acts to preclude their state law antitrust claims for damages as to rates filed with [62] a state regulatory agency is a matter of Ohio law. No Ohio Supreme Court case addresses the issue of whether the filed rate doctrine acts to bar claims for damages to rates filed with the Ohio Department of Insurance. "HN21[] Where the state supreme court has not spoken, our task is to discern, from all available sources, how that court would respond if confronted with the issue." Rector v. Gen. Motors Corp., 963 F.2d 144, 146 (6th Cir. 1992); see also McClain v. Northwest Cmty. Corr. Ctr. Judicial Corr. Bd., 440 F.3d 320, 328 (6th Cir. 2006) (same). For the following reasons, this Court holds the Ohio Supreme Court would apply the filed rate doctrine to preclude an award of damages under the Valentine Act where premised on payments made under rates approved by a state regulatory agency.

As extensively discussed in the preceding pages, HN22[] the filed rate doctrine bars damage awards premised on payments made under rates approved by a regulatory agency. Under the doctrine, a private plaintiff may not challenge the reasonableness, or validity, of the filed rate. Simply put, the filed rate is "unassailable in judicial proceedings brought by ratepayers." See Wegoland, 27 F.3d at 20. But in addition [63] to acting as an insurmountable bar to damage recoveries by private plaintiffs, the filed rate doctrine mandates, "as a corollary, no one may bring a judicial proceeding to enforce any rate other than the rate established by the filed tariff." Brown v. MCI Worldcom Network Servs., Inc., 277 F.3d 1166, 1170 (9th Cir. 2002). See also Ark. La., 453 U.S. at 577 [*862] (holding the filed rate doctrine "forbids a regulated entity to charge rates for its services other than those properly filed").

While Ohio has not applied the filed rate doctrine to preclude a suit for damages by a private plaintiff, the Ohio Supreme Court has explicitly recognized the corollary principle that regulated entities cannot charge rates other than those properly filed. In In re Investigation of Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 66 Ohio St. 3d 81, 1993 Ohio 184, 609 N.E.2d 156 (1993), an insurer (National Union) was a member of a rating organization (Insurance Services of Ohio) that, pursuant to OHIO REV. CODE § 3937.03(B), made rate filings on National Union's behalf. [13] Effective January 15, 1980, Insurance Services of Ohio "filed a new [64] general liability classification structure and rating procedure applicable to governmental subdivisions with Ohio's superintendent." Id. at 83. On December 31, 1984, National Union issued a policy to the city of Brook Park, Ohio, and charged the city the rates set forth in the 1980 rating organization filing. Id. One year later, "without submitting any additional documentation to the superintendent" of insurance, National Union increased Brook Park's premiums. Id. National Union argued, for various reasons not relevant here, that "filed rates may be modified simply on the basis of underwriting judgment" and were exempt from the filing requirements of § 3937.03.

The Ohio Supreme Court rejected this argument and held that [65] the Ohio statutory scheme plainly required that any rate charged must set forth in a rating plan filed by or on behalf of the insurer, and deviations are not permitted without the approval of the Superintendent of Insurance. Id. at 87. As Plaintiffs themselves characterize the holding, "[i]n Nat'l Union Fire, however, the Ohio Supreme Court merely held that charging a premium other than the filed rate was impermissible." (Doc. No. 104 at p. 24.) Far from Plaintiffs' "merely held" characterization, Nat'l Union Fire recognizes, and applies, the corollary to the filed rate doctrine, and is consistent with the Court's ultimate conclusion that the Ohio Supreme Court would recognize and apply the filed rate doctrine to this case. See also Office of Consumers' Counsel v. Public Utils. Com, 61 Ohio St. 3d 396, 406-07, 575 N.E.2d 157 (1991) (Brown, J., dissenting) (recognizing "the well-established filed rate doctrine" and "one of the primary purposes of the regulation of public utilities is to prevent price discrimination"). See also Gary Phillips & Assocs. v. Ameritech Corp., 144 Ohio App. 3d 149, 153, 759 N.E.2d 833 (Ohio Ct. App. 2001) (discussing public utility regulatory scheme, which requires Commission rate approval [66] and mandates utilities charge only rates approved by Commission as "giv[ing] birth to what is known as the 'filed rate doctrine'").

---

[13] Chapter 3937 of the Ohio Code addresses Casualty and Motor Vehicle Insurance. Section 3937.03(B) provides that an insurer "may satisfy its obligation to make such filings [to the Department of Insurance] by becoming a member of, or subscriber to, a licensed rating organization [. . .]." OHIO Rev. Code § 3937.03(B). Other than the substitution of the entity name, i.e, "licensed rating organization" for "licensed rating bureau," § 3937.03(B) is identical to § 3935.04(B).

Plaintiffs rely on two unpublished Northern District of Ohio decisions, Chesner v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co., No. 06-cv-476, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57356 (N.D. Ohio Aug. 4, 2006) and Barnes v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., No. 06-cv-574, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54984 (N.D. Ohio Aug. 4, 2006). In relevant part, in both Barnes and Chesner, decided on the same day by the same judge using identical language, plaintiffs [*863] (purchasers of title insurance) alleged defendants (title insurance companies) committed fraud by "fail[ing] to disclose the potential for a discounted rate." Barnes, 2006 U.S. Dist LEXIS 54984 at *19; Chesner, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57356 at *19. Defendants asserted the filed rate doctrine "fulfill[ed] Defendant's duty to disclose as it requires Defendant file its rates with the Ohio Department of Insurance and that such filing creates a presumption of knowledge of the rate and discount rate by the consumer." Barnes, 2006 U.S. Dist LEXIS 54984 at *20; Chesner, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57356 at *19-20. The court refused to apply the doctrine, and also [67] noted that defendants had not "provided [Ohio] case law demonstrating the 'filed rate doctrine' applies outside the public utilities or common carrier arenas." Barnes, 2006 U.S. Dist LEXIS 54984 at *20; Chesner, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57356 at *20.

The failure of defendants in Barnes and Chesner to provide Ohio case law applying the filed rate doctrine to the insurance context is understandable -- indeed, as discussed above, no such case law exists. Plaintiffs, in their objection and based on Barnes and Chesner, argue that because no Ohio case has applied the filed rate doctrine to the title insurance industry, the Filed Rate doctrine does not apply to the title insurance industry under Ohio law. This reasoning suffers from the fallacy of argumentum ad ignorantiam, which is "the mistake that is committed whenever it is argued that a proposition is true simply on the basis that it has not been proved false, or that it is false because it has not been proved true." See Alabama-Tombigbee Rivers Coalition v. Kempthorne, 477 F.3d 1250, 1257 (11th Cir. 2007) (citing Irving M. Copi & Carl Cohen, INTRODUCTION TO LOGIC 93 (8th ed. 1990)).

Moreover, a brief examination of the claims presented in [68] Barnes and Chesner quickly distinguish them from Plaintiffs' claims in this case. In Barnes and Chesner, the plaintiffs were title insurance purchasers who refinanced existing mortgages. The plaintiffs claimed that they paid a higher "premium" rate for title insurance, when, due to the fact they were refinancing and already owned an existing title insurance policy, they were entitled to pay a different, discounted rate "as provided by law." See Chesner, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57356 at *14 ("The Complaint clearly alleges the Plaintiffs purchased title insurance from Defendant and that under applicable Ohio law Plaintiffs were entitled to the discounted rate."). Plaintiffs alleged damages based on the difference between the title insurance rate actually paid, and the separate, discounted rate for which they were eligible based on their status as reissue purchasers, but of which they were unaware. Of significance, both of the rates were "filed rates." The plaintiffs claimed the title insurance companies had a duty to disclose the availability of the second, lower rate, and defendants' failure to disclose amounted to fraud. [14] The plaintiffs did not challenge the reasonableness of the rate [69] they paid, but rather alleged there was a separate rate (that was lower) that they would have purchased had they been made aware of its existence.

---

[14] The Court notes that in both Barnes and Chesner, the fraud claims were dismissed because plaintiffs failed to allege fraud with the requisite particularity as required by Rule 9(b).

The claims asserted in Barnes and Chesner did not implicate the principles underlying the filed rate doctrine. Plaintiffs did not challenge the reasonableness of the rate paid (as determined by the regulating [*864] agency), so the court was not required to make the inquiry forbidden by the doctrine (nonjusticiability). Nor did plaintiffs' requested relief seek to alter the rate paid by plaintiffs in a manner that would result in different rates being paid by different customers (nondiscrimination). [15] Compare the claims asserted by Plaintiffs in this case, which directly attack the reasonableness of the rate and would require the alteration of the rate paid that would potentially result in different rates being paid by different customers. Barnes and Chester are completely inapposite and of no help to Plaintiffs in this case.

Finally, this Court looks to the Sixth Circuit's decision in Pinney Dock. There, plaintiffs brought federal and Ohio state antitrust claims against a group of railroad defendants. Relevant here, defendants asserted the filed rate doctrine as a defense against plaintiffs federal and state antitrust claims. After exhaustively considering whether or not the filed rate doctrine applied to the specific factual scenario presented, [16] the Court concluded that the doctrine did apply and that "all rate-related claims made by the plaintiffs, whether state or federal, must be dismissed." Pinney Dock, 838 F.2d at 1482 (emphasis added). The court in Pinney Dock specifically applied the filed rate doctrine to the plaintiffs' [71] Valentine Act claims, albeit without elucidation of its reasons in so doing.

For the foregoing reasons, this Court holds, based on all available sources, that HN23[] the Ohio Supreme Court would respond to the question of whether the filed rate doctrine precludes a private plaintiff's claim for damages under the Valentine Act where premised on payments made under rates approved by a state regulatory agency in the affirmative.

The Filed Rate Doctrine Does Not Necessarily Preclude Injunctive Relief Under Either the Sherman Act or the Valentine Act

Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation that the filed rate doctrine does not necessarily preclude Plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief. (Doc. [72] No. 102 at 41-42, 56 (recommending dismissal without prejudice to permit Plaintiffs to amend their complaint to present a claim for injunctive relief, despite finding "[t]he undersigned can divine no way of providing the injunctive relief [requested, due to the filed rate doctrine]").) This Court finds that the filed rate doctrine bars some, but not all, of the injunctive relief sought by Plaintiffs in this case. While the filed rate doctrine would not preclude all injunctive relief sought, however, allowing Plaintiff leave to amend their complaint would be futile, because Plaintiffs' federal claims are exempted from antitrust scrutiny by the McCarran Ferguson Act, see infra, and Plaintiffs' state claims complain of conduct specifically allowed and contemplated by the Ohio insurance code, see infra. Put more simply, as to Plaintiffs' claims under the Valentine Act, this Court cannot enjoin an [*865] alleged "illegal practice" that is, in fact, legal.

As to injunctive relief, Plaintiffs seek broadly that Defendants "be perpetually enjoined and restrained from, in any manner, directly or indirectly, continuing maintaining or renewing the aforesaid combination, conspiracy, agreement, understanding [73] or concert of action, adopting or following any practice, plan, program or design having a similar purpose or effect in restraining competition." (Doc. No. 36 at 21.) Viewed in a light most favorable to Plaintiffs, their complaint seeks to enjoin the following activities: (1) collaboration to collectively set title insurance rates at supra-competitive prices, evidenced by the identical rate charged by Defendants, and (2) the inclusion of [15] This is an important, and nonobvious, [70] distinction. Success by the Barnes and Chesner plaintiffs would not have resulted in the alteration of the rate paid by plaintiffs -- the rate would have remained fully intact. Damages would have been calculated by determining the difference between the two approved filed rates, but recovery would have been premised on the fraudulent failure to disclose the availability of the separate, lower rate at the time of purchase, and not on some flaw in the establishment of the rate paid.

---

[16] Pinney Dock required the Sixth Circuit to determine whether the Filed rate doctrine applies when the plaintiff is defendant's competitor, rather than customer, an issue over which the Courts of Appeal are not in accord but not implicated by this case. Cf. Arsberry v. Illinois, 244 F.3d 558 (7th Cir. 2001) (doctrine may bar claims by non-purchasing competitors) with In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144 (3d Cir. 1993) (applying non-purchasing competitor exception).

illegal kickbacks and inducements in the rate submitted to the ODI, which acts to "hide" the true cost basis from regulatory scrutiny.

As discussed above, the Supreme Court has recognized that the filed rate doctrine does not necessarily apply to claims for injunctive relief. Square D, 476 U.S. at 419, 422 & n.28 (explaining that the Keogh rule bars damage actions but that rate-related claims remain "subject to governmental and injunctive antitrust actions"); Georgia v. Pa. R.R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 462, 65 S. Ct. 716, 89 L. Ed. 1051 (1945), superseded by statute, Reed-Bulwinkle Act, 49 U.S.C. § 10706(b)(2), as recognized in Square D, 476 U.S. at 422-23 (plaintiff could bring antitrust action to enjoin alleged "coercive and collusive influences" in rate-making). Courts have also recognized, [74] however, that some forms of injunctive relief violate the nonjusticiability principle of the doctrine, and have precluded injunctive relief where the effect on the relief would result in altering a filed rate. See Town of Norwood, 202 F.3d at 420 (applying filed rate doctrine to deny injunctive relief because it "would require the alteration of tariffs" already filed and thus encroach on agency's authority (emphasis in original)). Thus, HN24[] this Court can properly enjoin activity to prevent future conduct where doing so would not affect rates already filed and would not encroach on the agency's authority to determine the reasonableness of a given rate.

As to the first potential ground, prohibiting the collaboration of defendants prospectively would not alter any already-filed rate, but would result only in future rates being affected. The filed rate doctrine cannot preclude this relief. See In re Pa. Title Ins. Antitrust Litig., 648 F. Supp. 2d at 686; Green v. Peoples Energy Corp., 02-C-4117, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4958 at *4 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 28, 2003) ("the critical inquiry is whether granting the injunctive relief will require dismantling the filed tariffs. If horizontal agreement is alleged [75] and therefore the injunctive relief can be enforced without tampering with the filed rates, then [. . .] the filed rate doctrine should not be an absolute bar."). Put simply, this Court could grant injunctive relief that barred any illegal collaboration of insurers, or insurers and rating bureaus, because that relief would not affect either the already-filed rates or encroach on the Department of Insurance' authority in any way.

The second ground presents a different scenario. The essence of Plaintiffs' theory is that Defendants' rate submissions conceal the inclusion of illegal kickbacks by "calculating a single rate that comprises both the premium for the title insurance and the kickbacks" and thereby evade Department of Insurance scrutiny. To be certain, kickbacks, or more formally "payments to induce title insurance business" are illegal under Ohio law. OHIO REV. CODE § 3953.26. But Plaintiffs do not seek to enjoin the kickbacks themselves, [17] but [*866] rather the inclusion of the kickbacks in the "single rate" submitted to the Department of Insurance. Were this Court to grant the relief Plaintiffs seek, the regulatory authority of the Ohio Department of Insurance would be seriously undermined. [76] As discussed in the preceding paragraphs, the Ohio statutory scheme mandates that the superintendent "shall review" every rate submission to ensure its compliance with Ohio law and gives the superintendent the right to call for additional documentation if he determines necessary. Were this Court to enjoin Defendants from submitting a "single rate" and require a detailed accounting of how a particular rate was calculated, this Court would, in effect, be substituting its own judgment as to how rate filings should be reviewed for that of the regulating agency's, and by implication, necessarily conclude that the scheme as it exists results in unreasonable rates. This squarely implicates the nonjusticiability principle of the filed rate doctrine. HN25[] Just as the filed rate doctrine precludes injunctive relief that results in the alteration of a filed rate due to nonjusticiability concerns, see Town of Norwood, supra, so too must the filed rate doctrine preclude injunctive relief where such relief would displace the statutory scheme and authority of the regulating agency to determine the reasonableness of rates.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court holds that the filed rate doctrine applies to the Ohio title insurance industry and Plaintiffs' claims for damages under both the Sherman Act and the Valentine Act are therefore precluded. The Court

---

[17] "Such 'obey the law' injunctions cannot be sustained." EEOC v. Wooster Brush Co. Employees Relief Ass'n, 727 F.2d 566, 576 (6th Cir. 1984) [77] (citing Payne v. Travenol Laboratories, Inc., 565 F.2d 895, 897-98 (5th Cir.)).

therefore OVERRULES Plaintiffs' objections in this regard. Moreover, the Court holds that Plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief as to the allegedly "illegal collaboration" of title insurance companies and rating bureaus is not precluded by the filed rate doctrine and OVERRULES Defendants' objections to that extent. Defendants' objection to Plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief based on the inclusion of kickbacks into the "single rate" submitted to the Ohio Department of Insurance is well-taken and is SUSTAINED.

II. MCCARRAN-FERGUSON ACT

The Antitrust Exception

The Magistrate Judge also found that Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim was barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act. With respect to this finding, Plaintiffs raise two objections. First, Plaintiffs complain that the Magistrate Judge failed to evaluate whether application of Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claim would [78] "invalidate, impair, or supersede" the relevant Ohio insurance laws. (Plaintiffs' Objections at 21, quoting Humana v. Forsyth, 525 U.S. 299, 307, 119 S. Ct. 710, 142 L. Ed. 2d 753 (1999) (internal citation omitted)). Defendants insist that such a consideration was not necessary, suggesting that the Magistrate Judge properly limited her analysis to the question of whether the disputed conduct was the business of insurance, regulated by state law, and not a boycott. According to Defendants, because the Sherman Act was specifically identified in the McCarran-Ferguson Act, Congress had already determined that application of the Sherman Act would "invalidate, impair, or supersede" a state's regulation of the business of insurance. The "impairment" clause, Defendants maintain, is reserved for McCarran-Ferguson defenses raised as to laws other than antitrust laws. (Doc. No. 111, Defendants' Responses to Plaintiffs' Objections at 27-29.) To resolve this dispute, [*867] the Court turns to the language of the statute. See Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 210, 99 S. Ct. 1067, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261 (1979) (HN26[] "The starting point in a case involving construction of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, like the starting point in any case involving the meaning [79] of a statute, is the language of the statute itself.")

The McCarran-Ferguson Act provides that HN27[] "the business of insurance, and every person engaged therein, shall be subject to the laws of the several States which relate to the regulation or the taxation of such business." 15 U.S.C. § 1012(a). The Act further declares that HN28[] "no Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purposes of regulating the business of insurance [...]." 15 U.S.C. § 1012(b). "HN29[] Federal law thus provides for 'reverse preemption' in the realm of regulating the insurance business." Genord v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 440 F.3d 802, 805 (6th Cir. 2006). As such, a federal law that does not directly relate to the business of insurance cannot be construed to "invalidate, impair, or supersede" a state law enacted to regulate the business of insurance. Id.; 15 U.S.C. § 1012(b).

The McCarran-Ferguson Act, however, contains an "antitrust exception" to the reverse preemption rule. After setting forth the rule, the Act specifically identifies the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, and states that these laws "shall be applicable to the [80] business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law." § 1012(b).

HN30[] To determine whether the McCarran-Ferguson Act applies, a court generally begins with the threshold question of whether the federal statute at issue "specifically relates to the business of insurance." If it does, the Act does not allow for reverse preemption. Genord, 440 F.3d at 805. If not, then the two remaining questions that must be answered in the affirmative if the federal law is reverse preempted by the state statute are: (1) "whether the state statute at issue was 'enacted [...] for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance;'" and (2) "[w]hether the application of the federal law would 'invalidate, impair, or supersede' the state statute." Id. (quoting § 1012(b)). See Kenty v. Bank One, N.A., 92 F.3d 384, 392 (6th Cir. 1996).

Defendants argue that HN31[] the antitrust exception expressly exempts from Sherman Act liability activity that constitutes the "business of insurance" to the extent it is regulated by state law. According to Defendants, a defendant in an antitrust case need not show that the Sherman Act would "invalidate, impair, or supersede" a state's regulation. Instead, [81] the Court need only find that the activity of which a plaintiff complains constitutes the business of insurance, regulated by state law, and not a boycott.

The Court agrees. "[T]he language of the [McCarran-Ferguson A]ct distinguishes preclusion analysis where antitrust laws are at issue." Sabo v. Metro. Life Ins. Co., 137 F.3d 185, 189 n.1 (3d Cir. 1998) ("Because the plaintiff's complaint is not grounded in federal antitrust laws, we focus our analysis on the first clause of section 1012(b).") In Royal Drug, the Supreme Court restricted its inquiry into whether the McCarran-Ferguson Act barred a Sherman Act antitrust claim challenging state pharmacy agreements to the question of whether the pharmacy agreements were the business of insurance. 440 U.S. at 210 The same limited inquiry was applied to the antitrust claim raised in Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 129, 102 S. Ct. 3002, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1982). See Highmark, Inc. v. UPMC Health Plan, Inc., 276 F.3d 160, 167, [*868] n.1 (3d Cir. 2001) (internal citation omitted) ("In [United States v.] Fabe, [508 U.S. 491, 113 S. Ct. 2202, 124 L. Ed. 2d 449 (1993)], the Court noted that Pireno dealt with the McCarran Act's effect on antitrust laws, which the Court found readily distinguishable from [82] other laws. This is because there are two separate clauses in the McCarran Act. According to the Supreme Court, the second clause, which proscribes application of antitrust laws, is more 'narrowly circumscribed' than the first clause, which deals with federal laws in general.").

Because Plaintiffs have raised a claim under the Sherman Act, the antitrust exception controls and the Magistrate Judge properly limited her inquiry to the question of whether Defendants' activities constitute the "business of insurance." The Court, therefore, OVERRULES Plaintiffs' objection that the Magistrate Judge erred in not considering whether the Sherman Act would invalidate, impair, or supersede" the state law. [18]

The Business of Insurance

The Court turns to the questions posed by the second clause of § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act: namely, "(1) whether the practice of the defendants challenged here falls within the term 'business of insurance' and (2) whether it is 'regulated by state law.'" McIlhenny v. American Title and Abstract Co. of Pa., 418 F. Supp. 364, 367 (E.D. Pa. 1976). Plaintiffs' second objection under the McCarran-Ferguson Act is directly linked to this phase of the analysis. Specifically, Plaintiffs complain that the Magistrate Judge erred in finding that [84] Defendants' conduct constituted the "business of insurance."

In Pireno, HN32[] the Supreme Court announced the test for determining whether a particular practice is part of the "business of insurance" exempted from the antitrust laws by § 2(b): "first, whether the practice had the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry." Pireno, 458 U.S. at 129 (emphasis in the original). No one factor is outcome determinative and must be considered along with the whole body of evidence. Id. The Magistrate Judge found all three elements present, and this Court concurs.

There is little doubt that the setting of rates for insurance policies constitutes the "business of insurance." Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 224; see also Gilchrist v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 390 F.3d 1327, 1331 (11th Cir. 2004) ("Rate-making, of course, is the paradigmatic example of the conduct that Congress intended to protect by the [18] Of course, application of the "impairment clause" to the state statutes at issue would not change the result. A federal law does not impair, invalidate, or supersede a state regulation where the "federal law does not directly conflict with state regulation, and when application of the federal law would not frustrate any declared state policy or interfere with a state's administrative regime [...]." Humana, 525 U.S. at 310. See Brown v. Cassens Transport Co., 546 F.3d 347, 362 (6th Cir. 2008). [83] To demonstrate impairment, it must be shown that substantive sections of the State regulations will be invalidated, Kenty, 92 F.3d at 392, or that it will render the State law ineffective, Brown, 546 F.3d at 362. Here, there can be no question that application of the Sherman Act will substantially impair Ohio's regulatory framework governing title insurance by invalidating those portions of the regulations--including Ohio Rev. Code § 3935.04 and § 3935.06--that permit the submission of filed rates through rating bureaus. Such an application would surely frustrate the declared state policy of permitting such cooperation.

---

McCarran-Ferguson Act.") Plaintiffs do not [*869] suggest otherwise. Instead, Plaintiffs argue that, [85] by its very nature, title insurance is fundamentally different than other forms of insurance, and that it is not, in fact, insurance at all. Suggesting that title insurance is more akin to a warranty or a guarantee, Plaintiffs observe that it merely "warrants that the title insurance company made no mistakes in the title search conducted prior to the closing, and it warrants that there has been no fraud on the part of the title agents." (Plaintiffs' Objections at 29.)

As to the question of whether title insurance constitutes "insurance" for the purpose of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, this Court does not write on a clean slate. Courts that have considered the issue have consistently found, as a matter of law, that HN33[] title insurance is "insurance." Commander Leasing Co. v. Transamerica Title Insurance Co., 477 F.2d 77, 83 (10th Cir. 1973); Crawford v. American Title Ins. Co., 518 F.2d 217, 219 (5th Cir. 1975) (plaintiffs "conceding as they must, that title insurance is 'insurance' within the meaning of the McCarran Act.").

For example, in *Mitgang v. Western Title Ins. Co., 1974 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6258, at 3 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 16, 1974), the court, in arriving at the conclusion that title insurance [86] was insurance, explained that "[a]lthough a person receiving title insurance gets a different sort of policy than one receiving life insurance, the same basic relationship--that of policy holder and insurer--would seem to pertain." Similarly, while noting that "[t]itle insurance may be distinct from other insurance agency activities in some respects," the court in American Land Title Ass'n v. Board of Governors of Federal Reserve Sys., 892 F.2d 1059, 1064, 282 U.S. App. D.C. 125 (D.C. C. 1989), concluded that it constituted insurance for purposes of the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

The authority relied upon by Plaintiffs to support a contrary conclusion is not persuasive. In Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. FTC, 998 F.2d 1129, 1138 (3d Cir. 1993), the court was not evaluating the practice of issuing title insurance, but was, instead, concerned with the practice of conducting title searches and examinations. The court found that these distinct and limited tasks did not involve the business of insurance. In so ruling, the court removed title insurance from its analysis, noting that "the title search and examination has nothing to do with the actual performance of the title insurance contract." Id. at 1136. Likewise, the court [87] in United States v. Title Ins. Rating Bureau of Ariz., 700 F.2d 1247 (9th Cir. 1983), did not deal with the issuance of title insurance, but, instead, with the practice of title insurance companies providing escrow services to their customers. The Court reasoned that the performance of escrow services, which the court clearly noted was separate and apart from the issuance of title insurance, did not constitute the business of insurance because it did not have the effect of spreading risk among policy holders. [19] Id. at 1251.

Plaintiffs argue that the entire business of selling title insurance is largely devoid of the pooling or spreading of risk. Because they view title insurance as nothing more than a limited warranty, Plaintiffs believe that its purpose is merely to protect against "'past activities that have caused defects in title discovered after the purchase;' in stark [88] contrast to traditional insurance which spreads 'risk against future [*870] loss for events yet to occur.'" (Plaintiffs' Objections at 26, citing Am. Compl. at P 39.)

Though Plaintiffs contend that the risk is only 3.4% of losses incurred on claims to premiums written, even they must admit that the issuance of title insurance has the effect of spreading some risk. (TR at 56.) Indeed, Plaintiffs concede that title insurance protects against mechanic's liens filed before the commitment letter is signed, and further covers any potential cloud on the title that should have been uncovered at the time the search was performed. (Id. at 8, 56.) See FTC v. Ticor Title, 504 U.S. 621, 625-26, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1992) (title insurance protects against the risk of loss for title problems that were not discovered in the title search, including those defects that could not be discovered); [20] Schwartz, 374 F. Supp. at 574 ("title insurance companies

---

[19] The court gave weight to the government's contention that buying escrow services is separate from buying title insurance because some people who buy escrow services do not buy title insurance, those who buy both have two separate agreements, and searches are performed by agents who keep the entire fee. Id. at 1252.

[20] Specifically, the Court found that "[a] title insurance policy insures against certain losses or damages sustained by reason of a defect in title not [89] shown on the policy or title report to which it refers [...]. The insured is protected from some losses resulting from title defects not discoverable from a search of the public records, such as forgery, missing heirs, previous are liable only for what they do not find, or if they become victims of false affidavits tendered to remove title objections.")

While Plaintiffs dismiss this risk as insignificant, the test in Pireno for the "business of insurance" does not quantify any particular amount of risk; it merely calls for a finding of some risk. See Pireno, 458 U.S. at 129; see also SEC v. Variable Annuity Life Ins. Co. of America, 359 U.S. 65, 71, 79 S. Ct. 618, 3 L. Ed. 2d 640 (1959) [21] ("the concept of 'insurance' involves some investment risk-taking on the part of the company.") (emphasis added). That the title search has the effect of minimizing or obviating some or even most of the risk in advance of the issuance of the title insurance policy does not change the fact that some risk is spread among the policy holders. [22] See Schwartz, 374 F. Supp. at 574 ("The investigation of the risk of loss prior to deciding [90] if to insure that risk is clearly part of the business of insurance.")

It is clear that only some risk spreading is required under the Supreme Court's test. See SEC, 359 U.S. at 71. By Plaintiffs' own admissions, the issuance of title insurance satisfies that requirement. In the absence of clear and binding authority, the Court is not prepared to read additional requirements into the Supreme [91] Court's test. The Court, therefore, finds that the issuance of title insurance satisfies the first prong under Pireno.

The Court is convinced that HN34[] the setting of rates for title insurance premiums satisfies the Supreme Court's definition of the "business of insurance." [23] See *Royal [871] Drug, 440 U.S. at 224, n. 32 ("It is clear from the legislative history that the fixing of rates is the 'business of insurance.'") Indeed, it would seem that this type of activity is precisely the kind that the McCarran-Ferguson Act meant to leave to the state legislatures to regulate. Moreover, it is clear that the State of Ohio has undertaken the task of regulating title insurance. The State has set forth a comprehensive regulatory plan governing title insurance, and has sought to subject the issuance of title insurance policies to the same scrutiny to which it subjects other forms of insurance. Though not determinative, it is significant that the regulations governing title insurance appear in the section of the Ohio Revised Code that deals with insurance, as opposed to the section dealing with property. See *Mitgang, 1974 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6258, at 3 (the fact that the regulations covering title insurance [92] were found in the Insurance Code of California was evidence that the State of California intended to treat title insurance as any other type of insurance); contra Brown, 546 F.3d at 360 (the fact that regulations governing worker's compensation appeared in the chapter of the Michigan Complied Laws dealing with labor matters, instead of the Michigan Insurance Code, was further evidence that worker's compensation benefits did not involve insurance).

Plaintiffs do not take [93] issue with the Magistrate Judge's findings as to the second and third elements of the Pireno test. The issuance of title insurance by the insurer to the insured is clearly an "integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured." Pireno, 458 U.S. at 129. Further, the activity in question is certainly limited to entities within the insurance industry; namely, the insurer and the insured. Contra Royal Drug marriages, impersonation, or confusion in names […]. Title insurance also includes the obligation to defend in the event that an insured is sued by reason of some defect within the scope of the policy's guarantee." Id. at 625-26.

[21] Plaintiffs erroneously claim that this decision stands for the contrary position that more than minimal risk spreading is required. In SEC, the Court found that the issuance of variable annuities did not constitute the business of insurance because it did not involve the spreading of any risk. Id. at 71.

[22] The process of minimizing or limiting risk by a pre-issuance investigation is not unique to title insurance. Life insurance policies are issued only after the insurer knows, generally by means of a pre-issue physical examination, the risk associated with insuring the prospective insured. If the physical examination reveals that the risk is too great, the policy will not issue. Similarly, if the title search reveals a significant potential cloud on the title, the title insurance policy may not issue.

[23] At oral argument, Plaintiffs attempted to draw the distinction between "rate-setting" and "rate-making." Plaintiffs argued that "rate-making" is the process by which insurers are supposed to share information with the rating bureau (TR at 52-53), whereas "rate-setting" is the process of actually fixing insurance rates. While Plaintiffs admit that pooling statistical information is exempt under the Sherman Act, they claim that when courts speak of the "business of insurance" as an exemption, they are really speaking of what Plaintiffs refer to as rate-making. The Court rejects this distinction because the case law clearly exempts the fixing of insurance rates from the Sherman Act. See Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 224 n. 32.

Co., 440 U.S. at 215-16 (insurers' contracts with pharmacies whereby participating pharmacies would supply prescriptions at a set cost were not between insurers and insureds, but involved pharmacies and druggists who were wholly outside the insurance industry.) The Court, therefore, finds that Defendants' conduct constitutes the "business of insurance," and OVERRULES Plaintiffs' second objection relating to the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

Though not specifically objected to by Plaintiffs, the Court finds that the Magistrate Judge also properly concluded that Defendants' conduct was regulated by state law. 15 U.S.C. § 1012(b). While Plaintiffs take issue with the level of review, there can be no doubt that the State of Ohio has subjected title insurance to substantial [94] regulation. As a result, the Court concludes that the McCarran-Ferguson Act bars Plaintiffs from challenging the alleged conduct as a violation of the federal antitrust laws. [24]

The Court is sympathetic to Plaintiffs' position that title insurance is different from other types of insurance, and understands that Plaintiffs believe that Ohio's [*872] statutory scheme for regulating title insurance may leave open the possibility for abuse. Nonetheless, Congress has determined that federal antitrust laws shall not serve to frustrate a state's regulation of the business of insurance. This Court must honor congressional intent and clear legal precedent that cautions against federal intervention into these state matters.

III. DEFENDANTS' ALLEGED CONDUCT IS PERMITTED BY THE OHIO INSURANCE CODE

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' claims under the Valentine [95] Act, a general antitrust statute, must be dismissed because the Ohio insurance code expressly and specifically permits the collaboration of which Plaintiffs complain. The Court agrees.

At oral argument, it became clear that the parties disputed the meaning of § 3935.06, which, in relevant part, states:

> HN35[] Co-operation among rating bureaus, or among rating bureaus and insurers, in rate making or in other matters covered by sections 3935.01 to 3935.17, inclusive, of the Revised Code, is authorized, provided the filings resulting from such co-operation are subject to all such sections which are applicable to filings generally. The superintendent may review such cooperative activities and practices and if, after a hearing, he finds that any such activity or practice is unfair, unreasonable, or otherwise inconsistent with such sections, he may issue a written order specifying in what respects such activity or practice is unfair, unreasonable, or otherwise inconsistent, and requiring the discontinuance of such activity or practice.

OHIO REV. CODE § 3935.06. Defendants assert that even if collaboration to set uniform prices of title insurance would otherwise be illegal under the Valentine Act, [96] such collaboration is specifically permitted by the Ohio insurance code section cited above. Plaintiffs insist that this section does not permit "conduct prohibited by the Valentine Act." (TR at 95.)

In List v. Burley Tobacco Growers' Co-op. Ass'n, 114 Ohio St. 361, 4 Ohio Law Abs. 194, 151 N.E. 471 (1926), the Ohio Supreme Court held, "[t]hose acts being declared to be legal by the Ohio Legislature must necessarily constitute a valid exception to the Valentine Act." Id. at 387. In List, the court determined that a 1920 Ohio law "makes provision for co-operative associations in the marketing of agricultural products" and, after determining the placement of agricultural interests in "a special class" as to exempt them from antitrust scrutiny was not unreasonable so as to violate the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment, held that the specific law permitting cooperative conduct excepted the conduct from the scrutiny of the Valentine Act. Id. at 394 (Jones, J., concurring) ("I concur in the judgment solely because the state co-operative statutes permit such agreement, and to that extent render the Ohio Valentine Act ineffective as to persons coming within the provisions of the co-operative laws.").

[24] Section 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act also makes clear that the Act should not be read to immunize from federal antitrust liability "any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." 15 U.S.C. § 1013(b). This provision is inapplicable because Plaintiffs do not allege a cognizable antitrust boycott.

Relevant [97] here, under the Valentine Act, a "trust" is defined as a "combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons for any of the following purposes: [. . .] (4) To fix at a standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer is in any manner controlled or established, an article or commodity of merchandise, produce, or commerce intended for sale, barter, use, or consumption in this state; [. . .]." OHIO REV. CODE § 1331.01(B). Plaintiffs allege that "[d]efendants collectively entered into a trust for the purpose of fixing prices in violation of the Ohio Valentine Act." (Doc. No. 36 at P 66.) Assuming Plaintiffs' allegations as true, the Court must answer the following question: is Title 39 of the Ohio insurance code [*873] intended to except the cooperative action complained of by Plaintiffs from state antitrust scrutiny under the Valentine Act? The Court answers this question in the affirmative.

Answering this question requires this Court to construe the meaning of the section of the statute which states, "[c]o-operation among rating bureaus, or among rating bureaus and insurers, in rate making or in other matters or in other matters covered by sections 3935.01 to 3935.17, [98] inclusive, of the Revised Code, is authorized [. . .]." § 3935.06. "As with any other instance in which we must interpret a state law, HN36[] 'When there is no state [case] law construing a state statute, [we] must predict how the state's highest court would interpret the statute.'" United States v. Simpson, 520 F.3d 531, 535 (6th Cir. 2000) (citing Meridian Mut. Ins. Co. v. Kellman, 197 F.3d 1178, 1181 (6th Cir. 1999)). In Ohio, "[t]he essential goal of statutory construction is to give effect to the intent of the General Assembly." Stevens v. Ackman, 91 Ohio St. 3d 182, 193, 2001 Ohio 249, 743 N.E.2d 901 (2001). "The intent may be inferred from the particular wording the General Assembly has chosen to set forth the substantive terms of a statute." Id. "Intent may also be revealed in the procedural passage of the legislative act under consideration, when that body passes legislation that enacts, amends, or repeals a statute." Id. "Where the lawmaking body declares its own intention in the enactment of a particular law, or defines the sense of the words employed, it is within the exercise of its legislative power, and its own construction of its language should be followed." State ex rel. Moore Oil Co. v. Dauben, 99 Ohio St. 406, 412-413, 124 N.E. 232 (1919).

Title [99] 39 of the Ohio revised code was enacted on October 1, 1953, when the Ohio general code was replaced by the Ohio revised code. Prior to the 1953 recodification, Ohio's insurance scheme fell under section 9592 of the Ohio general code. Section 9592 contained, within the statute itself, a declaration of the General Assembly's "own intention in the enactment of [the] particular law [. . .]." Specifically, the General Assembly stated: "The purpose of this act [G.C. §§ 9592-1 to 9592-18] is to promote the public welfare by regulating insurance rates to the end they shall not be excessive, inadequate or discriminatory, and to authorize and regulate cooperative action among insurers in rate making and other matters within the scope of this act." OHIO GEN. CODE § 9592-1. (Eff. Dec. 31, 1947) (emphasis added). This statement of purpose was not in the recodified statutes. In adopting the Ohio revised code, however, the General Assembly specifically stated in this section that it did "not" intend "to change the law as heretofore expressed by the section or sections of the General Code." State v. Kotapish, 171 Ohio St. 349, 351, 171 N.E.2d 505 (1960) (decided under former analogous section); see also Ohio Bank & Sav. Co. v. Tri-County Nat'l Bank, 411 F.2d 801, 804 (6th Cir. 1969) [100] (section 1.24 (former analogous section) "makes it clear that a substantive change was not intended").

