Counsel: [**1] Thomas A. Zummo, Plaintiff, Pro se, Chicago, IL.

For Department of Business Affairs And Consumer Protection Public Vehicle Operations Division, Defendant:
Thomas P. McNulty, LEAD ATTORNEY, City of Chicago Department of Law, Constitutional Law and Commercial Litigation, Chicago, IL; Jordan Alexander Rosen, City of Chicago Law Department, Chicago, IL.

Judges: Honorable Edmond E. Chang, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Edmond E. Chang

[*999] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Thomas A. Zummo was a taxicab driver. He brought this pro se lawsuit, alleging that the City of Chicago<sup>1</sup> has denied him constitutional rights, violated antitrust laws, and violated various state laws by failing to regulate what a City ordinance calls "Transportation Network Providers" (such as Uber and Lyft) in the same way as taxicabs.<sup>2</sup> R. 10, Compl.<sup>3</sup> He further [*1000] alleges that by impounding his car and failing to allow him to contest fines related to his expired taxicab license and an unpaid water bill, the City denied him due process and committed extortion. Id. at 10, 12. The City moves to stay the case pending resolution of charges that Zummo is facing in the Department of Administrative Hearings, arguing that Younger abstention principles bar the Court from [**2] considering Zummo's claims. R. 20, Def. Mot. Dismiss. In the alternative, the City moves to dismiss the Complaint for failure to adequately state a claim under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). Id. For the following reasons, the City's motion to stay is granted in part and denied in part, and the motion to dismiss is granted as to all claims.

I. Background

For purposes of this motion, the Court accepts as true the allegations in the Complaint. Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 94, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 \(2007\). Zummo has been a taxi driver in Chicago for 32 years. Compl. at 1. For some 20 years, he owned a Chicago taxi medallion, which allowed him to operate his own car as a taxicab under Chicago's municipal regulations. Id. at 13. About three years before filing the Complaint in this case, Zummo paid a City department, known as the Business Affairs and Consumer Protection Public Vehicle Operations Division, a $1,200 medallion fee and a $1,000 tax to operate his taxi for the following two years. Id. at 7. He paid this medallion fee expecting only to compete with 7,000 licensed taxicabs and 300 licensed limos in the City of Chicago. Id. Since becoming a driver, Zummo has driven seven days a week to afford maintaining his taxi medallion. Id. at 8.

Zummo alleges that, in about early 2014, the Business [**3] Affairs Division conspired to commit fraud by allowing "Transportation Network Providers" (known by their acronym, TNPs) to provide ridesharing services within Chicago without requiring them to comply with the same regulations as taxicabs. Compl. at 6, 8; see also MCC § 9-115 et seq. (legislation regulating TNPs enacted in May 2014). Zummo "mistakenly assumed" that the City would "prohibit[] unlicensed non-public commercial vehicles" to operate in Chicago. Compl. at 9. Because of this "two-tiered system" of regulation of the transportation industry, Zummo alleges that he has been unable to make money as a taxi driver, and as a result, has suffered financial problems. Id. at 7, 10. According to Zummo, because it failed to protect his investments in his medallion, the Business Affairs Division forced him into involuntary default on his debts and foreclosure of both his home and his taxicab. Id. at 10.

Zummo claims that by avoiding the regulation of TNPs at the expense of the taxicab industry, the City has denied him due process and engaged in restraint of trade and tortious interference. Compl. at 9, 30. Zummo also brings a claim against the City for promissory estoppel based on: (1) his understanding that only a limited [**4] number of taxicabs would be driving in Chicago; (2) his financial investment in his medallion; and (3) the City's issuance of only minimal regulation in allowing TNPs to enter the market. Id. at 31. Finally, Zummo alleges that the City engaged in deceptive practices by allowing "unlicensed vehicles" to drive in Chicago and "br[e]aking of regulations." Id. at 9, 24, 31.

In late September 2017, Zummo's taxicab was impounded because he was driving [*1001] with an allegedly expired license and medallion.<sup>4</sup> Compl. at 10. Zummo alleges that the Business Affairs Division impounded his car without giving him an opportunity to contest the impoundment, thus denying him due process. Id. at 11. The Department of Administrative Hearings then issued multiple Administrative Notices of Violation of the municipal code to Zummo, including engaging in consumer fraud, unfair methods of competition or deceptive practices in violation of MCC § 2-25-090(a), and driving a taxicab without a license in violation of MCC § 9-112-020 and MCC § 9-112-260. R. 21, Def. Br. Exh. B.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Citations to the docket are indicated by "R." followed by the docket entry and page number. Zummo has attached numerous materials and addendums to his Complaint. For the sake of clarity, the Court will refer to all materials submitted under docket entry 10 as the Complaint, citing page numbers in the order that materials appear in the docket entry.

<sup>4</sup> At one point in the Complaint, Zummo seems to allege that his medallion and license did not expire before the end of 2017. Compl. at 11-12. ("I knew I could no longer drive my taxicab after December 31st, 2017."). But later in the Complaint, Zummo seems to concede that his license and medallion had expired. Id. at 26 ("The fine/citation may have applied technically, but the impoundment of my vehicle was extremely excessive."). Ultimately, whether or not Zummo pleads that the license and medallion were expired at the time his car was impounded does not matter because hearing notices attached to the City's filings demonstrate that Zummo participated in a hearing where he could contest the matter. Def. Second Reply Exh. A.

Around the same time, the City collected on a water bill that Zummo did not pay. Compl. at 10. By denying him a chance to contest the basis of the water bill, Zummo alleges, the City denied him due process and committed extortion. [**5] Id. Although Zummo is currently paying the water bill in monthly installments under a payment plan, he alleges that the City is denying him due process by refusing to reinstate his now-expired license and medallion without letting him contest the bill and other administrative fines (discussed below) until they are paid in full. Id.

On November 7, 2017, the Department of Administrative Hearings entered a default judgment against Zummo, ordering him to pay $10,040 in fines. Compl. at 20. In January 2018, the Department vacated the default judgment and granted a motion to continue, setting a hearing date of March 1, 2018. Def. Br. Exh. C. On that date, the Department granted a continuance of the hearing, setting another hearing date in April 2018. Def. Br. Exh. B. The latest filing in this federal case shows that, on June 13, 2018, the administrative hearing was continued to July 25, 2018. R. 31, Def. Second Reply Exh. A.<sup>6</sup> Neither side has provided a further update on the administrative proceedings.

II. Standard of Review

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8\(a\)\(2\), a complaint generally need only include "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). This short and plain statement [**6] must "give the defendant fair notice of what the ... claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." [Bell Atl. Corp. v. The Seventh Circuit has explained that this rule "reflects a liberal notice pleading regime, which is intended to 'focus litigation on the [*1002] merits of a claim' rather than on technicalities that might keep plaintiffs out of court." ## III. Analysis

A. Younger Abstention

Based on Younger abstention, Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 41, 91 S. Ct. 746, 27 L. Ed. 2d 669 \(1971\), the City first moves to stay this case pending resolution of the administrative proceedings against Zummo. Under Younger, federal courts must abstain from deciding federal constitutional issues when those issues can be decided in ongoing [**7] state criminal proceedings. Id. at 41. In a case known as Middlesex County, the Supreme Court expanded this abstention doctrine to apply to civil proceedings when a plaintiff is subject to (1) ongoing state proceedings, (2) which implicate important state interests, and (3) which provide the plaintiff with an opportunity to raise constitutional challenges. Middlesex Cty. Ethics Comm. v. Garden State Bar Ass'n, 457 U.S. 423, 432, 102 S. Ct. 2515, 73 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1982); see also Forty One News, Inc. v. Cty. of Lake, 491 F.3d 662, 666 (7th Cir. 2007). But the Supreme Court has cautioned that the application of Younger based on an underlying civil enforcement proceeding is the "exception, not the rule," holding that Younger only applies to civil proceedings when they are sufficiently criminal in nature. Sprint Communs., Inc. v. Jacobs, 571 U.S. 69, 81-82, 134 S. Ct. 584, 187 L. Ed. 2d 505 (2013) (cleaned up).<sup>7</sup>

<sup>5</sup> The Court may take judicial notice of the Department of Administrative Hearings docket and administrative orders as they are matters of public record. See Milwaukee Police Ass'n v. Flynn, 863 F.3d 636, 640 \(7th Cir. 2017\).

1. Two-Tiered System

The City argues that Younger abstention is appropriate for Zummo's claims arising out of the "two-tiered" system of regulation because the Middlesex County test is satisfied. Def. Br. at 4. Younger abstention, however, does not apply to every case in which there is a state court proceeding case that simply touches on the same subject matter. See Sprint Commc'ns, 571 U.S. at 72. When the issues in the federal suit are substantially different from the issues in the state proceedings and the relief requested in federal court would not unduly interfere [**8] with the state proceedings, Younger abstention is not warranted. See American Federation of State, County & Municipal Employees v. Tristano, 898 F.2d 1302, 1305 (7th Cir. 1990) (holding comity and federalism concerns underlying Younger doctrine inapplicable where state arbitration proceedings relating to collective bargaining agreement were substantially different from constitutional challenge to a drug abuse program).

[*1003] Zummo's claim that a "two-tiered system" of regulation—one that applies to taxicab drivers but not TNPs—deprives him of due process is not sufficiently related to his administrative proceedings to trigger Younger abstention. The subject of the administrative proceedings—that is, driving a taxicab with an expired taxicab license and medallion—has very little to do with the allegedly disparate application of municipal regulations to taxicab drivers. What's more, the relief that Zummo is seeking, namely, monetary damages, would do little to interfere with the administrative proceedings. Younger thus does not require this Court to abstain from addressing the merits of Zummo's claims as to the "two-tiered system" of regulation.

2. Impoundment, Fines, and Penalties

Zummo also claims that he was denied due process because he allegedly could not contest the impoundment of his taxicab [**9] and "fines and penalties ... for the lapse of expired licensing." Compl. at 11. On this claim, however, the case for Younger abstention is much stronger: the impoundment of Zummo's car and the penalties arising from his expired license are the subject of administrative proceedings, see Def. Br. Exh. B, so adjudicating this claim in federal court while state proceedings are still pending poses federalism and comity concerns, Tristano. 898 F.2d at 1305. Younger abstention applies to this claim if Zummo is subject to (1) ongoing state proceedings, (2) which implicate important state interests, and (3) provide him with an opportunity to raise these constitutional challenges. Middlesex Cty., 457 U.S. at 432. On the first factor, Zummo is subject to ongoing state proceedings. As of the date the last brief was filed in this case, Zummo's next administrative hearing was scheduled on July 25, 2018. Def. Second Reply Exh. A.

The second factor—the importance of the state interests—also weighs in favor of abstention. The City argues that its interests are important because "they pertain to, inter alia, the operation of a taxicab in Chicago without a valid license; misrepresentations of material fact regarding licensure; and unfair methods of competition [**10] by omitting facts about licensure." Def. Br. at 4. Although the City's argument is expressed at a high level of generality, a detailed march through the pertinent inquiry, as required by the Supreme Court, shows that the government's interests are indeed important. In Middlesex County, the Supreme Court looked to how similar the administrative enforcement proceeding was to a criminal proceeding: "the importance of the state interest may be demonstrated by the fact that the noncriminal proceedings bear a close relationship to proceedings criminal in nature." 457 U.S. at 432. Later, in Sprint Communications, the Supreme Court emphasized that, for Younger abstention to apply, proceedings must be "quasi-criminal," lest Younger apply too broadly to almost all state proceedings. 571 U.S. at 81. In assessing whether an enforcement proceeding is quasi-criminal, courts look to see whether the proceeding shares three specific features of criminal prosecutions: (1) the action was initiated by the State in its sovereign capacity; (2) the action involves sanctions against the federal plaintiff for some wrongful act; and (3) the action commonly involves an investigation, often culminating in formal charges. Id. at 79-80.

The administrative [**11] proceeding against Zummo is sufficiently "quasi-criminal" for Younger abstention to apply. First, one way that impoundment and licensing proceedings are initiated by the state are by police officers, who may have taxicabs towed when the officers have probable [*1004] cause to believe that the owner of the car is driving without a license. See MCC § 9-112-640(b). Unlike proceedings in which an individual is seeking a license, for example, the proceeding at issue here begins with a police officer issuing a citation. Cf. Bolton v. Bryant, 71 F. Supp. 3d 802, 815 \(N.D. Ill. 2014\) (holding Younger abstention did not apply in a proceeding challenging denial of a gun license because, among other things, licensee initiated the proceeding). Second, if the government prevails in the enforcement proceeding, the proceeding would end with sanctions against Zummo for misconduct. The City charges that Zummo made fraudulent misrepresentations, in violation of MCC § 9-112-390, which is equivalent to the crime of fraud crime under state law, see, e.g., 720 ILCS 5/17-1\(A\)\(3\) (a person commits the crime of deceptive practices when, with the intent to defraud, he "knowingly makes a false or deceptive statement addressed to the public for the purpose of promoting the sale of property or services"). The proceeding would end [**12] with a fine of up to $10,000 if Zummo is found to have violated the municipal code. See MCC § 2-14-076(l), MCC § 2-25-090(a), (f). And, third, although the municipal code does not require a formal investigation into unlicensed taxicabs, the Municipal Code directs police officers to seize and impound unlicensed taxicabs on probable cause. MCC § 9-112-640(b). This is akin to the general approach for criminal offenses: probable cause is needed for an arrest, so by definition the officer must conduct some investigation in order to establish it. Indeed, one of the Municipal Code provisions that Zummo is charged with violating—revocation of license on grounds of fraud—authorizes the Business Affairs Division to revoke the taxicab license "after investigation and hearing." MCC § 9-112-390. Plus, the administrative proceedings have provided formal notice of the violations—in other words, charges—to Zummo. Under Sprint Communications, the administrative proceedings against Zummo are quasi-criminal in nature, so the government's interests are important. 571 U.S. at 81.

The final question under Middlesex County is whether Zummo has an opportunity to raise federal constitutional challenges in the administrative proceedings. It is enough that constitutional claims may be raised [**13] in state-court judicial review of the administrative proceeding. See Ohio Civil Rights Comm'n v. Dayton Christian Sch., Inc., 477 U.S. 619, 629, 106 S. Ct. 2718, 91 L. Ed. 2d 512 \(1986\). Although Zummo cannot raise his federal constitutional claims in the administrative proceedings, see Hunt v. Daley, 286 Ill. App. 3d 766, 677 N.E.2d 456, 459, 222 Ill. Dec. 253 \(Ill. 1997\); Yellow Cab Co. v. City of Chicago, 938 F. Supp. 500, 502 \(N.D. Ill. 1996\), Illinois state courts have jurisdiction to address constitutional issues on appeal from the administrative proceeding, see Hunt, 286 Ill. App. 3d at 771. So, because Zummo may raise federal constitutional challenges if and when he seeks state judicial review under the Illinois Administrative Review Law, see 735 ILCS 5/3-101 et seq., this factor too has been met.

Because the administrative proceedings against Zummo are ongoing, are sufficiently quasi-criminal in nature to implicate important state interests, and sufficiently address his federal constitutional claims insofar as he may appeal them to a state court, Younger abstention governs. This Court should not intrude on the administrative proceedings as to the impoundment of the car and the allegedly expired license and medallion. Those claims are dismissed without prejudice on Younger abstention grounds.

B. Motion to Dismiss Under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)

1. Due Process

Aside from the claims dismissed under Younger abstention, the City moves to dismiss [*1005] the other claims for failure to adequately state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). Def. Br. at 8. On the [**14] due process claim, Zummo alleges that his due process rights were violated by (1) the City's two-tiered system of regulation of TNPs and taxicabs; and (2) his lack of opportunity to contest the impoundment of his car and certain fines he incurred for driving with an expired taxicab license. Compl. at 30.

a. Two-Tiered System

To the extent that Zummo asserts that the two-tiered system of regulation violates substantive due process, he has failed to state a claim. A substantive due process claim must allege that the government practice is arbitrary or irrational, bearing no relationship to a legitimate governmental interest. See Gen. Auto Serv. Station v. City of Chicago, 526 F.3d 991, 1000 (7th Cir. 2008). A necessary element of a substantive due process claim, however, is the "intrusion upon a cognizable property interest." *Id. at 1002*. The lack of a property interest is thus "fatal" to this type of claim. Id.

The City argues that the Seventh Circuit has already resolved this claim in the City's favor. Def. Br. at 6. In Illinois Transportation Trade Association v. City of Chicago, an association of companies that owned or operated taxicabs or livery vehicles sued the City for, among other things, taking their property without just compensation, depriving them of property [**15] without due process, and promissory estoppel. 134 F. Supp. 3d 1108, 1110, 1111 \(N.D. Ill. 2015\), aff'd in part and rev'd on other grounds, 839 F.3d 594 \(7th Cir. 2016\). The plaintiffs argued that the ordinance regulating TNPs did not impose the same requirements as did the taxi ordinance on important matters as insurance, qualifications, and fares, and thus the City deprived tax drivers of a protected property interest, namely, "the value of the medallion and the exclusive right to operate a licensed taxi." *Id. at 1110, 1111*. The Seventh Circuit rejected this argument, holding that the interest in "[p]roperty" does not include a right to be free from competition," and noting that taxi medallions only authorize drivers to operate taxis, not exclude other drivers from the market. Illinois Transport., 839 F.3d at 596.

This holding applies to Zummo's claim that the two-tiered system of regulation denied him due process. Illinois Transportation rejected the property interest that Zummo is attempting to assert. Just as the plaintiffs in Illinois Transportation argued that allowing TNPs into the market under less stringent regulations deprived them of a property interest, 839 F.3d at 596, Zummo similarly argues that the City deprived him of his investment in the medallion by allowing an unlimited number of TNPs into the market, Compl. [**16] at 9, 30. But Zummo does not have a property interest "in all commercial transportation of persons by automobile in Chicago." III. Transp., 839 F.3d at 597. Because Zummo has not adequately alleged that he has a property interest at stake under the Due Process Clause, the claim based on the two-tier system must be dismissed.

b. Ability to Contest Impoundment, Fines, and Penalties

Zummo further asserts that he was denied the opportunity to contest the impoundment of his car or the fines arising from his administrative proceedings and failure to pay his water bill. Compl. at 10, 11. Although the Court has already held that these claims are subject to Younger abstention, in the alternative, it also holds that Zummo has fallen short of alleging facts sufficient to state a due process claim. To state a procedural due process claim, a plaintiff must allege (1) the deprivation of a protected interest, and (2) insufficient [*1006] procedural protections in effectuating that deprivation. Michalowicz v. Vill. of Bedford Park, 528 F.3d 530, 534 (7th Cir. 2008).

The City deprived Zummo of a constitutionally protected interest—the use of his car. See Gable v. City of Chicago, 296 F.3d 531, 540 (7th Cir. 2002). The deprivation of that interest, however, does not violate the Constitution unless it occurs without due process of law. See id. Zummo contends that his car was taken from [**17] him before he had an opportunity to contest "fines and penalties and reasons of truth for the lapse of expired licensing." Compl. at 11. In essence, it appears that Zummo is arguing that he lacked sufficient procedural protections surrounding the deprivation of his car when it was impounded. See Michalowicz, 528 F.3d at 534.

When a car is impounded, due process requires a post-deprivation proceeding to challenge the wrongful deprivation of the person's vehicle. See Gable, 296 F.3d at 540 \(7th Cir. 2002\); Sutton v. City of Milwaukee, 672 F.2d 644, 646 \(7th Cir. 1982\). The City correctly points out that, under Chicago's municipal code, Zummo has an opportunity to contest his car's impoundment in an administrative hearing. Def. Br. at 2 (citing MCC § 2-14-132). Zummo does not allege any facts describing how the administrative hearing failed to afford him due process.

The question remains, however, of whether Zummo was informed of this opportunity. Due process requires notice to "be reasonably calculated, under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the pendency of the action and [to] afford them an opportunity to present their objections." Towers v. City of Chicago, 173 F.3d 619 \(7th Cir. 1999\) (cleaned up). Chicago's municipal code requires officers to provide notice of a car owner's right to request an impoundment hearing before or at the time the car is towed. [**18] See MCC § 9-112-640(b).

The City argues that, on the day that his taxi was seized, Zummo received a vehicle impoundment report, which gave him notice of his right to an administrative hearing to contest the impoundment. Def Br. at 12; id. Exh. A. At the dismissal-motion stage, however, the Court is limited to the pleadings unless judicial notice is appropriate. See Milwaukee Police Ass'n, 863 F.3d at 640. A vehicle impoundment report prepared by the City of Chicago is not a matter of public record appropriate for judicial notice. See Michon v. Ugarte, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21583, 2017 WL 622236, at \*3 \(N.D. Ill. Feb. 15, 2017\) (collecting cases and holding a police report is not a public record suitable for consideration on a motion to dismiss). So the Court will not consider the report when determining whether Zummo received notice of the impoundment or that he could contest it in an administrative hearing. Even if the Court could take judicial notice of the report, there is nothing on the impoundment report itself that shows that Zummo ever received the report.

In its second reply brief, the City attaches a Department of Administrative Hearing order that shows that "[r]espondent's motion to continue" was granted with respect to the impoundment proceeding. Def. Second Reply Exh. A. This is the kind of public record the Court can consider [**19] when deciding a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion. See Hicks v. Irvin, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39440, 2008 WL 2078000, at \*2 \(N.D. Ill. May 15, 2008\) (collecting cases). Because the administrative record shows that Zummo is currently challenging his impoundment in the administrative proceeding, he did have notice of his right to contest the impoundment. Zummo would not have been able to file a motion to continue in administrative court if he were [*1007] unaware that he could contest the impoundment. In any case, Zummo has not alleged that the City's ordinance gave him inadequate notice or inadequate opportunity to be heard. See, e.g., Hamid v. City of Chicago, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14745, 1999 WL 759423, at \*3 \(N.D. Ill. Sept. 2, 1999\). Because the impoundment of Zummo's car is the subject of ongoing post-deprivation proceedings, he has been afforded all of the process that he is due.

The same is true of the other administrative hearings: the Court may take judicial notice that Zummo is contesting his fines and penalties for driving with an expired license and medallion. Because the Department of Administrative Hearings is currently considering his claims, Zummo cannot claim that the City's procedures denied him due process with respect to his fines. Def. Br. Exhs. B & C. That leaves the water bill, but Zummo is paying it, Compl. at 10, so it is not clear what additional procedures he thinks should have been [**20] given to him. All that Zummo alleges is that the City was "instructed to collect on a water bill ... without [giving him] due process of [his] civil rights to contest these accusations," id., which is just a bare conclusion. Yes, courts must read pro se complaints expansively, but the Court should not need to "fill in all of the blanks in a pro se complaint." Hamlin v. Vaudenberg, 95 F.3d 580, 583 \(7th Cir. 1996\). In sum, Zummo has failed to state a procedural due process claim in all respects.

2. Restraint of Trade

Next, Zummo asserts that the City engaged in "restraint of trade" with respect to its "two-tier system" of regulation, Compl. at 9, but here too he fails to state a claim under federal antitrust law.<sup>8</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act states that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The City correctly argues that, under either a per se or rule of reason analysis of antitrust law, Zummo does not state a claim for restraint of trade.<sup>9</sup>

Some restraints to businesses are unreasonable per se because they almost always tend to restrict competition. See Ohio v. Am. Express Co., 138 S. Ct. 2274, 2283, 201 L. Ed. 2d 678 (2018). Restraints [**21] that are unreasonable [*1008] per se usually only include restraints "imposed by agreement between competitors," or horizontal restraints. Id. at 2283-84 (quoting Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988)). The City's actions are not per se violations of the Sherman Act because the City is not a competitor with Zummo, any other taxicab companies, or any TNPs, and thus cannot impose horizontal restraint to competition.

If a restraint is not per se unreasonable, then the next question is whether it violates the rule of reason. Am. Express Co., 138 S. Ct. at 2284. The rule of reason may be violated by an agreement that has an adverse effect on competition in the relevant market. See Agnew v. NCAA, 683 F.3d 328, 335 (7th Cir. 2012); see also Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553 (stating that § 1 of the Sherman Act only prohibits restraints on trade "effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy") (cleaned up). Although Zummo argues that the City, in "avoiding standing laws and ordinances while unlawfully structuring abr[o]gated new rules at the same time; at the expense and severe harm to the taxicab industry," engaged in unlawful restraint of trade, he alleges no contract, combination, or conspiracy with anyone outside of the City to support his claim. Compl. at 9.

The City correctly points out that it cannot conspire with itself under the intra-corporate conspiracy [**22] doctrine. See Ziglar v. Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. 1843, 1867, 198 L. Ed. 2d 290 (2017) ("[A]n agreement between or among agents of the same legal entity, when the agents act in their official capacities, is not an unlawful conspiracy."); Wright v. Ill. Dep't of Children & Family Servs., 40 F.3d 1492, 1508 (7th Cir. 1994) (holding that intra-corporate conspiracy doctrine applies to governmental entities). Zummo states only that the City engaged in unlawful restraint of trade, naming no other actors involved in this alleged conspiracy. Compl. at 9.

Because Zummo does not claim that the City conspired with any outside entity in creating the two-tiered system of regulation, and the City cannot conspire with itself, he also fails to state an antitrust claim under the rule of reason. Zummo cannot simultaneously argue that the City violated his due process rights by failing to restrict competition and that the City has restrained trade in a manner adverse to him. The rationale behind Illinois Transportation applies to Zummo's restraint of trade claim as well: the taxicab industry does not have special legal protection from the entry of competitors into the market. 839 F.3d at 596. Having stated no per se or rule of reason claim under the Sherman Antitrust Act, he has not stated a sufficient restraint of trade claim to survive the dismissal motion.

<sup>9</sup> The City also argues that it is immune from liability under the state action doctrine. Def. Br. at 10 (citing Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1946)). The Court need not definitively decide this issue because it holds that Zummo does not state a claim on the merits. But it is worth noting that there is some reason to question the City's sovereign immunity defense because no state statute gives the City express authority to regulate TNPs beyond home rule authority. See Campbell v. City of Chicago, 823 F.2d 1182, 1184 (7th Cir. 1987) (holding cities subject to sovereign immunity defense only if (1) the challenged conduct was authorized by the state legislature and (2) if the anticompetitive effects were a foreseeable result of the authorization). Although the City relies on Campbell, where the Illinois legislature gave municipalities the express authority to "regulate cabmen," id., the state has not given the City any "clearly articulated and affirmative state policy" beyond home-rule authority to regulate TNPs. Cnty. Communs Co. v. City of Boulder, Colo., 455 U.S. 40, 51, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982) (holding home-rule authority to be insufficient to qualify as an authorization by the state to engage in conduct that influences competition); Transportation Network Providers Act, 625 ILCS 57/32 (limiting "concurrent exercise by home rule units of powers").

3. State Law [**23] Claims

Zummo also accuses the City of numerous violations of state common law, including extortion, tortious interference, promissory estoppel, and deceptive practices.<sup>10</sup> None of these claims survive the motion to dismiss.

a. Extortion

Zummo claims that by impounding his car and refusing to reinstate his taxi license until he paid his water bill, the City committed extortion. Compl. at 4, 30. Extortion is "a threatening demand made without justification" and involves [\[\*1009\] "the exercise of coercion or an improper influence."](#) Jordan v. Knafel, 355 Ill. App. 3d 534, 823 N.E.2d 1113, 1119, 291 Ill. Dec. 527 \(Ill. 2005\) (cleaned up). In both impounding Zummo's car and refusing to reinstate his license before he paid outstanding bills, the City was enforcing the law. The City impounded Zummo's car under a municipal ordinance requiring that any unlicensed vehicle used to transport passengers for hire is subject to seizure and impoundment, after a police officer saw Zummo driving with an expired license and medallion. MCC § 9-112-640, Compl. at 26. The City was similarly justified in not reinstating Zummo's license before he paid his outstanding water bills because, under the municipal code, "no initial taxi license or renewal shall be issued" if a person owes a debt to the City. MCC §§ 4-4-150(b), 9-112-260,. The City's conduct [\[\*\*24\]](#) was proper and its demands were justified because it was enforcing laws that Zummo violated. So Zummo does not state a claim for extortion.

b. Tortious Interference

Next, Zummo alleges that the City engaged in tortious interference when it failed to regulate TNPs in the same manner as taxicabs. Compl. at 4, 9. Illinois courts recognize both the torts of interference with contractual relations and interference with prospective advantage. See Belden Corp. v. InterNorth, Inc., 90 Ill. App. 3d 547, 413 N.E.2d 98, 101, 45 Ill. Dec. 765 \(Ill. 1980\). Whether Zummo is claiming that the City interfered with a contractual relationship or a prospective economic advantage is unclear, but it does not matter because both versions fail. A claim of tortious interference with a contractual relationship requires the existence of a contract. See Seip v. Rogers Raw Materials Fund, L.P., 408 Ill. App. 3d 434, 948 N.E.2d 628, 638, 350 Ill. Dec. 348 \(Ill. 2011\). Zummo does not allege any facts that allude to the existence of a contract between him and any third-party.

Nor does Zummo state a plausible claim for tortious interference with a prospective economic advantage. A claim for tortious interference with a prospective economic advantage requires a plaintiff's "(1) reasonable expectation of entering into a valid business relationship; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the plaintiff's expectancy; (3) purposeful interference [\[\*\*25\]](#) by the defendant that prevents the plaintiff's legitimate expectancy from ripening into a valid business relationship; and (4) damages to the plaintiff resulting from such interference." Fellhauer v. City of Geneva, 142 Ill. 2d 495, 568 N.E.2d 870, 878, 154 Ill. Dec. 649 \(Ill. 1991\). Although Zummo maintained an expectation that he would only be competing with other licensed taxicab drivers in his profession, he does not claim that he was expecting to enter into a valid business relationship with anyone before the City implemented the two-tier regulatory scheme. Compl. at 7. Likewise, he does not state any facts suggesting that the City knew of that sort of expectancy, that the City purposefully interfered with such a relationship, or that he incurred any damages from such an interference. Zummo does not state a claim for tortious interference.

<sup>10</sup> Zummo has also listed snippets of conclusory allegations in his Complaint that either do not constitute legal causes of action or fall short of factual allegations necessary to state a claim. Compl. at 30-32 (accusing City of "severe intentionally [sic] malicious malfeasance," "entrapment," "economic duress," and causing "financial hardship").

c. Promissory Estoppel

Zummo next asserts that his financial investment in his medallion and his understanding that only a certain number of taxi cabs were permitted to drive in the City amount to a claim of promissory estoppel. Compl. at 4, 31. This claim also fails. To state a claim for promissory estoppel, a plaintiff must adequately allege that "(1) defendant made an unambiguous promise to plaintiff, (2) plaintiff relied on such promise, [**26] (3) plaintiff's reliance was [*1010] expected and foreseeable by defendant[], and (4) plaintiff relied on the promise to [his] detriment." Newton Tractor Sales, Inc. v. Kubota Tractor Corp., 233 Ill. 2d 46, 906 N.E.2d 520, 523-24, 329 Ill. Dec. 322 \(Ill. 2009\).

In Illinois Transportation (the case challenging the two-tiered system), the district court held that plaintiffs—who were pursuing a promissory estoppel claim based on disparate regulations just like Zummo—relied on a taxi ordinance for maintaining and operating a taxi, and suffered a financial detriment because of this reliance. 134 F. Supp. 3d 1108, 1114. The court also held, however, that there was no unambiguous promise by the City not to "alter the number or type of for-hire transportation licenses available in Chicago." Id. Just like the plaintiffs in Illinois Transportation, who did not successfully plead that they relied on an unambiguous promise by the City to refrain from allowing competition in the ridesharing market, Zummo also has not alleged that the City has unambiguously promised him that it would regulate TNPs. Zummo has therefore fallen short of stating a promissory estoppel claim.

d. Deceptive Practices/Consumer Fraud

Finally, Zummo asserts, at multiple spots in the Complaint, that the City engaged in "deceptive practices" or "fraud." Compl. at 4, 11, 24, 31. Under [**27] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\)'s heightened pleading standard, a plaintiff must allege fraud claims with "particularity." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\); see also Squires-Cannon v. Forest Pres. Dist. of Cook Cty., 897 F.3d 797, 805 \(7th Cir. 2018\). Zummo has failed to meet this particularity requirement for both statutory and common law fraud.

The Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practice Act prohibits "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices." 815 ILCS 505/2. A valid claim must allege: (1) a deceptive act or practice by the defendant; (2) the defendant's intent that the plaintiff rely on the deception; (3) that the deception occurred in the course of conduct involving trade or commerce; and (4) actual damage to the plaintiff (5) proximately caused by the deception. Aliano v. Ferriss, 2013 IL App \(1st\) 120242, 988 N.E.2d 168, 176, 370 Ill. Dec. 392 \(Ill. 2013\).

Zummo does not plead sufficient facts to allege how the City "[broke] regulations" or "fail[ed] to give disclosures," acts that he labels as deceptive practices in his Complaint, nor does he indicate how those acts were deceptive. Compl. at 24, 31. He also alleges no facts plausibly suggesting that the City intended Zummo to rely on the alleged deception. Finally, he does not allege that this deception occurred in trade or commerce, that is, Zummo does not plead that the City intended to sell him anything. Zummo thus does not sufficiently [**28] state that the City violated the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practice Act.

Zummo's complaint similarly does not state a claim for common law fraud. The elements of common law fraud in Illinois are "(1) false statement of material fact; (2) defendant's knowledge that the statement was false; (3) defendant's intent that the statement induce the plaintiff to act; (4) plaintiff's reliance on the statement; and (5) plaintiff's damages resulting from reliance on the statement." Miller v. William Chevrolet/GEO, Inc., 326 Ill. App. 3d 642, 762 N.E.2d 1, 7, 260 Ill. Dec. 735 \(Ill. 2001\). Nowhere in the Complaint does Zummo allege that he relied on a false statement of material fact made by the City. Zummo may have relied on his expectation to be free from competition, [*1011] but he does not allege that the expectation came from any representation that the City made. No fraud, whether statutory or common law, has been adequately pled.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons discussed above, the City's motion to stay on Younger abstention grounds is granted as to the due process claims challenging the impounding of Zummo's vehicle and the imposition of the fines. The Court effectuates the stay on those claims by dismissing them without prejudice. In the alternative—that is, if the Court is mistaken [**29] on Younger abstention—the Court would dismiss those due process claims for failure to state claim. All other claims are dismissed for failure to state a claim. Ordinarily, the Court would permit Zummo to file an amended complaint, but he does not propose how he could possibly fix the claims, especially in light of the Seventh Circuit's holding in Illinois Transportation. Any proposed amendment would be futile. Final judgment will be entered, and the status hearing of November 5, 2018 is vacated.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Before the Court is Defendants Telefonaktiebolaget LM Ericsson and Ericsson, Inc.'s Motion to Sever, Stay, and Compel Arbitration of Plaintiff's "Past Refund" Claims Under Prior Licensing Agreements, (Dkt. No. 132), Motion to Sever and Stay HTC's Antitrust Claims and Request for Case Management Conference, (Dkt. No. 140), and Motion to Compel Arbitration or in the Alternative Dismiss HTC's Antitrust Claims Pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). (Dkt. No. 155.) Having considered the motions and briefing, the Court is of the opinion that each motion should be and hereby is GRANTED for the reasons as set forth herein.

A. The Parties

Plaintiffs HTC Corporation ("HTC Corp.") and HTC America, Inc. ("HTC America") (collectively "HTC") design, manufacture, and sell smartphones. (Dkt. No. 135 ¶ 12.) HTC Corp. is a Taiwanese company with headquarters in Taiwan. (Id. ¶ 10.) HTC America is a wholly-owned subsidiary of HTC Corp. and has its principal place of business in Washington state. (Id. ¶¶ 10-11.) HTC America sells HTC Corp.'s smartphones in the United States, which implement the second generation (2G), third generation [*4] (3G), and fourth generation (4G) Mobile Cellular and Wireless Standards. (Id. ¶¶ 10-11, 51-52.)

Defendants Telefonaktiebolaget LM Ericsson ("TLM Ericsson") and Ericsson, Inc. (collectively "Ericsson") make and sell "base stations and supporting software and services compliant with the 2G, 3G, and 4G standards in the United States." (Dkt. No. 156 ¶16.) TLM Ericsson is a Swedish corporation with its principal place of business in Sweden, and its wholly-owned subsidiary, Ericsson, Inc., is a Delaware corporation with headquarters in Texas. (Id. ¶¶14-15.)

B. Ericsson's Standard Essential Patents

"[T]he Internet, Wi-Fi, cellular networks, and the mobile devices on which we access these [] [function] in large part due to technological standards and innovation related to or made possible by these standards." OSENGO, KRISTEN, PATENTS AND STANDARDS: PRACTICE, POLICY, AND ENFORCEMENT 1-2 (Michael L. Drapkin et al. eds., Bloomberg Law Book Division, 2018). A standard is a uniform design for a product and is intended to represent the "best technological solution" to achieve a particular goal. Id. A key goal in telecommunications is interoperability. Interoperability standards allow devices made by [*5] different manufacturers to connect with one another in a network environment. Id. at 1-13.

Telecommunications standards are set by standards setting organizations ("SSOs") and/or standards-development organizations ("SDOs"). Id. at 1-3. These include the European Telecommunications Standards Institute ("ETSI"), the 3rd Generation Partnership Project ("3GPP"), and the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers ("IEEE"). Id. at 2-41. Each of these organizations is comprised of hundreds of industry participants who, through consensus, develop and adopt standards based on the latest technological innovations. Id. at 2-41-2-57. ETSI is one of seven member organizations of 3G¶¶ that create standards related to mobile cellular technologies, including the 2G, 3G, and 4G standards. Id. IEEE, through its standard-setting association IEEE-SA, sets standards related to wired and wireless networks, such as wireless local area networks ("WLAN"). Id. "Once a standard is adopted, participants [in the respective SSO/SDO] begin to make investments tied to the implementation of the standard, such as creating compliant parts, building compliant cellular towers and even designing devices around particular capabilities." (Dkt. No. 135 ¶ 133.) [*6]

Patented technology that is "essential" to implement a standard is called a Standard Essential Patent ("SEP"). See ETSI Rules of Procedure, Annex 6, Clause 15. A patent is "essential" if it is not technically possible to practice the standard without infringing the patent. Id. SSOs/SDOs (e.g., ETSI, 3GPP, and IEEE-SA) have intellectual property rights ("IPR") policies that "define contractual terms for disclosure and licensing of patents that are essential for standard implementation." TAFFET, RICHARD & HARRIS, PHIL, PATENTS AND STANDARDS: PRACTICE, POLICY, AND ENFORCEMENT at 4-2 (Michael L. Drapkin et al. eds., Bloomberg Law Book Division, 2018). If a member owns a SEP, it is required to (1) formally declare the patent as essential to the standard and (2) agree to license its patent to companies that practice the standard on specific terms. Id. "A commitment to license creates a contract between the SEP owner and the SSO" in which "[s]tandards implementers are third-party beneficiaries under such contracts." Id. at 4-10. ETSI and 3G¶¶ require SEP-holders to license patents on terms that are fair, reasonable, and non-discriminatory ("FRAND"). See ETSI Rules of Procedure, Annex 6, Clause 6. IEEE similarly requires members to license SEPs using a "reasonable rate," i.e., terms that are reasonable [*7] and non-discriminatory ("RAND"). See IEEE-SA Standards Board Bylaws, Clause 6 (Dec. 2016).

Ericsson is a member of ETSI, 3GPP, and IEEE and has collaborated with industry members to develop cellular network and wireless communications standards. (Dkt. No. 156 ¶ 2.) Ericsson owns several patents that are essential to the 2G, 3G, 4G, and WLAN standards, (Id. ¶ 51), and has made a commitment to offer its SEPs on FRAND terms. (Id. ¶110.) The chipsets in HTC's smartphones implement the 2G, 3G, 4G, and WLAN standards, and as such, HTC is a third-party beneficiary of the contracts between Ericsson and the SSOs. (Dkt. No. 135 ¶¶ 48-50.) This means Ericsson is required to offer licenses to its SEPs to HTC on terms that comply with the IPR policies of ETSI, 3GPP, and IEEE.

C. The Parties' Prior License Agreements

Ericsson licensed its SEPs to HTC in three prior agreements in 2003, 2008, and 2014. (Dkt. Nos. 132-2, 132-3, 132-4.) Each agreement contains an arbitration provision as provided below. (Id.)

2003 Agreement

10. DISPUTES AND GOVERNING LAW

The validity, performance, construction and interpretation of this Agreement shall be governed by the laws of Sweden without regard to its conflict of law provision. All disputes, differences [*8] or questions between the Parties shall be finally settled under the Rules of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce in Stockholm, Sweden, by three (3) arbitrators, appointed in accordance with the said Rules. The arbitration proceedings shall be conducted in the English language.

The Parties undertakes and agrees [sic] that all arbitral proceedings conducted under this Article shall be kept confidential, and all information, documentation, materials in whatever form disclosed in the course of such arbitral proceeding shall be used solely for the purpose of those proceedings.

2008 Agreement

9. DISPUTES AND GOVERNING LAW

The validity, performance, construction and interpretation of this Agreement shall be governed by the laws of Sweden without regard to its conflict of law provision. All disputes, differences or questions between the Parties shall be finally settled under the Rules of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce in Stockholm, Sweden, by three (3) arbitrators, appointed in accordance with the said Rules. The arbitration proceedings shall be conducted in the English language. The Parties undertakes and agrees [sic] that all arbitral proceedings conducted [*9] under this Article shall be kept confidential, and all information, documentation, materials in whatever form disclosed in the course of such arbitral proceeding shall be used solely for the purpose of those proceedings. 2014 Agreement

10 GOVERNING LAW AND DISPUTES

10.1 The validity, performance, construction and interpretation of this Agreement shall be governed by the laws of the State of New York without regard to its conflict of law provisions.

10.2 All disputes, differences or questions arising out of or relating to the interpretation, performance, breach or termination of this Agreement, between the Parties shall be finally settled in New York, New York, under the Rules of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce, by three (3) arbitrators, appointed in accordance with said Rules. The arbitration proceedings shall be conducted in the English language. The award shall be final and binding on the Parties and may be entered and enforced in any court having jurisdiction.

The Parties undertake and agree that all arbitral proceedings conducted under this Article 10 as well as any decision or award that is made or declared during the proceedings shall be kept confidential, and [*10] all information, documentation, materials in whatever form disclosed in the course of such arbitral proceeding shall be used solely for the purpose of those proceedings.

10.3 Notwithstanding the aforesaid, nothing in this Article 10 shall prevent the Parties from seeking any interim or final injunctive or equitable relief by a court of competent jurisdiction.

10.4 Notwithstanding anything to the contrary, nothing herein shall be construed as restricting or limiting either Party or its Affiliates' or any of their direct or indirect distributor's or customer's ability to immediately assert a release, license, covenant or other defense in any litigation or other proceeding against such Party or its Affiliates, or its or their products subject to the release, licenses, covenants or other rights under this Agreement, or the direct or indirect distributors or customers of such products, regardless of jurisdiction or venue.

Each of the prior licenses also references the Rules of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce, which states in relevant part:

Effect of the Arbitration Agreement

1. Where the parties have agreed to submit to arbitration under the Rules, they shall be deemed to [*11] have submitted ipso facto to the Rules in effect on the date of commencement of the arbitration, unless they have agreed to submit to the Rules in effect on the date of their arbitration agreement.
2. By agreeing to arbitration under the Rules, the parties have accepted that the arbitration shall be administered by the Court.
3. If any party against which a claim has been made does not submit an Answer, or if any party raises one or more pleas concerning the existence, validity or scope of the arbitration agreement or concerning whether all of the claims made in the arbitration may be determined together in a single arbitration, the arbitration shall proceed and any question of jurisdiction or of whether the claims may be determined together in that arbitration shall be decided directly by the arbitral tribunal, unless the Secretary General refers the matter to the Court for its decision pursuant to Article 6(4).

Arbitration Rules, INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, Art. 6 (Mar. 1, 2017).

D. The Instant Lawsuit

On April 6, 2017, HTC sued Ericsson in the Western District of Washington for breach of contract, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and promissory estoppel. [*12] (Dkt. No. 1.) HTC alleges that Ericsson failed to offer a license to its SEPs on FRAND terms. (Id.) HTC subsequently filed a first amended complaint ("FAC") on October 16, 2017, in which it dropped its claim for promissory estoppel and added a claim for back royalties that were allegedly non-FRAND (the "past refund" or "back royalty" claims). (Dkt. No. 41.) Ericsson subsequently moved to dismiss the FAC or transfer the case to this District. (Dkt. No. 46.) In addition to contesting personal jurisdiction and venue, Ericsson argued that HTC's back royalty claims are subject to arbitration. (Id. at 15-18.) On May 17, 2018, the Western District of Washington held that it lacked personal jurisdiction over Ericsson and ordered the case be transferred to this District. (Dkt. No. 81.) The court also found that HTC's past refunds claims were not arbitrable:

Defendants argue that the arbitration provisions in the Prior Licensing Agreements with Plaintiff mandate that this issue be arbitrated. The Court cannot agree, especially since Defendants expend the entire first portion of their briefing strenuously advocating that the Licensing Agreements—which arguably have a connection to this forum—are not the operative [*13] documents; that it is the contracts with the standards-setting agencies with which this litigation is concerned. It is not persuasive to do an about-face on the issue of subject matter jurisdiction and cite to those same Licensing Agreements for their arbitration provisions.

The language of the complaint (which cites to the standards-setting contracts) controls—the arbitration provisions of the Licensing Agreements are inapplicable here and this portion of Defendants' motion will be DENIED.

After the case was transferred on June 1, 2018, (Dkt. No. 87), HTC filed a second amended complaint ("SAC") on August 17, 2018 to add antitrust claims under the Sherman Act. (Dkt. No. 135.) HTC alleges that Ericsson colluded with other large SEP holders to manipulate the standards-setting process "to obtain supracompetitive profits and avoid their FRAND obligation." (Id. ¶ 76.) These actions have allegedly "injured HTC, competition, customers, and consumers through decreased competition, increased prices, and reduced innovation, output choice, and quality" as well as "elevat[ed] [] royalties and product prices above competitive levels, the imposition on HTC of one-sided and onerous contract terms, [*14] [and] lost sales." (Id. ¶¶129, 135.) Since then, Ericsson has filed several motions to sever, stay, compel arbitration, and/or dismiss portions of HTC's SAC. (Dkt. Nos. 132, 140, 155.) On September 25, 2018, this Court heard oral argument on Ericsson's Motion to Sever and Stay HTC's Antitrust Claims and Request for Case Management Conference, (Dkt. No. 140), and took the matter under advisement. (Dkt. No. 185.)

E. HTC's Arbitration Demand

On August 3, 2018, HTC filed a demand for arbitration against Ericsson with the International Chamber of Commerce. (Dkt. No. 132-7.) HTC asserts that the royalties it paid to Ericsson under the parties' 2003 and 2008 license agreements violated Swedish contract and European competition law. (Id. at 10.) As a remedy, HTC requests, among other things, repayment for royalties paid "that have been contrary to FRAND terms and conditions." (Id. at 13.)

II. DISCUSSION

Ericsson moves to sever, stay, and compel arbitration of (1) HTC's claim for back royalties and (2) HTC's antitrust claims. Ericsson also moves, in the alternative, to dismiss HTC's antitrust claims for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

A. HTC's Claim for Back Royalties

Ericsson argues that HTC's claims for back royalties [*15] must be submitted to arbitration because they are covered by arbitration clauses in the parties' 2003, 2008, and 2014 license agreements. HTC contends that Ericsson is procedurally barred from seeking arbitration, and that even if it is not, the claims are not arbitrable. The Court will first address HTC's procedural arguments before turning to its substantive arguments.

i. The Law of the Case Doctrine

HTC first argues that Ericsson's motion to compel arbitration should be denied under the law of the case doctrine. "[T]he doctrine [of the law of the case] posits that when a court decides upon a rule of law, that decision should continue to govern the same issues in subsequent stages in the same case." Christianson v. Colt Indus. Operating Corp., 486 U.S. 800, 815-16, 108 S. Ct. 2166, 100 L. Ed. 2d 811 \(1988\) (internal citation omitted); Bayou Steel Corp. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 487 Fed. Appx. 933, 936 \(5th Cir. 2012\); Copeland v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 47 F.3d 1415, 1423 \(5th Cir. 1995\). This rule applies to decisions made by (1) the same court; (2) a coordinate court of equal rank in the same case; and (3) an appeals court that remands the case to the district court. Christianson, 486 U.S. at 816; Bayou Steel, 487 Fed. Appx. at 936.

While a court on remand must obey the decisions of the appeals court (known as the "mandate rule"), a court has discretion to revisit its own decisions or those of a coordinate court of equal rank. Christianson, 486 U.S. at 818 ("[T]he law-of-the-case doctrine 'merely expresses the practice of courts [*16] generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided, not a limit to their power.'"); Copeland, 47 F.3d at 1424 ("[T]he law of the case doctrine is a discretionary rule of practice which does not limit the power of the court to revisit a legal issue."); Med. Ctr. Pharmacy v. Holder, 634 F.3d 830, 834 \(5th Cir. 2011\) ("[A]n issue of ... law decided on appeal may not be reexamined by the district court on remand or by the appellate court on a subsequent appeal.") (internal citations omitted). Reconsideration of a prior decision is appropriate when "the prior ruling was erroneous, is no longer sound, or would work an injustice." Loumar, Inc. v. Smith, 698 F.2d 759, 762 \(5th Cir. 1983\); Christianson, 486 U.S.

at 818 (holding that a court should not revisit a prior decision "absent extraordinary circumstances such as where the initial decision was 'clearly erroneous and would work a manifest injustice'"') (internal citation omitted); see, e.g., United States v. Boruff, 909 F.2d 111, 116 (5th Cir. 1990) (finding doctrine did not apply where new facts developed). As such, the doctrine "is not [] a barrier to correction of judicial error." Loumar, 698 F.2d at 762.

HTC argues that prior to transfer, Judge Pechman in the Western District of Washington ruled that its past refund claims were non-arbitrable, and therefore, under the law of the case doctrine, this Court should honor that ruling. (Dkt. No. 151 at 2.) HTC argues that reconsideration [*17] is not appropriate because: (1) HTC's claims have not changed; (2) there has been no intervening change of law; and (3) it would reward Ericsson's attempt to "obtain[] improper reconsideration only after the case was transferred." (Id. at 2, 8-9; Dkt. No. 175 at 2-3.)

Ericsson disagrees and argues that reconsideration is proper because new facts have developed that establish that arbitration is required. (Dkt. No. 132 at 13.) HTC previously represented to Judge Pechman that its back royalty claims were not premised on the prior licenses, but instead on Ericsson's alleged breach of its FRAND obligation. (Id.) As such, HTC argued that its claims did not implicate the arbitration provisions in the prior license agreements. (Id.) Ericsson argues that "this Court [now] has . . . information about HTC's claims that the Washington Court did not have—specifically, HTC's FRAND contentions that reveal that interpretation and performance of the Prior Licenses will be at issue, and HTC's recent filing of an arbitration seeking the same 'back royalties' relief." (Id.) Ericsson states that "[c]ourts routinely evaluate how theories of liability evolve in a case, and are willing to reconsider an earlier denial [*18] of arbitration if evolution of the case warrants." (Id.) Ericsson also believes reconsideration is appropriate because the Washington Court: (1) found that it lacked personal jurisdiction, and so was not a "court of competent jurisdiction" for purposes of the law of the case doctrine and (2) did not apply this Circuit's "wholly groundless" standard for arbitration agreements. (Id. at 12-14).<sup>1</sup>

Having considered the arguments, the Court finds that it is not bound by Judge Pechman's ruling and further finds that reconsideration in this instance is appropriate. As Ericsson points out, HTC describes the prior licenses and royalties paid under those agreements in its responsive FRAND contentions. (Dkt. No. 132-6 at 5-9.) In fact, HTC states that Ericsson's June 14, 2018 contentions "entirely avoid[ed] discussion of Ericsson's excessive past license rates, which are also at issue in this litigation." (Id. at 10.) In addition, HTC filed a demand for arbitration against Ericsson in August 2018, seeking "pursuant to Swedish contract law, . . . repayment by Ericsson of the sums otherwise overpaid by HTC pursuant to the [2003 and 2008 license agreements] in respect of royalties that have been contrary to FRAND terms [*19] and conditions." (Dkt. No. 132-7 at 13.) The Court finds that these new developments justify revisiting the prior ruling by the Washington court.

ii. Waiver

HTC also argues that Ericsson has waived its right to arbitration. "[A] party waives its right to arbitrate if it (1) substantially invokes the judicial process and (2) thereby causes detriment or prejudice to the other party." Janvey v. Alguire, 847 F.3d 231, 243 (5th Cir. 2017) (internal citation omitted). This analysis is highly fact-dependent, in which any doubts should result in a finding of no waiver. Al-Rushaid v. Nat'l Oilwell Varco, Inc., 757 F.3d 416, 421-22 (5th Cir. 2014) ("[I]n light of the federal policy favoring arbitration, '[t]here is a strong presumption against finding a waiver of arbitration.'") (internal citation omitted). As such, the party asserting waiver "bears a heavy burden of proof." Petroleum Pipe Americas Corp. v. Jindal Saw, Ltd., 575 F.3d 476, 480 (5th Cir. 2009) (internal citation omitted).

"A party substantially invokes the judicial process when it 'engage[s] in some overt act in court that evinces a desire to resolve the arbitration dispute through litigation.'" Vine v. PLS Fin. Servs., Inc., 689 Fed. Appx. 800, 804 (5th Cir. 2017) (internal citation omitted); see also Subway Equip. Leasing Corp. v. Forte, 169 F.3d 324, 329 (5th Cir. 1999)

(a waiving party "implement[s] or enforc[es] the judicial process" as to the arbitrable claims and "must do more than call upon unrelated litigation to delay an arbitration processing"). This may include a number [*20] of pre-trial activities, such as moving to dismiss, filing an answer and counterclaims, and participating in discovery. See, e.g., Janvey, 847 F.3d at 244 n.11 (waiver found where party "moved to dismiss, filed an initial answer and amended answer, sent written discovery, and answered discovery" over the span of three years before moving to compel arbitration); Republic Ins. Co. v. PAICO Receivables, LLC, 383 F.3d 341, 345 \(5th Cir. 2004\) (waiver found where party "answered . . . counterclaims; conducted full-fledged discovery, including four depositions; amended its complaint; . . . filed the required pretrial materials with the district" as well as "two motions to compel discovery, a motion for summary judgment, and a motion in limine" all before its motion to compel arbitration); but see Walker v. J.C. Bradford & Co., 938 F.2d 575, 578 (5th Cir. 1991) (no waiver where party "did not ask the court to make any judicial decision, for example, by requesting summary judgment" and the "district court actions . . . mainly were routine scheduling order and discovery continuances"); Tenneco Resins, Inc. v. Davy Intern. AG, 770 F.2d 416, 421 \(5th Cir. 1985\) (no waiver where party indicated desire to arbitrate in answer and engaged in minimal discovery). At the very least, a party that seeks a decision on the merits has substantially invoked the judicial process. Petroleum Pipe, 575 F.3d at 480 (internal citation omitted).

Prejudice refers to the "delay, expense, [*21] or damage to a party's legal position that occurs when the party's opponent forces it to litigate an issue and later seeks to arbitrate the same issue." Petroleum Pipe, 575 F.3d at 480 (internal citations omitted). Relevant factors include, but are not limited to, "(1) whether discovery occurred relating to arbitrable claims; (2) the time and expense incurred in defending a motion for summary judgment; and (3) a party's failure to timely assert its right to arbitrate." Id. Whether prejudice has occurred is a matter of degree. For example, delay in seeking arbitration, without more, will generally not constitute prejudice. Nicholas v. KBR, Inc., 565 F.3d 904, 910 \(5th Cir. 2009\) (internal citation omitted). However, when delay is coupled with "pretrial activity inconsistent with an intent to arbitrate, the party later opposing a motion to compel arbitration may more easily show that its position has been compromised, i.e., prejudiced." Id. Similarly, engaging in discovery before seeking arbitration will not result in automatic prejudice. It will depend on the extent and nature of the discovery and whether it encompassed the arbitrable claims. Janvey, 847 F.3d at 244 ("Parties cannot enjoy the benefits of federal discovery, and then, after doing so, seek to enforce a decision through private [*22] resolution."); Tenneco, 770 F.2d at 421 ("However, when only a minimal amount of discovery has been conducted, which may also be useful for the purpose of arbitration, the court should not ordinarily infer waiver based upon prejudice. . . .").

Whether a party has waived arbitration is generally a question for the court and is sent to the arbitrator only if the parties "clear[ly] and unmistakabl[y] evidence" an intent for such result. Vine, 689 Fed. Appx. At 803. This usually requires an "explicit[] mention [of] litigation-conduct waiver" in the agreement. Id. at 804 (refusing to interpret silence regarding waiver issue in favor of sending to the arbitrator).

HTC argues that Ericsson waived its right to arbitrate the past refund claims. HTC asserts that Ericsson substantially invoked the judicial process by: (1) "request[ing] that the Western District of Washington dismiss or transfer this case, rather than . . . simply . . . compel arbitration;" (2) "fil[ing] counterclaims based on the same third-party FRAND obligations, [but] never arguing that its own third-party claims were subject to arbitration;" (3) "agree[ing] to a scheduling order in this District;" (4) engaging in expansive discovery "without mentioning the [*23] possibility of a forthcoming arbitration motion;" and (5) waiting months to seek arbitration and reconsideration of Judge Pechman's decision. (Dkt. No. 151 at 4-6.) HTC explains that it has produced "over 188,000 pages of discovery" to date and "has incurred hundreds of thousands of dollars in fees" in the process. (Id. at 5-6.) Moreover, "Ericsson's discovery requests do not relate exclusively or even primarily to either arbitrability of the claims at issue or to non-arbitrable issues" and would be unavailable to Ericsson in an arbitration proceeding. (Dkt. No. 175 at 2; Dkt. No. 151 at 5-6.) HTC argues that it would be unfair to send the claims to arbitration knowing that Ericsson has had the benefit of discovery to which it would have not obtained otherwise. (Id.)

Ericsson asserts that it has not waived any rights. Ericsson argues that it filed a motion to dismiss the arbitrable claims and that its counterclaims were "limited to the parties' current license negotiations" and thus "not subject to mandatory arbitration." (Dkt. No. 165 at 2.) Ericsson also contests that its participation in discovery supports waiver, explaining that its requests have applied to both arbitrable and non-arbitrable [*24] claims. (Id.) Ericsson further maintains that HTC has suffered no prejudice given that: (1) its "discovery requests largely relate to the parties' current FRAND dispute, which is not subject to mandatory arbitration;" (2) it "has not filed any motions for summary judgment;" and (3) it "timely asserted its right to arbitration." (Id. at 2-3.) With respect to any purported delay, Ericsson explains that it waited to file this motion based on HTC's stated plan to file for arbitration under the prior licenses. (Id. at 3.) "Only when HTC filed for arbitration approximately one month later did Ericsson realize that HTC was not replacing its past refund claims in district court with claims in arbitration," but was instead seeking relief in both forums. (Id.) HTC responds that it "never indicated [to Ericsson] that its arbitration claims based on the Licenses were meant to replace [its] third-party beneficiary claims in this suit." (Dkt. No. 175 at 1.)

The Court finds that Ericsson did not waive its right to arbitrate the past refund claims. Waiver of an arbitration right is strongly disfavored and "should not be lightly inferred," Janvey, 847 F.3d at 243, especially where, as here, the defendant has timely asserted its right to arbitration. [*25] See Tenneco, 770 F.2d at 420 ("Thus, once the defendant, by answer, has given notice of insisting on arbitration the burden is heavy on the party seeking to prove waiver.") (internal citation omitted). After HTC added claims for past royalties in October 2017, (Dkt. No. 41), Ericsson promptly moved to dismiss those claims as subject to arbitration. (Dkt. No. 46.) That motion remained pending until May 2018 when the Washington Court ruled that the claims were non-arbitrable and transferred the case to this District. (Dkt. No. 81.) After the case was transferred in June 2018, Ericsson explains that HTC planned to file for arbitration under the prior licenses. For example, HTC stated in another motion that "[t]hrough European counsel, HTC intends to assert . . . claims in arbitration in accordance with the past license agreements." (Dkt. No. 105 at 8 n.6.) However, once Ericsson realized that HTC was pursuing claims for past refunds in both arbitration and in court, it immediately filed the instant motion. Ericsson's delay in seeking arbitration, therefore, was entirely reasonable given HTC's conduct. HTC contends that it never told Ericsson that it would drop the past refund claims in court. However, the Court [*26] was not presented with any communications regarding the same. Even if HTC's general statement that it planned to file for arbitration could be interpreted as having no effect on its intent to litigate its past refund claims here, this Court must resolve all doubts in favor of Ericsson in light of the strong presumption against waiver. Accordingly, the Court is not persuaded that Ericsson "substantially invoked the judicial process" with an intent to litigate, rather than arbitrate, HTC's past refund claims.

Going further, even if the Court agreed that Ericsson's participation in discovery amounted to waiver, HTC has not shown material prejudice. HTC explains that it has incurred tremendous expense on discovery, the majority of which would be unavailable to Ericsson in an arbitration proceeding. The majority of discovery that HTC identifies, however, occurred when Ericsson's initial motion to dismiss was pending before the previous court. (Dkt. No. 151-2 at 2-4.) Prejudice refers to the harm incurred to a party "when the party's opponent forces it to litigate an issue and later seeks to arbitrate the same issue." Petroleum Pipe, 575 F.3d at 480 (emphasis added). Such is not the case here. Once HTC added its past refund [*27] claims, Ericsson immediately moved for arbitration. It would be unfair to infer prejudice based on discovery conducted during the pendency of Ericsson's motion to dismiss. See Rab of La., Inc. v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., No. 5:08-cv-49, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140938, 2009 WL 10676990, at \*1 \(E.D. Tex. Mar. 17, 2009\) ("Because LP has already requested arbitration in this case, this Court finds that it may engage in discovery in this case without waiving its right to arbitrate."). HTC also identifies a single interrogatory that Ericsson propounded after the case was transferred but before it filed the instant motion. (Dkt. No. 151-2 at 4.) Minimal discovery, even that which covers arbitrable claims, is generally not sufficient to find prejudice. Tenneco, 770 F.2d at 421; see, e.g., Walker, 938 F.2d at 578 (finding no waiver where defendant served interrogatories and document requests, did not request a decision on the merits, and the court engaged in routine scheduling prior to defendant requesting arbitration). For the reasons set forth herein, HTC's waiver arguments are unavailing.

iii. Enforcing the Arbitration Agreement

Having concluded that Ericsson is not procedurally barred from seeking arbitration, the Court now addresses whether HTC's claims for back royalties are, in fact, arbitrable.

Enforcement of [*28] an arbitration agreement involves a two-step analysis. First, the court must decide whether the parties entered into an arbitration agreement. Archer and White Sales, Inc. v. Henry Schein, Inc., 878 F.3d 488,

492 \(5th Cir. 2017\), cert. granted, 138 S. Ct. 2678, 201 L. Ed. 2d 1071 (2018) (internal citations omitted). This is a question of contract formation and concerns whether the parties agreed to arbitrate some set of claims. Id. (internal citation omitted); Rent-A-Center, W., Inc. v. Jackson, 561 U.S. 63, 71-72, 130 S. Ct. 2772, 177 L. Ed. 2d 403 (2010) (holding that court must assess validity and/or enforceability of an arbitration provision only if that specific provision is challenged, and not another provision of the contract or the contract as a whole). If there is an arbitration agreement, the court must then decide whether the claim is covered by the agreement and should therefore be submitted to arbitration. Archer, 878 F.3d at 492 (internal citation omitted). The court applies ordinary state contract law, in which "any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues [are] resolved in favor of arbitration." Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 626, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 (1985).

This analysis changes when the agreement purportedly delegates the question of arbitrability to the arbitrator. In those cases, the presumption in favor of arbitration is reversed and "[c]ourts should not assume that the parties agreed to arbitrate arbitrability unless there is clear and unmistakable evidence [*29] that they did so." First Options of Chicago, Inc. v. Kaplan, 514 U.S. 938, 115 S. Ct. 1920, 131 L. Ed. 2d 985 (1995) (internal citations omitted) (noting that since parties may not appreciate the significance of having an arbitrator decide the scope of his own authority, a presumption in favor of arbitration "might too often force unwilling parties to arbitrate a matter they reasonably would have thought a judge, not an arbitrator, would decide").

The Fifth Circuit has adopted a specific framework for applying this rule. If the court determines that the parties "clearly and unmistakably" intended to delegate arbitrability to an arbitrator, the court must send this threshold inquiry to arbitration unless the assertion of arbitrability is "wholly groundless." Archer, 878 F.2d at 495; Douglas v. Regions Bank, 757 F.3d 460, 462-64 (5th Cir. 2014) (adopting test set forth in Qualcomm Inc. v. Nokia Corp., 466 F.3d 1366 (Fed. Cir. 2006)).<sup>2</sup> An assertion is "wholly groundless" if there is no plausible argument for the arbitrability of the dispute. Archer, 878 F.2d at 495 (internal citations omitted). The Fifth Circuit has cautioned that this exception is a "narrow one" and courts should be careful not to "prejudge arbitrability disputes more properly left to the arbitrator pursuant to a valid delegation clause." Id. (internal citation omitted); see generally AT&T Technologies, Inc. v. Communications Workers of America, 475 U.S. 643, 649, 106 S. Ct. 1415, 89 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1986) ("[I]n deciding whether the parties have agreed to submit a particular grievance to arbitration, [*30] a court is not to rule on the potential merits of the underlying claims."). If "there is a legitimate argument that the arbitration clause covers the present dispute, and, on the other hand, that it does not," then "the resolution of those plausible arguments [should be left to] the arbitrator." Douglas, 757 F.3d at 463 (internal citations omitted).

Turning to the licenses at issue, the Court first notes that each contains an arbitration clause that expressly incorporates by reference the Rules of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce ("ICC Arbitration Rules"). (Dkt. Nos. 132-2, 132-3, 132-4.)

<sup>2</sup>The Supreme Court recently granted a petition for writ of certiorari to decide whether a court must nonetheless submit the question of arbitrability to the arbitrator even if it finds the assertion of arbitrability "wholly groundless." Archer and White Sales, Inc. v. Henry Schein, Inc., 878 F.3d 488, 492 (5th Cir. 2017), cert. granted, 138 S. Ct. 2678, 201 L. Ed. 2d 1071 (2018) (internal citations omitted).

9. DISPUTES AND GOVERNING LAW

. . . All disputes, differences or questions between the Parties shall be finally settled under the Rules of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce in Stockholm, Sweden, by three (3) arbitrators, appointed in accordance with the [*31] said Rules. . .

2014 Agreement

10. GOVERNING LAW AND DISPUTES

. . . 10.2 All disputes, differences or questions arising out of or relating to the interpretation, performance, breach or termination of this Agreement, between the Parties shall be finally settled in New York, New York, under the Rules of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce, by three (3) arbitrators, appointed in accordance with said Rules. . .

Article 6 of the ICC Arbitration Rules provides that "any question of jurisdiction or of whether the claims may be determined together in that arbitration shall be decided directly by the arbitral tribunal, unless the Secretary General refers the matter to the Court for its decision pursuant to Article 6(4)." Arbitration Rules, INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, Art. 6 (Mar. 1, 2017) (emphasis added). The Fifth Circuit has held that express adoption of rules that delegate this threshold inquiry to the arbitrator demonstrates clear and unmistakable evidence that the parties agreed to arbitrate arbitrability. See Cooper v. WestEnd Capital Mgmt., LLC, 832 F.3d 534, 546 (5th Cir. 2016) (holding that express adoption of JAMS Rules, which delegated arbitrability to arbitrator, "presents clear and unmistakable evidence that the parties agreed to arbitrate arbitrability"); Petrofac, Inc. v. DynMcDermott Petroleum Operations Co., 687 F.3d 671, 675 (5th Cir. 2012) (concluding [*32] that express adoption of AAA arbitration rules showed parties' intent to arbitrate arbitrability). Accordingly, the Court finds that the parties' 2003, 2008, and 2014 license agreements delegate the issue of arbitrability to the arbitrator. The only remaining inquiry then is whether Ericsson's assertion of arbitrability is "wholly groundless."

HTC alleges that it has "incurred substantial monetary damage by being forced to pay non-FRAND royalties to Ericsson over the course of the parties' long relationship" and as a result, it is entitled to back royalties. (Dkt. No. 135 ¶ 119.) Ericsson argues that to prove this, HTC will need to analyze and interpret the prior licenses. To support this contention, Ericsson (1) lists ten potential "arbitrable disputes, issues, or questions related to the interpretation and performance of the Prior Licenses," including "[t]he actual percentage royalty rate that HTC paid in view of the Prior Licenses' royalty caps" and "[w]hether HTC's course of dealing and performance under the Prior Licenses waives and/or supersedes its new position," and (2) explains that HTC's arbitration demand "asserts that the royalties in the 2003 and 2008 licenses violate Ericsson's [*33] FRAND commitment to ETSI," which is the same relief sought in this case. (Dkt. No. 132 at 8-11.)

HTC responds that while it is seeking the same relief in both arbitration and court, "the causes of action are separate" and the "reference [to] the SSOs [in the arbitration demand] does not speak to or in any way influence the non-arbitrability of [its] separate third-party beneficiary claims." (Dkt. No. 151 at 11.) The claims in arbitration are brought under Swedish contract and European competition law whereas its claims in this case are brought pursuant to Ericsson's FRAND obligations. (Id.) HTC contends that since the licenses are governed by Swedish and New York law, "[t]hese changes in venue and the law to be applied could not be possible if each arbitration clause went beyond the agreement of which it is a part to cover other times, claims, and laws, such as HTC's third party beneficiary claims, which are under French law and extend over time periods of all the Licenses." (Id. at 12-13.) HTC also argues that each of Ericsson's ten potential arbitrable issues are "strawmen" and can be resolved without reference to the license agreements. (Id. at 14-15; Dkt. No. 175 at 4-5.)

The Court disagrees. HTC claims [*34] that its past royalty payments to Ericsson were non-FRAND and demands a refund of any excess payments. The 2003 and 2008 licenses require arbitration of "[a]ll disputes, differences or questions between the Parties," (Dkt. No. 132-2 at 9; Dkt. No. 132-3 at 9), and the 2014 license requires arbitration of "[a]ll disputes, differences or questions arising out of or relating to the interpretation, performance, breach or termination of this Agreement." (Dkt. No. 132-4 at 19.) Whether HTC is owed a refund and the amount thereof is certainly a "dispute[], difference[] or question[] between the Parties." Since the terms of the royalties are set out in each of the prior license agreements, resolving this "dispute[], difference[] or question[]" will necessarily require a review of those agreements and thus at a minimum "aris[es] out of or relat[es] to the[ir] interpretation [and/or] performance." HTC's argument that the licenses' choice of law provisions limit arbitrable claims to those brought under Swedish and New York law, respectively, is simply nonsensical. A choice of law provision is generally understood to designate the law of a particular jurisdiction that must be applied to disputes [*35] arising out of or relating to the contract. It does not represent the types of claims the parties agreed to arbitrate. HTC does not explain why an opposite interpretation is warranted aside from identifying the applicable choice of law provisions. The Court finds that Ericsson has presented a plausible argument that the refund claims are covered by the arbitration clauses, and as such, its assertion of arbitrability is not "wholly groundless." The threshold question of whether the past refund claims are arbitrable must be sent to the arbitrator pursuant to the parties' delegation clause. Douglas, 757 F.3d at 463 (holding that if "there is a legitimate argument that the arbitration clause covers the present dispute, and, on the other hand, that it does not, then "the resolution of those plausible arguments [should be left to] the arbitrator").

iv. Severance and Stay

If a case includes arbitrable and non-arbitrable claims, the court must sever and stay the arbitrable claims pending resolution of the arbitration. 9 U.S.C. § 3; Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Byrd, 470 U.S. 213, 219, 105 S. Ct. 1238, 84 L. Ed. 2d 158 (1985); Wick v. Atlantic Marine, 605 F.2d 166, 168 (5th Cir. 1979) ("[I]t is well settled in this circuit that if some claims are arbitrable and others are not and they are easily severable, that the court should stay proceedings as to those claims which are arbitrable."). [*36] HTC argues, however, that its past refund claims cannot be severed from its other breach of FRAND claims because they "are derived from single causes of action and involve the same facts and issues." (Dkt. No. 151 at 8.) Specifically, HTC asserts that this case is about "a single presuit breach of contract, one that continued for years during and at the end of the various Licenses, and that is included in a single claim." (Dkt. No. 175 at 5.)<sup>3</sup> While that may be true, a court must submit to arbitration only those claims to which the parties agreed to arbitrate, "even if the result is piecemeal litigation" or "the possibly inefficient maintenance of separate proceedings in different forums." Byrd, 470 at 217, 221 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).<sup>4</sup> "The preeminent concern of Congress in passing the [Arbitration] Act was to enforce private agreements. . . and that concern requires that [courts] rigorously enforce agreements to arbitrate." Id. at 221. As a result, the Court concludes that it has no discretion in this context and must sever and stay HTC's request for past refunds pending resolution of the arbitration.

B. HTC's Antitrust Claims

On August 17, 2018, HTC added claims alleging [*37] that Ericsson violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Ericsson moves to sever, stay, and compel arbitration of HTC's antitrust claims, or in the alternative, to dismiss those claims under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

<sup>3</sup> HTC cites In re Garza, 90 F. App'x 730, 735 (5th Cir. 2004) for the proposition that "[t]he Fifth Circuit recognized that 'severance of a single cause of action into two parts is never proper and should not be granted.'" (Dkt. No. 151 at 8.) That case applied Texas state law and did not concern severing arbitrable claims from non-arbitrable claims and is therefore distinguishable.

<sup>4</sup> The Supreme Court has expressly rejected the "doctrine of intertwining," which gave courts discretion to deny arbitration if the arbitrable and non-arbitrable claims arose "out of the same transaction" and were "sufficiently intertwined factually and legally." Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Byrd, 470 U.S. 213, 216, 105 S. Ct. 1238, 84 L. Ed. 2d 158 (1985).

i. Enforcing the Arbitration Agreement

Ericsson argues that HTC's antitrust claims are subject to arbitration under the prior license agreements. Ericsson explains that HTC alleges that it has purportedly paid higher royalties for Ericsson's SEPs as a result of Ericsson's anticompetitive conduct in coordination with other large SEP-holders, and seeks a refund for past royalties paid. (Dkt. No. 155 at 8-9.) Ericsson argues that any alleged overpayment occurred because HTC entered into the prior licenses, which include arbitration clauses. Ericsson concludes, therefore, that "HTC's antitrust claims arise out of performance of the Prior licenses—i.e., HTC's payments to Ericsson." (Id. at 9.) Ericsson also argues that HTC's arbitration demand for past royalties "demonstrates that its antitrust claims are arbitrable" and that "HTC has never explained how its district court and arbitration claims are not duplicative, much less how [it can bring] European competition law claims [in arbitration] but not [its] U.S. competition [*38] law claims." (Id. at 10.)

HTC responds that the antitrust claims are "broader than and not implicated by" the license agreements. (Dkt. No. 183 at 3.) HTC substantially sets forth the same flawed arguments that it did for the past refund claims and argues that the choice of law provisions in the arbitration agreements (which are limited to Swedish and New York law, respectively) limit the types of claims subject to arbitration (which it argues does not include U.S. antitrust law). (Id. at 3-5.)

As with the past refund claims, the Court finds that Ericsson's assertion that HTC's antitrust claims are arbitrable is not "wholly groundless" and thus this threshold inquiry should be sent to the arbitrator. HTC alleges that it "has made quarterly royalty payments of millions of dollars to Ericsson," that those "payments were improperly and unlawfully extracted by Ericsson in breach of its FRAND licensing obligations," and that "Ericsson's conduct [was] made possible by collaborative action" that violates U.S. antitrust law. (Dkt. No. 135 at ¶¶ 175-76.) HTC has allegedly suffered "the imposition of . . . one-sided and onerous contract terms" as a result, and seeks relief in the form of back royalties. (Id. ¶ 135, [*39] H.) For the same reasons as the past refund claims, it is difficult to envision how HTC could prove it is entitled to back royalties without examining the terms of the prior licenses and the parties' performances thereunder. At a minimum, the Court finds that it is at least plausible that the antitrust allegations implicate the arbitration provisions in the prior license agreements and therefore holds that the issue of arbitrability should be submitted to arbitration.

ii. Severance and Stay

Since the arbitrability of HTC's antitrust claims must be sent to arbitration, those claims must be severed and stayed pending resolution of arbitration. See supra Section II.A.iv.

iii. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6)

Having determined that HTC's antitrust claims are arbitrable and should be severed and stayed pending resolution of arbitration, Ericsson's request in the alternative to dismiss the claims under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) is considered by the Court to be moot.

III. CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, the Court hereby GRANTS Ericsson's Motion to Sever, Stay, and Compel Arbitration of Plaintiff's "Past Refund" Claims Under Prior Licensing Agreements, (Dkt. No. 132), Motion to Sever and Stay HTC's Antitrust Claims and Request for Case Management Conference, [*40] (Dkt. No. 140), and Motion to Compel Arbitration or in the Alternative Dismiss HTC's Antitrust Claims Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). (Dkt. No. 155.)

It is therefore ORDERED that HTC's request for back royalties pursuant to Count I and HTC's antitrust allegations pursuant to Counts III and IV of the Second Amended Complaint, (Dkt. No. 135) (the "Severed Claims") are hereby

SEVERED and shall be submitted to arbitration for a determination of their arbitrability. It is further ORDERED that the Severed Claims, as a new and distinct case in this Court's docket, are STAYED pending resolution of the arbitration.

So ORDERED and SIGNED this 7th day of November, 2018.

HN1 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When considering a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss , the court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations and must draw all reasonable inferences in plaintiff's favor.

HN2 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Facial plausibility exists when a plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

**HN3** [down] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\) requires a complaint to provide the defendant with fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. Dismissal of a complaint for failure to provide sufficient notice, however, is usually reserved for those cases in which the complaint is so confused, ambiguous, vague or otherwise unintelligible that its true substance, if any, is well disguised.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has consistently interpreted the private-plaintiff standing provision's causation requirement in the Pennsylvania Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law, 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. m 201-1, et seq., to demand a showing of justifiable reliance, not simply a causal connection between the misrepresentation and the harm. A mere causal connection can be established by, for instance, proof that a misrepresentation inflated a product's price, thereby injuring every purchaser because he paid more than he would have paid in the absence of the misrepresentation. A justifiable-reliance requirement, by contrast, requires the plaintiff to go further—he must show that he justifiably bought the product in the first place or engaged in some other detrimental activity because of the misrepresentation.

The Vermont Consumer Fraud Act (VCFA), Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9 , § 2461(b) allows any consumer who contracts for goods in reliance upon false or fraudulent representations or who sustains damages or injury as a result of any false or fraudulent representations to sue and recover from the seller the amount of his or her damages. The VCFA defines a consumer as, in part, any person who purchases goods or services not for resale in the ordinary course of his or her trade or business but for his or her use or benefit or the use or benefit of a member of his or her household. V. CONCLUSION

[*150] I. INTRODUCTION

This multi-district litigation arises out of defendant Allergan's alleged actions to improperly delay the market entry of generic competitors to its dry-eye medication Restasis® (cyclosporine ophthalmic emulsion). There are two groups of plaintiffs: those that purchased Restasis® directly from Allergan and End-Payor Plaintiffs ("EPPs"), health and welfare funds that purchased (or reimbursed members' purchases of) Restasis® from distributors or retailers. Both groups contend that the price they paid for Restasis® would have been lower if Allergan had faced competition from generic manufacturers and that they were also deprived of the opportunity to purchase lower-priced, generic versions of the drug.

The EPPs are precluded from asserting federal damages claims under Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 \(1977\), which interpreted federal antitrust law to preclude indirect purchasers from recovering damages in order to avoid "a serious risk of multiple liability for defendants" and "whole new dimensions of complexity to treble-damages suits [which would] seriously undermine their effectiveness." Id. at 730, 737. However, the Supreme Court has recognized that, although federal antitrust [\[\*\*11\]](#) law does not permit indirect purchasers to recover damages, neither does it preempt state antitrust statutes that do so. California v. ARC Am. Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 105-06, 109 S. Ct. 1661, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86 \(1989\). In their Consolidated Complaint, EPPs seek injunctive relief under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, and declaratory relief under 28 U.S.C. § 2201 for alleged violations of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-3. And plaintiffs bring their claims for monetary damages only under the antitrust and consumer protection laws of various states, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia.

Allergan now moves under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to dismiss certain claims brought under the laws of some of the jurisdictions. For the reasons set forth below, Allergan's motion is granted in part and denied in part.

II. PLAINTIFFS' ALLEGATIONS

For a full recitation of plaintiffs' factual allegations, I refer to my Opinion and Order dated September 18, 2018 denying defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to allege causation. (Docket No. 146.) Briefly, EPPs allege that Allergan took a number of improper actions to delay the Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") in approving generic competitors for Restasis®, including: (1) filing sham citizen petitions with the FDA; (2) defrauding the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office ("USPTO") into issuing second-wave [\[\*\*12\]](#) patents for Restasis®; (3) using those patents to file baseless patent infringement lawsuits, further delaying the FDA's approval process for generic Restasis® equivalents; and (4) when it appeared that its patents were likely to be invalidated, transferring those patents to the Saint Regis Mohawk Tribe, which licensed them back, in an effort to frustrate invalidation of the patents by renting the Tribe's sovereign immunity. As a result, EPPs allege that Allergan has maintained a monopoly for several years beyond what it would have had absent its wrongful conduct and has used that monopoly to charge an inflated price for Restasis®. The EPPs assert that they have been injured because they overpaid for cyclosporine.

EPPs bring five claims, only two of which are at issue on this motion.<sup>1</sup> The [\[\*151\]](#) Second Claim challenges Allergan's monopolistic conduct and seeks damages under the laws of 22 jurisdictions on an antitrust theory. The Third Claim challenges Allergan's unfair, unconscionable, deceptive, and fraudulent conduct under the consumer protection laws of five states. For each claim, EPPs rely on the same factual allegations.

Allergan moves to dismiss the antitrust claims as to eight of the [\[\*\*13\]](#) 22 jurisdictions,<sup>2</sup> and moves to dismiss the consumer protection claims as to each of the five jurisdictions. In their opposition, EPPs voluntarily withdraw their claims brought under the laws of Puerto Rico, but they oppose dismissal of their other claims.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

Defendants move to dismiss the EPPs' Consolidated Complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). HN1<sup>1</sup> When considering such a motion, the court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations and must draw all reasonable inferences in plaintiff's favor. Swiatkowski v. Citibank, 446 Fed. Appx. 360, 360-61 \(2d Cir. 2011\). HN2<sup>1</sup> To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\) (quoting Bell Ad. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\)). Facial plausibility exists when a plaintiff "pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id.

HN3<sup>1</sup> Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8\(a\)\(2\) requires a complaint to provide the defendant with "fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\) (alterations omitted)). Dismissal of a complaint for failure to provide sufficient notice, however, is "usually reserved for those cases in which the complaint is so confused, ambiguous, vague or otherwise unintelligible [<**14] that its true substance, if any, is well disguised." Salahuddin v. Cuomo, 861 F.2d 40, 42 \(2d Cir. 1988\).

IV. ANALYSIS

A. Plaintiffs' State Law Antitrust Claims

1. Arkansas, Florida, Hawaii, Minnesota, and Missouri

EPPs' Second Claim, captioned "Violation of State Antitrust Law," alleges that "Allergan intentionally and wrongfully maintained monopoly power in the relevant market through its overarching anticompetitive scheme in violation of the following state laws" and lists statutory provisions from 22 jurisdictions. Defendant contends that the claims brought under the laws of five of those jurisdictions—Arkansas, Florida, Hawaii, Minnesota, and Missouri—rely on consumer protection statutes that cover a range of theories of liability and therefore leave ambiguous how these statutes apply to an [*152] antitrust theory of harm. Allergan argues that the claims are confusing and that it lacks "fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

Allergan is correct that the statutes cited by EPPs are broad and provide for a variety of claims under different theories of liability. EPPs make it clear, however, that they have one factual theory of liability—that Allergan engaged in improper efforts to extend its monopoly in order [<**15] to delay market entry of generic substitutes for Restasis®. EPPs are asserting that Allergan's conduct violated several states' antitrust laws, as well as several states' consumer protection laws. Whether or not the conduct does so is addressed below on a state-by-state basis. Allergan's more general argument that plaintiffs have not provided it with sufficient notice of the claims they are asserting, however, is meritless. Allergan has not received notice of any theory other than a monopolization theory precisely because EPPs are not asserting any other theories of liability. Moreover, even if the Consolidated Complaint were unclear on that front, EPPs' Memorandum of Law in Opposition to defendant's motion has confirmed that they are not raising a separate theory of liability on their consumer protection claims, but are merely alleging that the same conduct violated two separate sets of laws. (Mem. in Opp. at 4 ("EPPs intended to assert exactly what they did assert: a claim under the relevant consumer protection statutes based on Allergan's anticompetitive conduct.").) Rule 8's notice requirement has been met.

In its Reply Brief, Allergan insists that EPPs must amend their Consolidated Complaint [<**16] to pursue a certain theory or to rely only on specific subsections of a listed statute. It cites authority for the proposition that a party may not amend its pleadings through a brief. Plaintiffs, however, have not amended their complaint. Rather, they have confirmed that they are not pursuing certain theories that they did not plead. I thus disagree that an Amended Consolidated Complaint is needed, but I do consider the representations made by EPPs to be binding. I will not allow EPPs to revive a theory that they have foregone in their opposition papers and did not articulate in their Consolidated Complaint merely because such a theory is cognizable under a statute listed in the complaint.

Arkansas

HN4 [↑] The Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, Ark. Code Ann. §§ 4-88-101, et seq. ("ADTPA"), contains a "catch-all" provision, which prohibits "any other unconscionable, false, or deceptive act or practice in business, commerce, or trade." Id. § 4-88-107(a)(10). EPPs represent that, for this claim, their "scheme to monopolize" theory of harm is the "unconscionable" practice for which they seek to hold Allergan liable. For the reasons stated above, I reject defendant's argument that plaintiffs' claim under the ADTPA should be dismissed for failure [**17] to provide notice of the specific claim being alleged.

Federal courts are divided on whether the term "unconscionable" in the Arkansas statute includes monopolization claims—a question Arkansas courts have not addressed. Many courts, relying on the Arkansas Supreme Court's liberal construction of the statute, have concluded that the ADTPA does apply to claims of anticompetitive conduct. See, e.g., Los Gatos Mercantile, Inc v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106292, 2015 WL 4755335, at *23 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 11, 2015) (citing State ex rel. Bryant v. R & A Inv. Co., 336 Ark. 289, 985 S.W.2d 299, 302 (Ark. 1999)); In re Lithium Ion Batteries Antitrust Litig., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141358, 2014 WL 4955377, at *22-23 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 2, 2014); [*153] Sheet Metal Workers Local 441 Health & Welfare Plan v. GlaxoSmithKline, PLC, 737 F. Supp. 2d 380, 404, 405 (E.D. Pa. 2010); In re Aftermarket Filters Antitrust Litig., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104114, 2009 WL 3754041, at *9 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2009); In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 602 F. Supp. 2d 538, 583 (M.D. Pa. 2009); In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig., 350 F. Supp. 2d 160, 178 (D. Me. 2004).

Other courts, for varying reasons, have disagreed. See, e.g., In re Broiler Chicken Antitrust Litig., 290 F. Supp. 3d 772, 818-19 (N.D. Ill. 2017); In re Dairy Farmers of Am., Inc. Cheese Antitrust Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84152, 2015 WL 3988488, at *35 (N.D. Ill. June 29, 2015); In re Lidoderm Antitrust Litig., 103 F. Supp. 3d 1155, 1166-67 (N.D. Cal. 2015); In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 787 F. Supp. 2d 1036, 1042-43 (N.D. Cal. 2011); In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131002, 2010 WL 5094289, at *8 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 8, 2010).

I agree with the courts that have found that claims like those brought by EPPs here fall within the statute's scope. In fact, Sheet Metal Workers held that allegations similar to those made by EPPs in their complaint—"that [the defendant] engaged in a scheme designed to maintain its monopoly over the Wellbutrin SR market and prevent generic manufacturers from entering the market"—falls under the ADTPA's catch-all provision. See 737 F. Supp. 2d at 405.

HN5 [↑] On August 1, 2017, an amended version of the ADTPA went into effect. Under this version, a plaintiff "must prove individually that he or she suffered an actual financial loss proximately caused by his or her reliance on the use of a practice declared [**18] unlawful under this chapter." Ark. Code Ann. § 4-88-113(f)(2). Allergan argues that plaintiffs' ADTPA claim must be dismissed for failing to allege that they purchased Restasis based on their reliance on Allergan's deception. I agree that, to the extent EPPs' claim is based on purchases that occurred after August 1, 2017, it must be dismissed for failure to plead reliance.

HN6 [↑] Reliance, however, was not an element of the former version of the ADTPA. The statute previously provided that "[a]ny person who suffers actual damage or injury as a result of an offense or violation. . . has a cause of action to recover actual damages." Ark. Code Ann. § 4-88-113(f) (effective July 30, 1999). To establish a violation of the prior statute, a plaintiff must show that defendant's conduct proximately caused her injury. Ashley Cty., Ark. v. Pfizer, Inc., 552 F.3d 659, 666 (8th Cir. 2009); accord Ramithun v. Bryan Career College-Inc., 93 F. Supp. 3d 1011, 1023 (W.D. Ark. 2015). But she need not show reliance. See Pleasant v. McDaniel, 2018 Ark. App.

254, 550 S.W.3d 8, 12 \(Ark. Ct. App. 2018\) (reliance is "conspicuously missing from the elements of the ADTPA"); see also Erdman Co. v. Phoenix Land & Acquisition, LLC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99918, 2013 WL 3776373, at \*5 \(W.D. Ark. July 17, 2013\) ("[W]hile reliance is not an element, causation is.").

I find that HN7[] the amended version of the ADTPA is not retroactive, and thus the portion of EPPs' claim that relies on purchases made prior to August 1, 2017 is viable. See Mounce v. CHSPSC, LLC, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160673, 2017 WL 4392048, at \*7 \(W.D. Ark. Sept. 29, 2017\) (concluding that the amended version is not retroactive, because the statutory change is substantive, [\*\*19] not procedural). Although the Eighth Circuit recently held that even the former version of the ADTPA "required proof of reliance, even though that term was not expressly included in the statute," that was in the context of satisfying the proximate cause requirement in a deceptive advertising case. Apex Oil Co. v. Jones Stephens Corp., 881 F.3d 658, 662-63 \(8th Cir. 2018\). It was in that [\*154] context that the Eighth Circuit explained that causation is an element of an ADTPA claim and that "[c]ausation, in turn, is not possible without reliance." Id. at 662. The "reliance" requirement, however, need not and should not be read into the statute when a plaintiff brings a monopolization claim. In this case, causation under the ADTPA is established because EPPs plausibly allege that Allergan's monopolization scheme delayed the entry of generic competition and that such competition would have lowered the price of cyclosporine.

Allergan's motion to dismiss EPPs' ADTPA claim is granted to the extent that the claim includes purchases that occurred after August 1, 2017. The motion is otherwise denied.

Florida

HN8[] The Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act, Fla. Stat. §§ 501.201, et seq., proscribes antitrust violations as well as other unfair methods of competition. In re Nexium \(Esomeprazole\) Antitrust Litig., 297 F.R.D. 168, 175 \(D. Mass. 2013\) ("[C]ourts have held that the violation [\*\*20] of traditional antitrust elements constitutes a violation of the relevant [Florida] consumer protection statute."); In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., 851 F. Supp. 2d 867, 900 \(E.D. Pa. 2012\); Mack v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 673 So. 2d 100, 104 \(Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996\). And, unlike Florida's antitrust law, which follows Illinois Brick and does not allow indirect purchasers to recover damages for antitrust violations, the Unfair Trade Practices Act provides for such recovery. In re Suboxone \(Buprenorphine Hydrochloride & Naloxone\) Antitrust Litig., 64 F. Supp. 3d 665, 699 n.23 \(E.D. Pa. 2014\); In re Florida Microsoft Antitrust Litig., 2002 WL 31423620, at \*2 \(Fla. Cir. Ct. Aug. 26, 2002\).

Defendant's sole argument is that plaintiffs have failed to specify in their complaint that they are pursuing an antitrust theory under the unfair methods of competition provision. Defendant notes that the Florida statute also prohibits three other unfair trade practices. As discussed above, this argument is without merit.

Allergan's motion to dismiss the Florida claim is denied.

Hawaii

EPPs bring a claim under HN9[] Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2\(a\), which prohibits both "[u]nfair methods of competition" and "unfair or deceptive acts." Allergan seeks to dismiss this claim, arguing that it cannot determine whether EPPs allege that it engaged in both forms of prohibited conduct. EPPs clarify in their opposition that their claim relates only to "unfair methods of competition," not "unfair and deceptive acts." I find that the anticompetitive scheme described in the complaint is sufficient to state a [\*\*21] claim for unfair methods of competition under the Hawaii statute. See, e.g., In re Cast Iron Soil Pipe & Fittings Antitrust Litig., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121620, 2015 WL 5166014, at \*23 \(E.D. Tenn. June 24, 2015\); In re Aggrenox Antitrust Litig., 94 F. Supp. 3d 224, 253 \(D. Conn. 2015\); In re Dynamic Random Access Memory \(DRAM\) Antitrust Litig., 516 F. Supp. 2d 1072, 1109 \(N.D. Cal. 2007\).

Allergan also seeks dismissal of this claim based on EPPs' failure to notify the Hawaii Attorney General about their Consolidated Complaint prior to serving the complaint on Allergan. HN10[] Under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-

13.3(a)(1), consumers bringing a class action alleging unfair methods of competition under Hawaii's consumer protection law must first file their complaint in camera and under seal, and then serve it on the Attorney General of Hawaii.<sup>3</sup> This [*155] requirement sets in motion a process through which the State can decide whether it will prosecute the action on its own. § 480-13.3 \(a\)\(2\)-\(5\).

I must first determine if failure to comply with Hawaii's notice requirement would mandate dismissal in Hawaii state court. In my view, it would. HN11[] The notice requirement does not apply to claims for unfair or deceptive acts or practices, and the statute establishes that the requirement does not limit the rights of consumers who bring class actions raising such claims. § 480-13.3\(a\)-\(b\). It logically follows that, in Hawaii courts, non-compliance with the requirement does limit the rights of consumers who bring class actions that raise other claims, such as the claim [*22] brought by EPPs here. *Contra In re Aftermarket Filters, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104114, 2009 WL 3754041, at *6; In re Propranolol, 249 F. Supp. 3d 712, 728 n.24 (S.D.N.Y. 2017)*.

In any event, the issue presented here is whether Hawaii's provision, as I interpret it, bars a federal action. I therefore must decide whether Hawaii's law conflicts with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. If I find that there is no conflict, then Hawaii's law controls and the claim must be dismissed. If I conclude otherwise, then I must decide if Hawaii's law is procedural, in which case federal procedure dictates and the claim survives, unless Hawaii's procedure is "part of a State's framework of substantive rights or remedies." Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 559 U.S. 393, 419, 130 S. Ct. 1431, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 \(2010\) (Stevens, J., concurring).<sup>4</sup> HN12[] Rule 23 establishes that a class action may be maintained if plaintiffs meet various requirements, none of which includes notice to the Hawaii Attorney General. I am aware of two courts that have found that there is not a conflict between Rule 23 and Hawaii's statute. *In re Lipitor Antitrust Litig., 336 F. Supp. 3d 395, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143189, 2018 WL 4006752, at *13 (D.N.J. Aug. 21, 2018)* ("The Court finds that [Rule 23 is not 'sufficiently broad' to cover the state statutory notice provisions."); *In re Asacol Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94605, 2016 WL 4083333, at *15 (D. Mass. July 20, 2016)* (same). I find that this conclusion does not comport with Shady Grove.

In Shady Grove, the Supreme Court considered whether a New York law prohibiting class actions in any suit seeking statutory penalties precluded a federal [*23] court from exercising diversity jurisdiction over a class action seeking such damages. 559 U.S. at 397-98. The Second Circuit, using reasoning similar to that in In re Lipitor and In re Asacol, had held that the rule did not conflict with Rule 23 because "they address different issues. Rule 23 . . . concerns only the criteria for determining whether a given class [*156] can and should be certified," whereas the New York rule "addresses an antecedent question: whether the particular type of claim is eligible for class treatment in the first place—a question on which Rule 23 is silent." Id. at 399. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding that Rule 23 is not silent on the question of whether a particular claim is eligible for class treatment. The Court found, on the contrary, that Rule 23 empowers a federal court to certify a class as to any type of claim, so long as the Rule's criteria are met. Id. at 399-400, 406. Therefore, HN13[] a state law that restricts the types of claims eligible for class treatment beyond the limits established by Rule 23 conflicts with the federal rule. See id. at 401.

<sup>3</sup> EPPs note that they sent a letter to the Hawaii Attorney General on the same day that the Consolidated Complaint was filed, which was approximately four months after Allergan was served with their first complaint. This action does not comply with the statute.

<sup>4</sup> Justice Scalia's plurality opinion in Shady Grove—which adopted a bright-line rule that the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure always apply—garnered only four votes. Justice Stevens's narrower concurrence therefore governs, under the rule announced in Marks v. United States: "When a fragmented Court decides a case and no single rationale explaining the result enjoys the assent of five Justices, the holding of the Court may be viewed as that position taken by those Members who concurred in the judgments on the narrowest grounds." 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S. Ct. 990, 51 L. Ed. 2d 260 \(1977\) (internal quotation marks omitted). See, e.g., In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 812 F. Supp. 2d 390, 415 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (finding that Justice Stevens' concurrence is the controlling opinion by which interpreting courts are bound); In re Wellbutrin Antitrust Litig., 756 F. Supp. 2d 670, 675 (F.D. Pa. 2010) (same).

The situation here is identical. Hawaii's law includes a limitation on the types of claims eligible for class treatment and this limitation is absent from Rule 23. Therefore, I find that HN14<sup>15</sup> Hawaii's law conflicts with [\[\*\*24\] Rule 23](#), and I agree with the district courts that have concluded that Hawaii's requirement applies in federal court only if it is substantive, rather than procedural. See In re Propranolol, 249 F. Supp. 3d at 728; In re Aggrenox, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 253-54.

The two courts to address this question have held that Hawaii's statute is procedural, not substantive. In re Aggrenox, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 254 ("I cannot conclude on the basis of the arguments before me that the section 480-13.3 procedural prerequisites are sufficiently a 'part of a State's framework of substantive rights or remedies' to be controlling in federal court"); In re Propranolol, 249 F. Supp. 3d at 728 (finding that "the procedural rules set forth in Hawaii's antitrust statute" do not apply in federal court).

I agree. Under Justice Stevens's concurrence in Shady Grove, a state procedural rule should be applied in federal court where it "exist[s] to influence substantive outcomes and may in some instances become so bound up with the state-created right or remedy that it defines the scope of that substantive right or remedy." 559 U.S. at 419-20 (internal citations omitted). Here, Hawaii's law regulates only when private plaintiffs can litigate the case. It does not alter the substantive elements of plaintiffs' claims. Most importantly, it is surely no more substantive than the statute at issue in Shady Grove, which barred [\[\*\*25\]](#) class action suits for an entire category of claims. Id. at 396. Under Shady Grove, Rule 23 provides the procedural requirements for bringing a class action in federal court, and those are the requirements that govern here.

Allergan's motion to dismiss the Hawaii claim is denied.

Minnesota

In the Consolidated Complaint, EPPs invoke three Minnesota statutes: Minn. Stat. § 325D.51; § 325D.52; and § 8.31. Allergan moves to dismiss only plaintiffs' claim under § 8.31, claiming lack of specificity. In their opposition, EPPs clarify that they are relying on subdivisions 1 and 3a of § 8.31. Subdivision 3a establishes private rights of action for violations of the 10 Minnesota statutes, including §§ 325D.51 and 325D.52, that are listed in subdivision 1. While plaintiffs' claims were sufficiently clear in the Consolidated Complaint, their further clarification in their opposition resolved any possible ambiguity.

Allergan's motion to dismiss the Minnesota claim under § 8.31 is denied.

[*157] Missouri

EPPs allege that Allergan's anticompetitive scheme violated Missouri's consumer protection statute, the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act \("MMPA"\), Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 407.020, et seq. HN15<sup>15</sup> The MMPA prohibits "unfair" trade practices, § 407.020\(1\), which courts have found to include monopolistic conduct, such as filing sham patent litigation as alleged in the [\[\*\*26\]](#) Consolidated Complaint. Sheet Metal Workers, 737 F. Supp. 2d at 416-17; Picone v. Shire PLC, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178150, 2017 WL 4873506, at \*2, \*18 \(D. Mass. Oct. 20, 2017\). Unlike Missouri's antitrust statute, Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 416.011, et seq., the MMPA permits recovery by indirect purchasers. Picone, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178150, 2017 WL 4873506, at \*17; Gibbons v. J. Nuckolls, Inc., 216 S.W.3d 667, 669 \(Mo. 2007\).

HN16<sup>15</sup> The statute, however, applies only to claims by "[a]ny person who purchases or leases merchandise primarily for personal, family, or household purposes and thereby suffers an ascertainable loss of money or property." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.025.1. Allergan argues that EPPs thus lack standing because they are health and welfare funds, which purchase Restasis® for use by their members, as opposed to the members themselves.<sup>5</sup> EPPs respond that the statute's text does not specify that the purchase must be for one's own personal use, and that plaintiffs are purchasing Restasis® on behalf of their members, who are using it for personal or familial purposes.

Numerous courts have interpreted the MMPA to confer standing exclusively on those who purchase property for their own use. See, e.g., In re Asacol, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94605, 2016 WL 4083333, at *12; Los Gatos Mercantile, Inc., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106292, 2015 WL 4755335, at *23; In re Actimmune Marketing Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90480, 2010 WL 3463491, at *12 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 1, 2010); In re Express Scripts, Inc., Pharmacy Benefits Mgmt. Litig., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65168, 2006 WL 2632328, at *10 (E.D. Mo. Sept. 13, 2006). These courts reason that, when an insurance plan makes a purchase, it does so, not for personal purposes, but for the plan's business purposes, i.e., to fulfill its side of a contractual relationship with its members, who pay premiums for its coverage. E.g., In re Express Scripts, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65168, 2006 WL 2632328, at *10. EPPs have not pointed to any authority supporting [**27] their position. I thus join the other district courts to have considered this question and hold that the MMPA does not confer standing on plaintiffs.

Defendant's motion to dismiss EPPs' Missouri claim is granted.

2. In-State Impact under Tennessee and Wisconsin Law

Allergan argues that the Consolidated Complaint fails to state a claim with respect to EPPs' antitrust claims under Tennessee and Wisconsin law. Each of these laws applies only if a defendant's out-of-state conduct had a "substantial" effect on the state. Freeman Indus., LLC v. Eastman Chem. Co., 172 S.W.3d 512, 523 (Tenn. 2005); Meyers v. Bayer Ag, 2007 WI 99, 303 Wis. 2d 295, 735 N.W.2d 448, 451 (Wis. 2007). EPPs allege that Restasis® is a widely purchased drug in every state, with $1.5 billion in sales in the U.S. in 2016, but, as Allergan points out, the complaint does not specifically reference the scope of harm in Tennessee or Wisconsin.

Allergan's precise argument was rejected in Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 260 F.R.D. 143, 166 (E.D. Pa. 2009):

[*158] The Court recognizes that the allegations of the amended complaint contain little information as to the specific impact of the defendants' alleged conduct with respect to any particular state. However, the plaintiffs allege overcharges on a substantial amount of Wellbutrin XL across the United States, including Tennessee, and the Court will not dismiss the plaintiffs' Tennessee claims at this [**28] time for failure to allege the specific extent of any impact on the Tennessee economy. The Court finds that the amended complaint contains facts that "raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of" a substantial effect on the Tennessee economy sufficient to prove a claim under that state's antitrust law. Twombly, 127 S.Ct. at 1965.

I agree with, and adopt, this reasoning.

Defendant's motion to dismiss the claims under Tennessee and Wisconsin law is denied.

B. Plaintiffs' State Law Consumer Protection Claims

Plaintiffs' Third Claim for Relief is premised on the theory that Allergan acted in a manner that was unfair, unconscionable, and deceptive in that it misled the USPTO, the FDA, the courts, and the public about the validity of the second-wave Restasis® patents, causing consumers to overpay. EPPs do not plead, and explicitly state in their opposition that they are not pursuing, any claims based on fraudulent misrepresentations to consumers. (Mem. in Opp. at 17.) EPPs invoke the consumer protection laws of five states—Arkansas, California, Colorado, <sup>5</sup> It is undisputed that "person" is defined to include corporate entities, associations, and agents. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.010(5). Allergan contends only that the statute does not apply to plaintiffs because they did not purchase Restasis® primarily for their own purposes.

Pennsylvania, and Vermont—to provide the basis for their third claim. Defendant has moved to dismiss these claims.

Arkansas

Just as they did [**29] to support their claim of antitrust liability under the ADTPA, plaintiffs rely on that statute's catch-all provision, Ark. Code Ann. § 4-88-107\(a\)\(1\), and specifically its proscription of "unconscionable" business practices, to support a consumer protection theory of liability. Although they cite the same language of the statute to support both their Second and Third Claims, plaintiffs assert that their claims are not redundant. At oral argument, plaintiffs expressed the view that a jury could find Allergan's actions unconscionable, but not necessarily anticompetitive. In any event, HN17 [↑] a plaintiff may plead claims in the alternative, and therefore there is no basis to dismiss either one of these claims on the ground of redundancy. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(d\)\(2\)-\(3\) (plaintiffs "may set out 2 or more statements of a claim . . . alternatively or hypothetically, either in a single count or in separate ones . . . regardless of consistency").

Defendant again argues that EPPs' claim must fail because the ADTPA expressly requires reliance, which plaintiffs have not pled. As discussed above, supra pp. 7-8, I agree with defendant that plaintiffs cannot pursue damages concerning any purchases that occurred after August 1, 2017, because of EPPs' failure to plead reliance. [**30] Otherwise, I reject defendant's argument. In the context of this case, plaintiffs have adequately pled causation because they have alleged that defendant's actions slowed the entry of generic versions of Restasis® into the marketplace, causing them harm.

Allergan's motion to dismiss this claim is granted to the extent that the claim includes purchases that occurred after August 1, 2017. The motion is otherwise denied.

[*159] California

HN18 [↑] California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL") prohibits any business act or practice that is "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Plaintiffs assert that Allergan's conduct violated the first two prongs—unlawful and unfair. The law is "sweeping in scope." Sheet Metal Workers, 737 F. Supp. 2d at 406; see also Saavedra v. Eli Lilly & Co., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 173055, 2013 WL 6345442, at \*5 \(C.D. Cal. Feb. 26, 2013\). Claims of monopolization via sham litigation and citizen petitions fall within the UCL's scope. In re Wellbutrin XL, 260 F.R.D. at 160; Sheet Metal Workers, 737 F. Supp. 2d at 406.

Defendant argues that the statute requires reliance when the claim is based on a misrepresentation. But "reliance on misrepresentations, as opposed to causation more generally, is [not] required for UCL claims which fall under the unfair or unlawful prongs." In re Ditropan XL Antitrust Litig., 529 F. Supp. 2d 1098, 1105 \(N.D. Cal. 2007\). In a case involving a claim of a misrepresentation about a product, a plaintiff must show that she relied on that representation in purchasing the [**31] product in order to establish causation. Moore v. Apple, Inc., 73 F. Supp. 3d 1191, 1200 \(N.D. Cal. Nov. 10, 2014\). Here, however, causation is established if Allergan's actions prevented generic competitors from entering the market. (See Sept. 18, 2018 Op. and Order at 33-36.) Plaintiffs need not plead reliance.

Defendant's motion to dismiss the UCL claim is denied.

Colorado

EPPs bring a claim under HN19 [↑] Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-1-105\(1\), the "deceptive trade practices" section of the Colorado Consumer Protection Act \("CCPA"\). This provision prohibits numerous, enumerated trade practices and does not contain a "catch-all" provision. Thus, "a plaintiff stating a [CCPA] claim must allege that the conduct in question falls into at least one of those categories." Overturf v. Rocky Mountain Chocolate Factory, Inc., 2009 U.S.

Dist. LEXIS 140924, 2009 WL 10675269, at *6 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 13, 2009); accord Nauert v. Ace Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34497, 2005 WL 2085544, at *5 (D. Colo. Aug. 27, 2005).

EPPs assert that Allergan engaged in deceptive trade practices under HN20 [§ 6-1-105(1)(e)], which prohibits "knowingly mak[ing] a false representation as to the characteristics, ingredients, uses, [or] benefits. . . of goods," when it misrepresented facts to the USPTO to obtain the second-wave patents and misrepresented the validity of the patents to the FDA. See In re DDAVP Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 903 F. Supp. 2d 198, 223-24 (S.D.N.Y. 2012) (holding that deceptive citizen petitions to the FDA as well as fraudulent representations to the USPTO are actionable under this subsection of the CCPA, and that the deceptive conduct does [**32] not need to be aimed at consumers). Allergan argues that the Consolidated Complaint is not sufficiently specific to provide notice of that claim, given that it cites only to the entire consumer protection statute, which covers more than 50 types of deceptive conduct. See § 6-1-105(1). For the reasons stated above with regard to plaintiffs' antitrust claims, I do not find this argument convincing. And, I am persuaded by the reasoning in In re DDAVP and find that EPPs' allegations state a claim under § 6-1-105(1)(e) of the CCPA.

EPPs also assert that Allergan engaged in unfair trade practices, and that these, too, are prohibited by the CCPA. The word "unfair" appears in only one place in the CCPA, when it states that "[t]he deceptive trade practices listed in this section are in addition to and do not limit the types of unfair trade practices [*160] actionable at common law or under other statutes of this state." § 6-1-105(3). The statute therefore does not appear to proscribe unfair trade practices, but only deceptive ones.

Despite the statutory language, some courts have found that, to satisfy the first element of a CCPA claim, a plaintiff may show that the defendant engaged "in an unfair or deceptive trade practice." In re Liquid Aluminum Sulfate Antitrust Litig., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115294, 2017 WL 3131977, at *26 (D. N.J. July 20, 2017) (emphasis added); In re DDAVP, 903 F. Supp. 2d at 223. These [**33] cases rely on Rhino Linings USA, Inc. v. Rocky Mountain Rhino Lining, Inc., 62 P.3d 142, 146-47 (Colo. 2003), which does state that an unfair or deceptive trade practice is an element of a CCPA claim.

I agree, however, with the conclusion in Sheet Metal Workers, 737 F. Supp. 2d at 406-08, that there is no standalone claim under the CCPA for an "unfair" trade practice. The Sheet Metal Workers court observed that the insertion of "an unfair or" in Rhino Linings' articulation of the first element of a CCPA claim is dictum. See id. at 407-08. It further noted that the plaintiffs, like EPPs here, "provide no Colorado or other case where a plaintiff proceeded with a CCPA claim based on an unfair but not deceptive trade practice." 737 F. Supp. 2d at 408; accord In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp., 350 F. Supp. 2d at 180 n.28.

Because EPPs have stated a claim for a deceptive trade practice, defendant's motion to dismiss the CCPA claim is denied. However, insofar as plaintiffs bring a separate claim for unfair trade practices under the statute, it is dismissed.

Pennsylvania

Plaintiffs bring a claim under the Pennsylvania Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law ("UTPCPL"), 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1, et seq. In the Consolidated Complaint, EPPs allege that Allergan violated § 201-3 by engaging in "unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices." Allergan initially notes that the UTPCPL defines "unfair methods of competition" and "unfair [**34] or deceptive acts or practices" to include 20 enumerated types of conduct, as well as a catch-all provision prohibiting "any other fraudulent or deceptive conduct which creates a likelihood of confusion or misunderstanding." § 201-2(4). While EPPs do not specify in the Consolidated Complaint whether they rely on one of the enumerated types of conduct or the catch-all provision, they clarify in their opposition that their theory is that Allergan was deceptive when it filed sham citizen petitions and patent infringement lawsuits in an attempt to retain its monopoly, as alleged in the Consolidated Complaint.

As Allergan argues, however, this theory is not covered by the UTPCPL. A claim for deceptive conduct under that statute requires a plaintiff to plead reliance, and EPPs here do not allege that they bought Restasis® in reliance on Allergan's misrepresentations. See Hunt V. U.S. Tobacco Co., 538 F.3d 217, 222 n.4 (3d Cir. 2008); Plumbers' Local Union No. 690 Health Plan v. Apotex Corp., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 156443, 2017 WL 4235773, at *6-8 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 25, 2017). Hunt was a putative class action alleging that the defendant tobacco company "engaged in anticompetitive behavior that artificially inflated the price of the company's moist smokeless tobacco products, causing purchasers to pay . . . more than they would have paid in an efficient market." 538 F.3d at 219. The Third Circuit stated that HN21↑ the "Supreme [**35] Court of Pennsylvania has consistently interpreted the Consumer Protection Law's private-plaintiff standing provision's causation requirement to demand a showing of justifiable reliance, not simply a causal connection between the [*161] misrepresentation and the harm." Id. at 222. It then clarified in a footnote that Id. at 222 n.4 (citing Weinberg v. Sun Co., Inc., 565 Pa. 612, 777 A.2d 442, 445-46 (Pa. 2001)); accord Toy v. Metro. Life Ins. Co., 593 Pa. 20, 928 A.2d 186, 202 (Pa. 2007) ("Weinberg necessarily states that a plaintiff alleging violations of the Consumer Protection Law must prove justifiable reliance.").

[a] mere causal connection can be established by, for instance, proof that a misrepresentation inflated a product's price, thereby injuring every purchaser because he paid more than he would have paid in the absence of the misrepresentation. A justifiable-reliance requirement, by contrast, requires the plaintiff to go further—he must show that he justifiably bought the product in the first place (or engaged in some other detrimental activity) because of the misrepresentation.

Here, plaintiffs have alleged a causal connection, but they have not alleged that they bought the product as a result of Allergan's misrepresentations to the USPTO or the FDA. Their argument that they have alleged enough to establish a claim under the UTPCPL was expressly [\[\*36\]](#) rejected in Hunt. EPPs rely on Sheet Metal Workers, which held that the allegation that defendant filed sham patent infringement lawsuits to retain their monopoly was sufficient to state a claim under this Pennsylvania statute. 737 F. Supp. 2d at 421. I am not, however, persuaded by that court's reasoning, which fails to address both Weinberg and Toy.

Because justifiable reliance is an element of any claim under the UTPCPL, EPPs' claim under this provision is dismissed.

Vermont

EPPs bring a claim under HN22↑ the Vermont Consumer Fraud Act ("VCFA"), 9 V.S.A. § 2461(b), which allows "[a]ny consumer who contracts for goods . . . in reliance upon false or fraudulent representations . . . or who sustains damages or injury as a result of any false or fraudulent representations . . . [to] sue and recover from the seller . . . the amount of his or her damages[.]". Defendant argues that EPPs are not "consumers" because the VCFA defines a consumer as, in relevant part, "any person who purchases . . . goods or services not for resale in the ordinary course of his or her trade or business but for his or her use or benefit or the use or benefit of a member of his or her household. . . ." Id. § 2451a\(a\). This definition, Allergan argues, leaves out EPPs, [\[\*37\]](#) who purchased Restasis® not for their own use or benefit, but in the ordinary course of their business pursuant to the contractual relationship between them and their members.

EPPs counter that the Vermont Supreme Court has held "that business entities are entitled to the same rights under the Act as other consumers." Rathe Salvage, Inc. v. R. Brown & Sons, Inc., 184 Vt. 355, 965 A.2d 460, 467 (Vt. 2008). This misses the point. If a business entity purchased a good or service for its own benefit, it would have standing to sue under the statute. Here, however, the EPPs did not purchase Restasis® for themselves. In re Aggrenox Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104647, 2016 WL 4204478, at *9 (D. Conn. Aug. 9, 2016) ("[The VCFA's] definition of 'consumer' allows businesses to sue as consumers with respect to the products they use as consumers. The fact that [plaintiff's] members are consumers, and that [plaintiff] co-purchases or reimburses for consumer products that its members use, does not make [plaintiff] a consumer of those products."). Plaintiffs have cited no case showing that, under these circumstances, they constitute consumers.

[*162] Because EPPs lack standing to bring a claim under the VCFA, this claim is dismissed.<sup>6</sup>

V. CONCLUSION

Allergan's motion to dismiss EPPs' antitrust claims, in their Second Claim for Relief in the Consolidated Complaint, brought under Missouri and [*38] Puerto Rico law is granted, and those claims are dismissed. Allergan's motion to dismiss plaintiffs' antitrust claim brought under Arkansas law is granted to the extent that the claim includes purchases that occurred after August 1, 2017. Allergan's motion to dismiss the remaining state law claims in the Second Claim for Relief is denied.

Allergan's motion to dismiss EPPs' consumer protection law claims, in their Third Claim for Relief in the Consolidated Complaint, brought under Pennsylvania and Vermont law is granted, and those claims are dismissed. Allergan's motion to dismiss plaintiffs' consumer protection claims brought under Arkansas law is granted to the extent that the claim includes purchases that occurred after August 1, 2017. Insofar as plaintiffs allege a claim for an unfair trade practice, as distinct from a claim for a deceptive trade practice, under Colorado Law, such a claim is dismissed. Allergan's motion to dismiss the remaining state law claims in the Third Claim for Relief is denied.

<sup>6</sup> Because I find that EPPs lack standing, I do not consider defendant's alternative argument that plaintiffs' VCFA claim must be dismissed because they have not alleged that Allergan's misrepresentations caused them to buy Restasis®.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING WITHOUT PREJUDICE IN PART DEFENDANT NEXTERA ENERGY, INC.'S MOTION TO DISMISS SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT, ECF NO. 148*I. INTRODUCTION

Defendant NextEra Energy, Inc. ("NextEra") moves to dismiss the Second Amended Complaint ("SAC") in this antitrust and breach-of-contract action arising out of the cancellation of Plaintiff Hu Honua Bioenergy, LLC's ("Plaintiff" or "Hu Honua") power purchase agreement ("PPA") with co-Defendant Hawaii Electric Light Company, Inc. ("HELCO"). HELCO had agreed to purchase wholesale power from Hu Honua, which was building an independent power plant run on biomass on the Big Island of Hawaii. HELCO cancelled the PPA, allegedly as part of an illegal antitrust conspiracy with NextEra and others, after problems arose with Hu Honua's construction of the power plant (although HELCO and Hu Honua have since renegotiated the PPA).

Hu Honua filed the SAC after the court's January 19, 2018 Amended Order (the "January 19th Order"), which granted in part motions by NextEra and former co-Defendant Hamakua Energy [*3] Partners, L.P. ("HEP") to dismiss the First Amended Complaint ("FAC").<sup>1</sup> See ECF No. 137; Hu Honua Bioenergy, LLC v. Hawaiian Elec. Indus., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780 (D. Haw. Jan. 19, 2018). The January 19th Order, among other matters, dismissed federal antitrust claims — two counts alleging violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2 — against NextEra and HEP, with leave to amend to attempt to rectify the identified deficiencies. Accordingly, Hu Honua filed the SAC on January 29, 2018. ECF No. 138. On March 13, 2018, NextEra moved to dismiss those realleged claims with prejudice. ECF No. 148. Hu Honua filed an Opposition on April 13, 2018, and NextEra filed its Reply on April 27, 2018. ECF Nos. 156, 157. The court heard the Motion on July 9, 2018. ECF No. 180. Based on the following, NextEra's Motion is GRANTED as to the federal claims. It is DENIED without prejudice as to the state claims — claims over which the court intends to decline supplemental jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1337(c)(3).

II. DISCUSSION

The January 19th Order comprehensively set forth the factual and legal background of this complicated action involving Hawaii's electric utility market, NextEra's proposed 2014 merger with HEICO, HELCO's 2015 termination (and subsequent [*4] renegotiation) of the PPA, and HELCO's proposed purchase of a HEP facility. The instant Order does not repeat that background, and the court presumes a detailed familiarity with its prior Order. The court discusses new allegations in the SAC only as necessary to address NextEra's present motion, and otherwise relies on the January 19th Order for the context. The court proceeds directly to NextEra's arguments.

A. Count One — Conspiracy to Monopolize

<sup>1</sup> On July 8, 2018, Hu Honua and HEP entered into a binding settlement, see ECF No. 179, and Hu Honua dismissed claims against HEP with prejudice, see ECF No. 177. Although HEP had filed its own motion to dismiss the SAC, it withdrew that motion and others in conjunction with the settlement, see ECF Nos. 174, 175. This Order thus focuses solely on NextEra's motion.

Similarly, Hu Honua and co-Defendants Hawaiian Electric Industries ("HEI"), Hawaiian Electric Company ("HECO") and HELCO (collectively, "the Hawaiian Electric Defendants") previously reached a settlement in May 2017 in conjunction with a renegotiated PPA, as Hu Honua completes construction of its power plant. See ECF Nos. 88, 122. Consummation of the settlement with the Hawaiian Electric Defendants is still awaiting final completion of the approval process involving the Hawaii Public Utilities Commission ("PUC") and a related state court appeal, Life of the Land v. Public Utilities Comm'n, et al., App. No. SCOT-17-0000630 (Haw. Sup. Ct.).

Count One of the SAC realleges a claim for conspiracy to monopolize under 15 U.S.C. § 2, which makes it illegal for someone to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States[.]"<sup>2</sup> "To prove a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of § 2, [a plaintiff] must show four elements: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) the specific intent to monopolize; and (4) causal antitrust injury." Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1158 \(9th Cir. 2003\) (citation omitted).

The January 19th Order dismissed the conspiracy to monopolize claim (the FAC's Count [*5] One) for two primary reasons: (1) a lack of plausible factual allegations of a "specific intent to monopolize" the market for wholesale firm power generation on the Big Island; and (2) a lack of "causal antitrust injury." Hu Honua Bioenergy, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780, at \*8-9. Relatedly, the court also dismissed the FAC's Count Two, alleging conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1 because the FAC did not plausibly allege an illegal conspiracy, [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, \[WL\] at \*14-15](#)—and that reasoning was also sufficient to dismiss Count One for conspiracy to monopolize as well. See, e.g., Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1576 \(11th Cir. 1991\) ("[A] section 1 claim and a section 2 conspiracy to monopolize claim require the same threshold showing—the existence of an agreement to restrain trade."); IIIB Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application ¶ 809 (4th ed. 2015) (hereinafter "Areeda & Hovenkamp") ("Any arrangement that could be considered a 'conspiracy' to monopolize under [§ 2] must necessarily also be an unreasonable 'contract,' 'combination,' or 'conspiracy' in restraint of trade offending § 1.").

The SAC's conspiracy to monopolize claim fails for the same fundamental reasons. That is, the SAC has not cured the FAC's deficiencies.

1. An Implausible Conspiracy

Initially, the SAC [*6] still alleges an implausible illegal antitrust conspiracy. Despite the SAC's amendments, two crucial facts remain that are inconsistent with Hu Honua's antitrust theory: Hu Honua's own failure to complete its power plant under the PPA's terms; and the NextEra/HEI Merger Agreement's prohibition of NextEra's "control" of decisions like HELCO's cancellation of the PPA or proposed purchase of HEP's power plant.

<sup>2</sup>The court only considered Count One of the FAC as to NextEra as a claim for conspiracy to monopolize. See Hu Honua Bioenergy, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780, at \*8. To the extent the FAC asserted claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization (as opposed to conspiracy to monopolize), the court dismissed those claims with prejudice for two reasons. First, NextEra (a Florida utility) was never a competitor with Hu Honua in the relevant market (the Big Island). See, e.g., Name.Space, Inc. v. Internet Corp. for Assigned Names & Numbers, 795 F.3d 1124, 1131 \(9th Cir. 2015\); Spanish Broad. Sys. of Fla., Inc. v. Clear Channel Commc'n's, Inc., 376 F.3d 1065, 1075 \(11th Cir. 2004\). And second, Hu Honua conceded that it was only asserting a conspiracy-based claim. See Hu Honua Bioenergy, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780, at \*8 (citing ECF No. 109, Pl.'s Opp'n at 34-35 n.8). The SAC again appears to plead monopolization and attempted monopolization claims, and the claims are again dismissed with prejudice for the same reasons stated in the January 19th Order. Hu Honua need not have repledged those claims if it was seeking to preserve them for appeal. See, e.g., Lacey v. Maricopa Cty., 693 F.3d 896, 928 \(9th Cir. 2012\) (en banc) ("For claims dismissed with prejudice and without leave to amend, we will not require that they be pled in a subsequent amended complaint to preserve them for appeal.").

In this regard, NextEra points to cases indicating that a conspiracy to monopolize claim also fails if the defendant was not a competitor in the relevant market. See, e.g., Portney v. CIBA Vision Corp., 593 F. Supp. 2d 1120, 1128 \(C.D. Cal. 2008\) ("It is axiomatic in antitrust law that a defendant may not be found liable for monopolizing or attempting or conspiring to monopolize a market unless that defendant is a competitor in the relevant market and his conduct creates a dangerous probability that he will gain a dominant share of the market.") (quoting Transphase Sys. v. S. Cal. Edison Co., 839 F. Supp. 711, 717 \(C.D. Cal. 1993\) (emphasis added)). But other authority disagrees, reasoning that in some circumstances a non-competitor can conspire to monopolize a market. See Spanish Broad. Sys., 376 F.3d at 1078 n.10 ("Nothing in our case law suggests that a conspiracy [to monopolize] must be limited solely to market participants so long as the conspiracy also involves a market participant and the non-participant has an incentive to join the conspiracy.") (citation omitted). Because Hu Honua's conspiracy to monopolize claim fails for several other reasons, the court need not decide whether it also fails on this ground.

a. Hu Honua's Initial Breach of the PPA

The fact that Hu Honua failed to complete its power plant under the PPA's terms provides an "obvious alternative explanation" (i.e., besides an illegal conspiracy) for HELCO's cancellation of the PPA. See, e.g., Eclectic Props. E., LLC, 751 F.3d 990, 996 \(9th Cir. 2014\) ("When considering plausibility, courts must also consider an 'obvious alternative explanation,' for defendant's behavior.") (quoting Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 682, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\)); Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 567, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\) ("[I]t was not suggestive of conspiracy . . . [where] we have an obvious alternative explanation."). The SAC continues to acknowledge that Hu Honua was unable to complete its biomass power plant as required by the express terms of the PPA. As with the FAC, the SAC explains that labor disputes, financing problems, and litigation with its construction contractors—all completely independent of NextEra, [*7] and its proposed merger with HEKO — "caused an extended loss of time and delayed the completion of construction of the Hu Honua Facility, setting in motion the chain of events leading to this Complaint." SAC ¶ 75. These events "caused an irretrievable loss of time in the construction of the Hu Honua Facility," such that Hu Honua "would not be able to achieve two milestone[] dates set forth in the PPA." Id. ¶ 126. Thus, rather than inferring an illegal antitrust conspiracy from the timing of the proposed merger, the SAC itself explains the obvious alternative explanation for HELCO's termination of the PPA — Hu Honua's own nonperformance—rendering Hu Honua's conspiracy allegations implausible. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 567.

And (as also explained in the January 19th Order) if HELCO unreasonably refused to extend milestone construction dates in accordance with the PPA, this might form the basis for a breach of contract claim against the Hawaiian Electric Defendants, but not for an antitrust conspiracy claim. See, e.g., Schuylkill Energy Res., Inc. v. Penn. Power & Light Co., 113 F.3d 405, 418 \(3d Cir. 1997\) ("The fundamental dispute . . . concerns the interpretation of the Power Purchase Agreement. This dispute should be resolved pursuant to common-law contract principles" not through antitrust laws); [*8] Orion Pictures Distrib. Corp. v. Syufy Enters., 829 F.2d 946, 949 \(9th Cir. 1987\) ("Orion has suffered a breach of contract, not an antitrust injury.").

b. The Merger Agreement's Consent Provisions

Second, as with the FAC, the consent provisions of the NextEra/HEI Merger Agreement (whereby HELCO/HEKO needed NextEra's prior consent before "enter[ing] into, terminat[ing] or amend[ing] in any material respect any material Contract," SAC ¶ 84) cannot alone constitute the necessary "combination or conspiracy" to monopolize. Paladin Assocs., Inc., 328 F.3d at 1158. This is because the Merger Agreement also provides that such consent "shall not be unreasonably withheld, conditioned or delayed," ECF No. 73-3 at 5, Merger Agreement at 38, and it specifies:

No Control of [HEI's] Business. [NextEra] acknowledges and agrees that (i) nothing contained in this Agreement is intended to give [NextEra], directly or indirectly, the right to control or direct the operations of [HEI] or an [HEI] Subsidiary prior to the Effective Time and . . . prior to the Effective Time, [HEI] shall exercise, consistent with the terms and conditions of this Agreement, complete control and supervision over its and [HEI's] Subsidiaries' respective operations.

ECF No. 73-3 at 10, Merger Agreement at 43. That is, the Merger Agreement itself precludes [*9] control, and so — without more — it cannot form the basis of an illegal agreement in violation of antitrust laws.

It remains true, as the court previously explained, that:

Rather than establishing unbridled control by NextEra (and its joinder in an illegal conspiracy), the [Merger Agreement] itself establishes no more than NextEra's routine consent in HELCO's decision. That is, the [SAC] "just as easily suggests rational, legal business behavior" by NextEra, rather than an illegal conspiracy to restrain trade. See Kendall Jv. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1049 \(9th Cir. 2008\) ("Allegations of facts that could just as easily suggest rational, legal business behavior by the defendants as they could suggest an illegal conspiracy are insufficient to plead a violation of the antitrust laws.").

*Hu Honua Bioenergy, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780, at *14.* See also Name.Space, Inc. v. Internet Corp. for Assigned Names & Numbers, 795 F.3d 1124, 1130 (9th Cir. 2015).

2. No Specific Intent to Monopolize

Moreover, even accepting that NextEra and the Hawaiian Electric Defendants had some sort of an agreement regarding termination of the PPA, the SAC still fails to allege plausibly that NextEra had the "specific intent to monopolize" such that an agreement could have been part of an illegal antitrust conspiracy. See Paladin Assocs., Inc., 328 F.3d at 1158 ("To prove a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of § 2, [a plaintiff] must show . . . the [*10] specific intent to monopolize").

As to the FAC, Hu Honua argued that HECO terminated other independent power purchase agreements on Oahu (in the same time frame that HELCO terminated the Hu Honua PPA and sought to acquire HEP's facility on the Big Island) as part of a larger strategy — shared with NextEra—to plan for liquid natural gas sources of power after the proposed merger. The January 19th Order concluded, however, that such a common motive to increase profits did not indicate that NextEra had a "specific intent to monopolize" the wholesale power market on the Big Island. See *Hu Honua Bioenergy, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780, at *9* ("[T]here are no facts pled that would suggest NextEra specifically intended to monopolize that market[] merely by consenting to HELCO's termination of the Hu Honua PPA.") (citing Rebel Oil Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421 (9th Cir. 1995), and Syufy Enters. v. Am. Multicinema, Inc., 793 F.2d 990 (9th Cir. 1986)). This court reasoned that "[i]t is not enough to show that [a defendant] merely agreed to go along." Id. (quoting Rebel Oil Co., 51 F.3d at 1438 n.8). "[I]t is not enough to suggest—as Hu Honua does — that NextEra shared a motive to increase prices or profits with a similar strategy." Id. (citation omitted). "Motivation to enter a conspiracy is never enough to establish a traditional conspiracy." Id. (quoting VI Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1411 (4th ed. 2017)). [*11]

The SAC adds further allegations detailing HEI's liquid natural gas strategy, purportedly in conjunction with the proposed merger and at the direction of NextEra. See, e.g., SAC ¶¶ 87, 88, 92, 94, 99, 103, 105, 107, 117, 119, 120, 122. But, as NextEra argues, these allegations continue to relate to other markets (Oahu), other products (liquid natural gas), and are largely directed at other Defendants (the Hawaiian Electric Defendants). And although these new allegations, like those in the FAC, might further indicate a motivation for why NextEra would agree to actions of HELCO (cancellation of the PPA, purchase of HEP's facility) during the relevant time period, they still do not indicate a specific intent on NextEra's part to monopolize the wholesale power market on the Big Island. Again, motivation is not enough. Rebel Oil Co., 51 F.3d at 1438 n.8; *Hu Honua Bioenergy, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780, at *9*.

There is nothing inherently wrong (at least for the alleged antitrust purposes) with this alleged liquid natural gas strategy. It is a legitimate business purpose. And it is well-settled that,

[i]n proving specific intent, a mere intention to prevail over rivals or improve market position is insufficient. Even an intent to perform acts that can be objectively viewed as tending [*12] toward the acquisition of monopoly power is insufficient, unless it also appears that the acts were not "predominantly motivated by legitimate business aims."

Pa. Dental Ass'n v. Med. Serv. Ass'n of Pa., 745 F.2d 248, 260-61 (3d Cir. 1984) (quoting Times Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 627, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953)). "[T]he mere intention to exclude competition and to expand one's own business is not sufficient to show a specific intent to monopolize." Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Co., 791 F.2d 532, 541 (7th Cir. 1986).

3. No Antitrust Injury

The SAC's conspiracy to monopolize claim also fails for an independent reason—the lack of the required "causal antitrust injury." Paladin Assocs., Inc., 328 F.3d at 1158. This element is directed towards injury to "competition not competitors." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977) (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). "[A]ntitrust laws protect the process of competition, and not the pursuits of any particular competitor[.]" Cascade Health Sols. v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 901 (9th Cir. 2008).

The January 19th Order concluded that the FAC did not establish harm to competition for two primary reasons: First, as the FAC acknowledged, Hu Honua's proposed biomass power plant is a "qualifying facility" ("QF") under the federal Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act ("PURPA") (codified in part at 16 U.S.C. §§ 2601 et seq.), and such QFs are entitled to receive special rate and regulatory treatment. *Hu Honua Bioenergy, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780, at *9*. And second, the alleged injury — consumers being forced to pay supra-competitive prices for power—was both speculative and controlled by the PUC. *2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, [WL] at *11*. Both reasons [*13] remain.

a. Qualifying Facility Under PURPA

Like the FAC, the SAC alleges that "[t]he Hu Honua facility is a QF because it is a generating facility of 80 MW or less whose primary energy source is biomass, and [Hu Honua] has filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission a notice of self-certification." SAC ¶ 45. As the January 19th Order explained, under PURPA, "Congress has sought to encourage the development of qualifying facilities by insulating them from competition." *Hu Honua Bioenergy, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780, at *10* (quoting Greensboro Lumber Co. v. Georgia Power Co., 643 F. Supp. 1345, 1373 (N.D. Ga. 1986)). "PURPA was created as a vehicle to reduce the nation's dependency on foreign oil and to conserve energy, not to foster competition." Kamine/Besicorp Allegany L.P. v. Rochester Gas & Elec. Corp., 908 F. Supp. 1194, 1204 (W.D.N.Y. 1995). In particular, PURPA and its implementing regulations (both federal and state) guarantee prices and markets. See, e.g., Greensboro Lumber Co., 643 F. Supp. at 1373 ("[I]n the wholesale market, PURPA establishes a guaranteed price which is equal to, or greater than, the price that would be received in a competitive market. In addition to providing a guaranteed price to qualifying facilities, PURPA also provides a guaranteed market for the power generated by qualifying facilities by making it a requirement that utilities purchase available energy and capacity from qualifying facilities before buying power from anywhere [*14] else[.]").<sup>3</sup>

As such, case law uniformly holds that PURPA power producers do not harm competition under antitrust laws, even if they might otherwise illegally harm competitors. See, e.g., Schuylkill Energy, 113 F.3d at 415 (finding no antitrust injury because, under PURPA's regime, "state and federal laws prohibit [plaintiff] from competing in the relevant market"); Kamine/Besicorp Allegany L.P., 908 F. Supp. at 1207 (finding no antitrust injury at a preliminary injunction stage, reasoning in part that "[t]he PPA, which [PURPA-producer] Kamine is attempting to enforce, was not created as a result of market forces or a competitive process; it is a creature of a statutory scheme [(PURPA)] set up for reasons that have nothing to do with competition per se"); Crossroads Cogeneration Corp. v. Orange & Rockland Utils., Inc., 969 F. Supp. 907, 915 (D.N.J. 1997) (finding no antitrust injury in action brought by PURPA power producer, reasoning that "Defendant's actions may have caused injury to plaintiff, but they did not cause injury to competition in a defined market [and was] not the sort of injury the antitrust laws were meant to prevent"), rev'd on other grounds, 159 F.3d 129 (3d Cir. 1998).

<sup>3</sup> "[S]ection 210(a) of PURPA directed the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ('FERC') to promulgate rules mandating that electric utilities purchase energy from QFs." Allco Renewable Energy Ltd. v. Mass. Elec. Co., 875 F.3d 64, 67 (1st Cir. 2017) (citing 16 U.S.C. § 824a-3(a)). "In accordance with this directive, FERC promulgated regulations requiring utilities to purchase electricity from QFs 'at a rate equal to the utility's full avoided cost.'" Id. (citations omitted). "Crucially, given section 210's purpose, the avoided cost rate 'usually exceeds the market price for wholesale power.' Additionally, section 210(f) of PURPA instructs state regulatory authorities to implement these FERC rules." Id. (quoting Portland GE v. FERC, 854 F.3d 692, 695, 428 U.S. App. D.C. 340 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (other citations omitted)).

The SAC does not cure the failure to allege plausible antitrust injury (injury to competition in the relevant market). To be sure, the SAC adds several paragraphs of allegations regarding QFs under PURPA, [*15] claiming that Hu Honua actually "competed" in the wholesale market for firm power. See SAC ¶¶ 44 to 53. It alleges that:

Under federal law, there are two primary ways that a QF can sell power to a utility: (a) through a contract obtained under the PURPA "mandatory buy" rule, or (b) through an otherwise-negotiated contract. The "mandatory buy" rule requires utilities to purchase power from QFs at rates that are "just and reasonable" and that "do not discriminate against [QFs]." A rate satisfies these requirements if it is equivalent to the utility's avoided costs.

Id. ¶ 46. "Alternatively, a QF is free to enter into a contract to sell power to a utility at a negotiated rate." Id. ¶ 47 (citing 18 C.F.R. § 292.301).

Hu Honua elected to enter into a negotiated rate contract with HELCO. Thus, the PPA between HELCO and Hu Honua is not a PURPA contract. Instead, it is a contract whose terms, including its price term, were negotiated between the parties.

Id. ¶ 48.

The PPA was never submitted to the [PUC] as a PURPA avoided cost contract. Rather, HELCO submitted the PPA to the [PUC] as a contract with freely-negotiated energy prices. In approving the PPA as a negotiated rate contract, which provided stable prices [*16] to consumers over the long term, the [PUC] emphasized that Hu Honua's PPA was "de-linked" from fossil fuel prices.

Id. ¶ 49.

Because Hu Honua chose to compete against other potential generators, and did not seek a PURPA contract, it is situated differently from other QFs that have mandated contracts. In order to obtain the PPA, Hu Honua had to demonstrate that the benefits of its facility exceeded those of facilities owned by other potential market players and entrants, including HELCO. In entering into a freely-negotiated contract with HELCO, Hu Honua was entering into competition against the utility as a wholesale energy generator, and not simply functioning as a supplier.

Id. ¶ 50. Hu Honua thus argues that its PPA was competition in the wholesale power market, and thus HELCO's termination of its PPA (as part of an allegedly illegal conspiracy with NextEra and HEP) constituted antitrust injury. It relies fundamentally on its allegation that because it "elected to enter into a negotiated rate contract with HELCO . . . the PPA between HELCO and Hu Honua is not a PURPA contract," id. ¶ 48, and thus it was "entering into competition against [HELCO] as a wholesale energy generator," id. [*17] ¶ 50.

Notably, however, the allegation that Hu Honua suffered antitrust injury, see, e.g., SAC ¶ 234, 244, is a legal conclusion which is not entitled to a presumption of truthfulness. See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 ("[T]he tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in the complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions."); Schuylkill Energy, 113 F.3d at 417 ("We are not, however, required to accept as true unsupported conclusions and unwarranted inferences. . . . While [plaintiff] alleges in its Amended Complaint that it is [defendant's] competitor in the retail and wholesale markets, those assertions are belied by both the remaining factual allegations and the law.").

And ultimately, in this context, the SAC's new allegations of "competition" make no difference. This is because, even if Hu Honua's PPA was an "otherwise-negotiated contract," it was done so under the auspices of PURPA. Even if the PPA was not a contract based on PURPA's "mandatory buy" rates, it is undisputed that, as the SAC continues to allege, Hu Honua's proposed biomass power plant was (and still is) a QF under PURPA, with self-certification obtained with the FERC. See SAC ¶ 45. Even if the status might have been formally obtained after negotiations [*18] had ensued, id. ¶ 89, the status (or potential status) brings with it leverage and negotiating options. The PPA was thus negotiated in light of a guaranteed market with PURPA's "mandatory buy" and "avoided cost" provisions as benchmarks, and brings with it all of PURPA's rights and remedies as part of the picture. See, e.g., Indep. Energy Producers Ass'n, Inc. v. Cal. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 36 F.3d 848, 850 \(9th Cir. 1994\) ("Section 210 of PURPA specifies the benefits to which QFs are entitled. It creates a market for their energy by requiring that the [FERC] establish regulations that obligate public utilities to sell electric energy to and purchase electric service from QFs."); *sPower Dev. Co., LLC v. Colo. PUC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28639, 2018 WL 1014142, at *7 (D. Colo. Feb. 22, 2018)* ("[A] QF has the unconditional right' to choose to sell its output to an electric utility and, in exercising that right, may contract with the utility or force the utility to accept its output through a legally enforceable obligation approved by state authorities.") (citing In re Hydrodynamics, Inc., 146 FERC ¶ 61193, 61844 (Mar. 20, 2014)).

Indeed, HELCO actually sought approval of the PPA from the PUC based upon Hawaii's PURPA provisions, among other standards.<sup>4</sup> See ECF Nos. 95-7 at 4 & 147-9 at 4, PPA application at 3 (seeking PUC approval pursuant to HRS § 269-27.2 and Hawaii Administrative Rules ("HAR") Chapter 6-74). The PPA application indicated that rates, among other criteria, shall "(1) Be just [*19] and reasonable to the electric consumer of the electric utility and in the public interest; (2) Not discriminate against qualifying cogeneration and small power production facilities; and (3) Be not less than one hundred per cent of avoided cost for energy and capacity purchases to be determined as provided in [HAR §] 6-74-23 from qualifying facilities and not less than the minimum purchase rate."<sup>5</sup> Id. at 5, PPA Application at 4.

The PPA application quoted criteria for rates from HAR § 6-74-22(a), which, in turn, is nearly identical to that required by PURPA, as set forth in 16 U.S.C. § 824a-3(b):

The rules prescribed under subsection (a) shall insure that, in requiring any electric utility to offer to purchase electric energy from any qualifying cogeneration facility or qualifying small power production facility, the rates for such purchase—

- (1) shall be just and reasonable to the electric consumers of the electric utility and in the public interest, and
- (2) shall not discriminate against qualifying cogenerators or qualifying small power producers.

No such rule prescribed under subsection (a) shall provide for a rate which exceeds the incremental cost to the electric utility of alternative electric energy.

Although the application later acknowledged that a utility's avoided [*20] costs were not determinative in evaluating the PPA's rates, the application specifically advocated for an assessment of "avoided costs" as a "useful benchmark in assessing the reasonableness of an [independent power producer's] pricing." ECF No. 95-8 at 58. That is, the PPA was actually submitted, at least in significant part, under auspices of PURPA.

Moreover, as NextEra argues, merely because a QF's PPA was negotiated does not mean it was done so in a competitive market for purposes of assessing potential antitrust injury. See Greensboro Lumber, 643 F. Supp. at 1355-56 (finding a lack of antitrust injury/standing regarding a PPA that was the product of extensive negotiations between a QF and utilities and that resulted in pricing "significantly less" than a utility's avoided costs); Kamine/Besicorp Allegany, 908 F. Supp. at 1207 (finding no antitrust injury in a dispute involving a negotiated PPA with prices allegedly in excess of a utility's avoided costs). Indeed, if those negotiations between Hu Honua and <sup>4</sup> "[A] Court may take judicial notice of matters of public record without converting a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment." Khoja v. Orexigen Therapeutics, Inc., 899 F.3d 988, 999 (9th Cir. 2018) (quoting Lee v. City of L.A., 250 F.3d 668, 689 (9th Cir. 2001)). Moreover, the court can review the PPA application under the incorporation-by-reference doctrine because the SAC refers extensively to the application (see, e.g., SAC ¶¶ 65 to 67). See Khoja, 899 F.3d at 1002 ("[A] defendant may seek to incorporate a document into the complaint 'if the plaintiff refers extensively to the document or the document forms the basis of the plaintiff's claim.'") (quoting United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 907 (9th Cir. 2003)).

<sup>5</sup> HAR Chapter 6-74, entitled "Standards for Small Power Production and Cogeneration," among other things, (1) defines qualifying facilities under FERC's PURPA regulations, 18 C.F.R. Part 292, see HAR § 6-74-1; and (2) implements "arrangements between electric utilities and [QFs] under Section 210 of [PURPA], 16 U.S.C. § 824a-3," see HAR §§ 6-74-15 to -28. This Chapter thus executes FERC's mandate to Hawaii (as with all other states) to implement FERC's rules requiring utilities to purchase electricity from QFs "at a rate equal to the utility's full avoided cost," Alco Renewable Energy Ltd., 875 F.3d at 67 (citations omitted), where "section 210(f) of PURPA" instructs state regulatory authorities to implement these FERC rules." Id. (citations omitted).

HELCO had failed, Hawaii's PURPA regulations allowed the parties to seek PUC intervention to resolve their differences. See HAR §§ 6-74-15\(c\) & \(e\).<sup>6</sup>

In sum, although the SAC's amended allegations regarding the origin of the PPA present a closer call than with the FAC on this narrow issue, there is no potential antitrust injury even assuming that the PPA was not a "PURPA contract." Because Hu Honua's facility was a QF under PURPA and was negotiated with that [*22] status in mind, the resulting PPA was not a product of "competition" in a wholesale marketplace for purposes of assessing antitrust injury to Hu Honua. Again, Hu Honua might have had a viable breach of contract claim against HELCO, but this does not transform that claim into a viable antitrust claim against NextEra.

b. PUC Regulation

Finally, despite its changes, the SAC continues to allege antitrust injury that is speculative. In this regard, the SAC alleges:

The aforesaid conduct of HELCO has produced antitrust injury to Hu Honua, competition, and consumers, and unless enjoined by this Court, will continue to produce at least the following anticompetitive, exclusionary and injurious effects upon competition in interstate commerce:

(a) competition for the wholesale generation of power on the Island of Hawaii has been substantially and unreasonably restricted, lessened, foreclosed, and eliminated, and consumers will be forced to pay supra-competitive prices for power as a result due to the ultimate pass-through of higher wholesale costs to consumers by HELCO[.]

SAC ¶ 234. As with the FAC, this primary injury—consumers paying supra-competitive prices—remains speculative, depending on factors [*23] such as oil prices rising from approximately $60 per barrel to over $363 per barrel, SAC ¶ 66, or "over $300 per barrel by 2045," SAC ¶ 204. And it is an injury necessarily and legally controlled by the PUC.

It remains true that "[g]overnment regulation, as opposed to treble damages and criminal liability under the Sherman Act, is generally thought to be the appropriate remedy for difficulties posed by natural monopolies [such as the Hawaii utility market]." Hu Honua Bioenergy LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780, at \*12 (quoting Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 548 \(9th Cir. 1991\)). It remains true that "Hu Honua has alleged anticompetitive behavior in a highly regulated industry." Id. And it remains true that "[t]his context is important." Id.

Here, the rate base paid by Big Island consumers, including passing on of costs related to power purchase agreements, is a matter for the PUC. See, e.g., HRS §§ 269-16\(a\), 269-16.22. This "comprehensive regulatory framework significantly restricts the nature of the competition which is permitted." City of Pittsburgh v. W. Penn

If the electric utility and qualifying facility fail to reach an agreement on the rate or terms of purchase within seventy-five days after [*21] the qualifying facility first offers to sell energy or capacity to the electric utility, the electric utility, within fourteen days, shall submit a petition to the commission requesting a hearing on the matter. If the electric utility fails to submit the petition within the prescribed time period, the qualifying facility may petition the commission for a hearing on the matter. Upon the application of the electric utility or the qualifying facility and for good cause, the commission may waive or modify the time periods prescribed in this subsection.

In turn, § 6-75-15(e) provides:

When a petition is filed pursuant to subsection (c), the commission may:

- (1) Dismiss the petition, if it finds that the qualifying facility's offer is incomplete in any material respect;
- (2) Resolve the differences between the parties; or
- (3) Provide such directions, instructions, or rulings as appropriate, and order the parties to resume negotiations.

Power Co., 147 F.3d 256, 263 (3d Cir. 1998). "[Hawaii] regulators—not the market—determine [HELCO's] rate base. [HELCO] has no unilateral ability to change [*24] its rates; any increase or decrease in rates must be filed with the PUC and conform to PUC regulations and orders." Id. The court thus "cannot assume the existence of a PUC [decision] for the purpose[] of assessing damages," and "[t]here is no way to determine whether the rates [consumers] will pay for electric service . . . will be affected by the alleged actions[.]" W. Penn Power, 147 F.3d at 269. "As the courts stated in Kartell v. Blue Shield of Mass., 749 F.2d 922 (1st Cir. 1984) and Westchester Radiological Associates P.C. v. Empire Blue Cross & Blue Shield, Inc., 707 F. Supp. 708 (S.D.N.Y. 1989), that supervisory power suggests that an expansive application of the antitrust laws is not appropriate[.]" Kamine/Besicorp Allegany L.P., 908 F. Supp. at 1207. The alleged injury "is simply too speculative to permit relief under the antitrust laws." W. Penn Power, 147 F.3d at 269.

Thus, the court's reasoning in the January 19th Order remains completely applicable:

Like Schuylkill Energy Resources, "[t]he fundamental dispute between [Hu Honua] and [HELCO] concerns the interpretation of the Power Purchase Agreement . . . and should be resolved pursuant to common-law contract principles," not through the antitrust laws. 113 F.3d at 418. Like Kamine/Besicorp Allegany L.P., "whether [HELCO] has breached the PPA or not, [Hu Honua] has not sufficiently demonstrated an antitrust injury[.]" 908 F. Supp. at 1208. And like Crossroads Cogeneration "[HELCO's] actions [*25] may have caused injury to plaintiff, but they did not cause injury to competition in a defined market. This is not the sort of injury the antitrust laws were meant to prevent." 969 F. Supp. at 915.

B. Count Two — Conspiracy to Restrain Trade

Count Two alleges a violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1, which prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States[.]" To state an antitrust claim for restraint of trade, "[a plaintiff] must plead not just ultimate facts (such as a conspiracy), but evidentiary facts which, if true, will prove: (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intended to harm or restrain trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations; (3) which actually injures competition." Kendall, 518 F.3d at 1047 (citation omitted)

This claim fails for the same reasons that Count One fails. In particular, as analyzed above, it fails to allege a plausible antitrust conspiracy and fails to allege a plausible theory of antitrust injury. See Seagood Trading Corp., 924 F.2d at 1576 ("[A] section 1 claim and a section 2 conspiracy to monopolize claim require the same threshold showing—the existence of an [*26] agreement to restrain trade."); Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1433 ([C]ausal antitrust injury . . . is an element of all antitrust suits brought by private parties seeking damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act.").

C. State Law Claims

Lastly, NextEra moves to dismiss the state law claims (Count Seven, alleging tortious interference with contract; and Count Eight, alleging unfair competition under HRS chapter 480). The January 19th Order indicated that, because the court had dismissed the federal antitrust claims, it intended to dismiss the state law claims without prejudice under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3). See, e.g., Acri v. Varian Assocs., Inc., 114 F.3d 999, 1001 (9th Cir. 1997) ("[I]n the usual case in which all federal-law claims are eliminated before trial, the balance of factors . . . will point toward declining to exercise jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claims.") (en banc).

Such action, however, was premature given the procedural posture where federal claims (although stayed) remain against the Hawaiian Electric Defendants. The court cannot exercise its discretion under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3) until it "has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction." Although the Hawaiian Electric Defendants have entered into a settlement agreement, those claims remain in the action because the settlement was (and [*27] still is) awaiting a final decision of the PUC approving the renegotiated PPA between Hu Honua and HELCO. In turn, that PUC decision is awaiting proceedings in state court. For administrative reasons, the court denied the motion without prejudice. Hu Honua Bioenergy, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8835, 2018 WL 491780, at \*16.

The court will take the same action again. That is, the court will not address the merits of Counts Seven and Eight, and will instead deny NextEra's Motion to Dismiss without prejudice as to those claims. The court will address the disposition of the state law claims after the settlement with the Hawaiian Electric Defendants is final.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, NextEra's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED as to Counts One and Two; the federal antitrust claims against NextEra are DISMISSED with prejudice. The Motion to Dismiss the state law claims (Counts Seven and Eight) is DENIED without prejudice.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: Honolulu, Hawaii, November 9, 2018.

HN2 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment is appropriate if there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. A fact is material if proof of that fact would have the effect of establishing or refuting one of the essential elements of a cause of action or defense asserted by the parties. The evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN4 State Regulation, Claims

Hawai'i's antitrust law, codified in Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 480, includes a general prohibition at Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(a) (1993 & Supp. 2002) stating that unfair methods of competition in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13 (1993 & Supp. 2002) in turn establishes a private right of action to seek recovery for damages flowing from a party's Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 480 violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN5 State Regulation, Claims

To recover under Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13(a) (1993 & Supp. 2002) for an unfair method of competition violation, a plaintiff must prove (1) a violation of Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 480, (2) an injury to the plaintiff's business or property that flows from the defendant's conduct that negatively affects competition or harms fair competition, and (3) damages. The second element has two parts. First, a plaintiff is required to demonstrate an injury in fact to his or her business or property. Second, a plaintiff is required to show the nature of the competition. This latter requirement is met by demonstrating how the defendant's conduct negatively affects competition or harms fair competition.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Absence of Essential Element

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN6 Burdens of Proof, Absence of Essential Element

In evaluating a motion for summary judgment, a burden-shifting framework is applied under which the moving party bears the initial burden of demonstrating that no genuine issue of material fact exists with respect to the essential elements of the claim and that the undisputed facts entitle the party to judgment as a matter of law. Where the non-movant bears the burden of proof at trial, the movant may meet its initial burden by either (1) presenting evidence negating an element of the non-movant's claim, or (1) demonstrating that the non-movant will be unable to carry his or her burden of proof at trial. Only once the moving party has satisfied its initial burden of production does the burden shift to the non-moving party to show specific facts that present a genuine issue for trial.

**HN7** [down] State Regulation, Claims

The first element for recovery under *Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-13\(a\) \(1993 & Supp. 2002\)* for an unfair method of competition violation is proof of an Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 480 violation. *Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2\(a\) \(1993 & Supp. 2002\)* does not define unfair methods of competition, although a number of other statutes cross-reference the provision and specify that particular practices are per se violations of the prohibition. *Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 480D-4\(a\), 481B-4 \(2008\)*. The statutorily enumerated violations are not an exhaustive catalogue of conduct that violates *Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2 \(1993 & Supp. 2002\)*, as there is no limit to human inventiveness in this field.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

**HN8** [down] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Under Hawai'i Supreme Court precedents, the evaluation of whether particular, non-statutorily-enumerated conduct is unfair is simply a question of fact that does not require incorporating the elements of an analogous claim. Competitive conduct is unfair when it offends established public policy and when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers.

**HN10** [down] State Regulation, Claims

To fulfill the second element of an unfair method of competition violation, a plaintiff must (a) demonstrate an injury in fact to one's business and (b) demonstrate how a defendant's conduct negatively affects competition or harms fair competition. As to the injury requirement, the injury in fact must flow from the anticompetitive conduct.

HN16[] Estoppel, Judicial Estoppel

The doctrine of judicial estoppel precludes a party from assuming a position that is inconsistent with a position already accepted by a court to gain an unfair advantage in the proceedings. Collateral estoppel, or issue preclusion, is a bar to the relitigation of a fact or issue litigated in a prior suit when four requirements are met: (1) the issue decided in the prior adjudication is identical to the one presented in the action in question, (2) there is a final judgment on the merits, (3) the issue decided in the prior adjudication was essential to the final judgment, and (4) the party against whom collateral estoppel is asserted was a party or in privity with a party to the prior adjudication.

HN19 [blue icon] State Regulation, Claims

To establish an unfair method of competition claim, a plaintiff must prove (1) a violation of Haw. Rev. Stat. ch. 480, (2) which causes an injury to the plaintiff's business or property, and (3) proof of the amount of damages. Under the second element, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant's conduct negatively affects competition and that the plaintiff's injury stems from the defendant's anti-competitive or unfair conduct. There is no intent element required to establish an unfair method of competition claim. In contrast, the elements of intentional or tortious interference with prospective business advantage require the plaintiff to prove all of the following: (1) the existence of a valid business relationship or a prospective advantage or expectancy sufficiently definite, specific, and capable of acceptance in the sense that there is a reasonable probability of it maturing into a future economic benefit to the plaintiff, (2) knowledge of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy by the defendant, (3) a purposeful intent to interfere with the relationship, advantage, or expectancy, (4) legal causation between the act of interference and the impairment of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy, and (5) actual damages. Unlike an unfair method of competition claim, tortious interference with prospective business advantage includes a purposeful intent element.

