HN1[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Summary judgment is appropriate where the record reveals no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). A factual dispute is genuine only if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. Although the court must view the record favorably to the nonmoving party, the nonmoving party must set forth specific facts sufficient to demonstrate that every essential element of its claim or defense is at least trialworthy. Trialworthiness necessitates that the evidence illustrating the factual controversy cannot be conjectural or problematic; it must have substance in the sense that it limns differing versions of the truth which a factfinder must resolve.

HN4[] Clayton Act, Claims

The Supreme Court holds that Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15 does not allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property. Instead, the Court has established a comprehensive antitrust standing doctrine to determine which persons are entitled to bring suit under the Clayton Act. The factors include: (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws (antitrust injury); (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages, and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages. These factors must be evaluated and weighed on a case-by-case basis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Standing

Competitors or consumers are presumptively the favored plaintiffs to allege antitrust injury in the market in which the trade was restrained. Furthermore, employees of alleged antitrust violators are on the list of presumptively disfavored plaintiffs, i.e., persons who may be derivatively injured, but are denied standing to sue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN6 Private Actions, Standing

There may be some instances when presumptively disfavored plaintiffs do have standing to bring an antitrust action. Although competitors and consumers are presumptively favored, "presumptively" does not mean always; there can be exceptions, for good cause shown. The most obvious reason for conferring standing on a second-best plaintiff is that there may be no first best with the incentive to sue.

The Pennsylvania Whistle Blowers Act (Act), 43 Pa. Cons. Workers' Compensation & SSDI > Exclusivity > General Overview

HN11 [Down] Remedies Under Other Laws, Common Law

The Workers' Compensation Act is the exclusive remedy for "any work related injury." The exclusivity provision of the workers' compensation statute provides, in relevant part, that liability of an employer under this act shall be exclusive and in place of any and all other liability on account of any injury or death. 77 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 481(a). Thus, an employee waives his right of action at common law with respect to any injury that is compensable under this chapter.

HN12 [blue icon] Intentional Torts, Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

Work related injuries arising out of intentional torts are no exception to the exclusivity provision. Thus, injuries arising out of intentional torts, including the intentional infliction of emotional distress, committed in the course of an employment relationship must be brought under the administrative scheme set forth in the worker's compensation statute and are precluded at common law.

HN13 [blue icon] Burdens of Proof, Employee Burdens of Proof

In order to prevail under a common law theory of intentional infliction of emotional distress, a plaintiff must show that the conduct was so outrageous and extreme that it goes beyond all bounds of decency and would be regarded as atrocious and utterly intolerable in a civilized community. In Pennsylvania, it is extremely rare to find conduct in the employment context that will rise to the level of outrageousness necessary to support a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

HN14 [blue icon] Wrongful Termination, Public Policy

Pennsylvania recognizes a common law cause of action for wrongful discharge, even of an employee-at-will, if the reason for the discharge offends a clear mandate of public policy. Thus, an employee may have a cause of action where he is discharged for refusing to violate the law. Pennsylvania's public policy exception to the at-will doctrine does not extend to cases in which an employee "reasonably believes" that his employer has requested him to perform an unlawful act and is discharged for objecting to the proposal he believes is unlawful.

PONSOR, D.J.

I. INTRODUCTION

Former sales representative, plaintiff Norman Gallant, challenges the termination of his employment from defendant BOC Group, Inc. ("BOC") on March 18, 1991.¹ Plaintiff alleges that defendant wrongfully terminated his employment because he complained of antitrust violations and because he refused to participate in the alleged illegal scheme. In plaintiff's amended complaint, he asserts violations of the Robinson Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13 and Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 (Count I); a violation of the Pennsylvania Whistle Blowers Act, 43 PA. CONS. STAT. § 1423(a) (Count II); intentional infliction of emotional distress (Count III), and a discharge [*2] in violation of public policy (Count IV).

Defendant now moves for summary judgment on all four counts. For the reasons set forth below, the court will allow defendant's motion for summary judgment on Counts I, II, and III, and deny summary judgment on Count IV.

II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

HN1 [↑] Summary judgment is appropriate where the record reveals no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). A factual dispute is genuine only "if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Oliver v. Digital Equipment Corp., 846 F.2d 103, 105 (1st Cir. 1988), quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986).

Although the court must view the record favorably to the nonmoving party, the nonmoving party must set forth [*3] "specific facts sufficient to demonstrate that every essential element of its claim or defense is at least trialworthy." Catrone v. Thoroughbred Racing Association, 929 F.2d 881, 884 (1st Cir. 1991). Trialworthiness necessitates that "the evidence illustrating the factual controversy cannot be conjectural or problematic; it must have substance in the sense that it limns differing versions of the truth which a factfinder must resolve." Mack v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 871 F.2d 179, 181 (1st Cir. 1989).

[*206] III. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The facts, as alleged by plaintiff, are as follows. BOC Group, through its wholly owned division Airco Gases, is engaged in the business of selling bulk industrial gases. BOC is a private, for-profit company, and is not funded by the state of Pennsylvania. Gallant was employed as a technical sales representative for the defendant from January

¹ Plaintiff filed this action on March 1, 1993 in the Superior Court. BOC removed the action to this court on April 19, 1993.

1990 through March 1991. Plaintiff claims that while employed at BOC he had a good working relationship with his supervisor, James Brazelton, and was an outstanding salesperson.

Gallant alleges that in the course of his employment he became aware that defendant was engaged in price-fixing in violation of [4] federal and state antitrust laws. Specifically, plaintiff alleges that BOC requested information about competitors' prices from potential customers and prospective employees and then agreed with its competitors not to compete with certain businesses. Gallant avers that he complained to his supervisor about the alleged antitrust violations orally and in writing and was terminated within weeks of making these complaints. Gallant further avers that BOC threatened that it would withhold payment of legitimate business expenses owed to him and would dispute the plaintiff's unemployment claim if he did not sign a separation letter releasing BOC from all claims. In fact, defendant did not pay the business expenses it owed and did contest his unemployment claim.

The Unemployment Board granted Gallant unemployment compensation, and the hearing examiner made a finding of fact that the plaintiff was a good sales representative and had no problems until he complained that Airco was violating state and federal law. Gallant maintains that he suffered serious emotional distress as a result of defendant's actions.

This court will now address each of plaintiff's four counts.

IV. DISCUSSION

[5] A. Antitrust Standing

In Count I, plaintiff asserts an antitrust claim against BOC under HN2 Section 4 of the Clayton Act, codified as 15 U.S.C. § 15. This provision of the Clayton Act provides, in relevant part, that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

15 U.S.C. § 15 (emphasis added).

Plaintiff claims that BOC committed an antitrust violation by violating subsection (a) of the Robinson Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13. HN3 Subsection (a) states that:

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce . . . either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce or to injure, destroy or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefits of such discrimination, or with customers of either [6] of them.

§ 13\(a\) (emphasis added).

BOC maintains that Gallant lacks standing to bring an antitrust claim under the Clayton and Robinson Patman Acts. Thus, even assuming arguendo that defendant violated the antitrust laws, this court must first determine whether Gallant is the proper party to bring a private antitrust action. Associated General Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n.31, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983).

HN4 The Supreme Court has held that Section 4 of the Clayton Act does not "allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property." Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 477, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982). Instead, the Court has established a comprehensive antitrust standing doctrine to determine which persons are entitled to bring suit under the [*207] Clayton Act. Associated General, 459 U.S. at 529-35 (1983); Sullivan v. Tagliabue, 25 F.3d 43, 45 (1st Cir. 1994). See also SAS of Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Puerto Rico Telephone Co., 48 F.3d 39 (1st Cir. 1995). The factors [7] set forth in Associated General include: (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws ("antitrust injury"); (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages, and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages. Sullivan, 25 F.3d at 46, citing Associated General, 459 U.S. at 537-45.² These factors must be evaluated and weighed on a case-by-case basis. Id.

[8] 1. Antitrust Injury

The court must first examine whether there is in fact an antitrust injury, that is, whether the alleged injury is of the type that the antitrust laws were designed to redress. Associated General, 459 U.S. at 538, 540. The First Circuit has stated that consideration of antitrust injury is a central factor in the standing calculus. Sullivan, 25 F.3d at 47. See, e.g., Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 797-98 & n.9 \(2d Cir. 1994\); Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1449 \(11th Cir. 1991\).

In general, HN5 "competitors" or "consumers" are presumptively the favored plaintiffs to allege antitrust injury in the market in which the trade was restrained. SAS, 48 F.3d at 45. Gallant does not bring his claim as either a competitor or a consumer but as an employee whose injuries resulted from the loss of his employment. Furthermore, employees of alleged antitrust violators, such as Gallant, are on the list of presumptively disfavored plaintiffs, i.e., persons who may be derivatively injured, but are denied standing to sue. Id.

HN6 There may be some instances when presumptively disfavored plaintiffs do have standing to bring an antitrust action. [9] Id. In SAS, the court stated that although competitors and consumers are presumptively favored, "presumptively" does not mean always; there can be exceptions, for good cause shown." Id. This exception does not apply in this instance. The "most obvious reason for conferring standing on a second-best plaintiff is that . . . there may be no first best with the incentive to sue." Id.; cf. Associated General, 459 U.S. at 542. In this situation, competitors and consumers have both the incentive and an ample opportunity to bring an antitrust claim. There is no reason to extend the doctrine of antitrust standing to Gallant, an individual incidentally connected to the antitrust violation.

HN7 Some courts have interpreted the Supreme Court's decision in Blue Shield v. McCready as extending standing to a third category of individuals whose injury is inextricably intertwined with the injury that the antitrust violators sought to inflict. See Ashmore v. Northeast Petroleum Div., 843 F. Supp. 759, 760-70 \(D. Me. 1994\); Ostroff v. H.S. Crocker Co., 740 F.2d 739 \(9th Cir. 1984\). One year prior to Associated General, the McCready court held that a consumer of health [10] services could sue under the antitrust laws to redress a supposed conspiracy between her insurance plan and Virginia psychiatrists. The plan excluded psychologists from receiving compensation under the plan. Although McCready was not the immediate target of the alleged boycott, she was a plan beneficiary who had used a psychologist and had been denied reimbursement. The Supreme Court said that McCready's injury "was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict on psychologists and the psychotherapy market," and was granted standing. McCready, 457 U.S. at 484. The Court further stated that [208] McCready was the "necessary step in effecting the ends of the alleged illegal conspiracy." Id. at 479.

It is doubtful that the language in McCready was ever intended as a legal test of standing. SAS, F.3d at 46. Moreover, in McCready, while standing was conferred to a plaintiff who was only derivatively injured, it is important to highlight that the plaintiff was a consumer in the very market directly affected by the antitrust violation. In adopting the antitrust standing doctrine, the Court in Associated General simply reinterpreted the [11] McCready language as a legal conclusion; i.e., applying the "inextricably intertwined" standard to consumers and competitors.

² In Associated General, the Court found that two factors, the causal connection between the plaintiff's alleged injuries and the violation of antitrust laws, and the allegation of improper motive, supported a grant of standing, and that a consideration of the remaining factors necessitated the denial of standing. Id. at 545.

See SAS, 48 F.3d at 46. Although some courts have conferred standing on individuals who are neither consumers or competitors,³ in light of the analysis set forth in SAS, this court is not inclined to expand upon the doctrine of standing currently in place in this circuit.

Even under a broad reading of McCready, it is clear that Gallant's termination was not a necessary instrument to effectuate the alleged conspiracy. McCready, 457 U.S. at 479. Here, plaintiff's sole involvement with BOC was as an employee, and, as such, he is not the appropriate plaintiff. See SAS, 48 F.3d at 45. In this instance, termination of employment of a "second-best" 12 plaintiff is not the type of injury the antitrust laws were enacted to protect. SAS, 48 F.3d at 45.

2. Directness of Injury and Causal Nexus

Two additional and related factors set forth in Associated General are (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and (2) the directness of the asserted injury. Associated General, 459 U.S. at 542.

The first inquiry is whether there was a causal connection between BOC's alleged antitrust violation and Gallant's discharge. Plaintiff satisfies the first inquiry. Plaintiff contends that if not for the implementation of the allegedly illegal scheme, he would not have had to resist such conduct and, consequently he would not have been discharged. Clearly the two events are causally related.

However the existence of a causal connection alone is not enough. Any causal connection between the alleged violations and Gallant's discharge is not sufficiently direct to make the discharge itself an antitrust violation. Reitz v. Canon U.S.A., Inc., 695 F. Supp. 552, 553 \(S.D. Fla. 1988\). Gallant alleges that his loss of employment was a direct consequence of the alleged anticompetitive 13 behavior. But the facts, even when viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, do not support his contention. While Gallant claims that his loss of employment occurred in furtherance of defendant's illegal acts, the employment market was not the target of the alleged anticompetitive violations. The purpose of the alleged scheme was to prevent price competition for customers, not to prevent plaintiff's employment. Even assuming that plaintiff's allegations are true, the termination of his employment is only a "byproduct" of the agreement not to compete. Fallis v. Pendleton Woolen Mills, Inc., 866 F.2d 209, 211 \(6th Cir. 1989\).⁴ More direct victims existed. Any injury to plaintiff is merely incidental to the alleged agreement to prevent price competition for customers. Moreover, plaintiff has made no showing that the price fixing scheme was intended to harm him in any way.

14 *209 3. Speculative Nature of Damages, Duplicative Recovery and Complex Apportionment of Damages

Under Associated General, HN8⁵ courts are also required to consider whether a "claim rests at bottom on some abstract conception or speculative measure of harm." Associated General, 459 U.S. at 543, citing McCready, 457 U.S. at 475, n.11. In his complaint, plaintiff asserts that he suffered compensatory damages due to his inability to get sales, lack of business, and wrongful termination. He also seeks treble damages as provided by the Clayton Act, punitive damages for wrongful termination, and attorney's fees and other costs and expenses. There is no question that many of the requested damages are quantifiable.

Although plaintiff's damages are not necessarily speculative, "if the court were to allow all indirect victims standing to sue, the dangers of duplicative recovery and complex apportionment of damages would become very real." See

⁴ In Fallis, the court held that a sales representative lacked standing to maintain an antitrust action against his former employer based on a claim that he was discharged because he refused to participate in a vertical price fixing scheme. The court stated that although the representative's alleged role as a "fulcrum" for employer's pressure on discounters weighed in favor of standing, this factor was outweighed by indirectness of his injury, existence of more direct victims, and resulting danger of double recovery or complex apportionment of damages. Fallis, 866 F.2d at 212.

Fallis, 866 F.2d at 211-12, citing Province v. Cleveland Press Publishing Co., 787 F.2d 1047 (6th Cir. 1986). See also Southaven Land Co. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1087 ("Particularly, indirect injuries may render damages [15] highly speculative or create situations of complexity that would foreclose an equitable determination and apportionment of damages."). This is so because remote and direct plaintiffs potentially would be asserting conflicting claims over a common fund.

In sum, even if plaintiff is correct in his allegations concerning defendant's conduct, his injury cannot be redressed under the Clayton and Robinson Patman Acts. The relevant factors -- the nature of Gallant's injury, the existence of more direct victims of the alleged violations and the risk of duplicative recovery and complex apportionment of damages -- weigh heavily against judicial enforcement of plaintiff's claims. Summary judgment will therefore be granted on this count.

B. Pennsylvania Whistle Blowers Act

Plaintiff alleges that BOC's conduct violated HN9 the Pennsylvania Whistle Blowers Act, 43 PA. CONS. STAT. § 1423(a). The Act provides that:

no employer may discharge, threaten or otherwise discriminate or retaliate against an employee regarding the employee's compensation, terms, conditions, location or privileges of employment because the employee . . . makes a good faith report or is about to report, verbally [16] or in writing, to the employer or appropriate authority an instance of wrongdoing or waste.

By its own terms, the Act's scope is limited to employees discharged from governmental entities or any other "public body" which is created or funded by the government. § 1422.⁵ [17] See also Kraisa v. Keypunch, Inc., 424 Pa. Super. 230, 622 A.2d 355 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1993). BOC is a private corporation and is not funded in any way by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. For this reason, the Pennsylvania Whistle Blower's Act is inapposite in the instant case.⁶ Summary Judgment will therefore be granted on Count II.

C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

Plaintiff's claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress is precluded by the exclusivity provision of the Pennsylvania Worker's Compensation Act, 77 PA. CONS. STAT. § 481(a). HN11 The Workers' Compensation Act is the exclusive remedy for "any work related injury." Poyser v. Newman & Co., 514 Pa. 32, 36, I*210 522 A.2d 548 (1987), citing Kline v. Arden H. Verner Co., 503 Pa. 251, 253, 469 A.2d 158 (1983). The exclusivity provision of the workers' compensation statute provides, in relevant part, that "liability of an employer under this act shall be exclusive and in place of any and all other liability . . . on account of any injury or death . . ." § 481(a). Thus, an employee waives his right of action at common law with respect to any injury that is compensable under this chapter.⁷

⁵ HN10 "Public bodies" is defined as all of the following:

(1) A State officer, agency, department, division, bureau, board, commission, council, authority or other body in the executive branch of State Government; (2) A county, city, township, regional governing body, council, school district, special district or municipal corporation, or a board, department, commission, council or agency; (3) any other body which is created by Commonwealth or political subdivision authority or which is funded in any amount by or through Commonwealth or political subdivision authority or a member or employee of that body. 43 P.S. § 1422.

Work related injuries arising out of intentional torts are no exception to the exclusivity provision. Poyser, 514 Pa. at 36. Thus, injuries arising out of intentional torts, including the intentional infliction of emotional distress, committed in the course of an employment relationship must be brought under the administrative scheme set forth in the worker's compensation statute and are precluded at common law. Whitney v. Xerox Corp., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10845, 1994 WL 412429 at *5 (E.D. Pa. August 2, 1994) (employee's claim that he suffered severe emotional distress as a result of employer's actions to force his resignation was barred by the Workers' Compensation Act). Plaintiff's allegations that BOC refused to pay him certain expenses and threatened to contest his claim for unemployment arise out of their employment relationship and therefore are barred by the exclusivity provision of the worker's compensation act. Accordingly, BOC is entitled to judgment on Count III of plaintiff's complaint.

Moreover, HN13 in order to prevail under a common law theory of intentional infliction of emotional distress, plaintiff must show that the conduct was "so outrageous and extreme that it goes beyond all bounds [19] of decency and would be regarded as atrocious and utterly intolerable in a civilized community." Gonzalez v. CNA Ins. Co., 717 F. Supp. 1087, 1088 \(E.D. Pa. 1989\) (employee's claim that employer falsely accused him of sexually harassing employee insufficient to support a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress); Cox v. Keystone Carbon Co., 861 F.2d 390, 395 \(3rd Cir. 1988\), appeal after remand, 894 F.2d 647 \(3rd Cir. 1990\), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 811, 111 S. Ct. 47, 112 L. Ed. 2d 23 (1990) (employer's discharge of employee on first day back to work after triple bypass heart surgery insufficient to support a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress). In Pennsylvania, "it is extremely rare to find conduct in the employment context that will rise to the level of outrageousness necessary to support a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress." Glickstein v. Consolidated Freightways, 718 F. Supp. 438, 441 \(E.D. Pa. 1989\).

Defendant's refusal to allow plaintiff to obtain unemployment compensation or his legitimate expenses and its alleged demand that plaintiff sign a release, as a matter of law, do not rise to the required level of outrageousness.

For all these [20] reasons, summary judgment will be granted on Count III.

D. Discharge in Violation of Public Policy

In Count IV, Gallant alleges that he was discharged for his refusal to violate antitrust laws in violation of public policy. HN14 Pennsylvania recognizes a common law cause of action for wrongful discharge, even of an employee-at-will, if the reason for the discharge offends a clear mandate of public policy. Brown v. Hammond, 810 F. Supp. 644, 646 \(E.D. Pa. 1993\). Thus, an employee may have a cause of action where he is discharged for refusing to violate the law. See Clark v. Modern Group, 9 F.3d 321, 331-32 \(3d Cir. 1993\); Woodson v. AMF Leisureland Centers Inc., 842 F.2d 699 \(3d Cir. 1988\). Pennsylvania's public policy exception to the at-will doctrine does not extend to cases in which an employee "reasonably believes" that his employer has requested him to perform an unlawful act and is discharged for objecting to the proposal he believes is unlawful. Clark, 9 F.3d at 330. Therefore, Gallant must demonstrate that the defendant's [*211] activities were indeed illegal under federal antitrust law. Id. at 332.

The Patman Act prohibits any discrimination where the effect [21] may be to lessen competition, create a monopoly, or prevent competition with any person. Plaintiff alleges that defendant violated the antitrust laws by requesting information about competitors' prices from potential customers and prospective employees and by agreeing with its competitors not to compete for certain business. Gallant further claims that defendant restricted bids on certain business held by its competitors, controlled all the pricing given by the plaintiff, and ordered the sales representatives to delay bids past the allowable contract period so that the customer would not be able to accept the plaintiff's prices. In addition, Gallant claims that the defendant ordered "retaliatory strikes" to be executed against competitors who were not exercising "market integrity" -- i.e., fixing prices. These "retaliatory strikes" were intentional low bids on business held by certain competitors who were not behaving in conformance with the scheme. Furthermore, plaintiff claims that defendant ordered the plaintiff and others to obtain contracts, prices, and length of contracts from customers in order to control the market and the pricing of products.

The facts, viewed in the light [22] most favorable to the plaintiff, are sufficient to allege a violation of the Robinson Patman Act. In other words, it would not be unreasonable for a juror to conclude that the activities of the defendant were done to control the price, the market, and the competition within the industry. Of course, these facts will be contested at trial. But a reasonable juror could find that the defendant was engaged in illegal antitrust activities and that as a result of plaintiff's complaint about these activities, he was discharged in violation of public policy.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons this court hereby ALLOWS defendant's motion for summary judgment on Counts I, II, and III and DENIES the motion as to Count IV.

HN6 Sherman Act, Claims

Not every agreement between two legally distinct entities constitutes a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. After establishing the existence of a contract, combination, or conspiracy, a plaintiff must establish that an agreement constitutes an unreasonable restraint on trade. To identify agreements that fail this test, courts have adopted two levels of analysis: per se and "rule of reason." A limited number of agreements are considered unreasonable per se and, therefore, are illegal as a matter of law. Per se treatment is limited to those cases in which the agreements are manifestly or patently unreasonable, and clearly serve no legitimate purpose. The agreements that typically fall into the per se category involve price fixing, boycotts, and tying arrangements.

HN7 [] Sherman Act, Claims

Cases under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., that do not fall into the narrow per se niche proceed under the rule of reason. To establish a claim under the rule of reason, a plaintiff bears an initial burden of showing that a challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in a relevant market. If a plaintiff meets this initial burden, a defendant can come back with evidence that an agreement was formed for legitimate business purposes which outweigh any anti-competitive effects. Finally, a plaintiff can prevail by showing that the legitimate ends of an agreement could have been accomplished through less restrictive alternatives.

Antitrust plaintiffs under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes a defendant's acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of a violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by a violation.

Lower prices usually benefit consumers, and are not generally considered harmful to competition. For this reason, agreements to set prices at below-market rates do not ordinarily give rise to antitrust injury. However, when lower prices input prices do not produce lower prices to consumers, courts have found antitrust injury in the presence of agreements to lower prices. This occurs when a colluding buyers possess market power on a downstream market. Only with control of a downstream market can a monopsonist decrease output and raise prices. Antitrust injury exists where a seller is a participant in the very market where competition is impaired.

While it is true that joint ventures are not unreasonable in and of themselves, it is also true that conspirators cannot gain immunity from antitrust laws by labeling their agreement a "joint venture." Joint venture agreements are addressed like any other agreement among competitors. The first step is to determine the nature and scope of an agreement. If a joint venture is unlawful in purpose and effect, a joint venture is treated like any other per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. If, on the other hand, a joint venture is based on a lawful attempt to integrate resources, an agreement is measured according to the standard "rule of reason" analysis.

Per se claims under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., enjoy significant advantages in matters of proof. The advantage to a plaintiff is that given a per se violation, proof of a defendant's power, of illicit purpose and of anticompetitive effect are all said to be irrelevant. A disadvantage is the difficulty of squeezing a practice into an ever narrowing per se niche. Per se treatment is appropriate only in the presence of agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

Per se treatment under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., is reserved for those combinations whose purpose and effect is manifestly anticompetitive. Because joint purchasing agreements often produce legitimate economies of scale, courts have generally refused to find these agreements illegal under the per se standard. Rather, plaintiffs generally are required to make their case under the "rule of reason," by proving that the anticompetitive effect of a buying agreement outweighs any pro-competitive advantages. Per se analysis is avoided in novel contexts.

To state a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., claim under the rule of reason, A plaintiff bears the initial burden of establishing that a defendant's actions have an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in a relevant market. If a defendant then comes forward with a legitimate justification for the conduct, a plaintiff must show that the same legitimate purpose could have been obtained through less restrictive means. An essential element of every rule of reason claim is a showing that a defendant exercised market power in some relevant market.

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 \(Act\), prohibits mergers or acquisitions that substantially lessen competition in a relevant line of commerce. The Act, by its own terms, applies only where there has been an acquisition of assets, stock, or other share capital. In keeping with the broad mandate of the antitrust laws, however, courts have generally adopted a flexible approach in measuring the scope of this language. In the context of § 7, the term "asset" may mean anything of value. Although control itself does not implicate the transfer of stock or share capital, the acquisition of control has been deemed acquisition of an asset for § 7 purposes.

May 19, 1995

TAURO, Ch.J.,

This dispute unfolds against the backdrop of the multi-million dollar market for operating systems, the machine language programs that coordinate the activities of a computer's hardware [2] components.¹ Plaintiff Addamax Corporation, a producer of security systems for the computer industry, is suing Hewlett-Packard ("H-P"), the Digital Equipment Corporation ("Digital"), and the Open Software Foundation ("OSF"), alleging violations of federal and state antitrust laws. The complaint alleges that Digital and H-P led an attempt to influence the market for operating systems technology by illegally combining the buying power of the industry's largest competitors.

The defendants have moved for summary judgment, arguing that Addamax's case fails with respect to several elements essential to any antitrust claim. In applying an old statute to new technology, the court examines these issues with an eye to HN1² the underlying purpose of the antitrust [3] laws: the efficient functioning of competitive markets. Ocean State Physicians Health Plan, Inc. v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Rhode Island, 883 F.2d 1101, 1110 (1st Cir. 1989) (citing Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U.S. 231, 248-49, 95 L. Ed. 239, 71 S. Ct. 240 (1951)), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1027 (1990); P. AREEDA, H. HOVENKAMP, J. SOLOW & D. TURNER, ANTITRUST LAW, P 104.

[*277] I. BACKGROUND

HN2³ In considering a motion for summary judgment, the court must view the record "in the light most hospitable to the party opposing summary judgment, indulging all reasonable inferences in that party's favor." Griggs-Ryan v. Smith, 904 F.2d 112, 115 (1st Cir. 1990). The following statement of facts is drawn accordingly.

A. The Market for Operating Systems.

Operating systems coordinate the activities of the computer's hardware components, allowing it to "run" applications software. The systems are designed to "fit" specific hardware. Software is in turn manufactured to be compatible with certain operating systems. The industry's three-tier system (hardware, software, and operating systems) has produced a complex market shaped by licensing agreements [4] and compatibility concerns.

The Babel-like character of the market for operating systems has produced periodic calls for the harmonization of operating system specifications. This lawsuit revolves around a joint venture, the Open Software Foundation, ostensibly formed for this purpose.

B. the Formation of the OSF Joint Venture.

The Open Software Foundation ("OSF"), was formed in 1988 by a group of eight computer manufacturers.² OSF exists as a not-for-profit joint venture, and is registered as such under federal law.³

² Only two of these companies, H-P and Digital, are named as defendants in this suit.

[5] OSF membership is open to corporations, non-profits, academic institutions, governmental agencies, and "other business entities." (Defendants' Memorandum in Support, Appendix III, Tab 2, By-Laws of Open Software Foundation, Inc., Article 3). OSF by-laws provide for two classes of participation. The founding corporations are referred to as "sponsors." Sponsors retain exclusive voting rights in the foundation. All other participants, (some three hundred and fifty at the time this suit was filed) are referred to as "members."

OSF's sponsors include many of the major competitors in the market for computer systems. The list includes several of the largest computer companies in the world, including H-P, Digital, IBM, and Bull Systems. According to the complaint, these companies compete with one another in two separate markets. First, they compete in the purchasing of systems technology from independent developers like Addamax. Second, they compete in the sale of finished systems on the downstream market for operating systems. The sponsors, in other words, compete both "in markets where they are sellers and in markets where they are buyers." (Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, P 20.)

[6] OSF's statement of purpose indicates that the organization was formed to "undertake cooperative research, experimentation and development activities . . . to allow users to more easily mix and match computers and software from different suppliers." 53 Fed. Reg. 34594 (1988). To this end, OSF and the OSF Research Institute indicated an intent to engage in a wide array of activity, including "the production and marketing of the software or other proprietary information or technology produced through the venture including the granting of licenses." Id. at 34594.

C. OSF's Procurement Process.

OSF, in keeping with its corporate charter, became involved in the development of new operating systems. In developing its first such operating system, later baptized OS-1, OSF chose to assemble the package by fusing existing technology. As a result, most of OSF's efforts were directed towards purchasing [7] and integrating existing component programs.

OSF gathered technology for the OS-1 system through a competitive bidding process called a Request for Technology, or "RFT." Companies specializing in a particular area were informed of the process and encouraged to submit bids.

With [7] respect to Addamax, the bid involved a security program⁴ for the new operating system. Two companies responded to the bid: Addamax and SecureWare. After an evaluation of the competing bids, a panel of experts appointed by OSF selected the Secureworks package.

D. Addamax's Allegations

Addamax is now claiming that they lost the bid for reasons unrelated to the price and quality of their product. More importantly, Addamax is alleging that the entire OSF concept is an illegal joint venture designed to influence the market for operating systems technology.

³OSF is registered under the National Cooperative Research Act of 1984, 15 U.S.C. § 4301. The National Cooperative Research Act, designed to encourage cooperative research, offers some antitrust protection to joint ventures formed for specifically enumerated purposes. 15 U.S.C. § 4301\(a\)\(6\).

OSF is also registered under the laws of Delaware as a not-for-profit membership corporation, and as the only member of the Open Software Foundation Research Institute also incorporated under Delaware law.

Addamax makes two charges with respect to OSF's strategy. First, Addamax asserts that OSF has rigged its procurement system to favor specific [8] companies and technologies. Second, Addamax claims that OSF forces suppliers to sell their product to OSF and its sponsors under disadvantageous conditions.

With respect to the Request for Technology process, Addamax asserts that OSF ran a suspect contest. Addamax claims that internal OSF documents named SecureWare as the security system component several months before the bids were submitted. (OSF Goethe Project Journal, July 7, 1989, Plaintiff's Appendix I, Volume II, Tab 107, at F055653).

With respect to OSF's effect on prices, Addamax alleges that the joint venture forced competitors to offer their products at below-market prices and under disadvantageous conditions.⁵ Companies are forced to do this, Addamax claims, because failure to win the bid excludes the developer from a huge segment of the market. The loser sees his technology left out of a new system that automatically becomes an industry standard. A firm that fails in an OSF bid loses the chance to sell its product, not only to OSF, but to all OSF members. In this way, Addamax claims, OSF functions as a joint purchasing agreement, or buyers' cartel.

[9] On the basis of these alleged activities, Addamax brought suit against OSF and two of its sponsors, Digital and H-P. The complaint contains claims under federal and state anti-trust law, the state unfair trade practices act, and state common law. The defendants have moved for summary judgment with respect to each claim.

II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT IN ANTI-TRUST CASES

In Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting, 368 U.S. 464, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1961), the Supreme Court warned that HN3[↑] "summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is in the hands of alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot." Id. at 473 (citations omitted).

The admonition in Poller notwithstanding, antitrust suits are not immune from summary judgment, and rule 56(c) is routinely used in antitrust actions. See Capital Imaging, P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Association, 996 F.2d 537, 541 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, U.S. __, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993); Midwest Radio v. Forum Publishing, 942 F.2d 1294, 1296 (8th Cir. 1991).

[*279] III. OVERVIEW OF THE SHERMAN ACT, [10] § 1.⁶

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., prohibits:

HN4[↑] every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . .

15 U.S.C. § 1. This simple phrase reveals the basic components of every § 1 claim: a conspiracy and its anticompetitive effect.

HN5[↑] The essence of every § 1 claim is "a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct entities." Capital Imaging, P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., 996 F.2d 537 (2nd Cir.), cert.

⁶ The "overview" portion of this memorandum is drawn largely from Capital Imaging, P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., 996 F.2d 537 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, U.S. __, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993).

denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, U.S. __, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993). Section 1, in other words, does not apply to "unilateral conduct on the part of a single person or enterprise."

HN6 Not every agreement, however, [11] constitutes a violation of the Sherman Act. After establishing the existence of a contract, combination, or conspiracy, the plaintiff must establish that the agreement constitutes an "unreasonable restraint on trade." To identify the agreements that fail this test, courts have adopted two levels of analysis: per se and "rule of reason."

A limited number of agreements are considered unreasonable per se and, therefore, are illegal as a matter of law. Per se treatment is limited to those cases in which the agreements are manifestly or patently unreasonable, and clearly serve no legitimate purpose. The agreements that typically fall into the per se category involve price fixing, boycotts, and tying arrangements. See Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1984).

HN7 Cases that do not fall into "the narrow per se niche" proceed under the rule of reason. U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Healthsource, Inc., 986 F.2d 589, 593 (1st Cir. 1993). To establish a claim under the rule of reason, a plaintiff "bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse [12] effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market . . ." Capital Imaging, 986 F.2d 537 at 543. If the plaintiff meets this initial burden, the defendant can come back with evidence that the agreement was formed for legitimate business purposes which outweigh any anti-competitive effects. Finally, the plaintiff can prevail by showing that the legitimate ends of the agreement could have been accomplished through less restrictive alternatives.

IV. ANTITRUST INJURY; CONSPIRACY

HN8 Every section 1 claim, whether per se or rule of reason, must satisfy two threshold requirements. First, the plaintiff must prove more than "mere injury." The successful section 1 plaintiff must establish "antitrust injury." Second, the plaintiff must prove the existence of a conspiracy. The defendants challenge Addamax's case as insufficient in both respects.

A. Antitrust Injury

The defendants first major argument is that the plaintiff has failed to allege adequate antitrust injury.⁷ Courts have often noted that the HN9 antitrust laws are aimed at protecting competition, not competitors, and that not all business losses constitute the type of injury that the antitrust laws were designed [13] to prevent. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1976). [*280] Along these lines, the defendants note that to the extent that Addamax complains of lower prices for its product, this type of loss falls beyond the protection of the antitrust laws.

HN11 Lower prices usually benefit consumers, and are not generally considered harmful [14] to competition. For this reason, agreements to set prices at below-market rates do not ordinarily give rise to antitrust injury.⁸

⁷ The seminal case on antitrust injury is Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). In Brunswick, the Court noted the type of damage required to state a claim under the Sherman Act:

[Antitrust] HN10 plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.

Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489.

Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 337-338, 340, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1989); Kartell v. Blue Shield of Massachusetts, 749 F.2d 922, 930-931 (1st Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1029, 85 L. Ed. 2d 322, 105 S. Ct. 2040, 105 S. Ct. 2049 (1985) (antitrust laws protect against higher, not lower, prices).

But, when lower prices input prices do not produce lower prices to consumers, courts have found antitrust injury in the presence of agreements to lower prices. Vogel v. American Society of Appraisers, 744 F.2d 598, 601 (7th Cir. 1984), citing Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., [15] 334 U.S. 219, 223-24, 92 L. Ed. 1328, 68 S. Ct. 996 (1948). This occurs when the colluding buyers possess market power on a downstream market. Only with control of a downstream market can the monopsonist⁹ decrease output and raise prices. See J. Jacobson & G. Dorman, Joint Purchasing, Monopsony and Antitrust, THE ANTITRUST BULLETIN, 1, 17 (Spring, 1991); AREEDA ET AL., ANTITRUST LAW, P 574.¹⁰ Here, Addamax has made a threshold showing of the defendants' significant leverage on both relevant markets: the upstream market for inputs, and the downstream market for output. See infra Part V.B.1. (market power).

[16] With respect to Addamax's standing as a plaintiff in this case, the court finds that Addamax has properly alleged that their injury "flowed from that which makes the defendants' act unlawful." Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489. In so doing, this court is mindful of the First Circuit's admonition that "even where a violation exists and a plaintiff has been damaged by it, the courts - for reasons of prudence - have sought to limit the right of private parties to sue for damages or injunctions." SAS of Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Puerto Rico Telephone Company, 48 F.3d 39, 39 (1st Cir. 1995).

Addamax's harm allegedly "flows directly from collusive activity that decreases competition among buyers." R. Blair & J. Harrison, Antitrust Policy and Monopsony, 76 CORNELL L. REV. 297, 337 (1991). Given these circumstances, the court holds that Addamax, as a seller to a collusive monopsony, has alleged sufficient antitrust injury, and has the standing necessary to bring this suit. SAS of Puerto Rico Inc. v. Puerto Rico Telephone Co., 48 F.3d 39, 44 (1st Cir. 1995) (antitrust injury exists where "the seller is a participant in the very market where competition is impaired").

B. Conspiracy [17]

The defendants' second major argument is that OSF, as a joint venture, cannot constitute a contract, combination, or conspiracy within the scope of § 1. Whatever OSF did, the defendants argue, it did on its own, and unilateral action may not constitute a conspiracy.¹¹

⁹ Monopsony, the mirror image of monopoly, refers to "market power . . . on the buying side of the market." AREEDA ET AL., ANTITRUST LAW, P 574.

¹⁰ Areeda and Turner summarize the effect on prices as follows:

The monopsony buyer, unlike the competitive buyer, can reduce the purchase price by scaling back its purchases. Because the monopsonist ordinarily reduces its buying price by purchasing less, it sells less downstream. This reduction in its own output will, if it has market power on the selling side, mean higher prices for customers. Thus, lower buying prices upstream may translate into higher selling prices downstream.

AREEDA ET AL., ANTITRUST LAW, P 574 (footnotes omitted).

¹¹ The defendants' memorandum in support reads:

. . . the sole basis for Addamax's price-fixing claim is that OSF itself allegedly sought to purchase security software at a reduced price. However, a joint venture such as OSF is not a "walking conspiracy," and as a matter of law, neither OSF's simple existence nor its unilateral actions with respect to price is sufficient to establish a conspiracy among OSF and the Sponsors.

[*281] HN12 While it is true that joint ventures are not unreasonable in and of themselves, SCFC ILC. v. Visa USA, 36 F.3d 958, 964 \(10th Cir. 1994\), it is also true that conspirators cannot gain immunity from the antitrust laws by labelling [*18] their agreement a "joint venture." Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 598, 95 L. Ed. 1199, 71 S. Ct. 971 \(1951\).¹²

A review of the relevant case law suggests that joint venture agreements are addressed like any other agreement among competitors. E. KINTNER, FEDERAL ANTITRUST LAW, § 9.15 (listing cases); SCFC ILC., 958 F.3d at 964 (no "special treatment" for joint ventures under the antitrust laws). The first step is to determine the nature and scope of the agreement. If the joint venture is unlawful [*19] in purpose and effect, the joint venture is treated like any other per se violation of the Sherman Act. If, on the other hand, the joint venture is based on a lawful attempt to integrate resources, the agreement is measured according to the standard "rule of reason" analysis. AREEDA ET AL., ANTITRUST LAW, P 1478 et seq.

H-P and Digital probably had several legitimate reasons for launching the OSF joint venture. But, Addamax has produced evidence that H-P and Digital formed OSF at least in part to impair the progress of certain competitors. This evidence alone, in the form of internal memoranda and strategy papers discussed in more detail below, raises a genuine issue of fact as to whether the joint venture itself can be labelled a conspiracy for Sherman Act purposes.

V. ANALYSIS

A. Per Se Claims

Addamax has asked for per se scrutiny with respect to all of its state and federal antitrust claims.¹³ As the First Circuit noted in U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Healthsource, Inc., 986 F.2d 589 \(1st Cir. 1993\), HN13 per se claims enjoy significant advantages in matters of proof: "the advantage to a plaintiff is that given a per se violation, proof of [*20] the defendant's power, of illicit purpose and of anticompetitive effect are all said to be irrelevant the disadvantage is the difficulty of squeezing a practice into the ever narrowing per se niche." U.S. Healthcare, 986 F.2d at 593 (internal citations omitted).

The Supreme Court has held that per se treatment is appropriate only in the presence of:

agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they [*21] have caused or the business excuse for their use.

Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\).

Addamax's complaint alleges that the OSF agreement warrants per se treatment because OSF operates as a buyer's cartel, and because OSF's very purpose, the promotion of the Sponsors' technology, is anticompetitive.

1. price fixing and joint buyers' cartel.

¹² The Supreme Court in Timken made explicit reference to joint ventures in the antitrust context:

Nor do we find any support in reason or authority for the proposition that agreements between legally separate persons and companies to suppress competition among themselves and others can be justified by labeling the project a "joint venture." Perhaps every agreement and combination to restrain trade could be so labeled.

Id. at 598 (citations omitted).

¹³ The scope of the Massachusetts Antitrust Act, 93 M.G.L. ch. 93 § 4, is statutorily tied to its federal law analog, § 1 of the Sherman Act. See M.G.L. ch. 93 § 1; Winter Hill Frozen Foods and Services, Inc. v. Haagen-Dazs Co., 691 F. Supp. 539 \(D.Mass. 1988\). Discussion of Addamax's state law claim is accordingly "subsumed" into the discussion of the applicable federal statutes. Id. at 543 n.5.

Addamax's complaint contains related price-fixing and joint buying claims. The [*282] essence of these charges is that OSF's purpose was to operate as a joint buying group in order to exercise control over the market for operating systems technology.

Addamax's allegations of "price fixing" turn largely on a series of statements made by an OSF representative, Doug Hartman, in the context of bid negotiations with Addamax's president, Peter Allsberg. In response to Allsberg's questions, Hartman indicated that OSF was not going to offer more than "six figures" for Addamax's technology. Plaintiff's Appendix II, Deposition of Peter A. Allsberg, 0143;15-19.

Allsberg recalls that when he told Hartman that the figure was far below Addamax's development costs, much less what they [22] thought was a fair price, Hartman shrugged and told him that "the market has changed." Allsberg Dep. 0145;6-7. Allsberg then asked Hartman: "is what you are telling me I can sell to you at your price and get a little money out of the market now and have no future business, or you will buy from SecureWare at that price and I will get no money out of the market now and have no future business?" Hartman replied, "Well, you could look at it that way." Allsberg Dep. at 0145;9-23.

This evidence notwithstanding, the court finds Addamax's price fixing claim inappropriate for per se treatment. HN14 Per se treatment is reserved for those combinations whose purpose and effect is manifestly anticompetitive. Because joint purchasing agreements often produce legitimate economies of scale,¹⁴ courts have generally refused to find these agreements illegal under the per se standard.¹⁵ See R. Blair & J. Harrison, Cooperative Buying, Monopsony Power, and Antitrust Policy, 86 NORTHWESTERN L. REV. 331, 343-345 (1992) (describing cases in which courts refused to apply per se standard in cooperative buying context). Rather, plaintiffs generally are required to make their case under [23] the "rule of reason," by proving that the anticompetitive effect of the buying agreement outweighs any pro-competitive advantages.

[24] With respect to this case, it is clear that the effects of market standardization on the computer industry are extraordinarily difficult to gauge. Moreover, without the benefit of expert opinion, it is nearly impossible to predict the specific effect of OSF's actions on competition within the industry. The sheer complexity of the industry cautions against a per se analysis here. See M&H Tire Company, Inc. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corporation, 733 F.2d 973, 977 (1st Cir. 1984)(avoiding per se analysis in "novel context").

2. unlawful purpose

Similar considerations compel the same caution with respect to Addamax's claim that OSF was formed for an anticompetitive purpose. Addamax alleges that OSF was formed "to thwart the nascent movement towards truly open systems by, among other things, collectively attacking the movement's two leading proponents and more efficient rivals, AT&T and Sun." Plaintiff's Memorandum in Opposition, 21.

There is substantial evidence, in the form of internal H-P and OSF memoranda, that OSF was formed specifically to combat Sun and AT&T. At H-P, officials met at a "Beat Sun" conference to discuss the possibility of joining other manufacturers in [25] a UNIX consortium. The context of the discussions make it clear that the consortium was discussed as an answer to Sun and AT&T's aggressive moves on the market. Plaintiff's Appendix I, Volume I, Tab 37, HP-72173 ("Beat Sun" Offsite Minutes). These actions, unremarkable if taken by a single [*283] competitor, may be suspect when taken by a group of would-be competitors.¹⁶ The record contains ample evidence that Digital and H-P, among others, communicated among themselves with regards to a collective "anti-Sun/AT&T" strategy. Id. at HP-72176.

Again, however, the context of this case makes it inappropriate for per se analysis. Despite some evidence of an anti-competitive motive, it is not clear that the OSF joint venture had an anticompetitive effect on the market. [26] On the record before the court, it cannot be said that the OSF joint venture is so void of redeeming virtue that it must be "presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1957).

Having determined that the defendants are entitled to summary judgment with respect to each of the plaintiff's per se claims, the court turns to the rule of reason elements of the plaintiff's complaint.

B. Rule of Reason

HN15 To state a Sherman Act claim under the rule of reason, Addamax bears the initial burden of establishing that OSF's actions have "an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market." Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 543. If the defendant then comes forward with a legitimate justification for the conduct, the plaintiff must show that the same legitimate purpose could have been obtained through less restrictive means. Id.

1. market power

An essential element of every rule of reason claim is a showing that the defendants exercised market power [27] in some relevant market.¹⁷ [28] In this case Addamax has alleged that OSF and its sponsors possess significant market power in: (1) the market in which the defendants purchase security systems, and (2) the market in which the defendants sell operating systems. Conceding, for the purposes of this motion, the definitions of the relevant markets,¹⁸ the defendants argue that the plaintiffs cannot prove collective market power sufficient to prove a violation of the rule of reason.

The defendants argue that the calculation of market share in this case may include only purchases and sales attributable directly to OSF. The plaintiffs, however, argue that the defendants' collective market share must include the purchases and sales of the individual sponsors. The parties, in other words, disagree on whether the individual sponsors' shares of the markets should be included in gauging the joint venture's impact on the market.

The dispute is significant. As a percentage of the global market for operating systems, OSF's sales are so small as to be insignificant. The same may be said for OSF's purchases of security systems' technology. If, however, market share is calculated to include the purchases and sales made by the individual sponsors, the defendants [*284] collectively [29] control significant shares of both markets.

The search for relevant markets here is complicated by several features unique to the computer industry. The market for computer systems is unlike the market for "widgets" that typically frames antitrust analysis. The technology at issue, by its very nature, is not sold in units. Sales agreements may be for licenses, royalties, or combinations of the two, and one company's choice of technology may have important repercussions on the industry as a whole. In addition, as noted earlier, systems are often assembled from existing technology, further complicating the search for the "relevant market" in antitrust terms.

The individual sponsors continue to make independent purchases and sales of security software and operating systems technology. As a result, OSF is merely an additional buyer of security systems technology and an additional seller of finished operating systems. Under these conditions, a court would not ordinarily consider the market power of the individual members of the joint venture in determining the market share of the alleged conspiracy. R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 619 F. Supp. 441, 451 n.8 (N.D. Cal. 1985).

The essence of Addamax's complaint, however, is that OSF affects the industry by establishing de-facto industry standards, and the volume of OSF's purchases and sales are not of particular concern to the alleged conspirators. The leverage of the conspiracy, Addamax argues, is not market power as measured in purchases and sales. It is, rather, the simple fact that OSF's choice of technology amounts to an unqualified endorsement of that technology by seven or eight giants of the industry. Once OSF has blessed a particular technology by including it in a operating system package, competing technologies become [30] obsolete.

The nature of the anticompetitive behavior alleged, coupled with the unique and unexplored characteristics of the market at issue, lead to the conclusion that Addamax has raised a genuine issue of fact with respect to the monopsony power of the conspiring defendants. Whether or not it is appropriate to aggregate the market power of the defendants in assessing market share, Addamax has put forth evidence that H-P and Digital were aware of, and in fact counted on, OSF's ability to influence the relevant markets.¹⁹ This alone might suggest a triable issue of fact with respect to the sponsors' collective market power.

[31] Finally, it is worth noting that market share is not always a reliable indicator of monopoly (or monopsony) power. AREEDA ET AL., ANTITRUST LAW, P 515. In this case, Addamax has put forth evidence that suggests that OSF's monopsony power extends beyond its immediate share of the market.

2. anti-competitive effect

Expanding upon its challenge to Addamax's allegations of antitrust injury, the defendants next argue that even if Addamax could show harm to itself, it cannot show harm to competition. As has already been noted, the defendants correctly assert that harm to competition, not competitors, is the hallmark of every antitrust claim. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1976).

The defendants argue that Addamax cannot prove that OSF's presence affects the market in any of the ways traditionally associated with harm to the competitive process: higher prices or lower output. Although Addamax has been unable to point to specific evidence of increased consumer prices or decreased product output, the court concludes that Addamax has established a genuine issue of fact as to OSF's effect on competition in the industry.

[32] Addamax's complaint, combined with deposition transcripts and documents submitted by the parties, permit an inference that OSF, H-P, and Digital embarked in a course of conduct designed to confuse and paralyze the market.

The computer industry is characterized by market turbulence. This year's state-of-the-art may be next year's dinosaur. But, buyers nonetheless want assurances that their systems will remain viable in the future. The industry has coined a term to describe the market's preoccupation with the future of a particular technology. The term is "FUD," an acronym for "fear, uncertainty and doubt."

[*285] Addamax claims that the defendants used "FUD" as a weapon by fomenting questions about the future of industry standards. By announcing the formation of OSF, and promising new technology destined to become the industry standard, the Sponsors allegedly sought to paralyze the industry and deter users from committing to other systems.

Several pieces of documentary evidence support OSF's claim. An OSF interoffice memo suggests that the joint venture was developed at least in part because "our sponsors wanted a hammer, axe or two-by-four that could be used to beat [the competition] [\[33\]](#) (Plaintiff's Appendix I, Vol. III, Tab. 110 at F30690). A Hewlett Packard memo, marked "company confidential," memorialized a discussion among HP executives:

Impact of FUD on Sun. It was asserted that an aggressive push by the consortium might cause software developers to reconsider their commitment to the nonstandard elements of the Sun OS, thereby slowing Sun's market momentum. A goal of the consortium might be to position the AT&T/Sun OS as the nonstandard Unix operating system and attempt to put them in a defensive position.

Plaintiff's Appendix I, Vol. I, Tab. 37, HP-72177.

According to Addamax, this evidence indicates that OSF was formed not to create a new product, but to "bully the market" into adopting certain standards for computer products. These standards were consistent with the Sponsors' interests, and inhibited competition in their purchases of operating system components.

Addamax's position also finds some support in evidence that OSF did very little in terms of actual research and development.²⁰ Roger Gourd, head of engineering at OSF, admitted in deposition testimony that he was unaware of any research into "new product offerings," (Plaintiff's [\[34\]](#) Appendix II, Deposition of Roger S. Gourd, 153:8-20), and it is undisputed that OSF is managed and staffed by personnel otherwise tied to the Sponsors.

Addamax has presented evidence of OSF's structure, purpose and strategy sufficient to support an inference of anticompetitive effect. This evidence, combined with the plausible hypothesis that a collusive monopsony eventually raises prices and restricts output, is sufficient to withstand a motion for summary judgment on Addamax's rule of reason claims.

VI. OTHER CLAIMS

The plaintiff's suit also includes counts under the Clayton Act and under Massachusetts law. The defendants have moved for summary judgment on all of these claims, arguing that Addamax cannot raise genuine issues of fact with respect to essential elements of each of these claims.

A. Clayton Act.

Addamax's [\[35\]](#) complaint alleges violations of § 7 of the Clayton Act, which HN16[↑] prohibits mergers or acquisitions that substantially lessen competition in a relevant line of commerce. See 15 U.S.C. § 18. The defendants argue that the transactions giving rise to this joint venture do not amount to a merger or acquisition, and are thus beyond the scope of the statute.

It is true that the Clayton Act, by its own terms, applies only where there has been an acquisition of assets, stock, or other share capital. Id. In keeping with the broad mandate of the antitrust laws, however, courts have generally adopted a flexible approach in measuring the scope of this language. United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 337-339, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 \(1963\); Mr. Frank, Inc. v. Waste Management, Inc., 591 F. Supp. 859, 866 (N.D. Ill., 1984)(noting that in the context of Section 7, the term "asset" may mean "anything of value.")(citations omitted).

In this case, Addamax has submitted evidence indicating that the defendants acquired certain rights as a result of their contributions to the project. Some of these rights might properly be characterized as [*286] giving the Sponsors [36] a degree of control over OSF.²¹ Although control itself does not implicate the transfer of stock or share capital, the acquisition of control has been deemed the "acquisition of an asset" for section 7 purposes. Mr. Frank, Inc., 859 F. Supp. at 866.

Finally, Addamax correctly notes that the OSF "Formation and Funding Agreement" signed by the sponsors could be construed as transferring a tangible asset. Plaintiff's [37] Appendix I, Volume I, Tab 48 at HP36022. Section 2.5 of that document provides that the sponsors' capital contributions may eventually be treated "as prepaid credit against cash royalties which may in the future become due ..." Id. Without deciding whether or not this transaction constitutes the "acquisition of asset," the court is satisfied that Addamax has produced a genuine issue of fact with respect to its Clayton Act claim.

B. State Law Claims

In addition to the federal and state antitrust claims, Addamax's complaint contains a state law claim based on intentional interference with actual and prospective contractual relations.²² This claim is grounded upon the allegation that at least one of Addamax's customers, Convex Computer Corp., cancelled a contract with Addamax after OSF's selection of SecureWare was announced, and that other companies refused to enter into contracts with Addamax after learning that SecureWare, not Addamax, had secured the OSF bid. With respect to Convex, Addamax claims that OSF's actions caused Convex to breach an existing agreement with Addamax. Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, P 93. According to the complaint "Convex's decision to [38] breach its contract with Addamax stemmed directly from OSF's decision to select SecureWare as the OSF standard technology." Id. at P 94.

HN17 [↑] To recover on a theory of intentional interference with actual or prospective business relations, a plaintiff must prove (1) the existence of business relations; (2) the defendant's knowing interference with the relations; and (3) the harm to the plaintiff borne of the defendant's actions. See United Truck Leasing Corp. v. Geltman, 406 Mass. 811, 551 N.E.2d 20, 21 (Mass. 1990); Comey v. Hill, 387 Mass. 11, 438 N.E.2d 811, 816 (Mass. 1982)(quoting J.R. Nolan, Tort Law § 72, at 87 (1979)); ELM Medical Laboratory, Inc. v. RKO General, Inc., 403 Mass. 779, 532 N.E.2d 675, 681 (Mass. 1989).

Addamax has shown an issue of fact with respect [39] to each contested element. Addamax has presented evidence of a licensing agreement with Convex, (Plaintiff's Appendix II, Deposition of Randall J. Sandone, 3:115;19-21), and evidence of contractual negotiations with Tektronix, another potential customer. Id. at 3:113;6-7). Addamax has presented evidence that H-P and Digital knowingly interfered with these relations through illegal conduct.²³ Finally, Addamax has presented evidence that it was harmed by the defendants' actions. Id. at 15-19; 3:120;11-14.

The defendants argue that both Convex and Tektronix had entered into [40] contracts with SecureWare before SecureWare was chosen by OSF. As a result, the defendants argue, OSF could not be to blame for these companies' choices. In making this argument, however, the defendants overlook the [*287] fact that Addamax need not establish that Convex and Tektronix chose SecureWare instead of Addamax. Addamax, rather, needs only to show that they had relations with these companies, and that the defendants knowingly interfered with them.²⁴ Addamax has met its burden with respect to these elements, and the defendants motion for summary judgment on Addamax's intentional interference with business relations claim must be denied.

VII. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, [41] the defendants' motion for summary judgment is allowed as to all of Addamax's per se claims, and denied in all other respects.

An order will issue.

TAURO, Ch.J.,

For the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum, the defendants' motion for summary judgment is allowed as to all to the per se claims in counts I, II, III, IV and V, and denied in all other respects.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

²⁴ The timing of Addamax's several contractual relations may of course be relevant to the issue of whether or not the defendants interfered with Addamax's business relations. For the purposes of this motion, however, it is sufficient to note that the timing of the contracts, in and of itself, does not preclude Addamax's claim.

5. Duplitrronics' Motion to Prevent Execution of Judgment, filed April 4, 1995. [Documents # 374 & # 367, respectively].

DISCUSSION

I. Motion by Concept Design to Enforce Liability Against Surety Pursuant to Rule 65.1 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and Hanover Insurance Company's Response and Motion to Stay (Motions 1 and 4 above)

A. Rule 65.1

Rule 65.1 provides in pertinent part:

Rule 65.1 Security: Proceedings Against Sureties

Whenever these rules, including the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims, require or permit the giving of security by a party, and security is given in the form of a bond or stipulation or other undertaking with one or more sureties, each surety submits to the jurisdiction of the court and irrevocably appoints the clerk of the court as the surety's agent upon whom any papers affecting the surety's [*4] liability on the bond or undertaking may be served. The surety's liability may be enforced on motion without the necessity of an independent action. . . .

The Court will enforce the liability against Hanover Insurance Company (Hanover), in accordance with Rule 65.1.

B. Hanover Insurance Company's Response to Plaintiff's Rule 65.1 Motion and Motion to Stay

¹ "Document #" refers to corresponding Motions in case C-C-90-368 first and then case C-C-91-169.

Hanover argues that Hanover's liability may not exceed $900,000, and that Concept Design may not collect the judgment from Hanover before Plaintiff has used reasonable diligence to collect from Duplitrronics.

1. The Amount of the Bond.

The Appeal Bond provides:

On November 17, 1993, judgement for $900,000 was entered for Concept Design Electronics and Manufacturing, Inc. against Duplitrronics, Inc. from which Duplitrronics, Inc. has appealed to the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals.

We jointly and severally agree to pay to the above judgement creditor any part of the judgment which is not reversed, and interest, damages and costs.

The obligation of this bond is limited to $900,000.

Title 28, Section 1961(a) & (b) provides:

§ 1961. Interest

(a) Interest shall be allowed on any money judgment [*5] in a civil case recovered in a district court. Execution therefor may be levied by the marshal, in any case where, by the law of the State in which such court is held, execution may be levied for interest on judgments recovered in the courts of the State. Such interest shall be calculated from the date of the entry of the judgment. . . .

(b) Interest shall be computed daily to the date of payment except as provided in section 2516(b) of this title and section 1304(b) of title 31, and shall be compounded annually.

Thus, contrary to Duplitrronics' and Hanover's argument, ". . . interest shall be allowed on any money judgment in a civil case, recovered in a district court." This is a money judgment in a civil case recovered in the Western District of North Carolina.

As to the liability of Hanover, the bond was for the amount of the judgment ($900,000) ". . . which is not reversed, and interest, damages and costs." No part of the judgment amount was reversed. The surety is therefore liable for the amount of the judgment plus interest as may be applicable.

Of the $900,000, $300,000 was compensatory damages and $600,000 was the result of trebling the amount fixed by the verdict ($300,000) pursuant to N.C. General Statute § 75-16.

N.C. General Statutes § 24-5(b) provides:

§ 24-5. Contracts, [*6] except penal bonds, and judgments to bear interest.

(b) Other Actions. -- In an action other than contract, the portion of money judgment designated by the fact finder as compensatory damages bears interest from the date the action is instituted until the judgment is satisfied. Interest on an award in an action other than contract shall be the legal rate.

This action which resulted in the jury case was instituted November 29, 1990. Therefore, pursuant to N.C. General Statute § 24-5, $300,000 compensatory damages shall bear interest from that date at the rate of 7.28% per annum until paid. The remaining $600,000 shall bear interest from the date of entry of the Final Judgment, November 17, 1993, at the rate of 3.57% per annum until paid, pursuant to Title 28, § 1961 of the United States Code.

In TVA v. Atlas Machine and Iron Works, 803 F.2d 794 \(4th Cir. 1986\), Atlas gave a supersedeas bond in the exact amount of the judgment, $200,300.20. On appeal, Atlas' liability was affirmed and the matter was remanded to the district court " . . . to direct entry of an order directing Fireman's Fund to pay TVA, with interest accruing from . . . the date of the filing of the bond and stay of execution of the original judgment." Id. 799.

The surety should be aware that Section 1961\(a\) allows the judge no discretion to deny the interest authorized [*7] by that section. In Bell, Boyd & Lloyd v. Tapy, 896 F.2d 1101 \(7th Cir. 1990\), a law firm asked for post-judgment interest. The Seventh Circuit held:

The issue of postjudgment interest remains to be addressed. In its motion for summary judgment, the law firm asked for postjudgment interest. The request was superfluous, Lorenzen v. Employees Retirement Plan, 896 F.2d 228, 230 \(7th Cir. 1990\), and in retrospect foolish. Section 1961\(a\) of the Judicial Code entitles the prevailing plaintiff in a federal suit (including a diversity suit) to postjudgment interest at a rate fixed in the statute, whether or not there is an award of interest in the judgment, Clifford v. M/V Islander, 882 F.2d 12, 14 \(1st Cir. 1989\), or even a request for interest in the complaint. Fed.R.Civ.P. 54\(c\); 10 Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2664, at pp. 159-60 (2d ed. 1983). Judge Norgle denied the request because the firm had failed to cite the statute. We do not agree with this disposition. Nothing in any local or other rule forfeits a statutory entitlement because of failure to mention the statute, and section 1961\(a\) allows the judge no discretion to deny the interest authorized by that section. (Citing cases).

The limitation of $900,000.00 in the bond does not negate agreement to pay the judgment plus interest.

2. Reasonable Diligence to Collect from Duplitrronics.

Hanover argues that Concept Design's Attempts to Collect from [*8] Hanover should be stayed pending reasonable attempts by Plaintiff to collect from Duplitrronics.

To support its argument, Hanover cites Chapter 26 of the North Carolina General Statutes (N.C.G.S.). Chapter 26 of the N.C.G.S. clearly refers to actions on contracts.

Section 26-1 states:

In the trial of actions upon contracts either of the defendants may show in evidence that he is surety, and if it be satisfactorily shown, the jury in their verdict, or the magistrate in his judgment, shall distinguish the principal and surety, which shall be endorsed on the execution by the clerk of superior court. (Emphasis added).

The following sections of Chapter 26 all have to do with the relationship of principal and surety in contract matters. This is illustrated by Sections 26-11, 26-3.1, 26-5, and 26-12 which states in pertinent part:

Whenever a judgment shall be rendered in any court in accordance with the provisions of G.S. 26-1 and the surety, endorser or other person shown in said judgment to be secondarily liable thereon

This section indicates that Chapter 26 has to do only with actions on contracts. Section 26-3.1 provides in pertinent part:

§ 26-3.1. Surety's recovery on obligation paid; no assignment necessary.

(a) A surety who has paid his principal's note, bill, bond or other written obligation, may either sue his principal [*9] for reimbursement or sue his principal on the instrument . . .

(b) The word "surety" as used herein includes a guarantor, accommodation maker, accommodation indorser, or other person who undertakes liability for the written obligation of another. (Emphasis added).

Section 26-5 provides in pertinent part:

§ 26-5. Contribution among sureties.

Where there are two or more sureties for the performance of a contract, and one or more of them may have been compelled to perform and satisfy the same, or any part thereof, such surety may have and maintain an action against every other surety for a just and ratable proportion of the same which may have been paid as aforesaid, whether of principal, interest or cost. (Emphasis added).

Section 26-12 provides in pertinent part:

§ 26-12. Joinder of debtor by surety.

(a) As used in this section, "surety" includes guarantors, accommodation makers, accommodation indorsers, or others who undertake liability on the obligation and for the accommodation of another.

(b) When any surety is sued by the holder of the obligation, the court, on motion of the surety may join the principal as an additional party defendant, . . . (Emphasis added).

All the sections in Chapter 26, as well as the sections cited [*10] above as examples, clearly indicate that Hanover's reliance on Chapter 26 to require any "due diligence" as required in that Chapter is misplaced. Chapter 26 has no bearing on the matter before this Court.

This construction is further reinforced by the holding in Koehring Co. v. Seacrest Marine Corporation, 29 N.C. App. 498, 224 S.E.2d 654 (N.C. App. 1976). In Koehring the plaintiff moved for judgment against the surety, which argued that judgment should not have been entered against it on its stay bond prior to execution against the defendant. The trial court granted the motion and the surety appealed. The N.C. Court of Appeals rejected the surety's argument and held:

The stay bond executed by The Home Indemnity Company was for the explicit purpose of stopping execution against defendant on plaintiff's judgment. The bond specifically provides that The Home Indemnity Company guarantees that defendant "will pay the amount directed to be paid by the judgment" in the event "the appeal is dismissed." This constitutes a guarantee of payment of the judgment, not a guarantee of payment of such amount as execution against the defendant does not produce. The surety, if it wishes, can take an assignment of plaintiff's judgment after payment thereof and then issue execution against defendant. [*11] Having elected to deprive the judgment creditor of the opportunity of enforcing its claim by voluntarily, and presumably for a fee, execution the supersedeas bond, The Home Indemnity Company cannot now with propriety complain if it is required to live up to the terms of its undertaking. This argument is without merit.

Id. at 656. (Emphasis supplied).

In the case at bar, Hanover's bond provided in pertinent part:

On November 17, 1993, judgement for $900,000 was entered for Concept Design Electronics and Manufacturing, Inc. against Duplitronics, Inc. from which Duplitronics, Inc. has appealed to the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals.

We jointly and severally agree to pay to the above judgement creditor any part of the judgment which is not reversed, and interest, damages and costs.

The obligation of this bond is limited to $900,000.

It is clear that Hanover's argument is without merit, and Concept Design is entitled to recover on the bond under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 65.1 without any procedural preconditions.

II. Concept Design's Motion for Supplemental Award of Attorney's Fees Incurred During Appeal and Duplitrionics' Opposition (Motion 2)

A. Award of Attorney's Fees Incurred During Appeal

Concept Design is entitled to an award of attorney's fees for [*12] the trial and for the fees which were incurred in representing the Plaintiff-Appellee before the Federal Circuit.

Section 75-16.1 of the N.C. General Statutes provides:

§ 75-16.1. Attorney fee.

In any suit instituted by a person who alleges that the defendant violated G.S. 75-1.1, the presiding judge may, in his discretion, allow a reasonable attorney fee to the duly licensed attorney representing the prevailing party, such attorney fee to be taxed as a part of the costs and payable by the losing party, upon a finding by the presiding judge that:

- (1) The party charged with the violation has willfully engaged in the act or practice, and there was an unwarranted refusal by such party to fully resolve the matter which constitutes the basis of such suit; . . .

This Court has previously awarded Concept Design an attorney's fee for the trial portion of the litigation. The appellee, Concept Design, now is asking this Court to award attorney's fees for the appellate phase.

Duplitrionics contends that this Court does not have authority to award attorney fees for the appellate phase, and that any such award must be by the Appellate Court.

Duplitrionics also contends that no award may be made because the appeal was not frivolous, and because there was not [*13] an unwarranted refusal to settle the appeal.

Duplitrionics argues that no award should be made because Rule 38 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure authorize only appellate courts to award damages for frivolous appeals. That argument is of no avail to Duplitrionics because there has never been any claim by Concept Design that the appeal by Duplitrionics was frivolous, and the Federal Circuit did not find the appeal to be frivolous.

The argument by Duplitrionics that only the Federal Circuit and not this Court has the authority to award attorney fees under N.C. General Statute 75-1.1 is not supported by any authority cited by Duplitrionics nor by any authority found by this Court. The appeal was from a judgment involving a State statute. The North Carolina cases, including City Finance Co. v. Boykin, 86 N.C. App. 446, 358 S.E.2d 83 \(1987\), cited by Duplitrionics hold that the trial court has authority to award attorney's fees for all phases of a case. The award or denial of attorney's fees is in the sole discretion of the trial judge. Morris v. Bailey, 86 N.C. App. 378, 387, 358 S.E.2d 120 \(1987\). (See Subparagraph (B) hereafter, for determination of fee.)

Duplitrionics argues that the North Carolina statute only authorizes an award of fees where there has been an unwarranted refusal to settle, (Duplitrionics' Response, Documents # 354 & # 347, respectively). Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides:

Rule 33. Appeal Conferences [*14]

The Court may direct the attorneys, and in appropriate cases, the parties, to participate in one or more conferences to address any matter that may aid in the disposition of the proceedings, including the simplification of the issues and the possibility of settlement. A conference may be conducted in person or by telephone and be presided over by a judge or other person designated by the court for that purpose. Before a settlement conference, attorneys must consult with their clients and obtain as much authority as feasible to settle the case. As a result of a conference, the court may enter an order controlling the course of the proceedings or implementing any settlement agreement.

Duplitronics continues its argument on page 5 of its response:

Counsel for Duplitronics initiated such discussions with counsel for Concept Design, and was told that Concept Design would not discuss settlement until this Court decided the then pending motion for fees. Thus, it was Concept Design, not Duplitronics, who refused to settle.

The Court believes that Concept Design's position as stated by Duplitronics (if that was in fact Concept Design's position) was reasonable.

Based on the history of this litigation [*15] both parties have been at loggerheads throughout this litigation.

However, the balance of unreasonableness seems to point more to the Defendant. As the Court found in its Order allowing the Plaintiff's counsel fees, (in discussing the N.C. General Statute § 75-16.1 that the Court must find willfulness and an unwarranted refusal by the losing party to fully resolve the matter which constitutes the basis of the suit):

As to the second requirement, the unwarranted refusal by the party to resolve fully the matter, there is ample evidence that the Defendant consistently throughout the litigation refused without justification to engage in meaningful settlement negotiations. An example of this is the preposterous proposal by Duplitronics' "house counsel" that he and Mr. Binder confer with Mr. Britt, Concept Design's owner, out of the presence of Mr. Farrow, the President of Concept Design, or Mr. Adams, patent attorney for Concept Design. Another example is Mr. Binder's absurd statement that Duplitronics' damages for the unlicensed use of the technology Concept Design exceeded $300,000,000.00.

The Court finds that a reasonable attorney fee is due Concept Design by Duplitronics under N.C.G.S. § 75-16.1.

Therefore, Duplitronics' argument that [*16] the Plaintiff's Motion for Fees should be denied because Duplitronics' good faith attempts to fully resolve the matter were rejected by Concept Design fails.

(B) Determination of the Fee

In the Memorandum of Decision and Order filed October 31, 1994 [Documents # 361 & # 354, respectively] in connection with the fee allowed Plaintiff's counsel for the trial, pursuant to N.C. General Statute § 75-16.1, the Court considered Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 103 S. Ct. 1933, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40 \(1983\); Lyle v. Food Lion, Inc., 954 F.2d 984, 988-989 \(4th Cir. 1992\) and Johnson v. Georgia Highway Express, Inc., 488 F.2d 714, 714-19 \(5th Cir. 1974\).

Reiterating the decision in those cases, and the factors considered, would only add to the weight of an already voluminous record. Suffice it to say the Court has considered those cases in making its determination of the fee to be allowed Concept Design in the appellate phase.

Concept Design's account of its services in billing charges in connection with the appeal, commences on June 30, 1994, and concludes with a debit on February 28, 1995, with itemized billing hours in between.

There were three firms involved in the appellate portion of the litigation: W. Thad Adams, III; Northern, Blue, Rooks and Thibaut; and Fish & Richardson.

The Court has examined in great detail the charges by each firm, and has determined from such examination that the fees charged are reasonable, both as to the rate [*17] per hour and the number of hours for which a charge is made. It appears that all charges for matters other than related to the appeal have been deleted and, therefore, the Court finds that the summary submitted by the Plaintiff in its Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Plaintiff's Motion for a Supplemental Award of Attorneys Fees, [Documents # 367 & # 360, respectively], filed March 21, 1995, indicates a total attorney fee of $69,670.00 for the three law firms involved in the appeal. In light of all the information the Court has, the Court finds this to be reasonable and justified.

The total expenses submitted by all three firms is $9,033.07. The Court also finds all the expenses to be allowable. Thus, the Court will allow $69,670.00 as a fee for all three firms and $9,033.07 in expenses for a total of $78,703.07 fees and expenses to be paid the three law firms, involved in the appeal.

III. Duplitronics' Motion to Stay the Execution of Judgment and Enforcement of Liability on Appeal Bond to Permit Application to the Supreme Court for Certiorari, filed March 27, 1995 (Motion # 3 above)

BACKGROUND

On November 17, 1993, this Court entered Final Judgment against the Defendant [*18] Duplitronics, Inc. ("Duplitronics") and in favor of the Plaintiff Concept Design Electronics and Manufacturing, Inc. ("Concept Design") in the amount of Nine Hundred Thousand ($900,000.00) Dollars, based on a jury verdict of $300,000.00 which was trebled pursuant to N.C. General Statute § 75-1.1.

On November 30, 1993, this Court granted a temporary stay conditioned on the giving of a bond in the amount of $900,000.00. On December 2, 1993, Duplitronics executed an appeal bond in which Duplitronics and its surety, The Hanover Insurance Co. ("Hanover") agreed as follows:

We jointly and severally agree to pay to the above judgment creditor any part of the judgment which is not reversed, and interest, damages, and costs.

The obligation of this bond is limited to $900,000.00.

On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit entered an order affirming this Court's Final Judgment and the Mandate was issued on March 6, 1995, and Duplitronics' Motion to Stay Mandate was denied by the Federal Circuit on that same date.

On March 8, 1995, Concept Design moved this Court for an Order compelling payment by the surety of $900,000.00 plus interest (Motion # 1 above) [Documents # 366 & # 359, respectively].

Duplitronics [*19] filed its Motion on March 27, 1995, pursuant to Title 28, § 2101\(b\) of the U.S. Code for an order staying execution on the Final Judgment for a reasonable period to permit application to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari.

For the reasons hereinafter, the Court will deny the Defendant's Motion to Stay [Documents # 368 and # 361, respectively].

After the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit affirmed this Court's Judgment for $900,000 on January 17, 1995, Duplitronics filed a Motion for Rehearing and Suggestion for a Hearing En Banc, both of which were denied.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, under the heading of "Background" in its opinion, outlines the procedural history of this case involving U.S. Patent 4,410,917 (the Newdol Patent) assigned to Duplitronics and U.S. Patent 5,021,893 (the Scheffler Patent) assigned to Duplitronics.

Briefly, this litigation began in November 1990 when Concept Design filed a declaratory judgment action to declare invalid and unenforceable the Newdoll Patent and a declaratory judgment action in June 1991 to declare the Scheffler Patent invalid and unenforceable. The suits involving the two patents were consolidated.

The first trial of these matters was held in March of 1993 in [*20] which the jury decided all issues for Concept Design, finding that Duplitronics' Newdoll and Scheffler Patents invalid, unenforceable and not infringed. Duplitronics moved for judgment as a matter of law, or alternatively a new trial pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 50\(b\). This Court denied that motion.

A second jury trial was held in November 1993 on Concept Design's claim that Duplitronics had violated the North Carolina Unfair Competition law and to determine damages. This phase of the litigation had been bifurcated from the first at Duplitronics' request.

In the second trial, Concept Design presented two theories of unfair competition: (1) Duplitronics' alleged fraud on the Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") during prosecution of the Scheffler Patent; and (2) Duplitronics' enforcement of the two patents allegedly with no reasonable belief that the patents were infringed. The jury in that trial found for Concept Design on the theory that Duplitronics had asserted the Scheffler and Newdoll Patents in bad faith and awarded $300,000.00 in damages, which the Court trebled under the N.C. Unfair Trade Practices law. This Court entered final judgment both phases of the litigation, including a judgment that the two [*21] patents were unenforceable for inequitable conduct. This Court denied a motion for judgment as a matter of law and Duplitronics appealed.

Duplitronics argues in Footnote 2 that Concept Design is totally without a basis for an award of interest under the express terms of the Final Judgment.

That Final Judgment was filed in this Court on November 17, 1993 and Paragraph 8 provided:

8. Plaintiff Concept Design shall have and recover of the Defendant Duplitronics the sum of NINE HUNDRED THOUSAND AND NO/100 ($900,000.00) DOLLARS, said sum being treble the amount fixed by the verdict of the jury, pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-16;

Title 28, § 1961\(a\) provides in pertinent part:

§ 1961. Interest

(a) Interest shall be allowed on any money judgment in a civil case recovered in a district court. Execution therefor may be levied by the marshal, in any case where, by the law of the State in which such court is held, execution may be levied for interest on judgments recovered in the courts of the State. Such interest shall be calculated from the date of the entry of the judgment. . .

Thus, the statute provides for interest without the necessity of including it in the judgment.

Duplitronics argues that there is a reasonable likelihood that [*22] certiorari will be granted (by the Supreme Court) in this matter contending: (1) that the original jury verdict on the patent validity issues determined that the patent at issue were unenforceable but only after the submission of a special issue which included two independent theories of invalidation: (a) inequitable conduct and (b) patent misuse, and there is no way to tell from the general verdict what theory the jury chose to find the patents unenforceable; (2) the Court made no finding of fact under Rule 52\(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to support the legal conclusions; and (3) the Court erroneously instructed the jury in the unfair competition portion of this trial that the patents were invalid and unenforceable in contravention of Duplitronics's right to enjoy a presumption of patent validity in several opinions of the Federal Circuit.

However, the Federal Circuit in its unpublished opinion number 94-1264 stated that in the March 1993 jury trial the jury found that Duplitronics' Newdoll and Scheffler patents were invalid, unenforceable and not infringed and that at a second jury trial, held in November 1993, Concept Design presented two theories of unfair competition at trial: (1)

Duplitronics' alleged fraud on the [*23] PTO during prosecution of the Scheffler patent and the re-examination proceeding concerning the Newdoll patent; and (2) Duplitronics' enforcement of the two patents, allegedly done with no reasonable belief that the patents were infringed. The jury in the second trial found for Concept Design on the theory that Duplitronics had asserted the Scheffler and Newdoll patents in bad faith and awarded damages of $300,000.00 which was trebled by the Court.

The Federal Circuit pointed out that the two phases of the trial had been bifurcated at Duplitronics' request.

On November 17, 1993, this Court entered a final judgment on both phases of the litigation, including a judgment that the two separate patents were unenforceable for inequitable conduct.

Duplitronics argues that the second jury effectively acquitted it of inequitable conduct. The Federal Circuit pointed out that the jury in the first trial in March was asked to determine whether the patents were unenforceable on either of two separate grounds, misuse or inequitable conduct, that the March jury was instructed that a patent is rendered unenforceable by either inequitable conduct or misuse and that even though there was some ambiguity [*24] regarding the grounds on which the March jury reached its verdict of unenforceability that this Court in entering its final judgment on November 17, 1993 that the patents were unenforceable as a result of inequitable conduct, in spite of the ambiguity in the March jury's verdict that the decision respecting inequitable conduct, is a discretionary decision to be made by the judge on his own factual findings and that the district court had authority for its findings and judgment independent of the jury's verdict whichever theory it was based on.

The Federal Circuit further disagreed with Duplitronics' contention that this Court's rulings of inequitable conduct was clear error unsupported by the evidence, or otherwise in excess of the Court's discretionary power because the November jury found that Concept Design had not proven by clear and convincing evidence that Duplitronics committed fraud on the patent office. The Federal Circuit first noted that the litigation was bifurcated at the request of Duplitronics into the first phase addressing claims of invalidity, unenforceability and infringement, and a second phase addressing the unfair competition claim and damages. The Federal Circuit [*25] noted that Duplitronics acknowledged the two trials addressed different issues - - the first trial addressed inequitable conduct whereas the second addressed fraud on the PTO. The Federal Circuit concluded that the district court did not abuse its discretion by entering a final judgment of unenforceability due to inequitable conduct based on the evidence at the first trial, and further that the outcome of the unfair competition claim based on fraud, determined by the second trial, is simply irrelevant to the outcome of the inequitable conduct claim heard at the first trial.

The Federal Circuit determined that any other result would allow a party to try the same issue twice by requesting bifurcation, thereby violating the purpose of bifurcation, conservation of judicial resources and simplification of issues and that therefore Duplitronics is judicially estopped from first seeking separation, but later merger of those issues.

Secondly, the Federal Circuit noted that the Court's finding that Duplitronics committed inequitable conduct is not inconsistent with the second jury's finding that Duplitronics did not commit fraud because the legal standards for proving fraud are more stringent [*26] than for demonstrating inequitable conduct, stating:

In comparable circumstances we have stated:

When a party seeks to collect monetary damages from a patentee because of alleged violations of the antitrust law, it is appropriate to require a higher degree of misconduct for that damage award than when a party asserts only a defense against an infringement claim.

Hewlett-Packard Co. v. Bausch & Lomb Inc., 882 F.2d 1556, 1563, 11 USPQ2d 1750, 1756 (Fed. Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1076, 110 S. Ct. 1125, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1990); Argus Chemical Corp. v. Fibre Glass-Evercoat Co., 812 F.3d 1381, 1384-85, 11 USPQ2d 1971, 1973-74 (Fed. Cir. 1987) ("knowing and willful fraud . . . can mean no less than clear, convincing proof of intentional fraud involving affirmative dishonesty").

In answer to Duplitronics' assertion that the corresponding jury instructions in the two trials were almost identical and that therefore the second jury, found by necessary implication, that Duplitronics did not intend to deceive or knowingly conceal a material fact, the Federal Circuit stated:

Actually, the jury instructions properly differed in an important aspect. In the second trial, the court instructed the jury that "Concept Design must show fraud involving affirmative dishonesty." Consistent with the law of inequitable conduct, there was no such requirement in the jury instructions of the first trial. Thus, the two verdicts are consistent and the second cannot be said [*27] to alter the first.

The Federal Circuit, in disagreeing with Duplitronics' contention that this Court's ruling of inequitable conduct was clear error or otherwise in excess of the Court's discretionary power because the November jury found that Concept Design had not proven by clear and convincing evidence that Duplitronics' fraud on the patent office elucidated its third reason as follows:

Third, two separate juries reviewed different evidence to find different facts on different instructions. Although the parties disagreed at oral argument about the extent to which the evidence in the two trials overlapped, the fact that the evidence was not identical is sufficient by itself to justify the different verdicts on the related issues of unenforceability and fraud, making the two verdicts consistent. Even if the verdicts were not consistent, the jury verdict concerning fraud cannot alter the judgment concerning inequitable conduct when the two issues are decided in separate trials.

For these reasons and upon a review of the evidence, we hold that the district court did not abuse its discretion by entering judgment that the Newdall and Scheffler patents are unenforceable, as a matter of law, [*28] for inequitable conduct.

The Federal Circuit further responded to Duplitronics' other arguments that the jury verdicts on validity, infringement and unfair competition were unsupported by substantial evidence by stating:

Because we regard Duplitronics' arguments on these issues, like those concerning inequitable conduct, as unpersuasive in light of the record as a whole, we reject them.

Because this Court feels that the Federal Circuit's reasoning is sound and that there is little likelihood that certiorari will be granted, the Court will not stay execution of the judgment and enforcement of the liability on the appeal bond.

IV. Duplitronics' Motion to Prevent Execution of Judgment (Motion # 5 above)

This Court awarded the Plaintiff the sum of $218,314.00 as attorney's fees in this case by Judgment entered October 31, 1994. Duplitronics filed Notice of Appeal as to attorney's fees on November 4, 1994 [Documents # 363 & 356, respectively].

On November 15, 1994, Concept Design commenced procedures to execute on the attorney's fee Judgment by recording in the Office of the Clerk of Court for Mecklenburg County, North Carolina, required as a precondition to recording in Illinois where Duplitronics [*29] is located. On November 18, 1994, Concept Design filed a Notice of Cross-Appeal, and on January 9, 1995, a Petition for Registration of Foreign Judgment in Cook County, Illinois.

Duplitronics, on January 26, 1995, filed a Motion in Illinois to Stay Enforcement of the Foreign Judgment.

Duplitronics' reliance on Tennessee Valley Authority v. Atlas Machine & Iron Works, 803 F.2d 794 \(4th Cir. 1986\) is misplaced.

TVA stands for the proposition that where the prevailing party in the lower court is the first to appeal, no supersedeas bond can be required of the losing party when it subsequently files its own appeal because the execution of the judgment has already been superseded by the prevailing party's appeal. Id. at 797, citing Branson v. La Crosse R.R. Co., 68 U.S. \(1 Wall.\) at 410, 17 L. Ed 616.

In this case, Judgment for Concept Design as to attorney's fees was filed October 31, 1994. Duplitronics filed Notice of Appeal on November 4, 1994. On November 15, 1994, Concept Design recorded its Judgment in the Office of the Clerk of Superior Court for Mecklenburg County, North Carolina as required by Illinois Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgment Act, 735 ILCS 5/12-654. There is then an automatic stay in Illinois before enforcement can be continued. 735 ILCS 5/12-653. (North Carolina Uniform Act is similar. 1C NC Gen. Stat. 1704\(b\).)

Concept Design, on January 9, 1995, filed in the Circuit Court of [*30] Cook County, Illinois, a petition for registration of a foreign judgment.

On January 26, 1995, Duplitronics filed a Motion in Illinois to Stay Enforcement of the Foreign Judgment, which Concept Design had commenced on November 15, 1994.

Duplitronics was the losing party. Concept Design was the prevailing party. Duplitronics was the first to appeal on November 4, 1994. Concept Design commenced execution procedure on November 15 by filing its judgment in the Mecklenburg County Clerk's Office. Then Concept Design filed its Cross-Appeal on November 18, 1994.

Thus, Concept Design, the prevailing party, was not the first to appeal; Duplitronics, the losing party, was the first to appeal, and following the dictate of Atlas, Duplitronics' Motion to Prevent Execution of Judgment will be denied.

CONCLUSION

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS ORDERED:

- (1) Motion by Concept Design to Enforce Liability Against Surety Pursuant to Rule 65.1 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, filed March 8, 1995, [Documents # 366 & # 359, respectively], is GRANTED.

Antitrust law addresses employer conspiracies, controlling employment terms because they tamper with the employment market and impair the opportunities of those who sell their services there. Just as antitrust law seeks to preserve the free market opportunities of buyers and sellers of goods, it also seeks to do the same for buyers and sellers of employment services. Courts have readily approved standing for professional athletes, challenging agreements among employers fixing employment terms and for brokers or magazine solicitors, challenging their employers' agreements against hiring switching employees. An employee overcomes the primary hurdle to standing when he shows that the alleged violation restrains competition in the labor market. He must still show injury-in-fact that is proximately caused by the violation and, in damage cases, that can be quantified without undue speculation.

[*543] SEYMOUR, Chief Judge.

Robert Roman brought this antitrust action under 15 U.S.C. 1, 15 and state law, alleging that Cessna Aircraft Company and The Boeing Company conspired to restrain trade by agreeing not to hire each other's engineers. The district court granted defendants' motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim, ruling that Mr. Roman lacked antitrust standing. Mr. Roman appeals and we reverse.

I.

[2] The complaint in this case alleges the following facts. Mr. Roman was "employed at Boeing as an airplane engineer via a contract with Butler Service Corporation." Aplt. App. at 2. While working at Boeing, Mr. Roman applied for a position at Cessna in which he would perform substantially similar work and receive more compensation. Initially Mr. Roman was told that Cessna needed workers with his experience and that he could expect a firm offer. However, he was subsequently told that Cessna would not offer him employment solely because of an agreement between Cessna and Boeing that they would not hire engineers away from each other. Id. at 3. The complaint further alleges specific facts which, if proven, would establish that such an agreement did exist and that it was the only reason for Cessna's refusal to hire Mr. Roman. Finally, the complaint alleges that defendants are in the labor market for airplane engineers, that plaintiff was an airplane engineer and a part of that labor market, that defendants have conspired to avoid competition in that market in violation of the antitrust laws by horizontally dividing the market as between them by not hiring each others' engineers [3] (a no-switching non-competition [sic] agreement), and alleges that as a direct and proximate cause of defendants' actions, plaintiff suffered damages to his business and property interests.

Id. at 5-6.

The district court concluded that Mr. Roman had failed to allege antitrust standing and dismissed the complaint. HN1 We review the sufficiency of a complaint de novo. Sharp v. United Airlines, Inc., 967 F.2d 404, 406 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 372, 113 S. Ct. 464 (1992).

"We will uphold a dismissal under [Fed.R.Civ.P. 12\(b\)\(6\)] only when it appears that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claims that would entitle the plaintiff to relief."

In making this determination, we must "accept all the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint as true and must construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff."

* The Honorable Arthur L. Alarcon, United States Senior Circuit Judge for the Ninth Circuit, sitting by designation.

HN2 [↑] We have enumerated six factors that are relevant in ascertaining whether a plaintiff has standing to pursue an antitrust claim:

(1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the plaintiff's injury; (2) the defendant's intent or motivation; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's [4] injury -- i.e., whether it is one intended to be redressed by the antitrust laws; (4) the directness or the indirectness of the connection between the plaintiff's injury and the market restraint resulting from the alleged antitrust violation; (5) the speculative nature of the damages sought; and (6) the risk of duplicative recoveries or complex damages apportionment.

Sharp, 967 F.2d at 406-07.

In granting defendants' motion to dismiss, the district court concluded that Mr. Roman failed to allege a causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and his antitrust injury. The court stated that because Mr. Roman was employed by Butler and worked at Boeing through a service contract between Butler and Boeing, the alleged agreement between Boeing and Cessna had no impact on Mr. Roman. In so holding, the court erroneously failed to take the complaint's factual allegations as true and construe them most favorably to Mr. Roman. Indeed the court's ruling is directly contrary to those allegations, which set out facts showing that the illegal agreement between defendants [*544] was the only reason Mr. Roman was not hired by Cessna.

The court rested its ruling on its conclusion [5] that because Mr. Roman was not an "employee" of Boeing and the alleged agreement covered only employees, Mr. Roman had not made the requisite showing that he was a target of the alleged illegal agreement. This conclusion similarly fails to accept as true the allegations in the complaint setting out facts showing that the alleged agreement did cover and was directed at workers such as Mr. Roman who were indirectly employed with one of defendants through a service contract.¹ The district court therefore erred in granting defendants' motion to dismiss for the reasons the court gave.

On appeal, defendants contend that we may affirm the district court on the alternative ground that Mr. Roman failed to adequately allege an antitrust [6] injury. The third factor we set forth in Sharp requires that a plaintiff's injury must be "intended to be redressed by the antitrust laws." Sharp, 967 F.2d at 407.

The gist of defendants' argument seems to be that Mr. Roman's injury does not flow from the alleged anticompetitive effect of the agreement because the market operated freely with respect to those employees who were not the target of that agreement. In other words, competition was not suppressed. The pertinent authority is to the contrary, however. The relevant cases hold that HN3 [↑] plaintiffs whose opportunities in the employment market have been impaired by an anticompetitive agreement directed at them as a particular segment of employees have suffered an antitrust injury under the governing standard. See, e.g., Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456, 77 S. Ct. 390 (1957) (football player subject to agreement blacklisting players who played in rival league stated claim for relief under antitrust laws); Quinonez v. National Ass'n of Sec. Dealers, Inc., 540 F.2d 824 (5th Cir. 1976) (employee subject to agreement under which a member would not hire person rejected or discharged by another member stated antitrust [7] claim).

A leading antitrust authority has described antitrust injury in the employment context as follows:

HN4 [↑] Antitrust law addresses employer conspiracies controlling employment terms precisely because they tamper with the employment market and thereby impair the opportunities of those who sell their services there. Just as antitrust law seeks to preserve the free market opportunities of buyers and sellers of goods, so also it seeks to do the same for buyers and sellers of employment services. It would be perverse indeed to hold that the very object of the law's solicitude and the persons most directly concerned--perhaps the only persons concerned--could not challenge the restraint.

Thus, the courts have readily approved standing for professional athletes challenging agreements among employers fixing employment terms and for brokers or magazine solicitors challenging their employers' agreements against hiring switching employees.

An employee overcomes the primary hurdle to standing when he shows that the alleged violation restrains competition in the labor market. Of course, he must still show injury-in-fact that was proximately caused by the violation and, in damage cases, that [8] can be quantified without undue speculation.

II Phillip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 377c (rev. ed. 1995)(footnotes omitted).²

[9] [*545] Mr. Roman has alleged that competition in the market for his services as an employee has been directly impeded by defendants' agreement not to compete for each others' employees. He further alleges that he was injured by that agreement because it prevented him from selling his services to the highest bidder. The measure of his alleged injury is the loss he suffered--i.e., the increase in compensation he would have obtained but for the illegal agreement. We believe this is sufficient to allege antitrust standing.

In sum, we conclude that the district court did not properly view the allegations in this complaint under the strict standard applicable to a motion for dismissal under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). We further conclude that the allegations in the complaint, taken as true, are sufficient to state antitrust standing. Accordingly, we reverse the dismissal and remand for further proceedings in light of this opinion.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

²The facts alleged here are distinguishable from the circumstances present in cases such as Sharp v. United Airlines, Inc., 967 F.2d 404 \(10th Cir. 1992\). In Sharp, former employees of Frontier Airlines who lost their jobs when Frontier ceased operations brought suit against United Airlines seeking antitrust damages for their claim that they were injured by the anticompetitive practices United allegedly used to drive Frontier out of business. In denying standing, we held that HNS ↑ "employees simply cannot establish an antitrust injury when they lose their employment as a result of some allegedly anticompetitive activity directed at or involving their employer." Id. at 408 (emphasis added). As we noted in Sharp, see id. at 408 n.4, that case is to be distinguished from a case like the one before us in which the anticompetitive practices are directed toward the employees themselves.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, makes it unlawful for any person to attempt to monopolize any part of trade or commerce. In order to prevail on such a claim, a plaintiff must prove that: (1) the defendants engaged in anticompetitive conduct; (2) the defendants had a specific intent to monopolize a relevant market; and (3) there was a dangerous probability that the defendants would sooner or later achieve their goal of obtaining monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN5 [down] Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices, Predatory Pricing

Because predatory pricing and price competition involve the same operative conduct, i.e., lowering prices, the consumer ultimately suffers if the court mistakenly characterizes price competition as predatory pricing. For these reasons, a plaintiff in a predatory pricing case under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is required to prove that (1) the prices complained of were below an appropriate measure of defendant's costs, and (2) that the defendant had a reasonable prospect of recouping its investment in below-cost prices. Proof of the second element, that is, a reasonable prospect of recoupment, is a required part of the plaintiff's case because the investment in below-cost pricing does not make sense for the alleged predator unless it has a reasonable expectation of recovering, in the form of later monopoly profits, more than the losses suffered.

Expert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but it is not a substitute for them.

A plaintiff must establish the relevant product and geographic markets in order to prevail on a claim of attempted monopolization by predatory pricing. Without an appropriate market definition, there is no context in which to determine whether the defendant is reasonably likely to obtain monopoly power. The boundaries of a product market are determined by eliminating from the market all products that are not reasonably interchangeable substitutes for the product manufactured or sold by the litigants. Products are reasonably interchangeable only if they compete with one another, that is, only if consumers will switch from one to the other in response to changes in price. The definition of the relevant product market is ordinarily a fact question left to the jury. However, as with all other issues of material fact, the burden is on the plaintiff to come forward with sufficient evidence upon which a jury could reasonably determine the relevant market.

HN10 [💡] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

A proper expert report defining a product market in a manner proposed by a litigant can be sufficient to create a fact issue with regard to the relevant product market. On the other hand, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of his pleading, but his response by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If he does not respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against him. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). Unsupported expert opinion will not suffice to defeat summary judgment. Accordingly, a party may not avoid summary judgment on the basis of an expert's opinion that fails to point to specific facts from the record to support his conclusions. While an expert may give an ultimate opinion about an issue of fact in the case, that opinion must be supported by an adequate basis.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

This matter is before the Court on defendants' Motion to Dismiss, or in the Alternative, Motion for Summary Judgment. Because the resolution of defendants' motion requires the HN1 Court to look to matters outside the pleadings, their motion will be treated as a motion for summary judgment. Ware v. Associated Milk Producers, Inc., 614 F.2d 413, 414 \(5th Cir. 1980\). For the reasons stated herein, the Court grants summary judgment in favor of defendants on plaintiff's federal antitrust law claims and dismisses plaintiff's state law claims for lack of jurisdiction.

In its complaint, Traffic Scan Network, Inc. ("Traffic Scan") charges Traffic Camera Reports, Inc. ("Traffic Camera"), together with defendants Marc E. Winston, Marco Outdoor Advertising, Inc., Winston Communications, Inc., and Winston Capital Management Corporation, with violating Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, as well as Louisiana state antitrust and unfair competition laws, by attempting to monopolize the New Orleans market "for the provision of traffic information to broadcasting media." Specifically, Traffic Scan [*2] contends that Traffic Camera engaged in predatory pricing by offering various incentives to Traffic Scan's subscribing radio stations and advertising clients. Traffic Scan further contends that after Traffic Camera succeeded in driving Traffic Scan to the brink of financial ruin, it offered to purchase Traffic Scan's assets for $ 700,000 with the proviso that Traffic Scan release Traffic Camera from any liability arising out of its preacquisition conduct. According to Traffic Scan, it was forced to accept Traffic Camera's offer or go out of business. Because this matter is before the Court on defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment, the Court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to Traffic Scan. The parties, however, are in basic agreement concerning the central, historical facts.

I. BACKGROUND

In 1983, John Marshall incorporated Traffic Scan and set up operations in his garage. Besides Traffic Scan, another company offered traffic reports in the New Orleans area at this time. Within a few weeks, Marshall, nonetheless, obtained subscriptions from ten New Orleans radio stations to provide traffic reports during the morning and evening rush hours. Deposition [*3] of Anthony Buonagura, at p. 15. The terms of Traffic Scan's standard contract required a radio station to provide Traffic Scan with ten one-minute time slots in the morning and in the evening. In exchange, Traffic Scan gathered traffic information by contacting local law enforcement agencies and dispatching employees equipped with cellular phones to the highways leading into New Orleans. Traffic Scan would then broadcast the information it had gathered for approximately fifty seconds during each time slot.¹ Traffic Scan generated revenues by packaging the remaining radio air time and selling it to advertising clients.² According to Traffic Scan,

The radio stations benefitted from this arrangement because they could provide traffic information to their listeners without any cash outlay. The arrangement was also cost effective for Traffic Scan's advertising clients because they were able to purchase advertising time on a number of different stations in a single package rather than buying the time piecemeal from each station.

Affidavit of Anthony Buonagura, at p. 2. As Traffic Scan grew, it expanded its coverage by leasing an airplane to gather traffic information. ^[*4] It also began to report weekday traffic conditions at noon.

By 1986, subscribing radio stations began to express their dissatisfaction with the arrangement that they had been operating under with Traffic Scan. Traffic Scan responded by offering compensation packages. As an incentive to subscribe to its traffic reporting service and to discourage radio stations from gathering traffic information on their own, Traffic Scan leased automobiles for its radio station clientele. Traffic Scan also offered other, smaller "perks," such as purchasing meals for station managers and donuts for station employees. Because Traffic Scan based the price of ^[*5] its advertising time on the number of listeners that subscribing radio stations reached, radio stations with higher rating points received greater incentives than radio stations with smaller audiences.

The compensation packages proved to be a successful device for maintaining and attracting radio station subscriptions. By 1987, Traffic Scan had accounts with 32 of the approximately 40 radio stations in the New Orleans area. Traffic Scan was also able to secure a contract with a local television station.³ The remaining radio and television stations either did not report traffic conditions to their listeners/viewers or gathered such information on their own.

Traffic Scan's success did not go unnoticed. Between 1987 and 1989, several national reporting services approached Traffic Scan and offered to purchase its ^[*6] assets. The offers were rejected, but the companies continued to communicate with each other, which led to additional offers. In January 1990, Traffic Scan received its most lucrative offer of $ 2,000,000 from the largest national traffic reporting company. There were also new entries and several attempted entries into the market during this period. The most significant new entry was, of course, Traffic Camera.

Traffic Camera was established under a different name in 1988 by Jose and Polly Pollet. Neither Pollet nor his wife had business experience in the traffic reporting business.⁴ Although Traffic Camera was initially viewed as a minor competitor by Traffic Scan, it was able to secure several accounts, including a radio station with a significant listening audience.

^[*7] In 1989, Marc Winston, a businessman with media interests in the New Orleans area, learned that the Pollets were trying to sell Traffic Camera. Winston was interested in Traffic Camera because he had heard that it was gathering traffic information in an innovative fashion. Indeed, rather than adopt the typical method of gathering traffic information from an airplane, Traffic Camera had put together a system of cameras and microwave relays along the highways leading into New Orleans. The cameras transmitted a picture of traffic conditions into a studio. By all accounts, this system was more efficient than gathering information from an airplane, since airplanes were more expensive to operate and could report traffic conditions only about the area over which they were flying. Although Traffic Camera was losing money, Winston attributed Traffic Camera's poor earnings to the owners' lack of business experience. Winston ultimately purchased the company in January 1990 within twenty-four hours of first seeing its operations.⁵

² In 1989, advertisers paid approximately $ 25- $ 40 per spot and were rotated among stations and time slots. Traffic Scan charged considerably less when it first entered the business and had less attractive stations to offer its advertising clients.

³ At some point before its acquisition by Traffic Camera, Traffic Scan also entered the traffic reporting business in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, Mobile, Alabama, Palm Beach, Florida, and Miami, Florida.

[*8] Shortly thereafter, Traffic Camera began an aggressive marketing campaign to secure additional contracts with radio stations. In addition to matching Traffic Scan's incentive program for cars,⁶ Traffic Camera offered radio stations free billboard space, as well as to pay the legal expenses of any radio station that disputed certain contract provisions with Traffic Scan. The billboard space was provided to Traffic Camera by defendant Marco Outdoor Advertising, which was also owned by Winston. The other defendant companies were a source of capital to pay for the other incentives. The terms under which the affiliated companies provided funds and billboards to Traffic Camera is unclear, though defendant concedes that the affiliated companies were not immediately, if ever, reimbursed.

Traffic Camera was also successful at securing advertising clients. The terms under [*9] which Traffic Camera was able to attract advertisers is a matter of dispute between the parties. Plaintiff contends that Traffic Camera used defendant Winston Communication's ownership interest in a local radio station to offer free air time to Traffic Scan's advertising clients. Plaintiff further submits that Traffic Camera attracted advertising clients by offering below cost advertising rates, as low as seven dollars a spot. Marc Winston, on the other hand, testified at his deposition that Traffic Camera competed not only with Traffic Camera, but also with all the other sellers of commercial radio advertising time in establishing its advertising rates:

We weren't competing with Traffic Scan to get their advertisers. We were trying to get our own advertisers interested in advertising on the radio stations that we had, whether that happened to be advertisers that were already involved in traffic type advertising or whether they were fresh advertisers, and the price related to whatever the market would bear, and whatever the market would bear depended to a large degree on what stations we had, and to an even larger degree to what the rest of the radio market was charging for [*10] their commercial time. The radio market itself has a thirty million dollar market in New Orleans, and the traffic business is a small part of the radio business here, and when you go and sell traffic or traffic time, you are in effect competing with every other radio station attempting to sell radio time. So the prices were really set by the market as a whole, the radio market.

Of course, if we ran into an advertiser that was buying time [from] Traffic Scan, [that] put us in a jump ball situation, then we would have to meet the prices that Traffic Scan was charging.

Deposition of Marc Winston, at p. 39.⁷

[*11] Although Traffic Scan was still profitable in the summer of 1990,⁸ John Marshall arranged to meet with Marc Winston to discuss a potential merger. Marshall claims this was prior to any antitrust activity by Traffic Camera. Affidavit of John Marshall, at p. 4. According to Marshall, he did not believe that two traffic reporting services could

⁵ Winston described the deal as hurried because Traffic Camera's owners had already received several offers.

⁶ Plaintiff claims that Traffic Camera not only matched Traffic Scan's car incentive program but surpassed it by offering luxury automobiles.

⁸ This matter is in dispute between the parties. Defendants, however, have conceded the point for purposes of its motion.

"operate in the New Orleans area . . . at the high profit level Traffic Scan had grown accustomed to." Id. Marshall wanted to see if Winston would be willing to purchase Traffic Scan or, alternatively, if he would sell Traffic Camera to Traffic Scan. The meeting ended without an agreement. No further discussions were held until the fall of 1990.

It is undisputed that by October 1990 Traffic Camera had accounts with approximately half of the radio stations in the New Orleans area. Many of these accounts had been acquired at the expense of Traffic [*12] Scan. According to Traffic Scan, the loss of the radio station contracts had crippled its earnings. It is under these circumstances that negotiations between the two companies resumed during the latter part of October.⁹

In December 1990, the negotiations between Traffic Camera and Traffic Scan resulted in a sales agreement in which Traffic Camera agreed to purchase a significant portion of Traffic Scan's assets for approximately $ 700,000. Under the terms of the agreement, Traffic Camera received $ 200,000 at the time of closing. The remainder of the purchase price was to be paid in four installments over the next four years. The asset purchase agreement further provided that:

In the event that any station agreement involving stations, WEZB, WQUE, WWL, or WLMG are cancelled or substantially [*13] modified to the detriment of buyer through no fault of buyer, within two years of closing, then the purchase price shall be reduced by $ 100,000

According to Traffic Scan, Traffic Camera also required Traffic Scan to execute a conditional settlement and release, which purported to release Traffic Camera from any liability arising out of its preacquisition conduct. Faced with imminent bankruptcy, Traffic Scan agreed to the terms of the purchase agreement and conditional settlement.¹⁰

[*14] Since its acquisition of Traffic Scan's assets, Traffic Camera has remained the leader in the provision of traffic information in the New Orleans area.¹¹ Traffic Scan remains in existence acting primarily as a receiver of payments due under the asset purchase agreement. Traffic Scan does not compete with Traffic Camera in the traffic reporting business in New Orleans. However, John Marshall, its former CEO, currently works for a Pennsylvania traffic reporting company in Covington, Louisiana, albeit on an "inventory control project." Traffic Camera's advertising rates have not increased materially since it purchased Traffic Scan's assets, although in some cases the incentives it provides radio stations have not been as lucrative as they were when it was competing with Traffic Scan.

[*15] II. DISCUSSION

Plaintiff's complaint charges the defendants with violating Section 2 of the Sherman Act by attempting to monopolize the market for the provision of traffic information to broadcasters.¹² Plaintiff also charges that

¹² Plaintiff's complaint also mentions claims against defendants for a conspiracy to monopolize and for monopolization. Monopolization, an attempt to monopolize, and a conspiracy to monopolize are three separate legal claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiff could therefore have chosen to assert all three claims. However, in response to defendants' motion for defendants violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by conspiring to engage in predatory pricing. Defendants seek summary judgment on both claims.

Under Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 56\(c\), defendants bear the initial burden of showing that there are no disputed issues of material fact and that they are entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Plaintiff must then come forward with "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 56\(e\). The Court reviews the record as a whole to determine if there is a genuine issue for trial. "Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, there is no genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).

Defendants' motion for summary judgment raises a host of arguments as to why plaintiff's Sherman Act claims should be dismissed. First, defendants contend that plaintiff cannot meet the interstate commerce requirement of the Sherman Act because Traffic Camera's conduct was local in nature. Second, defendants contend that plaintiff's proposed product market definition, that is the provision of traffic information to broadcasters, is too narrow. Third, defendants contend that plaintiff's Section 1 conspiracy claim [*17] fails because the defendant companies are all owned by Marc Winston or his immediate family and the personal stake exception to the Copperweld doctrine is inapplicable. Fourth, defendants contend that the Conditional Settlement and Release entered into by the plaintiff precludes it from maintaining this action. Finally, defendants contend that once plaintiff's federal question claims are dismissed, the Court lacks jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims.

Plaintiff submitted written opposition to defendants' motion. In addition to opposing defendants' motion on its merits, plaintiff submits that the issues presented for review have been raised in prior motions and that the Court is bound by the decisions issued with respect to those motions. Plaintiff also seeks sanctions against the defendants for needlessly reurging issues previously addressed in its prior pretrial motions.

After reviewing the summary judgment record, the Court has determined that plaintiff's federal antitrust claims are fatally deficient and must be dismissed. Further, the Court lacks jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims, which are likewise dismissed. Plaintiff's motion for sanctions is [*18] denied. The reasons for the Court's decision are discussed below.

A. The Sherman Act's Interstate Commerce Requirement

Defendants' argument that plaintiff's claims fail to meet the Sherman Act's jurisdictional requirement that the alleged conduct affect interstate commerce has been rejected by another Section of this Court. In denying defendants' motion to dismiss, the Court found:

Assuming the truth of plaintiff's statements, Traffic Scan provided services to interstate travellers and to radio stations that broadcast across state lines. Additionally, it has out-of-state clients and the funds used in Traffic Camera's purchase crossed state lines. Thus, the court finds that Traffic Scan has demonstrated a sufficient nexus between the activities at issue and interstate commerce to defeat the motion to dismiss.

Order and Reasons, Rec. Doc. No. 97, at p. 3. In response to defendants' current motion, plaintiff submitted evidence to support each of the allegations previously relied upon by the Court to deny defendants' motion to dismiss. Additionally, plaintiff submitted evidence to suggest that Traffic Scan's advertising revenues were regularly generated [*19] from out-of-state advertisers.

summary judgment, plaintiff characterized its claim under Section 2 as an attempt to monopolize claim among affiliated companies. See Plaintiff's Memorandum in Opposition, Rec. Doc. no. 116, at pp. 17, 28-29, 31. Plaintiff apparently chose to disavow the alternative theories of liability available under Section 2 either to avoid the Copperweld issues raised by the defendants with respect to plaintiff's Section 1 claim or in the mistaken belief that Section 2 "has nothing to do with conspiracy or concerted action." Id. at 31. Since plaintiff has expressly chosen to pursue only an attempt to monopolize claim, the Court will treat this as an attempt to monopolize case.

It is now well established that HN3[↑] Congress intended to exercise its constitutional power to regulate interstate commerce to the fullest in enacting the Sherman Act. It is also well established that it "is within the power of Congress to eradicate or dampen activities which pose a threat to the free flow of any aspect of interstate commerce, including that which might appear to be totally local in nature." Cowan v. Corley, 814 F.2d 223, 226 \(5th Cir. 1987\). Considering the breadth of conduct "affecting commerce," plaintiff's evidence is more than sufficient to carry its burden of creating a disputed issue of material fact with regard to this issue. See Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322, 111 S. Ct. 1842, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366 \(1991\) (complaint alleging conspiracy to exclude single ophthalmological surgeon from "the Los Angeles" market met Sherman Act's commerce requirement); United States v. Women's Sportswear Mfg. Ass'n, 336 U.S. 460, 464, 69 S. Ct. 714, 716, 93 L. Ed. 805 \(1949\) ("If it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze."); Cowan, 814 F.2d at 226 (provision [*20] of wrecker services on two interstate highways in single Texas county bore sufficient relationship to interstate commerce to implicate federal antitrust laws).

B. Attempt to Monopolize

HN4[↑] Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful for any person to attempt to monopolize any part of trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 2 \(1988\). In order to prevail on its claim, plaintiff must prove that: (1) the defendants engaged in anticompetitive conduct; (2) the defendants had a specific intent to monopolize a relevant market; and (3) there was a dangerous probability that the defendants would sooner or later achieve their goal of obtaining monopoly power. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\); T.O. Bell v. Dow Chemical Co., 847 F.2d 1179, 1182 \(5th Cir. 1988\).

Here, plaintiff alleges that defendants' anticompetitive conduct took the form of predatory pricing. The Supreme Court has observed that "predatory pricing schemes are rarely tried and even more rarely successful." Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 589, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\). HN5[↑] Because predatory pricing and [*21] price competition involve the same operative conduct, i.e., lowering prices, the consumer ultimately suffers if the court mistakenly characterizes price competition as predatory pricing. Id. at 594, 106 S. Ct. at 1360 ("cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition . . . [;] mistaken inferences . . . are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect."). For these reasons, the Supreme Court requires a plaintiff in a predatory pricing case under Section 2 of the Sherman Act to prove that (1) the prices complained of were below an appropriate measure of defendant's costs, and (2) that the defendant had a reasonable prospect of recouping its investment in below-cost prices. Brooke Group, Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2587-88 \(1993\). Proof of the second element, that is, a reasonable prospect of recoupment, is a required part of the plaintiff's case because the investment in below-cost pricing does not make sense for the alleged predator unless it has "a reasonable expectation of recovering, in the form of later [*22] monopoly profits, more than the losses suffered." 113 S. Ct. at 2588, quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588-89.

In this case, plaintiff's predatory pricing claim is deficient for three reasons: (1) plaintiff has failed to put forward credible evidence of Traffic Camera's costs, thereby precluding a determination that defendant has engaged in below-cost pricing; (2) plaintiff's proposed market definition is unsupported by facts and is contradicted by other evidence in the record; and (3) the absence of entry barriers precludes a showing of recoupment, even if plaintiff's market definition were accepted.

C. Below-Cost Pricing

As stated, HN6[↑] the first element of a predatory pricing claim is proof of pricing below some appropriate measure of cost. Brooke Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2588. In the Fifth Circuit, in the absence of extremely high entry barriers, the appropriate measure of cost is Traffic Camera's marginal or "average variable cost." Phototron Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 842 F.2d 95, 99 n.4 \(5th Cir.\), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1023, 108 S. Ct. 1996, 100 L. Ed. 2d 228 \(1988\); International Air Indus. v. American Excelsior Co., 517 F.2d 714 \(5th Cir. 1975\), [*23] cert. denied, 424 U.S. 943, 47 L. Ed. 2d 349, 96 S. Ct. 1411 (1976).

Here, plaintiff claims that the relevant product market is the provision of traffic information to the broadcasting media. However, there is no evidence in the record of Traffic Camera's average variable cost of producing traffic reports. Nor is there any data on the relationship of cost to price. Indeed, the only mention of Traffic Camera's costs by the plaintiff was some discussion of the total annual cost of non-cash promotions that Traffic Camera provided broadcasters who subscribed to its traffic reporting service. Evidence of Traffic Camera's annual expenditures on non-cash promotions is of no value in the absence of additional evidence detailing Traffic Camera's other variable costs, as well as its total output.¹³

[*24] Plaintiff's expert report is of no help either. It states the broad conclusion that the expert's review of Traffic Camera's financial records suggests that Traffic Camera sold its product well below its variable cost of production. However, no specific elements of the cost of producing the traffic reports are identified; no cost amounts are identified; and no price-cost comparison is made.¹⁴

[*25] Moreover, none of the financial records relied on by the expert were made part of the record. The HN7[↑] Court cannot credit an expert report that is nothing but a conclusion unsupported by record facts. See Brooke Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2598. As Brooke Group makes clear, expert testimony without a factual foundation cannot defeat a motion for summary judgment. "When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict. . . . Expert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but it is not a substitute for them." Id.; see also Advo, Inc. v. Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc., 51 F.3d 1191 \(3d Cir. 1995\) (summary judgment appropriate when plaintiff was unable to produce any "direct evidence" that defendant offered its product at prices below any relevant measure of costs; conclusory expert report rejected). Plaintiff's failure to adduce evidence of a relevant measure of defendants' costs is a sufficient basis of itself to grant summary judgment on its predatory pricing claim. Id.

[*26] D. Relevant Product Market

HN8[↑] Plaintiff must establish the relevant product and geographic markets in order to prevail on a claim of attempted monopolization by predatory pricing. See C.E. Servs., Inc. v. Control Data Corp., 759 F.2d 1241, 1244 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1037, 88 L. Ed. 2d 583, 106 S. Ct. 604 (1985) (proof of relevant market is prerequisite of attempted monopolization claim under Section 2); In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 713 F. Supp. 971, 979 (N.D. Tex. 1988), aff'd, 907 F.2d 510 \(5th Cir. 1990\) (same). Without an appropriate market definition, there is no context in which to determine whether defendant is reasonably likely to obtain monopoly power. See Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 \(1965\); Photovest Corp. v. Fotomat Corp., 606 F.2d 704, 711 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 917, 100 S. Ct. 1278, 63 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1980). For the purposes of their motion, defendants have conceded that the relevant geographic market is the New Orleans metropolitan area. The Court thus limits its inquiry into whether plaintiff has created a triable issue with [*27] regard to its proposed product market definition.

The boundaries of a product market are determined by eliminating from the market all products that are not reasonably interchangeable substitutes for the product manufactured or sold by the litigants. United States v. E. I. du Pont De Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 \(1956\). Products are reasonably interchangeable only if they compete with one another, that is, only if consumers will switch from one to the other in response to changes in price. Id.; Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 326, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1524, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1962\); H.J., Inc. v. IT&T, 867 F.2d 1531, 1538 \(8th Cir. 1989\) (discussing cross-elasticity of demand); General Indus. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 805 \(8th Cir. 1987\).

The definition of the relevant product market is ordinarily a fact question left to the jury. T.O. Bell v. Dow Chemical Co., 847 F.2d 1179, 1184 \(5th Cir. 1988\). However, as with all other issues of material fact, the burden is on the plaintiff to come forward with sufficient evidence upon which a jury could reasonably determine the relevant market. Id.

While conceding [*28] that radio stations broadcast a variety of programs, plaintiff contends that the product market is limited to traffic report programming to broadcast media. According to the plaintiff, traffic report programming is distinct from all other programming because the information provided in traffic reports is unique. Plaintiff argues that news, music, talk shows, and other programming broadcast on radio and television are therefore not reasonable substitutes for a consumer who desires information about traffic conditions. To support its argument, plaintiff relies exclusively on two expert reports created by the same economist. In both reports, the economist states that the relevant product market is "the provision of traffic information to broadcasters My reason for defining the product market as I have done is that there are no alternative products reasonably substitutable for traffic information sold to broadcasters." See Plaintiff's Exhibits G & J.

Defendants dispute plaintiff's characterization of the product market. In their view, the relevant product market is all radio programming. According to the defendants, a radio station broadcasting a traffic report is competing [*29] with other radio stations for listeners because it cannot prevent a listener from changing the station. In support of their argument, defendants cite deposition testimony suggesting that traffic reports account for a small portion, approximately 7-1/2%, of radio advertising revenues generally. Defendants also rely on the Fifth Circuit's decision in Domed Stadium Hotel, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 732 F.2d 480, 487 \(5th Cir. 1984\), in which the court held that HN9 a single brand of a particular product cannot constitute a product market absent exceptional circumstances.

HN10 A proper expert report defining a product market in a manner proposed by a litigant can be sufficient to create a fact issue with regard to the relevant product market. On the other hand, "an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of his pleading, but his response by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If he does not respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against him." Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 56\(e\) (emphasis added). Again, we need look no further than to the Supreme Court's most recent [*30] decision on predatory pricing for the proposition that unsupported expert opinion will not suffice to defeat summary judgment. Brooke Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2598 (As useful as expert testimony might be in interpreting market facts, "it is not a substitute for them."). Accordingly, a party may not avoid summary judgment on the basis of an expert's opinion that fails to point to specific facts from the record to support his conclusions. See ADVO, Inc. v. Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc., 51 F.3d 1191 \(3d Cir. 1995\); Evers v. General Motors Corp., 770 F.2d 984, 986 \(11th Cir. 1985\); Henderson Broadcasting Corp. v. Houston Sports Ass'n, Inc., 647 F. Supp. 292 \(S.D. Tex. 1986\) ("While an expert may give an ultimate opinion about an issue of fact in the case, that opinion must be supported by an adequate basis.").

In his report, plaintiff's expert states that the relevant product market is the provision of traffic information to broadcast media. The expert further states that he reached this conclusion, as well as the other opinions contained his expert report, based on an analysis of (1) largely unidentified "financial records" of Traffic Camera's; (2) the parties' [*31] radio station contracts; (3) the deposition of Marc Winston; and (4) largely unidentified financial records of Traffic Scan's.¹⁵ The expert does not, however, cite any specific facts allegedly contained in those documents to support his ultimate conclusion regarding the product market. Nor does he point to particular documents that would support his opinion. Without such information, plaintiff's expert report is nothing but a factual conclusion lacking in foundation and substance.

It is true that HN11¹⁵ while reliable measures of supply and demand elasticities provide the most accurate estimates of a relevant market, they are difficult to gather. For this reason, it is acceptable to rely on evidence such as usage patterns, industry and customer surveys, the distinct [*32] characteristics of the products, customers and vendors, and cross-industry price monitoring as surrogates for cross-elasticity data. See Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 326, 82 S. Ct. at 1524; U.S. Healthcare, 986 F.2d 589 at 599; U.S. Anchor Mfg. v. Rule Indus., 7 F.3d 986, 995 \(11th Cir. 1993\). This Court is without a clue, however, as to how the financial documents and contracts reviewed by plaintiff's expert could or did provide any of this type of information. There is no record evidence, for example, on whether the radio industry or public recognize traffic programming as distinct from other types of programming. Nor is there evidence disclosing whether traffic reports are uniquely attractive to a certain segment of the population or whether traffic reports generate an audience uniquely attractive to advertisers.¹⁶ See NCAA v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 \(1984\). Nor is there evidence that would disclose what the radio stations viewed as substitutes for traffic information or how they would react to a significant and sustained price increase in the cost of traffic information.

[*33] Plaintiff's expert also relies upon the deposition of Marc Winston. However, nowhere in his deposition did Winston testify that traffic reports were not reasonably interchangeable with other radio programming. Rather, he testified that: "The radio market itself has a thirty million dollar market in New Orleans, and the traffic business is a small part of the radio business here, and when you go and sell traffic or traffic time, you are in effect competing with every other radio station attempting to sell radio time." Deposition of Marc Winston, at p. 39. This testimony lends support not to the plaintiff's characterization of the market, but to the defendants' proposed product market definition.

Plaintiff's expert report also fails to account for other economic realities under which Traffic Scan and Traffic Camera operated. Radio stations did not pay a premium price for this supposedly unique product. To the contrary, Traffic Scan and Traffic Camera spent a considerable amount of money to encourage the radio stations to maintain their subscriptions by offering "compensation packages." The take-it-or-leave-it position of the radio stations supports each of the following conclusions [*34] regarding market conditions: (1) consumer demand for traffic reports was limited; (2) radio stations did not view traffic reports as an essential part of their daily programming; and (3) radio stations were confident that they could provide traffic information themselves or obtain it from other sources. Further support for these market conditions can be found in defendants' evidence suggesting that traffic reports constitute only a small portion of radio programming, and in evidence suggesting that radio stations can and have produced traffic reports themselves. None of the evidence in the record is consistent with plaintiff's proposed market definition. Rather, it suggests that plaintiff's proposed product market is artificially constricted and self-serving.

In sum, HN12¹⁷ an expert witness' conclusions cannot be used to defeat a motion for summary judgment if they are not supported by a sufficient factual basis or are economically unreasonable in light of the undisputed facts of the case. Brooke Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2598 ("When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient evidence to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render [*35] the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict."). The Court has found plaintiff's expert report to suffer from both flaws. Since plaintiff has submitted no other evidence to support its proposed market definition, there is no evidence from which a jury could begin to measure the boundaries of the relevant product market. Absent a relevant product market, the jury would also be unable to measure defendants' capacity to monopolize. Plaintiff has thus failed to carry its burden of creating a triable issue with respect to its attempt to monopolize claim.

E. Predatory Pricing

¹⁶ Although not discussing the product market, plaintiff's expert states elsewhere in his report that "there is likely some significant product uniqueness" generated by the multiple-station packaging offered to advertisers by traffic reporting services. Plaintiff's expert does not cite any evidence in support of this statement. Moreover, plaintiff claims that the relevant product is traffic reporting, not advertising, and it has not produced any evidence to suggest that this product is unique.

Even if plaintiff had been able to create a triable issue on the definition of the relevant product market, its attempt to monopolize claim would, nonetheless, have failed because the record reveals that plaintiff is unable to prove that defendants engaged in predatory conduct. As noted, plaintiff faces a heavy burden when charging a competitor with attempting to monopolize a market by means of predatory pricing. The Court has already found that plaintiff has failed to establish the first element of that claim, i.e., that the alleged predator was pricing its product or services below [*36] an appropriate measure of costs. Brooke Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2592-93. The Court further finds that plaintiff flounders on the second element, i.e., that the predator had a reasonable prospect of producing sustained supracompetitive pricing in the relevant market to recoup its predatory losses. Id. Without competent evidence to support the existence of these market conditions, the alleged predatory conduct does not pose an authentic threat to competition. Id. It is therefore not a basis of liability under the antitrust laws. Id.

In the present case, no inference of recoupment is sustainable on the summary judgment record. This follows because the undisputed facts establish that there are no barriers to entry into the business of providing traffic information to media broadcasters in New Orleans, and there are numerous potential entrants with the capability and economic incentive to enter the New Orleans traffic reporting business.¹⁷ Under these circumstances, Brooke Group teaches that summary judgment on plaintiff's predatory pricing claim is warranted. 113 S. Ct. at 2589.

[*37] The evidence is clear on ease of entry. Working out of John Marshall's garage, plaintiff successfully entered the business in ten months with a small number of employees and limited equipment and capital outlay. It had 10 radio stations within weeks, and within four years, plaintiff had obtained contracts with nearly all of the radio stations in the New Orleans area. Despite its success and large number of stations, plaintiff could not prevent the Pollets--an unsophisticated, mom and pop operation--from setting up their own traffic reporting business and securing a contract with a major radio station. Moreover, after Winston acquired Traffic Camera, he was able to drive Traffic Scan to the "brink of financial ruin" in only 3 to 6 months. Finally, it is undisputed that Traffic Scan operated, and Traffic Camera continues to operate, under the continuing threat that subscribing radio stations will join other stations in the New Orleans market that have gathered traffic information from in-house sources.

Further, there is significant evidence to suggest that any effort by Traffic Camera to raise prices above a competitive level for a sustained period of time would be met by new entry. [*38] Plaintiff's success attracted attention and several purchase offers from national reporting companies. Additionally, John Marshall currently works in Covington, Louisiana for a Pennsylvania traffic reporting company. While Marshall says he is currently working on an "inventory control project," this company, through Marshall, may well be able to enter the business in the New Orleans area. Further, a powerful station like WWL can induce entry as it did with Traffic Updates if Traffic Camera attempts to exert muscle over prices. See supra note 11. When there are no barriers to entry and potential entrants abound, recoupment is implausible.¹⁸ evidently has been able to limit [entry by potential competitors] since becoming the sole market producer. Given [it's prior predatory conduct], and [Traffic Camera's] willingness to resume these activities when threatened by potential entrants, it is unlikely that a rational entrant would seek to compete in this market. Further, as an existing monopolist, [Traffic Camera] can engage in behavior unavailable to potential entrants (e.g., entry-limiting pricing).

[*39] Although not cited by the plaintiff on this point, plaintiff's expert stated in his report that Traffic Camera:

¹⁸ At oral argument, plaintiff's counsel stated that companies were always coming in and going out of the traffic reporting business. In a supplemental brief to the Court, plaintiff's counsel retreats from this statement by arguing that there has been only one entry into the market since 1990. He argues that Traffic Camera immediately bought out that entry for $ 200,000 so as to be able to continue to recoup its losses. However, simply because Traffic Camera acquired the assets of one new entrant does not mean that Traffic Camera could continue to do this indefinitely. Rather, Traffic Camera simply would not be able to afford to buy out new entries continually. To illustrate, plaintiff stated at oral argument that the profit margin for the dominant firm in the traffic reporting business was $ 60,000 - $ 80,000 annually. If we assume Traffic Camera's range of profitability is something in the same order of magnitude (no evidence of its profits or losses before or after its acquisition of plaintiff having been submitted), it would take nearly six years to make up the purchase price of the new entrant, not to mention the losses it allegedly sustained by driving Traffic Scan out of business. Nor does plaintiff's theory account for any future losses that would be incurred in order to eliminate other new entrants. Cf. Advo, Inc., 51 F.3d 1191 ("High prices will attract a stream of competitors who will eventually sap the predator's bank account.").

Because there are simply no structural barriers to entry into the traffic programming business, the expert's conclusions are unreasonable. See Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Corp., 6 F.3d 1422, 1427 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 127 L. Ed. 2d 658, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 1307 (1993) (Anticompetitive conduct by one firm against another is not an "entry barrier."); United States v. Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d 659, 664 n.6 (9th Cir. 1990) (HN14) Evidence of a high market share does not require a district court to conclude that there is an antitrust violation. In fact, such a conclusion, [*40] normally should not be drawn when the evidence also indicates that there is no barrier to entry into the relevant market."). In fact, the Third Circuit recently rejected a similar argument that an alleged predator could strategically deter entry sufficiently to scare off all potential entrants. ADVO, Inc. v. Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc., 51 F.3d 1191 (3d Cir. 1995). There, the court stated that "potential competitors will recognize that at some point the predatory firm will be unable or unwilling to charge below-cost prices and absorb further losses, since nobody's pockets are bottomless." Id. at 9.

In sum, the traffic reporting business, even if it were a "market," is not a business where entry is limited or deterred by government regulation, onerous front-end investments, dependence on a scarce commodity, or a network of exclusive contracts or distribution arrangements. Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d at 667. To the contrary, the record discloses "a rough and tumble industry," marked by companies with humble beginnings, fluid relationships with customers and an ample and continuous supply of product. See id.

In a supplemental brief to the Court, plaintiff argues [*41] that Traffic Camera's ability to recoup is evidenced by rising prices in the post-acquisition market. Plaintiff bases its claim on its expert report. Plaintiff's expert report states that "Financial records and Affiliation Agreements of [Traffic Camera] indicate that after early 1991 [Traffic Camera] has been utilizing its monopoly position in the market to raise prices." As stated previously, the financial records and affiliation agreements have not been submitted as evidence in this case. See supra note 15 and accompanying text. Further, the expert report does not elaborate on the circumstances, amount or duration of the claimed price increase. Nor does it state whether the price increase was for traffic reports or advertising. The Court therefore is unable to determine whether the expert opinion is supported by facts. While the post-acquisition record does contain some indication that Traffic Camera's radio station customers are in certain instances receiving less lucrative "extras" besides the traffic reports, given the lack of evidence of below-cost pricing, this does not prevent summary judgment.

Plaintiff argues that it is not required to prove the elements of a predatory [*42] pricing scheme because Traffic Camera's individual acts, including offering free billboard space and cash incentives to radio stations, below-cost pricing, and accepting capital infusions from affiliated companies, each constitute anticompetitive behavior. Below-cost pricing is simply not actionable under the antitrust laws absent evidence of the capacity to recoup. Similarly, there is simply nothing anticompetitive about affiliated companies engaging in coordinated activity as long as the conduct does not harm competition. As already explained, access into the business of traffic reporting is too easily had for defendants' conduct to have harmed competition. Finally, plaintiff complains that Traffic Camera's conduct was anticompetitive because it offered more valuable incentives than Traffic Scan. Again, unless defendants' conduct was likely to harm competition, it is not a basis for liability under the antitrust laws, even if Traffic Scan was ultimately driven out of business because of its inability to match Traffic Camera's incentives. Brooke Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2588-89. Defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to plaintiff's Section 2 claim is therefore granted.

[*43] F. Unreasonable Restraint of Trade

Plaintiff's Section 1 claim charges that defendants engaged in a horizontal conspiracy to engage in predatory pricing. Defendants rely on their largely common ownership to argue that plaintiff's claim fails as a matter of law under Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (parent and wholly-owned subsidiary incapable of conspiring under Section 1 of Sherman Act).

The Court holds that the absence of evidence of below-cost pricing and of the ability to recoup is a sufficient basis upon which to grant summary judgment on plaintiff's Section 1 claim. This follows because even if the defendants' alleged agreement had been unlawful under Section 1, unless the agreement resulted in predatory pricing, Traffic Scan did not suffer an antitrust injury from defendants' pricing practices. See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 338-41, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 1893, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990) (HN15↑) although vertical, maximum-price fixing agreement is unlawful under § 1 of Sherman Act, competitor's lost business is not antitrust injury unless it results from predatory pricing.); [*44] Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 584 n.7, 106 S. Ct. 1354 n.7. Accordingly, the Court need not reach the Copperweld issue, and defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to plaintiff's Section 1 claim is granted.

G. State Law Claims

Plaintiff's HN16[4] remaining claims were brought under state law. Whether to retain jurisdiction over these state law claims is a matter within the Court's discretion. Wong v. Stripling, 881 F.2d 200, 204 (5th Cir. 1989). In the usual case, judicial economy, convenience, fairness to the parties, and comity will point toward declining jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims. Carnegie-Mellon University v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 350 n.7, 108 S. Ct. 614, 619 n.7, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720 (1988). However, this rule is neither absolute nor automatic.

Plaintiff contends that the Court should retain jurisdiction over its state law claims because their dismissal would prejudice the parties and result in a waste of judicial resources. In support of its argument, plaintiff relies on the fact that the case is substantially ready for trial and has been pending in this district for over two years. Plaintiff further argues that the circumstances [*45] of this case are "on all fours" with the facts in Newport Ltd. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 941 F.2d 302 (5th Cir. 1991).

In Newport Ltd., the Fifth Circuit ruled that a district court abused its discretion when it dismissed the plaintiff's pendent state law claims on the eve of trial after four years of litigation. The court reasoned that the district court should have retained jurisdiction because there were no novel state law issues presented by the plaintiff's unfair trade practice and breach of contract claims, and substantial public and private resources had already been invested into the case. Id. at 308.

Despite plaintiff's contentions to the contrary, the circumstances of this case are not identical to those in Newport. Unlike Newport, the trial in this matter is still several weeks away, and the Court has not invested a substantial amount of time in this case. Additionally, while discovery is complete and several pretrial motions have been filed, the pretrial practice here does not compare to the pretrial practice conducted in Newport, where "four years of litigation produced 23 volumes and thousands of pages of record, the preparation of a pretrial [*46] order exceeding 200 pages, over a hundred depositions, and . . . nearly two hundred thousand pages of discovery production." Id. at 307. More significantly, plaintiff's theory of recovery has not yet been tested under Louisiana's unfair trade practice laws and therefore cannot be routinely and readily resolved by this Court.

After a careful consideration of the circumstances of this case, the Court concludes that the balance of relevant factors point toward the dismissal of plaintiff's state law claims. Although some public and private resources have already been invested by the parties and the Court, the discovery already completed is readily transferrable to a state court proceeding. Plaintiff's claims of prejudice are therefore overstated. Additionally, comity dictates that the courts of Louisiana have an opportunity to address the novel questions of law presented by plaintiff's theory of recovery. Plaintiff's state law claims are thus dismissed without prejudice for lack of jurisdiction.

Since its rulings dispose of this case in its entirety, the Court does not reach defendants' arguments concerning the preclusive effect of the receipt and release entered into by Traffic Scan. Since the Court found defendants' motion to be meritorious, plaintiff's motion for sanctions against the defendants for filing their motion for summary judgment is denied. Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that plaintiff's Section 1 & 2 claims under the Sherman Act are hereby DISMISSED with prejudice.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiff's state law claims are DISMISSED without prejudice.

The Clerk of Court is directed to enter judgment in accordance herewith.

New Orleans, Louisiana, this 24th day of May, 1995.

HN3 Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Discovery Rule

Statutes of limitation generally begin to run when a plaintiff discovers, or through reasonable diligence should have discovered, the facts giving rise to its cause of action. However, the usual rule is preempted when the conduct complained of constitutes a continuing violation of the plaintiff's rights, including systemic violations stemming from a policy or practice violative of plaintiff's rights that continues into the limitations period. The hallmark of a systemic violation is the presence of actual continued injury to the plaintiff. Thus, if both the offending policy or practice and injury are ongoing, the limitations clock does not begin to tick until the invidious conduct ends.

A municipality is immune from suit under federal antitrust statutes if the state legislature delegated to the municipality the authority to take action that foreseeably will result in anticompetitive effect. For a municipality to enjoy such immunity, the state legislature need not enact a specific, detailed legislative authorization of anticompetitive action. Opinion

[*957] LASKER, D.J.

In C & A Carbone, Inc. v. Town of Clarkstown, New York, 128 L. Ed. 2d 399, U.S. , 114 S. Ct. 1677 (1994), the Supreme Court declared that a municipal ordinance which required trash haulers to deliver solid waste to a specified transfer station, thereby forbidding them from depositing the waste out of state, violated the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution. In December 1987, the town of Franklin, Massachusetts, through its Board of Health, enacted a by-law which fit the Carbone pattern. Bonollo Rubbish, Inc., the plaintiff in this case, was a trash hauler in and from Franklin.

In this action, Bonollo sues Franklin, officials of the Franklin Board of Health [2] (collectively with the town itself, the "Town Defendants"), WMX Technologies, Inc., Waste Management, Inc. and Wheelabrator Millbury, Inc. (the last three, collectively, the "Corporate Defendants"), alleging violations of the Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution, the antitrust laws and the civil rights laws. Several motions are pending. Bonollo moves for summary judgment against the Town Defendants to declare the Franklin by-law invalid and to enjoin its enforcement. The Town Defendants cross-move to dismiss or, in the alternative, for summary judgment on Bonollo's Commerce Clause claims and its claims that the Town Defendants are liable for damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. The Corporate Defendants move to dismiss the complaint as to them.

Bonollo's motion to declare the by-law invalid is granted, but the request for injunctive relief against the town of Franklin is denied as moot. However, because the by-law did violate Bonollo's rights before it was amended in February 1995, the Town Defendants' motion is denied as to Bonollo's claim for damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (that is, as to Count 6 of the complaint). The individual Town Defendants' cross-motion is granted as to all [3] claims against them on the grounds of qualified immunity.

The Corporate Defendants' motion for summary judgment dismissing the complaint as to them is granted and Bonollo's motion to amend its complaint a second time to incorporate additional antitrust allegations against the Corporate Defendants is denied.

I.

This case stems from Franklin's efforts to dispose of its solid waste in an environmentally sound but cost-effective manner. As [*958] the Supreme Court observed in Carbone, "as solid waste output continues apace and landfill capacity becomes more costly and scarce, state and local governments are expending significant resources to develop trash control systems that are efficient, lawful, and protective of the environment." 114 S. Ct. at 1680. Franklin is no exception.

Since 1987, the cornerstone of the town's trash control system has been a contract between it and Wheelabrator Millbury, by which the town has agreed to ship its solid waste to Wheelabrator Millbury's waste to energy facility in Millbury, Massachusetts. The contract provides for a set "tipping fee" per ton of solid waste delivered to the facility and requires Franklin to deliver a minimum number of tons of solid [4] waste per year. Waste Management -- a commercial hauler of solid waste -- is a sister corporation of Wheelabrator Millbury. WMX Technologies, Inc. is the parent of both companies.

To coordinate the collection and removal of solid waste effectively and comply with the minimum tonnage requirement contained in the Wheelabrator Millbury contract, Franklin -- through its Board of Health -- enacted a series of by-laws outlining the requirements which haulers are obligated to meet to be eligible to haul trash in Franklin.¹ The regulatory scheme devised by the Franklin Board of Health divides haulers of residential solid waste into two categories based on the number of dwelling units contained in the residential buildings served by the hauler. Solid waste generated by residential buildings containing less than three dwelling units can be removed and transported only by a hauler who is under contract with the town of Franklin. Solid waste generated by residential buildings with three or more dwelling units is generally also removed and transported by haulers who are under contract with the town. However, persons not under contract (so-called "alternate haulers") are allowed to transport [5] solid waste from buildings with three or more units if they acquire a permit from the town. As enacted in December 1987 and amended in July 1990, § 151.2 of Franklin's local code, the by-law at issue in the case at hand, provided:

HN1[] § 151.2 Permit issuance restrictions

A. No permit for the removal of solid waste from residential buildings (a residential trash collection permit) shall be issued by the Board of Health of the Town of Franklin pursuant to M.G.L. c. 111, § 31A, unless the following conditions are attached to said permit:

(1) All residential trash collected in the Town of Franklin shall be caused to be delivered to the Wheelabrator Millbury Incinerator in Millbury, Massachusetts, or to such other disposal facility as may be designated, in writing by the Town Administrator, in the name of and to the tonnage account of the Town of Franklin.

(2) If the permit holder receives direct payment from a customer for the collection of residential trash, the permit holder shall reimburse the Town in full, on a weekly basis and at the Town's contracted rate schedule, for tonnage caused to be delivered to the Town's designated disposal facility in the name of and [6] to the tonnage account of the Town of Franklin. The permit holder shall submit a copy of weight scale receipts to the Town on a weekly basis. . . .

Thus, to acquire a permit, would-be alternate haulers were required to agree, among other conditions, to use the Millbury facility exclusively for the disposal of trash collected in Franklin and to pay the tipping fees specified in the contract between Franklin and Wheelabrator Millbury. HN2[] The by-law also provided that permit holders must submit a performance bond to secure Franklin's obligation to pay tipping fees and barred permit holders from delivering trash collected from other towns to the Wheelabrator facility. The latter requirement was intended to prevent non-Franklin trash from being counted toward Franklin's minimum tonnage requirement.

¹ All parties agree that under Massachusetts law the town had the authority to enact the by-law. See M.G.L. c. 111, §§ 31A and 31B (granting cities and towns in the Commonwealth wide authority to regulate the removal and transportation of solid waste that originates in their jurisdiction). Franklin's right to enact by-laws in this area generally is therefore not at issue.

[7] [*959] On or about November 28, 1990, Bonollo Rubbish applied for and received an alternate hauler permit to transport and remove residential solid waste from buildings with three or more dwelling units, subject to the by-law and the conditions outlined above. On April 27, 1994, the Franklin Board of Health revoked Bonollo's permit, effective June 30, 1994. The Board's stated reason for taking this action was Bonollo's failure to meet several conditions listed in the by-law, including the requirement that Bonollo deliver all waste collected in Franklin to the Wheelabrator Millbury facility. Bonollo does not contest the fact that it had been delivering waste collected in Franklin to other sites, including a facility located in Johnston, Rhode Island which charged a tipping fee of $ 42.00 per ton, as compared to the $ 59.76 per ton charged by Wheelabrator Millbury.

Upon the Board's decision to revoke its permit, Bonollo filed this suit, alleging that Franklin's actions violated rights guaranteed it by the Commerce Clause and seeking damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Bonollo moved simultaneously for a preliminary injunction against the Town Defendants enjoining them from taking any action [8] to rescind or revoke its residential trash permit.

It seems likely that the Carbone decision effectively dictated the parties' actions after May 14, 1994. On June 1, Judge Stearns issued an order stipulated to by the parties granting a preliminary injunction. On June 15, 1994, the Franklin Board of Health voted to reverse its April 27 decision and struck from Bonollo's permit the requirement that Bonollo deliver waste to the Wheelabrator Millbury facility. On February 15, 1995, the Franklin Town Council amended the by-law to provide that the requirement to deliver trash collected in Franklin to the Wheelabrator facility applies only to haulers operating under a contract with the town of Franklin (i.e., non-alternate haulers). Thus, the by-law no longer applies to Bonollo and Bonollo's alternate hauler permit was never actually revoked.

The original complaint named the Town Defendants only. On June 24, 1994, Bonollo filed an amended complaint restating its claims against the Town Defendants and alleging for the first time that the Corporate Defendants' actions had violated federal antitrust laws, specifically 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 and 14, as well as the civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C. [9] § 1983.

II.

Both the Town and Corporate Defendants move to dismiss the complaint as time-barred. The parties agree that the appropriate limitations periods are three years under M.G.L. c.260, § 2A for claims grounded in alleged violations of the Commerce Clause and 42 U.S.C. § 1983, and four years under 15 U.S.C. § 15b for the antitrust claims. The defendants contend that the limitations period began running when the injuries Bonollo complains of originated -- that is, when the by-law was enacted in its final form in 1990, in the case of the Town Defendants, and when the waste supply agreement between Wheelabrator Millbury and the town was consummated in 1987, in the case of the Corporate Defendants. Bonollo takes the position that the clock did not start running until May 2, 1994, the day the Franklin Board of Health informed it that its permit was being revoked effective June 30, 1994.

As the Town Defendants correctly point out, HN3[] statutes of limitation generally begin to run when a plaintiff discovers, or through reasonable diligence should have discovered, the facts giving rise to its cause of action. Holmberg v. Armbrecht, 327 U.S. 392, 396-97, 90 L. Ed. 743, 66 S. Ct. [101] 582 (1946). However, the usual rule is preempted when the conduct complained of constitutes a continuing violation of the plaintiff's rights, including systemic violations stemming from a "policy or practice [violate of plaintiff's rights that] continues into the limitations period." Jensen v. Frank, 912 F.2d 517, 523 (1st Cir. 1990). The hallmark of a systemic violation is the presence of actual continued injury to the plaintiff. Thus, "if both [the offending policy or practice] and injury are ongoing, the limitations clock does not begin to tick until the invidious conduct ends." Mack v. Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., Inc., 871 F.2d 179, 183 (1st Cir. 1989).

[*960] This case charges systemic violations of the Constitution and the antitrust laws. Bonollo maintains that it sustained damages by being legally compelled to deliver solid waste to the Wheelabrator facility, and therefore pay that facility's higher tipping fee. While Bonollo did now and then haul trash to its preferred site in Rhode Island in violation of the by-law, at other times it did comply by delivering solid waste to Wheelabrator Millbury. To the extent Bonollo can prove that it paid higher tipping fees [11] as a result of the enactment of the by-law, those fees represent systemic violations of Bonollo's rights under the Constitution and the antitrust laws in light of the conclusions reached below because, unlike in Jensen or Mack, the plaintiff's injury here (the higher fees) continued for as long as the practice or policy complained of (the by-law) was in existence. Therefore, if Bonollo can show that it patronized Wheelabrator Millbury within the last three years, its claims would be timely.

III.

With regard to the Town Defendants, Bonollo contends that the by-law violated rights guaranteed it under the Commerce Clause, that the by-law should therefore be declared void and the Town Defendants held liable under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Bonollo has moved for summary judgment on its direct Commerce Clause claims but has not moved on its claims under § 1983.

A.

The Town Defendants do not dispute that, under Carbone, the by-law violated the Commerce Clause and there is no question that it did. Franklin appears to have realized the decision's impact immediately and acted accordingly: the by-law was never actually applied to Bonollo, Bonollo's permit was amended in June 1994 to [12] release it from the obligation to ship solid waste to Wheelabrator Millbury and, in February 1995, the by-law was amended so as to render inoperative the provisions Bonollo complains of. While the coup de grace has already been delivered, however, the allegation that the by-law violated the Commerce Clause is a necessary element of Bonollo's claim for damages incurred prior to the by-law's repeal.

B.

The Town Defendants contend that Bonollo's causes of action under both the Commerce Clause and § 1983 are moot because the by-law has been repealed. They are correct to the extent that Bonollo seeks injunctive relief: there is no longer a by-law to enjoin, so the claim for an injunction is moot by definition and is accordingly dismissed.

It does not, however, follow, that Bonollo's claim against the town for damages is moot. Bonollo claims that it was forced under the by-law to pay higher tipping fees than it otherwise would have paid in Rhode Island. If this is true, then Bonollo's claim for damages under § 1983 grounded in that violation is not mooted by the fact that the by-law was repealed after the injury occurred. Bonollo has not moved for summary judgment on its § 1983 [13] claims, so whether it is entitled to damages cannot be established at this time. The Town Defendants' motion to dismiss the damage claims under § 1983, however, is denied.

C.

The Town Defendants next move to dismiss all of the claims against DeBaggis, Hunchard and Edge, who collectively comprise the Franklin Board of Health, and Slein, an agent of the Board, because no allegation is made against any of them in their individual capacities and each is entitled to qualified immunity.

HN4 [↑] Although qualified immunity is an affirmative defense, a government official is presumed to be immune from suit provided that the court does not find that the "official 'knew or reasonably should have known' that the action he took within his sphere of official responsibility would violate the constitutional rights of the [plaintiff], or . . . he took the action with the malicious intention to cause a deprivation of constitutional rights or other injury" Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 815, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396, 102 S. Ct. 2727 (1982) (quoting Wood v. Strickland, 420 U.S. 308, 322, [\[*961\]](#) 43 L. Ed. 2d 214, 95 S. Ct. 992 (1975)) (emphasis in original).

Here, the only concrete injury [14] that Bonollo alleges -- the higher tipping fees -- was caused by the enactment of the by-law in its final form in 1990. Bonollo does allege as well that the Board of Health's decision to revoke its permit caused it additional injury, but has offered no evidence whatsoever or proffered any theory as to how that decision could have damaged it, given that the Board's decision to revoke Bonollo's permit was reversed before the revocation took effect. Moreover, Bonollo does not allege that the Board members adopted the by-law or voted to revoke the permit maliciously.

Since the alleged offending event occurred at the latest in 1990, the individual Town Defendants cannot be charged with the responsibility of knowing that the by-law violated the Commerce Clause, because the earliest they could reasonably have done so was 1991, when the Court of Appeals of this Circuit summarily affirmed Judge Torres' decision in Stephen D. DeVito, Jr. Trucking v. Rhode Island Solid Waste Management Corporation, 770 F. Supp. 775 (D.R.I. 1991), aff'd 947 F.2d 1004 (1st Cir. 1991). In DeVito, Judge Torres granted a preliminary injunction suspending the enforcement of a resolution adopted by RISWMC, [15] a quasi-public agency having broad authority to regulate the collection and transportation of solid waste in Rhode Island. As in the case at hand, the resolution required haulers collecting solid waste in the state to deliver it to a particular disposal site, thereby having the effect of preventing solid waste collected in Rhode Island from being transported to disposal sites in other states. Id. at 777-78. Relying primarily on City of Philadelphia v. New Jersey, 437 U.S. 617, 57 L. Ed. 2d 475, 98 S. Ct. 2531 (1978), Judge Torres found that the RISWMC resolution had the purpose and effect of "directly and completely eliminating" interstate commerce in order to confer an economic benefit on Rhode Island interests. DeVito, 770 F. Supp. at 783, and that each of the local purposes put forth by RISMWC to justify the resolution² was either illegitimate or could have been served by less discriminatory means. Id. at 783-85.