Thus, the very conduct complained of by the Plaintiffs--cooperative action among insurers to set the rates of title insurance--was specifically contemplated and authorized by the Ohio General Assembly when it enacted the original statute, which was later recodified as it is now constituted. Additionally, List v. Burley teaches that a later-in-time law specifically permitting cooperative conduct excepts that conduct from the scrutiny of the general provisions of the Valentine Act.

The Ohio Revised Code's rules of construction also compel this conclusion. Price fixing is a violation of the Valentine [*874] Act, which was enacted in 1898. See Rayess v. Lane Drug Co., 138 Ohio St. 401, 405, 35 N.E.2d 447 (1941); OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 1331.01(B)(4). The Valentine Act is a statute of general application, and its price fixing provision broadly encompasses any "article or commodity of merchandise, produce, or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state." Id. As discussed in the preceding paragraphs, however, the Ohio insurance statutory scheme, enacted in 1947, specifically permits collaboration [101] between insurers to fix rates of insurance. The two statutes are plainly in conflict. Section 1.51 of the Revised Code informs this exact situation. [25] "HN37[] OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 1.51 provides that if general and special provisions conflict, the specific provision takes precedent as an exception to the general provision unless the legislature provides otherwise." *Bucheit Int'l v. Ameritrust Co. Nat'l Ass'n, No. 95-4267, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 1026 at 11 (6th Cir. Jan. 17, 1997). Here, the "specific provision" of the insurance code "takes precedent as an exception to the general provision" on price fixing as contained in the Valentine Act.

This conclusion is also supported by recalling the context under which the insurance code was enacted. At the [102] time of the 1953 recodification, section 9592 had existed in its current form since December 31, 1947. See Home Ins. Co. v. Albers Super Markets, Inc., 61 Ohio Law Abs. 62, 103 N.E.2d 17 (Ohio Ct. App. 1950) (discussing the prior provisions of section 9592 and noting that those sections were repealed effective Dec. 31, 1947). Prior to 1944, the United States Supreme Court had consistently held that the business of insurance was not commerce. See, e.g., Paul v. Virginia, 75 U.S. (8 Wall.) 168, 183, 19 L. Ed. 357 (1869) ("Issuing a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce."). Until 1944, in fact, the business of insurance, in consequence, was largely immune from federal regulation. See St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 539, 98 S. Ct. 2923, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932 (1978) ("The States enjoyed a virtually exclusive domain over the insurance industry."). Indeed, commentators have noted that state regulatory policy viewed monopolistic insurance rate-fixing prior to 1944 with indifference. Joel B. Dirlam and Irwin M. Stelzer, A Case Study in the Workability of Regulated Competition, 107 U. PA. L. REV. 199, 213 (1958-1959). Specific to Ohio, there is evidence that courts did not consider the collaborative actions of insurers to come [103] within the prohibitions of the Valentine Act:

> There may be good reasons why combinations by insurance agents for the purpose of increasing rates of insurance should be prohibited, but that will not justify a court in holding that such combinations are prohibited by a law which prohibits combinations with reference to articles which may be produced, transported and used and which are the subject of barter and sale.
>
> If it is thought wise to extend the provisions of the antitrust law of Ohio so as to include the business of insurance, labor unions and everything about which a person may be engaged, the legislature can very easily use language which will clearly express that intention, but it is sufficient for the determination of this case to say that such intention does not [*875] clearly appear from a consideration of the present law.

State v. Bovee, 6 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 337, 17 Ohio Dec. 663, 670-71 (Ohio C.P. 1907) (holding business of fire insurance not within the terms "trade," "commerce," or "commodity" as used in the Valentine Act).

In United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 64 S. Ct. 1162, 88 L. Ed. 1440 (1944), however, the Supreme Court held for the first time that an insurance company doing business across state lines [104] engages in interstate commerce, and that the Sherman Act therefore applied to "business of insurance." Id. at 553, 553-562. ("No commercial enterprise of any kind which conducts its activities across state lines has been held to be wholly beyond the regulatory power of Congress under the Commerce Clause. We cannot make an exception of the business of insurance."). South-Eastern "was vigorously protested in the insurance field. The insurance companies, relying upon the court's previous rulings, had engaged in practices which were prohibited under the federal antitrust laws but which were permitted under the laws and regulations of the various states." National Casualty Co. v. Federal Trade Com., 245 F.2d 883, 885 (6th Cir. 1957), aff'd FTC v. National Casualty Co., 357 U.S. 560, 78 S. Ct. 1260, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1540 (1958).

---

[25] In its entirety, § 1.51 reads:

> HN38[] If a general provision conflicts with a special or local provision, they shall be construed, if possible, so that effect is given to both. If the conflict between the provisions is irreconcilable, the special or local provision prevails as an exception to the general provision, unless the general provision is the later adoption and the manifest intent is that the general provision prevail.

OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 1.51.

Both Houses of Congress characterized South-Eastern as "precedent-smashing" and quickly worked to enact a legislative reversal of the effects of the decision. Perry v. Fidelity Union Life Ins. Co., 606 F.2d 468, 473 (5th Cir. Ala. 1979) (citing H.R. Rep. No. 143, 79th Cong., 2d Sess. (1945), Reprinted in 1945 U.S. Code Cong. Serv. 670, 671; S.Rep. No. 20, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. 2 (1945)). Out of this concern [105] "that [South-Eastern Underwriters] might undermine state efforts to regulate insurance, Congress in 1945 enacted the McCarran-Ferguson Act." Humana Inc. v. Forsyth, 525 U.S. 299, 306, 119 S. Ct. 710, 142 L. Ed. 2d 753 (1999). As discussed in Royal Drug, the legislative history of the McCarran Ferguson Act reflects "[t]he consistent theme of [. . .] a primary concern that cooperative ratemaking would be protected from the antitrust laws." Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 223 (citing Senator Ferguson's floor debate remarks: "What we saw as wrong was the fixing of rates without statutory authority in the States; but we believe that State rights should permit a State to say that it believes in a rating bureau."). As discussed above, the McCarran-Ferguson Act exempted the "business of insurance" from federal antitrust scrutiny under the Sherman Act, except to the extent that such business was not regulated by state law. But McCarran-Ferguson also provided for a moratorium, until January 1, 1948, [26] on any enforcement of the Sherman Act to "the business of insurance or acts in the conduct thereof." 15 U.S.C § 1013.

"The purpose of the moratorium was to allow the States three years to take steps to regulate [106] the business of insurance." Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 220 n.22. During the moratorium, the majority of state legislatures, including Ohio's, enacted insurance regulatory legislation, modeled along the lines of a model bill drafted by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners. See George K. Gardner, Insurance and the Anti-Trust Laws, 61 HARV. L. REV. 246, 247 (1948). These laws "were intended to provide that degree of regulation of the insurance business which would avoid the Scylla of prosecution under the Sherman Act and the Charbydis of oppressive state regulation." See Dirlam & Stelzer, 96 U. PA. L. REV. at [*876] 224-25. The Ohio statutory scheme was enacted to provide that degree of required regulation to alleviate federal concern about the fixing of rates without statutory authority.

Relevant to Plaintiffs' state law claims here, HN39[] the Ohio Supreme Court has repeatedly noted that the Valentine Act was patterned after the Sherman Act, and has "consistently interpreted the Valentine Act in accordance with federal judicial construction of the federal antitrust laws--without regard to when the federal court announced the case law." Johnson v. Microsoft Corp., 106 Ohio St. 3d 278, 284, 2005 Ohio 4985, 834 N.E.2d 791 (2005) [107] (collecting cases).

As discussed above, the Ohio statutory scheme was specifically intended to authorize cooperative conduct among insurers to set rates and to regulate such behavior as to place it beyond the reach of the Sherman Act. In light of the construction and interpretation given to the Valentine Act by the Ohio Supreme Court, which tracks the federal statute, then, like the federal scheme, the Ohio statutory scheme places this cooperative conduct beyond the reach of the Valentine Act. To hold that the Ohio General Assembly intended to make collaboration by insurers to set rates illegal for purposes of the Valentine Act when enacting a statutory scheme specifically permitting such conduct would be an anomalous result.

Moreover, and contrary to Plaintiffs' insinuations, the Ohio statutory scheme does not merely "condone price fixing." (Doc. No. 77 at pp. 8-9.) See Allstate Ins. Co. v. Lanier, 242 F. Supp. 73, 88 (E.D.N.C. 1965) (asking "[i]s the State merely lending the color of authority to what would otherwise be unlawful conduct under the Sherman Act? This the State cannot do," and then examining state law that required insurer membership in a rating bureau, and concluding [108] that sufficient safeguards, including the right to file for deviations and the public protest, existed to allow for competition). While the Ohio statutory scheme does not provide for unfettered collaboration between insurers, it does incorporate several procedural safeguards designed to promote competition. [27] First, in the sentences immediately following § 3935.06's authorization of "[c]o-operation among rating bureaus, and among rating bureaus and insurers," the superintendent is given the power to "review such co-operative activities and practices and if, after a hearing, he finds that any such activity or practice is unfair, unreasonable, or otherwise inconsistent with such sections, he may issue a written order [. . .] requiring the discontinuance of such activity or practice." Id. Moreover, the public has the right to complain to the superintendent: "[a]ny person or organization aggrieved with respect to any filing that is in effect may make written application to the superintendent for a hearing thereon [. . .]." § 3935.05(D).

[26] Later amended to June 30, 1948.

[27] Indeed, Plaintiffs themselves cite to an example of an insurance company "not a party to Defendants' price-fixing agreement," Entitle Direct Insurance, [109] that allegedly offers lower prices than Defendants.

Next, insurers are not required to become a member of, or a subscriber to, any rating bureau. § 3935.04(B). Beyond merely not requiring membership, however, the statute allows for competition by allowing non-members to subscribe to the rating services provided by the rating bureaus, which "shall furnish its rating services without discrimination to its members and subscribers." § 3935.06 (emphasis added). Finally, the statutory scheme provides that any insurer who has filed a rate through a rating bureau "may make written application to file a deviation from the class rates, schedules, rating plans, or rules respecting any kind [*877] of insurance [. . .]." § 3935.07. Indeed, the superintendent "shall issue an order permitting the deviation if he finds it is justified [under the code]" and shall only deny such application for a deviation if "he finds that the resulting premiums would be excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory." § 3935.07.

Note that the Ohio insurance code is not necessarily intended to encourage competition. Indeed, the introductory statute states that the code does "not prohibit or encourage reasonable competition, [110] or prohibit or encourage uniformity in insurance rates [. . .]." OHIO REV. CODE § 3935.01; see also OHIO GEN. CODE § 9592-1 (substantially same). But, as discussed in the preceding paragraph, the scheme allows competition sufficient to exempt Defendants' alleged behavior from scrutiny under the Sherman Act, and therefore by analogy, to the Valentine Act. Plaintiffs insist that that more competition by title insurance companies "is not only possible, but [would] produce the substantial and predictable benefits to consumers one would expect." (Doc. No. 115-1 at 3-4 (citing lower title insurance prices in Iowa).) But "the question before [this Court] is not whether the Ohio method of regulation compares favorably with the regulations of other states, or whether it is an ideal manner in which to regulate the business of insurance." Ohio AFL-CIO, 451 F.2d at 1183. Plaintiffs may well be correct that a different statutory scheme would ultimately benefit Ohioans. But this is a determination for the Ohio General Assembly, not this Court.

Because the Court arrives at the same conclusion as the Magistrate Judge as to the viability of Plaintiffs' state antitrust claim, but via different analysis, [111] the Court ADOPTS the Magistrate Judge's conclusion but REJECTS her analysis. Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims under the Valentine Act is GRANTED.

IV. THE NATURE OF THE DISMISSAL

Defendants also object to the Magistrate Judge's Report to the extent that it recommends that the Consolidated Complaint be dismissed without prejudice. After determining that Plaintiffs' claims were barred by the filed rate doctrine and/or the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the Magistrate Judge suggested that the dismissal be without prejudice to afford Plaintiffs the opportunity to "amend the Complaint to meet the Twombly/Iqbal standard, if possible." (Report at 56.) Defendants insist that this result is inconsistent with the Magistrate Judge's determination that Defendants' conduct is exempt from antitrust scrutiny.

HN40[] "The dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is a 'judgment on the merits,' and is therefore done with prejudice." Pratt v. Ventas, Inc., 365 F.3d 514, 522 (6th Cir. 2004) (citing Federated Dep't Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 399 n.3, 101 S. Ct. 2424, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103 (1981)). While Plaintiffs acknowledge that the Magistrate Judge found that, as a matter of law, the Sherman [112] Act claim was barred by the filed rate doctrine, they underscore the fact that she left open the possibility that a federal claim for injunctive relief may still exist. Plaintiffs forget, however, that the Magistrate Judge also found, and this Court agrees, that the McCarran-Ferguson Act is a complete bar to Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claim. See, Ohio AFL-CIO, 451 F.2d at 1185 (in affirming the dismissal of a federal antitrust action seeking damages and injunctive relief, the Sixth Circuit observed that: "Concluding, as we do, that the complaint failed to state a claim on which relief could be granted, it would not be proper to remand the action to the district court […].") See, e.g., Commander Leasing Co., 477 F.2d at 86 (dismissal of federal antitrust [*878] action seeking damages and injunctive relief as barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act). It would, therefore, be an exercise in futility to permit Plaintiffs to further amend. See Sinay v. The Lamson & Sessions Co., 948 F.2d 1037, 1041 (6th Cir. 1991). Defendants' objection is, therefore, SUSTAINED, the Court REJECTS the portion of the Report that recommends a dismissal of the federal antitrust claim without prejudice, and the Sherman [113] Act claim is DISMISSED with prejudice. [28]

The same logic holds true for Plaintiffs' Valentine Act claim. The focal point of Plaintiffs' Consolidated Complaint is the challenge to the manner in which proposed title insurance rates are brought before the Ohio Department of Insurance. Yet, as this Court has determined, Defendants' activities in arriving at these proposed rates are not unlawful and are permitted under the governing statutes. In fact, [114] this collaborative rate-making was contemplated when the Ohio General Assembly put this regulatory framework into place. Because the conduct which forms the basis of Plaintiffs' case is not unlawful, Plaintiffs could not re-plead in such a way that would state a cause of action under Ohio law. Any such attempt would be futile, and will, for that reason, not be permitted. Plaintiffs' Valentine Act claim will also be DISMISSED with prejudice, and the portion of the Report that recommends dismissal of this claim without prejudice is REJECTED.

CONCLUSION

For all of the reasons set forth in this Memorandum Opinion, the Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation (Doc. No. 102) is ADOPTED, in part, and REJECTED, in part. Both of the claims in the Consolidated Complaint shall be DISMISSED, with prejudice, against all Defendants. Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a cause of action (Doc. No. 43) is GRANTED, and Defendant Old Republic's Motion to Dismiss (Doc. No. 41) is also GRANTED. Defendant Stewart's Motion to Dismiss (Doc. No. 42) is DENIED as moot. The Clerk is directed to close the following cases: Case No.1:08CV677, 1:08CV678, 1:08CV741, 4:08CV750, 1:08CV803, 1:08CV1021, [115] 5:08CV1289, and 1:08CV1836.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: March 31, 2010

/s/ Sara Lioi

HONORABLE SARA LIOI

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

[28] The Court finds that the dismissal of the corporate parent Defendants should also be with prejudice. The Magistrate Judge correctly determined that a corporate parent Defendant could not be liable under the Sherman Act merely for approving or assenting to the actions of its affiliate or subsidiary. See Cupp v. Alberto-Culver USA, Inc., 310 F. Supp. 2d 963, 973-74 (W.D. Tenn. 2004). She recommended that these defendants be dismissed, without prejudice, for this additional reason. Because Plaintiffs have not alleged any facts that would suggest that the corporate parent Defendants played a role in any alleged conspiracy, the Court finds that it would be futile to permit Plaintiffs leave to attempt to re-plead a cause of action against them.

LexisNexis®

Mun. Revenue Serv., Inc. v. Xspand, Inc.

United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania

March 31, 2010, Decided; March 31, 2010, Filed

4:05-cv-671

Reporter

700 F. Supp. 2d 692 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31290 **

MUNICIPAL REVENUE SERVICE, INC., Plaintiff, v. XSPAND, INC. and BEAR STEARNS & CO., INC., Defendants.

Prior History: Mun. Revenue Servs., Inc. v. Xspand, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32078 (M.D. Pa., Apr. 17, 2008)

Core Terms

transactions, marketing, school district, literally, falsity, customer, asserts, entities, proceeds, contends, damages, booked, summary judgment motion, government entity, financing, summary judgment, disparagement, declaration, deposition, expert testimony, joint venture, lost profits, defamation, global, petitioning activity, do business, Noerr Pennington Doctrine, municipalities, allegations, borrowing

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Absence of Essential Element

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Burdens of Proof, Absence of Essential Element

Summary judgment is appropriate if the record establishes that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that a movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Initially, a moving party bears the burden of demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. The movant meets this burden by pointing to an absence of evidence supporting an essential element as to which the non-moving party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Once the moving party meets its burden, the burden then shifts to the non-moving party to show that there is a genuine issue for trial. Rule 56(e)(2). An issue is "genuine" only if there is a sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to find for the non-moving party, and a factual dispute is "material" only if it might affect the outcome of the action under the governing law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > Accompanying Documentation

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN2[] Opposing Materials, Accompanying Documentation

In opposing summary judgment, a non-moving party may not rely merely on allegations of denials in its own pleadings; rather, its response must set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2). The non-moving party cannot rely on unsupported allegations, but must go beyond pleadings and provide some evidence that would show that there exists a genuine issue for trial. Arguments made in briefs are not evidence and cannot by themselves create a factual dispute sufficient to defeat a summary judgment motion. However, the facts and all reasonable inferences drawn therefrom must be viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN3[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment should not be granted when there is a disagreement about the facts or the proper inferences that a fact finder could draw from them. Still, the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; there must be a genuine issue of material fact to preclude summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr Pennington Doctrine initially immunized private parties against liability for antitrust violations stemming from valid petitioning activities. However, some courts have held that its application extends beyond the realm of antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN5[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr Pennington Doctrine has its foundations in the right to petition the government for a redress of grievances under U.S. Const. amend. I. Accordingly, in order for the doctrine to apply there must be some sort of valid "petitioning activity." In defining the contours of "petitioning activity," the Third Circuit has determined that the concept extends beyond attempts to influence the passage and enforcement of laws and applies equally to efforts to influence administrative agency action, and efforts to access the court system. Nonetheless, the concept of "petitioning activity" as it relates to Noerr Pennington cannot be given a meaning that would provide more extensive protection to petitioning activity than would the First Amendment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN6[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The only restriction placed upon the Noerr Pennington Doctrine is the so-called "sham exception," under which a defendant is not protected if he or she is simply using the petition process as a means of harassment. The sham exception applies when persons use the governmental process-as opposed to the outcome of that process-as an anti-competitive weapon.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN7[] Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 permits parties to plead inconsistent and conflicting theories of recovery.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN8[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

With respect to the sham exception to the Noerr Pennington Doctrine, motive may be relevant if it demonstrates a party acted without a legitimate desire for government action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

HN9[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

To establish a claim under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1051 et seq., based on a false or misleading representation of a product, a plaintiff must show: (i) that the defendant has made false or misleading statements as to his own product (or another's); (ii) that there is actual deception or at least a tendency to deceive a substantial portion of the intended audience; (iii) that the deception is material in that it is likely to influence purchasing decisions; (iv) that the advertised goods traveled in interstate commerce; and (v) that there is a likelihood of injury to the plaintiff in terms of declining sales, loss of good will, etc. To the extent a plaintiff seeks monetary damages pursuant to its Lanham Act false advertising claim, it must adduce evidence of causation, i.e. actual consumer deception, regardless of whether the challenged marketing statement was "literally false."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN10[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

The common law cause of action for unfair competition in Pennsylvania mirrors the Lanham Act's § 43(a) cause of action for unfair competition, except that under state law there is no requirement that the goods traveled through interstate commerce.

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Torts > ... > Defamation > Elements > General Overview

Torts > ... > Defamation > Defenses > Truth

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Procedural Matters

HN11[] Burdens of Proof, Allocation

In a defamation case, a plaintiff must prove: (i) the defamatory character of the communication; (ii) its publication by the defendant; (iii) its application to the plaintiff; (iv) the understanding by the recipient of its defamatory meaning; (v) the understanding by the recipient of it as intended to be applied to the plaintiff; (vi) special harm resulting to the plaintiff from its publication; and (vii) abuse of a conditionally privileged occasion. Falsity is an implicit element of a defamation cause of action because truth is an absolute defense. 42 Pa.C.S. § 8343(b).

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > Elements

HN12[] Burdens of Proof, Allocation

In Pennsylvania, a claim for commercial disparagement requires proof that: (i) the statement is false; (ii) the publisher either intends the publication to cause pecuniary loss or reasonably should recognize that publication will result in pecuniary loss; (iii) pecuniary loss does in fact result; and (iv) the publisher either knows that the statement is false or acts in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Helpfulness

HN13[] Expert Witnesses, Helpfulness

Fed. R. Evid. 702 requires expert testimony when factual matters are outside the ken of lay individuals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

HN14[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

In analyzing whether an advertisement is literally false for purposes of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1051 et seq., a court must determine, first, the unambiguous claims made by the advertisement and, second, whether those claims are false.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN15[] Intentional Interference, Elements

The requisite elements of a cause of action for interference with prospective contractual relations are as follows: (i) a prospective contractual relationship; (ii) the purpose or intent to harm the plaintiff by preventing the relation from occurring; (iii) the absence of privilege or justification on the part of the defendant; and (iv) the occasioning of actual damage resulting from the defendant's conduct.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Credibility of Witnesses > General Overview

HN16[] Jury Trials, Province of Court & Jury

Credibility determinations reside within the exclusive province of the jury.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Evidence > ... > Statements as Evidence > Hearsay > General Overview

HN17[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

Hearsay statements that would be inadmissible at trial may not be considered for purposes of summary judgment.

Evidence > ... > Exceptions > State of Mind > General Overview

HN18[] Exceptions, State of Mind

See Fed. R. Evid. 803(3).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

Evidence > ... > Exceptions > State of Mind > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Procedural Matters > Rulings on Evidence

HN19[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

For purposes of a claim under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1051 et seq., statements of a customer to an employee are admissible if the customer's motive is relevant to the action. Indeed, hearsay statements of a customer as to his reasons for not dealing with a supplier may be admissible for the limited purpose of proving customer motive. It is only if the statements are used to prove the fact that the customer stopped buying the product from this supplier, bought the product from someone else instead, or stopped buying the product altogether, that they become inadmissible.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Defamation Per Se

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > Elements

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Procedural Matters

HN20[] Defamation, Defamation Per Se

To determine whether a statement is capable of a defamatory meaning, courts consider whether the statement tends so to harm the reputation of another as to lower him in the estimation of the community or to deter third parties from associating or dealing with him. While an action for defamation normally focuses on whether the statement in question tarnishes the reputation of a plaintiff, and an action for commercial disparagement focuses on the statements regarding the plaintiff's goods or services, there are times when impugnation of product quality crosses the line from disparagement of products to defamation of vendors. Where the publication on its face is directed against the goods or product of a corporate vendor or manufacturer, it will not be held libelous per se as to the corporation, unless by fair construction and without the aid of extrinsic evidence it imputes to the corporation fraud, deceit, dishonesty, or reprehensible conduct in its business in relation to said goods or product.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Procedural Matters

HN21[] Defamation, Procedural Matters

While extrinsic evidence cannot be used when determining whether a statement denigrates the products or vendor, it can be taken into consideration after determining that the statement denigrates the vendor, i.e., only after a court determines that the statement is of a type that could be capable of defamatory meaning. In that case, the context in which the statement is made is important in determining whether the statement is capable of defamatory meaning.

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Procedural Matters

HN22[] Business Torts, Trade Libel

For a statement to cross the line from a disparagement of product to defamation of vendor, the statement itself must either expressly or impliedly allege that a plaintiff is dishonest or otherwise disreputable.

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > Elements

HN23[] Trade Libel, Elements

For purposes of a claim of commercial disparagement, "reckless disregard" is defined as the serious indifference to truth or accuracy of a publication.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN24[] Intentional Interference, Elements

For purposes of the tortious interference with prospective contractual relations, a "prospective contractual relationship" is something less than a contractual right, something more than a mere hope, and exists when there is reasonable probability that a contract will arise from the parties' current dealings.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN25[] Intentional Interference, Elements

One who intentionally causes a third person not to enter into a prospective contractual relation with another who is his competitor, or not to continue an existing contract terminable at will, does not interfere improperly with the other's relation if: (a) the relation concerns a matter involved in the competition between the actor and the other; and (b) the actor does not employ wrongful means; and (c) his action does not create or continue an unlawful restraint of trade; and (d) his purpose is at least in part to advance his interest in competing with the other. The fact that one is a competitor of another for the business of a third person does not prevent his causing a breach of an existing contract with the other from being an improper interference if the contract is not terminable at will.

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Torts > ... > Types of Losses > Lost Income > General Overview

HN26[] Burdens of Proof, Allocation

Under Pennsylvania law, lost profits may be recovered when: (i) there is evidence to establish the damages with reasonable certainty; (ii) they were the proximate consequence of the alleged wrong; and (iii) they were reasonably foreseeable. While a plaintiff's proof of damages need not be mathematically precise, the evidence must establish the fact of damages "with a fair degree of probability."

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN27[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) requires that a complaint contain a short and plain statement of a claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief in order to give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > Formation

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN28[] Joint Ventures, Formation

The essential elements of a joint venture include: (i) a joint proprietary interest in, and a right to mutual control over, the enterprise; (ii) a contribution by each of the parties of capital, materials, services or knowledge; and (iii) a right to participate in the expected profits. Although the existence or nonexistence of a joint venture involves a determination of intent, where the essential elements of a joint venture are clearly absent, the determination may be made on a motion for summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

HN29[] False Advertising, Lanham Act

To obtain monetary damages in a § 43(a) Lanham Act false advertising case, a plaintiff seeking such damages must prove actual consumer deception, even if the claim is based on "literal falsity."

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedures > Tax Injunction Act

HN30[] Federal Tax Administration & Procedures, Tax Injunction Act

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 1341.

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedures > Tax Injunction Act

HN31[] Federal Tax Administration & Procedures, Tax Injunction Act

A lien sale is a mode of tax collection; and so an action to enjoin it, or declare it illegal, or rescind it would be barred by the Tax Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1341, or, in the case of the damages suit, by the free-standing principle of comity.

Tax Law > Federal Tax Administration & Procedures > Tax Injunction Act

HN32[] Federal Tax Administration & Procedures, Tax Injunction Act

The legislative history of the Tax Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1341, shows that, in enacting the statute, Congress focused on taxpayers who sought to avoid paying their state tax bill by pursuing a challenge route other than the one specified by the taxing authority. Accordingly, the Act has been interpreted and applied only in cases Congress wrote the statute to address, i.e., cases in which state taxpayers seek federal-court orders enabling them to avoid paying state taxes.

Counsel: [1] For Municipal Revenue Services, Inc., Plaintiff: John G. Dean, LEAD ATTORNEY, Elliott Greenleaf & Siedzikowski, P.C., Scranton, PA; John M. Elliott, LEAD ATTORNEY, Elliott, Greenleaf & Siedzikowski PC, Blue Bell, PA; John P. Elliott, LEAD ATTORNEY, Elliott Greenleaf & Siedzikowski, P.C., Blue Bell, PA; Mark J. Schwemler, LEAD ATTORNEY, Elliott, Greenleaf & Siedzikowski, PC, Blue Bell, PA; Bruce W. Kauffman, Elliott Greenleaf, Philadelphia, PA.

For Thomas J. Ellis, James R. Matthews, Montgomery County Commissioners, Movants: John P. Gonzales, LEAD ATTORNEY, Marshall, Dennehey, Warner, Coleman & Goggin, King of Prussia, PA; Philip W. Newcomer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Office of the Montgomery County Solicitor's Office, Norristown, PA.

For XSPAND, Inc., Defendant: C. Grainger Bowman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kirkpatrick & Lockhart Preston Gates Ellis LLP, Harrisburg, PA; David R. Fine, LEAD ATTORNEY, K&L Gates LLP, Harrisburg, PA.

For Bear, Stearns & Co, Inc., Defendant: Craig E. Ziegler, Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads, Philadelphia, PA.

For Steven W. Cappelli, Miscellaneous Party: James G. Mann, Rodney A. Corey, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Harrisburg, PA.

For Dominic Pileggi, Senate of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, [2] Unknown Party Types: Thomas W. Dymek, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stradley Ronon Stevens & Young, LLP, Philadelphia, PA.

For James R. Matthews, Amicus: Philip W. Newcomer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Office of the Montgomery County Solicitor's Office, Norristown, PA.

For Montgomery County Commissioners, Amicus: Philip W. Newcomer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Office of the Montgomery County Solicitor's Office, Norristown, PA; Robert L. Knupp, Knupp, Kodak & Imblum, P.C., Harrisburg, PA.

For Gregg Melinson, Intervenor: Patrick J. Stapleton, LEAD ATTORNEY, Weber Gallagher Simpson Stapleton Fires & Newby LLP, Philadelphia, PA; Andrew K. Worek, Weber Gallagher Siimpson Stapleton Fires & Newby, LLP, Philadelphia, PA.

For XSPAND, Inc., Counterclaim Plaintiff: David R. Fine, LEAD ATTORNEY, K&L Gates LLP, Harrisburg, PA; C. Grainger Bowman, Kirkpatrick & Lockhart Preston Gates Ellis LLP, Harrisburg, PA.

For Municipal Revenue Services, Inc., Counterclaim Defendant: John P. Elliott, Elliott Greenleaf & Siedzikowski, P.C., Blue Bell, PA.

Judges: Hon. John E. Jones III, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: John E. Jones III

Opinion

[*696] MEMORANDUM and ORDER

Currently pending before the Court are three motions for summary judgment. The first was filed by Defendant Xspand, [3] Inc. ("Xspand"). (Doc. 445). The second is a partial motion for summary judgment filed by Plaintiff Municipal Revenue Service, Inc. ("Plaintiff" or "MRS"). (Doc. 449). The third was filed by Defendant Bear Stearns & Co., Inc. ("Bear"). (Doc. 451). For the reasons that follow, all three motions shall be granted in part and denied in part.

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiff initiated the instant action on April 1, 2005 by filing a five count complaint against Xspand containing the following claims: (i) violation of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1051, et seq.; (ii) unfair competition; (iii) defamation; (iv) commercial disparagement; and (v) tortious interference with prospective contractual relations. (See Doc. 1). On October 17, 2005, Plaintiff filed an amended complaint that added Bear as a Defendant and asserted against it all five of the above-referenced claims. (See Doc. 69). On March 4, 2009, Xspand filed its motion for summary judgment, (Doc. 445) (the "Xspand Motion"), MRS filed its partial summary judgment motion, (Doc. 449) (the "MRS Motion"), and Bear filed its summary judgment motion, (Doc. 451) (the "Bear Motion"). Since all three motions have been fully briefed, they are ripe for [4] disposition.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] Summary judgment is appropriate if the record establishes "that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Initially, the moving party bears the burden of demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The movant meets this burden by pointing to an absence of evidence supporting an essential element as to which the non-moving party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Id. at 325. Once the moving party meets its burden, the burden then shifts to the non-moving party to show that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2). An issue is "genuine" only if there is a sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to find for the non-moving party, and a factual dispute is "material" only if it might affect the outcome of the action under the governing law. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248-49, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

HN2[] In opposing summary judgment, the non-moving party "may not rely merely on allegations of denials in its own pleadings; rather, its response must … set out specific [5] facts showing a genuine issue [*697] for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2). The non-moving party "cannot rely on unsupported allegations, but must go beyond pleadings and provide some evidence that would show that there exists a genuine issue for trial." Jones v. United Parcel Serv., 214 F.3d 402, 407 (3d Cir. 2000). Arguments made in briefs "are not evidence and cannot by themselves create a factual dispute sufficient to defeat a summary judgment motion." Jersey Cent. Power & Light Co. v. Twp. of Lacey, 772 F.2d 1103, 1109-10 (3d Cir. 1985). However, the facts and all reasonable inferences drawn therefrom must be viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. P.N. v. Clementon Bd. of Educ., 442 F.3d 848, 852 (3d Cir. 2006).

HN3[] Summary judgment should not be granted when there is a disagreement about the facts or the proper inferences that a fact finder could draw from them. Peterson v. Lehigh Valley Dist. Council, 676 F.2d 81, 84 (3d Cir. 1982). Still, "the mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; there must be a genuine issue of material fact to preclude summary judgment." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 247-48.

III. [6] FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The parties and the Court are all too intimately familiar with the facts undergirding this case. Therefore, for the purposes of disposing the various motions, we shall simply make a generalized statement of fact. [1] We shall refer to or address specific facts in our discussion only as they become necessary for the resolution of the pending motions.

At all times pertinent to the instant litigation, MRS was in the business of purchasing delinquent tax liens from municipalities and school districts in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. (See Compl. PP 7). At all relevant times, Xspand was a competitor of MRS in Pennsylvania. (Id. P 10). MRS alleges that Xspand has used false and misleading advertising to unfairly compete against it. (Id. P 17). Specifically, MRS claims that Xspand has disseminated misinformation regarding the nature of its services, in that Xspand has, inter alia, informed potential MRS customers that MRS-facilitated transactions produced debt, not revenue, for the taxing entity. (See id. PP 18-49). MRS [7] alleges that Xspand's conduct has caused it to lose a substantial part of its business in the form of both current and prospective customers. (See id. PP 24-25, 32, 43). Plaintiff contends that Bear may be held liable for Xspand's conduct because a joint venture or agency relationship exists between Bear and Xspand, and because the former endorses the conduct of the latter. (See id. PP 10-12, 27). These allegations form the basic foundation of the five causes of action asserted by MRS against Xspand and Bear.

IV. DISCUSSION

As stated, all three parties to the instant litigation have filed summary judgment motions. We shall address these motions in turn, beginning with the motions of Defendants Xspand and Bear and concluding with the MRS Motion.

A. The Xspand Motion

The Xspand Motion lodges numerous grounds for dismissal of Plaintiff's claims, including global infirmities afflicting the complaint as a whole and discrete infirmities associated with each count specifically. [*698] We shall address these in turn, beginning with the former.

i. Global Infirmities

The first global defect involves the Noerr Pennington Doctrine, which Xspand asserts bars each count of the complaint. HN4[] This doctrine, which [8] emanated from the cases Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight Co., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961), and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965), initially immunized private parties against liability for antitrust violations stemming from valid petitioning activities. See A.D. Bedell Wholesale Co., Inc. v. Phillip Morris Inc., 263 F.3d 239, 251 (3d Cir. 2001). However, some courts have held that its application extends beyond the realm of antitrust law, see, e.g., Cheminor Drugs, Ltd. v. Ethyl Corp., 168 F.3d 119, 128-29 (3d. Cir. 1999) (construing New Jersey law and extending Noerr Pennington immunity to state tort claims); Brownsville

[1] Since our factual recitation is merely a broad overview of the basis for the instant litigation, it is generally taken from Plaintiff's amended complaint.

Golden Age Nursing Home, Inc. v. Wells, 839 F.2d 155 (3d Cir 1988) (invoking the Noerr Pennington Doctrine to uphold dismissal of civil conspiracy and tortious interference with business relations claims); *Caixa Geral de Depositos, S.A. v. Rodrigues, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24339, 2005 WL 1541055 * 11 (D.N.J. 2005)* (applying the Noerr Pennington Doctrine to defamation claims); Santana Prods. v. Bobrick Washroom Equipment, Inc., 249 F.Supp.2d 463 (M.D. Pa. 2003) (Vanaskie, J.) (dismissing Lanham Act claims pursuant to the Noerr Pennington Doctrine); [2] Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Immunex Corp., 84 F. Supp. 2d 574, 578 (D.N.J. 2000) [9] (invoking the Noerr Pennington Doctrine to deny as futile a motion to amend seeking to assert a claim for unfair competition). Accordingly, and as stated, Xspand asserts that the doctrine should be extended to all of Plaintiff's claims and that its application serves to bar the same.

In resolving this issue, it is well to note that HN5[] the Noerr Pennington Doctrine has its foundations in the First Amendment right to petition the government for a redress of grievances. See Santana Prods. v. Bobrick Washroom Equipment, Inc., 401 F.3d 123, 131 n.13 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing U.S. CONST. amend. I). Accordingly, as intimated above, in order for the doctrine to apply there must be some sort of valid "petitioning activity." See Hill v. Borough of Kutztown, 455 F.3d 225, 243 (3d. Cir. 2006) [10] ("We further hold that [Defendant] is not entitled to petitioning immunity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine because the conduct with which he is charged cannot be construed as 'petitioning activity' under any reasonable interpretation of that term."); see also Bedell, 263 F.3d at 251 ("[I]f its conduct constitutes valid petitioning, the petitioner is immune from antitrust liability whether or not the injuries are caused by the act of petitioning or are caused by government action which results from the petitioning.").

In defining the contours of "petitioning activity," the Third Circuit has determined that the concept "extends beyond attempts to influence the passage and enforcement of laws and applies equally to efforts to influence administrative agency action, and efforts to access the court system." Santana Prods., 401 F.3d at 131 n.3 (internal citations omitted). Nonetheless, the concept of "petitioning activity" as it relates to [*699] Noerr Pennington cannot be given a meaning that would provide more extensive protection to petitioning activity than would the First Amendment. See We, Inc. v. City of Philadelphia, 174 F.3d 322, 327 (3d Cir. 1999).

In the case at bar, the "petitioning [11] activity" in question involves the distribution of information by Xspand comparing MRS-facilitated transactions to Xspand-facilitated transactions in an apparent attempt to persuade governmental entities to chose Xspand's services over MRS' services. [3] MRS maintains that the information distributed by Xspand misrepresented that MRS-facilitated transactions produce debt, not revenue, for a governmental entity and could have a negative impact on the entity's credit rating. Even if this conduct qualified as "petitioning activity" for purposes of the Noerr Pennington Doctrine, a conclusion that we do not expressly reach, application of that doctrine in the case at bar would be precluded by operation of the "sham exception." [4]

HN6[] The only restriction placed upon the Noerr Pennington Doctrine is the so-called 'sham exception,' under which a defendant is not protected if he or she is simply using the petition process as a means of harassment." King v. Twp. of East Lampeter, 17 F.Supp.2d 394, 413 (E.D. Pa. 1998). The sham exception applies when "persons use

---

[2] Notably, the Third Circuit affirmed our esteemed colleague Judge Thomas I. Vanaskie's dismissal of the Lanham Act claims, but did so on other grounds. See Santana Prods. v. Bobrick Washroom Equipment, Inc., 401 F.3d 123, 131 n.3 (3d Cir. 2005) ("We will not address at this time the Noerr Pennington doctrine's applicability to Lanham Act claims because we conclude that Santana's Lanham Act claim is barred by laches.").