[*366] [**739] OPINION OF THE COURT BY POLLACK, J.

This case arises out of the uncompleted sale of one business to another. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant engaged in an unfair method of competition to terminate the transaction in violation of Hawai'i antitrust law. At issue in this case is what a plaintiff must demonstrate to withstand summary judgment on a claim for an unfair method of competition under Hawaii Revised Statutes (HRS) Chapter 480. In particular, we address the plaintiff's requirement of showing that the defendant's conduct would negatively affect competition or harm fair competition. Consistent with our case law, we conclude that to raise an issue of material fact as to the nature of competition requirement of an unfair method of competition claim following the close of discovery, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant's alleged anticompetitive conduct could negatively affect competition [***2] but need not prove that the defendant in fact harmed competition. Further, we reaffirm that in order to withstand summary judgment, a plaintiff may generally describe the relevant market without resort to expert testimony and the plaintiff need not be a competitor of or in competition with the defendant.

I. BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

A. Factual Background

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) is a non-profit, unincorporated voluntary association of approximately 1,200 colleges and universities, athletic conferences, and sports organizations. The NCAA regulates and controls Division I-A postseason college football bowl games in which qualifying NCAA Division I-A members may participate. Independent businesses (bowl sponsoring agencies) organize and promote the bowls subject to annual recertification<sup>1</sup> by the NCAA Football Certification Subcommittee (the Subcommittee). The Subcommittee is composed of representatives from NCAA member schools, as well as NCAA staff that serve as non-voting liaisons.

Aloha Sports, Inc.<sup>2</sup> (Aloha Sports) is a former bowl sponsoring agency that produced Division I-A NCAA postseason college football bowl games. Aloha Sports organized, produced, [***3] and promoted the NCAA-certified Aloha Bowl in Honolulu from 1982 to 2000. In 1998, Aloha Sports established and received NCAA certification of the Oahu Bowl and began to promote the two bowl games together. For various reasons unrelated to [**740] [*367] this appeal, Aloha Sports relocated both bowls to the continental United States following the 2000 season. In the 2001 season, Aloha Sports sought and received NCAA recertification of the Aloha Bowl as the San Francisco Bowl and of the Oahu Bowl as the Seattle Bowl. The Seattle Bowl was also recertified by the NCAA and presented by Aloha Sports during the 2002 season.

Several concerns arose with the management of the 2002 Seattle Bowl, including failures to timely submit a letter of credit to the NCAA and to make outstanding payments to participating teams and vendors. Subsequently, Aloha Sports decided to sell its business. In February 2003, Aloha Sports signed a letter of intent to transfer ownership and control of its business to Pro Sports & Entertainment, Inc. (Pro Sports) for the sum of $2,031,000. The sale was contingent upon NCAA recertification of the Seattle Bowl for the 2003 season. On April 1, 2003, Aloha Sports submitted an application [***4] for recertification of the Seattle Bowl for the 2003 season to the NCAA.

In April 2003, the Subcommittee met over four days to make certification decisions for the 2003 season. At an unknown date, an NCAA internal memorandum titled "Seattle Bowl Issues" was created that provided information regarding the pending Seattle Bowl recertification. The memorandum stated that ongoing issues existed with the management of the Seattle Bowl, including a submission of an inaccurate audit report, a failure to pay the required certification fee, and a late letter of credit. The memorandum also noted the intended sale of Aloha Sports to Pro Sports, including that the sale was contingent upon recertification of the 2003 Seattle Bowl, and listed outstanding debts from the 2002 Seattle Bowl as "Feller Debts" in apparent reference to the president of Pro Sports, Paul Feller.

<sup>1</sup> The requirements for certification listed in the 2002-03 NCAA Bowl Handbook include, inter alia, exceeding a minimum amount of ticket sales, the implementation of a gross receipt sharing policy under which the institutions participating in the bowl each receive a minimum payout of $750,000, the performance of financial audits, the submission of a letter of credit, and compliance with certification application dates, fees, and procedures.

<sup>2</sup> On December 27, 2017, the ICA issued an order granting Aloha Sports, Inc.'s motion to substitute Dane S. Field, Trustee of the Bankruptcy Estate of Aloha Sports, Inc., for Aloha Sports, Inc. as plaintiff-appellant.

Finally, under a section titled "Penalties" it stated "1) Withhold certification one year. 2) Impose financial penalty — fine up to 50% of gross receipts."

Paul Feller attended the Subcommittee certification meeting as a potential purchaser of Aloha Sports, along with James Haugh, president of Aloha Sports and executive director of [***5] the Seattle Bowl. Terry Daw, owner of Aloha Sports, also participated by phone during the portions of the meeting related to the Seattle Bowl. In a discussion regarding the Seattle Bowl's recertification, Pro Sports presented the Subcommittee with information regarding Pro Sports' plan for addressing outstanding issues from the 2002 Seattle Bowl, as well as the company's financial capacity and relevant experience with event management and promotion. During that meeting, Dennis Poppe, an NCAA staff liaison to the Subcommittee, expressed concerns about Daw's prior management of the Seattle Bowl and sought assurance that Daw would not be involved after a transfer of Aloha Sports to Pro Sports.

In a second meeting, Poppe and members of the Subcommittee informed Feller, Haugh, and Daw<sup>3</sup> that the Subcommittee had decided to decertify the Seattle Bowl. Haugh was then asked to leave the room, and Feller was privately informed by Poppe and the Subcommittee members that Pro Sports could independently submit an application to certify the Seattle Bowl for the 2004 season.

The Subcommittee's decision to decertify the Seattle Bowl was formally announced the following day.<sup>4</sup> Following the announcement, [***6] Aloha Sports requested that the NCAA instead place the Seattle Bowl on one-year probation as it had done with two other bowl games that had failed to submit timely letters of credit. The NCAA rejected Aloha Sports' request, and the Seattle Bowl was decertified as announced.

At the time, the NCAA's Postseason Handbook contained conflicting provisions concerning the consequences of a sponsoring agency's nonfulfillment of certification requirements. A new provision added in the 2002-03 Handbook stated, "If a sponsoring agency fails to meet the certification requirements, [**741] [*368] it shall be placed on probation for one year. If the sponsoring agency has not complied with the requirements by the end of the probationary period, the bowl shall lose its certification."<sup>5</sup> (Emphasis added.) The provision was also included nearly verbatim in two locations on the 2003 bowl recertification application form and in a November 18, 2002 memorandum sent to all executive directors of bowl games. The Handbook also retained a provision from previous years, however, which stated as follows:

If the management of a certified game fails to comply with Bylaw 30.9, the requirement for an audited financial report for the [***7] immediate past game, or the NCAA's approved policies and procedures, the subcommittee has the option to withhold certification for the postseason bowl game for one year or fine it a percentage of its gross receipts, not to exceed 50 percent, from the contest involved in the noncompliance, with the amount to be determined by it and approved by the Division I Championships/Competition Cabinet.

As a result of the NCAA's decertification of the Seattle Bowl, the sale of Aloha Sports to Pro Sports was not completed and the 2003 Seattle Bowl was not held. On October 20, 2005, Aloha Sports filed a complaint and demand for jury trial against the NCAA in the Circuit Court of the First Circuit (circuit court).

B. 2005-2013 Court Proceedings

<sup>4</sup> An NCAA press release regarding the Subcommittee's decisions for the 2003 season bowls provided: "The committee did not recertify the Seattle Bowl, due to financial issues and failure to adhere to administrative requirements."

<sup>5</sup> In the version of the Handbook released the following year, the provision was revised to state, "If a sponsoring agency fails to meet the certification requirements, it may either be put on probation for one year or be decertified for the next bowl season." (Emphasis added)

In its second amended complaint, Aloha Sports alleged four causes of action, including multiple unfair method of competition violations under HRS § 480-2 (1993 & Supp. 2002),<sup>6</sup> tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, and two breach of contract claims.<sup>7</sup> Aloha Sports contended that the NCAA violated HRS § 480-2's prohibition on unfair methods of competition by, inter alia, "refusing to permit a transfer of ownership of Plaintiff's NCAA Certified Postseason Football [***8] Bowl Games without good cause" (UMOC claim).<sup>8</sup>

The NCAA filed a motion to dismiss the second amended complaint with prejudice, contending, among other things, that Aloha Sports did not plead sufficient facts to support its UMOC claim. On February 26, 2008, the court entered an order granting in part and denying in part the NCAA's motion, dismissing with prejudice the UMOC claim for the reason cited by the NCAA and dismissing several of Aloha Sports' other claims for relief. (Order Dismissing UMOC Claim).

The remaining claims proceeded to jury trial in September 2011.<sup>9</sup> On September 8, [**742] [*369] 2011, at a hearing on a motion in limine prior to trial, Aloha Sports indicated that the intentional interference with prospective economic advantage claim was the sole grounds upon which it wished to proceed, as the company did not believe it was likely to prevail on its remaining claims (including the alleged violations of HRS § 480-2 that had not been previously dismissed).<sup>10</sup>

(a) Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful.

...

(e) Any person may bring an action based on unfair methods of competition declared unlawful by this section.

<sup>8</sup> The other grounds alleged in the second amended complaint to be unfair methods of competition in violation of HRS § 480-2 were as follows:

(1) requiring Aloha Sports to pay $75,000 or 75% of gross bowl revenues in equal proportion to participating teams; (2) arbitrarily penalizing sponsoring agencies for not meeting the payout requirements; (3) discriminatorily withdrawing certification of the San Francisco Bowl, refusing to recertify the Aloha Bowl, and decertifying the Seattle Bowl despite substantial compliance with the requirements for maintaining certification and receiving recertification; (4) imposing upon Aloha Sports unreasonable and arbitrary standards of conduct, and (5) terminating and refusing to renew Aloha Sports' San Francisco and Seattle Bowls without good cause and in violation of the NCAA's terms and standards applicable to all bowls. These grounds are largely not relevant to this appeal, and all references to Aloha Sports' UMOC claim refer to only the alleged HRS § 480-2 violation in Subsection 23(f) of the second amended complaint [**9] based on the NCAA's purported blocking of Aloha Sports' transfer of ownership to Pro Sports.

<sup>9</sup> The Honorable Karl K. Sakamoto presided over the jury trial, as well as a preceding motion granting Aloha Sports leave to file a third amended complaint excluding any claims related to the Aloha/San Francisco Bowl. The third amended complaint otherwise was identical to the second amended complaint.

[ALOHA SPORTS]: Correct. Just for the record, your Honor, the sole claim on which we're proceeding we can abandon all other claims which may have been pled. The sole claim in which we're proceeding [**10] is intentional interference with prospective business advantage. That's it. So all the antitrust claims, the franchise claims, the claim under 480-2 all -- all are abandoned.

...

[ALOHA SPORTS]: Excuse me. We don't think on the record we can satisfy the test that the Hawaii Supreme Court established with the Davis case, which converted 480-2 which was a redundant antitrust statute, but I don't think we can do that, so that's—

On September 19, 2011, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the NCAA on Aloha Sports' claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage. On January 12, 2012, the court entered final judgment in favor of the NCAA as to all claims. The final judgment stated that the UMOC claim was [***11] dismissed with prejudice pursuant to the February 26, 2008 order. It further stated that claims in the second amended complaint that had been dismissed by the "2/28/08 Dismissal Order"<sup>11</sup> but repeated in the third amended complaint were equally dismissed, and that Aloha Sports' "remaining" HRS § 480-2 claims in the third amended complaint were dismissed with prejudice pursuant to Aloha Sports' September 8, 2011 oral motion.

After unsuccessfully moving the court to vacate the final judgment and grant a new trial, Aloha Sports filed a notice of appeal from the final judgment and other orders in the case, including specifically from the Order Dismissing UMOC Claim.<sup>12</sup>

On October 30, 2013, the ICA issued a memorandum opinion.<sup>13</sup> As to the dismissal of the UMOC claim, the ICA found that a factual basis for the claim could be discerned from the facts alleged in the second amended complaint. Specifically, the ICA pointed to the complaint's allegations that the "NCAA knew about the pending sale to Pro Sports and the significance of certification to the pending transaction," and that "the NCAA disrupted the transaction by encouraging Pro Sports to abandon the deal with Aloha and apply for a bowl game independent [**12] of Aloha." The ICA held that, if true, these alleged facts would be sufficient to establish that the NCAA employed an unfair method of competition. Accordingly, the ICA vacated the Order Dismissing UMOC Claim and the circuit court's January 12, 2012 final judgment and remanded the case to the circuit court for further proceedings.<sup>14</sup>

C. Circuit Court Proceedings on Remand

On remand, the NCAA filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, or in the alternative, a motion for summary judgment on the UMOC claim (Motion for Summary Judgment).<sup>15</sup> [*370] [**743] The NCAA argued that the UMOC claim was barred by collateral estoppel because Aloha Sports relied on the same allegations underlying the UMOC claim to support its claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage at the jury trial and the jury had decided these factual issues in the NCAA's favor. The NCAA contended that, because the facts were

[NCAA]: So it's clear that the theory of contract based on the handbook is also out?

[ALOHA SPORTS]: Correct. The singular claims prospective advantage.

THE COURT: Right. That's --

[NCAA]: So we're down to one cause of action interference with respective [sic] economic advantage.

THE COURT: That's correct.

[NCAA]: And everything else is dismissed.

THE COURT: That's correct.

<sup>11</sup> It appears that section 3 of the Final Judgment mistakenly refers to the "2/26/08 Dismissal Order" as the "2/28/08 Dismissal Order."

<sup>12</sup> Aloha Sports also appealed from the Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Defendant The National Collegiate Athletic Association's Motion for Attorneys' Fees and Costs, Filed January 31, 2012 (Attorney's Fee Order).

<sup>14</sup> The ICA also vacated the Attorney's Fee Order and affirmed all other circuit court rulings at issue.

actually litigated, finally decided, and essential to the final judgment, Aloha Sports should be estopped from relitigating them on remand.

The NCAA also maintained that Aloha Sports was judicially estopped from pursuing the UMOC claim because at the motion in limine hearing [***13] on September 8, 2011, Aloha Sports abandoned all claims other than the claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage and conceded it could not meet the burden of establishing a violation of HRS § 480-2. The NCAA asserted that (1) Aloha Sports' present position was factually incompatible with its prior position; (2) the prior inconsistent position had been accepted by the court; and (3) permitting Aloha Sports to continue to pursue the UMOC claim granted Aloha Sports an unfair advantage.

As to the merits of the UMOC claim, the NCAA argued that there was no dispute that the NCAA had legitimate business reasons not to certify the 2003 Seattle Bowl, including the 2002 Seattle Bowl's untimely letter of credit and lack of payment to teams and local vendors. The NCAA maintained that discovery had closed and Aloha Sports could not present any evidence that decertification was intended to induce Pro Sports to forgo the contemplated purchase of Aloha Sports. Thus, the NCAA argued, Aloha Sports could not prove that it was harmed as a result of actions by the NCAA that negatively affected competition. The NCAA also contended that it was entitled to summary judgment because Aloha Sports [***14] had not presented any facts demonstrating an anti-competitive impact on the bowl game market as a result of the NCAA's alleged actions.

In its memorandum in opposition, Aloha Sports responded that the UMOC claim was not barred by collateral estoppel because the jury made no specific findings of fact when it decided in the NCAA's favor on the claim for interference with prospective economic advantage. Additionally, Aloha Sports asserted, the elements of an unfair method of competition claim are distinct from those of a claim for interference with prospective economic advantage. Further, Aloha Sports argued, no final judgment existed for purposes of collateral estoppel because it had been vacated by the ICA decision. The UMOC claim was also not barred by judicial estoppel, Aloha Sports contended, because the claim had already been dismissed in February 26, 2008. Therefore, Aloha Sports maintained, the claim could not have been abandoned or conceded at the September 8, 2011 hearing.

Aloha Sports also argued that it presented sufficient evidence demonstrating that the NCAA denied recertification of the 2003 Seattle Bowl in order to induce Pro Sports to abandon its intent to purchase Aloha [***15] Sports. Aloha Sports contended that, contrary to the NCAA's assertion, it did not need to prove that its injury resulted from actions by the NCAA that were harmful to competition to withstand summary judgment.

On June 9, 2015, the circuit court issued an order granting summary judgment to the NCAA on the UMOC claim (Order Granting Summary Judgment).<sup>16</sup> The court held that Aloha Sports was barred by waiver and judicial estoppel because Aloha Sports had implicitly surrendered the UMOC claim by its statements at the September 8, 2011 hearing. The circuit court reasoned that the UMOC claim required proof of an additional element under this court's precedents and thus would have been more difficult to prevail upon than the alleged HRS § 480-2 violations that Aloha Sports expressly abandoned. Aloha Sports [**744] [*371] therefore impliedly conceded that it was unable to prove the UMOC claim when it voluntarily dismissed its other HRS § 480-2 claims, the court concluded.

The circuit court also held that Aloha Sports was collaterally estopped from proceeding on its UMOC claim. The court stated that, because Aloha Sports had not alleged one of the specific violations of HRS § 480-2\(a\) identified by statute, it fell to the court to identify the elements [***16] that must be satisfied to establish an unfair method of competition in this case. The court determined that the alleged unfair method of competition--the NCAA's interference with Aloha Sports' transfer to Pro Sports--was essentially a claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage, and HRS § 480-2\(a\) therefore incorporated the elements of a tortious interference claim. Accordingly, the circuit court found that proving facts establishing tortious interference was a prerequisite to proving that the NCAA derivatively violated HRS § 480-2. Because the jury had entered a verdict in favor of the NCAA on the tortious interference claim and a final judgment had been issued, the court concluded that Aloha Sports could not now proceed on an unfair method of competition claim based on the same alleged conduct.

The court further held that the NCAA had successfully demonstrated that it acted with a legitimate business purpose in denying the recertification of the 2003 Seattle Bowl, that Aloha Sports did not submit any evidence showing that the NCAA acted in an anticompetitive manner, and that Aloha Sports did not demonstrate that its injury resulted from the NCAA's alleged anticompetitive conduct. Final [***17] judgment was entered in favor of the NCAA on August 11, 2015,<sup>17</sup> from which Aloha Sports appealed to the ICA.

D. Second ICA Appeal

On October 30, 2017, the ICA issued a Summary Disposition Order affirming the circuit court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the NCAA.<sup>18</sup> The ICA held that Aloha Sports failed to present any evidence that the NCAA's alleged conduct affected competition, which was needed to satisfy the nature of competition requirement of a claim for an unfair method of competition in violation of HRS § 480-2\(a\). Specifically, the ICA held that Aloha Sports failed to (1) specify the relevant market; (2) provide evidence of the anticompetitive effect of the NCAA's conduct on that market; and (3) demonstrate how Aloha Sports, a bowl-sponsoring agency, was in competition with the NCAA. Further, the ICA stated that, in order to prove an anticompetitive effect, it was not sufficient for Aloha Sports to prove harm to its individual business. Rather, Aloha Sports was required to demonstrate an adverse impact to competitive conditions generally within the commercial field in which it was engaged.

Additionally, the ICA held that the NCAA's conduct was not an unfair competitive [***18] act because the 2001-02 Handbook allowed for decertification of a non-compliant bowl, and the NCAA demonstrated that Aloha Sports had not complied with certification requirements pertaining to the 2002 Seattle Bowl.<sup>19</sup>

Based on its holdings regarding the UMOC claim, the ICA did not reach the other reasons cited by the circuit court for granting summary judgment--waiver, judicial estoppel, and collateral estoppel. The ICA thus affirmed the circuit court's ruling granting NCAA summary judgment on the UMOC claim.<sup>20</sup>

[*372] [**745] Aloha Sports timely filed an application for writ of certiorari from the ICA's January 24, 2018 Judgment on Appeal, which this court granted.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1 [↑] This court reviews a trial court's grant or denial of summary judgment de novo. Anastasi v. Fid. Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 137 Hawai'i 104, 112, 366 P.3d 160, 168 \(2016\) (citing Bremer v. Weeks, 104 Hawai'i 43, 51, 85 P.3d 150, 158 \(2004\)).

<sup>17</sup> The final judgment also included an order granting in part and denying in part a motion for reinstatement of the Attorney's Fee Order, filed August 4, 2015 (Order to Reinstate Attorney's Fee Order).

<sup>19</sup> The ICA specifically cited the 2001-02 Handbook in its SDO, which did not contain the conflicting provision added in the 2002-03 Handbook that stated nonfulfillment of certification requirements would be punished by probation. See supra text accompanying note 5.

<sup>20</sup> The ICA also affirmed the "Judgment" entered on August 11, 2015; the Order to Reinstate Attorney's Fees Order; and the Attorney's Fee Order.

III. DISCUSSION

On certiorari, Aloha Sports contends that the ICA erred in the evidence it required Aloha Sports to present to withstand summary judgment on its UMOC claim. In light of our resolution of this issue, we also address the circuit court's alternative grounds for granting summary judgment, including that Aloha Sports' claim was waived and that Aloha Sports was judicially and collaterally estopped from proceeding upon [***19] this claim.<sup>21</sup> We evaluate each issue in light of the legal standard for summary judgment.<sup>22</sup>

HN2 [S]ummary judgment is appropriate if . . . there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. A fact is material if proof of that fact would have the effect of establishing or refuting one of the essential elements of a cause of action or defense asserted by the parties. The evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

A. Evidence Necessary to Withstand Summary Judgment on an HRS § 480-2 Unfair Method of Competition Claim

HN4 Hawaii's antitrust law, codified in HRS Chapter 480, includes a general prohibition at HRS § 480-2(a) stating that unfair methods of competition in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful.<sup>23</sup> HRS § 480-13 (1993 & Supp. 2002)<sup>24</sup> in turn establishes a private right of action to seek recovery for damages flowing from a party's HRS Chapter 480 violation.

HN5 To recover under HRS § 480-13(a) for an unfair method of competition violation, a plaintiff must prove: (1) a violation of HRS Chapter 480; (2) an injury to the plaintiff's business or property that flows from the defendant's conduct that negatively affects competition or harms fair competition; and (3) proof of damages. Gurrobat v. HTH

<sup>21</sup> Aloha Sports also challenges on certiorari the ICA's affirmation of the circuit court's Order to Reinstate Attorney's Fees Order and the Attorney's Fee Order.

<sup>22</sup> In this case, the record indicates that the NCAA's motion was filed after the close of discovery. It is noted that HN3 the movant's burden is generally greater when a party seeks summary judgment before discovery has concluded. See Ralston v. Yim, 129 Hawai'i 46, 48, 61, 292 P.3d 1276, 1278, 1291 (2013) ("[I]n general, a summary judgment movant cannot merely point to the non-moving party's lack of evidence to support its initial burden of production if discovery has not concluded." (citing French v. Hawaii Pizza Hut, Inc., 105 Hawai'i 462, 472, 99 P.3d 1046, 1056 (2004))).

(a) Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful.

...

(e) Any person may bring an action based on unfair methods of competition declared unlawful by this section.

(a) Except as provided in subsections (b) and (c), any person [***20] who is injured in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter:

(1) May sue for damages sustained by the person and, if the judgment is for the plaintiff, the plaintiff shall be awarded a sum not less than $1,000 or threefold damages by the plaintiff sustained, whichever sum is the greater . . . .

(Emphasis added.)

Corp., 133 Hawai'i 1, 21, 323 P.3d 792, 812 (2014). The second element has two parts. Id. First, a plaintiff is required to demonstrate "an injury in fact to his or her 'business or [**746] [*373] property.'" Id. Second, a plaintiff is required to show the "nature of the competition." Id. This latter requirement is met by demonstrating how the defendant's conduct negatively affects competition or harms fair competition. Id. at 22-23, 323 P.3d at 813-14.

We thus consider if Aloha Sports demonstrated a question of material fact as to the elements of its UMOC claim and whether the ICA imposed evidentiary requirements beyond what was required under [***21] our law.<sup>25</sup>

1. First Element: Violation of HRS Chapter 480

HN7[] The first element for recovery under HRS § 480-13(a) is proof of an HRS Chapter 480 violation. HRS § 480-2(a) does not define unfair methods of competition, although a number of other statutes cross-reference the provision and specify that particular practices are per se violations of the prohibition. See, e.g., HRS § 480D-4(a) (2008); HRS § 481B-4 (2008). This court has recognized that the statutorily enumerated violations are not an exhaustive catalogue of conduct that violates HRS § 480-2, as "[t]here is no limit to human inventiveness in this field." Cieri v. Leticia Query Realty, Inc., 80 Hawai'i 54, 61, 905 P.2d 29, 36 (1995) (quoting H. Stand. Comm. Rep. No. 55, in 1965 House Journal, at 538).

The circuit court in this case stated that, because the unfair method of competition alleged here is not specifically defined by statute, it fell to the court to determine the appropriate elements of a HRS § 480-2(a) violation in this context. The court reasoned that the alleged offending conduct was essentially a claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage, and thus it was necessary to prove the elements of the tort in order to prove a HRS § 480-2(a) violation.

HN8[] Under our precedents, however, the evaluation of whether particular, non-statutorily-enumerated conduct is unfair is simply a question of fact that [***22] does not require incorporating the elements of an analogous claim. See Robert's Hawaii School Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co., 91 Hawai'i 224, 239, 982 P.2d 853, 868 (1999), superseded by statute on other grounds. "[C]ompetitive conduct 'is unfair when it offends established public policy and when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers.'"<sup>26</sup> Id. at 255 n.34, 982 P.2d at 884 n.34 (quoting State ex rel. Bronster v. U.S. Steel Corp., 82 Hawai'i 32, 51, 919 P.2d 294, 313 (1996)). The circuit court thus erred in finding that it was necessary for Aloha Sports to prove a claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage in order to demonstrate a HRS § 480-2(a) violation.

<sup>25</sup> HN6[] In evaluating a motion for summary judgment, we apply a burden-shifting framework under which the moving party bears the initial burden of demonstrating that no genuine issue of material fact exists with respect to the essential elements of the claim and that the undisputed facts entitle the party to judgment as a matter of law. See Gurrobat v. HTH Corp., 133 Hawai'i 1, 14, 323 P.3d 792, 805 (2014). Where, as here, the non-movant bears the burden of proof at trial, the movant may meet its initial burden by either "(1) presenting evidence negating an element of the non-movant's claim, or (1) demonstrating that the non-movant will be unable to carry his or her burden of proof at trial." Ralston, 129 Hawai'i at 60-61, 292 P.3d at 1290-91 (citing French, 105 Hawai'i at 470-72, 99 P.3d at 1054-56). "Only once the moving party has satisfied its initial burden of production does the burden shift to the non-moving party to show specific facts that present a genuine issue for trial." Gurrobat, 133 Hawai'i at 14, 323 P.3d at 805.

In this case, the circuit court found that the NCAA had met its initial burden and that Aloha Sports then failed to present sufficient evidence to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Because Aloha Sports' arguments before this court focus on the sufficiency of the evidence it presented, the circuit court's finding that the NCAA met its initial burden appears to be uncontested.

<sup>26</sup> HN9[] Although the standard to prove a HRS § 480-2 violation and the elements to establish a tortious interference with economic advantage may seem similar in that the latter requires that a plaintiff intended to either pursue "an improper objective of harming the plaintiff or use[] wrongful means," Hawaii Med. Ass'n v. Hawaii Med. Serv. Ass'n, Inc., 113 Hawai'i 77, 116, 148 P.3d 1179, 1218 (2006) (quoting Omega Envtl., Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1166 (9th Cir. 1997)), the elements of the two claims are not identical. See infra, § III.C.

In its memorandum opinion addressing Aloha Sports' first appeal, the ICA ruled [**747] [*374] that Aloha Sports sufficiently alleged facts to discern a claim for which relief could be granted by alleging that the NCAA knew about Aloha Sports' pending sale to Pro Sports and that the NCAA disrupted the transaction by encouraging Pro Sports to abandon the deal with Aloha Sports and apply for a bowl game independently of Aloha Sports.

On remand, Aloha Sports substantiated its allegations of the NCAA's knowledge of the pending sale by providing evidence that the Subcommittee received information on Pro Sports' qualifications to organize and promote the 2003 Seattle Bowl and to pay the 2002 Seattle [***23] Bowl debts. Additionally, Aloha Sports submitted to the court the NCAA's internal "Seattle Bowl Issues" memorandum that stated that the sale of Aloha Sports to Pro Sports was contingent upon recertification of the Seattle Bowl. Aloha Sports also submitted evidence that the NCAA expressed concern that Aloha Sports' Terry Daw would remain involved after the sale of Aloha Sports to Pro Sports, and that immediately after announcing the decertification of the Seattle Bowl, the NCAA's Dennis Poppe and the Subcommittee privately informed Feller, CEO of Pro Sports, that it could reapply independently for certification of the Seattle Bowl the following year. Aloha Sports also provided evidence raising a question of fact as to whether the NCAA arbitrarily failed to apply its requirement for a one-year probation period prior to decertification of a bowl that was established for the 2002-03 season.

This evidence, at a minimum, gives rise to a question of material fact as to whether the NCAA unfairly decertified the 2003 Seattle Bowl in order to disrupt the transaction between Aloha Sports and Pro Sports, which a jury could consider immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious [***24] to consumers. Thus, Aloha Sports demonstrated a factual dispute as to a violation of HRS § 480-2\(a\) by virtue of an unfair method of competition. The circuit court therefore erred in concluding that summary judgment was warranted on this basis.

2. Second Element: Injury & Nature of Competition

a. Actual Harm to Competition Not Required to Withstand Summary Judgment

HN10 [↑] To fulfill the second element of an unfair method of competition violation, a plaintiff must (a) demonstrate an injury in fact to one's business and (b) demonstrate how a defendant's conduct negatively affects competition or harms fair competition. Gurrobat, 133 Hawai'i at 21, 323 P.3d at 812.

As to the injury requirement, the injury in fact must flow from the anticompetitive conduct. Id. at 23, 323 P.3d at 814. Aloha Sports meets the injury requirement because it presented evidence that as a result of the NCAA's allegedly unfair decertification of the 2003 Seattle Bowl--the NCAA's allegedly anticompetitive conduct--Aloha Sports was unable to complete its sale to Pro Sports.

Turning to the nature of the competition requirement, Aloha Sports contends that the ICA erred by holding that Aloha Sports was required to provide evidence of anticompetitive effects within that market to withstand summary judgment. In [***25] response, the NCAA maintains that the ICA correctly applied Hawai'i and federal precedent to find that Aloha Sports did not meet its burden as to the nature of competition requirement.

We recently addressed a plaintiff's burden when opposing summary judgment on an unfair method of competition claim in Gurrobat v. HTH Corporation, 133 Hawai'i 1, 323 P.3d 792 \(2014\). In that case, service employees brought suit against the operators of hotels (hotels) for distributing to non-service employees a portion of the service charges it collected from customers without informing customers of the practice, in contravention of HRS § 481B-14. Id. at 16-17, 323 P.3d at 807-08. We found that a genuine issue of material fact existed as to the nature of competition requirement based upon evidence that the hotels' non-compliance with the service-charge law allowed the hotels to lower their overall prices and thereby obtain an "unfair and illegal business advantage" over compliant competitors. [Id. at 22, 323 L<sup>\*\*7481</sup> \[\*3751\] P.3d at 813](#). Showing that the conduct of the hotels enabled them to create incentives for customers to choose their services over compliant competitors' services was sufficient to demonstrate that their conduct could have negatively affected competition and thus defend against summary judgment. Id.; see Hawaii Med. Ass'n v. Hawaii Med. Serv. Ass'n, Inc., 113 Hawai'i 77, 113, 148 P.3d 1179, 1215

(2006). It was not necessary for [**26] the plaintiffs to prove at a summary judgment proceeding that the hotels' conduct had in fact harmed competition. See Gurrobat, 133 Hawai'i at 22, 323 P.3d at 813. Further, although the plaintiffs in Gurrobat offered the evidence through expert testimony, we noted that expert testimony was not necessary to create a genuine issue of material fact regarding harm to competition sufficient to withstand summary judgment. See id.

In this case, Aloha Sports set forth how the NCAA's alleged anti-competitive conduct would negatively affect competition. Aloha Sports contends that the NCAA's decertification of the 2003 Seattle Bowl incentivized Pro Sports to abandon its agreement with Aloha Sports and to independently seek certification of a future Seattle Bowl through the NCAA. Cf. Gurrobat, 133 Hawai'i at 22, 323 P.3d at 813 ("plaintiffs may prove how a defendant's conduct negatively affects competition by showing that defendant's conduct enables the defendant to create incentives for customers to purchase banquet services from the defendant instead of competitors . . . ."); Hawaii Med. Ass'n, 113 Hawai'i at 113, 148 P.3d at 1215 (holding that plaintiffs may demonstrate harm to competition by showing the defendant engaged in "acts or practices that . . . create incentives for patients to look elsewhere"). Aloha Sports provided evidence [**27] that the NCAA no longer wished to deal with Aloha Sports' management and that immediately after its decertification of the 2003 Seattle Bowl, the NCAA privately informed Pro Sports that it could apply independently for certification of the Seattle Bowl in 2004. If true, the NCAA's conduct could be construed as wielding its power to ensure that it only deals with its staff's preferred applicants rather than evaluating certification decisions in compliance with its established rules and procedures.

It is reasonable to infer from this evidence that, as argued by Aloha Sports, the NCAA's allegedly arbitrary certification decision could negatively affect competition by (1) restricting the transfer of ownership of bowl games contingent upon recertification; (2) leading to lower prices for the sale of bowl sponsoring agencies because of uncertainty as to whether a bowl will gain recertification; and (3) acting as a restriction on output that would result in a loss of financial benefits to schools and consumers who would have otherwise participated in a given bowl. HN11
 ↑ [W]e must view all of the evidence and the inferences drawn therefrom] in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion." [**28] Anastasi, 137 Hawai'i at 112, 366 P.3d at 168 (emphasis added) (quoting Omerod, 116 Hawai'i at 254-55, 172 P.3d at 998-99).

Taken together in the light most favorable to Aloha Sports, Aloha Sports has presented evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the NCAA's conduct could negatively affect competition. Thus, the ICA erred in holding that "Aloha [Sports] has failed to provide any evidence that the NCAA's conduct negatively affected competition," and that Aloha Sports did not raise an issue of material fact as to the "nature of competition" to substantiate its UMOC claim.

Based on the foregoing, we conclude that Aloha Sports raised a genuine issue of material fact as to the second element of a HRS § 480-13(a) claim: an injury to the plaintiff's business or property that flows from the defendant's conduct that negatively affects competition or harms fair competition.<sup>27</sup>

b. Proof of Relevant Market, Harm to Market as a Whole, and Competition with Defendant Not Required to Withstand Summary Judgment

In its analysis regarding the nature of competition requirement, the ICA held that [**749] [*376] to withstand summary judgment, Aloha Sports needed to specify the relevant market and demonstrate that the alleged conduct affected that market beyond an adverse effect on Aloha Sports' business. [**29] The ICA also concluded that Aloha Sports was required to but failed to demonstrate that it was a competitor of or in competition with the NCAA.

<sup>27</sup> The third element is proof of damages. Gurrobat, 133 Hawai'i at 23, 323 P.3d at 814. Neither the circuit court in granting summary judgment nor the ICA in affirming the circuit court based its decision on the absence of a showing of proof of damages. Accordingly, since this issue is undisputed and was not relied upon by the circuit court, we conclude that Aloha Sports raised a disputed fact as to this element also.

First, HN12<sup>28</sup> to defend against summary judgment, it is sufficient for a plaintiff to offer proof of the general market at issue without resort to expert testimony. In Gurrobat, the plaintiffs contended that the defendants' asserted unfair method of competition would reduce fair competition "in the market for hotels, restaurants, and banquet service providers"--those generally in the field of competition with the defendant. 133 Hawai'i at 22, 323 P.3d at 813. We did not require the plaintiffs to define the market with great specificity in order to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Here, Aloha Sports presented sufficient evidence to discern the affected market by describing the NCAA's certification process and the underlying competition among bowl sponsoring agencies vying for NCAA certification of bowl games, the member institutions that participate in the bowls, and the consumers that attend the bowls.

Second, the ICA overstated the nature of competition requirement on summary judgment as necessitating proof that the defendant's conduct in fact negatively affected the market [\[\*\*\*30\]](#) beyond Aloha Sports' own injury. As stated in Gurrobat, HN13<sup>29</sup> demonstrating actual negative effects on or harm to fair competition in the relevant market is not required.<sup>28</sup> 133 Hawai'i at 22, 323 P.3d at 813.

Finally, the ICA noted that Aloha Sports failed to demonstrate that it was in competition with the NCAA. It is well settled, however, that HN14<sup>28</sup> plaintiffs need not be competitors or in competition with defendants to establish or recover from an unfair method of competition in violation of HRS § 480-2\(a\). Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel Ltd., 122 Hawai'i 423, 435, 228 P.3d 303, 315 \(2010\); Hawaii Med. Ass'n, 113 Hawai'i at 110, 148 P.3d at 1212; see also HRS § 480-2\(e\) ("Any person may bring an action based on unfair methods of competition declared unlawful by this section." (emphasis added)).

Thus, the ICA erred in affirming summary judgment on the bases that (1) Aloha Sports "failed to specify the relevant market," (2) Aloha Sports did not demonstrate harm to the market, and (3) Aloha Sports did not demonstrate that it was a competitor of or in competition with the NCAA.

B. Waiver and Judicial Estoppel

On remand, the circuit court held that Aloha Sports was barred by waiver and judicial estoppel from asserting its UMOC claim based on Aloha Sports' statement at a pre-trial hearing that it was solely preceding on its claim for interference with prospective business advantage and was abandoning [\[\*\*\*31\]](#) all other claims.<sup>29</sup>

HN15<sup>28</sup> A waiver does not occur when there is no right in existence to be waived. See Coon v. City & Cty. of Honolulu, 98 Hawai'i 233, 261, 47 P.3d 348, 376 \(2002\) ("To constitute a waiver, there must have existed a right claimed to have been waived and the waiving party must have had knowledge, actual or constructive, of the existence of such a right at the time of the purported waiver." (citations omitted)). Here, the circuit court had dismissed Aloha Sports' UMOC claim with prejudice three years prior to the 2011 pre-trial hearing when the purported waiver occurred. Indeed, the circuit court's final [\[\*\*750\] \[\*377\]](#) judgment, filed January 12, 2012, distinguished between the claims dismissed in the Order Dismissing UMOC Claim and the "remaining claims," which were dismissed by Aloha Sports' voluntary waiver at the pre-trial hearing. Thus, unlike the claims that were voluntarily dismissed, Aloha Sports did not have a then-existing right to proceed on the UMOC claim when the 2011 pre-trial hearing occurred.

<sup>28</sup> Additionally, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that under federal anti-trust law, harm to a single business may suffice to establish an anti-trust violation. Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 \(1959\) ("As such [a boycott by a combination of manufacturers and dealers] is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy.").

<sup>29</sup> As noted, the ICA did not address the circuit court's holdings on waiver, judicial estoppel, or collateral estoppel. However, the NCAA requested at oral argument that this court address these holdings if we were to conclude that there were disputed facts regarding the elements of a UMOC claim and that summary judgment had thus been improperly granted on this ground. Oral Argument at 00:36:50, Field v. The NCAA (No. SCWC-15-663),

In other words, prior to prevailing on its appeal of the Order Dismissing UMOC Claim, Aloha Sports could not have proceeded on the dismissed claim before the circuit court and therefore could not waive that nonexistent right at the hearing. Therefore, [***32] the circuit court erred in finding that Aloha Sports had waived its UMOC claim.<sup>30</sup>

HN16[↑] The doctrine of judicial estoppel precludes a party from assuming a position that is inconsistent with a position already accepted by the court to gain an unfair advantage in the proceedings. See Gurrobat v. HTH Corp., 133 Hawai'i 1, 20, 323 P.3d 792, 811 (2014); Roxas v. Marcos, 89 Hawai'i 91, 124-25, 969 P.2d 1209, 1242-43 (1998). The doctrine is intended to protect the integrity of the judicial system and prevents parties from "playing 'fast and loose' with the court or blowing 'hot and cold' during the course of litigation," thereby promoting "orderliness, regularity, and expedition of litigation." Gurrobat, 133 Hawai'i at 20, 323 P.3d at 811 (quoting Rosa v. CWJ Contractors, Ltd., 4 Haw. App. 210, 218-19, 664 P.2d 745, 751 (1983)). Because we hold that Aloha Sports did not waive its UMOC claim at the pre-trial hearing, Aloha Sports did not assume an inconsistent position by asserting its right to proceed on that claim. Thus, Aloha Sports was not judicially estopped from raising the UMOC claim.

Accordingly, we hold that the circuit court erred in finding that waiver and judicial estoppel applied to preclude Aloha Sport's assertion of its UMOC claim.

C. Collateral Estoppel

The circuit court also held on remand that based on the jury trial verdict finding that Aloha Sports failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the NCAA tortiously interfered [***33] with Aloha Sport's sale of itself to Pro Sports, Aloha Sports was collaterally estopped from pursuing its UMOC claim. HN17[↑] Collateral estoppel, or issue preclusion, is a bar to the relitigation of a fact or issue litigated in a prior suit when four requirements are met:

- (1) the issue decided in the prior adjudication is identical to the one presented in the action in question; (2) there is a final judgment on the merits; (3) the issue decided in the prior adjudication was essential to the final judgment; and (4) the party against whom collateral estoppel is asserted was a party or in privity with a party to the prior adjudication.

As an initial matter, Aloha Sports is correct in its contention that, because the ICA vacated the circuit court's January 12, 2012 final judgment, no final judgment in a prior case currently exists and the elements of collateral estoppel are not met. Nevertheless, we must consider whether the jury's determination as to Aloha Sports' claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage resolved facts in this case that would necessarily preclude recovery on Aloha Sports' UMOC claim.

HN18[↑] The elements of a HRS § 480-13(a) claim based on an unfair method of competition and [***34] a claim for intentional or tortious interference with prospective business advantage are not identical. HN19[↑] To establish an unfair method of competition claim, a plaintiff must prove: "(1) a violation of HRS Chapter 480; (2) which causes an injury to the plaintiff's business or property; and (3) proof of the amount of damages." Gurrobat v. HTH Corp., 133 Hawai'i 1, 21, 323 P.3d 792, 812 (2014). Under the second element, a plaintiff [**751] [*378] must demonstrate that the defendant's conduct negatively affects competition and that the plaintiff's injury stems from the defendant's anti-competitive or unfair conduct. Id. at 22-23, 323 P.3d at 813-14. There is no intent element required to establish an unfair method of competition claim. See Hungate v. Law Office of David B. Rosen, 139 Hawai'i 394, 413, 391 P.3d 1, 20 (2017) (citing Short v. Demopolis, 103 Wash.2d 52, 691 P.2d 163, 172 (Wash. 1984) (Pearson, J., concurring)).

<sup>30</sup> The circuit court held that Aloha Sports impliedly waived the UMOC claim at the pre-trial hearing because it was more difficult to prove than the other HRS § 480-2 claims that it expressly waived. Our precedent does not make a distinction between an implied and express waiver in this regard; without a then-existing right to proceed on the UMOC claim, Aloha Sports was not capable of waiving the claim by implication. See Coon, 98 Hawai'i at 261, 47 P.3d at 376.

In contrast, the elements of intentional or tortious interference with prospective business advantage require the plaintiff to prove all of the following:

(1) the existence of a valid business relationship or a prospective advantage or expectancy sufficiently definite, specific, and capable of acceptance in the sense that there is a reasonable probability of it maturing into a future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) knowledge of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy by the defendant; (3) a purposeful intent to interfere with the relationship, [***35] advantage, or expectancy; (4) legal causation between the act of interference and the impairment of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy; and (5) actual damages.

Robert's Hawaii Sch. Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co., Inc., 91 Hawai'i 224, 258, 982 P.2d 853, 887 (1999) (citations and footnote omitted) (emphasis added). Notably, unlike an unfair method of competition claim, tortious interference with prospective business advantage includes a purposeful intent element.

Although Aloha Sports relies on many of the same underlying facts to support the UMOC claim as the tortious interference with prospective business advantage claim, the jury's verdict on the interference with prospective business advantage claim did not provide any specific determinations regarding the individual elements of that claim.<sup>31</sup> Thus, it is unclear which issues and facts the jury determined to render its verdict. For example, the jury could have determined that the NCAA was not liable for tortious interference with prospective business advantage based solely on a failure to meet the purposeful intent element--an element not required in an UMOC claim. Simply stated, the jury's determination that the NCAA was not liable for tortious interference with prospective business advantage did not definitively resolve factual [***36] issues that would prevent Aloha Sports from satisfying the elements of its UMOC claim. Accordingly, the circuit court erred in holding that issue preclusion barred Aloha Sports from asserting its UMOC claim.

IV. CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, Aloha Sports raised genuine issues of material fact as to the first and second elements of an UMOC claim. The third element, damages, has not been contested. Therefore, the ICA erred in affirming the circuit court's order and judgment granting the NCAA summary judgment. Further, the circuit court erred in holding that Aloha Sports was estopped from asserting the UMOC claim based on waiver, judicial estoppel, and collateral estoppel. We therefore vacate the ICA's judgment on appeal, the circuit court's final judgment, and the Order Granting Summary Judgment, and the case is remanded to the circuit court for proceedings consistent with this opinion.<sup>32</sup>

<sup>31</sup> The Special Verdict Form stated, "Did Plaintiff ASI prove by a preponderance of the evidence that Defendant NCAA tortiously interfered with ASI's prospective business advantage with Pro Sports & Entertainment?" In the space marked "No" the jury indicated that all "12" jurors found that Aloha Sports had not proven tortious interference beyond a preponderance of the evidence. Because the jury marked "No" on the first question, the jury was not required to and did not respond to the remaining questions, i.e., whether Aloha Sports had proven beyond a preponderance of the evidence that the NCAA's actions were the cause of Aloha Sports harm, or the reasonable dollar amount of that harm.

<sup>32</sup> Based on our disposition, the ICA's holding affirming the Attorney's Fee Order is also vacated because it flows from the ICA and circuit court's holdings that the NCAA was the prevailing party on summary judgment. See HRS § 607-14 (2016); Blair v. Ing, 96 Hawai'i 327, 331, 31 P.3d 184, 188 (2001).

In Fed. Baseball, the United States Supreme Court has held that the business of professional baseball did not constitute interstate commerce and was not subject to antitrust law. The court reaffirmed the holding of Fed. Baseball when it upheld Major League Baseball's reserve clause (which permitted a team to retain the rights to a player even after the player's contract had expired) in Flood. Despite noting that the antitrust exemption for Major League Baseball was an exception and an anomaly, the court has concluded that any change to the exemption would need to be made by the United States Congress. Following Flood, however, player free agency has been established in Major League Baseball through arbitration and collective bargaining, and players' salaries increased significantly as league revenues grew.

HN2 Sales Taxes, Exempt Sales

Pursuant to R.C. 5741.02\(C\)\(2\), use tax does not apply to tangible personal property or services, the acquisition of which, if made in Ohio, would be a sale not subject to the tax imposed by R.C. 5739.01 to R.C. 5739.31. It follows that if the promotional items are not subject to sales tax pursuant to R.C. 5739.01 through R.C. 5739.31, then the purchaser does not owe use tax for those items. The court need only focus on the relevant sales-tax provisions because use tax will not apply when the acquisition of property would be exempt from sales tax.

HN3 Use Taxes, Imposition of Tax

One main feature of the sales and use taxes is the legislative intent to limit imposition of the tax to retail transactions, while excluding or exempting from the tax earlier transactions that are not retail transactions but rather are at the production or wholesale levels. Therefore, the starting point in cases like this often is the statutory definition of retail sale. R.C. 5739.01\(E\) defines retail sale as all sales, except those in which the purpose of the consumer is to resell the thing transferred or benefit of the service provided, by a person engaging in business, in the form in which the same is, or is to be, received by the person. R.C. 5739.01\(D\)\(1\); R.C. 5741.01\(F\). A consumer is any person who has purchased tangible personal property. R.C. 5739.03\(A\); R.C. 5741.02\(B\). Each consumer shall be liable for the tax.

HN4 Contract Formation, Consideration

A baseball team, as purchaser of the promotional items, can have the purpose to resell under R.C. 5739.01\(E\) only if the club intends to make sales of the items. Sale is defined in R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(1\) to include all transactions by which title or possession, or both, of tangible personal property, is or is to be transferred, or a license to use or consume tangible personal property is or is to be granted, but this definition applies only if those transactions are for a consideration, R.C. 5739.01\(B\). R.C. 5739.02\(C\) establishes the sales-tax presumption that all sales made in this state are subject to the tax until the contrary is established, and R.C. 5741.02\(G\) carries that presumption over to the use tax. The baseball team accordingly has the burden to prove that they purchased promotional items for the purpose of reselling them to fans. Consideration, in the contract-law sense, is important.

**HN5** Sales Taxes, Imposition of Tax

The Ohio Supreme Court has treated the question whether there is a purpose to resell under R.C. 5739.01\(E\) as an issue of intent to be determined in light of attendant facts and circumstances, with the taxpayer who claims sale-for-resale exclusion bearing the burden to prove its actual intent to resell.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Consideration

**HN6** Contract Formation, Consideration

Whether there is consideration at all is a proper question for a court. Although courts generally do not inquire into the adequacy of consideration if consideration is found to exist, courts must determine whether any consideration was really bargained for.

In Hyatt Corp., a hotel operator that paid cleaning companies to launder the linens it supplied to its guests argued that the linen-cleaning service was resold to its guests and therefore did not qualify as a retail sale pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(E\). The Ohio Supreme Court has concluded that although the sale-for-resale exemption applied in situations involving transient guests, the exemption did not apply in situations involving long-term guests.

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Sales Taxes > Exempt Sales

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Sales Taxes > Sales Tax Definitions

**HN8** Sales Taxes, Exempt Sales

Because linen-cleaning service is a transaction by which lodging by a hotel is furnished to a guest pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(2\), it follows that this service is part of a sale in situations involving transient guests. The furnishing of lodging to long-term guests, however, falls outside of the scope of R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(2\) by virtue of R.C. 5739.01\(N\), which defines transient guests as persons occupying a room or rooms for sleeping accommodations for less than thirty consecutive days. This means that because furnishing lodging to long-term guests is not a part of a sale under R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(2\)—and is thus not something that can be resold—the sale-for-resale exemption could not apply to linen-cleaning service provided to long-term guests. As the Ohio Supreme Court has explained in Hyatt Corp., under the statutes, renting these rooms is not a sale because lodging is not sold to a transient guest, and consequently, the cleaning service is not resold. Accordingly, this linen cleaning transaction is not excepted.

Transactions involving promotional items are sales in and of themselves pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(1\), which provides that all transactions by which title or possession, or both, of tangible personal property, is or is to be transferred are sales.

HN10 [blue icon] Sales Taxes, Imposition of Tax

R.C. 5739.02\(B\)\(35\)\(a\) states that the sales covered by its terms consist of newspaper inserts, catalogues, coupons, flyers, gift certificates, or other advertising material that prices and describes tangible personal property offered for retail sale. However, the mere fact that an exemption exists for one category of promotional items does not mean that all other promotional items are subject to taxation. The Ohio Supreme Court has explained that the promotional items are not subject to sales tax under R.C. 5739.01\(E\) because they were bought for the purpose of reselling them. Because the purchase of the promotional items did not constitute a retail sale under R.C. 5739.01\(E\), the provisions of R.C. 5739.02—which apply only to retail sales—are irrelevant.

[***1179] [*512] Fischer, J.

[**P1] It would be an understatement to say that baseball has changed in dramatic ways since, as Justice Harry Blackmun wrote, the "Cincinnati Red Stockings came into existence in 1869 upon an outpouring of local pride," Flood v. Kuhn, 407 U.S. 258, 261, 92 S.Ct. 2099, 32 L.Ed.2d 728 \(1972\). From the 1890s, when National Baseball Hall of Fame legend and Newcomerstown, Ohio's own Cy Young starred for the Cleveland Spiders; through the 1920s, [****2] when Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, a native of Milville, Ohio, and a Hall of Famer, strove as Major League Baseball's first commissioner to maintain the integrity of the game following the notorious Black Sox scandal; through the 1940s, when player-manager and Hall of Famer Lou Boudreau guided the Cleveland Indians to a World Series championship and was the American League's Most Valuable Player ("MVP") in 1948; through the 1950s and 1960s, when Hall of Fame [***1180] manager Walter Alston of Venice, Ohio, and Miami University won four World Series titles with the Brooklyn and Los Angeles Dodgers; through the Big Red Machine era of the 1970s; through the 1980s, when Dayton, Ohio native, Ohio University alumnus, and Hall of Famer Mike Schmidt won three National League MVP Awards and was named World Series MVP in 1980 for the Philadelphia Phillies; and into the 1990s, when Cincinnati's homegrown Hall of Famer Barry Larkin led the Reds to a World Series Championship, professional baseball has seen the creation of the American League in 1900, the creation of the World Series in 1903, the first radio broadcast of a game in 1921, the first night game at Crosley Field in Cincinnati in 1935, the breaking [***3] of the color barrier by Jackie Robinson (in the National League) and Larry Doby (for the Indians in the American League), the first televised World Series in 1947, the establishment of the designated hitter in 1973, and the cancellation of the World Series due to a player strike in 1994. [**P2] At one time, the emphasis in professional baseball was on the game, as succinctly put in the title of the documentary series [***4] covering pre-1960s Major League Baseball that was created by a national cable network, HBO: "When It Was a Game." See Richard Sandomir, Old Color Clips Reborn in HBO Documentary, New York Times (June 21, 1991) B12, available at <https://www.nytimes.com/1991/06/21/sports/tv-sports-baseball-old-color-clips-reborn-in-hbo-documentary.html> (accessed Oct. 25, 2018). In the early days, professional baseball was a business, but the game itself was the focus of that business, as explained by Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr. in 1922: "The business is giving exhibitions of base ball." *Federal Baseball Club, Inc. v. National League of Professional Baseball Clubs*, 259 U.S. 200, 208, 42 S. Ct. 465, 66 L. Ed. 898, 20 Ohio L. Rep. 211 \(1922\).

[**P3] HN1 In Fed. Baseball, the court held that the business of professional baseball did not constitute interstate commerce and was not subject to antitrust law. *Id.* at 207-209. The court reaffirmed the holding of Fed. Baseball when it upheld Major League Baseball's reserve clause (which permitted a team to retain the rights to a player even after the player's contract had expired) in Flood. *Flood* at 284. Despite noting that the antitrust exemption for Major League Baseball was "an exception and an anomaly," *id.* at 282, the court concluded that any change to the exemption would need to be made by Congress, *id.* at 285. Following Flood, however, player free agency was established [***5] in Major League Baseball through arbitration and collective bargaining, and players' salaries increased significantly as league revenues grew. Noah Goodman, *The Evolution and Decline of Free Agency in Major League Baseball: How the 2012-2016 Collective Bargaining Agreement Is Restraining Trade*, 23 Sports Lawyers J. 19, 20-21, 37-39 \(2016\).

[**P4] [***1181] Along with increasing revenues and salaries, other factors have contributed to the transformation of professional baseball into something more than just a game. Faced with rising ticket prices and increasing entertainment options, Major League Baseball has experienced challenges in getting fans to attend games. See Mark Koba, Keeping Fans in the Stands Is Getting Harder to Do, [*514] <https://www.cnbc.com/id/100886843> (accessed Oct. 25, 2018). Baseball organizations have thus become increasingly creative in finding ways to entice fans to attend games, turning stadiums into "mini theme parks" featuring additional attractions such as fireworks, concerts, and expanded dining options. Id. One such enticement is the opportunity to receive unique merchandise—such as bobbleheads, shirts, blankets, caps, player cards, tote bags, magnetic schedules, photographs, and bats—that can be obtained only by attending a game. This merchandise, commonly known as "promotional items," is [***6] the subject of this appeal.

[**P5] In this case, we are asked to consider how state tax law applies to the purchase of those promotional items by appellant, Cincinnati Reds, L.L.C. ("the Reds"). More specifically, the question before us is whether the sale-for-resale exemption of *R.C. 5739.01\(E\)* precludes the Reds from having to pay use tax on those promotional items. For the reasons explained below, we conclude that the exemption applies in this case. Thus, in the familiar words of Marty Brennaman, longtime Reds radio announcer and recipient of the National Baseball Hall of Fame's Ford C.

Frick Award, we determine that "this one belongs to the Reds." We accordingly reverse the decision of the Board of Tax Appeals ("BTA").

I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

[**P6] Appellee, the tax commissioner, conducted a use-tax audit of the Reds' purchases over the period January 1, 2008, through December 31, 2010. The portion of the audit at issue in this appeal concerns the Reds' purchase of promotional items.

[**P7] At the BTA hearing, the Reds' chief financial officer, Doug Healy, testified that the purpose of distributing promotional items is to drive ticket revenue at games that would otherwise be attended by fewer fans. He testified that [****7] the increased ticket revenue more than offsets the cost of promotional items distributed—"o]therwise we wouldn't do it." Healy said that the Reds decide prior to the season which games might otherwise have low attendance and therefore could most benefit from the team's distribution of promotional items.

[**P8] Healy testified that the Reds advertise in advance that specific promotional items will be distributed at particular games, using media such as radio, television, billboards, and fliers. Items sold in the Reds' "fan shop" are similar to, but not the same as, the promotional items distributed to ticketholders at games, which are otherwise unavailable to the general public.

[**P9] The cost of promotional items is not separately stated from ticket prices, nor do ticket prices vary in accordance with whether promotional items are offered at a particular game. But ticket prices overall are set to cover the cost of [*515] promotional items along with other overhead associated with holding them as inventory and distributing them. Thus, the price of tickets to a particular game does not specifically reflect the items distributed at that game; the Reds try to, according to Healy, "smooth [the] ticket prices [****8] throughout the year."

[**P10] [***1182] The tickets themselves do not state or include any guarantee regarding promotional items. However, Healy testified that fans who purchase tickets to games at which promotional items are offered "[a]bsolutely" believe that they are purchasing both the promotional item and the right to view the game at the ballpark. He said that fans expect and feel entitled to receive the promotional items, and he explained that it would be a "public relations nightmare" if the Reds reneged on the commitment to distribute them. The uncontradicted record indicates that the Reds do not purposely underorder promotional items but instead estimate the amount of promotional items needed for a particular game based upon the projected attendance for that game. In the event that the Reds run out of any given promotional item, Healy testified that the Reds "will remedy it." He acknowledged that in these instances, the Reds may not be able to provide exactly the same promotional item, but he said that the Reds would "make it right" in ways such as giving another promotional item or complimentary tickets to fans who had failed to receive the designated items.

[**P11] The tax commissioner in his final [***9] determination concluded that "there is no evidence that the promotional items were resold with the admission to the games." The tax commissioner accordingly denied the Reds' request to remove the promotional items from the use-tax assessment.

[**P12] In affirming the decision of the tax commissioner, the BTA similarly found that "the promotional items * * * were given away for free, primarily to increase interest in certain targeted games or generally increase interest among a broader audience." BTA No. 2015-1707, 2017 WL 2324085, *2 (May 22, 2017). The BTA, despite the uncontradicted record evidence to the contrary, also stated that "the cost of the subject promotional items is not included in the ticket price," in the sense that "the ticket price for each particular seat is the same throughout an entire season regardless of whether a promotional item is being offered." Id. The BTA further stated that at the time they purchased their tickets, the Reds' patrons were not charged a separate, distinct amount for the promotional items given away. Moreover, a patron became eligible to receive a promotional item only after that game's ticket was purchased. Patrons paid the same amount for game tickets on promotional item giveaway days, even if they [****10] did not actually receive a promotional item, i.e., they chose not to take the item upon entrance to the game, or they failed to receive an item because the supply ran out. Finally, [*516] the Reds' advertising confirmed that patrons were not being charged a separate amount for the items, clearly providing that the promotional items were "free," or a "giveaway."

Id. at *3.

[**P13] In their appeal, the Reds set forth two propositions of law:

1. When there is a transfer of valuable property to induce the purchase of another item, the consideration paid is for both the property and the other item. A separately stated price for the property is unnecessary to establish it was transferred for consideration.
2. The Board of Tax Appeals' decision is unreasonable and unlawful because material findings made by the Board are not supported by any reliable and probative evidence.

[***1183] II. ANALYSIS

[**P14] HN2 Pursuant to [R.C. 5741.02\(C\)\(2\) as relevant here, use tax does not apply to "tangible personal property or services, the acquisition of which, if made in Ohio, would be a sale not subject to the tax imposed by sections 5739.01 to 5739.31 of the Revised Code." It follows that if the promotional items are not subject to sales tax pursuant to R.C. 5739.01 through 5739.31, then the Reds do not owe use tax for those items. Thus, the [***11] controlling statutory provisions in this case are under R.C. Chapter 5739, the sales-tax chapter of the Revised Code. See Procter & Gamble Co. v. Lindley, 17 Ohio St.3d 71, 73, 17 Ohio B. 196, 477 N.E.2d 1109 \(1985\) (observing that the court need only focus on the relevant sales-tax provisions because use tax will not apply when the acquisition of property would be exempt from sales tax).

[**P15] HN3 One main feature of the sales and use taxes is the legislative intent to limit imposition of the tax to retail transactions, while excluding or exempting from the tax earlier transactions that are not retail transactions but rather are at the production or wholesale levels. Therefore, the starting point in cases like this often is the statutory definition of "retail sale." [R.C. 5739.01\(E\) defines "retail sale" as "all sales, except those in which the purpose of the consumer is to resell the thing transferred or benefit of the service provided, by a person engaging in business, in the form in which the same is, or is to be, received by the person." (Emphasis added.) It is undisputed that the Reds purchased the promotional items from their suppliers and thereby became a "consumer" under the sales-tax [*517] and use-tax laws. See R.C. 5739.01\(D\)\(1\); R.C. 5741.01\(F\) (a "consumer" is "any person who has purchased tangible personal property"); see also R.C. 5739.03\(A\); R.C. 5741.02\(B\) ("Each consumer [****12] * * * shall be liable for the tax"). Thus, the question in this case is whether the Reds purchased the promotional items for the purpose of reselling them.

[**P16] HN4 The Reds, as purchaser of the promotional items, can have the purpose to "resell" under [R.C. 5739.01\(E\) only if the club intends to make "sales" of the items. "Sale" is defined in R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(1\) to include "[a]ll transactions by which title or possession, or both, of tangible personal property, is or is to be transferred, or a license to use or consume tangible personal property is or is to be granted," but this definition applies only if those "transactions [are] for a consideration," R.C. 5739.01\(B\). R.C. 5739.02\(C\) establishes the sales-tax presumption that "all sales made in this state are subject to the tax until the contrary is established," and R.C. 5741.02\(G\) carries that presumption over to the use tax. The Reds accordingly had the burden to prove that they purchased promotional items for the purpose of reselling them to fans.

A. The Only Evidence [****13] in the Record Shows the Existence of Consideration

[**P18] The BTA decided this case based on its finding that given all the circumstances, the Reds intended to give away promotional items for free rather than to sell them. The Reds contest this finding, arguing that they resell the promotional items by promising to distribute them. The Reds argue that this promise creates a contractual expectation on the part of the fans, who purchase tickets and attend the [***1184] games as consideration for receiving the unique promotional items.

[**P19] HN5 This court has treated the question whether there is a "purpose * * * to resell" under R.C. 5739.01\(E\) as an issue of intent to be determined in light of attendant facts and circumstances, with the taxpayer who claims sale-for-resale exclusion bearing the burden to prove its actual intent to resell. Satullo v. Wilkins, 111 Ohio St.3d 399, 2006-Ohio-5856, 856 N.E.2d 954, ¶25-31. Based on the record before us, we agree with the Reds' second proposition of law and determine that the BTA's finding that the Reds intended to give away promotional items rather than to sell them is not supported by any reliable and probative evidence found in the record—in fact, the evidence in the record is to the contrary—and is therefore unreasonable and unlawful.

[**P20] [*518] HN6 "[W]hether there is [***14] consideration at all is a proper question for a court." Williams v. Ormsby, 131 Ohio St.3d 427, 2012-Ohio-690, 966 N.E.2d 255, ¶ 17. Although courts generally do not inquire into the adequacy of consideration if consideration is found to exist, courts must determine "whether any "consideration" was really bargained for." Id., quoting Carlisle v. T & R Excavating, Inc., 123 Ohio App.3d 277, 283-284, 704 N.E.2d 39 \(9th Dist.1997\).

[**P21] Healy's unrefuted testimony indicates that in the specific circumstances here, fans gave consideration in exchange for promotional items. He explained that the Reds advertise in advance to notify fans when specific promotional items will be distributed. Fans then purchase tickets to those specific games with the expectation that they will receive a promotional item. The Reds attempt to purchase enough promotional items so that one will be available for each fan. Healy offered undisputed testimony that in the event that the Reds do not have enough promotional items to provide one to each fan, the Reds would provide something of equivalent value, such as a different promotional item or a ticket to a future game.

[**P22] In determining that no consideration was given by fans in exchange for the promotional items, the tax commissioner and BTA focused on their findings that fans pay the same price to attend a game regardless of whether [***15] a promotional item is offered and that the cost of the promotional item is not included in the ticket price. But Healy specifically testified that the costs of promotional items are included in ticket prices when they are set before the start of a season and that promotional items are distributed at less desirable games for which tickets are not expected to be sold out. Thus, rather than offering discounted ticket prices to these less desirable games, it stands to reason that by including the cost of the promotional item in the ticket price, one portion of the ticket price accounts for the right to attend the less desirable game and a separate portion of the ticket price accounts for the right to receive the promotional item. Based on this record, we accordingly conclude that the promotional items constituted things of value in exchange for which fans paid money that was included in the ticket prices.

[**P23] Notably, the promotional items at issue in this case are distinct from unexpected, gratuitous items that fans might receive when attending a game. For instance, a fan might catch and bring home a foul ball hit by a player or a t-shirt tossed into the stands. In these instances, the fan [***16] had no expectation of receiving the item and did not purchase a ticket under the assumption that the item would be provided by the team.

[**P24] In the present case, fans did not receive the promotional items unexpectedly or by chance. Instead, the unique promotional items were an explicit part of the [***1185] bargain, along with the right to attend the game, that the fans [*519] obtained in exchange for paying the ticket fee. We therefore conclude that the fans furnished consideration for the Reds' promise to hand out these types of promotional items at the games and that the Reds met their burden to prove that they purchased promotional items for the purpose of reselling them to fans.

[**P25] While our conclusion may be viewed as exposing a "loophole" by which sports organizations can avoid paying use tax on promotional items, we emphasize that our interpretation is compelled by the application of R.C. Chapter 5739 to the specific facts in the record in this case. If the General Assembly prefers that sports organizations pay use tax on promotional items under the circumstances presented here, it can amend the Revised Code to require them to do so.

B. Application of the Sale-for-Resale Exemption in this Case Is Consistent with Hyatt [****17] Corp. v. Limbach

[**P26] In arguing that the promotional items were not resold pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(E\) because the Reds did not make a taxable "sale" of the promotional items, the tax commissioner relies on Hyatt Corp. v. Limbach, 69 Ohio St.3d 537, 1994-Ohio-342, 634 N.E.2d 995 \(1994\). Given the factual differences between this case and Hyatt Corp., we conclude that Hyatt Corp. does not support the tax commissioner's argument and instead accords with our conclusion that the promotional items are subject to the sale-for-resale exemption of R.C. 5739.01\(E\).

[**P27] HN7 [↑] In Hyatt Corp., a hotel operator that paid cleaning companies to launder the linens it supplied to its guests argued that the linen-cleaning service was resold to its guests and therefore did not qualify as a "retail sale" pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(E\). Id. at 539. This court concluded that although the sale-for-resale exemption applied in situations involving transient guests, the exemption did not apply in situations involving long-term guests. Id. at 540.

[**P28] At the time of the court's decision in Hyatt Corp., a transaction by which industrial laundry-cleaning service was provided constituted a "sale" pursuant to former R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(3\)\(d\), Am.Sub.H.B. No. 152, 145 Ohio Laws, Part II, 3341, Part III, 4287. The court did not rely on that statute, however, and its decision was instead premised on R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(2\) [****18], which specifies that the definition of "sale" includes "[a]ll transactions by which lodging by a hotel is or is to be furnished to transient guests."

[**P29] The court explained that "[i]n a lodging transaction, the hotel transfers a full sleeping room to its guest. This transfer includes the use of linens to sleep on and to wash with." Hyatt Corp., 69 Ohio St.3d at 540, 634 N.E.2d 995. Because hotel guests bargained solely for lodging, rather than lodging plus a specific linen-cleaning service, the court focused on R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(2\), which addresses [*520] lodging transactions, rather than former R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(3\)\(d\), which addressed industrial laundry-cleaning-service transactions.

[**P30] HN8 [↑] Because linen-cleaning service is a transaction by which lodging by a hotel is furnished to a guest pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(2\), it follows that this service is part of a sale in situations involving transient guests. The furnishing of lodging to long-term guests, however, falls outside of the scope of R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(2\) by virtue of R.C. 5739.01\(N\), which defines "transient guests" as "persons occupying a room or rooms for sleeping accommodations for less than thirty consecutive days." This means that because furnishing lodging to long-term guests is not a part of a "sale" under R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(2\) and is thus not [****1186] something that can be resold—the sale-for-resale exemption [****19] could not apply to linen-cleaning service provided to long-term guests. As this court explained in Hyatt Corp., "Under the statutes, renting these rooms is not a sale because lodging is not sold to a transient guest, and consequently, the cleaning service is not resold. Accordingly, this linen cleaning transaction is not excepted." Hyatt Corp. at 540.

[**P31] As the tax commissioner points out, like the furnishing of lodging to long-term guests, the sale of game tickets falls outside the definition of "sale" under R.C. 5739.01\(B\). This does not mean that Hyatt Corp. controls in this case, however. In Hyatt Corp., the court treated former R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(3\)\(d\) as inapplicable and whether the linen-cleaning service was taxable depended on whether the service was a transaction by which lodging by a hotel was furnished to transient guests pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(2\). If the service was a feature of lodging provided to a transient guest, it was part of a "sale." If the service was a feature of lodging provided to a long-term guest, however, it was not part of a "sale." Thus, in Hyatt Corp., whether the linen-cleaning service was taxable depended on the nature of the lodging.

[**P32] In this case, however, whether the promotional items are taxable does not depend on whether [****20] selling tickets constitutes a "sale." This is so because HN9 [↑] transactions involving promotional items are "sales" in and of themselves pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(1\), which provides that "[a]ll transactions by which title or possession, or both, of tangible personal property, is or is to be transferred" are "sales." As we have noted above, the promotional items were an explicit part of the bargain, along with the right to attend the game, that the fans obtained in exchange for paying the ticket fee. This is in distinct contrast to Hyatt Corp., in which this court found that the linen-cleaning service was not a separate and explicit part of the bargain by which lodging was provided. If it had found otherwise, the court would have applied former R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(3\)\(d\) and treated the linen-cleaning service as a separate transaction that constituted a "sale" [*521] pursuant to that statutory provision. We accordingly conclude that Hyatt Corp. does not support the tax commissioner's argument.

155 Ohio St. 3d 512, *520 LEXIS 2018-Ohio-4669, **2018-Ohio-4669 LEXIS 22 N.E.3d 1178, ***1186 LEXIS 2018 Ohio LEXIS 2710,

C. R.C. 5739.02\(B\)\(35\)\(a\) Is Not Affected by Our Conclusion

[**P33] The tax commissioner also argues that treating the promotional items in this case as purchases for resale effectively nullifies R.C. 5739.02\(B\)\(35\)\(a\), which exempts from sales tax those items that are purchased with the intention of [****21] using them to facilitate retail sales. HN10  R.C. 5739.02\(B\)\(35\)\(a\) states that the sales covered by its terms "consist[] of newspaper inserts, catalogues, coupons, flyers, gift certificates, or other advertising material that prices and describes tangible personal property offered for retail sale." The tax commissioner argues that because that list does not include items like the promotional items at issue in this case, the General Assembly must have intended that the promotional items in this case be subject to taxation.

[**P34] However, the mere fact that an exemption exists for one category of promotional items does not mean that all other promotional items are subject to taxation. We have explained that the promotional items here are not subject to sales tax under R.C. 5739.01\(E\) because they were bought by the Reds for the purpose of reselling them. Because the Reds' purchase of the promotional items did not constitute a "retail sale" under R.C. 5739.01\(E\), the provisions of R.C. 5739.02—which apply only to retail sales—are irrelevant in this case. We accordingly [***1187] reject the tax commissioner's argument that our conclusion in this case effectively nullifies R.C. 5739.02\(B\)\(35\)\(a\).

III. CONCLUSION

[**P35] Echoing a phrase often used by the person who was the youngest-ever Major League [****22] Baseball player, a longtime Reds player and radio commentator, and a native of Hamilton, Ohio, Joe Nuxhall, having completed our analysis, we are now "rounding third and heading for home."

[**P36] Because the specific evidence in the record establishes that fans who purchase tickets to Reds games at which unique promotional items will be distributed do so with the expectation that they will receive those promotional items, we conclude that consideration is given in exchange for the Reds' agreement to supply fans with those promotional items. The transfer of promotional items to fans thus constitutes a "sale" pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(1\), and the promotional items are subject to the sale-for-resale exemption of R.C. 5739.01\(E\). We accordingly conclude that the Reds are not liable for use tax on the promotional items pursuant to R.C. 5741.02.

[**P37] [*522] We note that this opinion focuses on the sole issue in the case as identified by the Reds: whether the Reds received consideration from fans in exchange for the promotional items so that those items qualified for the sale-for-resale exemption of R.C. 5739.01\(E\). We do not reach any conclusions on issues not before us in this appeal, and we reverse the BTA's decision.

Dissent

DEGENARO, J., dissenting.

[**P38] I respectfully dissent from the judgment of a majority of this court to reverse the decision of the Board of Tax Appeals ("BTA"). The lead opinion reasons that because the promotional items purchased and distributed by appellant, Cincinnati Reds, L.L.C. ("the Reds"), were a separate and "explicit part of the bargain" when baseball fans purchased certain game tickets, the Reds acquired those items for the purpose of "reselling" them to the ticket purchasers and, consequently, that the Reds are not obligated to pay use tax on those items. Lead opinion at ¶ 24; see also id. at ¶ 32. I disagree. Because the ticket sales themselves are not taxed, the effect of reversing the decision of the BTA is to relieve the Reds' acquisition and transfer of the promotional items—which are tangible personal property—of any sales-or use-tax obligation, despite the fact that the sales tax and the use tax generally apply to such transactions. See R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(1\) (for purposes of the [****24] sales tax, "sale" generally includes all transactions transferring title or possession of tangible personal property for consideration); R.C. 5741.02\(B\) (each consumer who uses tangible personal property in the state generally must pay use tax). In my view, the evidence presented in this case and the applicable law dictate the opposite result.

Legal Framework

[**P39] A consumer who has purchased tangible, personal property for storage, use, or other consumption in Ohio generally must pay use tax. See R.C. 5741.02\(A\)\(1\) \(B\). Subject to an exception that is not relevant here, the use tax does not apply to the use of "tangible personal property or services, the acquisition of which, if [***1188] made in Ohio, would be a sale not subject to the tax imposed by sections 5739.01 to 5739.31 of the Revised Code." R.C. 5741.02\(C\)\(2\). In other words, items that are exempt from sales tax are also generally exempt [*523] from use tax. Accordingly, although this case involves a use-tax assessment, we focus on the provisions of R.C. Chapter 5739, the sales-tax chapter of the Revised Code. See Procter & Gamble Co. v. Lindley, 17 Ohio St.3d 71, 73, 17 Ohio B. 196, 477 N.E.2d 1109 \(1985\).

[**P40] Relevant here, pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(E\), the definition of "retail sale" does not include those sales "in which the purpose of the consumer is to resell the thing transferred or benefit of the service provided." And in order for a transaction to constitute a [****25] "sale," it must be "for a consideration." R.C. 5739.01\(B\).

[**P41] The main issue in this case is whether the sale-for-resale exception of R.C. 5739.01\(E\) relieves the Reds from having to pay use tax on promotional items, such as bobbleheads, that they distribute at games.

The BTA's Factual Findings Should Be Afforded Deference

[**P42] My principal point of disagreement lies with the lead opinion's determination that the BTA's finding that the Reds intended to give away promotional items rather than to sell them "is not supported by any reliable and probative evidence found in the record" (emphasis added) and that the BTA's decision is therefore "unreasonable and unlawful." Lead opinion at ¶ 19. In the same vein, I disagree with the lead opinion's conclusion that the evidence unequivocally establishes that fans gave consideration in exchange for the promotional items.

[**P43] In the BTA proceedings, the Reds bore the burden to demonstrate that they intended to resell the promotional items. Satullo v. Wilkins, 111 Ohio St.3d 399, 2006-Ohio-5856, 856 N.E.2d 954, ¶27; R.C. 5739.02\(C\) (all sales are presumed taxable "until the contrary is established"); R.C. 5741.02\(G\) (the same presumption applies regarding use tax). The BTA concluded that the Reds failed to meet this burden. We must affirm the BTA's factual findings "if they are supported [****26] by reliable and probative evidence, and we afford deference to the BTA's determination of the credibility of witnesses and its weighing of the evidence subject only to an abuse-of-discretion review on appeal." Accel, Inc. v. Testa, 152 Ohio St.3d 262, 2017-Ohio-8798, 95 N.E.3d 345, ¶ 16, quoting HealthSouth Corp. v. Testa, 132 Ohio St.3d 55, 2012-Ohio-1871, 969 N.E.2d 232, ¶ 10.

[**P44] Here, the evidence demonstrates that the Reds' pregame advertising often stated that such items were available as a "giveaway," that they would be distributed for "free," and that quantities were limited (e.g., "Free to the first 20,000 fans in attendance"). The game tickets contained no written guarantees that fans who bought tickets would receive the promotional items. The Reds' chief financial officer ("CFO") testified at the BTA hearing that the Reds provided season-ticket holders greater "access to promotional items" by allowing them to enter the stadium 30 minutes earlier than single-game ticket holders. Evidence in [*524] the record shows that on most promotional-item-giveaway days, thousands of fans—sometimes more than 10,000—did not receive the promotional item. According to the Reds' CFO, if a fan who did not receive an item complained, the Reds would "make accommodations" to remedy the situation. Typically, the Reds would provide a substitute promotional item [****27] to an aggrieved fan, but if a person complained enough, the Reds would refund the full ticket price.

[**P45] Moreover, although the Reds' CFO testified at the BTA hearing that "there's a real cost" associated with the [***1189] promotional items that is "part of the admission," he also emphasized that advertising the promotional giveaways provided "an incremental ticket lift" that was important because the Reds "are in the business of selling tickets" (emphasis added)—in other words, the Reds were not in the business of reselling those promotional items but instead distributed them to promote ticket sales. And although—like any other overhead expense—the cost of promotional items was apparently built into ticket prices overall, the record clearly supports the BTA's finding that "the ticket price for each particular seat is the same * * *, regardless of whether a promotional item is being offered," BTA No. 2015-1707, 2017 WL 2324085, *2 (May 22, 2017). The Reds' CFO stated that the ticket prices for a particular game were not dependent on the Reds' providing promotional items at that game.

[**P46] Thus, the BTA was justified in concluding that the purchase of a game ticket constituted consideration for nothing more than the right to attend the baseball game and [****28] that the Reds were not reselling the promotional items by advertising and giving them away free of any charge beyond the price of the ticket—as the Reds' CFO testified, the Reds were "driv[ing] additional ticket attendance" by distributing the promotional items. Incentivizing paid attendance at the games does not—at least not necessarily, as the lead opinion contends—involve "reselling" the promotional items.

[**P47] I disagree with the lead opinion's conclusion that the ticket purchasers provided consideration for the promotional items. The lead opinion notes that the cost of promotional items was built into all ticket prices before the season, with no separate charge for the promotional item offered at a particular game, and it concludes that "by including the cost of the promotional item in the ticket price, one portion of the ticket price accounts for the right to attend the less desirable game and a separate portion of the ticket price accounts for the right to receive the promotional item." Lead opinion at ¶ 22. But that means that every ticket purchaser at every game helped pay for promotional items regardless of whether a promotional item was received—or was even offered—at a particular [****29] game, and that circumstance breaks the link between the payment of the ticket price and the offer of a promotional item.

[**P48] [*525] The facts that the Reds' CFO testified that the fans have "a certain level of expectation that they will receive the bobblehead" and that he answered "yes" to the Reds' counsel's assertion that the fans "feel entitled to the promotional items" are not dispositive of this consideration either. Insofar as the CFO was providing his opinion—unrefuted or not—about the subjective beliefs of third parties, the BTA could have reasonably discounted that testimony. Regardless, the CFO also later described the fans' "expectation" as simply being that the Reds would, in fact, distribute the number of promotional items advertised. That is, the CFO explained that "there is an expectation when we put it out to the marketplace that if we say we're going to have * * *, let's say 30,000 bobbleheads, that the Reds are going to have 30,000 bobbleheads" and that "there is an expectation, especially if they arrive early, that they're going to get a promotional item." (Emphasis added.)

 EEEFGJ

[**P49] Under these circumstances, the BTA could lawfully conclude that the offer of the promotional items did [****30] not constitute a contractual obligation supported by the purchase of the tickets. Rather, the situation here was in the nature of what courts have referred to as a "conditional gratuitous promise," Williams v. Ormsby, 131 Ohio St.3d 427, 2012-Ohio-690, 966 N.E.2d 11901 255, ¶ 17, quoting Carlisle v. T & R Excavating, Inc., 123 Ohio App.3d 277, 283, 704 N.E.2d 39 \(9th Dist.1997\) ("conditional gratuitous promises, which require the promisee to do something before the promised act or omission will take place, are not enforceable as contracts"). Indeed, "[a] written gratuitous promise, even if it evidences an intent by the promisor to be bound, is not a contract." Id., quoting Carlisle at 283. Thus, the written materials announcing the limited availability of promotional items to ticket purchasers who attend a particular game do not as a matter of contract law establish a contract under which both sides furnish consideration.

[**P50] The lead opinion's interpretation of the evidence confuses the business motive of the Reds to provide promotional items that have already been promised with a contractual obligation to do so. The evidence demonstrates the former but does not establish the latter.

Hyatt Corp. v. Limbach* Is Apposite

[**P51] My second point of disagreement with the lead opinion lies in its attempt to distinguish our decision in Hyatt Corp. v. Limbach, 69 Ohio St.3d 537, 1994-Ohio-342, 634 N.E.2d 995 \(1994\). In Hyatt Corp., a hotel operator that contracted [****31] with third-party companies to launder the linens it supplied to its guests argued that the linen-cleaning service was resold to its guests and therefore did not qualify as a "retail sale" pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(E\). Id. at 539. The hotel served two types of guests: transient and long-term. Pursuant to R.C. 5739.01\(B\)\(2\), lodging furnished to "transient guests" constitutes a sales-tax sale, but no provision [*526] makes the renting of rooms to long-term guests a taxable transaction. Accordingly, this court held that the sale-for-resale exception did not apply in situations involving long-term guests:

The BTA correctly concluded that linen used in rooms rented to long-term guests was not resold. Under the statutes, renting these rooms is not a sale because lodging is not sold to a transient guest, and, consequently, the cleaning service is not resold. Accordingly, this linen cleaning transaction is not excepted.

Hyatt Corp. at 540.

[**P52] Although the lead opinion concedes that the Reds' sale of game tickets—like the sale of lodging to the long-term guests in Hyatt Corp.—is not a sales-tax "sale," it nonetheless determines that Hyatt Corp. is inapposite because the evidence in this case reveals a specific bargain for the promotional items that was supposedly [****32] absent when hotel guests rented rooms and thereby received the benefit of clean sheets and linens in Hyatt Corp.

[**P53] However, I disagree with the lead opinion's conclusion that this court in Hyatt Corp. "found that the linen-cleaning service was not a separate and explicit part of the bargain by which lodging was provided," lead opinion at ¶ 32, and that Hyatt Corp. therefore is factually distinguishable from this case. In Hyatt Corp., we explained that "[i]n a lodging transaction, the hotel transfers a full sleeping room to its guest. This transfer includes the use of linens to sleep on and to wash with." Hyatt Corp. at 540. As a distinct component of the room rental, "guests received the benefit of [the linen-cleaning] service in being able to use clean linen." Id.

[**P54] Contrary to the lead opinion's conclusion, Hyatt Corp.'s holding should apply to this case. Because providing long-term lodging for consideration was not a sales-tax sale, the hotel operator did not "resell" the benefit of cleaning service to those guests. By the same logic, the Reds [***1191] did not resell the promotional items here, because the sale of game tickets was not a sales-tax sale. Consequently, the Reds should, by the same reasoning as that [****33] applied in Hyatt Corp., be liable for use tax as the consumer of the promotional items based on the Reds' own purchase of them.

[**P55] In sum, the BTA's decision should be affirmed. The Reds offered and distributed the promotional items gratuitously; as a result, the Reds owed tax as the purchaser and the use-tax consumer of the items. Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

[*527] MAYLE, J., concurs in the foregoing opinion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

**HN1** [down] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO Act) makes it illegal for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\), and for any person to conspire to so conduct or participate. § 1962\(d\).

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

**HN2** [down] Standing, Elements

To establish standing under Article III of the Constitution, a plaintiff must allege (1) injury-in-fact, which is a concrete and particularized harm to a legally protected interest; (2) causation in the form of a fairly traceable connection between the asserted injury-in-fact and the alleged actions of the defendant; and (3) redressability, or a non-speculative likelihood that the injury can be remedied by the requested relief.

**HN3** [down] Standing, Elements

Injury-in-fact is a low threshold that need not be capable of sustaining a valid cause of action. To successfully plead injury-in-fact, a plaintiff must only clearly allege facts demonstrating, that she had a a legally protected interest in a manner that is concrete and particularized and that a defendant invaded that interest. Unless an allegation of injury is so insubstantial, implausible, foreclosed by prior decisions of the United States Supreme Court, or otherwise completely devoid of merit as not to involve a federal controversy, the mere fact that it raises a federal question confers power on a federal court to decide that it has no merit, as well as to decide that it has.

**HN4** [down] Standing, Elements

The mere fact that an injury may be outweighed by other benefits, while often sufficient to defeat a claim for damages, does not negate standing.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

**HN5** [down] Standing, Elements

The standard for Article III standing is not whether such the alleged injury is plausibly fairly traceable, but, rather, whether the injury is possibly fairly traceable.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

HN6 Class Members, Named Members

In a putative class action, a plaintiff has class standing if he plausibly alleges (1) that he personally has suffered some actual injury as a result of the putatively illegal conduct of the defendant, and (2) that such conduct implicates the same set of concerns as the conduct alleged to have caused injury to other members of the putative class by the same defendants. If both of these requirements are met, the named plaintiff's litigation incentives are sufficiently aligned with those of the absent class members that the named plaintiff may properly assert claims on their behalf.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN7 Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

The promise of good faith and fair dealing is treated as an implied provision in every contract that is breached when a party acts in a manner that, although not expressly forbidden by any contractual provision, would deprive the other party of the right to receive the benefits under their agreement. In order to find a breach of the implied covenant, a party's action must directly violate an obligation that may be presumed to have been intended by the parties.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

HN8 Equitable Relief, Quantum Meruit

In order to sustain an unjust enrichment claim under New York law, a plaintiff must show that (1) the other party was enriched, (2) at that party's expense, and (3) that it is against equity and good conscience to permit the other party to retain what is sought to be recovered.

HN9 Equitable Relief, Quantum Meruit

A plaintiff cannot support a claim of unjust enrichment against a defendant without alleging some kind of connection to that defendant. Liability therefore will depend on each plaintiff's relationship to a given defendant. Where a relationship is governed by a customized, negotiated contract for a derivative traded over the counter, that relationship will change from contract to contract. Where, however, a relationship is governed by a standardized contract for an exchange-traded derivative such as a future, the concerns raised in respect of one such contract will be largely identical to the concerns raised in respect of any other such contracts.

HN10 Equitable Relief, Quantum Meruit

Although privity is not required for an unjust enrichment claim, a claim will not be supported if the connection between the parties is too attenuated.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN11 [💡] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a plaintiff must allege sufficient factual matter to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim is facially plausible when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows a court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. The court generally accepts all factual allegations in the complaint as true and draws all reasonable inferences in the plaintiffs' favor when considering a motion to dismiss.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN12 [💡] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

To the extent a claim sounds in fraud, a complaint is subject to the heightened pleading standard of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\) and must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud. Although the fraud alleged must be stated with particularity the requisite intent of the alleged perpetrator of the fraud need not be alleged with great specificity. Nonetheless, a complaint must allege facts that give rise to a strong inference of fraudulent intent, which may be established either (a) by alleging facts to show that defendants had both motive and opportunity to commit fraud, or (b) by alleging facts that constitute strong circumstantial evidence of conscious misbehavior or recklessness.

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, which sets forth a private right of action to bring a Sherman Act claim for damages, provides in part that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN15 Standing, Requirements

It is a well-established principle that, while the United States is authorized to sue anyone violating the federal antitrust laws, a private plaintiff must demonstrate standing. Like constitutional standing, antitrust standing is a threshold inquiry resolved at the pleading stage. In determining whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing, the court assumes the existence of an antitrust violation and considers two questions: (1) have plaintiffs suffered antitrust injury? (2) Are plaintiffs efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws?

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN16 Standing, Requirements

Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation. Rather, an antitrust injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the antitrust violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. Accordingly, it is not enough for the actual injury to be causally linked to the asserted violation. Rather, plaintiffs must demonstrate that they themselves have sustained an antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. This inquiry involves three steps. First, the plaintiff must identify the practice complained of and the reasons such a practice is or might be anticompetitive; then the court must identify the actual injury the plaintiff alleges by looking to the ways in which the plaintiff claims it is in a worse position as a consequence of defendant's conduct; and finally, the court must compare the anticompetitive effect of the specific practice at issue to the actual injury the plaintiff alleges.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN17 Standing, Requirements

Generally, when consumers, because of a conspiracy, must pay prices that no longer reflect ordinary market conditions, they suffer injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN18 Standing, Requirements

In the Second Circuit, the efficient enforcer inquiry turns on: (1) whether the antitrust violation was a direct or remote cause of the injury; (2) whether there is an identifiable class of other persons whose self-interest would normally lead them to sue for the violation; (3) whether the injury was speculative; and (4) whether there is a risk that other plaintiffs would be entitled to recover duplicative damages or that damages would be difficult to apportion among possible victims of the antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN19 Standing, Requirements

The second factor to be considered in the efficient enforcer analysis is the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN20[ Standing, Requirements

HN21[ Private Actions, Remedies

With respect to the efficient enforcer inquiry, although it is true in private antitrust litigation that even where the defendant by his own wrong has prevented a more precise computation, the jury may not render a verdict based on speculation or guesswork, a verdict as to damages may be reached on the basis of probable and inferential data if direct and positive proof is unavailable.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

HN22[ Standing, Injury in Fact

Potential difficulty in ascertaining and apportioning damages is not an independent basis for denying standing where it is adequately alleged that a defendant's conduct has proximately injured an interest of the plaintiff's that the statute protects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN23[ Standing, Requirements

The final factor in the efficient enforcer analysis is the importance of avoiding either the risk of duplicate recoveries on the one hand, or the danger of complex apportionment of damages on the other.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. ## HN25 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

To state a plausible claim for conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a complaint must include enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. The claim need not be probable, but the complaint must plead enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement. The United States Supreme Court has stated that an allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action.

HN26 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To state a plausible claim for conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, allegations of parallel conduct need not be so robust that the only plausible explanation for defendants' conduct is an agreement. The plaintiff need not show that its allegations suggesting an agreement are more likely than not true or that they rule out the possibility of independent action, as would be required at later litigation stages such as a defense motion for summary judgment or a trial. Indeed, a given set of actions may well be subject to diverging interpretations, each of which is plausible. The choice between or among plausible inferences or scenarios is one for the factfinder. The choice between two plausible inferences that may be drawn from factual allegations is not a choice to be made by the court on a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion. Fact-specific questions cannot be resolved on the pleadings. A court ruling on such a motion may not properly dismiss a complaint that states a plausible version of the events merely because the court finds a different version more plausible.

HN28 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

There are two ways that an antitrust plaintiff may plead facts sufficient to support the inference that a conspiracy actually existed. First, a plaintiff may, of course, assert direct evidence that the defendants entered into an agreement in violation of the antitrust laws. However, given that in many antitrust cases, this type of smoking gun can be hard to come by, especially at the pleading stage, a complaint, alternatively, may defeat a motion to dismiss by alleging circumstantial facts supporting the inference that a conspiracy existed. With respect to this second method, an antitrust plaintiff can cross the line separating conspiracy from parallelism, and thus state a sufficiently plausible antitrust claim, with allegations of interdependent conduct, accompanied by circumstantial evidence and plus factors. Although these examples are neither exhaustive nor exclusive, such plus factors may include (1) a common motive to conspire; (2) evidence that shows that the parallel acts were against the apparent individual economic self-interest of the alleged conspirators; and (3) evidence of a high level of interfirm communications.

In order to assert a Commodity Exchange Act (CEA) claim, a private plaintiff must meet the requirements of § 22 of the CEA, 7 U.S.C.S. § 25\(a\)\(1\). These requirements used to be referred to as statutory standing, but, to avoid incorrectly portraying them as jurisdictional requirements, they are now referred to as simply a question of whether the particular plaintiff has a cause of action under the statute. Section 22 limits a defendant's liability to actual damages, a private plaintiff must plausibly allege actual injury caused by the violation in addition to the elements of whatever violation they allege in order to successfully state a claim.

Although the requisite intent of the alleged perpetrator of the fraud need not be alleged with great specificity, a complaint must nonetheless, allege facts that give rise to a strong inference of fraudulent intent. Scienter may be established either (a) by alleging facts to show that defendants had both motive and opportunity to commit fraud, or (b) by alleging facts that constitute strong circumstantial evidence of conscious misbehavior or recklessness.

A claim for principal-agent liability requires that the agent was acting in the capacity of an agent when he or she committed the unlawful acts and that the agent's actions were within the scope of his or her employment. To be found liable for aiding and abetting, on the other hand, a defendant must in some sort associate himself with the venture -- that is, that he participate in it as in something that he wishes to bring about, that he seek by his action to make it succeed. In the context of a Commodity Exchange Act (CEA) claim, then, a complaint bringing a claim for aiding and abetting liability must allege that the "aider and abettor" knew that the primary violator intended to engage in price manipulation. A complaint with weak allegations about a defendant's affirmative assistance may still state a claim for aiding and abetting if its allegations about the defendant's knowledge and intent are particularly strong, and vice versa. Accordingly, in evaluating a complaint alleging the aiding and abetting of a violation of the CEA, allegations about the defendant's knowledge, intent, and actions should not be evaluated in isolation, but rather in light of the complaint as a whole.

It is a longstanding principle of American law that legislation of Congress, unless a contrary intent appears, is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. Unless Congress clearly has expressed its affirmative intention to give a statute extraterritorial effect, the court must presume it is primarily concerned with domestic conditions.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation

International Law > Authority to Regulate

HN48 [blue icon] Legislation, Effect & Operation

The United States Supreme Court has articulated a two-step framework to analyze the issue of extraterritoriality: At the first step, a court asks whether the presumption against extraterritoriality has been rebutted -- that is, whether the statute gives a clear, affirmative indication that it applies extraterritorially. The court must ask this question regardless of whether the statute in question regulates conduct, affords relief, or merely confers jurisdiction. If the statute is not extraterritorial, then at the second step the court determine whether the case involves a domestic application of the statute, and the court do this by looking to the statute's focus. If the conduct relevant to the statute's focus occurred in the United States, then the case involves a permissible domestic application even if other conduct occurred abroad; but if the conduct relevant to the focus occurred in a foreign country, then the case involves an impermissible extraterritorial application regardless of any other conduct that occurred in U.S. territory.

Because the presumption against extraterritoriality has not been rebutted, it is presumed that the CEA is primarily concerned with domestic conditions.

In Morrison, the U.S. Supreme Court held that the Securities Exchange Act had no extraterritorial application and concluded that no civil suit under § 10(b) could be sustained unless predicated on a transaction involving (1) a security listed on a domestic exchange, or (2) a domestic purchase or sale of another security. The Second Circuit subsequently concluded, in Absolute Activist, that in order for a transaction to be domestic for purposes of the Securities Exchange Act and Morrison's second prong, either the parties must incur irrevocable liability or title to the securities must pass within the United States. The Second Circuit has extended both Morrison and Absolute Activist to the Commodity Exchange Act (CEA), concluding that Morrison's domestic transaction test in effect decides the territorial reach of 7 U.S.C.S. § 25\(a\)\(1\) and that a plaintiff bringing a CEA claim must demonstrate that the transfer of title or the point of irrevocable liability for the applicable transaction occurred in the United States. On the other hand, the Second Circuit has never concluded that Morrison's domestic exchange prong applies to the CEA either to broaden or to narrow its extraterritorial reach.

In Parkcentral Global, the Second Circuit concluded that while the United States Supreme Court's decision in Morrison unmistakably made a domestic securities transaction necessary to a properly domestic invocation of § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act, such a transaction is not alone sufficient to state a properly domestic claim under the statute. The imposition of liability under § 10(b) on foreign defendants with no alleged involvement in plaintiffs' transactions, on the basis of the defendants' largely foreign conduct, for losses incurred by the plaintiffs in securities-based swap agreements based on the price movements of foreign securities would constitute an impermissibly extraterritorial extension of the statute. The court reasoned that to hold otherwise would require courts to apply the statute to wholly foreign activity clearly subject to regulation by foreign authorities solely because a plaintiff in the United States made a domestic transaction, even if the foreign defendants were completely unaware of it.

There are three elements of a wire fraud violation: (1) a scheme to defraud, (2) money or property as the object of the scheme, and (3) use of wires to further the scheme. Where the predicate acts alleged in a complaint are wire fraud, Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO Act) claims are subject to the heightened pleading standard under Fed. R. The Second Circuit has stated that generally in the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO Act) context, where mail or wire fraud are the alleged predicate acts, a complaint must adequately specify the statements it claims were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which plaintiff contends the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those responsible for the statements. However, as courts in the Second Circuit have applied a different standard in cases where a plaintiff claims that mails or wires were simply used in furtherance of a master plan to defraud, but does not allege that the communications themselves contained false or misleading information. In such cases, including complex civil RICO actions involving multiple defendants, [Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\) does not require that the temporal or geographic particulars of each mailing or wire transmission made in furtherance of the fraudulent scheme be stated with particularity. Instead, Rule 9\(b\) requires only that the plaintiff delineate with adequate particularity in the body of the complaint, the specific circumstances constituting the overall fraudulent scheme.

Accordingly, a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO Act) claim may be based on foreign racketeering activity only if the predicate act(s) underlying the claim apply extraterritorially. The Second Circuit has not decided precisely how to draw the line between domestic and extraterritorial applications of the wire fraud statute, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1343. In RJR Nabisco, for example, the Second Circuit stated that if domestic conduct satisfies every essential element to prove a violation of a United States statute that does not apply extraterritorially, that statute is violated even if some further conduct contributing to the violation occurred outside the United States. And in Norex Petroleum, in which a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO Act) complaint alleging that a group of foreign defendants had engaged in a racketeering conspiracy in order to acquire control over a Russian company in which the plaintiff had been a majority shareholder was dismissed as impermissibly extraterritorial, the Circuit stated only that simply alleging that some domestic conduct occurred cannot support a claim of domestic application. It is a rare case of prohibited extraterritorial application that lacks all contact with the territory of the United States.

In CGC Holding, the U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado rejected the contention that a RICO Act claim was impermissibly extraterritorial simply because some of the participants in the enterprise resided outside the United States. Rather, the court held that the focus of the statute is the racketeering activity, i.e., to render unlawful a pattern of domestic racketeering activity perpetrated by an enterprise. It then concluded that although most of the enterprise participants had resided in Canada, the plaintiffs stated a domestic claim because the racketeering activity had been directed at and largely occurred within the United States. The conduct of the enterprise within the U.S. was a key to its success. This approach appeals because it affords a remedy to a U.S. plaintiff who claims injury caused by domestic acts of racketeering activity without regard to the nationality or foreign character of the defendants or the enterprise, is consistent with the U.S. Supreme Court's and the Second Circuit's repeated recognition that the heart of any RICO complaint is the allegation of a pattern of racketeering, and is consistent with Congressional intent, which included protecting American victims at least against injury caused by the conduct of the affairs of enterprises through patterns of racketeering activity that occur in this country.

The essence of such a claim is that one party has received money or a benefit at the expense of another. Accordingly, courts require proof that the defendant received a specific and direct benefit from the property sought to be recovered, rather than an indirect benefit, which in turn requires that a plaintiff allege some kind of relationship or connection to that defendant.

15 U.S.C.S. § 22. The United States Supreme Court has construed the phrase "transacts business," as used in the venue provision of Clayton Act, to refer to the practical, everyday business or commercial concept of doing business or carrying on business of any substantial character. However, for a defendant to transact business of any substantial character, there must be some amount of business continuity and certainly more than a few isolated and peripheral contacts with the particular judicial district. The nature and amount of a defendant's contacts in a judicial district are to be considered in light of the nature of the defendant's business.

**HN80** [ ] In Personam Actions, Due Process

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment contains a state's authority to bind a nonresident defendant to a judgment of its courts. Accordingly, the touchstone due process principle has been that, before a court may exercise jurisdiction over a person or an organization, such as a bank, that person or entity must have sufficient minimum contacts' with the forum such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. The quality and nature of the defendant's contacts with the forum state are evaluated under a totality of the circumstances test. However, in a federal question case, the manner in which district courts assess whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction comports with constitutional due process varies depending on the asserted statutory basis.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Substantial Contacts

HN81 [blue icon] In Personam Actions, Minimum Contacts

The U.S. Supreme Court has established two types of personal jurisdiction: general jurisdiction and specific jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Service of Process > Methods of Service

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

HN82 [blue icon] Service of Process, Methods of Service

Although the Second Circuit has not yet decided whether to adopt the nationwide contacts approach, several other circuits have endorsed the position that, when a civil case arises under federal law and a federal statute authorizes nationwide service of process, the relevant contacts for determining personal jurisdiction are contacts with the United States as a whole. The rationale underlying this national contacts approach is that when the national sovereign is applying national law, the relevant contacts are the contacts between the defendant and the sovereign's nation. The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York holds that the appropriate forum for purposes of determining whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction would comport with due process is the United States, rather than New York State.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Due Process

HN83 [blue icon] In Personam Actions, Due Process

A court with general personal jurisdiction over a foreign defendant may hear any and all claims against that defendant. But it by now is well established that a court may assert general jurisdiction over foreign corporations to hear any and all claims against them only when their affiliations with the state are so continuous and systematic as to render them essentially at home in the foreign state. Aside from an exceptional case, a corporation is at home (and thus subject to general jurisdiction, consistent with due process) only in a state that is the company's formal place of incorporation or its principal place of business.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Purposeful Availment

HN84 [blue icon] In Personam Actions, Minimum Contacts

Specific jurisdiction is a significantly more limited doctrine. It depends on an affiliation between the forum and the underlying controversy, principally, activity or an occurrence that takes place in the forum state and is therefore subject to the state's regulation. In order for a state court to exercise specific jurisdiction, the suit must arise out of or relate to the defendant's contacts with the forum. That is to say, the defendant's suit-related conduct must create a substantial connection with the forum state. The inquiry requires a two-step analysis: First, the court must decide if the defendant has purposefully directed his activities at the forum and the litigation arises out of or relates to those activities. Second, once the court has established these minimum contacts, it determines whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction would comport with fair play and substantial justice.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Foreseeability

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

HN85 [blue icon] In Personam Actions, Foreseeability

Generally, the minimum contacts necessary to support specific jurisdiction exist where the defendant purposefully availed itself of the privilege of doing business in the forum and could foresee being haled into court there. If however, the conduct that forms the basis for the controversy occurs entirely out-of-forum, courts may employ the effects test, which permits a court to assert specific personal jurisdiction over a defendant if the defendant expressly aimed its conduct at the forum. An additional theory of jurisdiction may be available in cases alleging a conspiracy if plaintiffs allege that (1) a conspiracy existed; (2) the defendant participated in the conspiracy; and (3) a co-conspirator's overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy had sufficient contacts with a state to subject that co-conspirator to jurisdiction in that state.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Foreseeability

HN86 [blue icon] In Personam Actions, Foreseeability

To satisfy the effects test, a defendant's conduct must have been expressly aimed at the forum. To that end, the relationship between the defendant and the forum must have arisen out of contacts that the defendant himself, as opposed to the plaintiff or third parties, created with the forum. Moreover, the analysis looks to the defendant's contacts with the forum State itself, not the defendant's contacts with persons who reside there. It thus is insufficient to rely on a defendant's random, fortuitous, or attenuated contacts or on the unilateral activity of a plaintiff with the forum to establish specific jurisdiction. Indeed even the fact that harm in the forum is foreseeable is insufficient to establish specific personal jurisdiction over a defendant. On this basis, the Second Circuit has interpreted United States Supreme Court jurisprudence to suggest that a defendant's mere knowledge that a plaintiff resides in a specific jurisdiction would be insufficient to subject a defendant to specific jurisdiction in that jurisdiction if the defendant does nothing in connection with the tort in that jurisdiction.

HN87 [blue icon] In Personam Actions, Minimum Contacts

A mere injury to a forum resident is not a sufficient connection to the forum and that regardless of where a plaintiff lives or works, an injury is jurisdictionally relevant only insofar as it shows that the defendant has formed a contact with the forum State.

LEWIS A. KAPLAN, District Judge.

This purported class action is the latest in a growing number of lawsuits accusing financial institutions of manipulating interest rates used as benchmarks for the pricing of various financial derivatives among other purposes. In this case, defendants — a collection of entities from fifteen major banks and two major brokerage firms [*5] — are accused of conspiring to manipulate the Bank Bill Swap Reference Rate ("BBSW"), a rate set at the relevant times in Australia but allegedly used widely in the United States and elsewhere in the world. All defendants<sup>1</sup> move to dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and failure to state a claim.<sup>2</sup> Certain defendants (the "Foreign Defendants") move also to dismiss as to them for lack of personal jurisdiction,<sup>3</sup> and as to a subgroup of these defendants (the "Venue Defendants") with respect to certain of the claims, on the additional ground of improper venue.<sup>4</sup> Defendants' [*142] motions each are granted in part and denied in part.

Background

BBSW is a benchmark interest rate, somewhat similar in concept to the London Interbank Offered Rate ("LIBOR") in that it is used to price certain types of financial derivatives. Plaintiffs here, all of whom "engaged in U.S.-based transactions for BBSW-based derivatives" during the purported class period,<sup>5</sup> bring claims under the Clayton Act, the Commodity Exchange Act ("CEA"), and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO Act"). They sue as well on state law claims for unjust enrichment and breach of the implied covenant of good faith [**6] and fair dealing.

The following facts are alleged in the amended complaint, the truth of which the Court is bound to assume when considering a motion to dismiss the amended complaint.<sup>6</sup>

I. Derivatives and the Money Market

In order to understand the claims in this case, it is helpful first to provide some background information on financial derivatives and BBSW.

A derivative is "a contract whose value is based on the performance of an underlying financial asset, index, or other investment."<sup>7</sup> The contractual terms of derivatives vary widely, but they generally fall into four basic structures: forward contracts, futures contracts, options, and swaps. A forward contract is a contract for the purchase or sale of some underlying asset for an agreed-upon price at some point in the future.<sup>8</sup> A futures contract is similar to a forward, except that it is traded on a regulated exchange and has standardized terms.<sup>9</sup> An option is a contract that gives the holder the right (but not the obligation) to buy or sell an underlying asset at some point in the future.<sup>10</sup> Finally, a swap in broad strokes is an instrument pursuant to which two counterparties agree to exchange periodic cash flows over a specific length [**7] of time.<sup>11</sup>

Swaps come in various forms, one of which is an interest rate swap. An interest rate swap generally obligates each party to pay an amount equal to the amount of [*143] interest that would be payable on an agreed upon notional principal amount if that amount actually had been borrowed.<sup>12</sup> In the most common type of interest rate swap, one party agrees to pay to the other an amount equal to the amount of interest on the notional principal amount if the hypothetical bond of the notional principal amount bore a fixed interest rate while the other party agrees to pay an amount equal to the amount of interest if the hypothetical loan bore interest at a floating rate based on a benchmark such as LIBOR.<sup>13</sup> For example:

"Counterparty A and Counterparty B enter into a five-year swap with the following terms: Counterparty A agrees to pay Counterparty B an amount equal to 6 percent per annum on a notional principal of $20 million, and Counterparty B agrees to pay Counterparty A an amount equal to one-year LIBOR plus 1 percent per annum on the same [**8] notional principal amount. For simplicity, let us assume the counterparties exchange payments annually on December 31, beginning in 2017 and concluding in 2021. At the end of 2017, Counterparty A will pay Counterparty B $1,200,000 (i.e., $20,000,000 x 6 percent). Let us assume further that on December 31, 2016, one-year LIBOR was 5.33 percent. At the end of 2017, then, Counterparty B will pay Counterparty A $1,266,000 (i.e., $20,000,000 x (5.33 percent + 1 percent))."<sup>14</sup>

Another type of swap is a foreign exchange ("FX") swap, in which "two counterparties agree to exchange streams of interest payments in different currencies for an agreed-upon period of time and to exchange principal amounts in different currencies at an agreed-upon exchange rate at maturity."<sup>15</sup> According to the amended complaint, "[t]here are two components to a foreign exchange swap: (1) a spot transaction in which the parties buy or sell a certain amount of one currency (e.g., Australian dollars) at the current market prices for immediate delivery (i.e., typically within two days); and (2) a foreign exchange forward, which reverses the spot transaction by buying or selling an equivalent [**9] amount of a second currency (e.g., U.S. dollars) on some future maturity date (e.g., 14 days later)."<sup>16</sup>

II. The BBSW Rate "Set"

Derivatives may be traded on regulated exchanges or over-the-counter. Exchange-traded futures are uniform as to most terms and vary only in particular ways. Over-the-counter derivatives, including forwards, are neither listed nor traded on an exchange and may be customized to suit the particular counterparties involved. Barron's at 529.

A. Prime Bank Bills

Because BBSW rates are "intended to reflect the observed rate of interest paid on Prime Bank Bills actually traded in the Australian money market," it is necessary next to provide some background on Prime Bank Bills.<sup>17</sup>

1. Bank Bills and Certificates of Deposit

Banks regularly borrow money on the money market by issuing "bank bills" and [*144] certificates of deposit ("CDs").<sup>18</sup>

A bank bill is a bill of exchange that requires the issuing bank to pay a specified amount of money — the "face value" of the bill — on a certain maturity date. The number of days between the date on which a bank bill is issued and the date on which it matures is referred to as the "tenor" of the bank bill.<sup>19</sup> Bank bills may be "accepted" or "endorsed" by any bank. When a bank accepts a bank bill, the bill becomes a bank accepted bill (a "BAB") and the accepting bank becomes obligated to pay its face value upon maturity. When a bank endorses a bank bill, it becomes obligated to pay the face value of that bill at maturity if the acceptor is unable to do so.<sup>20</sup>

A CD is a [**10] document evidencing a deposit with the issuing bank for a certain amount of time. Upon maturity, the purchaser receives its deposit plus interest. CDs may be negotiable or nonnegotiable. A negotiable CD (an "NCD") can be sold by the depositor on the secondary market whereas a nonnegotiable CD generally must be held until maturity.<sup>21</sup>

Issuing a bank bill or a CD is economically equivalent to borrowing money. Bank bills are sold at discounts to their face value. The issue price that the bank receives when it issues a bank bill is equivalent to the principal of the loan. Upon maturity, when the bank pays the face value to the purchaser of the bank bill, it effectively repays the loan plus interest, with the interest being equal to the difference between the face value and issue price.<sup>22</sup> Similarly, a bank that issues a CD "borrows" the amount deposited and upon maturity repays the deposited amount plus interest.<sup>23</sup>

"The Australian Financial Markets Association ('AFMA') is a trade association and the principal Australian financial markets industry group."<sup>24</sup> AFMA, through a subcommittee of the larger organization, facilitates the annual election of Prime Banks.<sup>25</sup> Prime [**11] Banks are "a designated subset of banks operating in Australia whose [b]ank [b]ills and NCDs are recognized as having the highest quality with regard to liquidity, credit and consistency of relative yield."<sup>26</sup> "Prime Bank Bills," the financial instruments that relate to BBSW, are bank bills and NCDs issued by Prime Banks.<sup>27</sup>

B. The Rate "Set"

As stated above, BBSW is "intended to reflect the observed rate of interest paid on Prime Bank Bills actually traded in the Australian money market."<sup>28</sup>

Until September 27, 2013, BBSW was calculated on a daily basis using submissions from each of fourteen panel banks that, together, comprised the "BBSW Panel." [*145]<sup>29</sup> The Court understands from the amended complaint that any banks designated as Prime Banks automatically became members of the BBSW Panel<sup>30</sup> and that the remaining members of the Panel were "selected periodically through a private election held at the discretion of the [then] current BBSW Panel."<sup>31</sup>

Each bank on the BBSW Panel submitted to AFMA the observed "mid-rate" — that is, treating the discount on the issue price of a Prime Bank Bill as if it were an interest rate, the midpoint between the rates at which [**12] banks offered to buy and sell Prime Bank Bills — for Prime Bank Bills at each of six tenors traded between 9:55 am and 10:05 am (Sydney Time) (the "Fixing Window").<sup>32</sup>

According to the amended complaint, "[t]his discretionary election process resulted in an extremely low turnover in panel membership. While there were several BBSW panel elections during the Class Period, but [sic] the composition of the panel did not change." Id.

The banks derived these mid-rates with the help of trading brokers who facilitated Prime Bank Bill transactions between banks.<sup>33</sup> During the relevant period, ICAP and Tullett Prebon were the only interdealer brokers operating markets for Prime Bank Bills. In order to broker trades, each operated its own electronic system for reporting the prices of Prime Bank Bills and would post bids for and offers of Prime Bank Bills on that system so that they would be visible to participating financial institutions.<sup>34</sup> The BBSW Panel banks were supposed to base the "mid-rates" that they submitted to AFMA on the rates displayed on each of the brokers' electronic trading screens.<sup>35</sup>

Upon receipt of the submissions from the banks on the BBSW Panel, AFMA would calculate BBSW for each tenor by ranking the submissions for Prime Bank Bills of each tenor, eliminating the highest and lowest submissions, and averaging the remaining rates. These averages — that is, the BBSW rates for each tenor — then would be published to financial data providers [**13] including Thomson Reuters and Bloomberg for global distribution.<sup>36</sup>

III. BBSW-Based Derivatives

The Court turns next to a discussion of the six types of financial instruments referred to in the amended complaint that incorporate BBSW as a component of the price of the instrument ("BBSW-Based Derivatives").<sup>37</sup>

- BBSW-Based Swaps: As discussed above, a swap is a derivative in which two parties exchange obligations to make a series of payments based on some underlying principal amount for some set period of time. In a BBSW-based swap, at least one of [*146] the parties' payment obligations references BBSW.<sup>38</sup>
- BBSW-Based Forward Rate Agreements: A forward rate agreement ("FRA") is an interest rate forward contract, also known as a single-period swap. In an FRA, the two parties agree to exchange amounts equal to the amount of interest that would be payable on the same notional principal amount, but at different would-be interest rates, on some agreed upon date in the future. In a BBSW-based FRA, at least one party is obligated to pay an amount equal to the would-be interest payment at a floating rate that is tied to BBSW.<sup>39</sup>
- Chicago Mercantile Exchange Australian Dollar Futures: A Chicago Mercantile Exchange [**14] ("CME") Australian dollar future is "an exchange-traded BBSW-based derivative that represents an agreement to buy . . . or sell . . . 100,000 Australian dollars in terms of U.S. dollars on some future date."<sup>40</sup> "Prices of CME Australian dollar futures contracts are determined by a formula that incorporates BBSW as one of its terms" — that is, the contractual formula adjusts the price of the Australian dollars for immediate delivery "to account for . . . the amount of interest earned on Australian dollar deposits over the duration of the agreement."<sup>41</sup>

Plaintiffs allege also that "there is a statistically significant relationship between a change in BBSW and a change in the prices of CME Australian dollar futures contracts" because BBSW is incorporated into the formula used to price CME Australian dollar futures contracts.

- Australian Dollar FX Forwards & Swaps: An Australian dollar FX forward is another type of "agreement to buy or sell Australian dollars on some future date" and can be thought of as "the over-the-counter equivalent of a CME Australian dollar futures contract."<sup>42</sup> These forwards are priced using the same formula that determines the value of CME Australian dollar futures contracts and thus incorporate BBSW as a component of their price. An Australian dollar FX swap is an FX swap using Australian dollars as one of the underlying currencies.<sup>43</sup> As discussed above, an FX forward is one of the two components of an FX swap. An Australian dollar FX swap [**15] that involves an Australian dollar FX forward that in turn incorporates BBSW as a component of price thus will also be dependent at least to some extent on BBSW.
- 90-Day BAB Futures: A 90-day BAB futures contract is a standardized, exchange-traded contract in which one party agrees to buy from the other party a 90-day Prime Bank Bill with a face value of $1 million at a specified yield on a certain future date.<sup>44</sup>

IV. The Parties

A. Plaintiffs

There are five named plaintiffs in this case, each of whom or which "engaged in U.S.-based transactions for BBSW-Based Derivatives" during the class period. The amended complaint alleges the following:

- [*147] 1. Richard Dennis ("Dennis") is a natural person who resides in Florida. He entered into a large number of CME Australian dollar futures contracts, including on November 22, 2010, a day on which defendant National Australia Bank ("NAB") allegedly "was involved in manipulating BBSW artificially higher."<sup>45</sup>
- 2. Sonterra Capital Master Fund, Ltd. ("Sonterra") was an investment fund with its principal place of business in New York.<sup>46</sup> Sonterra entered into Australian dollar FX swaps and forwards worth more than $490 million from within [**16] the United States directly with defendant Morgan Stanley, including as follows:
  - An FX swap on November 5, 2010, a day on which defendant Westpac allegedly engaged in manipulating one-month BBSW artificially lower,<sup>47</sup>
  - An FX forward on June 3, 2011, a day on which defendant Australia and New Zealand Banking Group ("ANZ") allegedly manipulated BBSW artificially higher,<sup>48</sup> and
  - An FX swap on May 14, 2010, two days after defendant Morgan Stanley's involvement in the BBSW rate set was discussed among defendants NAB and Commonwealth Bank of Australia ("CBA").<sup>49</sup>

3. FrontPoint Asian Event Driven Fund, L.P., ("FrontPoint Event Driven") was an investment fund with its principal place of business in Greenwich, Connecticut.<sup>50</sup> FrontPoint Financial Services Fund, L.P. and FrontPoint Financial Horizons Fund, L.P. both were limited partnerships, from the Cayman Islands and Delaware, respectively, with their principal places of business in Greenwich, Connecticut and investment teams in New York.<sup>51</sup> The amended complaint alleges that each of the three FrontPoint plaintiffs (collectively, the "FrontPoint Plaintiffs") engaged in BBSW-based swap transactions from within the United States directly with defendant [**17] Macquarie at artificial prices proximately caused by defendants' manipulative conduct.<sup>52</sup> Specifically, FrontPoint Event Driven entered into:

- A swap governed by an ISDA Master Agreement in which Macquarie agreed to make payments to FrontPoint Event Driven equal to one-month BBSW on certain valuation dates, including on July 1 2010, the same day that defendant Westpac allegedly manipulated the 1-month BBSW lower, and
- A one-month BBSW swap with Macquarie on January 27, 2011, a day when CBA and NAB allegedly manipulated BBSW.<sup>53</sup>

The putative class of plaintiffs is defined as "[a]ll persons or entities that engaged in U.S.-based transactions in financial instruments [*148] that were priced, benchmarked, and/or settled based on BBSW at any time from at least January 1, 2003, through the date on which the effects of Defendants' unlawful conduct ceased."<sup>54</sup>

B. Defendants

Defendants are horizontal competitors that deal in financial products that are priced, benchmarked, and/or settled by reference to a BBSW rate, including (1) twenty-five banking entities from fifteen different banks, including JPMorgan, BNP Paribas, RBS, UBS, ANZ, CBA, NAB, Westpac, Deutsche Bank, HSBC, Lloyds, Macquarie, Royal [**18] Bank of Canada, Morgan Stanley, and Credit Suisse, (2) two entities from ICAP, a UK-based brokerage firm, and (3) two entities from Tullett Prebon, another UK-based brokerage firm.

V. The Amended Complaint

Plaintiffs' allegations follow largely from the findings of a series of investigations by the Australian Securities and Investments Commission ("ASIC").

There are no specific examples of transactions provided with respect to either FrontPoint Financial Services Fund, L.P. or FrontPoint Financial Horizons Fund, L.P. The amended complaint alleges also that defendants Macquarie, Deutsche Bank, Royal Bank of Scotland ("RBS"), UBS, and Credit Suisse traded Australian dollar-denominated swaps with the FrontPoint Plaintiffs while BBSW was being manipulated, but does not allege how these Australian dollar-denominated swap were connected to BBSW. Id. at ¶ 23.

In its original statements of claim against ANZ, Westpac, and NAB, ASIC released a large collection of emails, phone [*149] calls, and electronic chats among traders from the banks and brokerage firms that ultimately were named as defendants [**19] in this case. Plaintiffs commenced this action on August 16, 2016 alleging that defendants used various means systematically to manipulate BBSW and seeking damages for alleged violations of the Sherman Act, the CEA, and the RICO Act and claims of unjust enrichment and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Plaintiffs quote directly from ASIC's disclosures throughout the amended complaint.

<sup>58</sup> A.S.I.C. v. Commonwealth Bank of Australia, ACN 123 123 124, Concise Statement at 1 (F.C.A. Ultimately, ANZ and NAB each settled with ASIC for a total of $50 million (Au) in penalties and costs and acknowledged improperly attempting to manipulate BBSW on numerous occasions. Press Release, ASIC, 17-393MR ASIC Accepts Enforceable Undertakings from ANZ and NAB to Address Conduct Relating to BBSW (Nov. 20, 2017), <https://asic.gov.au/about-asic/media-centre/find-a-media-release/2017-releases/17-393mr-a-sic-accepts-enforceable-undertakings-from-anz-and-nab-to-address-conduct-relating-to-bbsw/>. CBA and ASIC also reached an agreement in principle to settle the legal proceeding, pursuant to which CBA agreed to pay $25 million (Au) and acknowledge its unconscionable conduct related to BBSW on numerous occasions. Press Release, CBA Group, CBA and ASIC Agree In-Principle Settlement Over BBSW (May 9, 2018), <https://www.asx.com.au/asxpdf/20180509/pdf/43twn0khh969y5.pdf>. Each of NAB, ANZ, and CBA agreed also to take certain measures to change its BBSW rate setting practices and to be subject to monitoring by an independent expert. As to Westpac, the Federal Court of Australia concluded, following trial, that Westpac had traded Prime Bank Bills on four occasions with the dominant purpose of influencing BBSW in order to favor its BBSW exposure. Press Release, ASIC, 18-151MR Federal Court Finds Westpac Traded to Affect the BBSW and Engaged in Unconscionable Conduct (May 24, 2018), <https://asic.gov.au/about-asic/media-centre/find-a-media-release/2018-releases/18-151mr-f-federal-court-finds-westpac-traded-to-affect-the-bbsw-and-engaged-in-unconscionable-conduct/>. The Court subsequently imposed a penalty of $3.3 million (Au) on Westpac, which apparently was the maximum applicable penalty. Patrick Durkin, Westpac Fined $3.3 million in ASIC BBSW Case: "Clearly Inadequate", THE AUSTRALIAN FINANCIAL REVIEW (Nov. 9, 2018, 3:43 P.M., updated at 4:56 P.M.), <https://www.afr.com/business/banking-and-finance/westpac-fined-33-million-in-asic-bbsw-case-20181109-h17pv7>.

In prior years (2012 and 2014), ASIC had accepted enforceable undertaking related to BBSW from defendants UBS, BNP Paribas and RBS. Unlike ASIC's more recent settlements with ANZ, NAB, and CBA, however, none of UBS, BNP Paribas or RBS admitted to any wrongdoing as part of their settlement. See Enforceable Undertaking between The Royal Bank of Scotland plc and ASIC at § 5.9 (July 21, 2014), available at <https://download.asic.gov.au/media/1301287/028492040.pdf>; Enforceable Undertaking between BNP Paribas and ASIC at § 5.5 (Jan. 28, 2014), available at <https://download.asic.gov.au/media/1301239/028399392.pdf>; Enforceable Undertaking between UBS AG and ASIC at § 5.5 (Dec. 23, 2013), available at <https://download.asic.gov.au/media/1301413/028553828.pdf>.

Plaintiffs allege that defendants, in violation of the federal antitrust laws, "entered into a series of agreements designed to create profit or limit liabilities amongst themselves by coordinating the manipulation of BBSW and the prices of BBSW-Based Derivatives, by conspiring to, inter alia: (1) engage in manipulative money market transactions during the BBSW Fixing Window; (2) make false BBSW rate submissions that did not reflect actual transaction prices; (3) uneconomically buy or sell money market instruments at a loss to cause artificial derivatives prices; and (4) share proprietary BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives information."<sup>59</sup> As a result, plaintiffs allege that they were "overcharged and underpaid in their BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives transactions" and "deprived [**20] of the ability to accurately price" and "determine [*150] the settlement value of BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives by reference to an accurate BBSW."<sup>60</sup>

The allegations concerning the manipulative money market transactions mentioned above merit some explanation. The amended complaint alleges that bank defendants, with the assistance of the broker defendants, rigged BBSW rates by engaging in uneconomic transactions during the Fixing Window to manipulate the supply of Prime Bank Bills in the market. In other words, defendants engaged in Prime Bank Bill transactions during the Fixing Window without regard to whether the transaction would be profitable for the bank but, rather, with the intention of driving BBSW in a direction that would generate profits from their positions in BBSW-Based Derivatives as a whole.<sup>61</sup>

To that end, the bank defendants would calculate their net exposure to the various BBSW rates on a daily basis and then increase the supply of and demand for Prime Bank Bills in the market by selling or buying them in large numbers, respectively, during the Fixing Window.<sup>62</sup> In addition, they issued new Prime Bank Bills during the Fixing Window to further increase supply.<sup>63</sup> As the supply [**21] of or demand for Prime Bank Bills increased, their issue prices consequently would decrease or increase, again respectively. As the price of a Prime Bank Bill decreased, its effective interest rate would increase, and vice versa.<sup>64</sup> These strategies thus allowed the banks to push their own BBSW rate submissions, based on the observed mid-rates of Prime Bank Bills during the Fixing Window, higher or lower.

According to the amended complaint, the bank defendants did not engage in this effort unilaterally. Rather, they conferred with one another ahead of these manipulative transactions, "aligning their interests and recruiting co-conspirators to trade in the same direction."<sup>65</sup> In addition, the bank defendants allegedly gave one another advance notice as to whether they planned to buy or sell during the Fixing Window, allowing them "to predict fluctuations in BBSW that were not caused by genuine economic factors and gave Defendants and their co-conspirators an advantage over counterparties who did not have access to this information."<sup>66</sup> To maximize their impact on the market, defendants allegedly transacted with one another ahead of the Fixing Window to concentrate the supply of Prime [**22] Bank Bills that would be used to manipulate BBSW.<sup>67</sup> Certain banks even reorganized their trading

With respect to the allegations concerning the submission of false Prime Bank Bill mid-rates, id. at ¶ 272, in some instances, the individuals responsible for making the mid-rate submissions would accept and even solicit requests for BBSW manipulation from derivatives traders. In others, the banks gave the responsibility for making BBSW submissions to BBSW-Based Derivative traders, thus creating a conflict of interest. Id. at ¶¶ 273-275.

desks to make specific groups that had a greater exposure to BBSW-Based Derivatives — and thus "a larger incentive to conspire in manipulating the rate" — responsible for the bank's BBSW activities.<sup>68</sup>

The amended complaint alleges that the broker defendants actively participated in the alleged conspiracy to manipulate BBSW by facilitating these manipulative trades for the bank defendants. Banks pre-authorized the broker defendants to trade the banks' caches of Prime Bank Bills until the interest rate landed at the banks' desired [*151] level.<sup>69</sup> The brokers were instructed to line up trades at artificial prices, rather than find the actual best bid for a Prime Bank Bill transaction, in order to push BBSW in one direction or another.<sup>70</sup> The brokers acted also as conduits of information for the bank defendants. According to the amended complaint, "[t]heir frequent contact with Bank Defendants gave the Broker Defendants a wealth of information that enhanced the cartel's efficacy, including other banks' (a) BBSW rate exposure; (b) Prime Bank Bill stock levels; and (c) plans [**23] for manipulative trading during the Fixing Window."<sup>71</sup> The banks consequently relied on the brokers, who shared knowledge about other banks' positions and preferred BBSW rates with them.<sup>72</sup> The brokers then coordinated with the BBSW traders at the banks, facilitated the banks' desired high-volume trades, and earned "outsized commission payments."<sup>73</sup>

The amended complaint alleges also that defendants used their positions in AFMA "to control the BBSW rule-making process, conceal complaints from other market participants, and perpetuate the BBSW methodology that they used to secretly manipulate BBSW."<sup>74</sup> The bank defendants positioned their BBSW-Based Derivatives traders, and in certain cases, their Prime Bank Bill traders who were generally responsible for manipulating BBSW, on relevant AFMA governance committees to compromise AFMA's oversight of BBSW.<sup>75</sup> They proposed also rules to keep the committees' activities secret, including by making meeting minutes confidential.<sup>76</sup> Finally, they used their control over the committees' decisions to reject proposals to mechanize the BBSW rate set.<sup>77</sup> Plaintiffs allege also that defendants violated the CEA (1) as primary violators, (2) in their capacities [**24] as principals in respect of the manipulation committed by their "agents, representatives, and/or other persons acting for them in the scope of their employment,"<sup>78</sup> and (3) as aiders and abettors,<sup>79</sup> by using their influence to manipulate BBSW as well as the prices of BBSW-Based Derivatives.<sup>80</sup> Defendants violated the CEA by engaging in the manipulative transactions described above and by submitting false BBSW rates in order to "obtain[] hundreds of millions (if not billion) of dollars in illegitimate profits on BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives, held by themselves or other co-conspirators, the prices

B. CEA Claims

[*152] C. RICO Act Claims

Plaintiffs assert also substantive and conspiracy RICO violations. HN1 The RICO Act makes it illegal for "any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct [**25] of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt"<sup>83</sup> and for "any person to conspire" to so conduct or participate.<sup>84</sup> The "racketeering activity" alleged in the amended complaint is wire fraud, as defined under 18 U.S.C. § 1343.

The amended complaint alleges that "[d]efendants' collective association, including through their participation together (i) as members of the AFMA and its subcommittees; (ii) as BBSW Panel Banks; and (iii) acting as a trading bloc and engaging in secret collusive trades in the Prime Bank Bill market to manipulate BBSW, constitutes the RICO enterprise."<sup>85</sup> The members of this enterprise allegedly participated in and conspired to participate in domestic wire fraud by: "(a) transmitting or causing to be transmitted artificial BBSW rates in the U.S. or while crossing U.S. borders through electronic servers located in the United States; (b) transmitting or causing to be transmitted false and artificial BBSW submissions that were relied on by Thomson Reuters and the AFMA in collecting, calculating, publishing, and/or disseminating the daily BBSW rates that were transmitted, published, and disseminated in the United States or while [**26] crossing U.S. borders through electronic servers located in the United States; and (c) transmitting or causing to be transmitted confirmations for fraudulent transactions intended to impact BBSW in the U.S. or while crossing U.S. borders through electronic servers located in the United States."<sup>86</sup> Through this scheme, defendants defrauded participants in the BBSW-Based Derivatives market, depriving plaintiffs and purported class members of "their money relative to their BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives contracts."<sup>87</sup>

D. State Law Claims

Finally, plaintiffs assert two state law claims. First, they assert breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing against defendants Macquarie Bank, Morgan Stanley, Credit Suisse, Deutsche Bank AG, and UBS. They allege that the FrontPoint Plaintiffs "entered into binding and enforceable contracts with Defendants Macquarie Bank, Credit Suisse, Deutsche Bank AG, and UBS in connection with transactions for BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives" and that "Sonterra entered into binding and enforceable contracts with Defendant Morgan Stanley in connection with transactions for BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives.<sup>88</sup> These defendants allegedly breached the [**27] implied covenant and frustrated the purpose of these contracts by "(a) intentionally manipulating BBSW for the express purpose of generating illicit profits from its BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives; and (b) conspiring with other Defendants to manipulate BBSW and the [*153] prices of BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives."<sup>89</sup>

Finally, plaintiffs assert a claim of unjust enrichment against all defendants.<sup>90</sup> They allege that defendants entered into BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions but that, "[r]ather than compete honestly and aggressively with each other, Defendants colluded to manipulate BBSW and the prices of BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives to ensure they had an unfair advantage in the marketplace."<sup>91</sup> Defendants' "unlawful and inequitable acts caused Plaintiffs and Class members to suffer injury, lose money, and otherwise be deprived of the benefit of accurate BBSW rates, as well as the ability to accurately price, benchmark and or settle BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives transactions."<sup>92</sup> Plaintiffs consequently received less and defendants received more in value in than they would have received absent defendants' wrongful conduct.<sup>93</sup>

VI. Defendants' Motions

All defendants now move to dismiss the amended complaint [**28] pursuant to Rules 12\(b\)\(1\) and 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The Foreign Defendants move also to dismiss the amended complaint pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(2\), and the Venue Defendants move to dismiss plaintiffs' antitrust claims pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(3\).<sup>94</sup>

Defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and for failure to state a claim rests on alternative grounds. Defendants challenge plaintiffs' standing under Article III of the Constitution as well as under the Clayton Act, the CEA, and the RICO Act to bring each respective cause of action. In addition, they assert that the amended complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under either federal or state law. Finally, defendants argue that each federal cause of action should be dismissed as impermissibly extraterritorial and that all but the RICO claims should be dismissed as untimely.

The Foreign Defendants move also to dismiss each of plaintiffs' claims for lack of personal jurisdiction, and the Venue Defendants move to dismiss plaintiffs' antitrust claims for improper venue. The amended complaint alleges that the Foreign Defendants are subject to personal jurisdiction on a number of bases, including that (1) all Foreign Defendants are subject to general personal jurisdiction in New York, [**29] (2) all Foreign Defendants are subject to specific personal jurisdiction,<sup>95</sup> and (3) certain defendants have consented to personal jurisdiction by registering their New York branches under New York Banking Law § 200 and by entering into [*154] contracts governed by

<sup>94</sup> Defendants have filed a separate motion to dismiss the claims brought by Sonterra and the FrontPoint Plaintiffs because, defendants allege, these plaintiffs no longer exist and therefore lack standing and legal capacity to sue. DI 207 (notice of motion by letter), DI 213 (brief). The Court will resolve that motion in a separate opinion and does not now reach the issues there raised.

<sup>95</sup> As discussed later in this opinion, the Venue Defendants' motion to dismiss, although characterized as one for improper venue, in substance challenges plaintiffs' antitrust claims for lack of personal jurisdiction, which in turn depends on the Clayton Act's venue provision.

ISDA Master Agreements with the FrontPoint Plaintiffs. In the alternative, plaintiffs argue that they should be permitted to engage in jurisdictional discovery. The Foreign Defendants challenge jurisdiction on each of these grounds.

Discussion

I. Standing

A. Constitutional Standing

HN2 [↑] "To establish standing under Article III of the Constitution, a plaintiff must allege '(1) injury-in-fact, which is a concrete and particularized harm to a legally protected interest; (2) causation in the form of a fairly traceable connection between the asserted injury-in-fact and the alleged actions of the defendant; and (3) redressability, or a non-speculative likelihood that the injury can be remedied by the requested relief."<sup>96</sup> Defendants here challenge both injury-in-fact and causation.<sup>97</sup>

1. Injury-In-Fact

HN3 [↑] Injury-in-fact is a "low threshold" that "need not be capable of sustaining a valid cause of action."<sup>98</sup> As the Second Circuit recently stated:

"To successfully plead injury-in-fact, a plaintiff must only 'clearly' [**30] . . . allege facts demonstrating,' Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 518, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L.Ed.2d 343 (1975) (quoted in Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1547), that she had a 'a legally protected interest in a manner that is concrete and particularized' and that a defendant 'inva[ded]' that interest. Bhatia v. Piedrahita, 756 F.3d 211, 218 (2d Cir. 2014) (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560, 112 S. Ct. at 2130). . . . Unless an allegation of injury is 'so insubstantial, implausible, foreclosed by prior decisions of this Court, or otherwise completely devoid of merit as not to involve a federal controversy,' Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Environment, 523 U.S. 83, 89, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L.Ed.2d 210 (1998) (quoting Oneida Nation of N.Y. v. County of Oneida, 414 U.S. 661, 666, 94 S. Ct. 772, 39 L.Ed.2d 73 (1974)), the mere fact that it 'raises a federal question . . . confers power [on a federal court] to decide that it has no merit, as well as to decide that it has.' Montana-Dakota Utilities Co. v. Northwestern Public Service Co., 341 U.S. 246, 249, 71 S. Ct. 692, 95 L.Ed. 912 (1951)." <sup>99</sup>

Plaintiffs Dennis, Sonterra, and FrontPoint Event Driven here allege that defendants manipulated BBSW on days when these plaintiffs transacted in BBSW-Based Derivatives, thereby impacting the price of and/or periodic payments due on [*155] such derivatives and causing these plaintiffs to be either overcharged or underpaid. This alleged injury readily meets the "low threshold" for injury-in-fact. The harm of "pa[ying] too much" or "receiv[ing] too little" is a "classic economic injury-in-fact."<sup>100</sup> In Gelboim v. Bank of America Corporation,<sup>101</sup> for example, the Second Circuit considered an Article III [*31] challenge to plaintiffs who there alleged that they had been "harmed by receiving lower returns on LIBOR-denominated instruments as a result of defendants' manipulation of LIBOR."<sup>102</sup> The Circuit concluded that plaintiffs had "easily satisfied" the injury-in-fact requirement.<sup>103</sup>

Nor is the Court persuaded by defendants' argument that plaintiffs might just as easily have been benefitted by the alleged manipulation. This argument is premature at best. HN4<sup>104</sup> The mere "fact that an injury may be outweighed by other benefits, while often sufficient to defeat a claim for damages, does not negate standing."<sup>104</sup>

Accordingly, Dennis, Sonterra and FrontPoint Event Driven each sufficiently has alleged injury-in-fact. In contrast, the amended complaint does not allege that either FrontPoint Financial Horizons Fund, L.P. or FrontPoint Financial Services Fund, L.P. engaged in any BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions on days when BBSW allegedly was manipulated. These two named plaintiffs therefore lack constitutional standing and their claims must be dismissed.

2. Fairly Traceable

Defendants next argue that the injuries of plaintiffs Dennis and Sonterra cannot fairly be traced to the alleged conspiracy [*32] because they have not alleged sufficiently that BBSW was a component of the prices of their CME Australian futures contracts and Australian dollar FX swaps and forwards.<sup>105</sup>

But the amended complaint alleges that the "[p]rices of CME Australian dollar futures contracts are determined by a formula that incorporates BBSW as one of its terms."<sup>106</sup> Specifically, the alleged formula "uses BBSW to adjust the 'spot price' of Australian dollars for immediate delivery to account for the 'cost of carry,' i.e., the amount of interest earned on Australian dollar deposits over the duration of the agreement."<sup>107</sup> And plaintiffs' Australian dollar FX forwards are alleged to have been essentially "over-the-counter equivalent[s] of . . . CME Australian dollar futures contract[s]" that "are priced using the same formula that determines the value of CME Australian dollar futures contracts."<sup>108</sup> Finally, these Australian dollar FX forwards are one of the two components [*156] of an Australian dollar FX swap.<sup>109</sup> These allegations, the truth of which this Court is bound to assume at this motion to dismiss stage, are sufficient to make out a causal connection between defendants' alleged manipulation of BBSW and Dennis' and Sonterra's [**33] diminished returns on their BBSW-Based Derivatives.<sup>110</sup>

Defendants' various arguments that a causal nexus between the alleged manipulation and each of plaintiffs' specific transactions is implausible fail as well.<sup>111</sup> HN5 As an initial matter, the standard for Article III standing is not whether such the alleged injury is plausibly fairly traceable, but, rather, whether the injury is possibly fairly traceable.<sup>112</sup> Moreover, the Court declines at this early stage of litigation to make assumptions about how enduring or short-lived the effect of the alleged misconduct might have been on a given BBSW-Based Derivative.

Finally, the dates identified in the amended complaint in any event "do not purport to be the universe of defendants' communications and misconduct"<sup>113</sup> or of plaintiffs' transactions in BBSW-Based Derivatives. In John v. Whole Foods Market Group, Inc.,<sup>114</sup> the Second Circuit concluded that the plaintiff, a regular purchaser of certain items from Whole Foods Market, had Article III standing to sue Whole Foods in light of a report that Whole Foods had "systematically" and [**34] "routinely" overcharged for those products during the general period in which the plaintiff had made his purchases.<sup>115</sup> Although Whole Foods does not directly control, it nonetheless weighs in favor of plaintiffs, who have asserted here that defendants engaged in systematic manipulation of BBSW and that the trades alleged in the amended complaint are only some examples of numerous transactions entered into by plaintiffs.

B. Standing to Represent Purported Class

Defendants argue also that plaintiffs "lack standing to assert claims regarding FRAs and BAB Futures because [p]laintiffs do not claim to have transacted in [*157] those products."<sup>116</sup>

HN6 "[I]n a putative class action, a plaintiff has class standing if he plausibly alleges (1) that he personally has suffered some actual . . . injury as a result of the putatively illegal conduct of the defendant, and (2) that such conduct implicates the same set of concerns as the conduct alleged to have caused injury to other members of the putative class by the same defendants."<sup>117</sup> If both of these requirements are met, "the named plaintiff's litigation incentives are sufficiently aligned with those of the absent class members that the named plaintiff [**35] may properly assert claims on their behalf.<sup>118</sup> As discussed above, plaintiffs Dennis, Sonterra, and Front Point Event Driven satisfy the first prong of this test. The Court now considers whether they satisfy the second.

In NECA-IBEW Health & Welfare Fund v. Goldman Sachs & Co.,<sup>119</sup> the Second Circuit considered a purported class action brought by holders of mortgage-backed certificates issued in a collection of offerings. The action, filed against the issuing and underwriting financial institutions, alleged that the registration statements issued in the offerings for the certificates had contained "similar if not identical" false or misleading information in violation of the Securities Act of 1933.<sup>120</sup> The question there was whether the named plaintiffs had standing to litigate claims with respect to certificates from offerings in which the named plaintiffs had not purchased certificates and with respect to certificates from different tranches of the offerings in which the named plaintiffs had purchased certificates.<sup>121</sup>

The Circuit first considered the hypothetical scenario of a claim brought by a purchaser of debt asserting that the relevant offering documents contained a misrepresentation about [**36] the issuing company's impending insolvency and that the same misrepresentation appeared in the offering documents for each of a series of debt offerings by the company. The court noted that such a claim "would raise a 'set of concerns' nearly identical to that of a purchaser from another offering: the misrepresentation would infect the debt issued from every offering in like manner, given that all of it is backed by the same company whose solvency has been called into question."<sup>122</sup> In comparison, the certificates at issue had been backed by distinct sets of loans issued by distinct set of originators. The Circuit concluded that "differences in the identity of the originators backing the Certificates matter[ed] for the purposes of assessing whether [the alleged] claims raise[d] the same set of concerns" because the alleged misstatements concerned origination guidelines.<sup>123</sup> This meant that the proof of any given injury alleged "would center on whether the particular originators of the loans backing the particular Offering from which a Certificate-holder purchased a security had in fact abandoned its underwriting guidelines, [*158] rendering defendants' Offering Documents false or misleading."<sup>124</sup> Accordingly, [**37] the Circuit concluded that "to the extent certain Offerings were backed by loans originated by originators common to those backing the [offerings from which the named plaintiffs had purchased certificates], NECA's claims raise[d] a sufficiently similar set of concerns to permit it to purport to represent Certificate-holders from those Offerings."<sup>125</sup> The Circuit concluded also that the differences among the various tranches in a given offering were of no moment to class standing because the difference in priority with respect to receiving cash flows "[did] not alter the fact that all of the Certificate-holders' cash flows within any such Offering or Group derive[d] from loans originated by some of the same originators," but rather impacted only the relative damages that class members would receive.<sup>126</sup>

In a subsequent case involving residential mortgage-based securities ("RMBS"),<sup>127</sup> the Second Circuit did not permit a named plaintiff to assert "breach-of-duty" claims against the trustee of a RMBS trust in which the named plaintiff did not invest. There, the defendant had served as the trustee for 530 different RMBS trusts, and the named plaintiff had invested [**38] in a subset of those trusts.<sup>128</sup> The originator of the mortgage loans underlying the securities in the trust had made several representations and warranties in respect of the credit quality and underwriting of the loans. According to plaintiffs, however, it had failed to adhere to prudent underwriting standards and thus breached several of the representations and warranties. These breaches allegedly had resulted in significant losses to the holders because the underlying loans had defaulted at higher than expected rates.<sup>129</sup> Plaintiffs consequently sued defendant, as trustee, for breach of its fiduciary duties of care and loyalty, breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith, and breach of the Trust Indenture Act.

The Circuit held that the named plaintiff did not have standing to assert claims on behalf of the purported class members who invested in RMBS trusts in which the named plaintiff had not invested because the defendant's alleged misconduct — which included failure to notify certificate holders of the originator's breaches of the governing agreements, failure to force the originator to repurchase defaulted mortgage loans, and failure to ensure that the mortgage loans [**39] held by the trusts were correctly documented — had to be "proved loan-by-loan and trust-by-trust."<sup>130</sup>

[*159] Plaintiffs here allege that defendants conspired to and did manipulate BBSW on a systematic basis, which manipulation resulted in artificial pricing of BBSW-Based Derivatives across the globe, including in the United States. The proof required for plaintiffs to prevail on their federal claims — that is, their claims under the Clayton Act, the CEA and the RICO Act — will be largely identical because, as described above, the allegations underlying these claims are that defendants engaged in manipulative Prime Bank Bill transactions and submitted false BBSW rates. That plaintiffs and the purported class members transacted in different derivatives is relevant only to the question of damages because plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that BBSW was a component of the prices of the derivatives in which they transacted as well as of the FRAs described in the amended complaint.<sup>131</sup> Although 90-day BAB futures contracts stand on somewhat different footing because they are priced by reference to 90-day Prime Bank Bills, rather than BBSW, the proof needed to prevail on claims with [**40] respect to those derivatives — i.e., that defendants manipulated BBSW by manipulating the prices of Prime Bank Bills — largely will overlap as well.

<sup>126</sup> Id.; see also id. at 164-65 ("Their ultimate damages will of course vary depending on their level of subordination, but 'it is well-established that the fact that damages may have to be ascertained on an individual basis is not sufficient to defeat class certification' under Rule 23(a), let alone class standing." <sup>131</sup> See, e.g., Sullivan, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25756, 2017 WL 685570, at *8 (concluding plaintiffs alleging identical federal claims in respect of alleged Euribor manipulation had class standing to assert claims on behalf of plaintiffs that transacted in FRAs because "any harm suffered by a party to an FRA as a result of the Euribor's manipulation would have been caused by the identical misconduct of the identical parties" and "[l]iability would turn on the same proof as to the allegedly false Euribor submissions").

The remaining state law claims, however, stand apart from the federal claims. Unlike the federal claims, in respect of which a plaintiff's specific relationship with defendants is relevant only or substantially to damages, a plaintiff's connection to the defendants is central to the question of liability in the case of claims of breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and unjust enrichment.

HN7 The promise of good faith and fair dealing is treated as an implied provision in every contract that "is breached when a party acts in a manner that, although not expressly forbidden by any contractual provision, would deprive the other party of the right to receive the benefits under their agreement."<sup>132</sup> "In order to find a breach of the implied covenant, a party's action must 'directly violate an obligation that may be presumed to have been intended by the parties.'"<sup>133</sup>

The terms of contracts for BBSW-Based Derivatives that are traded over the counter — that is, BBSW-based swaps, BBSW-based FRAs, and Australian dollar <sup>**41</sup> FX forwards and swaps — are negotiated and customized to the particular investor. As the terms across these contracts vary, so too do the "obligation[s] that may be presumed to have been intended by the <sup>*160</sup> parties."<sup>134</sup> Accordingly, liability for the breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing with respect to such contracts may be determined only on a contract-by-contract basis. Plaintiffs therefore do not have standing to represent absent purported class members who entered into BBSW-based FRAs because plaintiffs do not allege that they themselves entered into such derivatives.

The analysis is somewhat different with respect to the exchange-traded BBSW-Based Derivatives — that is, CME Australian dollar futures and 90-day BAB futures — but the result is the same. The contract terms for a given type of exchange-traded future are almost entirely standardized. They vary only with respect to the maturity date and price of the derivative, and the prices in turn are determined by a set formula based in part either on a 90-day Prime Bank Bill or a BBSW rate.<sup>135</sup> Accordingly, the manipulative conduct alleged in the amended complaint likely would "infect" these derivatives contracts <sup>**42</sup> "in like manner"<sup>136</sup> and, although the question is not now before the Court, a strong case could be made that a plaintiff's burden to sustain a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing as to such a contract would be largely identical to anyone else who entered into a contract for the same type of future. The only meaningful differences would be with respect to the damages suffered, if any, by a given contract holder.

Here, however, defendants challenge plaintiffs' class standing to represent purported class members who traded 90-day BAB futures. None of the named plaintiffs alleges that it traded 90-day BAB futures. Accordingly, plaintiffs' claims for breach of the implied covenant will not raise a "sufficiently similar set of concerns"<sup>137</sup> to those of the would-be class members. Plaintiffs therefore lack class standing as to purported class members who entered into contracts for 90-day BAB futures.

The analysis is similar with respect to plaintiffs' claims of unjust enrichment. HN8<sup>138</sup> In order to sustain an unjust enrichment claim under New York law, "[a] plaintiff must show 'that (1) the other party was enriched, (2) at that party's expense, and (3) that "it is against [**43] equity and good conscience to permit [the other party] to retain what is sought to be recovered.'"<sup>139</sup> HN9<sup>140</sup> A plaintiff cannot support a claim of unjust enrichment against a defendant without alleging some kind of connection to that defendant.<sup>141</sup> Liability therefore will depend on each plaintiff's relationship to a given defendant. Where a relationship is governed by a customized, negotiated contract for a derivative traded over the counter, that relationship will change from contract to contract. Where, however, a relationship is governed by a standardized contract for an exchange-traded derivative such as a future, the [\[\*161\]](#) concerns raised in respect of one such contract will be largely identical to the concerns raised in respect of any other such contracts. Nonetheless, none of the named plaintiffs traded in the type of contract at issue here, which is a 90-day BAB future.

The Court concludes that plaintiffs do not have class standing to assert their state law claims for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing or unjust enrichment on behalf of absent plaintiffs who traded in BBSW-based FRAs or 90-day BAB futures. The contracts related to BBSW-based FRAs will differ across [\[\*44\]](#) the holders of such contracts. And although the proof required for holders of 90-day BAB futures to prevail on claims for either breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing or unjust enrichment likely would be largely identical across such holders, none of the plaintiffs here falls into that group. Accordingly, plaintiffs have standing to assert their federal claims, but not their state law claims, on behalf of the purported class members who traded in BBSW-based FRAs and 90-day BAB futures.

II. Pleading Standard on Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) Motion

HN11<sup>142</sup> To survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), a plaintiff must allege "sufficient factual matter . . . to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'"<sup>143</sup> A claim is facially plausible "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged."<sup>144</sup> The Court generally "accept[s] all factual allegations in the complaint as true and draw[s] all reasonable inferences in the plaintiffs' favor" when considering a motion to dismiss.<sup>145</sup>

HN12<sup>146</sup> To the extent a claim sounds in fraud, however, the complaint is subject to the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9\(b\) and "must state [\[\*45\]](#) with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud."<sup>147</sup> Although "the fraud alleged must be stated with particularity . . . the requisite intent of the alleged [perpetrator] of the fraud need not be alleged with great specificity."<sup>148</sup> Nonetheless, a complaint "must allege facts that give rise to a strong

III. Antitrust Claims

Plaintiffs' first cause of action is a claim against all defendants under Section 4 of the Clayton Act asserting a violation of HN13 Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which provides, in relevant part:

[*162] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal."<sup>147</sup>

HN14 Section 4 of the Clayton Act, which sets forth a private right of action to bring a Sherman Act claim for damages, provides, in relevant part:

"[A]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the [**46] antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."<sup>148</sup>

A. Antitrust Standing

Defendants first challenge plaintiffs' ability to bring their federal antitrust claims under the concept of "antitrust standing" — that is whether plaintiffs have pled "enough facts to make it plausible that they did indeed suffer the sort of injury that would entitle them to relief"<sup>149</sup> under Section 4 of the Clayton Act.

HN15 Section 4 "It is a well-established principle that, while the United States is authorized to sue anyone violating the federal antitrust laws, a private plaintiff must demonstrate 'standing.'"<sup>150</sup> "Like constitutional standing, antitrust standing is a threshold inquiry resolved at the pleading stage."<sup>151</sup> In determining whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing, the Court "assume[s] the existence' of an antitrust violation"<sup>152</sup> and considers two questions:

- (1) "[H]ave [plaintiffs] suffered antitrust injury?"
- (2) "[A]re [plaintiffs] efficient enforcers of the antitrust [**47] laws?"<sup>153</sup>

1. Antitrust Injury

HN16 [↑] "Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation."<sup>154</sup> Rather, "[a]n antitrust injury 'should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the [antitrust] violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.'"<sup>155</sup> Accordingly, "[i]t is not enough for the actual injury to be 'causally linked' to the asserted violation."<sup>156</sup> Rather, "plaintiffs must demonstrate that they themselves have sustained an 'antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent [*163] and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful."<sup>157</sup>

This inquiry involves three steps:

"[F]irst the plaintiff must 'identify the practice complained of and the reasons such a practice is or might be anticompetitive'; then the court must 'identify the actual injury the plaintiff alleges' by 'look[ing] to the ways in which the plaintiff claims it is in a worse position as a consequence of defendant's conduct'; and finally, the court must 'compare the anticompetitive effect of the specific practice at issue to the actual injury the plaintiff alleges.'" [**48]<sup>158</sup>

As to the first question, plaintiffs here assert that defendants, in coordination with one another, manipulated BBSW and the prices of BBSW-Based Derivatives by conspiring to engage in manipulative and uneconomic money market transactions during the Fixing Window, by sharing proprietary BBSW-Based Derivative information with one another, and by making false BBSW rate submissions.<sup>159</sup> That is sufficient.

As to the second, plaintiffs allege that they were "overcharged and underpaid in their BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives transactions" and were "deprived of the ability to accurately price BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives entered into during the Class Period and to accurately determine the settlement value of BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives by reference to an accurate BBSW."<sup>160</sup> They consequently received "less in value" on their BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions than they otherwise would have.<sup>161</sup> That too is sufficient.

The third query is resolved quickly in favor of plaintiffs. HN17 [↑] "Generally, when consumers, because of a conspiracy, must pay prices that no longer reflect ordinary market conditions, they suffer 'injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes [**49] defendants' acts unlawful."<sup>162</sup>

The Second Circuit's decision in Gelboim is instructive. The Circuit there concluded that plaintiffs — consumers in the market for various LIBOR-based derivatives — sufficiently alleged antitrust injury when they claimed that they had received lower rates of return on their derivatives as a result of defendants' collusion to depress LIBOR.<sup>163</sup> Because defendants' alleged conduct constituted a horizontal price fixing scheme — that is, a per se violation of the federal antitrust laws — the plaintiffs did not need to make a "showing of actual adverse effect in the marketplace."<sup>164</sup> In alleging that they, as consumers in the marketplace for financial instruments the prices of which had been influenced by defendants' alleged conspiracy, had received less for their money than they would have absent defendants' conduct, they had sufficiently alleged antitrust injury.<sup>165</sup>

Unlike the complaint in Gelboim, the allegations in the amended complaint here do not assert that BBSW was consistently [*164] moved in the same direction by defendants. But this is of no import with respect to the issue of antitrust standing. Plaintiffs allege that defendants each made a regular practice of determining [**50] the optimal BBSW rate that would maximize their profits on BBSW-Based Derivatives and that they then worked together to move BBSW to that spot. This alleged coordinated effort is no less an example of horizontal price fixing than the alleged LIBOR scheme in Gelboim. Plaintiffs Dennis, Sonterra, and FrontPoint Event Driven each has alleged that it was overcharged and underpaid on its BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions as a result of a per se violation of the Sherman Act. They have plausibly alleged antitrust injury.

2. Efficient Enforcers

The Court now turns to consider whether plaintiffs Dennis, Sonterra, and FrontPoint Event Driven would be efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws.

