The first RFQ was issued in February 2007, and the delivery award was given to SBLLC, as were the awards issued pursuant to numerous subsequent RFQs. GMA alleges that SBLLC's bids in response to these RFQs were part of a course of predatory conduct designed to drive GMA out of the ULCANS market, and that each bid was below SBLLC's average total cost and average variable cost. See id., ¶ 46. Specifically, GMA alleges that SBLLC made the following below cost bids:

- In response to a February 2007 RFQ, SBLLC bid for delivery of 29,531 WRS [*6] kits at a price of $749.62 per kit, below SBLLC's average total cost of $829.09 and average variable cost of $785.04. See id., ¶¶ 47-48, 93.

- In March 2007, SBLLC bid for deliver of Case Carry Screen Systems for DRS ULCANS at a price of $9.45 per unit, an 84% reduction in the price it charged in 2004, and well below even the raw material costs incurred by GMA in producing the Case Carry Screen Systems. See id., ¶¶ 50-52.

- In response to a December 2008 RFQ for delivery of 6,576 DRS ULCANS, SBLLC offered a bid price of $749.69 per kit, below its average total cost of $907.29 and average variable cost of $798.42. See id., ¶¶ 57, 96.

- In response to a March 2009 RFQ for delivery of 4,232 DRS ULCANS, SBLLC submitted a bid price of $704.39 per kit, above its average variable cost of $666.50 but below its average total cost of $757.38. See id., ¶¶ 60, 98.

- In response to June 2009 RFQ for delivery of 13,100 WRS ULCANS, SBLLC submitted a bid price of $684.47 per kit, slightly above its average variable cost of $684.10 but below its average total cost of $777.38. See id., ¶¶ 62, 97.

- In response to a July 2009 RFQ for 7,986 DRS ULCANS, SBLLC bid a price of $689.19 per kit, above its average [*7] variable cost of $666.50 but below its average total cost of $757.38. See id., ¶¶ 64, 98.

- In response to an August 2009 RFQ for 12,700 WRS ULCANS, SBLLC submitted a bid of $646.38 per kit, below its average variable cost of $684.10 and its average total cost of $777.38. See id., ¶¶ 66, 97.

- In response to an August 2009 RFQ for 6,575 DRS ULCANS, SBLLC offered a bid of $676.52 per kit, above its average variable cost of $666.50 but below its average total cost of $757.38. See id., ¶¶ 68, 98.

- In response to an August 2009 RFQ for 9,082 WRS ULCANS, SBLLC submitted a bid estimated to be $632.14 per kit, below its average variable cost of $684.10 and its average total cost of $777.38. See id., ¶¶ 70, 97.

- In response to an October 2009 RFQ for 9,845 DRS ULCANS, SBLLC submitted a bid of $648.80 per kit, below average variable cost of $666.50 and its average total cost of $757.38. See id., ¶¶ 72, 98. [2]

In each instance, SBLLC's bid was lower than that of GMA and SBLLC was awarded the order. GMA alleges, however, that had SBLLC bid at or above its costs, GMA would have won the order. GMA further alleges that Ken

[2] The cost figures alleged by GMA are based on its analysis of financial documents obtained from the "Barracuda Business Unit" of Saab AB, audited financial documents of Saab Barracuda AB obtained from the Swedish government, and publicly available data about SBLLC's sales to CECOM, the United States Marine Corps, and other governmental entities. See Amended Compl., ¶¶ 86-88.

Oscar, Chairman of SBLLC, told GMA representatives in March 2007 that because [*8] SBLLC had made a significant amount of money on its prior ULCANS contracts which was in a United States holding company, SBLLC could simply drop its prices and drive GMA out of business. See id., ¶ 49. In addition, in response to SBLLC's inability to meet its delivery requirements, GMA requested that CECOM issue split delivery orders. CECOM advised GMA that split awards were not permitted by the 2006 contract, and that fact had been communicated to SBLLC. See id., ¶ 53-55, 59. GMA alleges that by 2009, SBLLC had captured 72.3% of the market for WRS and DRS ULCANS kits through its predatory pricing, and that had SBLLC not engaged in this conduct it would have received approximately $69 million in delivery orders, resulting in $22.7 million for overhead and profit. See id., ¶¶ 75-76.

GMA filed its complaint on May [*9] 21, 2010, asserting claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization (Count II) under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. GMA filed its amended complaint on March 9, 2011, adding substantially more factual allegations. GMA has also refined its legal claims, dropping its monopolization claim and asserting only attempted monopolization under § 2 (Count I), as well as a state law claim for tortious interference with a business relationship or expectancy (Count II). The matter is currently before the Court on SBLLC's motion to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), filed on April 22, 2011. SBLLC argues that GMA's attempted monopolization claim fails as a matter of law because GMA has failed to state a plausible claim for relief by alleging sufficient facts to show that (a) SBLLC possesses a dangerous probability of attaining monopoly power; (b) SBLLC had a reasonable expectation of recouping its past investment in below cost bids by charging monopoly prices to the U.S. Army; or (c) GMA suffered an antitrust injury. With respect to the tortious interference claim, SBLLC argues that the claim fails as a matter of law because (a) GMA has made no allegations [*10] of malice, (b) the allegations of fraudulent conduct fail to satisfy the heightened pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), and (c) the allegations of illegality fail because the antitrust claims (upon which the illegality allegations are based) fail. Finally, SBLLC argues that GMA's allegations that SBLLC made baseless complaints to government entitles that GMA violated securities or procurement laws fail to support either an attempted monopolization or tortious interference claim, because such activities are not actionable under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. GMA filed its response on May 27, 2011. It argues that, accepting the allegations of the amended complaint as true, it has sufficiently alleged that SBLLC had a dangerous probability of attaining monopoly power, SBLLC could recoup its loses, that it suffered antitrust injury, and the elements of a tortious interference claim. SBLLC filed a reply on June 17, 2011.

B. Legal Standard

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted is provided for in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In order for a court to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim, it must appear beyond doubt that the party [*11] asserting the claim can prove no set of facts supporting his claim that would entitle him to relief. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). The party asserting the claim is not required to specifically set out the facts upon which he or she bases his claim. Id. at 47. Rather, "a short and plain statement of the claim" pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) gives the opposing party fair notice of the claim and the grounds upon which it rests. See Conley, 355 U.S. at 47. However, as the Supreme Court has recently explained, bare legal conclusions need not be accepted by the Court, and a pleading must contain sufficient factual allegations to show that the allegations are plausible:

> Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2), a pleading must contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." As the Court held in [Bell Atlantic Corp. v.] Twombly , 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 [(2007)], the pleading standard Rule 8 announces does not require "detailed factual allegations," but it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation. Id., at 555 (citing Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)). A pleading that offers "labels [*12] and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." 550 U.S., at 555. Nor does a complaint suffice if it tenders "naked assertion[s]" devoid of "further factual enhancement." Id., at 557.
> To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id., at 570. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Id., at 556. The plausibility standard is not akin to a "probability requirement," but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Ibid. Where a complaint pleads facts that are "merely consistent with" a defendant's liability, it "stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of 'entitlement to relief.'" Id., at 557 (brackets omitted).

Two working principles underlie our decision in Twombly. First, the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions. Threadbare recitals of the [*13] elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice. Id., at 555 (Although for the purposes of a motion to dismiss we must take all of the factual allegations in the complaint as true, we "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation" (internal quotation marks omitted)). Rule 8 marks a notable and generous departure from the hyper-technical, code-pleading regime of a prior era, but it does not unlock the doors of discovery for a plaintiff armed with nothing more than conclusions. Second, only a complaint that states a plausible claim for relief survives a motion to dismiss. Id., at 556. Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will . . . be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense. But where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged-but it has not "show[n]"-"that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 8(a)(2).

In keeping with these principles a court considering a motion to dismiss can choose to begin by identifying [*14] pleadings that, because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth. While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations. When there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief.

Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949-50, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (parallel citations omitted). [3]

To the extent that GMA's claims are premised upon, or require a showing of, fraudulent conduct on the part of SBLLC, such allegations must satisfy the heightened pleading requirement of Rule 9(b), which provides that "[i]n alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). To satisfy Rule 9(b), a complaint must "(1) specify the statements that the plaintiff contends were fraudulent, (2) identify the speaker, (3) state where and when the statements were made, and (4) explain why the statements were fraudulent." Frank v. Dana Corp., 547 F.3d 564, 569-70 (6th Cir. 2008) [*16] (internal quotation omitted).

C. Attempted Monopolization Claim

1. Attempted Monopolization under Section 2 Generally

"Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to 'monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations.'" Pacific Bell Telephone Co. v. Linkline Communications, Inc., 555 U.S. 438, 447, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 2). Liability under § 2 is not premised merely on the existence

[3] A court can only decide a Rule 12(b)(6) motion on the basis of the pleadings; if the court considers matters outside the pleadings, the court must convert the motion into one for summary judgment under Rule 56. See Kostrzewa v. City of Troy, 247 F.3d 633, 643-44 (6th Cir. 2001); Weiner v. Klais & Co., 108 F.3d 86, 88 (6th Cir. 1997). Although the parties have attached some matters outside the pleadings, the parties both argue the matter solely as one relating to the sufficiency of plaintiff's amended complaint, not to the existence or lack thereof of any genuine issues of material fact. Thus, in the analysis which follows I consider only the allegations of the complaint under the Rule 12(b)(6) standard, and do not consider the [*15] documents submitted by the parties. Accordingly, the Court need not consider defendants' motion as one for summary judgment under Rule 56. See Hayden v. County of Nassau, 180 F.3d 42, 54 (2d Cir. 1999) ("Where . . . the court simply refers to supplementary material [in its recitation of the factual background of the case], but does not rely on them or use them as a basis for its decision, the 12(b)(6) motion is not converted into a motion for summary judgment."); cf. Little Gem Life Servs., LLC v. Orphan Medical, Inc., 537 F.3d 913, 916 (8th Cir. 2008).

of monopoly power. As the Court explained in Pacific Bell, "[s]imply possessing monopoly power and charging monopoly prices does not violate § 2; rather, the statute targets 'the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.'" Id. at 447-48 (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)); see also, Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004). Thus, to establish a claim of attempted monopolization under § 2, a plaintiff must allege and prove "(1) that the defendant [*17] has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993).

One way in which an antitrust plaintiff may establish the first element is by showing that the defendant engaged in a practice of predatory pricing, that is, offering "Below-cost prices that drive rivals out of the market and allow the monopolist to raise its prices later and recoup its losses." Pacific Bell, 555 U.S. at 448. "In a typical predatory-pricing scheme, the predator reduces the sale price of its product (its output) to below cost, hoping to drive competitors out of business. Then, with competition vanquished, the predator raises output prices to a supracompetitive level." Weyerhaeuser Co. v. Ross-Simmons Hardwood Lumber Co., 549 U.S. 312, 318, 127 S. Ct. 1069, 166 L. Ed. 2d 911 (2007) (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 584-85 n.8, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)). In order for a predatory pricing "scheme to make economic sense, the losses suffered from pricing goods below cost must be recouped (with interest) during the supracompetitive-pricing stage of the scheme." Id. Thus, the Supreme [*18] Court has "established two prerequisites to recovery on claims of predatory pricing." Id. "'First, a plaintiff seeking to establish competitive injury resulting from a rival's low prices must prove that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs." Id. (quoting Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 222, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993)). This showing is required, the Court explained, because "'as a general rule, the exclusionary effect of prices above a relevant measure of cost either reflects the lower cost structure of the alleged predator, and so represents competition on the merits, or is beyond the practical ability of a judicial tribunal to control,'" and because courts must be "particularly wary of allowing recovery for above-cost price cutting" which would "perversely, 'chill legitimate price cutting' which directly benefits consumers." Id. at 319 (quoting Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 223-24). Second, to establish a predatory pricing claim, "a plaintiff must demonstrate that 'the competitor had . . . a dangerous probabilit[y] of recouping its investment in below-cost prices.'" Id. at 318-19 (quoting Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 224) (alteration [*19] by Court). This element is necessary, the Court explained, because "without a dangerous probability or recoupment, it is highly unlikely that a firm would engage in predatory pricing." Id. The Supreme Court has described these two prerequisites to a predatory pricing claim as "'essential components of real market injury' that [are] 'not easy to establish.'" Id. at 320 (quoting Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 226). The Court has also cautioned courts to analyze predatory pricing claims rigorously, explaining that "the costs of erroneous findings of predatory-pricing liability [are] quite high because 'the mechanism by which a firm engages in predatory pricing—lowering prices—is the same mechanism by which a firm stimulates competition,' and, therefore, mistaken findings of liability would 'chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect.'" Id. (quoting Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 226) (in turn quoting Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 122 n.17, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986)).

Finally, because "[t]the antitrust laws are intended to protect competition, not competitors," Conwood Co., L.P. v. United States Tobacco Co., 290 F.3d 768, 788 (6th Cir. 2002); see also, Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962), [*20] to recover damages an antitrust plaintiff "'must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.'" Conwood Co., 290 F.3d at 788 (quoting Valley Prods. Co., Inc. v. Landmark, a Division of Hospitality Franchise Sys., Inc., 128 F.3d 398, 402 (6th Cir. 1997)). More specifically, "to recover damages, an 'antitrust plaintiff must show (1) that the alleged violation tends to reduce competition in some market and (2) that the plaintiff's injury would result from a decrease in that competition rather than from some other consequence of the defendant's actions.'" Id. (quoting Valley Prods. Co., 128 F.3d at 402); see also, Kentucky Speedway, LLC v. National Ass'n of Stock Car Auto Racing, 588 F.3d 908, 920 (6th Cir. 2009) (citing Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990); Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)).

2. Analysis

a. Predatory Pricing

SBLLC argues that the amended complaint fails to state an attempted monopolization claim for two reasons. First, SBLLC argues that with respect to its alleged predatory conduct [*21] under the first element, the complaint fails to allege sufficient facts to establish the second prerequisite of a predatory pricing claim—that it reasonably expected to recoup its costs through supracompetitive pricing. Second, SBLLC argues that the amended complaint fails to allege sufficient facts to establish the third element of an attempted monopolization claim—that there was a dangerous probability of SBLLC achieving monopoly power. Finally, SBLLC argues that plaintiff's complaint fails to sufficiently allege antitrust injury. Because the facts alleged by plaintiff fail make a plausible showing of a dangerous probability of recoupment through supracompetitive pricing under Twombly, the Court should grant defendant's motion to dismiss.

As the allegations of the amended complaint establish, the market for ULCANS is a single-buyer market. The federal government is essentially a monopsonist—the buyer-side mirror image of a monopolist. The parties have not cited, nor have I found, any cases addressing predatory pricing claims in which the market for the predatorily priced products consists of a single monopsony buyer. Nor have the commentators appeared to address this unique situation. [*22] As the Supreme Court explained in Brooke Group, however, it is not enough to merely show that the predatory scheme would drive the plaintiff out of business, or that prices would rise following the plaintiff's exit from the market. Rather,

> [t]he plaintiff must demonstrate that there is a likelihood that the predatory scheme alleged would cause a rise in prices above a competitive level that would be sufficient to compensate for the amounts expended on the predation, including the time value of the money invested in it. As we have observed on a prior occasion, "[i]n order to recoup their losses, [predators] must obtain enough market power to set higher than competitive prices, and then must sustain those prices long enough to earn in excess profits what they earlier gave up in below-cost prices."

Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 225-26 (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 590-91); see also, id. at 231-32 ("[T]he success of any predatory scheme depends on maintaining monopoly power for long enough both to recoup the predator's losses and to harvest some additional gain."). "Determining whether recoupment of predatory losses is likely requires an estimate of the cost of the alleged predation and a [*23] close analysis of both the scheme alleged by the plaintiff and the structure and conditions of the relevant market." Id. at 226. Although the courts have not considered the precise circumstances present here, several facts about the structure and conditions of the ULCANS market compel the conclusion that the facts alleged in the complaint fail to make a plausible claim that there was a dangerous probability that SBLLC could recoup its losses from the predatory pricing by later charging supracompetitive prices over a sufficiently long period of time. [4]

[4] At the outset, I note that GMA is wrong in suggesting that it need only allege that SBLLC "had 'a reasonable expectation of recovery in the form of later monopoly profits, more than the losses suffered' to defeat the motion." Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Resp., at 11 (quoting Spirit Airlines v. Northwest Airlines, Inc., 431 F.3d 917, 948 (6th Cir. 2005)). The Sixth Circuit's quotation, however, is merely in its general description of the prerequisites for a predatory pricing claim, which may be brought either under the Robinson-Patman Act (alleging primary line price discrimination) or under § 2 of the Sherman Act (alleging monopolization or [*24] attempted monopolization). The former is governed by the "reasonable possibility" standard, while the latter is governed by the "dangerous probability standard," a point the Court made clear in Brooke Group and reiterated in subsequent cases. See Pacific Bell, 555 U.S. at 451; Weyerhaeuser Co., 549 U.S. at 319; Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 222 (quotations omitted) ("There are, to be sure, differences between the two statutes. For example, we interpret § 2 of the Sherman Act to condemn predatory pricing when it poses a dangerous probability of actual monopolization, whereas the Robinson-Patman Act requires only that there be a reasonable possibility of substantial injury to competition before its protections are triggered."); id. at 224 ("The second prerequisite to holding a competitor liable under the antitrust laws for charging low prices is a demonstration that the competitor had a reasonable prospect, or, under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a dangerous probability, of recouping its investment in

First, because the market for ULCANS [*25] consists of a single purchaser—the United States Army—there is not a dangerous probability that SBLLC will be able to charge a supracompetitive price. Even assuming that SBLLC achieved monopoly power, it would result in the market for ULCANS being a bilateral monopoly—a monopoly supplier dealing with a monopsony purchaser. In such a situation, neither the monopoly supplier nor the monopsony purchaser can exercise monopoly power to set prices, because the other party can simply walk away from the transaction. The resulting price depends upon the bargaining power of the parties, and although generally it is above the perfectly competitive equilibrium price, it is well below the monopoly equilibrium price. See Laura Alexander, Note, Monopsony & the Consumer Harm Standard, 95 Geo. L.J. 1611, 1620 (2007) (citing ROGER D. BLAIR & JEFFREY L. HARRISON, MONOPSONY 113-16 (1993)). This may create an antitrust problem when the monopsony buyer is not the ultimate consumer—the monopsony buyer in such a case is likely a monopoly supplier in the downstream market, the customers of whom end up paying a price higher than the competitive equilibrium price. In a case such as this, however, where the buyer [*26] is the ultimate consumer, the monopoly supplier will not be able to extract a supracompetitive price to recoup its investment in the below-cost pricing. Cf. Einer Elhauge, Defining Better Monopolization Standards, 56 Stanford L. Rev. 253, 283-84 (2003) (explaining that predatory pricing works only in markets with multiple, intermediate buyers who are not the ultimate consumers, because "[i]f there were only one buyer who was the ultimate consumer of the monopoly product, that buyer wouldn't agree to buy from a firm that engaged in such exclusionary tactics. Such a unitary consumer would compare the same short-term benefits and long-term costs that the monopolist is considering in reverse, and say 'no thanks.'"); Roger D. Blair & Jill Boylston Herndon, Physician Cooperative Bargaining Ventures: An Economic Analysis, 71 ANTITRUST L.J. 989, 1006 (2004) (in a bilateral monopoly, "the buyer and seller cannot simultaneously try to exploit their respective market power."). This is particularly so where, as here, the buyer has substantial bargaining power. Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Tenet Health Care Corp., 186 F.3d 1045, 1054 (8th Cir. 1999) (noting, in another antitrust context, that [*27] "large, sophisticated . . . buyers can and do resist price increases).

Second, the terms of the 2006 contract support the conclusion that SBLLC would not be able to charge a supracompetitive price. As the amended complaint alleges, the ULCANS sold under the 2006 contract are subject to a ceiling price, limiting the price that SBLLC could charge even in the absence of any competition on specific bids from GMA. GMA argues that this ceiling price is what makes recoupment possible, because SBLLC's ceiling price is substantially above its costs. This, however, is not the relevant inquiry. The pertinent question is whether the ceiling price is a supracompetitive price. The amended complaint makes no allegations suggesting that the ceiling price is a supracompetitive price; on the contrary, it was the price submitted by SBLLC and accepted by the Army in a competitive bidding process. "The gravamen of predation is not the recoupment of losses from increased market sales at competitive prices, it is the recoupment of losses from monopoly prices. . . . [T]here is nothing predatory about recouping from increased market sales or competitive prices." Indiana Grocery Co., Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 684 F. Supp. 561, 569 (S.D. Ind. 1988), [*28] aff'd 864 F.2d 1409 (7th Cir. 1989); see also, IIIA PHILLIP E. AREEDA & HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW ¶ 727a, at 82 (3d ed. 2008) ("Any predatory pricing strategy that involves immediate prices below cost requires a post-predation period of monopoly or oligopoly prices."); cf. National Reporting Co. v. Alderson Reporting Co., Inc., 763 F.2d 1020, 1023 (8th Cir. 1985) (no probability of recoupment where predatory bidder's ability to extend contract beyond initial year depended on its willingness to perform services at same price as bid, and thus it did not have unilateral power to increase prices); Kirk-Mayer, Inc. v. Pac Ord, Inc., 626 F. Supp. 1168, (C.D. Cal. 1986) (even if bidder on fixed price contract for definite term priced below cost, because the price was fixed there was no possibility of recoupment). Although National Reporting and Kirk-Mayer involved fixed-price contracts, their reasoning is applicable here. In this case, the ceiling price effectively fixes the extent to which SBLLC can recoup, and if that ceiling price is not a supracompetitive price, then recoupment within the meaning of Brooke Group cannot occur. In the absence of any allegations making a plausible [*29] showing that the ceiling price represents a supracompetitive price, the fact that a ceiling price exists leads to the conclusion that SBLLC will not be able to recoup its predatory losses through supracompetitive pricing. [5]

Third, in addition to the Army's significant bargaining power as a monopsony buyer and the ceiling price, both of which limit SBLLC's ability to charge a monopoly price, unlike an ordinary purchaser the Army has significant regulatory tools at its disposal to limit the price that SBLLC can charge. The Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) does not prohibit "buying-in," that is, submitting a below cost bid. See 48 C.F.R. § 3.501-1; IBM Corp., B-299504, 2008 Comp. Gen. Proc. Dec. ¶ 64, 2007 WL 5118382 (Comp. Gen. June 4, 2007). It does require, however, that contracting officers "take appropriate action to ensure buying-in losses [losses [*30] incurred by a contractor offering a below cost bid] are not recovered by the contractor through the pricing of (1) change orders or (2) follow-on contracts subject to cost analysis." 48 C.F.R. § 3.501-2. A contracting officer must also determine that the contractor will be a "responsible source" and that the supplies or services are offered at "fair and reasonable prices." Id. §§ 9.103(b), 15.402(a). In making the determination of a fair and reasonable price, contracting officers are required to provide, and contracting officers are required to obtain, certified cost data. See id. §§ 15.402(a), 15.403-4; 10 U.S.C. § 2306a. Further, both the FAR and federal statutes create civil and criminal penalties for submission of false or inaccurate cost data. See 18 U.S.C. § 1001; 31 U.S.C. § 3729; 48 C.F.R. §§ 9.406-2, 9.407-2. A contracting officer need not award the contract to the lowest bidder if other factors, such as a determination that the lowest bidder is not a responsible source, make an award inappropriate. See 48 C.F.R. § 9.103(c). In particular, the contracting officer may take into account the below-cost nature of a bid in determining whether a bidding contractor is a responsible [*31] source. See Parker Shane Mfg., B-220273, 85-2 Comp. Gen. Proc. Dec. ¶ 367, 1985 WL 53258 (Comp. Gen. Sept. 30, 1985). Finally, both statute and the FAR require a contracting officer to report suspected antitrust activity to the Attorney General. See 41 U.S.C. § 3707; 48 C.F.R. § 3.303. These statutes and regulations make the possibility of recoupment through the charging of supracompetitive prices even less likely in the case of this market consisting of the federal government as the single purchaser in the market.

Fourth, a predatory pricing scheme cannot create a dangerous probability of recoupment where the firm engaging in the predatory pricing lacks the ability or capacity to absorb the competitor's market share. As the Supreme Court has explained, "[i]n order to succeed in a sustained campaign of predatory pricing, a predator must be able to absorb the market shares of its rivals once prices have been cut. If it cannot do so, its attempt at predation will presumably fail, because there will remain in the market sufficient demand for the competitors' goods at a higher price, and the competitors will not be driven out of business." Cargill, 479 U.S. at 119 n.15; see also, Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 226 [*32] (noting relevance to recoupment analysis of, inter alia, capacity of defendant to absorb market shares of rivals). Here, the amended complaint establishes that SBLLC did not have the capacity to absorb GMA's market share. The amended complaint alleges that, during the allegedly predatory period, SBLLC was unable to meet its delivery requirements. See Amended Compl., ¶ 53. GMA requested that CECOM issue split delivery orders, a request which CECOM initially denied, but later implemented. See id., ¶¶ 54-55, 77.

Fifth, as alleged in the amended complaint the predatory scheme by SBLLC neither drove GMA from the market nor resulted in SBLLC being able to charge monopoly prices. On the contrary, the amended complaint alleges that CECOM issued split awards beginning in 2010 and, as of the time of the amended complaint, CECOM had made one split award for which GMA was awarded a delivery order of 980 WRS ULCANS compared to a delivery order of only 420 WRS ULCANS awarded to SBLLC. See Amended Compl., ¶¶ 77-78. Although the actual effect of the predatory scheme is not relevant to determining whether that scheme was an impermissible exclusionary practice, and is not by itself sufficient to support [*33] a finding of no dangerous probability of success, it is relevant to [5] The fact that SBLLC raised its prices in subsequent bids is not sufficient to show recoupment or a dangerous probability of recoupment in the absence of any allegations that the increased price was supracompetitive. See Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 237 ("[A] price increase does not in itself permit a rational inference of . . . supracompetitive pricing.").

"whether that exclusionary practice entailed a 'dangerous probability of success.'" Taylor Pub. Co. v. Jostens, Inc., 216 F.3d 465, 482 (5th Cir. 2000). [6]

GMA makes much of statements allegedly made by SBLLC officers that SBLLC had the financial wherewithal to simply drop its prices and wait for GMA to go out of business. In the absence of objective allegations that there was a dangerous probability of recoupment through the charging of supracompetitive prices, however, SBLLC's subjective intent does not make out a predatory pricing claim. "Subjective evidence of alleged intent to recoup is insufficient where objective evidence fails to indicate the dangerous probability of recoupment. Such subjective evidence in Brooke Group—internal comments by [*35] the defendant's executives anticipating eventual profits—was rejected by the Supreme Court as a basis for finding defendant would likely recoup its losses, since there was 'no objective evidence . . . it had any real prospect of actually recouping.'" United States v. AMR Corp., 140 F. Supp. 2d 1141, 1209 (D. Kan. 2001) (quoting Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 241), aff'd, 335 F.3d 1109 (10th Cir. 2003). Likewise, "[w]hether or not [SBLLC] ha[s] the means to sustain substantial losses . . . over a long period of time, [it] ha[s] no motive to sustain such losses absent some strong likelihood that the alleged conspiracy in this country will eventually pay off." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 593 (emphasis in original).

In short, Brooke Group requires a plaintiff asserting predatory pricing to show that, at the time of the predatory pricing, there was a "dangerous probability" that SBLLC could recoup its losses by charging supracompetitive prices after GMA was driven from the market. See Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 224. This prerequisite to relief is "not easy to establish," id. at 226, "[i]f market circumstances or deficiencies in proof would bar a reasonable jury from finding that the scheme alleged [*36] would likely result in sustained supracompetitive pricing, the plaintiff's case has failed." Id. To defeat SBLLC's motion, Twombly requires GMA to allege sufficient facts to show that the dangerous probability of recoupment is "plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. Here, for the reasons explained above, "the anticompetitive scheme [GMA] alleged, when judged against the realities of the market, does not provide an adequate basis for a finding of liability." Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 230. That GMA may have alleged that SBLLC priced its goods below cost for the purpose of harming GMA does not compel a different conclusion. "Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws; those laws do not create a federal law of unfair competition or purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce." Id. at 226 (internal quotation omitted). Because the structure of the market alleged by GMA does not make a plausible showing from which a jury could conclude that SBLLC's alleged scheme created a dangerous probability or recoupment through the charging [*37] of supracompetitive prices, SBLLC is entitled to dismissal of the attempted monopolization claim. [7] [6] GMA argues that the court may not rely on this post-predation evidence, relying on the Fifth Circuit's statement in a prior case that in evaluating whether an attempt to monopolize had a dangerous probability of success the court may "not rely on hindsight but [must] examine the probability of success at the time the acts occur." United States v. American Airlines, Inc., 743 F.2d 1114, 1118 (5th Cir. 1984). American Airlines and the Fifth Circuit's subsequent decision in Taylor Publ'g are not difficult to harmonize. American Airlines merely states the unremarkable proposition that a dangerous probability of success is measured as of the time of the predatory practice, and thus the fact that the scheme was unsuccessful alone does not defeat an attempted monopolization claim. Taylor Publ'g, however, recognizes that such evidence may be relevant, considered with other factors, to show that there was no dangerous probability of success at the time the predatory scheme [*34] occurred. Cf. Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 233-38 (as part of inquiry into whether there was a reasonable possibility of recoupment, examining whether the conduct alleged "in fact produced supracompetitive prices."). In other words, evidence that SBLLC was not in fact able to charge a supracompetitive price does not by itself mean that there was not a dangerous probability that it would be able to do so at the time of the predatory pricing, but it does have the "tendency to make the existence of" that dangerous probability "less probable than it would be without the evidence." Fed. R. Evid. 401.

[7] The parties devote significant attention to SBLLC's market share and barriers to entry in the ULCANS market. Although these factors are generally important in predatory pricing cases because they bear on the defendant's ability to secure a monopoly and thus charge a supracompetitive price, given the unique circumstances of this market the Court need not consider these factors. For the reasons explained above, even if SBLLC's market share and the barriers to entry in the market created a dangerous probability that SBLLC would achieve a monopoly, the fact that the market consisted of a single, monopsony buyer with

b. Objectively Baseless Complaints

GMA also argues that SBLLC attempted to monopolize the ULCANS market by "[m]aking objectively baseless complaints to governmental entities that GMA had violated security and procurement laws and such complaints were done for the [*38] specific purpose of interfering with GMA's business and driving up GMA's costs." Amended Compl., ¶ 101(K). SBLLC argues that this claim is barred by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Under this doctrine, which is premised on the First Amendment right to petition the government for a redress of grievances, "genuine attempts to influence passage or enforcement of laws are immune from antitrust scrutiny, regardless of the anticompetitive purpose behind such attempts." Westmac, Inc. v. Smith, 797 F.2d 313, 315 (6th Cir. 1986) (citing United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-71, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965); Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 137-39, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961)). GMA responds that the activity alleged falls within the "sham" exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity. As explained by the Supreme Court, "[t]he 'sham' exception to Noerr encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process-as opposed to the outcome of that process-as an anticompetitive weapon. . . . A 'sham' situation involves a defendant whose activities are not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action at all, not one who genuinely seeks to achieve his governmental result, [*39] but does so through improper means." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 380, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991) (citations and quotations omitted). To meet the sham exception, the plaintiff must show that the petitioning conduct was (1) objectively baseless, and (2) concealed an attempt to interfere with the plaintiff's business relationships. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60-61, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993)

The Court need not resolve this issue here, however, because the allegations of the amended complaint are, on their face, insufficient to allege a plausible claim of attempted monopolization based on the filing of frivolous complaints. The paragraph of the amended complaint quoted above is the only mention of objectively baseless complaints in the amended complaint. Nowhere in the complaint does GMA allege any particular complaints made, to what agencies they were made, when they were made, or how they were objectively baseless. Because the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is designed to protect First Amendment rights, and because an improper application of the sham exception could chill the exercise of such rights, a plaintiff alleging that conduct [*40] otherwise covered by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine falls within the sham exception must comply with Rule 9(b) by pleading with particularity "the 'who, what, where, when and how' of the misconduct," as well as plead "allegations regarding the specific activities which bring the defendant's conduct into one of the Noerr-Pennington exceptions." Meridian Project Sys. v. Hardin Constr. Co., 404 F. Supp. 2d 1214, 1221 (E.D. Cal. 2005); see also, Rockbit Indus. U.S.A., Inc. v. Baker Hughes, Inc., 802 F. Supp. 1544, 1552 (S.D. Tex. 1991); Spanish Int'l Commc'ns Corp., Sin, Inc. v. Leibowitz, 608 F. Supp. 178, 182-84 (S.D. Fla. 1985) (discussing cases). GMA's conclusory allegation that SBLLC made unspecified baseless complaints to unnamed administrative bodies over a two year period fails to adequately allege the applicability of the sham exception under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, particularly in light of Twombly. See Kottle v. Northwest Kidney Ctrs., 146 F.3d 1056, 1063 (9th Cir. 1998); Simon Property Group, Inc. v. Palombaro, 682 F. Supp. 2d 508, 511 (W.D. Pa. 2010); Spanish Int'l, 608 F. Supp. at 184; Reaemco, Inc. v. Allegheny Airlines, 496 F. Supp. 546, 558 n.10 (S.D.N.Y. 1980). Accordingly, [*41] the Court should conclude that SBLLC is entitled to dismissal of this attempted monopolization claim.

3. Tortious Interference Claim

GMA also asserts that SBLLC's conduct amounted to tortious interference with a business expectancy under Michigan law. The Court should grant defendant's motion to dismiss this claim.

a. Choice of Law

significant bargaining power as well as regulatory control over the market would make it unable to exercise monopoly power and recoup its investment in below-cost prices through the charging of supracompetitive prices.

Before addressing the merits of plaintiff's claim and defendant's motion, the Court must first determine the applicable governing law. The parties proceed on the assumption that plaintiff's state law claim is governed by Michigan law. This assumption is correct.

In resolving the parties' state law claims, the Court must apply the substantive law of the state. 28 U.S.C. § 1652 ("The laws of the several states . . . shall be regarded as rules of decisions in civil actions in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply."); see also, Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S. Ct. 817, 82 L. Ed. 1188 (1938). In determining the appropriate source of law, the Court applies the choice of law rules of Michigan, the state in which this Court sits. See Klaxon v. Stentor Elec. Mfg. Co., Inc., 313 U.S. 487, 496, 61 S. Ct. 1020, 85 L. Ed. 1477 (1941) ("The conflict of laws rules to be applied by the federal court in [*42] Delaware must conform to those prevailing in Delaware's state courts."); International Ins. Co. v. Stonewall Ins. Co., 86 F.3d 601, 604 (6th Cir. 1996) ("A federal court exercising diversity jurisdiction must apply the choice of law rules of the forum state."); Security Ins. Co. v. Kevin Tucker & Assocs., Inc., 64 F.3d 1001, 1005 (6th Cir. 1995) (same). Under Michigan choice of law rules, a court "will apply Michigan law unless a 'rational reason' to do otherwise exists. In determining whether a rational reason to displace Michigan law exists, we undertake a two-step analysis. First, we must determine if any foreign state has an interest in having its law applied. If no state has such an interest, the presumption that Michigan law will apply cannot be overcome. If a foreign state does have an interest in having its law applied, we must then determine if Michigan's interests mandate that Michigan law be applied, despite the foreign interests." Sutherland v. Kennington Truck Serv., Ltd., 454 Mich. 274, 286, 562 N.W.2d 466, 471 (1997). In an early manifestation of this approach, the court in Sexton v. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc., 413 Mich. 406, 320 N.W.2d 843 (1982), held that "where Michigan [*43] residents or corporations doing business in Michigan are involved in accidents in another state and appear as plaintiffs and defendants in Michigan courts, the courts will apply the lex fori [law of the forum], not the lex loci delicti [law of the place of injury]." Id. at 433, 320 N.W.2d at 854. Here, there is no question that plaintiff is a resident of Michigan. Likewise there is no question that defendant was doing business in Michigan. Thus, under Michigan's lex fori rule, Michigan law applies to plaintiff's claim. See Hollister v. Dayton Hudson Corp., 5 F. Supp. 2d 530, 533 (E.D. Mich. 1998) (Feikens, J.), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, 201 F.3d 731 (6th Cir. 2000). Further, no party suggests that another jurisdiction has any interest in having its own law applied.

Additionally, choice of law issues do not involve a court's subject matter jurisdiction, and may be stipulated to by parties as a matter of contract. For these reasons, there is substantial authority for the proposition that parties may stipulate during litigation the source of law governing their dispute. See Cates v. Morgan Portable Bldg. Corp., 780 F.2d 683, 687 (7th Cir. 1985); Doe v. Nevada Crossing, Inc., 920 F. Supp. 164, 167 (D. Utah 1996); [*44] Van Deurzen v. Yamaha Motor Corp. USA, 2004 WI App 194, 276 Wis. 2d 815, 688 N.W.2d 777, 781-82 (Wis. Ct. App. 2004). [8] By arguing solely in terms of Michigan law, the parties have implicitly stipulated that Michigan law is controlling. See In re Apex Automotive Warehouse, L.P., No. 96 B 04594, 1999 Bankr. LEXIS 209, 1999 WL 132849, at *3 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. Mar. 9, 1999); cf. Golumbia v. Prudential Ins. Co., No. 96-1521, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 15323, 1997 WL 345728, at *2 (6th Cir. June 20, 1997) (party waived right to challenge applicability of Michigan law, notwithstanding contractual choice-of-law provision selecting New York law, where party argued merits in district court under Michigan law and failed to raise the contractual choice-of-law provision). See generally, Cates, 780 F.2d at 687 ("[T]he parties to a lawsuit can, within broad limits, stipulate to the law governing their dispute; and an implied stipulation is good enough."). Stated another way, "[w]here neither party argues that the forum state's choice of law rules require the court to apply the substantive law of another state, the court should apply the forum state's substantive law." [8] A number of cases also note that the parties stipulated to the governing law and assume that the stipulation is controlling, without discussing the matter in detail. See, e.g., National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Emhart Corp., 11 F.3d 1524, 1528-29 (10th Cir. 1993); Wagenheim v. Natural Science Indus., Ltd., No. 1:04CV0239, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73363, 2006 WL 2794790, at *3 (N.D. Ohio Sept. 27, 2006); Ethicon, Inc. v. Aetna Cas. & Surety Co., 805 F. Supp. 203, 204 n.1 (S.D.N.Y. 1992), aff'd, 993 F.2d 1532 (2d Cir. 1993); Mariculture Prods. Ltd. v. Those Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London Individually Subscribing to Certificate No. 1395/91, 84 Conn. App. 688, 854 A.2d 1100, 1103 n.2 (Conn. Ct. App. 2004)

*Supply Co., 823 F.2d 553, 1987 WL 38061, at 1 (6th Cir. 1987) (per curiam); Wilkes Assocs. v. Hollander Indus. Corp., 144 F. Supp. 2d 944, 949 n.4 (S.D. Ohio 2001). Here, neither party argues that another state's law applies, and thus the Court should apply Michigan law.

b. Analysis

To establish a claim of tortious interference with a business expectancy under Michigan law, "a plaintiff must prove (1) the existence of a valid business expectancy, (2) knowledge of the expectancy [*46] on the part of the defendant, (3) an intentional interference by the defendant inducing or causing a termination of the expectancy, and (4) resultant damage to the plaintiff." Cedroni Assocs. v. Tomblinson, Harburn Assocs., 290 Mich. App. 577, 585, 802 N.W.2d 682, 687 (2010); see also, Dalley v. Dykema Gossett, 287 Mich. App. 296, 323, 788 N.W.2d 679, 696 (2010). SBLLC argues that GMA has failed to sufficiently allege the third element of its tortious interference claim. To establish this element, GMA must plead and prove either that SBLLC committed a per se wrongful act—that is, an act that is inherently wrongful or illegal—or committed a lawful act with malice and without justification. See Power Tools & Supply, Inc. v. Cooper Power Tools, Inc., 543 F. Supp. 2d 749, 763 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (Roberts, J.). As the Michigan Court of Appeals explained in Dalley,

> To fulfill the third element, intentional interference inducing or causing a breach of a business relationship, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant acted both intentionally and either improperly or without justification. To establish that a defendant's conduct lacked justification and showed malice, the plaintiff must [*47] demonstrate, with specificity, affirmative acts by the defendant that corroborate the improper motive of the interference. Where the defendant's actions were motivated by legitimate business reasons, its actions would not constitute improper motive or interference.

Here, GMA cannot establish the third element of its tortious interference claim for the same reason that it cannot establish its antitrust claim. Although there is no Michigan caselaw directly on point, where a plaintiff "fails to allege any tortious activity other than precisely the same 'anticompetitive' behavior alleged in its antitrust claim[], . . . the antitrust law provides the best available barometer—indeed the only available barometer—of whether or not [the defendant's] conduct can be found to be 'wrongful' or 'illegitimate'—and, hence, tortious." Ocean State Physicians Health Plan, Inc. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 883 F.2d 1101, 1114 (1st Cir. 1989). Thus, the courts that have considered the issue have uniformly concluded that below-cost pricing that does not amount to predatory pricing under the antitrust laws does not constitute improper conduct sufficient [*48] to state a tortious interference claim. See Bailey v. Allgas, Inc., 284 F.3d 1237, 1257 (11th Cir. 2002) (Alabama law); United States Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 264 Ga. 295, 443 S.E.2d 833, 836 (Ga. 1994); McBride Consulting Serv., LLC v. Waste Mgmt. of Miss., Inc., 949 So. 2d 52, 56 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006); Ideal Dairy Farms, Inc. v. Farmland Dairy Farms, Inc., 282 N.J. Super. 140, 659 A.2d 904, 935-36 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1995); cf. ACT, Inc. v. Sylvan Learning Sys., Inc., 296 F.3d 657, 668 (8th Cir. 2002) (Iowa law). Similarly, the courts have uniformly and more generally held that "where the tort is grounded in precisely the same 'anticompetitive' behavior alleged in the failed antitrust claim, it cannot as a matter of law constitute tortious interference with a business relationship." Metzler v. Bear Automotive Serv. Equip. Co., 19 F. Supp. 2d 1345, 1364 (S.D. Fla. 1998) (applying Florida law and citing federal cases applying California and Illinois law); see also, Rome Ambulatory Surgical Ctr., LLC v. Rome Mem'l Hosp., Inc., 349 F. Supp. 2d 389, 423-24 (N.D.N.Y. 2004).

The Michigan Court of Appeals's decision in Michigan Podiatric Medical Ass'n v. National Foot Care Program, Inc., 175 Mich. App. 723, 438 N.W.2d 349 (1989), [*49] is instructive and provides compelling evidence that Michigan follows this general approach. In that case, the plaintiff alleged, inter alia, that the defendant had both engaged in anticompetitive behavior by violating a Michigan statute prohibiting below-cost pricing of certain health insurance contracts and had tortiously interfered with its prospective business through this pricing. The statute at issue (which has since been repealed), provided that "'[t]he rates charged by an organization for coverage under contracts issued under this section shall not be unreasonably lower than what is necessary to meet the expenses of the organization for providing this coverage and shall not have an anticompetitive effect or result in predatory pricing in relation to prudent purchaser agreement coverages offered by other organizations.'" Id. at 734, 438 N.W.2d at 354 (quoting Mich. Comp. Laws § 333.21054(3) (repealed by 2000 Mich. Pub. Acts 252, § 1 (June 29, 2000))). After concluding that the plaintiff could not succeed on a claim under this statute, the court of appeals likewise rejected the plaintiff's tortious interference claim, reasoning that its "prior conclusion that these claims of [*50] 'illegal' activity are not sustainable compels a conclusion that plaintiffs will be unable to establish either that defendant's conduct was wrongful per se or undertaken illegally and without justification." Id. at 736-37, 438 N.W.2d at 355. Although Michigan Podiatric involved a predatory pricing claim under a state insurance state rather than under the antitrust laws, there is no reason to believe that the Michigan courts would view the matter differently in the antitrust context, particular in light of the uniform law from other jurisdictions discussed above. In short, because below-cost pricing is not in itself illegal or wrongful conduct, and because GMA has failed to sufficiently allege that the below-cost pricing was illegal under the antitrust laws, it follows that GMA has failed to sufficiently allege tortious interference under Michigan law.

Likewise, to the extent GMA basis its tortious interference claim on SBLLC's alleged filing of baseless complaints with regulatory agencies, the claim fails under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Although originally developed in the antitrust context, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is one that protects First Amendment activity under the Petition Clause. For [*51] this reason, the doctrine has been extended beyond the antitrust context to provide immunity from a wide variety of claims. Specifically, as relevant here, the doctrine is applicable to tortious interference claims under Michigan law. See Melea, Ltd. v. Quality Models, Ltd., 345 F. Supp. 2d 743, 758 (E.D. Mich. 2004) (Feikens, J.); Aurora Cable Commc'ns, Inc. v. Jones Intercable, Inc., 720 F. Supp. 600, 603 (W.D. Mich. 1989) (citing Trepel v. Pontiac Osteopathic Hosp., 135 Mich. App. 361, 354 N.W.2d 341 (1984)). See generally, Azzar v. Primebank, FSB, 198 Mich. App. 512, 517, 499 N.W.2d 793, 796 (1993) (the Noerr-Pennington doctrine "bars litigation arising from injuries received as a consequence of the First Amendment petitioning activity, regardless of the underlying cause of action asserted by the plaintiffs."). Accordingly, SBLLC is entitled to dismissal of GMA's tortious interference claim.

D. Conclusion

In view of the foregoing, the Court should conclude that GMA's amended complaint fails to allege sufficient facts to make a plausible showing that SBLLC engaged in predatory pricing under § 2 of the Sherman Act or made objectively baseless complaints not protected by the Noerr-Pennington [*52] doctrine. Accordingly, the Court should conclude that SBLLC is entitled to dismissal of GMA's attempted monopolization and tortious interference claims, and the Court should grant SBLLC's motion to dismiss.

III. NOTICE TO PARTIES REGARDING OBJECTIONS:

The parties to this action may object to and seek review of this Report and Recommendation, but are required to act within fourteen (14) days of service of a copy hereof as provided for in Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b). Failure to file specific objections constitutes a waiver of any further right of appeal. Thomas v. Arn, 474 U.S. 140, 106 S. Ct. 466, 88 L. Ed. 2d 435 (1985); Howard v. Secretary of Health & Human Servs., 932 F.2d 505 (6th Cir. 1991); United States v. Walters, 638 F.2d 947 (6th Cir. 1981). Filing of objections which raise some issues but fail to raise others with specificity, will not preserve all the objections a party might have to this Report and Recommendation. Willis v. Sullivan, 931 F.2d 390, 401 (6th Cir. 1991); Smith v. Detroit Federation of Teachers Local 231, 829 F.2d 1370, 1373 (6th Cir. 1987). Pursuant to E.D. Mich. LR 72.1(d)(2), a copy of any objections is to be served upon this Magistrate Judge.

Within fourteen (14) days of [*53] service of any objecting party's timely filed objections, the opposing party may file a response. The response shall be not more than five (5) pages in length unless by motion and order such page limit is extended by the Court. The response shall address specifically, and in the same order raised, each issue contained within the objections.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment should be rendered if the record shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

The burden of demonstrating the absence of any genuine dispute as to a material fact rests with the party moving for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN3[] Burdens of Proof, Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Once the party moving for summary judgment has made an initial showing that there is no genuine dispute of material fact, the nonmoving party cannot rely on the mere existence of a scintilla of evidence to defeat summary judgment but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN4[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

A dispute about a genuine issue exists for summary judgment purposes where the evidence is such that a reasonable trier of fact could decide in the nonmovant's favor. Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue for trial.

HN5[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

On a summary judgment motion, the court resolves all factual ambiguities and draws all inferences in favor of the nonmoving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN6[] Sherman Act, Scope

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case. Accordingly, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Thus, to survive a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff alleging a violation of § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Further, if the plaintiff's theory is economically senseless, no reasonable trier of fact could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN7[] Sherman Act, Scope

15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. To prevail on a § 1 claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate (1) an agreement or concerted action among the defendants in the (2) unreasonable restraint of trade. Accordingly, to survive summary judgment, a plaintiff must proffer direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove the defendant had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. At a minimum, the circumstances must be such as to warrant a trier of fact in finding that the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN8[] Sherman Act, Scope

In the context of a restraint of trade claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, evidence of parallel conduct is probative of an antitrust conspiracy, but such evidence alone cannot suffice. Rather, a plaintiff relying on parallel conduct as evidence of an antitrust conspiracy must also demonstrate the existence of so-called plus factors. These plus factors include: (1) evidence of conduct that is contrary to the defendants' independent self-interest; (2) the presence or absence of a strong motive to enter into the alleged conspiracy; (3) the artificial standardization of products; and (4) a high level of inter-firm communications. Once a conspiracy is shown, only slight evidence is needed to link another defendant with it. Nevertheless, plaintiffs must provide evidence pertaining to each defendant to demonstrate that the defendant participated in the conspiracy.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN9[] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

The court should read the integrated contract as a whole to ensure that undue emphasis is not placed upon particular words and phrases.

HN10[] Sherman Act, Scope

Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN11[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

In a traditional price-fixing conspiracy, the conspirators are motivated by the goal of raising prices without losing their competitive position.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN12[] Sherman Act, Scope

It is well settled that a high level of inter-firm communications is probative of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 conspiracy in instances of parallel conduct among competitors. But a showing of frequent meetings among competitors is insufficient to defeat summary judgment. Rather, plaintiffs must provide either direct or circumstantial evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN13[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

On a summary judgment motion, a court must accord plaintiffs the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN14[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

In a Sherman Act rule of reason case, defendants bear the burden of justifying their conduct only if Plaintiffs first prove the existence of an anticompetitive conspiracy.

MEMORANDUM & ORDER

WILLIAM H. PAULEY III, District Judge:

Plaintiffs bring this antitrust class action alleging that certain credit card issuers[1] conspired to include mandatory arbitration clauses in cardholder agreements in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §1. Plaintiffs further allege that Defendants participated in a group boycott by refusing to issue cards to individuals who did not agree to arbitration. The remaining Defendants—Citigroup and Discover—move for summary judgment dismissing Plaintiffs' claims. Plaintiffs move for summary judgment dismissing Citigroup's sixth affirmative defense, which challenges Plaintiffs' ability to use certain evidence in this proceeding. [*2] Plaintiffs also move for partial summary judgment against Discover on the ground that Discover has failed to provide any pro-competitive justification for its conduct.

[1] Plaintiffs initially brought their claims against Bank of America, N.A. (USA) ("Bank of America"), Capital One Bank, Capital One, F.S.B. (together with Capital One Bank, "Capital One"), J.P. Morgan Chase (prior to its merger with Bank One Corporation, which previously acquired First USA, Inc., "Chase"), Chase Bank USA, N.A., Citigroup, Inc., Citibank (South Dakota) N.A., Citibank USA, N.A., Universal Bank, N.A., Universal Financial Corp., Citicorp Diners Club, Inc. (the Citigroup, Citibank, Universal, and Citicorp entities are collectively referred to as "Citigroup"), HSBC Finance Corp., HSBC Bank, Nevada, N.A. (together with HSBC Finance Corp. and its predecessor Household International Inc., "Household"), MBNA America Bank, N.A., MBNA America (Delaware), N.A. (together with MBNA America Bank, N.A., "MBNA"), Providian Financial Corp., and Providian National Bank (together with Providian Financial Corp., "Providian") (collectively, the "Bank Defendants") and Novus Credit

For the following reasons, Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment as to Citigroup's sixth affirmative defense is granted. Defendants' motions for summary judgment are denied. Finally, Plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment as to the absence of pro-competitive justification is denied.[2]

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs hold credit or charge cards issued by one or more of the Defendants. (Defendants' Joint Statement of Undisputed Material Facts in Support of their Motions for Summary Judgment, dated May 11, 2011 ("Def. Stmt.") ¶¶ 1-2; Plaintiffs' Statement Pursuant to Local Civil Rule 56.1(b), dated July 12, 2011 ("Pl. Stmt.") ¶¶ 1-2.) They claim that Defendants conspired with American Express ("Amex") and Wells Fargo to impose mandatory arbitration [*4] clauses in their cardholder agreements to eliminate class action lawsuits and other litigation.

From 1999 through 2003, Defendants, Wells Fargo, and Amex met several times and discussed arbitration. (Def. Stmt, ¶¶ 152,197; Pl. Stmt, ¶¶ 152e, 197.) On May 25, 1999, First USA, Amex, Citigroup, and Sears Roebuck & Co. co-sponsored a meeting of in-house counsel for credit card companies at the Washington D.C. office of the firm now known as Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP ("Wilmer"). (Def. Stmt. ¶ 235; Pl. Stmt, ¶¶ 235a-c.) Representatives of Capital One, Chase, Citigroup, First USA, Household, Providian, and Amex attended. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 235; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 235a.) While the parties dispute whether the attendees actually discussed arbitration, the meeting's agenda suggests that they may have, and this Court construes the evidence in Plaintiffs' favor. (Def. Stmt. 1240; Pl. Stmt, ¶ 235f.) At that time, only First USA and Amex had implemented arbitration clauses in their cardholder agreements or announced their intent to do so. (Pl. Stmt. ¶ 152a; Declaration of Kevin C. Aldridge in Support of Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Opposition to the Motions for Summary Judgment of the Citi [*5] and Discover Defendants, dated July 12, 2011 ("Aldridge Decl.") Exs. 149, 195,215-16.)

On July 28, 1999, Defendants' representatives attended another meeting at Wilmer, which Plaintiffs characterize as the first meeting of the "Arbitration Coalition." (Def. Stmt. ¶ 170; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 170-171.) Defendants do not dispute that the attendees discussed the subject of arbitration. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 186.) A meeting organizer requested that attendees "send me the arbitration clauses used by your company . . . and any answers to FAQs or other explanations of the clause." (Pl. Stmt. ¶ 152i; Aldridge Decl. Ex. 254.) At the meeting, Joan Warrington ("Warrington"), an attorney at Citigroup, met Wendy Hufford ("Hufford"), an attorney at General Electric Capital Corporation. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 186; Pl. Stmt. 186.) Two days later, Warrington e-mailed Julie Nelson ("Nelson"), another attorney at Citigroup, and recommended that she "compare notes" with Hufford. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 186; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 186.)[3]

Representatives of the "Arbitration Coalition" met again [*6] on September 29, 1999. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 184; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 184.) In a draft agenda, First USA consultant Duncan MacDonald recommended that the attendees discuss such topics as "how to set up an arbitration program," "plain language vs. fine print & overkill," "recent litigation," and "challenges ... to adoption of arbitration clauses." (Pl. Stmt. ¶ 152j; Aldridge Decl. Ex. 174.) At the meeting, Citigroup's Warrington informed Gail Siegel ("Siegel"), an attorney at Chase, that Citigroup was taking a "wait and Services, Inc., Discover Financial Services and [*3] Discover Bank (collectively, "Discover" and together with the Bank Defendants and the National Arbitration Forum, Inc., the "Defendants"). All of the Defendants except Citigroup and Discover have settled.

[2] This Court denies Defendants' application to strike certain portions of Plaintiffs' Statement Pursuant to Local Civil Rule 56.1(b). In resolving these motions, the Court does not consider Defendants' Joint Reply to Plaintiffs' 56.1(b) Response.

[3] In the interest of brevity, this Court does not summarize every piece of evidence offered by Plaintiffs. This Court has considered all of Plaintiffs' submissions.

see" approach towards adopting an arbitration clause. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 190; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 190a.) Thereafter, Defendants' employees attended many more Wilmer-sponsored meetings at which they discussed arbitration. (Def. Stmt. ¶¶ 171, 174, 197, 201; Pl. Stmt, ¶¶ 171a, 174, 197, 201.)

On February 14, 2001, Citigroup's Nelson attended a Washington, D.C. meeting of the so-called "Class Action Working Group," where representatives of a diverse group of businesses discussed strategies to reduce "class action abuse." (Def. Stmt. ¶¶ 215, 218; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 215, 218.) Also in 2001, a Capital One attorney organized periodic telephone conferences with other in-house attorneys. (Def. Stmt. ¶¶ 226, 227, [*7] 231; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 226, 227, 231.) Discover did not participate in these calls. (Def. Stmt, ¶ 234; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 234.)

The parties dispute precisely how many meetings Citigroup representatives attended. (Def. Stmt, ¶¶ 197, 201; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 197, 201.) But it is undisputed that Citigroup employees attended at least three of the "Arbitration Coalition" meetings before Citigroup adopted an arbitration clause. (Def. Stmt. ¶¶ 118, 183, 235; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 118a, 183, 235a.) Discover employees attended at least five such meetings. (Def. Stmt. ¶¶ 171, 174; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 171a, 174.) The parties dispute whether a Discover representative attended any of the meetings prior to Discover's adoption of an arbitration clause. (Def. Stmt, ¶¶ 39, 238; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 39, 238.)

Plaintiffs offer evidence that, viewed in their favor, indicates Citigroup and Discover accelerated their decision-making process regarding arbitration in tandem with their attendance at the meetings. (Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 32, 69,113.) While the parties contest the details of Citigroup's decision-making process, it is undisputed that Steve Freiberg ("Freiberg"), the Chief Executive Officer of Citi Cards, made the final decision to adopt arbitration [*8] clauses in cardmember agreements in September or October of 2000. (Def. Stmt. ¶¶ 118-119; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 118-119.) Freiberg testified that, when he made his decision, he had no knowledge of the "Coalition" meetings, or whether Citigroup's competitors had adopted arbitration clauses. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 126; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 126.) Citigroup mailed its first arbitration change-in-terms notice in May or June 2001 and then completed a larger mailing later that year. (Def Stmt. ¶ 150; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 150.) Arbitration change-in-terms notices were mailed to Diners Club cardholders shortly thereafter. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 151; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 151.)

The parties also dispute the chronology of Discover's implementation of an arbitration clause. While Discover claims it decided to adopt a clause no later than April 1, 1999, Plaintiffs contend that the date was after June of that year. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 39; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 32k.) Drawing all reasonable inferences in Plaintiffs' favor, the later date is credited for the purpose of these motions. Nevertheless, Joe Yob ("Yob"), Discover's Executive Vice President of Cardholder Operations, testified that he made the final decision to add an arbitration provision to Discover's cardholder [*9] agreement. (Def. Stmt. ¶¶ 36, 27; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 32n.) Like his counterpart at Citigroup, Yob had no knowledge of the Wilmer meetings when he made his decision. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 42; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 42.) In late 2002, Discover decided to amend its arbitration clause to permit customers to "opt out" of arbitration without sacrificing any contractual rights. (Def. Stmt. ¶¶ 49-52; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 49, 52a.)

DISCUSSION

I. Legal Standard

A. Summary Judgment Standard

HN1[] Summary judgment should be rendered if the record shows that "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a); see also Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). HN2[] The burden of demonstrating the absence of any genuine dispute as to a material fact rests with the moving party. See Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970). HN3[] Once the moving party has made an initial showing that there is no genuine dispute of material fact, the non-moving party cannot rely on the "mere existence of a scintilla of evidence" to defeat summary judgment but must set forth "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) [*10] (emphasis in original); see also Niagara Mohawk Power Corp. v. Jones Chem., Inc., 315 F.3d 171, 175 (2d Cir. 2003) (citation omitted). HN4[] "A dispute about a 'genuine issue* exists for summary judgment purposes where the evidence is such that a reasonable [trier of fact] could decide in the non-movant's favor." Beyer v. Cnty. of Nassau, 524 F.3d 160, 163 (2d Cir. 2008) (quoting Guilbert v. Gardner, 480 F.3d 140, 145 (2d Cir. 2007)). "Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 380, 127 S. Ct. 1769, 167 L. Ed. 2d 686 (2007) (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586-87). HN5[] The Court resolves all factual ambiguities and draws all inferences in favor of the non-moving party. See Liberty Lobby. 477 U.S. at 255; see also Jeffreys v. City of New York, 426 F.3d 549, 553 (2d Cir. 2005).

Importantly, HN6[] "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. Accordingly, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. [*11] Thus, "[t]o survive a motion for summary judgment... a plaintiff [alleging] a violation of § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. Further, "[i]f the plaintiffs theory is economically senseless, no reasonable [trier of fact] could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468-69, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992).

B. Sherman Act Claims

HN7[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce[.]" 15 U.S.C. § 1. To prevail on a § 1 claim, Plaintiff must demonstrate (1) an agreement or concerted action among the defendants in the (2) unreasonable restraint of trade. See Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir. 1993). Accordingly, to survive summary judgment, Plaintiffs must proffer "direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove the [defendants] had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) [*12] (internal quotation omitted). "[A]t a minimum, the circumstances must be such as to warrant a [trier of fact] in finding that the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement." Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 252 (2d Cir. 1987) (internal quotations and modifications omitted).

HN8[] "Evidence of parallel conduct is probative of an antitrust conspiracy, but such evidence 'alone cannot suffice.'" In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litis, ("Amex"), 773 F. Supp. 2d 351, 366 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (quoting Apex Oil, 822 F.2d at 252). Rather, "a plaintiff relying on parallel conduct as evidence of an antitrust conspiracy must also demonstrate the existence of so-called 'plus factors.'" Amex, 773 F. Supp. 2d at 366 (quoting Apex Oil, 822 F.2d at 252). "These plus factors include: (1) evidence of conduct that is contrary to the defendants' independent self-interest; (2) the presence or absence of a strong motive to enter into the alleged conspiracy; (3) the artificial standardization of products; and (4) a high level of inter-firm communications." Amex, 773 F. Supp. 2d at 366 (quoting In re Med. X-Ray Film Antitrust Litig., 946 F. Supp. 209, 218 (E.D.N.Y. 1996)) [*13] (internal modification omitted). "[O]nce a conspiracy is shown, only slight evidence is needed to link another defendant with it." Apex Oil, 822 F.2d at 257. Nevertheless, Plaintiffs must provide evidence "pertaining to each defendant" to demonstrate that the defendant participated in the conspiracy. AD/SAT v. Associated Press, 181 F.3d 216, 234 (2d Cir. 1999).

II. Citigroup's Sixth Affirmative Defense

As a preliminary matter, Plaintiffs are entitled to summary judgment dismissing Citigroup's sixth affirmative defense. According to Citigroup, the release in the settlement of a related matter, In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litigation ("CCF"), MDL No. 1409, Master File No. M 21-95, limits the evidence on which Plaintiffs may now rely. Specifically, Citigroup maintains that Plaintiffs released not only all claims related to foreign transaction fee ("FX fee") conduct, but also any right to present evidence connected with that conduct.

But Citigroup misreads the CCF settlement agreement. In that agreement, the parties acknowledged that the release "does not release or discharge ... the claims currently asserted in the [Bank of America] [*14] Class Action Complaint filed on August 11, 2005." (Declaration of Kevin C. Aldridge in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment on the Citi Defendants' Sixth Defense, dated May 9, 2011 Ex. 1: Stipulation and Agreement of Settlement in In re Currency Conversion Fee Antitrust Litigation, dated July 20, 2006 ("CCF Settlement") at ¶ 2(kk).) Because the settlement agreement expressly preserved Plaintiffs' arbitration-related claims, it makes little sense to read the agreement to preclude Plaintiffs from relying on the evidence needed to prove those claims. Indeed, the settlement agreement expressly requires the preservation of FX fee evidence until this matter is resolved. (CCF Settlement at ¶ 19(a).)

Citigroup's effort to stretch the meaning of the term "claims" to encompass use of FX fee evidence in this action is unpersuasive. The settlement agreement defines "claims" to include "contentions, allegations, and assertions of wrongdoing" relating to an alleged FX fee conspiracy. (CCF Settlement at ¶¶ 2(i), 2(kk).) But the agreement, read as a whole, plainly releases Defendants from liability arising from FX fee conduct, rather than prohibiting the use of FX fee evidence in this [*15] proceeding. See Law Debenture Trust Co. of N.Y. v. Maverick Tube Corp., 595 F.3d 458, 468 (2d Cir. 2010) (HN9[] "The court should read the integrated contract as a whole to ensure that undue emphasis is not placed upon particular words and phrases[.]") (internal citations omitted). Accordingly, Plaintiffs may rely on FX fee evidence, and their motion for summary judgment dismissing Citigroup's sixth affirmative defense is granted.

III. Sherman Act Claims

A. Parallel Conduct

The parties dispute the extent to which Defendants' adoption of arbitration clauses was "parallel." For example, while First USA and Discover implemented their arbitration clauses in 1998 and 1999, respectively, Providian and Citigroup did not promulgate their clauses until 2001. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 150; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 150; Aldridge Decl. Exs. 215, 216, 295, 296.) And Discover decided to adopt an "opt-out" provision in 2002. (Def. Stmt, ¶¶ 49-52; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 49, 52a.) Nevertheless, it is undisputed that Defendants' adoption of arbitration clauses roughly coincided with their attendance at the "Arbitration Coalition" meetings. Given the temporal proximity between the meetings and the adoption of arbitration clauses, this parallel [*16] conduct is probative of an antitrust conspiracy.

HN10[] "Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy[.]" Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556-57, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). And Plaintiffs identify no direct evidence that Defendants participated in a conspiracy. Cf. In re Text Messaging Antitrust Litig., 630 F.3d 622, 628 (7th Cir. 2010) (Posner, J.) ("What is missing, as the defendants point out, is the smoking gun in a price-fixing case: direct evidence, which would usually take the form of an admission by an employee of one of the conspirators, that officials of the defendants had met and agreed explicitly on the terms of a conspiracy to raise price."). Accordingly, this Court evaluates the so-called "plus factors." Apex Oil, 822 F.2d at 252.

B. Plus Factors

1. Conduct Contrary to Defendants' Self-interest

While each Defendant had a compelling independent justification for its decision to adopt arbitration, the record—viewed in Plaintiffs' favor—reveals conduct against Defendants' self-interest.

To be sure, the undisputed record indicates that Defendants believed resolving disputes through arbitration—and barring class arbitration—would reduce defense and settlement costs, and would help [*17] minimize exposure to class action litigation. (Def. Stmt. ¶¶ 36-38, 114-115; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 114, 115d, 123a, 129b, 178a.) Nevertheless, the record also reveals conduct that a reasonable trier of fact could view as contrary to each Defendants' unilateral interest. Defendants arguably acted against their unilateral interests by attending numerous meetings with their competitors and—at least in the case of Citigroup—providing competitors with certain sensitive business information. Of course, competitors have the right to organize and engage in joint lobbying and legal efforts. See E. R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 135, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961); see also Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510-11, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972). But there are genuine factual disputes regarding the extent to which Defendants shared strategic information. Viewed in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, the evidence supports an inference that Defendants used the meetings to coordinate their decision-making on arbitration. Such coordination would be contrary to each Defendant's unilateral interest, and a trial is required to determine what actually happened at the meetings.

Further, Warrington [*18] may have acted against Citigroup's unilateral interest when she shared information about its arbitration plans with Siegel. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 190; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 190a.) According to Defendants, Warrington contradicted the notion that any conspiracy existed when she informed Siegel that Citigroup was taking a "wait and see" attitude. (Def Stmt. ¶ 190; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 190a.) But the record also supports a contrary interpretation. Specifically, a reasonable trier of fact could view Warrington's willingness to share sensitive information with a competitor as a tacit invitation to collude. While Plaintiffs' reading of Warrington's statement seems improbable, this factual dispute is inappropriate for resolution on summary judgment.

2. Motive

Defendants contend that the lack of evidence of a rational motive to engage in the purported conspiracy and group boycott undermines Plaintiffs' allegations. See AD/SAT, 181 F.3d at 233 (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588) (internal quotation marks omitted) ("[T]he absence of a rational motive to engage in the alleged conspiracy is highly relevant to whether a genuine issue for trial exists[.]"). HN11[] In a traditional price-fixing conspiracy, the conspirators are motivated [*19] by the goal of raising prices without losing their competitive position. See Amex, 773 F. Supp. 2d at 368 ("The evidence demonstrates that Amex wanted to raise its FX Fee but was constrained by . . . its disinclination to be a market-leader on pricing."). Here, by contrast, there is little evidence indicating that adoption of an arbitration clause threatened any Defendant's competitive posture.

Nonetheless, a conspiracy to adopt arbitration clauses would not be entirely irrational. While Plaintiffs surmise that Defendants colluded in order to foreclose a "renegade Bank campaign" in which certain issuers would advertise their lack of an arbitration clause, the Court need not engage in such speculation. The deposition testimony of Wendy Kleinbaum ("Kleinbaum"), an attorney at Citigroup, reveals that Defendants may have been concerned that consumers would cancel their cards if Citigroup unilaterally adopted an arbitration clause. (Pl. Stmt, ¶ 69e.) While Kleinbaum testified that she flagged several potential concerns about adopting an arbitration clause, she also explained that she did not believe moving to arbitration would have a deleterious effect on Citigroup's business. (Aldridge [*20] Decl. Ex. 189: Dep. Tr. of Wendy Kleinbaum, dated March 5, 2010, at 102.) Although Defendants' interpretation of Kleinbaum's testimony may be correct, the significance of the testimony is a contested issue of fact for trial.

In arguing that they had no motive to conspire, Defendants observe that Plaintiffs' own expert, Dr. Oren Bar-Gill, opined that the presence or absence of arbitration clauses does not impact consumer choice. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 136; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 136.) Indeed, Dr. Bar-Gill explained that consumers typically have no idea that arbitration clauses exist, or do not understand them. (Def. Stmt. ¶ 137; Pl. Stmt. ¶ 137.) But Dr. Bar-Gill did not claim that consumers would never care about arbitration. To the contrary, he explained that what consumers view as "salient" may change over time. (Aldridge Decl. Ex. 102, ¶ 6.) Thus, while Defendants identify potentially fruitful grounds for cross-examination of Plaintiffs' expert, they fail to establish that there was no rational motive to conspire.

As further evidence of motive, Plaintiffs postulate that because early adopters of arbitration clauses faced an onslaught of litigation targeting those clauses, Defendants conspired to lighten [*21] their proportionate share of the litigation burden. Specifically, Plaintiffs cite a draft e-mail authored by attorney Alan Kaplinsky of the law firm Ballard Spahr Andrews & Ingersoll LLP encouraging attendees of the July 28, 1999 meeting to be "well networked" because "the plaintiffs' bar is engaged in a 'take no prisoners assault' on consumer arbitration programs." (Aldridge Decl. Ex. 251.) While Defendants deny that attendees of the July 28 meeting shared this motive, or even received Kaplinsky's e-mail, the facts are disputed. Similarly, Defendants may be correct that issuers that adopted their clauses relatively late—such as Citigroup—would have no motive to enter the fray and shoulder part of their competitors' litigation costs. But this Court will not weigh competing inferences in resolving Defendants' summary judgment motions, and must view the facts in Plaintiffs' favor.

3. Standardization

The parties dispute whether Defendants' respective arbitration clauses reflect "artificial standardization." See Amex, 773 F. Supp. 2d at 366. Unlike setting prices or FX fees, the decision to adopt an arbitration clause is binary—a business either implements one, or it does not. A comparison [*22] with Defendants' FX fee conduct in Amex, 773 F. Supp. 2d at 371-72, illustrates the point. In that case, most Defendants fixed their respective FX fees at precisely the same level. See Amex, 773 F. Supp. 2d at 371-72. Here, by contrast, Defendants merely decided to adopt arbitration clauses. The degree of uniformity that this Court found probative in Amex is absent, notwithstanding Plaintiffs' allegation that the two purported conspiracies are "integrally intertwined." Amex, 773 F. Supp. 2d at 364.

Nevertheless, the presence of class action waivers in Defendants' arbitration clauses could support an inference of collusion. To be sure, the Supreme Court has recognized that "[a]rbitration is poorly suited to the higher stakes of class litigation." AT&T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion, 131 S.Ct. 1740, 1752, 179 L. Ed. 2d 742(2011). And Discover's decision in 2002 to add an "opt-out" provision to its arbitration clause when others did not undercuts any claimed "standardization." But each Defendant's decision to adopt an arbitration clause that roughly mirrored those used by its competitors is probative, particularly when the evidence is considered in Plaintiffs' favor.

4. Inter-Firm Communications

Plaintiffs place [*23] great weight on the fact that Defendants' representatives attended many meetings where arbitration was discussed. Specifically, Plaintiffs argue that these frequent meetings suggest a conspiracy because Defendants used them to coordinate the adoption of arbitration clauses. HN12[] It is well settled that "a high level of inter[-]firm communications" is probative of a conspiracy in instances of parallel conduct among competitors. Apex Oil, 822 F.2d at 254. But a showing of frequent meetings among competitors is insufficient to defeat summary judgment. See H.L. Moore Drug Exch. v. Eli Lilly and Co., 662 F.2d 935, 941 (2d Cir. 1981) ("[A] mere showing of close relations or frequent meetings between the alleged conspirators . . . will not sustain a plaintiffs burden absent evidence which would permit the inference that these close ties led to an illegal agreement."). Rather, Plaintiffs must provide either direct or circumstantial evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588.

Defendants' frequent attendance at the meetings is certainly noteworthy, and the voluminous record in this case—viewed in the light most favorable [*24] to Plaintiffs—could suggest that Defendants used the meetings to concoct a conspiracy to adopt arbitration clauses and boycott customers who rejected them. The Court recognizes that the ultimate decision-makers at Citigroup and Discover—Freiberg and Yob—had no knowledge of the meetings. (Def. Stmt, ¶¶ 42, 126; Pl. Stmt. ¶¶ 42, 126.) But the in-house counsel who attended the "Coalition" meetings were not "low level employees" engaged in mere "shop talk." Amex, 773 F. Supp. 2d at 370 (quoting In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 125 (3d Cir. 1999)) (internal quotation marks omitted). And disputed issues of fact remain regarding whether "the exchanges of information had an impact on [arbitration] decisions." Amex, 773 F. Supp.2d at 370 (quoting In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 369 (3d Cir. 2004)) (internal quotation marks omitted). Accordingly, summary judgment is unwarranted.

At oral argument, Plaintiffs acknowledged that there is an "extreme paucity of documents" supporting their theory of the case. (Hr'g Tr. dated Nov. 7, 2011, at 61.) And while Plaintiffs attribute this evidentiary deficiency to Defendants' redactions for privilege, this Court does not draw [*25] an adverse inference from Defendants' privilege determinations. See Nabisco. Inc. v. PF Brands, Inc., 191 F.3d 208, 226 (2d Cir. 1999) ("If refusal to produce [a document] based on claim of the [attorney-client] privilege supported an adverse inference, persons would be discouraged from seeking opinions, or lawyers would be discouraged from giving honest opinions."), abrogated on other grounds, Moseley v. V Secret Catalogue. Inc., 537 U.S. 418, 123 S. Ct. 1115, 155 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2003). However, the high degree of inter-firm communications in this case—considered with the record as a whole—precludes an award of summary judgment. See H.L. Hayden Co. of N.Y. v. Siemens Med. Svs., Inc., 879 F.2d 1005, 1012 (2d Cir. 1989) (HN13[] "[A court] must accord plaintiffs 'the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each.'") (quoting Cont'l Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962)).

C. "Economic Sense"

Viewed in Plaintiffs' favor, the record in this case shows that Plaintiffs' conspiracy allegations may make "economic sense." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587. While Dr. Bar-Gill opined that consumers do not consider the presence [*26] of arbitration clauses when choosing among credit cards, consumer preferences are not static. As such, Defendants could have colluded to foreclose the possibility that arbitration would ever become important to cardholders. Of course, the unilateral benefits of arbitration to each Defendant are great. See Stolt-Nielsen S.A. v. AnimalFeeds Int'l Corp., 130 S. Ct. 1758, 1775, 176 L. Ed. 2d 605 (2010) (describing the benefits of arbitration as "lower costs, greater efficiency and speed, and the ability to choose expert adjudicators to resolve specialized disputes"). Yet, Defendants arguably acted against their respective self-interest by attending numerous meetings with direct competitors where at least some sensitive business information was shared. A careful weighing of the evidence could refute Plaintiffs' insinuations of conspiratorial conduct. But the factual disputes in this case must be resolved at trial.

IV. Remaining Issues

A. Antitrust Standing and Irreparable Harm

This Court has already considered and rejected an antitrust standing argument indistinguishable from the one Discover now advances. See Amex, 773 F. Supp. 2d at 373 (rejecting the argument as "absurd"). Discover's standing argument fails [*27] for the same reasons. The impact, if any, of Discover's "opt-out" provision may be addressed at trial.

Discover's contention that Plaintiffs cannot demonstrate irreparable harm is similarly meritless. The fact that some of the alleged co-conspirators have settled and agreed to remove their arbitration clauses for thee and a half years does not prevent Plaintiffs from demonstrating injury as a result of reduced choice and "a diminution in the overall quality of credit services offered to consumers." Ross v. Bank of Am., N.A. (USA), 524 F.3d 217, 221 (2d Cir. 2008).

B. Pro-Competitive Justifications

Finally, Plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment against Discover regarding the absence of pro-competitive justifications is premature. HN14[] In a Sherman Act "rule of reason" case, Defendants bear the burden of justifying their conduct only if Plaintiffs first prove the existence of an anticompetitive conspiracy. In re Tamoxifen Citrate Antitrust Litig., 466 F.3d 187, 201 n.13 (2d Cir. 2006). Here, the parties dispute whether the "rule of reason" standard applies, as Plaintiffs contend that a horizontal agreement to adopt arbitration is per se unlawful. And while Plaintiffs have demonstrated [*28] genuine issues for trial, they have not proven their case by a preponderance of the evidence, and may not be able to do so. Accordingly, this Court denies Plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment against Discover.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' motions for summary judgment are denied. Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment dismissing Citigroup's sixth affirmative defense is granted, and Plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment against Discover regarding the absence of pro-competitive justification is denied.

The Clerk of Court is directed to terminate the motions pending at ECF Nos. 301, 307, 311, and 312.

[*1175] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTION TO DISMISS

Now before the Court is Defendant Adobe Systems Inc.'s ("Adobe") motion to dismiss Plaintiff Free FreeHand's and Plaintiff Jabez Palmer's (collectively "Plaintiffs") first amended complaint. ECF No. 20. The Court held a hearing on the motion on November 8, 2011. Having considered the parties' briefing and arguments, the Court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Adobe's motion for the reasons explained below.

I. Factual Background

This antitrust case arises out of Adobe's 2005 acquisition of FreeHand, a professional vector graphic illustration software, which, prior to the 2005 acquisition, competed with Adobe's professional [2] vector graphic illustration software, Illustrator. FAC ¶ 1. Plaintiffs allege that "since acquiring FreeHand, Adobe has significantly raised the price of Illustrator while, at the same time, effectively removing FreeHand from the market by failing to update the program." Id.

Plaintiff Free FreeHand is a non-profit corporation comprising 5,500 members who are graphic design professionals and believe that FreeHand is a superior product to Illustrator. Id. ¶¶ 7-9. Free FreeHand members own FreeHand software licenses for either Windows or Macintosh, and most members have purchased software licenses for Illustrator. Id. ¶¶ 10-11. Plaintiff Jabez Palmer, a member of Free FreeHand, owns a software license for FreeHand and purchased a software license for Illustrator. Id. at ¶ 12.

In 1994, Adobe acquired Aldus, a software company that was licensed to market and sell FreeHand. Id. ¶ 57. The FTC challenged Adobe's acquisition of Aldus, charging that the effect of the acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly in the market for professional illustration software. Id. ¶¶ 58-59 (citing In the Matter of Adobe Sys. Inc., et al., 118 F.T.C. 940, 942 (Oct. 18, 1994)). [3] The FTC found that the Adobe-Aldus merger would: (1) increase the already high concentration in the relevant market; (2) eliminate Aldus as a substantial independent competitive force in the relevant markets; (3) eliminate actual, direct, and substantial competition between Adobe and Aldus; (4) eliminate competition between the two closest substitutes, Illustrator and FreeHand; (5) allow the merged firm unilaterally to exercise market power; (6) allow the merged firm to raise prices, either directly or through reduced discounting, promotion, or services, on either Illustrator or FreeHand or on both products; (7) allow the merged firm to reduce innovation by delaying or reducing product development; and (8) increase the likelihood of coordinated interaction. Id. ¶ 61.