[3] In the main, this alleged misinformation took the form of a March 1, 2005 mail-merged letter (Doc. 465-16, Ex. 54), a document entitled "New Revenue Opportunity for Pennsylvania School Districts: Converting Tax Claims into Revenue; Frequently Asked Questions Regarding the Xspand Program," (Doc. 465-14, Ex. 29) ("FAQ"), and various power point presentations delivered to a number of governmental decision makers, (see, e.g., Doc. 465-15, Ex. 41) (made to representatives [12] of Norristown School District).

[4] Xspand relies heavily on Judge Vanaskie's aforementioned opinion in Santana Prods. v. Bobrick Washroom Equipment, Inc., 249 F.Supp. 2d 463 (M.D. Pa. 2003). While our determination runs counter to the ultimate conclusion in that case, we note that these opinions are not necessarily discordant, since the sham exception was not at issue in Santana Products.

the governmental process-as opposed to the outcome of that process-as an anti-competitive weapon." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 380, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991). Xspand asserts that throughout the pendency of this case MRS has maintained that Xspand's marketing sought to persuade governmental entities to do business with it. Therefore, Xspand argues that MRS should not now be permitted to argue that Xspand's purpose was aimed at something other than competition, i.e. [13] harassment. To the contrary, in the amended complaint, MRS alleges that Xspand's marketing efforts "disparage or otherwise seek to disrupt Plaintiff's business," (Doc. 69 P 15), and that "Defendants' misconduct was not for any legitimate purpose, but to prevent Plaintiff from properly and lawfully promoting marketing, and competing in the marketplace," (id. P 35). Consequently, we find Xspand's argument to this effect unavailing. [5]

A review of the evidentiary record reveals the existence of facts from which a reasonable juror could determine that Xspand's marketing effort was designed to harass MRS. This conclusion is based upon the following. In or about November 2004, Clive Corner ("Corner"), a former executive at Commerce Bank, Harrisburg [*700] ("Commerce"), the institution MRS used to finance its tax lien purchases, was contacted by James Florio, former Governor of New Jersey and a founder of Xspand ("Gov. Florio"), who expressed concerns regarding the legality [14] of MRS-facilitated transactions. [6] Clive Corner Deposition, November 15, 2005, p. 13. This concern was subsequently relayed to Commerce's counsel, who ultimately determined that there was no legal issue. See id. p. 17 ("I believe that Knox Graham and Reed, Smith, Shaw & McClay looked at the deal . . . . [T]he consensus . . . of all the attorneys [was that] there was no legal issue to be concerned about."). To the best of his knowledge, Corner communicated this conclusion to Gov. Florio. Id. p. 63. Nonetheless, Xspand proceeded to distribute to governmental entities information indicating that MRS-facilitated transactions produced debt, not revenue, which could have a negative impact on the municipalities credit rating. (See, e.g., Doc. 465-14 (Xspand's FAQ document)); Doc. 465-16 (Xspand's mail-merged letter of March 1, 2005)). [7]

Additionally, Xspand has acknowledged that there were least two factual inaccuracies present in the advertisements it distributed. Specifically, Xspand conceded that in the FAQ document it stated that the Harrisburg School District had actually accounted for the funds received from its MRS-facilitated transaction as debt rather than revenue. (Doc. 465-14). It now admits that this assertion was false. (Doc. 479, p. 7 n. 3). Further, in the March 1, 2005 letter, Xspand represented that it had entered into lien-sale contracts with several municipalities, including Allentown, Pennsylvania. (Doc. 465-16). However, Xspand now admits that it never had consummated such a transaction with the City of Allentown. [8]

---

[5] Indeed, HN7[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8 permits parties to plead inconsistent and conflicting theories of recovery. See Kayea v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34482, 2008 WL 1867154 * 1 (D. Del 2008). This is exactly what MRS has done.

[6] This communication could reasonably indicate that Xspand's intent in disseminating information regarding the alleged illegality of MRS-facilitated transactions was to cripple MRS, and not necessarily to acquire business for itself. After all, this communication was not designed to sway customers into choosing Xspand's services; it was arguably meant to stifle [15] MRS' financing so that MRS could not afford to compete with Xspand in the marketplace.

[7] The March 1, 2005 letter was signed by Nancy Cerbus ("Cerbus"), who was identified as Xspand's Vice-President of Business Development. (See Doc. 465-16). However, Cerbus testified that she did not compose the letter but rather authorized Xspand to sign her name thereto. Nancy Cerbus Deposition, August 23, 2005, pp. 93-94. Cerbus admittedly knew very little about the subjects addressed in the March 1, 2005 letter. See id. 93-119. She asserted that Paul Scura ("Scura"), president and chief executive officer of Plymouth Financial Company, Inc., the parent corporation of Xspand, authored the letter. Id. Scura, who is the President of Xspand, testified that he did not have a certified public accountant or a lawyer review the accuracy of the MRS-related allegations contained in the March 1, 2005 letter prior to distributing the same. Paul Scura Deposition, August 24, 2005, pp. 146-47. Scura, who has "over 20 years of experience in structured finance," testified that the MRS-related opinions were rendered based upon the understanding of generally accepted accounting principles he has gained in his over [16] 20 years of experience in the field of municipal finance. Id. pp. 135-36.

[8] Moreover, in November 2004, Xspand initially identified a list of 136 prime school districts that it would target. (Doc. 465-14). However, the March 1, 2005 letter was, according to Cerbus, distributed to 250 entities. Cerbus Dep. p. 99. Cerbus testified that

Based upon the foregoing, we believe that a reasonable person could infer that Xspand's conduct was primarily tailored to disrupt MRS' business rather than directly [*701] designed to garner favorable government action for itself. Indeed, MRS has proffered evidence from Dr. Marvin E. Goldberg, Professor of Marketing at the Pennsylvania State University, to that effect. (See Doc. 444-2 p. 3) (concluding that Xspand's marketing strategy was not "standard" and could have readily poisoned the business atmosphere for MRS) [9] We shall therefore deny the Xspand Motion to this extent.

The second global infirmity complained of by Xspand is the purported inability of MRS to establish that [18] Xspand's marketing statements were false, a necessary element of MRS' Lanham Act, [10] unfair competition, [11] defamation, [12] and commercial disparagement claims. [13] Xspand contends that expert testimony on this point is necessary because its statements to the effect that "MRS-facilitated transactions are borrowings and cannot be budgeted [*702] as revenue" were intended to convey the notion that MRS could not properly book the proceeds of their tax-lien transactions as revenue. (See Doc. 447, pp. 27, 28). Xspand asserts that the testimony of Plaintiff's witness Charles Herron ("Herron") is inadmissable to establish falsity. (Doc. 447, pp. 28-29). [14] MRS, on the other hand, contends that Xspand's statements were meant to convey the notion that MRS customers did not actually Xspand did not intend to follow-up with all of the recipients of the March 1, 2005 letter; instead, only certain entities were identified for follow-ups. [17] Id. p. 103.

[9] While there is evidence that Xpsand's marketing campaign was designed to garner favorable government action in the form of increased business, we believe that the foregoing facts cast doubt upon Xpsand's true motive. As the Third Circuit has recognized, HN8[] "Motive may be relevant if it demonstrates the party acted without a legitimate desire for government action. . . ." Bedell, 263 F.3d at 254 n. 33. Therefore, we believe that the ultimate applicability of the sham exception is an issue for the jury to decide.

[10] HN9[] "To establish a Lanham Act claim based on a false or misleading representation of a product the plaintiff must show: (i) that the defendant has made false or misleading statements as to his [19] own product [or another's]; (ii) that there is actual deception or at least a tendency to deceive a substantial portion of the intended audience; (iii) that the deception is material in that it is likely to influence purchasing decisions; (iv) that the advertised goods traveled in interstate commerce; and (v) that there is a likelihood of injury to the plaintiff in terms of declining sales, loss of good will, etc." Warner-Lambert v. BreathAsure, Inc., 204 F.3d 87, 91-92 (3d Cir. 2000) (emphasis added). We note briefly that, as we explain in greater detail in our resolution of the MRS Motion, to the extent MRS seeks monetary damages pursuant to its Lanham Act false advertising claim, it must adduce evidence of causation, i.e. actual consumer deception, regardless of whether the challenged marketing statement was "literally false." *See, e.g., Gallup, Inc. v. Talentpoint, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18560, 2001 WL 1450592 13 (E.D. Pa. 2001) ("Where plaintiff seeks injunctive relief, and shows that a claim is literally false, a court need not consider whether the public is misled. Where, however, a plaintiff seeks monetary damages, proof of actual deception is required.").

[11] HN10[] "The common law cause of action for unfair [20] competition in Pennsylvania mirrors the Lanham Act's section 43(a) cause of action for unfair competition, except that under state law there is no requirement that the goods traveled through interstate commerce." Louis Vuitton Malletier & Oakley, Inc. v. Veit, 211 F.Supp.2d 567, 582 (E.D. Pa. 2002).

[12] HN11[] "In a defamation case, a plaintiff must prove: '(i) The defamatory character of the communication; (ii) its publication by the defendant; (iii) its application to the plaintiff; (iv) the understanding by the recipient of its defamatory meaning; (v) the understanding by the recipient of it as intended to be applied to the plaintiff; (vi) special harm resulting to the plaintiff from its publication; and (vii) abuse of a conditionally privileged occasion.'" Moore v. Cobb-Nettleton, 2005 PA Super 426, 889 A.2d 1262, 1267 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2005) (quoting Porter v. Joy Realty, Inc., 2005 PA Super 129, 872 A.2d 846, 849 n. 6 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2005) (quoting 42 Pa.C.S. § 8343(a))). Falsity is an implicit element of a defamation cause of action because truth is an absolute defense. See 42 Pa.C.S. § 8343(b).

[13] HN12[] "In Pennsylvania, a claim for commercial disparagement requires proof that: (i) the statement is false; (ii) the publisher either [21] intends the publication to cause pecuniary loss or reasonably should recognize that publication will result in pecuniary loss; (iii) pecuniary loss does in fact result; and (iv) the publisher either knows that the statement is false or acts in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity." McNulty v. Citadel Broadcasting Co., 58 Fed. Appx. 556, 567 (3d Cir. 2003) (emphasis added) (citing Neurotron Inc. v. Medical Serv. Ass'n of Pa., 254 F.3d 444 (3d Cir. 2001)).

[14] Xspand has filed a currently pending motion in limine to this extent. (Doc. 441).

book the proceeds of MRS-facilitated transactions as revenue. (See Doc. 468, p. 14). Consequently, MRS asserts that since the Xspand statements are "literally false," there is no need for expert testimony on the issue of falsity. (Id.).

In effect, MRS suggests that Xspand's marketing statements were literally false because MRS customers did in fact book the proceeds of MRS-facilitated transactions as revenue. [15] We find this reasoning unpersuasive for the following reasons. First, it is circular in nature, as it essentially posits that the proceeds from MRS-facilitated transactions were revenue because the MRS customers said they were revenue. Unfortunately for Plaintiff, something does not become true merely because one says it is true. Second, in order for MRS' proposition to be true, Xspand's marketing statements must be interpreted to assert that proceeds from MRS-facilitated [22] transactions cannot physically be booked as revenue. We do not believe that any reasonable person would interpret Xpsand's marketing statement in this manner, since it is, after all, physically possible for an MRS customer to record the proceeds of an MRS-facilitated transaction in any way it wishes. Therefore, interpreting the marketing statement in the way suggested by MRS is, in our estimation, nonsensical and illogical. This conclusion is buttressed by the fact that MRS fails to point us to any evidence indicating that any recipient of the marketing statement ascribed that meaning to it. Accordingly, we believe that any reasonable person would interpret Xspand's marketing statement to address how the proceeds from MRS-facilitated transactions should have been properly booked. Therefore, it is axiomatic that to prove the falsity of this statement, MRS must proffer expert testimony. See HN13[] Fed. R. Evid. 702. [16] (requiring expert testimony when [*703] factual matters are outside the ken of lay individuals).

Although Herron, a certified public accountant with significant experience in governmental accounting, was not deposed as an expert, he did provide testimony to the effect that, based on his experience and knowledge, the statements in the Xspand marketing materials were false in that MRS-facilitated transactions are properly booked as revenue, not debt. [17] Subsequent to Herron's depositions, Xspand filed a motion in limine seeking to exclude his testimony because it was unreliable. [18] During a hearing regarding Defendants' motion to exclude Herron's expert testimony, MRS indicated that it would only be calling Herron as an expert in the event that Defendants' expert, Professor Peter H. Knutson ("Knutson"), was permitted to testify. In such an event, MRS agreed to make Herron available for an "expert" deposition at which Defendants could [25] more fully explore the foundation of his opinions involving the accounting issues present in this case. Since we have determined that Knutson's expert opinion is admissible, (Doc. 510), we can only assume that MRS shall be offering Herron as an expert either in its [15] Insofar as MRS' literal falsity argument involves Xspand's representation regarding a business relationship with the city of Allentown, we note that Xspand has already admitted the falsity [23] of this statement. However, MRS has not adduced any evidence indicating that this statement induced anyone to abandon a potential business relationship with MRS in favor of one with Xspand. Accordingly, as is evident from our causation analysis, infra, this averment cannot support any of the claims in the complaint because MRS cannot establish causation as to it. Consequently, we need not further address it in the instant context.

[16] Expert testimony would be required even if a reasonable person could interpret Xspand's statement in the manner suggested by MRS because, even in that event, the statement would not be "literally false." HN14[] "In analyzing whether an advertisement . . . is literally false, a court must determine, first, the unambiguous claims made by the advertisement . . . and, second, whether those claims are false." Novartis Consumer Health, Inc. v. Johnson & Johnson-Merck Consumer Pharms. Co., 290 F.3d 578, 586 (3d Cir. 2002). Accordingly, since Xspand's marketing statement is reasonably susceptible to the interpretation suggested by Xspand, in which case the statement would not be false if MRS customers improperly booked proceeds from MRS-facilitated transactions as revenue, [24] the statement is not "unambiguous" and cannot therefore be literally false for Lanham Act purposes. *See id.; see also Schering-Plough Healthcare Prods. v. Neutrogena Corp., __ F. Supp. 2d __, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24511, 2010 WL 960635 * 3 (D. Del. 2010)*. As we state in our discussion of the MRS Motion, infra, most of Xspand's statements are not "literally false" for this reason.

[17] When asked what the basis for this conclusion was, Herron responded, "The blue book, Governmental Accounting and Auditing-what do you call it? [26] The blue book." Herron Dep., November 15, 2005, 24:4-25:13.

[18] Herron's testimony is uniquely vital to MRS' claims because we do not perceive that it has provided testimony from any other individual as to the actual falsity of Xspand's statements.

case in chief or to rebut the testimony provided by Knutson. Accordingly, an "expert" deposition of Herron will now be necessary. The parties agreed that this deposition would occur after the resolution of the pending summary judgment motions, [19] meaning that the motion in limine seeking to exclude Herron's opinion would likewise be tabled until that time. (See Docs. 511, 515). [20] Since we can foresee a circumstance in which Herron provides admissible expert testimony related to the falsity of Xspand's marketing statements, we shall deny the Xspand Motion to this extent. [21] As indicated above, Herron's testimony is vital because if it is inadmissible, MRS may not be able to prove its case, as it will very likely be unable to establish the falsity of Xspand's marketing statements.

With regard to Xspand's third and final global argument in favor of dismissal, it asserts that MRS has failed to produce evidence as to causation, an element critical [*704] to all five causes of action. [22] Specifically, Xspand contends that Herron, as principal of Xspand, was the only witness offered to prove causation and that his testimony cannot defeat summary judgment. For the following reasons, we do not agree.

Consider Herron's deposition testimony to the following effect:

> Q: [W]hat client or potential client . . . have you met with where you believe there's evidence that that client is any less likely to do business with MRS because of Xspand's March 1, 2005 letter?
> A: Everywhere I've met and the business director or the superintendent or the tax claim bureau director has pulled the letter out and wanted to discuss it.
> * * * *
> Q: . . . Is that the only evidence that you have that the letter is in any way affecting their thinking about whether they'll do business with MRS?
> * * * *
> A: No, they mention it in phone calls when we're trying to set up appointments and things.
> * * * *
>
> Q: Okay. And what about those communications suggests to you that the letter [29] has made them any less likely to do business with . . . MRS?
> A: Many of them were more agreeable to setting up meetings and move very quickly to meet some budget deadlines they have. And now they are moving very slowly and are putting it on the back burner until they are able to slowly, methodically get appropriate responses to the letter.

---

[19] Xspand's decision to table the expert deposition of Herron was rendered on the apparent assumption that the expert opinion of Herron was not implicated in the resolution of the pending summary judgment motions because MRS did not rely on it in opposing said motions. (See Doc. 511). However, in resolving a motion for summary judgment, the Court is not constrained to consider only those arguments interposed by counsel. MRS' failure to argue the impact of Herron's testimony does not preclude us from considering the same. Herron's testimony regarding the falsity of Xspand's statements is clearly relevant to the proper resolution of the pending motions.

[20] Since the motion in limine seeking to exclude Herron as an expert cannot be resolved before the taking of his "expert" deposition, and indeed since that deposition may or may not obviate the need for the motion, we believe that the better course is to deny the pending motion (Doc. 441) with express [27] leave to re-file within 30 days of receiving the transcript from Herron's expert deposition.

[21] We do not believe that this procedure prejudices Xspand because, as its motion in limine seeking the exclusion of Herron's testimony indicates, it recognized the importance of Herron's testimony but elected instead to have us decide the instant motions without deciding the motion in limine first.

[22] The elements of the causes of action in Count I-IV were articulated above. As is evident, each of them requires proof of causation. The fifth cause of action, contained in Count V of the amended complaint, is tortious interference with prospective contractual relations. HN15[] "The requisite elements of a cause of action for interference with prospective contractual relations are as follows: (i) a [28] prospective contractual relationship; (ii) the purpose or intent to harm the plaintiff by preventing the relation from occurring; (iii) the absence of privilege or justification on the part of the defendant; and (iv) the occasioning of actual damage resulting from the defendant's conduct." Phillips v. Selig, 2008 PA Super 244, 959 A.2d 420, 428 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2008) (citations omitted). Accordingly, it is clear that this cause of action also requires proof of causation.

> Q: . . . [H]ave any of the school districts actually said to you words to the effect of we're putting our discussion with MRS on the back burner until we get responses and information with respect to Xspand's March 1, 2005 letter?
> A: There's been a couple. I don't recall which ones.

Herron Deposition, June 1, 2005 pp. 216-218. Herron further testified as follows:

> Q: Has anyone from any school district, municipality, county or other taxing entity ever told you that [the March 1, 2005 mail-merged letter from Xspand] persuaded them not to do business with MRS?
> A: I believe East Stroudsburg and Norristown.

Id. 214:22-215:1.

This testimony could clearly lead a reasonable juror to conclude that Xspand's March 1, 2005 letter caused harm to MRS. [23] Xspand contends that there is record [*705] evidence indicating that conclusions such as this are based solely on Herron's [30] speculation. To the extent such testimony exists, it clearly conflicts with the above-quoted testimony in which Herron unequivocally states that certain individuals informed him that Xspand's March 1, 2005 letter persuaded them to either put an MRS-facilitated transaction on the "back burner" or forego such a transaction altogether. Consequently, HN16[] a credibility issue arises, and such determinations reside within the exclusive province of the jury.

Xspand also contends that the above-quoted testimony, and testimony like it, cannot defeat a summary judgment motion because it is inadmissible hearsay. See Smith v. City of Allentown, 589 F.3d 684, 693 (3d Cir. 2008) (HN17[] "Hearsay statements that would be inadmissible at trial may not be considered for purposes of summary judgment.") (citations omitted). MRS responds that testimony like the afore-quoted is admissible because, pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 803, it is not hearsay. This rule states:

> HN18[] The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness:
> * * * *
>
> A statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition (such as intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, and bodily health), but not including a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed [32] unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's will.

Fed. R. Evid. 803(3) ("Rule 803(3)").

The Third Circuit Court of Appeals has noted that HN19[] statements of a customer to an employee are admissible if the customer's motive is relevant to the action. See J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 1535 n.11 (3d Cir. 1990); see also WEINSTEIN'S FEDERAL EVIDENCE § 803.05 (2007). Indeed, "hearsay statements of a customer as to his reasons for not dealing with a supplier may be admissible for the limited purpose of proving customer motive. It is only if the statements are used to prove the fact that the customer stopped buying the product from this supplier, bought the product from someone else instead, or stopped buying the product altogether, that they become inadmissible." *New L&N Sales & Mktg., Inc. v. Menaged, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14008, 1998 WL 575270 * 5 (E.D. Pa. 1998)* (citing Stelwagon Mfg. Co. v. Tarmac Roofing Sys., Inc., 63 F.3d 1267,

---

[23] Further, other portions of Mr. Herron's testimony indicate that he was in the midst of a process involving the release of information from various tax claim bureaus, a process that in his experience rapidly culminated in a sale, with seven to ten schools districts when the March 1, 2005 letter was distributed. See Herron Dep. June 1, 2005, 231:23-232:11. After the receipt of the letter, a number of those districts "slowed down" their discussions with MRS. See id. 232:11-233:15. Although Herron's testimony does not explicitly indicate that the March 1, 2005 letter caused the "slow downs," given the numerosity and timing of the alleged "slow downs," we believe that a jury could reasonably infer that they were engendered by Xspand's marketing [31] letter. Further, to the extent that these districts elected not to contract with MRS, we believe that, given the historical progression of the process that the March 1, 2005 interrupted, the afore-referenced testimony could lead a reasonable jury to conclude that MRS was harmed by Xspand's marketing statements.

1274 (3d Cir. 1995)). Here, the government entities' motives are relevant in establishing whether or not Xspand's marketing strategy caused harm to MRS, and are only being offered to establish why the government entities [33] chose not to employ MRS' services.

Xspand argues that Rule 803(3) cannot save statements such as the afore-quoted because it relates solely to the declarant's then-existing state of mind. Xspand contends [*706] that Herron's testimony involves a declarant who testifies about a particular school board's then-existing state of mind. After all, Xspands asserts, the ultimate decision about whether to do business with MRS rested not with a single individual but with a group of individuals statutorily charged with making such decisions. [24] Although innovative, we find Xspand's argument unavailing. Since Rule 803(3) clearly applies to statements made by individual customers, we fail to see why it would not apply to an individual who is an official representative of a corporate or governmental customer. After all, most decisions made by these entities are made by a board comprised of multiple individuals. If Xspand's construction of Rule 803(3) held true, out-of-court statements by persons with authority at these entities as to the motives underlying their board's decisions would be inadmissible under 803(3), but out-of-court statements by a sole-proprietor as to the motives behind the decisions regarding [34] his business would be admissible. We do not believe that the Federal Rules of Evidence were intended to produce such an odd and inequitable result. Accordingly, we believe that the declarants in question in the case sub judice, as representatives of their respective school districts, can render out-of-court statements admissible under Rule 803(3) as to the motives underlying the business decisions of the entities that they represent. Consequently, statements such as the afore-quoted are admissible under 803(3). [25] Since such statements reasonably establish causation, we shall deny the Xspand Motion to this extent.

This concludes our discussion of the "global" issues raised by Xspand. We now turn our attention to its more discrete arguments.

ii. Discrete Infirmities

a. Defamation Claim

As we stated above, "In a defamation case, a plaintiff must prove: (i) the defamatory character of the communication; (ii) its publication by the defendant; (iii) its application to the plaintiff; (iv) the understanding by the recipient of its defamatory meaning; (v) the understanding by the recipient of it as intended to be applied to the plaintiff; (vi) special harm resulting to the plaintiff from its publication; and (vii) abuse of a conditionally privileged occasion." Moore v. Cobb-Nettleton, 889 A.2d at 1267 (citations omitted) (internal quotations omitted). Xspand asserts that MRS cannot prove that its marketing statements were of a defamatory character.

HN20[] To determine whether a statement is capable of a defamatory meaning, courts consider whether "the statement tends so to harm the reputation of another as to lower him in the estimation of the community or to deter third parties from associating or dealing [36] with him." Tucker v. Phila. Daily News, 577 Pa. 598, 848 A.2d 113, 124 (Pa. 2004). While an action for defamation normally focuses on whether the statement in question tarnishes the reputation of the plaintiff, and an action for commercial disparagement focuses on [*707] the statements regarding the plaintiff's goods or services, there are times when impugnation of product quality crosses the line from disparagement of products to defamation of vendors. See U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 898 F.2d 914, 923-24 (3d Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). To that end, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals has noted:

---

[24] Xspand offers no legal authority to support this conclusion, nor can we locate any.

[25] At this time, we note that to the extent that Xspand contends that the afore-quoted statement is inadmissible because Herron cannot identify the declarant, such a proposition is incorrect. See Callahan v. A.E. V., Inc., 182 F.3d 237 (3d Cir. 1999) ("We do not think that the admissibility of their statements under the Rule 803(3) hearsay exception depends on their being identified. Knowing the specific identity of the declarant will not make the statements more trustworthy evidence of the [35] declarant's descriptions of their states of mind, the primary concern in interpreting hearsay exceptions.").

> [W]here the publication on its face is directed against the goods or product of a corporate vendor or manufacturer, it will not be held libelous per se as to the corporation, unless by fair construction and without the aid of extrinsic evidence it imputes to the corporation fraud, deceit, dishonesty, or reprehensible conduct in its business in relation to said goods or product.

Id. (citations omitted) (emphasis added). [26]

With regard to Xspand's March 1, 2005 mail-merged letter, this document explicitly stated that MRS-facilitated transactions were not true sales but were, instead, borrowings. Neither this statement, nor any of Xspand's marketing statements, indicate that MRS advertises itself as facilitating transactions that produce revenue, not debt, to the taxing entity. Thus, in order for Xspand's marketing statements regarding the quality of MRS' services to impugn MRS' integrity, the recipient of Xspand's marketing statement would have had to receive a communication [39] from MRS in which MRS describes its services. Such extrinsic evidence is proscribed when determining whether a statement denigrates products or the vendor. [27] Accordingly, since Xspand's marketing statements do not in themselves call into question MRS' integrity without the use of extrinsic evidence, we believe that they are in fact incapable of a defamatory meaning. [28] As a result, [*708] we shall grant the Xspand Motion to the extent it involves MRS' defamation claim.

b. Commercial Disparagement Claim

As stated above, to sustain a claim for commercial disparagement in Pennsylvania, a plaintiff must prove that: "(i) the statement is false; (ii) the publisher either intends the publication to cause pecuniary loss or reasonably [40] should recognize that publication will result in pecuniary loss; (iii) pecuniary loss does in fact result; and (iv) the publisher either knows that the statement is false or acts in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity." McNulty v. Citadel Broad. Co., 58 Fed. Appx. 556, 567 (3d Cir. 2003) (citing Neurotron Inc. v. Medical Serv. Ass'n of Pa.., 254 F.3d 444 (3d Cir. 2001)). In addition to the arguments relating to falsity and causation, which we addressed above, Xspand also contends that MRS cannot maintain its commercial disparagement claim because there is no evidence that Xspand knew any of its statements were false or that it acted with reckless disregard for the truth or falsity of the statements.

---

[26] The proscription against use of extrinsic evidence in determining whether a statement crosses the line from disparagement into defamation seems to be at odds [37] with the general notion that in determining whether a statement is capable of defamatory meaning, courts are to "consider the likely interpretation of the statement by the intended audience," Baker v. Lafayette College, 350 Pa. Super. 68, 504 A.2d 247 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1986), as well as the context in which the statement is made, Beckman v. Dunn, 276 Pa. Super. 527, 419 A.2d 583, 586 (Pa. Super Ct. 1981). However, we believe that these rules can be synthesized in the following manner. HN21[] While extrinsic evidence cannot be used when determining whether a statement denigrates the products or vendor, it can be taken into consideration after determining that the statement denigrates the vendor, i.e., only after the court determines that the statement is of a type that could be capable of defamatory meaning. In that case, the context in which the statement is made is important in determining whether the statement is capable of defamatory meaning. This conclusion is buttressed by our recognition that all the cases cited by MRS for the proposition that "any communications by a competitor that imputes a want of integrity in business dealings are certainly capable of a defamatory meaning" involve situations where the communication, in [38] isolation, give rise to the inference of dishonesty. See, e.g., Steaks Unlimited, Inc. v. Deaner, 623 F.2d 264 (3d Cir. 1980) (the denigrating television broadcast itself contained statements that readily questioned the honesty of plaintiff's advertising); Tucker v. Phila. Daily News, 848 A.2d at 124 (inherent implausibility of the ideas communicated by the statements at issue were capable of making the plaintiffs look insincere, excessively litigious, avaricious, and perhaps unstable); Cosgrove Studio & Camera Shop v. Pane, 408 Pa. 314, 182 A.2d 751 (Pa.1962) ("no extrinsic proof was necessary to indicate the injurious character of the communication").

[27] Indeed, we read U.S. Healthcare to hold that in order HN22[] for a statement to cross the line from a disparagement of product to defamation of vendor, the statement itself must either expressly or impliedly allege that the plaintiff is dishonest or otherwise disreputable.

[28] Notwithstanding our conclusion, and as such set forth in the section that follows, these statements may denigrate product quality and could therefore be used to support a commercial disparagement claim.

To this end, Xspand notes that Paul Scura, Xspand's president, was the individual who oversaw the drafting of Xspand's March 1, 2005 letter. Scura Dep., Aug. 24, 2005 pp.81-82. Before disseminating the letter, Scura, who has extensive experience in municipal finance, Scura Declaration PP 2-8, obtained and reviewed a copy of the purchase and sales agreement used in MRS-facilitated transactions, Scura Dep., Aug. 24, 2005, p. 83. According to Xspand, this level of precaution precludes [41] its conduct from being categorized as "reckless."

HN23[] For our purposes, "reckless disregard" is defined as the "serious indifference to truth or accuracy of a publication." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (8th ed. 2004). As we have already stated, there is evidence from which a reasonable jury could infer that Xspand was aware that attorneys at two prominent law firms examined the structure of MRS-facilitated transactions and concluded that it was legal. Further, Scura himself testified that he did not consult any lawyers or certified public accountants regarding the truth of the statements made in the March 1, 2005 letter before distributing the same. Scura Deposition, August 24, 2005, pp. 146-47. In spite of the 20 years of structured finance experience that led him to believe consultation with a lawyer or accountant was unnecessary, given the purported knowledge Xspand possessed about the legality of the MRS-facilitated transactions, we believe that the reasonableness and/or level of indifference, if any, of Scura's actions is for a jury to decide. Therefore, we shall deny the Xspand Motion in this regard.

c. Tortious Interference Claim

As stated above, the requisite elements for a tortious interference [42] with prospective contractual relations claim are as follows: "(i) a prospective contractual relationship; [29] (ii) the purpose or intent to harm the plaintiff by preventing the relation from occurring; (iii) the absence of privilege or justification on the part of the defendant; and (iv) the occasioning of actual damage resulting from the defendant's conduct." *Phillips v. Selig, 2008 PA Super 244, 959 A.2d 420, [709] 428 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2008) (citations omitted). Xspand asserts that MRS' tortious interference claim suffers from the following flaws: (i) there is no evidence indicating any "reasonable probability" that MRS would have entered into any lien-transactions if it were not for the marketing efforts of Xspand; and (ii) Xspand's conduct is protected by the "competitor's privilege." We address these arguments in turn.

Xspand asserts that the first contention relates particularly to [43] the East Stroudsburg School District. (Doc. 447, p. 41). While Xspand cites no record evidence for this proposition, there is record evidence to the contrary. Consider the deposition testimony of Herron:

> Q: Has anyone from any school district, municipality, county or other taxing entity ever told you that [the March 1, 2005 mail-merged letter from Xspand] persuaded them not to do business with MRS?
> A: I believe East Stroudsburg and Norristown.

Herron Deposition, June 1, 2005, 214:22-215:1; see also id. 231:11-244:4 (for the same proposition). This is record evidence from which a reasonable jury could infer that MRS had a "reasonable probability" of obtaining the business of the East Stroudsburg and Norristown school districts were it not for the marketing activities of Xspand. [30] To the extent that there is record evidence contradicting the afore-quoted testimony, a credibility determination

---

[29] HN24[] A "prospective contractual relationship" is "something less than a contractual right, something more than a mere hope" and exists when there is "reasonable probability that a contract will arise from the parties' current dealings." Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1015 (3d Cir. 1994) (citations omitted).

[30] Additionally, as indicated in our hearsay discussion, supra, Mr. Herron's testimony indicates that he was in the midst of a process involving the release of information from various tax claim bureaus, a sequence that historically proceeds rapidly and culminates in a sale, with seven to ten schools districts when the March 1, 2005 letter was distributed. See Herron Dep. June 1, 2005, 231:23-232:11. After the receipt of the letter, a number of those districts "slowed down" their discussions with MRS. See id. 232:11-233:15. Although Herron's testimony does not explicitly indicate that the March 1, 2005 letter caused the "slow downs," given the numerosity and timing of alleged "slow downs," we believe that a jury could reasonably infer that they were engendered by Xspand's marketing letter. Further, given the historical progression of the process that the March 1, 2005 interrupted, we believe that the afore-referenced testimony could lead a reasonable jury to determine that MRS had "reasonable expectations" of entering into a contractual [45] relationship with those seven to ten school districts. To the extent that these would arise. Since such decisions are the exclusive province of the jury, we shall deny the Xspand Motion insofar as it rests on the above-referenced argument. See Nanton v. People of the Virgin Islands, 2009 V.I. Supreme LEXIS 49, 2009 WL 5449226 *26 (V.I. 2009) (citing United States v. Boone, 279 F.3d 163, 189 (3d Cir. 2002)) [44] (for the proposition that to the extent a witness provides conflicting testimony, such conflicts implicate credibility determinations for the jury).

With regard to the "competitor's privilege," Xspand notes that Pennsylvania follows the rendition memorialized in the Second Restatement of Torts. See Acumed LLC v. Advanced Surgical Servs., Inc., 561 F.3d 199, 215. (3d Cir. 2009) (citations omitted). This provision states as follows:

> HN25[] (i) One who intentionally causes a third person not to enter into a prospective contractual relation with another who is his competitor, or not to continue an existing contract terminable at will, does not interfere improperly with the other's relation if:
>
> (a) the relation concerns a matter involved in the competition between the actor and the other, and
>
> [*710] (b) the actor does not employ wrongful means, and > (c) his action does not create or continue an unlawful restraint of trade, and > (d) his purpose is at least in part to advance his interest in competing with the other.
>
> (ii) The fact that one is a competitor of another for the business of a third [46] person does not prevent his causing a breach of an existing contract with the other from being an improper interference if the contract is not terminable at will.

RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 768.

As we have already concluded, assuming MRS can adduce testimony from Herron as to the falsity of Xspand's marketing statements, MRS can maintain a claim of commercial disparagement. In such a case, Xspand would have utilized "wrongful means," meaning that its "competitor's privilege" would be eviscerated. See Patient Transfer Sys. v. Patient Handling Solutions, Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19296, 1999 WL 1212189 (E.D. Pa. 1999). Accordingly, we shall deny the Xspand Motion to this extent, noting however as we do, that here again Herron's potential but not yet authorized expert testimony is the lynchpin of MRS' claim.

d. Claims Relating to Commerce Bank

Xspand contends that the alleged contact between Gov. Florio and Commerce bank did not cause Commerce to modify its business relationship with MRS and therefore did not harm MRS. In support of this assertion, and as aforementioned, Xspand cites the deposition testimony of Clive Corner, a former executive at Commerce who allegedly received phone call from Gov. Florio regarding [47] the illegality of MRS-facilitated transactions. After acknowledging that Commerce consulted its lawyers to review the legality of MRS-structured transactions, Corner testified as follows:

> A: Apparently, the consensus of opinion of all the attorneys [was that there] was no legal issue to be concerned about. The transactions closed and there have been transactions since.
> * * * *
> Q: Would it be fair for me to understand, Mr. Corner, from your testimony that whatever concerns Mr. Florio passed along to Commerce did not cause Commerce to change its business practices with regard to MRS?
> A: That's correct.

Clive Corner Dep., Nov. 14, 2005, 17:16-18:4.

However, in contravention to this, we also have the deposition testimony of Herron to the following effect:

> Q: Did Mr. Corner tell you that Commerce Bank was going to in any way change its business dealings with MRS in response to any communication from Governor Florio?

---

school districts ultimately decided not to contract with MRS, we believe a reasonable jury could determine that MRS suffered harm, meaning MRS has a cognizable tortious interference claim.

> A: They did change their business dealings in fact from the original experience with Commerce to the time they agreed to do transactions.

Herron Dep., Nov. 15, 2005, 17:6-12. Herron proceeded to describe how Commerce, Commerce Bank, New Jersey, [31] and MRS had settled on the rate, terms, [48] and structure [*711] of the school transactions prior to receiving Gov. Florio's phone call. Id. 17:14-18:13. After the phone call, Herron testified that MRS was forced to restructure the contemplated transactions with less favorable terms from Commerce after Commerce New Jersey was non-responsive to MRS' attempted communications. [32] Id. When asked whether Corner informed him that Commerce New Jersey changed its approach to MRS because of any communications by Gov. Florio, Herron responded, "He (Corner) didn't volunteer it, and I didn't ask him." See id. 18:14-19.

For our purposes then, it appears that Herron was not explicitly told that the Xspand letter caused the need to restructure the transactions at a less favorable rate with Commerce. Herron's conclusion [49] that Gov. Florio's call adversely affected MRS' financing is based purely upon the sequence of events recounted above. Indeed, MRS reasons that since Gov. Florio's call occurred at a moment in time between the points at which Commerce New Jersey agreed to participate in the financing of MRS-facilitated transactions and its subsequent change of course in that regard, the temporal sequence implies that MRS' financing was adversely affected by Gov. Florio's phone call. Quite simply, such a conclusion is based upon pure speculation. There is no evidence linking Gov. Florio's phone call with any delay in MRS receiving financing or experiencing a change in financing terms. [33] Accordingly, we will grant the Xspand Motion to this extent.

e. Lost Profits Remedy

HN26[] Under Pennsylvania law, lost profits may be recovered when: (i) there is evidence to establish the damages with reasonable certainty; (ii) they were the proximate consequence of the alleged wrong; and (iii) they were reasonably foreseeable. See Advent Sys. Ltd. v. Unisys Corp., 925 F.2d 670, 680 (3d Cir. 1991); see also Delahanty v. First Pennsylvania Bank, N.A., 318 Pa. Super. 90, 464 A.2d 1243, 1258 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1983). [51] While a plaintiff's proof of damages need not be mathematically precise, the evidence must establish the fact of damages "with a fair degree of probability." Advent, 925 F.2d at 680 (citations omitted). Xspand particularly notes that Pennsylvania courts have been skeptical of claims for lost profits by a "new and untried business." Exton Drive-In, Inc. v. Home Indemnity Com., 436 Pa. 480, 261 A.2d 319, 324 (Pa. 1969).