[16] DeVito was not decided until 1991 and Bonollo's contention that the result in Carbone was a logical extension of earlier decisions -- most notably Philadelphia v. New Jersey -- is undermined by the argument of the three dissenters in Carbone that Carbone in fact represented a significant departure from previous decisions. Justice Souter wrote:

"The ordinance [struck down in Carbone] falls outside that class of tariff or protectionist measures that the Commerce Clause has traditionally been thought to bar States from enacting against each other, and when the majority subsumes the ordinance within the class of laws this Court has struck down as facially discriminatory (and so avails itself of our 'virtually per se rule' against such statutes . . .), the majority is in fact greatly extending the Clause's dormant reach."

114 S. Ct. at 1692 (Souter, J., dissenting) (citations omitted). In sum, the state of the law in 1990 was not such as to put a reasonable Board of Health member on notice that the Franklin by-law constituted a violation of the Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution -- assuming that the Board member had ever heard of that [17] Clause. The individual Town Defendants therefore enjoy qualified immunity and the complaint is dismissed as to them.

D.

Finally, the Town Defendants contend that Bonollo waived its right to challenge [*962] the constitutionality of the by-law by agreeing to the conditions contained in the security agreement it executed pursuant to its application for a permit to haul solid waste in Franklin.

² Those local purposes were:

1. maximization of the rate of recycling and recovery;
2. protection and conservation of public resources and the public health;
3. prevention of the illegal disposal of solid waste;
4. elimination of the possibility of state agency or municipal liability for the illegal disposal of hazardous waste in the event that such waste was accidentally commingled with solid waste shipped to out of state facilities;
5. facilitation of planning for solid waste transportation; and
6. facilitation of overall long term planning.

Id. at 783-85. The Town Defendants have not argued that these -- or any -- local purposes motivated its decision to enact the by-law, and have not pointed to any specific state policy served thereby.

HN5 While it is true that constitutional rights may be waived, such a waiver must be made knowingly. The security agreement signed by Bonollo does specify that Bonollo agreed to comply with the requirement contained in the by-law that solid waste collected in Franklin be delivered to Wheelabrator Millbury. However, the agreement made no mention of the possibility, or even hinted, that by signing it the permittee would waive its constitutional rights. The language therefore cannot form the basis of a waiver of Bonollo's claims.

IV.

Bonollo also sues the affiliated group of corporations ³ which contracted to operate the waste to energy facility which the Franklin By-law required alternate haulers in Franklin to utilize, alleging that the Corporate Defendants are liable for creating a monopoly in violation [18] of 15 U.S.C. § 2, tying in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 14 and price fixing in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1. Bonollo also claims that the Corporate Defendants are liable under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Aside from claiming that Bonollo's causes of action are not timely (an issue addressed above), the Corporate Defendants assert that Bonollo has not -- and cannot -- plead the requisite elements of the three antitrust claims, that they are protected from suit under the antitrust laws by the state action and Noerr-Pennington doctrines and that violations of the antitrust laws cannot, as a matter of law, be repleaded under the rubric of § 1983.

Bonollo's antitrust claims are so cursory as to court dismissal for failure to state a claim. However, Bonollo's antitrust claims founder [19] on principles which would trump those claims even Bonollo was able to establish prima facie cases of monopolization, tying and price fixing.

In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\), the Supreme Court held that HN6 there is "nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature," even if those activities "would violate the Sherman Act if [they] were organized and made effective solely by virtue of a contract, combination or conspiracy of private persons, individual or corporate." Id. at 350-51.

Following the rationale of Parker, the Court ruled in Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 \(1985\), that HN7 a municipality is immune from suit under federal antitrust statutes if the state legislature delegated to the municipality the "authority to take action that foreseeably will result in anticompetitive effect." Hallie, 471 U.S. at 39. The Hallie Court added that for a municipality to enjoy such immunity, the state legislature need not enact a "specific, detailed [20] legislative authorization" of anticompetitive action, Id. at 39, 41-42. Rather, the municipality "must demonstrate that it is engaging in the challenged activity pursuant to a clearly expressed state policy." Id. at 40.

In California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 \(1980\), the Court held that HN8 a private party engaged in a challenged activity pursuant to a contract with, or authorization from, a state or local government is entitled to state action immunity if it can show that it is subject to active state supervision. Id. at 105-06.

In Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 \(1991\), HN9 the Court, extended antitrust immunity to municipalities which contract with a private party to the exclusion of the private party's competitors, even when [*963] there might have been conspiratorial activity between the municipality and the private party with which it has contracted. Id. at 379. The Omni Outdoor Advertising Court held further that, HN10 under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine formulated in [Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, \[21\] Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\)](#) and Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\), "the federal antitrust laws . . . do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from the government." Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. at 379-80.

In Tri-State Rubbish v. Waste Management, Inc., 998 F.2d 1073 (1st Cir. 1993), a case which, like the one at hand, involved a contract for the receipt and disposal of solid waste, the Court of Appeals of this Circuit affirmed the dismissal under the state action doctrine of antitrust claims against a Maine municipality and Waste Management of Maine, the plaintiff's private competitor. The defendant city and several other Maine municipalities had formed the Mid-Maine Waste Action Corporation ("MMWAC") for the purpose of constructing a waste to energy plant, as the municipalities were explicitly authorized to do under Maine law. Id. at 1075. In much the same way as Franklin, each municipality passed a local ordinance requiring waste haulers to deliver solid waste, collected within its jurisdiction, to the plant and to pay a set tipping fee [22] per ton delivered. Id. at 1075. These ordinances were authorized by a Maine statute, which provided that a municipality could "require that 'solid waste' generated within its boundaries be delivered to a 'designated disposal or reclamation facility.'" Id.

A contract between MMWAC and Waste Management of Maine provided that Waste Management would operate a temporary processing facility for the MMWAC member municipalities' waste. As compensation, Waste Management received from MMWAC a fee per ton of solid waste which was slightly less than the tipping fee that MMWAC charged customers hauling waste from its member towns. Tri-State Rubbish sued Waste Management, MMWAC and the Maine municipality from which Tri-State was prevented from hauling trash by the MMWAC-Waste Management agreement, claiming, among other things, that the city's ordinance requiring haulers to deliver trash to the MMWAC site and MMWAC's contract with Waste Management combined to constitute a monopolization of trash disposal services in the region, an illegal restraint of trade and predatory pricing. Id. at 1076.

Citing Hallie and Omni Outdoor Advertising, the Court of Appeals held that MMWAC's [23] status was that of a municipality and that, accordingly, MMWAC was immune from antitrust liability in light of Maine's clear authorization of both the municipal ordinances mandating the use of the temporary facility and the defendant city's contract with the private defendant. Id. at 1077-78, 1078 n.3. As to the plaintiff's antitrust claims against the private defendant, the court agreed with the district court that the provision in MMWAC's agreement with the city requiring compliance by the private defendant with all pertinent laws constituted adequate state supervision; that is, that adequate municipal supervision, embodied by the contractual provision, was legally equivalent to adequate state supervision, and that, accordingly, under the state action doctrine, the private defendant was immune from suit. Id. at 1078-79. The court therefore affirmed the dismissal of the antitrust claims against the private defendant, the city and MMWAC. Id. at 1079-81.

Although these decisions would appear to dispose of Bonollo's antitrust claims, Bonollo attempts to distinguish the case at hand. First, Bonollo contends that the Corporate Defendants have not established that Massachusetts [24] has enacted a policy of replacing competition with regulation in the solid waste disposal field, a requirement set forth in Hallie, 471 U.S. at 40. However, in Omni Outdoor Advertising, the Court explicitly rejected "the contention that this requirement can be met only if the delegating statute explicitly permits the displacement of competition." 499 U.S. at 372. Rather, HN11[] "it is enough . . . if suppression of competition is the 'foreseeable [*964] result' of what the statute authorizes." Id. at 373 (citation omitted).

M.G.L. c. 111, §§ 31A and *31B*⁴ [25] grant cities and towns in Massachusetts broad authority to enact ordinances and grant permits with respect to the collection and disposal of solid waste. See Tri-State Rubbish, 998

⁴ These provisions read in pertinent part:

HN12[] § 31A Permit for removal or transportation of garbage

No person shall remove or transport garbage, offal or other offensive substances through the streets of any city or town without first obtaining a permit from the board of health for such city or town An application for such permit shall be in such form and contain such information, on oath, as such board shall require.

HN13[] § 31B Rules and regulations for removal of garbage

F.2d at 1077-78 ("waste disposal . . . is a traditional local-government function"). In addition, M.G.L. c.44, § 28C\(g\)⁵ explicitly authorizes contracts of the type between Franklin and Wheelabrator Millbury.

[26] Franklin's enactment of the by-law was clearly a foreseeable result of this statutory scheme. The legislature has granted cities and towns in the Commonwealth the unequivocal right to determine who may haul solid waste from their jurisdictions and under what rules and conditions they may do so. Massachusetts cities and towns are also authorized to contract for the disposal of solid waste at facilities of their choosing, such contract specifying the rate to be charged by the disposal facility, subject only to a fairness requirement which Bonollo has not alleged was violated. Implicit in -- indeed, necessary to -- this scheme is a local government's right to require entities which haul trash from the town to use the facility with which the town has contracted. A municipality would be hard pressed to find a waste to energy facility willing to agree to accept its trash (and set a rate for doing so) purely on the chance that the arrangement might be profitable. The by-law is consistent with the legislature's apparent judgment -- embodied in M.G.L. c.111, §§ 31A and 31B and M.G.L. c.44, § 28C\(g\) -- that local governments in the Commonwealth should have discretion to arrange for the disposal [27] of solid waste in their towns in any manner they deem to be cost effective and in furtherance of the public health. It is entirely foreseeable that the exercise of such discretion could entail a displacement of competition in the market for trash disposal services.

Bonollo contends further that the Corporate Defendants have failed to show that they are subject to active state supervision, as they must if, as private actors, they are to be eligible for state action immunity. See Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105-06 (articulating the active state supervision requirement for private entities). Tri-State Rubbish clearly disposes of this contention. Assuming Wheelabrator Millbury must prove adequate state supervision, that requirement is met by virtue of § 17(2) of the Waste Supply Agreement dated August 10, 1987 between Franklin and Wheelabrator Millbury, in which Wheelabrator Millbury agreed to "comply with all federal, state and local laws, rules, ordinances, regulations and all administrative and judicial positions known to it." This is a mirror image of the provision [*965] between MMWAC and its member municipalities which the Tri-State Rubbish court held conferred immunity on the private [28] defendant before it. See 998 F.2d at 1079. Indeed, the case is even stronger for the Corporate Defendants here because they have directly obligated themselves to abide by applicable laws and regulations, whereas in Tri-State Rubbish the private defendant's obligation was indirect only.

Moreover, the Tri-State Rubbish court held that the private defendants before it need not be subject to state supervision because "the choice to make such payments [i.e., tipping fees] was that of MMWAC and its actions are protected as state action." Id. The court wrote further: "to treat the mere receipt of such authorized payments as wrongful would undermine the Parker protection afforded [state and local governments] and misstate the purpose of the supervision requirement, which is to prevent the unregulated licensing of private anticompetitive conduct." Id. (emphasis in original). This rationale applies with equal force to the case at hand.

Boards of health shall, from time to time, make rules and regulations for the control of the removal, transportation or disposal of garbage, offal or other offensive substances.

⁵ HN14 [↑] M.G.L. c.44, § 28C\(g\) reads in pertinent part:

In addition to any other power conferred by law, a city or town may from time to time contract for the operation by others of any solid waste facility or facilities financed or to be financed by such city or town in whole or in part . . . and may contract with any such operator for the disposal or refuse, garbage or waste. . . . All other cities, towns and other public agencies and private parties are also authorized from time to time to contract with such city or town or with any such operator for the disposal of refuse, garbage, and waste. . . . Such contracts may be for such periods as agreed upon by the parties and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, may include provisions for the delivery of minimum amounts of refuse, garage and waste and payments for the use of the facilities to be based thereon. . . .

Any contract with a city or town for the operation by others of any solid waste facility or facilities under this section . . . shall contain such provisions as may be deemed necessary to protect the public interest, including but not limited to provisions as to the rates to be charged. . . . In entering into contracts for the operation of the facility or facilities, the city or town is directed, insofar as practicable, to provide for just and equitable rates and a fair but not excessive return to the operator. . . .

(emphasis added).

Third, Bonollo asserts that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is inapplicable because the doctrine only immunizes efforts to influence government action, not actual anticompetitive behavior which results from the exercise of that [29] influence. The argument is meritless. A Noerr-Pennington doctrine which shielded a private party in its attempt to secure a benefit from the government but left the party open to suit if the benefit was actually received would not serve the interests of free speech and open access to government that the Noerr and Pennington Courts intended to protect.

Finally, Bonollo argues that a defense grounded in the state action doctrine is unavailable to the Corporate Defendants because the state action in question -- the by-law -- was itself unconstitutional. Put another way, Bonollo contends that when state action immunity "conflicts" with the Commerce Clause, the immunity must yield.

The weakness of this argument is that HN15↑ the state action doctrine and the Commerce Clause are not mutually exclusive. One of the activities complained of in Omni Outdoor Advertising was passage of a municipal ordinance affecting the plaintiff's billboard business which a state court later found to violate the U.S. Constitution. 499 U.S. 365, 368, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382. The Court concluded that both the municipality which enacted the ordinance and the private party who allegedly conspired with public officials to ensure [30] its enactment were entitled to state action immunity, which was held to be appropriate even if the ordinance at issue is "substantively or even procedurally defective," Id. at 370-73; see also Preferred Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles, 754 F.2d 1396, 1415 \(9th Cir. 1985\), aff'd, 476 U.S. 488, 90 L. Ed. 2d 480, 106 S. Ct. 2034 \(1986\) (unconstitutionality of city ordinance does not affect state action doctrine defense to antitrust claims); Lease Lights, Inc. v. Public Service Company of Oklahoma, 849 F.2d 1330, 1334 \(10th Cir. 1988\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1019, 102 L. Ed. 2d 807, 109 S. Ct. 817 \(1989\).

Moreover, even if the determination that the by-law was unconstitutional negated the Corporate Defendant's state action defense, the Corporate Defendants would still be shielded by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. at 379-80, 383-84 (Noerr-Pennington doctrine applied despite a state court's holding that the municipal ordinance which formed the basis of the challenged contract between the private defendant and the city violated plaintiff's First Amendment rights).

B.

Bonollo asserts claims against the Corporate [31] Defendants under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, although, as an initial matter, there is confusion as to which of Bonollo's rights the Corporate Defendant's are accused of violating. Count 26 of the complaint, which is against Wheelabrator Millbury but is representative of the § 1983 claims against the other two Corporate Defendants, alleges in part that Wheelabrator Millbury "conspired . . . to decrease competition, restrain trade, put competition out of business and . . . create a monopoly." This sounds for all the world like an antitrust suit brought as a claim [*966] under § 1983. In Middlesex County Sewerage Authority v. National Sea Clammers Association, 453 U.S. 1, 69 L. Ed. 2d 435, 101 S. Ct. 2615 \(1981\), the Supreme Court held that where, as here, a party is "alleged to have violated a federal statute which provides its own comprehensive enforcement scheme, the requirements of that enforcement procedure may not be bypassed by bringing suit directly under § 1983. Id. at 20 (internal quotations and citations omitted). Bonollo claims, however, that its § 1983 claims are actually predicated on the Corporate Defendants' alleged violation of its Commerce Clause rights, although the words [32] "Commerce Clause" appear nowhere in the relevant portions of the complaint.

Even taking Bonollo at its word, however, the claim still fails. As the Court of Appeals of this Circuit stated in Culebras Enterprises Corp. v. Rivera Rios, 813 F.2d 506 \(1st Cir. 1987\), HN16↑ "responsibility for ascertaining the constitutionality of enacted legislation will ordinarily rest with the legislating body. Absent factors such as bribe-taking or other criminal misconduct, considerations of free speech normally militate against finding the basis for § 1983 damages in the advocacy of programs and legislation, even if the programs or statutes are themselves unconstitutional." Id. at 519. This rule stems from the same First Amendment considerations that gave rise to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine -- considerations that have as much force in the context of an action under § 1983 as they do in the context of an antitrust suit. Again, this result is in no way in "conflict" with the Commerce Clause, which would have been given full effect in invalidating the by-law had the bylaw not been repealed.

V.

Bonollo has moved to amend the complaint to include further factual allegations in connection with [\[33\]](#) its existing claims and to add predatory pricing claims under 15 U.S.C. § 13A and claims for "unfair and deceptive methods of competition, actions and practices" in violation of M.G.L. c.93A. The Corporate defendants oppose this motion on numerous grounds. The motion is denied.

A.

To the extent the proposed amendments are intended to buttress Bonollo's existing antitrust claims against the Corporate Defendants, they would not alter the result reached above. Even if the additional allegations made the claims more legally tenable in and of themselves (and they don't much), the state action and Noerr-Pennington doctrines are still dispositive.

As for the counts which Bonollo proposes to add, HN17[↑] to sustain a claim of predatory pricing under 15 U.S.C. § 13A, a plaintiff must (1) "prove that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of [the defendant] rival's costs," Brook Group, Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2587 \(1993\) (citations omitted) and (2) demonstrate that its rival "had a reasonable prospect . . . of recouping its investment in below-cost prices," Id. at 2588 (citations omitted) -- that is, that competition [\[34\]](#) would be injured as a result of the defendant's scheme. Id. at 2588-89.

The proposed amendments do not make the necessary allegations as to the Corporate Defendants' costs, prices in the contracts entered into with other towns or even whether those contracts ever actually came into being. Moreover, the new claims are severely implausible. As the Corporate Defendants note, it is difficult to imagine how they could ever recoup their investment in predatory prices when tipping fees are fixed in the contract. See Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\) (plaintiff alleging an economically implausible predatory pricing scheme faces a heightened burden).

Finally, it is doubtful whether Bonollo's claims meet the criteria of Tri-State Rubbish for pleading a predatory pricing cause of action. There, a predatory pricing claim analogous to those at issue here was held sufficient because the plaintiff's pleadings contained reasonably specific allegations, both as to prices and contracts that were [\[*967\]](#) actually shown to exist. 998 F.2d at 1080-81. The proposed amendments here contain neither. In addition, [\[35\]](#) the Tri-State Rubbish court was reluctant to apply the state action doctrine when it had no evidence that MMWAC exercised any control over the prices charged by the private defendants. Id. at 1080. Here, Wheelabrator Millbury's prices are regulated by its agreement with Franklin or any other town that contracts with it pursuant to M.G.L. c.111, §§ 31A and 31B. Here, therefore, unlike in Tri-State Rubbish, adequate state supervision is not a concern.⁶

B.

HN18[↑] M.G.L. c.93A, § 11 provides that the determination of what constitutes unfair methods of competition shall be guided by the Massachusetts Antitrust Act. A provision of that Act, M.G.L. c.93, § 7 provides that activities which are not actionable under federal antitrust law (except [\[36\]](#) for the fact that they do not involve interstate commerce) are immune from suit under state antitrust law. These provisions together mandate dismissal of Bonollo's proposed M.G.L. c.93A claims.

Bonollo's motion for summary judgment declaring the by-law unconstitutional is granted. Its motion for injunctive relief is denied as moot and its motion to amend the complaint as to the Corporate Defendants is denied.

⁶ On remand, the district court in Maine recently granted summary judgment to the defendants, dismissing the predatory pricing claim that was restored by the Court of Appeals. See Tri-State Rubbish, Inc. v. Waste Management, Inc., 875 F. Supp. 8 \(D.Maine 1994\).

886 F. Supp. 955, *967 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7804, 36

The town of Franklin's motion to dismiss the complaint as to it as moot is granted to the extent of Bonollo's request for injunctive relief and is otherwise denied. The motion of the individual Town Defendants to dismiss the complaint as to each of them on the grounds of qualified immunity is granted.

The motion of the Corporate Defendants to dismiss the complaint as to each of them is granted.

It is so ordered.

MEMORANDUM *

William and Ardith Anell appeal the dismissal of their complaint. Due to a slew of late voluntary dismissals of parties only one defendant, Basic, Inc., and one claim, a Sherman Act violation, remain in this appeal. Defendant cross-appeals for sanctions. We have jurisdiction, and we affirm.

I.

The district court dismissed plaintiffs' complaint [*2] under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). We review this dismissal de novo. Emrich v. Touche Ross & Co., 846 F.2d 1190, 1198 \(9th Cir. 1988\). This court, like the district court, must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations contained in the complaint, and must not uphold the dismissal unless the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim. Oscar v. University Students Co-op Ass'n, 965 F.2d 783, 785 (9th Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 581, 113 S. Ct. 655 (1992).

Plaintiffs allege a violation of federal antitrust law stemming from Basic, Inc.'s involvement with some land known as Paradise Peak. Their complaint states no facts under which Basic, Inc., could be guilty of antitrust violations. Moreover, the only act which Basic is alleged to have committed--the formation of a monopolistic "property" unit in the region--occurred in 1982, and is thus barred by the statute of limitations from serving as the predicate for an antitrust claim. 15 U.S.C. § 15b.

II.

Basic, Inc., cross-appeals for attorneys' fees and costs, claiming that the district judge impermissibly failed to impose these after stating in his Order that plaintiffs' conduct warranted [*3] sanctions. However, the Order does not explicitly call for sanctions and none will be ordered at this time. The district court's order thus is AFFIRMED.

WOLIN, District Judge

This matter is before the Court on the motion of defendant to dismiss the complaint in its entirety pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. For the reasons set forth herein, defendant's motion is granted, in part, and is denied, in part.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiff Storis Inc. ("Storis") is a New Jersey corporation, with its principal place of business in New Jersey. Defendants GERS Retail Systems Inc. ("GERS") is a California corporation with its principal place of business in California. Therefore, this Court has jurisdiction based on the diversity of citizenship of the parties. 28 U.S.C. §

1332. In addition, this Court has jurisdiction because plaintiff's claims arise under federal antitrust law. 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

Both plaintiff and defendant [*2] are in the business of developing, marketing and manufacturing computer software that aids retail stores in the United States. Storis and GERS are two of the largest businesses in the market for the type of software they distribute. Storis and GERS presently maintain a 15% and 25% share of the market, respectively. (Complaint, P 8). GERS calls its software "Sequel."

In April 1994, GERS distributed by mail, to Storis customers only, a brochure which stated:

If you're looking for the most advanced retail system and you don't think your Storis system is it, then do we have a great deal for you! . . . Trade-in your Storis software for free Sequel system software . . . and if you'd like one of our optional modules that you don't already have -- we'll give it to you for 50% off!

(Complaint, Exhibit A). The brochure also offered Storis customers free electronic conversion, free first year support service and free comprehensive training. The brochure went on to list the comparable advantages of GERS software to Storis software. Critically, this offer was not available to non-Storis customers.

Storis filed this lawsuit alleging that the GERS offer violated the Robinson-Patman [*3] Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, which prohibits discriminatory pricing.¹ [*4] Storis also alleged that the brochure was an attempt by GERS to monopolize the relevant market in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.² Storis also brought state law claims for tortious interference with contractual relationships and prospective business advantage, as well as product disparagement. Storis seeks and injunction and damages for lost profits, which can be trebled under the antitrust laws.

GERS has filed a motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6).

DISCUSSION

A. Standard of Review

In determining whether a complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the Court must limit its consideration to the facts alleged in the complaint. Biesenbach v. Guenther, 588 F.2d 400, 402 (3d Cir. 1978). Moreover, in its examination of the complaint, the Court is required to [*5] accept all of the allegations contained therein and all inferences arising therefrom as true. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 2232, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984). If plaintiff can prove any set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief, his complaint should not be dismissed. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 102, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957); D.P. Enterprises v. Bucks County Community College, 725 F.2d 943, 944 (3d Cir. 1984).

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure only require that a claimant present a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8. As a general rule a complaint is sufficient if it enables the defendant to file a responsive pleading. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 501, 91 L. Ed. 451, 67 S. Ct. 385 (1947). This rule is no different in antitrust cases. Niagara of Buffalo Inc. v. Niagara Mfg. & Distrib. Corp., 262 F.2d 106 (2d Cir. 1958); Nagler v. Admiral Corp., 248 F.2d 319, 322 (2d Cir. 1957) ("it is quite clear that the federal rules contain no special exceptions for antitrust cases"); Walker Distrib. Co. v. Lucky Lager Brewing Co., 323 F.2d 1, 3 (9th Cir. 1963) ("we are of the opinion that there are no special rules of pleading in antitrust cases"). Thus, plaintiff's claims will be subject to the same liberal rules of pleading as in all other types of cases.

¹ Section 2 of the Clayton Act, better known as the Robinson-Patman Act states: "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quantity, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 13(a).

² Section 2 of the Sherman Act states: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding one million dollars if a corporation, or, if any other person, one hundred thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

The Supreme Court has expressly stated that motions to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) should be granted "very sparingly" in antitrust cases. In Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746-47, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976), the Court held: In antitrust cases, where the 'proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators,' dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly." (citing, Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962)). Thus, plaintiff is not required to plead all of the facts in support of his antitrust claims, as much of this evidence will likely be unearthed during discovery.

This Court is bound by the rule that an antitrust claim should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim, unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle it [*7] to relief. Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46.; D.P. Enterprises, 725 F.2d at 944. Conclusory allegations are sufficient if they provide an outline or notice of the antitrust violation charged. Trans World Airlines Inc. v. Hughes, 332 F.2d 602 (2d Cir. 1964), cert. dismissed, 380 U.S. 248 (1965) ("The allegations state the outlines of a tying arrangement, an economic boycott of the defendants' competitors, and an attempt to monopolize commerce, all unlawful under the antitrust statutes."). Similarly, allegations of fact and conclusory statements of the pleader must be taken into account when deciding whether a claim for relief has been stated. As the Third Circuit held in Knuth v. Erie-Crawford Dairy Cooperative Assn., 395 F.2d 420 (3d Cir. 1968):

Decisions of the United States Supreme Court indicate that we should be extremely liberal in construing antitrust complaints. See, Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas, Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656, 660, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358, 81 S. Ct. 365 (1961); Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456, 77 S. Ct. 390 (1957); and United states v. Employing Plasterers Assn., 347 U.S. 186, 98 L. Ed. 618, [*8] 74 S. Ct. 452 (1954). Indeed, in the Employing Plasterers' case, the Supreme Court made it clear that, whether [the] charges be called "allegations of fact" or "mere conclusions of the pleader" they must be taken into account in deciding whether a claim for relief is stated.

The liberal approach to the consideration of antitrust complaints is important because inherent in such an action is the fact that all details and specific facts relied upon cannot properly be set forth as part of the pleadings.

Id. at 423.

With these legal principles in mind, the Court will examine each of GERS's claims to determine whether plaintiff has alleged a cause of action for violation of the antitrust laws or for tortious interference with contractual relationship or prospective business advantage or product disparagement.

B. Robinson-Patman Act

In order to establish liability for predatory pricing under the Robinson-Patman Act a plaintiff must show:

- (1) The seller is "engaged in commerce"; the price discrimination occurred "in the course of such commerce"; and at least one of the sales constituting the discrimination must itself be "in commerce";

- (2) The discrimination [*9] must involve "sale" transaction to at least two different purchasers;

- (3) The items involved must qualify as "commodities";

- (4) The commodities must be "of like grade and quality"

- (5) The seller's prices must be "discriminatory" as between the purchasers;
- (6) The discriminatory sale must occur reasonable contemporaneously in time;
- (7) The "effect" of such discrimination must be a reasonable possibility of (a) a substantial lessening of competition, or (b) injury, destruction or prevention of competition with the seller granting the discrimination, any person knowingly receiving the benefit of the discrimination, or customers of either the seller or such favored person;
- (8) If the action is one for damages, the plaintiff must prove actual injury to it such as lost sale or profits, proximately caused by the discriminatory price granted to the favored customer or customers.

Brook Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2578 \(1993\).

In this case, GERS claims that Storis' complaint is insufficient because its fails to identify "specific buyers and particular contracts" and because its fails to "identify [*10] any sale across state lines." (GERS Br. at 11). GERS cites no case where the Court dismissed a claim for predatory pricing because the plaintiff failed to identify specific buyers and particular contracts. In this case, the complaint alleges that GERS committed price discrimination between Storis customers and all other customers, with the intent of injuring Storis. This is sufficient to state a claim for predatory pricing.

This case is factually distinguishable from McPherson's Ltd. v. Never Dull Inc., 1990 WL 238812 (D.N.J. December 26, 1990). In McPherson's the plaintiff merely alleged price discrimination between unspecified buyers in New Jersey and elsewhere in the United States. 1990 WL 238812 at 4. The present complaint is far more specific than the complaint in McPherson's. Thus, taking the allegations in the complaint as true, Storis has stated a claim for predatory pricing in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

C. Sherman Act

Storis alleges that GERS is attempting to monopolize the relevant market of computer software in violation of § of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. The elements of a monopolization claim in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman [*11] Act include:

- (1) the possession of monopoly power in a relevant market.
- (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power in an exclusionary manner.

U.S. v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\). In order to prove a claim of attempted monopolization claimant must merely allege that the defendant has a "dangerous probability" of achieving a monopoly in the relevant market. Spectrum Sports, Inc., U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\). A key element of this claim is that the defendant have sufficient market power to achieve a monopoly.

Market power is the power "to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 14, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). "The existence of such power is ordinarily inferred from the seller's possession of the a predominant share of the market." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2081, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\).

With regard to attempted monopolization, the federal courts have held that a "dangerous probability of success" can [*12] be satisfied by a showing of market share in excess of fifty percent (50%). Barr Laboratories Inc. v. Abbott Laboratories, 978 F.2d 98, 112-115 \(3d Cir. 1992\); M&M Medical Supplies and Services Inc. v. Pleasant Valley Hospital Inc., 981 F.2d 160, 169-69 \(4th Cir. 1992\) (en banc), cert. denied, 125 L. Ed. 2d 662, 113 S. Ct. 2962 (1993).

In this case, Storis alleges that GERS controls only 25% of the market. However, Storis alleges that if GERS was successful in driving Storis out of the market, GERS would capture Storis's 15% of the market and control 40% of the relevant market. Even assuming that GERS was successful in driving Storis out of business it is unlikely GERS, as one of several remaining competitors in the market, would garner all of Storis's customers. Therefore, even if GERS was successful in driving Storis out of business, it would have less than a 40% share of the market. GERS claims that less than a 40% market share is insufficient, as a matter law, to establish market power. (GERS Br. at 7). The Court agrees.

In Fineman v. Armstrong World Industries Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 201-02 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, U.S. , [*13] 113 S. Ct. 1285, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677 (1993) the Court held: "absent other relevant factors, a 55% market share will not prove the existence of monopoly power." And in Barr, the Court held that a 50% market share was insufficient to create "a dangerous probability" of monopolization. 978 F.2d at 115. This Court is bound by these precedents.

The Court notes that in Domed Stadium Hotel Inc. v. Holiday Inns Inc., 732 F.2d 480, 490 \(5th Cir. 1984\) (footnotes and citations omitted), the Fifth Circuit held that market share of less than 50% can support a claim for attempted monopolization "if other factors such as concentration of market, high barriers to entry, consumer demand and strength of competition or consolidation trend in the market are present." Storis does not claim that any of the factors listed in Domed Stadium are present in this case. Rather, Storis merely states, without any citation to case law, that a 40% market share "is well over the threshold for an attempted monopolization claim." (Storis Br. at 6).

The Court disagrees. The Court is bound by Barr, which held that 50% market share is insufficient for attempted monopolization. Therefore, Storis's [*14] allegation that GERS will achieve less than 40% of the market is insufficient, as a matter of law, to state a claim for attempted monopolization. Storis's claim under the Sherman Act will be dismissed without prejudice pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

D. Tortious Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage

A claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage must allege:

- (1) a claimant's reasonable expectation of an economic benefit;
- (2) the defendant's knowledge of that expectancy;
- (3) the defendant's wrongful, intentional interference with that expectancy;
- (4) in the absence of interference, the reasonable probability that the claimant would have received the anticipated economic benefit; and
- (5) damages resulting from the defendant's interference.

Fineman, 980 F.2d 171, 186 (3d Cir. 1992) (citing, Printing Mart v. Sharp Electronics, 116 N.J. 739, 751-52, 563 A.2d 31 \(1989\)).

In Fineman the Third Circuit held that an element of this cause of action is "a sufficiently concrete prospective contractual relation." Id. at 195. In Fineman, the Court found that the plaintiff had failed [*15] to prove he would have gotten new customers in his consulting business. Id. The Court held the record was "devoid of any objective evidence that Fineman had any concrete plan for future consulting work." Id.

Storis need not prove at this stage of the litigation that it had sufficiently concrete prospective contracts with its customers. However, Storis must at least allege specific prospective contracts that were interfered with by GERS. Storis has failed to identify a single customer or a single contract that it was likely to consummate, but failed to consummate, due to the actions taken by GERS. As a result, Storis has failed to allege a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage.

Therefore, Storis' claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage will be dismissed without prejudice pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

D. Tortious Interference With Contract

To state a claim for tortious interference with contract, Storis must allege: (1) the existence of a valid contract between Storis and a third party; (2) GERS' knowledge of the contract; (3) GERS intentional interference with that contract and (4) resulting [*16] actual damages. Fleming v. United Parcel Service Inc., 255 N.J. Super. 108, 137, 604 A.2d 657 \(1992\), aff'd, 273 N.J. Super. 526, 642 A.2d 1029 \(App. Div. 1994\).

In the context of tortious interference with contract, plaintiff must allege the existence of a specific contract that was interfered with by defendant. In this case, Storis has failed to allege the existence of a specific contract that was interfered with by GERS. Therefore, Storis has failed to state a claim for intentional interference with contract. Storis's claim for intentional interference with contract will be dismissed without prejudice pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

E. Product Disparagement

To establish a claim for product disparagement the claim must prove (1) publication; (2) with malice (3) of false allegations concerning plaintiff's property or product (4) causing special damages. System Operations Inc. v. Scientific Games Development Corp., 555 F.2d 1131, 1139041 \(3d Cir. 1977\). In the present case, the GERS brochure is something that was mailed to Storis customers, therefore, there was publication. Storis claims that the GERS brochure contains numerous misrepresentations [*17] about the capabilities of Storis software. (Complaint P 13). This allegation is presumed to be true for the purposes of ruling on a motion pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). However, Storis has not anywhere in its complaint alleged that the misrepresentations were made with "malice." In fact, the word "malice" does not appear in the complaint. Similarly, Storis has not alleged any facts suggesting that GERS acted with malice. Therefore, Storis has failed to state a claim for product disparagement. Storis's claim for product disparagement will be dismissed without prejudice pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

F. Storis Motion to Amend Complaint

Storis seeks to file an amended complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15. However, the amended complaint submitted by Storis does not cure any of the defects noted by the Court in this opinion. Therefore, the amended complaint is futile and will not be allowed.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court will deny defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's claim for predatory pricing pursuant to the Robinson-Patman Act. However, the Court will grant defendant's motion to dismiss and will dismiss without [*18] prejudice pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) plaintiff's claim for violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act; plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage; plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with contract and plaintiff's claim for product disparagement. The Court will deny plaintiff's motion to amend the complaint as futile.

An appropriate order is attached.

[*764] WINTER, Circuit Judge:

Eighty-nine former distributors of Seven-Up soft drinks and other beverages (the "distributors") appeal from Judge Glasser's dismissal of their complaint alleging claims for violation of state and federal antitrust laws and interference with contractual relations. The distributors contend that the appellees, Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up Companies, Inc. and Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up Corporation (collectively "Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up"), Harold Honickman ("Honickman") and Lance T. Funston ("Funston") intentionally forced Seven-Up Brooklyn Bottling Company, Inc. ("Seven-Up Brooklyn") out of business in order to drive the distributors out of business and permit defendant Honickman to reacquire Seven-Up Brooklyn's assets free and [3] clear of distribution agreements with the plaintiffs. This conduct, they argue, entitles them to relief under the antitrust laws. We affirm the district court's dismissal of the antitrust claims on the ground that the distributors lack antitrust standing. We also affirm the district court's dismissal on the merits of the state law claims for interference with contractual relations.

BACKGROUND

HN1 Because this appeal is from a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, we assume the allegations of the amended complaint to be true.

We begin with a brief description of the complaint's allegations concerning the structure of the soft drink industry and the role of the parties in that structure. Parent concentrate companies such as Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up sell syrup or concentrate to bottling companies, such as Seven-Up Brooklyn. The bottling companies obtain licenses to use that syrup or concentrate in bottling and distributing soft drinks in specified geographical areas. In the early 1990s, there were three bottlers in the New York City area: (i) the Coca-Cola Bottling Company of New York, which distributed Coca-Cola brands; (ii) Honickman, [4] who sold the products of PepsiCo., Inc., and other brands such as Canada Dry; and (iii) Seven-Up Brooklyn and Seven-Up Bottling Company of New York. Seven-Up Brooklyn had contracts with independent truck drivers -- the plaintiff distributors -who paid Seven-Up Brooklyn for exclusive territorial rights to distribute its soft drinks to retail establishments.

Honickman entered the soft drink industry in 1977 and over time acquired numerous bottling companies. Without including the Seven-Up brands, which are the subject of this litigation, Honickman is alleged to control the sale to retailers of over half of the carbonated soft drinks in New York City. When the Seven-Up brands are included, Honickman is alleged to control 64 percent of that market. The combined market share of Honickman's companies and the one other large competitor in the bottling of carbonated soft drinks, Coca-Cola Bottling Company of New York, is alleged to constitute 95 percent of the carbonated soft drink market in New York City. Honickman does not presently use independent drivers to distribute its products but rather employs drivers directly.

We turn now to the events that gave rise to this litigation. In July [5] 1987, Long Island Acquisition Company ("LIA"), a partnership in which Honickman and members of his family held a 52 percent share and Funston a [*765] 48 percent share, acquired all of Seven-Up Brooklyn's non-cola soft drink franchise rights, vehicles, vending machines, and related equipment. The complaint alleges that this transaction was facilitated by either a cash contribution or a loan guarantee from Canada Dry Bottling of New York, a Honickman-owned company. Seven-Up Brooklyn's plant in Melville, New York was acquired by Melville Business Partners L.P., a partnership of which the general and managing partner was Honickman and the six limited partners were his two children and four employees of Honickman-owned companies. Berriman Cozine Corporation, owned by Honickman's brother-in-law, purchased Seven-Up Brooklyn's facility in Brooklyn. According to the complaint, these acquisitions were financed largely by credit guarantees made by Honickman and Honickman-owned companies. Following the consummation of these transactions, LIA leased the Melville and Brooklyn facilities from their new owners.

Honickman's control of Seven-Up Brooklyn caused the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") to investigate [6] the anticompetitive effects of the acquisition. In late 1988, to avoid a legal dispute with the FTC, Honickman and his family sold their interest in LIA, which held the operating assets of Seven-Up Brooklyn, to Funston. However, the complaint alleges that Honickman remained secretly in control of Seven-Up Brooklyn and that the assets were transferred in such a way that Honickman could later reclaim them.

In November 1989, the FTC issued an administrative complaint challenging Honickman's acquisition of Seven-Up Brooklyn. Honickman subsequently entered into an agreement with the FTC providing that, for a period of ten years, Honickman would not acquire, directly or indirectly, any interest in any carbonated soft drink bottling operation in the New York metropolitan area without the prior approval of the FTC. Nevertheless, according to the complaint, Honickman and Funston secretly intended to cause Seven-Up Brooklyn to fail so that Honickman could reacquire it and counter any antitrust charges with the failing company defense. That defense permits an otherwise unlawful acquisition where the acquiree will go out of business if the acquisition is forbidden. See H.R. Rep. No. 1191, [7] 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 6 (1949); S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. 7 (1950); see also International Shoe v. FTC, 280 U.S. 291, 302-03, 74 L. Ed. 431, 50 S. Ct. 89 (1930); 4 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law, §§ 924-931 (1978).

In October 1990, Seven-Up Brooklyn did in fact fail, filing a petition for Chapter 11 bankruptcy reorganization after a bank cancelled a line of credit. Thereafter, Seven-Up Brooklyn filed an application in the bankruptcy court for an order setting a hearing date to consider the sale of the company's assets. The application included a draft agreement pursuant to which Honickman would purchase Seven-Up Brooklyn's existing inventory, and a division of Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up would purchase Seven-Up Brooklyn's remaining franchise assets, which it in turn would sell to Honickman. At the bankruptcy court hearing, there were two bidders for the company's assets: Kenneth Kraus and the combination of Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up and Honickman.

The distributors favored the Kraus offer, which contemplated the continued operation of Seven-Up Brooklyn as a separate entity. At the hearing, the distributors alleged that Honickman, Funston, and Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up had conspired to rig [8] the bidding in order to obtain market power in the carbonated soft drink market and had conducted a sham investigation to show falsely the lack of other qualified buyers. The bankruptcy court rejected both proposals and terminated Seven-Up Brooklyn's authority to use cash collateral. At a later hearing, according to the complaint, Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up represented to the bankruptcy court that Seven-Up Brooklyn was liable to it for more than a million dollars, and that any successor to Seven-Up Brooklyn would immediately be sued for this amount. According to the complaint, this discouraged the only other bidder from pursuing the acquisition of Seven-Up Brooklyn and allowed Honickman ultimately to make a successful bid. The bankruptcy court's order approving the acquisition of the assets of Seven-Up Brooklyn by Honickman was not appealed.

[*766] The FTC initially denied approval of the sale to Honickman on the ground that it failed to satisfy the failing company defense. Later, the FTC relented, permitting Honickman to acquire licenses from Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up and to distribute the soft drink brands formerly bottled by Seven-Up Brooklyn.

The distributors' complaint alleged that Honickman's [9] efforts to acquire Seven-Up Brooklyn's non-cola bottling assets constituted monopolization of the carbonated soft drink market in New York City and intentional interference with present and prospective contractual relations.

The district court held that the claims were barred by the doctrine of res judicata, because the distributors' claims were "based essentially on the same factual issues that they raised before the bankruptcy court," but simply alleged new legal theories. As alternative grounds for the dismissal of the complaint, the district court held that: (i) the distributors failed to allege the type of antitrust injury necessary to confer standing to maintain a suit under the antitrust laws; (ii) the distributors' claim for tortious interference with present contractual relations failed because the distributors did not allege that Honickman's conduct proximately caused Seven-Up Brooklyn to breach its contract with the distributors; and (iii) the distributors' claim for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations failed because the distributors had not alleged that Honickman had taken any action with respect to the third parties with whom the distributors [10] claimed to have had prospective relationships.

This appeal followed.

DISCUSSION

The distributors' complaint alleged three distinct claims for violation of state and federal antitrust laws: (i) that appellees conspired to eliminate both the distributors and Seven-Up Brooklyn as competitors, in order to monopolize the carbonated soft drink market in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (ii) that appellees conspired to restrain trade in order to monopolize the carbonated soft drink market at the bottler and distribution level, in violation of the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340; and (iii) that appellees attempted to monopolize the New York carbonated soft drink market, also in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. We conclude that all three antitrust claims are barred because the distributors lack antitrust standing.

HN2[¹] Antitrust injury is necessary, but not sufficient, for antitrust standing. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110 n.5, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986). Although antitrust standing analysis often includes additional factors, id. at 111 n.6; see also Volvo N. Am. Corp. v. Men's Int'l Professional Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 66 [*11] (2d Cir. 1988) (setting forth factors comprising antitrust standing analysis), the issue of antitrust injury is dispositive in the instant case.

We believe that the distributors do not have standing to bring an antitrust claim against defendants because the distributors have not alleged an antitrust injury. Their antitrust claims essentially boil down to the contention that Honickman, Funston, and Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up conspired to destroy Seven-Up Brooklyn through predatory practices and, in doing so, eliminated the distributors' contractual rights with Seven-Up Brooklyn to market soft drinks at the retail level. For this elimination of contractual rights to be antitrust injury, it must constitute the kind of injury that the antitrust laws were directed at. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). However, HN3[¹] "merely derivative injuries sustained by employees, officers, stockholders, and creditors of an injured company do not constitute 'antitrust injury' sufficient to confer antitrust standing." Southwest Suburban Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Beverly Area Planning Ass'n, 830 F.2d 1374, 1378 (7th Cir. 1987). It follows naturally that a party in a business [*12] relationship with an entity that failed as a result of an antitrust violation has not suffered the antitrust injury necessary for antitrust standing. See, e.g., Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 975 F.2d 518, 521 (8th Cir. 1992) (denying [*767] antitrust standing to sole shareholder where only alleged injury stemmed from failure of corporation), cert. denied, 127 L. Ed. 2d 378, 114 S. Ct. 1058 (1994); Sharp v. United Airlines, Inc., 967 F.2d 404, 407-08 (10th Cir.) (denying antitrust standing to employees where only alleged injury stemmed from failure of corporation), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 372, 113 S. Ct. 464 (1992).

If Seven-Up Brooklyn, before its bankruptcy, had cancelled its distribution agreements and hired delivery drivers as employees, the distributors would not have been able to assert an antitrust violation. Lacking such a claim against Seven-Up Brooklyn, the distributors also lack a claim against Honickman, Funston, and Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up, who, having taken over Seven-Up Brooklyn's business, have not hired the plaintiffs as distributors.

Although the distributors undoubtedly suffered injury as a result of the alleged antitrust violation, the injury suffered by the distributors is derivative [*13] of the injury suffered by Seven-Up Brooklyn. Thus, accepting the antitrust allegations as true, it was not the distributors that suffered direct antitrust injury, but Seven-Up Brooklyn. Therefore, the proper party to bring the antitrust action on these facts was Seven-Up Brooklyn, or, after its bankruptcy, the estate's trustee.

In A.G.S. Electronics, Ltd. v. B.S.R. (U.S.A.), Ltd., 460 F. Supp. 707 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd, 591 F.2d 1329 (2d Cir. 1978), a manufacturer of record players acquired another manufacturer, thereby allegedly monopolizing the market. The acquiring manufacturer then terminated an exclusive distributorship contract which the acquired manufacturer had with the plaintiff. The court held that the terminated distributor lacked standing to assert an antitrust claim because the injuries "all flow from the termination of its distributorship rather than any anticompetitive effects of the defendants' acquisition of [the second manufacturer]." Id. at 710. We believe that the same result is mandated in the instant case.

The distributors attempt to recharacterize their antitrust claims by arguing that they suffered antitrust injury in the elimination of competition [14] in retail distribution between themselves and Honickman. However, the so-called "distribution monopoly" is derived entirely from Honickman's share of the bottling market. Honickman's "distribution monopoly" thus involves only his product. Moreover, a vertically structured monopoly can take only one monopoly profit. See Lamoille Valley R.R. v. ICC, 711 F.2d 295, 318 (D.C. Cir. 1983); see also Robert H. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 229 (2d ed. 1993); 3 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law § 725b (1978). If, as alleged, appellees successfully conspired to monopolize soft drink bottling in the New York area, they could reap no additional gain from monopolizing the retail distribution of soft drinks. If a monopolist at the distribution level were to restrict output to maximize profit, the restriction would deprive the monopolist at the bottling level of its maximizing output and price. Once having achieved the alleged bottling monopoly, therefore, appellees' sole incentive is to select the cheapest method of distribution. See Byars v. Bluff City News Co., 609 F.2d 843, 861 (6th Cir. 1979). The distributors are thus free to offer their services to appellees, [15] who have no incentive to reject the offer if it is more economical than use of their employees, and consumers of soft drinks will benefit from this competition.

The distributors' claim for tortious interference with contractual relations was also properly dismissed by the district court. The distributors allege that appellees intentionally interfered with Seven-Up Brooklyn's performance of the distribution contracts. HN4 Under New York law, there are four elements to the tort of intentional interference with contractual relations: (i) existence of a valid contract; (ii) defendant's knowledge of that contract; (iii) defendant's intentional procurement of the breach of that contract; and (iv) damages caused by the breach. See Kronos, Inc. v. AVX Corp., 81 N.Y.2d 90, 612 N.E.2d 289, 292, 595 N.Y.S.2d 931 (N.Y. 1993).

We believe that appellants' allegations fail to show that appellees had the requisite intent with regard to procuring the breach of Seven-Up Brooklyn's contracts [*768] with appellants. Nothing in the allegations may reasonably be read to suggest that the target of appellees' conduct was Seven-Up Brooklyn's contractual arrangements with appellants, any more than the target was Seven-Up Brooklyn's contracts [16] with phone or electric companies. As alleged, Honickman's sole interest was to achieve the soft-drink bottling monopoly, and the distribution system utilized by the target of his allegedly predatory behavior was irrelevant to that goal.

The distributors' claim for tortious interference with prospective business relations was also properly dismissed by the district court for failure to state a claim. HN5 To prevail on this claim, under New York law, "a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant interfered with business relations existing between a plaintiff and a third party, either with the purpose of harming the plaintiff or by means that are dishonest, unfair, or improper." Volvo N. Am. Corp., 857 F.2d at 74. The distributors contend that appellees interfered with their relationships with retailers and other final purchasers of soft drinks. As noted, however, appellees' alleged goal was to obtain a monopoly in bottling, and the distributors' relationship with their retail customers is irrelevant to that goal. The distributors thus make no allegations that appellees had any contact with the distributors' customers or that appellees tried to convince the customers to make contracts [17] with them rather than the distributors. It is axiomatic that, in order to prevail on this claim, the distributors would have to show that the appellees intentionally caused the retailers not to enter into a contractual relation with them. See Marilyn Miglin, Inc. v. Gottex Indus., 790 F. Supp. 1245, 1254 (S.D.N.Y. 1992); see also Volvo N. Am. Corp., 857 F.2d at 74. The distributors cannot allege such intentional interference, and their claim therefore fails.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the dismissal of the complaint.

The California Insurance Commissioner has no power to initiate a criminal proceeding against, or an action to impose civil liability on, a person who engages in unfair trade practices. Well-established canons of statutory construction preclude a construction that renders a part of a statute meaningless or inoperative. In the construction of a statute or instrument, the office of the judge is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted, or to omit what has been inserted; where there are several provisions or particulars, such a construction is, if possible, to be adopted as will give effect to all. Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

An insurance agency brought statutory causes of action against various insurance companies for violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720, 16721.5), the Unfair Competition Act (UCA) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200), and the Unfair Insurance Practices Act (UIPA) (Ins. Code, § 790.03), alleging that the insurance companies had engaged in an unlawful boycott against it. The trial court sustained, with leave to amend, defendants' demurrers to the Cartwright Act causes of action, but overruled the demurrers with respect to the UCA and UIPA claims. Defendants sought a writ of mandate directing the trial court to sustain the demurrers to those counts. Pending the determination of that matter, plaintiff filed an amended complaint in which it again attempted to state the Cartwright Act claims. The trial court again sustained demurrers, and plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to overrule the demurrers. (Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, No. 920327, Alex Saldamando and Ira A. Brown, Jr., Judges.) The Court of Appeal, First Dist., Div. Two, Nos. A052795 and A055038, issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its first order insofar as it overruled defendants' demurrers to the cause of action under the UIPA, and to sustain those demurrers without leave to amend. The court also issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its second order insofar as it sustained defendants' demurrers to the causes of action under the Cartwright Act, and to overrule the demurrers to those causes of action.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeal. The court held that neither the language of the UIPA nor its history suggests that the Legislature intended by its enactment to abolish the Cartwright Act and UCA remedies for conduct which the UIPA also proscribes. Ins. Code, § 790.09 (civil and criminal liability is unaffected by cease-and-desist order under UIPA), cannot be construed so as to conclude that, in adopting the UIPA, the Legislature intended that only the Insurance Commissioner be authorized to remedy unlawful conduct by insurance companies. The court also held that a prior opinion of the Supreme Court did not hold that the UIPA exempted the insurance industry from application of the Cartwright Act and other antitrust-related remedies, and that it was not required by principles of stare decisis to construe the UIPA as creating a wholesale exemption from remedies under the Cartwright Act and the UCA for the insurance industry. Moreover, the enactment of Ins. Code, § 1861.03, subd. \(a\) (insurance business is subject to laws of state applicable to any other business), as part of Prop. 103 did not imply that prior to the adoption of that proposition, the insurance industry was exempt from antitrust regulation other than that of the Insurance Code. Finally, the court held that the Court of Appeal did not "seriously compromise" the Supreme Court's holding that there may be no private UIPA cause of action under Ins. Code, § 790.03, when it held that, although plaintiff could not plead around the limitation in Ins. Code, § 790.03, against a private civil cause of action under the UIPA by relying on conduct which violated only the UIPA as the basis for a cause of action under the UCA, the conduct on which plaintiff predicated that cause of action also violated the Cartwright Act and thus could form the basis for a cause of action under the UCA. --In an action by an insurance agency, alleging that defendant insurance companies had engaged in an unlawful boycott against it, the Supreme Court was not required by principles of stare decisis to construe the Unfair Insurance Practices Act (UIPA) (Ins. Code, § 790 et seq.) as creating a wholesale exemption from remedies under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720 et seq.) and the Unfair Competition Act (UCA) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.) for the insurance industry. A prior opinion by the Supreme Court, in which it was stated that certain statutory and common law protections against combinations in restraint of the insurance trade were superseded by specific provisions of the Insurance Code, did not hold that the UIPA supersedes and displaces the Cartwright Act and the UCA prohibitions on anticompetitive activities and unfair business practices by insurers. Also, the Supreme Court has never held that the insurance industry is exempt from antitrust and unfair competition laws or that it enjoys immunity from civil liability for such conduct. Finally, even if the court accepted the argument that the UIPA and Ins. Code, § 790.03 (prohibited unfair or deceptive acts or practices), supplant the Cartwright Act and UCA, and assuming the prior opinion could be read as holding that Ins. Code, § 790.09 (civil and criminal liability is unaffected by cease and desist order under UIPA), permits only administrative sanctions for anticompetitive activities and unfair business practices proscribed by the UIPA, principles of stare decisis would not have precluded reconsideration of that conclusion.

intended to terminate an insurance industry antitrust exemption, as manifested in Ins. Code, § 1861.03, subd. \(a\), and in the ballot materials provided to the voters, it also repealed Ins. Code, former §§ 1853, 1853.6, and 1853.7. Those sections were part of the McBride-Grunsky Act, which was enacted after the Supreme Court held that the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720 et seq.) applied to the insurance industry; they created a partial antitrust exemption applicable only to certain property and casualty lines of insurance. Therefore, the declaration of purpose in Ins. Code, § 1861.03, subd. \(a\), and the ballot pamphlet statements may have reflected nothing more than an intent to terminate the partial antitrust exemption granted to those lines of property and casualty insurance. Moreover, even assuming that [Ins. The addition of Ins. Code, § 1861.3, subd. (a), could not have ratified or supplied what was not present in the prior law.

Unfair Competition § 3—Unfair Competition Act—Cause of Action as Predicated on Violations of Cartwright Act—As Compromising Rule of no Private Cause of Action Under Unfair Insurance Practices Act.

--In an action by an insurance agency, alleging that defendant insurance companies had engaged in an unlawful boycott against it, the Court of Appeal did not "seriously compromise" the Supreme Court's holding that there may be no private Unfair Insurance Practices Act (UIPA) (Ins. Code, § 790 et seq.) cause of action under Ins. Code, § 790.03, when it held that, although plaintiff could not plead around the limitation, in Ins. Code, § 790.03, against a private civil cause of action by relying on conduct which violated only the UIPA as the basis for a cause of action under the Unfair Competition Act (UCA) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.), the conduct on which plaintiff predicated that cause of action also violated the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720 et seq.) and thus could form the basis for a cause of action under the UCA. A cause of action for unfair competition based on conduct made unlawful by the Cartwright Act is not an "implied" cause of action which the Supreme Court held could not be found in the UIPA. There is no attempt to use the UCA to confer private standing to enforce a provision of the UIPA. Nor is the cause of action based on conduct that is absolutely privileged or immunized by another statute. In holding that the Legislature did not intend to create new causes of action when it described unlawful insurance business practices in Ins. Code, § 790.03, the Supreme Court did not hold that by identifying practices that are unlawful in the insurance industry, practices that violate the Cartwright Act, the Legislature intended to bar Cartwright Act causes of action based on those practices.

[*263] [58] [222] BAXTER, J.

We granted review in this matter to consider the holding of the Court of Appeal [*3] that the Unfair Insurance Practices Act (Ins. Code, § 790 et seq.) does not supersede or displace insurance-industry-related claims under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720- 16770) and/or the Unfair Competition Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.) Simply stated, the issue is whether life insurance, which was not affected by Proposition 103, the 1988 initiative measure which expressly declares that other lines of insurance are subject to antitrust and unfair business practice laws (Ins. Code, § 1861.03, subd. \(a\)), is exempt from such laws.

We conclude that the decision of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed. Contrary to dictum in three decisions subsequent to [Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp. \(1968\) 69 Cal. 2d 305 \[70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481\]](#) ([Greenberg v. Equitable Life Assur. Society \(1973\) 34 Cal. App. 3d 994, 999, fn. 2 \[110 Cal. Rptr. 470\]](#)); [Liberty Transport, Inc. v. Harry W. Gorst Co. \(1991\) 229 Cal. App. 3d 417 \[280 Cal. Rptr. 159\]](#); [Karlin v. Zalta \(1984\) 154 Cal. App. 3d 953 \[201 Cal. Rptr. 379\]](#)), this court did not hold there that the Legislature had granted the insurance industry a general exemption [*4] from state antitrust and unfair business practices statutes. Rather, the Legislature intended that rights and remedies available under those statutes were to be cumulative to the powers the Legislature granted to the Insurance Commissioner to enjoin future unlawful acts and impose sanctions in the form of license and certificate suspension or revocation when a member of the industry violates any applicable statute, rule, or regulation. (See, e.g., Ins. Code, § 704, 704.5, 790.05, 790.07, 10433, 10435, 10450.6, 12900 et seq.)

[223] I. BACKGROUND

These related petitions for writ of mandate are directed to several counts in the underlying superior court action by plaintiff Weil Insurance Agency, Inc. (Weil). The defendants are Manufacturers Life Insurance Company, [*264] other insurers, competing insurance brokers, trade associations, and an officer of one group of competing brokers (defendants). In the counts at issue here, Weil's complaint asserted statutory causes of action for violation of Business and Professions Code sections 16720, 16721.5, and 17200, and Insurance Code section 790.03.¹ Business and Professions Code sections 16720 and 16721.5 are provisions of [*5] the Cartwright Act. Business and Professions Code section 17200 is part of the Unfair Competition Act (UCA). Section 790.03 is part of the Unfair Insurance Practices Act (UIPA).

¹ Unless otherwise indicated, all statutory references are to the Insurance Code.

The complaint alleged ² that Weil operated a successful insurance brokerage and consulting [59] business in which it advised attorneys regarding settlement annuities. After Weil disclosed to those clients the actual costs of such annuities, the defendant insurance companies boycotted plaintiff's brokerage and conspired to prevent claimants from obtaining the information Weil provided. Allegedly they did so because the information plaintiff provided to attorneys and injury victims had an adverse impact on the ability of liability insurance carriers to settle personal injury claims below their cash settlement value. The complaint alleged that pursuant to the conspiracy, defendants denied injury victims and their attorneys critical information [*6] regarding annuities used to fund settlement of their claims; boycotted any broker, agent or consultant who provided information and/or consulting services to injury victims and their attorneys; refused to appoint brokers and consultants who did provide the information and/or services; prohibited their brokers, agents and consultants from providing the information and services; falsely disparaged brokers who did provide the information; gave bogus reasons for not dealing with brokers who offered consulting services to injury victims and their attorneys; threatened and intimidated brokers to coerce compliance with their scheme; and caused the trade association (defendant National Structured Settlements Trade Association) to adopt and enforce rules, guidelines and policies in furtherance of their scheme.

The [7] purpose of these actions was to depress the cost of personal injury settlements below their cash value. The complaint alleged that, in furtherance of the conspiracy, and in retaliation for plaintiff's interference with it through its consulting and brokerage practices and efforts to educate the bar and insurance industry through articles authored by one of plaintiff's senior executives, defendants boycotted Weil and used coercion, intimidation, threats, and false disparagement of Weil to cause structured settlement [*265] annuity brokers and agents with whom Weil did business to discontinue that relationship, and to cause other annuity brokers to refuse all business dealings with Weil. Plaintiff's settlement annuity business was destroyed as a result of defendants' conduct.

The complaint asserted that the conduct also harmed the public in that it constituted price fixing, concerted output restriction, and a boycott, all of which were claimed to be per se violations of the Cartwright Act; its requirement that brokers refrain from dealing with Weil was a per se violation of the Cartwright Act; it constituted an unreasonable restraint intended to monopolize the business of insurance [8] in violation of the UIPA; and it therefore involved unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practices which violated the UCA.

The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers to Weil's first amended complaint with leave to amend as to the Cartwright Act causes of action, but overruled the demurrers with respect to the UCA and UIPA claims. Defendants then petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to sustain the demurrers to those counts and the Court of Appeal issued an order directing the real party in interest to show cause why the peremptory writ should not issue as prayed.

[224] Weil then filed an amended complaint in which it again attempted to state the Cartwright Act claims. The life insurance defendants demurred to the second amended complaint on the ground that the complaint failed to state a cause of action as to those counts. They argued in support of the demurrers that the Cartwright Act had been superseded in the business of insurance by Insurance Code section 790.03, a provision of the UIPA. It relied for that claim on Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., supra, 69 Cal. 2d 305, 322 (hereafter Chicago Title), and [9] Greenberg v. Equitable Life Assur. Society, supra, 34 Cal. App. 3d 994. The trial court sustained those demurrers, and Weil petitioned for writ of mandate to compel the court to overrule the demurrers.

After the Court of Appeal summarily denied Weil's petition, this court granted review and transferred the matter back to the Court of Appeal with directions to issue an alternative writ. Although the two petitions [60] had not previously been formally consolidated, the Court of Appeal joined them for purposes of argument and opinion. (See 9 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (3d ed. 1985) Appeal, § 539, pp. 528-529; cf. [Pacific Legal Foundation v. California Coastal Com. \(1982\) 33 Cal. 3d 158, 165, fn. 3 \[188 Cal. Rptr. 104, 655 P.2d 306\].](#)) [*266]

II. THE COURT OF APPEAL OPINION

²  For purposes of this review, we assume that all well-pleaded material allegations of the complaint are true. ([Hendy v. Losse \(1991\) 54 Cal. 3d 723, 727, fn. 2 \[1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 543, 819 P.2d 1\].](#))

10 Cal. 4th 257, *266 895 P.2d 56, 60 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 220, 224 1995 Cal. LEXIS 3138, *9

In a thorough and thoughtful review of both the statutory language of the UIPA and its history, and the terms of the UCA, the Court of Appeal held that the UIPA does not supersede or displace actions under the Cartwright Act, and that a private cause of action may be stated under the UCA for violations of the Cartwright Act, but not for violations of the UIPA. We summarize the court's reasoning [*10] below.

A. Cartwright Act.

The Court of Appeal reasoned that the UIPA was enacted pursuant to the authority of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 United States Code sections 1011-1015, in order to displace federal law which might otherwise have governed insurance trade practices, displacing the law of any state which did not generally proscribe the same industry conduct.³ In so doing the Legislature did not intend to shield the industry from otherwise applicable state law. The intent to preserve existing rights and remedies for unlawful business practices in the insurance industry was clear, as the Legislature had expressly provided in the UIPA, in section 790.09, that "[n]o order to cease and desist under [the UIPA] directed to any person or subsequent administrative or judicial proceedings to enforce the same shall in any way relieve or absolve such person from any administrative action against the license or certificate of such person, civil liability or criminal penalty under the laws of this State arising out of the methods, acts or practices found unfair or deceptive." The original UIPA bill did not contain this stipulation, and instead preserved only preexisting powers [*11] of the commissioner to enforce penalties, fines or forfeitures (Assem. Bill No. 1530 (1959 Reg. Sess.) § 1; see now § 790.08),⁴ but from the first amended version of the bill until its passage, the section preserving existing remedies had been included. (Assem. Amend. to Assem. Bill No. 1530 (1959 Reg. Sess.) Apr. 8, 1959; Assem. Amend. to Assem. Bill No. 1530 (1959 Reg. Sess.) May 6, 1959; [*267] Sen. Amend. to Assem. Bill No. 1530 (1959 Reg. Sess.) June 11, 1959; Stats. 1959, ch. 1737, § 1, p. 4191.)

[*12] It is probable that the inclusion of section 790.09 reflected the understanding of the Legislature that adoption of the UIPA would make no change in existing law. The Legislative Analyst stated in an analysis of the UIPA bill that it "makes no substantive change in existing law." (Ops. Legis. Analyst, Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 1530 (May 20, 1959) p. 1.)

[225] Moreover, the Court of Appeal observed, the Legislature had included specific provisions exempting specified classes of insurance from other laws. (E.g., § 795.7 [senior citizens health insurance], 1860.1 [casualty insurance rates], 11758 [workers' compensation], 12414.26 [title insurance].) Had the UIPA created a general exemption of insurance from the Cartwright Act and other laws, none of these provisions would have been necessary. Since the Legislature thereby demonstrated that it was aware of the need to create an exemption, and did not do so for other classes of insurance, the UIPA did not displace existing rights and remedies for unlawful business practices in [61] the insurance industry, among them the Cartwright Act. Finding such displacement would necessarily be to find a pro tanto repeal of [*13] the Cartwright Act notwithstanding the rule that such repeals are disfavored and will be recognized only when the circumstances reflect a clear legislative intent to do so. B. UCA.

The Court of Appeal recognized that the UIPA does not create a private right of action for violations of its provisions ([Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Companies \(1988\) 46 Cal. 3d 287 \[250 Cal. Rptr. 116, 758 P.2d 58\]](#) (Moradi-Shalal)), and that a plaintiff may not "plead around" that limitation by casting a cause of action based on a violation of the UIPA as one brought under the UCA. The Court of Appeal upheld the overruling [*14] of defendants' demurrers to the UCA cause of action, however, reasoning that a UCA cause of action may be predicated on a violation of the Cartwright Act. That followed because the UCA defines "unfair competition" as any "unlawful, [*268] unfair or fraudulent business act or practice" (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200), and permits any person to sue for injunctive and restitutionary relief for such conduct on behalf of the general public. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17204, 17203.) A violation of the Cartwright Act is such a practice. ([People v. National Association of Realtors \(1981\) 120 Cal. App. 3d 459, 473-475 \[174 Cal. Rptr. 728\], later app. \(1984\) 155 Cal. App. 3d 578 \[202 Cal. Rptr. 243\]; B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. \(1987\) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1341, 1348, fn. 6 \[235 Cal. Rptr. 228\].](#))

III. DISCUSSION

Defendants contend that the Court of Appeal erred. Simply stated, their position is that, except to the extent that Proposition 103 applies, the insurance industry is exempt from any antitrust and unfair business practices legislation other than the UIPA. Therefore, insurers are subject only to the regulatory authority of the Insurance Commissioner and there [*15] is no private right of action to redress injuries brought about by combinations in restraint of trade and other unfair business practices in the insurance industry. They argue that in Chicago Title and all subsequent cases the courts have consistently held that the Cartwright Act does not apply to insurance industry practices, that stare decisis counsels adherence to those decisions, and that the Chicago Title decision and its progeny have been ratified by subsequent legislation, including Proposition 103. They also argue that the Court of Appeal has misconstrued section 790.09, the UIPA provision which the court held preserves existing rights and remedies. That section, they argue, establishes only that administrative cease-and-desist orders do not preclude other administrative action related to the same conduct. Finally, they claim that permitting a UCA action for an unfair insurance practice that is prohibited by the UIPA would "seriously compromise" this court's holding in Moradi-Shalal, supra, 46 Cal. 3d 287, that there is no private cause of action for violations of section 790.03 even if the conduct also constitutes a violation of the Cartwright Act.

[226] [*16] A. Chicago Title.

In reaching its conclusion that, in section 790.09, the UIPA expressly preserved remedies for unlawful conduct in the insurance industry which existed at the time the UIPA was adopted, the Court of Appeal rejected defendants' argument that this court in fact held in Chicago Title that the UIPA exempted insurance from the Cartwright Act and other antitrust related remedies, a proposition which [Greenberg v. Equitable Life Assur. \[269\] Society, supra, 34 Cal. App. 3d 994 \[62\]](#) (Greenberg) states was the holding of Chicago Title. The Court of Appeal expressed the view that the statement in Chicago Title on which defendants relied was dictum, and found it to be neither compelling nor persuasive authority.

The language in Chicago Title to which defendants and the Court of Appeal refer appears, italicized, in this passage: "The Cartwright Act, as previously mentioned, is similar in spirit and substance to the federal legislation encompassed by the Sherman (15 U.S.C.A. § 1-7) and Clayton Acts (15 U.S.C.A. § 12-27). Private individuals, businesses, or corporations have, in the absence of express statutory authority, no [*17] standing to enforce such regulatory statutes. (Cf. [Show Management v. Hearst Publishing Co., 196 Cal. App. 2d 606, 612-616 \[16 Cal. Rptr. 731\]](#); [West Coast Poultry Co. v. Glasner, 231 Cal. App. 2d 747 \[42 Cal. Rptr. 297\]; Hudson v. Craft, 33 Cal. 2d 654 \[204 P.2d 1, 7 A.L.R.2d 696\].](#)) The Cartwright Act however follows federal policy which expressly contemplates private civil litigation based upon statutes regulating antitrust and unfair trade practices, including illegitimate pricing practices. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17040- 17051.)

*"These statutes and the common law which once constituted the 'protection of the public against combinations in restraint of the insurance trade' ([Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, 29 Cal. 2d 34, 45 \[172 P.2d 867\]](#)) are now expressly superseded and contravened by the specific provisions of the Insurance Code. Counts three (secret rebate), four (discriminatory pricing) and seven (unlawful rebate) clearly concern the regulation of rates charged by title insurers and title companies, and rate regulation has traditionally commanded administrative expertise applied* to controlled industries. (Ins. Code § 12404- 12412; [*18] [County of Placer v. Aetna Cas. etc. Co., 50 Cal. 2d 182 \[323 P.2d 753\]](#); [Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Moroney, 28 Cal. 2d 344 \[170 P.2d 31\]](#))" (Chicago Title, supra, 69 Cal. 2d 305, 322-323, italics added.)

Defendants argue that the italicized statement is not dictum and that, properly understood, Chicago Title held that Cartwright Act remedies for boycotts and other unlawful practices in the insurance industry had been superseded by the UIPA in section 790.03, subdivision \(c\). We need not decide here whether the passage to which the Court of Appeal referred was dictum or a holding of the court, however, as the passage did not refer to the UIPA. The Insurance Code provisions which Chicago Title cited are not part of the UIPA and are not in issue here.

Even assuming arguendo that the reference in Chicago Title to the superseding impact of Insurance Code provisions was not dictum, the holding was far narrower than defendants suggest.

[*270] Consideration of the nature of the action in Chicago Title is crucial to understanding that case. It arose on demurrers to the various causes of action stated by the plaintiffs. They sought injunctive [*19] relief and damages for unfair trade practices and combinations in restraint of trade, including a boycott of the plaintiffs' business. Plaintiffs were "underwritten title companies" that did title searches and examinations and prepared certificates or abstracts of title for title insurers, and delivered the title insurance policies issued by the insurers. (See § 12402.) In the counts at issue in the decision, plaintiffs alleged that the defendants⁵ violated antitrust [227] laws, and engaged in price discrimination and unfair trade practices. They accused the defendants of conspiring to provide rebates in order to induce customers to transfer business to defendants.

[*20] [63] After explaining that the counts directed to insurance rates could not state a cause of action because specific provisions of the Insurance Code (which are not part of the UIPA) gave the Insurance Commissioner authority over rates, the court went on to say that several other counts did not state a cause of action and that the factual allegations failed to support the charge. The Court of Appeal concluded for that reason that Chicago Title held only that the allegations of the complaint were insufficient, and that we had not held that the UIPA superseded the Cartwright Act insofar as insurance industry practices are concerned.

This court adopted, with modifications, the decision of the Court of Appeal in Chicago Title. Defendants argue that the court necessarily had the UIPA in mind when it stated that the Cartwright Act had been superseded by the specific provisions of the Insurance Code and that the statement referred to all of the counts of the complaint that were directed to insurance company defendants. They base their argument on a passage in the Court of Appeal opinion which, they assert, addressed the jurisdiction of the Insurance Commissioner. This court [*21] deleted that passage when it adopted the opinion of the Court of Appeal in Chicago Title, however.

Apart from the impropriety of citing and relying on a vacated Court of Appeal opinion, this argument necessarily lacks merit. The opinion of this [*271] court in Chicago Title is the sole source of decision and the reasoning underlying the decision. Moreover, deletion of a passage from a Court of Appeal opinion that is adopted by this court may reflect this court's unwillingness to adopt the view of the Court of Appeal on the deleted matter.

Defendants also argue that this court's analysis of the adequacy of the allegations of the Chicago Title complaint to state Unfair Practices Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 et seq.) violations in counts unrelated to ratemaking addressed only claims made against defendants who were not insurance companies. Therefore, that discussion does not imply that in other circumstances a cause of action for conduct made unlawful by statutes other than the

⁵ The named defendants were: Lehman Brothers, an investment firm; Great Western Financial and Financial Corporation of America, financial holding companies owned by Lehman Brothers; Great Western Savings and Loan Association; Security Title Insurance Company; American Title Company; Summit Title Company; and Sherwood Escrow Company. Many of these defendants were not engaged in the insurance industry and thus did not hold certificates and/or licenses which the commissioner could revoke. The commissioner does have the power to seek an injunction against anyone who is violating or about to violate any provisions of the Insurance Code or regulations issued thereunder. (§ 12928.6.)

Plaintiffs competed directly with Summit Title Company and American Title Company for the business of title insurance companies.

UIPA could be stated against an insurer subject to that act. The discussion in point involved two counts alleging a boycott: "Appellants contend in counts six and eight that the conduct [*22] of the Sherwood and Great Western groups, respectively, infringes Business and Professions Code section 17046 [part of the Unfair Practices Act]. The attempted application of this section to the facts evidences appellants' misinterpretation of the nature of a boycott. The allegation of boycott cannot be supported in this instance because everyone has the unrestricted right to select customers and sources of supply. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17042; [A.B.C. Distributing Co. v. Distillers Distributing Corp., 154 Cal. App. 2d 175, 189 \[316 P.2d 71\]](#)) There is not, and could not be an allegation that it is unreasonable for Sherwood to buy through Summit, or for Great Western Financial to require its subsidiaries in the saving and loan or escrow business to engage the services of the title company in which it likewise has an interest. Not only are vertical distribution agreements in this instance contemplated by the Insurance Code, but 'it seems clear to us that vertical integration, as such without more, cannot be held violative of the Sherman Act.' [Citation.] Neither do exclusive dealing arrangements constitute boycotts" (Chicago Title, supra, 69 Cal. 2d 305, 323-324)

[*23] This passage contemplates the possibility of a Cartwright Act or Unfair Practices Act claim, and rejects the claim stated by plaintiffs only because the facts alleged did not constitute a violation of either act.

Defendants' argument that these counts were not directed against insurance companies and that the discussion anticipates Cartwright Act or Unfair Practices Act claims only against persons or entities that are not engaged in the business of insurance is not supported by the opinion. The "Sherwood group" to which the court referred included [*228] both Summit Title Company and Sherwood Escrow Company. (Chicago Title, supra, 69 Cal. 2d 305, 318) Summit, an underwritten title company (§ 12340.5 [former § 12402]) was [*272] subject to licensing and regulation under provisions of the Insurance Code. (§ 12389.2 [former 64] § 12396, added by Stats. 1965, ch. 361, § 2, p. 1467.).

Therefore, if the Chicago Title statement the Court of Appeal here deemed dictum was instead a holding of this court, the holding was much narrower than defendants' claim. The court said only that sections of the Insurance Code that are not part of the UIPA superseded [*24] other antitrust and unfair competition laws insofar as they might apply to conduct related to rates and ratemaking which are governed by specific provisions of the Insurance Code that authorize some practices and as to others gave the Insurance Commissioner authority to determine the propriety of the conduct. None of the Insurance Code provisions cited by the court in Chicago Title is part of the UIPA and this court did not mention the UIPA in the Chicago Title opinion. Nor did the court say that in section 790.09 the UIPA reflects legislative intent to displace remedies created by the Cartwright Act or other statutes directed to unfair trade practices.

Had the court concluded in Chicago Title that the UIPA displaced preexisting legislation in the field and that the insurance industry was thereby exempted from antitrust and other unfair business practices remedies applicable to other industries, there would have been no need to explain in detail, as the court did (Chicago Title, supra, 69 Cal. 2d at pp. 324-325), why the allegations supporting the remaining counts of the complaint were insufficient for other reasons to state causes of action under [*25] the Cartwright Act or the Unfair Practices Act.⁶

[*26] B. Legislative history and administrative construction of the UIPA.

Moreover, had the majority held that the UIPA precluded any Cartwright Act claim, the opinion would certainly have responded to the dissent by observing that in light of the holding on the effect of the UIPA, the adequacy of the allegations pleading those causes of action was irrelevant.

CA(1a) [↑] (1a) Defendants offer a construction of section 790.09 which, they argue, demonstrates that in adopting the UIPA, the Legislature intended that only the Insurance Commissioner be authorized to remedy unlawful conduct [*273] by insurance companies. They argue that in providing that a cease-and-desist order does not relieve a person of civil or criminal liability, section 790.09 simply gives nonpreclusive effect to administrative cease and desist orders that are followed by further action by the Insurance Commissioner, and the section has no relevance to the issues in this case. In their view section 790.09 means only that the issuance of a cease and desist order by the Insurance Commissioner does not preclude other action by the commissioner directed to the same impermissible trade practice. Defendants argue that the Court of Appeal erred in its construction of section 790.09 when that court concluded that the section stated that the commissioner's issuance of a cease and desist order shall not "obstruct or impede" the imposition of civil liability or criminal penalties. They perceive a crucial difference in [*27] the actual language of the statute which provides that such orders do not "relieve or absolve" a person from imposition of civil liability or criminal penalties. That distinction, defendants claim, precludes viewing section 790.09 as a "savings clause" and demonstrates that its purpose is merely to provide that cease and desist orders do not have a preclusive effect.

We agree that the definitions of the words used in the two phrases differ. CA(2) [↑] (2) "Absolve" is defined as "to set free from an obligation or the consequences of guilt." (Webster's New Collegiate Dict. (1981) p. 969.) CA(3) [↑] (3) "Obstruct" [229] means "to block or close up by an obstacle," CA(4) [↑] (4) while "impede" means "to interfere with or slow the progress of." (Id. at p. 570.) CA(1b) [↑] (1b) We fail to find in those distinctions the crucial [*65] difference noted by defendants and do not agree with defendants that "relieve or absolve" is beyond question language of res judicata and claim preclusion. Defendants cite no statute or case using those terms in reference to res judicata and claim preclusion and we are aware of none. The definition of "relieve and absolve" offered by defendants leads us to the same conclusion reached by the Court of [*28] Appeal. The issuance of a cease-and-desist order enjoining future unlawful conduct does not free the offender from the civil obligation or criminal guilt incurred as a result of the unlawful conduct he has engaged in prior to issuance of the order.

Defendants offer no satisfactory answer to the observation of the Court of Appeal that as defendants construe section 790.09, its reference to civil and criminal liability becomes meaningless. The section provides that a ceaseand-desist order to a person does not "relieve or absolve such person from any administrative action against the license or certificate of such person, civil liability or criminal penalty under the laws of this State arising out of the methods, acts or practices found unfair or deceptive." (Italics added.) HN3 [↑] The Insurance Commissioner has no power to initiate a criminal proceeding [*274] against, or an action to impose civil liability on, a person who engages in unfair trade practices. The authority of the commissioner is limited to enjoining future unlawful conduct and suspending or revoking a license or certificate. ([Sherhoff v. Superior Court \(1975\) 44 Cal. App. 3d 406, 409 \[118 Cal. Rptr. 680\].](#))

[*29] That part of section 790.09 which preserves civil and criminal liability would be meaningless if defendants' proposed construction of the section were accepted. HN4 [↑] Well-established canons of statutory construction preclude a construction which renders a part of a statute meaningless or inoperative. In the construction of a statute or instrument, the office of the judge is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted, or to omit what has been inserted; and where there are several provisions or particulars, such a construction is, if possible, to be adopted as will give effect to all. (Code Civ. Proc., § 1858.) Pursuant to this mandate we must give significance to every part of a statute to achieve the legislative purpose. ([Schwab v. Rondel Homes, Inc. \(1991\) 53 Cal. 3d 428, 435 \[280 Cal. Rptr. 83, 808 P.2d 226\]; J. R. Norton Co. v. Agricultural Labor Relations Bd. \(1979\) 26 Cal. 3d 1, 36-37 \[160 Cal. Rptr. 710, 603 P.2d 1306\].](#))

Not only is the construction defendants suggest inconsistent with the language of section 790.09, but a conclusion that the Legislature intended by section 790.09 to displace [*30] Cartwright Act, Unfair Practices Act, and UCA remedies would be contrary to consistent administrative construction of the act and available legislative history. It would also be contrary to the conclusion of courts of other states which have adopted the same or similar legislation in order to take advantage of the McCarran-Ferguson Act exemption from application of the federal law that existing rights and remedies are preserved by this provision.

The Cartwright Act (Stats. 1941, ch. 526, § 1, p. 1834) and the Unfair Practices Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 et seq., also added by Stats. 1941, ch. 526, § 1, p. 1834) predate the UIPA (Stats. 1959, ch. 1737, § 1, p. 4191). The Legislature was aware that almost all of the practices which the UIPA prohibits in section 790.03 and defines as "unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts or practices in the business of insurance" were already proscribed under those acts.⁷ When the UIPA was introduced as Assembly Bill No. 1530 in 1958, its acknowledged purpose was to preclude [\[*275\]](#) federal jurisdiction over the business of insurance. Section 790 states that purpose: "The purpose of this article is to regulate trade [\[*31\]](#) practices in the [\[66\] \[230\]](#) business of insurance in accordance with the intent of Congress as expressed in the Act of Congress of March 9, 1945 (Public Law 15, Seventy-ninth Congress), by defining, or providing for the determination of, all such practices in this State which constitute unfair methods of competition or unfair or deceptive acts or practices and by prohibiting the trade practices so defined or determined." Lower courts have repeatedly recognized that the purpose of the UIPA is to displace federal law, not existing state law in the field of antitrust and unfair competition. (See, e.g., Karlin v. Zalta, supra, 154 Cal. App. 3d 953, 966; [American Internat. Group, Inc. v. Superior Court \(1991\) 234 Cal. App. 3d 749, 756-758 \[285 Cal. Rptr. 765\]](#).)

[\[*32\]](#) Moreover, as the Court of Appeal recognized, nothing in the history of the UIPA reflects legislative intent to bring about a pro tanto repeal of the Cartwright Act or the UCA.

At the time the bill was passed the Legislative Analyst expressed the view that adoption of the UIPA made no change in existing law, stating: "The bill makes no substantive change in existing law as the insurance commissioner has in the past regulated such matters under his general powers." (Ops. Legis. Analyst, Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 1530 (May 20, 1959) p. 1.) That this understanding of the UIPA was shared by the Legislature is confirmed by that body's enactment of the specific exemptions from antitrust legislation noted above, exemptions that would have been unnecessary had the UIPA effected a blanket exemption of the insurance industry from the rights and remedies available under the Cartwright Act, UCA and other legislation.⁸

[\[*33\] \[*276\]](#) As the Court of Appeal noted, section 790.09 was patterned after a draft of the Model Unfair Insurance Practices Act proposed by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) (exhibit B to Rep. of Joint Com. on Federal Legislation, etc. (Jan. 24, 1947) § 8(d); Proceedings, 78th Ann. Sess., NAIC (1947)) p. 398),⁹ and has been construed in other states which have adopted the same or substantially similar statute as

⁸ The Insurance Commissioner, whose office proposed inclusion of section 790.09 in the UIPA to ensure that existing remedies would be preserved, continues to take the position that the Legislature did not intend, by adoption of the UIPA, to supersede the Cartwright Act or any other state laws. Appearing as amicus curiae in support of plaintiff, the commissioner expresses his belief that regulatory enforcement by his office is complementary to the Cartwright Act and the UCA. Both the commissioner and the California District Attorneys Association, which also appears as amicus curiae, express the belief that the public interest is served by vigorous enforcement of all three statutes. The California District Attorneys Association asserts that actions under the UCA have become the principal law enforcement instrument of prosecutors in the areas of consumer protection and unfair competition, with more than 200 such actions being prosecuted annually. The UCA is also the basis for prosecutions brought to supplement provisions of the Health and Safety Code and the Labor Code to remedy public health and sanitation and public safety violations, and its use to supplement other provisions of law has been upheld repeatedly. (See, e.g., [People v. McKale \(1979\) 25 Cal. 3d 626, 632 \[159 Cal. Rptr. 811, 602 P.2d 731\]](#); People v. Los Angeles Palm, Inc. \(1981\) 121 Cal. App. 3d 25, 33 \[175 Cal. ⁹ The request of plaintiff that this court take judicial notice of this and other materials related to the adoption of the UIPA, much of which was considered by the Court of Appeal, is granted. [HN5 Pursuant to Evidence Code section 459, a reviewing court

[*35] CA\(5\)[↑] (5) The presumption against finding a pro tanto repeal of a statute in the enactment of subsequent legislation on the subject is so strong that the court will do so only if the later statute revises the earlier in a manner that [*277] necessarily implies legislative intent to substitute the new statute for the older. (Roberts v. City of Palmdale, supra, 5 Cal. 4th 363, 379.) CA\(1c\)[↑] (1c) Neither the language of the UIPA nor its history suggests that the Legislature intended by its enactment to abolish the Cartwright Act and UCA remedies for conduct which the UIPA also proscribes.

C. Stare decisis.

CA\(6a\)[↑] (6a) CA\(7\)[↑] (7) Invoking the principles of stare decisis, defendants next argue that the court should not depart from the construction of the UIPA that courts have followed since this court's decision in Chicago Title. As we have explained above, however, the court did not construe the UIPA or section 790.09 of that act in Chicago Title, and has never held that the UIPA created a wholesale exemption from the Cartwright Act and UCA remedies for the insurance industry. HN7[↑] Those acts do not create such an exemption, and, since the state scheme of regulation of the insurance industry is not wholly [*36] inconsistent with their application, no exemption may be implied. CA\(6b\)[↑] (6b) Defendants also rely on the Court of Appeal interpretation of Chicago Title in Greenberg, supra, 34 Cal. App. 3d 994, 999, footnote 2, which, they assert, was accepted by this court in Royal Globe Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 880 [153 Cal. Rptr. 842, 592 P.2d 329] (Royal Globe). Defendants recognize that Royal Globe was overruled in Moradi-Shalal, but argue that Moradi-Shalal did not address the claimed insurance industry exemption from antitrust and unfair competition laws, an exemption which, they assert, other courts have continued to recognize since Moradi-Shalal was decided.

In Greenberg, supra, 34 Cal. App. 3d 994, the plaintiff sought to state a cause of action under section 770 ¹¹ on behalf of himself and a similarly situated class. The complaint alleged that the defendant insurance company, as must take judicial notice of any matter that was properly noticed by the trial court or of which the trial court was required to take notice under Evidence Code section 451. The reviewing court may also take judicial notice of matters specified in Evidence Code section 452.

¹¹ Section 770: "No person engaged in the business of financing the purchase of real or personal property or of lending money on the security of real or personal property and no trustee, director, officer, agent or other employee, or affiliate of, any such person shall require, as a condition precedent to financing the purchase of such property or to loaning money upon the security thereof, or as a condition prerequisite for the renewal or extension of any such loan or for the performance of any other act in security for the balance on home loans it made, required the borrower to [*278] obtain from the company a policy of whole life insurance equal to the [*37] loan balance. It was alleged that comparable insurance was available from other insurance companies at a lower premium and that the "tie-in sale" violated section 770. On plaintiff's appeal after the trial court had sustained a demurrer without leave to amend, the Court of Appeal held that while no cause of action had been stated under that section, leave to amend should [68] [232] have been granted as it appeared that plaintiff could state a UIPA cause of action under subdivision \(c\) of section 790.03 for an unfair business practice as that subdivision should be construed in light of similar statutes prohibiting activities in restraint of trade. In an accompanying footnote the Greenberg court stated: "In Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., 69 Cal. 2d 305 [70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481], our Supreme Court, in dealing with a demurrer to a complaint alleging restraint of trade by an insurance company, stated that the Cartwright Act which encompasses the general antitrust law of California is 'expressly superseded and contravened by the specific provisions of the Insurance Code.' (69 Cal. 2d at p. 322.)" (Greenberg, supra, 34 Cal. I*381 App. 3d 994, 999, fn. 2.)

Contrary to defendants' characterization of our discussion of Greenberg in Royal Globe, supra, 23 Cal. 3d 880, we did not state there that the Greenberg [*39] court had correctly interpreted Chicago Title as precluding application of the Cartwright Act to all forms of anticompetitive conduct by insurers. Our opinion said only that the Greenberg court had "determined that the general antitrust prohibitions of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) were inapplicable to insurance companies and that only section 790.03 prohibits insurers from engaging in anticompetitive activity." (Royal Globe, supra, 23 Cal. 3d 880, 886-887.) That statement was made in response to an argument that section 790.09 did not provide affirmative authority for filing a civil action for violation of the UIPA. We said that this argument was contrary to the Greenberg holding that section 790.03 did afford the basis for a civil suit. We did not hold, as defendants claim, that the Greenberg interpretation of Chicago Title was correct. That question was not before us in Royal Globe.

Defendants' claim that the Greenberg interpretation of Chicago Title has been "affirmed by all subsequent case authorities" does not withstand examination. Other than Moradi-Shalal, supra, 46 Cal. 3d 287, which, as we have explained, [*40] does not approve the Greenberg interpretation, defendants cite only three cases in support of that proposition. None does so. The court quoted the Greenberg statement in Karlin v. Zalta, supra, 154 Cal. App. 3d 953, but in Karlin the court concluded that plaintiffs' claims were not governed by the Insurance Code and, as defendants concede, the plaintiffs [*279] did not state a Cartwright Act claim. Thus, the court had no occasion to apply the Greenberg formulation of Chicago Title. In Liberty Transport, Inc. v. Harry W. Gorst Co., supra, 229 Cal. App. 3d 417, disapproved on other grounds in [Adams v. Murakami \(1991\) 54 Cal. 3d 105, 116 \[284 Cal. Rptr. 318, 813 P.2d 1348\]](#), the court stated in dictum that only the UIPA prohibits anticompetitive behavior by an insurer, citing Greenberg. (229 Cal. App. 3d at p. 432.) There, however, the court acknowledged that because Moradi-Shalal had only limited retroactivity, the case was governed by Royal Globe. (229 Cal. App. 3d at p. 426, fn. 1.) The actual holding was that the statute of limitations did not bar the section 790.03 cause of action stated by the plaintiff.

[Maler v. Superior Court \(1990\) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1592 \[270 Cal. Rptr. 222\]](#) affords no more support to defendants. The opinion does not mention either Chicago Title or Greenberg, holding only that the adoption of sections 1861.03 and 1861.10 as part of Proposition 103 at the November 8, 1988, election did not restore or create private causes of action under section 790.03.¹² connection therewith, that the person from whom such purchase is to be financed or to whom the money is to be loaned or for whom such extension, renewal or other act is to be granted or performed negotiate any insurance or renewal thereof covering such property through a particular insurance agent or broker."

Nor has this court, or any other, accepted defendants' argument that the UIPA [*42] [69] [233] exempts insurance companies from other state antitrust laws or from civil liability for anticompetitive conduct.¹³ The act itself contains no such exemption and, in the only case in which this court has considered that question, we held that the insurance industry is not exempt from Cartwright Act claims. (Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters (1946) 29 Cal. 2d 34, 45-46 [172 P.2d 867].) As the Court of Appeal recognized, Royal Globe and Greenberg recognized such liability, holding only that the statutory authority for a civil action was found in the UIPA, not the Cartwright Act. We have since held in Moradi-Shalal, supra, 46 Cal. 3d 287, 304-305, that neither section 790.03 nor section 790.09 creates the basis for a private cause of action, but that insurance companies do have civil liability for such conduct. The Court of Appeal below correctly understood that "Moradi-Shalal marks a return to the fundamental principle that the UIPA, like all statutes, is to be applied according to its terms. Its language neither creates new private rights nor destroys old ones. This was the view of Justice Richardson[] [who, in his [*280] [43] dissent,] wrote that section 790.09 'preserves any preexisting civil or criminal liability which the insurer might face under other statutory or decisional law.' (Royal Globe, supra, 23 Cal. 3d at p. 893 . . .)." This court did not, as defendants argue, hold in Moradi-Shalal that insurers are subject to common law, but not statutory, civil liability for anticompetitive activities and unfair business practices. We said, with respect to third parties and insured who had no cause of action under section 790.03 for bad faith refusal to settle: "[C]ourts retain jurisdiction to impose civil damages or other remedies against insurers in appropriate common law actions, based on such traditional theories as fraud, infliction of emotional distress, and (as to the insured) either breach of contract or breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing." (Moradi-Shalal, supra, 46 Cal. 3d 287, 304-305.) Bad faith refusal to settle is not conduct encompassed by the Cartwright Act. Whether statutory causes of action under the Cartwright Act and the UCA may be stated against an insurance company was not an issue in Moradi-Shalal which, in the context [44] of bad faith refusal to settle claims, overruled Royal Globe Ins. Co., supra, 23 Cal. 3d 880, and confirmed that section 790.03, subdivision (h), was not the source of a private right of action against an insurer for that conduct.

Addressed in this context, defendants' argument that stare decisis principles mandate adherence to Chicago Title must fail. First and foremost, Chicago Title did not hold that the UIPA supersedes and displaces the Cartwright Act and UCA prohibitions on anticompetitive activities and unfair business practices by insurers. Second, we have never held that the insurance industry is exempt from antitrust and unfair competition laws or that it enjoys immunity from civil liability for such conduct. Finally, even were we to accept defendants' argument that the UIPA and section 790.03 supplant the Cartwright [45] Act and UCA, and assuming Chicago Title could be read as holding that section 790.09 permits only administrative sanctions for anticompetitive activities and unfair business practices proscribed by the UIPA, principles of stare decisis would not preclude reconsideration of that conclusion.

Subdivision (c) of section 790.03 includes among the unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts or practices in the business of insurance it describes: "Entering into any agreement to commit, or by any concerted action committing, any act of boycott, coercion or intimidation resulting in or tending to result in unreasonable restraint of, or monopoly in, the business of insurance." This broad prohibition of anticompetitive activities and unfair business conduct alone demonstrates that defendants may not claim justifiable reliance on a right to engage in such unlawful conduct. A [*281] belief that only administrative sanctions are available to deter or punish such conduct is not equivalent to a justifiable belief that the conduct is permissible. Thus, defendants have no basis [70] [234] for arguing that under their interpretation of Chicago Title, they were [46] free to engage in concerted action that tended to result in an unreasonable restraint of trade.

"[T]he doctrine of stare decisis 'is based on the assumption that certainty, predictability and stability in the law are major objectives of the legal system; i.e., that parties should be able to regulate their conduct and enter into relationships with reasonable assurance of the governing rules of law.' (9 Witkin, Cal. Procedure (3d ed. 1985) Appeal, § 758, p. 726, and see cases cited.)" (Moradi-Shalal, supra, 46 Cal. 3d 287, 296.) Even if defendants believed the Cartwright Act and UCA did not apply to an insurer, however, they would be bound to conform their conduct to the UIPA. That law mirrors the Cartwright Act's prohibition of boycotts and other forms of unfair and anticompetitive conduct. Therefore, defendants will not be heard to complain that they should not suffer civil liability because they lacked "reasonable assurance of the governing rules of law." In essence, their claim is that they believed they could violate the law and be subject only to sanctions imposed by the Insurance Commissioner. Principles of stare decisis do not protect a person from the consequences [*47] of actions based on such a belief.

D. Proposition 103.

CA(8)[⁸] (8) Defendants argue that legislation subsequent to Chicago Title has "ratified" the rule that the UIPA supplants the Cartwright Act. They reason that the addition of section [HN8\[⁸\]](#) 1861.03, subdivision (a), to the Insurance Code implies that prior to the adoption of Proposition 103 the insurance industry was exempt from antitrust regulation other than that of the Insurance Code. That subdivision provides: "The business of insurance shall be subject to the laws of California applicable to any other business, including, but not limited to, the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Sections 51 to 53, inclusive, of the Civil Code), and the antitrust and unfair business practices laws (Parts 2 (commencing with Section 16600) and 3 (commencing with Section 17500) of Division 7 of the Business and Professions Code)."

Clearly, Proposition 103 was intended to terminate an insurance industry antitrust exemption. That intent is manifest in section 1861.03, subdivision \(a\), and in the ballot materials provided to the voters. The Legislative Analyst stated in his analysis that "[t]he measure makes insurance companies subject to the state's antitrust [*48] laws." In the ballot pamphlet argument in favor of Proposition 103 and in rebuttal to the counterargument, proponents [*282] of Proposition 103 stated that the measure "will also end the insurers' exemption from the antimonopoly laws, . . ." and that it "eliminates the insurance industry's unfair exemption from the antitrust laws." (Ballot Pamp., Proposed Amends. to Cal. Const. with arguments to voters Gen. Elect. (Nov. 8, 1988) argument in favor of Prop. 103, pp. 100-101, 140.)

However, Proposition 103 also repealed former sections 1853, 1853.6, and 1853.7 of the Insurance Code. Those sections were part of the McBride-Grunsky Act, which was enacted after this court held in Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, supra, 29 Cal. 2d 34, that the Cartwright Act applied to the insurance industry; they created a partial antitrust exemption applicable only to certain property and casualty lines of insurance.¹⁴ The McBride-Grunsky Act permitted casualty insurers to engage in rate-setting practices that, but for statutory authorization, would have violated antitrust law. Therefore, the declaration of purpose in section 1861.03, subdivision \(a\), and the ballot pamphlet statements [*49] may reflect nothing more than an intent to terminate the partial antitrust exemption granted to those lines of property and casualty insurance. They do not necessarily reflect a belief that other lines of insurance enjoyed a similar exemption, or that the McBride-Grunsky Act had exempted even property and casualty lines from all aspects of antitrust and unfair competition laws.

[71] [235] Moreover, even assuming that section 1861.03 did reflect a belief on the part of the drafters of Proposition 103 and the electorate that the Cartwright Act and UCA were not applicable to the insurance industry, that belief would be irrelevant. The addition of section 1861.03, subdivision \(a\), to the Insurance Code cannot [*50] ratify or supply what is not present in the prior law.

Proposition 103 does not apply to several lines of insurance, among which is life insurance. (§ 1861.13.)¹⁵ We need not decide if the drafters intended subdivision \(a\) of section 1861.03 to apply to all aspects of the insurance industry, however, as there is no way that Proposition 103 can be construed as creating an exemption from antitrust laws for those lines of insurance to which its other provisions do not apply.

¹⁵ Section 1861.13: "This article shall apply to all insurance on risks or on operations in this state, except those listed in Section 1851."

Section 1851, like section 1861.13, is part of chapter 9 of division 1 of the Insurance Code, a chapter directed to rates and rating.

[*283] IV. UNFAIR COMPETITION ACT

Relying on this court's decision in [Rubin v. Green \(1993\) 4 Cal. 4th 1187, 1201-1202 \[17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 847 P.2d 1044\]](#), the Court of Appeal held that, because section 790.03 does not create a private civil cause [*51] of action, plaintiff could not plead around that limitation by relying on conduct which violates only the UIPA as the basis for a UCA cause of action. It held, however, that the trial court had properly overruled defendants' demurrers to the UCA cause of action because the conduct on which plaintiff predicated that cause of action also violated the Cartwright Act. Therefore, the conduct could form the basis for a cause of action under the UCA.

CA\(9\) [↑] (9) Defendant contends that this holding will "seriously compromise" our holding in Moradi-Shalal that there may be no private UIPA cause of action under section 790.03.

The question the court addressed in Rubin v. Green, supra, 4 Cal. 4th 1187, was whether allegedly improper solicitation by an attorney, which could not form the basis of a tort action because the conduct fell within the litigation privilege of Civil Code section 47, subdivision (b), could be the basis of an action for injunctive relief under the UCA. Plaintiff's theory was that the conduct could do so as it was prohibited by Business and Professions Code sections 6152 and 6153. Therefore, it was a species of "unfair competition" as to which, under [Business and Professions \[*52\] Code section 17204](#), plaintiff, acting in the interests of the general public, had standing to seek an injunction.¹⁶

The court held that the plaintiff could not plead around the absolute bar to relief created by the litigation privilege by recasting the cause of action as one for unfair competition. It analogized such pleading to the attempts to avoid the bar to "implied" private causes of action under section 790.03, which several Courts of Appeal had held could not be avoided by characterizing the claim as one under the UCA. (See [*Safeco Ins. Co. v. Superior Court \(1990\) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1491 \[265 Cal. Rptr. 585\]; Maier v. Superior Court, supra, 220 Cal. App. 3d 1592; Industrial Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court \[*284\] \(1989\) \[53\] 209 Cal. App. 3d 1093 \[257 Cal. Rptr. 655\]; Lee v. Travelers Companies \(1988\) 205 Cal. App. 3d 691, 694-695 \[252 Cal. Rptr. 468\]; Doctors' Co. Ins. Services v. Superior Court \(1990\) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1289 \[275 Cal. Rptr. 674\]; American Internat. Group, Inc. v. Superior Court \(1991\) 234 Cal. App. 3d 749, 768 \[285 Cal. Rptr. 765\].](#))

As the Court of Appeal here recognized, however, a cause of action for unfair competition based on conduct made unlawful by the Cartwright Act is not an "implied" cause of action which Moradi-Shalal held could not be found in the UIPA. There is no attempt to use the UCA to confer private standing to enforce a provision of the UIPA. Nor is the cause of action based on conduct which is absolutely privileged or immunized by another [72] [236] statute, such as the litigation privilege of Civil Code section 47, subdivision (b).

This conclusion does not compromise the rule of Moradi-Shalal in any way. The court concluded there that the Legislature did not intend to create new causes of action when it described unlawful insurance business practices in section 790.03, and therefore that section did not create a [*54] private cause of action under the UIPA. The court did not hold that by identifying practices that are unlawful in the insurance industry, practices that violate the Cartwright Act, the Legislature intended to bar Cartwright Act causes of action based on those practices. Nothing in the UIPA would support such a conclusion. The UIPA nowhere reflects legislative intent to repeal the Cartwright Act

insofar as it applies to the insurance industry, and the Legislature has clearly stated its intent that the remedies and penalties under the UCA are cumulative to other remedies and penalties.¹⁷

V. DISPOSITION

The judgment of the Court of Appeal is affirmed.

Lucas, C. J., Kennard, J., Arabian, J., George, J., and Werdegar, J., concurred.

Concur by: MOSK, J.

Concur

[*55] [*285] MOSK, J.

I concur in the judgment.

I also generally concur in the majority opinion prepared by Justice Baxter. Its reasoning is substantially sound. Its result is unquestionably correct. On two points, however, I would take a different approach.

I

First, unlike the majority, I would declare that the statement in Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 305, 322-323 [70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481] (hereafter sometimes Chicago Title), is dictum, not holding, and unsound dictum at that. As the majority themselves clearly show, this language has caused mischief in the past. It should not be allowed to retain any vitality for the future.

"The Cartwright Act," stated the Chicago Title court, "is similar in spirit and substance to that federal legislation encompassed by the Sherman (15 U.S.C.A. § 1-7) and Clayton Acts (15 U.S.C.A. § 12-27). Private individuals, businesses or corporations have, in the absence of express statutory authority, no standing to enforce such regulatory statutes. (Cf. Show Management v. Hearst Publishing Co., 196 Cal. App. 2d 606, 612-616 [16 Cal. Rptr. 731]; West Coast Poultry [*56] Co. v. Glasner, 231 Cal. App. 2d 747 [42 Cal. Rptr. 297]; Hudson v. Craft, 33 Cal. 2d 654 [204 P.2d 1, 7 A.L.R. 696].) The Cartwright Act however follows federal policy which expressly contemplates private civil litigation based upon statutes regulating antitrust and unfair trade practices, including illegitimate pricing practices. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17040- 17051 [sic: these provisions belong to the Unfair Practices Act, not the Cartwright Act].)

"These statutes and the common law which once constituted the 'protection of the public against combinations in restraint of the insurance trade' (Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, 29 Cal. 2d 34, 45 [172 P.2d 867]) are now expressly superseded and contravened by the specific provisions of the Insurance Code. Counts three (secret rebate), four (discriminatory pricing) and seven (unlawful rebate) clearly concern the regulation of rates charged by title insurers and title companies, and rate regulation has traditionally commanded administrative expertise applied to controlled industries. (Ins. Code, § 12404- 12412; County of Placer v. Aetna Cas. etc. Co., 50 Cal. 2d 182 [323 P.2d 753]; Division [*57] of Labor Law Enforcement v. Moroney, 28 Cal. 2d 344 [170 P.2d 3].) Count three, for instance, is based upon a statute [*286] (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045) aimed at preventing a distributor from discriminating between customers, but fails to allege facts from which a court might properly infer that [73] [237] the prices charged by Security [a title insurer defendant] or Summit [a title company defendant] differ from customer to customer, and is thus defective. (Federal Automotive Services v. Lane Buick Co., 204 Cal. App. 2d 689 [22 Cal. Rptr. 603].) Count four, presumably based on the same facts, charges that the discount constitutes a sale of title insurance below cost which is an infraction only if done 'for the purpose of injuring competitors' (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17043, 17049), but a court is not the appropriate initial arbiter of factors involved in insurance costs. Count seven implies that Sherwood (an escrow company [defendant]) acts as 'agent' for real property owners with whom title insurers and title companies are prohibited from splitting fees and that because Summit is controlled by identical interests, the receipt of a title policy from [*58] Security at a discount constitutes an illegal rebate (Ins. Code, § 12404) to Sherwood. The statutory framework, however, specifically contemplates a division of fees between title insurers and title companies which shall be proper unless the method used constitutes such fee divisions 'illegal.' (Ins. Code, § 12412, 12404.5, 12405.7.) It is not clear from the facts alleged that the discount rendered would or should be considered illegal by the insurance commissioner, or that the practice of extending secret rebates or engaging in unreasonably low or discriminatory pricing policy is followed by the defendants, or any of them.

¹⁷  Business and Professions Code section 17205: "Unless otherwise expressly provided, the remedies or penalties provided by this chapter are cumulative to each other and to the remedies or penalties available under all other laws of this state."

"[T]he factual allegations, as illustrated, fail in each instance to support the charge. Just as the earlier counts state facts insufficient to establish proscribed conduct on the parts of the alleged actors and thus cannot reach their purported conspirators, so the final counts charging antitrust infringements fall for similar reasons." (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., supra, 69 Cal. 2d at pp. 322-323, italics added and brackets without enclosed material deleted.)

In my view, Chicago Title's statement is dictum, indeed [*59] unsound dictum. On this point, I adopt the analysis that Justice Benson set out in his opinion for the Court of Appeal below, which I quote in full.

"Defendants' challenge to the Cartwright Act claims ultimately rests on a single sentence in [Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp. \(1968\) 69 Cal. 2d 305, 322 \[70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481\]](#): 'These statutes and the common law which once constituted "the protection of the public against combinations in restraint of the insurance trade" ([Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, 29 Cal. 2d 34, 45 \[172 P.2d 867\]](#)) are now expressly superseded and contravened by the specific provisions of the Insurance [*287] Code.' After scrutinizing this statement in context, we have concluded that Chicago Title is neither compelling nor persuasive authority for a rule holding the Cartwright Act superseded by the [Unfair Insurance Practices Act or] UIPA.

"The quoted statement is dictum. Dictum is the 'statement of a principle not necessary to the decision.' ([People v. Squier \(1993\) 15 Cal. App. 4th 235, 240 \[18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 536\]](#), internal quotation marks omitted.) The holding of Chicago Title is that [*60] the complaint failed to adequately plead the elements of a Cartwright Act cause of action, or any other claim. The court undertook a painstaking count-by-count analysis of the complaint, identifying numerous factual and legal deficiencies. ¹ [*61] If the Supreme Court had believed that the statutes cited by the plaintiffs (including the Cartwright Act) were superseded by the Insurance Code, there would have been no occasion for this discussion. [74] [*238] But the court explicitly identified factual insufficiency as the 'determinative' issue. ²

" '[T]he factual allegations, as illustrated, fail in each instance to support the charge. Just as the earlier counts state facts insufficient to establish proscribed conduct on the parts of the alleged actors and thus cannot reach their purported conspirators, so the final counts charging antitrust infringements fall for similar reasons.' (69 Cal. 2d at p. 323, brackets original.)

" 'The allegation of boycott cannot be supported in this instance because everyone has the unrestricted right to select customers and sources of supply.' (69 Cal.[2]d at p. 324.)"

² " 'We must determine . . . whether the superior court has jurisdiction to entertain an action based upon appellants' theories, or any of them, and, if so, whether appellants have stated a cause of action against any of the various named defendants. The latter finding, which is determinative, is in the negative.' (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., supra, 69 Cal. 2d at p. 313, italics added.)"

"Dictum, of course, is not controlling authority even when it emanates from the Supreme Court. ([Grange Debris Box & Wrecking Co. v. Superior Court \(1993\) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1349, 1358 \[20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 515\]](#); cf. [Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v. Superior Court \(1962\) 57 Cal. 2d 450, 455 \[20 Cal. Rptr. 321, 369 P.2d 937\]](#); [Brown v. Kelly Broadcasting Co. \(1989\) 48 Cal. 3d 711, 734-735 \[257 Cal. Rptr. 708, 771 P.2d 406\]](#).) Nonetheless it 'carries persuasive weight and should be followed where it demonstrates a thorough analysis of the issue or reflects compelling logic.' (Grange, supra, at p. 1358) Chicago Title's statement concerning Insurance [*62] Code exclusivity satisfies neither of these requirements.

"Like most of the opinion in Chicago Title, the quoted statement was authored by a Court of Appeal and 'adopted' by the Supreme Court. ([69 \[*288\] Cal. 2d at p. 311](#).) This in itself does not warrant lessened deference, but the statement also betrays a certain lack of authorial attention. To begin with, it confuses the Cartwright Act with the [Unfair Practices Act]. The subject dictum is immediately preceded by a citation to Business and Professions Code sections 17040- 17051. (69 Cal. 2d at p. 322.) These statutes are part of the [Unfair Practices Act] and not, as the author of the dictum seemed to believe, the Cartwright Act. (See ibid.; cf. id. at pp. 315, 322 [correctly defining 'Cartwright Act']; Food & Agr. Code, § 66524, 65521 [same]; [Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters \[\(1946\) 29 Cal. 2d \[34.\] 42 \[172 P.2d 867\]](#) [same]; cf. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 [defining 'Unfair Practices Act'].) The statement that 'these statutes' have been superseded by the Insurance Code is thus burdened with a glaring anomaly.

"Moreover, the court never identified any provision of the Insurance [*63] Code which 'expressly superseded and contravened' any other statute. In particular, the opinion never mentioned the UIPA. Instead it cited certain provisions of the Insurance Code involving the regulation of title insurance rates. (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., supra, 69 Cal. 2d at pp. 322-323, citing Ins. Code, § 12404- 12412.) None of those provisions could be said to 'expressly abrogate' any other statute. Indeed, some five years later the Legislature did enact an express exemption covering some of the activities authorized by the cited portion of the code. (Ins. Code, § 12414.26, added by Stats. 1973, ch. 1130, § 15, p. 2314.) The absence of such a statute in 1968 renders the Chicago Title dictum nearly unintelligible. Certainly the Legislature could not have given that case the meaning defendants do, or it would not have bothered to enact the cited statute.

"The two paragraphs immediately following the subject dictum suggest that three of the complaint's eleven counts might intrude upon the commissioner's jurisdiction over title insurance rates. ([Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., supra \[*64\] , 69 Cal. 2d at pp. 322-323](#).) None of these three counts invoked the Cartwright Act. We note sharp historical and analytical distinctions between the regulation of rate-setting practices and the broad prohibitions in the UIPA. (See Karlin v. Zalta [(1984)] 154 Cal. App. 3d [953,] 973-977.)

"The court thus seemed to say no more than that part of the complaint might intrude upon regulatory turf. Even with respect to that part of the complaint, however, the court ultimately returned to its holding, declaring that the factual allegations under scrutiny 'fail in each instance to support the charge' and that the counts discussed to that point 'state facts insufficient to establish proscribed conduct.' ([Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western \[*289\] Financial Corp., supra, 69 Cal. 2d at p. 323](#).) The court only then turned to claims [75] [239] having any bearing here, declaring that ' . . . the final counts charging antitrust infringements fall for similar reasons.' (Ibid.) On the next page, the Supreme Court itself inserted a declaration that the Cartwright Act counts failed 'because plaintiffs' vague and conclusionary pleadings fail to [*65] allege sufficient facts.' (Id. at p. 324.)

"It thus appears that the subject dictum means at most that the three claims concerning rates were repugnant, or potentially repugnant, to the 'specific provisions of the Insurance Code' concerning rate setting. The allusion to the Speegle case, and thus apparently to the Cartwright Act, was not only dictum, but unsound." (Fn. omitted.)

II

Second, I consider somewhat differently from the majority the question whether the Unfair Insurance Practices Act, codified as article 6.5, commencing with section 790, of chapter 1 of part 2 of division 1 of the Insurance Code, supersedes other law, statutory and decisional, that may be applicable to trade practices in the business of insurance.

The source of the Unfair Insurance Practices Act is, obviously, the Model Unfair Trade Practices Act drafted by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners. The source of the Model Unfair Trade Practices Act is the Federal Trade Commission Act, codified at section 41 et seq. of title 15 of the United States Code. Indeed, the model act "is patterned very closely after" the federal act "and much of the language was lifted bodily" therefrom. [*66] (2 Proceedings of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (1971) p. 345.)

Let us return to the Unfair Insurance Practices Act itself. Insurance Code section 790 declares that "[t]he purpose of" the act "is to regulate trade practices in the business of insurance in accordance with the intent of Congress as expressed in the Act of Congress of March 9, 1945 (Public Law 15, Seventy-ninth Congress), by defining, or providing for the determination of, all such practices in this State which constitute unfair methods of competition or unfair or deceptive acts or practices and by prohibiting the trade practices so defined or determined." The congressional act referred to is popularly known as the McCarran-Ferguson Act, codified at section 1011 et seq. of title 15 of the United States Code, which in its section 2(b), section 1012\(b\) of title 15 of the United States Code, makes "the Sherman Act, . . . [*290] the Clayton Act, and . . . the Federal Trade Commission Act . . . [in]applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is . . . regulated by State law."

It seems clear that the Unfair Insurance Practices Act was not intended to supersede [*67] other law, statutory and decisional, that might be applicable to trade practices in the business of insurance. The majority are right to impliedly approve the reasoning of Justice Benson in his opinion for the Court of Appeal below: The Unfair Insurance Practices Act "was enacted pursuant to the authority of the McCarran-Ferguson Act . . . in order to displace federal law which might otherwise have governed insurance trade practices, displacing the law of any state which did not generally proscribe the same industry conduct. In so doing the Legislature did not intend to shield the industry from otherwise applicable state law." (Maj. opn., ante, at p. 266, fn. omitted.)

Less clear, however, is whether the Unfair Insurance Practices Act has the effect of superseding other law, statutory and decisional, that may be applicable to trade practices in the business of insurance. Evidently, to use the language of Insurance Code section 790, the act "defin[es], or provid[es] for the determination of, all . . . [trade practices in the business of insurance] in this State which constitute unfair methods of competition or unfair or deceptive acts or practices and . . . prohibit[s] [*68] the trade practices so defined or determined." (Italics added.) In so doing, it constitutes a comprehensive statutory scheme governing trade practices in the business of insurance. ([American Intern. Group, Inc. v. Superior Court \(1991\) 234 Cal. App. 3d 749, 764 \[285 Cal. Rptr. 765\]](#).) Such a scheme may supersede the otherwise applicable common law. (E.g., [I.E. Associates v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. \(1985\) 39 Cal. 3d 281, 285 \[240\] \[76\] \[216 Cal. Rptr. 438, 702 P.2d 596\]](#).) It may supersede the otherwise applicable statutory law as well.

Weighing all in the balance, however, I believe that the Unfair Insurance Practices Act does not have the effect of superseding other law, statutory and decisional, that may be applicable to trade practices in the business of insurance. A supersessive effect should be found if and only if the act may be considered a substitute for such other law. (See [Penziner v. West American Finance Co. \(1937\) 10 Cal. 2d 160, 176 \[74 P.2d 252\]](#).) The condition is not satisfied. The act sets up a regime of direct regulation by public actors through administrative proceedings of various sorts. By contrast, the otherwise applicable law allows [*69] "indirect regulation" by both private and public actors through both civil and criminal actions. There is no basis to conclude that the former is a substitute for the latter.

[*291] In view of the foregoing, I find it unnecessary to rely on Insurance Code section 790.09. Because I find it unnecessary, I would not do so.

Unlike the majority, I cannot discern in Insurance Code section 790.09 what they have impliedly discovered, namely, an "intent to preserve existing rights and remedies for unlawful business practices in the insurance industry." (Maj. opn., ante, at p. 266, italics added.) The provision declares: "No order to cease and desist issued under" the Unfair Insurance Practices Act "directed to any person or subsequent administrative or judicial proceeding to enforce the same shall in any way relieve or absolve such person from any administrative action against the license or certificate of such person, civil liability or criminal penalty under the laws of this State arising out of the methods, acts or practices found unfair or deceptive." The provision merely imposes a bar against defensive collateral estoppel--stating only that an administrative cease-and-desist [*70] order issued against a person on a finding that he has engaged in unfair or deceptive conduct does not "relieve or absolve" him from any administrative action, civil liability, or criminal penalty arising out of the conduct in question. The proximate source of Insurance Code section 790.09 is section 8(d) of the Model Unfair Trade Practices Act: "No order of the Commissioner under this Act or order of a court to enforce the same shall in any way relieve or absolve any person affected by such order from any liability under any other laws of this state." (Italics added.) The ultimate source of Insurance Code section 790.09 is section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, section 45(e) of title 15 of the United States Code: "No order of the Commission or judgment of court to enforce the same shall in anywise relieve or absolve any person, partnership, or corporation from any liability under the Antitrust Acts." (Italics added.) That provision, in fact, merely imposes a bar against defensive collateral estoppel. (See, e.g., State of N.C. v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., Inc. (4th Cir. 1976) 537 F.2d 67, 74; United States v. Chas. Pfizer & Co. (S.D.N.Y. 1962) 205 F. Supp. 94, [71] 96-97.)

I hasten to add that, although I cannot discern in Insurance Code section 790.09 an "intent to preserve existing rights and remedies for unlawful business practices in the insurance industry" (maj. opn., ante, at p. 266, italics added), I nevertheless find therein an assumption that such "existing rights and remedies" are indeed "preserved." The provision imposes a bar against defensive collateral estoppel that is broad, extending beyond administrative proceedings to civil and criminal actions. Administrative proceedings belong to the regime of direct regulation set up by the Unfair Insurance Practices Act. Civil and criminal actions, in contrast, belong to the regime of "indirect regulation" allowed under otherwise applicable law. The provision [*292] recognizes the survival of those actions. It thereby presupposes the perduration of that law.

III

With all that said, I concur in the judgment, and also generally concur in the majority opinion.

HN2[Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment where there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Summary judgment is appropriate if plaintiffs failed to make a showing sufficient to establish any element essential to their claims and on which they bear the burden of proof.

The court holds that a plaintiff cannot demonstrate a conspiracy if, using ambiguous evidence, the inference of a conspiracy is less than or equal to an inference of independent action.

[2] [*1167] KENNEDY, Circuit Judge. Plaintiffs brought this action against nine banks doing business in Tennessee (the "Banks"),¹ [2] alleging that the Banks conspired, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, to fix the amount of certain fees charged to bank customers. The fees at issue are the fees the Banks charge customers for writing checks upon accounts with insufficient funds ("NSF") and for depositing checks which are returned uncollected ("DIR").² Plaintiffs are individuals who allegedly paid NSF fees at each of the respective defendant banks.

Plaintiffs admit that they do not have any direct evidence of any agreement or conspiracy among the Banks to set prices but contend that the uniformity of these fees shows there is tacit collusion. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants. Plaintiffs appeal, arguing that the District Court erred in determining that they failed to present sufficient evidence to exclude the possibility that the Banks were pursuing legitimate independent business interests. For the following reasons, we affirm.

[3] I.

HN1 We review a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo, Hanover Ins. Co. v. American Eng'g Co., 33 F.3d 727, 730 \(6th Cir. 1994\), "viewing all facts and inferences drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party." Boyd v. Ford Motor Co., 948 F.2d 283, 285 \(6th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 939 \(1992\). Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure HN2 mandates the entry of summary judgment where there is "no genuine issue [3] as to any material fact and . . . the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Summary judgment is appropriate if plaintiffs failed to make a showing sufficient to establish any element essential to their claims and on which they bear the burden of proof. Barnhart v. Pickrel, Schaeffer & Ebeling Co., 12 F.3d 1382, 1388-89 \(6th Cir. 1993\).

HN3 Summary judgment may be granted even in a complex antitrust case because "antitrust law" limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case. Matsushita Electric Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\). In Riverview Investments, Inc. v. Ottawa Community Improvement Corp., 899 F.2d 474 \(6th Cir.\), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 855 \(1990\), HN4 we established a two-part inquiry for evaluating a summary judgment motion in an antitrust conspiracy case:

- (1) Is the plaintiff's evidence of conspiracy ambiguous, i.e., is it as consistent with the defendants' permissible independent interests as with an illegal conspiracy; [*1168] and, if so, (2) is there any evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were pursuing these independent interests.

* The Honorable Douglas W. Hillman, United States District Judge for the Western District of Michigan, sitting by designation.

¹ The Banks are Bank of Bartlett, Boatmen's Bank of Tennessee, First American National Bank, First Tennessee Bank, N.A., Leader Federal Bank for Savings, National Bank of Commerce, NationsBank, Tri-State Bank of Memphis and Union Planters National Bank.

² For purposes of brevity, we will refer to both of these types of fees as "NSF" throughout the opinion.

Id. [I4\]](#) at 483 (citation omitted). We held that a plaintiff cannot demonstrate a conspiracy "if, using ambiguous evidence, the inference of a conspiracy is less than or equal to an inference of independent action." Id.

[4] II.

HN5 It is not necessary for an antitrust plaintiff to introduce any direct evidence of a conspiracy. Rather, a conspiracy can be inferred from business behavior which evidences "a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement." Nurse Midwifery Ass'n. v. Hibbett, 918 F.2d 605, 616 \(6th Cir. 1990\) (citation omitted), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 952 (1991).

However, HN6 parallel pricing, without more, does not itself establish a violation of the Sherman Act. Theatre Enters., Inc. v. Paramount Film Distrib. Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 541, 98 L. Ed. 273, 74 S. Ct. 257 \(1954\); General Business Sys. v. North Am. Philips Corp., 699 F.2d 965, 976 \(9th Cir. 1983\). Courts require additional evidence which they have described as "plus factors." Examples of these "plus factors" include actions contrary to a defendant's economic self-interest, Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1456 \(11th Cir. 1991\), product uniformity, exchange 5 of price information and opportunity to meet, Wilcox v. First Interstate Bank, N.A., 815 F.2d 522, 525-26 \(9th Cir. 1987\), and a common motive to conspire or a large number of communications, Apex Oil Co. v. Di Mauro, 822 F.2d 246, 253-54 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977 \(1987\).

Plaintiffs first contend that because the Banks all charge essentially the same fee for NSF checks, they have conspired to fix the level of fees. In addition, plaintiffs argue that the public disclosure of the fees and the alleged failure of the Banks to set NSF fees relative to cost are the plus factors which, in addition to the alleged parallel pricing, show a violation of section 1. Plaintiffs also rely on the affidavits of two experts stating that defendants would not be able to charge high NSF fees without collusion.

The Banks assert that the prices are not sufficiently similar to constitute parallel pricing. The District Court examined the record, however, and concluded that, when the inferences from the evidence were construed in favor 5 of plaintiffs, "the variances between the fees are not as drastic as the Banks contend."³ The Banks do not raise this issue of the similarity of 6 the prices on appeal. Rather, they argue that even assuming their prices are similar, plaintiffs have failed to present other evidence sufficient to support an inference of a conspiracy.

Plaintiffs mainly rely on the fact that the Banks do not set NSF fees relative to the cost of processing NSF checks as evidence of a conspiracy beyond parallel pricing. In support of their argument, plaintiffs cite 12 C.F.R. § 7.8000 (1995) which provides that:

- (a) All charges to customers should be arrived at by each bank on a competitive basis and not on the basis of any agreement, arrangement, undertaking, understanding or discussion with other banks or their officers.
- (b) Establishment of deposit account service charges, and the amounts 7 thereof, is a business decision to be made by each bank according to sound banking judgment and federal standards of safety and soundness. In establishing deposit account service charges, the bank may consider, but is not limited to considering:
 - (1) Costs incurred by the bank, plus a profit margin, in providing the service;
 - (2) The deterrence of misuse by customers of banking services;
 - (3) The enhancement of the competitive position of the bank in accord with the bank's marketing strategy;

[\[*1169\]](#) (4) Maintenance of the safety and soundness of the institution. . . .

6 Plaintiffs contend that under this regulation, the Banks must take into account the costs of processing NSF and DIR checks and that their failure to do so is evidence of a conspiracy.

³ The Banks argued to the District Court that on a statewide level, NSF fees varied by as much as 44%, varied by as much as 26.67% on a citywide level, and varied within individual banks' branches by as much as 90%. The NSF fees varied from $ 10.00 to $ 20.00 per transaction.

Defendants concede that they do not price NSF charges in relation to cost. They note that although section 7.8000 states that the Banks may consider costs, it does not require costs to be taken into account. We agree with the District Court that "the failure of the banks to consider one factor does not require the conclusion that the banks conspired to set the level of NSF fees."

It is clear from the [8] affidavits submitted by the Banks that they do in fact take many legitimate factors into account besides costs. Several of the Banks submitted affidavits stating that they established high prices for NSF checks because they did not want to attract customers who write these checks and wanted to deter customers from this behavior.⁴ One bank stated that it set NSF fees based on "what the market is charging, government regulations, and business judgment." Another bank considers profitability, handling and processing costs, competitive position, and the maintenance of safety and soundness.

[9] [7] Plaintiffs also argue that the manner in which NSF fees are publicized allows the banks to collude in setting prices. However, the Banks' publication of prices is as least as consistent with their independent interests as it is with collusion.

First, the Banks certainly have a legitimate interest in providing customers relevant information regarding the fees associated with their checking accounts. The Banks also have an interest in publishing prices to attract or deter consumers from opening accounts. "Permitting an inference of conspiracy [based on the dissemination or advertising of retail prices] would make it more difficult for retail consumers to get the information they need to make efficient market decisions." In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Prods. Antitrust Litig., 906 F.2d 432, 448 n.14 (9th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 959 (1991).

Most of the Banks admit they evaluate the fees charged by other banks when they set fees. "HN7"⁵ The exchange of price information among competitors is not a per se violation of the antitrust laws." Amey, Inc. v. Gulf Abstract & Title, Inc., 758 F.2d 1486, 1505 (11th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1107 [10] (1986); United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 441 n.16, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978). The Banks naturally are interested in surveying the market to determine what other banks are charging in order to make strategic competitive decisions. All of the affidavits submitted by the Banks contained statements to the effect that there was no agreement or collusion between them, tacit or otherwise. Although publication and evaluation of [8] prices can serve as a means to violate section 1,⁵ plaintiffs have produced no evidence that this is occurring.

[*1170] Plaintiffs offer two affidavits [11] in support of their allegations that the Banks have tacitly conspired to fix prices. First, they have submitted the affidavit of Allen Buckalew, an economist with a Master of Science degree. Buckalew reviewed the Banks' depositions, 12 C.F.R. 7.8000, the Banks' pricing history and a presumed cost per NSF check of $.15 to $ 1.50 and stated that:

Assuming all of the above, and further assuming that defendants have historically totally failed to openly compete in the market for customers on the basis of more attractive NSF charges, I can testify that based on well-accepted economic theories dealing with supply and demand in our American economy, defendants have been able to maintain these artificially excessive NSF/DIR charges by means of a tacit agreement not to compete on such charges and to set the prices at the inflated amounts which they presently are.

⁴ For instance, one bank's affidavit stated that "when NSF, DRI and other overdrafts are honored, unsecured and often unsound extensions of credit result which may go uncollected. In addition, check kiting and other fraudulent schemes that result in losses to banking institutions can arise out of presentation of overdraft items. Setting NSF charges at their current levels . . . is designed to discourage this undesirable conduct." Another affidavit stated that "excessive overdrafts are detrimental to the banking system because at some level they will cause a loss of confidence in checks as a medium of payment First American does not want customers who continually bounce checks. First American's procedures require that the account of a customer who bounces an excessive amount of checks in a twelve month period be closed." Another bank's affidavit contained the statement "to contend that [NSF charges are] an area of business that is encouraged by NationsBank is pure folly. The ideal customer is one who keeps large balances in the account, makes deposits, writes few checks and is never overdrawn."

The Banks contend that this affidavit fails to raise a genuine issue of material fact because the expert offers no additional facts or evidence and relies on conclusory allegations.

Buckalew's affidavit is not sufficient to defeat the Banks' motion for summary judgment. In Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson [12] Tobacco Corp., 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 (1993), the Supreme Court held that HN8[[↑]] an economist's expert testimony which was based on insufficient facts could not [9] be relied on to support a jury verdict. Id. at 2598. The Court stated that "expert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but is not a substitute for them." Id. Buckalew's conclusions are based on nothing more than facts which, as we have already stated, are equally consistent with independent actions by the Banks. For instance, the Banks readily admit that they have "totally failed to openly compete" because they do not want to attract customers who write checks with insufficient funds to cover them.

Plaintiffs submitted another affidavit from Antonio L. Zate, a certified public accountant with a masters degree in economics who has worked as a bank examiner for the Federal Reserve Bank.⁶ According to Zate, the banking industry's income derived from interest has been declining since the early 1980s while income derived from "non-interest income sources" such as NSF fees has been increasing. It is Zate's "educated and professionally-gained opinion" that the "enormous profit" from NSF fees would not have [13] been possible without collusion between banks. Zate's opinion, however, does not exclude the possibility that the Banks wanted to keep these fees high to discourage NSF check-writing or that, by increasing NSF fees to compensate for lost interest revenue, the Banks were maintaining the safety and soundness of the institution as permitted by 12 C.F.R. 7.8000. Plaintiffs' expert evidence is equally consistent with independent action as it is with conspiracy.

Finally, plaintiffs assert that they have not been able to produce evidence to respond [14] to defendants' summary judgment motion because defendants denied them access to [10] any discovery. However, at a status conference held on February 2, 1994, plaintiff's counsel agreed with the court that "there [was] a consensus that the summary judgment motion can be resolved, and [it was] not dependent on [plaintiffs] obtaining anything else." Furthermore, the information plaintiffs sought apparently had to do with the actual costs to the Banks of processing NSF checks, and defendants stated that they were not challenging plaintiffs' assumptions concerning costs for the purposes of the summary judgment motion. Thus, the District Court properly granted summary judgment in favor of defendants.

III.

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the District Court's grant of summary judgment.

End of Document

⁶The Banks argue that the District Court should not have considered Zate's affidavit. They contend that the affidavit was submitted after the discovery deadline established by the District Court's scheduling order and that plaintiffs stated that no experts had been retained in their responses to expert interrogatories. The District Court found it unnecessary to reach these issues in light of its order granting summary judgment. Likewise, we need not address these arguments.

Standing is an essential element in any private antitrust action under § 4 or § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 16 and 26. The following factors are to be considered in evaluating standing: the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the plaintiff's injury, the defendant's intent, the nature of the plaintiff's injury, the directness or the indirectness of the connection between the plaintiff's injury and the unlawful market restraint, the speculativeness of the plaintiff's damages, and the risk of duplicative recoveries or the danger of complex apportionment of damages.

HN6 Private Actions, Remedies

"Antitrust injury" is defined as injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. This definition reflects a fundamental principal in antitrust law that an injury, even if causally related to an antitrust violation, will not qualify as an "antitrust injury" unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny. The point is to prevent an award of damages for losses stemming from continued or increased competition rather than diminished competition -- a result that otherwise would be "inimical" to the antitrust laws.

[*1395] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

KANE, J.

Defendant Miller and Molson brewing companies, together with certain related importing and distribution entities, move to dismiss brewing rival Coors' antitrust claims against them for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, lack of standing and failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The three Molson defendants that are Canadian entities also dispute this court's in personam jurisdiction [2] over them and move to dismiss Coors' complaint on that independent ground as well. For the reasons set forth below, I deny both motions.

I. Background

Coors Brewing Company ("Coors") filed this action against Miller Brewing Company ("Miller Brewing"), Molson Breweries of Canada Limited ("Old Molson"), Molson Breweries,¹ and certain Miller-Molson affiliated importing and distribution entities,² alleging the "North American Strategic Brewing Alliance" (the "Alliance") announced by Miller Brewing, Molson Limited and Foster's on January 14, 1993 violates the Clayton and Sherman antitrust acts. Pursuant to the Alliance, Miller Brewing bought Molson USA, acquiring a 20 % equity interest in Molson Breweries and representation on its board of directors. Miller Brewing also obtained an exclusive license over the Molson's and Foster's beer brands in the United States.

² Molson Limited and Miller-owned Molson Breweries, U.S.A., Inc. ("Molson USA") are the other party defendants in this action. Miller Brewing of Canada, Limited ("Miller Canada") was dismissed from this action by stipulation of the parties. For ease of reference, "Miller" will be used to refer collectively to defendants Miller Brewing and Molson USA and "Molson" will be used to refer collectively to defendants Molson Limited, Old Molson and Molson Breweries.

[3] [*1396] At the time the Alliance was announced and since 1985, Coors and Old Molson were parties to a licensing agreement ("Licensing Agreement") whereby Old Molson obtained the right to market, distribute, and sell all Coors brands of beer in Canada. Pursuant to the Licensing Agreement, Coors claims it provides Old Molson with its proprietary formula and brewers yeast, competitive strength studies, positioning strategies, advertising proposals, and other confidential marketing studies and business information. The Licensing Agreement contains a 10-year notice of termination clause.

Because Old Molson is wholly owned by the entity in which Miller Brewing, through the Alliance, acquired a 20% interest and board membership, Coors contends Miller Brewing now has access to Coors' "vital North American proprietary and strategic information" and the power to restrain Coors as an independent competitive force in the United States and North American markets. Compl., PP 38-41. Coors contends its presence in this market is necessary to prevent Miller and Anheuser-Busch from having a duopoly in the United States, where they already control two-thirds of the market.³ Coors seeks dissolution of the [*4] Licensing Agreement or relief from the 10-year notice of termination clause; a permanent injunction prohibiting Miller Brewing and Molson USA from having any interest in or participating on the board of Molson Breweries or an order requiring Miller to dispose of its interest in Molson Breweries so long as Old Molson is Coors' exclusive licensee in Canada; a permanent injunction prohibiting Molson and its present and former employees from disclosing any Coors marketing or strategic information to Miller;⁴ and treble damages.

[5] Coors contends not only that the Molson-Miller Alliance violates United States antitrust laws, but also that Molson's participation in the Alliance breaches the Coors-Molson Licensing Agreement. Thus, at the same time it initiated this antitrust litigation, Coors also initiated arbitration proceedings against Old Molson in Canada under the Licensing Agreement. Asserting Coors brought the antitrust action merely to circumvent its duty to arbitrate under the Agreement, the Molson defendants moved for a stay pending resolution of the arbitration proceedings in Canada. Molson argued arbitration would settle the factual disputes upon which Coors' antitrust claims were based. Chief Judge Richard P. Matsch, to whom this case originally was assigned,⁵ denied the motion for stay and Molson appealed.

In a published opinion issued March 30, 1995, the Tenth Circuit [*6] affirmed in part and reversed in part the order denying Molson's motion for stay. Coors v. Molson et al., 51 F.3d 1511, 1995 WL 139321 (10th Cir. March 30, 1995). The panel affirmed Judge Matsch's order refusing to stay the action against Miller. Slip op. at 17. With respect to the action against Molson, the panel agreed Coors' allegations regarding market concentration and the Alliance as a restraint of trade were unrelated to the Licensing Agreement and thus not subject to a stay, and preliminarily agreed Coors' allegations regarding the anticompetitive effects of Miller's control over Molson were unrelated to the Agreement and also not subject to a stay.⁶ The panel disagreed, however, that allegations regarding Molson's use or misuse of confidential Coors' product and marketing [*1397] information were unrelated to the Licensing Agreement, and reversed Judge Matsch's order as it applied to them. Id. at 15.

³ Coors further alleges Miller has an incentive to restrain Coors unlawfully and to leverage its access to Coors' proprietary and strategic information because Coors' growth represents a "threat" to Miller, particularly in the important "light" beer market that accounts for 40 % of Miller's volume and in which Coors has obtained a 21.5 % share.

⁴ As an example, Coors alleges Jefferson J. Carefoote, a former old Molson employee with "intimate knowledge" of Coors' competitive strength and strategies, is now a Vice President of Miller Brewing's wholly owned subsidiary Molson USA.

[7] Thus, with the exception of the dispute between Coors and Molson over Molson's access to and use of Coors' confidential information, this antitrust action will proceed, in theory at least,⁷ unimpeded by the Canadian arbitration. See generally Block 175 Corp. v. Fairmont Hotel Management. Co., 648 F. Supp. 450, 453-54 (D. Colo. 1986) (refusing to delay discovery pending arbitration).

II. Merits

Coors claims the acquisition by Miller Brewing of an equity interest in the entity owning and controlling Old Molson will have an anticompetitive effect on the United States [8] beer market in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. (Compl., PP 46-48.) Coors claims the Miller-Molson Alliance, as well as the Coors-Old Molson Licensing Agreement now that Miller Brewing is a partner in the Alliance, are combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. (Id., PP 49-53.) Coors seeks both injunctive relief and treble damages.⁸

A. Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Defendants assert Coors' complaint should be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvement Act of 1982 ("FTAIA"), arguing Coors' claims lack the requisite [9] "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable" relationship to United States, as opposed to Canadian, commerce. Coors contends the FTAIA is inapplicable because Coors' claims do not relate exclusively to foreign commerce, but arise from domestic conduct affecting domestic trade or commerce.

The FTAIA amends the Sherman Act to provide:

§ 6a. HN1[↑] Conduct involving trade or commerce with foreign nations

Sections 1 to 7 of this title shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless--

(1) such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect--

(A) on trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations; or
 (B) on export trade or export commerce with foreign nations, of a person engaged in such trade or commerce in the United States; and

(2) such effect gives rise to a claim under the provisions of sections 1 to 7, other than this section.

If section 1 to 7 of this title apply to such conduct only because of the operation of paragraph (1)(B), then [these Acts] shall apply to such conduct only for injury to export business in the United States.

[10] 15 U.S.C. § 6a (1995 Pock Pt.).⁹

⁹ A brief history leading up to the enactment of § 6a is in order. Since the early cases involving concerted activities by shipping companies engaged in the transport of passengers and cargo to and from the United States, it has been clear that an activity partly within and partly outside the United States falls within the coverage of the United States antitrust laws. See, e.g. Thomsen v. Cayser, 243 U.S. 66, 88, 61 L. Ed. 597, 37 S. Ct. 353 (1917). Activity outside the United States, however, has long been subject to the United States' antitrust jurisdiction only if it has an anticompetitive effect inside the United States. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416 (2d Cir. 1945) ("Alcoa"). Before enactment of § 6a in 1982, the "effects test" articulated by Judge Learned Hand in Alcoa had been subject to different applications in the various circuits, becoming an "effects only"

[11] Although cases applying HN2[↑] the FTAIA are few, its "inelegant" language has been interpreted [*1398] to mean that with the exception of claims brought by domestic importers, the Sherman Act will not apply to conduct affecting foreign markets, consumers or producers unless there is also a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on the domestic market (subsection (1)(A)) or on opportunities to export from the United States ((1)(B)). P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 236'a at pp. 306-07 (1993 Supp.); see McGlinch v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 F.2d 802, 813 \(9th Cir. 1988\) (allegations of a refusal to deal in foreign markets injuring only foreign customers and plaintiff insufficient to confer antitrust jurisdiction under FTAIA); The Importers, S.A. v. Hanes Printables, Inc., 663 F. Supp. 494, 498-99 \(M.D.N.C. 1987\) (French garment distributor had no cause of action under federal antitrust laws absent evidence of injury within the United States); Liamuiga Tours v. Travel Impressions Ltd., 617 F. Supp. 920, 922-23 \(E.D.N.Y. 1985\) (court lacked jurisdictional nexus under the FTAIA where restraint of trade and conspiracy claims involved exclusively lost business [12] and anticompetitive effects in St. Kitts). Thus, HN3[↑] anticompetitive conduct confined to exports with no significant domestic spillover would fall outside the United States' antitrust jurisdiction by virtue of the FTAIA, as would anticompetitive conduct that did not significantly affect imports into the United States. Areeda & Hovenkamp, P 236'a at pp. 306-07 (1993 Supp.); see Murphy, supra n.8, at 786-91.

Given the integrated nature of the North American beer market and the fact the principal parties are American companies competing in that market, it seems a fine distinction indeed to assert defendants' alleged conduct impacts Canadian -- but not American -- markets, producers or consumers. I need not address this issue, however, because I find Coors' allegations, taken as true, establish that defendants' conduct satisfies both subsections (1)(A) and (B) of the FTAIA because it has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect not only on Coors' export trade with Canada, but also, albeit less directly, on the United States beer market and the consumers in that market.

According to Coors, the Miller-Molson Alliance subjects Coors to the Catch-22 of having either to share [13] confidential information with rival Miller Brewing or to unwind its Canadian brewing and distribution relationship with Molson. Coors asserts it has already been forced to make decisions and to alter its business strategies as a result. Coors also alleges the Alliance threatens its status as principal competitor to Miller and Anheuser-Busch in the United States beer market which, given the concentration in that market, weakens domestic competition and promotes a Miller/Anheuser-Busch duopoly. Defendants' effort to circumscribe Coors' allegations to anticompetitive effects in Canada alone ignores both Coors' allegations regarding its export activities as well as the blurred line between the domestic and foreign effects of conduct in the North American beer market. I am unpersuaded and decline to dismiss this action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.¹⁰

[14] B. Personal Jurisdiction

Canadian defendants Molson Breweries, Molson Limited and Old Molson assert Coors has failed to make prima facie showings of personal jurisdiction over them to withstand a motion to dismiss. Each contends it lacks sufficient contacts with Colorado to confer either general or specific personal [*1399] jurisdiction on this court. (Defs.' Mot. Dismiss for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction at 2-3.) Coors demurs, arguing that in suits brought under the Clayton Act, test, a "direct or substantial effects" test, a "direct and substantial effects" test, and a "some effects, regardless of whether they are intended or substantial," test. See Daniel T. Murphy, Moderating Antitrust Subject Matter Jurisdiction: The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvement Act and the Restatement of Foreign Relations Law (Revised), 54 U. Cin. L. Rev. 779, 806 \(1986\) (footnotes and citations omitted). Section 6a was Congress' attempt to temper what many perceived to be the over-application of United States antitrust laws to extraterritorial commercial conduct under the more expansive of these tests. See id. at 779, 782-84 (citations to legislative history omitted).

¹⁰ I note here the guidance provided by the American Law Institute's comprehensive restatement of United States antitrust jurisdiction law set forth in the Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law § 415 (1987). While the Restatement's "reasonableness" approach focuses on balancing United States and foreign interests, it synthesizes and reviews both the legislative and judicial efforts in the United States to control the extraterritorial application of federal antitrust laws and should prove helpful in future efforts to apply the FTAIA. See generally Reporters' Notes, § 415 pp. 288-94.

the relevant forum with which these defendants must have minimum contacts is the United States, not Colorado. (Coors' Opp. to Mot. Dismiss for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction at 7-8.) Coors contends the Molson defendants have extensive contacts with the United States by virtue of their beer sales in this country, achieved through their alliance with Miller, and their contractual relationships with Coors and others. Moreover, Coors argues, the Molson defendants have "purposely availed" themselves of this court's jurisdiction by causing antitrust injury in this forum. Id. at 12.

I reject out of hand the Molson defendants' contention that the exercise of personal jurisdiction over them in this case would [15] be "unfair," "inappropriate" and a violation of due process. (Defs.' Mot. Dismiss for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction at 2-3.) In these days of NAFTA ¹¹ [16] and a deemphasis in particular on the border between Canada and the United States, the assertion that these Canadian companies, whose products can be found on the shelves of virtually every convenience store and supermarket in Colorado and whose extensive business relationships with Miller and Coors form the basis of this litigation, lack sufficient minimum contacts with the forum to avoid "offending traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice" if they are required to defend Coors' claims here, ¹² rings hollow. At a minimum, Coors has established a prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction over each of the Molson defendants sufficient to warrant further inquiry. ¹³ Accordingly, the Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction filed by Molson Breweries, Molson Limited and Old Molson is denied.

[17] C. Antitrust Injury -- Standing

Having determined I have jurisdiction over the parties and their claims, I turn next to defendants' assertion that Coors lacks standing to obtain either injunctive relief or treble damages under the Clayton Act because it has alleged no cognizable antitrust injury. Defendants rely on Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\) and its progeny to argue the circumstances under which one competitor will have standing to maintain an antitrust action against another are "very limited" and do not exist in this case. (Miller Defs.' Mot. Dismiss at 9-10.) Where the challenged conduct is a merger or acquisition, defendants argue a mandatory element of standing is proof that the post-merger firm is likely to engage in predatory pricing. (Mot. Dismiss at 10, Reply Supp. Mot. Dismiss at 4-5.) Coors disagrees predatory pricing is the only cause of actionable antitrust injury between competitors, and maintains [*1400] its allegations are sufficient to establish both antitrust injury and standing to sue. (Coors Mem. Opp. Miller Mot. Dismiss at 18-20.)

HN4 Standing is an essential element in any private antitrust [18] action under § 4 or § 16 of the Clayton Act. Reazin v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Kansas, Inc., 899 F.2d 951, 960-61 \(10th Cir.\), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 464

¹¹ The North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) was signed into law by President Clinton on December 27, 1993. Its purpose was to expand trade and the economic relationships between Canada, Mexico and the U.S. by reducing barriers and liberalizing restraints on investment and services.

¹² See International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 90 L. Ed. 95, 66 S. Ct. 154 \(1945\).

¹³ I reject the Molson defendants' argument in their Reply that Coors has confessed the motion to dismiss by failing to refute the affidavit testimony attached to Molson's opening brief with affidavits of its own as hypertechnical. Affidavits prepared in support of Coors' Motion for Preliminary Injunction -- part of the record in this case -- contain statements by Peter Coors and Mark Stankovic recounting at least one visit to Colorado by Bruce Pope, the President and CEO of Molson Breweries (a partnership owned in part by Molson Limited), to inform Coors of Molson's decision to enter into the Alliance, see Coors Affid. at P 8; and documenting the free flow of information and communications between Old Molson and Coors in Colorado, see Stankovic Affid. at P 6. I also note an on-line review of pending cases in which the Canadian Molson defendants are parties revealed at least one case in which Molson Breweries (ergo, Molson Limited) and Old Molson have submitted to the jurisdiction of a federal court. See Labatt v. Molson Breweries, et al., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 699, No. 93-75004 (E.D. Mich. 1993) (while defendants deny minimum contacts with the forum, they do not challenge venue there). In at least two other cases, the submission by these defendants to the courts' jurisdiction is unclear. See Pearl Brewing Co. v. Miller Brewing Co., et al., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16841, No. SA-93-CA-205 (W.D. Tex. 1993) (opinion dismissing action for lack of standing published at 1993 WL 424236); Labatt v. Molson Breweries, et al., 56 F.3d 13, Nos. 93-CV-75004, 94-CV-71540 (S.D.N.Y.) (discovery ongoing).

the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the plaintiff's injury; the defendant's intent; the nature of the plaintiff's injury; the directness or the indirectness of the connection between the plaintiff's injury and the unlawful market restraint; the speculativeness of the plaintiff's damages; and the risk of duplicative recoveries or . . . the danger of complex apportionment of damages.

HN5 The "nature of the plaintiff's injury" factor implements the requirement that only antitrust injuries are redressable under § 4 of the Clayton Act. Reazin, 899 F.2d at 962, n.15. Because standing does not exist absent antitrust injury, I review the sufficiency of Coors' Complaint on this threshold issue first.

1. Antitrust Injury

HN6 "Antitrust injury" is defined, somewhat circuitously, as "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Cargill, 479 U.S. at 109 (quoting Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489). This definition reflects a fundamental principal in antitrust law that an injury, even if causally related to an antitrust violation, will not qualify as an "antitrust injury" unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under [\[20\]](#) scrutiny. Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990) (applying Cargill). The point is to prevent an award of damages for losses stemming from continued or increased competition rather than diminished competition -- a result that otherwise would be "inimical" to the antitrust laws. Cargill, 479 U.S. at 109-110 (quoting Brunswick at 488).