HN18 [+] In the Second Circuit:

"The efficient enforcer inquiry turns on: (1) whether the violation was a direct or remote cause of the injury; (2) whether there is an identifiable class of other persons whose self-interest would normally lead them to sue for the violation; (3) whether the injury was speculative; and (4) whether there is a risk that other plaintiffs would be entitled to recover duplicative damages or that damages would be difficult to apportion among possible victims of the antitrust injury."<sup>166</sup>

(a) Causation [**51]

The first factor to consider is the "'directness or indirectness of the asserted injury,' which requires evaluation of the 'chain of causation' linking [plaintiffs'] asserted injury and the Banks' alleged price-fixing."<sup>167</sup>

Plaintiffs' claims, with rare exceptions, are different from the typical price fixing case in which defendants are sellers that collectively agree on an input to the price and plaintiffs are buyers from one or members of the conspiracy. The amended complaint, for the most part, does not allege that plaintiffs transacted directly with defendants. This implicates the concept of umbrella standing — which typically is relevant "when a cartel controls only part of a

market" and a plaintiff-consumer that dealt only with a non-cartel member "alleges that he sustained injury by virtue of the cartel's raising of prices in the market as a whole."<sup>168</sup>

The Second Circuit considered umbrella standing in Gelboim, stating, in relevant part:

"At first glance, here there appears to be no difference in the injury alleged by those who dealt in LIBOR-denominated instruments, whether their transactions were conducted directly or indirectly with the Banks. At the same time, however, if the Banks [**52] control only a small percentage of the ultimate identified market, this case may raise the . . . concern of damages disproportionate to wrongdoing . . . Requiring the Banks to pay treble damages to every plaintiff who ended up on the wrong side of an independent LIBOR-denominated derivative swap would, if appellants' allegations were proved at trial, not only bankrupt 16 of the world's most important financial institutions, but also vastly [*165] extend the potential scope of antitrust liability in myriad markets where derivative instruments have proliferated."<sup>169</sup>

The Court is not persuaded that concerns related to umbrella standing need bear on this case. The amended complaint does not allege that a group of conspirators, without controlling the entire market for a commodity, fixed prices for that commodity. In those circumstances, the question of causation is whether the conspirators that did not transact directly with a plaintiff nonetheless affected the price of the commodity in which the plaintiff transacted. In contrast, the conspiracy alleged here involves essentially all of the entities that contribute to setting BBSW and asserts that these banks and brokers affected the price of all [**53] derivatives priced or benchmarked by reference to BBSW.<sup>170</sup>

Plaintiffs allege that they engaged in transactions for such derivatives and that their returns were lower because of defendants' anticompetitive conduct. The Court has rejected already defendants' arguments that plaintiffs have failed to allege a plausible link between BBSW and the derivatives in which plaintiffs transacted. Nor do plaintiffs need to allege plausibly that their losses were not offset by gains on other BBSW-linked trades.<sup>171</sup> These allegations amount to a plausible and sufficiently direct causal link between plaintiffs' injuries and defendants' alleged misconduct. The question of with whom plaintiffs transacted directly is irrelevant.

(b) More Direct Victims

HN19[] The second factor to be considered in the efficient enforcer analysis is "the 'existence of more direct victims of the alleged conspiracy.'"<sup>172</sup>

Concerns with respect to indirect purchasers prevailed in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois.<sup>173</sup> The Supreme Court there held that the State of Illinois could not recover damages in an antitrust action against manufacturers of concrete block that had sold the block to masonry contractors, which in turn sold the block [**54] to general contractors from whom the State purchased masonry structures containing the concrete block. Allowing indirect purchasers to recover in such cases "would create a serious risk of multiple liability for defendants," and would require courts to undertake the "uncertain[] and difficult[]" process of reconstructing price and output decisions.<sup>174</sup> Ruling otherwise would have risked "transform[ing] treble-damages actions into massive efforts to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that [*166] could have absorbed part of the overcharge — from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers."<sup>175</sup>

The indirect purchaser doctrine does not present the same concerns in this case. This is not a case of a fixed price commodity or even a fixed price component of a commodity being passed through a distribution chain to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs have not indirectly borne the effects of the alleged conspiracy. Nor is Illinois Brick properly read to permit antitrust standing only among plaintiffs in direct privity with defendants.<sup>176</sup> Defendants allegedly fixed BBSW, which then was incorporated into various derivatives. Accordingly, anyone who engaged in BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions [**55] on days when BBSW was manipulated would have been injured regardless of whether they purchased such derivatives directly from defendants.<sup>177</sup> In like circumstances, the Second Circuit has suggested that "directness may have diminished weight."<sup>178</sup>

Indeed, who would be a victim more direct than these plaintiffs to bring antitrust claims alleging a conspiracy to fix BBSW? Defendants allegedly manipulated BBSW in order to impact the prices of, and thereby increase their returns on, BBSW-Based Derivatives. Consumers in the BBSW-Based Derivatives market are the most natural and direct victims of the alleged conspiracy. This factor, accordingly, weighs in plaintiffs' favor.

(c) Speculative Damages

The third factor is "the extent to which appellants' damages claim is 'highly speculative.'"<sup>179</sup> Defendants argue that damages here would be highly speculative because "[t]o attempt to ascertain damages in this case, the Court would have to construct a 'but for' BBSW rate for each day of the years-long Class Period and then hypothesize how market participants . . . would have altered their behavior and thereby changed the prices of the instruments at issue, [*166] based on this 'but for' rate."<sup>180</sup>

But this misstates the principles governing damages in private antitrust litigation. HN21<sup>181</sup> Although it is true that "even where the defendant by his own wrong has prevented a more precise computation, the jury may not render a verdict based on speculation or guesswork,"<sup>182</sup> a verdict as to damages may be reached on the basis of "probable and inferential" data if "direct and positive proof" is unavailable.<sup>183</sup> In [\*167] Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures,<sup>184</sup> the Supreme Court rejected a challenge to an antitrust damages verdict even though plaintiffs' losses in receipts during the period of defendants' unlawful restraint on trade could not be determined with total certainty.<sup>185</sup> The Court there upheld the jury's damages verdict, which had been based on a comparison of the plaintiff's receipts before and after the defendants' unlawful actions, concluding that "[a]ny other rule would enable the wrongdoer to profit by his wrongdoing at the expense of his victim" and would act as "an inducement to make wrongdoing so effective and complete in every case as to preclude any recovery, by rendering the measure of damages uncertain."<sup>186</sup>

The Second Circuit, considering this third factor [\*\*57] in Gelboim, echoed the Supreme Court, stating, "some degree of uncertainty stems from the nature of antitrust law."<sup>187</sup> It nonetheless remarked also that "highly speculative damages is a sign that a given plaintiff is an inefficient engine of enforcement" and that "it [was] difficult to see how appellants would arrive at such an estimate, even with the aid of expert testimony."<sup>188</sup> Specifically, it noted that the case before it presented numerous "unusual challenges," namely:

"The disputed transactions were done at rates that were negotiated, notwithstanding that the negotiated component was the increment above LIBOR. And the market for money is worldwide, with competitors offering various increments above LIBOR, or rates pegged to other benchmarks, or rates set without reference to any benchmark at all."<sup>189</sup>

The question for courts to consider, it held, was "whether the damages would necessarily be highly speculative."<sup>190</sup>

This Court concludes that standing here is not defeated by the risk of speculative damages. Plaintiffs have alleged sufficiently that the derivatives transactions in which they engaged depended on BBSW and that defendants' conduct altered the prices of BBSW-Based Derivatives. [\*\*58] Although the damages calculations in this case may indeed be complex, it is possible, as plaintiffs repeatedly allege, to calculate one's exposure to changes in BBSW based on one's BBSW-Based Derivative positions. As another judge in this district reasoned in a prior benchmark rate case, "because exogenous factors affect price movements in most antitrust cases, and because the existence of such factors does not alone defeat standing, questions regarding the extent of Plaintiffs' injuries can best be resolved at a later stage."<sup>191</sup> In any case, it would be entirely premature to foreclose this claim at this most preliminary stage. In the event that it [*168] were to become clear that the appropriate level of certainty as to damages is unattainable here, the point again would be available to defendants at later stages of the case.

(d) Duplicate Recovery and Complex Damages Apportionment

HN23[↑] The final factor in the efficient enforcer analysis is "the importance of avoiding 'either the risk of duplicate recoveries on the one hand, or the danger of complex apportionment of damages on the other.'"<sup>191</sup> In Gelboim, the Second Circuit focused on, but drew no conclusions from, the various government regulatory [**59] investigations and lawsuits that were then in progress in respect of the alleged widespread manipulation of LIBOR.<sup>192</sup>

Defendants raise no challenge to plaintiffs' antitrust standing on this basis and the Court finds no reason to do so sua sponte. As a practical matter, the scale of the investigations into various of the defendants by ASIC, as of the date of this opinion, is nowhere close to that of the ongoing proceedings and investigations related to the alleged manipulation of LIBOR.

In the circumstances, the Court concludes that the efficient enforcer factors, taken together, weigh in plaintiffs' favor. Accordingly, plaintiffs Dennis, Sonterra, and FrontPoint Event Driven have standing to pursue their federal antitrust claims against defendants.

B. Plausible Antitrust Claims

To avoid dismissal, plaintiffs must allege an antitrust violation stemming from defendants' transgression of HN24[↑] Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which provides that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal."<sup>193</sup> "The crucial question in a Section 1 case is therefore whether the challenged conduct [**60] 'stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express.'"<sup>194</sup>

1. Pleading Standard

HN25[↑] To state a plausible claim for conspiracy under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a complaint must include "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made."<sup>195</sup> The claim need not be probable, but the amended complaint must plead "enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement."<sup>196</sup> The Supreme Court has stated:

apportioning damages is not . . . an independent basis for denying standing where it is adequately alleged that a defendant's conduct has proximately injured an interest of the plaintiff's that the statute protects." (emphasis omitted).

(quoting Anderson News, L.L.C. v. Am. Media, Inc., 680 F.3d 162, 183 (2d Cir. 2012) (internal quotation marks omitted))).

"[A]n allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified [*169] point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action."<sup>197</sup>

HN26[↑] That said, allegations of parallel conduct need not be so robust that the only plausible explanation for defendants' conduct is an agreement. "[T]he plaintiff need not show that its allegations suggesting [**61] an agreement are more likely than not true or that they rule out the possibility of independent action, as would be required at later litigation stages such as a defense motion for summary judgment or a trial."<sup>198</sup> Indeed, "a given set of actions may well be subject to diverging interpretations, each of which is plausible."<sup>199</sup> Faced with multiple plausible interpretations, the Second Circuit has stated:

"The choice between or among plausible inferences or scenarios is one for the factfinder. The choice between two plausible inferences that may be drawn from factual allegations is not a choice to be made by the court on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Fact-specific questions cannot be resolved on the pleadings. A court ruling on such a motion may not properly dismiss a complaint that states a plausible version of the events merely because the court finds a different version more plausible."<sup>200</sup>

HN28[↑] There are two ways that an antitrust plaintiff may plead facts sufficient to support the inference that a conspiracy actually existed. "First, a plaintiff may, of course, assert direct evidence that the defendants entered into an agreement in violation of the antitrust laws."<sup>201</sup> However, given that "in many antitrust [**62] cases, this type of 'smoking gun' can be hard to come by, especially at the pleading stage," a complaint, alternatively, may defeat a motion to dismiss by alleging "circumstantial facts supporting the inference that a conspiracy existed."<sup>202</sup> With respect to this second method, an antitrust plaintiff can cross the "line separating conspiracy from parallelism," and thus state a sufficiently plausible antitrust claim, "with allegations of interdependent conduct, accompanied by circumstantial evidence and plus factors."<sup>203</sup> Although these examples are "neither exhaustive nor exclusive," such plus factors may include "(1) a common motive to conspire; (2) evidence that shows that the parallel acts were against the apparent individual economic self-interest of the alleged conspirators; and (3) evidence of a high level of interfirm communications."<sup>204</sup>

Plaintiffs here allege that defendants — "horizontal competitors" in the market for financial products — undertook collective action to manipulate BBSW in order to influence the prices of, and therefore the returns on, derivatives the fair market value of which was allegedly linked to BBSW. Plaintiffs, in other words, allege a horizontal [**63] price-fixing conspiracy — a per se violation of the federal antitrust laws.<sup>205</sup>

The Court concludes that the amended complaint alleges "interdependent conduct, accompanied by circumstantial evidence and plus factors"<sup>206</sup> sufficient to state a claim under the Clayton Act.

In particular, the amended complaint alleges that defendants each engaged in noneconomic transactions of Prime Bank Bills to push the prices of the bills up or down, thereby pushing BBSW submissions in the opposite direction. It is alleged also that defendants made false BBSW rate submissions to AFMA and used their positions on the various AFMA committees to maintain the status quo and, hence, their ability to manipulate BBSW. And all of this conduct allegedly was undertaken with a common motive among defendants — that is "increased profits" on defendants' BBSW-Based Derivatives positions.<sup>207</sup>

Defendants argue that this case is distinguishable from Gelboim in that the defendants there allegedly conspired to move LIBOR in the same direction (down). But it is not necessary for defendants' interests to be aligned at all times to share a common motive. The allegations create a plausible claim that defendants conspired to [**64] rig the process of setting the BBSW rate such that, over time, each would benefit by realizing profits on their respective derivative positions.<sup>208</sup> This is not unlike the thinking among coconspirators who collectively engage in non-competitive bidding. In such cases, the coconspirators will agree that one among them should get a certain job and that a subsequent job then will go to a different competitor — all with the understanding that, over time, each coconspirator will benefit from their collective rigging of the bidding process.<sup>209</sup>

[*171] In addition, the amended complaint contains extensive allegations of inter-firm communications and cooperative efforts among defendants — including the sharing of information with one another about their respective exposures to BBSW, the strategic trading of Prime Bank Bills ahead of the Fixing Window to enable one another to flood the market and artificially raise BBSW, and, in the case of the broker defendants, the facilitation of various noneconomic transactions.<sup>210</sup> Finally, the claims brought by ASIC against various defendants and those

Supp. 3d at 55 (concluding plaintiffs sufficiently alleged antitrust conspiracy in part because they alleged defendants had "common motive to conspire — namely that Defendants were major players in the market for interest rate derivatives who were jointly motivated by a desire to maximize profits by manipulating the ISDAfix benchmark rates"); see also Sullivan, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25756, 2017 WL 685570, at *13.

defendants' admissions of misconduct also support an inference that an agreement among defendants [**65] existed.<sup>211</sup>

These allegations create a plausible claim that defendants conspired to rig the process of setting BBSW such that, over time, each would benefit by realizing profits on their respective derivative positions. The machinery of the conspiracy was such that, at least on certain days, there was agreement among at least some defendants artificially to drive BBSW higher or lower.<sup>212</sup> Drawing all reasonable inferences in plaintiffs' favor, the Court concludes that the amended complaint plausibly alleges that a conspiracy to violate the federal antitrust laws existed among defendants.

C. Extraterritoriality

Defendants next assert that plaintiffs' antitrust claims are impermissibly extraterritorial under HN30[] the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 \("FTAIA"\), which provides, in relevant part, that antitrust actions may not be maintained with respect to:

"[C]onduct involving trade or commerce . . . with foreign nations unless—(1) such conduct has a direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect—(A) on trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations, or on import trade or import commerce with foreign nations; [**66] or (B) on export trade or export commerce with foreign nations, of a person engaged in such trade or commerce in the United States; and (2) such effect gives rise to a claim under [*172] the provisions of sections 1 to 7 of this title, other than this section."<sup>213</sup>

<sup>210</sup> The Court is not persuaded by defendants' argument that the amended complaint improperly contains pleadings only as to the group of defendants as a whole, rather than as to each individual defendant. HN29[] The Court respectfully departs from others that have dismissed claims for improper group pleading. E.g., Sonterra Capital Master Fund Ltd. v. Credit Suisse Grp. AG, 277 F. Supp. 3d 521, 553 (S.D.N.Y. 2017) ("[E]ach defendant is entitled to know how he is alleged to have conspired, with whom and for what purpose. Mere generalizations as to any particular defendant — or even defendants as a group — are insufficient." (quoting In re Zinc Antitrust Litig., 155 F. Supp. 3d 337, 384 (S.D.N.Y. 2016))). In the Court's view, dismissing plaintiffs' claims for failing to include specific conspiracy allegations as to each defendant in the amended complaint would be premature at this early stage of litigation. See generally Gelboim, 823 F.3d. Cf. Starr, 592 F.3d at 325 (holding that in case where antitrust claim of agreement rests on the parallel conduct, plaintiffs are "not required to mention a specific time, place or person involved in each conspiracy allegation").

Defendants challenge the antitrust claims in the amended complaint on the basis that the conduct alleged does not fall into the "domestic-injury exception." HN32[↑] This exception "applies (and makes the Sherman Act nonetheless applicable) where the conduct (1) has a 'direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect' on domestic commerce, and (2) 'such effect gives rise to a [Sherman Act] claim.'"<sup>216</sup>

1. Direct, Substantial and Reasonably Foreseeable Effect

Defendants argue that "all of the purported manipulative conduct occurred in Australia" and that the amended complaint suggests merely [\[\*67\]](#) a ripple effect on domestic commerce.<sup>217</sup> HN33[↑] But the Second Circuit has held that "foreign anticompetitive conduct can have the statutorily required 'direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect' on U.S. domestic or import commerce even if the effect does not follow as an immediate consequence of the defendant's conduct, so long as there is a reasonably proximate causal nexus between the conduct and the effect."<sup>218</sup>

Plaintiffs plead that defendants manipulated BBSW on a regular basis in order to impact the prices of and increase profits on BBSW-Based Derivatives. They plead also that substantial quantities of BBSW-Based Derivatives were sold in the United States.<sup>219</sup> HN34[↑] As another judge in this district previously stated, "There can be no serious dispute that the manipulation of a benchmark that is globally disseminated and serves as a pricing component of derivatives sold widely in the United States, as plaintiffs have plausibly alleged, would have a foreseeable effect within the United States."<sup>220</sup> The question whether an alleged effect on U.S. commerce is direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable clearly is one of fact,<sup>221</sup> and these allegations are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief [\[\*68\]](#) may be granted.

2. Effect Gives Rise to a Claim

This second prong of the analysis pertains to the causal connection between the alleged conduct and injury. HN35[↑] For the domestic-injury exception to apply, "the domestic effect" of defendants' alleged conduct "must proximately cause the plaintiff's injury."<sup>222</sup> [\[\*173\]](#) The alleged effect of defendants' conduct is the manipulation of prices of BBSW-Based Derivatives. Plaintiffs' alleged injury is that they were overcharged and underpaid on the BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions in which they engaged as a result of defendants' conduct. The amended complaint sufficiently alleges that this injury was reasonably foreseeable from the alleged effect of defendants' conduct and therefore gave rise to their antitrust claim.

IV. CEA Claims

Plaintiffs assert three CEA claims against each defendant.

Their first is that all defendants are liable as principals under Section 6\(c\) of the CEA, which, in relevant part, makes it unlawful to:

"[M]anipulate or attempt to manipulate the price of any swap, or of any commodity in interstate commerce, or for future delivery on or subject to the [\[\*\*69\]](#) rules of any registered entity."<sup>223</sup>

HN37 [↑] Section 22 establishes a private right of action for violations of Section 6\(c\). It provides, in relevant part: "Any person . . . who violates this chapter or who willfully aids, abets, counsels, induces, or procures the commission of a violation of this chapter shall be liable for actual damages resulting from one or more of the transactions referred to in subparagraphs (A) through (D) of this paragraph and caused by such violation to any other person . . . — (D) "who purchased or sold [any contract of sale of any commodity for future delivery (or option on such contract or any commodity)] or swap if the violation constitutes . . . a manipulation of the price of any such contract or swap or the price of the commodity underlying such contract or swap."<sup>224</sup>

Plaintiffs allege also principal-agent liability<sup>225</sup> and aiding and abetting liability<sup>226</sup> against all defendants.

A. CEA Standing

1. FrontPoint Plaintiffs and Sonterra

Defendants argue that Sonterra and the FrontPoint Plaintiffs lack standing under the CEA on the basis that the pre-Dodd Frank CEA governs this case, not the current version of the statute. [\[\*\*70\]](#)

HN36 [↑] Section 6\(c\) of the CEA makes it unlawful also to "use or employ, or attempt to use or employ, in connection with any swap, or a contract of sale of any commodity in interstate commerce, or for future delivery on or subject to the rules of any registered entity, any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance" in violation of rules promulgated by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission ("CFTC") and to "make any false or misleading statement of a material fact to the [CFTC]." Id. § 9\(1\)-\(2\); see also id. § 1a\(8\) (defining "Commission"). Neither provision is implicated by the factual allegations in the amended complaint.

In the same cause of action, the amended complaint asserts that all defendants are liable as principals under Section 9 of the CEA, codified at 7 U.S.C. § 13, which defines criminal penalties arising from similar conduct.

<sup>225</sup> See id. § 2\(a\)\(1\)\(B\) ("The act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for any individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust within the scope of his employment or office shall be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust, as well as of such official, agent, or other person.").

<sup>226</sup> See id. § 25\(a\)\(1\) ("Any person . . . who violates this chapter or who willfully aids, abets, counsels, induces, or procures the commission of a violation of this chapter shall be liable . . ." (emphasis added)).

[*174] The CEA was amended by the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, which became effective on July 21, 2011.<sup>227</sup> Among other things, the amendment added swaps to the purview of Sections 6\(c\) and 22, quoted above.<sup>228</sup> Prior to that amendment, the CEA excluded a "sale of any cash commodity for deferred shipment or delivery" from the term "future delivery"<sup>229</sup> as well as agreements, contracts, and transactions in "excluded commodities" if the agreement, contract or transaction was (1) entered into by "eligible contract participants" and (2) not executed or traded on a trading facility.<sup>230</sup> Similarly, the CEA then excluded agreements, contracts, and transactions in most commodities if the agreement, contract or transaction was (1) entered into by "eligible contract participants," (2) subject to individual negotiation by the parties, and (3) not executed or traded on a trading facility.<sup>231</sup> A financial institution acting for its own account was included in the definition of "eligible contract participant."<sup>232</sup> Defendants therefore argue that the CEA excluded the swaps and forwards allegedly entered into by the FrontPoint Plaintiffs and Sonterra prior to the effective date of Dodd Frank.

Even if the pre-Dodd Frank version of the CEA excluded such swaps and forwards, the amendments to the CEA enacted by Dodd Frank became effective before the changes AFMA made to the BBSW rate set process, which occurred just over two years later in September 2013. Accordingly, it is unclear whether all of the transactions allegedly entered into by the FrontPoint Plaintiffs and Sonterra would fall under the pre-Dodd Frank version of the CEA. Nonetheless, plaintiffs have waived their CEA claims in respect of BBSW-Based Derivatives other than CME Australian dollar futures contracts — the derivatives in which Dennis transacted.<sup>233</sup> Accordingly, Sonterra's and the FrontPoint Plaintiffs' claims under the CEA will be dismissed.

2. Dennis

HN38 [↑] In order to assert a CEA claim, a private plaintiff must meet the requirements of Section 22.<sup>234</sup> "These requirements used to be referred to as 'statutory standing,' but, to avoid incorrectly portraying them as jurisdictional requirements, they are now referred to as 'simply a question of whether the particular plaintiff has a cause of action under the statute.'"<sup>235</sup> Because Section 22 "limits a defendant's liability to 'actual damages,'" a private plaintiff must plausibly allege "actual injury [*72] caused by the violation in addition to the elements of whatever violation they allege in order to successfully state a claim."<sup>236</sup>

[*175] In order to plead actual injury, Dennis was obliged to allege plausibly that (1) he "transacted in at least one commodity contract at a price that was lower or higher than it otherwise would have been absent the defendant's manipulations," and (2) "the manipulated prices were to [his] detriment."<sup>237</sup>

Defendants argue that Dennis fails to meet the requirements of Section 22 because he has not pled that defendants' alleged manipulations affected either the price of his CME futures contracts or the price of a commodity underlying his CME futures contracts.<sup>238</sup> But as this Court has discussed in the context of constitutional and antitrust standing, this argument lacks merit at this stage. The amended complaint alleges that Dennis purchased and sold CME Australian dollar futures contracts that were priced, benchmarked and/or settled based on BBSW.<sup>239</sup> He has pled sufficiently that BBSW was a component of the price of the CME Australian dollar futures contracts in which he transacted. HN39↑ "Commodity and derivative contracts that index their price formulae to prices of other contracts [*73] are linked in a rule-based manner, and several cases in this circuit have found such a link to create a sufficient connection for CEA pleading purposes."<sup>240</sup>

Dennis alleges further that he purchased and sold these derivatives at artificial prices caused by defendants' manipulative conduct. For example, Dennis alleges that he had a net short position of one CME Australian dollar futures contract on November 22, 2010. On that day, defendant NAB allegedly was involved in manipulating BBSW artificially higher, causing Dennis to suffer a $170 net loss on his CME Australian dollar futures position.<sup>241</sup> These allegations are sufficient to state a plausible actual injury. He need not specify, at this early stage in the litigation, exactly which tenor of BBSW was manipulated nor explain precisely how the pricing relationship worked.<sup>242</sup> Dennis therefore meets the requirements of Section 22.

B. Plausible CEA Claims on Behalf of Dennis

That leaves for consideration the plausibility of Dennis' CEA claims alone.

Defendants argue that Dennis has failed to state a CEA claim for price manipulation. HN40↑ "The CEA prohibits manipulation of the price of any commodity or commodity future."<sup>243</sup> "While the CEA itself [*74] does not define the term, a court will find manipulation where '(1) Defendants possessed an ability to influence market prices; (2) an artificial price existed; (3) Defendants caused the artificial prices; and (4) Defendants specifically intended to [*176] cause the artificial price."<sup>244</sup> Defendants argue that Dennis' CEA claims must be dismissed because he fails to plead that defendants caused artificial prices and acted with the requisite intent.

As an initial matter, the Court concludes, and Dennis does not dispute, that his CEA claims sound in fraud.<sup>245</sup> HN41[] Whether or not the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9\(b\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure applies depends on the conduct alleged. The requirement that a plaintiff plead with particularity "is not limited to allegations styled or denominated as fraud or expressed in terms of the constituent elements of a fraud cause of action."<sup>246</sup> In this case, defendants are accused of trading Prime Bank Bills at uneconomic prices and knowingly submitting false mid-rates in order to artificially raise or lower BBSW rates and, consequently, collect illegitimate profits. These allegations suggest fraudulent conduct on defendants' part.<sup>247</sup> Accordingly, Dennis' CEA claims are subject [**75] to the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9\(b\).

HN43[] As noted earlier, a complaint subject to Rule 9\(b\) must "state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake."<sup>248</sup> In the context of manipulation claims, however, the Second Circuit has stated that although the Rule 9\(b\) pleading standard applies, because "[a] claim of manipulation . . . can involve facts solely within the defendant's knowledge," "at the early stages of litigation, the plaintiff need not plead manipulation to the same degree of specificity as a plain misrepresentation claim."<sup>249</sup> Rather, "a manipulation complaint must plead with particularity the nature, purpose, and effect of the fraudulent conduct and the roles of the defendants."<sup>250</sup>

HN44[] As to scienter, a plaintiff must show, at a minimum, that the defendant or defendants "acted (or failed to act) with the purpose or conscious object of causing or affecting a price or price trend in the market that did not reflect the legitimate forces of supply and demand."<sup>251</sup> Although "the requisite intent of the alleged perpetrator of the fraud need not be alleged [*177] with great specificity,"<sup>252</sup> a complaint must nonetheless, "allege facts that give rise to a strong inference of fraudulent [**76] intent."<sup>253</sup> Scienter "may be established either (a) by alleging facts to show that defendants had both motive and opportunity to commit fraud, or (b) by alleging facts that constitute strong circumstantial evidence of conscious misbehavior or recklessness."<sup>254</sup>

2. Liability

As noted above, plaintiffs first assert that all defendants are liable as principals — that is, that defendants themselves intentionally manipulated or caused to be manipulated the price of Dennis' CME Australian dollar futures by manipulating the BBSW rate set.<sup>255</sup>

Plaintiffs assert also principal-agent and aiding and abetting liability against each of the defendants.

"HN45 [A] claim for principal-agent liability requires that the agent was acting in the capacity of an agent when he or she committed the unlawful acts and that the agent's actions were within the scope of his or her employment."<sup>256</sup>

To be found liable for aiding and abetting, on the other hand, a defendant must "in some sort associate himself with the venture" — that is, "that he participate in it as in something that he wishes to bring about, that he seek by his action to make it succeed."<sup>257</sup> In the context of a CEA claim, then, a complaint bringing a claim for aiding [\*\*77] and abetting liability must allege that the "aider and abettor" knew that the primary violator intended to engage in price manipulation. "[A] complaint with weak allegations about a defendant's affirmative assistance may still state a claim for aiding and abetting if its allegations about the defendant's knowledge and intent are particularly strong, and vice versa."<sup>258</sup> "Accordingly, in evaluating a complaint alleging the aiding and abetting of a violation of the CEA, allegations about the defendant's knowledge, intent, and actions should not be evaluated in isolation, but rather in light of the complaint as a whole."<sup>259</sup>

(1) Bank Defendants

Dennis here makes extensive allegations as to the "nature, purpose, and effect" of the alleged fraudulent conduct — each defendant submitted false BBSW rates and engaged in uneconomic transactions to artificially increase or decrease BBSW, thereby increasing their respective profits on BBSW-Based Derivatives. Moreover, the amended complaint alleges motive and opportunity as to each defendant. The banks' common motive allegedly was to maximize their profits on their global [\*178] BBSW-Based Derivatives positions, and each bank, by virtue of participating [\*\*78] in Prime Bank Bill transactions had the opportunity to manipulate BBSW, regardless of whether the bank was on the BBSW Panel.

Many of the allegations in the amended complaint, however, attribute conduct and motivation to defendants as a group rather than to each of the twenty-nine named defendants.<sup>260</sup> HN46 In order to satisfy the particularity requirements of Rule 9\(b\), a complaint should articulate how each defendant is implicated in the alleged fraudulent conduct.

In contrast, the amended complaint [**79] makes either no or minimal mention [*179] of the remaining defendants — that is, the entities from the Royal Bank of Canada, Deutsche Bank, Lloyds, Macquarie, and Morgan Stanley. As to the entities from these five banks, Dennis' CEA claims will be dismissed.

(2) Broker Defendants

The allegations against the broker defendants are more limited. Both ICAP<sup>270</sup> and Tullett Prebon<sup>271</sup> are alleged to have facilitated large transactions in Prime Bank Bills for the bank defendants during the Fixing Window and provided information about the Prime Bank Bill market in exchange for large commission fees. These allegations are insufficient to support a CEA claim against the broker defendants.

There is no indication here that the employees mentioned in the amended complaint acted outside of the scope of their employment. Indeed, the profit-seeking motive alleged in the amended complaint would naturally benefit the institutions for which the employees worked.

The amended complaint sufficiently alleges aiding and abetting liability as well. Defendant banks allegedly knew that efforts to manipulate BBSW were widespread and shared information with one another to coordinate transactions and align interests. In addition, the banks facilitated other banks' manipulative trading by providing them with "ammunition" in order to be able sell off more Prime Bank Bills during a given Fixing Period. These acts of affirmative assistance and indications of knowledge and intent suffice to state a claim of aiding and abetting liability against the entities from the nine bank defendants mentioned above.

In In re Amaranth Natural Gas Commodities Litigation,<sup>272</sup> the Second Circuit considered Amaranth Advisors ("Amaranth"), a hedge fund that had been accused of accumulating large positions in natural gas futures and swaps and engaging in manipulative trading therewith. J.P. Futures had been accused of aiding and abetting Amaranth's manipulation of natural gas futures through its services as Amaranth's futures commission merchant and clearing broker. Specifically, the complaint alleged that J.P. Futures had processed and settled [**80] Amaranth's trades on the New York Mercantile Exchange ("NYMEX") and had earned over $32 million in commissions in twenty months from Amaranth's trading. By virtue of its position, J.P. Futures knew of Amaranth's positions and trading activity, including the positions that Amaranth took in respect of its allegedly manipulative trading strategies. J.P. Futures knew when Amaranth violated NYMEX positions limits or exceeded NYMEX accountability levels and knew that Amaranth was being investigated by both NYMEX and the CFTC. It nonetheless had continued to service all of Amaranth's trades, including those that put Amaranth's positions above applicable NYMEX position limits and accountability levels and those for which J.P. Futures had to bypass its own internal position limits.<sup>273</sup>

The Circuit there dismissed the CEA claim against J.P. Futures, concluding that the allegations that J.P. Futures had aided and abetted Amaranth in manipulating natural gas derivative prices were insufficient.<sup>274</sup> The court reasoned that (1) Amaranth's large positions on their own did not necessarily imply manipulation,<sup>275</sup> and (2) although the type of trading activity in which Amaranth had engaged was strongly suggestive [**81] of an intent to manipulate, J.P. Futures had not been alleged to have done anything more than provide "routine clearing firm services."<sup>276</sup> The Circuit concluded that, without alleging greater knowledge of the principal wrongdoing or more active involvement in that wrongdoing, the [*180] plaintiffs had failed to state a claim for aiding and abetting Amaranth against J.P. Futures.<sup>277</sup>

The amended complaint in this case, as it applies to the broker defendants, suffers from similar deficiencies. Although the brokers are alleged to have helped facilitate the bank defendants' manipulative trades in Prime Bank Bills, the amended complaint does not plead facts suggesting that the brokers specifically intended to manipulate BBSW rates. Indeed, the allegations do not assert anything other than the routine provision of brokerage services against either ICAP or Tullett Prebon. The amended complaint therefore fails to state a claim for liability as either a principal or an aider and abettor under the CEA against the broker defendants.

Moreover, even though J.P. HN47 [+] "It is a longstanding principle of American law that legislation of Congress, unless a contrary intent appears, is meant to apply only within the territorial [**82] jurisdiction of the United States."<sup>278</sup> Unless Congress clearly has expressed its affirmative intention to "give a statute extraterritorial effect, we must presume it is primarily concerned with domestic conditions."<sup>279</sup>

HN48 [+] The Supreme Court has articulated "a two-step framework" to analyze the issue of extraterritoriality:

"At the first step, we ask whether the presumption against extraterritoriality has been rebutted — that is, whether the statute gives a clear, affirmative indication that it applies extraterritorially. We must ask this question regardless of whether the statute in question regulates conduct, affords relief, or merely confers jurisdiction. If the statute is not extraterritorial, then at the second step we determine whether the case involves a domestic application of the statute, and we do this by looking to the statute's 'focus.' If the conduct relevant to the statute's focus occurred in the United States, then the case involves a permissible domestic application even if other conduct occurred abroad; but if the conduct relevant to the focus occurred in a foreign country, then the case involves an impermissible extraterritorial application regardless of any other conduct [**83] that occurred in U.S. territory."<sup>280</sup>

1. Presumption Against Extraterritoriality

HN49 [+] "The CEA as a whole . . . is silent as to extraterritorial reach."<sup>281</sup> Moreover, and unlike in the case of plaintiffs' federal antitrust claim, as to which the FTAIA provided a clear indication that Congress "endorsed an extraterritorial application of the Sherman Act,"<sup>282</sup> there is no statute indicating an intention by Congress to apply the CEA extraterritorially. Because the presumption against extraterritoriality has not been rebutted, we "presume [the CEA] is primarily concerned with domestic [*181] conditions."<sup>283</sup> It therefore is necessary to consider the "focus of congressional concern."<sup>284</sup>

2. Domestic Application

HN50 [+] In Morrison v. National Australia Bank Ltd.,<sup>285</sup> the Supreme Court held that the Securities Exchange Act had no extraterritorial application and concluded that no civil suit under Section 10(b) could be sustained unless predicated on a transaction involving (1) a security listed on a domestic exchange, or (2) a domestic purchase or sale of another security.<sup>286</sup> The Second Circuit subsequently concluded, in Absolute Activist Value Master Fund

Ltd. v. Ficeto,<sup>287</sup> that in order for a transaction to be "domestic" for purposes of the [**84] Securities Exchange Act and Morrison's second prong, either the parties must incur irrevocable liability or title to the securities must pass within the United States.<sup>288</sup>

The Second Circuit has extended both Morrison and Absolute Activist to the CEA, concluding that "Morrison's domestic transaction test in effect decides the territorial reach of CEA § 22"<sup>289</sup> and that a plaintiff bringing a CEA claim must "demonstrate that the transfer of title or the point of irrevocable liability for [the applicable transaction] occurred in the United States."<sup>290</sup> On the other hand, the Second Circuit has "never concluded . . . that Morrison's 'domestic exchange' prong applies to the CEA either to broaden or to narrow its extraterritorial reach."<sup>291</sup>

In this case, the BBSW-Based Derivatives in which Dennis transacted were traded on a domestic exchange — the CME. The relevant inquiry is whether Dennis thus has alleged sufficiently that his transactions in CME Australian dollar futures contracts occurred in the United States. The answer unmistakably is yes. But this is not the end of the inquiry.

In Parkcentral Global Hub Ltd. v. Porsche Automobile Holdings SE,<sup>292</sup> the Second Circuit considered a claim under Section 10\(b\) of the Securities [**85] Exchange Act involving swaps that allegedly were entered into in the United States but were linked to the prices of Volkswagen stock on European exchanges. The alleged fraud had been conducted by Porsche, which was accused of making statements and taking actions to deny and conceal its intention to take over Volkswagen. The plaintiffs there alleged that they had relied on these statements in entering into swaps that were economically equivalent to taking short positions in Volkswagen stock and that they were injured when the stock price of Volkswagen rose dramatically following Porsche's public announcement of its true intentions.<sup>293</sup> HN51[] The Circuit there concluded that "while [Morrison] unmistakably made a domestic securities transaction . . . necessary to a properly domestic invocation [*182] of § 10\(b\), such a transaction is not alone sufficient to state a properly domestic claim under the statute."<sup>294</sup> It then dismissed the complaint as "so predominantly foreign as to be impermissibly extraterritorial"<sup>295</sup> because "the imposition of liability under § 10\(b\) on these foreign defendants with no alleged involvement in plaintiffs' transactions, on the basis of the defendants' largely foreign conduct, for losses incurred [**86] by the plaintiffs in securities-based swap agreements based on the price movements of foreign securities would constitute an impermissibly extraterritorial extension of the statute."<sup>296</sup> The court reasoned that to hold otherwise "would require courts to apply the statute to wholly foreign activity clearly subject to regulation by foreign authorities solely because a plaintiff in the United States made a domestic transaction, even if the foreign defendants were completely unaware of it.<sup>297</sup>

Setting aside the open question of whether Parkcentral applies to claims brought under the CEA, the reasoning in that case weighs in favor of sustaining Dennis' CEA claims. Although the conduct alleged here largely occurred in Australia and was intended to affect a foreign benchmark interest rate, the amended complaint alleges that defendants engaged in the alleged manipulation in order to increase their returns on derivatives linked to BBSW. The conduct necessarily was intended to reach BBSW-Based Derivatives worldwide, including in the United States. In the Court's view, this distinguishes Parkcentral from this case. The defendants in Parkcentral allegedly engaged in fraud "with respect to stock [**87] in a German company traded only on exchanges in Europe" and even if the company's false statements had "been intended to deceive investors worldwide," the alleged fraud was effectuated in order to permit the take over of one foreign company by another.<sup>298</sup> The amended complaint here, on the other hand, alleges that the United States is a large market for BBSW-Based Derivatives.<sup>299</sup> In consequence, defendants' alleged actions plausibly depended on their impact on BBSW-Based Derivatives around the world, and in particular, in the United States. Dennis therefore has alleged a sufficiently domestic application of the CEA.<sup>300</sup>

[*183] V. RICO Act Claims

Plaintiffs assert two RICO counts against all defendants: a substantive RICO violation predicated on a pattern of wire fraud and a conspiracy to violate the RICO Act. HN52 [↑] 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) makes it unlawful:

"[F]or any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt."

It is unlawful also "for any person to conspire [**88] to violate [18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\)]."<sup>301</sup>

HN53 [↑] "Racketeering activity" includes violations of the wire fraud statute,<sup>302</sup> which makes it unlawful for anyone: "[H]aving devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, [to] transmit[] or cause[] to be transmitted by means of wire, radio, or television communication in interstate or foreign commerce, any writings, signs, signals, pictures, or sounds for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice.<sup>303</sup>

An "enterprise" is defined as "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity."<sup>304</sup> A pattern of racketeering activity requires at least two acts of racketeering activity to have been committed within ten years of one another.<sup>305</sup>

A. RICO Standing

HN54 [↑] A civil remedy under RICO is available to private plaintiffs who are "injured in [their] business or property by reason of a violation of [18 U.S.C. § 1962]."<sup>306</sup> This language 'has been construed to require that in order to merit standing, a civil RICO plaintiff must establish that the RICO violation at issue [**89] was a proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff's business or property for which redress is sought."<sup>307</sup> Because a plaintiff must show injury by the conduct constituting the violation of RICO, the injury must be caused by a pattern of racketeering activity violating section 1962 or by individual RICO predicate acts.<sup>308</sup>

Defendants argue only that "[t]he analysis for RICO standing mirrors that for antitrust standing . . . and [that] Plaintiffs' alleged injuries here are too indirect and speculative to support RICO standing for the same reasons that their alleged injuries fail to support antitrust [*184] standing."<sup>309</sup> But plaintiffs allege that they were deprived of at least some of the value of their BBSW-Based Derivatives and that this injury was caused by defendants' persistent manipulation of BBSW rates, which manipulation constituted a pattern of wire fraud. As discussed above, plaintiffs have alleged sufficiently that BBSW was a component of the price of the derivatives in which they transacted. To suggest that the manipulation of a component of the price of a derivative impacts the overall price and therefore the returns on such derivative requires no great leap of logic. It therefore [**90] was entirely foreseeable that systematic efforts to manipulate BBSW would in turn injure parties on the wrong end of the affected BBSW-Based Derivatives.

While plaintiffs Dennis, Sonterra, and FrontPoint Event Driven point to specific transactions in which they paid too much or received too little as a result of defendants' alleged misconduct, neither FrontPoint Financial Services Fund, L.P. nor FrontPoint Financial Horizons Fund, L.P. do so. Accordingly, plaintiffs Dennis, Sonterra, and FrontPoint Event Driven — whose alleged injuries were a foreseeable consequence of defendants' alleged RICO violations — have standing to bring their RICO claims. The RICO claims of the other plaintiffs will be dismissed.

HN55 [+] To state a claim for a violation of RICO, a complaint must allege that the defendant violated Section 1962 — that is, it must allege: "(1) that the defendant (2) through the commission of two or more acts (3) constituting a 'pattern' (4) of 'racketeering activity' (5) directly or indirectly invests in, or maintains an interest in, or participates in (6) an 'enterprise' (7) the activities of which affect interstate or foreign commerce."<sup>310</sup> Defendants assert that the amended [**91] complaint fails to allege either an enterprise or a pattern of predicate acts of racketeering.

1. Enterprise

HN56 [+] "[A]n association-in-fact enterprise is simply a continuing unit that functions with a common purpose."<sup>311</sup> Such an enterprise "must have a 'structure' exhibiting three features: a purpose, relationships among the individuals associated with the enterprise, and longevity sufficient to permit the associates to pursue the purpose of the enterprise."<sup>312</sup> "[F]or an association of individuals to constitute an enterprise, the individuals must share a common purpose to engage in a particular fraudulent course of conduct and work together to achieve such purposes."<sup>313</sup>

Defendants assert that the amended complaint fails to show that each of the defendants shared a common purpose to engage in fraud. Defendants argue also that amended complaint fails to show that the defendants worked together to achieve the fraudulent purpose and that each defendant knowingly participated in the such fraud with the requisite intent to [*185] harm.<sup>314</sup> The Court is not so persuaded.

Each of the three structural requirements for an association-in-fact are met. The amended complaint alleges that "defendants' collective [**92] association . . . acting as a trading bloc and engaging in secret collusive trades in the Prime Bank Bill market to manipulate BBSW" constituted a RICO enterprise.<sup>315</sup> The common purpose of the alleged enterprise was to manipulate BBSW as needed to increase profits on BBSW-Based Derivatives. This is sufficient to satisfy the first of the three structural requirements. The amended complaint alleges also that defendants associated with one another by sharing information and providing one another with Prime Bank Bills ahead of the Fixing Window to permit large trades. This satisfies the second structural requirement. Finally, with respect to longevity, the amended complaint alleges that these activities were ongoing for the duration of the Class Period.

The amended complaint, which alleges that defendants shared private information with one another, including their plans to drive BBSW rates in one direction or the other, and assisted one another in transacting large numbers of Prime Bank Bills, states a plausible claim that defendants actively participated in the alleged scheme to manipulate BBSW with the intention of profiting on their BBSW positions at the expense of unwitting counterparties. [**93] The amended complaint thus sufficiently alleges that defendants formed a RICO enterprise.

2. Pattern of Wire Fraud

Defendants challenge plaintiffs' RICO claims on the additional basis that plaintiffs fail to allege a pattern of racketeering.

HN57 [+] The wire fraud statute prohibits any use of interstate wires in furtherance of any fraudulent scheme. There are three elements of a wire fraud violation: "(1) a scheme to defraud, (2) money or property as the object of the scheme, and (3) use of . . . wires to further the scheme."<sup>316</sup> Because the predicate acts alleged in the amended complaint are wire fraud, plaintiffs' RICO claims are subject to the heightened pleading standard under Rule 9\(b\).<sup>317</sup> Accordingly, a RICO plaintiff "must plead the alleged [wire] fraud with particularity, and establish that the [communications] were in furtherance of a fraudulent scheme."<sup>318</sup>

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' RICO claims must be dismissed because they are grounded entirely on generalized allegations that each defendant engaged in acts of wire fraud in furtherance of the conspiracy.

HN58 [+] The Second Circuit has stated that generally in the RICO context, where mail or wire fraud are the alleged predicate acts, a "complaint [\[\*94\]](#) must adequately specify the statements it claims were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which plaintiff contends the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those [\[\*186\]](#) responsible for the statements."<sup>319</sup> However, as another judge in this district has stated previously:

"Courts in the Second Circuit have applied a different standard in cases where '[a] plaintiff claims that . . . mails or wires were simply used in furtherance of a master plan to defraud,' but does not allege that 'the communications [themselves] . . . contained false or misleading information.' In such cases, including 'complex civil RICO actions involving multiple defendants, Rule 9\(b\) does not require that the temporal or geographic particulars of each mailing or wire transmission made in furtherance of the fraudulent scheme be stated with particularity.' Instead, 'Rule 9\(b\) requires only that the plaintiff delineate with adequate particularity in the body of the complaint, the specific circumstances constituting the overall fraudulent scheme."<sup>320</sup>

Here, the amended complaint alleges that each defendant conspired to "engag[e] in secret collusive trades in the Prime [\[\*95\]](#) Bank Bill market to manipulate BBSW" and distort returns on BBSW-Based Derivatives.<sup>321</sup> In furtherance of this scheme, each defendant engaged in acts of wire fraud, including: (1) the transmission of artificial BBSW rates to Thomson Reuters in the United States, (2) the electronic transmission of confirmations for collusive transactions intended to manipulate BBSW, (3) causing the transmission and dissemination in the United States of the artificial BBSW rates by Thomson Reuters as agent for the AFMA, (4) causing the transmission and dissemination in the United States of distorted BBSW individual bank quotes by Thomson Reuters, (5) the transmission and dissemination of false bid and ask price quotes for BBSW-Based Derivatives within the United States, (6) electronic communications and instant messages containing manipulative requests that emanated from within the United States or were routed through electronic servers located within the United States, (7) sending out trade confirmations based on manipulated and false BBSW rates to counterparties within the United States, and (8) sending communications to encourage, negotiate or complete the sale or purchase of price-fixed BBSW-based financial [**96] instruments to counterparties within the United States.<sup>322</sup>

These allegations, however, are largely generalized to all defendants and to that extent are insufficient to meet the pleading standard. HN59 [↑] Although the amended complaint need not list every single allegedly fraudulent use of interstate wires involved in the overall scheme, it nonetheless is necessary to "inform each defendant of the nature of his alleged participation in the fraud."<sup>323</sup>

[*187] As discussed above, the amended complaint sets forth detailed allegations that traders at ANZ, Westpac, NAB, HSBC, CBA, and Credit Suisse bought and sold large numbers of Prime Bank Bills during the Fixing Window in order to move BBSW in a profitable direction and that traders at UBS, RBS, and BNP Paribas who were in charge of submitting BBSW mid-rates to AFMA solicited rate submission requests from their colleagues who traded in BBSW-Based Derivatives. Although the instances of alleged manipulative transactions and submissions of false BBSW rates are not alleged in great detail, these allegations serve at least to inform the defendant entities from these banks of the "nature of [their] alleged participation in the fraud." As to these defendants, the [**97] amended complaint has alleged racketeering activity sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss. As to the remaining bank defendants — that is, the defendant entities from the Royal Bank of Canada, Deutsche Bank, Lloyds, Macquarie, and Morgan Stanley — plaintiffs' RICO claims are dismissed. Similarly, although ICAP and Tullett Prebon are alleged to have facilitated large transactions in Prime Bank Bills for the bank defendants during the Fixing Window and provided information about the Prime Bank Bill market in exchange for large commission fees, there are no well-pled factual allegations in the amended complaint that either entity acted with specific intent to engage in the alleged fraudulent scheme.

Accordingly, the substantive RICO cause of action is sustained against the defendant entities from ANZ, Westpac, NAB, HSBC, CBA, Credit Suisse, UBS, RBS, and BNP Paribas. Plaintiffs' substantive RICO claims will be dismissed as to the remaining defendants.

C. RICO Conspiracy

Defendants next argue that plaintiffs have failed to state a claim of a RICO conspiracy because the amended complaint does not allege a conscious agreement among defendants to violate RICO.<sup>324</sup>

HN60 [↑] "The core of a RICO conspiracy [**98] is an agreement to commit predicate acts, and a RICO civil conspiracy complaint must specifically allege such an agreement."<sup>325</sup> Allegations of a conspiracy:

"[M]ust set forth specific facts tending to show that each of the defendants entered into an agreement to conduct the affairs of a particular, identified enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity — not simply that each defendant committed two or more acts that would qualify as predicate acts, without regard to whether those acts were committed in furtherance of the activity of the enterprise."<sup>326</sup>

Defendants rely largely on Elsevier Inc. v. W.H.P.R., Inc.<sup>327</sup> in which the district court considered a RICO conspiracy claim against a group of individual defendants who allegedly had purchased academic journals from the plaintiff at the discounted price for individuals, rather than the higher price for institutions, and then resold those journals to institutions at a profit. The court there concluded that the conspiracy claim could not survive a motion to dismiss because the complain "contain[ed] nothing more than a conclusory allegation of an agreement among defendants and a further allegation that each of the individual defendants [**99] committed certain discrete [*188] acts of fraud."<sup>328</sup> Here in contrast, plaintiffs allege cooperation among defendants — including through the exchange of information and the provision of "ammunition" to help one another execute manipulative Prime Bank Bill transactions. These allegations amounted to a plausible claim that the defendants had formed an antitrust conspiracy and are sufficient also to state a claim that they were part of a RICO conspiracy. Accordingly, plaintiffs' RICO conspiracy claims also are sustained against the defendant entities from ANZ, Westpac, NAB, HSBC, CBA, Credit Suisse, UBS, RBS, and BNP Paribas and dismissed as to the remaining defendants.

D. Extraterritoriality

Finally, defendants assert that plaintiffs' RICO claims should be dismissed as impermissibly extraterritorial. The Court proceeds through the two-step inquiry set forth in Morrison.

1. Presumption Against Extraterritoriality

HN61 In RJR Nabisco, Inc. v. European Community,<sup>329</sup> the Supreme Court concluded that "Congress intended the [§ 1962(c)] prohibition . . . to apply extraterritorially in tandem with the underlying predicates, without regard to the locus of the enterprise."<sup>330</sup> Accordingly, a RICO claim may be based on foreign [**100] racketeering activity only if the predicate act(s) underlying the claim apply extraterritorially.<sup>331</sup> The predicate acts alleged in this case all are instances of wire fraud.<sup>332</sup> In RJR Nabisco, the Second Circuit considered whether Congress had manifested an intent that the federal wire fraud statute<sup>333</sup> apply extraterritorially and concluded that it had not.<sup>334</sup> The presumption against extraterritoriality therefore is not rebutted and the Court next considers whether plaintiffs nonetheless have alleged a domestic application of the RICO Act.

<sup>331</sup> The Supreme Court there held also that "[i]rrespective of any extraterritorial application of § 1962 . . . § 1964(c) does not overcome the presumption against extraterritoriality." Therefore, "[a] private RICO plaintiff . . . must allege and prove a domestic injury to its business or property." Id. at 2106 (emphasis omitted). This point is not in contention in this case and, in any event, is sufficiently alleged. See Bascunan v. Elsaca, 874 F.3d 806 \(2d Cir. 2017\) (alleged scheme in which defendant misappropriated funds held in New York bank account owned by plaintiff alleged a domestic injury to property).

Whether plaintiffs have alleged a domestic RICO claim presents a close question. HN62<sup>335</sup> The Second Circuit has not "decide[d] precisely how to draw the line between domestic and extraterritorial applications of the wire fraud statute."<sup>335</sup> In RJR Nabisco, for example, the Second Circuit stated that "[i]f domestic conduct satisfies every essential element to prove a violation of a United States statute that does not apply extraterritorially, that statute is violated even if some further conduct contributing to the violation occurred outside [**189] the United States."<sup>336</sup> And in Norex Petroleum Ltd. v. Access Industries, Inc.,<sup>337</sup> in which a RICO complaint alleging that a group of foreign defendants had engaged in a racketeering conspiracy in order to acquire control over a Russian company in which the plaintiff had been a majority shareholder was dismissed as impermissibly extraterritorial, the Circuit stated only that:

"[S]imply alleging that some domestic conduct occurred cannot support a claim of domestic application. 'It is a rare case of prohibited extraterritorial application that lacks all contact with the territory of the United States.' [Morrison, 561 U.S. at 266 (emphasis in the original).] The slim contacts with the United States alleged by Norex are insufficient to support extraterritorial application of the RICO statute."<sup>338</sup>

Defendants here assert that the amended complaint fails to plead a domestic RICO claim because it "lacks any specific allegations concerning activities in (or directed at) the U.S."<sup>339</sup> Plaintiffs respond that the amended complaint alleges a domestic application of the wire fraud statute because all of the elements of wire fraud — that is, the formation of a scheme to defraud victims of money or other property and the use of interstate or foreign wire communications in furtherance of such scheme — [\[\*\*102\]](#) occurred within the United States or while crossing U.S. borders. The amended complaint alleges specifically that defendants' domestic conduct involved: (1) "transmitting or causing to be transmitted artificial BBSW rates in the United States or while crossing U.S. borders through electronic servers located in the United States;" (2) "transmitting or causing to be transmitting false and artificial BBSW submissions that were relied on by Thomson Reuters and the AFMA in collecting, calculating, publishing, and/or disseminating the daily BBSW rates that were transmitted, published, and disseminated in the United States or while crossing U.S. borders through electronic servers located in the United States;" and (3) "transmitting or causing to be transmitted confirmations for fraudulent transactions intended to impact BBSW in the U.S. or while crossing U.S. borders through servers located in the United States."<sup>340</sup>

As discussed above, however, plaintiffs' RICO claims in significant part are not pled with sufficient particularity. Indeed, plaintiffs' allegations of domestic conduct are entirely generalized. To the extent that plaintiffs assert well-pled factual allegations in support of their [\[\*\*103\]](#) RICO claims, the allegations consist solely of activity that took place in Australia.

This Court considered the extraterritoriality question in Chevron Corporation v. Donzinger.<sup>341</sup> It there considered the various approaches that had been taken by federal courts and ultimately found persuasive the analysis articulated in CGC Holding Company v. Hutchens.<sup>342</sup>

HN63 [+] In CGC Holding, the district court had rejected the contention that a RICO claim was impermissibly extraterritorial simply because "some of the participants in the enterprise reside[d] outside the United States."<sup>343</sup> Rather, the court held, "[t]he [*190] focus of the statute is the racketeering activity, i.e., to render unlawful a pattern of domestic racketeering activity perpetrated by an enterprise."<sup>344</sup> It then concluded that although most of the enterprise participants had resided in Canada, the plaintiffs had stated a domestic claim because the racketeering activity had been "directed at and largely occurred within the United States." The defendants had "allegedly used telephone, mail, and email communications directed to potential borrowers in the United States" and traveled to the United States for purposes of the scheme. The court therefore concluded [**104] that the allegations in CGC Holding were "a far cry from those of Norex . . . where the actors, victims and conduct were foreign, and the connection to the United States was essentially incidental" because in CGC Holding, "the conduct of the enterprise within the United States was a key to its success."<sup>345</sup>

As this Court concluded in Chevron, the approach taken in CGC Holding appeals because it "afford[s] a remedy to a U.S. plaintiff who claims injury caused by domestic acts of racketeering activity without regard to the nationality or foreign character of the defendants or the enterprise," is "consistent with the Supreme Court's and [the Second] Circuit's repeated recognition that 'the heart of any RICO complaint is the allegation of a pattern of racketeering,'" and seems to be "consistent with Congressional intent, which included protecting American victims at least against injury caused by the conduct of the affairs of enterprises through patterns of racketeering activity that occur in this country."<sup>346</sup> Applying this analysis to the alleged racketeering activity in Chevron, this Court readily concluded that the complaint had stated a domestic RICO claim because "[t]he scheme (1) allegedly [**105] was conceived and orchestrated in and from the United States (2) in order wrongfully to obtain money from a company organized under the laws of and headquartered in the United States, and to cover up unlawful and improper activities, and (3) acts in its furtherance were committed here by Americans and in Ecuador by both Americans and Ecuadoreans."<sup>347</sup>

This focus on the alleged racketeering activity, rather than the location of the enterprise, has been endorsed in the Second Circuit which, in Petroleos Mexicanos v. SK Engineering and Construction Company,<sup>348</sup> affirmed the dismissal of a civil RICO complaint involving bribes to approve overrun and expense payments in the course of an oil refinery rehabilitation project abroad. The complaint had alleged three contacts with the United States, namely, that the financing was obtained in the United States, the invoices were sent to the bank for payment, and the bank issued payment. There were no allegations that the scheme was directed from or to the United States and the primary activities involved in the alleged scheme — that is, falsifying the invoices, making the bribes, and approving the false invoices — had taken place outside of the United States. [**106] On this basis, the Circuit concluded that the allegations of domestic conduct were "simply insufficient" to sustain RICO jurisdiction.<sup>349</sup>

In this case, the conduct underlying the alleged scheme, including the facilitation of [*191] manipulative transactions and submission of false BBSW rates, took place entirely outside of the United States. It perhaps is not unexpected that several courts in this district have dismissed RICO claims in other benchmark rate manipulation cases alleging nearly identical domestic conduct.<sup>350</sup>

Respectfully, this Court parts with those cases. Unlike in Petroleos, in which there were no allegations that the scheme was directed to or from the United States, the ultimate goal of the scheme alleged here — that is, affecting the prices of and returns on BBSW-Based Derivatives — necessarily implicated the worldwide market for such derivatives. Plaintiffs allege that the United States is among the largest markets for BBSW-Based Derivatives. It thus is reasonable to infer that the scheme largely was "directed to" the United States. Accordingly, although the conduct involved in the alleged conspiracy to manipulate BBSW generally is alleged [**107] to have taken place outside of the United States, the Court is not now in a position to dismiss plaintiffs' RICO claims as extraterritorial. Defendants' alleged scheme at least plausibly was directed at the United States, and the amended complaint therefore states a plausible domestic RICO claim.

VI. Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

Plaintiffs' first state claim is against defendants Macquarie Bank, Morgan Stanley, Credit Suisse, Deutsche Bank AG, and UBS for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The amended complaint alleges that the FrontPoint Plaintiffs entered into binding contracts with Macquarie Bank, Credit Suisse, Deutsche Bank AG, and UBS and that Sonterra entered into binding contracts with Morgan Stanley, in each case, in connection with transactions for BBSW-Based Derivatives.<sup>351</sup>

HN64 "[I]mplicit in all contracts is a covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the course of contract performance. . . . Encompassed within the implied obligation of each promisor to exercise good faith are any promises which a reasonable person in the position of the promisee would be justified in understanding were included. This embraces a pledge that [**108] neither party shall do anything which will have the effect of destroying or [*192] injuring the right of the other party to receive the fruits of the contract."<sup>352</sup>

<sup>350</sup> See, e.g., Sonterra Capital Master Fund, Ltd., 277 F. Supp. 3d at 582 ("That the alleged goal of the conspiracy was to increase worldwide profits, including profits generated in the United States, cannot render 'domestic' a scheme that was otherwise centered abroad. Nor can the fact that the CHF LIBOR fixes were distributed worldwide, including into the United States, or that defendants carried out their manipulation from abroad through servers that happened to route their communications in the United States."); FrontPoint Asian Event Driven Fund, L.P. v. Citibank, N.A., No. 16 Civ. 5263 (AKH), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132759, 2017 WL 3600425, at *14-15 (S.D.N.Y. LEXIS 25756, 2017 WL 685570, at *33 (concluding that "generalized allegations about the defendants' use of interstate wires to coordinate the Euribor scheme" did not suffice to state a domestic RICO claim); Laydon v. Mizuho Bank, Ltd., No. 12 Civ. 3419 (GBD), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44126, 2015 WL 1515487, at *8-9 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2015) (rejecting similar contacts as "far too attenuated" and distinguishing RJR Nabisco "where the scheme was allegedly both managed from and directed at the U.S." (emphasis omitted)).

While the amended complaint does not allege which law governs plaintiffs' state law claims, there is no dispute that New York law is applicable to both. DI 134 at 44-45, DI 156 at 36.

Although the amended complaint alleges that the FrontPoint Plaintiffs contracted with Deutsche Bank, UBS, and Credit Suisse in "Australian dollar-denominated swaps,"<sup>353</sup> it is not clear from the pleading whether these swaps were linked to BBSW. In addition there are no well-pleaded factual allegations in respect of either FrontPoint Financial Services Fund, L.P.'s or FrontPoint Financial Horizons Fund, L.P.'s supposed contracts with Macquarie Bank. In contrast, the amended complaint sufficiently alleges transactions in BBSW-Based Derivatives between FrontPoint Event Driven and Macquarie Bank Ltd. and between Sonterra and Morgan Stanley, although the amended complaint does not specify whether Sonterra transacted with Morgan Stanley or Morgan Stanley Australia Limited.<sup>354</sup>

FrontPoint Event Driven and Sonterra seek damages from defendants Macquarie Bank Ltd. and Morgan Stanley for their respective breaches of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing by (1) "intentionally manipulating BBSW for the express purpose [**109] of generating illicit profits from its BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives, and (2) conspiring with other Defendants to manipulate BBSW and the prices of BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives."<sup>355</sup> It is plausible that in allegedly manipulating BBSW rates, defendants Macquarie Bank Ltd. and Morgan Stanley interfered with FrontPoint Event Driven and Sonterra's respective reasonable expectations that they would enjoy the maximum returns permitted by market forces on their BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions. Their claims for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing as to Macquarie Bank Ltd. and the Morgan Stanley defendants are, accordingly, sustained. The remaining claims for breach of this implied covenant will be dismissed.

VII. Unjust Enrichment

Plaintiffs' final claim asserts unjust enrichment against all defendants.

HN65† As discussed above, a plaintiff alleging unjust enrichment under New York law "must show 'that (1) the other party was enriched, (2) at that party's expense, and (3) that "it is against equity and good conscience to permit [the other party] to retain what is sought to be recovered'."<sup>356</sup> "The 'essence' of such a claim [*193] 'is that one party has received money or a benefit at [**110] the expense of another.'"<sup>357</sup> Accordingly, "courts require proof that the defendant received a 'specific and direct benefit' from the property sought to be recovered, rather than an 'indirect benefit,'"<sup>358</sup> which in turn requires that a plaintiff allege some kind of relationship or connection to that defendant.<sup>359</sup> (quoting Georgia Malone & Co., 19 N.Y.3d at 516 (quoting Sperry, 8 N.Y.3d at 215-16)) (internal quotation marks omitted)).

On this basis, plaintiffs' claims of unjust enrichment are dismissed as to all defendants except Macquarie Bank Ltd. and Morgan Stanley, with which FrontPoint Event Driven and Sonterra respectively allege having engaged in BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions directly. As discussed above with respect to plaintiffs' claims for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the amended complaint fails to sufficiently allege a relationship or connection between any other defendant and plaintiff.

Plaintiffs allege that Morgan Stanley and Macquarie Bank Ltd. colluded with the other defendants to manipulate BBSW and the prices of BBSW-Based Derivatives to ensure that they would have an unfair advantage in the marketplace. Defendants "financially benefitted from their unlawful acts . . . by, inter alia, (i) coordinating the manipulation of BBSW . . . [**111] . ; and (ii) acting as a trading bloc and engaging in secret, collusive trades in the swap market to manipulate BBSW."<sup>360</sup> As a result, plaintiffs "received, upon execution or settlement of their trades [in BBSW-Based Derivatives], less in value than they would have received absent Defendants' wrongful conduct."<sup>361</sup>

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims against Morgan Stanley and Macquarie Bank Ltd. must be dismissed because the subject matter in dispute is governed by an existing contract.<sup>362</sup> HN67 It is true that "[w]here the parties executed a valid and enforceable written contract governing a particular subject matter, recovery on a theory of unjust enrichment for events arising out of that subject matter is ordinarily precluded."<sup>363</sup> A plaintiff may proceed on the "quasi-contract theory of unjust enrichment" [*194] only "where the contract does not cover the dispute in issue."<sup>364</sup> In order for a contract to "cover the dispute in issue" and thus bar a plaintiff's quasi-contract claims, however, the contract "must specifically address" the actions that gave rise to the dispute.<sup>365</sup> That is to say, the contract must "clearly cover[] the dispute between the parties."<sup>366</sup>

Other courts in this district have interpreted this rule narrowly and, facing claims of unjust enrichment on similar factual allegations, denied motions to dismiss. In LIBOR II,<sup>367</sup> for example, the court considered whether the plaintiffs' claims for unjust enrichment on the basis of the defendants' alleged manipulation of LIBOR were precluded by the existence of swap contracts between those plaintiffs and defendants. The court concluded that "although the swap contracts clearly required defendants to pay plaintiffs the prescribed floating rate of return using

. . . LIBOR . . . , the contracts did not 'clearly cover[]' the subject matter now at issue, namely whether defendants were permitted to manipulate LIBOR itself and thereby depress the amount they were required to pay plaintiffs."<sup>368</sup>

The Court now adopts this reasoning and concludes that dismissal of plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims would be premature at this early stage in the litigation. It certainly is plausible that the alleged contracts between FrontPoint Event Driven and Macquarie Bank Ltd. and between Sonterra and Morgan Stanley did not "clearly cover" the manipulation of the benchmark rate underlying the [**113] derivatives that were the subject of the contracts. Defendants' motion with respect to plaintiffs' claims of unjust enrichment therefore is denied against the Morgan Stanley defendants and Macquarie Bank Ltd. and granted as to the remaining defendants.

VIII. Fraudulent Concealment

Defendants' final argument in respect of their motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is that each of plaintiffs' claims (except for their RICO claims) is untimely.

A. Antitrust Claims

HN68 [↑] The statute of limitation to bring a private antitrust action is four years.<sup>369</sup> Plaintiffs filed their complaint on August 16, 2016, which means that conduct predating August 16, 2012 would fall outside of the limitations period, setting aside any questions of continuing violation and equitable tolling. The amended complaint alleges that the limitations period tolled "because of fraudulent concealment involving both active acts of concealment by Defendants and inherently self-concealing conduct." [*195]<sup>370</sup> Defendants argue that plaintiffs allege no injuries after July 1, 2011 and fail to plead fraudulent concealment with the requisite particularity.<sup>371</sup>

HN69 [↑] The Court will not dismiss plaintiffs' claims on statute of limitations grounds at the [**114] pleading stage unless the "complaint clearly shows the claim is out of time."<sup>372</sup>

"[A]n antitrust plaintiff may prove fraudulent concealment sufficient to toll the running of the statute of limitations if he establishes (1) that the defendant concealed from him the existence of his cause of action, (2) that he remained in ignorance of that cause of action until some point within four years of the commencement of his action, and (3) that his continuing ignorance was not attributable to lack of diligence on his part."<sup>373</sup>

A plaintiff may allege fraudulent concealment "by showing either that the defendant took affirmative steps to prevent the plaintiff's discovery of his claim or injury or that the wrong itself was of such a nature as to be self-concealing."<sup>374</sup>

In State of New York v. Hendrickson Brothers, Inc.,<sup>375</sup> the Second Circuit concluded that a bid-rigging conspiracy allegedly involving multiple defendants and lasting for over a year was an "inherently self-concealing fraud" such that "proof of the conspiracy itself sufficed to prove concealment by the coconspirators."<sup>376</sup> The Circuit there reasoned that because a bid-rigging conspiracy was the "kind of enterprise that requires a number of participants" [**115] and, in order to incentivize each participate, needed to secure "agreement as to a number of contracts," such a conspiracy necessarily had to last for a prolonged period of time. "In order to endure, it [had to] remain concealed from the victim of the collusive bids."<sup>377</sup>

Plaintiffs make similar allegations here. They highlight defendants' alleged use of private communications through instant messaging to ensure that their efforts to manipulate BBSW rates would remain concealed. As a result, plaintiffs argue, they had "no knowledge of Defendants' unlawful and self-concealing manipulative acts and could not have discovered same by exercise of due diligence prior to the time of public disclosures reporting the manipulation of BBSW."<sup>378</sup>

Defendants next argue that plaintiffs were on notice of their claims by the time that ASIC announced its enforceable undertakings related to BBSW from UBS, BNP Paribas, and RBS, which were accepted between December 19, 2012 and July 21, 2014.<sup>379</sup> But defendants did not admit any wrongdoing in those earlier settlements.<sup>380</sup> Plaintiffs argue that they could [*196] not have been put on notice from these settlements that any other banks were involved in manipulating BBSW or [**116] that there was a widespread conspiracy to manipulate BBSW.<sup>381</sup> They argue that they were not on notice until the subsequent statements of claim were issued against ANZ, NAB, and Westpac in 2016.<sup>382</sup> Indeed, it was at that point that ASIC released the communications between defendants upon which plaintiffs relied in their complaint. Plaintiffs thus have alleged a plausible basis to find that their complaint was timely. They are entitled to an opportunity to prove fraudulent concealment at trial or, at least, adduce a fuller record on a motion for summary judgment.

B. CEA Claims

HN70 [¶] A claim for a violation of the CEA must be brought within two years.<sup>383</sup> "A cause of action arises under the CEA when a party is placed on inquiry notice of the violation,"<sup>384</sup> which occurs "when the circumstances would suggest to an investor of ordinary intelligence the probability that she has been defrauded."<sup>385</sup> Plaintiffs again argue that they were not put on inquiry notice until ASIC filed its notice of claims against ANZ, NAB, and Westpac in 2016.<sup>386</sup> For the reasons discussed above, these allegations are sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss.

C. State Law Claims

HN71[] Finally, the statutes of limitations for claims of breach [**117] of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and unjust enrichment are six years,<sup>387</sup> and generally "begin[] to run from the time when liability for wrong has arisen even though the injured party may be ignorant of the existence of the wrong or injury."<sup>388</sup> Defendants again argue that plaintiffs failed to plead fraudulent concealment. For the reasons discussed above, this argument is unavailing. It would be premature at this stage to dismiss plaintiffs' state law claims as untimely.

IX. Personal Jurisdiction

The Court now turns to the Foreign Defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and improper venue.

HN72[] "In order to survive a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, a plaintiff must make a prima facie showing that jurisdiction exists."<sup>389</sup> "Such a showing entails making legally sufficient allegations of jurisdiction, including an averment of facts that, if credited[,] would suffice to establish jurisdiction over the [*197] defendant."<sup>390</sup> In determining whether the requisite showing has been made, the Court "construe[s] the pleadings and any supporting materials in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs." [**118]<sup>391</sup>

A. Personal Jurisdiction Arising From Defendants' Contacts

HN73[] Three requirements must be met in order for a court to exercise personal jurisdiction lawfully: "First, the plaintiff's service of process upon the defendant must have been procedurally proper. Second, there must be a statutory basis for personal jurisdiction that renders such service of process effective. . . . Third, the exercise of personal jurisdiction must comport with constitutional due process principles."<sup>392</sup>

There being no dispute as to the first of these three pleading requirements, the Court turns to the remaining requirements.

1. Statutory Basis

HN74 [↑] "A plaintiff 'must establish the court's jurisdiction with respect to each claim asserted.'"<sup>393</sup> "For an out-of-state defendant in a federal question case, 'federal courts apply the forum state's personal jurisdiction rules if the applicable federal statute does not provide for national service of process.'"<sup>394</sup> Plaintiffs here assert federal claims under three federal statutes: the Clayton Act, the CEA, and the RICO Act, each of which provides for national service of process in certain circumstances.<sup>395</sup>

The only challenge to the statutory basis for personal jurisdiction is brought by the Venue Defendants in respect of plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims under the Clayton Act.<sup>396</sup> HN77 [↑] Section 12 of the [*198] Clayton Act provides for national service of process as follows:

"Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found."<sup>397</sup>

"Because the service of process [**120] provision applies only to 'such cases' described in the preceding clause, the Second Circuit has concluded that nationwide service of process is permissible 'only in cases in which its venue provision is satisfied'"<sup>398</sup> The Venue Defendants, characterizing this argument as a motion for improper venue, argue that "Plaintiffs cannot demonstrate proper venue under the Clayton Act" and therefore "cannot establish personal jurisdiction [as to their federal antitrust claim] over Venue Defendants."<sup>399</sup> Plaintiffs respond to defendants'

"Process in such action may be served in any judicial district of which the defendant [**119] is an inhabitant or wherever the defendant may be found." 7 U.S.C. § 25\(c\); see also Sullivan, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25756, 2017 WL 685570, at \*42.

HN76 [↑] The RICO Act provides for national service of process where "the 'ends of justice' so require," PT United Can Co. v. Crown Cork & Seal Co., 138 F.3d 65, 70-71 \(2d Cir. 1998\); Elsevier Inc., 692 F. Supp. 2d at 314-15, as follows:

"In any action under section 1964 of this chapter in any district court of the United States in which it is shown that the ends of justice require that other parties residing in any other district be brought before the court, the court may cause such parties to be summoned, and process for that purpose may be served in any judicial district of the United States by the marshal thereof." 18 U.S.C. § 1965\(b\).

<sup>396</sup> Although the Foreign Defendants challenge also the statutory basis for plaintiffs' assertion of conspiracy jurisdiction, the Court need not reach this question because, as discussed below, plaintiffs have failed to make a prima facie showing of jurisdiction under a conspiracy jurisdiction theory.

challenge only by arguing that the Clayton's Act's venue provision "supplements, and does not restrict" the general venue statute codified in 28 U.S.C. § 1391.<sup>400</sup>

HN78 [↑] Plaintiffs' argument falls short. The first part of Section 12 of the Clayton Act, which permits "[a]ny suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation [to] be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business," is indeed an expanded venue provision.<sup>401</sup> But the operative language for purposes of personal jurisdiction is found in the second half of the statute — that is, the service provision, which states that "all process [**121] in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found."<sup>402</sup> The Second Circuit has construed "in such cases" in accordance with its plain language. As such, jurisdiction lies only in cases in which the venue provision of Section 12, not the general venue statute, is satisfied.<sup>403</sup>

Although plaintiffs fail to brief the issue, the Court considers whether the amended complaint has sufficiently alleged that the Venue Defendants satisfy the venue provision of Section 12 — that is, whether the amended complaint has sufficiently alleged that they "transact business" in the Southern District of New York.<sup>404</sup>

HN79 [↑] Under the Clayton Act, the nationwide service of process provision applies only where the action has been brought in a district "wherein [the defendant] may be found or transacts business."<sup>405</sup> "The Supreme Court has construed the phrase 'transacts business,' as used in the venue provision of Clayton Act Section 12, to refer to 'the practical, everyday business or commercial concept of doing business or carrying on business of any [*199] substantial character.'"<sup>406</sup> However, "[f]or a defendant to transact business of any substantial character, there must be 'some amount of business continuity [**122] and certainly more than a few isolated and peripheral contacts with the particular judicial district."<sup>407</sup> The nature and amount of a defendant's contacts in a judicial district are to be "considered in light of the nature of [the defendant's] business."<sup>408</sup>

There are no allegations in the amended complaint that HSBC Holdings plc, HSBC Bank Australia Limited, ICAP plc, ICAP Australia Pty Ltd., Lloyds Banking Group plc, Morgan Stanley Australia Limited, The Royal Bank of Scotland Group plc, RBS N.V., RBS Group (Australia) Pty Limited, Tullett Prebon plc, and Tullett Prebon (Australia) Pty Ltd. — that is, eleven out of the fourteen Venue Defendants — transacted any business in New York. Allegations that certain of these defendants are parent companies of subsidiaries that transact business in New York do not suffice to show that the parent companies transact business in New York.<sup>409</sup> As to these defendants, the venue provision of Section 12 of the Clayton Act is not satisfied and the federal antitrust claims will be dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction.

As to the remaining Venue Defendants, the limited allegations in the amended complaint are unavailing. First, the amended complaint alleges [\[\*\*123\]](#) that Credit Suisse Group AG "is a Swiss banking and financial services company incorporated in Switzerland" and that one of its six primary offices is located at 11 Madison Avenue, New York, NY, 10010.<sup>410</sup> This allegation, however, is challenged directly by the declaration of Daniel Kläy, Director of Credit Suisse Group AG, which states that Credit Suisse Group AG "has no offices in the United States and no employees in the United States" and that its "only connection to the United States is that it has subsidiaries that are located in or do business in the United States."<sup>411</sup> Indeed, a review of SEC filings indicates that Credit Suisse Group AG is "not an operating company" and merely "holds investments in subsidiaries."<sup>412</sup> This does not amount to "transacting business" in the Southern District of New York.

The amended complaint next alleges that the Royal Bank of Scotland plc "maintains a Foreign Representative Office, registered [\[\*200\]](#) with the NYSDF, . . . at 340 Madison Avenue, New York, New York," and that its U.S. headquarters is located in Connecticut.<sup>413</sup> However, plaintiffs allege no specific activities conducted by any such Foreign Representative Office and the declaration of William Gougherty alleges [\[\*\*124\]](#) that this entity's presence in the United States "consists of a single branch office located in Stamford, Connecticut and a license for a representative office in Jersey City, New Jersey."<sup>414</sup> Left with these minimal allegations, the Court concludes that plaintiffs have not sustained their burden to show that Royal Bank of Scotland plc "transacts business" in the Southern District of New York.

Finally, the amended complaint alleges that Macquarie Group Ltd. is a global banking and diversified financial services corporation headquartered in Sydney, Australia. The only allegation connecting Macquarie Group Ltd. to the Southern District of New York is that it "recruits students in the [Southern District of New York] for its New York offices."<sup>415</sup> This allegation does not sufficiently allege venue for purposes of Section 12. There are no allegations in the amended complaint as to the regularity of such recruitment. Nor does the amended complaint allege that Macquarie Group Ltd. has an office located in New York. Moreover, Macquarie Group is a banking corporation, and there is no indication in the amended complaint that the alleged recruitment efforts comprise a substantial component of the company's business. efforts evidence the "practical, everyday business or commercial concept of doing business or carrying on business of any substantial character."<sup>416</sup>

For the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that it cannot exercise personal jurisdiction with respect to plaintiffs' antitrust claims over the Venue Defendants. These claims therefore will be dismissed.

2. Due Process

Having dismissed plaintiffs' antitrust claims against the Venue Defendants, the Court next considers whether its exercise of personal jurisdiction with respect to (1) plaintiffs' CEA, RICO Act, and state law claims against the Venue Defendants, and (2) all of plaintiffs' claims against the Foreign Defendants other than the Venue Defendants would "comport[] with due process protections established under the United States Constitution."<sup>417</sup>

HN80 [+] "The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment contains a State's authority to bind a nonresident defendant to a judgment of its courts."<sup>418</sup> Accordingly, "the touchstone due process principle has been that, before a court may exercise jurisdiction over a person or an organization, such as a bank, that person or entity must have sufficient 'minimum contacts' with the [**126] forum 'such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend "traditional [*201] notions of fair play and substantial justice.'"<sup>419</sup> "[T]he quality and nature of the defendant's contacts with the forum state" are evaluated "under a totality of the circumstances test."<sup>420</sup> However, "[i]n a federal question case, the manner in which district courts assess whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction comports with constitutional due process varies depending on the asserted statutory basis."<sup>421</sup>

HN81 [+] The Supreme Court has established two types of personal jurisdiction: general jurisdiction and specific jurisdiction. The Court considers each in turn below, but first turns to a threshold dispute between the parties — that is, in which forum must the Foreign Defendants have the requisite minimum contacts.

(a) Relevant Forum

The amended complaint generally alleges that the Foreign Defendants have sufficient minimum contacts with the United States as a whole, rather than with New York State.<sup>422</sup> Plaintiffs argue that the appropriate forum for purposes of the due process analysis is the United States by virtue of the national service of process provisions in the Clayton [**127] Act, the CEA, and the RICO Act.<sup>423</sup>

This argument is grounded in what is known as the nationwide contacts approach. HN82[<sup>1</sup>] Although the Second Circuit "has not yet decided" whether to adopt this approach, several other circuits "have endorsed the position that, when a civil case arises under federal law and a federal statute authorizes nationwide service of process, the relevant contacts for determining personal jurisdiction are contacts with the United States as a whole."<sup>424</sup> "The rationale underlying this national contacts approach is that when the national sovereign is applying national law, the relevant contacts are the contacts between the defendant and the sovereign's nation."<sup>425</sup>

[*202] Several courts in this district addressing federal claims with national service of process — including claims alleging benchmark rate manipulation — have adopted this nationwide contacts approach.<sup>426</sup> This Court now joins them. The appropriate forum for purposes of determining whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction would comport with due process is the United States, rather than New York State.

(b) General Jurisdiction [**128]

HN83[<sup>1</sup>] A court with general personal jurisdiction over a foreign defendant may "hear any and all claims against that defendant."<sup>427</sup> But it by now is well established that "a court may assert general jurisdiction over foreign . . . corporations to hear any and all claims against them [only] when their affiliations with the State are so continuous and systematic as to render them essentially at home in the foreign State."<sup>428</sup> "Aside from 'an exceptional case,' . . . a corporation is at home (and thus subject to general jurisdiction, consistent with due process) only in a state that is the company's formal place of incorporation or its principal place of business."<sup>429</sup> In the guiding "exceptional case," the foreign corporation that was subject to general jurisdiction had moved its entire business to the United States from the Philippines during the Japanese occupation of World War II.<sup>430</sup>

Plaintiffs' argument that the Foreign Defendants are subject to general jurisdiction in the United States can be dispensed with quickly. None of the Foreign Defendants is domiciled or has its principal place of business in the United States. At most, plaintiffs have alleged that certain Foreign Defendants have an [**129] active branch office in the United States, which does not approach the "exceptional case" that would permit the Court to view the defendant as "at home" here.<sup>431</sup> The Foreign Defendants thus are not subject to general jurisdiction in this forum.

(c) Specific Jurisdiction

HN84 [↑] Specific jurisdiction is a significantly more limited doctrine. It "depends on an affiliation between the forum and the underlying controversy, principally, activity or an occurrence that takes place in the forum State and is therefore subject to the State's regulation."<sup>432</sup> "In order for a state court to exercise specific jurisdiction, 'the suit' must 'aris[e] out of or relat[e] to the defendant's contacts with the forum."<sup>433</sup> That is to say, "the defendant's suit-related [*203] conduct must create a substantial connection with the forum State."<sup>434</sup>

The inquiry requires a two-step analysis:

"First, the court must decide if the defendant has "purposefully directed" his activities at . . . the forum and the litigation . . . "arise[s] out of or relate[s] to" those activities.' Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 472, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L.Ed.2d 528 (1985) (citation omitted). Second, once the court has established these minimum contacts, it 'determine[s] whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction would comport with [**130] fair play and substantial justice.' Id. at 476, 105 S. Ct. at 2174 (quoting [Int'l Shoe Co., 326 U.S. at 320]). See also Asahi Metal Indus. Co. v. Superior Ct. of Cal., Solano Cnty., 480 U.S. 102, 113-14, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L.Ed.2d 92 (1987) (identifying fairness factors that courts should consider)."<sup>435</sup>

HN85 [↑] Generally, the "minimum contacts necessary to support [specific] jurisdiction exist where the defendant purposefully availed itself of the privilege of doing business in the forum and could foresee being haled into court there."<sup>436</sup> If however, "the conduct that forms the basis for the controversy occurs entirely out-of-forum," courts may employ the effects test, which permits a court to assert specific personal jurisdiction over a defendant "if the defendant expressly aimed its conduct at the forum."<sup>437</sup> An additional theory of jurisdiction may be available in cases alleging a conspiracy if plaintiffs "allege that (1) a conspiracy existed; (2) the defendant participated in the conspiracy; and (3) a co-conspirator's overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy had sufficient contacts with a state to subject that co-conspirator to jurisdiction in that state.<sup>438</sup> Plaintiffs argue that the Foreign Defendants have sufficient minimum contacts with the United States under each of these three theories.

The jurisdictional basis for plaintiffs' claims under the "purposeful availment" [**131] theory is that the Foreign Defendants engaged in suit-related conduct in the United States. They allege that certain defendants "market[ed] and s[old] BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives in the United States."<sup>439</sup> These transactions are sufficiently related to plaintiffs' claims, they argue, because "they are the machinery through which Defendants committed a domestic per se antitrust violation by reaching into the forum to contract for price-fixed BBSW-[B]ased [D]erivatives with U.S. investors."<sup>440</sup>

In Charles Schwab Corporation v. Bank of America Corporation,<sup>441</sup> the Second Circuit considered Securities Exchange Act and state law claims brought by Charles Schwab against a group of financial institutions that allegedly had conspired in London to artificially suppress LIBOR. Certain of the defendant banks had directly [*204] and indirectly through broker-dealer subsidiaries or affiliates sold LIBOR-based debt instruments to Charles Schwab. Others were not alleged to have sold financial instruments to Charles Schwab. These defendants' "principal connection to th[e] case . . . [was] that they allegedly conspired with the other Defendants to manipulate LIBOR to Schwab's detriment."<sup>442</sup> Charles Schwab argued that its [**132] transactions with the direct-seller defendants in the forum state "[gave] rise to personal jurisdiction over both the direct and indirect seller Defendants, and jurisdiction, therefore, also [lay] as to the non-seller co-conspirator Defendants."<sup>443</sup>

With respect to the direct-seller defendants, the Circuit concluded that while the alleged in-forum transactions with plaintiff formed a sound basis for Charles Schwab's "claims for fraud relating to omissions by Defendants in the course of selling floating-rate instruments, interference with prospective economic advantage, breach of the implied covenant, and unjust enrichment," they did not "constitute 'suit-related conduct that create[ed] a substantial connection with [the forum state]' with respect to plaintiff's 'claims premised solely on Defendants' false LIBOR submissions in London."<sup>444</sup> It reasoned that "[c]ourts typically require that the plaintiff show some sort of causal relationship between a defendant's U.S. contacts and the episode in suit,' and the plaintiff's claim must in some way 'arise from the defendants' purposeful contacts with the forum."<sup>445</sup> In Charles Schwab, the Circuit held that the in-forum transactions "did not cause Defendants' [**133] false LIBOR submissions to the BBA in London, nor did the transactions in some other way give rise to claims seeking to hold Defendants liable for those submissions."<sup>446</sup> Its conclusion, it added, was "only bolster[ed]" by the fact that Charles Schwab had "assert[ed] its false submission claims against all Defendants, including those that did not sell any products to Schwab."<sup>447</sup>

The Circuit then considered whether personal jurisdiction over the non-seller defendants would lie based on their membership in a conspiracy with the direct seller defendants. It noted that Charles Schwab had plausibly alleged a conspiracy,<sup>448</sup> but concluded that these allegations by themselves "[did] not mean that the forum contacts of the seller Defendants [were] necessarily imputed to the co-conspirators."<sup>449</sup> The pleading had to allege that "a co-conspirator's overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy had sufficient contacts with a state to subject that co-conspirator to jurisdiction in that state."<sup>450</sup> The court concluded that the direct-seller defendants' transactions with Charles Schwab "had nothing to do" with the alleged conspiracy to manipulate LIBOR. There therefore was "no reason to impute the [forum state] [**134] contacts to the co-conspirators."<sup>451</sup> Nor was the Second Circuit persuaded by plaintiff's argument [*205] that "Defendants conspired not only to manipulate LIBOR, but also 'to earn profits' from that manipulation."<sup>452</sup> It concluded that "financial self-interest is not the same as furthering a conspiracy through California-directed sales, and nowhere in Schwab's complaint are there allegations that Defendants undertook such sales as part of the alleged conspiracy."<sup>453</sup>

The Foreign Defendants argue that the Court should grant their motion to dismiss on the basis of Charles Schwab because "the alleged manipulation of BBSW — an Australian benchmark interest rate — was not caused by any transactions that any Defendant entered into in the United States."<sup>454</sup> Moreover, defendants argue, "such transactions would not be 'acts in furtherance of' the alleged conspiracy even if defendants had 'also [conspired] "to earn profits" from that manipulation."<sup>455</sup>

Plaintiffs argue that the "reputation-based" conspiracy alleged in Charles Schwab should be distinguished from the "profit-motivated" conspiracy alleged here.<sup>456</sup> They point to Sonterra Capital Master Fund Ltd. v. Credit Suisse Group AG,<sup>457</sup> in which [**135] the court considered an alleged conspiracy to manipulate CHF LIBOR. The court there held that certain defendants were subject to specific personal jurisdiction because the "effects on CHF LIBOR-based derivatives in the United States" were "the purpose of defendants' manipulation."<sup>458</sup> Reasoning that "[w]here the goal of the manipulation is to profit wrongfully from transacting in a product, the places where those transactions occur (not just the places where the price manipulation took place) are jurisdictionally relevant," the court concluded that "transacting in CHF LIBOR-based derivatives in the United States after manipulating CHF

LIBOR for the purpose of wrongfully increasing the profits of those transactions constitute[d] 'purposeful availment' of the forum."<sup>459</sup>

But in Charles Schwab, which postdates Sonterra, the alleged conspiracy was undertaken both because "[b]y understating their true borrowing costs, Defendants were able to project an image of financial stability to investors who were sensitive to risks associated with major banks following the financial crisis that began in 2007" and because "[s]uppressing LIBOR . . . had the immediate effect of lowering Defendants' interest [**136] payment obligations on financial instruments tied to LIBOR."<sup>460</sup> Accordingly, the conspiracy to manipulate LIBOR alleged in Charles Schwab was indeed motivated in part by financial incentives. On this basis, the Court concludes that Charles Schwab controls here and precludes a finding of personal jurisdiction — whether through the Foreign Defendants' direct transactions in BBSW-Based Derivatives with plaintiffs or [*206] through a conspiracy theory of jurisdiction — over plaintiffs' federal claims on the basis of the Foreign Defendants' transactions in BBSW-Based Derivatives in the United States.<sup>461</sup>

Plaintiffs assert in the alternative that Foreign Defendants are subject to personal jurisdiction because their conspiracy, the conduct of which took place entirely outside of the United States, nonetheless was purposefully directed at the United States.<sup>462</sup>

HN86 To satisfy the effects test, a defendant's conduct must have been "expressly aimed" at the forum.<sup>463</sup> To that end, the relationship between the defendant and the forum must have arisen "out of contacts that the 'defendant himself,' as opposed to the plaintiff or third parties, created with the forum.<sup>464</sup> Moreover, the "analysis [**137] looks to the defendant's contacts with the forum State itself, not the defendant's contacts with persons who reside there."<sup>465</sup> It thus is "insufficient to rely on a defendant's random, fortuitous, or attenuated contacts or on the unilateral activity of a plaintiff with the forum to establish specific jurisdiction."<sup>466</sup> Indeed even "the fact that harm in the forum is foreseeable . . . is insufficient . . . [to] establish[] specific personal jurisdiction over a defendant."<sup>467</sup> On this basis, the Second Circuit has interpreted Supreme Court jurisprudence to "suggest that a defendant's mere knowledge that a plaintiff resides in a specific jurisdiction would be insufficient to subject a defendant to specific jurisdiction in that jurisdiction if the defendant does nothing in connection with the tort in that jurisdiction."<sup>468</sup>

<sup>461</sup> The Court notes also that certain of plaintiffs' allegations concerning the Foreign Defendants' transactions in the United States attribute such transactions to corporate families and fail to distinguish between parent and subsidiary entities. In these cases, personal jurisdiction is precluded on the additional basis that the allegations are "insufficiently 'individualized' to make out a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction." Charles Schwab Corp., 883 F.3d at 84.

In Charles Schwab, the Second Circuit concluded that the effect of defendants' conduct on California markets merely was foreseeable.<sup>469</sup> Plaintiffs here argue that "[t]he Bank Defendants planned their conduct based on each bank's 'net BBSW exposure' . . . aggregating the value of positions across the entire bank, including [*207] transactions in the United States with U.S. investors."<sup>470</sup> In plaintiffs' view, such misconduct "was 'expressly aimed' at the United States because the net BBSW exposure calculation always included U.S. transactions," resulting in the "perpetual[] victimiz[ation]" of U.S. customers.<sup>471</sup> Indeed, these allegations set the Foreign Defendants' alleged conspiracy to manipulate BBSW apart from the LIBOR manipulation conspiracy in Charles Schwab, in which the defendants persistently suppressed LIBOR by submitting artificially low rates with no alleged regard to their in-forum LIBOR-based transactions.

Nonetheless, plaintiffs' arguments are unavailing. The Foreign Defendants may indeed have incorporated their U.S.-based BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions into the calculation of their respective exposures to the rates. But their conduct is connected more readily to the counterparties on their BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions, not the forum in which such transactions took place or where such counterparties were located.

This case can be analogized to Walden v. Fiore,<sup>472</sup> in which a group of airline passengers sued a police officer for violating their Fourth Amendment rights by seizing money from them in Georgia during the passengers' return [*139] trip to Nevada and then delaying the return of such monies. The Supreme Court concluded that the police officer was not subject to specific personal jurisdiction in Nevada. It reasoned that the officer had not formed any jurisdictionally relevant contacts with Nevada — the alleged intentional tort had not taken place in Nevada and the officer's only connection to the forum was that he allegedly had directed his conduct at plaintiffs whom he knew had Nevada connections.<sup>473</sup> The plaintiffs' argument there that they had suffered "injury" caused by the defendant's allegedly tortious conduct in the forum — in that the passengers suffered from the delay of the return of their cash while they were in Nevada — similarly was unavailing. HN87<sup>474</sup> The Court concluded that "mere injury to a forum resident is not a sufficient connection to the forum" and that "[r]egardless of where a plaintiff lives or works, an injury is jurisdictionally relevant only insofar as it shows that the defendant has formed a contact with the forum State."<sup>474</sup>

Here, the Foreign Defendants are alleged to have engaged in calculating their exposure to BBSW-Based Derivatives while they were outside of the United States. That plaintiffs and [*140] the purported class members were in the United States and suffered from diminished returns on their BBSW-Based Derivatives transactions does not serve to connect the Foreign Defendants to the United States for jurisdictional purposes. There are no allegations that the Foreign Defendants expressly aimed their conduct at the forum — just that they expressly aimed their conduct at counterparties to BBSW-Based Derivative transactions around the world, some of whom happened to be in the United States. Plaintiffs' allegations that the United States was a substantial market for BBSW-Based Derivatives speak only to the foreseeability of the effect of the Foreign Defendants' conduct in the United States. Such contacts therefore are too [*208] "random, fortuitous, [and] attenuated"<sup>475</sup> to be a basis for the Court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over Foreign Defendants.

Because the Court has concluded that the Foreign Defendants lack sufficient minimum contacts, it need not consider "whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction would comport with fair play and substantial justice."<sup>476</sup>

B. Personal Jurisdiction Arising from Defendants' Consent

1. ISDA Master Agreements

Plaintiffs next argue that the FrontPoint [**141] Plaintiffs' claims against Credit Suisse and Macquarie Bank Ltd. arise from transactions related to ISDA Master Agreements that contain consents to personal jurisdiction in New York.<sup>477</sup> They point specifically to two ISDA Master Agreements, which they alleged were in force during the Class Period and governed by New York law and pursuant to which these defendants transacted in BBSW-based swaps with the FrontPoint Plaintiffs.<sup>478</sup>

As an initial matter, it is unclear whether plaintiffs intend to allege that Credit Suisse Group AG or Credit Suisse AG entered into an ISDA Master Agreement with the FrontPoint Plaintiffs. The amended complaint states that these two defendants are referred to collectively as "Credit Suisse,"<sup>479</sup> and neither plaintiffs' brief nor the alleged ISDA Master Agreement itself specifies the Credit Suisse entity, or entities, that is party to the contact.<sup>480</sup> Plaintiffs' allegations as to Credit Suisse therefore are insufficiently individualized to make a prima facie showing that either Credit Suisse entity consented to personal jurisdiction in New York.<sup>481</sup>

With respect to Macquarie Bank Ltd., however, plaintiffs highlight an ISDA Master Agreement between Macquarie Bank Ltd. and [**142] FrontPoint Event Driven dated September 8, 2009.<sup>482</sup> Section 13 of the Agreement provides that when an ISDA Master Agreement is governed by New York law, "[w]ith respect to any suit, action, or proceedings related to this Agreement . . . each party irrevocably . . . submits to . . . the non-exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of the State of New York and the United States District Court located in the Borough of Manhattan in New York City."<sup>483</sup> The schedule attached to this ISDA Master Agreement provides that the Agreement is governed by New York state law.<sup>484</sup> Finally, plaintiffs have produced an Equity Swap Transaction Confirmation, which "forms

As discussed above, plaintiffs FrontPoint Financial Services Fund, L.P. and FrontPoint Financial Horizons Fund, L.P. lack standing to assert their claims. Accordingly, the Court considers only the alleged ISDA Master Agreement to which FrontPoint Event Driven is party.

2. New York Banking Laws

Plaintiffs next argue that defendants BNP Paribas S.A., Credit Suisse AG, [*143] Deutsche Bank AG, Lloyds Bank plc, and Macquarie Bank Ltd. have consented to general personal jurisdiction in New York by virtue of having registered to do business in New York under New York Banking Law § 200 and appointed the Superintendent of the NYSDFS as their agent for service of process.<sup>487</sup>

New York Banking Law § 200 provides, in relevant part:

"No foreign banking corporation . . . shall transact [banking business] in this state . . . unless such corporation shall have: . . .

"(3) Filed in the office of the superintendent . . . a duly executed instrument in writing, by its terms of indefinite duration and irrevocable, appointing the superintendent and his or her successors its true and lawful attorney, upon whom all process in any action or proceeding against it on a cause of action arising out of a transaction with its New York agency or agencies or branch or branches, may be served with the same force and effect as if it were a domestic corporation and had been lawfully served with process within the state."<sup>488</sup>

Plaintiffs rely on four cases, each of which is either not precedential, unpersuasive, or both.

In Varga v. Credit Suisse,<sup>489</sup> the then-exiled president of Hungary sued Credit Suisse demanding that the latter release to him funds that had been deposited with the bank as a safety net for his government if it ever were exiled from the country. The New York Supreme Court rejected as "untenable" the argument that Section 200\(3\) "should be construed as a limitation on the causes of action for which foreign banks may be sued in this state."<sup>490</sup> This section, it held, "merely limits the actions in which the Superintendent may be served."<sup>491</sup> Even if Varga were

Plaintiffs point also to New York Banking Law § 200-b, which provides, in relevant part:

"[A]n action or special proceeding against a foreign banking corporation may be maintained by . . . a non-resident in the following cases only: . . . — where the defendant is a foreign banking corporation doing business in this [*144] state." Id. § 200-b\(2\)\(e\).

Reliance on this statute is unpersuasive as the New York Court of Appeals, in Indosuez Int'l Fin. v. Nat'l Reserve Bank, 98 N.Y.2d 238, 248, 774 N.E.2d 696, 746 N.Y.S.2d 631 (2002), has indicated that Section 200-b provides for subject-matter jurisdiction, rather than personal jurisdiction, over claims against foreign parties.

controlling, it does not indicate affirmatively that Section 200\(3\) provides for general personal jurisdiction. Nor has it been cited for such a proposition.

[*210] Plaintiffs point also to two cases in which courts concluded that a defendant from outside of the forum state had consented to personal jurisdiction for purposes of responding to information subpoenas [**145] served in order to enforce money judgments.<sup>492</sup> The context in those cases, however, was distinct from that before this Court.<sup>493</sup> Indeed, in a subsequent case, Judge Hellerstein, who authored one of the judgment creditor cases, concluded in the context of a benchmark rate manipulation case related to Singaporean bank rates that "the questions and concerns raised in Vera [we]re not present [t]here"<sup>494</sup> because Vera "concerned whether a foreign bank with branches registered in New York must identify assets of judgment debtors over which it has custody, regardless of where the particular branches holding those assets might be located."<sup>495</sup>

Finally, plaintiffs point to Brown v. Lockheed Martin Corporation,<sup>496</sup> which held that a Connecticut banking registration statute could not subject registrants to general personal jurisdiction.<sup>497</sup> The Second Circuit there stated in dicta that "the registration statute in the state of New York has been definitively construed" to "plainly advise the registrant that enrolling in the state as a foreign corporation and transacting business will vest the local courts with general jurisdiction over the corporation."<sup>498</sup> In support of this statement, [**146] however, Brown cited a law review article which referred only to New York Business Corporation Law § 1301, not New York Banking Law § 200.<sup>499</sup>

Plaintiffs therefore have offered no legal basis upon which the Court should find that the applicable defendants consented to general personal jurisdiction by virtue of their registration under New York Banking Law § 200. Foreign Defendants engaged in suit-related conduct in the United States sufficient to satisfy the minimum contacts threshold, so have plaintiffs failed to plead that their claims arise out of transactions with defendants' New York agencies or branches.

On this basis, the Court concludes that none of BNP Paribas S.A., Credit Suisse AG, Deutsche Bank AG, Lloyds Bank plc, or Macquarie Bank Ltd. has [\[\*\*147\]](#) consented to general personal jurisdiction in New York by virtue of their registration under New York Banking Law § 200.

C Pendent Jurisdiction

To this point, the Court's discussion of personal jurisdiction has focused on plaintiffs' federal law claims. HN89  "The doctrine of pendent personal jurisdiction provides that 'where a federal statute authorizes nationwide service of process, and the federal and state-law claims derive from a common nucleus of operative fact, the district court may assert personal jurisdiction over the parties to the related state-law claims even if personal jurisdiction is not otherwise available.'"<sup>502</sup>

With the exception of the claims asserted by FrontPoint Event Driven against Macquarie Bank Ltd., the Court has concluded that the plaintiffs have not made a prima facie showing that the Foreign Defendants are subject to personal jurisdiction in this Court. Accordingly, with the exception of Macquarie Bank Ltd., the Court is without a basis to exercise pendent jurisdiction over the Foreign Defendants in respect of plaintiffs' state law claims. As to Macquarie Bank Ltd., however, the Court agrees with plaintiffs<sup>503</sup> that the state law claims derive from "a common nucleus of operative fact" sufficient [\[\*\*148\]](#) for the Court to assert personal jurisdiction in respect of FrontPoint Event Driven's state law claims.

D. Jurisdictional Discovery

Plaintiffs' final argument is that the "Court should decline to dismiss any Defendant before simple, targeted jurisdictional discovery has occurred," reasoning that defendants have "demonstrate[d] that much of the discoverable information remains exclusively in their hands by providing declarations and documents that only tell half the story, omitting any reference to their trades in the United States, use of U.S.-based personnel, facilities, and accounts, and consent to jurisdiction in ISDA Master Agreements."<sup>504</sup> The Foreign Defendants respond that "[j]urisdictional discovery is inappropriate where, as here, [\[\*212\]](#) Plaintiffs have failed to allege a prima facie case of jurisdiction."<sup>505</sup>

HN90 [+] It is within the Court's discretion to allow jurisdictional discovery.<sup>506</sup> Given that plaintiffs need only make a prima facie case for jurisdiction in order to survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(2\), it follows that the standard for allowing jurisdictional discovery is at least somewhat lower than that. However, although plaintiffs broadly request jurisdictional discovery, they propose [**149] no actual plan for such discovery on the limited question of whether the Foreign Defendants are subject to personal jurisdiction in this Court. In the circumstances, it would be inappropriate to permit limitless discovery at this stage of the proceedings.

Conclusion

Defendants' motions to dismiss each are granted in part and denied in part, as follows:

A. The motion to dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and failure to state a claim [DI 132] is granted (except as to defendants JPMorgan Chase & Co. and JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A.) to the following extent:

- (1) All claims brought by plaintiffs FrontPoint Financial Services Fund, L.P. and FrontPoint Financial Horizons Fund, L.P. are dismissed;
- (2) Plaintiffs do not have class standing to assert claims for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing or unjust enrichment on behalf of purported class members to the extent such class members traded in BBSW-based forward rate agreements and 90-day BAB futures;
- (3) The CEA claims brought by FrontPoint Asian Event Driven Fund, L.P. and Sonterra Capital Master Fund, Ltd. are dismissed;
- (4) The remaining CEA and RICO Act claims are dismissed as to defendants Deutsche Bank AG, [**150] Royal Bank of Canada, RBC Capital Markets LLC, Lloyds Banking Group plc, Lloyds Bank plc, Macquarie Group Ltd., Macquarie Bank Ltd., Morgan Stanley, Morgan Stanley Australia Limited, ICAP plc, ICAP Australia Pty Ltd., Tullett Prebon plc, and Tullett Prebon (Australia) Pty Ltd.;
- (5) The claims of breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and unjust enrichment are dismissed as to all defendants except Macquarie Bank Ltd., Morgan Stanley, and Morgan Stanley Australia Limited, and

The motion [DI 132] is denied in all other respects.

B. The motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and improper venue [DI 109] is granted in all respects except that it is denied as to the claims brought by FrontPoint Asian Event Driven Fund, L.P. against defendant Macquarie Bank Ltd.

C. Plaintiffs' request for jurisdictional discovery is denied without prejudice to their renewing such request [*213] within thirty (30) days after the date of entry hereof.

Any motion for leave to amend must be made no later than thirty (30) days after the date of entry hereof.

SO ORDERED.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

THIS CAUSE came before the Court upon Defendant Pollo Operations, Inc. d/b/a Pollo Tropical's ("Pollo Tropical") Motion to Compel Arbitration and Dismiss or, in the Alternative, Stay Proceedings Pending Arbitration (hereafter, "Motion to Compel Arbitration") [D.E. 11]. This matter was referred to the undersigned pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636 by the Honorable Jose E. Martinez, United States District Judge [D.E. 12]. The undersigned held a hearing on this matter on August 7, 2018 [D.E. 19]. For the reasons stated below, the undersigned respectfully recommends that the Motion to Compel Arbitration be GRANTED and this case be DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

This action arises out of an employment dispute between Plaintiff Susana Herboso ("Plaintiff" or "Herboso") and her former employer, Pollo Tropical. See Compl. [D.E. 1]. Pollo Tropical [*2] employed Plaintiff from August 28, 2000 until it terminated her employment on May 5, 2017. Id. at 2, 4.

On June 16, 2006, Pollo Tropical issued a Company Memorandum to its employees with the subject line: "Mandatory Arbitration Program — Existing Employee Roll-Out" (hereafter, "Memorandum") [D.E. 11-1 at 13]. See Declaration of Sally Throckmorton ("Throckmorton Decl.") [D.E. 11-1 at 3]. The Memorandum described the implementation of a Mandatory Arbitration Program ("MAP") [D.E. 11-1 at 7-8] to be agreed upon in the Agreement for Resolution of Disputes Pursuant to Binding Arbitration ("Arbitration Agreement") [D.E. 11-1 at 10-11] (MAP and Arbitration Agreement, together "Arbitration Policy"), a copy of which was attached to the Memorandum. See Throckmorton Decl. [D.E. 11-1 at 3]. The Memorandum stated that employees' employment-related disputes that could not be resolved internally would be resolved through arbitration rather than in a lawsuit; and it directed employees to review the Arbitration Agreement carefully because they would "agree to be bound by its terms and conditions after August 1, 2006." See Memorandum [D.E. 11-1 at 13]. The Memorandum further stated, "By reporting to work on or [*3] after August 1, 2006, you agree to the terms of MAP as a condition of your continued employment with [Carrols Corporation/Taco Cabana/Pollo Tropical]." Id. (bold in original).

The Arbitration Agreement states:

Polio Tropical...has therefore implemented a mandatory arbitration program that is a condition of your employment. . . . Under this arbitration program, which is mandatory, [Polio Tropical] and you agree that any and all disputes, claims or controversies for monetary or equitable relief arising out of or relating to your employment, even disputes, claims, or controversies relating to events occurring outside the scope of your employment ("Claims"), shall be arbitrated before JAMS

....

Claims subject to arbitration shall include, without limitation, disputes, claims, or controversies relating or referring in any manner, directly or indirectly, to: Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and similar state statutes; the Federal Age Discrimination Employment Act and similar state statutes; the whistleblower provisions of state or federal law or state or federal regulations; personal or emotional injury to you or your family; the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act or similar state [*4] statutes; the Family and Medical Leave Act or similar state statutes; the Americans with Disabilities Act or similar state statutes; injuries you believe are attributable to [Polio Tropical] under theories of product liability, strict liability, intentional wrongdoing, gross negligence, negligence, or respondeat superior; actions or omissions of third parties you attribute to [Polio Tropical]; the Employee Retirement Income Security Act tort claims brought pursuant to actual or alleged exceptions to the exclusive remedy provisions of state workers compensation laws; federal and state antitrust law; benefits, bonuses, and wages; contracts; pensions; federal, state, local, or municipal regulations, ordinances, or orders; any common law, or statutory law relating to discrimination by sex, race, national origin, sexual orientation, family or marital status, disability, weight, dress, or religion; and alleged wrongful retaliation of any type, including retaliation related to workers compensation laws or employee injury benefit plan actionable at law or equity, but not any claims under workers compensation laws or employee injury benefit plan. My agreement to arbitrate Claims extends to [*5] Claims against [Polio Tropical's] officers, directors, managers, employees, owners, attorneys and agents, as well as to any dispute you have with any entity owned, controlled or operated by [Polio Tropical].

See Arbitration Agreement [D.E. 11-1 at 10].

The Memorandum and the Arbitration Agreement were distributed to Polio Tropical employees on June 16, 2006 as an attachment stapled to their paychecks and/or paystubs. See Throckmorton Decl. [D.E. 11-1 at 3]. However, Plaintiff contends that neither the Memorandum nor the Arbitration Agreement were attached to her paycheck or paystub, and that Polio Tropical never provided her with the Memorandum or the Arbitration Agreement in any other manner. See Affidavit of Susana Herboso ("Herboso Affidavit") [D.E. 15-1 at 2].

On August 1, 2006, Polio Tropical implemented the MAP, which was contained in the Polio Tropical Employee Handbook (hereafter, "Employee Handbook"). See Throckmorton Decl. [D.E. 11-1 at 3]; MAP [D.E. 11-1 at 7-8]. The MAP states, in pertinent part, "All Polio Tropical employees are subject to the Company's Mandatory Arbitration Program." See MAP [D.E. 11-1 at 8]. The Employee Handbook also contained an Acknowledgment form, which [*6] stated that "the information contained in this Handbook is subject to change at anytime and at the sole discretion of [Polio Tropical]." See Acknowledgement [D.E. 15-2].

Plaintiff continued working for Polio Tropical after August 1, 2006. See Throckmorton Decl. [D.E. 11-1 at 4]; Herboso Affidavit [D.E. 15-1 at 2]. She was promoted to General Manager on July 2, 2007. See Throckmorton Decl. [D.E. 11-1 at 2]; Herboso Affidavit [D.E. 15-1 at 2]. Plaintiff admits that, as General Manager, she was provided with an Employee Handbook that contained the MAP as part of the new hire paperwork that Polio Tropical directed her to have new hires sign. See Herboso Affidavit [D.E. 15-1 at 3]. Plaintiff provided at least three new hires with the MAP and the Arbitration Agreement during her tenure as General Manager. See Throckmorton Decl. [D.E. 11-1 at 4]; see also New Hire Paperwork Checklists [D.E. 11-1 at 15, 17, 19]. Plaintiff claims to have believed that "arbitration applied only to those individuals employed by [Polio Tropical] after the date it created and disseminated its arbitration program." See Herboso Affidavit [D.E. 15-1 at 3].

On May 16, 2018, Plaintiff brought this action against Polio [*7] Tropical and Defendant Dinolays Vera ("Vera") (together, "Defendants") asserting claims for age discrimination in violation of the Florida Civil Rights Act, Fla. Stat. § 760.01, et seq.; retaliatory discharge in violation of the Fair Labor Standards Act, 29 U.S.C. § 215(a)(3); and retaliatory discharge in violation of Florida's Private Whistleblower Act, Fla. Stat. § 448.102. See Compl. [D.E. 1]. Specifically, Plaintiff alleges that Polio Tropical demoted her from General Manager to Assistant Manager because of her age, and that Defendants fired her for complaining about Polio Tropical's purported failure to pay overtime. Id.

On June 29, 2018, Pollo Tropical filed the instant Motion to Compel Arbitration [D.E. 11]. Pollo Tropical argues that the Arbitration Policy is binding and enforceable against Plaintiff, and that all of her claims fall within the scope of the Arbitration Policy, requiring that the instant case be dismissed and the claims be arbitrated. Id. at 8-12. On July 13, 2018, Plaintiff filed her Response, arguing that there was no enforceable agreement to arbitrate [D.E. 15]. On July 20, 2018, Polio Tropical filed its Reply [D.E. 16].

APPLICABLE LAW

"The validity of an arbitration agreement is generally governed by the 9Federal Arbitration Act, U.S.C. §§ 1 et seq. (the "FAA"), [*8] which was enacted in 1925 to reverse the longstanding judicial hostility toward arbitration." Caley v. Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., 428 F.3d 1359, 1367 (11th Cir. 2005) (citing Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler—Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 626-27, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 (1985); Weeks v. Harden Mfg. Corp., 291 F.3d 1307, 1312 (11th Cir. 2002)). "The FAA embodies a liberal federal policy favoring arbitration agreements." Id. (citations omitted). Pursuant to the FAA, a written arbitration provision in a "contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce" is "valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract." 9 U.S.C. § 2. To determine whether parties should be compelled to arbitrate a dispute, courts consider: (1) whether an enforceable written agreement to arbitrate exists; (2) whether the issues are arbitrable; and (3) whether the party seeking arbitration has waived the right to arbitrate. Sims v. Clarendon Nat. Ins. Co., 336 F. Supp. 2d 1311, 1326 (S.D. Fla. 2004).

"[I]n determining whether a binding agreement arose between the parties, courts apply the contract law of the particular state that governs the formation of contracts." Caley, 428 F.3d at 1368. Under Florida law, mutual assent is a prerequisite for the formation of any contract and is evaluated by analyzing the parties' agreement process in terms of offer and acceptance. Kolodziej v. Mason, 774 F.3d 736, 741 (11th Cir. 2014) (citations omitted). In determining assent, courts do not look into the subjective [*9] minds of the parties, but rather, "the law imputes an intention that corresponds with the reasonable meaning of a party's words and acts." Id. at 745. The best evidence of intent is the plain language of the contract. Tranchant v. Ritz Carlton Hotel Co., LLC, No. 2:10-CV-233-FTM-29DNF, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35099, 2011 WL 1230734, at *3 (M.D. Fla. Mar. 31, 2011) (citations omitted).

It is not necessary for the party opposing arbitration to have signed the arbitration agreement in order for it to be enforced; and assent can be established through a course of conduct. Mays v. Keiser Sch., Inc., No. 10-61921-CIV, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42213, 2011 WL 1539675, at *2 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 31, 2011) (citations omitted), report and recommendation adopted, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43365, 2011 WL 1496774 (S.D. Fla. Apr. 19, 2011). See also Sundial Partners, Inc. v. Atl. St. Capital Mgmt. LLC, No. 8:15-CV-861-T-23JSS, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31617, 2016

WL 943981, at *5 (M.D. Fla. Jan. 8, 2016) ("Because the object of a signature is to show mutuality or assent, a contract may be binding on a party notwithstanding the absence of a signature if the parties assented to the contract in another manner."), report and recommendation adopted, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31616, 2016 WL 931135 (M.D. Fla. Mar. 11, 2016). Moreover, the FAA does not require that an arbitration agreement be signed by the parties. Id.; 9 U.S.C. § 2. Courts in Florida have found that continued employment after receiving notice of the terms of an arbitration agreement constitutes assent. See Mays, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42213, 2011 WL 1539675, at *2 (finding that the plaintiff's "course [<sup>10</sup>] of conduct of continuing her employment with Defendant, with knowledge of the terms of the Agreement, including the arbitration clause, constitutes an assent to those terms"); Sierra v. Isdell, No. 6:09-cv-124-Orl-19KRS, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66148, 2009 WL 2179127, at *4 (M.D. Fla. July 21, 2009) (finding that plaintiff's continued employment after obtaining knowledge of the terms of an arbitration agreement established assent); BDO Seidman, LLP v. Bee, 970 So.2d 869, 875 (Fla. 4th DCA 2007) (finding that a party acquiesced to the terms of the agreement to arbitrate by continuing employment after the agreement came into existence).

"[A] party seeking to avoid arbitration must unequivocally deny that an agreement to arbitrate was reached and must offer 'some evidence' to substantiate the denial." Mays, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42213, 2011 WL 1539675, at *1 (citations omitted). The Eleventh Circuit has held:

If, under a "summary judgment-like standard," the district court concludes that there "is no genuine dispute as to any material fact concerning the formation of such an agreement," it "may conclude as a matter of law that [the] parties did or did not enter into an arbitration agreement."

Burch v. P.J. Cheese, Inc., 861 F.3d 1338, 1346 (11th Cir. 2017) (quoting Bazemore v. Jefferson Capital Sys., LLC, 827 F.3d 1325, 1333 (11th Cir. 2016)). On summary judgment, "courts are required to view the facts and draw reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the party opposing the summary judgment motion." Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 378, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 167 L. Ed. 2d 686 (2007) (citations [<sup>11</sup>] omitted). Upon being satisfied that the issue is referable to arbitration, the Court may, on application of one of the parties, stay the trial of the action until the conclusion of the arbitration proceedings. 9 U.S.C. § 3. Courts in this District have also "dismissed the case where all claims were subject to arbitration." Perera v. H & R Block E. Enters, Inc., 914 F. Supp. 2d 1284, 1290 (S.D. Fla. 2012) (citations omitted); see also Amat v. Rey Pizza Corp., 204 F. Supp. 3d 1359, 1368 (S.D. Fla. 2016) (adopting recommendation to dismiss the case because "all of the issues raised in the district court were arbitrable").

DISCUSSION

Plaintiff argues that there is no enforceable agreement to arbitrate because she never received the Memorandum or the Arbitration Policy when Pollo Tropical distributed them to its employees. See Response [D.E. 15 at 5-6]. However, Plaintiff admits that she did receive the Employee Manual that contained the MAP as part of the new hire paperwork that Pollo Tropical directed her to have new hires sign in her role as General Manager. See Herboso Affidavit [D.E. 15-1 at 3]. Further, Plaintiff does not dispute that she provided at least three new hires with the MAP and the Arbitration Agreement during her tenure as General Manager. See Throckmorton Decl. [D.E. 11-1 at 4]; see also New Hire Paperwork Checklists [D.E. 11-1 [<sup>12</sup>] at 15, 17, 19]. It is also undisputed that Plaintiff continued working for Pollo Tropical until she was terminated on May 5, 2017. See Compl. [D.E. 1 at 4]; Throckmorton Decl. [D.E. 11-1 at 2].

Viewing the facts and drawing reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, see Scott, 550 U.S. at 378, the undersigned concludes that Plaintiff had notice of the terms of the Arbitration Policy during her employment, including that it was mandatory for all Pollo Tropical employees and that it was a condition of employment; and she continued to work for Pollo Tropical after obtaining such knowledge. Thus, the undersigned finds that Plaintiff's conduct constituted assent to the Arbitration Policy. See Mays, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42213, 2011 WL 1539675, at *2; Sierra, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66148, 2009 WL 2179127, at *4; BDO Seidman, 970 So.2d at 875. Moreover, that Plaintiff never signed the Arbitration Agreement is of no moment. See Mays, 2011 U.S. Dist.

Although Plaintiff claims that she believed that "arbitration applied only to those individuals employed by [Polio Tropical] after the date it created and disseminated its arbitration program," see Herboso Affidavit [D.E. 15-1 at 3], her subjective intent does not raise a genuine issue of material fact. See Kolodziej, 774 F.3d at 745. The plain language of the Arbitration Policy indicates that it was mandatory for all employees and [*13] that it was a condition of employment. See MAP [D.E. 11-1 at 8]; Arbitration Agreement [D.E. 11-1 at 10]. Hence there is no evidence to indicate that the Arbitration Policy was intended to apply only to new hires. See Tranchant, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35099, 2011 WL 1230734, at *3. Accordingly, the "reasonable meaning" of Plaintiff's continued employment is that she intended to be bound to the Arbitration Policy. Kolodziej, 774 F.3d at 745. Furthermore, Plaintiff's statement in her affidavit that she believed the Arbitration Policy applied only to those employed after Polio Tropical disseminated it implies that she knew exactly when it was distributed. Such a belief is inconsistent with Plaintiff's claim that she was never provided with the Memorandum or Arbitration Agreement in any manner.

Additionally, Plaintiff argues that the MAP is illusory and unenforceable due to the inclusion of the following language in the Acknowledgment for the Employee Handbook: "the information contained in this Handbook is subject to change at anytime and at the sole discretion of Pollo Tropical." See Response [D.E. 15 at 7-8]; Acknowledgement [D.E. 15-2]. Under Florida law, a contract is illusory when "one of the promises appears on its face to be so insubstantial as to impose no obligation [*14] at all on the promisor." Princeton Homes, Inc. v. Virono, 612 F.3d 1324, 1331 (11th Cir. 2010) (citations omitted). Potential future alterations to the Employee Handbook do not render the MAP illusory. See Vince v. Specialized Servs., Inc., No. 8:11-CV-1683-T-24-TBM, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113779, 2011 WL 4599824, at *3 (M.D. Fla. Oct. 3, 2011) (rejecting the notion that an arbitration agreement contained in an employee handbook was illusory because the employer could alter the terms of the employee handbook).

Given these considerations, the undersigned concludes that there was an enforceable agreement for Plaintiff to arbitrate all of her claims against Defendants. Because all of Plaintiff's claims are subject to arbitration, the undersigned recommends that the case be dismissed without prejudice. Perera, 914 F. Supp. 2d at 1290; Amat, 204 F. Supp. 3d at 1368.

RECOMMENDATION

Based on the foregoing considerations, the undersigned RESPECTFULLY RECOMMENDS that Polio Tropical's Motion to Compel Arbitration [D.E. 11] be GRANTED and the case be DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Pursuant to Local Magistrate Judge Rule 4(b), the parties have fourteen days from the date of this Report and Recommendation to file written objections, if any, with the Honorable Jose E. Martinez. Failure to timely file objections shall bar the parties from attacking or appealing the factual findings contained herein. See Resolution Tr. Corp. v. Hallmark Builders, Inc., 996 F.2d 1144, 1149 (11th Cir. 1993). Further, "failure [*15] to object in accordance with the provisions of [28 U.S.C.] § 636(b)(1) waives the right to challenge or appeal the district court's order based on unobjected-to factual and legal conclusions." See 11th Cir. R. 3-1 (I.O.P. - 3).

RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED in Chambers at Miami, Florida this 27th day of November, 2018.

[*939] OPINION & ORDER

HERNÁNDEZ, District Judge:

[*940] Plaintiff CollegeNet, Inc., brings this antitrust action for violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act against Defendant The Common Application, Inc. Plaintiff brings seven claims for relief: (1) Horizontal Restraint of Trade in the Admissions Markets; (2) Horizontal Restraint of Trade in the Online College Application Processing Market; (3) Exclusive Dealing; (4) Tying; (5) Monopolization; (6) Attempted Monopolization; and (7) Conspiracy to Monopolize. Defendant moves to dismiss all of Plaintiff's claims and transfer this action to the Eastern District of Virginia. The Court denies Defendant's Motions to Dismiss and Transfer.

BACKGROUND

I. The Parties

Plaintiff CollegeNET is a Portland-based corporation [**2] that offers various web-based administrative services to higher education and non-profit organizations, including customized online application forms, processing services, and contact management services. First Am. Compl. ("FAC") ¶ 6, ECF 75. Defendant The Common Application is a Virginia-based non-profit corporation comprised of 549 non-profit member colleges and universities. Id. at ¶ 7. It offers a standard college application data service, application forms, and processing services. Id.

Defendant was formed in 1975 as a limited group of selective colleges seeking to simplify the college admissions process. Id. at ¶¶ 13, 38. The application was initially a paper form that was universally accepted by all member colleges, eliminating the need for applicants to write their basic information more than once. Id. at ¶ 13. According to Plaintiff, Defendant has since "transformed itself into a dominant online college application processing provider." Id. at ¶ 14. As it grew, Defendant's members began to "understand that Common Application was providing tangible monetary benefits to them at the expense of applicants. What started out as a service to simplify the college application process [**3] for students had become a pipeline of applicants" Id. at ¶ 48. According to Plaintiff, membership grew "not to serve students but in part to secure a boost in applications, application fees, and rankings." Id.

Plaintiff alleges that Defendant is not a single entity, but rather a "consortium of competitors" that have participated with Defendant as co-conspirators in connection with the alleged antitrust violations. Id. at ¶¶ 8, 84. A majority of Defendant's steering committee or board of directors is made up of admissions officers from member colleges. Id. at ¶ 85. The board discusses and approves membership agreements, Common Application changes, and restraints. Id. at ¶ 86. Each year, member colleges sign an agreement with Defendant to abide by its rules and regulations. Id. at ¶ 88.

II. Evolution of Defendant's Unlawful Conduct

Plaintiff alleges various anticompetitive behavior resulting from membership restrictions and restraints, including but not limited to: (a) Tying and Bundling/Forced Purchase Requirements; (b) Exclusivity Restrictions; (c) the "Equal Treatment" Requirement; and (d) Uniformity Requirements. Id. at ¶ 15. Plaintiff suggests that none of these requirements—which [**4] Defendant operated without for 25 years—is necessary to achieve any legitimate or procompetitive goal of the Common Application. Id. at ¶ 16. According to Plaintiff, these restraints "have the primary effect of suppressing competition to provide online [*941] college application processing services to applicants and colleges, reducing net output, and excluding rival providers." Id. They "are not ancillary to or reasonably necessary to carry out Common Application's official mission." Id. at ¶ 159.

In 2003, Defendant "redefined its 'equal treatment' requirement." Id. at ¶ 46. Specifically, it began requiring members to "encourage the use of the Common Application" by "(1) charging an application fee to Common Applicants that was 'no greater than the fee charged for [their] other accepted applications; (2) providing 'an equally prominent link to the Common App Online wherever [they] post[ed] a link to another online application; and (3) not 'explicitly offer[ing] any special benefits to students regardless of the application they choose.'" Id. It also began charging non-exclusive members a higher fee per application than was charged to exclusive members. Id. at ¶ 47.

In 2005-06, Defendant entered [**5] into agreements with Naviance and ApplyYourself ("AY"). Naviance is the "largest provider of planning and advising systems for secondary schools" with an "electronic document transmission system . . . integrated into more than 5,500 schools." Id. at ¶ 55. Defendant became "tightly integrated" with Naviance's system, and college counselors familiar with Naviance "encourage[d] students to apply to college through the Common App." Id. Defendant also awarded an "exclusive Online College Application Processing Services contract" to AY from 2007 to 2013. Id. at ¶ 56.

During this time, Defendant also made several changes to its services and pricing structure. Plaintiff alleges that Defendant's "typical pattern was to begin by offering additional 'optional' services and then, after a few years, (1) bundle the services with its core offering, (2) make their use mandatory, and/or (3) impose penalties on members who did not agree to use Common Application's services exclusively." Id. at ¶ 58. In the mid-2000's, for example, Defendant introduced supplemental forms and payment processing services. Id. at ¶ 59. Initially, members could pay for membership, applications, application payment processing, [**6] supplemental applications, and maintenance of supplemental applications separately. Id. But, in the late 2000's, Defendant "bundled all of its distinct services (except for payment processing) into a single offering for one all-in fee." Id. at ¶ 61. In other words, Common Application still charged a membership fee and a fee per application, but the supplemental application and other services were "free." Id. In addition, members who were fully exclusive and did not use other application providers were charged $4.00 per application processed as opposed to the standard $5.50 fee per application. Id. at ¶¶ 61-62. Defendant also began "restricting member institutions' ability to customize and personalize their Institutional Supplements." Id. at ¶ 64.

In 2011, Defendant announced its intent to end its contract with AY and—in 2014 with its fourth-generation system "CA4"—to bring the online processing staff, software, and infrastructure in-house. Id. at ¶ 66. According to Plaintiff, Defendant was equipping itself to "handle the full volume of the entire American college application process." Id. at ¶ 67.

Plaintiff alleges that CA4 was a "woefully deficient, technologically backwards, glitchriddled [**7] product that would never survive in a competitive marketplace." Id. at ¶ 68. By further homogenizing the college application process, CA4 made it "harder for applicants and Colleges to identify good 'matches.'" Id. at ¶ 79. CA4 eliminated file uploads and used text boxes that were limited to 650 words. Id. Applicants were further limited in the number of versions of essays they could upload and [*942] to answering four specific essay prompts. Id. at ¶¶ 80-81.

In addition, Defendant made further changes to its pricing and membership structure. Under its new three-tiered membership structure, all members had to (1) use Defendant's Common Application for all form and payment processing—including Institutional Supplements—for Common Applicants; (2) accept all Common Applicant evaluation forms (including final transcripts) online, for schools that chose to send them online; and (3) accept the Common Application fee waiver. Id. at ¶¶ 74-75. In addition, "Exclusive I" members had to use the Common Application as their only admission application for full-time, undergraduate, degree-seeking applicants, and "Exclusive II" members had to (1) establish uniform fees for all applicants; (2) use the Common [**8] Application as their only transfer application; and (3) use Slideroom.com for their Arts Supplement (if they offered one). Id. at ¶¶ 76, 77. According to Plaintiff, the "penalties" for choosing to be a Non-Exclusive versus Exclusive II member are "extreme." Id. at ¶ 78.

Since 2000, Defendant's membership has grown substantially, reaching 549 members in the 2014-2015 academic year. Id. at ¶ 44. With that growth, its total revenue increased from $339,046 in 2003 to $14.5 million in 2013. Id. It processed 3.45 million applications in the 2013-2014 application cycle. Id. at ¶ 82. In addition, in 2014 Defendant eliminated its "holistic admission membership requirement," allowing "virtually any College . . . to join Common Application." Id. at ¶ 83.

III. Anticompetitive Effects and Injury

Plaintiff alleges that Defendant's agreements and the challenged restraints have had various anticompetitive effects. They have harmed competition in the Admissions and Online College Application Processing Markets. Id. at ¶ 149. They have resulted in lower "Net Output," defined as the net value derived from Online College Application Processing services including (1) quality, functionality, features, ease [**9] of use and level of innovativeness of Application Processing services; (2) the ability of applicants and Colleges to find good matches; (3) the ability to predict yield or matriculation; and (4) the amount of time and money spent by Colleges and applicants using these services. Id. at ¶¶ 21, 151, 153-56. According to Plaintiff, the equal treatment requirement in particular has reduced competition among members to offer better alternatives to the Common Application. It amounts to a group boycott and an agreement to suppress demand for application services. Id. at ¶¶ 151-52. Plaintiff alleges that Defendant has impermissibly tied its Standard College Application Data service to its Online Application Processing service through its "one-price-for-all-services model." Id. at ¶ 153. The exclusivity provisions have also foreclosed rival providers by making it "prohibitively expensive for members to use and offer to applicants those rivals' services." Id. at ¶ 154. The uniformity requirements have similarly reduced Net Output by decreasing the value that applicants derive from the application process and limiting their ability to find a good match. Id. at ¶ 155.

Plaintiff has also been injured [**10] by the restraints. Plaintiff alleges that it has lost over 200 college customers to Common Application in the last 10-15 years. Id. at ¶ 37. Prior to the alleged restraints, Plaintiff asserts that it hosted Common Application Institutional Supplements and supported Common Application member colleges in other ways. Id. Plaintiff attributes its losses to these restraints. Id.

According to Plaintiff, members receive certain benefits from the restraints. Id. at ¶ 157. The restraints allow them to spend less on online application processing services [*943] without a reduction in applicants. Id. at ¶ 157(a). They boost their application numbers, fees, and rankings. Id. at ¶ 157(c). Plaintiff alleges that early members in particular have a "significant financial interest and have invested substantial time and effort" in the commercial joint venture such that they are motivated to prevent competition. Id. at ¶ 157(b).

IV. The Relevant Markets

Plaintiff alleges that there are four relevant markets in which to analyze the effects of Defendant's allegedly unlawful restraints: "(1) the market for applicants to Colleges (the "Student Application Market"); (2) the market for admission to Colleges (the "College [**11] Admissions Market") ((1) and (2) collectively, the 'Admissions Markets'); (3) the Online College Application Processing Market and each of its submarkets; and (4) the College market for Standard College Application Data Services." Id. at ¶ 90. In the alternative, Plaintiff contends that the Admissions Markets may be limited to Elite Colleges, defined as top-50 universities and top-50 liberal arts colleges by U.S. News & World Report. Id. at ¶¶ 18, 91.

Plaintiff contends that the Online Application Processing Market is a distinct product market. Id. at ¶ 92. It is limited in geographic scope to the United States, and suppliers include: Defendant, Plaintiff, Applications Online LLC ("AOL"), XAP Corporation, Hobsons U.S., and AY. Id. at ¶¶ 33, 93. Plaintiff alleges that the market does not include applications to graduate programs (which cost more and are not a reasonable substitute for the college product) or student information systems ("SIS") (which are more limited products and require significant investment from the college). Id. at ¶¶ 96-106. Plaintiff alleges that barriers to entry are high because of the high fixed costs involved in entering the industry and the difficulty obtaining [**12] and retaining customers due to Defendant's entrenchment and exclusivity agreements. Id. at ¶¶ 107-10. Plaintiff also alleges that Defendant's exclusivity agreements, equal treatment requirements, bundling/forced purchase requirements, and tying behavior disincentivize offering other applications and have made switching costs high. Id. at ¶¶ 110-13. Plaintiff contends that Defendant's share of this market is 60%: "In 2014-15, an estimated 9.4 million undergraduate applications will be submitted, with 5-6 million processed online by third-party providers, and approximately 3.6 million of which will be processed by Common Application." Id. at ¶ 115.

The Standard College Application Service Market is a distinct product market. Unlike the Online Application Processing Market, "which includes full application form development and processing," the Standard College Application Data Service "provides a generic, text-based data entry form for applicants to input their background information required by more than one College." Id. at ¶ 118. Plaintiff alleges that there are no reasonable substitutes for access to this product, which generates an "applicant pipeline." Id. at ¶ 121. Competitors in [**13] this market include AOL (provider of the Universal College Application) and Defendant. Id. at ¶¶ 24, 122. Plaintiff alleges that Defendant's share of this market is 90%. Id. at ¶ 122.

The Student Application Market and College Admissions Markets are also distinct product markets. Id. at ¶ 124. They are supplied by Online Application Processing providers. Id. at ¶ 125. The Student Application Market is limited to applications for admission to full-time, four-year degree programs at Colleges ("regionally accredited, non-profit, undergraduate colleges and universities"). Id. at ¶ 124. Similarly, the College Admissions Market is comprised of full-time, four-year College degree programs. Id. Plaintiff contends [*944] that graduate programs; part-time or two-year programs; programs at non-regionally accredited, for-profit schools; or non-US institutions are not substitutes for Colleges and thus excludable from these markets. Id. at ¶ 127. Plaintiff contends that Defendant will process 40-45% of College applications in 2014-15 year and therefore controls at least 40-50% of the Student Application Market. Id. at ¶ 129. Plaintiff alleges that this number is an understatement of Defendant's market power, [**14] or "their ability to reduce Net Output without losing applicants" as a result of the network effects of its applicant pipeline. Id. at ¶ 130. There are also high barriers to entry in this market. Id. at ¶ 131.

The College Admissions Market is the market for admission to full-time, four-year College degree programs. Id. at ¶ 138. For the reasons discussed in the preceding paragraph, this market excludes other degree programs, and Defendant has similar market share and market power. Id. at ¶¶ 139-40. Plaintiff contends that the ability of Defendant to offer a product with "inferior functionality" at a high cost with limitations on Colleges' advertising opportunities and the ability of applicants to find a good College (without losing users) is direct evidence of Defendant's "unconstrained exercise of their market power." Id. at ¶ 137.

V. Procedural History

Plaintiff filed this case in the District of Oregon on May 8, 2014. Compl., ECF 1. On May 15, 2015, the Court granted Defendant's first Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's claims for failure to plead antitrust injury. Opinion & Order, ECF 96. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit reversed the decision of the district court and remanded this case for [**15] further proceedings. Mandate, ECF 112. On July 12, 2018, Defendant filed its Motion to Dismiss, and on August 3, 2018, Defendant filed its Motion to Transfer. Def. Mot. Dismiss, ECF 137; Def. Mot. Transfer, ECF 146.

STANDARDS

I. Motion to Dismiss

A motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) tests the sufficiency of the claims. Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir. 2001). "All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party." Am. Family Ass'n, Inc. v. City & Cnty. of S.F., 277 F.3d 1114, 1120 (9th Cir. 2002). To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint "must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face[.]" meaning "the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (internal quotation marks omitted). In other words, a complaint must contain "well-pleaded facts" that "permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct[.]" Id. at 679.

However, the court need not accept conclusory allegations as truthful. See Warren v. Fox Family Worldwide, Inc., 328 F.3d 1136, 1139 (9th Cir. 2003) ("[W]e are not required to accept as true conclusory allegations which are contradicted by documents referred to in the complaint, and we do not necessarily assume the truth of legal conclusions [**16] merely because they are cast in the form of factual allegations.") (internal quotation marks, citation, and alterations omitted). A motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) will be granted if a plaintiff alleges the "grounds" of his "entitlement to relief" with nothing "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action[.]" [*945] Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)[.]" Id. (citations and footnote omitted).

II. Motion to Transfer Venue

28 U.S.C. § 1404 governs motions to transfer venue: "For the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought." The purpose of the § 1404\(a\) is to "prevent the waste of time, energy and money and to protect litigants, witnesses, and the public against unnecessary inconvenience and expense." Van Dusen v. Barrack, 376 U.S. 612, 616, 84 S. Ct. 805, 11 L. Ed. 2d 945 \(1964\) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). The decision whether to transfer venue lies in the discretion of the district court. 28 U.S.C. § 1404; Jones v. GNC Franchising, Inc., 211 F.3d 495, 498 \(9th Cir. 2000\) (Under section 1404\(a\), "the district court has discretion to adjudicate [**17] motions for transfer according to an individualized, case-by-case consideration of convenience and fairness.") (internal quotation omitted).

The burden is on the moving party to demonstrate that the balance of conveniences favoring the transfer is high. The defendant must make "a clear showing of facts which . . .

establish such oppression and vexation of a defendant as to be out of proportion to plaintiff's convenience, which may be shown to be slight or nonexistent." Dole Food Co. v. Watts, 303 F.3d 1104, 1118 \(9th Cir. 2002\).

DISCUSSION

I. Judicial Notice

Both parties filed requests for judicial notice.<sup>1</sup> Typically, "when the legal sufficiency of a complaint's allegations is tested by a motion under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), review is limited to the complaint." Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 688 \(9th Cir. 2001\). "Indeed, factual challenges to a plaintiff's complaint have no bearing on the legal sufficiency of the allegations under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)." Id. However, without turning a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment, the Court may consider "material which is properly submitted as part of the complaint," documents not physically attached to the complaint if their authenticity is not contested and they are relied on in the complaint, and documents that are subject to judicial notice. Id. at 688-89.

Courts may take judicial notice [**18] of information "not subject to reasonable dispute because it (1) is generally known within the trial court's territorial jurisdiction; or (2) can be accurately and readily determined from sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." Fed. R. Evid. 201\(b\). Courts may take judicial notice of SEC filings, press releases, or contents of a website, when they are "matters of public record." See Lee, 250 F.3d at 688-89; see also Nw. Pipe Co. v. RLI Ins. Co., No. 3:09-CV-01126-BR, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50531, 2014 WL 1406595, at \*5 \(D. Or. Apr. 10, 2014\). When a court takes judicial notice of a public record, "it may do so not for the truth of the facts [*946] recited therein, but for the existence of the [record], which is not subject to reasonable dispute over its authenticity." Klein v. Freedom Strategic Partners, LLC, 595 F. Supp. 2d 1152, 1157 \(D. Nev. 2009\) (quoting Lee, 250 F.3d at 690).

Turning first to Defendant's request, the Court declines to take judicial notice of the attached documents. Specifically, many of Defendant's exhibits are used to challenge inferences from facts alleged in the complaint. For example, numerous exhibits involve the "Coalition Application" and are cited to demonstrate that, because Plaintiff and other member colleges entered the market, barriers to entry are low, see Def. Mot. Dismiss 30 (citing RJD Exs. 2, 3, 5) (arguing that actual entry "proves that there are low barriers [**19] to entry" defeating Plaintiff's Section 2 claim), and there is no group boycott, see id. at 12 (citing RJD Exs. 23-34) (asking the Court to infer from the fact that some colleges provide multiple application options that there is no group boycott). Others are used to challenge Plaintiff's allegations of market power. See id. at 29 (citing RJD Exs. 17-18). In its own words, Defendant is "asking the court to take judicial notice of uncontested facts" and "[f]rom there, . . . assess the plausibility of Plaintiff's allegations in light of those uncontested facts." Def. Reply Req. Judicial Notice 3, ECF 150. Thus, Defendant improperly asks the Court to take notice of the facts contained within these documents and infer from them that Plaintiff cannot state its claims under the Sherman Act. See *Khoja v. Orexigen Therapeutics, Inc., 899 F.3d 988, 1001 \(9th Cir. 2018\)* (finding that a report was generally susceptible to judicial notice but declining to take notice because "there [was] a reasonable dispute as to what the report establishes"). In addition, some of the exhibits are irrelevant to the motion to dismiss, such as the exhibits demonstrating that only one public institution in Oregon offers The Common Application. Def. Mot. Dismiss 5. Accordingly, Defendant's Request for Judicial Notice [**20] is denied.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff also filed an "Objection to Defendant's 'Non-Request' for Judicial Notice" in response to Defendant's Reply to the Motion to Transfer. ECF 158. Plaintiff objects to two websites that were cited in Defendant's Reply but were neither attached to a declaration nor included in a request for judicial notice. See Def. Reply Transfer 16-17, ECF 156. The Court, however, has not relied on either source in its decision and, therefore, declines to address this objection further.

Turning to Plaintiff's request, the Court finds that the documents in question are irrelevant to the disposition of the Motion to Transfer. In connection with its response to Defendant's Motion to Transfer, Plaintiff asks the Court to take judicial notice of the per diem costs in Washington, D.C., and the endowments of certain member schools. Pl. Req. Judicial Notice, ECF 155. But neither of these exhibits is relevant in determining whether the Court should transfer this case to the Eastern District of Virginia. See *Neylon v. Cty. of Inyo, No. 1:16-CV-0712 AWI JLT, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 161326, 2016 WL 6834097, at \*4 \(E.D. Cal. Nov. 21, 2016\)* (citing *Adriana Intern. Corp. v. Thoeren, 913 F.2d 1406, 1410 n.2 \(9th Cir. 1990\)*) ("[I]f an exhibit is irrelevant or unnecessary to deciding the matters at issue, a request for judicial notice may be denied."). Accordingly, Plaintiff's Request for Judicial Notice is also denied.

[*947] II. Defendant's Motion to Dismiss

Plaintiff's claims arise under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Section 1 prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 1. "Agreements of competitors, whether express or implicit, whether by formal agreement or otherwise, in restraint [**21] of trade are outlawed." *California ex. rel. Harris v. Safeway, Inc., 651 F.3d 1118, 1132 \(9th Cir. 2011\)*. However, the Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized that by the language of the Sherman Act, "Congress intended to outlaw only unreasonable restraints." *State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 \(1997\)*. Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce . . . shall be deemed guilty of a felony. . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

Defendant moves to dismiss all of Plaintiff's antitrust claims. For the reasons that follow, the Court finds that Plaintiff has plausibly alleged all seven of its claims for relief. Accordingly, Defendant's Motion to Dismiss is denied.

A. Horizontal Restraints on Trade (Claims 1 & 2)

Plaintiff's first and second claims for relief arise under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. "[A] cause of action under 15 U.S.C. § 1 consists of the following three elements: (1) an agreement, conspiracy, or combination between two or more entities; (2) an unreasonable restraint of trade under either a per se or rule of reason analysis; and (3) the restraint affected interstate commerce." *Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 788 \(9th Cir. 1996\)*.

Defendant argues that Plaintiff has not adequately plead a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act for horizontal restraint of trade. Specifically, [**22] Defendant contends that Plaintiff has not adequately alleged (1) an agreement; or (2) any unlawful restraint on trade that harmed competition. Def. Mot. Dismiss 8-19.

<sup>2</sup> Defendant also asks the Court to take judicial notice of the 2014 U.S. News & World Report rankings. The Court instead finds that the complaint incorporates this doctrine by reference. See *United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 908 \(9th Cir. 2003\)* ("Even if a document is not attached to a complaint, it may be incorporated by reference into a complaint if the plaintiff refers extensively to the document or the document forms the basis of the plaintiff's claim."). Plaintiff does not dispute this documents authenticity. It merely objects that it was neither extensively relied on in the complaint nor formed the "entire basis" of Plaintiff's claims. However, the Rankings form the basis for Plaintiff's alleged Elite College Submarket. FAC ¶ 18 ("Elite College' means a top-ranked College (e.g., by U.S. News & World Report as a top-50 national university or a top-50 liberal arts college."). Accordingly, this document is properly incorporated by reference.

i. Agreement

In the absence of direct evidence of a horizontal agreement, the plaintiff must demonstrate "parallel conduct plus." In Re Musical Instruments and Equipment Antitrust Litigation, 798 F.3d 1186, 1193 (2015). In other words, in addition to demonstrating parallel conduct—"such as competitors adopting similar policies around the same time in response to similar market conditions"—the plaintiff must plead "some further factual enhancement" or a "further circumstance pointing toward a meeting of the minds" Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 560). In addition, the Supreme Court has indicated that, under certain circumstances, a joint venture constitutes an agreement under Section 1: "[W]e have repeatedly found instances in which members of a legally single entity violated § 1 when the entity was controlled by a group of competitors and served, in essence, as a vehicle for ongoing concerted activity." Am. Needle, Inc. v. Nat'l Football League, 560 U.S. 183, 191, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010); see also NCAA v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 99 n.18, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984); Phillip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶¶ 1477, 1478 (4th ed. 2011) ("[T]he courts have had little difficulty in treating organizations created to serve their member-competitors or to regulate their market behavior [**23] as continuing 'agreements' among the members.").

Plaintiff makes the following relevant allegations in support of its contention [*948] that there was an agreement to restrain trade: Defendant is an association of 549 universities, which are all legally distinct entities. FAC ¶¶ 7, 84. They compete with one another for applicants. Id. at ¶ 84. Defendant's board is primarily comprised of admissions officers from member colleges. Id. at ¶ 85. They regularly meet in this capacity to discuss and vote on business decisions and modify the restraints that Defendant imposes on members. Id. at ¶ 86. Annually, each member college signs an agreement with Defendant in which it agrees to abide by the restraints at issue here. Id. at ¶ 88. Plaintiff argues that "[w]hen horizontal competitors," like the member colleges, "form an association," like Defendant, "to adopt rules on how they will compete against each other, those rules constitute 'agreements' under Section 1." Pl. Opp'n Dismiss 9, ECF 143.

The Court agrees with Plaintiff. As noted above, the Supreme Court has acknowledged that such associations or joint ventures can, under certain circumstances, violate Section 1. Defendant responds that the restraints alleged here [**24] do not constitute concerted action because membership does not preclude colleges from buying or selling their own products or prohibiting them from using other services. Def. Reply Mot. Dismiss ("Def Reply") 12. Thus, membership "does not 'deprive the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking' and . . . does not fall into the 'concerted activity' covered by Section 1." Id. at 13 (citing Am. Needle, 560 U.S. at 194). But that is precisely what Plaintiff alleges. As described in more detail below, Plaintiff alleges that the challenged restraints in the membership agreement amount to a group boycott or refusal to deal in both the Admissions and Online College Application Processing markets. In other words, member Colleges who would otherwise be competitors and independent decision makers in the marketplace for online application processing services have, by virtue of their membership, limited their participation in the market. Thus, at this stage of these proceedings, Plaintiff has sufficiently alleged an agreement for purposes of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

ii. Unlawful Horizontal Restraints

Plaintiff and Defendant both characterize Plaintiff's first and second claims for horizontal restraints on trade as group boycott or buyer's [**25] cartel/refusal to deal claims. "[M]ost antitrust claims are analyzed under a 'rule of reason,' according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors[.]" State Oil, 522 U.S. at 10. The rule of reason is the presumptive or default standard, and it requires the antitrust plaintiff to "demonstrate that a particular contract or combination is in fact unreasonable and anticompetitive." Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006). "A conclusion that a restraint of trade is unreasonable may be 'based either (1) on the nature or character of the contracts, or (2) on surrounding circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that they were intended to restrain trade and enhance prices. Under either branch of the test, the inquiry is confined to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions.'" NCAA, 468 U.S. at 103 (quoting Nat'l Soc'y of Prof. Eng. v. U.S., 435 U.S. 679, 690, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978)). Ultimately, "[u]nder the Sherman Act the criterion to be used in judging the validity of a restraint on trade is its impact on competition." Id. at 104. Plaintiff can make this showing directly by demonstrating the anti-competitive effects of competition—such as "reduced output, increased prices, or decreased quality in the relevant market"—or [**26] indirectly [*949] through "proof of market power plus some evidence that the challenged restraint harms competition." Ohio v. Am. Express. Co., 138 S.Ct. 2274, 2284, 201 L. Ed. 2d 678 \(2018\).

While the rule of reason is the default standard to analyze allegedly anticompetitive conduct, "[s]ome types of restraints . . . have such predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect, and such limited potential for procompetitive benefit, that they are deemed unlawful per se." State Oil, 522 U.S. at 10. Such restraints "are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Nw. Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationary & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1985\) (quoting N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 \(1958\)). Per se treatment is proper only "[o]nce experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the [c]ourt to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it[.]" Arizona v. Maricopa Cty. Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 344, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 \(1982\). "[A] 'departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than . . . upon formalistic line drawing.'" Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 887, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 \(2007\) (second alteration in original) (quoting Cont'l T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 \(1977\)). To justify per se condemnation, a challenged practice must have "manifestly anticompetitive" effects and lack "any redeeming virtue." Id. at 886 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Supreme Court has "expressed reluctance to adopt per [**27] se rules where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious." Dagher, 547 U.S. at 5 (quotation marks and ellipses omitted) (quoting State Oil, 522 U.S. at 10).

Plaintiff alleges that the challenged restraints—namely, the equal treatment requirement, exclusivity provisions, and tying—have all injured competition. FAC ¶¶ 149-56. For example, the equal treatment requirement has disincentivized investment in alternative applications that might provide better and less expensive services. Id. at ¶ 150. Tying of access to the applicant pipeline has foreclosed rival providers from capturing Colleges' business. Id. at ¶ 153. The exclusivity provisions make it cost prohibitive for members to use or offer rival services. Id. at ¶ 154.

Plaintiff's First and Second Claims for relief allege horizontal restraints of trade in the Admissions Market and the Online College Application Processing Markets, respectively. In Plaintiff's First Claim, Plaintiff alleges that the horizontal agreements among Defendant and its members amount to a conspiracy to insulate competitors in the application process, fix and reduce Net Output, stabilize or increase the prices paid, or reduce the benefits received by applicants. FAC ¶ 164. By [**28] boycotting other providers, Defendant and its members restrain competition in the Admissions markets. Id. at ¶¶ 164-65. These are allegedly unlawful under the rule of reason because Defendant has significant market power and the restraints have reduced competition, reduced Net Output, and impaired access to other options. Id. at ¶ 167.

Similarly, in its Second Claim, Plaintiff alleges that the horizontal agreements among Defendant and its members amount to a conspiracy to refuse to deal or exclude rival providers in the Online College Application Processing Market in order to suppress demand for services and prices paid below competitive levels. Id. at ¶ 173. [*950] Plaintiff alleges that the restraints are unreasonable under the rule of reason because Defendant and its members have significant market power and their adoption of the challenged restraints and boycott of rival providers have reduced competition in the Online College Application Processing Market. Id. at ¶ 174.

Defendant first challenges Plaintiff's "Group Boycott" Claim<sup>3</sup> on the grounds that the alleged restraints are not anticompetitive.<sup>4</sup> Def. Mot. Dismiss 11. Specifically, it argues that Plaintiff's claim fails because the [**29] equal treatment requirement does not affect the price or terms at which CollegeNet or other rivals can sell their services to Colleges. Id. at 11-14. The Court disagrees. Plaintiff plainly alleges that the challenged restraints are anticompetitive. By limiting members' abilities to offer more affordable alternatives, making non-exclusive memberships more expensive, and requiring members to purchase processing services to obtain access to the student data pipeline, Colleges are disincentivized to explore superior or more affordable alternative online college application processing services. In other words—as a result of the unlawful tying, equal treatment provisions, and exclusivity discounts—the members have "effectively agreed not to purchase higher-quality, more innovative, or lower-priced . . . services from rival providers." FAC ¶¶ 150, 152-54. In addition, Plaintiff alleges that the agreements—which constrain choice among the member colleges—have caused Net Output to decrease and quality in the relevant markets to suffer. Id.

Defendant also makes more targeted challenges to Plaintiff's "Refusal to Deal" Claim. Specifically, it argues that (1) Plaintiff's **30 claims are illogical because a buyer's cartel in this context would only hurt all market participants, including Defendant and its member schools; and (2) that Plaintiff cannot allege suppression of demand because the number of applications ("output") increased as a result of increased demand. Def. Mot. Dismiss 14-19. With respect to Defendant's first argument, the Court finds that Plaintiff's allegations are not implausible. Plaintiff specifically alleges that Defendant and its member colleges have an interest in reducing demand and prices for application services. It is in their economic interest to eliminate all suppliers except Common App (which is controlled by members) and to prevent other competitor colleges from using a different supplier and changing the competitive landscape of the Admissions Market. FAC ¶ 157. These restraints benefit the members by allowing them to spend *951 below-competitive levels on services without losing applicants and boosting their applications, application fees, and rankings. Id. In addition, members—particularly those who joined the venture early—have invested time and effort in Defendant and have a financial interest in the success of The Common Application. **31 On the second argument, the Court finds that Plaintiff has adequately alleged that Net Output has decreased as a result of Defendant's market power. Id. at ¶¶ 149-56, 166, 173. Members and Colleges have derived less value from the process, including a reduction in their ability to find good matches, poorer quality and innovativeness of the application process, and increased monetary costs. Id. at ¶¶ 149-57. Accordingly, the Court declines to dismiss Plaintiff's first and second claims for relief.

B. Exclusive Dealing (Claim 3)

Plaintiff's third claim for relief is for exclusive dealing under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. "Exclusive dealing involves an agreement between a vendor and a buyer that prevents the buyer from purchasing a given good from any other vendor." *Allied Orthopedic Appliances Inc. v. Tyco Health Care Grp. LP*, 592 F.3d 991, 996 \(9th Cir. 2010). "There are 'well-recognized economic benefits to exclusive dealing arrangements, including the enhancement of interbrand competition.'" Id. (quoting *Omega Envtl., Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc.*, 127 F.3d 1157, 1162 \(9th Cir. 1997\)). Thus, "'an exclusive-dealing arrangement does not constitute a per se violation of section 1.'" Id. (quoting *Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., Inc.*, 676 F.2d 1291, 1303-04 \(9th Cir. 1982\)). Under the antitrust rule of reason, an exclusive dealing arrangement violates Section 1 only if its probable effect is to "foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce **32 affected." *Omega*, 127 F.3d at 1162 (quoting *Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co.*, 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 \(1961\)). Generally, this requires "a showing of significant market power by the defendant, substantial foreclosure, contracts of sufficient duration to prevent meaningful competition by rivals, and an analysis of likely or actual anticompetitive effects considered in light of any procompetitive effects." *ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp.*, 696 F.3d 254, 271 \(3d Cir. 2012\) (internal citations omitted).

the per se rule because the "case involve[d] an industry in which horizontal restraints on competition [were] essential if the product [was] to be available at all"); see also Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1478 (noting that when single-entity claims are rejected, courts generally reject per se illegality as well).

<sup>4</sup> To the extent that Defendant's argument hinges on the difference between limiting what the school can charge students applications and what the provider can charge the College for its services, the effect of this difference is a factual issue that cannot be resolved at this stage in the proceedings.