We begin by noting that Xspand has not cited authority for the proposition that MRS is in fact a "new and untried business." [*712] In fact, MRS has been operating in Pennsylvania since 2004. The court in *J&M Turner, Inc. v. Applied Bolting Tech., Prods., Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1158 36-37 (E.D. Pa. 1998), allowed the issue of lost profits to reach the jury when, inter alia, the plaintiff had been in business four months before the injury. As already

---

31 Commerce, Harrisburg, which we have been referring to as "Commerce," and Commerce Bank, New Jersey ("Commerce New Jersey") are separate organizations, however, the former is a franchise of the latter. Corner Dep., 6:11-24. Corner is a former executive with Commerce. Id.

32 Commerce New Jersey was involved in the initial transaction because it had an appreciably larger lending capacity than Commerce. See Herron Dep., Nov. 15, 2005, 17:20-24.

33 This determination is not inconsistent with our conclusion involving causation. There, we were faced with a situation where a multitude of school districts, which embarked upon a course that historically concluded with the rapid consummation of a contract, decided to slow down, and in some cases, abandon, the contract formation process after receiving Xspand's March 1, 2005 letter. In that instance, we concluded that the numerosity and timing of the school [50] board's decisions, which contravened historical patterns, could reasonably lead a jury to infer that the March 1, 2005 letter caused the change in the school boards' actions. Here, we lack the numerosity and historical pattern upon which our causation determination was predicated. Further, unlike the situation implicated in our causation analysis, the present determination does not involve direct testimony establishing a causal link between Xspand's marketing conduct and the alleged harm suffered by MRS. Quite simply, the fact that the single Event A (Florio phone call) occurred before Event B (Commerce New Jersey's change of course) in and of itself does not mean that Event A caused Event B. Such reasoning exemplifies the post hoc ergopropter hoc logical fallacy.

noted, in November 2004 Xspand initially identified a list of 136 prime school districts that it would target, three of which were crossed-out because they had entered into contracts with MRS. (Doc. 465-14). Since MRS was obviously already in business in November 2004, the harm it claims to have suffered from Xspand's March 1, 2005 letter occurred [52] after it had been in business for in excess of four months. Accordingly, we see no reason to treat MRS' request for lost profits with heightened skepticism.

Further, Herron has supplied testimony as to the financial performance of MRS over time and MRS has produced its tax returns and profit/loss statements for a number of years. (See Doc. 465, App. II, Ex. 8, pp. 225-33). MRS has also supplied a sample of how its damages from lost business opportunities were calculated, which contains figures derived from a percentage of the volume of tax liens which it could have purchased and collected. (Id., App. II, Ex. 94). Xspand does not question the reliability, accuracy, or specificity of these calculations, and so we see no need to do the same. Accordingly, we believe that lost profits can be established to a reasonable degree of certainty. Since we have already determined that a reasonable jury could determine that lost profits were a consequence of the alleged wrongful conduct of Xspand, and because Xspand does not challenge the foreseeability of those damages, we believe that MRS has adduced evidence to defeat summary judgment as to its request for lost profits. Therefore, we will deny [53] the Xspand Motion to this extent.

This concludes our resolution of the Xspand Motion. We shall now proceed to address the merits of the Bear Motion.

B. The Bear Motion

At the outset, we note that in its motion to dismiss, Bear asserts that MRS is attempting to hold it liable for certain "unpleaded claims." [34] MRS counters that while the amended complaint does not expressly mention illegal campaign contributions, the same is a facet of its unfair competition cause of action and may therefore be properly pursued. We do not agree.

HN27[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) requires that a complaint contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, "in order to give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 545, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)). In the case at bar, Plaintiff's amended complaint [54] is utterly bereft of any reference to "illegal campaign contributions" or "Rule G-37 of the MASRB." Accordingly, the amended complaint would not put Defendants on fair notice that Plaintiff's case in any way involved allegations of illegal campaign contributions. [35] [*713] Therefore, Plaintiff cannot either maintain a claim for an alleged violation of Rule G-37 or support its unfair competition claim with this theory of liability. [36] To the extent Plaintiff attempts to do so, the Bear Motion is granted.

---

[34] Specifically, Bear contends that throughout the discovery process MRS has maintained a belief that Bear can be held liable for illegal campaign contributions, in violation Rule G-37 of the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board ("MSRB"). (Doc. 454 p. 12).

[35] The closest Plaintiff comes to properly pleading its Rule G-37 allegations are the statements contained in paragraph 15 of its amended complaint. That paragraph states, in part, "Defendant . . . uses former Governor Florio's political connections to generate business from taxing entities. In addition to utilizing such contacts to 'open doors' to allow Xspand access to government taxing entities . . . Florio also uses his political contacts to disparage . . . Plaintiff's business." [55] Amend Compl. P 15. However, this paragraph, even if construed liberally, cannot reasonably be said to put Defendants on notice that Plaintiff's case involves, in part, an allegation of illegal campaign contributions.

[36] If Plaintiff learned of the alleged Rule G-37 violations through the discovery process, it was free to seek inclusion of such allegations in its amended complaint through a properly filed motion to amend that pleading pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15. Unfortunately for Plaintiff, it did not do so. Accordingly, it shall be precluded from lodging these allegations at this late stage of litigation.

In addition to the aforementioned argument, the Bear Motion also seeks dismissal of the entire amended complaint against Bear on the basis that MRS lacks grounds upon which to hold it liable. MRS responds that Bear can be properly held liable because it was either in a joint venture or agency relationship with Xspand. We address these contentions in sequence.

i. Joint Venture

"The Third Circuit has indicated that HN28[] the essential elements of a joint venture include: (i) a joint proprietary interest in, and a right to mutual control over, the enterprise; (ii) a contribution [56] by each of the parties of capital, materials, services or knowledge; and (iii) a right to participate in the expected profits." Stecyk v. Bell Helicopter Textron, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17888, 1997 WL701312 (E.D. Pa. 1997) (citing Richardson v. Walsh Constr. Co.., 334 F.2d 334, 336 (3d Cir. 1964)). "Although the existence or nonexistence of a joint venture . . . involves a determination of intent, where the essential elements of a joint venture . . . are clearly absent, the determination may be made on a motion for summary judgment. *Combustion Sys. Servs. v. Schuylkill Energy Resources, Inc., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17714, 1993 WL 514496 3 (E.D. Pa. 1993) (citing McFadden v. Baltimore Contractors, Inc., 609 F.Supp. 1102 (E.D. Pa. 1985)).

In order to resolve this issue, a brief summary of the organizational structure of Bear may be helpful. Bear is a subsidiary of the Bear Stearns Companies, Inc. ("TBSC"). Declaration of John Garzone P 3. [37] In 2003, Bear contemplated entering into a "strategic alliance" with Plymouth Financial Company, Inc. ("Plymouth Financial") whereby Bear would agree to provide funding to Plymouth Financial who, through its subsidiary, Xspand, would source and service municipal tax liens secured by residential and commercial [57] real estate. Id. The terms of the strategic alliance were set forth in a document entitled, "Plymouth Park Tax Services, LLC, Summary of Terms and Conditions, August 12, 2003" (the "Term Sheet"), which called for the creation of an entity, "Plymouth Park Tax Services, LLC" ("Plymouth Park"), which would purchase tax liens and provide financing to Plymouth Financial. Id. P 4. The Term Sheet also contemplated that Bear and Plymouth Financial would share joint ownership of Plymouth Park. Id. However, as Garzone states, the Term Sheet was never [*714] implemented. Id. 5. [38]

Garzone avers that, instead, TBSC created Plymouth Park as a wholly owned subsidiary, meaning that Bear and Plymouth Park were sister corporations. Id. Accordingly, the financing that Plymouth Financial was to receive from Bear under the Term Sheet was now provided by Plymouth Park through an arms-length agreement. See id. [39] Plymouth Financial used the financing provided by Plymouth Park to purchase tax liens that were serviced by Xspand. Id. P 6. Plymouth Park also purchased tax liens from Plymouth Financial, which were then serviced by Xspand. Id. Garzone averred that Plymouth Financial and Plymouth Park maintained separate and independent control over their own expenditures and operations and that Bear never had any ownership interest in Plymouth Park. Id. P 7. Finally, Garzone represented that in January 2006 Plymouth Park purchased a significant number of Plymouth Financial's assets, which included some assets of Xspand. Id. [40] Although Plymouth Park did not purchase Xspand stock, it acquired the right to use Xspand's name in marketing. Id.

---

[37] John Garzone ("Garzone") is the former senior managing director of Bear. Garzone Decl. P 1.

[38] A provision of the Term Sheet specifically establishes:

> Except with the confidentiality provision contained herein, this Summary of Terms is not intended to constitute a legally binding agreement . . . and does not contain all of the detailed terms which will be included in the definitive agreements. A binding obligation will come into existence only upon the execution of the definitive agreements.

(Doc. 454, Ex. 1, at Ex. A, p. 19) (emphasis added). Accordingly, since the Term Sheet was never implemented, by its own language it did [58] not create binding obligations between Bear and Plymouth Financial.

[39] Although Bear indicates that the agreement between Plymouth Park and [59] Plymouth Financial as Exhibit B to Exhibit 1 of document 454, that document unfortunately is absent.

[40] Documents supplementing the asset purchase agreement indicate that Garzone was the President of Plymouth Park. (Doc. 454-2, pp. 36-40).

At first glance, Garzone's declaration seems to belie MRS' assertion that there was a joint venture between Xspand and Bear because it indicates that in light of the failure to implement the Term Sheet, Bear did not possess any ownership interest in Xspand or had a right to share in Xspand's profits. MRS contests this conclusion and asserts that there is ample record evidence to support a reasonable inference that Bear shared an ownership interest in Xspand and thus in its profits. In support of this, MRS asserts that Bear "jointly marketed" itself with Xspand by placing its logo and name throughout Xspand's marketing materials, (see e.g., Doc. 465 App. II, Exs. 23, 57, 58). MRS contends that Bear received a substantial portion of its tax liens from Xspand, which resulted in a large profit for Bear. Further, MRS points to evidence indicating that Garzone attended marketing meetings with prospective clients where Bear's name and logo were prominently [60] displayed along side the names and logos of both Plymouth Financial and Xspand. (See id. App. II, Exs. 58-63). Garzone was also included on emails that contained regular updates of Xspand's marketing efforts. (See id. App. II., Exs. 60-63). Further, Scura testified as follows:

> Q: . . . what would Mr. Garzone have to do with Miss Cerbus' compensation?
>
> A: Well, nothing directly. However, we have an agreement, a joint venture agreement, with Bear Stearns whereby outside consulting expenses are deducted from the profitability of a transaction. So to the [*715] extent that she functioned as a consultant on a specific transaction, the amount of money that we paid her would have a direct impact on the profitability of that transaction and, therefore, he should have input into the decision.

Scura Dep. 5:20-6:7 (emphasis added). Despite the structure of, and transactions involving, Bear outlined hereinabove, we believe that the evidence cited in this paragraph could reasonably lead a jury to conclude that Bear was involved in a joint venture with Xspand and is therefore jointly and severally liable for Xspand's marketing statements. See *Sleasman v. Brooks, 32 Pa. D. & C.3d 187, 1984 WL 2248 3-4 (Pa. Com. Pl. 1984) ("Partners [61] and members of a joint enterprise or joint venture are jointly and severally liable in tort."). Vigorously as Bear may argue otherwise, it is possible that it did not fully remove itself from Xspand's operation despite the structural machinations as noted. Accordingly, we will deny the Bear Motion to this extent. Having resolved the Bear Motion in its entirety, we shall proceed to address the MRS Motion.

C. The MRS Motion

The MRS Motion is premised on two arguments. First, MRS contends that it is entitled to summary judgment to the extent that certain aspects in Xspand's March 1, 2005 letter and in its FAQ were "literally false." Second, MRS argues that the Tax Injunction Act ("TIA"), 28 U.S.C. § 1341, prevents Xspand from asking this Court to find that the school districts that engaged in MRS-facilitated transactions and booked the proceeds therefrom as revenue were, as a matter of fact, wrong in doing so. We address these issues ad seriatim.

i. Literal Falsity Argument

As we already stated in our discussion of the Xspand Motion, the statements related to MRS contained in Xspand's March 1, 2005 letter were incapable of being "literally false" because they were ambiguous. Novartis Consumer Health, Inc. v. Johnson & Johnson-Merck Consumer Pharms. Co.., 290 F.3d 578, 586 (3d Cir. 2002); [62] see also *Schering-Plough Healthcare Prods. v. Neutrogena Corp., F. Supp. 2d , 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24511, 2010 WL 960635 * 3 (D. Del. 2010)*. Accordingly, we will deny the MRS Motion to this extent. [41] Since we have not previously addressed literal falsity as it pertains to the FAQ, we shall do so now.

Paragraph 18 of the FAQ states as follows:

> 18. Is the XSPAND program the same program that the Harrisburg School District is participating in [41] Here again, we note that while Xspand's representation regarding a business relationship with the city of Allentown was literally false, the same cannot support any of the claims in the complaint because MRS has not established causation as to it. Accordingly, we need not address it any further in the present context.

> The Harrisburg School District is currently participating in a borrowing plan associated with a loan from Commerce Bank. [42] This plan has recourse to the Harrisburg School District if the liens are not sufficient to repay the borrowing. The liability appears on the balance sheet of the Harrisburg School District, and the advance of the borrowed funds is not revenue for budgeting purposes. The debt 'does' affect the School Districts credit rating, and may [63] be limited by any debt limitation tests in bond indentures.

[*716] (Doc. 465-10, Ex. 5) (emphasis added). We believe that the above-emphasized language is unambiguous; a reasonable person could only read it to mean that the Harrisburg School District actually booked the MRS-facilitated transaction as a borrowing that created debt, not revenue. Contrary to that statement, the Harrisburg School District actually booked the proceeds of the MRS-facilitated transaction as revenue, not debt. In its opposition to the MRS Motion, Xspand admits that the above-emphasized statement is incorrect but asserts that it is a mere "typographical error" [43] that is of "no moment."

In support of this contention, Xspand states that HN29[] to obtain monetary damages in a § 43(a) Lanham Act false advertising case, a plaintiff seeking such damages must prove actual consumer deception, even if the claim is based on "literal falsity." [44] We believe that this is an accurate statement of the law. *See Gallup, Inc. v. Talentpoint, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18560, 2001 WL 1450592 13 (E.D. Pa. 2001) (emphasis added) ("Where plaintiff seeks injunctive relief, and shows that a claim is literally false, a court need not consider whether the public is misled. Where, however, a plaintiff seeks monetary damages, proof of actual deception is required. This does not mean that plaintiff bears the burden of detailing individualized loss of sales; however, plaintiff must show some customer reliance on the false advertising."); see also Castrol Inc. v. Pennzoil Co., 987 F.2d 939, 941-43 (3d Cir. 1993) (affirming trial court decision to grant injunctive relief but deny monetary relief in spite of finding literal falsity); Parkway Baking Co. v. Freihofer Baking Co., 255 F.2d 641, 649 (3d Cir. 1958) ("In cases of injunction [65] . . . there seems to be no requirement that purchasers actually be deceived, but only that the false advertisements have a tendency to deceive. . . . While it would be going too far to read the requirement of customer reliance out of this section so far as damages are concerned, we believe that this is a recognition that, as with most equitable relief by way of injunction, Section 43(a) may be asserted upon a showing of likelihood of damage without awaiting the actuality."); Bracco Diagnostics, Inc. v. Amersham Health, Inc., 627 F.Supp. 2d 384, 482 (D.N.J. 2009) (for the proposition that "literal falsity, without more, is insufficient to support an award of money damages to compensate for marketplace injury;" Synygy, Inc. v. Scott-Levin, Inc., 51 F.Supp. 2d 570, 575 (E.D. Pa. 1999) ("Thus, a plaintiff seeking monetary rather than injunctive relief must show actual damages rather than a mere tendency to be damaged."). [45] [*717] Xspand contends that since MRS cannot establish actual consumer deception, the misstatement contained in the FAQ is of no moment.

---

[42] This statement indicates that the transaction in question was facilitated by MRS, as it used Commerce Bank to finance its transaction with the Harrisburg School District.

[43] Xspand asserts that the statement was intended to read "The liability should appear on the balance sheet . . ." (Doc. 472 p. 12). This supposed "typographical error" does not implicate a misspelling or a transposition of words; it involves the complete omission of a word that substantially changes the meaning of the declaration. Given the allegations made by MRS, [64] we believe that the jury is entitled to determine the nature of the error contained in the FAQ.

[44] Xspand asserts that MRS can only seek money damages because Xspand has stopped circulating the advertisements in question, meaning there [66] is no basis for an injunction. MRS, on the other hand, asserts that even if Xspand has stopped misrepresenting the nature of MRS-facilitated transactions, that does not moot the need for injunctive relief. It contends that since the effect of Xspand's marketing statements lasted for years, it is entitled to a court-ordered state-wide retraction of Xspand's false statements, even at this late date, which is approximately 5 years after Xspand's marketing campaign commenced. Neither party has cited any authority regarding the appropriateness, or lack thereof, of the contemplated injunctive relief, and Xspand has not explicitly requested summary judgment on this issue. It is accordingly unnecessary to discourse further about it within our analysis.

[45] MRS challenges this statement of law on several fronts. First, it cites Facenda v. NFL Films, Inc., 542 F.3d 1007 (3d Cir. 2008), and Santana Prods., 401 F.3d at 136, for the proposition that proof of actual deception is not necessary in a § 43(a)(1)(B) Lanham Act false advertising claim when plaintiff proves literal falsity. However, this statement in Facenda arose in dicta, as that

On the point of actual deception, we note that Marie Guidry, a representative from the East Stroudsburg School District, testified:

> Q: Based on [paragraph 18 of the FAQ] . . . is Xspand leading you to believe that the MRS transaction does not produce revenue for budgeting purposes?
> A: Correct.
> Q: And is Xspand leading you to believe that the debt incurred as a result of the MRS transaction would affect the school district's credit rating?
> A: Yes.
> Q: An is Xspand also leading you to believe that any affect on such credit rating may be limited by any debt limitation test in bond indentures?
> A: Yes.
>
> Q: And does this [69] paragraph echo the concerns you had about the affect on the school district's bond rating?
> A: Yes.

Marie S. Guidry Dep., January 4, 2006, 64:17-65:3. Based on this testimony, we believe that a reasonable jury could determine that the literally false statement in Xspand's FAQ document actually deceived Guidry. However, this does not conclusively establish MRS' right to relief, as MRS must also establish causation. On this point we note that while Herron testified that representatives from East Stroudsburg confirmed that Xspand's marketing materials caused that school district not to do business with MRS, Guidry's deposition testimony provides reasons to believe that the Xspand marketing materials had no effect on East Stroudsburg's [*718] decision not to contract with MRS. Indeed, Guidry claimed that Xspand's FAQ document "echoed" concerns she already harbored regarding the effect that tax lien sales to private entities would have on the school district's financial statements and bond rating. See Guidry Dep. 43:5-44:1, 64:17-65:3. Accordingly, we believe that a reasonable jury could determine that the Xspand marketing materials did not play a causal role in East Stroudburg's decision not to [70] contract with MRS. Consequently, we are of the opinion that the issue of causation is a determination to be made by the jury. Therefore, we will grant the MRS Motion insofar as it requests a declaration that Xspand's representation regarding its business relationship with the city of Allentown and Xspand's statement in the FAQ document to the effect that the Harrisburg School District booked the proceeds of MRS-facilitated transactions as debt are literally false. However, we will deny the MRS Motion to the extent it seeks to impose liability based on either of these literal falsities, and to the additional extent that it seeks a determination that any other Xspand marketing statements were literally false. We now proceed to the TIA argument.

ii. TIA Argument

---

case actually involved a § 43(a)(1)(A) Lanham Act false-endorsement [67] claim. Indeed, the Third Circuit admitted that the standards governing § 43(a)(1)(B) and § 43(a)(1)(A) are often different. See Facenda, 542 F.3d at 1021. Further, the relevant portion of Facenda quotes Fisons Horticulture, Inc. v. Vigoro Indus.., 30 F.3d 466, 472 n.8 (3d Cir. 1994). In footnote 8, the Fisions Court cited to Johnson & Johnson-Merck Consumer Pharms. Co. v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer Pharms., Inc., 19 F.3d 125 (3d Cir. 1994), and Sandoz Pharm. Corp. v. Richardson-Vicks, Inc., 902 F.2d 222 (3d Cir. 1990), both of which involved injunctions. Additionally, the proposition as it is found in Santana Products is accompanied by a citation to Johnson & Johnson. Accordingly, MRS' citation to Facenda and Santana Products does not alter our opinion that it must establish actual deception to succeed on its § 43(a)(1)(B) Lanham Act false advertising claim.

Second, MRS cites various cases from foreign jurisdictions for the proposition that where there is willfully false advertising, as is purportedly the situation in the case at bar, there is a presumption of damages. See Porous Media Corp. v. Pall Corp., 110 F.3d 1329, 1336 (8th Cir. 1997); *Trilink Saw Chain, LLC v. Blount, Inc., 583 F. Supp. 2d 1293, 2008 WL 4261040 20 (N.D. Ga. 2008); [68] Heidi Ott A.G. v. Target Corp., 153 F.Supp. 2d 1055, 1072 (D. Minn. 2001). Notably, MRS has failed to cite any authority in our Circuit for this proposition. Further, to the extent that this proposition is interposed as an attempt to establish that proof of actual customer deception occurred, such a contention squarely conflicts with the above-cited Third Circuit authority establishing that plaintiffs must prove actual customer confusion/deception in order to recover money damages for a Lanham Act false advertising claim. Therefore, we find Plaintiff's argument on this point unavailing.

The TIA states, HN30[] "The district court shall not enjoin, suspend, or restrain the assessment, levy, or collection of any tax under state law where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy can be had in the courts of such state." 28 U.S.C. § 1341. In this regard, MRS notes, HN31[] "A lien sale is a mode of tax collection; and so an action to enjoin it, or declare it illegal, or rescind it . . . would be barred by the [TIA] or, in the case of [71] the damages suit, by the free-standing principle of comity." Wright v. Pappas, 256 F.3d 635, 637 (7th Cir. 2001) (citing Simon v. Cebrick, 53 F.3d 17, 22 (3d Cir. 1995)). MRS contends that the TIA is applicable in the case at bar because Xspand is asking the Court to second guess the decisions of local elected officials as to what has been treated as revenue since the moment the liens were sold. Essentially, then, MRS claims that Xspand requests us to act as a "super auditor" over state and local governmental entities in a way that would usurp the powers of the Pennsylvania Department of Community and Economic Development (the "DCED") and the Pennsylvania Auditor General. Further, MRS asserts that Xspand had state remedies for challenging whether it improperly classified a transaction as a sale instead of a borrowing. See 53 Pa.C.S. § 8211(d) (cited for the proposition that the DCED has exclusive jurisdiction to determine all procedural and substantive matters arising out of transactions engaged in by local government unites which create debt for those entities).

While exceedingly novel, we find Plaintiff's argument unpersuasive. The United States Supreme Court has stated, HN32[] "The TIA's [72] legislative history shows that, in enacting the statute, Congress focused on taxpayers who sought to avoid paying their state tax bill by pursuing a challenge route other than the one specified by the taxing authority." Hibbs v. Winn, 542 U.S. 88, 89, 124 S. Ct. 2276, 159 L. Ed. 2d 172 (2004). Accordingly, the Court proceeded to state that it "has interpreted and applied the TIA only in cases Congress wrote the statute to address, i.e., cases in which state taxpayers seek federal-court orders enabling them to avoid paying state taxes." Id. at 89. Indeed, the case cited by MRS in support of its position is consistent with this construction of the TIA in that Wright involved a plaintiff who bought tax liens from Cook County, Illinois and later sued the treasurer on the theory that the treasurer overstated the value of the liens based on plaintiff's race. Wright [*719] challenged the collection of taxes and requested a refund from the county, thereby attempting to avoid the payment of taxes. These circumstances quite obviously differ greatly from the facts present in the case sub judice.

Unlike the plaintiff in Wright, no party in the case at bar is requesting the government to take any action. Xspand is merely attempting to establish [73] that certain government entities erroneously booked the proceeds of MRS-facilitated transactions as revenue instead of properly booking them as debt. While this involves the government in a tangential way, Xspand is not attempting to force the government to retroactively alter its accounting books. Further, even if a jury finds Xspand's argument persuasive, the government entities that booked MRS-facilitated proceeds as revenue will not be compelled to adjust their books to reflect that the MRS-facilitated transaction produced debt. Indeed, it appears that any decision made by this Court will not affect the balance sheets or budgets of any of the local government entities implicated in this case. No transfer of funds from the local government entities to MRS or from MRS to the local government entities that was not contemplated by the terms of the MRS-government contract will occur as a result of any decision that may be rendered in this case. At most, a decision adverse to MRS will merely indicate that the government entities booking the proceeds of MRS-facilitated transactions as revenue may have committed an error in book keeping; it will not change the capital at the governmental [74] entity's disposal. Accordingly, we do not believe that the TIA is applicable to this case because we cannot perceive how any activity in this case will "enjoin, suspend, or restrain the assessment, levy, or collection" of any state tax. Therefore, we will deny the MRS Motion to this extent.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, and to the extent reflected above, we shall deny in part and grant in part the Xspand Motion, the Bear Motion, and the MRS Motion. We shall also deny Xspand's motion in limine seeking the exclusion of Herron's expert testimony with leave to re-file the same within 30 days of receipt of the transcript from Herron's "expert" deposition.

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

1. Xspand's motion in limine seeking the exclusion of Herron's expert testimony (Doc. 441) is DENIED without prejudice to re-file within 30 days of receipt of the transcript from Herron's "expert" deposition.

2. Xspand's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 445) is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART to the following extent:

a. The Motion is DENIED insofar as it involves the following:

i. Xspand's global Noerr-Pennington argument;
ii. Xspand's global falsity argument;

iii. Xspand's global causation [75] argument;
iv. MRS' commercial disparagement claim;
v. MRS' tortious interference claim; and
vi. MRS' request for lost profits.

b. The Motion is GRANTED insofar as it involves MRS' defamation claim and MRS' Commerce Bank argument.

3. MRS' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (Doc. 449) is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART to the following extent:

[*720] a. The Motion is GRANTED insofar as it requests a declaration that the following statements are literally false: (i) Xspand's representation regarding its business relationship with the city of Allentown; and (ii) Xspand's statement in the FAQ document to the effect that the Harrisburg School District booked the proceeds of MRS-facilitated transactions as debt.

b. The Motion is DENIED insofar as MRS requests a judgment of liability based on the aforementioned literal falsities.

c. The Motion is DENIED insofar as it requests a declaration that any additional Xspand marketing statements were literally false.

4. Bear's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 451) is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART to the following extent:

a. The Motion is GRANTED insofar as it involves MRS' unpleaded Rule G-37 averments.

b. The Motion is DENIED insofar as it involves Bear's [76] liability for Xspand's marketing activities.

/s/ John E. Jones III

John E. Jones III

United States District Judge

[Univac Dental Co. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc.]

United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania

March 31, 2010, Decided; March 31, 2010, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 1:07-CV-0493

Reporter

702 F. Supp. 2d 465 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31615 **

UNIVAC DENTAL COMPANY, and LACTONA CORPORATION, Plaintiffs v. DENTSPLY INTERNATIONAL, INC., Defendant

Prior History: Univac Dental Co. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126961 (M.D. Pa., Dec. 30, 2009)

Core Terms

dealers, plaintiffs', summary judgment, recommended, magistrate judge, competitors, teeth, damages, proposed findings, instant case, practices, antitrust, parties, anticompetitive, lines, tooth, issue of causation, defendant argues, litigated, collateral estoppel, limitations period, clear error, portions, mislead, agrees, dental, report and recommendation, antitrust violation, competing product, issue preclusion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Through summary adjudication the court may dispose of those claims that do not present a "genuine issue as to any material fact" and for which a jury trial would be an empty and unnecessary formality. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The burden of proof is upon the non-moving party to come forth with affirmative evidence, beyond the allegations of the pleadings, in support of its right to relief. This evidence must be adequate, as a matter of law, to sustain a judgment in favor of the nonmoving party on the claims. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), (e). Only if this threshold is met may the cause of action proceed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > Cross Motions

HN2[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Cross-motions for summary judgment are no more than a claim by each side that it alone is entitled to summary judgment, and the making of such inherently contradictory claims does not constitute an agreement that if one is rejected the other is necessarily justified or that the losing party waives judicial consideration and determination whether genuine issues of material fact exist. Each movant must show that no genuine issue of material fact exists; if both parties fail to carry their respective burdens, the court must deny the motions. When reviewing each motion, the court is bound to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmovant. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Standards of Review

HN3[] Magistrates, Standards of Review

Where objections to a magistrate judge's report and recommendation are filed, the court must perform a de novo review of the contested portions of the report. 28 U.S.C.S. § 636(b)(1)(C)). In this regard, M.D. Pa. Civ. R. 72.3 requires written objections which specifically identify the portions of the proposed findings, recommendations or report to which objection is made and the basis for those objections.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Objections

HN4[] Magistrates, Objections

Where parties have not filed objections to a magistrate judge's report and recommendation, the Federal Magistrates Act does not require a district court to review the report before accepting it. As a matter of good practice, however, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit expects courts to afford some level of review to dispositive legal issues raised by the report. The advisory committee notes to Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b) indicate that when no timely objection is filed, the court need only satisfy itself that there is no clear error on the face of the record in order to accept the recommendation. The court's review is limited to ascertaining whether there is "clear error on the face of the record.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN5[] Sherman Act, Scope

In order to establish that a defendant violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a plaintiff must show that the challenged practices bar a substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN6[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

A showing that the challenged practices bar a substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit is required to demonstrate a § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, antitrust violation affecting competition generally. However, the court is aware of no legal authority requiring an individual competitor to make the same showing with respect to its own individual access to the market. Of course, a plaintiff must show that the defendant's conduct injured or damaged it, but this burden does not require a plaintiff to show that defendant has foreclosed a significant portion of the market to it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN7[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

A monopolist is not free to take certain actions that a company in a competitive (or even oligopolistic) market may take and the government's prior antitrust litigation against defendant has already established that its policies--specifically, violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Counsel: [1] For Univac Dental Company, Plaintiff: Gregory J. McDonald, Paul R. Braunsdorf, Rayne Hammond Benz, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Harris Beach PLLC, Pittsford, NY; Melissa H. Maxman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cozen O'Connor, Washington, DC; Robert M. Stengel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert M. Stengel, P.C., Doylestown, PA; Bart D. Cohen, Berger & Montague, Philadelphia, PA.

For Lactona Corporation, Consol Plaintiff: Bart D. Cohen, LEAD ATTORNEY, Berger & Montague, Philadelphia, PA; H. L. Montague, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Berger & Montague, P.C., Philadelphia, PA; Melissa H. Maxman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cozen O'Connor, Washington, DC; Robert J. Nolan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Yardley, PA.

For Dentsply International, Inc., Defendant, Consol Defendant, Cross Claimant, Counterclaim Plaintiff: Melissa H. Maxman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cozen O'Connor, Washington, DC; Ronald F. Wick, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Cozen O'Connor, Washington, DC.

For Lactona Corporation, Cross Defendant: Melissa H. Maxman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cozen O'Connor, Washington, DC; Bart D. Cohen, Berger & Montague, Philadelphia, PA.

For Univac Dental Company, Cross Defendant, Counterclaim Defendant: Gregory J. McDonald, Paul R. Braunsdorf, Rayne Hammond Benz, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Harris Beach [2] PLLC, Pittsford, NY; Melissa H. Maxman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cozen O'Connor, Washington, DC; Robert M. Stengel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robert M. Stengel, P.C., Doylestown, PA.

Judges: Judge CHRISTOPHER C. CONNER, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: CHRISTOPHER C. CONNER

Opinion

[*467] MEMORANDUM

Presently before the court are two motions for summary judgment (Docs. 63, 64) and the magistrate judge's report (Doc. 106) recommending that both motions be granted in part and denied in part. Plaintiffs Univac Dental Company ("Univac") and Lactona Corporation ("Lactona"), and defendant Dentsply International, Inc. ("Dentsply"), have filed objections to the magistrate judge's report and recommendation ("R&R"). For the reasons set forth below, the court will adopt the R&R.

I. Factual Background & Procedural History

Plaintiffs are two dental supply manufacturers. They complain that defendant--the dominant manufacturer and supplier in the market for artificial teeth, used in dentures--has engaged in anti-competitive practices, in violation of, inter alia, § 2 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs contend that defendant's alleged antitrust violations have harmed them--or, more directly, harmed Universal Dental Company ("Universal"), plaintiffs' predecessor [3] and one of defendant's competitors. The complained-of practices include Dentsply's adoption and enforcement of a policy [*468] ("Dealer Criterion 6") that prohibited dental product dealers from adding competitors' artificial teeth to their product lines. Dealer Criterion 6 restricted dealers from expanding their offerings of competitive lines of teeth, but it did not completely preclude them from selling competing products. To the extent that dealers carried competing products before Dealer Criterion 6 was adopted, continued sales of those products were permitted.

The above-captioned case is not the first legal proceeding challenging Dentsply's business practices and policies. They were also challenged by the antitrust division of the United States Department of Justice in 1999. (Doc. 106 at 5-6); see United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 277 F. Supp. 2d 387 (D. Del. 2003), United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181 (3d Cir. 2005). The basis of plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment is that the prior litigation has conclusively resolved some of the issues presented in the instant case. Defendant has also moved for summary judgment, based on the alleged insufficiency of plaintiffs' [4] evidence.

The magistrate judge recommends that defendant's motion (Doc. 64) for summary judgment be granted with respect to plaintiff's state law claims and denied with respect to plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims. He also recommends that plaintiffs' motion (Doc. 63) for partial summary judgment be granted to the extent that it precludes defendant from re-litigating issues concerning the anti-competitive nature of its business practices but denied to the extent that plaintiffs seek to avoid litigating the questions of damages and causation.

II. Standard of Review

A. Standard of Review for Cross-Motions for Summary Judgment

HN1[] Through summary adjudication the court may dispose of those claims that do not present a "genuine issue as to any material fact" and for which a jury trial would be an empty and unnecessary formality. See FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c). The burden of proof is upon the non-moving party to come forth with "affirmative evidence, beyond the allegations of the pleadings," in support of its right to relief. Pappas v. City of Lebanon, 331 F. Supp. 2d 311, 315 (M.D. Pa. 2004); FED. R. CIV. P. 56(e); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). This evidence must [5] be adequate, as a matter of law, to sustain a judgment in favor of the nonmoving party on the claims. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250-57, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587-89, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); see also FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c), (e). Only if this threshold is met may the cause of action proceed. Pappas, 331 F. Supp. 2d at 315.

In the instant matter, the parties have filed cross-motions for summary judgment. According to the Third Circuit:

> HN2[] Cross-motions are no more than a claim by each side that it alone is entitled to summary judgment, and the making of such inherently contradictory claims does not constitute an agreement that if one is rejected the other is necessarily justified or that the losing party waives judicial consideration and determination whether genuine issues of material fact exist.

Lawrence v. City of Phila., 527 F.3d 299, 310 (3d Cir. 2008) (quoting Rains v. Cascade Indus., Inc., 402 F.2d 241, 245 (3d Cir. 1968)). Each movant must show that no genuine issue of material fact exists; if both parties fail to carry their respective burdens, the court must deny the motions. See Facenda v. N.F.L. Films, Inc., 542 F.3d 1007, 1023 (3d Cir. 2008). [6] When reviewing each motion, the court is bound to [*469] view the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmovant. FED. R. CIV. P. 56; United States v. Hall, 730 F. Supp. 646, 648 (M.D. Pa. 1980).

B. Standard of Review for a Magistrate Judge's Recommendation

HN3[] Where objections to a magistrate judge's report and recommendation are filed, the court must perform a de novo review of the contested portions of the report. *Supinski v. United Parcel Serv., Civ. A. No. 06-0793, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3143, 2009 WL 113796, at 3 (M.D. Pa. Jan. 16, 2009) (citing Sample v. Diecks, 885 F.2d 1099, 1106 n. 3 (3d Cir. 1989); 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(C)). "In this regard, Local Rule of Court 72.3 requires 'written objections which . . . specifically identify the portions of the proposed findings, recommendations or report to which objection is made and the basis for those objections.'" Id. (citing *Shields v. Astrue, Civ. A. No. 07-417, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74519, 2008 WL 4186951, at 6 (M.D. Pa. Sept. 8, 2008)).

HN4[] Where parties have not filed objections to a magistrate judge's report and recommendation, the Federal Magistrates Act does not require a district court to review the report before accepting it. Thomas v. Arn, 474 U.S. 140, 149, 106 S. Ct. 466, 88 L. Ed. 2d 435 (1985). As a matter of good [7] practice, however, the Third Circuit expects courts to "afford some level of review to dispositive legal issues raised by the report." Henderson v.

Carlson, 812 F.2d 874, 878 (3d Cir. 1987). The advisory committee notes to Rule 72(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure indicate that "[w]hen no timely objection is filed, the court need only satisfy itself that there is no clear error on the face of the record in order to accept the recommendation." FED. R. CIV. P. 72(b), advisory committee notes; see also Tice v. Wilson, 425 F. Supp. 2d 676, 680 (W.D. Pa. 2006) (holding that the court's review is conducted under the "plain error" standard); Cruz v. Chater, 990 F. Supp. 375, 378 (M.D. Pa. 1998) (holding that the court's review is limited to ascertaining whether there is "clear error on the face of the record"); Oldrati v. Apfel, 33 F. Supp. 2d 397, 399 (E.D. Pa. 1998) (holding that the court will review the report and recommendation for "clear error").

III. Discussion

Plaintiffs' objections (Doc. 118) to the R&R include the following arguments: (1) that the court should give preclusive effect to the Third Circuit's determination that defendant's actions injured Universal; and (2) that [8] the court should adopt additional proposed findings. Defendant's objections (Doc. 119) to the R&R are as follows: (1) that there are no genuine issues concerning the application of the statute of limitations to plaintiffs' claims; (2) that there are no genuine issues regarding whether Dentsply's conduct injured plaintiffs; (3) that plaintiffs have failed to create a triable issue of fact with regard to the allegation that Dentsply's tooth swaps and exclusivity rebates violated antitrust laws; and (4) that the court should decline to adopt certain findings recommended by the magistrate judge. The court will address each of these arguments in turn. The court will also review the remaining portions of the R&R for clear error.