HN7 Where the challenged conduct is a merger or acquisition, this standard requires plaintiff to prove injury flowing from the anticompetitive or predatory nature of the merger or the postmerger entity. Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 488-89.¹⁴ [\[21\]](#) The question, then, is whether Coors has alleged antitrust injury with sufficient specificity to meet the requirements of notice pleading.¹⁵

[\[22\]](#) [\[*1401\]](#) Defendants contend predation is a necessary element of antitrust injury in antitrust actions between competitors and argue the post-acquisition Miller-Molson combination lacks the dominant market share necessary to engage in predatory conduct. Coors' "injury," they argue, would be the result not of anticompetitive conduct or anticompetitive acts made possible by such conduct, but of "tough" competition. (Miller Mem. Supp. Mot. Dismiss at 3.) Defendants contend that under these circumstances, Coors is asking this court to protect a competitor, not competition, which is the "inimical" result against which the Supreme Court has cautioned. Id. To support their conclusion, defendants cite a case in which an earlier antitrust challenge to the Miller-Molson USA transaction was rejected on the same grounds. See Pearl Brewing Co. v. Miller Brewing Co., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16841, 1993-2 Trade Cases P 70,370, 1993 WL 424236, *2-3 (W.D. Tex. 1993) (adopting magistrate judge's Recommendation), aff'd 52 F.3d 1066 (5th Cir. Aprl 6, 1995) (TABLE, No. 94-50509).

In Pearl, the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas rejected two brewers' efforts to enjoin the Miller-Molson [23] USA acquisition on grounds the plaintiff-competitors had failed to establish antitrust injury. The court found the post-acquisition Miller-Molson combination would have an insufficient share of the defined relevant market (approximately 23%) to engage in predatory conduct, and agreed with Miller's experts that the acquisition would result in increased, rather than decreased, competition. Id. at *3. Because the conduct at issue was "not activity forbidden by the antitrust laws," it could not give rise to an "antitrust injury" no matter how damaging it was to plaintiffs' business. Id. at *4 (quoting Cargill, 479 U.S. at 116).

Coors disputes Pearl applies in this case because the Alliance, viewed in light of the Coors-Molson Licensing Agreement, is anticompetitive on its face. Coors maintains the post-acquisition Miller-Molson combination by definition restrains Coors' competitive behavior, "automatically" lessening competition in the North American beer market. (Coors Mem. Opp. Miller Mot. Dismiss at 20.) According to Coors, Pearl is distinguishable because the antitrust challenge was brought by brewing companies that, unlike Coors, had no contractual relationship [24] with the entity their competitor was acquiring. (Mem. Opp. Miller Mot. Dismiss at 29 n.17.) It is this contractual relationship, Coors argues, that Miller is leveraging in this case to restrain trade, and which transforms Miller's "tough competition" into anticompetitive conduct causing antitrust injury to Coors. *Id.*¹⁶

[25] The parties' logomachy reduces to opposite views on an ultimate issue in this case, viz, whether the post-acquisition Miller-Molson Alliance has injured Coors in a way the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Coors' Complaint must stand or fall on the question of whether it has asserted factual allegations that, if proved, tend to establish an injury that flows from a threatened or actual restraint on competition. See, e.g., [*1402] Perington Wholesale, Inc. v. Burger King Corp., 631 F.2d 1369, 1372-73 (10th Cir. 1979).

While Coors' theory in this regard is less than clear, I find Coors has pleaded sufficient factual allegations to survive the present motion to dismiss. The Tenth Circuit's opinion on Molson's interlocutory appeal of Judge Matsch's denial of Molson's motion for stay, supports this conclusion.¹⁷ At this stage of the proceedings, Coors' ability to marshall the necessary facts to support its theory of antitrust injury has not been tested and dismissal is inappropriate. If Coors is unable during discovery to marshall those facts, defendants no doubt will renew their challenge to the sufficiency of Coors' claims and the issue will be revisited on a [26] motion for summary judgment.

¹⁶ Without relying on this document in ruling on the present motion to dismiss, I note Coors has come forward with an expert affidavit to support its contentions regarding the anticompetitive effects of the Alliance. In this affidavit, submitted as part of Coors' pending motion for preliminary injunction, Dr. Douglas Greer explains the nature of the United States and North American beer markets, and the parties' relevant status in those markets both generally as well as in the "premium" and "light" market segments. According to Dr. Greer, the Miller-Molson combination, considered in light of both Coors' status as "the main competitor" to Miller and Anheuser-Busch in these markets and the broad discretionary power over Coors' brands granted Molson under the Coors-Molson Licensing Agreement, "may substantially lessen competition" in the U.S. market generally and in the "premium" and "light" beer market segments in particular. See Affid. of Professor Douglas F. Greer, Ph.D. in Supp. Pl.'s Mot. Preliminary Inj., p. 3-5 (emphasis original).

2. Standing to Claim Damages

Even [27] if Coors is found to have adequately alleged antitrust injury, Miller and Molson argue Coors lacks standing to pursue a claim for treble damages because the injury Coors alleges is based on "sheer speculation" as to harm Coors "might hypothetically" suffer in the future. (Defs.' Mem. Supp. Mot. Dismiss at 14.) This argument is not without merit. As I review the record, I find few allegations that the Alliance has resulted in actual harm to Coors. The gist of Coors' Clayton Act claim for damages is that the Alliance's effect "may be substantially to lessen competition in the United States [and North American] beer market[s]." Compl., P 47.

Again, however, I am reluctant to dismiss Coors' claim without first giving it an opportunity to develop and refine its theory of antitrust injury. In its Complaint, Coors alleges the Alliance threatens to preclude it from implementing unified competitive strategies in the North American market except at the mercy of Miller and Molson, and alleges this threat has had a "current tangible impact" on its operations. (Coors' Mem. Opp. Mot. Dismiss at 18.) Coors asserts it has been forced to make choices, investments and plans it would not otherwise [28] have made in order to protect itself from the threat it perceives is presented by the Alliance.¹⁸ See id. at 27-31; Coors' Compl., PP 7-10, 40, 44, 45, 48, 53. These assertions, if true, create an inference that Coors has suffered actual harm from the allegedly anticompetitive conduct of Miller and Molson.

I also find Coors has satisfied the other factors to be considered in an evaluation of antitrust standing. Coors has alleged a causal connection between its injuries and the defendants' allegedly anticompetitive conduct, and has alleged facts from which anticompetitive intent can be inferred. See n.3, supra. Given the unique [29] factual underpinnings of Coors' claims and the limited number of parties involved, there appears to be little risk of duplicative recoveries or the need for complex damages apportionment as would militate against conferring standing in this case. Under these circumstances, I find Coors has satisfied the requirements articulated in Cargill and deny defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of standing.

D. Sufficiency of Coors' Claims Under Rule 12(b)(6)

Finally, defendants assert Coors' Complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. As grounds, defendants argue Coors has [*1403] alleged injury only to itself, and not to competition as is a prerequisite to any action under the antitrust laws. Because antitrust standing cannot be established without antitrust injury, Sharp v. United Airlines, 967 F.2d at 406, my finding that Coors's Complaint cannot, at this stage of the proceedings, be dismissed for lack of standing necessarily disposes of defendants' arguments. Again, if Coors is unable during discovery to marshall facts to support its theory of antitrust injury, defendants will be free to renew their challenge. No further comment on [30] the question of antitrust injury is required.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, lack of standing and failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, in which all defendants join, is DENIED, and the motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, in which the Canadian Molson defendants join, is also DENIED.

Dated this 5th day of June, 1995, at Denver, Colorado.

U.S. SENIOR DISTRICT COURT JUDGE

¹⁸ For example, Coors asserts the Miller-Molson Alliance has already affected competition in the U.S. market by preventing Coors from pursuing an intention of using Molson to brew Coors beer in Canada for import into certain areas of the U.S. where it would be cost-effective to do so, e.g., northern New England. The existence of a private cause of action for damages does not inherently include the right to prosecute that cause of action in a class action lawsuit. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 and Cal. Civ. Proc. However, problems that might make a class action inappropriate in a particular case do not undermine the individual cause of action of the governmental entity provided by the Cartwright Act, [Cal. The plain language of the Cartwright Act, [Cal. This includes the option to proceed on a class action basis when the trial court certifies that such basis is appropriate in the particular lawsuit. Neither [§ 16750\(c\) nor § 16750\(g\), individually or read together, limits the prosecution of the § 16750\(a\) cause of action. They simply provide a further mechanism by which anticompetitive activity may be attacked.

[*1396] [\[603\]](#) VARTABEDIAN, J.

Appellant Pacific Gas and Electric Company is defendant in an antitrust class action pending in federal court. Respondent County of Stanislaus (the county) is a named plaintiff in that class action. The present case involves appellant's attempt pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 526a to prohibit respondents from expending any funds to prosecute the federal court action. The trial court sustained respondents' demurrer to appellant's complaint without leave to amend. We affirm.

FACTS AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On December 3, 1993, the county and a residential customer of appellant filed a class action complaint in the United States District Court, Eastern District of California. The complaint alleged violations of various federal statutes ¹ [3] and the California Cartwright and Unfair Practices Acts. ² The complaint challenges the mechanism by which appellant contracts for the purchase of Canadian natural gas.

In response, appellant filed its state court complaint for injunctive and declaratory relief on February 9, 1994. That complaint, filed pursuant to [Code of Civil Procedure \[6041 section 526a\]](#), ³ [4] named as defendants the county, its board of supervisors, and each county supervisor individually (collectively, respondents). The complaint alleges that Business and Professions Code section 16750 ⁴ only permits the county to sue concerning acts which occurred or have their effects primarily within the county. The complaint further alleges the county usurped the sovereignty of the class-member counties by prosecuting an action on their behalf. Respondents demurred to the complaint.

The trial court heard the demurrer on March 24, 1994. By written order filed May 3, 1994, the court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. [*1397] Judgment was entered on May 11, 1994. Appellant filed its notice of appeal on June 9, 1994.

DISCUSSION

Appellant contends that section 16750, in net effect, permits the county to file a multi-county class action antitrust suit only if the county is represented by the Attorney General. Respondents contend section 16750 does not limit a county's right to proceed with a class action through counsel of its own choosing. ⁵

[5] We will begin by setting out the historical development of section 16750 and related sections; we will then discuss the meaning of section 16750. We will conclude that respondents' interpretation of section 16750 is correct: there is no requirement that the county's class action be prosecuted by the Attorney General.

² The Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) is the California counterpart of federal antitrust laws. The Unfair Practices Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 et seq.) prohibits "unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive, fraudulent and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17001.)

³ Code of Civil Procedure section 526a provides, in relevant part: "An action to obtain a judgment, restraining and preventing any illegal expenditure of, waste of, or injury to, the estate, funds, or other property of a county, town, city or city and county of the state, may be maintained against any officer thereof, or any agent, or other person, acting in its behalf, either by a citizen resident therein, or by a corporation, who is assessed for and is liable to pay, or, within one year before the commencement of the action, has paid, a tax therein."

⁴ All further statutory references are to the Business and Professions Code except when otherwise indicated.

⁵ Due to the nature of the issue presented, the court invited the Attorney General to appear in this appeal as amicus curiae. He accepted the invitation and filed a letter brief on April 11, 1995. That brief states that "although the matter is not free from doubt, the Attorney General has exclusive authority to bring statewide class actions for treble damages under state and federal antitrust laws on behalf of political subdivisions and other public agencies of the state." We address specific arguments in the amicus brief at various points below.

A. THE STATUTORY BACKGROUND.

The Cartwright Act was enacted in 1907. (Stats. 1907, ch. 530, p. 984.) The initial statutory authority for a civil damages action was enacted in 1941. (Stats. 1941, ch. 526, § 1, p. 1834.) The current statutory authorization for treble damages was enacted in 1959. (Stats. 1959, ch. 2078, § 1, p. 4811.) As amended in that year, section 16750 provided, in relevant part: "Any person who is injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter, may sue therefor in any court having jurisdiction in the county where the defendant resides or is found, or any agent resides or is found, or where service may be obtained, without respect to the amount in controversy, and to recover three times the damages sustained by him, and shall be awarded a reasonable attorneys' fee together with the costs [6] of the suit...."

In 1961, the foregoing section was renumbered as subdivision (a) and subdivisions (b) and (c) were added to section 16750, as follows (Stats. 1961, ch. 1023, § 1, p. 2705):

"(b) The state and any of its political subdivisions and public agencies shall be deemed a person within the meaning of this section.

[*1398] "(c) The Attorney General may bring an action on behalf of the state or of any of its political subdivisions or public agencies to recover the damages provided for by this section, or by any comparable provision of federal law, provided that the Attorney General shall notify in writing any political subdivision or public agency of his intention to bring any such action on its behalf, [605] and at any time within 30 days thereafter, such political subdivision or public agency may, by formal resolution of its governing body or as otherwise specifically provided by applicable law, withdraw the authority of the Attorney General to bring the intended action...."

In addition to the codified sections of chapter 1023, Statutes of 1961, section 2 of the statute provided: "Subdivision (b) is added to this section section 16750 for the purpose of clarification [7] only and is not to be construed or interpreted as an indication that the State or any of its political subdivisions or public agencies is not a person within the meaning of Section 16750 as originally enacted in Chapter 530 of the Statutes of 1907 and as subsequently amended. The Legislature hereby further declares that at the time of the original enactment of Section 16750, and at all times since, it intended that the State, its political subdivisions and public agencies be included within the meaning of the word 'person.' "

Also in 1961, the Legislature repealed and replaced section 16754. (Stats. 1961, ch. 757, § 1, p. 2013.) That section previously authorized the Attorney General and the district attorney to initiate forfeiture actions for violations of the Cartwright Act. (Stats. 1941, ch. 526, § 1, p. 1834.) The 1961 revision provided: "The Attorney General, or the district attorney of any county, on the order of the Attorney General, shall initiate civil actions or criminal proceedings for violation of this chapter. Civil actions and criminal proceedings for violation of this chapter initiated by the Attorney General or on his order may be brought in the superior court [8] in and for any county where the offense or any part thereof is committed or where any of the offenders reside or where any corporate defendant does business."

From 1961 until 1977, there were amendments to section 16750, but the above quoted subdivisions were essentially unchanged. One 1972 amendment bears mention, however. Chapter 1140, section 1, Statutes of 1972, added subdivision (d) to section 16750, as follows: "(d) In any antitrust action brought on behalf of the state in which the Attorney General is the class representative of political subdivisions, public agencies, or citizens of the state who have been affected by the matters set forth in the complaint, the state shall retain for deposit in the Attorney General antitrust account within the General Fund, the proceeds, if any, of any attorneys' fees awarded [*1399] by the court in which such case is located, to the Attorney General, resulting from such class representation."

In 1977, there were further amendments to section 16750, although the previously quoted subdivisions remained unchanged. (See Stats. 1977, ch. 540, § 1, pp. 1741, 1743-1744.) Among the 1977 amendments were the following additions to section [9] 16750:

"(g) The district attorney of any county may prosecute any action on behalf of such county or any city or public agency or political subdivision located wholly within such county which the Attorney General is authorized to bring pursuant to subdivision (c) of this section, whenever it appears that the activities giving rise to such prosecution or the effects of such activities occur primarily within such county.... In any investigation or action undertaken or brought by a district attorney pursuant to this section, if the Attorney General deems it necessary and in the public interest, the Attorney General may take full charge of any such investigation or prosecution, ..." "

"(i) In any action brought pursuant to subdivision (g) a district attorney may represent any political subdivision located within his [or her] county directly, in which case he [or she] shall notify in writing such political subdivision of his [or her] intention to bring any such action on its behalf, and at any time within 30 days thereafter, such political subdivision may, by formal resolution of its governing body or as otherwise specifically provided by applicable law, withdraw the authority of [10] the district attorney to bring the intended action. In any action in which a district attorney directly represents any political subdivision located within his county, the district attorney shall retain out of the proceeds [a certain *606] amount]. In any action brought pursuant to subdivision (g) in which the county, through the district attorney, is the class representative of political subdivisions located within such county, the district attorney shall retain [any attorneys' fees awarded by the court]...."

In addition to the foregoing amendments to section 16750, the Legislature also enacted section 16760 in 1977. (Stats. 1977, ch. 543, § 1, pp. 1747-1748.) That section, in relevant part, provides:

"(a)(1) The Attorney General may bring a civil action in the name of the people of the State of California, as parens patriae on behalf of natural persons residing in the state, in the superior court of any county which has jurisdiction of a defendant, to secure monetary relief as provided in this [*1400] section for injury sustained by such natural persons to their property by reason of any violation of this chapter...."

"....

"(g) The district attorney of any county may prosecute [11] any action on behalf of the natural persons residing in such county which the Attorney General is authorized to bring pursuant to subdivision (a) whenever it appears that the activities giving rise to such prosecution or the effects of such activities occur primarily within such county...."

B. APPLICATION OF CODE SECTIONS IN THE PRESENT CASE.

In applying section 16750 to the facts before us, we seek to vindicate the legislative intent underlying that section. "HN1 'In determining intent, we look first to the words [of the statute] themselves. [Citations.] When the language is clear and unambiguous, there is no need for construction. [Citations.] When the language is susceptible of more than one reasonable interpretation, however, we look to a variety of extrinsic aids, including the ostensible objects to be achieved, the evils to be remedied, the legislative history, public policy, contemporaneous administrative construction, and the statutory scheme of which the statute is a part. [Citations.]' " ([Granberry v. Islay Investments \(1995\) 9 Cal.4th 738, 744 \[38 Cal.Rptr.2d 650, 889 P.2d 970\]](#), quoting from [People v. Woodhead \(1987\) 43 Cal.3d 1002, 1007-1008 \[239 F.2d 121 Cal.Rptr. 656, 741 P.2d 154\]](#)).

In the present case, determination of whether section 16750 is clear on its face or is instead ambiguous, thus necessitating construction and interpretation, requires that we first provide a historical or political context for the language the Legislature has chosen to use. This context is provided by focusing on the nature of the offices of Attorney General and district attorney.

Fundamentally, both offices have a dual character. (See State of Fla. ex rel. Shevin v. Exxon Corp. \(5th Cir. 1976\) 526 F.2d 266, 268 [historical overview of office of Attorney General].) First, each is the attorney for the government, whether at the state or local level. Thus, for example, the Attorney General is the legal adviser to all state departments in matters relating to the department or the powers and duties of its officers. (Gov. Code, § 11157; see also Gov. Code, § 11040- 11041.) Similarly, the district attorney "shall render legal services to the county without fee and may render legal services to school districts and to other local public entities as [*1401] requested. . . ." (Gov. Code, § 26520).⁶ We will refer to this as the "government [13] [607] lawyer" function of the Attorney General and the district attorney.

[14] In their other capacity, by contrast, the Attorney General and the district attorney are public officials invested with the powers of the sovereign; they act directly and on behalf of the public. The most obvious example of this power is in bringing criminal prosecutions in the name of the People. While the district attorney's staff is "the lawyer" for the People, there is no "client" who must be consulted or obeyed. (In a significant sense, the district attorney is both "client" and "lawyer.")

There are other examples of sovereign power vested in the Attorney General or district attorney. The district attorney may file an action to abate a nuisance in his county. (Gov. Code, § 26528) The Attorney General may institute actions in the name of the state or a state agency concerning title, boundaries or possession of real property in which the state has an interest. (Gov. Code, § 12518) Closer to the subject of the present case, the Attorney General may bring an action "in the name of the people of the State of California, as parens patriae on behalf of natural persons residing in the state" to recover damages for violations of the Cartwright Act. (§ 16760, subd. (a)(1).) The [15] district attorney has the same power to prosecute such actions "on behalf of the natural persons residing in such county." (§ 16760, subd. (g).) We will refer to this as the "public official" function of the Attorney General and district attorney.

Thus, the Attorney General and the district attorney in some instances function as lawyers for actual clients, i.e., the state or political subdivisions [*1402] thereof, and sometimes they function as public officials in their own right.⁷ The primary difference, for present purposes, is that in the first instance the client decides whether to litigate or to settle. In the second instance, the Attorney General or the district attorney exercises the statutory discretion to litigate or to settle.

[16] Recognition of these two different historical roles is necessary to properly discern the legislative intent embodied in section 16750. When section 16750 is viewed as addressing only the "public official" Attorney General or district attorney--that is, the official who directly exercises statutory power and who does not have an actual "client" in any traditional sense--the legislative intent becomes clear and unambiguous. Ambiguity and the need for statutory construction appear only if we try, as appellant does, to apply the language of section 16750 to the "government attorney" function of the Attorney General and the district attorney.

The focus of the Legislature on the "public official" role of the Attorney General and the district attorney is reflected in the language used in section 16750. For example, the Attorney General must "notify in writing any political subdivision or public agency of his or her intention to bring any such action on its behalf" (§ 16750, subd. \(c\).) Thus, the initial decision to bring suit lies with the Attorney General, not with the injured entity. This "on behalf of"

⁶ County counsel serves as legal adviser to the county if the county has created such position. (Gov. Code, § 26526) Further, "whenever the board of supervisors appoints a county counsel pursuant to this chapter, he shall discharge all the duties vested by law in the district attorney other than those of a public prosecutor." (Gov. Code, § 27642) In the federal class action, the county is represented by county counsel and by private counsel. To the extent the county has an independent right of action under section 16750, subdivisions \(a\) and \(b\), appellant does not contend county counsel and private counsel are inappropriate attorneys for the county. Appellant simply disagrees there is such a right of action in the present circumstances. Appellant does argue that the section 16750, subdivision \(g\) powers of the district attorney cannot be exercised by county counsel pursuant to Government Code section 27642. Because we hold that the power to prosecute the Cartwright Act class action arises from section 16750, subdivision \(a\), and not section 16750, subdivision \(g\), we need not reach appellant's contention. The right to sue under federal antitrust laws is conferred by those laws. (See, e.g., [Georgia v. Evans \(1942\) 316 U.S. 159, 162 \[86 L. Ed. 1346, 1350, 62 S.Ct. 972\]](#).)

language again appears in section 16760, the parens patriae section, where [17] the Attorney General even more clearly acts as a “public official,” not as the lawyer for a government entity.

A further example of the “public official” orientation of the legislation is found in the requirement that the Attorney General retain any attorney fees awarded in an action “in which the Attorney General is the class representative of political subdivisions, public agencies, or citizens of the state” (§ 16750, subd. \(d\).) This phrasing contemplates that the Attorney General “is” the class representative, i.e., the party plaintiff. The district attorney is likewise required to retain such fees in any action “in which the county, through the district attorney, is the class representative” (§ 16750, subd. \(i\).)

This unambiguous reference in section 16750 to the “public official” function of the [608] Attorney General and the district attorney is confirmed when [*1403] we look at the informal legislative history of section 16750. Although the materials submitted by respondents from the legislative author's file are very weak indications of legislative intent and by no means have dictated our conclusions in this case, the materials provide some confirmation that [18] our plain reading of the statutes is not misguided. (Cf. [Producers Dairy Delivery Co. v. Sentry Ins. Co. \(1986\) 41 Cal.3d 903, 914 \[226 Cal.Rptr. 558, 718 P.2d 920\]](#) [statutes as confirming plain language of insurance policy].)

In an early staff explanation of the proposed 1961 amendment to section 16750, we find: “[T]he bill would authorize the Attorney General to bring damage actions on behalf and in the name of public subdivisions and public agencies of the State, as well as of the State itself. The need for such standing authority was recently demonstrated in the case now pending to recover treble damages on behalf of more than 100 school districts throughout the State. For want of existing authority, it was necessary to contact each school district which had been injured and to secure individual resolutions authorizing the Attorney General to act on behalf of such district.” (Author file, document 2, p. 3.)

The foregoing reflects that, prior to the 1961 amendments, the Attorney General already exercised the authority to serve as “government lawyer” for governmental clients in antitrust actions; the proposed legislation conferred “public official” status on the Attorney [19] General independently to bring such actions in the name of the injured agency or political entity. This duality is reflected again in a questionnaire prepared by the author of the amendments: “The bill is permissive only. It does not curtail or restrict the authority of any local agency of government from independently bringing its own action whenever it desires.” (Author file, document 3, pp. 2-3.)

The amendments to section 16750, as originally introduced in the Legislature, omitted the proviso now contained in the first sentence of section 16750, subdivision \(c\).⁸ A critic of the proposed legislation, general counsel for the Sacramento Municipal Utility District, E. R. Davis, objected by letter to the bill's author that the “bill presumably would enable the Attorney [*1404] General to bring a suit for damages in antitrust matters with or without the concurrence of the public agency.... However, public agencies ... in the utility business [] would want to make their own decision whether antitrust claims should be pursued.” (Letter dated Mar. 28, 1961, addressed to Wallace Howland, Assistant Attorney General.) Davis suggested as an alternative “that the Attorney General [20] may bring the action unless there is objection by the public agency.” (Ibid.) Such language was added by amendment to the bill and is now contained in section 16750.

Thus, the plain language of section 16750 and the available legislative [21] history both confirm that the Legislature, in amending section 16750 in 1961, (a) did not intend to alter the then existing ability of local governments to institute antitrust actions through their own lawyers and did not alter the ability of the Attorney General's office to serve as such lawyers for the local entity;⁹ and (b) did [609] intend to vest in the Attorney General the power to exercise, within limits, the right of state and local governmental entities to bring suit for antitrust violations.

⁸That sentence now reads: “The Attorney General may bring an action on behalf of the state or of any of its political subdivisions or public agencies to recover the damages provided for by this section, or by any comparable provision of federal law, provided that the Attorney General shall notify in writing any political subdivision or public agency of his or her intention to bring any such action on its behalf, and at any time within 30 days thereafter, such political subdivision or public agency may, by formal resolution of its governing body or as otherwise specifically provided by applicable law, withdraw the authority of the Attorney General to bring the intended action.” The portion set out in boldface was not contained in the amendments as originally proposed.

Similarly, in the 1977 [22] amendments, some of the "public official" power of the Attorney General was delegated to the district attorney. Thus where the anti-competitive "activities ... or effects of such activities" are local in nature, the district attorney may bring suit in the name of local governments, subject to divestment of that authority by the local government on written notice or by the Attorney General when "necessary and in the public interest."¹⁰

[23] Having reviewed the duality of the "government lawyer" and "public official" functions of the Attorney General and the district attorney underlying the language and legislative history of section 16750, we return to appellant's primary argument on appeal and the erroneous premise of the argument. Appellant summarizes its argument, as follows: "The state, its [*1405] political subdivisions and public agencies have standing to sue as plaintiffs, but the Cartwright Act vests the authority to represent these entities in the Attorney General. In other words, public agencies have a right to claim damages under the act, but this right can only be enforced by the Attorney General. In 1977 the legislature delegated a segment of the Attorney General's exclusive representation authority to district attorneys who were allowed to file local antitrust actions after notice to the Attorney General. But the Cartwright Act remains steadfast that only the Attorney General can file statewide antitrust actions in state or federal court."

We conclude that section 16750 has nothing to do with "representation" of governmental entities by the Attorney General. Instead, such representation [24] in antitrust actions initiated by local government is governed by general statutory law and common law permitting the Attorney General and district attorney to represent governmental entities in litigation and by general statutory provisions governing the hiring of outside counsel by local entities. (See, e.g., Gov. Code, § 31000.) Rather than regulating representation, section 16750 creates in the Attorney General and the district attorney the authority to exercise, within limits, the governmental power to sue for antitrust injuries to the governmental entity and to settle such suits in the public interest.¹¹

[25] It is true, as appellant argues, that subdivisions (c), (d), and (i) of section 16750 contemplate that the Attorney General and the district attorney may bring an action as either a class action or as an ordinary lawsuit. Also, subdivision (i) only permits a district attorney to file a class action on behalf of governmental entities within his or her county. But the distinction being drawn in subdivision (i) only concerns the power of the district attorney in his or her "public official" capacity--i.e., the degree of such power delegated by the 1977 amendments from the Attorney General (and, thus, in turn from the body politic) to the district attorney, namely the power to act "on his own" on behalf of the government. This transfer of power from the Attorney General to the district attorney did not remove from any governmental entity its own power to commence an antitrust action; that power was preserved to the governmental entities in the 1961 amendments. [610] The 1977 amendments only took part of the power the Attorney General had obtained in 1961 and further delegated that power to the district attorney.

⁹We find nothing at all implausible or absurd, as suggested by amicus curiae, about a statutory scheme that reserves to the local elective governing body the determination to use local resources to sue on a statutory cause of action. Such power is normal for a local governing body. (See Gov. Code, § 23005 ["A county may exercise its powers only through the board of supervisors or through agents and officers acting under authority of the board or authority conferred by law".].)

¹¹This statutory scheme finds a parallel in section 16760. There, individuals retain all rights to sue for individual violations of antitrust laws, but the Attorney General and the district attorney are given concurrent power to sue on behalf and in the name of such individuals as a class. The creation of a concurrent power in the Attorney General or the district attorney does not divest individuals of the initial power to file suit on their own behalf, nor to "opt out" of such a suit, just as the local entity can under section 16750. (See § 16760, subd. (b)(2); see [Bruno v. Superior Court \(1981\) 127 Cal.App.3d 120, 133 \[179 Cal.Rptr. 342\]](#).)

[*1406] This view of section 16750 as addressing only the "public official" [26] function of the Attorney General and the district attorney, and not their "government lawyer" function, provides a cohesive framework for understanding section 16750 and its legislative history. Appellant and amicus curiae argue, however, that any interpretation that permits an individual county or other entity to sue as class representative for other counties or local entities would present the risk of a county running amok, doing violence to statewide antitrust policy. Appellant paints a picture of every mosquito abatement district in the state engaging in class actions about which they cannot reasonably expect to exercise competent judgment. Amicus curiae states that only the Attorney General "has the duty and expertise to coordinate antitrust enforcement on a statewide basis, ..."

The answer to these concerns lies in the law of class actions, however, and not in the law conferring upon local governments rights under the antitrust laws. Issues about a litigant's ability to provide adequate legal representation for the class or to tender claims typical of the class are part of the decisionmaking matrix of the trial court in determining whether to certify a particular action as [27] a class action. (See Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., rule 23, especially (b)(2), (c), (e); [City of San Jose v. Superior Court \(1974\) 12 Cal.3d 447, 453 \[115 Cal.Rptr. 797, 525 P.2d 701, 76 A.L.R.3d 1223\]](#) California procedures to be guided by federal [rule 23 procedures].) Provisions governing "(b)(3)" class actions such as this one require notice to class members, the opportunity to opt out of the class and other protection for class members not found in section 16750. (See Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., rule 23\(c\) and \(e\).)

HN2 [↑] In summary, on the one hand, the existence of a private cause of action for damages does not inherently include the right to prosecute that cause of action in a class action lawsuit; Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 23 and Code of Civil Procedure section 382 are the basis for the right to bring a class action. On the other hand, problems that might make a class action inappropriate in a particular case do not undermine the individual cause of action of the governmental entity provided by the Cartwright Act; those problems are to be addressed as provided by the body of class action law.¹²

[28] This brings us to appellant's next argument, that the county has no independent power to bring an antitrust action under the Cartwright Act apart from the limited standing it says is conferred by subdivisions (c) and [*1407] (g) of section 16750. Appellant says People ex rel. Freitas v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, 92 Cal.App.3d 913 and County of San Luis Obispo v. Abalone Alliance (1986) 178 Cal.App.3d 848 [223 Cal.Rptr. 846] stand for the proposition that Government Code section 23004, which provides that a county may "sue or be sued," does not give the county independent power to sue under the Cartwright Act.

Government Code section 23004 does not, of itself, create any cause of action, under the Cartwright Act or otherwise. Government Code section 23004 merely makes the county a proper party in a lawsuit. That is the meaning of Freitas and Abalone Alliance. Freitas holds that a city and county is not a "person" made liable under the Cartwright Act by section 16702, and the fact that it may "be sued" pursuant to Government Code section 23004 does not, in itself, create liability. Yet Freitas specifically notes that the Cartwright [29] Act does make a city or county a "person" who can be injured and can sue under Government Code section 16750, subdivision \(b\). (People ex rel. Freitas v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, 92 Cal.App.3d at p. 920.)

Abalone Alliance merely holds that a county must have a recognized cause of action on which to sue, even though it is given a [611] generalized capacity to sue by Government Code section 23004. (County of San Luis Obispo v. Abalone Alliance, supra, 178 Cal.App.3d at pp. 860-861.) Accordingly, Abalone Alliance is inapplicable here, since the county does have a cause of action under section 16750, subdivisions \(a\) and \(b\) of the Cartwright Act, upon which it has sued pursuant to the capacity to sue set forth in Government Code section 23004.

The interpretation of section 16750 outlined above is coherent and in keeping with the language of that section and the available legislative history. Appellant's interpretation is not. For example, consider a five-county emergency medical services agency established pursuant to section 1797 et seq. of the Health and Safety Code. If ambulance companies in that five-county area conspired to fix the price [30] for emergency services charged to each county, the activities and effects would not be "primarily in" any single county. Under appellant's interpretation, neither the district attorney nor the counties involved could sue the ambulance providers; only the Attorney General would be able to bring the action under section 16750, subdivision \(c\).

We find nothing in the statutory scheme that would leave counties and other local governmental entities wholly subject to the discretion of the [*1408] Attorney General to provide representation in the circumstances just described. Nor can we conceive of any public policy reason that would permit the ambulance companies' anti-competitive activity to continue just because the Attorney General had insufficient resources to address the matter.

Yet such a situation is a necessary component of appellant's interpretation of the statute. That interpretation is not limited to class actions, but instead would divide the universe of permissible antitrust litigation by local governments, whether by class action or not, into just two fields, activities with sufficient "statewide effect" to attract the Attorney General's interest and those "primarily [31] in one county," which the district attorney may address. As we have seen, there are important examples of anti-competitive action, such as that involving the hypothetical regional emergency medical services authority, that may fit into neither category. We believe an interpretation that does not leave gaping holes in the enforcement structure more probably reflects the intent of the Legislature.

Notwithstanding the ample reasons supporting our interpretation of section 16750, there is an inconsistency between that interpretation and section 16754. Section 16754, it will be recalled, provides in relevant part: "The Attorney General, or the district attorney of any county ... shall initiate civil actions or criminal proceedings for violation of this chapter. Civil actions and criminal proceedings for violation of this chapter initiated by the Attorney General or district attorney may be brought in the superior court in and for any county where the offense or any part thereof is committed or where any of the offenders reside or where any corporate defendant does business...."

We are unable to find any straightforward meaning for the use of "shall" in the first sentence of section [32] 16754. It is obvious that the sentence does not mean, "Only the attorney general or the district attorney shall initiate civil actions" This reading would preclude civil actions by private persons, whose rights are created in the same subdivision of section 16750 that, indistinguishably, creates the rights of governmental entities. (See § 16750, subd. \(a\).)

Clearly, the first sentence of section 16754 does not mean, "The attorney general or the district attorney shall, upon request of a government entity, initiate civil actions" Where the Legislature has imposed a mandatory duty on government lawyers, it has done so explicitly: "The district attorney may, and when directed by the board of supervisors shall, bring a civil action in the name of the people of the State of California to abate a public nuisance in his county." (Gov. Code, § 26528.)

[*1409] In examining the prior version of section 16754 that was replaced in 1961 with, essentially, the present version, we find the use of "shall" IN A MORE INTELLIGIBLE CONTEXT: "[612] Every person who violates this chapter shall for each day that such violations are committed or continued, after due notice given by the Attorney [33] General or any district attorney, forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars ($ 50), which may be recovered in the name of the people of this State in any county where the offense is committed, or where either of the offenders resides. The Attorney General, or the district attorney ... shall prosecute for the recovery of the forfeit. When the action is prosecuted by the Attorney General against a corporation or an association of persons, he may begin the action in the superior court in and for the county where the defendant resides or does business." (See Stats. 1941, ch. 526, § 1 p. 1837.)

The most plausible explanation for the present use of “shall” is that the 1961 amendment was drafted by the “blue pencil” method, where unnecessary language from the old section is stricken through and the necessary new language is inserted. Thus, in 1961, at the same time the Attorney General was permitted to sue on behalf of local government entities, forfeiture was deleted as an available enforcement mechanism; the first sentence of the old section 16754 was therefore stricken out. The remaining sentences of the old section 16754 were modified by inserting “initiate civil actions or criminal [34] proceedings” instead of “prosecute for the recovery of the forfeit,” in order to make section 16754 a general venue state for antitrust suits brought by the government. In other words, the first sentence, including the use of the word “shall,” became surplusage. “Shall” meant neither “must,” as it had in the phrase “shall prosecute for recovery of the forfeit,” nor did it mean “only the attorney general shall ...” because there is no textual or historical support for such a meaning. We conclude that the first sentence of section 16754 simply means: “The attorney general, or the district attorney of any county ... shall, when appropriate, initiate civil actions or criminal proceedings for violation of this chapter.”

The legislative history of section 16754 confirms this interpretation. The Legislative Counsel's Digest of Assembly Bill No. 894, which enacted the 1961 amendments to section 16754, states that the bill “provides for venue of actions brought under [statutes prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade] under certain circumstances.” The bill questionnaire states that the bill “clarifies and establishes the venue of all actions, either civil or criminal, for [35] violation of the Cartwright Act brought by the Attorney General or by a District Attorney” As the bill memorandum dated June 8, 1961, to Governor Edmund G. Brown states: “The venue provision was mainly for the purpose of giving the Superior Courts jurisdiction in criminal Cartwright [*1410] cases rather than the Municipal Courts as presently provided.” Nothing in the legislative history of section 16754 indicates it was intended to restrict the ability of local governments to prosecute civil antitrust actions in their own behalves and with their own resources.

For the reasons we have expressed, we conclude that HN3[] the plain language of section 16750, subdivisions \(a\) and \(b\), permits counties and other governmental entities with the capacity to sue to bring and prosecute Cartwright Act actions on an equal footing with any other “person.” This includes the option to proceed on a class action basis when the trial court certifies that such basis is appropriate in the particular lawsuit. Neither subdivision (c) nor (g) of section 16750, individually or read together, limits the prosecution of the subdivision (a) cause of action. Subdivisions (c) and (g) simply provide a further [36] mechanism by which anti-competitive activity may be attacked.

In determining whether a complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), the Court must limit its consideration to the facts alleged in the complaint. Moreover, in its examination of the complaint, the Court is required to accept all of the allegations contained therein and all inferences arising therefrom as true. The Supreme Court has expressly stated that motions to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) should be granted very sparingly in antitrust cases. In antitrust cases, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly. Thus, plaintiff is not required to plead all of the facts in support of his antitrust claims, as much of this evidence will likely be unearthed during discovery.

This Court is bound by the rule that an antitrust claim should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim, unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle it to relief. Conclusory allegations are sufficient if they provide an outline or notice of the antitrust violation charged. The allegations state the outlines of a tying arrangement, an economic boycott of the defendants' competitors, and an attempt to monopolize commerce, all unlawful under the antitrust statutes. Similarly, allegations of fact and conclusory statements of the pleader must be taken into account when deciding whether a claim for relief has been stated.

A violation of Section I of the Sherman Act for a contract, combination or conspiracy to unlawfully restrain trade requires a showing of: that defendants contracted, combined or conspired among each other; that the contract or conspiracy produced adverse anticompetitive effects with the relevant product and geographic markets; that the objects of the conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that contract or conspiracy.

The elements of a monopolization claim in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act include: the possession of monopoly power in a relevant market, and willful acquisition or maintenance of that power in an exclusionary manner.

Attempted monopolization is a lesser included offense to a claim of monopolization under section 2 of the Sherman Act. A claimant must merely allege that the defendant has a dangerous probability of achieving a monopoly in the relevant market. The federal courts have held that a dangerous probability of success can be satisfied by a showing of market share in excess of fifty percent.

intentional interference with that expectancy; in the absence of interference, the reasonably probability that the claimant would have received the anticipated economic benefit; and damages resulting from the defendant's interference.

WOLIN, District Judge

This matter is before the Court on the motion of plaintiff to dismiss defendant's counterclaims pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. For the reasons set forth herein, plaintiff's motion will be denied in part and granted in part.

BACKGROUND

This lawsuit was initiated by Lucas UK and Lucas USA ("Lucas") alleging that Kendiesel, Inc. and the other defendants were selling counterfeit Lucas products in violation of Lucas' trademark rights. Kendiesel filed a four-part counterclaim alleging that Lucas has violated the antitrust laws and tortiously interfered with Kendiesel's prospective economic advantage.

Lucas [*2] sells diesel fuel injection systems to diesel engine manufacturers for use in their engines. These fuel injection systems are incompatible with fuel injection systems designed for other diesel engines. Likewise, diesel fuel injection pumps and parts designed for Lucas systems are not ready substitutes for diesel fuel injection pumps and parts designed for other fuel injection systems.

Aftermarkets exist for the distribution and sale of replacement diesel fuel injection pumps and parts for Lucas branded fuel injection systems and for the repair of such systems.

Kendiesel is one of a handful of United States distributors of replacement diesel fuel injection pumps and parts for Lucas branded pumps. Kendiesel is not a manufacturer or engaged in the retail business of servicing or repairing such systems. Rather, Kendiesel sells replacement pumps and parts to (1) authorized Lucas service distributors ("SDs") and (2) independent service shops. Kendiesel receives replacement pumps and parts from current or former original equipment manufacturers and from foreign subsidiaries of Lucas.

Lucas controls 75% of the market for sale of replacement diesel fuel injection pumps and parts. (Lucas [*3] Br. at 4). Lucas admits candidly that Kendiesel is one of Lucas USA's leading competitors in the sale of replacement pumps and parts. (Lucas Br. at 4).

Lucas has entered into contractual relationships with each of the SDs to create a nationwide network of authorized service distributors. The contracts provide that Lucas will provide the SDs with technical literature to aid in their repairs, if the SDs agree not to disclose the technical literature to anyone else. The contracts also provide that in return for receiving the technical literature, the SDs agree to buy all of their replacement pumps and parts only from Lucas and to use only products purchased from Lucas in the course of their repairs of the Lucas fuel-injection systems. Further, Lucas conditions the sale of replacement pumps to the SDs upon the SDs agreeing to purchase all of their replacement parts from Lucas. Lucas also has required its foreign subsidiary to cease selling any Lucas pumps or parts to Kendiesel and other independent distributors.

Kendiesel alleges that the contracts with the SDs cutoff Kendiesel's main source of customers and that the agreement with the foreign subsidiary effectively cuts-off one of Kendiesel's [*4] main sources of supply. Kendiesel alleges that Lucas is unlawfully attempting to drive Kendiesel out of the market. Kendiesel, therefore, filed counterclaims against Lucas alleging violations of the antitrust law and tortious interference with prospective economic advantage.

Lucas has filed a motion to dismiss each of the counterclaims for failure to state a claim pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Lucas states in its motion to dismiss: "As Lucas UK and Lucas USA saw their market share for sales of Lucas branded fuel injection systems threatened, they took steps to maintain and increase their dominant share in that market by forestalling Kendiesel and other competitors from obtaining [replacement pumps and parts] and/or selling [replacement pumps and parts] to Lucas SDs. These actions included preventing authorized foreign distributors of Lucas branded products from selling them to Kendiesel, terminating Lucas UK's manufacturing agreement with defendant WSK [a subsidiary of Kendiesel], instituting this suit against Kendiesel and WSK and reminding SDs of their contractual obligations to Lucas USA." (Lucas Br. at 4-5).¹

[*5] DISCUSSION

A. Standard of Review

HN1 In determining whether a complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the Court must limit its consideration to the facts alleged in the complaint. Biesenbach v. Guenther, 588 F.2d 400, 402 (3d Cir. 1978). Moreover, in its examination of the complaint, the Court is required to accept all of the allegations contained therein and all inferences arising therefrom as true. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 2232, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984). If plaintiff can prove any set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief, his complaint should not be dismissed. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 102, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957); D.P. Enterprises v. Bucks County Community College, 725 F.2d 943, 944 (3d Cir. 1984).

HN2 The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure only require that a claimant present a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8. As a general rule a complaint is sufficient if it enables the defendant to file a responsive pleading. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 501, [*61] 91 L. Ed. 451, 67 S. Ct. 385 (1947). This rule is no different in antitrust cases. Niagara of Buffalo Inc. v. Niagara Mfg. & Distrib. Corp., 262 F.2d 106 (2d Cir. 1958); Nagler v. Admiral Corp., 248 F.2d 319, 322 (2d Cir. 1957) ("it is quite clear that the federal rules contain no special exceptions for antitrust cases"); Walker Distrib. Co. v. Lucky Lager Brewing Co., 323 F.2d 1, 3 (9th Cir. 1963) ("we are of the opinion that there are no special rules of pleading in antitrust cases"). Thus, defendant's counterclaims will be subject to the same liberal rules of pleading as in all other types of cases.

HN3 The Supreme Court has expressly stated that motions to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) should be granted "very sparingly" in antitrust cases. In Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746-47, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976) the Court held: "In antitrust cases, where the 'proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators,' dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly." (citing, Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct.

¹ The Court notes that the sur-reply brief filed by Kendiesel violates the rules of this Court and, therefore, was not considered by the Court in rendering its decision.

Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46; D.P. Enterprises, 725 F.2d at 944. Conclusory allegations are sufficient if they provide an outline or notice of the antitrust violation charged. Trans World Airlines Inc. v. Hughes, 332 F.2d 602 \(2d Cir. 1964\), cert. dismissed, 380 U.S. 248 \(1965\) ("The allegations state the outlines of a tying arrangement, an economic boycott of the defendants' competitors, and an attempt to monopolize commerce, all unlawful under the antitrust statutes."). Similarly, allegations of fact and conclusory statements of the pleader must be taken into account when deciding whether a claim for relief has been stated. As the Third Circuit held in Knuth v. Erie-Crawford Dairy Cooperative Assn., 395 F.2d 420 \(3d Cir. 1968\):

Decisions of the United States Supreme Court [*8] indicate that we should be extremely liberal in construing antitrust complaints. See, Radiant Burners Inc. v. Peoples Gas, Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656, 660, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358, 81 S. Ct. 365 \(1961\); Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456, 77 S. Ct. 390 \(1957\); and United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn., 347 U.S. 186, 98 L. Ed. 618, 74 S. Ct. 452 \(1954\).

Indeed, in the Employing Plasterers case, the Supreme Court made it clear that, whether [the] charges be called "allegations of fact" or "mere conclusions of the pleader" they must be taken into account in deciding whether a claim for relief is stated.

The liberal approach to the consideration of antitrust complaints is important because inherent in such an action is the fact that all details and specific facts relied upon cannot properly be set forth as part of the pleadings.

Id. at 423.

With these legal principles in mind, the Court will examine each of Kendiesel's counterclaims to determine whether Kendiesel has alleged a cause of action for violation of the antitrust laws and for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage.

B. Tying [*9] Arrangement

Count I of the counterclaim alleges that Lucas has engaged in an unlawful tying arrangement in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.² There are two elements essential to a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act: (1) a "contract, combination or conspiracy" and (2) unreasonable restraint of trade. There is no doubt that Kendiesel has sufficiently alleged a contract, combination or conspiracy when it refers to contracts between Lucas and the SDs. Lucas argues, however, that Kendiesel has failed to alleged an unreasonable restraint of trade.

[*10] HN5 [↑] Some types of conduct have been deemed to be per se unreasonable. Activities that have been identified as per se unreasonable include price fixing, group boycotts, market allocation and certain types of tying arrangements. Jefferson Parish Hospital District v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 9, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). Defendant's counterclaim suggests that plaintiff's contract with the SDs is an unlawful tying arrangement. A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product [tying product] but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agreed that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\). "Such an agreement violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act if the seller has 'appreciable market power' in the tying product market and if the arrangement effects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied markets." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\).³

[*11] Specifically, in Count I, Kendiesel alleges that Lucas has violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by engaging in two separate unlawful tying arrangements, as follows:

1. Lucas USA conditions the "availability" of Lucas technical literature to its SDs (tying product) upon their agreeing to sell and use only Lucas branded pumps and parts in repairing or replacing Lucas fuel injection pumps (tied product).
2. Lucas USA conditions the sale of Lucas branded fuel injection pumps (tying product) to SDs upon their agreeing to purchase all of their replacement parts for Lucas branded fuel injection systems from Lucas (tied product).

The Supreme Court in Kodak articulated four elements of an illegal tying arrangement:

1. there are two separate products or services;
2. the sale of one of the products is conditioned on the purchase of the other product;
3. the seller has the power in the market for the tying product; and
4. a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce in the market for the tied product is foreclosed.

See also, Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551.

1. Separate Products

Lucas alleges that Kendiesel [*12] has failed to state a claim for an illegal tying arrangement because Kendiesel has failed to identify two separate products or services that were tied by Lucas. Specifically, Lucas argues that its literature is not a separate product that is sold or in demand. Lucas does not sell its technical literature to anyone but provides the technical information at no cost to authorized service dealers. Likewise, Lucas argues that its parts are not a separate product that is sold or in demand.

For literature to be considered distinct in an antitrust analysis, "there must be sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide [literature] separately from parts." Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2079 (citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. 2, 21-22). Thus, the Supreme Court has held that the defining characteristic that makes a product distinct is the demand for the product.

Lucas' argument that literature is not a separate product because it is given away at no charge must fail in light of Kodak and Jefferson Parish. A reasonable inference from the counterclaim is that there is a great demand for technical literature separate and apart from demand for parts. Certainly, [*13] if the technical literature lacked any market value, Lucas would not require the SDs to keep this information confidential. The very fact that Lucas restricts access to the technical literature reveals there is demand and a market for the technical literature. The market for the technical literature would include any person, such as Kendiesel, wishing to repair a Lucas brand pump without having to purchase a Lucas replacement pump or Lucas parts. Therefore, this Court holds that Kendiesel's allegation that literature is a separate product is sufficient to withstand Lucas' motion to dismiss.

³In Kodak, the Supreme Court affirmed the denial of summary judgment in a case where the plaintiff was accused by the defendant of tying the sale of parts to the sale of service in an attempt to drive out independent service dealers. Importantly, the Court in Kodak analyzed the defendant's antitrust allegations under the more stringent standards of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56. In this case, the Court is analyzing defendant's antitrust allegations under the more lenient standard of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

Lucas' reliance on Directory Sales Management Corp. v. Ohio Bell Telephone Co., 833 F.2d 606, 609-10 (6th Cir. 1987) and Kellam Energy Inc. v. Duncan, 668 F. Supp. 861, 881 (D. Del. 1987) is misplaced. In these cases the defendant charged for the alleged tying product and then gave away the alleged tied product. In contrast, in this case, Lucas gives away the alleged tying product (technical literature) and then charges for the tied product (pumps and parts). Lucas is alleged to be exploiting the demand for the free tying product in order to force buyers into the purchase of the tied product. [*14] This is the essence of the claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Lucas next challenges whether pumps and parts can be separate products. Again, the Court must analyze whether there is a demand for pumps separate from the demand for parts. Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2072; Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 2. The case law squarely holds that equipment and parts are separate products. See e.g., Mercoid Corp v. Mid-Continent Inv. Co., 320 U.S. 661, 88 L. Ed. 376, 64 S. Ct. 268 (1944) (heating system and stoker switch); Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488, 86 L. Ed. 363, 62 S. Ct. 402 (1942) (salt machine and salt); Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U.S. 458, 82 L. Ed. 371, 58 S. Ct. 288 (1938) (process patent and material used in the patented process); International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U.S. 131, 80 L. Ed. 1085, 56 S. Ct. 701 (1936) (computer and computer punch cards); Carbice Corp. v. Am. Patents (Development) Corp., 283 U.S. 27, 75 L. Ed. 819, 51 S. Ct. 334 (1931) (ice cream transportation package and coolant). In this case, Kendiesel's allegation that pumps are separate from parts is sufficient to withstand Lucas' motion to [*15] dismiss. The market of persons wishing to buy Lucas pumps but not Lucas parts, could include those persons wishing to buy parts directly from the manufacturer or to use parts from old Lucas pumps. The fact that the demand for pumps and parts often will go hand in hand is irrelevant. In Kodak, the Supreme Court expressly rejected Kodak's argument "that because there is no demand for parts separate from service, there cannot be separate markets for service and parts." Id. at 2080. The Court stated that by that logic, "we would be forced to conclude that there can never be separate markets, for example, for cameras and film, computers and software, or automobiles and tires." Id.

2. Coercion

Lucas also alleges that Kendiesel has failed to state a claim for illegal tying because Kendiesel has failed to allege that coercion was used to force SDs to purchase tied products from Lucas. "The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control of the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. [*16] When such forcing is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12. As the Third Circuit has noted:

Coercion is implicit -- both logically and linguistically -- in the concept of leverage upon which the illegality of tying is premised: the seller with market power in one market uses that power as a "lever" to force acceptance of his product in another market. If the product in the second market would be accepted anyway, because of its own merit, then, of course, no leverage is involved

Ungar v. Dunkin' Donuts of America, Inc., 531 F.2d 1211, 1218 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 823, 50 L. Ed. 2d 84, 97 S. Ct. 74 (1976).

In this case, Lucas admits that it controls 75% of the market for replacement diesel fuel-injection pumps and parts. There also can be no dispute that Lucas controls 100% of the market for its technical literature. Thus, a reasonable inference from the facts alleged is that Lucas is using its control over technical literature to force SDs to purchase pumps and parts from Lucas. Likewise a reasonable inference from the facts alleged [*17] is that Lucas is using its control over the diesel pump market to force SDs to purchase parts from Lucas. The Service Distributor Agreements themselves are evidence that SDs do not purchase tied products of their own free will. If SDs always purchased pumps and parts from Lucas of their own free will then there would be no need for Lucas to institute contracts that require SDs to purchase pumps and parts only from Lucas.

3. Market Power

The final element of a tying claim is that the defendant have sufficient market power in the tying market to impose a tying arrangement. Market power is the power "to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14. "The existence of such power is ordinarily inferred from the seller's possession of the a predominant share of the market." Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2081. As stated above, Lucas controls 100% of the market for technical literature and about 75% of the aftermarket for replacement pumps and parts. Thus, there can be no doubt that Lucas is alleged to have sufficient market power.

Finally, Lucas claims that Lucas U.K. should be dismissed from this litigation. This [*18] claim is premature at this stage of the litigation. Until the parties have had an opportunity to conduct discovery the Court cannot say that there is no possibility that Kendiesel will be able to prove an antitrust claim against Lucas U.K.

C. Conspiracy to Restrain Trade

HN6 A violation of Section I of the Sherman Act for a "contract, combination or conspiracy" to unlawfully restrain trade requires a showing of:

- (1) that defendants contracted, combined or conspired among each other;
- (2) that the contract or conspiracy produced adverse anticompetitive effects with the relevant product and geographic markets;
- (3) that the objects of the conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal;
- (4) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that contract or conspiracy.

J.F. Feeser Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524 (3d Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 921, 113 L. Ed. 2d 246, 111 S. Ct. 1313 (1991).

Count II of the counterclaim alleges that Lucas Industries, Lucas USA and the SDs and other unnamed conspirators have combined to unreasonably restrain trade in violation of Section I of the Sherman Act. Specifically, [*19] Kendiesel alleges that Lucas USA and the SDs agreed not to disclose the technical literature to unauthorized parties. Likewise, Kendiesel alleges the Lucas USA and the SDs unlawfully agreed that SDs will only purchase pumps and parts from Lucas USA and will only use Lucas parts in repair of Lucas branded pumps. Kendiesel also alleges in paragraph 10 that actions were taken to (a) prevent foreign Lucas distributors from selling Lucas branded products to Kendiesel; (b) to terminate Lucas UK's manufacturing relationship with WSK; (c) to commence this litigation against Kendiesel and WSK; and (d) to remind Service Distributors of their contractual obligation to Lucas USA.⁴

As stated earlier, there are two elements essential to a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act: (1) a "contract, combination or conspiracy" and (2) unreasonable restraint of trade. [*20] Proof of a "contract, combination or conspiracy" entails two essential elements: (1) two or more legally independent actors who (2) engage in concerted action. There can be no question that Lucas and the SDs are legally independent actors. Likewise, there can be no question that the contract requires the SDs and Lucas to act in concert. The question is whether the contract requires the SDs and Lucas to act in concert to unlawfully restrain trade. In other words, the question is whether the contract has anticompetitive effects. Courts have held that harm to even a single competitor can at times support an inference of harm to competition. 16A Von Kalinowski, Business Organizations: Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation, § 6.02[2] n. 109 (listing cases).

In this case, Kendiesel has alleged that the contract between Lucas and the SDs has harmed Kendiesel and other independent distributors of parts. Paragraph 7 alleges that in order to obtain technical literature, SDs must agree to purchase replacement pumps and parts only from Lucas. Such an agreement effectively shuts Kendiesel and other independent suppliers of replacement pumps and parts out of the market. This allegation [*21] is deemed to be true during a motion under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). Thus, Counterclaim II sufficiently alleges anticompetitive conduct and states a cause of action.

Lucas also claims that Kendiesel has failed to alleged the relevant product market or the relevant geographic market. The Court disagrees. A fair reading of the allegations in Counterclaim II is that Kendiesel is a competitor of Lucas in the distribution and sale of replacement pumps and parts (the relevant product market) to SDs in the United States (the relevant geographic market). The essence of the Counterclaim II is that Lucas has forced Kendiesel out of the market by forcing SDs to sign a contract that prohibits them from buying replacement pumps and parts from Kendiesel. Such an allegation states a claim for an antitrust violation.

Likewise there can be no question that Lucas has market power in this market. The Court has already noted that Lucas controls about 75% of the aftermarket for replacement pumps and parts and 100% of the market for technical literature needed to repair Lucas fuel-injection pumps. This is clearly sufficient. Fineman v. Armstrong World Industries, Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 201-02 (3d Cir. 1992), [*22] cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993) (prima facie monopoly power shown by market share significantly larger than 55%).

Finally, the Court declines to follow Lucas' invitation to analyze each act separately. Rather, the Court holds that Counterclaim II, when read as a whole, sufficiently states a cause of action for a violation of Section I of the Sherman Act.

D. Monopoly Claims

Count III of the counterclaims alleges the Lucas attempted to monopolize, and/or maintained a monopoly, and/or conspired to monopolize in violation of Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act. The acts alleged to have been committed in support of these allegations are the same acts described in Count II of the counterclaim. HN7 The elements of a monopolization claim in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act include:

- (1) the possession of monopoly power in a relevant market.
- (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power in an exclusionary manner.

U.S. v. Grinnell Corp. 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966).

Lucas argues that Kendiesel has failed to identify the relevant market as required. Spectrum Sports Inc. v. McQuillan, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 884, 892 (1993). As discussed earlier, the relevant market is the sale of replacement pumps and parts to SDs in the United States. Kendiesel is a competitor of Lucas in this market. Thus, Kendiesel has fairly described the relevant market.

Kendiesel also has alleged facts sufficient to indicate the Lucas possesses monopoly power in the relevant market. A fair inference is that Lucas controls about 75% of the aftermarket for replacement pumps and parts for use in Lucas fuel-injection pumps. This is clearly sufficient. Fineman, 980 F.2d at 201-02.

Lucas next argues the Kendiesel has failed to allege conduct indicating willful acquisition or maintenance of a monopoly. In paragraph 7 Kendiesel alleges that Lucas required SDs to sign contracts that prohibited SDs from purchasing replacement pumps and/or parts from Kendiesel. This allegation is sufficient to indicate a willful attempt by Lucas to grab the entire market for sale of replacement pumps and parts to SDs.

HN8 Attempted monopolization is a lesser included offense to a claim of monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. A claimant must merely allege that the defendant [*24] has a "dangerous probability" of achieving a monopoly in the relevant market. Spectrum Sports, Inc., 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890. The federal courts have held that a "dangerous probability of success" can be satisfied by a showing of market share in excess of fifty percent (50%). Barr Laboratories Inc. v. Abbott Laboratories, 978 F.2d 98, 112-115 (3d Cir. 1992); M&M Medical Supplies and Services Inc. v. Pleasant Valley Hospital Inc., 981 F.2d 160, 169-69 (4th Cir. 1992) (en banc), cert. denied, 125 L. Ed. 2d 662, 113 S. Ct. 2962 (1993). Consequently, Kendiesel's allegation that Lucas controls about 75% of the aftermarket is sufficient to satisfy the "dangerous probability of success" component of an attempted monopolization claim.

Lucas next argues that Kendiesel has failed to allege a claim for conspiracy to monopolize because Kendiesel has not alleged facts showing concerted activity. Again, Lucas' claim must fail. A fair reading of the counterclaim indicates that Kendiesel alleges that Lucas acted in concert with SDs to drive Kendiesel and other independent distributors out of the relevant market.

Therefore, the Court holds that Kendiesel has adequately [*25] stated a claim for attempt to monopolize, and/or maintenance of a monopoly, and/or conspiracy to monopolize in violation of Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

E. Tortious Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage

HN9 [↑] A claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage must allege:

- (1) a claimant has a reasonable expectation of an economic benefit;
- (2) the defendant's knowledge of that expectancy;
- (3) the defendant's wrongful, intentional interference with that expectancy;
- (4) in the absence of interference, the reasonably probability that the claimant would have received the anticipated economic benefit; and
- (5) damages resulting from the defendant's interference.

Fineman, 980 F.2d 171, 186 (3d Cir. 1992) (citing, Printing Mart-Morristown v. Sharp Electronics, 116 N.J. 739, 751-52, 563 A.2d 31 (1989)).

In Fineman the Third Circuit held that an element of this cause of action is "a sufficiently concrete prospective contractual relation." Id. at 195. In Fineman, the Court found that the plaintiff had failed to prove he would have gotten new customers in his consulting business. Id. [*26] The Court held the record was "devoid of any objective evidence that Fineman had any concrete plan for future consulting work." Id.

In this case, Kendiesel need not prove at this stage of the litigation that it had sufficiently concrete prospective contracts with its customers. However, Kendiesel must at least allege specific prospective contracts that were interfered with by Lucas. Kendiesel has failed to identify a single customer or a single contract that it was likely to consummate, but failed to consummate, due to the actions taken by Lucas. As a result, Kendiesel has failed to allege a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage.

Therefore, Kendiesel's claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage will be dismissed without prejudice pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, this Court holds that Kendiesel has adequately alleged claims for: (1) illegal tying in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act; (2) conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act; and (3) monopolization and/or attempted monopolization and/or conspiracy to monopolize [*27] under Section

2 of the Sherman Act. Lucas' motion to dismiss is based on a patently erroneous misunderstanding "of the limited role of the complaint in federal practice." Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434, 446 (3d Cir. 1977). "It is not necessary to plead evidence, nor is it necessary to plead the facts upon which the claim is based. To the contrary, all the Rules require is a short and plain statement of the claim that will give the defendant fair notice of what plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Id. Kendiesel's federal antitrust counterclaims pass this simple test. However, the Court holds that Kendiesel has not stated a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage.

An appropriate order is attached.

[*1347] REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Defendants have moved for judgment on the pleadings. Doc. 28. Defendants contend that Plaintiff's claims are barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act and are not exempt under § 3(b) of that Act, which exempts boycotts. Defendants also contend that the relief sought is barred by the Keogh doctrine enunciated in Keogh v. Chicago & N.W. Ry. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 (1922). Plaintiff filed a response, doc. 38, and Defendants replied, doc. 39.

The motion was referred for a report and recommendation by Judge Stafford. Docs. 43 and 46. Oral argument was held on June 6, 1995. The motion should be granted as to the first argument. If this recommendation is adopted, the court need not address the Keogh defense.

HN1 [↑] On a motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c), all matters pleaded in the complaint must be accepted as true. Swerdloff v. Miami National Bank, 584 F.2d 54, 57 (5th Cir. 1979). This report and recommendation assumes the truth of the allegations of the complaint. Materials outside of the complaint have not been considered.

I. The allegations of the complaint

*2 Plaintiff explained in her response to the motion: "The Complaint sets forth, with clarity, the existence of a boycott, condemned under § 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, that was made possible only through the defendants' cartelization of what properly should be a competitive market." Doc. 38, p. 4. This is an accurate and concise statement of Plaintiff's claim.

The complaint alleges that this suit is brought pursuant to Section One of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and Section Four of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15. Doc. 1, para. 1. Plaintiff, Jeanine Slagle, is a consumer of windstorm insurance as an owner of property in Florida. Id., para. 4. Defendants are alleged to be members of the Florida Windstorm Underwriting Association (FWUA) and are insurance companies licensed to transact insurance business in Florida. Id., para. 2.

The FWUA is alleged to have been organized in 1970 under the enabling authority of Chapter 70-234, Laws of Florida, codified as Fla.Stat. § 627.351(2) (1993). The FWUA is an association comprised of insurers who participate in profits and losses on a proportionate basis. It is also a joint underwriting association, funded *3 and governed by the defendants. Id., para. 3. See also Fla.Stat. § 627.351(2)(b)2.

As a matter of law it is noted that the HN2 [↑] FWUA is an insurer of last resort which insures windstorm risk in the coastal areas of Florida by joint underwriting for consumers unable to obtain such insurance by "ordinary methods." Fla.Stat. § 627.351(2)(a) and (b); American Insurance Ass'n v. Florida Dept. of Insurance, 646 So. 2d 784, 785 (Fla. 1st DCA 1994), rev. dismissed, 651 So. 2d 1193 (Fla. 1995). It is mandated by state law that Defendants participate in the FWUA. American Insurance Ass'n, 646 So. 2d at 785. Further, state law provides that the Department of Insurance may regulate the rates [*1348] charged by the FWUA. Fla.Stat. § 627.351(2)(a).

Defendants are generally alleged to have engaged in concerted anticompetitive conduct by "fixing, pegging or stabilizing of insurance premiums and prices among ostensible competitors through horizontal price fixing and unlawful allocation of markets, customers and territories and the establishment and agreement upon a boycott." Id., para. 7. It is further alleged that:

The unlawful horizontal agreements alleged herein include [4] effectuating such agreements through various subterfuges, shams and corporate manipulations of reinsurance entities owned entirely, or in part, and dominated by the defendant members of the FWUA, by the unlawful exchange of competitive information to cause the market for windstorm insurance in the affected coastal regions to be noncompetitive, by meetings at which windstorm insurance rates were fixed and agreed upon by formulae for pegging or stabilizing such rates, and by a boycott (a concerted refusal to deal) imposed against the class.

Id.

Plaintiff further alleges that these activities are not exempt from the antitrust laws as the "business of insurance" because "the unlawful concerted conduct herein alleged do not [sic] have the effect of spreading or transferring policy holder risk." Id., para. 13. It is alleged that Defendants had as a purpose the elimination of competition in the writing of windstorm insurance by stabilizing windstorm insurance rates at artificially high, noncompetitive amounts not reasonably required by actuarial calculations. Id. By elimination of competition, it is alleged Defendants unlawfully allocate consumers among themselves. [5] Id. It is alleged that these acts are not immune from antitrust laws because not an integral part of the policy relationship between the insured and the insurer. Id., para. 14.

Plaintiff further alleges that Defendants have engaged in a boycott "by agreeing among themselves that windstorm policies in the affected areas of Florida would be written in the noncompetitive environment created by the agreement alleged." Id., para. 17. It is alleged that: "Irrespective of the other types of coverage offered by the defendants . . . the defendants and coconspirators refused to write windstorm coverage and directed consumers to the FWUA as the only source of windstorm coverage in the affected geographic coastal areas." Id. The effect, alleges Plaintiff, is that she must pay the premiums pegged and stabilized [by the FWUA--the Defendants acting in concert].

For relief, Plaintiff seeks for herself and the class alleged a refund of the amount of money paid to the defendant insurance companies which may be found by this Court and a properly impaneled jury to constitute the excess of premium payment occasioned by the unlawful conduct alleged in contrast to what a reasonable [6] premium rate would have been if established in a competitive environment and absent the defendants' unlawful collaborative conduct.

Id., para. 18. At oral argument, Plaintiff expressed a desire to amend the complaint to add a count for injunctive relief.

In short, Plaintiff claims that Defendants have fixed prices for windstorm insurance in certain Florida markets by (1) concertedly refusing to sell windstorm insurance individually on the open market, (2) thereby forcing Plaintiff and other consumers to buy windstorm coverage from the FWUA, where (3) the Defendants, as enabled by state law, concertedly peg the price at a level not reasonably related to risk. The monetary damages which are sought would be measured by the FWUA regulated premium less a hypothetical lower premium which would have been charged had Defendants competed against one another in the individual open market.

first, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry.

Hartford, 113 S. Ct. at 2901, quoting Union Labor Life Insurance Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 129, 102 S. Ct. 3002, 3009, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1982).

All of Defendants' conduct as alleged in the complaint is the "business of insurance" as so defined. All of the conduct pertains to transferring and spreading a policyholder's risk. The setting of premium rates and terms is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured, and that activity is limited to entities in the insurance [8] industry.

All of the conduct is also regulated by comprehensive statutes enacted by the State of Florida. The statute which regulates the rates set by the FWUA has been discussed above. HN4 Chapter 627, Fla.Stat., and particularly Fla.Stat. § 627.062 (1993) and such regulations as may have been adopted by the Florida Department of Insurance, regulate all other activities of Defendants with respect to the rates and terms of windstorm insurance on the open market in Florida. Florida also provides for regulation of the conduct alleged in the complaint pursuant to Chapter 626, Part X, §§ 626.951, et seq., the Unfair Insurance Trade Practices Act.

This is enough regulation to make the McCarran-Ferguson Act exemption applicable. HN5 "The McCarran-Ferguson Act renders the federal antitrust laws inapplicable when state legislation generally prescribes, permits, or otherwise regulates the conduct in question and authorizes enforcement through a scheme of administrative supervision." *Crawford v. American Title Insurance Co., 518 F.2d 217, 218 (5th Cir. 1975); Uniforce Temporary Personnel v. National Council on Compensation Insurance, Inc., et al., slip opinion, Case No. 94-8343-CIV-RYSKAMP [9] (S.D. Fla., April 6, 1995) (attached to doc. 44), pp. 9-11.*¹

At oral argument, Plaintiff conceded that if her claim were only that Defendants had acted in concert to fix premium rates on their own windstorm insurance in Florida, then the McCarran-Ferguson Act would preclude her antitrust claim. Unquestionably this is true. HN6 The McCarran-Ferguson Act exempts cooperative ratemaking from antitrust law sanctions so long as the conduct is regulated by the state. Royal Drug, 440 U.S. 205 at 221, 99 [10] S. Ct. 1067 at 1078, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261. Plaintiff contends, however, that her suit is saved from that end by the allegation that Defendants have entirely refused to deal in the individual open market in order to force customers to buy from another entity, the FWUA. She contends that this is a § 3(b) boycott.

HN7 Section 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1013(b), provides an exception for a Sherman Act claim² with respect to "any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." A concerted agreement to seek particular terms in particular transactions is not a "boycott" as intended by § 3(b), although such agreements would otherwise be unlawful under the Sherman Act. Hartford, 113 S. Ct. at 2912-2917.

In the Hartford [11] case, the Court held that HN8 a "boycott" as intended by § 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act is a refusal to deal in transactions which are unrelated to the underlying transaction as to which a change [*1350] of terms is sought. As an example, the Court said that "no one would call [a labor strike] a boycott, because the conditions of the 'refusal to deal' relate directly to the terms of the refused transaction (the employment contract)." 113 S. Ct. at 2913. In contrast, it said: "A refusal to work changes from strike to boycott only when it seeks to obtain action from the employer unrelated to the employment contract." Id.

² The exception does not apply to a Clayton Act claim. Thus, the analysis above is sufficient basis for judgment on the pleadings in favor of Defendants with respect to the Clayton Act claim without considering the boycott exception.

Hartford thus held that it was not a boycott for the defendant reinsurers to refuse to deal with primary insurers until they changed certain terms of their primary insurance contracts. 113 S. Ct. at 2914. It reasoned that the terms of the primary coverages "are what is reinsured." Id., emphasis by the Court. It said:

What matters is that the scope and predictability of the risks assumed in a reinsurance contract depend entirely upon the terms of the primary policies that are reinsured. The terms of the primary policies are the "subject-matter insured" [12] by reinsurance, . . . so that to insist upon certain primary-insurance terms as a condition of writing reinsurance is in no way "artificial"; and hence for a number of reinsurers to insist upon such terms jointly is in no way a "boycott."

113 S. Ct. at 2915.

Hartford did not entirely reject all claims of boycott made by plaintiffs. The Court noted that in one of the complaints, it was alleged that the defendant reinsurers had threatened to withdraw entirely from the business of reinsuring primary insurers who continued to use the disfavored insurance form. Construing this as a concerted refusal to insure not only for primary insurance on the disfavored form, but also for any other insurance written by the same primary insurers on other forms, the Court held this to state a claim of a McCarran-Ferguson boycott. 113 S. Ct. at 2916. This is so because a refusal to deal with respect to insurance other than on the disfavored form would have an "artificial" relationship to the terms of insurance on the disfavored form.

The reference in the Hartford case to an "artificial" relationship between the refusal to deal and the contractual terms sought is to the Court's decision [13] in St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 98 S. Ct. 2923, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932 \(1978\). In the St. Paul case, plaintiffs were licensed physicians. Defendant St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company wished to alter the terms of medical malpractice insurance policies it had issued to plaintiffs, and it intended to do so when those policies were renewed. To coerce this result, St. Paul had entered into an agreement with three competing medical malpractice insurers such that the competitors would refuse to sell medical malpractice insurance to a former St. Paul customer who had refused to agree to St. Paul's new contractual terms. After setting forth these facts, Hartford said of the St. Paul case: "The insisted-upon condition of the boycott (not being a former St. Paul policyholder) was 'artificial': it bore no relationship (or an 'artificial' relationship) to the proposed contracts of insurance that the physicians wished to conclude with St. Paul's competitors." 113 S. Ct. at 2914.

Plaintiff argues that she has alleged a circumstance similar to that found in the St. Paul case. She points out: "It is hardly an exercise in market leverage directed toward [14] the 'targeted transaction' . . . when it is not the same insurance company to whom the business is routed." Doc. 38, p. 10. Plaintiff argues that because the insurance is ultimately issued by the FWUA instead of by an individual Defendant, the refusals to deal constitute "a clear use of coercive force used to achieve an unrelated transaction." Id., emphasis added.

The case at bar, however, is more like the Hartford claim found not to be a boycott than the St. Paul claim. The transactions which have been refused here are not unrelated to the transactions the terms of which Defendants seek to control. Defendants are alleged to have concertedly refused to sell windstorm insurance in certain parts of the open market in Florida so that their customers are forced to seek windstorm insurance from the FWUA. Given the nature and composition of the FWUA, the policy issued by the FWUA is, in effect, issued by all Defendants and all Defendants share the risk. The concerted behavior achieves particular terms for the FWUA transactions: joint liability and, as Plaintiff alleges, higher rates. There is no artificial relationship between the [1351] transactions refused and the terms of the [15] transaction sought. The subject matter of the transactions refused and the transactions coerced, a risk of windstorm damage in particular areas in Florida, is the same. Judge Ryskamp's decision in the Uniforce case, supra, supports this conclusion.

That the relationship is not artificial can be seen if viewed from another perspective. Defendants could have continued to issue policies in the open market. They could have achieved the same end as now alleged by an agreement that each would use a single form of contract and charge common rates for coverage. They could also have achieved joint liability as to each contract separately written by entering into an omnibus or umbrella reinsurance agreement (or a series of such agreements) making all Defendants jointly liable for the contracts of each. While that might have been cumbersome and expensive, it would have not have been a boycott because the concerted activity would have been clearly directed to the terms of the contracts issued. That instead they agreed to withdraw all contracts from the open market, regardless of terms, to force this result through contracts issued by the FWUA, is a distinction without any difference.

[16] Thus, Plaintiff has not alleged a § 3(b) boycott. Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings should be granted. This disposition, if adopted by the court, will moot consideration of Defendants' second argument for judgment on the pleadings.

Accordingly, it is RECOMMENDED that the court GRANT Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, doc. 28, and direct the Clerk to enter judgment in their favor.

Three criteria are relevant to this inquiry: first, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry.

The McCarran-Ferguson Act exempts from federal antitrust law the business of insurance to the extent that such business is regulated by the state. California Insurance Code § 101 specifically includes the purchasing and disposing of annuities as part of the business of life insurance. Life insurance includes insurance upon the lives of persons or appertaining thereto, and the granting, purchasing, or disposing of annuities. Section 700(a) of the California Insurance Code states: A person shall not transact any class of insurance business in this state without first being admitted for that class. Therefore, even if a business that is not strictly an "insurance company" is selling annuities, it would be transacting a class of insurance business as regulated by California law and would, by definition, be part of the insurance industry. Thus, the activity of buying and selling annuities is limited to the insurance industry.

In other words, where a group of workers refuses to work until they get higher wages, they are engaged in a strike. But, where the workers also refuse to otherwise deal with the employer, e.g., by not buying the employer's products or by not dealing with anyone who buys the employer's products, then the activity becomes a boycott.

MEMORANDUM *

Appellant, Delta Life and Annuity Company, filed an action in federal district court alleging appellees' violation of federal antitrust law and RICO. Delta also alleged violation of several state statutes. The district court dismissed all of Delta's claims pursuant to a motion under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure [*2] 12(b)(6). We conclude that because a state court in a parallel action has issued a final judgment, the doctrine of res judicata prevents us from examining the RICO and state law claims. We also affirm the district court's dismissal of the Sherman Act claim as barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

I. Res Judicata

Delta filed parallel actions in both state and federal court. In the California action, Delta alleged violation of the same RICO and state statutory provisions as it alleged in federal district court. The only difference between the two actions was that the federal complaint also alleged violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the subject of the next section of this memorandum disposition, and violation of California Insurance Code § 790.03. Delta's action was dismissed in the state trial court pursuant to an order sustaining a demurrer to Delta's complaint. Delta promptly appealed the decision to the California Court of Appeals. On February 22, 1995, the California Court of Appeals dismissed Delta's appeal. The California Court of Appeals' dismissal became final on March 24, 1995.

HN1 [↑] Under 28 U.S.C. § 1738, we must give the preclusive effect of a prior state court no [*3] wider scope than that which the state itself would give the judgment. Ross v. International Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 634 F.2d 453, 457 (9th Cir. 1980). "We accord the same res judicata effect to state court judgments that the jurisdiction of their rendition would give them." Eichman v. Fotomat Corp., 759 F.2d 1434, 1438 (9th Cir. 1985). Therefore, we apply California's law of res judicata to determine whether Delta is precluded from bringing in federal court those claims already brought in state court.

HN2 [↑] Res judicata "foreclose[s] relitigation of a cause of action or issue that was determined in a prior case, involving the same party or one in privity to it, and which ended in a final judgment on the merits." Victa v. Merle Norman Cosmetics, Inc., 19 Cal. App. 4th 454, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 117, 120 (Ct. App. 1993). Under California law, the State Court of Appeals' dismissal constituted an affirmation of the judgment in favor of Appellees on the merits below. See In re Jasmon O., 8 Cal. 4th 398, 878 P.2d 1297, 1303 (Cal. 1994) (holding that normally involuntary dismissal of appeal leaves trial court judgment in tact), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. [*4] 1826 (1995); In re Conservatorship of Oliver, 192 Cal. App. 2d 832, 13 Cal. Rptr. 695, 698 (Ct. App. 1961); Crowley v. Modern Faucet Mfg. Co., 44 Cal. 2d 321, 323, 282 P.2d 33 (1955). "In California, final judgments, even if erroneous, are a bar to further proceedings based on the same cause of action." Eichman, 759 F.2d at 1438.

The technical requirements of the doctrine of res judicata being met, namely that there be a final decision on the merits and that the previous litigation involved the same claims and same parties, we conclude that Delta is barred from pursuing the same claims in this court. See Clemmer v. Hartford Ins. Co., 22 Cal. 3d 865, 874, 151 Cal. Rptr. 285, 587 P.2d 1098 (1978); Victa v. Merle Norman Cosmetics, Inc., 19 Cal. App. 4th 454, 460-64 (1993). Although Delta may pursue parallel actions, it runs the risk that the first action to proceed to judgment will give res judicata effect in the other. Rutledge v. Arizona Bd. of Regents, 859 F.2d 732, 735-36 (9th Cir. 1988). As the Supreme Court has previously made clear, HN3[↑] the doctrine of res judicata is of fundamental importance to our law and no equitable principles sanction the rejection of [*5] its application. Federated Dept. Stores v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 401, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 (1981). Accordingly, we conclude that Delta's RICO claim and state statutory claims brought in state court are barred in this court by the preclusive effect of res judicata.

We also conclude that Delta's claim under California Insurance Code § 790.03, which was brought in the federal action but not in the state, is barred by the doctrine of res judicata. HN4[↑] California courts apply the primary right theory in determining the res judicata effects of California judgments. See Eichman, 759 F.2d at 1438. A California judgment bars all claims that were brought or that could have been brought to vindicate the same primary right, even if a claim was not actually asserted in the action that proceeded to final judgment. Slater v. Blackwood, 15 Cal. 3d 791, 543 P.2d 593, 594-95, 126 Cal. Rptr. 225 (Cal. 1975). Because we conclude that Delta's claim under California Insurance Code § 790.03 arose from the identical facts and "primary right" as the state court action, the doctrine of res judicata also operates to bar that claim.

II. Delta's Federal Antitrust Claim

HN5[↑] A dismissal [*6] under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim is a ruling on a question of law that we review de novo. *Everest and Jennings v. American Motorists Ins. Section 3(b) of the Act creates an exception to this general immunity for acts amounting to a boycott. 15 U.S.C. § 1013\(b\). In this case, the district court held that McCarran-Ferguson immunized the appellees' activities as the business of insurance and that the boycott exception did not apply.

A) The "Business of Insurance"

In Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, HN7[↑] the Supreme Court recently reiterated what constitutes the "business of insurance" within the meaning of section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. In determining whether an activity is "the business of insurance," we must focus on the activity in question rather than on the nature of the entity conducting the activity. Id. at 2900. Three criteria are relevant to this inquiry: "first, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry." Id. Delta argues that the appellees' activities do not meet any of the three prongs of this test.

[*8] Annuities, like life insurance policies, are formulated on the basis of actuarial tables. Life insurance protects against the economic risk of premature death while an annuity protects against the risk of outliving one's resources. We conclude that, in this case, the business of annuities entails the transfer of policyholder risk. California Insurance Code §§ 101, 700\(a\) (West 1993). Accordingly, this prong of the "business of insurance" test is met.

Delta argues that the act of issuing TDA's is not integral to the business of insurance. Delta misunderstands the nature of this prong. The activity does not have to be integral to the business of insurance, but rather to the policy relationship between the insurer and insured. We agree with the appellees that the change in identity of the insurer is of fundamental importance to the policy relationship between insurer and insured.

Delta also argues that buying and selling annuities is not an activity limited to the insurance industry because entities outside the insurance industry engage in the annuity business. Because these other entities are not immune from antitrust laws, Delta argues, then neither should the appellees be immune [*9] simply because they are insurance companies.

HN8 The McCarran-Ferguson Act exempts from federal antitrust law the business of insurance to the extent that such business is regulated by the state. California Insurance Code § 101 specifically includes the purchasing and disposing of annuities as part of the business of life insurance. (West 1993) ("Life insurance includes insurance upon the lives of persons or appertaining thereto, and the granting, purchasing, or disposing of annuities."). Section 700(a) of that same code states: "A person shall not transact any class of insurance business in this state without first being admitted for that class." Therefore, even if a business that is not strictly an "insurance company" were selling annuities, it would be transacting a class of insurance business as regulated by California law and would, by definition, be part of the insurance industry. Thus, the activity in issue, buying and selling annuities, is limited to the insurance industry and the third prong of the "business of insurance" test is met. We conclude that the activities at issue in the present case are regulated by the State of California as the business of insurance and, accordingly, [*10] the McCarran-Ferguson Act applies to bar Delta's claims.

B) Boycott Exception

HN9 Section 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1013(b), states that nothing in it "shall render the . . . Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." Thus, this section creates an exception to the general rule that state regulated insurance activities are immune from federal regulation. Delta argues that the appellees' activities constituted a boycott. We disagree.

Again, HN10 the Supreme Court in Hartford offers the most recent guidance on identifying boycott activities for purposes of an exemption to the McCarran-Ferguson Act. See Hartford, 113 S. Ct. at 2911. In Hartford, the Court differentiated between boycotts and other related activities such as cartelization, and strikes. Id. at 2912. Although all of these activities involve coercive pressure against a target to achieve a specific result, the Court noted that boycotts, unlike the other activities, employ economic coercive pressure outside of the targeted transaction to achieve the desired result. Id. In other words, where a group of workers [*11] refuses to work until they get higher wages, they are engaged in a strike. But, where the workers also refuse to otherwise deal with the employer, e.g., by not buying the employer's products or by not dealing with anyone who buys the employer's products, then the activity becomes a boycott.

The acts alleged by Delta do not rise to the level of a boycott. The only coercive pressure alleged was applied to the TDA holders, not Delta. Delta alleged that the TDA holders were duped into believing the only available charge-free transfer of their accounts was through Freeman and Safeco Insurance Company. This alleged act, though not an admirable business practice, does not constitute a boycott. We agree with the district court's characterization of this activity as nothing more than the sale of one business's accounts to another, although involving alleged misrepresentation. We conclude that the boycott exception to McCarran-Ferguson does not apply. Accordingly, the acts of which Delta complain are immunized from federal regulation by the McCarran-Ferguson Act because they are regulated as the business of insurance by the State of California.

III. Conclusion

Based upon the foregoing [*12] analysis, we conclude that Delta's state law and RICO claims are barred by the doctrine of res judicata. We also agree with the district court that the McCarran-Ferguson Act bars Delta's claims under the Sherman Act. Accordingly, the district court's order dismissing Delta's claims is affirmed.

AFFIRMED.

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The summary judgment process involves shifting burdens between the moving and the nonmoving parties. Initially, the onus falls upon the moving party to aver an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. Once the moving party satisfies this requirement, the pendulum swings back to the nonmoving party, who must oppose the motion by presenting facts that show that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. When the nonmoving party bears the burden of proof at trial and fails to make such a showing, there can no longer be a genuine issue as to any material fact: the failure of proof as to an essential element necessarily renders all other facts immaterial, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

HN6 Consideration, Detrimental Reliance

It is well established that the application of estoppel rests largely on the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Further, the party invoking estoppel has the burden of proving that its application is warranted, and its existence is a question of fact to be resolved by the trier of fact.

HN7 [] Consideration, Detrimental Reliance

Since the function and purpose of the doctrine of estoppel are the prevention of fraud and injustice, there can be no estoppel where there is no loss, injury, damage, detriment, or prejudice to the party claiming it. Further, the injury or prejudice involved must be actual and material or substantial and not merely technical or formal.

Recoupment has traditionally been viewed as the right of a defendant to reduce or eliminate the plaintiff's demand either because the plaintiff has not complied with some cross obligation of the contract on which he sues or because he has violated some duty which the law imposes upon him in the making or performance of that contract.

Contracts Law > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

HN15 [blue document icon] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

Recoupment is in a sense not a separate cause of action, like set-off, but it is a defense to the plaintiff's cause of action, diminishing it because of some damage done to the defendant. This is especially true in contract cases, where the respective damages to both parties arise out of the same transaction and affect each party's legal rights and liabilities on the contract.

To determine whether a plaintiff has the requisite standing to bring a private action under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, the court must evaluate each of the following factors: (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws ("antitrust injury"); (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

By its terms the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), is a prophylactic statute which is violated merely upon a showing that the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition. The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, in contrast, is essentially a remedial statute. It provides treble damages to any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. To recover treble damages, then, a plaintiff must make some showing of actual injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. It must prove more than a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), since such proof establishes only that injury may result.

In order to determine whether plaintiff's injuries are too remote from defendant's antitrust violation to give plaintiff standing to sue for damages under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, the court is required to apply the elusive concept of proximate cause. This analysis requires the court to look (1) to the physical and economic nexus between the alleged violation and the harm to the plaintiff, and (2), more particularly, to the relationship of the injury alleged with those forms of injury about which Congress was likely to have been concerned in making defendant's conduct unlawful and in providing a private remedy under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

To recover damages under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, a private plaintiff must prove the existence of antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants acts unlawful. Further, injury, although causally related to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as antitrust injury unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition. Otherwise stated, the alleged injury must be of the type that the antitrust statute was intended to forestall.

[*329] ORDER

Before the court are a series of summary judgment motions and a motion for reconsideration, all of which were filed by defendant H.P. Hood, Inc. Plaintiff Lago & Sons Dairy, Inc., has interposed objections to each motion.

Background

Defendant Hood is a manufacturer of dairy products. Hood sells its dairy products directly to certain retailers and indirectly, through a distributor, to other retailers.

This action arises out of the breakdown of a long-term relationship between Hood and one of its distributors, plaintiff Lago & Sons Dairy, Inc.

[*330] Lago began distributing Hood products in 1979 pursuant to a written wholesale distribution agreement, under which Lago delivered products to Hood's direct-buy customers--its "house accounts"--and received a case commission fee in return. Lago also purchased Hood products to sell to its own retail customers. Lago continued to distribute Hood products under a written contract until February 1990, when Hood exercised its contractual right not to renew the written agreement then governing the parties' relations. Thereafter Lago and Hood continued [2] to do business together under an oral agreement. However, Lago alleges that in March 1992 Hood breached that oral agreement by taking away its house account business from Lago.

At this point the already strained relationship between Hood and Lago completely broke down. The instant action, which includes claims by Lago and counterclaims by Hood based on the distribution relationship between the parties, followed.

Discussion

1. Summary Judgment Standard

HN1[] Under Rule 56\(c\), Fed. R. Civ. P., summary judgment is appropriate if the evidence before the court shows "that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law."

HN2 [↑] The summary judgment process involves shifting burdens between the moving and the nonmoving parties. Initially, the onus falls upon the moving party to aver "an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Garside v. Osco Drug, Inc., 895 F.2d 46, 48 \(1st Cir. 1990\) (quoting Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\)). Once the moving party satisfies this requirement, the pendulum swings back to the nonmoving party, who must oppose the motion by presenting [3] facts that show that there is a "genuine issue for trial." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 256, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\) (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\)). . . .

LeBlanc v. Great American Ins. Co., 6 F.3d 836, 841 \(1st Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, ____ U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 1398 (1994).

"Essentially, HN3 [↑] Rule 56\(c\) mandates the entry of summary judgment 'against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.'" Mottolo v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 43 F.3d 723, 725 \(1st Cir. 1995\) (quoting Celotex Corp., supra, 477 U.S. at 322). When the nonmoving party bears the burden of proof at trial and fails to make such a showing, "there can no longer be a genuine issue as to any material fact: the failure of proof as to an essential element necessarily renders all other facts immaterial, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Smith v. Stratus Computer, Inc., 40 F.3d 11, 12 \(1st Cir. 1994\) (citing Celotex Corp., supra, 477 U.S. at 322-23), cert. denied, 131 L. Ed. 2d 850, 115 S. Ct. 1958 (1995).

HN4 [↑] In determining whether summary [4] judgment is appropriate, the court construes the evidence and draws all justifiable inferences in the nonmoving party's favor. Anderson, supra, 477 U.S. at 255; Data Gen. Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1159 \(1st Cir. 1994\)

2. Hood's Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment on Count V and Part of Count VIII

In Count V of its complaint, Lago alleges that Hood breached the parties' oral agreement that Lago would continue to distribute Hood products until May 17, 1993, when, on February 14, 1992, Hood notified Lago that it was terminating Lago's service of Hood's fluid group house accounts in six weeks. Complaint PP 61-62. In Count VIII, Lago alleges, in relevant part, that Hood's wrongful termination of Lago and willful breach of contract constituted an unfair trade practice [*331] in violation of New Hampshire's Consumer Protection Act, New Hampshire Revised Statutes Annotated (RSA) 358-A.

Hood, in due course, moved for summary judgment on Count V on the ground that the alleged oral contract was unenforceable under New Hampshire's Statute of Frauds, RSA 506:2.¹ The court, in its order of September 6, 1994, determined that a genuine issue of material [5] fact existed as to whether the doctrine of equitable estoppel prevented Hood from denying the enforceability of the oral contract and accordingly denied Hood's summary judgment motion. See Order of Sept. 6, 1994, at 18-21.

After additional discovery, Hood now renews its motion for summary judgment as to Count V on the ground that Lago is not entitled to invoke the doctrine of equitable estoppel because it cannot establish that it suffered the requisite injury.²

² To the extent that Count VIII is based on the conduct which forms the basis of Count V, defendant seeks summary judgment as to Count VIII on the same grounds.

HN5 [6] The [6] essential elements of equitable estoppel are:

"(1) a representation or a concealment of material facts; (2) the representation must have been made with knowledge of the facts; (3) the party to whom it was made must have been ignorant of the truth of the matter; (4) it must have been made with the intention that the other party should act upon it; and (5) the other party must have been induced to act upon it to [its] prejudice."

Tompkins*, 124 N.H. 463, 468, 471 A.2d 1152, 1154 (1984) ("Each element of estoppel requires a factual determination.").

HN7 [8] "Since the function and purpose of the doctrine of estoppel are the prevention of fraud and injustice, there can be no estoppel where there is no loss, injury, damage, detriment, or prejudice to the party claiming it." 28 AM. JUR. 2D ESTOPPEL AND WAIVER § 78, at 715-16 (1966). Further, "the injury or prejudice involved must be actual and material or substantial and not merely technical or formal." Id. at 716.

Lago asserts that [8] in early 1991 it purchased 17 trucks in reliance on Hood's assurances that the three-year oral contract between the parties was valid. Affidavit of Robert W. Lago PP 6-9 (attached to Lago's Objection as Exhibit B); Lago's Answer Interrogatory No. 11 of Hood's First Set of Interrogatories (attached to Defendant's Motion as Exhibit B). Lago spent approximately $ 600,000 to purchase the trucks in question. Lago Affidavit P 9.

Hood now contends that Lago suffered no detriment from this truck purchase because (1) Lago's subsequent distribution agreement with Weeks/Crowley Dairy (Weeks) allowed Lago to meet its expenses as to thirteen of the trucks and (2) the remaining four trucks were sold, but at no loss to Lago. Hood further contends that even if Lago did incur [*332] a loss on the four trucks that were sold, it cannot rely on that loss to show injury here because Hood offered to buy the trucks from Lago at book value.

a. Lago's Agreement with Weeks

Hood allegedly breached its three-year oral distribution agreement with Lago on February 14, 1992, "by assuming the responsibility for delivery of dairy products to the house accounts then being delivered by Lago." Affidavit of Robert [9] L. Lago P 5 (Plaintiff's Exhibit C). Following Hood's termination of its oral agreement with Lago, Lago entered into an oral agreement with Weeks whereby Lago became a distributor of frozen and fluid Weeks products. Lago states that the distribution agreement with Weeks "was reached approximately one week prior to March 9, 1992 to commence on March 9, 1992." Lago's Supplemental Answers to Hood's Interrogatory No. 16 (Defendant's Exhibit C).

³ Since the only element challenged by defendant's motion is that of injury, the court limits its discussion herein to said element and assumes, consistent with its September 6, 1994, order, that a genuine issue of material fact exists as to the remaining elements of plaintiff's equitable estoppel claim.

Hood asserts that Lago suffered no detriment as a result of its 1991 truck purchase because Lago's agreement with Weeks allowed Lago to meet its expenses as to thirteen of the seventeen trucks purchased.

Lago's agreement with Weeks is "a verbal agreement to purchase fluid, frozen or cultured products from Weeks with no specified time period and no restrictions to purchasing other competitive products." Lago's Supplemental Answer to Hood's Interrogatory No. 4. Lago concedes that this agreement "gave Lago a number of benefits and savings, such as seven week credit terms, turning over $ 2.2 million in direct bill ice cream business to Lago, inventorying Weeks/Crowley products free of charge, and free freight from Concord to Portsmouth." Affidavit [10] of Robert L. Lago ⁴ P 15. Lago further concedes that, after losing Hood's house account business, it needed the Weeks contract to stay in business. Id. PP 14-15.

However, Lago maintains that they "projected that even with all the benefits and savings we realized from Weeks/Crowley we would still lose approximately $ 200,000 during the first year of our agreement with Weeks/Crowley. We believed that it was better to go forward with a bad year than to suffer a total financial loss." Id. P 16. Lago further states that due to "the loss that we sustained in the first year of our agreement with Weeks/Crowley of approximately $ 200,000.00, it is clear that we could not afford to carry the cost of the new trucks and costs associated with those trucks. The trucks cost [11] us $ 14,729.00 per month from April 1992 through May 1993 for a total of $ 176,747.00 in damages." Id. P 20.

The court finds that the evidence before it creates a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Lago suffered any injury from its 1991 truck purchase.

b. Lago's Sale of Four Trucks

Sometime after March of 1992, Lago had to sell four of the seventeen trucks it had purchased in 1991. Deposition of Robert W. Lago, Vol. I at 98-99, Vol. IV at 72-73 (Defendant's Exhibit F). However, at his January 12, 1995, deposition, Robert W. Lago was unable to recall what the book values of the four trucks were at the time of their sale, what the sales prices were, or whether the sales resulted in a profit or loss to Lago. Id., Vol. IV at 73.

The court finds that the evidence before it regarding the sale of the four trucks goes to the amount of damages suffered by Lago as a result of the oral distributor contract, but does not alter the court's previous finding that a genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether Lago suffered any injury from its 1991 truck purchase.

c. Waiver

Hood argues that even if Lago incurred a loss on its sale of the four trucks, [12] "Lago now may not seek from Hood compensation for that hypothetical loss since Lago declined Hood's March, 1992 offer to purchase the trucks at their book value and to assume the fleet without any negative impact on Lago." Hood's Memorandum in Support of its Renewed [*333] Motion for Summary Judgment at 9. Hood contends that Lago's voluntary relinquishment of Hood's offer constitutes a waiver and bars Lago's claim of damages with respect to the four trucks Lago had to sell. In response, Lago argues, inter alia, that a genuine issue exists as to whether Hood's offer was valid.

HN8 [↑] "An offer is the manifestation of willingness to enter into a bargain, so made as to justify another person in understanding that his assent to that bargain is invited and will conclude it." RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONTRACTS § 24 (1979). Further, "an "offer must be so definite as to its material terms or require such definite terms in the acceptance that the promises and performances to be rendered by each party are reasonably certain.""⁵ Phillips, supra note 1, 138 N.H. at 245, 637 A.2d at 910 (quoting Chasan v. Village Dist. of Eastman, 128 N.H. 807, 815, 523 A.2d 16, 21 (1986) (quoting RESTATEMENT [13] OF CONTRACTS § 32 (1932))). HN9 [↑] "Whether a given factual transaction is or is not an 'offer' is a question of law . . ." Jay Edwards, Inc. v. Baker, 130 N.H. 41, 45, 534 A.2d 706, 708 (1987).

Lago concedes in its answers to Hood's interrogatories that Hood expressed an interest in purchasing its trucks. Lago's Answer to Hood Interrogatory No. 18 (attached to Hood's Motion as Exhibit B). Lago further states that Mark Bigelow wanted a list of all trucks that we could have available. He said Hood could look into taking over Lago's payments. He wanted the year, VIN #, model, specifications, and all financial information from Natistrar, A.S.A.P., the next day if possible, or at least the number of trucks that will be available.

Id.

Mark Bigelow similarly states that after Hood canceled Lago's handling of the house accounts in 1992, he made "a phone call to Bobby . . . to ask him if he had any vehicles that were going to be available or he needed to get rid of that Hood could purchase . . ." Deposition of Mark Bigelow, Vol. II at 60 (Defendant's Exhibit G).

Robert Lago, recalling his conversations with Bigelow about the trucks, testified at his deposition as follows:

[14] Q. . . . My question to you is did Hood offer to purchase the trucks in February of 1992?

A. As to the exact date, whether it was February or March, I'm not exactly sure, but I recall having a conversation with Mark Bigelow where Mark Bigelow had asked me if we had any trucks that we were planning on not using as a direct result of the loss of case fees.

Q. And did he offer to purchase those trucks from you at that time?

A. He may have offered to purchase them from me.

Q. And what was your response to that offer?

A. Well, there again, there was no specific number of trucks that he proposed to purchase. I never told him that he could purchase a certain amount of vehicles from us. I never gave him a figure that you could -- you may buy ten trucks, for example. I never gave him that.

Q. Did you ever offer in February or March of 1992 to sell any trucks to Hood?

A. We had a couple conversations regarding the purchase of trucks. I wasn't exactly sure what trucks, if any trucks, would be available for sale either to him or to whomever.

Q. That doesn't quite answer my question. Did you ever offer in February or March of 1992 to sell any trucks to Hood?

A. No.

Q. After March [15] of 1992 did you ever offer to sell any trucks to Hood?

A. No.

Deposition of Robert W. Lago, Vol. IV at 71-72 (Defendant's Exhibit F).

Representatives from Hood and Lago met on February 19, 1992, to discuss various issues, including Hood's purchase of Lago's trucks. The agenda for that meeting states in relevant part,

2.) Truck Purchase

- Specifications on all vehicles need to be supplied by Lago.

[*334] - Hood will purchase all dairy vehicles that Lago does not require.

- Purchase price of vehicles will be negotiated on the basis of their book value.

Lago & Sons, Inc., Meeting Agenda, Feb. 19, 1992 (Defendant's Exhibit H) (emphasis added). Robert Lago's notes of that same meeting indicated that Bigelow "talked about truck purchases, the trucks available to him by Lago. Discussed possible buyback and lease at book value." Handwritten Notes of Robert Lago (Defendant's Exhibit H).

Robert Lago also states in his affidavit of April 10, 1995, that during the February 19 meeting "Mark Bigelow talked about 'possibly' buying back and leasing the Lago trucks at book value. There was never any discussion as to the actual price per truck and we never reached an agreement [16] regarding how many trucks Hood was willing to purchase." Affidavit of Robert L. Lago P 11.

The court finds, as a matter of law, that Hood's oral and written statements to Lago regarding the purchase of Lago's trucks do not constitute an offer because they do not contain certain material terms, including the quantity of trucks to be purchased and the purchase price. Instead, Hood's statements constitute preliminary negotiations towards an eventual offer by one of the parties to purchase or sell one or more trucks. See RESTATEMENT, supra, §§ 26, 33.

Given the absence of a definite offer from Hood, the court further finds that Lago could not have waived any rights associated with such an offer until the material terms of the offer were made known to Lago. See generally 28 AM. JUR. 2D Estoppel and Waiver § 158 ("It must generally be shown by the party claiming a waiver that the person against whom the waiver is asserted had at the time knowledge, actual or constructive, of the existence of his rights or of all the material facts upon which they depended.").

d. Damages

Defendant contends that even if Lago is able to demonstrate that an exception to the Statute [17] of Frauds applies in this case, Lago cannot recover lost profits under the oral agreement, but is instead limited to reliance damages.

The section of the Statute of Frauds invoked by Hood as an affirmative defense to Lago's claim for breach of the oral distribution agreement, RSA 506:2, renders unenforceable "those contracts which cannot be performed according to their terms within a year from the time of their inception." Phillips, supra note 1, 138 N.H. at 246, 637 A.2d at 911 (quoting Davis v. Grimes, 87 N.H. 133, 135, 175 A. 238, 240 (1934)).

HN10[] Estoppel is generally "defined as 'a bar which precludes a person from denying or asserting anything to the contrary of that which has, in contemplation of law, been established as the truth . . . by his own deed, acts, or representations, either express or implied.'" Great Lakes Aircraft, supra, 135 N.H. at 289, 608 A.2d at 852 (quoting 28 AM. JUR. 2D Estoppel and Waiver § 1, at 600 (1966)). Here, if Lago can prove all of the essential elements of equitable estoppel, then the doctrine will operate to bar Hood's Statute of Frauds defense. E.g. Demirs v. Plexicraft, Inc., 781 F. Supp. 860, 863-64 (D.R.I. 1991); [18] Hoffman v. Optima Sys., Inc., 683 F. Supp. 865, 869-70 (D. Mass. 1988). In so doing, the doctrine of equitable estoppel allows plaintiff to enforce the oral distribution contract and to seek damages from defendant for its breach thereof.

The application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel to bar a Statute of Frauds defense is consistent with section 139(1) of the RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONTRACTS, which provides:

HN11[] A promise which the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance on the part of the promisee or a third person and which does induce the action or forbearance is enforceable notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise. The remedy granted for breach is to be limited as justice requires.

RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONTRACTS § 139(1) (1979).

The court finds that if plaintiff proves its equitable estoppel theory, it is not, as defendant contends, limited as a matter of law to [*335] recovering reliance damages, but is instead entitled to seek damages for breach of contract. However, due to the equitable nature of an estoppel, such damages may be limited by the court as justice requires.

For [19] the reasons set forth hereinabove, the court denies Hood's renewed motion for summary judgment on Count V and on part of Count VIII.

3. Hood's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Counts I and II of its Counterclaims

In Count I of its counterclaims, Hood asserts, inter alia, that Lago breached its contract with Hood by failing to pay certain invoices for dairy products Lago received in 1989. In Count II, Hood asserts that Lago has been unjustly enriched by its failure to pay for said dairy products.

The evidence submitted by Hood in support of its motion for partial summary judgment on Counts I and II of its counterclaims establishes that Lago failed to pay invoices totaling $ 210,436.43 between June 1989 and September 1989. See Affidavit of Frank J. Jamgochian PP 9-11; Hood's Account Summaries for Lago & Sons (attached to Jamgochian Affidavit as Exhibit A).

Lago admits that it did not pay certain invoices for dairy products received during the June 1989 through September 1989 time period. See Deposition of Paul Gallant at 59-60; Lago's March 1992 A/P Hood Report (attached to Gallant Deposition as Exhibit 2).⁵ However, Lago contends that its failure to [20] pay said invoices does not constitute a breach of contract because, at the time said invoices were due, Hood owed Lago $ 335,640 for credit not properly given to Lago for its delivery of dairy products to Hood's house account customers between 1985 and 1988. Lago further asserts that Hood was obligated under the terms of the same contract to credit Lago's account for said amount, thereby obviating the need for Lago to pay the invoices in question.

In support thereof, Lago submits a copy of the written contract governing the parties' relationship during the time period in question. Said contract states, in relevant part, that (1) Distributor shall sell and transfer to the Company all of the Products delivered to House Accounts. Such sale and transfer shall be effected and title shall pass to the Company upon the delivery of the Products to the House Account and the [21] signing by the House Account of a delivery ticket furnished by the Company showing the date, the items and quantities delivered.

(2) Upon proper submission to the Company of the said signed delivery tickets, the Distributor will be issued a credit by Hood in the amount of the Distributor's purchase price for the Products delivered to said House Account.

Wholesale Distributor Agreement § 8.B(1)-(2) (attached to Lago's Objection as Exhibit B).

Paul R. Gallant, Lago's accountant, was hired in early 1988 because Michael Lago believed Lago "was losing or missing income that should have been generated and received from the sale of dairy products." Affidavit of Paul R. Gallant P 5 (attached to Lago's Objection). Gallant states that he "quickly discovered that Hood had not been giving proper credit to Lago for deliveries Lago made to the Hood House Accounts because Hood frequently failed to input into their computer the Lago delivery slip/invoices. For the customers who paid Hood in full, Hood often failed to give proper credit to Lago for deliveries made to those customers." Id. P 8.

Lago and Hood subsequently undertook to investigate this purported credit problem. Gallant states,

On [22] August 9, 1989 at 9:30 a.m. I met with Frank Jamgochian to discuss the resolution of the outstanding credit owed to Lago. The meeting with Jamgochian, then the Director of Treasury Services at Hood, took place at the Hood plant in Charlestown, Massachusetts.

[*336] During that meeting, Jamgochian presented me with the report entitled Lago Final Report and dated June 16, 1989. That report was the result of the research by Hood to determine the credit which Hood owed Lago from June 1985 through February 1988. This report entitled "Lago Final Report" which indicates "Lago correct $ 335,640.00" is attached herein as Exhibit A.

⁵ Lago's March 1992 Accounts Payable Report shows that between June 1989 and September 1989 Lago did not pay Hood invoices totaling $ 215,358.84.

During that meeting, Jamgochian told me that Hood did in fact owe Lago approximately $ 335,640.00 for credit which was not properly given to Lago for products Lago delivered to Hood's House Account customers.

Id. PP 12-14.

Gallant further states that Lago did not pay the invoices at issue here because of Hood's admission that it had failed to properly credit Lago's account in the amount of $ 335,640. Gallant Affidavit PP 16-18, 21.

In response to Lago's objection, Hood contends that Lago's defense fails as a matter of law because it is simply a reassertion [23] of Lago's debt claim which was rejected by the court in its order of September 6, 1994.

Count VII of Lago's original complaint was a debt claim in which Lago asserted that Hood owed it between $ 500,000 and $ 700,000 as the result of the erroneous administration of accounts between the two parties from 1985 to 1988. In its September 6, 1994, order, this court granted Hood's motion for summary judgment on Count VII after finding that the debt claim asserted therein was barred by the three-year statute of limitations set forth in RSA 508:4, I. See Order of Sept. 6, 1994, at 28. The court further held that because Lago's debt claim was time-barred, Lago was not entitled to offset the amounts allegedly due to Lago under said claim against any amounts determined to be due to Hood from Lago in the course of this action. Id.

It is Hood's position that these rulings preclude Lago from asserting what Hood characterizes as a "setoff" defense in response to Hood's breach of contract counterclaim. Hood maintains that said defense amounts to no more than a revival of Lago's time-barred debt claim and is itself time-barred for the same reasons.

New Hampshire has two statutory provisions [24] which govern the availability of a set-off claim. HN12  The first statute, RSA 515:7 (1974), provides, "If there are mutual debts or demands between the plaintiff and defendant at the time of the commencement of the plaintiff's action, one debt or demand may be set off against the other." HN13  The second statute, RSA 515:8 (1974) provides, "No debt or demand shall be set off as aforesaid unless a right of action existed thereon at the beginning of the plaintiff's action."

Here, RSA 515:7 and 515:8 operate to preclude Lago from setting off the debt Lago sought to recover from Hood in Count VII against any debts or demands asserted by Hood because Lago's debt claim is time-barred and therefore "no right of action existed thereon at the beginning of [Lago's] action." RSA 515:8.

That being said, the court finds that the defense asserted by Lago is more akin to a recoupment than a set-off.

HN14  Recoupment has traditionally been viewed as the right of a defendant to reduce or eliminate the plaintiff's demand either because the plaintiff has not complied with some cross obligation of the contract on which he sues or because he has violated some duty which the law imposes upon him in the making or [25] performance of that contract.

Zurback Steel Corp. v. Edgcomb, 120 N.H. 42, 44, 411 A.2d 153, 155 (1980) (citing 20 AM. JUR. 2D Counterclaim, Recoupment and Setoff § 1 (1965) [hereinafter 20 AM. JUR. 2D]). See also Varney v. General Enolam Co., 109 N.H. 514, 516, 257 A.2d 11, 13 (1969) ("Recoupment 'was originally a deduction from damages because of part payment, former recovery, or some analogous fact.'" (quoting James, CIVIL PROCEDURE § 10.14 (1965))).

The availability of recoupment does not depend on set-off statutes such as RSA 515:7 and 515:8. Stanley v. Clark, 159 F. Supp. 65, 66-67 (D.N.H. 1957); see also Varney, supra, 109 N.H. at 515, 257 A.2d at 12.

[*337] This is because HN15  recoupment is in a sense not a separate cause of action, like set-off, but it is a defense to the plaintiff's cause of action, diminishing it because of some damage done to the defendant. This is especially true in contract cases, where the respective damages to both parties arise out of the same transaction and affect each party's legal rights and liabilities on the contract.

Stanley, supra, 159 F. Supp. at 67.

HN16[] Under New Hampshire law, recoupment may be used [26] "defensively to defeat or diminish plaintiff's recovery . . . [or] affirmatively to obtain full relief, a complete determination of all controversies arising out of matters alleged in the original petition, and to allow the defendant affirmative relief against the plaintiff." Zurback Steel, supra, 120 N.H. at 44, 411 A.2d at 155.

HN17[] Where the plea of recoupment "seeks affirmative relief, rather than mitigation of the plaintiff's demand, it is subject to the operation of the statute of limitations." Id. (citing 51 AM. JUR. 2D, Limitations of Actions § 78 (1970) [hereinafter 51 AM. JUR. 2D]; W. W. Allen, Annotation, Claim Barred by Limitation as Subject of Setoff, Counterclaim, Recoupment, Cross Bill, or Cross Action, 1 A.L.R. 2d 630, 640, § 4 (1948) [hereinafter 1 A.L.R. 2d]). However, where the plea of recoupment is raised as a defense arising "out of the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim, [the defense] ordinarily survives as long as the cause of action upon the claim continues to exist." 51 AM. JUR. 2D § 77. "Stated in another way, the defense of recoupment may be asserted even though the claim as an independent cause of action is barred by limitations." [27] Id.; see also 1 A.L.R.2d at 666, § 14 ("if a defendant's claim is in fact a recoupment the general statutes of limitation do not defeat it; on the contrary it may be availed of defensively so long as plaintiff's cause of action exists").

A full and fair reading of Lago's objection to the motion sub judice reveals that Lago has invoked the right of recoupment as a defense to Hood's breach of contract counterclaim, and not as an avenue for obtaining affirmative relief. HN18[] As a defense, it is well established that recoupment "may result only in the reduction of the plaintiff's claim, not in affirmative judgment for any excess over that claim." 20 AM. JUR. 2D § 12, at 236. Further, such a defense is not barred by RSA 508:4, I, the applicable statute of limitations.

In short, the court finds that Lago is entitled to assert a recoupment defense in response to Hood's breach of contract counterclaim. The availability of such a defense creates a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Lago's admitted failure to pay the invoices in question constitutes a breach of the contract between the parties. Assuming that Lago's failure to pay the invoices in question constitutes a breach [28] of contract, Lago's recoupment defense creates a genuine issue of material fact as to the amount of damages suffered by Hood because of said breach.

The court further finds that the facts which form the basis of Lago's recoupment defense also preclude the court from finding, as a matter of law, that Hood is entitled to recover under a theory of unjust enrichment. The court accordingly denies Hood's motion for partial summary judgment as to Counts I and II of its counterclaims.

4. Hood's Motion for Summary Judgment on Counts IX and X of Lago's Amended Complaint

In Counts IX and X of its amended complaint, Lago asserts that Hood violated sections 2(a) and 2(d) of the Clayton Antitrust Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 13(a) and 13(d), by selling Hood products to its direct-buy retailers "at prices lower than those offered to Lago for Lago's resale to its retailers," Amended Complaint P 82, and by providing its direct-buy retailers "with perks, such as free delivery and guaranteed product, not offered to Lago for Lago's resale to its retailers," id. P 94.⁶ Lago contends that as a result of [*338] Hood's

⁶ Section 2(a) provides, in relevant part,

HN19[] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them"

15 U.S.C. § 13(a) (1973). HN20[] Section (d) makes it unlawful discriminatory pricing and allowances practices, [29] Lago's retail customers were unable to compete with Hood's direct-buy retail customers. Id. PP 85, 96. Lago further contends that Hood's discriminatory practices "substantially lessened competition and/or injured, destroyed, or prevented competition," id. PP 87, 98, and caused Lago to suffer "actual injury including a loss in sales and profits as a result of its retail customers['] inability to compete with the favored chain and retail stores," id. PP 88, 99.

[30] As a result of Hood's allegedly discriminatory conduct and the injury caused to Lago thereby, Lago seeks treble damages, expenses, and attorney's fees under § 4 of the Clayton Act, which provides in pertinent part, "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. . ." 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) \(Supp. 1995\).

Hood moves for summary judgment as to Counts IX and X on the ground that Lago does not have the antitrust standing necessary to bring a private action for treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act.

a. Antitrust Standing Generally

A literal reading of § 4 of the Clayton Act is admittedly "broad enough to encompass every harm that can be attributed directly or indirectly to the consequences of an antitrust violation." Associated Gen. Contractors, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 529, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\). This lack of restrictive language "reflects Congress' 'expansive remedial purpose' in enacting § 4: Congress sought to create a private enforcement [31] mechanism that would deter violators and deprive them of the fruits of their illegal actions, and would provide ample compensation to the victims of antitrust violations." Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 \(1982\) (quoting Pfizer, Inc. v. India, 434 U.S. 308, 313-14, 54 L. Ed. 2d 563, 98 S. Ct. 584 \(1978\)).

HN21 [↑] Despite the broad language and remedial purpose of section 4, "the class of persons entitled to recover damages under Section 4 has been limited by caselaw through the doctrine of 'antitrust standing.'" Sullivan v. Tagliabue, 25 F.3d 43, 45 \(1st Cir. 1994\) (citing Associated Gen. Contractors, supra, 459 U.S. at 529-35; McCready, supra, 457 U.S. at 472-73). As recently explained by the First Circuit, the doctrine of antitrust standing involves the following concept: "even where an [antitrust] violation exists and a plaintiff has been damaged by it,⁷ the courts--for reasons of prudence--have sought to limit the right of private parties to sue for damages or injunctions." SAS of Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Puerto Rico Tel. Co., 48 F.3d 39, 43 \(1st Cir. 1995\).

[32] [*339] Although "the courts have never been able to create an intelligible theory of private antitrust standing capable of being applied across the full range of potential cases," id. (quoting H. Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy, 543 (1994)), the prudential concerns which courts have relied on to limit the rights of plaintiffs to bring antitrust actions have been delineated into a list of factors. HN22 [↑] To determine whether a plaintiff has the for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any service or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities.

15 U.S.C. § 13\(d\) \(1973\).

⁷ Hood concedes, for the purpose of the present motion only, that an antitrust violation has occurred and that Lago has been damaged by it. Hood's Reply Memorandum at 2. Accordingly, the court assumes that Hood's conduct, in selling its dairy products to its direct-buy retailers at lower prices than it sold those same products to Lago for resale to other retailers, may have lessened, injured, destroyed, or prevented competition for the sale of Hood dairy products at the retail level in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. The court further assumes that Lago was damaged thereby.

requisite standing to bring a private action under § 4 of the Clayton Act, the court must evaluate each of the following factors:

(1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws ("antitrust injury"); (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Sullivan, supra, 25 F.3d at 46 (citing Associated Gen. Contractors, supra, 459 U.S. at 537-45).

The court [33] considers these factors in light of the First Circuit's recent interpretation of Associated General Contractors as requiring courts to evaluate the balance of these factors "in each case in an effort to guard against 'engrafting artificial limitations on the § 4 remedy.'" Sullivan, supra, 25 F.3d at 46 (quoting McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472); see also Donovan v. Digital Equip Corp., 883 F. Supp. 775, 1994 WL 790887, at * 4 (D.N.H. Dec. 13, 1994).

b. The Applicability of the Sullivan Factors to Lago's Treble Damages Claim

Lago perceives there to be some injustice in requiring a plaintiff whose claims are based on the Robinson-Patman Act to prove a causal connection between the price discrimination complained of and the actual damages suffered by plaintiff in order to recover damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act when such proof is not required to make out a Robinson-Patman Act claim at trial. See Lago's Memorandum at 12-14. The court finds that the justification for imposing additional requirements on Robinson-Patman Act plaintiffs who seek treble damages was adequately explained by the Supreme Court in J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler F^{341} Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 561-62, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 \(1981\), as follows:

HN23 By its terms § 2(a) [of the Robinson-Patman Act] is a prophylactic statute which is violated merely upon a showing that 'the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition.' (Emphasis supplied.) . . . Section 4 of the Clayton Act, in contrast, is essentially a remedial statute. It provides treble damages to 'any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws . . .' (Emphasis supplied.) To recover treble damages, then, a plaintiff must make some showing of actual injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. . . . It must prove more than a violation of § 2(a), since such proof establishes only that injury may result.

(Citations omitted.) See also J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 1531 \(3d Cir. 1990\) ("To recover treble damages a plaintiff must prove more than a violation of section 2(a); it must show the extent of actual injury attributable to the harm to competition."), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 921, 113 L. Ed. 2d 246, 111 S. Ct. 1313 (1991); World of Sleep, Inc. v. La-Z-Boy Chair Co., F^{351} 756 F.2d 1467, 1479 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 823, 88 L. Ed. 2d 63, 106 S. Ct. 77 (1985) (same); ABA ANTITRUST SECTION, ANTITRUST LAW DEVELOPMENTS, chp. IV, § K (2d ed. 1984) hereinafter [ANTITRUST LAW DEVELOPMENTS (SECOND)] (same).

Accordingly, the court concludes that consideration of the Sullivan factors is the appropriate method for determining whether Lago has the requisite antitrust standing to seek damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act and turns its attention to that task.

c. Causal Connection and Directness of Injury

The first factor the court must consider is whether there is a causal connection between [*340] the alleged antitrust violation--price and allowances discrimination by Hood in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act--and the harm suffered by Lago. Related to this first factor is the fourth Sullivan factor, which requires the court to consider the directness with which the alleged antitrust violation caused the asserted injury.

"By its nature, 'an antitrust violation may be expected to cause ripples of harm to flow through the Nation's economy.'" Donovan, supra, 883 F. Supp. 775 at ___, 1994 WL 790887, at * 5 (quoting McCready, supra, 457 U.S. at 476-77). [36] "However, because not 'every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation' is entitled to maintain a claim under the Clayton Act, courts examine the causal connection between the alleged violation and harm and also the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury." Id. (quoting McCready, supra, 457 U.S. at 477).

Lago has submitted evidence which shows that Hood was selling certain Hood products to its direct-buy retailers at lower prices than it was selling those same products to Lago for resale to Lago's retail customers. See Affidavit of Frances M. Nugent PP 6-7 (Lago Exhibit B) and documents attached thereto.⁸

As a result of this alleged price discrimination, [37] Lago contends that its customers, small retail grocery stores characterized by Lago as "mom and pop stores", were unable to compete with Hood's direct-buy retailers for the sale of Hood products. In support thereof, Lago submits the affidavits from three of its retail stores that competed with Hood's direct-buy retailers for the sale of Hood products. One such Lago customer, Henry M. Cavaretti of Foyes Corner Market in Rye, New Hampshire, states,

5. The retail chain stores consistently sold their Hood milk, cream, O.J. and other products for a price that was less than the price that I was charged by Lago & Sons Dairy, Inc. for those same products.

6. My customers often told me that they believed that I was overcharging them by charging them higher prices for the same Hood products sold by those chain stores at a much lower price.

7. Because I could not compete with the prices charged by the retail chain stores in my area and because Lago could not offer me lower prices with which I could compete with the chain stores, I was forced to stop purchasing dairy products from Lago and began to purchase milk, cream, O.J. and other products from Weeks Dairy, Concord, New Hampshire.

[38] 8. The reason that I stopped purchasing Hood milk, cream, O.J. and other products from Lago was because I lost business as a result of the prices charged by the retail chain stores in my area.

Affidavit of Henry M. Cavaretti PP 5-8 (Lago Exhibit C). For the same reasons detailed in Cavaretti's affidavit, Philip Smith of Bayberry Variety in Kingston, New Hampshire, states that he "was forced to stop purchasing dairy products from Lago and began to purchase milk and other products from Idlenot and Gaelic [sic] Farms." Affidavit of Philip Smith P 7 (Lago Exhibit E).

The third affidavit submitted by Lago is that of Robert A. Mastin of L&M Variety Store in Newmarket, New Hampshire. Mastin states that

7. Because I could not compete with the prices charged by the retail chain stores in my area and because Lago could not offer me lower prices with which I could compete with the chain stores, it was difficult for me to compete for those same customers for those Hood products.

8. We stayed with Lago because of our long time relationship--when they brought in Weeks products the pricing was a lot more competitive.

Affidavit of Robert A. Mastin PP 7-8 (Lago Exhibit D).

⁸ The court notes that the Affidavit of Josephine R. Raczkowski (Hood's Reply Exhibit B) reveals that some of Nugent's price comparisons are incorrect and further demonstrates that Lago received lower prices than Hood's direct-buy retailers on some Hood products during the time period in question.

Lago [39] maintains that it suffered lost sales and profits when its retailers, such [*341] as Foyes Corner Market and Bayberry Variety, stopped buying Hood products from Lago and instead began buying their dairy products from other dairies. The court finds that the evidence presented is sufficient to demonstrate that there is a causal connection between the Hood's alleged antitrust violation and the harm suffered by Lago.⁹ There remains, however, the question of whether that causal connection is direct enough to give Lago antitrust standing in this action.

[40] HN24[↑] In order to determine whether Lago's injuries are "too remote" from Hood's antitrust violation to give Lago standing to sue for damages under § 4, the court is required to apply the "elusive" concept of "proximate cause". McCready, supra, 457 U.S. at 477. This analysis requires the court to look (1) to the physical and economic nexus between the alleged violation and the harm to the plaintiff, and (2), more particularly, to the relationship of the injury alleged with those forms of injury about which Congress was likely to have been concerned in making defendant's conduct unlawful and in providing a private remedy under § 4.

Id. at 478. Further, the First Circuit has recently stated, HN25[↑] In considering the directness, courts are concerned with the question of which among the affected parties are most likely to be motivated to pursue an antitrust action. While in the usual case, this would be those most directly affected by the antitrust violation, in some cases, more remote parties might be more likely to detect and pursue an antitrust action.

Sullivan, supra, 25 F.3d at 51 n.12.

Lago, as a supplier of Hood dairy products to the retail market, [41] is clearly not the most immediate victim of Hood's alleged discriminatory price and allowance practices. Instead, the retail stores which purchased Hood products from Lago and were consequently unable to compete with Hood's direct-buy retailers for the sale of Hood dairy products to consumers are the direct victims of Hood's alleged discriminatory conduct. See, e.g., SAS of Puerto Rico, supra, 48 F.3d at 44 (when a supplier "suffers because an antitrust violation curtails a business that would otherwise have purchased from the supplier . . . the failed business is the immediate victim and the preferred plaintiff") (citing II P. AREEDA & H. HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW P 375 (rev. ed. 1995) [hereinafter AREEDA & HOVENKAMP]).

"The existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party" to bring an action under § 4. Associated Gen. Contractors, supra, 459 U.S. at 542. On the other hand, justification for ⁹ In so finding, the court has considered Hood's well-argued contention that there are numerous factors which could have rendered Lago's retailers unable to compete with Hood's direct-buy retailers for the sale of Hood dairy products. However, it is not necessary for Lago to prove that Hood's antitrust violation is the sole cause of its injury. Instead, as the Supreme Court stated in Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100, 114 n.9, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 \(1969\), "It is enough that the illegality is shown to be a material cause of the injury; a plaintiff need not exhaust all possible alternative sources of injury in fulfilling his burden of proving compensable injury under § 4." See also Sullivan v. National Football League, 34 F.3d 1091, 1103 (1st Cir. 1994) ("Plaintiffs need not prove that the antitrust violation was the sole cause of their injury, but only that it was a material cause." (quoting Engine Specialties, Inc. v. Bombardier Ltd., 605 F.2d 1, 13 \(1st Cir. 1979\), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 983, 64 L. Ed. 2d 839, 100 S. Ct. 2964 (1980))), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 1252 (1995). Further, where there is evidence "that the decline in plaintiff's profits . . . was not caused by an antitrust violation and instead resulted from other factors, . . . resolution of the issue ordinarily is for the trier of fact." ANTITRUST LAW DEVELOPMENTS (SECOND), chp. VII, § C.1, at 408.

conferring standing on a "second-best plaintiff" such as Lago may exist when there is "no first best [42] with the incentive or ability to sue." SAS of Puerto Rico, supra, 48 F.3d at 45.

Hood asserts that the retail stores that Lago supplied are the most appropriate parties to bring claims against Hood for injuring competition at the retail level. Lago counters [*342] that these retail stores do not have the incentive or ability to sue Hood for antitrust violations. Lago points out that Hood dairy products are just some of the many products these stores carry and that the volume of Hood dairy product sales on a per store basis is often small. Lago further asserts that the expense of pursuing a § 4 claim against Hood "would far exceed the actual injury sustained by an individual grocery store owner." Lago's Opposition Memorandum at 38. The court finds this reasoning to be persuasive and concludes that although Lago is not the party most directly affected by the alleged antitrust violation, it is in a better position to pursue an antitrust action against Hood than its retail store customers.

The court further finds that the physical and economic nexus between the alleged antitrust violation by Hood and the alleged injury to Lago is a close one. It is certainly foreseeable that Lago would [43] lose sales and profits if its retailers were unable to compete with Hood's direct-buy retailers for the sale of Hood products. In addition, as set forth infra at 38-44, the alleged injury suffered by Lago is an "antitrust injury". Under these circumstances, the court finds the causal connection between Hood's alleged antitrust violation and Lago's asserted injury is close enough to confer standing on Lago in this action.

d. Antitrust Injury

HN26 To recover damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, a private plaintiff "must prove the existence of 'antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.'" Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990) (quoting Brunswick, supra, 429 U.S. 477, 489) (emphasis in Brunswick). Further, "injury, although causally related to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as 'antitrust injury' unless it is attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, 'since "it is inimical to [the antitrust] laws to award damages" for losses stemming from continued competition.'" [44] Id. (quoting Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 109-10, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986)) (quoting Brunswick, supra, 429 U.S. at 488)). Otherwise stated, the alleged injury must be "of the type that the antitrust statute was intended to forestall." Associated Gen. Contractors, supra, 459 U.S. at 540 (citing Brunswick, supra, 429 U.S. at 487-88).

Conduct in violation of the antitrust laws may have three effects, often interwoven: In some respects the conduct may reduce competition, in other respects it may increase competition, and in still other respects effects may be neutral as to competition. The antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior.

Atlantic Richfield, supra, 495 U.S. at 343-44.

The antitrust statute allegedly violated by Hood in this case is the Robinson-Patman Act, which "was passed in response to the problem perceived in the increased market power and coercive practices of chainstores and other big buyers that threatened the existence of small independent retailers." Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. [45] Fed. Trade Comm'n, 440 U.S. 69, 75-76, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153, 99 S. Ct. 925 (1979). See also Exxon Corp. v. Governor of Maryland, 437 U.S. 117, 133 n.25, 57 L. Ed. 2d 91, 98 S. Ct. 2207 (1978) ("the political and economic stimulus for the Robinson-Patman Act was the perceived need to protect independent retail stores from 'chain stores'").

Lago contends that it was injured as a result of the inability of its retail customers (i.e., small independent retailers) to compete with Hood's direct-buy retailers (i.e., chain stores) for the sale of Hood dairy products to the ultimate consumers of those products. Lago contends that its retail store customers were forced to stop buying Hood products from Lago and began purchasing their dairy products from other dairies and, as a result thereof, Lago suffered lost sales and profits.

[*343] HN27¹⁰ The First Circuit recognizes the general rule that a supplier "who suffers because an antitrust violation curtails a business that would otherwise have purchased from the supplier . . . is held not to have suffered 'antitrust injury'" SAS of Puerto Rico, supra, 48 F.3d at 44 (citing AREEDA & HOVENKAMP P 375). The circumstances which form the basis of Lago's present claims fall squarely within the parameters of [*46] this general rule: Lago claims to have been injured because Hood's purported antitrust violation curtailed retail businesses that would otherwise have purchased Hood products from Lago. In other words, Hood's "conduct was deemed an antitrust violation because of the threat to the customer, not the supplier." Id.

HN28¹⁰ Even though Lago was not the direct victim of Hood's antitrust violation, under a broad interpretation of the antitrust caselaw, Lago may still "establish antitrust injury by proof . . . that his injury was 'inextricably intertwined' with the injury to competition, in that the plaintiff was ""manipulated or utilized by defendant as a fulcrum, conduit or market force to injure competitors or participants in the relevant product and geographic market.'"'" Sullivan, supra, 25 F.3d at 49 (quoting Providence v. Cleveland Press Pub. Co., 787 F.2d 1047, 1052 \(6th Cir. 1986\) (quoting Southaven Land Co. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1086 \(6th Cir. 1983\))). See also Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., 740 F.2d 739, 745-46 \(9th Cir. 1984\); Ashmore v. Northeast Petroleum Division, 843 F. Supp. 759, 769-70 \(D. Me. 1994\); Donahue v. Pendleton Woolen Mills, Inc., 633 F. Supp. 1423, 1435-39 \(S.D.N.Y. 1986\).¹⁰

[48] In order to effectuate a price discrimination scheme which favored Hood's direct-buy retailers over retailers that purchased Hood products through Lago, Hood necessarily had to use Lago as a conduit through which to pass its discriminatory pricing onto Lago's smaller retailers. However, even under such circumstances, Lago does not suffer an "antitrust injury" unless its losses "stem[] from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of [Hood's] behavior." Atlantic Richfield, supra, 495 U.S. at 344.

The profits Lago seeks to recover in this action were lost because Lago's retail store customers stopped purchasing Hood dairy products from Lago and began purchasing dairy products from other dairies such as Idlenot and Garellick Farms. See, e.g., Affidavit of Philip Smith P 7 (discussed supra at 34). Hood contends that Lago has not suffered an antitrust injury because Lago's losses are "likely to have resulted from its customers switching to one or more of Hood's competitors--i.e., as a result of competition, not the lack of it" Hood's Motion at 25. Hood's argument, although appealing, relies on an expanded definition of the market in which Lago alleges [*49] that competition has been injured.

Lago defines the market in which competition was injured due to Hood's antitrust violation as the retail market for Hood dairy products. Hood's argument that there has been no antitrust injury relies, at least in part, on an expansion of that market to encompass the retail sale of all brands of dairy products. If the market is so defined, then, as Hood contends, there is indeed no antitrust injury as the result of the decision of Lago customers to stop purchasing Hood dairy products in favor of other brands of dairy products. Instead, Lago's losses would clearly

¹⁰ The court notes that other courts "have interpreted Supreme Court caselaw and the antitrust laws more narrowly, holding that a plaintiff must be a market participant in order to establish antitrust injury." Sullivan, supra, 25 F.3d at 49 (citing cases). Although the First Circuit has not yet decided which of these interpretations apply in this circuit, this court finds the reasoning employed by the courts following the broader rule to be persuasive and applies that rule herein. Those courts reason that the injury suffered by a plaintiff used as a means to effect an antitrust violation is within the core of Congressional concern underlying the antitrust laws, which is "to create a private enforcement mechanism that would deter violators and deprive them of the fruits of their illegal actions and would provide ample compensation to the victims of antitrust violations."

Sullivan, supra, 25 F.3d at 49 n.11 (quoting Ashmore, supra, 843 F. Supp. at 770 (quoting McCready, supra, 457 U.S. at 472); see also Ostrofe, supra, 740 F.2d at 746-47.

stem from competition between various [*344] suppliers of dairy products and therefore would not constitute an "antitrust injury."

However, Lago's narrow definition of the affected market appears to the court to be proper under cases such as Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 68 S. Ct. 822 (1948), where the market allegedly affected by price discrimination was the sale of Morton's "Blue Label" table salt at the retail level. See Morton, supra, 334 U.S. at 49 ("Since a grocery store consists of many comparatively small articles, there is no possible way effectively to protect a [50] grocer from discriminatory prices except by applying the prohibitions of the Act to each individual article in the store."). Accepting Lago's narrow definition of the affected market, which the court does at this time, the court finds that the effect of Hood's purported price discrimination was to reduce competition for the sale of Hood dairy products at the retail level between large direct-buy retailers and smaller independent retailers purchasing through Lago. This is precisely the type of problem that the Robinson-Patman Act was designed to address. Further, Lago's injuries stem from the "competition-reducing aspect or effect of [Hood's] behavior." Atlantic-Richfield, supra, 495 U.S. at 344. In other words, even though Lago was not a consumer or competitor in the relevant market, the injury Lago suffered was "inextricably intertwined" with the injury to competition caused by Hood's alleged price discrimination. Sullivan, supra, 25 F.3d at 49. Under these circumstances, the court finds that Lago has suffered an "antitrust injury."

The "existence of antitrust injury is a central factor in the standing calculus." Sullivan, supra, 25 F.3d at 47. Accordingly, [51] the presence of antitrust injury here weighs heavily in favor of conferring antitrust standing on Lago.

e. Damages

The fifth and sixth Sullivan factors require the court to consider the speculative nature of Lago's damages and the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

HN29 [+] "Damages may be considered speculative where the plaintiff's injury was indirect and possibly the result of intervening factors unrelated to the defendant's conduct." Donovan, supra, 883 F. Supp. 775 at ___, 1994 WL 790887, at * 5 (citing Associated Gen. Contractors, supra, 459 U.S. at 540-42). That being said, the court notes that damage issues in antitrust cases "are rarely ""susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts." J. Truett Payne, supra, 451 U.S. at 565 (quoting Zenith, supra note 9, 395 U.S. at 123-24 (quoting Bigelow v. RKO Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264, 90 L. Ed. 652, 66 S. Ct. 574 (1946))). Acknowledging this problem, the Supreme Court "has repeatedly held that in the absence of more precise proof, the factfinder may 'conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' [52] wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits, and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs.'"

Id. (quoting Zenith, supra note 9, 395 U.S. at 123-24) (quoting Bigelow, supra, 327 U.S. at 264)).

The damages Lago claims to have suffered are the lost profits from "customers lost by Lago because of competition due to price during the four year period at issue in the price discrimination claims, April 1988 through March 1992." Affidavit of Paul R. Gallant P 6 (Lago Exhibit F). In other words, Lago does not seek lost profits from the inability of its retailers to compete with Hood's direct-buy retailers for the sale of Hood products during the time when Lago was selling Hood products to such retailers. Instead, Lago seeks lost profits from the sales it lost after certain retail customers stopped purchasing Hood dairy products from Lago and began purchasing dairy products from other dairies because Lago's prices [*345] on Hood products were too high.¹¹ Lago's calculation of these lost profits is detailed in Paul [53] Gallant's affidavit as follows:

6. I analyzed the lost income and profits in the following manner.

a. I consulted the customer list produced by Lago and identified as Robert Lago Deposition, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 8 (hereinafter "customer list"). The customer list provides a list of all customers lost by Lago because of competition due to price during the four year period at issue in the price discrimination claims, April 1988 through March 1992.

b. I then added the total actual sales for all customers that Lago lost during April 1988 through March 1992 as a result of competition with the favored large retail chains.

c. I then multiplied the Actual Account sales Lost by the number of years that Lago lost that business during April 1988 through March 1992.

d. I then determined the total lost sales for each year which was $ 394,584.00, $ 212,669.00, $ 613,587.00, and $ 37,929.00 respectively. [54] I then added all four years together for a total actual lost sales of $ 3,481,446.00.

e. I then multiplied the total actual lost sales for all four years ($ 3,481,446.00) by the average gross profit that the Lago's realized on their retail business to their customers, namely 24%.

f. I then arrived at the total gross profit lost due to price competition or $ 835,547.00.

g. The $ 835,547.00 does not include any trebling of damages or attorneys fees which the Lago's may be entitled to under the price discrimination statute.

Gallant Affidavit P 6.

Hood's initial challenge to Lago's damage claim is that said claim is in fact much broader than it has been characterized by Lago here. Hood points out that the lost customer list attached to Paul Gallant's affidavit includes schools and restaurants and argues that Lago cannot recover lost profits from the sales lost from such customers because they were not in competition with Hood's direct-buy retailers. Hood also points out that Lago's lost customer list includes Lago customers that went out of business. Hood argues that Lago cannot recover the profits it lost after said customers stopped purchasing Hood products from Lago because [55] there is no evidence that the closure of those businesses was caused by Hood's alleged price discrimination.

The court agrees with Hood on these two points and holds that Lago cannot recover under Counts IX and X profits lost from schools and restaurants or from retail store customers that went out of business. However, the court finds that Lago, in its lost profits analysis for Counts IX and X, has correctly narrowed its damages claim to include only the retail store customers it lost to competitors because of price. It is this measure of damages that the court will consider in evaluating whether Lago has the requisite antitrust standing to pursue Counts IX and X.

As set forth supra at 31-38, Lago's damages are only indirectly related to the impact Hood's alleged price discrimination had on competition between Hood's direct-buy retailers and Lago's retail store customers. Further, as Hood argues, there are several possible "intervening factors unrelated to defendant's conduct," Donovan, supra, 883 F. Supp. 775 at ___, 1994 WL 790887, at * 5, that may have caused Lago's losses. Such factors include Lago's own markups on the Hood products it resold to retailers.

Moreover, [56] Lago's lost profits analysis assumes that Lago would have continued to sell Hood products to the customers it lost between 1988 and 1992 but for Hood's price discrimination. As Lago's lost customer list reveals, Lago lost a large number of customers during the relevant time period because those customers went out of business.

¹¹ Lago's damages are, however, limited to the time period during which Lago was a distributor of Hood dairy products.

The court finds Lago's lost profits analysis to be somewhat speculative in [*346] light of the fact that Lago's "injury was indirect and possibly the result of intervening factors unrelated to defendant's conduct." Donovan, supra, 883 F. Supp. 775 at ___, 1994 WL 790887, at * 5. This factor weighs against conferring antitrust standing on Lago.¹²

Finally, because Lago has limited its [57] damages to lost profits, the court finds the risk of duplicative recovery to be negligible. See, e.g., Morris Elecs., Inc. v. Mattel, Inc., 595 F. Supp. 56, 60-61 (N.D.N.Y. 1984) (duplicative recovery is minimal when plaintiff's injuries are limited to its lost profits). Furthermore, "in the absence of an action by a party claiming a more direct antitrust injury . . . there is little risk of duplicative recovery." Donovan, supra, 883 F. Supp. 775 at ___, 1994 WL 790887, at * 7. There has been no antitrust action filed by the direct victims of Hood's alleged antitrust violation--Lago's retail store customers. Consequently, there is also no complex apportionment of damages required in this action. These factors favor conferring antitrust standing on Lago.

f. Improper Motive

To the extent that the improper motive factor listed in Sullivan applies to the instant action, the court finds that the evidence showing that Hood was charging Lago higher prices for certain Hood products than it was charging to its direct-buy retailers is sufficient to support an inference of an improper motive. Accordingly, this factor weighs, if at all, in favor of conferring standing [58] on Lago.

g. Balancing the Factors

Although Lago's damages appear at this stage to be rather speculative, the remaining factors, including the existence of an "antitrust injury," weigh in favor of conferring standing on Lago to pursue its § 4 claims. Hood's motion for summary judgment as to Counts IX and X, which was limited to the standing issue, is accordingly denied.¹³

5. Hood's Motion for Reconsideration of Award of Interest

In its order of September 6, 1994, the court granted Hood's [59] motion for partial summary judgment on Hood's counterclaim for breach of contract as to the $ 214,248.45 due from Lago to Hood for the time period from December 1991 to March 1992. However, the court denied Hood's motion insofar as it sought interest on the amount due because the court found that a genuine issue of material fact remained as to the date from which the interest should begin to accrue. See Order of Sept. 6, 1994, at 32-33.

Hood now moves for reconsideration of the court's determination on the matter of interest, arguing that the issue is one of law, not of fact. Lago objects to Hood's motion, arguing that the question of when interest should begin to accrue is one of fact.

Hood is entitled to interest at a rate of 10 percent on the $ 214,248.45 due from Lago as a matter of law. See RSA 335.1 (1984) ("The annual rate of interest on judgments and in all business transactions in which interest is paid or secured, unless otherwise agreed upon in writing, shall equal 10 percent."). The question of when that interest begins to accrue is governed by RSA 524:1-a, which provides in pertinent part,

HN30 [+] Interest to be Added. In the absence of a demand prior [60] to the institution of suit, in any action on a debt or account stated or where liquidated damages are sought, interest shall commence to run from the time of the institution of suit.

RSA 524:1-a (1974).

It is undisputed that under RSA 524:1-a, interest shall accrue from the earlier of either [*347] the demand for payment or the institution of suit. However, the court finds, as it did in its order of September 6, 1994, that there is a genuine dispute in this case as to the date when Hood made its demand(s) for payment. This dispute is a factual one and precludes the court from determining as a matter of law the date from which interest shall accrue in this action. Defendant's motion for reconsideration is accordingly denied.

Conclusion

For the reasons set forth herein, Hood's Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment on Count V and Part of Count VIII (document 100) is denied; Hood's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Counts I and II of its Counterclaims (document 82) is denied; Hood's Motion for Summary Judgment on Counts IX and X (document 101) is denied; and Hood's Motion for Reconsideration of Award of Interest (document 80) is denied.

In light of these rulings, discovery [61] in this action is herewith extended for a six-month period and shall close on December 22, 1995.

Cross-elasticity of production facilities may be an important factor in defining a product market. The capability of other production facilities to be converted to produce a substitute product is referred to as cross-elasticity of supply. The higher this cross-elasticity, the more likely it is that similar products are to be counted in the relevant market.

Opinion

[*1488] GINSBURG, Circuit Judge: SBC Communications Inc. and BellSouth Corporation appeal an order of the Federal Communications Commission approving the transfer of radio licenses and other authorizations from McCaw Cellular Communications, Inc. to AT&T Corporation in connection with the merger of those two companies. See Craig O. McCaw and American Telephone and Telegraph Co., Memorandum Opinion and Order, 9 F.C.C.R. 5836 \(1994\) (Order), errata, slip op. (Enf. Div. Sept. 27, 1994). The appellants make three types of claims: first, that the Commission approved the merger only because it underestimated the anti-competitive impact of the merger; second, that in order to mitigate the anti-competitive impact of the merger it should have imposed certain conditions upon the transfer of licenses; and third, that its procedures were both arbitrary and inadequate. Finding no merit in any of those claims, we affirm the order in its entirety.

I. BACKGROUND

AT&T is the [3] leading provider of interexchange (IX) service in the United States and one of the largest manufacturers in the U.S. [*1489] market for cellular telephone network equipment, i.e., cellular switches, radio transceivers, and the related network equipment and software necessary to operate a cellular carrier. In 1993 it announced a plan to merge with McCaw, the leading provider of cellular telephone service in the country; McCaw would become a subsidiary of AT&T and would transfer to AT&T control of its more than 400 radio licenses.

AT&T and McCaw applied to the Commission for approval of the license transfer under 47 U.S.C. § 310\(d\) ("No ... station license ... shall be transferred ... to any person except upon application to the Commission and upon finding by the Commission that the public interest, convenience, and necessity will be served thereby"). The Commission published notice of the application and solicited comments, see Public Notice, 8 F.C.C.R. 7110 \(1993\). A number of parties including BellSouth and SBC, both of which own Bell Operating Companies that provide cellular service in competition with McCaw, filed petitions to deny the application or to impose conditions upon [4] the grant of the application. See Order, P 5.

Meanwhile, AT&T and McCaw had submitted to the Department of Justice extensive materials relating to the merger as required by the Hart-Scott-Rodino amendment to the Clayton Act (HSR), 15 U.S.C. § 18a. In May 1994, after the period for commenting upon the pending license transfer application had closed, the Commission staff asked AT&T and McCaw to submit the HSR materials to the FCC and to allow counsel for any party of record to review all the HSR materials pursuant to an order prohibiting the unauthorized release of confidential information. See Protective Order, 9 F.C.C.R. 2613 (C.C.Bur. 1994). After reviewing indices identifying all HSR materials relating to certain specified subjects, however, the staff narrowed its request for HSR materials and stated that it would not expand the scope of its examination "in the absence of extraordinary circumstances and a specific factual showing that good cause exists for delaying the Commission's decision." After reviewing the HSR indices themselves, however, BellSouth and SBC filed further comments suggesting, inter alia, that the Commission review certain additional HSR documents.

[5] In July 1994 the DOJ simultaneously filed in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia a complaint charging that the merger would violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, see United States v. AT&T Corp. and McCaw Cellular Communications, Inc., No. 94-CV01555 (D.D.C.) and a proposed consent decree to which AT&T and McCaw had already agreed, Proposed Final Judgment (PFJ), 59 Fed. Reg. 44,159, 44,159-66 (1994). The district court has not yet passed upon the PFJ.

For its part, the Commission approved the license transfers in September 1994. The portion of its public interest inquiry most central to this appeal is its "consideration of the effect of the transfer on competition," Order, P 9. The Commission analyzed the competitive impact of the merger in three markets: (1) the national market for IX services, see id. at WW 12-15, 21-34; (2) the local market for cellular service, see id. at WW 16-17, 36-41; and (3) the national market for cellular network equipment, see id. at WW 18-19, 42-56. It found that the merger would have significantly greater pro-competitive than anti-competitive effects, id. at P 62, and rejected most of the [6] many conditions that the parties challenging the merger had urged it to impose upon the transfer, see id. at P 20. The Commission also rejected various objections to the procedures it had followed, see id. at WW 155-173.

BellSouth and SBC now appeal the Order, pursuant to 47 U.S.C. § 402\(b\)\(6\). AT&T intervenes in support of the Commission, and the Ad Hoc IX Carriers (Ad Hoc IXC's), a "coalition of resellers of [IX] service," see Order, P 152, intervene in support of the appellants. In addition to supporting the appellants' arguments, however, the Ad Hoc IXC's challenge the Commission's refusal to consider their allegations that the merger would facilitate AT&T's continuation of certain allegedly anti-competitive practices, see Order at WW 152-154. Because "an intervening party may join issue only on a matter that has been brought before the court by another party," Illinois Bell Telephone [*1490] Co. v. FCC, 286 U.S. App. D.C. 34, 911 F.2d 776, 786 \(D.C. Cir. 1990\), we do not address the merits of that argument.

II. ANALYSIS

HN1 We review the Commission's decision only to determine whether it is "arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law," 5 U.S.C. § 706\(2\)\(A\). HN2 The Commission's decision that a license transfer is "in the public interest" is entitled to "substantial judicial deference." FCC v. WNCN Listeners Guild, 450 U.S. 582, 596, 67 L. Ed. 2d 521, 101 S. Ct. 1266 \(1981\). So long as "the FCC's action resulted from consideration of the relevant factors" and the agency has not "succumbed to a clear error of judgment," its decision must be upheld. GTE Service Corp. v. FCC, 251 U.S. App. D.C. 181, 782 F.2d 263, 268 \(D.C. Cir. 1986\).