On October 18, 1994, Adobe, Aldus, and the FTC signed a consent order divesting Adobe of FreeHand. The divestiture's purpose was "to ensure the continuation of FreeHand as an ongoing viable Professional Illustration program, to maintain FreeHand as an independent competitor in the Professional Illustration Software Business, and to remedy the lessening of competition resulting from the acquisition as alleged in the Commission's [4] complaint." Id. ¶ 62 (quoting Adobe, 118 F.T.C. at 946). The FTC also prohibited Adobe from acquiring FreeHand or any other professional illustration software for a period of 10 years. Id. ¶ 63 (citing Adobe, 118 F.T.C. at 947). In 2005, at the conclusion of the [*1176] 10 year non-acquisition period mandated by the FTC consent order, Adobe acquired FreeHand by purchasing Macromedia, which had itself acquired FreeHand in the intervening period. Id. ¶ 65.

Plaintiffs allege that "[t]here are two relevant product markets for antitrust analysis in this action: (1) the market for professional vector graphic illustration software for Macintosh operating systems (the 'Mac OS Market') and (2) the market for professional vector graphic illustration software for Windows operating systems (the 'Windows OS Market')." Id. ¶ 32. They allege that the geographic scope of these markets is global, or, in the alternative, the entire United States. Id. ¶ 33. Plaintiffs allege that Illustrator and FreeHand are the only products competing in the Mac OS Market and that Illustrator, FreeHand, and CorelDraw are the only products competing in the Windows OS Market. Id. ¶¶ 47-48. Plaintiffs allege that since acquiring [5] FreeHand, Adobe possesses 100% market share of the Mac OS Market and 80% of the Windows OS Market. Id. ¶¶ 52-53. Plaintiffs claim that Adobe "has the power to extract supracompetitive prices in the relevant markets." Id. ¶ 56.

Plaintiffs allege that "[t]here are currently no close substitutes for professional graphic illustration software, and no other product significantly constrains the price of this software." Id. ¶ 50. Plaintiffs also claim that there are high barriers to entry into the market.

First, Plaintiffs claim that "[m]arketing a technically comparable or even an improved software program would be difficult, time consuming, and unlikely because of network externalities associated with the current competitors' extensive installed user bases." Id. at 51.

Second, Plaintiffs claim that "any new software product would have to simultaneously overcome a second network effect in the commercial printer software market." Id. According to Plaintiffs, "[c]ommercial printers have their own software, which needs to be compatible with the files the designer sends to be printed. Commercial printers generally accept only Adobe, FreeHand, and, to a lesser extent, Corel files. Designers who [6] want to print commercially cannot use file types that commercial printers cannot accept." Id. ¶ 39.

Plaintiffs allege that since acquiring FreeHand, Adobe has continually and significantly increased the price of Illustrator. In 2004, prior to the acquisition, the price for Illustrator was $399. In 2005, presumably after the merger, Adobe raised the price of Illustrator to $499. In 2008, Adobe released a new version of Illustrator and again raised the price of Illustrator to $599. Id. ¶ 68.

Plaintiffs also allege that Adobe purposefully misled the public, fostering the perception that Adobe would continue to support and develop FreeHand. Id. ¶ 69. On June 1, 2006, MacWorld quoted an Adobe representative stating that the company "plans to continue to support Freehand," "that it would 'develop Freehand 'based on [its] customer's needs," and that the product would not be discontinued. Id. On May 16, 2007, Plaintiffs allege that Adobe revealed "its true intentions" when its product manager, Jack Nack, wrote in a blog article titled "FreeHand No Longer Updated; Moving to Illustrator" that Adobe would not "develop and deliver any new feature-based releases of FreeHand, or . . . deliver patches [7] or updates for new operating systems or hardware." Id. ¶ 70.

Plaintiffs allege that "Adobe has succeeded in ending competition" and "effectively acknowledged its intent to cripple innovation" in the relevant markets. Id. ¶ 72. Plaintiffs further claim that:

> [*1177] Adobe has used the asset of FreeHand in a different manner from the way FreeHand was used when and before FreeHand was acquired in the Adobe-Macromedia merger. Before the acquisition, FreeHand was an actively developed and supported piece of software and a living, breathing product. After the acquisition, Adobe has effectively crippled and killed FreeHand while scavenging its bones for features to incorporate into Illustrator.

Plaintiffs also allege that Adobe obtained and protects its monopoly power through anticompetitive conduct such as by "purchas[ing] and subsequent[ly] fail[ing] to update FreeHand," "crippling FreeHand," "providing materials to help consumers transition from FreeHand to Illustrator," and "bundling Illustrator . . . with other Adobe products . . . [thereby] limiting the ability of potential rival professional software manufacturers to enter the market without a full array of graphics software." Id. ¶¶ [8] 75-77. Plaintiffs also allege that, despite repeated requests from Free FreeHand members to release FreeHand's source code to the public, Adobe has refused to make its source code public. Id. ¶¶ 88-89.

Adobe's actions have allegedly harmed Plaintiffs by exacting "unlawful monopoly prices" for purchases of Illustrator and FreeHand. Id. ¶¶ 95, 97. Plaintiffs also face the potential harm of their versions of FreeHand becoming incompatible with future versions of computer operating software and losing their designs because images created in FreeHand are not useable when imported into Illustrator. Id. ¶ 97.

II. Judicial Notice

As a general rule, a district court may not consider any material beyond the pleadings in ruling on a 12(b)(6) motion. Lee v. Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 688 (9th Cir. 2001). However, a court may take judicial notice of "documents whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not physically attached to the pleading." Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 (9th Cir. 1994), overruled on other grounds by Galbraith v. County of Santa Clara, 307 F.3d 1119 (9th Cir. 2002). In ruling on this motion, the Court considers the Federal [9] Trade Commission's ("FTC") 1994 Consent Order, whose contents are alleged in the first amended complaint ("FAC") and whose authenticity no party questions. See In the Matter of Adobe Sys. Inc., et al., 118 F.T.C. 940, 1994 WL 16011114 (Oct. 18, 1994).

III. Procedural Background

Plaintiffs filed the instant lawsuit, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, on May 3, 2011. ECF No. 1. Adobe filed a motion to dismiss on July 7, 2011. ECF No. 10. On July 10, 2011, Plaintiffs filed their First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), which mooted Adobe's first motion to dismiss. ECF No. 19.

The FAC alleges claims for relief under the following statutes: (1) Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (2) Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18; (3) California Business and Professions Code § 16700 et seq.; (4) California Business and Professions Code § 17200 et seq.; (5) Washington Consumer Protection Act, RCW 19.86.020 et seq.; and (6) Washington Consumer Protection Act, RCW 19.86.040 et seq. Id. at 27-30. Plaintiffs seek the following relief: (1) treble damages; (2) an injunction requiring divestiture of FreeHand; and (3) attorney's fees and costs. Id. at 30.

Plaintiffs seek to represent [10] four classes as follows:

a. The first class, "Mac Damages Class," seeks damages only for violations [*1178] of 15 U.S.C. §§ 2, 18; Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq. and RCW 19.86.020 et seq. and is defined as:
All persons or entities that purchased FreeHand or Illustrator for a Macintosh operating system from at any time since Adobe's purchase of Macromedia in 2005 (the "Class Period").

b. The second class, "Windows Damages Class," seeks damages only for violations of 15 U.S.C. §§ 2, 18; Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq. and RCW 19.86.020 et seq. and is defined as:
All persons or entities that purchased FreeHand or Illustrator for a Windows operating system from at any time since Adobe's purchase of Macromedia in 2005 (the "Class Period").

c. The third class, "Mac Injunctive Class," seeks declaratory and injunctive relief only for violations of 15 U.S.C. §§ 2, 18; Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq. and RCW 19.86.020 et seq. and is defined as:
All persons or entities that currently use professional vector graphic illustration software on a Macintosh operating system, in addition to Free FreeHand.

d. The fourth class, "Windows Injunctive Class," seeks declaratory and injunctive [11] relief only for violations of 15 U.S.C. §§ 2, 18; Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq. and RCW 19.86.020 et seq. and is defined as:
All persons or entities that currently use professional vector graphic illustration software on a Windows operating system, in addition to Free FreeHand.

*Id.*at 22-23.
On August 3, 2011, Adobe filed the instant motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' FAC. ECF No. 20.

IV. Legal Standards

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of a complaint. Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir. 2001). On a motion to dismiss, "all allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to [Plaintiffs]." Facebook, Inc. v. MaxBounty, Inc., 274 F.R.D. 279, 282 (N.D. Cal. 2011) (citing Cahill v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996)); see also Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). However, the Court need not accept as true "allegations that contradict matters properly subject to judicial notice or by exhibit" or "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008). [12] While a complaint need not allege detailed factual allegations, it "must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). A claim is facially plausible when it "allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. at 1949.

As the Ninth Circuit has stated, "a claim may be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6) on the ground that it is barred by the applicable statute of limitations only when the running of the statute is apparent on the face of the complaint. A complaint cannot be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts that would establish the timeliness of the claim." Von Saher v. Norton Simon Museum of Art at Pasadena, 592 F.3d 954, 969 (9th Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 3055, 180 L. Ed. 2d 885 [*1179] (U.S. 2011) (internal citations and quotations omitted).

Claims sounding in fraud are subject to the heightened pleading requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). A plaintiff alleging fraud "must state with particularity the circumstances constituting [13] fraud . . . ." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). To satisfy this standard, the allegations must be "specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Semegen v. Weidner, 780 F.2d 727, 731 (9th Cir. 1985). Accordingly, claims sounding in fraud must allege "an account of the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentations." Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir. 2007).

If a court grants a motion to dismiss, leave to amend should be granted unless the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts. Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1130 (9th Cir. 2000).

V. Discussion

Adobe argues that Plaintiffs fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Adobe also argues that Plaintiffs' claims accrued in 2005 when, with the Department of Justice's approval, Adobe acquired FreeHand. Thus, Adobe contends that Plaintiffs' claims are barred by a four-year statute of limitations, which both parties agree apply to all of Plaintiffs' [14] claims. The Court analyzes the adequacy of Plaintiffs' pleading first and the statute of limitations second.

A. Adequacy of Federal Antitrust Claims

Adobe argues Plaintiffs have failed to properly plead an unlawful monopolization claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. The Court disagrees.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it a crime to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2 (2006). Section 4 of the Clayton Act, in turn, establishes a private right of action to "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws" and provides "threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U.S.C. § 15 (2006). Section 16 of the Clayton Act establishes a right to injunctive relief "against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 26 (2006).

To state an unlawful monopolization claim, a plaintiff must allege "(1) [p]ossession of monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) willful [15] acquisition or maintenance of that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury." SmileCare Dental Group v. Delta Dental Plan of Cal., Inc., 88 F.3d 780, 783 (9th Cir. 1996).

Plaintiffs have alleged, and Adobe does not dispute, that Adobe has monopoly power in the global and/or national Macintosh and Windows markets for professional vector graphic illustration software. FAC ¶¶ 32, 33, 47-48, 52-53, 56. Thus, Plaintiffs have alleged possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, the first element of a monopolization claim. Accordingly, the Court looks to whether Plaintiffs have adequately alleged that Adobe willfully acquired or maintained that power, and whether Adobe's conduct caused Plaintiffs' antitrust injury. FAC ¶¶ 110-11.

As the Supreme Court has stated, a Section 2 violation requires, "in addition to the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, 'the willful acquisition or [*1180] maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Verizon Commc'ns Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004). "The possession of monopoly power will not be found unlawful [16] unless it is accompanied by an element of anticompetitive conduct." Id. According to the Ninth Circuit, "[a]nticompetitive conduct is behavior that tends to impair the opportunities of rivals and either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way." Cascade Health Solutions v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 894 (9th Cir. 2008); see also Image Tech. Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1208 (9th Cir. 1997) (use of monopoly power "to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor" is anticompetitive conduct). As a sister court has observed, "'anticompetitive' conduct may include otherwise legal conduct." Tele Atlas N.V. v. NAVTEQ Corp., 05-CV-1673-RS, 2008 WL 4911230, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 13, 2008) (citing Trinko, 540 U.S. at 407; Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985); United States v. Microsoft, 253 F.3d 34, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001)) (emphasis in original).

Adobe argues that a series of practices that are neither exclusionary nor anticompetitive cannot combine to violate Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Reply 9. Plaintiffs, on the other hand, maintain that they can state a Section 2 [17] claim by alleging a series of practices that are anticompetitive, even if some of the activities would be lawful if viewed in isolation. Opp'n 11.

These positions are not inconsistent. Under the theory of monopoly broth, "[t]here are kinds of acts which would be lawful in the absence of monopoly but, because of their tendency to foreclose competitors from access to markets or customers or some other inherently anticompetitive tendency, are unlawful under Section 2 if done by a monopolist." City of Mishawaka v. Am. Elec. Power Co., 616 F.2d 976, 986 (7th Cir. 1980). The Ninth Circuit has likewise stated that it is not "proper to focus on specific individual acts of an accused monopolist while refusing to consider their overall combined effect." City of Anaheim v. S. Cal. Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1373, 1376, 1378 (9th Cir. 1992) (following City of Mishawaka, 616 F.2d 976); see also Tele Atlas, 2008 WL 4911230, at *1 ("[C]ourts must consider all of an alleged monopolist's related conduct in the aggregate.").

Thus, the Court analyzes the alleged anticompetitive practices below to determine whether, in the aggregate, they tend to reduce competition and maintain Adobe's monopoly power.

a. Post-Merger [18] Conduct and Monopoly Maintenance

Plaintiffs allege the following post-merger anticompetitive conduct: (1) charging monopolist prices; (2) discontinuing support for and development of FreeHand; (3) bundling Illustrator with other Adobe products; and (4) declining to release FreeHand's source code to the open source community. Adobe argues that none of these alleged acts, either independently or combined, violates the antitrust laws. See Mot. 12; Reply 7. The Court discusses each alleged anticompetitive act in turn.

i. Supracompetitive Prices

Plaintiffs allege that Adobe raised the price of Adobe from $399 to $499 in 2005, and again from $499 to $599 in 2008. FAC ¶ 68.

Plaintiffs do not explain, either in their complaint, or in their opposition brief, how higher prices for Illustrator tend to reduce competition in the relevant markets for professional vector graphics illustration [*1181] software. Adobe argues that unilateral decisions to increase price are entirely lawful, even if done by a monopolist. Mot. 12; Reply 7.

Although monopolist pricing, by itself, is insufficient to state a monopolization claim, the Court disagrees with Adobe's blanket statement that "even an alleged monopolist is entitled [19] to raise prices." Mot. 12. For example, when a company uses predatory pricing to reduce competition and then raises prices to a supracompetitive level, "[c]onsumers would not be harmed until the predator attained monopoly power through the predatory pricing and subsequently raised prices to supra-competitive levels to recoup the lost profits." In re Live Concert Antitrust Litig., 247 F.R.D. 98, 152 (C.D. Cal. 2007). Adobe's claim that an alleged monopolist is "entitled" to raise prices relies on a quotation from a Supreme Court opinion that discussed the lawfulness of raising prices when a monopoly is acquired lawfully. The Supreme Court noted that the offense of monopolization "requires, in addition to the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, 'the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Trinko, 540 U.S. at 407 (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). Although the Court stated that the "mere possession of monopoly power, and the concomitant charging of monopoly prices, is not only not unlawful; it is an important [20] element of the free-market system," the Court made clear that "monopoly power is unlawful [if] it is accompanied by an element of anticompetitive conduct." See id. (emphasis in original).

Plaintiffs allege that Adobe willfully acquired monopoly power through its acquisition of FreeHand in 2005. FAC ¶¶ 1, 75-76. The mere fact that the Department of Justice "cleared" the merger in 2005 — a fact that does not appear in the Complaint, but that Plaintiffs apparently concede — does not mean that Plaintiffs are precluded from alleging that the merger itself was unlawful. See, e.g., Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 315c (3d ed. 2007) (hereinafter "Areeda & Hovenkamp") (DOJ "lacks the power to immunize transactions generally" and DOJ clearance "cannot bind a court, a private plaintiff, or the FTC, although a court might choose to give it weight in the same way that it can consider enforcement guidelines."). Plaintiffs also claim that Adobe maintained its monopoly power through anticompetitive conduct such as discontinuing FreeHand and channeling FreeHand customers to Illustrator, which Adobe bundled with other Adobe products. FAC ¶¶ 1, 75-77. Thus, in the context of the [21] facts as pled, and read in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, Adobe, as a monopolist engaging in other alleged anticompetitive conduct to maintain that monopoly, would not be lawfully entitled to raise prices.

ii. Ceasing Development of FreeHand

Plaintiffs allege that since acquiring FreeHand in 2005, Adobe has not delivered any new features for FreeHand and has actively driven existing users of FreeHand to use Illustrator instead. FAC ¶¶ 70-72. Plaintiffs claim that Adobe acknowledged its intent to cease development of FreeHand and to cripple FreeHand's functionality on May 16, 2007. Id.

Adobe argues that all companies are entitled to make unilateral product line decisions, including discontinuing products, Mot. 13 (citing Glen Holly Entm't Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 352 F.3d 367, 372 (9th Cir. 2003)). [1]

[*1182] Adobe's argument relies on an overbroad reading of Ninth Circuit dictum. In reversing the district court's dismissal of plaintiff's antitrust claim, the Ninth Circuit [22] in Glen Holly stated that the district court was correct in noting that the antitrust laws "do not preclude any manufacturer from independently discontinuing a product line any more than they preclude a manufacturer from independently raising prices." Glen Holly, 352 F.3d at 372. This statement merely stands for the unremarkable proposition that not all manufacturer decisions to independently raise prices or discontinue product lines violate the antitrust laws. But the Ninth Circuit also noted that "[o]ne form of antitrust injury is coercive activity that prevents its victims from making free choices between market alternatives" and found that the alleged injury "flowed from the discontinuation of the only competing product on the market by agreement between the only two competitors in the market," resulting in "no viable choice between market alternatives." Id. at 374. Thus, Glen Holly does not preclude the possibility that a unilateral decision to discontinue a product line can be anticompetitive.

Adobe also argues that integrating acquired assets from FreeHand and removing a product from the market place is "rational and normal business conduct" that could only reduce a firm's purported [23] market power and give greater opportunities to its rivals. See Br. 13; Reply 7-8.

[1] To the extent that Adobe also relies on Brantley v. NBC Universal, Inc., 649 F.3d 1078, 2011 WL 2163961, at *5 (9th Cir. 2011), this decision was withdrawn on October 31, 2011, and has no precedential value.

The Court disagrees. As an initial matter, "the existence of valid business reasons in antitrust cases is generally a question of fact not appropriate for resolution at the motion to dismiss stage." Tucker v. Apple Computer, Inc., 493 F. Supp. 2d 1090, 1101 (N.D. Cal. 2006) (citing SmileCare Dental Group, 88 F.3d at 786).

Moreover, that Adobe was able to maintain its high market share, FAC ¶ 53, despite increasing Illustrator's price in 2008, FAC ¶ 68, after announcing that Adobe would essentially be discontinuing FreeHand in 2007, FAC ¶ 70, undermines Adobe's assertion that discontinuing FreeHand actually increased competition. It is possible that facts developed in discovery may show that discontinuing FreeHand benefited CorelDraw in the Windows Market. In the Mac Market, however, professional designers allegedly had no choice other than Illustrator if they wanted to purchase professional vector design software that was interoperable with the latest operating systems. FAC ¶ 72. Furthermore, as discussed below, Plaintiffs allege that Adobe was bundling Illustrator with other Adobe software products. Plaintiffs [24] also allege that Adobe encouraged existing FreeHand users to purchase the bundled Illustrator product. Id. ¶¶ 72-74. Thus, it is reasonable to infer that Adobe's discontinuation of FreeHand and channeling of FreeHand users to Illustrator made it more difficult for potential competitors of Illustrator, who did not have a full array of graphics software, to enter the market. This barrier to entry is in addition to the already existing barrier due to the alleged "network externalities associated with Illustrator and FreeHand's extensive installed user bases and adoption as the standard file types accepted by commercial printers." Id. ¶ 54. Therefore, in the context of the facts as alleged in this case, it is reasonable to infer that Adobe's alleged crippling of FreeHand harmed competition.

[*1183] Adobe's reliance on Arminak & Assocs., Inc. v. Saint-Gobain Calmar, Inc., 789 F. Supp. 2d 1201, 2011 WL 2268066 (C.D. Cal. 2011), for the proposition that Adobe's decision to cripple FreeHand was procompetitive, is unavailing. The Arminak court stated that integrating acquired assets into existing products to "more effectively compete for [the acquired product's] former customers and [25] meet customer needs" represents "vigorous competition on the merits of the type that the antitrust laws seek to promote." *789 F. Supp. 2d 1201, Id. at 7. Arminak is inapposite because plaintiff there was defendant's competitor, not a consumer, and thus had not suffered antitrust injury. Furthermore, unlike here, the plaintiff in Arminak had abandoned its monopoly broth theory of liability, *789 F. Supp. 2d 1201, id.at 3, and the procedural posture was summary judgment, not a motion to dismiss. Moreover, based on the evidence produced in discovery, the court found that defendant's alleged anticompetitive conduct, which included introduction of a new product line and integration of acquired assets into defendant's existing product line, was actually procompetitive. *789 F. Supp. 2d 1201, Id. at 4-5. Here, by contrast, reading the alleged facts in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, it is reasonable to infer that Adobe's discontinuation of FreeHand, in aggregate with Adobe's other conduct, reduced competition. Accordingly, Plaintiffs can attempt to adduce evidence in discovery to support this allegation.

iii. Bundling

Plaintiffs argue that Adobe "bundled Illustrator with other Adobe graphic design products, raising significant entry barriers for [26] potential rivals to enter the market without a full array of graphics software." Opp'n 10 (citing FAC ¶ 77). At the hearing, Plaintiffs admitted that Adobe's alleged bundling could not stand alone as a Sherman Act violation, but Plaintiffs argued that Adobe's alleged bundling could form part of a monopoly broth claim. Hr'g Tr. 15:4.

Adobe did not challenge Plaintiffs' bundling claims in its opening brief. In its reply, Adobe argued that bundling almost always benefits consumers and that Plaintiffs' bundling claim is neither well pled nor relevant to the claims and relief that Plaintiffs seeks to pursue. Reply 8 (citing Cascade Health Solutions, 515 F.3d 883).

Although the Court agrees with Adobe, and Plaintiffs concede, that Plaintiffs have not pled sufficient facts for a standalone bundling claim, the Court disagrees with Adobe that Plaintiffs' allegations of bundling are not relevant to Plaintiffs' Section 2 claim. As stated earlier, "anticompetitive conduct may include otherwise legal conduct." Tele Atlas N.V. v. NAVTEQ Corp., 05-CV-1673-RS, 2008 WL 4911230, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 13, 2008). Here, Plaintiffs have alleged that "Adobe's bundling of Illustrator constitutes a significant [27] entry barrier by limiting the ability of potential rival professional software manufacturers to enter the market without a full array of graphics software." FAC ¶ 77. Plaintiffs have therefore alleged that Adobe's bundling foreclosed competition, especially when viewed in light of Adobe's discontinuation of FreeHand and active encouragement of existing FreeHand users to switch to Illustrator. Accordingly, Plaintiffs can adduce evidence to show that Adobe's bundling foreclosed competition. Cf. Masimo Corp. v. Tyco Health Care Group, L.P., No. 2-CV-4770-MRP, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26916, 2004 WL 5907538 (C.D. Cal. June 10, 2004) (allowing plaintiffs to present evidence on whether bundled rebates reduced competition and therefore constituted anticompetitive conduct for monopoly maintenance claim).

iv. Withholding of Source Code from Open Source Community

Plaintiffs argue that "Adobe has also refused requests to release FreeHand's source code to the open source [*1184] community, notwithstanding that FreeHand is a 'dead' product as far as Adobe is concerned." Opp'n 11 (citing FAC ¶ 11). Adobe, on the other hand, argues that it has no duty to license its technology to foster competition or to give away its technology for others [28] to clone. Mot. 13. At the hearing and in their briefing, Plaintiffs were unable to point the Court to any authority supporting the proposition that a company's refusal to give out its source code is anticompetitive or violates the antitrust laws. Hr'g Tr. 13:7-11.

The Court agrees with Adobe that Adobe has no duty to give away its technology for others to clone. See United States v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 648 F.2d 642, 647 (9th Cir. 1981). Accordingly, the Court does not consider this conduct in evaluating the overall effect of Adobe's alleged anticompetitive conduct.

v. The Aggregate Effect of the Anticompetitive Conduct

In summary, Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged that Adobe willfully acquired monopoly power and maintained that power through anticompetitive conduct. If, as alleged, Adobe ceased the development of FreeHand while steering existing FreeHand users to a bundled product, thereby further raising already high barriers to entry, it is plausible to infer that this conduct tended "to impair the opportunities of rivals" and "did not further competition on the merits." Cascade Health Solutions, 515 F.3d at 894.

This is not a case "where none of the alleged conduct was anticompetitive, [29] even when combined." Tele Atlas, 2008 WL 4911230, at * 2 (quoting Cal. Computer Prods., Inc. v. IBM Corp., 613 F.2d 727, 745 (9th Cir. 1979)). Indeed California Computer, on which Adobe relies, found that monopoly broth was inapplicable where a competitor-plaintiff benefited from defendant's alleged anti-competitive behavior. Thus, in that case plaintiff did not suffer antitrust injury. It is therefore inapposite here, where, as discussed below, consumers allegedly suffered antitrust injury. Therefore, California Computer does not foreclose the availability of the monopoly broth theory in these circumstances.

Furthermore, this Court need not decide whether a plaintiff can survive a motion to dismiss by alleging a series of procompetitive acts that, in the aggregate, combine to violate the antitrust laws. The allegations of anticompetitive acts, and their alleged aggregated anticompetitive effect, fall squarely within the bounds of established monopoly broth theory. Cf. Tele Atlas, 2008 WL 4911230, at *1.

Thus, Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged the second element of a monopolization claim: willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power.

b. Antitrust Injury

In its Reply, Adobe raises [30] for the first time that Plaintiffs have not alleged that Adobe's conduct caused them any antitrust injury. Reply 8. The Court disagrees.

To have standing to bring an antitrust claim, a plaintiff must allege antitrust injury, that is, injury "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). "[I]njury, although causally related to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as 'antitrust injury' unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition." Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 [*1185] S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990) (internal quotations and alterations omitted).

Plaintiffs claim that Adobe's anticompetitive conduct has injured them by: (1) allowing Adobe to charge Plaintiffs supracompetitive prices for Illustrator, FAC ¶ 68; (2) decreasing innovation in the market for professional vector graphics software, FAC ¶ 73; and (3) rendering Plaintiffs' existing artwork created on FreeHand obsolete, FAC ¶¶ [31] 95, 97. These are the types of injuries that commonly satisfy the antitrust standing requirement. Glen Holly, 352 F.3d at 374; Pool Water Prods. v. Olin Corp., 258 F.3d 1024, 1034 (9th Cir. 2001) ("[T]he antitrust laws are only concerned with acts that harm 'allocative efficiency and raise[ ] the price of goods above their competitive level or diminish[ ] their quality.'"); see also *Abbyy USA Software House, Inc. v. Nuance Commc'ns Inc., Case No. 08-CV-01035, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90308, 2008 WL 4830740, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 6, 2008) (noting that direct purchasers of software would have antitrust standing stemming from injury of paying supracompetitive prices); Catch Curve, Inc. v. Venali, Inc., 519 F. Supp. 2d 1028, 1036 (C.D. Cal. 2007) (allegations of stifling innovation in the market sufficient for antitrust injury). Thus, Plaintiffs have pled antitrust injury.

Accordingly, Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts to state a monopoly maintenance claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

B. Adequacy of State Law Claims

The parties devote no more than three pages to discussing Plaintiffs' state law claims. Both parties agree that Plaintiffs' claims under the California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.; [32] the Washington Consumer Protection Act RCW 19.86.020; and the Washington antitrust statutes RCW 19.86.040 et seq., rise and fall with Plaintiffs' federal claims. Hr'g Tr. 6:18-7:6. The Court found above that Plaintiffs have adequately stated a claim for their federal antitrust claims. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have also stated a claim under these state statutes.

Plaintiffs also seek relief under California Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq. Adobe argues that the Cartwright Act does not address unilateral conduct because it is modeled after Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which Plaintiffs do no not invoke here. Mot. 15 (citing Apple Inc. v. Psystar Corp., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1190, 1204 (N.D. Cal. 2008)). The Court agrees with Adobe. Flagship Theatres of Palm Desert, LLC v. Century Theatres, Inc., 198 Cal. App. 4th 1366, 1386, 131 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519 (2011) ("[T]he Cartwright Act contains no provision parallel to the Sherman Act's prohibition against monopolization (15 U.S.C. § 2), and the Cartwright Act applies only to a 'combination' involving 'two or more persons' (§ 16720), not to unilateral conduct.") (emphasis in original); see also Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1478 (9th Cir. 1986) [33] (noting that Cartwright Act does not address unilateral conduct).

To state a claim under the Cartwright Act, Plaintiffs "must allege that (1) there was an agreement, conspiracy, or combination between two or more entities; (2) the agreement was an unreasonable restraint of trade under either a per se or rule of reason analysis; and (3) the restraint affected interstate commerce." In re Late Fee & Over-Limit Fee Litig., 528 F. Supp. 2d 953, 961, 965 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (noting that the analysis under the Cartwright Act mirrors the analysis under Section 1 of the Sherman Act); see also Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great W. Fin. Corp., 69 Cal. 2d 305, 318, 70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481 (1968). Plaintiffs have alleged no agreement, conspiracy, or combination between two or more entities.

[*1186] Plaintiffs contend that there is a valid Cartwright Act claim "[i]f a 'single trader' pressures customers or dealers into pricing arrangements . . . ." Opp'n 11 (quoting Davis v. Pac. Bell, 204 F. Supp. 2d 1236, 1243 (N.D.

Cal. 2002)). In Davis, Judge Illston denied defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiffs' Cartwright Act Claim where defendant telephone company coercively prevented plaintiffs-telephone customers from migrating to competitors [34] by making misrepresentations and by interrupting and disconnecting telephone service to migrating customers. Even if Davis stands for the proposition that unilateral conduct can form the basis for a Cartwright claim if it amounts to coercion, Plaintiffs do not allege that Adobe coerced Plaintiffs by, for example, misleading them into buying its products or by taking punitive action against Plaintiffs seeking to migrate to Adobe's competitors.

Thus, Plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claim fails as a matter of law. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' third claim for relief is DISMISSED with leave to amend.

C. Statute of Limitations as to All Claims

The parties agree that all of Plaintiffs' claims are governed by a four-year statute of limitations. Opp'n 3; Reply 2. However, the parties' briefing focuses on the federal antitrust claims and tolling doctrines, and Defendants do not suggest that Plaintiffs' state law claims are time-barred for any independent reasons. See Mot. 14; Reply 11 ("Plaintiffs [state law claims] . . . are bootstrapped to their federal antitrust claims"). Accordingly, the Court limits its statute of limitations analysis to whether Plaintiffs' claims under the federal antitrust laws, Section 2 [35] of the Sherman Act and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, are time-barred.

Absent tolling, any federal antitrust cause of action accruing prior to May 3, 2007, the date Plaintiffs filed their original complaint, is time-barred. "Generally, [an antitrust cause] of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business. . . . [E]ach time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act and that, as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971); see also AMF, Inc. v. Gen. Motors Corp., 591 F.2d 68, 70 (9th Cir. 1979) (same).

Adobe argues that Plaintiffs' cause of action accrued when Adobe acquired Macromedia in 2005 and should therefore be dismissed as time-barred. Adobe contends that "courts consistently hold that if a monopoly is created by a single identifiable act and is not perpetuated by an ongoing policy, the [four-year] statute of limitations runs from the [time of] commission of the act, notwithstanding that high prices may last indefinitely [36] into the future." Mot. at 6 (citing Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, § 320c4).

Plaintiffs contend that even if the Adobe-Macromedia merger itself triggered the statute of limitations in 2005, their claims are not time-barred under four tolling theories: (1) the continuing violation doctrine; (2) the discovery rule; (3) the "new use" exception to the Clayton Act's statute of limitations; and (4) fraudulent concealment. The Court analyzes each of these theories in turn.

1. Continuing Violation

Plaintiffs argue that their antitrust claims are not barred by the statute of limitations because Adobe's monopolization constitutes a "continuing violation."

Adobe, on the other hand, contends that the "continuing violation" doctrine does not apply in the merger context. To support [*1187] this position, Adobe cites cases declining to apply the continuing violation doctrine to claims under Section 7 of the Clayton Act. Mot. 6 (citing Midwestern Mach. Co. v. Nw. Airlines, Inc., 392 F.3d 265, 271 (8th Cir. 2004); Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039, 1052 (8th Cir. 2000)). Although the Midwestern Machinery court stated that "[o]nce a merger is completed, there is no continuing violation possible under [37] § 7 [of the Clayton Act] that would justify extending the statute of limitations beyond four years," 392 F.3d at 271, the court made clear that "merged firms are still subject to the Sherman Act's prohibitions on monopolization or attempts to monopolize." Id. at 272 (emphasis added). See also Smith v. eBay Corp., 10-CV-3825-JSW, 2012 U.S.

Dist. LEXIS 1211, 2012 WL 27718, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 5, 2012) (applying continuing violation doctrine to toll Section 2 monopolization claim in context of an acquisition).

For Plaintiffs' Clayton Act Section 7 claim, the Court finds below in Section V.C.2 that Plaintiffs can rely on the "new use" exception to the Clayton Act's statute of limitations. Thus, the Court need not reach the question of whether the continuing violation doctrine applies to Plaintiffs' claim under Section 7 of the Clayton Act. Accordingly, the Court limits its analysis under the continuing violation doctrine to Plaintiffs' claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, where the doctrine applies. Smith v. eBay, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1211, 2012 WL 27718, at *3.

Under the "continuing violation" doctrine, "each overt act that is part of the [antitrust] violation and that injures the plaintiff . . . starts the statutory period running again, [38] regardless of the plaintiff's knowledge of the alleged illegality at much earlier times." Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997) (internal citations and quotations omitted); Pace Indus. v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 237 (9th Cir. 1987) ("A continuing violation is one in which the plaintiff's interests are repeatedly invaded and a cause of action arises each time the plaintiff is injured."). In the Ninth Circuit, an overt act restarts the statute of limitations if it: (1) is "a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act"; and (2) "inflict[s] new and accumulating injury on the plaintiff." Pace, 813 F.2d at 237.

Plaintiffs allege that Adobe acquired monopoly power and charged supracompetitive prices in 2005, after the merger was consummated. Hr'g Tr. 11:14-15. Thus, Plaintiffs suffered injury, and their monopolization claim initially accrued as early as 2005. However, as discussed in Section V.A.1 above, Plaintiffs' allegations also support the reasonable inference that Adobe perpetuated its monopoly power and caused Plaintiffs new injury after the merger, through the following "new and independent acts:" (1) ceasing development of FreeHand; [39] (2) channeling existing FreeHand customers to Illustrator; and (3) bundling Illustrator with other Adobe software products.

These are not mere "reaffirmations" of the merger such as "holding or using assets in the same manner as at the time of acquisition," Concord Boat, 207 F.3d at 1052, or "continu[ing] indefinitely to receive some benefit as a result of an illegal act performed in the distant past." Aurora Enters., Inc. v. NBC, Inc., 688 F.2d 689, 694 (9th Cir. 1982). Rather, Adobe's alleged post-merger acts here are more like an online auction provider's changes to its electronic payment policy after acquiring an online payment service provider, which a sister court found to "constitute overt acts, . . . [which] inflicted new and accumulating harm to [plaintiffs]." Smith v. eBay, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1211, 2012 WL 27718, at *4 (taking note of eBay's banning of Google Checkout as an acceptable form of payment and doubling [*1188] the PayPal Buyer Protection to continue eBay's alleged efforts to monopolize the market for online payment services for use in online auctions). Just as in Smith v. eBay, where plaintiffs' monopolization claim was not based "solely on the fact that eBay acquired Paypal," 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1211, [WL] at *5, here, [40] Plaintiffs' claims are not based solely on the fact that Adobe acquired Macromedia.

The exact date of Adobe's alleged post-merger anti-competitive acts and when Plaintiffs suffered injury as a result of these acts is unclear from the face of the FAC. However, it is reasonable to infer that Adobe did not discontinue its updates to FreeHand until after Adobe allegedly announced publicly its intent to do so on May 16, 2007, FAC ¶ 70. It is also reasonable to infer that Plaintiff suffered antitrust injury as a result, in the form of supracompetitive prices, in 2008. FAC ¶ 68.

Taking the facts in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, Plaintiffs' Section 2 monopolization claim therefore appears to be timely under the continuing violation doctrine. At the very least, it does not appear "beyond doubt that [Plaintiffs] can prove no set of facts that would establish the timeliness of their claim." Von Saher, 592 F.3d at 969. Accordingly, Adobe's motion to dismiss is DENIED as to this claim.

2. "New Use" Exception

Plaintiffs argue that their Clayton Act Section 7 claim is also timely under the "new use" exception to the Clayton Act's four-year statute of limitations. Opp'n 6 (citing Abbyy, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90308, 2008 WL 4830740, at *6). [41] Under the "new use" exception, "[i]f assets are used in a different manner from the way that they were used when the initial acquisition occurred, and that new use injures the plaintiff, he or she has four years from the time that the injury occurs to sue." See also Midwestern Mach., 392 F.3d at 273 (citing Klehr, 521 U.S. at 188; Zenith Radio, 401 U.S. at 338).

Adobe argues that the "new use" exception is available only where a merger "cause[d] the plaintiff no injury at the time it occurred, but subsequently the acquired assets were used in an anticompetitive way not contemplated at the time of the acquisition and caused the plaintiff injury." Reply 5 (citing Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, § 329c5 at 311-12). Adobe does not cite to any cases, let alone any cases binding on this Court, for imposing these requirements. Moreover, the Court has been unable to find any case imposing them. As such, the Court declines to require Plaintiffs to plead that they suffered no injury at the time of the merger in order to avail themselves of the "new use" exception to the Clayton Act's statute of limitations.

Plaintiffs argue that Adobe has used FreeHand differently from the way that it was used when [42] the initial acquisition occurred, and that this new use has injured Plaintiffs within the limitations period. See Opp'n 6. Plaintiffs allege that prior to the 2005 merger, "FreeHand was an actively developed and supported piece of software and a living breathing product." FAC ¶ 74. Plaintiffs allege that after the merger, Adobe "effectively crippled and killed FreeHand while scavenging its bones for features to incorporate into Illustrator." Id. Plaintiffs allege that Adobe ceased its development of FreeHand while steering existing FreeHand users to purchase the bundled Adobe Illustrator product, thereby raising barriers to entry and decreasing competition. FAC ¶¶ 72, 74, 77. Plaintiffs allege that they were injured by supracompetitive prices and decreased innovation. See FAC ¶¶ 68, 73. Thus, Plaintiffs have alleged that Adobe used FreeHand in a different manner from the way that it was used at the time of the merger, and that the new use injured [*1189] Plaintiffs. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have pled sufficient facts to avail themselves of the "new use" exception to the Clayton Act's statute of limitations.

The case law Adobe cites does not support Adobe's position. In Abbyy USA Software House, [43] Inc., the court held that the "new use" exception was unavailable to plaintiff where plaintiff did "not allege any specific and separate conduct, following the acquisition of Caere Corporation, that identifies any new use of the assets that would reset the time for the tolling of the statute of limitations." 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90308, 2008 WL 4830740, at *6. Indeed, the Abbyy court's holding rested on the fact that plaintiff, a competitor of defendant's, had benefited from defendant's alleged post-merger anticompetitive conduct. Here, by contrast, Plaintiffs have alleged that FreeHand was used differently pre- and post-merger, and that they have suffered injury as a result.

Midwestern Machinery is similarly unavailing to Adobe. In that case, on summary judgment, plaintiffs had shown no facts supporting their claim that Northwest's acquired assets were used differently because plaintiffs provided no information about the pre-merger use. Here, by contrast, Plaintiffs have made the requisite allegations that FreeHand was used differently pre-and post-merger, and will have the opportunity to produce sufficient facts in discovery to support the "new use" exception if Adobe raises the statute of limitations defense [44] again on summary judgment. Moreover, the Court disagrees that, as pled, Adobe's post-merger use of FreeHand was the "unabated inertial consequence" of the merger itself. Mot. 11 (quoting Midwestern Mach., 392 F.3d at 271). Taking the alleged facts in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, Adobe did not initially intend to discontinue its development of and support for FreeHand. See FAC ¶ 69. As alleged in the FAC, Adobe's new use of FreeHand discussed above did not occur until at least May 16, 2007, when Adobe announced that it was changing course. FAC ¶ 70.

The Court is also not persuaded by Adobe's policy argument that tolling the statute of limitations on Plaintiffs' Clayton Act claim in this case will deter all mergers in the future. Not all mergers create monopolies with complete or nearly complete market power as alleged here. Moreover, "[t]here are kinds of acts which would be lawful in the absence of monopoly but, because of their tendency to foreclose competitors from access to markets or customers or some other inherently anticompetitive tendency, are unlawful under [Section 2 of the Sherman Act] if done by a monopolist." City of Mishawaka, 616 F.2d at 986. Thus, finding [45] Plaintiffs' Clayton Act claim timely here will not necessarily lead to the result that all post-merger firms would indefinitely face the specter of liability if they decided to raise prices or discontinue products after merging. Only those post-merger firms with monopoly power who use such tactics, along with other anti-competitive conduct, to maintain their monopoly power would have anything to fear. As discussed in Sections V.A.1.a and V.C.1, where the continuing violation doctrine applies, post-merger anticompetitive conduct by monopolists is already prohibited by Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Thus, Adobe's policy argument is a red herring.

In sum, it is not apparent from the face of the FAC that Plaintiffs can prove no set of facts to avail themselves of the "new use" exception to the statute of limitations for their Section 7 Clayton Act claim. Thus, the Court cannot dismiss this claim as time-barred. Accordingly, Adobe's motion as to this claim is DENIED. Given that the viability of Plaintiffs' remaining state law claims under California's UCL and the Washington's Consumer Protection [*1190] Act is predicated on the viability of Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims, Adobe's motion as [46] to these state law claims is also DENIED.

3. Discovery Rule

The discovery rule "postpones the beginning of the limitations period from the date when the plaintiff is wronged to the date when he discovers he has been injured." In re Copper Antitrust Litig., 436 F.3d 782, 789 (7th Cir. 2006). Adobe argues that Plaintiffs have not cited any Ninth Circuit cases applying the discovery rule to antitrust cases. Reply 2. The Court need not decide whether the discovery rule applies to Plaintiffs' claims because the Court finds that Plaintiffs' well-pled claims are not time-barred under the continuing violation doctrine and the "new use" exception.

4. Fraudulent Concealment

Plaintiffs argue that the statutes of limitations on their claims are also tolled by the fraudulent concealment theory. Because the Court has already found that the statutes of limitations for Plaintiffs' well-pled claims are tolled by other doctrines, the Court need not reach this argument.

VI. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Adobe's motion to dismiss with leave to amend as to Plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claim and DENIES Adobe's motion as to all other claims. If Plaintiffs wish to amend their complaint to [47] address the deficiencies identified above, they must do so within 21 days.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Currently before the Court are Defendants Green Mountain Coffee Roasters, Inc. ("GMCR"), Keurig Inc., Van Houtte USA Online, Inc., and Van Houtte USA Holdings, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss or for Judgment on the Pleadings (Doc. 44) and Brief in Support (Doc. 45); Plaintiff Coffee.org, Inc.'s ("Coffee.org") Response (Doc. 51); and Defendants' Reply (Doc. 52). Also pending are Defendants' Motion to Stay Discovery and Continue Trial Date (Doc. 53) and Brief in Support (Doc. 54). After due consideration of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss or for Judgment on the Pleadings (Doc. 44), the Court finds that the Motion should be GRANTED. In light of the Court's decision to dismiss [*2] this case, Defendants' Motion to Stay Discovery and Continue Trial Date (Doc. 53) is DENIED AS MOOT.

I. Background

Plaintiff Coffee.org is an Arkansas corporation with its principal place of business in Fort Smith, Arkansas. Coffee.org operates an e-commerce website selling coffee and coffee-related products online. One of the most popular coffee products sold by Coffee.org was the "K-cup," a single-serve coffee capsule that is instrumental in brewing one cup of coffee at a time through the use of a patented machine sold by GMCR and Keurig, Incorporated ("Keurig"). K-cups are purchased by millions of consumers in the United States. According to the Amended Complaint, Coffee.org has sold over 8,400,000 units of K-cups through its online business.

The other Defendants to this action are Van Houtte USA Online, Inc., and Van Houtte USA Holdings, Inc., which are wholly-owned subsidiaries of Defendant GMCR, and Vistar Corporation, which is a distributor of GMCR. [1]

Since early 2008, Coffee.org purchased K-cups for resale on its website from a number of suppliers, including Defendant GMCR, Timothy's Coffees of the World, Inc., Diedrich Coffee, Inc., and Wolfgang Puck, packaged by Van Houtte (LJVH Holdings, Inc.). Coffee.org alleges that Defendant GMCR has acquired essentially all distributors of K-cups in violation of state and federal antitrust laws. Specifically, Coffee.org asserts that in 2006, GMCR acquired Keurig, Inc., the company that patented the K-cup and the coffee brewing system that uses the K-cup. Then, in 2009, GMCR acquired Timothy's Coffees of the World, Inc., which distributes its coffee in K-cups. In May of 2010, GMCR acquired Diedrich Coffee, Inc., which is also a K-cup supplier; and by September 2010, GMCR had acquired all shares of LJVH Holdings, Inc., which included the Van Houtte, Bigelow, and Wolfgang [*4] Puck licensed brands of K-cup coffees.

By letter dated January 20, 2011, which is attached to the Amended Complaint, GMCR unilaterally terminated its business relationship with Coffee.org, thereby ending Coffee.org's existing supply source for K-cups. (Doc. 43-1). Coffee.org contends that GMCR has sought to create and perpetuate a monopoly in the market of the sale of K-cups, particularly in the e-commerce channel of distribution, in violation of the Arkansas Unfair Practices Act, Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-201, et seq., and the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1-2. Coffee.org maintains that GMCR has sold or offered to sell its Keurig coffee brewers at less than cost with the intent to injure Coffee.org, and GMCR's termination of the business relationship between it and Coffee.org will eventually put Coffee.org out of business. Additionally, Coffee.org asserts that GMCR has combined with Keurig, Timothy's, Diedrich, Van Houtte, and various other companies for the purpose of forming a monopoly on the internet supply of K-cups, drive out all competitors, and fix prices of K-cups in violation of Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-301, et seq., and the Sherman Act. In its plea for relief, Coffee.org asks that [*5] the Court issue an injunction precluding the termination of the business relationship between Coffee.org and GMCR and ordering GMCR to remunerate Coffee.org pursuant to a quantum meruit theory of recovery for the value of Coffee.org's advertising and promotion of K-cups, Coffee.org's substantial customer base, and the goodwill conferred upon GMCR by Coffee.org.

An ex parte temporary restraining order in this case was entered by the state court on February 3, 2011. GMCR removed the case to federal court on February 14, 2011. The restraining order expired on February 28, 2011. GMCR then moved to dismiss the case for failure to state a claim on March 1, 2011, asserting that Plaintiff failed to allege any sales below cost within Arkansas, as required under the Arkansas Unfair Practices Act, failed to allege any relevant product market, and lacked both antitrust injury and antitrust standing. Further, GMCR maintained that there is no private right to a cause of action under the Arkansas monopoly statutes, found at Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-301, et seq. The Court granted leave for Plaintiff to amend its Complaint on November 15, 2011, which resulted in the addition of several Defendants and federal [*6] claims for antitrust violations, conspiracy, monopolization, and illegal restraint of trade pursuant to the Sherman and Clayton Acts. The Court then denied GMCR's Motion to Dismiss (Doc. 6) as moot after allowing Plaintiff to file its Amended Complaint asserting new causes of action. On November 18, 2011, the Court denied Plaintiff's request for a preliminary injunction, finding that Coffee.org did not have a probability of success on the merits on any of its claims. (Doc. 41).

[1] Plaintiff stated in its Reply Brief: "Plaintiff no longer desires to pursue claims against Vistar Corporation and accordingly believes that its claims under Section 1 may be subject to dismissal." (Doc. 51, p. 7). However, Plaintiff [*3] has not formally dismissed Defendant Vistar Corporation from this action, nor has Vistar Corporation moved separately to dismiss Plaintiff's claims against it. Accordingly, for purposes of deciding Defendants' Motion to Dismiss or for Judgment on the Pleadings, Vistar Corporation shall be considered a Defendant in this lawsuit.

II. Standard of Review

Defendants now ask the Court to enter judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). As a general rule, a motion for judgment on the pleadings is reviewed under the same standard as a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Ginsburg v. InBev NV/SA, 623 F.3d 1229, 1233 (8th Cir. 2010). Under this standard, a court may dismiss a complaint only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984); Knapp v. Hanson, 183 F.3d 786, 788 (8th Cir. 1999) ("A motion to dismiss should be granted only if 'it appears beyond doubt that [*7] the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle him to relief.'") In applying this standard, the Court must presume all factual allegations in the Complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party. See Whitmore v. Harrington, 204 F.3d 784, 784 (8th Cir. 2000).

"Judgment on the pleadings is appropriate when there are no material facts to resolve and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Mills v. City of Grand Forks, 614 F.3d 495, 497-98 (8th Cir. 2010)(citing Faibisch v. Univ. of Minn., 304 F.3d 797, 803 (8th Cir. 2002)). In ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the Court may not consider matters outside the pleadings; however, it is acceptable for the Court to consider exhibits attached to a complaint, materials that are necessarily embraced by a complaint, and materials that are part of the public record. Mattes v. ABC Plastics, Inc., 323 F.3d 695, 698 (8th Cir. 2003); 5A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1006 (2d ed. 1990)(court may consider "matters of public record, orders, items appearing in the record of the case, and exhibits attached to the complaint"). [*8] The Eighth Circuit has held that in considering a motion for judgment on the pleadings, a district court may properly rely on a transcript of proceedings before another court on an earlier, related action involving the same parties. Porous Media Corp. v. Pall Corp., 186 F.3d 1077, 1079 (8th Cir. 1999). Accordingly, in deciding the instant Motion, the Court will refer to and rely on the pleadings and orders filed in this case, as well as a transcript of a hearing that took place on April 14, 2011, before the Honorable Magistrate Judge James R. Marschewski, regarding Defendants' Motion to Dissolve a Temporary Restraining Order (Doc. 31). [2]

III. Discussion

A. Arkansas Unfair Practices Act Violations, Ark. Code Ann. 4-75-201, et seq.

The Arkansas Unfair Practices Act's purpose is "to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition by prohibiting unfair and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest [*9] competition is destroyed or prevented." Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-204. Pursuant to this statute, "[a]ny person, firm, private corporation, or municipal or other public corporation . . . may maintain an action to enjoin a continuance of any act or acts in violation of this subchapter and, if injured thereby, for the recovery of damages." Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-211(a).

Plaintiff claims that GMCR engaged in business in Arkansas to sell, offer for sale, or advertise for sale Keurig brand coffee brewers, which utilize K-cups, at less than cost to the vendor for the purpose of injuring competitors and destroying competition in violation of Ark. Code. Ann. § 4-75-209(a)(1). Even if the Court accepted as true Plaintiff's contention that GMCR sold Keurig coffee brewers at below cost in order to increase demand for its K-cups, such behavior would not constitute a violation of the Arkansas Unfair Practices Act. Selling below a competitor's price is markedly different from engaging in a sustained effort to destroy competition in a product area by selling below cost over a prolonged period of time. It is not illegal to sell items below cost as "loss leaders" to entice consumers to purchase products. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. American Drugs, Inc., 319 Ark. 214, 221, 891 S.W.2d 30 (Ark. 1995). [*10] Moreover, the Arkansas Supreme Court interpreting the Arkansas Unfair Practices Act has announced:

[2] Plaintiff and Defendant GMCR were represented by counsel at this hearing, and both parties had the opportunity to present witnesses, introduce evidence, engage in oral argument, and fully brief the issues prior to the hearing.

> "[o]ur statute plainly does not contemplate a prima facie case of predation based on loss-leader sales, and we are not willing to invalidate, and indeed render illegal, the technique of using loss-leader products or services without a clear directive from the General Assembly."

Id.

Plaintiff asserts that GMCR obtained a controlling interest in co-Defendant Keurig in June of 2006, and afterward "included the sale of its AH (at home) brewers approximately at cost or sometimes at a loss when factoring in the incremental costs related to sales . . ." (Doc. 43, ¶ 51). However, at the hearing held before the Magistrate on April 14, 2011, Jim Travis, Vice President of Sales for GMCR, testified that he was unaware of any sales of Keurig brewers below cost (Doc. 31, p. 108-09). Even if such sales occurred, William McClure, the CEO of Plaintiff Coffee.org, testified that the sale of coffee brewers constituted only 4% of his company's sales since the inception of the company, though the sale of K-cups constituted 84% of Coffee.org's business. Id. at p. 38. Accepting the 4% figure as true, as the Court [*11] is required to do in evaluating a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the extent of Plaintiff's injury from alleged below-cost sales of Keurig coffee brewers is negligible at best, if such injury occurred at all; and the likelihood of competition being affected, let alone destroyed, by any alleged below-cost sales is similarly negligible. Moreover, Mr. McClure testified at the April 14 hearing that he did not know how Coffee.org, as a purveyor of K-cups, could be injured by a sale or giveaway of any Keurig machine, since Coffee.org benefitted when additional Keurig brewers appeared on customers' countertops. Id. at p. 83. Considering the allegations in the Amended Complaint and its attachments, as well as the contents of the April 14, 2011, hearing transcript, the Court accordingly finds that Plaintiff fails to state a claim under the Arkansas Unfair Practices Act.

B. Arkansas Monopoly Statute Violations, Ark. Code Ann. §4-75-301, et seq.

There is no private right to a cause of action pursuant to the subchapter of the Arkansas Code relating to unfair monopolies. The Eighth Circuit has affirmed this point of law. See Baxley-Delamar Monuments, Inc. v. Am. Cemetery Association, 843 F.2d 1154, 1158 (8th Cir. 1988). [*12] Instead, the monopoly statutes are to be enforced by and through the Attorney General for the State of Arkansas, and private individuals or corporations lack the authority to assert violations of the monopoly statutes. Ark. Code Ann. § 4-75-308 ("All actions authorized and brought under this subchapter shall have precedence on motion of the Attorney General . . .") and § 4-75-315(b) ("The Attorney General also may bring a civil action in the name of the state, as parens patriae on behalf of natural persons residing in this state . . ."). Plaintiff therefore fails to state a claim under this statute. [3]

C. Quantum Meruit

Turning to Plaintiff's claim for quantum meruit or unjust enrichment, in order to prevail, Plaintiff must show that GMCR received something of value to which it was not entitled and which it must restore. See Guaranty National Ins. v. Denver Roller, Inc., 313 Ark. 128, 854 S.W.2d 312 (Ark. 1993). Recovery via the equitable remedy of quantum meruit is based on quasi-contract, or contract implied in law. Dews v. Halliburton Industries, Inc., 288 Ark. 532, 536, 708 S.W.2d 67 (Ark. 1986). [*13] No legal contract exists between the parties in a quasi-contract situation; rather, the basis for recovery is that a party has benefitted from services undertaken by another party, whether those services were requested or not. Id. at 537.

In the case at bar, GMCR and Coffee.org had an at-will business relationship, wherein GMCR or its wholly-owned subsidiaries sold K-cups to Coffee.org. At no time did Coffee.org enter into a licensing agreement to sell GMCR's patented K-cup product, nor did GMCR have a legal, contractual obligation to provide K-cups for re-sale to Coffee.org. Nevertheless, Coffee.org contends that it has expended significant funds on advertising, sales, and marketing of K-cups and on development of good will with its customer base. Coffee.org further argues that unless GMCR is prohibited from terminating its business relationship with Coffee.org, GMCR will be unjustly enriched by virtue of receiving Coffee.org's base of customers who purchase K-cups.

Plaintiff's quantum meruit argument is flawed in that Plaintiff's customers who purchase K-cups are also GMCR's customers. This is because the K-cup is a licensed product owned by GMCR, and therefore, GMCR receives some [*14] benefit from all K-cup sales to online customers. This is true whether Plaintiff or any number of online retailers make the sales. Coffee.org merely purchases K-cups for resale; the product itself is Defendant GMCR's and any sales of such product are realized in whole or in part by Defendant. Because Coffee.org's customers are, by definition, also GMCR's customers, Plaintiff cannot state a claim for quantum meruit.

A second, independent reason why Plaintiff's quantum meruit argument must fail is that there is substantial evidence that Plaintiff's online marketing strategy of actively denigrating the K-cup brand potentially resulted in a loss of goodwill to GMCR and a loss in profits. See Doc. 31, pp. 74-77 and 79. Plaintiff has marketed the K-cup on its website as a product that is both detrimental to the environment and too costly compared to other coffee products in a side-by-side comparison. Although Plaintiff did offer GMCR's product for sale on its website and in fact sold many units of product prior to 2011, Plaintiff has failed to state a claim that GMCR has been unjustly enriched despite Coffee.org's marketing methods and negative advertising.

D. Conspiracy and Restraint of Trade, [*15] Sherman Act § 1 and Clayton Act § 15[4]

Plaintiff alleges that Defendants have entered into a conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The Sherman Act provides that every "contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C.A. § 1.

Initially, the Court observes that simply because Plaintiff alleges an unlawful restraint of trade in its Complaint does not mean that the Court is bound to accept this legal conclusion as true, even on a motion to dismiss. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009)(citing Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). "Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949.

The alleged restraint of trade at issue here is the refusal of a wholesaler or supplier (GMCR) to sell its product (K-cups) to a retailer (Coffee.org). [*16] The Supreme Court found in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Service, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S.Ct. 2072, 2090, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992), that "in some instances one brand of a product can constitute a specific market." However, "[t]he proper market definition . . . can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the 'commercial realities' faced by consumers." Id. Defendant GMCR has an online service for customers to purchase K-cups, but there are also many online retailers of K-cups besides GMCR and Plaintiff. In addition, GMCR has established contractual relationships with online retailers of its licensed K-cup products, but it also has an at-will relationship with a host of other online suppliers of K-cups, including Bed Bath & Beyond, Target, Wal-Mart, and Kohl's. Consumers can also make online purchases of K-cups at Amazon.com. In light of the economic realities faced by consumers of K-cups in the case at bar, the Court cannot find that Defendant is placing an unlawful restraint on trade on K-cups.

Furthermore, the Court does not consider the relevant market in this case to be the single, licensed K-cup product. It is well-established that when a court engages in analysis of a party's alleged anti-competitive [*17] behavior, the relevant product market must first be defined to include all products that are reasonably interchangeable. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962); United States v. E.I. du Pont d Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). A single trademarked product, such as GMCR's patented and trademarked K-cups, is not likely to constitute a specific market. E.I. du Pont, 351 U.S. at 393. Instead, the relevant product market must include all products that are reasonably interchangeable with the K-cup brewers and coffee packs, such as single-cup or "pod" brewers, single-cup or "pod" coffee packs, T-disc brewers and coffee packs, and reusable single-cup coffee containers. The product market must also include all current and potential methods of distribution of the product. See Ryko Mfg. Co. v. Eden Services, 823 F.2d 1215, 1234 (8th Cir. 1987). The Court finds, therefore, that the relevant product market, as defined by Coffee.org, is too narrow and must be rejected.

According to its Amended Complaint, Coffee.org maintains that co-Defendants GMCR, Keurig, Van Houtte USA Online, Inc., and Van Houtte USA Holdings, Inc., conspired to refuse to deal with Plaintiff and fix the price [*18] of K-cups in a manner contrary to law. The relevant fact regarding the non-GMCR Defendants is that all of them are either wholly-owned subsidiaries or assets/brands owned by GMCR. (Doc. 43 at ¶¶ 3, 4, 15, 93, and 109). As such, any agreements between GMCR and the other Defendants cannot violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act, since joint activities of a parent company and its wholly-owned subsidiaries cannot constitute a contract, combination, or conspiracy that violates federal antitrust law. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)("If a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary do 'agree' to a course of action, there is no sudden joining of economic resources that had previously served different interests, and there is no justification for § 1 scrutiny"). Therefore, Plaintiff does not state a claim for conspiracy between GMCR and its subsidiaries.

Plaintiff has also alleged that Defendant Vistar Corporation, a distributor for GMCR and a company from which Plaintiff purchased K-cups in the past, has acted in concert with GMCR to refuse to deal with Coffee.org and has "conspired and agreed to restrict and limit the distribution and sale of K-cups to Coffee.org." [*19] (Doc. 43, ¶ 61). Such a practice, if true, would not constitute a per se violation. Vertical non-price restrictions, such as are alleged between supplier GMCR and distributor Vistar, are governed by the "rule of reason" analysis because such restrictions "promote interbrand competition by allowing the manufacturer to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of his products." Double D Spotting Service, Inc. v. Supervalu, Inc., 136 F.3d 554, 559 (8th Cir. 1998), citing Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 54, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977).

The rule of reason analysis requires an inquiry into GMCR's market power and effect on competition. Double D, 136 F.3d at 558. In the instant case, Plaintiff has defined the relevant product market as internet sales of K-cups in the United States. (Doc. 43, ¶ 77). As discussed above, because this definition of the relevant product market is far too narrow, it is rejected. The correct definition of the relevant product market must be broadened to include all single-serve coffee products available for sale through the internet. In the case at bar, consumers have numerous retailers available throughout the United States from which to purchase single-serve [*20] coffee products, including K-cup coffee and coffee brewers. Even Coffee.org's company representative testified that he was able to secure K-cups from sources other than GMCR, including Kohl's or Midwest Supply. (Doc. 31, pp. 70-71.)

To prove a violation of the Sherman Act, it must be shown that only a small percentage of purchasers have alternative suppliers to whom they could practicably turn in the event that a defendant supplier's anti-competitive actions result in a price increase. Morgenstern v. Wilson, 29 F.3d 1291, 1296 (8th Cir. 1994); Ryko, 823 F.2d at 1234 (Sherman Act §1 claim based on exclusive dealing agreement depends on availability of alternative methods of distribution). The Court finds that so many alternate suppliers of the K-cup exist that e-commerce consumers would not be adversely affected if they could not purchase K-cups through Plaintiff. Accordingly, after considering the relevant product and geographic markets and the alleged restraint on trade asserted by Plaintiff, there does not appear to be any anti-competitive market effect resulting from GMCR's decision to refuse to allow Plaintiff to sell its K-cup product. Plaintiff's Sherman Act, Section 1 claim must [*21] therefore be dismissed for failure to state a claim. [5]

[5] Plaintiff in its Response to the instant Motion asserts for the first time: "since the filing of this action, additional facts have come to light, and Plaintiff believes that Defendants are liable to the Plaintiff for violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act because of the Defendants' illegal tying of the sale of Keurig brewers to the sale of K-cups." (Doc. 51, p. 7). This new tying claim does not appear in the Amended Complaint and therefore will not be considered.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides that every "person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . ." 15 U.S.C.A. § 2. Plaintiff maintains that all Defendants, collectively, have monopoly power in the relevant market for the internet distribution of K-cups or have attempted to monopolize the internet distribution of K-cups. Plaintiff further contends that if GMCR's acts go unchecked, it may use its [*22] unlawful monopoly power to dictate K-cup prices and method of distribution, thereby hurting consumers.

To assert a violation under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, a party must show that an alleged monopolist demonstrates monopoly power, which is the power to control prices or exclude competition from the relevant market. E.I. du Pont, 351 U.S. at 391. "Although this is normally a factual inquiry, courts have not hesitated to dismiss antitrust claims where it is clear that the alleged geographic market is too narrow or implausible. " Acre v. Spindletop Oil & Gas Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108284, 2009 WL 4016116 (E.D. Ark. Nov. 18, 2009).

As stated above, the alleged product market asserted by Plaintiff is invalid due to its narrowness and implausibility, as it consists of GMCR's own patented and trademarked K-cup product and nothing more. GMCR does not have a monopoly on the single-brew business as a whole; indeed the evidence is clear that a number of products other than the K-cup deliver single-brew coffee, and consumers have a wide variety of internet and non-internet sources for single-brew coffee products and supplies.

The Supreme Court case of Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 610-11, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985), [*23] announced that the unilateral termination of a voluntary course of dealing was considered anti-competitive when such refusal to deal "was not motivated by efficiency concerns" and indicated that the alleged monopolist "was willing to sacrifice short-run benefits and consumer goodwill in exchange for a perceived long-run impact on its smaller rival." In Verizon Communs., Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 409, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004), the Supreme Court elaborated on its reasoning in Aspen Skiing by finding that a refusal to deal can be unlawful only if the monopolist sacrifices profits today in the hope of reaping greater returns from eliminating competition in the future.

In comparing the facts of Aspen Skiing with those in the case at bar, GMCR's refusal to deal is plainly not violative of the antitrust laws. There is no indication that GMCR refused to deal with Coffee.org for anti-competitive purposes or to secure untold profits. Furthermore, the Court finds that GMCR is not a monopolist, and therefore, any refusal by GMCR to deal with Coffee.org cannot, by definition, violate any antitrust law. GMCR decided to discontinue its business relationship with Coffee.org because of [*24] disagreement over Coffee.org's marketing strategies. See Doc. 31, p. 124. Specifically, GMCR's company representative testified at the April 14, 2011, hearing before the Magistrate that there were three specific reasons why GMCR decided to discontinue the business relationship it had with Coffee.org: 1) there was no contract between it and Coffee.org; 2) Coffee.org could not be a licensed "KAD" or "Keurig Authorized Distributor" by virtue of the fact that Coffee.org had only an online presence, but no brick-and-mortar retail store; and 3) Coffee.org was, according to GMCR, "representing our brands as though they had some ownership in the marking [sic] decisions, so they were creating blog space and website pages without ever discussing with us the use of our trademark." Id.

The Eighth Circuit summarized the issue well in Ryko Manufacturing Co. v. Eden Services, 823 F.2d 1215, 1234 (8th Cir. 1987), when it observed: " . . . the concern of antitrust law is the protection of competition, not individual competitors." As inconvenienced and indignant as Coffee.org is at GMCR's refusal to authorize it as a licensed Keurig Authorized Distributor, the Court finds that the Complaint fails to [*25] state a Sherman Act Section 2 violation for monopolization or attempted monopolization.

IV. Conclusion

After consideration of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss or for Judgment on the Pleadings (Doc. 44), it appears clear that Plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle it to relief. Accordingly, as there are no material facts to resolve and Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law, the Court enters judgment on the pleadings in favor of Defendants.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss or for Judgment on the Pleadings (Doc. 44) is GRANTED. Plaintiff's claims against all Defendants are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. In light of the Court's decision to dismiss this case, Defendants' Motion to Stay Discovery and Continue Trial Date (Doc. 53) is DENIED AS MOOT.

IT IS SO ORDERED this 15th day of February, 2012.

Opinion

ORDER (1) GRANTING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO PARTIALLY DISMISS DEFENDANTS SAM TIMAS AND SANDY WARD'S COUNTERCLAIM TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT, AND (2) GRANTING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO DISMISS DEFENDANT ALOHA ISLAND GOLD, LLC'S COUNTERCLAIM

I. INTRODUCTION.

Plaintiff The Gold Refinery, LLC ("TGR"), buys and resells gold, usually in the form of personal jewelry. TGR is suing Independent Agents ("IAs"), individuals that, in return for commissions, solicited customers to sell gold to TGR. Compl. ¶¶ 2, 4, Aug 25, 2011, ECF No. 1. TGR claims that, while serving as TGR's IAs, Defendants Sam Timas and Sandy Ward formed Aloha Island Gold ("Aloha Island"), a company that competed [*3] directly with TGR. Id. ¶¶ 22-23. TGR sues Aloha Island as well as Timas, Ward, and eighteen other former or current IAs, claiming that Defendants have stolen TGR's proprietary business methods, customer lists, and distributors. Id. ¶ 1. Timas and Ward have counterclaimed, and Aloha Island has filed a separate counterclaim.

Two motions brought by TGR are now before the court. The first seeks dismissal of nine claims in the Timas and Ward counterclaim, and the second seeks dismissal of the Aloha Island counterclaim. The court grants both motions.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND.

Both TGR and Aloha Island buy and resell gold. They use "multi-level" or "network" marketing. Compl. ¶ 11; Sam Timas and Sandy Ward's Counterclaim Against The Gold Refinery, LLC For Violation of Hawai`i Franchise Investment Law, Unfair Competition, Breach of Contract, Tortious Breach of Contract, Defamation, Negligent Misrepresentation, Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith, Illegal Restraint of Trade, and Punitive Damages ("Timas and Ward Counterclaim") ¶ 9, Sept. 9, 2011, ECF No. 17-1; Defendant Aloha Island Gold, LLC's Counterclaim ("Aloha Island Counterclaim") ¶ 8, Oct, 20, 2011, ECF No. 4. Multi-level marketing usually [*4] involves independent contractors who earn commissions through sales on behalf of a company. Those independent contractors may also recruit other independent contractors and earn commissions based on sales by those recruits. TGR refers to its IAs' recruits as "junior IAs." Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶ 11. Amway and Avon are well-known examples of multi-level marketing companies. See Compl. ¶¶ 1-4.

TGR enlists IAs to arrange home-based gold-selling parties or events. Id. ¶ 2. Potential customers are invited to a party or event at which an IA purchases gold, usually personal jewelry, from the attendees, using money advanced by TGR. Id.; Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶ 9. The IAs then turn the gold over to TGR. Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶ 9. According to TGR, Aloha Island also hosts gold-selling parties and competes directly with TGR. Compl. ¶ 22.

One becomes a TGR IA by signing up online. Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶ 10. The potential IA "agrees" to TGR's "Terms and Conditions" by clicking an "I agree" box on TGR's website. Id.

On September 15, 2010, Timas and Ward allegedly agreed to be IAs for TGR. Id. ¶ 12. They allege that, from the beginning of their relationship with TGR, TGR "engaged [*5] in conduct that was designed to, and ultimately did, sabotage" their business and their relationships with their junior IAs. Id. ¶ 14. For example, TRG allegedly "constantly berated" Timas and Ward and failed to advance them enough funds to host their parties. Id. ¶ 14. TGR also allegedly failed to assist Timas and Ward in training their junior IAs. Id. ¶ 15.

Timas and Ward terminated their relationships with TGR about two months after having signed up. Id. ¶ 19. In November or December 2010, a number of other TGR IAs also terminated their relationships with TGR (collectively, the "former IAs"). Aloha Island Counterclaim ¶ 10. Some of them entered into independent contractor agreements with Aloha Island. Id.; Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶ 19. According to TGR, on December 16, 2010, Timas and Ward formed Aloha Island. Compl. ¶ 22.

Aloha Island alleges that, when TGR discovered its former IAs' agreements with Aloha Island, TGR sent the former IAs cease and desist letters threatening legal action if they continued to work with Aloha Island. Aloha Island Counterclaim ¶ 11. In their separate counterclaim, Timas and Ward describe the same cease and desist letters but do not mention Aloha Gold [*6] at all. Timas and Ward allege that TGR sent their junior IAs cease and desist letters threatening legal action if they worked with Timas and Ward to host gold-selling parties. Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶ 19. Timas and Ward contend that, as a result, their junior IAs "quit the gold party business permanently," causing Timas and Ward to lose several weeks of profits and many party representatives. Id. For its part, Aloha Gold makes nearly identical allegations, except that the agreement and relations it says many of the former IAs allegedly terminated or abandoned were with Aloha Island. Id. ¶ 13.

On August 25, 2011, TGR filed suit against Defendants, alleging, inter alia, that Defendants misappropriated TGR's trade secrets, tortiously interfered with TGR's contracts and TGR's prospective business advantage, were unjustly enriched, competed unfairly, and violated the Hawaii Uniform Deceptive Trade Practice Act. Compl. ¶¶ 45-123. On September 25, 2011, Timas and Ward counterclaimed against TGR, asserting ten counts, including, inter alia, breach of contract, defamation, and violations of the Hawaii Franchise Act and the Hawaii Antitrust Act. TGR seeks dismissal of nine of those counts, [*7] moving under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for failure to state a claim and under Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for failure to plead fraud with particularity. On October 20, 2011, Aloha Island counterclaimed against TGR for tortious interference with contractual relations, and for tortious interference with prospective business advantage. TGR seeks dismissal of those counts on the ground that Aloha Island fails to state a claim.

III. LEGAL STANDARDS.

A. Rule 12(b)(6).

Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides: "Every defense to a claim for relief in any pleading must be asserted in the responsive pleading if one is required. But a party may assert the following defense[] by motion: . . . (6) failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted[.]"

Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) may be based on either (1) the lack of a cognizable legal theory, or (2) insufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory. Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dept., 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1988) (citing Robertson v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 749 F.2d 530, 533-34 (9th Cir. 1984)). To state a claim, a pleading must contain a "short and plain [*8] statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). While Rule 8 does not demand detailed factual allegations, "it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

On a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the court takes all allegations of material fact as true and construes them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Marcus v. Holder, 574 F.3d 1182, 1184 (9th Cir. 2009). To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949. "Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 554). Whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief is "context-specific," and such a determination "requires the reviewing [*9] court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. at 1950.

When reviewing motions to dismiss brought under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the court is generally limited to the contents of the complaint. Sprewell v. Golden State Warriors, 266 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2001); Campanelli v. Bockrath, 100 F.3d 1476, 1479 (9th Cir. 1996). If matters outside the pleadings are considered, the Rule 12(b)(6) motion is treated as one for summary judgment. See Keams v. Tempe Tech. Inst., Inc., 110 F.3d 44, 46 (9th Cir. 1997); Anderson v. Angelone, 86 F.3d 932, 934 (9th Cir. 1996). However, courts may "consider certain materials—documents attached to the complaint, documents incorporated by reference in the complaint, or matters of judicial notice—without converting the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment." United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 908 (9th Cir. 2003). Documents with contents that are alleged in a complaint may also be considered in ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, if no party questions its authenticity. See Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 453-54 (9th Cir. 1994), overruled on other grounds by Galbraith v. Cnty of Santa Clara, 307 F.3d 1119, 1125 (9th Cir. 2002).

B. [*10] Rule 9(b).

Usually, a party's pleading need only contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). However, Rule 9(b) requires that, when fraud or mistake is alleged, "a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

An allegation of fraud is sufficient if it "identifies the circumstances constituting fraud so that the defendant can prepare an adequate answer from the allegations." Neubronner v. Milken, 6 F.3d 666, 672 (9th Cir. 1993) (internal citations and quotations omitted). "Averments of fraud must be accompanied by the who, what, when, where, and how of the misconduct charged." Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1124 (quoting Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003)) (internal quotation marks omitted). To sufficiently identify the circumstances that constitute fraud, a plaintiff must identify such facts as the times, dates, places, or other details of the alleged fraudulent activity. Neubronner, 6 F.3d at 672. A plaintiff must also explain why [*11] the alleged conduct or statements are fraudulent. In re GlenFed, Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d 1541, 1548 n.7 (9th Cir. 1994) (en banc), superseded by statute on other grounds by 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4.

When a court exercises diversity jurisdiction, state substantive law determines the elements of the claims, but federal procedural requirements apply. "[W]hile a federal court will examine state law to determine whether the elements of fraud have been pled sufficiently to state a cause of action, the Rule 9(b) requirement that the circumstances of the fraud must be stated with particularity is a federally imposed rule." Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1125 (internal citations and quotations omitted).

A court treats a motion to dismiss under Rule 9(b) like a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). Vess, 317 F.3d at 1107.

IV. ANALYSIS.

A. Timas and Ward's Counterclaim.

Timas and Ward assert ten claims: Count 1: "Violation of Hawai`i Franchise Investment Law, H.R.S. § 482E-6(1) (Bad Faith)"; Count 2: "Violation of Hawai'i Franchise Investment Law, H.R.S. § 482E-2 (Failure to Provide or File Offering Circular)"; Count 3: "Violation of Hawai'i Franchise Investment Law, H.R.S. § 482E-9(a), H.R.S. § 482E-6(2), and H.R.S. ch. 480 [*12] (Unfair Competition)"; Count 4: "Breach of Contract"; Count 5: "Tortious Breach of Contract"; Count 6: "Defamation"; Count 7: "Negligent Representation"; Count 8: "Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing"; Count 9: "Counterdefendant's Covenants Not to Compete are Unenforceable and Constitute an Illegal Restraint of Trade under the Hawai`i Antitrust Act"; and Count 10: "Punitive Damages." TGR seeks dismissal of all counts except Count 6. [1]

1. Counts 1, 2 and 3.

Counts 1, 2, and 3 assert claims under Hawaii's Franchise Investment Law, chapter 482E of the Hawaii Revised Statutes. TGR argues that Counts 1, 2, and 3 fail to state claims because, under Hawaii law, TGR is not a franchisor and did not have a franchisor/franchisee relationship with Timas and Ward. See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 482E-2 (defining a "franchise").

Timas and Ward allege that TGR is a franchisor under section 482E-2 and that "the Agreement" granted Timas and Ward franchise rights. Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶ 22. It is unclear [*13] what agreement the counterclaim refers to. Paragraph 10 describes the Terms and Conditions that TGR's IAs assented to online, while paragraph 12 alleges that, on September 15, 2010, Timas and Ward agreed to be IAs for TGR pursuant to different provisions in "the Agreement."

Assuming "the Agreement" and the Terms and Conditions are different contracts, Timas and Ward do not plead sufficient facts to base claims on the Agreement. The first element of a franchise is the existence of an agreement. See Haw. Rev. Stat. § 482E-2 (defining a "franchise" as an "oral or written contract or agreement, either expressed or implied"). But aside from alleging that the Agreement was a franchise agreement, Timas and Ward provide insufficient relevant identifying information. It is unclear whether the Agreement was oral, written, or implied, or what rights and obligations each party had under the Agreement. A pleading need not exhaustively describe a contract, but it must describe it at least enough so its essential terms are discernable.

In their counterclaim, Timas and Ward merely recite formulaically the elements of a franchise. This is insufficient to state a claim. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949.

Timas [*14] and Ward allege that, under "the Agreement," TGR "granted [Timas and Ward] a license to use TGR's trade name, service mark, trademark, logotype or related characteristic in which there is a community interest in the business of the offering, selling, or distributing goods or services." Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶ 12. They further allege that they "were required to pay directly or indirectly, a franchise fee, namely a monthly fee for access to TGR's 'back room' information without which they could not do business as an IA." Id.

These allegations are taken nearly verbatim from section 482E-2 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes. Section 482E-2 defines a franchise as an:

> oral or written contract or agreement, either expressed or implied, in which a person grants to another person, a license to use a trade name, service mark, trademark, logotype or related characteristic in which there is a community interest in the business of offering, selling, or distributing goods or services at wholesale or retail, leasing, or otherwise, and in which the franchisee is required to pay, directly or indirectly, a franchise fee.

What is missing from Timas and Ward's allegations is any factual basis for the assertion [*15] that a franchise existed, such as a description of what trade name, service mark, trademark, logotype or related characteristic was covered by the purported franchise and what Timas and Ward were licensed to do or use. Counts 1, 2, and 3 are dismissed without prejudice given the failure to plead sufficient facts. [2]

[1] While TGR's motion states that it seeks dismissal of Count 6, TGR presents no arguments regarding that claim. TGR's reply clarifies that Count 6 is not in issue on TGR's present motion.