Defendant argues that complaint does not allege either (1) an agreement to deal exclusively; or (2) substantial foreclosure of the market. Def. Mot. 20-21.

i. Exclusivity Agreement

"[A] prerequisite to any exclusive dealing claim is an agreement to deal exclusively." Aerotec Int'l, Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 836 F.3d 1171, 1181 (9th Cir. 2016) (quoting ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 270). Generally, courts focus on whether there are "requirements terms, volume or market share targets, or long-term contracts that "prevent meaningful competition by taking potential purchasers off the market." Id.; Cf. Omega Envtl., 127 F.3d at 1163-64 ("[T]he short duration and easy terminability of these agreements negate substantially their potential to foreclose competition."). The Ninth Circuit has not recognized "de facto" exclusive dealing arrangements, Aerotec, 836 F.3d at 1182 ("Although we have not explicitly recognized a 'de facto' exclusive dealing theory like that recognized in the Third Circuit and Eleventh Circuit, [**33] we need not reach the issue here . . . .), but other circuit courts have, see ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 282 ("[A]n express exclusivity requirement is not necessary because de facto exclusive dealing may be unlawful."); see also Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 326 (noting that "even though a contract does not contain specific agreements not to use the (goods) of a competitor, if the practical [*952] effect is to prevent such use, it comes within the condition of the section as to exclusivity"). In determining whether such an agreement exists, the court "look[s] past the terms of the contract to ascertain the relationship between the parties and the effect of the agreement in the real world." ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 270, 282-83 (finding that agreements that conditioned discounts on market-share targets were de facto agreements to deal exclusively where the defendant was a dominant supplier in the relevant market).

Here, Plaintiff adequately alleges exclusive dealing. First, provisions in the agreements for Exclusive members specifically condition exclusivity on a discount for Defendant's services. FAC ¶ 76-78. In addition, the membership agreements contain equal treatment provisions, which, among other things, prevent member schools from offering other applications at a lower price. Id. [**34] at ¶ 46. Further, Plaintiff plausibly alleges that Defendant has tied access to its data services—and the student pipeline—on using its online application processing services, in a sense requiring member schools to use Defendant's product instead of competitor products. Id. at ¶ 61. Combined with the alleged high switching costs associated with terminating membership with Defendant (a dominant supplier), the membership agreements here plausibly constitute de facto exclusive dealing arrangements that in practical effect prevent purchasers from using the services and goods of competitors. See Pro Search Plus, LLC v. VFM Leonardo Inc., No. SACV 12-2102-JLS (ANx), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 169856, 2013 WL 6229141, at *6 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 2, 2013) (finding, on a motion to dismiss, that Plaintiff had plausibly alleged a de facto exclusive dealing claim where costs of switching were "prohibitive," the defendant's monopoly power made dealing with it an "economic necessity," at least one customer dealt exclusively with the defendant, and the defendant had market power).

ii. Substantial Foreclosure

To determine whether an agreement forecloses competition, the Ninth Circuit "focus[es] on whether there are requirements terms (i.e., terms requiring a buyer to purchase all the product or service it needs from one seller), volume or market share targets, or long-term contracts that prevent meaningful competition by taking potential purchasers off the market." See Aerotec, 836 F.3d at 1181 (internal citations omitted). To determine substantiality, the court:

[W]eigh[s] the probable effect of the contract on the relevant area of effective competition taking into account the relative strength of the parties, the proportionate [**35] volume of commerce involved in relation to the total volume of commerce in the relevant market area, and the probable immediate and future effects which pre-emption of that share of the market might have on effective competition therein.

Tampa Elec. Co., 365 U.S. at 329. For claims arising under § 1, "[s]ubstantial share" has been quantified as foreclosure of 40% to 50% of the relevant market." Feitelson v. Google Inc., 80 F.Supp.3d 1019, 1030 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (citing U.S. v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 70, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001)). For exclusive dealing, "foreclosure levels are unlikely to be of concern where they are less than 30 or 40 percent." Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 373 F.3d 57, 68 (1st Cir. 2004). Under § 2, less might be required. See *Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 70* ("At the same time, however, we agree with plaintiffs that a monopolist's use of exclusive contracts, in certain circumstances, may give rise to a § 2 violation even though the contracts foreclose [\[\*953\]](#) less than the roughly 40% or 50% share usually required in order to establish a § 1 violation.").

Plaintiff alleges that many aspects of the membership agreement—including the alleged tying, exclusivity discount, and equal treatment provisions—taken together amount to an exclusive dealing arrangement. Pl. Opp'n Dismiss 18-21. In other words, all the membership agreements—not just the Exclusive agreements—are relevant to this inquiry. Id. at 20-21 n.14. Plaintiff also alleges that Defendant has [\[\*\*36\]](#) at least a 60% market share in the Online Processing Market and a 90% share in the Data Services Market. FAC ¶¶ 115, 122. Though the agreements are only one year in duration, Plaintiff alleges that there are high switching costs associated with ending or failing to renew the contract. Id. at ¶¶ 109-114, 116, 130, 154.

Again, taken together, Plaintiff has adequately alleged substantial foreclosure of the market. *Tampa Elec. Co., 365 U.S. at 334* (emphasizing, among other things, whether there is a seller in a dominant position, exclusive contracts, or tying arrangements). Defendant is a dominant supplier that is alleged to control 60% of the market through these agreements, which exceeds the foreclosure rate that has been deemed significant in the past. Because switching costs are high, parties are unlikely to terminate their memberships. Cf. *Omega Envtl., 127 F.3d at 1163-64* ("[T]he short duration and easy terminability of these agreements negate substantially their potential to foreclose competition."). In addition, terminating their agreements with Defendant or pursuing other competitive options would be difficult for members, particularly in light of the equal treatment and tying provisions. Without access to Defendant's data services and student [\[\*\*37\]](#) applicant pipeline, member colleges would lose applicants and, in turn, fall in their rankings. Taken together, Plaintiff plausibly alleges that potential purchasers are removed from the market, making it difficult for other competitors to enter or remain.

C. Tying (Claim 4)

Plaintiff's Fourth Claim is for unlawful tying in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. "Tying is defined as an arrangement where a supplier agrees to sell a buyer a product (the tying product), but 'only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different (or tied) product . . . .'" *Brantley v. NBC Universal, Inc., 675 F.3d 1192, 1199 \(9th Cir. 2012\)* (citing *N. Pac. Ry. Co., 356 U.S. at 5-6*). "The potential injury to competition threatened by this practice is that the tying arrangement will either 'harm existing competitors or create barriers to entry of new competitors in the market for the tied product,' or will 'force buyers into giving up the purchase of substitutes for the tied product.'" Id. (internal citations and quotations omitted).

"The Supreme Court has developed a unique per se rule for illegal tying arrangements." *Cascade Health Solutions v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 913 \(9th Cir. 2008\)*. Plaintiff "must prove: (1) that the defendant tied together the sale of two distinct products or services; (2) that the defendant possesses enough economic power in the tying product [\[\*\*38\]](#) market to coerce its customers into purchasing the tied product; and (3) that the tying arrangement affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce in the tied product market." Id. (quoting *Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1159 \(9th Cir. 2003\)*) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also *Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461-62, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\)*. "A per se tying violation 'is proscribed without examining the actual market conditions, [\[\*954\]](#) when the seller has such power in the tying product or service market that 'the existence of forcing is probable,' . . . and there is 'a substantial potential for impact on competition.'" *Cty. of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cnty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1157 \(9th Cir. 2011\)* (quoting *Beard v. Parkview Hosp., 912 F.2d 138, 140 \(6th Cir. 1990\)*).

Alternatively, "[a] tying arrangement which is not unlawful per se may be invalidated under the rule of reason if the party challenging the tie demonstrates that it is an unreasonable restraint on competition in the relevant market." Id. (internal citations and quotations omitted). As described earlier, the crux of this analysis is "whether the challenged agreement is one that promotes competition or one that suppress competition." *Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 691*. "[T]he plaintiff must allege an actual adverse effect on competition caused by the tying arrangement." *Brantley, 675 F.3d at 1200* (internal citations omitted).

Defendant raises two challenges to Plaintiff's tying claim. First, Defendant asserts that Data Services [**39] and Processing Services are one product market, not two. Def. Mot. Dismiss 24-25. Second, Defendant argues that Plaintiff has not plausibly alleged coercion because there are no alleged facts to show an express or implied tying condition in the Common App's agreements with member colleges. Id. at 25-27.

i. Distinct Products

To state a claim for unlawful tying, Plaintiff must show that there are two distinct products or services offered for sale by the defendant. Jefferson Parish Hosp. v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 21, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984). "The existence of distinct products depends upon 'the character of the demand for the two items.'" Rick-Mik Enters. v. Equilon Enters., LLC, 532 F.3d 963, 975 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19). "There must be a sufficient demand for the purchase of the tied product separate from the tying product to identify a distinct product market. To determine this, the 'purchaser demand' test of Jefferson Parish examines direct and indirect evidence of consumer demand for the tied product separate from the tying product." Id. (brackets, quotations, and citations omitted). Direct evidence includes "whether, when given a choice, consumers purchase the tied good from the tying good maker, or from other firms." Id. By contrast, "indirect evidence includes the behavior of firms without market power in the tying good market, presumably [**40] on the notion that (competitive) supply follows demand. If competitive firms always bundle the tying and tied goods, then they are a single product." Id.

Here, Plaintiff has adequately alleged that two separate product markets exist. The tying product is the Standard College Application Data service. This is a "a type of network service where the service provider hosts a single, web-based background information form that applicants wishing to apply to any of the network Colleges—which all require this same information—fill out only once." FAC ¶ 22. The tied product is the Online Application Processing Services, or "online application evaluation forms and processing services offered to Colleges and Applicants." Id. at ¶ 20. Plaintiff alleges that not all colleges that purchase processing services buy data services. Id. at ¶ 188. The products do not operate better when bundled than when integrated with a rival processing services provider. Id. at ¶ 189. They are "physically and economically" separable as evidenced by Defendant's former pricing structure whereby members could purchase one or both. Id. at ¶ 190. [*955] Defendant, Plaintiff, AOL, XAP Corporation, Hobsons, and AY all provide Online [**41] Application Processing Services, and only Defendant and AOL provide standard application data services. Id. at ¶¶ 24, 33; see Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462 (emphasizing "[e]vidence in the record indicat[ing] that service and parts have been sold separately in the past and still are sold separately to self-service equipment owners" and that "the development of the entire high-technology service industry is evidence of the efficiency of a separate market for service."). Data Services—not Processing Services—provide the "pipeline" for student applicants. Id. at ¶¶ 23, 121. Taken together, these facts create a reasonable inference is that there is demand for such services separate and apart from application processing services. Thus, at least at this stage in the proceedings, Plaintiff has adequately alleged that there are distinct markets for the allegedly tied products.

ii. Coercion

Defendant argues that "CollegeNET has not plausibly alleged coercion because it did not allege any facts to show an express or implied tying condition in the Common App's agreements with member colleges." Def. Mot. 25. Courts typically encounter positive ties, or the "sale of the desired ('tying') product is conditioned on purchase of [**42] another ('tied') product. Aerotec, 836 F.3d at 1178. "[W]here the buyer is free to take either product by itself there is no tying problem." N. Pac. Ry. Co., 356 U.S. at 6 n.4. In addition, "[a] plaintiff must present evidence that the defendant went beyond persuasion and coerced or forced its customer to buy the tied product in order to obtain the tying product." Paladin, 328 F.3d at 1159. "[F]orcing (or coercion) is likely if the seller has power in the tying product market." Robert's Waikiki U-Drive, Inc. v. Budget Rent-a-Car Sys., Inc., 732 F.2d 1403, 1407 (9th Cir. 1984). "For example, if the seller has a patent on the tying product, or has a high market share, or if the tying product is so unique that competitors are unable to offer it, the court will assume adequate market power exists." Id.

In Multistate Legal Studies, Inc. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal and Professional Publications, Inc., the Tenth Circuit held that the plaintiff—a commercial provider of bar examination preparation services—had created an issue of fact on summary judgment with respect to its tying claim. 63 F.3d 1540, 1543 (10th Cir. 1995). There, the defendants—competitors that also provided bar preparation materials—began bundling their full-service bar examination workshop with their smaller MBE workshop. Id. at 1544-45. The supplemental MBE course was initially priced below cost and then marketed as free even though the defendants [**43] increased the cost of the full workshop by $50 the year after they began bundling the products. Id. Consumers could still purchase the supplemental course but would not receive a discount on any other services. Id. at 1546. The Court first found that, in the year the supplemental course was truly free, no separate or tied purchase was involved. Id. at 1548. However, when tuition was raised the subsequent year for the bundled course and reflected the cost of the tied product, customers were purchasing the tied product. Id. Thus, the circuit court found that the plaintiff had "presented enough evidence to create a triable issue as to whether the tuition for the bundled . . . course covered some portion of the [supplemental course costs], and therefore whether the conditioning element was satisfied." Id.

Here, Plaintiff has plausibly alleged a tying condition in the agreements with member colleges. Initially, Defendant is alleged to have offered its Data Services [*956] to colleges in the form of a paper application. FAC ¶ 13. More recently, however, both products are bundled together such that a school cannot purchase Data Services—and the pipeline of student applications that comes with it—without also purchasing [**44] Processing Services. Id. at ¶¶ 61, 192. In other words, this is not a case where the consumer can buy both products separately and the seller is merely offering them together at a lower price. Cf. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12 n.17 ("[W]here the buyer is free to take either product by itself there is no tying problem even though the seller may also offer the two items as a unit at a single price."); Cascade Health Sols., 515 F.3d at 915 ("[T]he fact that a customer would end up paying higher prices to purchase the tied products separately does not necessarily create a fact issue on coercion."). Under the facts alleged, the consumer is unable to purchase the tying product without the purchased of the tied product. In addition, though additional services are marketed as free, the pricing of Defendant's services changed once they were bundled together. FAC ¶¶ 59, 190. Thus, Plaintiff plausibly alleges that Defendant coerced Colleges into purchasing application processing services from Defendant instead of from other providers.

C. Monopolization (Claims 5, 6 & 7)

Plaintiff's Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Claims for relief are for monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. "In order to state a claim [**45] for monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove: (1) Possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury." *SmileCare Dental Grp. v. Delta Dental Plan of California, Inc., 88 F.3d 780, 783 \(9th Cir. 1996\)* (citation omitted). To establish an attempt to monopolize claim, the plaintiff must show: "(1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury." Id. To prove a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of Section 2, a plaintiff must show four elements: "(1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) the specific intent to monopolize; and (4) causal antitrust injury." *Paladin, 328 F.3d at 1158*.

Defendant argues that Plaintiff's monopolization claims should be dismissed for three reasons. First, Defendant contends that Plaintiff cannot adequately allege monopoly power. Second, Defendant alleges that Plaintiff's entry into the Online College Application Market defeats its Section 2 claims. Third, Defendant argues that Plaintiff has not alleged sufficient facts to support its conspiracy claims.

i. Market [**46] Power

To state a claim under the Sherman Act, "a plaintiff must allege that the defendant has market power within a 'relevant market.'" *Newcal Indus., Inc. v. IKON Office Solutions, 513 F.3d 1038, 1044 \(9th Cir. 2008\)*. Market power under Section 2 can be demonstrated in two ways: (1) through "direct evidence of the injurious exercise of market power," such as restricted output and supracompetitive prices; or (2) circumstantial evidence. *Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 \(9th Cir. 1995\)*. Proof by circumstantial evidence is more common and requires plaintiff to: "(1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and . . . that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Id. "The [*957] question of whether, and if so in what market, [the defendant] has monopoly power is complex, nuanced, and fact dependent." *CollegeNET v. The Common Application, Inc., 711 F. Appx 405, 407 \(9th Cir. 2017\)*. "There is no requirement that these elements of the antitrust claim be pled with specificity." Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045. In this case, Defendant challenges all three elements of Plaintiff's market power allegations.

a. Market Definition

Defendant first argues that "Plaintiff wrongfully excludes other competitor application options, including a college's own internal application, which shifts the market share [**47] analysis." Def. Mot. 29. Separately, Defendant also argues that Plaintiff's product markets inappropriately focus on a small subset of colleges by excluding two-year colleges and graduate school admissions. Id. at 33-34.

"[A] 'market' is the group of sellers or producers who have the 'actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business.'" Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434 (citing Thurman Indus. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1374 \(9th Cir. 1989\)). "The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe Co. v. U.S., 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1962\); see also Thurman Indus., 875 F.2d at 1374 ("[A] product market is typically defined to include the pool of goods or services that qualify as economic substitutes because they enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand."). Courts should look to both demand and supply elasticity in determining whether two products are part of the same market. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1436. "As a matter of law, courts have generally recognized that when a customer can replace the services of an external product with an internally-created system, this 'captive output' (i.e. the self-production of all or part of the relevant product) should be included in the same market." U.S. v. Sungard Data Sys., Inc., 172 F. Supp. 2d 172, 186 \(D.D.C. 2001\) (brackets [**48] and citations omitted).

"[T]he validity of the 'relevant market' is typically a factual element rather than a legal element, [and] alleged markets may survive scrutiny under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) subject to factual testing by summary judgment or trial." Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045; see also Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1435 ("[T]he definition of the relevant market is a factual inquiry for the jury, and the court may not weigh evidence or judge witness credibility."). Consequently, an antitrust claim will survive a motion to dismiss "unless it is apparent from the face of the complaint that the alleged market suffers a fatal legal defect." Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045; see also Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 437 \(3d Cir. 1997\) ("Where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products . . . the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted.").

In RealPage, Inc. v. Yardi Systems, Inc., the parties were competitors in the real property management business. 852 F. Supp. 2d 1215, 1218 \(C.D. Cal. 2012\). RealPage and Yardi were the only two competitors in the market for supplying vertically integrated cloud computing services for real property owners [**49] and managers. Id. at 1224. RealPage brought antitrust claims against Yardi and excluded from the relevant market any "self-hosting" [*958] of management software." Id. at 1218. The district court acknowledged that RealPage's market definition was "quite narrow"; however, the definition was not "facially unsustainable" because RealPage considered and rejected multiple conceivably interchangeable substitutes in "great factual detail." Id. at 1225. The district court denied the motion to dismiss the antitrust claims, explaining that the exclusion of "self-hosting of management software" did not render the relevant market inappropriate and that the resolution depended on issues of fact inappropriate for resolution at a motion to dismiss. Id.

Here, as in RealPage, Plaintiff's complaint does not suffer from a "fatal legal defect" as it adequately considers and rejects alternatives. First, with regard to the exclusion of in-house or SIS-based application services from the Online Application Processing Market, Plaintiff alleges that they are not a reasonable substitute for third-party processing. Third-party solutions have distinct features, such as better data security and payment processing, and SIS-based application services require [**50] substantial time investment by the College. FAC ¶¶ 100-05. Because these systems are so "barebones," Plaintiff alleges that Colleges would not turn to them in response to a small but significant, nontransitory increase in price. Id. at ¶ 106.

Similarly, Plaintiff excludes two-year, part-time, and graduate schools from the Admissions markets because of their distinct characteristics. Id. at ¶¶ 127, 139. The customer base is distinct because students seeking four-year or full-time undergraduate degree programs would not consider these—or could not consider them in the case of graduate programs—as alternatives. Id. Graduate program applications all require more specialized applications and processing, and graduate school application processing services are sold at a higher price. Id. at ¶¶ 97-98. Thus, according to Plaintiff, a small but significant, nontransitory increase in the price of College programs would not result in students applying to these other programs, nor would an increase in price result in Colleges using graduate products. Id. at ¶¶ 98, 127, 139. Plaintiff therefore plausibly alleges that these products are not interchangeable. The extent to which these markets are too [**51] narrow turns on issues of fact more appropriate for resolution at summary judgment.

b. Market Share

Defendant also contends that Plaintiff has miscalculated its market share. Def. Mot. Dismiss 30. "Courts generally require a 65% market share to establish a prima facie case of market power." Image Tech. Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1206 (9th Cir. 1997) (citing American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946)). "[A] market share of less than 50 percent is presumptively insufficient to establish market power." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1438. Though "the minimum showing of market share required in an attempt case is a lower quantum than the minimum showing required in an actual monopolization case, . . . . a market share of 30 percent is presumptively insufficient to establish the power to control price." Id. (finding that a market share of 44% was sufficient to support a finding of market power in an attempt case). "Where such an inference is not implausible on its face, an allegation of a specific market share is sufficient, as a matter of pleading, to withstand a motion for dismissal." Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 925 (9th Cir. 1980).

The parties primarily dispute the appropriate way to calculate market share. Defendant alleges that Plaintiff's market share—which it calculates by dividing Defendant's [*959] total number of members by the total number of Colleges—is [**52] only 24% and is, therefore, insufficient to constitute a monopoly. Def. Mot. Dismiss 30. Plaintiff, by contrast, calculates market share of the Online College Application Processing Market by looking to the number of undergraduate applications processed by Defendant. FAC ¶ 115. According to Plaintiff's calculation, this puts Defendant's total market share 60%. Id. The Court cannot say that Plaintiff's calculation is incorrect as a matter of law. Therefore, at this stage in the proceedings—where the Court is required to take Plaintiff's allegations as true—Plaintiff plausibly alleges monopoly power in the Online Application Processing Market.

c. Barriers to Entry

Defendant also contends that Plaintiff cannot demonstrate barriers to entry. Def. Mot. 33. "Entry barriers pertain not to those already in the market, but to those who would enter but are prevented from doing so." United States v. Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d 659, 671 n.21 (9th Cir. 1990). "A mere showing of substantial or even dominant market share alone cannot establish market power sufficient to carry out a predatory scheme. The plaintiff must show that new rivals are barred from entering the market and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to expand their output to challenge the predator's [**53] high price." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d 1421. "Barriers to entry may be defined as either additional long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants, or factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to incur monopoly returns." Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Corp., 6 F.3d 1422, 1427-28 (9th Cir. 1993). "The main sources of entry barriers are: (1) legal license; (2) control over an essential or superior resource; (3) entrenched buyer preferences for established brands or company reputations; . . . (4) capital market evaluations imposing higher capital costs on new entrants; and (5) "economies of scale . . . in some situations." Id. at 1428 n.4 (citing 2 Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law ¶ 409b at 299-300 (1978)).

Here, Defendant's argument focuses on the recent entry of the Coalition Application into the market. Def. Mot. 30-31. Defendant argues that the entry of the Coalition defeats Plaintiff's Section 2 claims because it shows that barriers to market entry are low. Id. But the mere fact that a competitor entered the market does not defeat Plaintiff's allegations that barriers to entry are high at this stage in the litigation. Whether the entry of the Coalition is sufficient to defeat this claim is a factual question.<sup>5</sup> The Court does not know, [**54] for example, the output or capacity of the Coalition or whether it poses any challenge Defendant's market power. See Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1440 \(9th Cir. 1995\). ("If the output or capacity of the new entrant is insufficient to take significant business away from the predator, they are unlikely to represent a challenge to the predator's market power."); Eastman Kodak, 125 F.3d at 1208 ("Although some new entry was possible, the record reflects substantial evidence of entry barriers sufficient to prevent Kodak's monopoly share from self-correcting."). The Court therefore declines to dismiss Plaintiff's monopoly claims on this basis.

ii. Conspiracy

As stated above, to succeed on a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, the [*960] plaintiff must demonstrate: "(1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) the specific intent to monopolize; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Paladin, 328 F.3d at 1158. Like claims arising under Section 1, conspiracy claims under Section 2 require the plaintiff to show "the existence of an agreement, . . . conspiracy[,] or concerted action." W. Penn Allegheny Health Sys., Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 99 \(3d Cir. 2010\); see also Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1491 \(3d Cir. 1991\) (when there was insufficient evidence of an agreement under Section 1, the Ninth Circuit also affirmed the district court's grant of summary judgment on the conspiracy to [**55] monopolize claim). As described above in Section II(A)(i), the Court has found that there are sufficient allegations of an agreement to withstand Defendant's motion to dismiss.

III. Defendant's Motion to Transfer Venue

Courts employ a two-step analysis when determining whether transfer is proper. First, a court must ask "whether the transferee district was one in which the action might have been brought by the plaintiff." Hoffman v. Blaski, 363 U.S. 335, 343-44, 80 S. Ct. 1084, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1254 \(1960\). Second, if the moving party has made this threshold showing, courts may consider "individualized, case-by-case consideration[s] of convenience and fairness." Stewart Org., Inc. v. Ricoh Corp., 487 U.S. 22, 29, 108 S. Ct. 2239, 101 L. Ed. 2d 22 \(1988\). In addition to considering the convenience of the parties and the witnesses, the court may consider, in "the interests of justice," a number of factors including the plaintiff's choice of forum, the location where the relevant agreements were negotiated and executed, the state that is most familiar with the governing law, the respective parties' contacts with the forum, the contacts relating to the plaintiff's cause of action in the chosen forum, the differences in the costs of litigation in the two forums, the availability of compulsory process to compel attendance of unwilling non-party witnesses, the ease [**56] of access to sources of proof, and the relevant public policy of the forum state, if any. Jones v. GNC Franchising, Inc., 211 F.3d 495, 498-99 \(2000\).

Defendant moves to transfer this action to the Eastern District of Virginia. Though this alternate venue is proper, the Court finds that Defendant has not demonstrated that the convenience of the parties and witnesses or any other factors outweigh the great weight accorded to Plaintiff's choice of forum. Accordingly, Defendant's Motion to Transfer is denied.

A. Venue is proper in the Eastern District of Virginia

Plaintiff does not dispute that the Eastern District of Virginia is a permissible forum. Pl. Opp'n Transfer 9 n.2, ECF 152. Defendant's principal place of business is Virginia. 28 U.S.C. § 1391\(b\)\(1\), \(c\)\(3\); see also 15 U.S.C. § 22 (an antitrust suit against a corporation may be brought in any district where the defendant transacts business). Accordingly, the decision whether to grant Defendant's motion to transfer is based on this Court's considerations of convenience and fairness.

B. Convenience and Fairness

i. Plaintiff's Choice of Forum

<sup>5</sup> The litany of cases cited by Defendant on this point are inapposite: they were all decided either on a motion to summary judgment or after trial. See Def. Mot. Dismiss 30-31 (citing cases).

Defendant asserts that Plaintiff's choice of forum should be given little weight because "the challenged conduct . . . lacks any substantial connection to Oregon." Def. Mot. Transfer 9, ECF 146. [**57] It argues that "the fact that ten colleges and universities in Oregon . . . accept The Common Application does not in and of itself make Oregon an appropriate venue" in light of [*961] the fact that Defendant provides products and services to colleges and applicants throughout the United States. Id. at 9-10. It further notes that none of the contractual negotiations or bad acts took place in Oregon. Id. at 10-11

A plaintiff's choice of forum is generally accorded great weight. *Lou v. Belzberg, 834 F.2d 730, 739 \(9th Cir. 1987\)*. A defendant must make a strong showing of inconvenience to upset a plaintiff's choice of forum. *Decker Coal Co. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 805 F.2d 834, 843 \(9th Cir. 1986\)* (explaining that a court should give the plaintiff's choice of forum great deference unless the defendant can show that other factors of convenience clearly outweigh the plaintiff's choice). However, a plaintiff's choice of forum may receive less weight "if the operative facts did not occur within the forum of original selection and that forum has no particular interest in the parties or the subject matter[.]" *Partney Constr., Inc. v. Ducks Unlimited, Inc., Civil No. 08-574-SU, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125164, 2008 WL 4838849, at \*2 \(D. Or. Nov. 3, 2008\)*; see also *Pac. Car & Foundry Co. v. Pence, 403 F.2d 949, 954 \(9th Cir. 1968\)* ("In judging the weight to be given such a choice, as is the case with other types of actions, consideration must be given to the extent both of the defendant's [**58] business contacts with the chosen forum and of the plaintiff's contacts, including those relating to his cause of action. If the operative facts have not occurred within the forum of original selection and that forum has no particular interest in the parties or the subject matter, the plaintiff's choice is entitled only to minimal consideration.").

Here, the Court finds that Plaintiff's choice of forum should receive substantial weight. First, this is not a case where Plaintiff has no substantial connection with Oregon. Cf. *Ventress v. Japan Airlines, 486 F.3d 1111, 1118-19 \(9th Cir. 2007\)* (upholding the District Court's transfer from California to Hawaii because, in part, the plaintiffs both resided in Hawaii). Rather, Oregon is Plaintiff's home forum. See *Adidas Am., Inc. v. Cougar Sport, Inc., 169 F.Supp.3d 1079, 1096 \(D. Or. 2016\)* ("The plaintiff's choice of forum is especially given deference where the plaintiff is a resident of the forum in which the action is brought."). Second, Plaintiff's residence is not the only connection to Oregon. Cf. *Partney Constr., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125164, 2008 WL 4838849, at \*2* (noting that the plaintiff's residence was the only connection to Oregon and all the conduct giving rise to the claims occurred in Nevada and would likely be governed by Nevada law). Defendant's alleged anticompetitive conduct—governed by federal law—occurred throughout the United [**59] States, including in Oregon where at least twelve member schools are located. Thus, Defendant has some business contacts relevant to this case in the forum state, and the Court has some interest outside of Plaintiff in this subject matter. This factor, therefore, weighs heavily against transfer.

ii. Convenience of the Parties and Witnesses

Defendant argues that the Eastern District of Virginia is more convenient for both party and non-party witnesses and will reduce the financial burden on Defendant. Def. Mot. Transfer 12. First, Defendant argues that Plaintiff's monopolization claim will center on Defendant's office in Virginia, which is only seven miles from the federal courthouse. Id. at 12-14 (citing Adam Decl. Ex. F, ECF 147). In addition, Defendant asserts that Virginia is a more convenient location for non-party witnesses, including member and non-members educational institutions, vendors, and partners, who will likely reside outside the 100-mile radius of Portland. Id. at 15. Here, Defendant also emphasizes the ease [*962] of access to third parties in Virginia. Id. at 16.

"Convenience of witnesses is often the most important factor in determining whether or not to transfer a given case." *Partney Constr., Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125164, 2008 WL 4838849, at \*3* (citation omitted). The [**60] "convenience of the witnesses" factor takes into account the convenience to both party and non-party witnesses; however, courts give more consideration to non-party witnesses, as opposed to witnesses who are employees of a party to the litigation. Id. The court considers not only the number of witnesses located in the respective districts, but also the nature and quality of their testimony, as it relates to the issues in the case. Id.

Defendant has not made a sufficiently strong showing of inconvenience to upset Plaintiff's choice of forum. To the extent that proceeding in Oregon presents a hardship to Defendant and its party witnesses—including its executives and other employees—proceeding in Virginia would present the same hardships to Plaintiff and its party witnesses, including executives and other employees. Compare Rickard Decl. ¶ 7 (noting that 80 of 87 employees work in the Virginia office, including key executive witnesses) and ¶¶ 10-12 (noting that trial is currently scheduled for Defendant's busiest months), ECF 148, with Trachtenbarg Decl. ¶¶ 3-5 (noting 147 of 165 its employees are located in Portland as are executives who are likely to be witnesses) and ¶ 6 (also noting [**61] that trial is scheduled during its busiest months), ECF 154. Thus, transfer of venue would merely shift inconvenience of trial from one party to another. See Decker Coal Co., 805 F.2d at 844 (when witnesses were located in both districts, "[t]he transfer would merely shift rather than eliminate the inconvenience"). This is insufficient to justify transfer of this case to the Eastern District of Virginia.

As to nonparties, the Court notes that—with the information provided by both Plaintiff and Defendant—it is difficult to tell not only the number of witnesses located within the respective districts but also the nature and quality of their testimony. For example, Defendant notes that there are "three times as many" institutions of higher education within 100 miles of the Virginia courthouse and more elite or public institutions. But neither party has indicated that witnesses from these schools will be called or whether they are relevant to this case. Indeed, Plaintiff has indicated that it may call third-party schools—both members and non-members—located throughout the country and outside the subpoena power of both courts. See Pl. Opp'n (citing Compl. ¶¶ 29, 54-56) (identifying colleges in Kansas, New York, South Carolina, [**62] California, and Louisiana).

In addition, no individuals or organizations have been identified or noted for deposition. See Alfonso Decl. ¶ 4 (no nonparty depositions have yet been identified), ECF 153. Though subpoenas for documentary evidence have been served on some third-party competitors within the subpoena power of the Eastern District of Virginia, see Adam Decl. ¶¶ 2-5, Exs. A-D, there is no evidence of the substance or materiality of their testimony or any indication that either party plans to call these third parties as witnesses, Adidas Am., 169 F. Supp. 3d at 1096 ("As neither party identifies its witnesses with specificity, the Court finds it difficult [to] meaningfully evaluate the effect that a change of venue would have on any witnesses."). Thus, Defendant has not made a strong showing that the convenience of either the party or nonparty witnesses justify transferring this case.

iii. Other Factors in the Interest of Justice

As to the remaining factors, the Court finds that they are, on balance, neutral and [**63] therefore have little impact on this determination.

The place of negotiation and execution of the relevant agreements is neutral. Defendant argues that the place of negotiation was Virginia, where Defendant [**63] is located, and that this factor weighs in favor of transfer. The Court disagrees. The contracts in this case were negotiated by phone and email in Virginia and throughout the United States, wherever the relevant member school was located. Rickard Decl. ¶¶ 5-6. In other words, "there is no one prominent location for negotiation or execution that would sway this Court's determination under this factor." Shee Atika Languages, LLC v. Kershner, No. 107CV00009JWSDMS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130940, 2008 WL 11429798, at \*5 \(D. Alaska Feb. 27, 2008\) (where the parties negotiated by phone and email and the parties were located in Virginia, Maine, and Alaska and not "one place" it had no bearing on the courts analysis under § 1404).

Overall, the interest of judicial efficiency is a neutral factor. The relative court congestion and time of trial in each forum weighs in favor of transfer. As Defendant notes, the Court's recent scheduling order, which set trial just under two years from now in August of 2020, is consistent with the "26.5 month median timeline from the filing of a civil case to trial in the District of Oregon." Id. at 18 (citing Adam Decl. Ex. E). By comparison, the Eastern District of Virginia is a "rocket docket," such that the median timeline from filing to trial is 10.8 [**64] months. Id. As Plaintiff points out, however, the Court has already familiarized itself with the issues of the case, handled multiple motions, and set a global case schedule. In addition, this case has been pending in this district and the Ninth Circuit for over four years now. This factor weighs in favor of Plaintiff. See Commodity Futures Trading Commc'n v. Savage, 611 F.2d 270, 279 \(9th Cir. 1979\) (affirming the district court's refusal to transfer and noting that "[t]he district court was familiar with the case and transfer may have led to delay."); DIRECTV, Inc. v. EQ Stuff, Inc., 207 F. Supp. 2d 1077, 1083 \(C.D. Cal. 2002\) (finding that the "familiarity of the Court with the relevant issues of a case" weighed against transfer where the district court had invested time and resources in the case, including issuing a TRO and a Preliminary Injunction).

As to the familiarity of each forum with the applicable law, the law governing Plaintiff's antitrust claims is federal and, therefore, the Court can presume all federal courts have equal familiarity with the applicable law. The Court finds that this factor is neutral.

The Court concludes that the evidence is located in multiple locations, though perhaps more evidence will be located in Virginia where Defendant is located. However, the evidence is largely documentary evidence that can [**65] be easily transmitted from afar. Adidas Am., 169 F.Supp.3d at 1097 ("With regard to documents and records, transporting documents does not generally create a burden due to technological advances in document storage and retrieval."). Accordingly, this factor is neutral.

CONCLUSION

The Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss [137], Request for Judicial Notice [138], and Motion to Change or Transfer Venue [146]. The Court also DENIES Plaintiff's Request for Judicial Notice [155].

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON UNFAIR COMPETITION CLAIM; FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

Re: Dkt. No. 896

A jury returned a verdict in favor of Plaintiffs BladeRoom Group Ltd. and Bripco (UK) Ltd. (collectively, "BladeRoom") on claims against Defendants Emerson Electric Co., Emerson Network Power Solutions, Inc. and Liebert Corporation (collectively, "Emerson") for misappropriation of trade secrets and breach of contract. BladeRoom now moves the court for judgment in its favor on the remaining claim under California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), Business and Profession [<sup>*4</sup>] Code § 17200 et seq. Dkt. No. 896.

Federal jurisdiction arises pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332. Having carefully considered the trial evidence in conjunction with the parties' pleadings, the court has determined that BladeRoom did not prove a UCL violation by a preponderance of the evidence. Accordingly, BladeRoom's motion for judgment will be denied consistent with the findings of fact and conclusions of law established below.

I. FINDINGS OF FACT

1. There is no dispute that Plaintiffs BladeRoom Group, Ltd. and Bripco (UK) Ltd. are companies organized under the laws of England with registered offices located in Cheltenham, England. Second Am. Compl. ("SAC"), Dkt. No. 107, at ¶¶ 4-5; Answers, Dkt. Nos. 231-233, at ¶¶ 4-5.
2. There is no dispute that Defendant Emerson Electric Co. is a company organized under the laws of Missouri with a principal place of business at St. Louis, Missouri. SAC, at ¶ 7; Answers, at ¶ 7.
3. There is no dispute that Defendant Emerson Network Power Solutions, Inc. is a company organized under the laws of Delaware with a principal place of business at Columbus, Ohio. SAC, at ¶ 8; Answers, at ¶ 8.
4. There is no dispute that Defendant Liebert Corporation is a company organized under the laws of Delaware [<sup>*5</sup>] with a principal place of business at Columbus, Ohio. SAC, at ¶ 9; Answers, at ¶ 9.
5. Emerson Network Power Solutions, Inc. and Liebert Corporation are 100% owned by Vertiv Group Corporation. Dkt. No. 186.
6. BladeRoom and Emerson are competitors in the field of modular data center design and construction. Trial Tr., at 622:12-19; 1764:22-1765:6; 2439:4-2440:22; 3355:24-3356:16; Trial Ex. 823; Trial Ex. 1084.

7. BladeRoom and Emerson were the only two companies that competed to design and construct Facebook's data center project known as "Lulea 2." Trial Tr., at 1677:2-1678:7; 1858:7-10.
8. In July, 2012, BladeRoom submitted a proposal to Facebook to design and build a data hall for Lulea 2. Trial Tr., at 617:10-15; 1888:19-1889:2; Trial Ex. 753.
9. Facebook ultimately selected Emerson over BladeRoom to design and construct Lulea 2. Trial Tr., at 1858:11-14; Trial Ex. 1735.
10. Emerson proposed designs and methods of construction for Lulea 2 to Facebook during a meeting on October 30, 2012. Trial Tr., at 2086:14-2087:4; Trial Ex. 904.
11. The October 30th design was the basis for, and was actually incorporated into, the construction of Lulea 2. Trial Tr., at 2086:9-2152:2.
12. A jury found [*6] that BladeRoom proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the designs and methods described in Court Exhibit 2 and designated therein as Trade Secret 1 and Combination Trade Secret 8 qualified as trade secrets. Dkt. No. 867. The court likewise finds based on the evidence admitted at trial.
13. Components of Emerson's October 30th design for Lulea 2 were substantially derived from the designs and methods described in Court Exhibit 2 and designated therein as Trade Secret 1 and Combination Trade Secret 8. Trial Tr., at 2090:8-2116:10.
14. A jury found that BladeRoom proved by a preponderance of the evidence that Emerson improperly disclosed or used the designs and methods described in Court Exhibit 2 and designated therein as Trade Secret 1 and Combination Trade Secret 8. Dkt. No. 867. The court likewise finds based on the evidence admitted at trial.
15. A jury found that Emerson's misappropriation of the designs and methods described in Court Exhibit 2 and designated therein as Trade Secret 1 and Combination Trade Secret 8 was a substantial factor in causing BladeRoom harm and causing Emerson to be unjustly enriched. Dkt. No. 867. The court likewise finds based on the evidence admitted [*7] at trial.
16. Liebert filed provisional U.S. Patent Application No. 61/886,402 on October 3, 2013. Mar Decl., Dkt. No. 894, at Ex. 5.
17. Liebert's U.S. Patent No. 9,572,288 issued on February 14, 2017, and claims priority to the '402 provisional application. Trial Ex. 1260.
18. The '288 patent covers some of the same components described in Emerson's October 30th design for Lulea 2. Trial Tr., at 2127:3-6.
19. Many of the figures in the '288 patent are the same as figures used in Emerson's October 30th design for Lulea 2. Compare Trial Ex. 904 with Trial Ex. 1260.
20. There is no evidence that Emerson has ever sought to enforce the '288 patent.
21. There is no evidence regarding whether, and to what extent, the '288 patent gives Emerson a share of a particular market.
22. In its 2014 Annual Report, Emerson featured photos of the Lulea 2 project and claimed that, in collaboration with Facebook, it had created "the new 'rapid deployment data center'" approach for Lulea 2, which it described as a "new-to-the-world data center approach." Mar Decl., at Ex. 6.
23. Emerson referenced the design and construction of Lulea 2 in marketing materials and on its website. Trial Tr., at 1721:17-1732:2; Dkt. 831, pp. 39-40 at 99:23-121:03, 125:7-160:22; Trial Exs. 823, 1084; [*8] Mar Decl., at Ex. 1.

24. Emerson hosted Microsoft for a tour of Lulea 2 as part of its efforts to win Microsoft as a modular data center customer. Trial Ex. 980.
25. Emerson hosted a large technology company and a large telecommunications company on tours of Lulea 2 in an attempt to gain their data center business. Trial Tr., at 2146:23-2147:7.
26. Emerson proposed to use versions of the designs and methods used to construct Lulea 2 to other prospective customers. Trial Tr., at 2146:7-22.
27. In March, 2014, BladeRoom received an email from a "super important" client suggesting that Facebook's "new way of building a data center" was similar to BladeRoom's designs and method. Trial Tr., at 614:19-615:2; Trial Ex. 32.
28. Due to the similarities between Facebook's "new way of building a data center" and BladeRoom's designs and method, there was a "question mark" over whether BladeRoom had created its own technology. Trial Tr., at 622:7-11.
29. Google and Microsoft were interested in BladeRoom's data center product, but each company stopped communicating with BladeRoom after the "question mark over the technology has taken place." Trial Tr., at 622:12-19.
30. BladeRoom originally alleged claims [*9] under the UCL's unlawful and unfair "prongs." Dkt. No. 106-4, at ¶¶ 149-157.
31. The court previously determined that BladeRoom's UCL claim under the unlawful prong was preempted by the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act. Dkt. No. 494.
32. BladeRoom moves for judgment against Emerson on the UCL claim under the unfair prong. Dkt. No. 896.
34. BladeRoom argued at the July 18th hearing that "Emerson is harming Consumers at the market for the technology by wrongfully 'passing off' this invention as its own." Id.
35. At the July 18th hearing, BladeRoom identified two ways that Emerson "passes" off the invention as its own: (1) "To potential customers through marketing and sales presentations," and (2) "To the patent office and to the public through its unlawfully-obtained patent." Id.
36. BladeRoom argued at the July 18th hearing that these instances of "non-preempted" unfair conduct are "the gravamen" of the UCL claim. Id.

II. CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

37. An "unauthorized use [*10]" need not extend to every aspect or feature of the trade secret; use of any substantial portion of the secret is sufficient to subject the actor to liability" for misappropriation. Restatement (Third) of Unfair Competition § 40 cmt. c (1995).
38. "[T]he actor need not use the trade secret in its original form" to be liable for misappropriation of trade secrets. Id.

39. "[A]n actor is liable for using the trade secret with independently created improvements or modifications if the result is substantially derived from the trade secret." Id.; accord Mangren Res. & Dev. Corp. v. Nat'l Chem. Co., Inc., 87 F.3d 937, 944 (7th Cir. 1996).

40. A patent provides its owner with "the right to exclude others from making, using, offering for sale, or selling the invention throughout the United States." 35 U.S.C. § 154\(a\)\(1\)

41. The UCL broadly prohibits business practices that are unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200; Kwikset v. Super. Ct., 51 Cal. 4th 310, 320, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d 877 (2011).

42. The UCL's "purpose 'is to protect both consumers and competitors by promoting fair competition in commercial markets for goods and services,'" and its language is framed broadly in service of that purpose. Kwikset, 51 Cal. 4th at 320 (quoting Kasky v. Nike, Inc., 27 Cal. 4th 939, 949, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296, 45 P.3d 243 (2002)).

43. To have standing under the UCL, a plaintiff must have "lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204.

44. "There are innumerable ways in which economic injury from unfair competition may be shown." Kwikset, 51 Cal. 4th at 323.

45. Injunctive [*11] relief and restitution are possible remedies for UCL violations. See Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1146, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003).

46. "Although the unfair competition law's scope is sweeping, it is not unlimited." Cel-Tech Commc'nns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 182, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). "Courts may not simply impose their own notions of the day as to what is fair or unfair." Id.

47. "There is authority that the test to determine whether a business practice is unfair differs depending on whether the plaintiff in a UCL case is a competitor of the defendant or a consumer." Drum v. San Fernando Valley Bar Ass'n, 182 Cal. App. 4th 247, 106 Cal. Rptr. 3d 46, (2010).

48. "When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's 'unfair' act or practice invokes section 17200, the word 'unfair' in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 187.

49. Under the UCL's unfair prong, and as equally applicable in antitrust, "[i]njury to a competitor is not equivalent to injury to competition . . ." Id. at 186 (emphasis added).

50. "[I]njuries which result from increased competition . . . are not encompassed by the antitrust laws." Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Cal., 190 F.3d 1051, 1057 (9th Cir. 199).

51. Neither [*12] Spring Design, Inc. v. Barnesandnoble.com, LLC, No. C 09-05185 JW, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136569, 2010 WL 5422556 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 27, 2010), nor Allergan, Inc. v. Athena Cosmetics, Inc., 640 F.3d 1377 (Fed. Cir. 2011), hold that misleading consumers about the inventor or owner of technology is a violation of the antitrust laws.

52. A UCL claim must be proven by a preponderance of the evidence. See Herman & MacLean v. Huddleston, 459 U.S. 375, 387, 103 S. Ct. 683, 74 L. Ed. 2d 548 (1983); see also People v. First Federal Credit Corp., 104 Cal. App. 4th 721, 732, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 542 (2002).

53. A claim is preempted by the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act ("CUTSA") if it is based on the "same nucleus of facts" as the misappropriation of trade secrets claim for relief. K.C. Multimedia, Inc. v. Bank of America Tech. &

Operations, Inc., 171 Cal. App. 4th 939, 954, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 247 (2009) (quoting Digital Envoy, Inc. v. Google, Inc., 370 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1035 (N.D. Cal. 2005)).

54. CUTSA preemption "is not triggered where the facts in an independent claim are similar to, but distinct from, those underlying the misappropriation claim." Gabriel Techs. Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., No. 08cv1992-MMA(POR), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98379, 2009 WL 3326631, at *11 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 3, 2009).

55. BladeRoom has standing under the UCL because it claims to have lost business opportunities as a result of Emerson's "passing off," which placed a "question mark" over the ownership of BladeRoom's technology.

56. BladeRoom's UCL claim under the unfair prong is not preempted because the "gravamen" of the claim is based on conduct distinct from that underlying its claim for trade secret misappropriation.

57. BladeRoom did not prove that Emerson violated the UCL's unfair prong, because the fact that components of Emerson's October 30th design for Lulea 2 were substantially derived [*13] from the designs and methods underlying BladeRoom's trade secrets constitutes an injury to BladeRoom's business interests as a competitor, not an injury to competition or an incipient violation of antitrust law.

58. BladeRoom did not prove that Emerson violated the UCL's unfair prong, because the fact that Emerson misappropriated BladeRoom's trade secrets through disclosure or use constitutes an injury to BladeRoom's business interests as a competitor, not an injury to competition or an incipient violation of antitrust law.

59. BladeRoom did not prove that Emerson violated the UCL's unfair prong, because the fact that Emerson "passed off" as its own the designs and methods it used to construct Lulea 2 constitutes an injury to BladeRoom's business interests as a competitor, not an injury to competition or an incipient violation of antitrust law.

60. BladeRoom did not prove that Emerson violated the UCL's unfair prong, because there is no evidence that Liebert's ownership of the '288 patent constitutes an injury to competition or an incipient violation of antitrust law in the absence of corresponding evidence that Liebert exercised its right to exclude others from the technology disclosed in the '288 patent [*14].

61. BladeRoom has not satisfied its burden to prove a violation of the UCL's unfair prong by a preponderance of the evidence.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

PER CURIAM: Samuel W. Fields, a bail bondsman, appeals pro se the dismissal of his lawsuit against Douglas County Sheriff Ken McGovern and Deputy Deborah Parker for failing to state a legal claim for relief. Fields' suit claimed the defendants had wrongfully used incorrect identifying information for a defendant in preparing a bail bond facesheet. For reasons we more fully explain below, we see no error in the district court's dismissal of Fields' lawsuit and affirm.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Because Fields represents himself in this litigation, the underlying facts of the case are difficult to glean from the record on appeal. It is undisputed, however, that Fields is a bondsman with Applejacks Bail Bonds and is approved by the Douglas County District Court to act as a bond surety within the State of Kansas. It is also undisputed that Fields entered a surety agreement with Larry Raymond Brown II on December 3, 2015, for posting a bond for [*2] a court appearance in Atchison County. Many of the remaining facts pertinent to Fields' suit are murky.

On November 19, 2015, the Atchison County District Court issued a bench warrant for the arrest of Larry Raymond Brown III on charges of distribution of cocaine, failing to affix tax stamps, and use of a telecommunications device in the sale of a controlled substance. The warrant described Brown as a black male, 5'5" tall, and 155 pounds with a birth year of 1985. At some point, the Atchison County arrest warrant was entered into the National Crime Information Center (NCIC) database, listing Larry Raymond Brown II with various aliases, including Larry Raymond Brown III.

On December 3, 2015, an individual named Larry Raymond Brown II was issued a citation by the City of Lawrence for battery and possession of marijuana. The Lawrence municipal citation listed Brown's year of birth as 1985, registered address, and driver's license number and described Brown as a black male, 5'5" tall, weighing 160 pounds. He was subsequently arrested on the outstanding Atchison County arrest warrant. The booking information listed only Larry Raymond Brown but also identified Brown by his address and date [*3] of birth. Fields signed an Atchison County appearance bond as surety for Larry Raymond Brown II and listed the same address for Brown as listed in the citation and the booking information. Fields stood as surety in the amount of $15,000 for Brown's court appearance in Atchison County on December 11, 2015.

The record is not clear about whether Brown appeared for the December 11 hearing in Atchison County. He did appear for his arraignment in Douglas County on December 22, 2015. But, Brown failed to appear for subsequent hearings in both Douglas and Atchison Counties. The Douglas County District Court issued a bench warrant against Brown for failing to appear on January 19, 2016. The Atchison County District Court forfeited Brown's bond for his failure to appear on January 20, 2016, and issued a warrant for Brown's arrest. The order provided an opportunity for Fields to avoid payment of the $15,000 bond if he provided the district court with a reason to set aside the order before March 18, 2016.

On March 10, 2016, Fields filed a pro se brief, arguing that he should be relieved of his obligations as surety because discrepancies in the names assigned to Brown in the various court documents [*4] prevented Fields from securing Brown's capture in Kansas or another state. Fields acknowledged that Brown signed the bond agreement as Larry Raymond Brown II. Fields failed to attend the scheduled hearing on March 28, 2016. The Atchison County District Court rejected Fields' argument and ordered Fields to pay $15,000 to the court.

On January 18, 2017, Fields filed a petition in the Douglas County District Court, initiating this current lawsuit. He claimed McGovern and Porter were negligent in preparing a bail bond facesheet with incorrect identifying information for Brown. Fields also claimed that protections from liability for McGovern and Porter violated federal antitrust law. Additionally, Fields claimed that McGovern and Porter had damaged his professional reputation by preventing him from capturing Brown out of state and claimed the bond contract should be declared void as unenforceable. Fields sought damages in the amount of $15,000, legal expenses in the amount of $3,000, and exemplary or punitive damages in the amount of $75,000.

McGovern and Porter filed an answer, arguing Fields' petition should be dismissed on the following grounds: (1) Fields failed to state a valid claim; [*5] (2) the district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction and proper venue; (3) Fields could not pursue a claim for punitive or exemplary damages; (4) Fields' own negligence excused any negligence on the part of the defendants; and (5) Fields lacked privity of contract with them, thus they lacked any duty to Fields. Fields filed a pro se pleading in response, generally rehashing the arguments of his petition.

Subsequently, Fields filed a motion for summary judgment, and the defendants moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim. On January 2, 2018, the district court entered a journal entry dismissing the petition for failing to state a cause of action upon which relief might be granted.

Fields timely appeals.

DID THE DISTRICT COURT ERR IN DISMISSING THE PETITION FOR FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM?

When we review the dismissal of a petition for failing to state a claim, we consider the well-pleaded facts in a light most favorable to the plaintiff, which requires us to assume the truth of those facts as well as any reasonable inference that may be drawn from them. If the facts as pled state any claim upon which relief might be granted, then dismissal was improper. See Cohen v. Battaglia, 296 Kan. 542, 545-46, 293 P.3d 752 (2013). We do not resolve any [*6] factual disputes when deciding a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, and dismissal is appropriate only when the allegations in the petition clearly demonstrate that the plaintiff lacks a legal claim for relief. Steckline Communications, Inc. v. Journal Broadcast Group of KS, Inc., 305 Kan. 761, Syl. ¶2, 388 P.3d 84 (2017).

While Fields' factual allegations have remained relatively consistent, his legal theories for relief provide us with a moving target. Essentially, Fields contends that McGovern and Porter committed a fraud or misrepresentation on Fields by characterizing Brown as "Larry Raymond Brown II" when the arrest warrant from Atchison County designated "Larry Raymond Brown III." Before the district court Fields' legal theories rested upon K.S.A. 2017 Supp. 60-209; K.S.A. 2017 Supp. 22-2802; the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. (2012); and the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. (2012). On appeal, Fields' theory shifts to Kansas Supreme Court Rule 114 (2018 Kan. S. Ct. R. 186). Because Fields has not argued these other legal theories on appeal, we consider them abandoned. See State v. Reu-El, 306 Kan. 460, 471, 394 P.3d 884 (2017) (issues raised in district court but not advanced on appeal are considered abandoned).

This failure notwithstanding, given the wide parameters of appellate review following dismissal of a petition for failure to state a claim, all of Fields' various theories, [*7] plus any applicable theories not articulated by him, will be considered to determine whether any claim based on the alleged facts would support a judgment in favor of Fields. Unfortunately for Fields, none of the authorities cited by him impose a duty on a county sheriff in favor of a surety to ensure that a criminal appearance bond correctly names the individual subject to the appearance bond.

K.S.A. 2017 Supp. 60-209 provides rules for pleading particular matters including fraud and libel or slander. See K.S.A. 2017 Supp. 60-209(b), (j). The statute does not create a duty or a cause of action. K.S.A. 2017 Supp. 22-2802 directs the payment of bonds by individuals or sureties into the court. It does not address the authority or responsibility of the sheriff with respect to the bond and does not impose liability on the sheriff towards a surety. Similarly, Supreme Court Rule 114(a) permits authorized surety companies to post bonds set by the sheriff or the court clerk. The record establishes that the Atchison County District Court set the bond amount. Supreme Court Rule 114 is therefore inapplicable. But, even if Supreme Court Rule 114(a) applied to the bond guaranteed by Fields in this case, the rule does not impose any duty or responsibility on the sheriff.

By definition, RICO also does not apply to the sheriff's conduct. "Racketeering [*8] activity" is defined as "any act or threat involving murder, kidnapping, gambling, arson, robbery, bribery, extortion, dealing in obscene matter, or dealing in a controlled substance or listed chemical" or as "any act which is indictable" under a list of specific crimes. See 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1). Because the sheriff's or deputy's conduct cannot be classified as a crime, particularly a crime listed by RICO, this Act does not apply here.

For similar reasons, the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, also does not impose liability upon the sheriff or deputy. This Act prohibits contracts, conspiracies, or agreements to restrain trade or commerce among states or with foreign nations. Nothing about the sheriff's alleged intentional or negligent misstatement in naming Brown restrains trade or commerce with other states. Furthermore, to the extent the bonding authorization in Douglas County constitutes a restraint on trade, it is the Douglas County District Court, not the sheriff, which imposes that restraint. Any incidental restraint on trade imposed by state government in regulating industry in the interest of public health and welfare is immune from the Sherman Anti-Trust Act under the Parker doctrine. See generally North Carolina State Bd. of Dental Examiners v. FTC, 574 U.S. , 135 S. Ct. 1101, 1110, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 (2015); [*9] Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-51, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943).

Fields has cited no caselaw in which a court has imposed liability upon a sheriff for negligently or intentionally providing the wrong name for a bail bond agreement, and independent research has discovered none. In order to establish a claim for fraud or misrepresentation (intentional or negligent), Fields would be required to demonstrate, among other things, that the information provided by the sheriff was false. See Stechschulte v. Jennings, 297 Kan.

2, 19, 298 P.3d 1083 (2013) (elements of fraud); Rinehart v. Morton Buildings, Inc., 297 Kan. 926, 937, 305 P.3d 622 (2013) (elements of negligent misrepresentation). According to the record, the individual arrested by Douglas County law enforcement officers on the Atchison County arrest warrant went by several variations of the same name: Larry Raymond Brown, Larry Raymond Brown II, and Larry Raymond Brown III. The record does not indicate which one of these names is Brown's legal name. The booking form listed the arrested person as "Larry Raymond Brown." The Lawrence police citation issued to Brown at the time of his offense was presumably based on Brown's driver's license information and listed "Larry Raymond Brown II" as the name of the offender. Fields admitted that on December 3, 2015, the NCIC listed an active warrant out of Atchison County for Larry Raymond [*10] Brown II. The facts, even when viewed in a light most favorable to Fields, do not establish that the sheriff provided him with false information regarding Brown's name. It establishes only that the name provided in the bond does not match the name provided in the arrest warrant. Fields provides no authority requiring the sheriff to conduct an independent inquiry into an offender's name before booking him or her into jail or issuing a bond.

If the NCIC entry did not match the name of the person against whom the arrest warrant was issued, the error rests with the party entering the information into the NCIC system, which was presumably Atchison County, not Douglas County. Fields' factual assertions in his petition contend as much: "Samuel Fields, alleges misuse of NCIC, and misuse of Kansas Hot Files, by the Atchison County Sheriff's Office, which caused Lawrence Police Department and the Douglas County Sheriff's Office, to error and arrest and book Larry Raymond Brown 2nd, rather than Larry Raymond Brown 3rd." (Emphasis added.) Our Supreme Court has held that "one who negligently creates a dangerous condition cannot escape liability for the natural and probable consequences thereof, [*11] although the innocent act of a third person may have contributed to the final result." Steele v. Rapp, 183 Kan. 371, 377, 327 P.2d 1053 (1958) (quoting Rowell v. City of Wichita, 162 Kan. 294, 303, 176 P.2d 590 [1947]). Therefore, even if Larry Raymond Brown II was not the offender's true identity, Fields cannot demonstrate that McGovern intended to mislead Fields or that McGovern was negligent in relying on the entry in the NCIC system to issue the bond in the name of Larry Raymond Brown II.

The district court properly dismissed the petition for failing to state a claim upon which relief might be granted.

Affirmed.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

ROSENSTENGEL, [*3] District Judge:

Pending before the Court are three motions to dismiss (Docs. 83, 84, & 85) filed by Defendants Becton, Dickinson, and Company ("Becton"); Premier, Inc. ("Premier"); Vizient, Inc. ("Vizient"); Cardinal Health, Inc. ("Cardinal"); Owens & Minor Distribution, Inc. ("Owens"); McKesson Medical-Surgical, Inc., ("McKesson"); and Henry Schein, Inc. ("Schein") (collectively "Defendants"). The Court heard arguments from counsel on October 17, 2018, and took the motions under advisement (see Docs. 112, 116). For the reasons set forth below, the Court now grants the motions to dismiss and dismisses the Amended Complaint (Doc. 52) with prejudice.

FACTUAL & PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs Marion Diagnostic Center, LLC; Marion Healthcare, LLC; and Andron Medical Associates (collectively "Plaintiffs") are healthcare providers who assert that Defendants are part of a conspiracy to charge inflated prices for medical supplies, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (see Doc. 52).<sup>1</sup>

Generally, when a healthcare provider wants to purchase medical supplies, it becomes a member of a group purchasing organization ("GPO") (Doc. 52, p. 2). GPOs aggregate the purchasing power of healthcare providers [*4] and, ideally, negotiate significant discounts with medical supply manufacturers on behalf of its members.<sup>2</sup> Once the GPO and the manufacturer agree on the terms of a sale, the GPO notifies the healthcare provider of the proposed contract (Doc. 52, p. 2). The contract, referred to as a "net dealer contract," is not binding on the provider (Id. at p. 11). But if the provider decides to move forward with the net dealer contract, it enters into a "distributor agreement" with a medical supply distributor (Id. at p. 12). In that agreement, the distributor agrees to purchase the medical supplies from the manufacturer and resell them to the provider according to the terms of the net dealer contract, plus an additional cost (Id.). The distributor also enters into a "dealer notification agreement" with the manufacturer to sell the supplies under the terms of the net dealer contract (Id.).

<sup>2</sup> GPOs and the Commoditization of Medical Devices, DRG, <https://decisionresourcesgroup.com/drg-blog/medtech-perspectives/gpos-and-the-commoditization-of-medical-devices/> (last visited Nov. 29, 2018).

According to the Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs have purchased hypodermic products<sup>3</sup> from Becton, a medical supply manufacturer, through the process described above (Id. at pp. 3-4). Premier and Vizient are GPOs involved in those transactions, and Cardinal, Owens, Schein, and McKesson are Becton distributors [*5] (Id. at p. 4). Plaintiffs allege Defendants are engaged in a conspiracy to prevent competition and restrain trade by negotiating and enforcing net dealer contracts that employ penalty pricing rebate provisions and sole or dual source provisions (Id. at pp. 11-13).<sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs also assert Becton has engaged in other anticompetitive acts in aid of the conspiracy, including deception, disparagement, patent infringement, and false advertising against one of its competitors (Id. at pp. 13-15).

Defendants now move the Court to dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure \("Rule"\) 12\(b\)\(6\), arguing Plaintiffs do not have antitrust standing to bring their claims (Doc. 83).

Rule 12(B)(6) MOTION TO DISMISS

The purpose of a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion is to decide the adequacy of the complaint, not to determine the merits of the case or decide whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail. Gibson v. City of Chicago, 910 F.2d 1510, 1520 \(7th Cir. 1990\). To survive a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, a plaintiff only needs to allege enough facts to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face. Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\). A plaintiff need not plead detailed factual allegations, but must provide "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements." Id. For purposes of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), the Court must accept all well-pleaded facts as true [*6] and draw all possible inferences in favor of the plaintiff. McReynolds v. Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc., 694 F.3d 873, 879 \(7th Cir. 2012\).

DISCUSSION

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits any "contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States. . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 4 the Clayton Act grants private citizens standing to enforce the Sherman Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) ("[A]ny person . . . injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws . . . shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."). Although the Clayton Act broadly defines the class of persons who can bring claims under the Sherman Act, the Supreme Court has set forth numerous doctrines that limit the circumstances under which someone may recover from an antitrust violator. Loeb Industries, Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp., 306 F.3d 469, 480 \(7th Cir. 2002\). The "direct purchaser rule," a doctrine announced in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 \(1977\), forms the crux of Defendants' motion to dismiss.

In Illinois Brick, building owners brought antitrust claims against manufacturers of concrete blocks, based on allegations of price-fixing. Id. at 726-27. The defendants sold the blocks primarily to masonry contractors, who then submitted bids to general contractors for construction projects. Id. at 726. The [*7] general contractors, in turn, submitted bids to customers such as the plaintiffs. Id. The Supreme Court found the plaintiffs lacked standing to bring their antitrust claims because they were not direct purchasers of the blocks. Id. at 746-47. "The only way in which the antitrust violation alleged could have injured [the plaintiffs] is if all or part of the overcharge was passed on by the masonry and general contractors to [the plaintiffs], rather than being absorbed at the first two levels of distribution." Id. at 727. The Court explained that allowing indirect purchasers to assert "pass-on arguments" would lead to "uncertainties and difficulties" in tracing the economic adjustments made throughout the chain of distribution and leave antitrust defendants susceptible to double recovery. Id. at 731-32. "Permitting the use of pass-on theories under [§] 4 would transform treble-damages actions into massive efforts to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that could have absorbed part of the overcharge from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers." Id. at 737. Additionally, "potential plaintiffs at each level in the distribution chain are in a position to assert conflicting claims to a common fund the amount [*8] of the alleged overcharge by contending that the entire overcharge was absorbed at that particular level in the chain." Id.

The Seventh Circuit recognizes an exception to the direct purchaser rule in cases involving conspiracies, Fontana Aviation, Inc. v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 617 F.2d 478 (7th Cir. 1980); Paper Systems Inc. v. Nippon Paper Industries Co., Ltd., 281 F.3d 629 (7th Cir. 2002), but here, the parties disagree as to what types of conspiracies qualify for the exception.

In Fontana, the plaintiff, Fontana, was a corporation that sold aviation aircrafts and performed custom installations of avionics equipment. Fontana, 617 F.2d at 479. Cessna, the defendant, manufactured aviation aircrafts and manufactured and sold its own line of avionics. Id. Fontana was a Cessna dealer, but it purchased its Cessna products from Aviation Activities, Inc., and not directly from Cessna. Id. Another relevant party, Cessna Finance Corporation, provided financing for distributors, dealers, and purchasers of Cessna products. Id. Fontana filed suit against Cessna, alleging it conspired with Aviation Activities, Inc. and Cessna Finance Corporation to unreasonably restrain trade via price-fixing and to monopolize the selling and installation of avionics equipment in Cessna aircrafts, in violation of the Sherman Act. Id. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of Cessna, [*9] finding, in part, that Illinois Brick precluded Fontana from bringing antitrust claims as an indirect purchaser. Id. at 481. On appeal, the Seventh Circuit rejected this conclusion, stating, "[w]e are not satisfied that the Illinois Brick rule directly applies in circumstances where the manufacturer and the intermediary are both alleged to be co-conspirators in a common illegal enterprise resulting in intended injury to the buyer." Id. The Seventh Circuit also distinguished the facts of Fontana from Illinois Brick, pointing out that Fontana was not just an indirect purchaser of Cessna products; it was also a competitor alleging competitive injury that destroyed its avionics business. Id. The Seventh Circuit concluded that summary judgment was inappropriate and reversed and remanded the case to the trial court. Id. at 482.

The Seventh Circuit addressed Illinois Brick again in Paper Systems Inc. There, paper distributors brought antitrust claims against several paper manufacturers, who allegedly participated in a price-fixing conspiracy. Paper Systems, 281 F.3d at 631. Two of the manufacturers sold directly to distributors, like the plaintiffs. Id. The Seventh Circuit held that, even though the plaintiffs resold the paper to their own [*10] customers, the plaintiffs were entitled to collect damages from the manufacturers because "[t]he first buyer from a conspirator is the right party to sue." Id. Two other manufacturers sold exclusively to trading houses, who then resold to the plaintiffs. Id. The plaintiffs alleged that the trading houses were part of the conspiracy. Id. The Seventh Circuit found the plaintiffs could also recover damages in that instance because the plaintiffs were "the first purchasers from outside the conspiracy." Id. The Court went on to explain that Illinois Brick did not bar the plaintiffs from recovering against the conspiracy because all members of the conspiracy were jointly and severally liable for damages. Id. at 633. Thus, multiple recovery was a non-issue, and "[t]he difficulty of tracing overcharges through the chain of distribution therefore [was] unimportant." Id.

Fontana and Paper Systems both employed the conspiracy exception in the context of vertical price-fixing. Vertical price restraints are agreements involving actors at different levels of a distribution chain to set either minimum or maximum prices. WILLIAM B. RUBENSTEIN, 6 NEWBERG ON CLASS ACTIONS § 20:27 (5th ed. 2018). Applying the conspiracy [*11] exception in these instances avoids the potential conundrums recognized in Illinois Brick, namely, duplicative recovery and difficulties tracing overcharges. 2 P. AREEDA, R. BLAIR, & H. HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW 369 (2d ed. 2004). That is because, in practicality, there is only one true sale when the direct purchaser conspires with the manufacturer to fix the price of the sale. Thus, "the consumer is the only party who has paid any overcharge." Id.

Here, Plaintiffs do not allege a price-fixing conspiracy. Rather, they argue Defendants use exclusive-dealing provisions, penalty provisions, and other anticompetitive behavior to inflate prices. The parties disagree as to whether the conspiracy exception applies only to vertical price-fixing conspiracies or whether it encompasses other types of conspiracies as well.

Regardless of the semantics, Plaintiffs allege a conspiracy that implicates the same concerns expressed in Illinois Brick. The direct purchasers, the distributors, are passing on alleged overcharges already established in net dealer contracts they have no hand in negotiating. According to the Amended Complaint, the distributor defendants are not involved in determining the inflated [*12] prices. The distributors merely enforce the terms of net dealer contracts and then subject Plaintiffs to additional costs the distributors independently assess.<sup>5</sup> It would be infeasible to calculate with any certainty which portion of overcharges the distributors absorb or ascertain which portion of the distributors' upcharges are due to market force, rather than overcharges. In other words, unlike Paper Systems and Fontana, there is not, as a practical matter, a single transaction between Becton, the distributors, and Plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs cite the portion of Paper Systems where the Seventh Circuit opined that principles of joint and several liability rendered the difficulty of tracing overcharges "unimportant." Paper Systems, 281 F.3d 629 at 633. But Paper Systems involved a price fixing conspiracy between the manufacturer and intermediary. Here, Plaintiffs allege that the distributors act independently to increase already-inflated prices—a classic "pass-on" theory prohibited by Illinois Brick. Apportioning overcharges in this case would lead to the complexities Illinois Brick sought to avoid. As such, Plaintiffs' claims fall within the direct purchaser rule, and no exception applies.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs do not allege [*13] facts plausibly suggesting they have antitrust standing to proceed under the Sherman Act. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motions to dismiss (Docs. 83, 84, & 85). The Amended Complaint (Doc. 52) is DISMISSED with prejudice. The case is CLOSED, and judgment will be entered accordingly.

CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

PROCEEDINGS: DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS PLAINTIFF'S DECLARATORY JUDGMENT COMPLAINT [22]; SCHEDULING CONFERENCE

Court hears oral argument. The Tentative circulated and attached hereto, is adopted as the Court's Final Ruling. The Court would GRANT Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Declaratory Judgment Complaint. The Court would dismiss Counts 1-5 without prejudice. Plaintiff will have until December 24, 2018 to file a First Amended Complaint. Counsel will attempt to stipulate as to the basis for the dismissal to be with prejudice.

The scheduling conference is continued to January 10, 2019 at 8:30 a.m., with a joint report to be filed by noon on January 3, 2019.

I. Background

A. Procedural Background

On August 10, 2018, Electronic Communication Technology, LLC ("Defendant" or "ECT") sent an enforcement letter to Kindred Studio Illustration and Design, LLC, d/b/a True Grit ("Plaintiff" or "True Grit"). In the letter, Defendant accused Plaintiff of infringing its U.S. Patent No. 9,373,261 ("the '261 Patent"). Compl., Ex. B, Docket No. 1-3. In response, Plaintiff [*2] filed a Declaratory Judgment Complaint on August 31, 2018 and sued Defendant for: (1) declaratory judgment of invalidity of the '261 Patent, (2) declaratory judgment of non-infringement of the '261 Patent, (3) declaratory judgment of inequitable conduct, (4) unlawful competition under the "unlawful" prong of California Business & Professions Code § 17200 ("UCL"), and (5) unfair competition under the "unfair" prong of the UCL. Complaint ("Compl.") ¶¶ 71-93, Docket No. 1. On October 22, 2018, Defendant provided Plaintiff with an executed Covenant Not To Sue ("CNS") for all the patents owned by Defendant, including the '261 Patent. Mot., Ex. 1, Docket No. 21-2.

Now, Defendant moves to dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and for failure to state a claim. See Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Declaratory Judgment Complaint ("Mot."), Docket No. 21. Plaintiff filed an opposition to the Motion. See Plaintiff's Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss ("Opp."), Docket No. 25. Defendant filed a reply in support of the Motion. See Reply Brief to Plaintiff's Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss ("Reply"), Docket No. 26.

B. Factual Background

In the Complaint, Plaintiff alleges the following:

Plaintiff, a California corporation [*3] with its principal place of business in Los Angeles, California, "markets downloadable tools and assets for use by commercial graphic designers and illustrators including digital paintbrushes, stock images, software shortcuts and tutorials." Compl. ¶¶ 2, 9 (emphasis in original). Plaintiff's "products allow customers (other designers) to add effects and aesthetics to their designs and physical end-products that would be otherwise unachievable, commercially unviable, or require years of experience and know-how to develop in isolation." Id. ¶ 10.

Defendant, a Florida corporation, owns the '261 Patent titled "Secure Notification Messaging with User Option to Communicate with Delivery or Pickup Representative," that issued on June 21, 2016. See id. ¶ 3; '261 Patent. The '261 Patent "generally relates to data communications, information, and messaging systems and, more particularly, to systems and methods that notify a party of travel status associated with one or more mobile things." Id. at 1.

On August 10, 2018, Defendant sent an enforcement letter accusing Plaintiff of infringing the '261 Patent and asked for a negotiable "paid-up one-time license" of $15,000. Compl., Ex. B. The enforcement letter gave Plaintiff the option of entering into [*4] a licensing agreement or submitting evidence of non-infringement of the '261 Patent. Id.

We expect that, upon review, you will acknowledge that TrueGritTextureSupply practices the inventions disclosed in the ECT Patent and will enter into licensing discussions. In the event TrueGritTextureSupply.com concludes that it does not desire a license for the ECT Patent, we expect to receive from you within fourteen (14) days responsive claim charts showing why TrueGritTextureSupply.com does not infringe the ECT Patent, along with copies of the system documentation, manuals and any other materials that describe the components and functionality of the TrueGritTextureSupply.com system, including those materials you reviewed in the course of your investigation.

ECT's proposed license fee, of course, is subject to early discussions and good faith communications toward a patent license. If litigation is required to enforce ECT's rights, the upfront license offer is obviously removed. Compl., Ex. B.

In response to the enforcement letter, Plaintiff filed a Complaint on August 31, 2018. See generally Compl. It claimed that Defendant knows that its '261 patent is invalid because the claims of three other patents in the same [*5] family sharing the same specification have been invalidated under Section 101. Compl. ¶ 56.

Additionally, Plaintiff is aware of at least sixteen other parties that have recently received cease and desist letters from Defendant. See Declaration of Rachel Lamkin ("Lamkin Decl."), Docket No. 25-1; see id. Ex. 1, Docket No. 25-2.

II. Legal Standard

A. Rule 12(b)(1)

A party may contest subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(1\). See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\). Under Rule 12\(b\)\(1\), the moving party may either attack the pleadings on their face or present extrinsic evidence for the district court's consideration. Kohler v. CJP, Ltd., 818 F. Supp. 2d 1169, 1172 \(C.D. Cal. 2011\) (citing White v. Lee, 227 F.3d 1214, 1242 \(9th Cir. 2000\)) (noting that Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) jurisdictional attacks "can be either facial or factual"). A district court must determine whether an attack is facial or factual, as this determination governs the scope of the court's review. See Kohler, 818 F. Supp. 2d at 1172. When deciding a Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) motion that attacks the complaint on its face, a court "must accept the allegations of the complaint as true." Id. (citing Valdez v. United States, 837 F. Supp. 1065, 1067 \(E.D. Cal. 1993\), aff'd, 56 F.3d 1177 \(9th Cir. 1995\)). But in deciding a Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) motion that raises a factual attack, courts "may weigh the evidence presented, and determine the facts in order to evaluate whether they have power to hear the case." Id. (citing Roberts v. Corrothers, 812 F.2d 1173, 1177 \(9th Cir. 1987\)); see also White, 227 F.3d at 1242 (when a motion relies on extrinsic evidence, [*6] a court "need not presume the truthfulness of the plaintiffs' allegations").

If a party seeks to dismiss a declaratory judgment claim on the ground that no true case or controversy exists, the action is properly brought under Rule 12\(b\)\(1\). Rhoades v. Avon Products, Inc., 504 F.3d 1151, 1157 \(9th Cir. 2007\). "A case becomes moot — and therefore no longer a 'Case' or 'Controversy' for purposes of Article III - 'when the issues presented are no longer live or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome.'" ArcelorMittal v. AK Steel Corp., 856 F.3d 1365, 1370 \(Fed. Cir. 2017\) (citations omitted). Under the Declaratory Judgment Act, "a covenant not to sue can deprive the Court of subject matter jurisdiction." Fulton v. Genea Energy Partners, CV-12-1506-DOC-\(MLGx\), 2014 WL 12597588 at \*2 \(C.D. Cal. 2014\). When determining whether a covenant not to sue moots a case or controversy, the voluntary cessation doctrine applies. Already, LLC v. Nike, Inc., 568 U.S. 95, 92, 133 S. Ct. 721, 184 L. Ed. 2d 553 \(2013\). The relevant inquiry under the doctrine is: "[c]ould the allegedly wrongful behavior reasonably be expected to recur?" Id. "Whether a covenant not to sue will in fact divest [the] Court of jurisdiction 'depends on what is covered by the covenant.'" Fulton, 2014 WL 12597588 at \*2 \(citing Revolution Eyewear Inc. v. Aspex Eyewear, Inc., 556 F.3d 1294, 1297 \(Fed. Cir. 2009\)\). In proving that a covenant not to sue has mooted a case or controversy, the "defendant claiming that its voluntary compliance moots a case bears the formidable burden of showing that it is absolutely [*7] clear the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur." Already, 568 U.S. at 91 (citing Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. \(TOC\), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 190, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L. Ed. 2d 610 \(2000\)).

B. Rule 12(b)(6)

Under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), a complaint is deficient and warrants dismissal when it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). A complaint may fail to state a claim for one of two reasons: (1) lack of a cognizable legal theory or (2) failure to allege sufficient facts under a cognizable legal theory. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\). In determining whether a complaint survives this test, courts "may generally consider only allegations contained in the pleadings, exhibits attached to the complaint, and matters properly subject to judicial notice." Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 763 \(9th Cir. 2007\). In so doing, courts must accept the complaint's factual allegations as true, and construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Gompper v. VISX, Inc., 298 F.3d 893, 896 \(9th Cir. 2002\). But a court should not accept "threadbare recitals of a cause of action's elements, supported by mere conclusory statements," Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 663, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\), or "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." Sprewell v. Golden State Warriors, 266 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2001). Where a plaintiff facing a 12\(b\)\(6\) motion has pled "factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged," the motion should be denied. [\[\*8\] Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678](#); Sylvia Landfield Trust v. City of Los Angeles, 729 F.3d 1189, 1191 (9th Cir. 2013). But "where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged — but it has not 'show[n]' - 'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679 (quotations omitted).

III. Analysis

A. The Court Dismisses Counts 1 Through 3 for Declaratory Judgment

In the Complaint, Plaintiff's first three causes of action seek declaratory judgment. See generally Compl. More specifically, it alleges: (1) declaratory judgment of invalidity of the '261 Patent, (2) declaratory judgment of non-infringement of the '261 Patent, and (3) declaratory judgment of inequitable conduct. See Compl. ¶¶ 71-76. Defendant moves to dismiss each of those claims, primarily arguing that a case or controversy no longer exists as to those claims due to the executed CNS.<sup>1</sup> See Mot. at 11. Plaintiff counters that the CNS "is not sufficiently broad to trigger the mootness and voluntary cessation doctrines" and fails to divest the Court's jurisdiction. Opp. at 3-4.

Touched on in the legal standard section above, the Declaratory Judgment Act ("DJA") provides that, in "a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction," a federal court "may declare the rights [\[\*9\]](#) and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought." 28 U.S.C. § 2201\(a\). Generally, the DJA exists "to afford an added remedy to one who is uncertain of his rights and who desires an early adjudication thereof without having to wait until his adversary should decide to bring suit, and to act at his peril in the interim." McGraw-Edison Co. v. Preformed Line Products Co., 362 F.2d 339, 342 (9th Cir. 1966); Shell Oil Co. v. Frusetta, 290 F.2d 689, 692 (9th Cir. 1961). Although the DJA expands available remedies, it does not undermine the Constitution's minimum jurisdictional requirements. Skelly Oil Co. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 339 U.S. 667, 671, 70 S. Ct. 876, 94 L. Ed. 1194 (1950) ("[The DJA] enlarged the range of remedies available in the federal courts but did not extend their jurisdiction"). For DJA claims, satisfying these minimum requirements means showing that, under all the circumstances, there exists an "actual controversy" between parties with adverse legal interests of sufficient immediacy, and that declaratory relief will fully resolve the controversy presented. See MedImmune, Inc. v. Genentech, Inc., 549 U.S. 118, 127, 127 S. Ct. 764, 166 L. Ed. 2d 604 (2007); Calderon v. Ashmus, 523 U.S. 740, 747, 118 S. Ct. 1694, 140 L. Ed. 2d 970 (1998); United States Nat'l Bank v. Independent Ins. Agents of Am., 508 U.S. 439, 446, 113 S. Ct. 2173, 124 L. Ed. 2d 402 (1993); Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 240-41, 57 S. Ct. 461, 81 L. Ed. 617 (1937).

Under the DJA, "a covenant not to sue can deprive the Court of subject matter jurisdiction." Fulton, 2014 WL 12597588 at *2. When determining whether a covenant not to sue moots a case or controversy, the voluntary cessation doctrine applies. Already, 568 U.S. at 92. The relevant inquiry under the doctrine is: "[c]ould the allegedly [\[\*10\]](#) wrongful behavior reasonably be expected to recur?" Id. "Whether a covenant not to sue will in fact divest [the] Court of jurisdiction 'depends on what is covered by the covenant.'" Fulton, 2014 WL 12597588 at *2 (citations omitted). In proving that a covenant not to sue has mooted the case or controversy, "a defendant claiming that its voluntary compliance moots a case bears the formidable burden of showing that it is absolutely clear the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur." Already, 568 U.S. at 91 (citations omitted).

<sup>1</sup>The CNS states that Defendant "will never institute any action or lawsuit at law or in equity against Covenantee" for all of Defendant's patents, including the '261 Patent. Mot., Ex. 1. To support its arguments, Defendant relies primarily on Already, LLC v. Nike. Defendant asserts that, like the counterclaims in Already, Plaintiff's Counts 1-3 should be rendered moot as "the allegedly wrongful behavior could [not] reasonably be expected to recur." Mot. at 14 (citing Already, 568 U.S. at 92). Defendant further argues that "[a] cursory review of [Defendant's] Covenant Not To Sue reveals that its scope is similar to the one in Already, LLC, which . . . the Supreme Court deemed sufficient to render that case moot." Id. at 16.

As per the above authority, the inquiry begins with the text of the CNS. The CNS provides as follows:

Covenantors will never institute any action or lawsuit at law or in equity against Covenantee, nor institute, prosecute, make allegations of, or in any way aid in the institution or prosecution of any claims, demands, actions, or causes of action for damages, reasonable royalties, lost profits, costs, expenses or compensation, whether past, present or future for or on account of any damages, losses, injuries either to person or property, or both, whether developed or undeveloped, resulting or to result, unknown or known, past, present or future, arising out of or relating in any way to [*11] any claims of patent infringement of any of the patents listed in Schedule A attached hereto, including all corresponding provisional, continuation, continuation-in-part, divisional, reissue, and reexamination applications pertaining to said patents.

Mot., Ex. 1.

Comparing the CNS to covenants found sufficient to moot a case or controversy is instructive. Relevant to this inquiry is Already, which both Plaintiff and Defendant cite at length and the Court cited above.<sup>2</sup> In Already, Nike alleged that Already's athletic footwear infringed Nike's trademark. Already, 568 U.S. at 88. Already denied that it infringed Nike's trademark and filed a counterclaim that the trademark was invalid. Id. Four months after Already filed its counterclaim, Nike issued a covenant not to sue and brought a motion to dismiss its claims and Already's counterclaim without prejudice. Id. at 88-89. The district court dismissed Already's counterclaim holding that there was no longer "a substantial controversy . . . of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory judgment." Id. at 89-90 (citations omitted). The Second Circuit affirmed. Id. at 90. After reviewing whether Nike's covenant to sue could moot the case, the Supreme Court affirmed the [*12] Second Circuit, holding that "[t]he uncontested findings made by the District Court, and confirmed by the Second Circuit, make it 'absolutely clear' this case is moot." Id. at 102.

Although Plaintiff contends that the covenant not to sue in Already was "uncontested," the Court still analyzed the terms of the covenant under the voluntary cessation doctrine. Already, 568 U.S. at 93. The Already covenant read, in relevant part:

[Nike] unconditionally and irrevocably covenants to refrain from making any claim(s) or demand(s) . . . against Already or any of its . . . related business entities . . . [including] distributors . . . and employees of such entities and all customers . . . on account of any possible cause of action based on or involving trademark infringement, unfair competition, or dilution, under state or federal law . . . relating to the NIKE Mark based on the appearance of any of Already's current and/or previous footwear product designs, and any colorable imitations thereof, regardless of whether that footwear is produced . . . or otherwise used in commerce before or after the Effective Date of this Covenant.

<sup>2</sup> While Plaintiff agrees that Already governs, it argues that "[Defendant] has not met its formidable burden as its proffered CNS is not sufficiently broad to trigger the mootness and voluntary cessation doctrines cited in Already." Opp. at 3. Plaintiff's arguments focus on distinguishing the CNS from the covenant not to sue in Already. Id. at 3-4. Plaintiff asserts that Defendant's reliance on Already is inappropriate as "the CNS in [Already] was uncontested." Id. at 3. Next, Plaintiff argues that, unlike the CNS, the covenant not to sue in Already was "unconditional and irrevocable," and "extended to customers and distributors." Id. at 4. Plaintiff further argues that, under the language of the CNS, "[Defendant] is now able to sue [Plaintiff's] customers; employees; online distributors; and platforms (e.g., Shopify). Further, [Defendant] can revoke the CNS at any point." Id. (parenthetical numbering omitted).

Defendant disagrees with Plaintiff's characterization of the CNS. Responding to Plaintiff's concerns, Defendant states that "[t]he CNS covers [Plaintiff] as Covenantee and; therefore, by extension, also covers [Plaintiff's] employees," and "the CNS covers any possible cause of action arising out of [Defendant's] patents." Reply at 8. Defendant further asserts that, while the CNS does not mention Plaintiff's customers, distributors, or platforms, "the claimed steps of the '216[sic] Patent—which recite a method for an automated notification system—are not performed by entities such as [Plaintiff's] customers or distributors; and therefore, they cannot be sued for infringement of the '261 Patent." Id. The Court will address these points after preliminarily discussing Already and other relevant case law.

The Court found Nike's covenant [*13] not to sue sufficient under the voluntary cessation test, noting that "[t]he covenant is unconditional and irrevocable. Beyond simply prohibiting Nike from filing suit, it prohibits Nike from making any claim or any demand. It reaches beyond Already to protect Already's distributors and customers. And it covers not just current or previous designs, but any colorable imitations." *Already*, 568 U.S. at 93.

Nearly a year after Already, in Phoenix Modular Elevator, a district court similarly found that a covenant not to sue mooted the case. See *Phoenix Modular Elevator, Inc. v. T.L. Shield & Assoc., CV-14-00339-RGK-\(PLAx\), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194667, 2014 WL 12569344 \(C.D. Cal. 2014\)*. There, the court found the terms of the covenant not to sue "sufficiently broad to constitute a relinquishment of the rights originally asserted under the '520 Patent." *Phoenix*, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194667, 2014 WL 12569344 at \*2. The covenant not to sue in Phoenix "expressly and unconditionally agree[d] to not sue Defendants for infringement as to the '520 patent" based on:

(1) any actions by Defendants on, or before, the date of dismissal of the current lawsuit; (2) Defendants' use, importation, manufacture, development, design, marketing, licensing, distributing, offering for sale, or selling any elevators that Defendants currently, or in the past, use, import, manufacture, market, [*14] sell, or install; and (3) Defendants' use, importation, manufacture, development, design, marketing, licensing, distributing, offering for sale, or selling any future elevators that are substantially the same structure as those used, imported, manufactured, marketed, sold, or installed by Defendants in the past.

While the covenants not to sue in Already and in Phoenix differ from one another in some respects, the effect of both covenants is clear — the covenanting party will not sue, now or in the future, for legal disputes relating to the patented product and "colorable imitations thereof." *Already*, 568 U.S. at 93. The CNS appears to have substantially the same components as the covenants not to sue in Already and Phoenix. Overall, a reading of the CNS indicates that "the allegedly wrongful behavior could [not] reasonably be expected to recur." *Already*, 568 U.S. at 92. The CNS herein uses broad, unequivocal, and absolutely clear language, providing that "Covenantors will never institute any action or lawsuit at law or in equity against Covenantee, nor institute, prosecute, make allegations of, or in any way aid in the institution or prosecution of any claims, demands, actions, or causes of actions . . . [*15] whether past, present, or future . . . whether developed or undeveloped . . . unknown or known, past, present or future, arising out of or relating in any way to any claims of patent infringement of the patents listed in Schedule A." See Mot., Ex. 1. The distinctions Plaintiff points out between the CNS and the covenant not to sue in Already are inapposite.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Plaintiff asserts that the CNS is distinct from the covenant not to sue in Already and is not sufficient because it (1) omits the phrase "unconditional and irrevocable," (2) does not extend to employees, customers, online distributors, and platforms, and (3) does not include "any possible cause of action." Opp. at 4. The Court will address these arguments in turn.

First, while omitting the phrase "unconditional and irrevocable," the CNS states that "Covenantors will never institute any action or lawsuit." Mot., Exh. 1. Plaintiff fails to explain why the term "never" is not sufficient as compared to the phrase "unconditional and irrevocable." Additionally, Defendant has stated its willingness to include the phrase "unconditional and irrevocable" to the CNS if "[Plaintiff's] unwillingness to accept [Defendant's] CNS hinges on the inclusion of the phrase . . . ." Reply at 7, n1. The Court sees no need to include this phrase in view of the terminology already present in the CNS.

Second, although the covenant not to sue in Already specifically carved out Nike's customers, employees and distributors, the covenant not to sue in Phoenix did not but was still found to be "sufficiently broad to constitute a relinquishment of the rights." *Phoenix*, 014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194667, 2014 WL 12569344 at \*2. There is no set requirement that a covenant not to sue list out all parties associated with the covenantee to be sufficiently broad. Further, as discussed by Defendant, Plaintiff's employees appear covered under Plaintiff as the "covenantee" and it is unclear how Plaintiff's customers, distributors, or platforms would even infringe the '261 Patent. Reply at 8.

Third, the CNS specifically states that "Covenantors will never institute any actions or lawsuit at law or in equity against Covenantee nor institute, prosecute, make allegations of, or in any way aid in the institution or prosecution of any claims, demands, actions, or causes of actions . . . relating in any way to any claims of patent infringement of any of the patents listed . . .

Defendant additionally notes that "the fact that [Plaintiff] has not signed [Defendant's] Covenant Not To Sue [is] not sufficient to create an actual case or controversy." Mot. at 17 (citing Merit Healthcare Int'l, Inc. v. Merit Med. Sys., Inc., No. CV-14-4280-FMO-\(SHX\), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10286, 2016 WL 6963052 at \*5 \(C.D. Cal. 2016\), aff'd 721 F. App'x 628 \(9th Cir. 2018\)) ("Because plaintiff has not identified any affirmative act by defendant to demonstrate that a case or controversy exists, defendant's failure to sign a covenant not to sue is insufficient to create an actual controversy under the circumstances of this case."). Plaintiff does not respond to this argument. See generally Opp. The Court thus finds a lack of signature, absent any affirmative act, to fall short of creating a case or controversy as required for jurisdiction under Rule 12\(b\)\(1\).

After a review of the [*16] parties' arguments and the language of the CNS, the Court finds the CNS sufficient to moot the case or controversy as to Plaintiff's Counts 1-3 (pertaining to the invalidity, non-infringement and inequitable conduct of the '261 Patent). Defendant requests that the Court dismiss Counts 1-3 with prejudice and Plaintiff fails to respond to this request. The Court's own review indicates that dismissal with prejudice is likely inappropriate. In general, "a lack of subject matter jurisdiction usually justifies only a dismissal, not a dismissal with prejudice." Textile Productions, Inc. v. Mead Corp., 134 F.3d 1481, 1486 \(Fed. Cir. 1998\); see also Siler v. Dillingham Ship Repair, 288 Fed. App'x 400, 401 \(9th Cir. 2008\) ("vacat[ing] the district court's judgment to the extent it dismissed the complaint with prejudice . . . because a dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction is not an adjudication on the merits."). The nature of a covenant not sue supports the notion that dismissal with prejudice is an atypical result. For example, "[a] plaintiff's promise not to sue eliminates the controversy between the parties but does not extinguish the plaintiff's underlying rights, unlike a release of liability that would affect the merits." Out RAGE, LLC v. New Archery Products Corp., 12-cv-122-bbc, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 191425, 2013 WL 12234188 at \*10 \(W.D. Wis. 2013\) (citation omitted). Thus, the Court is inclined to [*17] dismiss these claims without prejudice, but the Court would ask the parties to address this point at the December 3, 2018 hearing.

Thus, with no case or controversy remaining, the Court dismisses Counts 1-3 under Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) without prejudice.

B. The Court Dismisses Counts 4 and 5 (UCL Claims)

a. Count 4 Is Dismissed for Failure to State a Claim

In the Complaint, Count 4 invokes Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45 ("FTC Section 5") as the "predicate law" for a UCL claim. Compl. ¶ 78. While admitting that FTC Section 5 does not create a private right of action, Plaintiff asserts that it "can serve as [a] predicate for a [UCL] action." Opp. at 4 (citations omitted). Defendant argues that Plaintiff has no remedy under FTC Section 5 as a private party and "cannot enforce provisions of the FTC Act under the UCL." Reply at 10. Defendant further argues that it "has [not] engaged in any unlawful business practice by merely asserting a patent that the law specifically states is presumed valid." Id. at 11.

The UCL proscribes three avenues to challenge business practices: if they are: "[1] unlawful, [2] unfair or [3] fraudulent . . ." Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc., 14 Cal. App. 4th 612, 619, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 \(1993\). First, unlawful business practices are those "forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, [*18] regulatory, or court-made." Saunders v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838-39, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 \(1994\). Second, unfair business practices "means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commc'n, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 \(1999\). Third, fraudulent business practices are those "likely to deceive the public." McKell v. Washington Mut., Inc., 142 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1471, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 227 \(2006\).

There is no private right of action under FTC Section 5. See O'Donnell v. Bank of Am., N.A., 504 Fed. Appx. 566, 568 \(9th Cir. 2013\); see also Carlson v. Coca-Cola Co., 483 F.2d 279, 280-81 \(9th Cir. 1973\). Though courts have

. ." Mot., Exh. 1. This language encompasses "any possible cause of action" as it relates to infringement of Defendant's patents and is found to be sufficiently broad.

held "that the California UCL does not create [a private right of action] for FTC Act claims," recently "the Ninth Circuit held in an unpublished decision that violations of the FTC Act can be actionable through a UCL cause of action." Sperling v. Stein Mart, Inc., 291 F. Supp. 3d 1076, 1087 (C.D. Cal. 2018) (citing Rubenstein v. Neiman Marcus Grp. LLC, 687 F. App'x 564, 567 (9th Cir. 2017)). Separately, the Ninth Circuit has long held that "[v]irtually any state, federal or local law can serve as the predicate for an action under [the UCL]." Davis v. HSBC Bank Nev., N.A., 691 F.3d 1152, 1168 (9th Cir. 2012) (citations omitted). Based on the foregoing, the Court would find that Plaintiff may allege a UCL claim hinged on FTC Act Section 5, despite the fact the latter does not on its own provide a private right of action.

To prove unlawful competition under FTC Section 5, Plaintiff must show that "the act or practice causes or is likely to cause [*19] substantial injury to consumers which is not reasonably avoidable by consumers themselves and not outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or to competition." 15 U.S.C. § 45\(n\). From the Court's review of the Complaint, Plaintiff only provides conclusory allegations in support of this claim. For example, Plaintiff alleges that "[t]he conduct of [Defendant] and the [Defendant's] Entities amounts to an act or practice that causes or is likely to cause substantial injury to consumers which is not reasonably avoidable by consumers themselves and not outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or to competition." Compl. ¶ 81. Plaintiff further alleges that "[Defendant] and the [Defendant's] Entities methods have a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on consumers." Id. ¶ 82. Lacking sufficient factual allegations on this front, Plaintiff has failed to "allege sufficient facts under a cognizable legal theory." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S at 555 (2007). A court should not accept such "threadbare recitals of a cause of action's elements, supported by mere conclusory statements," Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 663, or "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences," Sprewell v. Golden State Warriors, 266 F.3d at 988.

The Court thus dismisses Count [*20] 4 under 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim, but Plaintiff will have an opportunity to amend the Complaint as to this cause of action.

b. Count 5 Is Dismissed for Failure to State a Claim

In Count 5, Plaintiff alleges another UCL claim but seemingly under the "unfair" prong rather than the "unlawful" prong.<sup>4</sup> Compl. ¶¶ 85-93. Defendant moves to dismiss that claim, arguing that Plaintiff does not allege sufficient standing under the UCL. Mot. at 21. Defendant further argues that the Court does not have diversity jurisdiction over this claim because Plaintiff has failed to meet the amount in controversy requirement. Id. In response, Plaintiff takes issue with both these arguments. See Opp. at 6-10.

Even though the Court can hear Plaintiff's UCL claim pursuant to diversity jurisdiction,<sup>5</sup> Plaintiff again struggles to allege facts sufficient to satisfy Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). Before reaching the merits of Plaintiff's UCL claim, Plaintiff does not

<sup>5</sup> Plaintiff asserts that "[t]his Court has jurisdiction over [Plaintiff's] claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1338 and 1337, and 35 U.S.C. § 271. Should [Defendant] attempt to avoid adjudicating the merits of [Plaintiff's] declaratory judgment claims by filing a covenant not to sue, this Court maintains jurisdiction over [Plaintiff's] state law claims based on diversity jurisdiction." Compl. ¶ 6. Plaintiff further states that "[t]his Court [ ] has diversity jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332 because the Parties reside in different states and there is more than $75,000 dollar at-issue." Id. ¶ 5. Defendant does not dispute that the parties reside in different states, but argues that "the Complaint does not contain any allegations which plausibly show that [Plaintiff] meets the amount in controversy." Mot. at 21. Plaintiff failed to provide information about the amount in controversy in its Complaint, but listed its estimated loss in revenue in its opposition. Opp. at 8. Plaintiff lists the following estimated costs:

- Product release delays $5,000-$10,000
- Cancelled product releases: $20,000-$30,000

sufficiently allege standing under the UCL. To establish statutory standing under the UCL, "a private plaintiff [must] have suffered 'injury in fact and lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition.'" Rubio v. Capital One Bank, 613 F.3d 1195, 1203 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204) (punctuation [*21] altered). A UCL plaintiff must show that he or she "lost money or property" sufficient to constitute an 'injury in fact' under Article III of the Constitution, and also [show] a 'causal connection' between [the defendant's] alleged UCL violation and [his or] her injury in fact." Id. at 1203-04 (citations omitted); Hall v. Time Inc., 158 Cal. App. 4th 847, 855, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 466 (2008) ("The phrase 'as a result of' in its plain and ordinary sense means 'caused by' and requires a showing of a causal connection or reliance on the alleged misrepresentation.").

Here, Plaintiff's allegations of harm under the UCL predominantly stem from Defendant's assertions regarding Counts 1 through 3. Compl. ¶¶ 86, 88-90 ("[Defendant] is engaged in the business practice of alleging patent infringement it knows to be baseless and strong-arms small businesses into paying nuisance value settlements;" "[Defendant] profited by knowingly asserting an invalid patent by receiving settlement sums from hundreds of small businesses who cannot afford to litigate patent invalidity . . .").<sup>6</sup> Plaintiff does not show how Defendant's UCL violations, separate and apart from Counts 1-3 for patent-related [*22] declaratory judgment, caused it "to suffer an injury and lose money or property." *Kemp v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 17-cv-01259-MEJ, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 177032, 2017 WL 4805567 at *15 (N.D. Cal. 2017)* (dismissing Plaintiff's UCL claim for failing to show "how Defendant's UCL violations - as opposed to the other conduct she identifies in the FAC—caused her to suffer an injury or lose money or property.") (emphasis in original). The other allegations cited in the Opposition to support Plaintiff's argument that it was harmed are similarly insufficient. See Opp. at 8 (citing Compl. ¶¶ 14-17). Though Plaintiff pleads that Defendant sent an "enforcement email" to Plaintiff's Shopify account email (see Compl. ¶¶ 14-16), the allegations that Shopify "can suspend a business" for infringement accusations and that Defendant's "phishing campaign has harmed True Grit's business relationship with Shopify" are both speculative and conclusory (see Compl. ¶ 17).

As such, Plaintiff has failed to sufficiently plead the requisite injury in fact to support its UCL claim. With insufficient factual allegations, the Court would dismiss Count 5 under 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim. Dismissal without prejudice is appropriate.

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court would [*23] GRANT Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Declaratory Judgment Complaint. The Court would dismiss Counts 1-5 without prejudice.

End of Document

- Cancellation of physical merchandise $5,000-$8,000

Opp. at 8.

Plaintiff goes on to state that "[t]he stake in the litigation costs as plead likely exceed twenty (20) times the requisite $75,000." Opp. at 9. Although Plaintiff's total estimated loss in revenue only amounts to a maximum of $48,000, attorney's fees and other costs associated with the litigation as pleaded in the Complaint are sufficient to meet the amount in controversy requirement. This is not a case where "upon the face of the complaint, it is obvious that the suit cannot involve the necessary amount." St. Paul Mercury Indem. Co. v. Red Cab Co., 303 U.S. 283, 292-93, 58 S. Ct. 586, 82 L. Ed. 845 (1938).

ORDER ON PARTIAL MOTIONS TO DISMISS THIRD AMENDED COMPLAINT

This matter comes before the Court on two Motions to Dismiss: (1) Bison Oil & Gas, LLC's ("Bison") Motion for Partial Dismissal of Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint; and (2) Defendants Extraction Oil & Gas, Inc. ("Extraction") and Axis Exploration, LLC's ("Axis") (together "Extraction Defendants") Motion to Dismiss Third Amended Complaint, In Part, Pursuant to C.R.C.P. 12\(b\)\(5\). Both Motions were filed July 12, 2018. The Motions are resolved together by this Order. Plaintiffs WEP Transport Holdings, LLC, Western Transport, LLC, Ecarg Resources, LLC, Colorado Maverick Company, LLC, and Tree Top LP (collectively, "Plaintiffs") filed a Response on August 2, 2018. Defendants filed Replies on August 9, 2018. The Court, having read the briefs and supporting exhibits, considered the applicable law, and otherwise being advised in the premises, finds and orders as follows.

Relevant Background

Plaintiffs commenced this action by filing a Complaint on February 17, 2017, asserting claims for fraudulent inducement of contract, fraud, breach of contract, and declaratory judgment against Defendants [*2] Bison Oil & Gas, LLC ("Bison"), Axis Exploration, LLC f/k/a Bison Exploration, LLC ("Axis"), and Extraction Oil & Gas, Inc. ("Extraction") (collectively, "Defendants"). Plaintiffs' claims arise out of the transfer of oil and gas leases and surface use agreements covering land in Adams County, Colorado (the "Lands"). Before any Defendant answered or otherwise responded to the Complaint, on March 3, 2017, Plaintiffs filed their First Amended Complaint and Jury

Demand. The First Amended Complaint substantially mirrors Plaintiffs' original filing, but cites to addition events that occurred after Plaintiffs filed their initial complaint. The Defendants filed motions to dismiss the First Amended Complaint. In its Order on Motions to Dismiss, entered October 31, 2017, the Court found that Plaintiffs had asserted plausible fraud claims, but ordered Plaintiffs to file a Second Amended Complaint that more specifically and particularly averred the damages they seek on each of the claims alleged. On November 9, 2017, Plaintiffs filed their Second Amended Complaint and Jury Demand. The Defendants answered the Second Amended Complaint and asserted counterclaims against Plaintiffs.

On March 27, 2018, [*3] Plaintiffs moved the Court to file a Third Amended Complaint, seeking to add a demand for punitive damages, assert two new claims against all Defendants, and add Carnelian as a defendant. Bison opposed the amendment. Axis and Extraction did not oppose the amendment, preferring to address its objections to the new claims by way of a motion to dismiss under C.R.S.P. 12(b) rather than under the relaxed amendment standard set forth in C.R.C.P. 15\(a\). On June 28, 2018, the Court granted Plaintiffs leave to file the Third Amended Complaint and added Carnelian as a Defendant. The Third Amended Complaint currently serves as the operative complaint. Bison and the Extraction Defendants now move the Court to partially dismiss the Third Amended Complaint.

In its Order on Motions to Dismiss entered October 31, 2017, the Court set forth in some detail the facts giving rise to Plaintiffs' original claims. The Court incorporates that factual background as may be pertinent here. Regarding the new claims asserted in the Third Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs generally allege that by November 1, 2016, Defendants Bison and Extraction had reached an agreement not to compete against each other for oil and gas leases in the [*4] DJ Basin south of Denver International Airport ("DIA South Area"). (Third Amended Complaint ("TAC") ¶ 97.) According to this alleged agreement, Bison would acquire leases at reduced prices and then resell them to Extraction at a substantial mark-up. (Id. ¶¶ 97-98.) Plaintiffs contend that the agreement was intended to, and did, depress the price of oil and gas leases in the DIA South Area below competitive levels. (Id. ¶ 98.) Plaintiffs also allege that the Defendants conspired to suppress competition for the acquisition of oil and gas leases in the DIA South Area with the intent to depress the market for such leases. (Id. ¶¶ 109-113.)

Applicable Legal Principles

A motion to dismiss under C.R.C.P. 12\(b\)\(5\) for failure to state a claim tests the formal sufficiency of a plaintiff's complaint. Dwyer v. State, 2015 CO 58 ¶ 43. The Court must decide whether the allegations of the complaint are sufficient to raise a right to relief "above the speculative level" and provide "plausible grounds" to support the cause of action asserted. Warne v. Hall, 373 P.3d 588, 591 \(Colo. 2016\) (adopting the heightened standard of pleading set forth in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556 \(2007\) and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 \(2009\)). The Court is tasked with weeding out groundless complaints early, and one which does not plead enough facts to suggest the claim is "plausible [*5] on its face" must be dismissed. Warne, 373 P.3d at 594. A claim is facially plausible when the allegations give rise to a reasonable inference that the defendant is liable. Mayfield v. Bethards, 826 F.3d 1252, 1255 \(10th Cir. 2016\).

In reviewing a motion to dismiss, the Court must accept all well-pleaded facts contained in the complaint as true, view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. Blooming Terrace No. 1, LLC v. KH Blake St., LLC, 2017 COA 72 ¶ 9. See also Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556; Warne, 373 P.3d at 591. Although C.R.C.P. 8 does not require "detailed factual allegations," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, "it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. Thus, the court is not bound by conclusory allegations, unwarranted inferences, or legal conclusions. Warne, 373 P.3d at 591, 596; see also Denver Post Corp. v. Ritter, 255 P.3d 1083, 1088 \(Colo. 2011\).

Furthermore, when reviewing a motion to dismiss, the Court may only consider matters stated within the complaint itself and may not consider information outside the confines of that pleading. Pub. Serv. Co of Colo. V. Van Wyk, 27 P.3d 377, 386 \(Colo. 2001\). However, "a document that is referred to in the complaint, even though not formally incorporated by reference or attached to the complaint, is not considered a matter outside the pleading." Yadon v. Lowry, 126 P.3d 332, 336 \(Colo. App. 2005\).

Analysis

As an initial matter, Plaintiffs argue in their Response that several of Defendants' arguments should be treated as untimely motions for reconsideration [*6] or as arguments that are barred by the law of the case. The Court is reluctant to revisit the merits of its prior decisions, and will endeavor to identify those arguments Defendants re-raise in their motions that were already disposed of by the Court in previous orders.

I. Fraud Claims

To succeed on a claim for fraudulent inducement, a plaintiff must prove: (1) the defendant made a fraudulent misrepresentation of fact or knowingly failed to disclose a fact that defendant had a duty to disclose; (2) the fact was material; (3) the plaintiff relied on the misrepresentation or failure to disclose; (4) the plaintiff's reliance was justified; and (5) the reliance resulted in damage to the plaintiff. See M.D.C./Wood, Inc. v. Mortimer, 866 P.2d 1380, 1382 \(Colo. 1994\). To succeed on a claim for common law fraud, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant made a false representation of a material fact; (2) that the defendant knew it was false; (3) that the plaintiff did not know of the falsity; (4) that the representation was made with the intent that it be acted upon; and (5) that the representation resulted in damages. See Wood v. Houghton Mifflin Harcourt Pub. Co., 569 F. Supp. 2d 1135, 1140 \(D. Colo. 2008\) (quoting Brody v. Bock, 897 P.2d 769, 775-76 \(Colo. 1995\)). Under C.R.C.P. 9\(b\), "[i]n all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with [*7] particularity." The particularity required by the rule applies to all the material elements of an action in fraud. Coon v. District Court, 420 P.2d 827, 828 \(Colo. 1966\). However, a claimant need not plead detailed allegations of evidentiary facts. Northwest Development, Inc. v. Dunn, 483 P.2d 1361, 1363 \(Colo. App. 1971\). Instead, the complaint "must at least state the main facts or incidents which constitute the fraud so that the defendant is provided with sufficient information to frame a responsive pleading and defend against the claim." State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Parrish, 899 P.2d 285, 289 \(Colo. App. 1994\) (citations omitted).

According to Bison, Plaintiffs' fraud claims fail because Plaintiffs do not assert allegations that are definite and specific, which would justify Plaintiffs' assumption that Bison would be the entity operating and developing Plaintiffs' land. Instead, Bison argues that the alleged representations about Bison's experience, good standing, partnership qualities, and future plans for development were puffery and vague allusions to potential benefits, not specific commitments about how Bison would operate its oil and gas leases. Bison contends that the evidence contradicts Plaintiffs' expectation that Bison would operate the assets, as the plain language of the agreements expressly contemplates Bison's right to assign them. In response, Plaintiffs argue [*8] that Bison is precluded from attempting to challenge the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' fraud claims because the Court has already rejected Bison's arguments. Even if the Court were to revisit the merits of Bison's arguments, Plaintiffs argue the Court should reach the same result.

Bison's Motion to Dismiss is its third attempt to challenge the validity of Plaintiffs' fraud claims. On two prior occasions, the Court rejected Bison's argument that Plaintiffs failed to state a claim for fraudulent inducement or common law fraud. (See Order on Motions to Dismiss; Order Granting Leave to File Third Amended Complaint). Here, Bison's arguments are similar to those raised in its first motion to dismiss and in its opposition to Plaintiffs' motion to amend. Taking Plaintiffs' allegations as true and viewing them in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, it is plausible that Bison's representations would induce Plaintiffs to assign the subject leases to Bison. The Court reiterates that "Defendants' argument goes to the reasonableness of Plaintiffs' reliance on the representations or omissions Bison allegedly made." (Order on Motions to Dismiss at 13.) As previously stated, whether a person justifiably [*9] relied on alleged misrepresentation is a question of fact. Loveland Essential Group, LLC v. Grommon Farms, Inc., 251 P.3d 1109, 1116-17 \(Colo. App. 2010\).

The Extraction Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' fraud claims must be dismissed as against them because Plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead their claims under C.R.C.P. 8 and failed to meet the heightened pleading standard required for fraud claims under C.R.C.P. 9. Plaintiffs respond that they are not asserting fraud claims against the Extraction Defendants. It is unclear from the Third Amended Complaint which of Plaintiffs' claims are asserted against which Defendants. Thus, to clarify, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' first and second claims do not apply to the Extraction Defendants.

II. Antitrust Claim

Colorado's Antitrust Act bars "[e]very contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce." C.R.S. § 6-4-104. It also prohibits "any person to contract, combine, or conspire with any person to rig any bid, or any aspect of the bidding process, in any way related to the provision of any commodity or service." C.R.S. § 6-4-106. Any person injured in its business by reason of a violation of the Antitrust Act may file an action to prevent or restrain the violation, C.R.S. § 6-4-113\(1\), or may sue to recover any actual damages sustained, [*10] C.R.S. § 6-4-114\(1\). Courts have interpreted the Antitrust Act to prohibit only the unreasonable restraint of trade. People ex rel. Woodard v. Colo. Springs Bd. Of Realtors, 692 P.2d 1055, 1062 (Colo. 1984); Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S.679, 688 (1978). When Colorado courts are construing these statutes, they are to use federal law interpreting the corresponding antitrust acts as a guide. C.R.S. § 6-4-119.

To prevail on an antitrust claim, a plaintiff must prove three elements. First, a plaintiff must prove that there was an agreement between two entities. Law v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 134 F.3d 1010, 1016 (10th Cir. 1998); Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir. 1993). Second, a plaintiff must prove that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade in the market. Law, 134 F.3d at 1016. A plaintiff can establish the second element by proving the restraint on trade was unreasonable per se or unreasonable under the rule of reason. Capital Imaging Assocs., 996 F.2d at 542. Unless the alleged restraint falls within certain categories of offenses proscribed as per se anticompetitive, there is a presumption that the rule of reason standard will apply. Expert Masonry, Inc. v. Boone County, Ky., 440 F.3d 336, 343 (6th Cir. 2006). Third, a plaintiff must prove that the violation of the act resulted in an antitrust injury. Full Draw Prod. v. Easton Sports, Inc., 182 F.3d 745, 750 (10th Cir. 1999).

Defendants raise four arguments in their motions to dismiss Plaintiffs' antitrust claims:

- (1) Bison contends that Plaintiffs failed to allege the existence of an unlawful agreement;
- (2) Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have not plead a per se violation of Colorado's antitrust laws;
- (3) [*11] the Extraction Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to plead an antitrust injury.

A. Plaintiffs Adequately Allege the Existence of an Agreement

Bison argues that Plaintiffs' claims for violation of the Antitrust Act must be dismissed because Plaintiffs rely exclusively on conclusory assertions that Defendants violated antitrust law without including any independent allegations of actual agreement among the Defendants.<sup>1</sup> In support of its argument, Bison primarily relies on the U.S. Supreme Court case, Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544 (2007), which addresses pleading standards in the antitrust context. In Twombly, the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's dismissal of plaintiffs' antitrust claims because the complaint failed to provide a factual context suggesting there was an illegal agreement between the defendants. Id. at 548-49. Because federal antitrust law only prohibits unreasonable restraints on trade that are "effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy," the Court determined that the crucial question "is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stems from independent decision[s] or from an agreement." Id. at 553 (internal citation and quotation omitted). The Court held that adequately pleading an antitrust claim "requires [*12] a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made." Id. at 556 (emphasis added). In other words, the complaint must state "enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of [an] illegal agreement." Id. The complaint in Twombly was defective because the plaintiffs failed to plead facts of an agreement between the defendant telephone companies; instead, plaintiffs relied upon inferences that could be drawn from the defendants' parallel conduct. Id. at 564-65. The Court found that the inferences failed to establish a violation of the antitrust laws and could have been the result of routine market conduct. Id. at 566.

Bison asserts that, like Twombly, the Plaintiffs here have failed to allege any specific facts suggesting that there was an agreement between the Defendants. Bison contends that the Third Amended Complaint fails to identify any written or verbal agreement among the Defendants and fails to specify which individuals assented to the alleged agreement, when the agreement was made, and how it was negotiated. In response, Plaintiffs argue that this Court has already determined that there are sufficient allegations of an agreement in its [*13] Order Granting Leave to File Third Amended Complaint. However, Plaintiffs assert that if the Court were to consider the merits of Bison's argument, the Court should affirm its prior conclusion. Plaintiffs contend that the Third Amended Complaint details the overarching agreement between the Defendants to not compete in acquiring oil and gas leases in the area of Plaintiffs' land. (See TAC ¶¶ 21, 25, 30, 56, 91-107).<sup>2</sup>

Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged the existence of an agreement in the Third Amended Complaint. Plaintiffs allege that prior to the fall of 2016, Bison and Extraction were both acquiring oil and gas leases in the Denver-Julesburg Basin ("DJ Basin") south of Denver International Airport ("DIA South Area"). (TAC ¶ 21.) However, Plaintiffs allege that by November 1, 2016, Bison and Extraction had entered into an agreement not to compete for oil and gas leases in the DIA South Area. (Id. at ¶¶ 21, 97.) This allegation generally is supported by a November 1, 2016 Indication of Interest letter. (Response Ex. 2.) Plaintiffs allege that by the terms of this agreement Bison would continue to acquire leases in the area, including Plaintiffs' leases, and that Extraction would [*14] not compete with Bison. (See id. at ¶ 21.) According to Plaintiffs, during the fall of 2016, when Plaintiffs were in discussions with Bison, Extraction complied with the terms of the Defendants' agreement and did not acquire any oil and gas leases in the area. (See id. at ¶ 25.) Plaintiffs contend that, pursuant to this agreement, Bison acquired Plaintiffs' leases at below market value and then sold them to Extraction at a price fifteen times greater than price Plaintiffs were paid. (See id. at ¶¶ 99-100.) As discussed more fully below, Plaintiffs further allege that on November 22, 2016, Bison and the Extraction Defendants entered into a written "Purchase and Sale Agreement" ("PSA") by which Bison sold all of its oil and gas leases in the DIA South Area to Extraction. (Id. at ¶ 30.) As part of the PSA, the Defendants entered into an "Additional Leasing Agreement" pursuant to which Extraction agreed not directly or indirectly purchase or acquire leases in the acquisition area for a period of twelve months. (See Bison Motion Ex. B § 2(g)).

Unlike in Twombly, these allegations are more than mere inferences that can be drawn from parallel conduct of the parties. This Court is not aware [*15] of any binding precedent that would require Plaintiffs to be more specific. As the Court noted in its Order Granting Leave to File Third Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs may "exaggerate the significance" of some of the evidence they have uncovered. But again, it is not for the Court to resolve disputes of fact at this stage of the litigation. Rather, taking the allegations as true, Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged facts to suggest that an agreement not to compete was made between the Defendants.

B. Plaintiffs Fail to Allege a Per Se Violation of the Antitrust Act

The Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to allege a per se unreasonable restraint on competition. Conduct is considered illegal per se under the Antitrust Act only in a limited class of cases where the defendant's actions are so plainly harmful to competition and so obviously lacking in any redeeming procompetitive values that they are conclusively presumed illegal without further examination. Capital Imaging Assoc., 996 F.2d at 543. Courts have found agreements to be illegal per se when "the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output." Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20 (1979). For example, the per se rule has been applied [*16] to situations of: (1) horizontal price fixing and output limitation, see Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. Of Regents of Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 100 (1984); (2) allocation or division of a market amongst competitors, see U.S. v. Suntar Roofing, Inc., 897 F.2d 469, 473 (10th Cir. 1990); (3) certain group boycotts, see Diaz v. Farley, 215 F.3d 1175, 1182-1183 (10th Cir. 2000); and (4) bid rigging, See U.S. v. Reicher, 983 F.2d 168, 170 (10th Cir. 1992). Generally, "only horizontal restraints - restraints imposed by agreement between competitors - qualify as unreasonable per se." Ohio v. American Express Co., 138 S. Ct. 2274, 2283-84 (2018) (internal quotations omitted) (quoting Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723 (1988)). Application of the per se rule "eliminates the need to study the reasonableness of an individual restraint in light of the real market forces at work." Leegin Creative Leather Products, Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886 (2007) (citing Business Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. at 723). A plaintiff is entitled to treble damages when he alleges a per se violation of the Antitrust Act. C.R.S. § 6-4-114(1).

Here, Plaintiffs assert that the alleged agreement between Bison and Extraction not to compete for leases in the DIA South Area was a per se violation of antitrust laws because the Defendants agreed to fix prices and rig bids. (TAC ¶ 91.) Federally, bid rigging has been defined as "[a]ny agreement between competitors pursuant to which contract offers are to be submitted to or withheld from a third party." Reicher, 983 F.2d at 170 (quoting United States v. Portsmouth Paving Corp., 694 F.2d 312, 325 (4th Cir. 1982)). Plaintiffs assert that bid rigging includes agreeing to refrain from bidding, and that bid rigging is per se illegal. (Response at 14 (citing [*17] 1 ABA Antitrust Section, Antitrust Law Developments ("ALD") 93 (8th ed. 2017); U.S. v. MMR Corp., 907 F.2d 489, 496 (5th Cir. 1990); U.S. v. Mobile Materials, Inc., 881 F.2d 866, 869 (10th Cir. 1989); Compact v. Metro Gov't of Nashville & Davidson Cty., TN, 594 F. Supp. 1567, 1578 (M.D. Tenn 1984)).) Plaintiffs assert that bid rigging is a type of price fixing, which is also per se illegal. (Id. at 14-15 (citing U.S. v. Bensinger Co., 430 F.2d 584, 589 (8th Cir. 1970), superseded by rule on other grounds (explaining that bid rigging is a type of price fixing "of the simplest kind")).) Plaintiffs argue that no matter how their claim is labeled, Defendants' agreement falls squarely within the per se rule. Plaintiffs cite several cases where courts have evaluated the per se rule in the context of competitors in the market for oil and gas leases. See, e.g. Branta, LLC v. Newfield Production Co., 310 F.Supp.3d 1166 (D. Colo. April 12, 2018) (appeal filed); Northstar Energy LLC v. Encana Corp., No. 1:13-cv-200, 2014 WL 5343423, at *6 (W.D. Mich. Mar. 10, 2014).

The Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' allegations regarding an agreement to fix prices or rig bids are conclusory and fail to establish a per se violation of the Antitrust Act. The Extraction Defendants specifically challenge Plaintiffs' statement that Defendants engaged in price fixing, noting that the Third Amended Complaint is devoid of any facts of the method by which the Defendants fixed prices or what price was allegedly fixed. Similarly, they contend that Plaintiffs have not offered any particular facts regarding the bidding process [*18] to evidence their bid rigging claim. The Court agrees with Defendants that Plaintiffs have not alleged any facts regarding alleged price-fixing. Plaintiffs have not identified what price was fixed or how Defendants allegedly fixed the price. Further, the only facts Plaintiffs allege to support a claim of bid rigging is that Bison and Extraction agreed not to compete with one another. Plaintiffs do not allege that Bison and Extraction compared bids before submission, knowingly submitted noncompetitive bids, or agreed to jointly refrain from bidding. See ALD at 93. As alleged, it is not clear that the non-compete agreement Plaintiffs allege existed constitutes bid rigging.

Furthermore, the Defendants assert that the non-compete agreement that forms the basis of Plaintiffs' claims was a reasonable and necessary agreement that was ancillary to a separate and distinct business transaction - the purchase of Bison's assets by Extraction. The Defendants persuasively argue that the non-compete agreement cannot, as a matter of law, support a per se violation of the Antitrust Act. First, courts often evaluate covenants not to compete under the rule of reason. See, e.g., County Materials Corp. v. Allan Block Corp., 502 F.3d 730, 735 (7th Cir. 2007) (holding that a non-compete [*19] agreement between two companies was required to be evaluated under the rule of reason); Perceptron, Inc. v. Sensor Adaptive Machines, Inc., 221 F.3d 913, 919 (6th Cir. 2000) ("The legality of noncompetition covenants ancillary to a legitimate transaction must be analyzed under the rule of reason."); Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo Co., 660 F.2d 255, 265 (7th Cir. 1981) (same). Second, even restraints ordinarily considered per se violations are analyzed under the rule of reason when they are ancillary to a legitimate business transaction. See SCFC ILC, Inc. v. Visa USA, Inc., 36 F.3d 958, 964 (10th Cir. 1994) (directing courts to "look at the challenged agreement to judge whether it represents the essential reason for the competitors' cooperation or reflects a matter merely ancillary to the venture's operation" in an "effort to appreciate the economic reality of the particular business behavior to assure that the procompetitive goals, in fact, are neither undervalued nor mask a reduction in competition"); L.A. Mem'l Coliseum Comm'n v. Nat'l Football League, 726 F.2d 1381, 1395 (9th Cir. 1984) (explaining that the effect of a finding of ancillarity is to 'remove the per se label from restraints otherwise falling within that category') (quoting R. Bork, Ancillary Restraints & the Sherman Act, 15 Antitrust L.J. 211, 212 (1959)). "To be ancillary, and hence exempt from the per se rule, an agreement eliminating competition must be subordinate and collateral to a separate, legitimate transaction." Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 792 F.2d 210, 224 (D.C. Cir. 1986). An ancillary agreement "is [*20] subordinate and collateral in the sense that it serves to make the main transaction more effective in accomplishing its purpose." Id. When an agreement that restrains trade is found to be ancillary to a legitimate transaction, the rule of reason is applied, which requires the court to "consider the harms and benefits to competition caused by the restraint and whether the putative benefits can be achieved by less restrictive means." Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v. National Football League, 726 F.2d 1381, 1395 (9th Cir. 1984).

Plaintiffs concede that an agreement not to compete that ordinarily would be unlawful per se is subject to rule of reason analysis if it is ancillary to a legitimate joint venture or transaction. (Response at 17.) Plaintiffs argue, however, that the rule of reason does not apply because the alleged agreement was not part of a procompetitive joint venture. Plaintiffs assert that the Court must accept as true its allegation in the Third Amended Complaint that the agreement was "not part of any procompetitive or efficiency-enhancing collaboration so there is no procompetitive justification for the agreement." (TAC ¶ 104(c).) But this allegation is conclusory, and the Court does not have to accept conclusory allegations as true. Warne, 373 P.3d at 591

Here, the alleged anticompetitive [*21] conduct can only be properly understood in light of the overarching transaction between Bison and Extraction for the purchase of Bison's oil and gas assets. Plaintiffs allege that by November 1, 2016, Defendants had agreed not to compete with one another for leases in the DIA South Area. (TAC ¶ 97.) As of that date, Bison and Extraction had entered into a Non-Disclosure Agreement, pursuant to which Extraction agreed not to compete with Bison for a six-month period of time within a certain geographic area pending disclosure of confidential information and discussions regarding an asset acquisition. (Extraction Motion Ex. A ¶ 10. See also Bison Motion Ex. A at 3 (defining "Confidentiality Agreement").) Also, on November 1, 2016, Bison and Extraction had entered into the Indication of Interest evidencing a potential transaction whereby Extraction would acquire Bison's oil and gas interests in certain Colorado counties. (Response Ex. 2.) As Plaintiffs assert, "[p]ursuant to the oral agreement, on November 1, 2016, Bison and Extraction entered into a 'Non-Binding Indication of Interest' (referred to as the 'Letter of Intent') . . ." (Response at 5.) The Indication of Interest<sup>3</sup> contemplates [*22] the parties entering into a Transaction Services Agreement ("TSA"). (Id. at 2.) Although the Indication of Interest itself does not refer to the non-compete agreement, later transaction documents do. On November 22, 2016, Bison executed the PSA with Bison Exploration, a subsidiary of Extraction, pursuant to which Bison assigned its interest in oil and gas leases in Adams County to Bison Exploration. (TAC ¶ 30.) The PSA obligated Bison to enter into a TSA with Extraction, also referred to as the "Additional Leasing Agreement." (See Bison Motion Ex. A, Art. 1; § 2.04(b)(6) (obligating Bison to deliver the TSA at the PSA's initial closing).) In part, the TSA provides that, for a period of twelve months, Bison would continue to acquire leases in areas the PSA designated and Extraction would either purchase those leases or have the option to purchase the leases. (See Bison Motion Ex. B § 2(b)). During that same period, the parties agreed Exploration would not "purchase, acquire or earn . . . any oil and gas leases within the Acquisition Area." (Id. at §2(g)). According to Plaintiffs: "On November 22, 2016, Bison and Extraction confirmed the bid-rigging agreement reflected in the Letter of Intent [*23] when they signed the Purchase and Sale Agreement, by which Bison sold all of its oil and gas leases in the DIA South Area to Extraction." (Response at 6, citing TSA ¶ 30.)

<sup>3</sup> Although the Indication of Interest is not specifically mentioned in the Complaint, all parties rely on it in making their arguments to the Court. Even if the Court disregarded the Indication of Interest, its analysis and the outcome of the Motions to Dismiss would remain the same.

Thus, the allegations of the Third Amended Complaint make clear that, by November 1, 2016, the date Plaintiffs allege Defendants entered into their illegal anticompetitive agreement, that Defendants were engaged in, or at a minimum taking steps to consummate, a much larger transaction. The Third Amended Complaint further makes clear that Defendants finalized the asset transfer later in November. The larger transaction not only supports Plaintiffs' argument that it has sufficiently alleged an agreement between the defendants to sustain its antitrust claim (see above), but also necessarily places that agreement in the context of a larger overarching business transaction. Although Plaintiffs challenge the legitimacy of the non-compete agreement and whether it truly was ancillary to the asset transfer, Plaintiffs do not allege that the asset transfer itself was illegitimate. The allegations of the Third Amended Complaint can lead to only one conclusion. To the extent Defendants engaged in an unreasonable restraint of [*24] trade, they did so in the context of a larger, legitimate transaction. Under such circumstances, the Court must examine Defendants' conduct under the rule of reason. To the extent Plaintiffs' antitrust claim is based on a per se violation of the Antitrust Act, it is dismissed.

C. Plaintiffs Adequately Allege an Antitrust Injury

Finally, the Extraction Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to allege an antitrust injury.<sup>4</sup> To establish an anti-trust injury, a private plaintiff must demonstrate more than an "injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market," and instead show that the injury was one antitrust laws are intended to prevent and flows from a defendant's unlawful behavior. Full Draw Prod., 754 F.3d at 750 (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489 (1977)). With per se violations, unreasonable anticompetitive results are presumed and no economic evidence is required to establish anticompetitive impact on the affected market. Woodard, 692 P.2d at 1062. The rule of reason analysis, however, requires the factfinder to weigh all the evidence of a case to decide if a practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition. U.S. v. Suntar Roofing, Inc., 897 F.2d 469, 472 (10th Cir. 1990). Under the rule of reason, courts apply a burden shifting analysis by which:

[T]he plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that an agreement [*25] had a substantially adverse effect on competition. If the plaintiff meets this burden, the burden shifts to the defendant to come forward with evidence of the procompetitive virtues of the alleged wrongful conduct. If the defendant is able to demonstrate procompetitive effects, the plaintiff then must prove that the challenged conduct is not reasonably necessary to achieve the legitimate objectives or that those objectives can be achieved in a substantially less restrictive manner. Ultimately, if these steps are met, the harms and benefits must be weighed against each other in order to judge whether the challenged behavior is, on balance, reasonable.

Gregory v. Fort Bridger Rendezvous Ass'n, 448 F.3d 1197, 1205 (10th Cir. 2006)(quoting Law, 134 F.3d at 1019). For a plaintiff to carry its initial burden, it must show more than that the challenged action adversely affected its business; and instead, must show an adverse effect on competition in general. Buccaneer Energy (USA) Inc. v. Gunnison Energy Corp., 846 F.3d 1297, 1310 (10th Cir. 2017). Ultimately, a plaintiff must show that challenged restraint actually injured competition, not merely a competitor. Suture Express, Inc. v. Owens & Minor Distribution, Inc, 851 F.3d 1029, 1044 (10th Cir. 2017) (citing SCFC ILC, Inc., 36 F.3d at 965). Plaintiffs can make the showing of anticompetitive effect through direct or indirect evidence. Ohio v. American Express Co., 138 S.Ct. 2274, 2284 (2018). Direct evidence of anticompetitive effects is actual proof of detrimental effects on competition, such as "reduced [*26] output, increased prices, or decreased quality in the relevant market." Id. (citation omitted). While indirect evidence "would be proof of market power plus some evidence that the challenged restraint harms competition." Id.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>4</sup>The Extraction Defendants first argue that Plaintiffs fail to allege an antitrust claim under the rule of reason because they fail to allege harm to competition. The Extraction Defendants separately argue that Plaintiffs fail to allege any antitrust claim because they fail to allege an antitrust injury. The Court finds these arguments largely duplicative, so addresses them together. The Court notes that Bison did not argue that Plaintiffs failed to allege antitrust injury.

The Extraction Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' do not sufficiently allege an antitrust claim (generally or under the rule of reason) because Plaintiffs fail to plead any harm to competition. According to the Extraction Defendants, Plaintiffs rely on conclusory allegations that (1) competition was harmed, and (2) Bison sold Plaintiffs' leases for a profit. The Extraction Defendants argue that Plaintiffs pled just two injuries with particularity, namely that (1) Bison improperly assigned Plaintiffs' leases to the Extraction Defendants; and (2) Bison did not pay Plaintiffs fair market value for their leases due to misrepresentations by Bison. The Extraction Defendants assert that these injuries cannot serve the basis of an antitrust claim because they are not of the kind contemplated by the antitrust laws; instead of alleging impact on the larger oil and gas market, Plaintiffs' allegations focus on their individual injuries. The Extraction Defendants further contend [*27] that the well pleaded facts contradict Plaintiffs' claims because Plaintiffs disregarded potential offers from other companies interested in Plaintiffs' oil and gas rights. (TAC ¶ 24.)

In response, Plaintiffs argue that Third Amended Complaint sufficiently alleges the anticompetitive effects of the agreement between the Defendants by alleging that (1) Defendants' illegal agreement depressed market prices and negatively impacted competition in the DIA South Area; (2) Bison purchased Plaintiffs' leases below market prices; and (3) the leases were resold at a substantially higher price. Plaintiffs assert that they need not plead specifics regarding the prevailing price for leases in a competitive market absent Defendants' unlawful agreement. Plaintiffs argue that although they must prove the fact of damage with reasonable certainty, the amount of damage need not be proved with precision. (Response at 25 (citing, inter alia, Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100, 123-24 \(1969\).)

The Court finds that Plaintiffs have sufficiently pled an antitrust injury because Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' unlawful agreement harmed competition in the DIA South area. (TAC ¶ 98). Plaintiffs contend that the relevant market is the DIA South Area and that [*28] Defendants were two of the major competitors for leases in that market. (Id. at ¶ 96.) Plaintiffs allege that Defendants were able to avoid bidding against each other for leases covering 3,000 net mineral acres and paid a price below fair market value. (Id. at ¶¶ 99, 101.) According to Plaintiffs, the Defendants' agreement not to compete for leases was intended to and did depress the acquisition price for oil and gas leases in the DIA South Area. (Id. at ¶¶ 98-101.)

These allegations are sufficient to demonstrate that Defendants' alleged agreement had a substantially adverse effect on competition in violation of the rule of reason. Whether the DIA South area is a relevant market, whether the Defendants' conduct impacted that market, and whether Plaintiffs suffered an injury caused by Defendants' conduct all will depend on evidence that is not before the Court and cannot be considered when resolving a motion to dismiss. Indeed, Plaintiffs' allegation that they rejected competitive offers in favor of finalizing the transaction with Bison seems to contradict their assertion that Defendants' conduct negatively impacted competition in the market. On a motion to dismiss, however, the Court [*29] does not weigh competing evidence. Therefore, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged an antitrust injury.

III. Plaintiffs' Civil Conspiracy Claim

Finally, the Defendants move to dismiss Plaintiffs' civil conspiracy claim because it depends entirely on the antitrust claim. Because the Court has found that Plaintiffs sufficiently pled a violation of the Antitrust Act, the conspiracy claim also survives.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, and as set forth herein, the Court GRANTS IN PART AND DENIES IN PART Bison Oil & Gas, LLC's Motion for Partial Dismissal of Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint and Extraction Oil & Gas, Inc. and Axis Exploration, LLC's Motion to Dismiss Third Amended Complaint, In Part, Pursuant to C.R.C.P. 12\(b\)\(5\).

HN1 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a claim may be dismissed because of the plaintiff's failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). A dismissal under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) may be based on the lack of a cognizable legal theory or on the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory. In reviewing a complaint under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), all well-pleaded allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. However, complaints that offer no more than labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. The court is not required to accept as true allegations that contradict exhibits attached to the complaint or matters properly subject to judicial notice, or allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences.

HN2 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To avoid a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissal, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Plausibility means more than a sheer possibility, but less than a probability, and facts that are merely consistent with liability fall short of plausibility.

HN3 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The following principles apply to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motions: (1) to be entitled to the presumption of truth, allegations in a complaint or counterclaim may not simply recite the elements of a cause of action, but must contain sufficient allegations of underlying facts to give fair notice and to enable the opposing party to defend itself effectively; (2) the factual allegations that are taken as true must plausibly suggest entitlement to relief, such that it is not unfair to require the opposing party to be subjected to the expense of discovery and continued litigation. In assessing a motion to dismiss, courts may consider documents attached to the complaint, documents incorporated by reference in the complaint, or matters subject to judicial notice. If a motion to dismiss is granted, the district court should grant leave to amend even if no request to amend the pleading was made. However, leave to amend need not be granted if amendment would be futile or the plaintiff has failed to cure deficiencies despite repeated opportunities.

HN4 Elements of Misappropriation, Acquisition

Under the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act (CUTSA), in a plaintiff's action against the same defendant, the continued improper use or disclosure of a trade secret after the defendant's initial misappropriation is viewed under the CUTSA as part of a single claim of continuing misappropriation accruing at the time of the initial misappropriation. A distinction between a misappropriation and a claim emerges. A misappropriation within the meaning of the CUTSA occurs not only at the time of the initial acquisition of the trade secret by wrongful means, but also with each misuse or wrongful disclosure of the secret. But a claim for misappropriation of a trade secret arises for a given plaintiff against a given defendant only once, at the time of the initial misappropriation, subject to the discovery rule provided in Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.6. Each new misuse or wrongful disclosure is viewed as augmenting a single claim of continuing misappropriation rather than as giving rise to a separate claim.

There is only one claim that arises for misappropriation under the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act (CUTSA), all future claims, i.e., subsequent uses or disclosures, merely augment that one claim. For purposes of CUTSA, a separate future misappropriation claim against a single defendant and involving the same previously misappropriated trade secret is a legal impossibility. CUTSA does not preempt or displace breach of contract claims that are based on misappropriation of trade secrets. Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7\(b\)\(1\).

The Defend Trade Secrets Act (DTSA) is largely modelled after the Uniform Trade Secrets Act (UTSA). California adopted the UTSA without significant change through enactment of the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act (CUTSA). States that have adopted the UTSA, like California, consistently apply a single claim theory to misappropriations of trade secrets. Further, the CUTSA provisions relied upon and examined by Cadence Design v. Avant are materially the same as the corresponding sections of the DTSA. Both the DTSA and CUTSA provide a

A third-party beneficiary is someone who may enforce a contract because the contract is made expressly for his benefit. A putative third party's rights under a contract are predicated upon the contracting parties' intent to benefit it. That is, the test for determining whether a contract was made for the benefit of a third party is whether an intent to benefit a third person appears from the terms of the contract. Ascertaining this intent is a question of ordinary contract interpretation. A contract is to be interpreted to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties at the time the contract was made. Cal. Civ. Code § 1636. The intent of the parties is to be ascertained from the writing alone, if possible. Cal. Civ. Code § 1639. A contract's words are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense, unless used by the parties in a technical sense, or unless a special meaning is given them by usage. Cal. Civ. Code § 1644. Extrinsic evidence is admissible, however, to interpret an agreement when a material term is ambiguous. A contractual term will be ambiguous where, in the context of the whole and negotiations of the parties making the contract, the issue becomes one of law. Cal. Civ. Code § 1647.

**HN13** [] Beneficiaries, Claims & Enforcement

A contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates. Cal. Civ. Code § 1647. The character of a contract is not to be determined by isolating any single clause or group of clauses, rather a contract is to be construed as a whole, so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other. A third-party beneficiary need not be named in the contract where the agreement reflects the intent of the contracting parties to benefit the unnamed party. However, a third party who is only incidentally benefitted by performance of a contract is not entitled to enforce it. The circumstance that a literal contract interpretation would result in a benefit to the third party is not enough to entitle the third party to demand enforcement of the contract. Generally, whether a third party is an intended beneficiary under a contract is a question of fact, but if the issue can be answered by interpreting the contract as a whole and doing so in light of the uncontradicted evidence of the circumstances and negotiations of the parties making the contract, the issue becomes one of law.

Third-party beneficiary cases are usually decided after the submission of evidence regarding the parties' intent, including evidence about the negotiations and circumstances of the contract. The law permits a plaintiff who opposes enforcement of a general release by a third party to offer extrinsic evidence as to the circumstances surrounding negotiation and signing of the release to attempt to show that releasing any other person, meaning everyone, does not comport with the parties' intent. This principle has generally been followed either through a bench trial or summary judgment.

A litigant may not ordinarily recover in tort for the breach of duties that merely restate contractual obligations. However, it is possible for the same conduct to constitute both a breach of contract and an invasion of an interest protected by the law of torts. That is, courts will generally enforce the breach of a contractual promise through contract law, except when the actions that constitute the breach violate a social policy that merits the imposition of tort remedies. Conduct amounting to a breach of contract becomes tortious only when it also violates a duty independent of the contract arising from principles of tort law. An omission to perform a contract obligation is never a tort, unless that omission is also an omission of a legal duty.

The California Uniform Trade Secrets Act (CUTSA) enjoys a comprehensive structure and breadth. CUTSA has a specific provision that addresses preemption. Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7. CUTSA does not preempt or supersede any statute relating to misappropriation of trade secrets or any statute that otherwise regulates trade secrets. Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7\(a\). Importantly, CUTSA does not affect (1) contractual remedies, whether or not based upon misappropriation of a trade secret, (2) other civil remedies that are not based upon a misappropriation of a trade secret, or (3) criminal remedies. Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7\(b\). Therefore, § 3426.7 expressly allows contractual and criminal remedies, whether or not based on trade secret misappropriation, but implicitly preempts alternative civil remedies based on trade secret misappropriation. CUTSA provides the exclusive civil remedy for conduct falling within its terms, so as to supersede other civil remedies based upon misappropriation of a trade secret. The determination of whether a claim is based on trade secret misappropriation is largely factual. CUTSA preempts/supersedes civil, non-contract claims based on the same nucleus of facts as trade secret misappropriation.

The elements of a claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage (IIPEA) are: (1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional wrongful acts designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm proximately caused by the defendant's actions. Courts have recognized that, if an interference with prospective economic advantage claim is based on the same nucleus of facts as a California Uniform Trade Secrets Act (CUTSA) trade secret misappropriation claim, then the IIPEA tort is preempted by CUTSA.

HN34 [blue document icon] State Regulation, Claims

The terms unlawful, unfair, and fraudulent are terms of art under the Unfair Competition Law (UCL). A business practice is fraudulent under the UCL if members of the public are likely to be deceived. The UCL's unlawful prong borrows violations of other laws and makes those unlawful practices actionable under the UCL, and that virtually any law or regulation-federal or state, statutory or common law-can serve as a predicate. California law with respect to unfair conduct is currently in flux. Conduct is unfair either when it threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition, or when it offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers.

The covenant of good faith and fair dealing, implied by law in every contract, exists merely to prevent one contracting party from unfairly frustrating the other party's right to receive the benefits of the agreement actually made. The scope of conduct prohibited by the covenant of good faith is circumscribed by the purposes and express terms of the contract. Although breach of the implied covenant often is pleaded as a separate count, a breach of the implied covenant is necessarily a breach of contract. However, if the plaintiff's allegations of breach of the covenant of good faith do not go beyond the statement of a mere contract breach and, relying on the same alleged acts, simply seek the same damages or other relief already claimed in a companion contract cause of action, they may be disregarded as superfluous as no additional claim is actually stated. That is, where breach of an actual contract term is alleged, a separate implied covenant claim, based on the same breach, is superfluous.

BACKGROUND FACTS

From the Complaint, Deerpoint is in the business of chemical water treatment solutions for agriculture irrigation. Over the past decade, Deerpoint has enjoyed explosive demand for its precision-fed patented fertilizers at custom irrigation sites. Deerpoint custom builds each chemical feed system for each site. Deerpoint sells its products and services within California and Arizona. Deerpoint utilizes integrated systems of fertilizers, which are custom-blended through proprietary methods, and applied to crops through data-controlled mechanical delivery systems. Proprietary blends of fertilizers and foliar products<sup>2</sup> are the backbone of Deerpoint's product line. Deerpoint's fertilizers are tailored to a variety of crops and conditions. Further, at the heart of Deerpoint's fertigation<sup>3</sup> program is patented precision feeding equipment, which has been nicknamed the "White Box" by Deerpoint's customers. Deerpoint has invested millions \*\*5 of dollars customizing its fertilizers, foliar products, and equipment to a wide range of crops and environments, and archives its products and services for the growers that use its services. The confidential, proprietary, and trade secret nature of Deerpoint's fertilizer and foliar blends is essential to Deerpoint's business, and is the source of much business goodwill.

Deerpoint puts a premium on its employees to maintain strict confidentiality over its proprietary formulations, practices, methods, insights, intellectual property, and other information. Since Deerpoint's founding in 1993, it has required its employees and executives to execute a detailed confidentiality agreement, the Employees Invention and Secrecy Agreement (the "EIS"). Deerpoint steadfastly enforces the EIS. Since at least 2000, every employee signs the EIS. Deerpoint's employee handbook also contains policies relating to confidentiality, and in 2016, Deerpoint implemented a new-hire training program that highlighted its policies, including the confidentiality policies. Deerpoint also regulates the access and exchange of information within the company, restricts access to certain information, and ensures that its \*\*6 confidential information is confined to company-owned computers.

<sup>3</sup> "Fertigation" refers to a fertilization process whereby fertilizers are added to the water being used to irrigate crops, and reflects a combination of irrigation and fertilization.

Until October 4, 2017, Mahoney was the Chief Executive Officer of Deerpoint. Mahoney signed the EIS and an updated EIS in 2016. Despite the EIS, Mahoney acted to gain access to, and download from, a central computer Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information. Further, prior to his departure, Mahoney was seen removing files and documents relating to formulation manufacturers, vendors, and suppliers. Mahoney and Deerpoint mutually agreed to terminate his employment on October 4, 2017.

On October 3, 2017, Mahoney filed a lawsuit in the Fresno County Superior Court against Deerpoint ("the Lawsuit"). On October 7, 2017, Mahoney filed an administrative [*1219] complaint with the California Department of Fair Housing and Employment against Deerpoint. These matters were stayed pending settlement negotiations.

Sometime in October 2017, Mahoney launched a direct competitor to Deerpoint, Agrigenix. Mahoney is the president and chief executive officer of Agrigenix. Agrigenix promotes itself as an alternative to Deerpoint by feeding crops the precise nutrients need, in exactly the right amounts, at the right time for [**7] optimum growth. Agrigenix states that it provides a full line of nutrients and fertilizer blends formulated with proprietary chemistries. However, the blends are pirated from Deerpoint. Agrigenix also has foliar blends that mimic Deerpoint. Mahoney and Agrigenix possessed Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information, and Mahoney founded Agrigenix on trade secrets misappropriated from Deerpoint. Agrigenix has told Deerpoint's customers that it is "the same as Deerpoint with a twist." Four large clients of Deerpoint have switched to Agrigenix. Further, circumstances suggest that Agrigenix/Mahoney may have taken steps to steal and copy Deerpoint's White Box technology.

On January 8, 2018, Mahoney and Deerpoint signed a Settlement Agreement ("the Settlement"). The Settlement resolved the Lawsuit and all other claims that the Mahoney and Deerpoint had against each other. The Settlement included a provision that Paragraph 3 of the EIS remained in full force, a provision in which Mahoney acknowledged the confidential and proprietary nature of Deerpoint's trade secret information, a provision in which Mahoney agreed not to divulge or use Deerpoint's trade secrets and [**8] to take steps to protect such information from disclosure, and to return Deerpoint's property that was in Mahoney's possession. Around March 2018, Agrigenix installed at least four devices that approximate Deerpoint's White Boxes.

DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

1. SETTLEMENT BAR — 1st, 2nd, 5th, 7th, 8th, and 9th Causes of Action

Defendants' Argument

Defendants argue that the Settlement bars all claims based on conduct that occurred up to and including January 8, 2018. The language of the Settlement is broad and settles all claims between Deerpoint and Defendants, regardless of whether the claims were known or unknown, that existed before and at the time the settlement was executed. Although Agrigenix was not a signatory to the settlement, its conduct is encompassed by the Settlement as a third-party beneficiary because it was a person acting under, by, through, or in concert with Mahoney.

In reply, Defendants argue that Deerpoint has judicially admitted through the allegations in the complaint that Agrigenix acted together and in concert with Mahoney. That judicial admission shows that Deerpoint's claims against Agrigenix were covered by the Settlement. Defendants also argue that a claim [**9] under CUTSA arises against a given defendant only once, at the time of the initial misappropriation, and that all other wrongful uses of the particular trade secret augments the single claim. Since the Settlement resolved Deerpoint's trade secret cause of action, and there is only one misappropriation claim possible against any one person, Deerpoint's trade secret misappropriation claims that are based on post-Settlement conduct are barred.

Plaintiff's Opposition

Deerpoint argues that the Settlement does not bar claims that accrued after the Settlement was signed, and that the Complaint [*1220] contains many such claims. For example, the Settlement reaffirmed the confidential relationship between Mahoney and Deerpoint with respect to its trade secrets and obligated Mahoney to return Deerpoint's property/confidential information. These provisions preserved the ability of Deerpoint to bring a post-Settlement CUTSA claim.

With respect to claims that accrued pre-Settlement, the Settlement does not bar such claims as to Agrigenix. First, Defendants' argument is based on the inferential facts that Deerpoint knew that Agrigenix was up and running by January 8, 2018, and that the Settlement's release [**10] included any pre-existing-yet-unknown claims it had against Agrigenix. This logic leads to the absurd result that Deerpoint released each and every former employee who went to work at Agrigenix simply because Deerpoint knew of the new employment on January 8, 2018. Second, Agrigenix has not shown that the signatories intended for it to be a third-party beneficiary. Agrigenix does not provide an ordinary interpretation of the isolated term "acting in concert," nor does it account for other portions of the settlement agreement. For example, the Settlement defines its scope by reference to the lawsuit brought by Mahoney and the potential cross claims that could have been brought by Deerpoint, but Agrigenix was not a party to that lawsuit. The Settlement's release defines the subject matter released in the same way. At best, there is ambiguity in the Settlement, and that ambiguity is a question of fact that cannot be resolved in this motion.

Relevant Contractual Provisions

Under the "Recitals" portion of the Settlement, the Settlement explains that Mahoney filed an administrative complaint with the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing, on October 6, 2017. See Settlement ¶ [**11]. A lawsuit was filed by Mahoney in the Fresno County Superior Court on October 3, 2017, known as "the Lawsuit," which included the October 6 DFEH complaint. Id. at ¶ C. Deerpoint indicated an intent to file a cross-complaint against Mahoney, or remove the Lawsuit and then file various counterclaims against Mahoney, which would include claims for "breach of fiduciary duty, misappropriation of trade secrets, unfair competition, and violation of secrecy agreements." Id. at ¶ D. However, the parties "settled, fully and finally, all claims the Parties might have against each other up to and including the date of execution of this [Settlement] including, but not limited to, those claims which have been or could have been made in the Lawsuit." Id. at E.

The "Complete General Release" reads:

Except as stated herein, in consideration for the promises set forth in this Agreement, each Party does hereby for themselves and for their heirs, representatives, attorneys, executors, administrators, successors, and assigns, release, acquit, remise, and forever discharge the other Party, including each of their respective affiliates, subsidiaries, parent companies, related companies, partners, officers, [**12] directors, managers, servants, agents, employees, former employees, representatives, insurance carriers, and attorneys, past or present, and all persons acting under, by, through, or in concert with any of them (collectively, the "Releasees"), from any and all actions, causes of action, obligations, costs, expenses, damages, losses, claims, liabilities, suits, debts, demands, and benefits (including attorneys' fees and costs), of whatever character, in law or in equity, known or unknown, suspected or unsuspected, matured or unmatured, of any kind or nature whatsoever, based [*1221] on any act, omission, event, occurrence, or nonoccurrence from the beginning of time to the date of execution hereof, including but not limited to any claims or causes of action arising out of or in any way relating to Plaintiff's employment, his alleged contract claims, or which have been or could have been made in the Lawsuit (collectively "the claims") as well as any threatened claims in any cross-complaint or counterclaims. Exception: Nothing in this Agreement shall release any of the Parties from any of their rights or obligations under the terms of this Agreement.

Id. at ¶ 7.

The "General Release of Unknown [**13] Claims" section reads:

For the purpose of implementing a full and complete release, the Parties expressly acknowledge that this release is intended to include in its effect, without limitation, claims that the Parties did not know or suspect to exist at the time of execution hereof, regardless of whether the knowledge of such claims, or the facts upon which they might be based, would materially have affected the settlement of this matter, and the consideration given under this Agreement is also for the release of those claims and contemplates the extinguishment of any such unknown claims. In furtherance of this settlement, the Parties waive any rights they may have under California Civil Code § 1542 (and other similar statutes and regulations). . . .<sup>4</sup>

Id. at ¶ 10.

Section 14 of the Agreement contains subparagraphs and is entitled "Agreement Not to Infringe or Misappropriate [Deerpoint's] Intellectual Property." Paragraph 14.3, entitled "Acknowledgment of [Deerpoint's] Confidential, Proprietary, and Trade Secret Information," and Paragraph 14.4, entitled "Non-Disclosure," read:

Plaintiff acknowledges that he had occasion to access, acquire, and generate knowledge and information related to DPG's business and technology, [**14] which DPG maintains as confidential or proprietary in order to maintain its competitive value. Plaintiff further acknowledges that DPG considers this information proprietary within the meaning of Paragraph 3 of Plaintiff's EIS Agreement with DPG attached as Exhibit "3" hereto, and which remains in full force and effect notwithstanding Paragraph 7 of this Agreement. Plaintiff further acknowledges that the confidential and proprietary information belonging to DPG comprises Trade Secret information ("Trade Secrets") belonging to DPG in that such information includes, without limitation, technical or nontechnical data, formulas, patterns, processes, machines, compounds and compositions, automated equipment, automated information reporting to customers, compilations, programs, laboratory or technical notebooks, financial data, financial plans, business plans, product or service plans, and lists of actual or potential customers or suppliers which (a) derive economic value, actual or potential, from not being generally known to, and not being readily ascertainable by proper means by, other persons who can obtain economic value from its disclosure or use, and (b) are the subject of efforts [**15] that are reasonable [*1222] under the circumstances to maintain its secrecy. By way of examples only, and not limitation, Plaintiff agrees that confidential, proprietary, and Trade Secret information belonging to DPG that is subject to this Agreement includes: (1) DPG macro and micro fertilizer formulations, whether applied via fertigation, foliar, or by ground; (2) DPG water treatment formulations; (3) All chemical delivery equipment, systems and methods for DPG fertilizer and water treatment products; (4) Commodity fertilizers delivered via DPG proprietary equipment, systems, or methods and (5) Or modifications thereof which would be considered obvious iterations of DPG IP.

Id. at ¶ 14.3.

Plaintiff shall not divulge, communicate, use to the detriment of DPG or for the benefit of any other person or entity, or misuse in any way, any confidential, proprietary, or Trade Secret information belonging to DPG (collectively "DPG Information") identified in Paragraph 14.3 above. Any DPG Information now known or hereafter acquired by Plaintiff shall be deemed a valuable, special, and unique asset of DPG that is received by Plaintiff in confidence and as a fiduciary of DPG, and such Plaintiff shall remain [**16] a fiduciary to DPG with respect to all of such DPG Information. In addition, Plaintiff (1) will receive and hold all DPG Information in trust and in strictest confidence, (2) will take reasonable steps to protect the DPG Information from disclosure and will, in no event, take any action causing, or fail to take any action reasonably necessary to prevent, any DPG Information from losing its character as DPG Information, and (3) except as required by law, will not, directly or indirectly, use, misappropriate, disseminate or otherwise disclose any DPG Information to any third party without the prior written consent of DPG, which may be withheld in DPG's absolute and sole discretion.

Id. at ¶ 14.4.

<sup>4</sup> Cal. Civ. Code § 1542 reads: "A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his or her favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him or her must have materially affected his or her settlement with the debtor."

Paragraph 14.5, entitled "Return of Tangible and Intangible Property Belonging to [Deerpoint]," required Mahoney to return any Deerpoint property, prohibited Mahoney from duplicating Deerpoint property, required Mahoney to destroy any electronic formats containing Deerpoint property, and acknowledged that Paragraph 4 of the EIS remained in force, notwithstanding the Settlement's release provision.

Finally, the "EIS Agreement" referenced is the May 9, 2016 EIS, which Deerpoint required all its employees [**17] to sign. See id. at ¶ 14.2. Paragraph 4 of the EIS acknowledged that certain items provided to Mahoney or to which he had access were Deerpoint's property, and that Mahoney would not provide such property to third parties. See Complaint at Ex. 1 at ¶ 4. Paragraph 3 of the EIS addresses Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information. See Complaint ¶ 65 & Ex. 1 at ¶ 3. Paragraph 3 of the EIS reads in relevant part:

I agree that . . . I shall not either during or after my employment with [Deerpoint] (a) disclose to any third party, (b) use, or (c) publish any information which is secret and confidential to [Deerpoint]. Such information, it is understood, may include, but is not limited to, knowledge and data relating to processes, machines, compounds and compositions, formulas, business plans, and marketing and sales information originated, owned, controlled or possessed by [Deerpoint] and which give [Deerpoint] an opportunity to obtain an advantage over its competitors. I further understand that as a guide I am to consider information originated, [*1223] owned, controlled, or possessed by [Deerpoint] which is not disclosed in printed publications stated to be available for [**18] distribution outside [Deerpoint] as being secret and Confidential to [Deerpoint]. In instances wherein doubt exists in my mind as to whether information is secret and Confidential to [Deerpoint], I will request an opinion, in writing, from [Deerpoint].

Complaint Ex. 1 at ¶ 3.