A. The Commission's Public Interest Analysis

BellSouth and SBC challenge different aspects of the Commission's public interest analysis, see Order, WW 1-61. BellSouth, supported by the Ad Hoc IXC's, contends generally that the Commission applied the wrong standard and that its public interest analysis was riddled with errors and inconsistencies. More particularly, SBC argues that the Commission should have analyzed the impact of the merger in the market for IX service available to cellular customers.

1. BellSouth's Appeal

BellSouth launches a diffuse attack, supported by a collection of loosely intertwined arguments, upon the Commission's public interest analysis. Here, we summarize and address first its broad claim and then [8] each of its individual arguments.

First, BellSouth contends broadly that the Commission "manipulated the legal standards for analyzing competitive effects" by relying solely upon the antitrust laws in order to analyze the anti-competitive effects of the merger while looking beyond antitrust considerations to gauge the pro-competitive benefits. Second, and more specifically, BellSouth argues that the Commission failed to consider "special circumstances affecting competition," particularly the fact that the Modified Final Judgment (MFJ)--the consent decree setting forth the terms by which AT&T divested the BOCs--prohibits a BOC (and consequently a BOC-owned cellular carrier) from selling IX service directly to its customers, see United States v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 552 F. Supp. 131, 227 \(D.D.C. 1982\). Third, BellSouth contends that the Commission's decision allows AT&T to be "the only facilities based national and local end-to-end service in the country since divestiture," which it would not have done had it properly focused its competitive analysis upon the market for the "integrated provision of nationwide and end-to-end cellular and interexchange service." Fourth, [\[9\]](#) and relatedly, BellSouth challenges the Commission's determination that the market for cellular service is local. Fifth, BellSouth claims that the Commission ignored the HSR documents that were submitted to it. Finally, BellSouth argues, in the alternative, that the Commission should have imposed certain conditions upon its approval of the license transfers: (1) that AT&T not oppose modifications to the MFJ that would permit the BOCs to offer IX service directly to cellular customers; (2) that McCaw be made subject to the same equal access restrictions as the MFJ imposes upon the BOCs; and (3) that McCaw be prohibited from selling IX and cellular services as a single package ("bundling").

First. BellSouth's broad claim is wrong as a matter of fact. The Commission considered the competitive impact of the merger based upon antitrust principles and found the pro-competitive effects vastly to outweigh the few anti-competitive effects. When the Commission looked beyond the scope of antitrust law and considered the implications of the merger for the development of the telecommunications industry, technical innovation, international competitiveness, investment in infrastructure, and [\[10\]](#) customer privacy, it found nothing but pro-competitive and otherwise beneficial effects. See, e.g., Order, P 57 (merger will lead to "broadened range of [\[*1491\]](#) consumer choices" because McCaw has pledged to give its customers equal access to all IX carriers); id. at P 59 (merger will increase U.S. competitiveness in international market for telecommunications services). Nothing in the Commission's consideration of the pro-competitive and anti-competitive effects of the merger suggests that it "manipulated legal standards" and, notably, BellSouth contests none of the Commission's findings in this area. Insofar as there are any specific anti-competitive effects that BellSouth claims the Commission slighted, we address them below in the context of BellSouth's more specific arguments.

Second. BellSouth's specific argument that the Commission failed to consider the MFJ as a "special circumstance affecting competition" is also wrong as a matter of fact. The Commission considered the restrictions that the MFJ imposes upon the cellular affiliates of the BOCs and rejected BellSouth's notion that it should impose similar restrictions upon McCaw; that would serve the interests only of the [\[11\]](#) BOCs rather than those of the public. In the Commission's own words, "assuming [with BellSouth] ... that the MFJ restricts competition in undesirable ways, expanding its application to the BOCs' competitors would only compound the harm". Id. at WW 32-35.

BellSouth gives us no reason to doubt the Commission's conclusion; it argues in effect that the BOCs' welfare should have been paramount in the Commission's analysis. HN3 The Commission is not at liberty, however, to subordinate the public interest to the interest of "equalizing competition among competitors." Hawaiian Telephone Co. v. FCC, 162 U.S. App. D.C. 229, 498 F.2d 771, 776 \(D.C. Cir. 1974\); see also W.U. Telephone Co. v. FCC, 214 U.S. App. D.C. 294, 665 F.2d 1112, 1122 \(D.C. Cir. 1981\) ("equalization of competition is not itself a sufficient basis for Commission action"). Moreover, the Commission is currently addressing in a separate rulemaking the question whether it should require all cellular carriers to provide equal access to all IX carriers. Order, WW 68-70; see Equal Access and Interconnection Obligations Pertaining to Commercial Mobile Radio Services, Notice of Proposed Rulemaking, 9 F.C.C.R. 5408 \(1994\).

In addition, rather than launch a collateral [\[12\]](#) attack upon the MFJ by requiring AT&T not to oppose its further modification, the Commission decided to consider in a separate proceeding the impact of the MFJ upon the ability of the BOCs to compete. See id. at WW 32, 35. That manner of proceeding is entirely reasonable: in the matter under review, the Commission was required to determine whether the merger of AT&T and McCaw would be in the public interest, not to review the overall level of competition in the cellular industry or the impact of the MFJ upon that competition. Finally, we note that the court administering the MFJ has since reviewed the impact of the restriction of which BellSouth complains, and has determined that the BOCs may offer IX service directly to their cellular customers in some areas. See United States v. Western Electric Co., Inc., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5563, No. 82-CV0192 (D.D.C. Apr. 28, 1995).

Third. We find no merit to BellSouth's claim that, contrary to the Commission's conclusion, the merged company will have the power to restrain competition in the same way that the Bell System had prior to divestiture. The Commission specifically rejected BellSouth's analogy between AT&T/McCaw and the predivestiture Bell System, 13 both because there is no "bottleneck" for wireless service comparable to the local "bottleneck" for wireline service, and because the cellular industry enjoys "a degree of rivalry not present in 'wireline' exchange services." Id. at P 39. Those conclusions are well founded.

In the wireline market there is a bottleneck because virtually every call must go through the local BOC. Prior to divestiture, the BOC's control over this bottleneck allowed it to favor one IX carrier (AT&T) over others; the integrated Bell System had the power to constrict competition in the IX market. In the cellular market, however, there are two competing providers in every area of the country. Because no cellular carrier has control over all of the calls originated in its area, there is no "mobile bottleneck" parallel to the "landline bottleneck." Although nearly every cellular long distance call must travel across a BOC's landlines in *1492 order to reach an IX carrier's network, see United States v. Western Electric Co., Opinion, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5563, No. 82-CV0192, op. at 6-8 (D.D.C. Apr. 28, 1995), this "mobile bottleneck" would raise concerns about competition only if a BOC cellular carrier were integrated with an IX carrier, 14 which the BOC might then favor. Because a non-BOC cellular carrier, such as McCaw, has no "bottleneck" control over calls, its vertical integration with an IX carrier does not present the same problem.

Moreover, the merger is not as unusual as BellSouth suggests; non-BOC cellular carriers have always resold IX service directly to their customers. Indeed, prior to the merger, McCaw itself resold IX service (purchased from AT&T) directly to its customers. The merged company will merely internalize what had been a contractual relationship, and thereby (the parties to the merger believe) make them more efficient.

Finally, we note that the Commission found that the vertical integration of McCaw's cellular service with AT&T's IX service and manufacturing would not "preclude the entry or success of competitive firms," id. at P 38. The Commission also noted that the imminent entry of so-called personal communications services, and the further expansion of existing wireless systems such as specialized mobile radio, mean that cellular carriers will be facing greater competition in the near future. Id. at WW 39-41. These findings, neither of which is challenged by BellSouth, further 15 support the Commission's conclusion that the merger will not have an anti-competitive impact.

Fourth. We reject BellSouth's challenge to the Commission's determination that the relevant market for competitive analysis is the local market for cellular service. See Order, WW 16-17. The Commission reasoned that because it had licensed each cellular carrier to serve a Local Service Area and awarded two licenses within each LSA, the geographic market within which cellular carriers compete is the LSA. BellSouth notes that as a result of agreements among cellular carriers in different LSAs, a cellular customer now enjoys uninterrupted service when he travels outside of his "home" LSA. That is beside the point, however. Regardless whether a cellular customer can have uninterrupted service when traveling beyond his home LSA, the market is local because "the purchasers cannot, as a practical matter, turn to suppliers outside their own areas." Standard Oil v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 299 n.5, 93 L. Ed. 1371, 69 S. Ct. 1051 \(1949\).

Fifth. BellSouth's argument that the Commission ignored the HSR documents that AT&T and McCaw submitted to it is completely without merit. The Commission stated that it reviewed 16 the documents. Order, P 6. The agency is not obliged to summarize in its decision the contents of all of the documents in the record before it. The Commission's failure to refer specifically to those documents or to their contents in the text of the Order is hardly surprising inasmuch as they are under seal. See Order, P 155 n.343 (because of Protective Order, arguments based upon HSR materials "summarized generally"). While the Commission may have had the option of publishing portions of the Order under seal in order to address the HSR materials expressly, as BellSouth suggested at oral argument of this appeal and upon which we express no opinion, there is apparently no precedent for such a practice and the Commission certainly was not required to do that.

Sixth. Finally, the Commission's decision not to condition the merger as urged by BellSouth is reasonable. The conditions proposed by BellSouth, like BellSouth's arguments generally, seem to be rooted in the mistaken belief that the Commission should protect competitors at the expense of consumers. See Hawaiian Telephone, 498 F.2d at 776 (HN4) "relative competitive positions of ... carriers ... is of little relevance [17] in determining whether the public interest test is satisfied"). We have already explained why we find no error in the Commission's refusal to impose upon McCaw the restrictions that the MFJ places upon the BOCs, and why it was reasonable for the Commission to decline to launch a collateral attack upon the MFJ.

We also find reasonable the Commission's decision that McCaw's ability to bundle IX and cellular services is in the public interest. [*1493] BellSouth's only argument against the practice is that because the MFJ prohibits it from bundling IX and cellular service, McCaw should also be so limited. Again, BellSouth would have the Commission serve that company's own narrow interest rather than the broader public interest. Moreover, as a reseller of AT&T's IX service, McCaw has always "bundled" IX and cellular service--a McCaw cellular customer automatically gets AT&T as his long distance company. Finally, we have no reason to doubt the Commission's conclusion that bundling will lead to innovative rate structures and lower prices, both of which will benefit consumers. Order, WW 73-78.

2. SBC's Appeal

SBC disputes the Commission's decision that the national market for [18] IX service is the relevant market in which to measure the horizontal impact of the merger. SBC contends that the relevant market is instead that for IX service provided to cellular customers in "cellular service areas in which McCaw offers [IX] services." SBC argues that the Commission would have recognized the anti-competitive effect of the merger if only it had focused upon "the characteristics of consumer demand for cellular long distance"--as did the DOJ in its suit to block the merger, see United States v. AT&T Corp., and McCaw Cellular Com. Inc., Competitive Impact Statement, 59 Fed. Reg. 44166, 44168-169 (Aug. 26, 1994)--rather than upon the market as defined by "the characteristics of retail supply." SBC points out that as it defines the market, McCaw, in its capacity as a reseller to cellular customers of IX service purchased from AT&T, has the second largest market share after its merger partner, AT&T.

The Commission's focus upon the market for all IX service rather than the market for IX service provided to cellular customers is perfectly reasonable. We accept as true, for the sake of the argument, SBC's contention that a "small but significant and nontransitory price [19] increase in the cost of cellular originated interexchange service ... would not cause [a] wireless customer ... to switch to a landline phone," and that "cellular long distance callers generally do not view wired telephones as a viable substitute." HN5 A market need not be defined solely by reference to consumer demand, however. The substitutability of supply is also relevant, as the Commission noted: "there is no significant difference between the interexchange facilities made available to a customer making an interexchange call from a 'wireline' telephone and the facilities made available to a customer making an interexchange call from a cellular phone." Order, P 14.

Supply substitutability is a well-accepted consideration in market definition. See Phillip E. Areeda, Herbert Hovenkamp & John L. Solow, IIA Antitrust Law 252 (1995) (HN6) "Although not close substitutes for each other on the demand side, two products produced interchangeably from the same production facilities are in the same market"); id. at 255 ("It is of little consequence that consumers have no good substitutes if producers can immediately respond to a firm's price increase by switching production [20] to that firm's products") (emphasis in original); id. at 257 ("Of course, whatever market definition is employed, relative ease of entry by other firms should always be taken into account. The one course that would be clearly wrong would be to define the market as A alone while ignoring the ease of entry from B producers"); Richard A. Posner, Antitrust Law: An Economic Perspective 125-134 (1976). This principle has been endorsed by the Supreme Court, see, e.g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325 n.42, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962) (HN7) "cross-elasticity of production facilities may ... be an important factor in defining a product market"); and applied by this court and others, see Rothery Storage Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142, 792 F.2d 210, 218 (D.C. Cir. 1986) ("... the capability of other production facilities to be converted to produce a substitute product is referred to as cross-elasticity of supply. The higher [this] cross-elasticity, the more likely it is that similar products ... are to be counted in the relevant market"); Calnetics Corp. v. Volkswagen of America, 532 F.2d 674, 691 (9th Cir. 1976) ("production cross-elasticity must be considered" when defining product [21] market); see also *Department of Justice/Federal [1494] Trade Commission Horizontal Merger Guidelines, 4Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) P 13,104 at 20,573-4 n.14 ("if production substitution among a group of products is nearly universal among the firms selling one or more of those products ... the Agency may use an aggregate description of those markets as a matter of convenience").

In its reply brief, SBC contends that the Commission did not really rest upon supply substitution in defining the relevant market. That is clearly wrong. The Commission based its market definition upon both its own finding that an IX carrier can readily make available to cellular customers the facilities it uses to serve wireline customers, Order, P 14, and upon the related finding of the Attorney General of California that "arbitrage activities would defeat any attempt by AT&T/McCaw to raise cellular interexchange rates above existing levels," Order, P 13.

SBC also argues that the Commission failed adequately to consider the possibility that McCaw could develop a national wireless IX network to compete with AT&T, and therefore failed to recognize that the merger would diminish potential competition in the [22] IX market. The Commission did, however, consider that possibility--and dismiss it as extremely speculative in view of the tremendous capital investment that would be required in order to build a national wireless IX network and of McCaw's fragile financial status. Order, P 30 n.73. The Commission's treatment of that subject was reasonable; the agency's responsibility is to deal with "probabilities" not "ephemeral possibilities." United States v. FCC, 652 F.2d 72 at 99.

B. Proposed Conditions

As the Commission reviewed the competitive impact of the merger, it considered whether there was any need to condition its approval of the license transfers in any way. SBC now argues that the Commission erred in refusing to adopt two of the conditions that SBC proposed in order to protect against specific anti-competitive practices by AT&T.

1. Use of Information Gained Through Provision of IX Service

AT&T provides IX service directly to any customer of a BOC-owned cellular carrier who selects AT&T as his IX carrier. As a result, AT&T has access to so-called customer proprietary network information (CPNI), i.e., each customer's name, address, cellular telephone [23] number, and pattern of cellular telephone usage. Before the Commission, SBC noted that this information could be used by McCaw both to monitor its cellular competitors' activities and to market its cellular service directly to their customers. SBC argued that the Commission should prohibit AT&T from disclosing CPNI to McCaw.

The Commission refused to impose that limitation because it regards AT&T/McCaw's ability to offer one-stop shopping for all of a customer's telecommunications needs as one of the benefits to the public resulting from the merger. Order, P 83. Instead, the Commission imposed upon AT&T's use of CPNI the same restrictions that it had earlier imposed upon AT&T's use of CPNI for the marketing of enhanced services and customer premises equipment (CPE). See id.; see also Rules Governing Telephone Companies' Use of CPNI, Public Notice, 9 F.C.C.R. 1685 \(1994\). In short, unless a customer requests that AT&T not use his CPNI, the Commission left AT&T free to use that information in its marketing of McCaw's cellular service. See Order, P 83.

SBC contends that the Commission misstated the benefit to consumers of letting AT&T use their CPNI: The typical cellular [24] customer solicited by McCaw, unlike a typical customer for enhanced services or CPE, will be unable to bargain for a lower price from his current provider. SBC argues also that the market for cellular service, unlike the market for enhanced services, will not be spurred to grow as a result of AT&T's using CPNI for direct marketing. Thus, according to SBC, "there can be no public interest justification for allowing use of ... CPNI to raid competitors' customers."

SBC's argument, like many of those reviewed above, seems to be not that the Commission's decision--here, its refusal to impose [*1495] the condition--will hurt competition or otherwise adversely affect the public interest, but instead that it will hurt SBC by increasing the sting of the competition it will face from the merged company. We agree with the Commission (and so apparently does SBC) that AT&T/McCaw's ability to market its service directly to the customers of other cellular carriers should lead to lower prices and improved service offerings designed to lure those customers away. We part company with SBC only in that we do not see why that is contrary to the public interest. Even assuming that a targeted customer is unable [25] individually to negotiate a lower price directly with his BOC-owned cellular carrier, there is no reason to think that the BOC-owned carrier will not respond to the competitive spur by providing price and service levels, if it can, comparable to those offered by McCaw. While the number of cellular customers may not be directly increased by McCaw's marketing to the BOCs' existing cellular customers, the intensified price and service competition that follows is likely to draw more customers into the cellular market--a clear public benefit. Therefore, nothing in SBC's argument gives us reason to doubt the Commission's conclusion that the proposed condition would be contrary to the public interest.

2. Transfer of Information from AT&T Network Equipment Personnel to AT&T IX Service Personnel

In its role as a manufacturer and supplier of cellular network equipment, AT&T provides repair service and equipment upgrades to cellular carriers that use AT&T equipment. As a result, AT&T may obtain sensitive information about cellular carriers that compete with McCaw. SBC argues that the Commission erred in refusing to prohibit AT&T from using such information for the benefit of McCaw. [26] See Order, P 110.

First, the Commission noted that there had been no significant problem in the past with AT&T misusing information obtained by its network equipment personnel. Id., P 112. Standing alone, that finding might be insufficient to support the Commission's decision; in the past, after all, AT&T had little incentive to use the information to the advantage of another cellular company, whereas its affiliation with McCaw will create such an incentive. The Commission also concluded, however, that existing market incentives and legal safeguards against the sharing of proprietary and confidential information appear to be sufficient to protect McCaw's cellular competitors from the type of conduct that SBC claims to fear. Thus, the Commission found both that AT&T's manufacturing business would not last long if potential customers are given reason to fear that AT&T will misuse their confidential information, and that the threat of legal proceedings would further deter the misuse of such information. Id. at P 112. These are reasonable observations and they support the conclusions drawn by the FCC. If AT&T is unable to persuade purchasers of its cellular network equipment [27] that their sensitive business information will not be shared with McCaw, then AT&T's $ 500 million-per-year network equipment business will not long endure. Moreover, AT&T's contracts with its network equipment customers already prohibit AT&T from using confidential information and those customers can, in the future, seek even greater restrictions upon AT&T's use of this information. See id. at P 113.

SBC points to the Commission's decision to impose conditions designed to limit AT&T's ability to discriminate against "locked-in" purchasers of network equipment, see id. at P 99, and suggests that it was arbitrary for the Commission not to impose similar conditions in this context. The Commission, however, reasonably found that cellular carriers generally had not contracted against the problem of discrimination, while they had contracted against the misuse of confidential business information.

Finally, we note that the Commission offered its complaint process to any cellular carrier that believes it is being victimized by any specific behavior on the part of AT&T. Id. at P 83. We are therefore confident that the Commission stands ready, in the event that its reliance upon [28] market forces and existing legal norms proves inadequate, to revisit the claimed need for regulatory control [*1496] over AT&T's use of its equipment customers' confidential business information.

C. Procedural Challenges

Both BellSouth and SBC challenge the procedures that the Commission followed in this matter. SBC argues that the Commission should have granted its request that the HSR documents be released to the court that administers the MFJ. BellSouth argues both that the HSR document production process was irrational and that the Commission should have held an evidentiary hearing.

1. Waiver of the Protective Order

The four BOCs that commented jointly upon the HSR material also asked for the Commission's permission to submit those comments and 84 HSR documents, under seal, to the district court that administers the MFJ. The Commission refused to grant that limited waiver of the Protective Order, however, holding that the BOCs had failed to show "extraordinary circumstances" involving "a compelling public interest" in submitting the documents to the court. See Order, P 167.

SBC advances no compelling reason why the Commission should have waived the Protective Order. Although [29] SBC points out that § 3 of the Protective Order allows the Commission to disclose the information to "any person ... in the interest of justice," and argues that in denying its request the Commission deviated from this standard, there is no reason to believe that the Commission's restatement of its standard is in any way material. The MFJ court can, either on its own motion or at the request of a BOC, itself order the production of the HSR documents. Moreover, the MFJ court has now passed upon the issue to which BellSouth contends the HSR materials are relevant, viz., whether a BOC should be permitted to offer IX service directly to its cellular customers.

2. Review of the HSR Documents

BellSouth argues that the Commission erred by asking AT&T and McCaw to submit to it only a portion of their voluminous HSR submissions to the DOJ. In particular, BellSouth claims that the Commission acted arbitrarily in failing to review certain documents deemed relevant by both AT&T and BellSouth.

The Commission's manner of proceeding was well within its procedural discretion in implementing the Communications Act. The HSR documents contained millions of pages; for the Commission to have [30] sorted through all of them would have delayed a decision on the transfer indefinitely. HN8 [↑] The Commission is fully capable of determining which documents are relevant to its decision-making; for us to hold that the Commission is bound to review every document deemed relevant by the parties would be an unwarranted intrusion into the agency's ability to conduct its own business, see Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. v. NRDC, 435 U.S. 519, 549, 55 L. Ed. 2d 460, 98 S. Ct. 1197 (1978) ("court should ... not stray beyond the judicial province ... to impose upon the agency its own notion of which procedures are "best" "), and would "arm interested parties with a potent instrument for delay." U.S. v. FCC, 652 F.2d at 91.

3. Need for an Evidentiary Hearing

BellSouth argues that the Commission erred in refusing to hold a full evidentiary hearing upon the license transfer. It contends that a hearing is necessary in order to resolve "disputed factual issues," including definition of the relevant market(s), the effect of the merger upon competition in those markets, and AT&T's purpose in pursuing the merger.

HN9 [↑] "The decision of whether or not hearings are necessary or desirable is a matter in which the Commission's discretion [31] is paramount." Gencom Inc. v. FCC, 265 U.S. App. D.C. 403, 832 F.2d 171, 181 (D.C. Cir. 1987). HN10 [↑] A party seeking to compel the Commission to hold an evidentiary hearing must: (1) file a petition to deny containing "specific allegations of fact sufficient to show that ... a grant of the application would be prima facie inconsistent with the public interest," id. at 180; and (2) present to the Commission "a substantial and material question of fact." Id. BellSouth has done neither. BellSouth's "disputed factual issues" are about just the sort of "legal [*1497] and economic conclusions concerning market structure, competitive effect, and the public interest" that "manifestly do not" require a live hearing. U.S. v. FCC, 652 F.2d at 89-90. The Commission here developed an extensive record; by its own later account, it held a "thorough hearing--the most extensive ever held ... about the transfer of mobile radio licenses." FCC Response to Emergency Motion for Interim Relief, No. 94-1639, at 10 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 6, 1994). Our reading of the record suggests that an "evidentiary hearing would less promote reasoned decisionmaking in this case than it would delay and impede" the Commission's decision. U.S. [32] v. FCC, 652 F.2d at 96).

III. CONCLUSION

The appellants do little more than complain that the merger of AT&T and McCaw will lead to greater competition in both the market for IX service and the market for cellular service. They have failed to show in any way why the merger would not be in the public interest--indeed, they have more nearly shown the opposite--or why the Commission's conclusions are in error. Therefore, the order under review is Affirmed.

56 F.3d 1484, *1497 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 15533, 32

HN1[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Leave to amend a complaint shall be freely given when justice so requires. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\). The rule in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit is to allow a party to amend its pleadings in the absence of a showing by the nonmovant of prejudice or bad faith. In determining what constitutes "prejudice," a court considers whether the assertion of the new claim would: (i) require the opponent to expend significant additional resources to conduct discovery and prepare for trial; (ii) significantly delay the resolution of the dispute; or (iii) prevent the plaintiff from bringing a timely action in another jurisdiction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN2[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

Definition of the relevant market is the first step in a court's analysis of an alleged antitrust violation. A complaint must allege a relevant product market in which the anticompetitive effects of the challenged activity can be assessed. The relevant product market includes all products reasonably interchangeable, determination of which requires consideration of cross-elasticity of demand.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN3 [↓] Market Definition, Relevant Market

The definition of the relevant market lies initially with a plaintiff. Defendants have their opportunity to challenge the plaintiff's definition, but the court must accept a reasonable definition on the face of the complaint. Unless the proposed definition is patently over- or under- inclusive, the court must accept the plaintiff's proposed definition.

A short plain statement of a claim for relief which gives notice to the opposing party is all that is necessary in antitrust cases, as in other cases under the Federal Rules. In considering the complaint on a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), the Court must accept the pleader's allegations of facts as true together with such reasonable inferences as may be drawn in the pleader's favor. That does not mean that conclusory allegations which merely recite the litany of antitrust will suffice. An antitrust complaint must adequately define the relevant product market, allege antitrust injury, and allege conduct in violation of the antitrust laws.

The conspiracy to monopolize offense consists of three elements: (1) concerted action, (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) a specific intent to monopolize.

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The essential facility doctrine is not a separate violation of antitrust law, but rather is a label that may aid in the analysis of a monopoly claim. In an early formulation, the essential facility doctrine, also called the bottleneck principle, states that where facilities cannot practicably be duplicated by would-be competitors, those in possession of them must allow them to be shared on fair terms. It is illegal restraint of trade to foreclose the scarce facility. The essential facility doctrine, however, is in tension with another doctrine: Antitrust law does not require one competitor to give another a break just because failing to do so offends notions of fair play. To prove monopolization of an essential facility, a party must prove four elements: (1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) a competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) the denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility. The first and third elements go to defendant's degree of control while the second and fourth go to determining whether the facility is truly "essential".

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A plaintiff alleging monopolization of an "essential facility" must show more than inconvenience or even some economic loss; he must show that an alternative to the facility is not feasible. The essential facility doctrine cannot be read so broadly as to mean that a plaintiff is entitled to any facility it finds desirable or convenient, or that retailers must stock every product of a given type.

Under New York law, to prevail on a claim of tortious interference with prospective business relations, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant interfered with business relations existing between a plaintiff and a third party, either with the purpose of harming the plaintiff or by means that are dishonest, unfair, or improper. If the defendant's interference is intended, at least in part, to advance its own competing interests, the claim will fail unless the means employed include criminal or fraudulent conduct. The tort usually involves a business relationship that is something less than contractual in nature.

HN10 [blue icon] Unfair Business Practices, Elements

The tort of unfair competition is not some amorphous catch-all claim to be appended to any complaint involving claims that a competitor has injured a business rival. It is a specific claim with distinct elements. Plaintiff must allege (1) acts or omissions by defendants that proximately caused a misappropriation; and 2) the property or benefit misappropriated. The tort usually concerns the taking and use of the plaintiff's property to compete against the plaintiff's own use of the same property. Failure to allege with specificity what property has been misappropriated will result in dismissal of the claim.

A claim under § 2 of the Clayton Act is similar to a claim for predatory pricing under § 2 of the Sherman Act: The essence of the claim under either statute is the same: A business rival has priced its products in an unfair manner with an object to eliminate or retard competition and thereby gain and exercise control over prices in the relevant market. Under either claim, plaintiff must prove two elements: (1) that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs and (2) there exists a reasonable prospect of recouping its investment in below-cost prices. Although there is no well settled benchmark for determining an appropriate measure of a company's costs, it has been suggested that, in the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, the appropriate standard may be reasonably anticipated average variable cost.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

McKENNA, D.J.

Plaintiff, Anti-Monopoly Inc. ("Anti-Monopoly"), brought this action against defendants Hasbro, Inc. ("Hasbro"), Toys "R" Us, Inc. ("Toys"), and K-Mart Corp. ("K-Mart") (together "Defendants"), alleging a conspiracy to allow Hasbro to monopolize the family board game market. Defendants have moved individually pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) to dismiss some or all of the claims for failure to state claims upon which relief can be granted. Anti-Monopoly has cross-moved pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 15 for leave to amend its Amended Complaint. For the reasons stated below, Defendants' motions are granted in part and denied in part, and Anti-Monopoly's motion is granted.

Facts

Anti-Monopoly developed and markets a family board game called Anti-Monopoly and currently possesses less than 1% of the market for family board games. Hasbro, Anti-Monopoly's competitor, is the leading manufacturer of family board games, with more than 80% of the market. Toys is the largest retailer of family board games with about 35-40% of the retail market. K-Mart is the second largest retailer of board [*2] games with about 15% of the retail market. Anti-Monopoly and Hasbro compete directly for space in retail stores like Toys and Hasbro. (Proposed Second Am. Compl. ("Compl.") PP 4-7, 25.)

Anti-Monopoly's proposed Second Amended Complaint alleges that Hasbro has for more than a decade been gradually increasing its market share through the acquisition of smaller family board game manufacturers such as Ideal Toys and Parker Brothers, as well as by certain practices which violate federal antitrust law. Most of those practices are not the subject of this motion, as Hasbro has not moved to dismiss Anti-Monopoly's claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act. Toys and K-Mart are alleged to be co-conspirators in Hasbro's schemes standing to benefit from helping Hasbro develop monopoly power in the relevant market.

The Amended Complaint includes eight separate counts against all three defendants and Anti-Monopoly has cross-moved for leave to add an additional Count (Count IX) in its proposed Second Amended Complaint. The Court must address the motion to Amend and then each defendant's motion to dismiss each count.

II.

Motion to Amend Amended Complaint

Anti-Monopoly has moved to amend to add certain [*3] supplemental allegations as well as an additional count.

In their motions to dismiss, Defendants have only addressed two substantive changes to Anti-Monopoly's Complaint: a revision in the definition of the relevant market and a new claim (Claim IX) alleging violation of § 3 of the Clayton Act. The Court takes each of these in turn and otherwise grants Anti-Monopoly's request to make all other changes proposed in its Second Amended Complaint.

HN1[] Leave to amend a complaint shall be freely given when justice so requires. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a).

The rule in this Circuit has been to allow a party to amend its pleadings in the absence of a showing by the nonmovant of prejudice or bad faith. . . . In determining what constitutes "prejudice," we consider whether the assertion of the new claim would: (i) require the opponent to expend significant additional resources to conduct discovery and prepare for trial; (ii) significantly delay the resolution of the dispute; or (iii) prevent the plaintiff from bringing a timely action in another jurisdiction.

Block v. First Blood Assocs., 988 F.2d 344, 350 (2d Cir. 1993) (citations omitted).

A.

Hasbro's opposition to Anti-Monopoly's [*4] proposal to redefine the relevant market is twofold: first, that the definition is overly narrow, and, second, that Hasbro would be prejudiced in that it has already prepared a defense based on the original definition of the market and would be forced to incur a substantial cost to refine its defense based on the revised definition.

HN2[] Definition of the relevant market is "the first step in a court's analysis" of an alleged antitrust violation. Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 268 (2d Cir. 1979). "A complaint must allege a relevant product market in which the anticompetitive effects of the challenged activity can be assessed. The relevant product market includes all products reasonably interchangeable, determination of which requires consideration of cross-elasticity of demand." Re-Alco Indus., Inc. v. National Ctr. for Health Educ., Inc., 812 F. Supp. 387, 391 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (citations omitted).

In its Amended Complaint, Anti-Monopoly defined the relevant product market as "board games". (Am. Compl. P 15.) In its proposed Second Amended Complaint, Anti-Monopoly seeks to redefine the relevant market as "family board games" and the relevant submarket as [*5] "monopoly-type family board games". (Compl. P 15.) "Family board games" are defined as "non-strategy board games, in which players move tokens on a board surface, and the games are suitable for players at least 7-8 years old and are targeted for group play which does not exclude the 7 or 8 to 18 year age group." (Id. P 12.) "Monopoly-type family board games" means family board games based on some of the monopolistic features of real estate, including the payment of rents. (Id.)

HN3[] The definition of the relevant market lies initially with the plaintiff. Defendants will have their opportunity to challenge Anti-Monopoly's definition, but the Court must accept a reasonable definition on the face of the Complaint. Minpeco, S. A. v. Conticommodity Servs., 552 F. Supp. 327, 331 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) ("Rule 8 does not require that a plaintiff 'define specifically the boundaries of its purported market.' . . . Questions of market definition can be narrowed and determined through the discovery process."). Unless the proposed definition is patently over- or under-inclusive, the Court must accept the plaintiff's proposed definition. "Family-board games" is not a patently under-inclusive definition [*6] and the Court will allow Anti-Monopoly to redefine the relevant market in its Second Amended Complaint.¹

Turning to Hasbro's argument that it will be forced to incur a substantial cost in revising its defense, the Court may consider, at a later stage of this litigation, an order requiring Anti-Monopoly to pay Hasbro for specifically identifiable additional costs incurred by Hasbro as a result of having had to defend based on the original definition.² See Ovitz v. Jefferies & Co., 102 F.R.D. 242, 244 \(N.D. Ill. 1984\).

[*7] B.

Hasbro's only opposition to the addition of Count IX is that the amendment would be futile.³

Section 3 of the Clayton Act provides

HN4 [↑] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce . . . to make a sale . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise . . . of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

15 U.S.C. § 14.

In proposed Count IX, Anti-Monopoly alleges Hasbro has violated § 3 of the Clayton Act by "making sales of family board games to K-Mart, Toys and the other alleged co-conspirators on terms which require them not to buy family board games from plaintiff and other small [*8] family board game competitors." (Id. P 93.) Having tracked the language of the statute and included a number of factual allegations to support its theory, Anti-Monopoly has adequately pled a claim under § 3 of the Act. Therefore, the Court grants Anti-Monopoly's motion to add Count IX.⁴

III.

Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) Standards in Antitrust Cases

HN5 [↑] "[A] short plain statement of a claim for relief which gives notice to the opposing party is all that is necessary in antitrust cases, as in other cases under the Federal Rules." George C. Frey Ready-Mixed Concrete, Inc. v. Pine Hill Concrete Mix Corp., 554 F.2d 551, 554 \(2d Cir. 1977\) (citing Nagler v. Admiral Corp., 248 F.2d 319 \(2d Cir. 1957\), and 5 Charles Alan Wright & Arthur Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure, § 1228 (1969)). In considering the complaint on a motion under [Fed. R. Civ. \[*9\] P. 12\(b\)\(6\)](#), "the Court must accept the pleader's allegations of facts as true together with such reasonable inferences as may be drawn in [the pleader's] favor."

³ Anti-Monopoly has withdrawn Count IX as to Toys and K-Mart. (Pl. Reply Br. at 9.)

Deep South Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. v. PepsiCo, Inc., 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4639, at *12, 1989 WL 48400, at * 5 (S.D.N.Y. May 2, 1989). That does not mean that "conclusory allegations which merely recite the litany of antitrust will . . . suffice." John's Insulation, Inc. v. Siska Constr. Co., 774 F. Supp. 156, 163 (S.D.N.Y. 1991). An antitrust complaint must "adequately . . . define the relevant product market, . . . allege antitrust injury, [and] . . . allege conduct in violation of the antitrust laws." Re-Alco Indus., Inc. v. National Ctr. for Health Educ., Inc., 812 F. Supp. 387, 391 (S.D.N.Y. 1993).

Furthermore, it has been very persuasively argued that an antitrust plaintiff whose complaint is challenged must articulate "a careful statement of his legal theory." Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law, P 317e (1978). It is not clear however, in the Second Circuit, that the theory -- as distinguished from the facts supporting it -- must be set forth in the complaint itself, see George C. Frey, 554 F.2d at 554, but it is [*10] nevertheless not too much to ask that the theory -- or "alternative or multiple legal theories," Areeda & Turner, P 317e -- at least be fully argued in response to a dispositive motion. Not only will such argument enable a court to see how the facts alleged, if proved, would constitute a violation of the Sherman Act, but "the recommended specificity focuses discovery and thereby saves both parties' energies and costs." Id. "The heavy costs of modern federal litigation, especially antitrust litigation, and the mounting caseload pressures on the federal courts, counsel against launching the parties into pretrial discovery if there is no reasonable prospect that the plaintiff can make out a cause of action from the events narrated in the complaint." Sutliff, Inc. v. Donovan Cos., Inc., 727 F.2d 648, 654 (7th Cir. 1984) (Posner, J.).

The Court therefore examines the Complaint and Anti-Monopoly's opposition brief to discern whether Anti-Monopoly has stated a basic, but coherent, theory of how the Defendants have violated the antitrust laws.⁵

[*11] IV.

Count I: § 2 of the Sherman Act

In Count I, Anti-Monopoly alleges that Defendants have violated § 2 of the Sherman Act by monopolizing, willfully attempting to monopolize, and combining and conspiring with various co-conspirators to monopolize, the manufacturing and sale of family board games. (Compl. P 29.) Only Toys and K-Mart have moved to dismiss Count I. In its responsive brief Anti-Monopoly concedes that its only claim against Toys and K-Mart under § 2 of the Sherman Act is for conspiracy to monopolize. (Pl. Br. at 28-29.)

HN6 [↑] The conspiracy to monopolize offense consists of three elements: 1) concerted action, 2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and 3) a specific intent to monopolize. Volvo North America Corp. v. Men's Int'l Professional Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 74 (2d Cir. 1988).

Anti-Monopoly's allegations that Toys and K-Mart have conspired with Hasbro are highly speculative and come dangerously close to being subject to dismissal for lack of allegations of supporting facts. See Heart Disease Research Foundation v. General Motors Corp., 463 F.2d 98, 100 (2d Cir. 1972) ("Although the Federal Rules permit statement of ultimate [*12] facts, a bare bones statement of conspiracy or of injury under the antitrust laws without any supporting facts permits dismissal."); Garshman v. Universal Resources Holding Inc., 824 F.2d 223, 230 (3d Cir. 1987) ("The allegation of unspecified contracts with unnamed other entities to achieve unidentified anticompetitive effects does not meet the minimum standards for pleading a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act.") Nevertheless, the Court finds that Anti-Monopoly has stated a claim. Clearly, Anti-Monopoly has alleged ⁵ The Court reminds Plaintiff of the warning of Judge McCunn of the Northern District of New York: "[Plaintiff has] made the court's task in deciding these motions particularly arduous due to [its] poorly drafted pleadings and memoranda of law. Counsel [is] forewarned that in the future motion papers such as these will simply be returned. The court is burdened enough without having to do legal research for counsel and speculate as to the exact nature of a given claim or argument." Repasky v. Orzel, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2668.

concerted action by Defendants to exclude Anti-Monopoly from the market as well as overt acts, the refusals to deal; and all of this with the specific intent to conspire. (Compl. P 29.)

The Court notes, however, that Anti-Monopoly's theory seems, on its face, highly implausible. As customers of Hasbro, now and in the future, it does not make too much economic sense that Toys and K-Mart would help Hasbro gain monopolistic power in the relevant market. As a monopolist, Hasbro would be in a position to dictate higher wholesale prices for its products to Toys and K-Mart. However, the Court will not dismiss the Complaint at this early stage of the proceeding without [*13] allowing Anti-Monopoly a chance to develop its case in discovery.

Toys and K-Mart also rely on caselaw suggesting that activity that "is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\). See also Venture Tech., Inc. v. National Fuel Gas Co., 685 F.2d 41, 48 \(2d Cir. 1982\). Although these cases are closely analogous, they each involved disputes in which discovery had been conducted and had been litigated to or beyond a motion for summary judgment. The Court is hesitant to extend the reasoning of these cases to a motion to dismiss on the face of the Complaint. Anti-Monopoly's allegations, if still unsupported following discovery, may not be sufficient to survive a motion for summary judgment, but they are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Toys' and K-Mart's motions to dismiss Count I are denied.

Count II: Essential Facility

In Count II, Anti-Monopoly alleges that Hasbro's control of Toys and K-Mart constitutes monopolization of an essential [*14] facility in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. (Compl. P 42.)

HN7 [↑] The essential facility doctrine is not a separate violation of antitrust law, but rather is "a label that may aid in the analysis of a monopoly claim." Viacom Int'l, Inc. v. Time Inc., 785 F. Supp. 371, 376 n.12 \(S.D.N.Y. 1992\). In an early formulation, "the essential facility doctrine, also called the 'bottleneck principle,' states that 'where facilities cannot practicably be duplicated by would-be competitors, those in possession of them must allow them to be shared on fair terms. It is illegal restraint of trade to foreclose the scarce facility.'" Hecht v. Pro-Football, Inc., 187 U.S. App. D.C. 73, 570 F.2d 982, 992 \(D.C. Cir. 1977\) (quoting A. O. Neale, The Antitrust Laws of the United States, at 67 (2d ed. 1970)) (footnote omitted), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 956, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1121, 98 S. Ct. 3069 (1978). The "essential facility" doctrine, however, is in tension with another doctrine: "Antitrust law . . . does not require one competitor to give another a break just because failing to do so offends notions of fair play." Twin Labs., Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566, 568 \(2d Cir. 1990\). [*15]

To prove monopolization of an essential facility, Anti-Monopoly must prove four elements: "(1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) a competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) the denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility." MCI Comm. v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1132 \(7th Cir. 1983\). The first and third elements go to defendant's degree of control while the second and fourth go to determining whether the facility is truly "essential".

The Court first addresses the issue of control. In most of the "essential facility" cases, control stemmed from the defendants' ownership, individually or collectively, of the facility. However, in this case, the control of the facility stems not from ownership, but from an alleged system of price incentives and threats designed to force the owner of the facility not to make it available to a competitor. Although it is a novel theory of control, and represents an extension of the "essential facility" doctrine, the Court will not say at this point that Anti-Monopoly has not adequately pled control of Toys and [*16] K-Mart.

Nevertheless, the Court finds as a matter of law that Toys and K-Mart do not constitute an essential facility. The Second Circuit most recently discussed the doctrine in Twin Labs., Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566 \(2d Cir. 1990\):

A leading antitrust commentator would limit the analysis to "facilities that are a natural monopoly, facilities whose duplication is forbidden by law, and perhaps those that are publicly subsidized and thus could not practicably be built privately." Most of the successful essential facility claims fall within the categories stated by this commentator. In cases finding liability in other categories, however, the facility in question was more than dominant; it was effectively the only one in town.

Id. at 569 (quoting Phillip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, § 736.2 (Supp. 1988)) (other citations omitted). HN8 [↑] "A plaintiff must show more than inconvenience or even some economic loss; he must show that an alternative to the facility is not feasible." Twin Labs., 900 F.2d at 570.

There is no suggestion that Toys and K-Mart's stores are "facilities whose duplication is forbidden by law" or that they [*17] are "publicly subsidized and thus could not practicably be built privately." Nor are they a "natural monopoly" -- or the result of a "natural monopoly" -- or the "only [facility] in town." Anti-Monopoly does not allege that there are not many independent stores retailing toys and board games that Anti-Monopoly is free to use to reach the public for the sale of its products. The essential facility doctrine cannot be read so broadly as to mean that a plaintiff is entitled to any facility it finds desirable or convenient, or that retailers must stock every product of a given type.

The Court grants Defendants' motion to dismiss Count II.

Count III: Tortious Interference with Advantageous Business Relationships

HN9 [↑] Under New York law, to prevail on a claim of tortious interference with prospective business relations, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant interfered with business relations existing between a plaintiff and a third party, either with the purpose of harming the plaintiff or by means that are dishonest, unfair, or improper.

Volvo North America Corp. v. Men's Int'l Professional Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 74 \(2d Cir. 1988\). "If the defendant's interference [*18] is intended, at least in part, to advance its own competing interests, the claim will fail unless the means employed include criminal or fraudulent conduct." PPX Enters., Inc. v. Audiofidelity Enters., Inc., 818 F.2d 266, 269 \(2d Cir. 1987\). The tort usually involves a business relationship that is something less than contractual in nature. Volvo, 857 F.2d at 74.

In Count III, Anti-Monopoly makes a series of separate allegations suggesting that the Defendants have interfered, individually and collectively, with certain business relationships. (Compl. PP 48-51.) The Court must take this complicated series of allegations separately.

A.

First, Anti-Monopoly alleges that the Defendants have interfered with Anti-Monopoly's relationships with other major retailers. However, the Second Amended Complaint does not provide any factual basis for this allegation. The essence of the Complaint is that Hasbro has conspired with Toys and K-Mart to exclude Anti-Monopoly from the market. There is no allegation, however, that either Hasbro, Toys or K-Mart has encouraged any other retailer to not deal with Anti-Monopoly. Hasbro has not even named any other major retailer who has refused [*19] to deal with Anti-Monopoly.

B.

Second, Anti-Monopoly alleges that Toys and K-Mart have each conspired with Hasbro to interfere with Anti-Monopoly's relationship with the other. However, Anti-Monopoly has not plead any facts suggesting that either Toys or K-Mart has committed any act that would interfere with Anti-Monopoly's relationship with the other. According to the Complaint, Toys and K-Mart each entered into agreements with Hasbro that they would not deal with Anti-Monopoly in exchange for favorable prices.

C.

Finally, Anti-Monopoly alleges that Hasbro has interfered with Anti-Monopoly's relationship with Toys and K-Mart by inducing them to not deal with Anti-Monopoly. Hasbro concedes that such action constitutes interference with a business relation, but argues that because the alleged interference is intended, at least in part, to advance its own competing interests, the claim must fail because Anti-Monopoly has not alleged that the conduct is criminal or fraudulent as required by the caselaw.

The Court cannot agree. Although, Anti-Monopoly does not expressly claim that Hasbro's conduct is criminal, the Court notes that almost the entire Complaint is devoted [*20] to allegations that Hasbro has been violating, and continues to violate, the Sherman Antitrust Act, a federal criminal statute. If Anti-Monopoly can prove that Hasbro has violated the antitrust acts, such conduct should be sufficiently criminal to constitute the predicate required for the tort of tortious interference. See Van Natta Mech. Corp. v. Di Staulo, 277 N.J. Super. 175, 649 A.2d 399, 407-08 \(N.J. Sup. Ct. App. Div. 1994\) ("The grounds for the antitrust violation could nonetheless be used to prove defendants' unlawful, anti-competitive acts.").

The Court grants Toys' and K-Mart's motions to dismiss but denies Hasbro's motion to dismiss Count III insofar as that Count is based on the ground considered in C, above. Count III otherwise dismissed as to all defendants.

Count IV: Unfair Competition

In Count IV, Anti-Monopoly alleges that Defendants have appropriated Anti-Monopoly's market share, i.e. its customers, by means of unfair competition.

HN10 [↑] The tort of unfair competition is not some amorphous catch-all claim to be appended to any complaint involving claims that a competitor has injured a business rival. It is a specific claim with distinct elements. Saratoga Vichy [*21] Spring Co. v. Lehman, 625 F.2d 1037, 1044 \(2d Cir. 1980\). Plaintiff must allege "1) acts or omissions by defendants that proximately caused a misappropriation; and 2) the property or benefit misappropriated." Volvo, 857 F.2d at 75. The tort "usually concerns the taking and use of the plaintiff's property to compete against the plaintiff's own use of the same property." Roy Export Co. Estab. of Vaduz v. Columbia Broadcasting, 672 F.2d 1095, 1105 \(2d Cir. 1982\). See also, Saratoga Vichy Spring Co. v. Lehman, 625 F.2d 1037, 1044 \(2d Cir. 1980\) ("The essence of an unfair competition claim under New York law is that the defendant has misappropriated the labors and expenditures of another."). Failure to allege with specificity what property has been misappropriated will result in dismissal of the claim. Volvo, 857 F.2d at 75; Data Broadcasting Corp. v. Tele-Communications, Inc., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16881, 1992 WL 350624, *4 n.4 (S.D.N.Y. 1992).

Anti-Monopoly has not identified any misappropriated property in the Complaint. In response to Defendants' challenge, Anti-Monopoly suggests in its brief that it was its market share that had been taken and that "appropriation of a competitor's customers [*22] is in the long run what unfair competition is about." (Pl. Br. at 27.) Anti-Monopoly's theory is creative but unpersuasive. Loss of market share may be the ultimate consequence of an act of unfair competition, as it is for any business tort, but, standing alone, it does not state a claim. There is no allegation that the Defendants have used or appropriated any of Anti-Monopoly's products or properties. HN11 [↑] While the tort of unfair competition may be flexible and expansive, Roy Export, 672 F.2d at 1105, it does not encompass a claim that the only "property" appropriated is plaintiff's market share. See Nifty Foods Corp. v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., Inc., 614 F.2d 832, 842 \(2d Cir. 1980\).

Defendants' motion to dismiss Count IV is granted.

Count V: Cancellation of Patents and Copyrights

Although Anti-Monopoly characterizes this as a cause of action, it is a statement of a form of relief sought under other claims, more properly considered should Anti-Monopoly prove a violation of the antitrust laws. Accordingly, Count V is dismissed, without prejudice to consideration at an appropriate time of forms of relief to which Anti-Monopoly may be entitled.

*Count VI: § 7 [23] of the Clayton Act

In Count VI, Anti-Monopoly alleges that Hasbro has violated § 7 of the Clayton Act by acquiring the stock and the whole and part of the assets of various corporations engaged in competition with Hasbro where the effect has been to substantially lessen competition and to create a monopoly in such markets. (Compl. P 66.)

§ 7 of the Clayton Act provides:

HN12[] No person engaged in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no person . . . shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another person engaged also in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce, where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

15 U.S.C. § 18.

Anti-Monopoly's allegations clearly state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Anti-Monopoly has alleged that Hasbro has dramatically increased its share of the family board game market by purchasing a number of smaller companies and is approaching 90% control [*24] of the market. Such a development could certainly have the effect of substantially lessening competition or creating a monopoly by concentrating virtually all the manufacturing power in one manufacturer. The Court denies Hasbro's motion to dismiss Count VI.⁶

Anti-Monopoly has not shown that § 7 of the Clayton Act imposes liability on any party other than the acquirer, Hasbro. Therefore, the Court grants Toys' and K-Mart's motions to dismiss Count VI.

Count VII: § 2 of the Clayton Act

In Count VII, Anti-Monopoly alleges that Hasbro has violated the Robinson-Patman Act (§ 2 of the Clayton Act) by "providing substantial discounts, terms and services to major family board game retailers [*25] which are not made available on equal terms to competing smaller family board game retailers and wholesalers and which are not either cost justified or otherwise permitted under § 2." (Compl. P 76).

§ 2 of the Clayton Act provides:

HN13[] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them.

15 U.S.C. § 13(a).

HN14[] A claim under § 2 of the Clayton Act is similar to a claim for predatory pricing under § 2 of the Sherman Act: "The essence of the claim under either statute is the same: A business rival has priced its products in an unfair manner with an object to eliminate or retard competition and thereby gain and exercise control over prices in the relevant market." Brooke Group, Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson [*26] Tobacco Corp., 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2587 (1993). Under either claim, plaintiff must prove two elements: (1) "that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs" and (2) there exists "a reasonable prospect . . . of recouping its investment in below-cost prices." Id. at 2487-88. Although there is no well settled benchmark for determining "an appropriate measure of [a company's] costs," it has been suggested that, in the Second Circuit, the appropriate standard may be "reasonably anticipated average variable cost." Kelco Disposal, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Indus. of Vermont, Inc., 845 F.2d 404, 407 (2d Cir. 1988).

Two classes of plaintiffs are recognized to have standing to bring a Robinson-Patman claim. Direct competitors of the predator are said to suffer primary-line injury when they are unable to match the predator's prices and must either sell at a loss or lose market share. Competitors of the favored purchasers are said to suffer secondary-line injuries when they are forced to compete in the same market as the purchasers who are enjoying the benefit of lower overhead for the same product. Anti-Monopoly has argued that it [*27] has suffered both types of injuries.

Defendants' only ground for dismissal of Count VII was the absence of an allegation that Hasbro prices its products below an appropriate measure of its costs. With the filing of its Second Amended Complaint, Anti-Monopoly has now remedied that deficiency in. (Compl. P 31W). Furthermore, it can fairly be inferred that there is a reasonable prospect that Hasbro would recoup its investment if it were able to eliminate the remaining board game manufacturers.

Because the Court agrees that Anti-Monopoly has stated a claim for a primary-line injury, the Court does not address at this time Anti-Monopoly's claim that it has suffered a secondary-line injury. The Court denies Hasbro's motion to dismiss Count VII.

However, the Statute does not impose liability on the beneficiaries of the advantageous pricing. The Court therefore grants Toys' and K-Mart's motions to dismiss Count VII.

Count VIII: Section 1 of the Sherman Act

In Count VIII, Anti-Monopoly alleges that Defendants have violated § 1 of the Sherman Act: The "activities of the defendants . . . constitute an illegal antitrust contract, conspiracy and combination to unreasonably restrain trade [*28] in the" relevant market and involve "concerted action between Hasbro and each of the two co-defendants." (Compl. P 87.)

HN15 [+] "The section 1 claimant must demonstrate (1) concerted action by two or more persons which (2) unreasonably restrains interstate trade or commerce." Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Hearst/ABC Viacom Entertainment Servs., 746 F. Supp. 320, 325 (S.D.N.Y. 1990). "Unlike the proof required to establish a conspiracy to monopolize under section 2, a specific intent to create a monopoly is not required under section 1." International Distribution Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., Inc., 812 F.2d 786, 793 (2d Cir.).

"It is the rare case in which a plaintiff bringing a § 1 claim can establish the existence of an explicit agreement among the defendants; most conspiracies are proven by inferences drawn from behavior of the alleged conspirators." Caldwell v. American Basketball Ass'n, Inc., 825 F. Supp. 558, 566 (S.D.N.Y. 1993).

Once again the Court must infer the exact nature of Anti-Monopoly's allegations from an inartfully pled Complaint. Anti-Monopoly has alleged a scheme, masterminded by Hasbro, and participated in by Toys and K-Mart, to restrain trade by excluding [*29] Anti-Monopoly from the marketplace. The factual basis for the allegation leaves much to be desired, but the Court will not dismiss Count VIII on its face.

As with their motion to dismiss Anti-Monopoly's § 2 claim, Toys and K-Mart rely on cases holding that conduct that is "as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." See, e.g., Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). However, as noted supra pp. 10-11, those decisions involved cases developed up to or beyond the summary judgment stage, and are therefore not appropriate authority on a motion to dismiss.

Defendants' motion to dismiss Count VIII is denied.

V.

The Court grants Hasbro's motion to dismiss Counts II, IV, and V, grants in part and denies in part Hasbro's motion to dismiss Count III, and denies Hasbro's motion to dismiss Counts VI-IX. The Court grants Toys' and K-Mart's motions to dismiss Counts II-VII and denies their motion to dismiss Counts I and VIII. Anti-Monopoly has withdrawn Count IX as to Toys and K-Mart.

The language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012\(b\) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-1015, necessitates three inquiries: (1) does the federal statute at issue specifically relate to the "business of insurance;" (2) was the state statute at issue enacted for the purpose of regulating the "business of insurance;" and (3) would application of the federal statute invalidate, impair or supersede the state statute.

The criteria against which "the business of insurance" must be judged are as follows: first, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry. All three factors must be considered together because none of these criteria is necessarily determinative in itself.

A state law enacted for the purpose of preventing false advertising by insurance companies is a law enacted for the purpose of regulating "the business of insurance." Preemption is the doctrine by which courts enforce Article VI of the Constitution which provides that the laws of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land, any thing in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding. U.S. Const. art. VI. Preemption occurs when Congress explicitly so provides or when the intent to preempt is implied by the structure and purpose of a federal statute. In the absence of an express congressional command, state law is pre-empted if that law actually conflicts with federal law or if federal law so thoroughly occupies a legislative field as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for the states to supplement it.

The concept of preemption, whether direct or inverse, requires a determination whether there exists a direct conflict between federal and state law or whether state and federal law can co-exist. The McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-1015, does not admit of such an analysis even though in it Congress declared the primacy of state law in the regulation of "the business of insurance." This is because §§ 1011-1015 do not turn on status, i.e., supremacy of a body of law, but on the effect of the law, i.e., whether an act of Congress invalidates, impairs or supersedes certain kinds of state law.

[*1154] MEMORANDUM OPINION

The Amended Class Action Complaint ("Amended Complaint") contains five counts. In Counts One and Two, Richard G. Bird, and the class he purports to represent, assert claims under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, 29 U.S.C. §§ 1001-1461 ("ERISA"). These two counts have been voluntarily dismissed. Consequently, Bird is no longer a plaintiff and there are no ERISA claims remaining. Count Three is asserted by Nancy L. Ambrose and Habib Guirguis, and the classes they purport to represent, under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968 ("RICO"). In Count Four, the Ambrose and Guirguis Classes assert Virginia state law claims for breach of contract, failure to account and breach of fiduciary duty. Count Five, for reasons not entirely clear, seeks injunctive relief respecting adjustments of allegedly improperly calculated policy holder lifetime benefit caps.

The defendants are three corporations: Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Virginia, Inc., now known as Trigon Blue Cross Blue Shield, Blue Cross Blue Shield HMO of Virginia, Inc. ("HMO Virginia"), [\[2\]](#) and Healthkeepers, Inc. ("Healthkeepers"). HMO Virginia and Healthkeepers are wholly owned subsidiaries of Trigon. The defendants, who will be referred to collectively as "defendants" or "Trigon," have moved to dismiss the action pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\), 12\(b\)\(1\), and 12\(b\)\(6\), and they claim entitlement to summary judgment pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(b\).

With the voluntary dismissal of Counts One and Two, RICO provides the only basis for federal jurisdiction and hence resolution of Count Three has become the focal point of this action. The defendants assert that Count Three fails as a matter of law because the application of RICO is precluded by the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1011-1015. If the defendants' contention is correct, then dismissal is appropriate pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\).

[*1155] STATEMENT OF FACTS

The stated facts will be confined to those that are pertinent to the RICO claims asserted by Ambrose and Guirguis. The statement of facts assumes that the allegations of the Amended Complaint are true even though the defendants deny many of those allegations.

A. The Policies, the Plaintiffs and the Offending Practices

The insurance policies [\[3\]](#) issued by Trigon and purchased by Ambrose and Guirguis contained, as is standard in the insurance industry, provisions establishing annual deductible thresholds which must be reached before the insurer is obligated to make payments to the health care provider or to reimburse amounts paid by the insured. The "deductible" is that "portion of an insured loss to be borne by the insured before he is entitled to recovery from the insurer." Black's Law Dictionary 413 (6th ed. 1990). The policies also contain copayment provisions which allocate the risk between the insured and the insurer by establishing the percentage of medical charges for which each is responsible after the deductible is exhausted. The plaintiffs entered the insurance contracts as a result, in part, of mail-out marketing and advertising campaigns. Those documents, and other literature delivered with the policy and with correspondence about claims, are said to have misrepresented the truth about the amount of risk borne by the insured and insurer, respectively.

More particularly, the RICO claim charges that the defendants devised and effectuated a discounting scheme under which the respective risks borne by insured and [\[4\]](#) insurer were different than represented in connection with the sale, purchase and performance of the insurance contract. As the plaintiffs put it:

Plaintiffs allege that the defendants, unknown to their customers, had struck secret deals with preferred health care providers for discounts generally based upon the annual volume of billings generated by Blue Cross customers and their beneficiaries under their contract documents. These discounts would arise from the Deductible amounts paid and the copayments made but they would only be applied to the defendants' share of the bills, not the risk retained by the participant and the bills paid by participants in its health plans.

(Amended Complaint, pp. 3-4) (emphasis added). The effect of these practices on the Ambrose class was somewhat different from the effect on the Guirguis Class.

The Ambrose Class consists of insureds whose contracts provided that the insurers "would pay, after a Deductible, 80% of certain covered medical charges with a copayment of 20% from the insureds." (Amended Complaint, p. 3). The insureds in the Ambrose Class incurred medical expenses in a given year that exceeded their deductible [\[5\]](#) and therefore they paid copayments according to the terms of their contracts. Because the negotiated discounts were undisclosed, the insured paid 20% of the providers' stated, undiscounted charge. The insurer then paid only the difference between what the insured had paid and the discounted charge. The net result of that practice was that the insured actually paid more than 20% of the amount owed to the health care provider after exhaustion of the deductible. Consequently, say the Ambrose Class plaintiffs, the advertisements and representations which the defendants made in connection with the sale of the policies and the performance of the policy obligations were fraudulent because they misrepresented the true share of the risk allocated in the copayment.

For example, let us assume that: (1) an insured, whose policy provides for a $ 200 deductible and a 20%/80% copayment thereafter, undergoes a procedure after having satisfied the deductible; (2) the provider's stated charge for that procedure is $ 1,000; (3) the insurer and the provider have negotiated a 40% discount for the procedure; and (4) the insured is informed in the statement from the insurer or the provider that the provider's [6] charge is $ 1,000, of which the insured is to pay 20%, or $ 200, leaving the insurer to pay the remaining 80% due the provider. In actuality, however, because the provider charged only $ 600 (the 40% negotiated discount being $ 400), the insurer has paid only the remaining $ 400 of the discounted [*1156] charge of $ 600. In other words, the insurer has paid 66.67% of the actual charge when it had represented that it would pay 80%; and the insured has paid 33.33%, rather than 20% as was represented.

In general terms, the insured in the example paid 20% of a sum that was higher than the amount actually owed to the provider and, as a consequence, the insured paid more than 20% of the amount actually charged by the provider. The Ambrose Class plaintiffs contend that the representations made by the defendants as to the allocation of risk were therefore fraudulent.

The injury to plaintiffs in the Guirguis Class is somewhat more difficult to discern because their payments for medical treatment were within the deductible amount and thus they made no copayments.¹ [8] The Guirguis Class plaintiffs allege that:

the discounts arose from the total dollar volume of Blue Cross customer traffic [7] at the participating providers and that the customers were given no adjustment to their bills corresponding to the discounts so that such customers were secretly charged an excessive amount for medical services and were injured by implicit price-fixing of medical service charges. The excessive charges occurred even though the Blue Cross' [sic] defendants' contracts documents with this subclass of individual customers did not provide for a copayment beyond a deductible amount, but provided instead that the insurer would pay 100% of charges beyond the annual deductible.

(Amended Complaint, p. 6) (emphasis added).² In essence, members of the Guirguis Class complain that the price they paid for medical treatment was not discounted and that this resulted in an unnecessarily and artificially high price for medical services, payment of which benefited the insurer by permitting the insurer to negotiate other favorable discounts.

B. This Action and the State Investigation

On August 31, 1994, the Ambrose and Guirguis plaintiffs sought redress of these Practices by filing this action which the defendants moved to dismiss on September 21, 1994 and answered on October 3, 1994. At the time,

² The price-fixing alleged in this paragraph is asserted only as part of the fraud under the RICO claim, not as an antitrust claim.

Virginia's State Corporation Commission ("SCC") was concluding its investigation of the discounting practices and, on September 22, 1994, the SCC entered an Order Accepting Offer of Settlement. Under the terms of the settlement, Trigon agreed to pay a fine of $ 5 million and to implement a Coinsurance Refund Program, pursuant to which it would refund the excessive copayments to Trigon policyholders and to members of its HMO affiliates, including HMO Virginia and Healthkeepers, and to their beneficiaries.

The order entered by the SCC followed a special market report prepared by the SCC's Bureau of Insurance which ensued an extensive study of the discounting practices as to which the plaintiffs now [9] seek relief under RICO. That investigation was conducted pursuant to, and as a part of, a comprehensive state statutory and administrative scheme by which Virginia regulates all insurance business conducted in the Commonwealth. The report concluded that Trigon's discounting practices, including those of which Ambrose and Guirguis complain, violated several provisions of Virginia's insurance laws including the proscriptions against misrepresenting the terms of insurance Policies and against unfair claims settlement practices which are found in the Uniform Trade Practices chapter of Virginia's insurance code, Title 38.2.

[*1157] The original deadline for filing those refund claims was December 7, 1994, but it was extended to January 7, 1995. As of February 1, 1995, Trigon had approved and paid approximately 128,000 claims totaling $ 21.9 million.³

[10] Because of the settlement between the SCC and Trigon and the resulting Coinsurance Refund Program, the parties jointly requested that this action be stayed until March 15, 1995. The stay was entered by Order dated October 6, 1994. As directed in that Order, the plaintiffs filed the Amended Complaint on November 3, 1994 and, on February 1, 1995, the defendants filed their Answer and their Second Motion to Dismiss.

DISCUSSION

HN1 When considering a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the court is required to presume that all factual allegations in the complaint are true and to accord the benefit of all reasonable inferences to the non-moving party. 2A Moore's Federal Practice P 12.07[2.5](2d ed. 1994). The allegations of the complaint are to be liberally construed and the motion should be granted only where "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of [the] claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957).

A. The McCarran-Ferguson Act: An Historical Perspective

Because the McCarran-Ferguson Act is the focal point of this motion, it is helpful to place the [11] Act in historical perspective. Beginning with the Supreme Court's decision in Paul v. Virginia, 75 U.S. 168, 19 L. Ed. 357 (1868), the courts took the position that "'issuing a policy of insurance is not a transaction of Commerce' . . . subject to federal regulation." United States Dep't of Treasury v. Fabe, 124 L. Ed. 2d 449, 113 S. Ct. 2202, 2207 (1993) (citing Paul, 75 U.S. at 183). Consequently, there existed "an accepted and longstanding understanding as a matter of federalism that Commerce Clause statutes as passed by Congress did not apply to the 'business of insurance' and that the states had primacy, indeed exclusivity, in the regulation of that business." Davis, Preclusion of RICO Claims by the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 14 RICO L. Rpt. 1093 (Dec. 1991).

"The emergence of an interconnected and interdependent national economy, however, prompted a more expansive jurisprudential image of interstate commerce." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2207. The culmination of this jurisprudential evolution occurred in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n, 322 U.S. 533, 88 L. Ed. 1440, 64 S. Ct. 1162 (1944), in which the Supreme Court displaced the longstanding rule [12] of law articulated in Paul, when it held that "no commercial enterprise of any kind which conducts its activities across state lines has been held to be wholly beyond the regulatory power of Congress under the Commerce Clause. We cannot make an exception of the business of insurance." South-Eastern Underwriters, 322 U.S. at 553.

The Supreme Court's decision in South-Eastern Underwriters "was widely perceived as a threat to state power to tax and regulate the insurance industry." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2207. In response to that decision, "Congress moved quickly to restore the supremacy of the States in the realm of insurance regulation. It enacted the McCarran-Ferguson Act within a year of the decision in South-Eastern Underwriters." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2207.

The first section of the McCarran-Ferguson Act clearly states the Congressional purpose which prompted enactment of the statute:

HN2 [↑] Congress declares that the continued regulation and taxation by the several States of the business of insurance is in the public interest, and that silence on the part of Congress shall not be construed to impose any barrier to the regulation or taxation of such business by [13] the several States.

[*1158] 15 U.S.C. § 1011. As the Supreme Court later explained, "Congress' purpose was broadly to give support to the existing and future state systems for regulating and taxing the business of insurance." Prudential Ins. Co. v. Benjamin, 328 U.S. 408, 429, 90 L. Ed. 1342, 66 S. Ct. 1142 (1946). Congress sought to achieve its purpose "by removing obstructions which might be thought to flow from its own power, whether dormant or exercised, except as otherwise expressly provided in the Act itself or in future legislation." Id. at 429-30.

B. The Application of the McCarran-Ferguson Act in This Action

Bearing in mind the origins and purposes of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, it is important to focus now on the specific statutory provision at issue in this action, HN3 [↑] 15 U.S.C. § 1012(b) ("Section 2(b)"), which provides:

No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance: Provided, That after June 30, 1948, the Act of July [14] 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State Law.

15 U.S.C. § 1012 (emphasis added and omitted). Section 2(b) contains two clauses, each of which serves a different purpose. In Fabe, the Supreme Court explained this distinction as follows:

As was stated in Royal Drug, the first clause of § 2(b) was intended to further Congress' primary objective of granting the States broad regulatory authority over the business of insurance. The second clause accomplishes Congress' secondary goal, which was to carve out only a narrow exemption for "the business of insurance" from the federal antitrust laws.

Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210.

This action does not present an antitrust claim and therefore the second clause of Section 2(b) is not implicated here. Rather, this action turns on the application of the first clause of Section 2(b). More particularly, the issue is whether the first clause of Section [15] 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act precludes assertion of RICO claims founded on conduct which Virginia has sought to regulate in three sections of the Unfair Trade Practices chapter of her insurance code, specifically: Va. Code §§ 8.2-502, 503 and 510A.

"The starting point in a case involving construction of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, like the starting point in any case involving the meaning of a statute, is the language of the statute itself." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2207-08 (quoting Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 210, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261, 99 S. Ct. 1067 \(1979\)). According to the Supreme Court, HN4⁴ Section 2(b)'s language necessitates three inquiries: (1) does the federal statute at issue "specifically relate to the business of insurance;" (2) was the state statute at issue "enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance;" and (3) would application of the federal statute "invalidate, impair or supersede" the state statute. Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2208.⁴ The court now addresses each of these inquiries.

[*1159] 1. RICO Does Not Specifically Relate to the Business of Insurance

The parties agree that RICO does not specifically relate to the business of insurance. Accordingly, there is no further analysis to be made respecting this facet of the test.

2. Virginia's Unfair Trade Practices Act is a Law "Enacted . . . for the Purpose of Regulating the Business of Insurance" within the Meaning of Section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act

(a) The Requisite Analysis

The Supreme Court has had only two occasions to examine the meaning of the statutory language "any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" in Section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. The Court first addressed this statutory language in Securities & Exchange Commission v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 21 L. Ed. 2d 668, 89 S. Ct. 564 \(1969\), where it held:

The relationship between insurer and insured, the type of policy which could be issued, its reliability, interpretation and enforcement -- these were the core of the "business of insurance." Undoubtedly, other activities of insurance companies relate so closely to their [\[*17\]](#) status as reliable insurers that they too must be placed in the same class. But whatever the exact scope of the statutory term, it is clear where the focus was -- it was on the relationship between the insurance company and the policyholder. Statutes aimed at protecting or regulating this relationship, directly or indirectly are laws regulating the "business of insurance."

Id. at 460 (emphasis added).

Almost a quarter of a century later, the Court addressed the first clause of Section 2(b) for the second time in United States Dep't of Treasury v. Fabe, 124 L. Ed. 2d 449, 113 S. Ct. 2202 \(1993\). The issue there was whether an "Ohio law designating the priority of creditors' claims in insurance-liquidation proceedings," Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2205, "is one 'enacted by the State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance.'" Id. at 2209. The petitioner in Fabe minimized the significance of the decision in National Securities, instead asserting that the more recent Supreme Court decisions in Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261, 99 S. Ct. 1067 \(1979\) and [Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, \[18\] 458 U.S. 119, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647, 102 S. Ct. 3002](#)

⁴ Other courts have employed a four-part test to determine whether the McCarran-Ferguson Act precludes application of a federal statute. Under that approach, the inquiry is whether: (1) the federal statute relates specifically to the business of insurance; (2) the acts challenged under that statute constitute the business of insurance; (3) the state has enacted a law regulating the challenged acts; and (4) the state law would be invalidated, impaired or superseded by application of the federal statute. See Merchants Home Delivery Service, Inc. v. Frank B. Hall & Co., Inc., 50 F.3d 1486, 1489 \(9th Cir. 1995\); Cochran v. Paco, Inc., 606 F.2d 460, 464 \(5th Cir. 1979\); Everson v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Ohio, No. 93cv7534, 1994 WL 6752000, at *10 \(N.D. Ohio June 15, 1994\); Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 827 F. Supp. 1498, 1520 \(D. Nev. 1993\); First Nat'l Bank of Pa. v. Sedgwick James of Minnesota, Inc., 792 F. Supp. 409, 417 \(W.D. Pa. 1992\); Senich v. Transamerica Premier Ins. Co., 766 F. Supp. 339, 340-41 \(W.D. Pa. 1990\). However, because the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has never adopted this four-part test, and because the Supreme Court did not subscribe to it in Fabe, the analytical framework to be used here will be the one used by the Supreme Court in Fabe. See infra note 5.

\(1982\) provided the criteria against which the "business of insurance" must be judged. Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2208. HN5 Those criteria are as follows:

first, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry.

Pireno, 458 U.S. at 129. As the Court explained in Pireno, all three factors must be considered together because "none of these criteria is necessarily determinative in itself." Id.

The petitioner in Fabe contended that the Ohio priority statute was not "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" because it addressed only the relationship between policyholders and other creditors of the insurance company and satisfied none of the Pireno criteria because a law fixing the priority of claims in a bankruptcy proceeding did not transfer risk, was not an integral part of the policy relationship, and was not limited to the insurance [\[19\]](#) industry. Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2208-09. Rejecting that argument, the Court held that the Ohio priority statute was a law "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance," Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210, to the extent that it was designed to protect the interests of insured in their contractual relationship with their insurers. Id. at 2212. In so doing, the Court distinguished [\[*1160\] Royal Drug](#) and Pireno on the basis that they "involved the scope of the antitrust immunity located in the second clause of § 2(b). We deal here with the first clause, which is not so narrowly circumscribed." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2209. The Court explained the difference between the two clauses of Section 2(b) as follows:

HN6 The language of § 2(b) is unambiguous: the first clause commits laws "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" to the States, while the second clause exempts only "the business of insurance" itself from the antitrust laws. To equate laws "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" with the "business of insurance" itself, as petitioner urges us to do, would be to read words out of the [\[20\]](#) statute. This we refuse to do.

Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2209-10. Then, the Court articulated the standard by which to interpret the phrase "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" in the first clause of Section 2(b).

HN7 The broad category of laws enacted "for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" consists of laws that possess the "end, intention or aim" of adjusting, managing, or controlling the business of insurance. Black's Law Dictionary 1236, 1286 (6th ed. 1990). This category necessarily encompasses more than just the "business of insurance."

Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210 (emphasis added).

Decisions of lower courts after Fabe have evinced some uncertainty whether the Pireno test is entirely inapplicable to the analysis required under the first clause of Section 2(b) or whether that analysis must still be applied, albeit more broadly than in Pireno and Royal Drug. Compare Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. American Family Life Assurance Co. of Columbus, 846 F. Supp. 454, 459 \(D.S.C. 1994\) (Pireno criteria are not controlling where only the first clause of Section 2(b) is at issue) [\[21\]](#) with Merchants Home Delivery Serv., Inc. v. Frank B. Hall & Co., Inc., 50 F.3d 1486, 1490 n.2 \(9th Cir. 1995\) (Fabe held that the business of insurance is to be defined more broadly outside the antitrust area, but that the distinction "is a matter of degree, however, rather than a wholesale change in the inquiry"). This uncertainty apparently stems from the fact that, in Fabe, the Court distinguished Royal Drug and Pireno on the basis that they involved the second clause of Section 2(b) as opposed to the first, while at the same time the Court concluded that HN8 "the actual performance of an insurance contract falls within the 'business of insurance,' as we understood that phrase in Pireno and Royal Drug." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2009.

These two facets of the Fabe decision can be reconciled by looking at the basis on which the Court distinguished between the first and second clauses of Section 2(b). The Fabe majority recognized that the exemption provided in the first clause includes language that is "significantly missing from the second clause." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210 n. 6. The presence of the word "purpose" in the first clause reflects Congress' [22] intention to grant "the states broad regulatory authority over the business of insurance." Id. at 2210. In contrast, the second clause omits the word "purpose" and, in so doing, carved out "only a narrow exemption for the 'business of insurance' from the federal antitrust laws." Id. at 2210.

Although the Pireno analysis was developed in cases addressing the second clause of Section 2(b), it is relevant to the first clause for the limited purpose of defining the business of insurance. However, HN9[ under the first clause, a state law controls so long as its purpose, that is, its "end, intention, or aim," is "adjusting, managing, or controlling the business of insurance." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210. "This category necessarily encompasses more than just the 'business of insurance.'" Id. Under the second clause, the state law is exempt from the antitrust laws to the extent that the practice regulated is itself the business of insurance. Thus, to the extent that Pireno and Royal Drug consider whether the practice being regulated is itself the business of insurance, their analysis is inapplicable in a [*1161] case controlled by the broader first clause of Section 2(b). [23]⁵

(b) Application of the Requisite Analysis

The calculus required by Fabe necessitates examination of the applicable state statute to determine whether it was enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance. Thus, it is necessary now to review the pertinent sections of Title 38.2 of the Virginia Code, the 53 chapter statute by which Virginia regulates the business of insurance within its borders.

HN10[

The statute establishes rules and procedures to be followed in the issuance and performance of insurance policies. Chapter 5 of Virginia's insurance code is entitled "Unfair Trade Practices." Its stated purpose is to "regulate trade practices in the business of insurance in accordance with the intent of Congress as expressed in the McCarran-Ferguson Act . . . by defining and prohibiting all practices in this Commonwealth that constitute unfair methods of compensation or unfair or deceptive acts or practices." Va. Code § 38.2-500. To that end, Va. Code § 38.2-502 prohibits misrepresentation of the "benefits, advantages, conditions or terms of any insurance policy." That provision is supplemented by § 38.2-503 which prohibits any "advertisement, announcement [25] or statement containing any assertion, representation or statement relating to (i) the business of insurance . . . which is untrue, deceptive or misleading."

HN11[

Section 38.2-510 is entitled "Unfair claim settlement practices." Subsection 510A.1 prohibits "misrepresenting pertinent facts or insurance policy provisions relating to coverages at issue." Subsection A.4 prohibits arbitrary refusal to pay claims. Subsection A.6 prohibits "not attempting in good faith" to make prompt, fair and equitable settlements of a claim. Subsection A.8 prohibits "attempting to settle claims for less than the amount to which a reasonable man would have believed he was entitled by reference to written or printed advertising material accompanying or made part of an application."

⁵ Some post-Fabe decisions considering the first clause of Section 2(b) have continued to analyze whether the practice that is the subject of the federal law constitutes the "business of insurance." See Merchants Home Delivery Serv., Inc. v. Frank B. Hall & Co., Inc., 50 F.3d 1486 (9th Cir. 1995); Everson v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Ohio, 1994 WL 675200 (N.D. Ohio, June 15, 1994). This seems somewhat at odds with the standard clearly articulated in Fabe, which requires a court to focus on the purpose of the state statute at issue. Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210. The courts which have followed that approach have used the four-part test developed before Fabe to determine whether the McCarran-Ferguson Act precludes application of a federal statute. See supra note 4. The second prong of that test requires the court to ask whether the practices challenged under the federal statute themselves constitute the business of insurance. However, Fabe seems to require a broader analysis where the first clause of Section 2(b) is at issue because the Court expressly held that the category of laws enacted "for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance . . . necessarily encompasses more than just the business of insurance." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210. It is for this reason that here the court adheres to the analysis articulated in Fabe.

The SCC report charged Trigon with violations of those sections and with violations of § 38.2-316.B which prohibits the use of applications, riders and certificates of insurance unless the forms thereof previously have been filed with the SCC. All of those violations are punishable under § 38.2-218 ($ 5,000 per knowing violation; $ 1,000 per inadvertent violation) and are made subject to the SCC's vast adjudicative and injunctive [26] powers by virtue of §§ 38.2-219 and 220.

The provisions of Chapter 5 which Trigon is alleged to have offended do not give rise to a private cause of action. A&E Supply Co. v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 798 F.2d 669, 674 (4th Cir. 1986); cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1091, 94 L. Ed. 2d 158, 107 S. Ct. 1302 (1987). However, HN12[[↑]] the penalty provisions of Title 38.2 are not exclusive; and, therefore, they are "in addition to and not in substitution for the power and authority conferred upon the courts by general law to impose civil penalties for violation of the laws" of Virginia. Va. Code § 38.2-221.

Under Fabe, Va. Code §§ 38.2-502, 503 and 510A, and the related enforcement provisions in Va. Code §§ 38.2-218-220, are laws "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" if they "possess the 'end, intention, or aim' of adjusting, managing [*1162] or controlling the business of insurance." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210 (citation omitted).

First, the provisions at issue are part of a statute - Chapter 5 - the clearly articulated purpose of which is "to regulate trade practices in the business of insurance." Va. Code § 38.2-500. The stated purpose, of course, is not [27] controlling. It is persuasive, however, for it indicates a legislative intention that the remaining sections of the chapter should serve that purpose.

Second, it is also persuasive that Chapter 5 of Virginia's insurance code is enforceable only by the Commissioner of Insurance and does not create a private cause of action. A&E Supply Co., 798 F.2d at 674. This points emphatically to the construction of Chapter 5 as a law enacted for no purpose other than regulating the business of insurance.

Third, HN13[[↑]] the plain meaning of Va. Code §§ 38.2-502, 503 and 510 shows that the "primary purpose," Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210, of these sections is to regulate the performance of insurance contracts by assuring conformity between representations made by the insurer to the insured and the actual performance of the insurance policies, and between basic principles of fair practices and the actual performance of the policies. In other words, each statute "is designed," id. at 2209, to regulate the representations made to form, and the practices which comprise, the relationship between insurer and insured and the performance of the insurance contract which is the foundation of that relationship. [28]

Under Securities & Exchange Commission v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 21 L. Ed. 2d 668, 89 S. Ct. 564 (1969), HN14[[↑]] laws aimed at "protecting or regulating" the relationship between insurer and insured satisfy the language of the first clause of Section 2(b). Id. at 460. It is clear that those provisions of Virginia's insurance code that prohibit an insurer from misrepresenting the terms of a policy and require adherence to fundamental fair business practices when soliciting and performing the insurance contract are aimed at regulating the relationship between the insurer and insured and protecting the insured in that relationship.⁶ It is equally clear that state laws, the purpose of which is to regulate the marketing and performance of insurance policies by prohibiting fraudulent representations and certain unfair trade practices, are laws "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" as defined in Fabe. HN15[[↑]] The marketing and performance of insurance policies undoubtedly falls within the "business of insurance" as that phrase was understood in Pireno and Royal Drug. How the terms of a policy are represented, and how they are ultimately [29] performed, affects the spreading of risk, is integral to the policy relationship between insurer and insured, and is unique to the insurance industry. Furthermore, because the Supreme Court expressly held in Fabe that "the actual performance of an insurance contract falls within the 'business of insurance,'" it would defy all reason to hold that statutes aimed at ensuring that such performance is fair and conforms to the represented terms of the policy are not laws "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance."

⁶ In fact, National Securities expressly states that "the selling and advertising of policies" constitutes the business of insurance. National Securities, 393 U.S. at 460.

Construing a similar statute, the district court in Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. American Family Life Assurance Co. of Columbus, 846 F. Supp. 454 (D.S.C. 1994), reached the conclusion that HN16[↑] "a state law enacted for the purpose of preventing false advertising by insurance companies is [30] a law enacted 'for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance.'" Id. at 458. Applying Fabe, the court held that "state laws regulating advertising are encompassed within the scope of the first clause of Section 2(b) since advertising clearly appears to the Court to affect the relationship between the insurer and insured." Id. at 460. That conclusion applies with equal force in this action because the alleged misrepresentations here were made both in actual correspondence concerning the policy and in advertising.

[*1163] Consideration of these Virginia statutes in perspective of the instructions given by National Securities and Fabe makes manifest that they were enacted by Virginia for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance. These statutes, by their terms, are aimed at protecting and regulating the relationship between insurer and insured. They, together with § 38.2-316B, go directly to control the type of policy issued, as well as to the reliability, interpretation and enforcement of the insurance contract. And, they focus on requiring that performance of the insurance contract be consistent with the representations that induced the relationship. [31] Therefore, in the most fundamental ways, these sections and the related enforcement mechanisms "possess the 'end, intention or aim' of adjusting, managing or controlling the business of insurance." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210 (citation omitted). Hence, those state laws fall within the reach of the first clause of Section 2(b).⁷

(c) The Decisions in Tri-State and Custer

At oral argument on the motion to dismiss, the court asked the parties to file supplemental briefs respecting the impact on the McCarran-Ferguson analysis of the decisions of the United States [32] Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in Tri-State Mach. Inc. v. Nationwide Life Ins. Co., 33 F.3d 309 (4th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1128, 115 S. Ct. 1175 (1995) and Custer v. Pan Am Life Ins. Co., 12 F.3d 410 (4th Cir. 1993). The plaintiffs responded by arguing that, in those decisions, the Fourth Circuit already has held that state statutes such as the one at issue in this action are not statutes "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance." The defendants assert that those decisions are not controlling because they involved ERISA, not RICO, and practices not at issue here.

Upon reflection, it seems clear that Tri-State and Custer, which involved the scope of the Savings Clause of ERISA, do not alter the McCarran-Ferguson analysis dictated by National Securities and Fabe. ERISA's Savings Clause, which is an exception to the otherwise broad preemptive effect of ERISA, provides in pertinent part that HN17[↑] "nothing in this subchapter shall be construed to exempt or relieve any person from any law of any state which regulates insurance." 29 U.S.C. § 1144(b)(2)(A) (emphasis added). As the Fourth Circuit explained [33] in Tri-State, HN18[↑] "the term 'business of insurance' as used in the McCarran-Ferguson Act has been adopted as the basis for defining the scope of the Savings Clause of ERISA." Tri-State, 33 F.3d at 314; Pilot Life Ins. Co. v. Dedeaux, 481 U.S. 41, 48-49, 95 L. Ed. 2d 39, 107 S. Ct. 1549 (1987); Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 471 U.S. 724, 742-43, 85 L. Ed. 2d 728, 105 S. Ct. 2380 (1985).

In Tri-State, the Fourth Circuit held that, at least as to the practices there involved (abusive claims processing), the West Virginia Unfair Trade Practices Act did not regulate the "business of insurance;" and, therefore, was not saved from preemption by ERISA's Savings Clause. Tri-State, 33 F.3d at 314-15; see Custer, 12 F.3d at 419-20. The West Virginia Unfair Trade Practices Act is, in most substantive respects, the same statute as Chapter 5 (Unfair Trade Practices Act) of Virginia's insurance code. Consequently, say the plaintiffs, Tri-State and Custer require a holding that Chapter 5 of Title 38.2, Virginia's version of the same statute, was not "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance."

The plaintiff's argument erroneously [34] equates the phrase "business of insurance," which appears in the second clause of Section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act and which the Fourth Circuit interpreted in Tri-State and Custer, with the language "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" which is in the first clause of Section 2(b) and which was not before the Fourth Circuit, but which is dispositive here. This is significant because, under Fabe, the [*1164] "broad category of laws enacted 'for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance' . . . necessarily encompasses more than just the 'business of insurance.'" Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210.

When courts have applied the term "business of insurance" in the McCarran-Ferguson Act as the basis for defining the scope of ERISA's Savings Clause, they have used the three part test for the business of insurance that was articulated in Pireno and Royal Drug. See Pilot Life Ins. Co. v. Dedeaux, 481 U.S. 41, 48-49, 95 L. Ed. 2d 39, 107 S. Ct. 1549 \(1987\); Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 471 U.S. 724, 743, 85 L. Ed. 2d 728, 105 S. Ct. 2380 \(1985\). However, the three part test developed in Pireno and Royal Drug, [35] and consequently applied to ERISA's Savings Clause in Metropolitan Life and Pilot Life, "involved the scope of the antitrust immunity located in the second clause of § 2(b)." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2209. Simply put, the Pireno test defines only the "business of insurance," which, by definition, is not as broad as the scope of the language at issue here ("laws enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance.") Therefore, the Fourth Circuit's decisions in Tri-State and Pireno to the effect that the West Virginia Unfair Trade Practice Act does not constitute the "business of insurance" do not require a decision in this action that the sections of Virginia's Unfair Trade Practices Act at issue here were not "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance."

At first glance, it may seem peculiar that the phrase "regulates insurance," as used in ERISA's Savings Clause is different in scope from the phrase "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance," as used in the first clause of Section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. For several reasons, however, the distinction is both logical [36] and necessary. First, the first clause of Section 2(b) contains the word "purpose" which is missing from ERISA's Savings Clause. As the Supreme Court held in Fabe, inclusion of this word effectuates a broader scope than where that word is omitted and the reference is only to the "business of insurance" itself. Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210.

Second, the distinction is entirely consistent with the purpose of the McCarran-Ferguson Act through which Congress intended to remove "obstructions which might be thought to flow from [Congress'] own power, whether dormant or exercised, except as otherwise expressly provided in the Act itself or in future legislation." Fabe 133 S. Ct. at 2207 (quoting Prudential Ins. Co. v. Benjamin, 328 U.S. 408, 429-30, 90 L. Ed. 1342, 66 S. Ct. 1142 \(1946\)) (emphasis added). The first clause of Section 2(b), therefore, imposes "what is, in effect, a clear-statement rule, a rule that state laws enacted 'for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance' do not yield to conflicting federal statutes unless a federal statute specifically requires otherwise." Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2211. Accordingly, HN19 under the first clause of Section 2(b) states [37] have the broadest power to regulate the business of insurance where neither the McCarran-Ferguson Act nor another federal statute specifically provides that its power should be less extensive.

The Pireno test for the "business of insurance" developed in the context of the antitrust exemption contained in the second clause of Section 2(b). There Congress intended to carve out an exemption from federal antitrust law that was more "narrow" than the exemption described in the first clause of Section 2(b). Fabe, 113 S. Ct. at 2210. Congress therefore used language less broad than it used in the first clause.

For the reasons set forth above, the court concludes that those provisions of Chapter 5 of Title 38.2 that are at issue in this case are laws "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance," and that the Fourth Circuit's decisions in Tri-State and Custer do not require a different result.

3. Whether the State Law Would be Superseded, Impaired or Invalidated by the Application of RICO

Even if a state law was enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance and the federal law at issue does not specifically relate [38] to the business of insurance, [*1165] the McCarran-Ferguson Act will operate to bar application of the federal law only where its application would "invalidate, impair, or supersede" the state law.

The provisions of Chapter 5 of Title 38.2 that apply to the defendants' conduct in this case, and that this court has already held were "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance," are directed to the prohibition, remediation and punishment of acts such as those on which the plaintiffs fasten their RICO claim. These provisions can be enforced only by the SCC because Chapter 5 does not create a private cause of action.⁸ The issue is whether application of RICO would "invalidate, impair or supersede" Chapter 5 of Title 38.2. HN20

The words "invalidate, impair and supersede" are not defined in the McCarran-Ferguson Act. Like all statutory terms, those three words must be given their ordinary meaning unless another meaning is dictated by the context in which they are used or by statutory definition. See Asgrow Seed Co. v. Winterboer, 130 L. Ed. 2d 682, 115 S. Ct. 788, 793 \(1995\); Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Meyer, 114 S. Ct. 996, 1001 \(1994\); Watt v. Alaska, 451 U.S. 259, 265-66, 68 L. Ed. 2d 80, 101 S. Ct. 1673 \(1981\).

"Invalidate" means to "weaken or make valueless" or to discredit. It is a synonym for nullify. Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1188 (1986). "Impair" means to "make [40] worse . . . diminish in quantity, value, excellence or strength . . . do harm to." Id. at 1131. "Supersede" means to "make obsolete, inferior, or outmoded . . . to make void . . . to make superfluous or unnecessary." Id. at 2295.

RICO, which authorizes private causes of action, treble damages and attorneys fees is a powerful weapon in the arsenal of any litigant. Application of RICO to afford redress for violations of Chapter 5, would invalidate and impair the regulation sought to be accomplished by Chapter 5 and the enforcement mechanisms of Va. Code §§ 38.2-218-220. Most aggrieved insureds would opt for the prospect of treble damages rather than participate in remedial measures structured by the SCC. This would make insurers less willing to agree with the SCC to settle disputes over alleged violations for fear of compromising their positions in pending or threatened RICO litigation. The ability to act promptly and to secure for insureds settlements is central to the state's ability to protect insureds and to regulate the insured-insurer relationship. The prospect of treble damages and attorneys fees would weaken, diminish and do serious injury to, if not nullify, the sections [41] of Chapter 5, and the enforcement mechanisms which protect and regulate that relationship.

Application of RICO would also supersede the state laws at issue. Because RICO provides for a private cause of action and treble damages, and because these provisions of RICO differ dramatically from the way in which Virginia's insurance code addresses the same conduct, RICO would in effect replace Chapter 5 as the principal means by which to remedy such conduct. It would convert a system of public redress into a system of private redress. The forum for redress would shift from the SCC to the federal courts. The result of these effects would be that RICO would supersede Virginia's laws.

Driven by concerns such as these, several district courts confronted with similar facts have held that HN21 application of civil RICO "invalidate[s], impair[s], or supersede[s]" state laws "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" when the state laws did not provide for private causes of action, treble damages, costs, or attorneys [*1166] fees, all of which are available under RICO. See Wexco Inc. v. IMC, Inc., 820 F. Supp. 194, 202-04 \(M.D. Pa. 1993\); Everson v. Blue Cross & Blue [42] Shield of Ohio, No. 93cv7534, 1994 WL 675200, at *12 (N.D. Ohio June 15, 1994); LeDuc v. Kentucky Central Life Ins. Co., 814 F. Supp. 820, 829 \(N.D. Cal. 1992\); Forsyth v. Humana, 827 F. Supp. 1498, 1521-22 \(D. Nev. 1993\).

⁸The SCC has acted under these, and other, provisions of the state insurance law to stop the discounting practices, to impose a $ 5 million civil penalty and to secure the insurers' agreement to a consent order by which they are required to implement, under the supervision of the SCC, a comprehensive refund program which has produced more than 128,000 refunds amounting to a total payment of $ 21.9 million. Those punitive and corrective measures were the product of a comprehensive investigation which considered the offending practices, the interests of the insurers, the need for remedial action, the need for punishment and the public interest. With those factors in mind, the SCC effectuated the remedial program and imposed the punishment it thought best satisfied all interests.

However, several recent decisions by courts of appeals outside of the Fourth Circuit have held that HN22[↑] federal statutes do not "invalidate, impair or supersede" state statutes by permitting private causes of action not available under the state law or by allowing remedies not available under the state law. See Nationwide Mut. Insurance Co. v. Cisneros, 52 F.3d 1351, 1363 \(6th Cir. 1995\); Merchants Home Delivery Service, Inc. v. Frank B. Hall & Co., Inc., 50 F.3d 1486, 1491-92 \(9th Cir. 1995\); National Association for the Advancement of Colored People v. American Family Mut. Ins. Co., 978 F.2d 287, 295-97 \(7th Cir. 1992\), cert. denied, 124 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 2335 (1993).⁹ Of these decisions, only Merchants Home Delivery involved application of the RICO statute.

[43] In Merchants Home Delivery, the Ninth Circuit held that HN23[↑] "the application of a federal statute prohibiting acts which are also prohibited under a state's insurance laws does not 'invalidate, impair or supersede' the state's laws under § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act." Merchants Home Delivery, 50 F.3d at 1492. Significantly, however, the Ninth Circuit framed the issue as whether "the term 'impair' is intended to be a very broad proscription against applying federal law where a state has regulated, or chosen not to regulate, in the insurance industry. Id. at 1491 (emphasis omitted). The court held that HN24[↑] "the language of § 2(b) is inconsistent with a congressional intent to allow states to preempt the field of insurance regulation." Id. at 1492. The defendants in this case do not make the argument that the Ninth Circuit considered and rejected. Rather, they argue that the specific federal statute at issue in this case, civil RICO, would have the effect of impairing and superseding specific state laws regulating the business of insurance. To that extent, Merchants Home Delivery is distinguishable.

The decisions of the Sixth and Seventh Circuits in Nationwide [44] and American Family, respectively, also reached the broad holding that federal civil rights laws that prohibit the same conduct as state insurance laws cannot be said to "invalidate, impair or supersede" the state laws, even if they differ in the remedies and enforcement mechanisms that they make available. Nationwide, 52 F.3d at 1363; American Family, 978 F.2d at 295-97. However, those decisions did not consider the application of RICO. They involved the application of the federal Fair Housing Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 3601-19. Because the remedies available under RICO are among the most severe ever enacted in a federal civil statute, and because RICO is uniquely applicable to a broad range of activities, these decisions addressing a wholly different federal law are not controlling here.

To the extent that the decisions of the Sixth, Seventh and Ninth Circuits must be read to hold that any federal statute which proscribes the same conduct as a state statute will never "invalidate, impair or supersede" the state statute, those holdings would be both overly broad and inconsistent with the plain meaning of the language of Section 2(b). First, the inquiry that the McCarran-Ferguson [45] Act requires, whether federal law "invalidate[s], impair[s], or supersede[s]" state law, does not lend itself to a blanket rule that certain types of inconsistencies can never satisfy that language. Rather, the language of Section 2(b) requires that a court look at the actual effect of the federal law on the specific state law. In this case, the court is persuaded that allowing claims under RICO will greatly impair the SCC's ability to enforce Virginia's insurance code and, specifically, to secure from insurers settlements that are in the interest of all insureds and in the public interest as well. The court also finds the disparity between the cause of action [*1167] and remedy permitted by RICO and the enforcement mechanism and remedy permitted by Virginia's insurance code to be so great that the federal law would in fact supersede the state law. To ignore these conclusions in favor of a bright line rule that no federal law can "invalidate, impair, or supersede" a state law so long as they prohibit the same acts is contrary to the purposes of the McCarran-Ferguson Act as well as to its plain language.

Second, the premise that federal and state laws that prohibit the same conduct "but [46] differ in penalty do not conflict with or displace each other," American Family, 978 F.2d at 297, seems to be based on a very narrow reading of the purpose and function of the state laws at issue. Virtually any state statute includes more than a simple proscription of conduct. It includes the appropriate penalty for that conduct and the appropriate mechanism for enforcing the proscription. A state law that prohibits an act, punishes it with a specific range of fines, makes it the subject of remedial action, and vests enforcement in a state quasi-judicial entity cannot be said to be consistent with a federal law that prohibits the same act, permits treble damages, fees, and costs, and expressly creates a personal cause of action. If Nationwide, Merchants Home Delivery and American Family are construed to hold otherwise, their lead cannot be followed here.

Moreover, all three decisions proceed upon a common, but flawed, analytical model by assessing the "invalidate, impair or supersede" facet of the McCarran-Ferguson analysis as an issue of "inverse preemption." Nationwide, 52 F.3d at 1363; Merchants Home Delivery, 50 F.3d at 1492; American Family, 978 F.2d at 471 296. As a result, all three decisions assess the effect of Section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act through the prism of jurisprudence developed to determine when, under the Supremacy Clause, a federal statute preempts state law. This accounts for the fact that American Family, Nationwide and Merchants Home Delivery interpreted the McCarran-Ferguson Act to require a showing of direct conflict between the state and federal law to preclude application of the state law and then augmented that determination by concluding that state and federal law could co-exist even though the federal law provided a cause of action not provided under state law and remedies greater than those provided by state law. Nationwide, 52 F.3d at 1363, Merchants Home Delivery, 50 F.3d at 1492; American Family, 978 F.2d at 295-97.

HN25[] Preemption is the doctrine by which courts enforce Article VI of the Constitution which provides that the laws of the United States "shall be the supreme Law of the Land . . . any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any state to the Contrary notwithstanding." U.S. Const. art. VI. Preemption occurs when Congress explicitly so provides or when the intent to preempt [48] is implied by the structure and purpose of a federal statute. Jones v. Rath Packing Co., 430 U.S. 519, 525, 51 L. Ed. 2d 604, 97 S. Ct. 1305 (1977). More particularly:

In the absence of an express congressional command, state law is pre-empted if that law actually conflicts with federal law [citations omitted] or if federal law so thoroughly occupies a legislative field "as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it." [citations omitted].

Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., 505 U.S. 504, 112 S. Ct. 2608, 2617, 120 L. Ed. 2d 407 (1992). Thus, HN26[] the concept of preemption (whether "direct" or "inverse") requires a determination whether there exists a direct conflict between federal and state law or whether state and federal law can co-exist.

The McCarran-Ferguson Act does not admit of such an analysis even though in it Congress declared the primacy of state law in the regulation of the business of insurance. This is because the McCarran-Ferguson Act does not turn on status, i.e., supremacy of a body of law, but on the effect of the law, i.e., whether an act of Congress "invalidates, impairs or supersedes" [49] certain kinds of state law.

Forcing the McCarran-Ferguson Act analysis into the preemption model distorts the analysis required by the statutory test fixed by the McCarran-Ferguson Act. Although direct conflict and co-existence - as used in the jurisprudence of federal preemption - no [1168] doubt have a bearing on whether a federal law invalidates, impairs or supersedes a state law, the analytical model required by preemption does not always provide a proper basis for applying the McCarran-Ferguson standard. As explained above, that certainly is the case here. For this additional reason then, the court concludes that Nationwide, Merchants Home Delivery and American Family cannot control the McCarran-Ferguson analysis here.

Finally, two of those decisions find support in Mackey v. Nationwide Ins. Cos., 724 F.2d 419 (4th Cir. 1984) where the Fourth Circuit held that "the presence of a general regulatory scheme does not show that any particular state law would be invalidated, impaired or superseded by the application of the Fair Housing Act or the Civil Rights Acts." Id. at 421. Some decisions have cited to Mackey as support for the proposition that the availability of [50] a private cause of action and additional remedies under federal law does not make that law inconsistent with state law. See Nationwide, 52 F.3d at 1363; American Family, 978 F.2d at 296.

The Fourth Circuit's decision in Mackey did not go so far as the Sixth and Seventh Circuits suggest. What the Fourth Circuit held was that HN27[] the existence of a comprehensive regulatory scheme was not, in and of itself, sufficient to show that application of a federal law would "invalidate, impair or supersede" any particular state law. The Fourth Circuit did not hold that only a direct conflict between the prohibitions of federal and state law would trigger the McCarran-Ferguson Act. In fact, the McCarran-Ferguson Act argument failed because "we are not pointed to any law enacted by North Carolina which would be 'impaired' by application of the Fair Housing Act or the Civil Rights Acts." Mackey, 724 F.2d at 421 (emphasis added). The Fourth Circuit therefore concluded that "in these circumstances, barring these claims is unnecessary to the effectuation of the congressional goals in enacting McCarran-Ferguson, insuring that states retain the power to regulate the business of insurance." [51] Id.

In this action, the record demonstrates how application of RICO would impair and supersede the SCC's ability to enforce several specific provisions of Virginia's insurance code. The fact that the same conduct which the state attempted to prohibit would be the basis of a RICO claim does not insure "that states retain the power to regulate the business of insurance." Id. Therefore, the court concludes that the decision in Mackey does alter the determination that application of RICO would impair and supersede state laws "enacted . . . for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance."

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the plaintiffs' RICO claims are precluded as a matter of federal law and the defendants' motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) will be granted. With the dismissal of the RICO claim and the previous dismissal of the ERISA claims (Counts One and Two), this court lacks original jurisdiction over the remaining claims and, under 28 U.S.C. § 1337(c)(3), the court declines to exercise jurisdiction over the state law claims. Accordingly, Count Three is dismissed with prejudice and Count Four is dismissed without prejudice. Count Five, [52] to the extent that it seeks relief flowing from Count Three, is dismissed with prejudice. To the extent that Count Five seeks relief on the basis of the state law claims, Count Five is dismissed without prejudice.

The Clerk is directed to send a copy of this Memorandum Opinion to all counsel of record.

It is so ORDERED.

In order to prevail on their antitrust claim, plaintiffs must prove that they sustained injury by reason of defendants' unlawful conduct. In doing so, plaintiffs must establish that defendants' unlawful activities caused at least some of their injury, rather than the injury being wholly attributable to other factors. In the absence of more precise proof, causation of injury may be found as a matter of just and reasonable inference from proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs, and from evidence of change in prices not shown to be attributable to other causes. Once causation of damages has been established, the amount of damages may be determined by a just and reasonable estimate, as long as the jury verdict is not the product of speculation or guesswork.

Daubert holds that Fed. R. Evid. 702, in conjunction with Fed. R. Evid. 104\(a\), requires the trial judge to act as gatekeeper to ensure that scientific expert testimony is both reliable and relevant. The term "scientific knowledge" establishes a standard of evidentiary reliability. The adjective "scientific" implies a grounding in the methods and procedures of science, and the word "knowledge" means more than subjective belief or unsupported speculation and applies to any body of known facts or ideas inferred from such facts or accepted as truths on good grounds. In order to qualify as scientific knowledge, proposed expert testimony must be supported by appropriate validation, i.e., good grounds based on what is known.

[\[*1498\] REVISED MEMORANDUM AND ORDER](#)

This price-fixing case comes before the Court on Defendants' Joint Motion in Limine to Exclude Dr. Richard C. Hoyt's Testimony and Expert Report From this Case (Doc. # 443), filed May 5, 1995. Class action plaintiffs claim that defendants engaged in an illegal price-fixing conspiracy under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and -- more specifically -- that defendants [3] conspired to fix the case price of aluminum phosphide pellets and tablets in the United States from January 1, 1988, through December 31, 1992. Plaintiffs seek damages on behalf of all entities (except those owned by defendants) which purchased such products during that period. Movants seek to preclude certain portions of the testimony and report of plaintiffs' economic expert, Dr. Richard C. Hoyt, under Federal Rules of Evidence 104(a), 403, 702, and 703.

On May 16, 1995, the Court held an evidentiary hearing on defendants' motion and heard the testimony of both Dr. Hoyt and defendants' economic expert, Dr. John J. Siegfried. Having considered the evidence adduced at that hearing, along with the expert reports of both Dr. Hoyt and Dr. Siegfried, the Court finds that defendants' motion should be and hereby is sustained in the respects and for the reasons set forth below.

[4] Aluminum phosphide is a fumigant used to control insects in the storage of raw agricultural commodities and other food and non-food products. Aluminum phosphide reacts with moisture in the air and releases phosphine gas, which is toxic to insects. In the United States, aluminum phosphide is primarily sold in pellets and tablets. Until the early 1980's, the aluminum phosphide industry was dominated by a legal patent on a product called Phostoxin, sold by Degesch America. Around 1980, the patent expired and new manufacturers began to enter the market. Aluminum phosphide prices began to fall steadily over time as the advantage of the original patent monopoly eroded and new [*1499] entrants into the market gained market share.

Aluminum phosphide products may be imported and sold in the United States, but only by those companies which are registered with the Environmental Protection Agency. Between 1988 and 1993, those companies were Degesch America, Inc., Inventa Corporation, McShares, Inc., Pestcon Systems, Inc., Bernardo Chemicals, and Midland Fumigant.² During the relevant time period, these defendants -- along with co-defendants United Phosphorus Ltd., Casa Bernardo, Detia Degesch GmbH, [5] and Detia Freyberg GmbH -- manufactured or distributed aluminum phosphide products for sale in the United States.³

In the late summer and early fall of 1991, the United States Department of Justice issued subpoenas with respect to an ongoing investigation of criminal price-fixing in the aluminum phosphide industry. On November 1, 1993, that investigation resulted in criminal indictments against Detia Degesch, Detia Freyberg, Degesch America, Pestcon, Casa Bernardo, Inventa, and United Phosphorus.⁴ In those indictments, the United States alleged that defendants had conspired to raise the price of aluminum phosphide pellets and tablets from January, 1990, to November, 1990. Detia Degesch and Pestcon pleaded guilty to these charges, admitting that they had conspired to [6] fix prices at a meeting in Rio de Janeiro in January, 1990. Casa Bernardo entered a plea of nolo contendere. The United States dismissed the charges against Detia Freyberg and Degesch America. Inventa and United Phosphorus proceeded to trial, but the United States District Court for the District of Kansas ultimately dismissed the charges against them.

B. Findings of Fact

The Court makes the following findings of fact by a preponderance of the evidence based on the evidence and testimony presented at the hearing on May 16, 1995:

¹ Though the factual record remains to be fully developed through trial of these matters, the Court believes that the facts stated herein are generally undisputed, based on the proceedings to date.

² Midland Fumigant is not a defendant in this case.

⁴ Of the defendants in this case, McShares and Bernardo Chemicals (a wholly-owned subsidiary of Casa Bernardo) were not charged in the criminal case.

HN1 In order to prevail on their antitrust claim, plaintiffs must prove that they sustained injury by reason of defendants' unlawful conduct. See Farley Transp. Co., Inc. v. Santa Fe Trail Transp. Co., 786 F.2d 1342, 1348 (9th Cir. 1985). In doing so, plaintiffs must establish that defendants' unlawful activities caused at least [*7] some of their injury, rather than the injury being wholly attributable to other factors. Id. at 1349. In the absence of more precise proof, causation of injury may be found as a matter of just and reasonable inference from proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs, and from evidence of change in prices not shown to be attributable to other causes. See Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 66 S. Ct. 574, 579, 90 L. Ed. 652 (1946). Once causation of damages has been established, the amount of damages may be determined by a just and reasonable estimate, as long as the jury verdict is not the product of speculation or guesswork. MCI Communications v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1161 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891, 104 S. Ct. 234, 78 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1983).

Plaintiffs propose to supply this evidence through the expert testimony of Richard C. Hoyt, Ph.D., president of Analytics, Inc., an economics and statistical consulting firm in Excelsior, Minnesota. Dr. Hoyt has a doctorate in Agriculture and Applied Economics. He held teaching positions at the William Mitchell College of Law in St. Paul, Minnesota from [*8] 1977 to 1978, and the College of St. Thomas in St. Paul, Minnesota from 1978 to 1979. Since that time, Dr. Hoyt has devoted his full-time attention to forensic ends: a "partial list" of his experience as an expert witness includes 121 cases (42 antitrust cases, 15 contract cases, 21 discrimination cases, 29 injury/death cases, two patent [*1500] cases, 10 stockholder suits, and two toxic waste cases). In addition, in the last 25 years, Dr. Hoyt has published eight articles. Two articles, published in the Minnesota Law Review and the Hamline Law Review in 1976 and 1988, respectively, deal with comprehensive models for calculating future damage awards. Four articles on similar topics appear in the Journal of Legal Economics (1991 and 1993) and Issues & Methods in Litigation Economics (1991). Dr. Hoyt is an expert for hire.⁵

[9] Before and After Model

Dr. Hoyt proposes to testify to the fact and amount of damages caused by defendants' alleged conspiracy.⁶ [11] Dr. Hoyt's opinion, according to his report dated March 27, 1995, is as follows: (1) from January 1, 1988 through October 31, 1993, defendants had the ability and the economic incentive to maintain prices for aluminum phosphide pellets and tablets at "higher than competitive levels" throughout the United States;⁷ (2) the market structure of the ⁵ Because he has devoted his career to partisan adjudicatory purposes, it is perhaps no surprise that Dr. Hoyt's professional stature is unequal to that of defendants' expert, Dr. John J. Siegfried. Dr. Siegfried is a professor of economics at Vanderbilt University, where he has served with distinction for 22 years. His professional credentials include numerous visiting professorships throughout the world, service as a Fulbright Senior Scholar (1991-92), selection as current president-elect of the Southern Economic Association (the largest regional association of economists in the United States), and service on the senior staff of President Gerald Ford's Council of Economic Advisors. In 1990, the National Association of Economic Educators honored Dr. Siegfried for lifetime contributions to research on economics education. In addition, Dr. Siegfried has authored more than 100 books and articles in prestigious economic journals throughout the United States, and currently serves on the editorial boards of three such journals. In noteworthy contrast with Dr. Hoyt, Dr. Siegfried has testified as an expert in six to nine cases. Dr. Siegfried does not advertise his availability as an expert witness and he devotes only five to eight percent of his time to consulting.

⁶ For purposes of this ruling, the Court notes that Dr. Hoyt's report was intended and required to contain a complete statement of all opinions to be expressed at trial, on direct examination, with the reasons and basis therefor. Plaintiffs have clearly understood and acknowledged their duty under Rule 26(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Letter from Angela K. Green to Hon. Kathryn H. Vratil (May 19, 1995). Out of an abundance of caution, however, and to avoid any arguable unfairness as counsel and the Court chart new paths under the 1993 amendments to Rule 26 and Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, 113 S. Ct. 2786 (1993), the Court has construed Dr. Hoyt's report of March 27, 1995, as supplemented by his testimony at the hearing on May 16, 1995.

⁷ According to Dr. Hoyt, the following factors provided defendants the ability and economic incentive to maintain prices at higher than competitive levels: four firms (Degesch America, Pestcon, Research and Bernardo) controlled 90% of the market; demand was inelastic and declining during the time period; market entry was limited by relatively high barriers in the form of licensing aluminum phosphide industry, "in conjunction with an agreement to fix prices . . had the effect of raising, stabilizing and maintaining prices of aluminum phosphide products at supra-competitive levels over an extended period of time"; and (3) the fact and the extent of defendants' supracompetitive pricing can be measured by a "before and after" model which "generally compares defendants' prices in two distinct time periods (conspiratorial and normative) and calculates the degree to which prices were raised and/or maintained at artificially high levels." Expert Report of Richard C. Hoyt, p. 8, P 8. All parties agree that the "before and after" model is well accepted within the field of economics, and that [10] it may be properly applied to determine the fact and the amount of damages in this case. The dispute is whether Dr. Hoyt indeed applied the "before and after" model, or whether his purported application is so fundamentally flawed as to render his conclusions inadmissible under Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2786 (1993).

The theoretical basis for the "before and after" model, in Dr. Hoyt's words, is as follows:

This model is based upon the premise that the normative period is a measure of what the competitive price would have [*1501] been absent illegal conduct. Under this well accepted approach, the monetary impact to the class is the difference between the actual price and the estimated competitive price, multiplied times the quantities purchased by all class members.

Expert Report of Richard C. Hoyt, p. 8, P 8. As noted, the "before and after" model requires [12] that actual prices during the conspiracy period be compared to estimated competitive prices that would have prevailed during that period, absent the conspiracy. The model therefore required Dr. Hoyt to determine estimated prices that would have prevailed during the conspiracy period, based on prices that prevailed during the normative or non-conspiratorial period. By definition, "estimated competitive prices" are just that: they cannot be ascertained as historical facts but must be calculated through the exercise of expert judgment and opinion. Through application of established scientific procedures within the field of economics, economists are qualified to make such judgments and calculations.

In this case, Dr. Hoyt made the following findings and opinions concerning the estimated competitive prices that would have prevailed in the absence of a conspiracy:

(1) Estimated competitive prices for the conspiracy period (January 1, 1988 through December 31, 1992) are the prices which prevailed during the normative period (the ten consecutive months from January 1 through October 31, 1993); and

(2) The sole cause of the actual price differences between the conspiracy period [13] and the normative period was the conspiracy itself.

The two prongs of Dr. Hoyt's analysis are critical to plaintiffs' case and they are discussed, in detail, below.

Selection of January 1 to October 31, 1993 as the Normative Period

Plaintiffs' price-fixing claim is set against a stage of generally declining prices after 1980. As noted above, prior to 1980, the aluminum phosphide industry was dominated by a legal patent. After the patent expired, new competitors entered the market. Prices fell steadily as the advantage of the original patent monopoly eroded and four new competitors (Pestcon, Bernardo, Inventia and Midland) gained market share. The overall decline in the selling price of aluminum phosphide progressed steadily and continuously from 1980 through October, 1993 -- except for a noticeable spike during roughly two quarters of 1990, coinciding with the admitted price-fixing episode by Detia Degesch, Pestcon, and Casa Bernardo.

The price decline is evidenced by the following figures: In 1988, at the beginning of the alleged conspiracy, the Degesch companies,⁸ Pestcon, and Casa Bernardo almost exclusively dominated the market for aluminum and/or registration requirements by the United States government; and aluminum phosphide products are fungible. Expert Report of Richard C. Hoyt, at p. 7, P 6.

⁸For purposes of this motion, the Court refers to Degesch Weyers, Degesch Divisions, and Detia Export as the "Degesch companies."

phosphide pellets and tablets. [14] In 1988, prices for those products ranged from approximately $ 350 to $ 500 per case. Over the next five years, Inventra and Midland gained increased market shares at the expense of the three formerly dominant companies. By 1993, market shares were somewhat evenly distributed among the five manufacturers, with Inventra having the largest market share and Casa Bernardo the smallest. By late 1993, prices per case had dropped by about $ 150, to approximately $ 200 to $ 350 per case.⁹ See Defendants' Exhibit 4A.

Dr. Hoyt's opinion is that absent a conspiracy, the prices which prevailed during the first ten months of 1993 - the normative period - would have prevailed [15] throughout each of the five preceding years, from January 1, 1988 through December 31, 1992. According to Dr. Hoyt's written report, he selected January 1 through October 31, 1993 as the normative period for three reasons: (1) the grand jury issued subpoenas in late summer or early fall of 1991, thereby signaling to defendants that the price-fixing jig was up and triggering a resumption of competitive [*1502] forces; (2) designating January 1 through October 31, 1993 as the normative period allowed "sufficient lag time" for prices to return to normal; and (3) data for January 1 through October 31, 1993 was "the last portion of the most recent calendar year for which transaction data [were] available." Expert Report of Richard C. Hoyt, p. 9, P 9.

Upon analysis, Dr. Hoyt's opinion is flawed in several obvious respects which render his conclusions irrelevant and inadmissible in this case:

First, Dr. Hoyt's opinion ignores the before component of the "before and after" model. Dr. Hoyt concedes that if pre-conspiracy data is available, the preferred scientific approach is to consult the data both before and after the conspiracy period. Transcript (Vol. II) at 108, 111. Under that [16] approach, the economist has statistical bookends and may interpolate an estimated price line for any given conspiracy period instead of extrapolating an estimated price line from a single point in time. Although Dr. Hoyt had price information for all defendants for 1986 and 1987,¹⁰ his opinion does not address in any way the pre-conspiracy period. Therefore, Dr. Hoyt cannot account for the fact that prices before the alleged conspiracy are so substantially higher than the purportedly normal prices after the conspiracy.¹¹

[17] Second, Dr. Hoyt's opinion concerning "sufficient lag time" for normalization of post-conspiracy prices is based on neither evidence nor science. At the hearing on May 16, 1995, Dr. Hoyt defined lag time as the period when prices declined, after the indictments were handed down in August and September, 1991.¹² Transcript (Vol. II) at 66-67, 82. According to Dr. Hoyt, the lag time continued "at least" through 1992, because the "generally downward declining price trend" continued through that period. Transcript (Vol. II) at 68-69. In his view, the prices did not start to "decline or disintegrate" until the earlier part of 1992, and did not level off until 1993. Transcript (Vol. II) at 82.

Dr. Hoyt has expressed no opinion concerning what [18] lag time was necessary for aluminum phosphide prices to return to normal levels after the alleged conspiracy ended. The evidence is undisputed that the lag time "could be very short," and could start to run (as Dr. Siegfried phrased it) "when anybody involved in the conspiracy got wind

⁹ According to Dr. Hoyt, when differences between the actual prices and the 1993 normative prices are multiplied times the quantities actually purchased, the total overcharge to plaintiffs is $ 6,263,428.24.

¹⁰ Dr. Hoyt's complaints to the contrary are not credible, and indeed are contradicted by his own testimony at the hearing on May 16, 1995.

¹¹ Dr. Hoyt offers no scientific rationale for his refusal to consider data from the pre-conspiracy period. Whether we accept his premise that a "before or after" model is just as valid as a "before and after" model, we must hold Dr. Hoyt to those conclusions and opinions which are grounded in the methods and procedures of science and not based on subjective belief or unsupported speculation. Dr. Hoyt's method fails to address (let alone account for) an obvious sign of error in his analytical approach -- the elevated pre-conspiracy price structure -- and to this extent it is not grounded in the methods and procedures of the science of economics.

that they may be under investigation" and stopped fixing prices. Transcript (Vol. II) at 4. Dr. Hoyt states that the 15-month period from the issuance of the indictments to the beginning of the normative period was "sufficient" for defendants to return to competitive prices. He expresses no opinion that some shorter period (one hour? ten days? six months?) was not equally sufficient. Absent a scientifically-supported opinion in this regard, the record suggests no reason why an equally plausible normative period could not commence sometime (any time) before January 1, 1993. Nothing in Dr. Hoyt's demonstrated training as an economist or the factual record in this case has equipped Dr. Hoyt to opine with any reasonable degree of economic or scientific certainty that a 15-month lag time was necessary or sufficient for prices to return to normative levels.

In the end, Dr. Hoyt's selection of January [19] 1 through October 31, 1993 as the normative period comes to rest on his belief that 1993 prices are normative because prices were falling during 1992 but leveled off in 1993. Dr. Hoyt does not purport to explain why -- [*1503] in an industry characterized by declining demand from January 1, 1988 through October 31, 1993¹³ and generally declining prices from 1980 to date -- stable prices are "normal" prices for purposes of this analysis. Nor does he purport to account for factors other than "normalization" that may have brought post-conspiracy prices to what Dr. Hoyt views as their 1993 resting place. Indeed, other post-indictment time periods demonstrate the same pattern of falling prices, followed by a leveling off. They equally comply with Dr. Hoyt's criteria for what evidences a normative period. Dr. Hoyt's analysis yields no scientific basis for adopting one period as opposed to any other.

Finally, to the extent that Dr. Hoyt [20] has selected the normative period by reference to the availability of data (as opposed to its relevance or reliability), he offers no scientific or theoretical basis for his calculations and opinions.

Dr. Hoyt's methodology in selecting a normative period is not sound. Scientific learning in the field of economics offers no defensible reason why a prudent economist would select January 1 through October 31, 1993 as the normative period in this case. Recognized methodology for distinguishing the alleged violation period from the alleged non-violation period requires analysis of price patterns and statistical tests, including a "dummy variable approach," to determine whether for any proposed violation period the price was systematically higher than it would otherwise have been.¹⁴ Because Dr. Hoyt failed to perform this and other relevant analysis, his choice of a normative period is not consistent with accepted economic practice. To use Dr. Siegfried words, "the way he selected the benchmark is [not] consistent with the way an economist would do it."

[21] Cause of Price Differences between the Conspiracy Period and the Normative Period

The goal of a prudent economist in performing the "before and after" analysis is to determine the hypothetical or "counter-factual" prices that would have prevailed during the conspiracy period, but for the conspiracy.¹⁵ In applying the "before and after" model of damages, it is fundamentally necessary to explain the pattern of forces outside the violation period using factors that might have changed (i.e., supply, demand, and differences in competition) to predict the prices during the conspiratorial period. In this context, as in most economic problems, failure to keep "other things equal" is one of the known "pitfalls . . . in the path of the serious economist."

¹³ See Expert Report of Richard C. Hoyt (March 27, 1995) at 6- 7, paragraphs 5-6.

¹⁴ Dr. Siegfried applied the dummy variable approach to Dr. Hoyt's purported normative period, with surprising results. For two of the four companies on which Dr. Siegfried performed the dummy variable analysis, the statistical indicator method revealed that defendants' prices were actually lower than what would have been expected during the conspiracy period, January, 1988 through December, 1992. As a result, Dr. Siegfried concluded that Dr. Hoyt's benchmark period had "no basis."

Samuelson, P. and Nordhaus, W.D., Economics (13th ed.) at p. 7. This case presents two potential normative periods, a "before" period and an "after" period that have distinctly different price levels. One therefore must identify the reasons for the disparate price levels.¹⁶ [23] According to Dr. Siegfried, the field of economics supplies a statistical methodology for making this determination on a scientific basis, and the generally [22] accepted means of predicting the prices that would have prevailed absent the conspiracy is regression analysis. At a minimum, regression analysis addresses supply and demand factors by looking at price [*1504] trends over time. A prudent economist must account for these differences and would perform a minimum regression analysis if utilizing the "before and after" model.¹⁷

Dr. Hoyt did not perform a regression analysis to address such obvious points as (1) why normative prices before the alleged conspiracy so greatly exceeded allegedly normative prices after the alleged conspiracy; or (2) the effect of supply, demand, competition or other factors that might impact price levels during both normative periods. Instead, Dr. Hoyt opined that any price increase between 1993 and the conspiracy period was caused solely by the alleged conspiracy. He took a simple weighted average of the actual prices for ten months during 1993 and assumed that that price should have prevailed at all prior points in history.¹⁸ In doing so, Dr. Hoyt ignored price trends inside and outside the 1993 period, violating [24] a fundamental rule of application for the "before and after" model. According to Dr. Siegfried, Dr. Hoyt's calculations did not take into account the effect of four factors: (1) a precipitous decline in demand for aluminum phosphide pellets and tablets, with downward pressure on prices, after 1988; (2) increased competition, with downward pressure on prices, because of new entrants into the market; (3) marked realignment in position between 1990 and 1993, as newcomers to the market Midland and Inventra captured the majority of the pellets and tablets market, leaving the existing sellers to defend on the residual market by reducing prices; and (4) the fact that the aluminum phosphide market is an oligopolistic market, characterized by interdependent pricing, in which no independent seller believes that its actions will be ignored by the other sellers. Transcript (Vol. I) at 56-57, 114-116.

[25] Dr. Hoyt claims that the "before and after" model "traditionally assumes" that "the conspiracy was the sole cause of the price difference between the conspiracy period and normative period." Expert Report of Richard C. Hoyt, p. 8, n. 8. This is not a scientifically valid assumption, and the economic literature on the "before and after" model conclusively refutes it. One of the basic principles of economics, as applied to the "before and after" model, is that changes in supply, demand, and competition affect prices, and one cannot properly assume that the sole cause of any price difference between the conspiracy period and the normative period is the conspiracy itself. All of the literature on the "before and after" model (including that cited by Dr. Hoyt)¹⁹ includes the essential elements of ¹⁸ Dr. Hoyt determined the amount of damages by using separate benchmark prices for each defendant, based on the individual defendant's average 1993 price, as opposed to a single average 1993 benchmark price for the entire industry. This approach is contrary to Dr. Hoyt's assumption that aluminum phosphide products are fungible. According to Dr. Hoyt, the fungible nature of aluminum phosphide is one of the market factors which allowed defendants the economic incentive and ability to maintain prices at higher than competitive levels. Expert Report of Richard C. Hoyt, p. 7, P 6. Under well-accepted economic theory, however, fungible products -- or products which are the same -- will be sold at the same price in a competitive market. Dr. Hoyt uses multiple benchmark prices, ranging from $ 190 for Inventra to $ 400 for Degesch America. As Dr. Siegfried stated, this is an "enormous price difference for a product that is supposedly the same." If aluminum phosphide products are truly fungible, then a prudent economist would use a single benchmark price to calculate the amount of damages. Thus, Dr. Hoyt's selection of individual benchmark prices is inconsistent with the way an economist would do it, and his methodology is clearly calculated to exaggerate the amount of damages, without any basis in economic theory or principle.

modeling how changes in supply, demand, and competition affect prices -- so that an estimated non-conspiracy price can be predicted for the period of violation.

[26] Even if the "traditional assumption" is not valid in all cases, Dr. Hoyt claims that it is [*1505] empirically valid in this case because "the inflated prices between 1988 and 1992 were . . . not the result of correspondingly higher costs."²⁰ Under Dr. Hoyt's theory, the aluminum phosphide industry is a constant cost industry and in a constant cost industry, shifts in demand do not affect price and supply is immediately responsive to changes in demand. Dr. Hoyt concluded that industry costs were constant because he found that no statistically significant change in Degesch America production costs during the period of the alleged conspiracy (the first quarter of 1988 through the fourth quarter 1992). Dr. Hoyt's analysis looked only to Degesch America -- the only manufacturer that incurred production costs in the United States. Dr. Hoyt nonetheless assumed that production costs for pellets and tablets were constant across the industry. This assumption is appropriate, according to Dr. Hoyt, since Degesch America sales comprised roughly 60 percent of the total market and the supply curve for the entire industry represented the sum of the marginal cost curves for all firms within the industry. [27]²¹

The marginal cost curve for Degesch America would represent its supply curve, however, only if Degesch America operated in a perfectly competitive industry. Both experts agree that the aluminum phosphide market is oligopolistic and, thus, the fact that the marginal cost of Degesch America may be constant does not necessarily mean that the supply curve of Degesch America is completely elastic. Moreover, even if Degesch America's cost information supported Dr. Hoyt's conclusion that changes in demand would not affect price, Dr. Hoyt has not demonstrated any scientific validity [28] to his assumption that the entire aluminum phosphide industry has an elastic supply curve. An analysis of Degesch America's supply curve alone would have productive value in estimating the industry supply curve only if Degesch America's sales represented a very substantial portion of the industry, which stayed the same proportion over time. Here, of course, Degesch America's proportional share of the market was declining over time and thus it is not indicative of the supply curve of the entire industry.

Dr. Hoyt has not scientifically validated his conclusion that constant costs existed in the aluminum phosphide pellets and tablets industry, or that any such constant costs resulted in an elastic supply curve wherein changes in demand did not affect price. Moreover, even if the Court accepted verbatim Dr. Hoyt's explanation of his constant cost conclusion, Dr. Hoyt's application of the "before and after" model still does not account for other undisputed market factors, such as increasing competition from foreign manufacturers with lower production costs, which must be considered before a reliable price may be predicted for the conspiracy period. In short, Dr. Hoyt's assumption that [29] any change in prices between 1993 and the conspiracy period was caused solely by the conspiracy is not scientifically or economically valid.

D. Conclusions of Law

HN2 [↑] Rule 702 of the Federal Rules of Evidence governs the admissibility of expert testimony. That rule provides that if scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise.

In Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2786, 2795 (1993), the United States Supreme Court HN3 [↑] held that Rule 702, in conjunction with Rule 104(a), requires the trial judge to act as gatekeeper to ensure that scientific expert testimony is both reliable and relevant. The court found that the term "scientific knowledge" establishes a [*1506] standard of evidentiary reliability. Id. at 2795. The court noted that the adjective "scientific" implies a "grounding in the methods and procedures of science," and the word

²⁰ Dr. Hoyt does not seek to exclude causation factors other than higher costs.

"knowledge" means more [30] than subjective belief or unsupported speculation and applies to any body of known facts or ideas inferred from such facts or accepted as truths on good grounds. Id. at 2794. The court concluded that in order to qualify as scientific knowledge, proposed expert testimony must be supported by appropriate validation, i.e., good grounds based on what is known. Id. at 2795.

At issue in Daubert was the admissibility of expert testimony on the causal connection between plaintiffs' birth defects and a prescription drug, Bendectin. HN4[¹] The Daubert court specifically limited its discussion to expert testimony based on scientific knowledge, but noted that Rule 702 also applies to expert testimony on technical or other specialized knowledge. See Daubert, 113 S. Ct. at 2795 n.8. Plaintiffs argue that Daubert applies only to "hard" physical sciences which may be tested by scientific method, not social sciences such as economics. HN5[¹] Daubert indeed enumerates four non-exclusive non-dispositive factors which the Court may consider: (1) whether the scientific theory or technique can be (and has been) tested; (2) whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review [31] and publication; (3) known or potential rate of error; and (4) general acceptance in the scientific community. While each of these factors may not be relevant in determining the reliability of expert testimony on non-scientific or social science subjects, the Court has no doubt that Daubert requires it to act as a gatekeeper, to determine whether Dr. Hoyt's testimony and report are reliable and relevant under Rule 702. To the extent that Daubert factors are relevant to its determination, the Court considers them along with any other relevant factors.

Under Daubert, plaintiffs bear the burden of demonstrating by a preponderance of the evidence that Dr. Hoyt is proposing to testify to (1) economic knowledge that (2) will assist the trier of fact to understand or determine a fact in issue. See Daubert, 113 S. Ct. at 2796 n. 10 (citing Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 175-176, 107 S. Ct. 2775, 97 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1987)). This inquiry entails preliminary assessment whether his reasoning and methodology are economically valid and can be properly applied to the facts in issue. Id. at 2796. The inquiry is a flexible one, with the overarching subject being the [32] evidentiary relevance and reliability of the principles that underlie a proposed submission. Id. at 2797. The court's focus must be solely on principles and methodology, not the conclusions that they generate. Id. at 2797.

HN6[¹] Under Rule 702, the inquiry whether expert testimony will assist the trier of fact is essentially a question of relevance. Daubert, 113 S. Ct. at 2794-95 (addressing the relationship of Rule 702 and the "general acceptance" test for scientific evidence from Frye v. United States, 54 App. D.C. 46, 293 Fed. 1013 (D.C. Cir. 1923)). Like all evidentiary issues, the trial court has wide discretion in making these determinations. United States v. Rice, 52 F.3d 843 (10th Cir. 1995). In Rice, the trial court refused to let defendant's expert express certain opinions, and the Tenth Circuit affirmed. In doing so, it made the following observation:

[Defendant's expert] was really not called upon to supply specialized knowledge but to speculate and hypothesize. Traditionally, hypothesis may be an appropriate subject for expert testimony when based upon conclusions from established evidentiary facts, but here [defendant's expert's] [33] testimony was to be based entirely on pure surmise.

Rice, __ F.3d at __. Here, likewise, plaintiffs call upon Dr. Hoyt not to supply specialized knowledge, but to plug evidentiary holes in plaintiffs' case, to speculate, and to surmise. One does not need an expert economist to do what Dr. Hoyt proposes to do. A non-expert, using Dr. Hoyt's criteria, could pick as an equally valid normative period any arbitrary time period, of any length, occurring at any time after the date of the admitted conspiracy. Dr. Hoyt's analysis is driven [*1507] by a desire to enhance the measure of plaintiffs' damages, even at the expense of well-accepted scientific principles and methodology. Nothing in Dr. Hoyt's analysis makes the data for his so-called "normative" period more relevant than the data for any other pre- or post-conspiracy period, and the record yields no factual basis for any hypothesis that will support his calculations and opinion. Similarly, a non-expert could assume that price-fixing accounts for all differences in price between the conspiratorial period and the normative period. To the extent that Dr. Hoyt purports to cast that assumption as an affirmative declaration [34] based upon scientific reason and analysis, however, the Court must reject it. Dr. Hoyt's conclusions are scientifically unsound and irrelevant under Daubert.

Dr. Hoyt has not shown that his "before and after" model, as applied in this case, accounts for undisputed increases in competition between the conspiratorial and normative periods. See Schiller & Schmidt, Inc. v. Nordisco Corp., 969 F.2d 410, 415-16 \(7th Cir. 1992\) (expert should have separated injury due to unlawful conduct from that due to new entry in market). Nor has he justified his constant cost industry assumption or his application of individual benchmark prices for each defendants. See Herman Schwabe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 297 F.2d 906, 911 (2d Cir.) (economist's damage evidence properly excluded where no basis for assumption established), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 865, 82 S. Ct. 1031, 8 L. Ed. 2d 85 (1962). As such, Dr. Hoyt has not through proper scientific method established that price declines are attributable to the alleged conspiracy, to the exclusion of all other relevant factors.

Because Dr. Hoyt's opinion is based on unjustified assumptions and does not account for changes in other [35] relevant market conditions, it would not assist a trier of fact to determine the fact or amount of plaintiffs' damages. See, e.g., Farley Transp., 786 F.2d at 1351 (economist's assumption that lost profits were caused solely by defendant's illegal activities did not provide reasonable basis for calculation of damages); MCI Communications, 708 F.2d at 1162 (plaintiff's improper attribution of all losses to defendant's illegal acts, despite presence of significant other factors, not sufficient to permit jury to make reasonable and principled estimate of amount of damage); Southern Pac. Communications Co. v. American Tel. & Tel., 556 F. Supp. 825, 1075-76 \(D.D.C. 1983\) (damage model based on unreasonable and speculative assumptions not sufficient to support just and reasonable approximation of damages).

On this record, the Court concludes that in the respects outlined above, Dr. Hoyt's opinion is economically unreliable and therefore inadmissible under Rule 702. Moreover, any minimum probative value of Dr. Hoyt's opinion would be substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice resulting from his unsupported assumptions.

In evaluating the consequences of this ruling, [36] the Court recognizes the apparent anomaly of its holding: that without Dr. Hoyt's opinion, plaintiffs may be stripped of their ability to recover substantial actual damages from admitted conspirators. In the final analysis, however, the problem is one of plaintiffs' making. Plaintiffs are well represented by competent, knowledgeable, experienced trial counsel. Class counsel and their expert have charted an aggressive course with respect to their damage calculations, one which under Daubert was not without foreseeable risk. The Court acknowledges that the issue is not free from doubt, however, and indeed pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\), the Court certifies that this opinion involves a controlling issue of law as to which there exists substantial ground for difference of opinion, and that an immediate appeal from this order may materially advance the ultimate termination of this litigation.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that Defendants' Joint Motion in Limine to Exclude Dr. Richard C. Hoyt's Testimony and Expert Report From this Case (Doc. # 443), filed May 5, 1995, should be and hereby is sustained in the respects outlined above, subject to the foregoing certification under [28 U.S.C. \[37\] § 1292\(b\)](#).

The determination of whether a continuing violation exists depends principally upon a three-pronged analysis. The first factor involves subject matter and whether the alleged acts involve the same type of discrimination, tending to connect them in a continuing violation. The second factor involves frequency and whether the alleged acts are recurring (e.g., a biweekly paycheck) or more in the nature of an isolated employment decision. The third factor, perhaps of most importance, involves the degree of permanence and whether an act has the degree of permanence which should trigger an employee's awareness and duty to assert his or her rights, or which should indicate to the employee that the continued existence of the adverse consequences of the act is to be expected without being dependent on a continuing intent to discriminate.

HN9 Statute of Limitations, Tolling

The first two factors in the Berry test, subject matter and frequency, bear on whether acts both within and without the limitation period are part of a discriminatory policy or practice chargeable to the employer, as distinguished from unrelated if deplorable manifestations of individual prejudice. They thus reflect the view that a claim involving an employer's discriminatory policy or practice should not always be cabined by the statutory limitation period in recognition of the special difficulties with which an employee may have to deal.

HN10 [] Statute of Limitations, Tolling

The third factor of the Berry standard, whether the nature of the events outside the limitation period should have triggered awareness of the need to assert one's rights, evokes considerations central to statutes of limitations generally. Moreover, it generally is regarded as the core and most important element of the Berry test.

HN12 [] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

The limitation period is tolled during a defendant's fraudulent concealment of facts that would alert the plaintiff to the plaintiff's claim. A defendant may be equitably estopped to assert the statute where the defendant's actions cause the plaintiff to forebear from asserting the plaintiff's rights.

The statutory period of limitation does not run while the plaintiff fails to bring suit as a result of blameless ignorance, culpable action by the defendant, or the continued existence of a close and important relationship that reasonably may be regarded as making the commencement of litigation inappropriate or unduly costly in human terms.

If the discriminatory acts within and without the limitation period are sufficiently similar and frequent to justify a conclusion that both are part of a single discriminatory practice chargeable to the employer, the continuing violation doctrine permits assertion of claims based on both in recognition of the special problems inherent in the employment context. But the third of the Berry factors limits the scope of this otherwise boundless exception to the statute of limitations by permitting suit on a continuing violation theory only if the circumstances are such that a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position would not have sued earlier. This proviso gives due regard both to the defendant's interest in being protected against stale claims and to the plaintiff's interest in adopting strategies designed to deal both with employment discrimination and of being certain that matters have reached a point affording a proper basis for resort to the courts.

LEWIS A. KAPLAN, District Judge.

Hospital staff privileges are essential to the practice of most, perhaps all, medical specialties. Those responsible for extending or revoking staff privileges thus stand at a critical point in the provision of medical care. They bear a weighty responsibility for protecting the public against incompetent and negligent practitioners. At the same time, the power they wield may be abused for any of a panoply of reasons that may imbue human relationships, not least of them racial, religious and ethnic bias, anticompetitive motives, and personal animus.

On February 10, 1987, defendant Nyack Hospital revoked the thoracic and vascular surgery privileges of plaintiff Fletcher Johnson, M.D. Dr. Johnson, an African-American, claims that the decision was the product of anticompetitive motives and racial bias. The [*2] defendants contend that Dr. Johnson's privileges were terminated properly on the basis of professional incompetence and negligence and denies Dr. Johnson's charges.

Dr. Johnson, who has continued to enjoy general surgical privileges at Nyack, and his wholly-owned real estate company here seek damages under the federal antitrust and civil rights laws and on State law theories. Defendants move for summary judgment. They contend, in the main, that they are immune from the antitrust claims under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C. §§ 11111 et seq. \(1988\), and that all of plaintiffs' claims are barred by the statute of limitations.

Facts

This is the third lawsuit, and the second in this Court, in which Dr. Johnson has sought judicial relief with respect to the 1987 revocation of his vascular and thoracic surgery privileges. His 1987 Article 78 proceeding in the New York Supreme Court was dismissed for failure to exhaust administrative remedies. On February 7, 1990, after further proceedings at Nyack Hospital, Dr. Johnson sued the same defendants in this Court, claiming that the defendants' actions violated the antitrust laws. No civil rights claims were [*3] asserted. Judge Sweet granted defendants' motion for summary judgment dismissing the complaint without prejudice for failure to exhaust administrative remedies, and his decision was affirmed by the Second Circuit on the basis that Dr. Johnson's complaint was within the primary jurisdiction of the New York State Public Health Council [*158] ("PHC"). Johnson v. Nyack Hospital, 773 F. Supp. 625 \(S.D.N.Y. 1991\), aff'd on other grounds, 964 F.2d 116 \(2d Cir. 1992\) ("Johnson I"). Inasmuch as the details of the proceedings that preceded the filing of Johnson I are described in Judge Sweet's opinion, familiarity with which is assumed, there is no need to repeat them here. The Court therefore picks up the thread following Judge Sweet's decision in September 1990.

On January 14, 1992, the New York State Office of Professional Medical Conduct ("OPMC"), a body that is distinct from the PHC and that is responsible for bringing charges against physicians and considering revocation or limitation of their licenses,¹ preferred charges against Dr. Johnson and gave notice of a hearing that could have resulted in revocation of his license to practice medicine. The hearing commenced on February [*4] 10, 1992 and continued through November 17, 1992, ultimately covering a total of twenty one hearing days. The OPMC hearings thus were well under weigh when the Second Circuit affirmed Judge Sweet's decision on May 11, 1992.

Notwithstanding the Second Circuit's holding that Dr. Johnson's claim was within the primary jurisdiction of the PHC and that the claim was not cognizable in federal court absent prior resort to that body, Dr. Johnson did not proceed promptly to the PHC. Although his brief in this Court suggested other reasons,² Dr. Johnson's counsel frankly acknowledged at oral argument that plaintiff made a tactical judgment that recourse to the PHC was unlikely to be successful as long as the charges pending against him in the OPMC remained unresolved. He therefore delayed. (May 30, 1995 Tr. at 51)

[5] The OPMC rendered its decision on May 6, 1993. Each side claims the decision as a victory, as the OPMC rejected most of the charges against Dr. Johnson but found that he had been guilty of negligence on two occasions and incompetence on one.³ Moreover, Dr. Johnson places great weight on a letter from the hearing panel to the OPMC that was highly critical of the Nyack Hospital peer review proceedings. For purposes of this motion, however, it is immaterial who "won." The fundamental point is that Dr. Johnson did not even file a complaint with the PHC -- which the Second Circuit had held on May 11, 1992 had to be his initial step on the road to a federal forum -- until August 9, 1993. Thus, Dr. Johnson waited approximately fifteen months after the Second Circuit decision and three months after the OPMC decision before resorting to the PHC.

[6] After proceedings the details of which are not material here, the PHC finally ruled on September 7, 1994. While it appears that some members of the Council were concerned about one aspect of the 1987 proceedings at Nyack Hospital, there were not sufficient votes for the Council either to credit or reject Dr. Johnson's complaint. Accordingly, the PHC took no action whatever.

In February 1994, following the OPMC decision but before the PHC ruling, Dr. Johnson applied for reinstatement of his vascular and thoracic surgery privileges. The application was reviewed by Nyack's Director of Surgery, Dr. Simon, who determined that Dr. Johnson had not demonstrated current clinical competence in the field and that the application should be denied. Three hospital committees reviewed Dr. Simon's recommendation and agreed that the application should be denied, and the Board of Trustees so concluded.

Dr. Johnson appealed the decision, as he was entitled to do under the By-Laws. The hospital appointed former United States District Judge Kenneth Conboy as the hearing officer. At a conference prior to the hearing, [*159] Judge Conboy asked Dr. Johnson to identify the information he had submitted with his [7] application and questioned Dr. Johnson as to why he had failed to present evidence of current clinical competence beyond the assertions of his counsel. (Tr. Nov. 14, 1994, Docket Item No. 28, at 15-17, 20, 22, 24, 68-69, 72-74) Dr. Johnson said that he was prepared to offer such proof at the hearing and identified several witnesses whom he said would testify in his behalf.

The Hospital contended before Judge Conboy that the hearing officer's function was only to determine whether the Hospital had acted properly given the record before it, while Dr. Johnson argued that he was entitled to a de novo review. Judge Conboy indicated agreement with the Hospital, stating that the time for Dr. Johnson to have submitted evidence of his clinical competence "was at the application stage." (Id. at 75) He nevertheless afforded Dr. Johnson the opportunity to submit affidavits from those doctors so that he could rule as to whether he would permit them to testify. (Id. at 77-78) At the subsequent hearing, Johnson offered letters, rather than affidavits, from five physicians. Judge Conboy ruled that they were inadmissible and, in any case, not probative of Dr. Johnson's current competence. [8] (Tr. Dec. 19, 1994, Docket Item No. 28, at 59-60, 78) Dr. Johnson's counsel then stated that:

"Given the state of the record, given the rulings, I don't think I can get the decision of the hospital changed at this point in time . . .

² Dr. Johnson's brief argued that his delay in seeking a PHC ruling was justified because the PHC lacked jurisdiction and, in any case, because the PHC -- which in Dr. Johnson's view would not itself examine the medical issues relating to his care of patients -- would benefit from the detailed review then being conducted by the OPMC. The first of these arguments was rejected by the Second Circuit in Johnson I. 964 F.2d at 121-22.

³ The parties are at loggerheads over the extent to which the charges rejected by the OPMC were bases for the hospital's revocation of Dr. Johnson's privileges. In view of the disposition of this motion, there is no need to address that issue.

"For that reason, it is my intention to withdraw the appeal at this point, to reapply, I'm assuming the hospital will act in an expeditious fashion, and if we need to do anything after that, we will do what we [have] to do after that. (Id. at 80-81)

Dr. Johnson has not reapplied.

This action was filed on October 14, 1994, which was after the PHC had declined to act and during the pendency of the proceedings with respect to Dr. Johnson's application for reinstatement of his privileges. The amended complaint contains five causes of action. Counts I and II charge that the 1987 revocation of privileges violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, respectively. Counts III and IV allege that the revocation of Dr. Johnson's privileges and the 1994 denial of reinstatement violated 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981 and 1985\(3\). Count V seeks recovery for the same conduct on the theory that the defendants tortiously interfered with Dr. Johnson's economic advantage [\[9\]](#) and is brought pursuant to the Court's supplemental jurisdiction.

Discussion

The 1987 Revocation of Privileges

Antitrust Claims

HN1  Section 4B of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15b, provides that a private damage action under the antitrust laws "shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued." The cause of action accrues when a defendant commits an act that violates the antitrust laws and injures the plaintiff. E.g., Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338-39, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, 91 S. Ct. 795 \(1971\). As Dr. Johnson's privileges were revoked on February 10, 1987, effective immediately, any cause of action that arose under the antitrust laws by reason of the revocation accrued on that date.

Dr. Johnson did not commence Johnson I until February 7, 1990. By that time, approximately three years of the four year period of limitations had expired. The dispositive question therefore is whether the statute began to run again after the Second Circuit affirmed Judge Sweet's dismissal of Johnson I and, if so, when.

Dr. Johnson, as nearly as the Court can determine, makes two analytically distinct [\[10\]](#) arguments in support of the proposition that this action was timely filed. First, he seems to contend that the Second Circuit's affirmation of the District Court's dismissal without prejudice in substance tolled the statute of limitations until the PHC ruled. In any case, he argues, the statute was equitably tolled as long as he diligently pursued his remedy in the PHC which, he asserts, he did.

The first of plaintiff's arguments cannot be reconciled with Jewell v. County of Nassau, [\[*160\] 917 F.2d 738 \(2d Cir. 1990\)](#). That was a Section 1983 action in which the plaintiff alleged that he had been arrested and convicted and his home searched unlawfully. The case was commenced one day before the expiration of the statute of limitations. The magistrate judge recommended dismissal without prejudice pending the outcome of the State court appeal of Jewell's conviction. Jewell objected on the ground that dismissal would result in the recommencement of the running of time and therefore in the bar of his action. The District Court dismissed, although it purported to toll the statute of limitations. But the Second Circuit reversed, holding that the District Court lacked the power to toll the statute [\[11\]](#) and that:

"where a plaintiff wishes or is required to pursue his claims in succession, rather than concurrently, in the absence of the parties' agreement made to waive the limitary period before it had expired, a judicial stay of the pending suit, rather than dismissal, albeit expressed to be without prejudice, is the only means by which the bar of limitations may be avoided." Id. at 740-41.

Jewell thus stands for two propositions: (1) HN2 a federal court ordinarily may not toll the running of a limitations period, and (2) HN3 the limitations period begins to run upon the dismissal of an action without prejudice. While Dr. Johnson correctly notes that Jewell dealt with the question whether a federal court has the power to toll a period of limitations borrowed from State law, Dr. Johnson cites no authority in support of the argument that this distinction warrants a different result here and the Court has found none. The federal antitrust laws, like the New York statutes in Jewell, make no provision for tolling in these circumstances. Even more important, however, neither Judge Sweet nor the Second Circuit, unlike the District Court in Jewell, purported to toll the [\[12\]](#) running of the period of limitations in Johnson I. The dismissal without prejudice did no more than permit Dr. Johnson to commence a new federal action after recourse to the PHC, subject to whatever defenses -- including limitations -- there might be. Indeed, any other interpretation of the Second Circuit's decision would require the conclusion that Dr. Johnson had an unlimited period of time in which to initiate proceedings in the PHC and, for that matter, to commence a new action after obtaining a ruling from the PHC, a manifestly improbable result.

Dr. Johnson's contention that the period of limitations was equitably tolled by the Second Circuit's ruling pending his diligent pursuit of a remedy in the PHC fares no better for at least two reasons.