[2] TGR argues as an alternative ground for dismissal of Counts 1, 2, and 3 the lack of allegation by Timas and Ward that they paid a franchise fee. TGR contends that the reference by Timas and Ward to a monthly fee to access "back room information"

2. Count 4.

Count 4 asserts breach of contract. It [*16] alleges that TGR materially breached "the Agreement" by failing to advance Timas and Ward enough funds, provide adequate training for the junior IAs, pay Timas and Ward their commissions, maintain proper records and accurately weigh the gold, and maintain an accurate gold party calendar. Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶ 43. TGR also allegedly violated the Agreement by harassing and berating Timas and Ward and their junior IAs. Id.

As the court stated with respect to Counts 1, 2, and 3, Timas and Ward do not provide sufficient factual information about the Agreement to sustain a claim based on it. Nor do they even suggest what provisions TGR allegedly violated. This court is not saying that, to state a breach of contract claim, Timas and Ward must quote the breached contractual provision, refer to a contract page or paragraph, or follow some other rigid format. But they do need to provide some indication of what TGR was obligated to do with respect to advancing funds, training junior IAs, paying commissions, records, weighing gold, and maintaining a party calendar, if they are alleging deficiencies in those areas. Otherwise, TGR cannot determine, for example, if the alleged breach concerning [*17] payment of commission goes to timeliness or amount. Count 4 cannot be said to give TGR adequate notice as to the basis for a breach of contract claim. As Count 4 does not plead sufficient facts, it is dismissed without prejudice.

3. Count 5.

Count 5 asserts tortious breach of contract. It alleges that TGR's breach of contract (alleged in Count 4) was tortious "because TGR acted willfully and in reckless disregard of its obligations as a Franchisor, both under the terms of the Agreement and Hawai`i law." Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶¶ 48, 50.

In Francis v. Lee Enterprises, Inc., 89 Haw. 234, 244, 971 P.2d 707, 708 (Haw. 1999), the Hawaii Supreme Court greatly restricted claims for tortious breach of contract:

> Hawai'i law will not allow a recovery in tort, including a recovery of punitive damages, in the absence of conduct that (1) violates a duty that is independently recognized by principles of tort law and (2) transcends the breach of the contract.

Timas and Ward do not allege in Count 5 that TGR committed an independent tort beyond the alleged breach of contract.

Timas and Ward argue that their allegation that TGR falsely accused them of stealing money, see Timas and Ward Counterclaim [*18] ¶ 18, goes to a tortious breach of contract. While tort law may indeed impose an independent duty on TGR to refrain from falsely accuse people of stealing, Count 5 does not allege a cognizable breach over and above Count 4, the breach of contract claim. The court's reading of Count 5 is that it is based on TGR's breach of contract, which Timas and Ward claim was willful and in reckless disregard of its obligations to TGR under the contract. Count 5 does not refer to TGR's alleged false accusation. Rather, the false accusation allegation forms the basis of Timas and Ward's defamation claim (Count 6).

At the hearing on this motion, Timas and Ward indicated that they were not challenging the dismissal of Count 5. Given the limitations Hawaii law places on tortious breach of contract claims, further amendment of Count 5 would be futile. Count 5 is dismissed with prejudice.

4. Count 7.

Count 7 asserts a claim for negligent representation. It alleges that TGR negligently made material misstatements of fact that Timas and Ward relied on to their detriment. TGR argues that Count 7 actually alleges fraud and is therefore subject to the heightened pleading standard under Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

cannot be read as going to any franchise fee. A franchise fee is "any fee or charge that a franchisee . . . is required to pay or agrees to pay for the right . . . to continue a business under a franchise agreement." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 482E-2. TGR notes that a fee for information is not included in the nonexclusive statutory list of fees that qualify as franchise fees. This argument by TGR may be better suited to a summary judgment motion than to a motion to dismiss. In any event, as the court dismisses Counts 1, 2, and 3 or other grounds, it need not address this alternate ground.

TGR [*19] is unpersuasive on this point. Although a negligent misrepresentation claim in some jurisdictions may be subject to Rule 9(b), a negligent misrepresentation claim under Hawaii law is not. Compare Neilson v. Union Bank of California, 290 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1141 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (analyzing negligent misrepresentation under California law and stating that it is "well-established in the Ninth Circuit that both claims for fraud and negligent misrepresentation must meet Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirements"), with Smallwood v. NCsoft Corp., 730 F. Supp. 2d 1213, 1231-32 (D. Haw. 2010) (holding that, because a negligent misrepresentation claim under Hawaii law does not require intent, it is not subject to Rule 9(b)) (citations omitted), and *Peace Software, Inc. v. Hawaiian Elec. Co., Inc., Civ. No. 09-00408 SOM/LEK, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107433, 2009 WL 3923350, at 6-7 (D. Haw. Nov. 17, 2009) (declining to apply Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard to negligent misrepresentation under Hawaii law because the defendant did not establish that negligent misrepresentation requires intent).

Hawaii law provides that the elements of a negligent misrepresentation claim are: "(1) false information be supplied as a result of [*20] the failure to exercise reasonable care or competence in communicating the information; (2) the person for whose benefit the information is supplied suffered the loss; and (3) the recipient relies upon the misrepresentation." Ass'n of Apartment Owners of Newton Meadows v. Venture 15, Inc., 115 Haw. 232, 256, 167 P.3d 225, 263 (Haw. 2007) (quoting Blair v. Ing, 95 Haw. 247, 269, 21 P.3d 452, 474 (Haw. 2001)). By contrast, the elements of fraud under Hawaii law are "1) false representations made by the defendant, 2) with knowledge of their falsity (or without knowledge of their truth or falsity), 3) in contemplation of plaintiff's reliance upon them, and 4) plaintiff's detrimental reliance." Fisher v. Grove Farm Co., Inc., 123 Haw. 82, 103, 230 P.3d 382, 403 (Haw. Ct. App. 2009).

Count 7's allegations correspond to the elements of negligent misrepresentation, not fraud. Timas and Ward allege that TGR "negligently" made false statements, that Timas and Ward relied on those statements, and that they have suffered monetary loss as a result. They do not allege a key element of fraud: that TGR knew its alleged statements were false. Count 7 thus need not meet the heightened pleading standard [*21] under Rule 9(b).

In its reply, TGR states that the allegations in Count 7 do not even comply with Rule 8. It is true that Count 7 recites the elements of a negligent misrepresentation claim without providing facts that make such a claim plausible on its face. Count 7 does not identify the statements that were allegedly made negligently. It alleges that, had Timas and Ward known the "true facts," they would not have become IAs with TGR, but it does not state what those "true facts" were. Count 7 does not plead sufficient facts to state a negligent misrepresentation claim. The court would ordinarily not countenance an argument raised for the first time in a reply. However, as other claims are being dismissed with leave to amend, efficiency is served by addressing Count 7's failure to state a claim at this time. Count 7 is therefore dismissed without prejudice.

Count 8 asserts that TGR breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, which it contends is incorporated into the Agreement that TGR allegedly entered into with Timas and Ward. This claim in essence asserts the tort of "bad faith." See Best Place v. Penn AM. Ins. Co., 82 Haw. 120, 128, 920 P.2d 334, 342 (Haw. 1996) [*22] (adopting tort of bad faith for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in an insurance contract).

Hawaii law generally does not recognize tort claims for breach of good faith or fair dealing outside the insurance context. See id. at 132, 920 P.2d at 346 (stating, "[T]he policy considerations surrounding the adoption of the tort of bad faith in the insurance context are atypical and will not necessarily extend to all types of contracts. Thus, the availability of a tort recovery for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may be justified in actions brought on insurance contracts, but not necessarily in actions brought on other types of contract"); see also Francis, 89 Haw. at 238, 971 P.2d at 711 ("Other jurisdictions recognizing the tort of bad faith similarly limit such claims to the insurance context or situations involving special relationships characterized by elements of fiduciary responsibility, public interest, and adhesion." (citations omitted)). The context of this case does not allow for a claim for bad faith. Count 8 is therefore dismissed. At the hearing on this motion, Timas and Ward appeared to concede that Count 8 did not state [*23] a cognizable claim. Because further amendment would be futile, Count 8 is dismissed with prejudice.

Count 9 alleges that sections 3.6.1 and 3.6.4 in the Terms and Conditions constitute an "illegal restraint on trade" and are unenforceable noncompete provisions under the Hawaii Antitrust Law, chapter 480 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes.

Count 9, however, does not indicate what specific statute is violated by sections 3.6.1 and 3.6.4 of the Terms and Conditions. It refers to chapter 480 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes as a whole, but chapter 480 encompasses numerous provisions. The court and TGR are left to guess which statute forms the basis for Count 9.

In their opposition, Timas and Ward quote section 480-4(a) (improperly citing it as section 480-4(c)), which states, "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in the State, or in any section of this State is illegal." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-4(a). It is not enough for Timas and Ward to identify a specific provision in opposing a motion. Rule 8(a) requires that the counterclaim itself state a claim for relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). See also *Caniadido v. Countrywide Bank, FSB, Civil No. 11-00080 SOM/BMK, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65415, 2011 WL 2470640, at 12-13 (D. Haw. June 20, 2011) [*24] (dismissing a "predatory lending" cause of action because, as the common law does not recognize a "predatory lending" claim, the ambiguous term potentially encompasses a wide variety of alleged wrongs and fails to provide notice to any defendant of what is being claimed). Because Count 9 does not allow TGR to determine what law it is being accused of having violated, Count 9 does not plead a cognizable claim and is dismissed without prejudice.

TGR argues that Count 9 should be dismissed with prejudice because section 480-4(c) of the Hawaii Antitrust Act expressly permits sections 3.6.1 and 3.6.4. Under section 480-4(c), certain restrictive covenants are lawful, including:

> A covenant or agreement by an employee or agent not to use the trade secrets of the employer or principal in competition with the employee's or agent's employer or principal, during the term of the agency or thereafter, or after the termination of employment, within such time as may be reasonably necessary for the protection of the employer or principal, without imposing undue hardship on the employee or agent.

According to TGR, sections 3.6.1 [*25] and 3.6.4 are permissible covenants not to use trade secrets. Section 3.6.1 prohibits IAs from recruiting other IAs for other multi-level or network marketing companies while they are TGR IAs and for six months after. Section 3.6.4 restricts IAs from sharing TGR's "back room information" and using that information to compete with TGR, among other things.

The court declines to dismiss Count 9 with prejudice. Whether the identity of TGR's IAs or the content of its "back room information" is a "trade secret" is unclear. In addition, section 480-4(c) requires that restrictive covenants serve "a legitimate purpose not violative of [chapter 480]." Sections 3.6.1 and 3.6.4 of the Terms and Conditions do not expressly state a purpose, and Timas and Ward allege that TGR had no legitimate purpose. Timas and Ward Counterclaim ¶ 65(e). At this stage, the court cannot say that amendment of Count 9 would be futile. Count 9 is dismissed without prejudice.

7. Count 10.

Count 10 asserts "punitive damages." Recognizing that a punitive damages claim is not based on an independent tort, but rather is incident to a separate cause of action, Timas and Ward have withdrawn Count 10. They may continue to pray [*26] for punitive damages as incidental to their defamation action. See, e.g., Machado v. Int'l Ass'n of Heat and Frost Insulators & Asbestos Workers (AFL-CIO), 454 F. Supp. 2d 1056, 1065 (D. Haw. 2006) ("[A]s a matter of law, the Court finds that Plaintiff may recover punitive damages if he succeeds on his defamation claim.").

In sum, Counts 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, and 9 in Timas and Ward's counterclaim are dismissed without prejudice. Counts 5 and 8 in Timas and Ward's Counterclaim are dismissed with prejudice.

B. Aloha Island Counterclaim.

1. Count I.

Count I asserts a claim for "tortious interference with contractual relations." It alleges that TGR caused its former IAs to terminate their contracts with Aloha Island by threatening them with legal action.

Under Hawaii law, the elements of tortious interference with contractual relations are: "(1) a contract between the plaintiff and a third party; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the contract; (3) the defendant's intentional inducement of the third party to breach the contract; (4) the absence of justification on the defendant's part; (5) the subsequent breach of the contract by the third party; and (6) damages to the plaintiff." Lee v. Aiu, 85 Haw. 19, 32, 936 P.2d 655, 668 (Haw. 1997) [*27] (citing Weinberg v. Mauch, 78 Haw. 40, 50, 890 P.2d 277, 287 (Haw. 1995)). Aloha Island's counterclaim alleges that TGR's cease and desist letters induced the former IAs to terminate their agreements with Aloha Island. See id. ¶¶ 12-13 (alleging that the former IAs terminated their agreements "[a]s a direct result of" the cease and desist letters).

To succeed on a tortious interference with contractual relations claim, a plaintiff must show "that the third party acted with intent and legal malice, i.e., the intentional doing of a harmful act without legal or social justification or excuse, or, in other words, the wilful violation of a known right." Meridian Mortg., Inc. v. First Hawaiian Bank, 109 Haw. 35, 45-46, 122 P.3d 1133, 1143-44 (Haw. Ct. App. 2005) (internal citations and italics omitted).

Aloha Island fails to allege specific facts that, if true, would establish that TGR lacked legal justification for threatening its former IAs with legal action. Count I states, "TGR lacked any lawful justification to threaten or prosecute legal action against the Former IAs and TGR's sole purpose was to induce the Former IAs to terminate their independent contractor agreements and business [*28] relations with [Aloha Island]." Aloha Island Counterclaim ¶ 20. These are in the nature of conclusions. They are unaccompanied by any indication of the ground on which Aloha Island makes its assertion or how Aloha Island can show this. The allegation that TGR lacked legal justification is merely a recitation of the fourth element of a tortious interference with contractual relations claim.

Without factual allegations, Aloha Island does not state a claim. See *GRK Holdings, LLC v. First American Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107065, 2010 WL 3940575, 9 (D. Ariz. Oct. 6, 2010) ("[T]he mere allegation that interference was improper is a legal conclusion, not a statement of fact.").

In Simon Property Group, Inc. v. Palombaro, 682 F. Supp. 2d 508, 512 (W.D. Pa. 2010), the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania determined that a counterclaimant had insufficiently pled that a counterclaim defendant's interference was without legal justification when the counterclaimant pled only that the counterclaim defendant's actions were not protected by a judicial or financial interest privilege. The counterclaimant based its claim in part on the counterclaim defendant's initiation and publication of [*29] a lawsuit. Id. The court held that the counterclaimant's allegation that there was no privilege was a "blanket, conclusory statement," and that the pleadings failed to show how the counterclaim defendant's actions were not privileged. Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555)). See also *GRK Holdings, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107065, 2010 WL 3940575, at 9 (dismissing a tortious interference with contractual relations claim on the ground that the plaintiff had not properly alleged that the defendant lacked legal justification for the lawsuit, as the allegation that the lawsuit was filed with improper motive was not accompanied by supporting factual allegations).

If TGR threatened or pursued legal action believing that it was asserting its legal rights under agreements with its former IAs, that would not be tortious. Aloha Island is unconvincing in arguing in its opposition that its claim is consistent with a comment in the Restatement (Second) of Torts, quoted in Bowhead Information Technology Services, LLC v. Catapult Technology Ltd., 377 F. Supp. 2d 166, 175-77 (D.D.C. 2005). That comment says that threats of litigation are wrong only "if the actor has no belief in the merit of the litigation." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 767 cmt c. (1979) [*30] . It does not say that merely threatening a civil suit, without more, is actionable. In the present case, there are no factual allegations suggesting that TGR lacked belief in the merit of the allegedly threatened legal action. Without an explanation as to how TGR's threats of legal action were unwarranted, this court cannot say that Aloha Island states a claim for relief that is plausible on its face.

Aloha Island also cites this court's decision in Peace Software, Inc. v. Hawaiian Electric Company, Inc., Civ. No. 09-00408 SOM/LEK, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5187, 2010 WL 290649 (D. Haw. Jan. 22, 2010), in support of its position that its claim is sufficiently plead. Peace Software is distinguishable. That case concerned the scope of software and services that the plaintiff, Peace Software, was required to provide to the defendant, Hawaiian Electric Company ("HECO"), by contract. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5187, [WL] at 1. HECO asserted a counterclaim against Peace Software's former parent company, First Data, claiming that First Data intentionally interfered with Peace Software's contract with HECO, causing Peace Software to be unable to perform its contractual obligations. Id. The court was able to infer that First Data's alleged tortious [*31] interference was for an improper purpose because, among other things, First Data would not benefit economically by interfering with the contract. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5187, [WL] at 7. In this case, the court cannot similarly say that TGR lacked any financial reason to send its former IAs cease and desist letters. The former IAs' purported violations of their agreements with TGR may have been causing TGR an economic detriment.

The court thus dismisses Count I for failing to state a claim that, in the absence of factual allegations, is plausible on its face.

2. Count II.

Count II asserts tortious interference with prospective business advantage. Like Count I, Count II alleges that the threat and prosecution of legal action constitute the tortious interference. The elements of tortious interference with prospective business advantage are:

> (1) the existence of a valid business relationship or a prospective advantage or expectancy sufficiently definite, specific, and capable of acceptance in the sense that there is a reasonable probability of it maturing into a future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) knowledge of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy by the defendant; (3) a purposeful intent to interfere with [*32] the relationship, advantage, or expectancy; (4) legal causation between the act of interference and the impairment of the relationship, advantage, or expectancy; and (5) actual damages.

TGR first argues that Aloha Island does not plead sufficient facts to establish the third element. "The third element—intent—denotes purposeful[] improper interference, and requires a state of mind or motive more culpable than mere intent. In other words, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant either pursued an improper objective of harming the plaintiff or used wrongful means that caused injury in fact. Asserting one's rights to maximize economic interests does not create an in[]ference of ill will or improper purpose." Hawaii Medical Ass'n v. Hawaii Med. Serv. Ass'n, Inc., 113 Haw. 77, 117, 148 P.3d 1179, 1218 (Haw. 2006) (quoting Omega Envtl., Inc., v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1166 (9th Cir. 1997), and Locricchio v. Legal Services Corp., 833 F.2d 1352, 1358 (9th Cir. 1987)) (quotation marks omitted).

Aloha Island alleges with respect to intent that "TGR, through its unlawful threats and prosecution of legal action, did purposefully [*33] interfere with business relations between [Aloha Island] and the Former IAs and their expectancy of future economic benefit to be derived from such relationship." Aloha Island Counterclaim ¶ 26. However, Aloha Island's allegation that TGR's threats and prosecution of litigation were unlawful is conclusory and provides no explanation of what made the threats or lawsuit improper. The court thus agrees with TGR that this claim is not properly pled.

TGR argues in the alternative that Count II does not plead the first element: "the existence of a valid business relationship or a prospective advantage or expectancy sufficiently definite, specific, and capable of acceptance in the sense that there is a reasonable probability of it maturing into a future economic benefit to the plaintiff." It argues that Aloha Island alleges only facts that show it already had legal agreements with the former IAs, not that it had prospective agreements. The court disagrees with TGR on this point.

The Hawaii Supreme Court has stated that, although the "prospective economic relationship need not take the form of an offer[,] there must be specific facts proving the possibility of future association." Hawaii Medical Ass'n, 113

Haw. at 116, 148 P.3d at 1218 [*34] (citations omitted). Count II alleges that "[Aloha Island] and the Former IAs intended to continue with [their independent contractor agreements] and business relations with the definite expectation of future economic benefit to both parties." Aloha Island Counterclaim ¶ 24. Aloha Island says that the term "business relations" refers to Aloha Island's relationship with some of TGR's former IAs that it expected would lead to independent contractor agreements. Aloha Island's Counterclaim also alleges that the former IAs "agreed to enter into independent contractor agreements with Aloha Island." Id. ¶ 11. Read in the light most favorable to Aloha Island, these factual allegations satisfy Aloha Island's obligation to plead sufficient factual support for the first element.

V. CONCLUSION.

With respect to Timas and Ward's counterclaim, the court dismisses Counts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, and 9. Counts 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, and 9 are dismissed without prejudice, while Counts 5 and 8 are dismissed with prejudice. With respect to Aloha Island's counterclaim, the court dismisses Count I and Count II without prejudice. Timas and Ward, as well as Aloha Island, are granted leave to amend their counterclaims. [*35] Timas and Ward may amend only the counts that are dismissed without prejudice. No later than March 15, 2012, the parties may file amended counterclaims that attempt to cure the identified deficiencies.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO EXCLUDE EXPERT TESTIMONY OF JANET S. NETZ AND WILLIAM S. COMANOR

On February 10, 2012, the Court heard argument on defendants' motion to exclude the testimony of plaintiffs' economic experts, Dr. Janet S. Netz and Dr. William S. Comanor. Having considered the moving papers and the arguments of the parties, and for good cause appearing, the Court hereby DENIES defendants' motion.

BACKGROUND

This antitrust class action involves allegations of price-fixing among manufacturers of thin-film transistor liquid-crystal display ("TFT-LCD") panels. TFT-LCD panels are electronic components found in a number of products, including computer monitors, notebook computers, and televisions. See generally Order Granting Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (March 28, 2010), Master Docket No. 1642, at 1-3 ("Class Certification Order"); Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Third Consolidated Amended Complaint, Master Docket No. 2694, at ¶¶16-54 ("TAC"). The panels have no independent utility, and are not available to the average consumer. Instead, they are [*28] incorporated into finished products as discrete, physical objects within the products. Class Certification Order at 2.

Defendants in this case are the major global manufacturers of TFT-LCD panels. See TAC at ¶121 (alleging that "the top six companies (Samsung, LGD, Chi Mei, AU Optronics, Sharp and Chunghwa) currently control in excess of 80% of the LCD panels market"). Plaintiffs, consumers who purchased televisions, monitors, and notebook computers that contain defendants' TFT-LCD panels ("indirect-purchaser plaintiffs" or "IPPs"), contend that defendants conspired to raise the prices of the panels between 1999 and 2006. Plaintiffs claim that this conspiracy caused them to pay artificially high prices for the TFT-LCD products they purchased. They seek injunctive relief under federal law and damages under the antitrust and consumer-protection laws of 23 states and the District of Columbia.

In order to prevail on their claims for damages, plaintiffs must establish that the price-fixing conspiracy affected the prices they paid for the TFT-LCD products they purchased. Because plaintiffs did not purchase those products directly from the defendants, they propose to prove this effect through [*29] a two-step process. First, plaintiffs will prove that the conspiracy resulted in higher prices for defendants' customers — those companies that directly purchased TFT-LCD panels from defendants. Second, plaintiffs will show that this initial overcharge was "passed through" the manufacturing and retail chains and was included in the final price they paid for their TFT-LCD goods.

To help make this showing, plaintiffs have retained the services of two experts. The first, Dr. Janet S. Netz, holds a Ph.D. in Economics and is "a founding partner of ApplEcon, LLC." Chen Decl., Exh. 2 ("Netz Report") at 1. The second, Dr. William S. Comanor, is an "economist and Professor of Economics at the University of California, Santa Barbara." Chen Decl., Exh. 13 ("Comanor Report") at 2.

The experts' reports cover slightly different topics, but overlap to a significant degree. The plaintiffs' primary expert is Dr. Netz, whose expert report reaches the following conclusions:

> 1. The cartel formed by Defendants and Co-conspirators was effective at raising the price above the level that would have been obtained had Defendants and Co-conspirators [] behaved independently.
> 2. The cartel increased the price to [*30] direct purchasers by 12.1%.
> 3. The overcharge to direct purchasers was passed through to indirect purchaser class members.
> 4. [IPP] [c]lass members paid a price 12.1% higher than they would have had there not been a cartel.
> 5. The total nominal amount of harm borne by class members is $3.23 billion over the class period.

Netz Report at 4.

Dr. Comanor's report contains similar conclusions. It is primarily directed at the overcharge to direct purchasers, which Dr. Comanor calculates to be approximately 9.6%. Based on economic theory and the characteristics of the TFT-LCD market — but little transactional analysis — Dr. Comanor hypothesizes that the expected pass-through rate to consumers would fall between 100% and 200%.[1] Comanor Report at 26. Dr. Comanor relies on Dr. Netz's analysis — which calculated a pass-through rate of slightly above 100%, depending upon the general product category — to confirm this hypothesis, and employs a "conservative" pass-through rate of 100%. Id. at 29. He ultimately estimates that the resulting damages to indirect purchasers amounted to $2.2 billion. Id. at 20, 29.

Defendants now move to exclude the testimony of Dr. Netz and Dr. Comanor. They contend that neither expert can satisfy the requirements of the Federal Rules of Evidence or Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993).

LEGAL STANDARD

Federal Rule of Evidence 702 provides that expert testimony is admissible if "scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue." Fed. R. Evid. 702. Expert testimony under Rule 702 must be both relevant and reliable. Daubert, 509 U.S. at 589. When considering evidence proffered under Rule 702, the trial court must act as a "gatekeeper" by making a preliminary determination that the expert's proposed testimony is reliable. Elsayed Mukhtar v. Cal. State Univ., 299 F.3d 1053, 1063 (9th Cir. 2002), amended by 319 F.3d 1073 (9th Cir. 2003). [*32] As a guide for assessing the scientific validity of expert testimony, the Supreme Court provided a nonexhaustive list of factors that courts may consider: (1) whether the theory or technique is generally accepted within a relevant scientific community, (2) whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review and publication, (3) the known or potential rate of error, and (4) whether the theory or technique can be tested. Daubert, 509 U.S. at 593-94; see also Kumho Tire Co., Ltd. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999).

DISCUSSION

Defendants' motion is based, in large part, on their continued insistence that this case is not amenable to class treatment. As they have argued in the past, defendants contend that plaintiffs cannot prove their case unless they produce highly specific, individualized evidence of classwide injury. Underlying defendants' argument is their assertion that plaintiffs must establish impact "with certainty." Motion at 13; see also Motion at 15 (stating that plaintiffs "overcharge models are useless as evidence that . . . all direct purchasers paid an overcharge on all relevant LCD panels."). Based on this standard, defendants assert that plaintiffs must identify [*33] the overcharge that was placed on every LCD panel sold during the conspiracy period and trace that overcharge through the manufacturing and retail distribution chains until plaintiffs can identify the overcharge paid by a particular class member for a particular LCD product. Motion at 13 (stating that it is "necessary to trace the progress of the individual component whose price was allegedly fixed through the specific distribution chain at issue in order to establish with certainty that any increase in retail price of the finished product was not actually caused by other components or configurations unrelated to the supposedly inflated cost fo the LCD panel").

Of course, if defendants' standard were correct then common issues would not predominate in this case. Other courts have concluded as much. See, e.g., In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig., 253 F.R.D. 478, 505 (N.D. Cal. 2008) ("[T]he only way to fully assess pass-through in this action would be to conduct a wholesaler-by-wholesaler and re-seller-by-re-seller investigation, which would essentially result in 'thousands of mini-trials, rendering this case unmanageable and unsuitable for class action treatment.'"); *In re Flash Memory Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59491, 2010 WL 2332081, at 11 (N.D. Cal., June 9, 2010) [*34] ("Determining the pass-through for an individual class member first requires the identification of the particular channel applicable to the class member's purchase, and tracing the overcharge through the various intermediaries that lie between the particular Defendant and the member."). Defendants' position, however, is inconsistent with the nature of this case.

[1] 100% pass-through signifies that an intermediary charges its customers for the entire amount [*31] of an increase in its costs. Pass-through rates may be higher than 100%. For example, if a retailer were always to set the price of a product at twice the price it purchased the product for, any increase in the price paid by the retailer would be doubled when the retailer sets its price, resulting in a 200% pass-through rate.

Most fundamentally, there is no requirement that plaintiffs prove impact "with certainty." To the contrary, impact, like the other elements of plaintiffs' case, must be established by a preponderance of the evidence. In fact, antitrust plaintiffs benefit from an especially lenient burden when it comes to proof of impact. See Knutson v. Daily Review, Inc., 548 F.2d 795, 811 (9th Cir. 1976) ("Even as to this minimal quantum of injury, the standard is relaxed; otherwise, it would defeat the loose standard applied even to the amount of damages in antitrust cases."). Thus, plaintiffs need not be able to articulate the precise degree to which every individual class member was injured; it suffices to show that it was more likely that not that classwide impact occurred.

In addition, as this Court has previously noted, the nature of the [*35] industry renders defendants' standard inappropriately strict. See Class Certification Order at 30. Plaintiffs assert that TFT-LCD panels are fungible commodities, and were largely treated as such by defendants and their customers. Id. (distinguishing Graphics Processing because "TFT-LCD panels are fungible, interchangeable, and largely homogenous"); Netz Report at 6-7 (noting that a panel purchaser could obtain panels from different manufacturers, provided they met the customer's specification). It is therefore unnecessary for plaintiffs to provide evidence of panel-by-panel impact. Rather, plaintiffs may resort to generalized methods of proof.

This does not, as defendants argue, violate the Rules Enabling Act. See Ortiz, 527 U.S. 815, 845, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 (1999) ("[N]o reading of [Rule 23] can ignore the [Rules Enabling Act's] mandate that rules of procedure 'shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right . . . .'" (internal quotation marks omitted)). An individual plaintiff would not be required to meet the stringent standard defendants propose. Rather, such a plaintiff would be entitled to rely on evidence much like the evidence plaintiffs here have set forth: evidence that defendants [*36] illegally raised the prices of their TFT-LCD panels, and that retail prices increased as a result.

Thus, the Court rejects the standard articulated by defendants. Plaintiffs need not identify the overcharge on each and every panel sold to direct purchasers, and they need not trace that specific overcharge through the manufacturing and retail chains to the ultimate purchaser. The fact that plaintiffs lack perfect proof does not mean that plaintiffs lack any proof at all.

Turning to the merits of defendants' motion, the Court does not agree that the opinions of Dr. Netz and Dr. Comanor are inadmissible. Before addressing defendants' arguments for wholesale exclusion of plaintiffs' experts, however, the Court will address a narrower form of relief that defendants proposed at oral argument: that, at a minimum, the Court must preclude plaintiffs' experts from arguing that their regression models establish causation or impact.

I. Admissibility of Regression Analyses

As part of their analyses of the cartel's impact on indirect purchasers, Dr. Netz and Dr. Comanor each rely on regression models. To determine the initial overcharge to direct purchasers, both Dr. Netz and Dr. Comanor constructed [*37] "before-and-after" models, which "use[] determinants of price during competitive (non-cartel) periods to forecast the price that would have obtained but for the existence of the cartel." Netz Report at 87; see also Comanor Report at 17 ("The method employed is a variation on the widely-accepted Before/After approach."). As stated above, Dr. Netz's model estimates that the conspiracy resulted in a weighted average overcharge of 12.1%. Netz Report at 93. Dr. Comanor's model estimates an average overcharge of approximately 9.6%. Comanor Report at 20, 30. In addition, Dr. Netz constructed a second regression model to help determine the rate at which this overcharge was passed through to plaintiffs. Netz Report at 93-110.

Defendants contend that these models, while relevant to damages, may not be used to establish either impact to direct purchasers or pass-through to indirect purchasers. See, e.g., Motion at 2 ("[The average pass-through rate] might be useful for calculating the aggregate amount of damages [but] it say[s] nothing about whether every class member, most class members, or any particular class member, paid an illegal overcharge and therefore suffered antitrust injury."). Defendants' [*38] overarching point is that regression models necessarily use averaging, and that the models therefore cannot establish that every class member was affected by the conspiracy. See, e.g., Graphics Processing, 253 F.R.D. at 504 ("Dr. Netz's regressions would . . . be overly reliant on averages and would thus sweep in an unacceptable number of uninjured plaintiffs . . . .").

As discussed above, this argument is largely premised on the notion that plaintiffs must establish, to a certainty, class members' injuries on a panel-by-panel basis. This is not the correct standard. The very source defendants rely on confirms this point. Although it warns against using the "reduced-form pricing equation" because that model "assumes that a conspiracy has the same effect on every purchaser," the treatise endorses the use of "somewhat more complex models that do not make such an assumption." ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Econometrics: Legal, Practical and Technical Issues 222 (2005). The "somewhat more complex" models the treatise suggests would break the class into categories and sub-classes but would continue to regress data. Thus, these models would also necessarily rely on averaging. See id. at 221 [*39] ("By their very nature, regressions summarize data."). They would therefore be unable to provide the panel-by-panel proof that defendants implicitly demand. Cf. id. at 223 (noting "practical and theoretical issues" of regression analyses that "present a formulaic estimate of [a conspiracy's] impact and damages" on every member of the class).

Defendants' concerns, while stated too broadly, are not wholly without merit. Obviously, a model cannot be used to prove of one of its basic assumptions. As defendants point out, plaintiffs appear to recognize this limitation. See, e.g., Opp'n at 2 (stating that, only after determining that there was "class-wide harm" did the experts "construct[] before-and-after regression models to quantify the amount of harm in the form of an average percentage overcharge."); Opp'n. at 7 ("[The experts'] before and after [regression model] results, while also evidence of common impact, are not the basis for their conclusion that there was common impact."); Opp'n at 19 ("The pass-through studies are not designed to [distinguish between cartel overcharges and other cost changes], nor could they, nor need they.").

The Court finds that defendants' proposed remedy [*40] is inappropriate, and premature, at this juncture. Even if regression models are not enough, standing alone, to establish classwide impact, they may nevertheless be relevant to the issue. A large average overcharge, for example, might make it more likely that every direct purchaser was overcharged to some degree. And, of course, if defendants are correct that plaintiffs acknowledge the limits of their experts' models, they will have little trouble establishing those points on cross-examination.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES defendants' request to preclude plaintiffs' experts from testifying that their models establish either impact to direct purchasers or pass-through to indirect purchasers. When the experts' specific testimony is before the Court, defendants may renew their objections.

II. Exclusion of Plaintiffs' Experts

Defendants' motion seeks exclusion of Dr. Netz's and Dr. Comanor's opinions on three grounds. Defendants claim: (1) both experts' opinions regarding the overcharge paid by direct purchasers are not scientifically based; (2) Dr. Netz's calculation of the pass-through rate is unreliable; and (3) Dr. Netz's expert report suffers from miscellaneous econometric and mathematical [*41] errors.

A. Overcharge to Direct Purchasers

As mentioned above, plaintiffs' first step in establishing classwide impact is proving that direct purchasers were overcharged as a result of the conspiracy. Defendants contend that neither Dr. Netz nor Dr. Comanor used a reliable methodology to make this connection. They claim that plaintiffs have failed to come up with a "common, formulaic method for showing that direct purchasers paid an overcharge on every LCD panel they placed in the distribution chain for eventual resale to indirect purchasers." Motion at 14.

The Court disagrees. As discussed in its class certification order, the Court has found Dr. Netz's analysis appropriate for establishing common impact to direct purchasers:

> In support of their argument that antitrust impact can be proven on a class-wide basis, plaintiffs have submitted the expert report of economist Dr. Janet S. Netz. Dr. Netz has examined the TFT-LCD industry and market to determine if the indirect purchaser plaintiffs would have suffered impact as a result of the alleged price-fixing conspiracy. Dr. Netz assumes that there was a conspiracy among TFT-LCD manufacturers as plaintiffs have alleged, and her report asserts [*42] that there are a number of characteristics that make the TFT-LCD industry highly susceptible to cartelization and price-fixing, including (1) the lack of an alternative source of supply of TFT-LCD panels and the lack of an alternative technology; (2) the existence of barriers to entry; (3) regular meetings and interactions that allowed defendants to exchange information, come to agreements, and police cheating; and (4) difficulty in cheating due to the use of most-favored customer clauses. Dr. Netz's report examines the price targets set by the cartel and actual market prices, and finds that these prices match well. Based on these analyses, Dr. Netz concludes that the cartel was successful in increasing prices.
> Next, Dr. Netz considered the commonality of the impact on direct purchasers. Dr. Netz examined the pricing strategies used by defendants, including the use of most-favored customer clauses, the centralization of pricing decisions, and price negotiations starting from a common basis. Dr. Netz also analyzed the prices for TFT-LCD panels to determine whether the prices are related by market forces, and concludes that there is a common pricing structure for TFT-LCD panel prices. [*43] In reaching this conclusion, she examined the correlation between panel prices, and found that 76% of panel price correlations (approximately 50,000 of 66,000 correlations) are positive and statistically significant. Dr. Netz then used regression analysis to examine the determinants of panel prices, and found that 77% of price variation is determined by five variables that describe the panel characteristics (panel size, resolution, volume, application, and time-period). Based on these analyses, Dr. Netz concludes that most of the variation in transaction prices is driven by common factors rather than individual ones, and that these common influences on price are susceptible to being estimated using a formula.

Class Certification Order at 24-25 (footnotes and citations omitted). Dr. Netz relies on much the same information in her expert report. See Netz Report at 28-87 (using economic theory and analysis of evidence in this case to conclude that the cartel effectively raised prices for direct purchasers).

Defendants do not engage this component of Dr. Netz's analysis. Instead, they contend that the above analysis, standing alone, is not sufficient to prove common impact. Reply at 12 ("'Economic [*44] theory,' without more, is not a reliable methodology for demonstrating class wide impact . . . ."). They appear to argue that some "formal statistical technique" is required to prove that every direct purchaser was overcharged for LCD panels.

The Court disagrees. It is certainly possible that "economic theory" or a high-level analysis of the characteristics of a particular market may be too general or otherwise insufficient to establish classwide impact. See, e.g., In re Aftermarket Automotive Lighting Products Antitrust Litig., 276 F.R.D. 364, 370 (C.D. Cal. 2011) (noting possibility that expert evidence could be "too general" to demonstrate classwide impact); Graphics Processing, 253 F.R.D. at 502 ("Dr. Meyendorff essentially asks this Court to presume impact to direct purchasers based on the characteristics of the market."). Here, however, plaintiffs have far more detailed information, such as defendants' transactional data, detailed notes of discussions held at the crystal meetings, and the prices and production restrictions that defendants purportedly agreed to. This evidence, and Dr. Netz's corresponding analysis, is sufficient to constitute a reliable method of establishing common [*45] impact. Cf. In re Commercial Tissue Products, 183 F.R.D. 589, 595 (N.D. Fla. 1998) ("[E]ven if there is considerable individual variety in pricing because of individual price negotiations, class plaintiffs may succeed in proving class-wide impact by showing that the minimum baseline for beginning negotiations, or the range of prices which resulted from negotiation, was artificially raised (or slowed in its descent) by the collusive actions of defendants."); ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Econometrics at 220-21 (noting that "formal statistical techniques . . . may be required to show common impact" (emphasis added)).

Instead of addressing the above, defendants' argument focuses on the experts' use of "before and after" regression models to demonstrate that direct purchasers were impacted by the conspiracy. Motion at 14 ("[T]hese regression models . . . attempt to calculate the average overcharge direct purchasers paid for LCD panels — they were never designed to prove, and in fact cannot prove, that direct purchasers paid an overcharge on every LCD panel placed in the distribution chain from 1999 to 2006."). Because the before-and-after models are not the only methodology plaintiffs rely [*46] on to prove impact to direct purchasers,[2] the Court is not convinced that Dr. Netz's opinion is unreliable.

B. Pass Through to Indirect Purchasers

In her report, Dr. Netz concludes that the overcharge incurred by direct purchasers was passed through to indirect purchasers. Defendants contend that this opinion is unsound. Much of their argument focuses on their contention that Dr. Netz relies too heavily on averages to show that an overcharge was passed through to every individual class member. Motion at 8 ("Dr. Netz's averages . . . provide no data about whether each individual class member was injured."). As discussed above, the Court does not agree that such a specific purchaser-by-purchaser showing is required. See also Class Certification Order at 30-31.

Defendants' specific challenges to Dr. Netz's pass-through analysis also do not provide reason to exclude her opinion. First, defendants contend that Dr. Netz's opinion that pass-through occurred is "based [*47] on a mere assumption" because "[p]erfect pass-on is a theoretical construct that cannot be presumed to exist in the real world." Motion at 6. Defendants assert that Dr. Netz acknowledges as much. See Chen Decl., Exh. 8 (testimony of Dr. Netz that pass-through occurs "the vast majority of the time"). Defendants also claim that Dr. Netz's pass-through conclusions are contradicted by anecdotal evidence obtained during discovery. This evidence consists of deposition testimony or declarations by various OEMs and retailers that increases in costs of components or products were not always passed along to customers. See, e.g., Chen Decl. at Exhs. 3 (Dell), 4 (Best Buy), 5 (Newegg.com), 6 (Target), 7 (Radioshack), 24 (HP). Finally, defendants assert that transaction data obtained from Dell demonstrates that pass through did not always occur. They claim that Dell sold some of the panels it purchased to third parties and that in 30% of these sales, Dell's sales price "did not move in lockstep with changes in Dell's cost to purchase panels." Motion at 9.

None of these arguments is reason to exclude Dr. Netz's testimony.[3] Defendants' disagreements with the bases for her opinion do not render that [*48] opinion so inherently suspect that it may not be admitted at trial. These arguments are precisely the type of matter that is appropriate for cross-examination.

Next, defendants assert that Dr. Netz's regression model "cannot distinguish between a retail price increase caused by the pass-through of a cartel overcharge and a retail price increase caused by the retailers' decision to raise prices for other, legitimate reasons." Motion at 9. Defendants contend that there are thousands of different products that contain LCD panels, and that many of these products contain thousands of different configurations. See Chen

[2] Indeed, it is unclear the extent to which Dr. Netz relies on the model for this purpose, given that it does not appear in the section of her expert report that addresses common impact to direct purchasers. See Netz Report at 28-87.

[3] As a corollary argument, defendants argue that Dr. Netz's methodology "sweep[s] in an unacceptable number of uninjured plaintiffs." Motion at 7 (quoting [Graphics Processing, 253 F.R.D. at 504]). They claim that: "Even assuming that by 'vast majority of the time' Dr. Netz meant 99% of the time, and assuming, conservatively, 50 million members of the classes here, that leaves 500,000 class members potentially eligible to collect treble damages although they suffered no injury whatsoever. If Dr. Netz meant '95% of the time,' that would amount to 2.5 million uninjured members of the class." Id.

Setting aside the implications of this argument — that class treatment is inappropriate because the injury in this case was too widespread — the Court declines to exclude Dr. Netz's opinion based upon one passing sentence in her deposition. Dr. Netz has opined that all class members were affected by the conspiracy. Netz Report at 87 ("I conclude that the higher prices borne by direct purchasers were passed on to class members . . ."). Defendants [*49] may explore her deposition testimony on cross examination.

Decl., Exh 3 at ¶11 (noting that there are over 40,000 potential configurations for the Dell Inspiron 15). They claim that this circumstance renders it impossible to determine the effect an increase in panel prices had upon the price of a finished product. Defendants rely on Judge Armstrong's criticism of Dr. Netz from a case involving allegations of price fixing in among manufacturers of flash memory:

> The tracing process requires more than the one-size-fits-all theoretical construct proposed by Dr. Netz. Within the three broad categories of products at issue (flash memory cards, USB flash drives and flash-based digital media players), there are thousands of differentiated [*50] products with diverse price points that have been purchased by putative class members over the course of the last decade. Such products are sold to class members by hundreds of different retailer suppliers. The price of any given product can vary across retailers, and differ even for a single retailer at a given point in time. Further, different retailers respond to cost changes in different ways, with some choosing not to pass-through cost changes in the form of higher prices for the end-user. The "economic theory" cited by Dr. Netz's accounts for none of these anomalies.

The Court again finds that defendants' focus is too narrow. Plaintiffs need not reconstruct each LCD product sold to a class member and determine the price of its constituent parts to establish that the class member paid an overcharge attributable to the conspiracy. Rather, the Court agrees with plaintiffs that they may establish pass-through by showing that companies in the manufacturing and distribution chains passed along cost increases in general. Dr. Netz's report does exactly that. Plaintiffs' proof need not rise to the level of establishing how every intermediary treated [*51] every LCD panel or product:

> A key concept in Dr. Leffler's analysis is the logical proposition that an increase in the cost of Microsoft OS affects each purchaser in the same manner as an increase in any other cost: "the impact of a change in Microsoft's charge to the distribution channel would have the same impact as a comparable change in other costs faced by the distribution channel." Leff. Aff. ¶ 21. This concept permits the effect on consumer prices of a Microsoft OS overcharge to distributors to be determined by actual analysis of the effects of other cost increases.

*Gordon v. Microsoft Corp., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26360, 2001 WL 366432, at 11 (Minn. Dist. Ct., March 30, 2001). As above, defendants' arguments presume that plaintiffs must prove these matters to an absolute certainty, when such is not the case.

Finally, defendants assert that Dr. Netz's models are "100-Percent-Pass-Through Machines." Motion at 17. They claim that Dr. Netz's regressions "virtually always generate pass-through of 100% or more," regardless of whether the data actually shows any pass-through whatsoever. Defendants contend that this occurs because Dr. Netz compares the cost of a product to its price, instead of comparing the change [*52] in cost to the resulting change in price, if any. Defendants provide two example of this, but neither convinces the Court that Dr. Netz's methodology is unsound. See Motion at 18. If, as defendants contend, their examples are "simple but accurate" then they will be appropriate material for cross-examination. They are not, however, sufficient to establish that Dr. Netz's opinions are unreliable.

III. Other Errors

Finally, defendants contend that Dr. Netz's report includes a number of fundamental errors. For example, they assert that Dr. Netz's model relies on only half the available data because it ignores data from Japanese firms. They contend that including this data would reduce the average overcharge computed by her model in half, from 12.1% to 5.8%. They also contend that Dr. Netz's model fails to account for the downward trend in LCD panel prices during and after the conspiracy period. Finally, defendants argue that Dr. Netz's reply model contains three "critical" errors: 1) it applies the wrong calculation to convert from the but-for price (produced as a logarithm) to the final prediction; 2) it uses a log-based weighting scheme when Dr. Netz meant to use a levels-based scheme; [*53] and 3) the model predicts a negative 6.3% overcharge in 2001.

None of these purported errors are serious enough to warrant exclusion of Dr. Netz's report. Defendants may confront Dr. Netz about her methodological choices on cross-examination.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and for good cause shown, the Court hereby DENIES defendants' motion to exclude expert testimony of Drs. Netz and Comanor. Docket Nos. 4380, 4381.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS WITH PREJUDICE

Before the Court is a second Motion to Dismiss filed by Defendants Mattel, Inc., and Robert A. Eckert ("Defendants") against Plaintiffs MGA Entertainment, Inc. ("MGA"). After reviewing the motion, opposition, and reply, and after hearing oral argument, the Court concludes that MGA's antitrust claim is barred by res judicata and by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(a). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion and DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE.

I. Background

The gravamen of Defendants' Motion it that Plaintiff's antitrust claim in their First Amended Complaint [*2] ("FAC") is barred by res judicata and by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(a). The Court provides the following procedural history, which includes facts derived from several documents judicially noticed by this Court. [1]

a. Prior Litigation Between Mattel and MGA: Cases 05-2727 and 04-9049

On April 27, 2004, Mattel, Inc., ("Mattel") filed a state court complaint against a former employee Carter Bryant ("Bryant") alleging that Bryant breached his contractual and common law duties to Mattel by failing to disclose his concept sketches and sculpts of the Bratz dolls prior to leaving Mattel for MGA Entertainment, Inc. ("MGA") on or about October 4, 2000. (04-9049 Dkt. 1).

MGA [*3] intervened in Mattel's suit and, on April 13, 2005, filed a stand-alone complaint in federal court against Mattel for unfair competition, trade dress infringement, dilution, and unjust enrichment. (05-2727 Dkt. 1). That complaint alleges that Mattel infringed MGA's distinctive packaging and interfered with MGA's business relationships.

On June 19, 2006, the Honorable Stephen G. Larson consolidated these cases. (05-2727 Dkt. 47).

b. Phase 1 of Prior Litigation

Mattel entered into a settlement with Bryant on the eve of the "phase 1" trial, leaving the following claims against MGA and other defendants to be tried to the jury: (1) intentional interference with contract; (2) aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty; (3) aiding and abetting breach of duty of loyalty; (4) conversion; (5) statutory unfair competition; (6) declaratory relief; and (7) copyright infringement. (04-9049 Dkt. 3917 at 11). Mattel prevailed on each of its claims. On the basis of the jury's special and general verdicts and after independently examining the similarity between the concept sketches/sculpts and MGA's Bratz dolls, the district court placed the Bratz trademarks in a constructive trust and enjoined MGA from [*4] continuing to sell dolls that were substantially similar to Bryant's initial works. MGA appealed.

During the pendency of MGA's appeal of the phase 1 orders, discovery preceded on the claims not tried in the phase 1 trial. Mattel repeatedly amended its pleadings three times, ultimately filing the operative Fourth Amended Answer and Counterclaims ("FAAC"). (04-9049 Dkt. 7714). The FAAC alleged, among other things, MGA's violation of the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") and trade secret misappropriation. These claims arose from MGA's relationships with Bryant and other former Mattel employees who allegedly stole Mattel's confidential information before leaving Mattel. The FAAC's claims also arose out of MGA's alleged litigation misconduct and unwillingness to comply with the phase 1 jury's verdicts, though many of these allegations were dismissed on August 2, 2010.

MGA, in turn, narrowed its trade dress infringement allegation to the two-pronged claim that Mattel copied MGA's trapezoidal and heart-shaped packaging.

c. Ninth Circuit Ruling Affecting Prior Litigation

On July 22, 2010, MGA prevailed on appeal of the phase 1 orders. In vacating the constructive trust [*5] and injunction, the Ninth Circuit held that this relief was impermissibly broad and predicated upon jury verdicts tainted by erroneous instruction.

d. Phase 2 of Prior Litigation

On August 16, 2010, MGA filed counterclaims-in-reply alleging Mattel's RICO violations, trade secret misappropriation, and wrongful injunction. (04-9049 Dkt. 8583). MGA alleged that Mattel and its CEO, Robert Eckert, ("Eckert") engaged in illegal market research and aggressive tactics in preparation for and during the pending litigation, including discovery abuses, disregard for the statute of limitations, and the pursuit of injunctive relief after phase 1.

On October 5, 2010, the Court dismissed MGA's wrongful injunction claim but permitted MGA's other counterclaims-in-reply. (Dkt. 8892). The Court held that all MGA's counterclaims-in-reply, including the one for wrongful injunction, were compulsory. Id. at 14. However, the Court dismissed MGA's wrongful injunction counterclaim-in-reply on the merits, reasoning that MGA sought to "recover two categories of damages that are unavailable as a matter of law." Id.

On October 22, 2010, in response to the Ninth Circuit ruling, this Court granted MGA's motion for a new [*6] trial on all claims and issues tried to the jury in phase 1, finding that the indistinct and inseparable claims were all infected by instructional error. The Court also discarded the earlier bifurcation of claims and ordered that all pending claims between the parties be tried in a single proceeding to commence on January 11, 2011.

On January 5, 2011, the Court granted Mattel summary judgment on MGA's claims for trade dress infringement, dilution, common law unfair competition, and unjust enrichment and MGA's counterclaim-in-reply for a RICO violation. (Dkt. 9600). The Court denied summary judgment as to MGA's claim for statutory unfair competition and MGA's counterclaim-in-reply for trade secret misappropriation.

e. Current Litigation and Original Complaint

On February 3, 2011, two weeks into trial in the prior litigation, MGA filed a complaint ("Original Complaint") in a stand-alone action against Mattel and Eckert ("Defendants"). Original Complaint (11-1063 Dkt. 1). The Original Complaint pled three claims. First, MGA alleged that "beginning at least . . . in 2001 and continuing through the present time [Defendants have] been violating Section 2 of the Sherman Act by monopolizing and [*7] attempting to monopolize the sale and distribution of fashion dolls in the United States." Id. at ¶¶ 52-53. Second, MGA alleged that Mattel sought a remedy in its prior litigation against MGA that "required the district judge to enter a ruling that was an abuse of discretion," giving rise to an abuse of process claim. Id. at ¶¶ 59-60. Finally, MGA alleged that Mattel sold Wee 3 Friends "at prices which are below [Mattel's] fully allocated cost," giving rise to a claim under California Business & Professions Section 17043. Id. at ¶¶ 61-62.

f. Conclusion of Phase 2 and Effect on Case 11-1063 Motion to Dismiss

On August 4, 2011, this Court rendered judgment on the merits pursuant to a jury verdict in case 04-9049. (Dkt. 10704). The judgment awarded MGA $85 million in compensatory damages, $85 million in exemplary damages, and $2,172,000 in attorneys' fees for MGA's counterclaim-in-reply for trade secret misappropriation. Judgment was entered against MGA regarding its claims for common law unfair competition, statutory unfair competition, trade dress infringement, trade dress dilution, RICO violations, unjust enrichment, and wrongful injunction. Judgment was also entered against Mattel regarding [*8] its remaining claims against MGA. MGA was awarded addition attorneys fees and costs of more than $100 million.

On September 12, 2011, Defendants filed a Notice of Finality with the Court indicating that, because a final judgment had been entered in the prior litigation, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the present case is no longer properly analyzed under the theory of claim-splitting, but rather under res judicata. (11-1063 Dkt. 26).

g. First Motion to Dismiss Case 11-1063

On October 20, 2011, after hours of oral argument, this Court dismissed the Original Complaint. See Order (Dkt. 29). The Court held that Mattel's "conduct in the prior litigation— conduct which must have occurred before August 16, 2010"—is barred by res judicata and Rule 13(a). See id. at 9. However, the Court dismissed without prejudice because it did "not appear impossible for MGA to allege anticompetitive conduct after August 16, 2010." Id. at 20 (emphasis in original).

h. First Amended Complaint in Case 11-1063

On November 10, 2011, MGA filed its First Amended Complaint ("FAC"). The FAC brings one antitrust claim and primarily alleges conduct done by Mattel before MGA's last pleading in the prior litigation on August [*9] 16, 2010. See e.g., FAC ¶¶ 32 ("[b]y the late 1990s . . . Mattel's share was over 90% of the fashion doll market"), 33 ("Then came the competition"), 36 ("In June 2001, [MGA] was propelled into the limelight after its daring release of an innovative line of Bratz fashion dolls"), 38 ("Toy Fair in January 2001"), 49 ("By the end of 2003 and early 2004, the reality of Mattel's inability to compete had set in.").

The gravamen of MGA's antitrust claim is that the prior litigation was sham litigation constituting an antitrust violation. The FAC alleges that the prior case was the product of Mattel's "'litigate MGA to death' strategy," in which Mattel "pursued a result"—a constructive trust over the idea of Bratz—that was "so extreme that no objective litigant could have expected it to survive full judicial review." Id. at ¶¶ 52, 59. The FAC alleges that Mattel knowingly litigated claims barred by the statute of limitations and committed discovery abuses that constituted "misrepresentations" to the court. Id. at FAC at ¶¶ 91, 93, 97-99, 87-88 ("after the January 2011 trial commenced, additional facts continued to be uncovered, which further demonstrate that . . . Mattel knew its original [*10] case was statute-barred and without any merit," specifically an "internal memo" about an "investigation filed in 2002 that related to whether Bratz was an infringement"); see also id. at ¶¶ 50 ("As MGA proved in the underlying litigation, Mattel's . . . strategy . . . consisted, in part, of anticompetitive practices . . . . Indeed, the jury found that Mattel . . . misappropriated 26 categories of MGA trade secrets . . . ."), 53 ("Carrying out this scorched earth strategy, Mattel filed and ruthlessly pursued claims against MGA . . . . Mattel's litigation strategy involved launching thousands of discovery requests, taking needless depositions, and filing hundreds and hundreds of motions."), 55 (citing cases in 2001 and 2003 recognizing Mattel's aggressive and sometimes sanctionable litigation practices).

The FAC also describes three instances of conduct that could have occurred after August 16, 2010: (1) "during the second trial," Mattel "wrongfully sought to withhold" Mattel's "communications with Kohl's Department Stores" and "35 boxes of Mattel documents," which this Court ordered to be produced (FAC at ¶ 94); (2) "on August 11, 2011," Mattel filed post-trial motions and appealed the [*11] adverse judgment it received in the prior litigation (id. at ¶ 79); and (3) Defendants "secured the appointment of an auditor and temporary receiver . . . based on false allegations" in court (id. at ¶ at 93).

Finally, the FAC alleges that this litigation conduct is continuing. See id. at 54 ("Mattel's 'litigate MGA to death' strategy continues unabated to this very day, with Mattel continually aggressively pursuing its baseless claims . . . ."); 80 ("Mattel has developed and continues to ruthlessly deploy a costly, lengthy 'litigate MGA to death' strategy, pursuing a case . . . to accomplish its anticompetitive objectives."). Specifically, the FAC alleges that "[b]eginning at least with the introduction of Bratz in 2001 and continuing uninterrupted through the present time, [Mattel and Eckert have] been continuously violating Section 2 of the Sherman Act by monopolizing and attempting to monopolize the sale and distribution of fashion dolls in the United States. Mattel destroyed the value of a competitive company by pursuing scorched earth, baseless litigation as an anticompetitive business objective." Id. at ¶ 104.

i. Present Motion to Dismiss Case 11-1063

On December 9, 2011, in lieu [*12] of an answer, Defendants filed the present Motion to Dismiss that is before the Court. [2] (Dkt. 36). In addition to arguments on the merits that this Order does not reach, Defendants contend that MGA's current complaint is procedurally barred either: (1) under the doctrine of res judicata; or (2) because the current claims were compulsory under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(a).

II. Legal Standard

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a complaint must be dismissed when a plaintiff's allegations fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In order for a complaint to survive a 12(b)(6) motion, it must state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). A claim for relief is facially plausible when the plaintiff pleads enough facts, taken as true, to allow a court to draw a reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the alleged conduct. Id. at 1949. If the facts only allow a court to [*13] draw a reasonable inference that the defendant is possibly liable, then the complaint must be dismissed. Id. Mere legal conclusions are not to be accepted as true and do not establish a plausible claim for relief. Id. at 1950. Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will be a context-specific task requiring the court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense. Id. Dismissal does not require the appearance, beyond a doubt, that the plaintiff can prove "no set of facts" in support of its claim that would entitle it to relief. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1968, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (abrogating Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)).

In evaluating a 12(b)(6) motion, review is "limited to the contents of the complaint." Clegg v. Cult Awareness Network, 18 F.3d 752, 754 (9th Cir. 1994). However, exhibits attached to the complaint, as well as matters of public record, may be considered in determining whether dismissal was proper without converting the motion to one for summary judgment. See Parks School of Business, Inc. v. Symington, 51 F.3d 1480, 1484 (9th Cir. 1995); Mack v. South Bay Beer Distributors, Inc., 798 F.2d 1279, 1282 (9th Cir. 1986). [*14] Further, a court may consider documents "on which the complaint 'necessarily relies' if: (1) the complaint refers to the document; (2) the document is central to the plaintiff's claim; and (3) no party questions the authenticity of the copy attached to the 12(b)(6) motion." Marder v. Lopez, 450 F.3d 445, 448 (9th Cir. 2006). "The Court may treat such a document as 'part of the complaint, and thus may assume that its contents are true for purposes of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6)." Id.

Dismissal without leave to amend is appropriate only when the Court is satisfied that the deficiencies in the complaint could not possibly be cured by amendment. Jackson v. Carey, 353 F.3d 750, 758 (9th Cir. 2003) (citing Chang v. Chen, 80 F.3d 1293, 1296 (9th Cir. 1996)). However, a district court's discretion to deny leave to amend is "particularly broad where plaintiff has previously amended the complaint." Ascon Properties, Inc. v. Mobil Oil Co., 866 F.2d 1149, 1160 (9th Cir. 1989).

III. Discussion

Because the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion under the doctrine of res judicata and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(a), the Court does not reach Defendants' alternative arguments on the merits.

a. [*15] MGA's FAC and Opposition Effectively Ask this Court to Reconsider Its Prior Order Dismissing the Original Complaint

[2] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) permits a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted to be filed before an answer. See Scott v. Kuhlmann, 746 F.2d 1377, 1378 (9th Cir. 1984).

Before delving into the merits of Defendants' Motion, this Court notes that MGA's First Amended Complaint ("FAC") and Opposition all but ask this Court to reconsider its prior order dismissing the Original Complaint. In dismissing that Original Complaint, this Court previously held that Mattel's "conduct in the prior litigation—conduct which must have occurred before August 16, 2010"—is barred by res judicata and Rule 13(a). See Order (Dkt. 29) at 9. This Court dismissed the Original Complaint without prejudice because it did "not appear impossible for MGA to allege anticompetitive conduct after August 16, 2010." Id. at 20 (emphasis in original).

In its Opposition, MGA does not dispute that most of the FAC's antitrust claim arises from injuries and litigation conduct occurring well before August 10, 2010. Nor does MGA address the cases or arguments raised in Defendants' Motion that attack the paltry three allegations in the FAC regarding activity occurring after August 10, 2010. Instead, MGA primarily relitigates this Court's prior holdings regarding the res judicata doctrine [*16] and whether the Mercoid/Hydranautics exception to Rule 13(a) should be expanded beyond the realm of patent law. As a result, MGA offers this Court no basis on which to deny Defendants' Motion.

b. MGA's Claim Is Dismissed Under the Doctrine of Res Judicata

The doctrine of res judicata, also referred to as claim preclusion, bars any claims in a later case that could have been raised in a prior case where: (1) there has been a final judgment on the merits in the prior case; (2) the prior case involved the same parties or parties in privity; and (3) there is an identity of claims between the two cases. Owens v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc., 244 F.3d 708, 713 (9th Cir. 2001). [3] Because res judicata is an affirmative defense, the burden is on Defendants, as the parties asserting it, to prove all of its elements. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c); Karim-Panahi v. Los Angeles Police Dep't, 839 F.2d 621, 627 n.4 (9th Cir. 1988) (abrogated on other grounds).

The parties do not dispute that this Court's judgment in the prior case (04-9049 Dkt. 10704) was a final judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction. [4] Nor do they dispute that that the present case involves the same parties in privity. [5]

Thus, the only disputed element of res judicata is whether the prior cases (CV 05-2727 and CV 04-9049) share an identity of claims with the present case (CV 11-1063). Whether there is an identity of claims depends on four factors, the first of which is the most important, namely: (1) the two cases arise out of the same transactional nucleus of facts; (2) the rights or interests established in the prior judgment would be destroyed or impaired by prosecution of the second case; (3) substantially the same evidence is presented in the two cases; and (4) the two cases involve infringement of the same right. Costantini v. Trans World Airlines, 681 F.2d 1199, 1201-02 (9th Cir.

[3] If events were "actually litigated" in the prior suit, "then the res judicata bar would have to expand to encompass those events and others that might have been litigated with them." See L.A. Branch NAACP v. L.A. Unified School Dist., 750 F.2d 731, 740 (9th Cir. 1984). [*17] However, res judicata does not require the claim to have been actually litigated in the prior suit. See Costantini v. Trans World Airlines, 681 F.2d 1199, 1201 (9th Cir. 1982). Indeed, res judicata prevents "an imaginative lawyer" from relitigating old facts by "attaching a different legal label." Tahoe-Sierra Preservation Council, Inc. v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency, 322 F.3d 1064, 1079 (9th Cir. 2003).

[4] On April 4, 2011, this Court rendered a final judgment on the merits in the prior case 04-9049. See Order (04-9049 Dkt. 10704). Mattel's appeal of that decision does not impact the present analysis because "a final judgment retains all of its res judicata consequences pending decision of the appeal." See Tripati v. Henman, 857 F.2d 1366, 1367 (9th Cir. 1988).

[5] Any dispute would indeed be unfounded given that Eckert is a senior employee of Mattel—a named party in MGA's prior litigation—and Eckert's conduct was the subject of MGA's prior claims. See [*18] Adams v. Cal. Dep't of Health Servs., 487 F.3d 684, 691 (9th Cir. 2007) (employees were parties in privity with corporation where corporation was prior suit's defendant and liability was premised on employee wrongdoing); Single Chip Sys. Corp. v. Intermec IP Corp., 495 F. Supp. 2d 1052, 1064 (S.D. Cal. 2007) (finding privity "even if the named parties differ").

1982). Because this Court concludes that these four factors show that MGA's current and prior cases share an identity of claims, res judicata bars the current [*19] claims and dismissal is proper.

i. The same transactional nucleus of facts give rise to MGA's current and prior claims Claims arise from the same transactional nucleus of facts where the same "transaction, or series of transactions" could give rise to both claims, often shown by the similarity of the allegations in the prior and current pleadings. See Western Sys. v. Ulloa, 958 F.2d 864, 871 (9th Cir. 1992); Adams v. Cal. Dep't of Health Servs., 487 F.3d 684, 691 (9th Cir. 2007). A later claim arises from a different transactional nucleus of facts where the later claim alleges "new injuries caused by new acts" of the defendant. See Tahoe-Sierra Pres. Council, Inc.v. Tahoe Reg'l Planning Agency, 322 F.3d 1064, 1076 (9th Cir. 2003). This rule regarding res judicata does not change when applied to an antitrust claim. To avoid being barred by res judicata, an antitrust claim must allege new injuries caused by new acts done "subsequent to the last date alleged in the prior adjudication." Int'l Techs. Consultants v. Pilkington PLC, 137 F.3d 1382, 1388 (9th Cir. 1998). The antitrust claim can not simply allege injuries or "damages from subsequent consequences of the earlier conduct." Id.

Thus, [*20] res judicata bars MGA's current complaint if Defendants can show that: (1) MGA's allegations in its prior pleadings could give rise to the current claims; and (2) MGA fails to allege new injuries arising from new acts occurring between August 16, 2010, and November 10, 2011. Those dates reflect MGA's last pleadings in the prior case and MGA's filing of its current FAC.

1. MGA's prior claims and its current antitrust claim share the same transactional nucleus of facts to the extent the antitrust claim relies on Defendants' litigation conduct before August 16, 2010

The vast majority of MGA's antitrust claim relies on Defendants' conduct during and in preparation for litigation prior to August 16, 2010. As shown by other documents filed with the Court, the FAC refers to conduct which occurred before August 16, 2010 and which was already detailed in MGA's pleadings, both in the prior case and in the present case's Original Complaint, which this Court dismissed. [6] For example, the gravamen of the FAC's antitrust claim is that the prior case was the product of Mattel's "'litigate MGA to death' strategy," in which Mattel "pursued a result"—a constructive trust over the idea of Bratz—that was [*21] "so extreme that no objective litigant could have expected it to survive full judicial review." FAC at ¶¶ 52, 59. Similarly, the FAC alleges that Mattel knowingly litigated claims barred by the statute of limitations and made several "misrepresentations" to the court. FAC at ¶¶ 91, 93, 97-99. This litigation conduct occurred prior to August 16, 2010, and these same allegations appeared in MGA's pleadings on and prior to August 16, 2010. See (04-9049) Dkt. 2573 ¶¶ 59-69 (MGA's March 8, 2008 proposed statement of facts); Dkt. 8583 ¶¶ 30-36, 60, 315-18 (MGA's August 16, 2010, counterclaims in reply). For that very reason, this Court dismissed these same allegations three months ago when they appeared in MGA's Original Complaint. See Order (Dkt. 29) at 9-10; see also Compl. (Dkt. 1) at ¶¶ 16-25, 30, 59-60 (alleging that Mattel sought a remedy against MGA that "required the district judge to enter a ruling that was an abuse of discretion" and that Mattel litigated time-barred claims and engaged in discovery abuses).

In its Opposition, MGA does not dispute that the vast majority of MGA's antitrust claim relies on Defendants' litigation conduct before August 16, 2010. [7] Thus, to the extent that the antitrust claim is based on Defendants' conduct in the prior litigation—conduct which must have occurred before August 16, 2010—the antitrust claim arises from the same transactional nucleus of facts as MGA's pleading in the prior litigation.

[6] This court takes judicial notice of the documents filed with this Court as matters of public record. See Fed. R. Evid. 201; Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 688-689 (9th Cir. 2001). [*22] Defendants identified these documents in a useful chart in their briefing of the previous motion to dismiss. See Mot. to Dismiss Complaint (Dkt. 11) at 9-10; Reply (Dkt. 20) at 3, n.1.

[7] Instead, MGA argues that its antitrust claim arising from this litigation conduct was not ripe. The Court addresses this argument later in this Order.

2. MGA's prior claims and its current antitrust claim share the same transactional nucleus of facts to the extent the antitrust claim relies on Mattel's non-litigation conduct that was actually litigated

The FAC contains a few references to non-litigation conduct by Defendants which was actually litigated in the prior action. For example, the FAC alleges that, "[a]s MGA proved in the underlying litigation, Mattel's . . . strategy . . . [*23] consisted, in part, of anticompetitive practices such as infiltrating confidential competitor showrooms, accessing industry events with false identification, and representing sham toy retailers." FAC ¶ at 50. However, the FAC itself states that this non-litigation conduct was already litigated in the prior action—indeed, MGA received a judgment in its favor. See id. ("Indeed, the jury found that Mattel . . . misappropriated 26 categories of MGA trade secrets . . . ."). Thus, the non-litigation conduct that was actually litigated is also barred by res judicata. See L.A. Branch NAACP v. L.A. Unified School Dist., 750 F.2d 731, 740 (9th Cir. 1984) (holding that, to extent plaintiffs "actually litigated the liability of the" Defendant, "then the res judicata bar would have to expand to encompass those events and others that might have been litigated with them").

3. To the extent that MGA's antitrust claim alleges litigation conduct after August 16, 2010, those allegations are either too conclusory to state a claim or are not new acts giving rise to a new antitrust injury

The remaining litigation conduct alleged in the FAC constitute the same transactional nucleus of facts as the prior case [*24] because the remaining litigation conduct was not a new act creating a new antitrust injury separate from the injury created by Mattel's litigation conduct before August 16, 2010. The FAC describes three instances of conduct that could have occurred after August 16, 2010: (1) "during the second trial," Mattel "wrongfully sought to withhold" Mattel's "communications with Kohl's Department Stores" and "35 boxes of Mattel documents," which this Court ordered to be produced (FAC at ¶ 94); (2) "on August 11, 2011," Mattel filed post-trial motions and appealed the adverse judgment it received in the prior litigation (id. at ¶ 79); and (3) Defendants "secured the appointment of an auditor and temporary receiver . . . based on false allegations" in court (id. at ¶ at 93). [8]

a. Mattel's Discovery Abuses

In Tahoe-Sierra, the Ninth Circuit held that res judicata barred plaintiffs from challenging the defendant planning agency's decision in 1999 to enforce a plan enacted in 1987 because the decision was not a distinct act giving rise to a new injury separate from the enactment of the plan. See Tahoe-Sierra Pres. Council, Inc.v. Tahoe Reg'l Planning Agency, 322 F.3d 1064, 1076 (9th Cir. 2003). In the prior case, the plaintiffs had challenged the constitutionality of the plan itself; in the later case, they challenged the constitutionality of the decision to enforce the plan. Id. at 1078. The court held that the "transactional nucleus of facts" the two suits shared was the "enactment of the 1987 Plan." Id. The Court reached this conclusion because the defendant "acted in 1999 precisely as it was required to act by the plain terms of the 1987 Plan"; the "mere fact that it so acted in 1999 does not establish a new set of facts giving rise to a new legal claim." Id. at 1079. The court rejected the plaintiff's "attempts to frame its complaint in terms of new injuries caused by new acts," because the present action "is in reality [*26] a prayer for relief from wrongs allegedly done" at a time when they could have been raised in the prior litigation. Id. at 1076. The court concluded that the 1999 decision merely furnished plaintiffs with "more information about the extent of their alleged injury," but that this additional information did not create a "cause of action to recover increased damages from an injury that has already been addressed by a final judgment." Id. at 1079 n.12.

[8] MGA's Opposition does not identify these three instances of conduct as a basis to deny Defendants motion, nor does it discuss the cases or arguments made by Defendants in their Motion regarding this post-pleading conduct. Instead, a substantial part of MGA's Opposition simply copies verbatim the cases and arguments MGA listed in its FAC, neither of which addresses the relevant issue of what conduct constitutes a new acts [*25] giving rise to a new antitrust injury.

As in Tahoe-Sierra, res judicata bars MGA from challenging Mattel's discovery abuses in the prior litigation because the discovery abuses were not a distinct act giving rise to a new injury separate from Mattel's other litigation conduct. In the prior case, MGA's RICO claim sought damages because Mattel engaged in discovery abuses and litigated time-barred claims. See (04-9049) Dkt. 2573 ¶¶ 59-69 (MGA's March 8, 2008 proposed statement of facts); Dkt. 8583 ¶¶ 30-36, 60, 315-18 (MGA's August 16, 2010, counterclaims-in-reply). In the current antitrust claim, MGA alleges that Mattel engaged in discovery abuses in the prior case and withheld evidence that Mattel knew its claims were time-barred. The transactional nucleus of facts that the two [*27] suits share is Mattel's conduct in the prior case, specifically, engaging in discovery abuses and litigating time-barred claims. Simply because Mattel continued the litigation conduct for which MGA's RICO claim sought damages "does not establish a new set of facts giving rise to a new legal claim." See Tahoe-Sierra, 322 F.3d at 1079. Rather, at most this continued conduct provided MGA with "more information about the extent of [its] alleged injury," but this additional information does not create a "cause of action to recover increased damages from an injury that has already been addressed by a final judgment." Id. at 1079 n.12.

Thus, the discovery abuses alleged in the FAC arise from the same transactional nucleus of facts as the prior case because these discover abuses were not new acts creating a new antitrust injury separate from the injury created by Mattel's litigation conduct before August 16, 2010.

b. Mattel's Appeal

For the purposes of determining when the statute of limitations runs for an antitrust claim based on litigation, the Ninth Circuit has held that a party's appeal of the judgment in a prior case does not constitute a "new and independent act" that "inflict[s] new . [*28] . . injury." Pace Industries, Inc. v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 238 (9th Cir. 1987). In reaching this conclusion, the court reasoned that "no new injury results from the act of appealing that the [victim of the antitrust violation] does not already endure as a result of the act of filing the action initially." Id.

The Court imports this Ninth Circuit authority regarding the statute of limitations of an antitrust claim into the present res judicata analysis. Mattel's act of appealing the judgment in the prior case did not impose a new injury on MGA separate from the injury MGA endured due to Mattel's litigation conduct in the prior case. There was no new injury "because the reasonable expectation from the commencement of a lawsuit is that the plaintiff will pursue the litigation until it prevails or the last appeal is exhausted." See id. To hold otherwise would allow every victim of an antitrust violation based on sham litigation to file multiple suits at each phase in that sham litigation, a holding which would greatly undermine judicial economy. Cf. Misischia v. St. John's Mercy Health Sys., 457 F.3d 800, 805 (8th Cir. 2006) ("The doctrine of res judicata would become meaningless [*29] if a party could relitigate the same issue . . . merely by positing a few additional facts that occurred after the initial suit.").

Thus, Mattel's appeal of the prior case arises from the same transactional nucleus of facts as the prior case because the appeal was not a new act creating a new antitrust injury separate from the injury created by Mattel's litigation conduct before August 16, 2010.

c. Mattel's Court Action

Finally, to the extent that MGA relies on its allegation that Defendants "secured the appointment of an auditor and temporary receiver . . . based on false allegations" in court to argue that Defendants engaged in litigation conduct after August 16, 2010, this one-sentence allegation is too conclusory. See FAC ¶ at 93. In the prior Order dismissing MGA's Original Complaint, this Court previously held that a similar allegation was too conclusory. See Order (Dkt. 29) at 9-10 n.5 (rejecting allegation in Paragraph 30(c) of the Original Complaint that Defendants filed a "baseless and frivolous new lawsuit" in court).

4. MGA's allegation that antitrust violations "continue" or are "uninterrupted" is too conclusory to state a claim

Finally, the FAC sporadically describes Mattel's [*30] litigation conduct as "continuing" or "uninterrupted." See FAC at ¶ 80 ("Mattel . . . continues to ruthlessly deploy a costly, lengthy 'litigate MGA to death' strategy, pursuing a case . . . to accomplish its anticompetitive objectives."). In addition, the claim for relief states that: "[b]eginning at least with the introduction of Bratz in 2001 and continuing uninterrupted through the present time, [Mattel and Eckert have] been continuously violating Section 2 of the Sherman Act by monopolizing and attempting to monopolize the sale and distribution of fashion dolls in the United States." Id. at ¶ 104.

Given that this Court has concluded that the FAC's other allegations share a transactional nucleus of facts with the prior case, the remaining issue is whether MGA's reference to continuous activity is too conclusory to allege new antitrust injuries arising from new acts by Defendants between August 16, 2010, and November 10, 2011. See Daniels-Hall v. Nat'l Educ. Ass'n, 629 F.3d 992, 998 (9th Cir. 2010) ("A court need not credit a complaint's . . . allegations that are merely conclusory."). The Court concludes that these allegations are too conclusory.

In Dual-Deck, the Ninth Circuit applied [*31] collateral estoppel—also referred to as issue preclusion and a close cousin of res judicata—to bar an antitrust claim where the complaint asserted "violations of [antitrust] law and other acts taken by the defendant . . . since the filing" of the prior suit and incorporated the factual allegations from the prior suit's complaint. In re Dual-Deck Video Cassette Recorder Antitrust Litig., 11 F.3d 1460, 1463 (9th Cir. 1993). The Ninth Circuit held that this "ambiguous" reference to activity "since the filing" did not show that the plaintiff alleged that defendants had formed a new conspiracy after the filing, which was a necessary element of the antitrust claim. Id. at 1463-64. Later courts have interpreted Dual-Deck as holding that the "plaintiff alleged damages from subsequent consequences of the earlier conduct," not new conduct done after the filing. Int'l Techs. Consultants v. Pilkington PLC, 137 F.3d 1382, 1388 (9th Cir. 1998) (emphasis added) (recognizing that Dual-Deck could also be applied to res judicata analysis).

In contrast, in Harkins the Ninth Circuit held that res judicata did not bar an antitrust claim where the later complaint alleged that, "at least as early as September [*32] 1, 1976 and continuing without interruption[, defendants] formulated a plan and have continuously pursued a course of conduct intended to unreasonably restrain trade." Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc. v. Harry Nace Co., 890 F.2d 181, 182 (9th Cir. 1989). The court reasoned that it would be "over-technical" to construe the complaint as alleging that a conspiracy formed only in September 1, 1976. Id. Thus, the court read the complaint as alleging that defendants "conspire[d] continuously since that date," which meant that defendants' conspiracy formed after the pleadings in the prior litigation. Id. The Ninth Circuit also noted that, "by the defendants' own concession," the facts alleged in the later and prior complaints were "at least 10 percent different," in addition to being "conduct that occurred in a different time period." Id. at 184.

The Court finds Dual-Deck more persuasive and distinguishes Harkins. First, unlike in Harkins, Defendants here do not concede that MGA's current complaint contains 10 percent new allegations. Instead, Defendants have demonstrated that MGA reiterates the same allegations as in its prior pleadings and that the allegations regarding conduct after [*33] August 16, 2010, were not new acts giving rise to new antitrust injuries.

Second, like in Dual-Deck, MGA's current complaint fails to identify by date the new conduct creating new antitrust injury that could be the basis for the allegation that Mattel is "continuously violating" antitrust laws. [9] Like in Dual-Deck, MGA's Opposition Brief does not identify any allegations of conduct after August 16, 2010, in the current complaint—indeed, MGA omits any mention of Mattel or Eckert's conduct between August 16, 2010, and November 10, 2011, in its summary of the facts of this case. (Pl. Opp'n at 4). And, like in Dual-Deck, MGA recreates allegations from its prior pleadings, including repeating verbatim allegations from its Original Complaint that this Court previously dismissed. Compare FAC ¶ 81 with Compl. ¶ 24.