A. Has Damage to Plaintiffs Been Conclusively Established?

Plaintiffs argue that, in United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d at 181, the Third Circuit "made it clear that Dentsply's actions harmed all of its competitors[,]" including Universal, plaintiffs' predecessor. (Doc. 118 at 8). In other words, plaintiffs object to the magistrate judge's recommendation that the parties should present to the factfinder the issues of causation and damages. Although defendant [9] does not dispute that the Third [*470] Circuit referenced harm suffered by "competitors," defendant asserts that the Third Circuit never held that the harm affected all competitors or plaintiffs specifically. (Doc. 125 at 5-6). Defendant maintains that the court should require plaintiffs to prove damages, because the prerequisites for issue preclusion are not satisfied.

Plaintiffs assert that the magistrate judge improperly relied on Jean Alexander Cosmetics, Inc. v. L'Oreal USA, Inc.., 458 F.3d 244 (3d Cir. 2006), in reaching its conclusion that collateral estoppel does not operate to resolve the issues of causation and damages in the instant case. (See Doc. 118 at 11-15; Doc. 106 at 34-35). In Jean Alexander, the court expressed concern that applying issue preclusion principles--specifically, non-mutual offensive collateral estoppel--too freely would create a general incentive for plaintiffs to "wait and see" if another plaintiff obtains a favorable judgment in an earlier action, rather than promptly asserting their own claims. To dismiss this concern as it relates to the instant case, plaintiffs aver that "the Clayton Act specifically contemplates and encourages such a 'wait and see' by [10] private plaintiffs when the United States has brought an action." (Doc. 118 at 11). Notably, the Clayton Act explicitly permits the application of collateral estoppel, and it tolls the statute of limitations for private antitrust lawsuits during any government action and for one year thereafter. (Id. at 11-13.) Thus, plaintiffs seek to distinguish Jean Alexander, a trademark case, from the instant case, in which a violation of the Clayton Act is alleged. (Doc. 127 at 10).

Plaintiffs arguments on these issues are unavailing. Although it is true that the magistrate judge relied on Jean Alexander and discussed the risk of encouraging plaintiffs to "wait and see," the recommendation that the parties litigate the issues of causation and damages in the instant case is not solely attributable to these considerations. Significantly, the magistrate judge also concluded that "the issues of causation and damages for these particular plaintiffs were not fully litigated in the prior action" and that "it cannot be said that 'the determination [of these issues . . . was] essential to the prior judgment[.]'" (Doc. 106 at 42). Accordingly, the prerequisites for collateral estoppel were not satisfied. [11] (See id. at 39, 42). The court agrees with these conclusions of the magistrate judge. Applying issue preclusion in the manner requested by plaintiff would therefore be improper. The parties must litigate both causation and damages.

Plaintiffs also argue that the magistrate judge conflated the issues of causation and damages. According to plaintiffs, his report failed to differentiate the "fact of damage" from the amount of damage. (Doc. 118 at 16). Ostensibly, plaintiffs posit that, through the operation of collateral estoppel, the Third Circuit's "repeated statements that Dentsply's violation had harmed its competitors, one of which was Universal[,]" (Doc. 118 at 18), establish the "fact of damage." Defendant argues that the Third Circuit's statements have no such effect. (Doc. 125 at 10, n.1). The court is not persuaded that collateral estoppel should apply to the statements to which plaintiff refers. As discussed above, the court agrees with the magistrate judge's conclusions that the prerequisites for issue preclusion are not satisfied with respect to the issues of causation and damages. Nor can the court conclude that the relatively narrow issue of the "fact of damage"--that is, [12] the fact that Universal was damaged--was "fully litigated in the prior action" or was "essential to the prior judgment[.]" (See Doc. 106 at 42). Hence, collateral estoppel does not operate to establish the fact of damage, and plaintiffs must prove damage in the instant case.

[*471] B. Should the Court Adopt Additional Findings?

The magistrate judge recommended that four of plaintiff's proposed findings not be adopted: findings 11, 25, 27, and 29. Plaintiff asks the court to give preclusive effect to these findings, but defendant argues that the magistrate properly declined to adopt them. The court will address these findings seriatim.

Proposed finding 11 states that "Dentsply had in place a policy precluding its dealers from carrying competitive lines of teeth." The parties agree that proposed finding 11 is inaccurate, insofar as Dentsply's policy merely prevented dealers from adding competitive lines of teeth; it did not prevent dealers who already carried competitive lines of teeth from continuing to carry them. See supra Part I. Defendant also argues that its enforcement of the policy in 1988 is irrelevant to the pending case, because it occurred outside the limitations period. However, plaintiffs [13] urge the court to adopt a re-worded version of proposed finding 11, and the court finds it advisable to do so. The court will therefore adopt the following finding: "No later than December 31, 1988, Dentsply's policy directives precluded dealers from adding competitive lines of teeth to their product lines. However, dealers who already carried competing products were permitted to continue doing so."

Plaintiffs admit that "[p]roposed finding 25 and 27 . . . both tie in to the causation issue[,]" and they simply note that "the language used in these Proposed Findings is almost identical to that used by the Third Circuit." (Doc. 118 at 18). Although the doctrine of issue preclusion permits the court to make some findings from the Third Circuit's holdings in prior litigation, it does not apply to all of the Third Circuit's language. Based on the court's conclusion that the issue of causation was "not fully litigated in the prior action" and was not "essential to the prior judgment[,]" see supra Part III.A, the court agrees with the magistrate judge's recommendation that the language at issue should not be adopted as a finding in the instant case.

Proposed finding 29 states that "Dentsply's [14] alleged justification was pretextual and did not excuse its exclusionary practices." It further provides that Dentsply's purported justification was inconsistent with evidence on various other points. The magistrate judge recommended that, instead of adopting proposed finding 29, the court should adopt a finding that "Dentsply's alleged business justification did not excuse its exclusionary practices." (Doc. 106 at 50-51). The magistrate judge stated that proposed finding 29 would be redundant in light of the other recommended findings and that "its use of the term pretextual could cause confusion and prejudice." (Doc. 106 at 51 n.6). The court agrees with the magistrate judge's rationale for declining to adopt proposed finding 29. Plaintiffs' objections on this issue are therefore rejected.

C. Does the Statute of Limitations Bar Plaintiffs' Claims?

Defendant asserts that plaintiffs have failed to come forward with sufficient evidence to meet their burden of showing that, during the limitations period, defendant took action that was both anticompetitive and injurious to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs have evidence that, during the relevant period, Dentsply engaged in "tooth swaps" with dental [15] product dealers, which means that Dentsply exchanged the dealer's inventory of teeth supplied by Universal for teeth supplied by Dentsply. Plaintiffs' evidence also indicates that Dentsply maintained and enforced Dealer Criterion 6 during the relevant period. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to [*472] plaintiffs, the court cannot agree with defendant's argument that it is inadequate to meet plaintiffs' burden. Although the evidence does not conclusively show that defendant engaged in anticompetitive conduct during the limitations period and thereby harmed plaintiffs, it is sufficient to present the issue to the finder of fact. Therefore, plaintiffs are entitled to proceed to trial. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248-49, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986) (quoting First Nat'l Bank v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 288-89, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968)).

Defendant also contends that the magistrate judge's statement that "the Court should not only consider evidence regarding Dentsply's actions directed toward Plaintiffs' specifically, but also the actions that infringed competition in the relevant market generally" is erroneous. (Doc. 119 at 8; see also Doc. 106 at 14). The magistrate judge cited LePage's, Inc. [16] v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141 (3d Cir. 2003), for its finding that exclusionary conduct "is not only injurious to the potential competitor [whom it targets] but also to competition in general." Id. at 159; (see Doc. 106 at 14). Defendant observes that injury to "competition in general" is not an issue in the instant case, as it was in LePage's and in the government's prior antitrust litigation against it. According to defendant, neither LePage's nor any other precedent "holds that injury to 'competition in general' is sufficient for a jury to infer injury to each competitor." (Doc. 119 at 9 (emphasis in the original)). While this distinction between LePage's and the instant case may be correct, it does not persuade the court that the magistrate judge erred. To the contrary, the court agrees with the magistrate judge's conclusion that evidence of injury to competition in general is worthy of the court's consideration. Such evidence could support a finding that an individual competitor was injured, particularly where, as here, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment.

In addition, defendant argues that the court should determine that plaintiffs [17] may not recover for acts committed by defendant prior to January 5, 1995, because no reasonable jury could find that defendant engaged in a continuing violation. The court does not agree. Rather, the court is persuaded by the magistrate judge's reasoning and finding that "there exists evidence to support a finding that the continuing violations [doctrine] . . . may have application in this case[.]" (Doc. 106 at 15). Therefore, the court rejects this argument.

D. Have Plaintiffs Presented Sufficient Evidence of Damage?

Defendant argues that plaintiffs' evidence is inadequate to show that defendant's conduct was anticompetitive and caused plaintiffs any injury. For the reasons discussed supra, Part III.C, the court does not agree. However, defendant has raised one additional argument on the issue of whether plaintiffs have failed to prove injury (not in the context of its statute of limitations argument), and the court will address that argument presently.

Both parties agree that, HN5[] in order to establish that defendant violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, plaintiffs must show that "the challenged practices bar a substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit." (See Doc. [18] 126 at 13-14, Doc. 129 at 11). Defendant argues that plaintiffs cannot show its actions foreclosed a sufficiently significant portion of the market to Universal. Rather, according to defendant, Universal was able to maintain access to a number of dental supply dealers through the grandfather exception to Dealer Criterion 6--the provision which [*473] permitted dealers who carried competing products before Dealer Criterion 6 was adopted to continue doing so. Thus, defendant contends that its conduct did not cause antitrust injury to plaintiffs.

Implicit in defendant's argument is a confusion of plaintiffs' burden to demonstrate an antitrust violation with plaintiffs' burden to show that they suffered some "measurable damage" as a result of the antitrust violation. See Deaktor v. Fox Grocery Co., 475 F.2d 1112, 1116 (3d Cir. 1973); see also Pitchford v. PEPI, Inc., 531 F.2d 92, 98 (3d Cir. 1975) ("A plaintiff . . . must demonstrate both that the antitrust laws were violated and that it has suffered 'fact of damage' in consequence of that violation . . . ."). HN6[] A showing that "the challenged practices bar a substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit" is required to demonstrate [19] a § 2 antitrust violation affecting competition generally. However, the court is aware of no legal authority requiring an individual competitor to make the same showing with respect to its own individual access to the market. Of course, a plaintiff must show that the defendant's conduct injured or damaged it, but this burden does not require a plaintiff to show that defendant has foreclosed a significant portion of the market to it. As the court concluded supra, Part III.C, plaintiffs' evidence of injury is sufficient to survive summary judgment.

E. Could a Factfinder Conclude that Defendant's Tooth Swaps or Rebate Offer Violated Antitrust Law?

According to defendant, there is no basis from which a jury could find that either its tooth swaps or its offer of a rebate for exclusive Dentsply dealers violated § 2 of the Sherman Act. The court disagrees. The Third Circuit has held that HN7[] "a monopolist is not free to take certain actions that a company in a competitive (or even oligopolistic) market may take," LePage's, 324 F.3d at 151-52, and the government's prior antitrust litigation against defendant has already established that its policies--specifically, Dealer Criterion 6--violated § 2 [20] of the Sherman Act, see Dentsply, 399 F.3d at 196. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the parties opposing summary judgment, the court finds that a reasonable jury could indeed conclude that a monopolist such as the defendant violated § 2 by participating in tooth swaps, or by offering a loyalty discount for exclusive Dentsply dealers, or both.

F. Should the Court Reject Recommended Findings?

Defendant objects to recommended findings 6, 15, 19, 21, and 22, on the basis that they are inapplicable or misleading. The court will examine defendant's objections to these findings in turn.

Defendant objects to the statement in finding 6 that it "block[ed] access to the key dealers[,]" and defendant asserts that Universal continued to have access to most dealers, thanks to the grandfather provision in Dealer Criterion 6. The court is not persuaded that finding 6 is inaccurate on this basis, because finding 6 is articulated with reference to "most manufacturers" and "competitors," not with specific reference to Universal. Furthermore, any potential for finding 6 to mislead a jury can be alleviated by the defendant's evidence and argument concerning the extent to which Universal [21] benefitted from the grandfather provision.

Defendant argues that finding 15's statement that "Dentsply enforced Dealer Criterion 6 against a dealer who attempted to switch to a competitor's teeth" would mislead the jury. Defendant avers that the competitor referenced was not Universal, and therefore, this finding is immaterial to [*474] the pending action and would mislead the jury. The court concludes, to the contrary, that finding 15 is material, insofar as it demonstrates defendant's anticompetitive conduct; obviously, a key part of plaintiffs' case is demonstrating an antitrust violation. The fact that finding 15 refers to a competitor other than Universal does not render it misleading.

Defendant also contends that finding 19 is inaccurate with respect to Universal, because the grandfather provision of Dealer Criterion 6 gave Universal far more than a "small sliver" of the market. Like finding 6, however, finding 19 refers to "competitors," not specifically to Universal, and therefore it is not inaccurate. Defendant is free to show that Universal had access to a significant portion of the market, unlike the "competitors" referenced in finding 19, but defendant has failed to persuade the [22] court that finding 19 is inaccurate.

With respect to finding 21, which states that "[o]n several occasions, Denstply has required dealers to drop some, or all, competing tooth brands in order to obtain [its] tooth line[,]" defendant argues that the finding is immaterial to the instant action and would mislead the jury. Defendant asserts that it did not require a dealer to drop Universal teeth on any of these occasions. Furthermore, defendant insists that most of the events to which this finding refers occurred outside the applicable limitations period. As noted, plaintiffs' evidence may be sufficient to establish that the continuing violations doctrine applies to the instant case. Accordingly, the court will not reject finding 21 on the basis of its reference to events occurring outside the limitations period. Nor will the court reject this finding on the basis of its reference to tooth brands other than Universal. Finally, the court notes that its rationale for adopting finding 15 applies with equal force to finding 21.

Defendant raises a similar argument regarding finding 22, which refers to ten incidents "in which Dentsply required agreement by new as well as long-standing dealers [23] not to handle competitors' teeth[.]" Defendant states that nine of these ten incidents did not involve an agreement to forego an inventory of Universal teeth, and the tenth incident occurred outside the limitations period which applies to the instant case. For the reasons stated above, the court rejects these arguments.

G. Do the Remaining Portions of the R&R Contain Clear Error?

The court has reviewed the magistrate judge's entire R&R, including those portions to which the parties have filed no objections. In accordance with the Third Circuit's directive, the court has examined those portions of the R&R for clear error, and it has found none.

IV. Conclusion

The court agrees with the magistrate judge's conclusion that plaintiffs' motion (Doc. 63) for partial summary judgment should be granted to the extent that it precludes defendant from re-litigating issues concerning the anti-competitive nature of its business practices but denied to the extent that plaintiffs seek to avoid litigating the questions of damages and causation. The magistrate judge also properly concluded that defendant's motion (Doc. 64) for summary judgment should be granted with respect to plaintiff's state law claims [24] and denied with respect to plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims. The court will also adopt the findings recommended by the magistrate judge, and it will adopt one additional finding.

An appropriate order will issue.

/s/ Christopher C. Conner

CHRISTOPHER C. CONNER

United States District Judge

Dated: March 31, 2010

[*475] ORDER

AND NOW, this 31st day of March, 2010, upon consideration of the report of the magistrate judge (Doc. 106), recommending that the motions (Docs. 63, 64) for summary judgment be granted in part and denied in part, and upon further consideration of the parties' objections (Docs. 118, 119) to the magistrate judge's report and recommendation, and for the reasons set forth in the accompanying memorandum, it is hereby ORDERED that:

1. The report of the magistrate judge (Doc. 106) is ADOPTED.
2. Defendant's motion (Doc. 64) for summary judgment is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as follows:
    a. Summary judgment is GRANTED with respect to plaintiffs' state law claims.
    b. Summary judgment is DENIED with respect to plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims.
3. Plaintiffs' motion (Doc. 63) for summary judgment is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as follows:
    a. Defendant shall not re-litigate [25] issues concerning the general anticompetitive nature of its practices.
    b. Plaintiffs shall be required to prove causation--specifically, a causal relationship between defendant's anticompetitive practices and plaintiffs' injury--and damages--including the fact of injury and the amount of damages.
4. In addition to adopting the findings recommended by the magistrate judge, the court will adopt the following finding: "No later than December 31, 1988, Dentsply's policy directives precluded dealers from adding competitive lines of teeth to their product lines. However, dealers who already carried competing products were permitted to continue doing so."
5. The Clerk of Court is directed to defer the entry of judgment on the claims described in Paragraph 2(a) until the resolution of all claims.

/s/ Christopher C. Conner

CHRISTOPHER C. CONNER

United States District Judge

Animal Sci. Prods. v. China Nat'l Metals & Minerals Imp. & Exp. Corp.

United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

April 1, 2010, Decided; April 1, 2010, Filed

Civ. No. 05-4376 (GEB)

Reporter
702 F. Supp. 2d 320 *; 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35243 ; 2010-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76,981

ANIMAL SCIENCE PRODUCTS, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. CHINA NATIONAL METALS & MINERALS IMPORT & EXPORT CORPORATION, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Vacated by, Remanded by Animal Sci. Prods. v. China Minmetals Corp., 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 17046 (3d Cir. N.J., Aug. 17, 2011)

Prior History: Animal Sci. Prods. v. China Nat'l Metals & Minerals Imp. & Exp. Corp., 596 F. Supp. 2d 842, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107311 (D.N.J., 2008)

Core Terms

export, Plaintiffs', magnesite, import, Defendants', minimum price, regulations, prices, docket entry, products, compulsion, exhibits, amended complaint, quota, commerce, appears, entity, asserting, abstention, purposes, coordination, prescripts, licensing, Measures, allegations, Sherman Act, variables, magnesium oxide, Vitamin, comity

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN1[] Jurisdiction, Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Each court has a continuing obligation to sua sponte raise the issue of subject matter jurisdiction. A federal court will raise lack of subject-matter jurisdiction on its own motion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN2[] Jurisdiction, Subject Matter Jurisdiction

The burden to establish subject matter jurisdiction falls squarely on the plaintiffs since the plaintiffs invoke the court's jurisdiction by bringing an action. A federal court shall presume lack of jurisdiction, and the party seeking to invoke the court's jurisdiction bears the burden of proving that subject matter jurisdiction exists.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN3[] Jurisdiction, Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Deficiencies as to the subject matter jurisdiction may be either "facial" or "factual." The distinction between factual and facial assessments is rather dramatic. In a facial attack (that is, addressing a challenge based on the assertions made in the plaintiff's pleadings), the trial court must accept the complaint's allegations as true, i.e., the court merely requires the plaintiff to articulate the factual premise of his/her contentions, without providing the court with any actual evidence underlying the plaintiff's factual assertions. In contrast, a trial court considering a factual attack accords plaintiff's allegations no presumption of truth, and requires production of actual evidence upon which the plaintiff bases his/her factual contentions. Consequently, when assessing a factual -- rather than facial -- deficiency, the court can look beyond the pleadings to decide factual matters relating to jurisdiction. A factual inquiry into the district court's jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) is not confined to the allegations in the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN4[] Jurisdiction, Subject Matter Jurisdiction

There is no procedural limitation as to the point in litigation in which a factual inquiry as to the subject matter jurisdiction may be undertaken.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must prove: (1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the concerted action was illegal; and (4) that the plaintiff was actually injured as a proximate result of the concerted action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN6[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

To avoid the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) jurisdictional bar, the plaintiff must show either that: (a) the defendants are importers of goods/services in the United States, 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a (stating the notoriously inelegant introduction that the Sherman Act shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce other than import trade or import commerce; or, in alternative, (b) show that the defendants are exporters whose conduct had/has a direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect on the United States domestic trade or commence. 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN7[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

If a restraint is per se illegal, no examination of the practice's impact on the market is necessary for finding of anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets, which means, in turn, that no aspect even vaguely resembling the direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect of the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) can possibly arise.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN8[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

It is long established that a court should accept as true all of the factual allegations in the complaint and reasonable inferences that can be drawn therefrom, and view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Nonetheless, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has noted that courts are not required to credit bald assertions or legal conclusions improperly alleged in the complaint. Therefore, legal conclusions draped in the guise of factual allegations may not benefit from the presumption of truthfulness.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN9[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

While a complaint does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiffs obligation is to provide the "grounds" of his entitlement to relief. The threshold requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) is that the plain statement must possess enough heft to show that the pleader is entitled to relief. Hence factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN10[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

In any civil action, the pleading standard demands more than an unadorned "the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me" accusation. A pleading that offers "labels and conclusions" or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Moreover, the plausibility standard asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. The tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions or to threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, i.e., by legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation. Courts do not reject the bald allegations on the ground that they are unrealistic or nonsensical. It is the conclusory nature of the allegations that disentitles them to the presumption of truth.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN11[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

The question of sufficiency of pleadings does not turn on the discovery process. A plaintiff is not entitled to discovery where the complaint asserts some wrongs generally, i.e., as a conclusory allegation since Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 does not allow pleading the bare elements of the cause of action and affixing the label "general allegation" in hope of developing actual facts through discovery.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN12[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has instructed district courts to conduct, with regard to Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 allegations, a two-part analysis when the district courts are presented with a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss: First, the factual and legal elements of a claim should be separated. A district court must accept all of the complaint's well-pleaded facts as true, but may disregard any legal conclusions. Second, a district court must then determine whether the facts alleged in the complaint are sufficient to show that the plaintiff has a plausible claim for relief in light of the definition of "plausibility." In other words, a complaint must do more than allege the plaintiff's entitlement to relief. A complaint has to "show" such an entitlement with its facts. Where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged-but it has not "shown"-that the pleader is entitled to relief. This "plausibility" determination will be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN13[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

The United States Supreme Court has long rejected the rigid proposition that abstention is a technical rule of equity procedure. Rather, the Supreme Court holds that the authority of a federal court to abstain from exercising its jurisdiction extends to all cases in which the court has discretion to grant or deny relief. However, the parties seeking abstention bears the burden of showing that abstention is the appropriate course. The doctrine of abstention, under which a district court may decline to exercise or postpone the exercise of its jurisdiction, is an extraordinary and narrow exception to the duty of a district court to adjudicate a controversy properly before it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN14[] Sherman Act, Scope

The Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN15[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

In no ambiguous terms, the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) has clarified the Sherman Act by making it explicit that, in foreign trade cases, the Sherman Act has application only to conduct having a direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect on domestic commerce. Specifically, the FTAIA provides that the Sherman Act shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless --(1) such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect --(A) on United States import trade or import commerce with foreign nations; and (2) such effect gives rise to a claim under the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN16[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) test neither reverses nor even dilutes the "intent-to-affect-and-effect-in-fact" common law principle established in Alcoa/Hartford Fire. Statutes which invade the common law are to be read with a presumption favoring the retention of long-established and familiar principles, except when the statutory purpose to the contrary is evident. Rather, the FTAIA spelled out additional -- perhaps already implied but not articulated in Alcoa -- elements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN17[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Sherman Act claims if they are based on defendants' export practices but fail to state facts showing that these practices caused a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on United States commerce effectively plead a plaintiff out of court or -- to put it another way -- in order to survive dismissal under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) jurisdictional bar, the plaintiff must show that: (i) the defendants' export practices were "direct" (in the sense that the defendants' conduct actually caused such immediate consequence) with regard to United States domestic commerce; (ii) the defendants' conduct actually was "substantial" (in the sense that the defendants' conduct was actually "intended/consciously meant") to produce a consequence in the United States; and (iii) that consequence was a foreseeable result of the defendants' action rather than a mere incidental occurrence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Pro Se Litigants > Pleading Standards

HN18[] Pleadings, Complaints

District judges have no obligation to act as counsel or paralegal even to pro se litigants and, a fortiori, have no obligation seek out evidence supporting the claims asserted by a represented litigant.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN19[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

With regard to a motion to dismiss, the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions or to threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, i.e., by legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN20[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

With regard to a motion to dismiss, the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN21[] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

Fed. R. Evid. 702 is unambiguous in the sense that it provides that an expert should base the expert's opinion on the litigant-provided facts rather than providing the expert's opinion as a "fact" supporting litigant's claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Default & Default Judgments > Default Judgments > Entry of Default Judgments

HN22[] Default Judgments, Entry of Default Judgments

A plaintiff may seek the court's entry of default judgment under either subpart of Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(b). However, default judgment necessarily ensues from a party's failure to plead or otherwise defend against the allegations of his/her opponent. Although the second step of default allows the court to exercise its discretion in order to establish the truth of any allegation by evidence, Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(b)(2)(C), an entry of default does not obligate the court to conduct a facial -- moreover factual -- review. Hence, while for the purposes of a litigant's default application, the litigant's expert may be warranted in his/her submission of the expert's opinion based on facts as they are pled by the litigant seeking default, it is indeed questionable at best whether the same is warranted for the purposes of a factual review under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN23[] Jurisdiction, Subject Matter Jurisdiction

In its assessment of a factual deficiency, the district court must weigh all available evidence relating to jurisdiction, with discretion to allow affidavits, documents, and even limited evidentiary hearings.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN24[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

Fed. R. Evid. 702 admits expert testimony if it will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or a fact in issue and the court has no obligation to decipher an expert's cryptic message.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN25[] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

Under Fed. R. Evid. 702 -- expert testimony cannot be misleading. An expert's report must be amenable to understanding by a layperson not only with respect to the words composing the end-conclusion but also with regard to the rationale and the steps of the processes employed. Indeed, construing Rule 702 otherwise would invite experts to "create" facts by simply ushering floods of technical terminology on the judiciary stripped of an actual opportunity to analyze the testimony.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN26[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

The tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions or to threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, i.e., by legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN27[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

The Sherman Act shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a. Hence, in perhaps ineloquent but nonetheless unambiguous terms, § 6a provides that the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA)-based jurisdictional bar is wholly inapplicable to pleadings alleging that the wrongful conduct was undertaken by defendants as importers (rather than as exporters).

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN28[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) asks whether the defendants were involved in import trade or import commerce. If all that the defendants were doing was actually bringing goods or services into the United States, then the FTAIA is not even triggered, i.e., the claim against the defendants squarely falls within the scope of the Sherman Act. While the FTAIA does not define the term "import," the term generally denotes a product (or perhaps a service) has been brought into the United States from abroad. However, if the defendants did not directly bring items or services into the United States, they cannot be labeled "importers," nor could it be said that the defendants have engaged in import trade or commerce. In other words, even if a certain importer purchased or otherwise obtained the defendants' product in a foreign market (be it the defendants' national market or any other market) and brought the defendants' product into the United States, the fact that the product eventually found its way into the United States does not transform the defendant into an "importer" and, hence, an antitrust claim against the defendants must pass muster under the FTAIA's substantial, direct and reasonably foreseeable exception before the Sherman Act claim can be entertained.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN29[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

With regard to the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA), the fact that some of the goods purchased in a foreign market may ultimately have been imported by individuals into the United States' is immaterial to determining if the defendants are involved in import trade or import commerce since the defendants' own actions do not directly increase or reduce imports into the United States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN30[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Courts have uniformly concluded that the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) exception for conduct involving import trade applies to claims by domestic importers arising from direct purchases of price-fixed goods. The FTAIA applies to antitrust plaintiffs' claims with the exception of claims brought by domestic importers. The FTAIA makes clear that the concern of the antitrust laws is protection of American consumers and American exporters, not foreign consumers or producers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN31[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Although cases applying the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) are few, its "inelegant" language has been interpreted to mean that with the exception of claims brought by domestic importers, the Sherman Act will not apply to conduct affecting foreign markets, consumers or producers unless there is also a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on the domestic market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN32[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act's (FTAIA's) exemption from the Sherman Act focuses on the latter's application to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations. The implication that the Sherman Act provisions apply to import trade and import commerce is unmistakable. The proper inquiry is whether the alleged conduct by the defendants "involved" import trade or commerce, not on whether the plaintiff's conduct, which is not being challenged as violative of the Sherman Act, "involved" import trade or commerce.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN33[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

A classic maxim of contract construction dictates that the substance of the parties' transaction governs how their relationship is defined rather than the label or form used. The substance of the agreement, rather than its form, is the material issue.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN34[] Legislation, Interpretation

Courts assume that the legislative purpose of a statute is expressed by the ordinary meaning of the words used.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN35[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

A plaintiff who is asserting that a purely foreign seller is, effectively, not a "real" exporter but a de facto importer "bringing" the goods into the United States within the meaning of the introductory clause of the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) has to show that the seller's activities were "direct" in a degree higher that required under 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a(1)(A), with regard to exporters: the "directness" under the introductory clause should yield such substantial contacts between the seller and the United States that it establishes a nexus roughly corresponding, in its magnitude, to the nexus needed to show the "directness" sufficient to remove the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA)-based presumptive immunity under the "commercial activity" exception set forth in 28 U.S.C.S. § 1605(a)(2): a conclusion otherwise would invite the danger of putting form over substance.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

HN36[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

The "directness" of the seller's contacts with the United States required under the introductory clause of the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) should roughly correspond, in the magnitude of the nexus it produces between the seller and the United States, to the cumulative nexus produced by the direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable elements of 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a(1)(A): then, the defendant will be subject to the jurisdiction of United States courts regardless of the plaintiff's or defendant's exercises in semantics, i.e., the mere terms "exporter" and "importer" would not invite a risk of inconsistent legal results as to the very same set of facts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN37[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Ordinarily, the plaintiff may be granted leave to amend, when justice so requires. Indeed, the federal rules reject the approach that pleading is a game of skill in which one misstep by counsel may be decisive to the outcome and accept the principle that the purpose of pleading is to facilitate a proper decision on the merits. However, allowing leave to amend where there is a stark absence of any suggestion by the plaintiffs that they have developed any facts since the action was commenced, which would, if true, cure the defects in the pleadings would frustrate Congress's objective in enacting this statute of providing a filter at the earliest stage (the pleading stage) to screen out lawsuits that have no factual basis.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN38[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) provides that, where a party may amend its pleading only by leave of court, such leave shall be freely given when justice so requires. Correspondingly, the United States Supreme Court has identified several factors to be considered when applying Rule 15(a): If the underlying facts or circumstances relied upon by a plaintiff may be a proper subject of relief, he ought to be afforded an opportunity to test his claim on the merits. In the absence of any apparent or declared reason -- such as undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, futility of amendment, etc. -- the leave sought should, as the rules require, be "freely given."

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN39[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

While Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) gives the court extensive discretion to decide whether to grant leave to amend after the time for amendment as of right has passed, the Rule 15(a) generous standard is tempered by the necessary power of a district court to manage a case in light of the factors listed in Foman v. Davis. The Foman list of factors, however, appears to be non-exhaustive, i.e., leaving it for the district court to consider, on a case-by-case basis, whether consideration of additional factors would be appropriate in order to assure that plaintiff is granted leave "when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

HN40[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e) permits motions to amend or alter a judgment and may be granted to submit new, previously undiscovered evidence or to correct a clear error of law or prevent manifest injustice. Relief under Rule 59(e) is also appropriate when there has been an intervening change in the controlling law. Rule 59(e) and D.N.J., Civ. R. 7.1(i).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

HN41[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

With regard to Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e), an entry of a binding precedent, which: (a) is issued while the matter is still pending; and (b) clarifies -- rather than alters the existing legal regime -- cannot qualify as an intervening change in the law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN42[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Leave to amend is not warranted where the plaintiffs have had ample opportunities to research and plead their claims, but failed to produce sufficient pleadings.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN43[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

The general rule is that abstention factors should be deemed relevant only if the court determines that subject matter jurisdiction exists in the first place and, thus, a decision as to abstention grounds prior to resolution of the subject matter jurisdiction issue might yield a wasteful, if not facially premature, ruling.

International Law > ... > Sovereign Immunity > Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act > Burdens of Proof

HN44[] Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, Burdens of Proof

For the purposes of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA), a defendant has to establish a prima facie case of immunity, and only if the defendant succeeds at that, does the burden shift to the plaintiff to rebut the presumption.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN45[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

The prevalent practice of federal courts facing abstention issues has been to focus on the factual proof presented by the abstention-advocating litigant rather than on conclusions and assertions of the litigant unsupported by evidentiary proof.

International Law > ... > Sovereign Immunity > Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act > Construction & Interpretation

HN46[] Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, Construction & Interpretation

The Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA) defines the term "foreign state" broadly, including in the definition political subdivisions of a foreign state, as well as the state's "agencies and instrumentalities." 28 U.S.C.S. § 1603(a). The latter means an entity that is a separate juridical person (corporate or otherwise) and, in addition, is an organ of a foreign state, or a majority of whose shares or other ownership interest is owned by a foreign state or its political subdivision. However, the United States Supreme Court holds that a subsidiary of an "instrumentality" (or an entity otherwise owned by "instrumentality") is not itself an "instrumentality" for the purposes of the FSIA, since the exponential-level connection between such subsidiary and the state renders the entity too removed to qualify.

International Law > ... > Sovereign Immunity > Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act > Construction & Interpretation

HN47[] Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, Construction & Interpretation

For the purposes of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA), an "agency or instrumentality of a foreign state" is not the same legal entity as the foreign state itself.

International Law > ... > Sovereign Immunity > Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act > Construction & Interpretation

HN48[] Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, Construction & Interpretation

With regard to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA), the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit holds that the "agency or instrumentality" nature is determined under the seven-factor test: (1) the circumstances surrounding the entity's creation; (2) the purposes of the entity's activities; (3) the degree of supervision by the government; (4) the level of governmental financial support; (5) the entity's employment policies, particularly regarding whether the foreign state requires the hiring of public employees and pays their salaries; (6) the entity's obligations and privileges under the foreign state's laws; (7) the ownership structure of the entity.

International Law > ... > Exceptions > Commercial Activities > General Overview

HN49[] Exceptions, Commercial Activities

Once the defendant's status as a "foreign state" is established, the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA) presumes the defendant's immunity to be the rule, not an exception even though the FSIA includes a number of exceptions, one of which is based on the defendant's commercial activity carried on in the United States. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1605(a)(2). For purposes of the exception, the commercial character of the activity is determined by examination of the nature of defendant's conduct rather than of its purpose, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1603(d), with recognition that: (a) the term "commercial activity" was legislatively intended to include a broad spectrum of endeavors, such as extraction of minerals, commute of passengers, trade, etc.; and (b) if an activity is customarily carried on for profit, then its commercial nature can readily be assumed. In sum, the gist of the commercial exception inquiry is whether the particular actions, regardless of the motive behind them, were of the type in which a private party would engage for the purposes of commerce. For instance, the United States Supreme Court has clarified that when a foreign government acts not as regulator of a market, but in the manner of a private player within it, the foreign sovereign's actions are "commercial" for the purposes of the FSIA.

International Law > ... > Exceptions > Commercial Activities > General Overview

HN50[] Exceptions, Commercial Activities

With regard to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA), in enacting the commercial-activity exception, Congress sought to make it difficult for foreign defendants engaged in commercial activity to invoke sovereign immunity with regard to commercial wrongs.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

HN51[] Dispute Resolution, Act of State Doctrine

While the act of state doctrine, being judicially created, is more flexible than the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA) --and, hence, might perhaps warrant abstention even where the FSIA does not strip the court of jurisdiction over a certain case. The key features of the act of state doctrine and the FSIA are somewhat similar, since the doctrine prompts United States courts to refrain from judging the validity of a foreign state's governmental acts as to matters within that state's borders, building on the premise that the most fundamental aspect of foreign relations is the recognition of foreign governments. However, while being more flexible than the statute, the doctrine has evolved from a generic expression of international law into an relatively narrow inquiry into "a consequence of domestic separation of powers." Thus, the doctrine could be summarized as a merely strong belief of the judiciary that engaging in the task of passing on the validity of foreign acts of state could hinder rather than further the conduct of foreign relations. Consequently, the doctrine knows numerous exceptions which include, inter alia, non-abstention in matters challenging: (a) the acts performed outside the sovereign territory of a foreign government.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

HN52[] Dispute Resolution, Act of State Doctrine

A defendant successfully establishes the act-of-state defense if the "commercial activity" exception does not remove the reasons for abstention.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

HN53[] Dispute Resolution, Comity Doctrine

Comity is the name given to the general principle that encourages the recognition in one country of the judicial acts of another. Its basis is not simply respect for other nations, but convenience and necessity, recognizing the need to facilitate inter-jurisdictional transactions.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

HN54[] Dispute Resolution, Comity Doctrine

The extent to which the law of one nation, as put in force within its territory, whether by executive order, by legislative act, or by judicial decree, shall be allowed to operate within the dominion of another nation, depends upon what our greatest jurists have been content to call "the comity of nations." Although the phrase has been often criticized, no satisfactory substitute has been suggested. "Comity," in the legal sense, is neither a matter of absolute obligation, on the one hand, nor of mere courtesy and good will, upon the other. The fluid concept, in turn: (a) indirectly provided theoretical support to areas of law related to international interactions, e.g., by supplying jurisprudential solutions for conflict of law problems, or bases for enforcement of foreign judgments or for resolutions of forum non conveniens challenges; and, in addition; (b) mushroomed into a panoply of legal doctrines, all bearing the name the doctrine of comity, even though each of these doctrines eventually developed its own distinct set of considerations ensuring application of the umbrella concept of comity to the particular issue tackled by the doctrine. Comity has been construed by the United States Supreme Court to mean a number of different things.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

HN55[] Dispute Resolution, Comity Doctrine

In the United States, the foundation of private international law is the concept of international comity. Roughly speaking, courts, according to this concept, should apply foreign law or limit domestic jurisdiction out of respect for foreign sovereignty. Since international comity requires courts to balance competing public and private interests in a manner that takes into account any conflict between the public policies of the domestic and foreign sovereigns, scholars and courts have characterized international comity inconsistently as a choice-of-law principle, a synonym for private international law a rule of public international law or an element of international legal order, a moral obligation, or diplomacy. In its direct manifestations, the concept of international comity yielded comity as a discretionary doctrine that empowered courts to decide when to defer to foreign cases and to the broader concept of comity as a rule and a justification for deference encompasses a wider constellation of interrelated doctrines -- like the foreign-act-of-state doctrine -- which, though analytically distinct, nonetheless share certain methods, values, and justificatory rhetoric.

International Law > Foreign & International Immunity > General Overview

International Law > Individuals & Sovereign States > General Overview

HN56[] International Law, Foreign & International Immunity

The government compulsion doctrine shields from liability the acts of the defendant that were carried out in obedience to the mandate of a foreign government and so, in order to successfully invoke the doctrine, the defendants must show that the act challenged as a violation of United States law was compelled by the foreign government through a compulsion that was "basic and fundamental" to the defendants' acts (rather than served as a mere peripheral aspect). A defendant invoking government compulsion must show that: (a) a certain entity in the defendant's nation qualifies as an arm of the state by enjoying governmental or quasi-governmental powers that are either uniquely peculiar to sovereigns or of essentially sovereign nature; (b) there is a direct link between the entity's powers and the defendant, which enables the entity to compel the defendant to act in accordance with the entity's prescripts as a result of the entity's ability to subject the defendant to a significant negative repercussion for failure to comply with the entity's prescripts; and (c) the entity, in fact, compels the defendant to act in accordance with a certain prescript, and such compulsion is the fundamental force causing the defendant's act challenged as a violation of United States law.