First, it is quite doubtful that the doctrine of equitable tolling applies in these circumstances at all. While the Ninth Circuit in Mt. Hood Stages, Inc. v. Greyhound Corp., 616 F.2d 394 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 831, 66 L. Ed. 2d 36, 101 S. Ct. 99 (1980), held that the antitrust period of limitations was tolled during a plaintiff's pre-suit resort, required by the doctrine of primary jurisdiction, to the Interstate [\[13\]](#) Commerce Commission, the decision has not met with favor in this Circuit or elsewhere. The Second Circuit declined to follow Mt. Hood in Higgins v. New York Stock Exchange, 942 F.2d 829, 833 \(2d Cir. 1991\), characterizing it "as at best a very narrow ruling, at worst a wholly anomalous decision," and held that the running of the statute on a claim relating to an alleged antitrust violation in the securities business was not tolled by the plaintiff's pre-suit resort to the Securities and Exchange Commission. See also Brunswick Corp. v. Riegel Textile Corp., 752 F.2d 261, 268-69 \(7th Cir. 1984\).

This Court recognizes that Higgins, in a strict sense, is not dispositive because it dealt only with pre-suit resort to an agency with primary jurisdiction rather than post-suit resort, as occurred here. The post-suit situation is different because the filing of the suit puts the defendant on notice of the antitrust claim and may permit the defendant to preserve certain evidence for its defense. See Higgins, 942 F.2d at 833. But this difference is insufficient to warrant a different result here. For one thing, pre-suit resort to an administrative agency often puts a prospective [\[14\]](#) defendant on notice of a likely claim almost as surely as service of process. More important, certain of the prejudicial consequences of the passage of time -- consequences [\[*161\]](#) that statutes of limitation are designed to guard against -- cannot be prevented by notice of a claim. Witnesses may die and move out of the jurisdiction and testimony may change, usually as memories dim, quite without regard to whether the defendant is on notice of a claim. Hence, while the argument for tolling pending recourse to an agency with primary jurisdiction is somewhat stronger when recourse occurs after the filing of suit than before, it is only marginally so. The Court therefore holds that the running of the period of limitation was not tolled pending recourse to the PHC. Nor does the Court rest on that ground alone.

Dr. Johnson acknowledges that the equitable tolling doctrine, even if applicable, would suspend the running of the limitation period only if he acted with reasonable diligence. (Pl. Br. 38, citing Singletary v. Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Co. of Chicago, 9 F.3d 1236 \(7th Cir. 1993\)). Here, however, Dr. Johnson did not act with reasonable diligence within the meaning [\[15\]](#) of the doctrine.

It is undisputed that three years of the four year limitation period had expired before Dr. Johnson commenced Johnson I. Following the Second Circuit's decision, Dr. Johnson then waited the following additional periods before commencing this action: (1) approximately twelve months from May 11, 1992 until the OPMC decision on May 6, 1993, (2) three months from the OPMC decision on May 6, 1993 until filing his PHC complaint on August 9, 1993, (3) thirteen months from the filing of his PHC complaint on August 9, 1993 until the PHC ruling on September 7, 1994, and (4) approximately one month from the PHC decision on September 7, 1994 until the filing of this action on October 14, 1994.

Even accepting arguendo Dr. Johnson's logic concerning the delay in his resort to the PHC, there is no substantial argument for holding that the limitation period was tolled during the four months attributable to the delays between the OPMC decision and the filing of the PHC complaint and between the PHC ruling and the filing of this action. Nor does the Court accept Dr. Johnson's contention that the period was tolled for the twelve months during which he delayed going to the PHC [16] because he preferred first to resolve the OPMC charges against him. As the cases Dr. Johnson cites hold, HN4[¹] equitable tolling "permits a plaintiff to sue after the statute of limitations has expired if through no fault or lack of diligence on his part he was unable to sue before, even though the defendant took no active steps to prevent him from suing." Singletary, 9 F.3d at 1241 (emphasis added); accord, Heck v. Humphrey, 997 F.2d 355, 357 \(7th Cir. 1993\).

While it is not for the Court to question counsel's tactical judgment that Dr. Johnson perhaps stood a better chance of success before the PHC if the license revocation proceeding first were concluded, the fact remains that Dr. Johnson was not foreclosed by that proceeding from going to the PHC. He decided to delay in the pursuit of his own interests and must bear the consequences of that decision. Nor is there anything inequitable in this conclusion. If Dr. Johnson's decision were sufficient to toll the running of the limitation period, then by his own action he would have delayed resolution of the claim against Nyack Hospital for another year or more -- a period during which both sides are at risk that the vicissitudes [17] of time will prejudice their respective cases. While Dr. Johnson chose to run that risk for himself, there is no basis for concluding that he had the right to subject the defendants to that risk by his unilateral action. In consequence, even if the doctrine of equitable tolling were applicable here, the Court would hold that Dr. Johnson did not act with reasonable diligence in failing to commence proceedings in the PHC between May 6, 1992 and August 9, 1993 and in failing to commence this action between the date of the PHC decision, September 7, 1994, and October 14, 1994. These periods, when combined with the three years that elapsed prior to the commencement of Johnson I, exceed the statutory limitation period even without regard to the period during which the matter was pending in the PHC as to which the Court need not express any opinion. Accordingly, [*162] the antitrust claims are barred by the statute of limitations.

Civil Rights Claims

HN5[¹] The statute of limitations for claims brought under Sections 1981 and 1985 of the Civil Rights Act is three years. Tadros v. Coleman, 898 F.2d 10, 12 (2d Cir.), cert. denied 498 U.S. 869, 112 L. Ed. 2d 149, 111 S. Ct. 186 (1990); [18] Gilliard v. New York Public Library System, 597 F. Supp. 1069, 1076 \(S.D.N.Y. 1984\). The claim accrues and the limitation period begins to run when the plaintiff has notice of the act that is claimed to have caused the injury. Chardon v. Fernandez, 454 U.S. 6, 8, 70 L. Ed. 2d 6, 102 S. Ct. 28 \(1981\); Delaware State College v. Ricks, 449 U.S. 250, 259, 66 L. Ed. 2d 431, 101 S. Ct. 498 \(1980\). As Dr. Johnson's privileges were revoked on February 10, 1987, the statute of limitations on civil rights claims arising from that event appears to have expired on February 10, 1990.⁴ While Dr. Johnson acknowledges the general rule, he contends that his 1987 civil rights claims are timely because they are part of a continuing violation of the Civil Rights Act.

HN6[¹]

Under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the existence of a continuous [19] practice and policy of discrimination delays the commencement of the limitation period until the last discriminatory act in furtherance thereof.⁵ [20] E.g., Cornwell v. Robinson, 23 F.3d 694, 703 \(2d Cir. 1994\); Lambert v. Genesee Hospital, 10

As one commentator has written, the continuing violation doctrine "continues to be one of the most confusing and inconsistently [21] applied developments in employment discrimination law." Ramona L. Paetzold & Anne M. O'Leary-Kelly, Continuing Violations and Hostile Environment Sexual Harassment: When Is Enough, Enough? 31 AM. BUS. L.J. 365, 382 (1993) (hereinafter When is Enough, Enough?). To begin with, while most Circuits have held that a continuing violation may be established by proof either of a discriminatory policy or mechanism or of a series of related acts of discrimination,⁷ [*163] the decisions in this Circuit do not necessarily yield that conclusion. In Lambert, the Court held that the continuing violation doctrine is limited to "specific discriminatory policies or mechanisms, such as discriminatory seniority lists, . . . or discriminatory employment tests . . ." 10 F.3d at 52. In Cornwell, a different panel wrote that the occurrence of "specific and related instances of discrimination tolerated by an employer over a sufficient period" may be evidence of a continuing violation, apparently viewing protracted employer indifference as a policy or mechanism. 23 F.3d at 704.

[22] Nor are many courts clear as to the criteria that determine when pre-limitation discriminatory acts cross the line from being "unfortunate event[s] in history which have no present legal consequences"⁸ to being elements in a continuing violation. Perhaps the most specific standard articulated thus far is that adopted by the Fifth Circuit in Berry v. Board of Supervisors of Louisiana State University, 715 F.2d 971 (5th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 868, 93 L. Ed. 2d 158, 107 S. Ct. 232 (1986), which held that HN7 the determination of whether a continuing violation exists depends principally upon a three-pronged analysis:

"The first is subject matter. Do the alleged acts involve the same type of discrimination, tending to connect them in a continuing violation? The second is frequency. Are the alleged acts recurring (e.g., a biweekly pay check) or more in the nature of an isolated employment decision? The third factor, perhaps of most importance, is degree of permanence. Does the act have the degree of permanence which should trigger an employee's awareness and

L. Ed. 2d 60, 77 S. Ct. 50 (1956) (continuing conspiracy); II PHILLIP E. AREEDA & HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW P 338(b), at 149 (rev. ed. 1995) (continuing antitrust violation).

⁶ There are important differences between Title VII cases and actions based on claims under Sections 1981 and 1985(3) that may warrant different treatment with respect to continuing violations. The limitation period in Title VII cases is 180 to 300 days, recovery of back pay is capped at two years, and compensatory and punitive damages are capped at legislatively determined amounts, even in continuing violation cases. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981a, 2000e-5(g) (1988 & Supp. 1993). The limitation period in Section 1981 and 1985(3) cases is much longer. Even more important, there is no cap on the period for which monetary damages may be awarded. Hence, simple transplantation of the continuing violation doctrine from Title VII to Sections 1981 and 1985(3) may produce unintended consequences. In view of this Court's conclusion that the requirements of the continuing violations doctrine, as it is applied in Title VII cases, are not satisfied here, this issue need not be decided.

Marsh, 221 U.S. App. D.C. 22, 682 F.2d 971, 975 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (suggesting that a policy or practice is required before a continuing violation will be found).

duty to assert his or her rights, or which should indicate to the employee that the continued existence of the [23] adverse consequences of the act is to be expected without being dependent on a continuing intent to discriminate?" 715 F.2d at 981.

This analysis, which has been adopted by several circuits,⁹ seems to this Court to give appropriate regard to the policies that animate both the civil rights laws and the law governing statutes of limitations.

HN8

The Berry standard, first of all, presupposes that related acts may come within the continuing violation doctrine even absent a formal discriminatory structural mechanism. This seems correct in light of the Supreme Court's [24] decisions in this area. In Havens Realty Corp., 455 U.S. 363, 71 L. Ed. 2d 214, 102 S. Ct. 1114, for example, the Court upheld the use of the continuing violation theory to reach multiple acts of racial steering. Nor, given Delaware State College, may Havens be passed over as a case involving a formal discriminatory mechanism. The Court in Delaware State College acknowledged the possibility that a continuing violation, in appropriate circumstances, might be established by multiple discriminatory acts directed at an individual. 449 U.S. at 257-58. That brings us to the question addressed by Berry, viz. when multiple acts ought be characterized as a continuing violation and thus permit the plaintiff to recover for acts which, if sued upon in isolation, would be time-barred, a question best approached with an appreciation of the underlying problem of discrimination in the workplace.

Discriminatory or allegedly discriminatory behavior in the employment context takes [*164] many forms. Some acts, if taken in isolation, may be ambiguous. The apparent existence of a discriminatory motive or effect may be perceptible only with repetition or over time.

Even unambiguously biased [25] behavior in the workplace is not all alike. Some consists of acts directed at the employee by co-workers, but which reflect no more than the individual prejudices of the actors. Some involves the product of explicit, employer-promulgated policies, practices or mechanisms. There are a myriad of intermediate situations, which may include employer tolerance of employee bias, covert employer-sponsored discrimination and other variations. Nor are these categories neat and mutually exclusive. Rather, they are points along a continuum ranging from no employer involvement through employer awareness to employer tolerance and ultimately employer sponsorship.

The situation of the individual employee, particularly with reference to the prospect of litigation, can vary tremendously depending upon circumstances such as these. The employee at first may not be certain that he or she is confronting discrimination at all. Even where the prejudice is manifest, it may be unclear whether the employer fairly can be taxed with responsibility. And even where the employer is responsible, an employee who seeks to hold on to his or her job may face a difficult choice in deciding whether or not to sue. See [26] generally When is Enough, Enough? 31 AM. BUS. L.J. at 377, 393-94.

HN9  The first two factors in the Berry test -- subject matter and frequency -- bear on whether acts both within and without the limitation period are part of "a discriminatory policy or practice" chargeable to the employer, Cornwell, 23 F.3d at 704, as distinguished from unrelated if deplorable manifestations of individual prejudice. They thus reflect the view that a claim involving an employer's discriminatory policy or practice should not always be cabined by the statutory limitation period in recognition of the special difficulties with which an employee may have to deal.

HN10  The third factor -- whether the nature of the events outside the limitation period should have triggered awareness of the need to assert one's rights -- evokes considerations central to statutes of limitations generally. Moreover, as suggested by the passage from Berry quoted above, it generally is regarded as the core and most Statutes of limitation, of course, are intended to protect against stale claims. Havens, 455 U.S. at 380. They do so out of a sense that prospective litigants have a right to repose after a legislatively determined period, as well as a concern that the passage of too much time without assertion of a claim may prejudice the ability of the defendant to obtain a fair resolution. United States v. Kubrick, 444 U.S. 111, 117, 62 L. Ed. 2d 259, 100 S. Ct. 352 \(1979\); Gadsden Memorial Hospital, 835 F.2d at 800. But they are not without exception, and the limits of the continuing violation doctrine perhaps are best understood in the broader context of the numerous doctrines that ease the rigor with which statutes of limitation are applied.

One such ameliorating doctrine is HN11[] the discovery rule, which holds that certain causes of action, notably fraud, accrue (i.e., the limitation period begins to run) only when the plaintiff knows, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should know, of the existence of or basis for the claim. E.g., [Woods v. Candela, \[*28\] 13 F.3d 574 \(2d Cir. 1994\)](#); Leon v. Murphy, 988 F.2d 303 \(2d Cir. 1993\); Gnazzo v. G.D. Searle & Co., 973 F.2d 136 \(2d Cir. 1992\) (Connecticut law); 15 U.S.C. § 77m \(1988\); N.Y. CPLR 203\(g\) (McKinney 1990 & Supp. 1995). Another is the principle that HN12[] the limitation period is tolled during a defendant's fraudulent concealment of facts that would alert the plaintiff to the plaintiff's claim. See Cerbone v. International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, 768 F.2d 45, 48 \(2d Cir. 1985\). A defendant may be equitably estopped to assert the statute where the defendant's actions cause the plaintiff to forebear [*165] from asserting the plaintiff's rights. See Hoemke v. New York Blood Center, 720 F. Supp. 45 \(S.D.N.Y. 1989\); Barrett v. Hoffman, 521 F. Supp. 307 \(S.D.N.Y. 1981\); Simcuski v. Saeli, 44 N.Y.2d 442, 406 N.Y.S.2d 259, 377 N.E.2d 713 \(1972\). The limitation period, at least in New York and no doubt elsewhere, is tolled with respect to a malpractice claim against a professional during the course of treatment in which the alleged malpractice occurred. E.g., McDermott v. Torre, 56 N.Y.2d 399, 452 N.Y.S.2d 351, 437 N.E.2d 1108 \(1982\); [Borgia v. City of New York, \[*29\] 12 N.Y.2d 151, 155, 237 N.Y.S.2d 319, 321, 187 N.E.2d 777 \(1962\)](#). There are other examples. See, e.g., Cullen v. Margiotta, 811 F.2d 698, 721-24 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, Nassau County Republican Committee v. Margiotta, 483 U.S. 1021, 97 L. Ed. 2d 764, 107 S. Ct. 3266 \(1987\) (duress). But they all boil down to a simple proposition: HN13[] the statutory period of limitation does not run while the plaintiff fails to bring suit as a result of blameless ignorance, culpable action by the defendant, or the continued existence of a close and important relationship that reasonably may be regarded as making the commencement of litigation inappropriate or unduly costly in human terms.

Against this background, the Berry test comes into sharp focus. HN14[] If the discriminatory acts within and without the limitation period are sufficiently similar and frequent to justify a conclusion that both are part of a single discriminatory practice chargeable to the employer, the continuing violation doctrine permits assertion of claims based on both in recognition of the special problems inherent in the employment context. But the third of the Berry factors limits the scope of this otherwise boundless [*30] exception to the statute of limitations by permitting suit on a continuing violation theory only if the circumstances are such that a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position would not have sued earlier. See, e.g., West, 45 F.3d at 755; Martin, 3 F.3d at 1415 n.6. This proviso gives due regard both to the defendant's interest in being protected against stale claims and to the plaintiff's interest in adopting strategies designed to deal both with employment discrimination and of being certain that matters have reached a point affording a proper basis for resort to the courts. See generally When is Enough, Enough? 31 AM BUS. L.J. at 393-94.

In this case, the Court assumes arguendo that Dr. Johnson has satisfied the first prong of the Berry standard.¹⁰ His case with respect to the second prong is much weaker, as the alleged discriminatory behavior apart from the 1987 and 1994 privileges actions consists of less than a handful of racial epithets allegedly directed at Dr. Johnson over a period of many years. (Turgeon Dec. P 4; Fortuna Affs.) Without in any way condoning incidents of the character alleged, the evidence, taken in the light most favorable to Dr. [\[31\]](#) Johnson, may not establish a pattern of frequent incidents of racial bias. But these issues need not be determined conclusively, as the Court is satisfied that Dr. Johnson has not satisfied the third prong of the Berry standard.

[\[32\]](#) When Dr. Johnson's vascular and thoracic surgery privileges were revoked in 1987, he was well aware of the basis for the charges of racial discrimination included in the amended complaint in this action. In proceedings before the hospital's Peer Review and Ethics Committee on February 24, 1987, Dr. Johnson characterized the revocation of his privileges as racially motivated. (Def. Ex. 26, PP 3-4; Def. Ex. 27, PP 3-4) He charged in the 1987 State court action that the initial recommendation to terminate those privileges [\[*166\]](#) was the product of racial prejudice. (Def. Ex. 33, P 13) One of the affidavits on this motion attesting to an alleged instance of racial bias even was submitted in Johnson I. (Fortuna Aff., Feb. 5, 1991) Yet for reasons unknown, Dr. Johnson did not make any claims in Johnson I under the civil rights laws.

The question when a plaintiff in a discrimination case "has had enough" so as to warrant the commencement of litigation may be subtle and difficult. The Court acknowledges that many employees who seek to hold on to their jobs in the face of a hostile environment face hard choices. Fine lines sometimes must be drawn as to when a level of harassment or prejudice [\[33\]](#) has risen to a level sufficient to charge the victim with knowledge that the victim must assert or lose his or her rights. See When is Enough, Enough? 31 AM. BUS. L.J. at 377. Such cases frequently may raise genuine issues as to the applicability of the continuing violation doctrine. But this is not such a case. Here Dr. Johnson brought two lawsuits within three years of the 1987 revocation of his privileges. He made a claim of racial discrimination in the State court case, but not in Johnson I. No reason has been advanced as to why the civil rights claims were not asserted in federal court until more than seven years after the privileges were revoked, and the Court can conceive of none. In consequence, the Court holds that the continuing violation doctrine does not apply and that Dr. Johnson's claims under 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981 and 1985\(3\) with respect to the 1987 revocation of his privileges are barred by the statute of limitations.

The Tortious Interference Claim

Count V, Dr. Johnson's claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, is based entirely on the assertion that the 1987 revocation of his privileges had a negative effect on contractual relationships [\[34\]](#) that he then had or subsequently had or might have had. (Am Cpt PP 158-66; Johnson Dec. PP 152-54) The parties agree that the claim is governed by New York's three year statute of limitations. N.Y. CPLR § 214 (McKinney 1990). Dr. Johnson argues, however, that the claim is not time-barred because he has been injured within the three year limitation period. The argument, however, must be rejected.

HN15 A tort claim of this nature accrues, and the limitation period begins to run, under New York law when the last of the elements of the cause of action, typically injury, exists. Kronos, Inc. v. AVX Corp., 81 N.Y.2d 90, 94, 595 N.Y.S.2d 931, 933-34, 612 N.E.2d 289 \(1993\); Schmidt v. Merchants Despatch Transportation Co., 270 N.Y. 287, 300, 200 N.E. 824 \(1936\). As the wrongful conduct underlying the claim all occurred in 1987, and as Dr. Johnson alleged a similar tortious interference claim in 1990 in Johnson I, he cannot deny that the elements of the cause of action were satisfied at least as early as Johnson I. The subsequent injuries alleged are immaterial to the issue of timeliness. [Piracci Construction Co. v. Skidmore, Owings & Merrill, 490 F. Supp. 314, 321 \(S.D.N.Y.\), \[35\] aff'd 646 F.2d 562 \(2d Cir. 1980\) \(table\); see Kronos, Inc., 81 N.Y.2d at 94-95, 595 N.Y.S.2d at 934](#) (claim for interference with contract not barred, although contract breached before limitation period, because injury first sustained within limitation period). The running of the limitation period was not tolled for the reasons stated above. In consequence, this claim is time-barred as well.

may well be a basis for concluding that Dr. Johnson has established a prima facie case that the 1994 incident was a violation of the same character alleged with respect to the 1987 decision. If it was the latter, there probably is not. In view of the basis upon which the Court disposes of this motion, it need not determine this issue.

The 1994 Reinstatement Application

Dr. Johnson does not here assert antitrust claims with respect to the 1994 reinstatement application, acknowledging that Johnson I requires him resort to the PHC before bringing such an action. Nor does the tortious interference claim rest in any part on the 1994 events. He does contend, however, that the denial of the reinstatement application violated 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981 and 1985\(3\).

The defendants argue that Johnson I requires Dr. Johnson to resort to the PHC before proceeding in federal court. In Johnson I the Second Circuit stated:

"Primary jurisdiction demands that Johnson resort to the PHC before seeking redress in federal court. The question whether defendants had a proper medical reason to terminate Johnson's privileges requires [36] a skilled evaluation of whether Johnson provided inadequate treatment to Nyack's patients. This decision necessitates examination of various medical data concerning Johnson's cases. The medical [*167] expertise of the PHC will prove extremely helpful in sorting through these complex records and resolving the factual questions at stake." 964 F.2d at 122.

Dr. Johnson's response to defendants' primary jurisdiction argument is that the PHC "does not even have jurisdiction to hear a federal civil rights claim." He asserts also that he still must be given an opportunity to prove that any "legitimate" reasons for denial of reinstatement were pretextual. (Pl. Br. 36) He is right on both counts, but that nonetheless does not defeat defendants' argument, given the premises of the Second Circuit's ruling in Johnson I.

The PHC has no more jurisdiction over antitrust claims than it does over civil rights claims. Moreover, even a PHC ruling adverse to Dr. Johnson on the 1987 revocation of privileges would not necessarily have foreclosed his antitrust claim, just as an adverse ruling on the 1994 reinstatement issue would not necessarily foreclose his civil rights claims. The Second Circuit nevertheless [37] held that the federal courts were likely to benefit from a PHC review of the medical issues before they considered the antitrust claims. While the PHC's action on Dr. Johnson's complaint with respect to the 1987 events demonstrates that the Court of Appeals' hope pending relate solely to the 1994 reinstatement application. The legal issues decided on this motion are unique to the claims relating to the 1987 events. Appellate review of those issues therefore will involve issues entirely distinct from the aspect of the case not yet disposed of. Accordingly, there is no just reason for delay, and the Clerk is directed to enter judgment pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 54\(b\) dismissing Counts I, II and V and so much of Counts III and IV as relate to the 1987 revocation of privileges.

HN6 Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

The doctrine of "res judicata" or former adjudication prevents parties from relitigating claims or issues that have already been decided by a competent tribunal. It protects the integrity of the courts and promotes reliance upon judicial pronouncements by requiring that the decisions and findings of the courts be accepted as undeniable legal truths. Res Judicata furthers the finality of legal disputes and eliminates the time and expense of relitigation by requiring that parties bring all claims arising out of a transaction, or series of connected transactions, in one action.

HN7 Full Faith & Credit, Full Faith & Credit Statutes

The doctrine of "res judicata" arises from the full faith and credit clause of the United States Constitution. The statute implementing the full faith and credit clause requires that federal courts give state court proceedings the same full faith and credit as they have by law or usage in the courts of such state from which they are taken.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

HN10 [down] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

According to the doctrine of claim preclusion the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is a bar to a new action in any court between the same parties or their privies concerning the same subject matter, and precludes the relitigation not only of the claims which were actually litigated in the first action, but also of all grounds of claim and defense which might have been properly litigated in the first action but were not litigated or decided.

HN11 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Claim preclusion thus bars plaintiffs from pursuing successive suits where the claim was either litigated or could have been litigated in the first action. It also bars defendants from pursuing a subsequent action that could have been raised as a defense or counterclaim in the first suit. By contrast, issue preclusion only bars relitigation of particular issues actually litigated and decided in the prior suit. Issue preclusion may be asserted in a subsequent action on a totally different claim.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN12 [down] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

Claim preclusion is applicable only where (1) the claim asserted in the action in question was or could have been asserted in the prior action; (2) the parties in the present action are identical to, or in privity with, the parties in the prior action; and (3) a final judgment on the merits was rendered in the prior action.

HN15 [blue icon] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

To determine whether a litigant is asserting the "same claim" in a second action, courts look to whether the claim arises out of the same transaction or the same series of connected transactions out of which the first action arose. The claim extinguished by an action includes all rights of the plaintiff to remedies against the defendant with respect to all or any part of the transaction, or series of connected transactions. This inquiry is made based on the facts of the transaction and does not depend on the number of substantive theories, or variant forms of relief flowing from those theories, that may have been available to the plaintiff; the number of primary rights that may have been invaded; or the variations in the evidence needed to support the theories or rights.

A plaintiff cannot avoid the bar of claim preclusion merely by alleging conduct that was not alleged in his prior action or by pleading a new legal theory. All claims arising from a single injury must be raised in a single action or they will be barred by res judicata. This is true even where some of the claims arise under state law and some arise under federal law. Because claim preclusion bars all claims and defenses which could have been brought, it bars claims and defenses which were voluntarily withdrawn if a final judgment is rendered on the remainder of the case.

An oral contract with respect to an interest in land may become enforceable, in spite of the statute of frauds, where there has been part performance. [*1393] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND GRANTING SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR ALL DEFENDANTS

This action arises out of Defendant Y.Y. Valley Corporation's ("YYVC") attempt to relocate and evict Plaintiffs,¹ who were tenants at will on land purchased by YYVC. In 1986, Royal Hawaiian Country Club, Inc. ("RHCC"), a [2] subsidiary of YYVC, applied for and was granted a Conditional Use Permit ("CUP") from the Director of the Department of Land Utilization ("DLU") of the City and County of Honolulu, allowing the corporation to develop a golf course and country club on the property. Approval of the CUP was granted on the condition that the agricultural tenants presently located within the project site be offered an opportunity to relocate to an adjacent area. In 1989, YYVC sought city approval of a relocation plan which provided tenants living on the proposed project site an opportunity to relocate to an adjacent area under 10 year leases. Tenants living on adjacent areas were likewise included in the plan, although they were not generally required to vacate their current premises. After the city granted its approval on or about June 13, 1986, the corporation presented the plan to the tenants. Some tenants accepted the offer; others did not, including all those who lived in the area which was to be developed. Tenants who did not accept the relocation offer were served notices to vacate the property and summary possession actions were brought against them.

[3] Plaintiffs brought the current action against Defendants Han Kuk Chun, Tetsuo Yasuda, Masanori Kobayashi, Yoshinori Hayashida, Y. Y. Valley Corporation, Hiroshi Kobayashi, Eugene Lum, Norma Lum and former mayor Frank F. Fasi ("Defendants") under the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO). 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-68. In particular, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants violated § 1962\(c\), prohibiting any person from conducting an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity and § 1962\(d\), prohibiting any person from conspiring to violate any of the provisions of subsections (a), (b) and (c). To support their RICO claims, Plaintiffs alleged the following injuries:

- a. loss of 10-year home/farm leases in Maunawili Valley which they are entitled to as third party beneficiaries of the Conditional Use Permit;
- b. loss of 10-year home/farm leases in Maunawili Valley which they are entitled to as third party beneficiaries under an oral option contract;
- c. injury to rights under the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment in that their intended use of the property was substantially interfered with in many ways, including not being able to make needed [4] repairs;²
- d. loss of crops and improvements which they are entitled to under a negative covenant in the deed through which YYVC obtained the property;³ [5]

As predicate acts establishing "racketeering activity," Plaintiffs allege that various Defendants committed bribery, robbery, state and federal extortion and mail fraud, and/or aided and abetted or conspired in those activities.⁵ With

² In particular, Plaintiffs allege that:

- a) All Plaintiffs lost farming income from sales and subsistence and rental income from family members;
- b) Wong, Pedrina, Kamai, Augustus, Jones, Amit, Manuel, Uraniumrhi, Duque and Aurio lost income from sale of livestock;
- c) Dumadag, Bolo, Duque and Amit lost fishery income from sales and subsistence. Some of the fish ponds were filled in by bulldozers in 1988 and 1989.

³ In particular Plaintiffs allege that

- a) Manuel, Miguel, Batalona and Duque's homes were destroyed by bulldozers in 1988-89. Plaintiff James Jones' cabin was destroyed;
- b) Igartas and Sullivans voluntarily gave up their homes, crops and improvements, because they were not informed of their rights under the CUP or the Deed;
- c) Bolos, Dilays, Dumadag, Coloyans, Uraniumrhis, Batalona, Manuel, Miguel and Amit crops were destroyed by bulldozers in 1988 or '89 and they were prevented from attending to their crops;
- d) Dumadag, Bolos, Duque and Amit's fish ponds were filled in by bulldozers.

⁵ Plaintiffs' allegations that Defendant Fasi aided and abetted in robbery and extortion were dismissed by this Court in an order filed December 18, 1990. In an order filed April 19, 1990, the Court dismissed the claims of all Plaintiffs except the Wongs as to the robbery count.

regard to their bribery claims, Plaintiffs' allege that Defendant/Developers (i.e., Y.Y. Valley Corporation, Han Kuk Chun, Tetsuo Yasuda, Masanori Kobayashi and Yoshinori "Ken" Hayashida) and Defendant Hiroshi Kobayashi made and conspired to make bribes to Defendant Fasi and other politicians in the form of illegal campaign contributions. Most of these contributions were made in August and September of 1987 with one being made in June of 1988. Although these contributions were returned [6] by Fasi's campaign organization in October of 1988, Plaintiffs contend that the contributions were given back to Fasi in the form of cash payments. In addition, Plaintiffs allege that on or about June 1, 1988, Defendant Han Kuk Chun made an offer of $ 5 million as a "gift" to the City and County of Honolulu through Defendant Fasi. According to Plaintiffs, these alleged bribes were intended to influence the actions of Defendant Fasi and other public officials concerning the issuance and enforcement of the CUP.

With regard to their mail fraud claims, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant/Developers (i.e., Y.Y. Valley Corporation, Han Kuk Chun, Tetsuo Yasuda, Masanori Kobayashi and Yoshinori "Ken" Hayashida) conspired to commit mail fraud [7] in connection with a "bribery scheme," an "eviction scheme" and a "confiscatory relocation plan scheme." In particular, Plaintiffs assert that the campaign contributions discussed above constituted mail fraud because Defendants misrepresented that they were benign contributions when, according to Plaintiffs, Defendants knew the contributions were in fact illegal bribes. Plaintiffs also contend that a series of eviction notices, and letters in furtherance of the attempted evictions, constituted mail fraud because the mailings did not inform the Plaintiffs of their right to relocate and to remove improvements from the property. These evictions letters were sent in 1988 and 1987, after the CUP was granted but before Defendants offered Plaintiffs an opportunity to relocate. As to the "confiscatory relocation scheme," Plaintiffs claim that a series of letters between Defendants' and Plaintiffs' attorneys regarding the relocation plan constituted mail fraud because the mailings purported that the plan satisfied the CUP and that Plaintiffs had to surrender various rights in order to receive benefits under the CUP. These letters were sent in 1989, around the time the relocation plan was offered [8] to Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs further allege that Defendant Fasi aided and abetted, and conspired to aid and abet, in the commission of mail fraud by accepting the campaign contributions and allowing the alleged eviction and confiscatory relocation schemes to happen.

Plaintiffs contend that the alleged mail fraud and certain other acts of Defendants constituted extortion under state and federal laws. In particular, Plaintiffs argue that the eviction notices and letters, combined with Defendants' prior violent eviction methods, served to extort Plaintiffs of their various property interests discussed above. On May 16, 1987, some of the Defendants allegedly shot the Wong's bull and forcibly removed their other livestock and equipment from the [*1395] property on which the Wongs were operating a ranch. Defendants also allegedly destroyed the Wong's fences. Other Plaintiffs contend that YYVC's representative Robert Carter and some men "who looked like body guards" came to their homes and told them, in a threatening manner, that they would have to leave the property. These men also allegedly took Jupiterrex Uraniumrhi, a Plaintiff who is not a party to these current motions, to a secluded warehouse [9] and attempted to force him to accept the relocation plan. The robbery allegations pertain to the 1987 shooting of the Wong's bull and theft of the Wong's other livestock and equipment.

On November 7, 1988, prior to filing the current action in federal court, most of the Plaintiffs⁶ ("State Court Plaintiffs") filed an action against Defendants Han Kuk Chun and YYVC in the Circuit Court of the First Circuit for the State of Hawaii. Like the current action, Plaintiffs' state court action arose out of Defendant YYVC's attempt to evict the tenants from the property. The allegations and resolution of this action will be discussed below in the section on former adjudication.

[10] In June 1990, while the current action was pending in federal court, YYVC commenced 23 summary possession actions in the District Court for the First Circuit Court of the State of Hawaii against all of the Plaintiffs in this action except Huberto Dumadag and the Estate of Laurencia Canencia. On October 12, 1990, these actions were consolidated. The tenants named in the summary possession actions each filed an answer and six counterclaims. These counterclaims and their dispositions are discussed below in the section on former adjudication.

On September 30, 1994, Defendants filed the following eighteen motions for summary judgment and partial summary judgment:

- (1) DEFENDANT MAYOR FRANK F. FASI'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AGAINST PLAINTIFFS RAYMOND PEDRINA, LUZ PEDRINA, ALFREDO AURIO, SR., BENITA AURIO, RAPHAEL KAMAI, LYNDA AUGUSTUS, MINOR LUM, JUPITERREX URANIUMRHI AND ROSITA URANIUMRHI (res judicata/ collateral estoppel);

Defendant Fasi joined in motions 3 and 7. [13] Defendants YYVC, Han Kuk Chun and Tetsuo Yasuda joined in motions 1, 2, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 16, 17 and 18. Masanori Kobayashi and Yoshinori Hayashida joined in motions 1, 4, 6, 9, 13, 15, 16, 17 and 18. Hiroshi Kobayashi joined in motions 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, and 18. Eugene and Norma Lum joined in motions 1, 3, 4, 7, 8, 11, and 18.

Consideration of these motions was initially delayed pending settlement negotiations. After negotiations broke down, the motions were heard before this Court on May 15 and 22, 1995. For the reasons stated below, the Court GRANTS summary judgment in favor of Defendants. The Court finds that Plaintiffs' claims against all Defendants except Fasi are barred by the doctrine of claim preclusion. The Court also finds that Plaintiffs' claims against Defendant Fasi cannot survive summary judgment because Plaintiffs have failed to establish a genuine issue of fact whether Defendant Fasi participated, or agreed to participate, in the operation or control of RHCC. Accordingly, Defendant Fasi cannot be found liable under 18 U.S.C. 1962\(c\) or \(d\).

Although the above rulings are wholly dispositive of this action, the following order disposes of the remaining [14] motions as well. Both the parties and this Court have expended considerable time and effort briefing, arguing and reviewing these issues. The Court notes that although this action is being disposed of at summary judgment, Plaintiffs have had ample opportunity to present their side. Plaintiffs were given the opportunity to amend their complaint four times and survived innumerable motions previously brought before the Court.

[*1397] STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1  Summary judgment shall be granted where there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). One of the principal purposes of the summary judgment procedure is to identify and dispose of factually unsupported claims and defenses. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). The United States Supreme Court has declared that HN2  summary judgment must be granted against a party who fails to demonstrate facts to establish an element essential to its case where that party will bear the burden of proof of that essential element at trial. Id. at 322. "If the party moving for summary judgment meets its initial burden of identifying for the court the portions [15] of the materials on file that it believes demonstrate the absence of any genuine issue of material fact [citations omitted], the nonmoving party may not rely on the mere allegations in the pleadings in order to preclude summary judgment." T.W. Electrical. Serv. v. Pacific Elec. Contractors Assoc., 809 F.2d 626, 630 (9th Cir. 1987). Instead, HN3  Rule 56\(e\) requires that the nonmoving party set forth, by affidavit or as otherwise provided in Rule 56, specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Id. At least some "significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint" must be produced. Id. Legal memoranda and oral argument are not evidence and do not create issues of fact capable of defeating an otherwise valid motion for summary judgment. British Airways Bd. v. Boeing Co., 585 F.2d 946, 952 (9th Cir. 1978).

HN4  The standard for a grant of summary judgment reflects the standard governing the grant of a directed verdict. See Eisenberg v. Ins. Co. of North America, 815 F.2d 1285, 1289 (9th Cir. 1987), citing, Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). Thus, the question is whether "reasonable minds could differ as to the [16] import of the evidence." Id.

The Ninth Circuit has established that "no longer can it be argued that any disagreement about a material issue of fact precludes the use of summary judgment." California Architectural Bldg. Products, Inc. v. Franciscan Ceramics, Inc., 818 F.2d 1466, 1468 (9th Cir. 1987). Moreover, the United States Supreme Court has stated that HN5  "when the moving party has carried its burden under Rule 56\(c\), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). Indeed, "if the factual context makes the nonmoving party's claim implausible, that party must come forward with more persuasive evidence than would otherwise be necessary to show that there is a genuine issue for trial." Franciscan Ceramics, 818 F.2d at 1468 (emphasis original), citing, Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587. Of course, all evidence and inferences to be drawn therefrom must be construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. T.W. Elec. Services, 809 F.2d at 630-31.

DISCUSSION

I. PRELIMINARY MATTERS

[17] A. DISMISSAL OF IMPROPERLY ADDED PARTIES

In their Fourth Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs joined Huberto Dumadag and Rosita Uraniumrhi as Plaintiffs. In motion 1 and 2, Defendant Fasi requests that the Court dismiss these Plaintiffs because they were not properly added to the complaint. Plaintiffs did not seek leave of the Court to add these parties as required by Rule 15 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Nor did they bring a motion to amend their complaint before the Magistrate Judge as required by this Court's order of April 19, 1990. Therefore, the Court DISMISES all claims of Huberto Dumadag and Rosita Uraniumrhi.

Additionally, although the Court dismissed the estate of Laurencia Canencia in a prior order, Plaintiffs continued to name the estate in their Fourth Amended Complaint. The Court hereby strikes the estate from the complaint.

[*1398] B. FIFTH AMENDMENT PRIVILEGE

Throughout their opposition to Defendants' motions for summary judgments, Plaintiffs argue that summary judgment should not be granted because various Defendants asserted their Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination during their depositions. Although the Court does not agree that [18] summary judgment is inappropriate where a defendant has asserted the Fifth Amendment, the Court recognizes that this is a factor which requires consideration in certain instances. For example, Defendants may not rely on their own testimony or affidavits to support their version of a disputed issue where they have asserted their Fifth Amendment right not to answer questions concerning that very same issue. See United States v. Parcels of Land, 903 F.2d 36, 43 (1st Cir. 1990). Likewise, the Court may draw an adverse inference from the refusal of any of the Defendants to answer questions in response to probative evidence offered against them. Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 318-19, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810, 96 S. Ct. 1551 (1976); United States v. Ianniello, 824 F.2d 203, 208 (2nd Cir. 1987); Ramil v. Keller, 68 Haw. 608, 620, 726 P.2d 254 (1986).

II. FORMER ADJUDICATION (Res Judicata)

Defendants have filed four motions for summary judgment based on the preclusive effect of prior state court actions.⁷ In motions 1 and 2, Defendant Fasi contends that the claims and issues in the instant case are precluded by the doctrines of res judicata and/or collateral estoppel based on the summary possession actions. [19] Defendants YYVC, Han Kuk Chun and Tetsuo Yasuda raise the same argument in motion 4. All Defendants joined in one or more of these motions. In motion 3, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' claims in this action are barred by Plaintiffs' state court action. All Defendants joined in this motion.

Second, Plaintiffs argue that Defendants waived their right to assert issue preclusion by not raising it in their answer. This argument is without merit. Plaintiffs admit that Defendants raised an affirmative defense of res judicata. The term res judicata is often used to encompass both issue and claim preclusion. Migra v. Warren City School District, 465 U.S. 75, 77 n.1, 79 L. Ed. 2d 56, 104 S. Ct. 892 (1984); Robi v. Five Platters, Inc., 838 F.2d 318, 320 (9th Cir. 1988); In the Matter of the Dowsett Trust, 7 Haw. App. 640, 644 n.2, 791 P.2d 398 (1990). Plaintiffs also contend that Defendants' assertion of this affirmative defense was premature because the state courts had not yet ruled on the state actions. This contention is likewise without merit. Plaintiffs' state court action was pending when Defendants filed their answer. Accordingly, it was appropriate for Defendants to raise the defense of res judicata at that time. If the actions were not final by the time this court considered their preclusive effect, the defense would simply fail.

Third, Plaintiffs argue that the Court should not give the prior actions preclusive effect because they have discovered new evidence since those decisions were rendered. This alleged discovery, however, does not alter the preclusive effect of the prior decisions. If anything, the evidence provides Plaintiffs a grounds for challenging the validity of the actions in the state courts.

[20] Generally, HN6[↑] the doctrine of "res judicata" or former adjudication prevents parties from relitigating claims or issues that have already been decided by a competent tribunal. Santos v. State of Hawaii, 64 Haw. 648, 652, 646 P.2d 962 \(1982\); Dowsett, 7 Haw. App. 640, 642, 791 P.2d 398, 402 \(1990\). It protects the integrity of the courts and promotes reliance upon judicial pronouncements by requiring that the decisions and findings of the courts be accepted as undeniable legal truths. Res Judicata furthers the finality of legal disputes and eliminates the time and expense of relitigation by requiring that parties bring all claims arising out of a transaction, or series of connected transactions, in one action.

In the federal courts, HN7[↑] the doctrine of "res judicata" arises from the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the United States Constitution. The statute implementing the Full Faith and Credit Clause requires that [*1399] federal courts give state court proceedings "the same full faith and credit . . . as they have by law or usage in the courts of such State . . . from which they are taken." 28 U.S.C. § 1738. Migra v. Warren City School District Board of Education, 465 U.S. 75, 80, 79 L. Ed. 2d 56, 104 S. Ct. 892 \(1984\); [Robi v. Five Platters, \[21\] Inc., 838 F.2d 318, 322 \(9th Cir. 1988\)](#). HN8[↑] To determine whether a state decision precludes a party from litigating a claim or issue, federal courts must apply the res judicata rules of the state court in which the prior judgment was rendered. Migra, 465 U.S. at 81; Robi, 838 F.2d at 322. In the case at bar, Defendants assert that Plaintiffs' claims are precluded by various Hawaii state court actions. Accordingly, this Court must apply Hawaii's res judicata rules.

HN9[↑] "Res judicata" encompasses two distinct types of preclusion -- claim preclusion and issue preclusion.⁸ Santos v. State of Hawaii, 64 Haw. 648, 652, 646 P.2d 962 \(1982\); Dowsett, 7 Haw. App. 640, 644, 791 P.2d 398 \(1990\). HN10[↑] According to the doctrine of claim preclusion the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is a bar to a new action in any court between the same parties or their privies concerning the same subject matter, and precludes the relitigation not only of the [claims] which were actually litigated in the first action, but also of all grounds of claim and defense which might have been properly litigated in the first action but were not litigated or decided.

[22] E.g., Dowsett, 7 Haw. App. at 644 (citing In re Bishop Estate, 36 Haw. 403, 416 \(1943\)). HN11[↑] Claim preclusion thus bars plaintiffs from pursuing successive suits where the claim was either litigated or could have been litigated in the first action. It also bars defendants from pursuing a subsequent action that could have been raised as a defense or counterclaim in the first suit. By contrast, issue preclusion only bars relitigation of particular issues actually litigated and decided in the prior suit. Id. at 644. Issue preclusion may be asserted in a subsequent action on a totally different claim.

A. CLAIM PRECLUSION

HN12[↑] Claim preclusion is applicable only where (1) the claim asserted in the action in question was or could have been asserted in the prior action; (2) the parties in the present action are identical to, or in privity with, the parties in the prior action; and (3) a final judgment on the merits was rendered in the prior action. Santos, 64 Haw. at 653.

1. Same Parties

⁸ Issue preclusion and claim preclusion have historically been called collateral estoppel and bar or merger respectively. "Res judicata" has also been used narrowly on occasion to refer solely to claim preclusion. Both the United States Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit, however, have indicated a preference for the use of the modern terms of issue and claim preclusion to avoid confusion. Migra, 465 U.S. at 77 n.1; Robi, 838 F.2d at 320; see also, Dowsett Trust, 7 Haw. App. 640, 644 n.2, 791 P.2d 398 \(1990\).

HN13 [↑] Claim preclusion requires that the parties to the second action are the same as, or in privity with, the parties to the first action. Dowsett, 7 Haw. App. at I231 646. Whether sufficient privity exists to bind a nonparty to a judgment is determined under the circumstances in each case as it arises. Id. Under Hawaii law, "the concept of privity has moved from the conventional and narrowly defined meaning of 'mutual or successive relationship[s] to the same rights of property' to 'merely a word used to say that the relationship between the one who is a party of record and another is close enough to include that other within the res adjudicata.'" Id. HN14 [↑] The party asserting claim preclusion must demonstrate that the interests of the nonparty were adequately represented and that the nonparty's rights were afforded proper protection in the prior action. Id.

Although a close family relationship is one factor that a court may consider in determining privity, under Hawaii "res judicata" principles, such ties alone are not sufficient to bind a nonparty to a judgment. Id. (privity was not established by mother-child relationship where interests were divergent; mother had an interest in the trust income and children had an interest in the trust [*1400] corpus). Rather, the party asserting claim preclusion must demonstrate that the interests of [*24] the nonparty were adequately represented and that the nonparty's rights were afforded proper protection in the prior action. Id.

The Ninth Circuit has held that a nonparty may be bound if a party is so closely aligned with the nonparty as to be its "virtual representative." United States v. ITT Rayonier, Inc., 627 F.2d 996 (9th Cir. 1980); Jackson v. Hayakawa, 605 F.2d 1121, 1126 (9th Cir. 1979). Some courts have suggested that the concept of virtual representation contemplates an "express or implied legal relationship by which parties to the first suit are accountable to non-parties who file a subsequent suit with identical issues." ITT Rayonier, Inc., 627 F.2d at 1003. In practice, however, courts that have used the term "legal relationship" have applied it quite loosely. In the ITT Rayonier case itself, for example, the Ninth Circuit held that the EPA was bound by an enforcement action brought by the Department of Energy in an earlier state proceeding. The court backed away from requiring a strict agency relationship between the DOE and the EPA. Instead, the court focused on the fact that the interests of the DOE and the EPA were identical and their involvement [*25] substantially similar, that they maintained the same position with respect to the action, and that they shared more than "an abstract interest" in enforcement. Id. at 1003. The court emphasized that the relationship between the DOE and the EPA "however it may be labeled" was sufficiently close so as to preclude relitigation. Id.

The Ninth Circuit's decision in Jackson, 605 F.2d at 1121 is particularly instructive. In Jackson, students and a former college instructor brought a civil rights action charging that the college president and others had violated their First Amendment rights by having them arrested after a campus rally. The district court held that the Jackson plaintiffs were bound by an earlier decision in which a different group of students unsuccessfully challenged arrests arising out of the same incident. Although the plaintiffs in the initial action had never been certified as a class, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the lower court's decision, holding that the plaintiffs were bound by the doctrine of virtual representation because they were attempting to vindicate the same rights as the plaintiffs in the earlier action. Id. at 1126.

The Ninth [*26] Circuit's doctrine of virtual representation is in accord with Hawaii's requirement that a non-party's interests must have been adequately represented and that his or her rights must have been afforded proper protection in the prior action. Where a party to the action shared identical or substantially similar interests or was attempting to vindicate the same rights, and stood in the same position as a non-party, the rights and interests of the non-party would be adequately represented and protected.

2. Same Claim

The Hawaii courts follow the Second Restatement's transactional view of "same claim" for purposes of claim preclusion. Kauhane v. Acutron Company, Inc., 71 Haw. 458, 464, 795 P.2d 276 (1990). Accordingly, HN15 [↑] to determine whether a litigant is asserting the "same claim" in a second action, Hawaii courts look to whether the claim arises out of the same transaction or the same series of connected transactions out of which the first action arose. Id.; Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 24 (1982) [hereinafter "Restatement § 24"]. The claim extinguished by an action "includes all rights of the plaintiff to remedies against the defendant with respect to all or any part [*27] of the transaction, or series of connected transactions." Restatement § 24. This inquiry is made based on the facts of the transaction and does not depend on the number of substantive theories, or variant forms of relief flowing from those theories, that may have been available to the plaintiff; the number of primary rights that may have been invaded; or the variations in the evidence needed to support the theories or rights. Id. at 463 n. 6; Restatement § 24 comment at 197.

Accordingly, HN16 a plaintiff cannot avoid the bar of claim preclusion merely by alleging conduct that was not alleged in his prior action or by pleading a new legal theory. [*1401] McClain v. Apodaca, 793 F.2d 1031, 1034 \(9th Cir. 1986\). All claims arising from a single injury must be raised in a single action or they will be barred by res judicata. Silver v. Queen's Hospital, 63 Haw. 430, 437, 629 P.2d 1116 \(1981\). This is true even where some of the claims arise under state law and some arise under federal law. Id. (actions under federal civil rights act and state conspiracy and antitrust law arising from a single injury should be raised in a single action). Moreover, because claim preclusion bars all claims and defenses [28] which could have been brought, it bars claims and defenses which were voluntarily withdrawn if a final judgment is rendered on the remainder of the case. Hall v. State of Hawaii, 7 Haw. App. 274, 283, 756 P.2d 1048 \(1988\).

3. Final Judgment on the Merits

a. On the merits

Clearly, HN17 either a bench or jury trial is an adjudication on the merits of a case. See, Morneau, 56 Haw. at 421. Likewise, rulings on summary judgment motions are an adjudication of the merits of the disputed issues. See Hall, 7 Haw. App. at 277, 283. Under Hawaii law, it is equally settled that a dismissal with prejudice is an adjudication on the merits of all issues that were raised or could have been raised in the pleadings. E.g., Land v. Highway Construction, 64 Haw. 545, 551, 645 P.2d 295 \(1982\); Caires v. Kualoa Ranch, Inc., 6 Haw. App. 52, 56, 708 P.2d 848 \(1985\). HN18 H.R.C.P. Rule 41\(b\) and Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 41\(b\) provide for involuntary dismissal when a plaintiff fails to comply with the rules or with an order of the court. Silver v. Queen's Hospital, 63 Haw. 430, 440, 629 P.2d 1116 \(1981\). These rules specifically provide that such dismissal operates as an adjudication on the merits:

Unless the court [29] in its order for dismissal otherwise specifies, a dismissal under this subdivision and any dismissal not provided for in this rule, other than a dismissal for lack of jurisdiction, for improper venue, or for failure to join a party under Rule 19, operates as an adjudication upon the merits.

H.R.C.P. 41(b). The United States Supreme Court has similarly held that dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is a judgment on the merits. Federated Department Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 399 n.3, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 \(1981\). Rule 29 of the Hawaii Rules of Circuit Courts provides that HN19 actions may be dismissed with prejudice for want of prosecution where all defendants are in default and if the plaintiff fails to apply for default judgment within a specific time period. The Hawaii courts have held that dismissal for want of prosecution pursuant to Circuit Court Rule 12 also operates as a dismissal with prejudice and thus precludes a party from relitigating claims which were or could have been brought in the dismissed action. Lundburg v. Stinson, 5 Haw. App. 394, 400, 695 P.2d 328 \(1985\).⁹

[30] The Hawaii Court of Appeals has also given preclusive effect to a default judgment. Quality Sheet Metal v. Woods, 2 Haw. App. 160, 164, 627 P.2d 1128 \(1981\). The court noted that the time for the defaulting party to assert its defenses was in the prior action. To permit it to later assert those claims would in effect reverse the default judgment. Hawaii courts would apparently likewise grant preclusive effect to prejudicial consent judgments. See, Dowsett, 7 Haw. App. at 645 (citing Sullivan v. Easco Corp., 662 F. Supp. 1396, 1408 \(D. Md. 1987\) (a stipulation of dismissal with prejudice constitutes a final judgment on the merits for the purpose of claim preclusion)). Dismissal of an entire complaint without prejudice, by contrast, does not operate as an adjudication on the merits and thus does not bar a subsequent action on the same claim. Land, 64 Haw. at 551.

⁹ In September, 1990, the Hawaii legislature amended Rule 12 to provide that a dismissal for want of prosecution where no pretrial statement has been filed is without prejudice. Rules of Circuit Courts, Rule 12\(q\) (emphasis added).

b. Finality

Under Hawaii law, HN20 a judgment is final for purposes of res judicata where the time to appeal has expired without an appeal being taken. [Glover v. Fong, 42 Haw. 560 [*1402] (1958). A Hawaii appellate court has noted that it follows "that where an appeal has been taken, a judgment of the trial court 31 is not final, at least for purposes of res judicata." Littleton v. State of Hawaii, 6 Haw. App. 70, 708 P.2d 829, 833 (1985). The Hawaii Supreme Court apparently concurs. See, Kauhane, 71 Haw. at 465 (circuit court's judgment became final for res judicata purposes once plaintiff's appeal was withdrawn); Silver, 63 Haw. at 440 (district court's judgment was finalized by the Supreme Court's denial of certiorari); City and County of Honolulu v. Kam, 48 Haw. 349, 358 n.17, 402 P.2d 683 (issue of whether there was a garnishable debt became res judicata on affirmance of the judgment).

Defendants urge this Court to find that a judgment is final for purposes of res judicata pending appeal based on In re Chong, a decision by the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Hawaii. 16 Bankr. 1 (D. Hawaii 1980). The bankruptcy court cited a Hawaii case, Solarana v. Industrial Electronics, 50 Haw. 22, 428 P.2d 411 (1967), for the proposition that an appeal from a judgment does not vacate the judgment appealed from, and then presumed that the appeal would likewise not affect the res judicata effect of a judgment. In re Chong, 16 Bankr. at 3-4. A close reading of Solarana, however, reveals that 32 the Hawaii court did not suggest that a judgment should be given res judicata effect pending appeal. See Solarana, 50 Haw. at 30. Rather, the court stated that:

HN21[ When an appeal from the dismissal of the first suit has been taken and is pending so that it ultimately may result that the subject matter of the second suit becomes triable in the first suit, the proper remedy is not a [dismissal] but instead a motion for stay of the proceedings in the second suit.

This language indicates that the Solarana court intended that pending actions which might be barred by the res judicata effect of a case on appeal should be stayed until the appeal was finalized and the decision could be given res judicata effect.

Defendants further cite to federal cases establishing the general rule adopted by federal courts that a judgment is final for purposes of res judicata despite the pendency of an appeal. See Hawkins v. Risley, 984 F.2d 321, 324-25 (9th Cir. 1993); Robi, 838 F.2d at 327; 1 Rest. 2d, Judgments § 13, cmt. f at 135 (1985); United States v. Tropic Seas, 887 F. Supp. 1347, Cv. No. 94-00317SPK (citing Hawkins v. Risley for federal rule that the preclusive effect of 33 a lower court judgment is not suspended by an appeal). In the case at bar, however, the Court is determining the preclusive effect of a state court action and must apply the res judicata principles adopted by the Hawaii courts.

B. ISSUE PRECLUSION

HN22 Issue preclusion requires that (1) the issue decided in the prior adjudication is identical with the one presented in the present action; (2) the party against whom issue preclusion is asserted was a party to the prior action or in privity with a prior party; and (3) there was a final judgment on the merits. [Santos, 64 Haw. at 653.

1. Same Parties

HN23 The privity rules for claim preclusion and issue preclusion are identical. Additionally, Hawaii law permits [HN24[ issue preclusion to be raised defensively by one who was not a party to the prior action. Morneau, 56 Haw. at 423. Defensive issue preclusion may only be asserted against someone who was a party, or in privity with a party, to the prior suit. Id.

2. Identical Issue

HN25 [↑] In contrast to claim preclusion, issue preclusion does not bar litigation of all claims that were or could have been asserted. Rather, it only prevents a party from relitigating [34] an issue which was actually raised, litigated and decided in the prior action. Dowsett, 7 Haw. App. at 640. Hawaii courts have generally interpreted "actually litigated" as requiring that the party against whom preclusion is sought had a "full and fair opportunity" to litigate the issue in the earlier case. Morneau v. Stark Enterprises, Ltd., 56 Haw. 420, 423, 539 P.2d 472 (1975).

[*1403] 3. Final Judgment

HN26 [↑] Application of issue preclusion, like claim preclusion, requires that a final judgment was rendered in the first action. The inquiry of whether a judgment is final for purposes of issue preclusion purposes is identical to the discussion above for claim preclusion. Because issue preclusion only precludes issues that were actually litigated and decided, however, the inquiry of whether a decision is "on the merits" may be answered differently. For example, a stipulated dismissal or judgment will generally not support a claim of issue preclusion because the issues would not have been actually litigated and decided. Dowsett, 7 Haw. App. at 645. By contrast, parties are precluded from relitigating issues decided at summary judgment because they had a full and fair opportunity to address [35] the merits of the issues at this stage.

C. EFFECT OF PLAINTIFFS' STATE COURT ACTION

On November 10, 1988, most of the Plaintiffs ("State Court Plaintiffs") filed an action against YYVC and Han Kuk Chun ("State Court Defendants") in the Circuit Court of the First Circuit of the State of Hawaii. In their complaint, State Court Plaintiffs alleged claims of defamation, slander, violation of contract, intentional infliction of mental and physical duress and wrongful conversion against State Court Defendants for their activities in connection with obtaining the Conditional Use Permit and attempting to evict the tenants. In particular, State Court Plaintiffs claimed that they were third party beneficiaries of the CUP as successors in interest to that agreement, that State Court Defendants failed to inform them that they had a right to be relocated under the CUP and that Defendants removed them from the property in violation of the CUP. State Court Plaintiffs claimed to have suffered loss of economic income from "attempting to comply with the defendants non-conforming demands for relocation" and further economic loss and physical damage from "not being relocated as required under [36] the CUP and from being threatened with eviction by the Defendants or by being evicted in violation of the CUP." Plaintiffs claimed to have lost their homes, livestock, agricultural products, equipment and profits related thereto. Plaintiffs expressly declined to assert their claims of adverse possession in this action.

On June 22, 1989, the state court entered an order of dismissal for want of prosecution pursuant to Circuit Court Rule 29, granting State Court Plaintiffs five days to show good cause why the case should not be dismissed.¹⁰ Plaintiffs responded that they had delayed acting because they were considering incorporating the matter into the RICO suit which they had filed in the federal district court. This response was accompanied by an affidavit of Thomas Lavigne, then paralegal for Plaintiffs' attorney. The state court subsequently withdrew its order of dismissal and Defendants filed an answer.

[37] On November 10, 1989, the state court entered a notice of proposed dismissal pursuant to Circuit Court Rule 12, warning Plaintiffs that the action would be dismissed with prejudice unless they filed objections showing good cause within 10 days. This time, Plaintiffs responded that they had delayed acting because they were considering joining the state court action and the federal action "for judicial economy." The state court withdrew its notice of proposed dismissal.

On February 7, 1990, Plaintiffs filed a pretrial statement in the state court action. This pretrial statement bore the name and address of Thomas Lavigne, then co-counsel of Plaintiffs. On August 2, 1991, the state court once again issued an order of dismissal, noting that "cases dismissed with prejudice for want of prosecution can be reinstated by way of objection to the Order of Dismissal within ten days." After Plaintiffs failed to object, the Court issued a final order of dismissal on August 22, 1991.

¹⁰ HN27 [↑] Rule 29 of the Rules of the Circuit Courts provides that "a case may be dismissed with prejudice for want of prosecution after notice of not less than 5 days where all defendants are in default and if the plaintiff fails to obtain entry of default and fails to apply for default judgment within six months after all defendants are in default."

1. Claim Preclusion

a. Same Parties

State Court Plaintiffs brought their action against Han Kuk Chun and YYVC. [*1404] These parties were likewise named in the current action before this Court. [38] Accordingly, Han Kuk Chun and YYVC may invoke claim preclusion to estop State Court Plaintiffs, and those in privity with them, from relitigating the claims brought in the state action. Likewise, those in privity with Han Kuk Chun and YYVC may assert claim preclusion to prevent State Court Plaintiffs, and those in privity with them, from relitigating those claims.

Tetsuo Yasuda, Masanori Kobayashi and Yoshinori Hayashida, all sued in their capacity as "officers" of Defendant YYVC, are clearly in privity with the corporation. Their interests and involvement in the alleged events are identical to that of YYVC and they stand in the same position with respect to these actions as the corporation. Accordingly they may invoke claim preclusion to the same extent as YYVC.

Defendants Hiroshi Kobayashi, Eugene Lum and Norma Lum are all named both personally and as agents for corporate Defendant YYVC. However, the allegations against them pertain solely to their actions as agents for YYVC. Clearly, with respect to these activities, their interests and involvement are substantially the same as that of the corporation. They also stand in the same position as the corporation with respect to these [39] actions. Therefore, the Court finds that these Defendants are in privity with YYVC and may invoke claim preclusion to same extent as YYVC.

Defendant Fasi is not in privity with Defendant YYVC or Han Kuk Chun and therefore may not invoke the doctrine of claim preclusion.

All State Court Plaintiffs are clearly subject to claim preclusion based on the state court action. Likewise, Plaintiffs who were not party to the state court action are bound by the doctrines of privity and virtual representation. The interests of these non-party Plaintiffs are essentially identical to the State Court Plaintiffs: they share the same attorney in the current action and are all trying to vindicate the same rights and interests that were at issue in the prior action. Therefore, the Court finds that the interests of the non-party Plaintiffs were adequately represented and their rights afforded proper protection in the state action.

b. Same Claim

The fact that State Court Plaintiffs brought state common law claims in their state action and RICO claims in their federal action is not a defense to claim preclusion. Because these claims all arose out of Defendants' attempt to relocate and [40] evict the tenants from the property, Plaintiffs could and should have brought the claims together in one action. The state law claims and RICO claims involve the same acts -- Defendants' alleged violation of the CUP and failure to inform the tenants of their alleged rights as third party beneficiaries under the CUP. Plaintiffs are likewise seeking to redress the same injury in both actions -- eviction from the property, loss of homes, livestock, agricultural products, equipment and profits related thereto. Tenants cannot avoid claim preclusion in this Court simply by alleging new conduct (i.e. bribery, threats and mail fraud) or pleading a new legal theory (i.e. RICO), or by deleting a theory (i.e. slander) from the second action.

Because state and federal courts share concurrent jurisdiction over RICO claims, State Court Plaintiffs could have raised their federal claims in their state court action. Tafflin v. Levitt, 493 U.S. 455, 460, 107 L. Ed. 2d 887, 110 S. Ct. 792 (1990); Lou v. Belzberg, 834 F.2d 730, 739 (9th Cir. 1987). Conversely, they could have sought supplemental jurisdiction over the state court claims in federal court. 28 U.S.C. § 1367.¹¹ Instead, Plaintiffs chose

¹¹ In fact, in 1989, Plaintiffs indicated to the state court that they were considering such action, but had decided not to. In this Court's Order filed December 18, 1990, the Court refused to assert supplemental jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' other state court to split their claims and [41] simultaneously seek relief in both the state and federal courts, thus causing duplicated [*1405] efforts and wasting judicial resources. Because Plaintiffs chose to pursue two concurrent actions, the final decision rendered in the state court prior to completion of the federal action became the full measure of relief to be accorded between the parties. The state decision thus precludes Plaintiffs from further litigating their claims in this Court.

c. Final Decision on the Merits

The state court's order of dismissal, [42] filed August 2, 1991, indicated that Plaintiffs' state court action would be dismissed with prejudice if Plaintiffs did not show good cause for their failure to act within 10 days. After Plaintiffs did not respond, the state court entered a final order dismissing the action on August 22, 1991.¹² Plaintiffs do not dispute that the dismissal was with prejudice for failure to prosecute the case, see Compass Development, Inc. v. Blevins, 10 Haw. App. 388, 391, 876 P.2d 1335 \(1994\), and that such a dismissal acts as a final decision on the merits for purposes of res judicata. Rather, Plaintiffs contend that the state court's dismissal of their action should not be given preclusive effect because one of their attorneys, Anthony Locricchio, did not timely receive a copy of the order of dismissal or final order of dismissal. The Court notes that Plaintiffs' do not deny that their co-counsel, Thomas Lavigne, timely received the orders.

[43] The Court finds that Plaintiffs' argument pertains to the validity of the state court's decision and is not relevant to the preclusive impact of that decision in this Court. If Plaintiffs believed that the dismissal of their action was improper, their appropriate remedy was to file a motion to set aside the state court's order or to appeal the order before the state court. See Compass Development, 10 Haw. App. at 396; Lim v. Harvis, 65 Haw. 71, 72, 647 P.2d 290 \(1982\). Having failed to do so, Plaintiffs cannot now resort to a collateral attack of the state court judgment in this Court.

The Court further finds that Plaintiffs' argument as to the validity of the state court's dismissal lacks merit. HN28 Rule 4 of the Hawaii Rules of Civil Procedure provide that "every order required by its terms to be served . . . shall be served upon each of the parties affected thereby." Where the party is represented by an attorney, "service shall be made upon the attorney . . . by mailing it to him at his last known address." H.R.C.P. 4(b). Rule 4 further provides that "service by mail is complete upon mailing." Id.; [Korean Buddhist Dae Won Sa Temple of Hawaii, Inc. v. Zoning Board of Appeals of the \[44\] City and County of Honolulu, 9 Haw. App. 298, 304, 837 P.2d 311 \(1992\).](#)

Plaintiffs do not dispute that copies of the dismissal orders were mailed to Anthony Locricchio at 47-677 Hui Kelu St., # 1, Kaneohe, HI 96744, the address of Locricchio's co-counsel, Thomas Lavigne. This address appeared on the heading of documents filed by Plaintiffs in both their state court case and the current action before this Court. Plaintiffs' pretrial statement, filed in the state court action on February 7, 1990, lists "Locricchio & Lavigne" as attorneys for Plaintiffs and gives the names and addresses of both attorneys. Defendants YYVC et. al. reply to Motion 3, Exhibit A. Likewise, documents filed in this Court shortly before and after the state court dismissed Plaintiffs' action on August 22, 1991, list Thomas Lavigne as co-counsel, bear the signature of Thomas Lavigne and give the same Kaneohe address. See Plaintiffs' Amended Certificate of Service, filed June 26, 1991; Plaintiffs' Response, filed Aug. 1, 1991, Plaintiffs' Notice of Appeal, filed Oct. 4, 1991; Plaintiffs' Notice of Appeal, filed Oct. 30, 1991. Thomas Lavigne's name also appears on the state court docket sheet in connection with filing [45] of documents in the state court. Defendants YYVC et. al. Motion 3, Exhibit I.

The Court notes that Plaintiffs had previously responded to several orders by the state court threatening dismissal of their action for lack of prosecution. Clearly, Plaintiffs' attorney was on notice that if he didn't move this case along claims. However, this was because the Court found the allegations concerning the state claims to be "woefully inadequate." The Court was unwilling to waste time and resources allowing Plaintiff's to amend their complaint for the fifth time.

it would be dismissed. Yet, several years after the state court entered [*1406] a final order of dismissal, he has still never moved to have the case reopened. Therefore, the Court finds that the state court's dismissal of Plaintiffs' action precludes relitigation of the same claims in this Court.

2. Issue Preclusion

Because this action was dismissed for lack of prosecution none of the issues in the suit were actually decided by the state court. Therefore, issue preclusion is not appropriate with respect to this action.

D. EFFECT OF SUMMARY POSSESSION ACTIONS

The named tenants each filed six counterclaims in response to YYVC's summary possession actions.

(1) Leases Under an Option Contract

In their answers to the summary possession actions, the tenants claimed that they were parties and/or beneficiaries under an option contract. According to [46] the tenants, YYVC "conditionally promised [tenants], both verbally and in writing, that [tenants] could remain on the property . . . if they abstained from opposing, and if [tenant] Leonard Wong testified in favor of [sic] [YYVC's] golf course project at the CUP public hearing." The tenants claimed that these promises grant them the right to renewable leases of the property.

On November 1, 1990, YYVC filed a motion to dismiss this defense and counterclaim for failing to satisfy the statute of frauds. According to Hawaii law, leases for real property which extend beyond one year are unenforceable unless (1) in writing, and (2) signed by the party charged. Tenants opposed YYVC's motion claiming that the statute of frauds was satisfied by the Conditional Use Permit and that the doctrine of part performance removed the agreement from the statute of frauds.

On May 29, 1991, the District Court for the First Circuit of the State of Hawaii granted YYVC's motion to dismiss this counterclaim with prejudice. The state court issued a minute order stating that "having considered the Exhibits, Affidavits and Memoranda submitted, together with the Arguments of Counsel, and further being [47] fully advised in the premises, and good cause appearing therefore, it is, ordered [that] . . . [tenants'] first. . . defense and counterclaim[] is dismissed with prejudice."

(2) Relocation Under the Conditional Use Permit

In their answers to the summary possession actions, the tenants also claimed that they were third party beneficiaries under the conditional use permit ("CUP") permitting the development of a private golf course and country club on the property. According to the tenants, one condition of the CUP was relocation of the tenants living on the property. According to the tenants, the relocation plan provided by YYVC violated the CUP because (a) it did not provide for relocating the tenants' homes, (b) the plan offered relocation in a flood plain area not contemplated in the CUP, and (c) the plan was "unconscionable in that it is absolutely conditioned upon [tenants] waiving a multitude of rights against [YYVC] and its agents."

On November 1, 1990, YYVC filed a motion for partial summary judgment of this defense and counterclaim, arguing that the relocation offer made by YYVC was not inconsistent with the Conditional Use Permit. The CUP provided that: [48]

. . . The applicant proposes to give tenants the option to relocate to a 50-acre portion of the project site adjacent to the residential fringe and obtain a 10-year permit to use the land for agricultural purposes.

. . . Agricultural tenants presently located within the project site shall be offered an opportunity to relocate to an adjacent area indicated for agricultural use in the Exhibit Map.

Aside from prescribing the area and specifying that the relocatees be allowed to stay for 10 years, the CUP did not restrict YYVC's authority to set the terms of its relocation proposal. YYVC's relocation plan was approved by the City and County of Honolulu. YYVC's Exhibit 7. Tenants opposed YYVC's [*1407] motion, claiming there was a factual dispute over proper interpretation of the CUP.

On May 29, 1991, the District Court for the First Circuit of the State of Hawaii granted YYVC's motion for summary judgment as to the second defense and counterclaim in a minute order as described above.

(3) Adverse Possession

Certain of the tenants also defended against the summary possession actions by asserting a claim for title to YYVC's property under the law of adverse possession.

[49] On November 1, 1990, YYVC filed a motion to dismiss this defense and counterclaim for failure to comply with HN29 H.R.S. 12.1, which requires that a party raising the defense submit affidavits describing the nature and extent of the land in question. According to YYVC, the tenants' claim of adverse possession was insufficient because they had not, and could not, come forward with evidence of the precise location or boundaries of the land they allegedly possessed. The tenants opposed this motion, arguing that the defense was valid and that they had complied with rule 12.1.

On May 29, 1991, the District Court for the First Circuit of the State of Hawaii granted YYVC's motion to dismiss this defense and counterclaim with prejudice in a minute order as described above.

(4) Breach of Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment

The tenants claimed that certain acts attributable to YYVC, including "bulldozing and threatening to bulldoze homes, crops and other improvements; attempting to wrongfully evict; shooting and stealing livestock; leading Uraniumrhi to a secluded warehouse and intimidating him in attempting to force him to sign a waiver permitting [YYVC] to bulldoze Uraniumrhi's improvements [50] and crops," breached the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment which YYVC, as the lessor, implicitly promised.

On August 13, 1991, the state district court entered an order dismissing this defense and counterclaim without prejudice pursuant to H.R.C.P. 41(a)(2), prescribing voluntary dismissal by order of court.

(5) Estoppel and Breach of Negative Covenant in Deed

In the summary possession actions, the tenants also claimed that they were beneficiaries of a deed which provided that occupants of YYVC's property would be entitled to remove improvements, including crops and trees, upon vacating the land. According to the tenants, YYVC wrongfully concealed from them their rights pursuant to that deed.

On November 1, 1990, YYVC filed a motion for partial summary judgment on this defense and counterclaim, arguing that the relocation offer made by YYVC was not inconsistent with the deed. YYVC submitted evidence showing that the relocation plan offered informed the tenants that YYVC did not claim any right to dwelling structures or other improvements, including crops. The tenants opposed this motion claiming that there was a factual dispute over whether the relocation agreement [51] offered the tenants violated the covenant in the deed.

On May 29, 1991, the District Court for the First Circuit of the State of Hawaii granted YYVC's motion for summary judgment as to this defense and counterclaim in a minute order as described above.

(6) State RICO

The tenants also claimed that YYVC was liable to them for violations of HRS Chapter 842, the state counterpart to the federal RICO Act. As part of their state RICO defense, tenants Raphael Kamai and Linda Augustus claimed that YYVC's conduct interfered with their relationship with a third party to sell trees to that party. Various other tenants claimed they lost farming and rental income from sales and subsistence. On August 13, 1991, the state district court entered an order dismissing the state RICO defense and counterclaim without prejudice pursuant to H.R.C.P. 41(a)(2), prescribing voluntary dismissal by order of court.

Subsequent to the above mentioned rulings, on September 23, 1991, the state court struck the answers and remaining counterclaims [1408] of the following tenants after they failed to appear at their depositions noticed by YYVC:

James Jones, Loretta Jones, Severo Duque, Cristita Bolo, [*52] Josefina Bolo, Wilfredo Bolo, Alejandro Coloyan, Ofelia Coloyan, Isidro Dilay, Margaret Dilay, Violeta Dumadag, Estrella Igarta, Sebastian Igarta, Cipriano Manuel, Frances Miguel, Jennie Olinger, Adoracion Pedrina, Francisco Pedrina, Luz Pedrina, Jocelyn Sullivan, William Sullivan, Cheryl Wong, and Leonard Wong.

The state court previously warned these tenants that this adverse action would be taken against them if they failed to appear at scheduled depositions. The state court ordered that default judgments be entered against these tenants in the summary possession actions and entered Final Judgments for Possession and Writs of Possession against the defaulting tenants. Three other tenants, Peter Barcia, Nicanor Amit, and Lorraine Dilay, stipulated to the entry of judgment for possession.

YYVC's claims against tenants Jupiterrex Uraniumrhi, Alfredo Aurio, Sr., Benita Aurio, Raphael Kamai, Linda Augustus, Milnor Lum, and Raymond Pedrina were subsequently tried. YYVC prevailed in these actions. At trial the state court concluded that:

YYVC has met all its legal obligations under the Relocation Plan. The Plan, as written and as applied, satisfied the requirements [*53] imposed by the City and County of Honolulu under the CUP.

At this time, the state court also dismissed Kamai and Augustus' claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage for lack of merit. Subsequently, the state court entered judgment for possession in favor of YYVC against these tenants.

YYVC asserts that their claims against John Batalona were also tried but that the court did not issue any written findings. Judgment for possession was entered against Batalona by the state court.

Tenants Alfredo and Benita Aurio, Raphael Kamai, Linda Augustus, Milnor Lum, Luz and Raymond Pedrina and Jupiterrex Uraniumrhi timely appealed from the judgments for possession and the underlying orders, including the orders granting YYVC's motion to dismiss and motion for partial summary judgment. The appeals are still pending. The remaining tenants either failed to appeal before the time for appeal expired or had their appeals dismissed.

1. Claim Preclusion

a. Same Parties

YYVC was the plaintiff in these actions and thus may clearly invoke claim preclusion to prevent the tenants involved in these actions from relitigating claims and defenses [*54] which they either raised or could have raised in that action. As discussed above, Defendants sued in their capacity as officers of YYVC, or for their alleged actions as agents of the corporation, are in privity with the corporation for purposes of claim preclusion and thus may invoke the doctrine to the same extent as YYVC. Because Defendant Fasi was neither a party to the summary possession actions, nor in privity with YYVC, he may not invoke claim preclusion to estop the tenants from litigating claims against him.

The only tenants who were not named in the summary possession actions where Rosita Uraniumrhi, Huberto Dumadag and the Estate of Laurencia Canencia. As discussed above, the Court has dismissed these parties because they were added to Plaintiffs' Fourth Amended Complaint in violation of Rule 15 and this Court's prior orders. In any event, the Court finds that Uraniumrhi and Dumadag's interests were adequately protected by their spouses and their attorney in the prior action. Likewise, the Estate's interests was adequately protected by Cristita Bolo and Lorraine Dilay, administrators of the Estate, who were also parties to the state court action. Therefore, all Plaintiffs [*55] to the current action are subject to the preclusive effect of the summary possession actions.

b. Same Claim

The six defenses and counterclaims asserted by Tenants in the summary possession actions were virtually identical to [*1409] the property entitlements alleged in their complaint in this action. Clearly Tenants could, and should, have asserted their federal RICO claims as a defense to this action. Not only do the state courts share concurrent jurisdiction over RICO claims; E.g., Rafflin, 493 U.S. at 460; Lou, 834 F.2d at 739; state law permits defendants to a summary possession action to bring any counterclaims arising out of and referring to the land the plaintiffs are seeking possession of. Lum v. Sun, 70 Haw. 288, 296-97, 769 P.2d 1091 (1989); H.R.S. § 604-5(a).

c. Final Adjudication on the Merits

Raphael Kamai, Lynda Augustus, Alfredo Aurio, Benita Aurio and Milnor Lum have pending appeals of the state court rulings on the summary possession actions. Therefore, the summary possession actions will not have preclusive effect for these Plaintiffs.

The remaining tenants failed to timely appeal the state court summary possession actions. John Batalona went [56] to trial and judgment was entered in favor of Defendants. Clearly a trial is a final adjudication on the merits which precludes Batalona from relitigating any claims or defenses which he could have asserted in this action. Of the remaining tenants, all but three suffered default judgments for failing to appear at their depositions. Because the default judgments serve as complete adjudications of all the rights of these tenants, they are precluded from relitigating their claims in the current action. The remaining three tenants entered stipulated judgments in favor of Defendants. Hawaii courts would likewise grant preclusive effect to these judgments. Accordingly, all tenants except those who appealed the summary possession actions are precluded by these actions from relitigating their claims in this Court.

2. Issue Preclusion

Defendant Fasi may invoke defensive issue preclusion to preclude Plaintiffs from relitigating issues which were actually litigated and decided in the summary possession actions. As discussed above, all of the Plaintiffs in the federal action were either parties, or in privity with parties, to the summary possession actions. As discussed above, however, [57] Defendant Fasi may not assert issue preclusion against Raphael Kamai, Lynda Augustus, Alfredo Aurio, Benita Aurio or Milnor Lum because the decisions against them are on appeal.

With respect to the remaining Plaintiffs, Defendant Fasi may invoke issue preclusion to estop them from relitigating the issue of whether they had a right to renewable leases on the property as parties to, or beneficiaries under, an option contract. Plaintiffs had a full and fair opportunity to litigate this issue in the summary possession action in state court. YYVC moved to dismiss the counterclaim based on the leases in that action for failing to satisfy the statute of frauds. The Plaintiffs asserted two defenses to the statutes of frauds in that action: (1) that it was satisfied by the CUP, and (2) that the doctrine of part performance removed the agreement from the statute. In granting YYVC's motion, the state court necessarily rejected both defenses. If the tenants disagreed with the state court's holding, their recourse was to appeal, as several tenants did. The remaining Tenants who failed to appeal are bound by the state court's dismissal of their defense and counterclaim and are estopped from relitigating [58] the issue of whether they had a right to renewable leases in this action.

These Plaintiffs are also precluded from relitigating their claims of adverse possession. Although Tenants had a full and fair opportunity to prove these claims in the state court, they failed to come forward with sufficient evidence to withstand Defendants' motion to dismiss.

The state court also rejected Plaintiffs' claim that Defendants' relocation plan violated the CUP and granted Defendants' motion for summary judgment on this issue. Thus, the Plaintiffs who did not appeal this decision are precluded from rehashing the issue before this Court.

Similarly, Plaintiffs may not relitigate the issue of whether the relocation agreement offered by Defendants violated the negative [*1410] covenant contained in the deed for the property. The state court rejected the tenants argument that there was a factual dispute concerning this issue and granted Defendants motion for summary judgment on the counterclaim and defense based on estoppel and breach of covenant.

Defendant Fasi cannot invoke issue preclusion to preclude Tenants from relitigating their state RICO claims or their claims that their covenant of quiet enjoyment [59] was breached because these claims were dismissed without prejudice by the state court. Therefore, these claims were neither actually litigated nor decided in the summary possession actions. Likewise, Plaintiffs are not precluded from litigating their federal RICO claim against Defendant Fasi because this claim was not raised in the summary possession actions. Unlike claim preclusion, issue preclusion does not preclude litigation of all claims which could have been brought in the prior action. Rather, it only precludes relitigation of issues which were actually decided by the prior court.

In conclusion, the Court GRANTS motion 3 to the effect that Plaintiffs' state court action bars all of Plaintiffs' claims against Y.Y. Valley Corporation, Han Kuk Chun, Tetsuo Yasuda, Masanori Kobayashi, Yoshinori Hayashida, Hiroshi Kobayashi, Eugene Lum and Norma Lum.

The Court GRANTS in part motions 1, 3 and 4 against all Plaintiffs except Raphael Kamai, Lynda Augustus, Alfredo Aurio, Benita Aurio and Milnor Lum. All Plaintiffs except the aforementioned are precluded by the state court summary possession actions from relitigating the following issues:

- a. that Plaintiffs have no right [60] to renewable leases on the property under an option contract;
- b. that YYVC's relocation plan did not violate the CUP;
- c. that YYVC's relocation plan did not violate a negative covenant contained in the deed to the property.
- d. that Tenants Nicanor Amit, Cristita Bolo, Wilfredo Bolo, Josefina Bolo, Alejandro Coloyan, Ofelia Coloyan, Isidro Dilay, Margaret Dilay, Lorraine Dilay, Violeta Dumadag, Estrella Igarta, Sebastian Igarta, Jennie Olinger, Francisco Pedrina, Adoracion Pedrina, William Sullivan, and Jocelyn Sullivan did not have a claim to the property under adverse possession.

III. IMMUNITY

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant Fasi committed bribery, aided and abetted in the commission of mail fraud, and conspired to aid and abet the commission of mail fraud. According to Plaintiffs, Defendant Fasi provided favorable treatment to YYVC as a result of bribes in the form of illegal political contributions. This favorable treatment included issuing the CUP, refraining from disclosing to Plaintiffs their rights or requiring YYVC to disclose Plaintiffs' rights as well as refusing to enforce or revoke the CUP after the developers violated the conditions [61] of the CUP and other laws. Plaintiffs further claim that Defendant Fasi implicitly authorized the eviction of Plaintiffs, which resulted in the deprivation of their property interests, by failing to enforce the CUP and other laws violated by the developers.

In motion 5, Defendant Fasi moves for summary judgment on all claims against him on the grounds that as mayor he enjoyed absolute and/or qualified immunity from civil liability.¹³

[62] A. ABSOLUTE IMMUNITY

The Supreme Court has been quite sparing in its recognition of absolute immunity. E.g., Burns v. Reed, 500 U.S. 478, 487, [*1411] 114 L. Ed. 2d 547, 111 S. Ct. 1934 (1991); Hafer v. Melo, 502 U.S. 21, 112 S. Ct. 358, 363, 116 L. Ed. 2d 301 (1991) (Auditor General not entitled to absolute immunity for administrative employment decisions); Antoine v. Byers & Anderson, Inc., 508 U.S. 429, 124 L. Ed. 2d 391, 113 S. Ct. 2167, 2169 n.4 (1993) (court reporters not entitled to absolute immunity). HN30 The presumption is that qualified rather than absolute immunity is sufficient to protect government officials in the exercise of their duties. Burns, 500 U.S. at 486. Officials seeking absolute immunity bear the burden of showing that such immunity is justified. Id.

¹³ Fasi's claim of absolute and/or qualified immunity is in fact an argument in the alternative. His primary contention is that he "did not have the authority, duty or responsibility to enforce the applicant's compliance with the Conditional Use Permit ("CUP")." See Fasi's Memorandum In Support Of Motion 5 at 2. He states that approval of the CUP, enforcement of the CUP conditions, and other matters associated with the CUP (including appellate review) did not involve his vote, opinion, judgment, exercise of discretion, or other action as a public servant. Id. Instead, Fasi alleges, "the person who had the authority, duty, and responsibility to enforce compliance with the CUP was the Director of the DLU, not Fasi." Id.

HN31 [↑] Whether absolute immunity is available to an official does not depend on the official's job title or agency. Bothke v. Fluor Engineers and Constructors, Inc., 713 F.2d 1405, 1412 (1983); Cinevision Corp. v. City of Burbank, 745 F.2d 560, 579 (9th Cir. 1984). The focus is on the function that the official was performing when taking the actions that provoked the law suit. Id.; Hafer, 112 S. Ct. at 364. Officials performing legislative acts which involve the formulation [63] of policy and apply to the community at large are afforded absolute immunity. Kuzinich v. County of Santa Clara, 689 F.2d 1345, 1349 (9th Cir. 1982) (legislators who voted to enact a general zoning ordinance were entitled to absolute immunity). Those performing administrative or executive functions involving ad hoc decision making directed at one or a few individuals are not. Trevino v. Gates, 23 F.3d 1480, 1481 (9th Cir. 1994) (city council members who voted to pay police officers' punitive damages were not entitled to absolute immunity); Cinevision, 745 F.2d at 580 (council member voting to disapprove concerts was not entitled to absolute immunity); Bateson v. Geisse, 857 F.2d 1300, 1304 (9th Cir. 1988) (city council members' who denied building permit were not entitled to absolute immunity); Zamsky v. Hansell, 933 F.2d 677, 679 (9th Cir. 1991) (commission members who ruled on whether the county's proposed land use plan complied with existing regulations were not entitled to absolute immunity).

HN32 [↑] Absolute immunity is only available when the official's conduct is within the scope of his or her official duties and when the conduct is discretionary in nature. Westfall [64] v. Erwin, 484 U.S. 292, 297-98, 98 L. Ed. 2d 619, 108 S. Ct. 580 (1988). However, if an official is entitled to absolute immunity, legitimacy or illegitimacy of the official's motive is irrelevant. E.g., Thillens, Inc. v. Community Currency Exchange Association of Illinois, Inc., 729 F.2d 1128, 1131 (7th Cir. 1984); Callaway v. Hafeman, 628 F. Supp. 1478, 1487 (W.D. Wis. 1986).

Defendant Fasi is not entitled to absolute immunity. To the extent he acted beyond the sphere of his legitimate activity, he cannot invoke the doctrine to shield him from liability. If, on the other hand, he acted within his sphere of legitimate activity, the nature of the activities do not justify granting him absolute immunity. Plaintiffs' allegations pertain to the Department of Land Utilization's grant of a CUP to YYVC, non-enforcement of the CUP's conditions and refusal to revoke the CUP for noncompliance. Clearly enforcement or nonenforcement of the CUP involves an executive function. Likewise, the Court finds that the grant of the CUP was an administrative or executive, rather than legislative function. The grant of the permit was an ad hoc decision, aimed at permitting an individual party, YYVC, to utilize land in a particular [65] manner. Although the CUP clearly impacted the tenant farmers living on the land, it did not create rules which are applicable to the tenant farmers or the community at large.

Fasi's reliance on Thillens, Inc. v. Community Currency Exchange Association of Illinois, Inc., 729 F.2d 1128 (7th Cir. 1984), is misplaced. In Thillens, government officials, acting within the sphere of legitimate legislative activity, attempted to use their positions to influence regulation of currency exchanges. Fasi's alleged involvement, in contrast, was executive or administrative. Accordingly, Fasi is not absolutely immune from suit for his alleged conduct.

[*1412] A. QUALIFIED IMMUNITY

HN33 [↑] Government officials performing discretionary functions within the scope of their authority are protected from liability for civil damages unless the law clearly proscribes the actions they took. E.g., Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 102 S. Ct. 2727, 2738, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1982); Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 107 S. Ct. 3034, 3039, 97 L. Ed. 2d 523 (1987). HN34 [↑] Whether an official is immune "turns on the objective reasonableness of their conduct in light of clearly established law, not on their subjective good faith." Bateson, 857 F.2d at 1304. [66] An official who acts in good faith will only be held liable where the unlawfulness of the official's actions would have been apparent to a reasonable official in light of preexisting law. Anderson, 107 S. Ct. at 3039; Cinevision, 745 F.2d at 580. Qualified immunity "provides ample protection to all but the plainly incompetent or those who knowingly violate the law." Malley v. Briggs, 475 U.S. 335, 106 S. Ct. 1092, 1096, 89 L. Ed. 2d 271 (1986).

HN35 [↑] In order to avoid a claim of qualified immunity, the plaintiff must prove that the law clearly established that the official's actions were unlawful at the time of the alleged misconduct. Romero v. Kitsap County, 931 F.2d 624, 627 (9th Cir. 1991); Han v. Department of Justice, 824 F. Supp. 1480, 1491 (D. Hawaii 1993). HN36 [↑] To defeat summary judgment based on qualified immunity, the plaintiff "must produce evidence that would allow a fact-finder to find that no reasonable person in the defendant's position could have thought the facts were such that they justified defendant's acts." Post v. City of Fort Lauderdale, 7 F.3d 1552, 1557 (11th Cir. 1993).

Defendant Fasi argues that he is entitled to qualified immunity because "Plaintiffs cannot prove that, [67] at the time that Fasi allegedly acted or failed to act, the law 'clearly established' that: (1) the developer failed to comply with Condition No. 1 of the CUP or the Deed; (2) Fasi had a duty to require the developer to comply with the condition and the Deed; and (3) Fasi breached his duty which, to any reasonable official, would have been clearly apparent." This argument ignores Plaintiffs' main contention -- that Fasi accepted illegal bribes and granted the developers favorable treatment in return for the bribes. If Plaintiffs' allegations are true, Defendant Fasi cannot invoke the doctrine of qualified immunity to shield him from liability for these actions. The illegality of accepting bribes in exchange for favors would have been apparent to a reasonable official in Defendant Fasi's position. If, on the other hand, Plaintiffs do not prove that Defendant Fasi engaged in the alleged conduct, he will not need immunity to protect him from liability.

In conclusion, the Court DENIES motion 5. To the extent that Defendant Fasi acted beyond the sphere of his legitimate activity, neither absolute nor qualified immunity will shield him from liability. To the extent that he acted within [68] the scope of his authority, the administrative or executive nature of his activities do not justify granting him absolute immunity. Moreover, because the granting of favors in exchange for bribes is not "objectively reasonable in light of clearly established law," Defendant Fasi is not entitled to qualified immunity for these alleged actions.

IV. FEDERAL CAMPAIGN SPENDING ACT

As part of their bribery claims Plaintiffs allege in paragraph 116 of their Complaint that:

Defendant Mayor Frank F. Fasi illegally permitted foreign money to influence, interfere and effect the election in violation of the Federal Campaign Spending Act.

In paragraph 122 Plaintiffs allege:

All bribes made to the Mayor and offered to the City were known by the Mayor to be illegal and in violation of the Federal Campaign Spending Act and were none the less accepted and used by the Mayor in his re-election campaign.

In motion 6, Defendant Fasi urges the Court to strike these allegations based on two grounds. First, Fasi argues that Plaintiffs do not have standing to assert or bring such claims before this Court and that the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction [69] to adjudicate these claims because they involve [*1413] alleged violations of the Federal Election Campaign Act ("FECA"). Second, Fasi argues that these allegations are in violation of this Court's Order filed April 19, 1990.

Plaintiffs contend that Defendant Fasi's standing argument is irrelevant because they are not seeking enforcement of federal election laws or a review of the findings of the Federal Election Commission ("FEC"). Rather, they are alleging violations of the FECA, already adjudicated by the FEC,¹⁴ in support of their bribery claims.

[70] Although Defendant is correct in his assertion that Plaintiffs lack standing to enforce violations of the FECA, the Court agrees with Plaintiffs that standing is not an issue. Plaintiffs are not asking this Court to enforce the FECA. Rather, Plaintiffs simply allege as evidence the fact that the FEC entered Conciliation Agreements with YYVC, RHCC and the Yasuda's finding that contributions were made to Fasi and other officials in violation of the FECA. Plaintiffs do not need standing to assert these facts.

¹⁴ Plaintiffs have submitted Conciliation Agreements demonstrating that the FEC found "reason to believe" that Royal Hawaiian Country Club, YYVC, Tetsuo Yasuda (a.k.a. Han Soo Chun) and Yasuo Yasuda (a.k.a. Han Kuk Chun) violated 2 U.S.C. § 441e, prohibiting foreign nationals from contributing to candidates for political office. The parties participated in informal conciliation prior to a finding of probable cause and agreed to findings that the statute was violated. RHCC, YYVC and the Yasuda's were assessed civil penalties for these violations.

The Court finds that the allegation contained in paragraph 122 does not violate its Order filed April 19, 1990. In that Order, the Court struck Plaintiffs' allegations concerning the claims before the FEC because Plaintiffs failed to demonstrate how the claims were related to their RICO claims. In the Fourth Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs contend that the contributions to Defendant Fasi and other public officials were bribes which serve as predicate acts under RICO. That the contributions were illegal and Defendant Fasi allegedly knew of their illegality is relevant because this fact makes it more likely that the contributions were bribes. Paragraph 116, on the other hand, alleges [71] that Fasi allowed the illegal contributions to interfere and effect the election. This claim is not relevant to Plaintiffs' RICO action. Therefore, the Court strikes Paragraph 116.

V. RACKETEERING INFLUENCED & CORRUPT ORGANIZATIONS ACT ("RICO")

HN37[] RICO prohibits "any person" from using money derived from a pattern of racketeering activity to invest in an enterprise, to acquire control of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity, or to conduct an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962\(a\)-\(c\). Section 1962\(d\) prohibits any person from conspiring to violate any of the provisions of 18 U.S.C. 1962\(a\), \(b\) or \(c\).

HN38[] The purpose of the RICO statute is to allow a single prosecution of persons who engage in a series of criminal acts for an enterprise. United States v. Brooklier, 685 F.2d 1208, 1222 \(9th Cir. 1982\). It applies even where different defendants perform different tasks or participate in separate acts of racketeering. Id. If a defendant is found to have violated RICO, he will be liable for all harm caused by the enterprise, regardless of whether he committed or endorsed the specific acts of racketeering which [72] led to the injury. See id.

A. PRIVATE REMEDIES UNDER RICO: 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\)

HN39[] RICO authorizes a private civil action by "any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962." 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\). Private litigants have standing under RICO only to the extent that they have been injured in their business or property by the conduct constituting the RICO violation. Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Company, 473 U.S. 479, 495-96, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 \(1985\). This injury must consist of a concrete financial loss, and not mere injury to a valuable, but intangible, property interest. Oscar v. University Students Co-op Ass'n, 965 F.2d 783, 785, 787 \(9th Cir. 1992\) (diminution in enjoyment of leasehold interest does not constitute a loss of a tangible property interest to tenant); [Steele v. Hospital \[*1414\] Corporation of America, 36 F.3d 69 \(9th Cir. 1994\)](#)(depletion of insurance funds by excess medical payments does not constitute a financial loss to patients). Likewise, speculative injuries do not confer standing under RICO, unless they become concrete and actual. Steele, 36 F.3d at 71 (claim that father of patient "could have used some of those [insurance] [73] benefits for myself" was insufficient where father did not specify an instance where he had to pay a claim out of his own funds because the funds had been exhausted); Oscar, 965 F.2d at 787 (claim that plaintiff suffered losses in the reduced rent she could charge to sublet her apartment was insufficient where plaintiff did not allege that she had a right to sublet her apartment nor that she ever sublet the apartment or attempted to sublet the apartment); Imagineering, Inc. v. Kiewit Pacific Co., 976 F.2d 1303, 1311 \(9th Cir. 1992\)(claim that plaintiff suffered loss of profits was insufficient where it was impossible to determine whether plaintiffs were alleging lost opportunity to realize profits or loss of specific identifiable profits).

HN40[] The compensable injury of a private litigant is the harm caused by the predicate acts. Sedima, 473 U.S. at 497. To recover, private litigants must not only show that their harm was actually caused by defendants' acts, they must also establish proximate causation. Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corporation, 503 U.S. 258, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 1318, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 \(1992\). To establish proximate cause under RICO, plaintiffs must show that their injury flows [74] directly from the defendants' commission of the predicate acts. Id. It is not sufficient that the injury was foreseeable; there must be a direct relationship between the injury and the prohibited conduct. Imagineering, 976 F.2d at 1311.

Defendants challenge both the substance of Plaintiffs' alleged injuries as well the causal link between those injuries and Defendants' alleged racketeering activities. In Motion 7, all Defendants join in arguing that Plaintiffs cannot establish that Defendants injured any rights which Plaintiffs may have had under the CUP, the negative covenant in the deed or adverse possession. In motion 8, all Defendants except Fasi contend that Plaintiffs' claim to 10 year leases based on an oral option contract must fail because Plaintiffs cannot overcome the statute of frauds. In motion 18, Defendant Fasi, joined by the remaining Defendants, asserts that Plaintiffs cannot prove that Defendant Fasi's conduct was the proximate cause of Plaintiffs' injuries or that Plaintiffs suffered any concrete financial loss. Although the focus of Defendant Fasi's motion is on the conduct of Fasi, the Court notes that under RICO, the inquiry must include the harm caused [75] by all of the predicate acts, regardless of which Defendants actually committed, or agreed to commit, the alleged acts.

1. Entitlement to remove crops and improvements under a Negative Covenant in the deed

Plaintiffs claim Defendants' injured their interests as beneficiaries of a deed which provided that occupants of YYVC's property would be entitled to remove improvements, including crops and trees, upon vacating the land. The negative covenant in the deed provides as follows:

Notwithstanding the language of any lease to the contrary, all tenants and others occupying the Property, except the Hedemanns and Kakalias, shall be entitled, when they vacate the Property, to remove any improvements, including crops and trees, which they or their predecessors-in-interest have made to or placed on the Property. The Grantors shall have no obligation, liability or responsibility to the Grantee for the presence of such tenants . . .

According to Plaintiffs, YYVC violated this covenant by: (1) failing to inform them of their rights pursuant to this deed; (2) bulldozing and destroying their homes, crops, fish ponds and other improvements; and (3) preventing them [76] from attending to their crops.

Defendants do not dispute Plaintiffs' claim that the deed entitled them to remove crops and improvements from the land. Rather, Defendants argue that YYVC's relocation offer fulfilled the requirements of the deed by providing Plaintiffs with an opportunity to [*1415] remove any improvements, including crops, to the new site as follows:

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary elsewhere contained in this Agreement, Eligible Occupant has executed this Agreement upon the following express understandings and conditions:

(a) That if Eligible Occupant is the owner and/or occupant of any dwelling structure, or other improvements, including crops (herein collectively "Improvements"), situated within and upon the Project Site, the title thereto or ownership thereof will not be claimed by Owner or Permittee, excepting as expressly provided in subparagraphs (c)(i) and (ii) hereafter;

(b) That Eligible Occupant may remove said Improvements within a period commencing with the date hereof to and including the shortest of:

(i) that date which is one hundred twenty (120) days from the date hereof; or

(ii) if such Improvements are situated [77] within the area covered by the Makilii Lease (as defined in said Satisfaction Agreement), the date of execution by Owner of said Makilii Lease; or

(iii) if such Improvements are situated within the area covered by the Maunawili Lease (as defined in said Satisfaction Agreement), the date of execution by Owner of said Maunawili Lease.

(c) That if Eligible Occupant shall fail or refuse to timely remove said Improvements within the period next above described, and Eligible Occupant recognizing that time is of the essence in Owner's development and use of the lands, including Owner's obligation to execute said Makilii Lease and Maunawili Lease as set forth in said Satisfaction Agreement, said Improvements will be conclusively deemed to have been abandoned by Eligible Occupant and/or shall be deemed to have been included in the quitclaim made by Eligible Occupant as set forth in paragraph 1 of this Agreement.

Plaintiffs contend that many of them were unaware of the relocation plan and thus had no notice of their right to remove crops and improvements. This argument ignores the deep-rooted maxim of constructive notice. Both the deed and the CUP were of public record, [78] providing Plaintiffs notice of their rights. The Court finds it highly unlikely that Plaintiffs were not aware of the relocation plan. All Plaintiffs claim to have been aware of the CUP proceedings, indicating that they either testified at, or stayed away from, the hearings at the request of the developers. Because Plaintiffs had a stake in the outcome of the hearings, it is unfathomable that they did not keep abreast of the CUP proceedings and developments. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs either knew, or had constructive notice of, their right to remove crops and improvements.

The right to remove crops and improvements under the deed applied only to tenants occupying the land at the time it was transferred. Moreover, it only granted tenants the right to remove items when they vacated the premises. Those tenants who vacated the property without removing crops or improvements abandoned any interest they had under the deed. Likewise, the deed does not afford any protection to Plaintiffs who failed to tend their crops or repair their homes because of the impending evictions. To the extent that any of Plaintiffs' improvements or crops were destroyed while they still occupied [79] the premises, such injuries are protected by the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, not the negative covenant in the deed.

Plaintiffs were all warned of YYVC's intent to remove them from the property in either late 1985 or early 1986. In 1987, Plaintiffs were again informed of YYVC's intent to seek eviction. Plaintiffs were not actually evicted, however, until 1991-92, sometime after the summary possession actions were decided. Plaintiffs thus had some five years or more in which to remove their crops and improvements from the land. For the above reasons, the Court finds that Defendants did not injure Plaintiffs' interest in removing crops and improvements under the negative covenant in the deed.

2. Right to relocation under the Conditional Use Permit

Plaintiffs claim that Defendants' injured their interests as third party beneficiaries [*1416] under the Conditional Use Permit ("CUP") which permitted the development of a private golf course and country club on YYVC's property. According to Plaintiffs, the CUP required the owners of the golf course project to grant them "unconditional" relocation with ten year leases in exchange for the owners being permitted to use the land [80] for a conditional use. Plaintiffs claim that Defendants deprived them of their right to the 10-year leases by serving them with summary possession actions and subsequent notices to vacate the property after they refused to accept YYVC's proposed relocation plan.

The parties agree that the relevant provisions of the CUP provide that:

The applicant proposes to give tenants the option to relocate to a 50-acre portion of the project site adjacent to the residential fringe and obtain a 10-year permit to use the land for agricultural purposes.

Agricultural tenants presently located within the project site shall be offered an opportunity to relocate to an adjacent area indicated for agricultural use in the Exhibit Map.

Defendants do not dispute that these provisions grant Plaintiffs the right to an opportunity to relocate on the property. Rather, Defendants contend that their relocation plan, which was approved by the City of Honolulu, complied with the CUP's conditions.¹⁵

[81] Plaintiffs contend that the Court should not consider the DLU's acceptance of the relocation plan as evidence that the plan complied with the CUP. According to Plaintiffs' Defendant Fasi and other city officials refused to enforce the conditions of the CUP in return for alleged bribes from the developers. Assuming, without so finding, that Plaintiffs' bribery allegations are true, the Court agrees that the DLU's approval of the relocation plan should not be considered in support of Defendants' motion. However, the Court has reviewed the other evidence before it and has made an independent determination that YYVC's relocation plan complied with the CUP. It is undisputed that the relocation plan met the explicit requirements of the CUP: the plan provided tenants an opportunity to relocate to an area of the proper size and that the tenants were to be granted 10 year leases. Moreover, the Court notes that since most of the tenants accepted the relocation, it would appear that the plan was objectively acceptable.

¹⁵ The Court rejects Defendants' argument that there has been a "final, adjudicated finding that the City acted properly and within its discretion in accepting the CUP in this case." Defendants are referring to the companion case of Aurio v. Fasi, Civil No. 90-00526, in which Plaintiffs brought an action against the City of Honolulu for inverse condemnation. The Court dismissed that action as not ripe for federal review because Plaintiffs had not yet pursued all available state remedies. In an order denying Plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration of this dismissal, the Court noted that "Plaintiffs charge the City with unlawfully approving the relocation plan under the Conditional Use Permit ("CUP") in this case and the related RICO action of Pedrina v. Chun, 906 F. Supp. 1377, Civ. 89-00439 ACK. Yet, all evidence before this Court shows that the City acted within their discretion and for a public purpose." This dicta by the Court on motion for reconsideration of a dismissal without prejudice does not adequately demonstrate that the issue was "actually litigated" for purposes of issue preclusion.

Plaintiffs' main objection to the plan is based upon the following release provision:

Eligible Occupant hereby releases and forever discharges Owner . . . from any [82] and all actions, causes of action, suits at law or in equity, liabilities, claims, demands or damages of whatsoever kind or nature . . . which Eligible Occupant has or may have in respect of any claim to or interest in the land (including crops and improvements, excepting as hereinafter provided) comprising the Project Site or the right to control or use said land . . .

The agreement further provided that the eligible occupants reserved the right to remove improvements as well as to retain claims and causes of action currently pending in this Court and the state courts except for "claims respecting any interest in the land comprising the Project Site." Thus, although the agreement protected Plaintiffs right to improvements and maintain pending actions in most respects, had Plaintiffs signed the agreement they would have waived any right of adverse possession to the portion of the property which formed the project site.

[*1417] The Court finds that the CUP does not require Defendants to provide Plaintiffs with "unconditional" relocation. The Court finds that it was reasonable for Defendants to condition the grant of 10 year leases on Plaintiffs' waiver of possible claims to the [83] property comprising the project site. As discussed below, the Court finds Plaintiffs' claims of adverse possession to be insubstantial and tenuous at best. See infra, p. 62-63. Moreover, in light of the numerous claims Plaintiffs have already filed against Defendants, the Court finds it was reasonable for Defendants to seek to protect themselves from further litigation once the tenants were relocated in accordance with the CUP.

Plaintiffs' concern that Defendants may claim title to their houses once they were relocated under the plan is unfounded; the plan clearly provides that Defendants relinquish any such claims. In particular, the relocation agreement provides that "the title thereto or ownership thereof (of improvements) will not be claimed by Owner or Permittee, excepting as expressly provided in subparagraphs (c)(i) and (ii)." Subparagraphs (c)(i) and (ii) provide that YYVC may claim title to improvements only where the tenants abandon them. Accordingly, if Plaintiffs had removed their improvements to a new location, they would have maintained title to the improvements.

For the above stated reasons, the Court finds that the relocation plan offered to Plaintiffs complied [84] with the CUP. The Court also finds that Plaintiffs' alleged loss of 10 year leases under the CUP was not caused by Defendants. Plaintiffs refused Defendants' offer of relocation, thereby voluntarily relinquishing their rights under the CUP. Thus, Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that Defendants' actions were either the actual or proximate cause of the alleged injuries to their interests under the CUP.

3. Rights under Adverse Possession

Defendants contend that "adverse possession has been eliminated as any basis for a legitimate property interest by court order in this case." On December 18, 1990, the Court dismissed Plaintiffs' state law claims of adverse possession. Although the Court had granted Plaintiffs four opportunities to amend their complaint, Plaintiffs' claims of adverse possession were still conclusory and provided no basis for determining the merit of the claims or what land had been possessed. The Court noted at that time that even if the adverse possession claim had been adequately pled, the Court would have dismissed the claim on abstention grounds because of the ongoing state court proceedings. The Court also indicated that it would have declined [85] to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the adverse possession claim.

The Court's dismissal of Plaintiffs' quiet title action, however, does not necessarily eliminate Plaintiffs' claim that they had an interest in the property based on adverse possession for purposes of establishing standing under RICO. For example, had Plaintiffs established their adverse possession claims in a state court quiet title action, they could have argued before this Court that Defendants' eviction of them from the premises harmed their established interest in the property. In actuality, however, Plaintiffs have never filed a quiet title action. They also failed to establish their adverse possession claims in the summary possession actions before the state court. See supra, p. 36-37. Milnor Lum is the only Plaintiff asserting an injury based on adverse possession who has appealed the state court's decision. Therefore, all other Plaintiffs are estopped from claiming that they have an interest in the property based on adverse possession.

Even if Plaintiffs were not estopped from arguing that they have a property interest under adverse possession, these claims must fail as too speculative and intangible [86] to confer standing under RICO. As discussed above, Plaintiffs do not have an established right in the property pursuant to adverse possession. Moreover, Plaintiffs' allegations regarding these claims are conclusory and give no basis for determining the extent of the land Plaintiffs' allegedly possessed or the merits of the claims.

[*1418] 4. Right to 10 year leases under an option contract

Plaintiffs claim that Defendants injured their rights to lease the property pursuant to an oral option contract wherein Defendants offered to allow the tenants to remain on the property if they did not testify against Defendants at the CUP hearing. Defendants also allegedly promised the Wongs that they would be able to remain on the property if Leonard Wong read testimony in favor of the golf course development at the CUP hearing. Defendants contend that this theory lacks merit because Plaintiffs cannot overcome the statute of frauds. In response, Plaintiffs' argue that the contract is removed from the statute because they performed their part of the agreement by abstaining from attending the CUP hearing and opposing the golf course. Plaintiff Wong alleges he performed his part of the agreement [87] by reading testimony prepared by Defendants at the hearing.

In Hawaii, HN41 a lease for real property which extends beyond one year must be (1) in writing and (2) signed by the party to be charged. See H.R.S. § 656-1; Yee Hop v. Young Sak Cho, 25 Haw. 494, 499 \(1920\). However, HN42 an oral contract with respect to an interest in land may become enforceable, in spite of the statute of frauds, where there has been part performance. Perreira v. Perreira, 50 Haw. 641, 642, 447 P.2d 667 \(1968\). The Supreme Court of Hawaii has set forth three factors for determining whether acts constituting part performance are sufficient to free a promise from the statute of fraud requirements:

- (1) the acts must be pursuant to the contract;
- (2) the acts must be undertaken with the knowledge and consent of the other party; and
- (3) the acts must be such that to allow the other party to repudiate would be a fraud upon the plaintiff.

Id. at 643. Moreover, HN43 although forbearance to exercise a right is good consideration for a promise, mere proof of forbearance is not sufficient evidence of part performance to remove a verbal agreement from the operation of the statute of fraud. [Shannon \[*881\] v. Waterhouse, 58 Haw. 4, 7, 563 P.2d 391 \(1977\)](#). A party relying upon forbearance must demonstrate that the forbearance was primarily and substantially motivated by the oral agreement. Id.

The policy behind enforcing oral agreements which violate the statute of frauds is to prevent fraud that would result from refusal to enforce oral contracts in certain circumstances. McIntosh v. Murphy, 52 Haw. 29, 35, 469 P.2d 177 \(1970\). "Such fraud may inhere in the unconscionable injury that would result from denying enforcement of the contract after one party has been induced by the other seriously to change his position in reliance on the contract." Id. (citing Monarco v. Lo Greco, 35 Cal. 2d 621, 623, 220 P.2d 737 \(1950\)). HN44 "In determining whether injustice can be avoided only by the enforcement of the promise, the following circumstances are significant: (a) the availability and adequacy of other remedies, particularly cancellation and restitution; (b) the definite and substantial character of the action or forbearance in relation to the remedy sought; (c) the extent to which the action or forbearance corroborates evidence of the making and terms of the promise, or the making and terms are otherwise established [89] by clear and convincing evidence; (d) the reasonableness of the action or forbearance; (e) the extent to which the action or forbearance was foreseeable by the promisor." Id. (citing Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 217A (Supp. Tentative Draft No. 4, 1969)).

The Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to present clear and convincing evidence of the existence and terms of the alleged oral contract. Boteilho v. Boteilho, 58 Haw. 40, 42, 564 P.2d 144 \(1976\) (party seeking to establish a parol contract must prove its existence and its terms by clear and convincing evidence); See also Honolulu Waterfront Limited Partnership v. Aloha Tower Development Corporation, 692 F. Supp. 1230, 1234 \(D. Haw. 1988\), aff'd, 891 F.2d 295 (9th Cir. 1989) (real estate development agreement was too indefinite to be enforceable where the rent term of the provision was left for future negotiations); Clarkin v. Reimann, 2 Haw. App. 618, 638 P.2d 857 \(1981\);

Lahaina-Maui [*1419] Corp. v. Tau Tet Hew, 362 F.2d 419 (9th Cir. 1966); In re Sing Chong Co., Ltd., 1 Haw. App. 236, 617 P.2d 578 (1980); Francone v. McClay, 41 Haw. 72 (1955). Neither Plaintiffs' failure to attend the hearings, nor Wong's testimony at the hearings, sufficiently [*90] corroborate the making and terms of the promise to remove the alleged oral agreements from the statute of frauds. Nor is the making or terms of the agreement supported by other evidence of a clear and convincing nature. Plaintiffs' allegations concerning the terms of the alleged contract are sketchy and inconsistent. Various Plaintiffs contend that in exchange for not testifying, they were promised leases of 10 years, 20 years, 55 years, "long term" or "forever."

In any event, as Plaintiffs contend, any oral contract between Plaintiffs and Defendants was evidenced by and merged into the CUP. Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendants Motion 8, p.6-7. As discussed above, the Court finds that Plaintiffs voluntarily waived their rights under the CUP by declining Defendants' offer of relocation. See supra, p. 59-63. Accordingly, any loss of Plaintiffs' right to leases under the alleged option contract was not caused by Defendants.

5. Rights under the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment

Plaintiffs claim that Defendants injured their right to quiet enjoyment by destroying their crops and homes and preventing them from tending their crops and maintaining their homes. In so far [*91] as Defendants destroyed or threatened to destroy Plaintiffs' crops or homes while they were living on the property, such injury supports Plaintiffs' RICO action. However, Plaintiffs' allegations that they failed to plant or tend crops and repair their homes because they lived under a constant fear of eviction are without merit. Eviction notices and summary possession actions do not support a claim of interference with quiet enjoyment; these procedures are the legal means by which a landlord may properly remove holdover tenants from his property. Because Defendants had a right to remove Plaintiffs from the property and to inform them that they intended to do so, Plaintiffs' fear of eviction was not a result of any illegal actions. Accordingly, Plaintiffs cannot establish a causal link between any injury allegedly resulting from such fear and Defendants' alleged racketeering activity.

6. Injury to the Wongs' personal property

The Wongs allege that they were robbed and that their bull was shot. Clearly this alleged injury was directly caused by the alleged predicate acts of robbery and extortion and therefore supports the Wongs' RICO action.

In conclusion, the Court GRANTS [*92] motions 7 and 8 and GRANTS in part motion 18. Plaintiffs failed to establish a genuine issue of fact whether Defendants' alleged racketeering activities caused them to suffer injury to any interest Plaintiffs had under the CUP, deed or option contract. Accordingly, these alleged injuries do not support Plaintiffs' RICO action. Plaintiffs' claims of injury to possible interests based on a theory of adverse possession also fail to support their RICO action. Plaintiffs have raised a genuine issue of fact whether Defendants' racketeering activities caused injury to Plaintiffs' rights under the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. Likewise, the alleged injuries to the Wongs' property and bull support their RICO action.

B. 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c)

HN45 [↑] Section 1962(c) of RICO makes it unlawful for:

. . . any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity . . .

HN46 [↑]

Liability under § 1962(c) requires: (1) conduct, (2) of an enterprise, (3) through a [*93] pattern, (4) of racketeering activity. Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496.

[*1420] 1. Conduct of an Enterprise

In motion 15, Defendant Fasi contends that he cannot be held liable under 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) because he did not participate in the operation or management of Royal Hawaiian Country Club ("RHCC"), the enterprise. Although Defendants Masanori Kobayashi and Yoshinori Hayashida joined in this motion, they did not brief the issue of their own participation in the affairs of RHCC. Therefore, the Court will only consider this motion with respect to Defendant Fasi.

The Supreme Court recently held that HN47 only persons participating in the operation or management of the enterprise itself may be held liable under 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\). Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 113 S. Ct. 1163, 1173, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525 (1993). The Reeves Court examined the plain language of RICO and concluded that the words "in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs" require some degree of direction and the words "to conduct or participate" require that a Defendant take some active part in that direction. Id. at 1170. HN48 In order to "conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs," a [\[94\]](#) person must have a part in directing the operation or management of those affairs. Id.

This "operation and management" test does not require that a person have primary responsibility for the enterprise's affairs or hold a formal position in the enterprise. Reeves, 113 S. Ct. at 1170, 1173. HN49 "An enterprise is 'operated' not just by upper management but also by lower-rung participants in the enterprise who are under the direction of upper management." Id. at 1173. "An enterprise might also be 'operated' or 'managed' by others 'associated with' the enterprise who exert control over it as, for example, by bribery." Id. Thus, regardless of whether a person is "outside" or "inside" the enterprise, he may be liable under § 1962\(c\) if he participated in the operation or management of the enterprise itself. Id. The courts have applied this standard narrowly, however, finding that outside accountants and attorneys have not participated sufficiently in the operation or management of the enterprise to be held liable under 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\). Id. (independent accounting firm which reviewed enterprise's records and advised enterprise was not liable under RICO); Baumer [\[*951\]](#) v. Pachl, 8 F.3d 1341, 1344 (9th Cir. 1993) (attorney who assisted limited partnership's fraudulent scheme by preparing letters, preparing the partnership agreement, and assisting in bankruptcy proceeding was not liable under RICO).

Plaintiffs in this action name RHCC as the enterprise. Plaintiffs contend that Defendant Fasi participated in the operation or management of RHCC by aiding RHCC in obtaining the CUP and thus enabling development of the country club. The Court does not agree that Fasi's alleged participation in granting the CUP satisfies the Reeves operation and management test. Clearly the attorney who drafted the partnership agreement in Baumer, was partially responsible for the partnership's existence; yet, the court found that he lacked sufficient control or direction to be liable under RICO. See Baumer, 8 F.3d at 1344.

Plaintiffs also suggest that the alleged bribery of Fasi satisfies the Reeves test. This is not, however, the classic situation where a defendant uses bribes to control an enterprise. Rather, in the case at bar, RHCC was allegedly using bribes to control the actions of outsiders. Plaintiffs have not submitted evidence suggesting [\[96\]](#) that Fasi himself attempted to exert control over RHCC, or to direct the operations of the corporation. Likewise, Plaintiffs do not suggest that Fasi or any other city official attempted to direct the terms of the relocation plan or to control implementation of the plan. Indeed, Plaintiffs contend that Fasi failed to assert direction and control over the enterprise by refusing to enforce the terms and conditions of the CUP. Accordingly, the Court finds that Defendant Fasi cannot be held liable under 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) because he did not participate in the operation or management of RHCC. The Court thus GRANTS motion 15.

2. Racketeering Activity

HN50 "Racketeering Activity" is defined in 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(1\) as:

[\[*1421\]](#) (A) any act or threat involving murder, kidnaping, gambling, arson, robbery, bribery, extortion, or dealing in narcotic or other dangerous drugs, which is chargeable under State law and punishable by imprisonment for more than one year;

906 F. Supp. 1377, *1421 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16334, 96

(B) any act which is indictable under any of the following provisions of title 18, United States Code: . . . including [section 1341, relating to mail fraud, and other enumerated federal statutes, covering some 30-40 [97] types of crimes].

See also Sun Savings and Loan Ass'n v. Dierdorff, 825 F.2d 187, 191 (9th Cir. 1987); First Pacific Bancorp, Inc. v. Bro., 847 F.2d 542, 546 (9th Cir. 1988).

a. Bribery

In motion 9 Defendant Fasi urges the Court to grant summary judgment in his favor with respect to Plaintiffs' claims based upon the alleged racketeering activity of bribery. In motion 10, Defendants Masanori Kobayashi and Yoshinori Hayashida likewise request summary judgment with respect to Plaintiffs' claims based upon bribery. Defendants YYVC, Han Kuk Chun and Tetsuo Yasuda join in this motion.

Hawaii state law HN51[↑] makes it illegal for: (1) a public servant; (2) to solicit, accept or agree to accept (either directly or indirectly); (3) pecuniary benefit; (4) with the intent that his vote, opinion, judgment, exercise of discretion, or other action as a public servant will thereby be influenced. H.R.S. § 710-1040\(1\)\(b\). It is likewise illegal for a person to: (1) confer, or offer or agree to confer (directly or indirectly); (2) pecuniary benefit; (3) upon a public servant; (4) with the intent to influence the public servant's vote, opinion, judgment, exercise of discretion [98] or other action in his official capacity.

Defendant Fasi argues that the bribery claims must fail because Plaintiffs' cannot prove that he solicited, accepted or agreed to accept the campaign contributions. Although Defendant Fasi states that the contributions were never formally accepted and that the money was returned, the Court will not consider his statements as support for this motion because Defendant Fasi subsequently refused to answer questions concerning the campaign contributions in his December 1994 deposition. Plaintiffs have submitted some evidence indicating that after the contribution checks were returned to YYVC, the funds were given back to the campaign in cash. See Affidavit of Robert Carter, Exhibit 55-16 of Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition. Thus, the Court finds Plaintiffs have raised a genuine issue of fact whether Fasi accepted or agreed to accept the funds either directly, or indirectly through his campaign organization.

Defendant Fasi further argues that Plaintiffs cannot prove that Fasi accepted the alleged funds "with the intent that his vote, opinion, judgment, exercise of discretion, or other action as a public servant would thereby be influenced." [99] According to Fasi, because the approval of the CUP occurred on June 13, 1986, prior to the date of the campaign contributions, he could not have accepted the contributions with the intent that his decision regarding the CUP be influenced. Fasi further contends that he could not have intended to be influenced by the contributions because he did not have the authority, duty, or responsibility to approve the CUP or to enforce YYVC's compliance with the conditions of the CUP.

The Court finds Defendant Fasi's assertion that, as mayor, he had no influence over the grant or enforcement of the CUP to be implausible. Although official power may well have been vested in the director of the DLU, the city directors are all members of the mayor's cabinet and answerable to the mayor. Moreover, Fasi himself testified that his directors were all appointed from among his "supporters and friends," and were all members of Friends of Fasi. As further evidence of Fasi's involvement in the decisions of his city directors, Plaintiffs submitted a letter concerning a "land swap" in connection with the Maunawili Valley Golf Course. This letter, addressed to Defendant Fasi and signed by the Deputy Director [100] of the Departments of Parks and Recreation, demonstrates that the Director sought approval from the mayor prior to pursuing negotiations. Additionally, there is evidence that Defendant Fasi attended town meetings during which he indicated [*1422] his involvement in enforcing the provisions of the CUP. Moreover, the Court notes that the fact that the campaign contributions were made after the CUP was granted does not preclude a finding that the alleged bribes were given in exchange for Fasi's aid in obtaining approval or non-enforcement of the CUP. Based on the above, the Court finds Plaintiffs have raised a genuine issue of fact whether Fasi intended to be influenced by the campaign contributions.

Defendants Masanori Kobayashi and Yoshinori Hayashida contend that the illegal contributions were merely "good will" expenditures, intended to promote a favorable business climate generally, and not payments specifically intended to influence Fasi and others to act favorably towards the donors. HN52 [↑] "Not every gift, favor or contribution to a government or political official constitutes bribery." United States v. Arthur, 544 F.2d 730, 734 \(9th Cir. 1976\). Rather, the intent that the official's actions [101] be influenced by the gift, favor or contribution is crucial to a violation of the state bribery statute. Id.; H.R.S. § 710-1040\(1\)\(b\). Although vague expectations of some future benefit is not sufficient to make a campaign contribution a bribe, in the case at bar, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants sought specific benefit in the form of the CUP and non-enforcement of its provisions in exchange for the contributions. It is undisputed that Defendants illegally contributed the funds while YYVC was in the process of developing a golf course which it had recently obtained a special use permit to build. There is also evidence that at least some of the contributions, subsequently returned as improper, were then resubmitted in cash form. The Court further notes that all of the Defendants refused to answer questions regarding the contributions in their depositions. Therefore, the Court finds Plaintiffs have raised a genuine issue of fact as to whether Defendants made the illegal contributions with the intent to influence the decisions of Fasi or other government officials.

The Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to establish that Defendant Fasi received pecuniary benefit from the [102] $ 5 million gift to the City and County of Honolulu. "Pecuniary benefit" is defined as "benefit in the form of money, property, commercial interests, or anything else the primary significance of which is economic gain." H.R.S. § 710-1000\(14\). Pecuniary benefit is to be distinguished from the term "benefit" which is much broader and which is defined as "gain or advantage, or anything regarded by the beneficiary as gain or advantage, including benefit to any other person or entity in whose welfare he is interested." H.R.S. § 710-1000\(2\). Plaintiffs contend that Fasi "used" the gift during his election campaign by taking credit for obtaining the funds for the City of Honolulu. This is not sufficient pecuniary benefit to establish a bribe under the Hawaii bribery statute.

In conclusion, the Court GRANTS in part motion 9. The Court finds Plaintiffs failed to establish a genuine issue of fact whether the $ 5 million gift to the City and County of Honolulu was a bribe. The Court DENIES motions 9 and 10 with respect to the campaign contributions. The Court finds that Plaintiffs have raised a genuine issue of fact whether the campaign contributions were in fact bribes.

b. Mail Fraud HN53 [↑]

[103] To allege a violation of the mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, Plaintiffs must show that:

- (1) Defendants devised a scheme to defraud;
- (2) Defendants used the mails in furtherance of the scheme;
- (3) Defendants did so with the specific intent to deceive or defraud.

Sun Savings and Loan Association v. Dierdorff, 825 F.2d 187, 195 \(9th Cir. 1987\). HN54 [↑] The requirement of specific intent under the mail fraud statute is satisfied by "the existence of a scheme which was reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension and this intention is shown by examining the scheme itself." United States v. Green, 745 F.2d 1205, 1207 \(9th Cir. 1984\).

HN55 [↑] Fraudulent intent requires that a person knowingly and willfully act to defraud. Therefore, good faith generally constitutes a complete defense to any crime which requires fraudulent intent. [United States v. Faust, 850 F.2d 575, 583 \(9th Cir. \[*1423\] 1988\)](#). Reliance on the advice of counsel is a circumstance indicating good faith which the trier of fact is entitled to consider on the issue of fraudulent intent. Bisno v. United States, 299 F.2d 711, 719 \(9th Cir. 1961\); United [104] States v. Piepgrass, 425 F.2d 194, 198 \(9th Cir. 1970\). A claim of good faith reliance on counsel requires that the advice be obtained after full disclosure of all the facts to which the advice pertains. United States v. Conforte, 624 F.2d 869, 877 \(9th Cir. 1980\). The defendant must also show that he actually relied on the advice, believing it to be correct. Id. Reliance on advice of counsel will not shield a party who simply confers with an attorney as one would confer with any business associate. Piepgrass, 425 F.2d at 198. It will also not shield defendants who retain counsel to insure the success of their fraudulent schemes, rather than to secure legal advice. United States v. Shewfelt, 455 F.2d 836, 838 (9th Cir. 1972).

In motion 11 Defendants Masanori Kobayashi and Yoshinori Hayashida, joined by all Defendants except Fasi, contend that they lacked the requisite intent to defraud because the eviction notices and letters concerning the relocation plan were lawyer work product. Reliance on counsel, however, is not a complete defense to mail fraud. In the case at bar, Plaintiffs have, on various occasions, alleged that Defendants' attorneys aided Defendants in [105] carrying out their fraudulent schemes. If Plaintiffs' allegations are true, then Defendants' reliance on the advice of their attorneys would not have been in good faith.

Nonetheless, the Court finds no basis for mail fraud under the alleged eviction scheme. As noted previously, Defendants had a right to evict Plaintiffs and to inform Plaintiffs that they intended to do so. This Court previously found Plaintiffs had either actual or constructive notice of their right to remove crops and improvements from the property. See supra, p. 58. Accordingly, Defendants' failure to inform them of this right could not have been reasonably calculated to defraud Plaintiffs of their interests under the deed. For the reasons discussed previously, the Court finds that Plaintiffs were also on notice of their right to be afforded an opportunity to relocate under CUP. Therefore, Defendants' failure to inform Plaintiffs of this right likewise does not support a finding of fraudulent intent.

The Court also finds that Plaintiffs' confiscatory relocation scheme lacks merit. There is no indication that Defendants' letters concerning the relocation plan were fraudulent. Plaintiffs claim the letters falsely [106] purported that Defendants' relocation plan satisfied the CUP and that to take advantage of relocation Plaintiffs had to surrender certain interests in the land. As discussed previously, the Court finds that Defendants' plan satisfied the CUP and that it was reasonable for Defendants to require waiver of certain property interests as a condition of relocation under the CUP. See supra, p. 62-63.

For the above reasons, the Court GRANTS motion 11 in so far as it pertains to Plaintiffs' allegations of eviction and confiscatory relocation mail fraud schemes. The Court finds that these allegations are meritless.

c. Aiding and Abetting Mail Fraud

In motion 13 Defendant Fasi contends that he should be granted summary judgment with respect to Plaintiffs' claims that he aided and abetted in the commission of mail fraud because there is no evidence that he consciously assisted in the fraud. HN56 [↑] The elements necessary to convict an individual under an aiding and abetting theory are:

- (1) that the accused had the specific intent to facilitate the commission of a crime by another;
- (2) that the accused had the requisite intent of the underlying substantive offense;
- (3) [107] that the accused assisted or participated in the commission of the underlying substantive offense; and
- (4) that someone committed the underlying substantive offense.

United States v. Litteral, 910 F.2d 547, 550 (9th Cir. 1990).

Because the Court finds that neither the eviction notices nor the letters concerning the relocation plan support Plaintiffs' allegations of mail fraud, Plaintiffs' claims that Defendant Fasi aided and abetted the [*1424] commission of these crimes must also fail. See supra, p. 79-80. Moreover, the Court finds that there is absolutely no evidence that Defendant Fasi had knowledge of the letters, knew of their alleged fraudulent purpose, or had the specific intent to deceive or defraud Plaintiffs. See United States v. Olson, 925 F.2d 1170, 1176 (9th Cir. 1991). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS motion 13 with respect to Plaintiffs' claims that Defendant Fasi aided and abetted mail fraud based on an eviction scheme or a confiscatory relocation scheme.

The Court likewise GRANTS motion 14 with respect to Plaintiffs' allegations that Defendant Fasi conspired to aid and abet the commission of these schemes of mail fraud. As stated above, there [108] simply is no evidence whatsoever that Defendant Fasi had knowledge of the eviction letters or their allegedly fraudulent purpose. Therefore, there is no evidence that he agreed to commit the substantive offense of mail fraud. See Literal, 910 F.2d at 550.

d. Extortion

In motion 11, Defendants argue that any actions they took in evicting the tenants were taken in good faith reliance on the advice of counsel and thus lacked the requisite intent for state or federal extortion. Similarly, in motion 12, they argue that all actions taken by them after the City approved their relocation plan were taken in good faith reliance thereon and thus that they could not have possessed the criminal intent necessary to transform their actions into extortion, robbery or conspiracy.

The Court does not agree that either the actions of Defendants' attorneys or the City's approval of YYVC's relocation plan immunized Defendants from liability for any other wrongful actions which they might have taken. If, for example, Defendants intentionally destroyed Plaintiffs' crops or improvements while they were still tenants on the land, it would be irrelevant whether such action occurred under [109] the advice of their attorneys or subsequent to the city's approval of their plan. Likewise advice of their attorneys does not shield Defendants from possible liability for allegedly robbing the Wongs and shooting their bull. Accordingly, the Court DENIES motions 11 and 12 to the extent that they pertain to Plaintiffs' claims of extortion, robbery and conspiracy.

3. Pattern of "Racketeering Activity"

In motion 17 Defendant Fasi contends that Plaintiffs cannot prove that he engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity. According to Defendant Fasi, the alleged bribes do not constitute a pattern of racketeering activity because they did not amount to, nor pose a threat of, continued criminal activity. The Court notes initially that Defendant Fasi's inquiry is again too narrow. To determine whether there is a pattern of racketeering activity, the Court must examine all of the predicate acts, regardless of which Defendants actually committed, or agreed to commit, the alleged acts. With respect to the individual Defendants, it is only necessary that they commit, or conspire to commit, two predicate acts. See Brooklier, 685 F.2d at 1222.

HN57 RICO defines the term "pattern of [110] racketeering activity" as requiring "at least two predicate acts of racketeering activity . . . the last of which occurred within ten years . . . after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(5\) \(1994\). Aside from the minimal requirement of showing the existence of two predicate acts, RICO does not address the meaning of the term "pattern" as used throughout the statute. The United States Supreme Court, recognizing that Congress was concerned in RICO with long-term criminal activity, has held that HN58 to prove a pattern of racketeering activity a plaintiff must also show that: (1) the racketeering predicates are related; and (2) that the predicate acts amount to, or pose a threat of, continued criminal activity. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Company, 492 U.S. 229, 239, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 \(1989\). Predicate acts are related if they involve "the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims, or methods of commission, or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events." Id. at 240.

[*1425] Whether the predicate acts amount to, or pose a threat of, continued criminal activity depends on the specific facts of each [111] case. Id. at 242. A plaintiff may establish that predicate acts amount to continued criminal activity by establishing that the predicate acts extended over a substantial period of time. Id. at 250 (related predicate acts occurring with some frequency over at least a 6-year period may be sufficient to satisfy the continuity requirement); United States v. Dischner, 974 F.2d 1502, 1507, 1510 \(9th Cir. 1992\) (related predicate acts committed over approximately a three year period satisfied the continuity requirement). Although there is no bright line test for this "closed-ended continuity," the Ninth Circuit and other courts recognize that there are "no cases in which a court has held the requirement to be satisfied by a pattern of activity lasting less than a year." Religious Technology Center v. Wollersheim, 971 F.2d 364, 366-67 \(9th Cir. 1992\) (collecting cases); See also Streck v. Peters, 855 F. Supp. 1156, 1164-65 \(D. Haw. 1994\). Moreover, most courts that have found continuity in a closed period did so in cases involving periods of several years. See Religious Technology Center, 971 F.2d at 367, n.7; Streck, 855 F. Supp. at 1164-65.

Where the predicate [\[112\]](#) acts extend over only a few weeks or months, a plaintiff must also demonstrate a threat of future criminal activity. H.G. Inc., 492 U.S. at 242; River City Markets, Inc. v. Fleming Foods West, 960 F.2d 1458, 1464 \(9th Cir. 1992\) (related predicate acts occurring over a one month period was not sufficient to establish continuity); Religious Technology Center, 971 F.2d at 366-67 (related predicate acts occurring over a six month period was not sufficient to establish continuity); Streck, 855 F. Supp. at 1165 (related predicate acts occurring over a four month period was not sufficient to establish continuity). In other words, if the period of time is insufficient to establish "closed-ended" continuity, the past conduct must be of the type that threatens future repetition, or "open-ended" continuity. Illegal conduct which is "a regular way of conducting [a] defendant's ongoing legitimate business" may pose a sufficient threat of future criminal activity to satisfy the continuity requirement. H.G. Inc., 492 U.S. at 242; Ticor Title Insurance Company, 937 F.2d 447, 450 \(9th Cir. 1991\) (continuity requirement satisfied where frequency of three forged releases in [\[113\]](#) a 13-month period suggested that the practice had become a regular way of conducting business).

The Court finds that there is a genuine issue of fact as to whether the alleged predicate acts extended over a sufficiently substantial period of time to amount to continued criminal activity. Plaintiffs allege that the first acts of threat and intimidation occurred in early 1987. These intimidation tactics allegedly continued to some extent through 1991 when Plaintiffs were evicted from the property. The alleged robbery and destruction of the Wongs' property occurred in May 1987. The alleged bribes occurred over a 13-15 month period, from August 1987 until December 1988. The alleged destruction of crops and homes appears to have occurred during 1988 and 1989. If these allegations prove to be true, they will support a finding of closed-ended continuity. Accordingly, the Court DENIES motion 17.

C. 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(d\)

In motion 16, Defendant Fasi contends that Plaintiffs do not have a viable claim against him under § 1962\(d\) for conspiring to violate 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\).

HN59  Conspiracy to carry on an enterprise through racketeering activity, indictable under § 1962\(d\), is [\[114\]](#) a separate crime from the participation in an enterprise through racketeering acts (which may include conspiracy or attempts), indictable under § 1962\(c\). United States v. Brooklier, 685 F.2d 1208, 1221 \(9th Cir. 1982\). Where defendants conspire to commit predicate acts prohibited by RICO, the acts may simply be part of the pattern of racketeering activity supporting a violation of § 1962 \(a\), \(b\) or \(c\). It is only where an agreement is undertaken to invest in, acquire control of, or conduct an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering, that there is a RICO conspiracy chargeable under § 1962\(d\). Id. Conversely, to establish a violation of § 1962\(d\), a plaintiff need [\[*1426\]](#) not show that a defendant conspired or agreed to commit the individual predicate acts. United States v. Tille, 729 F.2d 615, 619 \(9th Cir. 1984\). Rather, "[proof] of an agreement, the objective of which is a substantive violation of RICO (such as conducting the affairs of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering) is sufficient to establish a violation of § 1962\(d\). Id.; Baumer, 8 F.3d at 1346.

HN60  Conspiracy to violate RICO also requires a showing that a defendant "was aware of the essential [\[115\]](#) nature and scope of the enterprise and intended to participate in it." Baumer, 8 F.3d at 1346. "A RICO conspiracy 'requires the assent of each defendant charged, although it is not necessary that each conspirator knows all of the details of the plan or conspiracy.'" Id. (citing Brooklier, 685 F.2d at 1222.)

In paragraph 104 of their complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants, including Fasi, conspired to violate 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\), in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(d\). In particular, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants conspired to participate in the affairs of the enterprise and conspired to commit a pattern of racketeering activity in conducting said affairs.

In their RICO case statement, Plaintiffs describe the following as facts showing the existence of a conspiracy in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(d\): Defendants conspired to make bribes; conspired to commit extortion, robbery and mail fraud; conspired to "get the Wong Plaintiffs' cattle out of the way;" conspired "to threaten the entire little village;" and conspired to have valuable trees and crops remain on the property. Plaintiffs' RICO Case Statement, p.44-46.

These allegations do not suggest that Defendant [116] Fasi conspired or agreed to participate in the operation or management of RHCC. Nor have Plaintiffs' submitted evidence sufficient to infer such an arrangement. See supra, p. 72. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' claim that Defendant Fasi violated § 1962(d) must fail. The Court therefore GRANTS motion 16.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Defendants' various Motions for Summary Judgment. The Court GRANTS in part motions 1, 2 and 4 against all Plaintiffs except Raphael Kamai, Lynda Augustus, Alfredo Aurio, Benita Aurio and Milnor Lum. The Court finds that all Plaintiffs except the aforementioned are precluded by the state court summary possession actions from relitigating the following issues:

- a. that Plaintiffs have no right to renewable leases on the property under an option contract;
- b. that YYVC's relocation plan did not violate the CUP;
- c. that YYVC's relocation plan did not violate a negative covenant contained in the deed to the property;
- d. that Tenants Nicanor Amit, Cristita Bolo, Wilfredo Bolo, Josefina Bolo, Alejandro Coloyan, Ofelia Coloyan, Isidro Dilay, Margaret Dilay, Lorraine Dilay, [117] Violeta Dumadag, Estrella Igarta, Sebastian Igarta, Jennie Olinger, Francisco Pedrina, Adoracion Pedrina, William Sullivan, and Jocelyn Sullivan did not have a claim to the property under adverse possession.

The Court GRANTS motion 3 to the effect that the final disposition of Plaintiffs' state court action bars all of Plaintiffs' claims against Y.Y. Valley Corporation, Han Kuk Chun, Tetsuo Yasuda, Masanori Kobayashi, Yoshinori Hayashida, Hiroshi Kobayashi, Eugene Lum and Norma Lum.

The Court DENIES Defendant Fasi's motions 5 and 6, based on immunity and the Federal Election Campaign Act. The Court STRIKES paragraph 116 of the complaint.

The Court GRANTS motions 7 and 8 and GRANTS in part motion 18. Plaintiffs failed to establish a genuine issue of fact whether Defendants' alleged racketeering activities caused them to suffer injury to any interest Plaintiffs had under the CUP, deed or option contract. Plaintiffs' claims of injury to possible interests based on a theory of adverse possession are too tenuous and insubstantial to support their RICO action.

[*1427] The Court GRANTS in part motion 9. The Court finds that Plaintiffs failed to establish a genuine issue of fact whether [118] the $ 5 million gift to the City and County of Honolulu was a bribe. The Court DENIES motions 9 and 10 with respect to the campaign contributions. The Court finds that Plaintiffs have raised a genuine issue of fact whether the contributions were in fact bribes.

The Court GRANTS in part motions 11, 13 and 14. The Court finds that Plaintiffs' eviction and confiscatory relocation mail fraud schemes are meritless. The Court DENIES motions 11 and 12 to the extent that they pertain to Plaintiff's extortion, robbery and conspiracy claims. There is a genuine issue of material fact whether Defendants' reliance on counsel or the city's approval of the plan immunized them from liability for these actions.

The Court GRANTS motions 15 and 16. Plaintiffs have failed to establish a genuine issue of fact whether Defendant Fasi participated, or agreed to participate, in the operation or management of the enterprise. Accordingly, Defendant Fasi is not liable under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) or (d).

The Court DENIES motion 17. The Court finds that there is a general issue of material fact whether the alleged predicate acts extended over a sufficiently substantial period to amount to continued criminal [119] activity.

The end result is that Summary Judgment is hereby GRANTED in favor of all Defendants. The Court also DISMISSES all claims of Huberto Dumadag and Rosita Uraniumri and STRIKES the estate of Laurencia Canencia from the complaint.

While Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 is to be applied to antitrust cases no differently from how it is applied to other cases, that is not to say that the summary judgment device is not an appropriate and useful tool for resolving antitrust cases. On the contrary, because of the unusual entanglement of legal and factual issues frequently presented in antitrust cases, the task of sorting them out may be particularly well-suited for Rule 56 utilization.

HN2 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

While it is axiomatic that Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 must be used carefully so as not improperly to foreclose trial on genuinely disputed, material facts, the mere existence of some disputed facts does not require that a case go to trial. The disputed facts must be material to an issue necessary for the proper resolution of the case, and the quality and quantity of the evidence offered to create a question of fact must be adequate to support a jury verdict. Thus, if the evidence is "merely colorable" or "not significantly probative," it may not be adequate to oppose entry of summary judgment.

HN3 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

While the court has recognized generally that when considering a motion for summary judgment, the district court must draw any permissible inference from the underlying facts in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, the court hastens to add that those inferences must, in every case, fall within the range of reasonable probability and not be so tenuous as to amount to speculation or conjecture. Moreover, the inferences which may be drawn vary from one substantive area of the law to another.

HN4 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

On summary judgment motions in antitrust cases, the Supreme Court has instructed that when there is evidence of conduct that is consistent with both legitimate competition and an illegal conspiracy, courts may not infer that an illegal conspiracy has occurred without other evidence.

The district court must determine whether the party opposing the motion for summary judgment has presented genuinely disputed facts which remain to be tried. If not, the district court may resolve the legal questions between the parties as a matter of law and enter judgment accordingly. And in reviewing a summary judgment, the court applies de novo the same standard that the district court was required to apply for granting the motion for summary judgment.

NIEMEYER, Circuit Judge:

Thompson Everett, Inc., a self-styled "independent cable television representative firm" engaged in placing "spot" advertising on cable television, contends that it is being illegally denied access to cable television companies and the "opportunity to earn rep commissions" in connection with the sale of cable air time for spot advertising. Thompson Everett has sued the traditional cable representatives (referred to as "traditional cable reps") who have exclusive representation contracts with cable television companies, alleging that the traditional cable reps are interpreting and enforcing their exclusive contracts in a concerted effort to exclude Thompson Everett from the "cable rep" business and the commissions flowing from that business. Thompson Everett contends that the traditional cable reps' conduct violates [*1320] sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (declaring restraints of trade and monopolization illegal), Virginia's antitrust laws, and related common law.

The district court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the [3] antitrust claims, concluding that Thompson Everett failed to present evidence sufficient to show that it suffered an "antitrust injury" and to establish a horizontal conspiracy among defendants to use their exclusive representative agreements to injure Thompson Everett. The district court also concluded that the exclusive agreements did not have a substantial anti-competitive effect. It dismissed the remaining claims on the ground that the defendants acted properly and in good faith in protecting their contractual rights under the exclusive cable company representation contracts.

Because we conclude that Thompson Everett, if injured at all, has not been injured by anything forbidden by the antitrust laws, we affirm.

I

Defendants National Cable Advertising, L.P., Cable Networks, Inc., and Cable Media Corporation are "traditional cable reps" retained by cable television companies to serve as their sales agents to sell cable air time to advertisers for spot advertising.¹ The traditional cable reps' sole function is to represent cable companies to obtain for them the greatest possible advertising revenues. The traditional cable reps compete with each other for the right to represent [4] cable companies and for the contracts by which the cable companies grant the exclusive right to represent them. These contracts are of short duration, often about one year, and when they expire, the traditional cable reps then compete for new contracts. As a result of this competition, cable companies are represented by various cable reps and the commissions for representation have declined. Recent years' commission rates have dropped from about 28% of spot time billings to a general range of 20% to 22%, and new contracts are being signed for as low as 15% of billings. Both the cable companies and the traditional cable reps claim that these exclusive contracts have a legitimate business purpose. The cable companies contend that they need a loyal, skilled sales staff, dedicated to furthering the cable companies' interests in developing advertising revenue from the sale of air time.

[5] By employing exclusive contracts, the cable companies contend, they establish an ongoing relationship with the traditional cable reps so that the reps may work against sales quotas and focus their attention on securing the best available rates for the cable companies and on chasing limited advertising dollars in competition with other media. The traditional cable reps similarly maintain that exclusive contracts are necessary to protect their considerable investments in market and demographic research and technological innovation. They contend also that exclusive contracts provide financial stability, enabling them to invest in training a larger and more skilled sales staff.

Under these exclusive representation contracts, the traditional cable reps are compensated only through commissions on sales of spot air time to advertisers or advertising agencies. Absent an exclusive agreement, they argue, their effort would be undermined by "free riders" who could take advantage of the traditional cable reps' efforts in generating sales without making any of the necessary investment.

Thompson Everett is a Virginia corporation formed in 1984 for the purpose of "conducting both a general advertising [6] agency business and representing agencies in their placement of advertising in various media." It claims that it is "independent" in that neither advertising interests nor cable companies own its stock. Its goal, similar to that of media buyers hired by advertisers to place their advertisements in the media, is to negotiate the cheapest price for the most air time or media exposure. On behalf of its clients, advertisers or advertising agencies, Thompson [*1321] Everett aims to place advertising not only on cable television, but also in other media such as network and local broadcast television, network cable television, radio, or printed media, whichever is most consistent with its clients' needs and desires.

When dealing with cable companies, Thompson Everett typically attempts to bypass the traditional cable reps and deal directly with the cable companies, using the leverage of its collective representation of numerous advertisers and advertising agencies in its negotiations. When successful, Thompson Everett demands receipt of the commissions that otherwise would be paid to the traditional cable reps. If the cable company declines to pay Thompson Everett a commission or pays a commission [7] which Thompson Everett considers to be inadequate, Thompson Everett "creates" a commission for itself through a practice referred to as "popping the advertiser." Under this practice, Thompson Everett negotiates a rate with the cable company that is below the amount budgeted by the advertiser for the spot time, but it informs the advertiser that the cable company would only agree to sell at the budgeted amount and retains the difference as its commission.

Thus, even though Thompson Everett has dealt directly with cable companies and has received commissions from them for selling their air time, its efforts and loyalties are always tied to the advertisers and advertising agencies. Unlike the traditional cable reps, who seek to maximize the cable company's revenue from the sale of spot air time, Thompson Everett seeks to minimize that amount in its representation of advertising interests. For that reason, Thompson Everett readily acknowledges, it cannot sign exclusive cable rep contracts with the cable companies.²

² As Thompson Everett's chief operating officer explained in response to questioning:

Q. If the interest of the advertiser are inconsistent with selling spot cable for a particular cable operator, you are going to do what is in the advertiser's interests, not what is in the interests of the cable operator; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

[8] Neither Thompson Everett nor the traditional cable reps buy cable air time on their own account and then resell it. Rather, they act as agents, performing the service of negotiating a price for cable air time on behalf of their clients. The traditional cable reps represent only the interests of cable companies, seeking to sell cable company air time in competition with other media. Much like a real estate broker representing the seller in a real estate transaction, these traditional cable reps negotiate the best rate obtainable for acceptance by the cable company. Thompson Everett, on the other hand, serves in the transaction in a position analogous to the buyer's real estate broker, representing the potential buyer of cable air time. While the buyer's agent may consider cable air time for its clients' advertising, it may also consider other media. Thompson Everett maintains that even from its position as the buyer's agent in the transaction, it can provide the same service provided by the traditional cable reps to the cable companies without the cable companies' need to engage a traditional cable rep as an intermediary.

Troubled by Thompson Everett's disregard for their exclusive [9] cable rep contracts, the traditional cable reps began to insist on their contractual rights of exclusive representation, advising cable companies that only the cable reps were contractually entitled to represent the cable companies and to receive commissions. In response, Thompson Everett filed this action.