Given that MGA's current claims mirror its prior allegations [*34] and that MGA's Opposition Brief does not identify a single allegation in the FAC regarding a new antitrust injury derived from a new act by Defendants since August [9] As the Court has already explained, the three allegations of conduct occurring after MGA's pleadings on August 16, 2010, do not constitute new acts giving rise to a new antitrust injury. Thus, if these allegations are the "continuing" conduct to which the FAC refers, these allegations are not enough to prevent dismissal.

16, 2010, MGA's allegations that Defendants' antitrust violations are "continuing" are too conclusory. At best, like in Dual-Deck, MGA is only alleging "damages from subsequent consequences of the earlier conduct," and not new conduct occurring after August 16, 2010. See Int'l Techs. Consultants v. Pilkington PLC, 137 F.3d 1382, 1388 (9th Cir. 1998).

ii. The remaining factors also indicate that MGA's current and prior claims are the same

As noted earlier, courts consider three additional factors to determine if two suits share an identity of claims, namely whether: (1) substantially the same evidence is presented in the two actions; (2) the rights or interests established in the prior judgment would be destroyed or impaired by prosecution of the second action; and (3) the two suits involve infringement of the same right. These factors militate strongly in favor of preclusion.

First, MGA's reliance on the same factual allegations in both its present and prior claim demonstrates that the same evidence would be presented to prove [*35] both claims. MGA argues that "new and distinct evidence is required to prove an antitrust claim, including detailed market analysis and expert economist opinions." Opp'n at 9. However, the availability of additional evidence is not enough. Instead, the controlling issue is whether substantially the same evidence could be used to satisfy both claims. See Western Sys. v. Ulloa, 958 F.2d 864, 871-872 (9th Cir. 1992); Int'l Union of Operating Eng'r-Employers Constr. Indus. Pension v. Karr, 994 F.2d 1426, 1430 (9th Cir. 1993) (res judicata may apply even where there is some difference in the evidence). MGA failed to introduce evidence of market analysis in the prior case because MGA failed to plead an antitrust violation; such a failure does not preclude res judicata. See In re International Nutronics, 28 F.3d 965, 970-71 (9th Cir. 1994) (holding that res judicata barred antitrust claim in later case because "evidence of unlawful collusion" that would support antitrust claim "ought to have been brought forward at the" prior case, and thus the prior "proceeding was a perfunctory and narrow one only because the [antitrust victim] chose not to make it otherwise").

Second, the two suits involve [*36] infringement of the same right, namely, MGA's right to compete in the market free from Mattel's allegedly illegal litigation strategy.

Finally, the rights established in the prior judgment would be destroyed or impaired by prosecution of the current antitrust claim. If MGA is successful in its current claims, it could lead to either a double recovery for the same injury or recovery for a claim against which Mattel previously successfully defended. For example, judgment was previously entered against MGA regarding its counterclaims-in-reply that Mattel was liable for RICO violations and wrongful injunction—two claims that share the same transactional nucleus of facts as the current antitrust claim. Yet, MGA's current antitrust claim now seeks damages for Defendants' pursuit of this unreasonable injunctive relief.

iii. Res judicata is not set aside due to equitable considerations

In the FAC and its Opposition, MGA argues that this Court's imposition of a trial date in January 2011 gave MGA too little time to prepare an antitrust case, and thus MGA did not raise an antitrust claim on August 16, 2010. (Opp'n 18). However, because MGA never advanced its antitrust claim, the Court was not given [*37] the opportunity to decide whether to extend the trial deadline. Regardless, the Ninth Circuit and Supreme Court have "rejected any equitable exceptions to the application of res judicata based on 'public policy' or 'simple justice.'" Owens v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc., 244 F.3d 708, 714 (9th Cir. 2001) (rejecting argument that res judicata should not apply due to counsel's failures in prior case); see also Federated Dep't Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 401, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 (1981).

Furthermore, MGA cannot now contend that this Court procedurally precluded MGA from raising its antitrust claim when the failure rests with MGA. In the prior litigation, this Court agreed with MGA that all its counterclaims-in-reply were compulsory, including the RICO and wrongful injunction claims which share the same transactional nucleus of facts as MGA's current antitrust claim. (04-9049 Dkt. 8892 at 14). Because these RICO and wrongful injunction counterclaims-in-reply were compulsory, the Court allowed MGA to raise those claims in the prior litigation. The Court dismissed MGA's wrongful injunction counterclaim-in-reply on the merits, reasoning that MGA sought to "recover [*38] two categories of damages that are unavailable as a matter of law." Id. Because the Court dismissed MGA's wrongful injunction counterclaim-in-reply on the merits, MGA's own failure to articulate a cognizable claim arising from the injunction prevented MGA from further litigating that claim.

Finally, this is not a case where the victim of sham litigation was kept ignorant about the sham until after she filed her last pleading in the case. Res judicata would not prevent such a victim from bringing an antitrust claim after discovering the baselessness of the sham litigation. See Western Sys. v. Ulloa, 958 F.2d 864, 871-872 (9th Cir. 1992) ("Ignorance of a party does not . . . avoid the bar of res judicata unless the ignorance was caused by the misrepresentation or concealment of the opposing party."). Here, the facts giving rise to MGA's current antitrust claim were either in MGA's possession or were public knowledge well before August 16, 2010—which is why, on that date, MGA pled these facts in its RICO and wrongful injunction counterclaims-in-reply. MGA simply chose to style those facts as a claim under RICO and for wrongful injunction. In short, the Court's ruling is narrow; it merely [*39] holds that res judicata bars a later claim that is based on allegations of misconduct of which the claimant was previously aware and had alleged in the prior case.

iv. Conclusion

In sum, an identity of claims is shown because MGA's current and prior pleadings arise from the same transactional nucleus of facts and the remaining other three factors also militate in favor of claim preclusion. The parties do no dispute that there has been a final judgment on the merits in the prior case and that the prior case was between parties in privity. Equitable considerations do not prevent the application of res judicata. Accordingly, res judicata bars MGA's antitrust claim because there has been a final judgment on the merits in a prior case, that prior case was between parties in privity, and the prior and present cases involve an identity of claims. See Costantini v. Trans World Airlines, 681 F.2d 1199, 1201 (9th Cir. 1982).

c. MGA's Claim Is Dismissed Because It Was Compulsory in the Prior Litigation

A party who fails to plead a compulsory counterclaim in a prior action, as required under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(a), is precluded from raising that claim in a later action. Mitchell v. CB Richard Ellis Long Term Disability Plan, 611 F.3d 1192, 1201 (9th Cir. 2010). [*40] The purpose of this rule is "to prevent multiplicity of litigation and to promptly bring about resolution of disputes before the court." Id.

A counterclaim is compulsory where it: (1) "arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim"; and (2) exists at the time the counterclaimant serves its pleading. [10] Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a). In the prior litigation, this Court followed MGA's urging and applied Ninth Circuit precedent to hold that Rule 13(a) applied not only to counterclaims, but also rendered compulsory MGA's counterclaims-in-reply, which were filed in response to Mattel's Fourth Amended Answer and Counterclaims. See Order 4:16-18 (04-9049 Dkt. 8892); Davis & Cox v. Summa Corp., 751 F.2d 1507, 1525 (9th Cir. 1985) (applying logical relationship test of FRCP 13(a) to counterclaim-in-reply).

Thus, MGA's current antitrust claim is precluded if Defendants can show that the claim: (1) arose from the same transaction as Mattel's last pleadings in the prior case, which were [*41] Mattel's Fourth Amended Answer and Counterclaims ("FAAC") (04-9049 Dkt. 7714); and (2) existed when MGA filed its last pleadings in the prior litigation, which were counterclaims-in-reply filed on August 16, 2010 (04-9049 Dkt. 8853). Although the Court concludes that these two requirements are all that it should consider under Rule 13(a), the Court also addresses

[10] The term "transaction" in Rule 13(a) includes "a series of occurrences." Baker v. Gold Seal Liquors, Inc., 417 U.S. 467, 469 n.1, 94 S.Ct. 2504, 2506 n.1, 41 L. Ed. 2d 243 (U.S. 1974).

MGA's argument that the Supreme Court and Ninth Circuit have created an exception to the compulsory counterclaim rule for antitrust claims arising from sham litigation. [11]

i. MGA's current antitrust claim based on Defendants' litigation conduct shares a logical relationship with Mattel's pleadings in the prior litigation

The Ninth Circuit's "logical relationship test" holds that a claim arises from the same transaction, and thus is compulsory, where it "arises from the same aggregate set of operative facts" as the opponent's pleadings. See In re Pinkstaff, 974 F.2d 113, 115 (9th Cir. 1992). Two claims may be logically related even though they do not arise out of the same [*42] nucleus of facts. Pochiro v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 827 F.2d 1246, 1249 (9th Cir. 1987); Jones v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 358 F.3d 205, 210-13 (2d Cir. 2004) ("Although the 'logical relationship' test does not require 'an absolute identity of factual backgrounds,' . . . the 'essential facts of the claims must be so logically connected that considerations of judicial economy and fairness dictate that all the issues be resolved in one lawsuit.''). A logical relationship may exist even if the counterclaim's allegations need not be resolved in order to dispose of the underlying claim. In re Marshall, 600 F.3d 1037, 1058-59 (9th Cir. 2010).

Applying the logical relationship test, MGA's current antitrust claim shares a logical relationship with Mattel's pleadings in the prior litigation. MGA's current antitrust claim and Mattel's RICO claim raised in the prior litigation share a logical relationship because each alleges misconduct by the other during the litigation of cases 05-2727 and 04-9049. In the prior litigation, Mattel's FAAC alleged, among other things, that MGA committed RICO violations because of MGA's alleged misconduct and unwillingness to comply with the phase 1 jury's verdicts [*43] in the prior litigation. In its current antitrust claim, MGA alleges that Mattel engaged in misconduct during the prior litigation through discovery abuse, disregard for the statute of limitations, and pursuit of unreasonable injunctive relief. Because both MGA's current claim and Mattel's prior claim arise from the parties' conduct in the prior litigation, MGA's current antitrust claim was compulsory and should have been brought in the prior litigation.

This conclusion is consistent with the holdings by several courts that an antitrust claim based on sham litigation is a compulsory counterclaim in the very litigation that is alleged to be a sham. See, e.g., Critical-Vac Filtration Corp. v. Minuteman Int'l., Inc., 233 F.3d 697, 700 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding sham litigation claim compulsory in the action alleged to be "sham," since "[a]n obvious 'logical relationship exists" between the actions); Eon Labs., Inc. v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., 298 F. Supp. 2d 175, 179-81 (D. Mass. 2003) (holding "sham litigation" compulsory in litigation alleged to be sham); Shmuel Shmueli, Bashe, Inc. v. Lowenfeld, 68 F. Supp. 2d 161, 162, 165-66 (E.D.N.Y. 1999) (antitrust claim based on defendant's pursuit [*44] of litigation was "plainly compulsory" in the underlying litigation).

Furthermore, other courts in this Circuit have held an antitrust claim to be compulsory where, as here, the antitrust victim's pleading in the prior case alleges similar facts to the ones alleged in the later case's antitrust claim. In Grumman, the court dismissed a California antitrust claim brought in a later case because it was a compulsory counterclaim to the prior case for copyright infringement. See Grumman Systems Support Corp. v. Data General Corp., 125 F.R.D. 160, 162 (N.D.Cal. 1988). The Court reasoned that the two actions shared a logical relationship because the antitrust victim's answer in the earlier action and complaint in the later action both "alleged monopolization by copyright misuse" by the same party. Id. The court reached this conclusion even though the later action alleged "additional facts going to its monopolization claim" and brought claims against two additional defendants over whom no personal jurisdiction existed in the prior action. Id. at 162, 163. The court noted that the differences between the legal theories advanced by the antitrust victim in the two cases "is largely irrelevant [*45] to Rule 13(a) analysis" because the "central issue is whether there is a logical relationship between the claims in the two actions." Id. at 162-63.

[11] Regarding this exception, MGA's Opposition advances the same arguments that this Court found unconvincing when it previously dismissed the Original Complaint.

Like the plaintiff in Grumman, MGA previously defended against copyright infringement claims and now brings an antitrust claim in a later case. Like in Grumman, the two actions share a logical relationship because the MGA's pleadings in the two cases both allege the same facts: Mattel's discovery abuses, disregard for the statute of limitations, and pursuit of unreasonable injunctive relief in the prior litigation. Like in Grumman, even if MGA's antitrust claim alleges "additional facts going to its monopolization claim," these additional facts do not eliminate the logical relationship between the prior and present claims. See id. at 162, 163. Finally, like in Grumman, the differences between the legal theories advanced by MGA in the two cases— RICO and wrongful injunction in the prior case versus an antitrust claim in the present case—"is largely irrelevant to Rule 13(a) analysis" because the "central issue is whether there is a logical relationship between the claims in the two actions." See id. at 162-63.

Finally, courts have rejected [*46] similar arguments to the one MGA advances here, namely, that "judicial economy and fairness support" the characterization of MGA's antitrust claim as a "permissive claim." See Opp'n at 19. For example, the Ninth Circuit has held that an antitrust claim is compulsory in a prior infringement action because, "although the antitrust and patent infringement claims are grounded in different statutes, they raise many of the same legal, factual, and evidentiary issues" such that "[j]udicial economy and efficiency counsel analysis of these issues in a single proceeding." Destiny Tool v. SGS Tools Co., 344 Fed. Appx. 320, 323 (9th Cir. 2009); see also Mosdos Chofetz Chaim, Inc. v. Village Of Wesley Hills, 701 F. Supp. 2d 568, 590 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (allegation that prior lawsuit was a "pretext for illegal actions" is "logically intertwined" with the validity of the claims in the prior lawsuit and, consequently, principles of "judicial economy and fairness dictate that all the issues should be resolved in one lawsuit") (internal quotation marks omitted). In addition, treatises note that "[d]espite the fact that antitrust counterclaims involve a number of different issues, such as market definition [*47] and market power, several lower courts have ruled that antitrust counterclaims are compulsory counterclaims to infringement and similar actions under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(a)." Jay Dratler, Jr., Licensing of Intellectual Property §2.04[1] n.10 (2006) (listing cases from the Third, Sixth, Seventh, and Ninth Circuits).

Thus, MGA's current antitrust claim arose from the same transaction as Mattel's last pleadings in the prior case. [12]

ii. MGA's antitrust claim was not unripe on August 16, 2010

As noted previously, Rule 13(a) bars claims in a later case that could have been brought in a prior case. Mitchell v. CB Richard Ellis Long Term Disability Plan, 611 F.3d 1192, 1201 (9th Cir. 2010). However, if a claim was not ripe at the time of MGA's last pleadings on August 16, 2010, that claim could not have been brought in that prior case. See [*48] Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a) (requiring counterclaim to exist at the time the counterclaimant serves its pleading). Thus, an unripe claim would not be barred in the present case.

MGA latches onto this rule and contends that its "antitrust claim was not ripe and was premature until MGA secured a favorable verdict and judgment in the underlying suit." (Pl. Opp'n at 18). MGA analogizes its antitrust claim to the common law tort of malicious prosecution, which requires that the tort victim obtain a judgment in her favor in the underlying litigation that is the malicious prosecution. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 62, 62 n.7, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993) (stating that the tort requires an "unsuccessful civil lawsuit"); Restatement (Second) of Torts § 674 (1977) (stating that the tort requires that "the proceedings have terminated in favor of the person against whom they are brought"). MGA argues that, like in a malicious prosecution claim, an antitrust claim based on sham litigation should require, as an element of that claim, that the victim obtain a judgment in her favor in the underlying litigation that is the sham.

MGA's primary authority, Professional [*49] Real Estate Investors, does not support MGA's argument that this Court should import this malicious prosecution requirement into an antitrust claim. Professional Real Estate

[12] Although MGA does not argue that its current antitrust claim survives Rule 13(a) based on the three allegations of Defendants' litigation conduct after August 16, 2010, the same analysis this Court applied in this Order's res judicata discussion would lead to the conclusion that this conduct was not a new act creating a new antitrust injury.

Investors was not decided on ripeness grounds and says absolutely nothing about whether the victim of sham litigation must obtain a judgment in her favor in the underlying litigation before bringing an antitrust claim. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc., 508 U.S. at 57 (explicitly defining the issue addressed as "whether litigation may be sham merely because a subjective expectation of success does not motivate the litigant" and "answer[ing] this question in the negative").

Furthermore, MGA's novel rule urges exactly the kind of overreach that the Supreme Court cautioned against in Professional Real Estate Investors by seeking to "transplant[] every substantive nuance and procedural quirk of the common-law tort of wrongful civil proceedings into federal antitrust law." See Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 68 (Souter, J., concurring) (expressing "concern that other courts could read today's opinion" too broadly). Indeed, no case has interpreted Professional Real Estate Investors to stand [*50] for the proposition that MGA urges. See Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, Inc. v. Abbott Laboratories, Inc., 552 F.3d 1033, 1046 (9th Cir. 2009) (explaining that "Professional Real Estate Investors provides a strict two-step analysis to assess whether a single action constitutes sham petitioning"); 2 Holmes, Intellectual Property and Antitrust Law § 38:4 (explaining the different tests for an antitrust claim based on one sham case versus several cases).

Finally, while MGA cites no authority that supports its novel rule, the several cases discussed in the previous section hold that an antitrust claim is a compulsory counterclaim in the very case alleged to be a sham because joint adjudication of the claims will conserve judicial and party resources. See, e.g., Critical-Vac Filtration Corp. v. Minuteman Int'l., Inc., 233 F.3d 697, 700 (2d Cir. 2000). In fact, in the very case on which MGA relies, the victim of the purportedly sham litigation brought its antitrust claim as a counterclaim in that sham litigation before receiving a favorable judgment. See Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 52 ("In [*51] 1983, [plaintiff] sued [victim of purported sham] for alleged copyright infringement" and the victim "counterclaimed, charging [plaintiff] with violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act"). In addition, the very treatise on which MGA relies states that "an antitrust counterclaim for anticompetitive litigation can clearly be brought before the underlying suit has terminated." See Herbert Hovenkamp, Mark D. Janis, Mark A. Lemley, IP and Antitrust, Antitrust Allegations as Compulsory Counterclaims in Enforcement Litigation §11.3b6(B) (2001) (discussing Professional Real Estate Investors).

Given the overwhelming weight of authority, this Court resists MGA's urging to create a new element to an antitrust claim that requires the victim of sham litigation to obtain a judgment in her favor in the sham litigation before bringing an antitrust claim.

iii. The Court is not persuaded to extend the Mercoid/Hydranautics exception to prior cases that are not based on patent infringement

In Mercoid, the Supreme Court held that an antitrust claim based on prior patent infringement litigation was not a compulsory counterclaim in that patent litigation, but rather a permissive counterclaim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(b). [*52] Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Inv. Co., 320 U.S. 661, 671, 64 S. Ct. 268, 274, 88 L. Ed. 376, 1944 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 641 (1944) (overruled on other grounds, as stated in Beal Corp. Liquidating Trust v. Valleylab, Inc., 927 F. Supp. 1350, 1361 (D. Colo. 1996)). A half-century later, the Ninth Circuit relied on Mercoid to hold in Hydranautics that "a claim that patent infringement litigation violated an antitrust statute is a permissive, not a mandatory, counterclaim in a patent infringement case, and is not barred in a subsequent suit by failure to raise it in the infringement suit." Hydranautics v. FilmTec Corp., 70 F.3d 533, 536 (9th Cir. 1995).

MGA urges this Court to extend Mercoid and Hydranautics beyond the realm of patent infringement and to hold that MGA's antitrust claim was not a compulsory counterclaim in the prior non-patent-related litigation. MGA argues that neither Mercoid nor Hydranautics expressly limit their holdings to prior litigation involving patent infringement, and thus these holdings can be extended to the present case.

First, as Defendants note, MGA cites no case within the Ninth Circuit that extends Mercoid or Hydranautics beyond the realm of patent infringement and courts in this circuit have refused [*53] to do so. MGA does cite one case, Mead, in which an Ohio district court held that an antitrust claim was not a compulsory counterclaim in the prior copyright infringement litigation. See Mead Data Central v. West Pub. Co., 679 F.Supp. 1455 (S.D.Oh. 1987).

However, a court in this Circuit has rejected any analogy to Mead because Mead applied the Sixth Circuit's standard for compulsory counterclaims and did so in a manner that "differs from the Ninth Circuit standard in several ways." See Grumman Systems Support Corp. v. Data General Corp., 125 F.R.D. 160, 163 (N.D.Cal. 1988). Furthermore, courts in this and other circuits have not followed Mead and have not extended Mercoid or Hydranautics when urged to do so. In fact, the Ninth Circuit has noted that, since Hydranautics, the Mercoid exception has been read "more narrowly" by other circuits to apply to patent misuse, but not patent invalidity. Destiny Tool v. SGS Tools Co., 344 Fed. Appx. 320, 323 (9th Cir. 2009); see also Grumman, 125 F.R.D. at 163 ("[I]t is clear at this point that there is no such general exception [grounded in Mercoid] to the operation of Rule 13(a) [*54] and no case decided in the last twenty years holds to the contrary."); Herbert Hovenkamp, Mark D. Janis, Mark A. Lemley, IP and Antitrust, Antitrust Allegations as Compulsory Counterclaims in Enforcement Litigation §5.5 n.22 (2001) (noting that cases applying Mercoid to prior non-patent-related litigation are "aberrational").

Second, while neither Mercoid nor Hydranautics expressly limit their holdings to patent infringement litigation, the Ninth Circuit's policy justification for an exception to the compulsory counterclaim rule applies to only patent infringement litigation. In Hydranautics, the Ninth Circuit explained that the Mercoid exception was due to the unique appeals process in patent infringement litigation. Hydranautics, 70 F.3d at 536. Because patent infringement decisions are appealed to the Federal Circuit, treating antitrust claims as compulsory in patent infringement litigation could result in a "difference between the antitrust law generally applicable within each regional circuit, and antitrust law in predatory patent infringement cases." Id. While this may be an ex post facto explanation for Mercoid's opaque decision, the Court nonetheless finds the Ninth Circuit's [*55] logic a persuasive justification. [13]

Because other courts have not extended Mercoid or Hydranatics to prior litigation that is not based on patent infringement, this Court will not exempt MGA's antitrust claim from the traditional compulsory counterclaim analysis.

d. Because MGA's First Amended Complaint Does Not Cure the Defects Previously Identified By this Court, Dismissal With Prejudice Is Proper

A district court's discretion to deny leave to amend is "particularly broad where plaintiff has previously amended the complaint." Ascon Properties, Inc. v. Mobil Oil Co., 866 F.2d 1149, 1160 (9th Cir. 1989). In addition, leave to amend "need not be granted where the amendment of the complaint . . . constitutes an exercise in futility." Id.

As explained in this Order, MGA has failed to amend its pleadings to include new acts by Mattel giving rise to new antitrust injury after August 16, 2010. This failure, as well as MGA's arguments [*56] in its Opposition, indicates that MGA will not amend its complaint to include post-August 16, 2010, activity because MGA does not believe its complaint is defective as a matter of law. Instead, the parties clearly intend to seek the Ninth Circuit's guidance on the doctrine of res judicata and whether the Mercoid/Hydranautics exception to Rule 13(a) should be expanded beyond the realm of patent law. Accordingly, the Court can offer MGA no further guidance on how to amend its complaint to cure the present defects.

Therefore, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion and DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE.

IV. Disposition

[13] Other Circuits have bemoaned how Mercoid "effectively created an exception" to the definition of a compulsory counterclaim "without acknowledging or explaining the exception." Critical-Vac Filtration Corp. v. Minuteman Intern., Inc., 233 F.3d 697, 702 (2d Cir. 2000).

A court of appeals reviews de novo a district court's grant of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and a district court's grant of a Rule 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The facts alleged by the plaintiff must be accepted as true, and those factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level.

HN2[] Sherman Act, Scope

The Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 3(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN3[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

Under the Petition Clause of the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, private actors have the right to petition the government for action. U.S. Const. amend I provides that Congress shall make no law abridging the right of the people to petition the government for a redress of grievances. Where private actors petition the government for action that would violate antitrust law, the Petition Clause immunizes the actors from litigation in connection with their petitioning. Under these circumstances, private immunization from alleged violations of the Sherman Act is known as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The doctrine is an expression of the principle that the antitrust laws regulate business, not politics, and is designed to protect citizens' participation in government. Thus, where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, those urging the governmental action enjoy absolute immunity from antitrust liability for the anticompetitive restraint. However, private actors remain liable for anticompetitive activity not associated with government petitioning or antitrust violations that they directly cause. The dividing line between restraints resulting from governmental action and those resulting from private action may not always be obvious.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The United States Supreme Court has interpreted "petitioning" to encompass activities other than legislative lobbying. For example, Noerr-Pennington immunity protects private actors when they file court documents and enter contracts with the government. Petitioning also includes the acts of negotiating and entering into settlements or other agreements with the government. Some courts have held that a competitor's conduct of boycotting constitutes protected petitioning intended to induce government action, so long as the boycotting is not for the purposes of contracting for higher prices and does not amount to direct marketplace injury.

HN5[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The bad intent or anticompetitive motivation of private actors seeking government action is irrelevant to the application of Noerr-Pennington. This is so because it is impracticable or beyond the purpose of the antitrust laws to identify and invalidate lawmaking that has been infected by selfishly motivated agreement with private interests, and it is likewise impracticable or beyond that scope to identify and invalidate lobbying that has produced selfishly motivated agreement with public officials.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN6[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The sham exception to Noerr-Pennington prevents the application of immunity where a defendant's act of "petitioning" was a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. This exception encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process—as opposed to the outcome of that process—as an anticompetitive weapon. A "sham" situation involves a defendant whose activities are not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action at all, not one who genuinely seeks to achieve his governmental result, but does so through improper means. One "classic" example of sham petitioning is where a defendant files frivolous objections to the license application of a competitor, with no expectation of achieving denial of the license but simply in order to impose expense and delay.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN7[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

As the United States Supreme Court decided in Parker v. Brown, principles of federalism and state sovereignty prevent state governments' liability under the Sherman Act for their allegedly anticompetitive action. This doctrine is known as state-action, or Parker, immunity. Where a state enters into an agreement with private entities and is protected by state-action immunity, that immunity extends to the private entities with whom the state deals.

HN8[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Sherman Act does not apply to states or state officials when acting in their sovereign capacities. Even where the states act in conjunction with private parties, they remain entitled to immunity so long as they acted within their official capacity. There is also no conspiracy exception to the state-action doctrine. However, if a state acts as a commercial participant in a given market, action taken in a market capacity is not protected. Thus, with the possible market participant exception, any action that qualifies as state action is ipso facto exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws.

HN9[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

For purposes of Parker state-action immunity, a state is a market participant when it acts in a proprietary capacity as a purchaser or seller with regard to the challenged action or its actions constitute direct state participation in the market. A state does not become a market participant simply because it labels its actions as an "agreement."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN10[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

Where a state is protected by state-action antitrust immunity, that immunity extends to private entities involved in the same course of dealing.

HN11[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Even where a challenged restraint is clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy, the policy must be actively supervised by the state itself for state-action immunity to apply. In other words, even if the state authorized private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior, immunity does not extend to the private actors unless the state retains active supervision over the private actors.

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > Waiver > Consent

HN18[] State Sovereign Immunity, Abrogation of Immunity

A state may lose sovereign immunity where the state consents to litigation, where the state is alleged to have acted unconstitutionally, or where Congress abrogates sovereign immunity. In cases of consent, waiver cannot be implied but must be unequivocally expressed. Waiver occurs if the state voluntarily invokes federal jurisdiction, or else if the state makes a clear declaration that it intends to submit itself to federal jurisdiction. This is a high standard to meet, as courts will give effect to a state's waiver of Eleventh Amendment immunity only where stated by the most express language or by such overwhelming implication from the text as will leave no room for any other reasonable construction.

Opinion

[*680] [2] CLAY, Circuit Judge. Plaintiff VIBO Corporation, Inc., appeals the district court's order dismissing its antitrust claims against Defendant tobacco companies, filed pursuant to the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 3(a); dismissing its constitutional claims against Defendant Attorneys General, filed pursuant to the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, the Due Process Clauses of the Fifth [3] and Fourteenth Amendments, and the Due Process, Commerce, and Compact Clauses of Article I; dismissing its request for relief from the constitutional violations, filed pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983; dismissing its state common law fraud claim; and denying its motion for preliminary injunctive relief. For the reasons set forth below, we AFFIRM.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiff VIBO Corp., doing business as General Tobacco, filed a Complaint against sixteen tobacco manufacturers ("Manufacturer Defendants")[1] and fifty-two Attorneys General ("Attorneys General Defendants") acting in their official capacities,[2] [3] alleging federal antitrust and constitutional violations and a pendent state fraud claim. On January 6, 2010, the district court entered judgment dismissing Plaintiff's claims against Defendants for failure to state a claim or lack of subject matter jurisdiction, denying as moot Defendants' other motions to dismiss, and denying Plaintiff's request for preliminary injunctive relief. See VIBO Corp., Inc. v. Conway, 594 F. Supp. 2d 758, 788-89 (W.D. Ky. 2009).

A. The Master Settlement Agreement

The claims at issue revolve around a November 1998 settlement, the Master Settlement Agreement (MSA), which was executed to end litigation between several states and the four largest tobacco companies at the time.[3] The litigation involved the tobacco companies' advertising strategies, which allegedly misled consumers as to the harmful and addictive effects of tobacco and inappropriately [5] targeted underage consumers.

Under the MSA, the Attorneys General of several states agreed to release their past and future claims against the tobacco companies in exchange for large settlement payments, future annual disbursements from the tobacco companies managed under an approved payment scheme, [*681] and restrictions on the companies' future advertising and marketing schemes. The four original tobacco companies party to the MSA were known as the original participating manufacturers (OPMs). In addition to releasing their claims against the OPMs under the MSA, Attorneys General Defendants released claims against the OPMs' suppliers, retailers, and distributors. The release provided an incentive for these businesses to partner with OPMs rather than tobacco companies that had not joined the MSA, known as non-participating manufacturers (NPMs).

Attorneys General Defendants also wanted [6] NPMs to join the MSA and thus be subject to its payment and marketing requirements. Thus, the MSA outlined procedures [4] for NPMs to join the MSA despite not being party to the original litigation. If an NPM joined the MSA, it would become a subsequent participating manufacturer (SPM). In order to encourage the expedited entry of SPMs into the MSA, any SPM that entered the MSA within ninety days of its November 1998 execution date was "grandfathered" into the MSA and had a reduced payment obligation for its future annual payments under the payment scheme when compared with the payment obligations of non-grandfathered SPMs. However, by MSA requirement, the OPMs retained the most favorable payment terms.

In order to induce NPMs to join the MSA and in order to prevent NPMs from having a market advantage over the OPMs and SPMs that were subject to large MSA payments and marketing restrictions, the agreement permitted the states to enact "Escrow Statutes." These statutes required an NPM to make annual deposits into state escrow accounts for each state where the NPM sold its products. The escrow payment amounts were based on each company's sales in each state. The deposits were held for twenty-five [7] years, in the event that a state obtained a future judgment or settlement from that NPM. If no judgment is obtained during that time, the deposit would be released back to the NPM. For many tobacco companies, especially those selling products in multiple states, the payment scheme under the MSA was less burdensome than the payment schedules provided in the Escrow Statutes.

[1] Manufacturer Defendants are comprised of two groups of tobacco companies: three companies who were parties to the original Master Settlement [4] Agreement contested in this suit and thirteen companies who joined the settlement within ninety days of its execution. These companies include Lorillard Tobacco Co.; Philip Morris USA, Inc.; R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.; Commonwealth Brands, Inc.; Imperial Tobacco Limited/ITL; Japan Tobacco International USA, Inc.; King Maker Marketing, Inc.; Lane Limited; Liggett Group, LLC; Lignum-2, Inc.; P.T. Djarum; Premier Manufacturing, Inc.; Santa Fe Natural Tobacco Co.; Sherman's 1400 Broadway N.Y.C., Inc.; Top Tobacco, LP; and Vector Tobacco, Inc.

[2] The Attorneys General represent forty-six states, four United States territories, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia. Jack Conway, the lead named defendant, is the Attorney General of the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

[3] The agreement was originally executed by eight state Attorneys General. Other states joined the MSA by initiating similar litigation against the tobacco companies in their states' courts and subsequently moving the courts to approve their agreed-upon entry into the MSA and dismiss their claims with prejudice.

If an NPM joined the MSA later than ninety days after its execution, it would be required to negotiate an MSA "adherence agreement" with the Attorneys General. After doing so, it became a non-grandfathered SPM and was subject to higher payment obligations than the OPMs and grandfathered SPMs. A "back-payment" provision required every tobacco company that joins the MSA after ninety days of its execution to make the payments to the states that it would have been obligated to make had it joined the MSA at the time of its execution. The payment amount was based on the company's nationwide sales since 1999. The company also had to make annual payments going forward, which were based on the company's national market shares. These payments were not reduced as were the grandfathered SPMs' payments. The [5] adherence agreement [8] determined the back-payment amount and the annual payment obligation amount going forward.

The MSA also contained provisions to ensure that the OPMs retained favored treatment among the other participating manufacturers (PMs). If any adherence agreement of an SPM provides for more favorable terms for that company than the terms governing the OPMs under the MSA, then a clause in Section XVIII(b) of the MSA, entitled "Limited Most Favored Nations" (LMFN), granted the OPMs the right to receive those same favorable [*682] terms. The LMFN clause did not grant any PM the authority to vote on whether an NPM may become a party to the MSA or to determine the terms of an adherence agreement. Other provisions in the MSA governed waiver of constitutional claims, jurisdiction, venue, and arbitration agreements.

B. Plaintiff Becomes a Party to the MSA

Plaintiff entered the tobacco market in 2000, two years after the MSA's execution. Plaintiff originally operated as an NPM in a few states, including Kentucky, Florida, and North Carolina. It paid into state escrow accounts, but the states began to amend their escrow statutes to make the escrow payments more burdensome. Ultimately, Plaintiff determined that [9] it would be more profitable to operate as an SPM. Plaintiff joined the MSA in 2004 by negotiating its Adherence Agreement (AA) with Attorneys General Defendants. The AA outlined Plaintiff's mandatory back-payment amount and the payment amounts it would make going forward. These payment amounts were determined, in part, based on Plaintiff's two-percent share in the national tobacco market (the largest share among NPMs at the time).

According to Plaintiff, during negotiations for the AA, Attorneys General Defendants failed to explain the extent of the payment reductions granted to grandfathered SPMs and denied Plaintiff access to this information on the grounds that other PMs' payment arrangements were confidential. Plaintiff also claims that it was assured that Attorneys General Defendants enforced their Escrow Statutes (thereby confirming to Plaintiff that it would be more beneficial to join the MSA) and that the [6] LMFN clause would not prevent Plaintiff's ability to obtain more favorable terms under the MSA if it sought to do so at a later date.

After joining the MSA, Plaintiff became dissatisfied with the disparate treatment afforded the other tobacco companies, such as the lack of [10] back-payments for the OPMs and the reduced payment obligations available to eligible grandfathered SPMs. Plaintiff's per-carton payment obligation to Attorneys General Defendants was higher than the obligations of the OPMs and some SPMs.

Plaintiff eventually was unable to meet its back-payment obligations and its payments going forward, as was required by its AA. In an attempt to renegotiate its position under the MSA, Plaintiff sought to execute an Amended Adherence Agreement (AAA) with Attorneys General Defendants. The AAA was more favorable to Plaintiff than the AA because it lessened Plaintiff's payment obligations. According to Plaintiff, however, the AAA did not contain more favorable terms than the OPMs or grandfathered SPMs had under the MSA.

Initially, Attorneys General Defendants were willing to execute the AAA. However, the PMs learned of the proposed AAA's terms and sent written notice to Attorneys General Defendants to remind them of the LMFN clause. Specifically, the PMs noted that if the AAA contained more favorable terms than the PMs had under the MSA, the LMFN clause would be triggered and the PMs would seek to receive the beneficial AAA terms. Attorneys General Defendants [11] requested that the PMs waive any LMFN rights that they may have if the AAA was executed, but the PMs refused to waive their rights. Based upon this knowledge, Attorneys General Defendants declined to execute the AAA with Plaintiff. As a result, Plaintiff remains a party to the MSA through its original AA.

[*683] Plaintiff initiated the present civil action alleging that Manufacturer Defendants violated two antitrust provisions of the Sherman Act by assisting with the creation of the allegedly discriminatory MSA and by invoking their allegedly baseless LMFN rights. Plaintiff also raised claims against Attorneys General Defendants, asserting that the MSA violates the Equal Protection Clause, Due Process Clause, Commerce Clause, and [7] Compact Clause of the United States Constitution. Finally, Plaintiff raised a fraudulent inducement claim against Attorneys General Defendants for allegedly failing to provide Plaintiff with material information regarding the payment terms of the other PMs during its AA negotiations.

DISCUSSION

HN1[] We review de novo a district court's grant of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and a district court's grant of [12] a Rule 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Frank v. Dana Corp., 646 F.3d 954, 958 (6th Cir. 2011) (considering Rule 12(b)(6) ruling); EEOC v. Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church & Sch., 597 F.3d 769, 775 (6th Cir. 2010) (considering Rule 12(b)(1) ruling). The facts alleged by the plaintiff must be accepted as true, and those "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007).

I. SHERMAN ACT CLAIMS

Plaintiff challenges Manufacturer Defendants' actions under two sections of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 3(a). HN2[] The relevant provisions provide that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is declared [to be] illegal." 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 3(a). Plaintiff alleges that Manufacturer Defendants' refusal to waive their LMFN rights, which caused Attorneys General Defendants to reject Plaintiff's proposed AAA, constituted a per se illegal boycott of Plaintiff, a concerted refusal to deal with Plaintiff, and the denial of Plaintiff's equal access to an essential facility, namely, the MSA. [13] Manufacturer Defendants assert that, regardless of the truth of Plaintiff's allegations, they are immunized from Plaintiff's antitrust claims under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine or, in the alternative, the state-action doctrine.

[*8] The district court found that Manufacturer Defendants were immunized under both the Noerr-Pennington and state-action doctrines and thus dismissed these claims under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6).[4] We agree.

A. Noerr-Pennington Immunity

HN3[] Under the Petition Clause of the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, private actors have the right to petition the government for action. U.S. Const. amend I ("Congress shall make no law . . . abridging . . . the right of the people . . . to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."). Where [14] private actors petition the government for action that would violate antitrust law, the Petition Clause immunizes the actors from litigation in connection with their petitioning. Under [*684] these circumstances, private immunization from alleged violations of the Sherman Act is known as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See United Mine Workers of Am. v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965); E. R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961). "The doctrine is an "expression[] of the principle that the antitrust laws regulate business, not politics," and is designed to protect "citizens' participation in government." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 383, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991). Thus, "'[w]here a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action,' those urging the governmental action enjoy absolute immunity from antitrust liability for the anticompetitive restraint." Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 499, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 (1988) (quoting Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136). However, private actors remain liable for anticompetitive activity not associated with government petitioning or antitrust violations [15] that they directly cause. Id. at 501. "The dividing line between restraints resulting from governmental action and those resulting from private action may not always be obvious." Id. at 501-02.

[4] Although the court did not address the merits of the Sherman Act claims, it did note that, with respect to the LMFN waiver claim, "it is not actually clear that the wrong alleged even falls within the scope of the Sherman Act." VIBO Corp., 594 F. Supp. 2d at 775 n.13. Because we agree that Manufacturer Defendants are immune from Plaintiff's antitrust claims, we similarly decline to address the merits of these claims.

[*9] HN4[] "The Supreme Court has interpreted 'petitioning' to encompass activities other than legislative lobbying. For example, Noerr-Pennington immunity protects private actors when they file court documents and enter contracts with the government." Sanders v. Brown, 504 F.3d 903, 912 (9th Cir. 2007) (citing Calif. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972), and Greenwood Utils. Comm'n v. Miss. Power Co., 751 F.2d 1484, 1505 (5th Cir. 1985)). Petitioning also includes the acts of "negotiating and entering into settlements or other agreements with the government." Sanders, 504 F.3d at 912 (citing Campbell v. City of Chicago, 823 F.2d 1182, 1186-87 (7th Cir. 1987)). Some courts have held that a competitor's conduct of boycotting constitutes protected petitioning intended to induce government action, so long as the boycotting is not for the purposes of contracting for higher prices and does not amount to direct marketplace injury. See Armstrong Surgical Ctr., Inc. v. Armstrong Cnty. Mem'l Hosp., 185 F.3d 154, 157-60 (3rd Cir. 1999); [16] Sandy River Nursing Care v. Aetna Cas., 985 F.2d 1138, 1141-44 (1st Cir. 1993); Mark Aero, Inc. v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 580 F.2d 288, 296-97 (8th Cir. 1978).

Moreover, HN5[] the bad intent or anticompetitive motivation of private actors seeking government action is irrelevant to the application of Noerr-Pennington. Campbell v. PMI Food Equip. Grp., Inc., 509 F.3d 776, 790 (6th Cir. 2007). This is so because it is "impracticable or beyond the purpose of the antitrust laws to identify and invalidate lawmaking that has been infected by selfishly motivated agreement with private interests[, and it is likewise] impracticable or beyond that scope to identify and invalidate lobbying that has produced selfishly motivated agreement with public officials." Omni Outdoor Adver., 499 U.S. at 383.

Here, Manufacturer Defendants assert Noerr-Pennington immunity from Plaintiff's Sherman Act claims because their involvement with the MSA and notice of their LMFN rights amounted to petitioning. Plaintiff argues that Noerr-Pennington does not apply because this is not a situation where Manufacturer Defendants petitioned Attorneys General Defendants for antitrust action, but rather where Manufacturer Defendants [17] directly [*685] violated antitrust law. See Allied Tube, 486 U.S. at 501-02. We [10] disagree. Even taking Plaintiff's factual allegations as true, it is clear that the state governments' actions were the actual cause of the alleged antitrust violations. Although Manufacturer Defendants sent notice to Attorneys General Defendants that they would not waive their LMFN rights—to the extent that the AAA would trigger the LMFN clause at all—the LMFN clause itself creates no vote or veto power for the PMs; all decision-making authority rests with Attorneys General Defendants.[5] Moreover, Manufacturer Defendants' allegedly selfish motivation in refusing to waive their LMFN rights is immaterial.

Attorneys General Defendants were free to accept or reject both the MSA and the AAA, regardless of the explicit or implicit encouragement of Manufacturer Defendants. They could have executed the AAA and risked the possibility of triggering the LMFN clause, but they decided that the AAA was not worth that risk. Thus, the decision not to execute the AAA rested with Attorneys General Defendants. As the district court noted:

[5] Plaintiff also argues that the LMFN clause essentially granted veto power to the PMs in determining whether Plaintiff and Attorneys General Defendants could effectuate the AAA and that the PMs persuaded or coerced the Attorneys General to reject the AAA. We find no such power founded in the LMFN clause or the MSA, in general. Moreover, Plaintiff admitted that Manufacturer Defendants have "invoked" their LMFN rights on prior occasions, but that Attorneys General Defendants ignored the Manufacturer Defendants' petitioning [18] in those instances. Plaintiff thus partially recognizes that only Attorneys General Defendants hold the decision-making power.

> Accepting all of the plaintiff's allegations as true, the plaintiff has merely alleged a classic example of a claim for which the Noerr-Pennington doctrine grants immunity. . . . [P]rivate actors . . . have exerted influence on the government actors; and, as a result of that influence, the government actors have declined to sign and execute the [AAA]. . . . [S]imply put, the [Manufacturer Defendants] have petitioned for, and received, certain government action that creates anti-competitive effects upon the plaintiff. Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the defendant manufacturers are entitled to immunity for the anti-competitive effects of their [19] successful petition for government action.

VIBO Corp., 594 F. Supp. 2d at 774 (internal footnote omitted). We find this reasoning to be sound.

[*11] Plaintiff next argues that even if Noerr-Pennington initially applies, Manufacturer Defendants lose their immunity under the doctrine's "sham exception." HN6[] The sham exception to Noerr-Pennington prevents the application of immunity where a defendant's act of "petitioning" was "a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Omni Outdoor Advert., 499 U.S. at 380 (citing Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144). This exception "encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process—as opposed to the outcome of that process—as an anticompetitive weapon." Id.; *N. Ky. Right to Life Comm., Inc. v. Ky. Registry of Election Fin., No. 95-6334, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 495, at 17-18 (6th Cir. Jan. 7, 1998); Eaton v. Newport Bd. of Educ., 975 F.2d 292, 298 (6th Cir. 1992). "A 'sham' situation involves a defendant whose activities are 'not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action' at all, not one 'who genuinely seeks to achieve his governmental result, but [20] does so through improper [*686] means.'" Omni Outdoor Advert., 499 U.S. at 380 (quoting Allied Tube, 486 U.S. at 500 n.4, 507 n.10) (internal citations and emphasis omitted); Knology, Inc. v. Insight Commc'n Co., LP, 393 F.3d 656, 658-59 (6th Cir. 2004). One "classic" example of sham petitioning is where a defendant files "frivolous objections to the license application of a competitor, with no expectation of achieving denial of the license but simply in order to impose expense and delay." Omni Outdoor Advert., 499 U.S. at 380.

On appeal, Plaintiff asserts that the "sham" exception applies because Manufacturer Defendants knew that the AAA did not contain more favorable terms than the PMs had under the MSA, and therefore did not trigger the LMFN clause, but the PMs nonetheless "invoked" their LMFN rights. Plaintiff undermines its argument that Manufacturer Defendants' petitioning was a sham by admitting that Manufacturer Defendants actually wanted to prevent the execution of the AAA. Thus, by Plaintiff's own admission, Manufacturer Defendants petitioned for a specific outcome from the government and succeeded; this is the precise situation that falls outside of the sham exception. See id.; Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144.

[12] B. [21] State-Action Immunity

Although we find that Manufacturer Defendants are protected from Plaintiff's antitrust claims by Noerr-Pennington immunity, we also find that they are protected by the extension of state-action immunity, in the alternative.

HN7[] As the Supreme Court decided in Parker v. Brown, principles of federalism and state sovereignty prevent state governments' liability under the Sherman Act for their allegedly anticompetitive action. 317 U.S. 341, 352, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943); see Omni Outdoor Adver., 499 U.S. at 370; First Am. Title Co. v. Devaugh, 480 F.3d 438, 444 (6th Cir. 2007). This doctrine is known as state-action, or Parker, immunity. First Am. Title Co., 480 F.3d at 444. Where a state enters into an agreement with private entities and is protected by state-action immunity, that immunity extends to the private entities with whom the state deals. S. Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 56-57, 105 S. Ct. 1721, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36 (1985); Jackson Tenn. Hosp. Co., LLC v. W. Tenn. Healthcare, Inc., 414 F.3d 608, 612 n.4 (6th Cir. 2005). Although Plaintiff does not raise its antitrust claims against Attorneys General Defendants, we must first determine whether Attorneys General Defendants would have

[22] immunity against such claims in order to decide whether that immunity extends to Manufacturer Defendants.[6]

1. State-Action Doctrine as Applied to Attorneys General Defendants

HN8[] The Sherman Act does not apply to states or state officials when acting in their sovereign capacities. Parker, 317 U.S. at 352. Even where the states act in conjunction with private parties, [*687] they remain entitled to immunity so long as they acted within their official capacity. Omni Outdoor Advert., 499 U.S. at 374 (noting that there is also no conspiracy [23] exception to the state-action doctrine). However, if a state acts as a "commercial participant in a given market," action taken in a market capacity is not [13] protected. Thus, "with the possible market participant exception, any action that qualifies as state action is 'ipso facto exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws.'" Id. at 379 (quoting Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 568, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 (1984)) (internal alterations omitted).

Plaintiff alleges that Attorneys General Defendants were acting in a market participant capacity—not a sovereign capacity—in executing and enforcing the MSA and in refusing to execute the AAA. HN9[] A state is a market participant when it acts "in a proprietary capacity as a purchaser or seller with regard to the challenged action" or its actions "constitute[] direct state participation in the market." Huish Detergents, Inc. v. Warren Cnty., 214 F.3d 707, 714-15 (6th Cir. 2000) (quoting White v. Mass. Council of Constr. Emp'rs, Inc., 460 U.S. 204, 208, 103 S. Ct. 1042, 75 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1983)) (internal citation marks omitted). A state does not become a market participant "simply because . . . [it] labels its actions as an 'agreement.'" Huish Detergents, 214 F.3d at 715 (examining a state's market participant [24] status in the dormant commerce clause context); see A.D. Bedell Wholesale Co., Inc. v. Philip Morris Inc., 263 F.3d 239, 265 n.55 (3rd Cir. 2001) (explaining the relationship of the market participant exception in dormant commerce clause jurisprudence to an assertion of state-action immunity against a claim related to the MSA).

Plaintiff does not allege any facts necessary to show that Attorneys General Defendants were acting as market participants. Plaintiff's allegation that Attorneys General Defendants were using their contractual powers when executing and enforcing the MSA is unhelpful to its claim. See Huish Detergents, 214 F.3d at 715. The Third Circuit considered this limited issue in a related circumstance, and noted in dicta that "[i]n joining the Multistate Settlement Agreement, the States did not enter the tobacco market as a buyer or seller, nor did they assume control or ownership of any entity within the market. . . . [T]he States' actions would not fall under the market participant exception to Parker immunity." A.D. Bedell Wholesale Co., 263 F.3d at 265 n.55. We agree.

[*14] We hold that Attorneys General Defendants acted in their sovereign capacities, and not their market [25] participant capacities, in enacting and enforcing the MSA and in deciding to forgo the AAA. Therefore, they are protected by state-action immunity.

2. State-Action Doctrine as Applied to Manufacturer Defendants

HN10[] Where a state is protected by state-action immunity, that immunity extends to private entities involved in the same course of dealing. S. Motor Carriers Rate Conference, 471 U.S. at 56-57; Jackson Tenn. Hosp. Co., 414 F.3d at 612 n.4 (noting that state-action immunity would be worthless if the private parties dealing with the immunized states were also not protected). Because we have determined that Attorneys General Defendants are clearly protected by state-action immunity in relation to the MSA, such immunity extends to Manufacturer Defendants.

[6] When the district court ruled on the parties' motions, it was uncertain whether Plaintiff had also raised a Sherman Act violation claim against Attorneys General Defendants. The court found that, to the extent a claim was brought against the states, the states were immunized. During appellate argument, however, Plaintiff's counsel clarified that it had not brought antitrust claims against Attorneys General Defendants. Our analysis of the state-action doctrine as applied to Manufacturer Defendants requires that we consider whether the states are entitled to state-action immunity, but we do so only to adjudicate the antitrust claims against Manufacturer Defendants.

Plaintiff, however, points to a refinement of the state-action doctrine articulated by [*688] the Supreme Court in California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980). The Court held in Midcal that HN11[] even where the challenged restraint is "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy[,] . . . the policy must be actively supervised by the [s]tate itself" for state-action immunity to apply. Id. at 105 [26] (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Hoover, 466 U.S. at 568-69. In other words, even if the state authorized private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior, immunity does not extend to the private actors unless the state retains active supervision over the private actors. Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105.

The district court found that it need not apply the Midcal test, because (1) Plaintiff did not allege that the MSA was a law or regulatory scheme arising from a clear state policy; and (2) even if the MSA was characterized as a state regulatory scheme, Plaintiff did not allege that the MSA authorizes Manufacturer Defendants to violate antitrust law. We agree. Even in its subsequent briefing, Plaintiff fails to argue the threshold issue that the MSA is a regulatory scheme that permits Manufacturer Defendants to violate antitrust law. It instead argues that Manufacturer Defendants violated antitrust law when they misinterpreted the MSA and their rights under the LMFN clause and acted contrary to or in conflict with state supervision. Regardless of [15] whether that assertion has merit, Plaintiff has confused the threshold inquiry of whether the state took action—such [27] as passing a law, regulation, program, or other form of authorization—permitting the private actors to violate antitrust law, with the subsequent inquiry as to whether Defendants were acting within the proper scope of state supervision. Furthermore, we have already found that Attorneys General Defendants, and not Manufacturer Defendants, were the direct cause of the failed execution of the AAA. Thus, Plaintiff has not demonstrated the applicability of the Midcal test.

Because Manufacturer Defendants are protected by Noerr-Pennington immunity and state-action immunity, we find that the district court did not err in dismissing Plaintiff's Sherman Act claims for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIMS

Plaintiff next raises claims against Attorneys General Defendants for violations of the Equal Protection Clause, the Due Process Clause, the Commerce Clause, and the Compact Clause. The district court dismissed Plaintiff's Equal Protection, Due Process, and Commerce Clause claims as waived under the MSA and dismissed Plaintiff's Compact Clause claim for failing to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.

A. MSA Section XV Waiver

HN12[] Under Kentucky [28] law, which the parties agree governs this issue, contract interpretation is a question of law, which we review de novo. Noe v. PolyOne Corp., 520 F.3d 548, 551 (6th Cir. 2008); Morganfield Nat'l Bank v. Damien Elder & Sons, 836 S.W.2d 893, 895 (Ky. 1992). HN13[] Courts interpreting contracts must look to the language of the agreement to determine the parties' intent. "When no ambiguity exists in the contract, [the court] look[s] only as far as the four corners of the document to determine that intent." Abney v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 215 S.W.3d 699, 703 (Ky. 2006). HN14[] Whether a contract is ambiguous—in that a reasonable person would find it susceptible to different interpretations—is also a question [*689] of law reviewed de novo. Id.; Cantrell Supply, Inc. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 94 S.W.3d 381, 385 (Ky. Ct. App. 2002).

[*16] Plaintiff agreed to be bound by the MSA when it signed the AA. Section XV of the MSA addresses the possibility of constitutional claims between the parties and contains a waiver clause. The provision states, in relevant part:

> Each Participating Manufacturer further acknowledges that it understands that certain provisions of this Agreement may require it to act or refrain from acting [29] in a manner that could otherwise give rise to state or federal constitutional challenges and that, by voluntarily consenting to this Agreement it . . . waives for the purposes of performance of this Agreement any and all claims that the provisions of this Agreement violate the state or federal constitutions.

MSA Section XV.

Plaintiff and the district court adopted differing interpretations of this waiver provision. Plaintiff argues that the waiver only prevents it from challenging the constitutionality of MSA requirements that Plaintiff "act or refrain from acting" in a manner that may be deemed unconstitutional.[7] Plaintiff reads the second clause (the waiver of constitutional claims) as limited by the first clause (recognition that the Plaintiff may be required to act unconstitutionally). Plaintiff argues that the waiver does not bar its claims, because none of its constitutional claims are based on requirements that cause Plaintiff to act or refrain from acting.

On appeal, Plaintiff asserts that the district court erroneously read the waiver broadly so as to encompass all constitutional claims rather than only those claims related to requirements that Plaintiff act or refrain from acting. However, the district court actually adopted Plaintiff's limited interpretation of the waiver clause as only applying to restrictions on Plaintiff's own actions. See VIBO Corp., 594 F. Supp. 2d at 782. The difference of interpretation lies in the district court's broad construction of the phrase "requirements that Plaintiff act or refrain from acting" to mean "provisions that affect [17] the Plaintiff's performance under the contract" and its liberal interpretation of what requirements "affect" Plaintiff's performance. See id.

Under the district court's interpretation, it concluded that three of Plaintiff's four constitutional claims related [31] to provisions that affected its performance and were thus encompassed by the waiver. Specifically, the court found that Plaintiff's Equal Protection and Due Process claims involved "[t]he MSA's unequal application of its purported back-payment requirements, grandfather exemptions and escrow requirements." Id. Because the alleged unequal payment scheme affected Plaintiff by imposing on it obligations higher than those of the other manufacturers, the court found that these two claims affected Plaintiff's performance and were therefore waived. In regard to Plaintiff's Commerce Clause claim, the district court found that it "involves a requirement made on the plaintiff" and thus was waived. Id. at 783.

[*690] We reject both of these interpretations of the waiver clause. We read Section XV more broadly than the district court and find that all constitutional claims related to the MSA are waived, even those not grounded on restrictions to Plaintiff's own actions.[8] Our interpretation is based on a close reading of the language of the two clauses in the waiver. The waiver, which is outlined in a single sentence, states that each participating manufacturer "acknowledges that it understands" two things: [32] (1) "that" it may be required to act unconstitutionally; (2) "and that" it "waives . . . any and all" of its constitutional claims. The use of "that . . . and that" demonstrates that this sentence has two separate and equal components. Thus, the second clause is not limited by the first clause, but rather they are distinct acknowledgments. For Plaintiff to succeed on its argument that the second clause was to be limited by the first, the language of the waiver would, at the very least, need more indication that the clauses are co-dependent by using language such as "that" and "therefore" or "so." The fact that both clauses are in the same sentence does not signify that they are co-dependent. Moreover, the second clause [18] contains a clear, broad

[7] Plaintiff also claims that MSA Section XV only waives First Amendment claims because the original litigation preceding the MSA involved advertising restrictions. This claim is utterly without merit, as the waiver language clearly [30] provides for "any and all claims that the provisions of this Agreement violate the state or federal constitutions" and does not signal that it applies only to First Amendment claims. MSA Section XV (emphasis added). HN15[] We look only to the plain language of the agreement to determine the parties' intent. Abney, 215 S.W.3d at 703.

[8] Our reading of the waiver provision does not require that we interpret the phrase "act or refrain from acting" within Section XV. However, we note that the district court's interpretation of "requirements that Plaintiff act or refrain from acting" to mean "any provision that affects Plaintiff's performance" appears [33] too broad based on a reading of the provision's plain language.

waiver that Plaintiff has waived "any and all claims that the provisions of this Agreement violate the state or federal constitutions."

B. Knowing, Voluntary, and Intelligent Waiver

Plaintiff argues that even if the MSA waiver applies, the waiver was not valid because Attorneys General Defendants misrepresented certain facts regarding their enforcement of the MSA and the inability to enter into the AAA without the OPMs' approval. Specifically, Plaintiff alleges: "(1) that the plaintiff requested specific information about the extent of the exemptions granted to the grandfathered SPMs but was denied access to the information on the grounds that it was confidential . . . (2) that the plaintiff sought assurance that the Settling States were enforcing their Escrow Statutes and was so assured . . . and (3) that the Settling States represented to the plaintiff that the LMFN provision of the MSA would not affect the states' ability to grant the plaintiff entry into the MSA . . . ."[9] VIBO Corp., 594 F. Supp. 2d at 784.

HN16[] For a waiver to be valid, it must be made knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently. Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 U.S. 67, 94-95, 92 S. Ct. 1983, 32 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1972). There is a presumption [34] against waivers of constitutional rights, which can be overcome by clear evidence "that there was 'an intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right or privilege.'" Brookhart v. Janis, 384 U.S. 1, 4, 86 S. Ct. 1245, 16 L. Ed. 2d 314 (1996) (quoting Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 464, 58 S. Ct. 1019, 82 L. Ed. 1461 (1938)).

Accepting Plaintiff's allegations of fraud as true, the district court found that the waiver was nevertheless knowing, intelligent, and voluntary because "[a]ny misrepresentations by the states as to how diligently [the] states were enforcing their Escrow Statutes or the impact of the LMFN clause have no relevance to the [*691] plaintiff's understanding of what rights it was giving up by signing on to the MSA." VIBO Corp., 594 F. Supp. 2d at 785. Plaintiff has not alleged that it did not understand that it was waiving its constitutional claims. The Section XV waiver is clear, and Plaintiff is a [19] sophisticated corporation that was represented by counsel in the course of its arms-length negotiations. The waiver is valid.

Because Plaintiff knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently agreed to Section XV, we find all of its constitutional claims, including its Compact Clause claim, properly dismissed as waived.

III. FRAUDULENT INDUCEMENT [35] CLAIM

Finally, Plaintiff argues that the district court improperly dismissed its fraudulent inducement claim against Attorneys General Defendants. The district court found that Attorneys General Defendants were protected by sovereign immunity, so the court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to review the claim.

HN17[] The Eleventh Amendment to the U.S. Constitution grants immunity to states from litigation on state law claims in federal court. U.S. Const. amend. XI; Sossamon v. Texas, 131 S. Ct. 1651, 1657-58, 179 L. Ed. 2d 700 (2011). A claim against a state officer acting in his official capacity is deemed to be a claim against the state for sovereign immunity purposes. Will v. Mich. Dep't of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 71, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45 (1989). Fraud is a state common law claim, and this action was filed in federal court. Plaintiff concedes that Attorneys General Defendants were acting in their official capacities. Attorneys General Defendants are thus immune from Plaintiff's allegations of fraud.

HN18[] A state may, however, lose sovereign immunity where the state consents to litigation, where the state is alleged to have acted unconstitutionally, or where Congress abrogates sovereign immunity. Kovacevich v. Kent State Univ., 224 F.3d 806, 817 (6th Cir. 2000). [36] In cases of consent, waiver "cannot be implied but must be unequivocally expressed." United States v. King, 395 U.S. 1, 4, 89 S. Ct. 1501, 23 L. Ed. 2d 52 (1969); United

States v. White Mt. Apache Tribe, 537 U.S. 465, 472, 123 S. Ct. 1126, 155 L. Ed. 2d 40 (2003). Waiver occurs "if the [s]tate voluntarily invokes [federal] jurisdiction, or else if the [s]tate makes a 'clear declaration' that it intends to submit itself to [federal] jurisdiction." College Sav. Bank v. Fla. Prepaid Postsecondary Ed. Expense Bd., 527 U.S. 666, 675-76, 119 S. Ct. 2219, 144 L. Ed. 2d 605 (1999) (internal citations omitted). This is a high standard to meet, as courts "will give effect to a [s]tate's waiver [20] of Eleventh Amendment immunity only where stated by the most express language or by such overwhelming implication from the text as will leave no room for any other reasonable construction." Port Auth. Trans-Hudson Corp. v. Feeney, 495 U.S. 299, 306-07, 110 S. Ct. 1868, 109 L. Ed. 2d 264 (1990) (internal citations, quotation marks, and alteration omitted).

Plaintiff claims that Attorneys General Defendants consented to litigation on matters involving the MSA and thereby waived their Eleventh Amendment immunity. On appeal, Plaintiff asserts four ways in which this occurred, none of which have merit.[10]

[*692] First, Plaintiff believes there is consent to be sued because the MSA is a contract between states, and the Supreme Court is the only forum available for disputes between states. This argument clearly fails, because the present action is not litigation between states, but between Plaintiff, which is a private party, against several states. Plaintiff next argues that consent was given since "each State consented to federal court jurisdiction to hear MSA disputes with the District of Columbia and any of the U.S. territories that is a party to the agreement because the courts in these jurisdictions are all federal courts." This argument also fails because this [38] is a lawsuit by a private party against states, not between states and the District of Columbia or a territory. HN19[] We will not extend consent to federal jurisdiction for disputes with or between other government entities to consent to federal jurisdiction for cases involving private parties.

Third, Plaintiff argues the existence of consent because the states "acknowledge the jurisdiction of the federal courts . . . through references to the United States District Courts for the Districts of Utah and Puerto Rico where the MSA was to be submitted for approval through a consent decree" per MSA Sections II(p), II(ss), VII, and XIII. We have reviewed the relevant MSA provisions and find no such consent. Furthermore, even though Utah and Puerto Rico joined the MSA by filing their consent decrees in [21] federal courts, the jurisdiction granted under Section VII only applies to the federal courts of Utah and Puerto Rico, not a federal court in Kentucky. Moreover, such alleged consent could only be deemed as consent by Utah and Puerto Rico.

Finally, Plaintiff argues that consent to be sued was expressed in MSA Section XI(c), wherein the states agreed to arbitration that "would be subject to motions [39] to affirm or vacate in federal court under the Federal Arbitration Act." This provision is inapplicable to the present lawsuit, which is not an arbitration. HN20[] We will not construe consent to federal arbitration as consent to be sued in federal court for state law claims.

Because Plaintiff has not plausibly stated that Attorneys General Defendants gave clear and explicit consent to be sued on state law claims in federal courts, it has not shown that Attorneys General Defendants waived their Eleventh Amendment immunity. The fraudulent inducement claim was therefore properly dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the judgment of the district court dismissing all claims against Defendants and denying Plaintiff's request for preliminary relief is AFFIRMED.

[10] We note that the MSA would have permitted [37] the jurisdiction of the Franklin Circuit Court of the Commonwealth of Kentucky on Plaintiff's fraud claim. MSA Section VII permits jurisdiction of the "Court" over disputes, and Section II(p) defines "Court" as the court in each settling state where the consent decree was presented for approval. In this case, Kentucky's consent decree was entered by the Franklin Circuit Court on December 21, 1998. Kentucky's consent to jurisdiction in the Franklin Circuit Court obviously does not extend to the federal district court in Kentucky.

Memorandum Opinion

Plaintiff Dumas Towing, LLC, in an unverified complaint, is suing Defendant J.E. (Bo) DeArmond in his individual and official capacity as sheriff of Moore County for violations of the Motor Carrier Safety Act, federal and state anti-trust violations, and state law claims for tortious interference of a business relationship and civil conspiracy. [1] Before the Court is Defendant J.E. (Bo) DeArmond's ("DeArmond") Motion for Summary Judgment. Defendant has moved for summary judgment on all of Plaintiff's claims based on federal law. Plaintiff has not responded to Defendant's motion.

Facts

[1] This Court dismissed Defendant's state law claims in a previous order.

Plaintiff Dumas Towing, LLC is a Texas limited liability [*2] company with its principal place of business in Dumas, Moore County, Texas. Defendant J.E. DeArmond is the sheriff of Moore County.

As sheriff of Moore County, one of Defendant DeArmond's responsibilities is to keep a towing rotation list for non-consent tows. This towing rotation list determines which wrecker companies the local government will contact to tow vehicles where the owner or driver is either incapable or unwilling to call a wrecker service. Defendant avers that the non-consent towing list is under his discretion and that there is no local statute that determines which wrecker services are included on this list.

Plaintiff alleges that, at one point, it was included on the towing rotation list. Plaintiff alleges that, after a number of complaints from individuals whose cars were towed, it was removed from the list in violation of its rights. Plaintiff alleges that while it was on the towing list, the Defendant put conditions on who Plaintiff could hire and that the Defendant would not allow Plaintiff to appear at accident scenes even if the tow was not a non-consent tow. Plaintiff requests compensatory damages, punitive damages "against the individual and non-governmental [*3] Defendants," court costs, attorneys fees, and for this Court to enjoin Defendant's "current regulation on the business of Plaintiff."

Defendant argues that Plaintiff's removal was not arbitrary or capricious, and that, acting in his official capacity as sheriff, he removed Plaintiff because of his disruptive behavior. Defendant alleges Plaintiff refused to stand down from a non-consent tow when asked and was untruthful to Defendant regarding a tow sharing arrangement with a competitor wrecker service. Defendant avers that Dumas police and private citizens complained that Plaintiff was leaving debris on the freeway following tows, which created a potential safety hazard. Plaintiff alleges that these complaints were without merit.

Summary Judgment Standard

A motion for summary judgment should be granted if the movant shows that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a).

A party who moves for summary judgment has the burden of identifying the parts of the pleadings and discovery on file that, together with any affidavits, show the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The nonmovant must set forth [*4] specific facts that show a genuine issue for trial. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 256, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). To determine whether a genuine issue of material fact exists, courts must resolve all ambiguities of fact in favor of the non-moving party. Id. Summary judgment is mandated if the nonmovant fails to sufficiently establish the existence of an element essential to her case on which she bears the burden of proof at trial. Nebraska v. Wyoming, 507 U.S. 584, 590, 113 S. Ct. 1689, 123 L. Ed. 2d 317 (1993); Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 322; Cutrera v. Bd. of Supervisors of La. State Univ., 429 F.3d 108, 110 (5th Cir. 2005); Patrick v. Ridge, 394 F.3d 311, 315 (5th Cir. 2004).

Violation of 49 U.S.C. § 14501

Plaintiff alleges Defendant violated § 14501(c) of the Motor Carrier Safety Act, which prohibits states from regulating the trucking industry except for safety or to control fees charged by towing companies for non-consent towing. See 49 U.S.C. § 14501.

Plaintiff alleges that Defendant's act of removing Plaintiff from the non-consent tow list was preempted by § 14501 because the Defendant (a) attempted to interfere, for reasons other than safety, with who Plaintiff hired; (b) refused to allow Plaintiff to tow consent [*5] tows at the scene of an accident; (c) arbitrarily removed Plaintiff from the non-consent tow rotation list; and (d) conditioned Plaintiff's inclusion on the non-consent tow rotation list for reasons other than towing.

Defendant argues that § 14501 does not preempt his decision to remove Plaintiff from the non-consent tow list. He argues that his decision was a "proprietary" local government action that is not subject to federal preemption. He cites a Fifth Circuit ruling where the Court determined, relying on the United States Supreme Court's holding in Boston Harbor, Building and Construction Trades Council v. Associated Builders and Contractors of Massachusetts/Rhode Island, Inc, 507 U.S. 218, 113 S. Ct. 1190, 122 L. Ed. 2d 565 (1993) ("Boston Harbor"), that 49 U.S.C. § 14501(c) did not preempt a city's ability to enter into a contract with a single tow company to handle non-consent tows. See Cardinal Towing & Auto Repair, Inc. v. City of Bedford, Tex., 180 F.3d 686, 691 (5th Cir. 1999)("Cardinal Towing").

In Boston Harbor, the Supreme Court found that "when a state or municipality acts as a participant in the market and does so in a narrow and focused manner consistent with the behavior of other market participants, [*6] such action does not constitute regulation subject to preemption." Cardinal Towing at 691 (citing Boston Harbor). The Fifth Circuit, following the Court's decision in Boston Harbor, found in Cardinal Towing that the decision by a city to create an exclusive contract with a single tow company was not preempted by § 14501(c). The Court examined two factors to determine whether § 14501 preempted the local government's decision to grant exclusive towing rights. It examined if (1) the challenged action essentially reflects the entity's own interests in its efficient procurement of needed goods and services, as measured by comparison with the typical behavior of private parties in similar circumstances; and (2) if the narrow scope of the challenged action defeats an inference that its primary goal was to encourage a general policy rather than address a specific proprietary problem. Id. at 693.

In Defendant De Armond's affidavit he gives a number of reasons for removing Plaintiff from the non-consent tow list. He had received complaints that Plaintiff had left debris on the freeway following a tow. Plaintiff refused to stand down from a non-consent tow when Defendant asked. The local police [*7] felt uncomfortable working with the Plaintiff, and the Plaintiff made false statements to the Defendant about a tow sharing arrangement between Plaintiff and another wrecker service. Plaintiff alleges it was removed because of complaints against him that were unfair and alleges Defendant made a number of demands regarding hiring practices that Plaintiff refused to accept. Plaintiff presents no evidence that Defendant requested Plaintiff change its hiring practices.

Defendant's decision to remove Plaintiff from the towing list—to ensure safe towing with minimal problems—is a proprietary decision. Defendant maintained a non-consent towing list to ensure non-consent tows were effectively and safely dealt with following an accident. After working with the Plaintiff, the Defendant determined Plaintiff was not effectively carrying out its task. Defendant's concerns are similar to those a private company would have when determining with whom to do business.

Furthermore, Plaintiff does not present evidence that Defendant was attempting to promote a general policy with his decision to remove Plaintiff. Defendant claims that he removed Plaintiff after receiving complaints from both his employees [*8] and private individuals regarding Plaintiff's service, and that Plaintiff spoke dishonestly to him. These reasons defeat the inference that Defendant was attempting to promote a general policy with his decision to remove the Plaintiff. Accordingly, Defendant's actions are not preempted by 49 U.S.C. § 14501.

Federal Anti-Trust Claim

Plaintiff alleges Defendant's decision to remove Plaintiff from the non-consent towing list violated state and federal anti-trust laws. It requests injunctive relief and damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15 and 26, respectively. Defendant argues (1) that, under federal law, Plaintiff cannot recover damages because he was acting in his official capacity as sheriff and that (2) Plaintiff cannot establish that a common scheme exists between the Defendant and other entities in violation of anti-trust laws.

Damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15

Under federal anti-trust law, Plaintiff cannot seek damages against Defendant for acting in his official capacity. "[N]o damages, interest on damages, costs or attorney's fees may be recovered under Section 4, 4A, 4C of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 15a, or 15c) from any local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official [*9] capacity." 15 U.S.C. § 35. A "local government" includes a county or city. 15 U.S.C. § 34. Defendant DeArmond was acting in his official capacity as sheriff in running the non-consent towing list. Plaintiff cannot pursue damages against him.

Defendant argues he violated no applicable anti-trust laws because there was no common scheme between him and another entity to restrain trade. He further argues that the Plaintiff cannot establish that he suffered any damages as a result of being removed from the non-consent towing rotation list. He presents Plaintiff's records showing Plaintiff continued to operate its business regardless of his inclusion on the non-consent tow list. The Defendant also avers that he made the decision to remove Plaintiff for reasons other than to restrict trade. Plaintiff, although not specifying under which section of federal anti-trust law its suit falls under, alleges that the Defendant "engaged in or conspired with others to participate in violations of state and federal antitrust law." Defendant treats this language as a claim under 28 U.S.C. § 1, which forbids "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, [*10] in restraint of trade." 28 U.S.C. § 1. The Court agrees that 28 U.S.C. § 1 is the applicable federal law.

To establish an antitrust violation under 15 U.S.C. § 1, a Plaintiff must prove that "(1) the defendant engaged in a conspiracy; (2) that restrained trade; (3) in the relevant market." Golden Bridge Technology, Inc. v. Motorola, Inc., 547 F.3d 266, 271 (5th Cir. 2008). To prove a conspiracy occurred, "the crucial question is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stems from independent decision or from an agreement." Golden Bridge Technology, 547 F.3d at 271. A plaintiff must present evidence that the defendant was part of a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984).

Plaintiff presents no evidence that Defendant was engaged in a common scheme against the Plaintiff. His sole allegation to that point, that the Defendant was a friend with the owner of a wrecker service which was part of the non-consent rotation list, is unsupported by evidence. In the face of a failure to present evidence of a conspiracy between two parties or to show an actual restraint of market activities, [*11] Defendant's request for summary judgment on Plaintiff's federal anti-trust claim is granted.

Plaintiff's Due Process Claim

Plaintiff alleges he had a property interest in remaining on the non-consent tow list, and his removal from the list was an arbitrary and capricious violation of his right to due process. Defendant argues that he is immune from a suit in his individual capacity because of qualified immunity, and that Plaintiff has no property interest in remaining on the non-consent towing list.

Qualified Immunity

Qualified immunity is a defense that protects government officials from suit when they exercise the discretionary functions of their office. See Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 815, 102 S. Ct. 2727, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1982). In order to overcome a defense of qualified immunity a plaintiff must establish that "(1) the official violated a statutory or constitutional right, and (2) the right was 'clearly established at the time of the challenged conduct.'" Morgan v. Swanson, 659 F.3d 359, 371 (5th Cir. 2011)(citing Ashcroft v. al-Kidd, 131 S. Ct. 2074, 2080, 179 L. Ed. 2d 1149 (2011)). It is the plaintiff's burden to present evidence that a defendant is not entitled to qualified immunity when the defense is raised. See Bazon ex rel. Bazan v. Hidalgo County, 246 F.3d 481, 489 (5th Cir. 2001).

Plaintiff [*12] presents no evidence to refute the claim that Defendant is entitled to qualified immunity. Defendant is therefore entitled to qualified immunity from a suit in his individual capacity as a matter of law.

Plaintiff's Property Interest

Plaintiff does not have a property interest to maintain a suit against Defendant in his official capacity as sheriff of Moore County. For there to be a due process violation by Moore County, the Plaintiff must show a "life, liberty, or property interest protected by the Fourteenth Amendment and identify a state action that resulted in the deprivation of that interest." Blackburn v. City of Marshall, 42 F.3d 925, 935 (5th Cir. 1995). A property interest in a towing list is created by a "Texas or local statute, ordinance, or regulatory scheme governing the wrecker list." Id. at 941. An individual "must have more than an abstract need or desire for it. He must have more than a unilateral expectation of it. He must, instead, have a legitimate claim of entitlement to it." Board of Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 577, 92 S. Ct. 2701, 33 L. Ed. 2d 548 (1972).

In Blackburn v. City of Marshall, the Fifth Circuit determined that a wrecker service did not have a protected property interest in remaining [*13] on a non-consent towing list managed by the local government. It wrote, "We have consistently held that the mere existence of a governmental program or authority empowered to grant a particular type of benefit to one such as the plaintiff does not give the plaintiff a property right, protected by the due process clause, to receive the benefit, absent some legitimate claim of entitlement—arising from statute, regulation, contract, or the like—to the benefit. Blackburn at 941 [citations omitted]. Plaintiff in this case presents no evidence supporting anything more than a unilateral expectation of remaining on the non-consent towing list, as Defendant avers he told Plaintiff the list was at his discretion prior to including Plaintiff. Accordingly, Plaintiff had no vested property interest in remaining on Defendant's non-consent towing list.

Conclusion

Defendant's motion for summary judgment on Plaintiff's claims that Defendant's action is preempted by 49 U.S.C. § 14501, that it violated Anti-Trust provision 15 U.S.C. § 1, and that it violated a constitutionally protected property interest is granted in full. Plaintiff's claims against Defendant, in both his individual capacity and official [*14] capacity as sheriff of Moore County, will be dismissed with prejudice.

It is SO ORDERED.

Signed this the 24th day of February 2012.

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) provides for dismissal of actions that fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Under this standard, a court must construe the complaint in favor of the plaintiff, accept the factual allegations contained in the complaint as true, and determine whether the plaintiff's factual allegations state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. The factual allegations of a pleading "must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolies and attempts, combinations, or conspiracies to monopolize trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides for a private right of action under the Sherman Act, with the recovery of treble damages, costs, and attorney fees to any person, who has been injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a).

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Ohio's antitrust statute, the Valentine Act, was modeled after the Sherman Act, and the Ohio Supreme Court has interpreted the Valentine Act in light of federal decisions construing the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

HN5[] Standing, Requirements

Antitrust standing is a threshold, pleading-stage inquiry and when a complaint by its terms fails to establish this requirement a court must dismiss it as a matter of law--lest the antitrust laws become a treble-damages sword rather than the shield against competition-destroying conduct that Congress meant them to be. Antitrust standing and U.S. Const. art. III standing are not one and the same, and a court not only may--but it must--reject claims under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) when antitrust standing is missing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN6[] Standing, Requirements

Of the various requirements for establishing antitrust standing, the one that concerns the instant analysis is antitrust injury, which is a necessary, but not always sufficient, condition of antitrust standing. An antitrust claimant must show more than merely an "injury causally linked" to a competitive practice; it must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN7[] Standing, Requirements

Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN8[] Standing, Requirements

The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors. Antitrust standing ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior. To sufficiently allege harm to competition, a plaintiff must put forth factual allegations plausibly suggesting that there has been an adverse effect on prices, output, or quality of goods in the relevant market as a result of the challenged actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN9[] Standing, Requirements

A plaintiff is required to show not merely injury to himself as a competitor, but rather injury to competition. Generally, the elimination of a single competitor, standing alone, does not prove anticompetitive effect.

Labor & Employment Law > Discrimination > Racial Discrimination > General Overview

HN10[] Discrimination, Racial Discrimination

Under Ohio law, it is unlawful: For any employer, because of the race of any person, to discharge without just cause, to refuse to hire, or otherwise to discriminate against that person with respect to hire, tenure, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, or any matter directly or indirectly related to employment. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 4112.02(A).

Labor & Employment Law > Discrimination > Reconstruction Statutes

HN11[] Discrimination, Reconstruction Statutes

42 U.S.C.S. § 1981 prohibits racial discrimination in the making, performance, modification, and termination of contracts. Both the Ohio Civil Rights Act and § 1981 are analyzed under the same standards as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C.S. § 2000e et seq.