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

HN57[] Evidence, Judicial Notice

At common law and under the federal rules, most proof is presented by means of testimonial evidence or by the offering of documentary evidence. One an exception to the requirement that a party who relies on a certain proposition must prove it is judicial notice. Fed. R. Evid. 201 governs judicial notice, providing that facts noticed cannot be subject to reasonable dispute and specifying certain procedural requirements that must be followed. Rule 201(b) permits a district court to take judicial notice of facts that are not subject to reasonable dispute in that they are either: (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court; or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned.

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

HN58[] Evidence, Judicial Notice

Judicial notice could be properly taken with respect to three different categories of documents which include: (1) documents relied upon in the complaint; (2) documents filed with a United States law enforcement agency; and (3) undisputable data, e.g., purely informational opinion-free data compiled by a very widely quoted and, thus, deemed reliable, news service. A court may take judicial notice of public records and of admissions in pleadings and other documents in the public record filed by a party to the instant matter in other judicial proceedings that contradict the party's factual assertions in the instant action, and the court may do so even without converting the motion to dismiss into one for summary judgment. In addition, since the court may take judicial notice of a fact capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources which accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned, Fed. R. Evid. 201(b), the court may take judicial notice of records and reports of administrative bodies, such as notices and opinion letters.

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

HN59[] Evidence, Judicial Notice

Judicial notice is improper if a question exists as to the legitimacy of the source of the information. Therefore, contentions made by the parties are not subject to judicial notice, since judicial notice applies only to self-evident truths that no reasonable person could question, truisms that approach platitudes or banalities.

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN60[] Evidence, Judicial Notice

The tool of judicial notice is qualitatively different from the concept of legal precedent, since a legal conclusion reached by another tribunal (or a particular court during its prior ruling) is assessed not under the requirements of Fed. R. Evid. 201(b) but under the common law doctrine of stare decisis. Judicial precedent attaches a specific legal consequence to a detailed set of facts in an adjudged case or judicial decision, which is then considered as furnishing the rule for the determination of a subsequent case involving identical or similar material facts and arising in the same court or a lower court in the judicial hierarchy. Stare decisis is the policy of the court to stand by precedent; the term is but an abbreviation of stare decisis et non quieta movere -- to stand by and adhere to decisions and not disturb what is settled.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN61[] Courts, Judicial Precedent

It has become axiomatic that the doctrine of stare decisis has two applications, vertical and horizontal. Vertical stare decisis could be summarized as a principle that a controlling precedent by a superior court is binding upon the lower courts. In contrast, horizontal stare decisis merely implies a court's discretional consideration of non-binding decisions, which that court can -- and, perhaps, is even obligated to -- ignore if it finds that the rationale of these decisions is insufficiently persuasive or outright unsound, or that the legal issues and/or the facts addressed in these decisions are too removed from the legal issues and facts at hand to have a meaningful impact on the court's judicial analysis. Our system of precedent or stare decisis is thus based on adherence to both the reasoning and result of a case, and not simply to the result alone. This distinguishes the American system of precedent, sometimes called "rule stare decisis," from the English system, which historically has been limited to following the results or disposition based on the facts of a case and thus referred to as "result stare decisis."

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN62[] Courts, Judicial Precedent

The following factors must be present before a prior decision has stare decisis effect: (a) the decision must be from the same court or from a court which the court applying stare decisis owes obedience; (b) an issue was actually determined by the decision; (c) the decision must constitute a holding of the majority of the court and, if a particular result is adopted by a clear majority of the court, it has absolute precedential effect; (d) the decision must involve an issue of law; and (e) the decision was rendered in substantially identical legal and factual circumstances.

International Trade Law > ... > Exports & Imports > Antidumping > General Overview

HN63[] Exports & Imports, Antidumping

In general terms of economics, the practice of "dumping" means sale at "predatory pricing," i.e., sale of the product so cheaply that the seller's competitors are eventually forced out of business. In the more specific terms of international trade, "dumping" means that a seller from one country is exporting its product to another country at a predatory price, e.g., at the price which is below the price the seller charges for its goods in its home market (such low price is referred to as "less than fair value" price or (LTFV)): since the seller's predatory practices might endanger the well-being and even the very existence of the industry producing the seller's types of goods in the importing country, the law of the importing country might be crafted to alleviate some of the harsher consequences of this controversial reality of free trade; such remedy is usually a penalty (i.e., an import duty) aiming to either economically force the seller to raise its export price or to dissuade the seller from a future LTFV export practice. Correspondingly, both United States law and the World Trade Organization condemn dumping if the practice causes (or threatens to cause) material injury to the domestic industry of the importing country. 19 U.S.C.S. § 1673.

International Trade Law > ... > Exports & Imports > Antidumping > General Overview

HN64[] Exports & Imports, Antidumping

The concept of countervailing is analogous, in its gist, to that of antidumping, although it introduces a third player into the equation, i.e., the state of the exporting seller. Similar to antidumping duties, countervailing duties (CVDs) are imposed to neutralize the negative effects of predatory pricing if it has been determined that the seller's state subsidized the seller's exports through certain governmental measures, and these subsidies enabled the seller to charge predatory prices causing or threatening to cause an injury to the producers of the seller's types of goods in the importing state. In the United States, investigations of countervailing activities and determinations as to the propriety and magnitude of CVDs imposed, is performed by the International Trade Administration (ITA).

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

HN65[] Evidence, Judicial Notice

Matters of which judicial notice may be taken must include facts capable of verification by resort to sources. Sources of a judicially-noticed fact must necessarily exist and be known to the court to enable even the very consideration of whether the fact is amenable to judicial notice.

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > Public Records

HN66[] Adjudicative Facts, Public Records

The court may take judicial notice of admissions in pleadings and other documents in the public record filed by a party in other judicial proceedings that contradict the party's factual assertions in the instant action.

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > Frivolous Lawsuits

HN67[] Baseless Filings, Frivolous Lawsuits

The first prong of the test to determine if Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 sanctions should be imposed is met if the complaint is frivolous, legally unreasonable, or without factual foundation, even though the paper was not filed in subjective bad faith. The pleader must have an objective good faith belief in the merit of the pleader's legal argument.

International Law > ... > Exceptions > Commercial Activities > General Overview

HN68[] Exceptions, Commercial Activities

With regard to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA), the most commonly invoked form of the "commercial activity" exception is based on the claim that the activities at issue were carried on in the United States. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1605(a)(2). However, § 1605(a)(2) (i.e., the subsection dealing with various forms of "commercial activity" restoring federal jurisdiction by invalidating the presumption of immunity) sets also two other forms of "commercial activity" removing immunity. Specifically, under these two additional options, the grant of immunity is also unwarranted if the action is based upon: (a) an act performed in the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere; or (b) upon an act outside the territory of the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere and that act causes a direct effect in the United States.

International Law > ... > Sovereign Immunity > Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act > General Overview

HN69[] Sovereign Immunity, Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act

With regard to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA), a court's jurisdiction over an exporter cannot depend on whether an American purchaser (be it an intermediary or a purported end-consumer) elects to actually bring the exporter's goods into the United States or "diverts" these goods to another country: the reach of the United States jurisdiction cannot depend on the whim of the purchaser who is free to create his own injury by first deciding whether the purchased goods cross -- or get consumed after crossing -- a particular meridian, and then filing a suit against the exporter who has no meaningful control over the purchaser's business elections (or over the purchaser's choice not to act in accordance with its contractually non-binding representations that might have been made to the exporter at the time of the exporter's sale of goods). And, indeed, one's entry into a "conspiracy" or one's "sitting on a committee" cannot qualify as one's "commercial activity" of the type in which a private party engages for the purposes of "trade and traffic or commerce," this is so regardless of how broadly the term "commercial activity" is defined by the FSIA legislative history and case law.

International Law > ... > Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN70[] Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, Jurisdiction

The language of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA) does envision jurisdiction based upon an act outside the territory of the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere if that act causes a direct effect in the United States. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1605(a)(2).

International Law > ... > Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN71[] Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, Jurisdiction

With regard to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA), the meaning of "directness" under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1605(a)(2) was clarified by the United States Supreme Court and this "directness" is, seemingly, of the same nature (although, perhaps, of different magnitude) as that referred to in 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a(1)(A).

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

International Law > ... > Exceptions > Commercial Activities > General Overview

HN72[] Dispute Resolution, Act of State Doctrine

The Act of State doctrine is, effectively, an inquiry into a consequence of domestic separation of powers and it directs the court to dismiss the suit if its resolution would require the court to declare invalid an official act of a foreign sovereign. Although the law is unsettled as to whether the doctrine is amenable to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act's (FSIA's) expansive definition of the term of "foreign state" (i.e., whether "instrumentalities," such as 100 percent state-owned entities, might be deemed a "foreign sovereign" for the purposes of the doctrine), it is well settled that the doctrine envisions a "commercial activity" exception, pursuant to which abstention is unwarranted as to the acts committed by foreign sovereigns in course of commercial operations. Hence, in no ambiguous terms, the doctrine mandates the defendant to make a direct connection between its sovereign status and the uniquely sovereign qualities of its activity being challenged, and allows no cross-matching.

International Law > Foreign & International Immunity > General Overview

International Law > Individuals & Sovereign States > General Overview

HN73[] International Law, Foreign & International Immunity

A defendant can successfully invoke the doctrine of government compulsion, if he shows that a reasonable entity standing in the defendant's shoes (that is, having a similar-to-defendant's understanding of the local legal, economic, political and cultural peculiarities, as well as being exposed to similar antecedent circumstances and current relation to the entity seeking to extract consent) would feel compelled to consent by the totality of these conditions. Conversely, it appears wholly illogical to factor in this concept: (a) the socio-political and cultural perceptions of a foreigner; or (b) the concerns of an entity which is in notably different circumstances; or (c) the degree of bravery common only to bold risk takers. In other words, it appears unreasonable to obligate the defendant to either ignore the realities of his/her world or to take an excessive risk.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Conflict of Law > General Overview

HN74[] Dispute Resolution, Conflict of Law

Fed. R. Civ. P. 44.1 governs the judicial determination of foreign law. The rule states that, in deciding issues of foreign law, the court may consider any relevant material or source, including testimony, whether or not submitted by a party or admissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence. The court's determination shall be treated as a ruling on a question of law. Moreover, the rule provides courts with broad authority -- and, perhaps, even with an obligation -- to conduct their own independent research in order to determine the meaning of foreign law. Moreover, the courts may extract from foreign legal material and may even consider material that would be inadmissible at trial. The ordinary rules of evidence are often inapposite to the problem of determining foreign law and have in the past prevented examination of material which could have provided a proper basis for the determination. Even if not admissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence, evidence of foreign law is properly considered, since the purpose of the provision is to free the judge, in determining foreign law, from any restrictions imposed by evidence rules. Hence, differences of opinion among experts on the content, applicability, or interpretation of foreign law do not create a genuine issue as to any material fact for the purposes of the court's review and final ruling.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Conflict of Law > General Overview

HN75[] Dispute Resolution, Conflict of Law

Translations of foreign provisions, be they actually provided by the parties or obtained by the court from other sources, may be used by the court in its determinations of foreign law.

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Conflict of Law > General Overview

HN76[] Dispute Resolution, Conflict of Law

A foreign sovereign's admission of legal compulsion of its subjects might warrant a high -- often, nearly binding -- degree of deference, even if the admitted compulsion was based on what might be deemed, in American jurisprudence, a form of "unwritten law."

International Law > Foreign & International Immunity > General Overview

International Law > Individuals & Sovereign States > General Overview

HN77[] International Law, Foreign & International Immunity

The availability of the doctrine of government compulsion cannot depend on the presence or absence of any collusion: had it been otherwise, the doctrinal abstention would be limited only to antitrust, racketeering and similar matters that require proof of collusion. Consequently, for the purposes of the government compulsion doctrine, it would be a logical error to ask whether Defendants reached an agreement to comply with the minimum price requirement. Rather, where the doctrine is applicable, such "agreement" aspect should be automatically supplied by the defendant's obedience of his/her/its sovereign's law: so, if there is an alleged hub-and-spokes agreement, then the foreign sovereign should be viewed as the "hub."

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN78[] Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

The Supreme Court of the United States has invariably recognized that a license to practice a certain trade should be treated similarly to a property right and an injury to this right invokes protections of the Due Process Clause.

Governments > Legislation > General Overview

HN79[] Governments, Legislation

Codification contemplates, implies and produces continuity of existing law in clarified form rather than its interruption.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Abstention

HN80[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Abstention

Abstention is a case-dispositive measure that shall not be imposed lightly.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

HN81[] Judicial Review, Standards of Review

Courts should be particularly reluctant to second-guess agency choices involving technical matters that are in the agency's province of expertise, and they are certainly not in the position to render on or guess the considerations falling within the expertise of a foreign agency.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN82[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

The federal rules reject the approach that pleading is a game of skill in which one misstep by counsel may be decisive to the outcome and accept the principle that the purpose of pleading is to facilitate a proper decision on the merits.

Counsel: [1] For KRAMER LEVIN NAFTALIS & FRANKEL LLP, Movant: LEDA DUNN WETTRE, ROBINSON, WETTRE & MILLER LLC, NEWARK, NJ.

FAHEEM NAJM, Movant, Pro se, NEW YORK, NY.

JONATHAN LEE RICHES, Movant, Pro se, LEXINGTON, KY.

JASON TROWBRIDGE, Movant, Pro se, NEW YORK, NY.

For ANIMAL SCIENCE PRODUCTS, INC., Plaintiff: DAVID S. STONE, ROBERT A. MAGNANINI, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Stone & Magnanini LLP, SHORT HILLS, NJ; RICHARD E. DONOVAN, KELLEY DRYE & WARREN LLP, PARSIPPANY, NJ.

For RESCO PRODUCTS, INC., Plaintiff: DAVID S. STONE, ROBERT A. MAGNANINI, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Stone & Magnanini LLP, SHORT HILLS, NJ.

For CHINA NATIONAL METALS & MINERALS IMPORT & EXPORT CORPORATION, CHINA NATIONAL MINERALS IMPORT & EXPORT CORPORATION, Defendants: ROBERT J. DEL TUFO, SHEPARD GOLDFEIN, LEAD ATTORNEYS, SKADDEN, ARPS, SLATE, MEAGHER & FLOM, LLP, NEW YORK, NY.

For MINMETALS, INC., Defendant: GREGORY KARL MUELLER, LEAD ATTORNEY, LAW OFFICES OF GREGORY K. MUELLER, PC, TENAFLY, NJ.

For SINOSTEEL CORPORATION, SINOSTEEL TRADING COMPANY, LIAONING JIAYI METALS & MINERALS CO., LTD., HAICHENG HOUYING CORP. LTD., HAICHENG HUAYU GROUP IMPORT & EXPORT CO. LTD. (HUAZIYU), Defendants: LEDA DUNN WETTRE, LEAD ATTORNEY, ROBINSON, WETTRE & MILLER LLC, NEWARK, [2] NJ.

Judges: Garrett E. Brown, Jr., Chief Judge, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Garrett E. Brown, Jr.

Opinion

[*325] TABLE OF CONTENTS

[*327]

BROWN, [3] Chief Judge:

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter comes before the Court upon Plaintiffs' filing of an amended complaint ("Amended Complaint" or "Am. Compl."), see Docket Entry No. 77, and upon submission of two motions to dismiss the Amended Complaint; these submissions were made by two groups of Defendants, i.e., by: (1) China Minmetals Corp. and China National Minerals Co., Ltd. (collectively, "Minmetals Defendants"); and (2) Sinosteel Corp., Sinosteel Trading Co. and Liaoning Jiayi Metals & Minerals Co., Ltd. (collectively, "Sinosteel Defendants"). See Docket Entry No. 98 ("Sinosteel's Motion" or "S/Mot.") and Docket Entry No. 99 ("Minmetals' Motion" or "M/Mot."). Plaintiffs duly filed their opposition to Sinosteel and Minmetals' Motions, see Docket Entry No. 105 ("Plaintiffs' Opposition" or "Opp."), to which the aforesaid two groups of Defendants duly replied. See Docket Entry No. 109 ("Minmetals' Reply" or "M/Reply") and Docket Entry No. 110 ("Sinosteel's Reply" or "S/Reply"). For the reasons stated below, Sinosteel and Minmetals' Motions will be granted, and the Amended Complaint will be dismissed as to the Minmetals and Sinosteel Defendants. [2] This dismissal, however, will be, in part, [4] without prejudice, and Plaintiffs will be allowed to amend their pleadings and to provide the Court with factual proof establishing that Defendants were acting as 'importers" during the putative Class Period.

II. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Being initiated almost half a decade ago, this matter has accrued a rather substantial procedural history. However, the bulk of these developments is largely irrelevant to the issues at hand and, hence, it should suffice to merely note that, on September 7, 2005, Plaintiffs Animal Science Products, Inc. ("Animal Science") and Resco Products, [5] Inc. ("Resco") filed a civil complaint ("Original Complaint") on behalf of a putative class and named seventeen Chinese business entities as Defendants.

The issues related to service of process dominated the next two years of litigation. See, e.g., Docket Entries Nos. 3-50; see also Docket Entry No. 73 ("December Opinion" or "Dec. Op."), at 3-4 (detailing these procedural developments). Eventually, Plaintiffs moved for a default judgment, [*328] which triggered Defendants' motion for dismissal of the Original Complaint. See Sep. Op. at 3-4. These key revolutions were accompanied by: (a) an extensive litigation on the issue of whether this matter should be resolved by arbitration instead of being litigated; and (b) a panoply of peripheral claims and challenges based on a multitude of substantive and procedural issues. See id.; see also Docket Entries Nos. 3-63.

On September 15, 2008, this matter was reassigned to the undersigned and, on October 6, 2008, this Court held oral arguments as to the constellation of the then-pending motions. On December 30, 2008, this Court issued its December Opinion and accompanying order. See Docket Entries Nos. 73 and 74. The order dismissed the Original Complaint [6] without prejudice, and disposed of the then-pending Plaintiffs and Defendants' motions on various grounds.

The accompanying December Opinion ended with a guidance as to motion practice:

> Thus far, the Court has been presented with a multitude of motions (in addition to those addressed in [the December] Opinion). Since these motions, as well as peripheral challenge[s] embedded in the [m]otions [to dismiss] resolved by this discussion, raise a panoply of issues, the Court finds it prudent to provide the parties with a roadmap to the future litigation in the event: (a) Plaintiffs' elect to take advantage of the leave to file an amended complaint; and (b) Defendants elect to renew some or all of the challenges extended in Defendants' motions and/or scattered in Defendants' oppositions to Plaintiffs' [m]otion [for default judgment]. Hence, in the event Plaintiffs file an amended complaint, Plaintiffs must incorporate in their submission evidentiary proof allowing the Court to conduct a factual determination (in contrast with the facial analysis conducted herein) and to conclusively satisfy itself as to presence of lack of subject matter jurisdiction over this action. In the event Defendants [7] wish to extend challenges to the Court's subject matter jurisdiction and/or to assert that the [2] The instant decision shall not be construed as having any direct, that is, immediately dispositive, effect on Plaintiffs' claims raised against all Defendants that did not file the Motions at bar ("Residual Defendants"). The Court, however, reserves any determination as to indirect applicability of the instant decision to Plaintiffs' claims against the Residual Defendants; for instance, the Court reserves its decision as to whether Plaintiffs' claims against the Residual Defendants -- or certain aspects of such Plaintiffs' claims -- might be barred from enforcement by the operation of the doctrine of collateral estoppel.

> Court shall abstain from resolving the instant matter on the grounds involving any provision, judicially-create[d] doctrine or public policy related to a foreign sovereign's action or to Chinese regulatory or legal regime, Defendants should do so at their first opportunity to respond to the amended complaint. If, and only if, the Court: (a) determines that it has proper subject matter jurisdiction over this action; and (b) finds that it shall not abstain from resolving it, Defendants may, if they so desire, renew their currently extended challenges in the following order:
> (1) Defendants shall first raise their challenges based on the alleged lack of personal jurisdiction, insufficient service of process and improper venue;
> (2) only in the event Defendants elect not to raise such challenges, of if the Court determines that in personam jurisdiction was duly obtained and, in addition, establishes that the instant matter is properly before the Court, Defendants may, if they wish, re-raise their argument that the Court shall compel arbitration of this action; and
>
> (3) if, and only if, Defendants elect [8] not to raise such challenge or the Court denies Defendants' request to compel arbitration, Defendants may, if they so desire, renew their challenges asserting Plaintiffs' lack of [*329] standing and failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Dec. Op. at 59-60.

The parties duly complied with the aforesaid guidance. Plaintiffs filed their Amended Complaint naming, in addition to the Minmetals and Sinosteel Defendants, the following entities as Defendants in this matter: Xiyang Group; Xiyang (Pacific) Import & Export Ltd. Co.; Xiyang Refractory Materials Ltd. Co.; Xiyang Fireproof Material Co. Ltd.; Liaoning Foreign Trade General Co.; Dalian Golden Sun Import & Export Co.; Haicheng Houying Co. Ltd.; Haicheng Huayu Group Import & Export Co. Ltd. (Huaziyu); Haicheng Pailou Magnesite Ore Co. Ltd. and Yingkou Huachen Co. Ltd. See Docket Entry No. 77, at 1-3. In response, Defendants filed the Motions at hand, challenging the Amended Complaint on the grounds of subject matter jurisdiction and failure to meet the pleading requirements and, in addition, setting forth numerous arguments advocating abstention.

III. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Since the allegations raised in the Amended Complaint -- [9] and corresponding challenges raised in the Minmetals and Sinosteel's Motions -- fall into two broad categories, one addressing a multitude of aspects related to abstention and/or Defendants' immunity from suit, and another related to this Court's subject matter jurisdiction and Plaintiffs' compliance with the pleading requirements -- a detailed recital of all allegations and challenges currently before the Court might be unnecessarily overwhelming, while a short summary of the same could cause the parties an undue concern that the Court's omission of certain aspects from such summary might be a sign that these aspects have escaped the Court's attention. Consequently, it appears useful to detail the relevant assertions and challenges in connection with discussion of each individual group of legal issues and, at the instant juncture, it should be sufficient to simply outline the key background points.

Here, Plaintiffs are United States enterprises that consume, for the purpose of conducting their respective businesses, magnesite-based products. See Am. Compl. §§ 10, 11. All Defendants named in the Amended Complaint are Chinese business entities involved in the sale of magnesite-based [10] products. See id. §§ 12-27. Plaintiffs assert that each of the named Defendants either "directly sold magnesite products to the U.S. companies and shipped magnesite products to the United States" or "engage[d] in metal and minerals trading among other things, including export of magnesite to the United States." Id. Plaintiffs further assert that the overall prices charged for Chinese magnesite were artificially inflated because: (a) "[e]ach of these Defendants and its co-conspirators has colluded with each other to restrain competition by, among other things, setting artificial prices pursuant to illegal horizontal agreements among [themselves]," id. § 29; and (b) "[t]hese horizontal practices were designed to, and in fact did, have a substantial and adverse impact in the United States." Id. § 30. In light of the foregoing, Plaintiffs claim that Defendants' actions violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. [3]

---

[3] No allegations made in the Amended Complaint suggest that Plaintiffs made any effort to buy, specifically, magnesite of Chinese origin (or to avoid buying Chinese magnesite); rather, it appears that Plaintiffs were: (a) buying magnesite regardless of [*330] Defendants challenge the Amended Complaint asserting that: (1) Plaintiffs' allegations fail to meet the applicable pleading requirements; (2) Plaintiffs' allegations depict a picture which -- under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act ("FTAIA") and the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act ("FSIA") -- strips this Court of subject matter jurisdiction over this matter; and/or (3) considerations of comity and the tenets of the "act of state" and "government compulsion" doctrines warrant abstention. See generally, M/Mot, S/Mot, M/Reply [12] and S/Reply. To the degree this panoply of issues allows, the Court will address these challenges seriatim.

IV. DISTINCTION BETWEEN THE RELEVANT TESTS AND BURDENS

Since there appears to be confusion among the parties as to the applicable tests, the allocation of burdens and the procedural propriety of related inquiries, the Court finds it prudent to clarify these matters at the outset of this discussion.

For instance, Plaintiffs seem to assert that they need not address factual subject matter jurisdictional challenges since the Minmetals' Motion raises only facial jurisdictional challenges, and the Sinosteel's Motion "purports to raise factual challenges but the majority of its arguments concern purported deficiencies in Plaintiffs['] allegations." Opp., at 26. In addition, Plaintiffs maintain that the resolution of the subject matter jurisdictional aspect "should be postponed until summary judgment or a trial on the merits" because a decision as to subject matter jurisdiction would have a dispositive effect on the merits of Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. See id.

Defendants, on their part, make no distinction between the facial and factual standards and paraphrase their arguments with [13] regard to the Court's subject matter jurisdiction in terms applicable to a facial review. See, e.g., M/Mot., at 10-11 (discussing Rule 8 facial pleading requirements for the purposes of Defendants' factual analysis of the Court's subject matter jurisdiction). Moreover, Defendants seem to maintain that the Court must abstain from resolving this matter because Plaintiffs make insufficient assertions as to why this Court should not abstain from resolving it. See, generally, id. at 11-19, S/Reply at 19-23.

A. Standard and Burden Associated with Jurisdictional Inquiry

Contrary to what appears to be Plaintiffs' impression, the subject matter jurisdiction inquiry initiated in this case was not a result of the challenges raised by the Minmetals Defendants or by the Sinosteel Defendants (or by any other Defendant); rather, the issue was raised by this Court sua sponte in light of the jurisdictional uncertainties presented by the case at bar. The Court's decision to look into the jurisdictional aspect ensued from the Court of Appeals' guidance that HN1[] each "[c]ourt has a continuing obligation to sua sponte raise the issue of subject matter jurisdiction." Bracken v. Matgouranis, 296 F.3d 160, 162 (3d Cir. 2002); [14] see also Morel v. INS, 144 F.3d 248, 251 n.3 (3d Cir. 1998) (quoting Ins. Corp. of Ireland, Ltd. v. Compagnie [*331] des Bauxites de Guinee, 456 U.S. 694, 702, 102 S. Ct. 2099, 72 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1982), as to the observation that "[a] federal court . . . will raise lack of subject-matter jurisdiction on its own motion").

Next, HN2[] the burden to establish subject matter jurisdiction falls squarely on Plaintiffs since Plaintiffs invoked the Court's jurisdiction by bringing this action. See Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co., 511 U.S. 375, 377, 114 S. Ct. 1673, 128 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1994) (clarifying that a federal court shall presume lack of jurisdiction, and the party seeking to invoke the court's jurisdiction bears the burden of proving that subject matter jurisdiction exists). Consequently, any potential shortcomings of -- or any potential errors in -- Defendants' subject matter jurisdictional challenges cannot have any effect on Plaintiffs' burden, except with regard to the issues discussed in "The FSIA" section of this Opinion, infra.

---

the product's origin: [11] and (b) driven only by their interest in obtaining the particular magnesite-based products Plaintiffs needed at the cheapest price these products were available. See generally, Am. Compl. The voluminous attachments to Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint indicate that Chinese magnesite-based products were indeed the cheapest in the world market, and Plaintiffs never asserted otherwise. See Docket Entry No. 77. Rather, the financial point of Plaintiffs' legal claims could be reduced to the statement that the Chinese magnesite-base products were not as cheap as they could have been had Defendants not entered into the alleged collusive agreement(s). See id. § 29.

As this Court already pointed out in its December Opinion, HN3[] deficiencies as to the "subject matter jurisdiction may be either 'facial' or 'factual.'" Turicentro. S.A. v. Am. Airlines. Inc., 303 F.3d 293, 300, n. 4 (3d Cir. 2002). The distinction [15] between factual and facial assessments is rather dramatic. In a facial attack (that is, addressing a challenge based on the assertions made in the plaintiff's pleadings), the trial court must accept the complaint's allegations as true, i.e., the court merely requires the plaintiff to articulate the factual premise of his/her contentions, without providing the court with any actual evidence underlying the plaintiff's factual assertions. "In contrast, a trial court considering a factual attack accords plaintiff's allegations no presumption of truth," and requires production of actual evidence upon which the plaintiff bases his/her factual contentions. Turicentro, 303 F.3d at 299, n.4. Consequently, when assessing a factual -- rather than facial -- deficiency, the court "can look beyond the pleadings to decide factual matters relating to jurisdiction." Cestonaro v. United States, 211 F.3d 749, 752 (3d Cir. 2000); see also Mortensen v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 549 F.2d 884, 891 (3d Cir. 1977) (a factual inquiry into the district court's jurisdiction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) is not confined to the allegations in the complaint).

Furthermore,HN4[] there is no procedural [16] limitation as to the point in litigation in which a factual inquiry as to the subject matter jurisdiction may be undertaken. While it is true that, "in the Sherman Act context, jurisdictional facts are often closely intertwined with the merits of the claim," Carpet Group Int'l v. Oriental Rug Importers Ass'n, 227 F.3d 62, 73 (3d Cir. 2000), the court in CNA v. United States, 535 F.3d 132, 145 (3d Cir. 2008), which is the case relied upon by Plaintiffs, never held that the subject matter jurisdictional inquiry must be postponed until summary judgment, or until trial. Rather, the CNA court merely directed the district courts to "ensure that defendants [were] not allowed to use Rule 12(b)(1) to resolve the merits [of plaintiffs' claim] too early in litigation." Id. (emphasis supplied).

Here, the threshold subject matter jurisdictional inquiry is whether the FTAIA applies to this matter, thereby removing this Court's jurisdiction to address the merits of Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. While the intricacies of the FTAIA are discussed infra (and the Sherman Act test would be addressed only if subject matter jurisdiction over this matter is established), the Court presumes the parties' familiarity [17] with the basic proposition that, HN5[] "[t]o establish a violation of Section 1, a plaintiff must prove: (1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; [*332] (3) that the concerted action [was] illegal; and (4) that [the plaintiff was actually] injured as a proximate result of the concerted action." [4] Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir. 2005) (citations omitted), cert. denied, 547 U.S. 1092, 126 S. Ct. 1777, 164 L. Ed. 2d 557 (2006). In contrast, HN6[] to avoid the FTAIA jurisdictional bar, the plaintiff must show either that: (a) the defendants are importers of goods/services in the United States, see 15 U.S.C. § 6a (stating the notoriously inelegant introduction that "[the Sherman Act] shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce [] other than import trade or import commerce []"); accord Carpet Group, 227 F.3d 62 at 72; Turicentro, 303 F.3d at 302; or, in alternative, (b) show that the defendants are exporters whose conduct "[had/]has a direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect" on the United States domestic trade or commence. See 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1); accord Turicentro, 303 F.3d at 302; Kruman v. Christie's Intern. PLC, 284 F.3d 384, 395 (2d Cir. 2002), [18] overruled on other grounds. F. Hoffmann-LaRoche, Ltd. v. Empagran, SA, 542 U.S. 155, 124 S. Ct. 2359, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226 (2004).

Even a purely mechanical comparison of the elements comprising the Sherman Act standard with the elements of the FTAIA test reveals that these two tests, while perhaps peripherally related, have so little in common that a resolution of the threshold FTAIA aspect cannot be deemed substantively dispositive for purposes of the merits of the underlying Sherman Act claims. Therefore, the caution articulated by the CNA court appears virtually inapplicable to a FTAIA-based scenario, since -- without engaging in undue overreaching -- a judicial decision disposing of a FTAIA challenge does not prematurely resolve the merits of the underlying Sherman Act claims.

---

[4] Notably,HN7[] if a restraint is per se illegal, no examination of the practice's impact on the market is necessary for finding of anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets, see Pace Elecs., Inc. v. Canon Computer Sys., Inc., 213 F.3d 118, 123 (3d Cir. 2000), which means, in turn, that no aspect even vaguely resembling the "direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect" of the FTAIA can possibly arise.

B. Standard [19] Associated with Pleading Underlying Claims

Since Plaintiffs' Original Complaint asserted fraudulent conduct by Defendants, Plaintiffs' prior pleadings were examined under the requirements of Rule 9. However, the Amended Complaint no longer makes these assertions. Therefore, for the purposes of their Sherman Act claims, Plaintiffs' new set of allegations is subject to review under Rule 8.

HN8[] It is long established that a court should "accept as true all of the [factual] allegations in the complaint and reasonable inferences that can be drawn therefrom, and view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Morse v. Lower Merion School Dist., 132 F.3d 902, 906 (3d Cir. 1997). Nonetheless, the Third Circuit has noted that courts are not required to credit bald assertions or legal conclusions improperly alleged in the complaint. See In re Burlington Coat Factory Secs. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1429 (3d Cir. 1997). Therefore, legal conclusions draped in the guise of factual allegations may not benefit from the presumption of truthfulness. See Nice Sys., Ltd. Sec. Litig., 135 F. Supp. 2d 551, 565 (D.N.J. 2001).

Addressing the clarifications as to the litigant's pleading requirement stated by the United [20] States Supreme Court in Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit [*333] provided the district courts with guidance as to what pleadings are sufficient to pass muster under Rule 8. See Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 230-34 (3d Cir. 2008). Specifically, the Court of Appeals observed as follows:

> HN9[] "While a complaint . . . does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiffs obligation [is] to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief . . . ." Twombly, 127 S. Ct. at 1964-65 . . ."[T]he threshold requirement of Rule 8(a)(2) [is] that the 'plain statement [must] possess enough heft to 'sho[w] that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. at 1966. [Hence] "factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Id. at 1965 & n.3.

Id. at 230-34 (original brackets removed). This pleading standard was further refined by the United States Supreme Court in its recent decision Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009), where the Supreme Court clarified as follows:

> HN10[] [In any civil action, t]he pleading standard . . . demands more than an unadorned ["]the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me["] accusation. [21] [Twombly, 550 U.S.] at 555 . . . . A pleading that offers "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." [Id.] at 555. [Moreover,] the plausibility standard… asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Id. [Indeed, even w]here a complaint pleads facts that are "merely consistent with" a defendant's liability, [the so-alleging complaint still] "stops short of [showing] plausibility of 'entitlement to relief.'" Id. at 557 (brackets omitted). [A fortiori,] the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions [or to t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements [, i.e., by] legal conclusion[s] couched as a factual allegation [e.g.,] the plaintiffs' assertion of an unlawful agreement [or] that [defendants] adopted a policy "'because of,' not merely 'in spite of,' its adverse effects upon an identifiable group." . . . . [W]e do not reject these bald allegations on the ground that they are unrealistic or nonsensical. . . . It is the conclusory nature of [these] allegations . [22] . . that disentitles them to the presumption of truth. . . . [Finally,] HN11[] the question [of sufficiency of] pleadings does not turn [on] the discovery process. Twombly, 550 U.S.] at 559 . . . . [The plaintiff] is not entitled to discovery [where the complaint asserts some wrongs] "generally," [i.e., as] a conclusory allegation [since] Rule 8 does not [allow] pleading the bare elements of [the] cause of action [and] affix[ing] the label "general allegation" [in hope of developing actual facts through discovery].

Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949-54.

The Third Circuit observed that Iqbal hammered the "final nail-in-the-coffin" for the "no set of facts" standard set forth in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957), [5] which was applied to federal complaints before [*334] Twombly. See Fowler v. UPMC Shadyside, 578 F.3d 203 (3d Cir. 2009). Since Iqbal, HN12[] the Third Circuit has instructed district courts to conduct, with regard to Rule 8 allegations, a two-part analysis when the district courts are presented with a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss:

> First, the factual and legal elements of a claim should be separated. The District Court must accept all of the complaint's well-pleaded facts as true, but may disregard [23] any legal conclusions. [See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949-50]. Second, a District Court must then determine whether the facts alleged in the complaint are sufficient to show that the plaintiff has a "plausible claim for relief [in light of the definition of "plausibility" provided in Iqbal.] In other words, a complaint must do more than allege the plaintiff's entitlement to relief. A complaint has to "show" such an entitlement with its facts. See Phillips, 515 F.3d at 234-35. As the Supreme Court instructed in Iqbal, "[w]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged-but it has not 'show[n]'-'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Iqbal, [129 S. Ct. at 1949-50 (emphasis supplied)]. This "plausibility" determination will be "a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id.

Fowler, 578 F.3d at 210-11 (emphasis supplied). [6]

C. Burden Associated with Asserting Abstention

HN13[] The Supreme Court has long rejected the rigid proposition that abstention is a technical rule of equity procedure. See Quackenbush v. Allstate Ins. Co., 517 U.S. 706, 718, 116 S. Ct. 1712, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1996). Rather, the Court held that "the authority of a federal court to abstain from exercising its jurisdiction extends to all cases in which the court has discretion to grant or deny relief." Id. at 718. However, as the parties seeking abstention, Defendants bear the burden of showing that abstention is the appropriate course. Cf. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 814, 96 S. Ct. 1236, 47 L. Ed. 2d 483 (1976) ("The doctrine of abstention, under which a District Court may decline to exercise or postpone the exercise of its jurisdiction, is an extraordinary and narrow exception to the duty of a District Court to adjudicate a [26] controversy properly before it"); Sheerbonnet v. American Express Bank, Ltd., 17 F.3d 46, 49 (2d Cir. 1994) (given "the virtually unflagging obligation of the federal courts" to exercise jurisdiction where warranted, a defendant seeking abstention [*335] faces a heavy burden). Consequently, any potential shortcomings of -- or any potential errors in -- Plaintiffs' position advocating against abstention cannot reduce or otherwise affect Defendants' burden of establishing that this Court should refrain from resolving this matter.

---

[5] The Conley court held that a district court was permitted to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim only if "it appear[ed] beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which [24] would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. at 45-46. Under this "no set of facts" standard, a complaint could effectively survive a motion to dismiss so long as it contained a bare recitation of the claim's legal elements.

[6] This Court is not aware of any legal decision addressing the effect of Iqbal on the standard applicable to the factual Rule 12 challenges, as they are defined in Turicentro. However, it appears logical for the Supreme Court's guidance in Iqbal to have at least a ripple effect on the standard applicable to factual challenges. Since the Supreme Court in Iqbal expressly guided that a plaintiff cannot obtain discovery with regard to his/her claims unless the plaintiff actually spells out the facts underlying these claims, the same guidance -- if applied to factual rather than facial review -- must yield the rule that a plaintiff cannot obtain discovery with regard to evidence verifying jurisdiction. Indeed, concluding otherwise invites a scenario where the plaintiff, being charged with the duty to actually produce jurisdictional evidence, is nonetheless permitted to flatly admit that (s)he has no such evidence and that all (s)he can do is to speculate in [25] his/her pleadings that such evidence might be discovered. In other words, allowing the plaintiff to conduct discovery for the purposes of factual challenge would result in an anomalous rule granting the plaintiff a broader pleading latitude for the purposes of the test under which the plaintiff's pleadings are not even granted presumption of truth.