In its complaint, Thompson Everett claims that the traditional cable reps are acting in concert in using their exclusive contracts to exclude Thompson Everett from the cable rep market and to drive Thompson Everett out of business. Thompson Everett alleges that the traditional cable reps entered into a horizontal conspiracy with each other and a vertical conspiracy with the cable companies to use their exclusive contracts for the purpose of fixing prices and maintaining high commission rates, eliminating competition among themselves and excluding Thompson [*1322] Everett and others as competitors, causing the cable companies to boycott Thompson Everett, and extending each cable company's natural monopoly. It bases its complaint on sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and similar provisions of Virginia's antitrust laws, Va. Code §§ 59.1-9.5 and 59.1-9.6. Thompson Everett [10] also alleges related statutory and common law claims. It requests a declaratory judgment that the cable rep's activities are illegal and an injunction prohibiting such conduct in the future. It also demands treble and punitive damages of an unspecified amount and reasonable attorney's fees.

Granting the defendants' motion for summary judgment, the district court ruled that the injury alleged by Thompson Everett was not of the type and proximate ness that is enforceable under the antitrust laws, citing Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 539-45, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\) (holding that a combination of indirectness of injury, a non-antitrust type of injury, and speculative damages preclude antitrust enforcement). See Thompson Everett v. National Cable Advertising, 850 F. Supp. 470, 478-79 \(E.D.Va. 1994\). The district court concluded that even though Thompson Everett and others may have considered Thompson Everett to be a competitor of the cable reps, there is no dispute over how Thompson Everett's business actually operates. Focusing on Thompson Everett's actual method of doing business, the district court concluded that Thompson [11] Everett was not a competitor in the market in which the alleged violations occurred. Id. at 476-79. The district court also found no evidence to support the allegation of a horizontal conspiracy, id. at 480, or the allegation that the vertical exclusive agreements had a substantial anti-competitive effect, id. at 482. The remaining state and common law claims were dismissed for similar reasons. Id. at 482-83.

II

Thompson Everett contends preliminarily that the district court "misapplied the standard required for deciding a motion for summary judgment" and erroneously suggested that summary judgment was especially appropriate in the context of antitrust litigation. Thompson Everett adverts to the district court's statements that "summary judgment is an important tool for dealing with antitrust issues," 850 F. Supp. at 474 (quoting Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696 \(4th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074 (1992)), and that the "very nature of antitrust litigation encourages summary disposition of such cases when permissible," id. (quoting Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., 844 F.2d 473, 475 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 [12] U.S. 852 (1988)). Additionally,

She also stated that the company does not sign exclusives because it will utilize alternative means, such as placing advertising into other media, if the cable spot time is not well-suited or properly priced for the advertiser's purposes.

Thompson Everett points to the district judge's oral comments at the summary judgment hearing arguably expressing his understanding that this court prefers to resolve complex legal issues through summary judgment. In its brief, however, Thompson Everett states, "While the District Court acknowledged the proper standard under Rule 56\(c\), it ignored facts supporting [Thompson Everett's] claims, decided disputed facts in favor of defendants, and gave defendants the benefit of all inferences from the facts." (Emphasis added). It would thus appear that Thompson Everett does not take issue with the district court's articulation of the applicable legal standard as much as the manner in which the court applied that standard, yielding too readily to the defendants on summary judgment because of a mistaken belief that such preference should be given in antitrust cases.

HN1[] While Rule 56 is to be applied to antitrust cases no differently from how it is applied to other cases, that is not to say that the summary judgment device is not an appropriate and useful tool for resolving antitrust cases. On the contrary, because of the unusual entanglement of legal and [\[*13\]](#) factual issues frequently presented in antitrust cases, the task of sorting them out may be particularly well-suited for Rule 56 utilization. See Oksanen, 945 F.2d at 708. The summary judgment practice does not become disfavored simply because a case is complex. Rather, it is favored as a mechanism to secure the "just, speedy and inexpensive determination" [\[*1323\]](#) of a case, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 1, when its proper use can avoid the cost of trial. See also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 327, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\). HN2[] While it is axiomatic that Rule 56 must be used carefully so as not improperly to foreclose trial on genuinely disputed, material facts, the mere existence of some disputed facts does not require that a case go to trial. The disputed facts must be material to an issue necessary for the proper resolution of the case, and the quality and quantity of the evidence offered to create a question of fact must be adequate to support a jury verdict. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). Thus, if the evidence is "merely colorable" or "not significantly probative," it may not be adequate to oppose entry of summary judgment. Id. at 249-50.

HN3[] While we have recognized [\[*14\]](#) generally that when considering a motion for summary judgment, the district court must "draw any permissible inference from the underlying facts in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion," Tuck v. Henkel Corp., 973 F.2d 371, 374 \(4th Cir.\), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 671, 113 S. Ct. 1276 \(1993\), we hasten to add that those inferences must, in every case, fall within the range of reasonable probability and not be so tenuous as to amount to speculation or conjecture. See Sylvia Development Corp. v. Calvert County, 48 F.3d 810, 817 \(4th Cir. 1995\). Moreover, the inferences which may be drawn vary from one substantive area of the law to another. Thus, HN4[] on summary judgment motions in antitrust cases, the Supreme Court has instructed that when there is evidence of conduct that is consistent with both legitimate competition and an illegal conspiracy, courts may not infer that an illegal conspiracy has occurred without other evidence. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\).

At bottom, HN5[] the district court must determine whether the party opposing the motion for summary judgment has presented genuinely disputed facts which remain to [\[*15\]](#) be tried. If not, the district court may resolve the legal questions between the parties as a matter of law and enter judgment accordingly. And in reviewing a summary judgment, we apply de novo the same standard that the district court was required to apply for granting the motion for summary judgment. See Sylvia Development, 48 F.3d at 817. Accordingly we analyze the record in this case de novo and measure the evidence properly presented against the requirements for establishing a violation of antitrust law.

III

The thrust of Thompson Everett's complaint is that it is being denied access to cable companies by the traditional cable reps' concerted activity in insisting on their rights under their exclusive representation contracts with the cable companies. Thompson Everett wants a return to a status quo ante when it was able to purchase air time for advertisers directly from the cable companies and to receive a commission from the cable companies for those sales, notwithstanding the exclusive cable rep contracts. Thompson Everett asserts, therefore, that the competition provided by its bids on behalf of advertisers for cable time has been preempted by concerted activity [\[*16\]](#) and that it has been injured in its business by the loss of commissions.

The district court concluded that Thompson Everett failed to present evidence of a horizontal conspiracy among the traditional cable reps to exclude Thompson Everett from the market of serving cable companies as sales agents.

Thompson Everett made no effort to prove that the traditional cable reps conspired to enter into their exclusive rep contracts or to continue their renewal. Rather, it contends that the traditional cable reps conspired to enforce such contracts. This claim presents several problems. Absent evidence that any party to an exclusive representation contract was considering abandoning such a contract or not renewing it upon termination, Thompson Everett has the nearly insurmountable task of proving that a party to such a contract who seeks to enforce it, even at the [*1324] urging of a competitor, is pursuing an illegal conspiracy under the antitrust laws. Without more evidence, Thompson Everett cannot prevail upon the court to draw the inference that concerted activity is the cause for contractual enforcement. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587-88.

Thompson Everett argues, however, that further [17] evidence supports its claim of concerted activity. It points to evidence that a trade association in the cable television industry circulated a questionnaire to determine how the cable industry could improve and compete with other media. Responses to the questionnaire, prepared independently by each member of the association, were collected and circulated by the association. While the general conclusion, reached independently by the traditional cable reps, was that the cable industry could best compete with other media through the enforcement of the exclusive rep contracts, there is no evidence that they engaged in any further concerted activity following the circulation of this information. Moreover, unless the exclusive contracts were themselves illegal, any concerted activity was not aimed at achieving an unlawful objective. See Cooper v. Forsyth County Hosp. Auth., 789 F.2d 278, 281 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 972 (1986). Accordingly, we reach the same conclusion as the district court, that even with evidence of information sharing, pertaining to the benefits of contract enforcement, there is still no evidence that the cable reps embarked on a "conscious commitment [18] to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\) (citation omitted).

Even with this conclusion, we are still left with Thompson Everett's claim that each individual exclusive representation contract illegally denied Thompson Everett the opportunity to compete.

IV

Absent a horizontal agreement among the traditional cable reps to prevent Thompson Everett from serving as a cable rep, the barriers to Thompson Everett's access to the cable companies consist of (1) the exclusivity provisions in the cable rep contracts binding the cable companies to a single sales representative, and (2) Thompson Everett's position in the market as a representative of advertising interests, which precludes it from providing some essential cable rep services to cable companies.

If the cable companies elect to sell their spot air time through exclusive agents, and the terms of those exclusive contracts do not violate the antitrust laws, then Thompson Everett cannot complain that it does not have access to the cable companies if it is unwilling to compete for these exclusive contracts. Because of its position in the [*19] market, Thompson Everett understandably is not in a position to enter into exclusive cable representation contracts with the cable companies, because to do so would be inconsistent with its business of representing advertisers and placing their advertisements in media other than cable television. Even absent the exclusivity requirement of these rep contracts, Thompson Everett's position in representing the advertising side of the transaction to obtain air time at the least possible cost raises a barrier to its representation of cable companies. Thompson Everett could not simultaneously perform that function and represent the cable companies who seek to obtain the greatest amount of revenue for air time. The inherent conflict of interest would force it to perform one function at the expense of the other.

Thompson Everett nevertheless argues that it should be able to contact the cable companies directly and provide a more efficient service by representing both sides of the transaction for a smaller combined fee. In essence, it would have the market restructured to require cable companies to sell their air time through methods not previously selected by those companies.

Thompson [20] Everett may surely attempt to persuade the cable companies to alter the method they have selected for doing business. If Thompson Everett were successful, the cable companies could readily refuse to renew their exclusive, relatively short-term contracts with the cable reps, and deal directly [*1325] with Thompson Everett. The barrier to this result is that imposed by the independent decision of the cable company and the cable rep to enter into an exclusive contract. Thus, unless the exclusive representation contracts between the cable companies and the traditional cable reps are by their terms illegal, the only barriers to Thompson Everett's representation of cable companies are (1) enforceable contractual provisions and (2) Thompson Everett's self-selected position in the market. Since neither of these barriers are created by anything illegal under the antitrust laws, Thompson Everett has no basis for asserting an antitrust claim.

Section 4 of the Clayton Act HN6 grants private persons the right to sue for violations of the antitrust laws if the person has been injured in his business or property "by reason of" an antitrust violation. 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\). A private person may not, however, recover [21] damages simply by establishing that his injury was "causally linked to an illegal presence in the market." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\) (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\)). Rather, the damages sought must flow from that conduct which is proscribed by the antitrust laws. See Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489. HN7 Because the antitrust laws are intended to protect competition, and not simply competitors, only injury caused by damage to the competitive process may form the basis of an antitrust claim. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\). See also Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 734-35 \(9th Cir. 1987\); Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Co., 791 F.2d 532, 540 \(7th Cir. 1986\).

In the circumstances of this case, we agree with the district court that Thompson Everett is not a would-be competitor with the cable reps and is not being denied access to the cable company sales service market by any act in violation of the antitrust laws. See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 539-40; Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 488-89. Rather, Thompson [22] Everett is simply seeking to substitute its proposed method of serving cable companies for that selected by the cable companies without demonstrating that the substitution would advance the competitive process. See Rutman Wine, 829 F.2d at 734-35; Great Escape, 791 F.2d at 540.

In addition to Thompson Everett's difficulties in establishing antitrust injury, Thompson Everett failed to present any evidence that the exclusive sales rep contracts go beyond the legitimate business purposes for which they were created and thus constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade. See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 54-57, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\).

The cable companies are free to choose any method of selling air time so long as the method chosen does not violate the antitrust (or other) laws. Thus, the cable companies could sell time through in-house sales agents, exclusive representatives, non-exclusive representatives, or through some combination of these methods. In this case, Thompson Everett challenges the cable companies' selection of exclusive representation contracts to sell air time.

The exclusive sales rep contracts impose non-price vertical restrictions which [23] are not per se illegal under the antitrust laws, and such restrictions are not disfavored as long as they do not go beyond the legitimate business purposes for which they are used. See Continental T.V., supra. A contract creating such non-price vertical restrictions, even though temporarily burdening competition for providing a selling service to the cable company, is scrutinized by considering whether that lessening of competition outweighs the benefits such a business arrangement might have in enabling the cable company to compete better with other media for advertising dollars. See Satellite Television & Assoc. Resources, Inc. v. Continental Cablevision of Va., Inc., 714 F.2d 351, 355 \(4th Cir. 1983\), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1027 (1984).

[*1326] As we have noted, the exclusive contracts in this case are typically of short duration, usually terminable after a year, and contain performance criteria, which, if not met, may justify earlier termination. Other contracts allow the cable company to terminate without cause upon notice ranging from 30 days to one year. The evidence shows that these contracts are negotiated in a competitive context, with the various cable reps bidding [24] on the commission rates that they are willing to receive for their service. The record also reveals that, as a consequence, cable companies have not remained with one cable rep and that the commission rates have steadily declined.

As buyers in the market for sales representation services, the cable companies find the exclusive representation contract advantageous in their efforts to compete with other media to attract advertising dollars. From the buyer's point of view, the exclusive contracts enable each cable company to have a loyal sales staff dedicated to furthering that company's particular interest. The cable companies can establish a relationship with a sales representative and impose sales quotas, which ultimately results in increased "inter-media" competition in the larger market defined by the sale of media time for advertising dollars. The sellers in the market for sales representation services, i.e., the traditional cable reps, similarly find that these exclusive contracts serve their legitimate business interests. They are able to devote resources to market and demographic research, invest in technological innovation, and develop a specially tailored sales staff, all [25] for the benefit of a particular cable company, with the reasonable expectation of recovering this investment. These mutually beneficial aspects of the exclusive cable representation contract are particularly important to the parties, considering that spot cable advertising is relatively new, and advertisers must be persuaded to move their business from more traditional media to the cable companies. At bottom, the evidence shows that not only does competition exist in the sales representation service market, but it is actually enhanced in the larger, overarching market for advertising dollars.

While the exclusive nature of these cable rep contracts may temporarily preempt competition in providing representation services to a particular cable company, Thompson Everett has failed to establish that this relatively minor restriction outweighs the benefits of increased "inter-media" competition in the larger market for advertising dollars. See Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 333-35, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 (1961) HN8[] (exclusive dealing arrangements are prohibited only if they have "a substantial adverse effect on competition"); Advanced Health Care Servs. v. Radford Community Hosp., *261 910 F.2d 139, 151 (4th Cir. 1990) (same).

For the foregoing reasons, we agree with the district court that Thompson Everett has not advanced evidence that the short-term exclusive contracts between the traditional cable reps and the cable companies have a substantial anti-competitive effect.

VI

Thompson Everett also contends that the traditional cable reps are using the exclusive representation contracts to leverage the lawful monopolies of the cable companies into an unlawful monopoly in the cable company sales representation business. To maintain this argument, Thompson Everett focuses on a market defined only by the selling service provided by traditional reps to cable companies. That analysis, however, fails to take into account the competition existing among the cable reps for exclusive rep contracts and, more importantly, overlooks the realities of that market and the overarching market for advertising dollars. The cable rep service is only an agency service, since the traditional cable reps do not buy air time on their own account. As agents, cable reps act on behalf of cable companies who compete with other media for advertising dollars. Cable television advertising is a [27] relatively new medium and is not widely accepted by advertisers. To sell cable spot time, therefore, the cable companies are confronted with the task of persuading advertisers that cable spot advertising is an effective method for conveying the advertiser's message to the public. The dimensions 1327 of the narrowest market in which the cable companies operate, therefore, are measured by the various media which are interchangeable for conveying the advertiser's message to the public in the cable company's geographic area. See Greenville Pub. Co. v. Daily Reflector, Inc., 496 F.2d 391, 399 (4th Cir. 1974) HN9[] (holding that the relevant market is defined by the scope of "reasonable interchangeability").

Evidence supports yet a broader geographical market in some circumstances. Because advertising dollars are limited and many advertising efforts are regional or national, aimed at areas much larger than those served by local cable companies, the cable companies must often pursue regionally and nationally committed advertising dollars and therefore to compete in those circumstances with other cable companies as well as with other regional and national media.

Fatal to Thompson Everett's monopolization [28] claim is the absence of any evidence of monopoly power, such as price control or monopoly profits, or threatened monopoly power in any of these markets. On the contrary, the evidence in the record shows that cable advertising is an incipient part of the industry and that the business of providing sales services to cable companies is a service for which commission rates are competitively established and have been dropping. In short, Thompson Everett has been unable to identify any evidence that the cable reps possess monopoly power or threaten to obtain that power in a relevant market. See Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 602-03, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 \(1985\).

VII

Thompson Everett's common law claim, that the traditional cable reps have interfered with Thompson Everett's business relations through their concerted conduct in enforcing the exclusive cable rep contracts, lacks merit for the same reasons discussed in connection with its antitrust claims. No concerted activity was established and the reps' rights under the exclusive contracts are legally protected interests. In these circumstances, Thompson Everett has failed to establish the essential elements of the tort of [29] interference with business relations. See Restatement \(2d\) of Torts § 773 (any good faith assertion of a legally protected contractual interest is not actionable).

Accordingly, the judgment of the district court is

AFFIRMED.

The second reason for allowing only direct purchasers to recover in antitrust is that the uncertainties and difficulties in analyzing price and output decisions in the real economic world rather than in an economist's hypothetical model is too complex for efficient judicial resolution. Antitrust suits would become even more complex and burdensome as the courts attempted to determine the proper apportionment of pass-on antitrust charges to each level of indirect purchasers.

The third reason for precluding indirect purchasers from recovering on a pass-on theory is that it opens the door to multiple recoveries. The Supreme Court has reiterates the importance of policies preventing duplicative recoveries, avoiding claims of speculative damages, and keeping antitrust trials within judicially manageable limits.

[*503] John Cornyn, Justice

In this case, we decide whether the long-standing bar to indirect purchaser recovery in antitrust suits also bars indirect purchasers who primarily allege antitrust conduct, but who sue under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act ("DTPA"). TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. §§ 17.41-17.63 (Vernon 1987). The court of [*504] appeals held that retail buyers of infant formula "stated causes of action for unconscionable price disparity and taking advantage of plaintiffs' lack of capacity, knowledge, and experience to a grossly unfair degree." 873 S.W.2d 399, 408. We hold that indirect purchasers cannot recover under the DTPA upon allegations on which recovery would have been [*503] barred if brought under the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act ("the Antitrust Act"). TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. §§ 15.20, 15.21 (Vernon 1987). Accordingly, we reverse the judgment of the court of appeals and render judgment that the plaintiff-intervenors take nothing as a matter of law.¹

This case began in September 1991 when the Attorney General of the State of Texas sued Bristol-Myers Squibb Company, its wholly-owned subsidiary Mead Johnson & Company, Abbott Laboratories, Inc., a division of Ross Laboratories Division, and the American Academy of Pediatrics ("AAP"), seeking injunctive relief and damages under sections 15.20 and 15.21 of the Antitrust Act. The State alleged that the manufacturers conspired with each other to fix the wholesale price of infant formula and with the AAP to monopolize markets for infant formula and infant [*504] formula advertising. Specifically, the State maintained that the manufacturers' marketing plan created the appearance that pediatricians endorsed particular brands of infant formula, thus creating an illusion of uniqueness which was wholly unwarranted because federal regulations govern quality control and nutritional standards resulting in nearly identical products.

The State sought damages as parens patriae on behalf of consumers who purchased the infant formula and on behalf of the Women, Infants, and Children Program, a federally funded food distribution program administered by the Texas Department of Health. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1786 \(1994\); TEX. AGRIC. CODE ANN. § 15.001-7 (Vernon Supp. 1995). The manufacturers and the AAP specially excepted to the Attorney General's pleadings on the grounds that since neither the consumers nor the WIC program were direct purchasers, they lacked standing under the Antitrust Act. See Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\) (forbidding indirect purchasers to recover under federal antitrust laws). Moreover, since the State sues as parens patriae on behalf of its consumers to recover damages caused by an antitrust violation, it [*505] has no greater right to recovery than the consumers it represents. Kansas & Mo. v. Utilicorp United, 497 U.S. 199, 219, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, 110 S. Ct. 2807 \(1990\). Therefore, the manufacturers argued, the State's derivative claim on the indirect purchasers behalf was also barred for the same reason. The trial court sustained the special exceptions and dismissed the damages claim, but left the State's injunction claim pending.

Crystal Segura and other infant formula consumers intervened in the State's ongoing enforcement action, adding American Home Products Corporation as an additional manufacturer-defendant but omitting the AAP. The intervenors brought claims for damages against the manufacturers for the same conduct alleged by the State under the Antitrust Act. The intervenors, however, alleged that the conduct violates the Texas DTPA's prohibition against unconscionable conduct. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 17.50 \(a\) \(3\) (Vernon 1987). The manufacturers filed a plea to the jurisdiction and specially excepted to the intervenors' pleadings on the grounds that the intervenors' "classic antitrust claims" of price-fixing and monopolization are not cognizable under the DTPA.

The trial court sustained the manufacturers' [6] special exceptions and allowed the intervenors thirty days to replead. The intervenors made only slight changes, retaining their core allegations that the manufacturers violated the DTPA by attempting to monopolize the infant formula market and creating barriers to entry by these methods: 1) creating the illusion that infant formula products are somehow unique and nutritionally different, when all brands are nutritionally identical; 2) creating and maintaining dedicated franchise relationships with physicians and hospitals that endorse the purchasing of a [*505] particular brand name while Texas consumers are kept ignorant of the monies and lavish promotional resources which these physicians and hospitals receive for these endorsements; 3) giving free samples through franchise physicians and hospitals during the first months of infants' lives, thereby creating an endorsement of the manufacturers' products and later grossly overcharging Texas consumers in the retail market for baby formula products; 4) using market dominance to prevent other companies from selling baby formula products to consumers through direct consumer advertising that could inform Texas consumers about the generic nature [7] of these products and permit informed buying decisions based upon price and nutritional information; and 5) implementing nearly identical price increases. These allegations are also nearly identical to the allegations made by the antitrust plaintiffs, all of whom are direct purchasers and retailers of formula, in a multi-district consolidation currently pending in the Northern District of Florida. See In Re Infant Formula Antitrust Litigation, MDL Docket No. 878 (N.D.Fla.).

The manufacturers moved for summary judgment, arguing that (1) the intervenors' claims are cognizable only under the Antitrust Act, under which the intervenors, as indirect purchasers, lack standing, and (2) alternatively, even if DATE = 1/1990 DATE = 1/1990 of the intervenors' claims are DTPA claims, the intervenors have no standing because the DTPA and the Antitrust Act must be harmonized and the Antitrust Act bars suits by indirect purchasers. By response, the intervenors conceded that their claim would be barred under the Antitrust Act, but maintained that their pleadings were sufficient to state a cause of action under the DTPA for "unconscionable action or course of action." TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 17.45 (5).

The trial court [8] granted summary judgment for the manufacturers against the intervenors, severing that part of the case from the State's enforcement action. The court of appeals reversed and remanded for trial on the merits. We granted the manufacturers' writ of error.

The manufacturers moved for summary judgment on two closely related grounds, neither of which specifically addressed unconscionability, but both of which assert that the bar to indirect purchaser recovery in antitrust controls the outcome of this action.² In reviewing the judgment of the court of appeals, we therefore do not consider whether the manufacturers established by their summary judgment proof that the alleged conduct was not unconscionable as a matter of law under the DTPA.

² The specific grounds found in the defendants' motion for summary judgment are as follows:

- A. The claims asserted by plaintiff-intervenors, although couched in the language of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("DTPA"), are cognizable only under the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act (the "TFEAA"); plaintiff-intervenors, as indirect purchasers of infant formula, have no standing under the TFEAA to bring such claims.
- B. In the alternative, even if plaintiff-intervenors' claims are cognizable as DTPA claims, plaintiff-intervenors still have no standing because the later-enacted TFEAA, which specifically addresses the claims asserted by plaintiff-intervenors, bars suits by indirect purchasers.

The concurrence focuses on only the first half of the first ground and determines that the intervenors' claims have no merit as DTPA claims. This is an issue we need not decide because even if the motion for summary judgment could be read as raising an issue on unconscionability, we choose to dispose of this case on the primary grounds argued by the parties in both the trial court and on appeal.

[9] HN1[↑] We begin with the Legislature's mandate that Texas antitrust law be harmonized with federal antitrust law. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 15.04;³ see Caller-Times Pub. Co. v. Triad Communications Inc., 826 S.W.2d 576, 580 \(Tex. 1992\). Allowing the intervenors to sue under the DTPA on allegations that are virtually identical to the antitrust allegations made by both the Texas [\[*506\]](#) Attorney General and the multi-district litigation plaintiffs in Florida would essentially permit an end run around the policies allowing only direct purchasers to recover under the Antitrust Act.

[10] The legal reasoning behind the prohibition on indirect purchaser recovery in antitrust has three principal bases, each of which the Supreme Court discussed at some length in Illinois Brick. First, the prohibition on indirect purchaser recovery had its genesis in Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 \(1968\). That case involved an antitrust treble-damages action brought under section 4 of the Clayton Act against a manufacturer of shoe machinery by one of its customers, a manufacturer and wholesaler of shoes (a direct purchaser). In defense of allegations of monopolistic pricing, the shoe machinery manufacturer sought to show that the plaintiff-wholesaler had not been injured in its business as required by section 4 because it had passed on the claimed illegal overcharge to those who bought shoes from it, namely retailers and ultimately consumers. In Hanover Shoe, the HN3[↑] Court rejected as a matter of law the defense that indirect, rather than direct purchasers, were the parties injured by the antitrust violation. See Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. 481 at 487 at 487-94, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224; see also Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. 720 at 728 at 728-36, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061.

Then, in 1977, in Illinois Brick, the Court [\[*11\]](#) held that if an HN4[↑] antitrust violator may not use a pass-on theory defensively to avoid liability against a direct purchaser as it had held in Hanover Shoe, an indirect purchaser also may not use a pass-on theory offensively to win damages against an antitrust violator. The Court stated: "We are left, then, with two alternatives: either we must overrule Hanover Shoe (or at least narrowly confine it to its facts), or we must preclude [indirect purchasers] from seeking to recover on their pass-on theory. We choose the latter course." Id. at 736.

HN5[↑] The second reason for allowing only direct purchasers to recover in antitrust is that "the uncertainties and difficulties in analyzing price and output decisions in the real economic world rather than in an economist's hypothetical model" is too complex for efficient judicial resolution. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 732. Antitrust suits would become even more complex and burdensome as the courts attempted to determine the proper apportionment of pass-on antitrust charges to each level of indirect purchasers.⁴ We are persuaded by the reasoning of Illinois Brick:

³ Section 15.04 provides:

HN2[↑] The purpose of this Act is to maintain and promote economic competition in trade and commerce occurring wholly or partly within the State of Texas and to provide the benefits of that competition to consumers in the state. The provisions of this Act shall be construed to accomplish this purpose and shall be construed in harmony with federal judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes to the extent consistent with this purpose. (emphasis added).

Permitting the use of pass-on theories under § 4 [of the Clayton Act] essentially would transform treble-damages actions into massive efforts to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that could have absorbed part of the overcharge from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers. However appealing this attempt to allocate the overcharge might seem in theory, it would add whole new dimensions of complexity to treble-damages suits and seriously undermine their effectiveness.

Id. at 737. In both Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick, the Court expressed "concern for the reduction in the effectiveness of [antitrust] suits if brought by indirect purchasers with a smaller stake in the outcome than that of direct purchasers suing for the full amount of the overcharge." Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 745. HN6[¹⁵] The third reason for precluding indirect purchasers from recovering on a pass-on theory is that it opens the door to multiple recoveries. See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at [*507] 730. Allowing both direct purchasers and consumers to recover overcharge damages would expose antitrust defendants to duplicate damages for the same injury. 2 AREEDA [13] & HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW, P 371c, at 257-58 (rev. ed. 1995). The Supreme Court has reiterated the importance of policies preventing duplicative recoveries, avoiding claims of speculative damages, and keeping antitrust trials within judicially manageable limits. See Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 545, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983).

This same reasoning applies to plaintiffs suing under the DTPA on allegations that are in essence antitrust claims. Assuming, arguendo, that price fixing or other anticompetitive conduct is recoverable under the DTPA, indirect purchasers would face the same proof problems as they would have faced had an antitrust cause of action been recognized. HN7[¹⁶] We will not interpret the DTPA in a manner that rewards creative pleading at the expense of consistent application of legal principles.

HN8[¹⁷] Our holding is not based on any determination of standing under the DTPA. As Areeda and Hovenkamp have noted, the Court in Illinois Brick saw "which persons have been injured by an illegal overcharge" as "analytically distinct" from "which persons have sustained injuries too remote to give them standing. . ." [14] Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 728 n.7; AREEDA & HOVENKAMP, supra, P 371c, at 259. Our holding today only forecloses the recovery of damages for seeking a prohibited antitrust recovery under the masquerade of our consumer protection statute.

For these reasons, we hold that the conduct alleged by the intervenors is not actionable under the DTPA. We therefore reverse the judgment of the court of appeals and render judgment that plaintiffs take nothing as a matter of law.

Concur

The Court today establishes a broad rule that bars DTPA claims by indirect purchasers when their claims are based upon unconscionable acts that could also constitute anti-competitive acts prohibited under the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act (the Antitrust Act). Although I agree that the plaintiffs in this case cannot prevail on their DTPA claims, I think it is unnecessary to reach the question of whether the Antitrust Act has such preemptive force

¹ because the plaintiffs' DTPA claims are without merit. Accordingly, I concur in the Court's judgment, but I cannot join in its opinion.

[15] I. Preservation of Error

Rule 166a mandates that a motion for summary judgment "shall state the specific grounds therefor" and that "issues not expressly presented to the trial court by written motion, answer or other response shall not be considered on appeal as grounds for reversal." TEX. R. CIV. P. 166a(c). In applying this rule, the Court adopts the view that the defendants' motion for summary judgment raised only issues dependent upon the construction of the Antitrust Act, and that the motion did not challenge the existence of a plausible DTPA claim if the Antitrust Act was found not to override the DTPA in this case. ___ S.W.2d at ___ ("We therefore do not consider whether the manufacturers established by their summary judgment proof that the alleged conduct was not unconscionable as a matter of law under the DTPA."). My reading of the motion for summary judgment leads me to the conclusion that the defendants preserved error on their challenge to the merits of the DTPA claim, without regard to the potential impact of a proper construction of the Antitrust Act.

The defendants' motion for summary judgment included the following statement:

[*508] The claims asserted [16] by plaintiff-intervenors, although couched in the language of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("DTPA"), are cognizable only under the [Antitrust Act]; plaintiff-intervenors, as indirect purchasers of infant formula, have no standing under the [Antitrust Act] to bring such claims.

Tr. at 711 (emphasis added). In my view, when one argues that a claim is not cognizable under a particular statute, this is sufficient to challenge whether a claim has been stated under that statute. See McConnell v. Southside Indep. Sch. Dist., 858 S.W.2d 337, 340 (Tex. 1993) ("Grounds may be stated concisely, without detail and argument." (quoting Roberts v. Southwest Tex. Methodist Hosp., 811 S.W.2d 141, 146 (Tex. App.--San Antonio 1991, writ denied))).

In this case, the plaintiff-intervenors brought only a DTPA claim, so the defendants' motion for summary judgment must dispose of that DTPA claim. Therefore, the only reasonable interpretation of the motion is that it challenges the validity of the DTPA claim. Thus, the first ground listed in the motion, as quoted above, must be read as arguing that: (1) the facts as alleged do not state a DTPA claim; (2) the facts as [17] alleged do state an antitrust claim; and (3) the court cannot treat the pleadings as an antitrust claim because the plaintiff-intervenors do not have standing under antitrust law.

This interpretation is further borne out by the joint brief filed by the defendants in support of its plea to the jurisdiction and certain special exceptions, which was incorporated by reference in the motion for summary judgment: "Plaintiff-intervenors . . . have failed to state a claim under the [DTPA] The DTPA is not designed to address and does not address such antitrust violations." Tr. at 793. The brief also explains: "No provision in the DTPA, fairly construed, covers the antitrust violations alleged here." Tr. at 798-99. The brief then analyzes both prongs of the DTPA's definition of unconscionability and concludes that neither prong could be interpreted as encompassing the alleged misconduct.

These same arguments were reiterated in the briefs before the court of appeals. In the defendants' initial brief before that court, they argued, "Section 17.45 of the DTPA has never been construed to cover anti-competitive actions of the sort alleged by intervenors. Nor is there anything in the legislative [18] history that would indicate that this section was intended to apply to price-fixing or other similar violations of the antitrust laws." Brief of

Appellees, at 10. Similarly, in their motion for rehearing in the court of appeals, the defendants argued, "There is no case, no bit of DTPA legislative history, and no hint by any commentator that the DTPA ever was intended or assumed to encompass price fixing or monopolization." Appellee's Motion for Rehearing, at 7-8.

Given these clear and unambiguous arguments on the merits of the DTPA claims in this case, I cannot join with the Court's discussion of the relationship between the Antitrust Act and the DTPA, when that issue is unnecessary to resolve the case before us.

II. The Merits of the DTPA Claim

Under the DTPA, an unconscionable action or course of action is one which:

- (A) takes advantage of the lack of knowledge, ability, experience, or capacity of a person to a grossly unfair degree; or
- (B) results in a gross disparity between the value received and consideration paid, in a transaction involving transfer of consideration.

TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 17.45(5).

"To obtain summary judgment, a movant [19] must either negate at least one element of the plaintiff's theory of recovery or plead and conclusively establish each element of an affirmative defense." Centeq Realty, Inc. v. Siegler, 899 S.W.2d 195, 197 (Tex. 1995) (citations omitted). In determining whether the plaintiff-intervenors have stated a viable claim under either definition, we must take the allegations of fact alleged in their petition as true. Nixon v. Mr. Property Mgmt. Co., 690 S.W.2d 546, 549 (Tex. 1985). However, mere conclusory statements do not constitute effective summary judgment proof and need not be given the same presumptive force in this analysis. See Life Ins. Co. v. Gar-Dal, Inc., 570 S.W.2d 378, 382 (Tex. 1978).

[*509] Under the first prong of unconscionability, the plaintiff-intervenors essentially argue that only the defendants and the physicians who they recruited as surrogate salespeople had the knowledge, ability, and experience to fairly evaluate the nutritional value of infant formula. This is true, they claim, even though the defendants' products are sold through "grocery stores, supermarkets, drug stores, discount merchandisers and other retail outlets." They allege that by banding [20] together to refrain from direct-to-consumer advertising and using the doctors to create an illusion of uniqueness or nutritional superiority, the defendants took advantage of consumers' lack of knowledge to a grossly unfair degree.

This argument fails on two counts. First, the plaintiff-intervenors assume in making these largely conclusory allegations that consumers lack the knowledge, ability, or experience to fairly evaluate the desirability of infant formula marketed by the defendants. But, certainly, consumers cannot be presumed to lack a sufficient level of knowledge to assess many factors relevant to choosing a nutritional program for their infants: the emotional and developmental advantages of breast feeding, the occasional inconveniences of breast feeding, the cost of alternatives such as breast feeding or cow's milk, and the convenience and extended shelf life of powdered infant formula. Furthermore, judicial notice may be taken of the availability of advice on every facet of child-rearing (including this one) from a burgeoning market of magazines, books, consultants, relatives, friends, public service brochures, and health care agencies. Given this general level of readily [21] available information, the plaintiff-intervenors basic assumption that the public lacks basic information with which to evaluate the defendants' marketing techniques is simply a bald, unsupported conclusion. Whatever advantage their cumulative knowledge gave them in this market, the defendant's conduct simply cannot reasonably be construed as meeting the requisite standard of "a showing that the resulting unfairness was glaringly noticeable, flagrant, complete and unmitigated." Chastain v. Koonce, 700 S.W.2d 579, 584 (Tex. 1985).

Second, the plaintiff-intervenors assume that the defendants' advantage is somehow different from that held by any manufacturer. Such comparison between manufacturers is relevant because, as we stated in Chastain, the standard against which a seller's conduct is judged is an objective one. Chastain, 700 S.W.2d at 583. In applying this standard, the court must determine whether the seller's attempts to tout the superiority of its products rose above mere "puffing." See Dowling v. NADW Marketing, Inc., 631 S.W.2d 726, 728-29 (Tex. 1982); see also Shaw Equip. Co. v. Hoople Jordan Constr. Co., 428 S.W.2d 835, 838-39 (Tex. Civ. App.--Dallas [22] 1968, no writ). Without such an objective standard, the trial court is left in the untenable position of assessing the relative value of competing products. As one amicus in this case argued:

A courtroom . . . is the wrong place to determine whether Pepsi tastes better than Coke, Old Spice smells better than Brut, Colgate whitens teeth better than Crest, Gillette shaves closer than Schick, Bayer works faster than Anacin, MCI is better than AT&T, Nike is better for slam dunking than Converse, Hewlett Packard calculators do more things than Texas Instrument calculators, and so on. Many of these "superiority" claims involve matters of opinion, taste, and preference rather than matters subject to factual verification. Robust competition--not lawsuits under the DTPA--must resolve these questions.

Amici Curiae Brief of Texas Ass'n of Bus. & Nat'l Fed. of Indep. Bus., at 11.

Instead, an unconscionability claim must establish that the seller, armed with superior knowledge, ability, or experience to discern the impropriety of a particular transaction, nonetheless employed high-pressure tactics, preyed upon a consumer's vulnerability, or used misleading inducements to convince [23] the consumer to purchase inappropriate goods. See, e.g., Bennett v. Bailey, 597 S.W.2d 532, 535 (Tex. Civ. App.--Eastland 1980, writ ref'd n.r.e.) (holding a dance studio liable for an unconscionable act in its inducement of a vulnerable widow to pay $ 30,000 for dance lessons). Importantly, these unconscionable [*510] acts must be directed at the consumers who lack the knowledge and ability to make an informed decision.

Because the plaintiff-intervenors allegations, taken as true, do not establish either a significant absence of knowledge and ability on behalf of consumers in our free-market, information-saturated society or an objectively determinable abusive course of action in the defendants' dealings with consumers, the claims under the first prong of unconscionability must fail.

To establish a viable claim under the second prong of unconscionability, the plaintiff-intervenors must establish that there was a gross disparity between the value received and the consideration paid. This gross disparity test has typically been applied when the product received is something other than what the buyer sought or when the product is virtually worthless, at least in comparison to [24] the good sought. See, e.g., Teague v. Bandy, 793 S.W.2d 50, 56 (Tex. App.--Austin 1990, writ denied) (finding a gross disparity in value when a cow purchased as an embryo donor proved to be infertile). The disparity in value must be "complete and unmitigated." Chastain, 700 S.W.2d at 583.

In this case, the plaintiff-intervenors allege that there was a gross disparity in value because the manufacturing costs of the defendants' infant formula were far below the wholesale price. Between 1978 and 1990, the total manufacturing cost of a 13-ounce can of formula ranged from 20 to 32 cents. During the same period, the wholesale price ranged from 54 cents to $ 1.73. The plaintiff-intervenors argue that this differential between sales price and wholesale cost constitutes a gross disparity in value.

I disagree with this argument for two reasons. First, the plaintiff-intervenors have compared the wholesale price to manufacturing costs rather than the value received. While manufacturing costs certainly affect the value of a specific good, the two measures are distinct. Manufacturing costs include only the costs of raw materials and processing costs. This measure does not include the [25] manufacturers' research costs, sales expenses, administrative costs, or profit. When these other factors are added to manufacturing costs, the resulting total, when allocated to the individual units produced, is one measure of the market value. But value is also dependent upon other considerations, such as the supply and demand in the market.

Every other reported gross disparity case under the DTPA compares the sales price to the market value. See, e.g., Sun Power, Inc. v. Adams, 751 S.W.2d 689, 694-95 (Tex. App.--Ft. Worth 1988, no writ); Poe v. Hutchins, 737 S.W.2d 574, 585 (Tex. App.--Dallas 1987, writ ref'd n.r.e.); Bel-Go Assocs. v. Vitale, 723 S.W.2d 182, 189 (Tex. App. Houston [1st Dist.] 1986, no writ); Vick v. George, 671 S.W.2d 541, 550 (Tex. App.--San Antonio 1983), rev'd in part on other grounds, 686 S.W.2d 99 \(Tex. 1984\). The plaintiff-intervenors cite no cases, and we can find none, where a disparity in value is determined by reference to manufacturing costs alone.

Second, a sales price ranging from two-and-a-half to five-and-a-half times the manufacturing cost is not a gross disparity in value. Were this degree of price differential sufficient [26] to state a claim under the DTPA, every consumer who pays $ 1.00 for a cup of coffee or $ 1.50 for french fries would have a claim of unconscionability. To hold otherwise would require courts to determine what constitutes a "fair" price. As our case law reveals, courts have refrained from making such determinations and have refused to find a gross disparity in value unless the goods received are virtually worthless. See, e.g., Dwight's Discount Vacuum Cleaner City, Inc. v. Scott Fetzer Co., 860 F.2d 646, 650-51 \(5th Cir. 1988\), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1108, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1024, 109 S. Ct. 3161 (1989) ("The 'gross disparity' test obviously mirrors a fraud-type measure of recovery, in which a consumer receives a product inferior in quality to that which he intended to buy or, alternatively, when the consumer is defrauded out of his money entirely."); Wyatt v. Petrila, 752 S.W.2d 683, 685 (Tex. App.--Corpus Christi 1988, writ denied) ("In DTPA actions based on unconscionability, we look to gross disparity, not merely arguable unfairness.").

[*511] Because the plaintiff-intervenors have not claimed that there was a gross disparity between the value received and the consideration paid, and because the disparity between [27] the manufacturing costs and the consideration paid was not a gross disparity, the summary judgment on the claims based on the second prong of unconscionability was proper.

IV. Conclusion

I agree with the Court that the summary judgment rendered by the trial court was proper. However, I base my decision on an evaluation of the merits of the DTPA claims, a point which I conclude was before the trial court and thus preserved. Because the facts alleged, even if taken as true, do not constitute unconscionable acts under either prong of the unconscionability definition in the DTPA, I would reverse the judgment of the court of appeals and render judgment in favor of the defendants.

John Cornyn

Justice

OPINION DELIVERED: June 29, 1995

Raul A. Gonzalez, Justice

I concur with the Court's opinion and judgment. I write separately to articulate additional reasons why I believe the judgment is correct. The court of appeals held that the retail buyers of infant formula stated "causes of action for unconscionable price disparity and taking advantage of plaintiff's lack of capacity, knowledge, and experience to a grossly unfair degree." 873 S.W.2d 399, 408. However, [28] the intervenors' allegations are primarily antitrust claims, which are not cognizable under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act (DTPA), TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE §§ 17.41-17.63.

In 1973, due in large part to the leadership of then Attorney General John L. Hill, the Texas Legislature passed the DTPA. The Act's stated purpose is to "protect consumers against false, misleading, and deceptive business practices, unconscionable actions, and breaches of warranty and to provide efficient and economical procedures to secure such protection."

Id. § 17.44.

A decade later, the Legislature modified existing state antitrust laws when it enacted the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983. Id. §§ 15.01-15.40. In subsections 15.05(a)-(e) of the Antitrust Act, the Legislature largely incorporated federal anti-monopoly and anti-combination language from sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Trust Act and from sections 3, 6, and 7 of the Clayton Act. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 15.05(a)-(e); see 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, 14, 17, 18. In passing the new Antitrust Act, the Legislature stated that its purpose was to "maintain and promote economic competition in [29] trade and commerce occurring wholly or partly within the State of Texas and to provide the benefits of that competition to consumers in the state." TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 15.04. This section further provides, "The provisions of this Act shall be construed to accomplish this purpose and shall be construed in harmony with federal judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes to the extent consistent with this purpose." Id. (emphasis added). Therefore, the Legislature's mandate that Texas antitrust law be harmonized with federal antitrust law necessarily constrains this Court. See Caller-Times Publishing Co. v. Triad Communications, Inc., 826 S.W.2d 576, 580-81 (Tex. 1992).

In determining whether the intervenors may maintain a DTPA cause of action for the same conduct that would not be actionable under the antitrust laws, we look to federal case law and policy for guidance. I conclude that to allow the intervenors to pursue a cause of action under the DTPA on grounds which would not support a claim under the Antitrust Act is to create a loophole. Allowing a claim under the DTPA that state and federal antitrust law would bar can only subvert legislative [30] intent.

In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 746-47, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), the United States Supreme Court noted that direct purchasers alone have standing to maintain causes of action for injuries caused by violators of federal antitrust laws. Only direct purchasers may enforce antitrust laws and collect damages to the full extent of their injuries. Id. at 746 (reiterating the rule of Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 494, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 (1968)). A direct purchaser [*512] is one who purchases goods or services directly from a manufacturer, wholesaler, or other provider who has violated section 4 of the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). On the other hand, an indirect purchaser is one who purchases goods or services from a seller or provider who is down the marketing chain from the antitrust violator. See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 746-47. The principal reason for allowing only direct purchasers to recover in antitrust is that "the uncertainties and difficulties in analyzing price and output decisions 'in the real economic world rather than in an economist's hypothetical model'" are too complex for most courts to tackle efficiently. 431 U.S. at 732 (quoting [31] Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 493). This policy rationale for allowing only direct purchasers to assert causes of action applies with equal force to the state antitrust laws.

As with any statute, our primary emphasis in construing the state antitrust laws is to determine the Legislature's intent. See Pennington v. Singleton, 606 S.W.2d 682, 686 (Tex. 1980). When determining legislative intent, we "look to the language of the statute, legislative history, the nature and object to be obtained, and the consequences that would follow from alternate constructions." Union Bankers Ins. Co. v. Shelton, 889 S.W.2d 278, 280 (Tex. 1994). The purpose and legislative history of Texas's antitrust laws support the conclusion that the intervenors' claims are remediable only within the scheme of the Antitrust Act. The intervenors, who were indirect purchasers down the marketing chain from the alleged antitrust violator, cannot use the DTPA as a "back door" to assert a claim against one they did not deal with directly.

When the Legislature passed the Antitrust Act in 1983, it intended to create a remedy for private parties, including consumers, where none had previously existed. When then [32] Senator Lloyd Doggett introduced the bill later enacted as the Antitrust Act to the Texas Senate, he explained that no private remedy existed at the time to remedy the harms which the Antitrust Act intended to provide. He stated:

There is under the Texas existing law no private remedy. As you know, under the federal Sherman Act and under the Clayton Act, there is a private remedy so that we do not rely on government . . . entirely for cleaning up the market place where there is price fixing and other illegal antitrust conspiracies . . . One of the most important changes is to provide for a private cause of action.

State Bar of Texas Antitrust and Business Litigation Section, Monograph: Texas Antitrust and Related Statutes, at III-58 (1991) (transcript of Senate Floor Debate, May 17, 1983) (emphasis added). It stands to reason that Senator

Doggett would not have stated that there was "no private remedy" if in fact the DTPA was already providing a cause of action for antitrust violations at the time the Antitrust Act was being debated. Also, then Attorney General Jim Mattox was among those urging a treble damages clause in the Antitrust Act. He argued:

I [33] think it's very important . . . that today even under these bid-rigging cases . . . we're having some difficulty in recovery, because if we move under federal law there are certain damage provisions, what we call treble damages that are available to us.

Those provisions are not available to us when it is a bid-rigging situation where it is not involved in interstate commerce.

.... That's basically what we're overall asking you to do, is to in effect cover the entire spectrum of business activity . . . the single business, monopolistic-type practices, and then give us the power to enforce the law through bringing Texas into this area of improvement in our damages provisions, and in the penalties that can be assessed.

Monograph, supra, at III-3 (transcript of Hearing of Senate Jurisprudence Committee, Feb. 15, 1983).

When the Antitrust Act was passed, the version of the DTPA then in effect provided authority for treble damages. It also had the same unconscionability provision as it has today. See TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE §§ 17.45(5), 17.50(a)(3). We have long recognized a presumption [*513] that the Legislature enacted a statute "with [34] complete knowledge of the existing law and with reference to it." Acker v. Texas Water Comm'n, 790 S.W.2d 299, 301 (Tex. 1990). Furthermore, the Legislature is not presumed to have done a useless act. Webb County Appraisal Dist. v. New Laredo Hotel, Inc., 792 S.W.2d 952, 954 (Tex. 1990); Hunter v. Fort Worth Capital Corp., 620 S.W.2d 547, 551 (Tex. 1981). Had the conduct proscribed under the Antitrust Act already been covered by the provisions of the DTPA, as the intervenors argue, the Antitrust Act would have been unnecessary. Its treble remedies provision would have been redundant. I conclude that the Legislature did not commit a useless act in enacting the Antitrust Act in 1983. It provides causes of action and remedies not previously available.

Furthermore, no amendment to the DTPA since 1983 indicates any subsequent legislative intent to expand the DTPA to encompass price-fixing and monopoly claims. (Of course, there would be no need to do so, since the Antitrust Act serves this purpose.) No prior case by any court has held that price fixing and monopolization claims are proscribed by the DTPA; nor has any commentator suggested that they should be.

The intervenors [35] and the dissenting opinion point to the cumulative remedy provisions of both the DTPA and the Antitrust Act as evidence that the DTPA may encompass the conduct alleged in this case. The cumulative remedy provision of the DTPA provides:

The provisions of this subchapter are not exclusive. The remedies provided in this subchapter are in addition to any other procedures or remedies provided for in any other law . . . An act or practice that is a violation of law other than this subchapter may be made the basis of an action under this subchapter if the act or practice is proscribed by a provision of this subchapter or is declared by such other law to be actionable under this subchapter.

TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 17.43 (emphasis added). According to section 17.43, therefore, either the DTPA must make conduct illegal or another statute must, and refer to the DTPA as the source for a cause of action to remedy it. In short, there are two methods by which a DTPA cause of action can be reached. The Antitrust Act's cumulative remedy provision states:

The provisions of this Act are cumulative of each other and of any other provisions of law of this state in effect [36] relating to the same subject.

Id. § 15.02 (emphasis added). The Antitrust Act is cumulative if another statute provides a remedy "in effect relating to the same subject." Unless at least one of these conditions is met, the DTPA and the Antitrust Act are not cumulative.

Under the foregoing provisions, may the intervenors maintain a DTPA cause of action? I think not. First, the DTPA itself does not cover, by its own terms, the conduct the intervenors alleged. The direct avenue to DTPA recovery is unavailable. Second, the Antitrust Act does not expressly declare that the conduct it proscribes is actionable under the DTPA. Thus, a plaintiff cannot reach a DTPA claim via the Antitrust Act's reference to it. There is no such cross-reference. The legislative history quoted above does not indicate an intent for the DTPA to provide the remedy for the subjects the Antitrust Act was intended to address. Moreover, the Antitrust Act contains its own remedy provisions for those entitled to make a claim for relief.

The dissent also argues that since the Antitrust Act is not expressly exempted from the DTPA, it must be cumulative with the DTPA. This argument fails because of a false [37] premise, namely that the DTPA initially would have addressed conduct covered by the Antitrust Act. The legislative history of the Antitrust Act establishes that because the DTPA did not initially cover claims sounding in antitrust, there was no need for an exemption.

For these reasons, the conduct alleged by the intervenors is not actionable under the DTPA.

Dissent

The dispositive issue here is whether the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act ("Antitrust Act") precludes plaintiffs as indirect [*514] purchasers from bringing suit for misrepresentation, fraud, price-fixing, and market monopolization against infant formula manufacturers under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act ("DTPA"). Because the Antitrust Act is not the exclusive remedy for these practices and does not preclude consumers from bringing suit under the DTPA, I respectfully dissent.

I.

The majority concludes that any action barred by Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\), should similarly be barred even if the claimants assert a DTPA and not an antitrust claim. It reasons that under [38] Illinois Brick federal antitrust law prohibits suits by indirect purchasers, and that, because the Texas antitrust statute is identical to the federal statute, Texas antitrust law also prohibits suits by indirect purchasers. The majority contends that if the DTPA allows indirect purchasers to sue for monopolistic practices, then it irreconcilably conflicts with the Antitrust Act. It does not suggest that any particular provision of the Antitrust Act conflicts with the DTPA, arguing instead that the legislature intended the Antitrust Act to be consistent with federal statutes.

The Antitrust Act by its own terms does not conflict with the DTPA, and the majority's argument that the Antitrust Act is the exclusive remedy for allegations which may sound in both antitrust and DTPA conflicts with the cumulative remedy provisions of both the Antitrust Act and the DTPA. The Antitrust Act provides that "the provisions of this Act are cumulative of each other and of any other provision of law of this state in effect relating to the same subject." TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 15.02 \(a\) (emphasis added). The DTPA also provides: "The provisions of this subchapter are not exclusive [39] . The remedies provided in this subchapter are in addition to any other procedures or remedies provided for in any other law." Id. § 17.43 (emphasis added).

Had the legislature intended that all anti-competitive conduct be actionable exclusively under the Antitrust Act it would have said so with specific language. Instead, the statute provides just the opposite. The intent that the Antitrust Act not be exclusive even when in conflict with another law is demonstrated by its legislative history. As originally introduced, Senate Bill 397, which enacted the state's antitrust act, provided that "whenever the application of any provision of this Act conflicts with the application of any other law of this State, the provisions of this Act shall prevail." The legislature deleted this language before final passage. "The deletion of a provision in a pending bill discloses the legislative intent to reject the proposal." Camacho v. Samaniego, 831 S.W.2d 804, 814 (Tex. 1992) (quoting Smith v. Baldwin, 611 S.W.2d 611, 616, 617 (Tex. 1980)). Not only did the legislature reject the provision, it went even further to adopt an alternative provision expressly making the Antitrust [40] Act cumulative. Moreover, had the legislature intended to exclude DTPA coverage for conduct potentially violating the state antitrust act, it would have done so under the "exemptions" provision of the DTPA, which states the conduct and class of defendants exempted by the DTPA. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 17.49. The majority circumvents clear legislative purpose and intent under the guise of statutory construction. This Court has denounced such practices:

[Courts] are not free to rewrite the statutes to reach a result [they] might consider more desirable, in the name of statutory construction. A court may not write special exceptions into a statute so as to make it inapplicable under certain circumstances not mentioned in the statute.

Public Utility Comm'n v. Cofer, 754 S.W.2d 121, 124 (Tex. 1988) (citations omitted). Courts are admonished to "take statutes as they find them . . . giving full effect to all of its terms." Republicbank Dallas, N.A. v. Interkal, Inc., 691 S.W.2d 605, 607 (Tex. 1985). Here, the majority misconstrues the intent of the DTPA contrary to its previous interpretations.¹ The DTPA should be "liberally" [*515] construed and applied to promote [41] its underlying purposes, which are to protect consumers against false, misleading, and deceptive business practices, unconscionable actions, and breaches of warranty." TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 17.44.

[42] The majority's analysis suffers from the misconception that only one cause of action arises from any particular conduct, and consequently it concludes that plaintiff-intervenors cannot have a DTPA cause of action because the conduct is also proscribed by the Antitrust Act. But numerous legal theories premised upon the same conduct may overlap, and the legislature may create a number of remedies for that conduct without conflict. For example, a sale of stock may give rise to liability under the Blue Sky Law, TEX. REV. CIV. STAT. ANN. arts. 581.1 - 581.41, as well as the DTPA, among other statutory causes. Moreover, an insurer's failure to pay a claim absent a reasonable basis may give rise to a claim under the insurance code, the DTPA, and common law bad faith, all based on the same conduct. At least one set of commentators notes that state deceptive practices statutes and antitrust laws are ordinarily cumulative:

Numerous states have enacted Unfair and Deceptive Practices Acts, sometimes generically called UDPA or unfair competition acts. Typically, these acts proscribe unfair, unlawful, or deceptive trade practices, and are roughly analogous to § 5 of the Federal Trade [43] Commission Act. 15 U.S.C. § 45. A violation of state antitrust law can also be a violation of these acts which can trigger substantial civil penalties in addition to penalties provided by state antitrust law.

Thomas Greene, et al., State Antitrust Law and Enforcement, in 32ND ANNUAL ANTITRUST LAW INSTITUTE 1991, at 617 (PLI Corp. Law & Practice Course Handbook Series No. B4-6965, 1991) (emphasis added). Likewise, California recognizes its state deceptive trade practices act includes price-fixing violations. See People v. National Ass'n of Realtors, 120 Cal. App. 3d 459, 174 Cal. Rptr. 728 (Cal. Ct. App. 1981). That court held that California's

Co. v. Barnes*, 741 S.W.2d 349, 352 (Tex. 1987) (refusing to require actual payment to establish "consumer" standing); *Mayo v. unfair trade practices act provision for treble damages could apply to a state antitrust action, because if the legislature intended to exclude an antitrust violation from the act's provision such an exclusion would have been expressly included in the act itself. Id. at 475.

II.

Plaintiff-intervenors pleaded a cause of action exclusively under the DTPA, alleging that defendants violated sections 17.45 (5) (A) and (B), which provide:

- (5) "Unconscionable action or course of action" means an act or practice which, to [44] a person's detriment:
(A) takes advantage of the lack of knowledge, ability, experience or capacity of a person to a grossly unfair degree; or
(B) results in a gross disparity between the value received and consideration paid in a transaction involving transfer of consideration.

TEX. BUS. & COM CODE §§ 17.45 (A) & (B). The plaintiff-intervenors allege the defendant-infant formula manufacturers capitalized on the vulnerability and inferior knowledge and bargaining position of consumers by using physicians, nurses, and other hospital staff to indoctrinate parents to use their particular brands of infant formula. These parents were deceived by implicit misrepresentations that the proffered infant formula contained properties different or unique from other, less expensive brands. But federal regulations mandate that all formulas contain the same essential ingredients and nutritional value, and, knowing that parents are susceptible [*516] to the recommendations of physicians and nurses, the defendants used those professionals as a virtual secondary sales force to influence and defraud consumers into purchasing their products.² These allegations state classic DTPA violations. [45]

The DTPA generally requires only that a purchaser or prospective purchaser be "connected with" the transaction, and no privity of contract is necessary. Kennedy v. Sale, 689 S.W.2d 890, 892-93 (Tex. 1985); Flenniken v. Longview Bank & Trust Co., 661 S.W.2d 705, 707 (Tex. 1983); Cameron v. Terrell & Garrett, Inc., 618 S.W.2d 535, 540-41 (Tex. 1981). The class which may recover encompasses everyone who seeks to enjoy the benefits of the transaction. Cameron, 618 S.W.2d at 541. Indirect purchasers who are "consumers" [46] have always been allowed to bring DTPA claims without a privity requirement. The majority now conjures the new question whether all DTPA claims will be henceforth subject to a privity requirement which overrules this Courts' consistent precedents, see Kennedy, 689 S.W.2d at 892-93; Flenniken, 661 S.W.2d at 707; Cameron, 618 S.W.2d at 540-41, and it does so under the chimera of an antitrust analysis to avoid confronting a huge body of established Texas DTPA law.

For the foregoing reasons, I dissent. I would affirm the judgment of the court of appeals that the plaintiff-intervenors stated a viable cause of action for unconscionability under the DTPA.

In order to have standing to bring an antitrust suit, private plaintiffs must demonstrate what is called antitrust injury. Products belong in the same market when they are reasonably interchangeable for the same uses and thus exhibit a high cross-elasticity of demand. Cross-elasticity of demand refers to whether consumers will shift from one product to the other in response to changes in their relative costs. When products have high cross-elasticity, it means that small changes in the price or quality of one product has dramatic effects on the sales of the other. When products have low cross-elasticity, it means that price and quality changes in one product causes little or no change in the sales of the other. Stated more simply, defining a relevant product market is primarily a process of describing those groups of producers which, because of the similarity of their products, have the ability, actual or potential, to take significant amounts of business away from each other.

It is a primary purpose of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, to preserve this constraining effect on the exercise of market power. Merger Guidelines § 0.1.

In evaluating reasonable substitutability and measuring cross-elasticity of demand, it is appropriate to consider a wide range of evidentiary sources. The boundaries of an antitrust market may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors.

The approaches to market definition endorsed by the Merger Guidelines and the case law are essentially consistent. This approach acknowledges that cross-elasticity of demand is nearly impossible to measure numerically in all cases and relies on a broad array of evidence and practical indicia to establish cross-elasticity. The 1984 Merger Guidelines made the same point when they explained that the five-to-ten percent test is an analytical tool with which to analyze traditional types of probative evidence. That is, the five-to-ten percent test is not a rigid requirement that cross-elasticity be measured numerically.

The purpose of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, is to prevent the undue aggregation of market power. Market definition is merely a tool in that quest, not the goal. It is initially important to keep in mind that "market definition is not a jurisdictional prerequisite, or an issue having its own significance under the statute; it is merely an aid for determining whether market power exists."

Similarities of product are extremely important in defining the market, and thus both papers should be included in the product market because both papers are poised to become truly regional papers. Thus, there is a great deal of so-called cross-elasticity of supply among local daily newspapers in the subject area. High cross-elasticity of supply exists when existing companies have the ability to alter their facilities to produce the defendant's product in response to monopolistic price increases or quality reductions. The courts, the Department of Justice, the Federal Trade Commission, and economists, accept using cross-elasticity of supply to enlarge the product market generally.

Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, was enacted not merely to provide private relief but to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws. Section 16 should therefore be applied with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims. In a Government case the proof of the violation of law may itself establish sufficient public injury to warrant relief.

Both divestiture and rescission require the dispossession of the specific interest that created the unlawful monopoly or market power. The relief authorized by the Clayton Act does not end with dispossession of the unlawful interest but may include other measures designed to undo what was achieved through the unlawful acts.

The court need not resort to either rescission or divestiture if some other equitable relief suffices to provide an effective means of eliminating the illegal effects of an acquisition and is in the public interest. The court's equitable powers are to be exercised to restore as nearly as possible the competitive situation that existed before an asset acquisition. However, it is clear from the case law that divestiture is regarded as the preferred remedy.

[*1149] MEMORANDUM OPINION

This is a consolidated antitrust case in which the United States and private plaintiffs are challenging the purchase of a local daily newspaper, [2] the Northwest Arkansas Times ("the Times"), by NAT, L.C. Both the government and private plaintiffs contend that this purchase may substantially lessen competition, since NAT, L.C. ("NAT"), has significant shareholders in common with defendant D.R. Partners d/b/a Donrey Media Group ("Donrey"), which owns a competing local daily newspaper, the Morning News of Northwest Arkansas ("Morning News").

Private plaintiffs and the government both claim that the acquisition violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. Private plaintiffs seek injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26; while the government seeks such relief under Section 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 25. Private plaintiffs alone bring claims alleging that: (1) NAT's acquisition of the Times violates Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, which prohibits monopolization and attempts to monopolize; (2) NAT and Donrey have interlocking directorates in violation of Section 8 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 19; (3) NAT and Donrey violated the notice provisions of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act, Section 7a of the Clayton [3] Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18a, which requires government notification of certain acquisitions, which was not done in this case.

As will be explained below, the court will find that the challenged acquisition violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act, and it will be unnecessary to judge the transaction under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. It will also be unnecessary to reach private plaintiffs' claims arising under Section 7a of the Clayton Act concerning Hart-Scott-Rodino notification and Section 8 of the Clayton Act concerning interlocking boards and directorates.

I. THE PARTIES AND OTHER INTERESTED BYSTANDERS

Thomson Newspapers, Inc. ("Thomson") owned the Northwest Arkansas Times ("the Times"), a local daily newspaper that competes in the Northwest Arkansas market, until February 6, 1995, when it sold the property to NAT.

NAT, L.C. ("NAT") is a limited liability company formed to acquire the Times from Thomson.¹ Various Stephens family trusts own ninety-five percent (95%) of NAT's stock, and Jack Stephens is NAT's chairman. The Stephens family business began with the partnership of two brothers, Jack Stephens and Witt Stephens, who went on to build the [4] largest investment banking firm off Wall Street. Stephens family assets are now dispersed among Jack Stephens, his son (Warren Stephens), his brother Witt Stephen's widow (Bess Stephens), and her three children (W.R. Stephens, Jr., Pamela Stephens Rose and Elizabeth Ann Stephens Campbell).

D.R. Partners d/b/a Donrey Media Group ("Donrey") is a general partnership which owns the Morning News of Northwest Arkansas ("the Morning News"), which competes in the same local daily newspaper market as the Times.

Stephens Group, Inc. ("SGI") owns ninety-nine percent (99%) of Donrey's stock, and the additional one percent is held by Stephens Holding, Inc. SGI is owned entirely by Stephens [*1150] family trusts. Jack Stephens is chairman of both Donrey and SGI.

Community Publishers, Inc ("CPI") publishes the Benton County Daily Record ("the Daily Record"), which also competes [5] in the local daily newspaper market of Northwest Arkansas. CPI is owned by Jim Walton, the son of Sam Walton, founder of Wal-Mart Stores, the country's largest and most successful retailer.² CPI also sought to purchase the Times from Thomson in partnership with WEHCO Media. WEHCO Media is owned by Walter Hussman, and it publishes the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette, a statewide newspaper out of Little Rock. It is the only Arkansas daily newspaper with statewide circulation. The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette is a merger of two formerly competing statewide newspapers, the Arkansas Democrat and the Arkansas Gazette, which conducted a newspaper war to the death in the 1980's. At that time the Gazette was owned by Gannett, a large nationwide newspaper chain which publishes USA Today along with numerous other newspapers spread across the United States.

Shearin, Inc. d/b/a Shearin & Company Realtors ("Shearin") [6] is a real estate brokerage firm with its principal office in Rogers and a branch office in Bentonville. It advertises regularly in both the Morning News and the Daily Record.

II. NAT'S ACQUISITION OF THE TIMES

The court will begin by outlining the events leading up to NAT's acquisition of the Times, because it is useful in showing the noncompetitive manner in which the Stephens family does business together and the relationship between their companies, NAT and Donrey. The acquisition history is also useful in explaining the role of Thomson in closing the deal despite the existence of substantial antitrust questions, which will be relevant to the way the court shapes its remedy.

Donrey had historically expressed interest in acquiring the Times.³ In September 1994, Emmett Jones, Donrey's President and Chief Operating Officer, met with Robert Daleo, Thomson's Chief Financial Officer, at the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport. Daleo asked Jones whether Donrey would sell the Morning News; while Jones asked Daleo whether Thomson would sell the Times. Both parties were ready to buy, but neither party was willing to sell. Apparently each party wanted the operational [7] synergies and obvious competitive advantages that would accompany owning all three daily local newspapers in Northwest Arkansas.

In November 1994, Donrey was again involved in negotiations where it sought to acquire the Times from Thomson. The deal involved a three-way exchange, whereby Donrey would convey a certain media property to a third party, which would then convey other media properties to Thomson, which would then convey the Times to Donrey. The deal fell through when the third party backed out.

In January 1995, Donrey made its final attempt to acquire the Times. On January 19th, Thomson publicly announced its intention to sell the Times. Thomson also announced its intention to sell twenty-four other United States newspapers in a package deal. Thomson did [8] not include the Times in the package of twenty-four newspapers as it felt that the Times was more valuable and because various entities had already expressed interest in it, including Donrey and CPI. Thomson stated bids for the Times should be received by February 8, 1995, but Thomson reserved the right to sell the Times before that date.

On January 19 or 20, 1995, Jones called Daleo to get the bid package and to set up a Donrey-Thomson meeting. With regard to the purchase price, Daleo told Jones that Thomson wanted approximately fifteen times earnings or twenty million dollars for the Times. The twenty million dollar figure was [*1151] based on in-house financial analyses performed by Thomson which assumed that the purchaser would combine the Times with one or more newspapers and achieve "operational synergies."⁴ A much lower purchase price resulted from Thomson's "stand-alone" analysis, which projected the value of the paper as though it would be owned and operated as an independent entity. Jones, who likely presumed operational synergies for Donrey, testified that he would have valued the Times at between twenty and thirty million dollars.

[9] Soon after Thomson put the Times up for sale, Jack Stephens and his executive assistant, Scott Ford, who is also a vice-president of Donrey, became directly involved. On January 23 and 24, 1995, there were meetings with attorneys in which they discussed legal aspects of purchasing the Times "a good bit," to quote the testimony of Jack Stephens. Over the course of these meetings, Jack Stephens decided that he would purchase the Times through NAT rather than through Donrey. However, Donrey officials were not consulted or apprised of the decision when it was made.

According to Jack Stephens, he decided on a NAT purchase of the Times primarily due to his interest in the Fayetteville community and his desire for a more hands-on opportunity for members of his family and high level SGI officers. He stated further that a Donrey purchase would not have accomplished this goal, because Donrey's management and operations structure was already in place when purchased by the Stephens family in August 1993. Thus, a Donrey purchase would not have allowed Stephens family members and personnel to be as involved in the daily operation of the Times as Jack Stephens wanted them to [10] be.

On January 24, 1995, there was a luncheon meeting in Fort Smith, Arkansas, between Donrey's senior management personnel and several SGI representatives. Present at the meeting were Jack Stephens, his son (Warren Stephens), Ford, Jones, Darrell Lofton (Donrey's Chief Financial Officer), and other Donrey personnel.

In preparation for that meeting, Jones had told Lofton, to perform additional price analysis on the Times. However, this additional analysis was never discussed at the January 24 meeting because Ford told Jones, upon disembarking from Jack Stephens' plane, that the Stephens family was going to buy the Times directly and that there was no longer any need for Donrey to be involved.

Jones was disappointed and Lofton surprised, as Donrey had been trying to acquire the Times as part of its competitive strategy for a long time. Still, due to the ownership structure of the Stephens-Donrey organization, Donrey promptly gave up pursuit of the Times and did not compete with NAT to acquire it.

As a general matter, the Hart-Scott-Rodino notice provisions of the antitrust law were not an infrequent topic of discussion. At the January 24 lunch in Fort Smith, Lofton [11] asked Ford if he needed any help with Hart-Scott-Rodino compliance, to which Ford said no. Jones also knew that any acquisition by Donrey would require a Hart-Scott-Rodino filing, a matter which he says he discussed with various people including Lofton, Ford, Jack Stephens and others. In fact, when Jones learned that NAT was going to purchase the Times, he admits that the thought passed through his mind that perhaps NAT was purchasing the Times to avoid the need to comply with Hart-Scott-Rodino.

On January 26, 1995, Jack Stephens discussed the Times purchase over lunch with his sister-in-law (Bess Stephens), his nephew (W.R. Stephens, Jr.), and his niece (Elizabeth Ann Stephens Campbell). At the meeting, there was no determination of the percentages that would be owned by each family member as that would be determined later by the accountants. In general, the exact breakdown of ownership is not considered to be a matter of great importance to the Stephens family.

On January 27, 1995, Jack Stephens and Ford met with Richard Harrington, Thomson's President and Chief Executive Officer, [*1152] and Robert Daleo, Thomson's Chief Financial Officer, at Thomson's headquarters in Stamford, [12] Connecticut. The meeting had been arranged at Jack Stephens' request by a friend or associate in the banking business who also did business with the Thomson chain.⁵ Jack Stephens started the meeting by immediately telling Harrington that he understood that Thomson wanted 15 times cash flow--that's twenty million dollars and that he was there to pay it. Harrington asked to be excused and left with Daleo to discuss the offer. When they returned, Harrington asked for a 10% preemptive bid premium of two million dollars, to which Jack Stephens "gulped" and said "okay." The twenty million dollar figure was the one that Thomson based on operational synergies, without any adjustment for the supposed stand-alone nature of a NAT purchase. In fact, there was not any indication in the negotiations that anyone at SGI, Donrey, or Thomson, ever took account of the recognized fact that the Times was worth less as a stand-alone venture. The fact that the party purchasing the property was NAT rather than Donrey did not seem to make a difference.

[13] To finance the deal, SGI paid a dividend to the various family trusts that were investing in NAT. These trusts then transferred the dividend to NAT and received NAT stock in return. Jack Stephens and Bess Stephens also provided two bridge loans to NAT totalling thirteen million dollars. The promissory notes reflecting these bridge loans were not only unsecured, but also apparently unsigned.

The sale was consummated on February 6, 1995. According to defendants, the closing was originally scheduled for February 3rd, but it was delayed until February 6th because Daleo and Harrington were out of town and because there was some trouble calculating the value of the net current assets of the Times.

Prior to consummating the sale, Thomson insisted that the asset purchase agreement include an indemnification provision, whereby NAT agreed to indemnify Thomson for the costs of defending any investigation, suit or proceeding in connection with any failure to comply with Hart-Scott-Rodino or any violation of the antitrust laws. The genesis of this indemnity provision was at the January 27, 1995, meeting between Harrington and Jack Stephens, when Thomson's in-house attorney, a Mr. Harris, [14] was called into the meeting. The indemnity provision continued to be discussed and negotiated by Thomson attorney Kenneth Carson and NAT attorney Rick Massey, who exchanged various drafts of the asset purchase agreement on January 30 and February 1. Thomson's insistence on an indemnity provision was further cemented by a threatening phone call on February 2nd from Walter Hussman of WEHCO Media, in which Walter Hussman discussed the possibility of antitrust liability with a Donrey purchase. The February 5, 1995, filing of this lawsuit and the scheduling of a February 6, 1995, preliminary injunction hearing could only have reinforced Thomson's desire for such an indemnity provision.

According to Ford, the key people for Stephens had been all through the antitrust liability issue with three different law firms prior to consummating the sale, and they were convinced that competitor plaintiffs such as CPI, Walter Hussman and Jim Walton had no standing to bring such a lawsuit. Ford did not indicate whether the lawyers discussed the possibility of a government antitrust suit and the possible need to win the case on its merits rather than on standing.

III. SECTION 7 OF THE CLAYTON ACT

[15] Section 7 HN1[] forbids a stock or asset acquisition if it may substantially lessen competition in the relevant market. 15 U.S.C. § 18. Thus, HN2[] the first step in Section 7 analysis is the definition of the relevant market. The burden of defining the market rests with the plaintiff. H.J., Inc. v. Internat'l Tel. & Tel. Corp., 867 F.2d

⁵ This clearly more effective way of doing business contrasted with the manner in which other prospective bidders were required to negotiate and bid. They were relegated to dealing through and with a Thomson employee much further down the chain-of-command than the CEO. That is also the manner in which the CPI-WEHCO unsuccessful bid was made.

1531, 1537 (8th Cir. 1989) (Section 2 of the Sherman Act) (citations [*1153] omitted).⁶ Once the relevant market is established, plaintiff must then show that the acquisition may substantially lessen competition. Id.

[16] The court also notes that HN3[[↑]] in order to have standing to bring this suit, private plaintiffs must demonstrate what is called antitrust injury. Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990). Antitrust injury is a technical concept that requires knowledge of economics and the functioning of the relevant market. Therefore, the court will discuss it after setting forth the nature of the relevant market, although antitrust injury is a prerequisite to bringing a private suit.

IV. GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF MARKET DEFINITION

The Supreme Court has stated that HN4[[↑]] products belong in the same market when they are "reasonably interchangeable" for the same uses and thus exhibit a high "cross-elasticity of demand."⁷ As the Eighth Circuit more simply put it, "defining a relevant product market is primarily 'a process of describing those groups of producers which, because of the similarity of their products, have the ability--actual or potential--to take significant amounts of business away from each other.'" General Indus. Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 805 (8th Cir. 1987) quoting SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & [17] Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1063 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 838, 99 S. Ct. 123, 58 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1978).

HN5[[↑]] To say that two products are in the same market means that they constrain each other's ability to exercise market power by raising prices and lowering quality for fear that consumers will switch to the competitor's product.⁸ It is a primary purpose of Section 7 of the Clayton Act to preserve this constraining effect on the exercise of market power. Merger [*18] Guidelines § 0.1. See also, United States v. Archer-Daniels-Midland Co., 866 F.2d 242, 246 (8th Cir. 1988) ("The lawfulness of an acquisition turns on the purchaser's potential for creating, enhancing, or facilitating the exercise of market power--the ability of one or more firms to raise prices above competitive levels for a significant period of time.") (citation omitted), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 809, 110 S. Ct. 51, 107 L. Ed. 2d 20 (1989); Merger Guidelines § 0.1 ("the unifying theme . . . is that mergers should not be permitted to create or enhance market power or to facilitate its exercise").

[19] HN6[[↑]] In evaluating reasonable substitutability and measuring cross-elasticity of demand, the case law states that it is appropriate to consider a wide range of evidentiary sources.

[The boundaries of an antitrust market] may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate [*1154] economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors.

Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1524, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1962\) (footnote omitted). The Eighth Circuit simply treats the "practical indicia" identified by Brown Shoe as types of evidence that establish a relevant market for antitrust purposes.

The HN7 "practical indicia" identified in Brown Shoe have been described as "evidentiary proxies for direct proof of substitutability." Rothery Storage & Van Co. V. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142, 792 F.2d 210, 218 \(D.C. Cir. 1986\).

H.J., Inc., 867 F.2d at 1540.⁹

[20] In the same vein, the Merger Guidelines state that the following evidence may be considered in defining the product market and evaluating cross-elasticity of demand and substitutability.

HN8 In considering the, likely reaction of buyers to a price increase, the Agency will take into account all relevant evidence, including, but not limited to, the following:

(1) evidence that buyers have shifted or have considered shifting purchases between products in response to relative changes in price or other competitive variables;

(2) evidence that sellers base business decisions on the prospect of buyer substitution between products in response to relative changes in price or other competitive variables.

Merger Guidelines § 1.11. (emphasis added). The Merger Guidelines also note that evidence "may be derived from the documents and statements of both the merging firms and other sources." Merger Guidelines § 0.1.

Upon evaluating the evidence, the cases do not specify numerically how "high" the cross-elasticity of demand between two products must be before they can be included in the same market for antitrust purposes. In any case, it is usually impossible [21] to reliably quantify cross-elasticity of demand, which is why the Supreme Court allows reliance on "practical indicia." See e.g. U.S. Anchor Mfg. v. Rule Indus., 7 F.3d 986, 995 \(11th Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, U.S. 114 S. Ct. 2710, 129 L. Ed. 2d 837 (1994).

In a typically vague statement of the cross-elasticity threshold, the Eighth Circuit states that "the cross-elasticity of demand must be sufficiently high to statistically reflect consumers' perception that the two products are reasonably interchangeable." Archer-Daniels, 866 F.2d at 248. Under the Merger Guidelines, two products are in the same market if the seller of one product is constrained by the presence of the other, and thus, cannot profitably impose a "small but significant and nontransitory" increase in price without fear of significant consumer switching to a ⁹ In Brown Shoe, the practical indicia were meant to define a so-called "submarket," which is to be contrasted with the "broad product market." But the emerging consensus of antitrust scholars and case law seems to be that the term "submarket" is unnecessary. Whether you call it a submarket or a broad product market, it is still the relevant market for antitrust purposes and must be marked by reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand.

One approach, adopted by the Eighth Circuit, and described above, would simply do away with the term "submarket" and treat the "practical indicia" of Brown Shoe as types of evidence that establish the relevant market, whether it be a submarket or a broad product market. H.J., Inc. v. Internat'l Tel. & Tel. Corp., 867 F.2d 1531, 1540 \(8th Cir. 1989\) ("the same proof which establishes the existence of a relevant product market also shows (or . . . fails to show) the existence of a product submarket") (citing Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 518.1 at 311-15 (1987 Supp.)); accord Ila Phillip E. Areeda, Herbert Hovenkamp & John L. Solow, Antitrust Law P 533a-g (1995).

competing product.¹⁰ Merger Guidelines § 1.0. Cf. Archer-Daniels, 866 F.2d at 248 n. 1 (cross-elasticity to be measured with regard to "slight" price increases).

[22] [*1155] With regard to defining the geographic market, the same basic principles apply, and the court need not discuss them in detail. Also, the geographic market is not a significant issue in this case. Determination of the product market will for all intents and purposes determine the geographic market, because the relevant product market consists of local daily newspapers. Thus, the product market has a built-in geographic component. If two daily newspapers are considered local by the consumers, then they belong in the same geographic market. Defendants' own expert, Thomas Overstreet, testified that if the Times and the Morning News are in the same product market, then "as a matter of logic," they are in the same geographic market.

V. THE RELEVANT MARKET: LOCAL DAILY NEWSPAPERS

In this case, the relevant product market for antitrust purposes is the local daily newspaper. This market is in fact two markets: one for readers and one for advertisers. As the Supreme Court stated in Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 610, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953), "every newspaper is a dual trader in separate though interdependent markets; it sells [23] the paper's news and advertising content to its readers; in effect that readership is in turn sold to the buyers of advertising space." Each market will be analyzed in turn.

a. The Readership Market

The court will begin by describing, in a qualitative manner, the peculiar characteristics and uses of the daily newspaper. The court will then contrast these with the uses and characteristics of the most likely candidates for inclusion in the product market: television, radio, national and state newspapers, shoppers, and weekly newspapers.

The local daily newspaper provides a unique package of information to its readers. Foremost, it provides national, state and local news. Many of the stories, such as those on high school sports and city council meetings, are of purely local interest. Readers also value other features of a local nature, including calendars of local events and meetings, movie and TV listings, classified advertisements, other local advertising, legal notices, and obituaries. The format of the newspaper allows its message to be timely and detailed. Moreover, a newspaper is portable and allows readers access to information at their own convenience.

The peculiar [24] characteristics and uses of other media outlets are completely different. National and state newspapers have a similar format to local papers, but they contain no local news or advertising, which is a critical factor in the acceptance and success of a local daily. For instance, even though the Democrat-Gazette and the Tulsa World are quality papers, they have, limited circulation in Northwest Arkansas. On the other hand, weekly papers offer purely local news, and as weeklies, they offer virtually no time sensitivity. Radio news and television news are also poor substitutes for local papers. Television and radio are primarily dedicated to entertainment, and to the extent that they offer news and information, they lack breadth and depth of coverage. Also, they are not portable and convenient like newspapers.

As for the perspective of the industry, it is clear that it sees local daily newspapers as a separate product from other media. Industry people gave direct testimony excluding various media outlets from the market occupied by local dailies. More compelling, however, were the contemporaneous, prelitigation records of the various newspaper organizations and personnel involved [25] in the case. For instance, George Smith, Publisher of the Times, made frequent comparisons between the Times and the Morning News; but he did not make comparisons between the Times and any other media outlet. By negative inference, Smith, Thomson, and the other industry people involved in this case did not perceive local daily newspapers to be in close competition with media outlets other than local daily newspapers.

¹⁰ A slight increase is usually referred to as five or ten percent. All parties to the suit use the five to ten percent figure, but it should be noted that this figure does not appear in the Merger Guidelines.

As for expert opinion, the two experts with the most experience in newspaper economics testified that a market limited to local daily newspapers was the proper one. One was the expert for the private plaintiffs, Robert Picard, a communications Ph.D. who may be [*1156] one of the foremost experts on newspaper economics in the country. He has, among other things, published and edited numerous books and articles on the subject and has testified before the legislatures of various countries. The other expert, Kenneth Baseman, testified for the government. Baseman is an economist who has spent many years doing antitrust work for the government and private parties, including a stint at the antitrust division where he worked extensively on the agency's challenge to the [*26] joint operating agreement between the Detroit Free Press and the Detroit News. Even defendants' own expert, Thomas Overstreet, limited the market to local daily newspapers. As such, defendants should not be heard to complain that the government and private plaintiffs have failed to carry their burden of proof in excluding other media from the relevant market.¹¹

b. The Advertising Market

The local daily newspaper offers advertisers a unique set of opportunities. They are able to reach a broad cross-section of consumers in a specific geographic circulation. They also allow a detailed message to be delivered in a timely manner.

The peculiar characteristics and uses of other advertising media are very [*27] different. National and state newspapers do not carry any local advertising. Given the limited circulation of such papers in Northwest Arkansas, and their high per reader advertising cost, local and regional advertisers do not see them as substitutes for local daily newspapers. As for weekly newspapers, the main problems are that advertising messages are not delivered in a timely manner and that weeklies do not reach the number of readers that dailies do. With regard to "shoppers," they do not provide the high quality demographics that newspapers provide. They also do not meet the needs of advertisers who wish to convey an elite product message. They are also not timely.

As for radio and television, the main problem with such media is that the advertising message conveyed is transitory. It is nearly impossible to provide price detail, and so newspapers are especially critical for grocery stores, department stores, furniture outlets, hardware stores, car dealers, etc. Television and radio do not provide a guaranteed audience and the expense of producing radio and television spots can be prohibitive. Many advertisers use radio and television to complement, but not replace, their use [*28] of print advertising, often for the purpose of "image advertising." As for circulars and direct mail, these are often considered nuisances and junk mail and are often thrown away.

While businesses do divide their advertising budget among various advertising media, the portion of the so-called "media mix" that is dedicated to any one particular media, such as local daily newspapers, tends to stay fixed over time. As a result, local daily newspapers compete against each other, not the other media, which are not reasonably interchangeable for the same purposes.

This view of advertising competition is accepted by industry personnel, advertising consultants, newspaper economics experts and the advertisers themselves. Also, in making decisions, including pricing decisions, the contemporaneous, prelitigation records of the various newspaper organizations and personnel involved in the case show a complete lack of interest in other advertising media, but a great deal of concern with other local daily newspapers, which by negative inference shows that other media are not part of the market.

c. Case precedent on newspaper markets

The weight of case authority confirms the court's [*29] almost intuitively correct definition of the market. Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953) (Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act); Paschall v. Kansas City Star Co., 695 F.2d 322 (8th Cir. 1982), different results reached on reh'g, [727 F.2d 692 \[*1157\] \(8th Cir. 1984\)](#), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 872, 105 S. Ct. 222, 83 L. Ed. 2d 152 (1984) (Section 2 of the Sherman Act); Morning Pioneer, Inc. v. Bismarck Tribune Co., 493 F.2d 383 \(8th Cir. 1974\), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 836, 95 S. Ct. 64, 42 L. Ed. 2d 63 (1974) (Section 2 of the Sherman Act); Buffalo Courier-Express, Inc. v. Buffalo Evening News, Inc. 441 F. Supp. 628 \(W.D.N.Y. 1977\), rev'd on other grounds, 601 F.2d 48 \(2nd Cir. 1969\) (Section 2 of the Sherman Act); United States v. Citizen Publishing Co., 280 F. Supp. 978 \(D. Ariz. 1968\), aff'd, 394 U.S. 131, 89 S. Ct. 927, 22 L. Ed. 2d 148 \(1969\) (Section 7 of the Clayton Act); United States v. Times Mirror Co., 274 F. Supp. 606 \(C.D. Cal. 1967\), aff'd, 390 U.S. 712, 88 S. Ct. 1411, 20 L. Ed. 2d 252 (1968) (Section 7 of the Clayton Act).

Although this court has made its own findings of fact, [\[30\]](#) it believes that the vast weight of authority and the method of analysis utilized in the cited cases supports the market definition in this case. In Bowen v. New York News, Inc., 366 F. Supp. 651, 675 n. 56 \(S.D.N.Y. 1973\), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 522 F.2d 1242 \(2d Cir. 1975\) cert. denied, 425 U.S. 936, 96 S. Ct. 1667, 48 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1976), the court did not find it necessary to make its own findings of fact, since "it is now well settled that the daily newspaper is a distinct line of commerce." But in Knutson v. Daily Review, Inc., 383 F. Supp. 1346 \(N.D. Cal. 1974\), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 548 F.2d 795 \(9th Cir. 1976\), cert. denied, 433 U.S. 910, 97 S. Ct. 2977, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1094 (1977), the court expressly rejected Bowen's approach on the grounds that determination of the relevant market is a factual, not a legal, determination. Although Knutson is probably correct, the court notes that, in the future, it would probably make little sense for any party to relitigate this issue, given the amount of resources spent on an issue that has been resolved the same way by every court that has addressed it in any depth.

VI. THE NORTHWEST [\[31\]](#) ARKANSAS NEWSPAPER MARKET

The court has discussed why the local daily newspaper is a separate product as a general matter. This still leaves the critical question of which daily newspapers are considered "local" by readers and advertisers in Northwest Arkansas.

Perhaps, it is appropriate to define what the court means when it speaks of "Northwest Arkansas." When one familiar with this area speaks of "Northwest Arkansas" it is not intended to merely describe a geographic location. Instead, that term has come to denote an increasingly integrated economic, social and political unit which just happens to be located in the northwest corner of the state.

It is generally considered that "Northwest Arkansas" encompasses Washington and Benton Counties, and is an area that is not only blessed with beautiful Ozark mountain countryside, but also progressive and aggressive people with an outstanding work ethic. It is this area of the country where, among other things, the nation's top poultry producer and one of its top food companies had its genesis and is located, and where Sam Walton started, barely 30 years ago, what became the nation's top retailer and second largest private employer. [\[32\]](#) The area is also the home of the University of Arkansas which exerts a tremendous economic and cultural influence on the area.

There are numerous successful businesses in the area which provide jobs to a great number of employees. In recent years, the area has become increasingly multi-cultural and multi-lingual because of the influx of large numbers of Mexican nationals who have come to the area to take advantage of the extremely low unemployment rate in the area which regularly runs less than 3%, even in times when other areas of the country are experiencing high unemployment.

The major cities in the two county area are Fayetteville, Springdale, Rogers, and Bentonville. Tremendous population increases over the last several years have resulted in the two-county area having a population, according to evidence at the trial, of an excess of 233,000 people, a large portion of whom live in one of the cities listed above. Until the last few years, these cities were not only separate political entities, but separate and highly parochial social units. Now, with the increase in population, those cities have [\[*1158\]](#) "grown together" and only imaginary boundary lines separate them. As one drives [\[33\]](#) across the area, it is impossible for even natives in most cases to determine when they leave one of the towns and enter the next.

Not only has the area "grown together" geographically and in respect to population, it has also increasingly become one economic and social unit. The area is presently engaged in the building of a large regional airport, and there are other examples of the citizens of the entire area working together for a common goal. Without exception, the "experts" who testified lauded the outstanding economic climate present in the entire area, and predicted a bright future.

In short, it was not too many years ago that Fayetteville, Springdale, Rogers, and Bentonville were distinct and separate towns with distinct and separate citizens that viewed themselves as such. That has changed and is changing. That fact has been evidenced graphically by recent changes in the newspaper industry in the area. Until recently, each of the towns had "their own newspaper" but, in November 1994, Donrey Media, the common owner of the Springdale Morning News and the Northwest Arkansas Morning News based in Rogers, merged the papers, and named the combined newspaper The Morning [34] News of Northwest Arkansas. That newspaper intends to be and has advertised itself to be the paper for all of Northwest Arkansas, a recognition that the area has become or is fast becoming a cohesive economic, social and cultural area.

The court will conclude that the Times and the Morning News strongly compete against each other for readers and advertisers in Washington County. The court will also conclude that the Daily Record and the Morning News compete against each other in Benton County. Finally, although the Times and the Daily Record do not currently appear to compete for readers and compete only weakly for advertisers, this court will conclude that they belong in the same market as well--the Northwest Arkansas market.

a. Readership competition between the Times and the Morning News

The record is absolutely replete with evidence that the Morning News and the Times compete in the same product market and that they both serve the same locale. Specifically, they are competing for readers in the Washington County area which is comprised mainly of the towns of Fayetteville and Springdale.

Both papers offer products with very similar [35] characteristics. Both papers cover news of regional interest such as the proposed regional airport now under construction, the University of Arkansas, Washington County government and courts, meetings of the governing bodies of the area's major hospitals, the federal courts, Fayetteville and Springdale city council meetings, and high school sports, and provide classifieds and local merchant advertising.

The Morning News has offices with customer service and editorial staffs in both Fayetteville and Springdale, the locations of which are listed in two separate parts of the paper every day. In its Fayetteville office, the Morning News has four reporters who cover county government, county court, federal court, the University of Arkansas, and city affairs. Tom Stallbaumer, the publisher of the Morning News, does not feel that his paper yet matches the Times in its coverage of Fayetteville, but he admits that his paper aspires to do so. As for the Times, it also provides extensive coverage of newsworthy events in Fayetteville, and, to a somewhat lesser extent, in Springdale and Benton County. It is currently engaged in a news-sharing agreement with the Daily Record, [36] so that the Times may better cover Benton County and better compete with the coverage of the Morning News.

Not surprisingly, there is substantial circulation overlap, with the Times reaching 2,184 readers in Springdale and the Morning News reaching 4,424 daily readers and 4,821 Sunday readers in Fayetteville. In fact, with a switch of approximately 1,800 readers, the Morning News would overtake the Times as the circulation leader in Fayetteville. Currently, the Morning News and Times both sample readers, telemarket, have sales racks [*1159] and home delivery routes throughout Washington County.

The numerous business documents in this case also constitute a detailed contemporaneous record of the competitive actions and reactions that the papers have undertaken in direct response to each other. For instance, the Times was, until the last few years, an afternoon paper until the Springdale Morning News switched to a morning paper and made significant circulation gains in Fayetteville, at which point the Times became a morning paper.

At one time, the Morning News did not publish on certain holidays, on which days the Times would sample (throw [37] free papers) the readers of the Morning News along with a flyer that remarked on the Morning News not being an every day paper. The Morning News now publishes 365 days a year.

Both papers exhibit an ongoing concern over who scoops whom which is largely motivated by circulation concerns. At one point, the Morning News reviewed its staff assignments and improved its police coverage because it was an area where the Times sometimes prevailed. Competition over local sports coverage was particularly intense, with the Times and the Morning News engaged in a public back and forth battle over the number of reporters covering events, the number of photos and stories, and the extent of coverage, including women's volleyball and soccer.

The Times began using color so that it could compete more effectively, and the Morning News responded in kind. The two papers also compete for readers by producing features and special interest sections. In one case, the Morning News began a travel page soon after the Times started one. These are the equivalent of competitive responses to what the Merger Guidelines call "small but significant and nontransitory" increases [38] in price or decreases in quality.

In addition to these concrete actions and reactions, the internal memoranda of the Times and the Morning News show a consistent obsession with each other as "the competition." These are too numerous to discuss further.

b. Advertiser Competition between the Times and the Morning News

In this case, there is only a small amount of evidence that the two local daily newspapers compete "directly" for advertisers. That is, no advertiser decides he will advertise either in the Times or in the Morning News, depending on who offers the better deal. Even the government's own expert, Kenneth Baseman, did not find any evidence of this sort of competition.¹² The primary reason that such direct competition is absent is that no regional advertiser who has customers throughout Northwest Arkansas, such as a car dealer, can reach all of Washington County without using both newspapers. Also, no purely local advertiser, such as a grocery store, can reach the majority of reader households in Fayetteville without using the Times or reach the majority of households in Springdale without using the Morning News.

[39] Still, there is a great deal of evidence that these two papers compete "indirectly" for advertisers by means of what was called by some of the witnesses a "negative feedback loop," for want of a better term. The competition, although "indirect," is effective and pervasive. The "negative feedback loop" begins with the premise that local advertising is a critical part of what sells a local newspaper, just like the coverage of local sports or any other local news event. Apparently, many people buy newspapers to have access to advertisements and advertiser's promotions which they provide. If a paper is deficient in local advertising it will eventually lose readers. A loss of advertising revenue will also lead to a decline in the paper's ability to maintain its quality, which will also lead to a loss of readership. With the loss of readers, the paper will lose more advertisers, and then more readers, and so on until its demise. This is a "negative feedback loop."

[*1160] Therefore, both the Morning News and the Times have an incentive to keep the price of advertising low enough so that advertisers do not drop their ads, decrease their size, or decrease their frequency. Of course, this [40] incentive would exist even in the absence of a competitive market, but the existence of a competitor means that a decline in advertising content due to high rates is much more likely to lead to a loss in readership to the competing paper. The loss of readership will then result in a further loss of advertising, and the negative feedback loop, which is often irreversible, has begun.

Another way in which competition exists between the Times and the Morning News is through the process of "benchmarking," whereby local advertisers compare the relative advertising value provided by each paper. Thus, the papers try to provide equal value to some extent, since neither paper wants to lose the good will and business of their advertisers by looking like a "rip off" in comparison to the other. The dynamic of benchmarking can exist between products that are not in the same market, but the high degree of benchmarking that clearly exists in this market results from the close competitive relationship between the Times and the Morning News, which is so universally recognized in the local community.

There is one final avenue of advertising competition with respect to regional advertisers [41] that merits discussion. While no regional advertisers can completely forego advertising in either the Times or the Morning News, they can place more of their limited advertising budget into the one newspaper that they feel gives them the better value.

Thus, in 1992, the Times was very concerned about losing regional advertisers because its prices were not competitive with the Springdale/Rogers combo buy.¹³ The Times also displayed a continuous concern over losing automobile advertising, and even offered a lower auto rate in 1994 to try to entice dealers; to use the Times rather than the Morning News. George Smith, the publisher of the Times, expressed concern to a fellow publisher that he had to win back his "rightful share" of advertising from one particular regional dealer, Lewis Auto. The owner of Lewis Auto, Tom Lewis, testified that he felt his dealership had benefitted from the advertising competition between the two papers.

[42] Although the dynamics just described are somewhat theoretical, they do not strike the court as being particularly controversial, at least not from the testimony provided by those familiar with the industry. Moreover, these theories explain the high degree of time and energy that the Times and the Morning News put into monitoring and responding to the advertising efforts of each other. For instance, the Times was concerned that it got less Springdale ads than the Morning News got Fayetteville ads. The Times routinely compared its advertising rates and revenue with those of the Morning News. The Morning News also monitored the number of national ads that the Times received to make sure it did not get "scooped" on any national ads.

In 1993, when the Times learned that a Donrey paper in Fort Smith, Arkansas, was offering a coupon book of volume discounts for advertisers, it offered its own version in anticipation that the Morning News would follow suit. Two weeks later, when the Times perceived that advertisers preferred the coupons offered by the Morning News, it redesigned its own.

In 1992, the Times had its advertising staff contact [43] local businesses that had placed ads in the Morning News to offer them a special "pick-up" rate to run the same ad in the Times. In 1994, the Times considered using the same strategy with regard to classified ads run in the Morning News.

If the "negative feedback loop," "benchmarking," and "rightful share" theories do not explain the above competitive conduct, then the alternative explanation would be that the Times and the Morning News were completely deluded about being in competition for advertising and that the efforts spent [*1161] monitoring this nonexistent competition were the futile and inefficient gestures of ignorant businessmen who did not even know their own market. The court considers this alternative unacceptable. Thus, the court is convinced that the two newspapers, do compete for advertising even though it may be difficult to quantify the competition statistically.

c. Numerical measurement of cross-elasticity of demand

In the face of this evidence, defendants contend that they decisively proved there is no cross-elasticity of demand between the Times and the Morning News, and, therefore, the products do not belong in the same market. [44] They supposedly prove their point by having their expert, Thomas Overstreet, measure the amount of switching from one paper to another when one paper increases its rack prices or subscription rates. As the amount of the price increase was greater than five to ten percent, and as the degree of switching caused by the increase did not render the increase unprofitable, defendants conclude that there is no cross-elasticity of demand under the Merger Guidelines.

¹³ Prior to November 1994, the Morning News was actually two newspapers: the Northwest Arkansas Morning News based in Rogers and the Springdale Morning News based in Springdale. Both were owned by Donrey, which merged them.

While defendants correctly contend that courts do not usually allow the government to take positions that are inconsistent with the Merger Guidelines, the court does not believe the government has done so in this case. Steven A. Newborn & Virginia L. Snider, The Growing Judicial Acceptance of the Merger Guidelines, 60 Antitrust L.J. 849, 852 (1992). As explained above, the court believes that HN9¹⁴ the approaches to market definition endorsed by the Merger Guidelines and the case law are essentially consistent.¹⁴ This approach acknowledges that cross-elasticity of demand is nearly impossible to measure numerically in all cases and relies on a broad array of evidence and "practical indicia" to establish cross-elasticity. See e.g. [\[45\] U.S. Anchor Mfg. v. Rule Indus., 7 F.3d 986, 995, \(11th Cir. 1993\)](#), cert. denied, U.S. __, 114 S. Ct. 2710, 129 L. Ed. 2d 837 (1994). The 1984 Merger Guidelines made the same point when they explained that the 5-10% test "is an analytical tool with which to analyze traditional types of probative evidence." 4Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) P 13,103 at 20,552 (June 14, 1984). That is, the 5-10% test is not a rigid requirement that cross-elasticity be measured numerically.

Analyzing the independent probative value of Dr. Overstreet's calculation [\[46\]](#) of the relationship, or the lack thereof, between price and consumer switching, the court concludes that this calculation fails to controvert the overwhelming evidence that cross-elasticity of demand exists. United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 455, 84 S. Ct. 1738, 12 L. Ed. 2d 953 \(1964\) ("that the demand for one [product] is not particularly or immediately responsive to changes in the price of the other are relevant matters but not determinative of the product market issue"). Dr. Overstreet's approach was to attempt to apply the Merger Guidelines with blinders on which were designed to prevent him from seeing anything other than the reaction of the market to a slight price increase--if that didn't show a shift in customers, then there was simply no competition present. His calculation only applied that part of the Merger Guidelines, and he failed, refused or neglected to control for all sorts of other important variables.

He failed to measure or even consider the loss of advertising profits that will be caused by the loss of readership. He failed to measure the fact that price increases were offset by quality increases. He failed to take into account the expert [\[47\]](#) testimony that price, as long as it is in the range one expects to pay for newspapers, is an almost insignificant factor in one's choice of newspaper. See Times Mirror, 274 F. Supp. at 615 (placing newspapers in same market although "differences between the price raises of the Times and the Sun did not produce a significant change in circulation") (citing Continental Can, supra). Also, defendants' expert has no special experience in the newspaper industry [\[*1162\]](#) or in Northwest Arkansas. The court could just as easily have performed Dr. Overstreet's simplistic calculations.

During questioning by the court, Dr. Overstreet seemed to agree that if his approach had been used in the famous and infamous, in Arkansas at least, Democrat vs. Gazette newspaper war that destroyed the then Gannett owned Gazette which advertised that it was the oldest newspaper west of the Mississippi, it would have shown that these newspapers were not competitors, at least until some point shortly before the Gazette was forced out of business. That was true because, until that time each paper had a loyal group of readers and advertisers who wouldn't switch until the Democrat succeeded in driving [\[48\]](#) the Gazette out of business. He seemed to agree with the court's statement that, like the bumblebee that can't fly, Walter Hussman didn't know that he wasn't a competitor so he kept competing until he was competing-- and won.

Finally, defendants' theory leaves unexplained why everyone involved with these newspapers thought they were competing and made numerous business decisions and took innumerable competitive actions as if they were.

d. Competition between the Daily Record and the Morning News

Much of the evidence that indicates active competition between the Times and the Morning News in Washington County shows the same active competition, perhaps to a slightly lesser degree, between the Daily Record and the Morning News in Benton County. The Daily Record's daily circulation in Benton County is 9,696; while the Morning

¹⁴ It is obviously good public policy that the guidelines be interpreted as consistently as possible with the case law which is binding. Steven A. Newborn & Virginia L. Snider, The Growing Judicial Acceptance of the Merger Guidelines, 60 Antitrust L.J. 849, 851 (1992) ("if the Guidelines and the bench diverge, merger law would be forced into a morass of nonmerger analysis--a possibility as attractive as becoming involved in a land war in Asia").

News has daily circulation in Benton County of 17,350. In the interest of brevity, the court will not detail the remaining evidence.

e. The Times and the Daily Record belong in the same market

The evidence clearly shows strong competition for readers and advertisers in Washington County between the [49] Times and the Morning News, and also between the Daily Record and the Morning News in Benton County. However, this leaves the question of whether the Times and the Daily Record belong in the same market given the fact that they have scarce competition for readership and only limited competition for advertisers, as even Dr. Picard, private plaintiffs' own expert, recognized. Still, the court concludes that the Times and the Daily Record belong in the Northwest Arkansas daily newspaper market, along with the Morning News.

It may seem strange that the Times and the Daily Record are in the same market even though they do not vigorously compete, but the fact remains that, as a practical matter, the common ownership of the Times and the Morning News would greatly affect competitive forces over the entire two-county area. It must be remembered that HN10[↑] the purpose of Section 7 of the Clayton Act is to prevent the undue aggregation of market power. Market definition is merely a tool in that quest, not the goal.

It is initially important to keep in mind that "market definition is not a jurisdictional prerequisite, or an issue having its own [50] significance under the statute; it is merely an aid for determining whether market power exists." L. Sullivan, Antitrust 41 (1977).

General Indus. Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 805 (8th Cir. 1987); Merger Guidelines § 0.2.

Equally important, HN11[↑] "the determination [of a relevant market] is essentially one of fact, turning on the unique market situation of each case." H. J., Inc. v. International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., 867 F.2d 1531, 1537 (8th Cir. 1989). (citations omitted). The notion that market definition is a pragmatic, factual exercise is a theme that runs throughout the cases. See e.g. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2082, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) ("In determining the existence of market power . . . , this Court has examined closely the economic reality of the market at issue."); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 336-37, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962) (courts should take a "pragmatic, factual approach to the definition [51] of the relevant market and not a formal, legalistic one" so that the definition of the relevant market will "correspond to the commercial realities" of the industry and be economically significant") (citations omitted); General Indus. Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 805 (8th Cir. 1987) ("In defining the relevant part of commerce for any product, the reality of the marketplace must serve as the lodestar") (citation omitted). Similarly, the Merger Guidelines provide that since "it is not possible to remove the exercise of judgment from the evaluation of mergers . . . the Agency will apply the standards of the Merger Guidelines reasonably and flexibly to the particular facts and circumstances of each proposed merger." Merger Guidelines § 0.

The fact is that this acquisition would affect market power over the entire two-county area. As will be explained, it would effect the viability of the Daily Record. It would alter pricing and strategy decisions over the two-county area. It would deter one potential competitor from entering the market. These are practical realities involving market power and competition, no matter how one characterizes the current relationship between the Times and the Daily Record. It makes no sense to say, as a matter of law, that the market does not include both counties.

The [52] court begins with the indisputable fact that Northwest Arkansas is increasingly integrated--socially, politically and economically. More than any other product market, a local daily newspaper market reflects the, underlying socioeconomic base of its geographic market. For this reason, the traditional indices of a newspaper market include the Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA), Audit Bureau of Circulations Retail Trading Zone, County, ABC City Zone, and Newspaper Designated Market Area. MSA's, which are officially designated by the U.S. Office of Management and Budget, are economic and social regions in which a nucleus city or cities and adjacent communities have achieved a significant degree of economic and social integration. ABC Retail Trading Zones, which are determined jointly by local newspapers and by the Audit Bureau of Circulations, are the area over which businesses in the local commercial center draw customers from outlying areas. County lines are politically defined and only sometimes useful in defining the newspaper market. ABC City Zones, which are done by the Audit Bureau of Circulations, include the central portion of a city and its contiguous suburbs. Finally, the [53] Newspaper Market Designated Area is the geographic market area defined by a newspaper when its market does not correspond to any of the traditional measures. It is defined as the primary commercial and residential region in which the newspaper operates.

These measures may be more or less useful in a particular case, depending on the circumstances of the market. The court does not exclusively rely on any one of them. They are listed simply to make the point that the local daily newspaper market tends to reflect the underlying social, economic and political development of the locale. As such, it makes a great deal of sense to refer to a Northwest Arkansas market. Moreover, the fact is undisputed that the social, economic and political integration of the Northwest Arkansas region will continue apace. United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486, 498, 94 S. Ct. 1186, 39 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1974), quoting, Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 322 n. 38 ("only a further examination of the particular market--its structure, history and probable future--can provide the appropriate setting for judging the probable anticompetitive effect of the merger") (emphasis supplied).

The court now [54] turns to the fact that every newspaper company involved in Northwest Arkansas viewed the local daily newspaper market as consisting of Washington and Benton Counties. Donrey and the Morning News clearly viewed the market that way and developed a product that vigorously competed for readership in every town in the two-county area. As is clear from the paper's own masthead, it is the Morning News of Northwest Arkansas.

The same goes for the Northwest Arkansas Times. Thomson viewed the two-county area as a single market that could be dominated by a single paper, which was its stated goal. To achieve that goal, Thomson considered [*1164] purchasing the Morning News and the Daily Record. It also conceived a six month program to extend its circulation in Rogers, Arkansas, in Benton County. The plan was abandoned after a few weeks due to a lack of success, but a failure to succeed at competing does not mean that competition does not exist.

CPI also recognizes that the Daily Record operates in a two-county market, although its main circulation appeal is in Benton County, as reflected by its masthead, the Benton County Daily Record. CPI realized it [55] operated in a two-county market and thus also coveted acquiring a second paper in that market, i.e., the Times.

Finally, WEHCO and the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette, the statewide paper published in Little Rock, is strongly considering a zoned edition of the paper for twelve counties in Northwest Arkansas aimed primarily at the two-county market encompassed by Washington and Benton Counties. WEHCO clearly conceives of the market as primarily a two-county market, and has spent a great deal of time and money laying the groundwork for a possible zoned edition. The undisputed testimony is that, if NAT'S purchase of the Times is allowed to stand, WEHCO is much more unlikely to enter the market.

In addition to the clear views of the market participants, the nature of the readership market is such that a local daily paper can be targeted to a single county (the Daily Record) or to both counties (the Morning News), but the success of all three remaining local newspapers will be affected by their ability to provide regional coverage that satisfies the regional interests of a regional audience, no matter what section of that audience is targeted. In recognition of this [56] fact, the Times and the Daily Record have a news and advertising sharing agreement, whereby the Times provides the Daily Record with Washington County news and advertising, and the Daily Record does the same for the Times with Benton County.

HN12[] This similarity of product is extremely important in defining the market, and thus the Times and the Daily Record should both be included in the product market because both papers are poised to become truly regional papers. Thus, there is a great deal of so-called "cross-elasticity of supply" among local daily newspapers in Northwest Arkansas. High cross-elasticity of supply exists when existing companies have the ability to alter their facilities to produce the defendant's product in response to monopolistic price increases or quality reductions. 3 Julian O. von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws & Trade Regulation § 18.021 (1994). Using cross-elasticity of supply to enlarge the product market is accepted by the courts, the Department of Justice, the Federal Trade Commission, and economists generally. Id. at n. 59.

In this case, all three local daily papers are poised to become increasingly regional should [57] the competition falter, and so long as the market does not become too concentrated. See also Jim Walter Corp. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 625 F.2d 676, 682-83 \(5th Cir. 1980\) (geographic market can be expanded to include regions that do not currently have sales in each other's area, if "regional markets are so interrelated that what happens in one has a direct effect in the others and none is so separate that the buyers and sellers are not concerned with prices and supply and demand in the others") quoting United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F. Supp. 576, 600 \(S.D.N.Y. 1958\); RSR Corp. v. FTC, 602 F.2d 1317, 1322-24 \(9th Cir. 1979\), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 927, 100 S. Ct. 1313, 63 L. Ed. 2d 760 \(1980\); United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F. Supp. 576, 596 \(S.D.N.Y. 1958\).

Turning to the advertising market, there is already some competition between the Times and the Daily Record in the market for regional advertisers, such as automobile dealers, furniture stores, mall stores, and department stores. Even if the Times and the Daily Record do not compete for the same readers, the fact remains that they compete for the same regional advertisers^[.] [58] and that an advertiser will spend more money in the newspaper that provides it with the better value.

This regional advertising market, which is crucial to all three papers' successes, would undoubtedly be affected by any combination [*1165] of the Times and the Morning News. Such a combination would have a dominant market share and would become a "must buy" for regional advertisers. Thus, any monopolistic increase in the combination's advertising rates would soak up all the available advertising revenue and leave the Daily Record with less.

The existence of the "must buy" phenomenon was testified to by a range of experts and industry personnel, including Walter E. Hussman, the owner of the Democrat-Gazette who testified at length about the Little Rock newspaper war between the Democrat and the Gazette. He explained that, at one point, the Gazette, which had a dominant market share, raised its advertising prices. The Democrat expected to get more advertising as a result, but just the opposite occurred. Because of the circumstances and the respective circulations of the two papers at the time, advertisers at least thought that they had no choice but to advertise [59] in the Gazette, and, since that took more of the advertisers' dollars, there were fewer dollars left to spend on advertising in the Democrat.

Moreover, the evidence established that the parties to this suit recognize the existence of a "must buy" phenomenon. The advertising managers at the Morning News, after the November 1, 1994, merger, decided to keep advertising rates below other similarly sized newspapers in order "to get the product established as the main advertising buy in Northwest Arkansas." Then, "when we raise rates, we want our advertisers to cut their lineage in the Times and the Daily Record, not the News." (Pl. Ex. 44 at DONR-10702). See Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 600, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 \(1953\) (since plaintiff's competitor was "the 'dominant' newspaper in New Orleans; insertions in that paper were deemed essential by advertisers desiring to cover the local market.").

With less regional advertising, the Daily Record loses revenue and becomes a less attractive newspaper. Thus, common ownership of the Times and the Morning News would undoubtedly impact this regional advertising market, which is [60] clearly a critical part of newspaper revenue.

For all these reasons, the court considers the local daily newspaper market to be Northwest Arkansas.¹⁵ Having set out the boundaries of the relevant market, the court will now explain why it believes that both private plaintiffs have demonstrated a threat of antitrust injury, after which the court will consider the merits of whether this acquisition may substantially lessen competition in the relevant market.

¹⁵ Even if it were to be found that the relevant geographic market was the Fayetteville Metropolitan Area, as the government defines it, there would still clearly be a violation of Section 7 because the Times and the Morning News compete in that area, without question. Thus, the result would be the same with the possible exception of available remedies. If such a finding resulted in the remedy of rescission not being available, the court would employ what it believes to be the second best remedy under the facts of this case--divestiture. However, as Shearin is an advertiser in the Morning News, it is a consumer in the Fayetteville market and rescission would still be available on the basis of its standing in that market. See a discussion of these issues under Section X of this opinion.

VII. ANTITRUST INJURY

To have standing to challenge NAT's acquisition of the Times, private plaintiffs must demonstrate that the acquisition threatens to injure them, and that this injury would be an "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977) (emphasis in original). The court concludes that both private plaintiffs have demonstrated a threat of antitrust injury.

a. CPI's Antitrust Injury

HN13 [↑] In order to show a threat of antitrust injury, a competitor plaintiff must show that the challenged acquisition threatens to cause injury or "loss of profits from practices forbidden by the antitrust laws." Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 485, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986), 107 S. Ct. at 492; *Pacific Express, [1166] Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 959 F.2d 814, 818 (9th Cir. 1992) ("In order to demonstrate that it suffered antitrust injury, [a competitor plaintiff] must show that its injury was caused [62] by anticompetitive or predatory aspects of [defendant's] conduct") cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 113 S. Ct. 814, 121 L. Ed. 2d 686 (1992); Phototron Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 842 F.2d 95, 100-102 (5th Cir. 1988) (competitor plaintiff lacks standing to challenge an acquisition unless it can prove a threat of anticompetitive or "predatory behavior"), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1023, 108 S. Ct. 1996, 100 L. Ed. 2d 228 (1988).

As the Fifth Circuit noted in Phototron, supra, the antitrust injury requirement as phrased in "Cargill" has imposed significant barriers to competitor attempts to enjoin merger transactions." 842 F.2d at 102. These barriers to competitor plaintiffs were not raised by accident. Many mergers have valuable pro-competitive effects, and a rival has every incentive to challenge such pro-competitive mergers simply because they are pro-competitive. Competitors are threatened by legitimate competition, and thus have an incentive to believe that rivals are violating antitrust laws and to use an antitrust suit to delay or moderate competition. See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 1895, 109 L. Ed. I^{631} 2d 333 (1990) (ARCO); William H. Page and Roger D. Blair, Controlling the Competitor plaintiff in Antitrust Litigation, 91 Mich. L. Rev. 111 (1992); II Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 373 (rev. ed. 1995). In fact, the risk posed by competitor suits is so great that in Cargill, the Department of Justice argued, that the court should adopt a per se rule against competitor standing to enjoin the merger of rivals. Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 495. The court declined to take such a radical step, but its final ruling did not leave competitor plaintiffs a very good chance of having standing to enjoin mergers. However, this is one of those rare cases where the court believes that a competitor plaintiff has successfully proved a threat of antitrust injury.

In this case, there are various threats to CPI's profits that are caused by anticompetitive aspects of the transaction. The court has already described the "must buy" phenomenon, whereby the Times and the Morning News will have such a dominant market share that any monopolistic increase in the combination's advertising rates would soak up all the available advertising revenue. This "must buy" phenomenon, [*^{64}] under which a price increase can actually injure competitors, is something which does not exist in most industries. While always harmful to consumers, monopolistic price increases usually benefit surviving competitors, who are able to expand their market share. Thus, in the typical situation, a price increase by the dominant market firm does not cause an antitrust injury. See Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585, n. 8, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1355, n. 8, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (horizontal price-fixing agreement can never harm a non-participating rival, who should actually benefit from the increased prices).

But the unique circumstances of the newspaper industry requires a different analysis. A monopolistic price increase by the Morning News and the Times would harm not only readers and advertisers, but also competitors like the Daily Record. That harm to the Daily Record would not be caused by increased efficiency due to the acquisition, but rather due to its monopolistic practices made possible by the acquisition. Cf. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 495, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) [65] (no antitrust injury to competitor plaintiff who was threatened by lost profits due to lower product prices allowed by the challenged merger).

A second source of antitrust injury concerns the possible termination of a news and advertising sharing agreement that is currently in effect between the Times and the Daily Record. The agreement was reached in 1993 for the purpose of making the Times and the Daily Record more competitive against the Donrey papers in Springdale and Rogers, which were already sharing news and advertising prior to their merger into the Morning News. But if the Times and the Morning News come under common ownership, the Times will no longer have any [*1167] incentive to help, the Daily Record compete against the Morning News. The Times will thus have an anticompetitive incentive to terminate its arrangement with the Daily Record, even if the Times becomes less competitive with the Morning News as a result. The court realizes that this news and ad sharing agreement is terminable-at-will, but the fact remains that NAT's acquisition of the Times creates an anticompetitive reason to terminate the agreement where none [66] existed before. This creates the requisite threat of antitrust injury both to newspaper readers throughout Northwest Arkansas and to the Daily Record.

Before leaving the subject of CPI's antitrust injury, the court specifically rejects CPI's argument that it is entitled to a presumption of antitrust injury simply because the challenged acquisition is presumptively illegal using market share data. CPI argued that the court may make this presumption under R. C. Bigelow, Inc. v. Unilever, 867 F.2d 102, 111 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 815, 110 S. Ct. 64, 107 L. Ed. 2d 31 (1989). To the extent that Bigelow stands for this proposition, it is rejected as contrary to Supreme Court precedent.

HN14 [↑] No violation of the antitrust laws, even if per se or presumptive, can ever create a presumption of antitrust injury. This point was made clear by the Supreme Court in Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 \(1990\) (ARCO). In ARCO, the Court held that even a retail price maintenance scheme, which is a per se violation of the antitrust laws, does not create any kind of presumption of antitrust injury to competitors. [67] Of particular relevance to CPI's contentions in this case, the Court expressly cited Cargill for the proposition that even when a merger is assumed to be illegal based on market share data, that merger does not create a presumption of antitrust injury to competitors. ARCO, 110 S. Ct. at 1892, citing Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986).¹⁶

[68] b. Shearin's antitrust injury

HN15 [↑] Because protecting consumers from monopoly prices is the central concern of antitrust law, consumers have usually been the preferred plaintiff in private antitrust litigation. See II Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 370 (rev. ed. 1995). In this case, plaintiff Shearin alleges in the complaint that a possible combination of the Times and the Morning News will raise advertising rates as a result of their dominant market position. Thus, Shearin alleges that it faces a threat of monopoly prices for advertising in the Morning News. The reality of this threat is that advertising rates are much lower in Northwest Arkansas than in comparably sized local ¹⁶ Actually, this court believes that even Bigelow required some proof that there was a threat of predatory or anticompetitive conduct. In Bigelow, a merger was presumptively illegal based on market share data, but on summary judgment, the district court held there was no evidence of a threat of antitrust injury "absent some evidence of past instances of predatory pricing or present intent to engage in predatory behavior following the merger...." Bigelow, 867 F.2d at 105. The court of appeals reversed since Lipton's 84% post-merger market share "threatened to be decisive," giving Lipton the ability to engage in predatory conduct and "eliminate competition in that market by, inter alia, reducing [plaintiff's] access to supermarket shelf space for its products." Id. at 111. Bigelow has been criticized for holding that a threat of predation may be uncritically presumed from market share data. Facts other than market share must be known before a market can realistically be judged susceptible to predation. II Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp Antitrust Law P 373d2, 373d4 (Rev. ed. 1995); William H. Page and Roger D. Blair, Controlling the Competitor Plaintiff in Antitrust Litigation, 91 Mich. L. Rev. 111 \(1992\). Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 494 n. 15 required a realistic threat of predation, and the court finds that facts indicating such a realistic threat are present in this case.

daily newspaper markets. As the threat of raised prices due to market power is primary concern of Section 7, the court believes that Shearin has demonstrated antitrust injury.

II. COMPETITION MAY BE SUBSTANTIALLY LESSENED

HN16[¹⁶] A combination is presumed to violate Section 7 if the market is sufficiently concentrated and the challenged acquisition would significantly enhance concentration. The seminal case on this matter is United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 83 S. Ct. 1715, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915 (1963), where the Court adopted a presumptive standard of illegality for horizontal mergers based on concentration ratios and market shares.

Intense congressional concern with the trend toward concentration warrants dispensing, in certain cases, with elaborate proof of market structure, market behavior, or probable anticompetitive effects. Specifically, we think that a merger which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is so inherently likely to lessen competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects. . . . Such a test lightens the burden of proving illegality only with respect to mergers whose size makes them inherently suspect....

Id., 374 U.S. at 363. In Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, the Supreme Court held presumptively illegal a merger resulting in a single firm controlling 30% of a market in which four firms had 78% of the sales. In Times Mirror, 274 F. Supp. at I701 622, the court found a prima facie violation of the Clayton Act where the acquiring newspaper's share of total weekday circulation climbed from 10.6% to 54.8%. The exact numerical threshold that creates the presumption is a subject of debate. For a table of cases, and the market data involved in each case, see IV Phillip E. Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law P 909 pp. 31-51 (1980), and 3 Julian O. von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws & Trade Regulation §§ 26.02[2] n. 62, 26.02[3] n. 111 (1994).

A review of the case law reveals that the market shares, concentration ratios, and Herfindahl-Hirschman Indexes are so high in this case that the acquisition is clearly presumptively anticompetitive. Based on circulation figures, the Morning News has 59% of the market, the Times has 25.4%, and the Daily Record has 15.7%. Based on advertising revenues, the Morning News has 57% of the market, the Times has 31%, and the Daily Record has 13%. Thus, the combination of Stephens-owned newspapers in Northwest Arkansas will have in excess of 84% of circulation and 88% of advertising revenue.¹⁷ Even if the Democrat-Gazette came out with a zoned edition, and achieved 71 the circulation and advertising goals considered realistic in internal prelitigation memorandum, the market would still be extremely concentrated.

72 At this point, defendants have an opportunity to show why the acquisition will not be anticompetitive and why the presumption of anticompetitive effects should not apply. United States v. Baker Hughes, Inc., 285 U.S. App. D.C. 222, 908 F.2d 981, 982-83 (D.C. Cir. 1990). Defendants commonly argue, as they have in this case, that the barriers to entry in a certain market are so low, that if a market participant behaves monopolistically by raising prices or reducing output, new competitors will enter the market, and the market will correct itself. 908 F.2d at 987. While normally a valid argument, this contention is specious in the context of the local daily newspaper industry. The barriers to entry are universally recognized as formidable, as is supported by the fact that in the entire nation every major city newspaper market is a monopoly except for approximately eight. Only WEHCO faces reasonably low barriers to entry with a zoned edition of the Democrat-Gazette, and as the court explained above, the market is so concentrated that WEHCO's entry would not significantly dilute the market. [*1169] Moreover, entry by WEHCO becomes extremely unlikely if this acquisition is allowed to stand [73] because one combination of newspapers will have a dominant market share in the region.

Defendants also argue that it is improper to aggregate the market shares of the Times and the Morning News, because NAT and Donrey are separate entities and do not share a common parent. The court does not consider this argument to be tenable.

In the first place, both NAT and Donrey have virtually complete overlap of ownership by various members of the Stephens family. Donrey is ninety-nine percent (99%) owned by Stephens Group, Inc. (SGI), and SGI is owned entirely by Stephens family trusts.¹⁸ The same Stephens family trusts also own ninety-five percent (95%) of NAT's stock.¹⁹ [75] At the current time, Jack Stephens is chairman of the board of SGI, Donrey and NAT, and his executive assistant, Scott Ford, is NAT's president. NAT has submitted proposed changes in ownership and management for the express purpose of persuading the court to let the Stephens family retain ownership of the Times with a slightly different structure. Even with the proposed changes, the Stephens family members have little, if any, incentive to compete aggressively against themselves. It is apparent to the court, and the Stephens can be proud, that the bonds of filial loyalty are well developed in this family which regularly makes joint investments together amounting to millions upon millions of dollars. As Warren Stephens testified at trial, the Stephens' family investment philosophy is to take a long term approach and to "think in terms of generations . . . in terms of building value for--for our family."

The Stephens family investing is marked by a cooperative and trusting spirit that one would not expect to find in a competitive business situation, as one can see from the way in which NAT acquired the Times. SGI dividends were used by the Stephens family to purchase NAT. The exact proportions of NAT ownership [76] was a trifling matter that was to be determined by accountants. Jack Stephens and his sister, Bess Stephens, provided NAT with thirteen million dollars in loans, which were reflected in promissory notes that were both unsigned and unsecured. With regard to the family trusts themselves, members of the Stephens family serve on each other's trusts as trustees and vote each other's stock in the event of an incapacity.

Not only the bonds of filial affection and loyalty, but also clear economic self-interest, [*1170] will deter Warren A. Stephens and his cousins, the 95% owners of NAT, from vigorously competing with the Morning News, Donrey, and SGI.²¹ In addition to the 20% of SGI non-voting stock held by Warren A. Stephens and his cousins, the Stephens children know they will one day inherit the rest of the stock of SGI from their parents, Jack Stephens and Bess Stephens. In fact, the elder Stephens, for tax reasons, have a clear intent to pass assets from themselves to their children while they are still alive.

[77] Thus, the Stephens children, as owners of the Times, will have little, if any, economic incentive to cause the Times to compete in the market place at the expense of their current and future asset, the Morning News. Both newspapers are part of the family's "investment body" and human nature is such, and the motive of self preservation is so strong, that one doesn't allow one part of that body to harm another part, at least not for long.

In a competitive situation, the Times might attempt to take readers away from the Morning News by, for example, hiring more experienced reporters at higher salaries or spending more money on color printing. The payoff would be an increase in the Times' circulation and value. In the current non-competitive situation, these investments would never be made, as SGI and the Stephens family would bear not only the cost of improving the Times, but also the decrease in the Morning News' value. The corresponding increase in the value of the Times would no longer be such an attractive payoff.

Conversely, in a competitive situation, the Morning News would have incentive to make gains at the expense of the Times, but [78] in the current situation, the elder Stephens, as owners of the Donrey paper, would have little incentive to take money from the pockets of their children, which they will inherit in any case. This situation will certainly not be helped any by the thirteen million dollars in unsecured loans to NAT which should reduce the elder Stephens' desire to see the Times go out of business, something a competitor would normally desire.

Even to the extent that the Stephens family does not directly interfere with management decisions or share information, the fact remains that the employees of Donrey and NAT know who their "bosses" are, and, again, it is simply human nature to try to please the persons who have control over the employees' fate. In that respect, after having seen and heard Jack Stephens testify, and after hearing and seeing evidence in respect to how the Stephens family does business, and apparently always has, the court is convinced that everyone in that exceptionally well run organization with wide ranging business interests knows who's "boss." In fact, the court suspects that Jack Stephens is such a strong personality that his wishes are usually carried out without the [79] necessity of direct orders from him. "They" just intuitively know what he wants and they do it.

If the responsible person in any of the separate and supposedly independent family businesses get the message, in whatever form, as to his desire in respect to that business, it's done, as evidenced by Donrey's dropping the Times acquisition like a hot potato simply because one of Stephens' employees, as he exited the airplane in Fort Smith, told a Donrey officer that the family, not Donrey, would buy the Times. The word was that Stephens wanted it that way, so that's the way it would be.

Even in the time since the litigation commenced, George Smith, the publisher of the Times, has testified that, despite public proclamations to the contrary, he did not really intend to become the dominant newspaper in Northwest Arkansas. Rather, he had decided that the best business decision would be to focus exclusively on his "home turf" in Fayetteville. All it would take is a similar realization by the publishers at the Morning News, that they should give up their regional aspirations and focus on their "home turf" in Springdale and Rogers, and you effectively have a market division [80] agreement.

In sum, it is clear to the court that the various members of the Stephens family do [*1171] not pursue separate interests or compete against each other in any way. NAT and Donrey may as a technical matter be separate legal entities, but in practical effect, NAT's acquisition of the Times may substantially lessen competition between the Times and the Morning News and in the Northwest Arkansas local daily newspaper market. This, is all that is required to find violation of Section 7.

In a previous ruling, the court framed the issue slightly differently. In Community Publishers, Inc. v. Donrey Corp., 882 F. Supp. 138 \(W.D. Ark. 1995\), the court held that the question was whether Donrey indirectly acquired the Times when it was purchased by NAT. While the court still believes the reasoning and precedent cited in support of that holding applies to this case, it seems more elegant to simply ask whether NAT's acquisition of the Times may substantially lessen competition, which is all that is required under Section 7. As explained above, the answer is "yes." The court also finds that Donrey indirectly acquired the Times.

Although NAT and Donrey are technically [81] separate entities, the court previously examined cases where, "in varying contexts, the courts have refused to take a formalistic approach to corporate structures in order to effectively implement the antitrust laws." Id. at 140-41. In the subsequent-course of litigation, the parties have brought the court's attention to further cases that support its prior ruling, and the court will discuss these cases given the novel nature of this question.

Defendants argue that, as a matter of law, Donrey has not indirectly acquired the Times, and NAT'S acquisition will not substantially lessen competition, because NAT and Donrey are not owned by a common parent or some single person or firm. The court considers Julius Nasso Concrete Corp. v. DIC Concrete Corp., 467 F. Supp. 1016 \(S.D.N.Y. 1979\) to be directly contrary to this argument. In Julius Nasso, a construction materials firm was acquired by a joint venture of three construction companies and/or by "individuals said to be in control of the joint venture." Id. at 1018. In either case, the court found that the case was cognizable under Section 7 and denied a motion to dismiss. As in this case, if the ownership was traced [82] back far enough, a cluster of non-competing shareholders, none with majority status, would be found.

Defendants also argue that there is no precedent for aggregating the shares of stock held by the Stephens family, and yet in American Crystal Sugar Co. v. Cuban-American Sugar Co., 152 F. Supp. 387, 392 \(S.D.N.Y. 1957\), aff'd, 259 F.2d 524 \(2d Cir. 1958\), the court clearly thought it appropriate to do so. In American Crystal, the court found it necessary in a Section 7 action to calculate defendant's percentage of stock ownership in a competitor, and so included shares owned by defendant's chairman of the board and his "immediate family and other persons likely to accept his advice." Id. at 392.

There is also a group of cases arising under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, where the court determined that two or more legally separate and distinct entities are not distinct for purposes of antitrust law if they are not "independent sources of economic power . . . pursuing separate interests." Copperweld v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 \(1984\). While the specific holding of Copperweld is that a parent cannot conspire with 83 a subsidiary, "the thrust of the holding is that economic reality, not corporate form, should control the decision of whether related entities can conspire." City of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa v. Associated Elec. Co-op, 838 F.2d 268, 275 \(8th Cir. 1988\). Moreover, "the logic of Copperweld reaches beyond its bare result, and it is the reasoning of the Court, not just the particular facts before it, that must guide our determination." Id. at 274.

In Mount Pleasant, the Eighth Circuit held that the individual cooperatives making up a rural electric cooperative association could not have conspired under Section 1, as a matter of law. In words that could just as easily apply to this case, the court held that "the cooperative organization is a single enterprise pursuing a common goal" and that "there is no evidence that any defendant has ever pursued interests antithetical to those of *1172 the cooperative as a whole." Id. at 276. The court also commented that "even though the cooperatives may quarrel among themselves on how to divide the spoils of their economic power, it cannot reasonably be said that they are independent sources of that power." Id. at 277 (emphasis in original). 84 As in this case, the Stephens family is a cooperative venture where the individual members never pursue antithetical interests, and where the spoils of economic power may be divided up this way and that, but where it cannot reasonably be said they are independent sources of power.

Similarly, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit disregarded corporate formalities in Century Oil Tool, Inc. v. Production Specialties, Inc., 737 F.2d 1316, 1317 \(5th Cir. 1984\), where the court described the two defendant corporations as follows:

Production Specialties and Gas Lift were separately incorporated and commonly owned by three men, two of whom owned 30 percent of each corporation and one of whom owned the remaining 40 percent of each corporation. All three men served as directors and officers of each corporation.

As in this case, no single shareholder had majority status in even one corporation, and yet both corporations were found to be under common control such that they could not legally conspire.

Finally, the parties have briefed in detail a line of cases where it is held that when a single firm is a minority stockholder in a competitor, it may substantially lessen 85 competition under Section 7. See e.g. United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 77 S. Ct. 872, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057 \(1957\); American Crystal Sugar Co. v. Cuban-American Sugar Co., 152 F. Supp. 387, 392 \(S.D.N.Y. 1957\), aff'd, 259 F.2d 524 \(2d Cir. 1958\). In such cases, a single entity has control over at least one firm and then substantial minority ownership of a competitor. Such cases differ dramatically from the facts of this case, where no single member of the Stephens family has control over either NAT or Donrey. However, to the extent that these minority ownership cases provide guidance in this case, it is that a firm need not exercise technical, legal control over a corporate competitor in order to lessen competition. Evidence that the minority stock ownership allows one firm to control the other and may substantially reduce competition will suffice. Usually, this will be evidence of actual control or intent to control by the minority shareholder.

In this case, to the extent that it is analogous to the minority ownership cases, the evidence that the overlapping minority ownership of NAT and Donrey may substantially reduce competition is the evidence 86 of familial and economic ties that forever and irrevocably bind the Stephens family.

892 F. Supp. 1146, *1172 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9514, 86

This case provides a perfect example of the fluidity of corporate forms and the potential dangers they present. Donrey and NAT essentially share a common genetic imprint, i.e., ownership by various Stephens family trusts. Such a corporate "cloning" procedure should not be allowed to create large loopholes in Section 7.

Community Publishers, 882 F. Supp. at 140.

IX. REMAINING CAUSES OF ACTION

As the court believes NAT's acquisition of the Times, and Donrey's indirect acquisition, violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act, it will be unnecessary to consider the claims arising under Section 1 of the Sherman Act involving contracts in restraint of trade and Section 2 of the Sherman Act involving monopolization and attempts to monopolize.

HN17 [↑] Section 7 of the Clayton Act is the principal antitrust statute applicable to mergers and acquisitions. 3 Julian O. von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws & Trade Regulation § 23.01 (1994). However, Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act are applicable as well. Id. at § 23.01[1],[2].

HN18 [↑] With regard to Section 1 of the Sherman Act, anticompetitive [87] acquisitions can violate that section, presumably as a combination in restraint of trade. United States v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. 376 U.S. 665, 671-72, 84 S. Ct. 1033, 12 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1964) ("where merging companies are major competitive factors in a relevant market, the elimination of significant competition between them, by merger or consolidation, [*1173] itself constitutes a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.").

There is not a great deal of merger and acquisition litigation under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, but it appears clear that mergers challenged under Section 1 should be evaluated by the same substantive standards as those applied under Section 7 of the Clayton Act. For instance, in United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d 1278 (7th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920, 111 S. Ct. 295, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249 (1990), the court stated,

We doubt whether there is a substantive difference today between the standard for judging the lawfulness of a merger challenged under section 1 of the Sherman Act and the standard for judging the same merger challenged under section 7 of the Clayton Act. It is true that the operational language of the two provisions [88] is different and that some of the old decisions (old by antitrust standards anyway) speak as if that should make a difference. [citations omitted] A transaction violates section 1 of the Sherman Act if it restrains trade; it violates the Clayton Act if its effect may be substantially to lessen competition. But both statutory formulas require, and have received, judicial interpretation; and the interpretations have, after three quarters of a century, converged. 2 Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law, P 304 (1978); 4 id., P 906, at p. 22.

Rockford, 898 F.2d at 1281-82. See also McCaw Personal Communications v. Pacific Telesis Group, 645 F. Supp. 1166, 1173 (N.D. Cal. 1986) ("the standard . . . under the Sherman Act is similar, if not identical, to that under the Clayton Act").

Given this convergence of legal standards, according to Areeda and Turner, "as a practical matter, Sherman Act § 1 is now largely superfluous in merger litigation, except for some regulated firms or pre-1980 mergers." IV Phillip E. Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law, P 906 (1994 Supp.) (footnotes omitted).

Rather than decide whether Section 1 is superfluous in the context of mergers and acquisitions, [89] this court will hold that it is unnecessary to reach the Section 1 claim, since it is voiding the challenged acquisition under Section 7. This very route was taken by the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 83 S. Ct. 1715, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915 (1963), where the Court held that a challenged merger violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act and that, as a consequence, "we need not, and therefore do not, reach the further question of alleged violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act." Id., 374 U.S. at 324. For the same reasons, it is not necessary to reach the alleged violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.²²

It will also be unnecessary to reach private plaintiffs' claims arising under Section 8 of the Clayton Act involving interlocking directorates, and Section 7a of the Clayton [90] Act involving government notification under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Amendments, because any possible relief that might be available under these provisions has already been awarded.

X. REMEDY

Having concluded that Section 7 has been violated, we must now determine the appropriate remedy. HN19[↑] "The relief in an antitrust case must be 'effective to redress the violations' and 'to restore competition.'" Ford Motor Company v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 573, 92 S. Ct. 1142, 31 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1972) (citations omitted). Moreover, "it is well settled that once the Government has successfully borne the considerable burden of establishing a violation of law, all doubts as to the remedy are to be resolved in its favor." United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 334, 81 S. Ct. 1243, 6 L. Ed. 2d 318 (1961). The court is "clothed with 'large discretion' to fit the decree to the special needs of the individual case." Ford Motor, 405 U.S. at 573 (citations omitted).

All plaintiffs ask for HN20[↑] permanent injunctive relief: the private plaintiffs under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, and the [*1174] government under Section 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1[*91] 25. Private plaintiffs ask for relief in the form of divestiture or rescission. The government initially sought only divestiture but has filed a post-trial motion to amend its complaint to name Thomson as a defendant and seek the alternative relief of rescission.

Thomson contends that rescission is not an available remedy in a private suit and objects to any request on the part of the government for an order of rescission. It points out that the government did not name it as a defendant prior to trial and did not seek the remedy of rescission. It therefore contends it would be prejudiced by a post-trial amendment since it did not defend against the case presented by the government.

Thomson initially raised in a motion to dismiss the issue of the availability of rescission as a remedy in a suit brought by a private party.²³ We rejected this argument finding that we had the authority to order rescission if the court found such a remedy was warranted.

[92] Our holding was in large part based on the Supreme Court's opinion in California v. American Stores Co., 495 U.S. 271, 110 S. Ct. 1853, 109 L. Ed. 2d 240 (1990). While that case dealt with the remedy of divestiture rather than rescission in the context of a private action brought under the Clayton Act, we find its reasoning persuasive and equally applicable to the 'equitable remedy of rescission.'

In American Stores, the Supreme Court reviewed the holding of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals that divestiture was not an available remedy in private actions under Section 16 of the Clayton Act. The Court reviewed both the statutory language and the legislative history and concluded that the "plain text of § 16 authorizes divestiture decrees [*1175] to remedy § 7 violations." American Stores, 110 S. Ct. at 1859.

The Court concluded that Section 16's simple grant of authority to "have injunctive relief" would seem to encompass the remedy of "divestiture just as plainly as the comparable language in § 15." Id. at 1859. Indeed, it noted a plausible argument could be made that the language of Section 16 was more expansive. Id. The Court quoted with approval the following [93] language from CIA Petrolera Caribe, Inc. v. ARCO Caribbean, Inc., 754 F.2d 404, 416 (1st Cir. 1985): "[§ 16] states no restrictions or exceptions to the forms of injunctive relief a private plaintiff may seek, or that a court may order . . . Rather, the statutory language indicates Congress' intention that traditional principles of equity govern the grant of injunctive relief." Id., 110 S. Ct. at 1859. It concluded that "section 16, construed to authorize a private divestiture remedy when appropriate in light of equitable principles, fits well in a statutory scheme that favors private enforcement, subjects mergers to searching scrutiny, and regards divestiture as the remedy best suited to redress the ills of an anticompetitive merger." Id., 110 S. Ct. at 1861.

Section 16 HN21[] was enacted "not merely to provide private relief but . . . to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws." Id., 110 S. Ct. at 1860, quoting, Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130-131, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 1579-1581, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969). Section 16 should therefore be applied "with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the [94] remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims." Id. (internal quotation omitted). The Court cautioned that its holding did not "mean that such power should be exercised in every situation in which the Government would be entitled to such relief under § 15. In a Government case the proof of the violation of law may itself establish sufficient public injury to warrant relief." Id., 110 S. Ct. at 1866.

Thomson points out that not one party has cited a case in which rescission was authorized against a private party or in which rescission was utilized as a form of permanent injunctive relief. While this may be true, it is also true that no case cited by any of the parties or found by the court indicates that rescission is not an available remedy under Section 16. In fact, as we pointed out in ruling on the motion to dismiss, other courts have specifically held that rescission is an available antitrust remedy in a private antitrust suit. See e.g., Arnett v. Gerber Scientific, Inc., 575 F. Supp. 770, 771 (S.D. N.Y. 1983). [95] Still others have mentioned the availability of rescission without any discussion of its applicability to a private action. See e.g., State of New York v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., 862 F. Supp. 1030, 1034 n.3 (S.D. N.Y. 1993) (a court should not order rescission unless the seller's return to the industry is feasible under the circumstances and the remedy is the most effective way to cure the antitrust violation), aff'd. without op., 14 F.3d 590 (2d Cir. 1993).

The seller's awareness that an antitrust challenge will be made to the pending merger or acquisition has also been said to be relevant to the possibility of involving the seller in the order of relief. United States v. Reed Roller Bit Co., 274 F. Supp. 573, 592 (W.D. Okla. 1967). It is well established that "where a defendant with notice in an injunction proceeding completes the acts sought to be enjoined the court may by mandatory injunction restore the status quo." Porter v. Lee, 328 U.S. 246, 251, 66 S. Ct. 1096, 90 L. Ed. 1199 (1956). (citation omitted).

As the parties are aware, the court is concerned that the parties acted with such speed in closing this transaction despite their knowledge of the private [96] plaintiffs' complaint seeking injunctive relief and despite their knowledge that a hearing had already been set on the motion for temporary restraining order.

A Thomson representative was served with a complaint and a motion for temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction on February 5, 1995, and was advised the request for injunctive relief would be heard by the court on February 7, 1995. The sale was closed during the afternoon of February 6, 1995. As private plaintiffs point out, had the court's schedule allowed it to hold the hearing the morning of February 6, 1995, the court could have enjoined the sale holding the parties in status quo. However Thomson, with knowledge of the pending motion for preliminary injunction, chose to consummate the sale and now suggests that the court has no authority to rescind the transaction in question.

The court believes that is fair to say that Thomson executives went into this transaction "with their eyes wide open." They were paid handsomely to gamble that this hurried up transaction would withstand antitrust scrutiny. They took the gamble they were paid to take.

HN22 Both divestiture and rescission require the dispossession of the specific [97] interest that created the unlawful monopoly or market power. The relief authorized by the Clayton Act does not end with dispossession of the unlawful interest but may include other measures designed to undo what was achieved through the unlawful acts. United States v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 607, 77 S. Ct. 872, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057 (1957) (relief must be directed to that which is necessary and appropriate in the public interest to eliminate the effects of the acquisition offensive to the statute); United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. 131, 171, 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 1260 (1948). The court's exercise of its equitable powers is not designed to be punitive and the decree should be no harsher than necessary to accomplish effective relief. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 603, 71 S. Ct. 971, 95 L. Ed. 1199 (1951) (concurring opinion).

HN23 The court need not resort to either rescission or divestiture if some other equitable relief suffices to provide an effective means of eliminating the illegal effects of the acquisition and is in the public interest. The court's equitable powers are to be exercised to restore as nearly as possible [98] the competitive situation that existed before the asset [*1176] acquisition. However, it is clear from the case law that divestiture is regarded as the preferred remedy.

"Divestiture has been called the most important of antitrust remedies. It is simple, relatively easy to administer, and sure. It should always be in the forefront of a court's mind when a violation of § 7 has been found." United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 330-31, 81 S. Ct. 1243, 6 L. Ed. 2d 318 (1961). Divestiture serves several functions: (1) it puts an end to the combination, conspiracy, or acquisition that was in itself unlawful; (2) it deprives the antitrust defendants of the benefits of their actions; and (3) "it is designed to break up or render impotent the monopoly power which violates the Act." Schine Chain Theatres v. United States, 334 U.S. 110, 128-29, 68 S. Ct. 947, 92 L. Ed. 1245 (1948). Further, the Supreme Court has said that "complete divestiture is particularly appropriate where asset or stock acquisitions violate the antitrust laws." Ford Motor, 405 U.S. at 573.

Both private plaintiffs and the government contend that a complete remedy will only be afforded [99] if the Times is placed in the hands of owners who are completely independent of NAT and Donrey. It is suggested that this can be accomplished in one of three ways: (1) sale by an independent trustee; (2) rescission; or (3) sale by NAT, L.C. Plaintiffs contend that divestiture through an independent trustee is the most effective remedy. They suggest an independent trustee who is given the power and incentive to maintain the value and competitive ability of the Times could be directed to sell the assets to a person who is competitively suitable and capable of managing the Times effectively, and who is not affiliated with the Stephens family or Donrey. In plaintiffs' opinion this would ensure the Times remains an independent entity, competing against Donrey, and it would remove much of the suspicion that would surround a sale by one of the parties.

According to the private plaintiffs, allowing NAT to sell the Times itself would be the least satisfactory of the three possible remedies. In their view, if NAT is allowed to sell the Times, the owners of Donrey will have the opportunity to choose Donrey's competitor in the market. This would allow Donrey's owners to [100] sell to someone who in their view would be a weak competitor, someone against whom the Morning News would ultimately prevail. Furthermore, it is suggested that NAT's owners might drag their feet in the sale and possibly permit the Times to deteriorate in the meantime.

NAT suggests either no remedy is needed or if the court believes some type of relief is warranted, then the court is urged to adopt some type of permanent hold separate order or other equitable remedy short of divestiture or rescission. NAT points out that the court has broad equitable powers and that injunctive relief is not mandated by the finding of a violation of the antitrust laws.

NAT reminds the court that it has expressed a strong desire to own and independently operate the Times and has demonstrated a commitment to making significant capital investments. According to NAT, its investors have promised to keep the Times independent and nurture it into the best possible newspaper of its size anywhere. Many times such statements might ring hollow. Yet, considering the reputations of those who made the promises, they could have been carved in stone. Consideration of all of these facts should lead [101] to the conclusion that if NAT's ownership of the Times results in anticompetitive consequences, harm to the public interest will not be remedied by the creation of a situation where more anticompetitive consequences arise in a different form.

A similar argument was rejected by the Supreme Court in Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 92 S. Ct. 1142, 31 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1972). In that case Ford Motor Company had purchased certain assets of Electric Autolite Co., an independent manufacturer of spark plugs and other automotive parts. The government challenged the acquisition. The lower court ordered the divestiture of the Autolite plant, the Autolite trade name and additional ancillary relief. Ford argued that under its ownership Autolite became a more effective competitor against other spark plug manufacturers than [*1177] it had been as an independent and that there were other benefits resulting from the acquisition. The Supreme Court rejected the argument that any asserted beneficial effect of the acquisition somehow alleviated the need for a remedy. The court stated:

It is argued, however, that the acquisition had some beneficial effect in making Autolite a more vigorous [102] and effective competitor against Champion and General Motors than Autolite had been as an independent. But what we said in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra, disposes of that argument. A merger is not saved from illegality under § 7, we said, because, on some ultimate reckoning of social or economic debits and credits, it may be deemed beneficial. A value choice of such magnitude is beyond the ordinary limits of judicial competence, and in any event has been made for us already, by Congress when it enacted the amended § 7. Congress determined to preserve our traditionally competitive economy. It therefore proscribed anticompetitive mergers, the benign and malignant alike, fully aware, we must assume, that some price might be paid.

Id., 405 U.S. at 569-70, quoting United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 371, 83 S. Ct. 1715, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915 (1963).

Under the circumstances of this case, we believe no effective remedy can be devised that would allow NAT or its owners to retain an interest in the Times. To allow NAT to continue operating the Times under either the present ownership structure or the proposed structure [103] would only serve to perpetuate the anticompetitive effects of the acquisition. Under either ownership structure, the economic interests of NAT'S owners, converge with the economic interests of Donrey's owners. In fact, as we pointed out earlier the ownership, of the entities is substantially identical.

As the court has earlier indicated, it feels a great burden in attempting to do "the right thing" for all concerned. In spite of the violation of law that it has found, the court has no desire to punish anyone. The law doesn't provide for or allow that. Instead, it is this court's fervent hope that what it does in this case does not provide a cure that is worse than the disease, something that the court has recognized throughout these proceedings might be the outcome of all of this. It is the court's desire and intention that what it does will result in giving the Times its best chance to survive and provide the readers of Northwest Arkansas a fine newspaper for many years to come.

The court recognizes that divestiture is the preferred remedy in cases such as this, but the court has a great deal of concern about whether that is best for either the parties or the citizens of Northwest [104] Arkansas under the particular circumstances of this case.