HN12[] Evidence, Burdens of Proof

To establish a prima facie case of discrimination by the defendant, the plaintiff must show (1) that he is a member of a protected group; (2) that he was subject to an adverse employment decision; (3) that he was qualified for the position; and (4) that he was replaced by a person outside of the protected class. the fourth element may also be satisfied by showing that similarly situated non-protected employees were treated more favorably.

HN13[] Evidence, Burdens of Proof

A prima facie case is an evidentiary standard, not a pleading requirement. A court reviews the prima facie case standard in the Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) context to determine whether a plaintiff has given the defendant fair notice of his or her claim and the grounds upon which it rests—not to determine if the standard is met.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Conspiracy Against Rights > Elements

HN14[] Conspiracy Against Rights, Elements

The elements of a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1985 claim are: (1) a conspiracy; (2) for the purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws, or of equal privileges and immunities under the laws; (3) an act in furtherance of the conspiracy; and (4) an injury to either person or property or a deprivation of any right or privilege of a United States citizen.

Torts > ... > Defamation > Elements > General Overview

HN15[] Defamation, Elements

Defamation is a false publication that injures a person's reputation, exposes him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, shame or disgrace, or affects him adversely in his trade or business. The essential elements of a claim for defamation under Ohio law are: (1) the defendant made a false statement; (2) that false statement was defamatory in the sense that it reflected unfavorably of the plaintiff's character or injured his trade or business; (3) the statement was published or communicated; and (4) the defendant acted with the necessary degree of fault.

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN16[] Intentional Interference, Elements

Under Ohio law, the tort of interference with a business relationship occurs when a person, without a privilege to do so, induces or otherwise purposely causes a third person not to enter into or continue a business relationship with another. The elements of tortious interference with a business relationship are (1) a business relationship; (2) the wrongdoer's knowledge thereof; (3) an intentional interference causing a breach or termination of the relationship; and (4) damages resulting therefrom.

OPINION AND ORDER

This matter is before the Court for consideration of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Claims for Relief One, Two, Three, Six, and Seven of Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint ("Defendants' First Motion to Dismiss") (Doc. 50), which is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART, and Defendants Claus Von Zychlin, Douglas G. Finnie, M.D., Columbus Cardiology Consultants, Inc., Emergency Services, Inc., Jeffrey B. Thurston, D.O., Columbus Inpatient Care, Inc., William J. Fanning, M.D., and Cardiothoracic Surgeons, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss Claims for Relief Four and Five of Plaintiff's Complaint ("Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss") (Doc. 51), which is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART.

I. Background

The [*3] facts relied upon in this Opinion and Order were taken from the pleadings or documents that are properly considered part of the pleadings. See Weiner v. Klais and Co., Inc., 108 F.3d 86, 89 (6th Cir. 1997) (HN1[] documents are considered part of the pleadings if they are referred to in the plaintiff's complaint and are central to the plaintiff's claim); see also Yeary v. Goodwill Indus.-Knoxville, Inc., 107 F.3d 443, 445 (6th Cir. 1997) (if extrinsic materials merely "fill in the contours and details of the plaintiff's complaint, and add nothing new," they may be considered without converting the motion to one for summary judgment).

Plaintiff, Vincent L. Guinn, M.D., is a successful African American physician who opened his medical practice in 2002 specializing in electrophysiology and cardiac care. Prior to Dr. Guinn opening his own practice, he was associated with a group practice and, during the years 2001-2002, was the chairperson of the Department of Cardiovascular Disease of Mount Carmel Medical Center in Columbus, Ohio and the vice chairperson in 1998 and 1999.

In 2007, Dr. Guinn was primarily associated with Defendant Mount Carmel Health. On approximately April 3, 2007, the Clinical [*4] Department Council of Mount Carmel West Hospital held a meeting at which Dr. Guinn's conduct in placing an intracardial device in a patient was discussed. Dr. Guinn alleges that Defendant Thomas Alexis, M.D. reported to the Council that Dr. Guinn had placed the device in a patient whose previous intracardial device pocket had broken down and was infected. Dr. Guinn alleges that Dr. Alexis' statement was false and that he knew that it was false when he reported it. Based upon this reported incident, the Clinical Department Council "summarily suspended" Dr. Guinn's clinical privileges. (Pl.'s Second Am. Compl. ¶ 33; Doc. 45.)

On April 13, 2007, Mount Carmel Health notified Dr. Guinn of the Clinical Department Council's decision to suspend his clinical privileges and informed him that Mount Carmel Health's Medical Executive Committee would review the decision. The Medical Executive Committee met on April 17, 2007, and upheld the Clinical Department Council's determination to summarily suspend Dr. Guinn's clinical privileges.

On October 16, 2007, Mount Carmel Health held an Ad Hoc Hearing on Dr. Guinn's suspension. The Ad Hoc Hearing Committee upheld the Medical Executive Committee's recommendation [*5] to suspend Dr. Guinn's privileges. Mount Carmel Health's Board of Trustees reviewed and upheld the Ad Hoc Hearing Committee's decision on July 14, 2008.

On March 24, 2009, Dr. Guinn filed this action. He has amended the complaint twice. The second amended complaint names as defendants Mount Carmel Health, Mount Carmel Health Systems, Trinity Health Corporation, Chief Executive Officer of Mount Carmel Health Systems Claus Von Zychlin, Medard R. Lutmerding, M.D. and Emergency Services, Inc., Thomas R. Alexis, M.D. and Mount Carmel Health Providers, Inc. d/b/a Big Run Internal Medicine, Michael R. Mumane, M.D. and Columbus Cardiology Consultants, Inc., Barney B. Beaver, D.O. and Knollwood Physicians Group/Heart and Rhythm Specialists, Jeffrey B. Thurston, D.O. and Columbus Inpatient Care, Inc., William J. Fanning, M.D. and Cardiothoracic Surgeons, Inc., and Douglas G. Finnie, M.D.

Dr. Guinn alleges that Defendants purposefully and intentionally engaged in a course of conduct to drive him from the medical field of electrophysiology and cardiac care by claiming falsely that his work relating to one specific patient fell below the applicable standard of care. Dr. Guinn contends that Defendants' [*6] motivation was to realize economic gain by excluding him as a competitor and to discriminate against him because he is an African American. In the second amended complaint he alleges claims for: (1) race discrimination in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1981; (2) conspiracy to engage in race discrimination in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1985; (3) race discrimination in violation of Ohio Revised Code §§ 4112.02, 4112.99; (4) tortious interference with business relationships[1]; (5) defamation; (6) antitrust violations under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2; and (7) antitrust violations under Ohio's Valentine Act, Ohio Revised Code § 1331 et seq.

On July 24, 2011, Defendants filed their First Motion to Dismiss. (Doc. 50.) Dr. Guinn filed his Memorandum in Opposition [*7] to Defendants' First Motion to Dismiss (Doc. 63) on October 7, 2011 and on November 7, 2011, Defendants filed a Reply Memorandum in Support of their First Motion to Dismiss (Doc. 69).

Also on July 24, 2011, Defendants Claus Von Zychlin, Douglas G. Finnie, M.D., Columbus Cardiology Consultants, Inc., Emergency services, Inc., Jeffrey B. Thurston, D.O., Columbus Inpatient Care, Inc., William J. Fanning, M.D., and Cardiothoracic Surgeons, Inc.'s ("Moving Defendants") filed Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss. (Doc. 51.) On October 7, 2011, Dr. Guinn filed his Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss (Doc. 64), and on November 7, 2011, the Moving Defendants filed their Reply Memorandum in Support of Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss (Doc. 68).

II. Standard

Defendants move under HN2[] Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which provides for dismissal of actions that fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Under this standard, a court must construe the complaint in favor of the plaintiff, accept the factual allegations contained in the complaint as true, and determine whether the plaintiff's factual allegations "state a claim to relief [*8] that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007); Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (clarifying the plausibility standard articulated in Twombly).[2] "A claim has

[1] Dr. Guinn refers to his claim as one for tortious interference with "contract" but alleges facts that support a claim that Defendants interfered with his business relationships. Additionally, in his Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss he argues that Defendants interfered with his business relationships. Thus, the Court, as did Defendants, accepts the claim as one for interference with business relationships.

[2] In Dr.Guinn's Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' First Motion to Dismiss, he sets out a now defunct standard, i.e., this Court may dismiss a "complaint 'only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations.'" (Doc. 63 at 17) (quoting Nilvar, M.D. v. Mercy Health System Western Ohio, 142 F. Supp. 2d 859, 867 (S.D. Ohio 2000)). That language is taken from Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957), which stated that a complaint "should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support [*9] of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). As the Sixth Circuit has explained, however, that the Supreme Court has disavowed that language:

> In [Twombly], the Court disavowed the oft-quoted Rule 12(b)(6) standard of Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957) (recognizing "the accepted rule that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949. The factual allegations of a pleading "must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level . . . ." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

III. Defendants' First Motion to Dismiss

In Defendants' First Motion to Dismiss, they move for dismissal of Dr. Guinn's antitrust and discrimination claims.

A. Antitrust Claims

HN3[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very [*10] contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolies and attempts, combinations, or conspiracies to monopolize trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 2. Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides for a private right of action under the Sherman Act, with the recovery of treble damages, costs, and attorney fees to "any person, who [has been] injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15(a).

HN4[] "Ohio's antitrust statute, the Valentine Act, was modeled after the Sherman Act, and the Ohio Supreme Court has interpreted the Valentine Act in light of federal decisions construing the Sherman Act." Care Heating & Cooling, Inc. v. Am. Standard, Inc., 427 F.3d 1008, 1012, n. 1 (6th Cir. 2005) (citing C.K. & J.K., Inc., Fairview Shopping Ctr., 63 Ohio St. 2d 201, 407 N.E.2d 507 (1980)). See also Johnson v. Microsoft Corp., 106 Ohio St. 3d 278, 281, 2005 Ohio 4985, 834 N.E.2d 791 (2005) ("we will review the status of federal [antitrust] law with respect to who may properly assert an antitrust action" under the Valentine Act). Therefore, [*11] Dr. Guinn's claims under the Valentine Act rise or fall with those under the Sherman Act.

Defendants argue that Dr. Guinn's claims filed under the Sherman Act must be dismissed because he does not have standing to bring those claims, he has failed to sufficiently allege that Defendants entered into an express or tacit agreement to exclude him from the market, and/or because many of the individual defendants cannot conspire with one another as a matter of law based upon the intra-corporate conspiracy doctrine. Because the Court finds Defendants' first argument well taken, it need not address the remaining two.

As to Defendants' first argument, HN5[] "antitrust standing is a threshold, pleading-stage inquiry and when a complaint by its terms fails to establish this requirement [a court] must dismiss it as a matter of law--lest the antitrust laws become a treble-damages sword rather than the shield against competition-destroying conduct that Congress meant them to be." NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Co., 507 F.3d 442, 450 (6th Cir. 2007). "[A]ntitrust standing and Article III standing are not one and the same, and [a court] not only may--but [it] must--reject claims under Rule 12(b)(6) when antitrust standing [*12] is missing." Id. at 449. Cf. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992) (standing, in a conventional Article III sense, requires proof of actual injury, causation and redressability).

HN6[] Of the various requirements for establishing antitrust standing, the one that concerns the instant analysis is antitrust injury, which is a "necessary, but not always sufficient," condition of antitrust standing.[3] NicSand, Inc., 507

Ass'n of Cleveland Fire Fighters v. City of Cleveland, Ohio, 502 F.3d 545, 548 (6th Cir. 2007). The Court notes that, although Dr. Guinn set forth the incorrect standard, he does not improperly rely on that standard, and instead correctly argues that he has stated plausible claims for relief.

[3] "HN7[] Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact, but the court must make a further determination whether the plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action." Assoc. Gen.

"An antitrust claimant must show more than merely an 'injury causally linked' to a competitive practice; it 'must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.'" Id. (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)).

HN8[] "[T]he antitrust laws . . . were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 488 (quoting Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). "[A]ntitrust standing 'ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior.'" NicSand, Inc., 507 F.3d at 449 (citing Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 344, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990)). In other words, if Dr. Guinn was harmed as a result of Defendants' actions, but consumers of the medical services offered by Dr. Guinn and Defendants suffered no ill effects, then there would be no violation of the antitrust laws. See Aventis Envtl. Sci. USA LP v. Scotts Co., 383 F. Supp. 2d 488, 503 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) ("In other words, if AgrEvo EH was harmed as a result of Scotts' and Monsanto's actions, but NSH consumers suffered no ill effects, then there would [*14] be no violation of the antitrust laws."). To sufficiently allege harm to competition, a plaintiff must put forth factual allegations plausibly suggesting that there has been an adverse effect on prices, output, or quality of goods in the relevant market as a result of the challenged actions. See Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 31, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984); Capital Imaging Assocs. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 541 (2d Cir. 1993).

Dr. Guinn submits that, contrary to Defendants' assertions, he has pleaded facts that plausibly suggest that an antitrust injury has occurred, which is sufficient to confer antitrust standing:

> Here, Dr. Guinn specifically alleges that, beginning in April, 2007, the Defendants conspired and reported false information to the [Clinical Department Council] to begin a sham peer review process intending to drive Dr. Guinn from the relevant medical market. (Pls. Compl. ¶¶ 31-33, 36, 38, 42, 45, 47). The harm suffered by Dr. Guinn was that his practice was brought to a screeching halt. (Pl.'s. Compl. ¶ 40). Further, that the relevant market (i.e., Franklin and surrounding counties, and central Ohio) (Pl.'s Second Am. Compl. ¶ 26) was harmed. Specifically, [*15] substantial interstate commerce involved including medical supplies and the quality of medical services was harmed because patients that utilized Dr. Guinn's services at [Mount Carmel Health] facilities could no longer after his privileges were suspended. (Pls. Compl. ¶¶ 25-28). As a direct result of the Defendants successful monopolization of the [intracardial device] market, patients had to choose between using one of the Defendants or some other physician because Dr. Guinn could not practice medicine in that field with Mount Carmel. (Id.).

(Doc. 63 at 30) (relying upon New York Medscan LLC v. NY. Univ. Sch. of Med., 430 F. Supp. 2d 140 (S.D.N.Y. 2006)). Dr. Guinn also alleges that Defendants' actions negatively impacted the relevant market because they "affected the cost of medical services provided and the choices of the patients." (Doc. 63 at 23) (citing Pl.'s Second Am. Compl. ¶ 26-28).

Dr. Guinn's allegations, however, simply do not permit the Court to make a reasonable inference that Defendants' actions reduced competition in the relevant market, i.e., caused injury "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489. While Dr. Guinn does [*16] restate the appropriate language consistent with antitrust injury—the quality of medical services was harmed, consumers had less choice, and the cost of medical services was negatively impacted—his factual allegations do not support these contentions. See e.g., CBCInnovis v. Equifax Info. Servs. LLC, 2008-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P76, 199, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11700, at *18 (S.D. Ohio Feb. 4, 2008) ("Though Plaintiffs maybe correct in asserting that Equifax's Reissue Policy is resulting in 'higher prices, lower quality services, and less choice for lenders,' there is nothing more to support these naked assertions.... Plaintiffs have therefore failed to assert a market-wide injury or specify any competition reducing effect of Defendants' behavior. Rather, Plaintiffs appear to just be restating the antitrust laws.").

Mars, Inc., 957 F.2d 287 (6th Cir. 1982) (setting forth the factors to be balanced in such an analysis). In their motion, however, Defendants do not dispute that Dr. Guinn has sufficiently alleged that he is the proper party to bring this action.

First, Dr. Guinn contends that he sufficiently alleged market-wide injury because the cost of medical services was negatively impacted by Defendants' actions. Dr. Guinn, however, provides no factual allegations to support this contention. He merely states a conclusion. There is no allegation indicating that patients in the relevant geographic area were required to pay higher costs [*17] for services because of Dr. Guinn's removal as a provider. For example, in the case upon which Dr. Guinn relies to support his claim that he has alleged an injury sufficient to confer antitrust standing, New York Medscan, the court found that the plaintiffs had alleged sufficient factual allegations that the defendants' actions negatively impacted the cost of patient services.

In that case, the plaintiffs were a radiologist, Karolyn Kerr, M.D., and a limited liability company, New York Medscan. New York Medscan provided diagnostic imaging services at its office in New York City office. That company "invested millions of dollars in high-technology imaging scanners, other equipment, and non-medical staff to provide patients with state-of-the-art diagnostic imaging[, PET/CT scans]." Id. at 142. The plaintiffs had a three year contractual agreement with the New York University ("NYU") school of medicine to provide office facilities, equipment, and services to NYU radiologists for PET/CT outpatient diagnostic scanning. When an insured patient received a PET/CT scan, the performing radiologist would bill the patient's health plan for the costs of administering the scan and the radiologist's [*18] fee for interpreting the scan. The health plan would pay most or all of these costs, either directly or through a contractual administrator such as the defendant CareCore National LLC ("CCN").

CCN controlled the PET/CT services for more than 22 million subscribers, including approximately 3.5 million subscribers in New York City. This represented a dominant share of the market in New York City. "Thus, approval by CCN [wa]s necessary for a radiologist or scanning facility to effectively compete in the New York market." Id. at 143. By determining which facilities and radiologists CCN would authorize to provide PET/CT services, CCN and its board members, who were radiologists competing with each other and with the radiologists and facilities they determine to authorize or refuse, "effectively control[ed] the diagnostic imaging market." Id. New York [*19] Medscan and NYU engaged in negotiations for the renewal of their contractual agreement and a CCN boardmember advised New York Medscan that if it did not renew the agreement or enter into a new contract with NYU on the terms it demanded, then New York Medscan and Dr. Kerr would lose their status as a CCN-approved facility and a CCN-approved radiologist.

The plaintiffs filed an antitrust suit, and the court, in reviewing whether the plaintiffs alleged antitrust standing sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss, evaluated the plaintiffs' allegations of market-wide injury. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants' actions negatively impacted, inter alia, the price of diagnostic imaging services in the New York City area. The court agreed. The plaintiffs in that case, unlike Dr. Guinn here, set forth facts from which a reasonable inference could be made that the cost of PET/CT scans for the consumer increased significantly. That is, the consumers of PET/CT scans could no longer receive approval from CCN to obtain the scans on the specialized state-of-art equipment owned only by New York Medscan. The patients were left with the choice of paying for the scans themselves or obtaining the [*20] scans from Defendants on inferior equipment.

This brings the Court to Dr. Guinn's second contention as to why his allegations of harm are sufficient to confer antitrust standing, i.e., the quality of medical services. Dr. Guinn contends that the quality of medical services was harmed because patients who had previously utilized his services no longer had that as a choice. That injury, however, did nothing to reduce competition in the market. It is the impact upon competitive conditions in a definable market which distinguishes the antitrust violation from the ordinary business tort. Here, Dr. Guinn admits that the patients could either choose one of the physician-defendants as a doctor or some other physician. Thus, eliminating Dr. Guinn as a competitor did not eliminate competition between Defendants and other doctors in the relevant geographic area nor did it prevent the relevant patients from choosing from a large array of doctors. HN9[] A plaintiff is required to show not merely injury to himself as a competitor, but rather injury to competition. Generally, "the elimination of a single competitor, standing alone, does not prove anticompetitive effect." Kaplan v. Burroughs Corp., 611 F.2d 286, 291 (9th Cir. 1979). [*21] See also Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995) ("Of course, conduct that eliminates rivals reduces competition. But reduction of competition does not invoke the Sherman Act until it harms consumer welfare."); Products Liab. Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Crum & Forster

Ins. Cos., 682 F.2d 660, 663 (7th Cir. 1982) ("Now there is a sense in which eliminating even a single competitor reduces competition. But it is not the sense that is relevant in deciding whether the antitrust laws have been violated."); Gentile v. Fifth Ave. Otolaryngology, Inc., No. 4:05 CV 2936, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60881, at *17-18 (N.D. Ohio Aug. 28, 2006) ("The loss of staff privileges does not harm the consumer of medical services, but simply constitutes a personal harm to the individual physician."); Sokol v. Akron Gen. Med. Ctr., No. 5:95CV1108, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22078, at *32, n. 4 (N.D. Ohio Sept. 30, 1997), rev.d on other grounds, 173 F.3d 1026 (6th Cir. 1999) ("numerous courts have concluded that the loss of a physician's staff privileges, without more, is not an antitrust injury because the loss does not harm the consumer of medical services, but simply constitutes a personal [*22] harm to the individual physician").

Referring back to the case upon which Dr. Guinn relies, New York Medscan, and its consideration of "quality" and "choice" harm, the court explained:

> The complaint alleges that the quality of PET/CT services has decreased as a result of defendants' conduct because patients who had previously received PET/CT scans at Medscan were forced to receive subsequent scans on different equipment. With the use of different imaging devices, the accuracy of comparisons of the scans decreases, thereby adversely affecting diagnosis and treatment. Further, by requiring patients to change facilities, the continuity of patient treatment is disturbed, resulting in an adverse emotional impact on patients. Thus, accepting the allegations as true, this is not a situation where, "from the consumers' point of view, nothing about the market has changed" as a result of defendants' conduct. Balaklaw [v. Lovell], 14 F.3d [793], 798 [(2d Cir. 1994)]. Instead, the quality of diagnostic imaging services purportedly has decreased, and the courts have repeatedly held that a decline in quality is among the injuries that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. See, e.g., Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C., 996 F.2d at 546; [*23] Aventis Envtl. Sci. USA LP., 383 F. Supp. 2d at 503; Nilavar [v. Mercy Health Sys. W. Ohio], 142 F. Supp. 2d [859], 874 [(S.D. Ohio 2000)].

Id. at 147-48.

In the instant action, Dr. Guinn uses the phrase "quality of care," which is consistent with antitrust injury, however, the factual allegations do not plausibly suggest antitrust injury. That is, the factual allegation that the "quality of medical services was harmed because patients [who] utilized Dr. Guinn's services at MCH facilities could no longer after his privileges were suspended.... [and therefore] Patients had to choose between using one of the Defendants or some other physician because Dr. Guinn could not practice medicine in that field with Mount Carmel" does not support an inference that there was an adverse effect on the quality of services in the relevant market. Unlike the patients in New York Medscan, the patients at issue here were not forced to go to a physician that utilized different equipment, which impacted adversely the accuracy of the test results and would have an effect on their treatment. Nor were any patients forced to change facilities at which they had been receiving their treatments thereby disturbing [*24] the continuity of their treatment, resulting in an adverse emotional impact on patients. No reasonable inference can be made from Dr. Guinn's allegations that the patients at issue here suffered any ill effects in the quality of their care by removing him as their physician.

The Court concludes that when accepting all of Dr. Guinn's allegations as true and making all justifiable inferences in his favor, he has failed to allege enough factual matter to suggest that an antitrust injury occurred that was sufficient to confer antitrust standing. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557 (antitrust claimant must put forth factual "allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with)" antitrust injury). Additionally, the Court finds that no amendment to the complaint could remedy this failure, for the insufficiency lies in the nature of the alleged harm, not in the specific allegations pleaded. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' First Motion to Dismiss as it relates to Dr. Guinn's state and federal antitrust claims.

B. Discrimination Claims

Dr. Guinn alleges race discrimination in violation of Ohio Revised Code § 4112, et. seq., 42 U.S.C. § 1981, and 42 U.S.C. § 1985. Defendants move for [*25] dismissal of all three claims for relief for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.

1. 42 U.S.C. § 1981 and Ohio Revised Code § 4112

Dr. Guinn alleges that Defendants discriminated against him on the basis of race in violation of the Ohio Revised Code Chapter 4112 and 42 U.S.C. § 1981. HN10[] Under Ohio law, it is unlawful:

> For any employer, because of the race . . . of any person, to discharge without just cause, to refuse to hire, or otherwise to discriminate against that person with respect to hire, tenure, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, or any matter directly or indirectly related to employment.

Ohio Rev. Code § 4112.02(A). Similarly, HN11[] § 1981 prohibits racial discrimination in the "making, performance, modification, and termination of contracts." 42 U.S.C. § 1981. Both the Ohio Civil Rights Act and § 1981 are analyzed under the same standards as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e. See Hawkins v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 517 F.3d 321, 332 (6th Cir. 2008) ("[a]ll references throughout this opinion to Title VII are therefore equally applicable to the plaintiffs' claims under Ohio Revised Code § 4112"); Johnson v. Univ. of Cincinnati, 215 F.3d 561, 573 n.5 (6th Cir. 2000) [*26] (noting that the elements of prima facie case and burdens of proof are the same for Title VII and § 1981).

"HN12[] [T]o establish a prima facie case of discrimination by the defendant,[4] 'the plaintiff must show (1) that he is a member of a protected group, (2) that he was subject to an adverse employment decision, (3) that he was qualified for the position, and (4) that he was replaced by a person outside of the protected class. . . . the fourth element may also be satisfied by showing that similarly situated non-protected employees were treated more favorably.'" Clayton v. Meijer, Inc., 281 F.3d 605, 610 (6th Cir. 2002) (alteration in original) (quoting Talley v. Bravo Pitino Rest., Ltd., 61 F.3d 1241, 1246 (6th Cir. 1995)). Defendants take issue only with the fourth element, arguing that "Plaintiff has failed to plead any facts that would render plausible his statement that he was treated differently from other similarly-situated white physicians [and he] has failed to identify any similarly-situated physicians or allege how those physicians were treated differently from Plaintiff." (Doc. 50 at 8.) Defendants' arguments are not well taken.

Defendants contend that this case is similar to Noble v. Genco I, Inc., where this Court found that the plaintiff's allegations were insufficient to save his race discrimination claims from the defendants' motion to dismiss. 94 Empl. Prac. Dec. (CCH) P44,080, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137383 (S.D. Ohio Dec. 30, 2010). Judge Marbley explained:

> Plaintiff alleges in Count I that he "was disparately treated based on his race" and states claims for racial discrimination in Counts I - III. Plaintiff's only other allegations regarding racial discrimination concern Defendant's "long documented history of race discrimination complaints" filed by other black employees of the Defendant before Plaintiff became an employee of Defendant. Plaintiff has pled no facts that Defendant treated him differently than similarly situated white employees or that Defendant has an employment practice [*28] with a disproportionate negative impact on a particular race.

Dr. Guinn, however, has pleaded significantly more than simply "he was treated disparately based on his race." Indeed, Dr. Guinn specifically made allegations that he was treated less favorably than similarly situated coworkers; allegations that this Court found lacking in Noble. Moreover, not only does Dr. Guinn allege that he was treated less favorably than his similarly situated white coworkers, he states specifically in what way he was treated less favorably. That is, Dr. Guinn has alleged that Defendants (individually, officially, and in concert with each other) fabricated a patently false and untrue patient care incident allowing them to institute a "sham" peer review that they then utilized to drive Dr. Guinn from Mount Carmel Health because he is African American. He avers that white

[4] The United States Supreme Court held in Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 510, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002), [*27] the HN13[] prima facie case "is an evidentiary standard, not a pleading requirement." The Court reviews the prima facie case standard in the Rule 12(b)(6) context to determine whether a plaintiff has given the defendant fair notice of his or her claim and the grounds upon which it rests—not to determine if the standard is met.

physicians with privileges at Mount Carmel Health that have had actual patient care issues have either not been subjected to peer review or have been subjected to peer review but have received far less severe sanctions.

Courts in this District regularly find allegations similar to Dr. Guinn's to be sufficient to withstand a motion [*29] to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). *See e.g., Campbell v. Korleski, No. 2:10-cv-1129, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 76310, at 17 (S.D. Ohio July 14, 2011) (Frost, J.) (finding sufficient the plaintiff's "alleg[ations] that he was treated less favorably than his similarly situated white coworkers [because] he was evaluated on a racially discriminatory basis that prevented him from being promoted [and he] (unlike his similarly situated white coworkers) [] was placed into positions where his opportunity for advancement was minimal."); cf. Ndene v. Columbus Acad., 2:09-CV-892, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35235, at 9-10 (S.D. Ohio March 17, 2010) (King, M.J.) ("this Court concludes that Plaintiff's failure to specifically plead that she was treated less favorably than an individual outside her protected class does not warrant dismissal of this claim" where the allegations "are not conclusory in nature" and have "given fair notice of the claim and the grounds upon which it rests").

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendants' First Motion to Dismiss as it relates to Dr. Guinn's race discrimination claims filed under 42 U.S.C. § 1981 and Ohio Revised Code § 4112.

2. 42 U.S.C. § 1985

HN14[] The elements of a 42 U.S.C. § 1985 [*30] claim are:

(1) a conspiracy;

(2) for the purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws, or of equal privileges and immunities under the laws;

(3) an act in furtherance of the conspiracy; and

(4) an injury to either person or property or a deprivation of any right or privilege of a United States citizen.

Conklin v. Lovely, 834 F.2d 543, 548 (6th Cir. 1987). Defendants argue that they are entitled to dismissal of this claim because Dr. Guinn has failed to plead that any of the defendants conspired together with the express purpose of discriminating against him on the basis of his race. Defendants' argument is not well taken.

Throughout the second amended complaint, Dr. Guinn alleges that Defendants worked together and conspired to drive him from Mount Carmel Health and that Defendants committed acts in furtherance of their agreement. Further, Dr. Guinn alleges that Defendants' actions were taken, inter alia, because of his race, which could be shown by the fact that similarly situated white coworkers were treated more favorably than he was. The Court finds that it is reasonable to infer that Defendants are liable for [*31] the misconduct alleged and, therefore, that Dr. Guinn has pleaded a plausible claim for relief under 42 U.S.C. § 1985. Consequently, the Court DENIES Defendants' First Motion to Dismiss as it relates to Dr. Guinn's race discrimination claim filed under 42 U.S.C. § 1985.

IV. Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss

As stated supra, Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss was filed on behalf of the Moving Defendants, who are Claus Von Zychlin, Douglas G. Finnie, M.D., Columbus Cardiology Consultants, Inc., Emergency Services, Inc., Jeffrey B. Thurston, D.O., Columbus Inpatient Care, Inc., William J. Fanning, M.D., and Cardiothoracic Surgeons, Inc.'s. The parties refer to the four businesses included in the Moving Defendants as the "Practice Group Defendants." The Moving Defendants request dismissal of Dr.Guinn's claims for defamation and tortious interference with business relationships. In the event the Court finds that Defendants are entitled to dismissal of either of these two claim, "Dr. Guinn requests this Court to take Defendants' Motion under advisement until such a time as Dr. Guinn has completed meaningful discovery and may supplement the factual allegations contained in his" second [*32] amended complaint." (Doc. 64 at 1.)

A. Defamation Claim

HN15[] "Defamation is a 'false publication that injures a person's reputation, exposes him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, shame or disgrace, or affects him adversely in his trade or business.'" Knox v. Neaton Auto Prods. Mfg., 375 F.3d 451, 460 (6th Cir. 2004) (citing Sweitzer v. Outlet Communs., Inc., 133 Ohio App. 3d 102, 108, 726 N.E.2d 1084 (Ohio Ct. App. 1999).

> The essential elements of a claim for defamation under Ohio law are: (1) the defendant made a false statement, (2) that false statement was defamatory in the sense that it reflected unfavorably of the plaintiff's character or injured his trade or business, (3) the statement was published or communicated, and (4) the defendant acted with the necessary degree of fault.

Defendants argue that Dr. Guinn has "not stated a plausible claim for defamation against the Moving Defendants because he has failed to identify the allegedly defamatory statements allegedly made by the Moving Defendants, failed to identify to whom the statements were made, and in most instances failed to even allege that a single defamatory [*33] statement was made in the first place." Defendants arguments are well taken in part.

Dr. Guinn alleges that Dr. Alexis made false statements that harmed Dr. Guinn in his professional capacity to the Clinical Department Council and other competitors on April 3, 2007. (Pl.'s Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 31-33.) Dr. Guinn further alleges that Drs. Alexis, Beaver, Mumane, and Lutmerding reported false statements that harmed Dr. Guinn in his professional capacity to the Medical Executive Committee on April 17, 2007. Id. ¶ 36. Defendants do not contend that these statements were privileged. Consequently, the Court finds that Dr. Guinn has stated a plausible claim for defamation as to these defendants.

However, as to the remaining Moving Defendants, Dr. Guinn makes no allegations that they made any statements at all. Dr. Guinn alleges that the remainder of the Moving Defendants "relied on and incorporated the 'incorrect and false information' in order to render [the Committee's] decision to suspend Dr. Guinn's privileges" and to uphold and justify the suspension. (Doc. 64 at 5.) Reliance upon a false statement and making a false statement are not one in the same. Reliance on a false statement cannot [*34] support a defamation claim. Moreover, Dr. Guinn's request for the Court to take this claim under advisement until he can engage in meaningful discovery is denied. No amount of discovery will change the fact that a defamation claim requires the allegation of a false statement. Dr. Guinn makes no suggestion that discovery will elicit more information about who said what at the administrative hearings.

Consequently, the Court DENIES Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss as it relates to the defamation claim brought against Drs. Alexis, Beaver, Murnane, and Lutmerding and GRANTS the motion as it relates to the defamation claim brought against the remaining Moving Defendants.

B. Tortious Interference with Business Relationships Claim

"HN16[] Under Ohio law, '[t]he tort of interference with a business relationship occurs when a person, without a privilege to do so, induces or otherwise purposely causes a third person not to enter into or continue a business relationship with another.'" Harris v. Bornhorst, 513 F.3d 503, 523 (6th Cir. 2008) (quoting McConnell v. Hunt Sports Enters., 132 Ohio App. 3d 657, 689, 725 N.E.2d 1193 (Ohio Ct. App. 1999) (bracket in original)). "'The elements of tortious interference with a [*35] business relationship are (1) a business relationship, (2) the wrongdoer's knowledge thereof, (3) an intentional interference causing a breach or termination of the relationship, and (4) damages resulting therefrom.'" Id. (quoting McConnell, supra). The Moving Defendants argue that Dr. Guinn "fails to allege any facts from which the Court may infer that such a claim is plausible against the Moving Defendants." (Doc. 51 at 11.) Defendants further assert that the second amended complaint alleges that Mr. Von Zychlin, Dr. Finnie, Dr. Thurston and the Practice Group Defendants were involved only minimally with the peer-review process and that "the only factual averments pertaining to the Practice Group Defendants, [Big Run Internal Medicine], and [Heart and Rhythm Specialists] relate to their 'involvement' or 'future involvement' in economic transactions with Trinity, [Mount Carmel Health], and [Mount Carmel Health Systems]." Id. at 7. Defendants' arguments are not well taken.

The Moving Defendants rely upon two cases that they claim stand for the proposition that a tortious interference with business relationships claim cannot survive a motion to dismiss when the plaintiff failed to explain [*36] by what act or in what manner the defendant interfered with or caused interference. (Doc. 68 at 4-5) (citing Bush Truck Leasing, Inc. v. Dynamex, Inc., No. 1:09-cv-354, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1720, at 17-18 (S.D. Ohio Jan. 7, 2011) and *Scrap Yard, LLC v. City of Cleveland, No. 1:10-cv-2465, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103716, at 24 (N.D. Ohio June 23, 2011)). Unlike those two cases, however, Dr. Guinn here does explain by what act and in what manner Defendants caused interference with his business relationships. Dr. Guinn's second amended complaint is replete with allegations that all of the defendants, including the Moving Defendants, conspired together to exclude Dr. Guinn from practicing medicine in the relevant geographic area so to eliminate him as a competitor. Dr. Guinn further alleges that all of the defendants not only conspired to interfere with his business relationships, but that they actually took actions to so interfere by improperly suspending his clinical privileges based upon information that they knew was false or that they failed to make a reasonable investigation to determine if such information was false and by failing to provide him with any opportunity to respond [*37] to the false charges against him. A reasonable inference can be made that the Practice Group Defendants were involved based upon the actions of the defendant doctors with whom the medical practices were associated and the financial gain each would allegedly realize if Dr. Guinn was eliminated as a competitor. Finally, Dr. Guinn avers that his medical practice was harmed significantly by Defendants' interference.

Accepting Dr. Guinn's allegations in the second amended complaint as true, and drawing all justifiable inferences in his favor, the Court concludes that he has sufficiently pleaded a claim for tortious interference with business relationships against the Moving Defendants that is plausible on its face. Consequently, the Court DENIES Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss as it relates to this claim.

V. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above:

1. The Court GRANTS IN PART AND DENIES IN PART Defendants' First Motion to Dismiss. (Doc. 50.) Specifically, the Court GRANTS the motion as it relates to as it relates to Dr. Guinn's federal and state antitrust claims and DENIES the motion as it relates to Dr. Guinn's federal and state discrimination claims.

2. The Court GRANTS IN PART AND [*38] DENIES IN PART Defendants' Second Motion to Dismiss. (Doc. 51.) Specifically, the Court DENIES the motion as it relates to Dr. Guinn's claim for tortious interference with business relationships, DENIES the motion as it relates to Dr. Guinn's defamation claim brought against Drs. Alexis, Beaver, Mumane, and Lutmerding, and GRANTS the motion as it relates to the defamation claim brought against the remaining Moving Defendants.

The Clerk is DIRECTED to REMOVE these two motions from the Court's pending motions list.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

Before the Court is the Motion for Reconsideration (doc. 162) filed by plaintiff American Airlines, Inc. ("American"). By the motion, American asks the Court to reconsider its November 21, 2011 Order Regarding Motions to Dismiss and Motion for Leave to Amend (doc. 156). After review, the Court will grant the motion in part and deny it in part.

I. Legal Standard

Because the November 21 order is interlocutory, the instant motion is governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b). See Dos Santos v. Bell Helicopter Textron, Inc. Dist., 651 F. Supp. 2d 550, 553 (N.D. Tex. 2009). Under Rule 54(b), the Court may revise an interlocutory order "at any time before the entry of a judgment adjudicating all the claims" in the case. Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b). "Although the precise standard for evaluating a motion to reconsider under Rule 54(b) is unclear, whether to grant such a motion rests within the discretion of the court." *Brown v. Wichita Cnty., Tex., No. 7:05—CV—108—O, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44676, 2011 WL 1562567, at 2 (N.D. Tex. Apr. 26, 2011) (O'Connor, J.) (citation omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted). Moreover, while the standard for reconsideration under Rule 54(b) is less exacting than the standards imposed by Rules 59(e) and 60(b), these latter standards inform the Court's analysis under [*3] Rule 54(b). See id.

II. Analysis

A. The Court's Dismissal of Count Four

The first aspect of the November 21 order that American challenges is its dismissal of count four of American's first amended complaint.[1] Count four included claims against all defendants for alleged violations of section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act.[2] The Court dismissed those claims with prejudice after determining that American had failed to sufficiently plead a contract, combination, or conspiracy that foreclosed a sufficient share of the market to constitute an unreasonable restraint on trade.

American initially contends that the Court's dismissal of count four should [*4] not have been with prejudice. In the November 21 order, the Court decided to dismiss count four with prejudice after evaluating American's proposed second amended complaint and determining that it did not remedy the deficiencies in the first amended complaint. American complains that this was in error because American did not have the benefit of the Court's analysis when it filed its proposed second amended complaint. American insists that, if allowed, it can remedy the deficiencies described in the November 21 order.

The Court declines to grant reconsideration on this point. American is ably represented in this case by thirteen attorneys, all of whom work for sophisticated law firms in major cities. With such competent representation, American had all the knowledge it needed to meet Rule 8's requirements for stating a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Moreover, Travelport's motion to dismiss American's original complaint provided American with sufficient notice of the potential grounds upon which the Court might find American's claims deficient. Given the large number of claims and parties involved in this case, in the November 21 order, the Court determined that the interests of efficiency [*5] and judicial economy made it necessary to dispose of all claims that had not been remedied by the first two rounds of amendments. The Court stands by this decision.

American also challenges two subsidiary legal positions taken by the Court in reaching its conclusion that American had not stated a section 1 claim. First, American contends that the Court was incorrect in determining that it could not aggregate the effects of Sabre's and Travelport's discrete vertical agreements with travel agents in evaluating whether either of those defendants had participated in a contract, combination, or conspiracy that foreclosed a substantial share of the market. Second, American challenges the Court's conclusion that American could not rely on its own contracts with Sabre and Travelport to establish a section 1 claim against those defendants.

[1] In the November 21 order, the Court set out in detail the case's factual background and the parties' claims and defenses. The Court will not repeat them here.

[2] The defendants in this case are (1) Travelport Limited and Travelport, LP (collectively, "Travelport"); (2) Sabre Inc., Sabre Holdings Corporation, and Sabre Travel International Limited (collectively, "Sabre"); and Orbitz Worldwide, LLC ("Orbitz"). For the sake of brevity and clarity, in the text of this order, the Court will use the shorthand names of the defendants without first setting out their full names.

With regard to American's first argument, the Court maintains its position. To plead a section 1 violation, American must allege a contract, combination, or conspiracy that forecloses a substantial share of the market such that it unreasonably restrains trade. See 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 (West 2012); Golden Bridge Tech., Inc. v. Motorola, Inc., 547 F.3d 266, 271 (5th Cir. 2008). In the Court's view, American cannot achieve this by pointing to several discrete vertical contracts, combinations, [*6] or conspiracies that only foreclose a substantial share of the market when viewed in the aggregate. Rather, it would seem that American must point to a single contract, combination, or conspiracy that itself forecloses a substantial share of the relevant market. See Spectators' Commc'ns Network Inc. v. Colonial Country Club, 253 F.3d 215, 225 (5th Cir. 2001) (noting that "the reason for looking at market power is to determine whether the combination or conspiracy, not each individual conspirator, has the power to hurt competition in the relevant market." (emphasis added)).

Admittedly, courts have had trouble analyzing situations in which a common defendant is involved in numerous discrete vertical agreements that do not restrain trade individually, but do when viewed in the aggregate. See William C. Holmes, Antitrust Law Handbook § 2:4 (West 2011) (collecting cases). American disagrees with the position taken by this Court, but has not demonstrated that the Court is manifestly wrong on this point. Compare Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 210 (4th Cir. 2002) (concluding that aggregation is improper), *with Applied Med. Res. Corp. v. Johnson & Johnson, No. SACV 03-1329-JVS(MLGx), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29409, at 12 (C.D. Cal. February 23, 2004) (concluding that aggregation is permitted). In any event, even assuming the Court was incorrect on the aggregation issue, it nevertheless remains that American failed [*7] to adequately plead a contract, combination, or conspiracy in the first instance (aside from the Orbitz-Travelport compensation agreement). Thus, the Court will not reverse its position on the aggregation issue.

The Court, however, is inclined to agree with American concerning American's second argument. In footnote 15 of the November 21 order, the Court stated that "American cannot rely on its own contracts with Sabre to establish a section 1 violation because Sabre cannot be unilaterally liable under section 1." (Nov. 21 Order 30 n.15.) Because American had pointed to its contracts with Sabre and Travelport as indicative of anticompetitive behavior and at the same time maintained its innocence, the Court viewed American's allegations as complaining about Sabre's and Travelport's unilateral activities. And because unilateral conduct does not violate section 1, the Court found these allegations deficient. See Metro Ford Truck Sales, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 145 F.3d 320, 325 (5th Cir. 1998).

But because "every contract" that unreasonably restrains trade or commerce is illegal under section 1, and given that a party can be an involuntary co-conspirator for purposes of section 1, the Court is persuaded that it must allow American the opportunity to show that its own contracts with Sabre and Travelport restrain [*8] trade or commerce in violation of section 1. See 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 ("Every contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is declared to be illegal."); Spectators' Commc'ns, 253 F.3d at 220 ("[E]ven reluctant participants have been held liable for conspiracy."); see also Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 150 n.6, 88 S. Ct. 869, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998 (1968) ("Petitioner's original complaint broadly asserted an illegal combination under § 1 of the Sherman Act. . . . [P]etitioner could have claimed a combination between respondent and himself, at least as of the day he unwillingly complied with respondent's advertised price."), overruled on other grounds by State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997). The Court, therefore, will reconsider its position on this point.

B. The Court's Dismissal of Counts Five and Six

American also challenges the Court's dismissal of counts five and six of American's amended complaint. Counts five and six included state-law tortious-interference claims against Sabre and Travelport. The Court dismissed those claims with prejudice based on its conclusion that the Airline Deregulation Act ("ADA") preempted them.

First, American contends that the Court's dismissal of counts four and five should have been without prejudice. "Because American was dropping the state claims," argues American, "the Court was entitled to consider the motions [*9] to dismiss the state claims as moot." (Pl.'s Mot. 2.) According to American, the Court's dismissal of its state-law claims with prejudice amounted to an "erroneous advisory ruling." (Id. at 16.)

The Court rejects American's characterization of its ruling as "advisory." The Court's ruling on the preemption issue adjudicated an actual dispute between adverse parties. Travelport and Sabre properly moved for a decision on the dispute and the parties fully briefed the matter. In response, the Court ruled on it.

Rule 41(a)(2) authorizes the Court to allow a party to voluntarily dismiss its claims without prejudice, even after the defendant has filed an answer, "on terms that the court considers proper." Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(a)(2). By the time American filed its motion for leave to file a second amended complaint, the Court had already worked to reach the merits of American's state-law claims and had expended significant judicial resources in the process. In light of this and other considerations, the Court did not view the terms of American's proposed dismissal as "proper." Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(a)(2). And having determined that American's state-law claims were preempted by the ADA, in the interest of finality and judicial economy, the Court dismissed American's [*10] state-law claims with prejudice. In the Court's view, there was nothing improper about that.

Second, American challenges the Court's legal position on the preemption issue. In the November 21 order, the Court concluded that the ADA preempted American's state-law claims because those claims (1) related to the defendants' rates and services and had a significant relationship to the economic aspects of the airline industry and (2) sought to enforce state-created standards, not self-assumed contractual obligations. The Court determined that American's claims fell within the purview of Lyn-Lea Travel Corporation v. American Airlines, Inc., 283 F.3d 282 (5th Cir. 2002), in which the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit determined that the state-law claims before it were preempted by the ADA because they involved the defendant's prices and services to customers.

American contends that the ADA's preemptive umbrella only covers claims against airlines--not global distribution systems ("GDSes") like Sabre and Travelport. American acknowledges that the Fifth Circuit has previously stated that "ADA preemption is not limited to claims brought directly against air carriers." Lyn-Lea, 283 F.3d at 287 n.8. (citations omitted). But American makes a distinction between GDSes owned by airlines, [*11] such as Sabre at the time of Lyn-Lea, and independent GDSes, such as Sabre today. The Court does not find this distinction meaningful. In the Court's view, the November 21 order was correct on the preemption issue, and its dismissal of American's claims with prejudice was proper.

III. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing, American's motion for reconsideration is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. The Court's dismissal with prejudice of counts five and six of American's first amended complaint and all subsidiary legal conclusions remain undisturbed. The Court's dismissal with prejudice of count four likewise remains undisturbed insofar as it concerns American's failure to plead a section 1 violation involving (a) Sabre and its travel-agent subscribers, (b) Travelport and its travel-agent subscribers (including Orbitz), and (c) Travelport or Sabre and any unnamed airlines. In this regard, the Court stands by its conclusion that it should not aggregate the effects of Travelport's and Sabre's discrete vertical conspiracies to determine whether either defendant's conduct, as alleged by American, had foreclosed a substantial share of any of the relevant markets.

At the same time, however, the Court concludes [*12] that it erred in holding that American could not rely on its own contracts with Travelport and Sabre to support a section 1 claim against those defendants. Thus, the November 21 order is VACATED to the extent that it holds otherwise. In light of this, American is GRANTED leave to file no later than March 19, 2012, a supplement to its second amended complaint (not a third amended complaint) that includes a section 1 claim based on American's own contracts with Sabre and Travelport.[3] Given that the defendants have already submitted three rounds of dispositive-motions briefing, the Court declines to grant American leave to file an entirely new complaint, which would moot the defendants' most recently filed motions to dismiss. Instead, upon the filing of American's supplement, the defendants shall be permitted to file supplemental or amended motions to dismiss within the time limitations imposed by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

[3] To be clear, in all other respects, the Court's dismissal of count four with prejudice remains undisturbed.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

(Docket No. 187)

Plaintiff/Counterdefendant Church & Dwight, Inc. ("C&D"), the maker of Trojan brand condoms, moves for summary judgment on Defendant/Counterclaimant Mayer Labs, Inc.'s ("Mayer's") counterclaims. Docket No. 187, 198 (redacted version). Mayer is the maker of Kimono brand condoms. The parties' primary dispute surrounds C&D's use of planogram [1] agreements with condom retailers, whereby C&D offers a percentage rebate off its wholesale price in exchange for a retailer's commitment to devote a certain percentage [3] of the condom shelf space to C&D products. Mayer alleges that C&D's planogram rebate ("POG") program operates to foreclose competition from vital retail display space and hence sales. Mayer also alleges that C&D has engaged in other anticompetitive conduct, including abusing its position as category captain for certain retailers to exclude its rivals from, or at least disadvantage them in, the condom retail market. Based on this and other alleged conduct, Mayer brought twelve counterclaims against C&D for purported violations §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, the Cartwright Act, the Lanham Act, and California unfair competition laws, as well as tort claims for tortious interference with contract and economic relations.

The parties have engaged in over three years of hotly contested litigation. This Court previously denied C&D's motion to dismiss Mayer's counterclaims finding that Mayer's [4] complaint raised viable claims of anticompetitive conduct potentially violative of the Sherman Act. See Docket No. 105; Church & Dwight Co., Inc. v. Mayer Laboratories, Inc., C-10-4429 EMC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35969, 2011 WL 1225912 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 1, 2011). The parties have conducted extensive discovery of over 15 million pages of documents and dozens of depositions. Reply at 1. Documents submitted in conjunction with the parties' summary judgment briefing total over four thousand pages.

Despite this voluminous record, Mayer has been unable to proffer any direct, admissible evidence of retailers switching or removing rival condom brands from their shelves as a result of any coercive effect of C&D's planogram program. Nor has Mayer submitted any admissible evidence that C&D misused its category captain positions to the detriment of its rivals. Surprisingly, Mayer failed to take the deposition of — or obtain other direct evidence from — any retailer's employees or other third parties who might have testified to the supposed coercive, anticompetitive effect of C&D's conduct. Indeed, the only direct (and unrebutted) evidence from third party retailers indicates just the opposite: that the planogram program has little, [5] if any, effect on retailers' shelf space allocations, and that C&D had no undue influence over retailers' decisions as category captain. Without any such direct evidence, the Court is left largely with Mayer's (and its experts') own theory based largely on a rough correlation between C&D's moderately increasing market share and Mayer's moderately decreasing market share.

Accordingly, having considered the parties' briefs, accompanying submissions, oral argument, and all evidence of record, the Court DENIES the motion for summary [*885] judgment as to tortious interference with contract, and GRANTS the motion as to all other claims.

[1] A planogram is "essentially a diagram showing where specific products are to be positioned in the space allotted by a retail store for a particular category of products." Second Amended Counterclaim ("SAC"), Docket No. 68, ¶ 6. The Court will refer to C&D's planogram rebate program as its POG program.

I. FACTUAL & PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The evidence submitted by the parties reflects as follows. Where there are factual disputes, they are so noted.

A. The Parties

Mayer Labs markets, distributes and sells latex male condoms. Second Amended Counterclaim ("SAC") ¶¶ 15, 19. Mayer's business involves the marketing and sale of, inter alia, its Kimono brand of ultra-thin latex condoms. Id. ¶ 15. Kimono condoms have a retail market share in the United States of less than one-half of 1%. Silberman Report Ex. 1. Between 2001 and 2007, Mayer's market share increased from .31% [6] to .46%. Id. Starting in 2008, market share decreased to a low of .27% in 2009, and remained at .29% in 2010. Id. Its 2010 market share corresponds to annual revenue of $819,876.

Counterdefendant C&D manufactures and distributes, inter alia, Trojan and other brand-name condoms. C&D branded condoms now account for over 75% of all retail condom sales in the United States. Silberman Report Ex. 1. C&D's market share has steadily increased from its 2001 share of 67.2% (or $143,630,000 in annual revenues) to its 2010 share of 75.43% (or $210,086,934 in annual revenues). Id. Its market share has been over 50% since 1985. Wright Report Attachment 4.

The next largest condom brand is Durex, marketed by Reckitt Benckiser Group, with approximately 14% of sales as of 2010. Id. Attachment 8. Durex has maintained a steady market share of 14-15% since at least 2004. Id. The third largest brand is Lifestyles, marketed by Ansell Healthcare, with just under 10% market share as of 2012. Id. Its market share has ranged from a high of over 12% in 2004 to a low of 8% in 2008. Id. Together, condoms sold by the three largest companies account for over 99% of the nationwide market. Wright Report Attachment 8. [7] Globally, Durex/Reckitt is the largest condom manufacturer with a 34% share of the global market, Lifestyles/Ansell is second with a 17% share, and Trojan/C&D is third with 11%. Wright Report at 35.

B. The U.S. Condom Industry

The vast majority of condoms in the United States are sold in one of three channels. First, the food, drug, and mass merchandiser channel, absent Wal-Mart ("FDMx"), [2] accounts for about 49% of the unit sales in the retail market. Wright Report Attachment 1. Second, Wal-Mart alone accounts for 33%. Id. Third, convenience stores ("c-stores") account for 14.9%. Id. The remaining sales occur in club stores (e.g., Costco) and dollar stores (e.g., Dollar General). Id.

These channels differ somewhat in their pricing and sales structure. For example, drug stores tend to carry the largest variety of condom brands, and their retail prices are on average twice as high as the mass merchandiser channel. Martineau [8] Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") Depo., Mayer Ex.1, at 38-40. C-stores tend to carry only one or two brands of condoms in three-unit packs due to limited shelf-space, and typically seek exclusive contract bids from manufacturers. Baseman Report at 18; Wright Report at 4. Club stores and dollar stores may also use [*886] exclusive contracts, and club stores tend to sell bulk packs only. Wright Report 55-56.

The parties dispute the extent to which there are barriers to entry in the retail condom market. Mayer claims that there are considerable barriers, including costs of FDA and state regulatory approval and compliance, production minimums, and retailer program participation fees. See, e.g., Baseman Report at 22-23; Wedel Decl. ¶¶ 15-19; Mayer Ex. 61. C&D argues that the FDA approval process is not overly rigorous and that the barriers to entry are not substantial. See Wright FTC Report at 14.

According to both parties, condoms are unique products that rely heavily on point of sale advertising because manufacturers face constraints in television and print advertising. In that respect, condoms are generally displayed on, and sold from, pegboards and shelves in one area of a store where consumers [9] can quickly glance at them at once. The number and visibility of products available from a particular brand are therefore important in condom sales because of the private nature of the transaction and the speed by which buying decisions are made. Brand loyalty also plays a strong role in the industry, as 52% of customers will leave a store to find their preferred brand, while 48% will choose an alternative brand if their preferred brand is not available. Baseman Report at 6 n.13.

[2] FMDx refers to all retailers in the FDM channel except Wal-Mart, while FDM refers to the entire channel including Wal-Mart. There is not as much data available on Wal-Mart's sales as for other retailers because Wal-Mart does not report to certain data-gathering companies.

At the point of sale, condom manufacturers compete for retail space and sales marketing in a variety of ways. For example, they may pay retailer slotting fees for each condom "facing" on the shelf. [3] Baseman Report at 7-8; Wright Report at 58, 89. Manufacturers may front the costs of a certain amount of new product so that they, rather than the retailer, carry the risk of meager sales. Wright Report at 176. Retailers may require certain promotional budgets at manufacturer expense, including temporary price reductions (i.e., short-term sales of a product in order to move inventory). Baseman Report at 7-8. Manufacturers can also offer promotional packages in order to secure premium shelf space at eye-level and/or [10] on the left-hand side of the planogram. [4] Wright Report at 88-89. Besides placement in the primary condom section, manufacturers may negotiate for promotional or ongoing placement in endcaps (the shelves located at the end of each aisle) and sidecaps, as well as other locations within the store. Wright Report at 85-88. Manufacturers might also negotiate volume discounts, whereby retailers benefit from lower wholesale prices the more they purchase of that manufacturer's brand. Wright Report at 188. As noted above, some retailers also negotiate exclusive deals with condom manufacturers whereby the retailer carries only one brand. Wright Report 89-90. This is especially common in the c-store channel.

C&D spends [11] approximately 17-19% of its gross sales on discounts and promotions. Overall, C&D, Mayer, Durex, and Lifestyles each offer promotional discounts of approximately 10-13% off of the wholesale price to retailers like Rite Aid. Wright Report Attachment 12.

Notwithstanding the importance of point-of-sale efforts, condom manufacturers [*887] also rely on other forms of marketing. Retailers look at a manufacturer's promotional budget as a factor in determining whether and how to stock their products. Martineau Depo. at 80-81. C&D, most notably, currently spends over $58 million per year on marketing, of which over $23 million is dedicated solely to advertising and media expenses. Wright Report Attachment 5. Mayer spends $127,000 and $23,000 respectively on these expenses. Id.

C. C&D's Conduct in the Industry

C&D engages in four types of conduct within the condom industry that are the source of the parties' disputes.

First, in addition to offering a number of the discounts and promotions described above, C&D offers planogram rebate agreements, described herein as its "POG program," to large chain retailers. C&D's POG program accounts for under $8 million of the $40 million it spent on promotional discounts [12] in 2010, or just 3.5% of gross sales. Wright Report Attachment 11A.

The POG program gives the retailer an opportunity to receive a percentage rebate on its purchases of C&D condoms. The retailer gets the rebate if it dedicates a specified minimum percentage of the available condom facings on its in-store display to C&D condom products. C&D "inherited" this POG program in 2001 by acquiring the Trojan brand from Carter-Wallace; the program has been in existence since at least 1997. Wright Report at 48. In 2001, the Program had three "tiers" — a 55% tier (awarding a 4.0% rebate for 55% or more of a retail chain's display space), a 65% tier (awarding a 7% rebate for 65% or more of the display space), and a 70% tier (awarding a 7.5% rebate for 70% or more of the display space). Baseman Report at 10. In 2007, C&D changed the terms of its program, introducing 75% and 80% tiers (providing 8.0% and 8.5% rebates, respectively) and eliminating the 55% tier. Id. In 2009, C&D eliminated the 65% tier. Id. However, in 2010, C&D reinstated the 65% tier and eliminated the 80% tier. Id. Its current POG program specifies levels of 65%, 70%, or 75%, corresponding to rebates of 7%, 7.5%, [3] A "facing" refers to one column of product seen on a retail shelf. For example, if a customer looks at a shelf and sees five boxes of a product sitting side by side, those are five "facings." Sometimes, a popular product may be "double faced" so that two columns are dedicated to the same product, thus ensuring twice the amount of in-store stock available for purchase.

and 8%, respectively. [13] Id. About 91% of C&D's FDMx sales derive from retailers that participate in the POG program. Wright Report at 49. Wal-Mart does not participate. [5]

[*888] Second, in channels in which retailers request exclusive contracts, C&D bids for exclusive agreements with c-stores and dollar stores whereby the stores carry only one brand. For example, C&D holds an exclusive contract with 7-Eleven. Wright Report at 51-53. Overall, C&D has a 50-60% share of c-store condom sales, lower than its 75% share in the market as a whole. C-stores account for 14.9% of unit sales 22.5% of revenues in the overall condom market. Wright Report Attachment 1. Although the parties do not provide details, Durex and Lifestyles seem to account for the bulk of the remaining 40-50% of the [15] c-store channel and regularly bid against C&D for c-store contracts. Id. at 92-93.

Third, C&D sometimes serves as a "category captain" for certain large retail chains. Category captains are appointed by some retailers to assist with shelf space allocation and provide advice as to how best to present the category (in this case, condoms). Wright Report at 105-06; Martineau Depo. at 74. Mayer alleges C&D has misused its category captaincy at certain retailers to its own advantage, at the expense of Mayer and other rivals

Fourth, the parties compete directly in the micro- or ultra-thin segment of the condom industry. Mayer began making its Kimono MicroThin condoms, sourced from a Japanese supplier named Sagami, in the 1990s. The parties dispute whether Mayer has or had an agreement with Sagami to be its exclusive North American condom distributor. See Mayer Depo. at 37, 127-29. Mayer claims it did and that C&D caused Sagami to breach that agreement. Mayer also asserts a trademark violation by C&D. Mayer trademarked the term "microthin" in 2009, but the parties dispute whether the mark is valid. C&D began using the term "micro-thin" on [16] its packaging in 2006 to describe its ultra-thin condoms.

D. Procedural Posture

On November 21, 2008, C&D filed a declaratory action in the District of New Jersey seeking a judicial determination that C&D's conduct was legal under applicable federal and state laws. In that complaint, C&D seeks a declaratory judgment as to the conduct that Mayer alleged in a draft complaint conveyed by Mayer's counsel to C&D in October 2008. See Original Compl. ¶¶ 81-86. On February 17, 2009, Mayer filed an Answer together with Counterclaims. Mayer amended its counterclaims on March 9, 2009. The SAC includes claims for violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 (Claims I & II); California's prohibition against trusts (Claim III), Cal Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700, et. seq.; California's prohibition against exclusive dealing (Claim IV), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§16727, et. seq.; California's prohibition against secret rebates (Claim V), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045, tortious interference with contractual relations (Claim VI), tortious interference with prospective economic advantage (Claim VII), and unfair competition under common law (Claims VIII & XII). The SAC also asserts claims for infringement [17] under California common law (Claim XI) as well as the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1114(a) (Claim X), and a claim for false designation of origin under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a) (Claim IX). Mayer's SAC requests (1) a declaratory judgment that C&D's Condom Planogram Agreements are unenforceable, (2) a comprehensive permanent injunction, (3) punitive and treble damages, (4) restitution and disgorgement of profits with interest, and (5) attorneys' fees and costs. SAC ¶¶ 102-106.

[5] It is undisputed that Wal-Mart has no POG contract with C&D. See Baseman Report at 12-13. However, Mayer's expert opines that Wal-Mart may be a de facto participant, based on certain internal C&D documents indicating that Wal-Mart dedicates a certain percentage of space to C&D. Id. However, C&D employees state unequivocally that Wal-Mart does not commit to the POG program, and C&D's charts do not list Wal-Mart as receiving a POG rebate. See Wright Report Attachment 11B. Instead, C&D lists Wal-Mart as receiving a 2.1% cash promotion and 21.1% promotional discount off of gross invoice. Id. This is similar to the lump-sum discounts allotted to other non-POG retailers, like Costco. Id. Mayer's expert also notes that C&D has sometimes negotiated discounts with Wal-Mart on the basis that Wal-Mart will add new C&D SKUs without subtracting others. Baseman Report at 14. Such negotiations are more akin to the promotional tools described above and employed by all manufacturers. In addition, none of Mayer's anecdotal evidence regarding its and other [14] small manufacturers' dealings with Wal-Mart indicates that a shelf-space agreement with C&D was responsible for their difficulty getting a Wal-Mart deal. See, e.g., [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] Decl. ¶¶ 106-07 ([TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] condom brand pitched Wal-Mart but was turned down because it was not a national brand); Mayer Depo. at 62-64 (Mayer pitched Wal-Mart but was turned down because it was not a national brand). The Court concludes Mayer has failed to raise a genuine issue of fact as to whether Wal-Mart has a POG contract — the record evidence establishes it does not.

C&D filed a motion to dismiss the SAC on June 18, 2012. Docket No. 71. The district court for the District of New Jersey transferred the case, including C&D's [*889] pending motion to dismiss Mayer's counterclaims, to this Court. See Docket No. 76 (Order transferring case). On April 1, 2011, the Court granted C&D's motion to dismiss with respect to Mayer's Fifth Counterclaim (§ 17045) without prejudice, and denied the motion to dismiss with respect to all other counterclaims. See Docket No. 105; Church & Dwight Co., Inc. v. Mayer Laboratories, Inc., C-10-4429 EMC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35969, 2011 WL 1225912 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 1, 2011).

C&D now seeks summary judgment on all of Mayer's counterclaims. Docket No. 187, 198 (redacted version). That motion [18] is pending before the Court.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Motion for Summary Judgment — Legal Standard

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) provides that summary judgment shall be rendered "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). An issue of fact is genuine only if there is sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to find for the nonmoving party. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248-49, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). "The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence ... will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the [nonmoving party]." Id. at 252. At the summary judgment stage, evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in the nonmovant's favor. See id. at 255.

Where the plaintiff has the ultimate burden of proof, he or she may prevail on a motion for summary judgment only if he or she affirmatively demonstrates that there is no genuine dispute as to [19] every essential element of its claim. See River City Mkts., Inc. v. Fleming Foods W., Inc., 960 F.2d 1458, 1462 (9th Cir. 1992). In contrast, where the plaintiff has the ultimate burden of proof, the defendant may prevail on a motion for summary judgment simply by pointing to the plaintiff's failure "to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to [the plaintiff's] case." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986).

In the instant case, Plaintiff C &D moves for summary judgment on Defendant Mayer's counterclaims. Accordingly, the Court's inquiry will focus on whether Mayer has made a "showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to [its] case." Id.

B. Section 1 — Sherman Act

1. Legal Standard

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits, in broad terms, contracts or agreements that unreasonably restrain trade or commerce. It provides: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. See Allied Orthopedic Appliances, Inc. v. Tyco Healthcare Group LP, 592 F.3d 991 (9th Cir. 2010). [20] To state a claim under § 1, a party must allege (1) an agreement, conspiracy, or combination between two or more entities, (2) an unreasonable restraint of trade, (3) anticompetitive effects within the relevant market, and (4) a resulting antitrust injury suffered by the claimant. See generally Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, 124 F.3d 430, 442 (3d Cir. 1997).

[*890] Vertical restraints on trade, including those alleged by Mayer, are subject to analysis under the "rule of reason." See Continental T.V. v. GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. 36, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977) (concerted action on non-price restrictions is subject to rule of reason analysis, requiring a showing of an adverse effect on competition in the relevant market); Bus. Electr. Corp. v. Sharp Electr. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723-36, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988) (holding that a vertical restraint of trade is not per se illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels). An example of a vertical restraint is an exclusive dealing agreement. "Under the antitrust rule of reason, an exclusive dealing arrangement violates Section 1 only if its effect is to foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected." See Allied Orthopedic Appliances, Inc. v. Tyco Healthcare Group LP, 592 F.3d 991 (9th Cir. 2010) [21] (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); Omega Envtl., Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1162 (9th Cir. 1997) (explaining that an exclusive dealing arrangement violates § 1 only if its effect is to "foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected").

The antitrust plaintiff "carr[ies] the initial burden of showing that the challenged conduct has an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market." R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Philip Morris, 199 F. Supp. 2d 362, 380 (M.D.N.C. 2002) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Such a burden is substantial, and requires the plaintiff to demonstrate that a firm has market power within the relevant market, and that its conduct has actual anticompetitive effects within that market. See Tanaka v. University of Southern California, 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001) ("The plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the restraint produces 'significant anticompetitive effects' within a 'relevant market.'") (quoting Hairston v. Pacific 10 Conference, 101 F.3d 1315, 1319 (9th Cir. 1996); XI Areeda & Hovencamp, Antitrust Law, ¶¶ 1820-21 at 178-80 (3d ed. 2011) (describing [22] requirements for a prima facie case of illegality under the Rule of Reason as including a showing of an exclusive agreement, market power in the relevant market, and foreclosure "sufficient to warrant an inference of injury to competition"); id. ¶ 1822e at 220 (characterizing the plaintiff's prima facie burden as "substantial"). If the plaintiff succeeds, the burden shifts to the defendant "to establish the pro-competitive redeeming virtues of the action." Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 380. If the defendant sustains that burden, the claimant "can still prevail by showing that the same pro-competitive effect could be achieved through an alternative means that is less restrictive of competition." Id. (quotation marks and citation omitted).

As set forth below, the Court concludes that Mayer has failed to carry its initial burden of demonstrating that C&D's conduct in imposing a vertical contract has foreclosed competition from a substantial share of any relevant market. Accordingly, the Court does not evaluate whether C&D has proffered sufficient pro-competitive rationales for its conduct, or whether those effects could be achieved through less restrictive means.

2. Adverse [23] Effect on Competition

C&D argues that Mayer has failed to establish a genuine issue of material fact as to whether C&D's planogram agreements violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. C&D claims that (1) it lacks market power in the relevant market because there is no evidence that it can charge supra-competitive prices or that its competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run; (2) the agreements do not substantially [*891] foreclose competition under controlling Ninth Circuit precedent and other persuasive authority; and (3) the agreements have pro-competitive effects that override any competitive harm.

a. Relevant Market

As a preliminary matter, the parties dispute the relevant market within which to analyze C&D's market power and purportedly anticompetitive conduct. See Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 (9th Cir. 1995) (defining the relevant market is the first step in assessing a party's market power); Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., Inc., 676 F.2d 1291, 1300 (9th Cir. 1982) ("A definition of a relevant market [i]s necessary in order to assess possible Sherman Act violations.").

The Ninth Circuit has held that the "definition [24] of the relevant market is a question of fact for the jury." Theme Promotions, Inc. v. News America Marketing FSI, 546 F.3d 991, 1002 (9th Cir. 2008) (citing Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1476 (9th Cir. 1997)). "However, that an issue is factual does not necessarily preclude summary judgment. If the moving party shows that there is an absence of evidence to support the plaintiff's case, the nonmoving party bears the burden of producing evidence sufficient to sustain a jury verdict on those issues for which it bears the burden at trial." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1435.

The relevant market encompasses "commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes," and "all sellers or producers who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business." Id. (citations omitted); see also United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 393, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956) ("Determination of the competitive market for commodities depends on how different from one another are the offered commodities in character or use, how far buyers will go to substitute one commodity for another."); Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434 ("A 'market' is any grouping of sales [25] whose sellers, if unified by a monopolist or a hypothetical cartel, would have market power in dealing with any group of buyers."). As the Ninth Circuit explained in more detail,

> Determining the relevant market can involve a complicated economic analysis, including concepts like cross-elasticity of demand, and "small but significant nontransitory increase in price" ("SSNIP") analysis. See United States v. Oracle Corp., 331 F. Supp. 2d 1098 (N.D. Cal.2004) (Walker, C.J.). Cross-elasticity of demand measures the percentage change in quantity that consumers will demand of one product in response to a percentage change in the price of another. Forsyth, 114 F.3d at 1483 (Wallace, J., concurring). When demand for the commodity of one producer shows no relation to the price for the commodity of another producer, it supports the claim that the two commodities are not in the same relevant market. Forsyth, 114 F.3d at 1477.
> Similarly, a SSNIP analysis asks whether a monopolist in the proposed market could profitably impose a small but significant and nontransitory price increase. Oracle, 331 F. Supp. 2d at 1112. If a significant number of customers would respond to a SSNIP by purchasing substitute [26] products, the SSNIP would not be profitable for the hypothetical monopolist. Id. If a monopolist could not profitably impose a SSNIP, the market definition should be expanded to include those substitute products that constrain the monopolist's pricing. Id.

Theme Promotions, 546 F.3d at 1002.

In the instant case, the parties agree that the relevant geographic market is the [*892] United States. They differ, however, as to the scope of the relevant product market. While Mayer's counterclaim had proposed a market of male condoms sold to retailers, [6] Mayer's expert now proposes a market definition of all male condoms sold to retailers in the FDM channels, excluding c-stores, club stores, and dollar stores. Mayer also proposes a submarket of drugstores specifically. By contrast, C&D proposes a market defined as all male condoms sold to retailers.

The Court agrees with C&D (and with Mayer's initial proposal) that the relevant market consists of all male condoms sold to [27] retailers. Mayer conducts the wrong inquiry in assessing the relevant market. First, it focuses on the end-use consumers of condoms and argues that, for example, the c-store channel is a separate market from the food, drug, and mass channel because the retail price per unit in c-stores is higher and because consumers cannot avoid a per-unit price increase in the FDM channel by moving to the c-store channel. [7] However, for purposes of this case, the relevant "consumers" are the retailers who buy and stock the manufacturers' products, and it is their views as to the substitutability and interchangeability of products that matter. See Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., Inc., 676 F.2d 1291, 1297-99 (9th Cir. 1982) (finding that the focus for market definition purposes was the level at which the parties compete); Allied, 592 F.3d at 998 (defining the market as the "U.S. pulse oximetry sensor market"); Concord Boat, 207 F.3d at 1044 ("[T]he relevant market is the market for inboard and stern drive marine engines."); Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 383 ("[T]he relevant product market for the purpose of this litigation is all cigarette sales through retail outlets and [] [28] the relevant geographic market is the United States."); El Aguila Food Products, Inc. v. Gruma Corp., 301 F. Supp. 2d 612, 615 (S.D. Tex. 2003) (debating between market definitions of the retail market for tortillas vs. retail market for broader category of starches based on whether tortilla producers competed with producers in the broader category); Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Bachman Co., 659 F. Supp. 1129, 1137 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (defining the market for salted snack foods as retail sales of "corn chips, tortilla chips, potato chips, cheese puffs, pretzels and popcorn"). Thus, the interchangeability and substitutability analysis must be conducted one level up, at the wholesaler-retailer level, rather than the retailer-consumer level.

[6] Indeed, Mayer's counterclaim lists C&D's performance within the c-store chain and its exclusive contract with 7-Eleven as part of its antitrust claims, though it now seeks to exclude c-stores from the market entirely. See SAC ¶ 11.

[7] This, of course, also begs the question whether consumers could avoid a price increase in the c-store channel by purchasing their products in the food, drug, or mass channels.

Second, Mayer attempts to segregate the market by separating certain types of consumers for manufacturers' products. However, the Ninth Circuit has held that "the relevant market must be a product [29] market. The consumers do not define the boundaries of the market; the products or producers do." Newcal Industries, Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1045 (9th Cir. 2008) (citing Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)); see also Omega, 127 F.3d at 1162 ("The relevant market for [the] purpose [of determining foreclosure effects] includes the full range of selling opportunities reasonably open to rivals, namely, all the product and geographic sales they may readily compete for, using easily convertible plants and marketing organizations.") (quoting 2A Phillip E. Areeda [*893] et al., Antitrust Law ¶ 570b1 at 278 (1995)). Accordingly, the relevant question is whether the products (in this case, condoms) are substitutable within the market, not whether certain customers (i.e., c-stores vs. drugstores) may make their purchasing decisions based on somewhat different criteria. See Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 326 ("Brown argues that the predominantly medium-priced shoes which it manufactures occupy a product market different from the predominantly low-priced shoes which Kinney sells. But agreement with that argument would be equivalent to holding that medium-priced shoes do [30] not compete with low-priced shoes. We think the District Court properly found the facts to be otherwise.").

In another case involving condom manufacturers, a district court defined the relevant market to include all retail sales of condoms. See Ansell Inc. v. Schmid Laboratories, Inc., 757 F. Supp. 467, 475 (D.N.J. 1991). Addressing the differences between the retail market and the entire wholesale sales market (including sales to government agencies and nonprofits), the court found that all "retailers' decision to carry a product depends upon the product's proven or reasonably anticipated product turnover," and that all retailers are focused on sales to the individual consumer. Id. at 473. The court also found the retail market to be the best market according to factors such as industry recognition of the market and price sensitivity. Id. at 473-74.

Mayer offers no evidence to demonstrate otherwise in this case. Indeed, at the wholesaler-retailer level, as in Ansell, it is undisputed that the parties herein compete with each other and with other manufacturers for retailers' business, and that retailers view their products as substitutable. See Martineau Depo. at 60-61, 117 (retailer [31] decision-making process for what products to stock is based on sales performance of the product and sales per shelf-space allocation). There is also unrebutted evidence that retailers pay attention to other retailers' prices, and attempt to demand price equity from manufacturers. See Martineau Depo. at 106 (when C&D raised prices in 2008, CVS confirmed that the increase would be applied to "all retailers" and then increased its own price accordingly). While Mayer points to significant retail price differences between channels, those price differences are much less severe at the wholesale price level, the level at which the parties compete. For example, there is only a 10% difference in the wholesale price for drugstores over mass merchandisers. Wright Rebuttal Report at 9; Baseman Report at 20. Mayer also provides no evidence that prices in one channel do not constrain prices in another. Mr. Baseman fails to cite to any support for his contention that "condom prices in convenience stores are not a significant constraint on the prices that prevail in FDM channels," and he fails to address the relevant prices for purposes of this analysis: the wholesale prices retailers pay for manufacturers' [32] products. Baseman Report at 18. Mr. Baseman's later corollary argument, that there is "obviously price-based substitution across the FDM channels," is similarly unsupported by citation or reference to evidence. Id. at 19. He provides no basis for the conclusion that Wal-Mart's low prices have taken market share only from other FDM retailers and not from c-stores, dollar stores, and/or club stores.

Moreover, price equity is not dispositive. Twin City Sportservice, 512 F.2d at 1274 ("[T]he scope of the relevant market is not governed by the presence of a price differential."). The Ninth Circuit explained in Rebel Oil that cross-elasticity of both supply and demand are relevant to defining a market. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434-35. The Court applied this principle in concluding [*894] that full-serve gasoline had to be included in the relevant market with self-serve gasoline even though there were enduring price differences between the two segments, and even though consumers did not necessarily switch readily from one service to the other. The Court nevertheless found that they were both part of the relevant market because of "[t]he ease by which marketers can convert their full-serve facilities [33] to increase their output of self-serve gasoline." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1436; see also Ansell, 757 F.

Supp. at 475-76 (finding product substitution to be a key component in the market definition analysis, where manufacturers could divert products from one segment of the market to another).

Similarly, in this case, manufacturers can respond to limited opportunities or price increases in one channel by directing their efforts to alternative channels and increasing output in those channels. For example, Durex has won exclusive contracts with retailers in the c-store and dollar store segments, and both Durex and Lifestyles have competed for premium shelf space at Wal-Mart in the mass segment. See, e.g., Wright Report at 55-56 & n.187, 191, 192 (Costco, Family Dollar and Dollar General replaced C&D with Durex as the exclusive supplier); Wright FTC Report at 72 (internal documents reveal that C&D believed it had been "out maneuvered" by Durex and Lifestyles for premium space in Wal-Mart). Thus, as in Rebel, it may be "immaterial that consumers do not regard the products as substitutes, that a price differential exists, or that the prices are not closely correlated." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1436. [34] Rather, what matters is that condom manufacturers compete across these channels and that they can respond to changes in one channel through conduct in another.

Mayer's claim that the different size of products offered across these channels — i.e., 3-count packs versus larger packs — warrants excluding c-stores from the relevant market is unpersuasive. In Reynolds, the court examined the different behavior of pack outlets — "comprised of convenience stores and gas stations where primarily cigarette packs are sold" — as opposed to carton outlets — "comprised of supermarkets and cigarette and tobacco stores where primarily cigarette cartons are sold," but included both within the relevant market. Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 383. Mayer fails to explain why differences between the FDM and c-store channels are relevant (i.e., the fact that c-stores sell 3-count packs at higher per-unit prices), but differences between other retailers within the FDM channel are not relevant (i.e., the fact that mass merchandisers sell a substantial number of 36-count packs and larger, at lower prices). See Baseman Report at 18. In addition, the fact that c-stores carry largely 3-packs of condoms, while other [35] channels carry 3, 12, 24, 36, and higher-quantity packs is irrelevant to the market analysis, as the manufacturers compete for sales within all channels. That each channel may cater to certain distinct tastes or preferences for individual consumers (e.g., variety of brands offered, low price, bulk packs, etc.) does not separate the channels into distinct markets vis à vis manufacturers - the pertinent arena for defining the relevant market herein.

Mayer's remaining arguments in favor of a narrower market are similarly unavailing. For example, Mayer's expert argues that c-stores are not part of the relevant market because C&D does not use its POG program and faces stiffer competition in that channel. See Baseman Report at 18-19. However, Mayer cannot simply eliminate all segments in which C&D does not (allegedly) exclude competitors so that it can generate a higher foreclosure rate in its antitrust analysis. Instead, the [*895] fact that the POG program does not encompass all condom retailers may indicate a lesser degree of foreclosure for antitrust purposes. See Omega, 127 F.3d at 1163 ("If competitors can reach the ultimate consumers of the product by employing existing or potential alternative [36] channels of distribution, it is unclear whether [restrictive arrangements] foreclose from competition any part of the relevant market.") (emphasis in original). Thus, the fact that certain channels are untouched by C&D's planogram program does not render them distinct for purposes of defining the relevant market. C&D competes with Durex and Lifestyles in c-stores. As noted above, Durex and Lifestyles do relatively well, garnering approximately 40% of the c-store market. Since a key inquiry of antitrust analysis is whether alternative channels of distribution exist through which businesses can compete, Mayer's attempt to exclude those channels in which competitors have the best success against C&D, simply on the basis of their success, is unwarranted.