Discussion

1. Mahoney

a. Pre-Settlement Claims

There is actually no dispute that the Settlement is broad and releases all claims that Deerpoint and Mahoney had against each other, whether known or unknown, that existed on or before January 8, 2018. Therefore, for the sake of clarity, to the extent that the Complaint may be read to include any claims by Deerpoint against Mahoney that existed on or before January 8, 2018, those claims will be dismissed without leave to amend.

b. Post-Settlement Claims

(1) CUTSA

HN4 [↑] The California Supreme Court in Cadence Design Systems, Inc. v. Avant! Corp., 29 Cal.4th 215, 217, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 169, 57 P.3d 647 (2002) addressed the following question: "Under the [CUTSA], when does a claim for trade secret infringement arise: only once, when the initial misappropriation occurs, or with each subsequent misuse of the trade secret?" Immediately after identifying the question, the California Supreme Court revealed its answer: "We conclude that in a plaintiff's action against the same defendant, the [**19] continued improper use or disclosure of a trade secret after defendant's initial misappropriation is viewed under the [CUTSA] as part of a single claim of 'continuing misappropriation' accruing at the time of the initial misappropriation." Id. The California Supreme Court explained:

From our examination of the above statutes, a distinction between a 'misappropriation' and a 'claim' emerges. A misappropriation within the meaning of the [CUTSA] occurs not only at the time of the initial acquisition of the trade secret by wrongful means, but also with each misuse or wrongful disclosure of the secret. But a claim for misappropriation of a trade secret arises for a given plaintiff against a given defendant only once, at the time of the initial misappropriation, subject to the discovery rule provided in § 3426.6. Each new misuse or wrongful disclosure is viewed as augmenting a single claim of continuing misappropriation rather than as giving rise to a separate claim.

*Id.* at 223 (emphasis added); see also *id.* at 227; Cypress Semiconductor Corp. v. Superior Ct., 163 Cal. App. 4th 575, 583-84, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 685 \(2008\).

Here, the Settlement's release is broad and essentially covers all claims or causes of action that Mahoney and Deerpoint had against each other, be they known or unknown, as of January 8, 2018. The Settlement's [**20] release would include CUTSA misappropriation claims that Deerpoint had against Mahoney. Further, at the time of Settlement, Deerpoint was clearly aware that Mahoney had "misappropriated" trade secrets for purposes of CUTSA. The Settlement's "Recitals" state that Deerpoint was threatening cross-claims and counterclaims in the Lawsuit for inter alia misappropriation of trade secrets. See Settlement ¶ C. Under the reasoning of Cadence Design, when Deerpoint and Mahoney executed the Settlement, they resolved the one and only CUTSA claim that Deerpoint [*1224] could bring against Mahoney.<sup>5</sup> See Cadence Design, 29 Cal.4th at 217, 223, 227; Cypress Semiconductor, 163 Cal. App. 4th at 583-84. Although Mahoney may have continued to misappropriate the trade secrets by disclosing them to Agrigenix or using them to make competing products, those subsequent acts of misappropriation are not separate claims, they merely augment the single claim that Deerpoint could have brought against Mahoney. See id. Because Deerpoint can only have one trade secret misappropriation claim against Mahoney, and that claim was settled on January 8, 2018, the Settlement appears to bar Deerpoint's attempt to bring a CUTSA claim for post-Settlement acts of misappropriation of the same trade secrets. See id.

Deerpoint relies [**21] largely on Junction Solutions, LLC v. MBS Dev., Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86958 \(N.D. Ill. Nov. 21, 2007\) to argue that its post-Settlement CUTSA claims are not barred.<sup>6</sup> In Junction Solutions, Junction filed suit against MBS (and others) for inter alia violation of the Illinois Trade Secrets Act, based on the alleged improper acquisition and use of Junction's trade secret software. See id. at \*4-\*5. That lawsuit settled. See id. The settlement agreement released all claims, known or unknown or accrued or unaccrued, that the parties had against each other. See id. at \*18-\*19. The settlement excluded actions to enforce the settlement agreement itself, and any other matter that arose after the settlement's effective date. See id. at \*19. Over a year after the settlement was executed, Junction brought a second lawsuit against MBS for inter alia MBS's use of the same trade secret software that was the subject of the first lawsuit. See id. at \*6-\*7, \*21. In declining to grant MBS's Rule 12\(c\) motion based on the settlement, the district court explained:

Junction's current lawsuit is clearly "related to" matters which occurred prior to the Settlement Agreement. That is, Junction is suing defendants for inappropriately using and/or disclosing its trade secrets--the very same trade secrets that were at issue in Junction's first suit. . . . Were this [**22] to be the only relevant provision of the Settlement Agreement, the court's inquiry would be over as the Settlement Agreement would bar Junction's current suit. However, a review of the remainder of the [*1225] Agreement muddies the water; it is not clear <sup>5</sup> There is no argument by Deerpoint that Mahoney misappropriated different trade secrets after the Settlement was signed. Therefore, the Court will view the Complaint as alleging that the trade secrets that Mahoney misappropriated pre-Settlement are the same trade secrets that were allegedly misappropriated post-Settlement.

<sup>6</sup> Deerpoint also cites Tire Hanger Corp. v. Shinn Fu Co. of Am., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178833 \(C.D. Cal. June 7, 2017\) and Management Action Programs, Inc. v. Global Leadership & Mgmt. Resources, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45627 \(C.D. Cal. May 18, 2005\) for the proposition that parties to a release may sue for post-release conduct that is not covered by the release. The Court does not disagree with this proposition. However, that general principal is not at issue. What is at issue is whether the Settlement bars a CUTSA claim based on post-Settlement conduct and pre-Settlement misappropriated trade secrets. Neither Tire Hanger nor Management Action involved CUTSA claims, let alone the type of post-Settlement CUTSA claim alleged by Deerpoint. See Tire Hanger, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178833 at \*1, \*12 (listing the claims in the case, without identifying a CUTSA claim); Management Action Programs, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45627 at \*12 (same).

that Junction intended to release claims arising from defendants' future use of the trade secrets at issue. For example, Paragraphs 6 and 7 of the Settlement Agreement require defendants to return all of Junction's confidential information relating to the trade secrets at issue, renounce ownership of any of the work they did for Junction, reaffirm their confidentiality obligations under their employment agreements with Junction, and agree that the "Junction Developments and Axapta Developments . . . are the property of [Junction]."

Defendants insist that Junction is alleging one continuous claim rather than a new claim because a claim for misappropriation of a trade secret can arise only once, when the confidential relationship between the parties is initially breached. However, *the logical extension of this argument is that Junction agreed to grant defendants complete immunity from all claims relating to their use of Junction's trade secrets, [**23]* a proposition that is contradicted by the aforementioned provisions. . . . If Junction intended to release defendants from any claim arising out of defendants' future use of Junction's trade secrets, why would defendants have had to agree that those trade secrets are the property of Junction and reaffirm their confidentiality agreements with Junction beyond the Settlement Agreement?

Id. at *21-*23 (emphasis added).

Admittedly, the facts in Junction Solutions are very similar to the facts of this case. However, the Court is not persuaded by Junction Solutions.

HN5 [↑] First, as an unpublished district court case, Junction Solutions is persuasive authority, it is not binding precedent. Second, no other court has adopted the relevant reasoning of Junction Solutions. Junction Solutions has been cited by one other court, and only for a proposition involving the res judicata effect of a voluntary dismissal with prejudice pursuant to a settlement. See Fox v. Will Cnty., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83122, *14-*15 (N.D. Ill. June 8, 2012). Third, as italicized above, the Junction Solutions court was not certain that the plaintiff intended to release claims arising from the defendants' future use of the trade secrets. This point depends on the ability for claims to arise [**24] against the defendants in the future for their use of the trade secrets at issue. However, as quoted above, Cadence Design has made it clear that there are no such "future" CUTSA claims for misappropriation. HN6 [↑] There is only one claim that arises for misappropriation under CUTSA, all "future claims," i.e. subsequent uses or disclosures, merely augment that one claim. Cadence Design, 29 Cal.4th at 217, 223, 227. Based on Cadence Design, for purposes of CUTSA, a separate future misappropriation claim against a single defendant and involving the same previously misappropriated trade secret is a legal impossibility. See id. Fourth, the Court cannot agree that a defendant like MBS (or Mahoney) would essentially obtain immunity for all future uses or disclosures of trade secrets. CUTSA does not preempt or displace breach of contract claims that are based on misappropriation of trade secrets. See Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7(b)(1); Integral Dev. Corp. v. Tolat, 675 F. App'x 700, 704 (9th Cir. 2017); Angelica Textile Servs., Inc. v. Park, 220 Cal.App.4th 495, 508, 163 Cal. Rptr. 3d 192 (2013). HN7 [↑] It is possible for plaintiffs like Deerpoint and Junction Solutions to obtain monetary damages and injunctive relief for the subsequent use or disclosure of a trade [*1226] secret as part of a breach of contract/settlement claim. See Cal. Civ. Code § 3422(3); Densmore v. Manzarek, 2008 Cal.App.Unpub. LEXIS 4367, *142-*143 (2008) (holding that an injunction would be proper in the context of a breach of contract in order to prevent the artist-defendants [**25] from performing under some variation of The Doors, because the artist-plaintiffs would have to file lawsuit after lawsuit to recover profits).

Deerpoint also argues that Cadence Design states that "parties to a release in a trade secret dispute remain free to fashion the release as broadly or narrowly as they choose." Cadence Design, 29 Cal.4th at 226. Deerpoint contends that the Settlement reaffirmed the confidential relationship between the parties with respect to trade secrets and required Mahoney to return "trade secret properties" to Deerpoint, thus preserving Deerpoint's right to future actions under California law based on new misappropriations. Deerpoint's argument is also a point made by Junction Solutions. See Junction Solutions, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86958 at *23.

Deerpoint is correct that § 14 of the Settlement in part addresses and reaffirms confidentiality/trade secret provisions of the EIS and requires Mahoney to return "trade secret properties." See id. at ¶¶ 14.3-14.5. However, the Court is not convinced that these aspects of the Settlement are sufficient to preserve/create post-Settlement

CUTSA claims. HN8<sup>7</sup> First, CUTSA does not create any affirmative obligations to return trade secrets.<sup>7</sup> That obligation is created by the Settlement.<sup>8</sup> A failure to return misappropriated [\[\*\*26\]](#) trade secrets alone violates only the obligations of the Settlement; it violates no provision of CUTSA. Second, the Court is unaware of any place in the Settlement that addresses either obligations or causes of action under CUTSA. The Settlement reaffirms prior contractual obligations and provides for injunctive relief. However, there is no mention of CUTSA or an express attempt within the Settlement to resurrect or create a future CUTSA claim based on previously misappropriated trade secrets. It is unknown why a reaffirmation of a prior contractual obligation, without any reference to CUTSA, should be read as creating new CUTSA claims that would otherwise be contrary to CUTSA itself/Cadence Design's recognition that there is only one misappropriation claim against a single defendant for misappropriation of a particular trade secret.<sup>9</sup> While the Court agrees that the Settlement does not prohibit future actions under "California law" regarding the misappropriated secrets, in the absence of any reference to CUTSA, that [\[\*1227\]](#) law would likely be the California law of contracts, not CUTSA. Under California law, as explained by Cadence Design, the parties have resolved Deerpoint's CUTSA claim. [\[\*\*27\]](#) If the parties truly intended to create what would be a claim previously unknown to CUTSA through the Settlement, then language that deals with CUTSA specifically should have been used. As it stands, the Court sees future contract related claims implicated by the Settlement, but not CUTSA claims for previously misappropriated trade secrets. Third, while Cadence Design held that parties to a release could make it as broad or as narrow as they like, no explanations or examples were given as to what the California Supreme Court envisioned. It seems to the Court that a release may exclude CUTSA claims, or expressly incorporate CUTSA remedies for a breach of the release, or estop a party from raising certain defenses to a CUTSA claim based on the further use of a previously misappropriated trade secret. Such provisions would affect the breadth of the release, prevent the misappropriator from obtaining a de facto license, and, at least with respect to the first and third examples, may give an indication that parties intended for a CUTSA claim to persist. However, Cadence Design did not hold that HN9<sup>10</sup> merely reaffirming a prior existing contractual obligation in a release would have the effect [\[\*\*28\]](#) of creating a new CUTSA cause of action where none would otherwise exist. The Court is unaware of any California case that has interpreted the relevant language of Cadence Design consistent with Deerpoint's position, and Deerpoint has cited none. Therefore, the Court cannot conclude that the mere fact that prior contractual obligations were reaffirmed, or that Mahoney was obligated to return or destroy Deerpoint property, would create a totally new and heretofore legally unrecognized CUTSA claim.

In sum, pursuant to Cadence Design, dismissal of Deerpoint's post-Settlement based CUTSA claims without leave to amend is appropriate.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>7</sup> To be clear, the Court is not holding that a successful CUTSA plaintiff could not obtain injunctive relief that required the misappropriator to return misappropriated trade secrets and destroy copies. In fact, such relief would seem to be entirely reasonable, considering the nature of a trade secret. The Court is merely noting that this is something that is not expressly part of CUTSA.

<sup>10</sup> Again, the Court emphasizes that Deerpoint has not identified any trade secrets that were misappropriated by Mahoney post-Settlement. Therefore, the only trade secrets that are at issue are trade secrets that were misappropriated by Mahoney pre-Settlement.

HN11[] The DTSA is largely modelled after the Uniform Trade Secrets Act ("UTSA"). See Great Am. Opportunities, Inc. v. Kent, 352 F. Supp. 3d 1126, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 180741, *29-*30 (D. Colo. Oct. 22, 2018); Brand Energy & Infrastructure Servs. v. Irex Contracting Grp., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43497, *16 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 23, 2017). California adopted the UTSA without significant change through enactment of CUTSA. See Cadence Design, 29 Cal.4th at 221. States that have adopted the UTSA, like California, "consistently apply a single claim theory to misappropriations of trade secrets." Allied Erecting & Dismantling Co. v. Genesis Equip. & Mfg., 805 F.3d 701, 705 (6th Cir. 2015). Further, the CUTSA provisions relied upon and examined by Cadence Design are materially the same as the corresponding sections of the DTSA. Cf. Cadence Design, 29 Cal.4th at 221-23 (examining Cal. Code Civ. §§ 3426.1(a) (definition of "improper means"), 3426.1(b) (definition of "misappropriation"), [**29] 3426.1(d) (definition of "trade secret"), 3426.6 ("Limitations period; accrual of action") with 18 U.S.C. §§ 1836(d) ("Period of limitations"), 1839(3) (definition of "trade secret"), [*1228] 1839(5) (definition of "misappropriate"), 1839(6) (definition of "improper means"). Of note, both the DTSA and CUTSA provide a three-year limitations period for misappropriation and explain that "a continuing misappropriation constitutes a single claim of misappropriation." 18 U.S.C. § 1836(d); Cal. Code Civ. 3426.6. Deerpoint has cited no cases that indicate the DTSA should be construed differently from the CUTSA, as interpreted by Cadence Design.

In the absence of contrary authority, and given the similarity between the DTSA and CUTSA, the Court will interpret Deerpoint's DTSA claims consistently with its CUTSA claims. Therefore, for the same reasons that the Settlement bars Deerpoint's alleged post-Settlement CUTSA claims, the Court concludes that Deerpoint's post-Settlement DTSA claims are also barred by the Settlement. Dismissal without leave to amend of Deerpoint's DTSA claims against Mahoney is appropriate.

2. Agrigenix<sup>11</sup>

HN12[] "A third-party beneficiary is someone who may enforce a contract because the contract is made expressly for his benefit." Matthau v. Superior Ct., 151 Cal.App.4th 593, 602, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 93 (2007). "A putative third [**30] party's rights under a contract are predicated upon the contracting parties' intent to benefit it." Hess v. Ford Motor Co., 27 Cal.4th 516, 524, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 220, 41 P.3d 46 (2002) (quoting Garcia v. Truck Ins. Exchange, 36 Cal. 3d 426, 436, 204 Cal. A contract's words are to be understood in their "ordinary and popular sense," unless "used by the parties in a technical sense, or unless a special meaning is given them by usage . . ." Cal. Civ. practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other." Iqbal v. Ziadeh, 10 Cal.App.5th 1, 10, 215 Cal. Rptr. 3d 684 (2017). A third-party beneficiary "need not be named in the contract where the agreement reflects the intent of the contracting parties to benefit the unnamed party." Cargill, 201 Cal.App.4th at 967. However, a "third party who is only incidentally benefitted by performance of a contract is not entitled to enforce it." Prouty, 121 Cal.App.4th at 1233. "[T]he circumstance that a literal contract interpretation would result in a benefit to the third party is not enough to entitle [the third party] to demand enforcement [of the contract]." Hess, 27 Cal.4th at 524 (quoting Neverkovec v. Fredericks, 74 Cal.App.4th 337, 348, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 856 (1999)). Generally, whether a third party is an intended beneficiary under a contract is a question of fact, but if the issue "can be answered by interpreting the contract as a whole and doing so in light of the uncontradicted evidence of the circumstances and negotiations of the parties making the contract, the issue becomes one of law . [**32] . . ." Souza v. Westlands Water Dist., 135 Cal.App.4th 879, 891, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 78 (2006).

Despite the above principles of third party beneficiary contract law, there is tension in California courts regarding the proof necessary to establish standing as a third-party beneficiary. See Iqbal, 10 Cal.App.5th at 13 n.2. By describing the arguments before it, the Iqbal court explained the two different approaches taken by California courts:

Plaintiff relies on [Neverkovec] which held a third party could not rely solely on a literal interpretation of the contractual language to prove he was an intended third-party beneficiary. Defendant relies on [Rodriguez], which held if the requisite intent to make someone a third-party beneficiary appears unambiguously from the face of the contract, the third party makes a prima facie showing of entitlement merely by proving the contract where the opposing party introduces no evidence to establish the contract is ambiguous.

Id. The Iqbal court noted that it had addressed the competing approaches in an earlier case, Cline v. Homuth, 235 Cal.App.4th 699, 185 Cal. Rptr. 3d 470 (2015), but in neither case did it take a side. See id.

The Court finds a passage from Cline to be particularly instructive in this case. Cline arose in the context of bench trial. Cline examined and analyzed a number of third party beneficiary cases: Hess, Neverkovec, Rodriguez, General Motors Corp. v. Superior Ct., 12 Cal.App.4th 435, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 622 (1993), Lama v. Comcast Cablevision, 14 Cal.App.4th 59, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 224 (1993), and [**33] Appleton v. Waessl, 27 Cal.App.4th 551, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 676 (1994). HN14 After describing these cases, Cline concluded:

[T]he cases vary as to their approach in determining the scope of a general release and what evidence is necessary to obtain or defeat summary judgment on the basis that the general release bars a claim against another tortfeasor. It is consistently clear, however, that the law permits a plaintiff who opposes enforcement of a general release by a third [**1230] party to offer extrinsic evidence as to the circumstances surrounding negotiation and signing of the release to attempt to show that releasing "any other person," meaning everyone, does not comport with the parties' intent. Such evidence was lacking in General Motors, Lama, and Rodriguez. Such evidence was present in Appleton, Neverkovec (where the language of the release was ambiguous as well), and Hess. The issue here is once Homuth presented evidence to show she was an intended beneficiary of the release, whether Cline offered competent evidence of the parties' intent and, if so, whether this evidence was sufficient to show the parties to the release did not intend to benefit Homuth, but rather to exclude her from the protection of the release, despite its plain language which extended [**34] to the "world."

Cline, 235 Cal.App.4th at 709-10.

Here, there is a reasonable argument that Agrigenix is a third-party beneficiary to the contract. The plain language of the release is not limited to claims by or against Mahoney or Agrigenix, nor is limited to claims that arise from Mahoney's employment or to claims that relate to the Lawsuit. The release applies to every possible claim the parties could have against each other, and it identifies numerous other persons and entities as being "released" from those possible claims, including "employees," "agents," and "subsidiaries." If the release were intended to only cover Agrigenix and Mahoney, listing the numerous "third parties" would be unnecessary. Based on the plain language of the release, Agrigenix is arguably an "affiliate" or a "related company" because it was founded and run by Mahoney, or a "person acting under, by, through, or in concert with [Mahoney]," because it used the trade secrets acquired by Mahoney. Settlement ¶ 7. Through any one of these categories, Agrigenix would be a third-party beneficiary and, as discussed above with respect to Mahoney, all CUTSA claims against it would be barred.

On the other hand, while Deerpoint does not provide alternative [**35] interpretations with respect to creating ambiguous meanings, Deerpoint does address the context of the Settlement, which is consistent with the "Recitals" section of the Settlement, and argues that Agrigenix's arguments depend on Deerpoint knowing that Agrigenix was up and running on January 8, 2018. The Court takes the latter argument as indicating that Deerpoint did not know of Agrigenix's existence. As indicated above, the Recitals explain that Mahoney is a former employee of Deerpoint who filed administrative complaints and the Lawsuit, the Lawsuit was stayed for settlement negotiations, Deerpoint threatened cross-complaints and counterclaims regarding trade secrets, and that the parties "settled, fully and finally, all claims the Parties [i.e. Mahoney and Deerpoint] might have against each other up to and including the date of execution of this Agreement including, but not limited to, those claims which have been or could have been made in the Lawsuit." Settlement at ¶¶ A-E. The context of the Settlement therefore centers around the Lawsuit and the claims that could have been made as part of the Lawsuit, even if the Lawsuit was removed to federal court. The Lawsuit involved claims [**36] by and against Deerpoint and Mahoney only, it would not involve claims against Agrigenix. Although the language of the Settlement and its release are broader than the Lawsuit, the Lawsuit was nevertheless the impetus of the Settlement. It is not clear that Mahoney and Deerpoint would resolve the Lawsuit as well as potential claims against Agrigenix that would not be at issue during the Lawsuit. Further, Agrigenix is not named in the Settlement, [*1231] nor do there appear to be any obligations under the Settlement that would clearly apply to Agrigenix. The Court understands that Mahoney and Agrigenix are separate entities. Given the zealousness with which Deerpoint appears to protect its trade secrets, it seems unlikely that Deerpoint would fail to mention Agrigenix or fail to include any provisions that would expressly prohibit Agrigenix from using or disclosing Deerpoint's trade secrets.<sup>12</sup> Cf. Hess, 27 Cal.4th at 527 (finding that the small amount of the settlement, along with the failure to mention a third party company despite counsel for both signatories knowing of the plaintiff's claims against the third party company, indicated a lack of intent to bestow a benefit upon the third party company). Finally, if [**37] Deerpoint did not know of Agrigenix's existence, it is debatable whether the parties intended to bestow a benefit on Agrigenix.

HN15 The discussion in Cline illustrates that third-party beneficiary cases are usually decided after the submission of evidence regarding the parties' intent, including evidence about the negotiations and circumstances of the contract. Indeed, Cline distilled the legal principle that "the law permits a plaintiff who opposes enforcement of a general release by a third party to offer extrinsic evidence as to the circumstances surrounding negotiation and signing of the release to attempt to show that releasing 'any other person,' meaning everyone, does not comport with the parties' intent." Cline, 235 Cal.App.4th at 709. This principle has generally been followed either through a bench trial or summary judgment. The Court does not have the benefit of such evidence in this case, nor could it HN16 in the procedural context of a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion.<sup>13</sup> See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(d\) (explaining that if matters <sup>12</sup> Paragraph 14.6 in relevant part states that Mahoney recognizes and acknowledges that Deerpoint "shall be entitled to an injunction from any court of competent jurisdiction enjoining and restraining any breach or violation of any or all of the covenants set forth in Paragraphs 14.1 to 14.5 [which includes trade secret confidentiality] by [Mahoney] or any company with which he is affiliated or in which he holds an ownership interest . . . . Nothing contained in this Paragraph 14.6 shall be construed to prevent [Deerpoint] from seeking and receiving from [Mahoney], or from any company with which he is affiliated or in which he holds an ownership interest, damages sustained by [Deerpoint] . . . ." Id. at ¶ 14.6. This paragraph clearly addresses companies that Mahoney may work for or have some connection or ownership interest in, which would include Agrigenix. However, Paragraph 14.6 is an acknowledgement by Mahoney that Deerpoint can seek relief against such a company, it creates no actual obligations on, or penalties against, such a company, nor does it guarantee injunctive relief will issue against such a company. Paragraph 14.6 is relevant to the parties' intentions, but it does not definitively show that Agrigenix is or is not an intended third-party beneficiary.

<sup>13</sup> The Court could order the parties to present evidence, which would convert the Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion into a motion for summary judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(d\). However, no party has requested conversion of the Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, and it is highly likely that necessary discovery has not yet occurred. Cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(d\) (addressing denials of summary judgment outside the pleadings are considered, the motion is converted to a Rule 56 motion for summary judgment); In re NVIDIA, 768 F.3d at 1051 (identifying the matters that may be considered in resolving a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion). Given the procedural posture of the case, as well as the arguments [\[\*\*38\]](#) of the parties and the Settlement itself, Deerpoint should be given the opportunity [\[\*1232\]](#) to submit evidence regarding the parties' intent, including the negotiations and the circumstances of the Settlement. See Cline, 235 Cal.App.4th at 709.

Agrigenix's reply memorandum correctly points out that the Complaint alleges that Agrigenix acted in concert with Mahoney. Agrigenix contends that this is a judicial admission. HN17  "Judicial admissions are formal admissions in the pleadings which have the effect of withdrawing a fact from issue and dispensing wholly with the need for proof of the fact." American Title Ins. Co. v. Lacelaw Corp., 861 F.2d 224, 226 \(9th Cir. 1988\). Factual assertions in a complaint, unless amended, are conclusively binding judicial admissions. Id.

Here, the Court cannot hold that Deerpoint has made binding judicial admissions. First, Agrigenix's invocation of a judicial admission was made for the first time in its reply, and thus, Deerpoint has not had an opportunity to respond. Second, the relevant allegations were made by Deerpoint on "information and belief." Courts appear to be reluctant to construe allegations expressly made on "information and belief" as binding judicial admissions. See Corinth Inv'r Holdings v. Evanston Ins. Co., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118008, \*6 n.1 \(E.D. Tex. Aug. 24, 2014\); Carl E. Woodward, LLC v. Acceptance Indem. Co., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3121, \*11 \(S.D. Miss. Jan. 12, 2011\); Diarama Trading Co. v. J. Walter Thompson U.S.A., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19496, \*30 \(S.D. N.Y. Sep. 6, 2005\). Third, even if Agrigenix acted in concert with Mahoney, and thus fits the literal [\[\*\*39\]](#) language of the release, that does not necessarily establish that the parties intended for Agrigenix to be a third-party beneficiary. Cf. Hess, 27 Cal.4th at 525-27 (finding that the extrinsic evidence and other aspects of the settlement established that the contracting parties did not intend to release a company from liability, despite the company falling within the literal language of the release). Therefore, the Court will not hold that the relevant allegations made under "information and belief" constitute binding judicial admissions.

In sum, because the Court cannot hold on this record that Agrigenix is a third-party beneficiary, dismissal of the trade secret claims against Agrigenix on the basis of a settlement bar is inappropriate. See Cline, 235 Cal.App.4th at 709.

2. CONVERSION OF CONTRACT TO CLAIMS TO TORTS — 1st, 2nd, 5th, 7th, 8th, and 9th Causes of Action

Defendants' Arguments

Deerpoint argues that contract and tort law are different branches of law and serve different functions, contract law enforces binding agreements between parties and tort law vindicates social policy. Tort damages are not to be judicially extended in order to fashion a remedy for breach of a contractual provision. The Complaint improperly attempts to bring [\[\*\*40\]](#) tort claims that are based on breaches of the duties imposed by the EIS and Settlement. Because these six claims represent an attempt to convert contract claims into tort claims, they should be dismissed.

Plaintiff's Opposition

Deerpoint argues that the two cases relied upon by Defendants are distinguishable. Neither case supports the notion that tort claims that are exempt from a settlement agreement are somehow per se barred if brought alongside a claim for breach of that agreement. The arguments are merely an attempt to lay the ground [\[\*1233\]](#) work for a petition to compel arbitration and should be rejected.

when inadequate discovery has occurred). Therefore, the Court will not order the parties to submit evidence and convert this motion to a Rule 56 motion for summary judgment.

Discussion

Defendants' arguments are based largely on citations to two California cases: Foley v. Interactive Data Corp., 47 Cal.3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 \(1988\) and Lazar v. Superior Ct., 12 Cal.4th 631, 646, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 \(1996\). In Foley, the California Supreme Court declined to permit the recovery of tort remedies for the breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. See Foley, 47 Cal.3d at 700. HN18 [↑] As part of its analysis, Foley recognized the distinction between tort and contract law - contract law enforces the intentions of the individual contracting parties, but tort law vindicates a society's "social policy." Id. at 683. Lazar addressed the circumstances in which a plaintiff may pursue a claim of fraudulent inducement of an employment contract. [**41] Lazar, 12 Cal.4th at 635. Lazar cited Foley for the proposition that tort damages should not be judicially extended in order to fashion remedies for the breach of a contract. Lazar, 12 Cal.4th at 646.

HN19 [↑] Consistent with Foley and Lazar, a litigant "may not ordinarily recover in tort for the breach of duties that merely restate contractual obligations." Aas v. Superior Ct., 24 Cal.4th 627, 643, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 \(2000\).<sup>14</sup> However, it is possible for the same conduct to "constitute both a breach of contract and an invasion of an interest protected by the law of torts." Erlich v. Menezes, 21 Cal.4th 543, 551, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 886, 981 P.2d 978 \(1999\). That is, "[c]ourts will generally enforce the breach of a contractual promise through contract law, except when the actions that constitute the breach violate a social policy that merits the imposition of tort remedies." Aas, 24 Cal.4th at 643; Erlich, 21 Cal.4th at 551. "[C]onduct amounting to a breach of contract becomes tortious only when it also violates a duty independent of the contract arising from principles of tort law." Aas, 24 Cal.4th at 643; Erlich, 21 Cal.4th at 551. "An omission to perform a contract obligation is never a tort, unless that omission is also an omission of a legal duty." Erlich, 21 Cal.4th at 551; Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd., 7 Cal.4th 503, 515, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 \(1994\).

a. First Cause of Action

The first cause of action is for a violation of federal law, the DTSA (18 U.S.C. § 1836). As applied to the DTSA, Defendants' arguments essentially amount to HN20 [↑] an attempt to impose a state law defense on a federal cause of [**42] action. Such an attempt is improper and unavailing. See Wallis v. Spencer, 202 F.3d 1126, 1144 \(9th Cir. 1999\); see also Haywood v. Drown, 556 U.S. 729, 763, 129 S. Ct. 2108, 173 L. Ed. 2d 920 \(2009\) (Thomas, J., dissenting) ("Second, Florida's sovereign immunity rule violated the Supremacy Clause by operating as a state-law defense to a federal law."); Atascadero State Hosp. v. Scanlon, 473 U.S. 234, 263, 105 S. Ct. 3142, 87 L. Ed. 2d 171 \(1985\) (Brennan, J., dissenting) ("... because state law defenses would not of their own force be applicable to federal causes of action.").

[*1234] b. Second Cause of Action

The second cause of action is for violation of CUTSA. As discussed above, there are no viable CUTSA claims alleged against Mahoney. Further, although CUTSA claims remain against Agrigenix, Agrigenix was not a signatory to either the EIS or the Settlement, and Deerpoint alleges no breach of contract claims against Agrigenix. Without a contractual duty owed by Agrigenix to Deerpoint, Agrigenix's arguments have no possible application to the remaining CUTSA claims.

c. Fifth & Seventh Causes of Action

<sup>14</sup> Superseded by statute on other grounds as explained in Rosen v. State Farm Gen. Life Ins. Co., 30 Cal.4th 1070, 1079-80, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 361, 70 P.3d 351 \(2003\).

The fifth and seventh causes of action are alleged against Mahoney for breaches of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. There is no indication that Deerpoint is attempting to obtain tort damages for these claims. Further, there is nothing improper about Deerpoint alleging breach of contract claims as well as separately alleging [**43] related claims for breaches of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. "HN21[] Although breach of the implied covenant often is pleaded as a separate count, a breach of the implied covenant is necessarily a breach of contract." Digerati Holdings, LLC v. Young Money Entm't, LLC, 194 Cal.App.4th 873, 885, 123 Cal. Rptr. 3d 736 (2011) (emphasis added) (citing Careau & Co. v. Security Pac. Bus. Credit, Inc., 222 Cal.App.3d 1371, 1393-94, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 (1991)). As an example, Foley involved separately alleged claims for breach of contract and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. See Foley, 47 Cal.3d at 662, 671, 678. Because Deerpoint's claims for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing are contract claims, there is no improper expansion of tort remedies as prohibited by Foley. Dismissal of the fifth and seventh causes of action is not appropriate.

d. Eighth Cause of Action - IIPEA

HN22[] One of the elements of an IIPEA claim is that the defendant engaged in an independently wrongful act, that is, an act that is "wrongful by some legal measure other than the fact of interference." Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 11 Cal.4th 376, 393, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436, 902 P.2d 740 (1995). An act is "independently wrongful" if it is "proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard." Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1139, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003).

Deerpoint alleges that Mahoney's conduct was independent of the interference because "it violated federal and/or state laws against trade secret misappropriation, and/or [**44] was dependent upon [Mahoney's] breaches of [the EIS] with Deerpoint and the covenant good faith and fair dealing implied therein, and/or was dependent upon Mahoney's breaches of his Settlement Agreement with Deerpoint and the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. . . . Defendants' conduct was wrongful, independent of any interference with the agreement or relationship that existed between Deerpoint and its customers, because such interference was facilitated by Defendants' independent misappropriation of Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information, and thus falls outside the bounds of fair competition." Complaint ¶¶ 147, 148. From these allegations, Deerpoint's Complaint identifies essentially two types of wrongful acts: breaches of contract and trade secret misappropriation.<sup>15</sup>

[*1235] HN23[] With respect to breaches of contract, including breaches of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, see Digerati Holdings, 194 Cal.App.4th at 885, this conduct does not form the basis of a valid interference with prospective economic advantage claim. Under California law, a breach of contract cannot constitute the "wrongful" conduct required for the tort of interference with prospective economic advantage. Youngevity Int'l v. Smith, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 168286, *19 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2018); Vigdor v. Super Lucky Casino, Inc., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97681, *22 (N.D. Cal. June 23, 2017); JRS Products, Inc. v. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am., 115 Cal.App.4th 168, 181-82, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 840 (2004); Arntz Contracting Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 47 Cal.App.4th 464, 479, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 (1996). Therefore, dismissal of the eighth cause of action to the extent that it relies on a breach of contract as a "wrongful act" is appropriate.

<sup>15</sup> In a separate portion of Deerpoint's opposition, it references Paragraphs 81, which alleges disparaging comments by Defendants against Deerpoint to third-parties who decided to hire Agrigenix. However, the IIPEA claim expressly identifies the wrongful acts at issue in Paragraphs 147 and 148. "Disparagement" is conspicuously absent from Paragraphs 147 and 148. It is true that Paragraph 144 incorporates by reference Paragraphs 1 to 143. However, incorporating literally all 143 preceding paragraphs, without specific reference to either disparagement or Paragraph 81, does not give Defendants (or the Court) fair notice of the factual bases of the IIPEA claim. See Weiland v. Palm Beach Cnty. Sheriff's Office, 792 F.3d 1313, 1321-23 (11th Cir. 2015) (describing four different types of improper pleadings that fail to give a defendant fair notice, including "the mortal sin of re-alleging all preceding counts"); JN Grp. Holdings, Inc. v. Ryan, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9215, *7 (D. Haw. Jan. 19, 2018); Salcido v. Vericrest Fin. & Summit Mgmt. Co., LLC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158460, *22 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 5, 2013). The Court will not read the IIPEA claim as being based to any degree on "disparagement." See Weiland, 792 F.3d at 1321-23.

With respect to trade secret misappropriation, i.e. CUTSA, this statutory claim exists separate and apart from any contract. HN24↑ The duties imposed by CUTSA do not depend upon any contractual relationship. Because the duties of CUTSA are statutory and independent of contracts, the IIPEA claim does not improperly attempt to obtain tort remedies for breaches of contract. See Aas, 24 Cal.4th at 643; Erlich, 21 Cal.4th at 551. Therefore, dismissal based on an improper attempt to expand tort remedies to contract claims is not appropriate.

e. Ninth Cause of Action

The ninth cause of action is a statutory UCL claim. Deerpoint's statutory UCL claim exists separate and apart from any contract. HN25↑ The duties imposed by the UCL do not depend upon any contractual relationship. Because the duties of the UCL are statutory and independent of contracts, this claim does not improperly attempt to obtain tort remedies for breaches of contract. See Aas, 24 Cal.4th at 643; Erlich, 21 Cal.4th at 551. Therefore, dismissal of the UCL claim based on an improper attempt to expand tort \*\*46 remedies to contract claims is not appropriate.

3. CUTSA PREEMPTION — 5th, 7th, 8th, and 9th Causes of Action

Defendants' Arguments

Defendants argue that four the Complaint's claims are preempted by CUTSA. CUTSA is a comprehensive statute that is intended to occupy the field of common law trade secret misappropriation law. To that end, CUTSA will preempt civil, non-contractual [\[\*1236\]](#) claims that if there is no material distinction between the wrongdoing alleged under CUTSA and wrongdoing alleged under the civil claim. The fifth, seventh, eighth, and ninth causes of action all arise from the nucleus of operative facts as Deerpoint's CUTSA claim. Therefore, these claims are preempted and should be dismissed.

Plaintiff's Opposition

Deerpoint argues that there are no preemption problems. The fifth and seventh causes of action (breaches of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing) are contract based, and CUTSA expressly does not preempt contractual claims. The eighth cause of action (IIPEA) is based on Defendants' disparagement of Deerpoint to four former Deerpoint clients. Since disparagement is conduct that is different from the acts supporting the CUTSA claim, the eighth cause of action is not \*\*47 preempted. Further, the ninth claim (UCL) is properly pled and has a nucleus of fact that is separate from the CUTSA claims. Therefore, it also represents "wrongful conduct" that supports the IIPEA claim. Finally, the ninth cause of action (UCL) includes allegations that track the IIPEA claim, namely that Defendants disparaged Deerpoint. Because the UCL is grounded on disparagement, it has a nucleus of operative fact that is separate from the CUTSA claims.

Legal Standard

HN26↑ CUTSA enjoys a comprehensive structure and breadth. Angelica Textile, 220 Cal.App.4th at 505; K.C. Multimedia, Inc. v. Bank of Am. Tech. & Operations, Inc., 171 Cal.App.4th 939, 957, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 247 (2009). CUTSA has a specific provision that addresses preemption. See Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7; Angelica Textile, 220 Cal.App.4th at 505. CUTSA does not preempt or supersede any statute relating to misappropriation of trade secrets or any statute that otherwise regulates trade secrets. See Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7(a). Importantly, CUTSA "does not affect (1) contractual remedies, whether or not based upon misappropriation of a trade secret, (2) other civil remedies that are not based upon a misappropriation of a trade secret, or (3) criminal remedies." Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7(b). Therefore, § 3426.7 "expressly allows contractual and criminal remedies, whether or not based on trade secret misappropriation," but "implicitly preempts alternative civil remedies based on trade secret misappropriation." [\[\*\*48\]](#) *Angelica Textile, 220 Cal.App.4th at 505*. CUTSA provides the "exclusive civil remedy for conduct falling within its terms, so as to supersede other civil remedies based upon misappropriation of a trade secret." *Silvaco Data Systems v. Intel Corp., 184 Cal.App.4th 210, 236, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 27 \(2010\)*.<sup>16</sup> "[T]he determination of whether a claim is based on trade secret misappropriation is largely factual." *Angelica Textile, 220 Cal.App.4th at 505*. CUTSA preempts/supersedes civil, non-contract claims "based on the same nucleus of facts as trade secret misappropriation." *Silvaco Data, 184 Cal.App.4th at 232; K.C., 171 Cal.App.4th at 962; see also Angelica Textile, 220 Cal.App.4th at 506.*

Discussion

a. 5th & 7th Causes of Action — Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN27  Contract claims are expressly outside of CUTSA's preemptive scope. [See \[\*1237\]](#) *Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7\(b\)\(1\); Angelica Textile, 220 Cal.App.4th at 505; K.C., 171 Cal.App.4th at 954*. Because a claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is a contract claim, see Digerati Holdings, 194 Cal.App.4th at 885, it is expressly not preempted/superseded by CUTSA. See Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7\(b\)\(1\); Angelica Textile, 220 Cal.App.4th at 505; K.C., 171 Cal.App.4th at 954.

b. 8th Cause of Action — IIPEA

HN28  The elements of a claim for IIPEA are: (1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional wrongful acts designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm proximately caused by the defendant's actions. *Roy Allan Slurry Seal, Inc. v. American Asphalt South, Inc., 2 Cal.5th 505, 512, 213 Cal. Rptr. 3d 568, 388 P.3d 800 \(2017\); Redfearn v. Trader Joe's Co., Inc., 20 Cal.App.5th 989, 1005, 230 Cal. Rptr. 3d 98 \(2018\)*. Courts have recognized that, if an interference [\[\*\*49\]](#) with prospective economic advantage claim is based on the same nucleus of facts as a CUTSA trade secret misappropriation claim, then the IIPEA tort is preempted by CUTSA. See Switchboard, Inc. v. Panama jack, Inc., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 197849, \*15-\*17 \(C.D. Cal. Dec. 15, 2014\); Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Steele Ins. Agency, Inc., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104606, \*25-\*27 \(E.D. Cal. July 23, 2013\); RSPE Audio Sols., Inc. v. Vintage King Audio, Inc., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2909, \*5-\*7 \(C.D. Cal. Jan. 7, 2013\).

As explained above, the Court dismissed the IIPEA claim to the extent that it is based on breaches of contract. Therefore, the allegations in the Complaint show that the remaining basis of the IIPEA claim is trade secret misappropriation in violation of CUTSA. It goes without saying that wholesale reliance on a violation of CUTSA necessarily means that the IIPEA and CUTSA misappropriation claims share a common nucleus of operative facts. Therefore, CUTSA preempts Deerpoint's IIPEA claim to the extent it is based on the misappropriation of trade secrets. Dismissal of the IIPEA claim is appropriate.<sup>17</sup>

HN29[] The UCL broadly proscribes the use of any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code. § 17200; Beaver v. Tarsadia Hotels, 816 F.3d 1170, 1177 \(9th Cir. 2016\). "The UCL operates as a three-pronged statute: 'Each of these three adjectives [unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent] captures a 'separate and distinct theory of liability.'" [*1238] Beaver, 816 F.3d at 1177 (quoting Rubio v. Capital One Bank, 613 F.3d 1195, 1203 \(9th Cir. 2010\)).

In relevant part, the Complaint alleges that Defendants' [**50] conduct "constitutes 'unlawful,' 'unfair,' and/or 'fraudulent' business practices in violation of the unfair competition provisions of the [UCL], in that the alleged conduct by Defendants, and each of them, was a concerted plan directly intended to deprive Deerpoint of customer relationships that Deerpoint expected would continue, in quick succession, in order to disrupt Deerpoint's business for the benefit of Agrigenix." Complaint ¶ 152. Further, Defendants "knew that by stealing and using Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information . . . they engaged in unfair business practices by acting in violation of Cal. Civ. Code § 3426 and 18 U.S.C. § 1836 . . . [Mahoney used, and continues to use], Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information unlawfully, plainly in violation of [the EIS], [the Settlement], . . . and basic principles of professional decency." Id. at ¶ 153. From these allegations, the Court gleans three basic acts that constitute either unfair or unlawful conduct by Defendants: (1) breaches of contract; (2) trade secret misappropriation; and (3) committing IIPEA.

(1) IIPEA

The Court has found that no plausible IIPEA claim is stated. HN30[] To the extent that Deerpoint relies [**51] on an actionable IIPEA claim to support a UCL claim, the UCL claim fails and dismissal is appropriate. Krantz v. BT Visual Images, L.L.C., 89 Cal.App.4th 164, 178, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 209 \(2001\) (holding that a UCL claim will "rise or fall depending on the state of the antecedent substantive causes of action."); see Fresno Motors, Ltd. Liab. Co. v. Mercedes Benz USA, Ltd. Liab. Co., 771 F.3d 1119, 1135 \(9th Cir. 2014\) (same); Vargas v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., 30 F.Supp.3d 945, 953 \(C.D. Cal. 2014\) (same); Shalaby v. Bernzomatic, 281 F.R.D. 565, 576 \(S.D. Cal. 2012\) (same); Johnson v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 809 F.Supp.2d 1114, 1139 \(N.D. Cal. 2011\) (same).

(2) Trade Secrets

HN31[] With respect to violations of the trade secret laws, as noted above, CUTSA will not preempt non-trade secret related civil claims if the civil claims do not share a common nucleus of operative facts with the CUTSA misappropriation claim. See Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7\(b\)\(2\); Silvaco Data, 184 Cal.App.4th at 232; K.C., 171 Cal.App.4th at 962. Here, because the Complaint's UCL claim identifies the trade secret statutes and then alleges trade secret misappropriation through use and disclosure, the Complaint's UCL claim is clearly based on the same nucleus of operative facts as the CUTSA claim. HN32[] Therefore, to the extent that Deerpoint's UCL claim relies on trade secret misappropriation, CUTSA preempts the UCL claim and dismissal is appropriate. See K.C., 171 Cal.App.4th at 961-62 (finding that a UCL claim that was based on the same nucleus of operative facts as a CUTSA claim was preempted); see also Waymo, LLC v. Uber Techs., Inc., 256 F.Supp.3d 1059, 1064 \(N.D. Cal. 2017\) (same); Norsat Int'l v. B.I.P. Corp., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74953, \*33-\*34 \(S.D. Cal. May 30, 2014\) (same); RSPE Audio Sols., Inc. v. Vintage King Audio, Inc., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2909, \*5-\*7 \(C.D. Cal. Jan. 7, 2013\) (same).

[*1239] (3) Breach of Contract<sup>19</sup>

<sup>18</sup> Deerpoint's opposition defends its UCL claim by arguing it is based on IIPEA and disparagement. The allegations under the UCL do not reference disparagement. The UCL claim suffers from the improper shotgun tactic of incorporating by reference every single paragraph that preceded it. Therefore, just as with the IIPEA claim, the Court will not consider any arguments in support of the UCL claim that are based on disparagement. See Weiland, 792 F.3d at 1321-23; Footnotes 15 & 17, supra.

HN33 [↑] California courts hold that a breach of contract claim will not support a UCL claim unless the [**52] conduct that constitutes a breach of conduct is also "unfair, unlawful, or fraudulent," as those terms are understood under the UCL.<sup>20</sup> See Sybersound Records, Inc. v. UAV Corp., 517 F.3d 1137, 1152 (9th Cir. 2008); Arce v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc., 181 Cal.App.4th 471, 489, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 545 (2010); Puentes v. Wells Fargo Home Mortgage, Inc., 160 Cal.App.4th 638, 645, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 903 (2008).

Here, the allegations under the UCL claim do not identify "fraudulent" conduct,<sup>21</sup> and they do not explain how any conduct, let alone breaching conduct, fits the "unfair" prong.<sup>22</sup> Rather, the conduct identified as breaching contracts relates to obtaining, disclosing, and using trade secrets, i.e. misappropriation. See Complaint ¶ 153; Doc. No. 14 at 23:27-28 ("Deerpoint acknowledges that [¶ 153] highlights Defendants' alleged trade secret misappropriation.").

HN35 [↑] This breaching conduct implicates CUTSA, and thus the "unlawful" prong of the UCL. See In re Vaccine Cases, 134 Cal.App.4th 438, 457, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 80 (2005) (noting that an allegation of a statutory violation is an allegation of "unlawful" conduct, rather than "unfair" or deceptive conduct). However, a violation of CUTSA cannot form the basis of a UCL claim because of CUTSA's preemptive scope. See Waymo, 256 F.Supp.3d at 1064; K.C., 171 Cal. App. at 961-62. As Deerpoint does not explain how [*1240] any breach of contract by Mahoney constituted "unlawful," "unfair," or "fraudulent" conduct, the breaches of contract cannot form the basis of a UCL claim.

In sum, dismissal of the UCL claim is appropriate. See Sybersound Records, 517 F.3d at 1152; Arce, 181 Cal.App.4th at 489 [**53]; Puentes, 160 Cal.App.4th at 645.

4. SUPERFLUOUS CLAIMS — 5th and 7th Causes of Action

Defendants' Arguments

<sup>21</sup> HN36 [↑] UCL claims that are based on "fraudulent" conduct must meet Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard, meaning that the "who, what, when, where, and how" of the fraudulent conduct, as well as what conduct/statement is misleading and why it is false, must be expressly alleged. Davidson v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., 889 F.3d 956, 964 (9th Cir. 2018). Although the allegations under the UCL indicate that Defendants engaged in fraudulent conduct, the allegations do not meet Rule 9(b)'s pleading standards. Indeed, the allegations under the UCL do not attempt to identify any "fraudulent" conduct. Although other paragraphs in the Complaint may indicate "fraudulent" conduct, the shotgun incorporation by reference of literally every prior allegation that preceded the UCL claim is improper and does not meet Rule 8 standards, let alone Rule 9 standards. See Weiland, 792 F.3d at 1321-23.

<sup>22</sup> Again, other allegations in the Complaint may indicate "unfair" conduct. However, Deerpoint's shotgun incorporation by reference of every prior allegation that preceded the UCL claim is improper and does not meet Rule 8 standards. See Weiland, 792 F.3d at 1321-23; Footnotes 15, 17, & 18, supra.

Mahoney argues that the fifth and seventh causes of action are nothing more than a straightforward breach of contract claim. Because Deerpoint has already alleged the same breaches as part of its breach of contract claim, the fifth and seventh causes of action should be dismissed as superfluous.

Plaintiff's Opposition

Deerpoint argues that it has properly alleged two implied covenant claims. First, with respect to the fifth cause of action, the Complaint alleges that Mahoney unfairly interfered with its expectation that its employees would uphold the confidentiality and secrecy of its trade secrets. This expectation flows from Deerpoint's corporate culture. Mahoney breached the covenant/expectation by disclosing protected materials to Agrigenix and by failing to take steps as an Agrigenix executive from publishing portions of Deerpoint's trade secrets. Second, with respect to the seventh cause of action, the Complaint alleges that Mahoney unfairly interfered with its expectation that he would uphold the confidentiality and secrecy of its trade secrets. Mahoney breached that expectation by disclosing trade secrets [**54] to Agrigenix and by failing to take steps as an Agrigenix executive to prevent Agrigenix from publishing portions of Deerpoint's trade secrets. Deerpoint argues that, although both the fifth and the seventh causes of actions have facts that overlap with the fourth and sixth causes of action (for breach of contract), two claims can be distinguished, one for breach of contract and one for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

Legal Standard

HN37 [↑] "The covenant of good faith and fair dealing, implied by law in every contract, exists merely to prevent one contracting party from unfairly frustrating the other party's right to receive the benefits of the agreement actually made." Guz v. Bechtel Nat'l, Inc., 24 Cal.4th 317, 349, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089 (2000); see also Digerati Holdings, 194 Cal.App.4th at 885. "[T]he scope of conduct prohibited by the covenant of good faith is circumscribed by the purposes and express terms of the contract." Carma Developers (Cal.), Inc. v. Marathon Development California, Inc., 2 Cal.4th 342, 373, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 467, 826 P.2d 710 (1992); see Digerati Holdings, 194 Cal.App.4th at 885. "Although breach of the implied covenant often is pleaded as a separate count, a breach of the implied covenant is necessarily a breach of contract." Digerati Holdings, 194 Cal.App.4th at 885; see Careau & Co., 222 Cal.App.3d at 1393-94. However, if the plaintiff's allegations of breach of the covenant of good faith "do not go beyond the statement of a mere contract breach and, relying on the same alleged acts, simply seek [**55] the same damages or other relief already claimed in a companion contract cause of action, they may be disregarded as superfluous as no additional claim is actually stated." Bionghi v. Metro. Water Dist., 70 Cal.App.4th 1358, 1370, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 388 (1999); Careau & Co., 222 Cal.App.3d at 1395. [*1241] That is, "where breach of an actual [contract] term is alleged, a separate implied covenant claim, based on the same breach, is superfluous." Guz, 24 Cal.4th at 327; see also id. at 352.

Discussion<sup>23</sup>

1. Fifth Cause of Action

<sup>23</sup> Deerpoint's opposition cites Paragraphs 72, 75, and 77 in support of its assertion that Mahoney did not stop Agrigenix from publishing certain aspects of Deerpoint's trade secrets. See Doc. No. 14 at p.20. As detailed below, neither the substance of Paragraphs 72, 75, and 77 nor an express reference to those paragraphs are found under the fifth and seventh causes of action. Like all of the other causes of action, the fifth and seventh causes of action incorporate by reference literally every prior allegation that preceded them. See Complaint ¶¶ 123, 139. Again, this form of HN38 [↑] shotgun pleading is improper and does not provide sufficient notice that Deerpoint is relying on conduct by Mahoney as an Agrigenix executive to prevent publication of trade secrets by Agrigenix. See Weiland, 792 F.3d at 1321-23. Therefore, the Court's analysis will not consider or discuss any argument based on the incorporation of Paragraphs 72, 75, or 77 of the Complaint. See id.; Footnotes 14 and 16, supra.

The fifth cause of action is based on the EIS. See Complaint ¶ 124. In relevant part, the fifth cause of action alleges: "Mahoney . . . unfairly interfered with Deerpoint's right to receive the benefit of the [EIS], namely, the expectation that its employees would uphold the confidentiality and trade secret protection of Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information." Id. at ¶ 126.

Relatedly, the fourth cause of action is for breach of the EIS. The Complaint alleges that, through the EIS, Mahoney "understood that [his] employment at Deerpoint may give him access to Deerpoint's confidential information, and that [he] was not to disclose, use, or publish any confidential information belonging to Deerpoint, either during or after employment with the Company." Complaint ¶ 115. Also under [**56] the EIS, Mahoney had access to a variety of tangible "items" that remained Deerpoint's property, would not be made available to third parties, and were to be returned to Deerpoint if the property was in Mahoney's possession. Id. at ¶ 116. Mahoney allegedly breached the EIS by (1) accessing, copying, using, and/or disclosing to Agrigenix Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information, and (2) failing to take steps to return Deerpoint's "property." See id. at ¶¶ 117, 118.

From the above allegations, the conduct that allegedly breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is the same conduct that breached other provisions of the EIS. Both claims are premised on failing to return property and not using, misappropriating, or divulging Deerpoint's confidential trade secrets. The "expectation" that trade secret information would stay secret is clearly encompassed within the third and fourth paragraphs of the EIS. That expectation is nothing more than the assumption that Mahoney (and all other employees) would follow the contract and not commit a breach of an express contractual term. Because the fifth cause of action does not contain any conduct that is different [**57] or separate from the breaches alleged in the fourth cause of action, the fifth cause of action is redundant and will be dismissed. See Trombley Enters., LLC v. Sauer, Inc., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 159410, *9-*11 (N.D. Cal. Sep. 17, 2018) (relying on Careau & Co. and dismissing redundant implied covenant claim); Dedicato Treatment Ctr. v. Cigna Health & Life Ins. Co., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 220004, *12-*14 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 24, 2017) (same); [*1242] R Power Biofuels, LLC v. Chemex LLC, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 156727, *55-*56 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 11, 2016) (same); Guz, 24 Cal.4th at 327, 352; Bionghi, 70 Cal.App.4th at 1370; Careau & Co., 222 Cal.App.3d at 1395.

2. Seventh Cause of Action

The seventh cause of action is based on the Settlement. See id. at ¶ 140. In relevant part, the seventh cause of action alleges: "Mahoney . . . unfairly interfered with Deerpoint's right to receive the benefit of the [Settlement], namely, the expectation that he would uphold the confidentiality and trade secret protection of Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information; the expectation that he would return any tangible and/or intangible property belonging to Deerpoint; and that he would not publicly disparage and/or cause the disparagement of Deerpoint." Id. at ¶ 142.

Relatedly, the sixth cause of action is for breach of the Settlement. The Complaint alleges the Settlement obligated Mahoney to: (1) act as a fiduciary to Deerpoint with respect to Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information, (2) return Deerpoint's "property," (3) not publicly disparage Deerpoint, and (4) not divulge to [**58] third parties or use to Deerpoint's detriment any of Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information. See id. at ¶¶ 129-133. Mahoney allegedly breached the Settlement by: (1) accessing, copying, using, and/or disclosing to Agrigenix or third parties Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information, (2) failing to take necessary steps to hold in confidence and protect, and not use or disclose, Deerpoint's confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information, and (3) publicly disparaging Deerpoint. Id. at ¶¶ 134-136.

The seventh cause of action suffers from the same flaw as the fifth cause of action. The conduct that allegedly breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is the same conduct that breached other express provisions of the Settlement. Both the sixth and seventh causes of action are premised on failing to return property, not using, misappropriating, or divulging Deerpoint's confidential trade secrets, and not disparaging Deerpoint. The "expectations" that trade secret information would stay secret, that property would be returned, and that no disparagement would occur, are clearly encompassed within Paragraphs 14 and 15 of [**59] the Settlement. Those expectations are nothing more than the assumption that Mahoney would follow the Settlement and not commit a breach of an express contractual term. Because the seventh cause of action does not contain any conduct that is different or separate from the conduct alleged under the sixth cause of action, the seventh cause of action is redundant and will be dismissed. See *Trombley Enters., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 159410 at *9-*11; Dedicato Treatment, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 220004 at *12-*14; R Power Biofuels, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 156727 at *55-*56; Bionghi, 70 Cal.App.4th at 1370; Guz, 24 Cal.4th at 327, 352; Careau & Co., 222 Cal.App.3d at 1395.*

5. LEAVE TO AMEND

With respect to Mahoney, the Court has dismissed the first, second, fifth, seventh, eighth, and ninth causes of action. Due to application of the settlement bar, amendment will not cure the defects of the first and second causes of action, nor will any claim be permitted to proceed against Mahoney that arose prior to the Settlement. [*1243] Therefore, dismissal of those causes of action will be without leave to amend. Similarly, by operation of CUTSA preemption, amendment is futile and will not be permitted with respect to the IIPEA and UCL claims based on CUTSA/trade secret misappropriation. Because the Court cannot hold at this time that Deerpoint cannot allege non-CUTSA based IIPEA and UCL claims, dismissal of the eighth and ninth causes of action will be with leave to amend. [**60] Finally, the fifth and seventh causes of action are dismissed as superfluous of the fourth and sixth causes of action. Although the Court harbors doubts whether Deerpoint may allege conduct that is not superfluous to its breach of contract claims, it is not clear that amendment would be futile. Therefore, the dismissal of fifth and seventh causes of action will be with leave to amend.

With respect to Agrigenix, the Court has dismissed the eighth and ninth causes of action. Again, to the extent that Deerpoint attempts to base these claims on CUTSA/trade secret misappropriation, amendment is futile. However, because it is not clear that Deerpoint cannot allege non-CUTSA based IIPEA and UCL claims, dismissal will be with leave to amend.

ORDER

Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. Defendants' motion to dismiss (Doc. No. 10) is GRANTED as follows:
  - a. The first and second causes of action against Mahoney are DISMISSED without leave to amend;
  - b. The fifth and sixth causes of action are DISMISSED with leave to amend;
  - c. The eighth and ninth causes of action are DISMISSED with leave to amend to allege non-CUTSA based claims;
2. Defendants' motion to dismiss is otherwise DENIED;
3. Plaintiff may [*61] file an amended complaint, that is consistent with the analysis of this order, within twenty-one (21) days of service of this order;
4. If Plaintiff files an amended complaint, Defendants shall file an answer or other appropriate response to the amended complaint within twenty-one (21) days of service of the amended complaint; and
5. If Plaintiff fails to file a timely amended complaint, then leave to amend shall automatically be withdrawn and, within twenty-one (21) of service of this order, Defendants shall file an answer to the Complaint in light of the analysis of this order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[*349] ORDER

This multi-district litigation ("MDL") antitrust case involving the pricing of disposable contact lenses is before the Court on the [**116] contact lens consumer Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. (Docs. 396; S-404) (collectively "Motion for Class Certification").<sup>1</sup> The Defendants, contact lens manufacturers, Alcon Laboratories, Inc. ("Alcon"), Johnson & Johnson Vision Care, Inc. ("JJVC"), Bausch & Lomb Inc. ("B&L"), and CooperVision, Inc. ("CV") (collectively "Manufacturer Defendants"), and distributor ABB Concise Optical Group, LLC ("ABB"), have filed a Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Docs. 505; S-540). With leave of Court, Plaintiffs filed Plaintiffs' Reply Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion for Class Certification (Docs. 611; S-649), and Defendants filed Defendants' Sur-Reply Memorandum of Law in Further Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. (Doc. 674; Doc. S-681). A two-day evidentiary hearing on Plaintiffs' Class Certification Motion was conducted in August of 2018. (See Doc. 866; Doc. 867). Plaintiffs have settled with CV. (Docs. 611 at 10; S-649 at 10; 781). In connection with the pending Motion for Class Certification, the Defendants have filed:

1) Defendants' Motion to Strike Portions of the Expert Report of Dr. John L. Solow and Preclude [**117] Testimony Regarding Purported Collusion Between the Defendants, Pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 702 and Daubert (Docs. 500; S-

3) Defendants' Motion to Exclude the Supplemental Report of Dr. Michael A. Williams Under Fed. R. Evid. 702 and Daubert (Docs. 693; S- 720), and Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Exclude the Supplemental Report of Dr. Michael A. Williams. (Doc. 715; S-722).

Also before the Court is Plaintiffs' "Motion for Spoliation Sanctions Against Defendants Johnson & Johnson Vision Care, Inc. and Alcon Laboratories, Inc." (Doc. 854); Defendants' Responses to Plaintiffs' Spoliation Motion (Doc. 879; Doc. 881; Doc. 882; [**118] Doc. 886); Plaintiffs' Reply to Defendants' Responses (Doc. 901); and Defendants' Sur Replies (Doc. 913; Doc. 914).

[*350] The pending motions are ripe for the Court's consideration. The Court has considered the parties' papers and evidence submitted, as well as argument of counsel.

I. Background

This multidistrict antitrust litigation was centralized before this Court on June 10, 2015, by order of the United States Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ("MDL Panel"). (Doc. 1; Transfer Order). It arises out of pricing policies adopted by contact lens manufacturers starting in June 2013 with regard to the distribution and sale of certain contact lens products. The operative complaint, Plaintiffs' Interlineation To Corrected Consolidated Class Action Complaint (Doc. 395; Complaint), filed on March 1, 2017, is a six-count Complaint brought by sixteen individual Plaintiffs suing on behalf of themselves, and on behalf of a class of Plaintiffs consisting of "all persons and entities in the United States who made a retail purchase . . . of disposable contact lenses ("contact lenses") manufactured by [the Manufacturer Defendants] . . . subject to one of the 'Unilateral Pricing Policies' ("UPPs") [**119] described herein from June 1, 2013 to the present." Complaint ¶ 1; see also id. 148. The individual Plaintiffs ("Plaintiffs") are Rachel Berg, Miriam Pardoll, Elyse Ulino, Jennifer Sineni, Susan Gordon, Cora Beth Smith, Brett Watson, Kathleen Schirf, Tamara O'Brien, John Machikawa, Amanda Cunha, Alexis Ito, Catherine Dingle, Sheryl Marean, Pamela Mazzarella, and Joe Felson. Complaint ¶¶ 1, 28-41.

A. The Complaint

Plaintiffs contend that the Manufacturer Defendants' adoption, implementation and enforcement of UPPs as they apply to the market for disposable (soft) contact lenses ("contact lenses") violate antitrust law. Disposable contact lenses comprise 90% of the contact lenses sold in the United States. See Complaint ¶ 64.

Plaintiffs allege that the Manufacturer Defendants conspired with each other and with Defendant [ABB], a wholesaler, as well as independent eye care professionals ("ECPs") (e.g. optometrists and ophthalmologists who sell contact lenses to consumers) and their trade association, the American Optometric Association ("AOA"), to impose minimum resale prices on certain contact lens lines by subjecting them to UPPs, thereby reducing or eliminating price competition on those products [**120] from "big box" stores. . . , buying clubs . . . , and internet-based retailers . . . (collectively, "Discount Retailers") by preventing them from discounting those products.

Complaint ¶ 2. Plaintiffs further allege that "the Manufacturer Defendants, working with ABB, conspired to eliminate discounting of contact lenses by ensuring that all retailers charged the same minimum price." Id. ¶ 3.

Plaintiffs allege a complex "interwoven" conspiracy in which ABB worked with the Manufacturer Defendants to develop UPPs for several of the most advanced and/or most popular lines of contact lenses sold by the Manufacturer Defendants. Over the course of 15 months commencing in June of 2013, each Manufacturer Defendant implemented this strategy in the form of a [UPP] . . . [promulgating] a minimum retail price for its affected product(s) and threaten[ing] to curtail the supply of some of its contact lens lines to retailers who sell below the mandated price.

Complaint ¶ 9. "The Manufacturer Defendants agreed to limit retail price competition only after extensive consultation with independent ECPs and their agent ABB." Id. ¶ 11.

Plaintiffs allege that "the Manufacturer Defendants . . . conspired with each [**121] other in a horizontal, per se illegal agreement in restraint of trade that ABB '(acting as the agent for its ECP clients) helped to orchestrate," and that "these policies were the subject of agreements among the Manufacturer Defendants and independent ECPs, effectuated through ABB." Complaint ¶ 174. They contend that the Manufacturer Defendants, "facing pressure from independent ECPs and ABB about competitive threats posed by the Discount Retailers, . . . agreed with one another and with ABB and the independent [*351] ECPs to impose UPPs on their most advanced and most popular contact lens lines." Complaint ¶ 133; see also id. ¶¶ 135-158 (citing "plus factors" such as of "Industry Structure", "Opportunities to Conspire," "Information Exchanges," "ABB's and Independent ECPs' Conduct," "Acts Contrary to Economic Self Interest," "Pretextual Reasons for UPPs," "Motive to Conspire, Including Assurances That Competitors Will Also Act," "Abrupt, Near Contemporaneous and Fundamental Shift in Pricing Policies," and "Past Conspiratorial Conduct.").

Plaintiffs also contend that Defendants engaged in a "vertical conspiracy," subdividing the relevant market for disposable contact lenses into distinct markets [**122] for each brand of contact lenses subject to a UPP. Complaint ¶ 183. They alleged that the Manufacturer Defendants, ABB, and the independent ECPs "all share an interest in not reducing the retail price of contact lenses and limiting competition from Discount Retailers," id. ¶ 4, and that ECPs, ABB, and the Manufacturer Defendants communicated up and down the distribution chain regarding the enactment, implementation and enforcement of UPPs. Id. ¶¶ 102, 103, 106, 107, 111, 114, 115, 117-32.

Plaintiffs allege that the UPPs harm competition by increasing prices for contact lenses subject to the UPPs, and depriving consumers of the ability to shop around for retail discounts on contact lenses. Id. ¶ 159.

Plaintiffs bring the following claims (the claims are mis-numbered in the Complaint):

First Cause of Action: Claim of Violation of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 3 (Per Se Violation of the Sherman Act) ["Count 1"]

Second Cause of Action: Claim for Violation of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 3 (Rule of Reason Violations of the Sherman Act) ["Count 2"]

Third Cause of Action: Claim for Violation of the California Cartwright Act ["Count 3"]

Third Cause of Action: Claim for Violation of the Maryland Antitrust Act ["Count 4"]

Sixth Cause of Action: Claim [**123] for Violation of the California Unfair Competition Law ["Count 5"]

Seventh Cause of Action: Claim for Violation of the Maryland Consumer Protection Act. ["Count 6"]

B. The UPPs

Defendants adopted UPPs as follows (see Doc. S-537 at 131-144 (Cremieux Report Exs. 10-13) (dates that UPPs were adopted)):

Alcon adopted UPPs for its products as follows: Dailies Total I (June 2013 concurrent with the product's release); Dailies Aquacomfort Plus Multifocal (January 2014 concurrent with the product's release); Dailies Aquacomfort Plus Toric (January 2014 concurrent with the product's release); Air Optix Colors (April 2014 concurrent with the product's release); and Dailies Total 1 Multifocal (July 2016 concurrent with the product's release). (Doc. S-537 at 131-32 (Cremieux Report Ex. 10)). Alcon discontinued the UPPs in December 2016. Id.

B&L adopted UPPs for its products as follows: Ultra (February 2014); BioTrue ONEday for Presbyopia (June 2014 and December 2016 for different package sizes); and Ultra for Presbyopia (March 2016 concurrent with the product's release). (Doc. S-537 at 134-35 (Cremieux Report Ex. 11)). B&L discontinued the UPPs in February 2017. Id.

CV (and predecessor Sauflon Pharmaceuticals [**124] Limited ("Sauflon")) adopted UPPs for its products as follows: Clariti 1 Day (January 2014 (by Sauflon)); Clariti 1 Day Multifocal (January 2014 (by Sauflon)); Clariti 1 Day Toric (January 2014 (by Sauflon)). The Sauflon UPPs were subsequently adopted by CV in August 2014. CV adopted UPPs for its products: MyDay (June 2015 concurrent with the product's release); Biofinity XR Toric (January 2016 concurrent with the product's introduction); and Biofinity Energys (July 2016 concurrent with the product's introduction). (Doc. S-537 at 136-37 ((Cremieux Report Ex. 12)). CV discontinued the UPPs for five of the products (Biofinity XR Toric, Clariti 1 Day, Clariti 1 Day Multifocal, Clariti 1 Day Toric, and MyDay) in March 2017. Id.

JJVC adopted UPPs for its products as follows: Acuvue Oasys with Hydraclear (July 2014 with follow up UPPs for different package sizes in August and October 2014 and [*352] June 2015); 1-Day Acuvue Moist (August 2014); 1-Day Acuvue Moist for Astigmatism (August 2014); 1-Day Acuvue TruEye (August 2014); Acuvue Oasys for Astigmatism (August 2014); Acuvue Oasys for Presbyopia (August 2014); 1-Day Acuvue Define (March 2015); 1-Day Acuvue Moist Multifocal (May 2015 concurrent [**125] with the product's release); Acuvue Oasys with Hydrauixe (August 2015 concurrent with the product's release). (Doc. S-537 at 140 ((Cremieux Report Ex. 13)). JJVC discontinued all UPPs in April 2016. Id.

Defendants' expert Dr. Cremieux detailed the specifics about the UPPS regarding price and modality (package size). (Doc. S-537 at 131-144 (Cremieux Report Exs. 10-13))

C. Applicable Antitrust Law

"Section 1 of the Sherman Act broadly prohibits 'every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce[.]'" Aquatherm Indus.. Inc. v. Fla. Power & Light Co., 145 F.3d 1258, 1262 (11th Cir. 1998); see also United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919) ("The purpose of the Sherman Act is to prohibit monopolies, contracts and combinations which probably would unduly interfere with the free exercise of their rights by those engaged, or who wish to engage, in trade of commerce. . ."). A manufacturer, however, "generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, which whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 760, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) (citing Colgate, 250 U.S. at 307). Thus, a manufacturer is permitted to "announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. And a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination." Id. at 761. The elements of a conspiracy to restrain trade in violation [**126] of S.1 of the Act, are: "(1) an agreement to enter a conspiracy (2) designed to achieve an unlawful objective . . . [and] (3) actual unlawful effects or facts which radiate a potential for future harm to competition." U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 1001 (11th Cir. 1993) (internal citation and quotation omitted). See also Aquatherm Indus., Inc., 145 F.3d at 1262 (citing U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc.).

Antitrust law differentiates between vertical and horizontal price restraints. "Restraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been denominated as horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints." Bus. Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988) (footnote omitted). With limited exceptions, horizontal agreements are per se unlawful, whereas vertical restraints are unlawful only if an assessment of market effects, known as the "rule of reason" analysis, reveals that the vertical agreements unreasonably restrain trade. See Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 885-86, 907, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007). Under the "rule of reason," "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Id. at 885 (citation omitted). Vertical and horizontal price arrangements may intersect. See United States v. Apple, Inc., 791 F.3d 290, 314 (2d Cir. 2015), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 1376, 194 L. Ed. 2d 360 (2016).

"It is only [**127] in rare cases that a plaintiff can establish the existence of a conspiracy by showing an explicit agreement; most conspiracies are inferred from the behavior of the alleged conspirators, and from other circumstantial evidence (economic and otherwise), such as barriers to entry and other market conditions." Williamson Oil Co. v. Philip Morris USA, 346 F.3d 1287, 1299-1300 (11th Cir. 2003) (internal quotations and citations omitted); see also Apple, 791 F.3d at 315; In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622, 629 (7th Cir. 2010) ("Circumstantial evidence can establish an antitrust conspiracy." (citing cases)); DeLong Equip. Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1515 (11th Cir. 1989) ("Conspiracies are rarely evidenced by explicit agreements, and must almost always be proven by [*353] inferences that may be fairly drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators.").

To prevail on their claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, Plaintiffs must prove "(1) the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade (liability); (2) injury-in-fact (antitrust injury); and (3) the extent of injury (damages)." In re Terazosin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 220 F.R.D. 672, 695 (S.D. Fla. 2004) (citing J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 562, 101 S. Ct. 1923, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 (1981)); see also State of Ala. v. Blue Bird Body Co., 573 F.2d 309, 317 (5th Cir. 1978) (observing that "a prerequisite to recovery was a showing by the plaintiff of a violation of the antitrust laws, the fact of damage, and some indication of the amount of damage.").<sup>2</sup> In this case, the claims of the proposed state classes arise out of the same alleged illegal conduct by Defendants and [**128] are based on the same related antitrust theories as the federal claims.

D. Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification

Plaintiffs filed their Motion for Class Certification on March 3, 2017, citing Rule 23, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("Rule(s)"). Plaintiffs seek class certification pursuant to the horizontal conspiracy theory, [of] a nationwide class of persons who purchased disposable contact lenses made by the [Manufacturer Defendants] and two subclasses comprised of class members residing in Maryland and California. Alternatively, if the Court declines to certify the Horizontal Class, Plaintiffs seek certification of four Vertical Classes, one for purchasers of each [Manufacturer Defendants'] lenses.

(Docs. 396 at 17-18; S-404 at 17-18). Plaintiffs initially sought certification of the following classes: CLASS AND SUBCLASSES DEFINITIONS

Horizontal Class

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, B&L, or [CV] from June 1, 2013 to the present (the "Class Period") for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the [**129] period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and [*354] affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

The proposed Horizontal Class Consists of the following subclasses:

(1) The Maryland Subclass:

<sup>2</sup> In Bonner v. City of Prichard, Ala., 661 F.2d 1206, 1207 (11th Cir. 1981), the Eleventh Circuit adopted as binding precedent decisions of the former Fifth Circuit rendered prior to October 1, 1981.

All persons and entities residing in Maryland who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, B&L, or CV from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(2) The California Subclass:

All persons and entities residing in California who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, B&L, or CV from June 1, 2013 to the [**130] date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

Vertical Classes:

(1) The JJVC Class

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by JJVC from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(2) The Alcon Class

All persons and entities residing [**131] in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(3) The B&L Class

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by B&L from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, [**132] or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(4) The CV Class

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by CV from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(Docs. 396 at 40-41; S-404 at 40-41).

In recognition of Plaintiffs' settlement with CooperVision; the discontinuation of the UPPs by the remaining Manufacturer Defendants; and additional findings and opinions by Plaintiffs' expert Dr. Michael A. Williams based upon new data being made available, Plaintiffs, on September 8, 2017, amended their proposed Class and Subclasses Definitions as follows:

Horizontal Class:

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of [**133] disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, or B&L from June 1, 2013 to the present (the "Class Period") for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] [*355] where the purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any coconspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

The proposed Horizontal Class consists of the following subclasses:

(1) Maryland Subclass:

All persons and entities residing in Maryland who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, or B&L from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase [**134] occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, where the purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any coconspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(2) California Subclass:

All persons and entities residing in California who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, or B&L from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, where the purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent [**135] companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any coconspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

Vertical Classes:

(1) The JJVC Class

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by JJVC from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(2) The Alcon Class:

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during [**136] the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(3) The B&L Class:

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by B&L from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from [*356] the Class are any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, where the purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(Docs. 611 at 34; S-649-1). Plaintiffs offer an alternative to the "pursuant to [**137] a UP?" language, which they "view . . . as another way of saying that a contact lens price was subject to a UPP." (Docs. 715 at 11; S-722 at 11) (emphasis added).

H. Class Certification Standard

To maintain a case as a class action, the party seeking class certification must satisfy each of the prerequisites of Rule 23\(a\) and at least one of the alternative provisions of Rule 23\(b\). Allapattah Servs., Inc. v. Exxon Corp., 333 F.3d 1248, 1260 (11th Cir. 2003); Rutstein v. Avis Rent-A-Car Sys., Inc., 211 F.3d 1228, 1233 (11th Cir. 2000)). Rule 23\(a\) provides that a class representative may sue on behalf of its members only if:

- (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable;
- (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class;
- (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and
- (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\); see Carriuolo v. Gen. Motors Co., 823 F.3d 977, 984 (11th Cir. 2016). These prerequisites are commonly referred to as: (1) numerosity, (2) commonality, (3) typicality, and (4) adequacy of representation. Cooper v. Southern Co., 390 F.3d 695, 711 n.6 (11th Cir. 2004), overruled in part on other grounds by Ash v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 546 U.S. 454, 457-58, 126 S. Ct. 1195, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1053 (2006). Failure to establish any one of the four factors precludes certification.

In addition, under Rule 23\(b\), the individual plaintiffs must convince the Court that: (1) prosecuting separate actions by or against individual [\[\*\*138\]](#) members of the class would create a risk of inconsistent or varying adjudications or prejudice to those members of the class not parties to the subject litigation; (2) the party opposing the class has refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, necessitating final injunctive or declaratory relief; or (3) questions of law or fact common to the members of the class "predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for [fair and efficient adjudication of] the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\). The party seeking class certification bears the burden of proving that these requirements are satisfied. See Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 981; Valley Drug Co. v. Geneva Pharms.. Inc., 350 F.3d 1181, 1187 \(11th Cir. 2003\). The decision to grant or deny class certification lies within the sound discretion of the district court. Klay v. Humana, Inc., 382 F.3d 1241, 1251 \(11th Cir. 2004\), abrogated in part on other grounds by Bridge v. Phoenix Bond & Indem. Co., 553 U.S. 639, 128 S. Ct. 2131, 170 L. Ed. 2d 1012 \(2008\); Armstrong v. Martin Marietta Corp., 138 F.3d 1374, 1386 \(11th Cir. 1998\) (en banc).

When considering the propriety of class certification, the Court should not conduct a detailed evaluation of the merits of the suit. Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacqueline, 417 U.S. 156, 177-78, 94 S. Ct. 2140, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732 \(1974\). Nevertheless, the Court must perform a "rigorous analysis" of the particular facts and arguments asserted in support of class certification. Gen. Tel. Co. of Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161, 102 S. Ct. 2364, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740 \(1982\); Gilchrist v. Bolger, 733 F.2d 1551, 1555 \(11th Cir. 1984\). That "rigorous analysis" may entail some overlap with the merits of the plaintiff's [\[\*\*139\]](#) underlying claim. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 351-52, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 \(2011\).

"T]he Supreme Court has repeatedly 'emphasized that it may be necessary for the court to probe behind the pleadings before coming to rest on the certification question.'" Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 981 (quoting [Comcast Corp. v. Behrend, 569 U.S. 27, 33, \[\*357\] 133 S. Ct. 1426, 185 L. Ed. 2d 515 \(2013\)](#) (internal quotation marks omitted)); see also Landeros v. Pinnacle Recovery. Inc., 692 F. App'x 608, 611 \(11th Cir. 2017\).<sup>3</sup> The determination of class certification "will frequently entail overlap with the merits of the plaintiffs underlying claim." Comcast, 569 U.S. at 33-34 (citation omitted). This is because 'class determination generally involves considerations that are enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff's cause of action.'" Dukes, 564 U.S. at 351 (quoting Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160). The Plaintiffs, as the moving parties seeking class certification, have the "burden of proof, not the burden of pleading," and "if a question of fact or law is relevant to that determination, then the district court has a duty to actually decide it and not accept it as true or construe it in anyone's favor." Brown v. Electrolux Home Prods., Inc., 817 F.3d 1225, 1234 \(11th Cir. 2016\) (emphasis in original).

However, "the district court can consider the merits 'only' to the extent 'they are relevant to determining whether the Rule 23 prerequisites for class certification are satisfied.'" Brown, 817 F.3d at 1234 (quoting Amgen Inc. v. Conn. Ret. Plans & Trust Funds, 568 U.S. 455, 466, 133 S. Ct. 1184, 185 L. Ed. 2d 308 \(2013\)). "[I]f a question of fact or law is relevant to that determination, then the district court [\[\*\*140\]](#) has a duty to actually decide it and not accept it as true or construe it in anyone's favor. Id. (emphasis in original) (citing Comcast, 569 U.S. at 33-34). The Supreme Court admonishes:

Although we have cautioned that a court's class-certification analysis must be "rigorous" and may "entail some overlap with the merits of the plaintiff's underlying claim," Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 351, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374\(2011\) (internal quotation marks omitted), Rule 23 grants courts no license to engage in free-ranging merits inquiries at the certification stage. Merits questions may be considered to the extent - but only to the extent - that they are relevant to determining whether the Rule 23 prerequisites for class certification are satisfied. See id., at 351 n. 6 (a district court has no ""authority to conduct a preliminary inquiry into the merits of a suit' at class certification unless it is necessary "to determine the propriety of certification" (quoting Eisen v. [Amgen, 568 U.S. at 465-66. Plaintiffs argue that their motion for Class Certification mirrors their motion filed in a previous antitrust class action brought by customers against the Defendant \*\*141 Manufacturers and two trade organizations for ECPs alleging a conspiracy to restrict the supply of replacement contact lenses to drive up prices. They contend that like that earlier class action, their Motion for Class Certification should be granted and a nationwide class certified. (Docs. 396 at .10; S-404 at 10 (citing In re Disposable Contact Lens Antitrust Litig., 170 F.R.D. 524 \(M.D. Fla. 1996\) ("MDL 1030 ")).

Plaintiffs cite to the testimony of two experts in support of their Motion for Class Certification, Dr. John L. Solow ("Dr. Solow") and Dr. Michael A. Williams ("Dr. Williams"). Noting that Dr. Solow offered expert testimony in MDL 1030, Plaintiffs state that based on his review of documents and data both publically available and produced by Defendants, Dr. Solow offers testimony describing "[t]he features of the contact lens industry that made it conducive to an illegal [minimum resale price maintenance] scheme." (Docs. 396 at 15; S-404 at 15). Dr. Solow concludes that "[e]conomic theory and the facts of this case . . . present a predominant common issue." Id. at 16. Plaintiffs offer Dr. Williams' testimony for \*358 purposes of conducting an economic analysis, using the "standard statistical methodology of multiple regression analysis to demonstrate that Plaintiffs \*\*142 paid a higher price for their contact lenses" because of the Defendants' conduct. (Doc. S-404 at 16). Plaintiffs describe Dr. Williams' analysis as using "the well-accepted 'before-during' method to estimate overcharges related to the horizontal and vertical theories," relying on data from third-party distributors in order to estimate overcharges. Id.

Defendants argue that the issues presented by the instant case are "very different" from those presented in MDL 1030, which they argue involved an alleged conspiracy between three manufacturers and two trade associations to "boycott sales of the manufacturers" soft contact lenses to any business that sought to compete with independent [ECPs]." (Docs. 505 at 11; S-540 at 11). They contend that this case is not appropriate for class certification because the evidence establishes that:

(1) each of the Manufacturer Defendants came up with a different UPP, on different products, at different times and with different effects; (2) ECPs and retailers charged widely varying prices for contact lenses covered by a UPP and often determined their prices without regard to any UPP; and (3) consumers often paid less and sometimes paid nothing for contact \*\*143 lenses subject to a UPP due to rebates, discounts and insurance.

Id. at 11-12 (emphasis in original). Defendants argue that whether a contact lens purchaser was impacted by a UPP depends on an individualized inquiry of each individual class plaintiff into whether the person:

- bought a contact lens subject to a UPP at a time when the UPP was in effect;
- purchased a contact lens from an ECP/retailer that was part of an alleged conspiracy;
- acquired a contact lens from an ECP/retailer that determined his or her price pursuant to a UPP price;
- would have bought the same contact lens in the absence of a UPP;
- would have paid any less for the same contact lens in the absence of a UPP; and
- was insulated from any potential impact due to rebates, discounts and insurance reimbursements.

Id. at 12. Additionally, Defendants argue that to establish a vertical conspiracy, each Plaintiff must establish that he or she purchased contact lenses from a retailer who actually conspired with Defendants by agreeing to adhere to one or all of the differing UPPs, creating yet another individualized inquiry into whether the Plaintiff was impacted by the alleged conspiracy between Defendants. Id. at 12.

Defendants argue that since the MDL \*\*144 1030 Order approving class certification in 1996, the Supreme Court has heightened the requirements for class certification with its decisions in Wal-Mart Stores. Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 \(2011\) and Comcast, 569 U.S. at 33. (Docs. 505 at 13; S-540 at 13). They contend that Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification is "devoid of any evidence related to the experiences of the named Plaintiffs and the ECPs who treated them," id. (emphasis in original), and that it fails to survive the "rigorous analysis" now required. Id. at 17. (citing Brown, 817 F.3d at 1234). Defendants assert that the "Court . . . cannot certify a class on less than a finding that Plaintiffs' proposed expert proof of common impact and damages is a reliable method of fully adjudicating injury and damages claims for all class members." Id. at 31; see also id. at 34 (arguing that Plaintiffs' reliance on expert testimony to demonstrate how that antitrust impact can be proven on a classwide basis should be rejected because Plaintiffs' expert testimony is inadmissible under Daubert.).

III. Discussion

A. Daubert Motions

In support of their Motion for Class Certification, the Plaintiffs rely on the expert testimony of Drs. Solow and Williams. The Defendants have filed Daubert motions challenging the admissibility of both Drs. Williams' and Solow's [**145] opinions. Defendants have proffered the reports of two experts, [*359] Dr. Edward A. Snyder ("Snyder") and Dr. Pierre-Yves Cremieux ("Cremieux"), in support of their Daubert motions. Plaintiffs do not seek to exclude the testimony of Drs. Snyder and Cremieux. Because Plaintiffs' "expert testimony is both challenged and critical to class certification, the Court cannot grant certification without first engaging in the analysis required by Federal Rule of Evidence 702 ("Evidence Rule(s)") and Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmas.. Inc, 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993)." In re Delta/AirTran Baggage Fee Antitrust Litigation, 317 F.R.D. 675, 683 (N.D. Ga. 2016) (citing Local 703, I.B. of T. Grocery & Food Employees Welfare Fund v. Regions Fin. Corp., 762 F.3d 1248, 1258 n.7 (11th Cir. 2014)); see also Sher v. Raytheon Co., 419 F. App'x 887, 890 (11th Cir. 2011) ("[W]hen an expert's report or testimony is critical to class certification, . . . a district court must conclusively rule on any challenge to the expert's qualifications or submissions prior to ruling on a class certification motion." (citation omitted)); PB Prop. Mgmt. v. Goodman Mfg. Co., L.P., No. 3:12-cv-1366-HES-JBT, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97520, 2016 WL 7666179, at *9 (M.D. Fla. May 12, 2016).

Defendants assert that the Court is obliged at this juncture to resolve the "battle of the experts" and accept the opinions of their experts over those of Plaintiffs' experts. (See Docs. 674 at 18, 20; S-681 681 at 18, 20 (citing Sher, 419 F. App'x at 890).

In Sher, the Eleventh Circuit required the Court to "resolve any challenge to the reliability of information" presented in an expert's report which is [**146] being offered in support of a motion for class certification. Sher, 419 F. App'x at 890-91 (citation omitted). The Eleventh Circuit held that the district court erred as a matter of law "by not sufficiently evaluating and weighing conflicting expert testimony on class certification," and that it was "error for the district court to decline to declare a proverbial, yet tentative winner." Id. at 890. The court concluded that where an expert opinion necessary to class certification is challenged, such as in this case, the Court must perform a full Daubert analysis.

Under Daubert, this Court serves a gatekeeper role in evaluating the admissibility of expert evidence and testimony. In Kumho Tire Co., Ltd. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 141, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999), the Court explained "Daubert's general holding-setting forth the trial judge's general 'gatekeeping' obligation-applies not only to testimony based on 'scientific' knowledge, but also to testimony based on 'technical' and 'other specialized' knowledge." Id. Federal Rule of Evidence 702, governing the admissibility of expert evidence provides:

A witness who is qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education may testify in the form of an opinion or otherwise if:

- (a) the expert's scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will help the [**147] trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue;
- (b) the testimony is based on sufficient facts or data;
- (c) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods; and
- (d) the expert has reliably applied the principles and methods to the facts of the case.

Fed. R. Evid. 702; see also Daubert, 509 U.S. at 589-90. The Eleventh Circuit has adopted a three part analysis for determining whether expert testimony is admissible under Daubert and Federal Rule of Evidence 702. Under this analysis, expert evidence is admissible if the court finds: (1) the expert is competent and qualified to testify regarding the matters that he intends to address; (2) the methodology by which the expert reaches his conclusions is sufficiently reliable; and (3) the expert, through scientific, technical or specialized expertise, provides testimony that will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or determine a fact in issue. See Quiet Tech. DC-8, Inc. v. Hurel-Dubois UK Ltd., 326 F.3d 1333, 1340-41 (11th Cir. 2003) (citing City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcros Chems., Inc., 158 F.3d 548, 562 (11th Cir. 1998) (citing Daubert, 509 U.S. at 589)); Maiz v. Virani, 253 F.3d 641, 665 (11th Cir. 2001). In ruling on the admissibility of expert testimony, "[t]he focus must be 'solely' on the expert's 'principles and methodology, not on the conclusions [*360] that they generate.'" KW Plastics v. United States Can Co., 131 F. Supp. 2d 1289, 1292 (M.D. Ala. 2001) (quoting Daubert, 509 U.S. at 594-95). If the expert predicates his testimony on an assumption that is belied by the evidence, the expert's testimony [**148] is properly excluded. Ferguson v. Bombardier Servs. Corp., 244 Fed Appx. 944, 949 (11th Cir. 2007).

In the end, although rulings on admissibility under Daubert inherently require the trial court to conduct an exacting analysis of the proffered expert's methodology, . . . it is not the role of the district court to make ultimate conclusions as to the persuasiveness of the proffered evidence. . . . [A] district court's gatekeeper role under Daubert is not intended to supplant the adversary system or the role of the jury . . . . Quite the contrary, vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence. . . . By attempting to evaluate the credibility of opposing experts and the persuasiveness of competing scientific studies, the district court conflated the questions of the admissibility of expert testimony and the weight appropriately to be accorded such testimony by a fact finder.

Quiet Tech., 326 F.3d at 1341-42 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). The party offering the expert's testimony has the burden of proving that it is admissible by a preponderance of the evidence. Allison v. McGhan Med. Corp., 184 F.3d 1300, 1306 (11th Cir. 1999).

1. Dr. Solow

Dr. Solow has submitted an Expert Report, dated March 3, [**149] 2017, in support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. (Docs. 397; S-405) ("Solow Report"). In the Solow Daubert Motion, Defendants request that the Court strike Sections X and XI of the Solow Report "and preclude Dr. Solow from offering testimony regarding alleged collusion relating to any of the Manufacturer Defendants' unilateral proving policies ('UPPs')." (Docs. 500 at 6; S-531 at 6). Defendants characterize Sections X and XI as purporting "to conduct a 'common analysis of conduct' regarding the adoption of UPPs by the various Manufacturer Defendants in this suit, concluding that 'the manufacturers worked cooperatively with influential ECPs and/or ABB to design, promote, and enforce the policies,' including communications supposedly facilitated by Defendant ABB and the third-party Contact Lens Institute ('CLI')." (Doc. S-531 at 6 (citing Doc. S-405 at 39, 67-68, 73 (Solow Report ¶¶ 68, 119, 128))).

Defendants contend that Dr. Solow's opinions regarding alleged collusion are speculative and contrary to the evidence in the record inasmuch as there is "no evidence of direct communications between the Manufacturer Defendants regarding the supposed conspiracy," or indirect [*150] communications among the Manufacturer Defendant through ABB and CLI. (Docs 500 at 7; S-531 at 7). Defendants criticize Dr. Solow's methodology as unreliable, saying he relied upon a small number of documents handpicked by Plaintiffs' counsel, taking documents out of context, and failing to consider alternative explanations. Id. Defendants argue that Dr. Solow's opinion as "conspiracy advocate" would be of no assistance to the Court, because it does nothing more than review documents that the Court is capable of reviewing. Id. at 7-8. Defendants argue that Dr. Solow has no experience in the contact lens industry. Id. at 8.

a. The Solow Report

Dr. Solow is a professor of economics at the University of Iowa where he has been employed since 1981. He has taught courses in industrial organization, micro economics, and antitrust economics. (Docs. 397 at 4; S-405 at 4 (Solow Report ¶ 1)). He has been a visiting professor at Stanford University and the University of Auckland in New Zealand, has published numerous articles, and co-authored three volumes in a leading antitrust treatise. Id. ¶¶ 1, 2; (Doc. 399-2 ). He has offered economic expert testimony in antitrust litigation, including the MDL 1030 case. (Docs. [**151] 397 at 4-5; S-405 at 4-5); (Doc. 399-3). Dr. Solow states that he received the following directive from Plaintiffs' counsel:

[*361] 9. With respect to these proposed classes, I have been asked to focus on whether the liability elements of Plaintiffs' claims are subject to common economic proof. More specifically, my task is to investigate the structure, conduct and performance of the contact lens industry to determine: a) whether common economic proof is available to establish the antitrust liability elements of Plaintiffs' claims on a class-wide basis; and b) whether common economic proof is available to establish the causation elements of Plaintiffs' claims (also known as antitrust "impact") on a classwide basis.

Dr. Michael Williams is providing a separate expert report on how damages to members of the proposed classes can be demonstrated on a class wide basis through common evidence.

(Docs. 397 at 8; S-405 at 8 (Solow Report ¶ 9)). In preparing his Report, Dr. Solow reviewed pleadings filed, including Plaintiffs' Complaint; business documents produced by the parties; publicly available information about the contact lens industry; trade publications; Federal Trade Commission reports regarding [**152] the contact lens industry; federal statutes and regulations regulating the contact lens industry; and pricing and other statistical data. Id. at 6-10 (Solow Report ¶¶ 10, 12-32). Based upon his review, Dr. Solow concludes:

- a) Common economic evidence can be used to support Plaintiffs' allegations of collusive conduct by Defendants. A number of economic factors are conducive to and consistent with the coordinated pricing policies that Plaintiffs have alleged. This economic evidence is common to the proposed classes, that is, all members of the classes would present this type of evidence and benefit from it.
- b) Economic evidence shows that the alleged conspiracy would have been widely and generally successful, impacting all or nearly all members of the proposed classes in that all customers would have paid higher prices than they would have in the absence of the conduct. In particular, the economic structure, conduct and performance of the industry was consistent with coordinated behavior having widespread impact on disposable contact lens prices paid by customers. This evidence can be used by all class members as proof of the causation (or antitrust "impact") element of their claims.

Id. ¶ 11; see [**153] also id. ¶ 67 (Based upon his review of the materials listed, and his "knowledge of the contact industry, it is my opinion as an economist that the wholesale market for replacement disposable contact lenses was in the relevant time period conducive to cooperative behavior coordinated by one or more representatives of the ECPs, as occurred previously."). Dr. Solow further opined:

157. Based on the foregoing, I believe from my analysis of industry structure, conduct, and performance that (I) the characteristics of the disposable contact lens market were conducive to collusion during the relevant period and (ii) there is sufficient evidence and methods from which Plaintiffs could show that the impact from Defendants' conduct was common and widespread to all, or virtually all, of the members of the proposed Classes. Moreover, I believe that the analysis used to establish the foregoing could be applied uniformly to all of the members of the Classes [footnote omitted].

158. To summarize, the following categories of economic analysis and opinion can be used to establish liability and damages in this litigation for all class members: (I) market structure analysis of the contact lens industry; [**154] (ii) analysis explaining the basic economics of minimum resale price maintenance in general and its application in the contact lens industry in particular; and (iii) analysis of conduct and economic performance in the contact lens industry during the relevant period, including the nature, timing, and communications surrounding resale price maintenance, the corresponding trends in pricing over time, and econometric analysis showing widespread impact.

It should be noted that since (a) discovery is not complete and (b) my analysis to [*362] date has focused on class certification issues (that is, whether common economic proof is available regarding the elements of Plaintiffs' claims), my opinions may be supplemented or amended as discovery proceeds and as I conduct further analysis.

Id. Dr. Solow offers no opinion on the legality of Defendants' alleged conduct. (Doc. S-405 at 40, 42, 45, 65-66 (Solow Report ¶¶ 71, 75, 80, 116)). At the evidentiary hearing, Dr. Solow provided an overview of his findings, supported by citation to evidence in the record.

Concerning the genesis of Defendants' UPPs, Dr. Solow [**155] testified that the implementation of the UPPs came about as a response to ECPs' concerns about the difficulties in competing with alternative contact lens distributors who sold contact lenses at lower margins. (Doc. 866 at 65-66). He testified that, at least three years before Alcon announced the first UPP, influential ECPs—"ones who had the ear of the manufacturers"—lobbied Defendants to set minimum retail prices for their products. Id. The idea, according to Dr. Solow, was that if the ECPs could successfully convince one manufacturer to adopt a minimum retail price, it could be leveraged by the ECPs against the remaining manufacturers, who would be pressured to adopt a minimum retail price themselves, or risk losing the ECPs' business. Id. at 67, 70. Dr. Solow supported these assertions with reference to evidence in the record; specifically the emails of Dr. Barry Eiden, an influential ECP and member of Alcon's Global Professional Affairs Advisory Board. In the emails, Dr. Eiden takes some credit for Alcon's decision to implement a UPP, and thought that the other manufacturers would be forced to follow suit or risk losing business. (Id. at 69-70).

Regarding the market impact of the UPPs, Dr. Solow testified [**156] that Defendants' adoption of minimum retail prices eased the competitive pressures ECPs were facing from low-cost competitors. Id. at 73-74. He stated that whether or not individual ECPs knew about (or chose to comply with) the UPPs was irrelevant in evaluating the market impact of the policy; that lower-priced sellers of contact lenses were required to raise their prices allowed individual ECPs to also raise their prices without the risk of losing a substantial amount of customers. Id. at 74.

Dr. Solow also testified regarding whether any competitive justifications existed for Defendants' implementation of UPPs. Dr. Solow suggested that while UPPs might be pro-competitive in certain contexts, those considerations were absent in this case:

[T]he impetus for this policy was to restrain competition between Internet sellers and the big box sellers on the one hand, and independent ECPs on the other who felt that they could not -- they couldn't make any money at those prices.

And in a competitive market, if you can't make money against your competitors, then you probably shouldn't be in that business. But here, [the ECPs] reached out to the manufacturers and said: Handicap those people for us. Make -- level [**157] the playing field. Make it so that they can't out-compete us, and then we can make money.

Id. at 81.

Defendants, in their Daubert motion, seek to exclude Sections X and XI of the Solow Report, which examine the circumstances of each Manufacturer's adoption of a UPP and the roles of ABB and the CLI in the alleged antitrust conspiracy.

1) Section X

Section X of Dr. Solow's Report is entitled "Common Analysis of Conduct in the Contact Lens Industry." (Doc. 397 at 39); (Doc. S-405 at 39). Dr. Solow recounts how the four Manufacturer Defendants adopted UPPs seriatim, starting on June 1, 2013, with Alcon, followed in February 2014 by B&L, June 2014 by JJVC, and September 2014 by CV. (Doc. S-405 at 39 (Solow Report ¶ 68 (citing Doc. S-410-8, S-410-9, 5-410-10, 410-11))). He opines that "the manufacturers worked cooperatively with influential ECPs and/or ABB to design, promote, and enforce the policies," and that ABB advocated for the adoption of minimum resale price maintenance to B&L, JJVC, and CV following Alcon's introduction of its UPP. Id. (Solow Report ¶ 68). Dr. Solow starts with a discussion of Alcon's introduction of a UPP in 2013, [*363] in the face of "flat to minimum growth." (Doc. S-397 at 39 [**158] (Solow Report ¶ 69 (quoting Doc. S-410-6 at 2))). Dr. Solow cites to evidence that Alcon was being pressured by ECPs prior to the introduction of UPPs in June 2013. (Doc. S-650 at 18-20 (Solow Supp. Report ¶¶ 37-42 (citing Docs. S-661-86, S-661-87, S-661-88, S-661-89, S-661-90, S-661-91, S-661-92))). Alcon introduced UPPs as part of the introduction of its new DAILIES TOTALI® ("DTI") lenses on June 1, 2013. (See Doc. S-405 at 39 (Solow Report ¶ 69)). Alcon's General Manager Jim Murphy, in an April 12, 2013 presentation, announced that the UPP "is designed to alleviate focus on price and allow for features and benefits to become the focus," which will "lead the contact lens market back to more of a medical market model where the doctor and manufacturer share the responsibility for care, education and patient liability." (Doc. S-410-6 at 17); (See also Doc. S-405 at 39-40 (Solow Report ¶ 70)). Alcon recognized the need to have "legal footing" for its UPP, and that merely "suggesting" a price would "not get followed." (Doc. S-405 at 40 (Solow Report ¶ 71 (quoting Docs. S-410-12 at 1, S-410-13, and 410-14 at 1))). Dr. Solow reviewed communications between Alcon representatives and ECPs [**159] regarding pricing and ECPs, including the creation of an ECP advisory board for the planning and introduction of a "minimum retail price." Id. at 40-44 (Solow Report ¶¶ 72-77 (citing Docs. S-410-15 at 1-2, S-410-16, S-410-17 at 1, Doc. S-410-18, Doc. S-410-19)). He cites to documentation that ECPs signed UPP pricing agreements with Alcon. Id. at 45-46 (Solow Report ¶ 80 (citing Docs. S-410-24, S-410-25 at 2, S-410-26, S-410-27 at 3, S-410-28 at 1)). Alcon also sought to elicit the support of ABB in its communication with ECPs regarding the sale of contact lenses on a monthly payment plan. Id. at 46 (Solow Report ¶ 81 (citing Doc. S-410-29)). For example, after receiving a complaint from an ECP that a discount retailer was selling an Alcon lens at less than the UPP price, Alcon "responded by telling ABB not to sell to [the discount retailer]." Id. at 46-47 (Solow Report ¶ 82 (citing Docs. S-410-30; S-410-31; S-410-32)). ABB also notified Alcon about retailers selling Alcon lenses below the UPP price. Id. at 47 (Solow Report ¶ 83 (citing Doc. S-410-33)). Subsequently, Alcon extended UPPs to DAILIES® Aqua Comfort Plus® Multifocal and DAILIES® Aqua Comfort Plus® Toric contact lenses. Id. at 45 (Solow Report ¶ 79 (citing Doc. 410-22 at 2)). In April [**160] 2014, Alcon adopted UPPs for AIR OPTIX® COLORS contact lenses, and "raised wholesale prices by 10% on its older non-UPP products in order to 'encourage migration' to the UPP products" which was the new technology. Id. (Solow Report ¶ 79 (quoting Doc. 410-23 at 9)).

B&L implemented a UPP in February, 2014, for its ULTRA™ line of contact lenses. (Doc. S-405 at 48 (Solow Report ¶ 85 (citing Doc. S-410-9))). B&L received feedback from ECPs in support of UPPS. Id. at 48-49 (Solow Report ¶ 87 (citing Docs. S-410-36; S-410-37)). In adopting its UPP, B&L communicated with ECPs:

Eliminating Internet: No longer have to compete on pricing without Uniform Pricing Policy. Ultra Lens will not be priced below $60. . . .

Id. at 49 (Solow Report ¶ 88 (quoting Doc. S-410-38)). ECPs communicated with B&L about violations of UPPs, and B&L took action; "we need to be relentless in addressing these [complaints] when they come up." (Doc. S-410-124); (see also Doc. S-405 at 50 (Solow Report ¶ 89 (citing Docs. S-410-124; S-410-40 at 5-6; S-410-41))).

Still in Section X of his Report, Dr. Solow then provides an overview of JJVC's adoption of UPPs for its products in June 2014, at the same time that it discontinued contact lens lines [**161] that would not be subject to a UPP. (Doc. S-405 at 50-57 (Solow Report ¶¶ 90-102 (citing Doc. S-410-10))). JJVC adopted UPPs for the following contact lines: 1-Day ACUVUE® MOIST®, 1-Day ACUVUE® MOIST® for ASTIGMATISM, 1-Day ACUVUE® TruEye®, ACUVUE® OASYS® with HRDRACLEAR®, ACUVUE® OASYS® for ASTIGMATISM, and ACUVUE® OASYS® for PRESBYOPIA. Id. at 50 (Solow Report ¶ 90 (citing Doc. S-410-42)). Leading up to the implementation of UPPs in the summer of 2014, JJVC received its private consultant's Vision Care Pricing Strategy Assessment dated July 22, 2013, which included an assessment of "competitive [*364] pricing strategies" and "pricing philosophies." (Doc. S-410-44 at 1, 4); (see also Doc. S-405 at 51 (Solow Report ¶ 91)). JJVC considered creating an ECP advisory board in August 2013, (Doc. 5-405 at 51 (Solow Report ¶ 91 (citing Doc. S-410-43))), and created a presentation with ABB, dated March 19, 2014, entitled "Partnership for Category Growth," which included a page listing a UPP price increase for ACUVUE® OASYS®. Id. at 51 (Solow Report ¶ 92 (citing Doc. S-410-45 at 1, 13)). Dr. Carol Alexander, Director of Professional Affairs at JJVC met with ECPs on April 11, 2014. and reported on the positive response [**162] of practitioners to Alcon's UPP, stating:

1. Overwhelmingly positive response by practitioners in private practices and schools as it "levels the playing field, and CL [contact lens] conversations can now center on the care and the product - not the price. We no longer have to justify what we charge for lenses or compete to keep the patient by lowering our prices."

Id. at 47 (Solow Report ¶ 84 (quoting Doc. S-410-34 at 1-2)). An April 16, 2014 JJVC presentation stated that the "Benefits of UPP" included:

- Removes patient incentive to shop online or with big box retailers
- Brings patient sale back to prescribing ECP's office
- Returns revenue back to appreciative ECPs
- Enables manufacturers to regain control of product pricing

The presentation also discussed the "significant risk of NOT enforcing violations promptly." (Doc. S-410-46 at 4, 10); (see also Doc. S-405 at 51-52 (Solow Report ¶ 92)). In May, 2014, a JJVC presentation recounted that Today, many of [JJVC'S] OASYS contracts and pricing are inconsistent. JJVC has long been interested in standardizing its pricing across the brand and recent introductions of Unilateral Pricing Policies (UPP) by competitors have increased pressure to make this change [**163] sooner rather than later.

(Doc. S-405 at 52 (Solow Report ¶ 92 (quoting Doc. S-410-47 at 3))). JJVC studied Alcon's UPP pricing strategy. Id. at 52 (Solow Report ¶ 92 (citing Doc. S-410-48 at 1-2)). Dr. Solow observes that "[a]s it was considering adoption of UPPs, [JJVC] hired DDP, a third-party, to conduct detailed interviews of personnel who were formerly employed at Alcon and B&L, and who had knowledge about how those respective companies implemented UPPs." Id. at 45, 49 (Solow Report ¶¶ 80, 88) (citing Doc. S-410-24)). In June, 2014, Laura Angelini, former President of JJVC, wrote in a letter to ECPs, that JJVC had six months earlier had asked for ECPs' feedback on pricing strategy, and that JJVC, in response, implemented the changes the ECPs said were needed. Angelini wrote that to "further demonstrate [JJVC's] commitment to prescribers," JJVC was announcing the implementation of its new pricing strategy in the United States, including a UPP. Id. at 52-53 (Solow Report ¶ 93 (quoting Doc. S-410-49 at 2-4)); (see also Doc. S-410-50 at 8 (December 14, 2014 Angelini letter confirming that JJVC had asked for ECP feedback "one year ago")). JJVC received a positive response to the UPPs from the ECPs. (Doc. 5-405 at [**164] 53-54 (Solow Report ¶¶ 95, 96 (citing Docs. S-410-51 at 2; S-410-52, S-410-53)).

JJVC also worked with ABB in connection with JJVC's implementation of the UPPs. On June 19, 2014, Michael Dari, Vice President of sales for ABB, wrote in an email that he "just got [JJVC] to commit to provide us ALL of their communications so we will be sending it to the field by tomorrow." (Doc. S-410-54 at 1); (see also Doc. S-405 at 54 (Solow Report ¶ 97)). Jack Jenkins, director of strategic accounts at ABB wrote to Dari that he had spoken with "the [JJVC] management team" on June 19, 2014, regarding JJVC's new pricing policy and transitioning to UPP covered products, and that "ABB cover half targets and [JJVC] the other half." (Doc. S-410-54 at 1-2); (see also Doc. S-410-55 at 1 (Dari with ABB on June 3, 2014: "We are working through plans with VK [JJVC] now."); Doc. S-410-39 (Dari with ABB on June 4, 2014: "I am working with VK to come up with a plan."); Doc. S-410-56 at 1-2 (June 11, 2014 e-mail chain conversation between Dari with ABB and Angel Alvarez, Chief [*365] Executive Officer of ABB, regarding ABB's efforts to boost JJVC sales and the "Significant decline in overall pricing/margin of VK [JJVC] [**165] products," by focusing on Oasys 24-pack pricing and selling annual supplies, noting that the "UPP should keep the patient from shopping BUT this completely removes them from the market." Alvarez responded that Dari "please align with Vistakon [JJVC] sales management."); (Doc. S-410-57 (June 20, 2014 email recounting meeting notes and key points of a meeting between JJVC and ABB representatives, including JJVC providing ABB "more detailed information for [ABB] to communicate to the sales team on UPP pricing" and JJVC "will be conducting third party monitoring on the UPP pricing program."). Dr. Solow states that "[t]here is also evidence that [JJVC] and ABB acted co-operatively to enforce UPPs, citing to JJVC's use of ABB's publication Retail Price Monitor, and ABB reports about retailers selling below the UPP price as a "violation of detection tool[s]." (Doc. S-405 at 57 (Solow Report ¶ 102 (citing Docs. S-410 57, S-410-70, S-410-71, S-410-72, S-410-73, S-410-74, S-410-76, S-410-77, S-410-78, S-410-123)). He notes that JJVC "shared 'Do Not Sell' customer lists with ABB for such violations." Id. at 57 (Solow Report ¶ 102 (citing S-410-78 at 3)).

JJVC adjusted and modified its UPPs several times [**166] during the summer of 2014 in response to concerns from customers and retailers. (Doc. S-405 at 55 (Solow Report ¶ 98). For example, Dr. Solow recounts that in response to concerns by discount club retailer reseller Costco Wholesale Corporation ("Costco"), JJVC, working with Costco, announced on October 5, 2014, a "Club Channel Exception" to the UPPs that permitted a 10% discount at club stores which could be used on products other than contact lenses. Id. at 56 (Solow Report ¶ 99 (citing Docs. S-410-60, S-410-65, S-410-66, S-410-89)).

JJVC eventually discontinued the UPP in April 2016. In the run-up to announcing the UPP "retirement," JJVC director of professional communications Dr. Carol Alexander wrote to her colleagues at JJVC regarding who to announce the shift:

In our advocacy efforts the story that we use around [JJVC] embraced the UPP as a good one, i.e. because we realized our prices were too high in the market place and we reset wholesale prices, and implemented UPP to draw retail prices down. It worked. The tough part is that in 1:1 sales meetings we may have sold the UPP in to customers as a "gift to the IECP". And it is those customers that are going to feel distrustful.

[W]e know [**167] that retail price differences were at times 40% lower at Costco than the independent channel. Even with UPP we unsettled trust a bit when we allowed Costco to offer additional deals within the warehouse further incenting [sic] patients to buy in that channel.

(Doc. S-410-68 at 1); (see also Doc. S-661-53 at 3 (referring to JJVC "ECP [Wholesale] Reset Required Given New Market Reality" expected to "Breakeven" in 2.3 years")).

In September 2014, CooperVision, Inc. ("CV") made the decision to maintain a UPP for its Clariti contact lens line which it acquired through its August 2014 purchase of Sauflon, another contact lens manufacturer that had instituted a UPP on the Clariti lenses. (Doc. S-405 at 58 (Solow Report ¶ 103 (citing Doc. S-410-11)). Despite initial reservations about the wisdom of enacting a UPP, CV elected to continue with the UPP on Clariti. (Doc. S-405 at 59 (Solow Report ¶¶ 106, 107)). Dr. Solow cites to evidence that CV consulted with ECPs regarding the implementation of UPPs on its contact lens lines, and that ECPs "pressured" CV to adopt UPPs. Id. at 59-65 (Solow Report ¶¶ 107-113 (citing Docs. S-410-84 (September 25, 2013 internal CV email exchange about ECPs wanting CV to consider [**168] adopting a UPP and that "some ECPs are embracing this policy"), S-410-85 (April 28, 2014 internal CV e-mail reporting that ECPs were in "unanimous agreement that UPP provides a very positive benefit to their practices," and that they "strongly urge [CV] to adopt this policy as we release new products."), 399-111 (CV President Robert Atkinson testifying before a Congressional subcommittee on July 31, 2014 regarding optometrists' "professional collusion" in conveying their "desire to prescribe UPP lens"), S-410-86 (June 25, 2014 email from the president of United Eye [*366] Care Providers to CV's president of North America operations, regarding an informal survey of Chicago area ECPs who "have mentioned they are forming 'closer ties' to the companies embracing UPP, and even two have used the word 'boycott' of companies that are not actively moving in that direction."), S-410-87 (notes regarding a September 2014 conversation with owner of internet retailer lens.com that "a group of ECP's are threatening [CV] with the possibility of not prescribing [CV] products unless [CV] adopts a UPP approach."), S-410-88 (July 30, 2014 email in which CV's Dennis Murphy wrote to ABB that "ECPs are starting [**169] to view UPP vendors as champions of the cause," and of CV's "need to let some pressure out of the UPP issue."), S-410-90 (September 2014 CV internal memo reporting on CV's consultation with ECPs regarding UPPs, finding that ECPs are "favorable or somewhat favorable on UPP," and while "not negative" on CV, they "question [CV's] reluctance" to adopt a UPP), S-410-91 (September 21, 2014 internal CV memo discussing loss of sales and damage to reputation among "accounts"), 399-118 (September 19, 2014 CV announcement of UPP for Clariti contact lens line announcing CV "held 12 focus groups and spoke with 100 ECPs, who felt UPP was consistent with helping them maintain their relationships with their patients"), 399-119 at 2 (CV President stating in a September 19, 2014 article that "[t]here was a strong voice that UPP is an important requirement for independent eyecare practitioners. . . . It was important that we understood the voice of the independents, and we're responding to it."), S-410-93 (October 2014 survey finding "most" ECPs view UPP in a positive light."))). Dr. Solow cites to a post-UPP March 2015 CV analysis of UPPs concluding that the "Anticipated Benefits" from the UPP were: [**170]

- Seen as Protecting the ECP's Price Point from substantial internet or Mass Merchandisers as it relates to retail sell price

- Seen as eliminating the threat from "Mom and Pop" internet retailers.
- Demonstrates [contact lens] Share Leaders are dedicated to the ECP in the States.
- Encompasses the Distributor Channel.
- Protects margins for the Contact Lens company - Alcon one price for all with Total 1.

(Doc. S-405 at 65-66 (Solow Report ¶ 115 (citing Doc. S-410-95 at 2). The same analysis listed the "Potential Downsides" of the UPP:

- Does not control the Gray Market which is the biggest source of downward pressure on ECP price management. Internet sites will still be an issue in under cutting retail prices.
- Competitive Pressures for ECP's and retailers will be significant with today's consumer.
- Enforcement will be complex and challenging on a global scale
- Consumer activism may generate government review and potential legal action
- Ensuring the local representations does not resolve or address breaches in the UPP
- Applying UPP's to [contact lenses] already in the market with various price points.
- Global price coordination.

2) Section XI

Defendants seek to exclude Section XI of Dr. Solow's [[**171]] Report, which is entitled "The Roles of ABB and the Contact Lens Institute." In this Section, Dr. Solow opines that ABB "facilitat[ed] collusion" through "inter-firm communications, either through intermediaries or directly through meetings." (Docs. 397 at 67; S-405 at 67). ABB is "America's leading authorized distributor of all major soft contact lens manufactured permeable contact lenses," serving "nearly two-thirds of eye care practitioners nationwide." (Doc. S-399-7 at 1 (ABB promotional material)). The Third Quarter 2014 issue of ABB's publication "The Profit Advisor, Business Strategies for ABB Optical Group Customers," reports that "UPP Brings a Fundamental Shift to [*367] the Industry," that "can level the playing field," and that "Most ABB Optical Group Accounts Say They Welcome UPP." (Doc. S-410-20 at 3-4). Dr. Solow quotes the "Profit Advisor" article as recommending that ECPs price their contact lenses above the UPP price by "several dollars" and promise to match any legitimate price on the contact lens because "'You already know what the price is; it's the UPP price,'" and the competition is bound by the UPP price or "run the risk of being unable to purchase lenses from that [[**172]] manufacturer. . . . As a result of UPP, . . . the prescribing practitioner will be able to retain a higher percentage of patient revenue.'" (Doc. S-405 at 69-70 (Solow Report ¶ 122 (citing Doc. S-410-20 at 3)).

Dr. Solow opines that the evidence suggests "that ABB coordinated the adoption of UPPs by the four manufacturers." (Docs. S-405 at 70-71 (Solow Report ¶ 124 (citing Docs. 410-105 (a June 19, 2014 e-mail in which Angel Alvarez, chief executive officer of ABB states that "[w]e have worked hard with manufacturers to develop Universal Product Pricing, UPP, that will not allow any group, including managed care, to under sell the prescribing practitioner."), S-410-106 (September 22, 2014 e-mail from ABB director of marketing Aaron See to Alvarez asking for approval of a proposed quote: "ABB has been working closely with manufacturers to develop Unilateral Pricing Policies, which we believe enables a better overall patient experience, by supporting competitiveness of prescribing practitioners," which was apparently approved and was published in October 2014.))). (See also Doc. 399-136 at 3)); (Doc. S-397 (Solow Report ¶ 119 (citing Doc. S-410-1 at 3 (In a July 2015 analysis Alcon [[**173]] set as a goal to "[c]ollaborate externally' and '[s]upport ABB and other distributors in their service and support of ECP sales growth."))).

Dr. Solow also opines that "ABB also apparently played a central role in the implementation of UPPs." (Doc. S-405 at 71 (Solow Report ¶ 124 (citing Doc. 410-107 at 2 (a July 18, 2014 email in which ABB shares with JJVC its strategy to advise ECPs regarding suggested retail pricing with the "UPP as the lowest price and use it as needed."))). On June 24, 2014, Angel Alvarez with ABB wrote:

Concerning UPP...it's a classic brand protection move by the manufacturers to protect their products from becoming a low cost commodity. The bottom line is that there is real time and effort (cost) in fitting contact lenses and this move is to protect the industry by making sure that the prescribing practitioners keep engaged in the effort. No reason to fit contacts if you cannot make any money . . . I'm a huge fan and have been lobbying for years for UPP!!

(Doc. S-661-64 at 4). On June 19, 2014, Mr. Alvarez wrote: "We have worked hard with the manufacturers to develop Universal Product Pricing, UPP, that will not allow any group, including managed care, to under [**174] sell the prescribing practitioner." (Doc. S-661-156 at 2). On September 22, 2014, Mr. Alvarez approved a statement for an optometry trade publication that "ABB has been working closely with manufacturers to develop Unilateral Pricing Policies, which we believe enables a better overall patient experience, by supporting competitiveness of prescribing practitioners." (Doc. S-661-157 at 2); (see also Docs. S-661-162 at 3; S-661-147 at 4). Dr. Solow cites to evidence in which ABB and the Manufacturer Defendants refer to each other as "partners" and had a "cooperative relationship." (Doc. S-405 at 72-73 (Solow Report ¶¶ 126, 127 (citing Docs. 410-109 at 1 (September 16, 2013 email from B&L to ABB thanking ABB for hosting B&L's team and "providing an overview of ABB's business and the partnership with B&L"), S-410-110 at 1 (September 18, 2013 email in which B&L executive said "I have calls into ABB to understand how our competitors tackle this one," referring to locking in large customers who do not buy inventory), S-410-111 at 2 (January 22, 2015 B&L internal e-mail regarding ABB giving B&L confidential market share data and the need to keep the ABB source of the material confidential [**175] as being from a "third party," in accordance with "the contract with ABB"), S-410-45 (JJVC presentation dated March 19, 2014 titled "Partnership for Category Growth" between JJVC and ABB), S-410-113 (April 7, 2014 JJVC powerpoint presentation about [*368] Oasys in which JJVC states that it is "[p]artnering with external supplier to monitor compliance with pricing policy"), S-410-114 at 1-2 (July 17, 2014 email regrading the "CooperVision/ABB Visit, July 15, 2014," in which ABB's head of sales Mike Dari states to CV that "[o]ur sales team looks forward to partnering with Cooper in new ways," and that"[w]e will continue to elevate our communication to the sales team so we see the right level of mutual partnership" to which CV replied "it [is] great to see so much mutual opportunity."))).

Dr. Solow opines that in addition to ABB, the Manufacturer Defendants used the CLI (Contact Lens Institute) "to coordinate their activity." (Doc. S-405 at 73 (Solow Report ¶ 128)). CLI "represents[s] the interests of its members,' (Does. 397 at 73; S-405 at 73 (Solow Report ¶ 128 (quoting Doc. 399-146))), and its board of directors consists of one executive from each of the four Defendant Manufacturers. Id. [**176] (Solow Report ¶ 128 (citing Doc. 399-147)). Dr. Solow cites to the CLI website which discusses CLI's quarterly statistical program to provide participants with consolidated market data including "manufacturer shipment data of Contact Lens . . . products," id. at 73-74 (Solow Report ¶ 129 (citing Doc. 399-149 at 2)). He states that "the CLI Board encourages members of the CLI committees and board from each company to communicate with each other.' (Doc. S-405 at 74 (Solow Report ¶ 129 (quoting Doc. 410-64 at 3 (CLI Meeting Minutes dated March 27, 2013)))). In 2014, CLI created a new "Category Growth and Market Creation Committee," with the objective to develop "a plan to help improve trend/growth in the overall market for contact lenses." Id. at 75 (Solow Report ¶ 133 (quoting Doc. S-410-115 at 1 (April 10, 2014 (CLI conference call minutes))). Among the strategies discussed was focusing on ECPs, "so a united CLI approach could look very good to that audience." (Doc. S-410-115 at 2) (see also Doc. S-405 at 75 (Solow Report ¶ 133)). In June, 2014, the Committee discussed the ECP campaign as being positive; "[s]uch a campaign was also felt to provide a positive message for ECPs that CLI members are working together to have an impact on the overall market." (Doc. S-405 at 76 (Solow Report ¶ 133 (quoting Doc. S-410-104 at 3 (June 3, 2014 conference call minutes)))). The Committee members circulated notes regarding the "ECP campaign" with the "objective" of a "united front of four major manufacturers to inspire ECPs to proactively pursue opportunities to fit [contact lenses] so that their patients and practice will benefit." Id. (Solow Report ¶ 133 (quoting Doc. S-410-117 at 8)).

b. Defendants' Arguments

Defendants contend that aside from citing to a "hodgepodge" of documents, Dr. Solow does not support his testimony with record evidence. They argue that Dr. Solow rendered his opinion prior to reading any deposition testimony, or speaking with any ECPs or the named class members. (Doc. S-531 at 9 (citing Doc. 532-1 at 19-20, 33-34 (Solow Dep. at 18-19,32-33))). Citing to Dr. Solow's deposition testimony, Defendants state that Dr. Solow "admits" that he has seen no direct evidence that any communications among any of the Manufacturer Defendants took place - whether facilitated by third parties through ABB and ECPs or not. Id. at 9, 25-26 (citing Doc. 532-1 at 35-36, 40, 42, 44-45, 49-50, 60-61, 66 (Solow Dep. at 92-93, 95-97, 99, 101-102, 106-107, 114-116, 123-125, 139, 153-154, 192, 217)). They argue that the Solow Report is not based on reliable methodology. [**177] (Docs. 500 at 11; S-531 at 11-12), and that he "misrepresents the record" and cites evidence out of context regarding the Manufacturer Defendants' adoption of UPPs and communications between the Manufacturer Defendants. (Doc. S-531 at 17-27). Defendants also contend that in rendering his opinions, Dr. Solow ignored the "broader story" found in the record of the Manufacturer Defendants "myriad" of legitimate reasons for adopting UPPs, including support of new contact lens technology, simplifying price structure by eliminating rebates to increase "transparency." (See Doc. S-531 at 21, 23) (citing Docs. S-532-10 (fact sheet regarding B&L UPP), S-532-5 at 10-16 (Donley Dep. at 305-309, 319-20), S-532-11 at 5-6 (Sommer Dep. at 72-73), S-532-14 at 4-5 (Miura Dep. at 296-297), S-532-15 at 5-7 (Helms Dep. at 51-52,60), S-532-16 at 9 (JJVC presentation))).

[*369] Defendants argue that Dr. Solow's opinions are not based upon "reliable or scientifically valid methodology," because he relied upon only "a small subset of documents - most of which were pre-selected for him by Plaintiffs' counsel," and he "ignores the vast majority of the record evidence." (Doc. S-531 at 12). They cite to Dr. Solow's deposition [**178] testimony that he reviewed 380 documents out of 600,000 documents produced, and that he has spoken only with Plaintiffs' counsel and with Dr. Williams. (Doc. S-531 at 13-14 (citing Doc. S-532-1 at 19-20 (Solow Dep. at 18-19) and Doc. S-405 at 89 (Solow Dep. Appendix)). Defendants also criticize Dr. Solow's Report as being "rife with errors and factual misinterpretations of the evidence," and devoid of citation to any evidence providing any details of the alleged antitrust conspiracy. (Doc. S-531 at 12, 16). Defendants argue that Dr. Solow is nothing more than "Plaintiffs' 'conspiracy' advocate." (Docs. 500 at 7; S-531 at 7).

c. Plaintiff's Response

Plaintiffs respond that the purpose of Dr. Solow's Report and opinion at this stage of the litigation is "only to determine 'whether the liability elements of Plaintiffs' claims are subject to common economic proof.'" (Docs. 549 at 13; S-558 at 13 (citing Docs 397 at 8; S-405 at 8 (Solow Report ¶ 9)). Plaintiffs contend that Dr. Solow's opinion is not due to be stricken as inadmissible under Daubert because Dr. Solow did not view all 600,000 documents in the record at the time of the Report. (Docs. 549 at 15; S-558 at 15). Additionally, [**179] Plaintiffs cite to Dr. Solow's deposition testimony in which he stated that he reviewed documents not only pointed out by Plaintiffs' attorneys, but also documents he located on the case database as well as from a search for documents on his own. (Doc. S-558 at 16 (citing Doc. 532-1 at 20 (Solow Dep. at 19))).

d. Discussion

1) Competence

The Eleventh Circuit observes that "experts may be qualified in various ways." United States v. Frazier, 387 F.3d 1244, 1260 (11th Cir. 2004). "While scientific training or education may provide possible means to qualify, experience in a field may offer another path to expert status." Id. at 1260-61 ("expert status may be based on 'knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education.'" (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 702 (emphasis omitted))). The "proposed expert testimony must be supported by appropriate validation - i.e., "good grounds," based on what is known." Id. at 1261 (quoting Daubert, 509 U.S. at 590). "Determining whether a witness is qualified to testify as an expert requires the trial court to examine the credentials of the proposed expert in light of the subject matter of the proposed testimony." Feliciano v. City of Miami Beach, 844 F. Supp. 2d 1258, 1262 (S.D. Fla. 2012) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

Dr. Solow satisfies the qualification requirement. Based on his training and experience, Dr. Solow is qualified as an expert to [**180] testify regarding whether common economic proof is available to establish antitrust liability and causation of economic damages to a class of Plaintiffs. (See Docs. 397 at 7; S-405 at 7 (Solow Report ¶ 9)). He has extensive education, and teaching and writing experience in the fields of industrial organization, microeconomics, and antitrust economics. He has been qualified as an expert and has offered economic expert testimony in antitrust litigation, including the MDL 1030 case. Defendants' do not mount a serious challenge to Dr. Solow's qualifications.

2) Reliability (Methodology)

When an expert's proposed testimony is scientific in nature, "the trial judge must assess 'whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and ... whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts at issue.'" Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1261-62 (quoting Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592-93). The Eleventh Circuit considers the following non-exhaustive factors when evaluating the reliability of scientific expert opinion:

- (1) whether the expert's theory can be and has been tested; (2) whether the theory has been subjected to peer review and \*370 publication; (3) the known or potential rate of error of the particular scientific \*\*181 technique; and (4) whether the technique is generally accepted in the scientific community.

Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1262 (citation omitted). "The Frazier Court went on to explain that "[s]ometimes the specific Daubert factors will aid in determining reliability; sometimes other questions may be more useful." PB Prop. Mgmt., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97520, 2016 WL 7666179, at \*8 (quoting Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1262).

"Scientific evidence encompasses so-called hard sciences (such as physics, chemistry, mathematics and biology) as well as soft sciences (such as economics, psychology, and sociology), and it may be offered by persons with scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge whose skill, experience, training, or education may assist the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or determining a fact in issue."

Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1261 n.14 (quoting William W. Schwarzer & Joe S. Cecil, "Management of Expert Evidence," Reference Manual on Scientific Evidence 39 (Federal Judicial Center, 2d ed. 2000)). "The trial judge has 'considerable leeway' in deciding the reliability of expert testimony, but importantly, 'what remains constant is the requirement that the trial judge evaluate the reliability of the testimony before allowing its admission at trial' in every case." PB Prop. Mgmt., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97520, 2016 WL 7666179, at \*8 (quoting Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1262).

Defendants argue that Dr. \*\*182 Solow's citation to the record is inaccurate. For example, Defendants argue that Alcon adopted a UPP to support its innovative new contact lens and bring back "drop out" consumers to the contact lens market. (Doc. S-531 at 18 (citing Doc. S-410-6 at 4)). Defendants fail to address the UPP portion of that same Alcon slide show report in which Alcon's general manager Jim Murphy states that Alcon's UPP "is designed to alleviate focus on price and allow for features and benefits to become the focus," which will "lead the contact lens market back to more of a medical market model where the doctor and manufacturer share the responsibility for care, education and patient liability." (Doc. S-410-6 at 17). The latter slide tends to support Dr. Solow's conclusion that Alcon adopted UPPs to "incentivize ECPs to prescribe its new lenses." (Doc. S-405 at 39 (Solow Report ¶ 70)). To be sure, Dr. Solow appears to overstate that an e-mail chain between Alcon, ABB and an influential ECP was directed at "implementing and enforcing UPPS." (See Doc. S-405 at 46 (Solow Report ¶ 81 (citing Doc. S-410-29))). However, the interchange was concerning monthly payment plans for ECPs, and illustrates that Alcon, \*\*183 ABB and ECPs collaborated regarding pricing options.

Defendants criticize Dr. Solow's deposition testimony in which he observes that B&L's announcement of its UPP policy "virtually plagiarizes Alcon's policy . . . [T]hey use the exact, almost virtually identical language. . . . [C]ertainly they were aware of what was being done to the point where they actually just copied it." (Doc. S-532-1 at 43 (Solow Dep. at 100)); (see Doc. S-531 at 19). Defendants contend that Dr. Solow could cite to no communications between B&L and Alcon, and that there were differences between Alcon's and B&L's UPPs regarding advertising based on the availability of a manufacturer's rebate. (Doc. S-531 at 18-19 (citing Doc. S-532-5 at 17-18 (Donley Dep. at 354-55))). Defendants fail to cite the Court to the nearly identical UPP announcements to which Dr. Solow was referring. (Compare Doc. S-410-8 (Alcon announcement) with Doc. S-410-9 (B&L announcement)). Dr. Solow's citation to an ECP e-mail to B&L supports his statement that B&L had consulted with ECPs leading up to the adoption of its UPP, (see Doc. S-405 at 48 (Solow Report ¶ 87)), and was not cited to "concoct a relationship between B&L and Alcon" as Defendants [**184] suggest. (Doc. S-531 at 19). Dr. Solow's citation to references that B&L and ABB had a "cooperative relationship" and referred to themselves as "partners" (Doc. S-405 at 72 (Solow Report ¶ 126)), is characterized by Defendants as being "nothing more than a business relationship." (Doc. S-531 at 20). The two characterizations are not irreconcilable and their import is left to the trier of fact.

As to JJVC, Defendants criticize Dr. Solow for citing to a JJVC Power Point presentation, [*371] dated March 19, 2014 for the proposition that JJVC solicited feedback on other manufacturers' UPPs from ABB and ECPs. JJVC created a presentation called "Partnership for Category Growth" with ABB. Defendants argue that the presentation had on its face been created after the JJVC July 2014 implementation of a UPP. (Doc. S-531 at 21-22 (citing Docs. S-405 at 51,72 (Solow Report ¶¶ 92, 127), S-410-45 at 1, 4, and S-532-1 at 63-66 (Solow Dep. at 136-39))). The JJVC power point presentation embracing a "partnership" between JJVC and ABB and explaining that the UPP "enables [ECPs] to feel confident that Eye Health and patient experience will be at the center of your dialogue with patients, not cost," (see Doc. S-410-45 [**185] at 1, 4), is relevant to Plaintiffs' allegations of conspiracy and Defendants' motivations, notwithstanding that the presentation was created after JJVC's UPP launch.

Defendants also take issue with Dr. Solow's references to. JJVC's interviews of personnel who were formerly employed at Alcon and B&L regarding those companies' adoptions of UPPs. (Doc. S-531 at 22 (citing Docs. S-405 at 45, 49, 51 (Solow Report ¶¶ 80, 88, 91))). Nothing in Dr. Solow's deposition testimony cited by Defendants dispels the relevance of Dr. Solow's reference to the third party interviews. (See Doc. S-531 at 22 (citing Doc. 532-1 at 58-59 (Solow Dep. at 121-22 ("I think under some circumstances, it could be [competitive intelligence]. I think under some circumstances, it could be anticompetitive."))).

Finally, as to CooperVision, by recounting how CV acquired the Clariti line of contact lenses from a prior owner Sauflon, which had implemented a UPP, Defendants contend that Dr. Solow "concedes" that CV unilaterally adopted a UPP on September 2014, rather than in collusion with the other Defendant Manufacturers. (Doc. S-531 at 23 (citing S-405 at 58 (Solow Report ¶ 103))). Defendants argue that Dr. Solow has no [**186] information on how or why Sauflon adopted the UPP on the Clariti line. Id. at 24 (citing Doc. S-532-1 at 67-68 (Solow Dep. at 140-41)). Defendants also contend that Dr. Solow mischaracterized the evidence as supporting his opinion that CV was pressured by ECPs to implement UPPs on its contact lens lines, citing to ECP complaints about other CV lines of contact lenses which did not have a UPP. Id. at 24. The evidence cited by Dr. Solow (see Doc. S-405 at 63, 66 (Solow Report ¶¶ 107, 110 (citing Docs. S-410-84, S-410-91, S-410-95, S-410-98))) demonstrates ECPs' desire that CV maintain UPPs on its products including a communication from an ECP regarding CVs lack of a UPP on another line of contact lenses, Biofinity, and is not contrary to Dr. Solow's opinion that CV was being pressured by ECPs regarding pricing and UPPs. On this point, Dr. Solow testified that CVs decision to maintain the Sauflon UPP on the Clariti contact lens line "is still a decision . . . It chose to do that once it took over [Sauflon]. . . . And then extended that to . . . the MyDay line." (Doc. S-532-1 at 79-80 (Solow Dep. at 195-96)). Dr. Solow testified that CV was "under pressure from ECPs generally. They met with a dozen focus [**187] groups and a hundred ECPs, and they heard from Dr. Eiden." Id. at 80 (Solow Dep. at 196).

Defendants also take issue with Dr. Solow's statement that "[e]conomic theory indicates that UPPs could be expected to adversely impact consumers," (see Docs. 397 at 83; S-405 at 83 (Solow Report ¶ 148)) because Defendants contend that Dr. Solow fails to recognize CV provided rebates on three contact lens lines that were subject to UPPs, dropping the actual price for consumers below the UPP price. (Doc. S-531 at 24-25 (citing Doc. 501-18)). And they assert that Dr. Solow was unable to testify regarding any CLI communications at a CLI meeting regarding UPPs, or that there is any evidence that the CLI was "used in an anticompetitive fashion." Id. at 26 (citing Doc. S-532-1 at 74-75 (Solow Dep. at 169-170)). Dr. Solow did respond, however, that he "think[s] the sharing of information among rivals, in an oligoplastic industry, . . . is something that can be anticompetitive, but need not be anticompetitive." (Doc. S-532-1 at 75 (Solow Dep. at 170)).

In In re Urethane Antitrust Litig., 768 F.3d 1245, 1255 (10th Cir. 2014), Dr. Solow testified at trial regarding the existence of a manufacturer defendant's conspiracy to fix [*372] prices for polyurethane products, observing "four types of collusive [**188] conduct": 1) a series of "'lockstep price increase announcements'" within weeks of each other; 2) "a widespread pattern of communication" among the top executives of the defendant companies held in secret and close to the time of the price increases; 3) a "price over volume strategy," where the companies would stick to their list prices "even if it meant walking away from opportunities to earn business or make sales at lower, but still profitable, prices"; and 4) the defendant companies monitored one another to prevent cheating and to discipline any supplier that was found cheating. In re Urethane Antitrust Litig. 768 F.3d 1264-65 (citing trial testimony). Dr. Solow also testified in In re Urethane Antitrust Litig. that the "the polyurethane industry was 'ripe for collusion' based on six features," many of which are present here: 1) "sales of polyurethane products were 'concentrated in the hands of only a handful of firms' during the conspiracy period"; 2) "the market had high barriers to entry"; 3) polyurethane products are homogenous; 4) "there were no close product substitutes available to customers"; 5) there was excess capacity and 6) "the industry has several trade associations, which provided 'an opportunity to engage [**189] in price fixing behavior.'" Id. at 1265. The court affirmed the jury verdict in favor of Plaintiffs, finding the evidence was sufficient to support finding that a price fixing agreement was implemented. Id. at 1264-66. While Dr. Solow acknowledges that he had found no direct evidence of communications between the executives of the Manufacturer Defendants as he did in In re Urethane, he asserts that "there was communication between ABB and the executives of the companies." (Doc. S-532-1 at 27 (Solow Dep. at 26)). Defendants' criticisms and attempts to distinguish In re Urethane, (see Doc. S-531 at 27), are properly the subject of cross examination and argument for the eventual trier of fact to consider, and do not amount to a basis to not consider Dr. Solow's Report in conjunction with Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification.

"Courts in this circuit and others regularly admit expert testimony that certain conduct or evidence is 'consistent with a finding that Defendants engaged in a conspiracy to fix prices.'" In re Delta/Airtran Baggage Fee Antitrust Litig., 245 F. Supp. 3d 1343, 1359 (N.D. Ga. 2017) (quoting In re Polypropylene Carpet Antitrust Litig., 93 F. Supp. 2d 1348, 1355 (N.D. Ga. 2000) and citing City of Tuscaloosa, 158 F.3d at 565 (holding that expert testimony is admissible so long as it "constitute[s] one piece of the puzzle that the plaintiffs endeavor to assemble before the jury"), aff'd 714 F. App'x 986 (11th Cir. 2018); see also [**190] In re Urethane Antitrust Litig., 152 F. Supp. 3d 357, 359-61 (D.N.J. 2016) (admitting expert economic testimony that certain evidence was "not consistent with the existence of a price-fixing conspiracy"); In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., 81 F. Supp. 3d 412, 424 (E.D. Pa. 2015) ("An economic expert may permissibly testify as to whether certain conduct is consistent with collusion or an entity or individual's self-interest."); U.S. Info. Sys. v. IBEW Local Union No. 3, 313 F. Supp. 2d 213,240 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) ("Economists often explain whether conduct is indicative of collusion."). Expert testimony that certain conduct or evidence is "consistent with a finding that Defendants engaged in a conspiracy to fix prices," has been held to be admissible in antitrust cases. Polypropylene Carpet, 93 F. Supp. 2d at 1355. There is no evidence that Dr. Solow formed his opinion prior to reviewing the record evidence, that he relied on one-sided data, or that he ignored certain evidence in the record. Compare PODS Enters., Inc. v. U-Haul Int'l, Inc., No. 8:12-cv-1479-T-27MAP, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193896, 2014 WL 12628664, at *4 (M.D. Fla. June 27, 2014). Dr. Solow conducted an independent investigation of the record evidence available at the time his Report was due to support his conclusions, and does not simply parrot the allegations of Plaintiffs' Complaint, as Defendants suggest. If Defendants believe that the basis for Dr. Solow's opinions is insufficient, they can explore that with Dr. Solow on cross examination and argument for the benefit [**191] of the trier of fact; "vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence." *United States v. Ala. [**373] Power Co.*, 730 F.3d 1278, 1282 (11th Cir. 2013) (quoting Allison, 184 F.3d at 1311-12 and citing Daubert, 509 U.S. at 596). This Court determines that Dr. Solow's opinion is sufficiently reliable under Daubert to support Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification.

3) Assist the Trier of Fact

Expert testimony assists the trier of fact "if it concerns matters that are beyond the understanding of the average lay person." Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1262. To satisfy the helpfulness requirement, expert testimony must be relevant to an issue in the case and offer insights "beyond the understanding and experience of the average citizen." United States v. Rouco, 765 F.2d 983, 995 (11th Cir. 1985). "Proffered expert testimony generally will not help the trier of fact when it offers nothing more than what lawyers for the parties can argue in closing arguments." Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1262-63. Defendants argue that Dr. Solow's report "merely provides his interpretations of business documents and weaves a factual narrative designed to supplement Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification based on these documents." They contend that the Court "is more than capable of reading and interpreting these [**192] materials without Dr. Solow offering his own gloss," (Doc. S-531 at 28), and that testimony by fact witnesses involved in creating the documents relied on by Dr. Solow would better assist the trier of fact in determining the documents meaning. (Docs. 500 at 29; S-531 at 29) need not show a successful conspiracy to be admitted under [Evidence] Rule 702 as circumstantial evidence of a conspiracy. As expert evidence, the testimony need only assist the trier of fact, through the application of scientific, technical, or specialized expertise, to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue. As circumstantial evidence, [the expert's] testimony need not prove the plaintiffs' case by [itself], must merely constitute one piece of the puzzle that the plaintiffs endeavor to assemble before the jury.

An expert's testimony in an antitrust case

City of Tuscaloosa, 158 F.3d at 564-65 (emphasis in original) (internal quotations and citation omitted) (testimony by statistician characterizing certain bids as "signals" to co-conspirators was outside his expertise, and the trier of fact was capable of drawing such conclusions without technical assistance from experts). But Courts may rely upon expert testimony regarding whether defendants [**193] behavior "is consistent with anticompetitive coordination," which is the focus of Dr. Solow's Report. See In re Delta/Airtran, 245 F. Supp. 3d at 1358-59; see also Polypropylene Carpet, 93 F. Supp. 2d at 1353 (finding that expert's testimony that "the climate of the polypropylene market during the relevant time period was consistent with a finding that Defendants engaged in a conspiracy to fix prices" as general matter "may be helpful to the trier of fact").

If, as Defendants contend, Dr. Solow has based his opinions on misconstrued, misrepresented or overstated facts, provided by a biased source, i.e. Plaintiffs' counsel, Defendants can bring this to the attention of the trier of fact through cross-examination. An expert is permitted "wide latitude to offer opinions, including those that are not based on firsthand knowledge or observation," Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592. "An expert may base an opinion on facts or data in the case that the expert has been made aware of or personally observed." Fed. R. Evid. 703. The potential weaknesses in his testimony only go to the weight of the opinions—not their admissibility—and are thus not grounds for exclusion under Daubert of Dr. Solow's opinion in support of Plaintiffs Motion for Class Certification. See Viterbo v. Dow Chem. Co., 826 F.2d 420, 422 \(5th Cir. 1987\) ("[Q]uestions relating to the bases and sources of an expert's opinion [**194] affect the weight to be assigned that opinion rather than its admissibility and should be left for the jury's consideration."); PODS Enters., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193896, 2014 WL 12628664, at \*2 (finding that expert's methodology and conclusions are sufficiently reliable to be admissible, notwithstanding that virtually all of the materials he examined were provided to him by . . . counsel. While that may be fruitful cross examination bearing on the weight of his opinions, it [**194] does not render his methodology of usage and context unreliable."). Defendants' criticisms of the factual foundations for Dr. Solow's opinions bear more on the weight of the evidence than its admissibility. Dr. Solow identified documents produced that he considered to support his opinions. Evidence Rule 702 recognizes that "it might also be important in some cases for an expert to educate the factfinder about general principles," and to apply these principles to the facts of the case." Fed. R. Evid. 702 (2000 Amendments advisory committee notes). "For this kind of generalized testimony, [Evidence] Rule 702 simply requires that: (1) the expert be qualified; (2) the testimony address a subject matter on which the factfinder can be assisted by an expert; (3) the testimony be reliable; and (4) the testimony 'fit' [**195] the facts of the case." Id.

One function of an expert in a case such as this, where tens of thousands of documents have been exchanged through discovery, is to review the documentation and highlight and interpret those pieces of evidence by applying their specialized knowledge and skill, that are relevant to the respective theories in the case. To the extent Dr. Solow relied upon documentary exhibits found in the record, and the fact that he did not review deposition testimony—assuming that testimony was in existence at the time he prepared his March 3, 2017 Report—does not negate his analysis of the documents reviewed. See generally United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 396, 68 S. Ct. 525, 92 L. Ed. 746 \(1948\).

2. Dr. Williams

Defendants seek to strike the Report of Plaintiffs' economic expert Dr. Williams, proffered by Plaintiffs in support of their Motion for Class Certification. Dr. Williams' Report is relevant to the predominance requirement of Rule 23. Dr. Williams, through his Report, seeks to demonstrate that antitrust impact and damages can be shown as to all members of the proposed classes through common proof.

Defendants contend that Dr. Williams' analytical model regarding impact and damages allegedly caused by the Defendants' UPPs "has nothing to say about [**196] whether any consumer suffered any actual injury—it merely assumes that all consumers within a given retail channel suffered an identical injury." (Docs. 503 at 7; S-535 at 7 (emphasis in original) (citing Doc. S-534 at 215 (Williams Dep. at 214 ("[M]y regression doesn't say anything about persons. My regression says that the average effect in the different channels is statistically significant, different than zero."))); see also id. at 11, 18. As a result, Defendants argue that Dr. Williams' Report is not reliable and should be excluded because it does not account for that the fact, for example, that "consumers bought contact lenses from 1-800-Contacts for far less than Dr. Williams' claimed 'average effect' and other consumers paid nothing for contact lenses due to rebates, discounts, and insurance." (Doc. S-535 at 7-8 (emphasis is original)).

a. The Williams Report

Dr. Williams is Director of the consulting company Competition Economics, LLC. He specializes in analyses involving antitrust, industrial organization and regulation. (Docs. 398 at 3; S-406 at 3 (Williams Report ¶ 1)). He has produced extensive publications and has testified as an expert in numerous court cases. Id. at 3, 19-26 (Williams Report ¶¶ [**197] 1, 2 and Appendix I)). Dr. Williams concluded that Defendants' alleged horizontal and vertical agreements resulting in the UPPs applicable to certain contact lens lines resulted in "statistically significant price increase[s]" for those particular contact lens lines. (Doc. S-406 at 12-16 (Williams Report ¶¶ 21-35)). This is reflected in his Report, dated March 3, 2017. (Docs. 398; S-406).

In compiling his Report, Dr. Williams relied upon numerous documents in the record. (Docs. 396 at 4; 28-33; S-406 at 4, 28-33 (Williams Report ¶ 3 and Appendix II)). Dr. Williams states that Plaintiffs' counsel requested that he assume Defendants "will be found liable on: (1) Plaintiffs' First Cause of Action ('horizontal agreement' claim) and (2) Plaintiffs' Second Cause of Action ('vertical agreements' claim)," and "to determine whether economic methodologies exist and are supported by sufficient data that can be used to reasonably estimate class-wide damages [*375] for both of Plaintiffs' causes of action." Id. at 6 (Williams Report ¶ 6). Dr. Williams says that he focuses his "econometric analysis . . . to determine whether and, if so, to what extent Defendants' illegal actions caused Plaintiffs to pay higher [**198] contact lens prices than they would have paid but for the alleged actions," using what he calls a "standard and widely accepted statistical methodology - multiple regression analysis." (Doc. S-406 at 6 (Williams Report ¶ 7)). Dr. Williams concludes that his analysis "demonstrates that Plaintiffs paid higher contact lens prices for products subject to Defendants' unilateral pricing policies' ('UPPs'), than they would have paid but for Defendants' alleged illegal actions." Id. At the evidentiary hearing, Dr. Williams testified that his analysis follows the computational methodology set forth by the American Bar Association. (Doc. 866 at 187).

Dr. Williams describes his multiple regression analysis, which he cites as commonly used in antitrust cases, as follows:

The determination of overcharges, if any, attributable to alleged illegal conduct typically involves the comparison of (1) actual prices during the period affected by the alleged illegal conduct (the "damages period") to (2) estimated but-for prices in the absence of the alleged illegal conduct in that period. Multiple regression analysis is, in my experience, the most common statistical methodology for performing damages analysis. [**199] [Footnote omitted]. When used to estimate overcharges in antitrust cases, multiple regression analysis entails the specification of a model - that is, an equation - that relates price (or a function of price) to factors that may affect price when the alleged illegal conduct does not occur. The model analyzes prices during damages and "benchmark" (i.e., non-damages) periods to calculate "but for" prices, i.e., prices that Plaintiffs would have paid but for the alleged illegal conduct. The comparison of actual prices to but-for prices quantifies the overcharge and provides a reasonable basis for calculating the amount of damages attributable to the alleged illegal conduct.

(Doc. S-406 at 6-7 (Williams Report ¶ 8)). He designated the "damages period" as the period of time in which a given contact lens product was subject to a UPP. Id. at 7 (Williams Report ¶ 9). He did "not assume there were damages during that period for the given UPP product." Id.

Dr. Williams first applies the regression model to estimate overcharges, if any, which resulted from Defendants' "alleged horizontal agreement," Plaintiff's First Cause of Action. "Because the objective is to compare prices between the benchmark and [**200] damages periods, price is specified as the dependent variable in the model." (Doc. S-406 at 7 (Williams Report ¶ 10)). Dr. Williams uses "retail prices from various transactional and survey datasets over the 2008-2016 period" in his analysis, and "estimate[s] the price effect of Defendants' alleged horizontal agreement using a benchmark of two groups: (1) Defendants' pre-UPP-period prices for products that later had a UPP, and (2) Defendants' pre-UPP-period prices for products that never had a UPP." Id. at 8 (Williams Report ¶ 10)). He calls this the "Horizontal Agreement Model." Id.

As to the alleged Vertical Agreements, Dr. Williams states that he "estimate[s] the price effect of each Manufacturer Defendant's alleged illegal vertical agreement using a benchmark of two groups: (1) each Manufacturer Defendant's pre-UPP-period prices for products that later had a UPP and (2) each Defendants' pre-UPP-period prices for products that never had a UPP." (Doc. S-406 at 8 (Williams Report ¶ 11)). In each of the four regressions, Dr. Williams uses "only a given Manufacturer Defendant's data." Id. He calls this the "Vertical Agreement Model." Id.

In conducting his multiple regression analysis, Dr. Williams [**201] considers the following variables which could affect price:

- (1) Product Characteristics ("The regression models allow contact lens prices to differ if the products are (1) in different categories (i.e., sphere, toric, or multifocal); (2) produced by different manufacturers; (3) in different package sizes; or (4) color lenses or not," and
- (2) UPP and Post-UPP Indicators, measuring observed prices during the damages [*376] period compared to prices in the same period "but for the UPP."

(Doc. S-406 at 8-9 (Williams Report ¶¶ 12, 13)); (Doc. S-561-1 at 98 (Williams Dep. at 97)). This latter variable included observations of (1) non-UPP products during the damages period; (2) UPP products in post-UPP periods; and (3) non-UPP products in post-UPP periods. Id. at 9 (Williams Report ¶ 13).

In his initial Report, Dr. Williams used the following data sets: the retailer 1-800-Contacts Survey, which consists of compilations of competitor gross retail prices collected by 1-800-Contacts between January 6, 2011 through November 30, 2016; retailer Costco transactional datasets, regarding Costco sales, costs, discounts and rebates by time period, manufacturer and product to determine Costco net prices from September [**202] 2013 through November 30, 2016; retailer National Vision datasets of transactions made on its websites, including prices, discounts, and quantities sold by date and product, for the period October 24, 2008 through November 30, 2016; retailer Walgreens monthly transactional datasets on orders shipped, including sales, quantities sold, and retail prices by month, and by manufacturer and product, from January 2013 through December 2016; and retailer 1-800-Contacts transactional data through its website, including data on sales, quantities sold, discounts, rebates, and shipping revenues by date and product to determine 1-800-Contact's net prices, covering September 16, 2008 through June 4, 2016. (Doc. S-406 at 9-11 (Williams Report ¶¶ 14-18)). He eliminated "outlier" sales and prices from his observations, such as prices charged when the products were sold as a "trial." Id. at 11 (Williams Report ¶ 19)). According to Dr. Williams, the 1-800-Survey data "contain the most reliable data with respect to sales through the Retail and ECP channels." Id. (Williams Report ¶ 20); (see also Doc. S-541-34 at 35 (Williams Dep. at 133 ("[T]he ECP data in my report came from . . . 1-800 Contacts survey data, [**203] and those are gross prices."))).

Under various interpolations, using "Quantity-weighted regressions," "Revenue-weighted regressions," and "Unweighted regressions," Dr. Williams' Horizontal Agreement Model reflects a "statistically significant price increase" or "price effect" under each dataset. (Doc. S-406 at 12-13, 35-37 (Williams Report ¶¶ 21-23; Appendix III Tables 1-3)). Likewise, Dr. Williams' Vertical Agreement Model, under each interpolation and utilizing each data base, results in "statistically significant price increase[s]" for each of the four Manufacturer Defendants. (Doc. S-406 at 13-16, 35-49 (Williams Report ¶¶ 24-35; Appendix III Tables 4-15)).

Dr. Williams then estimated "overcharges and the associated Manufacturer Defendants' respective revenues for UPP products sold during the damages periods . . . [to] estimate the resulting dollar value of damages," by first calculating "the average percentage overcharge for each of the four channels," referring to retailers by Internet, "Club," Retail, and ECP channels. (Doc. S-406 at 16 (Williams Report ¶ 36)). "The damages are calculated as the associated Manufacturer Defendants' respective revenues for UPP products sold during [**204] the damages periods, multiplied by the average percentage overcharges, and then divided by one plus the average percentage overcharges." Id. He "estimated overcharges by the various retail channels purportedly affected by each alleged conspiracy, with the estimated overcharges ranging from 3.4 percent to 89.2 percent." (Doc. S-535 at 10-11 (citing Doc. S-406 (Williams Report at 35-49))). Dr. Williams estimates separate damages for the Horizontal Agreement Model, and for the Vertical Agreement Model as to each Manufacturer Defendant, using the "Quantity Weighted Method" and the "Revenue Weighted Method." (Doc. S-406 at 16-17, 50 (Williams Report ¶¶ 36-41, Appendix III Tables 16, 17)).

In his initial Report, Dr. Williams estimates overcharges resulting from Defendants' alleged horizontal agreement, using the "Quantity Weighted Method" to be $392 million.. (Doc. S-406 at 16, 50 (Williams Report ¶ 37, Appendix Table 16). Using the "Quantity Weighted Method," Dr. Williams estimates the overcharges resulting from the alleged vertical agreements as follows: $120 million for the JJVC channel; $144 million for [*377] the Alcon channel; $8 million for the CV channel; and $24 million for the B&L channel. [**205] Id. at 17, 60 (Williams Report ¶ 38-41, Appendix Table 16).<sup>4</sup>

b. Defendants' Argument

Defendants contend that "Dr. Williams' regressions do not reflect a legitimate economic approach, but instead reflect exactly the sort of outcome-driven approach for litigation that Daubert forbids." (Docs. 503 at 8; S-535 at 8). Defendants argue that Dr. Williams' analysis is flawed in the following ways:

- (1) it produces "false positives," attributing damages where none exist, finding a "purported 'overcharge' attributable to a UPP where no UPP existed," (Docs. 503 at 16; S-535 at 8, 16-17; S-681 at 18);
- (2) it implies that prices on certain lenses have increased when "in fact" prices for four out of eight JJVC contact lens "high volume" lines decreased, (Doc. S-535 at 8, 23 (citing (Doc. S-538 at 44-45 (Snyder Report ¶¶ 92-94));
- (3) it fails to control for new technologies which could have caused an increase in retail price, modality (frequency of replacement of a contact lens), and the wholesale price of contact lenses, (Docs. 503 at 20; S-535 at 8, 13, 20-21);
- (4) it uses unreliable survey data rather than available transactional data, referring to Dr. Williams' reliance on retailer 1-800-Contacts' telephone survey, [**206] contending that he does not know the details of the survey methodology, whereas "actual transactional data for sales by ECPs leads to negative overcharges for most contact lens lines," and takes into consideration the effect of discounts, rebates and other price reductions which can vary with each consumer, (Docs. 503 at 23-24; S-535 at 8-9, 14, 23-24 (citing Doc. S-538 at 53-56 (Snyder Report ¶¶ 109-116) and Doc. S-534 at 38, 137-43, 151-53, 156-160 (Williams Dep. at 37, 136-42, 150-52, 155-159); Doc. S-681 at 18); and

<sup>4</sup> In his Supplemental Declaration, dated September 8, 2017, Dr. Williams revised his overcharge estimates for Defendants JJVC, Alcon and B&L, taking into consideration additional data that had become available through discovery since his March 3, 2017 initial Report. In these revised estimates, Dr. Williams calculated the percentage change in "Price Effects of the UPP" using data from various sales channels. for both the Horizontal Agreement Model and the Vertical Agreement Model. (See Doc. S-651 at 74-85, 124-41 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 135-57, Appendix Tables 2-19). However, because he was continuing to review data and "performing additional economic analysis, [he had] not performed new damages calculations for this report." Id. at 85 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 157)). On December 4, 2017, Dr. Williams reported that "[d]ollar values of estimated damages are updated based on new data and information, and they confirm the core conclusion in both of my reports that UPPs caused price increases for all or nearly all class members." (Doc. S-723 at 50 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶ 40)).