One method to accomplish divestiture is to allow NAT to sell the paper. However, the court is convinced that allowing NAT to sell the paper within a prescribed time is not a viable alternative or the right one. As plaintiffs point out, that gives NAT's present owners too much control over the ultimate fate of the Times. If they were of a mind to do so, they could make certain that the Times came out of all of this less able to compete with their other very powerful and very valuable newspaper properties in this area.

As we noted above, if divestiture is ordered both the private plaintiffs and the government Suggest that this should be accomplished by appointing an independent trustee. The court agrees. The Times has already been under common ownership with the Morning News since February. As the government points out, the public interest is injured each day that competition is prevented under this arrangement. A number of witnesses testified at trial that the competition between the Times and the Morning News has, in their view, already lessened in a number of almost imperceptible ways.

The government [105] points out that the trustee could be directed to ensure that the Times is operated as an ongoing independent newspaper, limiting, to the extent possible, the transfer of confidential financial and other information to Donrey, Stephens family members, or their representatives and agents. It is suggested that a period of [*1178] three months should be sufficient to sell the assets of the Times.

The court's concern with divestiture through a independent trustee is that such a procedure would create a prolonged period of uncertainty in the market and would be expensive. It would also seem that this method would be least likely to insure that the Times would be sold for anything approaching fair market value. If potential purchasers knew that the trustee was required to sell the paper in a prescribed time, it is not likely that an offer would be received that would even come close to what would be paid for the paper in an arms length transaction. The sale would be a "fire sale."

Additionally, the court is concerned with the amount of disruption that would occur in the actual operation of the Times. The trustee would almost certainly be someone who is not associated currently with [106] the Times, was unaware of its current operations, and would have to familiarize himself or herself with the newspaper market in this area before being able to successfully undertake the operation of the Times and attempting to sell the newspaper. Obviously, any trustee that the court could name could not, in the short period of time allowed by such method, come into this complex and highly competitive newspaper market and effectively compete with the capable "pros" already here. All of this process would be disruptive and might make it difficult for the paper to retain officers and other employees vital to its successful operation.

In short, the court firmly believes that the divestiture remedy would likely be a cure worse than the disease. The court has a great deal of fear that divestiture through a trustee would insure that the Times would come out of this litigation so weakened that it could not survive, to the detriment of all concerned, and especially its readers.

On the other hand, the remedy of rescission has a great deal of appeal. In light of the preliminary injunction order which has been in place since two days after the transfer of the Times, the court would [107] not be faced with the difficulties often encountered in attempting to rescind mergers or asset acquisitions. That is, there should be no difficulty in separating the assets and requiring the rescission of the asset purchase agreement.

Thomson is also obviously quite capable of re-entering the market. Thomson, of course, operated the Times for a number of years and is still in the newspaper business and knows how to run a newspaper in this competitive climate. They did it for years. Additionally, there have been few changes in personnel at the Times. Most of the officers and other employees at the paper were hired and placed there by Thomson. They know their "bosses" at Thomson, and know what is expected of them. Thus, one of the uncertainties that might otherwise cause high employee turnover would be removed. Presumably Thomson could virtually step in and continue where they left off before the sale.

One of the difficulties with this remedy lies in the fact that Thomson does not desire to operate or retain for any length of time the Times. Thus, the remedy of rescission would merely operate to transfer the Times back to Thomson who would apparently once again place [108] the newspaper on the market. However, Thomson would naturally have a financial interest in once again obtaining top dollar for the newspaper and in operating it profitably and competitively in the interim.²⁴

²⁴ Thomson argues that it would be punished if rescission is ordered because the current market conditions including the chilling effects of this lawsuit on the potential sale of the Times would result in it being unable to obtain fair market value in its attempt to sell the Times to another interested party. The court notes that this difficulty, if it is a difficulty, was created at least in part by Thomson's decision to speedily close a transaction which it knew was being challenged under the antitrust laws.

There is no evidence that there would be a lack of interested buyers in the event the sale was rescinded.²⁵ In view of the preliminary [*1179] injunction order, rescission would be a simple, quick, and efficient method of restoring the competitive market as it existed prior to the challenged transaction. [109] Until February of this year Thomson successfully ran the Times and is in the newspaper business. If Thomson once again desires to sell the Times, it clearly has the knowledge, business expertise, and wherewithal to accomplish such a sale. In fact, Thomson is currently working with a broker to sell twenty-four other newspapers.

Thus, it [110] is clear that Thomson is eminently more qualified to run the newspaper or to sell it again, if that is its choice, than any trustee who could be found. The court concludes that, for these reasons, of all of the admittedly bad choices, rescission is the best one.

Having found the acquisition to be unlawful and having considered all alternatives, we conclude that rescission is the appropriate remedy under the circumstances of this case. Rescission will be prompt, serve as a means of redressing the violation, and is the most effective means of restoring competition. An order will be entered directing the rescission of the assets of the Times. The court will retain jurisdiction until the rescission is accomplished.

As we have concluded the, private plaintiffs have standing and they specifically requested rescission and named Thomson as a defendant, we need not rule on the government's motion to amend its complaint to name Thomson as a defendant to also seek the remedy of rescission.

United States District Judge

JUDGMENT AND ORDER OF RESCISSION

This non-jury matter came on for trial to the court on May 1, 1995, through May 10, [111] 1995. At the conclusion of the trial, the case was taken under advisement and the court directed the filing of post-trial briefs and proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. By memorandum opinion of even date, the court has set forth its findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with the provisions of Rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

For the reasons stated in the memorandum opinion the court finds that the challenged acquisition violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. IT IS ORDERED AND ADJUDGED in accordance with the memorandum opinion that, within thirty (30) days of the date of this judgment defendants, NAT, L.C., and Thomson Newspapers, Inc., shall rescind the asset purchase agreement entered into between NAT and Thomson on February 6, 1995, for the purchase of the assets of the Northwest Arkansas Times by NAT, and restore all matters to the state in which they existed prior to the agreement between said defendants on January 27, 1995. During the time necessary to complete the rescission, the terms of the court's preliminary injunction order entered on February 10, 1995, shall remain in full force and effect.

The court retains [112] jurisdiction until the rescission has been accomplished.

IT IS SO ORDERED this 30th day of June, 1995.

H. Franklin Waters

²⁵ NAT argues that there is little assurance that any bidders will come forward other than CPI and/or WEHCO. It notes that there were only four expressions of interest in the period of time the Times was on the market before NAT purchased the assets. only nineteen days elapsed between Thomson's public announcement of the sale and the closing of the sale. This allowed little time for other interested bidders to come forward. Further, the court notes that Harrington testified that the Times was held separate from the other group of 24 papers Thomson was selling because the Fayetteville market was much more promising than the market areas of the other 24 papers.

HN3 Supporting Materials, Affidavits

The initial burden is on the moving party to demonstrate, with or without supporting affidavits, the absence of a genuine issue of material fact and that judgment as a matter of law should be granted in the moving party's favor. A material question of fact is a question which will be outcome determinative of an issue in the case. The United States Supreme Court has instructed that the facts material in a specific case shall be determined by the substantive law controlling the given case or issue. Once the moving party has met the initial burden, the opposing party must "go beyond the pleadings" and designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine material issue for trial. The nonmoving party cannot rest on its pleadings. The nonmoving party may also not rely on conclusory allegations in affidavits.

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(b), (c), (d), a portion of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, read as follows:(b) It shall be unlawful for any person through a pattern for racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce.(c) It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.(d) It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(a), (b), or (c) of this section.

"Racketeering activity" is defined in 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(1) as a number of different violations of Title 18, including extortion under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1951 and mail fraud under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341. "Enterprise" is defined by 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(4) as any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(5) defines "pattern of racketeering activity" as at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after the effective date of this chapter and the last of which occurred within ten years (excluding any period of imprisonment) after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity. While the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act is a criminal statute as part of Title 18, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964(c) provides that any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962 may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

Four allegations are required in a complaint under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c): (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. A plaintiff must show that the racketeering predicates are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity. Continuity is both a closed- and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition. Thus the pattern of racketeering activity must show relatedness and continuity, and that continuity can be either closed or open-ended.

An enterprise as an ongoing "structure" of persons associated through time, joined in purpose, and organized in a manner amenable to hierarchical or consensual decision-making. The enterprise must be more than a group of associated businesses that "are operated in concert" under the control of one family, but must include a structure and goals separate from the predicate acts themselves. For purposes of 18 U.S.C.S. 1962\(c\), a corporation cannot be both the "enterprise" and the "person" conducting or participating in the affairs of that enterprise.

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, provides for private actions for damages by any person injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. The injury involved in an antitrust case should reflect the anti-competitive effect either of the violations or of the anti-competitive acts made possible by the violation.

HN10 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law

Antitrust standing can be found using the following factors: (1) the directness of the injury to the plaintiff; (2) whether there exists an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement; (3) the speculativeness of the alleged injury; (4) the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims of the alleged conduct; (5) the importance of avoiding duplicative recoveries; and (6) whether the plaintiff can enforce an antitrust judgment efficiently and effectively. Under section 4 of the Clayton Act, the plaintiff must prove (1) a duty recognized by the antitrust laws; (2) a violation of the antitrust laws; (3) injury to an interest protected by the antitrust laws and attributable to the antitrust violation -- that is antitrust injury; and (4) a direct link between the antitrust violation and the antitrust injury, that is to say, standing."

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

I. Background

This court takes full judicial notice of the massive and elaborate record in this case. That record provides the backdrop of this court's serious and statutory obligations to move civil cases to a proper conclusion expeditiously. That concept was embodied specifically in the Civil Justice Reform Act of 1990, 28 U.S.C. § 1, et seq. Under that act, this court early on engaged in an extremely time-consuming process involving its judges, magistrates, attorneys representing a wide variety of litigants, as well as citizen representatives to formulate specific plans and proposals to provide early disposition of civil cases. It was readily apparent that in the dichotomy of legislative values in the Congress, that earlier and faster was far better. This congressional mandate is, and must be, kept in mind in the disposition of even the most complex and convoluted civil case. This case has now been pending since this plaintiff¹ filed it in this court on February 8, 1994. Currently, there are 330 items listed on the court's docket sheet. Vast judicial resources have already [*4] been expended on it.

This plaintiff is now, and has at all times, been represented in this case by extremely talented and experienced counsel. This court believes deeply in the right of counsel in civil cases to have a wide range of options to advocate for a client's interest. Often this array of options provides counsel with the opportunity to often make sophisticated tactical choices. As will be soon indicated here, counsel for this plaintiff has now obviously chosen one of those tactical choices.

In the first instance, the issues in this litigation were framed in a far-reaching set of allegations reflected in the plaintiff's original complaint filed here. Certainly, the issues and the acrimony between the parties and counsel was heightened by the counter-assertions made by the various defendants. This case is now before this court on defendants' motion for [*5] partial summary judgment filed under Rule 56, Fed.R.Civ.P., which essentially challenges those claims of this plaintiff based on the federal question jurisdiction of this court under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1343\(3\).

The aforesaid motion for summary judgment has been pending since February 23, 1995. This plaintiff has been given a substantial opportunity in time to file responses to the defendants' motion for summary judgment. The reasons for the plaintiff's refusal to respond to the defendants' motion for summary judgment has been repeatedly and elaborately stated in the record of this case. The sum and substance of the plaintiff's contentions in this regard come down to an assertion that because of an impending grand jury investigation in this district, that time is not available to respond to the defendants' motion for summary judgment. It is the plaintiff who made knowledge of that investigation a matter of public record for the first time in this case. It has been most recently asserted that this plaintiff is not now a target of that investigation, although a contrary assertion was made earlier on. In this regard, this court also takes full judicial notice of yet another lawsuit [*6] that was filed by this plaintiff during the time frame just referred to. That case, United States ex rel. Addis v. Holy Cross Health System Corporation, et al., was filed on May 4, 1995, and pursuant to the request of this plaintiff, was sealed. However, more recently, on June 13, 1995, this plaintiff has in effect broken that seal and made the existence of that case a matter of public record by including a subpoena to him from the grand jury which requests the documents and records of that litigation.

This court has been lenient in providing this plaintiff with an opportunity to respond to this motion for summary judgment, and he has now specifically declined to do so. Certainly his counsel is aware of the trilogy of Supreme Court decisions that bear on the obligation to respond to motions for summary judgment. See, Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\); and Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). More recently, there is a fourth case, Eastman Kodak v. Image Technical Services, 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\). Certainly it is assumed that counsel for this plaintiff was well aware of the specific teaching from the Supreme Court of the United States that when a broad based and challenging summary judgment motion is advanced, failure to respond to it can be devastating and fatal.

¹ This court will refer to Howard M. Addis, M.D., Howard M. Addis, M.D. Surgeon, Inc. and TJB Partnership collectively as "plaintiff" or "Dr. Addis."

In an entirely different context, where pro se litigants are involved, this circuit honors these values by requiring a specific notice of the effect of failure to respond. See, Lewis v. Faulkner, 689 F.2d 100 (7th Cir. 1982). In effect, even with counsel present, this court honored the values that are implicit in Lewis v. Faulkner and gave this plaintiff a final opportunity to respond to a motion for summary judgment which has now been pending for four months. It is readily apparent from the record in this case that counsel for this plaintiff has made a sophisticated tactical and strategic choice to permit this motion for partial summary judgment to be decided without the benefit of any appropriate response as required by Rule 56 and as specifically required by recent Supreme Court decisions interpreting that rule. In another context, this [*8] circuit has held that even HN1 where no opposition is made to a motion for summary judgment, the underlying legal merits claimed in that motion must be examined and that it is improper to rely solely on some species of default. See, Williams v. Califano, 593 F.2d 282 (7th Cir. 1979) (even where a claimant in a social security case has made no response to the government's motion for summary judgment, court must still determine whether the motion has legal merit). Therefore, this court will take the trouble to carefully parse the record in this case to determine whether or not the defendants' motion for summary judgment, or any part of it, is well taken. This court will not bottom its decision on some technical failure to comply with federal or local procedural rules, but, in the spirit of Williams, deal in depth with the merits of the plaintiff's claims which are based on federal question jurisdiction.

II. Facts

Under Local Rule 56.1, all facts presented in defendants' Statement of Material Facts which are supported by admissible evidence are deemed true, as none have been controverted by the plaintiff. Plaintiff, Howard M. Addis, M.D., is a physician licensed by the state [*9] of Indiana, and is currently on the active medical staff at Saint Joseph's Medical Center ("Med Center"). Dr. Addis has privileges at the Med Center to perform general surgical procedures, and has held privileges of varying kinds at the Med Center beginning in 1973. Dr. Addis also holds surgical privileges at Memorial Hospital of South Bend, St. Joseph Hospital of Mishawaka, Bremen Community Hospital, and at the Edison Lakes Surgery Center, an outpatient facility in Mishawaka.

In August, 1993, Dr. Addis was the subject of a corrective action at the Med Center involving his care of Mrs. Jean Riley. Dr. Addis had attended Mrs. Riley during an emergency room visit and had performed non-emergency invasive surgery upon her. Mrs. Riley had a prosthetic heart valve, and Dr. Addis failed to order appropriate antibiotics or recognize an infection in that valve prior to performing the surgery, which placed Mrs. Riley at risk. Dr. George Friend, chairman of the Surgery Department of the Med Center, had Mrs. Riley's chart reviewed by two other doctors, and reviewed the chart himself, and then requested that Dr. Paul Howard, president of the Medical Staff at the Med Center, initiate corrective [*10] action. Dr. Howard notified Dr. Addis that the Staff Credentials Committee would meet to discuss his care of Mrs. Riley and that he was encouraged to attend. Dr. Addis declined the opportunity to attend the Credentials Committee meeting, held September 9, 1993, but asked Dr. Howard to read a letter from him to the committee.

The Credentials Committee met and forwarded its report to the Executive Committee. Dr. Howard again informed Dr. Addis both by personal communication and letter that corrective action was being considered and which areas of Mrs. Riley's treatment were being reviewed. Dr. Addis then requested that the Credentials Committee be reconvened so that he might address the issues, and the committee was reconvened with Dr. Addis present on September 20, 1993. The Credentials Committee again forwarded its conclusions to the Executive Committee after this second meeting. The Executive Committee met on September 21, 1993, and Dr. Addis appeared before the committee for approximately one hour during the three to four hour meeting. After hearing Dr. Addis' testimony and the testimony of Dr. Randolph Szlabick, vice-chairman of the Surgery Department, who had reviewed the chart, [*11] and reviewing the entire clinical record, the Executive Committee voted to summarily suspend Dr. Addis' privileges at the Med Center for thirty days. Dr. Howard informed Dr. Addis of the committee's decision that same evening by telephone. Within two days, Dr. Addis requested, both by telephone and letter, that Dr. Howard place him on the "emeritus" staff of the hospital in anticipation of his retirement from active practice.

Dr. Addis received shortly thereafter a letter from Dennis Heck, President of the Med Center, informing him of the summary suspension and giving him information on any appeal he might wish to take. Dr. Addis did not appeal his suspension, and his privileges have been reinstated and in effect since October 21, 1993. Upon his return to active practice, the Executive Committee reinstated certain proctoring requirements on Dr. Addis which had been deleted from Mr. Heck's letter to Dr. Addis because of Dr. Addis' statement that he would be retiring.

Dr. Addis filed his original complaint in this case in February 1994, alleging violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968 (RICO); the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. I*12I § 2, and Indiana state law. Plaintiff amended his complaint on November 16, 1994, adding his co-plaintiffs to his complaint. The primary thrust of both the original and amended complaint is that three physicians, Dr. Friend, chairman of the Med Center Surgery Department, Dr. Gruszynski, chairman of the Med Center Obstetrics/Gynecology Department, and Dr. O'Dea, chairman of the Med Center Medical Department (specializing in gastroenterology), conspired with the Med Center, and its corporate family, to drive Dr. Addis out of the surgery-provider market in the South Bend geographic area. Dr. Addis alleged that his use of laparoscopic (laser) surgery had drawn patients away from the three physicians and thus the three attempted to remove him from the market with the complicity of the Med Center. It is relevant to note that all three sit on the Executive Committee, but they are only three of the fifteen members of that committee. No other Executive Committee members are in direct economic competition with Dr. Addis.

After considerable discovery by both parties, defendants filed their motion for partial summary judgment on the two federal question issues, antitrust and civil RICO, and [*13] alleged immunity under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986 ("HCQIA"), 42 U.S.C. §§ 11101-11152. As stated above, plaintiff has refused to respond to the motion for partial summary judgment. Thus, this court will now rule without benefit of advocacy on behalf of the plaintiff.

III. Analysis

HN2 [↑] Summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with any affidavits, show that there exists no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed.R.Civ.P.56; Russo v. Health, Welfare & Pension Fund, Local 705, 984 F.2d 762 \(7th Cir. 1993\).

A thorough discussion of Rule 56 by the Supreme Court of the United States can be found in a trilogy of cases decided in 1986. See, [Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. [*16] The most that can be said for Kodak is that it did not tinker with Celotex and Anderson, and possibly involves an attempt to clarify Matsushita. This view is well supported by an in-depth academic analysis in Schwarzer, Hirsch, and Barrans, The Analysis and Decision of Summary Judgment Motions, 139 F.R.D. 441 (1992).

A. Civil RICO

In Counts One through Five of the First Amended Complaint, plaintiff alleges that various combinations of defendants have violated HN5 18 U.S.C. § 1962 (b), (c), and (d), a portion of the RICO act. Those sections read as follows:

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person through a pattern for racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity [*17] or collection of unlawful debt.

(d) It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsection (a), (b), or (c) of this section.

HN6 "Racketeering activity" is defined in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1) as a number of different violations of Title 18, including extortion under § 1951 and mail fraud under § 1341, both of which plaintiff alleges have occurred. "Enterprise" is defined by 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4) as "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5) defines "pattern of racketeering activity" as "at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after the effective date of this chapter and the last of which occurred within ten years (excluding any period of imprisonment) after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity." While RICO is a criminal statute as part of Title 18, § 1964(c) provides that "any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover [*18] threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." Plaintiff has filed his complaint in this court pursuant to that statute.

In Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co. Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985), the Supreme Court upheld an expansive use of the RICO statute in civil litigation. In Sedima, the district court dismissed the complaint because it believed that a separate RICO injury was required, which must be distinct from the injury caused by the predicate act. 473 U.S. at 484, 105 S. Ct. at 3279. The court of appeals affirmed, also requiring a RICO, or racketeering, injury to be alleged for standing purposes. Id. at 485. Additionally, the court of appeals found that the statute required an allegation that the defendants had been convicted of the predicate criminal acts, which the plaintiff had not done. Id. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that no criminal conviction was needed to prosecute an action under § 1964, only criminal conduct, and that there was no requirement of a "racketeering injury" under the statute. Id. at 493 and 498. The Supreme Court further stated that the use of RICO [*19] against "respected businesses" is one which is contemplated by the statute and is appropriate thereunder. Id. at 499.

Sedima requires HN7[] four allegations in a complaint under § 1962\(c\): "(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Id. at 496. In H.J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 239, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 2900, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 \(1989\), the Supreme Court sharpened the definition of "pattern" by holding that "a plaintiff . . . must show that the racketeering predicates are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity." The court in H.J., Inc. further stated that continuity "is both a closed- and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition." 492 U.S. at 241, 109 S. Ct. at 2902. Thus the pattern of racketeering activity must show relatedness and continuity, and that continuity can be either closed or open-ended.

The first issue is whether an enterprise, as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(4\) above, and as required by §§ 1962\(b\), \(c\), and \(d\), has been [*20] proven by the facts as discussed above. In plaintiff's RICO Case Statement, filed November 14, 1994, plaintiff identified two "enterprises" for purposes of his § 1962\(c\) claims: the "Medical Center Enterprise" and the "Ironwood Enterprise." Plaintiff defines the "Medical Center Enterprise" as the Med Center itself, as operated by defendant Care Group, a subsidiary of defendant Holy Cross. Plaintiff also includes defendant Horizon, as a subsidiary of Care Group, in the definition of the "Medical Center Enterprise." The "Ironwood Enterprise" is defined as the medical practices of Dr. Addis and Dr. Farr, the building which houses the Ironwood clinic, and the 26 acres of real estate upon which the Ironwood facility sits.

The Seventh Circuit has recently reviewed the requirements of an enterprise in Richmond v. Nationwide Cassel L.P., 52 F.3d 640 \(7th Cir. 1995\). Richmond defines HN8[] an enterprise as "an ongoing 'structure' of persons associated through time, joined in purpose, and organized in a manner amenable to hierarchical or consensual decision-making." 52 F.3d at 644 \(7th Cir. 1995\) (citations omitted). The enterprise must be "more than a group of associated businesses that [*21] 'are operated in concert' under the control of one family," but must include" a structure and goals separate from the predicate acts themselves." Id. at 645 (citations omitted). The Richmond court went on to state that "for purposes of section 1962\(c\), a corporation cannot be both the 'enterprise' and the 'person' conducting or participating in the affairs of that enterprise." Id. at 646, n.11 (citations omitted). In this case, the Med Center is alleged to be both a defendant, ie. a person conducting the enterprise's affairs, and the enterprise itself. Richmond makes it clear that the person and the enterprise must be distinct entities. Citing Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 113 S. Ct. 1163, 1173, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525 \(1993\), the Richmond court stated that "liability depends on showing that the defendants conducted or participated in the conduct of the 'enterprise's affairs,' not just their own affairs." 52 F.3d at 647. Here, plaintiff has not shown how the defendants are doing anything other than managing their own affairs in conducting the business of the Med Center. Thus, the plaintiff's allegation that the Med [*22] Center is an "enterprise" for purposes of 18 U.S.C. § 1962 is defective as a matter of law, and summary judgment is granted on claims alleging that entity as an enterprise.

In his other RICO counts, plaintiff labels the enterprise as the "Ironwood Enterprise," which he defines as the medical practices of Dr. Addis and Dr. Farr, the building which houses the Ironwood clinic, and the 26 acres of real estate upon which the Ironwood facility sits. Plaintiff has neither alleged nor shown any evidence of any hierarchical structure in this "enterprise," nor that any of the defendants participate in the conduct of this "enterprise's" affairs. Thus, the "Ironwood Enterprise" does not meet the requirements of an enterprise for purposes of § 1962, and summary judgment is granted on claims alleging that association as an enterprise.

B. Anti-Trust

In Counts Six through Eight, plaintiff alleges that various combinations of defendants have violated the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq. HN9[] Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, provides for private actions for damages by any person "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." The Supreme [*23] Court, in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 \(1977\), limited the scope of section 4 by holding that the injury involved in an antitrust case should reflect the anti-competitive effect either of the violations or of the anti-competitive acts made possible by the violation. The Supreme Court further limited the use of section 4 in Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\), by requiring that a plaintiff have antitrust standing. HN10[¹⁰] That standing could be found using the following factors: (1) the directness of the injury to the plaintiff; (2) whether there "exists an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement"; (3) the speculativeness of the alleged injury; (4) the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims of the alleged conduct; (5) the importance of avoiding duplicative recoveries; and (6) whether the plaintiff can enforce an antitrust judgment efficiently and effectively. 459 U.S. at 540-45. [*24]

The Seventh Circuit refined the requirements needed for an action under section 4 in Greater Rockford Energy & Technology Co. v. Shell Oil Co., 998 F.2d 391, 395 \(7th Cir. 1993\) cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1111, 114 S. Ct. 1054, 127 L. Ed. 2d 375 (1994), stating that the plaintiff must prove "(1) a duty recognized by the antitrust laws; (2) a violation of the antitrust laws; (3) injury to an interest protected by the antitrust laws and attributable to the antitrust violation -- that is antitrust injury; and (4) a direct link between the antitrust violation and the antitrust injury, that is to say, standing." In their motion for summary judgment, defendants allege that plaintiff has proven neither antitrust injury nor antitrust standing. After careful review of the record, this court agrees and will grant summary judgment accordingly.

In Robles v. Humana Hosp. Cartersville, 785 F. Supp. 989 \(N.D.Ga. 1992\), the court was faced with a case very similar to Dr. Addis', although the facts in Robles are more egregious. In Robles, an obstetrician lost his privileges at the only hospital in Cartersville, Georgia, after a peer review situation occurred in which [*25] a direct competitor of Dr. Robles was one of four members of the reviewing panel. 785 F. Supp. at 993-94. Robles sued the other two obstetricians in town and the hospital for antitrust violations. Id. The Robles court found that Robles could not show either antitrust injury or antitrust standing, and thus granted summary judgment on the antitrust claims. Id. at 999.

As in Robles, Dr. Addis is arguing that the defendants are attempting to "drive him from the market so that they can take over his market share of the [surgery] practice." Id. at 997. However, this is not sufficient to show that he has suffered "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp, 429 U.S. at 488-89, 97 S. Ct. at 697. Dr. Addis has not been removed from the market at all in this case; his privileges were not curtailed in any way at any other hospital in the South Bend area. South Bend has not had a decline in competition, as Addis has continued to compete, and there is evidence in this record that new surgeons have entered the South Bend area. Thus, consumers of surgical providers have [*26] more choice and more competition. Also like Robles, Addis has highlighted the various financial dealings between the parties in this case. However, the financial relationships between doctors and hospitals do not impact doctor-patient relationships, and thus do not impact the competition between doctors.

Additionally, Dr. Addis does not have antitrust standing, in that he is not the most appropriate plaintiff to pursue any potential antitrust violations. Both consumers of surgical services and the government would be more "efficient enforcers" of the antitrust laws, as both have "stronger interest[s] in ensuring that prices and services remain at competitive levels." Robles at 999. Reviewing the standing factors from Associated General Contractors above, it is clear that injury to competition is not a direct injury to Addis, that the "identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement" would be consumers, more so than other surgeons; and that, as stated above, there is no antitrust injury in any event. 459 U.S. at 540-45. Whether the plaintiff can enforce an antitrust judgment efficiently and [*27] effectively is also in question, as the plaintiff alleges in a recent filing that he has spent approximately $ 500,000 in legal expenses, and yet he is unable or unwilling to defend this motion.

As Addis has failed to show either antitrust injury or antitrust standing, his claims in Counts Six through Eight are insufficient as a matter of law, and thus summary judgment is granted as to those counts.

C. State Law Claims

As this court has now granted summary judgment as to all eight counts which raise this court's federal question jurisdiction, only Counts Nine through Fourteen, which allege various violations of state law and various common law violations, remain. This court now declines to exercise its supplemental jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1367, and thus, those counts will be dismissed without prejudice.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment as to Counts One through Eight is GRANTED, Counts Nine through Fourteen of the First Amended Complaint are DISMISSED without prejudice, and plaintiff is given leave to file those claims in state court. The clerk shall enter judgment accordingly.

IT IS [*28] SO ORDERED.

ORDER GRANTING EXXON'S MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON CARTWRIGHT ACT CLAIMS

The motion for partial summary judgment on Cartwright Act claims of defendants Exxon Corporation, Exxon Company, U.S.A., et al. ("Exxon") was heard on January 27, 1995. The court has read the moving and responding papers and heard the oral argument of counsel.¹ For the reasons set forth below, the court grants Exxon's motion for partial summary judgment on the Cartwright Act claims.

¹ Since the hearing on the motions, plaintiffs have submitted applications for leave to file supplemental briefs accompanied by the supplemental briefs. Defendants have objected to plaintiffs' applications and have also submitted briefs in opposition to plaintiffs' supplemental briefs. The court does not find [*2] good cause for allowing the supplemental briefs and sustains defendants' opposition to them. However, even if the briefs were considered, they would not change the outcome of this motion.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs in this action are current or former Northern California Exxon dealers who are challenging recent changes to Exxon's standard franchise agreement. Under the previous version of Exxon's standard franchise agreement, plaintiffs were not prohibited from purchasing quantities of gasoline, beyond a required minimum, from independent distributors (or "jobbers") selling Exxon-branded gasoline. Exxon sells gasoline through three types of arrangements: Exxon company-operated outlets, franchised independent dealer-operated ("direct serve") outlets such as plaintiffs, and branded outlets which are supplied with Exxon-branded gasoline by independent branded wholesale distributors. Exxon sells and delivers gasoline to plaintiffs at a price called the "Dealer Tank Wagon" (DTW) or "Dealer Tank Truck" price. Distributors buy gasoline directly from Exxon at a lower price, called the "rack" price or "jobber buying price."

The Tenth through Twelfth Claims for Relief of plaintiffs' Third Amended [*3] Complaint allege that Exxon has violated the Cartwright Act, California's antitrust law. Specifically, plaintiffs challenge Exxon's "dual distribution system" of selling gasoline at one price to direct serve dealers and at another price to distributors, who are prohibited from reselling the gas to direct serve dealers.² Additionally, plaintiffs challenge as an illegal tying arrangement the provisions in Exxon's franchise agreement that require that Exxon's tanks, lines, and equipment be used only with Exxon gasoline. The Tenth Claim for Relief challenges the dual distribution system as a horizontal restraint of trade. The Eleventh Claim challenges Exxon's practices as a vertical restraint. The Twelfth Claim alleges monopolization or attempted monopolization.

Exxon brings this motion for partial summary judgment, [*4] arguing that its activities represent vertical, non-price restraints that are valid under the antitrust "rule of reason." Exxon argues that plaintiffs have failed to meet the threshold requirement of proving Exxon's market power in the retail gasoline market. Further, Exxon contends that plaintiffs are collaterally estopped from challenging the restrictions on the use of Exxon's tanks, lines, and equipment by the federal class action consent decree in Bogosian.

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

The purpose of summary judgment is to avoid a trial when there is no genuine factual issue and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Bloom v. General Truck Drivers, Office, Food & Warehouse Union, 783 F.2d 1356, 1358 (9th Cir. 1986). Summary judgment is proper when "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). There is a "genuine" issue of material fact only when there is sufficient evidence such that a reasonable juror could find for the party opposing the motion. [*5] Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251-52, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). Entry of summary judgment is mandated against a party if, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, the party fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The court, however, must draw all justifiable inferences in favor of the nonmoving parties, including questions of credibility and of the weight to be accorded particular evidence. Masson v. New Yorker Magazine, Inc., 501 U.S. 496, 520, 111 S. Ct. 2419, 115 L. Ed. 2d 447 (1991). The court will consider the motion now before it with these standards in mind.

III. ANALYSIS

² Plaintiffs cite Texaco v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 110 S. Ct. 2535, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1990) in support of their Cartwright claims. However, Hasbrouck is a price discrimination case under the Robinson Patman Act. Plaintiffs have not pleaded such a claim in the instant suit, and, therefore, the Hasbrouck discussion of what constitutes a legitimate functional discount is of no help in resolving the issues presented.

A. Dual Distribution System

1. Tenth Claim—Horizontal Versus Vertical Restraint

Plaintiffs contend that Exxon's agreement with its jobbers to prevent them from selling to direct serve dealers is a horizontal restraint, and thus the rule of per se illegality should apply. See United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 \(1972\). A horizontal market allocation will be found where competitors agree to give each other a monopoly in a certain area. Krehl v. Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream Co., 664 F.2d 1348, 1354 \(9th Cir. 1982\). [*6] Because Exxon and its distributors were formerly "competitors" in the wholesale market for selling Exxon gasoline to direct serve dealers, plaintiffs insist that Exxon's requirement that distributors not sell to plaintiffs is a horizontal restraint. However, when the source of a conspiracy between a manufacturer and its distributors is the manufacturer, the agreement is vertical. Red Diamond Supply, Inc. v. Liquid Carbonic Corp., 637 F.2d 1001, 1004 \(5th Cir.\), cert. denied sub nom. Red Diamond Supply, Inc. v. ACME Welding & Supply, Inc., 454 U.S. 827, 102 S. Ct. 119, 70 L. Ed. 2d 102 (1981). This is true even when the manufacturer also distributes some of its own goods directly. Id. Here, it is clear that the source of the distributors' boycott of direct serve dealers is Exxon, as the distributors would undoubtedly prefer to be able to sell to the dealers. Thus, the agreement is imposed from the top down and is vertical. See Muenster Butane, Inc. v. Stewart Co., 651 F.2d 292, 295 \(5th Cir. 1981\) ("Vertical restraints are imposed by persons or firms further up the chain of distribution"); Krehl, 664 F.2d at 1355 (upholding district court's finding that dual distribution system was vertical in nature). Accordingly, [*7] plaintiffs' Tenth Claim for Relief, alleging a horizontal restraint of trade, must fail as a matter of law.

2. Eleventh Claim—Vertical Restraint

Because the challenged restriction is a vertical, non-price restraint, the rule of reason applies. Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 54, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 \(1977\) ("Vertical restrictions promote interbrand competition by allowing the manufacturer to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of his products."). To survive summary judgment under a rule of reason analysis, the plaintiffs must show a substantially adverse effect on competition, and not merely a reduction in intrabrand competition. Bert G. Gianelli Distributing Co. v. Beck & Co., 172 Cal. App. 3d 1020, 1048-49, 219 Cal. Rptr. 203\(1985\).

Prerequisite of Market Power

A threshold requirement under the rule of reason is that the defendant have sufficient market power to exert control over the price of its goods; absent sufficient market power, the price of a product is set by competition. Muenster Butane, 651 F.2d at 298. Before determining market power, the court must first define the relevant market. Plaintiffs argue that the relevant market is the wholesale market for Exxon gasoline. Exxon argues [*8] that the relevant market is the retail market for all gasoline.

Both market power and market definition are essentially questions of fact. Oahu Gas Service, Inc. v. Pacific Resources, Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 363 \(9th Cir.\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 109 S. Ct. 180, 102 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1988); United States Anchor Manufacturing, Inc. v. Rule Industries, Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 994-95 \(11th Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1221, 114 S. Ct. 2710, 129 L. Ed. 2d 837 (1994). Cf. Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Service Bureau, Inc., 4 Cal. 3d 842, 855, 94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953 \(1971\) (question of law and fact). Nonetheless, in this case, plaintiffs' definition of the relevant market can be rejected as a matter of law. In Muenster Butane, the Fifth Circuit rejected the plaintiffs' attempt to define the relevant market as the market for Zenith television sets:

[Plaintiff's] fundamental mistake throughout this case has been to view the product market as confined to Zenith sets. The record contains no suggestion that Zeniths are unique or that Zenith dealers enjoy a downward sloping demand curve for their sets. Indeed, the uncontradicted testimony . . . indicates that competition between Zenith dealers and dealers in other brands of television sets was 'so keen' that [a dealer] could not fix a minimum [*9] price for his Zeniths.

In the present case, there is also no suggestion that consumers differentiate among various brands of gasoline or that competition in the sale of gasoline is not intense. Just because Exxon's direct serve dealers may contractually purchase gasoline from only one source—Exxon—does not mean that the relevant market is Exxon gasoline. See Stearns v. Genrad, Inc., 752 F.2d 942, 946 (4th Cir. 1984) ("It has generally been recognized that every manufacturer has a 'natural monopoly' in the sale and distribution of its own products, especially when sold under a trademark."). Plaintiffs have cited, and the court can find, no case upholding a definition of the relevant market as the market for the manufacturer's own product.

Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Keith Leffler, states that there is "a relevant economic market for the sale of Exxon branded gasoline to dealers in the Greater Bay Area."³ Dr. Leffler opines that because the number of Exxon dealerships in the Bay Area is not increasing, Exxon is able to raise its DTW price above competitive levels without worrying about losing dealers, who are economically "locked in" to their franchises. (Leffler Decl., ¶¶ 15-16.) However, [*10] Dr. Leffler also states that "[a]t the retail level, consumers are very responsive to relatively small differentials in prices across gasoline brands. Therefore, even if a single supplier controlled the retail supply of a brand of gasoline, retail competition with other brands prevents that seller from exercising any significant market power." (Id., ¶ 12.) This conclusion supports a finding that, despite Exxon's alleged attempts at controlling the prices its dealers pay, Exxon cannot raise its DTW prices so high that Exxon dealers are unable to compete with other dealers at the retail level. Further, plaintiffs' claim that they are "locked in" to their relationships with Exxon is irrelevant to the definition of market power. In Mozart Co. v. Mercedes-Benz of North America, Inc., 833 F.2d 1342, 1346-47 (9th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 109 S. Ct. 179, 102 L. Ed. 2d 148 (1988), the Ninth Circuit found that the district court's jury instruction on market power was improper, and should have defined the relevant market as the market for dealership franchises:

Obviously there are costs in surrendering one franchise and acquiring another, but these are costs unrelated to the 'market power' of a unique automobile. [*11] These costs will enable the car maker to extract concessions from the dealer, but this power is related to the franchise method of doing business, not to the possible uniqueness of the car.

In Tominaga v. Shepherd, 682 F. Supp. 1489, 1494-95 (C.D. Cal. 1988), the court noted the fallacy of examining the question of market power from the perspective of the franchisee after the contract has been formed:

Plaintiff's implicit argument is that the relevant market is the "Pizza Man franchising" market. This market definition is erroneous as a matter of law. No reasonable argument can be made that Pizza Man possesses the power to coerce potential franchisees to purchase the tied product rather than sell a different brand of fast food (the tying product). The analysis must take place at the 'pre-contract' stage. Plaintiff, however, engages in 'post-contract' analysis concerning defendant's power over already existing franchisees by virtue of their 'sunk costs.' This argument was explicitly rejected in Mozart.

Id. (emphasis added) (citation omitted).

In the present case, plaintiffs' definition of the relevant market as the wholesale market for Exxon gasoline is erroneous as a matter of law. While Exxon franchisees may be locked in, this is not relevant to the market definition. As plaintiffs' own expert admits, Exxon does not have sufficient market power in the Bay Area to set its prices above the market level because there is fierce competition and consumers respond to very small increases in price. (Leffler Decl., ¶ 12.) As a matter of law, Exxon's market share, which is under 10 percent of the retail gasoline market, is insufficient to establish market power. See Rutman Wine Co. v. E & J Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 736 (9th Cir. 1987) (finding no market power with 25 percent market share); Liggett Group, Inc. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco, 748 F. Supp. 344, 355 (M.D.N.C. 1990) ("With at most twelve [*13] per cent (12%) of the domestic cigarette market, B & W as a matter of law could not exercise market power unilaterally in either the whole cigarette market or the generic segment."). Because plaintiffs cannot prove an essential element of a vertical antitrust claim as to the dual distribution system, this aspect of the Eleventh Claim for Relief must fail.

B. Tying Arrangement

Although plaintiffs' contention that Exxon's dual distribution system is an illegal vertical restraint of trade fails as a matter of law, plaintiffs additionally challenge the lease agreement's requirement that plaintiffs use Exxon's tanks, lines, and equipment only with Exxon branded gasoline as an illegal "tying arrangement." A tying arrangement, or "tie-in," exists where the sale of one product or service is conditioned on the purchase of another. Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). Because such an arrangement "serve[s] hardly any purpose beyond the suppression of competition," Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 305, 69 S. Ct. 1051, 93 L. Ed. 1371 (1949), it is illegal per se, Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 498, 89 S. Ct. 1252, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 (1969). In the present case, plaintiffs [*14] allege that Exxon is tying its lease of service station sites to the restricted use of its equipment for Exxon gasoline.

1. Market Power

As with a challenge under the rule of reason, a prerequisite to finding a tying arrangement illegal per se is proof that the defendant enjoys monopolistic power in the market for the tying product such that the defendant may restrict competition in the market for the tied product. Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984); Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1345; People v. National Ass'n of Realtors, 120 Cal. App. 3d 459, 473, 174 Cal. Rptr. 728 (1981) (Section 16720 of Cartwright Act).

Once again, the parties disagree as to how to define the relevant market. Plaintiffs contend that the relevant market for determining whether Exxon has market power is the market for Exxon franchises. Dr. Leffler states that Exxon franchisees are locked in to their stations by virtue of the sunk costs invested in their stations, their clientele, and their reputations. (Leffler Decl., ¶ 6(B).) Exxon argues that because Exxon gasoline is not unique and Exxon's share of the retail service station market is less than 10 percent, Exxon cannot force prospective franchisees to become [*15] Exxon dealers. The court agrees. Plaintiffs' argument that the court should consider the fact that Exxon's franchisees are "locked in" to their franchises in determining whether Exxon has sufficient monopoly power is erroneous. Plaintiffs cite Siegel v. Chicken Delight, 448 F.2d 43, 47 (9th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 955, 92 S. Ct. 1173, 31 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1972) to support their argument that Exxon has illegally tied its leasing and sales agreements with the requirement that its equipment be used only with Exxon gasoline. Although the court in Chicken Delight found that the defendant's requirement that its franchisees purchase various unrelated office supplies was an illegal tie in, subsequent cases have criticized Chicken Delight or limited it to situations where the tied products are not essential to the franchise agreement and are merely commonplace articles. See Krehl, 664 F.2d at 1352-53 (distinguishing Chicken Delight from the situation where the trademarked name is associated with the allegedly tied product); Mozart, 833 F.2d at 1346-47 (finding as a "basic fact that the 'market' at issue [was] the market for dealership franchises" despite claims that dealers are locked in by costs of surrendering dealerships); [*16] Tominaga, 682 F. Supp. at 1494 (criticizing Chicken Delight and stressing importance of pre-contract analysis in finding no market power exists in market for tying product). Therefore, the relevant market in this case is the market for gasoline franchises.

The cases hold that a defendant has market power in the tying product where the defendant either has sufficient market share to prevent rivals from selling the tied product or where the tying product is somehow unique.

Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 796 (1st Cir. 1988). This court has already determined that Exxon does not have sufficient market share in the market for service station sites, with less than 10 percent of the gasoline market in the Bay Area. Further, plaintiffs have offered no evidence indicating that gasoline, or gas station franchises, are unique products such that a prospective franchisee would not be free to choose with which gasoline manufacturer to become a franchisee. Accordingly, the court finds that plaintiffs have failed to raise a triable issue of fact regarding an essential element of the tying claim.

2. Effect of Bogosian

Exxon further argues the nationwide consent decree in Bogosian [*17] v. Gulf Oil Corp., 621 F. Supp. 27 (E.D. Pa. 1985) insulates it from all state antitrust claims challenging its lease provisions restricting the use of Exxon's gasoline storage and pumping equipment to Exxon gasoline. According to Exxon, ten of the fifteen plaintiffs in this action were class members in Bogosian and are bound by res judicata. Exxon further argues that the remaining plaintiffs, who were not dealers in 1985 at the time of the settlement, are bound because they "subsequently [came] into the class" and their interests received "actual and efficient protection." See Los Angeles Branch NAACP v. Los Angeles Unified School District, 750 F.2d 731, 741 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 919, 106 S. Ct. 247, 106 S. Ct. 248, 88 L. Ed. 2d 256 (1988).

Plaintiffs do not appear to contest that they are bound by Bogosian, but contend that Exxon has not complied with the consent decree. Plaintiffs argue that Bogosian explicitly states that Exxon "shall not require any Exxon lessee dealer to purchase his entire requirement of motor fuel from Exxon." (Simmons Decl., Ex. E, ¶ 7.) Further, although the settlement decree provides that Exxon may, to discharge "all of its obligations under paragraph 7," "provide an Exxon lessee [*18] dealer the opportunity to add additional pumps and tanks at his leased service station for the purpose of the sale of non-Exxon motor fuel," plaintiffs contend that they are denied this opportunity because of the prohibitive costs of installing the equipment and getting the necessary insurance, especially in light of the short duration of the lease (three years). However, nothing in the settlement decree indicates that the court did not consider the reasonableness of the requirement that franchisees pay for their own equipment should they wish to sell non-Exxon gasoline. Nor does the settlement agreement suggest that plaintiffs are entitled to require Exxon to permit them to sell non-Exxon gas other than through their own pumps and tanks if the cost of installing pumps and tanks is substantial or even prohibitive.

Plaintiffs further challenge Exxon's lease agreements as failing to track Bogosian with respect to the conditions under which Exxon may refuse to permit its dealers from installing their own equipment. Plaintiffs cite to Bogosian's requirement that consent not be unreasonably withheld, or not withheld at all, when plaintiffs have complied with the provisions in paragraph 9 [*19] (requiring adequate safety precautions and that dealers purchase adequate insurance). In comparison, paragraph 7.2(b) of the lease agreement provides that the lessee agrees to "install no tanks, lines, or dispensers on the PREMISES without the express written prior consent of LESSOR, and to make any approved installation in accordance with all terms and conditions of any consent given." (Carter Decl., Ex. A.) While this does not explicitly mention Bogosian's requirement that consent not be unreasonably withheld, and that consent be granted if lessees comply with detailed safety requirements, the court will construe a duty of reasonableness into contractual terms, including lease provisions. Cohen v. Ratinoff, 147 Cal. App. 3d 321, 330, 195 Cal. Rptr. 84 (1983) (implying good faith reasonableness requirement to objection to lease assignment despite absence of such language in the lease). The procedures listed in Bogosian must necessarily be considered in determining whether consent has been reasonably withheld. Therefore, the court holds, as a matter of law, that the challenged portion of Exxon's lease agreement, as construed, does not in itself violate the consent decree in Bogosian and, therefore, these [*20] terms are not subject to attack under federal or state antitrust laws by those bound by the Bogosian consent decree. See Bogosian consent decree (Simmons Decl., Ex. E, ¶ 14.).

C. Monopolization Claim

Plaintiffs appear to have essentially abandoned their Twelfth Claim for Relief, monopolization, by failing to respond to Exxon's arguments in its motion for summary judgment. Plaintiffs do challenge, however, Exxon's market definition argument, which Exxon uses to challenge all three causes of action. Nonetheless, because the court finds that no genuine issue exists as to whether Exxon has sufficient market power in the relevant retail gasoline market, the court holds that, as a matter of law, plaintiffs' monopolization and attempted monopolization claims must fail. See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966) (requiring element of monopoly power for illegal monopolization claim); Falstaff Brewing Co. v. Stroh Brewing Co., 628 F. Supp. 822, 829 (N.D. Cal. 1986) (dismissing attempted monopolization claim for failure to state a claim where defendant had insufficient market share); see also discussion in parts III. A.2., III.B.1., supra.

HN3 Judicial Officers, Magistrates

Arguments not raised before the magistrate judge must be considered by the district court when submitted with objections. By definition, de novo review entails consideration of an issue as if it had not been decided previously. It follows, therefore, that the party entitled to de novo review must be permitted to raise before the court any argument as to that issue that it could have raised before the magistrate. The same reasoning applies to new evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN8 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence. Thus, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal restraint does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust violation. Thus, if the factual context renders an antitrust claim implausible - if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense - plaintiffs must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN9[Private Actions, Standing

In order to have standing to pursue a private antitrust claim, plaintiffs must show more than injury from defendants' conduct, they must show antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. Thus, injury which results merely from competition is not sufficient to warrant antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN10[Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. This language includes restrictive contracts which impose unreasonable restraints on competition. Nonetheless, a plaintiff claiming a § 1 violation must first establish a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities. Unilateral conduct on the part of a single person or enterprise falls outside the purview of this provision in the antitrust law. If a plaintiff is able to show the existence of an illegal contract, then the next step is to establish that the agreement is an unreasonable restraint on trade either per se or according to the rule of reason. However, it is unnecessary to reach this second step if the plaintiff has not established an illegal contract.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Burden Shifting

HN11[Private Actions, Sherman Act

In the general run of cases under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove an antitrust injury under the rule of reason. Under this test the plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. After the plaintiff satisfies its threshold burden of proof under the rule of reason, the burden shifts to the defendant to offer evidence of the pro-competitive redeeming virtues of their combination. Assuming defendant comes forward with such proof, the burden shifts back to plaintiff for it to demonstrate that any legitimate collaborative objectives proffered by defendant could have been achieved by less restrictive alternatives. Ultimately, it remains for the factfinder to weigh the harms and benefits of the challenged behavior.

HN20 [L] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

Unlawful monopoly consists of the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and willful acquisition or maintenance of that power. In order to prove an attempted monopolization claim, plaintiffs must show 1) a specific intent to monopolize a relevant market, 2) predatory or anti-competitive acts, and 3) a dangerous probability of successful monopolization. Because specific intent may be inferred from anticompetitive conduct, it is appropriate to begin with an inquiry into such conduct. The standard for ascertaining anticompetitive conduct as stated by the U.S. Supreme Court: If a firm has been attempting to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency, it is fair to characterize its behavior as predatory. Nonetheless, the central principle remains the same: One who does not compete in a product market or conspire with a competitor cannot be held liable as a monopolist in that market.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

THIS MATTER is before the Court on objections to the Memorandum and Recommendation of Chief United States Magistrate Judge J. Toliver Davis. For the reasons stated below, the Court adopts the recommendation of Magistrate Judge Davis and grants summary judgment to the Defendants and dismisses the action.

[*2] I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1 The Court reviews de novo those portions of the Memorandum and Recommendation to which objections have been filed. 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\). Plaintiffs submitted additional evidence with the objections in the form of affidavits which were not placed before the Magistrate Judge at the time of his decision. Defendants object to this new evidence and move to strike it from the record, citing Callas v. Trane CAC, Inc., 776 F. Supp. 1117 (W.D. Va. 1990), aff'd without op., 940 F.2d 651 (4th Cir. 1991). The district court there precluded consideration of affidavits presented for the first time in connection with objections to the memorandum and recommendation, noting that parties may not "hold back" in proceedings before the magistrate judge hoping to submit additional evidence at the de novo review stage. Id., at 1119. The court also noted that no reason for the delay in submission had been given. Id. However, the court did review the affidavits in question, found them unreliable, and refused to accord them any weight.

Although affirmed by the Fourth Circuit, the precedential value of the Callas opinion is doubtful in view of HN2 the clear language [*3] in 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\) providing that on review of a magistrate judge's memorandum and recommendation, the district court "may also receive further evidence or recommit the matter to the magistrate with instructions." 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\). Indeed, a later opinion of the Fourth Circuit has quoted this portion of the statute and held that HN3 arguments not raised before the magistrate judge must be considered by the district court when submitted with objections. United States v. George, 971 F.2d 1113, 1118 (4th Cir. 1992). "By definition, de novo review entails consideration of an issue as if it had not been decided previously. It follows, therefore, that the party entitled to de novo review must be permitted to raise before the court any argument as to that issue that it could have raised before the magistrate." Id. The same reasoning applies to new evidence. While this reasoning increases the potential for parties to frustrate the delegation of matters to magistrate judges, the sanctions of Rule 11 are an appropriate solution to such conduct. The Defendants' motion to strike is therefore denied and the Court will consider the new evidence submitted with the objections.

[*4] II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

HN4 "A motion for summary judgment is appropriate in any civil action in which there is no genuine issue of material fact and one party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Shepard's, Motions in Federal Court, § 9.17 (2d ed. 1991). HN5 The party moving for summary judgment has the burden of showing that there are no facts, combination of facts or evidence supporting the nonmoving party's case. Id., at § 9.23. HN6 In ruling on such a motion, the Court will consider that

III. FINDINGS OF FACT

On October 1, 1990, Plaintiffs filed this action seeking relief from Defendants for violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2. In addition, state law causes of action for violation of due process, breach of contract, and tortious interference with business relations were asserted but later dismissed in January 1993. In summarizing the facts, the Court has construed the facts most favorably to the Plaintiffs and sets forth undisputed facts without reference to pleadings. Plaintiffs have objected to certain findings of fact by the Magistrate [\[*6\]](#) Judge; and, where appropriate, reference is made to pleadings to resolve the findings of fact. "Mindful that [Plaintiffs'] version of any disputed issue of fact thus is presumed correct, we begin with the factual basis of [Plaintiffs'] claims." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 456, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\).

Philip T. Howerton, M.D. (Howerton), and Ray M. Antley, M.D. (Antley), are radiologists doing business through Blue Ridge Radiology Associates, P.A. (Blue Ridge). Blue Ridge is a North Carolina professional association located in Morganton and the two doctors are its only shareholders.

Grace Hospital, Inc. (Grace) is a North Carolina non-profit corporation formed in 1908, also located in Morganton. Piedmont Medical Imaging, P.C. (PMI) is a professional corporation providing radiology services in the Morganton area. Richard Theodore Mull, M.D. (Mull) is the sole shareholder of PMI and employs four other radiologists.

Grace operates a radiology department in which inpatient, outpatient, and emergency radiology services are provided 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Patients are charged a technical fee for the use of the department's [\[*7\]](#) equipment and a professional fee from the doctors who review the reports.

Howerton has been a member of the Grace staff since 1966. He joined the predecessor group to Blue Ridge in 1966, a group which provided radiology services to Grace. Antley became a member of the Grace staff in 1985 at the same time he became associated with Blue Ridge.

Beginning in 1984, Blue Ridge provided radiology services to Grace pursuant to written contract, renewed annually, until Grace terminated the contract by 90 days written notice on June 29, 1990. The contract by its terms was non-exclusive, meaning that other radiologists not associated with Blue Ridge but who had privileges at Grace could also use the hospital's facilities. Exhibits 24 and 25 attached to Affidavit of Robert N. Meals. However, according to Plaintiffs' expert, prior to termination of the contract, Blue Ridge had the majority of business with Grace. ("Blue Ridge's position as the dominant supplier of inpatient professional radiology services at Grace prior to the PMI monopoly was the result of successful competition." Declaration of Keith B. Leffler, Ph.D., filed May 7, 1993 at P 35.) Despite the language of the contract, [\[*8\]](#) Plaintiff Antley testified that other doctors "more or less had to do business with us for inpatients," referring to inpatient radiology treatments. Deposition of Ray M. Antley, M.D., taken July 13, 1992, at 91. The Court notes Plaintiffs' objection to the Magistrate Judge's finding of fact on this issue, but finds Plaintiffs' own evidence shows that Blue Ridge had a de facto exclusive arrangement with Grace in connection with inpatient professional radiology services.¹

During the time that Blue Ridge [*9] provided the radiology services to Grace, all hospital equipment, personnel, facilities, and records were used by Blue Ridge. Blue Ridge and Grace each billed separately for their services. In setting its fees, Blue Ridge did not consider the possibility of other doctors competing for the radiology services. No portion of Blue Ridge's professional fees was turned over to Grace; no portion of Grace's technical fees was turned over to Blue Ridge.

Howerton initially suggested to Grace officials in 1984 that a free-standing outpatient radiology center should be built in the area. In 1986, Howerton informed Grace by letter of his intention to establish such a facility. Howerton, in hopes of a joint venture with Grace, presented his plans to the hospital board at a meeting in October 1986, at which time he proposed that Blue Ridge provide administrative services to Grace not being provided under the written contract. The board adopted resolutions stating 1) a willingness to consider a joint venture in a diagnostic imaging clinic, 2) a willingness to meet again with Blue Ridge to renegotiate a more satisfactory contract, provided that Howerton agreed to postpone the imaging clinic, 3) directing [*10] a committee be formed to meet with Howerton, and 4) determining that if Blue Ridge proceeded with the establishment of a diagnostic imaging clinic, Grace would terminate the contract.

The parties continued to negotiate during the next year and a half. In May 1988, Howerton concluded that Grace would not enter into a joint venture for the clinic and that contract negotiations to revise the 1984 contract were at an end. Howerton solicited a study of the feasibility of a diagnostic imaging clinic from Richard Dorson of the American College of Radiology who concluded that the clinic could capture 60 percent of the referred outpatient procedures being performed at Grace. Dorson also noted that many physicians interviewed commented on the poor relationship between Grace and the Blue Ridge group and complained about the medical performance of one Blue Ridge radiologist.

Blue Ridge proceeded with its plan to establish the clinic in early 1989. Plaintiffs determined to proceed in reliance on Dorson's report and their concern that another group would beat them "to the punch" by building an outpatient facility. In projecting their success, Blue Ridge assumed they would continue to use Grace's [*11] equipment, facilities, personnel, and records.

Grace learned about the plans in July 1989. It was concerned about loss of revenue from outpatient imaging, coverage, on-call coverage, administrative complications, and conflicts of interest inherent in allowing access to business records by a separate facility. Grace began a search for radiologists to provide coverage in its department. On behalf of Grace, Douglas C. Keir, then the Assistant Administrator of the hospital, contacted executives and department heads at Valdese General Hospital in Valdese, North Carolina; Catawba Memorial in Hickory, North Carolina; and Caldwell Memorial in Lenoir, North Carolina. In late July or early August 1989, Keir met with Mull, practicing alone under the name of PMI at Catawba Memorial. Keir proposed that any contract with PMI be an exclusive contract.

Blue Ridge began construction of its facility less than one mile from Grace in March 1990. In April 1990, Grace and PMI executed an exclusive contract to provide radiological services. By letter of June 22, 1990, Grace notified Blue Ridge that it was invoking the 90-day termination provision of the contract. Blue Ridge opened its center on August [*12] 1, 1990. Two months later, it initiated this suit.

Since August 1990, Blue Ridge and Grace have competed in the market for outpatient radiological services. Blue Ridge opened with 8 employees, state of the art x-ray, fluoroscopy, mammography, computerized axial tomography, color vascular, and ultrasound equipment. It did not offer magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) or nuclear medicine services available at Grace.² Blue Ridge is open Monday through Friday and closes daily at 5:30 P.M.

The contract between Grace and PMI specifies that Grace will bill separately for its technical services, as will PMI for its professional services. However, there is a provision allowing termination of the contract for the charging of excessive professional fees.

Before Blue Ridge opened its facility, Grace was the only significant provider of outpatient technical services and Blue Ridge the only significant provider of outpatient [*13] professional services in Morganton. Since August 1990, patients may obtain the same services at either Grace or Blue Ridge using either PMI or Blue Ridge radiologists. The average outpatient technical radiology charges at Grace are approximately 47 percent higher than those at Blue Ridge. According to Plaintiffs' expert, Richard Dorson, free-standing imaging facilities are able to offer outpatient services at a lower charge because "hospitals [are] not designed to be efficient competitors for outpatient services and their overhead for all services are covered in these charges."³ Declaration of Richard L. Dorson in Opposition to Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment, filed May 7, 1993, at 3. Since opening the facility, Howerton has made efforts to market Blue Ridge, including sending promotional letters to physicians. In addition, the facility has received referrals due to the reputation of Howerton and Antley among local physicians.

[*14] In 1991, Blue Ridge had a total of $ 1,237,210 in charges for procedures performed with $ 913,857 of those charges being collected. In 1992, Blue Ridge's charges increased to $ 1,432,695 with total collections of $ 954,731. For each year the facility has been in operation, its revenue has exceeded expenses. Blue Ridge has not missed any scheduled payments for rent, mortgage, salaries or other expenses since its opening.

Many physicians have attributed improvements in the radiology department at Grace to the competition of Blue Ridge. Blue Ridge has received referrals from physicians who joined Grace's medical staff after August 1990 and who had no previous experience with Howerton and Antley at Grace. Moreover, no physicians practicing in Morganton (including new ones) have decreased their referrals to Blue Ridge.

Dr. Michael S. Alexander, a former PMI radiologist, stated that Grace steered inpatients to return to Grace for outpatient imaging after discharge. Supplemental Declaration of Michael S. Alexander, M.D., filed October 19, 1993. Douglas Neal stated that he was treated on an outpatient basis by Dr. Lee, a Grace staff member, in 1993. When Dr. Lee advised he needed a chest [*15] x-ray, he informed the technician that he preferred to have the x-ray performed at Blue Ridge, but was advised that the x-ray had to be performed at Grace. Declaration of H. Douglas Neal, filed October 19, 1993.

In December 1992, a majority of the physicians on staff at Grace, signed a declaration stating that if Howerton and Antley were granted privileges to the radiology department at Grace, they would refer some of their patients to Howerton and Antley. Plaintiffs also supplied declarations of 19 physicians who are members of Grace's staff supporting access to Grace for Howerton and Antley. Plaintiffs have established a good working relationship with referring physicians.

The employment market for radiologists is nationwide. According to Plaintiffs' expert, in 1989, 60 percent of all radiologists in the United States had an exclusive contract with their hospitals to provide professional services in radiology. Declaration of Richard Dorson, filed May 7, 1993, at 6.

IV. DISCUSSION

² It appears that during the process of litigation, Blue Ridge has obtained access to MRI equipment.

³ The Court notes Plaintiffs' objection to the Magistrate Judge's finding of fact on this issue, but finds that Plaintiffs' evidence shows the fact as stated.

Plaintiffs have alleged violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act by means of a tying arrangement, exclusive dealing, and unreasonable restraint of trade. They allege violations of § 2 by attempted [*16] monopolization and monopolization.

HN9[] In order to have standing to pursue a private antitrust claim, Plaintiffs must show more than injury from Defendants' conduct, they must show "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 797 \(2d Cir. 1994\) (emphasis in original). Thus, injury which results merely from competition is not sufficient to warrant antitrust injury. Id.

A. Overview of § 1 claims

HN10[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . , is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. This language includes restrictive contracts which "impose unreasonable restraints on competition." Coffey v. Healthtrust, Inc. 955 F.2d 1388, 1391 \(10th Cir. 1992\). Nonetheless, "a plaintiff claiming a § 1 violation must first establish a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities. Unilateral conduct on the part of a single person or enterprise falls outside the purview [*17] of this provision in the antitrust law." Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 542 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, U.S. __, 114 S. Ct. 388 \(1993\).

If a plaintiff is able to show the existence of an illegal contract, then the next step is to establish that the agreement is an unreasonable restraint on trade either per se or according to the rule of reason. Id. However, it is unnecessary to reach this second step if the plaintiff has not established an illegal contract. Id.

HN11[] In the general run of cases a plaintiff must prove an antitrust injury under the rule of reason. Under this test plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. Insisting on proof of harm to the whole market fulfills the broad purpose of the antitrust law that was enacted to ensure competition in general, not narrowly focused to protect individual competitors.... After the plaintiff satisfies its threshold burden of proof under the rule [*18] of reason, the burden shifts to the defendant to offer evidence of the pro-competitive "redeeming virtues" of their combination. Assuming defendant comes forward with such proof, the burden shifts back to plaintiff for it to demonstrate that any legitimate collaborative objectives proffered by defendant could have been achieved by less restrictive alternatives ... Ultimately, it remains for the factfinder to weigh the harms and benefits of the challenged behavior.

B. Exclusive dealing

Plaintiffs claim that Grace's exclusive contract with PMI for inpatient radiology services constitutes exclusive dealing. This claim must fail because Plaintiffs cannot move past the first step in the § 1 inquiry: they have failed to establish anything other than unilateral conduct on the part of Grace. The undisputed facts show that in 1986, Grace determined to terminate Blue Ridge's contract if and when it opened an outpatient imaging facility. When Grace learned in 1989 that Howerton was going through with his plans to do so, it began making its plans to replace Blue Ridge in the radiology department. Grace approached Mull; Grace first mentioned [*19] and insisted on an exclusive contract. The fact that Mull was interested in the contract for financial or personal reasons does not show a combination or concerted action to restrain trade.⁴ The crucial fact is that Grace made the decision to terminate

⁴ Mull, a competing radiologist, alleged that he had been denied privileges at Grace while Blue Ridge had the exclusive arrangement for radiology. According to Plaintiffs' evidence, he was delighted at the opportunity to receive retribution.

Blue Ridge and Grace approached Mull insisting on an exclusive contract. Thus, Plaintiffs have not moved past the first step in the inquiry.

Other courts have reached the same conclusion. In Balaklaw, supra, almost identical factually to the case at hand, plaintiff had been the president of a group of anesthesiologists solely providing anesthesia services to a hospital. As here, although there was no exclusive contract, plaintiff had a "de facto" exclusive contract with the Hospital." *Balaklaw, 14 F.3d at 796. [20] Thereafter, the hospital solicited other anesthesiologists to provide the same service and entered into an exclusive contract with another group. On the issue of inpatient professional services, the court quoted Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29-31, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984), noting that even if [the new group of anesthesiologists] did not have an exclusive contract, the range of alternatives open to the patient would be severely limited by the nature of the transaction and the hospital's unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and the number of doctors to whom it accords staff privileges. If respondent is admitted to the staff of [the hospital], the range of choice will be enlarged . . . , but the most significant restraints on the patient's freedom to select a specific [radiologist] will nevertheless remain.

Like here, plaintiff failed to establish anything other than the replacement by the hospital of one exclusive arrangement with another. From the point of view of the patient, the consumer, nothing changed. "It is clear that what occurred after the implementation of the [*21] [exclusive] contract . . . was only a reshuffling of competitors." Id. (citing Coffey, 955 F.2d at 1393). As in Coffey and Balaklaw, Plaintiffs here had a de facto exclusive contract prior to the change to PMI. Only the provider has changed; Grace has not changed its method of providing those services. Id., at 799.

Nor have Howerton and Antley been excluded from or limited in a broader market for employment because the market for radiologists is nationwide. Id. Moreover, the contract with PMI executed October 9, 1990, had an initial period of four years, thereafter renewable annually. Exhibit 23 attached to Affidavit of Robert N. Meals, filed May 7, 1993. It also provided for termination without cause after the initial term by written notice 180 days prior to termination. Id. Thus, the scope of the contract was not unreasonable. Id. "Such a situation may actually encourage, rather than discourage, competition, because the incumbent and other, competing [radiologists] have a strong incentive continually to improve the care and prices they offer in order to secure the exclusive positions." Balaklaw, 14 F.3d at 799 (citing *Steuer v. [22] National Medical Enter., 672 F. Supp. 1489, 1516 (D.S.C. 1987), aff'd, 846 F.2d 70 (4th Cir. 1988)). Indeed, Plaintiffs' evidence shows that the radiology equipment at Grace significantly improved after Blue Ridge opened its facility. Declaration of James Morris Croft, M.D., filed May 7, 1993, at 4 ("Since Blue Ridge Radiology opened its clinic in 1990, Grace Hospital . . . finally purchased an up-to-date ultrasound machine and made improvements in their mammographic images. These improvements at Grace Hospital were prompted mainly as a direct effect of competition from Blue Ridge's outpatient clinic.").

Plaintiffs' primary complaint is that their ability to acquire outpatient business is damaged by their inability to also perform inpatient radiology services at Grace, claiming that the day-to-day contact with referring physicians is the source of business. But the facts show that referrals from physicians on staff at Grace not only continue, but have not decreased. Citing Grace's location in Morganton, an area described by Plaintiffs as rural, they argue Grace's exclusive contract with PMI has limited their ability to have sufficient contact with referring physicians to acquire [*23] business. However, Plaintiffs have neither argued nor shown that they could not acquire staff privileges at another relatively close hospital such as Catawba Memorial in Hickory, North Carolina. These arguments all overlook HN12↑ the "threshold question in analyzing the antitrust implications of a business practice [which] is whether it will lessen competition, not whether it harms a competitor." Steuer, 672 F. Supp. at 1501. From the record, it appears that Grace's contract with PMI has increased competition for the outpatient services despite the fact that Blue Ridge may have been harmed.

The same arguments raised here have been rejected by the Fourth Circuit in the Steuer case. Plaintiffs there were pathologists who for 23 years were the only providers of pathology services to the hospital. When the hospital awarded the contract to a different group of pathologists, plaintiffs claimed they were the brunt of exclusive dealing, noting the hospital was the only one in the county. The district court held that plaintiffs had failed to demonstrate the presence of competition within the market prior to the termination of the contract or lessening of competition thereafter. Id. [*24] "Thus, reduced to its essentials, plaintiffs' [claims] rest[] not on any showing of lessened competition, but merely on the fact that they are disappointed competitors who must now provide their services elsewhere." Id.

Plaintiffs cite the fact the while they had a relationship with Grace, other physicians could read films on behalf of their patients, should they choose to do so. This allegation is not sufficient to show true competition; the overwhelming evidence of record from Plaintiffs themselves is that Blue Ridge had a de facto exclusive contract with Grace. Howerton himself testified that when setting prices for professional services at Grace, he never considered the possibility that other radiologists might be brought into the hospital. Deposition of Philip T. Howerton, M.D., taken December 18, 1992, at 30-31. The factual context of the case renders this claim implausible. Steuer, 672 F. Supp. at 1500 (quoting Matsushita, supra); and at 1502 n.7 ("Plaintiffs take the position that their contractual relationship with CMH was not exclusive. While the word "exclusive" did not appear in plaintiffs' contracts, . . . those contracts unquestionably made plaintiffs [*25] responsible for fulfilling all of the hospital's professional pathology requirements. Plaintiffs' argument to the contrary is frivolous.").

Plaintiffs also argue that Grace's charges for outpatient services are higher than their charges for the same procedures. However, this does not "establish injury to competition because the relevant inquiry is not whether prices have increased, but whether they have increased over the competitive level. Plaintiffs, however, failed to offer any evidence regarding competitive pricing levels." Id., at 1502. Indeed, Grace included a provision in its contract with PMI allowing termination of the contract if PMI charges excessive professional fees. Plaintiffs' evidence shows that Grace continued to set its prices for technical radiological services with a view toward its competition. Larry Hurd testified at his deposition that Grace set its prices consistent with those being charged by other facilities. "Typically what we would do would be to survey a number of people and take an average of whatever the charges were. So we may be higher than some and lower than others." Excerpt from the Deposition of Larry Hurd, attached to Declaration of Michael [*26] D. Helgren, filed October 13, 1993, at 35-36. Grace never contacted Blue Ridge concerning competitive prices because it considered only fees of other hospitals. Id., at 112. This evidence shows that Grace did not increase prices over competitive levels. Steuer, 672 F. Supp. at 1502-03. "The only restraints alleged are that plaintiffs cannot now practice in the business form they prefer and the prices the hospital charges may be somewhat higher now than they were. . . . HN13[↑] A staffing decision does not . . . constitute an antitrust injury." BCB Anesthesia Care v. Passavant Mem. Area Hosp., 36 F.3d 664, 667-9 (7th Cir. 1994) (noting the hundreds of cases involving staffing at single hospitals in which it is "invariably" determined that "there is nothing obviously anticompetitive about a hospital choosing one staffing pattern over another or in restricting the staffing to some rather than many, or all.").

In summary, HN14[↑] "merely changing exclusive contractors, . . . cannot constitute a violation of the antitrust laws. This is true despite the fact that substituting one exclusive contractor for another may have the consequence of 'boycotting or shutting out' the displaced contractor." [*27] Steuer, 672 F. Supp. at 1502 (citations omitted). Plaintiffs have failed to show that the contract in question lessened competition.

C. Unreasonable restraint of trade

The Court has determined that HN15[↑] Plaintiffs have not shown an illegal combination or concerted action between two legally distinct economic entities. Therefore, of necessity, the claim for unreasonable restraint of trade must fail. Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 547.

D. Tying arrangement

Plaintiffs argue that Grace has tied the provision of inpatient technical services to the purchase of inpatient professional radiology services in violation of § 1.

HN16 [↑] A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. Such an arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act if the seller has "appreciable economic power" in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market.

Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 461-62 (citations omitted).

However, Grace is not [*28] a competitor in the inpatient professional radiology market because it does not share any portion of the fees generated by PMI. White v. Rockingham Radiologists, Ltd., 820 F.2d 98, 104 \(4th Cir. 1987\).

HN17 [↑] "The lack of the hospital's economic interest in the tied product is sufficient to defeat [Plaintiffs'] tying claim . . .". Id.

Plaintiffs argue that Grace benefits from the performance of inpatient radiology services by its ability to charge for inpatient technical services. Nonetheless, the fact that Grace does not compete in the inpatient radiology market defeats this argument. Id.; see also, Beard v. Parkview Hosp., 912 F.2d 138, 141 \(6th Cir. 1990\) ("mile seller of the tying product must have benefited directly from the sale of the tied product," in a case factually identical to that at hand).

Plaintiffs also claim that proof of Grace's economic power in the market shows that it is engaged in an illegal tying arrangement. In other words, forcing patients to use PMI for inpatient radiology services eliminates competition for outpatient radiology services. This argument overlooks the fact that outpatient radiology services are performed only by referral from treating [*29] physicians. Plaintiffs have attached 20 declarations from physicians holding staff privileges at Grace who state that they prefer Blue Ridge's services and desire Howerton and Antley to have access to Grace for inpatient radiology services. These physicians account for over 78 percent of the admissions to Grace. See, Affidavits attached to Plaintiffs' Response to Motion for Summary judgment. These physicians make referrals to Blue Ridge for outpatient services because they prefer Howerton and Antley and find their services less expensive.

However, it is unnecessary to reach the issue of market power. HN18 [↑] Proof of market power in a tying claim does not become relevant unless and until proof of tying is established. Beard, 912 F.2d at 142-44; Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12 n.17. "As a matter of law, . . . because [Grace] received no direct economic benefit from the radiological services provided to its patients by [PMI], it engaged in no unlawful tying arrangement, under either the per se or the rule of reason approaches, by entering into an exclusive contract for radiological services with [PMI]."

Beard, 912 F.2d at 144.

E. Essential facilities claim

Plaintiffs [*30] have abandoned their claim for antitrust relief pursuant to the essential facilities doctrine. Plaintiffs' Objections to Magistrate Judge's Memorandum and Recommendation, at 27. The Court therefore will not address this claim.

F. Section 2 claims: attempted monopolization and monopolization HN20 [+] Unlawful monopoly consists of the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and willful acquisition or maintenance of that power. Beard, 912 F.2d at 144. In order to prove an attempted monopolization claim, Plaintiffs must show 1) a specific intent to monopolize a relevant market, 2) predatory or anti-competitive acts, and 3) a dangerous probability of successful monopolization. Advanced Health-Care Servs. v. Radford Community Hosp., 910 F.2d 139 \(4th Cir. 1990\). Because specific intent may be inferred from [*31] anticompetitive conduct, it is appropriate to begin with an inquiry into such conduct. M & M Medical Supplies & Serv., Inc. v. Pleasant Valley Hosp., Inc., 981 F.2d 160, 166 \(4th Cir. 1992\), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 972, 113 S. Ct. 2962, 125 L. Ed. 2d 662 \(1993\).

HN19 [↑] Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides that no person shall "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Plaintiffs claim the exclusive contract with PMI effectively eliminates competition in the outpatient radiology market.

The standard for ascertaining anticompetitive conduct has been stated by the Supreme Court: "If a firm has been 'attempting to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency,' it is fair to characterize its behavior as predatory." Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 \(1985\). Nonetheless, the central principle remains the same: "One who does not compete in a product market or conspire with a competitor cannot be held liable as a monopolist in that market." White, 820 F.2d at 104; see also, Beard, 912 F.2d at 144; Steuer, 672 F. Supp. at 1520. Grace does not compete with Blue Ridge for outpatient radiology services because it does not receive any portion of the fees generated by PMI. Any claim against Grace for monopolization or attempted monopolization must fail.

Only PMI may be considered a competitor of Blue Ridge in this market. But, [*32] PMI may only perform outpatient radiology services at Grace under the terms of its contract, thus eliminating any "dangerous probability" of successful monopolization. Id. And, that contract may be terminated without cause upon 180 days notice or with cause at any time as a result of excessive fees charged by PMI.⁵ Id. PMI in this sense is not a separate economic actor. Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 544; Oksaken v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 706 \(4th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 \(1992\). Thus, PMI cannot be seen as having any monopoly power. White, 820 F.2d at 105; Beard, id.; Steuer, id.

The only remaining issue as to PMI is whether there was specific intent to engage in anticompetitive conduct. The record clearly shows that PMI was solicited by Grace and Grace officials were the ones who insisted that the contract with [*33] PMI be exclusive.⁶ Plaintiffs claim Grace's attorney disparaged them at a staff meeting to explain why Howerton and Antley were no longer given privileges to read inpatient films. Assuming such statements were made, they may not be attributed to PMI.

In addition, Plaintiffs' evidence proves Grace's contentions that they had recurring problems in service from Blue Ridge prior to terminating the contract.

We've had problems with service and other things that have come up ever since I've been on the [*34] board. At least every so often there are constant conflicts between them and surgery having to do with what procedures are going to be performed at the hospital, and they have refused to perform certain procedures in the past, and we had to bring in consultants to show that it is appropriate for them to do it. In some instances they have done it, in other instances I don't think they have.

Exhibit 2, Transcript of Executive Committee Meeting of the Board of Grace Hospital, August 18, 1989, at 103, attached to Affidavit of Robert N. Meals, filed May 7, 1993; Excerpts from Deposition of Larry Hurd, October 8, 1991, at 120-130; Exhibit 14 attached to Affidavit of Robert N. Meals, filed May 7, 1993.

In sum, Plaintiffs have not shown monopolization or attempted monopolization by Grace or PMI.

⁵ The initial 4-year period of the contract has terminated and the contract is renewable on a yearly basis.

⁶ Plaintiffs claim the fact that Mull later refused to forego nonexclusivity in order to allow Howerton and Antley to participate in inpatient services shows anticompetitive conduct. When a group of doctors approached Mull about this prospect, he declined. This occurred after the fact; that is, after Grace had already offered and entered into the exclusive contract with PMI. HN21 [+] Growth or development resulting from business acumen is not tantamount to acquisition of monopoly power. Beard, 912 F.2d at 144.

G. Monopoly leveraging

HN22 [↑] Monopoly leveraging is "the use of [monopoly] power [in one market], however lawfully acquired, to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor' in another distinct market." M & M Medical Supplies, 981 F.2d at 168 (citations omitted). The Fourth Circuit has not yet recognized this as a cause of action. [*35] Assuming, arguendo, that such a cause exists, since neither Grace nor PMI had monopoly power in the relevant markets, this claim must fail as well.

Plaintiffs argue that PMI has monopoly power in the inpatient radiology market which it has used in the outpatient technical market to destroy Blue Ridge. However, as noted above, PMI does not have market power due to the terms and conditions of its contract.

Plaintiffs also claim Grace has monopoly power in the inpatient technical market which it has used to destroy competition from Blue Ridge in the outpatient technical market. Plaintiffs' evidence, however, shows that 60 percent of the radiologists in America have an exclusive contract with the hospitals where they practice. On December 12, 1992, Plaintiffs' economic expert, Keith Leffler, testified he had insufficient data at that point to determine whether or not Grace and PMI have market power in the outpatient radiology and technical markets. Deposition of Keith Leffler, December 2, 1992, at 54-5, attached to Declaration of Michael D. Helgren, filed October 13, 1993. He also testified that in order to ascertain what portion of the outpatient market Blue Ridge has as compared [*36] to Grace, he would have to know the revenues and numbers of procedures performed at Blue Ridge on patients or for physicians from the three zip code areas surrounding Morganton. Id. Plaintiffs' other expert, Fredric Kennedy, opined in May 1993, that "based upon technical fee revenues for the years 1991 and 1992, Grace Hospital provides significantly more than half of the outpatient radiologic services with market shares in the 60% to 73% range...." Declaration of Fredric D. Kennedy, Ph.D., filed May 7, 1993, at 6-7. Based on Plaintiffs' own expert, after two years in business, Blue Ridge had acquired 40 percent of the market.⁷ Plaintiffs have simply failed to show any antitrust injury caused by Grace's shift of a de facto exclusive contract from one group to another.⁸

[*37] H. Conspiracy to monopolize

HN23 [↑] In order to sustain a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, Plaintiffs must show "concerted action, a specific intent to achieve an unlawful monopoly, and commission of an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy." Advanced Health-Care Servs., 910 F.2d at 150. Plaintiffs claim Mull's willingness to enter into an exclusive contract and his later opposition to a nonexclusive contract proves specific intent and commission of an overt act. It is undisputed that Grace first approached Mull about an exclusive contract. It is also undisputed that this inquiry came after learning that Howerton was building an outpatient facility. In 1986, the board had resolved that at such time as Blue Ridge did build such a facility, the contract would be terminated. Moreover, the board had been disillusioned with Blue Ridge prior to this point in time. The inquiry of Mull came at a point in time when Grace officials were concerned that Blue Ridge would pull out leaving Grace with no radiology coverage. Assuming Mull harbored ill will against Howerton and Antley because they had denied him privileges at Grace, this does not negate the fact that Grace approached [*38] him and first mentioned exclusivity. HN24 [↑] "Conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not itself support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." White, 820 F.2d at 102. Grace's board acted unilaterally; Mull was sought out to replace Blue Ridge. Id., at 103. There is insufficient evidence for a jury to find a conspiracy between Grace and Mull. Id.

⁷ The parties do not dispute there are no other facilities competing in the area.

⁸ The Court notes the declaration of John Andrews, another expert for Plaintiffs. Dr. Andrews opines that Blue Ridge did not have sufficient earnings to pay the average radiologist's salary in the southeast in 1991 and 1992, $ 237,000 and $ 250,000 per year, respectively. Many young businesses are not able to provide high salaries to their owners during the start up phase. That is not a ground upon which to base an antitrust action. Declaration of John J. Andrews, Ph.D., filed May 7, 1993.

I. Antitrust injury

Assuming arguendo, that Plaintiffs had established the elements necessary to show unlawful action pursuant to §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, HN25[¹] they still have failed to make a showing of antitrust injury. The only injury shown by the facts, viewed in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, is injury to them resulting from competition, not injury to competition itself. Balaklaw, supra.

Plaintiffs rely on the declaration of their economic expert, Dr. Keith Leffler, to show antitrust injury. Dr. Leffler opines that Blue Ridge will continue to sustain a decline in outpatient revenues; that Grace has increased its share of the outpatient market; that patients pay higher prices at Grace for the same services offered by Blue Ridge; that the quality of outpatient [*39] radiology has declined; and thus, there has been an anti-competitive effect on the market. Declaration of Leffler, filed May 7, 1993, at 22, 25-28.

Despite such conclusions, Dr. Leffler states that he has "not detailed the basis for my opinions about the market definitions here, although I have reviewed a great deal of data and have devoted substantial effort and thought to the issue of market definition." Id., at 6. He concludes that Grace has monopoly power in the outpatient technical market as a result of exclusionary actions taken by Grace. In support of this, he points to Grace's dominant status during the time that it had a contract with Blue Ridge, thus, implicating Blue Ridge's participation in such dominance. Id., at 7. Leffler concludes that Grace blocks referrals from its staff physicians to Blue Ridge. Id., at 10, 12-13. However, as noted infra, 20 physicians having privileges at Grace and referring 78 percent of the admissions to Grace filed declarations supporting Blue Ridge. Those physicians refer to Blue Ridge despite any action or conduct by Grace. According to Leffler, Blue Ridge is losing a market share in the outpatient market as a result of its inability [*40] to perform inpatient procedures at Grace. Nonetheless, he concluded that after two years, Blue Ridge had acquired approximately 40 percent of the market and the supporting declarations of 20 fellow physicians refutes the allegation that Blue Ridge is losing a market share. Referrals have not decreased; new physicians to the community refer patients to Blue Ridge; and no physician at Grace has decreased its referrals to Blue Ridge. Antley Affidavit at 12-13; Howerton Deposition of December 18, 1992, at 21-26.

Leffler further finds that outpatients in the Morganton area are paying higher prices for these services as a result of Grace's monopoly power. However, Richard Dorson, Plaintiffs' expert, stated that 60 percent of the radiologists in the United States have exclusive contracts with hospitals, and traditionally, hospitals have charged more for outpatient services in order to cover overhead. His conclusion that the quality of radiology services has declined in also in direct opposition to declarations filed by Plaintiffs in which referring physicians state that Grace has improved its equipment due to the direct competition of Blue Ridge.

In short, the opinion of Dr. Leffler concerning [*41] market power and monopolization is unreliable because such is refuted by Plaintiffs' evidence and is not supported by the record. Tyger Const. Co., Inc. v. Pensacola Const. Co., 29 F.3d 137 \(4th Cir. 1994\).

HN26[¹] "Scrutiny of expert testimony is especially proper where it consists of 'an array of figures conveying a delusive impression of exactness in an area where a jury's common sense is less available than usual to protect it.'" This is particularly true, in a situation such as this, when an expert has apparently taken factual data from the specific project in dispute, and formulated estimates of damages.

Id., at 145 (citations omitted). Leffler's opinion uses selective factual allegations, often not supported in the record, to establish the causation of antitrust injury. HN27[¹] Where resolution of a causation issue depends on expert opinion testimony, that testimony must reach a higher standard of probability rather than possibility. Sakaria v. Trans World Airlines, 8 F.3d 164, 173 \(4th Cir. 1993\). Plaintiffs have failed to show antitrust injury caused by Defendants.

V. CONCLUSION

This lawsuit essentially boils down to a situation where "what's good for the [*42] goose is good for the gander." Blue Ridge had no problem with a de facto exclusive arrangement as long as they were the beneficiaries thereof. Blue Ridge made a considered and reasoned business decision to risk a new business, an outpatient imaging facility. Only two months after opening that facility, Howerton and Antley determined to file this suit alleging that they were unable to make money in that business because of Grace's actions. That decision appears to have been based on a belief that they were automatically entitled to a certain share of the outpatient radiology business, despite the infancy of the business. Plaintiffs' tenacity in linking facts to purported theories is outweighed only by the volume of their filings. It appears Plaintiffs sought through the sheer volume of paperwork to spin a cause of action for antitrust violations out of their angst at having been replaced in an exclusive contract situation. Nonetheless, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal [restraint] does not . . . support inference of antitrust [violations]." Matsushita, supra.

OPINION AND ORDER

ROBERT P. PATTERSON, JR., U.S.D.J.

Defendants Salomon Brothers Inc ("Salomon"), Paul Mozer ("Mozer"), Steinhardt Management Company, Inc. ("Steinhardt Management"), Steinhardt Partners, L.P. ("Steinhardt Partners"), SP Investors International N.V. ("Steinhardt Investors"), Michael Steinhardt ("Steinhardt"), Ernest Theurer ("Theurer"), George Soros, individually and d/b/a Soros Fund Management ("Soros"), Quantum Fund N.V. ("Quantum"), Quasar International Partners ("Quasar"), Caxton Corporation ("Caxton"), Bruce Kovner ("Kovner"), Luttrell Capital Management ("Luttrell Capital") and D. Scott Luttrell ("Luttrell") move pursuant to Rules 12 and 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for judgment on the pleading, or in the alternative, for summary judgment on the antitrust claims contained in Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint.

In counts one through four, Plaintiffs Three Crown Limited Partnership, Three Crown Capital Partners and Meadowlands Fund, L.P. (collectively, "Three Crown") allege that Defendants violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1988\) and request treble damages pursuant [*3] to Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) \(1988\). Defendants argue that Three Crown lacks antitrust standing as a matter of law under the decisions rendered by the Supreme Court in Illinois Brick v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\) and Kansas v. Utilicorp Limited, 497 U.S. 199, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, 110 S. Ct. 2807 \(1991\).

BACKGROUND

The Second Amended Complaint charges that certain of the Defendants secretly joined together to monopolize and restrain trade by cornering and manipulating the cash and the financing markets for an issue of United States government two-year notes auctioned in April 1991 (the "April Notes") and for a similar issue auctioned in May 1991 (the "May Notes").

In April 1991, certain of the Defendants led by Steinhardt and Caxton by taking "long" positions in the when-issued market; by purchases at the Treasury auction; and by purchases in the secondary market, often utilizing "repos"¹ to finance their long position in the April Notes, accumulated a combined position of almost $ 20 billion of April notes, representing about 160% of the approximately $ 12 billion of April Notes issued by the U.S. Treasury. [*4]²

[*5] In the U.S. Treasury Auction of the May Notes, certain of the Defendants, by similar purchases and financing, acquired approximately $ 18 billion of the May Notes or nearly 150% of the issue. These activities are alleged to have resulted in the Defendants' control of the long position in the markets for the April and May Notes. The purchases of April and May Notes by Defendants are alleged to have had the effect of concentrating control of the long position in each of the issues and simultaneously creating a substantial "short" position in each issue that could only be eliminated if the Defendants reduced the size of their positions in the issue.

Defendants are alleged to have then caused a "squeeze" by directing that certain of their two-year notes be lent by "repo" transactions to certain entities which would not sell those securities in the repo market, thereby restricting the supply of April and May Notes to short sellers. These actions are alleged to have resulted in a shortage of April and May Notes for short sellers which caused short sellers to bid up prices for April and May Notes in the cash and financing markets. From the time after the auctions of the April and May Notes [*6] in April and May 1991, respectively, through mid-July 1991, the April and May Notes are alleged to have traded at distorted prices.

At the time of Defendants' acts, Plaintiffs allege they were engaged in a trading strategy which caused them to be short sellers in the cash and financing markets for the April and May Notes. They assert that, as a result of Defendants reducing the available supply of April and May Notes, Plaintiffs were forced to lend funds at below-market rates to acquire long securities to cover, and keep open, their short positions and, in view of their losses, were ultimately forced to pay an artificially high price in the cash market for the April and May Notes to eliminate their short positions in the underlying securities.

ANALYSIS

Defendants premise their motion on Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977). Illinois Brick Co. ("Illinois Brick") was a manufacturer and distributor of concrete block in the greater Chicago area which sold the block primarily to masonry contractors for the masonry portions of construction projects. The masonry contractors would submit bids to participate in a project to the [*7] general contractors. The general contractors would, in turn, submit bids for projects to customers such as the State of Illinois and 700 local governmental entities in the greater Chicago area, each of whom sued Illinois Brick in that action alleging that

² Due to the use of repos, there is no limit to the quantity of securities in the aggregate that can be held "long" or "short" in the Treasury market. See Horowitz Aff. at P 4.

Illinois Brick, the manufacturer, had engaged in a price fixing conspiracy. As pointed out by the Supreme Court, the plaintiffs lacked standing to sue under section four of the Clayton Act as they were indirect purchasers of the concrete block which passed through two separate levels in the chain of distribution before reaching the State of Illinois and the other governmental entities, the plaintiffs in the case. 431 U.S. at 735.

The Supreme Court's analysis in Illinois Brick expanded on its earlier decision in Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 \(1968\) in which it held that HN1 an antitrust violator could not use as a defense allegations that the direct purchaser plaintiff had not been damaged since the plaintiff had passed the overcharges on to its customers. 392 U.S. at 494. In Illinois Brick, the Supreme Court stated that "we are unwilling to 'open the door' [*8] to duplicative recoveries' under § 4", Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 731, quoting Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 405 U.S. 251, 264, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184, 92 S. Ct. 885 \(1972\) (footnote omitted), and reasoned that allowing indirect purchasers to recover from the manufacturer would create a serious risk of multiple liability for a defendant, since under Hanover Shoe, a defendant could not use the "pass-on" theory to reduce its damages. Id. at 730.

The Supreme Court noted that in Hanover Shoe, the Court was concerned about the uncertainty and difficulty of proving price and output decisions in the real world as opposed to "the economists' hypothetical model" and about the costs to the judicial system and efficient enforcement of the antitrust laws of attempting to reconstruct those price and output decisions in the courtroom. Id. at 731-32, citing Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 493.

The Supreme Court further stated that the teaching of Hanover Shoe would allow for the pass-on defense in the limited situation of a pre-existing cost plus contract. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 736. After this analysis, the Court held that "Permitting the use of pass-on [*9] theories under § 4 essentially would transform treble-damages actions into massive efforts to apportion recovery among all potential plaintiffs who could have absorbed part of the overcharge -- from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers." Id. at 737. After a consideration of various market contexts in which the broad rule of denying recovery to indirect purchasers would apply, the Court determined that the difficulty of determining the amount of pass-on likely to be involved in each market and its susceptibility to proof in a judicial forum would bring about the "combination of increasing the costs and diffusing the benefits of bringing a treble-damages action [which] could seriously impair this important weapon of antitrust enforcement". Id. at 744. The Court rejected any attempts to carve out exceptions to the Hanover Shoe rule for particular markets, id., and held that only direct purchasers would be provided the distinction as "private attorneys general" to enforce the antitrust laws under § 4 of the Clayton Act. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 746.

In Kansas v. Utilicorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, 110 S. Ct. 2807 \(1990\), [*10] the Court affirmed Illinois Brick and denied antitrust standing to residential consumers for overcharges by natural gas suppliers to public utilities who passed those overcharges on to residential consumers. The Court held that only the public utility, as a direct purchaser, could bring suit for the overcharge against the natural gas suppliers. Id. at 204.

In the case at bar, Defendants base their motion on Plaintiffs' admission that at no time did they deal with any of the Defendants directly either for purchases or sales or in repo transactions financing the April and May Notes. Thus, say Defendants, pursuant to Illinois Brick, they cannot be held liable for any overcharges for the April and May Notes or for the refinancing of Plaintiffs' short positions caused by the actions of third parties. They point out that Plaintiffs' claim involves many of the same complexities of proof of their damages as concerned the Court in Illinois Brick. Speculation over the future course of interest rates fuels the when-issued market from the time the auction is announced to the date the auction is held. Prices for the securities and the interest rates for their financing are affected [*11] by the decisions of a large number of investors. Indeed, long and short positions in the financing markets for the securities far exceed the amount actually auctioned off. See generally, Joint Report, App. A at A-1 - A-12 (describing Characteristics of the Primary and Secondary Markets for Treasury securities). By use of financing mechanisms such as repos and reverse repos, the rights to hold the securities auctioned are traded on a daily basis both in the financing and cash markets. If there is no manipulation, this trading has the benefit of creating a stable, efficient market. Joint Report at 9. On the other hand, when there is manipulation, the number of parties making economic decisions makes difficult the task of determining accurately what costs are passed on by any party to other purchasers or borrowers of those same securities.

It is clear that this case does not involve a claim of an overcharge passed on through a vertical chain of distribution as in Illinois Brick or Hanover Shoe. Rather, the parties here were part of the same market,³ each taking opposite positions as to the future direction of the price of the April and May Notes. Plaintiffs complain that [*12] they suffered direct injury because of Defendants' success in cornering the markets for the April and May Notes and the manner in which Caxton and Steinhardt and certain other Defendants financed those securities by repos. In short, they allege those Defendants arranged the parking of a portion of the long position to create the squeeze.

This case is akin to Pollock v. Citrus Associates of the New York Cotton Exchange, Inc., 512 F. Supp. 711 \(S.D.N.Y. 1981\) in which the short sellers of orange juice futures claimed that defendants, a broker dealer and a sales representative of the broker dealer, had engaged in a squeeze which drove the prices of orange juice futures to an artificially high level. Judge Pierce refused to deny plaintiffs standing by [*13] applying of Illinois Brick, saying it should be made clear that this is not a pass on case to which the holding of Illinois Brick is applicable.

512 F. Supp. at 719, n.7.

Judge Pierce noted that the plaintiffs who had sold short would suffer damage since they would have to pay higher prices for futures contracts as a direct result of defendants' control of the other side of the market, and that as individuals "in the 'target area' of an antitrust conspiracy", plaintiffs had standing to sue. Pollock, 512 F. Supp. at 719, citing Calderone Enterprises Corp. v. United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., 454 F.2d 1292, 1296 at n.2 \(2d Cir. 1971\), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 930, 32 L. Ed. 2d 132, 92 S. Ct. 1776 (1972).

In Strax v. Commodity Exchange, Inc., 524 F. Supp. 936 \(S.D.N.Y. 1981\), Judge Lasker refused to apply Illinois Brick and exempt defendants from antitrust allegations based on the reasoning in Pollock. In Strax, a short seller brought an action against silver buyers, commodity brokerages, commodity exchanges and others for allegedly monopolizing the trade of silver and causing the price of refined silver and silver futures to rise [*14] and thus damage the short side of the market. Judge Lasker also found that "the plaintiffs were well within the 'target area' of the defendants' alleged anticompetitive behavior and that there existed "a 'legally significant causal relationship between the [defendants'] alleged violation and the [plaintiffs'] alleged injury.'" Strax, 524 F. Supp. at 940, quoting Pollock, 512 F. Supp. at 719. Again, the court refused to apply Illinois Brick, finding that to do so "would be to preclude the application of the antitrust laws to any economic activity effected through an exchange system, since it is impossible to show that a particular purchaser bought from a particular purchaser bought from a particular seller in such a context. [] Such a proposition finds no support in law or policy." Strax, 524 F. Supp. at 940.

In Minpeco S.A. v. Conti Commodity Services, No. 81-7619 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 10, 1987), Judge Lasker found the reasoning of Strax and Pollock was still sound and again differentiated the "vertical market" at issue in Illinois Brick to instances in which "the 'target area' of defendants' alleged anticompetitive behavior" included a plaintiff who [*15] "was in direct contact with the defendant insofar as the parties were on opposite sides of the market" as in Strax, Pollock, and Minpeco. Id.

It is true that a difference between Pollock, Strax and Minpeco and the case at bar is that the commodity market is subject to regulation by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission which requires large traders and position-holders in particular futures contracts to maintain books and records of their transactions and positions in both the futures and cash market for the particular commodity. See Joint Report, Appendix B at B-69. In the time period of which Plaintiffs complain, no similar record of trades in April and May Notes exists because such trades were not conducted over an exchange but in private transactions in which prices and financing rates are set using information on electronic trading screens, see Horowitz Aff. at P 5, and without the benefit of interdealer price information available to the public, see Joint Report, Appendix B at B-88. As a matter of general market practice, customers buy, sell and finance their Treasury securities through primary dealers and not directly with non-dealer customers. [*16] Horowitz Aff. at P 6. Thus, as a practical matter in the when-issued and after-market for government securities, each of the 38 primary dealers in U.S. Treasury Securities could be described as maintaining a separate market in the Treasury securities. Consequently, if Plaintiffs' claims were based on overcharging by Defendants passed on through third-parties to Plaintiffs, proof of the degree to which Plaintiffs were damaged as a result of Defendants' conduct would reach a degree of complexity equal to that voiced by Justice White in Illinois Brick.

Nevertheless, the complexity of such proof does not mean that Illinois Brick should apply. Defendants' assertion that Plaintiffs are seeking as damages the overcharges passed on to them does not withstand scrutiny. Instead, what Plaintiffs are seeking are damages they sustained as a direct result of Defendants' conduct. Indeed, Defendants' reliance on Plaintiffs' acknowledgment that they did not purchase or refinance any securities through any of the Defendants is misplaced. There is no showing or allegation that the transactions of Defendants were ever passed through to Plaintiffs through any chain of distribution, and the application [*17] of Illinois Brick and its progeny is therefore unwarranted.

Defendants are right that the Plaintiffs' claim amounts to a charge of price fixing of the cash and refinancing markets for the April and May Notes. See Defs.' Rep. Mem. at 3. Defendants are wrong, however, when they claim Plaintiffs are seeking to recover for overcharges by Defendants passed on by Defendants' customers to Plaintiffs. There is no such allegation and no proof that such a relationship existed.

Plaintiffs are claiming a conspiracy to monopolize and a restraint of trade pursuant to which prices in two markets, cash and refinancing, were manipulated to Defendants' advantage at the expense of Plaintiffs and other holders of short positions. Plaintiffs have claimed "a legally significant causal relationship between the alleged violation and the alleged injury." See Reading Industries, Inc. v. Kennecott Copper Corp., 631 F.2d 10, 12 (1980), citing II P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law § 334a (1978). HN2 When such a relationship is established and an injury occurs that is the result of a monopoly or a restraint of trade, the courts allow plaintiffs to sue and recover their damages. Reading, 631 F.2d at 12; see, e.g., Pollock v. Citrus Associates, 512 F. Supp. 711 at 719 (S.D.N.Y. 1981); Strax v. Commodity Exchange Inc., 524 F. Supp. 936 (S.D.N.Y. 1981), *Minpeco S.A. v. CONCLUSION

Defendants' motion to dismiss the antitrust charges in the Second Amended Complaint pursuant to Rule 12\(c\) and Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is denied.

A corporation cannot conspire with its wholly-owned subsidiary or with its officers and directors to restrain or monopolize interest trade or commerce. A narrow exception exists for directors or officers who are acting on their own behalf as well as for the corporation. This exception applies only when an officer has an independent stake in achieving a corporation's illegal motive. An officer or director must have a purpose that is independent of his interest in the corporation's success.

HN4 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

To prove conspiracy to monopolize, plaintiffs must show (1) the existence of a conspiracy to monopolize, (2) specific intent to monopolize, (3) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (4) an effect on an appreciable amount of interstate commerce. A "conspiracy to monopolize" means a conspiracy to acquire or maintain the power to exclude competitors from some portion of commerce. Plaintiffs need not prove that defendants succeeded or even came close to obtaining monopoly power or excluding any competitors. Because the gist of monopolization is the power to exclude competition, a conspiracy to monopolize must be one that is somehow rationally directed toward the exclusion of competitors.

While self-dealing may give rise to tort or contract liability, it is not itself an antitrust violation. It is not inconceivable that mere unfair business practices, or business torts, could in the proper situation constitute an antitrust violation. A corporation's sale of its assets at a below-market price cannot be transformed into a Sherman Act violation merely because the sale itself is characterized as a conspiracy, or because boilerplate language concerning attempt to monopolize is included in the complaint.

Price-fixing, a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-2, may be horizontal, such as a pricing agreement among competing manufacturers, or vertical, such as a resale price agreement between a manufacturer and a distributor or retailer. Such agreements are illegal whether or not the price set is reasonable. The Sherman Act does not prohibit "price-fixing" agreements between the buyer and seller of an asset. The reason is that every sale requires "fixing" or setting a price. The Sherman Act merely prohibits a buyer and seller from making an agreement that restricts either party's pricing discretion in future transactions with other parties.

A prima facie case of discrimination under the Fair Housing Act, 42 U.S.C.S. §§ 3601-3631, is established only if a challenged housing practice has a significant disproportionate impact on the minorities in the total group to which it is applied. Statistics have critical, if not decisive, importance in determining the significance of an alleged disparity. A bare showing of a minor statistical inequality does not establish a prima facie case. The disparity must be "sufficiently substantial" that it raises an inference of causation. Plaintiffs must offer statistical evidence of a kind and degree sufficient to show that a challenged practice caused residents to be treated unfairly because of their membership in a protected group.

While rigid mathematical formula cannot alone control a decision, courts in Fair Housing Act, 42 U.S.C.S. §§ 3601-3631, and Title VII cases have sometimes used "standard deviation" analysis to evaluate the significance of statistical disparities. The U.S. Supreme Court has suggested that, for large samples, a disparity of more than two or three standard deviations significantly undercuts the hypothesis that disparities are random. That a smaller disparity precludes a finding of discrimination is not necessarily true. Courts of law should be extremely cautious in drawing any conclusions from standard deviations in the range of one to three. Standard deviation analysis becomes less reliable where the sample is very small in size.

The existence of a significant statistical disparity, even one resulting from economic inequality, is sufficient to create a prima facie case of discrimination under the Fair Housing Act, 42 U.S.C.S. §§ 3601-3631, and shift the burden to a defendant to come forward with a legitimate business justification for the challenged practice. If the defendant succeeds, the burden shifts finally back to the plaintiff to prove that there is discrimination by showing that the proffered justification is pretextual. At that point, a defendant must prevail if it appears that the disparity is attributable to economic inequality rather than impermissible discrimination.

Delaware is one of the small minority of states where appraisal is generally not available after a sale of all or substantially all of a corporation's assets. Delaware courts have declined to find that a properly executed sale of assets may be treated as a "de facto merger" to which appraisal rights extend. Where minority shareholders challenge a sale of assets, as opposed to a merger, valuation may take into account an increase in the assets' value that is attributable to the sale itself.

This action is a collection of federal and state claims in which a few residents of a cooperative apartment building complain they were treated unfairly by the cooperative corporation when the cooperative was converted to condominiums. Plaintiffs' basic complaint is that, while the condominium conversion increased the apartment units' value, this increase was enjoyed solely by the residents who participated in the conversion and purchased condominiums. But plaintiffs, who were unable to obtain financing to participate in the conversion, did not receive the benefit of this increase. In plaintiffs' view, this violated federal antitrust and housing discrimination laws, and amounted to a breach of contract and fiduciary duties under state law.

[*1172] The antitrust claims fail to pass threshold muster and must be dismissed. The housing discrimination claim survives threshold dismissal, although it remains [2] to be determined whether it may be resolved on summary judgment. The state claims, entertained pursuant to supplemental jurisdiction, also require further development and argument for disposition.

I.

Carlyle House, the building at the center of this dispute, is located at 5300 Columbia Pike in Arlington, Virginia, and contains 136 residential units. It was built in 1976 and operated initially as a rental apartment building. In 1980, the building was converted to ownership by a cooperative association. In this connection, a Delaware corporation was formed, namely the defendant The 5300 Columbia Pike Corporation ("the Co-op Corporation"). The Co-op Corporation purchased Carlyle House, financing the purchase with a mortgage secured by the building. The corporation then issued stock allocated among the various apartment units in the building. Each shareholder, in addition to being a partial owner of the corporation, became entitled to occupy an apartment in the building under a proprietary lease. The corporation relied on the shareholders' monthly payments under the proprietary leases to meet its mortgage obligations. From time to time, shareholders defaulted on their proprietary [3] lease payments. When these defaults went uncured, the Co-op Corporation obtained possession of the defaulting shareholder's shares and their apartment units. The corporation would then hold these "defaulted shares" until they could be sold to a new shareholder.

The Board of Directors of the Co-op Corporation consisted of five individuals, each a resident ¹ of the building. In the early 1990's, the Board began to explore the idea of converting the building to a condominium form of ownership. In September 1993, the corporation's by-laws were amended to permit the Board to develop a plan for such a conversion. The amended by-laws provided that upon approval by a majority of both the Board and the shares, the Board would have discretion to implement the plan "in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole," and its discretion would be subject to challenge only upon a showing of bad faith.

[4] The Board developed a condominium conversion plan under which each resident would have the opportunity to purchase his or her unit in fee simple as a condominium in return for a payment equal to a proportionate share of the Co-op Corporation's mortgage. Because most residents would need to borrow money to make this purchase payment, the corporation arranged with a lender, Crestar Bank, to offer financing to each of the residents in the form of mortgages on the condominium units. Once the Coop Corporation sold the units to the residents and collected the purchase payments, it would then be able to retire its own mortgage on the building and dissolve. After the conversion, the building's common areas would be owned and maintained by a condominium association to which each resident would belong. A Virginia corporation would be formed for this purpose, namely the defendant The Carlyle House Unit Owners' Association, Inc. ("the Condominium Association"). The five directors of the Co-op Corporation would become the directors of the Condominium Association.

The Board's conversion plan dealt with two anticipated complicating factors. First, it was anticipated that not every resident would [5] be willing or able to purchase her unit from the Co-op Corporation in the conversion. As a result, the plan called for the Co-op Corporation to sell each of these "non-participating" units to the newly-created Condominium Association, and to use the proceeds first to pay off the unit's share of the master mortgage, then to repay any remaining debts owed by the non-participating shareholder to the Co-op Corporation, and finally to pay the seller's portion of the closing costs of the acquisition. Any remaining proceeds, or "equity," would go to the non-participating shareholder in exchange for cancellation of [*1173] her stock and proprietary lease interest. The second complicating factor anticipated by the plan was that some of the building's units were unoccupied, the former residents having defaulted on their obligations and surrendered their shares to the Co-op Corporation. To cover this complication, the plan called for the Co-op Corporation to sell these defaulted units to the Condominium Association, with the proceeds, after satisfaction of debts, to be distributed ratably among the Co-op Corporation's shareholders at its dissolution.

With respect to disposition of both non-participating [6] and defaulted units, the Board had to set the price at which the units would be sold to the Condominium Association. In this regard, the Board expected that the market value of the building's units as condominiums would be higher than the market value of the corresponding shares in the cooperative. Conversion, the Board recognized, might well result in an increase in each unit's market value.² To ascertain what the units might be worth as condominiums, the Board commissioned preparation of "target" appraisals. These appraisals are the subject of dispute, for plaintiffs allege that the Board improperly concealed them from the residents. Thus, the minutes of the Board's June 15, 1994 meeting reflect a decision to "keep the exact amounts [of the target appraisals] unpublicized for now, to prevent owners from taking premature marketing or selling measures."

¹ For convenience, the term "resident" is used to refer to a person who was a shareholder and proprietary lessee of the Co-op Corporation.

² The parties disagree about the amount of the increase. For example, plaintiffs allege that the conversion increased the market value of the Mouzon unit from $ 93,000 as a co-op to $ 118,000 as a condominium, and increased the market value of the Williams unit from $ 109,000 as a co-op to $ 145,000 as a condominium. Defendants point out that those values are only appraised estimates, and that these appraised values do not reflect or take into account the substantial marketing costs required to make sales. In any event, resolution of this dispute is not required for any of the conclusions reached in this opinion.

[7] According to plaintiffs, the Board initially intended that the increase in market value attributable to the conversion would be enjoyed by all of the building's residents, even those who did not purchase their units as condominiums. In support of this assertion, plaintiffs note that the Board held several meetings during late summer 1994 to acquaint residents with the proposed plan. In these meetings, the Co-op Corporation's President, David Falk, allegedly stated that non-participating units would be sold to the Condominium Association at their lower "co-op value," but would then be re-sold on the open market as condominium units, with the increase in value being remitted to the non-participating shareholders.³ But the Board ultimately adopted a different course. It decided that the units would be sold to the Condominium Association at a price equal to their appraised fair market value as cooperative units, with the Condominium Association to retain any increase in value realized when the units were later re-sold as condominiums. Thus, the plan contained no provision by which non-participating shareholders might benefit from the increase in market value attributable to the conversion. [8]

On September 27, 1994, the conversion plan was approved by a properly-noticed shareholder vote. The building's residents then applied for loans to purchase their units. While most of the residents obtained such loans, the residents of six units, including plaintiffs, were either unable to qualify for loans or unwilling to accept the interest rate offered to them. On December 30, 1994, the building was declared to [9] be a condominium. By deed of January 6, 1995, the Co-op Corporation conveyed the six non-participating units, along with sixteen defaulted units, to the Condominium Association in return for the sum of $ 2,502,000. The Condominium Association financed this purchase by borrowing [*1174] from Crestar Bank.⁴ After distributing the proceeds according to the plan's terms, the Co-op Corporation dissolved.

Following the conversion, the Condominium Association allowed a grace period of six months for plaintiffs and other non-participating shareholders to rent and continue living in their units, during which time they could [10] still seek financing to purchase their units. Plaintiffs contend that the proposed rents exceeded the amount they were previously paying under their proprietary leases and exceeded the units' fair market rental value.

In February 1995, while the six-month grace period was still in effect, plaintiffs commenced this action seeking damages and injunctive relief against the Co-op Corporation, the Condominium Association, and the five individuals who served as directors of both entities. Plaintiffs present two federal claims: (i) violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2, and (ii) violation of the Fair Housing Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 3601-3631. In addition, plaintiffs present two state-law claims alleging breach of contract and breach of fiduciary duty. Defendants have moved to dismiss all four counts, while plaintiffs seek summary judgment as to liability on the state-law claims.

Diversity jurisdiction is not present here. As a result, the Court has subject matter jurisdiction over plaintiffs' state-law claims only because they are supplemental to plaintiffs' federal claims. See 28 U.S.C. § 1337. Analysis, therefore, properly begins with defendant's contention that the federal claims [11] are without merit and should be dismissed.

II.

³Contrary to defendants' assertions, Falk's statements at the meeting are not inadmissible hearsay, at least as to some defendants, since Falk is both a party and an agent of the defendant corporations. See Rule 801\(d\)\(2\), Fed. R. Evid. In addition, the statements are not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted if they are introduced not to show that the Board initially intended to pay the units' condominium value, but instead merely to show that Falk misstated the plan's terms, giving rise to expectations on the part of plaintiffs that were not fulfilled. See Rule 801\(c\), Fed. R. Evid.

⁴Defendants contend that they could not have received any unfair benefit from the fact that some shareholders did not purchase their units as condominiums because the Condominium Association had to assume significant debt to purchase the non-participating units. Of course, the debt assumed would have been even greater had the Condominium Association paid a higher price for the non-participating units.

HN1[] The Sherman Act forbids conspiracy to restrain or monopolize interstate trade or commerce. See 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2. Here, plaintiffs allege that defendants conspired both to monopolize the sale of the building's non-participating and defaulted units, and to fix prices for the sale of those units.

A.

As an initial matter, defendants persuasively argue that no conspiracy occurred here because the only defendants are the Coop Corporation, the Condominium Association, and their directors. It is well-settled that HN2[] a corporation cannot conspire with its wholly-owned subsidiary or with its officers and directors. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769-70, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\). Based on Copperweld, the individual defendant directors in this case cannot be deemed to have conspired with either the Co-op Corporation or the Condominium Association.

A narrow exception to the Copperweld doctrine exists for directors or officers who are "acting on their own behalf" as well as for the corporation. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 770 n.15. But this exception applies only when "the officer [12] has an independent stake in achieving the corporation's illegal motive." Greenville Pub. Co. v. Daily Reflector, Inc., 496 F.2d 391, 399 \(4th Cir. 1974\); see also Buschi v. Kirven, 775 F.2d 1240, 1252 \(4th Cir. 1985\). In other words, the officer or director must have a purpose that is independent of his interest in the corporation's success.⁵

Plaintiffs in this case have not alleged that any of the five directors involved had a motive independent of their interest in the success of the defendant corporations. It is true that each of the directors now owns a condominium unit in the building, and therefore if the Condominium [13] Association was unjustly enriched at the plaintiffs' expense, the five [*1175] directors are indirectly enjoying a portion of that unjust enrichment. But again, this merely indicates that the directors had an interest in the Condominium Association's success, both as directors and as shareholders. Because their interest is derived solely from their affiliation with the Co-op Corporation and the Condominium Association, the directors legally cannot conspire with either corporation.⁶

[14] Apart from the individual directors, the only possible conspiracy in this case is between the Co-op Corporation and the Condominium Association. Yet this, too, is no antitrust conspiracy. Although Copperweld specifically held only that HN3[] a parent corporation cannot conspire with its wholly-owned subsidiary, the Fourth Circuit has since held that Copperweld requires a "functional approach" to the question of intracorporate immunity and that two legally separate entities cannot conspire if they share a "similar unity of interest." Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 703 \(4th Cir. 1991\)⁷ [15] (hospital's board of trustees could not conspire with hospital's medical staff), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 \(1992\).⁸ Here, the Condominium Association is essentially the successor to the Co-op Corporation under the building's new ownership

⁵ For example, in Greenville Publishing, the panel held that the defendant newspaper company could be deemed to have conspired with its president to eliminate the plaintiff's competing newspaper because the president also had an interest in a third newspaper, one that would also have benefitted from elimination of the plaintiff's business. See 496 F.2d at 400.

⁷ Four judges dissented from Judge Wilkinson's en banc majority opinion on grounds unrelated to this issue.

⁸ Other circuits have similarly recognized that two entities cannot conspire if they comprise "a single economic unit serving a common interest." Guzowski v. Hartman, 969 F.2d 211, 214 \(6th Cir. 1992\) (two racetracks owned by two corporations owned by same two shareholders), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 132, 113 S. Ct. 978 \(1993\); City of Mt. Pleasant v. Associated Elec. Cooperative, Inc., 838 F.2d 268, 275 \(8th Cir. 1988\) (collection of rural electric cooperatives).

regime, and it has the same function, the same five directors, and with the exception of the six non-participating units, the same shareholders as the Co-op Corporation. In sum, plaintiffs' antitrust claims fail because the two corporations were legally incapable of conspiring with one another.

B.

Quite apart from the doctrine of intracorporate immunity, plaintiffs' allegations do not amount to an antitrust violation for other reasons. Their first claim is conspiracy to monopolize sale of the twenty-two non-participating and defaulted units in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 2. HN4[]. To prove conspiracy to monopolize, plaintiffs must show (1) the existence of a conspiracy to monopolize, (2) specific intent to monopolize, (3) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (4) an effect on an appreciable amount of interstate commerce. See, e.g., Bacchus Indus., Inc. v. Arvin [\[*161\]](#) Indus., Inc., 939 F.2d 887, 895 (10th Cir. 1991). A "conspiracy to monopolize" means a conspiracy to acquire or maintain the power to exclude competitors from some portion of commerce. See American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 809, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946). The plaintiffs need not prove that the defendants succeeded or even came close to obtaining monopoly power or excluding any competitors. See id. at 789; Alexander v. National Farmers Org., 687 F.2d 1173, 1181-82 (8th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 937, 77 L. Ed. 2d 313, 103 S. Ct. 2108 (1983). But because the gist of monopolization is the power to exclude competition, a conspiracy to monopolize must be one that is somehow rationally directed toward the exclusion of competitors.⁹

[\[*17\] \[*1176\]](#) Here, the key element of a conspiracy to monopolize, namely an agreement directed toward excluding or lessening competition, is missing. Plaintiffs allege that the Co-op Corporation sold the twenty-two non-participating and defaulted units to a related entity, the Condominium Association, at a price below the fair market value. The simple fact is that no matter what price was paid by the Condominium Association for the twenty-two units, the transaction would have been no more or less exclusionary.¹⁰

Although the allegation of below-market pricing gives this case an antitrust appearance, only a moment's reflection reveals the falsity of this appearance. At most, a sale of units from the Co-op Corporation [\[*18\]](#) to the Condominium Association is a species of self-dealing. HN5[]. While self-dealing may give rise to tort or contract liability, it is not itself an antitrust violation. For example, a trustee may be liable for breach of fiduciary duty if she sells trust assets to herself at below-market prices, or if she extends herself a loan from trust assets at a below-market interest rate. But in neither case has she violated the antitrust laws. This distinction between self-dealing and monopolization was recognized in A.D.M. Corp. v. Sigma Instruments, Inc., 628 F.2d 753 (1st Cir. 1980). There, the panel rejected the notion that a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act occurred where a corporation's president conspired with competitors to divest the corporation of its assets at an inadequate price. The panel noted that "while it is not inconceivable that 'mere' unfair business practices, or business torts, could in the proper situation constitute an antitrust violation," the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint was that a fair price had not been paid for the assets. Id. at 754. And regardless of the price paid, the effect on competition would have been the same, for the corporation would [\[*19\]](#) have been divested of its assets and no longer in competition. Thus, the panel recognized that a corporation's sale of its assets at a below-market price cannot be transformed into a Sherman Act violation "merely because the sale itself is characterized as a 'conspiracy', or because boilerplate language concerning 'attempt to monopolize' is included in the complaint." Id.¹¹ The same reasoning obtains here.

⁹ Cf. Lifeline Ltd. No. II v. Connecticut Gen. Life Ins. Co., 821 F. Supp. 1201, 1205 (E.D.Mich. 1993) (noting that plaintiff who alleges irrational or economically implausible antitrust conspiracy must come forward with particularly persuasive evidence of conspiracy), modified on other grounds, 821 F. Supp. 1213 \(E.D.Mich. 1993\).

¹⁰ There is, for example, no allegation that the Condominium Association agreed to any limits on its future sale of the twenty-two units. In fact, defendants point out that the Condominium Association must sell the non-participating and defaulted units in order to retire the debt incurred to purchase them.

No matter how low or unfair the price paid for the twenty-two units may have been, allegations of conspiracy to monopolize are wholly inapposite here.¹²

[20] C.

Equally meritless is plaintiffs' claim of conspiracy to engage in price-fixing. HN6[↑] Price-fixing, a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, may be horizontal, such as a pricing agreement among competing manufacturers, or vertical, such as a resale price agreement between a manufacturer and a distributor or retailer. See, e.g., United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596 \(1972\) (horizontal); Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 \(1968\) (vertical). Such agreements are illegal whether or not the price set is reasonable. See United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 222-23, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 \(1940\). But the Sherman Act does not, of course, prohibit "price-fixing" agreements between the buyer and seller of an asset. The reason, obviously, is that every sale requires "fixing" or setting a price.¹³ [*21] Thus, the Sherman Act [*1177] merely prohibits a buyer and seller from making an agreement that restricts either party's pricing discretion in future transactions with other parties.¹⁴

[22] Here, plaintiffs allege that the Co-op Corporation and the Condominium Association "fixed" a price for the sale of the twenty-two units. This is true, but it was not price-fixing proscribed by the Sherman Act. Rather, these entities merely set a price to effect a sale. Significantly, there is no allegation that the future pricing actions of either party was restricted. The Condominium Association did not agree, for example, to offer the twenty-two units later for re-sale only at a particular price. Plaintiffs' true complaint is not that defendants fixed a price for the sale, but that they fixed an unreasonable one. While the price set by the defendants may have been illegal, unfair, or improper for other reasons, it was not price-fixing in violation of antitrust law.¹⁵

¹³ Cf. Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d 1430, 1436 \(7th Cir. 1986\) ("It is not the law that if someone hires a real estate broker to sell his house for $ 100,000 he and the broker have made an agreement to fix the resale price of the house and are therefore guilty of a per se violation of the Sherman Act, carrying felony penalties.").

Though not specifically mentioned in their complaint, [23] plaintiffs have presented one additional allegation that merits attention.¹⁶ The minutes of the Co-op Corporation's Board of Directors reveal that, several months before the conversion plan was adopted, the Board agreed not to disclose to shareholders the exact amounts of certain "target" appraisals reflecting the potential value of the building's units as condominiums. In so doing, the Board apparently wished to prevent the residents "from taking premature marketing or selling measures." According to plaintiffs, the Board feared that some residents might well seek to sell their co-op shares if they realized that the shares had increased in value as a result of the pending conversion. Thus, plaintiffs contend that an antitrust violation occurred by virtue of defendants' conspiracy to restrain or prevent sale of co-op shares prior to the conversion by suppressing the target appraisal information.

[24] Assuming, arguendo, that plaintiffs' allegations regarding the target appraisals are entirely true,¹⁷ they do not, even so, describe an antitrust violation. To be sure, HN8[↑] the Sherman [*1178] Act forbids conspiracies to restrain trade. See 15 U.S.C. § 1. Yet, the statute does not impose an affirmative obligation on anyone to encourage others to trade. It does not require a party to disclose appraisals that might alert someone else to an asset's true value. Thus, the Sherman Act did not obligate the Board to disclose appraisals or other information that might cause residents to sell their shares. Even assuming that the board concealed the appraisals from the shareholders, it did nothing to restrain or prevent any resident from selling his share at any time. This is not to say that plaintiffs were not entitled to disclosure of the appraisals. Rather, it is merely to say that if the Board had a duty to disclose them, this duty arose from some source other than the Sherman Act. In sum, while the Board may have had a fiduciary or other duty to disclose the appraisals to the shareholders, its alleged decision to withhold them is not a conspiracy in violation of federal antitrust law.

[25] III.

Plaintiffs' second federal claim is that the condominium conversion plan's treatment of the non-participating shareholders violated the Fair Housing Act. See 42 U.S.C. §§ 3601-3631. HN9[↑] This statute prohibits discrimination in the sale or rental of housing based on race, color, religion, sex, familial status, national origin, or handicap. See 42 U.S.C. § 3604. In evaluating Fair Housing Act claims, courts employ the same method of analysis used in Title VII employment discrimination cases. See Betsey v. Turtle Creek Assocs., 736 F.2d 983, 988 (4th Cir. 1984) (citing McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 36 L. Ed. 2d 668, 93 S. Ct. 1817 (1973)). Thus, to establish a prima facie case of discrimination, plaintiffs may prove either (a) that the challenged housing action or practice was motivated by a discriminatory purpose, or (b) that it had a discriminatory impact. See Betsey, 736 F.2d at 986. Here, plaintiffs are attempting to succeed via the latter route, contending that African-American, Hispanic, and handicapped persons are disproportionately represented among the group of shareholders who were unable to purchase their units as [26] condominiums.

¹⁶ Plaintiffs raised this allegation in memoranda and oral argument. Giving them the benefit of the doubt, the Court will construe the complaint's general antitrust claims as encompassing this allegation, as well.

¹⁷ Defendants have already submitted one affidavit which seems to indicate that plaintiffs' allegations are an inaccurate account of the facts. The Board's minutes indicate only that the "exact amounts" of the appraisals would not be publicized. According to defendants, there was no effort to suppress any information. The Board merely refrained from distributing a memorandum containing the target appraisal figures because it knew that the value of individual units might differ greatly from the target appraisals, and the Board did not want residents to be disappointed by failed attempts to market their units at prices near the target values. The appraisals were discussed at the Board's meeting and included in its minutes, both of which were open to the public. Moreover, the target appraisals were disclosed to the residents in time for them to sell their units prior to the conversion, which occurred in January 1995. Thus, the appraisals were made available to the shareholders at informational meetings in August 1994 and at the corporation's annual meeting in September 1994, and were published in an offering statement distributed to shareholders in connection with the conversion. In addition, defendants point out that the Board heavily emphasized to the shareholders at all times that the proposed conversion would benefit everyone by increasing the market value of the building's units.

HN10[] A prima facie case is established only if the challenged housing practice had a significant disproportionate impact on the minorities in the total group to which it was applied. See Hanson v. Veterans Admin., 800 F.2d 1381, 1386 \(5th Cir. 1986\); Halet v. Wend Inv. Co., 672 F.2d 1305, 1311 \(9th Cir. 1982\). Statistics have critical, if not decisive, importance in determining the significance of the alleged disparity. See Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 995 & n.3, 101 L. Ed. 2d 827, 108 S. Ct. 2777 \(1988\) (plurality) (discussing disparate impact analysis under Title VII); United States v. Mitchell, 580 F.2d 789, 791 \(5th Cir. 1978\). A bare showing of a minor statistical inequality does not establish a prima facie case. Rather, the disparity must be "sufficiently substantial" that it raises an inference of causation. See Watson, 487 U.S. at 995. In other words, plaintiffs must offer statistical evidence of a kind and degree sufficient to show that the challenged practice caused residents to be treated unfairly because of their membership in a protected group. See id. at 994.

It is therefore necessary [27] to examine closely the statistics concerning the Carlyle House's residents.¹⁸ [28] At the time of the conversion, shares representing 120 of the building's 136 total units were owned by individuals. Of the 120 units, 114 (or 95%) were purchased as condominiums by residents, while 6 (or 5%) were non-participating units [*1179] conveyed to the Condominium Association. The racial and disability status of the residents was as follows:

	Non-participating units	Participating Units
African-American	2	8
Hispanic	1	4
Asian-American	0	10
White	3	¹⁹ 92
Total	6	114
Disabled	2	8
Not disabled	4	106
Total	6	114

As plaintiffs note, African-American, Hispanic, and disabled persons are overrepresented to some extent in the non-participating group.²⁰ The question is whether this numerical disparity is significant enough to warrant a prima facie inference that residents were treated unfairly because of their race, ethnicity, or handicap status.

HN11[]

While emphasizing that "rigid [29] mathematical formula" cannot alone control the decision, courts in Fair Housing Act and Title VII cases have sometimes used "standard deviation" analysis to evaluate the significance of statistical disparities. See Watson, 487 U.S. at 995 & n.3; Betsey, 736 F.2d at 988 n.4 (citing Hazelwood Sch. Dist. v. United States, 433 U.S. 299, 53 L. Ed. 2d 768, 97 S. Ct. 2736 \(1977\), and Castaneda v. Partida, 430 U.S. 482, 51 L. Ed. 2d 498, 97 S. Ct. 1272 \(1977\)). Although there is no rigid rule on this point, the Supreme Court has suggested that, for large samples, a disparity of more than two or three standard deviations significantly undercuts

the hypothesis that the disparities are random. See Hazelwood, 433 U.S. at 311 n.17; Castaneda, 430 U.S. at 496 n.17. Yet, the converse, namely that a smaller disparity precludes a finding of discrimination, is not necessarily true. Thus, Fourth Circuit decisions have recognized that "courts of law should be extremely cautious in drawing any conclusions from standard deviations in the range of one to three." EEOC v. American Nat'l Bank, 652 F.2d 1176, 1193 (4th Cir. 1981), reh'g en banc denied, 680 F.2d 965 (4th [30] Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 923 (1982). In addition, standard deviation analysis becomes less reliable where, as here, the sample is very small in size. See American Nat'l Bank, 652 F.2d at 1193 n.12.²¹ In this case, the statistics reveal a disparity of approximately [*1180] 2.26 standard deviations for African-Americans, 1.57 standard deviations for Hispanic residents, 2.26 standard deviations for disabled persons, and 3.02 standard deviations for persons falling in any one or more of the three minority groups.²² Disparities of this magnitude are inconclusive. They neither prove nor disprove

²² A standard deviation is a statistic used to measure the dispersion of a distribution from an expected value. For example, 8.33% (10 out of 120) of the building's units were occupied by African-Americans. Thus, if 6 units in the building were not purchased as condominiums, one would expect that, on average and all other things being equal, 0.5 of these non-participating units would have been occupied by African-Americans. In fact, the actual number of such units occupied by African-Americans was 2. Standard deviation calculations are used to measure the significance of the difference between the expected value of 0.5 and the observed value of 2. Courts applying standard deviation analysis in discrimination cases have typically used the formula for a binomial distribution. Yet, a true binomial distribution involves what is known as "sampling with replacement." See Freund & Simon, Modern Elementary Statistics 147, 183 (8th ed. 1992). This case, like most others, involves sampling from a finite pool without replacement. For example, if one had randomly selected one of the building's units, there was an 8.33% (10 out of 120) chance of picking the unit of an African-American resident. But if one had then randomly selected a second, different unit, the odds would have changed. If the first unit selected was occupied by African-Americans, the odds of selecting a second African-American unit from the remaining pool would fall to 7.56% (9 out of 119). If an African-American unit was not selected first, the odds of selecting such a unit on the second try would rise to 8.40% (10 out of 119). On selecting a third unit, still different odds would apply. In other words, each "trial" or selection is not independent of the others, because units selected are not "replaced" into the pool and no unit can be selected twice. As a result, this case involves what is known as a hypergeometric distribution. See Lilly v. Harris-Teeter Supermarket, 720 F.2d 326, 336 n.18 (4th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 951, 80 L. Ed. 2d 539, 104 S. Ct. 2154 (1984). HN12[] The binomial distribution serves as a satisfactory approximation for the hypergeometric distribution where the number of "trials" is very small relative to the entire pool from which selections are made. See Freund & Simon, supra, at 191-93. In many discrimination cases, the pool is very large, such as all the potential jurors or employees in an entire city or county. Here, the pool consists of only 120 units. Thus, it is preferable here to use the formula for a hypergeometric distribution, which is:

$$a * b$$

$$a + b - n$$

$$(a + b) n 2$$

where n equals the number of trials (the 6 non-participating units), a equals the number of items of one kind (the 10 units with African-American residents), and b equals the number of the remaining items in the pool (the 110 units with non-African-discrimination. It seems likely that the statistical evidence presented here, without more, would not alone create a triable issue of fact on the ultimate question of whether there was discrimination. Yet, the numbers involved do cross, if only barely, the level required to establish a prima facie case and therefore avoid threshold dismissal of plaintiffs' claim. There is a distinction noticeable among the various groups' participation rates that a reasonable observer might conclude was not due to mere chance. ²³

[32]

[33] [*1181] Because plaintiffs have presented a valid prima facie claim under the Fair Housing Act, the burden is now on defendants to assert a legitimate business purpose or purposes for the challenged practice, namely the condominium conversion plan. Defendants have suggested several possible business justifications for the challenged aspect of the conversion plan, and after further discovery, they will have the opportunity to present these and any additional explanations.²⁴ Assuming defendants succeed in establishing a legitimate business purpose, and showing that no less discriminatory alternative was available to accomplish that purpose, the burden will shift to plaintiffs to present evidence showing that defendants' explanations are merely pretextual and that impermissible discrimination was in fact involved. See Betsey, 736 F.2d at 988. In sum, defendants' motion to dismiss the federal housing discrimination claim must be denied, but the stay of discovery will be lifted so the parties may pursue discovery, after which defendants may seek summary judgment, if the record warrants.

American residents). See Freund & Simon, supra, at 209. The standard deviation is simply the square root of the variance. In this example, the standard deviation is approximately 0.663. Thus, the difference between the expected value of 0.5 and the observed value of 2 is a span of approximately 2.26 standard deviations. Similar calculations result in disparities of 1.57 standard deviations for Hispanic persons, and 2.26 standard deviations for disabled persons. The same analysis can be done for the combination of the three protected groups, namely African-American persons, Hispanic persons, and disabled persons. A total of 23 of the building's 120 units were occupied by persons within at least one of the three groups, while 4 of the 6 non-participating units were occupied by a person in at least one of the groups. The calculation for the three groups in combination reveals a disparity of approximately 3.02 standard deviations.

²³Indeed, defendants' own arguments suggest that the disparity observed here is not random. They submit that the plan had a significant disparate impact, if at all, only because African-American, Hispanic, and disabled persons continue to suffer a general economic disadvantage in American society. Because they have less money and less access to credit, they were less likely to purchase condominiums during the conversion. Discrimination by lenders might also exist, further exacerbating the disparity, but these defendants would not be liable for that discrimination. Finally, defendants' argue, a Fair Housing Act violation cannot arise from a disparity attributable to this general statistical link between wealth and race, ethnicity, and handicap status. See Boyd v. Lefrak Org., 509 F.2d 1110, 1113 (2d Cir.) ("A businessman's differential treatment of different economic groups is not necessarily racial discrimination and is not made so because minorities are statistically overrepresented in the poorer economic groups."), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 896, 46 L. Ed. 2d 129, 96 S. Ct. 197 \(1975\). Even assuming, arguendo, that defendants' premise is correct, that economic inequality was the sole cause of the asserted disparities, defendants are still not entitled to threshold dismissal of plaintiffs' claim. See Robinson v. 12 Lofts Realty, Inc., 610 F.2d 1032, 1037-38 n.10 (2d Cir. 1979) (rejecting Boyd's suggestion that Title VII's burden-shifting scheme does not apply under Fair Housing Act); Huntington Branch, NAACP v. Town of Huntington, 844 F.2d 926, 934 (2d Cir.), aff'd, 488 U.S. 15, 102 L. Ed. 2d 180, 109 S. Ct. 276 \(1988\); Tinsley v. Kemp, 750 F. Supp. 1001, 1010-11 \(W.D.Mo. 1990\). While these defendants ultimately may not be held liable under the Fair Housing Act for economic discrimination, HN13[[↑]] the existence of a significant statistical disparity, even one resulting from economic inequality, is sufficient to create a prima facie case and shift the burden to the defendant to come forward with a legitimate business justification for the challenged practice. If the defendant succeeds, the burden shifts finally back to the plaintiff to prove that there was discrimination by showing that the proffered justification is pretextual. At that point, defendant must prevail if it appears that the disparity was attributable to economic inequality rather than impermissible discrimination. In sum, defendants' argument may ultimately prove to be dispositive, but it does not dispose of plaintiffs' claim at this stage.

²⁴In addition, defendants may respond to plaintiffs' allegation that they were charged exorbitant rents to continue living in the building during the six-month grace period following the conversion.

In addition to their federal claims, plaintiffs contend that defendants are liable for breach of contract and fiduciary duty. Defendants have moved to dismiss these claims, while plaintiffs seek summary judgment. The initial question is whether these claims should be adjudicated here or dismissed without prejudice to permit the parties to adjudicate them in state court.

A.

Defendants argued for dismissal of the state-law claims in the event all federal claims were dismissed. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(3\) (district court may dismiss supplemental claims after dismissing all claims within original jurisdiction). As discussed above, the federal housing discrimination claim survives defendants' threshold attack. Yet, HN14 [↑] district courts may also decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a state-law claim that "raises a novel or complex issue of State law," or "substantially predominates" over the federal claims involved. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(1\)-\(2\). In addition to the novelty and complexity of the issues, factors relevant to the exercise of this discretion are judicial economy, convenience of and fairness to litigants, and comity between the state and [\[*35\]](#) federal courts. See United Mine Workers of America v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726-27, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 \(1966\). These factors, applied here, point persuasively to the conclusion that jurisdiction over the state-law claims should be retained.

HN15 [↑] In general, novel and difficult questions of state law should be decided by that state's courts. And the force of this principle increases with the degree of novelty and difficulty. Yet, dismissal in these circumstances gains nothing if the dismissed state-law claims are then filed and decided in another state's courts. Because plaintiffs and their counsel, as well as defendants and the Carlyle House building, are located in Virginia, it appears likely that plaintiffs would pursue their state-law claims in Virginia courts if [\[*1182\]](#) they were dismissed here. From this, it follows that dismissal under § 1367\(c\) would gain nothing if Delaware law, rather than Virginia law governs the state-law issues. Analysis of the § 1367 dismissal issue appropriately begins with the choice of law question.

Plaintiffs were shareholders of a Delaware corporation that operated a cooperative apartment building in Virginia. In general, HN16 [↑] the internal [\[*36\]](#) affairs of a corporation are governed by the law of the state of incorporation. See Bockover v. Life Ass'n of America, 77 Va. 85 \(1883\); Draper v. Paul N. Gardner Defined Plan Trust, 625 A.2d 859, 864-66 \(Del. 1993\); 18 Am.Jur.2d Corporations §§ 17-27 \(1985\); Restatement, Conflict of Laws 2d §§ 302-306. Of course, a corporation is subject to regulation by other states in which it carries on its activities, and under certain circumstances, the law of these states may displace the corporate law of the state of incorporation. For example, many states regulate the affairs of cooperatives and condominiums. Thus, Virginia has an extensive statutory scheme applicable to cooperative apartment buildings located within its borders. See Va. Code §§ 55-424 to 55-506. The statute contains detailed provisions governing the termination of cooperative ownership. See Va. Code § 55-454.²⁵ Yet, Virginia's statute applies only to cooperatives created after July 1, 1982. See Va. Code § 55-425(A). As a result, it does not apply to the cooperative involved here, which was created in 1980. Virginia also has a statutory scheme governing condominiums. See Va. Code §§ 55-79.30 to [\[*37\]](#) 55-79.103. Yet, it also contains no provision applicable to the central issue presented here, namely the Co-op Corporation's treatment of its shareholders in the conversion. Because Virginia law contains no provision governing the relationship between the Co-op Corporation and its shareholders, that relationship remains governed solely by the law of the state of incorporation, namely Delaware.

²⁵ HN17 [↑] The statute provides that, upon termination of a cooperative, "the respective interests of proprietary lessees are the fair market values of their cooperative interests immediately before the termination." Va. Code § 55-454(E)(1). Each side in this case interprets the word "termination" differently, and therefore each believes that the statute would support its position if applied. Defendants argue that the statute provides for valuation immediately prior to termination of cooperative ownership of the building, and so requires valuation of the units as cooperative apartments. Plaintiffs argue that the statute requires valuation immediately prior to termination, or dissolution, of the Co-op Corporation. By the time the Co-op Corporation was dissolved, the conversion to condominium ownership had occurred, and therefore plaintiffs contend that valuation of the units as condominiums was appropriate. It is unnecessary to resolve this dispute because the statute does not apply to this case.

[38] Absent assurance from the parties that the state claims, if dismissed without prejudice, would be brought in Delaware, there is little reason to dismiss the case based on the novelty or complexity of the issues presented. Moreover, dismissal here would disserve the goals of judicial economy, convenience, and fairness, since the parties have already conducted a substantial amount of discovery, and the Court is already familiar with the facts of the case. As a result, the Court will retain supplemental jurisdiction and address the merits of plaintiffs' state-law claims.

This is, distilled to its essence, a case about a corporation's obligations to its shareholders.²⁶ Plaintiffs argue that the conversion plan violated the fundamental principle that all shares of the same type must be treated equally.

²⁷ [40] Yet, the conversion plan [*1183] did treat all shares equally in the sense that every resident was offered the same opportunity to purchase a condominium unit. Plaintiffs suggest, without citing authority, that a corporation cannot grant shareholders an opportunity, even on equal terms, if shareholders' varying ability to obtain access to capital will mean that some enjoy the opportunity [39] and others do not.²⁸ The absence of cited authority is no accident; the law is sensibly to the contrary. Were this not so, a corporation, for example, would be precluded from issuing a dividend in the form of an option to purchase some asset, such as stock or a bond, at a particular price. To exercise the option would require payment of the designated price, a requirement that shareholders of unequal wealth would have an unequal ability to meet. Yet, corporations are not barred from issuing such dividends. See generally 18B Am.Jur.2d Corporations § 1175 (1985). In short, there is no rule of Delaware law that requires the type of equality demanded by plaintiffs.²⁹

The situation plaintiffs present is appropriately analyzed in terms of fairness rather than equality. HN19 A corporation may sell all or substantially all of its assets, but the directors have a fiduciary duty to obtain a fair price. See Allaun v. Consolidated Oil Co., 16 Del. Ch. 318, 147 A. 257, 260 \(Del.Ch. 1929\); Allied Chem. & Dye Corp. v. Steel & Tube Co. of America, 14 Del. Ch. 1, 120 A. 486, 493-94 [41] (Del.Ch. 1923).³⁰ [42] A fair price is one to which a reasonable and willing seller and a reasonable and willing buyer, under all circumstances, would agree. See Marks v. Wolfson, 41 Del. Ch. 115, 188 A.2d 680, 686 \(Del.Ch. 1963\).³¹ Ordinarily, determination of the

³⁰ In September 1993, an amendment to the Co-op Corporation's by-laws provided the Board with discretion to implement a conversion plan in the shareholders' "best interests" subject to challenge only for bad faith. Yet, a by-law amendment surely cannot eliminate directors' fiduciary duty of loyalty and fairness to shareholders. See Del. Code tit. 8, § 102\(b\) (providing that certificate of incorporation may limit directors' personal liability, but may not waive liability for breach of duty of loyalty).

assets' fair value is within the directors' business judgment and discretion, and the burden of proof is on the dissenting shareholder to demonstrate unfairness. See Baron v. Pressed Metals of America, Inc., 35 Del. Ch. 325, 117 A.2d 357, 361 \(Del.Ch. 1955\), aff'd, 35 Del. Ch. 581, 123 A.2d 848 \(Del. 1956\). But where, as here, the directors and the shareholders who approved the sale have an interest in the transaction,³² [*1184] the burden shifts to the proponents of the sale to show the directors' "utmost good faith" and the transaction's "scrupulous fairness." See Alcott v. Hyman, 42 Del. Ch. 233, 208 A.2d 501, 506-07 \(Del. 1965\). Thus, the question presented here is what was a fair price for sale of the non-participating and defaulted units.

[43] Plaintiffs' central argument is that the units became more valuable as a result of the condominium conversion, and that a fair price for the units, and consequently for plaintiffs' stock, had to include all, or at least some, of this increase in value. Yet, contrary to plaintiffs' assertions, HN21[] there is no rule of law providing that, where assets become more valuable as a result of being sold, a fair sale price must include this increase in value. In fact, some authority indicates there is a rule to the contrary, providing in effect that a fair price does not include any part of an increase in value attributable to the sale itself. When corporations undergo significant changes, such as mergers, consolidations, or as here, sales of all or substantially all assets, disgruntled shareholders sometimes have a statutory right to demand appraisal and payment of their stocks' fair value. There is a long and well-established rule that the court's valuation of the stock should not be affected by the merger, sale, or other transaction that gives rise to the appraisal proceeding. In other words, if a corporation becomes more valuable as a result of a transaction, this increased value is [44] to be enjoyed only by the shareholders who participate in the transaction. This principle has been recognized by numerous courts,³³ [45] commentators,³⁴ state legislatures,³⁵ and the drafters of model corporation laws.³⁶ For example, HN22[] Delaware law provides that courts in

³² HN20[] An individual is "interested" in a sale transaction if she serves as a director, or shareholder, of both the selling and purchasing corporations. See Alcott, 208 A.2d at 505-06; Abelow v. Symonds, 40 Del. Ch. 462, 184 A.2d 173, 175 \(Del.Ch. 1962\), aff'd sub nom., Abelow v. Midstates Oil Corp., 41 Del. Ch. 145, 189 A.2d 675 \(Del. 1963\). Here, disinterested director approval was impossible, because the two corporations involved had the same five directors. Similarly, at the time they voted on the conversion plan, the Co-op Corporation's shareholders intended later to become shareholders of the Condominium Association and, with the exception of plaintiffs and the other non-participating shareholders, they eventually did so. Thus, the majority of the selling corporation's shareholders had an expectant interest in the purchasing corporation, and their approval of the sale was not disinterested. Defendants have submitted evidence indicating that one of the plaintiffs, Julia Williams, voted in favor of the conversion plan. Had a majority of the non-participating shareholders voted in favor of the plan, it would be necessary to decide whether this constituted disinterested shareholder approval.

Ch. 523, 74 A.2d 71, 72 \(Del. 1950\)](#) (recognizing that "the basic concept of value under the appraisal statute is that the stockholder is entitled to be paid for that which was taken from him"); Chicago Corp. v. Munds, 20 Del. appraisal cases shall determine the stock's "fair value exclusive of any element of value arising from the accomplishment or expectation" of the disputed transaction. [Del. Code tit. 8, § 262\(h\). If applicable here, this principle firmly supports defendants' view that the Co-op Corporation's assets and stock were properly valued on the basis of their "co-op value," rather than on the basis of their condominium value.

Yet, several questions [\[46\]](#) remain to be answered regarding the application of this principle under Delaware law and the facts of this case. Does the principle apply only in cases arising under the appraisal statute, or in other contexts where the fair value of a corporation's assets or stock are disputed, such as where minority shareholders attack a transaction's fairness by suing the corporation or its directors for breach of fiduciary duty? ³⁷ [\[47\]](#) Does it apply in a case involving a sale of assets rather than a merger or consolidation? ³⁸ [\[48\]](#) [\[*1185\]](#) Finally, is this general principle subject to any exceptions relevant here? ³⁹

³⁷ Authority other than Delaware case law, although meager, indicates that the principle applies in non-appraisal cases. See Perkins v. Public Serv. Co., 93 N.H. 459, 45 A.2d 210, 212-14 \(N.H. 1945\); Annotation, 48 A.L.R.3d at 451, § 4[a]; Annotation, 38 A.L.R.2d at 450, § 4[b]. Delaware cases offer mixed signals on this point. Compare Sterling v. Mayflower Hotel Corp., 33 Del. Ch. 293, 93 A.2d 107, 111 \(Del. 1952\) (disregarding increased value of target corporation's stock attributable to attempted merger, where minority shareholders sued to enjoin allegedly unfair merger), with Cinerama, Inc. v. Technicolor, Inc., 63 U.S.L.W. 2291, 1994 WL 568654, at *9 (Del.Ch. 1994) (noting, in suit for breach of fiduciary duty, that merger's terms reflected fair allocation of "synergistic value" arising from merger, without mentioning appraisal statute or suggesting Delaware law requires court to disregard such value in evaluating merger's fairness), and Tanzer v. International Gen. Indus. Inc., 402 A.2d 382, 393-95 \(Del.Ch. 1979\) (suggesting that, while appraisal statute precludes dissenting shareholders from sharing in appreciation caused by merger, same rule does not apply in nonappraisal cases, but concluding evidence that merger increased company's value was too speculative to demonstrate merger's unfairness).

³⁹ It is unclear whether Delaware law provides for any exception. One court has recognized that an exception exists where fraud is present. See Jones v. Missouri-Edison Elec. Co., 233 F. 49, 50 \(8th Cir. 1916\). A second possible exception exists for shareholders involuntarily excluded from the disputed merger or sale. A shareholder who opposes and elects not to participate in a transaction should neither share in the gain if the transaction increases the company's value, nor share in the loss if it has the opposite effect. See, e.g., In re West Waterway Lumber Co., 59 Wash. 2d 310, 367 P.2d 807, 810 \(Wash. 1962\). Yet, this reasoning does not apply to shareholders who have no choice whether to participate. Thus, appraisal statutes in many states expressly provide that the increased value of a corporation arising from a sale or merger is not excluded from valuation if "such

[49] In sum, defendants have not established that this or any other rule of Delaware law warrants threshold dismissal of plaintiffs' claims. Similarly, plaintiffs have not established grounds entitling them to summary judgment, for they have not shown how the Court may determine, without relying on disputed factual issues, that defendants failed to set a fair price for the corporation's assets and to assign a fair value to plaintiffs' stock.⁴⁰ [50] As a result, both defendants' motion to dismiss [*1186] and plaintiff's motion for summary judgment must be denied. The stay of discovery now in effect will be lifted, and both parties, after discovery, have leave to seek summary judgment on the issues presented here, should the record warrant it. In addition, the parties may indicate whether they believe certification of questions to the Delaware Supreme Court would be advisable in this case.⁴¹

V.