Mayer has also failed to produce evidence of a relevant submarket consisting of drugstores only. The existence of a submarket may be determined "by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the products's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes and specialized vendors." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). [37] In this case, the unrebutted evidence in the record suggests that drug retailers view the rest of the category as competitors. See Martineau Depo. at 106. As discussed above, Mayer has failed to explain how any distinctions between the drug segment and food and mass segment are more salient than distinctions within or between the food and mass segments, or between other segments of the retail market. While Mayer notes certain differences between the drug channel and other channels (e.g., higher retail prices), as noted above, it fails to account for the fact that other channels within its proposed market definition also vary in price. Indeed, the Ansell court examined the Brown Shoe factors and concluded that all condom retail sales formed a relevant submarket; it did not note any salient distinctions within the retail market. Ansell, 757 F. Supp. at 475-76.

"In the context of antitrust law, if there are undisputed facts about the structure of the market that render [an] inference economically unreasonable, the expert opinion is insufficient to support a jury verdict." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1435-36 (citing Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468-69, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)). [38] In the instant case, Mayer's expert opinion on the pertinent issues regarding the relevant market is without a factual basis. In attempting to define the relevant market Mayer seeks to carve out channels in which C&D has been exposed to the most rigorous competition and in which Mayer has elected not to compete (i.e., c-stores, dollar stores, and club stores), [8] and to create a separate category for the channel in which C&D appears to have had the most success with its POG program (i.e., drugstores). This bootstrap is not a proper basis for defining the relevant market. The question is whether manufacturers compete with each other across these segments, not whether [*896] their inclusion or exclusion supports one party's case.

Accordingly, the Court finds that the relevant market is all male condoms sold to retailers in the United States. However, the Court notes that even accepting Mayer's market definitions, the below analysis would largely yield the same outcome, as much of the parties' available data focus specifically on the FDM channels.

b. Market Power

C&D argues that Mayer has [39] failed to provide evidence that C&D holds market power. "Market power is the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 464, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (citation and quotation marks omitted). Market power is required in order to demonstrate an adverse effect on competition, because without market power firms cannot rationally adopt restraints that have anticompetitive effects if they wish to survive. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Philip Morris, 199 F. Supp. 2d 362, 380 (M.D.N.C. 2002) ("'A threshold inquiry in any Rule of Reason case is whether the defendant had market power' in the relevant product and geographic markets.") (quoting Murrow Furniture Galleries, Inc. v. Thomasville Furniture Indus., Inc., 889 F.2d 524, 528 (4th Cir. 1989)); *Church & Dwight Co., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35969, 2011 WL 1225912 at 6 (noting in the context of the motion to dismiss that the counterclaim adequately alleged market power and that such a showing would be necessary for a § 1 claim). Market share alone does not establish market power, though it is relevant to the analysis. Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1439 (9th Cir. 1995) [40] ("A mere showing of substantial or even dominant market share alone cannot establish market power sufficient to carry out a predatory scheme.") (citing Ryko Mfg. Co. v. Eden Servs., 823 F.2d 1215, 1232 (8th Cir.1987)). [9] There are two ways of demonstrating market power: directly or circumstantially.

i. Direct Evidence

Under the direct method, Mayer must put "forth evidence of restricted output and supracompetitive prices." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434 (citing Federal Trade Comm'n v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 460-61, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986)). C&D claims that Mayer has failed to put forth any evidence to satisfy the direct method of showing market power, as Mayer has not created a genuine issue of fact as to either restrictive output or supracompetitive [41] prices. Mayer claims to have produced evidence of supracompetitive pricing through C&D's documents indicating that it will not engage in price competition "because it does not need to." Opp. at 40.

[8] See Mayer Depo. at 166 (stating that c-stores' "pricing structure is such that we don't choose to compete.").

[9] Although the Rebel Oil court conducts this analysis in the context of a § 2 attempted monopolization claim, it explicitly adopts the same analysis with respect to a § 1 claim. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1444 ("[F]or the same reasons that we stated in our analysis of Rebel's claim under Sherman Act § 2, Rebel's evidence is insufficient for a jury reasonably to conclude that ARCO possesses market power, or is dangerously close to obtaining it, under § 1.").

Mayer has not produced the direct evidence necessary to demonstrate market power as defined in Rebel Oil. First, Mayer has not offered any evidence of restricted output. Although it claims that C&D's planogram agreement successfully drives some competitors out of the market, it offers no evidence that C&D has used such a program to restrict its own, and hence the market's, output. See Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434 ("A predator [*897] has sufficient market power when, by restricting its own output, it can restrict marketwide output and, hence, increase marketwide prices.") (emphasis added). Indeed, the only evidence in the record regarding supply indicates that, while both parties have faced hiccups with their supply chain, C&D has never attempted to restrict its supply. See Mayer Depo., C&D Ex. 17, at 250 (discussing document in which Mr. Mayer had noted the company's supply problems and the fact that competitors would point out to retailers that Mayer's supply was unreliable); Daniels Depo., Mayer [42] Ex. 2, at 178-85 (C&D's head of Sexual Health Marketing Department noting problems at certain points with fulfilling supply orders when demand exceeded their expectations); C&D 11/9/10 Letter to Federal Trade Commission ("FTC"), C&D Ex. 28, at 6 (stating in response to FTC inquiry that C&D's Colonial Heights plant is running at capacity). Mayer does not directly respond to C&D's arguments regarding output in its brief, nor does it attempt to highlight any evidence in the record that would support this prong of the direct evidence test.

Second, Mayer has not provided evidence of supracompetitive prices. While Mayer alleges broadly that C&D is able to charge high prices, it fails to note that its own prices are even higher. See Opp. at 40 (citing Silberman Expert Rebuttal Report, Mayer Ex. 20, at 7 (noting that the weighted average price for Trojans is 23% higher than Ansell and 2% higher than Durex, but failing to note that Table R-1, on which Mr. Silberman relies, shows that Mayer's prices are even higher than Trojan)); Mayer Depo. at 178 ("We've made some decisions about how we wish to position our product. We price it high. End of story."). Mayer also noted at oral argument that C&D [43] enjoys a higher profit margin in the U.S. condom market (65-67%) than it does in the Canadian market (51-56%). See Baseman Report at 46. However, Mayer fails to provide any basis for comparison between the two markets or account for the variety of factors that may affecting pricing and profit margins, such that a jury might reasonably infer that this difference was an indication of supracompetitive pricing. More to the point, Mayer does not provide evidence as to its own or other rivals' comparative margins.

In addition, high prices are not equivalent to supracompetitive prices. The court in Reynolds similarly concluded that plaintiffs had failed to demonstrate supracompetitive pricing when they had merely alleged that defendants' prices were "artificially high" without providing evidence that they were supracompetitive. 199 F. Supp. 2d at 382. Similarly, a court in this district has rejected evidence of price inelasticity and price increases over the relevant time period as insufficient to withstand summary judgment as to direct evidence of market power. See In re Ebay Seller Antitrust Litigation, No. C 07-01882 JF (RS), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19480, 2010 WL 760433, at *5 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 4, 2010) ("Evidence that [44] eBay has raised prices over a period of years, and that several of its employees believe that the company may have raised them too high, proves nothing with respect to whether the prices are supracompetitive.").

Mayer also refers to C&D documents discussing C&D's ability to raise prices without suffering lower sales, but the evidence it cites indicates that this inelasticity applies to the condom market as a whole as well. While C&D does appear to enjoy especially high price inelasticity, its own research indicates that it is also at least somewhat vulnerable to price competition from its rivals. See Mayer Ex. 7 (2007 Nielsen report to C&D indicating that a regular price increase had little impact because condoms are one of the [*898] most price inelastic categories in the FDM channel, and Trojan in particular is even more inelastic; but noting that competitive influence accounts for 20-30% of Trojan's elasticity).

Moreover, even assuming C&D's "high prices" are supracompetitive, they must also be accompanied by output restrictions in order to constitute direct evidence of market power. See Forsyth v. Humfana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1476 (9th Cir. 1997) ("The plaintiffs submitted evidence that [45] Sunrise Hospital routinely charged higher prices than other hospitals while reaping high profits. With no accompanying showing of restricted output, however, the plaintiffs have failed to present direct evidence of market power."). There is no such evidence in the record.

Accordingly, Mayer has failed to raise a triable issue of fact as to C&D's market power under the direct evidence test.

ii. Circumstantial Evidence

Mayer has also failed to demonstrate market power via circumstantial evidence. A plaintiff can demonstrate market power circumstantially by: "(1) defin[ing] the relevant market, (2) show[ing] that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show[ing] that there are significant barriers to entry and show[ing] that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434. As noted above, a large market share alone does not in and of itself demonstrate such power. Id. at 1439. "A mere showing of substantial or even dominant market share alone cannot establish market power sufficient to carry out a predatory scheme. The plaintiff must show that new rivals are barred from entering the market and show that existing [46] competitors lack the capacity to expand their output to challenge the [defendant's] high price." Id. citing Ryko Mfg. Co. v. Eden Servs., 823 F.2d 1215, 1232 (8th Cir. 1987). "To justify a finding that a defendant has the power to control prices" sufficient to warrant judicial intervention, "entry barriers must be ... capable of constraining the normal operation of the market to the extent that the problem is unlikely to be self-correcting." Id. (citing United States v. Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d 659, 663 (9th Cir. 1990)).

The Court has already addressed the first prong above. The second prong is not in dispute, as regardless of how the parties define the relevant market, C&D holds a dominant share of approximately 75%.

With respect to the third prong, the parties dispute the level of barriers to entry in the condom market. The Ninth Circuit has defined entry barriers as "additional long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants," or "factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn monopoly returns." Western Parcel Exp. v. United Parcel Service of America, Inc., 190 F.3d 974, 975 (9th Cir. 1999) (quoting Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Corp., 6 F.3d 1422, 1427-28 (9th Cir. 1993)). [47] "The main sources of entry barriers are: (1) legal license requirements; (2) control of an essential or superior resource; (3) entrenched buyer preference; (4) capital market evaluations imposing higher capital costs on new entrants; and, in some situations, (5) economies of scale." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1439.

Mayer claims that barriers are high because of the FDA approval and inspection process, consumer brand loyalty, and C&D's POG program. See Baseman Report at 22-23; Wedel Decl. ¶¶ 15-19. The parties do not dispute that consumer brand loyalty is high in this industry. See Baseman Report at 6 n.13 (stating that Church & Dwight's Omnibus Study concluded 52% of consumers would go to another store to [*899] purchase condoms if their preferred brand were not available); Wright Rebuttal Report at 54 n. 154 (acknowledging same). This factor accordingly weighs in Mayer's favor. As for regulation, C&D's expert characterizes the FDA approval process, which takes anywhere from 6-24 months, as insubstantial, but it does not explain the basis for this opinion. See Wright Report at 18. On the other hand, Mayer does not provide any data to quantify the extent of costs associated with the FDA process. [48] In addition, as the Court explains in detail below, the Court disagrees with Mayer's claim that the POG program constitutes a substantial barrier to entry. See Western Parcel Exp., 190 F.3d at 975-76 (rejecting argument that purported "exclusive dealing contracts" constituted a barrier to entry where contracts were of short duration, easily terminable, and did not prevent consumers from also contracting with competitors).

However, it is undisputed that just three major players have long dominated the condom market, and that while numerous small players have entered the market, none have seriously challenged the big three in recent history. See, e.g., Wright Report, Attachment 8. Such a market structure indicates that the combination of factors described above may prevent the market from self-correcting in the face of anticompetitive conduct. See Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1440 ("Barriers may still be 'significant' if the market is unable to correct itself despite the entry of small rivals."). Accordingly, the Court concludes that Mayer has at least raised a question of fact as to the extent of barriers to entry.

Nonetheless, even assuming significant barriers to entry, Mayer has inexplicably [49] failed to produce either evidence or argument as to the last portion of the third prong, whether "existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434. Mayer's opposition brief omits this language from its quotation of Rebel, stating only that it must "show that there are significant barriers to entry. . . ." Opp. at 40 (citing Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434). However, Rebel is clear that both are required. "Market power cannot be inferred solely from the existence of entry barriers and a dominant market share. The ability to control output and prices-the essence of market power-depends largely on the ability of existing firms to quickly increase their own output in response to a contraction by the defendant." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1441.

Although Mayer's counsel stated at oral argument that C&D's competitors lacked capacity to increase output due to lack of access to shelf space, such an argument is unpersuasive for several reasons. First, Mayer does not claim that Durex, Lifestyles, and other rivals have no or mere de minimus shelf space. As indicated below, nearly 50% of the industry display space is not covered by the POG program, [50] including non-POG retailers in the FDM channel, Wal-Mart, c-stores, dollar stores, and club stores. Moreover, Mayer seems to assume that the only way to increase output would be to increase shelf space, but it fails to account for (much less produce evidence regarding) a competitor's ability to increase output by, e.g., increasing the sales velocity of each item they already have on the shelves. See Martineau Depo. at 117 (noting the importance for CVS of sales per shelf-space allocation); Daniels Depo., C&D Ex. 13, at 39-41 (noting that retailers can swap out products for new ones with better sales velocity).

Second, Mayer does not argue that rivals lack the capacity to expand output. Indeed, given that Durex and Lifestyles have larger global market shares than C&D, it is obvious there is no capacity limitation. Mayer conceded at the hearing it makes no such claim. Mayer cites no case [*900] which establishes that the Rebel Oil requirement that rivals "lack the capacity to increase output in the short run" can be based simply on marketing advantages of the dominant incumbent.

Notwithstanding [51] Mayer's failure to produce evidence to satisfy the Ninth Circuit's tests for market power, Mayer contends that the Court's analysis places excessive weight on Rebel Oil. Mayer notes that its primary claim is that C&D can exclude rivals, regardless of whether C&D has raised prices and thus the capacity to expand output to provide price competition is irrelevant. Mayer also argues that other cases have employed a more flexible and practical method of analyzing direct evidence of market power. Indeed, the Supreme Court has suggested that market power can include not only a firm's power to set prices, but also its ability to exclude competition. See, e.g., Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 464-65, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (considering evidence that certain parts were available exclusively through Kodak, that Kodak had restricted the availability of used machines, "that consumers have switched to Kodak service even though they preferred ISO service," that Kodak's services were higher priced and lower quality, and that certain ISO's had been driven out of business as a result; concluding that this evidence was "sufficient to entitle respondents to a trial on their claim of [52] market power"). Eastman cautions that "[l]egal presumptions that rest on formalistic distinctions rather than actual market realities are generally disfavored in antitrust law," and that "in determining the existence of market power ... this Court has examined closely the economic reality of the market at issue." Eastman, 504 U.S. at 466-67; see also Re/Max Intern., Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d 995, 1016 (6th Cir. 1999) (finding that there was "a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the plaintiffs' evidence shows direct evidence of a monopoly, that is, actual control over prices or actual exclusion of competitors") (emphasis added); R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Cigarettes Cheaper!, 462 F.3d 690, 695 (7th Cir. 2006) (the lower court erred in ruling on summary judgment that a 25% market share was "too small to create market power" for purposes of § 1, where a triable issue of possible market power was raised by evidence of brand differentiation, high market concentration, and the defendant's demonstrated ability to change prices of its brands substantially without affecting output).

Such a functional approach suggests that evidence of the ability to exclude some competitors [53] from the market, even in the absence of market-wide restricted output or supracompetitive prices, could suffice to demonstrate market power in certain instances, especially given C&D's undisputed dominant market share. [10] For example, although the district court in Reynolds cited Rebel Oil for its market power tests, it also entertained RJ Reynolds' argument — similar to the one advanced here — that Philip Morris's merchandising contracts excluded competition from the market and were thus evidence of market power. 199 F. Supp. 2d at 381. [11] Despite the [*901] thin evidence produced by Mayer, because this inquiry essentially dovetails with Mayer's arguments and burden on the merits (i.e., does Church & Dwight's conduct substantially foreclose competition), the Court assumes arguendo that Mayer has at least raised a triable issue fact as to C&D's market power and proceeds to the elements of its § 1 claim.

[10] Flexibility in defining market powers seems particularly warranted in light of the fact, discussed below, that monopoly power — which is narrower than market power — may in some instances be inferred from dominant market share. The Court must examine the economic realities of the particular [54] situation.

c. Substantial Foreclosure

C&D argues that Mayer fails to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether C&D's planogram agreements "foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected." Allied Orthopedic, 592 F.3d at 996 (quoting Omega, 127 F.3d at 1162). Rather than merely potential foreclosure, actual foreclosure is required for Mayer's Sherman Act claim: "[I]n a case under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must prove that the exclusive dealing arrangement actually foreclosed competition." Id. at 996 n.1 (citations omitted).

C&D claims that Allied Orthopedic renders its agreements permissible as a matter of law. See Mot. at 21. In addition, C&D argues that Mayer has failed to produce any quantitative [55] or qualitative evidence of substantial foreclosure.

The parties do not dispute that the vertical restraint imposed by the POG program should be analyzed by the Allied Orthopedic test: foreclosure of competition in a substantial share of the market. That test is rooted in cases involving exclusive dealing agreements. Although the POG program here is not as inherently coercive as an exclusive dealing agreement — which, instead of incentivizing the establishment of limits on retailers' display space or sales, completely precludes rivals from sales — the POG program may have a similar anticompetitive effect by effectively establishing a ceiling or quota on the amount of display space available to rivals, display space essential to sales. The percentage approach has the potential for functioning as a zero-sum game, unlike, e.g., discounts based on the number of facings or size of display space with no trade off against space occupied by rivals. The question then is whether Mayer has made a sufficient factual showing of substantial foreclosure of competition to satisfy Allied Orthopedic and similar cases.

i. No Actual Foreclosure

(a) Allied Orthopedic

In Allied Orthopedic, the Ninth Circuit [56] found that market share agreements by which Tyco gave "substantial discounts to customers that actually purchased a high percentage of their sensor requirements from Tyco" did not foreclose competition in the pulse oximetry market. 592 F.3d at 996. The court described Tyco's program as follows:

> Market-share discount agreements allowed customers, typically small hospitals or groups of small hospitals, to purchase Tyco's products at discounts off list prices if they committed to purchase some minimum percentage of their pulse oximetry product requirements from Tyco. The greater the percentage of the customer's requirements purchased from Tyco, the greater the discount Tyco gave. The agreements did not contractually obligate Tyco's customers to buy anything from Tyco. The only consequence of purchasing less than the agreed upon percentage of Tyco's products was loss of the negotiated discounts.

Id. at 995. In addition, Tyco offered "sole-source agreements, [in which] a [group [*902] purchasing organization] agreed that it would not enter into a purchasing contract with any other vendor of pulse oximetry products, and Tyco in return offered a deeper discount." Id.

[11] In Reynolds, the court rejected such a theory on the basis that other entities besides defendants had successfully competed for the same merchandising space, and some had also obtained space in excess of their market share. Id. Reynolds also considered the fact that many firms made concessions to retailers in order to secure their desired merchandising agreements as evidence that weighed against a finding of market power. Id. at 382.

The court found that neither agreement [57] foreclosed competition. In analyzing these incentives, the court found it "significant that the market-share discount and sole-source agreements in this case did not contractually obligate Tyco's customers to purchase anything from Tyco." Id. at 996. Instead, Tyco simply offered a discount if and when a customer decided to purchase the required percentage of sensors from Tyco. The court noted that generic sensors were available at a lower price, and that plaintiffs had failed to demonstrate that Tyco's program "forced customers to purchase its sensors rather than generics." Id. at 997.

In addition, the court found that because a customer could terminate its agreement with Tyco at any time if it determined that a competitor offered a better deal, "a competing manufacturer need[ed] only offer a better product or a [] better deal to acquire their [business]." Id. (quoting Omega, 127 F.3d at 1164). Finally, the court found that because alternative channels of distribution were open, even Tyco's sole-source agreements did not foreclose from competition "any part of the relevant market." Id. (emphasis in original) (quoting Omega, 127 F.3d at 1163); see also Western Parcel Exp., 190 F.3d at 975-76 [58] (finding volume discount contracts did not constitute exclusive dealing because they were short term, terminable for any reason, and "did not foreclose consumers from entering into contracts with other delivery service providers"). For example, a buyer "could simply forgo the negotiated discounts with Tyco and purchase less expensive generics instead." Id. In addition, although the buyers were precluded from accessing other discounts through non-Tyco group purchasing organizations, the Court concluded that there was no foreclosure because "[t]here is no evidence . . . that HealthTrust members were unable to access less expensive generic sensors through other means," including "potential," rather than just already-established, channels of distribution. Id.

Allied reaffirmed the Ninth Circuit's treatment of contracts which are not fully exclusive, but which merely reward a buyer for dedicating a certain volume or portion of its business to one seller while still permitting the buyer to purchase the remainder of its products from other sellers. In Omega, for example, the Ninth Circuit held that a manufacturer's contract prohibiting a distributor from becoming the authorized distributor [59] of any competing petroleum dispensers, but still permitting the distributor to sell competing dispensers, did not foreclose competition. Previewing the themes repeated in Allied, the court held that because there were alternative sources of distribution for the products and the contracts were of short duration and easily terminated for any reason, there was no probable effect of substantial foreclosure. Omega, 127 F.3d at 1162-64. Significantly, the Omega court conducted its foreclosure analysis under the Clayton Act, which requires only a probable effect of substantial foreclosure. Omega, 127 F.3d at 1162. In contrast, as noted above, the Sherman Act requires actual foreclosure. Allied, 592 F.3d at 996 n.1.

Similarly, in Western Parcel Express, the Ninth Circuit held that agreements were not actually "exclusive dealing contracts" where UPS merely used volume discount contracts that did "not preclude consumers from using other delivery services" in addition to UPS. Western Parcel Express, 190 F.3d at 976. The court also found that the contracts "had termination provisions that allowed a customer to terminate the contract for any reason with very little notice," which "substantially [60] negated" [*903] any foreclosure effect. Id. (quoting Omega, 127 F.3d at 1163).

The Ninth Circuit case law is not unique. The prevailing rule in districts and circuits across the country is that where exclusive or semi-exclusive contracts are short in duration, easily terminable, incentive-based, and leave open alternative channels to competitors, they are not exclusionary. See XI Areeda & Hovencamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1821, at 186 (3d ed. 2011) ("[M]any courts hold that 'market share' agreements or discounts, which require or reward a firm for using a particular firm's goods for a specified percentage but less than all of its needs, do not amount to exclusive dealing.") (citing Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039 (8th Cir. 2000)); see also id. (distinguishing further between market-share discounts, which still allow competitors to "steal" the customer by matching the discount and are therefore even less exclusive, from market-share contracts, which may be of long duration and are therefore more similar to exclusive dealing).

For example, in Southeast Missouri Hosp. v. C.R. Bard, Inc., 642 F.3d 608 (8th Cir. 2011), the Eighth Circuit considered C.R. Bard's program offering discounts [61] to hospitals that agreed to purchase a specified percentage of their catheters from Bard. Id. at 611. The program offered increasingly steep discounts as the percentage allocated to Bard grew. Like Tyco in Allied, Bard also provided sole-source discounts in the event a customer purchased all of its catheters from Bard. Id. Plaintiffs argued that Bard's discount programs were "de facto exclusionary because the discount prices are so attractive that hospitals cannot afford to forgo them." Id. at 612. However, the court noted that the only penalty for failing to meet the agreed upon percentage of purchases was that the customer "simply lost its negotiated discount." Id. The court found that the agreements were not exclusionary "[b]ecause [they] are voluntary agreements, terminable at will and on short notice, [and] any hospital could, at any time, decide to forego [sic] the offered discounts and purchase catheters from a different brand." Id. at 617 (citing Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039, 1060 (8th Cir. 2000) (granting summary judgment to defendants in similar case in which plaintiffs had argued that "golden handcuffs" forced customers to accept market-share discount [62] because the agreements were voluntary and customers were willing to purchase the products elsewhere if they received a better offer)).

In the instant case, C&D's POG program, as currently implemented and described in the record, is arguably permissible as a matter of law under the controlling law of this circuit. First, like Tyco's program in Allied, here C&D does not force retailers to purchase anything, much less a certain percentage, of condom products from C&D. Nor do the agreements force retailers to give any specified amount of shelf space to C&D over its rivals. Rather, retailers are free to give C&D as much or as little shelf space as they want. The only consequence is that retailers may not receive a rebate based on those decisions. Thus, the distinction drawn in Allied Orthopedic, 592 F.3d at 997 n.2 — between contracts that obligated customers to purchase a set percentage of their products from a supplier and those which merely conditioned a discount on such a purchase — applies here.

Second, retailers can terminate their agreements with C&D at any time, for any reason, on 30 days notice. [12] Omega [*904] found that a 60-day termination period "substantially negated" the risk of foreclosure [63] effects. 127 F.3d at 1163. Even absent early termination, the contracts last only one year. The Seventh Circuit has stated, "Exclusive-dealing contracts terminable in less than a year are presumptively lawful" as a matter of antitrust law. Roland Machinery Co. v. Dresser Industries, Inc., 749 F.2d 380, 395 (7th Cir. 1984) (reviewing contracts under the Clayton Act) (cited by Omega, 127 F.3d at 1163).

Finally, the POG leaves open existing and potential alternative channels of distribution. Each POG retailer is free to contract with C&D's competitors for shelf space, and a substantial portion of the retail market is untouched by the POG program at all, including Wal-Mart (which accounts for [64] 20% of all retail condom revenues and 33% of unit sales), 10% of other FDM retailers, c-stores, dollar stores, and club stores. Even within POG stores, there is substantial (typically 25 to 35%) shelf space not covered by the POG rebate program. In addition, rivals are free to compete for endcap and sidecap space, supplemental facings in other sections of the store (i.e., feminine hygiene and others), and other promotional display space in the store. Rivals can also negotiate for premium space within the condom section, as the POG program places no restrictions on where retailers must place C&D products. Mayer does not dispute that rivals may compete for these alternative paths to distribution. These alternative channels leave competitors a wide range of options to get their products to customers. See Southeast Missouri, 642 F.3d at 616 ("[I]n determining whether a market is foreclosed, the relevant inquiry is what products are reasonably available to a consumer, not what products the consumer ultimately chooses to buy."). [13]

(b) Distinguishing Allied Orthopedic

[12] C&D argues separately that the Ninth Circuit created a safe harbor for short duration contracts such as its planogram agreements. See Reply at 18 (citing Omega, 127 F.3d at 1163 ("[T]he short duration and easy terminability of these agreements negate substantially their potential to foreclose competition."). However, while Omega, like Allied, highlighted short duration as an element in favor of a challenged contract, it does not appear to create any safe harbor as a matter of law for such contracts.

[13] Indeed, given Allied's and Omega's focus on potential alternative channels of distribution, the Court's focus on existing alternatives within retail stores is [65] conservative. For example, CVS's buyer indicated that internet sales, on which the parties do not substantially focus, are a potential alternative channel that may be uniquely suited to small rivals attempting to gain a foothold in the market. See Martineau Depo. at 82 (indicating that she sometimes puts a new item on CVS.com to monitor its sales before deciding whether to carry it in the store); id. at 91-92 (indicating that a new condom product had received placement on CVS.com to evaluate its potential in-store sales).

Mayer claims that, notwithstanding the purported short duration, easy terminability, and voluntary nature of the POG program in theory, it is nonetheless coercive in practice. Mayer claims that there are distinct facts about C&D's POG's program that distinguish it from Allied. Thus, assuming Allied does not render the POG program per se permissible (because of its basic nature as a price-based incentive to which retailers may respond voluntarily), the Court will address Mayer's claims that the facts in this case nonetheless establish a Section I violation.

First, Mayer argues that Allied is distinguishable because in that case, Tyco [66] had only a 35% market share as compared to its primary rival, which had a 40+% share. In contrast, C&D occupies over 75% of the condom market, and is five times larger than its biggest rival, Durex, at under 15%. See Wright Report at Attachment 8. While a dominant market share does not necessarily render a leading player's efforts to maintain that share anticompetitive, see Harmar, 218 S.W.3d at 676-77 [*905] (contracts requiring shelf space commensurate with 75-80% market share not anticompetitive); Louisa Coke, 94 F. Supp. 2d at 815 (contracts by distributor with 70% market share to guarantee shelf space not anticompetitive); Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 388 (shelf space commensurate with 55% market share not anticompetitive), the coercive effect of a discounted-based incentive can be amplified where the entity providing the inducement sells at volumes many times greater than its competing rivals. For example, a 7% discount from a company that sells $10 million in merchandise results in a savings of $700,000 to the retailer. If the rival manufacturer only has a sales volume of $2 million, it would have to discount its merchandise by 35% to match the $700,000 in savings offered by the dominant [67] firm.

This is related to Mayer's second argument. Mayer's expert posits that C&D's program creates a "tax" on competitors by increasing the cost of switching from C&D to rival products if such a switch would result in a reduction or cancellation of the C&D rebate. Baseman Report, Mayer Ex. 9, at 25. Mayer claims that in this case, the tax is exacerbated by the fact that the POG program offers a discontinuous stepped rebate hierarchy. In other words, C&D's POG program has set participation rates (e.g., 65%, 70%, and 75% of shelf space) with discrete rebate levels that drop off when retailers miss a certain target rate, rather than a continuously increasing discount or a discount applied only to increased marginal purchases. [14] Mayer contends that such a discontinuous rebate structure creates "cliffs" whereby retailers face harsh penalties (in the form of lost rebates applicable to all sales starting with the first dollar, thus increasing costs to the retailer) for moving downward on the rebate rate schedule. There is an especially jarring penalty for dropping below the 65% level (at which point they would lose the 7% rebate on all of their purchases of C&D products). Mayer argues that [68] the POG is particularly coercive and results in golden handcuffs, whereby retailers cannot afford to forgo the rebate and thus are forced to devote unjustified display space to C&D.

Mayer makes a third related argument in claiming that unlike in Allied, C&D's product has strong brand loyalty and is considered a "must carry" brand in the FDM market. Opp. at 34; Baseman Report at 6. This arguably gives C&D more leverage to "force" retailers to give it a certain percentage of shelf space because they have to purchase at least some of the product anyway. Brand loyalty thus theoretically increases the coercive effect of the golden handcuffs.

Before considering the evidence in the record to support Mayer's theories, the Court first notes that with respect to Mayer's tax effect theory, it is noteworthy that such a theory has yet to be recognized by this Circuit. Interestingly, the district court in *Allied Orthopedic Appliances, Inc. v. Tyco Health Care Group L.P., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112002, 2008 WL 7346921, at 5 (C.D. Cal. July 9, 2008), [69] considered the expert's conclusions that contracts imposed costs on competitors and found that "regardless of whether Tyco's discounts represent a penalty price or involve kickbacks to hospitals, they do not 'force' hospitals to do anything."). The Ninth Circuit did not question that finding. Allied, 592 F.3d at 996-98 (considering plaintiff's arguments and expert projections and concluding that characteristics of the contracts — such as the lack of purchase [*906] requirement and easy terminability — precluded a finding that the contracts foreclosed competition). There is no indication that Allied's discount program worked any differently than C&D's POG program here. There is no indication that the gradation of discounts in [14] For example, one could offer a 7% rebate on purchases above a certain level, rather than a 7% rebate on all purchases back to the first dollar once a retailer reaches a certain level.

Allied did not also have a theoretical "tax effect." Yet, the Allied court did not find the discount structure was material to its analysis.

In any event, even assuming Mayer's arguments in distinguishing Allied have potential legal merit in theory, Mayer has failed to present any evidence that the POG program had any more coercive effect than in Allied and similar cases (e.g., Western Parcel Express, Omega, Southeast Missouri Hosp., Concord Boat).

Irrespective of Mayer's [70] theories, Mayer must present some competent evidence of an actual coercive effect that substantially foreclosed competition in order to create a genuine dispute of material fact. See Coca-Cola Co. v. Harmar Bottling Co., 218 S.W.3d 671, 689 (Tex. 2006) (applying federal antitrust law and stating that although challenged contracts "could have had anticompetitive and monopolistic effects," it was improper to "conclude[] that the jury was therefore entitled to infer that the CMAs did have such effects"; instead, "[t]here must be evidence of 'demonstrable economic effect,' not just an inference of possible effect") (emphasis in original) (quoting Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 724, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988)).

In this regard, the Court notes that a number of cases dealing specifically with shelf space limitations have found they do not foreclose competition based on the facts particular to the challenged practice. For example, in Harmar Bottling Co., the Texas Supreme Court relied on federal antitrust law and upheld contracts requiring favorable promotion, placement, and pricing, including shelf space commensurate with 75-80% market share, limits on rivals' shelf space and some bans [71] on certain products. 218 S.W.3d at 676-77. The court also noted that such contracts were common in the industry. In Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Bachman Co., 659 F. Supp. 1129, 1135 (S.D.N.Y. 1986), the court considered a retail display case and concluded that "[b]ecause of the limited duration of the TOP program, the fact that defendant has not alleged that Frito-Lay obtained a greater share of shelf space than its sales warranted, and the fact that dealers were free to drop out of the program or not enroll in it at all, leaving Bachman free to introduce its own competitive scheme, it is very difficult to see how the agreements between Frito-Lay and their retailers could constitute contracts in restraint of trade within the meaning of Section 1 of the Sherman Act." Similarly, in Reynolds, a North Carolina district court held that cigarette manufacturers' contracts with retailers for advertising and product space are not anticompetitive where they "do not preclude the display of competing products, do not control the prices at which those products are offered, and do not provide Defendant with more than its market share of product space." 199 F. Supp. 2d at 387. Finally, one court specifically [72] noted the zero-sum game inherent in some shelf-space agreements, yet found that such an outcome did not foreclose competition when "all of the evidence indicates that the store owners within the Louisa Coke market allot shelf, storage and display space at their sole discretion based on such factors as the market's demand for a product and the supplier's ability to keep such products in stock." Louisa Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Pepsi-Cola Metropolitan Bottling Co., Inc., 94 F. Supp. 2d 804, 814 (E.D. Ky. 1999).

In the case at bar, Mayer has not presented admissible evidence of a coercive effect distinguishing this case from Allied. [*907] First, if the POG coerced retailers into increasing their C&D shelf space allocations (at the expense of Mayer or other rivals) solely because of C&D's rebate program, one would expect to see retailers clustered at the bottom tier of the rebate structure. Such a cluster could indicate — or at least create a reasonable inference — that retailers were seeking to avoid the penalty of dropping out of the rebate entirely, and that there were no other business justifications for giving C&D that level of shelf space. However, the record does not indicate such an effect. [73] Instead, the majority of retailers choose tiers higher than the minimum required to obtain the rebate, suggesting that other market factors govern their decisions. For example, from 2004-2007, despite the fact that a 55% shelf space tier was available, retailers' participation at that level never exceeded 3.3%, and declined to under 1% by 2007. Wright Report Attachment 14. Instead, the majority of retailers participated at the 65% shelf space level. In 2007 and 2008 the data is even more pronounced, as a substantial number of retailers moved to the 70% level despite the availability of lower tiers. The only exception to this trend is 2009, during which over 70% of C&D's revenues came from retailers at the lowest available tier. [15] However, this phenomenon lasted only one year. On the whole, then, these data belie Mayer's theory that the POG creates any cusp or "cliff" effect, forcing retailers to make decisions they otherwise would not make solely to obtain the rebate. In short, Mayer presented no factual evidence of a coercive "tax effect." See Concord Boat, 207 F.3d at 1056 (rejecting tax theory in the context of a market-share discount because some buyers purchased more than necessary [74] to qualify for the discount).

Moreover, as shown by undisputed data, a significant number of large retailers do not participate in the program, and some have changed levels of participation, indicating that retailers are not locked into POG participation. See Wright Report Attachment 15 (providing chart of top 25 retailer planogram participation by level, showing that as of 2011, 6 retailers do not participate at all, 1 participates at 55%, [16] 1 at 65%, 10 at 70%, and 7 at 75%; showing that 2 retailers had decreased levels from 2010-2011 and others had shifted downward in previous years).

The record also contains qualitative evidence that retailers can and do reduce or eliminate their participation in the planogram agreements based on market forces. For example, CVS buyer Michele Martineau testified before the FTC that she does not include the C&D rebate in sales projections, that her planogram decisions do not depend on the rebate, and that CVS is not currently getting the rebate because it is out of compliance [75] due to independent sales decisions. Martineau FTC Depo., Mayer Ex. 1, at 59-62, 67. Similarly, 2009 emails between Rite-Aid and Ansell (Lifestyles) show that Ansell proposed a rebate in exchange for a certain number of SKUs [17] and vertical planogram positioning. In response to Rite-Aid's statement that Ansell would need to be competitive on their incentive offer to match C&D's 7.5% rebate, Ansell in fact revised its offer to do so. C&D Exs. 18, 19; see also Wright Rebuttal Report, C&D Ex. 121, App. B, at 5 n.12 ("Rite Aid indicated that it first independently determines what [*908] share of its planogram it wants to devote to Church & Dwight products and then claims whatever rebate it is entitled to as a result of that decision.") (citing Rite Aid email to the FTC, September 24, 2009, RAHC 000775 at 776)). Mayer provides no evidence to rebut these retailers' assertions.

Furthermore, the undisputed evidence in the record indicates that C&D's average share of sales at non-POG retailers is roughly on par with its share of sales at POG retailers. See Silberman Report Ex. 3. In fact, comparing those retailers that never had POG programs with those that always [76] had them, C&D's share of unit sales at "never had" retailers has always equaled or exceeded its share of sales at "always had" retailers for every quarter between 2004 and 2010. Wright Rebuttal Report Figure A3. In only two quarters of 2010 were the shares actually equal; in every other quarter measured, sales at "never had" retailers exceeded those at "always had" retailers. Indeed, for nearly three of the years measured, C&D's share of sales at "never had" retailers was at least five (and sometimes ten+) percentage points higher than at "always had" retailers.

Similarly, C&D's data indicate that system-wide, C&D's shelf share rarely exceeded its market share. See Wright Report at Attachment 16A (comparing average shelf share per year to unit sales share per year from 2004-2010, and showing that sales share exceeded shelf share for all years except 2005 and 2009, when it trailed by .8% and .5% respectively); Table 16B (breaking same data out by retailer and showing few deviations below parity). In addition, of the top 25 FDM merchants (excluding Wal-Mart) selling C&D products between 2004 and 2011, on only five instances has C&D's shelf share exceeded its market share. See Wright Report [77] Attachments 15 and 17B. [18] Mayer's claim that "C&D consistently used the planogram program to obtain shelf space that exceeded its market share" is thus unsupported by the record. Opp. at 32. The isolated instances in which C&D's market share fell slightly below its sales share are not indicative of an antitrust violation. See LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 162 (3d Cir. 2003) ("The relevant inquiry is the anticompetitive effect of [the defendant's] exclusionary practices considered together.... [C]ourts must look to the monopolist's conduct taken as a whole rather than considering each aspect in isolation."); see generally Harmar Bottling Co., 218 S.W.3d at 689-90 ("There is no evidence that such isolated instances impacted consumers throughout any exclusive territory, much less throughout the Ark-La-Tex region. While consumers may have paid more on occasion in a particular store, there is no evidence that Coke's CMAs caused consumers to pay higher prices generally."). Courts have considered parity between shelf space and market share to be an important indicator that a firm is not using its contracts to foreclose competition.

[16] Meijer has a special contract to keep its 55% planogram participation, which is apparently not offered to other retailers.

[18] Moreover, C&D points out that in the case of Target, the reason for the aberration was its acceptance of a two brand strategy promoted by Durex, an event unconnected to the POG program.

Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 388 (considering it significant [78] in foreclosure analysis that "[u]nder every level of Retail Leaders, PM obtains cigarette product space in an amount equal to or less than its market share"); Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Bachman Co., 659 F. Supp. 1129, 1134 (S.D.N.Y.1986) (upholding agreement that guaranteed supplier shelf space equal to its market share); Harmar Bottling Co., 218 S.W.3d at 677(reversing judgment and holding that there was no evidence of anticompetitive harm based in part on the [*909] fact that contracted shelf space did not exceed market share).

Mayer also fails to account for the fact that Durex and Lifestyles have avoided the purported anticompetitive effect of C&D's POG program. See Silberman Report, Mayer Ex. 24, at 15 (admitting that Durex's sales have been "essentially unaffected" by the planogram rebate program). Durex has maintained its roughly 15% market share throughout the period in question, and Lifestyles has both dropped and increased during the same period. Although Mayer's counsel averred at oral argument that Lifestyles [79] may have been affected by the POG program, Mayer provides no evidence or argument in the record from which a jury could draw such a conclusion. See id. (stating that Lifestyles's market share fell between 2004-2006 and 2008-2010, but offering no facts or analysis as to why). By contrast, C&D offers unrebutted evidence to explain Lifestyles's changes in market share, including an FDA quarantine in 2005 and a successful Durex strategy to persuade retailers to adopt a two-brand strategy with Durex and Trojan only. See Wright FTC Report, Mayer Ex. 8, at 87; see also Wright Report at 115-21 (describing other factors, including a decline in Lifestyles sales among small non-POG retailers, minimal advertising as compared to C&D and Durex, and changes in packaging that may have confused consumers).

Without explaining how C&D's two primary competitors have escaped relatively unscathed, Mayer has not provided a plausible basis for attributing its own misfortune to C&D rather than other forces. In fact, C&D has presented evidence of numerous reasons why Mayer has lost business. For example, C&D presents evidence that (1) Mayer prices its condoms at a high level (which Mr. Mayer admits) [19]; (2) [80] it targets a narrow sub-set of the condom-buying population, women age 25-35; (3) it has limited product offerings, with 10 SKUs in 2010 as compared to Ansell, Durex, and C&D at 43, 51, and 65 SKUs respectively; (4) it is severely financially constrained with high production costs due to its dependency on its supplier, Sagami, for lines of credit and its failed investments in products such as eZ-on and the Female Condom; (5) it faced inventory constraints in 2006 and 2007 due in part to an FDA hold on shipments; (6) it did not engage in consistent marketing efforts; (7) it has faced continual competition in the ultra-thin segment of the condom market, where Durex and Ansell hold 33% and 20% shares, respectively; (8) it faced competition from the new ONE brand condom, which Mayer blamed internally for its difficulty gaining new distribution in 2007; (9) Mayer suspected that Ansell and Durex were buying shelf space to keep Mayer out in 2007; and (10) it chooses not to compete in the c-store channel. See Wright Report at 126-63, 202-03.

In addition, C&D offers evidence that Mayer has had opportunities to sell its products through large chain retailers, but has lost those opportunities due to poor sales and other factors. See, e.g., id. at 168-69 (Rite Aid discontinued some Mayer products in 2006 and all products in 2007 due to what Mayer described at the time as a lost battle with bigger companies who introduced new products); id. at 174-75 (Brooks/Eckerd failed to stock Mayer [*910] products in half the stores in which it had agreed to stock them in 2005, and sales were lower than expected: Mayer was discontinued in 2007); id. at 177-78 (CVS Kimono sales were lower than the CVS average per condom product, and were outpaced by smaller rivals; CVS discontinued Mayer in 2007 but reintroduced five SKUs in 2009 in California stores); id. at 186-87 (Walgreens introduced ONE condoms in 2008 which outpaced Kimono sales; Walgreens complained in 2010 that Kimono's sales [82] were low and declined to increase their distribution); id. at 189-92 (Duane Reade discontinued one of four Kimono SKUs in 2008 due to poor sales, and discontinued a second slow-selling SKU in 2009); id. at 195-96 (Target ran a test of Kimono SKUs in selected stores in 2010, but discontinued the test after what an internal Mayer document described as "no gains for Kimono after a test").

[19] Indeed, C&D supports its claim that Mayer's high prices are at least partially responsible for its limited success by offering evidence that its 2004 [81] "buy-one-get-one-free promotion at Longs quadrupled Mayer's sales. Wright Report at 132. In contrast, the record is replete with internal Mayer documents bemoaning the fact that buyers complain about high prices. See, e.g., Mayer Depo. at 174, C&D Exs. 44-51, 54-56.

Mayer's expert fails to address most of these and other proffered reasons for Mayer's losses. See, e.g., Silberman Damages Report at 15-16 (noting that the small manufacturer segment of condom manufacturers could have declined due to the consolidation of retailers and their central purchasing strategies, as well as some chains' adoption of a two-brand strategy with Durex and Trojan, but nonetheless attributing the decline to C&D's planogram program). Mr. Silberman's Rebuttal Report addresses and rebuts some of C&D's evidence from the early 2000s, pointing out that any weaknesses in Mayer's financial position and business model did not prevent Mayer from increasing its sales from 2001-2006. Silberman Rebuttal Report at 4. The Court credits that rebuttal for purposes of summary judgment. However, Mr. Silberman [83] still fails to address the more recent alternative explanations cited above. Most critically, Mayer fails to explain any alternative reasons for why it suffered from slow sales in the national retailers in which it had already secured at least some distribution, or how any slow sales and resulting discontinuance were due to C&D rather than Mayer's performance or some other factor. Instead, Mr. Silberman merely states that Mayer's lost distribution is also consistent with C&D's increased POG efforts, but does nothing to draw any causal connection. See id. at 11 (noting without explaining that Rite Aid reduced number of stores carrying Kimono in 2006, and stating that Mayer's internal document indicating it had lost the battle with larger manufacturers that had introduced new products was "entirely consistent with C&D's shelf-space contracts having an anticompetitive effect"); id. at 16 (repeating argument that removal of certain SKUs from Longs coincides with increases in POG program, but failing to address any alternative reasons for the coincidence). Mr. Silberman also presents other unrelated evidence that has no connection to the POG program. See id. at 12 (explaining Mayer's low [84] sales at CVS in 2006 due to C&D achieving eye-level placement in the planogram, a perk unconnected to the POG); id. at 17 (stating that Walgreens accounted for a large percentage of Kimono's sales in 2008, which says nothing about how Kimono performed relative to other brands at Walgreens). Failure to account for alternative causes of a business injury renders Mayer's assertion that it lost business due to C&D's program unsubstantiated. See Frito-Lay, 659 F. Supp. at 1135 ("[E]ven though defendant has made specific allegations regarding its own market losses, it has asserted no facts to show that its losses were a result of defendant's allegedly anticompetitive activity, rather than a result of financial difficulties within the company or some other problem.").

Mayer also fails to present any direct evidence of anticompetitive harm suffered as a result of C&D's POG [*911] program. Mayer offers only a couple of anecdotes from Mr. Mayer and Mr. Wedel (of Global Protection Corporation, the makers of ONE condoms) relaying hearsay statements of suppliers who stated they could no longer make room for Mayer/GPC products because they needed the space for C&D. See Silberman Report, Mayer Ex. 24, at [85] 16-17 (Duane Reade employee stated that they could not lose the C&D rebate); Wedel Decl., Mayer Ex. 10, ¶ 91 ([TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] buyer told Global Protection that it was discontinuing its SKUs because C&D agreement required them to increase self space by 10% for C&D). But these statements constitute hearsay and are not admissible. If anything, Mayer's reliance on such hearsay underscores the fact that Mayer did not depose any third party retailers and presented no admissible testimony or documents showing C&D's POG program had the anticompetitive effect of coercing displacement of competitors' display space. In any event, such evidence is insufficient to support a jury verdict that C&D harmed competition (rather than simply one or two discreet competitors). See Louisa Coca-Cola, 94 F. Supp. 2d at 814 ("Plaintiff offers nothing other than its own projected lost profits to prove that Pepsi's actions have foreclosed a substantial share of the soft drink market. A single competitor's lost profits does not demonstrate a market wide competitive detriment.") (citations omitted); Frito-Lay, 659 F. Supp. at 1135 (failure [86] to trace losses to accused conduct dooms claim of harm to competition).

Mayer further fails to address the fact that POG rebates comprise only a small part of C&D's promotional budget. C&D spends only approximately 3.4% of gross sales on the planogram rebate, as compared to other promotional programs that make up 15% of gross sales. Wright FTC Report at 2, 30, Table 7A, 7B. These additional promotions are commonplace in the industry and include things like slotting fees, trade promotions, and cash discounts. See, e.g., C&D Ex. 61 (2004 email from Mayer to Sagami noting increasing costs imposed by retailers through means such as slotting fees); C&D Ex. 115 (Durex proposal to Target including funds for promotional discount). Given that C&D's other promotional dollars dwarf its spending on the POG program, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is difficult to see how the program exercises the coercive power on the market that Mayer alleges. In addition, C&D points out that its promotional spending, including the POG agreements, is proportionate to its main competitors, including Mayer. Wright Report Attachment 12 (showing C&D, Mayer, Durex, Ansell, and Global Protection all spending [87] approximately 10% of gross condom purchases on promotional funding).

In sum, there is no evidentiary support in the record that C&D's POG rebates created a coercive effect on retailers which foreclosed competitors from a substantial share of the market. The lack of such evidence of coercive effect stands in contrast to cases where such an effect was found. For instance, Allied, in finding no substantial foreclosure, distinguished a previous case involving Tyco's contracts in which the court had found anticompetitive conduct because a patent still in effect precluded customers from purchasing generic products as a substitute for Tyco sensors. See Allied, 592 F.3d at 997 n.2 ("The R-Cal patent was still in effect during the time period at issue in Masimo, so owners of Tyco's R-Cal monitors had no choice but to purchase Tyco's sensors for use with those monitors.") (citing Masimo Corp. v. Tyco Health Care Group, 350 Fed. Appx. 95, 2009 WL 3451725 (9th Cir. 2009)). The level of coercion at issue in Masimo was much higher than in this case, as customers in Masimo had no product alternatives. Cf. Wright Rebuttal Report, C&D Ex. 121, [*912] at 54 n.154 ("Church & Dwight's Omnibus Study found [88] that 52% of consumers would go to another store to purchase condoms if their preferred brand were not available. The remaining 48% would stay in the store and choose from other brands.").

Qualitatively, Mayer has failed to raise a genuine issue of fact as to whether C&D's POG program has had a coercive effect upon retailers, forcing them against their own business judgment to take display space away from rivals and give it to C&D.

ii. Overestimating the Foreclosure Rate

Even if the Court were to assume there was evidence of a coercive effect which foreclosed some competition, thus distinguishing this case from Allied, there is no evidence that competition was foreclosed from a substantial portion of the market.

In this regard, Mayer's expert claims that the foreclosure rate is upwards of 75-95%, depending on the scope of the relevant market. Mr. Baseman arrives at this rate by calculating the percentage of FDMx sales by retailers who participated in and were in compliance with C&D's planogram program (not including c-stores). Baseman Report at 38. Using this formula, Mr. Baseman concludes that the foreclosure rate ranged from a low of 76.8% in 2005 to a high of 88.8% in 2008. Id. However, [89] Mr. Baseman's methodology is implausible and unsupported by evidence.

First, his formula fails to account for the portion of shelf space available in a C&D-compliant store that is not covered by the planogram agreements. Mayer offers no basis to conclude that all competition is foreclosed in retailers participating in the program; all retailers do not devote 100% of shelf space to C&D. [20] However, as the court noted in Omega, 127 F.3d at 1163, "If competitors can reach the ultimate consumers of the product by employing existing or potential alternative channels of distribution, it is unclear whether such restrictions foreclose from competition any part of the relevant market." (Emphasis in original). Cf. Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 387 (comparing shelf space rebate program to an exclusive dealing agreement but noting that "[b]ecause Retail Leaders is less restrictive than an exclusive dealing arrangement, it arguably should face less scrutiny under antitrust analysis"). Indeed, in Reynolds, the court excluded stores from its foreclosure calculation in which plaintiffs still had an opportunity to display and promote their products, even though defendant required a percentage of available [90] signage. Id. at 390. The court noted that the proper foreclosure rate would probably take into account only stores in which the defendant had an exclusive contract, but it used a higher number merely for the sake of argument. Id. [21] By contrast, Mayer's expert not only included all stores in which C&D had secured a planogram agreement, despite Mayer's (and other rivals') ability to compete for space in those stores, he [*913] also treated those stores as 100% foreclosed. In fact, 25-35% of the space in POG retailers is typically available to rivals, which equals or exceeds those rivals' combined market share.

[20] Mr. Baseman seems to acknowledge the speculative nature of his foreclosure calculation, as he describes the foreclosure rate in terms of the percentage of retailers that were "likely incentivized" by the POG. Yet all discounts offered by competitors "likely incentivize" buyers to buy more of the discounted product. That is the point of discounts. The question is not whether the POG "likely incentivized" retailers to choose C&D products, but whether it foreclosed competition.

Second, the calculation is flawed because it overstates the actual foreclosure effect in this context — it overstates the amount of total shelf space in the condom market under the auspices of the POG. In Omega, 127 F.3d at 1162, the court calculated the foreclosure rate by multiplying the "percent of Gilbarco's total dispenser sales [that] are through distributors" (70%) by Gilbarco's market share (55%). Using Omega's foreclosure methodology, if C&D has a 75% market share, and 66.1% [22] of its sales derive from POG contracts and c-store contracts, the foreclosure rate would be 49.6%. However, even this rate overstates the actual foreclosure in the market because it treats exclusive contracts POG/percentage contracts as equally foreclosing, which does not reflect the realities of the market. Instead, one could apply Omega to the realities of this market, in which C&D's average contracted shelf share is 72% [23] in the POG stores and 60% [24] in the [92] c-stores. See Wright Report Attachment 16A; id. at 53. If 44.1% of C&D's sales derive from POG retailers, where it has a contracted shelf share of 72%, and 22% of its sales derive from c-stores, where it has a 60% share, one could calculate a foreclosure rate of 45%. [25] Yet another method would be to attempt to calculate the approximate total shelf space in the condom market dedicated to C&D through either the POG or c-store contracts. Such a method would first multiply the percentage of the total condom market occupied by POG retailers (51.6%) [26] by C&D's average shelf share in those retailers (72%), which is 37%, or the total percentage of condom shelves occupied by the POG program. Second, for the c-store market, one would multiply the percentage of the total condom market occupied by c-stores (22.5%) [27] by C&D's average shelf share in that market (60%), which is 13.5%, or the total percentage of the condom market occupied by C&D c-store sales. Adding these two figures together, the total percentage of condom shelves dedicated to C&D through a POG or c-store agreement is 50.5%. [28] Thus, using [*914] any of these three methods, the foreclosure rate could be calculated as 49.6%, 45%, or [93] 50.5%.

[21] Indeed, the court even voiced concern that the "exclusive" contracts still did not foreclose competition because [91] "Retailers generally carry manufacturers' products in these stores even though they do not have merchandising contracts in these stores. Furthermore, Plaintiffs are free to negotiate merchandising contracts with these stores." Id. at 390 n. 20.

[22] 22% of C&D's sales derive from the c-store channel. Wright Report at 51. 28% of its sales derive from Wal-Mart. Wright Report Attachment 2. 1% of its sales derive from Sam's Club. Id. This leaves 49% of C&D revenues which derive from all other retailers, which the Court will label FDMx for simplicity's sake even though it also includes a small portion from dollar stores and club stores. Of those revenues in the FDMx channel, 90% of C&D's FDMx revenues derive from POG retailers. Thus, approximately 44.1% of C&D revenues (90 X 49) derive from POG participants. 44.1% (POG sales) + 22% (c-store sales) = 66.1% of C&D revenues that derive from some form of exclusive or semi-exclusive agreement.

[25] 44.1% × 72% = 31.8%. 22% × 60% = 13.2%. 31.8% + 13.2% = 45%.

[26] 92% of FDMx sales are from POG retailers (Baseman Report Table 2) × 56.1% of condom market is FDMx retailers = 51.6% of the condom market that is POG retailers.

[28] This final method uses the [94] data for revenue share to determine what percentage of the condom market is occupied by POG retailers and c-stores. Yet another alternative method would be to use the percentage of unit sales to calculate each segment's market share. These percentages are different because each channel uses somewhat different pricing (e.g., drugstores charge higher retail prices, so they have a greater revenue share than unit share in the condom market). Using unit share would arguably yield a more accurate rate for purposes of this case because it would calculate the total percentage of condom units sold that are attributable to the POG or c-stores. Under this method, 45% of the condom market is occupied by POG retailers. See Wright Report Attachment 1 (49% of unit sales are from FDMx retailers); Baseman Report Table 1 (92% of FDMx retailers are POG retailers). Since C&D contracts for an average shelf share of 72% in POG retailers, the foreclosure rate due to the POG would be 32.4%. In the c-store channel, c-stores account for 14.9% of condom unit sales. Wright Report

Any one of these rates, though high, is not clearly outside of the permissible range. See, e.g., B & H Med., L.L.C. v. ABP Admin., Inc., 526 F.3d 257, 266 (6th Cir. 2008) ("Courts routinely observe that foreclosure levels are unlikely to be of concern where they are less than 30 or 40 percent.") (internal citations and quotation marks omitted); Omega, 127 F.3d at 1162-63 (agreement foreclosing 38% did not violate antitrust laws); Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 390 (upholding space-to-sales rebate program with 34% foreclosure); Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 237-38 (1st Cir. 1983) (Breyer, J.) (upholding requirements contract with 50% foreclosure rate).

Importantly, courts assessing similar contracts have discounted the quantitative foreclosure rates because of the qualitative factors the Court has already discussed. In Omega, the court discounted the foreclosure rate of 38% due to qualitative factors, including the fact that (1) the exclusive dealing occurred at the distributor level, leaving open alternative channels of distribution; (2) the contracts [96] were short in duration; and (3) the contracts were easily terminable. 127 F.3d at 1162-64. In Barry Wright, 724 F.2d at 237-38, Judge Breyer discounted a 50% foreclosure rate based on a three-year high fixed dollar amount contract affecting 50% of the market as "considerably overstat[ing] the size of the foreclosure and its likely anticompetitive effect" because the buyer still had the ability to buy small amounts from other sellers if necessary and the contracts were each one year, among other factors.

Most importantly, the 45-50.5% foreclosure rate must be discounted because the POG incentive-based program lacks the same coercive effect as an exclusive contract. As discussed above, Allied can be read as presuming there is no foreclosure given the voluntary price-based nature of the incentive. Allied, 592 F.3d at 997 (approving of incentive-based exclusive contracts). As the analysis above demonstrates, if there is any tax effect or coercive impact due to the POG program, it does not exist with respect to the entire shelf space covered by the program. At best, there may be a marginal effect at the cusps of the rebate hierarchy. The evidence discussed above demonstrates that the vast [97] majority of shelf space devoted to C&D would have been stocked with C&D product even in the absence of the POG program. The foreclosure effect, if any, of the POG program appears only at the margins.

Finally, Mayer contends that C&D forecloses competition because its POG indirectly limits new entrants' ability to gain a foothold in the market. Mayer argues that certain non-POG retailers, such as Wal-Mart, will not stock smaller brands' products unless they already have [*915] an established market presence, and that the retailers most suited to giving small brands a shot at establishing that presence are "foreclosed" by the POG, thus leaving small brands at a disadvantage. See [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] Decl. ¶¶ 106-07. However, that certain major alternative channels of distribution such as Wal-Mart may be less hospitable to Mayer does not give rise to an antitrust law violation. The antitrust law does not require competitors to be able to succeed in alternative channels; it merely requires them to have the opportunity to succeed. Omega, 127 F.3d at 1163 ("Competitors are free to sell directly, to develop alternative distributors, or to compete for the services of the existing distributors. [98] Antitrust laws require no more."). See American Professional Testing Service, Inc. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal and Professional Publications, Inc., 108 F.3d 1147, 1154 (9th Cir. 1997) ("[R]eputation alone does not constitute a sufficient entry barrier in this Circuit."); United States v. Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d 659, 669 (9th Cir. 1990) ("We fail to see how the existence of good will achieved through effective service is an impediment to, rather than the natural result of, competition.")). Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1573 (11th Cir. 1991) (no anticompetitive impact where plaintiffs not foreclosed from every alternative)). As for the POG retailers, the Court has already found that a substantial part of the market is open to competition.

iii. Conclusion

Accordingly, the Court concludes that Mayer has failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether C&D's POG programs foreclose competition in a substantial share of the relevant market. Undisputed record evidence supports the conclusion that C&D's program falls within the conduct permitted by Allied and other persuasive authority. While there may be factual scenarios that might render conduct [99] such as C&D's POG program impermissible even under Allied, on this record, Mayer has failed to make the requisite factual showing to escape its ambit.

Attachment 1. Since C&D has an average 60% share of the c-store channel, the foreclosure rate due to the c-store contracts would be [95] 8.9%. Thus, the total foreclosure rate using this method would be 41.3%, lower than any of the above-calculated rates.

The Court therefore GRANTS summary judgment to C&D as to Mayer's § 1 Sherman Act claim, and declines to reach the question of whether the POG program has pro-competitive effects, and whether there are less restrictive means by which C&D could tailor its program.

C. Section 2 — Sherman Act

Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Mayer alleges three theories of liability under § 2: monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize.

To prevail on its § 2 monopolization claim, Mayer must prove: (1) C&D's possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, (2) C&D's willful acquisition or maintenance of that power (as opposed to success resulting from "a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident"), and (3) a resulting antitrust injury. See Pacific Bell Telephone Co. v. Linkline Communications, Inc., 555 U.S. 438, 448, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009).

To [100] prove an unlawful monopolization conspiracy under § 2, Mayer must show: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) a specific intent to monopolize; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Paladin Assocs. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1158 (9th Cir. 2003).

A private party seeking damages under an attempted monopolization theory [*916] must demonstrate "(1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power; and (4) causal antitrust injury." McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988); see also Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993); Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1433 (noting that a private party seeking damages for antitrust violations "must prove that his loss flows from an anticompetitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior").

Each claim is similar, "differing primarily in the requisite intent and the necessary level of monopoly power." Image Tech. Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1202 (9th Cir. 1997) (on remand). [101] The key question under § 2 in the context of C&D's motion for summary judgment is whether Mayer has raised a genuine issue of material fact as to exclusionary conduct or anticompetitive acts. See R.J. Reynolds, 199 F. Supp. 2d at 394-395.

In the case at bar, Mayer alleges the same anticompetitive conduct described above as a basis for each of its Sherman Act claims. Thus, Mayer's § 2 claim necessarily fails to the extent that it rests on the POG alone. As the Ninth Circuit held in Williams v. I.B. Fischer Nevada, 999 F.2d 445, 448 (9th Cir. 1993), a "§ 1 claim insufficient to withstand summary judgment cannot be used as the sole basis for a § 2 claim." "The two sections overlap in the sense that a monopoly under § 2 is a species of restraint under § 1." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224 n. 59, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940).

However, Mayer raises additional conduct as part of its § 2 claim, including alleged misconduct by C&D in its role as category captain for certain retailers and its purported "sabotaging" of Mayer's performance. See Opp. at 39. Mayer also claims C&D has engaged in similar conduct with respect to Global Protection Corporation, a rival condom manufacturer. Id. (citing [102] Wedel Decl., Mayer Ex. 10). In assessing C&D's potential antitrust liability, the Court considers the effects of its conduct in the aggregate, including, as appropriate, cumulative or synergistic effects. *See Masimo Corp. v. Tyco Health Care Group, L.P., No. 02-4770, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26916, at 19 (C.D. Cal. June 10, 2004) (considering the combined effect of all of the defendant's allegedly exclusionary contracts, including, inter alia, sole source contracts and "market share volume/loyalty discounts in compliance-based contracts"); *Tele Atlas N.V. v. NAVTEQ Corp., No. C-05-01673 RMW, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111866, 2008 WL 4809441, at 23 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 28, 2008). Accordingly, the Court considers Mayer's evidence regarding C&D's purported misconduct outside of and in addition to its POG program.

1. Monopoly Power

Monopoly power is "power to control prices or exclude competition." Eastman, 504 U.S. at 481 (citations omitted). Like market power, Mayer may establish monopoly power either directly or indirectly. "Monopoly power under § 2 requires, of course, something greater than market power under § 1." Id. However, the § 2 case law indicates that at least for summary judgment purposes, monopoly power may sometimes [103] be inferred from market share, especially when accompanied by barriers to entry. See id. ("Respondents' evidence that Kodak controls nearly 100% of the parts market and 80% to 95% of the service market, with no readily available substitutes, is, however, sufficient to survive summary judgment under the more stringent monopoly standard [*917] of § 2."); United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. 563, 571, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966) ("The existence of [monopoly] power ordinarily may be inferred from the predominant share of the market."). Cf. Safeway Inc. v. Abbott Laboratories, 761 F. Supp. 2d 874, 889 (N.D. Cal. 2011) ("A high market share, though it may ordinarily raise an inference of monopoly power, will not do so in a market with low entry barriers or other evidence of a defendant's inability to control prices or exclude competitors.") (quoting Oahu Gas Service, Inc. v. Pacific Resources, Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 366 (1988)).

In the instant case, as with market power in the context of the Section 1 claim, the Court will assume arguendo that Mayer has raised a genuine issue of material fact as to C&D's monopoly power.

2. Willful Acquisition or Maintenance of Monopoly Power

The second element distinguishes "the willful acquisition [104] or maintenance of [monopoly] power . . . from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570-71. Section 2 thus prohibits "the use of monopoly power 'to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor.'" Eastman, 504 U.S. at 482-83 (quoting United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 68 S. Ct. 941, 92 L. Ed. 1236 (1948)).

As described above, Mayer has not produced evidence to support a jury finding that C&D's POG programs are anticompetitive and exclusionary so as to violate § 2 of the Sherman Act. As for C&D's conduct additional to the POG program, Mayer compares C&D's actions as category captain for certain retailers to defendant's conduct in Conwood Co., L.P. v. U.S. Tobacco Co., 290 F.3d 768 (6th Cir. 2002). In Conwood, the Sixth Circuit found that the defendant had abused its category captain position "by providing misleading information to retailers in an effort to dupe retailers into . . . discontinu[ing] carrying Conwood products" and by removing Conwood products from the racks without store authorization. Id. at 783.

However, Mayer's evidence of purported misconduct is nowhere near the level [105] of that in Conwood. The only conduct to which Mayer can point involves, at best, C&D's suggested planogram designs which some retailers decided to adopt. See Martineau FTC Depo., C&D Ex. 118, at 70 (stating that C&D made some recommendations as to how CVS could increase its shelf space dedicated to C&D, some of which CVS adopted). Mayer provided no evidence as to how often these recommendations were adopted and whether they had the intent and/or effect of sabotaging Mayer. Its evidence is extremely thin, amounting to nothing more than a "scintilla" of support for its claims. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252. For instance, Mayer alleges that "[f]ollowing C&D's appointment as category captain [at Long's in 2007], the shelf placement of condom SKUs for Kimono products at Long's changed. After C&D became category captain, Long's double faced one of Kimono's slower moving SKUs." Baseman Report, Mayer Ex. 9, at 44-45. But Mayer produced no evidence that C&D was actually responsible for this change. Indeed, unrebutted evidence in the record indicates that category captains do not have control over retailer's shelf placement decisions, either in the case of Long's or any other retailer. See Walker [106] Depo., Mayer Ex. 47, at 222 (stating in response to question about Long's planogram while she was category captain, which double faced the Kimono product that she "had no input in the Kimono brand"); id. at 92 (she only followed Long's directions when adjusting [*918] the planogram); id. at 42-45 (stating that category captains do not have control over planogram designs); Martineau Depo. at 74 (when C&D was category captain, it made suggestions but CVS required data to support them).

Unlike Conwood, there is no evidence that C&D surreptitiously undermined the retailers' decisions and attempted to change arrangements without their approval. Instead, undisputed evidence in the record indicates that it is commonplace in the industry for manufacturers to suggest planogram designs to retailers or provide retailers with other information to advocate for their brands, regardless of whether those manufacturers serve as category captains. Martineau Depo. at 78 (all manufacturers give ideas on best ways to present the category); id. at 59 ("[M]anufacturers complain about other manufacturers [in relationship to shelf space and other retailer decisions], complain all the time. So in one ear, out the other, [107] whatever. I expect a manufacturer to complain, that's great, but the name on the store still says CVS.").

Mayer itself has engaged in certain advocacy tactics in an attempt to influence retailer decisions. See C&D Ex. 135 (Mayer email to Target providing data to show that Kimono is outperforming other brands in the thin-condom segment and expressing hope that Target will give Kimono a broader distribution); Wright Report at 199-200 (describing Mayer's proposal to Safeway that it replace Durex as the second brand). That Mayer may have been unaware of — or uninterested in — other means by which manufacturers compete for retailers' business does not render C&D's conduct nefarious. See, e.g., Mayer Depo., C&D Ex. 17, at 57 (stating that he was unaware of the ability to pay fees in exchange for shelf placement, and that Mayer has never done so: "We did not understand that it was part of the planogram decision making process, that it was sold based on position on shelf."); id. at 145-47 (stating that 7-Eleven rejected Mayer's proposed business deal, that he was unaware C&D had won its exclusive contract through a bidding process, and that Mayer has not focused on the c-store market).

Thus, [108] the fact that C&D was successful in achieving a degree of cooperation with retailers does not, without more, establish anticompetitive conduct. See generally United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416, 430 (2d Cir. 1945) (Hand, J.) ("The successful competitor, having been urged to compete, must not be turned upon when he wins.").

Accordingly, there is no evidence in the record to suggest that C&D engaged in any exclusionary conduct with respect to its POG programs and its role as category captain, considered in isolation or together. Without such exclusionary conduct, the Court cannot reasonably infer either general or specific intent to monopolize so as to support either a claim of completed or attempted monopolization. The Court therefore GRANTS summary judgment to C&D on Mayer's § 2 claim.

D. Antitrust Injury

There is another reason to grant summary judgment on Mayer's Sherman Act claims. In addition to the elements described above, to assert a claim under the federal antitrust laws, a plaintiff must have suffered an "antitrust injury," meaning an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendant's acts unlawful." [109] Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977); see In re Lorazepam and Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 295 F.Supp.2d at 38 (a plaintiff must show a "direct relationship between the [*919] claimed injury and the alleged anticompetitive conduct.... The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation."). Furthermore, the plaintiff must allege an injury to the market or to competition in general, not merely to itself. Id. (quoting Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489 ("The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors.")); U.S. v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 58, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (the correct measure of harm is "harm [to] the competitive process and thereby harm [to] consumers. In contrast, harm to one or more competitors will not suffice"); Louisa Coke, 94 F. Supp. 2d at 814 ("A single competitor's lost profits does not demonstrate a market wide competitive detriment.") (citing Baum Research and Development Co., Inc. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., Inc., 31 F. Supp. 2d 1016, 1021 (E.D. Mich.1998)). Injury can be shown by anticompetitive acts resulting in reduced output [110] or raised prices. Continental Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 277 F.3d 499, 516 (4th Cir. 2002) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

The key question here is whether Mayer suffered losses as a result of the defendant's anticompetitive acts, as opposed to other market forces. See [Safeway Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 761 F. Supp. 2d 874, 2011 WL 133008 (N.D. Cal. 2011)] ("To show antitrust injury, a plaintiff must prove that his loss flows from an anticompetitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior .") (citation omitted).

In the instant case, Mayer has failed to raise a genuine issue of fact as to the existence of such harm. While Mayer alleges harm to itself and to other small manufacturers (i.e., Global Protection, the maker of ONE brand condoms) in terms of diminution in sales and market share over the last several years, it fails to: (1) causally link this harm to C&D's anticompetitive conduct; and (2) demonstrate harm to competition.

First, Mayer fails to explain why other larger rivals in the industry have managed to compete with C&D despite the alleged misconduct. See, e.g., Silberman Damages Report, Mayer Ex. 24, at 15 (admitting that Durex's "share of sales appears to [111] have been essentially unaffected by the ramp up in Planogram Rebate tiers"); id. (noting that Lifestyles has been in decline from 2004-2010, but declining to offer any suggested reason for the decline); Wright FTC Report at 72 (discussing internal C&D documents revealing that C&D believed it had been "out maneuvered" by Durex and Lifestyles for premium space in Wal-Mart); id. at 77 (from 2008-2010, Lifestyles and Durex introduced new products that captured 5% market share in the FDMx channel). Durex's market share has not materially changed over the relevant time period. Wright Report at 115 & Attachment 24 (showing Durex market share consistently between 14-15% from 2004-2010). While Lifestyles declined in market share from 2004-2008, it began bouncing back in 2009 and 2010. Wright FTC Report at Table 4. Ms. Martineau of CVS attributes part of Lifestyles' recent success to its popular new SKYN condom. Martineau Depo. at 96-98 (explaining that Ansell "hit a home run" with SKYN, [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT]). As noted above, C&D has offered unrebutted explanations for the vicissitude in Lifestyles' sales unrelated to C&D's POG program. Wright Report at 115-21.

As for the small manufacturers' [112] sales (accounting for roughly 1% of the market), Mayer's only direct evidence that C&D blocked access to retailers is in the form of inadmissible hearsay. See, e.g., Silberman Report, Mayer Ex. 24, at16-17 (discussing Mr. Mayer's statement that a Duane [*920] Reade employee said the C&D rebate was too big to lose); Wedel Decl., Mayer Ex. 10, ¶ 91 (stating that a [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] buyer told Global Protection they needed to make room for C&D shelf space). As previously noted, this hearsay is inadmissible. Mayer fails to present any direct testimony from any retailers or other third parties on the subject.

Instead of direct evidence to prove antitrust injury, Mayer relies almost entirely on the supposed correlation between increases in C&D's rebate tiers and Mayer's (and small manufacturers generally) diminution in sales to infer causation. Mayer's primary correlation claim is that its sales increased from .31% to .46% between 2001 and 2007, and then decreased to .34%, .27%, and .29% in 2008, 2009, and 2010 respectively. Silberman Report, Mayer Ex. 24, at Ex. 1. Small brands in general (including Mayer) faced a similar fate; their market share increased from 1.8-1.9% from 2004-2005, [113] held at 1.6% in 2006 and 2007, and decreased to 1.3% in 2008 and .8% in 2009 and 2010. Wright FTC Report, Mayer Ex. 8, at Table 4. Mayer attempts to correlate this trend with the period during which C&D introduced its higher rebate level and began to more strictly enforce compliance.

Yet Mr. Silberman's own data indicates a less noticeable pattern. For example, from 2004-2007, Mayer's market share increased steadily, even though C&D's average shelf share also increased. Moreover, C&D implemented stricter compliance measures for its POG program in 2005, well before Mayer and the small competitors suffered any loss in sales. Opp. at 10. In addition, the major change in C&D's POG program took place in 2007, when C&D introduced its 80% planogram level and many retailers moved from 65% to 70%. See Wright Report, C&D Ex. 3, at Table 14 (showing C&D's revenues by shelf share for 2004-2010). Yet, the market share of all small manufacturers also held steady at 1.6% in both 2006 and 2007, suggesting they were unaffected by C&D's conduct. Moreover, examining the data separately for each of the big retailers for which Mr. Silberman alleges Mayer lost sales due to C&D conduct (i.e., Long's, CVS, [114] Walgreens, and Duane Reade), the Court finds that C&D's percentage of shelf space does not map onto Mayer's variation in sales. In short, Mayer produced no evidence that its rough and imperfect correlation between C&D's escalation of its POG program and Mayer's decline in sales was statistically significant.

More importantly, given Mayer's tiny market share, without more substantial evidence, it is speculative to infer that Mayer's decline from .46% in 2007 to .27% in 2009 is the result of C&D's expansion from 69% to 72% during the same period. In raw dollars, Mayer claims that C&D's $5.3 million increase in annual sales in 2009 (over 2007) must have caused Mayer's $450,000 decrease in annual sales over the same period. Given the structure of the market, there is no basis for assuming a zero-sum game between Mayer and C&D; there is no factual basis to infer a one-to-one correlation between C&D's and Mayer's market shares.

The same flaw applies to shelf-space allocations. Mayer asks the Court to assume, without admissible evidence, that its loss of a few facings on certain retailers' shelves is the result of C&D's POG program coercing retailers to increase C&D's shelf share from 65% to [115] 70%. Such a conclusion requires several assumptions — that C&D's shelf share increase was not warranted by its sales performance; that Mayer's shelf share decline was not warranted by its sales performance; and that among the remaining 25-35% of shelf space available in POG retailers, Mayer [*921] was unable to secure a larger portion of that residual space because of C&D's conduct. The only admissible evidence in the record from actual retailers like CVS and Rite Aid is to the contrary — display decisions were made without regard to incentives created by the POG program.

Mayer's evidentiary conjecture mirrors the claims found wanting in Louisa Coke. The court's analysis in that case is worth repeating here as it applies directly to Mayer's purported antitrust injury:

> There is probably no question that Pepsi's promotions influence retailers to give more space to Pepsi products. When Pepsi gets more space, others will obviously get less. There is no evidence, however, that Pepsi can control the retailers' decisions or has the power to exclude its rivals' products outright. Rather, all of the evidence indicates that the store owners within the Louisa Coke market allot shelf, storage and display [116] space at their sole discretion based on such factors as the market's demand for a product and the supplier's ability to keep such products in stock. Common sense dictates that retailers will give more space to those products which are more popular with consumers and available for sale. Pepsi's uncontraverted evidence indicates that it is superior within Louisa Coke's territory in both respects. Not only are Pepsi products more popular among consumers, Pepsi presented ample evidence that Louisa Coke has an inadequate service record franchise-wide. Indeed, Coke USA's own investigation confirmed that Louisa Coke was fairly represented among its retailers given its operational shortcomings.
> To refute Pepsi's evidence, Louisa Coke offered neither claim nor evidence that Pepsi's allotted shelf space is inconsistent with its market share. Nor did it provide any proof that either it or any other soft drink competitor received less retail shelf space than either market demand or their service history justified. Under these circumstances, this Court has no business in engaging in "affirmative action" among retail outlets by telling retailers to give Coke and Pepsi equal retail space. The Court [117] would be protecting a competitor rather than competition if it were to do so. Since Louisa Coke has failed to justify its demand for more retail space, it has failed to state an antitrust injury premised upon the same.

Louisa Coke, 94 F. Supp. 2d at 814-15 (internal citations omitted).

Mayer's failure to raise a genuine issue of material fact whether C&D's conduct caused any antitrust injury is an independent bar to its Sherman Act claims. Summary judgment in favor of C&D a claim under both Sections 1 and 2 is warranted on this basis as well.

E. Cartwright Act & UCL Claims

Mayer's Cartwright Act claims rise and fall with the antitrust claims above. See Theme Promotions, Inc. v. News America Marketing FSI, 546 F.3d 991, 1001 & n.3 (9th Cir. 2008) (stating that California courts analyze Cartwright Act claims under the same rubric as antitrust claims and citing to federal antitrust case law). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS summary judgment in C&D's favor as to Mayer's Counterclaims III, IV, VIII and XII.

F. Tortious Interference with Contract

C&D next argues that summary judgment is warranted on Mayer's counterclaim for tortious interference with contract. Mayer claims that C&D interfered with [118] its contractual relationship with Sagami, Mayer's condom supplier. Mayer claims it has an exclusive distribution contract with Sagami, and the C&D tortiously interfered with said contract by inducing [*922] Sagami to sign an agreement to supply condoms to C&D.

The elements of a tortious interference with contract claim are: (1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party, (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract, (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship, (3) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship, and (5) resulting damage. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal.3d 1118, 1126, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587 (1990) (citing Seaman's Direct Buying Service, Inc. v. Standard Oil Co., 36 Cal.3d 752, 765-766, 206 Cal. Rptr. 354, 686 P.2d 1158 (1984). Mayer claims that C&D interfered with Mayer's exclusive contract with Sagami, the supplier for Mayer's microthin condoms. C&D argues that summary judgment is appropriate because Mayer cannot demonstrate any of the elements of this claim.