V. THE FTAIA ASPECT

A. Subject Matter Jurisdiction under the Export Exception to the FTAIA Bar

1. Interplay Between the Sherman Act, FTAIA and Hartford Fire

As with the above-discussed issues of applicable standards and burdens, there appears to be a certain confusion among the parties as to the relationship between the governing statutory provision and relevant common law precedents addressing the issue of federal jurisdiction over the claims alleging collusive agreements within the context of international trade. See, e.g., S/Mot., at 7 (suggesting the presence of two different tests by stating: "Plaintiffs' . . . allegations are insufficient to establish that Defendants' [27] alleged conspiracy involved United States "import commerce" or had a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on U.S. commerce, as required by the . . . FTAIA . . . or that [Defendants' conduct] involved 'import commerce' or trade that had 'substantial effect[s]' on U.S. domestic commerce, as required by Hartford Fire Ins[.] Co. v. California").

HN14[] The Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Federal courts have struggled for decades to determine their jurisdiction over allegations of foreign restraints of trade. See, e.g., Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P 272 (2d ed. 2000); see also Den Norske Stats Olieselskap As v. Heere-Mac v.o.f., 241 F.3d 420, 423-24 (5th Cir. 2001) ("The history of this body of case law is confusing and unsettled").

Prior to the passage of the FTAIA, the courts applied various tests in order to determine when foreign conduct fell within the purview of the Sherman Act. The most widely used standard was the "effects test," which was developed by the Second Circuit in United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am. ("Alcoa"), 148 F.2d 416, 444 (2d Cir. 1945) [28] . The Alcoa court considered whether Congress intended the Sherman Act to impose liability for conduct outside the United States and under which circumstances the Constitution allowed Congress to do so. See id. Judge Hand rejected the idea that Congress meant "to punish all whom [United States] courts can catch." Id. at 443. Instead, the Alcoa court held that the Sherman Act was meant to reach foreign conduct only if that conduct was intended to affect (and did, in fact, affect) United States commerce. See id. Accordingly, in Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, the Supreme Court focused on the "intent-to-affect" language of Alcoa and summarized the effects test by stating that "it is well established by now that the Sherman Act applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States." 509 U.S. 764, 796, 113 S. Ct. 2891, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612 (1993) (citing Alcoa, emphasis supplied).

Application of the Alcoa effects test, however, proved difficult, causing the precise extraterritorial reach of the Sherman Act to remain less than crystal clear. In response to that difficulty, Congress enacted the FTAIA in [29] 1982 -- because the "courts differ[ed] in their expression of the proper test for determining whether United States antitrust jurisdiction over international transactions exists," H.R. Rep. No. [*336] 97-686 (1982), reprinted in, U.S.C.C.A.N. 2487, 2487 (1982) -- the statute, hence, built on the common law principle established in Alcoa and embraced in Hartford Fire. HN15[] In no ambiguous terms, the FTAIA "clarif[ied] the Sherman Act [by] mak[ing it] explicit [that, in foreign trade cases, the Sherman Act had] application only to conduct having a 'direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect' on domestic commerce." Id. Specifically, the FTAIA provided that:

> [The Sherman Act] shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless --
>
> (1) such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect --
> (A) . . . on [United States] import trade or import commerce with foreign nations . . .
> and
> (2) such effect gives rise to a claim under the [Sherman Act].

15 U.S.C. § 6a (emphasis supplied).

Although subsection (1) created an exception to the FTAIA's jurisdictional bar with regard to those claims that were raised [30] against foreign exporters, the language of this exception did not clarify the meaning of the phrase "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect," and federal courts' lack of interest in the FTAIA for the first decade after its enactment created an interpretative void opening the door to a debate as to whether the FTAIA established a new jurisdictional standard or merely codified the very same test that was articulated in Alcoa and Hartford Fire. [7] The gap was filled by the Ninth Circuit, which reasoned as follows:

> Our task when interpreting legislation is to give meaning to the words used by Congress; we strive to avoid constructions that render words meaningless. See United States v. Fiorillo, 186 F.3d 1136, 1153 (9th Cir. 1999). The FTAIA states that the Sherman Act shall not apply to foreign conduct unless it has a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on domestic commerce. [See] 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1). [In contrast,] the Supreme Court [explained that] the Alcoa test . . . confer[s] jurisdiction so long as the conduct creates "some substantial effect in the United States." Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 796. Unlike the FTAIA, the Alcoa test does not require [31] the effect to be "direct." [Hence, a]dopting the [reading of the FTAIA equivalent to that of] applying the Alcoa test would render meaningless the word "direct" in the FTAIA. We are not willing to rewrite a statute under the pretense of interpreting it. Moreover, applying Alcoa instead of the FTAIA would contravene the FTAIA's purpose. The FTAIA created its jurisdictional test because the "enactment of a single, objective test -- the 'direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect' test -- will serve as a simple and straightforward clarification of existing American law." [H.R.] at 2487-88. The [H.R.] goes on to state: "The specific [*337] purpose of the Sherman Act modification is: to more clearly establish when antitrust liability attaches to international business activities." Id. at 2492. It would be a serious departure from the goal of achieving clarity for us to conclude that Congress meant only "some substantial effect," Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 796, when it said "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect." Clarity is not achieved by employing three modifiers ("direct," "substantial," and "reasonably foreseeable") as the standard for the required effect of the [32] challenged conduct and then telling businesses that only one modifier ([e.g.,] "substantial") is relevant to Sherman Act liability. [8]
>
> . . .
>
> [W]e [now] must consider what Congress meant by "direct." A dictionary published contemporaneously with the enactment of the FTAIA defined "direct" as "proceeding from one point to another in time or space without deviation or interruption." Webster's Third New Int'l Dict. 640 (1982). Further, our efforts at understanding the meaning of "direct" are aided by the Supreme Court's interpretation of a nearly identical term in the . . . FSIA. The FSIA states that immunity does not extend to commercial conduct "outside the territory of the United States . . . that [] causes a direct effect in the United States." 28 U.S.C. § 1605(a)(2). After the lower federal courts struggled for years to define "direct effect," the Supreme Court unanimously declared that an effect is

---

[7] Several courts noted this question without answering it, e.g., [33] the Supreme Court did so in Hartford Fire, noting that the effects test is well established, see, 509 U.S. at 796, and observing -- in a footnote -- that the facts of Hartford Fire did not require the Court to address the question of "whether the [FTAIA's] 'direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect' standard amends existing law or merely codifies it." Id. at 796 n.23. After so concluding, the Court quickly turned to the issue of whether principles of international comity should have prevented the exercise of jurisdiction, see id. at 797; the swiftness of the Court's transition perhaps made the value of Hartford Fire less obvious for the purposes of the FTAIA.

[8] HN16[] The FTAIA test neither reversed nor even diluted the "intent-to-affect-and-effect-in-fact" common law principle established in Alcoa/Hartford Fire. Cf. United States v. Texas, 507 U.S. 529, 534, 113 S. Ct. 1631, 123 L. Ed. 2d 245 (1993) ("[S]tatutes which invade the common law [are] to be read with a presumption favoring the retention of long-established and familiar principles, except when the statutory purpose to the contrary is evident"). Rather, the FTAIA spelled out additional -- perhaps already implied but not articulated in Alcoa -- elements. [34] See Biotechnologies, 379 F.3d at 680, n.6 ("the dissent does not argue that the effects need not be direct, but rather that the 'meant to affect' requirement has always been part of the 'effects test' [of Alcoa]. Thus, the panel agrees on the standard; we merely disagree about its source. We say it is the FTAIA, while the dissent says the common law. We all recognize that conduct related to international trade is exempt from the Sherman Act unless it has a 'direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect' on domestic commerce").

> "direct" if it follows as an immediate consequence of the defendant's activity. [See] Republic of Argentina v. Weltover, Inc., 504 U.S. 607, 618, 112 S. Ct. 2160, 119 L. Ed. 2d 394 (1992).

United States v. LSL Biotechnologies, 379 F.3d 672, 679 (9th Cir. 2004). [9]

This Court finds the reasoning in Biotechnologies well founded and persuasive. Thus, HN17[] Sherman Act claims (if they are based on defendants' export practices but fail to state facts showing that these practices caused a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on United States commerce) effectively plead the plaintiff out of court or -- [35] to put it another way -- in order to survive dismissal under the FTAIA jurisdictional bar, the plaintiff must show that:

(i) defendants' export practices were "direct" (in the sense that defendants' conduct actually caused such immediate consequence) with regard to United States domestic commerce, see id.;

[*338] (ii) defendants' conduct actually was "substantial" (in the sense that defendants' conduct was actually "intended/consciously meant") to produce a consequence in the United States; [10] see Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 796; Alcoa, 148 F.2d at 444;

(iii) that consequence was a foreseeable result of defendants' action rather than a mere incidental occurrence. See id.

Being mindful of the cumulative effect created by all three qualifiers of the FTAIA exception (i.e., by the "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable" elements, as they are read in light of guidance provided in Alcoa/Hartford Fire), the Court followed, in its December Opinion, the case law which -- while addressing various "throughout-the-world-with-the-United-States-included" foreign trade scenarios -- found allegations asserting indiscriminating worldwide trade activities lacking focus on the United States commerce insufficient to invoke the FTAIA exception. See Docket Entry No. 73, at 28-34.

Specifically, this Court:

(i) relied on the observation made in Dee-K Enters. v. Heveafil Sdn. Bhd., 299 F.3d 281, 294-96 (4th Cir. 2002), and Dee-K's utilization of Hartford Fire, which noted that > a court should consider whether the [defendants'] acts, targets, and effects . . . are primarily foreign or primarily domestic. [37] This inquiry will best accommodate the cases with mixed fact patterns, defying ready categorization as "foreign" or "domestic" conduct, which our increasingly global economy will undoubtedly produce. We cannot begin to foresee the scope or complexity of future transactions. To adopt simplistic rules . . . might well yield unintended and unfortunate results. . . . We note that this approach echoes that of the Third Circuit in Carpet Group and finds support in several of the treatises [11];

and

---

[9] The Biotechnologies court also observed that the process of "[a]pplying Alcoa [in lieu of the FTAIA] might also ignore the words 'reasonably foreseeable,' although we recognize that foreseeability might be a concept inherent in any scheme that seeks to impose liability." Biotechnologies, 379 F.3d at 679, n.4.

[10] The Court is mindful that the "intended/meant-to-affect" aspect retained by the FTAIA from Alcoa/Hartford Fire does not have immediate lingual correspondence to the word "substantial," which is an element of the exception language provided in subsection (1)(A). Indeed, it appears that the word "direct" might be of better use to convey the sense of intent to affect. However, the Court finds it improper to switch the meanings of the terms "direct" and "substantial" as they were articulated by the Supreme Court in Alcoa/Hartford Fire [36] and in Republic of Argentina v. Weltover. Therefore, the Court retains the Supreme Court's meaning of these terms and, with an eye on clarity of its decisions, utilizes the words "substantiality" and "directness" as references to the tests offered by the Supreme Court.

[11] See infra note 57 for a detailed discussion of Dee-K Enters. and its particular relevance to certain aspects of the claims at bar.

(ii) observed that the FTAIA plaintiff challenging foreign exportation practices must show that defendant-exporters' conduct was, in some way, "focused" on the United States domestic market (since no defendant can unknowingly intend or mean to affect the American market), and a mere showing that defendants' exportation practices indiscriminately targeted "a global market, [and the] links to the United States [were] mere drops in the sea of conduct that occurred . . . around the world" would fail to establish that the defendants' activities resulted in the "direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect" on the United States trade needed to remove the FTAIA jurisdictional bar. Docket Entry No. [38] 73, at 33-34 (quoting Dee-K Enters., 299 F.3d at 295, which cited In re Uranium Antitrust Litig., 617 F.2d 1248, 1254 (7th Cir. 1980), the case relying, in turn, on Alcoa).

[*339] 2. Plaintiffs Fail to Provide Factual Proof Meeting the FTAIA Exception

Seemingly relying on § 6a (1)(A), Plaintiffs summarize their factual proof as follows:

> Defendants' conspiracy ha[d] "the purpose and effect of fixing prices of magnesite . . . products exported to and purchased in the United States." [Am. Compl.] P 1. Defendants' [trading activities] ha[d] "affected hundreds of millions of dollars of commerce in products that are used in American manufacturing facilities" and "severely burdened consumers in the United States." Id. P 3; see also [i]d. P 29. . . . Defendants' . . . pricing ha[d] directly affected U.S. commerce by increasing the price of Chinese magnesite purchased . . . for use in the United States. [See Am. Compl.] PP 1, 51, 55, 65, 72 and 75. This effect has been substantial, leading to average overcharges of more than 21% on each sale of magnesite made . . . during [39] the four year period from 2004 to 2008. [See Am. Compl.] P 65. . . . In 2007, Defendants and [entities associated with Defendants] had an 83% share of [a certain type of magnesite product that was exported from all over the world] to the United States and 87% share of [another type of magnesite product that was exported from all over the world] to the United States. [See] id. P 47. The value of the . . . magnesite from China [that was brought to the United States] exceeded $ 160 million in 2008. [See] id. P 49. Accordingly, Defendants' [trade] activities have affected . . . U.S. commerce . . . .

Opp. at 17-18. [12] Each of the paragraphs cited in the Opposition, i.e., Paragraphs 1, 3, 29, 47-51, 55, 65, 72 and 75 of the Amended Complaint, warrants an individual discussion. [13]

---

[12] Since Plaintiffs in this matter are not pro se litigants but rather are represented by counsel, the Court need not examine the Amended Complaint for statements vaguely indicating assertions of facts, compare Royce v. Hahn, 151 F.3d 116, 118 (3d Cir. 1998) (guiding that pro se pleadings "must be construed liberally and with a measure of tolerance"), and presumes that Plaintiffs' Opposition correctly directed the [40] Court's attention to the statements in the Amended Complaint which Plaintiffs deem support their position under subsection (1)(A).

[13] Granted that Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint systemically utilizes the term "Cartel" and, moreover, keeps referring to such "Cartel" as a single and continuously existing entity, the Court finds it useful to trace the history of this "Cartel," as painted by Plaintiffs. The following discussion, however, shall not be construed as expressing the Court's position that an actual -- or a single and continuing cartel (or even a numbers of cartels) -- existed; this issue is expressly reserved to be resolved in the event the Court has to address Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. First, relying on certain sources, Plaintiffs assert that, on April 9, 2000, Xiyang Refractory Materials, Yingkou Huachen, Dalian Golden Sun and Liaoning Foreign Trade, plus nine unspecified entities, established first "sub-Cartel" named "Jiyuan Magnesite Group," while Defendants Liaoning Liayi and Haicheng Huayu, plus non-defendant Shenyang Metals, established another "sub-Cartel" named "Huaxia Magnesite Group." See Am. Compl. PP 52-53. Then, without stating their factual source, Plaintiffs [41] assert that "[o]n February 19, 2001, the Jiyuan and Huaxia Magnesite Groups formally established a single, unified group under the name 'Chinese Magnesite Export Association' ('Cartel'). . . . The [resulting joint] Cartel comprised 23 exporting companies, including [eighteen unspecified entities and] Haicheng Pailou [not listed as a member of either "sub-Cartel"], Yingkou Huachen, Xiyang Group [not listed in either "sub-Cartel"], Haicheng Houying [not listed in either "sub-Cartel"] and Haicheng Huayu." Id. P 57. Then Plaintiffs allege, without specifying their source, that "[o]n March 22, 2003, at least 19 exporting companies [that is, the amount of companies less than the 23 companies comprising the alleged unified Cartel], including Liaoning Jiayi [resurrected from the second 'sub-Cartel'], Haycheng Houyin[g], Yingkou Huachen[], Dailan Golden Sun [resurrected from the first 'sub-Cartel'], China Minmetals [not included in the previous versions of 'Cartel' or in any 'sub-Cartel'], China Minerals [not included in the previous versions of 'Cartel' or in any 'sub-Cartel'], Sinosteel

a. Paragraph One

Paragraph One alleges as follows:

> This case arises out of a conspiracy among all Defendants and their [unspecified] [*340] co-conspirators [14] that has the purpose and effect of fixing prices of magnesite and magnesite products exported to and purchased in the United States. Defendants have also committed other unlawful practices designed to inflate the prices of magnesite and magnesite products sold to Plaintiffs and other purchasers [44] in the United States and elsewhere.

Am. Compl. P 1.

This Paragraph provides the Court with no factual proof of any kind, preventing [*341] the Court from utilizing this Paragraph for its factual analysis, as defined in Turicentro. Moreover, being comprised of conclusory, self-serving sentences, this Paragraph fails to assert facts even in accordance with the lenient pleading requirements articulated in Twombly and Iqbal. Consequently, the content of this Paragraph will be disregarded for failure to support Plaintiffs' position that the Court has jurisdiction to hear their claims under 15 U.S.C. § 6a (1)(A).

b. Paragraph Three

Paragraph Three asserts:

> The conspiracy has existed from at least April 2000 to date, and increased its effectiveness through new agreements to fix prices and limit supply entered in 2003. Defendants' illegal cartel [at an unspecified stage of its existence and, hence, of unspecified [46] composition] has deliberately targeted and severely burdened

---

Trading [not included in the previous versions of 'Cartel' or in any 'sub-Cartel'], Xiyang Pacific [not [42] included in the previous versions of 'Cartel' or in any 'sub-Cartel'] and Haicheng Huayu met in Shenyang, China[,] to discuss and forecast price trend for the year 2003." Id. P 59. Plaintiffs then allege that "[t]he members of the [presumably, this "discussion/ forecasting group"] agreed . . . to have [a new version of] the Cartel establish[ed] . . . under the name the 'China Magnetic Forum.'" Id. Next, citing certain sources, Plaintiffs maintain that, "[o]n February 1, 2004, [unspecified] members of the [presumably, the latest version of] the Cartel [that] includ[ed] Defendants Sinosteel Trading, Xiyang Group [resurrected from the original version of the Cartel], Haicheng Huaya, Haicheng Houying [resurrected from the original version of the Cartel] and Jiachen Group [not included in either version of the Cartel or in any 'sub-Cartel'] met under yet another name calling themselves the 'China Magnesite Self-Disciplined Association." Id. P 62. After so stating, Plaintiffs claim that unspecified members of an unspecified transformation of this ever-changing Cartel "reached [an agreement sometime] in November 2006, to increase the price of exported [magnesite-based products]." Id. P 63. [43] Finally, citing no sources, Plaintiffs state that, "[o]ver the weekend of December 9-10, 2006, [unspecified number of the members of this ever-changing] Cartel, including Xiyang Group, Haicheng Huaya, Haicheng Houying and Jiachen Group met and agreed to increase prices" on magnesite-based products. Id. Citing an Internet article, Plaintiffs conclude the foregoing discussion with the statement that, sometime "[i]n February 2007, [unspecified] members of [this ever-changing] Cartel met to discuss a possible agreement to increase the export price." Id. P 64. Although Plaintiffs assert that the "Cartel" is still operative, see id., P 3, they do not describe any post-February-2007 memberships, meetings or activities of the "Cartel." See also note 146, infra.

[14] While the Amended Complaint states that "Defendants' co-conspirators include[d] Rongyuan Magnesite Corporation of China, subsequently renamed Shangawa Rongyuan Refractories Co., Ltd, Yingkou Sanhua Refractory Material Co., Ltd., subsequently renamed Yingkou Wonjin Refractory Material Co., Ltd., Shenyang Metals and Minerals, and CITIC Trading," the Amended Complaint does not explain why these entities are not named as Defendants, same as it does not clarify whether any other entity exporting Chinese magnesite might be included in the list of such non-liable "co-conspirators." See Am. Compl. P 28. On the contrary, the Amended Complaint makes passim reference to unspecified "co-conspirators" (hence suggesting that such references are unrelated to the entities listed in Paragraph Twenty Eight). Plaintiffs' systemic reference to unspecified co-conspirators of Defendants, especially if assessed in light of the ever-changing composition of the alleged "Cartel," leaves the list of "co-conspirators" to the Court's imagination and necessarily invites a possibility that all Chinese exporters of magnesite products -- regardless of whether or [45] not they were identified in the Amended Complaint -- could be such "co-conspirators"; this possibility, in turn, lends support to Defendants' assertion that all Chinese exporters of magnesite-based products were subject to compulsory price regulations governing export of Chinese magnesite-based products, as discussed infra, note 139 of this Opinion.

> consumers in the United States. Th[is unspecified in its stage-of-existence and composition] cartel has affected hundreds of millions of dollars of commerce in products that are used in American manufacturing facilities and households.

Id. P 3.

The three sentences comprising this Paragraph suffer of the deficiencies identical to those plaguing Paragraph One, i.e., the statements made in Paragraph Three are not cognizable even for the purposes of facial review, as defined in Twombly and Iqbal. A fortiori, these statements cannot qualify as factual proof for the purposes of factual review, as defined in Turicentro. Therefore, the content of Paragraph Three will similarly be disregarded by the Court without reaching the issue of whether this Paragraph could even be relevant to the "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable" elements of the FTAIA exception stated in subsection (1)(A).

c. Paragraph Twenty-Nine

The following paragraph in Plaintiffs' list, i.e., Paragraph Twenty-Nine, states:

> Each of these Defendants and its [unspecified] co-conspirators has colluded with each other to restrain competition by, among other things, [47] setting artificial prices pursuant to illegal horizontal agreements among these competitors. These horizontal practices were designed to, and in fact did, have a substantial and adverse impact in the United States.

Id. P 29.

The shortcomings of this Paragraph are similar to those plaguing Paragraphs One and Three, discussed supra, i.e., Plaintiffs offer the Court not a single factual proof, but only a "fusion" of: (a) legal conclusions applicable to any garden-variety Sherman Act scenario; and (b) a FTAIA/Sherman Act element. Therefore, the Court will analogously disregard the factless content of this Paragraph without reaching the issue of whether it might even be relevant to the "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable" elements of the FTAIA exception.

d. Paragraph Forty-Seven

The next paragraph referred to by Plaintiffs, that is, Paragraph Forty-Seven, alleges:

> During the period described in this [Amended] Complaint, the international market for magnesite and magnesite products was dominated by Defendants and their [unspecified] co-conspirators, including producers of magnesite and magnesite products and trading companies in China exporting magnesite and magnesite products. China [48] is the most significant foreign supplier of magnesite to the United States with an 83 percent [*342] share of. . . magnesite imports [in one type of magnesite product] and an 87 percent share of . . . magnesia imports [in another type of magnesite product] in 2007.

Id. P 47. The Court gathers that this Paragraph aims to provide the Court with a showing that Defendants' export activities fell within the meaning of the exception in subsection (1)(A).

The Paragraph refers the Court, through footnote 5, to "2007 Yearbook Table 6," that is, to a table in the document attached to the Amended Complaint as Plaintiffs' Exhibit 4. The table, produced by the United States Census Bureau, shows that, in comparison with results of the year 2006, United States importation of Chinese magnesite-based products in the year 2007 slightly decreased in quantity and in value with regard to a certain magnesium oxide product but slightly increased in quantity and in value with regard to another magnesium oxide product. See Docket Entry No. 77-1, at 27; see also infra note 17 of this Opinion (explaining the distinction between crude magnesite and types of magnesium oxide). With regard to the first product, the table [49] shows that United States import of this product was comprised of 85.4% (rather than 87% asserted by Plaintiffs) volume of goods of Chinese origin, and it's relevant value was 74.1% of United States overall 2007 importation of that product. See id. With regard to the second product, the table shows 83.3% volume and 67.3% value as to the relevant United States importation in 2007. See id. The table -- presenting, by definition, a snapshot of United States importation only in 2007 (and also verifying that Chinese magnesite products were the cheapest among all other goods of these types imported by the United States) -- is entirely silent as to Defendants' individual (or even collective) share, be it volume-wise and/or value-wise, thus leaving it to the Court's imagination whether Defendants' goods comprised the entire batch of Chinese magnesium oxide imported by the United States in 2007, or none of it, or any amount in between. See id.

Since, without resolving this ambiguity, the Court cannot assess the validity of Plaintiffs' claims made against Defendants (rather than against the entire Chinese magnesite industry), the Court examined the Amended Complaint for any statement that may [50] shed light on the relation between individual Defendants and the entire Chinese industry producing magnesite-based goods. The detected statements in the Amended Complaint (that appear relevant to the Court's inquiry) do not assist Plaintiffs' position; on the contrary, they render Plaintiffs' claims unwarranted. For instance, Paragraph Fifty-Four of the Amended Complaint states: "[t]he members of the two Jiyuan and Huaxia Magnesite Groups [i.e., the two initial 'sub-Cartels'] collectively represented more than 70 percent of the export volume of magnesite in China" during unspecified year(s). Am. Compl. P 54. (Notably, Paragraph Fifty-Four does not provide the Court with any source of Plaintiffs' conclusion as to this percentile, hence rendering it of no use for the purposes of factual analysis, as defined in Turicentro. The Court, however, ignores this shortcoming, for the purposes of this Opinion only, to address Plaintiffs' claim as a whole.)

If the Court were to entertain this 70% figure and, also, to take a leap of logic in Plaintiffs' favor by presuming that the ever-changing "Cartel" and the sum of Jiyuan and Huaxia Magnesite "sub-Cartels" were, somehow, the same thing, but see [51] supra note 13 of this Opinion (prompting a conclusion otherwise), Plaintiffs' allegations would merely suggest that Defendants [*343] (perhaps, jointly with their specified and unspecified co-conspirators) had a 70 percent share of Chinese magnesite-based export. [15] Further examining Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, the Court finds this 70% figure relevant to Plaintiffs' claim that "[t]he United States consumes about 25 percent of China's magnesite exports." Id. P 50. In support of that proposition, Plaintiffs rely on their Exhibit 2. See id. at 12, n. 7. However, Plaintiffs' Exhibit 2 states:

> About 2.0 million metric tons of magnesium oxide were exported from China in 2006 . . . . In 2006, 590 thousand metric tons, 500 thousand metric tons, 300 thousand metric tons, and 640 thousand metric tons of magnesium oxide were exported from China to Japan, Europe, the United States, and Other Asia, respectively. [16]

Docket Entry No. 77-1, at 9. [17]

---

[15] The Court is mindful of a possibility that this factlessly asserted 70 percent, if real, might be a "high-tide" scenario, since Plaintiffs concede that Chinese world-wide export of magnesite-based products differed rather significantly over the years relevant [52] to Plaintiffs' claims. See Am. Compl. P 46 (relying on United States surveys for assertion that "China's share of annual world production has increased from 32 percent in 2001 to 45 percent in 2007," i.e., grew 13%). If the overall volume of Chinese magnesite-based export varied by more than 50%, the Court has no reason to presume that the exportation share of Defendants (and their specified and unspecified co-conspirators, if any) did not fluctuate in the same fashion or even more dramatically.

[16] Defendants correctly point out the mathematical error in Plaintiffs' calculation of what share of 2 million tons of Chinese overall exportation in 2006 was represented by 300 thousand tons imported during that year by the United States: while Plaintiffs assert that 300,000 is a quarter of 2 million, Defendants correctly observe that it is only 15%.

[17] The Court reads Plaintiffs' reliance on their Exhibit 2 as an assertion that Defendants were exporters not of crude magnesite but rather of magnesium oxide. Magnesium oxide is a product qualitatively different from magnesite; this is so because "magnesite" is a layperson's term for magnesium carbonate, the composition having chemical symbol "MgCO[3]," [53] while the layperson's term "magnesia" designates what is technically known as "magnesium oxide," the composition having chemical formula "MgO." Magnesium oxide can be obtained from magnesium carbonate by heating magnesite to 700 [degrees] C to 1000 [degrees] C, which causes decomposition of magnesite into magnesium oxide and carbon dioxide (alternatively, magnesium oxide can be obtained, upon introduction of calcined dolime and heat, through a chain of chemical reactions processing seawater and brine containing magnesium chloride.) See, e.g., <<http://www.magnesia specialties.com/students.htm>>. The report of Plaintiffs' expert, see Docket Entry No. 28-6, relied upon by Plaintiffs in Paragraph Sixty-Five, discussed infra, similarly suggests that Defendants were exporters of magnesium oxide rather than of crude magnesite, since the report takes pains to Read jointly with Exhibit 2, Plaintiffs' Paragraph Forty-Seven stands for the propositions that the alleged "Cartel" a/k/a the sum of "Jiyuan and Huaxia Magnesite Groups" was the source of a mere 10.5% (i.e., 70% of these 15%) of the Chinese-origined magnesium oxide destined for export, and that is only if the Court generously presumes a pro-rate spread of export destinations among all Chinese exporters (since a non-pro-rata hypothesis would allow to presume that no Defendants' goods whatsoever -- or mere droplets of Defendants' export -- ended in the United States, and that these 15% of all Chinese magnesium oxide that ended in the United States [*344] came from the 30% share of goods exported by Chinese entities that were not members of the alleged "Cartel"). This 10.5% figure cannot possibly be read as factual proof showing that Defendants intended/meant to affect United States commerce: if anything, it suggests that Defendants' focus was domestic Chinese sale and exportation to countries other than the United States. Consequently, the content of Paragraph Forty-Seven (asserting the percentile [55] of United States importation of Chinese-originated magnesite in 2007) fails to meet the requirements of factual review, as defined in Turicentro, and -- even under the standard of facial review -- fails to indicate that the Court has jurisdiction to hear Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims. If anything, this Paragraph merely verifies the interest of United States importers in buying Chinese magnesite-based products, perhaps because these products have consistently been the cheapest on the global market.

e. Paragraph Forty-Eight

The following paragraph, i.e., Paragraph Forty-Eight, alleges as follows:

> During the period relevant to this Complaint, the conduct of Defendants and their [unspecified] co-conspirators has taken place in and affected the interstate commerce of the United States. Hundreds of thousands of metric tons of magnesite are imported into the United States each year from China. Data from the U.S. International Trade Commission confirms that imports from China into the U.S. of magnesite exceeded 500,000 metric tons in each year from 2000 to 2006.

Am. Compl. P 48. The Paragraph also includes the following table:

5*United States Magnesite (Magnesite)
5*Imports
5*Source: U.S. International Trade
5*Commission

inform the Court that "[h]eating magnesite to a temperature between 700 [degrees] C and 1000 [degrees] C [produces] caustic calcined magnesia," while "[f]urther heating [to] temperatures between 1500 [degrees] C and 2000 [degrees] C produces . . . [so-]called dead-burned magnesia," and "electro-fused magnesia . . . is created by heating [54] magnesite [to] about 2,800 [degrees] C for several continuous hours." Docket Entry No. 28-6, at 5.

5*(Units in Metric Tons)

	2*Focused and *2*Dead-Burned *2*Magnesia		2*Caustic *2*Calcined *2*Magnesia
Year	China	All Countries	China	All Countries
2000	345,018	500,673	88,488	136,241
2001	244,957	363,060	77,380	129,859
2002	286,348	394,222	88,737	147,610
2003	310,051	379,370	92,670	150,026
2004	340,933	418,013	96,432	157,398
2005	389,828	477,638	96,342	152,193
2006	359,777	433,131	127,340	162,785
Total	2,276,909	2,966,107	667,389	1,036,112

5*United States Magnesite (Magnesite)

5*Imports

5*Source: U.S. International Trade

5*Commission 5(Units in Metric Tons)
	2*Natural and *2*Other *2*Magnesite	2*Total
Year
	China	All Countries	China	All Countries
2000	6,282	33,476	439,786	670,390
2001	5,098	28,631	327,435	521,560
2002	8,915	29,180	384,000	571,012
2003	17,257	35,382	419,978	564,778
2004	9,259	31,568	446,625	606,979
2005	7,998	33,282	494,168	663,113
2006	9,813	34,193	496,930	663,109
Total	64,522	225,715	3,008,921	4,227,931

Although [56] the Amended Complaint provides the Court with no citation allowing the Court to verify the authenticity of the table, the Court presumes, for the purposes of this Opinion only, that the table is true and correct. [18] Since the above-replicated table indicates that China was the origin of the lion's share of magnesite-based products imported by the United States during the period from 2000 to 2006, the prices on Chinese-originated magnesite-based goods could have a "direct" effect on the prices charged in the United States.

However, the table -- providing, again, data only as to magnesite-based goods of [*345] Chinese origin imported by the United States -- is wholly silent as to the share of magnesium oxide exported by Defendants, [57] rather than by China as a country, same as the table sheds no light on Defendants' domestic Chinese sales and export to countries other than the United States. See id. In other words, it appears that Plaintiffs invite the Court to equate all Chinese magnesite-based export with Defendants' magnesium oxide export. This the Court cannot do, [19] since

[18] Contrary to the claim asserted in Paragraph Forty-Eight, the table verifies that the share of Chinese magnesite (even if assessed collectively with regard to all types of magnesite-based products) in the magnesite-based goods imported by the United States during any given year from 2000 to 2006 never reached, and certainly never exceeded, 500,000 metric tons. It appears that Plaintiffs failed to distinguish between the columns titled "All Countries" and "China."

[19] The Court notes the practical anomaly of the legal position advocated [58] by Plaintiffs. The bulk of evidence submitted in this matter suggests, rather unambiguously, that magnesite-based products of Chinese origin have been consistently the cheapest on the global market. This fact, apparently, has been prompting United States importers to buy predominantly the Plaintiffs' facts just as comfortably allow for an inference that Defendants' share in Chinese exportation of magnesium oxide caused no effect whatsoever. Cf. Fowler, 578 F.3d at 210-11 ("[w]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged-but it has not 'show[n]'-'that the pleader is entitled to relief") (quoting Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949-50). If Plaintiffs' allegations fail even facial review, these allegations cannot operate as a proof for the purposes of the Court's factual review, as it is defined in Turicentro. Consequently, the content of Paragraph Forty-Eight will be disregarded for failure to provide factual proof as to the Court's subject matter jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' claims.

f. Paragraph Forty-Nine

The next paragraph relied upon by Plaintiffs, i.e., Paragraph Forty-Nine, states as follows:

> The value of U.S. imports of magnesite and magnesite products from China exceeded $ 50 million in 2000 and exceeded $ 160 million in 2008.

See id. P 49 (referring the Court to footnote [59] 6 which, in turn, directs the Court's attention to: (a) a table in Plaintiffs' Exhibit 5; and (b) a reference to a web page <<http://dataweb.usitc.gov/>>).

The table included in Plaintiffs' Exhibit 5 shows that, during the year 2000, various magnesite-based products of Chinese origin were imported by the United States in the amount of $ 553,116,000. See Docket Entry No. 77-1, at 37. The web reference to <<http://dataweb.usitc.gov>> brings the Court to the homepage of the United States International Trade Commission, where no drop-down menu, no direct link, no search directory and no advance search of terms "China Chinese Magnesite 2008" allowed the Court to locate a particular statement with regard to United States importation of Chinese magnesite-based products in 2000 or 2008; in other words, this piece of Plaintiffs' "factual proof" was effectively nothing but Plaintiffs' directive to the Court to find evidence supporting Plaintiffs' claim. See <<http://dataweb.usitc.gov>>. Such "proof," by definition, fails to support Plaintiffs' position: HN18[] "[d]istrict judges have no obligation to act as counsel or paralegal [even] to pro se litigants," Pliler v. Ford, 542 U.S. 225, 231-32, 124 S. Ct. 2441, 159 L. Ed. 2d 338 (2004), [60] and, a fortiori, have no obligation [*346] seek out evidence supporting the claims asserted by a represented litigant.

However, the crucial error with Plaintiffs' Paragraph Forty-Nine is not the dead-end result of Plaintiffs' citations. Rather, the shortcomings of Plaintiffs' statement and Exhibit 5 are substantively identical to those plaguing the above-discussed Paragraph Forty-Eight, i.e., Plaintiffs try to equate the entire Chinese export of magnesite-based products with Defendants' export of magnesium oxide. As explained in the preceding subsection of this Opinion, the Court declines Plaintiffs' invitation to so equate since Plaintiffs' data, even if true, fails to establish proof that Defendants were meaning/intending to affect United States commerce. Therefore, the Court will disregard the content of Paragraph Forty-Nine for failure to provide factual proof.

g. Paragraph Fifty

The following paragraph referred to by Plaintiffs, i.e., Paragraph Fifty, asserts:

> The United States consumes about 25 percent of China's magnesite exports. The steel industry in the United States is the primary consumer of magnesite products, with 390 thousand metric tons consumed by steel refractories in the United [61] States during 2006. Cement refractories are the second leading consumer of magnesia in the United States.

Am. Compl. P 50 (referring the Court to footnotes 7 and 8, which -- in turn -- refer the Court to Plaintiffs' Exhibit 2 already examined by the Court in the subsection "Paragraph Forty-Seven," supra).

---

goods of Chinese origin. That predominant purchasing election, in turn, caused the predominance of Chinese goods in United States overall importation of magnesite-based products, even though it occurred with what seems to be complete neutrality of Chinese exporters who, it appears, were willing to sell their magnesite-based product to any buyer, regardless of whether such buyer was domestic or foreign, or of a particular foreign origin. Yet, Plaintiffs invite this Court to find that the purchasing elections made by United States importers somehow show that Chinese sellers meant to affect United States commerce.

The content of this Paragraph warrants little discussion, since the issue of which particular industry among United States industries is the leading -- or second leading -- consumer of magnesite-based products is wholly irrelevant to the subject matter jurisdictional inquiry at bar. That leaves the Court only with Plaintiffs' erroneously calculated claim that the United States consumes 25% of Chinese magnesite. See supra note 16 of this Opinion (pointing out the error in Plaintiffs' mathematics as to 25%, which should actually be 15%). As the Court already explained in its discussion of the shortcomings of Plaintiffs' Paragraph Forty-Seven, this 15% reference lends no support to Plaintiffs' claim that Defendants' activities fall within the language of subsection (1)(A): Defendants' export of, presumably, 10.5% of Defendants' goods to the United States cannot show that Defendants intended/meant [62] to affect American domestic commerce. Therefore, the content of Paragraph Fifty will similarly be disregarded for the purposes of the Court's review, since it fails to provide factual proof of Plaintiffs' position.

h. Paragraph Fifty-One

Plaintiffs' next paragraph, that is, Paragraph Fifty-One, alleges:

> The conduct of Defendants and their [unspecified] co-conspirators has directly, substantially and foreseeably restrained trade and commerce in the United States. Members of the conspiracy, including Defendants Sinosteel Trading, Liaoning Jiayi, Haicheng Houying, Haicheng Huayu, Yongkou Huachen, China Minerals, and Minmetals directly have sold and continue to sell magnesite and magnesite products to U.S. companies and in U.S. commerce at prices artificially increased by the Cartels [in unexplained plural].