In sum, plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims are without merit and must be dismissed, and their federal housing discrimination claim survives threshold dismissal, but, after discovery, may yet fail on summary judgment motion in the event defendants establish a legitimate non-discriminatory purpose for the challenged aspects of the plan and plaintiffs fail to show that the purpose is pretextual. The Court will continue to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiffs' state-law claims, and the parties will now have an opportunity to pursue discovery and address the questions of Delaware corporate law presented here at the summary judgment stage.

An appropriate order will issue.

exclusion would be inequitable." See, e.g., Colo. Rev. Stat. § 7-113-101\(4\); Idaho Code § 30-1-81(a) (3); N.H. Rev. Stat. § 293-A:13.01\(3\); S.D. Codified Laws § 47-6-40\(3\); Va. Code § 13.1-729. Although this proviso has received little judicial interpretation, the commentary to the Model Business Corporation Act indicates that it aims to distinguish a minority shareholder "excluded against his will," such as by a "squeeze-out" merger, from one who willingly "refuses to maintain a continuing interest" in the corporation after the merger or sale. See Conrad, Amendments of Model Business Corporation Act Affecting Dissenters' Rights (Sections 73, 74, 80, and 81), 33 Bus. Law. 2587, 2601 (1978). Here, plaintiffs do not fit neatly into either category, for the corporation invited them to participate in the conversion by buying their units as condominiums, but they were excluded by their inability to obtain financing on acceptable terms.

⁴⁰ Although not alleged in their complaint, plaintiffs have cited one additional manner in which the defendants allegedly breached their fiduciary duties, namely by their suppression of certain target appraisals of the units' value as condominiums. See supra Part II.D. If privy to the target appraisals, plaintiffs argue, they could have sold their Co-op Corporation stock prior to the conversion at a price higher than the stock's "co-op value." Plaintiff may seek to add this allegation to their complaint by amendment, and, if so, defendants may test the presence of factual support for it by way of motion for summary judgment. See supra note 17.

[*359] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Plaintiff Verson Corporation brought this lawsuit alleging that defendants Verson International Group, Verson Wilkins Limited, and Verson International Limited violated a license agreement for intellectual property. Before us now is defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's amended complaint. For the reasons set forth below, the motion is denied.

[*360] BACKGROUND

Verson Corporation (Verson), the successor to Verson Allsteel Press Company (VASP) and the wholly-owned subsidiary of Allied Products Corporation, manufactures presses for the metal-forming industry. In the early 1980s VASP began experiencing financial difficulties. In order to ease through its financial downturn VASP and a group of its international managers entered into an agreement wherein the managers would buy out VASP's international operations with a newly formed independent company, Verson International Limited (collectively referred to herein, along with Verson Wilkins Limited and Verson International Limited, as "VIL"). VIL and VASP entered into a series of agreements to facilitate the management buyout [2] (MBO), the most important for our purposes being the VASP/VIL License Agreement (license agreement). In that agreement VASP agreed to turn over to VIL its patents and non-patented trade secrets, and allowed VIL to use this know-how. The license agreement called for both parties to turn over all newly developed know-how to the other for a period of five years. The parties also agreed to a series of restrictive covenants that gave VASP the exclusive right to market its products in the United States and Canada and gave VIL the exclusive right to market its products in the rest of the world. Both territorial restrictions were to last five years.

In the first lawsuit between the parties VIL sued VASP alleging that VASP¹ had violated the license agreement's restrictive covenants and seeking an injunction requiring Verson to turn over certain know-how. VASP argued that the territorial and durational restrictions violated state and federal antitrust laws. We enforced the restrictions only in part, finding that VIL was barred only from the use of VASP know-how in the United States and Canada, and that VASP was barred only from marketing its products in Europe. Verson Wilkins Ltd. v. Allied [3] Products Corp., 723 F. Supp. 1, 20 (N.D. Ill. 1989). We also required VASP to turn over the know-how covered under the license agreement. In 1990 the parties executed a settlement agreement disposing of the remaining disputes regarding exchange of the know-how.

Soon thereafter VIL entered into an agreement with Enprotech Mechanical Services, Inc. (Enprotech), a direct competitor of Verson in the North American market. In this agreement VIL turned over know-how it received from VASP in the 1985 license agreement and granted Enprotech the exclusive right to use this know-how to manufacture replacement parts for Verson presses.² This arrangement spawned the present lawsuit. In its complaint Verson alleged that VIL violated Article 16 of the 1985 license agreement which required VIL to obtain VASP's approval before licensing³ the know-how to another party, by turning over VASP know-how to Enprotech. Defendants moved to dismiss the complaint, claiming that Article 16 did not survive the termination of the agreement. We granted that motion on December 30, 1994. Verson moved for reconsideration of our order and for leave to amend its complaint, arguing that the Enprotech agreement, which Verson claims is an assignment, violated the license agreement's restriction on VIL's right to assign the know-how. Although this constituted a new line of attack for Verson, we allowed it to amend its complaint to more fully make out this claim. Verson has since amended its complaint to incorporate the assignment argument. Before us now is VIL's motion to dismiss the amended complaint. VIL argues that the 1990 settlement agreement prevents Verson from maintaining this action; that it is the co-owner of the know-how, not a licensee, and thus had the right to assign it to Enprotech; that the right to assign the know-how was implicit in the 1985 licensing agreement; that a perpetual ban on assignability would be an unreasonable restraint of trade; and that its transaction with Enprotech is a sublease⁴ rather than an assignment. ⁵ We will examine each of these arguments in turn.⁶

A. The 1990 Settlement Agreement

VIL argues that a settlement agreement executed in connection with the earlier case involving these⁷ parties bars Verson's action here. In the first lawsuit VIL obtained an injunction requiring Verson to turn over various types of know-how related to the licensing agreement. The case was still pending, however, because the parties disputed what documents needed to be produced and who was to pay for the copying. The parties entered into a settlement in which VIL accepted some of the disputed know-how in complete satisfaction of any claim for know-how it might have had under the licensing agreement, and Verson agreed not to challenge VIL's right to use this know-how.⁴ VIL argues that this action challenging VIL's assignment (or sublease) of the know-how to Enprotech is a restriction on the use of the know-how and thus violates the settlement agreement. Verson responds that VIL's right to assign or transfer the know-how remained as it was under the licensing agreement.

¹ Actually, Allied had taken over VASP in 1986 and therefore was the named defendant in the first action. However, this distinction is immaterial for this brief recitation of the background.

² The parties dispute whether VIL assigned this know-how to Enprotech or merely licensed it. That argument will be addressed infra.

³ Verson claims that VIL's arguments are merely "rehashed" from its memorandum in opposition to Verson's motion for reconsideration and to amend its complaint, and that we rejected these arguments in granting Verson leave to amend its complaint. However, in allowing Verson to amend its complaint we did not rule on any of the arguments VIL advances here. Rather, our opinion focused exclusively on whether we should allow Verson to amend its complaint to present a different theory of recovery, and we concluded that Verson should have a second chance to present a cognizable claim. Verson has attempted to do so and VIL is now free to attack the complaint.

[7] We agree with Verson that the 1990 settlement agreement does not prevent it from attempting to restrict VIL's right to assign the know-how. HN1⁵ In settlements, as in all contracts, every effort should be made to give force to the words employed by the parties and to not imply words that the parties could have used but did not. Harris Bank Naperville v. Morse Shoe, Inc., 716 F. Supp. 1109, 1122 \(N.D.Ill. 1989\). Through the settlement Verson agreed only not to restrict VIL's use of the know-how. The word "use" does not ordinarily also include sale, transfer, or assignment. This is especially so when dealing with the right to use intellectual property. One can use know-how, trade secrets, or patents freely, but still not transfer or assign that information. The right to the know-how at issue here could easily be separated into the right to use the know-how and the right to sell, transfer, or assign the know-how, and the parties' selection of the word "use" provides support for the view that they did not intend for the settlement agreement to grant VIL a right to assign the know-how that was not already granted under the terms of the license agreement. The parties could have added "transfer [8] or assign" to "use," and the fact that they did not is probative of the issue.

Other sections of the settlement also provide some support for that view. Under a section entitled "Reservation of Rights," both parties reserved the right to sue each other for any breach of the licensing agreement. The fact that both parties sought to preserve their rights under the licensing agreement arguably indicates that the settlement was intended only to resolve the dispute as to what know-how Verson was required to turn over and who was to pay for the copying costs. VIL's reading of the reservation-of-rights clause, that the parties intended only to prevent public disclosure of the know-how, is strained, given that the parties could have easily drafted the clause to reflect that intent but did not. Therefore, we hold that the 1990 settlement agreement was not an unambiguous waiver of Verson's right to challenge [*362] VIL's assignment of the know-how.⁵

[9] B. Is VIL a Co-Owner of the Know-How Or Only a Licensee?

The premise behind Verson's complaint is that VIL is a nonexclusive licensee of the know-how. In earlier orders we expressed some doubt regarding this proposition and left open the question whether VIL is a co-owner of the know-how. See Verson Corp. v. Verson International Group, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9736, No. 93 C 2996, WL 376278 at *3 (N.D.Ill. July 13, 1994). VIL seizes upon this language and presses the argument here.

The starting place for determining whether VIL is a co-owner of the know-how is the 1985 license agreement. The agreement states that "upon expiration of the term of this Agreement, subject to [confidentiality provisions], Licensee shall have the non-exclusive perpetual royalty free right to continue to exercise, use or practice the rights granted Licensee under Section 2.01 without limitation as to Territory" As we indicated above, the use of know-how can be readily distinguished from the ownership of the know-how. Thus, one meaning of the license agreement grants VIL only the right to use the know-how to compete with Verson worldwide. The language of this provision, or the other provisions in the agreement, [10] do not necessarily indicate the parties intended for VIL to become co-owner of the know-how at the termination of the five-year period.

⁴ Specifically, the settlement agreement stated:

Allied agrees not to seek the return or to restrict the use of any know-how which it or its predecessor has transmitted to VIL, or which may be transmitted to VIL under this Settlement (collectively, the "Transmitted Know-How"). Allied hereby waives all claims and defenses relating to VIL's entitlement to the possession or use of the Transmitted Know-How.

Despite the lack of any express provision in the license agreement granting it co-ownership of the know-how, VIL presents four arguments to support its claim: first, that the amount it paid in connection with the MBO indicates that VIL would become co-owner of the know-how; second, that it developed some of the know-how itself; third, that the clear intent of the MBO and license agreement was to make VIL and Verson head-to-head competitors after five years; and, fourth, that VIL acquired property rights to the know-how when it acquired VASP's international operations.

We find that none of these four arguments helps VIL's cause here, even if we can entertain them in support of a motion to dismiss. First, the amount VIL paid in connection with the MBO does not by itself demonstrate anything about the parties' intent. The license agreement was just one part of a series of agreements executed in connection with the MBO. It is impossible to say as a matter of law that the consideration paid by VIL was to acquire ownership rights to the know-how after [\[11\]](#) five years. VIL may be able to present evidence that the true value of what it received in the MBO could not come near the $ 8 million it actually paid if ownership of the know-how were not included, and in such a situation we could find the consideration paid to be probative of the parties' intent. However, we cannot make that determination on a motion to dismiss.

Second, Verson disputes VIL's claim that it developed part of the know-how at issue here. It is clear that whether or not VIL did develop this know-how is a disputed question of fact that cannot be resolved on a motion to dismiss. Such a determination must await further development by the parties.

Third, we have repeatedly recognized that the goal of the MBO in general, and the license agreement in particular, was to place VIL and Verson as head-to-head competitors at the end of five years, as VIL argues. That proposition does not, however, establish VIL's ownership of the know-how. At the end of the agreement, VIL had every right to compete with Verson in any market in the world. In that respect the two firms were head-to-head competitors. Limiting VIL to the right to use, instead of assign, the know-how does not appear [\[12\]](#) to frustrate this goal. All VIL is prevented from doing is assigning or selling the know-how to a competitor. This limitation has no effect on VIL's ability to compete with Verson in the manufacture, sale, or repair of presses.

Finally, it is not clear at this point what rights VIL acquired in the MBO when it took over VASP's international operations. Until now we have never been faced with determining [\[*363\]](#) exactly what rights VIL acquired in the MBO. Verson has submitted a number of the agreements involving VASP and its many subsidiaries, that purportedly demonstrate that VIL acquired only licensing rights, not ownership rights, to the know-how. VIL has not contradicted Verson's recitation of the corporate history. Accepting Verson's allegation that no ownership rights were transferred in the MBO -- an allegation supported by the submitted documents -- we hold that Verson has properly alleged that VIL was a mere licensee, not a co-owner, of the know-how.

C. Implied Right of Assignability

VIL does not dispute that there is no provision in the license agreement granting it an explicit post-termination right to assign the know-how. Yet it argues that despite this lack of [\[13\]](#) express authority, authority to assign its rights under the agreement must be inferred from the circumstances and the parties' conduct.

Under well-established law HN2 the holder of a nonexclusive patent license may not assign its license unless the right to assign is expressly provided for in the license agreement. See Stenograph Corp. v. Fulkerson, 972 F.2d 726, 729 n.2 (7th Cir. 1992) ("Patent licenses are not assignable in the absence of express language."); Unarco Industries Inc. v. Kelley Co., 465 F.2d 1303, 1306 (7th Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 929, 35 L. Ed. 2d 590, 93 S. Ct. 1365 (1973); Gilson v. Republic of Ireland, 252 U.S. App. D.C. 99, 787 F.2d 655, 658 (D.C. Cir. 1986); In re CFLC, Inc., 174 Bankr. 119, 122 (N.D.Cal. 1994). Under this longstanding federal case law, patent licenses are treated as personal to the licenseholder and therefore are presumed to be not assignable. Id.

VIL argues that his presumption against assignability may be overcome by the circumstances and the conduct of the parties. As support, VIL cites Farmland Irrigation Co. v. Dopplmaier, 48 Cal. 2d 208, 308 P.2d 732 (Cal. 1957), and Bowers v. Lake Superior Contracting [\[14\]](#) & Dredging Co., 149 F. 983 (8th Cir. 1906). We seriously doubt whether these decisions survive the later developed line of cases refusing to imply a right of assignability of patent licenses.⁶ Even if some vestige of Farmland and Bowers remains, we cannot overlook decades of precedent to the contrary. See Unarco Industries Inc., 465 F.2d at 1306. Therefore, we feel bound to require compelling evidence of the parties' intent before implying a right to assign. Such evidence is not presented here, nor may it be considered to resolve a motion to dismiss.

VIL points to two aspects of the parties' conduct to support its claim that a right of assignment should be inferred. First, it argues that the fact that the license [15] agreement gave it broad authority to sublicense its rights without Verson's approval establishes conclusively that the parties did not believe that the patented rights were highly personable and therefore could be assigned. We disagree. VIL seeks to bootstrap its negotiated right to sublicense into a right to assign. Were VIL correct, every license granting a right to sublicense would also implicitly contain a right of assignment. That is clearly not the case. On the contrary, under the axiom of expressio unius, the presence of the provision on sublicensing indicates that the parties did not intend to allow assignments. Further, VIL cannot seriously maintain that Verson did not consider the know-how to be highly personable. The license agreement contained a strict confidentiality clause and every indication from the parties' conduct since the MBO is that the know-how is vital to successful competition in the industry. Therefore, it is clear that VIL's right to sublicense does not establish as a matter of law an intent to also allow it to assign its rights.

VIL also claims that Article 16 of the licensing agreement, which required VIL to first obtain Verson's approval before assigning [16] its rights to a competitor, demonstrates that when the parties sought to restrict the right to assign they did so expressly, and the fact that there is no provision limiting VIL's right to assign post-termination establishes [17] that no such limitations were intended by the parties. In addition, VIL argues that because our order of December 30, 1993, ruled that Article 16 did not survive the termination of the licensing agreement, preventing VIL from assigning its rights post-termination would mean that it had greater leeway to assign before the termination than after, which it asserts is an absurd result.

We are not persuaded that the presence of Article 16 overcomes HN3¹ the strong presumption against implying a right to assign licenses for intellectual property. Article 16 and a post-termination restriction on assignment are not, as VIL suggests, in hopeless conflict. It is reasonable for Verson to have allowed VIL greater leeway to assign its rights during the five-year period of the licensing agreement because VIL was prohibited by the agreement from competing with Verson in North America. After the termination of the agreement, however, VIL could compete directly with Verson in North America, which may have prompted Verson to restrict VIL's right to assign. In any event, we need not rule that this is what the parties intended. Rather, we conclude that the license agreement does not conclusively refute Verson's claim that the know-how cannot be assigned.

D. Restraint of Trade

VIL also argues that interpreting the agreement to require a perpetual ban on VIL's ability to assign its rights is an unreasonable restraint of trade that violates Illinois common law and Illinois and federal antitrust statutes. In doing so, it apparently seeks to advance the best argument it can in support of a concern expressed by this court and, probably, upon reflection, better left unexpressed.

VIL claims that since we have previously ruled that some of the agreement's territorial restrictions violated the antitrust laws, then, a fortiori, a perpetual ban on assignments does so as well.

VIL is incorrect in attempting to compare the anti-assignment issue here with the covenants not to compete that were at issue in the first lawsuit between these parties. The contract provision previously at issue divided up the worldwide market for Verson presses and prevented the [18] contracting parties from entering various markets. Thus, by their very nature, the covenants not to compete restrained competition. We held that certain of the restrictions were overly broad and upheld the covenants only in part. Unlike the covenants not to compete, the limitation on assignments does not prevent VIL from competing in the market for Verson presses.

⁶The Farmland decision explicitly relied on state law to answer the question presented. In that the later federal cases hold that the assignability of patent licenses is a question of federal law, see Unarco, 465 F.2d at 1306, VIL's reliance on Farmland may be misplaced.

VIL argues, however, that by preventing the assignment of the know-how, Verson is preventing other companies from entering the market. VIL's argument proves too much. Under VIL's view, any company possessing trade secrets or know-how vital to entry into an industry must turn over that know-how or risk violating the antitrust laws. That simply cannot be true, for HN4⁷ the very nature of a patent is a government-authorized monopoly in a certain market, and much of the law of intellectual property is designed to protect a company's innovations from competitors. VIL has failed to cite a single case finding an antitrust violation because of a patent license's restriction on the licensee's right to assign.⁷ In fact, the case law indicates that HN5⁸ restrictions in patent licenses are not per se violations of the antitrust laws. See [\[*19\] Atari Games Corp. v. Nintendo of America, Inc., 897 F.2d 1572, 1577 \(Fed. Cir. 1990\); USM Corp. v. SPS Technologies, Inc., 694 F.2d 505, 513 \(7th Cir. 1982\)](#), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1107, 103 S. Ct. 2455, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1334 (1983) ("Patent licensing agreements between competitors are sometimes struck down under antitrust laws, of course, but only upon proof of anti-competitive effect beyond that implicit in the grant of the patent"); Moraine Products v. ICI America, Inc., 538 F.2d 134, 145 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 941, 50 L. Ed. 2d 310, 97 S. Ct. 357 (1976). Verson is simply not required by law to turn over the know-how, now or in the future, and it is not an unreasonable restraint of trade for it to prevent the know-how [\[*365\]](#) from falling into a competitor's hands through some other source.

E. [\[20\] Assignment or Sublicense](#)

VIL's final argument is that its agreement with Enprotech is not an assignment at all, but rather is a sublicense, and since the license agreement granted VIL the authority to sublicense its rights, Verson's suit must fail.

Verson argues that intellectual property rights can be severed and assigned separately. That is, a patentee may assign the right to use a patent for sale of a product but retain the right to use the patent for other purposes. Support for this proposition can be found in tax cases, see Cory v. Commissioner, 230 F.2d 941, 944 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 352 U.S. 828, 1 L. Ed. 2d 50, 77 S. Ct. 43 (1956), and in some of the cases dealing with who has standing to sue for patent infringement. See Vaupel Textilmaschinen KG v. Meccanica Euro Italia S.P.A., 944 F.2d 870, 875 (Fed. Cir. 1991) (recognizing patent rights as constituting a bundle of rights). Under this view the answer depends on whether the patentee has transferred all its rights in a particular market (an assignment) or has transferred only some of those rights, retaining others for itself (a license). During the course of this litigation VIL has retreated from its [\[*21\]](#) earlier opposition to this principle and now seems content to argue that, even if that were the law, the Enprotech agreement still cannot be considered an assignment.⁸

Verson claims that the Enprotech agreement is an assignment rather than a sublicense because VIL transferred all the rights associated with the after-market for Verson presses. Specifically, the Enprotech agreement states:

[VIL] (i) grants and assigns to [Enprotech] (1) the exclusive (as between Licensor and Licensee), royalty free [\[22\]](#) right and license to utilize the Proprietary Rights in the Territory for the manufacture and sale of Verson Parts and for the rebuilding and modernization of Verson Presses and subject to the reserved rights of [VIL], the maintenance and repair of Verson Presses, and (2) the right and license to use the Trademark in connection with the manufacture and sale of Verson Parts and, subject to the review and consent of [VIL], which consent will not be unreasonably withheld, the maintenance, repair, rebuilding and modernization of Verson Presses and (ii) sells to Enprotech the Technical Information and Other Information subject to the terms and conditions of this Agreement.

The "territory" is defined to include certain countries in North America and Central America. "Proprietary rights" and "technical information" basically entail the Verson technology that VIL received under the licensing agreement.⁹

⁷ Indeed, were VIL correct, the long-established federal rule against the implied right to assign patent licenses, see Unarco Industries Inc., 465 F.2d at 1306, would open every patent holder to an antitrust lawsuit.

[23] VIL counters that it has retained sufficient rights to the after-market to render the Enprotech agreement a sublicense rather than an assignment. It identifies five such rights: (1) the right to make replacement parts in connection with the sale of new presses; (2) the exclusive right to provide service for the enhancement retrofit of Verson presses; (3) the exclusive right to provide service work for the maintenance and repair of Verson presses; (4) a fifty-year period for the agreement; and (5) a parts supply agreement requiring Enprotech to purchase spare parts from a corporation affiliated with VIL.

We can quickly dispense with VIL's argument that rights two and three render the agreement a sublicense. Those rights do not limit the agreement's grant to Enprotech of an exclusive right to manufacture replacement [*366] parts; the issue of repair service does not limit Enprotech's ability to use the know-how in the replacement parts market.

Similarly, the fifty-year period does not, as a matter of law, render the agreement a sublicense. Verson has alleged that the fifty-year period far exceeds the useful life of any of the knowhow, given the normal rate of change in technology in the [24] industry, and thus the fifty-year period does not serve as any practical restraint on Enprotech's rights under the agreement. Since VIL has not demonstrated that this well-pleaded allegation is incorrect as a matter of law, we must accept it as being true for the purposes of this motion to dismiss.

Nor does the parts supply agreement, as a matter of law, render the Enprotech agreement a sublicense. Although Enprotech is required to purchase certain products from a VIL-affiliated corporation, the agreement states that Enprotech's failure to abide by the parts supply agreement does not affect its exclusive rights granted elsewhere in the agreement. Therefore, the parts supply agreement need not be read to limit Enprotech's right to the use the know-how in the parts market.

That leaves the Enprotech agreement's provision granting VIL the right to manufacture replacement parts in connection with the sale of new presses. It is too early at this juncture to determine as a matter of law that VIL's retention of this right limits Enprotech's interest to a mere sublicense rather than an assignment. VIL may be able to demonstrate that its retained right to provide replacement parts as part [25] of contracts for the sale of new presses represents a sufficiently large portion of the replacement part market to make the Enprotech agreement a sublicense, but we are not in a position to make that determination here.¹⁰ Since VIL has failed to demonstrate that the Enprotech agreement is a license as a matter of law, we must deny its motion to dismiss. VIL is free to renew this argument at a later stage if it can present extrinsic evidence clarifying the ambiguity in the Enprotech agreement.

[26] CONCLUSION

VIL may well prevail on one or more of its arguments when the record is fully developed. Given, however, the limitations of a motion to dismiss, it cannot now prevail. For the reasons outlined above, VIL's motion to dismiss the amended complaint is denied.

JAMES B. MORAN,

⁹ Although the parties are delineated as "Licensor" and "Licensee," and the agreement is denominated a "License," these HN6[
↑] labels are not dispositive of our inquiry here. Waterman, 138 U.S. at 255. Rather, the focus should be on the substantive rights conferred by the agreement. Id.

¹⁰ Deciding this issue as a matter of law is even less appropriate when considering the language used in the Enprotech agreement. In the agreement VIL "assigns" to Enprotech its intellectual property and "sells" to it the know-how. This language is much more consistent with an assignment than with a transfer of a mere license. Indeed, the Federal Circuit has held that HN7[
↑] "the term 'assignment' has a particular meaning in patent law implying formal transfer of title." Vaupel Textilmaschinen KG, 944 F.2d at 875. Moreover, in the agreement, VIL warrants that it has good title to the know-how and is free to assign it. Again, this provision is more consistent with an assignment than a license.

HN3 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

With respect to a motion for summary judgment, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Summary judgment will not lie if the dispute about a material fact is genuine; that is, if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. Summary judgment is appropriate, however, if the opposing party fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.

HN5 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In responding to a summary judgment motion, the nonmoving party cannot rely on the hope that the trier of fact will disbelieve the movant's denial of a disputed fact, but must present affirmative evidence in order to defeat a properly supported motion for summary judgment. The nonmoving party must adduce more than a scintilla of evidence to overcome the summary judgment motion. It is not sufficient for the nonmoving party to merely show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. Moreover, a trial court no longer has a duty to search the entire record to establish that it is bereft of a genuine issue of material fact. That is, the nonmoving party has an affirmative duty to direct the court's attention to those specific portions of the record upon which it seeks to rely to create a genuine issue of material fact.

Despite the broad language "any person" in 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, courts have not allowed every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It is not enough, however, that plaintiffs can show that defendants' conduct caused them injury. Plaintiffs also must show that their injuries were sufficiently direct and that they would be efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN12[Private Actions, Standing

It is virtually impossible to announce a black letter rule that will dictate the result in every case to determine whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. Nevertheless, the following factors have been identified for examining whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing: 1. the causal connection between the antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused; 2. the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market; 3. the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative; 4. the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and 5. the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation. Hence, to have antitrust standing, a plaintiff must show: (1) antitrust injury, and (2) under the factors set forth above, that the directness of the injury was such that he would be an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws.

Opinion

Plaintiffs bring this action under federal antitrust laws ¹ and state law ² asserting, inter alia, that defendants improperly denied plaintiff David Leak, M.D., medical staff privileges at Grant Medical Center. This matter is before the Court on defendants' motions for summary judgment (Docs. 19 and 20). Defendants argue that they are entitled to summary judgment in their favor because plaintiffs have not suffered antitrust injury and therefore lack standing to bring federal antitrust claims. For the following reasons the Court grants defendants' [2] summary judgment motions.

I.

Plaintiff Dr. Leak is a licensed physician who specializes in pain medicine. Plaintiff Pain Control Consultants, Inc. ("PCC") is an Ohio corporation in the business of operating a comprehensive pain treatment center. Dr. Leak is the Director and sole shareholder of PCC.

Defendant Grant Medical Center ("Grant") is an Ohio corporation in the business of operating a hospital in Columbus, Ohio. Defendant Grant Anesthesia Associates, Inc. ("GAA") is an Ohio corporation engaged in the business of providing anesthesia services to Grant under an exclusive contract.

Defendants Bhagwan Satiani, M.D., M. Farid Edwards, M.D., James Highly, O.D., Sambit K. Barua, M.D., Bradley Getz, M.D., Michael McKay, M.D., Chang [3] Kim, M.D., Lee K. Roh, M.D., Karen Logan, M.D., and Jon T. Preston, M.D. are all members of the Grant medical staff and GAA. Defendant Paul Addessi, D.O. was a member of the Grant medical staff.

Since 1988 Dr. Leak periodically has sought and obtained medical staff privileges at Grant on a case-by-case basis. On July 1, 1991, Dr. Leak applied for medical staff privileges at Grant. Dr. Leak specified Anesthesia and Surgery as the departments for which he sought privileges because the application had no category for pain medicine.

In April 1992 the Grant Anesthesia Department recommended granting Dr. Leak provisional privileges on the condition that Dr. Leak would serve as an on-call anesthesiologist to provide anesthesia services to patients. The Grant Anesthesia Department Bylaws require anesthesiologists to provide on-call services as a condition to obtaining [*760] privileges within the department. Dr. Leak did not submit to Grant an on-call schedule, although he avers that he made several attempts to contact the Chairperson of the Anesthesia Department Credentials Committee to discuss the schedule.

On February 26, 1993, Grant entered into an exclusive contract with GAA for the provision [4] of anesthesia services to the hospital's patients. The contract provided that comprehensive pain management ³ was within the range of anesthesia services GAA would offer.

Dr. Leak sent a letter to the president of Grant on March 18, 1993, discussing Dr. Leak's qualifications and asking to meet with the president to discuss his application for privileges. On March 25, 1995, defendant Dr. Edwards sent a letter to Dr. Leak informing him that Grant was unable to process his application for privileges because of the exclusive contract with GAA.

In August 1993 Grant advised Dr. Leak that GAA was seeking a Director of Pain Management. It is unclear whether Dr. Leak followed up on this information.

² Plaintiffs assert state law claims of breach of contract, tortious interference with contractual relations, racial discrimination, and violation of Ohio's Valentine Act.

³ Dr. Leak draws a sharp distinction between pain medicine and pain management. He avers that pain medicine, in contrast to pain management, seeks long term rather than temporary solutions to pain. Dr. Leak affidavit para. 25.

It is undisputed that Dr. Leak has medical staff privileges at two other Columbus-area hospitals: [5] Park Medical Center and Columbus Community Hospital.

II.

HN1[] The procedure for granting summary judgment is found in Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), which provides:

HN2[] The judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

HN3[] The evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Adickes v. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 158-59, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142, 90 S. Ct. 1598 \(1970\). Summary judgment will not lie if the dispute about a material fact is genuine; "that is, if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). Summary judgment is appropriate, however, if the opposing party fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 161 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\); see also Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\).

The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals has recognized that Liberty Lobby, Celotex and Matsushita have effected "a decided change in summary judgment practice," ushering in a "new era" in summary judgments. Street v. J.C. Bradford & Co., 886 F.2d 1472, 1476 \(6th Cir. 1989\). The court in Street identified a number of important principles applicable in new era summary judgment practice. For example, HN4[] complex cases and cases involving state of mind issues are not necessarily inappropriate for summary judgment. Id. at 1479.

In addition, HN5[] in responding to a summary judgment motion, the nonmoving party "cannot rely on the hope that the trier of fact will disbelieve the movant's denial of a disputed fact, but must 'present affirmative evidence in order to defeat a properly supported motion for summary judgment.'" Id. (quoting Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 257). The nonmoving party must adduce more than a scintilla of evidence to overcome the summary judgment motion. Id. It is not sufficient [7] for the nonmoving party to merely "show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Id. (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586). Moreover, "the trial court no longer has a duty to search the entire record to establish that it is bereft of a genuine issue of material fact." Id. That is, [*761] the nonmoving party has an affirmative duty to direct the court's attention to those specific portions of the record upon which it seeks to rely to create a genuine issue of material fact.

III.

Plaintiffs assert eight counts of federal antitrust violation. Counts one through five set forth alleged violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.⁴ Specifically, Count One asserts that defendants engaged in a group boycott by denying Dr. Leak staff privileges; Count Two maintains that Grant is an essential facility and failure to allow Dr. Leak to share the facility therefore constitutes a per se violation of § 1; Count Three maintains that the exclusive contract with GAA is an unlawful tying arrangement; Count Four alleges that defendants engaged in unfair acts with the intent of eliminating competition from Dr. Leak; and Count Five asserts that [8] defendants' actions unreasonably restrained trade under the rule of reason theory.

⁴ Section 1 of the Sherman Act states in pertinent part:

Counts Six through Eight allege violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.⁵ These Counts claim that defendants have monopolized, attempted to monopolize, and conspired to monopolize, the market for in-hospital diagnosis and treatment of acute and chronic pain within the relevant geographic market.

[9] Defendants argue that they are entitled to summary judgment in their favor on all of plaintiffs' federal claims because plaintiffs have not suffered antitrust injury and therefore lack standing.

Plaintiffs also assert state law claims. Defendants contend that because plaintiffs' federal claims must be dismissed, the Court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiffs' state law claims. 28 U.S.C. § 1337(c)(3); United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 (1966).

The Court will proceed to address whether plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury.

IV.

There is no lack of case law discussing antitrust claims by health care professionals against those who have denied them medical staff privileges at hospitals. Numerous legal scholars have compiled and analyzed the legion of decisions on this subject. See, e.g., ABA Antitrust Section, Annual Review of 1993 Antitrust Law Developments at 287-95 (1994) (concise overview); Michael G. Macdonald, Kathryn C. Meyer & Beth Essig, Health Care Law: A Practical Guide § 9.03[1] (1994) (concise overview); William S. Brewbaker, III, Antitrust Conspiracy Doctrine and the [10] Hospital Enterprise, 74 B.U. L. Rev. 67 (1994) (advocating antitrust scrutiny of medical review board decisions and adoption of mechanisms to ensure that governing bodies' decisions are independent); Josephine M. Hammack, The Antitrust Laws and the Medical Peer Review Process, 9 J. Contemp. Health L. & Pol'y 419 (1993) (discussing recent cases and ways hospitals can preserve peer review but reduce threat of antitrust litigation); Tim A. Thomas, Annotation, Denial by Hospital of Staff Privileges or Referrals to Physician or Other Health Care Practitioner as Violation of Sherman Act, 89 A.L.R. Fed. 419 (1994) (topical digest of cases); see also BCB Anesthesia Care, Ltd. v. Passavant Memorial Area Hosp. Ass'n, 36 F.3d 664, 667-68 (7th Cir. 1994) (exhaustive list of decisions with comment that in a vast majority of cases the plaintiff physicians have ultimately been denied relief).

The above authorities offer helpful background on the many theories of liability and [*762] defenses in this area of the law. The issue before the Court, however, is a narrow one: whether plaintiffs have standing to assert claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

We begin with the general proposition [11] that HN8[↑] the health care profession is not immune from scrutiny under federal antitrust laws. See FTC v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 465-66, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 (1986) (upholding FTC's ruling that dentists violated antitrust laws by agreeing to withhold x-rays from insurers); Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29-31, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984) (upholding exclusive contract between anesthesiologists and hospital); Arizona v. Maricopa Medical Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 348-49, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982) (finding physicians' price-fixing agreement violative of antitrust laws). Nor can it fairly be said that a health care professional cannot under any circumstances state a cause of action under the Sherman Act against a hospital review committee for denial of staff privileges. Summit Health Ltd. v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322, 332, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366, 111 S. Ct. 1842 \(1991\) (holding that physician's claim against peer review committee satisfied the interstate commerce jurisdictional requirements of the Sherman Act); cf. Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C. §§ 11101-11152 (providing limited immunity [12] to medical peer review process).

HN9[]

The civil remedies provision of federal antitrust laws is set forth in Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, which states in part as follows:

HN10[]

Any person who shall be injured in his business or his property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue . . . and recover threefold the damages by him sustained . . .

HN11[]

Despite the broad language "any person," courts have not allowed "every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property." Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\) (quoting Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 477, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 \(1982\)).

Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.

Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., [I13\] 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\)](#) (emphasis in original). It is not enough, however, that plaintiffs can show that defendants' conduct caused them injury. Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535 n.31. Plaintiffs also must show that their injuries were sufficiently direct and that they would be efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws. See id.

HN12[]

"It [is] virtually impossible to announce a black letter rule that will dictate the result in every case" to determine this second requirement. Id. at 536. Nevertheless, the following factors have been identified for examining whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing:

1. the causal connection between the antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused;
2. the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market;
3. the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative;
4. the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and
5. the existence of more direct victims of the [14] alleged antitrust violation.

Southaven Land Co. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1085 \(6th Cir. 1983\) (citing Associated Contractors, 459 U.S. at 537-44). Hence, to have antitrust standing, a plaintiff must show: (1) antitrust injury, and (2) under the factors set [763] forth above, that the directness of the injury was such that he would be an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws.

Defendants cite several cases in which courts have held that health care professionals lacked standing to assert antitrust claims. See Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793 \(2nd Cir. 1994\) (affirming district court's summary judgment, holding that anesthesiologist lacked antitrust standing to challenge exclusive contract awarded to competing group of anesthesiologists); Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696 \(4th Cir. 1991\) (affirming district court's summary judgment, holding that physician whose privileges were revoked did not establish antitrust injury); Levine v. Central Fla. Med. Affiliates, Inc., 864 F. Supp. 1175 \(M.D. Fla. 1994\) (granting summary judgment, holding that internist lacked standing to assert antitrust claims challenging denial of staff privileges); [*15] Rooney v. Med. Ctr. Hosp., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7420 (S.D. Ohio Mar. 30, 1994) (Beckwith, J.) (granting summary judgment, holding that peer review was protected by Health Care Quality Improvement Act and that physician in any event lacked antitrust standing to challenge revocation of staff privileges).

Defendants argue that under the above authorities, plaintiffs cannot, as a matter of law, establish either antitrust injury or that they would be the most efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws. In particular, defendants point out that Dr. Leak has staff privileges at two other Columbus area hospitals, and that Dr. Leak has therefore not been hindered from competing in the market.

Plaintiffs acknowledge that Dr. Leak has staff privileges at other hospitals. They contend that they have nonetheless suffered antitrust injury. Plaintiffs argue, inter alia, that they have been foreclosed from offering services to that segment of patients whose managed care insurance plans limit them to using Grant.

The Court does not find, and defendants do not argue, that the above authorities establish a per se rule that a health care professional could never have standing to assert antitrust [16] claims arising from the denial of hospital staff privileges. In the circumstances presented in this case, however, the Court finds that plaintiffs have not suffered the kind of injury that antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Dr. Leak has staff privileges at two other Columbus area hospitals. Plaintiffs are therefore fully able to compete with others offering pain-related medical services in the Columbus area, including GAA and its members.

That some patients' managed care insurance plans may effectively limit them to services offered at Grant does not alter this conclusion. If plaintiffs' practice of pain medicine is, as Dr. Leak avers, truly more cost effective than traditional pain management used by anesthesiologists, then both the hospitals at which plaintiffs have privileges and plaintiffs have a competitive advantage over the defendant anesthesiologists. See Dr. Leak affidavit para. 24 & exhibit D. If pain medicine is more cost-effective than traditional pain management, then in an open and competitive marketplace managed care insurance plans should eventually be more inclined to designate those hospitals at which pain medicine is practiced. See Capital Imaging Assoc., [17] P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., Inc., 725 F. Supp. 669, 673 \(S.D.N.Y. 1989\) (recognizing that the selective nature of managed care insurance plans is pro-competitive and reduces health care costs).⁶ In these circumstances, the Court concludes that plaintiffs have failed to allege, or adduce evidence of,⁷ [18] the kind of injury that antitrust [*764] laws were designed to protect.⁸

The finding that plaintiffs have not suffered antitrust injury is dispositive. With respect to the second requirement for standing, however, it is worth noting that there are "at least two more easily imagined efficient enforcers . . . patients and the government." Rooney, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7420 at *17 (quoting Robles v. Humana Hosp. of Cartersville, 785 F. Supp. 989, 999 \(N.D. Ga. 1992\)).

For the above reasons the Court holds that plaintiffs lack standing to assert antitrust claims arising from defendants' failure to grant him staff privileges and their use of an exclusive contract. Defendants are therefore entitled to summary judgment in their favor on plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims.

⁶ The court of appeals affirmed the district court's later decision granting summary judgment in favor of the defendants. 791 F. Supp. 956 \(S.D.N.Y. 1992\), aff'd, 996 F.2d 537 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 114 S. Ct. 388, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337 \(1993\).

⁷ The Court reaches the same conclusion whether it examines the complaint, accepting as true all well pleaded facts, or whether it construes plaintiffs' evidence in the most favorable light. There appears to be some tension concerning the proper procedural posture for the antitrust standing inquiry. For example, in Rooney, the learned judge stated that standing is determined from the complaint, but went on to conclude that plaintiffs had not adduced sufficient evidence on the standing issue to withstand summary judgment. 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7420 at *16-18; see also BCB Anesthesia Care, Ltd. v. Passavant Memorial Area Hosp. Ass'n, 36 F.3d at 669 (dissenting opinion by Cudahay, J., criticizing the majority for upholding dismissal on the pleadings alone). The Court finds that adequate discovery took place in the instant case to determine standing. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(f\).

⁸ The Court agrees with defendants that plaintiffs lack standing to seek treble damages as well as injunctive relief.

V.

Having determined that defendants are entitled to summary judgment on plaintiffs' federal claims, the Court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiffs' state law claims. Based on the above, the Court GRANTS defendants' summary judgment motions (Docs 19 and 20).

The Clerk shall enter a final judgment in favor of defendants, and against plaintiffs, dismissing plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims with prejudice and dismissing plaintiffs' state law claims without prejudice.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Industries, Sports

Acts harmful to business rivals generally help consumers. A merger unlawful because of its tendency to increase prices aids rivals; conversely, a claim by the rival of the merged firms that the merger has intensified competition shows how the rival suffers injury, but not how consumers lose. Such a rival has actual injury but does not suffer from the effect that makes the transaction unlawful under the antitrust laws and therefore cannot invoke the antitrust laws. The antitrust injury doctrine applies with full vigor to the per se offenses. The antitrust injury doctrine rejects claims based on injury caused by defecting employees who set up rivals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

A producer injured by a campaign of misinformation directed at its customers suffers an injury compensable under the law of torts; it is not cut off by the proximate causation and foreseeability requirements. The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act similarly allows suits when the predicate offenses influence customers and, derivatively, injure business rivals.

HN11 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

A plaintiff claiming injury by the defendant's violation of a statute must show not only that the defendant violated the law but also that the plaintiff is among the persons protected by the law. Thus violation of a law requiring animals to be kept in pens on shipboard does not lead to liability if the animals are washed overboard; the function of the law was to curb disease, not to reduce the effects of storms. In federal administrative law, this principle is known as the zone of interests requirement. It carries over to criminal law. So too with civil claims under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) now that common law approaches have been adopted to decide when RICO authorizes recovery for derivative injuries. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341 does not protect vendors to persons who may be deceived, and firms suffering derivative injury from business torts therefore must continue to rely on the common law and the Lanham Act rather than resorting to RICO.

Opinion by: EASTERBROOK

[*1252] EASTERBROOK, Circuit Judge. Bar mitzvah tours of Israel. That is the market defined for the antitrust claim in this case. It is an absurd market definition. For a market is defined to aid in identifying any ability to raise price by curtailing output. Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Insurance, Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1335-37 [*1253] (7th Cir. 1986). These litigants do not own or control the assets that produce output in a travel market: fleets of airplanes, chains of hotels, Israel and its history. Anyone can buy tickets, rent rooms, and conduct tours. If these firms were to vanish tomorrow production would be unaffected. Their principal assets--skills as marketers and guides--would survive. People rather than firms hold expertise (economists call it "human capital" for good reason), and they can change affiliation. Output often grows [*2] in the process as competition intensifies. That is not only an economic theory but also the genesis of this case. Israel Travel Advisory Service (ITAS) specializes in bar and bat mitzvah tours of Israel. Families tour historical sites, with a celebration arranged at a place of religious significance. Israel Identity Tours (IIT), founded by disaffected employees of ITAS, began vigorous competition. ITAS remains the larger firm and has increased its sales consistently--though ITAS accuses IIT of monopolization!--but begrudges IIT even a single customer. The competition, like the litigation, is marred by charges of deception and defamation. We have a spite match, and as in many such contests the parties have raised every imaginable claim and others that exceed the bounds of imagination. To make this opinion tractable, we simplify greatly.

Celia Shar and Marilyn Ziemke founded ITAS in 1970. Parents who want to arrange religious celebrations for their children in Israel as part of a package tour are a select market, and ITAS (like its rivals) is an in-home operation. Shar and Ziemke recruited experienced guides in Israel; they relied on a combination of ads and word-of-mouth to obtain clients [*3] in the United States. The best promoters are persons well known and respected in the Jewish community. Ilene Wallerstein represented ITAS in Chicago, and by all accounts she was successful in obtaining business. Eventually she had a falling-out with Shar and Ziemke. Wallerstein quit in 1990 and set up a rival in Illinois; Karen Kaplan, ITAS's sales representative in Boston, also quit. Ami Ben Geller, one of ITAS's former tour leaders in Israel, persuaded his friend Larry Ritter to set up a bar mitzvah travel service in New Jersey. Geller agreed to be the guide; Transglobal Travel, ITAS's former land facilitator in Israel, also switched allegiances. The IIT in the caption of this case is Larry Ritter's operation; Wallerstein's firm, incorporated in Illinois, used the identical name (which to reduce confusion we call IIT-Illinois). Wallerstein, Kaplan, and Ritter cooperated, and their ads implied that the two corporations are a single firm. One of the issues in the case is how close that cooperation became.

Ilene Wallerstein began to slander ITAS, telling potential customers that it was on the verge of bankruptcy--a serious charge, because travelers do not want to hand over thousands [*4] of dollars to a firm that may furnish a chose in action rather than travel. Being stranded with worthless vouchers is no one's idea of a good trip. ITAS sued IIT-Illinois and Wallerstein, who settled. But if IIT was a joint venture or conspirator with IIT-Illinois, then IIT is jointly liable for Wallerstein's words. ITAS has numerous other gripes. Ads for IIT trumpeted 33 years' experience; ITAS says that this is a lie because IIT had just commenced business, while IIT says that the number referred to Geller's long experience as a guide, although one of the ads did not name Geller. IIT implied that Joel Leibowitz was affiliated with the firm, which ITAS says he was not. ITAS also wants to hold IIT liable for disparaging comments Leibowitz made, on the theory that he had apparent if not actual authority to represent IIT. When ITAS began to offer a "free" tour of Israel to the bar or bat mitzvah celebrant, IIT responded by advertising "free" tours of its own; ITAS believes that these ads and corresponding oral statements to potential customers were false, or at least misleading, because IIT offered only "free" land arrangements, while ITAS included air fare too. (We put "free" in quotations [5] because neither firm offered anything for free; money from the sale of travel arrangements to the celebrants' parents and siblings covered the costs.) Then there is a claim that Marlene Ritter, Larry's wife, told one potential customer that ITAS and IIT are "the same thing." All of this, according to ITAS, violated the common law of defamation and unfair competition, consumer protection laws in Illinois and New [*1254] Jersey, the Sherman Antitrust Act, the Lanham Trademark Act, and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO). For its part, IIT filed a counterclaim seeking relief on nine theories.

The district court carved several claims and parties from the case by partial summary judgment. What was left was tried to a jury--although the judge resolved some additional claims in mid-trial under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. The jury concluded that IIT (but not Larry Ritter) had slandered ITAS. It awarded $ 75,000 in compensatory and $ 102,945 in punitive damages for this tort. The jury rejected every other claim presented to it, and the judge rejected all efforts to upset the verdict. 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 751. Now we have cross-appeals. IIT believes that it should have prevailed [6] on the defamation theory and counterclaims, while ITAS thinks that it is entitled to a larger recovery, and from the Ritters personally as well as from their corporation. We start with IIT's argument that it should be ITAS's judgment creditor rather than its judgment debtor.

Wallerstein made the defamatory remarks that led to this verdict. IIT could be responsible for them only if the two IITs were joint adventurers. Firms do not act by themselves; people are responsible for their deeds, so IIT could be responsible only if Larry or Marlene Ritter made common cause with Wallerstein. The district judge granted summary judgment in Marlene's favor, and the jury ruled in Larry's. Yet if neither Ritter was responsible, how can IIT, whose liability is vicarious, be responsible? How can a corporation be ordered to pay punitive damages when no natural person has committed a tort? Perhaps IIT's liability depends exclusively on Leibowitz's statements, but these would be slender support for a verdict of the size the jury returned. Perhaps the jury's verdicts are simply inconsistent. As it happens, IIT did not point out the inconsistency to the district judge, and it has not argued to us that [7] the jury's absolution of Larry Ritter calls for a new trial--the right way to deal with such problems, for neither of the inconsistent verdicts has priority. American Casualty Co. v. B. Cianciolo, Inc., 987 F.2d 1302, 1305 \(7th Cir. 1993\). We do not invent arguments for the parties in civil litigation and therefore pass to the contentions IIT presses.

What IIT does argue is that it lacked an adequate opportunity to develop its defense. It wanted to take depositions of Shar and Ziemke, ITAS's principals. The district court refused to compel Shar and Ziemke to attend the depositions IIT noticed, a step that IIT believes entitles it to another trial. We don't see why. HN1 Harmless errors do not vitiate verdicts, and IIT does not explain how the lack of discovery injured it. It does not say that any surprising evidence came out at trial or that depositions would have assisted in the exploration of a material issue or influenced trial strategy. At all events, the district court did not err. The discovery cutoff was March 15, 1993. Having twice extended this date, the district judge told the parties that she would not do so a third time. On March 3, 1993, IIT mailed four notices of deposition; [8] ITAS received them on March 8. They called for the deposition of Shar and Ziemke in Chicago on March 11 and 12; IIT wanted to take depositions of other witnesses in New Jersey on the same dates. Before mailing these notices, IIT had received ITAS's notices of third-party depositions for upstate New York on March 11 and 12. It cannot have come as much surprise to IIT that the judge refused to compel ITAS's lead counsel to rearrange his schedule--or to be in three places at once--when IIT had waited until the end of discovery to schedule the depositions of its adversaries. ITAS had offered to make Shar and Ziemke available earlier, but IIT was not interested. The district court did not commit clear error; to the contrary, her decision was clearly correct.

Gamersmanship had greater costs for IIT. Throughout discovery IIT was less than forthcoming in producing documents ITAS sought. Three times the district judge granted ITAS's motions to compel. The judge characterized IIT's conduct as "continued testing of the bounds of permissible discovery," 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7433, * 2, followed by conduct beyond permissible bounds--flouting the court's orders. The court directed IIT to produce [9] certain documents, which counsel said they could not find, only to be [*1255] embarrassed by Larry Ritter's admissions (a) that counsel had never asked him to locate the documents, and (b) that he had destroyed pertinent documents, including correspondence with Wallerstein, after ITAS had filed motions to compel. The judge also ordered IIT to produce all financial records by February 13, 1993, on pain of default judgment. On March 3, 1993, ITAS took the deposition of IIT's accountant, who revealed that certain financial records had been prepared and given to IIT. (In fairness to IIT's current lawyers, we add that IIT changed counsel after these episodes.) When ITAS found that these had not been produced, it moved for sanctions. Instead of following through on her threat to write finis to the whole case, as she could have done, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 37\(b\)\(2\)\(C\), the judge chose a milder sanction: she dismissed IIT's counterclaims. 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4435. On the counterclaims IIT was the plaintiff, and a plaintiff who does not cooperate in discovery must expect to lose. Otis v. Chicago, 29 F.3d 1159, 1168 \(7th Cir. 1994\) (en banc); [Newman v. Metropolitan Pier & Exposition Authority, 962 F.2d \[10\] 589 \(7th Cir. 1992\)](#); Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Cammon, 929 F.2d 1220 \(7th Cir. 1991\).

Our review is deferential, and the judge did not abuse her discretion. The judge gave ample warning, and the sanction was proportional to the wrong. See United States v. Golden Elevator, Inc., 27 F.3d 301 \(7th Cir. 1994\); Ball v. Chicago, 2 F.3d 752 \(7th Cir. 1993\). IIT proffered excuses, but the judge did not have to accept them. Ordered to disclose "all corporate records," IIT did not turn over its checking account records. Why, nothing in the order mentioned checks, it contends. Come, come. A lawyer who makes such an argument can't expect anything else he says in the litigation to be believed.

We have dropped a discussion of the counterclaims into the midst of assessing IIT's request for a new trial because Ritter's destruction of documents influences another of IIT's contentions: that the evidence does not show that Ritter and Wallerstein were in league against ITAS. Destruction of evidence can support a contrary inference, and there was more. Larry Ritter told his friends that the only reason he was in the travel business was to destroy ITAS. HN2[¹] Wanting harm, even bankruptcy, to come [\[11\]](#) to one's business rivals is not actionable; hatred is a spur to competition, which serves consumers' interests. Entrepreneurs are privileged to compete because any effort to separate pure from impure motives would in the end undercut the power of rivalry to promote consumers' welfare. See Oliver Wendell Holmes, Privilege, Malice & Intent, 8 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1894), reprinted in 3 Collected Works of Justice Holmes 371, 373-74 (Sheldon M. Novick ed. 1995). Although the motive for going into business is not actionable, the mind may illuminate the means, may disambiguate borderline practices. ITAS's theory is that Ritter engaged in cooperative advertising with Wallerstein and referred potential clients to her for advice, knowing that she would impugn ITAS's solvency, to the advantage of both IIT firms. Several customers testified to both the referrals and the defamation. Perhaps they were stretching matters; or perhaps, as IIT argued, ITAS really was in financial straits, but the jury could credit these witnesses and accept the inferences ITAS pressed. Pace IIT, that we review without deference the district judge's decision refusing to grant judgment as a matter of law does not imply that [\[12\]](#) we review the evidence de novo. HN3[²] The question for a court of appeals is whether a reasonable juror could find the evidence sufficient under a preponderance standard. Mayer v. Gary Partners & Co., 29 F.3d 330 \(7th Cir. 1994\). The answer is yes.

As for damages: general damages were permissible, and the award of $ 75,000 was proper under the circumstances. A reasonable jury could conclude that the defamatory statements misled some travelers, inducing them to use IIT when, with correct information, they would have used ITAS. Quantifying the loss was exceedingly difficult; how does ITAS prove a counterfactual proposition about the behavior of persons who bought IIT's services? ITAS was able to prove that lies had been told, but the extent of their effect was bound to be problematic. That's why HN4[³] general damages are available in the law of defamation. See Prosser & Keeton on Torts 791 & n.80, 843 (5th ed. 1984). IIT stresses that all of the witnesses at trial eventually got their facts straight and used ITAS's services, but this says more about the way parties find witnesses in litigation than about the effects of the slander. The people most likely to report to ITAS that they had been told [\[13\]](#) unpleasant things by IIT are the ones who doubted IIT's statements and sought more information; the ones taken in would not have come to ITAS's attention. The evidence did enough to demonstrate malice that punitive damages were available. The ratio of punitive to actual damages is not excessive, and IIT's slim net worth did not preclude the award. A large net worth is a bad reason to award punitive damages, Zazu Designs v. L'Oreal, S.A., 979 F.2d 499, 508-09 \(7th Cir. 1992\), and a small net worth is a bad reason to let the wrongdoer off the hook.

ITAS believes that it is entitled to more than the jury awarded. It invokes two statutes, RICO and the Sherman Act, that provide for treble damages and attorneys' fees. The district judge granted summary judgment to IIT on the RICO claim, and it threw out the antitrust claim at the close of ITAS's case. The latter decision is obviously correct. We have explained already what is wrong with ITAS's market definition--and, if "bar mitzvah tours of Israel by families who live in New Jersey or near Chicago or Boston" (the full "definition") were indeed a market, then the dominant firm would be ITAS itself, a monopolist by its own admission until [14] 1990. IIT's entry upset the larger firm, but the antitrust laws encourage such upsets. It is an abuse of the antitrust laws to invoke them to stifle nascent competition. Stamatakis Industries, Inc. v. King, 965 F.2d 469 \(7th Cir. 1992\). Although ITAS believes that IIT's "free" land tours for celebrants amounted to predatory pricing because IIT lost money, it has not begun to satisfy the requirements of a predatory-pricing case. Chief among these is the need to show that the "victor" in the price war can recoup its losses by charging supracompetitive prices. Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 \(1993\); Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\); A.A. Poultry Farms, Inc. v. Rose Acre Farms, Inc., 881 F.2d 1396 \(7th Cir. 1989\). Unless the "predator" can recoup, consumers are net beneficiaries. IIT has not achieved a dominant position in the market (ITAS remains much larger), and because rivals could freely enter if IIT drove out ITAS, recoupment would be impossible. So if IIT indeed charged less than its costs, there is no reason to get excited; IIT was giving money away to consumers rather than injuring them by curtailing [15] output and charging monopoly prices. Cf. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\) ("dangerous probability of success" is an essential element in a § 2 case). More likely it was discounting to get established in the market, also a lawful step, see Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, 3 Antitrust Law P 716 (1978), but we need not pursue the subject.

HN5 Some antitrust offenses do not depend on proof of market power. Price fixing and market allocation, for example, are illegal per se whether or not the firms have any hope of success. Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 \(1990\); FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers, 493 U.S. 411, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768 \(1990\); Blackburn v. Sweeney, 53 F.3d 825 \(7th Cir. 1995\); 15 U.S.C. § 1. Let us suppose that IIT and IIT-Illinois conspired to fix prices. How does this injure ITAS? If the IIT firms raised their price (the concern with price fixing), then ITAS would have been the beneficiary and could raise its own prices. HN6 Acts harmful to business rivals generally help consumers; this fact is the basis of the antitrust injury rule of Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\). A merger unlawful because of its tendency to increase prices [16] aids rivals; conversely, a claim by the rival of the merged firms that the merger has intensified competition shows how the rival suffers injury, but not how consumers lose. Such a rival has actual injury but does not suffer from the effect that makes the transaction unlawful under the antitrust laws and therefore, Brunswick held, cannot invoke the antitrust laws. See also Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, 1*12571 Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\); Chicago Professional Sports Limited Partnership v. National Basketball Ass'n, 961 F.2d 667, 670 \(7th Cir. 1992\); Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409 \(7th Cir. 1989\); Zinser v. Rose, 868 F.2d 938 \(7th Cir. 1989\). We know from Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\), that the antitrust injury doctrine applies with full vigor to the per se offenses. ITAS cannot show how price fixing by the two IITs injured both producers and consumers. As we held in Stamatakis, the antitrust injury doctrine KOs claims based on injury caused by defecting employees who set up rivals. This antitrust claim was stillborn, and the district judge's only error was waiting as long as she did to scotch it.

The RICO claim is more [17] substantial. The district judge granted summary judgment against ITAS because the predicate offenses, mail fraud, involved consumers rather than ITAS itself. The judge believed that indirect injury is insufficient after Holmes v. SIPC, 503 U.S. 258, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 \(1992\). 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6141, rehearing denied, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8744. Yet the Supreme Court observed, 503 U.S. at 272-73 n.20, that it did not mean to preclude all possibility of recovery for injury that was transmitted indirectly; the holding of Holmes is no more than that common law ideas about proximate causation inform the understanding of RICO. Holmes explicitly refrained from importing a theory akin to the antitrust-injury doctrine into the law of RICO. Id. at 269 n.15. Sometimes a recovery for a derivative injury would undermine RICO's own purposes, or those of other statutes; the Court gave as one illustration our holding in Mid-State Fertilizer Co. v. Exchange National Bank, 877 F.2d 1333 \(7th Cir. 1989\), that shareholders cannot use RICO to recover for injury done to their corporation. Such a process would create unnecessary complexities in apportioning recoveries, and at the same time would undermine the interest of [18] the corporation's creditors in collecting their debts. (The shareholders wanted to bypass the corporation precisely because it was insolvent, and its creditors would have reaped most of the benefit.) Holmes dealt with a similar claim, by one of a corporation's creditors rather than an equity investor. A fraudulent scheme injured the corporation and its clients, causing the Securities Investor Protection Corp. to advance money to protect the clients. The corporation had other debts--and other sources of financial distress. The Supreme Court concluded that the clients and the injured corporation were the proper plaintiffs; whatever the corporation obtained would inure to the benefit of its creditors, including SIPC, according to their priorities in bankruptcy.

Our case does not present a similar apportionment problem, and there is no risk of multiple recoveries. The "direct" victims--as the district court understood things, the readers of IIT's ads--got what they paid for and are not complaining. Holmes called for the use of common-law analogies under 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\), and there is no doubt that HN7[↑] a producer injured by a campaign of misinformation directed at its customers suffers [\[19\]](#) an injury compensable under the law of torts; it is not cut off by the proximate causation and foreseeability requirements. Prosser & Keeton on Torts at 1013-20. After giving thoughtful treatment to Holmes, the fourth circuit held in Mid Atlantic Telecom Inc. v. Long Distance Services, Inc., 18 F.3d 260 \(4th Cir. 1994\), that RICO similarly allows suits when the predicate offenses influence customers and, derivatively, injure business rivals. A conflict among the circuits on such a question would be regrettable, and we therefore accept Mid Atlantic. (The district court's alternate holding that ITAS cannot show how it relied on the misrepresentations made to its potential customers just restates the conclusion that derivative injury is never cognizable under RICO; it does not require separate analysis.)

Like a troll under the bridge, another problem lies in wait for a litigant that has come this far. HN8[↑] An entrepreneur can recover under the common law of unfair competition when a rival tells fibs to potential customers, because the rule against fraud has been crafted for the benefit of both seller [\[*1258\]](#) and customer. Can one say the same about the federal mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1341, [\[20\]](#) the only criminal predicate act in IIT's supposed "pattern of racketeering"? Only one court of appeals has addressed this question, and it answered "no." Lancaster Community Hospital v. Antelope Valley Hospital District, 940 F.2d 397, 405-06 \(9th Cir. 1991\). Lancaster Community Hospital held that HN9[↑] business rivals may not use RICO to complain about injuries derivatively caused by mail frauds perpetrated against customers, because only the customers are the beneficiaries of the statutory protection. We are no more inclined to create a conflict on this question than we were on the Mid Atlantic issue--especially not after Jepson, Inc. v. Makita Corp., 34 F.3d 1321, 1327 \(7th Cir. 1994\), indicated tentative agreement with Lancaster Community Hospital. Tentative now becomes definitive. Lancaster Community Hospital relied in part on McNally v. United States, 483 U.S. 350, 97 L. Ed. 2d 292, 107 S. Ct. 2875 \(1987\), which jettisoned the intangible rights doctrine in mail fraud cases. The ninth circuit thought that preservation of market share is an intangible right outside the scope of § 1341. Congress has reinstated the intangible rights approach, 18 U.S.C. § 1346, but we do not think that this changes anything. HN10[↑] Lost business [\[21\]](#) opportunities, the subject of both Lancaster Community Hospital and this case, are property as § 1341 used that term before the amendment. See Carpenter v. United States, 484 U.S. 19, 98 L. Ed. 2d 275, 108 S. Ct. 316 \(1987\). The essential point, rather, is that the victims of the fraud are the object of solicitude; § 1341 does not establish a regimen of truth-telling without regard to details like who is losing out and why. See United States v. Walters, 997 F.2d 1219 \(7th Cir. 1993\).

Such a limitation is common in tort law. HN11[↑] A plaintiff claiming injury by the defendant's violation of a statute must show not only that the defendant violated the law but also that the plaintiff is among the persons protected by the law. Prosser & Keeton on Torts at 225-26. Thus violation of a law requiring animals to be kept in pens on shipboard does not lead to liability if the animals are washed overboard; the function of the law was to curb disease, not to reduce the effects of storms. Gorris v. Scott, 9 Ex. 125 (1874). In federal administrative law, this principle is known as the "zone of interests" requirement. Director, OWCP v. Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 131 L. Ed. 2d 160, 115 S. Ct. 1278, 1283-84 \(1995\); Clarke v. Securities Industry [\[22\]](#) Ass'n, 479 U.S. 388, 395-96, 93 L. Ed. 2d 757, 107 S. Ct. 750 \(1987\); Association of Data Processing Service Organizations, Inc. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153, 25 L. Ed. 2d 184, 90 S. Ct. 827 \(1970\). See also Holmes, 503 U.S. at 287-88 (Scalia, J., concurring). It carries over to criminal law. For example, in determining the "loss" from IIT's ad campaign under the Sentencing Guidelines (if indeed IIT committed mail fraud, a subject we do not broach), a court would not inquire how much ITAS lost; it would ask only what the travelers lost. U.S.S.G. § 2F1.1 Application Note 7\(a\), \(c\); see also § 3D1.2 Application Note 2; United States v. Marlatt, 24 F.3d 1005 \(7th Cir. 1994\). So too with civil RICO now that Holmes has adopted commonlaw approaches to decide when RICO authorizes recovery for derivative injuries. Section

1341 does not protect vendors to persons who may be deceived, and firms suffering derivative injury from business torts therefore must continue to rely on the common law and the Lanham Act rather than resorting to RICO.

ITAS won under the common law, and it lost under the Lanham Act. The jury decided that neither IIT nor Larry Ritter had violated that statute. The verdict drains all significance from several of ITAS's arguments. Consider, [\[23\]](#) for example, the contention that Marlene Ritter should have been among the defendants at trial. Only one accusation has been leveled against her: that she told a potential customer that ITAS and IIT are the same thing. The customer related calling the IIT business number (whichs in the Ritter home) and talking with a woman. ITAS's argument depends on the fact that Marlene Ritter is the most logical woman. The district court granted summary judgment against ITAS, ruling that it had not excluded the possibility that some other woman took the call. [\[*1259\] 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6141](#), * 16-17. Yet litigants need not surmount such a hurdle. If a reasonable juror could infer that Marlene Ritter spoke with the customer, then summary judgment was inappropriate. ITAS could meet this burden by showing that IIT lacked other female call-takers. But so what? The person who was told that ITAS and IIT are the same entity took a tour with ITAS. Proof of this incident at trial therefore could not have affected the quantum of damages, and ITAS does not argue that it needs Marlene Ritter on the judgment to improve its chances of collection. As things developed at trial--including the fact that the jury heard [\[24\]](#) via deposition the tale of the customer who believes that she spoke with Marlene Ritter--the order removing her from the case was inconsequential.

So too with claims ITAS presents under the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, 815 ILCS 505/1 to 505/11a, the Illinois Deceptive Trade Practices Act, 815 ILCS 510/1 to 510/7, and the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, N.J. Rev. Stat. 56:8-1 to 56:8-20. The district court removed these from the case by summary judgment. 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6141, * 11-13, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8744, * 19-28, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 751, * 11. ITAS says that this was error. Who cares? ITAS lost under the Lanham Act. The jury therefore must have believed that IIT did not make any false statement likely to cause confusion among consumers. See 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\)\(1\). (Though commercial defamation can violate the Lanham Act, see § 1125\(a\)\(1\)\(B\), we reiterate the point that IIT has not asked for a new trial on account of inconsistent verdicts.) What would rephrasing the claims under the state laws have added? Throughout its lengthy briefs, ITAS never tackled this question. At oral argument ITAS argued that it is a little easier to prevail under the Illinois Consumer Fraud [\[25\]](#) Act than under the Lanham Act, but it did not supply details. The place for such arguments is in the briefs; it is too late to advance them for the first time on one's feet, after the other side's submissions are in. We therefore have nothing to say about the question whether the district court should have allowed claims based on these three statutes to go to the jury.

This analysis assumes, however, that the verdict on the Lanham Act stands. ITAS wants it set aside for two reasons. First, it believes that the district judge erred in preventing Toby Katz from testifying. Second, ITAS contends that the judge should have permitted Marilyn Ziemke to relate what potential customers told her on the telephone.

Katz appeared in ITAS's witness list in the final pretrial order. According to ITAS's list, Katz was one of its employees or agents. ITAS did not provide Katz's telephone number or address, and IIT did not attempt to contact her to learn what she might say. (The telephone number was in an exhibit.) Come the trial, IIT asked the judge to forbid Katz from testifying because the omission of her address violated N.D. Ill. Rule 5.00. The judge agreed and kept Katz off the stand. [1994 \[26\] U.S. Dist. LEXIS 751](#), * 7. This mechanical application of Local Rule 5.00 is untenable under Grove Fresh Distributors, Inc. v. New England Apple Products Co., 969 F.2d 552, 558-60 (7th Cir. 1992). Like many of our cases, Grove Fresh Distributors invokes the principle that HN12[] a sanction should be proportional to the wrong. See also, e.g., Okaw Drainage District v. National Distillers & Chemical Corp., 882 F.2d 1241, 1248 (7th Cir. 1989). Omission of an unimportant detail, like a misspelling of the witness's name, should not lead to the exclusion of vital evidence. The district court observed that Grove Fresh Distributors involved a rebuttal witness, while Katz was to testify in ITAS's case-in-chief. True, but irrelevant. The principle of proportionality is what matters, and it is applicable to all witnesses--and all sanctions. IIT had an opportunity to take Katz's deposition but declined; it is therefore difficult to see why Katz should have been prevented from testifying. Although IIT observes that ITAS's incorrect assertion that Katz was still ITAS's employee dissuaded IIT's lawyers from calling her phone number, the foregone opportunity to take her deposition cannot be so easily explained [\[27\]](#) away.

[*1260] ITAS believes that an error in preventing a witness from testifying entitles it to a new trial. Yet there is a harmless-error rule to reckon with. Whether the error was harmless depends on what Katz would have added to the information placed before the jury. ITAS assures us that Katz's testimony was vital. Apparently ITAS expects us to take that representation on faith, because ITAS did not make an offer of proof. Too bad for ITAS; the omission is fatal. HN13[↑] "Error may not be predicated upon a ruling which admits or excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected, and . . . in case the ruling is one excluding evidence, the substance of the evidence was made known to the court by offer or was apparent from the context". Fed. R. Evid. 103\(a\)\(2\). Beyond ITAS's assertion that Katz would have supplied "critical" testimony relevant to damages, we know nothing and therefore are in no position to conclude that the exclusion affected a substantial right. The party aggrieved by exclusion must supply details; ITAS has volunteered only rhetoric.

Ziemke's proposed testimony is less of a mystery; ITAS made a formal offer outlining the excluded testimony. Ziemke took many [28] of the calls made to ITAS's telephone number and wanted to testify that after IIT went into business she began to receive inquiries such as: "They're offering the same thing you're offering. What's the big deal?" and "Doesn't IIT have the same free bar mitzvah?" Ziemke added: "Practically every phone call that ITAS got in which people were comparing [ITAS] to IIT, every one of those people asked 'what's the big deal? They have the same thing you have.' " The district judge excluded this testimony as hearsay, a step that she conceded in post-trial proceedings had been a blunder. 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 751, * 4. ITAS offered this testimony not for its truth--to show that IIT was offering the same "free" package as ITAS--but to show that customers were confused. For that purpose it was not hearsay. Fed. R. Evid. 801\(c\). Evidence about what customers say to vendors is a staple of trademark and business tort litigation. International Kennel Club of Chicago v. Mighty Star, Inc., 846 F.2d 1079, 1089-90 (7th Cir. 1988). Nonetheless, the district judge denied ITAS's post-trial motion, explaining that the inquiries that Ziemke would have related at trial did not show consumer confusion. Instead, [29] the judge believed, they showed customers making inquiries to obtain information.

Informed by hindsight, we think that the evidence should have been admitted. The line the district judge drew is difficult to maintain. Perhaps the principal inference from the inquiries is that competition had begun. No longer the sole packager of bar mitzvah tours of Israel, ITAS started to receive inquiries by customers asking about the differences between available options. On this understanding, there is no problem under the Lanham Act. There is only competition, to be encouraged. Another possible inference, however, is that some of these customers were calling because they had been misled by the implication of the IIT ads that the two firms' "free" packages were identical. Ziemke explained the difference to those who called; but some travelers would have signed with IIT without calling. HN14[↑] Drawing inferences from ambiguous events is the province of the trier of fact, here a jury. That said, however, we do not think that the error was sufficiently grave to require a new trial. The jury was floating in evidence about IIT's representations. Jurors knew the difference between ITAS's package and IIT's [30] and were well able to determine whether consumers would have been confused. Ziemke's testimony would have added evidence in the lists on one side, but it was so much to be expected--many calls of the kind she described in the offer of proof were inevitable even if IIT's ads had included elaborate and complete narrations--that the exclusion does not require the entire trial to be redone. Not when it is so hard to see what damages the Lanham Act (or for that matter the state consumer-protection laws) could have added to the award ITAS received for defamation. Attorneys' fees maybe, but they are hardly automatic. ITAS think that it could have collected extra money for corrective advertisements, but this misunderstands the nature of such claims. See Zazu Designs, 979 F.2d at 506-07. Altogether, the probable effect on the award was sufficiently [*1261] small, and the probable effect on the outcome sufficiently problematic, that the error was harmless.

Only one issue remains: costs. The district judge ordered each side to bear its own. ITAS believes that this was an abuse of discretion because it prevailed. So it did, but only in part. It lost outright against Larry Ritter. Marlene Ritter won in [31] advance of trial. The Ritters beat back ITAS's demands and therefore have a better claim for costs--although the Ritters lost their counterclaims. ITAS peppered the judge with woebegone theories, such as the antitrust claim, and pointless ones, such as the demands under the state consumer-deception laws. These took up time and IIT's money without producing anything in return. Under the circumstances, declining to shift costs was a wise decision, certainly not an abuse of discretion. HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason Establishing a violation of the rule of reason involves three steps. Plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. If the plaintiff succeeds, the burden shifts to the defendant to establish the pro-competitive redeeming virtues of the action. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then show that the same pro-competitive effect could be achieved through an alternative means that is less restrictive of competition.

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To meet its initial burden of showing an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market, the plaintiff must show more than just that he was harmed by defendants' conduct.

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To prevail on a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claim, a plaintiff must also show more than just an adverse effect on competition among different sellers of the same product, intrabrand competition. Restrictions on intrabrand competition can actually enhance market-wide competition by fostering vertical efficiency and maintaining the desired quality of a product. Because the focus of the inquiry is the relevant market as a whole, restriction of intrabrand competition must be balanced against any increases in interbrand competition. The overarching standard is whether defendants' actions diminish overall competition, and hence consumer welfare.

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Isolated statements of preference are not a sufficient empirical demonstration concerning the adverse effect of an arrangement on price or quality to state a Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claim.

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The fact that a competitor is not permitted to compete in the market does not alone prove an adverse effect on intrabrand competition.

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The proper role of market power in the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, rule of reason analysis has been characterized differently by the various circuits. Some courts require that a plaintiff always show the defendant's market power in order to state a § 1 claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The court has not made a showing of market power a prerequisite for recovery in all Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, cases. If a plaintiff can show an actual adverse effect on competition, such as reduced output, the court does not require a further showing of market power. However, where the plaintiff is unable to demonstrate such actual effects, it must at least establish that defendants possess the requisite market power and thus the capacity to inhibit competition market-wide.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN10 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A plaintiff wishing to show adverse effect through indirect means must at least establish that defendants possess the requisite market power, meaning that a showing of market power, while necessary to show adverse effect indirectly, is not sufficient. There must be other grounds to believe that the defendant's behavior will harm competition market-wide, such as the inherent anticompetitive nature of defendant's behavior or the structure of the interbrand market. This position is consistent with the approach of courts that require a showing of market power, but only as one of several steps necessary to establish adverse effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Intent is relevant to the reasonableness inquiry, but only to help courts interpret the effects of defendants' actions. Like market power, anticompetitive intent is not by itself sufficient to meet the adverse-effect requirement. Without some evidence of an adverse impact on competition in either the interbrand or intrabrand market, the fact that customers induce a seller to refrain from dealing with another potential customer in order to limit competition does not satisfy a plaintiff's initial burden under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

[*126] WALKER, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs K.M.B. Warehouse Distributors, Inc. and KMB/CT, Inc. (together "KMB"), distributors of automotive parts, brought this action against Walker Manufacturing Company ("Walker"), a manufacturer of automobile exhaust equipment, and three distributors of Walker equipment. KMB claims that defendants' actions that were taken in order to prevent KMB from becoming a distributor of Walker products constitute a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, breach of contract, and tortious interference with contractual business relations. Plaintiffs appeal from summary judgment in favor of defendants entered in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Leonard B. Sand, District Judge). Defendants cross-appeal from the district court's denial of their motion for sanctions against KMB.

We affirm for the reasons stated below and the grounds set forth in Judge Sand's thoughtful opinion.

BACKGROUND

KMB is a distributor of automotive repair parts in the New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut "Tri-state" area. As a distributor, KMB sells its [3] products to independent auto-parts stores, also known as "jobbers." Like most distributors, KMB finds it commercially feasible to carry only one line of exhaust equipment. In 1991, KMB carried exhaust equipment made by AP Parts Marketing Company ("AP"). But, because it considered Walker exhaust systems both superior in quality and more popular with jobbers, KMB wanted to replace its AP exhaust line with Walker's.

In July of 1991, KMB first contacted Walker to arrange to carry the Walker line. In the following weeks, the two companies negotiated the details of a changeover to Walker products and scheduled the change for the week of October 20, 1991. By September, however, several Walker distributors -- competitors of KMB -- got wind of Walker's plan to supply KMB and expressed their strong disapproval. In particular, defendant Prime Automotive Parts ("Prime") met with Walker on September 20, 1991 to discuss rumors of a KMB changeover. Prime complained that KMB offered more frequent deliveries to customers and expressed concern that KMB would take business away from Prime. It warned that an arrangement between KMB and Walker might affect Prime's relationship with the latter and that [4] Prime would "have to see what happens to [its] business and act accordingly." Other distributors voiced similar concerns. Faced with this pressure, in late September Walker put KMB "on hold."

On November 15, 1991, KMB and Walker met to discuss Walker's concerns about the changeover. Possibly in anticipation of litigation, KMB recorded much of the meeting, at which Walker officers Frank Grosser and Thomas Fontana conveyed the complaints they had received from Walker distributors about KMB's sales tactics, specifically KMB's high discounts. Grosser and Fontana described Walker's existing distributors as "a fraternity" and cautioned that "people have to get along, otherwise they'll murder each other." Noting that "there's no formal way to do this because . . . it's not legal," Grosser explained to KMB that Walker was "trying to make sure there's a reasonable chance that everybody can survive and make a profit in this market." Walker then told KMB that it would not supply Walker products to KMB.

KMB filed suit in February of 1992. It claimed that Walker's decision not to supply KMB in the face of the pressure exerted by its distributors amounted to an antitrust violation, [*127] as well as [5] state law breach of contract and tortious interference with contract. By May 4, 1992, each defendant had filed a motion for summary judgment. The district court granted defendants' motions in June, 1994 and dismissed the case. Plaintiffs appealed. Defendants cross-appealed from the district court's refusal to award sanctions.

DISCUSSION

The district court granted summary judgment in defendants' favor after concluding that KMB failed to show that defendants' actions had an anticompetitive effect as required for the antitrust claim. Having dismissed the antitrust claim, the district court concluded that it lacked jurisdiction to entertain KMB's state law claims. We agree with Judge Sand's excellent opinion, K.M.B. Warehouse Distributors, Inc. v. Walker Manufacturing Co., No. 92 Civ 1167, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7253, 1994 WL 250115 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 1994), and affirm for the reasons stated therein.

I. Actual Adverse Effect on Competition

HN1[] Under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. KMB alleges that [6] defendants violated § 1 by stifling service and price competition in the Tri-state market for exhaust products. HN2[] We analyze this sort of allegedly anticompetitive practice -- a vertical conspiracy that does not involve price-fixing -according to the "rule of reason." See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 59, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\). Under this rule, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited." Id. at 49.

HN3[] Establishing a violation of the rule of reason involves three steps. "Plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market . . ." Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 543 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993). If the plaintiff succeeds, the burden shifts to the defendant to establish the "pro-competitive 'redeeming virtues'" of the action. Id. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then show that the same pro-competitive effect could be achieved through an alternative means that is less restrictive [7] of competition. Id.; Bhan v. NME Hosp., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1413 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 994, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639, 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991).

A. The Test for Proving Adverse Effect

The district court in this case concluded that KMB failed HN4[] to meet its initial burden of showing an "actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market." In order to fulfill this requirement, the plaintiff must show more than just that he was harmed by defendants' conduct. See Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126, 133-34 (2d Cir.) (That another customer of the defendant convinced the defendant to cease dealings with plaintiff did not suffice to show anti-competitive effect.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 946, 58 L. Ed. 2d 338, 99 S. Ct. 340 (1978); Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\) ("The antitrust laws . . . were enacted for 'the protection of competition not competitors.'" (citation omitted)). Therefore, that KMB may have lost a potentially lucrative contract with Walker is not sufficient to state a cognizable antitrust claim.

HN5[] To prevail on a § 1 claim, a plaintiff must also show more than just an adverse effect on competition among different sellers of the same product [8] ("intrabrand" competition), in this case Walker exhaust equipment. See Borger v. Yamaha Int'l Corp., 625 F.2d 390, 397 \(2d Cir. 1980\) (reversible error to instruct the jury to find defendant liable "solely on the basis of a purpose to restrict intrabrand competition, without any finding of either a purpose or effect related to interbrand competition"). Restrictions on intrabrand competition can actually enhance market-wide competition by fostering vertical efficiency and maintaining the desired quality [*128] of a product. See Continental T.V., 433 U.S. at 54-55 & n.23; Eiberger v. Sony Corp. of Am., 622 F.2d 1068, 1075-76 \(2d Cir. 1980\). Because the focus of our inquiry is the relevant market as a whole, restriction of intrabrand competition must be balanced against any increases in interbrand competition. Eiberger, 622 F.2d at 1076; Copy-Data Sys., Inc. v. Toshiba Am., Inc., 663 F.2d 405, 411 \(2d Cir. 1981\). The overarching standard is whether defendants' actions "diminish overall competition, and hence consumer welfare." Graphic Prods. Distrib. v. Itek Corp., 717 F.2d 1560, 1571, 1573 \(11th Cir. 1983\).

B. KMB's Evidence of Adverse Effect

We agree with [9] the district court that KMB has failed to satisfy the adverse-effect requirement. As Judge Sand noted, KMB cannot show that "the impact on intrabrand competition was anything but de minimis." KMB's proof on this point consists almost entirely of affidavits from twelve of its current customers stating that they prefer both Walker products and KMB's superior service. Such HN6[] isolated statements of preference are not a sufficient "empirical demonstration concerning the [adverse] effect of the [defendants'] arrangement on price or quality," Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 30 n.49, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984), to state a § 1 claim. See id. at 30 (finding inadequate evidence of an actual adverse effect on competition even though "the evidence indicates that some surgeons and patients preferred respondent's [anesthesiology] services").

In fact, an examination of the intrabrand market belies even KMB's assertion that intrabrand competition has been harmed. There are over twenty Walker distributors of various size in the Tri-state area. All the evidence suggests that there is a highly competitive intrabrand market in Walker products; in fact, during the pendency of this case, [10] prices for Walker products have apparently fallen and distributors' discounts have increased. HN7[] The fact that KMB was not permitted to compete in this market does not alone prove an adverse effect on intrabrand competition. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546 (§ 1 claim fails where plaintiff conceded that price would stay the same were it allowed to enter the market); Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 798-99 (2d Cir. 1994) (finding plaintiff's claim insufficient because, "from the consumers' point of view, nothing about the market had changed" even though plaintiff was not permitted to compete).

Moreover, and critical to our decision, KMB has offered no evidence of an adverse effect on the whole Tri-state interbrand exhaust-product market. The only clear effect of defendants' alleged conspiracy was to prevent KMB from carrying Walker products. After it learned that it could not join the ranks of Walker distributors, KMB continued to compete with that group by offering AP exhaust products to jobbers. KMB was able to do so -- rather successfully, in fact -- by offering superior pricing and service to counteract what it considers the higher quality of Walker parts. In this very [11] tangible sense, defendants' refusal to allow KMB to change over to Walker products tended to promote rather than curtail interbrand competition. KMB has thus failed to come forward with any evidence that defendants' actions adversely affected service, quality, or price market-wide.

C. Market Power as a Proxy for Adverse Effect

KMB argues that, even if it cannot show an actual adverse effect on competition, it can meet its initial burden under § 1 simply by showing that defendants possess sufficient market power to cause an adverse effect on competition. It then challenges the district court's conclusion that KMB's showing of Walker's market power was insufficient to survive summary judgment. We conclude that the showing of Walker's market power was insufficient in this case to satisfy KMB's burden of establishing an adverse effect on the market as a whole.

HN8[] The proper role of market power in the § 1 rule of reason analysis has been characterized differently by the various circuits. Some courts require that a plaintiff always show the defendant's market power in order [*129] to state a § 1 claim. See, e.g., Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 792 F.2d 210, [\[*12\]](#) 221 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (suggesting that a showing of market power is a strict prerequisite to recovery in all § 1 cases), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1033, 93 L. Ed. 2d 834, 107 S. Ct. 880 (1987); General Leaseways, Inc. v. National Truck Leasing Ass'n, 744 F.2d 588, 596 (7th Cir. 1984) (making such a showing a prerequisite to recovery); Graphic Products, 717 F.2d at 1568. The reasoning underlying this requirement is that unless a firm has "the ability to raise unilaterally prices and profitably maintain those prices above competitive levels and/or restrict output in the market," State of New York by Abrams v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 811 F. Supp. 848, 871 (E.D.N.Y. 1993), anticompetitive behavior will merely put the firm at a competitive disadvantage in the market as a whole and will not harm consumer welfare. Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546.

HN9[] This court has not made a showing of market power a prerequisite for recovery in all § 1 cases. If a plaintiff can show an actual adverse effect on competition, such as reduced output, FTC v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476

U.S. 447, 460-61, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 (1986), we do not require a further showing of market power. Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546. However, "where the [13] plaintiff is unable to demonstrate such actual effects" -- as KMB is unable to do here -- "it must at least establish that defendants possess the requisite market power" and thus the capacity to inhibit competition market-wide. Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546.

Market power has been defined as "the ability to raise price significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business." Graphic Prods., 717 F.2d at 1570; see also Broadway Delivery Corp. v. United Parcel Serv., 651 F.2d 122, 126-27 (2d Cir.) (defining the market power as "the power to control prices or exclude competition" in the context of a monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 968, 70 L. Ed. 2d 384, 102 S. Ct. 512 (1981). Market power may be shown by evidence of "specific conduct indicating the defendant's power to control prices or exclude competition." Id. at 130. In addition, market share may be used as a proxy for market power. See id.; Graphic Prods., 717 F.2d at 1570.

The district court held that KMB failed to establish Walker's market power. KMB did not introduce any direct evidence of Walker's ability to affect prices in the aftermarket for automotive exhaust [14] products. As to market share, KMB submitted evidence that Walker's national market share is approximately sixty percent. Its only evidence of area market share, however, consisted of answers from two deposed Walker employees agreeing that Walker's share of the area market is probably "in line" with its share of the national market.

We need not decide whether such assertions as to a defendant's share of the relevant market create a genuine issue of material fact sufficient to survive summary judgment. Even if market power were shown, it would not satisfy the adverse-effect requirement under these circumstances. When we said in Capital Imaging that HN10 [↑] a plaintiff wishing to show adverse effect through indirect means "must at least establish that defendants possess the requisite market power," Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546 (emphasis added), we meant that a showing of market power, while necessary to show adverse effect indirectly, is not sufficient. There must be other grounds to believe that the defendant's behavior will harm competition market-wide, such as the inherent anticompetitive nature of defendant's behavior or the structure of the interbrand market. [15] See Graphic Prods., 717 F.2d at 1573 (In order to show adverse impact indirectly, a plaintiff must show defendant's market power, that intrabrand competition was impeded, and that "the interbrand market structure was such that intrabrand competition was a critical source of competitive pressure on price, and hence of consumer welfare."); cf. 8 Philip Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1600d, at 10 (1986) ("The large market share of a dominant manufacturer does not itself make his restraint on intrabrand competition unreasonable."). This position is consistent with the approach of courts that require a showing of market power, but only as one of [*130] several steps necessary to establish adverse effect. See, e.g., Davis-Watkins Co. v. Service Merchandise, 686 F.2d 1190, 1202 (6th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 931 (1984).

Here, KMB has not offered adequate reasons why we should infer an adverse effect on competition simply from Walker's alleged market power. KMB has not shown that defendants' actions have had a detrimental effect even on intrabrand competition. To the contrary, the evidence suggests that intrabrand competition is healthy and that interbrand competition is even healthier. [16] We therefore conclude that, despite its efforts to prove Walker's market power, KMB has failed to show an adverse effect on competition as a whole.

D. Defendants' Anticompetitive Intent

KMB also contends that it has met the adverse-effect requirement by producing evidence of defendants' anticompetitive intent. HN11 [↑] Intent is relevant to the reasonableness inquiry, but only to "help courts interpret the effects" of defendants' actions. Anheuser-Busch, 811 F. Supp. at 874. Like market power, anticompetitive intent is not by itself sufficient to meet the adverse-effect requirement. See Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918) (noting that intent is relevant in the antitrust context, but "not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse" (emphasis added)); cf. Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 543 (citing id.). Without some evidence of an adverse impact on competition in either the interbrand or intrabrand market, the fact that customers induce a seller to refrain from dealing with another potential customer in order to limit competition does not satisfy a plaintiff's initial burden under § 1. See [17]

Oreck, 579 F.2d at 133-34 (Plaintiff failed to show anticompetitive effect even though plaintiff's competitor convinced defendant to stop selling to plaintiff.). KMB's evidence of defendants' intent, even belief that what they were doing might be unlawful, is unavailing in the absence of evidence of anti-competitive effect.

II. Jurisdiction over KMB's State Law Claims

After granting summary judgment in defendants' favor, the district court found no basis for retaining jurisdiction over KMB's state law claims. Accordingly, the district court dismissed the remaining claims without prejudice. KMB notes that the second and third claims involved only KMB, a citizen of New York and Connecticut, and Walker, a citizen of Delaware and Wisconsin, and each involved more than $ 50,000. Because diversity of citizenship provided an independent basis of jurisdiction over these claims (although not for the other state law claims), KMB contends, the district court erred in dismissing them.

KMB may be correct in claiming that, if jurisdiction over the second and third claims had been based upon diversity of citizenship, the district court would have erred in dismissing them. As a general [\[18\]](#) rule, there must be complete diversity of citizenship between all plaintiffs and all defendants named in all claims in order for jurisdiction over any claim to be based upon diversity of citizenship. See Carden v. Arkoma Assocs., 494 U.S. 185, 187, 108 L. Ed. 2d 157, 110 S. Ct. 1015 (1990); Strawbridge v. Curtiss, 7 U.S. (3 Cranch) 267, 267, 2 L. Ed. 435 (1806). In this case complete diversity between all plaintiffs and all defendants was absent since defendants Prime and Woodbury Automotive Warehouse Enterprises, Inc. ("Woodbury") and plaintiff KMB are all citizens of New York. If, however, an independent basis for jurisdiction over non-diverse defendants exists, such as federal question jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331, the district court should not dismiss the claims as to which diversity requirements have been met. Romero v. International Terminal Operating Co., 358 U.S. 354, 381, 3 L. Ed. 2d 368, 79 S. Ct. 468 (1959). The reasoning behind this exception is that plaintiffs should not be required to bring two suits in federal court solely in order to avoid destroying complete diversity. See Kauth v. Hartford Ins. Co., 852 F.2d 951, 959 (7th Cir. 1988).

This case presents a slightly different situation from that in Romero. The federal [\[19\]](#) Sherman Act claim did originally provide an [\[*131\]](#) independent basis for jurisdiction over non-diverse defendants Prime and Woodbury. But here, unlike in Romero, the district court dismissed that claim when it granted defendants' motions for summary judgment. KMB argues, however, that the claim's initial presence in the complaint provided a basis of jurisdiction over the state law claims involving Prime and Woodbury sufficient to trigger the exception articulated in Romero, and that jurisdiction cannot be defeated by the subsequent dismissal of the only basis for federal question jurisdiction. This position has apparently been adopted in the Seventh Circuit. See Kauth, 852 F.2d at 958-59 (reversing the dismissal of a claim based upon diversity jurisdiction in similar circumstances even though it affirmed the dismissal of the only claims based upon federal question jurisdiction).

We need not decide this issue in this case since KMB's argument suffers from another flaw. KMB did not actually base jurisdiction over its state law claims against Walker on diversity of citizenship in either its complaint or its argument to the district court. Rather, it premised jurisdiction solely [\[20\]](#) on supplemental jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1367. HN12 Section 1367 explicitly provides that a district court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction if it "has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction." 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3). The district court was thus well within its discretion when it dismissed KMB's state law claims.

HN13 Even though KMB did not raise diversity as a basis for jurisdiction until this appeal, we may consider its argument in order to avoid a miscarriage of justice. See C.H. Sanders Co. v. BHAP Hous. Dev. Fund Co., 903 F.2d 114, 121 (2d Cir. 1990); Republic Nat'l Bank v. Eastern Airlines, Inc., 815 F.2d 232, 240 (2d Cir. 1987). The district court dismissed KMB's remaining claims without prejudice, and KMB has not advanced any reason why being compelled to refile its second and third claims would cause a miscarriage of justice. Accordingly, we affirm the district court's dismissal of these claims.

III. Sanctions under Rule 11

Defendants cross-appeal, arguing that the district court abused its discretion when it declined to impose sanctions against KMB under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 11. HN14↑ A district court's decision [21] whether to impose sanctions should only be reversed for abuse of discretion. Rodick v. City of Schenectady, 1 F.3d 1341, 1350 \(2d Cir. 1993\). Sanctions should only be imposed if "it is patently clear that a claim has absolutely no chance of success," and all doubts should be resolved in favor of the signing attorney. Id. (quotation omitted) (reversing a district court's imposition of sanctions). We are not persuaded that KMB's arguments were so completely lacking in merit as to warrant sanctions, and we therefore affirm the district court's decision not to impose sanctions.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above and in the opinion of Judge Sand, we affirm the judgment of the district court.

The plaintiff is the master of the complaint and at liberty to choose federal or state jurisdiction. Whether plaintiffs, as representatives of a presently uncertified class, can waive any potential federal claims is an issue to consider when deciding whether the class should be certified or what class should be certified. As masters of their complaint, however, plaintiffs may choose to not avail themselves of any federal law. The question for the state court is whether, while waiving any potential federal claims, the plaintiffs will be satisfactory representatives of all the class members. Or, the matter may be considered in defining the class, so that the class would not include those wishing to assert a federal antitrust claim. The waiver of federal claims does not create a federal question.

Opinion

[*1540] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs Four Way Plant Farm, Inc., McDonald Construction Co., and Walker Logging Co., Inc., ("Plaintiffs") brought this action [*1541] in the Circuit Court for Bullock County, Alabama. They sued individually and also alleged a class action on behalf of other similarly situated Alabama employers who purchased workers' compensation insurance in Alabama since January 1, 1985.¹ [*4] In their complaint plaintiffs claimed under the antitrust law of Alabama, Ala. Code §§ 8-10-1 et. seq. and § 6-5-60, that defendants engaged in a price-fixing scheme in connection with assigned risk workers' compensation insurance. They specifically stated that they asserted no federal cause of action and that they alleged no violation of federal antitrust laws, and they explicitly waived any potential federal claims they might have.

Defendants are National Council on Compensation Insurance ("NCCI"), an insurance rating organization;² National Workers' Compensation Reinsurance Pool ("National Pool"), a name given to the group of insurance companies which have contracted together to provide insurance to the residual market and reduce the risks associated with these policies; Robert J. Maxwell, Jr., ("Maxwell") a salaried employee of NCCI, [*5] Director of Government, Consumer, and Industry Affairs for NCCI's Southern Region, and an Alabama resident; and numerous named and fictitious insurance companies doing business in Alabama.

Alabama employers employing more than three persons are required to obtain workers' compensation insurance. Three manners of obtaining such coverage exist: (1) purchase the insurance in the "voluntary" market from an insurer licensed to create such a policy, (2) purchase the [*6] insurance from the "assigned risk" or "residual" market from an insurance company which is one of the servicing carriers joined together as National Pool, or (3) self-insure if the employer meets certain prerequisites.

Plaintiffs assert that defendants have engaged in a conspiracy of price-fixing and other antitrust violations under Alabama law which artificially inflate the cost of premiums in the residual market.

Defendants removed the case to the federal district court alleging federal question jurisdiction and federal diversity jurisdiction.³ Plaintiffs filed a motion to remand the case to the state court.

[7] Defendants allege two grounds for federal question jurisdiction: plaintiffs' claim is actually federal in nature and plaintiffs have engaged in artful pleading in an effort to evade federal jurisdiction, and plaintiffs cannot waive potential federal claims when they assert representation on the part of a class, albeit a class not yet certified.

¹ Excluded from the purported class are defendants and their subsidiaries and affiliates and self-insured employers for the time periods that they were self-insured.

² Maxwell Aff. at P3 describes NCCI as follows:

NCCI is a non-profit corporation and a licensed rating organization for workers' compensation insurance. NCCI engages in rate-making related activities which assist insurers writing workers' compensation business. In Alabama, NCCI also serves as the Administrator of the Workers' Compensation Insurance Plan, the state-approved and regulated structure by which Alabama employers unable to obtain workers' compensation insurance in the voluntary market can apply for and obtain such insurance.

³  HN1 28 U.S.C. § 1441 \(1994\) states:

(a) Except as otherwise expressly provided by Act of Congress, any civil action brought in a State court of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction, may be removed by the defendant or the defendants, to the district court of the United States for the district and division embracing the place where such action is pending. For purposes of removal under this chapter, the citizenship of defendants sued under fictitious names shall be disregarded.

(b) Any civil action of which the district courts have original jurisdiction founded on a claim or right arising under the Constitution, treaties or laws of the United States shall be removable without regard to the citizenship or residence of the parties. Any other such action shall be removable only if none of the parties in interest properly joined and served as defendants is a citizen of the State in which such action is brought.

Defendants base diversity jurisdiction on two arguments: defendant Maxwell, an Alabama citizen, is fraudulently joined, and defendant National Pool, alleged by plaintiffs to be an unincorporated association with Alabama citizen members, [*1542] is not a suable entity but is merely a contractual reinsurance mechanism, thus diversity jurisdiction exists.

The court holds that there is neither federal question jurisdiction nor federal diversity jurisdiction, thus plaintiffs' motion to remand is due to be GRANTED.

MOTION TO REMAND STANDARD

HN2 [↑] The plaintiff is the master of the complaint and at liberty to choose federal or state jurisdiction. Caterpillar, Inc. v. Williams, 482 U.S. 386, 392, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318, 107 S. Ct. 2425 (1987). A defendant seeking removal has the burden of demonstrating that the district court has jurisdiction. Cabalceta [*8] v. Standard Fruit Co., 883 F.2d 1553, 1561 (11th Cir. 1989). The removal statute is interpreted strictly with remand being favored when removal jurisdiction is in doubt. Burns v. Windsor Ins. Co., 31 F.3d 1092, 1095 (11th Cir. 1994).

FEDERAL QUESTION JURISDICTION

Defendants contend that federal question jurisdiction exists because plaintiffs' claims are federal in nature in spite of the fact that the complaint specifically disavows any federal claim and restricts the plaintiffs' claims to alleged violation of state statutes. Defendants argue that plaintiffs' efforts to deny them a federal forum for what are essentially federal claims cannot succeed for two reasons discussed hereafter.

Artful Pleading

HN3 [↑] The doctrine of artful pleading, recognized by the Supreme Court in Federated Dep't Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 397 n.2, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 (1981), is a narrow exception to the rule that the plaintiff is the master of his or her complaint. Artful pleading occurs when a plaintiff, in an attempt to avoid federal jurisdiction, characterizes a claim as a state claim when the real nature of the claim is federal. The doctrine applies in two categories [*9] of cases.⁴

In the first category, plaintiff brings a cause of action in federal court and loses. The plaintiff then brings a similarly or identically worded complaint in state court. The defendant removes the case to federal court and moves for summary judgment or dismissal based on res judicata. The district court finds that removal jurisdiction exists because the "real nature" of the claim is federal. See, e.g., Federated Dep't [*10] Stores, 452 U.S. at 396-97 & n.2 (history of the case). The instant case clearly does not fall into this category since the plaintiffs have not brought their claims in federal court at any prior time.

In the second category of cases where artful pleading applies, the claim brought by plaintiff in state court is based on subject matter that is preempted by federal law. See Caterpillar, Inc., 482 U.S. at 393; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 481 U.S. 58, 63-64, 95 L. Ed. 2d 55, 107 S. Ct. 1542 (1987); King Provision Corp. v. Burger King Corp., 750 F. Supp. 501, 504 (M.D. Fla. 1990). See also Shaw v. Dow Brands, Inc., 994 F.2d 364 (7th Cir. 1993) (held that federal law preempted state law, thus removal was proper); Travelers Indem. Co. v. Sarkisian, 794 F.2d 754 (2d Cir.) (citing preemption cases as the paradigm of artful pleading), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 885, 93 L. Ed. 2d 253, 107

⁴ It has been argued that artful pleading applies whenever the plaintiff is deliberately trying to deny the defendant federal court jurisdiction. This overly broad interpretation of the exception of artful pleading directly contradicts the doctrine that the plaintiff is the master of his or her complaint and may deliberately choose to base the claims on state law. See King Provision Corp. v. Burger King Corp., 750 F. Supp. 501, 505-06 & nn.3-5 (M.D. Fla. 1990). See generally 14A Charles A. Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 3722, pp. 266-76 (2d ed. 1985).

S. Ct. 277 (1986); In re Carter, 618 F.2d 1093, 1101 (5th Cir. 1980) ("The accepted rule in this circuit is that upon removal the removal court should inspect the complaint carefully to determine whether a federal claim is necessarily presented, even if the plaintiff has [11] couched his [*1543] pleading exclusively in terms of state law."), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 949, 67 L. Ed. 2d 378, 101 S. Ct. 1410 (1981); Salveson v. Western States Bankcard Ass'n, 525 F. Supp. 566, 572-73 (N.D. Cal. 1981) ("If the subject matter of the claim has been preempted, there is no room for the assertion of a claim under state law."), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 731 F.2d 1423 (9th Cir. 1984). Compare Cheshire v. Coca-Cola Bottling Affiliated, Inc., 758 F. Supp. 1098, 1100 (D.S.C. 1990) ("Federal question [jurisdiction] does not exist simply because the subject matter of the action could give rise to a federal law claims [sic] as well as a state law claim."). Defendants here in effect argue that this case falls into this second category because, they assert, the commerce engaged in was interstate commerce, not intrastate commerce, and Alabama antitrust laws do not apply to insurance.

HN4 [↑] Defendants' argument that plaintiffs engaged in interstate commerce is a defense and does not itself create federal jurisdiction. Caterpillar, Inc., 482 U.S. at 392-93; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 481 U.S. at 63; Gully v. First Nat'l Bank, 299 U.S. 109, 113, 81 L. Ed. [12] 70, 57 S. Ct. 96 (1936) ("The controversy must be disclosed upon the face of the complaint, unaided by the answer or by the petition for removal."). See also Anzulewicz v. Bluefield Community Hosp., Inc., 531 F. Supp. 49 (S.D. W.Va. 1981) (action brought under state antitrust laws in which the court held that the issue regarding whether requested relief was available under state law was an issue the state court could decide and no artful pleading occurred). Federal antitrust laws are not intended to preempt state antitrust laws. HN5 [↑] "Unlike other federal statutory schemes that preempt state regulation, the federal antitrust laws do not impinge on the jurisdiction of state courts to adjudicate claims asserted under state antitrust laws." Salveson, 525 F. Supp. at 574. See also California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 103-06, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 (1989) (antitrust regulation is not exclusively within the federal domain); Cheshire, 758 F. Supp. at 1100 (Congress does not intend to occupy the area of antitrust exclusively); King Provision Corp., 750 F. Supp. at 504 (the area of antitrust is not preempted by federal law). Compare Caterpillar, Inc., [13] 482 U.S. at 393-94 (citing ERISA and LMRA as examples of federal preemption).

Whether the Alabama antitrust statutes do not include insurance within the definition of "commerce," as is alleged by the defendants, is an issue the Alabama court can decide. "Plaintiff has deliberately chosen to rely upon state law and remedies provided [by state law]; if by doing so plaintiff cannot avail himself of a remedy arguably available under federal law, then so be it." Anzulewicz, 531 F. Supp. at 51. This question alone does not create federal jurisdiction. See id. at 53 (HN6 [↑]) "Federal question jurisdiction cannot exist when the basic issues require interpretations of state statutory and constitutional provisions."). See also Caterpillar, Inc., 482 U.S. at 392-93; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 481 U.S. at 63; Gully, 299 U.S. at 113.

Contrary to defendants' contentions, the doctrine of artful pleading is not broader than the two exceptions listed above. Defendants rely heavily upon In re Wiring Device Antitrust Litigation, 498 F. Supp. 79 (E.D.N.Y. 1980), declaring it to be directly on point. However, the case is distinguishable. First, the district court held that federal [14] diversity jurisdiction existed, therefore its discussion of whether federal question jurisdiction existed is arguably mere dicta. Second, more than thirty other cases alleging the same price-fixing scheme were brought in federal court pursuant to the federal antitrust laws. In the instant case, there have been no prior claims brought in federal court. See also King Provision, 750 F. Supp. at 506 n.5. Likewise, the other cases relied upon by defendants either fall into one of the two [*1544] exceptions⁵ [15] or are distinguishable.⁶

⁵ Federated Dep't Stores, 452 U.S. 394, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 (brought state claims following the dismissal of federal claims); Burda v. M. Ecker Co., 954 F.2d 434, 438 (7th Cir. 1992) (district court relied on federal preemption; court of appeals relied on failure of plaintiff to state facts indicating federal jurisdiction); Villarreal v. Brown Express, Inc., 529 F.2d 1219 (5th Cir. 1976) (plaintiff brought state claims based on allegedly converted evidence arising from the same nucleus of facts following the settlement of the federal claims; "the proper avenue of redress for a party seeking relief from a [federal] judgment claiming fraud as grounds for relief is under Fed.R.Civ.P. 60(b)(3)."); Kahn v. Salomon Bros. Inc., 813 F. Supp. 191 (E.D.N.Y. 1993) (federal law was a necessary element in deciding the claim, and another suit based on federal law had been brought by another plaintiff in federal court on the same nucleus of facts).

[16] This is simply a case of plaintiffs choosing to limit their theory of recovery to a claim under state law. They have a right to do so. If their only possible claim is actually federal, that does not mean that they will recover in state court on a federal claim; it means that they will lose their lawsuit. The court finds that federal question jurisdiction is not established under the theory of artful pleading.

Waiver of Federal Claims by Purported Class Representatives

Defendants' contention that federal jurisdiction can be grounded on plaintiffs' waiver of any federal claims is without merit. HNT [↑] Whether plaintiffs, as representatives of a presently uncertified class, can waive any potential federal claims is an issue to consider when deciding whether the class should be certified or what class should be certified. As masters of their complaint, however, plaintiffs may choose to not avail themselves of any federal law. The question for the state court is whether, while waiving any potential federal claims, the plaintiffs will be satisfactory representatives of all the class members. Or, the matter may be considered in defining the class, so that the class would not include those [17] wishing to assert a federal antitrust claim. The waiver of federal claims does not create a federal question. Cf. In re Romulus Community Schs., 729 F.2d 431 \(6th Cir. 1984\) (in a class action lawsuit, following the removal of the case by defendants and a motion by plaintiffs to strike the federal claim from the complaint and remand the case, the district court granted plaintiffs' motion without prejudice; writ of mandamus denied and appeal of withdrawal of federal claim dismissed).⁷

[18] FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION

Plaintiffs, who are citizens of Alabama, contend that diversity does not exist because defendant Maxwell is also an Alabama citizen and because some companies which are members of National Pool are citizens of Alabama.

[*1545] Defendants allege that the non-diverse defendants do not defeat federal jurisdiction. First, they contend that Maxwell, the Director of Government, Consumer, and Industry Affairs for NCCI's Southern Region, is a nominal party who is fraudulently joined. Second, they contend that National Pool is a contractual reimbursement mechanism, not an unincorporated association as plaintiffs allege. In order to establish federal diversity jurisdiction, defendants must show both that Maxwell is fraudulently joined and that National Pool is incorrectly deemed an unincorporated association.

The court finds that National Pool is an unincorporated association under Florida law and can be sued in its name under Alabama law. Thus pursuant to federal law, in which diversity jurisdiction involving an unincorporated

Co.*, 1979-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P62,423 \(D.S.C. 1978\)](#) (facts alleged by the plaintiffs were almost identical to the facts in the consolidated complaint filed in federal court in accordance with multidistrict litigation, and the complaint alleged interstate commerce), rev'd on other grds., 609 F.2d 112 \(4th Cir. 1979\), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 911 \(1980\). Supp. at 1295-96](#). The case has been criticized with its own circuit. See Corporate Travel Consultants, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 799 F. Supp. 58, 60 n.1 \(N.D. Ill. 1992\) ("This court does not believe that it would be wise to adopt the broad rule stated by the district court in Mechanical Rubber."). The court finds Mechanical Rubber to be unpersuasive.

⁷ The remand in In re Romulus was not based on § 1441 or § 1447, but rather the district court followed United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 \(1966\), and held that in accordance with its discretion the court would remand the state claims to the state court following the dismissal of the sole federal claim. Additionally, the district court allowed the withdrawal of the federal claim without notice to the class members because the class was not yet certified "and may never be . . ." association is based on the residency of the members, and because National Pool has member corporations incorporated and with their [19] principal places of business in Alabama,⁸ federal diversity jurisdiction is defeated. Therefore, the court will not examine the fraudulent joinder contention made by defendants regarding defendant Maxwell.

National Pool

Plaintiffs assert that National Pool is an unincorporated association. HN8[[↑]] In a suit based on diversity jurisdiction where the unincorporated association is sued as an entity, an unincorporated association has citizenship in any state in which one of its members has citizenship. See 7C Charles A. Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 1861, p. 217 (1986). Defendants argue that National Pool is a contractual reinsurance mechanism and not any type of legal entity, essentially averring that the members of National Pool have entered into a contract for their own benefits which they refer to as the National Workers' Compensation Reinsurance Pool.

HN9[[↑]] An unincorporated association has been defined as a group of persons acting together to prosecute [20] a common purpose or enterprise. Black's Law Dictionary 121 (6th ed. 1990) (one of several definitions of "association"; citing [Penrod Drilling Co. v. [22] Florida statutes do not define an unincorporated association and the court has [*1546] found no case law defining the term. Florida Jurisprudence defines an association as "a collection of persons who have joined together for a common objective or purpose" and states, "An unincorporated association is generally created and formed by the voluntary action of a number of individuals in associating themselves together under a common name for the accomplishment of some lawful purpose." 4 Fla. Jur. 2d Associations & Clubs §§ 1 & 2 (1994). 894 F. Supp. 1538, *1546 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10988, 22

F.2d 481 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1033, [23] 88 L. Ed. 2d 575, 106 S. Ct. 596 (1985); Delta Coal Program v. Libman, 554 F. Supp. 684, 686 n.1 (N.D. Ga. 1982), aff'd, 743 F.2d 852 (11th Cir. 1984); California Clippers, 314 F. Supp. at 1068; see also Black's Law Dictionary at 121 (one of several definitions of association which "An unincorporated society;" and cites Penrod Drilling). The court therefore will apply the common law definition of unincorporated association.

Under this definition, the court finds that National Pool is an unincorporated association.

The insurance companies participating in National Pool execute a document, Articles of Agreement, which states:

Whereas, the undersigned parties hereto . . . are engaged in the business of insuring liability under workers compensation acts . . . ; and

Whereas, in addition to being participating companies they are also members of Workers Compensation Insurance Plans . . . that are in effect in various states . . . ; and

* * * *

Whereas, it is desired that the premiums, losses, costs and expenses arising under certain policies issued pursuant to the Insurance Plans are covered by these Articles of Agreement be equitably distributed [24] by means of reinsuring the policies among the participating companies so as to avoid undue loss to any one of the participating companies . . . ;

We therefore, for the purpose of reinsuring such policies with such participating companies, and for the protection of each such participating company from extraordinary hazards incident to the issuance of such policies, the undersigned participating companies hereby subscribe to, become parties to, and adopt these Articles of Agreement.

Vieweg Aff., exh. A (Articles of Agreement, as amended effective January 1, 1993). In addition to the purpose described in the above quoted preamble, the Articles have a separate section titled "Purpose and Limitations" which also describes the purpose of the organization. Art. II. The Articles of Agreement delineate the procedure for electing a Board of Governors which manages and controls the operations and business of the National Pool except for those powers reserved for the Administrator. Id. at Art. V. In turn, the Board of Governors elects a Chair and Executive Vice-Chair. Id. The participating companies hold annual meetings, and the Chair of the Board of Governors has the power [25] to call additional meetings. Id. at Art. IV. The National Pool is not an informal, transitory group, but rather an organized, structured group existing for the purpose of reinsuring its members against excessive losses from workers' compensation insurance policies.

National Pool, through its Articles of Agreement, has been in existence at least since 1970. Vieweg Dep. at 24. It collects the premiums due to the participating carriers and distributes the monies quarterly. Although it uses a bank account established through NCCI and the monies collected from the Alabama carriers are mingled with the monies collected from other pools, National Pool maintains an accounting system whereby it accounts for its balance. Vieweg Dep. [*1547] at 33-36, 66. The participating carriers of National Pool reimburse NCCI for expenses it incurs during the administration of National Pool. Vieweg Dep. at 30. National Pool does not have its own mailing address, but can be reached by writing to National Pool in care of NCCI. Vieweg Dep. at 54.

In California Clippers, the district court determined that the group at issue was not an unincorporated association, noting that the group had no charter, no bylaws, [26] no articles, no office, no place of business, no mailing address, no bank account, no assets, and no obligations. 314 F. Supp. at 1068. The court stated, "We have only the most informal and transitory of organizations. . . . In fact, it appears that this committee has never even met." Id.

In Project Basic Tenants Union, the court found that the union, which lacked structure and had no elected officers, no bylaws, no budget, and no set membership, was an unincorporated association because the union had a distinct purpose and acted towards meeting that purpose. 636 F. Supp. at 1458. The court stated, "Associations that are not actual assemblages of people, but rather are amorphous and attenuated groups or the most informal or transitory of organizations, have been held not to constitute unincorporated associations." Id. (quotation marks and citation omitted). See also Committee for Idaho's High Desert, 881 F. Supp. at 1463, 1469 (holding the Committee was an unincorporated association "comprised of a voluntary group of individuals who have formed and joined together over the years for the purpose of prosecuting [an environmental] common interest enterprise.").

Defendants [27] rely on the intention of the participating carriers of National Pool and Roby v. Corporation of Lloyd's, 796 F. Supp. 103 (S.D.N.Y. 1992), aff'd, 996 F.2d 1353 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, U.S. , 114 S. Ct. 385 (1993), to support their contention that National Pool is not an unincorporated association. They point out that there was a change in the Articles of Agreement in 1991 to delete the designation of National Pool as an unincorporated association. The court notes, however, that no basic change was made in the organization or operation of National Pool which, until then, had been referred to by its members as an unincorporated association. The intention of National Pool, however, is irrelevant. If the group fits the definition of an unincorporated association, then it is an unincorporated association. California Clippers, 314 F. Supp. at 1068 (the title the group gives itself is not determinative of whether the group is an unincorporated association); Rosen, 133 F. Supp. at 867 (same). Roby is distinguishable.

In Roby investors in Lloyd's of London brought an action against Lloyd's syndicates, "groups of insurers-investors which are [28] organized for the purpose of assuming insurance risks[,]" alleging violations of federal securities laws and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. Id. at 103-04. The court examined the law of England where the syndicates were "created" and held that the syndicates were not legal entities and could only be sued by proceeding against all the members or against a representative member or members. Id. at 105-06.

Alternatively, applying New York law, the court concluded the same outcome would be reached based on legal precedent for that court and the New York statutory definition of unincorporated associations. Id. at 107. New York case law defines an unincorporated association as "an organization composed of a body of persons united without a charter for the prosecution of some common enterprise." Meinhart v. Contresta, 194 N.Y.S. 593, 594 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1922); see also Heifetz v. Rockaway Point Volunteer Fire Dep't, 124 N.Y.S.2d 257, 260 (N.Y. Sup. Ct.), aff'd, 282 A.D. 1062, 126 N.Y.S.2d 604 (N.Y. App. Div. 1953). HN11¹¹ The unincorporated association is not a legal entity separate from its members. Heifetz, 124 N.Y.S.2d at 260. However, § 13 [29] of the New York statutes, which mandates the proper procedure for maintaining an action against an unincorporated association, states in part:

An action or special proceeding may be maintained, against the president or treasurer of such an association, to recover any property, or upon any cause of action, for or upon which the plaintiff may maintain such an action or special proceeding, [*1548] against all the associates, by reason of their interest or ownership, or claim of ownership therein, either jointly or in common, or their liability therefor, either jointly or severally. Any partnership, or other company of persons, which has a president or treasurer, is deemed an association within the meaning of this section.

N.Y. Gen'l Ass'n Law § 13 (McKinney 1995) (emphasis added); see also Bobe v. Lloyd's, 27 F.2d 340, 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1927), aff'd per curiam, 27 F.2d 347 (2d Cir. 1928) (quoted language of § 13 the same). Section 13 relaxed the common law rule which required service of process on all of the members of the association. Crystal v. Board of Educ. of the City Sch. Dist. of the City of Long Beach, 87 Misc. 2d 632, 385 N.Y.S.2d 701, 703 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1976). [30]

The court in Roby relied on the prior decision concerning Lloyd's syndicates which held that the syndicates were not unincorporated associations pursuant to § 13 of the General Associations Law. Roby, 796 F. Supp. at 107 (citing Bobe, 27 F.2d at 345). The issue in Bobe was whether service of process had been obtained by serving the Lloyd's corporation as the alleged treasurer of the two syndicates, both alleged to be unincorporated associations. 27 F.2d at 341. The court held that the syndicates were not unincorporated associations "within the meaning of section 13 of the General Associations Law of the state of New York[.]" id. at 345, and that Lloyd's was not the treasurer for the two syndicates, id. at 346.

Florida law has not liberalized the common law rules of service on an unincorporated association, see Florio v. State, 119 So. 2d 305, 309 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1960), thus there is no Florida equivalent to New York's § 13.

Pursuant to the only definition of unincorporated association in use in Florida, i.e., the broad, common law definition used in this circuit, National Pool is an unincorporated association.¹¹

[31] Although the court decides that National Pool is an unincorporated association, the issue remains whether it is subject to suit in its name. To determine whether an unincorporated association is subject to suit, the court examines the law of the forum state.

At common law, unincorporated associations were not legal entities subject to suit. Actions against an unincorporated association had to name the individual members as defendants and serve process upon each member. This common law rule is not in effect in Alabama. Alabama Rules of Civil Procedure provide for service of an unincorporated association "by serving it in its entity name by certified mail at any of its usual places of business or by serving an officer or agent of any such organization or association or an officer or agent of any branch or local of such organization or association" Rule 4(c)(8) (Supp. 1993). See also Ala. Code §§ 6-7-80 to -81 (1993) (actions may be commenced by or against any unincorporated association or organization in its name). Cf. Petrol Shipping Corp. v. Kingdom of Greece, Ministry of Commerce, Purchase Directorate, 360 F.2d 103, 108 n.1 (2d Cir.) (in New York, an association [32] may not be sued in the association's name, but may be sued in the name of the president or treasurer), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 931, 17 L. Ed. 2d 213, 87 S. Ct. 291 (1966). Therefore, defendant National Pool, an unincorporated association, can be sued and served with process in the name of the association.

"For purposes of diversity jurisdiction, an unincorporated association is said to have no citizenship of its own. Thus, if suit is brought by or against an association as an entity or by or against its individual members, [*1549] the organization's citizenship is deemed to be the same as that of its members." 7C Wright et al., § 1861 at 217; see also 28 U.S.C. § 1332. Among the members of National Pool are corporations incorporated in Alabama and with their principal places of business in Alabama. Plaintiffs also are residents of Alabama. Therefore, diversity jurisdiction is destroyed.

CONCLUSION

There is no federal question jurisdiction on the face of the complaint. While defendants raise questions regarding whether plaintiffs have a valid state claim, they do not meet their burden of proving that plaintiffs engaged in artful pleading.

Defendant National Pool is an unincorporated [33] association and accordingly is a resident of every state where its members are residents. Because National Pool has members which are incorporated in Alabama and have their principal places of business in Alabama, defendant National Pool defeats federal diversity jurisdiction.

It is unnecessary to reach the contention that Maxwell was fraudulently joined, since there would be no diversity jurisdiction even if the court agreed.

Plaintiffs' motion to remand is GRANTED, and it is hereby ORDERED that this case is remanded to the Circuit Court for Bullock County, Alabama. The clerk is DIRECTED to take appropriate action to effect the remand.

DONE this 25th day of July, 1995.

W. HAROLD ALBRITTON

¹¹ If Alabama law is considered controlling, the outcome would be the same. The court has found neither a statutory definition nor a case law definition of unincorporated association in Alabama. From this, the court infers that the common law definition remains in effect. See, e.g., Gulf South Conference v. Boyd, 369 So. 2d 553, 555 (Ala. 1979) (the Gulf South Conference is an unincorporated association composed of nine colleges and universities with a stated purpose and a self-imposed government of rules, bylaws, and a constitution); League of Women Voters v. Renfro, 292 Ala. 128, 290 So. 2d 167, 168 (Ala. 1974) ("[The League of Women Voters] is a non-profit, unincorporated association, the general purpose of which is to promote political responsibility."). National Pool is an unincorporated association under the common law definition.

The doctrine of antitrust standing is somewhat different from standing as a constitutional doctrine. Harm to an antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether a plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action.

A court evaluates a number of factors on a case-by-case basis to determine whether a particular plaintiff is a proper party to bring an antitrust action. The factors which favor a finding that a plaintiff is a proper party include the following: (1) the existence of an antitrust violation with resulting harm to a plaintiff; (2) an injury of a type which the antitrust laws were designed to redress; (3) a direct causal connection between the asserted injury and the alleged restraint of trade; (4) the absence of more direct victims so that the denial of standing would leave a significant antitrust violation unremedied; and (5) the lack of a potential for double recovery.

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

After sustaining defendant's demurrer, the trial court entered a judgment dismissing a former employee's suit against his former employer for alleged monopolistic practices. Plaintiff had owned and operated a recycling business. Defendant acquired the business, plaintiff became an employee, and defendant later fired him. Plaintiff sued defendant on the basis that its acquisitions and predatory price competition with competing businesses created a monopoly in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.). (Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, No. 957805, William J. Cahill, Judge.).

The Court of Appeal affirmed. The court held that plaintiff had no standing to sue defendant under the Cartwright Act. The employee could not sue for his loss of a recycling corporation that the employer acquired from him. Even if the employee were the sole shareholder of the corporation, the remedy for the injury rested with the corporation instead of the shareholder to avoid a double recovery by each of them. Also, the employee could not sue for his lost job because the loss of a job was not the type of loss the antitrust law was intended to forestall. He did not allege employment boycott or that he was so essential to the monopolistic scheme that his firing was itself an anticompetitive act. There were competitors and consumers allegedly injured by the employer's predatory price competition and acquisition of market power who could remedy any antitrust violations. The employee's only remedy was a wrongful termination action. (Opinion by Dossee, J., with Strankman, P. J., and Newsom, J., concurring.)

[*1813] [338] DOSSEE, J.

In this antitrust action the sole question presented for our review is whether plaintiff has standing to sue his employer for alleged monopolistic practices. We conclude he does not, and we affirm the judgment of dismissal.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiff Leonard G. Vinci owned and operated a recycling business, Vinci Enterprises, Inc., which was in competition with Oakland Scavenger Company. In 1986 Vinci Enterprises sued Oakland Scavenger for alleged anticompetitive practices. Oakland Scavenger was eventually acquired by defendant Waste Management, Inc. The lawsuit between Vinci Enterprises and Oakland Scavenger was settled in 1989, and under the terms of the settlement agreement, Oakland [2] Scavenger's successor, Waste Management, agreed to provide Vinci Enterprises with quality materials for its recycling operation.

At some unspecified time thereafter, Waste Management took over the operation of the 77th Avenue facility which had been operated by Vinci Enterprises. As part of that acquisition, plaintiff was employed by Waste Management, but on December 2, 1992, he was fired.

More than a year later, on January 12, 1994, plaintiff filed the present lawsuit against Waste Management alleging, among other things, wrongful termination, breach of the settlement agreement, and anticompetitive practices in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.).

Waste Management demurred to the complaint. Waste Management argued that plaintiff's claim for wrongful termination was barred by the one-year statute of limitations and that plaintiff was not a proper party to sue either for breach of the settlement agreement or for antitrust violations. The trial court agreed with Waste Management and sustained the demurrer. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment of dismissal.

On appeal plaintiff does not dispute that the statute of limitations had expired on his [3] claim for wrongful termination. Nor does he challenge the trial court's conclusion that plaintiff, as an individual, has no standing to sue for breach of the settlement agreement entered into between Waste Management and Vinci Enterprises, Inc. Plaintiff's argument on appeal is confined to the question whether plaintiff has standing to sue under the Cartwright Act.

[*1814] DISCUSSION

HN1 [↑] The Cartwright Act prohibits combinations in restraint of trade. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720.) Under the act, HN2 [↑] "[a]ny person who is injured in his or her business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter, may sue therefor . . ." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16750, subd. \(a\).)

HN3 [↑] In interpreting similar language in the federal antitrust law, the United States Supreme Court observed that the doctrine of antitrust standing is somewhat different from standing as a constitutional doctrine. "Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action." ([Associated General Contractors \[4\] v. Carpenters \(1983\) 459 U.S. 519, 535, fn. 31 \[74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 736-737, 103 S. Ct. 897\]](#).) The court recognized that "contradictory and inconsistent results" had been reached in prior cases due to the absence of a precise test to determine antitrust standing. ([Id. at p. 536, fn. 33 \[74 L. Ed. 2d at p. 737\]](#).) However, the court declared that the infinite variety of claims that may arise make it virtually impossible to announce a black-letter rule that would dictate the result in every case. ([Id. at p. 536 \[74 L. Ed. 2d at p. 737\]](#).) Instead, HN4 [↑] the court set out a number of factors to be evaluated on a case-by-case basis to determine whether a particular plaintiff is a proper party to bring an antitrust action. ([Id. at pp. 537-544 \[74 L. Ed. 2d at pp. 737-742\]](#)).¹

[5] [339] CA(1) [↑] (1) The factors identified by the court which favor a finding that the plaintiff is a proper party include the following: (1) the existence of an antitrust violation with resulting harm to the plaintiff; (2) an injury of a type which the antitrust laws were designed to redress;² (3) a direct causal connection between the asserted injury and the alleged restraint of trade; (4) the absence of more direct victims so that the denial of standing would leave a significant antitrust violation unremedied; and (5) the lack of a potential for double recovery. ([459 U.S. at pp. 537-544 \[74 L. Ed. 2d at pp. 737-744\]](#).)

¹ Because the Cartwright Act has objectives identical to the federal antitrust acts, the California courts look to cases construing the federal antitrust laws for guidance in interpreting the Cartwright Act. ([Blank v. Kirwan \(1985\) 39 Cal. 3d 311, 320 \[216 Cal.Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58\]](#); [Partee v. San Diego Chargers Football Co. \(1983\) 34 Cal. 3d 378, 382 \[194 Cal.Rptr. 367, 668 P.2d 674\]](#), cert. den. [466 U.S. 904 \[80 L. Ed. 2d 153, 104 S. Ct. 1678\]](#); [Mailand v. Burckle \(1978\) 20 Cal. 3d 367, 376 \[143 Cal.Rptr. 1, 572 P.2d 1142\]](#).)

² Waste Management relies almost exclusively upon this factor, articulated by the Supreme Court in [Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc. \(1977\) 429 U.S. 477, 489 \[50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 712-713, 97 S. Ct. 690\]](#). Yet, in Associated General Contractors the Supreme Court clarified that the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury is but one of several factors to be considered.

[*1815] [6] CA(2)[↑] (2) In the present case, plaintiff alleges that Waste Management has been attempting to monopolize the business of garbage collection and recycling in the San Francisco Bay Area by acquiring its competitors and by engaging in predatory practices designed to injure or destroy its competitors. Plaintiff alleges two distinct forms of injury: (1) the loss of his recycling business and (2) the loss of his job with Waste Management. We analyze them separately.

(1) Loss of Recycling Business

The complaint alleges that in 1989 and 1990, after the previous lawsuit was settled, Waste Management breached the settlement agreement by depriving Vinci Enterprises, Inc., of the quality material needed to operate its recycling business. It did so by enlisting other recycling haulers to take accounts from Waste Management (presumably accounts that Vinci Enterprises wanted for itself), by refusing to deliver certain accounts to Vinci Enterprises, by intercepting and diverting materials destined for Vinci's recycling facility, and by procrastinating in procuring a lucrative account promised to Vinci Enterprises.

The complaint does not reveal the exact relationship between plaintiff and Vinci Enterprises, [7] Inc., but even if we read into the complaint an allegation that plaintiff was sole shareholder of the corporation, we conclude that plaintiff lacks standing to sue. The party directly injured by Waste Management's conduct was not plaintiff, an individual, but Vinci Enterprises, Inc., a corporation. The remedy lies with the corporation, not the shareholder, even if the injured shareholder is the sole shareholder. (Solinger v. A & M Records, Inc. \(9th Cir. 1983\) 718 F.2d 298, 299; Stein v. United Artists Corp. \(9th Cir. 1982\) 691 F.2d 885, 896; Sherman v. British Leyland Motors, Ltd. \(9th Cir. 1979\) 601 F.2d 429, 439.) In fact, to allow a shareholder to sue on his own behalf would run the risk of double recovery--once to the shareholder and once to the corporation. (See Stein, supra, 691 F.2d at p. 897.)

(2) Loss of Job

The complaint alleges that Waste Management tried to put out of business one Richard Valle, who was engaged in a joint venture with Waste Management. Further, the complaint alleges that in September 1992 Waste Management sought to engage in predatory price competition with Norcal, Inc., which held the garbage contract for San Francisco, in order [8] to damage Norcal so that Waste Management could acquire the company at a distress price. Finally, the complaint alleges that as an employee of Waste Management, plaintiff refused to participate in these anticompetitive practices, [*1816] although ordered to do so by his superiors at Waste Management, and he was fired as a result.

It is clear from the complaint that at the time plaintiff lost his job plaintiff was neither a consumer nor a competitor in the market in which trade was restrained. Plaintiff was an employee. The injury he suffered, the loss of his job, was not the type of loss the antitrust statute was intended to forestall. (Fallis v. Pendleton Woolen Mills, 3401 Inc. \(6th Cir. 1989\) 866 F.2d 209, 211; Feeney v. Chamberlain Mfg. Corp. \(5th Cir. 1987\) 831 F.2d 93, 96; Program Engineering v. Triangle Publications \(9th Cir. 1980\) 634 F.2d 1188, 1191; Solinger v. A & M Records, Inc. \(9th Cir. 1978\) 586 F.2d 1304, 1311, cert. den. 441 U.S. 908 [60 L. Ed. 2d 377, 99 S. Ct. 1999].) It did not result from Waste Management's acquisition of market power. (In re Industrial Gas Antitrust Litigation \(7th Cir. 1982\) 681 F.2d 514, 519, cert. den. [9] 460 U.S. 1016 [75 L. Ed. 2d 487, 103 S. Ct. 1261].)

Moreover, the alleged targets of Waste Management's anticompetitive scheme, Richard Valle and Norcal, are the normal parties to remedy any antitrust violations. Plaintiff's remedy for his own injury is a wrongful termination action. Plaintiff cannot resurrect that time-barred cause of action by framing his lawsuit as an antitrust claim. We hold that plaintiff is not a proper party to bring an action for antitrust violations by his employer.³

³ In light of our decision we find it unnecessary to reach the argument raised in Waste Management's supplemental brief that plaintiff is collaterally estopped from proceeding with his state court action because his lawsuit filed in federal court was dismissed. The requests for judicial notice of the federal court proceedings are denied.

We are not persuaded otherwise by Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., Inc. \(9th Cir. 1984\) 740 F.2d 739. In that case the court held that an employee could sue his employer and [10] other conspirators after he was fired for refusing to participate in a price-fixing conspiracy and was boycotted from employment by all the conspirators.

Ostrofe is distinguishable, as the trial court here correctly found. First, the plaintiff in Ostrofe suffered direct injury as the victim of a horizontal boycott. (740 F.2d at p. 742; see Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc. \(9th Cir. 1985\) 772 F.2d 1467, 1470, fn. 4.) Further, he was an essential participant in the price-fixing scheme, which could not have succeeded without his active participation. Thus, his discharge was an integral part of the anticompetitive conduct. (Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., Inc., supra, 740 F.2d at pp. 745-746.) And, finally, because Ostrofe was a necessary part of the conspiracy, there was no one else with as strong an incentive to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement. (Id. at p. 746.) The antitrust violation would have gone unremedied if the plaintiff had been denied standing. (Id. at p. 747.)

[*1817] In the present case, in contrast, plaintiff has made no allegations to bring him within the Ostrofe case. He has not alleged any employment boycott. [11] Nor has he alleged that he was so essential to the anticompetitive scheme that his discharge was itself an anticompetitive act. And, as we have discussed, direct victims do exist who could remedy the antitrust violations. In subsequent cases, even from the Ninth Circuit, Ostrofe has been limited to its unique facts. (See Lucas v. Bechtel Corp. \(9th Cir. 1986\) 800 F.2d 839, 846; Exhibitors' Service, Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema \(9th Cir. 1986\) 788 F.2d 574, 580.) We decline to extend it further.

The judgment of dismissal is affirmed.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires that there be a contract, combination or conspiracy between the manufacturer and other distributors in order to establish a violation. 15 U.S.C. § 1. Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. The manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. A distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination. Acquiescence because of fear of termination does not create an agreement.

ORDER ON DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS

This is a lawsuit against Western Auto Supply by a terminated dealer. Count IV invokes section 1 of the federal Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Counts V and VI are state law claims under, respectively, the Missouri antitrust statute, V.A.M.S. § 416.031, and the Maine antitrust statute, 10 M.R.S.A. § 1101. Western Auto Supply has moved to dismiss the antitrust counts. The parties agree that the disposition of Counts V and VI is controlled by the disposition of Count IV. For the reasons that follow, I GRANT the defendant's motion and dismiss Counts IV, V and VI.

HN1[] Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act prohibits any "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" in restraint of trade. The plaintiff's complaint alleges no such contract, combination or conspiracy. Instead, it asserts unilateral [*2] action by the defendant Western Auto Supply in setting prices and terminating the plaintiff's dealership. That omission is the essential basis of Western Auto Supply's motion to dismiss. The plaintiff responds by pointing to P 23 of his complaint where he states that he "acceded to Western Auto's demands that he set retail prices at their specified levels." In other words, the plaintiff does not dispute that an agreement is necessary, but maintains that his acceding is enough.

As support for his contention that his acceding to Western Auto's demand is a sufficient contract, combination or conspiracy upon which to sue, the plaintiff cites footnote 6 of [Albrecht v. HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires that there be a 'contract, combination . . . or conspiracy' between the manufacturer and other distributors in order to establish a violation. 15 U.S.C. § 1. Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. Under Colgate, the manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. And a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination.

465 U.S. at 760 (emphasis supplied). See also 7 Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1451d,e at 127, 128 (1986) ("acquiescence because of fear of termination does not create an agreement"). The Filco case, 709 F.2d 1257 (9th Cir. 1983), preceded Monsanto, 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), and therefore [*4] is no longer persuasive authority. Caribe BMW, 19 F.3d 745 (1st Cir. 1994), assumes that acquiescence by the plaintiff to a manufacturer's price setting is enough, but that was not the issue confronting the court. There is no indication in Caribe BMW that the First Circuit had Monsanto brought to its attention.

I conclude, therefore, that as a result of the Supreme Court's decision in Monsanto the complaint is deficient in failing to allege a contract, combination or conspiracy as required by section 1 of the Sherman Act. Since the parties agree that Maine and Missouri antitrust law follow the Sherman Act, it is hereby ORDERED that Counts IV, V and VI are DISMISSED.

The requirement that a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce be involved in a tying arrangement makes no reference to the scope of any particular market or to the share of that market foreclosed by the tie. An analysis of market shares might become relevant if it were alleged that an apparently small dollar-volume of business actually represented a substantial part of the sales for which competitors were bidding. But normally the controlling consideration is simply whether a total amount of business, substantial enough in terms of dollar-volume so as not to be merely de minimis, is foreclosed to competitors by the tie.

HN9 Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Under the plain language of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade is required to establish a violation of § 1. The "contract" requirement is satisfied in tie-in cases by the coerced sales contract for the tied item. A showing that the buyer of the tied product was coerced by the tying arrangement into making the purchase is sufficient to show that the buyer was not merely "acting independently."

[*1422] OPINION

BEEZER, Circuit Judge:

We consider whether a tying arrangement foreclosing a single customer can ever affect a "not insubstantial" volume of commerce and so be illegal per se under the Sherman Act, § 1 \(15 U.S.C. § 1\). Datagate, Inc. appeals the district court's order granting summary judgment in favor of Hewlett-Packard Company. ("HP") on Datagate's claim that HP imposed illegal tying arrangements on its customers. The district court held that Datagate had presented evidence sufficient to establish a material issue [2] of fact as to only a single tying arrangement, affecting one customer, and that this was insufficient as a matter of law to affect a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce under Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 16, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). We have jurisdiction over Datagate's timely appeal, 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and we reverse.

Datagate is an independent service organization ("ISO") which engages in the maintenance [*1423] and repair of HP computer equipment ("hardware service"). HP competes with Datagate and other ISOs in the market for the provision of hardware service. HP also provides support services for the proprietary operating systems and applications software which are necessary to operate its computer equipment ("software service"). The provision of software service requires the use of HP's proprietary materials.

Datagate sued HP alleging numerous violations of the antitrust laws arising from HP's conduct in the hardware service market. The district court granted summary judgment for HP on all Datagate's claims. We affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded. Datagate, Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 941 F.2d 864 \(9th Cir. 1991\) ("Datagate I"), cert. [3] denied, 503 U.S. 984 (1992). We remanded two of Datagate's claims to the district court: One alleging that HP had illegally imposed tying arrangements on its customers, in violation of the Sherman Act, § 1, by refusing to provide software service unless the customers also purchased hardware service from HP, and a second claim for injunctive relief under the Clayton Act, § 16 (15 U.S.C. § 26).

On remand, Datagate abandoned the claim for injunctive relief. HP again moved for summary judgment on the tie-in claim, and Datagate requested and received two continuances for further discovery on that claim. For the purposes of the summary judgment motion, the parties entered into the following stipulation: "assuming arguendo the existence of separate markets for software service and hardware service for HP minicomputers, defendant [HP] had market power in the tying product (software service) and there was a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product (hardware service)." The district court then granted summary judgment for HP.

The district court determined that the uncontested evidence in the record was sufficient to create a triable issue of fact as to whether HP had imposed [4] a tying arrangement on Rockwell International ("Rockwell"), one of its customers. The court further determined that Datagate's evidence failed to establish a triable issue of fact as to the existence of any additional tying arrangements allegedly imposed by HP. Quoting from Jefferson Parish, the district court held that a tying arrangement imposed on only a single customer was insufficient as a matter of law to support Datagate's tie-in claim: "If only a single purchaser were 'forced' with respect to the purchase of a tied item, the resultant impact on competition would not be sufficient to warrant the concern of antitrust law." HN1[] We review de novo the district court's order granting summary judgment. Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1432 \(9th Cir. 1995\).

The district court interpreted Jefferson Parish to mean that, as a matter of law, a tying arrangement imposed on a single customer is always de minimis, and not of concern to the antitrust laws. The district court read Jefferson Parish too broadly.

HN2[] A tying arrangement is a device used by a competitor with market [5] power in one market (for the "tying" product) to extend its market power into an entirely distinct market (for the "tied" product). To accomplish this, the competitor agrees to sell the tying product (here software service) only on the condition that its customers also purchase the tied product (in this case hardware service). The competitor thus uses its market power in the tying product to coerce the customer into purchasing the tied product. This is one of the few practices that the Supreme Court has determined to be illegal per se under the Sherman Act, § 1. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 9-10.

HN3[] Three elements must be satisfied to establish that a tying arrangement is illegal per se: (1) a tie-in between two products or services sold in different markets, (2) market power in the tying product, and (3) the tying [1424] arrangement affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce. Bhan v. NME Hosps. Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1411 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 994, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639, 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991). For the purposes of the summary judgment motion, the parties unquestionably stipulated to the second element: HP's market power in the tying product.

The parties dispute exactly which of the other [6] elements is at issue in this appeal. Datagate argues that the third element is at issue: whether a "not insubstantial" volume of commerce was affected by HP's single alleged tying arrangement. While continuing to press its argument under Jefferson Parish, HP contends that the parties stipulated to the third element, and that the Jefferson Parish analysis either goes to the first element of whether HP imposed a tie-in at all, or creates a fourth requirement of multiple tying arrangements.

First, the parties did not stipulate to the third element. Although the district court stated that the parties stipulated that "a tying arrangement imposed by HP would affect a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market," that is not what the parties' stipulation says. The parties simply stipulated that there was a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market, not that any tie-in by HP would affect a substantial volume. At oral argument, HP declined to concede that any tying arrangement it might have imposed would have affected a not insubstantial amount of commerce. Thus, the parties' stipulation establishes only the second element.

Second, the crucial language from Jefferson [7] Parish goes to the "not insubstantial" requirement, rather than bearing in some way on the first element, or creating an entirely new element, as HP urges. The dispositive issue in Jefferson Parish was whether the defendant had market power, and thus whether it could effectively impose a tying arrangement. See 466 U.S. at 26. The "single purchaser" language relied upon by the district court and HP appeared in a section of the opinion discussing the background of per se liability for tie-ins:

Of course, as a threshold matter there must be a substantial potential for impact on competition in order to justify per se condemnation. If only a single purchaser were "forced" with respect to the purchase of a tied item, the resultant impact on competition would not be sufficient to warrant the concern of antitrust law. It is for this reason that we have refused to condemn tying arrangements unless a substantial volume of commerce is foreclosed thereby. (citing cases)

Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16. One of the cases the Court cited in the above passage was Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 501-02, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 (1969) ("Fortner I"^{8}). The cited pages from Fortner I concern only the meaning of the "not insubstantial" requirement. Id. In context, it cannot seriously be questioned that the Jefferson Parish Court was discussing the same requirement.

We must determine whether Datagate brought forth enough evidence to create a disputed issue of material fact regarding the first and third elements.

Whichever element is involved, HP argues that a tying arrangement foreclosing only one purchaser can never be per se illegal. Construing HP's argument to be that a tying arrangement affecting only a single purchaser is insubstantial as a matter of law, we disagree.

We agree with Datagate that the Supreme Court did not intend the above-quoted language from Jefferson Parish to create a "single purchaser" rule of general applicability. The Court's statement must be read in conjunction with the facts of the case, which involved the market for anesthesiology services. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 22. The foreclosure of a single purchaser in that market (i.e. one patient in a single surgical procedure) would involve only several hundred dollars. Again, the Court's citation to Fortner ^{9} I is helpful. In that case, the Court explained at some length ^{10} [*1425] the meaning of the "not insubstantial" requirement:

HN4[↑] The requirement that a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce be involved makes no reference to the scope of any particular market or to the share of that market foreclosed by the tie An analysis of market shares might become relevant if it were alleged that an apparently small dollar-volume of business actually represented a substantial part of the sales for which competitors were bidding. But normally the controlling consideration is simply whether a total amount of business, substantial enough in terms of dollar-volume so as not to be merely de minimis, is foreclosed to competitors by the tie

Fortner I, 394 U.S. at 501. Read with reference to Fortner I, the Court's statement in Jefferson Parish means simply that, on the facts of that case, where a single purchaser represented neither a substantial dollar-volume nor a substantial portion of the relevant market, the foreclosure of a single sale would be de minimis.

A broader reading of the Court's statement would be unwarranted, and would lead to aberrant results. Under ^{10} HP's interpretation, a tying arrangement forcing a single sale worth millions of dollars would be perfectly legal, while an identical arrangement forcing multiple sales worth many times less would be subject to per se condemnation. We do not believe this is the rule that the Court intended.

HP's reliance on Digidyne Corp. v. Data General Corp., 734 F.2d 1336 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 473 U.S. 908, 87 L. Ed. 2d 657, 105 S. Ct. 3534 (1985) is misplaced. That case did not hold, as HP states, that Jefferson Parish imposed a threshold "single purchaser" rule. The issue decided by Digidyne was whether the "not insubstantial" element included a requirement that a substantial portion of the market in the tied product be affected. See id. at 1341. Relying on the above-quoted passage from Fortner I, we concluded that such a showing was not required. Id. It was undisputed in Digidyne that multiple purchasers were involved; that case is not controlling here.

The remainder of HP's argument on this issue, analogizing to cases involving antitrust standing, misses the point.¹ HP contends that the "single purchaser" rule is required in order to ensure that only tie-ins with substantial anticompetitive ^{11} effects in the relevant market are proscribed. Such is not the law. The foundational principle of per se antitrust liability is that some acts are considered so inherently anticompetitive that no examination of their impact on the market as a whole is required. See Fortner I, 394 U.S. at 501. HN5[↑] The requirement in the cases that a tie-in must be more than de minimis should be rigorously distinguished from any supposed requirement that an otherwise per se illegal tying arrangement must have a substantial impact on any given market in order to be actionable. See Digidyne, 734 F.2d at 1341.

[12] We hold that Jefferson Parish does not impose a "multiple purchaser" requirement of general applicability. The "not insubstantial" requirement can be satisfied by the foreclosure of a single purchaser, so long as the purchaser represents a "not insubstantial" dollar-volume of sales.

IV

Applying this rule to the evidence in the record, we conclude Datagate has brought forth enough evidence that Rockwell represented a "not insubstantial" dollar-volume of hardware service sales to survive summary judgment.

In opposition to summary judgment, Datagate submitted the declaration of its president that the Rockwell hardware service contract at issue was worth approximately $ 100,000 per year. HP does not argue that this dollar-volume is insubstantial, concentrating instead on its single purchaser theory.

[*1426] This amount is sufficient. See Moore v. James H. Matthews & Co., 550 F.2d 1207, 1216 \(9th Cir. 1977\) ("The 'not insubstantial' test has been met by showing dollar volumes which total $ 60,800, and estimated sales of $ 86,376." (citations omitted)). Even adjusting these holdings for inflation, a dollar volume of $ 100,000 per year for an unspecified number of years would [13] hardly be de minimis.

HP argues that the evidence in the record is insufficient to establish even the single Rockwell tying arrangement. We disagree. It is common ground that, HN7[↑] on summary judgment, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1432.

HN8[↑] The "essential characteristic" of a per se illegal tying arrangement is that the seller makes use of its market power in the tying product to coerce the buyer to purchase the tied product. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12-13; see also Datagate I, 941 F.2d at 870 (seller must have "coerced to some extent the purchaser into buying the tied product." (citation omitted)).

Datagate submitted to the district court the deposition testimony of Robert Buckner, a Rockwell employee responsible for the procurement of hardware services on HP equipment owned by Rockwell. Buckner testified that, in late 1985 or early 1986, he spoke to two HP employees who told him that HP would not provide software service if Rockwell purchased hardware service from a third party. Buckner also testified, when asked what "impact" HP's refusal to provide software service would have on Datagate's [14] ability to win Rockwell's hardware service contract, that "[Rockwell] could not afford to do without our software maintenance." Finally, Datagate's president declared that Datagate's prices for hardware maintenance were significantly below HP's.

Read in the light most favorable to Datagate, this uncontested evidence is sufficient to establish a disputed issue of material fact as to whether HP imposed a coercive tying arrangement on Rockwell. It can readily be inferred from Buckner's testimony that HP's threat to withhold software service precluded Rockwell from considering other providers of hardware service. Buckner's testimony also indicates that, although he had reservations, he was interested in purchasing hardware service from a provider other than HP until he learned that HP would refuse to provide software service. Finally, the fact that Datagate's prices for hardware service were lower than HP's supports the inference that HP's threats to some extent coerced Rockwell into making a purchase from HP it would not have made on the open market. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14-15 (explaining that the primary harm from tying arrangements is the impairment of competition [15] on the merits in the market for the tied product).

HP argues that the allegation in Datagate's complaint that HP "retreated" from its tie-in position constitutes an admission which undermines Datagate's claim. HP is incorrect. That HP eventually stopped tying software services to the purchase of hardware services does not defeat any claim Datagate may have against HP based on purchases foreclosed during the period HP allegedly did have a tie-in policy. For the same reason, HP is not helped by Buckner's deposition testimony that, several months after two HP employees told him of the tie-in policy and Rockwell entered a hardware service contract with HP, a different HP employee told him that there was no such policy. That testimony is consistent with a change in HP policy, after the tying arrangement had already coerced Rockwell into purchasing hardware services from HP.

HP argues that Datagate failed to present sufficient evidence of a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" to survive summary judgment under Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\). HP misconstrues the application of Monsanto to tie-in cases. HP is correct that, HN9 under Monsanto [16] and the plain language of the Sherman Act, a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" in restraint of trade is required to establish a violation of § 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1; Monsanto, I*1427 465 U.S. at 761. What HP fails to recognize is that the "contract" requirement is satisfied in tie-in cases by the coerced sales contract for the tied item. See Trans Sport, Inc. v. Starter Sportswear, Inc., 964 F.2d 186, 191-92 \(2d Cir. 1992\) ("A tying arrangement is 'an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product.'") (citations omitted, emphasis added). A showing that the buyer of the tied product was coerced by the tying arrangement into making the purchase is sufficient to show that the buyer was not merely "acting independently." See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764.

This is illustrated by the Fourth Circuit's decision in Service & Training, Inc. v. Data General Corp., 963 F.2d 680 \(4th Cir. 1992\), upon which HP relies. In that case, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant computer manufacturer's policy of licensing diagnostic software only to users that serviced their own equipment was an illegal [17] tie-in between the software and repair services. Id. at 682-83. The court cited extensively to Monsanto in holding that the plaintiff had not made out a tie-in claim. Id. at 685-86. However, the court's holding was founded on its determination that there was no evidence that the defendant had ever conditioned the sale of the software upon the purchase of its repair services. Id. at 686. In other words, the defendant had never forced anyone to buy the tied product. What Monsanto requires is evidence of a coerced agreement to purchase the tied product. See id. at 685 & n.11. Datagate has brought forth sufficient evidence of such a tie-in to survive summary judgment.