(5) it was not supported by any standard statistical testing by Dr. Williams to "prove the reliability of his model." (Docs. 503 at 9, 14, 25; S-535 at 9, 14, 25-27 (citing Doc. S-534 at 199-215, 229-30 (Williams Dep. at 198-214, 228-29))

Specifically, Defendants contend that Dr. Williams' "regression model does not control for all major factors that likely will affect the retail price of contact lenses, such as whether the contact lenses contained new technologies or materials, higher wholesale prices, or consumer preferences for certain modalities," and thus improperly attributes any difference in retail prices to a UPP, where the price differences "were likely caused [**207] by other explanatory factors." (Doc. S-535 at 21-22). Defendants cite to the fact that Dr. Williams did not interview any witnesses, including the named Plaintiffs or review the named Plaintiffs' purchases; did not review any deposition transcripts; and "did not consider manufacturer rebates, ECP discounts, and insurance payments in his regressions." Id. at 14, 17, 19 (citing Doc. S-534 at 26, 28, 129-30, 134-35 (Williams Dep. at 25, 27, 128-29, 133-134)).

Defendants argue that:

[b]ecause Dr. Williams' regression results speak only to "averages," as opposed to measures of impact on individual persons, any overcharge that the model detects is assumed to apply to the entire class, but the model does not test or address whether any individual member of the class actually paid an overcharge.

[*378] (Docs. 503 at 11; S-535 at 11) (emphasis in original). As a result, contend Defendants, "Dr. Williams' model detects injury even in situations where an individual consumer paid far less than the UPP price for a particular lens, as Dr. Williams admitted in his deposition." (Doc. S-535 at 11-12 (citing Doc. S-534 at 129, 134, 181-83 (Williams Dep. at 128, 133, 180-82))). They assert that "if Dr. Williams' 'average' overcharge [**208] approach were followed, consumers who paid 40% or more less than the UPP price at 1-800-Contacts would be permitted to recover claimed damages resulting from a UPP of 3.8%-5% and consumers who paid nothing for their contact lenses because of manufacturer rebates, ECP and retailer discounts, and insurance would be able to recover because they supposedly paid 'too much.'" Id. at 17 (emphasis in original)); (see also id. at 18, 19 (citing Doc. S-534 at 182-83 (Williams Dep. at 181-82)). (See generally id. at 18 (citing Doc. S-538 at 48-51 (Snyder Report ¶¶ 100-105))). Defendants assert that "[t]he fact that Dr. Williams' model cannot determine whether any individual member of the class was, in fact, injured by the alleged conduct and simply assumes that an average overcharge will apply to all members of the class is enough to exclude his conclusions as irrelevant under Rule 702 and Daubert for failing to advance any material aspect of the Plaintiffs' claims." Id. at 19.

Additionally, Defendants argue that Dr. Williams' lack of control for higher cost modalities and new technologies results in his failing to compare "apples to apples." (Doc. S-535 at 22.). For example, relying on their expert Dr. Snyder's own regression analysis of JJVC [*209] UPP-products, using Dr. Williams' data, Defendants argue the more precise product analysis "shows that the retail prices on four out of eight JJVC contact lens lines declined after the UPP went into effect." Id. at 23 (citing Doc. S-538 at 44-45 (Snyder Report ¶¶ 92-94)).

Defendants criticize the disparity in Dr. Williams estimated damages for the alleged horizontal conspiracy, which is $100 million more than the total damages for all four alleged vertical conspiracies. (Doc. S-535 at 11 (citing $392 million and $297 million respectively)).

At the evidentiary hearing, Defendants' expert, Dr. Snyder, reiterated his criticism of Dr. Williams methodology; specifically, Dr. Williams' assumption that his average overcharge applies to all individuals in the proposed classes. (Doc. 867 at 22). Dr. Snyder noted that, when individual customers are taken into account, around 40 percent of those customers paid less for their contact lenses while the UPPs were in effect than they did when the UPPs were discontinued. (Id. at 23-24).

Defendants also ask the Court to exclude Dr. Williams' opinion pursuant to Rule 37(c)(1), because he "failed to disclose all of the facts and data he considered in forming his opinions as required by Rule 26(a)(2)(B)." [**210] (Docs. 503 at 9-10, 15; S-535 at 9-10, 15 (citing Doc. S-534 at 18-31, 70-76, 99-101, 229-30 (Williams Dep. at 17-30, 69-75, 98-100, 228-29)); (see also Docs. 503 at 27-29; S-535 at 27-29). Defendants contend that Dr. Williams testified in his deposition that he relied upon a "large number" of documents that were produced," but that were not disclosed in his Report, precluding Defendants from cross examining him about the supportive documents. Id. Defendants contend that Dr. Williams' determination of which contact lens features to control for in his regression models "were based on the undisclosed discovery documents." (Doc. S-535 at 28-29).

1) Plaintiffs' Argument

Plaintiffs respond that Dr. Williams' use of a multiple regression analysis is appropriate "because it is the standard tool economists use to isolate the effect of a single variable (here, the conspiracy) on the price of a good or service." (Docs. 548 at 6, 15; S-559 at 6, 8, 15 (citing Doc. S-406 at 6-7 (Williams Report ¶¶ 7, 9, 10))). They contend that the "use of averages is appropriate" because the contact lens market "is a national market without significant price discrimination (i.e., different [**211] consumers generally pay the same price for the [contact lens])", and that Dr. Williams relied upon the best data available, controlling for the relevant variables as Defendants defined them in the ordinary course of business. (Docs 548 at 6-7; S-559 at 6-7). Plaintiffs [*379] noted at the evidentiary hearing that Defendants' experts acknowledged that an individual's antitrust injury is determined by comparing the actual price with the "but for" price, and that Dr. Snyder did not perform a regression analysis. Plaintiffs argue that controlling for the specified product characteristic variables "allowed Dr. Williams to isolate changes in price attributable to the UPPs," showing "'but-for' prices that Plaintiffs and class members would have paid in the absence of UPPs." (Doc. S-559 at 9). Regarding Defendants' request that the Court exclude Dr. Williams' Report as a sanction for not listing all documents relied upon, Plaintiffs' respond that Dr. Williams "identified all documents on which he relied when building and analyzing his regressions, and that he did not list some background documents he reviewed, all but one of which Defendants produced by themselves (the exception is a publicly-available [**212] government report)" and as such, sanctions are not warranted. (Docs. 548 at 7; S-559 at 7) (emphasis omitted).

2) Dr. Williams' Supplemental Declaration

In response to Defendant's Williams' Daubers Motion, Plaintiffs submit a Declaration of Michael A. Williams, Ph.D. in Support of Plaintiffs' Opposition to Exclude his Expert Report, dated July 10, 2017. (Docs. 550; S-560; Williams Decl.). In the Declaration, Dr. Williams asserts that notwithstanding Defendants' citation to testimony of named Plaintiffs who said they paid less for contact lenses during the UPP period, based on Dr. Solow's opinion that the Manufacturer Defendants imposed UPPs on contact lenses brands in a non-discriminatory manner and retail sellers did not price discriminate, the Williams model "correctly takes the absence of price discrimination into account and estimates the common impact of UPPs on retail prices paid by proposed class members." (Docs. 550 at 6; S-560 at 6 (Williams Decl. ¶ 8)). He reiterates his conclusion that "all or almost all proposed class members did suffer actual injury, i.e., antitrust impact." Id. at 6; S-560 at 6 (Williams Decl. ¶ 9). He states that:

In particular, all 50 regressions in my Opening [**213] Report show the UPPs caused substantial increases in retail prices paid by proposed class members, and these price increases are all statistically significant at the one percent level. [Footnote omitted.] These findings provide evidence that customer-specific factors are unlikely to be important determinants of overcharges.

(Doc. S-560 at 6-7 (Williams Decl. ¶ 9)). Moreover, as "Plaintiffs have not asserted that discounts, rebates, or insurance payments are 'harmful acts' [by Defendants], . . . discounts, rebates, and insurance payments are [considered the to be] the same in the but-for world as they are in the actual world." Id. at 15 (Williams Decl. ¶ 23);

see also id. at 30 (Williams Decl. ¶ 47 ("[T]he but-for world holds all other factors except one - the alleged conduct - the same in order to measure what prices would have been but for the alleged conduct.")). Thus, Dr. Williams' regression analysis applies the same discount, rebate and insurance payment to the "but-for" price as with the actual price paid during the UPP damages period. Id. at 16 (Williams Decl. ¶ 24). He used "net pricing" data, which included rebates and discounts, where it was available, specifically in the Costco transactional datasets, [**214] and the 1-800-Contacts transactional datasets. (Doc. S-406 at 10-11 (Williams Report ¶¶ 15, 18)).

Dr. Williams asserts that his regression model cannot be "tested" or disproved by information from a single Plaintiff. (Doc. S-560 at 8-9 (Williams Decl. ¶¶ 12-14)). In response to Defendants' citation to his testimony that his regression model does not say anything about "persons," Dr. Williams cites to the remainder of the relevant passage in his deposition where he testified that his "regression says that the average affect in the different channels is statistically significant. Different than zero." Id. at 8 (Williams Decl. ¶ 11 (citing Doc. S-543 at 215 (Williams Dep. at 214))). Dr. Williams maintains that the actual price paid by each class member should be compared to the "but for" price he or she would have paid in the-absence of the UPP. (Doc. S-560 at 9 (Williams Decl. ¶ 14)); see also id. at 26-32 (Williams Decl. ¶¶ 42-52)).

[*380] In response to Defendants' contention that the Williams regression model produces "false positives," because Dr. Williams' model finds that the non-UPP contact lens prices also increased as a result of the UPPs, Dr. Williams states that this phenomenon is attributable to the [**215] so-called "umbrella effect," which results when all the price of all comparable competitive lenses in the same categories increases because of the UPPs. (Doc. S-560 at 9-12 (Williams Decl. ¶¶ 15-18)). Dr. Williams states that his regression model "evaluates the effect of UPPs on retail contact lens pricing using groups of comparable, competitive products" with identifiable characteristics and variables, as set forth in his Report. Id. at 10-11 (Williams Decl. ¶¶ 16, 17). Dr. Williams explained, "[C]ontrolling for these factors, non-UPP and UPP lenses are comparable and competitive, i.e., they are substitutes. Basic economics teaches that when the price of one product increases, the price of a substitute product will also increase." Id. at 11 (Williams Decl. ¶ 17; (see also Doc. 534 at 204 (Williams Dep. at 203)); (Doc. S-649 at 21)).

Dr. Williams addresses Plaintiffs' argument that his regression models failed to control for variables such as new technology. (Doc. S-560 at 17-24 (Williams Decl. ¶¶ 26-37)). Dr. Williams' initial multiple regression model controls for four variables which might impact price: categories (such as spherical, toric or multifocal); manufacturer; package size; and color [**216] - selected as supported by Dr. Solow's description of the market, publically available websites, and Defendants' marketing material. Id. at 17 (Williams Decl. ¶¶ 26, 27). He rejects Plaintiffs' argument that he should have considered wholesale retail prices because to do so would lead to "statistical error." Id. at 22 (Williams Decl. ¶ 33). This is because Wholesale prices are affected by the alleged conduct because a Manufacturer Defendant's profit-maximizing wholesale price depends on the retail price. Since retail prices were affected by the alleged conduct, so too were wholesale prices. Thus, including wholesale prices in the regression would incorrectly hold constant factors that changed because of the alleged conduct.

Id. As to "modality," (how often a customer must change a lens), Dr. Williams asserts that modality is accounted for by his consideration of the "package size" variable. Id. at 24 (Williams Decl. ¶ 34)). In response to Dr. Snyder's opinion that Dr. Williams did not compare "apples to apples" by estimating overcharges for all JJVC UPP-products as opposed to product by product, Dr. Williams responds that the focus on smaller subgroups of products magnifies the effects of outliers and is less [**217] precise:

[T]he fact that Dr. Snyder found positive overcharges for some products and negative overcharges for other products in the same category reveals that his product-specific regressions suffer from product-specific, random price variation that masks the true overcharges. [Footnote omitted]. Product-specific random price variation tends to cancel out when the regressions are correctly performed, combining observations across comparable, competitive products subject to the same alleged conduct."

Id. at 21 (Williams Decl. ¶ 32 (emphasis in original)); (see also Doc. S-559 at 19-20; Docs. 715 at 17-18; S-722 at 17-18 ("Dr. Snyder's product-specific approach is flawed" because it "wrongly assumes separate markets for individual products.")). Dr. Williams testified that he considered categories of JJVC products, grouped in accordance with the variables considered, rather than a product by product comparison of before benchmark prices with UPP prices, based upon JJVC's internal marketing documents. (Doc. S-534 at 68-72 (Williams Dep. at 67-71)).

Dr. Williams also defends his reliance upon 1-800-Contacts survey data and other sources, noting that his regression model uses "millions of observations [**218] of transaction data" from various sources, including the survey data. (Doc. S-560 at 24 (Williams Decl. ¶ 38)). He contends that the survey data is reliable because 1-800-Contacts is a profit-maximizing firm that relies on its own surveys which were gathered in the regular course of business for its own business purposes, providing an indicia of reliability to the data, and argues that Defendants have [*381] provided no evidentiary or empirical support for their dismissing the use of the survey data. Id. at 25 (Williams Decl. ¶ 39-40); (Doc. S-534 at 152 (Williams Dep. at 151)). "The survey data includes a database of 56,208 ECPs, and it reflects data acquired by making 100 calls on average per week to each retailer group." (Doc. S-559 at 11 (citing S-534 at 151-54 (Williams Dep. at 150-53 (referring to an industry article))). "The survey also includes data from the internet channel and club retailers, like Sam's Club and Costco." Id. (citing Doc. S-543 at 157-59 (Williams Dep. at 156-58 (referring to an industry article))). In response to Defendants' criticism that Dr. Williams has no knowledge regarding the methodology used by 1-800-Contacts in conducting its survey, Dr. Williams testified that [**219] he reviewed an industry article which set forth the survey methodology. (Doc. S-534 at 151-53, 159-60 (Williams Dep. at 150-52, 158-59)).

Dr. Williams asserts that because Manufacturer Defendants and sellers did not "price discriminate," by charging "different prices paid by individual customers for the same product," and "UPPs did not vary by retailer, geographic region, or the identity of any given retail customer," "differences in prices paid by individual consumers will not affect the estimated overcharges" as determined by the multiple regression model. (Doc. S-560 at 25-26 (Williams Decl. ¶ 40))

Finally, Dr. Williams responds to Defendants' criticism that his analysis is unreliable because the damages impact estimated for the alleged horizontal conspiracy is greater than the sum of the estimated impact of the four alleged vertical conspiracies. He states that the $97 million (or 24%) difference is supported by "elementary economics" because "[a] horizontal conspiracy by construction has more market power than a combination of four vertical conspiracies." (Doc. S-560 at 30 (Williams Decl. ¶¶ 48, 49)). Price overcharges varied by channel from 3.4% to 89.2% because "[o]vercharges [**220] in club and internet channels [discounters] are generally higher than overcharges in retail and ECP channels," and are consistent with Defendants' "goal" that UPPs "insulate retail and ECP sellers from competition provided by club and internet sellers." Id. at 31 (Williams Decl. ¶ 51). Additionally, in his deposition, Dr. Williams testified that there are two reasons for the variance. First, the single average impact variable in the horizontal model is averaged across four manufacturers; if the horizontal model were broken down to each of the four manufacturers, the results for the horizontal model would be closer to the vertical model results. Second, Dr. Williams refers to the so-called "Johnson & Johnson effect." Because JJVC accounts for approximately 75 percent of the revenues of all UPP products in the damages period, and JJVC generally has lower prices than the other Manufacturer Defendants, it produces a larger effect in the horizontal model than in the sum of the vertical models, making the damages calculation lower for the vertical conspiracies as opposed to a horizontal conspiracy. (Doc. S-534 at 205-07 (Williams Dep. at 204-206)); (Doc. S-649 at 22).

1) Dr. Williams' [**221] Reliance on Documents Not Listed in His Report

Defendants contend that Dr. Williams' "failure to disclose a 'large number' of documents that he considered" deprived Defendants of the "opportunity to fully cross-examine him at his deposition about his methodology, assumptions and conclusions." (Docs. 503 at 30; S-535 at 30). Defendants contend that they did not learn about Dr. Williams "non-disclosures" until seven days before their response to Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification was due, and that Dr. Williams admitted in his deposition that he does not have a list of documents that were not disclosed. Id. They argue that "Dr. Williams' non-disclosure cannot be cured through supplementation of Dr.

Williams' expert report," and that the only appropriate remedy is exclusion of Dr. Williams' opinions pursuant to Rule 37\(c\)\(1\). Id.

Dr. Williams responds that he relied on facts set forth in the Complaint, Dr. Solow's Report, and marketing information from publically available websites that describes contact lens features as categorized by the industry. (Doc. S-560 at 33 (Williams Decl. ¶ 382) ¶ 53 (citing Doc. S-534 at 71 (Williams Dep. at 70))). Dr. Williams states that "[a]lthough these documents [**222] were not listed in Appendix 2 of my Opening Report, they were provided to Defendants as part of the backup materials for my Opening Report," affording Defendants with the opportunity to cross examine him on these aspects of his regression analysis. Id. (Williams Decl. ¶ 54); (see also Doc. S-559 at 23). Plaintiffs contend that Dr. Williams' failure to list the background documents was both "substantially justified" and "harmless," and that exclusion of his testimony is a "drastic sanction" that is not warranted in these circumstances. (Docs. 548 at 23; S-559 at 23). They state that "Dr. Williams listed or produced all of the documents he considered or relied on to build his regression model," and that the only three documents not listed or produced were "three marketing documents Dr. Williams received after his report was served." (Doc. S-559 at 24) (emphasis in original).

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(a), a party must provide an expert witness report for an expert witness who is retained or specially employed to give expert testimony and who the party may use at trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2). The report must contain:

- (i) a complete statement of all opinions the witness will express and the basis and reasons for them;
- (ii) the facts [**223] or data considered by the witness in forming them;
- (iii) any exhibits that will be used to summarize or support them . . . .

Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B)(i)-(iii). The disclosures must be made "at the times and in the sequence that the court orders." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(D). The disclosure requirements are "intended to provide opposing parties reasonable opportunity to prepare for effective cross examination and perhaps arrange for expert testimony from other witnesses." "Failure to disclose is 'harmless' where there is no substantial prejudice to the party entitled to receive the disclosure." Id. (citing *Chapple, 174 F.R.D. at 701*). Such a sanction "is warranted, if ever, only in an instance of the most egregious, purposeful, calculated, and otherwise irremediable enormity by a litigant or by counsel or by both and, even then, only if the evidence establishing the enormity and the malevolence that created the enormity is nothing less than distinct and unmistakable." Id. Other sanctions, including a "steep fine against counsel or against the [*383] party or against both and disciplinary action [**225] against counsel," are preferable. Id.

McCarthy, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13762, 2017 WL 443486, at *6. Excluding expert testimony is a "drastic" sanction requiring careful consideration. See Brooks v. United States, 837 F.2d 958, 961 (11th Cir. 1988).

Whether failure to make sufficient expert disclosures is substantially justified or harmless depends on many factors: "(1) the surprise to the party against whom the evidence would be offered; (2) the ability of that party to cure the surprise; (3) the extent to which allowing the evidence would disrupt the trial; (4) the importance of the evidence; and (5) the nondisclosing party's explanation for its failure to disclose the evidence." Mobile Shelter Sys. USA, Inc. v. Grate Pallet Sols., LLC, 845 F. Supp. 2d 1241, 1250-51 (M.D. Fla. 2012). Sanctions may be warranted if a delayed disclosure deprives a party of the ability to disclose a rebuttal expert, impairs its ability to effectively cross examine the expert at his deposition, changes the scope of the claims, or is part of a pattern of "last minute filings and disclosures" that "have greatly affected the orderly handling of th[e] case." See id. at 1251-52.

McCarthy, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13762, 2017 WL 443486, at *6. "A failure to timely make required disclosures might be harmless if substantially similar evidence has already been produced." 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13762, [WL] at *7 (citing inter alia, Miele v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London, 559 Fed. Appx. 858, 861-62 (11th Cir. 2014)).

Dr Williams testified that he "used, reviewed, informed [himself] with a large number of documents that are not listed [**226] here. . . . [T]hey're important documents to . . . help me understand the industry, help me form my opinion. . . . They weren't specifically relied on to prepare the regressions, to run the regressions. They weren't specifically listed in footnotes. But they were certainly important to me in understanding the industry." (Doc. S-534 at 19-20 (Williams Dep. at 18-19)). The publicly available GAO Report and Defendants' SEC filings were not directly relevant to Dr. Williams multiple regression analyses but rather assisted in providing Dr. Williams with an overview of the industry. Dr. Williams' reason for not "disclosing" the documents were that they were utilized more for background information and context about the contact lens industry, about which Defendants as participants in the contact lens industry, are well aware. These documents were tangential to his opinions that resulted from his regression models, and were all within Defendants' possession, either belonging to Defendants, or in the public sphere. Additionally, it is undisputed that Defendants were accorded the opportunity to depose Dr. Williams a second time in connection with his Supplemental Declaration (Doc. 612), and [**227] to submit additional briefing, curing any alleged prejudice from surprise. (Docs. 668; S-682-10). Dr. Williams' failure to list these documents has not disrupted the trial of this case in any way, and Defendants have been afforded ample opportunity to address all issues raised by their Williams Daubert Motion, and Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification, pending before the Court. The sanction of excluding Dr. Williams' Report would seriously impair Plaintiffs' ability to support their Motion for Class Certification, particularly on the pinnacle issue of predominance. Moreover, Defendants have not established how Dr. Williams' incomplete disclosure has in anyway impaired their ability to test his regression models or challenge his opinions. The Court determines that Dr. Williams' failure to list all background documents in his Expert Report was harmless in the context of this case, and declines Defendants' request to exclude Dr. Williams' testimony. Defendants have not proposed any lesser appropriate sanction, and the Court does not see the need to sua sponte craft one. See Whetstone Candy, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27625, 2003 WL 25686830, at *3. To the extent that Defendants request the Court to exclude the Expert Report of Dr. Michael A. Williams, [**228] Ph.D. (Docs. 398; S-406), for failing to disclose documents he considered in forming his opinion, see (Doc. 505 at 45); (Doc. S-540 at 45), that request is due to be DENIED. Defendants have the materials in their possession, and have been given the opportunity to cross-examine Dr. Williams prior to filing their Reply Memorandum.

[*384] 2) Competence

Defendants do not challenge Dr. Williams' competence to testify as an expert economist and statistician. "While scientific training or education may provide possible means to qualify, experience in a field may offer another path to expert status." Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1260-61. Dr. Williams has extensive knowledge and experience in his specialty analyzing antitrust, industrial organization and regulation, and has testified in numerous court cases. (See Doc. 398 at 3, 19-26; S-406 at 3, 19-26 (Williams Report ¶¶ 1, 2 and Appendix 1)). He has never been excluded from testifying under Daubert (Doc. S-534 at 33 (Williams Dep. at 32)). The Court finds that Plaintiffs have satisfied their burden with respect to Dr. Williams' qualification to testify as an expert witness on the issues presented by Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. See In re Polypropylene Carpet Antitrust Litig., 93 F. Supp. 2d at 1353.

3) Reliability (Methodology)

Defendants [**229] contend that Dr. Williams' report is unreliable, challenging the sufficiency of both the methodology and the underlying data. The method in question is Dr. Williams' use of a multiple regression analysis.

"[W]hen expert 'testimony's factual basis, data, principles, methods, or their application are called sufficiently into question, . . . the trial judge must determine whether the testimony has a 'reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of [the relevant] discipline.'" In re Polypropylene Carpet Antitrust Litig., 93 F. Supp. 2d at 1352 (quoting Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 149). "[T]he Court's inquiry focuses not on whether the expert is correct, but whether the proponent of expert testimony has established by a preponderance of the evidence that the testimony is reliable in the context of the methodologies or techniques applied within the appropriate field." Id. at 1352-53 (citing Allison, 184 F.3d at 1312). "The Court's evaluation of the reliability of expert testimony . . . does not depend upon a rigid checklist of factors designed to test the foundation of that testimony. Rather, the gatekeeping inquiry must be tailored to the facts of the case and the type of expert testimony at issue." Id. at 1353 (citing Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 150 and City of Tuscaloosa, 158 F.3d at 566 n. 25 (discussing reliability of testimony by economic and statistical experts)).

A regression analysis has been described [**230] as follows:

A regression analysis is a mathematical device which estimates the relationships between variables. See, e.g., In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 191 F.R.D. 472, 486 \(W.D. Pa. 1999\). More specifically, a regression analyzes the relationship between a dependent variable (response variable) and one or more independent variables (explanatory variables), and aims to parse out which independent variables have an effect on the value of the dependent variable. See Franklin M. Fisher, Multiple Regression in Legal Proceedings, 80 Colum. L. Rev. 702, 704 (1980). When a regression includes more than one explanatory variable, it is referred to as a multiple regression. Id.

To perform a multiple regression analysis, an economist first considers which major explanatory variables are likely to have an effect on a particular dependent variable of interest. Id. at 705. After collecting a dataset that will allow measurement of those effects, the economist then inputs his or her set of data into a statistical program. The statistical program will then output a "model" which shows the effects of each explanatory variable on the dependent variable, holding the others constant. Id. at 706.

A regression is a statistical tool designed to express the relationship between one variable, such as price, and explanatory variables [**231] that may affect the first variable. Regression analysis can be used to isolate the effect of an alleged conspiracy on price, taking into consideration other factors that might also influence price, like costs and demand.

In re High-Tech Employee Antitrust Litig., 985 F. Supp. 2d 1167, 1208 n.15 \(N.D. Cal. 2013\) (quoting [In re Aftermarket Auto. \[\*385\] Lighting Prods. Antitrust Litig., 276 F.R.D. 364, 371 \(CD.Cal. 2011\)](#)).

A regression model is an equation that seeks to account for the major independent influences on the dependant variable - the variable that is estimated or forecast by the model - in order to arrive at a reliable prediction of the dependant variable.

Inclusion of irrelevant variables or omission of relevant variables is to be avoided.

In re Polypropylene Carpet Antitrust Litig., 93 F. Supp. 2d at 1359-60 (citations omitted). A multiple regression model includes more than one explanatory variable on one side of the equation. (See Doc. S-538 at 24 (Snyder Report ¶ 45)).

The Court determines that Dr. Williams's selection of variables in his initial Report which could affect price; (1) in different categories (i.e., sphere, toric, or multifocal); (2) produced by different manufacturers; (3) in different package sizes; or (4) color lenses or not—is valid, given the constraints on data available at the time. Notably, in subsequent declarations, after having had the opportunity to review later - produced data of customer-based transactions, [**232] Dr. Williams re-ran his regression models by product, and the results were consistent. Williams states that he based his initial selection of variables upon the Manufacturer Defendants' own marketing information that describes contact lens features as categorized by the industry. (Doc. S-534 at 71-72 (Williams Dep. at 70-71)). While Defendants contend that Dr. Williams omitted key variables such as technological advances which they argue also affect price, Dr. Williams disputes Defendants' assertion and provides his own reasoning for not adding that as a variable. Dr. Williams' multiple regression analysis is a sufficient and reliable means of proving impact on a classwide basis, even if arguably imperfect. Kleen Prods. LLC v. Int'l Paper, 306 F.R.D. 585, 605 (N.D. Ill. 2015) (finding that defendants' criticism of expert's selection of variables for multiple regression analysis "is a merits question that the Court does not need to resolve in order to decide whether to certify the class."), aff'd. 831 F.3d 919 (7th Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 1582, 197 L. Ed. 2d 705 (2017).

"Regression analyses are admissible even where they omit important variables so long as they account for the 'major variables' affecting a given analysis. . . . But it is the 'proponent who must establish that the major factors have been accounted [**233] for in a regression analysis.'" Reed Constr. Data Inc. v. McGraw-Hill Cos., Inc., 49 F. Supp. 3d 385, 403 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) (quoting Bazemore v. Friday, 478 U.S. 385, 400, 106 S. Ct. 3000, 92 L. Ed. 2d 315 (1986); Freeland v. AT & T Corp., 238 F.R.D. 130, 145 (S.D.N. Y.2006)) aff'd, 638 F. App'x 43 (2d Cir. 2016).

Unless the party challenging a regression model proffers evidence that an omitted variable "is correlated with the dependant variable and is likely to affect the result of the regression analysis," the Court will not find that omission of the variable implicates the reliability of the model. Estate of Hill v. ConAgra Poultry Co., No. 94-CV-0198, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13083, 1997 WL 538887, at *8 (N.D. Ga. Aug. 25, 1997). Merely pointing to economic conditions that may affect the dependant variable is not enough to call into question the reliability of an econometric model. See *1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13083, [WL] at *7; In re Industrial Silicon Antitrust Litig., Nos. 95-2104, 95-1131, 96-2003, 96-2111, 96-338, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20464, 1998 WL 1031507, at *3 (W.D. Pa. Oct. 13, 1998)*.

In re Polypropylene Carpet Antitrust Litig., 93 F. Supp. 2d at 1365; see also Estate of Hill v. ConAgra Poultry Co., No. CIV.A.4:94CV0198-HLM, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13083, 1997 WL 538887, at *8 (N.D. Ga. Aug. 25, 1997).

"While the omission of variables from a regression analysis may render the analysis less probative than it otherwise might be, it can hardly be said, absent some other infirmity, that an analysis which accounts for the major factors must be considered unacceptable evidence of discrimination." Bazemore, 478 U.S. at 400 (internal quotations omitted) (finding multiple regression analysis admissible to prove pattern or practice of racial discrimination).

Defendants also challenge the data underlying Dr. Williams' initial analysis. Dr. Williams' reliance [**234] on aggregate data, found in the 1-800-Contacts survey results, and supplemented by aggregate club channel and retailer data, does not in and of itself render his Report unreliable and inadmissible under [*386] Daubert for consideration in conjunction with Plaintiffs Motion for Class Certification. While Dr. Williams did not conduct the surveys or data collection first-hand, he was sufficiently familiar with the methodology employed, through industry materials, to support his reliance upon the massive survey results. Mr. Williams used what data was available, and indeed later supplemented his analysis with actual transactional data as that became available. The 1-800-Contacts survey data was vast in scope, and Defendants have not presented any evidence that it was flawed. Unlike the expert in In re Photochromic Lens Antitrust Litig., No. 8:10-CV-00984-T-27EA, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46107, 2014 WL 1338605, at *24-25 (M.D. Fla. Apr. 3, 2014) cited by Defendants, Dr. Williams establishes the correlation between the survey data and the transactional data, and by using the survey data, Dr. Williams was able to expand his analysis to a larger sampling. Additionally, this is not a case where the prices were widely negotiated by consumers rather than based on list prices, distinguishing [**235] Dr. Williams' analysis from that excluded in *Photochromic Lens, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46107, 2014 WL 1338605, at *25*. Rather, the starting point for prices for contact lenses to which UPPs applied was the UPP itself. Moreover, it appears that Defendants' expert Dr. Snyder also cites to the 1-800-Contacts survey as a source of data for his own analysis of Dr. Williams' Report. (See Doc. S-538 at 92).

Dr. Williams takes discounts, rebates, insurance payments and other price reductions into account as part of his average results, holding those reductions as a constant in his regression analysis. The UPPs were applied nondiscriminatorily across the board, and Defendants have made no showing that these price reductions were in any way tied to the UPPs. Plaintiffs, at the evidentiary hearing, established that rebates were paid on a very small number of products.

"[E]ven if there is considerable individual variety in pricing because of individual price negotiations, class plaintiffs may succeed in proving classwide impact by showing that the minimum baseline for beginning negotiations, or the range of prices which resulted from negotiation, was artificially raised (or slowed in its descent) by the collusive actions of the defendants." In re Commercial Tissue Prods., 183 F.R.D. 589, 595 (N.D. Fla. 1998) (citing cases).

Plaintiffs [**236] contend that any individualized price adjustments through rebates, or discounts began from the UPP floor prices which Plaintiffs allege were artificially and unlawfully inflated by the conspiracy. See id. Additionally, where available, as with the Costco and the 1-800-Contacts transactional "net pricing" data, Dr. Williams folds in actual rebates and discounts into his analysis. Despite some citation to testimony by Defendant manufacturers that the implementation of UPPs was a part of a bigger plan to address prices for consumers, Defendants have not established that the cited price reductions in the forms of rebates, discounts and insurance payments was in any way connected to Defendants' setting UPPs. See In re Nexium Antitrust Litig., 777 F.3d 9, 27 (1st Cir. 2015) ("[A]ntitrust injury occurs the moment the purchaser incurs an overcharge, whether or not that injury is later offset. . . . [I]f a class member is overcharged, there is an injury, even if that class member suffers no damages."); see also Delta/AirTran Baggage Fee, 317 F.R.D. at 683 ("[A] person suffers a cognizable injury and is impacted by a price-fixing conspiracy at the moment he pays an antitrust overcharge, even if the anticompetitive conduct at issue also results in offsetting benefits such as base-fare reductions [**237] or a reduced second-bag fee."). The Court finds no error in Dr. Williams' consideration of the price reductions as a constant in both his "but for" and UPP calculations.

Defendants have forcefully attacked Dr. Williams' conclusion, with the support of their own experts. Defendants' expert, Dr. Snyder re-ran Dr. Williams regressions by substituting an indicator variable for new products never subject to a UPP for products subject to a UPP to demonstrate "false positives." (See Doc. S-538 at 46-47, 93-94 (Snyder Report ¶¶ 96-98 and Exs 9 and 10)). Dr. Williams takes issue with Dr. Snyder's assumptions, specifically his variable for "new" products, as containing "'spurious correlations'" which fail to recognize the "umbrella effect" of the UPPs lifting prices of all comparable and competitive lenses, including those not subject to a [*387] UPP. Plaintiffs contend that "the 'false positives' that Defendants purport to identify are based on Dr. Snyder's identification of increases in prices of non-UPP products." (Doc. S-722 at 20 (citing Doc. S-651 at 39-50 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 56-77)). "[R]ather than correctly evaluating the effect of UPPs on retail contact lens prices using groups of comparable, [**238] competitive products that correspond to 'practical indicia as industry or public recognition,' Dr. Snyder's regression model corresponds to a non-existent marketplace in which the price of each specific type of contact lens can be evaluated in isolation of comparable, competitive contact lenses." (Doc. S-560 at 19-20 (Williams Decl. ¶¶ 29, 31)); See also id. at 28-29 (Williams Decl. ¶ 46) (noting that Dr. Snyder's product-specific regressions "suffer from product-specific, random price variation that masks the true overcharges" and that citing that application of regression models to smaller subgroups of data causes "[t]he effects of potential outliers on regression estimates [to] increase as the number of observations available to estimate each separate coefficient decreases." (citation omitted)). Though Defendants urge the Court to resolve this difference of opinion and to reject Dr. Williams' Report based upon Dr. Snyder's different opinion, this difference of opinion does not preclude admission or consideration of Dr. Williams' Report; it merely goes to its weight.

Defendants also criticize Dr. Williams' failure to "test" his results by analyzing millions of individual contact lens consumer [**239] transactions, which they argue renders the Williams opinion "unreliable" under Daubert. But, as noted by the Eleventh Circuit, the "testing" requirement of Daubert is not necessarily applicable to a statistical analysis of alleged antitrust conduct:

Economic or statistical analysis of markets alleged to be collusive, for instance, cannot readily be repeatedly tested, because each such case is widely different from other such cases and because such cases cannot be made the subject of repeated experiments. The proper inquiry regarding the reliability of the methodologies implemented by economic and statistical experts in this context is not whether other experts, faced with substantially similar facts, have repeatedly reached the same conclusions (because there will be few or no cases that have presented substantially similar facts). Instead, the proper inquiry is whether the techniques utilized by the experts are reliable in light of the factors (other than testability) identified in Daubert and in light of other factors bearing on the reliability of the methodologies.

City of Tuscaloosa, 158 F.3d at 566 n.25. The parties have addressed the reliability of Dr. Williams' methodology and the Court has conducted a rigorous analysis [**240] of the subject. Defendants' argument that Dr. Williams' opinions are not reliable because he failed to "test" them is a "straw man" argument, in light of the Eleventh Circuit's observation in City of Tuscaloosa, "Courts frequently recognize that regression analysis can be used to isolate the effect of an alleged conspiracy on price, taking into consideration other factors that might also influence price, like cost and demand." *In re: Processed Egg Prods. In industries involving varying products and complex pricing structures, antitrust plaintiffs have in recent years trended toward presenting an econometric formula or other statistical analysis to show class-wide impact. The idea is to account for differences from transaction to transaction by assigning variables to certain conditions relating to the transaction (e.g., product features or type of purchaser) or by establishing some type of correlation between product lines or purchasers.

The reliability of an expert's multiple regression analysis depends on the choices the expert makes in choosing variables and setting up the model. See, Daniel L. Rubinfeld, Reference Guide on Multiple Regression 311-17. In determining whether a model is set up correctly, courts consider several questions: has the expert correctly identified the dependent variable; has he or [**243] she chosen the correct explanatory variable that is relevant to the question at issue; are the additional variables chosen all correct or are some missing [or] irrelevant; is the form of the analysis correct?

Kleen Prods., 306 F.R.D. at 602 (citations omitted). Where such methods are reliable, they should be allowed as a means of common proof. Graphics Processing Units, 253 F.R.D. at 491. Dr. Williams does not purport to provide a precise calculation of the exact dollar amount each plaintiff was overcharged. Rather [**245] he seeks to provide a reasonable estimate of each plaintiff's likely overcharge. The use of averages to prove common impact to a putative class is accepted. See Tyson Foods, Inc. v. Bouaphakeo, 136 S. Ct. 1036, 1047-49, 194 L. Cal.2012\)). In short, Dr. Williams regression models present a scatter gram, plotting an average line of prices between numerous data points plotted by variables. Some price points are above the average line and some price points are below the average line. The averages plotted are necessarily not about individual persons, but rather show trends statistically attributable to a given factor—the UPPs, while controlling for other factors. By using averages, Dr. Williams presents a model that he argues follows and demonstrates the general market, averaging out the idiosyncratic outliers both high and low which tend to obscure the average trend of the market price. Dr. Williams' methodology identifies classwide impact that is the result of the wrong alleged. See Comcast, 569 U.S. at 33-37.

The Court finds that Dr. Williams' Report presents a sufficiently reliable functioning model tailored to the facts of this case, using available aggregate data as opposed to overly minute sub-data that would have produced statistically unreliable and meaningless results. See In re Cathode Ray Tube \(CRT\), 308 F.R.D. at 628. Dr. Williams' multiple regression analysis is a sufficiently reliable means of demonstrating [**247] that nearly all consumers who purchased contact lenses paid more than they would have in the absence of the alleged conspiracy, and of measuring those overcharges. See In re Blood Reagents Antitrust Litig., No. 09-2081, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141909, 2015 WL 1\*3901 6123211, at \* 19 \(E.D. Pa. Oct. 19, 2015\). Defendants' objections to the specifics of Dr. Williams' methodology raise debatable issues for cross examination and ultimate determination by the trier of fact. But the objections are not dispositive in terms of striking Dr. Williams' the opinions, and do not affect whether Plaintiffs have offered a reasonable method for determining impact on a class-wide basis.

The Defendants both criticize Dr. Williams' professional methodology employed in conducting his regression analysis, specifically his failure to control for variables they deem to be major factors affecting price, and question the relevance of his conclusion under the regression analysis which necessarily involves averaging, as opposed to individual consumer experiences. For these reasons. Defendants assert that the analysis is not probative of on the issue of impact. That is a merits debate for the factfinder, and not a reason to strike the testimony under Daubert from consideration on of the Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) predominance requirement as to whether antitrust impact is "capable [**248] of proof by evidence common to the class" in consideration of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. E.g. Rejecting Dr. Williams' regression analyses, which appear to follow accepted regression methodology, is inappropriate at this juncture. [See Domestic Drywall, 322 F.R.D. at 232.

The issues raised by Defendants' experts regarding specific aspects and merits of Dr. Williams' analysis are open to debate and bear on the weight of Dr. Williams' opinions. See Urethane Antitrust Litig., 768 F.3d at 1262 (finding that the district court had the discretion to accept the expert's explanation for omitting variables addressing domestic demand in his regression analysis). In conducting a Daubert analysis, a court may not "evaluate the credibility of opposing experts" or the persuasiveness of their conclusions, Quiet Tech., 326 F.3d at 1341; instead, a court's duty is limited to "ensur[ing] that the fact-finder weighs only sound and reliable evidence." Frazier, 387 F.3d at 1272; see also Navelski v. Int'l Paper Co., 244 F. Supp. 3d 1275, 1287 \(N.D. Fla.\). #### 4) Assist the Trier of Fact

An expert witnesses may only testify when the expert's "scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will help the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue." Fed. R. Evid. 702. This prong is geared towards ensuring that the expert testimony is relevant, in addition to being reliable. See Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 152. To satisfy this Daubert requirement, expert testimony must be relevant to an issue in the case and offer insights "beyond the understanding and experience of the average citizen." United States v. Rouco, 765 F.2d at 995. Plaintiffs have carried their burden of showing, by a preponderance of the evidence, that Dr. Williams' testimony is relevant and will assist the trier of fact in determining whether Defendants' alleged conduct resulted in classwide impact. This conclusion does not necessarily mean that the finder of fact has to accept Plaintiffs' theory, but only that Plaintiffs have satisfied the requisites of Daubert. See Domestic Drywall, 322 F.R.D. at 231-32.

B. Defendants' Motion to Exclude Dr. Williams' [**250] Supplemental Declaration

1. Dr. Williams' Supplemental Declaration

In conjunction with Plaintiffs' filing of their Reply Memorandum of Law in Support [\*391] of Motion for Class Certification (Doc. 611; Doc. S-649), Plaintiffs on September 8, 2017 submitted the Supplemental Declaration of Dr. Michael A. Williams, Ph.D. (Docs. 612; S-651 (Williams Supp. Decl.)). In the Supplemental Declaration, Dr. Williams further rebuts the criticisms made by Defendants' experts Drs. Snyder and Cremieux. Id. at 7-11 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 7). He responds to Drs. Snyder and Cremieux as follows:

- 1) Dr. Williams "confirmed that the UPPs caused statistically significant increases in retail prices." Dr. Williams takes issue with Dr. Snyder's use of one regression modification to dispute all 50 of Dr. Williams' regressions. He notes that since the date of his opening Report, he has received additional data from Defendants and third parties, including post-UPP pricing to allow for additional comparisons, all of which support his opinion. (Doc. S-651 at 8-9 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 7.1)).
- 2) Dr. Williams "confirmed that UPPs cause price increases for nearly all class members," and had a common impact. In response to Dr. Snyder's [\*\*251] opinion that Dr. Williams' regressions are not capable of proving common impact, Dr. Williams criticizes Dr. Snyder's "product specific" regression models that reveal "random price variation" as opposed to market variations. Additional data analyzed by Dr. Williams, using ABB Yourlens.com and the 1-800-Contacts transaction data "empirical results" establish the common impact of the UPPs. (Doc. S-651 at 9 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 7.2)).
- 3) Dr. Williams' "damages model does not generate 'false positives.'" Dr. Williams cites to evidence that Alcon raised its wholesale prices by 10% on older non-UPP lenses to "encourage migration" to UPP products." Dr. Williams calls this the "umbrella effect," which empirically exists in the present case." (Doc. S-651 at 10 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 7.3)).
- 4) Dr. Williams "appropriately used aggregate data." Dr. Williams asserts that later available transactional data confirms that his "use of the aggregated data is supported by the fact that the regression results using such data lead to the same conclusion as regression results using transactions data." Specifically, using the later available ABB Yourlens.com transactional data for the ECP channel, Dr. [\*\*252] Williams reasserts that his opinion is that "all or virtually all" class members were affected by Defendants' UPPs. (Doc. S-651 at 10-11 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 7.4)).
- 5) The " 1-800-Contacts survey data are reliable and representative of manufacturers' sales." Dr. Williams cites to his deposition testimony regarding why he considers the survey data reliable, and asserts that Dr. Snyder fails to rebut the survey's reliability. (Doc. S-651 at 11 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 7.5)).
- 6) Dr. Cremieux is incorrect "that individualized inquiry is necessary to determine whether consumers paid higher prices as a result of the alleged conduct," because it is based on the "mistaken and unstated assumption that actual insurance payments, rebates and discounts would have been different in the but-for world." (Doc. S-651 at 11 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 7.6))

(See Doc. S-651 at 8-11 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 7)).

The three remaining Manufacturer Defendants all discontinued their implementation of UPP's in 2016 and 2017. In his Supplemental Declaration, Dr. Williams analyzed "before-during" UPP data for JJVC, and "during-after" UPP data for Alcon and B&L, noting that Alcon and B&L introduced their UPPs on new [**253] products so that there is no "before" data for Alcon and B&L UPP products. (Doc. S-651 at 65 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 113, 114)). According to Dr. Williams, the "after" UPP comparisons "render Dr. Snyder's argument that estimated overcharges in [Dr. Williams'] Opening Report are explained by 'advanced features' of new lenses invalid [s]ince the ["after"] analyses determine estimated overcharges based on prices of the same lenses," accounting for the "advanced features" of new lenses. Id. ¶ 114. Dr. Williams has produced updated damages estimates based upon his supplemental analysis. (See Doc. S-684 at 36-37 (Snyder Sur-Reply Report ¶¶ 81-84)).

[*392] 2. Defendants' Argument

Defendants argue that Dr. Williams' Supplemental Declaration should be excluded because of "(1) the fundamental methodological flaws that plagued his original report remain and (2) his latest report introduces additional problems as well." (Docs. 693 at 5; S-720 at 5). They criticize Dr. Williams' reliance on "average 'overcharges' that do nothing to answer whether contact lens purchasers really were impacted on a class-wide basis that can be accurately determined using common proof." (Docs. 693 at 5; S-720 at 5, 14). Defendants [**254] reiterate that the terms of each consumer's individual transaction must be examined "one by one." Id. at 6. Defendants cite as an example, deposition testimony that B&L offered a rebate to consumers to encourage them to be refit into the "newest technology," presumably covered by a UPP. (Doc. S-720 at 13 (citing (Doc. S-721-2 at 5-6 (Guglielmino Dep. at 58, 326))).

Defendants' expert Dr. Snyder responds that Dr. Williams' "simplistic framework" does not reflect that implementation of a UPP "might not lead to common impact" because the UPP may not be strictly enforced, retailers did not increase prices that were already above the UPP level, or retailers lowered their prices in response to the implementation of a UPP. (Doc. S-684 at 16 (Snyder Sur-Reply Report U 30)). Thus, according to Dr. Snyder, "higher prices alone - which is all that Dr. Williams purports to show - would not constitute proof of common injury." Id. Dr. Snyder recounts detailed exceptions: 1) Wal Mart prices for JJVC Acuvue Oasys (6 pack) were at prices below the UPP; 2) US Vision prices for JJVC Acuvue Oasys (24 pack) ranged from $110 to $138 before the UPP, whereas during the UPP most sold for the UPP price of $110 and for [**255] no more than $120; 3) one-third of the sales of JJVC's 1-Day Acuvue Moist for Astigmatism (30-pack) before the implementation of the UPP was "close" to the $34.50 UPP level according to National Vision retail data, and after the implementation of the UPP, 70% of the sales were at the same or similar level; 4) National Vision data shows that "[s]ome during-period prices" of the JJVC Acuvue Oasys (24-pack) are below the $110 UPP price and "many" are at the price, with the average price being "within 1.5 percent of the UPP" and "prices charged to consumers range from 30 percent below the UPP to 20 percent above." Id. at 18-19 (Snyder Sur-Reply Report ¶¶ 34, 36, 38, 39); (see Doc. S-720 at 14). Dr. Snyder also states that "[t]he overcharge estimates generated by Dr. Williams's regressions vary greatly depending on the data set used," so, for example, Dr. Williams' overcharge estimates for Alcon products range from 1.5% based on 1-800-Contacts data to 18.2 percent based upon National Vision data. (Doc. S-684 at 20 (Snyder Sur-Reply Report ¶ 41)). Dr. Snyder re-ran the regressions by product, which resulted in a different perspective. Defendants assert, in order to better understand Dr. Williams's alleged [**256] 3.7% overcharge for all nine JJVCI products sold through ABB Yourlens.com, Dr. Snyder further broke down the regressions by product. After running the regressions separately for each product, he found that the overcharges actually ranged from -7.5% to 5.9%.

(Doc. S-720 at 14 (citing Doc. S-684 at 20-21 (Snyder Sur-Reply Report ¶ 42)). Similarly, Dr. Snyder counters Dr. Williams' conclusion that five Alcon lenses sold through retailer US Vision averaged an overcharge of 2.6% during the UPP period, with a product by product finding that the estimated overcharges ranged from -6.1% to 6.2%. Id. at 15.

As to the second criticism, Defendants argue that Dr. Williams "manipulates both his regression models and the underlying data." (Docs. 693 at 6, 16; S-720 at 6, 16). Defendants target three aspects of Dr. Williams' Supplemental Declaration. First, they criticize Dr. Williams' redefinition of the proposed class of B&L consumers based on "a cursory and untested observation of 1-800-Contacts data," after July 1, 2015, while failing to make the same adjustment to the definition of the proposed Alcon class of consumers. Defendants charge that Dr. Williams made the adjustment to avoid a finding of "negative [**257] overcharges" for purchases of B&L lenses through 1-800-Contacts upon the introduction of the UPPs. (Docs 693 at 6, 17; S-720 at 6, 17-19 (citing Doc. S-684 at 10-11 [*393] (Snyder Supp. Sur-Reply Report ¶ 18, 19)). Additionally, Defendants argue that while Dr. Williams now controls for "product fixed effects" when measuring overcharges for Alcon and B&L lenses, "he fails to apply that same approach when analyzing JJVC lenses." Id. at 6. Finally, the Defendants question Dr. Williams' inclusion of JJVC wholesale pricing as an independent variable in his updated regressions, "contradict[ing] the very position he took during his deposition concerning his original reports." Id. at 7, 19. Defendants contend that "[b]ecause wholesale prices are usually lower than retail prices, their inclusion in a regression analysis could artificially lower the average pre-UPP prices, thereby increasing overcharges under Dr. Williams' model," and that "[e]xclusion of the wholesale prices, therefore, would be necessary if they were enacted in coordination with the UPP." (Docs. 693 at 19; S-720 at 19). Defendants argue that JJVC changed its wholesale prices as part of "an overall change in pricing policy" (Doc. S-720 at 20-21 (quoting [**258] Doc. S-721-3 at 11 (Angelini Dep. at 140) and citing Doc. S-541-5 at 3-4 (Miura Decl. ¶¶ 5-8) (discussing JJVC's "business strategy" which included lowering wholesale prices, eliminating consumer rebates, and implementing UPPs) and citing (Doc. S-684 at 12-14 (Snyder Sur-Reply Report ¶¶ 21-23) (stating that inclusion of wholesale prices as a variable increases Dr. Williams' finding of JJVC overcharges)).

Defendants argue that Dr. Williams use of additional data to run "before-during" and "during-after" models "result[s] in substantial changes," including a finding that "his new overcharges are significantly lower than those originally calculated for Alcon and B&L." (Docs. 693 at 8; S-720 at 8) (citing Williams Report Tables); see also id. at 22 (citing Doc. S-684 at 7 (Snyder Sur-Reply Report ¶ 11 & Exs. 1A-1C)). Dr. Williams' consideration of post-UPP prices for Alcon and B&L allowed him to consider "product fixed effects." (Doc. 693 at 22; S-720 at 22). However, Defendants contend that "Dr. Williams's decision to ignore product fixed effects in his [JJVC] before-during regressions causes a higher overcharge in all eleven of the regressions; in fact, for some of his [JJVC] before-during regressions, [**259] Dr. Williams's reported overcharge is double what it would have been had he accounted for product fixed effects," increasing Dr. Williams' JJVC damage estimate by $30 million. (Doc. S-720 at 23 (citing Doc. S-684 at 9 (Snyder Sur-Reply Report ¶ 16 (stating that Dr. Williams' use of three broad product categories instead of fixed product effects for JJVC increases his estimated overcharges; "Dr. Williams's decision to cast aside the fixed product effects method used for all of his other analyses in the Supplemental Report arbitrarily increases estimated overcharges . . . ")))); (Doc. S-721-1 at 85 (Williams Supp. Dep. at 84)).

Defendants also attack Dr. Williams' Supplemental Declaration in their Sur-Reply regarding Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. Citing to their own experts' supplemental reports generated in response, Defendants argue that Dr. Williams' Supplemental Declaration is flawed because it relies on averages "that mask significant numbers of unharmed consumers, generate wildly fluctuating results, and cherrypick transactions counted." (Does. S-681 at 20 (citing Doc. S-684 at 4, 6 (Cremieux Sur-Reply Report ¶¶ 6, 9-10) and S-684 at 4-5, 10-11, 22-26 (Snyder Sur-Reply [**260] Report ¶¶ 5(iii), 18, 47-51 (arguing that Dr. Williams inconsistently adjusted the proposed B&L class definition regarding sales through 1-800-Contact after July 2015 but not for Alcon, leading to his reporting "higher estimated overcharges for B&L."))).

Defendants argue that instead of rehabilitating Dr. Williams' opinions, Plaintiffs tender an "entirely new model" from Dr. Williams, in which Dr. Williams revised his horizontal agreement damages model. (Doc. S-681 at 19 (citing (Doc. S-682-10 at 3-4 (Williams 10/17 Dep. at 21-22 (applying the same regression methodology to a different model)))). Defendants argue that Dr. Williams' revised regression models are equally flawed because he fails to address evidence that consumers purchased contact lenses from ECPs who did not participate in the alleged conspiracy; purchased contact lenses at prices that were not set "pursuant to a UPP"; and paid no more for contact [*394] lenses covered by a UPP than they would have if not covered by a UPP. (Doc. S-681 at 19).

3. Plaintiffs' Response

Plaintiffs respond that Dr. Williams' Supplemental Declaration was compiled to address Defendants' criticisms of his initial Report, and to "update his estimated [**261] overcharges and damages with previously unavailable data." (Docs. 715 at 8; S-722 at 8); (see also Docs. 611 at 16; S-649 at 16) (stating that Dr. Williams "analyzed additional data sets only made available to him after he issued his Opening Report," and that "[h]is analysis of that data confirms his additional findings, and rebuts Defendants' experts."). Plaintiffs defend Dr. Williams' use of his multiple regression methodology as offering "the only scientific method[ ] for determining what the prices would have been in the 'but-for' world, the hypothetical world in which Defendants' UPPs were not imposed." (Docs. 715 at 8; S-722 at 8) (emphasis in original).

At the time of Dr. Williams' initial Report, Defendants had not produced any data reflecting transactions after December 2016, which did not capture Alcon's, B&L's, and CV's discontinuance of the UPPs. (Does. 715 at 9; S-722 at 9). In his Supplemental Declaration, Dr. Williams applied a "during-after" UPP analysis for Alcon and B&L to compare the same products using "product fixed effects" rather than categorical variables, which he was unable to do in his initial Report, (eliminating a criticism of Defendants), and a "before-during" [**262] analysis for JJVC "rather than the 'before-during-after' approach because the latter is affected by the lingering effects of JJVC's UPP restraint even after its abandonment." (Docs. S-722 at 10). Plaintiffs contend that "while the during-after models provide a more complete (albeit conservative) damages estimate for Alcon and B&L, because JJVC applied its UPP to older products, the before-during model is the most econometrically appropriate model as to JJVC." Id. at 21. Plaintiffs note that by the time Dr. Williams filed his Supplemental Declaration on September 8, 2017, the following new data sets had become available: 1) customer-level transactions for ECPs (ABB Yourlens.com); 2) customer-level transactions for internet sales (I-800-Contacts), and 3) additional data from the retailer and club channels. (Docs. 715 at 10; S-722 at 10). This newly produced data permitted Dr. Williams to conduct "customer-specific" regressions (adding 300,000 customer specific variables from the ABB Yourlens.com data, and 5.7 million customers in the 1-800 Contacts transaction data set, addressing a criticism leveled by Defendants, and ultimately bolstering his findings. (Doc. S-722 at 15 (citing Doc. S-651 at [**263] 86-89, 90-93 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 159-166 and Figures 7-10)). He concluded that "93-100% of customers in the ABB data set and 96-100% of those in the 1-800-Contacts data set had at least one overcharge during the damages period." Id. at 16 (citing Doc. S-651 at 88-89 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 164-65)). In his Second Supplemental Declaration, dated December 4, 2017, Dr. Williams reports using the "before-during approach for JJVC customers," and finding that "96-100% of customers in both datasets had at least one overcharge during the damages periods." (Doc. S-722 at 16 (citing Doc. S-723 at 13 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. n.33) (emphasis in original)). Then, in his Second Supplemental Declaration, Dr. Williams reports that running his same regressions with the newly produced customer level indicator variables from National Vision (internet channel) and US Vision (retail channel), he found that "99-100% of customers in both of these datasets had at least one overcharge transaction during the damages period." (Doc. S-722 at 16 (citing Doc. S-723 at 18 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 22-24) (emphasis added))).

Plaintiffs also sight to a subsequent declaration prepared by Dr. Williams, dated December [**264] 4, 2017, in which he further "refined his overcharge estimates," considering additional data from National Vision - Internet Channel, and US Vision. (Doc. S-722 at 11); (see Doc. S-723 at 18 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶ 22)). Plaintiffs represent that Dr. Williams also excluded "clearly anomalous transactions from the ABB Yourlens.com database" in compiling this Second Supplemental Declaration. (Doc. S-722 at 11). According to Plaintiffs, "[u]sing the same standard [**395] methodology as before, but with the new data, Dr. Williams finds that more than 96% of class members suffered an antitrust injury when they purchased a disposable contact lens subject to a UPP." Id. at 11. Dr. Williams reached similar results using Dr. Snyder's product-by-product regressions, which he opined "when done properly show that the UPPs injured all or nearly all class members," updating data using net rather than gross prices, using a "before-during" approach for JJVC UPP lenses, and removing non-ECP sales by ABB Yourlens.com to two discount retailers from the analysis. (Doc. S-722 at 19-20 (citing S-723 at 27-45 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 31-32, Tables 1-11, Figures 9-13)).

Plaintiffs assert that "[b]ecause JJVC imposed [**265] UPPs on its legacy products, Dr. Williams compared the same products in the 'before' and 'during' periods. For the other Manufacturer Defendants, Dr. Williams employed standard industry groupings of lens types for comparable non-UPP lenses to calculate 'before' prices in the benchmark period." (Docs. 715 at 10; S-722 at 10). Dr. Williams criticizes Dr. Snyder's use of the "before-during-after" approach to comparing JJVC's prices because "after JJVC removed its UPPs, it attempted to maintain the retail prices of its contact lenses at levels similar to those in the damages period." (Doc. S-723 at 25 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶ 29); (Doc. S-651 at 74 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 136 (citing Doc. S-661-62 (JJVC sales call notes))))).

Plaintiffs contend that "[t]he JJVC wholesale prices were lowered not because of UPPs but because JJVC separately recognized its lack of new products and excessively high wholesale prices." (Doc. S-722 at 9, 25-27 (citing inter alia Doc. S-723 at 54 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 45-51))). Dr. Williams states that he decided to include JJVC's wholesale prices as a variable in his regression analysis because they were implemented independent of the UPPs, based not just [**266] on Laura Angelini's testimony, but also on opinions set forth in Dr. Solow's unchallenged Supplemental Report. (Doc. S-723 at 54 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶ 46 (citing Doc. S-650 at 13 (Solow Supp. Report ¶ 24)))); (see also Doc. S-661-128 at 3-4, 8 (Angelini Dep. at 57-58, 140 ("These [wholesale prices and UPPs] were two separate work streams in our pricing strategy." . . . "[F]irst we changed the selling price, and then we implemented the UPP . . . [I]t was done over the course of a short period of time, and these were two separate actions."))). Additionally, to the extent that JJVC's wholesale prices are "connected" and "exogenous" to the UPPs as opposed to "dependent" on JJVC's UPPs, they may still be properly included as a variable in the regression analysis. (Doc. S-723 at 55 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶ 47))). According to Plaintiffs, even assuming that wholesale prices were not endogenous and should not be included as an independent variable in determining JJVC's regressions, "whether one includes or excludes wholesale prices, the before-during regressions analyses demonstrate that all or nearly all class members suffered antitrust impact and damages." (Doc. S-722 at 27 (citing [**267] Doc. S-723 at 57, 105-106 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 51-52 and Tables A31 and A32))).

Plaintiffs respond that Dr. Williams' decision to shorten the damages period for class members who purchased B&L lenses through 1-800-Contacts, was a result of the ruling by the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit Court upholding the State of Utah's statutory prohibition of UPP enforcement, which took effect in June 2015. Inasmuch as 1-800-Contacts is headquartered in Utah, the company responded to the court ruling by lowering prices, and "as to sales by 1-800-Contacts, the B&L UPP effectively ended by July 1, 2015." (Doc. S-722 at 22-24 (citing Doc. S-651 at 77 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 140 n.251))). Dr. Williams states that he did not see similar price reductions to UPP lenses manufactured by JJVC and Alcon. (Doc. S-651 at 77 (Williams Supp. Decl. ¶ 140 n.251))).

Plaintiffs repeat their argument that Dr. Williams' use of averages is appropriate because each contact lens product had a single minimum price under Defendants' UPPs, and contend that Dr. Williams in his two supplemental declarations, "confirms his findings that all or almost all Class members are impacted using both customer-specific [**268] regressions and even Dr. Snyder's product specific [*396] overcharge regressions." (Docs. 715 at 13-14; S-722 at 13-14). Dr. Williams disputes Defendants' anecdotally based assertion that three named Plaintiffs did not suffer antitrust injury, noting that the anecdotal examples represent 6 out of 3,880,525 transactions for UPP products, and includes transactions with settled CV and transactions outside of the damages period. (Doc. S-723 at 9 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶ 11)). He also counters that the named Plaintiffs would have received the same manufacturer rebate in a "but for" world; would have paid the higher prices on UPP products for remaining transactions or non-ECP purchases made during the damages period; or would have paid even less for UPP contact lenses after insurance reimbursement in the "but for" world. Id. at 9-11 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 11-16). Countering Defendants experts Drs. Snyder and Cremieux, Dr. Williams states:

In sum, comparing, in isolation from other products in the same market and without controlling for other factors that may affect prices: (1) the actual price paid (by any specific class member) on a product that was at the time of purchase subject to a UPP to (2) the [**269] actual price paid (by the same class member) on the same product when the product was not subject to a UPP provides no useful information regarding that individual class member's overcharges. Neither does that comparison provide a valid test for whether my regression analysis (which uses the well-known and widely accepted dummy variable regression methodology) [footnote omitted] demonstrates common impact.

(Doc. S-723 at 8-9 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶ 10)). Dr. Williams contends that Dr. Snyder's comparisons, in isolation from other customers and other products in the same market is not supported by science or peer-reviewed literature. Id. at 12 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶ 16); see also id. at 23-24 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 26-28 (criticizing Dr. Snyder's "product-specific overcharge regressions")). He also disputes Defendants' assertion that he failed to consider the effect of discounts, and responds that he took discounts into account in 23,466,264 (or 99.8 %) observations, comprising 97.2% of total sales in his datasets. Id. at 46 (Williams 2d Supp. Report ¶ 34)).

4. Discussion

Rebuttal or reply expert reports are "intended solely to contradict or rebut evidence on the same subject matter identified by another [**270] party . . ." Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(D)(ii). "Rebuttal expert reports are proper if they contradict or rebut the subject matter of the affirmative expert report." *Leaks v. Target Corp., No. CV414-106, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87333, 2015 WL 4092450, at *3 (S.D. Ga. July 6, 2015)*. "The test under Rule 26(a)(2)(D)(ii) is not whether a rebuttal report contains new information, but whether it is 'intended solely to contradict or rebut evidence on the same subject matter' of an opponent's expert report." *Teledyne Instruments, Inc. v. Cairns, No. 6:12-cv-854-Or1-28TBS, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153497, 2013 WL 5781274, at *17 (M.D. Fla. Oct. 25, 2013)*. "[R]ebuttal and reply reports 'may cite new evidence and data so long as the new evidence and data is offered to directly contradict or rebut the opposing party's expert.'" Withrow v. Spears, 967 F. Supp. 2d 982, 1002 (D. Del. 2013) (quoting Glass Dimensions, Inc. ex rel. Glass Dimensions, Inc. Profit Sharing Plan & Trust v. State St. Bank & Trust Co., 290 F.R.D. 11, 16 (D. Mass. 2013)).

Defendants have not challenged Dr. Williams' Supplemental Declarations as untimely or procedurally improper. Moreover, Defendants had an adequate opportunity to respond to Dr. Williams' Supplemental Declaration, (see Docs. 674, S-681), and to depose Dr. Williams' regarding his Supplemental Declaration . (See Docs. 668; S-682-10). The Court finds that the Supplemental Declarations are proper rebuttal, and discovery is ongoing. (See, e.g. Docs. 361, 749, 815). Defendants do challenge the admissibility of Dr. Williams' Supplemental Declaration under Daubert.

The crux [**271] of Defendants' argument that Dr. Williams' opinions should be discounted and not considered in support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification is that there is no class-wide method for determining whether someone was impacted by [*397] the existence of UPPs and averages cannot accurately answer that question for any member of the putative class given different types of contact lenses sold under different pricing strategies by a multitude of different retailers, compounded by different insurance policies, rebate offerings, and discounts that can impact the out-of-pocket cost to any individual consumer."

(Docs. 693 at 5; S-720 at 5) (emphasis added); see also id. at 9. At the evidentiary hearing, Dr. Snyder testified that it was inappropriate to apply a regression model to the circumstances of this case.

The Court recognizes that courts are split regarding the viability and reliability of regression models to prove classwide impact; Plaintiffs and Defendants cite to numerous cases supporting their respective positions. But addressing the specific facts of this case, as set forth in the evidence proffered by Plaintiffs' through their experts Drs. Williams and Solow, the Court concludes that in this [**272] case, a multiple regression analysis is a sufficiently reliable and appropriate means to establish class wide impact of alleged illegal antitrust conduct setting minimum consumer prices. By their very nature, multiple regression models illustrating the average effect on price will necessarily have some individuals paying more after implementation of the UPP and some paying less. That individuals may not establish that they indeed paid more for their contact lenses during the UPP-period goes to individual damages, not predominance. What Dr. Williams' Report and subsequent declarations demonstrate is the "impact" of UPPs on retail prices of contact lenses for which UPPs were implemented. The impact can indeed be demonstrated with different permutations, for instance, by product or by manufacturer, as discussed by Defendants' expert Dr. Snyder. But the detailed observations of individual products sold by individual retailers is a question for the determination of damages for class members, and does not derail Plaintiffs' proffered evidence and expert opinion that impact can be demonstrated on a classwide basis.

While Defendants' experts have identified possible flaws and weaknesses in [**273] Plaintiffs' experts' reports, their critiques do not disqualify Plaintiffs' experts from proffering evidence and opinions in support of Plaintiffs' Motions for Class Certification. After conducting a full and rigorous Daubert review of Plaintiffs' experts' reports, and evaluating and weighing Defendants' conflicting experts' reports, the Court determines that Plaintiffs' experts opinions and reports are sufficiently reliable and persuasive, and are admissible for the Court's consideration of Plaintiff's Motion for Class Certification.

C. Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification

Having denied Defendants' Daubert Motions to exclude Plaintiffs' experts Drs. Solow and Williams, the Court turns to Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification, evaluating each statutory requirement in turn.

1. Standing

Article III of the United States Constitution permits the court to hear only "Cases" and "Controversies." U.S. Const. art. III, § 2; see Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 498, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (1975). Article III standing has three elements: (1) injury in fact to "a legally protected interest" that is "(a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical;" (2) "a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of" that is fairly traceable to the defendant's action; [**274] and (3) a likelihood that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. Fla. Family Policy Council v. Freeman, 561 F.3d 1246, 1253 (11th Cir. 2009) (quoting Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992)).

Prior to the certification of a class, "the district court must determine that at least one named class representative has Article III standing to raise each class subclaim." Prado-Steiman ex rel. Prado v. Bush, 221 F.3d 1266, 1279-80 (11th Cir. 2000). "[A] claim cannot be asserted on behalf of a class unless at least one named plaintiff has suffered the injury that gives rise to that claim." Id. at 1280 (citation omitted). "[T]he Court need not decide whether all putative class members must have standing as the Court is [*398] empowered to amend an over-inclusive class definition; an over-inclusive class may be remedied "by refining the class definition rather than by flatly denying class certification on that basis." A&M Gerber Chiropractic LLC v. GEICO Gen. Ins. Co., 321 F.R.D. 688, 695-96 (S.D. Fla. 2017) (quoting Messner v. Northshore Univ. Health Sys., 669 F.3d 802, 825 (7th Cir. 2012)).

While the question of standing appears to relate more to the Rule 23 "typicality" analysis, see Piazza v. Ebsco Indus., Inc., 273 F.3d 1341, 1346 (11th Cir. 2001) ("Typicality also encompasses the question of the named plaintiff's standing, for without individual standing to raise a legal claim, a named representative does not have the requisite typicality to raise the same claim on behalf of a class." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)), Defendants raise the question of Plaintiffs' standing in the context of their [**275] predominance argument by contending that Plaintiffs cannot establish standing through common evidence on a classwide basis.

Antitrust standing "involves more than the 'case or controversy' requirement that drives constitutional standing." Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1448 (11th Cir. 1991). It requires "an analysis of prudential considerations aimed at preserving the effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. . . . Antitrust standing is best understood in a general sense as a search for the proper plaintiff to enforce the antitrust laws." Id. (citations omitted); see also Omni Healthcare, Inc. v. Health First, Inc., No. 6:13-cv-1509-Orl-37DAB, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7284, 2015 WL 275806, at *7 (M.D. Fla. Jan. 22, 2015). The Eleventh Circuit employs a two-pronged test to determine whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. See Palmyra Park Hosp., Inc. v. Phoebe Putney Mem'l Hosp., 604 F.3d 1291, 1299 (11th Cir. 2010). "[F]irst, the plaintiff must have alleged an antitrust injury." Id. An antitrust injury is an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Second, "the plaintiff must be an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws." Palmyra, 604 F.3d at 1299. The "efficient enforcer" requirement ensures that a "particular plaintiff will efficiently vindicate the goals of the antitrust laws." Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1452; see also Omni Healthcare, Inc. 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7284, 2015 WL 275806, at *7. Antitrust standing "can be established [**276] by showing that consumers paid higher prices for a product due to anticompetitive actions of a defendant, such as a horizontal market allocation scheme." In re Online DVD-Rental Antitrust Litig., 779 F.3d 914, 922 (9th Cir. 2015).

Related to Defendants' argument regarding individualized impact, Defendants assert that Plaintiffs cannot show injury and standing on a class-wide basis using common evidence. (Docs. 505 at 12, 15, 23, 52; S-540 at 12, 15, 23, 52). "[I]mpact" (or 'injury-in-fact') and 'damages' are two distinct elements of an antitrust claim - injury-in-fact is whether the plaintiffs were harmed and damages quantify by how much." In re Ethylene Propylene Diene Monomer (EPDM) Antitrust Litig., 256 F.R.D. 82, 88 (D. Conn. 2009) (emphasis in original). To establish standing, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs must prove that the specific retailer from which he or she purchased contact lenses conspired with Defendants regarding the UPP price. (Docs. 505 at 12, 15; S-540 at 12, 15). "[T]he only way to determine whether a putative class member purchased contact lenses from an iECP who participated in the alleged conspiracy is to inquire into the iECP's dealings with the manufacturer or distributor from whom s/he purchased lenses." Id. at 52-53. Defendants contend that ECPs of the proposed class representatives provided unrebutted testimony that they did not [**277] participate in the alleged conspiracy. Id. at 53 (citing declarations and deposition testimony of ECP's).

As noted by the District Court for the Southern District of Florida, there is no "binding precedent requiring that a district court speculatively determine whether every putative class member has Article III standing." A & M Gerber Chiropractic, 321 F.R.D. at 695. The Eleventh Circuit holds that the district court must, at a minimum, be satisfied that at least one named plaintiff has Article III standing. Prado—Steiman, 221 F.3d at 1279 (Prior to the certification of a [*399] class and before undertaking any analysis under Rule 23, the Court "must determine that at least one named class representative has Article III standing to raise each class subclaim."); see also A&M Gerber Chiropractic, 321 F.R.D. at 695-96; Veal v. Crown Auto Dealerships, Inc., 236 F.R.D. 572, 577 (M.D. Fla. 2006).

Plaintiffs may prove the existence of an antitrust agreement by circumstantial evidence. In this context, they may through evidence establish the alleged conspiracy to set and enforce minimum prices on consumers circumstantially, as opposed to with direct evidence. Plaintiffs also contend that large retailers' prices were also implicated by Defendants' alleged antitrust conduct. Thus, testimony that ECPs did not "participate" in the alleged conspiracy may be countered by circumstantial [**278] evidence that they too were subject to and required to charge at least the UPP minimum price for the covered conduct lens products, or risk losing access to them. To the extent that ECP conspiracy participation is required, Defendants' concern that the proposed class definitions may include putative class members who did not purchase from an ECP who participated in the alleged conspiracy, and therefor lacked standing, can be remedied by narrowing the scope of the class. See A & M Gerber Chiropractic, 321 F.R.D. at 696; see also Bouton v. Ocean Properties, Ltd., 322 F.R.D. 683, 693 (S.D. Fla. 2017) ("[A] plaintiff may seek to certify a class definition narrower than the one proposed in the operative pleading." (emphasis in original)).

Defendants argue that as indirect purchasers of contact lenses, Plaintiffs lack standing to assert their antitrust claims because their alleged injuries are too remote and speculative. (See Docs. 674 at 21; S-681 at 21). They argue that "Plaintiffs cannot show standing without looking at each consumer, each ECP, and each transaction one by one." Id. (citing Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 729-36, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977)); (see also Docs. 505 at 12, 13, 23-24, 52-54; S-540 at 12, 13, 23-24, 52-54). Defendants contend that Plaintiffs are unable to establish with common evidence, and that the evidence belies, that ECPs participated [**279] in the alleged conspiracy or even paid heed to the UPPs. (Docs. 674 at 21-22; S-681 at 21-22).

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). As set forth above, antitrust injury is injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be "the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause."

Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489 (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100, 125, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969)). "The antitrust injury requirement ensures that the plaintiff, although motivated by private interests, is seeking to vindicate the type of injury to the public that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent." Palmyra, 604 F.3d at 1299.

In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977) the Supreme Court narrowly interpreted Section 4, and held that under Section 4, indirect purchasers of price-fixed products—that is, persons who pay an overcharge only after it has been passed on to [**280] them through middlemen—suffer no antitrust injury and thus lack standing to sue. The Court held that an indirect purchaser of a product cannot sue a distant manufacturer for alleged antitrust violations under a "pass-on" theory—meaning a theory that the intermediary passed on the unlawful overcharges through the distribution channel to them. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 729-36; see also Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 488-94, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, (1968) (prohibiting a manufacturer from asserting a pass-on defense against the direct purchaser of its product); Glynn-Brunswick Hosp. Auth. v. Becton Dickinson and Co., 159 F. Supp. 3d 1361, 1369-70 (S.D. Ga. 2016) (citing [*400] Kansas v. UtiliCorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 208-12, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1990) (holding that only a customer who purchases goods directly from an alleged antitrust violator has standing to bring claims under Section 4, even if the direct purchaser passes on the entirety of the unlawful overcharges to its downstream customers)). The Supreme Court recognized several rationales for the direct purchaser rule of Illinois Brick: (1) it eliminates the complication of apportioning overcharges among purchasers in the chain of distribution; (2) it eliminates a pass-on defense for manufacturers, which would reduce the effectiveness of Clayton Act actions by diminishing the recovery available to plaintiffs; and (3) it eliminates the risk of multiple or duplicative recoveries by direct and indirect purchasers. Kansas v. Utilicorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. at 206-207; see [*281] Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 730-31, 745-47.

The Supreme Court, however, has recognized that the rationales underlying the direct purchaser rule "will not apply with equal force in all cases." Utilicorp, 497 U.S. at 216. Accordingly, the Supreme Court has enumerated two exceptions to the rule, which provide for indirect purchaser standing "where there is a preexisting cost-plus contract or where the direct purchaser is owned or controlled by its customer." Lowell v. Am. Cyanamid Co., 177 F.3d 1228, 1229 n. 2 (11th Cir. 1999) (citing Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 735-36 & n. 16). . . . Nevertheless, the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals has determined that the direct purchaser standing rule simply does not apply in the case of a vertical conspiracy, with no allegations of pass on, "where the plaintiff has purchased directly from a conspiring party in the chain of distribution." Lowell, 177 F.3d at 1230, 1232.

Glynn-Brunswick Hosp. Auth., 159 F. Supp. 3d at 1370-71. "[F]or the indirect purchaser to merit standing under this exception, the conspiracy must fix the price paid by the plaintiffs." In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litig., 686 F.3d 741, 749 (9th Cir. 2012).

Illinois Brick does not preclude automatically an antitrust claim by the Plaintiffs as indirect purchasers:

Illinois Brick does not limit suits by consumers against a manufacturer who illegally contracted with its dealers to set the latter's resale price. The consumer plaintiff is a direct purchaser from the dealer who, by hypothesis, has conspired illegally [**282] with the manufacturer with respect to the very price paid by the consumer. There is no problem of duplication or apportionment because the consumer is the only party who has paid any overcharge. Although the manufacturer did not sell directly to the consumer, he is a fellow conspirator with the direct-selling dealer and therefore jointly and severally liable with the dealer for the consumer's injury.

Lowell, 177 F.3d at 1230 (quoting 2 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 264 (rev. ed.1995)). In Lowell, the plaintiffs sued an upstream supplier for conspiring with middlemen distributors to set a "minimum resale price"—the price at which the distributors would sell the supplier's products to the plaintiffs and other customers - in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Id. at 1228-29. The Eleventh Circuit held that the plaintiffs had standing to sue the supplier, because the direct purchaser rule is inapplicable "where the plaintiff has purchased directly from a conspiring party in the chain of distribution." Id. at 1232. The Court reasoned that the rationales for the direct purchaser rule do not apply "to the very different case of vertical conspiracy with no allegations of passing on." Id. at 1230. The Eleventh Circuit recognized [*283] that vertical price-fixing involved conspiracies between retailers, distributors and manufacturers to maintain artificially high resale prices, and found that there were no problems of double recovery because only one illegal act (the vertical conspiracy) was present and only one set of potential plaintiffs existed. Id. Plaintiff purchasers were permitted to proceed against the manufacturer alone, not including the middlemen distributors, "for the full cost of the conspiracy with the dealers." 177 F.3d 1230. In short, the Eleventh Circuit has determined that "the direct purchaser rule does not apply in [*401] the case of a vertical conspiracy." Glynn-Brunswick Hosp. Auth., 159 F. Supp. 3d at 1374.

Though in another context, Plaintiffs' counsel has argued that the decision to name the Defendant Manufacturers and ABB as defendants, and to not include retailers and ECPs as defendants does not defeat their standing under Illinois Brick. This is because [U]nlike the typical horizontal cartel case, there is no overcharge to be passed down a distribution chain from manufacturer to wholesaler to retailer to consumer. Rather, there is a single overcharge paid only by the class of consumers who purchased lenses subject to a UPP, regardless of which retailer or ECP [**284] sold the lens. In other words, the UPPs do not require Costco, for example, to pay an artificially increased price for the lenses. They only require Costco to sell the lenses at a supra-competitive price. Accordingly, there is only one class of consumer plaintiffs in this case - and they are all direct purchasers.

(Doc 150 at 7-8) (citing to Lowell, 177 F.3d at 1230, Plaintiffs contend that all purchasers are "direct purchasers" in both the alleged horizontal and a vertical conspiracies to fix minimum resale prices. Id. at 8-9.

Plaintiffs allege, and present evidence through the testimony and opinion of Dr. Solow, that the distributors either agreed to the UPPs or were forced to implement the UPPs under threat from the Manufacturer Defendants of losing their ability to sell the product, making the so-called middle distributors part of the vertical conspiracy chain, contemplated by the Supreme Court's UtilCorp and the Eleventh Circuit's Lowell exception. Plaintiffs allege a conspiracy with one goal - to fix the price paid by Plaintiff consumers. They do not allege a "pass on" of the higher price. Under these facts, Plaintiffs have purchased contact lenses "directly" from a "conspiring party," satisfying the exception [**285] set forth in Lowell. Plaintiffs cite to evidence that the Manufacturer Defendants set the retail price to be paid by the Plaintiffs as consumers, and that the Defendant Manufacturers threatened all middle retailers in the vertical chain, be they ECPs or discount retailers, that they would stop distributing the UPP to any retailer who sold the product for less than the UPP.

Defendants' concern that the proposed class definitions may include putative class members who did not purchase from an ECP who participated in the alleged conspiracy, and therefore lacked standing, can be remedied by narrowing the scope of the class. See A & M Gerber Chiropractic, 321 F.R.D. at 696; see also Bouton, 322 F.R.D. at 693 ("[A] plaintiff may seek to certify a class definition narrower than the one proposed in the operative pleading." (emphasis in original)).

Turning to Plaintiffs' standing to assert a horizontal conspiracy between Defendants, Plaintiffs' allege that the Plaintiffs who purchased contact lenses manufactured by the Manufacturer Defendants that were subject to a UPP during the Class Period paid a higher price for the product as a result of the UPPs. They present evidence to this effect through Drs. Solow and Williams. Plaintiffs assert, through Dr. Solow, that [**286] Defendants engaged in a "hub-and-spoke" antitrust conspiracy, involving a horizontal agreement between the Manufacturer Defendants. Where a plaintiff alleges antitrust injury from its purchases of a product at prices inflated by a horizontal conspiracy, the standing analysis is also subject to the "direct purchaser" rule. See Animal Sci. Prods. v. China Minmetals Corp., 34 F. Supp. 3d 465, 491 \(D.N.J. 2014\).

Plaintiffs allege and through Dr. Solow present evidence of a multi-level "hub-and-spoke" conspiracy involving a horizontal conspiracy between the Manufacturer Defendants to enact the UPPs, with vertical "spokes" facilitated by ABB and the ECPs, resulting in increased prices reaching the consumer Plaintiffs through vertical means. In this context, Lowell's co-conspirator exception to Illinois Brick is applicable, and Plaintiffs have standing to assert their horizontal conspiracy claim. In State of Ariz. v. Shamrock Foods Co., 729 F.2d 1208, 1211 \(9th Cir. 1984\), plaintiffs alleged that dairy producers engaged in horizontal conspiracy to raise prices, and that retail intermediates, the grocery stores, were co-conspirators with the dairy producers to fix the price of dairy products at the retail level. The court determined [*402] that Illinois Brick did not apply and that the plaintiff consumers had standing to sue the dairy producers because [**287] they alleged that the "retail price was the one fixed," and that their theory of recovery did not depend on pass-on of damages. Shamrock Foods, 729 F.2d at 1211; see generally Glynn-Brunswick Hosp. Auth., 159 F. Supp. 3d at 1374 & n. 8.

As in Shamrock Foods, Plaintiffs limit their claims to alleged retail overcharges, and are not alleging pass-through damages from a wholesale price through a distribution chain of the type barred by Illinois Brick. See Complaint ¶ 48 (Plaintiffs are persons "who made a retail purchase or purchases of disposable contact lenses."); ¶ 78 ("The disposable contact lens market also encompasses a Retail Submarket in which Plaintiffs are consumers."). In the context of this case, Plaintiffs are not the typical "indirect purchasers" through a distribution chain from a horizontal conspiracy. They allege, and the testimony of Dr. Solow at this juncture sufficiently establishes that Defendants agreed to set minimum consumer prices. For this reason, Plaintiffs are more properly considered as "direct purchasers" from the alleged horizontal conspiracy. (See Doc. 50 at 7-8). By limiting their claims to retail prices, Plaintiffs eliminate the risk of duplicative recovery by intermediate direct purchaser distributors of the type sought to be avoided [**288] by the Illinois Brick doctrine. National optical chains, mass merchandisers, and club stores' claims against the Defendants necessarily would involve damages caused by wholesale prices and restrictions on the price they could set to sell UPP-restricted lenses, which are not duplicative of Plaintiffs' alleged injury of paying higher retail prices as a result of the Defendants' alleged horizontal and vertical conspiracies to enact and enforce the UPPs. See Shamrock Foods Co., 729 F.2d at 1213-14. Plaintiffs have antitrust standing to challenge Defendants' alleged conspiracy because their injury, paying higher prices for contact lens products subject to a UPP is "inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict on . . . the. . . . market." Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 479, 484, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 \(1982\) (holding that group health plan subscriber had antitrust standing because she was injured as a direct result of the anticompetitive scheme to deny reimbursement to patients who were treated by psychologists instead of medical doctors, implemented to accomplish the exclusion of psychologists; the injury suffered by the Plaintiff was not too remote from the antitrust violation because the plaintiff's injury was not only foreseeable, but was a "necessary step in [**289] effecting the ends of the alleged illegal conspiracy."). Their alleged injury is not remote, but rather is precisely the sort that the Defendants intended, that is, paying a set anticompetitive minimum price to protect the prescription-writing ECPs' interest in charging sufficient prices for contact lenses to ensure their profit margins. This is exactly the type of injury that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.

Dr. Solow opines that the direct prescribing ECPs, which comprise up to 64% of the sales of contact lens to consumers, lent "extensive support and involvement" in the implementation of the UPPs. (E.g. Doc. S-405 at 5, 15, 19, 38, 40-42, 48-49, 52-54, 63 (Solow Report ¶¶ 4, 20, 31, 67, 72, 73, 87, 93-96, 110)). Additionally, Dr. Williams opines that UPPs caused prices charged by ECPs and national optical chains, mass merchandisers, wholesale clubs and online retailers, which traditionally charge charged less for contact lenses than ECPs, (see Doc. S-405 at 14-16 (Solow Report ¶¶ 22-24)), to increase, under threat of loss of the brand. Putative class members are not remote purchasers through a long distribution chain; they are the target of the alleged horizontal and [**290] vertical interlocking conspiracies. Plaintiffs through Drs. Solow's and Williams' opinions, have provided a reasonable method for determining on a class-wide basis whether and to what extent that alleged retail overcharge created by the UPPs was maintained and imposed directly on each putative plaintiff. The Court determines that Plaintiffs' have standing to assert both their horizontal and vertical antitrust claims.

The California subclass is not affected by Illinois Brick standing concerns, to the extent it is proceeding under the California Cartwright Act (Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700 et seq.); and the California Unfair Competition [*403] Law ("UCL") (Cal. Bus. and Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq.). See Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 991 \(9th Cir. 2000\) (regarding the Cartwright Act); Clayworth v. Pfizer, Inc., 233 P.3d 1066, 49 Cal. 4th 758, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 666 \(Cal. 2010\) (finding that indirect-purchaser pharmacies had standing to bring suit under that Cartwright Act and the UCL). However, the parties did not cite, and the Court could not locate authority supporting that the Maryland Antitrust Act, Md. Code Ann., Com. Law § 11-201 et seq. ("MATA") is not subject to Illinois Brick standing limitations for indirect purchasers. See Davidson v. Microsoft Corp., 143 Md. App. 43, 56, 792 A.2d 336, 344 \(Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2002\) ("In summary, Illinois Brick controls the issue of whether a purchaser has sustained an injury under MATA, meaning that only direct purchasers may bring suit to recover an alleged illegal overcharge."). However, [**291] for the reasons set forth above, both the California and Maryland putative class has standing.

2. Ascertainability

"Before a district court may grant a motion for class certification, a plaintiff seeking to represent a proposed class must establish that the proposed class is adequately defined and clearly ascertainable." Little v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., 691 F.3d 1302, 1304 \(11th Cir. 2012\) (citation omitted). "An identifiable class exists if its members can be ascertained by reference to objective criteria," and that identification is "administratively feasible," meaning "that identifying class members is a manageable process that does not require much, if any, individual-inquiry." Bussey v. Macon Cty. Greyhound Park, Inc., 562 F. App'x 782, 787 \(11th Cir. 2014\) (citations omitted). "Class members need not actually be ascertained prior to certification, but each individual's class membership must be ascertainable at some stage in the proceeding." Bush v. Calloway Consol. Grp. River City, Inc., No. 3:10-cv-841-J-37MCR, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40450, 2012 WL 1016871, at \*4 \(M.D. Fla. Mar. 26, 2012\) (citation omitted).

Plaintiffs argue in their Motion for Class Certification that the "[c]lass members are easily identifiable because they purchased specific contact lenses manufactured by one of the [Manufacturer Defendants] in the United States (or California or Maryland) during the period UPPs were in effect pursuant [**292] to ECP prescriptions." (See also Docs. 396 at 19; S-404 at 19); (Docs. 611 at 24-25; S-649 at 24-25).

Defendants respond that the proposed classes are "overbroad because they include consumers who purchased from retailers of all kinds, even though Plaintiffs allege only that [independent] ECPs conspired with Defendants." (Docs. 505 at 17; S-540 at 17); (see also Docs. 674 at 25; S-681 at 25). They argue Plaintiffs' proposed class definitions include consumers who purchased from not just ECPs, but from "all ECPs and retailers," which can include those ECPs and retailers who were not part of the alleged conspiracy." Id. at 60. As a result, "[a]lmost half of the putative class members may have purchased from retailers not alleged to be part of the conspiracy - e.g., national, regional and online retailers, and bigbox stores." (Docs. 674 at 26; S-684 at 26 (citing Doc. S-537 at 116 (Cremieux Report Ex. 4A)); Doc. 395 at 26-27 (Complaint ¶¶ 79-80)). They contend that the only way to identify who is a co-conspirator ECP "is to conduct an individualized analysis of who supposedly conspired with whom, and which putative class members bought contact lenses from those who conspired." (Docs. 505 at 17; [**293] S-540 at 17); (see also Docs. 674 at 26; S-681 at 26). In addition to overbreadth, Defendants argue that putative class members cannot be identified absent individualized inquiry into whether the putative class member actually purchased UPP-covered contact lenses from an ECP who participated in the alleged conspiracy. Id. at 61-62; (see also Docs. 674 at 27; S-681 at 27 (arguing that the evidence establishes that consumers purchased contact lenses for which there was a UPP price in place, but that the actual price for the lens was not set "pursuant to a UPP.")). Defendants also question Plaintiffs' class definition that includes putative class members who made retail purchases "where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a 'Unilateral Pricing Policy,'" contending that retailers 1-800-Contacts, Luxottica, and "most of the named Plaintiffs' own ECPs did not price [*404] 'pursuant to UPP.'" (Doc. S-540 at 62 (citing Doc. S-537 at 166-172 (Cremieux Report Exhibits comparing 1-800-Contacts prices for selected lenses); Doc. S-541-1 at 2 (Chang Decl. ¶ 7); Doc. S-541-3 at 3 (Huynh Decl. ¶ 5); Doc. S-541-6 at 3 (Prange Decl. ¶¶ 11, 14)); Doc. S-541-7 at 3 (Ruder Decl. ¶ 7)); Doc. S-541-9 at [**294] 3-4 (Takeda Decl. ¶ 13)); Doc. S-541-11 at 3-4 (Sudarsky Decl. ¶¶ 6, 11)); Doc. S-541-13 at 4 (Wessels Decl. ¶¶ 9-10) (discussing Luxottica Retail North America, Inc. pricing above UPP prices)); Doc. S-541-14 at 3 (Williams Decl. ¶ 6)). Additionally, Defendants argue that membership in the class requires individual inquiry.

"[A]scertainability at the class certification stage does not require that a plaintiff actually identify all class members, but rather, it only requires a plaintiff to demonstrate that class members can be identified in reference to objective criteria." PB Prop. Mgmt., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97520, 2016 WL 7666179, at \*19 (citing Bush, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40450, 2012 WL 1016871, at \*4). Plaintiffs' claims allege that the contact lens market prices were inflated as a result of the UPPs, affecting all consumers who meet the putative class definitions, regardless of from whom they purchased the UPP-controlled contact lens, and regardless of whether rebates, discounts or insurance payments subsequently reduced the price of the lens. Plaintiffs' contend that "all Class members who bought UPP contact lenses during the period of UPPs were harmed even if they purchased from Discount Retailers." (Docs. 611 at 26; S-649 at 26). Plaintiffs' proposed class definitions are not overbroad, amorphous [**295] or vague. The Court finds that the proposed classes can be ascertained by reference to objective criteria. The proposed horizontal class requires that a class member be (a) a resident of the United States, who (b) made a consumer retail purchase of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, or B&L from June 1, 2013 to the present for their own use and not for resale, (c) "where the prices for such contact lenses were set pursuant to a 'Unilateral Pricing Policy' and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect," (d) excluding "any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy after July 1, 2015." (Doc. S-649-1). The horizontal subclasses for Maryland and California residents, and the vertical classes by manufacturer, incorporate similar defining language. Id. The Court believes that substituting "subject to a UPP" for "pursuant to a UPP" better describes the putative Plaintiffs' posture.

3. Rule 23(a) Requirements

a. Numerosity

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a)(1) requires that the class be "so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(1). While "mere allegations of numerosity are insufficient," Rule 23(a)(1) imposes a "generally [**296] low hurdle, and a plaintiff need not show the precise number of members in the class." Manno v. Healthcare Revenue Recovery Grp., LLC, 289 F.R.D. 674, 684 (S.D. Fla. 2013) (citations omitted); see Vega v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., 564 F.3d 1256, 1267 (11th Cir. 2009); Evans v. U.S. Pipe & Foundry Co., 696 F.2d 925, 930 (11th Cir. 1983) (stating that the class representative is not required to establish the exact number in the proposed class). "Nevertheless, a plaintiff still bears the burden of making some showing, affording the district court the means to make a supported factual finding that the class actually certified meets the numerosity requirement." Manno, 289 F.R.D. at 684 (emphasis added) (quoting Vega, 564 F.3d at 1267). The numerosity requirement is met when it would be inconvenient or difficult to join all of the class members. Terazosin Hydrochloride, 220 F.R.D. at 684-85. Courts may also take into account other factors under Rule 23(a)(1), "including 'the geographic diversity of the class members, the nature of the action, the size of each plaintiff's claim, judicial economy and the inconvenience of trying individual lawsuits, and the ability of the individual class members to institute individual lawsuits.'" Id. at 685 (citing Walco Invs. v. Thenen, 168 F.R.D. 315, 324 (S.D. Fla. 1996)).

Plaintiffs estimate that the proposed class will "number in the tens of millions," based upon Dr. Solow's observation that 41 million [*405] Americans wear disposable contact lenses. (Docs. 396 at 20; S-404 at 20 (citing Doc. S-405 at 12 (Solow Report ¶ 19 (citing contact lens industry [**297] publication))). Noting that the Court in MDL 1030 observed that "[n]umerosity does not appear to be an issue in this case," see In re Disposable Contact Lens Litig., 170 F.R.D. at 529, Plaintiffs argue that joinder of millions of proposed class members would be "impracticable." (Docs. 396 at 20; S-404 at 20).

Defendants do not dispute that Plaintiffs have met the Rule 23 numerosity requirement.

Considering the number of putative class members, their geographic diversity, the relatively small size of their individual claims, the inconvenience of trying individual lawsuits, and the ability of individual class members to institute individual lawsuits, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have met their burden in establishing that the proposed classes are "so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(1).

b. Commonality

Rule 23(a)(2) requires that there be "questions of law or fact common to the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2). Commonality pertains to the characteristics of the group or class as a whole, unlike typicality which refers to the individual characteristics of the class representative as compared to those of the class members. Piazza, 273 F.3d at 1346 (citing Prado-Steiman, 221 F.3d at 1279). Commonality "does not require complete identity of legal claims." Johnson v. Am. Credit Co. of Ga., 581 F.2d 526, 532 (5th Cir. 1978). In fact, commonality can be satisfied even with some factual variations [**298] among class members. Armstead v. Pingree, 629 F. Supp. 273, 280 (M.D. Fla. 1986). In Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, supra, the Supreme Court clarified the commonality requirement for class certification by specifically rejecting the use of generalized questions to establish commonality. Noting that "any competently crafted class complaint literally raises common questions," 564 U.S. at 349 (citation omitted), the Court focused the required discussion as follows:

What matters to class certification . . . is not the raising of common "questions" - even in droves - but, rather the capacity of a classwide proceeding to generate common answers apt to drive the resolution of the litigation. Dissimilarities within the proposed class are what have the potential to impede the generation of common answers.

Id. at 350 (citation omitted). The Court explained that the "common contention" underpinning a finding of Rule 23(a)(2) commonality "must be of such a nature that it is capable of classwide resolution - which means that determination of its truth or falsity will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims in one stroke." Id. "Commonality requires the plaintiff to demonstrate that the class members 'have suffered the same injury.'" Id. at 350 (quoting Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157).

[Plaintiffs'] claims must depend upon a common contention [**299] . . . . That common contention, moreover, must be of such a nature that it is capable of classwide resolution - which means that determination of its truth or falsity will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims in one stroke.

Id. "[F]or purposes of Rule 23(a)(2) even a single common question will do." Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 984 (quoting Dukes, 564 U.S. at 359) (quotations omitted). "Commonality requires that there be at least one issue whose resolution will affect all or a significant number of the putative class members." Williams v. Mohawk Indus., Inc., 568 F.3d 1350, 1355 (11th Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The "commonality" requirement carries a "light burden," demanding "only that there be 'questions of law or fact common to the class.' . . . This part of the rule 'does not require that all the questions of law and fact raised by the dispute be common,' . . . or that the common questions of law or fact 'predominate' over individual issues." Vega, 564 F.3d at 1268 (citations omitted); see also Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 624, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997) (observing that the "commonality requirement" [*406] is less demanding than the "predominance" requirement).

Plaintiffs allege that the individual Class Representatives purchased contact lenses manufactured by one of the four Manufacturer Defendants all subject to a UPP. The Individual [**300] Class Representatives (and their location and product purchased) are:

Complaint ¶¶ 1, 28-41; (Docs. 396 at 45; S-404 at 45). Plaintiffs argue that the putative Plaintiffs' common contention that "Defendants entered into agreements to develop, implement and enforce UPPs operating as unreasonable restraint of trade" "is capable of classwide resolution." (Docs. 396 at 21; S-404 [*407] at 21). Plaintiffs contend that the "commonality" requirement is satisfied because the following questions of law and fact are common to all claims:

(1) whether the [Manufacturer Defendants] [**301] engaged in a contract, combination, and conspiracy among themselves and with ABB and ECPs to fix, raise, maintain, or stabilize prices of contact lenses in violation of section one of the Sherman Act; (2) whether the UPPs operated as unreasonable restraints of trade; (3) whether Defendants' conduct caused the prices of contact lenses to be sold at artificially high and supra-competitive levels; (4) whether the Defendants' conduct injured Class members, and, if so, the appropriate class-wide measure of damages; and (5) the scope of any injunctive relief available to Class members.

(Docs. 396 at 21-22; S-404 at 21-22) (citing Doc. S-405 at 83-87 (Sow Report ¶¶ 148-156))).

Defendants did not specifically address the commonality requirement of Rule 23\(a\)\(2\).

Where a complaint alleges that the Defendants have engaged in a standardized course of conduct that affects all class members, the commonality requirement will generally be met. See Williams, 568 F. 3d at 1355. Specifically in the antitrust context, courts in the Eleventh Circuit have consistently held that allegations of price-fixing, monopolization, and conspiracy by their very nature involve common questions of law or fact. In re Carbon Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 149 F.R.D. 229, 232 \(M.D. Fla. 1993\); see also Terazosin Hydrochloride, 220 F.R.D. at 685-86 \(S.D. Fla. 2004\); [In re Infant Formula Antitrust Litig., No. MDL-878, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21981, 1992 WL 503465, at \*4 \(N.D. Fla. Jan. 13, 1992\) \[\*\*302\]](#).

Plaintiffs cite a number of common questions of law and fact, including whether, under common principles of antitrust law, Defendants conspired or agreed to set and enforce minimum consumer prices for their contact lens products; the identity of each member of the alleged conspiracy and the facts surrounding how it was carried out; and the time period during which the alleged conspiracy existed. Because of the many common questions of law and fact applicable to the claims of all class members, the Court finds that the requirements of Rule 23\(a\)\(2\) have been satisfied. Accord In re Fla. Cement & Concrete Antitrust Litig., 278 F.R.D. 674, 679 \(S.D. Fla. 2012\) ("[C]ourts have consistently held that the nature of the antitrust conspiracy action compels a finding that common questions of fact and law exist."). The proposed class action could "generate common answers apt to drive the resolution of the litigation," satisfying the commonality requirement. See Dukes, 564 U.S. at 350.

c. Typicality

Class certification also requires that the claims of the class representatives be typical of those of the class. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(3\). In order to establish typicality, "there must be a nexus between the class representative's claims or defenses and the common questions of fact or law which unite the class." [Kornberg v. Carnival Cruise Lines, Inc., 741 F.2d 1332, 1337 \(11th Cir. 1984\) \[\*\*303\]](#). "A sufficient nexus is established if the claims or defenses of the class and the class representative arise from the same event or pattern or practice and are based on the same legal theory." Id.; see also Williams, 568 F.3d at 1357; see Falcon, 457 U.S. at 156 ("[A] class representative must be part of the class and possess the same interest and suffer the same injury as the class members." (citation omitted)). When the class representative's injury is different from that of the rest of the class, his claim is not typical and he cannot serve as the class representative. See Murray v. Auslander, 244 F.3d 807, 811 (11th Cir. 2001). Moreover, when proof of the class representative's claim would not necessarily prove the claims of the proposed class members, the class representative does not satisfy the typicality requirement. Brooks v. S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 133 F.R.D. 54, 58 (S.D. Fla. 1990). Thus, commonality traditionally refers to characteristics of the class as a whole, while typicality "refers to the individual characteristics of the named plaintiff in relation to the class." Prado-Steiman, 221 F.3d at 1279. "Typicality, however, does not require identical claims or defenses." Kornberg, 741 F.2d [*408] at 1337. "A factual variation will not render a class representative's claim atypical unless the factual position of the representative markedly differs from that of other members of the class." Id.; see also Appleyard v. Wallace, 754 F.2d 955, 958 (11th Cir. 1985) ("[T]he typicality requirement may be satisfied even if there are factual distinctions between the claims of the named plaintiffs and those of other class members." (citation omitted)), disapproved on other grounds sub nom., Green v. Mansour, 474 U.S. 64, 106 S. Ct. 423, 88 L. Ed. 2d 371 (1985).

Plaintiffs argue that the "typicality" requirement is met because "the Proposed Classes' and Subclasses' claims arise from the same alleged practices of Defendants: their conspiracy to restrict prices, which resulted in each Plaintiff paying more for their lenses." (Doc. 396 at 22-23; Doc. S-404 at 22-23) (emphasis in original). They argue that they have met the typicality requirement because all members of the proposed classes have been subjected to increased prices for their contact lenses because of the Defendants' unlawful conduct in connection with the implementation of UPPs. Plaintiffs allege that the same unlawful conduct affected both the class representatives and the class itself.

Defendants assert that the named class representatives are not "typical" of the putative class they purport to represent, arguing that based upon discovery thus far,

[T]he UPPs either had no effect on the named Plaintiffs or affected [**304] them in highly variable and individual ways. For example, many named Plaintiffs were not impacted by any UPP as they paid retail prices far below the UPP price, received manufacturer rebates that reduced their out of pocket cost dramatically (in some cases to $0), obtained ECP/retailer discounts that took the purchase price well below the relevant UPP price, and/or benefitted from insurance payments that covered all (or almost all) of their acquisition costs for their contact lenses.

(Doc. 505 at 25); (Doc. S-540 at 25).

"[O]nce the party advancing the class establishes that the same unlawful conduct was directed at or affected both the class representatives and the class itself, then 'the typicality requirement is usually met irrespective of varying fact patterns which underlie the individual claims.' Terazosin Hydrochloride, 220 F.R.D. at 687 (quotation and citation omitted) (finding the claims of the consumer class representative were "not only typical of the claims of all class members, they were virtually identical in nature, notwithstanding variations in the amount of damages."). The factual distinctions between some of the named Plaintiffs and the putative class do not negate the shared interest of the Plaintiffs in proving [**305] Defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct; which they allege caused antitrust injury. The Court determines that the named class representatives are "typical" of the putative class, under Rule 23(a)(3).

d. Adequacy of Representation

The final requirement for class certification under Rule 23(a) is adequate representation. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4). A plaintiff can meet this requirement by showing that the class representative has common interests with the class members and by demonstrating that the class representative will vigorously prosecute the interests of the class through qualified counsel. Piazza, 273 F.3d at 1346. The adequacy of representation analysis involves two inquiries: "(1) whether any substantial conflicts of interest exist between the representatives and the class; and (2) whether the representatives will adequately prosecute the action." Valley Drug Co., 350 F.3d at 1189 (citation omitted); see also Amchem Prods., 521 U.S. at 625 ("The adequacy inquiry under Rule 23(a)(4) serves to uncover conflicts of interest between named parties and the class they seek to represent."). "It is axiomatic that a putative representative cannot adequately protect the class if his interests are antagonistic to or in conflict with the objectives of those he purports to represent." Pickett v. Iowa Beef Processors, 209 F.3d 1276, 1280 (11th Cir.2000) (quotation and citation omitted). "[T]he existence [**306] of minor conflicts alone will not defeat a party's claim to class certification." Valley Drug, 350 F.3d at 1189. Rather, "the conflict must be a fundamental one going to the specific issues in [*409] controversy." Id. "A fundamental conflict exists where some party members claim to have been harmed by the same conduct that benefitted other members of the class" and "the economic interests and objectives of the named representatives differ significantly from the economic interests and objectives of unnamed class members." Id. at 1189-90. "The adequacy-of-representation requirement 'tend[s] to merge' with the commonality and typicality criteria of Rule 23(a), which 'serve as guideposts for determining whether. ... maintenance of a class action is economical and whether the named plaintiffs claim and the class claims are so interrelated that the interests of the class members will be fairly and adequately protected in their absence.'" Amchem Prods., 521 U.S. at 626 n. 20 (quoting Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157, n. 13).

Plaintiffs contend that "[e]ach named Plaintiff has a common interest in representing all class members, as the alleged conspiracy involves a nationwide plan to eliminat[e] competition." (Docs. 396 at 23; S-404 at 23) (quoting In re Disposable Contact Lens Antitrust Litig., 170 F.R.D. at 532). They assert:

There are no conflicts among the Plaintiffs; they are a cohesive [**307] group seeking damages from Defendants, share the same cause, raise the same liability questions, and will have their claims decided by the same answers deciding Defendants' misconduct. It is "of no moment" that some Plaintiffs purchased their lenses from one Manufacturer Defendant while others made their purchases from different ones. Plaintiffs allege that all [Manufacturer Defendants] were either a part of one horizontal conspiracy or entered into identical, anticompetitive vertical agreements.

(Docs. 396 at 23; Doc. S-404 at 23). They point out that Defendants do not argue, and the evidence does not support that any class member actually benefitted from the implementation of the UPPs, which could give rise to a conflict. (Docs. 611 at 27; S-649 at 27). As to class counsel, Plaintiffs assert that class counsel has experience litigating antitrust class actions, and have to resources to commit to the prosecution of Plaintiffs' claims. Plaintiffs' argue that the Court has already determined that class counsel meets the requirements of Rule 23(g)(1)(A)(I)-(IV), and request that the Court make that same finding and appoint Hausfeld LLP, Robins Kaplan LLP, and Scott + Scott LLP as Class Counsel. (Docs. 396 at [**308] 24; S-404 at 24).

Defendants contend that "[s]ubstantial conflicts of interest preclude the proposed class representatives from adequately representing all putative class members, including those consumers who paid less for contact lenses that were subject to a UPP, than they paid before." (Docs. 505 at 16; S-540 at 16). Defendants argue that, for example, a purchaser of at least two of JJVC's products experienced a decrease in price after JJVC implemented its UPP. (Doc. S-540 at 58 (citing (Doc. S-541-13 at 7 (Wessels Decl. ¶ 11(a)-(b)). Defendants assert that "several of the named Plaintiffs have interests that directly conflict with those of the putative class because the price they paid actually decreased upon the introduction of UPPs, and thus the class itself would include people of diverging and conflicting economic interests." (Docs. 674 at 24; S-681 at 24). Defendants contend that those consumers who paid less for contact lenses after the implementation of UPPs did benefit from the UPPs. (Docs. 647 at 24-25; S-681 at 24-25); (Docs. 505 at 16; S-540 at 16,58-59).

Defendants do not dispute the adequacy of class counsel, and the Court independently determines that Plaintiffs' counsel [**309] are skilled and adequate in all respects.

The Court finds that Plaintiffs are adequate class representatives who have vigorously represented the putative class in this action, and are capable of continuing to do so.

"A conflict is not fundamental when... all class members share common objectives and the same factual and legal positions and have the same interest in establishing the liability of defendants." Ward v. Dixie Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 595 F.3d 164, 180 (4th Cir.2010) (internal punctuation omitted); Telecomm Tech. Servs., Inc. v. Siemens Rolm Commc'nns, Inc., 172 F.R.D. 532, 544 (N.D. Ga.1997) (Adequacy requirement looks to "[a]ntagonistic interests" among class members creating risk that "one party's [*410] interest may be sacrificed for another's").

"Moreover, a conflict will not defeat the adequacy requirement if it is 'merely speculative or hypothetical.'" Ward, 595 F.3d at 180 (internal punctuation omitted). "Potential" conflicts of interest are likewise insufficient to defeat certification; instead, a district court should continue to monitor the matter going forward and may "revisit the issue and de-certify the class if a true conflict ever manifested." In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 279 F.R.D. 90, 113 \(E.D.N.Y.2012\); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(c\)\(1\) (Class certification order "may be altered or amended before final judgment.").

Delta/AirTran Baggage Fee, 317 F.R.D. at 680-81, 695 (finding representation adequate even though some passengers may have benefitted from defendants' conduct where such [**310] benefit was "de minimis" and "incidental to the antitrust overcharge."). Plaintiffs' expert Dr. Williams submits that his regression analysis demonstrates that nearly all putative Plaintiffs paid higher contact lens prices for products subject to Defendants' UPPs, than they would have paid but for Defendants' alleged illegal actions, whether or not the final price was reduced by discounts, rebates or insurance payments. Dr. Williams reviews one-by-one those Named Plaintiffs who Defendants contend paid less for their contact lenses while the UPPs were in effect, (Doc. S-723 at 9-11 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 11-15)). Dr. Williams states that under his analysis, the insurance payments and rebates which impacted the Named Plaintiffs' purchases during the UPP period are equally applied in the "but for" calculation, and thus the overall impact of the UPP still increased the price to the Named Plaintiff. He also found that Defendants did not necessarily consider all purchases made by the Named Plaintiffs during the UPP period, and that indeed the prices they paid on these other purchases were also impacted by the UPP in place. Id.

Defendants have not established that any Plaintiffs actually [**311] or potentially realized a "net economic benefit" as a result of Defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct, or that they were subjectively aware that they received a price reduction through rebates, discounts or insurance payments as a result of a UPP. Compare Photochromic Lens, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46107, 2014 WL 1338605, at \*13-14. Rather, the alleged decrease in prices cited by Defendants was occasioned by rebates, discounts and insurance payments, not by the Defendants' alleged agreement to enact UPPs. The potential for individualized damages does not suffice as a fundamental conflict, and is not sufficient to defeat class certification. Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 990. This is because "[e]ach class member is connected by the common predominate inquiry." Id.

4. Rule 23(b) Requirements

In addition to satisfying the requirements of Rule 23\(a\), a plaintiff seeking class certification must satisfy at least one of the alternative requirements of Rule 23\(b\). In their Motion for Class Certification, Plaintiffs seeks certification under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(2\) and \(3\).

a. Rule 23(b)(2); Injunctive or Declaratory Relief

Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) applies when "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(2\). "A hybrid [**312] Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) class action is one in which class members seek individual monetary relief... in addition to class-wide injunctive or declaratory relief." Cox v. Am. Cast Iron Pipe Co., 784 F.2d 1546, 1554 \(11th Cir. 1986\). A hybrid or Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) class action is not available where "the appropriate relief relates exclusively or predominantly to monetary damages." Holmes v. Cont'l Can Co., 706 F.2d 1144, 1155 \(11th Cir. 1983\) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(2\) Advisory Committee Notes (1966 Amendment)). If the declaratory relief is merely incidental to the monetary damages, then a Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) hybrid class action is inappropriate. Agan v. Katzman & Korr, P.A., 222 F.R.D. 692, 701-02 \(S.D. Fla.2004\); Swanson v. Mid Am. Inc., 186 F.R.D. 665,668-69 \(M.D. Fla.1999\); see also Dukes, 564 U.S. at 363-65.

[*411] Plaintiffs argue that the fact that the three remaining Manufacturer Defendants recently discontinued their UPPs does not foreclose Plaintiffs' ability to seek injunctive relief, as it is not "absolutely clear" that the Defendants will not revive their UPPs in the future. (Docs. 396 at 34; S-404 at 34); (see also Docs. 611 at 29; S-649 at 29) ("There is no guarantee that Defendants' unlawful conduct will not recur, unless the Court issues an injunction."). Plaintiffs seek a "mandatory" injunction, not a voluntary cessation of UPPs. (Docs. 396 at 34; Doc. S-404 at 34)

Defendants respond that the complained-of conduct has ceased, mooted Plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief. (See Docs. 505 at 16, 57; S-540 at 16,57); [*313] (see also Doc. S-681 at 24 ("[T]he only UPP ... remaining concern[s] a product of [CV], with whom Plaintiffs have settled."). Moreover, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs primarily seek monetary damages, making the need for Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) certification inapplicable. (Docs. 505 at 16,56-57; S-540 at 16, 56-57 (noting that Plaintiffs seek statutory, treble and restitution damages); (Docs 674 at 24; S-681 at 24).

Plaintiffs do not meet the criteria for certification under Rule 23\(b\)\(2\). Their claims are ones primarily seeking money damages. The complained-of conduct has ceased, and Plaintiffs have presented no evidence that the Defendants will revive the UPPs.

1) Predominance

To satisfy the predominance requirement, "the issues in the class action that are subject to generalized proof, and thus applicable to the class as a whole, must predominate over those issues that are subject only to individualized proof." Kerr v. City of W. Palm Beach, 875 F.2d 1546, 1558 (11th Cir. 1989) (internal citations omitted). "The predominance inquiry requires an examination of 'the claims, defenses, relevant facts, and applicable substantive law,'... to assess the degree to which resolution of the classwide issues will further each individual class member's claim against the defendant." Babineau v. Fed. Express Corp., 576 F.3d 1183, 1191 (11th Cir. 2009) (quoting [*314] Klay, 382 F.3d at 1254). "The 'predominance inquiry tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation.'" Tyson Foods, 136 S. Ct. at 1045 (quoting Amchem Prods., 521 U.S. at 623). "Rule 23\(b\)\(3\)... does not require a plaintiff seeking class certification to prove that each element of her claim is susceptible to classwide proof.... What the rule does require is that common questions 'predominate over any questions affecting only individual [class] members.'" Amgen Inc., 568 U.S. at 469 (emphasis in original) (quoting Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 23(b)(3) (emphasis added)).

Under Rule 23\(b\)\(3\), "[i]t is not necessary that all questions of fact or law be common, but only that some questions are common and that they predominate over individual questions." Klay, 382 F.3d at 1254 (citation omitted). "Whether an issue predominates can only be determined after considering what value the resolution of the class-wide issue will have in each class member's underlying cause of action. Id. at 1255 (citation omitted). Common issues of fact and law predominate if they have a direct impact on every class member's effort to establish liability and on every class member's entitlement to . . . relief." Id. at 1255 (citations omitted).

The predominance inquiry asks whether the common, aggregation-enabling, issues in the case are more prevalent or important than the non-common, [*315] aggregation-defeating, individual issues. . . . When one or more of the central issues in the action are common to the class and can be said to predominate, the action may be considered proper under Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) even though other important matters will have to be tried separately, such as damages or some affirmative defenses peculiar to some individual class members.

Tyson Foods, 136 S. Ct. at 1045 (internal quotations and citations omitted).

Common issues of fact and law predominate if they have a direct impact on every class member's effort to establish liability and on every class member's entitlement to injunctive and monetary relief. On the other hand, common issues will not predominate [*412] over individual questions if, as a practical matter, the resolution of an overarching common issue breaks down into an unmanageable variety of individual legal and factual issues.

Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 985 (quoting Babineau, 576 F.3d at 1191). The predominance requirement in Rule 23(b)(3) is "far more demanding" than the commonality requirement. Id. (quoting Amchem Prods. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 623-24, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997)). "Common issues can predominate only if they have a 'direct impact on every class member's effort to establish liability that is more substantial than the impact of individualized issues in resolving the claim or claims of each class member.'" [**316] Id. (quoting Vega, 564 F.3d at 1270).

The Court's analysis of predominance "begins, of course, with the elements of the underlying cause of action." Erica P. John Fund. Inc. v. Halliburton Co., 563 U.S. 804, 809, 131 S. Ct. 2179, 180 L. Ed. 2d 24 (2011).

In conducting the predominance inquiry, courts must take into account the claims, defenses, relevant facts, and applicable substantive law to assess the degree to which resolution of the classwide issues will further each individual class member's claim against the defendant. If proof of the essential elements of the cause of action requires individual treatment, then class certification is unsuitable. Although individual treatment of the essential elements of a case precludes certification, it is not necessary that all questions of fact or law be common, but only that some questions are common and that they predominate over individual questions.

Photochromic Lens, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46107, 2014 WL 1338605, at *17 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted) (emphasis in original); see Amgen, 568 U.S. at 469 ("Rule 23(b)(3) . . . does not require a plaintiff seeking class certification to prove that each element of her claim is susceptible to classwide proof." (citation omitted)). On the other hand, "[i]f the effect of class certification is to bring in thousands of possible claimants whose presence will in actuality require a multitude of mini-trials (a [**317] procedure which will be tremendously time consuming and costly), then the justification for class certification is absent." Cardiovascular Care of Sarasota, P.A. v. Cardinal Health, Inc., No. 8:08-cv-1931-T-30TBM, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61751, 2009 WL 928321, at *5 (M.D. Fla. Apr. 3, 2009) (quoting Blue Bird Body Co., Inc., 573 F.2d at 328).

(a) Predominance: Agreement or Conspiracy

Plaintiffs argue that "[c]ommon questions of liability predominate over individual issues because all Class and Subclass members, regardless of their number of contact lens purchases or what state they reside in, will rely on the same evidence at trial to prove the single, overwhelmingly predominant issue of whether Defendants conspired on a horizontal or vertical basis to eliminate competition in the nationwide contact lens market." (Docs. 396 at 25; S-404 at 25). Plaintiffs contend that they have made a "threshold showing that the proof they intend to offer at trial of the alleged conspiracy will be sufficiently generalized in nature to warrant a certification of the class." Id. at 26 (quoting In re Disposable Contact Lens Antitrust Litig., 170 F.R.D. at 531). Citing to Dr. Solow's Report, Plaintiffs argue that the direct and circumstantial evidentiary "plus factors," which are susceptible to common, class-wide evidence because Plaintiffs all bought contact lenses subject to the UPPs, establish [**318] a horizontal and vertical antitrust conspiracy. (Doc. S-404 at 26-27 (citing Doc. S-405 at 11-76 (Solow Report ¶¶ 17-133))). Plaintiffs rely upon Dr. Solow's Report in which Dr. Solow, citing to evidence produced during the ongoing discovery in this case, recounts the history and structure of the contact lens market in which ECPs both prescribe and sell contact lenses; the Defendant Manufacturers' implementation of UPPs starting in 2013; communications between ECPs and ABB; communications between ECPs and the Manufacturer Defendants; communications between ABB and the Manufacturer Defendants; statements and analyses made by representatives of the Manufacture Defendants; and the pivotal role of distributor ABB in the contact lens market with regards to contact lens pricing, [*413] demonstrated, in part, by various communications by Manufacturer Defendants, ABB, and the Contact Lens Institute. See Solow Report ¶¶ 17-133.

Defendants argue that each individual Manufacturer Defendant's response to Plaintiffs' claims is different, inasmuch as their respective contact lens products "incorporate different materials, employ different technologies, and offer different modalities (i.e. daily, weekly, [**319] monthly)," and "utilize unique proprietary technologies." (Docs. 505 at 20; S-540 at 20 (citing (Doc. S-537 at 26-33 (Cremieux Report ¶¶ 51-61))). Defendants assert that "[e]ach UPP is a different marketing strategy representing a manufacturer's independent judgment," implemented at a different time and for different marketing reasons. (Docs 505 at 20; S-540 at 20-21 (citing Doc. S-537 at 131-144, 147, 161-65 (Cremieux Report Exs. 10-13, 15, 23-25); Doc. S-541-18 at 25 (Alcon bullet-point presentation "Why We Need to Implement MPP/UPP"); Doc. S-541-19 at 33 (Helms Dep at 122); Doc. S-541-20 at 26 (Miura Dep. at 95 ); Doc. S-537 at 55-57, 59 (Cremieux Report ¶¶ 107, 109, 110, 112, 117, 118))). Defendants state that the UPP set by each Manufacturer Defendant for their respective products, was set at a different price. Id. at 22 (citing(Doc. S-537 at 52-53, 65 (Cremieux Report ¶¶ 102, 135); Doc. S-537 at 119-121, 145, 148, 149, 154 (Cremieux Report Exs. 6A-C, 14, 16, 17, 20)). Though Defendant JJVC eliminated rebates with the implementation of the UPPs, "Alcon, B&L and CVI . . . actively issued manufacturer rebates for products subject to a UPP, which had the effect of bringing the purchase price [**320] well below the UPP price if redeemed." (Doc. S-540 at 29 (citing Doc. S-537 at 60, 74-75 (Cremieux Report ¶¶ 119, 165, 167); Doc. S-541-8 at 8 (Seshadri Decl. ¶¶ 11-13))).

Citing to evidence in the record, Dr. Solow states that the four Manufacturer Defendants collectively control 97% of the United States contact lens market (measured by revenue), that "[m]anufacturers distribute the largest share of lenses through independent ECPs and the smallest though the online/mail-order channel," and that the price of a package of contact lenses was roughly 19 percent more expensive when purchased from an independent ECP. (Docs. 397 at 14-15,35; S-405 at 14-15, 35 (Solow Report ¶¶ 21, 23, 61; see also id. ¶ 24)). One Manufacturer Defendant, Alcon, observed that ABB "is a dominant player providing turn-key business solutions to private ECP practices and networks, and large regional players." (Doc. S-405 at 68-69 (Solow Report ¶ 120)). By 2017, online retail of contact lenses garnered an estimated 9.2% share of industry revenue, and was projected to continue to increase "'as consumers will continue to view online purchases as a quick and relatively less expensive method to purchase contact lenses.'" [**321] (Doc. S-405 at 34 (Solow Report ¶ 59). Dr. Solow states that:

extensive evidence shows that the structure, conduct, and performance of the contact lens industry is conducive to and consistent with the formation of a cartel and that any such cartel would have been successful in generally raising price to its customers. This common economic evidence can be used by all members of the proposed Classes as proof of the conspiracy and impact elements of their claims.

Id. at 23 (Solow Report ¶ 38).

Plaintiffs contend that the scope of the alleged vertical agreements may be established on a class-wide basis for each Vertical Class, through common centralized evidence establishing that the Manufacturer Defendants, ABB and independent ECPs shared an interest in maintaining prices and limiting competition from the Discount Retailers; ABB's and the ECPs' role in encouraging the implementation of UPPs; and the ECPs' support of the UPPs. (Doc. 396 at 27); (Doc. S-404 at 27) (citing Doc. S-405 at 59, 63, 65, 67-73 (Solow Report ¶¶ 107, 109, 110, 113, 117-127)).

In this case, the claims of the proposed putative class members all arise out of the same alleged illegal conduct by Defendants, based upon related antitrust [**322] theories of conspiracy in restraint of trade. Likewise, the claims of the proposed state classes arise out of the same alleged illegal conduct by Defendants and are based on the same related antitrust theories of conspiracy in restraint of trade. Although each proposed [*414] subclass is proceeding under its own state law of Maryland and California, class certification pursuant to Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) is nonetheless appropriate where there is a commonality of substantive law applicable to all class members.

In general, a federal or state claim based upon a theory of antitrust conspiracy raises three ultimate issues to be proven at trial: (1) the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade (liability); (2) injury-in-fact (antitrust injury); and (3) the extent of injury (damages). See J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 562, 101 S. Ct. 1923, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 (1981). As demonstrated by . . . Plaintiffs, all proof relative to Defendants' alleged conspiracy to restrain trade is common to the members [in all classes]. In fact, "courts repeatedly have held that the existence of a conspiracy is the predominant issue in price fixing cases, warranting certification of the class even where significant individual issues are present." In re NASDAQ Mkt.-Makers Antitrust Litis., 169 F.R.D. 493, 518(S.D.N.Y. 1996); see also In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 159 F.R.D. 682 (D. Minn. 1995).

In re Terazosin Hydrochloride, 220 F.R.D. at 695. Plaintiffs have met their [**323] burden of showing that the issue of the existence of an agreement or conspiracy among the Defendants is subject to common issues of fact and law, and may be established by generalized proof, applicable to the class as a whole.

(b) Predominance: Impact and Damages

i. Plaintiffs' Argument

Plaintiffs argue that "Defendants' supra-competitive prices caused by Defendants' UPPs are susceptible to common proof on a class-wide basis." (Docs. 611 at 10; S-649 at 10). Plaintiffs compare the prices paid by consumers in the "actual world" of UPPs with the alleged antitrust conduct to the prices that would have been paid by consumers in a "but for" world (but for or absent the alleged antitrust conduct). They note that Defendants' expert recognizes that this "but for" analysis establishes whether an individual purchaser suffers antitrust injury. (Doc. S-649 at 11 (citing Doc. S-538 at 10 (Snyder Report ¶ 16))). Plaintiffs assert that "[e]vidence that customers paid artificially high prices as a result of Defendants' restraint on trade is susceptible to class-wide proof," (Doc. 396 at 29); (Doc. S-404 at 29) (citing Doc. S-405 at 23-25 (Solow Report at ¶¶ 38-40) and Doc. S-406 at 12-16 (Williams Report ¶¶ 21-23, 24-35)), [**324] and that and that "Plaintiffs have demonstrated at least a "colorable method" of proving impact at trial." (Docs. 396 at 29; S-404 at 29 (quoting In re Disposable Contact Lens Litig., 170 F.R.D. at 531)). Specifically, Plaintiffs argue that after applying a regression analysis to both the contact lenses produced by all four Manufacturer Defendants to analyze the alleged horizontal conspiracy, and to lenses produced by each Manufacturer Defendant individually to establish the impact of the alleged vertical conspiracies, Dr. Williams concludes that "Plaintiffs paid higher contact lens prices for products subject to Defendants' UPPs than they would have paid in the absence of Defendants' illegal actions." (Doc. S-404 at 29-30). Plaintiffs assert that while damages may differ for each individual class member based on the number and type of contact lenses purchases, that determination does not foreclose class certification, particularly when the overreaching antitrust liability questions are so common to each Class and Subclass member. (Docs. 396 at 32; S-404 at 32 (citing Carriuolo 823 F.3d at 988)). Plaintiffs also contend that the same facts and evidence as set forth above can be used to support the Maryland and California state law claims. Id. at 30-32.

ii. Defendants' Argument [**325]*

Defendants argue that "at least two of the essential elements of Plaintiffs' claims - antitrust injury and standing - cannot be proved on a classwide basis with a common body of evidence." (Docs. 505 at 32; S-540 at 32); see also id. at 14. Defendants focus particularly on the impact element of Plaintiffs' antitrust claims, arguing that "the UPPs at issue did not; have the uniform effect that Plaintiffs assert." (Docs. 505 at 43; S-540 at 43). Rather, they argue that "the undisputed evidence shows that the UPPs either had no impact at [*415] all (e.g., some class members paid nothing or far less than the UPP price for contact lenses) or had a highly variable impact that could never be shown with a common body of evidence." Id. (emphasis in original).

Among the differing factors cited by Defendants applicable to each individual class Plaintiff are: whether the ECP/retailer who sold the lens to the plaintiff was part of an alleged conspiracy; whether the ECP/retailer determined his or her price pursuant to the relevant UPP price; whether the consumer would have purchased the same lens in the absence of a UPP; whether the price paid by the consumer was higher than it would have been in the absence of the [**326] alleged conspiracy; and whether the price paid by the consumer was reduced by rebates or discounts offered by the manufacturer or retailer, or by reimbursement by a third party insurer. (Docs. 505 at 14-15; S-540 at 14-15). They argue that Plaintiffs cannot prove classwide impact with common proof, "because evaluating whether any UPP affected a contact lens purchaser at all requires looking individually at each transaction to compare what the person actually paid against what s/he would have paid (including based on changes in the price of the lens, the amount of any vision care benefits, and rebates and discounts)." (Docs. 674 at 11; S-681 at 11). Additionally, Defendants argue that Dr. Williams' use of a "'but for' impact" analysis embraces an incorrect definition of impact that is "disconnected" from the impact requirement of Rule 23, which requires evaluating "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.". (Doc. S-681 at 20) (quoting Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489). Defendants cite to testimony of putative Plaintiffs and to ECPs and retailers in support of their arguments. They contend that:

- 1) "Plaintiffs cannot show through common [\*\*327] proof] that any meaningful number of putative class members purchased from a participant in the alleged conspiracy" because retailers set prices independently. (Docs. 505 at 26, 35; S-540 at 26, 35; see also Docs. 674 at 10; S-681 at 10 (citing Plaintiff Class Representative and ECP testimony: (Doc. S-541-9 at 4 (Takeda Decl. ¶¶ 13-15); Doc. S-537 at 48 (Cremieux Report ¶ 93 (stating that one, survey shows that 57 percent of contact lens wearers had vision insurance, 33 percent of which had plans that covered some of the cost of contact lenses for one year.)); Doc. S-541-27 (invoice showing insurance reimbursement to class representative plaintiff Felson showing that as a result of an insurance reimbursement and an ECP professional discount, he paid nothing for contact lenses subject to a UPP)).
- 3) "Many putative plaintiff class members paid prices that varied significantly from the UPP price of a given lens." (Docs. 505 at 38; S-540 at 38 (citing Doc. S-541-25 at 20-21 (Felson Dep. at 76-77 (class representative Felson paid $122 for two boxes of CooperVision lenses when the UPP price was $178 due to a "courtesy write-off" or "professional discount"))).
- 4) "Plaintiffs cannot show that all putative class members paid more for contact \*\*330 lenses as a result of the introduction of the UPPs." (Docs. 505 at 39; S-540 at 39 (citing Doc. S-541-5 at 3, 5 (Miura Decl. ¶¶ 4-5, 9 (JJVC reduced wholesale prices for some products in July 2014, and UPP decreased wholesale prices for 66% consumers)); Doc. In this regard, Defendants assert that in some instances, "manufacturer rebates brought the price paid below the UPP price for the product purchased." (Doc. S-540 at 41 (citing Doc. S-541-24 at 28 (Mazzarella Dep. at 105-06 (plaintiff testifying about a $100 rebate on Bausch & Lomb lenses that covered out of pocket costs); (Doc. S-537 at 31 (Cremieux Report [**331] ¶ 57 (discussing CooperVision rebates on products subject to a UPP covering more than 60,000 purchases of two conduct lens products subject to a UPP)); (Doc. 541-8 at 8 (Seshadri Decl. ¶ 13 (discussing CooperVision rebates on UPP products)); (Docs. S-541-29 at 3-4, S-541-30, S-541-32 and 541-33 (Alcon rebate information for customers)). Retailers and ECPs also offered rebates and discounts on UPP-covered contact lens products. (Doc. S-540 at 42 (citing Doc. S-537 at 74 (Cremieux Report ¶ 166 (reporting that Target offered a $10 discount on the purchase of JJVC 1-Day Acuvue TruEye (90 Pack) which would have resulted in a price of $81.74 per box, below the UPP price of $82.50)); Doc. S-537 at 75-76 (Cremieux Report ¶ 168 (reporting that 1-800 Contacts offered new customers discounts of $20 for $150 in contact lens purchases, and $45 for $200 worth of purchases)).

Defendants cite to the high number of retailers and ECPs involved as a reason why they contend that Plaintiffs are unable to establish impact on a classwide basis.

The Manufacturer Defendants design and make contact lenses. Dozens of distributors of contact lenses buy contact lenses from manufacturers and sell to ECP/retailers. [**332] More than 50,000 ECPs (of whom approximately 35,000 are in independent practice ("iECPs")), prescribe contact lenses and, together with retailers, sell contact lenses to more than 40 million consumers.

(Docs. 505 at 19; S-540 at 19) (citing (Doc. S-537 at 15, 37 (Cremieux Report ¶¶ 31, 70-71))). Defendants contend that each ECP and retailer set its own prices, independently and regardless of the UPPs. As support, Defendants cite to retailers who sold various models of contact lenses at prices below the UPP. (Docs. 505 at 26-27; S-540 at 26-27 (citing Doc. S-537 at 149, 166-71 (Cremieux Report Exs. 17, 27A, 27B, 27C))); (see also Doc. S-540 at 36-37 (citing testimony of ECPs)).

[*417] Defendants assert that Plaintiffs' experts fail to establish common impact on a classwide basis, and that their reports do not satisfy the "rigorous standards of Daubert" that apply to Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. (Docs. 505 at 44; S-541 at 44). (See Docs. 505 at 45-51; S-540 at 45-51 (Defendants' criticisms of Dr. Williams' regression analysis); (Docs. 505 at 51-52; S-540 at 51-52 (characterizing Dr. Solow as "merely a human 'highlighter,'" providing "a voice to describe documents produced in this [**333] litigation," which is insufficient to make an evidentiary showing that impact can be proven on a classwide basis using a common body of evidence)).

Defendants argue that:

Williams purports to compare actual prices to hypothetical prices that he estimates using a "before-during" method for both the alleged horizontal and vertical agreements. . . . On the basis of that analysis, Williams concludes that prices in various channels were higher for products subject to a UPP than they would have been in a hypothetical "but-for" world without the UPPs.

(Doc. S-540 at 44 (citing Doc. S-406 (Williams Report ¶¶ 7-8, 10-11, 21-41))). They argue that Dr. Williams undermines Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification because he "relies primarily on non-transactional data as opposed to actual prices paid by the majority, of contact lens purchasers; and employs a regression that uses false comparisons, adopts misleading and impermissible averaging techniques and produces false positives and internally inconsistent results." (Docs. 505 at 18; S-540 at 18); (see also Doc. S-540 at 45-46 (citing Doc. S-541-34 at 47, 55 (Williams Dep. at 181-82, 214); Doc. S-406 at 46 (Williams Table 12) (focusing on his [**334] conclusion that a consumer who paid less than the UPP price for a contact lens through 1-800-Contacts was nevertheless injured, testifying that "the impact of the UPP policy was to cause the prices sold by 1-800-Contacts to be . . . 5 percent to 3.4 percent higher than they otherwise would have been.")); (Doc. S-540 at 46 (citing Doc. S-538 at 14, 19, 46 (Snyder Report ¶¶ 25, 35, 97))). Defendants also criticize Dr. Williams' price comparisons, arguing that the Alcon, B&L and CV UPPs were all placed on new products where there were no "before" prices to compare the post-UPP price to, and that Dr. Williams compared the new products with the UPPs to older dissimilar products, without taking into account differences and improvements in the newer products with the UPPS which were expected to sell at a premium to reflect their increase in value. (Doc. S-540 at 47). Both of Defendants' experts, Drs. Snyder and Cremieux, testified that impact and damages cannot be established by common proof.

iii. Plaintiffs' Reply

Plaintiffs respond that class members "need not buy identical products at identical prices on identical terms in order to prevail in an antitrust class case." (Does. 611 at 10; **335 S-649 at 10 (citing Delta/AirTran Baggage Fee, 317 F.R.D. at 682)). They argue that the evidence establishes that UPPs increased contact lens base prices. (Doc. S-649 at 11 (citing Doc. S-661-145 at 3 (Chavez Dep. at 10 (testifying Manufacturer Defendants would "indicate to us [Costco] what we had to sell the merchandise for")); Doc. S-661-128 at 5 (Angelini Dep. at 86 (JJVC had the expectation that more than 50 percent of the prices "would tend to gravitate around the UPP price")); Doc. S-661-134 at 3 (McKenna Dep. at 62 ("I believe that all the customers understood that there was a UPP in place and that they could not charge - if they wanted to keep supply they would not charge below $60 on retail basis."))).

Notwithstanding individual ECP testimony that they did not "conspire" with the Manufacturer Defendants to set prices at the UPP level, Plaintiffs argue that ECP's testified "they were all aware of UPPs and, regardless of whether they specifically admit UPP pricing, the UPP affected their contact lens prices," demonstrating the "pervasive effect of UPPs." (Doc. S-649 at 13 (citing (Doc. S-649-2 at 2-3 (Appendix B summarizing the testimony of 12 ECP's as follows: (Doc. S-541-1 at 3 (Chang Decl. ¶ 7 (set retail prices based **336 on a number of factors including "the wholesale cost of contact lenses, and competitor's retail pricing. UPP plays a role in my determination as to how to price contact *418 lenses because if the minimum UPP price is not met, then my account with the manufacturer would terminate.")); Doc. S-541-2 at 3 (Gray Decl. ¶ 12 (since 2013, the policy was "to price contact lenses competitively by reference to the prices charged by 1-800-Contacts.")); Doc. S-661-142 at 3 (Huynh Dep. at 29 (set price "close to being the same" as the ABB Profit Advisor suggested price for private practitioners)); Doc. 541-36 at 11 (Kikunaga Dep. at 37 (discussed with patients that under the UPPs, "the contact lenses are X price per box and that they are pretty much standardized amongst all - anywhere you buy them")); Doc. S-661-139 at 3-5 (Mason Dep. at 43, 49, 162 (decides prices by matching the "1-800 list price," and that it was his understanding that "1-800-Contacts couldn't lower their price for a UPP product lower than was listed in the UPP" and the patient would pay the same price "no matter where they went.")); Doc. S-661-140 at 3 (Prange Dep. at 86 (agrees that after UPP was implemented, his pricing was "based **337 off what the UPP price was.")); Doc. S-541-7 at 3 (Ruder Decl. ¶ 7 (stating that prices at clinic were "based on a number of factors, including the wholesale cost of the contact lenses and competitors' retail pricing.")); Doc. 510-12 at (Sheldon Decl. ¶ 7 (stating that while UPP was in effect on Alcon lenses, he "priced at the minimum retail price because I believed it was a fair price for the lenses and because I wanted to be competitive in my pricing.")); Doc. 541-10 at 3 (Sorkin Decl. ¶ 6 (while UPP's "did not play a role in determining the prices that [he] set," he "set the price of contact lenses by taking a markup over the wholesale price, as well as by observing competitive prices.")); Doc. 541-11 at 3 (Sudarsky Decl. ¶¶ 6-7 (retail prices were "based on a number of factors, including the online price of comparable lenses and my acquisition costs.")); Doc. 661-141 at 3, 5 (Takeda Dep. at 55, 57 (factoring in rebates she tries to be "competitive" with the chain stores, and would "look online to see what companies are charging.")); Doc. 541-14 at 3 (Williams Decl. ¶ 6 (group set prices "based on its wholesale costs for the lenses and evaluating the prices charged by its competitors."))). **338

iv. Defendants' Sur-Reply

In their Sur-reply, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' experts, Drs. Solow and Williams, failed to review the deposition testimony of the named Plaintiffs and their ECPs, to rebut Defendants' evidence of individualized impact. (Does. 674 at 12; S-681 at 12) (citing Doc. 682-9 (Solow Supplemental Dep. testimony); Doc. S-682-10 (Williams Supplemental Dep. testimony)). They contend that the fact that "even some of the named Plaintiffs paid nothing for their contact lenses underscores why a class based on an 'average' overcharge regression model would include scores of people who were not impacted and therefore have no cause of action." (Does. 674 at 13; S-681 at 13). Defendants' also criticize Plaintiffs' experts' opinions that rebates, discounts and insurance payments "would have remained the same" with or without the UPPs, without any evidentiary support. (Doc. S-681 at 16 (citing competing supplemental expert reports by Defendants' experts); (Doc. S-685 at 18-19 (Supp. Cremieux Report ¶¶ 33-35 ("[T]here are many reasons why insurance, rebates and discounts would be different in the but for world . . . [as] supported by economic theory, documents and testimony," [**339] noting that JJVC "introduced UPPs around the same time it lowered wholesale prices ... [and] to make their products more attractive both to consumers and ECPs, they also simplified their sales practices, eliminating some of the rebates and discounts."). As to Plaintiffs' citation to retailers' testimony that they set prices based upon wholesale prices, competitors' prices, and profit markups, Defendants argue that following competitors' prices is not actionable under antitrust laws. "That ECPs may have conformed to a UPP does not suffice to show the 'conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective' required" for violation of antitrust laws. (Docs. 674 at 14; S-681 at 14) (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764).

v. Discussion

In order to prevail on a Section 1 antitrust claim, a plaintiff must establish a "cognizable" or "actual" injury "attributable to an antitrust violation," along with "some approximation of damage." *J. Truett Payne, [*419] 451 U.S. at 561-62*. The "fact of injury" is also known as "antitrust impact." See Blue Bird Body Co., 573 F.2d at 320. Establishing antitrust impact requires proof that "there is a causal relation between the alleged antitrust violation and an injury" to the plaintiff. Constr. Aggregate Transp., Inc. v. Florida Rock Indus., Inc., 710 F.2d 752, 782 (11th Cir. 1983). "Antitrust impact is established in this type of case if [**340] Defendants' activities had the effect of stabilizing prices above competitive levels." In re Polypropylene Carpet Antitrust Litig., 996 F. Supp. 18, 22 (N.D. Ga. 1997).

"In an overcharge case, impact is shown through proof that: (1) Defendants charged more than they would have but-for their antitrust violation; and (2) class members made some purchases at the illegally inflated or stabilized price." Terazosin Hydrochloride, 220 F.R.D. at 696 (citing Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 489 and Blue Bird Body Co., 573 F.2d at 324). "[O]ne way of demonstrating predominance is to show that there is a common method for proving that the class plaintiffs paid higher actual prices than in the but-for world, such as using an econometric regression model incorporating a variety of factors to demonstrate that a conspiracy variable was at work during the class period, raising prices above the 'but-for' level for all plaintiffs." Ethylene Propylene Diene Monomer (EPDM), 256 F.R.D. at 88.

Rebates, discounts and insurance payments do not defeat predominance as to impact. Dr. Solow opines that:

A properly defined "but for" world is one in which all aspects of the actual world remain unchanged except for the effects caused by the restraint of trade at issue. Defendants' experts misapprehend the correct definition of the 'but for world, which leads them to focus mistakenly on insurance reimbursements, rebates and discounts, all of which would have remained [**341] unchanged in the 'but for' world." . . . [T]here is no evidence that UPPs caused changes in the discounting practices of individual ECPs or interne retailers.

(Doc. S-650 at 4, 12 (Solow Supp. Report ¶¶ 4(b), 21)); (see also Does. S-651 at 57 (Williams Supp. Report ¶ 98 ("Plaintiffs have not asserted that insurance payments, rebates, or discounts are 'harmful acts.' Thus, insurance payments, rebates, and discounts are the same in the but-for world as they are in the actual world."))). Defendants' contention that discounts, rebates and insurance reimbursements defeat Plaintiffs' ability to prove antitrust impact with evidence common to all putative class members is not supported by the evidence. Defendants cite to no evidence that the discounts, rebates and insurance payments were in anyway related to Defendants' conduct giving rise to the UPPs, or that UPPs caused changes in insurance reimbursements, or the discounting practices of the Manufacturer Defendants, individual ECPs, or internet retailers. Thus, Dr. Williams' treatment of these discounts, rebates and insurance payments as remaining constant in the "but for" world absent Defendants' conduct is not disproven. That JJVC enacted [**342] UPPs and then discontinued its discounts in an effort to "simplify" pricing does not put the reductions in pricing into the mix to negate the impact of the alleged illegal conduct complained about by Plaintiffs.

Whether in some circumstances, a putative Plaintiff's contact lens purchase resulted in no out-of-pocket economic loss while UPPs were in place, —be it from rebates, discounts, insurance payments, or a retailer who affirmatively did overruled the UPP requirement and priced below it - does not defeat class certification. In this circumstance, Defendants' classwide practice of allegedly conspiring to adopt UPPs to artificially constrain certain contact lens prices, if proven, is a common question of fact that predominates over the exact circumstances of each putative plaintiff's individual purchase. A rebate, discount or insurance payment does not necessarily negate the impact of the alleged conspiracy. See Delta/AirTran Baggage Fee, 317 F.R.D. at 687 ("Whether any class members were reimbursed for any part of a baggage fee—i.e., whether they were able to pass on some portion of the alleged antitrust overcharge—is legally irrelevant and therefore will not lead to a situation in which individual [*420] questions of antitrust injury [**343] will dominate over common ones.").

Defendants' expert also contends that Plaintiffs cannot establish classwide impact because "[t]here are dozens of differentiated lenses produced by a variety of manufacturers for [multiple] ... corrective needs," differing in "many" dimensions and innovations to meet the varied needs of patients.. (Doc. S-537 at 21-33 (Cremieux Report ¶¶ 43-61) (detailing examples of different product innovations by Defendant Manufacturers)). Dr. Solow responds that the contact lens market is a homogeneous commodity:

The wholesale market is highly concentrated with the defendants controlling a large share of production. Disposable contact lenses are largely homogeneous across producers and there is little opportunity for consumers to substitute other products in response to higher prices for their contact lenses. There are significant barriers to entry, meaning that successful collusion would not be undermined by lost sales to producers of other products or new entrants.

(Docs. 397 at 39; S-405 at 39 (Solow Report ¶ 67); see also id. at 24 (Solow Report ¶ 39 (discussing factors that tend to make a market more favorable to effective collusion)). Given the unique structure of the [**344] contact lens market, Defendants' argument that the contact lens market is highly differentiated and that a common impact from Defendants' alleged conduct cannot be established is unavailing. Even recognizing Defendants' argument that product differentiation precludes common impact, "variations in products and complexities in a distribution chain do not preclude an estimation of whether an overcharge impacted end purchasers." In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 267 F.R.D. 583, 603 (N.D. Cal. 2010), amended in part, No. M 07-1827 SI, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84476, 2011 WL 3268649 (N.D. Cal. July 28, 2011).

"[The presence of individualized damages cannot, by itself, defeat class certification under Rule 23(b)(3)." Leyva v. Medline Indus., Inc., 716 F.3d 510, 514 (9th Cir. 2013).

Proving damages proves injury because damages necessarily indicate that the plaintiff has been impacted or injured by the antitrust violation; the converse, however, is not necessarily true. That is, it is possible for a plaintiff to suffer antitrust injury-in-fact and yet have no damages because it has taken steps to mitigate the actual price paid through rebates, discounts, and other non-price factors such as lowered shipping costs, technical services, or any other type of purchase incentive. By expending resources to negotiate down from the supracompetitive prices established by the cartel, plaintiffs who have suffered no damages may still [**345] have suffered an injury-in-fact from the antitrust conspiracy. The fact that a plaintiff may have successfully employed bargaining power to fend off the effect of the conspiratorial practices does not mean that it has not been put in a worse position but-for the conspiracy.

Plaintiffs' damages model must establish "that damages are capable of measurement on a classwide basis" to show Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) predominance, and questions of individual damage calculations cannot overwhelm questions common to the class. Comcast, 569 U.S. at 34. Here, Plaintiffs' damages model for class-wide damages, proffered through the expert testimony of Dr. Williams, is sufficient to meet Plaintiffs' burden of establishing predominance of impact. Dr. Williams utilized the "before and after" "but for" regression analysis to calculate the impact of the UPPs. [**347] As set forth above, courts have accepted this regression analysis in antitrust class actions. E.g., Kleen Prods., 306 F.R.D. at 602 ("Multiple regression analysis is common in antitrust cases, where the plaintiffs use it to show that an alleged 'conspiracy' has a statistically significant impact on the dependent variable - usually price." (citing Rubinfeld, Reference Guide on Multiple Regression 305-07)); Terazosin Hydrochloride, 220 F.R.D. at 699 ("These economic methods are widely accepted and have been used in numerous other antitrust class actions." (citing cases)). Dr. Williams' use of averaging of aggregate data as a part of his regression analysis is an appropriate statistical tool used to "average out" idiosyncratic outliers. The rationale cited by the court in Static Access \(SRAM\), supra, is persuasive in this regard:

The damages question for trial is presumably not about whether a specific ... price increase found its way through the distribution chain and resulted in an increase in the price paid by a specific class member. Rather, the question is how a series of [defendant's] price increases, and/or a series of [defendant's] failures to reduce prices, impacted the price each consumer paid.

Defendants' criticism that Dr. Williams regression methodology lacks precision and is based upon flawed underlying assumptions is not sufficient to defeat class certification. At the class certification stage, the Court need not resolve which expert testimony and approach—that proffered by the Plaintiffs or by the Defendants—"is best suited to the particularities of [the] case." Terazosin Hydrochloride, 220 F.R.D. at 699. "It is sufficient to note at this stage that there are methodologies available, and that Rule 23\(c\)\(1\) and \(d\) allow ample flexibility to deal with the individual damages issues that may develop." Id. (quotations and citation omitted). The Court is charged with making a "rigorous" screening of expert evidence when certifying a class to ensure that the Plaintiffs' damages model seeks to prove damages that flow from the harm alleged. Kleen Prods., 306 F.R.D. at 602 (citing Comcast, 133 S. Ct. at 1435).

"[I]ndividualized damages calculations are insufficient to foreclose [**349] the possibility of class certification, especially when, as here, the central liability question is so clearly common to each class member." Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 988. In Carriuolo, the Eleventh Circuit observed that:

Rule 23 permits a class action when "the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\). Nothing in this Rule requires plaintiffs to prove [*422] predominance separately as to both liability and damages.... [The Supreme Court in] Comcast simply requires that "any model supporting a plaintiff's damages case must be consistent with its liability case."

"[T]he district court is well situated to winnow out those non-injured members at the damages phase of the litigation, or to refine the class definition." Torres, 835 F.3d at 1137 (citing Newberg on Class Actions § 2:3). "[P]ursuant to Rule 23, the court's task at certification is to ensure that the class is not defined so broadly as to include a great number of members who for some reason could [**351] not have been harmed by the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct." Id., 835 at 1138 (quoting Newberg on Class Actions § 2:3). Plaintiffs' proposed putative classes include only consumers who purchased contact lens brands for which the Manufacturer Defendants had adopted UPPs. Pursuant to Plaintiffs' theory, each and every putative plaintiff that meets this class definition could have been harmed. Dr. Williams opines that nearly all putative Plaintiffs experienced at least one overcharge transaction during the damages period. (Doc. S-723 at 13 (Williams 2d Supp. Decl. ¶¶ 19, 20)).

This is not to say that individual damages issues will not arise. But the individualized damages questions have not been shown to be so complex and densely fact specific as to preclude Rule 23(b)(3) certification. See Brown, 817 F.3d at 1240; Columbus Drywall & Insulation, Inc. v. Masco Corp., No. 1:04-CV-3066-JEC, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30937, 2009 WL 856306, at *10 (N.D. Ga. Feb. 9, 2009). Moreover, the individualized damages questions that may arise here do not implicate individualized questions regarding liability. Brown, 817 F.3d at 1240. Defendants have failed to establish how class-wide adjudication of any antitrust liability on the part of Manufacturer Defendants and ABB and its class wide impact will be subsumed in or overwhelmed by an individualized damages [**352] inquiry. See Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 989; see also In re Urethane Antitrust Litig., 768 F.3d at 1254 ("Under the prevailing view, price-fixing affects all market participants, creating an inference of class-wide impact even when prices are individually negotiated." (citing cases)).

Additionally, "[e]ven if the damages determination does ultimately necessitate individualized calculations," the question of class certification can be revisited if the facts develop otherwise such that separate damages determinations predominate. Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 988.

[T]he certification of a class is always provisional in nature until the final resolution of the case. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(1)(C) [*423] (permitting amendment of a certification order at any time prior to judgment). As we have explained, the power of the district court to alter or amend class certification orders at any time prior to a decision on the merits "is critical, because the scope and contour of a class may change radically as discovery progresses and more information is gathered about the nature of the putative class members' claims."

"[T]he reliability of the means of proving classwide impact frequently factors into the predominance determination in antitrust class actions." In re Rail Freight Fuel Surcharge Antitrust Litig., 292 F. Supp. 3d 14, 42 (D.D.C. 2017) (citation omitted), appeal filed [**353] No. 18-7010 (U.S. Jan. 23, 2018). The Court has determined that Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Williams' multiple regression model is a reliable method for establishing classwide antitrust impact caused by Defendants' alleged illegal conduct. "At class certification, the Court must rule upon the conclusions generated by the principles and methodology, . . . to the extent that they are relevant to determining whether plaintiffs have satisfied Rule 23\(b\)." Rail Freight, 292 F. Supp. 3d at 43 (citations omitted). "Rule 23 also requires 'the Court to consider questions beyond the reliability' of expert testimony, such as whether the expert testimony is sufficient to demonstrate 'common impact or that there is a reliable means of proving damages on a classwide basis.'" Id. (quoting In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., 81 F. Supp. 3d at 417).

Addressing Defendants' argument that the Court must resolve the "battle of the experts" between the conflicting opinions of Defendants' experts Dr. Snyder and Dr. Cremieux and Plaintiffs' expert Dr. Williams, the Court turns to the recent decision in Navelski v. Int'l Paper Co., 261 F. Supp. 3d 1212 (N.D. Fla. 2017). There; the court declined to resolve the "battle of the experts" at the class certification stage, finding that the predominance requirement for class certification was satisfied, despite the experts' disagreement regarding causation. In doing so, the court stated that While a district court's class certification analysis "may entail some overlap with the merits of the plaintiff's underlying claim, Rule 23 grants courts no license to engage in free-ranging merits inquiries at the certification stage." Amgen, 568 U.S. at 466 (citations [**354] omitted). Rather, "[m]erits questions may be considered to the extent - but only to the extent - that they are relevant to determining whether the Rule 23 prerequisites for class certification are satisfied." Id., quoted in Brown v. Electrolux Home Prods., 817 F.3d at 1234; see also Valley Drug Co. v. Geneva Pharms., Inc., 350 F.3d 1181, 1187, 1188 n. 15 (11th Cir. 2003) ("Although the trial court should not determine the merits of the plaintiffs' claim at the class certification stage, the trial court can and should consider the merits of the case to the degree necessary to determine whether the requirements of Rule 23 will be satisfied.").

Navelski, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 1215-16. The court in Navelski found that the conflicting expert reports regarding whether dam failure caused flooding was not material to the question of whether Rule 23 predominance requirements were satisfied, observing that the dispositive question for Rule 23 purposes is whether predominance presents a common question susceptible to generalized classwide proof. Id. at 1216 (citing Tyson Foods, 136 S. Ct. 1036, 1045, 194 L. Ed. 2d 124). In Navelski, the competing experts both agreed that the causation question regarding the collapsed dam and flooding claims could be proven or disproven on a classwide basis and was susceptible to generalized classwide proof and common questions predominated; the respective experts were in conflict related to the merits, and the court determined [**355] that it was unnecessary to resolve the conflict in order to certify a class with respect to causation. Id. at 1217.

Here, Defendants contend that there is "no class-wide method for determining whether someone was impacted by the existence of UPPs and averages cannot accurately answer the question for any member of the putative class." (Docs. 693 at 5; S-720 at 5). Defendants base their argument on their experts, [*424] who opine that the impact of Defendants' UPPs is not susceptible to classwide proof. (See Doc. S-538 at 44 (Snyder Report ¶ 92 n.56 ("By conducting these [regression] analyses, I am not endorsing the use of regression analyses as a common method of proof in this litigation.")); Doc. S-684 at 35-36 (Snyder Sur-Reply Report ¶ 79 (stating that he does not "advocate" the regression approach.)); Doc. S-722 at 17 (Dr. Snyder states that he is "not offering any regression results that would serve as a basis for me to offer conclusions about injury." (citing Doc. 716-13 (unredacted copy not filed))). Restated, Defendants argue that there can be no nationwide class action arising out of their alleged agreement to set minimum prices for consumers because the variables involved and the impact of [**356] the alleged conspiracy is so vast.