Am. Compl. P 51.

The deficiencies of this Paragraph are identical to those of Paragraphs One, Three and Twenty-Nine, i.e., the content of this Paragraph fails to present any evidential support for Plaintiffs' position for purposes of factual review, as it is defined in Turicentro. Moreover, this Paragraph expressly includes the error disqualifying its content even for the purposes of facial [63] review, since it "asserts" a mere mechanical repetition of the elements of the [*347] FTAIA exception. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949-51 ("[A fortiori,]HN19[] the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions [or to t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements [, i.e., by] legal conclusion[s] couched as a factual allegation [e.g.,] the plaintiffs' assertion of an unlawful agreement [or] that [defendants] adopted a policy "'because of,' not merely 'in spite of,' its adverse effects upon an identifiable group" (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, and Pers. Adm'r of Mass. v. Feeney, 442 U.S. 256, 279, 99 S. Ct. 2282, 60 L. Ed. 2d 870 (1979)). Therefore, the Court will disregard Plaintiffs' self-serving assertions set forth in Paragraph Fifty-One. [20]

i. Paragraph Fifty-Five

The following paragraph, that is, Paragraph Fifty-Five, maintains:

> As a result of these agreements, despite slumping demand, the price of magnesite products imported from China to the United States increased during 2000. According to statistics available from the United States International Trade Commission, the customs value of [dead-burned magnesium oxide] imported from China into the United States rose from $ 104 per metric ton in the fourth quarter of 1999 to $ 158 per metric ton by the fourth quarter of 2000.

Am. Compl. P 55.

The Paragraph is referring the Court to footnote 11, which -- in turn -- refers the Court to the discussed supra homepage of the United States International Trade Commission, where, as stated supra, no drop-down menu, no direct link, no search directory and no advance search of terms allowed the Court to locate the statement referred

---

[20] The Court also notes, in passing, that an alleged fact of sale of goods to an importer who might bring the goods into the United States in no way shows the seller's intent to affect the United States commerce unless there are facts showing that the seller actually sought to sell to (i.e., discriminated in favor of sales to) the buyers bringing the goods into [64] the United States. See Fowler, 578 F.3d at 210-11 ("[w]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged-but it has not 'show[n]'-'that the pleader is entitled to relief") (quoting Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949-50) (emphasis supplied).

[65] to by Plaintiffs, i.e., Plaintiffs' "factual proof," once again, is nothing but Plaintiffs' directive to the Court to find evidence supporting Plaintiffs' claim. See <<http://dataweb.usitc.gov>>. Moreover, Plaintiffs' first sentence, i.e., "[a]s a result of [Defendants' collusive] agreements, despite slumping demand, the price of magnesite products imported from China to the United States increased during 2000" appears factually questionable [21] and, even if factually correct, merely paraphrases Plaintiffs' self-serving economic conclusion (that a drop in demand for certain goods must necessarily result in a drop or stagnation of price charged for these goods) [22] into a factless statement [*348] sounding like a fact. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1953 (HN20[]) "the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions . . . couched as a factual allegation").

The second sentence of Plaintiffs' Paragraph Fifty-Five similarly fails to support Plaintiffs' position. That sentence cites the homepage of the United States International Trade Commission in order to assert that "the customs value of [dead-burned magnesium oxide] imported from China into the United States rose from $ 104 per metric ton in the fourth quarter of 1999 to $ 158 per metric ton by the fourth quarter of 2000." Am. Compl. P 55. This statement appears also factually questionable, since a United States Government Survey indicates that the per-metric-ton price on Chinese dead-burned magnesium oxide was $ 126.90 in 1999, and $ 129.27 in 2000. See <<http://minerals.usgs.gov/minerals/pubs/commodity/magnesium/401400.pdf>>, [69] at 8. If so, a simple mathematical calculation reveals that the per-ton price rose by $ 2.37, that is, by less than 2% (rather than by $ 54.00 per ton asserted by Plaintiffs in Paragraph Fifty-Five); such rise in price is so trivial in comparison with the [21] See December Opinion at 50 (quoting a United States government survey, see <<http://minerals.usgs.gov/minerals/pubs/commodity/magnesium/mgcmyb2001.pdf>>, showing that the decline of 2001 followed the spike in importation that took place in 2000, and explaining the reasons for a [66] significant increase in United States demand for imported magnesite-based goods in 2000).

---

[22] The Court already addressed this issue in its December Opinion detailing to Plaintiffs the operation of economic functions as follows:

> The "supply and demand" economic model describes the operations of market mechanism. It is graphically represented through two curved functions which, if read jointly, reflect the understanding that, in a competitive market, price will function to equalize supply and demand. The model neither requires all producers to sell comparable goods at the same price nor implies that a decline in demand would force all producers to lower their prices: the leeway available to sellers depends on price elasticity of their goods. Thus, if demand for certain goods begins to decline, the sellers offering their goods at the upper-bracket prices would be forced to lower them (or go out of business if competitive prices become so low to render their businesses unprofitable), while the sellers offering their goods at lower-bracket prices do not have to change their pricing policies -- and may even legitimately increase their prices -- until the demand drops to such a point that there [67] is not enough market even for the goods they sell. To illustrate, if tomato growers who previously sold their crop for $ 1.00 to $ 2.00 per pound are faced with a market decline, the growers who were selling at $ 2.00 per pound would have to lower their prices in order to compete for the shrunk market (or to leave the business if they cannot afford reduction in price), while the growers who were selling at $ 1.00 per pound would still be in the position to keep increasing their prices until the decline in demand becomes such that even these growers cannot sell their entire crop (at which point, these growers would have to either compete with each other by lowering their sale prices or reduce their production). Hence, Plaintiffs' argument that the gradual increase in the prices of Processed Magnesite imported from China during the Relevant Period was in contradiction to the rules of supply and demand is based on an incorrect reading of economic theories.

Docket Entry No. 73, at 49-50. In addition to the foregoing, the hike in price might be unavoidable to a seller that finds itself suddenly burdened with rising cost of overhead, soaring fixed costs and variable costs unrelated to payroll [68] (e.g., rise in utilities charges), higher taxes, etc. -- such developments might cause the seller to shift the increase in cost of operation to the buyer regardless of demand, since the seller's failure to so shift the burden might simply result in a speedy bankruptcy. Accord id. at 42-46 (detailing to Plaintiffs the interplay between relevant economics and accounting concepts, and providing data showing dramatic increase in the labor-related, fixed and variable costs in Chinese magnesite industry).

base price of $ 126.90-per-ton that it would be unlikely to signify any non-nominal effect on United States commerce. [23]

[*349] However, the key shortcoming of Plaintiffs' position is not rooted in the uncertainty of Plaintiffs' figures. Rather, it ensues from the fact that these figures show only the price trend with regard to all Chinese dead-burned magnesium oxide imported into the United States during 2000. Even if the Court were to ignore the "snap-shot" quality of this figure (since it cannot be imported into Plaintiffs' allegations with regard to 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007 and thereafter, apparently), the overall rise in Chinese prices charged with regard to United States import cannot show an "intent-to-affect" even by the entire Chinese magnesite industry unless Plaintiffs provide facts showing that Chinese domestic purchases and all foreign non-American purchasers were charged lower prices. Plaintiffs, however, do not even assert these facts and certainly offer no proof of them. Since Plaintiffs' figures do not establish that the entire Chinese magnesite industry was intending to affect United States commerce, the Court has no reason to deduce from this stark absence of facts that Defendants undertook actions that were meant to affect United States commerce. [73] In light of the foregoing, the Court will disregard the content of Paragraph Fifty-Five, since it fails to provides the Court with any relevant factual proof.

j. Paragraph Sixty-Five

Next paragraph, i.e., Paragraph Sixty-Five, provides the Court with the following statement:

> Due to the efforts to increase prices at the end of 2003, the Cartel achieved significant price increases in the U.S., stabilized U.S. prices, and avoided major price cutting despite low levels of demand. An overcharge analysis from a regression model by Plaintiffs' expert economist Dr. Russell Lamb of Econ One shows that, between 2000 and 2003, the Cartel overcharged U.S. buyers of magnesite by an average of 4 percent, [*350] while between 2004 and 2008, as a direct result of the Cartel's activities, U.S. magnesite purchasers were overcharged more than 21 percent.

Am. Compl. P 65.

---

[23] The Court notes that Plaintiffs attached to their Opposition an exhibit containing a copy of the document upon which Plaintiffs seemed to rely for the purposes of their $ 158 figure. The document contains a table showing that, basing their numbers on tariff and trade data from the United States Department of Commerce and the United States International Trade Commission, the unidentified-by-the-document entity compiling the table determined that prices of Chinese magnesium oxide were $ 0.1 per kilogram during the first quarter of 2000, $ 0.111 per kilogram during the second quarter, $ 0.136 during the third, and $ 0.158 during the fourth quarter. See Docket Entry No. 105-36, at 2. Since Plaintiffs assert that the price at the end of 1999 was $ 104 per ton, the Court gathers that Plaintiffs' position is that the [70] price dropped from $ 0.104 to $ 0.1 during the first quarter of 2000 but then began climbing. Plaintiffs' Opposition addresses this climb as follows: "The Government Survey provided yearly total import volumes and yearly average prices[, while the United States International Trade Commission's] quarterly data demonstrates [a price increase] consistent with Plaintiffs' allegation that the initial two export cartels were formed in April of 2000 and succeeded in raising the price of magnesite exported to the United States." Docket Entry No. 105. Plaintiffs' figures, if averaged, appear to be similar to the Survey's figure of $ 129.27 per ton (since the average of Plaintiffs' numbers results in $ 126.25 per ton, and the $ 3.02 difference might be a result of a heavier export during the third and fourth quarters, although the Court cannot determine the same with any degree of certainty since Plaintiffs' exhibit does not provide quarterly import volume). However, the Court is not entirely clear as to Plaintiffs' point that the rise in the price of Chinese magnesium oxide in 2000 must be viewed as a proof of the "Cartel's" formation and initial activities. According to Plaintiffs' version [71] of the "Cartel's" history, the initial "sub-Cartels" solidified into a unified "Cartel" in February of 2001, muscling the largest membership during the entire "Cartel's" history, see supra note 13, which -- pursuant to Plaintiffs' logic -- should have resulted in further intensification of "Cartel's" activities and further increase in import prices of Chinese magnesium oxide, but the United States Government Survey indicates that the 2001 price for Chinese magnesium oxide was $ 148.75 per metric ton (if calculated on the grounds of the total tonnage and total value stated in the Survey). See <<http://minerals.usgs.gov/minerals/pubs/commodity/ magnesium/mgcmyb2001.pdf>>. Thus -- if the Court were to adopt Plaintiffs' position that this $ 148.75 price is not the year-end price but merely a yearly average -- the increase of the alleged "Cartel" in size and in collusive activities should not have resulted in a progressive drop of prices during 2001 (since, if the price at the end of 2000's fourth quarter was $ 158 per ton, as Plaintiffs' exhibit alleges, than the price had to drop by the end of 2001 by 12.34%, i.e., down to $ 139.50 per ton, in order to yield the yearly average of $ 148.75 [72] reflected in the Survey).

This Paragraph refers the Court to footnote 20, reading, "Expert Report of Dr. Russell Lamb [("Lamb")], dated September 27, 2007, filed in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for a Default Judgment" ("Report"). See id. at 20. Although this reference states no docket entry number, the Court, given the above-designated date of execution, the authorship [74] and the purpose of submission of the report, presumes that Plaintiffs' footnote 20 was intended to make a reference to Docket Entry No. 28-6.

Plaintiffs' reliance on the conclusions drawn by Plaintiffs' expert -- rather than on facts and evidentiary proof of such facts -- is necessarily concerning for the purposes of factual review for two reasons. First, HN21[] Federal Rule of Evidence 702, amended to codify the Supreme Court's decisions in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993), GE v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136, 118 S. Ct. 512, 139 L. Ed. 2d 508 (1997), and Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999), is unambiguous in the sense that it provides that an expert should base the expert's opinion on the litigant-provided facts rather than providing the expert's opinion as a "fact" supporting litigant's claim. See Fed. R. Evid. 702; accord Daubert, 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469. Second, since the factual review at hand is a process qualitatively different in its premises and goals from a default judgment process, the Report -- even if it were, hypothetically, proper for the purposes of Plaintiffs' then-pending-and-since-dismissed motion for default judgment -- appears questionably relevant to the Rule 12 inquiry currently conducted. [75] [24]

However, in [76] light of the Court of Appeals' guidance as to the breadth of proof the district court should consider while conducting its factual review under Rule 12, see Turicentro, 303 F.3d at 300, n. 4 (explaining that, HN23[] in its assessment of a factual deficiency, the district court "must weigh [all available] evidence relating to jurisdiction, with discretion to allow affidavits, documents, and even limited evidentiary hearings," and citing Garcia v. Copenhaver, Bell & Assocs., 104 F.3d 1256, 1260-61 (11th Cir. 1997); Ohio Nat'l Life Ins. Co. v. United States, 922 F.2d 320, 325 (6th Cir. 1990); and Oaxaca v. Roscoe, 641 F.2d 386, 391 (5th Cir. 1981)), this Court concludes that it would be an error to disregard the content of the Report merely on the grounds that it is an expert opinion and, thus, will assess the content of the Report on its merits.

That content of the Report is as follows:

[*351] (i) The Report opens with Lamb's statement detailing his employ and studies. See Docket Entry No. 28-6, at 3.

(ii) Then, in no ambiguous terms, Lamb states that he "assume[d] that the allegations contained in the [Original] Complaint [were] in fact true." [25] Id. at 3-4.

---

[24] HN22[] "[T]he plaintiff may seek the Court's entry of default judgment under either [subpart of] Rule 55(b)." *Doug Brady, Inc. v. N.J. Bldg. Laborers Statewide Funds, 250 F.R.D. 171, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28324, at * 19 (D.N.J. April 7, 2008)* (citing Nationwide Mutual Ins. Co. v. Starlight Ballroom Dance Club, Inc., 175 Fed. App'x 519, 521, n.1 (3d Cir. 2006). However, default judgment necessarily ensues from a party's failure "to plead or otherwise defend" against the allegations of his/her opponent. *Id. at * 18-19* (detailing the first step of default procedure under Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(a)). Although the second step of default allows the court to exercise its discretion in order to "establish the truth of any allegation by evidence," see Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(b)(2)(C), an entry of default does not obligate the court to conduct a facial -- moreover factual -- review. Hence, while for the purposes of a litigant's default application, the litigant's expert may be warranted in his/her submission of the expert's opinion based on facts as they are pled by the litigant seeking default, it is indeed questionable at best whether the same is warranted for the purposes of a factual review under Rule 12.

[25] This statement renders the applicability of the Report to the Amended Complaint questionable at best not only because Lamb fails to base his Report on independent facts but also because the Report unambiguously declares that it takes, as true, the facts stated in the Original Complaint, that is, in the set of pleadings which: (a) was dismissed by the Court for insufficiency of these very pleadings; and, even more importantly, (b) differed, and rather dramatically, from the Amended Complaint as to the factual assertions made therein. However, the Court ignores the anomaly of Plaintiffs' reliance on the Report based on different and dismissed facts in order to focus on the even more troubling deficiencies of Plaintiffs' utilization of Lamb's Report.

(iii) Following this introduction, the Report [77] proceeds to an observation that various forms of magnesium oxide are obtained, inter alia from extensive heating of magnesite. See id. at 5 (relying on a document designated as Stefan Schlag, Jim Glauser and Kenji Fujita, Magnesium Oxide and Other Magnesium Chemicals, Chemical Economics Handbook, SRI Consulting, 2007" ("CEH")). [26] The Report then informs the Court that "[t]he steel industry is a primary source of magnesia demand" and "[c]ement refractories are the second leading consumer of magnesia." Docket Entry No. 28-6, at 6 (relying on CEH and referring, seemingly, to American industrial landscape).

(iv) Then, switching to Chinese production of magnesium oxide, the Report informs the Court that "[a]bundant magnesite deposits and inexpensive processing have provided Chinese producers with a competitive price advantage relative to other exporters of magnesite products." Id. at 7 (relying exclusively on CEH for this sweeping economic conclusion). This statement is followed by a conclusion that "[d]emand for Chinese magnesia has been driven by China's domestic steel manufacturing industry." Id.

(v) With that, the Report repeats, in a purely conclusory fashion, that "the injury to [P]laintiffs [78] arises because they purchased Chinese magnesite at prices higher than they would have paid but for the [D]efendants' misconduct," and proceeds to "[t]he calculation of [Plaintiffs'] damages arising from [Defendants'] conspiracy to fix prices." Id. at 8.

(vi) Lamb begins such calculation by stating that the base damages (that is, prior to trebling) are equal to "[t]he difference between the actual . . . prices [paid to unspecified Chinese sellers of magnesium oxide by unspecified buyers of the same] and the prices that would have prevailed [presumably, in the entire market of Chinese domestic and exported [*352] magnesium oxide] but for [Defendants'] misconduct"; he calls such difference "overcharge." Id.

(vii) Then, the Report states that, "[t]o calculate the overcharge in this matter, [Lamb] use[d] the method known as a benchmark." [27] Id. at 9. Specifically, Lamb asserted that he used data related to sale of Chinese magnesite (which, the Court trusts, was data reflecting Chinese sales of magnesium oxide rather than crude magnesite) during the period from 1995 to 2000 in order to compare that data to -- presumably corresponding -- data as to the sale of Chinese magnesium oxide during the period [79] from 2000 to the date of execution of the Report (that is, September 27, 2007). [28] See id. at 9, 18.

(viii) Next, the Report acknowledges that "[p]rices on [magnesium oxide] depend on many factors [and,] if any of these market factors also vary between the [after-2000] and the [1995-to-2000] period[s], then movements of these

---

[26] CEH appears to be the key basis for Lamb's deducements. See Docket Entry No. 28-6 (citing CEH in 18 out of Report's 34 footnotes). [83] However, no reproduction of CEH is attached to the Report, and the Court's efforts to locate CEH in a printed version yielded no success. The Court, however, located a website stating that it is a "product review" titled "Magnesium Oxide and Other Magnesium Chemicals"; it is, apparently, authored by "Stefan Schlag and Kenji Fujita and James Glauser" of SRI Consulting. See <<http://www.sriconsulting.com/CEH/Public/Reports/747.2000/>>. The Court, therefore, presumes that Lamb referred to this online source as CEH. The CEH located by the Court online has the table of contents which, while listing 237 sections and subsections, omits such features as "list of sources" and/or "bibliography," thus leaving the Court to wonder whether CEH was based on data that could be deemed reliable for the purposes of legal proceedings.

[27] Although Lamb's reference to "a benchmark" does not provide the Court with any clarification as to the actual methodology intended to be employed by Lamb (i.e., the Report only asserts that "[t]he benchmark methodology is an accepted method for calculating damages in the field of antitrust economies" and cites a 1967 article by Robert B. Bergstrom titled "The Role of the [84] Expert in Proving and Disproving Damages in Antitrust Claims"), the Court presumes that the Report intended to use econometric benchmark analysis, a tool common in business management which is effectively a comparison of two or more sets of corresponding data. See, e.g., Robert C. Camp, Benchmarking: The Search for Industry Best Practices That Lead to Superior Performance (2006) (detailing the methodology and applications of the tool).

[28] Lamb, apparently, used the year 2000 as a breakpoint because -- relying on the Original Complaint -- he took it as a fact that pre-2000 sales of Chinese magnesium oxide were necessarily unaffected by Defendants' collusive activities but these sales became necessarily affected by Defendants' alleged conspiracy in 2000.

other factors should be taken into account when determining the overcharge," id. at 10, i.e., that data must be adjusted.

(ix) Lamb states that, in order to perform such adjustment, he "employed a statistical technique known as multiple regression analysis." [29] Id. at 10. Since Lamb's conclusions are based on multiple regression analysis, his Report cannot be intelligibly discussed without at least a brief clarification as to the gist of the statistical tool he employed. [30] The [*353] premise underlying regression analysis is a recognition that there are many situations in life where one quantity (called the "independent variable") might have an effect on another quantity (called the "dependent variable"); to illustrate, there might be a relation between disposable personal income and consumption spending. [31] If the relationship between these two variables is figured out, [80] then the changes of the dependent variable can be predicted if the changes of the independent variable are known or can be predicted. In order to start the analysis, pools of known observations of the quantities at issue have to be collected: in the aforesaid example, it would be the population's disposable income and its spending, e.g., for each year during the period 1989-2009. Once these pools of data are collected, they are usually presented in a visually meaningful form on an xy diagram (so presented, the data looks like a cloud of scattered points in xy axes, called a "scatterplot"), where all dependant variable data (in this example, spending) is y values, and all independent variable data (disposable income) is x values: so each year is reflected on the diagram by a point having its own x and y values. The overall "trend" of the scatterplot is the trend in the income/spending relationship during 1989-2009; this "trend" can be expressed by a straight line which best represents all the points in the graph. This line, in turn, is called the "regression line," and this type of analysis is called regression analysis. Since, geometrically, the regression line can be defined in terms [81] of its slope "m" and its vertical intercept "b" (where the line crosses the y axis), the mathematical equation of the line can be written as y = m*x* + b, [32] although both "m" and "b" typically carry caret symbol ("") and, thus, are referred to as "m-hat" and "b-hat." The caret symbol stresses that both "m" and "b" are merely estimated, and that any regression model comes with an important warning that "the mere fact that there is a strong association between two variables does not indicate there is a cause and effect relationship between them." Easy Statistics at 270-72 (providing detailed examples, diagrams and calculations illustrating the same). These principles equally

---

[29] Usually, benchmark analysis is used as an alternative to -- rather than in conjunction -- with regression analysis. See, e.g., In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 313 (3d Cir. 2008) ("[Plaintiffs' expert] identified two 'potential approaches' to estimating damages, [either]: (1) benchmark analysis, which would compare actual prices during the alleged conspiracy with prices that existed before the [alleged conspiracy]; [85] and [the second option is] (2) regression analysis, through which it 'may be possible . . . to estimate the relationship between price of [the product allegedly affected by collusive activities] and the various market forces that influence prices, including demand and supply variables.' [Either one of] these methods, according to [Plaintiffs' expert], could be used to estimate the prices plaintiffs would have faced but for the conspiracy"). However, since a benchmark analysis suggested by Lamb seemingly envisioned a comparison of the overall trends in Chinese sales of magnesium oxide during the pre-alleged-conspiracy and the during-alleged-conspiracy periods, and regression analysis was seemingly meant only to adjust the during-alleged-conspiracy trend by removing effects of all conspiracy-unrelated developments that were absent during the pre-alleged-conspiracy period, the Court finds the possibility of joint utilization of these two methods not unreasonable, although the Court is left to wonder how these generic Chinese trends show intent of Defendants.

[30] The Court's overview of regression analysis is based on Larry Wasserman, All [86] of Statistics: A Concise Course in Statistical Inference (Springer 2004) ("All Statistics"); Statistics, Super Review (Research and Educ. Assoc., M. Fogiel, Chief Editor 2004); Douglas Downing, Jeffrey Clark, Business Statistics (Barron's 4th ed. 2003) ("Business Statistics"); Douglas Downing, Jeffrey Clark, Statistics The Easy Way (Barron's 3rd ed., 1997) ("Easy Statistics").

[31] Such relationship between two variables give base to so-called "simple regression."

[32] Not all simple relationships could be reduced to y = m*x* + b. For instance, if the true relationship between x and y is defined by equation y = cd<x>, where both c and d are two unknown constants, the solution is obtained through the concept of logarithm. (An explanation of what is logarithm is best given by the question, "to what power should we raise 2 to get 128?" and its answer "7," because 2<7> = 128, so the logarithm, i.e., log[2] 128, is "7"). Applying common logarithms to the equation y = cd<x>, we can rewrite it as log y = log d * x + log c, i.e., as a formula resembling the familiar y = mx + b. Thus, logarithms are frequently used in regression analysis.

apply to simple regression (dealing with just two variables, as y and x) and to multiple regression; indeed, "multiple regression" merely means that there is more than just one independent variable "x," for example, a multiple regression equation could be y[i] = b[1]x[i1] + b[2]x[i2] + b[3] + e[i]. If the constants are expressed in numbers, such model might look, for instance, as:

y = 1.8016x[1] + 6.0658x[2] + 7.5546

(.2202) (.1422) (3.2556)

where 1.8016 is the coefficient for x[i], 6.0658 is the coefficient for x[2], [82] 7.5546 is the coefficient for the constant term, and the parenthetical numbers underneath [*354] represent corresponding standard errors. A division of each coefficient value by its corresponding standard error results in a measure called "t-statistic," it is used to test hypotheses about the value of the coefficient. [33]

Having so reviewed the very basic points of regression analysis, the Court now returns to its discussion of Lamb's regression-related statements.

(x) Lamb begins by explaining the meanings of the terms "dependant variable" and "independent variables"; he uses alternative terms for the latter (i.e., "explanatory variables" or "regressors"). See Docket Entry No. 28-6, at 10. Lamb also clarifies that, for the purposes of his analysis, "the price of Chinese magnesite is the dependent variable" (that is, y), but does not state whether his observations included prices charged only with regard to Chinese exportation or with regard to domestic Chinese prices, or United States importation (which leads to Court to conclude that these prices were the same, and all buyers were treated equally regardless of their origin). See id. Moreover, the Report [88] does not provide the Court with any observations utilized by Lamb for his calculations: the Report simply invites the Court to trust Lamb that these pools of data were properly collected, by stating as follows:

> [In order to obtain a pool of observations as to the this "price," Lamb utilized] prices obtained from Industrial Minerals, a market research firm. [34] The data [Lamb] used include[d] monthly prices for three common grades of Chinese dead-burned magnesia from July 1994 through July 2007. [[35] Lamb] used these three price series to measure the dependent variable [y] in [his] regression model[. [36] Lamb] believe[d that] these price data provide[d] reliable measures of magnesite prices [because] Industrial Minerals is cited as a source of industry information by numerous[, although unspecified] experts on magnesite, [and in] citations in Deborah A. Kramer, "Magnesium Compounds" review in 2006 Minerals Yearbook, published by United States Geological Survey in June 2007. In addition, [Lamb] compared the prices [he used as his pool of y observations] to other publicly available sources [37] and found them to be consistent [in an unspecified fashion] with prices for Chinese

---

[33] A calculation of multiple regression output also gives an R<2> [87] value which is called the coefficient of multiple determination. The value of R<2> is always between 0 and 1, it measures the percent variation in the dependent variable y that can be explained by the regression. The higher R<2>, the more it means that the regression does a good job accounting for the variation in y through variations in x[1] and x[2].

[34] The Court's own efforts to locate "Industrial Minerals, a market research firm" did not yield any success; the Court was merely able to locate a British-based online magazine titled "Industrial Minerals" at <<http://www.mineralnet.co.uk/>>.

[35] I.e., Lamb, seemingly, took observations corresponding to 156 periods, since the 13 years (from 1994 to 2007), multiplied by 12 months per year, yield 156 monthly intervals.

[36] See infra sub-paragraph (xiii) of this subsection for a discussion of the problems associated with the "three panels," the phrase which, it seems, might have been used by Lamb to refer to the very same data that Lamb alternatively designated as his "three price series."

[37] However, the sole "other publicly available" source named by Lamb is the very same CEH, see Docket Entry No. 28-6, at 11, n. 30, the reliability of which the Court cannot determine. See supra note 26 of this Opinion.

magnesite products [89] sold in the United States (which Lamb, presumably, obtained from Industrial Minerals, "a market research firm"].

[*355] Id. at 11 and n. 29 (footnoted text incorporated).

(xi) With that, Lamb states that he selected the total of six independent variables, namely:

(a) two variables that Lamb believed affected [90] the demand factor as to magnesite-based products (these variables are "growth of Chinese steel production" and "growth in Chinese cement production");
(b) two variables that Lamb associated with Chinese export-related "price" advantage (these variables are: (a) the exchange rate between United States Dollar and Chinese Yuan; and (b) an assessment of the value of Yuan against the basket of international currencies Lamb titled "World Foreign Exchange Rate"); [38] and

(c) two variables that Lamb associated with the costs of production and supply. These variables included: (1) cost of crude oil (since -- for the reasons not entirely clear to this Court -- Lamb presumed that the process of heating magnesite into magnesium oxide necessarily requires oil rather than natural gas, coal or other sources of energy [39]); and (2) Chinese domestic inflation (since Lamb [*356] believed that the overall increase in Chinese consumer prices would drive up prices charged for exported natural resources). See id. at 11-13, 15. [40]

(xii) The Report does not share with the Court Lamb's regression equation. Rather, short-cutting through all stages of his regression analysis, Lamb simply informs the Court that he reached certain results and organized some of these results into a table ("Lamb's Regression Result"), where: (1) estimates of variables were converted to their natural logarithms; (2) R<2> statistics show that Lamb's regression model "explains 87 percent of [94] the

---

[38] The Court is not familiar with the concept of "World Foreign Exchange Rate," and the Report does not enlighten the Court as to the nature of this tool. However, in light of Lamb's mentioning [91] of the International Monetary Fund ("IMF") in connection with this tool, the Court presumes that Lamb aimed to refer to the Special Drawing Rights ("SDRs"). An SDR (which is a unit of account created by the IMF) is a weighted sum of contributions of four major currencies, and it is adjusted every five years (for instance, for the period of 2006-2010, one SDR is the sum of 0.632 US dollars, 0.41 euro, 18.4 Japanese yen and 0.0903 pound sterling, while for the period 2001-2005 it was 0.577 US dollars, 0.426 euro, 21 Japanese yen and 0.0984 pound sterling). See <<http://www.imf.org/external/fin.htm>> (IMF-Finances website, left column, SDR-rate section). Since the Dollar is already included in the SDR, utilization of both Yuan-Dollar and Yuan-SDR comparisons invited "double counting" into Lamb's assessment of his model's reliability. And, since the model subdivided data by 2000-2003 and 2003-2007 sub-periods, see Docket Entry No. 28-6, at 15, the Court is unclear as to how the 2005 change in SDR value and de-pegging of the Yuan from the Dollar were factored in the 2003-2007 sub-period.

[39] Compare <<http://www.springerlink.com/content/h13p454817437337/fulltext.pdf?page=1>> (reproducing an [92] article showing that the USSR magnesium oxide production switched from oil to natural gas thirty years ago, i.e., in 1969, finding natural gas a more viable and efficient source of energy for the purposes of magnesium oxide production). In view of: (a) apparent viability of non-oil heating of magnesite into magnesium oxide; (b) relative scarcity of Chinese oil in comparison with its coal, see, e.g., <<http://www.eia.doe.gov/emeu/cabs/China/Background.html>> and <<http://www.eia.doe.gov/emeu/cabs/China/Oil.html>> (showing that, during the period at issue, China has become the third largest world importer of oil due to the lag between her domestic production and domestic consumption, while -- at the same time, China remained the world's largest producer and consumer of coal); and (c) substantial difference in price increases experienced by oil, coal and natural gas during the first decade of the XXI century, that is, the period at issue, see <<http://tonto.eia.doe.gov/cfapps/STEO_
Query/steotables.cfm?tableNumber=8&periodType=Annual&startYear=2000&endYear=2009&startMonthChanged=false&startQuarterChanged=false&endMonthChanged=false&endQuarterChanged=false&noScroll=true&loadAction=Apply+Changes>> [93] (showing that power generation fuel costs, in dollars per million Btu, rose from 2000 to 2009 by $ 2.22 as to coal, by $ 4.57 as to natural gas, and by at least $ 9.37 as to oil), Lamb's utilization of oil prices as a regressor is unclear. Compare Docket Entry No. 77-1, at 70, and Docket Entry No. 77-3, at 11 (Plaintiffs' exhibits attached to the Amended Complaint; the exhibit suggests that coal was the source of heating involved in all relevant technical processes, and the price of coal kept soaring).

[40] Although, presumably, Lamb should have collected pools of monthly observations for each of these six variables, the Report neither provides the Court with actual pools of these observations nor even states where the Court could locate them on its own.

variation in the dependent variable" (hence, leaving 13% unexplained); and (3) t-statistics is provided as a measure of what is "statistically significant." [41] Id. at 14-15.

Specifically, Lamb's Regression Result table is as follows:

5*Chinese Magnesite
Regression Model Results

Observations	429	Wald Statistic	991.35
Panels	3	Prob. > |Wald|	0.00
Time Periods	143	OLS R-Squared	0.86
Explanatory Variables [1]	Coefficient Estimate	Standard Error	Statistical t-Statistic	Significance [2]
(1) Growth in Chinese Production	0.169	0.050	3.380	***
(2) Growth in Chinese Cement Production	0.052	0.024	2.150	**
(3) Chinese Consumer Price Inflation	0.582	0.224	2.590	***
(4) Crude Oil Price
Contemporaneous	0.037	0.022	1.650	**
1 Month Lag	0.007	0.022	0.330
Sum of Coefficients	0.044	0.022	2.050	**
(5) Chinese Yuan/USD Foreign Exchange Rate	-1.076	0.449	-2.400	***
(6) Chinese Yuan World Foreign Exchange Rate
Exchange	-0.192	0.163	-1.180
1 Month Lag	0.256	0.1/5	1.460	*
2 Month Lag	-0.250	0 165	-1.520	*
3 Month Lag	0.055	0.158	0.350
4 Month Lag	-0.155	0.159	-0.970
5 Month Lag	-0.043	0.157	-0.270
6 Month Lag	-0.515	0.144	-3.570	***
Sum of Coefficients	-0.844	0.206	-4.110	***
(7) Collusion

[41] "Significance" is a statistical term informing the reader about how certain is the analyst that a relationship between the variable actually exists, i.e., that the result is unlikely to occur by chance. See Business Statistics at 287. However, "unfortunate stereotypes often arise from the use of the word significant in statistical studies. For example, studies often find statistically significant differences in certain abilities between men and women, but the variation in ability within each sex is much greater than the variation between the means of the two sexes. It would be wrong to use the result of such a study to prejudge the ability of any particular individual." Id. at 288.

[1] Fixed [95] effects and quarterly seasonal indicator variables are incorporated in the model but not reported.

[2] Singled Taied Statistical Significance Levels:  < 1% significance level, " < 5% significance level," < 10% significance level.

5*Chinese Magnesite
Regression Model Results

Observations	429	Wald Statistic	991.35
Panels	3	Prob. > |Wald|	0.00
Time Periods	143	OLS R-Squared	0.86
Explanatory	Coefficient	Standard	Statistical
Variables [1]	Estimate	Error	t-Statistic	Significance [2]
Overcharges [3]
2000-2003	0.040	0.017	2.330	***
2004-2007	0.196	0 025	7.940	***

Notes:

Id. at 14-15.

(xiii) Even a superficial review of the table reveals that Lamb's Regression Result and the body of the Report are incongruent. For instance, while Lamb stated that his observations involved 156 periods, see supra, note 35 of this Opinion, the table somehow states that there [*357] were only 143 periods. And while there appears to be a correlation between these 143 periods, three "panels" and 439 "observations" (since 143 x 3 = 429), the Court is left to guess which "panels" Lamb had in mind, since he allegedly studied six independent variables and should have, at least theoretically, obtained six price series. [42] Similarly, the Court is left to guess a number of other aspects of Lamb's model and calculations. [43]

(xiv) The main problem with Lamb's Regression Result, however, seems to be not the string of the aforesaid incongruences and ambiguities, but the inexplicable appearance of two new regressors, called "Collusion Overcharges" ("CO"). Indeed, while the Report asserts -- although without providing the Court with either actual data or citations to the sources of such data -- that Lamb took observations of magnesite prices, steel production, [98] cement production, oil prices, inflation of the Yuan and fluctuations in its exchange rate, the Report at no

---

[3] Collusion period is April 2000 to Present.

[42] Since Lamb also referred to "three price series," see Docket Entry No. 28-6, at 11, the Court cannot exclude the possibility that Lamb's "three panels" and "three time series" are the same, that they [96] have nothing to do with sets of data collected with regard to Lamb's six independent variables, and that they were intended, for instance, to refer to three spans of time: 1995-2000, 2000-2003 and 2004-2007. However: (a) lack of any statements with regard to 1995-2000 span in Lamb's Regression Result renders this possibility unlikely; and (b) the 1995-2000 span would yield 48 monthly observations, hence raising the Court-calculated 156 monthly periods, see supra note 35 of this Opinion, to 204 (i.e., the sum of 156 and 48), thus rendering the statement included in Lamb's Regression Result that Lamb collected observations with regard to 143 periods even more incomprehensible.

[43] E.g., the table does not explain how R<2> of 0.87 asserted in the Report became R<2> of 0.86 in the table, leaving another percent of price variation unexplained. Analogously, no reason is provided as to the relevance or even need for "Wald Statistic," which the Court presumes to be "Wald test," a parametric test typically substituted by the likelihood-ratio test (since the Wald test can give different answers to the same question, depending on how the question is phrased). See All Statistics at 153-54. In the [97] same vein, the Court is left to guess why the Report stresses that t-statistics is used to determine statistical significance, if Lamb's Regression Result provides a totally different column, titled "Statistical Significance," which seemingly aims to provide the same assessment but on the grounds of what seems to be the so-called one-tailed test (applicable only if all studied relationships fell entirely within one tail of the distribution, which is unclear if it were actually true in this matter). Simply put, since Lamb did not provide the Court with his regression equation and pools of data, the Court has no opportunity to determine the validity of Lamb's calculative decisions, e.g., his resort to logarithms, or his results, or his end conclusions.

point asserts that Lamb took -- or even could have taken -- any actual observations of these Collusion Overcharges. Rather, Lamb asserts that,

> [because] Plaintiffs allege that the operation of the cartel resulted in higher prices for magnesite products in the U.S. . . . [Lamb] include[d two] variables [that he deemed to be] "indicator variables" for the period April 2000 through 2003 and for the period from 2004 forward . . . to account for the possibility that the alleged ["C]artel["] may have become more effective over time.

Docket Entry No. 28-6, at 13-14.

(xv) The statement that a certain variable is binary (also referred to as "dummy variable" or by the term preferred by Lamb, i.e., "indicator variable") merely establishes that this dummy variable is presumed to be "1" if a certain condition is true and "0" if that condition is false. See Business Statistics at 394-95; accord Docket Entry No. 28-6, at 14 [*358] (seemingly trying to express the same by stating that "[s]uch indicator variables take the value of one during the period in question and zero elsewhere"). "Dummy variables," [99] however, are artificially created variables utilized with a realization that, sometimes, a certain set of factors that affects the dependent variable might not be not quantitative (i.e., while being known as present during the events statistically analyzed, it cannot be given by numbers); the coefficient of such dummy variable indicates how much effect this particular set of unquantifiable factors that the variable expresses had on the constant terms in the regression. See Business Statistics at 394-95. [44]