Although Mayer's evidence is thin, the Court finds that summary judgment cannot be granted in light of credibility determinations at issue.

First, Mayer has not produced any independent [119] evidence of a valid contract. Its only evidence is Mayer's own representations. See Opp. at 43-44 (reciting Mayer's verified interrogatory responses in which Mayer states he had a verbal agreement with Sagami to be its exclusive North American distributor and agent); Mayer Depo., Mayer Ex. 17, at 128-29 (Around 1998, Sagami told Mayer that Mayer would be its exclusive distributor in North America); Mayer Ex. 68 (Mayer 1999 memo to Sagami with meeting minutes including the statement: "Mayer can be the sole agent representing Sagami, for the sale of latex condoms in North America"); id. at Mayer_160496 (2005 Mayer letter to Sagami acknowledging notice of Sagami's contract to sell C&D its polyurethane condom, noting that Sagami had stated Mayer would be its exclusive representative, and requesting clarification); id. at Mayer3454 (2007 Mayer letter to Sagami stating that Mayer has been Sagami's exclusive distributor of latex condoms, and that Sagami's sales of latex condoms to C&D are a breach of their agreement; acknowledging that Sagami does not think they had an exclusive agreement).

That representation is contradicted by substantial record evidence, including statements from Sagami [120] personnel denying an exclusive agreement. Id. at Mayer3455 (2007 Mayer letter to Sagami acknowledging that Sagami does not think they had an exclusive agreement); Mayer Depo., Mayer Ex. 17, at 134-36 (acknowledging statements made by Mr. Burt of Sagami to the French Minister of Justice that Mr. Burt did not think there was an exclusive agreement); id. at 137-39 (acknowledging statements from Sagami that there has never been an exclusive agreement); C&D Ex. 103 (Mayer document translating notes from 2008 meeting with Sagami, noting that Mr. Oato did not recall any exclusive agreement with Mayer). There do not appear to be any documents or statements in the record in which Sagami directly acknowledges exclusivity.

However, drawing all inferences in Mayer's favor, it is possible the jury could credit Mr. Mayer's testimony over the conflicting evidence. Given that the existence of a contract is essentially a "he-said/she-said" dispute, it may not be resolved on summary judgment.

Assuming there was an exclusive contract, Mayer's evidence with respect to the remaining elements also turn on credibility determinations. For example, the primary evidence that C&D knew of the purported contract [121] was Mr. Mayer's statements to C&D. C&D Second Amended Complaint, ¶ 70 (acknowledging that Mr. Mayer informed C&D that he believed [*923] he had an exclusive agreement with Sagami). Although Mayer acknowledges that Sagami told C&D otherwise (Opp. at 45; see Daniels Depo., C&D Ex. 13, at 222-24 (C&D VP of Marketing stating that Sagami had told C&D there was no exclusive arrangement with Mayer)), a confidentiality agreement drafted for a 2007 meeting between Mayer and C&D states that the parties were to discuss a possible C&D acquisition of the "Kimono brand and distribution rights to Sagami products." Mayer Ex. 72, at 1. Given C&D's acknowledgment that it was informed about Mayer's position, and the fact that documents indicate C&D may have acknowledged at least some distribution rights attached to Mayer's relationship with Sagami, a jury could infer that C&D knew an exclusive contract existed.

Intent to induce breach is also a jury question. C&D need not have developed its relationship with Sagami for the sole — or even primary — purpose of disrupting its relationship with Mayer. See Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co., 19 Cal.4th 26, 56, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709, 960 P.2d 513 (1998) ("[T]he tort of intentional interference [122] with performance of a contract does not require that the actor's primary purpose be disruption of the contract. . . . The rule applies, in other words, to an interference that is incidental to the actor's independent purpose and desire but known to him to be a necessary consequence of his action."). Thus, the requisite scienter may reasonably be inferred here.

Similarly, Mayer has raised a question of fact as to actual breach and resulting damages because if the point of the contract was exclusivity, as Mayer suggests, then C&D's relationship with Sagami necessarily entails a breach of that contract and could result in harm to Mayer. See Mayer Ex. 68, at Mayer3454-55 (2007 Mayer letter to Sagami indicating that, in Mayer's view, losing exclusivity with Sagami would directly cause Mayer to lose business as market players would view Kimono as a redundant product).

Accordingly, the Court DENIES C&D's motion for summary judgment as to Mayer's tortious interference with contract claim.

G. Tortious Interference with Economic Relations

The similar tort of interference with economic relations with retailers has the following elements: (1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and a third [123] party with a likelihood of future economic benefit to the plaintiff, (2) the defendant's knowledge of such a relationship, (3) intentional act designed to disrupt the relationship, (4) actual disruption of the relationship, and (5) resulting economic harm. Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1153, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003). Mayer's claim here is based on C&D's purported interference with Mayer's retailer relationships. As such, it rises and falls with Mayer's Sherman Act claims above. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS summary judgment to C&D on this claim.

H. False Designation, Trademark Infringement, and UCL

Mayer's final counterclaims against C&D are based on C&D's use of the term "micro-thin" to describe its ultra-thin condoms. C&D has used the term since 2006. C&D Ex. 113. Mayer has used the mark "microthin" on its Kimono MicroThin line of products since 1992, and filed an application to register "MICROTHIN" as a trademark in April 2008. Id. Mayer received a trademark registration in June 2009.

To prevail on a claim for trademark infringement, a holder of a registered service mark must show that another [*924] person is using: (1) any reproduction, counterfeit, copy or colorable imitation [124] of a mark; (2) without the registrant's consent; (3) in commerce; (4) in connection with the sale, offering for sale, distribution or advertising of any goods; (5) where such use is likely to cause confusion, or to cause a mistake or to deceive. 15 U.S.C. § 1114(1)(a); Century 21 Real Estate Corp. v. Sandlin, 846 F.2d 1175, 1178 (9th Cir.1988). The analysis for the related claim of false designation of origin under 15 U.S.C. § 1125 is generally "identical" to the analysis for infringement of a registered trademark under 15 U.S.C. § 1114. See Brookfield Communs., Inc. v. West Coast Entertainment Corp., 174 F.3d 1036, 1046-47 & n. 8 (9th Cir. 1999). [29]

A "trademark" is any combination of words or symbols used in commerce to identify and distinguish one's goods from those manufactured or sold by others and to indicate the source of the goods. 15 U.S.C. § 1127. "The [125] first to use a mark is deemed the 'senior' user and has the right to enjoin 'junior' users from using confusingly similar marks in the same industry and market or within the senior user's natural zone of expansion." Brookfield, 174 F.3d at 1047.

The key question in assessing trademark-related claims is the likelihood of confusion prong. See M2 Software, Inc. v. Madacy Entertainment, 421 F.3d 1073, 1080 & n.5 (9th Cir. 2005) ("The test of trademark infringement under state, federal, and common law is whether there will be a likelihood of confusion. . . . Furthermore, for M2 Software to succeed on each of its other federal, state, and common-law based claims, it must establish a likelihood of confusion.") (citations omitted). The Court assesses likelihood of confusion via the eight-factor Sleekcraft test:

[29] In its summary judgment papers, Mayer offered neither evidence nor argument to rebut C&D's contention that it labels its condoms "Made in Japan" because they are, in fact, made in Japan. Accordingly, the Court finds that Mayer has abandoned any claim against C&D based on the designation of certain condoms as "Made in Japan."

> (1) strength of the mark; (2) proximity of the goods; (3) similarity of the marks; (4) evidence of actual confusion; (5) marketing channels used; (6) type of goods and the degree of care likely to be exercised by the purchaser; (7) defendant's intent in selecting the mark; and (8) likelihood of expansion of the product lines.

Surfvivor Media Inc. v. Survivor Productions, 406 F.3d 625, 630 (9th Cir. 2005). [126] The Ninth Circuit has cautioned that summary judgment should not be routinely granted on the issue of likelihood of confusion. See Thane Int'l, Inc. v. Trek Bicycle Corp., 305 F.3d 894, 901-02 (9th Cir. 2002) (district courts should grant summary judgment motions "regarding the likelihood of confusion sparingly, as careful assessment of the pertinent factors that go into determining likelihood of confusion usually requires a full record.").

A "properly registered service mark is presumed to be valid" and constitutes "prima facie evidence of the validity of the registration, registrant's ownership of the mark, and of registrant's exclusive right to use the mark in commerce in connection with the goods or services specified in the certificate, subject to any conditions and limitations stated therein." Surgicenters of America, Inc. v. Medical Dental Surgeries, Co., 601 F.2d 1011, 1014 & n.8 (9th Cir. 1979) (quoting Maternally Yours v. Your Maternity Shop, 234 F.2d 538, 542 (2d Cir. 1956); 15 U.S.C. § 1057(b)). However, the Ninth Circuit has found it relatively easy to overcome the presumption of validity where the defendant produces evidence that the mark [*925] is generic or lacks secondary [127] meaning. See, e.g., Surgicenters, 601 F.2d at 1014 (noting presumption but proceeding to analyze secondary meaning and likelihood of confusion; granting summary judgment for defendant due to lack of evidence of secondary meaning); Tie Tech, Inc. v. Kinedyne Corp., 296 F.3d 778, 783 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Overall, the plaintiff retains the ultimate burden of persuasion in a trademark infringement action, namely proof of infringement. A necessary concomitant to proving infringement is, of course, having a valid trademark; there can be no infringement of an invalid mark.").

The presumption merely shifts the burden of production to the defendant. Id. If "the presumption of validity is overcome, however, the mark's registration is merely evidence of registration, nothing more." Id. (citations and quotation marks omitted). Thus, once "the defendant can demonstrate through law, undisputed facts, or a combination thereof that the mark is invalid, the evidentiary bubble bursts and the plaintiff cannot survive summary judgment." Id.; see also Brown v. Quiniou, 744 F. Supp. 463, 469 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) ("[A]lthough a registered mark is presumptively distinctive, it does not inevitably follow that the mark [128] is strong.") (citations omitted); Shaw-Barton, Inc. v. John Baumgarth Co., 313 F.2d 167, 169 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 374 U.S. 831, 83 S. Ct. 1873, 10 L. Ed. 2d 1054 (1963) ("It is well established that where descriptive words are used, the presumption of validity attaching to a registered trademark may be easily overcome.").

In the instant case, the parties dispute whether C&D's use of the word "microthin" is a valid trademark and whether it is likely to cause confusion among consumers. C&D argues that Mayer cannot survive summary judgment because "microthin" is merely a generic or descriptive term to describe thinness, and because Mayer has failed to produce any evidence of secondary meaning or consumer confusion to rebut C&D's proffered evidence. Mot. at 47-48. C&D does not address the remaining Sleekcraft factors.

1. Validity of the Mark

"The strength of a mark is determined by its placement on a continuum of marks from 'generic,' afforded no protection; through 'descriptive' or 'suggestive,' given moderate protection; to 'arbitrary' or 'fanciful' awarded maximum protection." E. & J. Gallo Winery v. Gallo Cattle Co., 967 F.2d 1280, 1291 (9th Cir. 1992) (quotations omitted); see also Filipino Yellow Pages, Inc. v. Asian Journal Publ'ns, Inc., 198 F.3d 1143, 1146 (9th Cir. 1999) [129] (grouping trademarks into four categories: (1) generic, (2) descriptive, (3) suggestive, and (4) arbitrary or fanciful"). C&D places the term "microthin" on the generic/descriptive end of the spectrum, arguing that it merely describes the thinness of the condom. C&D also provides evidence to that effect, noting that "microthin" is defined on www.dictionary.com as "extremely or, sometimes, microscopically thin." Mot. at 47. Dictionary definitions are relevant to determining the placement of a mark on the spectrum of generic to fanciful. See Surgicenters, 601 F.2d at 1015 n.11.

The Court finds that "microthin" is descriptive because it immediately conveys the intended meaning as to the type of condom sold — one that is extremely thin. See Surgicenters of America, Inc. v. Medical Dental Surgeries, Co., 601 F.2d 1011, 1019 (9th Cir. 1979) (distinguishing a suggestive term — one that "requires imagination, thought and perception to reach a conclusion as to the nature of goods" — from a descriptive term — one that "conveys an immediate idea of the ingredients, qualities or characteristics of the goods"). [*926] Indeed, Mayer does not appear to contest that its mark is descriptive, as it focuses [130] its argument on secondary meaning. See Opp. at 47.

If a term is otherwise merely descriptive, a plaintiff must demonstrate a valid mark by showing that the mark carries secondary meaning, which is "the consumer's association of the mark with a particular source or sponsor." Id. (citations omitted); Filipino Yellow Pages, Inc. v. Asian Journal Publications, Inc., 198 F.3d 1143, 1147 (9th Cir.1999). Mayer argues that microthin has developed secondary meaning associated specifically with Kimono condoms. Although the presumption of validity attached to Mayer's registered mark places the initial burden of production on C&D to show that the mark lacks secondary meaning, the "ultimate burden of persuasion" still rests with Mayer. Tie Tech, 296 F.3d at 783.

"[T]he question of secondary meaning is one of fact." Levi Strauss & Co. v. Blue Bell, Inc., 778 F.2d 1352, 1355 (9th Cir. 1985) (en banc). To determine whether a descriptive mark has secondary meaning, a finder of fact considers: "(1) whether actual purchasers of the product bearing the claimed trademark associate the trademark with the producer, (2) the degree and manner of advertising under the claimed trademark, (3) the length and manner [131] of use of the claimed trademark, and (4) whether use of the claimed trademark has been exclusive." Yellow Cab Co. of Sacramento v. Yellow Cab of Elk Grove, Inc., 419 F.3d 925, 930 (9th Cir. 2005) (quoting Levi Strauss, 778 F.2d at 1358).

C&D has presented evidence to rebut the presumption of validity. Specifically, C&D's letter of protest to the PTO attaches numerous articles using the term microthin in various contexts, including to describe Lifestyles condoms and to describe a point of competition in the condom market over "'microthin sheaths.'" See Mayer Ex. 75, ¶ 2. It also points out the Lifestyles and a brand called SURE use the term "micro-thin technology" in its own advertisements for its condoms. Id. at Ex. F. Other articles use the term microthin to describe non-condom products such as latex gloves. Id. at Ex. G. Absent further rebuttal by Mayer, this evidence is sufficient to overcome the presumption. See Tie Tech, 296 F.3d at 783. ("In the face of sufficient and undisputed facts demonstrating [lack of secondary meaning] . . . the registration loses its evidentiary significance.").

In contrast, the only evidence Mayer offers in support of its argument that microthin has secondary [132] meaning is Mr. Mayer's own declaration filed with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO"). See Mayer Ex. 74, ¶¶ 4-7 (stating that Mayer has been the only company to use the term microthin in relationship to condoms since it began using the term in 1992 until C&D began using it, that Mayer has advertised under the mark through package design and point of sale materials, and that the media refer to microthin as unique to Kimono). Mayer failed to file the exhibits to Mr. Mayer's declaration in this record, so the articles to which he refers are not included in the record. The Ninth Circuit has found that self-serving statements by a trademark holder are entitled to little weight. See Filipino Yellow Pages, 198 F.3d at 1152 (granting summary judgment where "the only evidence of secondary meaning offered by FYP was contained in the declaration of its founder and president" because "[e]vidence of secondary meaning from a partial source possesses very limited probative value" and the president's "vague, uncorroborated, and clearly self-interested testimony did not create a genuine issue for trial as to whether 'Filipino Yellow Pages' has acquired secondary meaning").

[*927] Given the descriptive [133] nature of the word, without any expert reports, surveys, or other independent evidence of secondary meaning, Mayer has not demonstrated that it has a protectable mark notwithstanding its registration. See Japan Telecom, Inc. v. Japan Telecom America Inc., 287 F.3d 866, 875 (9th Cir. 2002) (affirming summary judgment where, although company had been using mark since 1984, there was little evidence of pervasive advertising, few declarations from customers regarding actual confusion, and an affidavit from the company president that lacked foundation to state that the company had received "many" letters and "several" calls from confused customers); Echo Drain v. Newsted, 307 F. Supp. 2d 1116, 1122 (C.D. Cal. 2003) ("Echo Drain offered no expert reports or surveys to prove that the Echo Drain mark has secondary meaning. In addition, there is no consumer testimony in this case to indicate that a significant portion of the consuming public associates the Echo Drain mark with the products or services offered by Echo Drain. Because the Echo Drain mark is descriptive and there is no evidence that it has acquired a secondary meaning, the mark is not protectable and the Court grants Defendants' [134] motion for summary judgment.") (internal citations omitted). Cf. Yellow Cab, 419 F.3d at 930 (reversing grant of summary judgment when plaintiff had provided "various declarations detailing the history of the Yellow Cab of Sacramento, customer confusion concerning the companies, advertising data and other evidence addressing the [secondary meaning] factors").

2. Likelihood of Confusion

Mayer admits it has produced no evidence of actual confusion on the part of consumers. See Opp. at 48 ("Mayer has not offered evidence of actual confusion."). Mayer is correct that its failure to do so is "not dispositive," AMF Inc. v. Sleekcraft Boats, 599 F.2d 341, 353 (9th Cir. 1979). However, it is another factor weighing in favor of summary judgment. See Cohn v. Petsmart, Inc., 281 F.3d 837, 842-43 (9th Cir. 2002) (where "the parties used the same trademark in the same city for six years to market closely-related goods and services . . . some evidence of actual confusion should have become available if Petsmart's coexisting use had created a genuine likelihood of confusion."); Cairns v. Franklin Mint Co., 24 F. Supp. 2d 1013, 1041 (C.D. Cal. 1998) ("Survey evidence is not required to establish likelihood [135] of confusion, but it is often the most persuasive evidence. . . . Consequently, a plaintiff's failure to conduct a consumer survey, assuming it has the financial resources to do so, may lead to an inference that the results of such a survey would be unfavorable.") (internal citations omitted).

Without some evidence beyond Mr. Mayer's own testimony, the Court cannot infer that consumers might view "microthin" any differently than they view other descriptive terms used by condom manufacturers, such as "ultra-thin." As the Ninth Circuit has pointed out, even when a defendant uses the same mark in the same type of business, the danger of confusion is lower when those marks are merely "taglines" to descriptive business names. See id. at 842 (finding no likelihood of confusion between "Critter Clinic - Where Pets Are Family," and "Petsmart - Where Pets Are Family" due in part to the fact that "[t]he names 'Petsmart' and 'Critter Clinic' present the dominant commercial identity"). Likewise, in this case Trojan and Kimono are the dominant brand terms; "microthin" is used by the parties merely as a type of Kimono condom and a descriptive phrase for certain Trojan condoms. See C&D Ex. 113 (picturing [136] Trojan package with the phrase, "Now with Micro-Thin Technology"). The term is also apparently used to describe certain thin Lifestyles condoms, as well as at least one [*928] other brand of condom and additional Ansell latex products, such as surgical gloves. See id. Ex. F (displaying websites advertising LifeStyles condoms as "us[ing] Micro-Thin technology," and advertising a SURE brand condom called the "SURE Micro-Thin"); id. Exs. G, H (advertising Ansell latex gloves as "micro-thin"). Further, as noted above, there is undisputed evidence in the record that consumers look for particular brands and many will go to a different store to find their preferred brand. Mayer has "fail[ed] to create a genuine issue that confusion is 'probable, not simply a possibility.'" Id. (quoting Rodeo Collection, Ltd. v. West Seventh, 812 F.2d 1215, 1217(9th Cir. 1987)); see Wright Rebuttal Report, C&D Ex. 121, at 54 n.154 ("Church & Dwight's Omnibus Study found that 52% of consumers would go to another store to purchase condoms if their preferred brand were not available.") (quoting Baseman Report, Mayer Ex. 9, at 6 n. 13).

In sum, Mayer has failed to establish a genuine issue of fact whether "microthin" [137] is a valid mark (given the lack of substantial evidence of secondary meaning) and whether its use by C&D is likely to cause consumer confusion.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS summary judgment in C&D's favor as to Mayer's trademark claims. The Court therefore declines to address C&D's laches claim.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES C&D's motion for summary judgment as to tortious interference with contract, and GRANTS the motion as to all other claims. In light of the Court's ruling, C&D's motion to exclude portions of Mr. Baseman's expert report is DENIED as moot. Docket No. 232.

This Order disposes of Docket Nos. 198, 232.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION ON DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS THE SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT

[Docket Nos. 28, 42, and 46]

Boal, M.J.

In this proposed class action, Plaintiff Dmitriy Shirokov ("Shirokov") alleges that the defendants defrauded him and thousands of similarly situated individuals. He alleges that the defendants entered into a scheme to profit from copyright infringement allegations through fraud and extortion, which caused members of the class to make millions of dollars [*2] in excess settlement payments to the defendants. According to Shirokov, with the help of defendants GuardaLey, Limited ("GuardaLey") and the United States Copyright Group ("USCG"), defendants Thomas Dunlap ("Dunlap"), Nicholas Kurtz ("Kurtz") and law firm Dunlap, Grubb & Weaver PLLC ("DGW"), misrepresented defendant Achte/Neunte Boll Kino Beteiligungs Gmbh & Co KG's ("Achte") rights in the movie Far Cry to the United States Copyright Office (the "Copyright Office"), federal courts and class members. In summary, Shirokov alleges that the defendants told him and class members that Achte was entitled to statutory damages and attorneys' fees for Shirokov and others' alleged copyright infringement, knowing that Achte was not entitled to those remedies.

All of the defendants have moved to dismiss the Second Amended Complaint. For the following reasons, this Court recommends that the District Judge assigned to this case GRANT the motions in part and DENY them in part.

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Shirokov filed his original complaint on November 24, 2010. (Docket No. 1). In response, the Dunlap Defendants filed a motion to dismiss the complaint and a motion for sanctions under Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. [*3] (Docket Nos. 4, 6).

On February 8, 2011, Shirokov filed a First Amended Complaint. (Docket No. 10). The Dunlap Defendants filed renewed motions to dismiss and for sanctions under Rule 11 on February 22, 2011. (Docket Nos. 15, 17).

On March 9, 2011, the District Court granted Shirokov's motion to file a Second Amended Complaint and Shirokov filed such complaint on March 18, 2011. (Docket Nos. 25 and 26). All defendants have moved to dismiss the Second Amended Complaint. (Docket Nos. 28, 42, 46). The Dunlap Defendants have also filed a renewed motion for sanctions under Rule 11. (Docket No. 30). On May 13 and 24, 2011, the District Court referred the pending motions to this Court for a report and recommendation.

The pending motions have been the subject of extensive briefing by the parties. (See Docket Nos. 29, 36, 44, 48, 51, 55, 56, 64-66, 71-73, 77). The Court heard oral argument on February 15, 2012.

II. FACTS[1]

A. [*4] The Defendants

Defendant DGW is a Virginia law firm with offices in Leesburg, Virginia, Washington, D.C., and Naples, Florida. (Second Amended Complaint ("Complaint"), ¶ 34). DGW holds itself out as having special expertise in intellectual property law, and in copyright law specifically. (Complaint, ¶ 58). Defendant Dunlap is an attorney and the managing partner at DGW and USCG. (Complaint, ¶ 36). Defendant Kurtz is an attorney at DGW. (Complaint, ¶ 37).

Defendant USCG is a Virginia corporation that acts as a registered alias for a partnership between DGW and GuardaLey. (Complaint, ¶ 35). USCG also acts as a registered alias of several corporations with ties to DGW. (Id.).

[1] Because this case is presently before the Court on motions to dismiss, the Court sets forth the facts taking as true all well-pleaded allegations in the Second Amended Complaint and drawing all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. See Morales-Tanon v. P.R. Elec. Power Auth., 524 F.3d 15, 17 (1st Cir. 2008).

GuardaLey, a German company with offices in the United Kingdom, is a partner with DGW in managing USCG. (Complaint, ¶ 38). Defendant Achte is a German limited partnership in the business of motion picture creation and distribution. (Complaint, ¶ 39).

B. The Alleged "Copyright Scheme"

Shirokov alleges that DGW, in connection with USCG, Dunlap, Kurtz, GuardaLey, and Achte, has developed a lucrative trade "in monetizing copyright infringement allegations." (Complaint, ¶ 2). GuardaLey monitors and records online instances [*5] of alleged copyright infringement of motion pictures. (Complaint, ¶ 4). USCG provides information of the alleged infringement to film industry clients, but cautions them that civil prosecution of copyright claims is not "practical," in light of the financial status of individual infringers. (Id.).

On the basis of GuardaLey's records, the Dunlap Defendants typically file a single civil complaint in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia against hundreds of John Does from all over the country, regardless of the jurisdiction where the alleged infringements took place. (Complaint, ¶ 6). The complaint alleges mass online infringement and petition the court to issue subpoenas to Internet Service Providers ("ISPs"), seeking contact information for the alleged infringers. (Id.).

The Dunlap Defendants use the information provided by the ISPs to send to the alleged infringers virtually identical "litigation settlement demand" letters. (Complaint, ¶ 7). The letters demand $1,500 from each recipient, increasing to $2,500 if not sent promptly, under deceptive threats of impending litigation. (Id.). The Dunlap Defendants and their clients, however, have no intention of litigating [*6] these claims to resolution, and indeed do not have the capacity to do so, should the alleged infringers not pay the amount demanded. (Complaint, ¶ 8).

Shirokov alleges that he and the class members received these settlement demand letters from the Dunlap Defendants on behalf of Achte. (Complaint, ¶¶ 158-161 and Exhibit N thereto). Shirokov alleges that the defendants acted together in an effort to coerce him and other class members to pay the amounts demanded, even though the Dunlap Defendants knew that Achte could never prevail on its claims for statutory damages. (Complaint, ¶¶ 15, 24, 176, 178-182).

C. Achte's Copyright

Achte is a German film production company that has made over twenty feature-length motion pictures. (Complaint, ¶ 91). One of its pictures, Far Cry, was filmed in Canada in the summer of 2007. (Complaint, ¶ 98). Far Cry was first released in theaters in Germany on October 2, 2008. (Complaint, ¶ 99). It premiered on over 200 different screens in the first week of release. (Id.).

Far Cry was first released in United States theaters on December 17, 2008. (Complaint, ¶ 100). The film was first published on DVD on April 14, 2009, when the DVD was offered for sale in the Netherlands. [*7] (Complaint, ¶ 101). Far Cry was also offered for sale to the public in the United Kingdom and Italy on September 7, 2009 and October 14, 2009, respectively. (Complaint, ¶ 102-103). The film was commercially released on DVD in the United States and Canada on November 24, 2009. (Complaint, ¶ 104).

DGW submitted a copyright registration application for Far Cry to the Copyright Office. (Complaint, ¶ 111). The application falsely stated that Far Cry was first published on November 24, 2009. (Id.). Defendants knew that the statement that Far Cry was first published on November 24, 2009 was false. (Complaint, ¶ 115). Accordingly, Shirokov claims that Achte's registration for Far Cry is invalid. (Complaint, ¶ 22).

Shirokov alleges that DGW and Achte intentionally lied to the Copyright Office about the first publication date in order to maximize the infringement damage awards that Achte could pursue. (Complaint, ¶¶ 11-12). Properly registered works, asserts Shirokov, enjoy the benefits of statutory damage awards of between $750 and $30,000 for each infringed work and $150,000 for each infringed work if the infringement was committed willfully. (Complaint, ¶ 43). If DGW and Achte had been truthful [*8] about the first publication date, however, Achte would be limited to recovering actual damages for each alleged act of infringement. (See generally Complaint at ¶¶ 44-57, 90-130). For every act of infringement allegedly committed by Shirokov and Class members, the most that Achte could recover is $26.99, the list price of a new DVD of Far Cry. (Complaint, ¶¶ 219-221).

D. The Underlying Achte Lawsuit

On March 18, 2010, DGW filed a suit in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia on behalf of Achte against 2,094 anonymous individuals ("John Doe Defendants"), alleging infringement of Far Cry (the "Achte Lawsuit"). [2] (Complaint, ¶ 134). The Achte Lawsuit alleged that the John Doe Defendants had infringed Achte's copyright in Far Cry. (Id.). On the same date, DGW sought leave of court to serve subpoenas on ISPs across the country to determine the identity of the John Doe Defendants and their contact information. (Complaint, ¶ 135). The court granted leave on March 23, 2010. (Id.).

Pursuant to the subpoenas, DGW obtained the names and contact information of the John Doe Defendants. [*9] (Complaint, ¶¶ 136-137). Shirokov was identified as one of the John Doe Defendants. (Complaint, ¶ 139).

On May 12, 2010, DGW filed a First Amended Complaint for Copyright Infringement on behalf of Achte, raising to 4,577 the alleged number of infringers of Far Cry. (Complaint, ¶ 142). DGW repeatedly sought to extend the time for serving the complaint, prolonging the pendency of the Achte Lawsuit against the class members. (Complaint, ¶ 195). More than six months after filing the original complaint, Achte asserted through DGW that the class members (who had not been yet formally served and had not been named) were "not yet named parties" and therefore had no standing to seek dismissal. (Complaint, ¶ 197).

On September 10, 2010, the court in the Achte Lawsuit ordered Achte to show cause why class members who had submitted affidavits regarding their locations should not be dismissed on the basis of lack of personal jurisdiction. (Complaint, ¶ 204). On the same date, certain John Doe Defendants filed an omnibus motion to quash a subpoena issued by Achte and to dismiss the moving defendants from the Achte Lawsuit. (Id.). The motion sought dismissal on jurisdictional grounds and explained [*10] that geographic location information available in the IP addresses, which served as the basis for the Achte Lawsuit, revealed that each of the moving defendants was located outside of Washington, D.C. at the time of the alleged infringement. (Id.). In opposition to the motion, Achte argued that "it would not make practical sense to dismiss particular Doe Defendants on a piecemeal basis" before the court-ordered deadline to name and serve all defendants. (Complaint, ¶ 205).

On November 18, 2010, the last day of its already extended time to name and serve defendants, Achte filed a motion asking the court to extend the deadline for service for five years, arguing that it should not be forced to litigate its case against any class member until every class member had been identified. (Complaint, ¶ 207).

On November 19, 2010, the court ordered Achte to file a second amended complaint "identifying by name and address Defendants over whom it reasonably believes the Court has personal jurisdiction and whom it wants to sue," or if it did not have that information, the IP address of those over whom Achte continued to claim the court had jurisdiction. (Complaint, ¶ 208). The court also ordered Achte [*11] to file a status report by February 18, 2011 as to any class members for whom it did not yet have identifying information from the ISPs. (Id.).

In response to the November 19, 2010 order, Achte filed a second amended complaint on December 6, 2010. (Complaint, ¶ 209). The second amended complaint named only one class member as a defendant, along with 139 unnamed John Doe Defendants, out of the 4,577 class members Achte had identified in the first amended complaint. (Id.). Achte also filed a notice of dismissal without prejudice of its claims against all other members of the class. (Id.). On December 14, 2010, the court entered an order approving Achte's dismissal of its claims against all other members of the class. (Complaint, ¶ 212).

After voluntarily dismissing the claims against 4,437 of the members of the Class, Achte filed suit against eight class members as named defendants in individual lawsuits in other courts. (Complaint, ¶ 214). Since the dismissal of most of the John Doe Defendants in the Achte Lawsuit, Achte has not refiled any claims against any member of Subclass I (defined below) and has filed only one case against a named member of Subclass II (defined below). (Complaint, [*12] ¶ 215). At oral argument, the parties confirmed that Shirokov has not been named in any lawsuit.

E. The Settlement Demand Letters

On or about May 19, 2010, Defendant Kurtz sent a letter to Shirokov, accusing him of infringing the copyright in Far Cry (the "Letter"). (Complaint, ¶ 158 and Exhibit N thereto). The Letter stated that DGW had filed suit on behalf of Achte in the District of Columbia and that Shirokov's ISP had supplied DGW with Shirokov's contact information, identifying him as "one of the Defendants who has illegally obtained or shared our client's copyrighted motion picture through a peer-to-peer network..." (Complaint, ¶ 162 and Exhibit N thereto). The Letter also stated, in relevant part:

> We are sending you this letter as a courtesy before we are required to take more formal legal action which would involve adding you as a named Defendant to the lawsuit.
> The law provides protection for copyright owners through the Federal copyright statute found at 17 U.S.C. §§ 501-506, which allows the copyright owner to impound your material, recover their attorney's fees, and seek damages of $750 - $150,000 per work, depending on the circumstances surrounding the infringement. . . [*13] .
> In exchange for a comprehensive release of all legal claims which will enable you to avoid becoming a named Defendant in the lawsuit, our firm is authorized to accept the sum of $1,500 as full settlement for its claims. This offer will expire at 5pm EST on June 11, 2010. Thereafter, our client will accept no less than the sum of $2,500 to settle this matter, but this increased settlement offer will expire on June 30, 2010. In addition, you must remove the file from the shared folder or location where our client's film can be shared or copied within three (3) days of paying a settlement. If you have chosen not to settle by June 30th, we may add you to the list of defendants to be served with a lawsuit.
> We look forward to resolving this without further action on our part, however if you do not comply with the above requests we may be forced to name you as a Defendant to the lawsuit and proceed directly against you on behalf of our client. If forced to do so, our client will be seeking to recover the maximum amount of fees provided under the Copyright Act for copyright infringement, which is up to $30,000 per illegally downloaded film, plus attorneys' fees and costs of litigation. [*14] Because torrent-file sharing requires deliberate action by the uploader or downloader of a movie, we may be able to prove that your actions were intentional, rather than just negligent. In the event we are able to prove that the infringement was intentional, our client will be seeking the maximum statutory damages allowed by the Copyright Act in the amount of $150,000 per infringement, attorneys' fees and costs.

> We strongly encourage you to consult with an attorney to review your rights and risk exposure in connection with this matter. You should also visit the Frequently Asked Questions web page we have posted at www.farcry-settlement.com, which will provide additional information and hopefully answer many of the questions you have. . . .

(Exhibit N to Complaint) (emphasis in original).

The Letter directed Shirokov to a "Frequently Asked Questions" website. That website included the following information:

> 2. I have received a letter in the mail about a lawsuit. Why did I get this letter?
> This letter is a demand letter. A lawsuit has been filed against you in the United States Federal District Court for the Federal District of Columbia for copyright infringement as a result of information [*15] about your infringing download of a motion picture. If you pay the settlement amount and accept the terms of the > settlement agreement proposed on your case then you will be dismissed from the lawsuit and your information will remain anonymous. If you do not accept the settlement agreement you may subsequently be served with the lawsuit and expected to defend the claim of copyright infringement as alleged in the complaint.

> 4. What are the consequences or damages that can be awarded in a copyright infringement case?
> Statutory damages are available to the owner of a registered work under Title 17, Section 504 of the United States Code in an amount of between $750 and $30,000 per infringed work, if the infringement was not willful. If the infringement was willful, as asserted in the Complaint filed in this case, damages may be as much as $150,000 per infringed work.
> 5. Are there potential benefits to settling this claim?
> We are not your attorneys and we are not providing you legal advice. We strongly recommend that you seek advice from an attorney. There are several aspects of settling the copyright infringement claim against you that you might find beneficial. Settling the claim allows [*16] you to pay a relatively nominal, onetime lump sum payment to completely resolve the claim, without having to defend yourself in court. The legal fees incurred in defending a copyright infringement claim will almost always exceed the settlement amount demanded by our client. Second, your settlement, identity and contact information will remain private, in that we will not release your information to any third party unless legally required to do so. Third, by settling, you will avoid the potential for a jury verdict against you that could exceed the amount of the settlement (up to $150,000, for willful infringement) and include an award of our client's attorneys' fees, which will be certainly be several thousand dollars more. Finally, settling allows you to resolve the claim quickly and easily, over the Internet or by mail.

Shirokov did not pay to settle the claims. (Complaint, ¶ 232). However, he alleges that he has incurred costs in retaining counsel "in reliance on the false allegations of the Letter and in order [*17] to determine the merits of its claims... Plaintiff would have avoided those costs had the Letter been truthful." (Complaint, ¶ 232).

Based on his allegations, Shirokov has brought nineteen causes of action, including conspiracy, Computer Fraud and Abuse Act claims, RICO violations, fraud on the court, abuse of process, malicious prosecution, fraud on the copyright office, copyright misuse, and unfair and deceptive practices under Chapter 93A.

F. The Putative Class

Shirokov brings this action on behalf of a class of all 4,577 persons who defendants allege infringed Achte's copyright in Far Cry prior to May 12, 2010, the date on which Achte filed its amended complaint in the Achte Action. (Complaint, ¶ 239). The class is further divided into two subclasses: (1) a subclass of all 917 persons ("Subclass I") who defendants allege infringed Achte's copyright prior to its claimed date of publication, November 24, 2009; and (2) a subclass of all 3,644 persons ("Subclass II") who defendants allege infringed Achte's copyright prior to its effective date of registration, January 19, 2010. (Id.). Shirokov alleges that he is a member of Subclass II. (Complaint, ¶ 139).

III. ANALYSIS

A. GuardaLey's Motion [*18] To Dismiss For Lack Of Personal Jurisdiction

In addition to moving to dismiss the Complaint for failure to state a claim, defendant GuardaLey also argues that the Complaint must be dismissed against it pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, because this Court does not have personal jurisdiction over GuardaLey. (Docket No. 44 at 4-14). "[A] federal court generally may not rule on the merits of a case without first determining that it has jurisdiction over the category of claim in suit (subject-matter jurisdiction) and the parties (personal jurisdiction)." Sinochem Int'l Co., Ltd. v. Malaysia Int'l Shipping Corp., 549 U.S. 422, 430-31, 127 S. Ct. 1184, 167 L. Ed. 2d 15 (2007). Therefore, the Court first addresses the jurisdictional issue before reaching GuardaLey's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. For the reasons that follow, this Court recommends that the motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction be ALLOWED.

1. Documents Outside Of The Complaint

In order to determine precisely which materials are properly before the Court for purposes of deciding the defendants' motions to dismiss, this Court must first decide GuardaLey's motion to strike. (Docket No. 58). Shirokov has [*19] submitted certain exhibits in connection with his opposition to GuardaLey's motion to dismiss the Complaint. (See Ex. A through L to Docket No. 56). In addition, he has included a section entitled "Statements of Facts Specific to GuardaLey" on pages 5 through 9 of his opposition. (Docket No. 56 at 5-9). For the reasons set forth below, the Court denies in part and grants in part GuardaLey's motion to strike. The Court will consider those materials only in connection with GuardaLey's motion to dismiss the Complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction but not in connection with the motion to dismiss the Complaint for failure to state a claim. [3]

GuardaLey is correct that, generally, the Court may not consider documents outside of the complaint in connection with a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). Nollet v. Justices of the Trial Court of Mass., 83 F. Supp. 2d 204, 208 (D. Mass. 2000) (Harrington, J.), aff'd, 248 F.3d 1127 (1st Cir. 2000). Nevertheless, on a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, the court may consider facts outside of the complaint. Boit v. Gar-Tec Prods., Inc., 967 F.2d 671, 675 (1st Cir. 1992) (citations omitted) (In order to sustain burden of proving personal jurisdiction, "plaintiff must go beyond the pleadings and make affirmative proof."); Callahan v. Harvest Bd. Int'l, Inc., 138 F. Supp. 2d 147, 152-53 (D. Mass. 2001) ("The consideration of materials outside the complaint is appropriate in ruling on a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction."). This Court, therefore, declines to strike any of the challenged submissions but will consider them only in connection with GuardaLey's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction under the following framework:

> On a motion to dismiss for want of in [*21] personam jurisdiction, Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(2), the plaintiff ultimately bears the burden of persuading the court that jurisdiction exists . . . In conducting the requisite analysis under the prima facie standard, we take specific facts affirmatively alleged by the plaintiff as true (whether or not disputed) and construe them in the light most congenial to the plaintiff's jurisdictional claim . . . We then add to the mix facts put forward by the defendants, to the extent that they are uncontradicted . . . We caution that, despite the liberality of this approach, the law does not require us struthiously to credit conclusory allegations or draw farfetched inferences.

Mass. Sch. of Law at Andover, Inc. v. Am. Bar Ass'n, 142 F.3d 26, 34 (1st Cir. 1998) (internal citations omitted). As part of this analysis, the Court does not act as a fact finder. Rather, the Court must determine "whether the facts duly proffered [when] fully credited, support the exercise of personal jurisdiction." Alers-Rodriguez v. Fullerton Tires Corp., 115 F.3d 81, 84 (1st Cir. 1997). However, "allegations in a lawyer's brief or legal memorandum are insufficient, even under the relatively relaxed prima facie standard, to [*22] establish jurisdictional facts." Barrett v. Lombardi, 239 F.3d 23, 27 (1st Cir. 2001).

2. Standard of Review

Although GuardaLey filed the motion to dismiss, Shirokov ultimately bears the burden of persuading the Court that it has personal jurisdiction over GuardaLey. Hannon v. Beard, 524 F.3d 275, 279 (1st Cir. 2008). In considering a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, a court may choose from three methods for determining whether the plaintiff has met his burden of establishing personal jurisdiction. Adelson v. Hananel, 510 F.3d 43, 48 (1st Cir. 2007). These methods include the prima facie method, the "preponderance of the evidence" method, and the "likelihood" method. Foster-Miller, Inc. v. Babcock & Wilcox Can., 46 F.3d 138, 145-47 (1st Cir. 1995). When, as here, a court rules on a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction without holding an evidentiary hearing, the "prima facie" standard governs its determination. United States v. Swiss Am. Bank, Ltd., 274 F.3d 610, 618 (1st Cir. 2001). Under the prima facie standard, Shirokov must "go beyond the pleadings and make affirmative proof' to demonstrate the existence of personal jurisdiction. Id. at 619. However, [*23] the Court "accept[s] the plaintiff's (properly documented) evidentiary proffers as true" and construes those facts "in the light most congenial to the plaintiff's jurisdictional claim." Hannon, 524 F.3d at 279 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

[3] Shirokov argues that the Court may also consider materials outside of the Complaint in connection with the defendants' motion to dismiss on the basis of subject-matter jurisdiction (standing). (Docket No. 66 at 9-10). However, none of the challenged materials have any relevance to the issue of subject-matter jurisdiction. As such, the Court does not consider them for that purpose. In addition, the Court finds that none of the exceptions regarding the prohibition against considering materials outside the Complaint in connection with a Rule 12(b)(6) [*20] motion apply to the challenged materials. See Nollet, 83 F. Supp. 2d at 208.

In his Complaint, Shirokov stated that this Court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the dispute on the basis of both diversity of citizenship, 28 U.S.C. § 1332, and the existence of federal questions, 28 U.S.C. § 1343. (Complaint, ¶¶ 27-28). "When the district court's subject-matter jurisdiction rests wholly or in part on the existence of a federal question, the constitutional limits of the court's personal jurisdiction are drawn in the first instance with reference to the due process clause of the fifth amendment." Lorelei Corp. v. Cnty. of Guadalupe, 940 F.2d 717, 719 (1st Cir. 1991) (emphasis in original). In such circumstances, the Fifth Amendment requires only that the defendant have "minimum contacts" with the United States, rather than with the particular forum state (as would be required in a diversity case). Id.; United Elec., Radio and Mach. Workers of Am. v. 163 Pleasant St. Corp., 960 F.2d 1080, 1085 (1st Cir. 1992) [*24] (citations omitted).

"Nevertheless, while courts in federal question cases have found 'that sufficient contacts [to justify the assertion of personal jurisdiction] exist whenever the defendant is served within the sovereign territory of the United States,' the basis for service of process returnable to a particular court must be grounded within a federal statute or Civil Rule." United Elec., Radio and Mach. Workers of Am., 960 F.2d at 1085 (quotation omitted). "In other words, though personal jurisdiction and service of process are distinguishable, they are inextricably intertwined, since service of process constitutes the vehicle by which the court obtains jurisdiction." Id. (citations omitted).

Rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is the principal mechanism for service of process in federal courts. Id. Under most circumstances, Rule 4(f) limits service of process "to the territorial limits of the state in which the court is held." Id. at 1085-86 (quoting Johnson Creative Arts, Inc. v. Wool Masters, Inc., 743 F.2d 947, 950 (1st Cir. 1984)). However, "a number of federal laws provide for either nationwide or worldwide service, and Rule 4(e) authorizes extraterritorial service [*25] in such circumstances." Id. at 1086 (internal citations omitted).

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") allows broader service of process than Rule 4. 18 U.S.C. § 1965(d); see also Omni Video Games, Inc. v. Wing Co., Ltd., 754 F. Supp. 261, 263 (D.R.I. 1991). Here, Shirokov brings a RICO claim (Count 6). However, RICO authorizes nationwide, not international, service of process. In re Lupron Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., 245 F. Supp. 2d 280, 288 n. 23 (D. Mass. 2003); Omni Video Games, Inc., 754 F. Supp. at 263. Defendant GuardaLey was served under the Hague Convention in the United Kingdom and Germany. (Docket Nos. 27-2, 27-3). Accordingly, RICO's nationwide service of process provision does not allow the Court to exercise jurisdiction over defendant GuardaLey. [4]

Hence, the Court's analysis comes full circle. "When insufficient statutory authorization for extraterritorial [*26] service exists, Rule 4(e) allows such service 'only to the extent permitted by the law of the state in which the district court sits.'" United Elec., Radio and Mach. Workers of Am., 960 F.2d at 1086. Because there is no federal statute permitting service of process on GuardaLey in Germany or the United Kingdom, the Court's inquiry must focus on Massachusetts law concerning personal jurisdiction, notwithstanding that this is a federal question case. Id. "And because state law is subject to Fourteenth Amendment limitations, the minimum contacts doctrine, while imposing no direct state-by-state constraint on a federal court in a federal question case, acts indirectly as a governing mechanism for the exercise of personal jurisdiction." Id. Accordingly, the Court's analysis must focus on GuardaLey's contacts with Massachusetts.

3. The Court Does Not Have General Jurisdiction Over GuardaLey

A court may exercise authority over a defendant by virtue of either general or specific jurisdiction. Mass. Sch. of Law, 142 F.3d at 34. Here, Shirokov argues that the Court has both general and specific jurisdiction over GuardaLey. (Docket No. 56 at 11). This Court disagrees.

General jurisdiction exists [*27] when the defendant has engaged in "continuous and systematic activity" in the forum, even if the activity is unrelated to the suit. United Elec., Radio & Mach. Workers of Am., 960 F.2d at 1088. "In evaluating whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction is warranted, courts concentrate on the 'quality and quantity of contacts between the potential defendant and the forum.'" Swiss Am. Bank, 274 F.3d at 619 (quoting Phillips Exeter Acad. v. Howard Phillips Fund, Inc., 196 F.3d 284, 288 (1st Cir. 1999)). In addition to showing that the defendant has "continuous and systematic" contacts with the forum, the plaintiff must also show that the exercise of jurisdiction would be reasonable. Id. "As a threshold matter, 'the standard for evaluating whether these contacts satisfy the constitutional general jurisdiction test is considerably more stringent than that applied to specific jurisdiction questions.'" Id. (quotation omitted).

In arguing that GuardaLey's contacts are "continuous and systematic," Shirokov focuses on GuardaLey's contacts with the United States as a whole. However, as stated supra, the proper focus is on GuardaLey's contacts with Massachusetts. Shirokov only identifies the [*28] following contacts between GuardaLey and Massachusetts: that GuardaLey has tracked and identified "at least thirty [alleged infringers'] at 1P addresses located in Massachusetts" in connection with the Acthe Lawsuit and more than one hundred alleged infringers in cases other than the Achte Lawsuit. (Docket No. 56 at 13-14). The Court finds these contacts insufficient to satisfy general jurisdiction.

The Supreme Court's decision in Perkins v. Benguet Consol. Mining Co. [5] "remains '[t]he textbook case of general jurisdiction appropriately exercised over a foreign corporation that has not consented to suit in the forum.'" Goodyear Dunlop Tires Ops. v. Brown, 131 S.Ct. 2846, 2856, 180 L. Ed. 2d 796 (2011) (citation omitted). Sued in Ohio, the defendant in Perkins was a Philippine mining corporation that had ceased activities in the Philippines during World War II. Perkins, 342 U.S. at 447-48. To the extent that the company was conducting any business, it was doing so in Ohio. The corporation's president maintained his office there, kept the company files in that office, and supervised from the Ohio office the limited activities of the company. Id. Although the claim-in-suit did not arise in Ohio, the Supreme [*29] Court ruled that it would not violate due process to submit the defendant to the jurisdiction of the Ohio court. Id. at 448.

Later, in Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia. S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 104 S. Ct. 1868, 80 L. Ed. 2d 404 (1984), the Supreme Court addressed the exercise of general jurisdiction over a Colombian corporation. In Helicopteros, survivors of United States citizens who died in a helicopter crash in Peru brought a wrongful death action in a Texas state court against the owner and operator of the helicopter, a Colombian corporation. 466 U.S. at 410. The Colombian corporation had no place of business in Texas and was not licensed to do business in Texas. Id. at 416. "[The company's] contacts with Texas consisted of sending its chief executive officer to Houston for a contract-negotiation session, accepting into its New York bank account checks drawn on a Houston bank; purchasing helicopters, equipment, and training services from [a Texas enterprise] for substantial sums; and sending personnel to [Texas] for training." Id. The Supreme Court found that those contacts were not continuous and systematic and were insufficient to support the exercise of general jurisdiction over the [*30] defendant. Id. at 418-19.

"For an individual, the paradigm focus for the exercise of general jurisdiction is the individual's domicile; for a corporation it is an equivalent place, one in which the corporation is fairly regarded as at home." Goodyear Dunlop Tires Ops., 131 S.Ct. at 2853-54 (citation omitted). Shirokov has presented no evidence (or even unsupported allegations) that GuardaLey is a resident of Massachusetts, owns property in Massachusetts, regularly transacts business in Massachusetts, or has otherwise engaged in continuous and systematic activity in Massachusetts. "Measured against Helicopteros and Perkins, [Massachusetts] is not a forum in which it would be permissible to subject [GuardaLey] to general jurisdiction." Id. at 2857. GuardaLey is in no sense at home in Massachusetts. Therefore, this Court finds that GuardaLey's attenuated connections with Massachusetts fall short of the "continuous and systematic general business contacts" necessary to empower a federal court in Massachusetts to entertain a suit against it there.

4. The Court Does Not Have Specific Jurisdiction Over GuardaLey

"In the absence of general jurisdiction, a court's power depends upon the existence [*31] of specific jurisdiction." Mass. Sch. of Law, 142 F.3d at 34. To establish specific jurisdiction, Shirokov must demonstrate that the Massachusetts long-arm statute grants jurisdiction over GuardaLey and that the exercise of that jurisdiction comports with the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Lorelei Corp., 940 F.2d at 720.

The Court need not pause to consider the particulars of the Massachusetts long-arm statute because even if that statute, correctly applied, would purport to grant jurisdiction over GuardaLey, Shirokov must still demonstrate that "the exercise of jurisdiction pursuant to that statute comports with the strictures of the Constitution." Mass. Sch. of Law, 142 F.3d at 35; see also Hannon, 524 F.3d 275, 280 (1st Cir. 2008) ("Because we have construed the Massachusetts long-arm statute to be coextensive with the limits allowed by the United States Constitution, we often 'sidestep the statutory inquiry and proceed directly to the constitutional analysis.'"). The constitutional analysis has three distinct components: "relatedness, purposeful availment (sometimes called 'minimum contacts'), and reasonableness." Hannon, 524 F.3d at 282 (internal quotations and [*32] citations omitted).

To satisfy the relatedness component, Shirokov's claims must "arise out of, or be related to, the defendant's in-forum activities." Hannon, 524 F.3d at 282. This standard is flexible and focuses on the nexus between the defendant's contacts with the forum and the plaintiff's cause of action. Id. However, there are some constraints on its application. The First Circuit has described the relatedness standard as follows:

> The relatedness requirement is not an open door; it is closely read, and it requires a showing of a material connection. This court steadfastly rejects the exercise of personal jurisdiction whenever the connection between the cause of action and the defendant's forum-state contacts seems attenuated and indirect. Instead, the defendant's in-state conduct must form an important, or at least material, element of proof in the plaintiff's case. A broad but-for argument is generally insufficient. Because "but for" events can be very remote, due process demands something like a "proximate cause" nexus.

Harlow v. Children's Hosp., 432 F.3d 50, 61 (1st Cir. 2005) (internal citations, quotations and modifications omitted).

As described above, the only conceivable [*33] contacts with Massachusetts consist of GuardaLey's "tracking" of IP addresses of alleged infringers who happened to be located in Massachusetts. (Docket No. 56 at 13-14). Shirokov has presented no evidence that GuardaLey performed such tracking anywhere other than its place of business in the United Kingdom. Shirokov also alleges that GuardaLey provided that information to the Dunlap Defendants, who then used that information to file the Achte Lawsuit, obtain subpoenas, obtain the alleged infringers' contact information and, ultimately, send the Letter to Shirokov and others. (See generally Complaint at 4, 133-137, 156-160). The Court finds that such a chain of events does not satisfy the relatedness requirement. To be sure, it could be argued that the Achte Lawsuit and subsequent Letter would not have been possible without the information provided by GuardaLey. However, a "but-for" argument that DGW would not have sent a settlement demand letter to Shirokov had GuardaLey not documented his downloading of Far Cry is insufficient to satisfy the relatedness prong because it is too attenuated and too remote in the causation link. Although GuardaLey's alleged activities may have provided [*34] the other defendants with information that they in turn used to perpetrate the alleged copyright scheme, those activities are not a material element of Shirokov's case. Shirokov has provided no evidence (and has not even alleged) that GuardaLey itself knew of or participated in the copyright scheme. See Section III(B)(6) below.

Even if Shirokov could demonstrate that GuardaLey's contacts with Massachusetts were related to his cause of action, he must also show that GuardaLey's contacts "represent a purposeful availment of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum state, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of that state's laws and making the defendant's presence before the state's courts foreseeable." Hannon, 524 F.3d at 284. This requirement "ensures that jurisdiction is not based on merely random, isolated or fortuitous contacts with the forum state, and is based upon the 'cornerstones of voluntariness and foreseeability.'" Id. (internal modifications and citations omitted). The defendant's contacts "must be voluntary and not based on the unilateral actions of another party" and "must be such that [the] defendant could reasonably anticipate being haled into court [*35] there." Id. (internal modifications omitted). "Even if a defendant's contacts with the forum are deemed voluntary, the purposeful availment prong of the jurisdictional test investigates whether the defendant benefitted from those contacts in a way that made jurisdiction foreseeable." Id. (citing Phillips Exeter Acad., 196 F.3d at 292).

Again, Shirokov alleges only that GuardaLey "tracked" the internet usage of alleged infringers. (Docket No. 56 at 13-14). He argues that such tracking constitutes purposeful availment because it was foreseeable that the effects of such tracking would be felt in each state, including Massachusetts, and GuardaLey did not make any efforts to exclude Massachusetts from its targeted conduct. (Docket No. 56 at 21). Shirokov states that in order to track infringement, GuardaLey had to actively participate in the infringement by offering files for download. (Docket No. 73 at 3). GuardaLey, on the other hand, characterizes its activities as simple observation and monitoring of infringement activity. (Docket No. 65 at 4, n. 3). Therefore, the key issue is whether GuardaLey purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting business in Massachusetts if its [*36] internet activities interacted with Massachusetts residents. In making their respective arguments for and against the exercise of personal jurisdiction, both parties rely on caselaw regarding website owners. (Docket No. 65 at 4; Docket No. 73 at 3). While that caselaw may not be directly on point, the Court nevertheless finds it useful for purposes of its analysis.

Most circuits and lower courts have adopted a test developed in Zippo Mfg. Co. v. Zippo Dot Com. Inc., a 1997 trademark infringement case involving an internet domain name. 952 F. Supp. 1119 (W.D. Pa. 1997); see also *Sportschannel New England Ltd. Partnership v. Fancaster, Inc., No. 09cv11884-NG, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106272, 2010 WL 3895177, at 5 (D. Mass. Oct. 1, 2010) (collecting cases); Hasbro, Inc. v. Clue Computing, Inc., 994 F. Supp. 34, 40 (D. Mass. 1997) (collecting cases). One judge describes the Zippo test as follows:

> Zippo creates a sliding scale in which the likelihood of personal jurisdiction is 'directly proportionate' to the level of interactivity of the website. At one end of the spectrum, personal jurisdiction is clearly established where a defendant conducts regular business over the internet, for example by entering into contracts [*37] with foreign users to transmit files to their home computers for a fee. At the other end of the spectrum are passive websites that do no more than share information.
> And in the middle of the spectrum are interactive websites where a user exchanges information with a host computer. Here, the Zippo court examines the 'level of interactivity' and the 'commercial nature of the exchange of information' on the site. Mere interactivity is not enough. Something more is required.
> Zippo and its progeny do not provide much guidance to courts in determining what kind of 'something more' is required to render an interactive website subject to a court's personal jurisdiction. While courts have found that passive websites do not expose themselves to jurisdiction of every forum, they have been less clear about how much interactivity does.

*Sportschannel New England Ltd. Partnership, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106272, 2010 WL 3895177 at * 5* (internal citations omitted).

Shirokov compares GuardaLey's activities to an interactive website, while GuardaLey compares it to a passive website. The activities appear to be somewhere in between. In any event, the Court finds that GuardaLey's activities are not sufficient to satisfy the purposeful availment [*38] requirement. In this case, GuardaLey is not selling a product or providing information to the public via the internet. Although it may be interacting in some sense with the alleged infringers, in doing so, it only identifies IP addresses and adds them to a list of copyright infringers. The fact that GuardaLey then provided that information to the Dunlap Defendants does not equate with purposeful availment of the benefits and protections of Massachusetts laws. Indeed, "[i]n the era of Facebook . . . most websites now allow users to 'share' an article, choose to 'like' a particular page, add comments, and email the site owners . . . If virtually every website is now interactive in some measure, it cannot be that every website subjects itself to litigation in any forum-unless Congress dictates otherwise." *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106272, [WL] at 6. "Interactivity alone cannot be the linchpin for personal jurisdiction." Id.

Perhaps because GuardaLey's contacts with Massachusetts are so attenuated, Shirokov attempts to impute other defendants' activities in Massachusetts to GuardaLey by invoking the doctrine of piercing the corporate veil as a basis for its argument that the Court has personal jurisdiction over GuardaLey. [*39] (Docket No. 56 at 15). He also argues that USCG is an agent of GuardaLey. (Docket No. 73 at 7-8). In support of this argument, Shirokov points out that at least one of the managers of USCG, Benjamin Perino, is also a managing director of GuardaLey. In addition, Shirokov argues that GuardaLey and DGW are both partners in USCG. (Docket No. 56 at 15). Shirokov fails to recognize, however, that the mere existence of a business relationship between two corporate entities does not establish an agency relationship or a basis for disregarding the corporate form. Am. Home Assurance Co. v. Sport Maska, Inc., 808 F. Supp. 67, 72 (D. Mass. 1992). In addition, Shirokov has not proffered sufficient evidence of an agency relationship between GuardaLey and any of the other defendants.

Although Shirokov argues in his brief that GuardaLey has been a primary participant in structuring the Achte Lawsuit and similar litigation and that USCG acts for GuardaLey (see Docket No. 56 at 14; Docket No. 73 at 8), he has put forth no competent evidence to support those arguments. In order to defeat a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, Shirokov "must do more than simply surmise the existence of [*40] a favorable factual scenario; he must verify the facts alleged through materials of evidentiary quality." Barrett v. Lombardi, 239 F.3d 23, 27 (1st Cir. 2001). His lawyers' unsupported arguments in the opposition to the motion to dismiss are insufficient, even under the relaxed prima facie standard, to establish jurisdictional facts. Id. Accordingly, the Court finds that Shirokov has failed to show that GuardaLey substantially directed its activities to Massachusetts to constitute purposeful availment.

Because Shirokov has failed to establish the relatedness and purposeful availment components, this Court need go no further in its jurisdictional analysis. Swiss Am. Bank, 274 F.3d at 625. Accordingly, this Court recommends that the District Judge find that there is no jurisdiction over GuardaLey in this District Court.

5. Jurisdiction Under Rule 4(k)(2)

The Court's findings above do not end the matter. Shirokov also argues that GuardaLey is subject to the Court's jurisdiction under Rule 4(k)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (Docket No. 73 at 4-5). Rule 4(k)(2) provides:

> (2) Federal Claim Outside State-Court Jurisdiction. For a claim that arises under federal law, serving a summons [*41] or filing a waiver of service establishes personal jurisdiction over a defendant if:
> (A) the defendant is not subject to jurisdiction in any state's courts of general jurisdiction; and
> (B) exercising jurisdiction is consistent with the United States Constitution and laws.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(k)(2). Rule 4(k)(2) serves as "a species of federal long-arm statute." Swiss Am. Bank, 191 F.3d 30, 40 (1st Cir. 1999). Before this rule was enacted, "foreign defendants who lacked single-state contacts sufficient to bring them within the reach of a given state's long-arm statute . . . but who had enough contacts with the United States as a whole to make personal jurisdiction over them in a United States court constitutional, could evade responsibility for civil violations of federal laws that did not provide specifically for service of process." Id. Rule 4(k)(2) closed that loophole. Id.

In order for Rule 4(k)(2) to apply, three requirements must be met: (1) the plaintiff's claim must be one arising under federal law; (2) the putative defendant must be beyond the jurisdictional reach of any state court of general jurisdiction; and (3) the federal court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendant [*42] must not offend the Constitution or other federal law. Id. at 38.

Here, Shirokov has presented evidence that GuardaLey operates a sales division in Los Angeles, California since at least early 2010, headed by Barbara Mudge. (Docket No. 56 at 7, Docket No. 56-1, Docket No. 56-9 at 3-4). The presence of a business office in California would likely subject GuardaLey to personal jurisdiction there. Accordingly, Shirokov has failed to carry his burden of proving that Rule 4(k)(2) applies to this case.

For the foregoing reasons, this Court finds that it does not have personal jurisdiction over GuardaLey and recommends that the District Judge allow GuardaLey's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and dismiss all claims against GuardaLey. [6]

B. Motions To Dismiss For Failure To State A Claim

1. Standard Of Review

"To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted [*43] as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. "The plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id.

The Court must accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiffs' favor. Langadinos v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 199 F.3d 68, 69 (1st Cir. 2000). While the court must accept as true all of the factual allegations contained in the complaint, that doctrine is not applicable to legal conclusions. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949. "Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Id.; see also Sanchez v. Pereira-Castillo, 590 F.3d 31, 48 (1st Cir. 2009) ("In other words, a plaintiff must offer 'more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me [*44] accusation,' in order to claim a 'plausible entitlement to relief.'") (citations omitted). Accordingly, a complaint does not state a claim for relief where the well-pleaded facts fail to warrant an inference of any more than the mere possibility of liability. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1950.

2. The Plaintiff Has Standing To Bring This Action

The defendants argue that Shirokov has no standing to bring this action because he has not suffered any injury in fact. Specifically, they argue that because Shirokov did not pay to settle Achte's claims, he does not have an injury sufficient to confer Article III standing. (Docket No. 29 at 8-10; Docket No. 44 at 27-31; Docket No. 48 at 6-7). Shirokov argues that the threat of litigation and his subsequent incursion of attorneys' fees establishes standing. (Docket No. 32 at 5-7).

If Shirokov lacks standing to bring this matter before the Court, the Court lacks jurisdiction to decide the merits of the case. Libertad v. Welch, 53 F.3d 428, 436 (1st Cir. 1995) (citation omitted). "Thus, standing is a threshold issue, determining whether the court has the power to hear the case, and whether the putative plaintiff is entitled to have the court decide the merits [*45] of the case." Id.

[6] Although the Court finds that GuardaLey is not subject to personal jurisdiction in this Court, the Court also addresses GuardaLey's motion to dismiss based on the merits of Shirokov's claims should the District Judge disagree with this Court's conclusion regarding personal jurisdiction.

"Standing involves 'a blend of constitutional requirements and prudential considerations.'" New Hampshire Right to Life PAC v. Gardner, 99 F.3d 8, 13 (1st Cir. 1996) (quoting Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, 454 U.S. 464, 471, 102 S. Ct. 752, 70 L. Ed. 2d 700 (1982)). A federal court is empowered only to decide "cases" and "controversies." Id. (citing U.S. Const. art. III). "Not every dispute is a case or controversy. 'The presence of a disagreement, however sharp and acrimonious it may be, is insufficient by itself to meet Art. III's requirements.'" Id. (citation omitted).

In order to establish standing, Shirokov must show that (I) he personally has suffered some actual or imminent injury as a result of the challenged conduct; (2) the injury can fairly be traced to that conduct; and (3) the injury likely will be redressed by a favorable decision from the court. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). An injury in fact must be concrete and particularized rather than conjectural or hypothetical. Summers v. Earth Island Inst., 555 U.S. 488, 493, 129 S. Ct. 1142, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2009).

The injury must be real but not necessarily economic. United States v. AVX Corp., 962 F.2d 108, 113-14 (1st Cir. 1992). [*46] "A mere interest in an event-no matter how passionate or sincere the interest and no matter how charged with public import the event-will not substitute for an actual injury." Id. at 114.

In a putative class action, the named plaintiff must individually fulfill the standing requirement at the time of the filing before he can represent class members. Cavallaro v. UMass Memorial Health Care, Inc., No. 09-40152-FDS, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61003, 2011 WL 2295023, at * 2 (D. Mass. June 8, 2011). The fact that "a suit may be a class action . . . adds nothing to the question of standing, for even named plaintiffs who represent a class 'must allege and show that they personally have been injured, not that injury has been suffered by other, unidentified members of the class to which they belong and which they purport to represent.'" Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 40 n. 20, 96 S. Ct. 1917, 48 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1976) (quotations omitted). The plaintiff must allege a distinct and palpable injury to himself, even if it is an injury shared by a large class of other possible litigants. Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 501, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (1975).

Shirokov bears the burden of establishing Article III standing. Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561. "Since [the elements of standing] [*47] are not mere pleading requirements but rather an indispensable part of the plaintiff's case, each element must be supported in the same way as any other matter on which the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, i.e., with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation." Id.; see also AVX Corp., 962 F.2d at 114. The First Circuit has held that "where standing is at issue, heightened specificity is obligatory at the pleading stage." AVX Corp., 962 F.2d at 115. The complainant must set forth reasonably definite factual allegations regarding each material element needed to sustain standing. Id. Accordingly, "the facts necessary to support standing must clearly appear in the record and 'cannot be inferred argumentatively from averments in the pleadings.'" Id. (quotations omitted).

The Complaint alleges that the defendants' copyright scheme has caused damages to the class members in the form of payment of inflated settlements and/or related expenses in defending themselves against the copyright scheme. (Complaint, ¶ 324). However, Shirokov alleges that he did not pay anything to the defendants in response to the Letter. Instead, Shirokov alleges that [*48] he incurred legal costs "in reliance on the false allegations of the Letter and in order to determine the merits of its claims." (Complaint, ¶ 232). Shirokov also alleges that he would have avoided those costs had the Letter been truthful. (Id.).

Based on the allegations in the Complaint, Shirokov argues that three distinct "injuries" confer standing: (I) the threat of potential litigation against him; (2) the fees incurred by him in determining the merits of Achte's copyright claims; and (3) the legal fees incurred by him in this action. As detailed below, only the second category confers standing on Shirokov.

Shirokov argues that he has suffered an injury-in-fact based on the threat of potential litigation against him. He states that Achte, via DGW, "has already sued Plaintiff and the entire Class in 2010, and Moving Defendants threatened to sue each member of the Class individually." (Docket No. 32 at 5). However, the case cited by Shirokov to support this proposition arises out of the limited context of First Amendment rights that are inapplicable to the present case. See Gardner, 99 F.3d at 11-12 (declaratory judgment action seeking ruling that state campaign finance statutes unlawfully [*49] abridged plaintiff's free speech rights).

In any event, any potential threat of litigation against Shirokov is speculative and too remote to support a finding of standing. [7] In order to comply with Article III's requirements, "a plaintiff must face a threat of injury that is both 'real and immediate,' not 'conjectural' or 'hypothetical.'" In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6, 14 (1st Cir. 2008) (citation omitted). Shirokov's own Complaint alleges that Achte abandoned its claims against 4,437 of the Class members. He does not allege that he is one of the remaining defendants in the Achte Lawsuit. (Complaint, ¶¶ 209-212). He has also alleged that the defendants' alleged scheme is based on obtaining settlements, not judgments, and that the defendants do not actually intend to prosecute the vast majority of the copyright claims they bring. (Complaint, ¶ 5, 8, 152-153). Indeed, eighteen months after receiving the Letter, Shirokov has not been named as a defendant in the Achte Lawsuit or any other lawsuit by Achte. [8]

To the extent that Shirokov claims that the legal fees incurred in this action constitute an injury sufficient to confer Article III standing, he is wrong. (Docket No. 32 at 6). "[A] plaintiff cannot achieve standing to litigate a substantive issue by bringing suit for the cost of bringing suit." Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 107, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1998). "The litigation must give the plaintiff some other benefit besides reimbursement of costs that are a byproduct of the litigation itself. An 'interest in attorney's fees is . . . insufficient to create an Article III case or controversy where none exists on the merits of the underlying claim.'" Id. (citations omitted).

Nevertheless, Shirokov has standing to bring this action based on his allegations that he incurred legal fees in connection with the Letter. Shirokov's out-of-pocket loss of money is an injury. The natural and probable consequences of the defendants' alleged [*51] actions include the costs incurred in defending the copyright claims. As such, fees incurred in connection with the Letter would be considered compensatory damages, not attorneys' fees. See, e.g., Millennium Equity Holdings, LLC v. Mahlowitz, 456 Mass. 627, 645, 925 N.E.2d 513 (2010) ("The 'natural and probable' consequences of an abuse of process lawsuit include the costs incurred in successfully defending the charge. As such, fees incurred for defending such a lawsuit are considered compensatory damages, not attorney's fees.") (citation omitted). Accordingly, the Court finds that Shirokov has standing to bring this suit.

3. The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine Does Not Bar Shirokov's Claims

The Dunlap Defendants and Achte rely on the Noerr-Pennington doctrine as a ground for dismissal of all of Shirokov's claims. (Docket No. 29 at 14-16; Docket No. 48 at 8-11). Although, as set forth below, the Court ultimately concludes that there are independent bases supporting dismissal of most of Shirokov's claims, the Court finds that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not bar Shirokov's claims.

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which derives from United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965), and Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight. Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961), [*52] shields from antitrust liability entities who join together to influence government action, even if they seek to restrain competition or to damage competitors. Davric Maine Corp. v. Rancourt, 216 F.3d 143, 147 (1st Cir. 2000) (citations omitted). The doctrine applies to petitions before legislatures, administrative agencies, and the courts. Id. (citations omitted). In addition, some courts have extended the doctrine to pre-litigation activities, such as threats to sue and demand letters. See, e.g., Primetime 24 Joint Venture v. Nat'l Broad. Co., Inc., 219 F.3d 92, 100 (2nd Cir. 2000) (collecting cases).

[7] At oral argument, the parties confirmed that Shirokov has not been named or otherwise identified as a defendant in the Achte Lawsuit, which was [*50] filed almost two years ago.

[8] In determining whether a plaintiff has standing, a court is required to look at the facts as they existed at the time when the lawsuit was filed. Keene Corp. v. United States, 508 U.S. 200, 207, 113 S. Ct. 2035, 124 L. Ed. 2d 118 (1993); Lujan, 504 U.S. at 571 n. 4.

There is some debate, however, as to whether the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies outside of the antitrust field. Compare Sosa v. DirecTV, Inc., 437 F.3d 923, 931 (9th Cir. 2006) (Noerr-Pennington is "a generic rule of statutory construction, applicable to any statutory interpretation that could implicate the rights protected by the Petition Clause.") with Cardtoons, L.C. v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n, 208 F.3d 885, 891 (10th Cir. 2000) (holding that prelitigation threats communicated solely between private parties are not afforded immunity from suit by the right of petition [*53] guaranteed by the First Amendment). Shirokov argues that the doctrine only applies to antitrust claims. (Docket No. 32 at 16-18). The First Circuit has not addressed the issue directly but its decisions indicate that it may view the Noerr-Pennington doctrine expansively. See, e.g., Tomaiolo v. Mallinoff, 281 F.3d 1, 11 n. 9 (1st Cir. 2002). Nevertheless, this Court declines to extend the doctrine to include the conduct at issue here at this stage of the case. This Court finds the Tenth Circuit's analysis in Cardtoons persuasive.

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine, as originally formulated by the Supreme Court, rests on two separate grounds. First, it relies on a statutory interpretation of the Sherman Act that limits the scope of the Act so as to not reach activity associated with the political process. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 137-38. Second, it rests on the First Amendment right of citizens to petition the government. Id.

Because the instant dispute is not regulated by the Sherman Act, this Court is reluctant to apply the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. A number of courts have acknowledged the incongruity of applying the Noerr-Pennington doctrine outside of the antitrust context where immunity is [*54] cognizable only on First Amendment grounds. See generally Cardtoons, 208 F.3d at 891. In Cardtoons, the Tenth Circuit explained:

> While we do not question the application of the right to petition outside of antitrust, it is a bit of a misnomer to refer to it as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine; a doctrine which was based on two rationales. In our view, it is more appropriate to refer to immunity as Noerr-Pennington immunity only when applied to antitrust claims. In all other contexts . . . such immunity derives from the right to petition.

Cardtoons, 208 F.3d at 889-90 (emphasis in original). This Court therefore concludes that the clearest, if not most legally accurate, manner to examine the defendants' claim of immunity is under the Petition Clause of the First Amendment.

The First Amendment guarantees "the right of the people . . . to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." U.S. Const. amend. I. The right to petition "is implicit in '[t]he very idea of government, republican in form.'" McDonald v. Smith, 472 U.S. 479, 482, 105 S. Ct. 2787, 86 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1985) (quotations omitted). The right to petition, however, is not absolute. The Petition Clause "neither enjoys 'special First Amendment status' nor confers [*55] an 'absolute immunity' for privilege.'" We, Inc. v. City of Philadelphia, 174 F.3d 322, 327 (3rd Cir. 1999) (quoting McDonald, 472 U.S. at 484-85). Accordingly, a claim of immunity under the Petition Clause must be evaluated under the same First Amendment principles that apply to other constitutionally protected activity.

In Cardtoons, the Tenth Circuit found that written, prelitigation threats between private parties are not entitled to immunity under the First Amendment. Cardtoons, 208 F.3d at 891. The plaintiff contracted with a printing company to create parody baseball cards containing images of major league players. The Major League Baseball Players Association ("MLBPA") sent cease and desist letters to both the plaintiff and the printing company. Upon receiving its letter, the printing company informed the plaintiff it would not print the cards. The plaintiff then filed suit alleging that the MLBPA had tortuously interfered with its printing contract. Both the district court and an appeals panel found the MLBPA was immune from liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine even though the case did not involve antitrust law. Cardtoons, L.C. v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n, 182 F.3d 1132 (10th Cir. 1999). [*56] On rehearing, however, an en banc panel found the prelitigation threats in the cease and desist letter were not afforded immunity by either the First Amendment right to petition or the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Cardtoons, 208 F.3d at 886. The Tenth Circuit reasoned that if the plaintiff had sued MLBPA for libel, the suit similarly would be allowed to proceed. Id. at 891. "Statements made in a letter threatening litigation are not absolutely protected by the petition clause of the First Amendment and are subject to the principles of state common law and state statutory law." Id. at 892. The court concluded by noting that "[w]hile there are many persuasive policy arguments in favor of granting immunity to private threats of litigation, these do not override the clear language of the First Amendment. Such arguments are best addressed to state legislative bodies." Id.

Here, it is difficult to see how subjecting the defendants to liability for their conduct, if appropriate, would satisfy the policy objectives of the doctrine. At issue in this motion is not the defendants' right to use demand letters as a means of encouraging settlement, but rather their use of false or misleading statements [*57] in the demand letters. If Shirokov's allegations were to be proven at trial, punishing the defendants will not deter future use of demand letters. At best, it will encourage the defendants to investigate carefully their accusations and to be precise in the language they use when attempting to settle with suspected infringers. Accordingly, this Court finds that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not apply under the circumstances of this case at this time.

Even if the Court were to find the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applicable to this case, the doctrine is also limited by the "sham" exception. Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993). In order to qualify as a "sham," "the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." Id. "Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation." Id. In the Ninth Circuit, which has extended Noerr-Pennington to cases such as this one, the "sham exception" may apply in three circumstances: (1) where the lawsuit is objectively baseless and the defendant's motive in bringing [*58] it was unlawful; (2) where the conduct involves a series of lawsuits brought pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for an unlawful purpose; and (3) if the allegedly unlawful conduct consists of making intentional misrepresentations to the court, litigation can be deemed a sham if a party's knowing fraud upon, or its intentional misrepresentations to, the court deprive the litigation of its legitimacy. Sosa, 437 F.3d at 939 (citations omitted).

Under the Copyright Act, a person who violates the exclusive rights of a copyright owner is an infringer of the copyright or right of the owner. 17 U.S.C. § 501(a). The legal or beneficial owner of an exclusive right under a copyright "is entitled . . . to institute an action for any infringement of that particular right." 17 U.S.C. § 501(b). Achte is the holder of copyright of Far Cry, a fact that Shirokov does not dispute. Accordingly, Achte has the right to bring suit against an alleged infringer, assuming its copyright is valid.

Here, however, Shirokov alleges that DGW and Achte obtained a copyright registration for Far Cry by fraud. (Complaint, ¶¶ 90-125). Based on the fraudulently obtained copyright, [*59] they then filed the Achte Lawsuit knowing that Achte was not entitled to statutory damages. (Complaint, ¶¶ 134-155). Shirokov also alleges that the defendants used the process of the lawsuit, as opposed to the outcome of the lawsuit, to extort settlements from the class based on the threat of statutory damages. (Complaint, ¶ 156). They never intended to actually litigate the claims. (Complaint, ¶ 157). He has also alleged that the defendants acted in bad faith. (See generally Complaint at ¶¶ 24, 178, 236, 238). Therefore, Shirokov has alleged sufficient facts that, if proven, would establish that the Achte Lawsuit was a sham. Accordingly, at this early stage of the proceedings, the Court cannot conclude that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, even if applicable, bars Shirokov's claims. Accordingly, the Court recommends that the District Judge deny the defendants' motions to dismiss to the extent that they are based on the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

4. Shirokov's Claims Are Not Barred By The Massachusetts Litigation Privilege

The Dunlap Defendants and Achte argue that Shirokov's claims are also barred by the absolute litigation privilege covering attorneys' statements made in connection with [*60] the conduct of litigation. (Docket No. 29 at 17-21; Docket No. 48 at 15-16). On a motion to dismiss, the Court finds that the defendants cannot show on the face of the Complaint and other materials properly before the Court that the litigation privilege bars Shirokov's claims.

"Under Massachusetts law, [9] an attorney's statements are absolutely privileged 'where such statements are made by an attorney engaged in his function as an attorney whether in the institution or conduct of litigation or in

[9] It is not clear whether Massachusetts law applies to Shirokov's claims. Other than the fact that Shirokov is a Massachusetts resident and presumably received the Letter in Massachusetts, the conduct of which he complains did not occur here. Shirokov's claims involve alleged conduct by Virginia lawyers in connection with the Achte Lawsuit pending in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Although the plaintiff has briefly referenced this issue (see Docket No. 32 at 14, n. 13), neither he nor any of the defendants have engaged in a choice of law analysis. Normally, the first step in applying choice of law conferences and other communications preliminary to litigation.'" Blanchette v. Cataldo, 734 F.2d 869, 877 (1st Cir. 1984) (quoting Sriberg v. Raymond, 370 Mass. 105, 109, 345 N.E.2d 882 (1976)). This doctrine was motivated by "the public policy of permitting attorneys complete freedom of expression and candor in communications in their efforts to secure justice for their clients." Meltzer v. Grant, 193 F. Supp. 2d 373, 377 (D. Mass. 2002) (quotation omitted). The privilege applies as a general bar to all civil liability based upon an attorney's statements, and it applies even if the offensive statements were uttered maliciously or in bad faith. Doe v. Nutter, McClennen & Fish, 41 Mass. App. Ct. 137, 140, 668 N.E.2d 1329 (1996). [*61] The litigation privilege applies not only to statements by attorneys but also to communications by a party as long as the other conditions for the privilege are present. Giuffrida v. High Country Investor, Inc., 73 Mass. App. Ct. 225, 242, 897 N.E.2d 82 (2008).