Plaintiffs estimate that the proposed class will "number in the tens of millions." (Does. 396 at 20; S-404 at 20 (citing Doc. S-405 at 12 (Solow Report ¶ 19)). Dr. Williams has offered a viable solution to the problem by conducting a multiple regression analysis, a well accepted statistical approach, which plots the average movement of prices of contact lenses for which UPPs were adopted. He bases his averages on sufficient data, which he has supplemented as more becomes available to him through the ongoing discovery process.

Defendants' experts expose what they contend are flaws undermining Dr. Williams' multiple regression analysis. Dr. Williams responds to the criticisms, and provides extensive support for his analysis of classwide impact. As more data has become available, Dr. Williams has further refined his opinion, using the same methodology and reaching a consistent result. The "battle" or disagreement between Plaintiffs' expert Dr. Williams and Defendants' experts is over whether a multiple regression analysis can be employed to calculate impact of the Defendants' UPPs on a classwide basis, in order to satisfy the Rule 23\(b\) predominance requirement. [**357] In response to Dr. Williams' later "customer level" analysis, Defendants' expert Dr. Snyder characterizes Dr. Williarris' multiple regression analysis as a "highly non-standard method of evaluating impact." (Doc. S-684 at 25 (Snyder 2d Supp. Report n.48)). To the extent that the Defendants' experts opinions disagree with Dr. Williams on the question of whether Dr. Williams' multiple regression analysis represents generalized classwide proof of impact, satisfying the Rule 23 predominance requirement, the Court resolves the conflict between Defendants' experts and Dr. Williams in favor of Plaintiffs. Dr. Williams' expert Reports and subsequent Declarations satisfy the rigorous Daubert requirements and are considered by the Court as evidence in support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. In so doing, the Court does not reject the opinions of Drs. Snyder and Cremieux out of hand. The issues they cite, and the alleged weaknesses and flaws in Dr. Williams' opinions, while not dispelling the Court's determination that Dr. Williams' multiple regression analysis may be considered at this juncture as generalized common proof of classwide impact and Rule 23 predominance, do raise legitimate questions [**358] that are the meat of rigorous cross examination and resolution by the ultimate factfinder on the merits. Indeed, while providing Plaintiffs a mechanism and evidence for establishing that Defendants' alleged conduct resulted in generalized common impact and classwide harm in the form of an average percentage overcharge, Dr. Williams' multiple regression analysis has its limitations, both brought on by assumptions employed and selection of data and variables used by Dr. Williams in executing the regression analysis, and by the fact that the average percentage overcharge does not capture each individual consumer experience when purchasing a UPP-covered contact lens. However, a large average overcharge makes it more likely than not that classwide impact occurred. See In re TFT-LCD \(Flat Panel\) Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 1827, No. M 07-1827 SI, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21696, 2012 WL 555090, at \*3, 5 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 21, 2012).

Upon rigorous analysis and review of the parties' submissions and evidentiary record, the Court determines that Plaintiffs have satisfied the predominance requirement of Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) based on competent evidence common to the class.

[*425] 2) Superiority

The superiority requirement of Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) focuses "not on the convenience or [**359] burden of a class action suit per se, but on the relative advantages of a class action suit over whatever other forms of litigation might be realistically available to the plaintiffs." Klay, 382 F.3d at 1269. The relevant factors are: (a) the interest of members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (b) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (c) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and (d) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\)\(A\)-\(D\). "[T]he predominance analysis . . . has a tremendous impact on the superiority analysis . . . for the simple reason that, the more common issues predominate over individual issues, the more desirable a class action lawsuit will be as a vehicle for adjudicating the plaintiffs' claims." Klay, 382 F.3d at 1269.

Plaintiffs argue that "because 'there exist a large number of small or medium-sized claims against Defendants which would make individual litigation economically infeasible, a class action is a superior method of litigation.'" (Docs. 396 at 33; S-404 at 33) (quoting [**360] In re Disposable Contact Lens Litig., 170 F.R.D. at 533). Plaintiffs assert that "[a] class action is likely the only viable option for Class Members because, in light of the complexity and costs of antitrust litigation, individual cases will be cost-prohibitive for most Class Members." Id.; (see also Docs. 611 at 28; S-649 at 28). Plaintiffs argue that submission of a trial plan is not required to establish the superiority requirement. (Docs. 611 at 29; S-649 at 29) (citing Vega, 564 F.3d at 1279 n.20).

Defendants respond that given that Plaintiffs assert a "series of vertical conspiracies stacked on top of a horizontal conspiracy that involves (1) tens of thousands of supposed co-conspirators, each of whose individual pricing methods requires examination, and (2) millions of consumers, each of whose individual purchases requires examination, making the proposed class action is "unmanageable." (Docs. 505 at 15-16; S-450 at 15-16). Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to propose a feasible trial plan setting a course for trying the complex claims and defenses at issue. (Docs. 505 at 16, 54; S-540 at 16, 54 (citing Vega, 564 F.3d at 1279 n. 20 and Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 advisory committee note to 2003 amendment)); (see also Docs. 674 at 23; S-681 at 23). Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' horizontal claims [\[\*\*361\]](#) cannot be tried in a single trial because of the need to resolve "countless individual questions concerning issues such as standing and impact," and the need to apply three bodies of law - federal, Maryland and California. Id. at 55. They argue that the vertical claims "would have to be adjudicated separately to take account of the facts specific to the relevant Manufacturer Defendant's conduct." Id. at 55-56 (citing In re Fine Paper Antitrust Litig., 685 F.2d 810, 822 \(3d Cir. 1982\) (granting class certification for horizontal antitrust conspiracy claims but denying class certification for plaintiffs' vertical claims because proof would vary, depending on the identity of the merchants from whom plaintiffs made purchases)); (See also Docs. 674 at 24; S-681 at 24 (arguing that each vertical class "would require separate trials.")).

Proceeding as a class action offers economies of time, effort and expense for the litigants and for the Court. Multiple lawsuits brought by thousands of purchasers of contact lenses in multiple states "would be costly, inefficient, and would burden the court system." Terazosin Hydrochloride, 220 F.R.D. at 700. "Further, as to the consumer class members, the class action device is particularly appropriate where, as here, it is necessary to 'permit the plaintiffs to pool claims which would [\[\*\*362\]](#) be uneconomical to litigate individually.'" Id. (quoting Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 809, 105 S. Ct. 2965, 86 L. Ed. 2d 628 \(1985\)). "The class action fills an essential role when the plaintiffs would not have the incentive or resources to prosecute relatively small claims in individual suits, leaving the defendant free from legal accountability." In re Checking Account Overdraft Litig., 307 F.R.D. 630, 649 \(S.D. Fla. 2015\); see also e.g. Deposit Guar. I<sup>\*\*4261</sup> Nat'l Bank of Jackson. Miss. v. Roper, 445 U.S. 326, 339, 100 S. Ct. 1166, 63 L. Ed. 2d 427 \(1980\) ("Where it is not economically feasible to obtain relief within the traditional framework of a multiplicity of small individual suits for damages, aggrieved persons may be without any effective redress unless they may employ the class-action device."). This case is a clear example of the category of cases where the individual members of the proposed class would lack incentive to pursue individual actions as the possible recovery would likely be far outweighed by the expense of such action. Also, where, as here, common issues predominate, it would be far more efficient to have the common issues raised by Plaintiffs' claims litigated in a single action, as opposed to thousands or more individual actions. The Court has determined that common issues predominate over individual issues, balancing the superiority requirement in favor of a class action over thousands of individual lawsuits. The applicable [\[\*\*363\]](#) state bodies of law are not so divergent from federal antitrust law so as to preclude a single trial on all three.

To be sure, management of the class action will present challenges, but Defendants have failed to suggest any superior alternatives. Individual claims may be too small for a separate action by each class member. "Because common questions of law and fact predominate, class-wide adjudication appropriately conserves judicial resources and advances society's interests in judicial efficiency," Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 989 (citing Falcon, 457 U.S. at 155), and class treatment is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of this controversy. The Court concludes that the superiority requirement of Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) has been satisfied.

IV. Class Definition

The Eleventh Circuit requires a class definition to "contain[ ] objective criteria that allow for class members to be identified in an administratively feasible way." Karhu v. Vital Pharms., Inc., 621 Fed. Appx. 945, 946 \(11th Cir. 2015\). It appears that the administratively feasible way for Plaintiffs to identify class putative class members is through self identification affidavits, supported by receipts, banks or credit card statements. See Karhu, 621 Fed. Appx. at 948; Delta/AirTran Baggage Fee, 317 F.R.D. at 692. The business records of each putative plaintiffs ECP may also provide information as [\[\*\*364\]](#) to each putative plaintiffs contact lens purchases. Identifying putative class members must be ministerial in nature, and more administratively manageable than multiple individual lawsuits. "The Court is cognizant of the concerns raised by self-identification, but in a case such as this, where the charge at issue is so small that it is unlikely to induce fraudulent claims and class members can obtain objective records with relative ease that would confirm their membership in the class, those concerns are minimized." Delta/AirTran Baggage Fee, 317 F.R.D. at 692. Additionally, it is unclear whether contact lens prescriptions and refills by product can be tracked through Defendant Manufacturer's business records, and traced to individual consumers. Plaintiffs will be required to support each putative class member's inclusion in the respective class with verifiable documentation to eliminate the need for "a series of mini trials" as to the threshold issue of class membership, while at the same time protecting the Defendants' due process rights. See Karhu, 621 Fed. Appx. at 947-49. "[A]s the process for submitting and confirming class members' claims is further developed, the Court (and no doubt Defendants) will remain vigilant that the process be structured in [**365] a manner to eliminate as much of the uncertainty as possible." Delta/AirTran Baggage Fee, 317 F.R.D. at 692.

The Court also approves of the creation of subclasses proposed by Plaintiffs to address variations in state law. See Klay, 382 F.3d at 1262 (observing that "class certification is appropriate where 'variations [in state law] can be effectively managed through creation of a small number of subclasses grouping the states that have similar legal doctrines.' (citation omitted)). "[T]he Court may certify multi-state classes even if different claims or issues are subject to different bodies of law that are not the same in functional content but nonetheless present a limited number of patterns that the court can manage by means of sub-classing." [Checking \[\*427\] Account Overdraft Litig., 307 F.R.D. at 652](#) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

The Court determines that the following definitions provide objective criteria for ascertaining who is a member of the class, that is not unlimited, overly broad, open-ended or vague, and that feasibly can be managed.

Horizontal Class:

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, or B&L from June 1, 2013 to the present (the "Class Period") for their own use and not for [**366] resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, where the purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any coconspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

The proposed Horizontal Class consists of the following subclasses:

(1) Maryland Subclass:

All persons and entities residing in Maryland who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, or B&L from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class [ILLEGIBLE TEXT] after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, [**367] their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any coconspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(2) California Subclass:

All persons and entities residing in California who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, or B&L from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, where the purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any coconspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

Vertical Classes:

(1) The JJVC Class

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by JJVC from June 1, 2013 [**368] to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(2) The Alcon Class:

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded [*428] from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(3) The B&L Class:

All persons and entities residing in the United [**369] States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by B&L from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, where the purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

V. Plaintiffs' Motion for Sanctions

Two days before the evidentiary hearing—on July 30, 2018—Plaintiffs filed a motion seeking sanctions for the alleged destruction of evidence. (Doc. 854).<sup>5</sup> The motion alleges that Defendants JJVC and Alcon had a duty to preserve and disclose a Facebook group called "UPP Violations," which was created and administered by Dr. Alan Glazier, an [**370] influential optometrist, sometime in 2014. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants utilized the UPP Violations group to exchange non-public information and enforce their UPPs. Plaintiffs submitted evidence documenting that Defendants were aware of the group and utilized the group as an informal means of enforcing their UPPs. Plaintiffs suggest that this evidence is consistent with their allegations of conspiracy. Although the Court has already decided to grant class certification, information contained in the motion's sealed exhibits revealed the following:

<sup>5</sup> On September 26, 2018, the Court ordered the parties to submit a joint notice indicating their respective positions on whether the Court may consider the Plaintiffs' factual allegations regarding their motion as part of the Court's determination of Plaintiffs' motion for class certification. (Doc. 894). The parties' joint submission indicates that the parties disagree on whether Plaintiffs' factual allegations should be so considered. (Doc. 902). As the remainder of this section indicates, the Court has decided to take Plaintiffs' motion under advisement.

- That information concerning Costco's noncompliance with JJVC's UPP was posted on the UPP Violations group and that JJVC was aware that the information had been posted on the group. (Doc. 854 Exs. 60, 62);
- That Dr. Glazier, through Facebook, encouraged Defendants to address violations listed on the UPP Violations group and described the relationship between the ODs and Defendants as a "partnership." (Id. Ex. 52);
- That Dr. Glazier would "tag" Defendants to notify them when violations had been posted to the UPP Violations group. (Id. Ex. 53);
- That at least two JJVC employees were members of the UPP Violations group, (Doc. 901 Exs. 1-2), [**371] and encouraged other employees to join. (Doc. 854 Ex. 56);
- That the existence of the UPP Violations group was discussed in emails exchanged between Alcon employees. (Id. Ex. 36);
- That the existence of the UPP Violations group was discussed in emails exchanged between CV employees. (Id. Ex. 73).

In October 2017, the Court ordered Dr. Glazier—who is not a party to this litigation—to produce content from another Facebook group he created and administered called "ODs on Facebook." (Doc. 687). Plaintiffs allege that the ODs on Facebook group contained numerous references to the UPP Violations group, which, Plaintiffs suggest, is when they first became aware of the second Facebook group. Plaintiffs' subsequent attempts to recover information from the UPP Violations group revealed that the group had [*429] been deleted by Dr. Glazier during the pendency of this litigation.

Plaintiffs have provided evidence that at least two employees of JJVC were members of the UPP Violations group, (Doc. 901 Exs. 1-2), and that other JJVC employees were aware of the group's existence. (Id. Ex. 20; Doc. 881 Exs. 10-11). Alcon acknowledges that a number of its sales representatives had access to the group, but denies [**372] that any of the employees responsible for implementing and enforcing its UPP were members of the group, or asked anyone with access to monitor or post content within the group. (Doc. 886 at 5).<sup>6</sup>

In any case, Plaintiffs contend that the deletion of the UPP Violations' contents, which are not recoverable, deprived Plaintiffs of "likely thousands of Facebook posts and comments" supporting their present claims. (Doc. 854 at 2). As a consequence, Plaintiffs request that the Court impose severe sanctions on JJVC and Alcon in the form of "(1) an adverse presumption from the Court on class certification and summary judgment; and (2) a mandatory adverse jury instruction at trial that the content of the UPP Violations group was unfavorable to Defendants." (Id.). Plaintiffs also seek an order compelling B&L and ABB to promptly disclose all employees who had access to the group. (Id.). Defendants oppose the motion on various grounds.

"[S]poliation is defined as the destruction of evidence or the significant and meaningful alteration of a document or instrument." Green Leaf Nursery v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 341 F.3d 1292, 1308 (11th Cir. 2003). Spoliation of electronically stored information (ESI) is now governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 37(e), which applies to all civil cases commenced after December 1, [**373] 2015. See Wooden v. Barringer, No. 3:16-CV-446-MCR-GRJ, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 183170, 2017 WL 5140518, at *3 (N.D. Fla. Nov. 6, 2017) ("[W]hen dealing with ESI, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 37(e) now governs a district court's power to sanction a party for spoliation of electronically stored information."). As a consequence, Rule 37(e) "foreclose reliance on inherent authority to . . . determine when certain measures should be used." Id. (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 37 Advisory Committee's Note (2015)).

The text of Rule 37 provides:

- (e) If electronically stored information that should have been preserved in the anticipation or conduct of litigation is lost because a party failed to take reasonable steps to preserve it, and it cannot be restored or replaced through additional discovery, the court:
  - (1) upon finding prejudice to another party from loss of the information, may order measures no greater than necessary to cure the prejudice; or
  - (2) only upon finding that the party acted with the intent to deprive another party of the information's use in the litigation may:
    - (A) presume that the lost information was unfavorable to the party;
    - (B) instruct the jury that it may or must presume the information was unfavorable to the party;
    - (C) dismiss the action or enter a default judgment.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 37. Thus, assuming sanctions are justified, the severity of the sanctions [\[\*\*374\]](#) imposed are determined by the spoliating party's culpability in depriving its opponents of the information.

The Rule 37\(e\) determination is governed by a multi-step analysis. See Wooden, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 183170, 2017 WL 5140518, at \*5. The first step asks whether "there was a duty to preserve the data in issue." Id. If the Court determines that no such duty exists, the analysis ends. [2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 183170, \[WL\] at \*7](#). Otherwise, the Court proceeds to answer whether "reasonable steps [were] taken to avoid the loss of the data." [2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 183170, \[WL\] at \*5](#). Should the Court conclude that reasonable [\[\*430\]](#) steps were not taken, and if the lost data cannot be acquired through other means of discovery, the Court must determine whether and to what extent the loss of information prejudiced the other party. Id. "If so, the Court may impose 'measures no greater than necessary to cure the prejudice.'" Id. (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 37\(e\)\(1\)). However, should the Court find that the data was lost "with the intent to deprive another party of the information's use in the litigation," the Court may impose the harsher sanctions delineated in Rule 37\(e\)\(2\).

Rule 37\(e\), however, "does not apply when information is lost before a duty to preserve arises." Fed. R. Civ. P. 37\(e\) Advisory Committee's Note (2015); Wooden, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 183170, 2017 WL 5140518, at \*7 ("If the Court finds [a party] . . . did not have a duty to preserve the evidence, the analysis [\[\*\*375\]](#) ends.). Generally, a party's preservation duties attach only to evidence within that party's possession, custody, or control. See Watson v. Edelen, 76 F. Supp. 3d 1332, 1343 \(N.D. Fla. 2015\) ("For a spoliation sanction to apply, it is essential that the evidence in question be within the party's control, that is, the party actually destroyed or was privy to the destruction of the evidence. Further, the party having control over the evidence must have an obligation to preserve it at the time it was destroyed . . . .").

A party may nonetheless "be in control of information that it does not own or physically possess." Selectica, Inc. v. Novatus, Inc., No. 6:13-CV-1708-ORL-40, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30460, 2015 WL 1125051, at \*4 \(M.D. Fla. Mar. 12, 2015\). "Control has been construed broadly by the courts as the legal right, authority or practical ability to obtain the materials sought on demand" Id. (quoting NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, 169 F.R.D. 493, 530 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

At the outset, it is important to note that Plaintiffs do not dispute that Dr. Glazier created and administered the UPP Violations group, controlled its membership, and ultimately deleted its contents. Moreover, Plaintiffs do not argue that JJVC's retention of Dr. Glazier as a paid consultant established JJVC's control over the UPP Violations group. Instead, Plaintiffs argue that because [\[\*\*376\]](#) certain employees of JJVC and Alcon were members of the UPP Violations group—or at least monitored the group—their resultant access established in both Defendants the "practical ability" to control and preserve the group's contents.

Plaintiffs primarily rely on the Selectica case for the contention that "when a party has access to relevant evidence of Facebook, that evidence falls within that party's 'possession, custody, or control'. . . ." (Doc. 854 at 18-19) (emphasis in original). However, Selectica's articulation of the "practical ability" test undermines the extraordinarily broad interpretation Plaintiffs advance here:

[Under the "practical ability" test], a party might control a non-party based upon their relationship. The attorney-client relationship and the corporate parent-subsidiary relationship are examples. A party may control a non-party if there is a contract empowering the party to obtain information from the non-party. Control may also exist if it is customary in the industry for the non-party to furnish the information to the party. On the other hand, if extraordinary, unethical, or illegal means are required, then there is no practical ability to obtain the information. [**377]

The employer-employee relationship is one that may result in an employer party having the necessary control over information in the possession of a non-party employee. "Relationships which evidence a legal right of a party to obtain a document from nonparty include ... an employer from current employees." Bleecker v. Standard Fire Ins. Co., 130 F. Supp. 2d 726, 739 \(E.D.N.C. 2000\). This is consistent with the holdings in cases discussing the control an employer may possess over former employees. See, e.g., Export-Import Bank of the U.S. v. Asia Pulp & Paper Co. Ltd., 233 F.R.D. 338, 341-42 \(S.D.N.Y. 2005\) ("Analyzing the practical ability of corporations to obtain work-related documents from former employees, courts insist that corporations, at the very least, ask their former employees to cooperate before asserting that they have no control over documents in the former employees' possession."); [In re Folding Carton Antitrust \[\*431\] Litig., 76 F.R.D. 420, 423 \(N.D. 111. 1977\)](#) ("In the meantime, we assume that, if defendants contact their former employees who still receive compensation from them, they will secure the requested documents and can produce them to plaintiffs.").

Thus, inherent in the "practical ability" test is some legal right of control over the information possessed by a non-party-a right established by, for instance, the existence of an employer-employee relationship, or a legal (e.g., a contractual) entitlement to the [**378] information possessed by the non-party. In other words, "practical ability" means something more than the naked ability to "access" information. See Bleecker v. Std. Fire Ins. Co., 130 F. Supp. 2d 726, 739 \(E.D.N.C. 2000\) (stating, "in order for material to be discoverable, [the] defendant must have some type of legal right to the material [the] plaintiff seeks to discover").<sup>7</sup>

Thus, access attributable to membership in a closed Facebook group would not suffice to confer Defendants a legal entitlement to information posted by non-party members within the group. And other than membership access, Plaintiffs fail to articulate any alternative basis from which the Court can conclude that any Defendant had the ability to control Dr. Glaizer, or otherwise enforce his compliance with discovery demands.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Bleeker's interpretation of "practical ability" as encompassing a legal right to information in the possession of a non-party has been reinforced by district courts within this Circuit. See, e.g. Siegmund v. Bian, No. 12-62539-CIV, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46610, 2016 WL 1359595, at \*3 \(S.D. Fla. Apr. 6, 2016\) ("[E]ven under the most expansive interpretation of 'control', the 'practical ability' to demand production must be accompanied by a similar ability to enforce compliance with that demand." (quoting Klesch & Co. v. Liberty Media Corp., 217 F.R.D. 517, 520 \(D. Colo. 2003\)); Mamani v. Sanchez De Lozada Sanchez Bustamante, No. 07-22459-CIV, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127818, 2017 WL 3456327, at \*3 \(S.D. Fla. Aug. 11, 2017\) ("[The plaintiff] can be compelled to produce only documents that he has the 'legal right' to obtain 'upon demand' with the 'ability to enforce compliance with that demand.'").

<sup>8</sup> Plaintiffs cite a litany of cases for the proposition that "when a party has access to relevant evidence on Facebook, that evidence falls within that party's 'possession, custody, or control' and must be preserved and/or produced." (Doc. 854 at 19). Plaintiffs' cases, however, all involve the social media posts of persons who were a party to the litigation. See Painter v. Atwood, No. 2:12-CV-01215-JCM, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35060, 2014 WL 1089694, at \*4 \(D. Nev. Mar. 18, 2014\) (adverse inference granted in part where the plaintiff deleted Facebook posts and pictures created and maintained by the plaintiff); Howell v. Buckeye Ranch, Inc., No. 2:11-CV-1014, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141368, 2012 WL 5265170, at \*2 \(S.D. Ohio Oct. 1, 2012\) (motion to compel production of relevant information contained within the plaintiff's private social media accounts granted); Higgins v. Koch Dev. Corp., No. 3:11-CV-81-RLY-WGH, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94139, 2013 WL 3366278, at \*3 \(S.D. Ind. July 5, 2013\) (compelling plaintiffs to produce their own Facebook posts); Federico v. Lincoln Military Hous., LLC, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178943, \*18 \(E.D. Va. Dec. 31, 2014\) (motion for sanctions granted in part for the plaintiffs' failure to turn over their own social media posts in timely manner).

It is also critical to note that courts routinely "decline[] to compel production of documents in the hands of one party when the material is equally available to the other party from another source." SEC v. Strauss, No. 09 CIV. 4150 RMB/1-1BP, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101227, 2009 WL 3459204, at \*11 \(S.D.N.Y. Oct. 28, 2009\); Shcherbakovskiy v. Da Capo Al Fine, Ltd., 490 F.3d 130, 138 \(2d Cir. 2007\) (stating, "We. [**379] .. think it fairly obvious that a party also need not seek such documents from third parties if compulsory process against the third parties is available to the party seeking the documents"); Valenzuela v. Smith, 04 Civ. 0900, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6078, 2006 WL 403842 at \*2 \(E.D. Cal. Feb. 16, 2006\) ("Defendants . will not be compelled to produce documents that are equally available to plaintiff."); Bleecker, 130 F. Supp. 2d at 738 ("When information is readily attainable through a subpoena duces tecum, no compelling reason exists to expand the definition of control."); Blair v. Travelers Ins. Co., 9 F.R.D. 99, 99 \(W.D. Mo. 1949\) (motion for production denied where "[n]early all the documents sought can be obtained by the plaintiff as easily as they can be obtained by the defendant").

Whether Plaintiffs were in fact aware of the UPP Violations group at the time they subpoenaed Dr. Glazier in July of 2016 is a matter of dispute. What is not in dispute, [*432] however, is that Plaintiffs were aware, likely before the commencement of this litigation, that Dr. Glazier controlled information that they believed was relevant to the case.<sup>9</sup>

That Plaintiffs were able to subpoena Dr. Glazier-and also obtain an order from this Court enforcing that subpoena-reflects that Plaintiffs possessed sufficient means to procure the now-deleted information for themselves. [**380] The conclusion is only bolstered in considering that Judge Klindt's enforcement order explicitly noted Defendants' lack of control over Dr. Glazier's ODs on Facebook group. (Dkt. 881-56 (stating, in regard to the ODs on Facebook group, "it does not appear that Defendants have in their control the majority of the information Plaintiffs seek," and "the information is appropriately sought from Dr. Glazier, as the groups administrator"). As such, it would be inappropriate to compel, much less sanction, Defendants for failing to preserve materials-materials controlled by a non-party-that Plaintiffs had the ability to obtain themselves. See Bleecker, 130 F. Supp. 2d at 738 ("When information is readily attainable through a subpoena duces tecum, no compelling reason exists to expand the definition of control.").)

Finally, Plaintiffs contend that subpoenas issued on Defendants between October 2014 and May 2015 by New York's Attorney General triggered preservation obligations with respect to Plaintiffs. However, this argument-the "shifting duty" argument-has been considered and uniformly rejected by district courts within the Eleventh Circuit. See In re Delta/AirTran Baggage Fee Antitrust Litig., 770 F. Supp. 2d 1299, 1308 \(N.D. Ga. 2011\) (rejecting the shifting duty argument and stating, "Plaintiffs have not cited [**381] any authority that would support such a sweeping and novel theory of spoliation"); In re Abilify \(Aripiprazole\) Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 3:16-MD-2734, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 172536, 2018 WL 4856767, at \*5 \(N.D. Fla. Oct. 5, 2018\) ("The fatal flaw ... to Plaintiffs' argument concerning the DOJ investigation is that other courts addressing the same shifting duty argument have rejected it."); Stanfill v. Talton, 851 F. Supp. 2d 1346, 1366 \(M.D. Ga. 2012\) ("The Court is not aware of any decision by a court in this circuit adopting the 'shifting duty' argument urged by the Plaintiff, and on the facts here, this Court declines the opportunity to be the first."); Point Blank Solutions, Inc. v. Toyobo Am., Inc., No. 09-61166-CIV, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42239, 2011 WL 1456029, at \*24 \(S.D. Fla. Apr. 5, 2011\) ("The shifting duty theory is incompatible with the basic rule that a duty is owed to a specific party.").

In sum, Plaintiffs' arguments and submitted evidence, at present, do not justify the imposition of sanctions for spoliation. The Court, however, is cognizant of the fact that Plaintiffs learned of the UPP Violations group late in the case, and may not have had adequate time to sufficiently develop evidence concerning the connection between Defendants and Dr. Glazier or the UPP Violations group. For that reason, the Court will take Plaintiffs' motion for sanctions under advisement. The Court will revisit the motion [**382] at trial before the jury instructions are finalized; after the parties have had further opportunities to develop the record with respect to the spoliation issue. The Court will also reopen discovery, for only 60 days, with respect to Defendants B&L and ABB for the limited purpose of investigating whether any connection existed between those Defendants and the UPP Violations group.

VI. Trial Plan

In light of the fact that seven motions for summary judgment are currently pending, (Does. 872-874, 877, 906, 908, 912), the Court will not order the parties to submit a Trial Plan until those motions are resolved. The parties are hereby notified that resolution of the motions may require the pretrial conference and trial be rescheduled for a later date.

Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED:

1. Defendants' Motion to Strike Portions of the Expert Report of Dr. John L. Solow and Preclude Testimony Regarding Purported Collusion Between the Defendants, Pursuant [*433] to Fed. R. Evid. 702 and Daubert (Doc. 500, Doc. S-531) is DENIED.
2. Defendants' Motion to Exclude or Strike the Expert Report of Dr. Michael A. Williams Under Fed. R. Evid. 702 and Fed. R. Civ. P. 37\(c\)\(1\) (Doc. 503; Doc. S-535) is DENIED.
3. Defendants' Motion to Exclude the Supplemental Report of Dr. [**383] Michael A. Williams Under Fed. R. Evid. 702 and Daubert (Doc. 693; Doc. S-720) is DENIED.
4. Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. (Doc. 396; Doc. S-404) is GRANTED.
5. The Court certifies the following classes as to Plaintiffs' claims brought in Plaintiffs' Interlineation To Corrected Consolidated Class Action Complaint (Doc. 395):

Horizontal Class:

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, or B&L from June 1, 2013 to the present (the "Class Period") for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, where the purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any coconspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(1) Maryland Subclass:

All persons and entities residing in Maryland who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, or B&L from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, where the purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any coconspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(2) California Subclass:

All persons and entities residing in California who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon, JJVC, or B&L from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral [**385] Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are any purchases from 1- 800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, where the purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any coconspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

Vertical Classes:

(1) The JJVC Class

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by JJVC from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(2) The Alcon Class: [**386]

[*434] All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by Alcon from June 1, 2013' to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries, and affiliates, any co-conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges, justices, or jurors assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

(3) The B&L Class:

All persons and entities residing in the United States who made retail purchases of disposable contact lenses manufactured by B&L from June 1, 2013 to the date the Court certifies the Class for their own use and not for resale, where the prices for such contact lenses were subject to a "Unilateral Pricing Policy" and the purchase occurred during the period when the Unilateral Pricing Policy was in effect. Excluded from the Class are any purchases from 1-800 Contacts of disposable contact lenses subject to B&L's Unilateral Pricing Policy, where the [**387] purchase occurred on or after July 1, 2015. Also excluded from the Class are Defendants, their parent companies, subsidiaries and affiliates, any co- conspirators, all governmental entities, and any judges or justices assigned to hear any aspect of this action.

6. The determination of the definition of the classes is conditional and may be amended or modified prior to any decision on the merits and final judgment. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(c\)\(1\)\(C\).

7. Hausfeld LLP, Robins Kaplan LLP, and Scott + Scott LLP remain appointed as class counsel.

8. The following Plaintiffs are appointed as class representatives:

Rachel Berg
Alexis Ito
Miriam Pardoll
Jennifer Sineni

7. Pursuant to Rule 23(c)(2)(B), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the parties shall confer and submit to the Court, on or before January 16, 2019, a joint proposed class notice plan and form of notice. If the parties are unable to agree on a class notice plan and form of notice, the parties shall each submit one on or before January 30, 2019, accompanied by a memorandum explaining that party's position. Each party shall respond to the other's proposed [**388] notice plan and form of notice no later than February 13, 2019.

8. Plaintiffs' "Motion for Spoliation Sanctions Against Defendants Johnson & Johnson Vision Care, Inc. and Alcon Laboratories, Inc." (Doc. 854) is TAKEN UNDER ADVISEMENT.

9. Discovery shall be REOPENED, for 45 days, with respect to Defendants B&L and ABB for the limited purpose of investigating whether any connection exists between those Defendants and Dr. Glazier and the UPP Violations group.

HN3 [] Standing, Burdens of Proof

The Article III standing doctrine limits the category of litigants empowered to maintain a lawsuit in federal court to seek redress for a legal wrong. Standing is the threshold question in every federal case. In order to establish Article III standing, the plaintiff must have suffered an injury in fact that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of the defendants and that is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision. The plaintiff, as the party invoking federal jurisdiction, bears the burden of establishing those elements. Where a case is at the pleading stage, the plaintiff must clearly allege facts demonstrating each element of standing.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

HN4 [] Standing, Burdens of Proof

To establish injury in fact, a plaintiff must show that he or she suffered an invasion of a legally protected interest that is concrete and particularized and actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical. For an injury to be particularized, it must affect the plaintiff in a distinct way. A concrete injury must be de facto, in other words, it must actually exist. Moreover, although imminence is concededly a somewhat elastic concept, it cannot be stretched beyond its purpose, which is to ensure that the alleged injury is not too speculative for Article III purposes--that the injury is certainly impending.

HN5 [] Standing, Burdens of Proof

Individuals who seek only injunctive or declaratory relief, must nonetheless show that they are under threat of suffering an injury in fact. The threat of a prospective injury must be real and immediate and not premised upon the existence of past injuries alone. It is the reality of the threat not the plaintiff's subjective apprehensions the emotional consequences of a prior act simply are not a sufficient basis for an injunction absent a real and immediate threat of future injury by the defendant.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions

HN6 [down] Class Actions, Class Action Fairness Act

The Class Action Fairness Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1711 et seq., vests original jurisdiction in the district courts of the United States for any multi-state class action where the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $5 million and where the citizenship of any member of the class of plaintiffs is different from that of any defendant.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN7 [down] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(2\) allows a defendant to file a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Due Process

HN8 [down] In Personam Actions, Due Process

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment constrains a State's authority to bind a nonresident defendant to a judgment of its courts, and, thus, in order for the court to have personal jurisdiction over plaintiffs, plaintiffs must show that defendants have or had)sufficient minimum contacts with the forum state such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. Minimum contacts exist where a defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions

HN9 [down] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

A plaintiff has the burden of showing personal jurisdiction but that burden is relatively slight where the court rules without conducting an evidentiary hearing. To defeat dismissal in that context, a plaintiff need make only a prima facie showing that personal jurisdiction exists. Nevertheless, in response to a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff may not stand on his pleadings, but must show the specific facts demonstrating that the court has jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Due Process

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Long Arm Jurisdiction

HN10 [down] In Personam Actions, Due Process

Tennessee's long-arm statute has been interpreted to be coterminous with the limits on personal jurisdiction imposed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution, and, thus, the jurisdictional limits of Tennessee law and of federal constitutional law of due process are identical. Because of that, the court need only determine whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction violates constitutional due process.

HN11[] In Personam Actions, Substantial Contacts

Personal jurisdiction maybe found either generally or specifically. General jurisdiction depends on continuous and systematic contact with the forum state, so that the courts may exercise jurisdiction over any claims a plaintiff may bring against the defendant. Specific jurisdiction, on the other hand, grants jurisdiction only to the extent that a claim arises out of or relates to a defendant's contacts in the forum state.

HN12[] In Personam Actions, Purposeful Availment

The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has identified three criteria for specific jurisdiction: First, the defendant must purposefully avail himself of the privilege of acting in the forum state or causing a consequence in the forum state. Second, the cause of action must arise from the defendant's activities there. Finally, the acts of the defendant or consequences caused by the defendant must have a substantial enough connection with the forum state to make the exercise of jurisdiction over the defendant reasonable. If any of the three requirements is not met, personal jurisdiction may not be invoked. That is, each criterion represents an independent requirement, and failure to meet any one of the three means that personal jurisdiction may not be invoked. The court must have personal jurisdiction over each defendant and as to each asserted claim.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

HN13[] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

In the federal class action context, the cases have universally held that in a putative class action (1) courts are only concerned with the jurisdictional obligations of the named plaintiffs and (2) unnamed class members are irrelevant to the question of specific jurisdiction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN14[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In an antitrust lawsuit, the cause of action accrues and the accompanying limitations period commences each time a defendant commits an act that injures the plaintiff's business. For statute of limitations purposes the focus is on the timing of the causes of injury, i.e. the defendant's overt acts, as opposed to the effects of the overt acts. A continuing antitrust violation is one in which the plaintiff's interests are repeatedly invaded.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act

HN15 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

When a plaintiff alleges a continuing antitrust violation, the cause of action accrues each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of defendants. However, even in the event of an alleged continuing violation, an overt act by the defendant is required to restart the statute of limitations and the statute runs from the last overt act. Such an overt act involves a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act that inflicts new and accumulating injury on the plaintiff.

Opinion

[*683] MEMORANDUM OPINION

Pending before the Court is Momenta Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Momenta") and Sandoz Inc.'s ("Sandoz") (collectively "Defendants") Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(2\) (Lack of Personal Jurisdiction), Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\) (Lack of Subject-Matter Jurisdiction), and Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). (Doc. Nos. 193, 195, [**3] 197.) Nashville General Hospital ("NGH") and American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees District Council 37 Health & Security Plan ("DC 37") (collectively "Plaintiffs") have filed responses to Defendants' motions (Doc. Nos. 208, 209, 210), to which Defendants have replied (Doc. Nos. 213, 214, 215). For the reasons below, the Court will (1) grant Defendants' Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) motion to dismiss; (2) deny Defendants' Rule 12\(b\)\(2\) motion; and (3) grant in part and deny in part Defendants' Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion.

[*684] A. Procedural Background

On October 14, 2015, NGH filed its initial complaint against the Defendants, alleging four separate counts under the Sherman Antitrust Act \("Sherman Act"\). (Doc. No. 1.) NGH sought damages, as well as declaratory and injunctive relief. (Id. at 27.) NGH brought its claims on behalf of itself and a nationwide class of persons and entities, pursuant to the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 \("CAFA"\) and Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) and \(b\). (Id. at 6, 21.) As explained in more detail in Section B infra, the alleged Sherman Act violations centered on the role that Defendants played in a conspiracy to monopolize the production and distribution of enoxaparin, a generic version of the drug Lovenox®. (Id. at 4-23.)

In response to the complaint, Defendants [**4] filed a motion to transfer the case to the District of Massachusetts and a motion to dismiss. (Doc. Nos. 65, 68.) Momenta additionally filed a separate motion to dismiss or transfer for improper venue. (Doc. No. 62.) On September 29, 2016, Magistrate Judge Barbara Holmes entered a Report and Recommendation recommending that the motions be denied. (Doc. No. 114.) Defendants filed joint and separate objections to the Report and Recommendation. (Doc. Nos. 117, 119.) On March 21, 2017, the Court issued a Memorandum Opinion that adopted in part and declined to adopt in part the Report and Recommendation. (Doc. No. 134.) The Court dismissed NGH's Sherman Act claims, to the extent that NGH sought damages in connection with those claims. (Id. at 8-14.) The Court found that NGH did not have standing to seek damages for its Sherman Act claims under the "indirect purchaser rule." (Id.) However, NGH's Sherman Act claims were permitted to proceed on declaratory and injunctive theories of relief. (Id. at 16.)

Thereafter, NGH filed a motion for leave to file an amended complaint. (Doc. No. 140.) The amended complaint contained three primary changes: (1) the addition of DC 37 as a new representative plaintiff; (2) the [**5] addition of various state antitrust and consumer protection claims; and (3) the addition of new substantive allegations pertaining to Defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct. (Doc. No. 141 at 5.) Defendants filed a response in opposition. (Doc. No. 148.) Ultimately, Magistrate Judge Holmes granted Plaintiffs' motion for leave to file an amended complaint, and Plaintiffs filed their amended complaint on December 21, 2017. (Doc. No. 191.) Defendants then filed the instant motions to dismiss.

B. Factual Background

NGH is a metropolitan charity hospital that purchases certain drugs it administers, including the generic anticoagulant enoxaparin. (Doc. No. 191 at 6-7.) DC 37 is a non-profit health and welfare benefit plan covering public sector employees, retirees and their families. (Id.) Plaintiffs allege that they have, and will continue to, indirectly purchase and/or provide reimbursement for Lovenox® and enoxaparin. (Id. at 7-8.)

The drug at issue, enoxaparin, is used in the prevention and treatment of deep vein thrombosis and in the treatment of heart attacks. (Id. at 10.) Sanofi-Aventis ("Aventis"), a non-party to this lawsuit, brought enoxaparin to market in the United States under the brand name [**6] Lovenox® and held a patent on the drug, which was subsequently held to be unenforceable in 2007. (Id. at 10-11.)

However, Momenta is the assignee of a patent (the "886 Patent") for a chemical process used to test the quality of enoxaparin ("Method <207>"). (Id. at 13.) In 2003, Momenta entered into a collaboration [**685] agreement (the "Collaboration Agreement") with Sandoz, whereby Sandoz eventually began manufacturing and selling generic enoxaparin. (Id. at 11-14.) The Collaboration Agreement provided for profit-sharing between Momenta and Sandoz, with regard to Sandoz's sales of its generic enoxaparin, so long as Defendants remained the sole source of generic enoxaparin in the United States. (Id. at 13.) Further, the Collaboration Agreement provided for Momenta to receive "milestone payments" if Sandoz remained the sole supplier of generic enoxaparin. (Id.) Essentially, the Collaboration Agreement provided Momenta with a powerful incentive to use whatever rights it had to prevent other parties from entering the generic enoxaparin market.

By 2007, Aventis had requested that the United States Pharmacopeial Convention ("USP") adopt criteria for enoxaparin that included a standardized test to assure that enoxaparin produced by drug companies in [**7] the United States met chemical criteria approved by the FDA.<sup>1</sup> (Id. at 16.) Aventis's proposed method for testing enoxaparin was Method <207>. (Id.) At that time, Aventis had a pending patent application for Method <207>. (Id. at 17.) Defendants, who participated in the relevant USP review panel, objected to Aventis having a patent that covered a standardized USP test, contending that the test, once adopted, should be free for anyone to use. (Id.) After discussions with USP, Aventis agreed to abandon its patent application. (Id. at 18.) However, unbeknownst to the USP panel, Momenta had its own patent application pending—the 886 Patent—that, when granted, would give <sup>1</sup> The USP is a scientific nonprofit organization that sets standards for identity, strength, quality, and purity of medicines, food ingredients, and dietary supplements that are manufactured, distributed, and consumed worldwide. (Id. at 14.) USP standards are enforceable as binding by the United States Food and Drug Administration ("FDA"). 21 U.S.C. § 351\(b\).

Momenta patent rights that could be asserted against third parties that used Method <207>. (Id. at 18-19.) In December 2009, the USP approved and adopted Method <207> as the standardized test to assure enoxaparin quality, and the 886 Patent was issued shortly thereafter. (Id. at 13, 19.) Plaintiffs allege that, had Defendants disclosed their own application for the 886 Patent, the USP would have either required Momenta to abandon its patent rights, as it did with Aventis, or chosen an alternative test that would not have been subject to patent protection. (Id. at 19.)

Defendants became the first [**8] entities authorized by the FDA to produce generic enoxaparin. (Id. at 20.) Thereafter, Amphastar Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Amphastar"), a non-party to this case, received FDA approval to sell generic enoxaparin on September 19, 2011. (Id. at 21.) Upon approval, the FDA instructed Amphastar to use the USP compendium for enoxaparin, including Method <207>. (Id.) Two days later, Defendants sued Amphastar in the District of Massachusetts, contending that it was essentially illegal for Amphastar to comply with Method <207> and produce generic enoxaparin because it could not do so without infringing on the 886 Patent. (Id.) After filing their complaint, Defendants obtained a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction preventing Amphastar from selling enoxaparin. (Id. at 22.) However, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit stayed the preliminary injunction in January 2012 and vacated it in August 2012. (Id.)

In July 2013, the U.S. District Court for the District of Massachusetts granted Amphastar's motion for summary judgment, [*686] finding that Amphastar did not infringe on the asserted claims of the 886 Patent. (Id. at 22-23.) Defendants appealed the district court's order, and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the [**9] First Circuit vacated the district court's grant of summary judgment. (Id. at 23.) In July 2017, a jury found that Momenta's 886 Patent was invalid for lack of enablement and lack of written description. See Momenta Pharm., Inc. v. Amphastar Pharm., Inc., No. 1:11-cv-11681-NMG, Doc. No. 1081, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113713 \(D. Mass. July 21, 2017\) (jury verdict in favor of defendants).<sup>2</sup> The district court accepted post-trial briefing and, on February 7, 2018, issued its post-trial orders, upholding the jury's verdict. See Momenta Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Doc. Nos. 1134, 1135, 1136, 1137, 1138, 1139, 1149. Defendants have sought an appeal of this order before the Federal Circuit. See Momenta Pharm., Inc. v. Amphastar Pharm., Inc., Case No. 18-740, Doc. No. 1 \(Fed. Cir. Mar. 29, 2018\) (notice of appeal).

Plaintiffs, in their Amended Complaint, assert four counts under the Sherman Act, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. (Doc. No. 191 at 30-35.) Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' anticompetitive conduct "is continuing and will continue unless enjoined by the Court." (Id.) Plaintiffs also claim, on behalf of themselves and members of the putative class, a host of state violations, pursuant to those states' antitrust, consumer [**10] protection, and unjust enrichment laws. (Id. at 35-73.)

C. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Under Federal Rule Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(1\)

Defendants first filed a Motion to Dismiss Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(1\) (Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction). (Doc. No. 193.) Defendants' primary argument is that Plaintiffs lack Article III standing to pursue their Sherman Act claims for injunctive and declaratory relief. (Doc. No. 196 at 10-13.) Defendants contend that Plaintiffs sole sought-after relief—permanent injunction of Defendants from asserting their rights in the 886 Patent against other potential entrants in the generic enoxaparin marketplace—would require this Court to prohibit future, hypothetical conduct. (Id. at 13.) Moreover, Defendants maintain that (1) it has been more than six years since they have sought to use the 886 Patent to bar others from entering the generic enoxaparin market; and (2) even if they wished to assert their 886 Patent rights to engage in anticompetitive conduct, the litigation in the District of Massachusetts prevents them from doing so. (Id. at 11-13.) Accordingly, Defendants argue that the Amended Complaint does not allege facts showing a concrete threat of imminent harm, and, therefore, Plaintiffs fail to present the Court with a justiciable Article [**11] III case or controversy. (Id. at 13.)

<sup>2</sup>The Court takes judicial notice of the District of Massachusetts proceedings, as those proceedings are public record and integral to the Amended Complaint. See Campbell v. Nationstar Mortg., 611 F. App'x 288, 291 \(6th Cir. 2011\) (HN1[↑]) "In addition to the allegations in the complaint, [the Court] may also consider other materials that are integral to the complaint, are public records, or are otherwise appropriate for the taking of judicial notice.").

At issue in this case is whether Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged the injury-in-fact element. HN5 [↑] Individuals who, like Plaintiffs, seek only injunctive or declaratory relief, must nonetheless show that they are under threat of suffering an injury in fact. ## 2. Application to Plaintiffs' Sherman Act Claims

Plaintiffs, [**13] in their Amended Complaint, allege that Defendants' anticompetitive conduct "is continuing and will continue unless enjoined by the Court." (Doc. No. 191 at 31-35.) As set out in greater detail in Plaintiffs' response to Defendants' Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) motion, Plaintiffs allege that they and the putative class were harmed beginning in September 2011 by paying supracompetitive prices resulting from Defendants' efforts to exclude Amphastar and other potential entrants from the generic enoxaparin market. (Doc. No. 208 at 13.) Plaintiffs argue that, because the Amended [*688] Complaint alleges that the harm to them and the putative class is "ongoing," they have standing to pursue injunctive and declaratory relief. (Id.) Plaintiffs contend that, until there is no possibility that the 886 Patent will be used to exclude competitors from the market—for example, through a permanent injunction barring Defendants from enforcing it (the relief Plaintiffs seek)—Plaintiffs will continue to be threatened with the prospect of future injury and have standing to seek injunctive relief. (Id. at 14.)

Here, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have not made a sufficient threshold demonstration that they have Article III standing to pursue [**14] their Sherman Act claims for injunctive and declaratory relief.<sup>3</sup> In this particular case, Plaintiffs, pursuing only injunctive and declaratory relief, fail to show that they are under threat of suffering a prospective injury that is "real and immediate." Summers, 555 U.S. at 493 (emphasis added). To be sure, Plaintiffs have detailed a host of factual allegations regarding prior injuries that Defendants have allegedly inflicted. (See Doc. No. 191 at 4-30.) However, these prior injuries are insufficient to demonstrate the threat of an impending future injury. Lyons, 461 U.S. at 102-03.

Essentially, Plaintiffs' prospective injury theory is that (1) Defendants' ongoing appeal of their 886 Patent rights before the Federal Circuit might be successful; (2) this successful appeal might result in Amphastar, or other drug companies, being prevented from participating in the generic enoxaparin market; (3) if Defendants decide to enforce their regained 886 Patent rights. (Doc. No. 208 at 14.) Thus, Plaintiffs rely on a hypothetical chain of events, any of which may not occur. This is not "real and immediate" nor "certainly impending." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 564 n.2; Lyons, 461 U.S. at 102-03. To be clear, Defendants, as a result of the District of Massachusetts litigation, cannot simply restart [**15] the alleged anticompetitive conduct through the assertion of their presently-invalid 886 Patent rights. The stopgap created by the District of Massachusetts litigation necessarily limits the Plaintiffs' ability to demonstrate that there is a real or immediate threat of prospective injury. Accordingly, because Plaintiffs' theory of prospective harm relies on a string of actions, the occurrence of any of which is speculative, its Sherman Act claims do not reach the level of imminency required to confer standing on a plaintiff seeking injunctive and declaratory relief in federal court. The Court will grant Defendants' Rule 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss, and Plaintiffs' Sherman Acts claims will be dismissed.

D. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to Federal Rule Civil Procedure 12(b)(2)

In their second motion to dismiss, Defendants contend that this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over them regarding Plaintiffs' remaining state law claims.<sup>4</sup> [*689] (Doc. No. 193.) Defendants' argument primarily relies on the Supreme Court's recent decision in Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Superior Court, 137 S. Ct. 1773, 198 L. Ed. 2d 395 (2017). (Doc. No. 194 at 9-14.) Defendants contend that, under the holding in Bristol-Myers, courts may not exercise personal jurisdiction over non-resident defendants for claims that arise outside the forum state. [**16] (Id. at 9.) Defendants assert that (1) they are both non-residents of Tennessee; (2) Plaintiffs' state law claims, brought under the laws of 30 non-Tennessee jurisdictions, necessarily arose out of purchase and reimbursement activity that occurred outside Tennessee; and, consequently (3) the Court lacks jurisdiction to hear those claims. (Id. at 11-14.) Plaintiffs respond that (1) Sandoz consented to general personal jurisdiction in Tennessee by registering an agent for service of process in Tennessee; (2) Bristol-Myers does not apply to the instant class action; and (3) specific personal jurisdiction exists over the Defendants for all of the state law claims. (See Doc. No. 209.)

1. Applicable Law

HN7 [↑] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2) allows a defendant to file a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. HN8 [↑] "The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment constrains a State's authority to bind a nonresident defendant to a judgment of its courts," Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. 277, 134 S. Ct. 1115, 1121, 188 L.

<sup>3</sup> As a preliminary matter, Plaintiffs argue that Defendants' Rule 12(b)(1) motion confuses jurisdictional and merits-based issues. (Doc. No. 208 at 9-10.) However, the Court is convinced that Defendants' Rule 12(b)(1) motion properly raises issues regarding Article III standing. Defendants do not argue that Plaintiffs have failed to satisfy certain statutory elements of federal antitrust law, rather, they raise a facial challenge to Plaintiffs' Article III standing to pursue the Sherman Act claims for injunctive and declaratory relief. (See Doc. No. 196.)

<sup>4</sup> The Court retains subject matter jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' state law claims pursuant to HN6 [↑] the Class Action Fairness Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 1711, et seq., which vests original jurisdiction in the district courts of the United States for any multi-state class action where the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $5 million and where the citizenship of any member of the class of plaintiffs is different from that of any defendant. Accordingly, the Court proceeds to consider whether it has personal jurisdiction over the Defendants' with regard to Plaintiffs' remaining state law claims.

Ed. 2d 12 (2014), and, thus, in order for the Court to have personal jurisdiction over Defendants, Plaintiffs must show that Defendants have (or had) sufficient minimum contacts with Tennessee such that "the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.'"<sup>5</sup> International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (1945). Minimum contacts exist where a defendant [**17] purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state.<sup>6</sup> Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 475, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 (1985).

HN11[↑] "Personal jurisdiction maybe found either generally or specifically." Miller, 694 F.3d at 678 (quoting Air Prods. & Controls, Inc., 503 F.3d at 549-50). "General jurisdiction depends on continuous and systematic contact with the forum state, so [*690] that the courts may exercise jurisdiction over any claims a plaintiff may bring against the defendant." Id. at 678-79 (quoting Kerry Steel, Inc. v. Paragon Indus., Inc., 106 F.3d 147, 149 (6th Cir. 1997)). "Specific jurisdiction, on the other hand, grants jurisdiction only to the extent that a claim arises out of or relates to a defendant's contacts in the forum state." Id.

2. Specific Personal Jurisdiction

Plaintiffs argue that Defendants are both subject to specific personal jurisdiction and, with respect to Sandoz, general personal jurisdiction in Tennessee. Because the Court finds that the Defendants, and their state law claims, are subject to specific personal jurisdiction, the Court does not address any other arguments. As noted, specific jurisdiction deals with a Defendant's contacts with the forum state relating to the claims at issue. HN12[↑] The Sixth Circuit has identified three criteria for specific jurisdiction:

First, the defendant must purposefully avail [**18] himself of the privilege of acting in the forum state or causing a consequence in the forum state. Second, the cause of action must arise from the defendant's activities there. Finally, the acts of the defendant or consequences caused by the defendant must have a substantial enough connection with the forum state to make the exercise of jurisdiction over the defendant reasonable.

AlixPartners, LLP v. Brewington, 836 F.3d 543, 549-50 (6th Cir. 2016) (quoting Air Prods., 503 F.3d at 550). "If any of the three requirements is not met, personal jurisdiction may not be invoked." Miller, 694 F.3d at 680. That is, "each criterion represents an independent requirement, and failure to meet any one of the three means that personal jurisdiction may not be invoked." LAK Inc. v Deer Creek Enters., 885 F.2d 1293, 1303 (6th Cir. 1989). The court must have personal jurisdiction over each defendant and as to each asserted claim. Bd. of Forensic Document Exam'rs, Inc. v. ABA, No. 16-cv-2641, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18806, 2017 WL 549031, at *3 (W.D. Tenn. Feb. 9, 2017) (citation omitted).

Defendants contend that DC 37 and NGH assert putative class action claims as non-Tennessee residents, on behalf of non-Tennessee residents, and under non-Tennessee laws, based on enoxaparin purchases made outside Tennessee. (Doc. No. 194 at 9.) Indeed, Plaintiffs do assert 69 state-law claims under the laws of 30 jurisdictions.

<sup>5</sup> HN9[↑] Plaintiffs have the burden of showing personal jurisdiction but "that burden is 'relatively slight' where, as here, the . . . court rules without conducting an evidentiary hearing." MAG IAS Holdings, Inc. v. Schmückle, 854 F.3d 894, 899 (6th Cir. 2017) (citing Air Prods & Controls Inc. v. Safetech Int'l Inc., 503 F.3d 544, 549 (6th Cir. 2007) (quotation omitted)). "To defeat dismissal in this context, [Plaintiffs] need make only a prima facie showing that personal jurisdiction exists." Id. Nevertheless, "[i]n response to a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff may not stand on his pleadings, but must show the specific facts demonstrating that the court has jurisdiction." Miller v. AXA Winterthur Ins. Co., 694 F.3d 675, 678 (6th Cir. 2012) (citing Theunissen v. Matthews, 935 F.2d 1454, 1458 (6th Cir. 1991)).

<sup>6</sup> HN10[↑] "Tennessee's long-arm statute has been interpreted to be 'coterminous with the limits on personal jurisdiction imposed' by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution," and, thus, "'the jurisdictional limits of Tennessee law and of federal constitutional law of due process are identical.'" Intera Corp. v. Henderson, 428 F.3d 605, 616 (6th Cir. 2005) (citation omitted). Because of that, "the court 'need only determine whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction violates constitutional due process.'" Id. (citation omitted).

(Doc. No. 191 at 35-73.) Defendants argue that, [\[\*\*19\]](#) under Bristol-Myers, this Courts lacks jurisdiction to hear those non-Tennessee state law claims. (Doc. No. 194 at 11-14.)

In Bristol-Myers, a group of plaintiffs, the majority of which were not California residents, filed eight separate complaints in California Superior Court, alleging that the drug Plavix had damaged their health. See 137 S. Ct. at 1778. In holding that the California Superior Court lacked jurisdiction over the claims brought by those non-resident plaintiffs, the Supreme Court explained that "there must be an affiliation between the forum and the underlying controversy, principally, [an] activity or an occurrence that takes place in the forum State." Id. at 1780. The Supreme Court noted that the non-residents were not prescribed Plavix in California, did not purchase Plavix in California, did not ingest Plavix in California, and were not injured by Plavix in California. Id. at 1781. Neither the existence of regular in-state sales, nor the fact that other plaintiffs were prescribed, obtained and ingested Plavix in California, was enough to confer jurisdiction over the non-resident claims. Id. The Supreme Court stressed that "[w]hat is needed—and what is missing here—is a connection between the forum and [\[\*\*20\]](#) the specific [\[\*691\]](#) claims at issue." Id. However, whether Bristol-Myers extends to class actions, like the instant case, is an open question. See id. at 1789 n. 4 (Sotomayor, J., dissenting) ("The Court today does not confront the question of whether its opinion here would also apply to a class action in which a plaintiff injured in the forum State seeks to represent a nationwide class of plaintiffs, not all of whom were injured there."); see also Chavez v. Church & Dwight Co., Inc., No. 17-C-1948, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82642, 2018 WL 2238191, at \*10 \(N.D. Ill. May 16, 2018\) ("Whether Bristol-Myers extends to class actions is a question that has divided courts across the country."); Molock v. Whole Foods Mkt., Inc., 317 F. Supp. 3d 1, 5 \(D.D.C. 2018\) ("There are only district court cases, and among them there is a near even split on the question.").

In applying Bristol-Myers to the instant action, the Court first notes that no Court of Appeals has addressed this issue. Second, although district courts are divided on whether Bristol-Myers applies HN13 in the federal class action context, the cases have "universally held that in a putative class action (1) courts are only concerned with the jurisdictional obligations of the named plaintiffs; and (2) unnamed class members are irrelevant to the question of specific jurisdiction." See Chernus v. Logitech, Inc., No. 17-673-FLW, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70784, 2018 WL 1981481, at \*7 \(D. N.J. April 27, 2018\). NGH, as a Tennessee resident, purchased [\[\*\*21\]](#) its enoxaparin in Tennessee, and, therefore, there is a sufficient connection between "the forum [Tennessee]" and the "underlying controversy [the sale of generic enoxaparin]" that "takes place in the forum state." See id. at 1780. Although there are no allegations in the Amended Complaint regarding where, or from whom, DC 37 purchased its enoxaparin, DC 37 has alleged that it indirectly purchased enoxaparin that was intended for consumption by its members, who reside in multiple states, including Tennessee. (Doc. No. 191 at 7-8.) The Court finds that DC 37's allegation regarding its indirect purchase of enoxaparin is sufficient to confer specific personal jurisdiction over the Tennessee state law claims, especially considering the "relatively slight" burden it faces here. See MAG IAS Holdings, Inc., 854 F.3d at 899. Unlike in Bristol-Myers, here, DC 37 can show an "affiliation between the forum and the underlying controversy" sufficient to confer specific personal jurisdiction because the indirectly purchased enoxaparin was intended for distribution and ultimate consumption by Tennessee members. See Bristol-Myers, 137 S. Ct. at 1780.

Further, because there is specific jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' Tennessee state law claims, they may advance their other various state [\[\*\*22\]](#) law claims. See Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S. 770, 778-79, 104 S. Ct. 1473, 79 L. Ed. 2d 790 \(1984\). In Keeton, a New York resident sued Hustler in New Hampshire, claiming that she had been libeled in five issues of the magazine, which was distributed throughout the country, including in New Hampshire. Id. at 776. The Supreme Court relied principally on the connection between the circulation of the magazine in New Hampshire and the damages allegedly caused within the state to conclude that specific jurisdiction was present for the non-resident plaintiff's multistate damages claims. Id. Likewise, here, Defendants' activities with regard to sales of generic enoxaparin have allegedly damaged Plaintiffs, including within Tennessee, and, therefore, Plaintiffs may bring not only their Tennessee claims, but their various other state law claims as well.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Although Defendants argue that Keeton's analysis was refuted by Bristol-Myers, the latter analysis was limited to considering the former decision in the context of mass torts. See Bristol-Myers, 137 S.Ct. at 1782. Further, as explained below, the Court concludes that Bristol-Myers is not applicable to class actions.

[*692] As to Defendants' argument regarding Bristol-Myers, the Court agrees with Plaintiffs and concludes that Bristol-Myers does not apply to class actions. In reaching this decision, the Court is persuaded by the analyses of several courts that have aptly confronted the issue. These courts have focused their analyses on the sufficient distinctions between class and mass tort actions (as was the case [*23] in Bristol-Myers). See, e.g., Sanchez v. Launch Tech. Workforce Sols., LLC, 297 F. Supp. 3d 1360, 1365-69 (N.D. Ga. 2018) (stating that, unlike in class actions, each plaintiff is a real party in interest in a mass tort action); In re Chinese—Manufactured Drywall Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 09-2047, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 197612, 2017 WL 5971622, at *12-14 (E.D. La. Nov. 30, 2017) ("Class actions, nonetheless, are different from mass torts."); Molock v. Whole Foods Mkt., Inc., 297 F. Supp. 3d 114, 126 (D.D.C. 2018) ("[U]nlike in a mass tort action, 'for a case to qualify for class action treatment, it needs to meet the additional due process standards for class certification under Rule 23 . . .'). Specifically, in a mass tort action, the plaintiff is a real party in interest to the complaints, whereas, in a putative class action, one or more plaintiffs seeks to represent the rest of similarly situated plaintiffs and the named plaintiffs are the only plaintiffs actually named in the complaint. See Gen. Tel. Co. of the Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 155, 102 S. Ct. 2364, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740 (1982) ("The class-action device was designed as an exception to the usual rule that litigation is conducted by and on behalf of the individual named parties only."). Additionally, unlike a mass tort action, "for a case to qualify for class action treatment, it needs to meet the additional due process standards for class certification under Rule 23— numerosity, commonality, typicality, adequacy of representation, predominance and superiority." In re Chinese—Manufactured Drywall, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 197612, 2017 WL 5971622, at *14. "These additional elements of a class action supply [*24] due process safeguards not applicable in the mass tort context." Molock, 297 F. Supp. 3d at 126.

The Court therefore concludes that it has specific personal jurisdiction over Defendants regarding Plaintiffs' remaining state law claims. Accordingly, the Court will deny Defendants' Rule 12(b)(2) motion to dismiss the Amended Complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction.

E. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6)

Defendants' final motion to dismiss, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), advances a host of arguments, all of which are aimed at Plaintiffs' various state law claims. (Doc. No. 198.) Defendants assert that (1) the statute of limitations bars almost all of Plaintiffs' state law claims; (2) Plaintiffs do not have standing to assert their state law claims; and (3) Plaintiffs' fail to meet the state law pleading requirements for their state law claims. (Id.) Plaintiffs respond that (1) their state law claims are timely; (2) they have standing to assert those claims; and (3) their Amended Complaint adequately pleads the elements of each state law claim. (See Doc. No. 210.) The Court will address each argument in turn.

1. Statute of Limitations

Defendants argue that the challenged anti-competitive conduct that is the subject of Plaintiffs' state law [*25] claims ended January 25, 2012, when the Federal Circuit stayed the preliminary injunction preventing [*693] Amphastar from entering the generic enoxaparin marketplace. (Doc. No. 198 at 13.) As a result, Defendants contend that the statute of limitations began running on January 26, 2012. (Id.) Because NGH sought leave to amend its complaint on June 9, 2017 (and filed the Amended Complaint on December 21, 2017), over five years passed after expiration of the preliminary injunction. (Id. at 14.) Consequently, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' state law claims are barred by various state statutes of limitation. (Id.) Defendants also assert that the continuing violation doctrine, fraudulent concealment doctrine, and the discovery rule did not toll the various state statutes of limitations periods. (Id. at 14-19.) Plaintiffs respond that each of these doctrines independently applies to extend the state statutes of limitations, making their state law claims timely. (Doc. No. 210 at 10-19.) The Court finds that the continuing violation doctrine extended the Plaintiffs' various limitations periods.<sup>8</sup>

HN14 [+] In an antitrust lawsuit, the cause of action accrues and the accompanying limitations period commences "each time a defendant [*26] commits an act that injures the plaintiff's business." In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust <sup>8</sup> Accordingly, the parties' arguments regarding the fraudulent concealment doctrine and the discovery rule are not discussed.

Litig., 555 F. Supp. 2d 934, 946-47 (E.D. Tenn. 2008) (citation omitted). "For statute of limitations purposes . . . the focus is on the timing of the causes of injury, i.e. the defendant's overt acts, as opposed to the effects of the overt acts." DXS, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 100 F.3d 462, 467 (6th Cir. 1996) (citing Peck v. General Motors Corp., 894 F.2d 844, 849 (6th Cir. 1990)). A continuing antitrust violation is one in which the plaintiff's interests are repeatedly invaded. Peck, 894 F.2d at 849 (quoting Pace Indus., Inc. v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 237 (9th Cir. 1987)).

HN15 When a plaintiff alleges a continuing antitrust violation, the cause of action "accrues each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of defendants." Barnosky Oils, Inc. v. Union Oil Co. of California, 665 F.2d 74, 81 (6th Cir. 1981). However, even in the event of an alleged continuing violation, "an overt act by the defendant is required to restart the statute of limitations and the statute runs from the last overt act." Peck, 894 F.2d at 849. Such an overt act involves: (1) a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act; (2) that inflicts new and accumulating injury on the plaintiff. In re Southeastern Milk Antitrust Litig., 555 F. Supp. 2d at 947.

Plaintiffs allege ongoing harm in light of overpaying for generic enoxaparin as a result of Defendants' anti-competitive conduct. (Doc. No. 191 at 24-28.) The Amended Complaint alleges that the wholesale price of generic enoxaparin did not begin to decline until May 2012 and subsequently began plummeting in 2014, [**27] until which time Plaintiffs allegedly suffered hundreds of millions dollars in overcharges. (Id.) As noted in Magistrate Judge Holmes's previous order allowing Plaintiffs to amend their complaint, the Supreme Court, in Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corporation, directly addressed what constitutes a "continuing violation" in an ongoing price-fixing conspiracy:

HN16 Antitrust law provides that, in the case of a "continuing violation" say, a price-fixing conspiracy that brings about a series of unlawfully high priced sales over a period of years, "each overt act that is part of the violation and that [*694] injures the plaintiff," e.g., each sale to the plaintiff, "starts the statutory period running again, regardless of the plaintiff's knowledge of the alleged illegality at much earlier times."

Defendants contend that Klehr is inapplicable because the Amended Complaint does not allege a price-fixing agreement. (Doc. No. 198 at 15.) Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' allegations focus on "discrete past actions involving the enforcement of a patent to the exclusion of a competitor." (Id.) The Court finds this characterization of the allegations unpersuasive. Plaintiffs' allegations detail a price-fixing conspiracy [**28] between Sandoz and Momenta, based on enforcement of the 886 Patent, in order to (1) prevent new entrants from entering the generic enoxaparin market; thereby (2) keeping prices artificially inflated. (See Doc. No. 191 at 24-28.) Thus, under Klehr, each time Defendants sold enoxaparin to Plaintiffs at supracompetitive prices, which, as alleged in the Amended Complaint, extended well past May 2012, the statutory period started again. See Klehr, 521 U.S. at 189. Accordingly, because Plaintiffs allege that Defendants wrongfully sold them enoxaparin at supracompetitive prices until at least 2014, and each sale restarted the five year statute of limitations, the continuing violation doctrine extended the statute of limitations period. Plaintiffs' state law claims are timely.

2. Standing for State Law Claims

Defendants next argue that Plaintiffs do not have standing to bring claims under the laws of the states where they do not reside and where they did not purchase generic enoxaparin. (Doc. No. 198 at 19-20.) Plaintiffs respond that Defendants confuse the issue of standing with the adequacy of class representation and argue that, in accordance with Fallick v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 162 F.3d 410, 423 (6th Cir. 1998), the ability of Plaintiffs to seek relief on behalf of unnamed [**29] class members residing in the other 30 jurisdictions should be determined as part of the class certification process. (Doc. No. 210 at 19-21.)

The Sixth Circuit has not directly reached the question of whether class certification must be addressed before considering standing for claims arising under state statutes in which a named plaintiff is not resident. District courts have pursued divergent paths to resolve such standing challenges. Compare In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig. (Packaged Ice II), 779 F. Supp. 2d 642, 657 (E.D. Mich. 2011) (addressing standing before class certification) with Hovering v. Transnation Title Insur. Co., 545 F. Supp. 2d 662, 667 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (postponing standing analysis until class certification). The Court concludes that the weight of authority suggests that the better course is to defer deciding the issue of standing on state law claims until the class certification stage. See In re Cast Iron Soil Pipe And Fittings Antitrust Litig., No. 1:14-MD-2508, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121620, 2015 WL 5166014, at *19 (E.D. Tenn. June 24, 2015) ("If the Court were to decide the standing issue at this juncture on the basis that the named plaintiffs do not reside in some of the states under whose laws they bring claims on behalf of the class, it would not be giving due appreciation to the complex nature of Article III standing in class actions and the nuances of class certification."); see also In re Auto. Parts Antitrust Litig., No. 12-MD-02311, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80338, 2013 WL 2456612, at *11 (E.D. Mich. June 6, 2013) [**30] ("[T]he Court finds the better path is to defer this issue until the class certification stage."). Waiting until the class certification stage will enable the Court to most [*695] properly analyze complex issues of standing. Accordingly, the Court will defer deciding whether the Plaintiffs have standing to assert their various state law claims until the class certification stage.

3. State Law Pleading Requirements

Defendants next argue that the Amended Complaint fails to adequately plead the state law claims. (Doc. No. 198 at 22-27.) Defendants' primary argument is that Plaintiffs fail to establish a sufficient nexus to numerous states for purposes of the antitrust and consumer protection statutes of those states. (Id. at 22-23.)

i. Intrastate Nexus

The parties are in agreement that the antitrust statutes of certain jurisdictions require a plaintiff to allege a nexus between a defendant's conduct and intrastate commerce; boilerplate allegations are insufficient. (Doc. Nos. 198 at 22-23, 210 at 22-25.) The parties disagree as to whether the allegations in the Amended Complaint satisfy the pleading requirements. (Id.) Those jurisdictions at issue include Arizona, the District of Columbia, [**31] Maine, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee, Wisconsin, and West Virginia. (Doc. No. 198 at 22-23.) Defendants also maintain that the consumer protection statutes for California, Nebraska, New York, and North Carolina require the same intrastate nexus, and, therefore, for these same reasons, Plaintiffs fail to adequately plead their state law consumer protection claims for those states. (Id. at 23.)

Plaintiffs allege that, in each aforementioned jurisdiction, Defendants' anticompetitive conduct reduced competition and increased prices, causing a substantial effect on commerce within the jurisdiction. (Doc. No. 191 at 35-57.) HN17 The "intrastate effects" requirement is met at the pleading stage by a plaintiff's allegations, like those in the instant case, claiming that the anticompetitive conduct caused supracompetitive price effects in the relevant jurisdictions. See In re Automotive Parts Antitrust Litig., 29 F. Supp. 3d 982, 1010 (E.D. Mich. 2014) (holding that allegations that anticompetitive conduct caused supracompetitive price effects in relevant jurisdictions meets the intrastate effects requirement); In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 602 F. Supp. 2d 538, 581 (M.D. Pa. 2009) (alleging a nationwide price fixing scheme that resulted in price increases in Nevada and elsewhere [**32] sufficiently alleged intrastate effects).

The Court finds that Plaintiffs' set forth facts sufficient at the pleading stage, identifying the relevant jurisdictions and the effect on competition in each of these jurisdictions, to allege the requisite intrastate effects. For these same reasons, Plaintiffs' intrastate nexus allegations are also sufficient to state a claim under the consumer protection statutes of California, New York, and North Carolina.<sup>9</sup>

ii. Other State Antitrust Claim Limitations and State Law Consumer Protection Claims

Defendants next contend that Plaintiffs cannot maintain their antitrust claim under Utah state law, as only a person who is a citizen or resident of Utah may bring an action for antitrust violations under that state's antitrust statute. (Doc. No. 198 at 24.) Plaintiffs do not dispute that only citizens or residents of Utah may recover under its antitrust law, but argue that the issue is related to standing and better decided at the class certification stage. [*696] (Doc. No. 210 at 25.) Defendants also assert that, under the consumer protection laws of Massachusetts, Missouri,

<sup>9</sup> Defendants argue, and Plaintiffs conceded, that Alabama's antitrust law does not provide a cause of action in the instant case. (Doc. Nos. 198 at 24, 210 at 22 n. 19.) Therefore, the Court will dismiss that claim with prejudice.

Montana, and Vermont only consumers that purchase a product for personal or household [**33] use may bring consumer protection claims. (Doc. No. 198 24-25.) Further, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' Montana consumer protection claim fails because Montana law does not allow consumer protection class actions. (Id. at 25-26.)

Plaintiffs first respond that the Massachusetts and Montana consumer protection statutes no longer include the limiting "personal or household use" language. (Doc. No. 210 at 26-27.) Further, Plaintiffs argue that Vermont's consumer protection statute expressly contemplates suits involving individuals who purchase goods for use or benefit in their business. (Id. at 28.) Finally, Plaintiffs maintain the Missouri's consumer protection statute permits suit, even where the product is not purchased for personal or household use. (Id. at 29.)

The parties accurately note that HN18[<sup>1</sup>] only citizens or residents of Utah may recover under its antitrust law. See Utah Code § 76-10-3109\(1\)\(a\). However, Plaintiffs assert allegations on behalf of a putative class that presumably includes Utah citizens and residents. (See Doc. No. 191 at 27-30, 54-55.) Allegations that members of the putative class presumably include Utah citizens and residents are sufficient to overcome a motion to dismiss. See In re Liquid Aluminum Sulfate Antitrust Litig., No. CV-16-MD-2687-JLL, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115294, 2017 WL 3131977, at \*28 \(D. N.J. July 20, 2017\) [**34] (citing In re Asacol Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94605, 2016 WL 4083333, \*13 \(D. Mass. July 20, 2016\)). Further, Defendants essentially raise the issue of whether Plaintiffs have standing to pursue the Utah antitrust claim, and, as noted above, this issue is better decided at the class certification stage. See Fallick, 162 F.3d at 423. For this same reason, the Court will also not decide the statutory standing issue with regard to Plaintiffs' Massachusetts, Missouri, Montana, and Vermont consumer protection claims, as Defendants' argument again centers on whether Plaintiffs' have standing to pursue those claims. Accordingly, the Court will not dismiss said claims at this juncture.

iii. Unjust Enrichment Claims

Defendants assert that Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims fail for almost half of the state jurisdictions (14 of 31) on the ground that Plaintiffs failed to allege that they provided a direct benefit to Defendants. (Doc. No. 198 at 26.) Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims, under the laws of Arizona, Hawaii, Massachusetts, Minnesota, and Tennessee, fail because Plaintiffs do not plead absence of a legal remedy. (Id. at 27.) Finally, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' California unjust enrichment claim fails because California does not recognize [**35] a cause for unjust enrichment. (Id.) Plaintiffs respond that (1) the Amended Complaint adequately pleads a direct benefit to Defendants and absence of a legal remedy; and (2) California recognizes unjust enrichment claims where the claim arises out of rights based on other laws. (Doc. No. 210 at 32-33.)

HN19[<sup>1</sup>] With respect to Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims, indirect purchasers confer a benefit only on others in the chain of distribution from whom they purchase. See In re Aftermarket Filters Antitrust Litig., No. 08-C-2883, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32652, 2010 WL 1416259, at \*3 \(N.D. Ill. Apr. 1, 2010\) ("Only the direct purchasers have conferred a direct benefit on defendants.") However, courts considering indirect consumer price-fixing claims have denied dismissal of unjust enrichment claims where the claims arise out of the alleged antitrust violations that resulted in overpayment. See In re Automotive Parts Antitrust Litig., 29 F. Supp. 3d at 1029. Plaintiffs allege that they conferred a benefit [<sup>697</sup>] on Defendants in the form of overpayments, resulting in Defendants enjoying profits flowing from the anti-competitive conduct. (Doc. No. 191 at 71.) The Court finds these allegations sufficient to state an unjust enrichment claim under those states' laws. However, because Plaintiffs did not plead absence of a legal remedy, their unjust enrichment claims under the laws of Arizona, Hawaii, [**36] Massachusetts, Minnesota, and Tennessee will be dismissed. Moreover, with regard to Plaintiffs' California unjust enrichment claim, California does not recognize unjust enrichment, and, therefore, this claim is also dismissed. See Hill v. Roll Int'l Corp., 195 Cal. App. 4th 1295, 1307, 128 Cal. Rptr. 3d 109 \(Cal. Ct. App. 2011\) ("Unjust enrichment is not a cause of action . . ."); Levine v. Blue Shield of Cal., 189 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 1138, 117 Cal. Rptr. 3d 262 \(Cal. Ct. App. 2010\) (holding that there is no cause of action in California for unjust enrichment); accord Frale v. Facebook, 830 F.Supp.2d 785, 814 \(N.D. Cal. 2011\) ("Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim does not properly state an independent cause of action and must be dismissed.").

F. Conclusion

353 F. Supp. 3d 678, *697L 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 206234, **36

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(2\) (Lack of Personal Jurisdiction) will be denied, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\) (Lack of Subject-Matter Jurisdiction) will be granted, and Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) will be granted in part and denied in part. The case will proceed on the remaining state law claims.

An appropriate order will enter.

JOSEPH A. DICKSON, U.S.M.J.

This matter comes before the Court by way of Defendant's motion to transfer this matter to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois pursuant to *Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13\(a\)* and *28 U.S.C. § 1404\(a\)*. (ECF No. 22). In accordance with *Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 78*, the Court did not hear oral argument on Defendant's application. Upon careful consideration of the parties' submissions, and for the reasons stated below, Defendant's motion is GRANTED.

I. RELEVANT BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

In this action, Plaintiffs Hytera Communications Ltd., Hytera America, Inc., Hytera Communications America (West), Inc., and Powertrunk, Inc. allege that Defendant Motorola Solutions, [*2] Inc. ("Motorola") engaged in anticompetitive conduct with regard to the American land mobile radio ("LMR") industry, in violation of both federal and state antitrust law. (See generally Am. Compl., ECF No. 45). For instance, Plaintiffs allege that Motorola used various methods, including providing incentives, making express threats, and spreading misinformation, to dissuade dealers from selling competing products, (id. ¶¶ 12-19, 91-159), and repeatedly engaged in sham petitioning intended to block Plaintiffs from meaningfully participating in the LMR market. (Id. ¶¶ 20-21, 160-171).

It also bears noting that, on March 14, 2017, Motorola filed two lawsuits in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. In the first, Motorola Solutions Inc. v. Hytera Commc'ns. Corp. Ltd., et al., No. 1:17-cv-1972 (N.D. Ill. March 14, 2017) (the "Patent Action"), Motorola has alleged that Hytera Communications Ltd., Hytera America, Inc., and Hytera Communications America (West), Inc. infringed seven of its United States patents. (See generally Patent Action Compl., Decl. of James S Richter ("Richter Decl."), Ex. A, ECF No. 22-3). In the second, Motorola Solutions Inc., et al. v. Hytera Commc'ns. Corp. Ltd., et al., No. 1:17-cv-1973 (N.D. Ill. March 14, 2017) (the "Trade Secret Action"), Motorola contends that the same Hytera entities misappropriated its confidential and proprietary information by hiring away Motorola engineers who stole thousands of Motorola's documents before departing. (See generally, Trade Secret Action Compl., Richter Decl., Ex. D, ECF No. 22-6).<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff Powertrunk, Inc. ("Powertrunk") is not a party to either of the Illinois Actions.<sup>2</sup>

Defendant Motorola now seeks to transfer this case to the Northern District of Illinois, arguing: (1) that Plaintiffs' claims herein constitute compulsory counterclaims in the Illinois Actions; and (2) that transfer would be appropriate pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a). (See generally Pl. Br., ECF No. 22-1). Motorola's motion is fully briefed, (ECF Nos. 28, 34, 46-47), and ready for resolution.

II. LEGAL DISCUSSION

a. The Court Will Not Transfer this Action on the Basis of Alleged Compulsory Counterclaims Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(a)

In its primary argument, Motorola contends that the Court must transfer this action to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois on the basis that Plaintiffs' [*4] claims in this case qualify as compulsory counterclaims vis-à-vis the Illinois Actions. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(a) defines a compulsory counterclaim as "any claim which at the time of serving the pleading the pleader has against any opposing party, if it arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim and does not require for its adjudication the presence of third parties of whom the court cannot acquire jurisdiction." The purpose of Rule 13(a) is to facilitate "judicial economy." Transamerica Occidental Life Ins. Co. v. Aviation Office of Am., Inc., 292 F.3d 384, 389 (3d Cir. 2002).

For a claim to be a compulsory counterclaim, there does not have to be "precise identity of issues and facts between the claim and the counterclaim; rather, the relevant inquiry is whether the counterclaim 'bears a logical relationship to an opposing party's claim.'" Transamerica, 292 F.3d at 389 (citing Xerox Corp. v. SCM Corp., 576 F.2d 1057, 1059 (3d Cir. 1978)). As the aim of Rule 13(a) is to promote judicial economy, the terms "transaction or occurrence" are interpreted broadly to further that end, and a "logical relationship" is considered to exist where individual trials for the separate claims would cause a "substantial duplication of effort and time by the parties and the courts. Such duplication is likely to occur when claims involve the same factual issues, the same factual [*5] and legal issues, or are offshoots of the same basic controversy between the parties." 292 F.3d at 389-90.

<sup>2</sup> In the previous iteration of their pleading, Plaintiffs alleged that the Illinois Actions were pieces of "sham litigation" and, therefore, examples of Motorola's anticompetitive conduct. (See generally Compl., ECF No. 1). Motorola removed those allegations when filing its Amended Complaint. (See generally Am Compl., ECF No. 45).

The Court's analysis on this point begins and ends with Plaintiff PowerTrunk. Simply put, PowerTrunk is not a party to the Illinois Actions. As there are no claims against that entity in the Illinois Actions, its claims herein cannot be compulsory counterclaims absent factual circumstances not present in this case.

The Court acknowledges that the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has found that, like Rule 13\(a\)'s "transaction and occurrence" language, the Rule's "opposing parties" requirement should be interpreted broadly to help promote the goal of judicial efficiency, particularly where the unnamed party "may be so closely identified with a named party as to qualify as an 'opposing party' under Rule 13\(a\)." Transamerica, 292 F.3d at 390. In Transamerica, the Court of Appeals observed: "the Tenth Circuit recognized an insurer-subrogee, though not named a party to the original litigation, to be an opposing party for Rule 13\(a\) purposes because of its close relationship with the named opposing party." Id. at 390 (citing Avemco Insurance Co. v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 11 F.3d 998, 1001 \(10th Cir. 1993\)). The Third Circuit also cited a Second Circuit decision wherein the court found that "because the parties 'acted as a single entity' [*6] and because one was the alter ego of the other, both were 'opposing parties' within the meaning of Rule 13." Id. at 390-91 (citing Banco Nacional de Cuba v. First National City Bank of New York, 478 F.2d 191 \(2d Cir. 1973\)). Thus, "where parties are functionally equivalent as in Avemco, where an unnamed party controlled the litigation, or where, as in Banco Nacional, an unnamed party was the alter ego of the named party, they should be treated as opposing parties within the meaning of Rule 13." Id. at 390.

Nothing in the record suggests that the operative facts in this case are similar to those at issue in Avemco, Banco Nacional, or Transamerica.<sup>3</sup> Defendant Hyterra Communications Corp. Ltd. did not acquire PowerTrunk until May 25, 2017, more than two months after Motorola commenced the Illinois Actions. (Decl. of Noah A. Brumfield ("Brumfield Decl."), ¶ 18, Ex. P, ECF No. 28-1). Moreover, nothing in the record indicates that PowerTrunk is an alter ego of any of the Hytera entities named in the Illinois Actions, or that PowerTrunk is somehow controlling those Hytera entities or the Illinois Actions. There is simply no reasonable basis in the record for classifying PowerTrunk as an "opposing party" in the Illinois Actions and, in turn, no legal basis for finding that [*7] PowerTrunk's claims in this matter constitute compulsory counterclaims in either of those cases pursuant to Rule 13\(a\).

Motorola argues that PowerTrunk's absence from the Illinois Actions is irrelevant, because PowerTrunk is not necessary to move forward with the litigation of its co-Plaintiffs' antitrust claims. (Def. Br. at 8, n.6, ECF No. 22-1; Def. Reply at 8, ECF No. 34). Motorola suggests that the Court may therefore foist a transfer upon PowerTrunk based solely on its co-Plaintiffs' claims and, if PowerTrunk chooses to maintain its own antitrust claims after transfer, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois could exercise ancillary jurisdiction over those claims. (Def. Br. at 8 n.6, ECF No. 22-1). Neither of the two cases Motorola has cited in support of that argument supports its position. In In re Texas E. Transmission Corp. PCB Contamination Ins. Coverage Litig., 15 F.3d 1230, 1236-38 \(3d Cir. 1994\), the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit considered whether, in a diversity case, it was appropriate for the District Court to exercise ancillary jurisdiction over non-diverse counterclaim defendants. Similarly, in Rohm & Haas Co. v. Brotech Corp., 770 F. Supp. 928 \(D. Del. 1991\), Rohm & Hass filed a patent infringement suit against Brotech. Id. at 929. Brotech later filed a separate suit against Rohm & Hass, [*8] and several of Rohm & Hass's subsidiaries and employees. Id. The District Court ultimately determined that Brotech's claims constituted compulsory counterclaims under Rule 13, despite the fact that Brotech also sought relief against several parties who, while affiliated with Rohm & Hass, were not involved in the original action. Id. at 933-34. Both In re Texas E. Transmission Corp. PCB Contamination Ins. Coverage Litig. and Rohm & Haas Co. therefore considered the impact of adding defendants who were not parties to the original litigation, which is the opposite of the situation at issue in this case. Motorola has not cited any law addressing the real question herein: whether a plaintiff that was a stranger to a previous litigation might nonetheless have its affirmative claims dismissed or transferred on compulsory counterclaim grounds. The Court therefore rejects Motorola's argument that Powertrunk is "of no moment to the transfer analysis." (Def. Reply at 8, ECF No. 34).

<sup>3</sup> In Transamerica, the Court of Appeals found that an insurer should be considered an "opposing party" for Rule 13 purposes, as it found that the insurer was the successor in interest and assignee of the rights of the named parties in the original litigation, and that the insurer "was actually the party controlling the litigation in both actions." Id. at 392.

Finally, with regard to the three Hytera entities, which are parties to the Illinois Actions, Motorola argues that their claims involve 'many of the same factual issues' as those raised in the Illinois Actions, and are 'offshoots of the [*9] same basic controversy between the parties' that have a 'single factual focus.'" (Def. Br. at 9, ECF No. 22-1). The Court is mindful of its duty to interpret the same "transaction or occurrence" requirement broadly, and it may very well be that some or all of the claims that the three Hytera entities have asserted in this case constitute compulsory counterclaims vis-à-vis Motorola's claims in the Illinois Actions. The Court need not address that issue here. As it would be inappropriate to transfer this entire action on compulsory counterclaim grounds, Motorola's recourse is to seek dismissal of those specific claims pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 13\(a\) and 12\(b\)\(6\). The Court notes that Motorola did, in fact, file a separate motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims, and that the Honorable Esther Salas, U.S.D.J. has administratively terminated that motion pending resolution of Defendant's motion to transfer.

The Court, therefore, will not transfer this action to the Northern District of Illinois on the basis that certain Plaintiffs' claims may be compulsory counterclaims under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13\(a\).

b. Defendant's Motion to Transfer Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a)

i. Standards Applicable on Defendant's Motion to Transfer

Motorola also asks the Court to transfer [*10] this action to the Northern District of Illinois pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404\(a\). The statute provides, in pertinent part: "[f]or the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought." The purpose of § 1404\(a\) is to "prevent the waste of time, energy and money and to protect litigants, witnesses and the public against unnecessary inconvenience and expense." Van Dusen v. Barrack, 376 U.S. 612, 616, 84 S. Ct. 805, 11 L. Ed. 2d 945 \(1964\) (internal quotations and citations omitted). In a motion to transfer pursuant to § 1404\(a\), "the moving party bears the burden of establishing that the transfer is appropriate and must establish that the alternate forum is more convenient than the present forum." Santi v. National Business Records Management, LLC, 722 F. Supp. 2d 602, 606 \(D.N.J. 2010\) (citing Jumara v. State Farms Ins. Co., 55 F.3d 873, 879 \(3d Cir. 1995\).

When evaluating whether to transfer an action pursuant to § 1404\(a\), the Court must, as a preliminary matter, consider whether the plaintiff could have brought the suit in the proposed forum. Santi, 722 F. Supp. 2d at 606; 28 U.S.C. § 1404\(a\) ("[A] district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought . . ."). If venue would be proper in that forum, the Court must then consider whether the three factors expressly enumerated in § 1404\(a\) favor transfer: (1) the convenience of [*11] the parties; (2) the convenience of the witnesses; and (3) the interests of justice. Wm. H. McGee & Co., v. United Arab Shipping Co., 6 F. Supp. 2d 283, 288 \(D.N.J. 1997\). The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has clarified, however, that the transfer analysis should not be limited to those three factors; rather courts should consider "all relevant factors to determine whether on balance the litigation would more conveniently proceed and the interests of justice be better served by transfer to a different forum." Tischio v. Bontex, Inc., 16 F. Supp. 2d 511, 519 \(D.N.J. 1998\) (quoting Jumara, 55 F.3d at 879). To that end, the Third Circuit has established a list of private and public interest factors that District Courts must evaluate when deciding whether to transfer an action:

The private interests have included: plaintiff's forum preference as manifested in the original choice; the defendant's preference; whether the claim arose elsewhere; the convenience of the parties as indicated by their relative physical and financial condition; the convenience of the witnesses — but only to the extent that the witnesses may actually be unavailable for trial in one of the fora; and the location of books and records (similarly limited to the extent that the files could not be [*12] produced in the alternative forum).

The public interests have included: the enforceability of the judgment; practical considerations that could make the trial easy, expeditious, or inexpensive; the relative administrative difficulty in the two fora resulting from court congestion; the local interest in deciding local controversies at home; the public policies of the fora; and the familiarity of the trial judge with the applicable state law in diversity cases.

Jumara, 55 F.3d at 879-80.

A transfer analysis under § 1404\(a\) is flexible, individualized and based on the unique facts of each case. Clark v. Burger King Corp., 255 F. Supp. 2d 334, 337 \(D.N.J. 2003\) (§ 1404 "vests 'discretion in the district court to adjudicate motions to transfer according to an individualized, case-by-case consideration of convenience and fairness.'" (quoting Stewart Organization, Inc. v. Ricoh Corp., 487 U.S. 22, 23, 108 S. Ct. 2239, 101 L. Ed. 2d 22 \(1988\)\); Lawrence v. Xerox Corp., 56 F. Supp. 2d 442, 450 \(D.N.J. 1999\) ("There is no rigid rule governing a court's determination; 'each case turns on its facts.'" (citing Lacey v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 862 F.2d 38, 43 \(3d Cir. 1988\)\); Tischio, 16 F. Supp. 2d at 519 (citing Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. 235, 249-50, 102 S. Ct. 252, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 \(1981\)). Furthermore, this determination is an "exercise of structured discretion by trial judges appraising the practical inconvenience posed to the litigants and to the court should a particular action be litigated in one forum rather than another." Ricoh Co., Ltd. v. Honeywell, Inc., 817 F. Supp. 473, 479 \(D.N.J. 1993\) (quoting Lony v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 886 F.2d 628, 632 \(3d Cir. 1989\)). Finally, the Court is mindful of the Third Circuit's guidance that courts should not consider [*13] the merits of a case during the pendency of a transfer application. McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Polin, 429 F.2d 30 \(3d Cir. 1970\) ("Judicial economy requires that another district court should not burden itself with the merits of the action until it is decided that a transfer should be effected and such consideration additionally requires that the court which ultimately decides the merits of the action should also decide the various questions which arise during the pendency of the suit instead of considering it in two courts.").

ii. Plaintiffs Could Have Brought This Action In The United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois

In the first step of its § 1404\(a\) transfer analysis, this Court must determine whether Plaintiffs could have brought this case in Defendants' proposed forum, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. If not, then the Court may not transfer the case to that District pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404\(a\). Motorola discussed the venue issue in its initial brief, (Def. Br. at 10-11, ECF No. 22-1), and Plaintiffs did not address it. (See generally Pl. Br., ECF No. 28; Pl. Supp. Br., ECF No. 47).

28 U.S.C. § 1391 governs venue in the United States District Court. See 28 U.S.C. § 1391\(a\)\(1\) ("Except as otherwise provided by law. . . this section shall [*14] govern the venue of all civil actions brought in district courts of the United States"). § 1391\(b\)\(1\) provides that "[a] civil action may be brought in . . . a judicial district in which any defendant resides, if all defendants are residents of the State in which the district court is located." In turn, § 1391\(c\) states, in pertinent part, that for venue purposes, an entity "shall be deemed to reside, if a defendant, in any district in which such defendant is subject to the court's personal jurisdiction with respect to the civil action in question."

Here, Motorola represents that it is headquartered in Chicago, Illinois, which is within the Northern District of Illinois. (Decl. of James A. Niewiara ("Niewiara Decl.") ¶ 3, ECF No. 22-10). Indeed, in its Amended Complaint, Hytera alleges that Motorola maintains its principal place of business in Chicago. (Am. Compl. ¶35, ECF No. 45). As the record reflects that Motorola is headquartered in Chicago, Illinois, it was subject to personal jurisdiction in Northern District of Illinois at the time Plaintiffs filed this action and, in turn, resided in that District for venue purposes. The Court therefore finds that Hytera could have commenced this case in the Northern [*15] District of Illinois, and that the Court may transfer this matter to that District pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404\(a\) if the transfer would otherwise be appropriate.

iii. Analysis of the Jumara Factors

Having determined that venue for this case would be suitable in the Northern District of Illinois, the Court must next balance the private and public interest factors relevant to Motorola's transfer application. As discussed above, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit provided a list of such factors in *Jumara*, 55 F.3d at 879-80. The Court reiterates that Motorola retains the burden of establishing that transfer would be appropriate. See *Santi*, 722 F. Supp. 2d at 606.

A. Private Interest Factors

As to the "private interest" factors relevant to a § 1404\(a\) transfer analysis, the Third Circuit has directed courts to consider the "plaintiff's forum preference as manifested in the original choice; the defendant's preference; whether the claim arose elsewhere; the convenience of the parties as indicated by their relative physical and financial condition; the convenience of the witnesses — but only to the extent that the witnesses may actually be unavailable for trial in one of the fora; and the location of books and records (similarly limited to the extent [*16] that the files could not be produced in the alternative forum)" *Jumara*, 55 F.3d at 879-80. The Court will address each of these factors in turn.

1. Plaintiffs' Choice of Forum

When evaluating a motion to transfer, a plaintiff's choice of forum is a "paramount concern" within the Third Circuit. *Shutte v. Armco Steel Corp.*, 431 F.2d 22, 25 \(3d Cir. 1970\). While all Plaintiffs have selected New Jersey as their preferred forum, it bears noting that Plaintiff PowerTrunk resides in New Jersey and has therefore elected to litigate in its home forum. When a plaintiff chooses its home forum, its choice is typically "entitled to greater deference." *Sandvik, Inc. v. Cont'l Ins. Co.*, 724 F. Supp. 303, 307 \(D.N.J. 1989\). Importantly, however, "when the central facts of a lawsuit occur outside of the chosen forum, plaintiff's choice of forum is accorded less weight." *NCR Credit Corp. v. Ye Seekers Horizon*, 17 F. Supp. 2d 317, 321 \(D.N.J. 1998\); *Wm. H. McGee & Co.*, 6 F. Supp. 2d at 290 ("[D]eference is curbed when a plaintiff's choice of forum has little connection with the operative facts of the lawsuit.") (citing *Job Haines Home for the Aged v. Young*, 936 F. Supp. 223, 228 \(D.N.J. 1996\)). As discussed in Section II(b)(iii)(A)(3), below, it appears that the operative facts of this lawsuit occurred elsewhere, and that New Jersey's relationship to those facts is relatively tentative.<sup>4</sup> The Court will, therefore, reduce the level of deference given to Plaintiffs' choice of forum. Nevertheless, this factor still weighs against transfer, albeit [*17] in a reduced form.

2. Defendant's Choice of Forum

The Court recognizes that Motorola would rather litigate in the Northern District of Illinois, its own home forum. This factor weighs in favor of transfer.

3. Where the Causes of Action Arose

Generally, this factor involves a "consideration of which forum constitutes the 'center of gravity' of the dispute, its events, and transactions." *Travelodge Hotels, Inc. v. Perry Developers, Inc.*, No. 11-1464 \(DMC\), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 134478, 2011 WL 5869602, at \*5 \(D.N.J. Nov. 22, 2011\) (citing *Park Inn International, LLC v. Mody Enterprises*, 105 F. Supp. 2d 370, 377-78 \(D.N.J. 2000\)). There is, however, relatively little guidance in the case law regarding how to determine which forum constitutes the "center of gravity" of the disputes, events, and transactions involved in an antitrust case for the purposes of a § 1404\(a\) transfer analysis. In fact, another Court within this <sup>4</sup> It also bears noting that only one of the four Plaintiff entities appears to have New Jersey ties. The other three Plaintiff entities would, therefore, be litigating in a foreign jurisdiction regardless of whether the case proceeds in this District or in the Northern District of Illinois.

District has expressly observed that "[t]here is, generally, a dearth of case law on the question of where an antitrust claim arises for purposes of a Jumara analysis, and the Third Circuit has yet to speak on this issue." Church & Dwight v. Mayer Laboratories, Inc., No. 08-5743 (FLW), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103939, 2010 WL 3907038, at *9 (D.N.J. Sept. 28, 2010). Through its own research, this Court has found that observation to be accurate.

While there is relatively little guidance on this issue, the small body of relevant case law features two different methods of identifying the 'center of gravity' of antitrust claims. The first is what could be considered [*18] an effects test, meaning the center of gravity of a dispute is where the effects of the alleged anticompetitive behavior are felt. See Talone v. Am. Osteopathic Ass'n, No. 16-4644 (NLH), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89395, 2017 WL 2539394, at *8-9 (D.N.J. June 12, 2017) (finding that, while the defendant's allegedly anti-competitive conduct "arguably took place at its headquarters in Illinois," the alleged anti-competitive actions were "directed to and felt in New Jersey"). The second test fixes the center of gravity where the alleged anticompetitive behavior took place. See Ass'n of Am. Physicians & Surgeons, Inc. v. Am. Bd. of Med. Specialties, No. 13-2609, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45077, 2014 WL 1334260, at *7 (D.N.J. Apr. 2, 2014) (finding, during an analysis under 28 U.S.C. § 1391, that venue in the District of New Jersey was improper because the record reflected "that all of the 'substantial' events underlying the plaintiff's claims occurred outside New Jersey. Specifically, nearly all of the activities that [the plaintiff] describe[d] as anticompetitive, namely [the defendant's] development, production, and management of the [relevant] program, occurred at its only headquarters in Chicago, Illinois"); Church & Dwight, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103939, 2010 WL 3907038, at *9-10 (deciding, because of the lack of relevant Third Circuit precedent, to follow the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit's decision focusing on where the alleged anticompetitive conduct took place, and finding that antitrust claims arose in both California and New Jersey [*19] because the alleged anticompetitive plan was developed at the defendant's headquarters in New Jersey and the contracts enabling the plan were negotiated with drug store chains in California); Liggett Group Inc. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 102 F. Supp. 2d 518, 532 (D.N.J. 2000) (finding that the operative facts of the litigation were centered in North Carolina and not New Jersey because the alleged anticompetitive plan "was not only developed and implemented in North Carolina, but is currently monitored from North Carolina as well").

Given the limited case law addressing where antitrust claims "arise" in the context of § 1404(a) transfer analysis, the Court finds it helpful to examine how Courts in this District have analyzed other types of claims. The general trend appears to focus on where the alleged culpable conduct took place as a means of determining where the claims arose. See Patton Boggs LLP. V. Chevron Corp., No. 12-901 (ES), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178841, 2012 WL 6568461 at *5-7 (D.N.J. July 18, 2012), report and recommendation adopted, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 177995, 2012 WL 6568526 (D.N.J. Dec. 14, 2012) (Salas, U.S.D.J.) (finding that the claims at issue arose in the Southern District of New York, as they stemmed almost entirely from litigation in that District, and that Plaintiff misconstrued the 'center of gravity' analysis because it failed to "asccribe proper weight to the location at which the operative facts which form the basis of its claims occurred" [*20] by focusing instead on the fact it allegedly suffered injury in New Jersey); Auto. Techs. Int'l, Inc. v. OnStar, LLC, No. 11-2490 (SRC), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 144824, 2011 WL 6303251, at *3 (D.N.J. Dec. 15, 2011) (finding that Michigan was the center of gravity of a trademark infringement suit because Michigan was "where the accused device was researched, developed, tested and produced, and where all the relevant marketing and sales decisions were made"); Travelodge Hotels, Inc. v. Perry Developers, Inc., No. 11-1464 (DMC), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 134478, 2011 WL 5869602, at *5-6 (D.N.J. Nov. 22, 2011) (finding that the various connections between the parties' license agreement and New Jersey, as well as the plaintiff's assertion that "the pecuniary injury resulting from the breach and termination of the [l]icense [a]greement occurred in New Jersey", were insufficient to overcome the reality that the central facts of the lawsuit — the alleged sale of a hotel without prior authorization and the failure to remit certain fees following the defendant's breach of the license agreement — occurred in Missouri); NPR, Inc. v. Am. Int'l Ins. Co. of Puerto Rico, No. 00-242 (WGB), 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3463, 2001 WL 294077, at *4 (D.N.J. Mar. 28, 2001) (holding that the claims arose in Puerto Rico because "while Plaintiff undoubtedly felt the impact of lowered profitability...in New Jersey...[i]t is the breach of the Policy, not the underlying damages allegedly suffered, which must be considered in determining where the center of gravity of this litigation is"). Considering the foregoing, this Court finds that, [*21] when determining where claims arose for the purposes of a Jumara analysis, the proper test focuses on where the conduct in question took place as opposed to where a plaintiff allegedly experienced the impact of that conduct. The majority of the relevant case law, both in the antitrust context and beyond (including a decision by the Hon. Esther Salas, U.S.D.J., who is presiding over this matter), appears to favor this approach.

Plaintiffs raise two primary factual bases for their argument that the claims at issue here arose in New Jersey. (Pl. Br. at 18, ECF No. 28; Pl. Supp. Br. at 3-5, ECF No. 47). First, Plaintiffs contend that their claims involve alleged "dealer exclusivity and dealer channel foreclosure" regarding, among others, a New Jersey-based dealer, as well as other dealers that, while based elsewhere, do business in New Jersey. (Pl. Supp. Br. at 3-5, ECF No. 47). Plaintiffs allege that Motorola's anticompetitive actions have made it all but impossible for Plaintiffs to compete for a meaningful portion of LMR sales in New Jersey. (Am. Compl. ¶ 106, ECF No. 45). Second, Plaintiffs argue that Motorola engaged in serial sham petitioning intended to thwart New Jersey-based Powertrunk's [*22] business interests. (Pl. Supp. Br. at 3-5, ECF No. 47; Am Compl. ¶¶ 124-33; 163-71). Specifically, Plaintiffs refer to their allegations that Motorola unsuccessfully petitioned the FCC in 2012 in connection with PowerTrunk winning a subcontract for the production of bus radios for the New Jersey Transit Authority, and later took actions to stymie a March 2016 contract between Powertrunk and the New York Metro Transit Authority. (Pl. Supp. Br. at 4, ECF No. 47) (citing Am Compl. ¶¶ 124-33, 163-71). Plaintiffs argue that, even if Motorola developed its corporate plans regarding these activities in Chicago, "the foreclosure and injury caused by [Motorola's] anticompetitive conduct includes New Jersey." (Pl. Br. at 18, ECF No. 28).

The Court, however, finds that these New Jersey ties are insufficient to overcome the clear, strong connections between Plaintiff's claims and the Northern District of Illinois. While Plaintiffs discount the importance of the location where Motorola made and orchestrated the plans underlying its alleged anticompetitive behavior, that location is, as discussed above, central to the analysis of where Plaintiffs' claims arose in this case. See Ass'n of Am. Physicians & Surgeons, Inc., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45077, 2014 WL 1334260, at \*7; Church & Dwight, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103939, 2010 WL 3907038, at \*10. The record reflects [*23] that Motorola developed the business plans and strategies pertinent to Plaintiffs' allegations in its Chicago offices. (See Niewiara Decl. ¶ 13, ECF No. 22-10). Though Plaintiffs contend that the Court should focus on the effects of Motorola's alleged actions when determining where Plaintiff's claims arose, the Court has determined that an effects-based inquiry would be inappropriate. The proper analysis focuses on where the allegedly culpable conduct took place rather than on where the injury from that conduct manifested. See Ass'n of Am. Physicians & Surgeons, Inc., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45077, 2014 WL 1334260, at \*7; Patton Boggs, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178841, 2012 WL 6568461 at \*6; Auto. Techs. Int'l, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 144824, 2011 WL 6303251, at \*3; Church & Dwight, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103939, 2010 WL 3907038, at \*9-10; Liggett Group, 102 F. Supp. 2d at 532. In this case, Motorola's allegedly anticompetitive conduct stemmed from decisions made at their corporate headquarters in Chicago. Nothing in the record suggests that the actions underlying Plaintiffs' claims originated in New Jersey.

The Court is mindful that at least one judge in this District has adopted an effects-based test to determine where claims arose in the context of a Jumara analysis. See Talone, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89395, 2017 WL 2539394, at \*8-9. Even if the Court were to employ such a standard, however, the New Jersey connections Plaintiffs have identified are still insufficient to establish that their claims arose in this State. In Talone, the court found that the plaintiffs' claims arose [*24] in New Jersey because the defendant's alleged anticompetitive conduct was "directed to and felt in New Jersey, three of four Plaintiffs [were] citizens of New Jersey and maintain[ed] practices in New Jersey...and...thousands of similarly situated class members live[d] and practice[d] in New Jersey." 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89395, 2017 WL 2539394, at \*9. This case does not involve similarly extensive ties to New Jersey. While Plaintiffs claim that Motorola filed an unsuccessful petition with the FCC in retaliation for the New Jersey-based corporation PowerTrunk winning a sub-contract connected to the New Jersey Transit Authority, (Am. Compl. ¶ 130-31, ECF No. 45),<sup>5</sup> the other factual scenario specifically involving PowerTrunk concerns conduct that Motorola allegedly directed at a New York entity. (See id. ¶¶ 163-71). Additionally, while Plaintiffs have alleged that Motorola's allegedly anticompetitive conduct extended to New Jersey dealers, (see id. ¶¶ 106, 120), nothing in the record suggests that such conduct was specific to New Jersey, or even more prevalent within the District of New <sup>5</sup> Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that the New Jersey Transit Authority "awarded Alcatel-Lucent a contract for bus radios, using PowerTrunk as a subcontractor for the radios." (Id. ¶ 130).

Jersey than in other jurisdictions, such as the Northern District of Illinois. To the contrary, Plaintiffs allege that Motorola engaged in similar anticompetitive [*25] activities throughout the United States. (See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 10-15, 93-121). Finally, while PowerTrunk is headquartered in New Jersey, the other three Plaintiffs in this case are not and, therefore, would have felt the effects of Motorola's alleged anticompetitive actions elsewhere.

Taking all of this information into account, the Court finds that the claims in this case arose in the Northern District of Illinois, and that this factor weighs in favor of transfer. While Plaintiffs identify certain connections to New Jersey, they are insufficient to overcome the fact that Motorola allegedly contemplated and pursued most, if not all, of the conduct at issue in this case from its headquarters in Illinois.

4. The Relative Convenience of the Parties

The Court must next examine the "convenience of the parties as indicated by their relative physical and financial position." Jumara, 55 F.3d at 879. Plaintiffs contend that this factor favors transfer, as Motorola had a 2016 revenue of US $6 billion as opposed to Hytera's 2016 revenue of US $530 million. (Brumfield Decl. ¶¶ 13-14, Exs. K-L, ECF No. 28-1). While courts in this District have found that a large financial disparity between parties will sometimes sway this [*26] factor either in favor of transfer or against it, that typically occurs in scenarios where one party is a large company or conglomerate, the other is an individual or a small business, and the financial disparity is extreme. See *Goldstein v. MGM Grand Hotel & Casino, No. 15-4173 (FLW), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 150982, 2015 WL 9918414, at *3 (D.N.J. Nov. 5, 2015)*. While Motorola may have a significantly larger annual revenue than Plaintiffs, Plaintiffs still have an annual revenue of more than half a billion dollars. Nothing in the record suggests that any party's financial condition might impact its ability to litigate in either this District or the Northern District of Illinois.

Regarding the parties' respective physical locations, Plaintiffs argue that New Jersey is more convenient because "one of them has its principal place of business here...and it is, thus, vastly more convenient than traveling to a state where none of the Plaintiffs maintain any offices." (Pl. Br at 20, ECF No. 28). Plaintiffs also contend that Motorola is a global corporation that has pursued litigation against Hytera all over the world, and that Motorola does business in New Jersey. (Id.). Motorola argues that the Northern District of Illinois would be more convenient because only one of the four Plaintiffs is connected to New Jersey, whereas [*27] Motorola's corporate headquarters is located in Chicago and, in turn, so are many of the relevant employees and documents. (Def. Br. at 15, ECF No. 22-1). Motorola notes that all but one of the Plaintiffs would have to travel thousands of miles to either forum, and that three of the four Plaintiffs have already been traveling to the Northern District of Illinois to litigate the Illinois Actions. (Id.). While each side makes cogent arguments, the record reflects that one party resides in the Northern District of Illinois, another resides in this District, and the remainder reside elsewhere. Nothing in the record suggests that any party would be unable to litigate in either District. That is the epitome of neutrality.

Having carefully considered the parties' respective locations and financial conditions, the Court finds that the "convenience of the parties" factor is neutral in the transfer analysis.

5. The Convenience of the Witnesses and the Availability of Documents

When evaluating the convenience of the witnesses, the Court's consideration is limited to determining whether the witnesses in question would actually be unavailable for trial in one of the fora. Jumara, 55 F.3d at 879. The record is relatively [*28] thin regarding this factor. In their Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs refer to a non-party dealer "located in New Jersey and New York". (Am. Compl. ¶ 120, ECF No. 45). Plaintiffs argue that this dealer would not be subject to the subpoena power of the Northern District of Illinois. (Pl. Br. at 21, ECF No. 28). Plaintiffs, however, do not contend that the dealer would refuse to make itself available in Illinois, only that it would most likely find New Jersey to be more convenient than the Northern District of Illinois. (Pl. Br. at 21, ECF No. 28). The same can be said for the two "potential witness dealers operating in New Jersey" that Plaintiffs identified in their supplemental briefing. (Pl. Supp. Br. at 6, ECF No. 47). Moreover, while Plaintiffs suggest that "[e]nd-user customers in New Jersey and just across the river from this Court in New York may also be witnesses to testify as to their harm", (id.), ostensibly suggesting that those witnesses may be unavailable in the Northern District of Illinois, the same theoretical unavailability would also be true for end-users in and around the Northern District of Illinois if the case were to remain in New Jersey. Motorola argues that transfer [*29] to the Northern District of Illinois would benefit the majority of its potential witnesses. (Def. Br. at 15, ECF No. 22-1). Motorola does not suggest that those witnesses would be unavailable in New Jersey, but only that the witnesses would find the Northern District of Illinois more convenient. In short, while both parties argue, in the abstract, that their preferred fora would be more convenient for certain witnesses, neither party contends that any of those witnesses would be unwilling to travel to, or otherwise unavailable in, either this District or the Northern District of Illinois, which is the only pertinent consideration under *Jumara*, 55 F.3d at 879. To extent they are, it suffices to say that neither District would have subpoena power over all potential witnesses. The Court, therefore, finds this factor to be neutral in the transfer analysis.

Regarding the relevant books and records, the Court must focus its analysis on whether those items would be unavailable in either fora. Id. While both parties argue that their preferred forum would be more convenient or otherwise present fewer logistical burdens, (Def. Br. at 15, ECF No. 22-1; Pl. Br. at 22, ECF No. 28), that is not the appropriate consideration. [*30] Nothing in the record indicates that any of the relevant documents would be unavailable in either District. The Court, therefore, finds that this factor is also neutral to the transfer analysis.

B. Public Interest Factors

Beyond the "private interest" factors discussed above, the Third Circuit has also enumerated a list of "public interest" factors for courts to consider when deciding a motion to transfer. Such "public interest" factors include: "the enforceability of the judgment; practical considerations that could make the trial easy, expeditious, or inexpensive; the relative administrative difficulty in the two fora resulting from court congestion; the local interest in deciding local controversies at home, the public policies of the fora, and the familiarity of the trial judge with the applicable state law in diversity cases." *Jumara*, 55 F.3d at 879-80.

1. Enforceability of Judgments

The "enforceability of the judgment" factor is neutral, as a judgment rendered in either this District or the Northern District of Illinois could easily be registered and then enforced in another district.

2. Practical Considerations Regarding Trial

Practical considerations are relevant in that they "could make the trial easy, [*31] expeditious, or inexpensive," and this is particularly true if transferring the case would result in it being in "another jurisdiction where a related matter is pending." *LG Elecs., Inc. v. First Int'l Comput., Inc.*, 138 F. Supp. 2d 574, 592 \(D.N.J. 2001\). Courts transferring cases in those circumstances do so in light of the Supreme Court's warning that "[t]o permit a situation in which two cases involving precisely the same issues are simultaneously pending in different District Courts leads to the wastefulness of time, energy and money that 1404\(a\) was designed to prevent." *Am. Tel. & Tel. Co. v. MCI Commc'n Corp.*, 736 F. Supp. 1294, 1308 \(D.N.J. 1990\) (quoting *Cont'l Grain Co. v. Barge FBL-585*, 364 U.S. 19, 26, 80 S. Ct. 1470, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1540 (1960)). Additionally, the Court notes that the legal claims and issues between cases do not have to be identical for this factor to favor transfer; rather the existence of a similar case supports transfer where the cases are similar enough that transfer would support judicial efficiency or reduce the risk of inconsistent results. See *Job Haines Home for the Aged v. Young*, 936 F. Supp. 223, 233 \(D.N.J. 1996\).

Motorola argues that this factor strongly favors transfer because the present action and the Illinois Actions are closely related. (Def. Br. at 12-13, ECF No. 22-1). Motorola contends that the cases are clearly related as all three center on Hytera's sale of digital LMR products in the United States.<sup>6</sup> Id. Motorola also contends that "resolution of these issues [*32] will require similar evidence, both documentary and testimonial." (Id. at 13). Plaintiffs disagree, contending that the case law Motorola relies on to support its motion is "all inapposite," as it concerns the risk of "inconsistent rulings", which is not at issue here. (Pl. Br. at 23, ECF No. 28). Plaintiffs also argue that "transfer provides no advantage as to 'judicial and litigation efficiency.'" (Id.). Furthermore, Plaintiffs contend that the present action and the Illinois Actions involve different parties, different claims, and different products, and that the cases therefore "require vastly different evidentiary requirements, focus, and proof." (Id. at 24).

While the Court recognizes that there are connections between the present action and the Illinois Actions, they are relatively distinct from each other. First, the claims involved in the cases are different — antitrust as opposed to patent infringement and misappropriation of trade secrets. While Motorola argues that resolution of the issues at hand would involve similar evidence,<sup>7</sup> it is difficult to see how evidence regarding Motorola's allegedly anticompetitive interactions with dealers or its alleged serial "sham petitioning" would bear [*33] on whether certain of the Plaintiffs infringed on Motorola's patents or misappropriated Motorola's trade secrets (or vice-versa). Second, the Illinois Actions do not involve all of the same parties as the present case, as PowerTrunk is not a party in either the either of the Illinois Actions. While the Court acknowledges that the Northern District of Illinois' general familiarity with the parties' disputes may, perhaps, foster efficiency, this factor is essentially neutral to the transfer analysis.

3. Relative Administrative Difficulty

Regarding the administrative difficulties associated with proceeding in either District, the Court is required to evaluate this factor in light of the relative docket congestion of the fora. Jumara, 55 F.3d at 879. None of the parties have presented the Court with any evidence comparing the respective cases loads of the District of New Jersey and the Northern District of Illinois. The Court recognizes that both Districts are extremely busy, and that transfer would have only a negligible effect on the relative congestion of either District's docket. This factor is therefore neutral in the transfer analysis.

4. Local Interests / Public Policies of the Fora

Regarding [*34] the local interest in deciding controversies, both Districts have strong interests in handling matters concerning their resident businesses. See *Stringfield v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., No. 11-1829, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70044, 2011 WL 2600739, at *3 (D.N.J. June 29, 2011)*. Thus, the District of New Jersey has a strong interest in the outcome of a case involving both PowerTrunk, which has its principal place of business in New Jersey, as well as New Jersey-based dealers/customers impacted by Motorola's alleged anticompetitive activity. The Northern District of Illinois has an identically strong interest in the outcome of a case involving Motorola, which has its corporate headquarters in Chicago, as well as the effect of Motorola's alleged conduct on Illinois citizens. The Court, therefore, finds this factor to be neutral in the transfer analysis.

<sup>6</sup> Motorola also argues that the cases are related because Plaintiffs cite the Illinois Actions as two examples of sham litigation by Motorola in their Complaint, and cite two of the seven patents at issue in the Patent Action as examples of Motorola's anticompetitive conduct. (Id.). These arguments, which address the previous iteration of Plaintiffs' pleading, are no longer applicable, as Plaintiffs abandoned those allegations when filing their Amended Complaint. The Court is not suggesting any error on Motorola's part. At the time Motorola filed its briefing, the original Complaint remained Plaintiffs' operative pleading. Plaintiffs did not file their Amended Complaint until several months after the parties finished briefing Motorola's motion.

<sup>7</sup> Again, the Court acknowledges that, at the time Motorola made this argument, Plaintiffs had alleged that the Illinois Actions were themselves examples of Motorola's allegedly anticompetitive conduct. Plaintiffs, however, removed those allegations when filing their Amended Complaint. (Compare Compl., ECF No. 1, with Am. Compl. ECF No. 45).

5. Judges' Familiarity With Applicable State Law

This factor focuses on whether judges in one of the districts would have greater familiarity with the applicable state law, particularly in diversity cases. Jumara, 55 F.3d at 879. While Plaintiffs' claims sound primarily in federal antitrust law, Plaintiffs do assert violations of California's Business & Professions Code §§ 17200, Florida Statutes §§ 501.201 — Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices, and Section 4 of the New Jersey Antitrust Act (for both monopolization and attempted monopolization). (Compl. ¶¶ 269-307). The [*35] parties do not contend that either this District or the Northern District of Illinois has more familiarity with, or is otherwise better equipped to understand and apply, California or Florida law. Moreover, while common sense suggests that a New Jersey Court would be better suited to address Plaintiffs' newly added claims under the New Jersey Antitrust Act, that is not necessarily true. As one Judge in this District has observed, the "[t]he section of the New Jersey Antitrust Act at issue in this case was modeled after the Sherman Act, and New Jersey courts have looked to federal decisions interpreting the Sherman Act for guidance in interpreting the New Jersey statute." Stephenson v Bell Atl. Corp., 177 F.R.D. 279, 284, n.3 (D.N.J. 1997). In any event, neither party has argued this point. The Court, therefore, finds that this factor is neutral in the transfer analysis.

C. The Jumara Factors Weigh in Favor of Transfer

The Court has carefully considered each of the factors discussed above. Most of those factors are essentially neutral to the transfer analysis. Two favor transfer (Defendant's choice of forum and, more importantly, where the claims arose), and only one (Plaintiffs' choice of forum) weigh against it. Moreover, notwithstanding the fact that [*36] Plaintiff PowerTrunk elected to file suit in its home jurisdiction, Plaintiffs' choice of forum is accorded reduced weight, as the claims at issue arose elsewhere. On balance, the Court finds that the Jumara factors weigh in favor of transferring this matter to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, Motorola's motion to transfer, (ECF No. 22), is GRANTED, and this matter shall be transferred to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. An appropriate form of Order accompanies this Opinion.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO TRANSFER

JOSEPH A. DICKSON, U.S.M.J.

This matter comes before the Court by way of Defendant's motion to transfer this matter to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(a) and 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a). (ECF No. 22). In accordance with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 78, the Court did not hear oral argument on Defendant's application. Upon careful consideration of the parties' submissions, and for the reasons set forth in this Court's Opinion filed on this date,

IT IS on this 6th day of December, 2018,

ORDERED that Defendant's motion to transfer, [*37] (ECF No. 22), is GRANTED; and it is further

ORDERED that the Clerk of the Court transfer this matter to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois and it is further ORDERED that, pursuant to Local Civil Rule 72.1\(c\)\(1\)\(C\), this transfer is stayed for 14 days from the date of this Order, so as to afford the parties an opportunity to appeal the undersigned's decision to the District Court. If any party files a timely appeal, then "the Clerk shall take no action until the appeal is decided by the [District] Judge." L.Civ. R. 72.1\(c\)\(1\)\(C\).

HN1 [down arrow] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade. Courts have understood for more than a century that this language does not ban all contracts, but instead reaches only agreements that restrict competition. In the absence of an agreement, the antitrust laws forbid only monopolization or attempts to monopolize, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, as well as a few other arrangements including anticompetitive mergers and acquisitions, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

HN2 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

At the summary judgment stage a § 1 of the Sherman Act, plaintiff's offer of conspiracy evidence must tend to rule out the possibility that the defendants were acting independently. An antitrust plaintiff, like all others, is entitled to try to meet that burden with either direct or circumstantial evidence. Antitrust plaintiffs do not face a heightened burden to defeat summary judgment. As Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 generally commands, the court draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party. It is the substantive law, however, that establishes what the plaintiff must address. An antitrust plaintiff needs evidence that would allow a trier of fact to nudge the ball over the 50-yard line and rationally to say that the existence of an agreement is more likely than not. Put more directly, they must put on the table some evidence which, if believed, would support a finding of concerted behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN3 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Certain structural features that make it conducive to successful collusion include a small number of manufacturers, vertical integration, inelastic demand, a standardized commodity product, and high barriers to entry. These characteristics make it easier for companies either to form a cartel or to follow the leader independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Following a competitor's price increases can be consistent with rational self-interest in oligopolies. Each firm in a tight oligopoly might think that it will reap greater profits if it imitates, rather than undermines, its peers' price hikes. And it might reach that conclusion without any conscious coordination with its competitors. For that reason, it is not a violation of antitrust law for a firm to raise its price, counting on its competitors to do likewise (but without any communication with them on the subject).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN5 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

The task before any antitrust plaintiff is to find and produce evidence that reveals coordination or agreement (even a wink and a nod, formal agreements have never been required for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act). For instance, foreknowledge of price increases may be persuasive evidence that an agreement was afoot.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

**HN6** Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Before an inference of conspiracy can be drawn, courts have looked for a shift in firm behavior, as opposed to external market conditions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

**HN7** Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

A continuation of a historic pattern, including of parallel price increase announcements, does not plausibly allow one to infer the existence of a cartel.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

**HN8** Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

A cartel cannot survive absent some enforcement mechanism.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

**HN9** Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

A cartel may exist with only soft measures of control or ineffective enforcement. Evidence of an enforcement mechanism is not always required. Even if that is so, however, the absence of evidence about enforcement does nothing to dissipate the inference of independent behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN10 [blue document icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Supply behavior is highly relevant because price-fixing arrangements often function through restrictions of output. But not every supply-side change is equally suggestive of a conspiracy. Conduct that is easily reversed may be consistent with self-interested decision-making.

HN11 [blue document icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Firms take significant risks by reducing their output in an inflexible manner, unless there is an enforceable agreement in place to ensure that competitors will follow suit. Because perilous leading makes little economic sense absent coordination, evidence of less-reversible supply restrictions supports an inference of conspiracy.

HN12 [blue document icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Information flow, especially between executives, may be probative of conspiracy. But having the opportunity to conspire does not necessarily imply that wrongdoing occurred. Especially when companies have legitimate business reasons for their contacts, plaintiffs must offer some evidence that moves beyond speculation about the content of what was conveyed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN13 [blue document icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Where companies were not only competitors but also among each other's largest suppliers and largest customers, plaintiffs needed to point to a communication that suggested a meeting of the minds to fix prices.

[*931] Wood, Chief Judge. Oligopolies have always posed problems for conventional antitrust law: without something that can be called an agreement, they elude scrutiny under section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and yet no individual firm has enough market power to be subject to Sherman Act section 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Tacit collusion is easy in those markets, see In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litigation, 782 F.3d 867 \(7th Cir. 2015\), and firms have little incentive to compete on the basis of price, "preferring to share the profits [rather] than to fight with each other." Joe Sanfelippo Cabs, Inc. v. City of Milwaukee, 839 F.3d 613, 615 \(7th Cir. 2016\).

This appeal concerns the fine line between agreement and tacit collusion, or, put another way, conscious parallelism. Direct purchasers of containerboard ("the Purchasers") charged multiple manufacturers with conspiring to increase prices and reduce output between 2004 and 2010. We affirmed the district court's decision to certify a nationwide [**3] class of buyers. Kleen Prods. LLC v. Int'l Paper Co., 831 F.3d 919 \(7th Cir. 2016\). Before and after that ruling, most of the defendants settled with the Purchasers. But two companies—Georgia-Pacific LLC and WestRock CP, LLC—decided to fight. They persuaded the district court that there was not enough evidence of a conspiracy to proceed to trial. We agree with that assessment and affirm the judgment dismissing the case.

Containerboard is the name of the material used in countless boxes: it consists of a corrugated layer of heavy paper sandwiched between two smooth pieces of linerboard. Demand is relatively inelastic, meaning that customers will not defect to other products even if the price goes up, because the available substitutes are inferior. Containerboard is manufactured at large, costly mills, which are hard to duplicate, given both the high cost of construction and the myriad of environmental laws that must be satisfied. A handful of major players dominate the industry. Those players include the original defendants in this suit: International Paper ("IP"), Georgia-Pacific, Temple-Inland, Inc., WestRock,<sup>1</sup> Weyerhaeuser Co., Norampac Holdings U.S. Inc., and Packaging Corporation of America ("PCA").

<sup>1</sup> Over the lifespan of this case, WestRock has undergone corporate changes and thus has been known by various names, including RockTenn CP, LLC and Smurfit-Stone Container Corporation. We refer to the business by its present name.

During the early 2000s, prices for containerboard [**4] were low. But from February 2004 to November 2010, they rose dramatically. The original defendants attempted to institute price increases on 15 different occasions. The pattern was a common one. After one company announced that it [*932] would raise its prices for containerboard, the rest followed suit with identical or comparable increases in the ensuing hours, days, or weeks. (The one exception was a failed attempt in which there were three hold-outs.) Such efforts took place from time to time. For example, in March 2003, the defendants attempted an ultimately unsuccessful increase. Of the proposed hikes from 2004 to 2010, Georgia-Pacific, WestRock, and a non-defendant each led the effort twice. The price increases were sustained nine times, a 60% success rate.

While containerboard prices rose, containerboard production capacity fell in North America (despite the inelasticity of demand and growth throughout the rest of the globe). The initial defendants were not immune from this decline. The Purchasers' expert concluded that the defendant companies reduced their production capacity by an amount almost double that of non-defendants, though they used different strategies to accomplish this [**5] goal. They closed a significant number of mills during the class period—WestRock alone was responsible for more than a third of those closures. WestRock also took care, through measures such as buyer selection and machinery sales, to avoid adding containerboard supply into the market. Georgia-Pacific kept all its mills running, but it slowed the rate of production. It would periodically "slow back" production by idling or shutting down machines and taking extra downtime. While these practices diminished supply to the point that it sometimes pinched, in the end Georgia-Pacific never missed an order. And the company actually increased its overall capacity by acquiring a new mill in 2007.

During this period, the defendants were in regular communication. Company executives and other employees spoke by phone and at trade association meetings every few days. The record does not reveal the contents of all these conversations, but at least some dealt with the timing and pricing of interfirm trading of containerboard—a common practice.

Internal and public-facing statements made by the defendants' employees shed light on these economic developments. Some email exchanges may be read to imply that [**6] the defendants had foreknowledge of other companies' proposed increases before they were announced. For example, just before three price hikes, a PCA employee offered an opinion about how high prices would need to go over the next year and a half in order to recover the cost of capital. A Georgia-Pacific staffer wrote "the party begins" when discussing an increase attempt. A WestRock vice president emailed that the company "always follow[s] IP," even though in fact "always" was an overstatement. And a Weyerhaeuser employee discussed a specific increase two days before WestRock first made its new price public. Other statements support the inference that a coordinated plan was in place. For instance, a Weyerhaeuser employee wrote that he "made up a bunch" of information in a report about what was learned from customers about competition, asking others to "be more specific" to stay "out of anti-trust legal issues." A Norampac executive, discussing problems with the industry, said "you have to be ready to let go business if you want to keep the price up," and "everybody needs to do the same thing."

Georgia-Pacific and WestRock made their own incriminating remarks. Because some details remain [**7] under seal in this court, some of our examples are a bit vague, but we have reviewed the sealed materials and they are consistent with the remainder of the evidence. A WestRock vice-president made remarks in an email that could easily be construed as an undertaking to follow-the-leader. A different [*933] vice-president complained that the company "ha[d] no choice but to support [a price increase] initiative" and that WestRock "ha[d] done [its] part." At one point, a company employee wrote that the "only way to get paid is to have a 1994-95 situation where the tide rises for all boats," perhaps referring to the container-board industry's earlier run-ins with antitrust law. See, e.g., In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 305 F.3d 145 \(3d Cir. 2002\). Publicly, WestRock's CEO was reported to have said that the company had a restructuring plan to "cut supply enough at [WestRock] to force price increases throughout the industry." Georgia-Pacific's president gave a speech during the period in question urging the industry to resist customer requests for price breaks.

In September 2010, the Purchasers filed a putative class action alleging violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The district court consolidated the suit with similar actions and denied several motions [**8] to dismiss. Discovery followed. Then in March 2015, the district court granted the Purchasers' motion for class certification under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. It defined the class as follows:

All persons that purchased Containerboard Products directly from any of the Defendants or their subsidiaries or affiliates for use or delivery in the United States from at least as early as February 15, 2004 through November 8, 2010.

Back in the district court, the litigation rolled onward. The court largely denied the parties' cross-motions to exclude each other's experts. Both sides moved for summary judgment. Before the court acted on those motions, some of the defendants settled with the Purchasers. The district court granted the remaining defendants, Georgia-Pacific and WestRock, summary judgment. In a lengthy opinion that delved deeply into the Purchasers' evidence, the court concluded that the record, viewed holistically in the light most favorable to the Purchasers, did not tend to rule out that the defendants had acted independently. With only the final approval of settlement agreements pending, the district [**9] court entered partial final judgment for the remaining defendants under Rule 54\(b\). The Purchasers ask us to revisit that ruling.

II

HN1 Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every "contract, combination, ... or conspiracy in restraint of trade ..." Courts have understood for more than a century that this language does not ban all contracts, but instead reaches only agreements that restrict competition. Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984); see also Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. (1940). In the absence of an agreement, the antitrust laws forbid only monopolization or attempts to monopolize, see 15 U.S.C. § 2, as well as a few other arrangements including anticompetitive mergers and acquisitions, see 15 U.S.C. § 18. But this case concerns only section 1; the plaintiffs make no claim that any of the defendants has even attempted to monopolize, much less succeeded in such an effort. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). We can therefore disregard all other antitrust theories and focus on the question [*934] whether the district court correctly decided that the Purchasers did not present enough evidence to permit a trier of fact to find the agreement necessary for section 1 liability. As the Supreme Court put it in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), HN2 "at the summary judgment stage a § 1 plaintiff's offer of conspiracy evidence must tend to rule out the [**10] possibility that the defendants were acting independently." Id. at 554, citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).

It is worth recalling that an antitrust plaintiff, like all others, is entitled to try to meet that burden with either direct or circumstantial evidence. Miles Distrib., Inc. v. Specialty Constr. Brands, Inc., 476 F.3d 442, 449 (7th Cir. 2007). Antitrust plaintiffs do not face a heightened burden to defeat summary judgment. See Omnicare, Inc. v. UnitedHealth Grp., Inc., 629 F.3d 697, 707 (7th Cir. 2011). As Rule 56 generally commands, we draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party, here the Purchasers. It is the substantive law, however, that establishes what the plaintiff must address. The Purchasers needed evidence that would allow a trier of fact to nudge the ball over the 50-yard line and rationally to say that the existence of an agreement is more likely than not. Put more directly, they must put on the table "some evidence which, if believed, would support a finding of concerted behavior." Toys "R" Us Inc. v. FTC, 221 F.3d 928, 935 (7th Cir. 2000); accord Blomkest Fertilizer, Inc. v. Potash Corp. of Saskatchewan, 203 F.3d 1028, 1032 (8th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (reading Matsushita to require that it be more reasonable to infer a price-fixing conspiracy than permissible activity).

Armed with bountiful circumstantial evidence, the Purchasers accuse the defendant manufacturers of agreeing to restrict the supply of containerboard and thereby to create market conditions that would support significantly higher [**11] prices. The district court properly considered "economic evidence suggesting that the defendants were not in fact competing, and noneconomic evidence suggesting that they were not competing because they had agreed not to compete." In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651, 655 (7th Cir. 2002). It then drew and compared the corresponding inferences from each data point. See, e.g., Omnicare, 629 F.3d at 707-20. After determining that each piece of evidence individually did not rule out the possibility of independent action, it reviewed the evidence in the aggregate, as required. See id. at 720. The court concluded that because no individual piece of evidence tended to show collusion, the combined probative value was zero. We are not so sure of that. While no single piece of information may win the day, the whole may be greater than the sum of its parts in tending to exclude the possibility of conscious parallelism. See High Fructose Corn Syrup, 295 F.3d at 655 ("[E]vidence can be susceptible of different interpretations ... without being wholly devoid of probative value ... .").

Nonetheless, our assessment of the district court's decision is de novo, and so we need only satisfy ourselves that we have the proper standard in mind. In re Dairy Farmers of Am., Inc., Cheese Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 758, 762 (7th Cir. 2015). Viewing the evidence and reasonable inferences in the Purchasers' favor, we ask whether they [**12] have produced any evidence that would rule out the hypothesis that the defendants were engaged in self-interested but lawful oligopolistic behavior during the relevant period. Despite the volume of evidence the Purchasers submitted in opposition [*935] to summary judgment, we find ourselves in agreement with the district court's ultimate conclusion. We discuss below only the most significant evidence against Georgia-Pacific and WestRock; those interested in a more comprehensive account should refer to the district court's opinion, Kleen Prods. LLC v. Int'l Paper, 276 F. Supp. 3d 811 (N.D. Ill. 2017). We conclude that nothing in this record would permit a trier of fact to conclude that the defendants were colluding, rather than behaving in their independent self-interest.

III

We start with some structural evidence about the container-board industry. As we noted in our earlier encounter with this litigation, the market has HN3 certain structural features that make it "conducive to successful collusion," such as a small number of manufacturers, vertical integration, inelastic demand, a standardized commodity product, and high barriers to entry. Kleen Prods., 831 F.3d at 927-28. These characteristics make it easier for companies either to form a cartel or to follow the leader independently. Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 871-72; In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 397 (3d Cir. 2015). We [**13] explained why this is so in our 2015 Text Messaging opinion:

[I]f a small number of competitors dominates a market, they will find it safer and easier to fix prices than if there are many competitors of more or less equal size. For the fewer the conspirators, the lower the cost of negotiation and the likelihood of defection . . . But the other side of this coin is that the fewer the firms, the easier it is for them to engage in "follow the leader" pricing ("conscious parallelism," as lawyers call it, "tacit collusion" as economists prefer to call it)—which means coordinating their pricing without an actual agreement to do so. As for the apparent anomaly of competitors' raising prices in the face of falling costs, . . . this may be not because they've agreed not to compete but because all of them have determined independently that they may be better off with a higher price. That higher price, moreover—the consequence of parallel but independent decisions to raise prices—may generate even greater profits (compared to competitive pricing) if costs are falling, provided that consumers do not have attractive alternatives.

Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 871-72. Because of the competing inferences that can be drawn from this market [**14] structure, the district court properly found that the economic evidence did not tend to exclude the possibility of independent action.

B

Next, we turn to more specific evidence that the Purchasers offered. In establishing both defendants' failure to compete, the Purchasers rely heavily on the 15 price hikes that occurred over the class period. But one must take care with the inferences that can be drawn from such evidence. HN4↑ Following a competitor's price increases can be consistent with rational self-interest in oligopolies. See Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 874-75. Each firm in a tight oligopoly might think that it will reap greater profits if it imitates, rather than undermines, its peers' price hikes. Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 227, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 \(1993\); Valspar Corp. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 873 F.3d 185, 191 \(3d Cir. 2017\). And it might reach that conclusion without any conscious coordination with its competitors. For that reason, "it is not a violation of antitrust law for a firm to raise its price, counting on its [*936] competitors to do likewise (but without any communication with them on the subject) ... ." Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 876.

HN5↑ The task before any plaintiff is thus to find and produce evidence that reveals coordination or agreement (even a wink and a nod—formal agreements have never been required for purposes of Sherman Act section 1). See id.; Blomkest Fertilizer, 203 F.3d at 1033. For instance, foreknowledge [\[\*\*15\]](#) of price increases may be persuasive evidence that an agreement was afoot. See Chocolate Confectionary, 801 F.3d at 408; In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Prods. Antitrust Litig., 906 F.2d 432, 455 \(9th Cir. 1990\). The Purchasers here attempt to carry their burden by emphasizing the timing of the price increase attempts, which they describe as "lockstep." They urge us to draw the inference that such tight congruence of price movements could not have occurred unless the competitors had an inside scoop. But a close look at the record reveals that the Purchasers overstate how coordinated these hikes actually were. Different manufacturers, including non-defendants, led the attempts. See Reserve Supply Corp. v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., 971 F.2d 37, 54 \(7th Cir. 1992\) (finding that a change in who is the price leader suggests that manufacturers could independently decide whether to participate in price increases). Sometimes companies followed suit over a month later. Even the attempts that saw quick turnaround times do little to raise suspicions. If it is in a company's self-interest to imitate a price leader's increase, why wait to enjoy the benefit? The Purchasers accuse the defendants of lying when they claim to have explored independently a possible increase. But there is no evidence supporting this allegation.

The Purchasers' "proof" of prior knowledge amounts to nothing more than speculation. [\[\*\*16\]](#) They emphasize a March 2004 PCA memorandum that said "at least three $40-50 increases over the next 18 months" were needed to recoup the cost of capital. By September 2005, three attempts to raise prices had indeed occurred. But this supposed smoking gun could be nothing more than a somewhat accurate industry prediction. That two of the increases were for $50 is unsurprising, given that most of the 15 attempts were for $40 or $50. More tellingly, the PCA employee did not accurately predict three successful increases, since the second one failed and the third was only for $30.

The evidence that Georgia-Pacific provided or received advance notice is even weaker. The best that the Purchasers offer is a comment made by a Georgia-Pacific employee that "the party begins," following a discussion that a few manufacturers had announced an increase. This remark could merely express enthusiasm about the upward trend in pricing.

Another aspect of the Purchasers' argument is that the rising prices throughout the class period reflect an abrupt change in business practices. If that is an accurate description of what happened, it might support an inference of conspiracy. But HN6↑ before the inference can [\[\*\*17\]](#) be drawn, we have looked for a shift in firm behavior, as opposed to external market conditions. See Toys "R" Us, 221 F.3d at 935; Chocolate Confectionary, 801 F.3d at 410. In the present case, the Purchasers' evidence reveals only changed market conditions. For instance, they point to complaints that manufacturers made about aggressively competitive pricing that took place before, but not during, the class period. Yet the shift may be explained by external factors, such as the emergence from the economic downturn of 2008, which occurred in the [*937] middle of the class period. And in terms of the companies' behavior—the relevant inquiry—the manufacturers had attempted to raise prices before the class period as well. HN7↑ A continuation of a historic pattern—including of parallel price increase announcements—does not plausibly allow one to infer the existence of a cartel. Valspar, 873 F.3d at 196; Chocolate Confectionary, 801 F.3d at 410.

A further strike against the Purchasers' case is the failure rate of the manufacturers' efforts: 40% of the attempted increases did not hold. The district court pondered why a company would risk treble damages by colluding on an often-ineffective plan when tacitly following price hikes had no downside risk. Cf. Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 878. Perhaps the Purchasers have a good answer to that question: when potential \*\*18 profits are in the billions, even 60% odds provide a substantial incentive. But that at best leaves matters in equipoise.

If this was a cartel, it would have tried to impose disciplinary measures on the "cheaters" who did not go along with the price increases. But that type of evidence is conspicuously absent, even though nearly half the price hikes failed. See Petrucci's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Del. Co., Inc., 998 F.2d 1224, 1233 \(3d Cir. 1993\) (noting that HN8↑) "a cartel cannot survive absent some enforcement mechanism"). The Purchasers propose two possible mechanisms for enforcement, but they have not pointed to any evidence indicating that either one was used. It is true that HN9↑ a cartel may exist with only soft measures of control or ineffective enforcement. See In re Broiler Chicken Antitrust Litig., 290 F. Supp. 3d 772, 796-97 \(N.D. Ill. 2017\) (evidence of an enforcement mechanism is not always required). Even if that is so, however, the absence of evidence about enforcement does nothing to dissipate the inference of independent behavior. We are still left with price increases that appear to be just as consistent with independent action as with collusion.

The second half of the Purchasers' theory focuses on supposedly coordinated reductions of output through mill closures and machine slowdowns. HN10↑ Supply behavior is highly relevant because price-fixing \*\*19 arrangements often function through restrictions of output. See Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Gulf Oil Corp., 588 F.2d 221, 226 \(7th Cir. 1978\). But not every supply-side change is equally suggestive of a conspiracy. Conduct that is easily reversed may be consistent with self-interested decision-making.

An example illustrates the point. Suppose Company X takes its machines offline more frequently in order to reduce its supply. If competitors follow suit, and industry-wide production falls, all companies can charge more for the commodity and potentially reap greater profits. See Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 877. But what if instead the competitors maintain their supply and woo Company X's customers. Because Company X's reduction strategy was flexible, it can quickly get its machines running and filling orders again, minimizing any losses. In contrast, if Company X had lowered its production by selling its mills or equipment, it could not rapidly undo its efforts while competitors came knocking on customers' doors. This inability to stave off potential losses has earned the name "perilous leading." PHILLIP E. AREEDA & HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW ¶ 1425d (4th ed. 2018). HN11↑ Firms take significant risks by reducing their output in an inflexible manner, unless there is an enforceable agreement in \*\*20 place to ensure that competitors will follow suit. Petroleum Prods., 906 F.2d at 463; [In re Plasma-Derivative \[\*938\] Protein Therapies Antitrust Litig., 764 F. Supp. 2d 991, 1002 \(N.D. Ill. 2011\)](#). Because perilous leading makes "little economic sense" absent coordination, evidence of less-reversible supply restrictions supports an inference of conspiracy. Broiler Chicken, 290 F. Supp. 3d at 798.

During the class period, the North American market saw a drop in overall capacity for containerboard. The original defendants collectively were responsible for 19 mill closures. Yet Georgia-Pacific not only kept its mills open; it also purchased a new mill. The Purchasers respond that Georgia-Pacific underutilized its machines, but Georgia-Pacific has an answer for that: its run-to-demand strategy. Under this strategy, which dated back to 1999, Georgia-Pacific aimed to produce just enough containerboard to fill orders without creating excess inventory. Internal communications suggest that this strategy led to some close calls when filling orders, but Georgia-Pacific always found a way to meet its customer demand. Moreover, its acquisition of a mill allowed it to increase its production capacity over the class period.

The Purchasers' strongest evidence undercutting Georgia-Pacific's account are comments in performance reviews that credit employees for getting price increases \*\*21 by keeping inventory low. Because Georgia-Pacific did not have sufficient market power to alter containerboard pricing on its own, the Purchasers insist that these statements can be understood only as proof of an anticompetitive agreement. But underusing machinery is the kind of flexible behavior that is consistent with rational attempts to raise prices through watchful attention to one's competitors' actions. Far from perilous, had Georgia-Pacific's efforts not paid off, it could have increased its output quickly. Georgia-Pacific's supply behavior does not point towards its having a role in any conspiracy.

As ammunition against both defendants, the Purchasers cite the frequent contacts that company executives had by phone and at trade association meetings. They allege that the defendants' regular communications and trades served as opportunities for collusion. Some courts have held that this type of HN12<sup>15</sup> information flow, especially between executives, may be probative of conspiracy. E.g., Stanislaus Food Prods. Co. v. USS-POSCO Indus., 803 F.3d 1084, 1093 \(9th Cir. 2015\). But having the opportunity to conspire does not necessarily imply that wrongdoing occurred. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 762, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1984\); Weit v. Cont'l Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Chi., 641 F.2d 457, 462 \(7th Cir. 1981\). Especially when companies have legitimate business reasons for their contacts, plaintiffs must offer [\[\*\*22\]](#) some evidence that moves beyond speculation about the content of what was conveyed. See Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 878 ("And as there is no evidence of what information was exchanged at these [trade association] meetings, there is no basis for an inference that they were using the meetings to plot prices [sic] increases."); accord Chocolate Confectionary, 801 F.3d at 409; In re Musical Instruments & Equip. Antitrust Litig., 798 F.3d 1186, 1196 \(9th Cir. 2015\).

The Purchasers have no evidence indicating that the executives discussed illicit price-fixing or output restriction deals during their calls or meetings. They rely instead on the frequency and timing of the contacts. For example, 20 calls were made in the days around a Georgia-Pacific-led price increase, despite the fact that the company had predicted flat pricing just [\[\*939\]](#) two weeks earlier. That is not enough. We cannot put much stock in the frequency of contacts, given the amount of trading that was taking place among the firms. See Dairy Farmers of Am., 801 F.3d at 763 (HN13<sup>15</sup>) where companies were not only competitors but also among each other's largest suppliers and largest customers, plaintiffs needed to point to a communication that "suggest[ed] a meeting of the minds to fix prices"); High Fructose Corn Syrup, 295 F.3d at 659 (finding nothing suspicious about occasional interfirm trades unless firms could supply their customers at a lower cost).

Furthermore, we hesitate [\[\*\*23\]](#) to impugn the companies' intentions solely from the timing of the contacts. To be clear, we do not see the frequency of the calls and meetings as evidence tending to exclude collusion. Such a rule would create an incentive for businesses to make constant phone calls in order to immunize themselves from antitrust liability. Here, however, though some trade association meetings occurred before price-increase proposals, most of Georgia-Pacific's announcements were not preceded by meetings. The Purchasers' speculation about the content of the frequent interfirm contacts is not enough to create a jury issue.

Incriminating remarks by defendants' employees can support the inference that a conspiracy existed. See, e.g., High Fructose Corn Syrup, 295 F.3d at 662. The Purchasers flag a few comments that they see as particularly inculpatory. For starters, a Weyerhaeuser employee wrote that he "made up a bunch" of information in a report and instructed others to "be more specific" to keep the company "out of anti-trust legal issues." In addition, while discussing problems with the industry, a Norampac executive said "you have to be ready to let go business if you want to keep the price up," and "everybody needs to do the same thing." [\[\*\*24\]](#)

Yet even if these statements are enough to create a triable question about the presence of an agreement generally, they are not enough to show that Georgia-Pacific was a part of that cartel. On this front, the Purchasers present little proof. They point to a speech in which Georgia-Pacific's CEO supposedly suggested that the industry should "say 'no' on deals" that, though competitive, are not profitable. But that is hardly an earthshattering insight, even if proof of the statement were possible without the use of hearsay contained in newspaper articles reporting on the speech. See Eisenstadt v. Centel Corp., 113 F.3d 738, 742 \(7th Cir. 1997\). And the account of an attendee rejects the rumors, stating that this message "was not said nor implied." And the CEO claimed in his deposition that he was speaking only about Georgia-Pacific, not the industry, needing to decline deals. Like their economic proof, the Purchasers' noneconomic evidence—even when viewed with the parallel conduct—does not exclude the possibility that Georgia-Pacific acted in a self-interested but permissible way.

Some of the Purchasers' evidence was particular to WestRock, to which we now turn. There is a wrinkle in its potential liability: in June 2010, just shy of the close [**25] of the class period, WestRock received a discharge in bankruptcy, for which it had filed in 2009. At that moment, it was free of any antitrust liability incurred up to the date of discharge. See In re Travel Agent Comm'n Antitrust Litig., 583 F.3d 896, 902 (6th Cir. 2009). Nonetheless, WestRock is potentially liable for the alleged conspiracy if there is evidence it rejoined the cartel post-discharge. Kleen I*9401 Prods., 831 F.3d at 930; see also O'Loughlin v. Cnty. of Orange, 229 F.3d 871, 875 (9th Cir. 2000) ("A 'fresh start' means only that; it does not mean a continuing licence [sic] to violate the law."). We must therefore look to see if there is evidence that would permit a trier of fact both to find the initial agreement, and to find that WestRock rejoined that agreement after its discharge.

As we have explained, the parallel price hikes alone do not suffice to permit a jury to find a cartel. But the Purchasers cite evidence hinting at WestRock's conspiratorial involvement. For example, they point to an email from Weyerhaeuser that discussed a $50 increase just days before WestRock announced it. Though a publication's email blast had made public the existence of a future attempt, it had gotten the amount wrong. Weyerhaeuser had the right number.

Yet even if this is enough to create a fact question about WestRock's original participation in the alleged [**26] agreement, it does nothing to establish that it rejoined the agreement post-discharge. During the relevant period, in July 2010, WestRock did participate in an unsuccessful attempt to hike prices. The Purchasers insist that this reveals more than parallel conduct, given an email between WestRock staff that the company "always follow[s] IP [International Paper]." But, as we have noted several times, merely following a leader is not the same as agreeing to do something. Also of little probative value is the fact that a WestRock vice president met with other manufacturers on the day between the first defendant's joining the increase and WestRock's decision to follow suit. Before this meeting, the increase had been floated by a non-defendant. See Valspar Corp. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours, 152 F. Supp. 3d 234, 247 (D. Del. 2016), aff'd 873 F.3d 185 (declining to infer that a meeting provided an opportunity to conspire when price increase announcements occurred before and after the meeting). And WestRock offered evidence that since April it had been contemplating that prices would go up. Purchasers' parallel pricing evidence does not provide a hook for WestRock's liability.

Perhaps the most compelling evidence of collusion is WestRock's supply restrictions. During the class period, [**27] WestRock closed seven of its mills and took other steps to reduce capacity. WestRock attempts to rationalize this behavior in various ways. It claims that the closures were part of a 2003 restructuring plan to get rid of inefficient plants in light of its purchase of a highly efficient mill. It also asserts that it made certain sales decisions in light of a green marketing plan where buyers would assume a mill's associated environmental liabilities. And WestRock reminds us that it sold the mills while it was under the oversight of the bankruptcy court, a committee of creditors, and financial advisors.

These explanations are all plausible. Yet they do not overcome the inference of conspiracy given that, unlike Georgia-Pacific's reversible cuts, WestRock's supply behavior could not be undone easily. Such perilous leading risked significant losses. Furthermore, a vice president wrote that WestRock "had done [its] part," implying it played a role in a larger agreement. And other company emails state that restricting supply would help raise prices, something no manufacturer could do alone.

While this discussion may suggest that the Purchasers win the day, the insurmountable problem is one [**28] of timing: these events occurred pre-discharge. Even assuming [*941] (favorably to the Purchasers) that WestRock was part of a cartel, they fall short on presenting evidence that WestRock was involved post-discharge. In those months, WestRock did some machine maintenance, but it did not close any mills and generally operated at a high level of production and capacity.

Last, we consider the other evidence that the Purchasers lodged against WestRock. This includes incriminating statements made by WestRock employees and an article discussing the CEO's statements that the company needed a restructuring plan to "cut supply enough at [WestRock] to force price increases throughout the industry." The latter is inadmissible hearsay. Eisenstadt, 113 F.3d at 742. The Purchasers maintain nonetheless that the CEO's deposition testimony confirms that he was signaling indirectly the company's commitment to a price-fixing plan. It does not.

Worse for WestRock are two vice-presidents' remarks that the company had "little choice" or "no choice" but to join the price increases, even though one was not supported by supply and demand. The most plausible explanation for its decision to go along with a price hike out of obligation, when that [**29] hike is not economically justified, is that WestRock had committed to an agreement. See In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 369 (3d Cir. 2004) (finding probative documents emphasizing that competitors had to hold the line on price increases that were not economically supported). Also inculpatory was a staff member's email to a vice-president, among others, that "the only way to get paid is to have a 1994-95 situation where the tide rises for all boats." The Purchasers encourage us to read this statement as a reference to the container-board industry's earlier antitrust violations. See Linerboard, 305 F.3d 145. These statements are some of the Purchasers' strongest evidence that WestRock's price hikes and mill closures were more than just conscious parallelism. But again, they all occurred pre-discharge, and so they say nothing about WestRock's post-discharge conduct.

The Purchasers finally offer some economic and noneconomic evidence that could suggest suspicious activity. But even if it is credited, it is not enough to permit a trier of fact to find impermissible coordination. Statements by Georgia-Pacific staff are not enough to cast a cloud over its follow-the-leader price increases and flexible production adjustments. And while some of WestRock's behavior, [**30] particularly its mill closures, gives us pause, the Purchasers fail to establish that anything the company did post-discharge amounts to rejoining any existing conspiracy. This case shares many similarities with our decision in Text Messaging. In both situations, the plaintiffs did not discover a "smoking gun or ... additional circumstantial evidence that further tilts the balance in favor of liability." Id. at 871 (citation omitted). The Purchasers may be right that the containerboard industry got savvier at hiding its antitrust violations. But unfortunately for them, they "failed to carry the burden" of "establishing a prima facie case of explicit collusion," offering "no more than a plausible interpretation" of the defendants' anticompetitive conduct. Id. at 876.

IV

The outcome of this case flows directly from both the limitation in section 1 of the Sherman Act to anticompetitive agreements and the Supreme Court's cautions against interfering with individual firm behavior in ways that could inadvertently distort incentives to compete. In Matsushita, the Court warned against "mistaken [*942] inferences ... [that] chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594; see also Text Messaging, 782 F.3d at 874 (expressing pragmatic concerns [**31] about prohibiting conscious parallelism).

Scholars, lawmakers, and courts have yet to agree on a regulatory regime that can address oligopolistic behavior that leads to higher prices and reduced consumer choice, without stifling normal business activity. For now, we follow established law to the effect that "conscious parallelism" has not yet read conspiracy out of the Sherman Act entirely." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 552 (citation omitted).

Because the evidence proffered by the Purchasers does not tend to exclude the possibility that Georgia-Pacific and WestRock engaged only in tacit collusion, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

DECISION AND ORDER

Plaintiff CORPORATE TRANSPORTATION GROUP, LTD (referred to as Plaintiff or "CTG") moves to amend its complaint to add causes of action for tortious interference with its affiliate contracts, prima facie tort, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and violation of New York General Business Law ("GBL") §340, otherwise known as the Donnelly Act. Defendants, LIMOSYS, LLC and LIMOSYS SOFTWARE LLC (collectively referred to as "Limosys") oppose Plaintiff's motion and cross-move to renew and reargue this Court's Decision and Order dated March 20, 2018, which denied in part and granted in part its motion to dismiss Plaintiff's complaint, and upon renewal and reargument, dismissing Plaintiff's remaining causes of action.

Background

On or around September 29, 2017, Plaintiff commenced this action against Limosys and Limosys's managing member, Isaac Yehuda ("Yehuda"), alleging the following seven causes of action against Defendants: misappropriation of trade secrets, tortious interference with contract, [**2] fraudulent inducement, fraud, tortious interference with prospective business advantage and business relationships, [*2] breach of contract and permanent injunction.

Plaintiff is in the business of providing ground transportation to corporate clients and private individuals in the tri-state area and is the largest private provider of MTA Access-A-Ride services. In addition to providing ground transportation services directly, Plaintiff sends customers to other ground transportation companies, which Plaintiff refers to as its "affiliates." Limosys is engaged in providing software to ground transportation service companies in the New York area. Approximately 250 transportation companies use Limosys's software. It is undisputed that Limosys entered into two agreements with Plaintiff, one dated January 27, 2014, entitled "Confidentiality Agreement" (hereinafter referred to as the "2014 Confidentiality Agreement") and another dated August 1, 2016, entitled "Limosys Member's Network Vendor's Agreement" (hereinafter referred to as the "2016 Vendor's Agreement").

Pursuant to the 2014 Confidentiality Agreement, Limosys agreed not to "use, disseminate or in any way disclose any Confidential Information of the Discloser [CTG] to any person, firm, or business...." The term "Confidential Information" is broadly defined [*3] as:

"...any and all technical and non-technical information including application programming interface (API), patent, copyright, trade secret, and proprietary information, techniques, sketches, drawings, models, inventions, know-how, processes, apparatus, equipment, algorithms, software programs, software source documents, and formulae related to the current, future and proposed products and services of the Discloser, and includes, without limitation, information concerning research, experimental work, development, design details and specifications, engineering, financial information, procurement requirements, purchasing, manufacturing, customer lists, business forecasts, sales and merchandising, and marketing plans and information."

The 2016 Vendor's Agreement states that "Limosys owns a proprietary network platform ("Network") that allows car companies ("Members") to share rides between affiliated members as well as Vendors to provide rides to the members." It further provides that the "[s]ervices performed under this Agreement are for Limosys to allow CTG as vendor to have access to its members that are part of the Network."

According to Plaintiff's complaint, Defendants have "hijacked [*4] the proprietary and customer information belonging to CTG in order to set up a competing business and steal CTG's customers and business" (Complaint, Paragraph 1). Plaintiff further alleges that, in connection with the parties' agreement, Plaintiff allowed Defendants to access, through an Application Programming Interface, [*3] its trade secrets such as client price structures, affiliate payment structures, and CTG infrastructure. And that Defendants used this information to unfairly compete against it.

Previously, on or about October 23, 2017, Defendants moved to dismiss Plaintiff's complaint on the basis that the parties' actual agreements and related documents refuted Plaintiff's claims. It is Defendants' position that Plaintiff has commenced this lawsuit in bad faith in an effort to wrongfully restrain potential competition and preserve its semi-monopoly on the Transit Authority's Access-A-Ride services.

By Decision and Order dated March 22, 2018, this Court granted Defendants' motion to the extent that all claims against Yehuda, the individual Defendant, were dismissed. Plaintiff's cause of action for tortious interference with prospective business advantage was also dismissed for failure [*5] to state a cause of action. The remainder of Defendants' motion to dismiss was denied without prejudice to renew.

Plaintiff's Motion to Amend

Now, Plaintiff moves to amend its complaint to add a claim under New York's antitrust law known as the Donnelly Act, add causes of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and prima facie tort, and to expand on its tortious interference with contract claim to include allegations that Limosys interfered with various affiliate contracts.

According to Plaintiff, the proposed amendments are necessitated by Limosys's recent attempts to drive CTG out of the transportation service industry by coercing CTG's affiliates to terminate their contracts with CTG else risk being denied access to Limosys's platform, which the proposed amended complaint alleges is the preeminent dispatch platform in the transportation service industry. Plaintiff contends that at least six "affiliates" have capitulated to Limosys's demands by terminating their contracts with CTG. It is Plaintiff's position that Limosys's conduct amounts to an unlawful restraint on trade in violation of the Donnelly Act and also satisfies the elements for tortious interference [*6] with contract and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. In addition, Plaintiff argues that to the extent that the aforementioned conduct was not motivated by a desire to decrease competition and increase revenue, that Limosys was motivated by greed or malice and that such conduct states an action sounding in prima facie tort.

In opposition, Limosys argues that Plaintiff's proposed amendments contradict its original complaint and thus establish the general falsity of Plaintiff's claims. According to Limosys, Plaintiff's allegations of Limosys's anticompetitive conduct are patently false, but even if same were presumed to be true, the alleged anticompetitive conduct has no significant impact on either the market or CTG. Limosys submits that its documentary evidence shows that (1) Limosys has less than [*4] 250 car services using its Limosys network but that there are over 900 TLC-licensed for-hire vehicle services; (2) in 2015, CTG had a sizable percentage of Access-A-Ride trips but not the overwhelming share, indicating that the market remains adequately serviced even if Limosys chooses not to deal with CTG; and, (3) CTG only used Limosys's network car services for [*7] 1% of its Access-A-Ride trips thereby undermining its claim that not having access to Limosys's platform significantly impacts its business or Access-A-Ride users in general.

Limosys further argues that Plaintiff's proposed amendments regarding tortious interference with contract and prima facie tort fail to state a cause of action because these claims require allegations of malice yet, according to Plaintiff's own allegations, Limosys is its competitor which indicates that Limosys is motivated by economic considerations, not malice. Further, Limosys argues that Plaintiff's proposed amendment to add a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing should be disallowed because the 2016 Vendor's Agreement contains no restrictions on competition or the use of information despite Plaintiff's attempts to include such restrictions when the parties were negotiating the agreement. And that, as such, Plaintiff cannot attempt to impose restrictions that were never included in the agreement by way of this cause of action.

In reply, Plaintiff contends that it has made out a claim under the Donnelly Act insofar as Plaintiff has pled that Limosys conspired to prevent CTG from [*8] doing business with the pool of available affiliate black car services that CTG needs to complete reservations to its customers, including under the Access-a-Ride program, thereby stifling competition in the transportation services industry and causing prices to increase. Plaintiff also argues that its claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is not precluded because prohibiting parties from undercutting contracts with third parties necessary to reap the fruits of the subject contract is a term that any reasonable person would understand is included in the subject contract. Lastly, Plaintiff contends that it has properly plead a cause of action for prima facie tort because, contrary to Limosys's argument, there is nothing preventing competitors from acting maliciously towards each other and that, in any case, Plaintiff should be allowed to plead an alternative theory of liability.

Discussion Motion to Amend

It is well established that motions for leave to amend pleadings should be freely granted, in the absence of prejudice or surprise to the opposing party, unless the proposed amendment is palpably insufficient or patently devoid of merit (Lucido v Mancuso, 49 AD3d 220, 227, 851 N.Y.S.2d 238 [24 Dept 2008]). [*9] The court will not examine the merits of the proposed amendment unless the insufficiency or lack of merit is clear and free from doubt (Norman v Ferrara, 107 AD2d 739, 740, 484 N.Y.S.2d 600 [2d Dept 1985]). In cases where the proposed amendment is palpably insufficient as a matter of law or is totally devoid of merit, leave should be denied (Id.). Here, Plaintiff's proposed amendments [*5] regarding a Donnelly Act violation and prima facie tort are insufficient as a matter of law and thus, Plaintiff's motion to amend must be denied as to those claims. The remainder of Plaintiff's motion to amend is granted.

New York's antitrust act, the Donnelly Act, states: "Every contract, agreement, arrangement or combination whereby...[a] monopoly in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state, is or may be established or maintained, or whereby...[c]ompetition or the free exercise of any activity in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state is or may be restrained...is hereby declared to be against public policy, illegal and void" (GBL § 340[1]). "The principle thrust of antitrust laws is to regulate relations between competitors who, by combining or conspiring, impair competition [*10] in the marketplace" ([Matter of Encore College Bookstore, Inc. v City University of New York, 2008 NY Misc. LEXIS 9889, \*23 \[Sup Ct, New York Cty 2008\]](#)). "The principal wrongs regulated by antitrust laws is price fixing or dividing markets between competitors" (Id.). "Courts have recognized the right of a company 'to select a person with whom it does business and to refuse to deal or continue to deal with anyone for reasons sufficient to itself'" ([Lopresti v Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., 5 Misc 3d 1006\[A\], 798 N.Y.S.2d 710, 2004 NY Slip Op 51223\[U\] at \*3 \[Sup et, Kings Cty 2004\]](#)). "A single concern may choose who it wishes to deal with as long as its decision is not the result of a combination with others to destroy competition so far as the whole relevant product market is concerned" (Id.).

"A party asserting a violation of the Donnelly Act is required to (1) identify the relevant product market; (2) describe the nature and effects of the purported conspiracy; (3) allege how the economic impact of that conspiracy is to restrain trade in the market in question; and (4) show a conspiracy or reciprocal relationship between two or more entities...." ([Newsday, Inc. v Fantastic Mind. Inc., 237 AD2d 497, 497, 655 N.Y.S.2d 583 \[2d Dept 1997\]](#)).

In this case, Plaintiff has failed to plead a Donnelly Act violation. Assuming the truth of Plaintiff's allegations that Limosys is using its valuable dispatch platform, specifically access thereto, to coerce at least six of Plaintiff's affiliates to discontinue their relationship [*11] with Plaintiff, these allegations do not demonstrate a conspiracy or reciprocal relationship between two or more entities for the purpose of destroying competition in the relevant product market. Secondly, Plaintiff's allegation that Limosys's coercion will result in decreased competition and artificially inflated prices in the transportation services industry is wholly conclusory. There is no allegation regarding how access to Limosys's dispatch platform even impacts the relevant market. Thirdly, to the extent that Limosys's alleged coercive conduct is tortious, Plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law by way of its other causes of action. Thus, Plaintiff's motion to amend its complaint to include a violation of the Donnelly Act must be denied.

[**6] With regards to Plaintiff's proposed amendment to include a cause of action for prima facie tort, Plaintiff must plead : (1) the intentional infliction of harm, (2) which results in special damages, (3) without any excuse or justification, (4) by an act or a series of acts which would otherwise be lawful (see [Epifani v Johnson, 65 AD3d 224, 232, 882 N.Y.S.2d 234 \[2d Dept 2009\]](#)). To assert a claim for prima facie tort, the plaintiff must allege that disinterested malevolence was the sole motivation for the conduct [*12] complained of ([Shaw v Club Mgrs. Assn. of Am., Inc., 84 AD3d 928, 930, 923 N.Y.S.2d 127 \[2d Dept 2011\]](#) [emphasis added]). A mere conclusory statement of malice does not suffice (see [Penn-Ohio Steel Corp. v Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., 15 Misc. 2d 752, 754, 183 N.Y.S.2d 40 \[Sup Ct, New York Cty 1958\]](#)). Plaintiff's cannot use prima facie tort as a "catch-all" under which they merely reiterate allegations asserted under several of the previously-asserted causes of action ([Gertler v Goodgold, 107 AD2d 481, 490, 487 N.Y.S.2d 565 \[1st Dept 1985\]](#)).

Here, Plaintiff's claim that Limosys was motivated by malice is conclusory and, further, undermined by its other factual allegations asserting that Limosys is motivated by economic self-interest insofar as it is trying to compete with Plaintiff. Accordingly, Plaintiff's motion to amend its complaint to include a cause of action for prima facie tort must be denied,

The remainder of Plaintiff's motion to amend is granted.

Limosys's Motion to Renew and Reargue

Limosys cross-moves to renew and reargue its prior motion to dismiss Plaintiff's complaint for failure to state a cause of action and/or based upon the documentary evidence, and upon renewal and reargument, seeks an order dismissing Plaintiffs' remaining causes of action.

In support of its motion to renew, Limosys states that it has discovered a federal court action involving CTG wherein CTG disclosed the identities of its independent contractor car services as well as [*13] its driver compensation without any attempts to seal the record which refutes its claim here that its drivers' identities and compensation are trade secrets and that, accordingly, Plaintiff's cause of action for misappropriation of trade secrets must be dismissed. Limosys also argues that Plaintiff's proposed amended complaint is another basis to renew its motion to dismiss Plaintiff's claim for misappropriation of trade secrets because Plaintiff's new allegation that Limosys's network is so extensive that it is "the predominate platform used by car fleets" undermines its claim that Limosys is making use of CTG's "internal logistical and operational procedures" or the identities of CTG's drivers. Further, Limosys states that, based on the MIA's response to Limosys's FOIL request, Plaintiff's contract with the MTA will be produced which undermines any claim by Plaintiff that its contract with MTA constitutes a trade secret.

[**7] Secondly, Limosys states that it has recently discovered MTA's project announcement regarding the e-hail project that Limosys was invited to participate in, which reflects that the project was the first of its kind. Based upon the announcement, Limosys seeks renewal [*14] of its motion to dismiss Plaintiff's claim for fraudulent inducement arguing that Limosys could not have misrepresented an intent not to perform services for MTA since the e-hail project did not even exist at the time that Limosys allegedly misrepresented its intention not to compete with Plaintiff.

In addition to renewal, Limosys argues that the Court should grant reargument of its previous motion to dismiss because, although untimely, the Court may nevertheless exercise its discretion and consider the motion since paring down Plaintiff's allegations will promote judicial economy by reducing the number of issues to be litigated. Moreover, if Plaintiff is allowed to amend its complaint, Limosys submits that its motion to reargue would no longer be untimely.

According to Limosys, reargument is warranted because the instant lawsuit is Plaintiff's attempt to restrict competition and maintain its semi-monopoly on the Access-A-Ride business. Limosys argues that a telephone recording of CTG's principal, Eduard Slinin, reveals that CTG is concerned only with safeguarding its $20 million Access-A-Ride account. Moreover, Limosys contends that the parties' agreements, including the prior draft [*15] of the 2016 Vendor's Agreement, establishes that the parties never agreed to any confidentiality or non-compete commitment, as alleged herein by Plaintiff, and that Plaintiff's efforts to impose those obligations despite the parties' agreement to exclude them, by way of the instant lawsuit, should be dismissed.

Specifically, Limosys argues that Plaintiff's cause of action for misappropriation of trade secrets is unsustainable because what Plaintiff purports to be "trade secrets" are not, in fact, secret since the information is either public record or has been disclosed by Plaintiff in other lawsuits. Limosys contends that CTG's list of providers or affiliates is public and can be found through the Taxi and Limousine Commission, that CTG's MTA Access-A-Ride contract is subject to FOIL disclosure, and that the identities of CTG's drivers and their compensation was disclosed in a federal class action lawsuit with no attempts to seal the record. Further, that CTG's only other claimed "trade secret," called "internal logistical and operational procedures," is not only vague but untrue since Limosys was never given access to CTG's internal systems, and also meaningless since CTG now alleges [*16] that Limosys's software is the "predominate platform used by car fleets."

Secondly, Limosys argues that Plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with the MTA contract should be dismissed because Plaintiff fails to plead what portion of the MTA contract was supposedly breached, and that Plaintiff similarly fails to plead what contract provision was breached with regards to its new proposed amendment alleging tortious interference with its affiliate contracts.

[**8] Third, Limosys contends that Plaintiff's breach of contract claim is unsustainable because the 2016 Vendor's Agreement contains a merger clause and therefore supersedes the 2014 Confidentiality Agreement rendering the 2014 Confidentiality Agreement a nullity. Even if the 2014 Confidentiality Agreement was in effect, Limosys contends that said agreement does not contain a restriction on competition. Moreover, that as evidenced by a redline draft of the 2016 Vendor's Agreement, Plaintiff attempted to have restrictive language included in the agreement which would have prohibited Limosys from competing but Plaintiff's proposed restrictions were rejected by Limosys and are thus not reflected in the 2016 Vendor's Agreement.

Lastly, [*17] Limosys argues that Plaintiff's claim for unjust enrichment should have been dismissed because it is duplicative of Plaintiff's breach of contract and other tort claims.

In opposition, Plaintiff argues that Limosys has not met the requirements to either renew or reargue its dismissal motion because Limosys fails to provide a reasonable justification for not providing the "new" evidence previously and further fails to point to any matter of fact or law that the Court supposedly overlooked when rendering its decision. Also, Plaintiff contends that Limosys fails to provide good cause why the Court should consider its untimely reargument motion.

In the event the Court considers Limosys's motion, Plaintiff argues that the Court properly denied Limosys's prior motion to dismiss. Plaintiff contends that its claim for misappropriation of trade secrets is sufficiently plead, that its customer list has been cultivated over decades and cannot be easily ascertained by outside sources, and that its misappropriation claim is premised on the fact that Limosys had access to CTG's entire business model, including its customers, affiliates, and its pricing, and that Limosys used this information to compete [*18] with CTG despite its express representations that it would not do so. Further, that Limosys asks the Court to believe on a motion to dismiss that Limosys relationship with MTA was "fortuitous," but given that no discovery has taken place, Plaintiff has had no opportunity to delve into the nature, timing and content of these communications and meetings.

Discussion Motion to Renew and Reargue

A motion for leave to renew shall be based upon new facts not offered on the prior motion that would change the prior determination and shall contain reasonable justification for the failure to present such facts on the prior motion ([CPLR 2221\[e\]\[2\]](#), [3]; Matter of Osorio v Motor Veh. Acc. Indem. Corp., 112 AD3d 831, 832, 977 N.Y.S.2d 663 /2d Dept 2013). "The requirement that a motion for renewal be based on new facts is a flexible one, and it is within the court's discretion to grant renewal upon facts known to the moving party at the time of the original motion if the movant offers a reasonable excuse for the failure to present those facts on the prior motion" (Id. at 832-33 [citations omitted]).

[**9] "Motions for reargument are addressed to the sound discretion of the court which decided the prior motion and may be granted upon a showing that the court overlooked or misapprehended the facts or law or for some other reason mistakenly [*19] arrived at its earlier decision" (Barnett v Smith, 64 AD3d 669, 670-71, 883 N.Y.S.2d 573 /2d Dept 2009; see [CPLR 2221\[d\]](#)). "[R]egardless of statutory time limits concerning motions to reargue, every court retains continuing jurisdiction to reconsider its prior interlocutory orders during the pendency of the action" (In re Estate of Burns, 228 AD2d 674, 675, 646 N.Y.S.2d 18 /2d Dept 1996).

Here, the Court finds that renewal must be granted. The new factual allegations contained in Plaintiff's amended complaint provide sufficient grounds for renewal as does Limosys's recent discovery of information disclosed by CTG in other litigation that CTG is involved in. The Court also, in its discretion, grants Limosys reargument of its previous motion to dismiss.

Upon renewal and reargument, this Court reverses and finds that Limosys established its entitlement to dismissal of Plaintiff's claims for misappropriation of trade secrets, fraudulent inducement and fraud but adheres to its prior determination with regards to Plaintiff's causes of action for tortious interference with contract and breach of contract. There is no cause of action for unjust enrichment plead in Plaintiff's amended complaint. Thus, Limosys's argument seeking dismissal of said claim is deemed moot.

The Court begins with the principle that the standard for a motion to dismiss [*20] is that "the court must determine, accepting as true the factual averments of the complaint and according the plaintiff the benefit of all favorable inferences, whether the plaintiff can succeed upon any reasonable view of the facts as stated" (Manfro v McGivney, 11 AD3d 662, 663, 783 N.Y.S.2d 288 /2d Dept 2004 [internal quotations omitted]). For a plaintiff to survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action, the factual allegations in the claim cannot be vague, conclusory or speculative in nature (see Stoianoff v Gahona, 248 AD2d 525, 526, 670 N.Y.S.2d 204 [2d Dept 1998]).

Residents for More Beautiful Port Washington, Inc. v North Hempstead, 153 AD2d 727, 729, 545 N.Y.S.2d 303 [2d Dept 1989].

"To prevail on a claim for misappropriation of trade secrets, a plaintiff must demonstrate: '(1) that it possessed a trade secret, and (2) that the defendants used that trade secret in breach of an agreement, confidential relationship or duty, or as a result of discovery by improper means' ([Schroeder v Pinterest Inc., 133 AD3d 12, 27, 17 N.Y.S.3d 678 \[1st Dept 2015\]](#)). A trade secret is "any formula, pattern, device or compilation of information which is used in one's business, and which gives him an opportunity to obtain an advantage over competitors who do not know or use it" ([Ashland Mgmt. Inc. v Janien, 82 NY2d 395, 407-08, 624 N.E.2d 1007, 604 N.Y.S.2d 912 \[1993\]](#)).

[**10] "An essential prerequisite to legal protection against the misappropriation of a trade secret is the element of secrecy" ([Tri-Star Light. Corp. v Goldstein, 151 AD3d 1102, 1106, 58 N.Y.S.3d 448 \[2d Dept 2017\]](#)). Generally, where customer information is readily ascertainable outside the plaintiff's business, [*21] trade secret protection will not attach to such information (see [Leo Silfen, Inc. v Cream, 29 NY2d 387, 392, 278 N.E.2d 636, 328 N.Y.S.2d 423 \[Ct App 1972\]](#)). "Conversely, where the customers are not known in the trade or are discoverable only by extraordinary efforts courts have not hesitated to protect customer lists and files as trade secrets" (Id.).

Here, Plaintiff seeks trade secret protection for its customer and affiliate list as well as its pricing, but fails to allege what measures Plaintiff has employed to keep said information confidential (see [Precision Concepts, Inc. v Bonsanti, 172 A.D.2d 737, 569 NYS2d 124, 125-26 \[2d Dept 1991\]](#)). Moreover, Plaintiff fails to dispute Limosys's assertion that such information is a matter of public record and that Plaintiff has also freely disclosed said information in other litigation. The complaint also fails to explain how Limosys's alleged use of CTG's information provides Limosys an advantage over its competitors that it did not have previously. With regards to Plaintiff's claim that its trade secrets also pertain to its "internal logistical and operational procedures," this claim is too conclusory, especially given the foregoing. Accordingly, Plaintiff's cause of action for misappropriation of trade secrets must be dismissed.

Having found that Plaintiff has inadequately plead the existence of any trade secrets, [*22] it is clear that Plaintiff's causes of action for fraudulent inducement and fraud fail to state a cause of action. "To allege a cause of action based on fraud, plaintiff must assert 'a misrepresentation or a material omission of fact which was false and known to be false by defendant, made for the purpose of inducing the other party to rely upon it, justifiable reliance of the other party on the misrepresentation or material omission, and injury'" ([Connaughton v Chipotle Mexican Grill, Inc., 29 NY3d 137, 142, 53 N.Y.S.3d 598, 75 N.E.3d 1159 \[Ct App 2017\]](#)). "The true measure of damage is indemnity for the actual pecuniary loss sustained as the direct result of the wrong or what is known as the 'out-of-pocket' rule ([Lama Holding Co. v Smith Barney Inc., 88 NY2d 413, 421, 668 N.E.2d 1370, 646 N.Y.S.2d 76 \[Ct App 1996\]](#) [citations omitted]). "Under this rule, the loss is computed by ascertaining the difference between the value of the bargain which a plaintiff was induced by fraud to make and the amount or value of the consideration exacted as the price of the bargain" (Id.). "If the fraud causes no loss, then the plaintiff has suffered no damages" ([Sager v Friedman, 270 NY 472, 481, 1 N.E.2d 971 \[Ct App 1936\]](#)).

Here, Plaintiff alleges that Yehuda, on behalf of Limosys, represented that Limosys would not perform the same services or similar to those described in the 2016 Vendor's Agreement for any business entities involved in the business of CTG. Plaintiff [*23] further alleges this representation was of "material importance to CTG who would not otherwise have agreed to provide Limosys access to CTG's confidential and proprietary information and trade secrets, including its customer and [**11] Affiliates lists" and that "CTG relied on this representation when making its decision to enter into the Limosys Agreement."

According to Plaintiff's allegations, the direct result of Limosys's misrepresentation is the fact that CTG entered into the 2016 Vendor's Agreement with Limosys. But Plaintiff does not allege that it has suffered any pecuniary loss as a result of having entered into said agreement. In fact, there is nothing in the record to indicate anything other than a financial gain (for both sides) as a direct result of the 2016 Vendor's Agreement. The only "loss" alleged by Plaintiff is that Limosys had access to its trade secrets as a result of the parties' relationship and used such information to compete with it. However, even if true, loss profits are not recoverable under a fraud theory (see MTI/The Image Group, Inc. v Fox Studios East, Inc., 262 AD2d 20, 22, 690 N.Y.S.2d 576 [1st Dept 1999]) and, in any case, Plaintiff has failed to sufficiently allege the existence of any trade secrets. Plaintiff's causes of action for fraud and fraudulent [*24] inducement must therefore be dismissed.

With regards to Plaintiff's claims sounding in breach of contract and tortious interference with contract, said claims are sufficiently plead in Plaintiff's amended complaint. Limosys's arguments for dismissal are more appropriate at the summary judgment stage.

Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, it is hereby ORDERED that Plaintiff's motion to amend its complaint is granted to the extent granted herein but otherwise denied; and it is further ORDERED that Limosys's motion to renew and reargue this Court's Decision dated March 20, 2013 is granted and, upon renewal and reargument, the Court hereby grants Limosys's motion to dismiss to the extent that Plaintiff's causes of action for misappropriation of trade secrets, fraud - and fraudulent inducement are dismissed but that Limosys's motion to dismiss is otherwise denied.

This constitutes the Decision and Order of the Court.

Opinion

[Docket Nos 72, 74, 75]

BUMB, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE:

In a previous Opinion and Order, this Court extensively discussed the multitude of pleading deficiencies contained in Plaintiff's Amended Complaint. See 8600 Landis, LLC v. City of Sea Isle City, No. CV 17-2234 \(RMB/JS\), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, 2018 WL 1509088 \(D.N.J. Mar. 27, 2018\). Nonetheless, the Court allowed Plaintiff an opportunity to amend its Amended Complaint in an attempt to cure, if possible, the deficiencies identified. See [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, \[WL\] at \*14](#). Plaintiff did amend, and all Defendants presently move to dismiss the claims asserted in the Second Amended Complaint, asserting that Plaintiff's attempt to put more factual meat [*2] on the bones of its pleading still falls short of stating a plausible claim for relief.<sup>1</sup>

The Court stated in its previous opinion that "if upon an appropriate motion the Court determines that the [Second] Amended Complaint fails to state a federal claim, the Court intends to decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over this suit pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1337\(c\)\(3\)." 8600 Landis, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, 2018 WL 1509088 at \*14. The Court now holds that the Second Amended Complaint fails to plausibly plead sufficient facts in support of any federal claim. Accordingly, Defendants' Motions to Dismiss will be granted as to the federal claims and the Court will decline supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims.<sup>2</sup>

I. FACTS

As the Second Amended Complaint merely adds additional details and context to the factual allegations contained in the Amended Complaint, the Court will primarily rely on its recitation of the alleged facts in its previous opinion. See 8600 Landis, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, 2018 WL 1509088 at \*1-2. Generally and succinctly, this is a local land-use and zoning dispute; a dispute Plaintiff had adjudicated in its favor in state court but which Plaintiff seeks to continue before this Court under various federal and state causes of action. Plaintiff's theory of its case is that Defendant Desiderio, [*3] who is a member of Sea Isle City's planning board, as well as a local business owner and the Mayor of Sea Isle City, sought to illegally "damage and delay" Plaintiff's development of a 13-unit residential rental and restaurant space allegedly with the motive of eliminating Plaintiff as a competitor in the market for restaurant and hospitality services. (Opposition Brief, Dkt 77, p. 4) The other individual Defendants, allegedly at Defendant Desiderio's direction and/or in conspiracy with him, assisted, or attempted to assist, Desiderio in his alleged plan to keep his alleged competitor out of the market. (Id.)

The Second Amended Complaint asserts the following federal claims: violation of Plaintiff's substantive due process and equal protection rights under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, conspiracy under § 1983 and 42 U.S.C. § 1985, and violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.<sup>3</sup>

II. MOTION TO DISMISS STANDARD

The Court incorporates herein by reference, and applies, the legal standard as set forth in its previous opinion in this case. See 8600 Landis, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, 2018 WL 1509088 at \*3.

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff states that it has "removed" from the Second Amended Complaint its previous claims for: (a) unfair competition, (b) abuse of process, (c) negligence, and (d) its claim for punitive damages against the City of Sea Isle City. (Opposition Brief, Dkt 77, p. 1) Although the Court previously directed that "[i]f Plaintiff decides that it no longer wishes to pursue . . . any . . . claims presently asserted in the Amended Complaint, it shall file the appropriate Notice of Voluntary Dismissal or Stipulation of Dismissal," 8600 Landis, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, 2018 WL 1509088 at \*14 n.23, no notice or stipulation has been filed on the Court's docket. In light of the Court's directive, combined with Plaintiff's statement in its brief, the Court construes Plaintiff's inaction as a concession that the pleading deficiencies identified with respect to these claims cannot be cured, and these claims will be dismissed with prejudice. See Duke University v. Apotex, Inc., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64973, 2015 WL 2383408 at \*2 \(M.D.N.C. 2015\) ("the Court has the discretion to impose conditions on a grant of leave to amend (such as deeming eliminated claims dismissed with prejudice)[.]").

<sup>2</sup> In light of the disposition of the motions filed by the Sea Isle Defendants and Defendant Baldini, the Court need not reach the issues raised by the Restaurant Defendants' Motion to Dismiss which do not relate to the merits of the federal claims.

<sup>3</sup> For completeness, the state law claims are: violation of the New Jersey Civil Rights Act, tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, common law conspiracy, and violations of the New Jersey Antitrust Act. However, as stated above, the Court does not rule on these claims.

III. ANALYSIS

A. Substantive due process

As discussed in the previous Opinion, the issue is whether Plaintiff has plausibly pled facts supporting a conclusion that Defendant Desiderio and others engaged in the type [*4] of egregious self-dealing that shocks the judicial conscience. 8600 Landis, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, 2018 WL 1509088 at \*4.<sup>4</sup> "[T]he standard is sufficiently high to 'avoid converting federal courts into super zoning tribunals.'" Selig v. N. Whitehall Twp. Zoning Hearing Bd., 653 F. App'x 155, 157 \(3d Cir. 2016\) (quoting Eichenlaub v. Twp. of Indiana, 385 F.3d 274, 285 \(3d Cir. 2004\), and citing United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. v. Twp. of Warrington, 316 F.3d 392, 402 \(3d Cir. 2003\)). Moreover, in the land-use context, the Third Circuit has cautioned that "not . . . every violation of state law [should be] 'constitutionalized' through the application of the substantive due process clause, and [] District Court[s] [should be] properly concerned with preventing this provision from turning into a broad authorization to review state actors' compliance with state law." Whittaker v. County of Lawrence, 437 F. App'x 105 \(3d Cir. 2011\).<sup>5</sup>

With this legal foundation in mind, the Court turns to the factual allegations of the Second Amended Complaint. As stated in the previous Opinion, the Court's focus is on the facts-- not bald assertions, conclusions or mere labels.<sup>6</sup> Plaintiff alleges that Defendant Desiderio, at all relevant times, "owned" Kix McNutley's and Sea Isle Inn, both of which are located at 6400 Landis Avenue in Sea Isle City. (Second Amend. Compl., "S.A.C.," ¶¶ 16, 20-21) Defendant Desiderio allegedly holds a liquor license that is associated with one, or both, of those establishments. (S.A.C. ¶ 25-26) Plaintiff allegedly also holds [*5] a liquor license<sup>7</sup> and allegedly, it was for this reason that on May 10, 2010 Defendant Desiderio recused himself from the consideration of, and abstained from the vote on, Plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest's zoning application. (Id. 1 26) Notably, every other Board Member in attendance at the meeting --seven members total, excluding Defendant Desiderio-- voted in favor of Plaintiff's application, and it was approved. (Id. Ex. D)

<sup>4</sup> The parties do not dispute that Plaintiff has a property interest that is protected by the Due Process Clause.

<sup>5</sup> See also United Artists, 316 F.3d at 402 ("every appeal by a disappointed developer from an adverse ruling of the local planning board involves some claim of abuse of legal authority, but it is not enough simply to give these state law claims constitutional labels such as 'due process' or 'equal protection' in order to raise a substantial federal question under section 1983. Land-use decisions are matters of local concern, and such disputes should not be transformed into substantive due process claims based only on allegations that government officials acted with 'improper' motives."); Whittaker, 437 F. App'x at 109 ("the Property Owners simply allege that the defendants did not follow state law in taking their property. While this certainly is not conduct without a remedy, the remedy is not provided by the Federal Constitution's substantive due process clause. For this reason, we will affirm the District Court's dismissal of the substantive due process claim."); Blain v. Twp. of Radnor, 167 F. App'x 330, 333 \(3d Cir. 2006\) ("Th[e] [shocks the conscience] standard's stringency reflects maintenance of the proper proportions of constitutional, as opposed to ordinary tort, violations."); Maple Properties, Inc. v. Twp. of Upper Providence, 151 F. App'x 174, 180 \(3d Cir. 2005\) ("we have previously recognized that the politics and animosities that often animate local decision-making are not matters of constitutional concern."); see generally, City of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 863-64, 118 S. Ct. 1708, 140 L. Ed. 2d 1043 \(1998\) (rejecting a constitutional standard that "would make the Fourteenth Amendment a font of tort law to be superimposed upon whatever systems may already be administered by the States").

<sup>6</sup> This principle is particularly important in the substantive due process analysis where "[w]hat is [conscience] shocking depends on the factual context." Selig, 653 F. App'x at 157 (citing United Artists). Therefore, Plaintiff's explanation in its opposition brief that the Second Amended Complaint "includes allegations of self-dealing, where public officials took advantage of their positions to benefit themselves and stifle competition to their personal businesses" (Opposition Brief, Dkt 77, p. 24), does little to advance the legal analysis.

Nonetheless, Plaintiff alleges in conclusory fashion that after the Board Meeting, Defendant Desiderio "stayed involved" "behind the scenes" to "undermin[e] Plaintiff's project." (S.A.C. ¶¶ 27, 44) Only two examples are alleged, one rather conclusorily, and one undermined by the exhibits Plaintiff attaches to the Second Amended Complaint. The actions alleged are: (a) Defendant "had" two unidentified "business owners" "approach . . . a representative of Plaintiff to say that if Plaintiff sold their [sic] units instead of renting them, their [sic] problems would go away"<sup>8</sup>; and (b) twice "received correspondence [from Desiderio despite his purported recusal and abstention] relating to Plaintiff's project." (S.A.C. ¶¶ 28, 49) The "correspondence"-- attached [*6] as Exhibits H and N to the Second Amended Complaint-- merely reveals that Defendant Desiderio was one of many other town officials carbon-copied on the two letters concerning the progress of Plaintiff's project. Defendant Desiderio allegedly was motivated to take these actions by a desire to indirectly benefit Kix McNutley's and Sea Isle Inn, through alleged decreased competition from Plaintiff's project once it opened. (S.A.C. ¶ 27, 49, 61) In conclusory fashion, Plaintiff also alleges that Defendant Desiderio "directed" unspecified conduct of the other Sea Isle City Defendants, without specifying which Defendants. (S.A.C. ¶¶ 5, 61, 90, 100)

The Second Amended Complaint further alleges that Defendant Byrne, the Zoning Officer who issued the Stop Work Order, is also a bartender at Kix McNutley's. (S.A.C. ¶¶ 3, 88) While bartending one night, Defendant Byrne allegedly told "a representative of Plaintiff" that with regard to Plaintiff's project, Byrne "was acting on orders from" Defendant Desiderio. (S.A.C. ¶ 89)<sup>9</sup>

According to Plaintiff, these allegations support a conclusion that Defendants Desiderio and Byrne engaged in self-dealing, and Plaintiff asserts, [*7] Eichenlaub states that self-dealing meets the shocks the conscience standard. See 385 F.3d at 286 ("as counsel for appellants acknowledged during oral argument, there is no allegation of corruption or self-dealing here."). A comprehensive reading of Eichenlaub and the cases discussed therein, however, demonstrates that the allegations of the Second Amended Complaint are not sufficiently egregious to support a substantive due process claim. Rather, the allegations concern a vigorously contested local land use dispute, one which a state court judge has already adjudicated in part. Thus, this Court will avoid becoming a "super zoning tribunal[]." Selig, 653 F. App'x at 157 (internal citation and quotation omitted).

Eichenlaub provides two "illustrat[ions] [of] the kinds of gross misconduct that have shocked the judicial conscience." 385 F.3d at 285. First, Conroe Creosoting Co. v. Montgomery County, 249 F.3d 337 \(5th Cir. 2001\), as explained by the Third Circuit in Eichenlaub,<sup>10</sup> involved allegations that the defendants "fraudulently converted a tax levy for a $75,000 deficiency into an unauthorized seizure and forced sale and destruction of an $800,000 ongoing business." 385 F.3d at 285. The Third Circuit explained that, in addition to what "amounted to a claim of an unconstitutional taking," the facts also "carried a whiff of [*8] self-dealing" insofar as the principal defendant's friends allegedly helped accomplish the taking by performing the auction services. Id. Also in Conroe, one of the defendants was alleged to have "signed a false affidavit in support of a tax warrant" in furtherance of the taking. 249 F.3d at 342.

<sup>8</sup> It is not clear whether this incident occurred before or after Defendant Zoning Officer Cornelius Byrne allegedly "refused to issue the necessary permits for the first floor restaurant space" of Plaintiff's project. (S.A.C. ¶ 47) If it occurred before, the Second Amended Complaint is not clear as to what "problem" there might have been at that time.

<sup>9</sup> The Second Amended Complaint is vague as to what Defendant Desiderio allegedly "ordered" Defendant Byrne to do. Notably, the Second Amended Complaint clearly pleads that Defendant Byrne issued the Stop Work Order after asking for, and receiving, Defendant Baldini's legal opinion on the matter. (S.A.C. ¶¶ 52-53) The Second Amended Complaint specifically alleges that "[a]s a result of Paul J. Baldini's improper legal opinion and in reliance on Baldini's conclusions, on September 23, 2015, Mr. Byrne improperly issued, by correspondence, a Stop Work Order to Plaintiff, which significantly delayed Plaintiff from finishing construction on the first floor restaurant space and caused substantial monetary damages." (S.A.C. ¶ 57; emphasis added); (see also S.A.C. ¶ 5, alleging that Defendants Byrne and Baldini "improperly revoked Plaintiff's approvals necessary to complete [its] project."). The Second Amended Complaint does not allege that Defendant Desiderio ordered Byrne to issue the Stop Work Order, nor does it allege that Defendant Desiderio had any involvement with the drafting of Defendant Baldini's legal opinion.

Second, in Eichenlaub the Third Circuit explained that "Associates in Obstetrics & Gynecology v. Upper Merion Township, 270 F.Supp.2d 633 (E.D. Pa. 2003)", is also a case that implicates more than just disagreement about conventional zoning or planning rules" because Associates in Obstetrics involved "allegations of hostility to constitutionally-protected activity," namely, the provision of abortion services. 385 F.3d at 285.

It is thus clear, after considering Eichenlaub's illustrations, that the factual allegations of the Second Amended Complaint do not amount to conscience shocking behavior by local zoning officials. First, both Conroe and Associates in Obstetrics involved allegations of an underlying violation of constitutional rights; a taking in Conroe, and the interference with access to abortion services in Associates in Obstetrics. In this case, no underlying constitutional violation is alleged.<sup>11</sup>

Second, while "[t]here may be zoning disputes [*9] where, in the absence of a separately protected constitutional right, allegations of personal and political animus sufficiently shock the conscience in order to state a due process claim," Tucker Industrial Liquid Coatings, Inc. v. Borough of East Berlin, 656 F. App'x 1, 7 (3d Cir. 2016) (emphasis added), this is not such a case. In this regard, Ecotone Farm, LLC v. Ward, 639 F. App'x 118 (3d Cir. 2016), provides a contrasting example.

In Ecotone, there was no allegation of interference with a separate constitutional right, yet the Third Circuit held that the plaintiff had stated a substantive due process claim. In that case, the plaintiff alleged a campaign by local officials of "harassment and obstructionism" "over the course of several years motivated by personal vendettas." 639 F. App'x at 126. The Court explained that the factual allegations supported a plausible conclusion that local officials "repeated[ly] abuse[d] government power with the deliberate aim of harming someone." Id.

In this case, Plaintiff does not allege a years long pattern of "corruption and repeated abuse of power," "motivated by personal vendettas," and done with the purpose to harass and injure, like that alleged in Ecotone. 639 F. App'x at 126. Nor does it allege fraudulent-- indeed, potentially criminal-- activity, like that alleged in Conroe. At most, a very generous reading of the Second Amended Complaint [*10] supports only the inference that Defendant Desiderio, and perhaps Defendant Byrne, attempted-- unsuccessfully-- to pressure Plaintiff to change its intended use of the 13 residential units it planned to build.<sup>12</sup> Perhaps it may be inferred from the facts of the Second Amended Complaint that Defendant Desiderio had an improper motive-- i.e., self-enrichment that might indirectly result from Plaintiff's change of plans-- however, the law has been clear since United Artists was decided 15 years ago that improper motive is not enough. See, e.g., Locust Valley Golf Club, Inc. v. Upper Saucon Twp., 391 F. App'x 195, 199-200 (3d Cir. 2010) (concluding that Plaintiff's evidence of "self-dealing" amounted to, "at worst . . . improper motives. Without more, improper motives do not shock the conscience as a matter of law."); see also,

<sup>11</sup> Plaintiff alleges an underlying violation of the Sherman Act, but Plaintiff's rights in that regard arise from federal statute, not the United States Constitution. Eichenlaub and subsequent cases are clear that the relevant inquiry is whether "local officials are accused of seeking to hamper development in order to interfere with otherwise constitutionally protected activity." 385 F.3d at 286 (emphasis added); Button v. Snelson, 679 F. App'x 150, 154 (3d Cir. 2017) (citing Eichenlaub); Selig, 653 F. App'x at 157 (quoting Eichenlaub); Perano v. Twp. of Tilden, 423 F. App'x 234, 238 (3d Cir. 2011) (observing that the local officials' acts in Eichenlaub "were not enough to shock the conscience when those actions were not coupled with interference with a constitutionally protected activity or ethnic bias."); Dotzel v. Ashbridge, 306 F. App'x 798, 801 (3d Cir. 2009) ("There is no evidence that the supervisors' conduct involved self-dealing or interfered with constitutionally protected activity."). In any event, as discussed infra, Plaintiff fails to state a claim for violation of the Sherman Act.

<sup>12</sup> Though not argued in its opposition briefs, Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint appears to suggest that Defendant Paul Baldini somehow acted ultra vires. In particular, the Second Amended Complaint alleges that "Sea Isle City specifically conceded in Court to Judge Mendez that Baldini, as Solicitor, had no legal right to set aside the Plaintiff's Planning Board approvals." (S.A.C. ¶ 56) First, the transcript of the hearing before Judge Mendez, attached as Exhibit S to the Second Amended Complaint, is somewhat equivocal, and it may not be fair to characterize what was said as a "specific[] conce[ssion]." (Id.) In any event, even if, as a legal matter, the City Solicitor lacks authority to "set aside" a zoning board approval or issue a Stop Work Order, this fact would not plausibly support a conclusion that Defendant Baldini acted egregiously as a matter of federal constitutional law because the Second Amended Complaint specifically pleads that Defendant Zoning Officer Byrne, rather than Defendant Baldini, issued the Stop Work Order. (S.A.C. ¶¶ 6, 57)

Giuliani v. Springfield Twp., 726 F. App'x 118, 123 (3d Cir. 2018) ("In United Artists, we applied Supreme Court precedent and rejected the improper-motive standard. We ruled that the substantive due process test is, instead, whether local officials' conduct shocks the conscience."); Chainey v. Street, 523 F.3d 200, 220 (3d Cir. 2008) ("merely alleging an improper motive is insufficient, even where the motive is unrelated to the merits of the underlying decision.") (citing United Artists).<sup>13</sup> Accordingly, the Sea Isle Defendants' and Defendant Baldini's Motions to Dismiss [*11] will be granted as to the substantive due process claim.

B. Equal protection

In the land use context, substantive due process claims are often accompanied by equal protection "class of one" claims. See, e.g., Tucker, 656 F. App'x at 7; Whittaker, 437 F. App'x at 109; Perano, 423 F. App'x at 238. As the cited cases demonstrate, the class of one claims usually fare no better than the due process claims. See also, Eichenlaub, 385 F.3d at 287 ("we do not view an equal protection claim as a device to dilute the stringent requirements needed to show a substantive due process claim. It may be very unlikely that a claim that fails the substantive due process test will survive under an equal protection approach.").<sup>14</sup> The same is true in this case.

In the previous opinion, the Court held that Plaintiff had not adequately identified the relevant comparator upon which its class of one claim is based. 8600 Landis, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, LLC, 2018 WL 1509088 at *5. In the Second Amended Complaint a proposed comparator is more specifically identified; Plaintiff alleges that "the Sea Isle Defendants have engaged in intentional and disparate treatment of Plaintiff compared to other similarly situated Sea Isle City R-2 classified rental properties without a rational basis." (S.A.C. P 133)

The Sea Isle Defendants argue, and this Court [*12] agrees, that the new proposed comparator does not save Plaintiff's equal protection claim. As the Sea Isle Defendants correctly observe, Plaintiff's case is based on the denial of permits and issuance of a Stop Work Order for the restaurant space. (S.A.C. ¶¶ 47, 57) The Second Amended Complaint specifically pleads that "[o]n April 8, 2015, Plaintiff was issued building permits for the thirteen (13) residential units only." (S.A.C. ¶¶ 46) When these allegations are read in context with the rest of the factual allegations of the Second Amended Complaint, the disconnect between the facts and Plaintiff's proposed comparator becomes apparent.

Plaintiff's alleged injuries flow from the denial of permits and the Stop Work Order as to the restaurant space, and Plaintiff alleges that in this regard it was treated differently than all other R-2 residential rental units in Sea Isle City, yet Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint also alleges that "the only [other] place with food, liquor, and lodging [all in one location] in between the city centers of Sea Isle City and Avalon" is "Kix McNutley's / Sea Isle Inn." (S.A.C. ¶¶ 2, 76) Thus, it must be the case that the vast majority of R-2 classified [*13] rental spaces did not even apply for, much less get denied or approved for, permits related to construction of restaurant / food service space, therefore, as a matter of logic, it cannot be that they are "alike in all relevant respects" to Plaintiff. 8600 Landis, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, 2018 WL 1509088 at *5.

Moreover, as the Sea Isle Defendants also correctly observe, on an even more basic level, "Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint fails to allege which of the[] 249 R-2 properties received building permits and how these building permits related to the proposed R-2 use." (Reply Brief, Dkt 85, p. 9) See generally, Freeman v. Town of Hudson, 714 F.3d 29, 38 (1st Cir. 2013) ("We have held that class-of-one claims require an extremely high degree of similarity between the plaintiffs and the persons to whom they compare themselves. In the land-use context, this means more than pointing to nearby parcels in a vacuum and leaving it to the municipality to disprove conclusory allegations that the owners of those parcels are similarly situated.").

<sup>13</sup> See also, Glob. Tower Assets, LLC v. Town of Rome, 810 F.3d 77, 91 (1st Cir. 2016) ("the Applicants' vague allegations of conflicts of interest and financially motivated conspiracy do not-- at least without far more-- show that the Planning Board acted in the kind of conscience-shocking fashion that we require for substantive due process challenges to make it past the gate.").

<sup>14</sup> See also, Highway Materials, Inc. v. Whitemarsh Twp., 386 F. App'x 251, 259 (3d Cir. 2010) (quoting Eichenlaub).

For these reasons, Plaintiff fails to plausibly plead an equal protection class of one claim, and the Sea Isle Defendants' and Defendant Baldini's Motions to Dismiss will be granted as to this claim.<sup>15</sup>

C. Conspiracy under 42 U.S.C. §§ 1983, 1985

Plaintiff has failed to state a claim for [*14] any constitutional violation. Accordingly, the conspiracy claims fail as well. Whittaker, 437 F. App'x at 109; Perano, 423 F. App'x at 239.

Alternatively, as the Court previously ruled, "as a matter of law, [a class of one equal protection claim] cannot serve as the basis for a § 1985(3) conspiracy claim." 8600 Landis, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, 2018 WL 1509088, at \*11 \(D.N.J. Mar. 27, 2018\) (collecting cases).

The Sea Isle Defendants' and Defendant Baldini's Motions to Dismiss will be granted as to the federal statutory conspiracy claims.

D. Sherman Act

Plaintiff's Sherman Act claim-- the last claim asserted in the eight-count Second Amended Complaint-- is based on the vague assertion that issuing the Stop Work Order and refusing to issue permits "produced adverse anticompetitive effects within the restaurant and hospitality industry and relevant markets." (S.A.C. ¶ 162)

The Court's previous Opinion discussed the various pleading deficiencies associated with this claim. The Second Amended Complaint does not adequately cure all of the deficiencies; the pleading fails to allege sufficient facts to support a plausible claim. Two examples of the remaining deficiencies will suffice.

First, nowhere does Plaintiff identify the "anticompetitive effects" it alleges occurred in the market. It is axiomatic that antitrust law serves to protect competition, [*15] not competitors. See NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 135, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1998\) (in a § 1 Sherman Act case, explaining that "the plaintiff here must allege and prove harm, not just to a single competitor, but to the competitive process, i.e., to competition itself."); Deutscher Tennis Bund v. ATP Tour, Inc., 610 F.3d 820, 829 \(3d Cir. 2010\) ("Because even beneficial legitimate contracts or combinations restrain trade to some degree, § 1 of the Sherman Act has long been interpreted to prohibit only those contracts or combinations that are 'unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions.'") (quoting Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 58, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619 \(1911\)). The Second Amended Complaint merely pleads that Plaintiff, an alleged competitor of Defendants Kix McNutley's and Sea Isle Inn, was harmed as a result of the alleged wrongful actions of Defendants. Such allegations are insufficient.

Second, the Court agrees with Defendant Baldini's observation that "Plaintiff [has] offered no explanation concerning the artificial 'geographic market' that it seemingly created at random." (Moving Brief, Dkt 87, p. 9) The Second Amended Complaint asserts that "the relevant geographic market for purposes of this matter are the town centers of Sea Isle City and Avalon." (S.A.C. ¶ 73) No further factual information is provided, and it is not at all apparent why a portion of Avalon-- a different [*16] municipality with its own ordinances concerning zoning and liquor licenses-- should be included in the relevant market, while a portion of Sea Isle City should be excluded from the relevant market.<sup>16</sup> Plaintiff has made no attempt to "define the relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand."<sup>16</sup> *8600 Landis, LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50003, 2018 WL 1509088 at *8* (quoting Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 446 (3d Cir. 1997)).

<sup>15</sup> In a letter filed with the Court long after briefing on the instant motions was completed (see Dkt 88), Plaintiff asserts additional facts which it says further support its equal protection claim. As an initial matter, as discussed during a telephone conference with the parties (Dkt 93), the Court does not construe Plaintiff's informal letter to be a formal motion to amend its complaint for a third time. Moreover, none of the facts alleged in the letter could potentially change the proposed comparator class, and therefore such facts, if they were to be considered-- which they are not-- would not change the Court's disposition of the equal protection claim.

Accordingly, the Court holds that the Second Amended Complaint fails to state a claim for violation of the Sherman Act. Defendants' Motions to Dismiss will be granted as to that claim.

IV. CONCLUSION

Plaintiff may, or may not, be entitled to a remedy under state law for the harm it alleges it suffered at the hands of local zoning officials. As set forth above, however, this local dispute does not rise to the level of a claim under the federal laws alleged. Thus, for the foregoing reasons, the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss will be granted as to all federal claims asserted in the Second Amended Complaint, and pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(3\) this Court will decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims. An appropriate Order accompanies this Opinion.

ORDER

This matter came before the Court upon Defendants' Motions to Dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) [Dkt Nos 72, 74, and 75].

For the reasons set forth in the accompanying Opinion of the same date,

IT IS on this 12th day of December 2018, hereby: ORDERED that:

- (1) Plaintiff's claims for (a) unfair competition; (b) abuse of process; (c) negligence; and (d) punitive damages against the City of Sea Isle City are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 41\(a\)\(2\); and
- (2) The Motion to Dismiss of Defendants City of Sea Isle City, Leonard Desiderio, George Savastano and Cornelius R. Byrne [Dkt No. 74] is GRANTED as to all federal claims asserted in the Second Amended Complaint; and
- (3) The Motion to Dismiss of Defendant Paul Baldini, Esq. [Dkt No. 75] is GRANTED as to all federal claims asserted in the Second Amended Complaint; and
- (4) The Motion to Dismiss of Defendants Kix McNutley's and Sea Isle Inn [Dkt No. 72] is GRANTED as to all federal claims asserted in the Second Amended Complaint; and
- (5) This Court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims, therefore remainder of this case is DISMISSED.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTION TO DISMISS

Re: Dkt. No. 39

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs Teradata Corporation, Teradata US, Inc., and Teradata Operations, Inc. (collectively "Teradata") assert five causes of action in the first amended complaint against defendants SAP SE, SAP America, Inc., and SAP Labs, LLC (collectively "SAP"). Teradata alleges that SAP disingenuously entered a joint venture with it to steal its trade secrets in the Enterprise Data Analytics and Warehousing ("EDAW") market and develop a competing product, misappropriating trade secrets, infringing Teradata's copyrights, and violating antitrust laws in the process. SAP moves to dismiss all these claims with prejudice. I agree with SAP that Teradata must describe its trade secrets with greater specificity to demonstrate that they are not generally known in the trade or by those who are skilled in the trade. None of SAP's other challenges to the pleadings has merit. For the reasons below, SAP's motion to dismiss is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. Teradata's first amended complaint is DISMISSED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND within ten days of the date of this Order.

BACKGROUND

Teradata and its subsidiaries [*3] conduct research, development, engineering, and other technical operations related to its EDAW products. See First Amended Complaint ("FAC") ¶¶ 4-6 (Dkt. No. 24). Its flagship product is Teradata Database, a relational database management system designed for EDAW. FAC ¶ 16. EDAW products provide centralized data storage collected from numerous sources across a business enterprise in its day-to-day operations to help large companies analyze their business operations. See id. Teradata was the first commercial EDAW vendor to utilize massively parallel processing ("MPP") through Teradata Database to execute high volumes of analytical queries on massive amounts of data for EDAW customers. FAC ¶ 17. Teradata Database accomplishes this feat by linear-performance scalability, meaning that it can accommodate a customer's analytical demands by adding parallel processors and data-storage devices as needed. FAC ¶ 18. Teradata released the first commercial system incorporating its MPP architecture in the early 1980s and has improved upon the technology since then, developing other technologies and trade secrets in the EDAW market. FAC ¶¶ 20-21.

SAP and its subsidiaries also work on research, development [*4] and engineering activities in the EDAW space. FAC ¶ 9. At the same time, SAP is the dominant provider in the separate market for Enterprise Resource Planning ("ERP") Applications, comprised of the world's most complex, large-scale business enterprises ("Top-Tier ERP Applications Market"). FAC ¶ 30. ERP Applications allow companies to manage data required to conduct their day-to-day operations across numerous aspects of the business enterprise and are typically designed around a relational transactional database that can ensure users have access to a uniform and current set of data. FAC ¶ 30. SAP also offers a Business Warehouse reporting tool ("SAP BW"), which allows ERP users to generate reports with their ERP-derived data. FAC ¶ 31. The Top-Tier ERP Applications Market that SAP services includes customers with millions of transactions or data-generating events daily, multiple business lines, diverse geographic operations, multiple sources of data, and revenues typically exceeding $1 billion. FAC ¶ 58.

In 2009, SAP and Teradata entered into a partnership referred to as the "Bridge Project" to combine SAP's ERP Applications and SAP BW tool interface with Teradata's MPP architecture [*5] that it uses in Teradata Database for EDAW. FAC ¶¶ 1, 31. Before the agreement was finalized the parties executed two mutual non-disclosure agreements restricting the use of confidential information outside evaluating the potential transaction. FAC ¶ 33. Eventually SAP and Teradata executed two more agreements to formalize the Bridge Project, the Software Development Cooperation Agreement ("SDCA") and the Technology Partner Agreement ("TPA"). Id. These agreements restricted disclosures of each parties' confidential information and prohibited reverse engineering while working to connect the SAP and Teradata software. Id. Teradata also provided SAP with access to its databases for Bridge Project purposes pursuant to its "standard end user license." FAC ¶ 36.

During the Bridge Project, SAP and Teradata jointly developed "Teradata Foundation" which enabled SAP's Top-Tier ERP Applications Market to use Teradata for the transactional database and data-analytics for EDAW activities. FAC ¶¶ 32, 37. The parties brought Teradata Foundation to market and installed Teradata Foundation on site for one major customer facility. FAC ¶ 37. However, while the Bridge Project was underway, SAP was developing [*6] a competing EDAW product called SAP HANA. FAC ¶ 38. At SAP's user conference in November 2010, the SAP Chief Technology Officer at the time, Dr. Vishal Sikka, announced SAP had begun shipping the SAP HANA product. FAC ¶ 39. At the next year's user conference, a SAP customer demonstrated a new product, HANA for SAP BW, described as incorporating a "massively parallel" database like the architecture used in Teradata Database. Id. By June 2011, SAP HANA was commercially available. Id.

After nearly three years in the Bridge Project, and two months after SAP HANA was made available, SAP unilaterally terminated the joint venture and stopped supporting, selling, and marketing Teradata Foundation. FAC ¶ 40. SAP positioned itself as a competitor to Teradata with the SAP HANA product offering to perform the same tasks as Teradata Foundation was intended to achieve. FAC ¶¶ 40, 42. SAP customers were still able to access the data created in their SAP ERP Applications by using Teradata EDAW products, but in February 2015 SAP launched its latest version of ERP Application, SAP S/4HANA, which was incompatible with other EDAW products besides HANA. FAC ¶¶ 77, 86. SAP then combined its ERP Application [*7] and EDAW products into a single sales offering and announced that it was ending support for prior versions of its ERP Applications by 2025 — an effort Teradata believes was intended to force customers to adopt SAP HANA. FAC ¶¶ 87, 89, 91. Teradata expects that given the costs of licensing and maintaining EDAW products, most Top-Tier SAP ERP Applications customers who use Teradata EDAW products will abandon them in response to SAP's decision not to facilitate products other than HANA. FAC ¶ 92. Teradata also believes SAP is forcing customers to abandon Teradata by restricting customer ability to access SAP ERP data for use with Teradata's EDAW products. FAC ¶ 93.

LEGAL STANDARD

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\), a district court must dismiss a complaint if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. To survive a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, the plaintiff must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). A claim is facially plausible when the plaintiff pleads facts that "allow the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citation omitted). There must be "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." [*8] Id. While courts do not require "heightened fact pleading of specifics," a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 570.

In deciding whether the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief can be granted, the court accepts the plaintiff's allegations as true and draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. See Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). However, the court is not required to accept as true "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008).

If the court dismisses the complaint, it "should grant leave to amend even if no request to amend the pleading was made, unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts." Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1127 (9th Cir. 2000). In making this determination, the court should consider factors such as "the presence or absence of undue delay, bad faith, dilatory motive, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by previous amendments, undue prejudice to the opposing party and futility of the proposed amendment." Moore v. Kayport Package Express, 885 F.2d 531, 538 (9th Cir. 1989).

I. MISAPPROPRIATION OF TRADE SECRETS (COUNTS I AND II)

Teradata alleges that SAP misappropriated its trade secrets under the federal Defend Trade Secrets Act \("DTSA"\), [*9] 18 U.S.C. § 1836 et seq., and California's Uniform Trade Secrets Act \("CUTSA"\), Cal. Civ. Code § 3426 et seq. The elements of trade secret misappropriation are substantially the same under the federal and state statutes. See Waymo LLC v. Uber Techs., Inc., No. 17-CV-00939-WHA, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73843, 2017 WL 2123560, at *7 (N.D. Cal. May 15, 2017) (stating that "the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act and the federal Defend Trade Secrets Act...offer essentially the same definitions for our purposes.").

A trade secret is defined to include "all forms and types" of information that derives value from being secret and that the owner took reasonable measures to keep secret. 18 U.S.C. § 1839\(3\); see also Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.1\(d\). Misappropriation is the "acquisition of a trade secret" by a person who knows or should know the secret was acquired by improper means. 18 U.S.C. § 1839\(5\); Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.1\(b\). The term "improper means" includes, among other ways, misrepresentation, theft, or breach of a duty to maintain secrecy. 18 U.S.C. § 1839\(6\); Cal. Civil Code § 3426.1\(a\).

SAP moves to dismiss both trade secret misappropriation claims on the basis that the FAC fails to identify the trade secrets and to allege misappropriation prohibited by the Bridge Project agreements. Further SAP argues that the claims are barred by applicable statutes of limitations and that the DTSA does not have retroactive effect. I address each [*10] argument in turn.

A. The FAC Does Not Sufficiently Allege Trade Secrets

To identify a trade secret, Teradata "need not spell out the details of the trade secret" the claim is based on, see Space Data Corp. v. X, No. 16-CV-03260-BLF, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22571, 2017 WL 5013363, at \*2 \(N.D. Cal. Feb. 16, 2017\) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted), but it must "describe the subject matter of the trade secret with sufficient particularity to separate it from matters of general knowledge in the trade or of special knowledge of those persons...skilled in the trade." See Imax Corp. v. Cinema Techs., Inc., 152 F.3d 1161, 1164-65 \(9th Cir. 1998\) (internal quotation, citation, and emphasis omitted). The pleadings must give defendants "reasonable notice of the issues which must be met at the time of trial and...provide reasonable guidance in ascertaining the scope of appropriate discovery." Diodes, Inc. v. Franzen, 260 Cal. App. 2d 244, 252-53, 67 Cal. Rptr. 19 \(1968\).

The FAC alleges trade secret information related to massively parallel processing ("MPP"). See FAC ¶¶ 1, 16-23. Teradata contends that its trade secrets include information "on the design and optimization of Teradata's MPP systems and the execution of analytical queries in such systems." FAC ¶ 34. These trade secrets, information and techniques for optimizing the integration and analysis of massive data, are repeated several times. See FAC ¶¶ 24, [*11] 32, 34, 35. In addition, Teradata asserts that with its trade secrets, SAP "optimize[d] the processing of certain Open SQL queries for large volumes of data, enabling improved performance speed and opportunities for parallel processing and other enhancements on SAP's HANA." FAC ¶ 44.

At the hearing, Teradata repeated its reliance on the paragraphs of the complaint discussed above, arguing that allegations concerning its proprietary methods related to MPP and executing queries were enough to survive the motion to dismiss. However, several cases in this district demonstrate what is currently lacking in Teradata's FAC. In Farhang v. Indian Inst. of Tech., Kharagpur, No. 08-CV-02658-RMW, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53975, 2010 WL 2228936, at \*14 \(N.D. Cal. June 1, 2010\), Judge Whyte found defendants, on these allegations, could not determine what subject matter of the trade secret was separate from matters of general knowledge in the trade. Id.

Similarly, in [Synopsys, Inc. v. ATopTech, Inc., the Hon. Samuel Conti dismissed a trade secret defined as information including "proprietary input \[\*12\] and output formats, scripts, and technical product documentation..."](#) Synopsys, Inc. v. AtopTech, Inc., No. 13-CV-02965-SC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153089, 2013 WL 5770542, at \*6 \(N.D. Cal. Oct. 24, 2013\). Judge Conti found this too vague to determine "where trade secret protection begins and ends as to any of this material." Id.

Finally, in Vendavo, Inc. v. Price f\(x\) AG, the Hon. Richard Seeborg analyzed a trade secret claim that allegedly included things like "...negative knowhow learned through the course of research and development, and other information related to the development of its price-optimization software, including ideas and plans for product enhancements." [2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153089, \[WL\] at \*3](#) (internal quotations omitted). Vendavo, Inc. v. Price f\(x\) AG, No. 17-CV-06930-RS, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48637, 2018 WL 1456697, at \*4 \(N.D. Cal. Mar. 23, 2018\). Judge Seeborg dismissed these allegations, finding they were too broad. Id.

Teradata's alleged trade secret information is too broad and vague. The repeated allegations that its trade secrets include specific ways to optimize data with its MPP technology is indistinguishable from the allegations in Farhang, Synopsis, and Vendavo. Even the most specific allegation that the trade secret information included an optimization process for "certain Open SQL queries" suffers the same flaw. FAC ¶ 44. As it stands, there are no allegations suggesting what the proprietary information regarding optimization [*13] was, or how or why it is proprietary besides simply being labeled a trade secret by Teradata in its first amended complaint.

Teradata informed the court of its intention to disclose a trade secrets list to opposing counsel. Although Teradata need not "spell out the details" of its trade secrets, Space Data Corp., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22571, 2017 WL 5013363, at \*2, more particularity is needed to separate Teradata's alleged trade secret information on design and optimization from other information that is "general knowledge in the trade or of special knowledge of those persons who are skilled in the trade." Diodes, 260 Cal. App. at 253.

B. The FAC Sufficiently Alleges Misappropriation by Improper Means

SAP contends the claim must be dismissed because Teradata failed to comply with its contractual obligation to designate information as confidential when it is disclosed and failed to plead that SAP breached the Bridge Project agreements. See Convolve Inc. v. Compaq Computer Corp., 527 Fed. App'x 910, 924-25 \(Fed. Cir. 2013\) (finding "a duty to maintain the secrecy of the disclosed information is dictated by the terms of the NDA.").

SAP relies on cases finding a "written non-disclosure agreement supplants any implied duty of confidentiality that may have existed between the parties." Marketel Inter., Inc. v. Priceline.com, Inc., 36 Fed. Appx. 423, 425 \(Fed. Cir. 2002\) (citing Union Pac. R.R. Co. v. Mower, 219 F.3d 1069, 1076 \(9th Cir. 2000\)). In response, Teradata argues that whether it complied with the Bridge Project [*14] agreements is a premature question at the motion to dismiss stage because this requirement is not determinative of the claim. See PQ Labs, Inc. v. Yang Qi, No. 12-CV-0450-CW, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11769, 2014 WL 334453, at \*4 \(N.D. Cal. Jan. 29, 2014\) (finding the marking requirement was irrelevant at summary judgment because plaintiff "has presented evidence that it used other means to notify its employees and agents that its technological and customer information was confidential.").

As an initial matter, it is appropriate to consider the Bridge Project agreements on a motion to dismiss where they have been incorporated by reference in the complaint. Incorporation by reference is "a judicially created doctrine that treats certain documents as though they are part of the complaint itself." Khoja v. Orexigen Therapeutics, Inc., 899 F.3d 988, 1002 \(9th Cir. 2018\). A defendant may seek to incorporate documents into the complaint "if the plaintiff refers extensively to the document or the document forms the basis of the plaintiff's claim." Id. (internal citations and quotations omitted).

Here, SAP seeks to incorporate five documents for review in support of its motion to dismiss. See Lanier Decl. Ex. A-E (Dkt. No. 38-7). There appears to be no dispute of the authenticity of Exhibits A-C, respectively the SDCA, TPA, and a 2009 mutual non-disclosure [*15] agreement. It is appropriate to incorporate these documents by reference in the complaint under Khoja. However, Exhibits D and E are introduced on "information and belief" and are the subject of dispute. For the reasons explained more fully in the forthcoming copyright infringement analysis, Exhibits D and E will not be incorporated by reference. I now turn to SAP's misappropriation arguments.

1. Designating Confidential Information

Teradata's reliance on PQ Labs is persuasive. There, the court found that evidence plaintiffs took other measures to protect information beyond a non-disclosure agreement made the issue of marking documents confidential irrelevant. Id. The facts included explicitly warning defendant not to disclose any product design concepts and placing other controls on access to company research. Id.; see also Vesta Corp. v. Amdocs Mgmt., Ltd., No. 14-CV-01142-HZ, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 155434, 2018 WL 4354301, at \*15 \(D. Or. Sept. 12, 2018\) (finding the case law "unclear about the extent to which compliance with an NDA is required to succeed on a claim for trade secret misappropriation.").

SAP counters that the facts here are more like Gemisys Corp. v. Phoenix Am., Inc., 186 F.R.D. 551 \(N.D. Cal. 1999\), in which the court dismissed a trade secret claim on summary judgment for failing to mark the trade secrets as confidential, [*16] than like PQ Labs which did not involve an NDA with a marking requirement. See Reply at 4 (Dkt. No. 47-4). This does not make the dicta in PQ Labs, which stated the marking requirement was irrelevant, any less applicable. In PQ Labs, the NDA marking requirement was irrelevant because there remained a question of fact whether plaintiffs notified defendants of confidential information through other means. See 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11769, 2014 WL 334453, at \*4. Teradata is correct that at the motion to dismiss stage, the mutual non-disclosure agreements could be non-determinative of the outcome.

The mutual non-disclosure agreements were only two of four contracts involved in the Bridge Project to ensure that Teradata's proprietary information would not be misappropriated or reverse engineered. The SDCA and TPA reference the NDA's confidentiality terms but independently also place restrictions on reverse engineering or creating derivative works of software. See Lanier Decl. Ex. A §§ 10.7-8; Ex. B § 8.6. In addition, Teradata pleads specific instances in which it provided SAP information subject to the "parties' agreements" which refers not only the NDAs, but to the SDCA, TPA, and EUL. See, e.g., FAC ¶ 34 (training sessions on Teradata's database); ¶ [*17] 35 (identifying solutions for SAP's software based on confidential solutions Teradata implements in its own products); ¶ 36 (installing Teradata Database at SAP's COIL facility in Palo Alto, California and its research center in Walldorf, Germany); ¶ 36 (providing access to Teradata Express subject to EUL). Given the other agreements Teradata entered to protect its trade secrets, the NDA's are not determinative of the claim at the pleading stage.

2. Bridge Project Agreements

Although PQ Labs recognized that an NDA may not be determinative of a trade secret misappropriation claim, Teradata's other measures to protect its information also lie in the Bridge Project agreements. SAP contends the trade secrets, as alleged, are barred by the terms of the SDCA in three respects.

First, the SDCA grants SAP a license to use "Input" in any SAP products, which is defined as "suggestions, comments, and feedback." Lanier Decl. Ex. A §§ 1.6, 9.4. In response, Teradata argues that it has alleged it provided SAP with trade secret information beyond "Input." See FAC ¶¶ 32-36. I agree with Teradata. The FAC, even without sufficiently detailing the trade secrets, already states that Teradata provided SAP with "information, [*18] software, tools, and other materials," FAC ¶ 33, "conducted training sessions," FAC ¶ 34, and conveyed "techniques for optimizing the speed and efficiency" of the joint product. FAC ¶ 35. Taking these allegations as true, it is plausible that SAP misappropriated information beyond the terms of the SDCA.

Second, the SDCA provides for Teradata to share "optimization" support with SAP. See id. Ex. A, Appx. 2 (Task 5B). SAP argues that the alleged trade secrets were limited to optimization support based on allegations that Teradata conveyed "techniques for optimizing" massive amounts of data, see FAC ¶¶ 32,35, and that it shared the "optimization of Teradata's MPP systems." FAC ¶ 34. However, Teradata asserts again that the information it provided went beyond "optimization" as identified above. Teradata also argues that regardless of the agreement, it did not authorize SAP to use the information for its competing product.

Third, SAP contends that the SDCA grants it ownership of "Newly Developed Materials" resulting from the Bridge Project. See id. §§ 1.8, 10.3. The agreement defined new materials as those "developed by SAP and/or [Teradata] in connection with or as a result of a party's interaction [*19] with the other party within the context of this Agreement..." Id. § 1.8. As with the argument that Teradata agreed to share "optimization" support to SAP, there is no indication from the agreement that it contemplated using the information outside the context of the Bridge Project, let alone for a competing product. SAP, in its reply, argues that it would own any intellectual property "if SAP learned something proprietary from Teradata during the Bridge Project." Reply at 5. Even this argument, however, does not extend to Teradata's existing trade secrets, which it alleges it developed before the Bridge Project and which was taken from it under the pretense of the agreement. See FAC ¶ 1 ("SAP then stole Teradata's trade secrets (accumulated by Teradata over the course of four decades in the EDAW space)..."); ¶ 34 ("Teradata provided to SAP proprietary, confidential, and trade secret information acquired through decades of research and development.").

Accordingly, assuming the allegations in the complaint as true, the FAC contains plausible allegations that there is misappropriation by improper means.

C. The Trade Secret Misappropriation Claims Are Not Time Barred

SAP contends that regardless [*20] of the pleadings, Teradata's trade secret misappropriation claims are barred by the Bridge Project SDCA's two-year limitations period, and the three-year statutory limitations period. These arguments are not well taken.

1. The SDCA Time Bar Is Not In Effect and Would Not Apply

It is a well-settled point of law that parties may contract around a limitations period shorter than the default statute of limitations. See, e.g., W. Filter Corp. v. Argan, Inc., 540 F.3d 947, 952 \(9th Cir. 2008\). Section 8.5 of the SDCA provides "Any claims for damages" must be filed within two years after the party becomes "aware of the event giving rise to the claim." Lanier Decl. Ex. A § 8.5. The SDCA also contains a survival clause in Section 13.4 that provides "upon such effective date of termination, each Party's rights and obligations hereunder will terminate..." but the terms in Articles 9 through 13 survive. Id. at § 13.4.

Teradata argues that the SDCA time bar in Section 8.5 no longer applies after SAP terminated the Bridge Project. See id. § 13.4; FAC ¶ 40. SAP insists that there is a presumption that dispute resolution provisions survive the termination of a contract. See Marcotte v. Micros Sys., Inc., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128054, 2014 WL 4477349, at \*9 \(N.D. Cal. Sept. 11, 2014\) (citing Litton Fin. Printing Div. v. NLRB, 501 U.S. 190, 204, 111 S. Ct. 2215, 115 L. Ed. 2d 177 \(1991\) (finding "a presumption in favor of postexpiration arbitration of matters unless negated expressly or by clear implication.") (internal quotations [*21] omitted).

I find that the SDCA two-year limitations period is not in effect. The exception in Litton concerned arbitration rights that "accrued or vested under the agreement, or where, under normal principles of contract interpretation, the disputed contractual right survives expiration of the remainder of the agreement." Litton, 501 U.S. at 206. Litton's holding has also applied to forum selection clauses. See Marcotte v. Micros Sys., Inc., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128054, 2014 WL 4477349, at \*9 \(N.D. Cal. Sept. 11, 2014\) (citing Saleemi v. Gosh Enterprises, Inc., 467 F. App'x 744 \(9th Cir. 2012\)). SAP seeks to extend it further, but I am not aware of, and the parties have not cited, any cases in this jurisdiction that have directly applied Litton to a contractual limitations provision.

The only case SAP provides applying the presumption of survivability to a contractual limitations provision is a Massachusetts District Court case, Creative Playthings Franchising, Corp. v. Reiser, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 165492, 2011 WL 13250940, at \*3 \(D. Mass. Apr. 28, 2011\), which found a liability limitation provision was "in the nature" of other dispute resolution provisions. The Ninth Circuit has found, however, that in California "contractual stipulations are not favored" and should be "construed with strictness against the party invoking them" because they are in "derogation" of the statutorily set limitation. W. Filter Corp., 540 F.3d at 952 (internal quotation and citation omitted).

Construing the agreement strictly against SAP, the contract language [*22] of Section 13.4 is clear that only Articles 9 through 13 survive after the agreement is terminated. Accordingly, absent clear language to the contrary, principles of contract construction require that I not give Section 8.5's contractual limitations clause post-termination effect.

Assuming the contractual limitation was in effect, SAP also argues that Teradata has not alleged "willful misconduct," which the SDCA identifies as an exception to the two-year limitations period. Willful misconduct has been defined similarly in various contexts. See, e.g., Manuel v. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co., 173 Cal. App. 4th 927, 947, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 \(2009\) (defining willful misconduct as involving a "positive intent actually to harm another or to do an act with a positive, active and absolute disregard for its consequences.") (quotation marks and citation omitted). In the CUTSA, the statute states if "willful" misappropriation exists, the court can award exemplary damages. See Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.3\(c\). In turn, the California Code of Civil Procedure defines "malice" related to exemplary damages as conduct intended to cause injury or conduct "with a willful and conscious disregard of the rights" of others. See id. at § 3294(c)(1).

Teradata has sufficiently pleaded willful and conscious disregard of its rights. The FAC alleges its trade secrets were [*23] improperly misappropriated (as discussed above) when SAP intentionally stole its information by entering the Bridge Project under false pretenses. See FAC ¶ 52. Additionally, Teradata alleges that Dr. Sikka was the driving force within SAP behind the plot to steal Teradata's trade secret information and incorporate it into the HANA product. See id. ¶¶ 1, 44, 45, 47, 52. At least at the pleading stage, Teradata has alleged facts that plausibly support its theory of a willful and conscious plan by SAP and Dr. Sikka to steal its trade secrets in direct disregard of the Bridge Project, to develop a competing product, and to engage in anticompetitive practices. Therefore, even if the SDCA limitations period was in effect after the agreement was terminated, Teradata's allegations fit within the exception such that the SDCA's time bar would not apply.

2. Teradata Pleads a Claim Within the Statutory Limitations Period

Both the DTSA and the CUTSA have a three-year statute of limitations. See 18 U.S.C. § 1836\(d\); Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.6. Teradata alleges that its trade secrets were improperly acquired during the Bridge Project from 2009 to 2011 when SAP developed HANA, and that the information continues to be misused in the present. FAC [*24] ¶¶ 40, 52. Yet it asserts that it learned of the theft in September 2015, only after a Der Spiegel article revealed SAP's conduct. FAC ¶¶ 47, 51. According to the article, SAP concealed an internal investigation from a SAP auditor in 2012 who concluded that SAP had stolen Teradata's intellectual property during the Bridge Project. FAC ¶¶ 47, 48, 51.

SAP's motion essentially contests the truthfulness of these allegations. It proposes that Teradata should have been aware of potential misappropriation in 2011 when HANA was developed, making the misappropriation claim time barred unless there are allegations that it investigated its suspicions. See Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc., 35 Cal. 4th 797, 808, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661, 110 P.3d 914 \(2005\) ("a potential plaintiff who suspects than injury has been wrongfully ceased must conduct a reasonable investigation."); see also Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co., 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1111, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 \(1988\) (finding the plaintiff must go find the facts "[s]o long as a suspicion exists."). At the hearing, SAP also referred to paragraphs in the complaint purportedly showing Teradata was on notice of potential misappropriation in 2011. See FAC ¶¶ 3, 38-40, 52.

For three reasons, however, Teradata's FAC does not reveal a reasonable basis for suspicion of misappropriation in 2011. First, the general claim early in the FAC [*25] that SAP "could not have so quickly developed and marketed HANA...without its theft of Teradata's trade secrets" is not a veiled admission of some reasonable suspicion in 2011. FAC ¶ 3. The FAC dedicates an entire section on SAP's quick development of HANA, see FAC ¶¶ 38-46, and a section on the discovery of the theft in which it pleads that based on the Der Spiegel article "it has become clear...SAP was able to go to market so quickly only because SAP entered into an agreement with Teradata...and then incorporated [trade secrets] into and used them to develop HANA." FAC ¶ 52 (emphasis added).

Second, SAP's announcement of HANA for SAP BW "just days" after SAP terminated the Bridge Project in 2011 also does not provide a reasonable suspicion of misappropriation because, as the FAC alleges, the product did not perform as well as Teradata's MPP database. See FAC ¶¶ 41, 16-18. SAP argued at the hearing that the announcement alone should have raised suspicions and a duty to investigate for misappropriation. Perhaps if the product performed similarly to Teradata's it would have raised suspicions, but that is not alleged in the FAC.

Finally, the Teradata employees working on HANA during the [*26] Bridge Project and those who left to work for SAP later were allegedly not known to Teradata until after the Der Spiegel article. See FAC ¶ 45 ("Teradata was not aware of this cross-pollination between SAP's Bridge Project and HANA development teams."). This is another allegation that suggests Teradata lacked notice of misappropriation in 2011.

Teradata need not plead that it initiated an investigation sometime after 2011 when it also pleads that it lacked any reasonable suspicion of misappropriation until 2015. Its trade secret claim did not accrue until it discovered the infringement in September 2015. Because the complaint was filed on June 19, 2018, it was within the three-year statute of limitation under the DTSA and CUTSA. The misappropriation claims are not barred.

D. The DTSA Can be Based on a Continuing-Use Theory

The DTSA applies to "any misappropriation of a trade secret...for which any act occurs on or after [May 11, 2016,] the date of the enactment of [the] Act." Defend Trade Secrets Act of 2016, Pub. L. No. 114-153, 130 Stat. 376, 381-82 (May 11, 2016). When bringing a claim under the DTSA, the plaintiff may rely on one of three theories: "(1) acquisition, (2) disclosure, or (3) use." *Cave Consulting Grp., Inc. v. Truven Health Analytics, Inc.*, No. 15-CV-02177-SI, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62109, 2017 WL 1436044, at \*4 \(N.D. Cal. Apr. 24, 2017\) [*27]. To state a claim under any of these theories, plaintiffs need to allege "that acts of misappropriation occurred after DTSA came into effect." *Avago Techs. U.S. Inc. v. NanoPrecision Prods. Inc.*, No. 16-CV-3737-JCS, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13484, 2017 WL 412524, at \*9 \(N.D. Cal. Jan 31, 2017\) (emphasis in original).

If the trade secret was "publicly disclosed before the effective date of the DTSA, a plaintiff cannot rely on a theory 'that the same information was disclosed again.'" *Veronica Foods Co. v. Ecklin*, No. 16-CV-07223-JCS, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101325, 2017 WL 2806706, at \*13 \(N.D. Cal. June 29, 2017\) (quoting *Avago*, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13484, 2017 WL 412524, at \*8-9) (emphasis in original). However, where the information was never initially disclosed, "a DTSA claim based on continuous use after May 11, 2016 does not require allegations of 'new or different' misappropriation, unlike a claim based on disclosure of trade secrets." Order Denying Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, *Space Data Corp. v. X, Alphabet, Inc., et al.*, No. 16-cv-03260-BLF, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 222326 \(N.D. Cal. 2016\) (Dkt. No. 176).

The parties dispute whether the misappropriation claim can have retroactive effect. As discussed above, Teradata alleges a misappropriation that occurred during the Bridge Project but was discovered in September 2015. FAC ¶¶ 47, 51. The misappropriation allegedly continues to the present as SAP [*28] keeps selling HANA which, according to Teradata, was only possible because of the trade secrets that were stolen from it. FAC ¶¶ 41, 54, 102-103. SAP argues that the DTSA claim should be dismissed because the federal statute does not have retroactive effect for the continued use of the same misappropriated information before DTSA was enacted.

SAP misapplies the law to the facts of this case. In Avago, the Hon. Joseph Spero held there is "no authority suggesting that the DTSA allows a misappropriation claim to be asserted based on the continued use of information that was disclosed prior to the effective date of the statute." Id. Next, SAP points to Space Data Corp., where the Hon. Beth Freeman found that plaintiff failed to allege a continuing-use theory when the information was disclosed prior to the DTSA and failed to allege any new post-enactment misappropriation. *Space Data Corp. v. X, No. 16-CV-03260-BLF, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109842, 2017 WL 3007078, at \*3* \(N.D. Cal. July 14, 2017\). Finally, SAP relies on Cave Consulting, where the Hon. Susan Illston dismissed DTSA claims for failing to allege post-enactment uses in the first instance. *2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62109, 2017 WL 1436044, at \*5*. Consistent with cases where the trade secret is previously disclosed, Judge Illston found plaintiff failed to state a DTSA [*29] claim without "new or somehow different [information] from the prior misappropriation." Id.

Unlike those cases, however, the trade secret information alleged here has not been publicly disclosed or "extinguished" at the time it was initially misappropriated. See, e.g., *Avago*, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13484, 2017 WL 412524, at \*1-3 (quoting *Ultimax Cement Mfg. Corp. v. CTS Cement Mfg. Corp.*, 587 F.3d 1339, 1355 \(Fed. Cir. 2009\)); *Attia v. Google LLC*, No. 17-CV-06037-BLF, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99400, 2018 WL 2971049, at \*11 (N.D. Cal. June 13, 2018) (dismissing claim for lack of allegations differentiating between secrets disclosed in patent application and secrets remaining that were not disclosed prior to DTSA effective date); *Veronica Foods*, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101325, 2017 WL 2806706, at \*13 (stating the rule in Avago applied where the trade secret was allegedly "publicly disclosed before the effective date.").

Teradata alleges continuing-use of its trade secrets; that is not disputed. However, there are no factual allegations in this case that Teradata's trade secret information was ever publicly disclosed pre- or post-enactment of the DTSA. Therefore, assuming Teradata can amend the complaint to sufficiently identify its trade secret information as outlined above, it has adequately brought a DTSA claim on a continuing-use theory.

II. COPYRIGHT INFRINGEMENT (COUNT III)

The FAC alleges copyright infringement prohibited by Teradata's end-user license ("EUL"). SAP moves to dismiss [*30] the copyright claim because there is no breach of any obligations under the parties' agreements, and because the claim is time-barred under the Bridge Project agreements and 17 U.S.C. § 507\(b\) of the Copyright Act.

SAP's interpretation of the Bridge Project agreements that are incorporated by reference in the complaint fall short when it comes to the EUL. To restate the law briefly, the Ninth Circuit in Khoja v. Orexigen Therapeutics, Inc. clarified that incorporation by reference allows courts to treat documents as if they are a part of the complaint "if the plaintiff refers extensively to the document or the document forms the basis of the plaintiff's claim." 899 F.3d at 1002 (internal citations and quotations omitted). However, "if the document merely creates a defense to the well-pleaded allegations in the complaint, then that document did not necessarily form the basis of the complaint." Id.

Here, SAP asserts the Bridge Project agreements allowed it to reverse engineer Teradata's software within the terms of the agreement and that the EUL has its own two-year limitations provision that is distinct from the SDCA terms addressed earlier. However, SAP's request to incorporate the EUL by reference is based on "information [*31] and belief" that the exhibit has the same license language as the EUL referenced in the first amended complaint. Lanier Decl. ¶ 6, Ex. E. I cannot know or assume on SAP's information and belief that the attached EUL is the same as the EUL plaintiff extensively refers to in the FAC merely because the FAC alleges the EUL was a "standard" agreement. On the specific contract interpretation arguments raised here, treating a different EUL like it contains the same terms as the one referenced in the FAC would permit what the court in Khoja cautioned; it would allow SAP to create a defense to an otherwise well-pleaded allegation. See 899 F.3d at 1002. Without knowing the terms of the relevant EUL, SAP cannot prove that a contractual limitation provision bars the claim, that reverse engineering for the purpose of interoperability or circumvention was permitted under the EUL, or that no set of facts exists for Teradata to raise a plausible copyright claim.

SAP's remaining argument is that, regardless of the claim, the FAC is time-barred under the three-year statute of limitations in the Copyright Act. This is incorrect. The statute of limitations begins to run "when one has knowledge of a violation or is chargeable [*32] with such knowledge." Roley v. New World Pictures, Ltd., 19 F.3d 479, 481 \(9th Cir. 1994\). Each infringing act is considered a distinct harm so the statute of limitations "bars infringement claims that accrued more than three years before suit was filed, but does not preclude infringement claims that accrued within the statutory period." Oppenheimer v. Allvoices, Inc., No. 14-CV-00499-LB, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80320, 2014 WL 2604033, at \*3 \(N.D. Cal. June 10, 2014\). The point when a plaintiff knew or should have known about an infringement is a "question of fact," Polar Bear Prods., Inc. v. Timex Corp., 384 F.3d 700, 707 \(9th Cir. 2004\), and courts may dismiss a claim where there is no reasonable basis to conclude a lack of knowledge under the circumstances. Goldberg v. Cameron, 482 F.Supp.2d 1136, 1148 \(N.D. Cal. 2007\).

SAP asserts that Teradata failed to plead that it could not reasonably discover the infringement within three years of 2011 when HANA for SAP BW was launched. This is a mischaracterization of the FAC and appears to incorrectly presume that the claim accrued when infringement began. Teradata alleges that it learned of the theft of its proprietary information after the September 2015 Der Spiegel article. See FAC ¶¶ 47, 51; see also Oppo. at 3:18, 12:11. The article revealed an internal SAP auditor's conclusion that SAP stole Teradata's intellectual property during the Bridge Project, and that SAP concealed the investigation from Teradata and the [*33] public until the article exposed the infringement. Id.

In sum, Teradata's copyright claim did not accrue until it discovered the infringement in September 2015. The complaint was filed on June 19, 2018, within the three-year statute of limitation under 17 U.S.C. § 507\(b\) of the Copyright Act. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss the copyright claim is DENIED.

III. ANTITRUST VIOLATIONS (COUNTS IV AND V)

Teradata's antitrust claims include unlawful tying under 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 14, and attempted monopolization under 15 U.S.C. § 2. SAP moves to dismiss each for failure to state a claim.

A. Unlawful Tying

In a tying arrangement the seller conditions one product, the tying product, on the buyer's purchase of another product, the tied product, to extend its market power in a distinct product market. See Cascade Health Sols. v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 912 (9th Cir. 2008). A tying arrangement is "forbidden on the theory that, if the seller has market power over the tying product, the seller can leverage this market power through tying arrangements to exclude other sellers of the tied product." Id.

Teradata appears to accuse SAP of a per se tying violation. See, e.g., Oppo. at 16:13-18. To sufficiently bring a per se tying claim, Teradata must plead that: (i) SAP "tied together the sale of two distinct products or services;" [*34] (ii) SAP has the "economic power in the tying product market to coerce its customers into purchasing the tied product;" and (iii) the arrangement "affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce in the tied product market." Cascade Health Sols., 515 F.3d at 913 (internal citation and quotation omitted). SAP moves to dismiss, arguing that there are deficient allegations of tied products, coercion, and market power, and that the claim is subject to the rule of reason.

1. The FAC Sufficiently Alleges SAP Tied Two Products

SAP contends that S/4HANA is one integrated product and therefore the first element of the tying claim cannot be satisfied. See Int'l Mfg. Co. v. Landon, Inc., 336 F.2d 723, 730 (9th Cir. 1964)

 ("it is not an unlawful tying arrangement for a seller to include several items in a single mandatory package when the items may be reasonably considered to constitute parts of a single distinct product."). At the hearing, SAP repeated that the allegations in paragraphs 69, 73, 86, 87, 88, and 129 of the FAC support that S/4HANA is an integrated product. See, e.g., FAC ¶ 73 ("SAP developed HANA to function as both a transactional database for managing ERP Applications data and an analytical database with EDAW functionality."). But Teradata asserts that it sufficiently alleged a market [*35] for different products, the S/4HANA product in the ERP Applications market and the HANA product in the EDAW market.

The existence of distinct products depends on "the character of the demand for the two items." Jefferson Par. Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 19, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984). This consideration, known as the purchaser demand test, examines direct and indirect evidence of consumer demand and whether defendants "foreclosed competition on the merits in a product market distinct from the market for the tying item." Id. at 21. Direct evidence of demand includes "whether, when given a choice, consumers purchase the tied good from the tying good maker, or from other firms." Rick-Mik Enterprises, Inc. v. Equilon Enterprises LLC, 532 F.3d 963, 975 (9th Cir. 2008) (internal citations and quotations omitted). Indirect evidence includes firm behaviors, for instance a single product is apparent if "competitive firms always bundle the tying and tied goods" together. Id.

Here, the FAC contains plausible allegations directly and indirectly evidencing demand in distinct markets. Teradata alleges that EDAW and ERP Applications products perform different functions. FAC ¶ 69. "ERP Applications allow companies to gather and manage the data required to conduct their day-to-day operations across many aspects of the business enterprise," and "typically are designed [*36] around a relational database that acts as a common repository for all the data used and managed by the ERP Applications..." FAC ¶ 30. An EDAW product, in contrast to ERP Applications and transactional databases, "involves the centralized storage and integration of vast amounts of data collected from numerous sources across an entire business enterprise in its day-to-day operations..." FAC ¶ 16. Teradata further describes the EDAW market as products enabling Top-Tier ERP Applications customers to retain their data, and "to perform complex analytical operations on, vast amounts of data from a wide variety of data streams (i.e., the companies' ERP Applications and numerous other sources)." FAC ¶ 68. EDAW products copy customer ERP Applications data from the transactional database to incorporate it into the EDAW system, which allows customers to "run complex analytical functions against all the data" collected from the ERP data. FAC ¶ 70.

The FAC also alleges that "EDAW products are indispensable for" Top-Tier ERP Application customers, but selling the products together is not necessary. See FAC ¶ 72. In fact, EDAW and ERP Application products were historically sold separately to the same [*37] customer base. FAC ¶ 69. Both before and after the Bridge Project, customers had the ability to select different ERP Applications and EDAW products when given the freedom to choose. FAC ¶¶ 77-78, 84. When HANA was first released, SAP continued to allow its ERP Application customers to choose their own transactional database and their own EDAW products. FAC ¶ 81. This was purportedly the case until SAP made its HANA products inoperable with other EDAW databases. FAC ¶¶ 86-87. After HANA's release, customers still approached Teradata and encouraged it to develop integration for HANA. FAC ¶ 84.

Nonetheless, SAP argues that the product is bundled, which does not necessarily amount to an unlawful tying arrangement. See Cascade Health Sols., 515 F.3d at 915 n. 27. According to SAP, because the bundling "innovates," "integrates," and "improves" the product, it should be treated as a single product for purposes of an unlawful tying claim. See X.P. Areeda, H. Hovenkamp & E. Elhauge, Antitrust Law, ¶ 1746b, p. 208 (3d ed. 2007) (explaining a single product should be found where defendant "integrate[s] previously unbundled inputs into a new product design that results in better combined performance than could be obtained if the items were [*38] offered unbundled and combined by purchasers or intermediaries."). It relies on two cases to make this argument.

First, SAP asserts that I cannot balance the benefits of "a product improvement against its anticompetitive effects." Allied Orthopedic Appliances Inc. v. Tyco Health Care Grp. LP, 592 F.3d 991, 1000 (9th Cir. 2010) (finding product improvement alone does not render unlawful a monopoly under Section 2). Since the product is an improvement, that would be the end of the matter. The Allied Orthopedic case, however, was not concerned with the sufficiency of a plaintiff's tying allegations. Rather, the court analyzed whether "a design change that improves a product by providing a new benefit to consumers" could defeat summary judgment of a Section 2 monopoly claim. Id. at 998-999.

Second, SAP contends that because there is a plausible claim that its integrated product offers advantages "unavailable if the functionalities are bought separately and combined by the purchaser," there is no viable tying claim. United States v. Microsoft Corp., 147 F.3d 935, 948, 331 U.S. App. D.C. 121 (D.C. Cir. 1998). However, in Microsoft Corp., the court was operating under its reading of an antitrust consent decree, and left open "[w]hether or not this is the appropriate test for antitrust law generally..." Id. at 950. SAP does not provide any Ninth Circuit case law applying the plausibility test since Microsoft Corp.

Even [*39] under the case law SAP relies on, Teradata satisfies its burden to plead tied products. Assuming the court could apply the Microsoft Corp. analysis consistent with antitrust law generally, it is arguable whether there are allegations that the S/4HANA and HANA products are integrated. As SAP pointed out, Teradata's FAC recognizes that EDAW and ERP Applications products can operate more efficiently together — as was similarly the aim of the Bridge Project and allegedly achieved in Teradata Foundation. See FAC ¶ 32 ("A key challenge of the Bridge Project was to ensure fast and efficient interoperation between SAP's front-end systems and Teradata's EDAW product."). But the allegations refer only to HANA as it relates to integrating with transactional databases, not integrating with the ERP Applications, S/4HANA. See, e.g., FAC ¶ 42 (stating that like Teradata Foundation, "SAP's HANA product combines a database solution with integrated software to perform data analytics."); ¶ 52 ("...integrating the two companies' technologies" as a reference to Teradata Foundation solution, not HANA or S/4HANA); ¶ 83 (alleging HANA "was ill-suited for integration of enterprise data from third-party sources."). [*40]

Applying Allied Orthopedic, even if a design change leads to improvements it is tolerated in the antitrust context "unless the monopolist abuses or leverages its monopoly power in some other way when introducing the product." Allied Orthopedic Appliances Inc., 592 F.3d at 1000. An abuse of leverage "in some other way" is exactly what the FAC alleges. Id. For instance, Teradata asserts that SAP is a dominant player in the ERP Application market and made its newest version of the ERP Application, S/4HANA, incompatible with other EDAW products and transactional databases, FAC ¶¶ 86-87, while at the same time announcing that it is ending support for prior versions of its ERP Applications by 2025. FAC ¶ 89. Teradata also alleges that, in addition to bundling the sales of HANA and S/4HANA, SAP placed restrictive language in its licensing agreements preventing customers from using other databases, FAC ¶ 87, and restricted customers' ability to extract their ERP-derived data stored within HANA. FAC ¶ 93. These are all changes that Teradata alleges are specifically geared toward extending SAP's market power from the ERP Application market to the distinct EDAW market. See *Rick-Mik Enterprises, 532 F.3d at 971*. Accordingly, the FAC contains enough allegations satisfying the first [*41] element that SAP tied together the sale of two distinct products.

2. The FAC Sufficiently Alleges Coercion

SAP contests the second element, that Teradata has not plausibly alleged coercion. The coercion element requires Teradata to "present evidence that the defendant went beyond persuasion and coerced or forced its customers to buy the tied product in order to obtain the tying product." *Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1159 \(9th Cir. 2003\)*. The Ninth Circuit recognizes so called "implied" or "de facto" tying claims in which a seller "adopts a policy that makes it unreasonably difficult or costly to buy the tying product...without buying the tied product." *Aerotec Int'l, Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 836 F.3d 1171, 1179 \(9th Cir. 2016\)* (quoting *Collins Inkjet Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 781 F.3d 264, 272 \(6th Cir. 2015\)*).

SAP asserts that "products are not tied unless the supplier refuses to accommodate those who prefer one without the other." IX *Antitrust Law*, ¶ 1700i, p. 9. It focuses on language in *Foremost Pro Color, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co.* that requires plaintiffs plead "some modicum" of facts "that the purchase of the alleged tied products was required as a condition of sale of the alleged tying products." *703 F.2d 534, 540, 542 \(9th Cir. 1983\)*. Teradata has done so. SAP's most recent ERP Applications product, S/4HANA, is allegedly now combined with the sale of HANA in a single offering, which requires customers who buy [*42] S/4HANA to buy HANA as their EDAW product. See FAC ¶ 87. This is a direct allegation that the purchase of the tied product is conditioned on the sale of the tying product. See *Eastman Kodak, 703 F.2d at 542*.

The claim becomes stronger when considering the tying allegations that imply coercion. For example, the costs of implementing ERP Applications are allegedly extremely high, as are the costs of switching ERP Applications products. A single customer invests tens of millions of dollars on its ERP Applications each year. FAC ¶¶ 62-66. These expenses include licensing, development, and implementation of ERP Applications for their unique businesses, as well as the needs of training employees to use the product, troubleshooting issues with the product, migrating data to the new service, and other expenses. FAC ¶¶ 63-64. In this context, SAP placed a sunset on its existing ERP Applications and is ending support of prior versions by 2025. FAC ¶ 89. On Teradata's information and belief, SAP also limited the updates for prior versions of its ERP Applications. FAC ¶ 91. Therefore, existing ERP Applications customers can upgrade to S/4HANA before the 2025 sunset period, which is allegedly tied to HANA for EDAW services, [*43] or they can suffer the switching costs. Teradata alleges that when faced with this choice, customers will upgrade so they can continue to have "the latest features and functionality, most robust support and most recent security and software updates." FAC ¶ 59.

SAP contends there is no coercion because customers can still buy stand-alone versions of SAP's Top-Tier ERP Applications without purchasing HANA. However, that is not an allegation in the FAC. Even if it was alleged that customers can still buy stand-alone ERP Applications from SAP, this does not reconcile with the other allegations such as the high costs of implementing these systems, the lack of updates offered for older versions, and the expected 2025 sunset date for older versions of the product. Accordingly, at the pleading stage, Teradata has alleged coercion.

3. The FAC Sufficiently Alleges SAP's Market Power in a Relevant Market

Third, also within the second element of a tying claim, SAP challenges the market power allegations. The definition of a "relevant market" in which defendant has market power is typically a factual rather than legal question. *Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1045 \(9th Cir. 2008\)*. The relevant market inquiry need not be pleaded with specificity to [*44] survive a motion to dismiss. Id. Still, claims can be dismissed if they fail to satisfy certain legal principles. Id.

In Newcal, the Ninth Circuit stated the relevant market: (i) must be "a product market," not one defined by consumers; (ii) must encompass the product as well as "all economic substitutes for the product;" and (iii) may include a submarket if it is "economically distinct from the general product market." Id. Submarkets are identified by indicia like "industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." *Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1962\)*.

Teradata alleges that there is a product market for ERP Applications in which the customers are large-scale, complex enterprises, referred to in the FAC as the "Top-Tier ERP Applications Market." FAC ¶¶ 56, 131. In the Top-Tier ERP Applications market, Teradata alleges that SAP holds a dominant position in the market of about 60% to 90%, with Oracle as its only significant competitor. FAC ¶ 67. An additional source of SAP's power in the market for Top-Tier ERP Applications [*45] is the allegedly locked-in customer base due to the severe costs of switching vendors discussed above. See FAC ¶¶ 63-64. This suffices to plead SAP's market power, and it does not appear that SAP disputes this aspect of the complaint.

Instead, SAP argues that other portions of the FAC are "internally contradictory" and make it unclear whether the relevant ERP market includes competitors to SAP or is limited to SAP's ERP Applications alone. See *Apple Inc. v. Psystar Corp., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1190, 1200 \(N.D. Cal. 2008\)* (granting motion to dismiss where antitrust claim did not plausibly allege an independent market because the allegations were internally contradictory). If the relevant market includes only SAP's products, SAP contends this is fatal to the claim. See *Datel Holdings, Ltd. v. Microsoft Corp., 712 F. Supp. 2d 974, 986 \(N.D. Cal. 2010\)* ("In general, single brand markets do not constitute a relevant market."). SAP cites three "internally contradictory" paragraphs of the FAC to that end. See FAC ¶¶ 56, 60, 129. I disagree that there are internal contradictions in the complaint.

First, in paragraph 56 of the FAC, Teradata identifies the product market for ERP 24 Applications, "such as SAP's S/4HANA and SAP's predecessor ERP programs." FAC ¶ 56. This refers to the relevant market discussed above, made up of SAP and Oracle products. [*46] Referring to SAP's HANA product line as an exemplary product in the ERP Applications market does not introduce a contradiction when, elsewhere in the pleading, it is clear that the market is also alleged to include Oracle and its products. FAC ¶ 67 ("Oracle is the only other significant competitor for these Top-Tier customers.").

Second, in paragraph 60, Teradata alleges "there are not reasonable or adequate economic substitutes for upgrades of SAP ERP Applications for the vast majority of Top-Tier ERP Applications customers because they are locked-in to their current ERP application provider." FAC ¶ 60. This appears to refer to a submarket of customers in the ERP Application market over whom SAP has particularly strong control due to their locked-in relationship. It is legally permissible to plead a submarket which is "economically distinct" from the general product market (in this case distinct customers who are locked-in to SAP as their ERP Applications vendor). *Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045*. An alleged submarket of SAP customers who use SAP ERP Applications products is entirely consistent with the general product market for ERP Applications dominated by SAP with competition from Oracle.

Finally, paragraph 129 [*47] asserts that SAP's Top-Tier ERP Applications, products like S/4HANA, are a "separate and distinct" market from the market for HANA and EDAW products. FAC ¶ 129. SAP argues it is contradictory to allege a market for SAP's Top-Tier ERP Applications products as well as a market for S/4HANA. I do not see the contradiction. In the context of the alleged submarket of locked-in SAP customers, some customers may use older versions of the ERP Applications and some may use S/4HANA. This paragraph is not contradictory.

The FAC's allegations that SAP exerted market power in a relevant market survive the motion to dismiss. Teradata ultimately must prove the validity of the relevant market factual element "subject to factual testing at summary judgment or trial." *Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045*.

4. The Tying Claim Assessed Under the Rule of Reason

Finally, SAP contends the tying claim should be dismissed because it must be assessed under the rule of reason, which Teradata fails to do. See Mot. to Dismiss at 21. Teradata alleges SAP's tying arrangement is both a per se violation and a rule of reason violation of the Sherman Act. I do not need to decide whether the per se or rule of reason analysis applies; that is more appropriate [*48] on a motion for summary judgment. See, e.g., In re High-Tech Employee Antitrust Litig., 856 F. Supp. 2d 1103, 1122 (N.D. Cal. 2012) (finding it inappropriate to determine whether rule or reason analysis applies until summary judgment). If one of the theories is plausible, that is sufficient at this stage.

Under the rule of reason test, Teradata must plead: (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intended to harm or restrain trade or commerce [ ]; (3) which actually injures competition." Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047 (9th Cir. 2008). In addition, Teradata must plead an antitrust injury: "(4) that they were harmed by the defendant's anti-competitive contract, combination, or conspiracy..." Brantley v. NBC Universal, Inc., 675 F.3d 1192, 1197 (9th Cir. 2012) (citations omitted). It satisfies the test.

a. Delineating a Relevant Tied Market

Starting with the first element, Teradata "must delineate a relevant market" to plead a restraint on trade that ultimately harms competition in the tied market. Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1413 (9th Cir. 1991). As with SAP's argument concerning the tying market for Top-Tier ERP Applications, it contends that the tied market allegations for EDAW products are internally contradictory. See Psystar Corp., 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1200. Teradata argues not that the relevant market is EDAW products for Top-Tier Applications customers, FAC ¶ 68, but that [*49] it is limited to existing SAP customers within a derivative aftermarket, FAC ¶¶ 129, 133. See Oppo. at 23:20-21.

SAP contends again that limiting the tied market to a single-product is impermissible, while Teradata claims that it has adequately alleged a tied market comprised of a single-product market for EDAW products used with SAP Top-Tier ERP Applications. Generally, "single brand markets do not constitute a relevant market." Datel Holdings Ltd., 712 F. Supp. 2d at 986. However, the Supreme Court, in Eastman Kodak, adopted a limited exception for a single-product "aftermarket" in which customers do not agree on restrictions that were undisclosed at the time of the purchase of the product from the primary market. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 464-78, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). The actual existence of an aftermarket is a factual question. Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1051.

In Newcal, the Ninth Circuit determined that allegations fit into the exception of Eastman Kodak to survive a motion to dismiss because of four relevant aspects of the complaint. First, the court found the complaint sufficiently alleged "two separate but related markets in intrabrand" products and services. Id. at 1049. Teradata alleges the first market is the initial market for ERP Applications products for Top-Tier ERP Applications customers, in which SAP and Oracle [*50] are the only major competitors. The second market is the derivative aftermarket for EDAW products that are "specifically designed for" SAP customer's specific ERP Application and are not "interchangeable" with EDAW products for another ERP Application. FAC ¶ 74.

The alleged aftermarket here has aspects of Eastman Kodak, but it also has aspects of an impermissible contractual aftermarket depending on what ERP Application program the customer has. See, e.g., Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1476 (9th Cir. 1997) (rejecting a contractually based restriction on competition could not form the basis for an antitrust submarket). On one hand, the market is derivative from the primary market because EDAW products for SAP ERP Applications customers would exist regardless of SAP's ERP Application products. On the other hand, EDAW products that are "specifically designed" for SAP ERP Applications and that are not "interchangeable" would only exist in a market for SAP ERP customers. Relatedly, SAP's customers who purchased S/4HANA after the alleged policy changes are not subjected to the same information disparities that Teradata alleges with other SAP ERP Applications customers because they would have purchased the product knowing that HANA was the [*51] only compatible choice for EDAW services.

The three remaining "relevant" allegations identified in Newcal are present in Teradata's FAC as well. Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1050. Teradata contends that there is a restraint on trade in the tied market for SAP customer's EDAW products but does not allege a restraint in the initial market for ERP Applications, which is competitive between Oracle and SAP. FAC ¶ 67 (alleging that SAP holds a dominant position in the ERP Applications market of about 60% to 90%, with Oracle as its only significant competitor.). Teradata claims that SAP's market power in the tied market for SAP customer EDAW products flows from its relationship with its customers in the ERP Application market because there are extremely high implementation costs for ERP Applications, and high switching costs needed to change ERP Applications providers. FAC ¶¶ 62-66. Finally, Teradata alleges that SAP customers were subjected to a change in practice that is not prevalent in the market for ERP Applications and could not be known at the time they decided to purchase SAP's product. FAC ¶ 90; see Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1050 ("The fourth relevant aspect of the complaint is that it alleges that market imperfections...prevent consumers from [*52] realizing that their choice in the initial market will impact their freedom to shop in the aftermarket.").

The relevant tied market allegations are similar to Eastman Kodak, though SAP has identified some differences that will be explored in the litigation. Teradata's allegations — taken as true and drawing reasonable inferences in its favor at this stage — are enough to survive a motion to dismiss.

b. Allegations of Anticompetitive Harm

Next, SAP contends the third element of the rule of reason violation claim is not met since there is no unreasonable anticompetitive harm alleged. SAP claims the S/4HANA product was an innovation, as discussed previously, and it relies on Brantley v. NBC Universal, Inc., 675 F.3d 1192 (9th Cir. 2012), to argue that there was no actual anticompetitive effect from the S/4HANA upgrade requiring SAP's HANA product to be used for EDAW.

As an initial matter, the argument that SAP was simply innovating a product and is therefore immune from unlawful tying antitrust claims before discovery is not convincing. The FAC does not claim SAP/4HANA was innovative or integrated the EDAW and ERP Applications products. To the contrary, the allegations concerning integration only refer to HANA as it integrated with transactional databases. [*53] See, e.g., FAC ¶ 42 (stating that like Teradata Foundation, "SAP's HANA product combines a database solution with integrated software to perform data analytics.").

SAP is right that in Brantley, the Ninth Circuit found agreements that effectively reduce customer choices or increase prices were not sufficient to allege an anticompetitive harm because "[b]oth effects are fully consistent with a free, competitive market." Brantley, 675 F.3d at 1202. But in that case, the court found that the complaint did not allege injuries to competition that are typically sufficient; such as selling product packages that "excludes other sellers... from the market," placing "barriers to entry" in the market, or causing customers to "forego the purchase of substitutes for the tied product." Id. at 1201.

Here, Teradata has alleged that SAP's market behavior excludes Teradata from the market as a direct result of SAP locking in its customer base. FAC ¶ 149. It asserts that SAP's conduct prevents Teradata's EDAW product offerings for Top-Tier ERP Applications customers from entering the market. FAC ¶ 75. It also alleges SAP's customers have little reasonable choice but to adopt HANA for EDAW rather than Teradata's substitute given the prohibitive [*54] costs of switching services and the lack of information that customers have at the time of purchase. FAC ¶ 92. This is more than enough to plead an anticompetitive injury.

B. Attempted Monopolization

An attempted monopolization claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act must first "specify the market [SAP] targeted and [SAP's] economic power within that market." United Energy Trading, LLC v. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co., 200 F. Supp. 3d 1012, 1020 (N.D. Cal. 2016). Teradata must plead that SAP: (i) had "specific intent to control prices or destroy competition;" (ii) engaged in "anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose;" (iii) has a "dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power;" and (iv) a "causal antitrust injury." Id. (citing Rebel Oil Co. v.

Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1432-33 (9th Cir. 1995)). SAP moves to dismiss the attempted monopolization claim on the ground that Teradata fails to plead a dangerous probability of monopolization. See Mot. to Dismiss at 23.

Under the Sherman Act, "monopoly power" is the power to control prices or exclude competition. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966). Monopoly power can be inferred "from the predominate share of the market." Id. Similarly, a dangerous probability of monopolization is based on "the relevant market and the defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition in that market." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993).

SAP argues again that there are no allegations [*55] about the competitive conditions in the general EDAW market for Top-Tier ERP Applications customers other than to state there are multiple competitors. FAC ¶ 75 ("EDAW products providers, such as Teradata,..."). It also asserts that because the relevant market is only "SAP's Top-Tier Applications customers," ¶¶ 143, 147, the claim must be dismissed. See Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 200 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding cases were dismissal is frequently appropriate involve attempts "to limit a product market to a single brand, franchise, institution, or comparable entity that competes with potential substitutes."). But as I explained earlier in this Order, Teradata has sufficiently alleged a relevant derivative aftermarket of SAP's Top-Tier ERP Applications customers.

The question remaining is whether Teradata has alleged that SAP has market power in the relevant EDAW market for Top-Tier Applications customers. It has. Teradata alleged that it has a market-leading EDAW product generally and that SAP was a dominant player in the Top-Tier ERP Applications market—with 60% to 90% market share on information and belief. FAC ¶¶ 31, 67. Teradata also alleges that 60% of SAP's existing ERP Applications customers "are employing or preparing to employ [*56] HANA" based on SAP's recent anticompetitive conduct. FAC ¶ 148. The FAC states there are prohibitively high switching costs combined with restrictions on customers' ability to export their own ERP Applications data to use with other EDAW products. FAC ¶¶ 75, 94. Customers in the Top-Tier ERP Applications market also lack the information at the point of purchase to perform detailed cost analyses, contributing to SAP's ability to lock-in those customers. FAC ¶¶ 60-62.

Considering these allegations regarding SAP's market share and conduct that precludes competitors from servicing its Top-Tier Applications customers in the EDAW market, I find Teradata sufficiently states a claim. Accordingly, SAP's motion to dismiss the attempted monopolization claim is DENIED.

CONCLUSION

In accordance with the foregoing, SAP's motion to dismiss is GRANTED with regards to the trade secret misappropriation claims but DENIED with regards to all other claims. Teradata does not sufficiently allege its trade secrets. Therefore, Teradata's first amended complaint is DISMISSED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND within ten days of the date of this Order.

ATTACHMENT<sup>1</sup>*ARIZONA RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE*Experimental Rule 8.1. Assignment and Management of Commercial Cases

(a) Application; Definitions. This rule applies in counties that have established specialized courtsprograms for commercial cases, which are referred to in this rule as "the commercial court." The commercial court will hear eligible "commercial cases" as defined in this Rule except as provided in Rule 8.1(d) assigned to it in accordance with this rule. To *2 be eligible for the commercial court, a commercial case must meet the requirements of Rule 8.1(b).

(1) A "commercial case" is one in which:

~~A~~at least one plaintiff and one defendant are "business organizations;"

(B)

~~T~~he primary issues of law and fact concern a "business organization;" or

(C)

~~T~~he primary issues of law and fact concern a "business contract or transaction."

(2) A "business organization" includes a sole proprietorship, corporation, partnership, limited liability company, limited partnership, master limited partnership, professional association, joint venture, business trust, or a political subdivision or government entity that is a party to a business contract or transaction. A "business organization" excludes an individual, a family trust, or a political subdivision or government entity that is not a party to a business contract or transaction.

(3) A "business contract or transaction" is one in which a business organization sold, purchased, licensed, transferred, or otherwise provided goods, materials, services, intellectual property, funds, realty, or other obligations.

(b) Eligible Case Types. A commercial case that meets one of the following descriptions is generally eligible *3 for the commercial court if it meets one of the following descriptions a commercial case:

(1)

~~C~~oncerns the internal affairs, governance, dissolution, receivership, or liquidation of a business organization;

(2)

,or bad faith,
, or a third-party indemnity claim against an insurer.

(c) Ineligible Case Types. A case that seeks only monetary relief in an amount less than $300,000 is not eligible for the commercial court. The following case types are generally not commercial cases unless business issues predominate:

(1)

Eevictions;

(2)

Eminent domain or condemnation;

(3)

Ccivil rights;

(4)

Motor vehicle torts and other torts involving personal injury to a plaintiff;

(5)

Administrative appeals;

Domestic relations, protective orders, or criminal [*5] matters, except a criminal contempt arising in a commercial court case; or

(7)

Wrongful termination of employment and statutory employment claims; or

(8)

Disputes concerning consumer contracts or transactions. A "consumer contract or transaction" is one that is primarily for personal, family, or household purposes.

(d) Compulsory Arbitration.

A commercial case that is subject to compulsory arbitration is not eligible for assignment to commercial court.

(e)(d) Assignment of Cases to the Commercial Court s.

(1) Request. A party to an eligible commercial case may request assignment of the case to the commercial court.

(1)(2)

Plaintiff's Duties By Plaintiff. A plaintiff seeking assignment of an eligible case to the commercial court must do so at the time of filing the complaint by (A) includeincluding in the initial complaint's caption the words " eligible for commercial court assignment requested," and (B) completecompleting a civil cover sheet that indicates the action is an eligible commercial case.

(3) By Other Parties. If a plaintiff has not sought assignment to the commercial court, another party, within 20 days after that party's appearance, may file a separate notice stating that the case [*6] is eligible for, and requesting assignment of the case to, the commercial court.

(2)(4) Assignment to Commercial Court.

The court administrator will review a complaint and civil cover sheet filed in accordance with Rule 8.1\(e\)\(1\) and will assign an eligible case to a commercial court judge.Upon the filing of a complaint by a plaintiff requesting assignment to the commercial court under (d)(2), or the filing by another party of a Notice Requesting Assignment to the Commercial Court under (d)(3), the case will be assigned to the commercial court.

(3)(5)

Motion to Transfer out of Commercial Court by the Presiding Judge. After assignment of a case to the commercial court, aif the commercial court judge

, upon motion of a party or on the judge's own initiative, may transfer the case out of commercial court if the judge determines the matter is not an eligible

"commercial case,

" as defined in this Rule. Any party filing a motion under this Rule must do so no later than 20 days after that party's appearance in the case.then the judge may either keep the case or request that the presiding judge or designee transfer the case out of the commercial court. If the presiding judge or designee agrees to transfer [*7] the case out of the commercial court, the presiding judge or designee may either leave the case with the judge to whom it is currently assigned or reassign the case to a general civil court.

(6) Discretion of Presiding Judge. The presiding judge or designee may reassign any case that qualifies under Rule 8.1\(b\)\(6\), \(7\), \(10\), or \(11\) to a general civil court.

(4)(7)

Motion/Judicial Request to Transfer to the Commercial Court.

On motion of a party filed within 20 days after that party's appearance in the case, or the court's own initiative w\\Within 20 days after the filing of the first responsive pleading or Rule 12 motion, a judge of a general civil court may order request the presiding judge or designee to the transfer of a case to the commercial court if that judge determines the matter is an "eligible commercial case

" as defined in this Rule.

(5)(8) Complex Cases. Assignment of a case to the commercial court does not impair the right of a party to request reassignment of the case to at the Maricopa County complex civil litigation program under applicable local rules.

Rule 8(i).

(f)(e) Case Management.

Notwithstanding any contrary language in Rule 26.2(d)(1), from the filing of the complaint unless and until the commercial court assigns the case [*8] to a different tier after the Rule 16(d) scheduling conference, cases in the commercial court are deemed to be assigned to Tier 3. Rules 16(a) through 16(j) apply to cases in the commercial court, except:

(1) Scheduling Conference. Scheduling conferences under Rule 16(d) are mandatory.

(2) Early Meeting. Before filing a Rule 16(c) Joint Report, and in addition to conferring about the subjects in Rule 16(b)(1), the parties must confer, as set forth in the commercial court's checklist governing the production of electronically stored information, and attempt to reach agreements that may be appropriate in the case concerning the disclosure and production of such information, including:

Requirements and limits on disclosure and production of electronically stored information;

The form or formats in which the electronically stored information will be disclosed or produced; and

(C)

If appropriate, sharing or shifting of costs incurred by the parties for disclosing and producing electronically stored information.

(3) Joint Report and Proposed Scheduling Order. The parties' Rule 16(b) Joint Report and Proposed Scheduling Order must address the items specified in Forms 14(a) and 14(b), including:

(A)

Whether the parties expect electronically stored information to [*9] be an issue in the case and, if so, whether they have reached an agreement regarding the discovery of electronically stored information, have filed a stipulated order, and have or anticipate disputes concerning electronically stored information;

(B)

Wwhether the parties have reached an agreement regarding the inadvertent production of privileged material pursuant to Arizona Rule of Evidence 502, and, if so, whether they have filed a stipulated order;

(C)

Wwhether any issues have arisen or are expected to arise regarding claims of privilege or protection of trial preparation materials under Rules 26(b)(6) and 26.1\(h\);

(D)

Wwhether the parties believe that a protective order is necessary and, if so, whether they have filed a stipulated protective order; and

Wwhether the commercial court should assign the case to a tier other than Tier 3 after the Rule 16\(d\) scheduling conference, and, if so, why.

(4) Motions to Dismiss. Any motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) must attach a good faith consultation certificate complying with Rule 7.1\(h\) certifying that the parties have been unable to agree that the pleading is curable by a permissible amendment.

(g)(f) Motions. With notice to the parties, a commercial court judge may modify the formal requirements of Rule 7.1\(a\) and may adopt [*10] a different practice for the efficient and prompt resolution of motions.

(g) Cases Not in the Commercial Court. The case management procedures in Rule 8.1\(e\) are available to any judge who finds those procedures beneficial, wholly or partially, in managing a commercial case that is not assigned to the commercial court, or that is pending in a county that has not established a commercial court.

ORDER

Before this Court is "Medical Modeling, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint and Incorporated Memorandum of Law" (Dkt. 14), "Plaintiff's Response in Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss and Incorporated Memorandum of Law" (Dkt. 28), and "Medical Modeling, Inc.'s Reply in Support of its Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint and Incorporated [*2] Memorandum of Law" (Dkt. 41).

Plaintiff KLS initially sued Defendant, Medical Modeling, Inc. ("MM"), in the Circuit Court for the Fourth Judicial Circuit in and for Duval County, Florida, but MM removed the case to this Court, under 28 U.S.C. § 1441 and 1446. (Dkt. 1). On February 09, 2018, the operative six-count Amended Complaint was filed alleging violations by MM of KLS's rights under the Florida Antitrust Act of the Florida Statutes, section 542.15, et seq., (Count I); breach of contract under Colorado law (Count II); tortious interference with advantageous business and contractual relationships (Count III); trade libel (Count IV); unfair competition (Count V); and violations of Florida's Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act (Count VI). (Dkt. 2). In addition, KLS seeks injunctive relief requiring MM to resume providing VSP services and pecuniary damages for its lost business and damage to its reputation. Id.

Since 1993, KLS has distributed implantable medical devices and related medical equipment throughout the United States, (Dkt. 2 ¶ 11), distributing products directly to hospitals and physicians. (Dkt. 2 ¶ 12). KLS became well-known in the craniomaxillofacial<sup>2</sup> ("CMF") field for its quality products. (Dkt. 2 ¶ 11). MM was [*3] a pioneer in manufacturing anatomical models, (Dkt. 2 ¶ 16), and by 2000 it was well established as a vendor in the CMF industry, with KLS as its primary vendor. (Dkt. 2 ¶ 18).

When a customer ordered a CMF model for a surgery, both KLS and MM had a role in the development. (Dkt. 2 ¶ 17). A surgeon would request that KLS provide a model of a particular patient's anatomy. Id. KLS would share the patient's information with MM, by way of an electronic image or computer technology, and MM would use that information to create a unique model. Id. MM would then provide the model to KLS for distribution to the customer. Id.

On August 30, 2001, KLS and MM entered into a formal distribution agreement ("2001 Agreement") which MM drafted. (Id. ¶ 19-20). The 2001 Agreement provided:

2. Products, The term Products as used In this Agreement shall mean the ClearView™ line of models described on Schedule A hereto (the "ClearView Line"), Including any improvements, changes and extensions that are designed and developed during the term of this Agreement. Any Improvements, changes and extensions with respect to the product will be set forth on an amendment to the appropriate Schedule, executed by an Authorized [*4] Representative (designated pursuant to Section 13(b) hereof) of each of KLS MARTIN and MEDICAL MODELING, prior to the commencement of commercial marketing thereof.

9. Termination,

(a) This Agreement, unless otherwise terminated as provided herein, shall remain in full force and effect for an initial term expiring one year from the date stated on page 1. Not later than one month before that date the parties shall review this Agreement and decide whether [sic] to extend or modify it. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this Agreement shall be automatically renewed for successive one-year terms unless either party gives written notice to the other of its Intention not to renew at least one month prior to the expiration of the initial term and each subsequent renewal term,

(b) Notwithstanding the foregoing, this Distribution Agreement may be terminated at an earlier date upon the earlier to occur of any of the following:

(I) By either party upon 30 days written notice to the other;

(II) By either party for breach of this Agreement by the other, unless the breaching party shall have corrected such breach within 30 days from the receipt by it of written notice thereof from the other party; or

<sup>1</sup> These are not necessarily the facts. For the purposes of a motion to dismiss, courts take a plaintiff's well-pleaded factual allegations as true, without making credibility assessments or engaging in fact-finding. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 677, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\).

(III) By either [*5] party in the event that the other shall go into liquidation, or seek the benefit of any bankruptcy or insolvency act, or a receiver or trustee is appointed for its property or estate, or it makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, whether any of the aforesaid events be the outcome of the voluntary act of such other party or otherwise.

(c) The termination of this Agreement for any reason shall be without prejudice to MEDICAL MODELING's right to receive all payments accrued and unpaid at the effective date of such termination, to the rights of KLS MARTIN and its customers pursuant to Sections 8 and 9 of this Agreement and to the remedy of either party hereto in respect of any previous breach of any of the covenants herein contained. The termination of this Agreement shall not release MEDICAL MODELING from its obligation to deliver all Products theretofore ordered by KLS MARTIN.

13. Entire Agreement, This Agreement and the Schedules hereto constitute the entire agreement between KLS MARTIN and MEDICAL MODELING with respect to the subject matter hereof and supersede all prior agreements, letters of intent, understandings, representations and statements, if any, regarding the subject [*6] matter contained herein, whether oral or written. No modification or amendment of this Agreement shall be valid and binding upon the parties unless made in writing and signed on behalf of each of such parties by an authorized representative.

14. Governing Law, This Agreement shall be construed and interpreted in accordance with the laws of the State of Colorado.

(Dkt. 2, Exh. A, pgs. 4, 6, 7-8).

In 2005, KLS and MM worked on a digital modeling technology ("VSP") to be used by doctors as an alternative to the models covered in the 2001 Agreement. (Id. ¶ 27). VSP provides virtual models for the surgeon's use in planning CMF surgical procedures. The parties signed a non-disclosure agreement regarding the technology being developed on July 20, 2005. (Id. ¶ 27).

It was not until 2014, almost ten years later, that KLS and MM engaged in negotiations for a comprehensive long-term contract for exclusive VSP distribution rights. Several drafts were shared (collectively the "2014 Drafts") but no contract was executed. (Id. ¶ 38).

In late 2017 through early 2018, representatives of MM and KLS continued discussions regarding the formation of a long-term supply agreement. (Dkt. 2 ¶ 54-55). Despite these [*7] discussions, on January 13, 2018, Katie Weimer, MM's representative, called KLS and notified them that MM would be terminating the existing arrangement. (Id. ¶ 60). That notification was followed on January 18, 2018, by written confirmation of intent to terminate their business relationship, stating that distribution would end on February 19, 2018, under Section 9(b) of the 2001 Agreement. (Id. ¶ 71-72). Before that written notification was provided, however, on January 14 and 15, 2018, MM's agents called the majority of KLS' customers to inform them that KLS would be "cut off" on January 31, and that Stryker Corporation would be MM's distributor. (Id. ¶ 63-64).

II. Standard of Review

In deciding on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a district court must construe the complaint broadly, Levine v. World Fin. Network Nat'l Bank, 437 F.3d 1118, 1120 (11th Cir. 2006), and the allegations in the complaint must be viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Hawthorne v. MacAdjustment, Inc., 140 F.3d 1367, 1370 (11th Cir. 1998); Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974). However, as the Supreme Court explained, "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Although Rule 12(b)(6) allows "a well-pleaded complaint [to] proceed even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof of those facts is improbable," the "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative [*8] level." Id.; Watts v. Fla. Int'l Univ., 495 F.3d 1289 (11th Cir. 2007).

The Supreme Court teaches in Twombly that a complaint must contain "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest" the required element. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. The rule "does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage," but "simply calls for enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of the element. Id. It is adequate if the complaint succeeds in "identifying facts that are suggestive enough to render [the element] plausible." Id.

III. Analysis

MM seeks dismissal of all counts in KLS' action. This Court will first address two threshold matters emphasized by MM: whether Counts I, V, and VI, KLS' claims arising under Florida law, must be dismissed because Colorado law applies by the plain language of the contracts; and whether Counts II, III, and IV must be dismissed because KLS has not explained which law applies to these claims. This Court will then address the remaining claims.

A. Counts I, V, and VI — Choice of Law Clause

MM contends KLS' claims under Florida law, Counts I, V and VI, must be dismissed because Colorado law, not Florida law, applies to all disputes arising out of the parties' various contracts. (Dkt. 14). KLS insists the choice of law clauses [*9] applied only to disputes related to the contracts themselves, not to tort or statutory claims arising out of that business relationship. (Dkt. 28).

The parties agree Florida's choice of law rules begin this analysis. Whether KLS' claims of unlawful restraint of trade, unfair competition and FDUTPA violations are properly brought under Florida law depend on whether the choice of law clauses applies, and if so, which one.

Florida law explains the specific language of a choice of law provision is decisive. Broadly written clauses such as "all disputes arising out of or in connection with" are construed to include tort and statutory claims that result from the contracted business relationship. Cooper v. Meridian Yachts, 575 F.3d 1151, 1162 (11th Cir. 2009). Narrowly written provisions addressing only "the agreement" apply strictly to contract disputes. Id. In the event that a choice of law clause is sufficiently narrow not to apply to a particular claim, Florida law applies to a contract made in that state. Technical Sols. Int'l v. Partech, Inc., No. 10-60047-CIV-JORDAN, 2010 WL 11549396 (S.D. Fla. Nov. 9, 2010).

The 2001 Agreement's choice of law clause is written narrowly. The clause provides: "This Agreement shall be construed and interpreted in accordance with the laws of the State of Colorado." (Dkt. [*10] 2-1 at 14). The choice of law clause in the 2014 Drafts, by contrast, includes "the legal relations between the parties," so it would require all claims to be brought under Colorado law. As discussed below, the 2014 drafts form no binding agreement. Regardless of if the 2001 Agreement applies, or if no VSP contract exists, KLS may bring the tort and statutory claims under Florida law.<sup>3</sup>

B. Counts II, III, and IV — Failure to Plead State Law

MM insists that Counts II, III, and IV are insufficiently plead because they do not identify which state law applies. (Dkt. 14 p. 8). KLS responds that it specifically stated Colorado law applied to Count II, and that it can be reasonably concluded from the Complaint that Florida law applied to Counts III and IV, because KLS initially plead them in Florida state court, and because they are based on the commission of tortious acts within Florida. (Dkt. 28 p. 3).

<sup>3</sup> MM's assertion that "plaintiff cannot have it both ways" regarding the application of the contracts cuts both ways. If the 2014 Agreement is not binding—as MM urges—then MM cannot rely on its choice of law provision to dismiss KLS's tort claims.

MM relies on two cases to support its contention that a claim that does not specify state law should be dismissed: Knights Armament Co. v. Optical Systems Technology, Inc., 568 F. Supp. 2d 1369, 1377 (M.D. Fla. 2008), and in re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litigation, 781 F. Supp. 2d 955, 966 (N.D. Cal. 2011). However, both Knights Armament and in re TFT-LCD were dismissed only after the plaintiffs refused to clarify in their responses which state's law was intended. Here, KLS has [*11] clarified that Florida law governs all claims except for the breach of contract. Hence, Counts II, III and IV appear to be properly pled under Florida law.

C. Count I — Unlawful Restraint of Trade

KLS alleges that MM is liable for unlawful restraint of trade under the Florida Antitrust Act of 1980 for conspiring with Stryker to restrain trade in violation of Fla. Stat. § 542.18; and attempted monopolization in violation of Fla. Stat. § 542.19. MM insists these claims must be dismissed because KLS' antitrust claims are based on an economically irrational theory, the allegations do not support the necessary elements of a conspiracy to restrain trade, and the Colgate doctrine bars liability.<sup>4</sup>

The parties' dispute depends largely on the standard this Court utilizes in analyzing these allegations. MM insists that KLS' allegations resemble a vertical restraint of trade, which would be analyzed under the rule of reason—a stringent standard. (Dkt. 14). KLS responds that its allegations could suggest a tying arrangement, which would be analyzed "per se," or a more lenient standard.<sup>5</sup>

The parties' emphasis on the standard to be applied reflects the larger challenge facing rule of reason plaintiffs. "Per se" violations [*12] are those whose conduct is manifestly anticompetitive, and therefore a plaintiff's burden is much lower; only proof of a defendant's agreement to operate in that anticompetitive manner is required. Levine, 72 F.3d at 1551. Whereas, the "rule of reason" prohibits commercial actions that unreasonably restrain trade; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 58-64, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619 (1911); Spanish Broadcasting System of Florida, Inc. v. Clear Channel Communications, Inc., 376 F.3d 1065, 1071 (11th Cir. 2004) (citing Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 266, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986)), so when a plaintiff alleges a rule of reason violation, the plaintiff also must prove the defendant's conduct is anticompetitive and lacks any competitive justification. Levine, 72 F.3d at 1551.

KLS maintains that its allegations survive a motion to dismiss even if this Court finds it has alleged a vertical restraint on trade to be analyzed by the rule of reason. This Court will therefore address the sufficiency of KLS' allegations first under the theory of a tying arrangement, and then under the theory of a vertical restraint on trade.

a. Tying Arrangement

The Supreme Court teaches that "a tying arrangement may be defined as an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). Tying agreements are problematic because "[t]hey deny competitors free [*13] access to the market for the tied product, not because the party imposing the tying requirements has a better product or a lower price but because of his power or leverage in another market. At the same time buyers are forced to forego their free choice between competing products." Id. at 6.

---

<sup>4</sup> The Colgate doctrine refers to the Supreme Court's teaching in United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919) that "a manufacturer has the right to select its customers and refuse to sell its goods to anyone for reasons sufficient to itself without violating the Sherman Act. Burdett Sound, Inc. v. Altec Corp., 515 F.2d 1245, 1248 (5th Cir. 1975). This is true even if the effect of the change is to "seriously damage the former distributor's business." Id. at 1249. Since Colgate, courts have repeatedly emphasized the rule. See, e.g., Northwest Power Prods., Inc. v. Omark Indus., Inc., 576 F.2d 83 (5th Cir. 1978); Bushie v. Stenocord Corp., 460 F.2d 116 (9th Cir. 1972); Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc. v. Hawaiian Oke and Liquors, Ltd., 416 F.2d 71, 78 (9th Cir. 1969).

<sup>5</sup> KLS insists that even if this Court finds that its allegations are governed by the rule of reason, it has still alleged an antitrust claim.

KLS' pleadings indicate VSP is being exclusively provided to Stryker, but do not suggest that separate products are being tied together—or clarify what those separate products might be. KLS mentions it has tied its "VSP services to Stryker's VSP products." (Dkt. 28). But from the allegations, those seem essentially the same thing to the end consumers: a digital surgical model. KLS' general pleading of restraint of trade is insufficient because a tying claim has specific elements that a plaintiff must allege. See S. Card & Novelty, Inc. v. Lawson Mardon Label, Inc., 138 F.3d 869, 874 (11th Cir. 1998); Clark Mem'l's of Ala., Inc. v. Sci Ala. Funeral Servs. LLC, 991 F. Supp. 2d 1151, 1159 (N.D. Ala. 2014) (citing T. Harris Young & Assocs., Inc. v. Marquette Elecs., Inc., 931 F.2d 816, 822 (11th Cir. 1991)). Therefore, the facts alleged create no tying claim.

b. Vertical Restraint on Trade

KLS' allegations suggest no vertical restraint on trade to be analyzed under the rule of reason, because the facts fail to indicate a unique product market. To state a claim under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must plead (1) there is a specifically defined, relevant market; (2) that the defendants possessed [*14] the ability to affect price or output; and (3) that plaintiff's exclusion from the market was intended to affect the price or supply within that market. Greenberg v. Mount Sinai Med. Ctr. Of Greater Miami, Inc., 629 So. 2d 252, 257 (Fla. 3d DCA 1993). "It is not enough to allege that plaintiffs were injured; there must be an allegation of harm to competition in general." Id.

A market has two components—geographic and product. Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 464 (3d Cir. 1998). The existence of a product market is determined by identifying the reasonably interchangeable goods and their availability from other sources. United States v. E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956); see also Levine, 72 F.3d at 1552. All goods that can be substituted for one another and have the same essential use by consumers comprise a market. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481-82, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992); Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 438 (3d Cir. 1997). "The boundaries of the product market are determined by 'the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it.'" United States v. Engelhard Corp., 126 F.3d 1302, 1305 (11th Cir. 1997) (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). The Supreme Court teaches that courts should consider factors such as "industry or public recognition of the submarket . . . the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors" along with the cross-elasticity of demand between products. Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 325 (emphasis added).<sup>6</sup> In practice this has [*15] resulted in single brands constituting a market, Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 451, and glass and metal containers being grouped together in a market because of their interchangeability. United States v. Cont'l Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 449, 84 S. Ct. 1738, 12 L. Ed. 2d 953 (1964).

KLS fails to show that VSP constitutes a unique product market and, therefore, no further analysis is required. KLS failed to plead a product market because it refers to VSP only as "state of the art."<sup>7</sup> (Dkt. 2). It does not indicate whether alternatives are used by practicing surgeons, or whether VSP is now the only acceptable option. Without more information about reasonable alternatives or the lack thereof, it is impossible to determine that MM has the power to negatively impact the market for CMF products. Consequently, KLS' claim of unlawful restraint of trade in violation of the Florida Antitrust Act is unsustainable.

<sup>6</sup> The court in Geneva Pharm. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 386 F.3d 485, 496 (2d Cir. 2004) noted that referring to a product as a distinct "submarket" is essentially another way of defining a market, because the crux of the "market" as applied to antitrust law is the offered product's interchangeability. Consumer access to a viable substitute is the concern.

<sup>7</sup> Black's Law Dictionary defines "state of the art" to mean the "total of technical and scientific knowledge that is currently available as applied to a product or design." This does not necessarily exclude all other products; it indicates that VSP is at least equal to other substitutable products which may also be state of the art.

D. Count II — Breach of Contract

KLS suggests two theories under which MM is liable for breach of contract under Colorado law.<sup>8</sup> First, KLS argues that MM breached the 2001 Agreement. KLS believes the 2001 Agreement applied to VSP because it is a "natural improvement" to the technology covered by the contract; and that the provisions for termination in the 2001 Agreement only allowed either party to terminate the contract [*16] without cause within thirty days of the renewal date. In the alternative, KLS contends that the parties' course of dealing, supplemented by the 2014 Drafts, created binding obligations on MM which MM breached by terminating their business relationship.

a. Breach of the 2001 Agreement

Whether MM violated a binding obligation of termination notice for the provision of VSP technology under the 2001 Agreement is a two-part question. To prevail KLS must show: (a) the 2001 Agreement applied to VSP when KLS alleges breach; and (b) the notification MM gave for termination was insufficient because the contract required a longer period of notice for termination. The plain meaning of the 2001 Agreement provides no basis for finding insufficient notice because it requires only 30 days' notice, which MM gave, and therefore KLS has not pleaded a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Colorado law rejects contractual interpretation that contradict a contract's plain meaning. Courts "should not rewrite the provisions of an unambiguous document, but must enforce an unambiguous contract in accordance with the plain and ordinary meaning of its terms." USI Props. E., Inc. v. Simpson, 938 P.2d 168, 173 \(Colo. 1997\). To answer the question of what is ambiguous language, [*17] "the instrument's language must be examined and construed in harmony with the plain and generally accepted meaning of the words employed." Id. Extraneous evidence regarding the intent of the parties is therefore only considered by the court when an ambiguity exists in the contract. KN Energy, Inc. v. Great W. Sugar Co., 698 P.2d 769, 776 \(Colo. 1985\).

Section 9(a) of the 2001 Agreement details the automatic renewal after a year; and section 9(b) allows either party to exit the contract with 30 days of notice. KLS' claim that section 9(b) pertains only to termination "for cause" which is contrary to the wording of section 9(b) which provide: "Notwithstanding the foregoing, this . . . Agreement may be terminated [upon] any of the following." Id. Section 9(b) provides three specific ways to terminate the 2001 Agreement: (I) by either party upon 30 days written notice to the other; (II) by either party for breach, unless the breaching party corrects the breach within 30 days; or (III) by either party if one or the other goes into bankruptcy, liquidation or insolvency. Id. The fact that 9(b)(II) and 9(b)(III) both include "for cause" does not also require that 9(b)(I) must also include "for cause." Courts read contracts to avoid redundancy and to "give effect to all the contract's provisions." Bledsoe Land Co., LLP v. Forest Oil Corp., 277 P. 3d 838, 846 \(Co. Ct. App. 2011\). Reading 9(b)(I) to [*18] require thirty days' notice "for cause" would make 9(b)(II) surplusage.

The potential breach of the 2001 Agreement premised on the facts alleged in that MM failed to provide 30 days' notice because it cancelled the contract early. KLS has alleged that MM informed members of the industry it would be cancelling the KLS contract on January 31, approximately 19 days earlier than the termination agreement permitted. (Dkt. 2). However, KLS did not allege that as a cause of action.

b. Breach of the 2014 Drafts

KLS' theory that the 2014 Drafts formed a binding agreement is incorrect. Even accepting KLS' assumption that the Colorado Uniform Commercial Code ("UCC") governs this agreement, the "Battle of the Forms" section of the UCC applies, C.R.S.A. § 4-2-207 n.1 (amended 1966), where both parties act as if a contract existed even though the agreements did not match nor were they signed by both parties. Here the parties had been engaged in a nearly seventeen year existing business relationship. The UCC cannot be read to imply a new contract each time one party to an existing at-will business relationship suggests a more comprehensive agreement. A course of dealing may clarify the meaning of an agreement, [*19] or to demonstrate the existence of an agreement, but it may not create one.

<sup>8</sup> Both the 2001 Agreement and the 2014 Drafts are subject to Colorado law because as discussed in Section A, both contain choice of law clauses adopting Colorado law for contract disputes.

MM did not breach the 2001 Agreement, and the 2014 Drafts and course of dealing create no binding obligation on MM. KLS has not stated a theory of contract upon which this Court can grant relief, and therefore Count II is due to be dismissed.

E. Count III — Tortious Interference

KLS maintains that MM is liable for tortious interference because it improperly interfered with KLS' customer relationships by making false or misleading statements to KLS' customers regarding the timing of the termination of their relationship and KLS' ability to continue providing VSP. (Dkt. 2 ¶ 100).

MM argues, in response, that tortious interference does not exist where, as here, the defendant is no stranger to the relationship it allegedly interfered with. In addition, MM suggests KLS' tortious interference claim also fails because both Colorado and Florida law recognize that the acts of an alleged competitor cannot support a claim unless the competitor acted using improper means, and none is alleged here. Finally, KLS fails, according to MM, to identify any particular contract with which MM allegedly interfered. (Dkt. 14 pp. 17-19). [*20]

A plaintiff claiming tortious interference must allege: "(1) the existence of a business relationship, not necessarily evidenced by an enforceable contract, under which the plaintiff has legal rights; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) an intentional and unjustified interference with the relationship by the defendant; and (4) damage to the plaintiff." Palm Beach Cty. Health Care Dist. v. Prof'l. Med. Educ., Inc., 13 So. 3d 1090, 1094 \(Fla. 4th DCA 2018\) (quoting Salit v. Ruden, McClosky, Smith, Schuster & Russell, P.A., 742 So. 2d 381, 385 \(Fla. 4th DCA 1999\).

MM's argument that KLS failed to properly identify a "particular contract," takes aim at the first element, the existence of a business relationship, but no particular contract need be evidenced. A plaintiff must only show that "an understanding between the parties would have been completed had the defendant not interfered." Landry v. Hornstein, 462 So. 2d 844, 846 \(Fla. 3d DCA 1985\). KLS has asserted that several longstanding customers who otherwise intended to continue purchasing VSP from KLS abandoned their business relationships. (Dkt. 2, Ex. G).

MM's motion also argues the third element, intentional and unjustified interference, is unmet by claiming the interference privilege. Essentially, the privilege to interfere stands for the principle that a party with an interest in a business relationship cannot unjustly interfere with that relationship. Rudnick v. Sears, 358 F. Supp. 2d 1201, 1205 \(S.D. Fla. 2005\). The interference [*21] privilege is not absolute, however it "is divested when the defendant acts solely with ulterior purposes and the advice is not in the principal's best interest." O.E. Smith's Sons, Inc. v. George, 545 So. 2d 298, 299 \(1st DCA 1989\).

MM cites Occusafe, Inc. v. EG&G Rocky Flats, Inc., 54 F.3d 618, 623 \(10th Cir. 1995\) in insisting that to defeat the competition privilege, KLS must show improper means such as "physical violence, fraud, civil suits, and criminal prosecution." The Eleventh Circuit does not construe "improper means" so narrowly. See Bluesky Greenland v. Envtl. Sols., LLC v. 21st Century Planet Fund, LLC, 985 F. Supp. 2d 1356, 1367 \(S.D. Fla. 2013\) (clarifying that misrepresentations also defeat the interference privilege). The rulings in this Circuit are aligned with the Second Restatement of Torts, which states: "the propriety [of the defendant's conduct] is determined in light of all the factors present . . . fraudulent misrepresentations are also ordinarily a wrongful means of interference." Restatement \(Second\) of Torts § 767 cmt. c. (Am. Law. Inst. 1979) (emphasis added). See International Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Austral Insulated Products, Inc., 262 F.3d 1152, 1160 \(11th Cir 2001\); Slip-N-Slide Records, Inc. v. T.V.T. Records, LLC, No. 05-21113-CIV-TORRES, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9014, 2007 WL 473273, at \*4 \(S.D. Fla. Feb. 8, 2007\).

KLS alleged that MM represented to KLS' customers that KLS could no longer provide them services, and that MM was dishonest about the date the relationship would be ending. These representations induced customers to switch to a higher priced VSP provider before [*22] the customers needed to. KLS has demonstrated both an injured business relationship, and it has suggested an improper means which would sever the privilege of interference.

F. Count IV — Trade Libel

KLS alleges that MM committed trade libel by lying to KLS' customers and slandering its reputation in telling them that KLS could not continue providing them VSP services. (Dkt. 2 ¶ 103-110). However, MM correctly responds that KLS has not alleged special damages, (Dkt. 14 p. 20), a threshold requirement for trade libel, and therefore KLS' claim of trade libel is due to be dismissed.

A claim of trade libel under Florida law requires both a false communication (which induces others not to deal with the plaintiff) and special damages. *Salit v. Ruden, McClosky, Smith, Schuster & Russell, P.A., 742 So. 2d 381, 388 \(Fla. 4th DCA 1999\)*. "The 'special damage rule requires the plaintiff to establish pecuniary loss that has been realized or liquidated, as in the case of specific lost sales.'" Id. (quoting W. Page Keeton, et al., Prosser and Keeton on The Law of Torts § 128 at 971 (5th ed.1984)). If a plaintiff claims general diminution, it should allege facts demonstrating the difference in sales prior to the alleged libel and after it, and also explain why it could not identify which particular customers [*23] withheld business. See *National Numismatic Certification, LLC, No. 6:08-cv-42-Or1-19GJK, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109793, 2008 WL 2704404, at \*19 \(M.D. Fla. 2008\)*.

KLS has not alleged special damages. It has only referenced unnamed "customers," without stating a diminution in business. To sustain its claim of trade libel KLS must allege facts demonstrating a difference in business volume resulting from the alleged libel.

G. Count V — Unfair Competition

KLS alleges that MM engaged in unfair competition to KLS' detriment by misleading KLS' customers, misleading KLS in negotiations, fraudulently misrepresenting to KLS' customers, and engaging in other forms of anticompetitive conduct. (Dkt. 2 ¶ 112-16). MM responds that because KLS has failed to state a claim under tortious interference and trade libel, this claim must be dismissed as well because unfair competition is a mere "umbrella" for other statutory causes of action. (Dkt. 14 p. 21).

MM's contention is that it is not a competitor of KLS. MM directly contests KLS' allegations and it is therefore not proper to consider on a motion to dismiss. Unlike in *Home Design Servs., Inc. v. Park Square Enters., Inc., Case No. 6:02-CV-637, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33627, 2005 WL 1027370 \(M.D. Fla. May 2, 2005\)*, MM here is alleged to have deliberately "pirated away" customers to a new distributor. [*24] In Home Design Servs., "any customers confused by . . . allegedly fraudulent practices could have been neither real nor potential customers of [plaintiff]," here MM was seeking KLS' customer pool and directing them towards a preferred competitor. Taking KLS' allegations as true, MM competed with KLS and is therefore a "competitor" for an unfair competition claim.

I. Count VI — Florida's Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act

MM contends that KLS has not alleged a "deceptive act" or "unfair practice" and also that it has not alleged actual damages. (Dkt. 14 pp. 22-24). MM is incorrect that KLS has not alleged an unfair practice, because "unfair practice" must be liberally construed. MM is correct that no actual damages have been alleged, and therefore KLS' recovery under Count VI must be limited to injunctive relief.

The Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA") was passed to "protect . . . legitimate business enterprises from those who engage in unfair methods of competition, or unconscionable, deceptive, or unfair . . . practices in the course of any trade or commerce." *Fla. Stat. § 501.202\(2\)* (2018). Deceptive and unfair are not defined; but the Florida Legislature intended courts to construe [*25] those terms liberally. Samuels v. King Motor Co. of Ft. Lauderdale, 782 So. 2d 489, 499 (Fla. 4th DCA 2001). KLS' allegations of MM's conduct meet a liberal construction of "deceptive" because sham negotiations to prevent a consumer from finding a new supplier before being cut off—and misrepresenting the date that the contract would end to a buyer's customers—are "likely to mislead."

However, to recover damages under FDUTPA a plaintiff must also plead that the deceptive or unfair act caused "actual damages." To determine actual damages under FDUTPA, Florida courts have explained,

"[T]he measure of actual damages is the difference in the market value of the product or service in the condition in which it was delivered and its market value in the condition in which it should have been delivered according to the contract of the parties. [ ] A notable exception to the rule may exist when the product is rendered valueless as a result of the defect—then the purchase price is the appropriate measure of actual damages."

Rollins, Inc. v. Butland, 951 So. 2d 860, 869 (Fla. 2d DCA. 2006) (citing Rollins, Inc. v. Heller, 454 So. 2d 580, 585 (Fla. 3d DCA 1984)). Consequential damages are not recoverable under a FDUTPA claim. Fort Lauderdale Lincoln Mercury, Inc. v. Corgnati, 715 So. 2d 311, 314 (Fla. 4th DCA 1998). Courts have granted Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissals of complaints under FDUTPA that did not allege facts consistent with a loss in market value. See BPI Sports, LLC v. Labdoor, Inc., No. 15-62212-CIV-BLOOM, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23033, 2016 WL 739652, at *1 (S.D. Fla. Feb. 25, 2016).

As in [*26] BPI, KLS has not alleged facts demonstrating a change in market value of their services. Their allegations indicate a loss in sales volume; the only allegations that could plausibly relate to their VSP service's "market value" would be the ones in their response to MM's Motion to Dismiss. Plaintiff's claim for damages under FDUTPA is therefore insufficiently pled.

However, if KLS has not alleged specific facts indicating actual damages does not dispense with their FDUTPA claim. Section 501.211 of the Florida Statutes reads:

(1) Without regard to any other remedy or relief to which a person is entitled, anyone aggrieved by a violation of this part may bring an action . . . to enjoin a person who has violated, is violating, or is otherwise likely to violate this part.

Fla. Stat. § 501.211\(1\) (2001) (emphasis added). The Court in Galstadi v. Sunvest Communities USA, LLC, 637 F. Supp. 2d 1045, 1057 (S.D. Fla. 2009) explained that, "[t]he statute is clear on its face . . . declaratory relief is available regardless of whether an adequate remedy at law also exists." KLS has alleged facts indicating deception by MM and therefore properly alleged a FDUTPA claim for injunctive relief.

I. Injunctive Relief

To qualify for temporary injunctive relief, a plaintiff must show (1) irreparable harm would result without the relief; (2) an adequate [*27] remedy at law is unavailable; (3) substantial likelihood of success on the merits; and (4) entry of the temporary injunction is in the best interest of the public. Foreclosure FreeSearch, Inc. v. Sullivan, 12 So.3d 771, 775 (Fla. 4th DCA 2009). KLS' pleadings suggest no basis for finding that irreparable harm will occur without the relief, because (a) if taken as true, pecuniary damages could suffice; and (b) the damage to KLS is not necessarily "irreparable." Consequently, KLS is not entitled to temporary injunctive relief.

Accordingly, it is ORDERED:

1. Medical Modeling's "Medical Modeling, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint" (Dkt. 14) is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART, as follows:

a. The motion is DENIED as to Counts III, V, and VI of the Amended Complaint;

- b. The motion is GRANTED as to Counts I, II and IV of the Amended Complaint;
2. Counts I, II and IV of Plaintiff's Amended Complaint are DISMISSED without Prejudice; and
3. Plaintiff will have fourteen days from the date of this Order to file a Second Amended Complaint, should it choose to do so.

DONE AND ORDERED at Jacksonville, Florida, this 14th day of December, 2018.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

PATRICIA A. SULLIVAN, United States Magistrate Judge.

The commercial dispute framed by these contentiously litigated cases<sup>1</sup> has finally cleared the discovery hurdles and reached the summary judgment phase, though not without significant bumps along the way.<sup>2</sup> The first of the two cases (13-33) was initially filed in Canada, on August 2, 2012, and was refiled in this Court on January 17, 2013. As framed in the operative pleading, the Fourth Amended Complaint, (ECF No. 80) ("13-33 complaint"), 13-33 is a simple collection action, seeking to recover money for plumbing push-fit products sold, delivered and accepted. The second case — 13-56 — was filed on January 25, 2013. As amended, its operative pleading is the Second Amended Verified Complaint, (13-56 ECF No. 135)<sup>3</sup> ("13-56 complaint"), which counters the collection action with eleven Counts alleging, inter alia, breach of various non-competition, confidentiality, non-solicitation and non-disclosure clauses in the agreements between the parties, the misappropriation of trade secrets, the [*4] stealing of intellectual property, defamation and the delivery of unmerchantable and defective goods. Many (but not all) of the claims in 13-56 are counterclaims in 13-33. ECF No. 81 (Amended Counterclaim) ("13-33 counterclaims"). Ultimately, the cases were consolidated (without prejudice to bifurcation for trial) on September 30, 2015.<sup>4</sup> Unless otherwise indicated, all docket references in this report and recommendation will be to 13-33, which the Court has designated as the lead case.

<sup>1</sup> Since they were filed in 2013, these cases have been the subject of many judicial decisions. See, e.g., Wai Feng Trading Co. Ltd v. Quick Fitting, Inc., C.A. <sup>2</sup> After considerable wrangling, fact discovery in these cases finally closed on April 15, 2016, with additional time to complete specified discovery. Wai Feng Trading, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77672, 2016 WL 4184014, at *7. The Court held its first summary judgment conference on April 10, 2017, and set a briefing schedule. Text Order of May 18, 2017. After briefing began, the Court held a second conference and ordered the parties to start over, requiring them first to file the undisputed and disputed facts and then to refile the summary judgment briefs once the factual record was settled. Following a third conference, the deadlines were extended. Text Orders of Aug. 16, Oct. 20 and Dec. 7, 2017. Additional extensions were also granted. Text Orders of Jan. 8, Jan. 24, Feb. 26 and Mar. 30, 2018. The resulting record — including not only the summary judgment record, but also the record for the related motions — is massive, amounting to almost seven thousand pages of material.

Now pending before the Court in each of the cases are six motions for summary judgment, five brought by the Wai Feng parties<sup>5</sup> and one brought by Quick Fitting,<sup>6</sup> as well as eight motions to strike brought by the Wai Feng parties

<sup>3</sup> Quick Fitting moved to amend (13-56 ECF No. 178) its complaint after this iteration to add the verification, which had been omitted. That motion was granted by text order on February 23, 2016, but the amended pleading was never filed, leaving 13-56 ECF No. 135 as the operative complaint.

<sup>4</sup> The cases were initially consolidated, then deconsolidated and eventually reconsolidated. Quick Fitting, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132899, 2015 WL 5775149, at \*1-3.

<sup>5</sup> The "Wai Feng parties" include the plaintiffs in 13-33 and most of the defendants in 13-56. They are:

- Wai Feng Trading Co. Ltd. ("Wai Feng Trading"), a Canadian company, and its sometime alter ego, Eastern Foundry & Fittings, Inc. ("EFF Inc.");
- EFF Manufactory Co., Ltd. ("EFF Manufactory"), [*5] a Chinese company sometimes called Ningbo EFF Manufactory Co., Ltd. and Ningbo W&F Manufactory Co., Ltd.;
- Eastern Foundry & Fittings, LLC ("EFF LLC"), a Massachusetts limited liability company;
- Wai Mao Company, Ltd. ("Wai Mao"), a Canadian company; and
- Chi Yam Yung ("Andrew Yung"), an individual who resides in Canada and China.

EFF LLC, Wai Mao and Andrew Yung are defendants only in 13-56. In addition to the Wai Feng parties, several other defendants were named in 13-56 but are not parties. These are:

- W&F Manufacturing ("W&F Manufacturing") was held to be a trade name and not an entity subject to suit, ECF No. 132 at 13;
- Chi Pang Yung ("Jacky Yung"), a citizen of Canada and brother of Andrew Yung, was held not to be subject to personal jurisdiction in this District, Quick Fitting, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131451, 2015 WL 5719571, at \*3-4;
- Jimmy Yung, the father of Andrew and Jacky Yung, was voluntarily dismissed, 13-56 ECF No. 93; and
- Cixi City Wai Feng Ball Valve Company, Ltd. ("CCWFBV"), later known as Ningbo Texoon Brass Works Co., Ltd., a Chinese company owned by an uncle of Andrew and Jacky Yung, was never served.

Mentioned by the parties, but not named as a party in either case, is a Chinese entity owned by a cousin of Andrew and Jacky Yung called Cixi Welday Plastic Products, Co., sometimes referred to as China Welday ("Cixi Welday").

In this report and recommendation, the shorthand names above will be used for each entity even though at various times the actual name of the entity may have been different.

The Court cautions the reader that the various entities constituting the Wai Feng parties and the other entities listed above not only have confoundingly similar names, exacerbated by name changes and alterations of corporate structure during the relevant period, but also were repeatedly misidentified in the pleadings and discovery produced in these cases. The resulting confusion has been an ongoing issue. See, e.g., Quick Fitting, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131452, 2015 WL 5719503, at \*1-3 & nn.2, 6 ("While the Yung companies are responsible for the confusion caused by their use of similar names and by their repeated gaffes in misidentifying the appropriate entity, the Court is compelled to observe that Quick Fitting seems to have gone out of its way to exacerbate the confusion, perhaps to enhance its veil-piercing argument.").