The litigation privilege applies to communications made preliminary to proposed judicial proceedings if judicial proceedings are contemplated in good faith and under serious consideration. Meltzer, 193 F. Supp. 2d at 381. [10] If judicial proceedings are already underway, the privilege applies if the statements are "pertinent" to the litigation. Id. at 378 (citing Blanchette, 734 F.2d at 877). In other words, the statements must have some reference to the subject matter of the litigation, although they need not be strictly relevant to any issue in the litigation. Leavitt v. Bickerton, 855 F. Supp. 455, 456-57 (D. Mass. 1994).

"Whether an absolute privilege applies is determined on a case-by-case basis, after a fact-specific analysis." Fisher v. Lint, 69 Mass. App. Ct. 360, 365-66, 868 N.E.2d 161 (2007) (citation omitted). In addition, as the parties asserting the privilege, the defendants have the burden of establishing entitlement to the privilege. Meltzer, 193 F. Supp. 2d at 381. Here, Shirokov alleges that at the time that the Letter was written, litigation against him or the class members was not contemplated in good faith. Although DGW had filed the Achte Lawsuit on Achte's behalf, Shirokov alleges that it was filed for the improper purpose [*64] of extorting settlement and that the defendants never intended to actually prosecute the Achte Lawsuit. Cf. Int'l Floor Crafts, Inc. v. Adams, 477 F. Supp. 2d 336, 340 (D. Mass. 2007) (litigation privilege will not bar a claim for tortious interference on the basis of the filing of a lawsuit if it is alleged that the suit was filed for the ulterior purpose of interfering with a prospective business relationship). Indeed, in the twenty months since Shirokov received the Letter, he has not been sued.

Accordingly, in this case, the application of the privilege is not properly resolved on a motion to dismiss. On a motion to dismiss, the Court must take all of the plaintiff's allegations as true. Thus, a motion to dismiss on the basis of the litigation privilege only succeeds when the entitlement to the privilege is demonstrated by the complaint itself. If the complaint construed in the plaintiff's favor does not support the application of the privilege, the issue is more properly resolved on a motion for summary judgment or at trial. Here, viewing all of the Complaint's allegations as true, the Court cannot rule as a matter of law that the litigation privilege applies and bars Shirokov's [*65] claims. [11] principles is to ascertain whether the choice will affect the outcome; in other words, whether there is an actual conflict of laws. See Williams v. Astra USA, Inc., 68 F. Supp. 2d 29, 36 (D. Mass. 1999). None of the parties have raised the substantive law of any jurisdiction other than Massachusetts. Given that the parties [*62] did not raise a conflict-of-laws issue, it is deemed that none exists. Id.; see also *Doricent v. Am. Airlines, Inc., No. 91-12084Y, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15143, 1993 WL 437670, at 8 (D. Mass. Oct. 19, 1993).

[10] The Massachusetts Appeals Court's statement in Doe, supra, that the litigation privilege applies even if a communication is in bad faith applies only in cases where the litigation is already underway. See Meltzer, 193 F. Supp. 2d at 379-80. In Doe, the Appeals Court was dealing with a particular scenario in which the allegedly offending letter was written by an attorney for the defendants [*63] in reply to a letter from plaintiff demanding relief and threatening litigation if relief was not forthcoming. 41 Mass. App. Ct. at 141. What the Appeals Court seems to have been saying is that in such situations, the reply is not subject to the test of whether the defendant was contemplating litigation in good faith and that litigation was under serious consideration. Rather, the test which is applies is the test applicable during the course of litigation, i.e., whether the communication was pertinent to the proceedings, or, in that case, pertinent to the demand which was made. Id.

[11] Even if the privilege applied, there remains an issue as to whether the privilege would bar anything more than Shirokov's state law causes of action. The Dunlap Defendants argue that all claims are barred. They further argue that the principle that a state privilege cannot bar a federal cause of action is limited to Fair Debt Collection Practices ("FDCPA") claims. See Docket No. 71 at 3. However, a number of cases undercut the Dunlap Defendants' arguments and refuse to apply state privileges to federal Having found that Shirokov has standing and that the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine and the [*66] Massachusetts litigation privilege do not bar Shirokov's claims at this stage of the case, the Court now turns to the merits of each of the Counts of the Complaint.

5. Shirokov Has Failed To State A Claim Under The Computer Fraud And Abuse Act Because He Has Not Alleged Damage Or Loss Within The Meaning Of The Statute

In Count 4 of the Complaint, Shirokov pleads claims against the defendants under the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1030, et seq. (the "CFAA"). "The CFAA is the centerpiece of federal enforcement efforts against computer based crimes." Healthcare Advocates, Inc. v. Harding, Earley, Follmer & Frailey, 497 F. Supp. 2d 627, 646 (E.D. Pa. 2007). Shirokov bases his claims on three subsections of the statute: Sections 1030(a)(4), 1030(a)(5)(C), and 1030(a)(2)(C) (Complaint, ¶¶ 279, 283 and 284, respectively). The defendants move to dismiss Count 4 on the grounds that Shirokov has failed to plead that he has suffered "damage" or "loss" within the meaning of the statute. (Docket No. 29 at 23-26; Docket No. 44 at 25-27; Docket No. 48 at 18-20). This Court agrees.

Section 1030(a)(4) makes it unlawful to access a protected computer without, or beyond the scope of any, authorization, [*67] knowingly and with intent to defraud and as a result obtaining anything of value. 18 U.S.C. § 1030(a)(4). Section 1030(a)(5)(C) makes it a crime to "intentionally access[] a protected computer without authorization, and as a result of such conduct, [to] cause[] damage and loss." 18 U.S.C. § 1030(a)(5)(C). Finally, Section 1030(a)(2)(C) makes it a crime to "intentionally access[] a computer without authorization or exceed[] authorized access, and thereby obtain[] . . . information from any protected computer." 18 U.S.C. § 1030(a)(2)(C).

Although the CFAA is primarily a criminal statute, a person may bring a civil action against the violator so long as the person has suffered "damage or loss by reason of a violation" of the CFAA. 18 U.S.C. § 1030(g); see also EF Cultural Travel BV v. Explorica, Inc., 274 F.3d 577, 584 (1st Cir. 2001). The CFAA defines "damage" as "any impairment to the integrity or availability of data, a program, a system, or information." 18 U.S.C. § 1030(e)(8). "Loss" is defined as "any reasonable cost to any victim, including the cost of responding to an offense, conducting a damage assessment, and restoring the data, program, system, or information to its condition [*68] prior to the offense, and any revenue lost, cost incurred, or other consequential damages incurred because of interruption of service." 18 U.S.C. § 1030(e)(11).

Shirokov's allegations that he suffered damage or losses as a result of the alleged CFAA violations constitute nothing more than "a formulaic recitation of the elements." Bell Atlantic Corp., 550 U.S. at 555. Shirokov has not alleged any damage to his computer or information or programs contained thereon, or loss of the use of his computer that fits within the statutory definition. See 18 U.S.C. § 1030(e)(8).

Similarly, he has not alleged any facts supporting a loss under the meaning of the CFAA. Courts have interpreted loss to include the cost of responding to a security breach, such as the cost of performing a computer system damage assessment and remedying the damage and any costs incurred because the computer cannot function while or until repairs are made. NCMIC Fin. Corp. v. Artino, 638 F. Supp. 2d 1042, 1063-64 (S.D. Iowa 2009); Wilson v. Moreau, 440 F. Supp. 2d 81,109-10 (D.R.I. 2006). "[T]here is nothing to suggest that the 'loss' or costs alleged can be unrelated to the computer." Wilson, 440 F.Supp. 2d at 109-10. Moreover, [*69] courts have held that legal fees do not constitute a loss under the CFAA. See Wilson, 440 F. Supp. 2d at 110 (rejecting plaintiffs' argument that their loss met the $5,000 statutory threshold under the CFAA, because "plaintiff's litigation expenses are not directly attributable to Defendants' computer browsing, and are not economic damages in excess of $5,000 claims besides FDCPA claims. See, e.g., Steffes v. Stepan Co., 144 F.3d 1070, 1074 (7th Cir. 1998) (citations omitted) ("A state absolute litigation privilege purporting to confer immunity from suit cannot defeat a federal cause of action"); Kimes v. Stone, 84 F.3d 1121, 1127 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that the California absolute litigation privilege does not immunize attorneys from liability under 42 U.S.C. § 1983); Conditioned Ocular Enhancement, Inc. v. Bonaventura, 458 F. Supp. 2d 704, 708 (N.D. Ill. 2006) (Illinois litigation privilege cannot confer immunity against Lanham Act claims).

as required by the statute"); see also NCMIC Fin. Corp., 638 F. Supp. 2d at 1065; Healthcare Advocates, Inc., 497 F. Supp. 2d at 647. [12] Shirokov has not alleged that his ability to use his computer has been affected or impaired, or that he was required to repair his computer in any way. As discussed elsewhere in this opinion, the only injury that Shirokov alleges in the Complaint as a result of the defendants' conduct is the incursion of legal fees in evaluating the Letter's claims. Shirokov's legal expenses are not directly attributable to the defendants' alleged access of his computer and, therefore, do not constitute a loss under the CFAA. [13]

Accordingly, this Court recommends that the District Court dismiss Count 4 of the Complaint.

6. Shirokov Has Failed To State A Claim Of Conspiracy And Aiding And Abetting Against GuardaLey But Those Claims Survive Against the Dunlap Defendants And Achte

Plaintiff brings a series of claims sounding in conspiracy: conspiracy to commit fraud (Count 3), aiding and abetting fraud (Count 5), and civil conspiracy (Count 13). The defendants have moved to dismiss these counts on a variety of bases. The Dunlap Defendants state that Shirokov has failed to state a claim [*71] for "true conspiracy." (Docket No. 29 at 28). They also argue that these claims all require liability for the predicate torts before liability can be apportioned to ultimate defendants, and, because the plaintiff's counts for the underlying torts fail, the plaintiff's claims for conspiracy or aiding and abetting must fail as well. (Docket No. 29 at 30-31). Achte argues that it may not be held vicariously liable for the acts of its attorneys and the Complaint fails to allege enough facts to impose vicarious liability on Achte as a knowing and intentional participant in the alleged copyright scheme. (Docket No. 48 at 11-14, 16-18). Finally, GuardaLey argues that the Complaint fails to allege any facts supporting that GuardaLey was a participant in the copyright scheme. (Docket No. 44 at 16-20). The Court finds that Shirokov has failed to state a claim of conspiracy and aiding and abetting against GuardaLey but these claims survive as to the Dunlap Defendants and Achte.

Massachusetts law recognizes two types of causes of action for civil conspiracy. The first, referred to as "true conspiracy," is a "rare" and "very limited" cause of action. Aetna Cas. Sur. Co. v. P&B Autobody, 43 F.3d 1546, 1563 (1st Cir. 1994). [*72] In order to state a claim for true conspiracy, the plaintiff must allege and prove that by "mere force of numbers acting in unison," the defendants exercised "some peculiar power of coercion of the plaintiff which any individual standing in a like relation to the plaintiff would not have had." Fleming v. Dane, 304 Mass. 46, 50, 22 N.E.2d 609 (1939) (citations omitted). "This cause of action seems to have been applied principally to remedy direct economic coercion, as in 'the combined actions of groups of employers or employees, where through the power of combination pressure is created and results brought about different in kind from anything that could have been accomplished by separate individuals or in other kinds of concerted refusals to deal." Mass. Laborers' Health & Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 62 F. Supp. 2d 236, 244 (D. Mass. 1999) (quoting Fleming, 304 Mass. at 50).

The second type of conspiracy claim is "more akin to a theory of common law joint liability in tort." Aetna Cas. Sur. Co., 43 F.3d at 1564. To state a claim for this type of conspiracy, the plaintiff must allege "first, a common design or an agreement, although not necessarily express, between two or more persons to do [*73] a wrongful act and, second, proof of some tortious act in furtherance of the agreement." Id. The plaintiff need not prove the existence of an agreement by direct evidence but the agreement may be inferred from conduct of the parties suggesting that [12] Shirokov cites these cases, along with *ResDev, LLC v. Lot Builders Ass'n, Inc., No. 6:04-cv-1374, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19099, at 10-12 (M.D. Fla. Aug. 10, 2005) for the proposition [*70] that although "attorneys' fees in prosecuting a CFAA action do not count toward the $5,000 statutory threshold . . . attorneys' fees incurred responding to the CFAA violation do." (Docket No. 32 at 32 n. 54) (emphasis in original). These cases do not support Shirokov's argument. On the contrary, they all emphasize that a loss under the CFAA must be related to the computer itself.

[13] Because the Court finds that Shirokov has failed to plead enough facts to support a loss or damage under the CFAA, it is not necessary to address whether the conduct alleged constitutes access without authorization or exceeding authorization under the CFAA.

they had an implied meeting of the minds. Payton v. Abbott Labs, 512 F. Supp. 1031, 1035 (D. Mass. 1981) (citations omitted). Thus, the distinction between the two types of conspiracy claims has been described as follows:

> For 'true conspiracy,' the plaintiff must prove that concerted action gave the defendants a 'peculiar power of coercion' over the plaintiff enabling them to bring about results that are different in kind from what any of them could achieve individually. The exercise of this 'peculiar power of coercion' is itself the wrong, and no other tortious act need be shown. In contrast, the 'concerted action' version extends liability to those who assist or encourage others to commit torts without necessarily any proof either of a 'peculiar power of coercion' or even of an explicit agreement among the defendants. Of course, there can be no joint liability for a tort unless there has been a tort, so the 'concerted action' version depends [*74] on proof of underlying tortious conduct for which liability can be assigned. While the term 'civil conspiracy' apparently has been used loosely to apply to both versions, only the 'true conspiracy' version defines an independent cause of action; the 'concerted action' version simply defines who may be liable for other torts.

Mass. Laborers' Health & Welfare Fund, 62 F. Supp. 2d at 244 (internal citations omitted).

Finally, aiding and abetting is another variation of joint tort liability. "Under Massachusetts law liability for aiding and abetting a tort attaches where: (1) the defendant provides 'substantial assistance or encouragement to the other party;' and (2) the defendant has 'unlawful intent, i.e., knowledge that the other party is breaching a duty and the intent to assist that party's actions.'" Go-Best Assets Ltd. v. Citizens Bank of Mass., 79 Mass. App. Ct. 473, 947 N.E.2d 581, 592 (2011) (citations omitted). Plaintiff "must at least demonstrate some measure of 'active participation' and the knowing provision of substantial assistance . . . to the principal's . . . alleged fraud." Schultz v. R.I. Hosp. Trust Nat'l Bank, 94 F.3d 721, 730 (1st Cir. 1996) (citations omitted). A claim of aiding [*75] and abetting must meet the heightened pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Bamberg v. SG Cowen, 236 F. Supp. 2d 79, 91 (D. Mass. 2002).

In his Complaint, Shirokov appears to collapse "true" conspiracy with the "concerted action" theory of conspiracy. The Complaint alleges that the defendants "acted in concert and participated in a common plan to achieve" unlawful ends, and that the defendants, acting together, "exercise[d] coercive powers, over Shirokov and the Class, that they would not have had if acting independently." (Complaint, ¶¶ 385-386). Other than the conclusory mention of "coercive powers" (see Complaint at ¶ 386), Shirokov has not alleged any facts that would give rise to a plausible claim that by the force of their number, the defendants exercised some exceptional coercive power over him. He has not alleged that the defendants' combination was such that he was deprived of his ability to evaluate Achte's copyright claims against him. Indeed, he did not succumb to any coercive power because he did not pay to settle the claims. "There is no question that an allegation of a generally exerted and generally felt power of coercion is not sufficient to plead the independent [*76] tort of 'true conspiracy' as recognized in Massachusetts." Mass. Laborers' Health & Welfare Fund, 62 F. Supp. 2d at 245. Thus, the Court finds that Shirokov has failed to state a claim for true conspiracy.

The Dunlap Defendants have moved to dismiss the "concerted action" conspiracy claim on the basis that the underlying tort claims fail and therefore, the conspiracy claim must fail as well. (Docket No. 29 at 30-31). However, as explained in Sections III(B)(7) and (14) below, this Court has recommended that the District Court deny the defendants' motions to dismiss with respect to Shirokov's negligent misrepresentation and Chapter 93A claims. [14] Accordingly, the Court recommends that the District Court deny the Dunlap Defendants' motion to dismiss with respect to Shirokov's claim of conspiracy by concerted action.

Achte argues that it cannot be held vicariously [*77] liable for the acts of its attorneys and that Shirokov has failed to allege enough facts to show that Achte joined in the alleged copyright scheme. However, the Complaint alleges that Achte knew that its copyright registration contained false information and that Achte lied to the Copyright Office and the District Court for the District of Columbia in conjunction with its attorneys. See generally Complaint, ¶¶ 10-11, 22, 115, 156. Taking all facts in the Complaint as true and drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of Shirokov, as the Court must do at this stage, the Court finds that the Complaint alleges enough facts to make a plausible claim that Achte joined in the alleged copyright scheme or at least rendered substantial assistance to the Dunlap Defendants with knowledge of the fraudulent purpose of the scheme. Accordingly, the Court also recommends that the District Court deny Achte's motion to dismiss the conspiracy and aiding and abetting claims against it.

[14] In addition, although the Dunlap Defendants moved to dismiss the entire Complaint on the basis of standing, the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, and the litigation privilege, the Dunlap Defendants did not move to dismiss the fraud and fraudulent omissions/nondisclosure claims (Counts 1 and 2) on the basis that they fail to state a claim.

GuardaLey stands in different footing. The only allegations against GuardaLey are that: (1) GuardaLey monitors and records online instances of copyright infringement (Complaint, ¶ 4); (2) GuardaLey is a partner with DGW [*78] in managing USCG (Complaint, ¶ 38); (3) at least one of the managers of USCG, Benjamin Perino, is also a manager of GuardaLey (Complaint, ¶ 73); and (4) Achte engaged USCG and, in turn, USCG retained GuardaLey to document instances of purported infringement of Achte's copyright in the motion picture Far Cry. (Complaint, ¶ 133). Shirokov does not allege that GuardaLey had any role in the filing of Achte's copyright registration application, in the filing of the Achte Lawsuit, or in the drafting or sending of the Letter. He does not allege that GuardaLey made any representations to him. In sum, the Complaint sets forth no facts, apart from conclusory allegations, that GuardaLey entered into any agreement with the other defendants in connection with the alleged copyright scheme, or that GuardaLey knew about the copyright scheme. Therefore, the Court finds that Shirokov has failed to state a claim of civil conspiracy or aiding and abetting against GuardaLey. [15]

Accordingly, the Court recommends that the District Court dismiss Counts 3, 5 and 13 against GuardaLey but not against the remaining defendants.

7. Shirokov's Claims Of Fraudulent And Negligent Misrepresentation Survive Against The Dunlap Defendants And Achte But Not Against GuardaLey

Shirokov brings a number of claims based on the defendants' alleged misrepresentations and failure to provide certain information: fraudulent misrepresentation (Count 1), fraudulent omission/nondisclosure (Count 2), and negligent misrepresentations and omissions (Count 8). GuardaLey has moved to dismiss those counts on the basis that the Complaint does not allege that GuardaLey made any representations to Shirokov or any class member. (Docket No. 44 at 23-24). Although the Dunlap Defendants and Achte have moved to dismiss [*80] the entire Complaint on a number of grounds, they have not moved to dismiss Counts 1 and 2 on the basis that the Complaint fails to state a claim for fraudulent misrepresentations or fraudulent omissions. [16] They have moved to dismiss the negligent misrepresentation claim on the basis that they owe no duty to Shirokov. (Docket No. 29 at 31-33; Docket No. 48 at 21).

[15] In his opposition to GuardaLey's motion to dismiss, Shirokov requests leave to amend the Complaint "as needed" to incorporate recent information that he alleges provides sufficient basis for GuardaLey's liability "if this court [*79] deems it necessary." (Docket No. 56 at 24). The Court notes that Shirokov has twice amended his Complaint in this action, and that he could have amended it as of right within 21 days of GuardaLey's filing of its motion to dismiss. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(1)(B). In any event, there is no present motion to amend the Complaint and all that is before this Court are certain specified motions.

[16] Although Achte states in its motion that all claims related to misrepresentations and omissions, including Counts 1 and 2 of the Complaint fail to state a claim, it provides no basis for the dismissal of the fraudulent misrepresentation claims. (Docket No. 48 at 21). It simply states that it "adopts and incorporates herein the additional grounds for dismissal of the misrepresentation and omission claims that are presented in Part III(G) of DGW's Memorandum of Law (Document No. 29 at pp. 24-26)." Id. However, DGW and the Dunlap Defendants did not move to dismiss Counts 1 and 2 on the basis that they fail to state a claim. At oral argument, counsel for the Dunlap Defendants suggested that they did not move to dismiss Counts 1 and 2 because of the twenty-page limit on legal briefs. However, the District Court granted them [*81] leave to file a brief in support of their motion to dismiss of thirty-five pages. (Docket No. 25). Under the circumstances, thirty-five pages was more than sufficient to set forth any arguments in support of their motion to dismiss, including any arguments regarding Counts 1 and 2. In the alternative, the Dunlap Defendants could have asked the District Court for a longer page limit.

To state a claim of fraud under Massachusetts law, the plaintiff must show that the defendants "made a false representation of a material fact with knowledge of its falsity for purposes of inducing the plaintiff to act thereon, and that the plaintiff actually relied on the representation." Platten v. HG Bermuda Exempted, Ltd., 437 F.3d 118, 132 (1st Cir. 2006) (citing Slaney v. Westwood Auto, Inc., 366 Mass. 688, 322 N.E.2d 768 (1975)). For a claim of misrepresentation, the plaintiff must show that the defendants (1) made false statements of material fact (2) to induce the plaintiff to settle the copyright claims, and (3) that the plaintiff reasonably relied on those statements to his detriment. Id. (citations omitted).

GuardaLey is correct that the Complaint fails to state a claim against it under Counts 1, 2 and 8 of the [*82] Complaint. (Docket No. 44 at 23-24). The Complaint contains no allegations of any representations by GuardaLey to Shirokov or any class member. There is no allegation that GuardaLey made any representations with respect to the copyright registration for Far Cry or brought or threatened to bring a lawsuit against Shirokov or anyone else. There is simply no allegation that GuardaLey made any statement to Shirokov upon which he could have relied. [17] The only basis for liability against GuardaLey appears to be that of joint liability under conspiracy or aiding or abetting theories. As discussed above, the Complaint fails to state a claim against GuardaLey under those theories. Accordingly, Shirokov has not stated a claim against GuardaLey under Counts 1, 2 or 8 of the Complaint.

The Dunlap Defendants move to dismiss the negligent misrepresentation and omissions claim on the basis that the defendant attorneys owed Shirokov no duty because there was no attorney-client relationship. (Docket No. 29 at 31). However, the Dunlap Defendants appear to confuse the torts of negligence and negligent misrepresentation. In their brief, the Dunlap Defendants only cite to cases regarding negligence and/or legal malpractice. (Docket No. 29 at 31-32). Those cases are inapposite.

Generally, negligent misrepresentation does require privity between the parties. In re Bank of Boston Corp. Securities Litig., 762 F. Supp. 1525, 1536 (D. Mass. 1991). [*84] Absent privity, however, a plaintiff can state a claim for negligent misrepresentation so long as the defendant had actual knowledge that its statements were going to be used and relied on by the plaintiff. Id.; Craig v. Everett M. Brooks Co., 351 Mass. 497, 501, 222 N.E.2d 752 (1967); Bamberg, 236 F. Supp. 2d at 91 (citations omitted). In addition, a lawyer may held liable for negligent misrepresentation to a nonclient where he or she knows that his or her representation will be relied upon by the nonclient. Nova Assignments, Inc. v. Kunian, 77 Mass. App. Ct. 34, 38, 928 N.E.2d 364 (2010); Kirkland Constr. Co. v. James, 39 Mass. App. Ct. 559, 562-63, 658 N.E.2d 699 (1995).

Moreover, "although mere nondisclosure by itself generally will not support a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation, it is well settled under Massachusetts law that 'a party who discloses partial information that may be misleading has a duty to reveal all the material facts he knows to avoid deceiving the other party.'" Barden v. HarperCollins Publishers, Inc., 863 F. Supp. 41, 43 (D. Mass. 1994) (internal citations omitted). Here, Shirokov has alleged that the Dunlap Defendants made a number of false statements to him and others, including statements [*85] regarding the potential fees that may be incurred in connection with the defense of a copyright claim and statements regarding Achte's rights and the remedies Achte was entitled to receive were it to prevail on its claims. (Complaint, ¶¶ 337, 339). He also alleges that the information provided to him and other class members was materially incomplete. (Complaint, ¶ 337). At this stage of the litigation, the Court is not deciding liability but merely whether the Complaint contains enough allegations to state a plausible claim. The Dunlap Defendants grounds for dismissal of the negligent misrepresentation claim are incorrect and, accordingly, this Court recommends that the [17] Although Shirokov alleges that all of the defendants "made knowingly false statements in court concerning the copyright, the remedies available to Achte, and/or the basis for Achte's claims of jurisdiction over members of the Class, including Shirokov" (Complaint at ¶ 386), this is no more than a formulaic recitation of the elements of the cause of action in Count 13. Despite very detailed factual allegations [*83] in the rest of the Complaint with respect to the other defendants, Shirokov did not allege anywhere in the Complaint what false statements were made by GuardaLey. Again, other than the allegation that GuardaLey tracked the IP addresses of alleged infringers and provided that information to the other defendants, Shirokov has not made any factual allegations supporting GuardaLey's involvement in the alleged copyright scheme. See Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949 ("Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice.").

District Judge deny the Dunlap Defendants' and Achte's motion to dismiss with respect to the negligent misrepresentation claim.

8. Shirokov Has Failed To Allege A Sufficient Injury To Support A Claim Under RICO

Defendants argue that Shirokov has no standing to bring a claim pursuant to the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") because he has not alleged an injury caused by racketeering activity. (Docket No. 29 at 26-27; Docket No. 44 at 24-25; Docket No. 48 at 22). This Court agrees.

RICO creates [*86] a private right of action for individuals suffering an injury resulting from "(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985). An essential element of a RICO claim is an injury to business or property. See Hemi Group, LLC v. City of New York, 130 S.Ct. 983, 987, 175 L. Ed. 2d 943 (2010). "[T]o state a claim under civil RICO, the plaintiff is required to show that a RICO predicate offense 'not only was a 'but for' cause of his injury, but was the proximate cause as well.'" Id. at 989 (quoting Holmes v. Sec. Investor Prot. Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 (1992)). "Proximate cause for RICO purposes . . . requires 'some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged.'" Id. "A link that is 'too remote,' 'purely contingent,' or 'indirect' is insufficient." Id.

The Complaint alleges that the defendants' copyright scheme caused damages to the class members in the form of payment of inflated settlements and/or related expenses in defending themselves against the copyright scheme. (Complaint, ¶ 324-325). However, Shirokov alleges that he did not pay anything to the defendants in response to [*87] the Letter. Instead, Shirokov alleges that he incurred legal costs "in reliance on the false allegations of the Letter and in order to determine the merits of its claims." (Complaint, ¶ 232). Shirokov also alleges that he would have avoided those costs had the Letter been truthful. (Id.).

Shirokov has not alleged sufficient facts to establish that he suffered an injury under RICO. Shirokov claims that the defendants conspired to attempt to extort money out of individuals who may have infringed upon Achte's copyright. He alleges that Achte, through DGW, knowingly and intentionally made false representations to the Copyright Office in order to obtain a copyright registration. Then, based on the fraudulently procured copyright registration, DGW filed a copyright infringement claim and obtained a subpoena to obtain Shirokov and other Class members' identifying information. Using that information, DGW sent the Letter to Shirokov and other Class members in an effort to get Shirokov and the Class members to pay to settle the claims with the threat of statutory damages to which they knew Achte was not entitled. However, according to Shirokov's own allegations, he did not fall for the defendants' [*88] alleged scheme: he contacted an attorney, and afterwards did not pay to settle the claims. Instead, Shirokov filed this suit.

The only injury Shirokov alleges he suffered was the payment of legal fees to his attorney to determine the validity of DGW and Achte's claims. [18] (Complaint, ¶ 232). The expenditure of legal fees is ordinarily not considered an injury for RICO purposes, unless the legal fees were expended as an "intended consequence" of a defendant's racketeering activities. Lemelson v. Wang Lab., 874 F. Supp. 430, 433 (D. Mass. 1994) (citations omitted); [19] see [18] Although Shirokov argues that the attorneys' fees incurred in this action are an injury sufficient to confer Article III standing (an argument that this Court rejected), he does not argue that attorneys' fees in this action are sufficient to satisfy the RICO injury requirement. In any event, such an argument would also be wrong. See, e.g., Walter v. Palisades Collection, LLC, 480 F. Supp. 2d 797, 805 (E.D. Pa. 2007) [*90] (citation omitted) ("It would be illogical to allow a plaintiff to have RICO standing based on damages incurred by the plaintiff in paying his attorney to file the RICO action. RICO's injury requirement would be a nullity if paying an attorney to initiate the RICO action itself sufficed as damage.").

[19] Shirokov cites this case as supporting his argument that the legal fees he spent in investigating the defendants' claims are sufficient to satisfy the RICO injury requirement. (Docket No. 32 at 34; Docket No. 77 at 13). In Lemelson, the Court found that the costs incurred in investigating and defending vexatious litigation constitute a sufficient RICO injury to survive a motion to dismiss. 874 F.Supp. at 433. However, that case is distinguishable. First, the parties were competitors and the expenditure of attorneys' fees by the victim was an intended consequence of the alleged racketeering scheme. Id. at 432-33. Here, the also Aramony v. United Way of America, 969 F. Supp. 226, 233 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) ("A plaintiff's prior expenditure on legal fees is only a sustainable RICO injury where defendant's underlying wrongful acts contemplate the victim responding in court."). Here, as alleged, the intended consequence of the racketeering activities was the payment of "inflated settlements." (Complaint, ¶ 324-325). While he may have spent money in the form of attorneys' fees in order to determine whether DGW and Achte's claims had any merit, those legal fees were not proximately caused by the defendants' alleged actions. He has not alleged [*89] that he incurred any fees in connection with the Achte Lawsuit itself, that he or his attorney entered an appearance in that case or that he did anything to defend Achte's claims against him. The object of the defendants' alleged wrongful is not a response in court and there is no allegation that the defendants intend or prefer that the alleged targets obtain legal representation and incur attorneys' fees. [20] Indeed, the alleged copyright scheme works because the victims generally settle the claims in order to avoid responding in court. See, e.g., Sanchez v. Triple-S Mgmt. Corp., 492 F.3d 1, 14 (1st Cir. 2007) ("The plaintiffs cannot press a RICO claim based on attempts at extortion that did not succeed in harming them."). Accordingly, the Court finds that Shirokov has failed to state a RICO claim. [21]

Because the Court finds that Shirokov's RICO claim fails, it also finds that his conspiracy to violate RICO must fail as well. "[I]f the pleadings do not state a substantive RICO claim upon which relief may be granted, then the conspiracy claim also fails." Efron v. Embassy Suites (Puerto Rico), Inc., 223 F.3d 12, 21 (1st Cir. 2000). This Court therefore recommends that the District Court dismiss Counts 6 and 7 of the Complaint.

9. Fraud On The Court Is Not An Independent Cause Of Action

Count 9 of the Complaint asserts a claim for fraud on the court. "A 'fraud on the court' occurs where it can be demonstrated, clearly and convincingly, that a party has sentiently set in motion some unconscionable scheme calculated to interfere with the judicial system's ability impartially to adjudicate a matter by improperly influencing the trier or unfairly hampering the presentation of the opposing party's claim or defense." Aoude v. Mobil Oil Corp., 892 F.2d 1115, 1118 (1st Cir. 1989).

The defendants argue that fraud on the [*93] court is not an independent cause of action under Massachusetts law and should therefore be dismissed. (Docket No. 29 at 33). However, fraud on a federal court is governed by federal common law. See Davidson v. Cao, 211 F. Supp. 2d 264, 276-77 (D. Mass. 2002) (citing Aoude, 892 F.2d at 1117-18) ("Fraud on the court . . . has its genesis in the federal court's inherent power to regulate and control abusive litigation tactics effecting the institutional integrity of the court."). Nevertheless, the result is the same.

Fraud on the court is not a recognized independent cause of action in the First Circuit. See Barrett v. Ambient Pressure Diving, Ltd., No. 06-cv-240-SM, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70471, 2008 WL 4280360, at * 4 (D.N.H. Sept. 16, 2008). The cases cited by Shirokov do not universally support his argument to the contrary. In Premier Homes & expenditure of attorneys' fees is not an intended consequence, but a byproduct, of the defendants' alleged scheme: the intended consequence was the payment of settlements to the defendants. (Complaint at ¶¶ 324-325). There are no allegations that the object of the defendants' [*91] action was the expenditure of legal fees. The object of the alleged scheme was the payment of settlement amounts. Second, that case was decided prior to Iqbal under the more lenient Rule 12(b)(6) standard of Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). Id. at 433 ("I hold that the costs incurred in investigating and defending that litigation are a sufficient RICO injury to satisfy the indulgent pleading requirements of Rule 12(b)(6).").

[20] Although the Letter encourages class members to obtain legal representation, the object of the scheme was not the incursion of legal fees by class members. (Complaint, ¶¶ 324-25; Ex. N to Complaint).

[21] Although this Court has found that Shirokov has alleged an injury sufficient to confer him standing under Article III of the Constitution (see Section III(B)(2) above) and an injury sufficient to state a Chapter 93A claim (see Section III(B)(14) below), the RICO statute sets forth additional requirements for a showing of injury. See DeMauro v. DeMauro, 115 F.3d 94, 96 (1st Cir. 1997) ("There is plainly a case or controversy under Article III; but the statutory precondition of injury to business or property must also be met."); In re Neurontin Mktg. and Sales Practices Litig., 677 F. Supp. 2d 479, 497 (D. Mass. 2010) [*92] ("A showing of injury is generally necessary for the purposes of Article III standing . . ., but the RICO statute sets forth additional requirements for a showing of injury.").

Land Corp. v. Cheswell, Inc., the court granted the defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint based on fraud on the court and then assessed attorneys' fees against the plaintiff as a sanction. 240 F. Supp. 2d 97, 99-100 (D. Mass. 2002). In Leber-Krebs, Inc. v. Capitol Records, the circumstances were inapposite and involved a court's ability to vacate its own judgment. 779 F.2d 895, 900-01 (2d Cir. 1985). [*94] [22] Finally, in Canty v. Chase Home Finance, LLC, the alleged fraud on the Court had been perpetrated in the same court. *2010 Bankr. LEXIS 1519, 2010 WL 1880710, at 4 (N.D. Ala. May 7, 2010). [23]

Under federal common law, fraud on the court may form the basis for a motion to dismiss or for seeking relief from judgment. See Davidson, 211 F. Supp. 2d at 277. Here, Shirokov does not seek to have the Achte Lawsuit dismissed. Neither is there a judgment against Shirokov in the Achte Lawsuit that could form the basis for an action seeking relief from judgment.

Accordingly, the Court recommends that the District Court dismiss Count 9 of the Complaint.

10. Shirokov May Seek A Declaration That Achte's Copyright Is Invalid Based On Fraud On The Copyright Office But He May Not Seek Damages Against The Defendants

Shirokov has brought a claim for fraud on the Copyright Office (Count 11). He seeks a declaration that Achte's copyright in Far Cry is invalid. (Complaint, ¶ 373). He also seeks damages from the defendants. Id. The defendants seek dismissal of this claim on the grounds that fraud on the Copyright Office is not a recognized independent cause of action. (Docket No. 29 at 34; Docket No. 44 at 21; Docket No. 48 at 20-21). The Court finds that although Shirokov [*96] may seek a declaration that Achte's copyright is invalid based on fraud on the Copyright Office, he cannot seek damages against the defendants on that basis.

A party seeking to establish fraud on the Copyright Office must establish that the application for copyright registration is factually inaccurate, that the inaccuracies were willful or deliberate, and that the Copyright Office relied on those representations. Lennon v. Seaman, 84 F. Supp. 2d 522, 525 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (citations omitted). Some courts also require that a party alleging fraud on the Copyright Office prove that it has been prejudiced, or suffered some damage, as a result of the alleged fraud. Id. (citations omitted). Ordinarily, fraud on the Copyright Office is an affirmative defense to copyright infringement, not a cause of action. Id. To the extent that courts have allowed infringers to assert such a claim, they have done so as a declaratory judgment action against the copyright holder. See, e.g., *Crew Knitwear, Inc. v. U.S. Textile Printing, Inc., No. 07-7658, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12180, 2009 WL 305526, at * 2-3 (C.D. Cal. February 6, 2009)*.

Here, in addition to declaratory relief, Shirokov seeks damages against the defendants for allegedly [*97] providing false information to the Copyright Office. Claims for damages are not available to an alleged infringer who claims that the copyright holder committed fraud on the Copyright Office. See, e.g., *Chivalry Film Prods. v. NBC Universal, Inc., No. 05 Civ. 5627 (GEL), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1177, 2006 WL 89944, at 3 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 11, 2006) (alleged infringer cannot state a claim for damages for fraud on the Copyright Office). Accordingly, the Court recommends that the District Court dismiss Count 11 of the Complaint except to the extent that it seeks a declaration of invalidity against Achte.

[22] In that case, the plaintiff obtained an ex parte attachment order against the debtor's property in attempts to garnish assets of the debtor in the hands of a third party. 779 F.2d at 896. The plaintiff alleged that its rights to enforce the judgment against the debtor were lost because the garnishee falsely denied holding any of the debtor's property. Id. As a result, when the plaintiff moved to confirm the attachment, the district court denied the motion. The plaintiff then filed an action against the defendant claiming that defendant's failure to reveal debtor's property in its hands was a damaging lie constituting fraud on the court and causing it damage. Id. The Second Circuit reversed the district court's order dismissing the action and remanded the case for an evidentiary hearing to examine whether the defendant's garnishee statement was fraudulent. Id. at 901. If so, the district court was free to enter a judgment in the amount plaintiff would have obtained if the defendant had filed an accurate statement. [*95] Id.

[23] Although that case states that fraud on the court may be an independent cause of action, this Court declines to follow it.

11. Copyright Misuse Is Not An Independent Cause Of Action In This Circuit

Count 12 of the Complaint asserts a claim of copyright misuse by which Shirokov seeks a declaration that Achte's copyright is invalid. (Complaint, ¶ 383). The defendants have moved to dismiss this Count on the grounds that copyright misuse has not been recognized as an independent cause of action. (Docket No. 29 at 35; Docket No. 44 at 21; Docket No. 48 at 20-21). This Court agrees.

"Copyright misuse occurs when a copyright owner restrains competition in the sale of an item that is not within the scope of the privilege granted under the copyright." [*98] *Broad. Music, Inc. v. Hampton Beach Casino Ballroom, Inc., No. CV-94-248-B, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13103, 1995 WL 803576, at 5 (D.N.H. Aug. 30, 1995) (citing Lasercomb Am. Inc. v. Reynolds, 911 F.2d 970, 975 (4th Cir. 1990)). A party may prove copyright misuse by either proving (1) violation of the antitrust laws, or (2) that the copyright holder otherwise illegally extended its monopoly or violated the public policies underlying the copyright laws. Id. Like fraud on the copyright office, copyright misuse is normally an affirmative defense to copyright infringement, not a cause of action. See, e.g., Amaretto Ranch Breedables, LLC v. Ozimals, Inc., 790 F. Supp. 2d 1024, 1033 (N.D. Cal. 2011). Unlike a claim of fraud on the Copyright Office, a finding of copyright misuse does not invalidate the copyright but precludes its enforcement during the period of misuse. Id. (citing Practice Mgmt. Info. Corp. v. AMA, 121 F.3d 516, 520 (9th Cir. 1997)).

Although the First Circuit has not rejected the defense of copyright misuse, it has not yet recognized it either. See Garcia-Goyco v. Law Envtl. Consultants, Inc., 428 F.3d 14, 21 n. 7 (1st Cir. 2005). Other circuits have recognized misuse of a copyright as a defense [*99] to infringement. See *Broad. Music, Inc., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13103, 1995 WL 803576 at 8 n. 7 (collecting cases).

Shirokov argues that copyright misuse can be brought as a claim for affirmative declaratory relief. (Docket No. 32 at 38-40). The courts that have addressed this issue are divided on the matter. Some courts have found that copyright misuse may not be affirmatively asserted as a declaratory judgment action because pleading an affirmative defense as an independent claim seeks an illegitimate litigation advantage. See *Nielsen Co., LLC v. Truck Ads, LLC, No. 08 C 6446, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6453, 2011 WL 221838, at * 7 (N.D. Ill. January 24, 2011)* (collecting cases); see also Amaretto Ranch Breedables, LLC, 790 F. Supp. 2d at 1033 ("There is no consensus on whether copyright misuse can be brought as an independent claim (as opposed to as an affirmative defense) and district courts come down on both sides of the issue."). Other courts have recognized copyright misuse as a claim, noting the analogous doctrine of patent misuse and recognizing that defendants may have reasons for seeking a declaration of their rights aside from the infringement claim they are defending. See *Nielsen Co., LLC, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6453, 2011 WL 221838 at 7 (collecting cases).

This [*100] Court agrees with those courts that have found that copyright misuse may not be brought as an independent cause of action, especially in light of the fact that the First Circuit has not yet recognized the doctrine even as a defense to copyright infringement claims. [24]

Accordingly, this Court recommends that Count 12 be dismissed.

12. Shirokov Has Failed To State A Claim For Abuse Of Process And Malicious Prosecution

The defendants argue that Shirokov has not pled facts which would establish abuse of process (Count 10) or malicious prosecution (Count 19) (Docket No. 29 at 36-38; Docket No. 44 at 21; Docket No. 48 at 21). The Court agrees.

[24] In addition, the Court notes that Shirokov seeks a declaration of invalidity based on copyright misuse, which is not available to him under such a claim. Amaretto Ranch Breedables, LLC, 790 F. Supp. 2d at 1033.

To sustain an abuse of process claim, Shirokov must establish that "process was used 'to accomplish some ulterior purpose for which it was not designed or intended, or which was not the legitimate purpose of the particular process employed.'" Millennium Equity Holdings, LLC v. Mahlowitz, 456 Mass. 627, 636, 925 N.E.2d 513 (2010) (quoting Quaranto v. Silverman, 345 Mass. 423, 426, 187 N.E.2d 859 (1963)). [*101] Thus, the three elements of abuse of process are (1) "process" was used, (2) for an ulterior or illegitimate purpose, (3) resulting in damage. Id. (citations omitted); Gutierrez v. Mass. Bay Transp. Auth., 437 Mass. 396, 407, 772 N.E.2d 552 (2002) (citations omitted); Jones v. Brockton Pub. Mkts., Inc., 369 Mass. 387, 389, 340 N.E.2d 484 (1975).

"Process" refers to "the papers issued by a court to bring a party or property within its jurisdiction." Jones, 369 Mass. at 390. Massachusetts courts have limited process to three types: writs of attachment, the process used to institute a civil action, and the process related to the bringing of criminal charges. Id. at 389-90.

Here, Shirokov has not alleged sufficient facts to support an abuse of process claim. Process never issued against him because he was never named in the Achte Lawsuit. The term process does not encompass a courtesy copy of the complaint and a settlement demand. See Complaint at ¶ 359 ("Defendants provided (without serving) the operative compliant to the class members by mailing them letter that direct them to the Far Cry website, where the complaint was posted."). Accordingly, he has failed to state a claim for abuse of process.

Similarly, he cannot [*102] maintain a malicious prosecution claim. In order to state a claim for malicious prosecution, Shirokov must allege that an action was brought maliciously and without probable cause and was terminated in his favor. Hubbard v. Beatty & Hyde, Inc., 343 Mass. 258, 261, 178 N.E.2d 485 (1961); MHA Financial Corp. v. Varenko Invs. Ltd., 583 F. Supp. 2d 173, 181 (D. Mass. 2008) (citing Chervin v. Travelers Ins. Co., 448 Mass. 95, 103, 858 N.E.2d 746 (2006)).

Unlike abuse of process, service of process is not an element of a malicious prosecution claim. MHA Fin. Corp., 583 F. Supp. 2d at 181. "An action can be 'commenced,' for purposes of a malicious prosecution claim, by the filing of a complaint without the service of process." Id. Nevertheless, Shirokov has failed to state a malicious prosecution claim. No action was ever commenced against Shirokov. Although he presumably was one of the John Doe Defendants, he was never named in the Achte Lawsuit. See Cuddy v. Sweeney, 7 Mass. App. Ct. 880, 386 N.E.2d 805 (1979) (plaintiff who was never a party to a lawsuit could not show that a claim was brought against her which was terminated in her favor).

Even if the Court were to hold that being one of the John Does is sufficient to establish that an action [*103] was commenced against Shirokov, he also could not establish that the action terminated in his favor. Achte dismissed its claims against most of the John Doe Defendants, including Shirokov, without prejudice. Thus, Achte could refile copyright infringement claims against Shirokov. As such, the Court finds that the Achte Lawsuit was not terminated in Shirokov's favor. Cf. Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384, 396, 110 S. Ct. 2447, 110 L. Ed. 2d 359 (1990) (dismissal without prejudice does not operate as an adjudication upon the merits).

Accordingly, the Court recommends that the District Court dismiss Counts 10 and 19 of the Complaint.

13. Shirokov's Claims Of Unjust Enrichment, Money Had And Received, Conversion, And Constructive Trust Fail Because He Has Not Alleged That He Paid Any Money To The Defendants

Shirokov brings four claims based on the alleged settlement payments by some members of the proposed class. These claims are as follows: unjust enrichment (Count 14); money had and received (Count 15); conversion (Count 16); and constructive trust (Count 17). Shirokov states that he has not paid to settle any claims. (Complaint, ¶ 232). Accordingly, defendants argue that because payment of funds from Shirokov [*104] to one or more of the defendants is an element of each of these claims, all of these claims are subject to dismissal for failure to state a claim. (Docket No. 29 at 39-40; Docket No. 48 at 21-22; Docket No. 44 at 24). Shirokov does not defend these claims on the merits but argues that he has sufficient standing to maintain these counts because he is not required to have standing to bring every count as long as he has standing for multiple counts. [25] (Docket No. 32 at 17). The Court finds that Shirokov has failed to state a claim under these counts.

In Massachusetts, in order for a party to prevail on a claim for unjust enrichment, there must be "unjust enrichment of one party and unjust detriment to another party." Mass. Eye and Ear Infirmary v. QLT Phototherapeutics, Inc., 552 F.3d 47, 57 (1st Cir. 2009) (internal citations omitted). Unjust enrichment requires: (1) a benefit conferred upon the defendant by the plaintiff; (2) an appreciation or knowledge by the defendant of the benefit; and (3) acceptance [*106] or retention by the defendant of the benefit under the circumstances would be inequitable without payment for its value." Id. In addition, as unjust enrichment is an equitable remedy, it is not available to parties with an adequate remedy at law. See Santagate v. Tower, 64 Mass. App. Ct. 324, 329, 833 N.E.2d 171 (2005). Here, there is no evidence of a benefit conferred upon the defendants by Shirokov. Without proof of a benefit, it is not necessary to analyze the remaining elements of unjust enrichment. See, e.g., *Kerr v. Vince, No. 07-30021-MBB, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33161, 2010 WL 1416511, at 19 (D. Mass. April 1, 2010).

Money had and received is essentially the same claim as unjust enrichment except that unjust enrichment is not limited to enrichment by money or its equivalent. Jelmoli Holding, Inc. v. Raymond James Fin. Servs., Inc., 470 F.3d 14, 17 n. 2 (1st Cir. 2006). Again, the Complaint contains no allegations that the defendants received any money from Shirokov.

In order to state a claim for conversion, a plaintiff must show:

> (1) the defendant intentionally and wrongfully exercised control or dominion over the [plaintiff's] personal property; (2) the plaintiff had an ownership or possessory interest in the property at [*107] the time of the alleged conversion; (3) the plaintiff was damaged by the defendant's conduct; and (4) if the defendant legitimately acquired possession of the property under a good-faith claim of right, the plaintiff's demand for its return was refused.

Evergreen Marine Corp. v. Six Consignments of Frozen Scallops, 4 F.3d 90, 95 (1st Cir. 1993); see In re Brauer, 452 Mass. 56, 67, 890 N.E.2d 847 (2008). Shirokov has not alleged that the defendants exercised control or dominion over any of his property. Therefore, Count 16 fails.

Finally, a constructive trust is not a theory of liability but rather an equitable remedy fashioned by courts to right a perceived wrong. See Maffei v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Bos., 449 Mass. 235, 246-47 n. 23, 867 N.E.2d 300 (2007). "A constructive trust is 'a device employed in equity, in the absence of any intention of the parties to create a trust, in order to avoid the unjust enrichment of one party at the expense of the other where the legal title to the property . . . was obtained by fraud or in violation of a fiduciary relation or arose where information confidentially given or acquired was used to the advantage of the recipient at the expense of the one who disclosed the information.'" [*108] Cox v. Cox, 247 B.R. 556, 571 (Bankr. D. Mass. 2000) (quotations omitted). In order to establish grounds for the imposition of a constructive trust, the plaintiff must be able to trace the proceeds or profits of the corpus. Id. (citation omitted). Here again, there is no allegations that the defendants obtained any property from Shirokov and thus, he has not alleged sufficient facts that would entitle him to the imposition of a constructive trust.

Accordingly, the Court recommends that the District Court dismiss Counts 14 to 17 of the Complaint.

14. The Complaint States A Claim Under Chapter 93A

Shirokov asserts a claim in Count 18 for unfair and/or deceptive acts and practices in violation of the Massachusetts Consumer Protection Act, M.G.L. c. 93A, § 9 ("Chapter 93A"). The defendants have moved to dismiss this count on the grounds that the defendants' alleged actions were not in connection with trade or commerce as required to support a claim under Chapter 93A. (Docket No. 29 at 40-41; Docket No. 48 at 22). In addition, the defendants argue that Shirokov cannot maintain a Chapter 93A action because he has not alleged an actual loss. (Docket No. 29 at 41-42; Docket No. 44 at 27; Docket [*109] No. 48 at 22). This Court disagrees.

Chapter 93A prohibits "unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce." Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 93A, §2(a) (emphasis added). A successful claim under Chapter 93A requires a showing of (1) a deceptive act or practice on the part of the defendant; (2) an injury or loss suffered by the consumer, and (3) a causal connection between the defendant's deceptive act or practice and the consumer's injury. Casavant v. Norwegian Cruise Line, Ltd., 76 Mass. App. Ct. 73, 76, 919 N.E.2d 165 (2009), aff'd, 460 Mass. 500, 952 N.E.2d 908 (2011) (citing G.L. c. 93A, § 9); Hershenow v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car Co. of Bos., Inc., 445 Mass. 790, 797, 840 N.E.2d 526 (2006)). "Chapter 93A liability is decided case-by-case, and Massachusetts courts have consistently emphasized the 'fact-specific nature of the inquiry.'" Arthur D. Little, Inc. v. Dooyang Corp., 147 F.3d 47, 55 (1st Cir. 1998) (citation omitted). "Although whether a particular set of acts, in their factual setting, is unfair or deceptive is a question of fact, the boundaries of what may qualify for consideration as a Chapter 93A violation is a question of law." Id. at 54 (quoting Ahern v. Scholz, 85 F.3d 774, 797 (1st Cir. 1996)).

Though [*110] Chapter 93A provides a broad remedy, it is only directed at unfair or deceptive acts that arose "in the course of trade or commerce." [26] St. Paul Fire and Marine Ins. Co. v. Ellis & Ellis, 262 F.3d 53, 66 (1st Cir. 2001); (citing Lantner v. Carson, 374 Mass. 606, 607-08, 373 N.E.2d 973 (1978); First Enters., Ltd. v. Cooper, 425 Mass. 344, 680 N.E.2d 1163 (1997)). Thus, before liability may be imposed for an allegedly unfair or deceptive act, the plaintiff must establish that the act occurred in the conduct of trade or commerce. "'Unfair or deceptive acts or practices' . . . can only form the basis of a ch. 93A claim if those acts 'are perpetrated in a business context.'" Id. To determine whether a defendant is engaged in trade or commerce for Chapter 93A purposes, the court should consider (1) the nature of the transaction; (2) the character of the parties involved; (3) the activities engaged in by the parties; and (4) whether the transaction was motivated by business or personal reasons. Feeney v. Dell, Inc., 454 Mass. 192, 212, 908 N.E.2d 753 (2009) (citations omitted).

The defendants argue that any allegedly unfair or deceptive acts were not perpetrated in a business context because there was no commercial relationship between the parties and their only contacts occurred in the context of litigation. The Dunlap Defendants specifically argue that an attorney or law firm may not be liable to his client's adversary under Chapter 93A for acts performed on the client's behalf. [27] (Docket No. 29 at 33-34). The defendants

[26] The statute defines trade and commerce as:

> . . . the advertising, the offering for sale, rent or lease, the sale, rent, lease or distribution of any services and [*111] any property, tangible or intangible, real, personal or mixed, any security . . . and any contract of sale of a commodity for future delivery, and any other article, commodity, or thing of value wherever situate, and shall include any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this commonwealth.

M.G.L. c. 93A, § 1(b).

[27] Shirokov argues that not all defendants are attorneys and therefore may not avail themselves of this argument. (Docket No. 32 at 33, 43).

are correct that the mere filing of litigation, without more, does not constitute trade or commerce. See Arthur D. Little, Inc. v. East Cambridge Sav. Bank, 35 Mass. App. Ct. 734, 743, 625 N.E.2d 1383 (1994). The Dunlap Defendants are also correct that, ordinarily, a lawyer is not liable under Chapter 93A for acts performed on the client's behalf. Id.; First Enters. v. Cooper, 425 Mass. 344, 347, 680 N.E.2d 1163 (1997). However, the [*112] allegations here are more textured: Shirokov's Chapter 93A claim is based on allegations that the defendants were engaged in a scheme to defraud him and others and used the Achte Lawsuit to add a veneer of legitimacy to their claims that Achte was entitled to statutory damages. (Complaint, ¶¶ 12-15, 156-57; see generally id. at ¶¶ 195-217). In addition, Shirokov alleges that the Dunlap Defendants were not only knowing participators in the alleged scheme, but in fact designed it. (Complaint, ¶¶ 2-3, 6-8, 72, 76-78). Under those circumstances, the Court cannot conclude that Shirokov has failed to allege enough facts to establish the trade and commerce requirement.

Indeed, the First Circuit has held that conduct in the context of litigation may form the basis for a Chapter 93A claim. In Ellis & Ellis, a workers' compensation insurer brought suit against an attorney and his law firm who had represented a claimant, asserting, inter alia, a Chapter 93A claim. 262 F.3d at 56. The plaintiff argued that the attorney had knowingly concealed the claimant's [*113] prior back injury. Id. at 60-61. The defendants argued that any misrepresentations were made in the context of litigation and, as such, were not made in the conduct of trade or commerce and could not form the basis for a Chapter 93A claim. After the conclusion of the plaintiff's case-in-chief at trial, the defendants moved for judgment as a matter of law and the District Court granted the motion. Id. at 61. The District Court based its decision on the finding that any allegedly unfair acts were not perpetrated in a business context: "In this case, any representations made by the defendants to St. Paul were pursuant to a legal action, namely the adversarial workers' compensation litigation in which Formoso's benefits were determined." Id. at 67.

The First Circuit reversed the District Court's decision. In so doing, the First Circuit stated:

> We disagree with the court's characterization of the events at issue here. To be sure, the 'adversarial workers' compensation litigation' formed a backdrop to Ellis's actions. The jury could have easily concluded, however, that those actions were not vigorous advocacy in pursuit of Formoso's workers' compensation claim. Instead, the jury could have [*114] found that Ellis used the workers' compensation litigation to add a veneer of legitimacy to a fraudulent scheme to dupe St. Paul into paying benefits to which Formoso was not entitled. Such a scheme affects trade or commerce and can be a basis for ch. 93A liability.

Id. at 67 (citations omitted).

In addition, an attorney or law firm may incur Chapter 93A liability to a nonclient or adversary if it joins its client in marketplace communications to the adversary rather than merely relays its client's positions, and those communications knowingly or carelessly turn out to be false, misleading, and harmful. See Kirkland Constr. Co. v. James, 39 Mass. App. Ct. 559, 561-564, 658 N.E.2d 699 (1995) (reversing Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal of 93A claim against a lawyer and firm). "In such situations the attorney has arguably crossed from traditional representation into active participation in trade and commerce. If the attorney or law firm confines itself to the functions of traditional representation, such as the commencement of litigation against the adversary or the counseling about and drafting of testamentary documents, it has not acted in a 'business context' or injected itself into trade or commerce so as to [*115] have Chapter 93A exposure." *Coggins v. Mooney, No. Civ. A 94-0844, 1998 Mass. Super. LEXIS 320, 1998 WL 156998, at 5 (Mass. Super. Apr. 3, 1998), aff'd, 431 Mass. 57, 725 N.E.2d 545 (2000). Again, here the Complaint alleges that the Dunlap Defendants not only knowingly made false representations on behalf of their clients but that they in fact designed the allegedly fraudulent copyright scheme described in the Complaint. (Complaint, ¶¶ 2-3, 6-8, 72, 76-78). Accordingly, the Court finds that the Complaint alleges sufficient facts to survive a motion to dismiss based on the trade or commerce requirement.

The Court also finds that Shirokov has sufficiently alleged an injury cognizable under Chapter 93A. The defendants argue that the plaintiff cannot bring a claim under Chapter 93A because he claims no actual damages. (Docket No.

29 at 34). They further argue that the plaintiff must prove "reliance as 'an essential link in the proof of causation,'" and that he cannot do so because he has admittedly did not settle the Achte Lawsuit. (Id.). The Court disagrees.

As stated above, to state a claim under Chapter 93A, Shirokov must allege sufficient facts to establish an injury. Casavant v. Norwegian Cruise Line Ltd., 460 Mass. 500, 503, 952 N.E.2d 908 (2011). [*116] In addition, there must be a causal connection between the alleged deceptive act and the consumer's injury or loss. Id. "If any person invades a consumer's legally protected interests, and if that invasion causes the consumer a loss—whether that loss be economic or noneconomic—the consumer is entitled to redress under our consumer protection statute." Id. (quoting Hershenow, 445 Mass. at 802.). However, contrary to the defendants' arguments, "the plaintiffs need not show proof of actual reliance on a misrepresentation in order to recover damages under G.L. c. 93A, but rather must show a causal connection between the deception and the loss and that the loss was foreseeable as a result of the deception." Id. (quoting Iannacchino v. Ford Motor Co., 451 Mass. 623, 630-31 n. 12, 888 N.E.2d 879 (2008) (internal modifications omitted)); cf. Advanced Sys. Consultants Ltd. v. Eng'g Planning and Mgmt., Inc., 899 F. Supp. 832, 834 (D. Mass. 1995) (finding Chapter 93A violation and awarding attorneys' fees to target of unfair or deceptive act or practice that incurred legal expenses in obtaining and defending injunctive relief to safeguard itself against economic loss).

Here, Shirokov has alleged that he was the [*117] target of a fraudulent scheme by the defendants. Although he did not pay any money to the defendants as a result of receiving the Letter, he did consult an attorney and paid legal fees in connection with the attorney's review and evaluation of the Letter. He is now worse off by having paid legal fees to evaluate the allegedly fraudulent claims. For purposes of Chapter 93A, it would be reasonably foreseeable to the defendants that Shirokov could incur legal fees in evaluating the allegedly false claims. Indeed, the Letter invites its recipient to seek legal advice. Accordingly, the Court finds that Shirokov has sufficiently alleged an injury and a causal connection between the injury and the allegedly deceptive conduct and recommends that the District Court deny the defendants' motions to the extent that they seek dismissal of Shirokov's Chapter 93A claims.

IV. RECOMMENDATION

For the reasons stated herein, this Court recommends to the District Judge to whom this case is assigned that the defendants' motions to dismiss be ALLOWED in part and DENIED in part as follows:

1. This Court recommends that the District Judge dismiss all Counts of the Complaint Against GuardaLey;

2. This Court recommends [*118] that the District Judge dismiss Counts 4, 6-7, 9-10, 12, 14-17, and 19 of the Complaint against the Dunlap Defendants and Achte;
3. This Court recommends that the District Judge dismiss Count 11 of the Complaint to the extent that Shirokov seeks damages against the Dunlap Defendants and Achte; and
4. Counts 1-3, 5, 8, 11 (to the extent that it seeks declaratory relief), 13, and 18 of the Complaint should survive against the Dunlap Defendants and Achte.

V. REVIEW BY DISTRICT JUDGE

The parties are hereby advised that under the provisions of Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b), any party who objects to these proposed findings and recommendations must file specific written objections thereto with the Clerk of this Court within 14 days of the party's receipt of this Report and Recommendation. The written objections must specifically identify the portion of the proposed findings, recommendations, or report to which objection is made, and the basis for such objections. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 72. The parties are further advised that the United States Court of Appeals for this Circuit has repeatedly indicated that failure to comply with Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b) will preclude further appellate review of the District [*119] Court's order based on this Report and Recommendation. See Phinney v. Wentworth Douglas Hosp., 199 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1999); Sunview Condo. Ass'n v. Flexel Int'l, Ltd., 116 F.3d 962 (1st Cir. 1997); Pagano v. Frank, 983 F.2d 343 (1st Cir.1993).

CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

Proceedings: (IN CHAMBERS) Order Re: Defendant's Motion to Dismiss (DE 4)

I. INTRODUCTION

On December 2, 2011, Benjamin White ("Plaintiff") filed a Complaint in Los Angeles Superior Court ("Complaint") against Federal National Mortgage Association ("Defendant") and Quality Loan Service Corporation ("Quality Loan") for (1) quiet title, (2) breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, (3) an accounting, (4) unfair business practices under California law, (5) aiding and abetting, and (6) fraud. Plaintiff also filed an accompanying notice of pendency of action.

On December 21, 2011, Quality Loan filed a declaration of nonmonetary status in Los Angeles Superior Court pursuant to California Civil Code § 2924l(d). (Def.'s Notice of Removal at 3; Ex. C, at 1-2.) None of the other parties objected, and therefore Quality Loan as trustee was completely excused from further participation in this case. Cal. Civ. Code § 2924l(d). (Quality Loan's Notice of Non-Opp. to Quality Loan Service Corp.'s Decl. of Nonmonetary Status 2.) As a nonmonetary party, Quality [*2] Loan will be bound by any judgment, as long as the judgment does not provide for any monetary damages against Quality Loan. Cal. Civ. Code § 2924(b). (Id.)

On January 3, 2012, Defendant removed the action to this Court on the basis of diversity jurisdiction.

On January 10, 2012, Defendant filed the current Motion to Dismiss ("Motion") pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("Rule") 12(b)(6). To date, Plaintiff has failed to file an Opposition. Local Rule 7-9 requires parties to file an opposition to any motion filed. Local Rule 7-12 states that failure to file any required paper may be deemed consent to granting the motion.

For the following reasons, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The property at issue in this lawsuit is located at 9131 South Wilton Place, Los Angeles, California, 90047 (the "Property").

Spencer Stacy acquired the Property in 1972. (Def.'s RJN, Ex. 1.) On May 31, 2006, Stacy refinanced the Property with a loan ("Loan") secured by a Deed of Trust on the Property. (Id., Ex. 2.)

Stacy fell behind in his payments on the Loan and a Notice of Default was filed against him in November 2009. (Id., Ex. 3.) In December 2009, Quality Loan substituted as trustee under the Deed of Trust. (Id., Ex. 4.) When Stacy failed to cure his default, Quality Loan [*3] recorded a Notice of Trustee's Sale in March 2010. (Id., Ex. 5.) Quality Loan recorded a second and operative Notice of Trustee's Sale in March 2011. (Id., Ex. 6.)

In April 2011, Quality Loan foreclosed on the Property and conveyed legal title to Defendant. (Id., Ex. 8.) In addition, all equitable interest under the Deed of Trust was assigned to Defendant. (Id., Ex. 7.)

On December 2, 2011, Plaintiff began occupying the Property. (Compl. ¶ 10.) On the same day, Plaintiff filed the current action in state court, alleging that he obtained title to the Property through his occupancy. (Id. ¶ 7.) Plaintiff also alleges that Quality Loan and Defendant recorded a bad faith deed in an attempt to deceive Plaintiff. (Id. ¶ 8.) However, at no time was Plaintiff a party to the Loan or to the Deed of Trust. (See Def.'s RJN, Exs. 1-8.)

III. JUDICIAL STANDARD

A party may move to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court must take the allegations in the challenged complaint as true and construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996). However, a court need not accept as true unreasonable inferences, unwarranted [*4] deductions of fact, or conclusory legal allegations cast in the form of factual allegations. See W. Mining Council v. Watt, 643 F.2d 618, 624 (9th Cir. 1981). A plaintiff must plead "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The complaint need not contain detailed factual allegations, but it must provide more than "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Id. at 555.

When a plaintiff alleges a claim for fraud, the complaint must meet the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) to survive dismissal. Rule 9(b) requires that "the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity" but intent "may be averred generally." In the Ninth Circuit, Rule 9(b) has been interpreted to require allegations of fraud to "state the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation." Schreiber Distrib. Co. v. Serv-Well Furniture Co., 806 F.2d 1393, 1401 (9th Cir. 1986).

IV. REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL NOTICE

Defendant asks the Court to take judicial notice of publicly recorded documents pertaining to the Property. In deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a court may consider judicially noticed documents without converting the motion into a motion for summary judgment. Mack v. S. Bay Beer Distribs., Inc., 798 F.2d 1279, 1282 (9th Cir. 1986), abrogated on other grounds by Astoria Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Solimino, 501 U.S. 104, 107, 111 S. Ct. 2166, 115 L. Ed. 2d 96 (1991). A court may take judicial notice of public records, such as [*5] properly recorded deeds of trust and notices of default. Grant v. Aurora Loan Servs., Inc., 736 F. Supp. 2d 1257, 1263-64 (C.D. Cal. 2010). To the extent the Court relies on such public records in ruling on Defendant's Motion, the Court grants Defendant's Request for Judicial Notice.

V. DISCUSSION

A. Quiet Title

First, Defendant argues that Plaintiff has no legal right to quiet title to the Property. The Court agrees.

In California, occupancy gives a right to possession, but such right is not sufficient against the state or those who have title by prescription, accession, transfer, will, or succession. Cal. Civ. Code § 1006. An occupant may not bring a quiet title action "unless the occupancy has ripened into title by prescription." Id.

Under California law, an occupant may obtain title by prescription in two ways. A person may claim under color of title—i.e., pursuant to a written deed purporting to grant title. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 322. Alternatively, a person may obtain title through adverse possession. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 324. In either situation, a claimant acquires title by prescription only after five years of occupancy. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code §§ 322, 325.

Here, Plaintiff began occupying the Property on December 2, 2011, the same day he filed his Complaint. (Compl. ¶ 10.) Based on these facts, Plaintiff occupied the Property for zero days before asserting his [*6] ownership interest. Because Plaintiff has not met the five-year statutory minimum for title by prescription, Plaintiff's occupancy has not ripened into a possible claim for title. Without title to the Property, Plaintiff has no legal right to bring a quiet title claim.

B. Breach of the Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

Second, Defendant argues that Plaintiff's claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing fails because Plaintiff has not alleged the existence of a contract. The Court agrees.

In California, every contract includes "an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing that neither party will . . . injure the right of the other party to receive the benefits of the agreement." Merritt v. J.A. Stafford Co., 68 Cal. 2d 619, 626, 68 Cal. Rptr. 447, 440 P.2d 927 (1968). However, a plaintiff cannot state a claim for breach of the implied covenant in the absence of a valid underlying contract. Pac. States Enters., Inc. v. City of Coachella, 13 Cal. App. 4th 1414, 1425, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 68 (1993).

Here, Plaintiff was never a party to the Loan or to the Deed of Trust to the Property; neither of these contracts could support a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Because Plaintiff has not alleged the existence of a valid contract to which he is a party, Plaintiff's implied covenant claim fails as a [*7] matter of law.

C. Accounting

Third, Defendant argues that Plaintiff is not entitled to an accounting. The Court agrees.

To state an equitable claim for an accounting, a plaintiff must show that (1) plaintiff and defendant are in a relationship that requires an accounting, and (2) defendant owes plaintiff an amount that can only be ascertained by an accounting. Teselle v. McLoughlin, 173 Cal. App. 4th 156, 179, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 696 (2009).

Here, Plaintiff's demand for an accounting is unwarranted. Plaintiff cannot allege that a relationship existed between himself and Defendant or that Defendant owes him money, because Plaintiff was not a party to any contract.[1] Therefore, Plaintiff's demand for an accounting fails as a matter of law.

D. Fraud

Fourth, Defendant argues that Plaintiff fails to state a claim for fraud. The Court agrees.

In California, to state a claim for fraud, a plaintiff must allege that: (1) defendant made a misrepresentation; (2) defendant knew the misrepresentation was false; (3) defendant made the misrepresentation with the intent to induce plaintiff's reliance on the misrepresentation; (4) plaintiff's reliance was justified; and (5) plaintiff suffered damage. Conroy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal., 45 Cal. 4th 1244, 1255, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532, 203 P.3d 1127 (2009). A plaintiff alleging fraud in federal court must also satisfy the heightened pleading [*8] requirements of Rule 9(b).

Here, Plaintiff fails to plead the elements of fraud with sufficient specificity and merely makes conclusory allegations that Defendant engaged in fraudulent activities. Moreover, Plaintiff has pled no facts to show any justifiable reliance on Defendant's alleged misrepresentation. Thus, because Plaintiff has neither alleged the elements of fraud nor met the Rule 9(b) pleading requirements, Plaintiff's fraud claim fails.

E. Unfair Business Practices

Fifth, Defendant argues that Plaintiff's unfair business practices claim is conclusory. The Court agrees.

To bring a claim under California Business and Professions Code § 17200, a plaintiff must allege either an "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice" or "unfair, deceptive, untrue, or misleading advertising." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Section 17200 "borrows" violations of federal, state, or local law and treats them as unlawful practices independently actionable under § 17200. Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). "Unfair" practices include "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Id. at 187. "Fraudulent" business practices under § 17200 are [*9] acts that are likely to deceive the public. Kowalsky v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 771 F. Supp. 2d 1156, 1159 (N.D. Cal. 2011) (citing In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 312, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (2009)).

Similarly, to bring a false advertising claim under § 17500, a plaintiff must allege that "members of the public are likely to be deceived." In re Toyota Motor Corp. Unintended Acceleration Mktg., Sales Practices, and Prods. Liab. Litig., 754 F. Supp. 2d 1145, 1176 (C.D. Cal. 2010) (quoting In re Tobacco II, 46 Cal. 4th at 312).

A plaintiff alleging business practices that violate §§ 17200 and 17500 "must state with reasonable particularity the facts supporting the statutory elements of the violation." Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc., 14 Cal. App. 4th 612, 619, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 (1993). In addition, a plaintiff in federal court alleging fraudulent conduct in violation of §§

[1] Plaintiff claims that Defendant failed to furnish him with information about the servicing of the Loan pursuant to the Real Estate Settlement and Procedures Act ("RESPA"), 12 U.S.C. § 2605(e). However, Plaintiff was never a party to the Loan and Defendant owed him no duty under RESPA. Therefore, Plaintiff cannot allege a relationship that would support a claim for an accounting in this way.

17200 and 17500 must satisfy the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b). Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103-04 (9th Cir. 2003).

Here, Plaintiff has not identified with sufficient particularity any of Defendant's acts that are unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent. First, Plaintiff fails to allege any unlawful conduct as his other claims in this case fail. Although Plaintiff additionally alleges that Defendant's conduct "threatens an incipient violation of" California Business and Professions Code § 10130, Title 15 of the United States Code, and 12 C.F.R. § 226.1, this allegation is conclusory. (Compl. ¶ 22.) Second, Plaintiff fails to allege sufficient facts to support an unfair or fraudulent practices claim under § 17200 or a false advertising claim under § 17500. Instead, Plaintiff merely makes conclusory allegations about unfair practices that fail to meet the pleading requirements [*10] of § 17200, and conclusory allegations about fraudulent acts that fail to meet the pleading requirements of § 17200, § 17500, or Rule 9(b).

Therefore, Plaintiff fails to state an unfair business practices claim under California law.

F. Aiding and Abetting

Finally, Defendant argues that Plaintiff fails to state a claim for aiding and abetting. The Court agrees.

In California, a person aids and abets an intentional tort if he (1) knew that a tortfeasor's conduct was wrongful and gave substantial assistance or encouragement to such conduct; or (2) gave substantial assistance to a tortfeasor with conduct that independently breached a duty to the plaintiff. Saunders v. Super. Ct., 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 846, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1994).

Here, Plaintiff alleges that Defendant engaged in fraudulent activities, yet fails to plead enough specific facts to satisfy the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b). As a threshold matter, Plaintiff fails to properly allege fraud or any other underlying intentional tort. Morover, Plaintiff does not allege that Defendant substantially assisted or encouraged a tort, nor does Plaintiff allege that Defendant substantially assisted a tort with its own tortious conduct. Therefore, Plaintiff fails to state a claim for aiding and abetting.

VI. CONCLUSION

In light of the foregoing, [*11] the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN1[ ] Scope, Exemptions

The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1992 (FTAIA) specifically exempts from its reach "import commerce" with foreign entities. 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a. The FTAIA initially lays down a general rule placing all (non-import) activity involving foreign commerce outside the Sherman Act's reach and then selectively brings some categories of that excluded conduct back within the Sherman Act's strictures. Case law, in turn, has indicated that foreign import commerce involves transactions in which the seller is located abroad while the buyer is domestic and the goods flow into the United States. Where a claim is limited to a plaintiff's domestic purchases, it does not involve the type of foreign commerce that would be implicated by the FTAIA.

HN2[] International Aspects, Commerce With Foreign Nations

It has been generally established that the so-called "effects test" limits the Sherman Act to those acts (1) that "significantly" or "directly" affect United States commerce, or (2) that are intended to have an effect, or (3) that are both intended to have and do have such an effect. Indeed, it is well established that the Sherman Act applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States.

HN3[] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

Challenges to subject-matter jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) come in two varieties: a facial attack or a factual attack. Under a facial attack, all of the allegations in the complaint must be taken as true, much as with a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. When the district court relies on a facial analysis, an appellate court reviews its findings de novo. Under a factual attack, however, the court can actually weigh evidence to confirm the existence of the factual predicates for subject-matter jurisdiction. When the district court does so, the appellate court reviews its findings for clear error.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN4[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

In order for a complaint to allege jurisdiction adequately, it must contain non-conclusory facts which, if true, establish that the district court has jurisdiction over the dispute.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN5[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Ordinarily, documents that a defendant attaches to a motion to dismiss are considered part of the pleadings if they are referred to in the plaintiff's complaint and are central to her claim. The general rule is that if inconsistent with the allegations of the complaint, the exhibit controls. Courts have recognized, however, that it is not always appropriate to assume everything in an exhibit is true. In particular, although a blanket adoption rule makes sense in the context of an attached contract or loan agreement because the contract represents an agreement between two or more parties to which the law binds them, the rule makes much less sense when the exhibit is not a legally dispositive document.

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > General Overview

HN6[] Judicial Notice, Adjudicative Facts

Judicial notice of a fact is generally only appropriate when there is no dispute regarding the fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN7[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A district court engages in a factual inquiry regarding the complaint's allegations only when the facts necessary to sustain jurisdiction do not implicate the merits of the plaintiff's claim. In other words, the district court is prohibited from making factual findings with respect to a jurisdictional issue when such a finding would adversely affect the merits of the plaintiff's case. When an attack on subject-matter jurisdiction also implicates an element of the cause of action, then the district court should find that jurisdiction exists and deal with the objection as a direct attack on the merits of the plaintiff's claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Commerce With Foreign Nations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

HN8[] Sherman Act, Claims

In the context of Sherman Act claims against foreign defendants, the extent of United States-market impact affects more than a court's jurisdiction; it also speaks to whether there is sufficient injury or anticompetitive effect to establish liability. Thus, the "jurisdictional" and "substantive" inquiries are not wholly independent. That being the case, to the extent a district court renders a factual finding, any such finding is improper.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN9[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews de novo a district court's decision to grant a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion. The appellate court construes the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accepts its allegations as true, and draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN10[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a complaint need only contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). However, it is not enough merely to plead a set of facts "consistent with" a claim to relief; there must also be enough "factual enhancement" to nudge the claim across the line from conceivable to plausible. To conduct this analysis, a court should first identify factual allegations that are entitled to a presumption of truth -- that is, those allegations that are more than just legal conclusions. Then the court should consider the factual allegations in the complaint to determine if they plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN12[] Sherman Act, Claims

A complaint attempting to establish a Sherman Act violation by alleging an explicit agreement to restrain trade must plausibly suggest, rather than be merely consistent with, an agreement to restrain trade in violation of the Sherman Act. To survive a motion to dismiss, these allegations must be specific enough to establish the relevant "who, what, where, when, how or why." Furthermore, they must specify how each defendant was involved in the alleged conspiracy.

HN13[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

It is the general rule that a federal appellate court does not consider an issue not passed upon below. Appellate courts make an exception, however, for cases in which the issues are presented with sufficient clarity and completeness and their resolution will materially advance the progress of already protracted litigation.

HN14[] Sherman Act, Claims

A Sherman Act claim must be brought within four years after the cause of action accrued. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Pleadings & Proof

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN15[] Statute of Limitations, Pleadings & Proof

Three elements must be pleaded in order to establish fraudulent concealment for purposes of tolling a statute of limitations: (1) wrongful concealment of their actions by the defendants; (2) failure of the plaintiff to discover the operative facts that are the basis of his cause of action within the limitations period; and (3) plaintiff's due diligence until discovery of the facts. A plaintiff must plead the factual allegations underlying a claim of fraudulent concealment with particularity. With regard to the "wrongful concealment" element, the plaintiff must point to affirmative acts of concealment. Mere silence or unwillingness to divulge wrongful activities is not sufficient. Instead, there must be some trick or contrivance intended to exclude suspicion and prevent inquiry. Furthermore, in evaluating the due-diligence element, the court should evaluate such acts of active concealment as a factor in determining whether the plaintiff's investigation was reasonable under the circumstances. Thus actions such as would deceive a reasonably diligent plaintiff will toll the statute; but those plaintiffs who delay unreasonably in investigating circumstances that should put them on notice will be foreclosed from filing, once the statute has run.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Pleadings & Proof

An unwillingness to provide information is not an "affirmative act" establishing fraudulent concealment for purposes of tolling a statute of limitations.

HN17[] Statute of Limitations, Pleadings & Proof

Fraudulent concealment for purposes of tolling a statute of limitations may be established through the acts of co-conspirators.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Pleadings & Proof

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN18[] Statute of Limitations, Pleadings & Proof

Although a court may dismiss a claim of fraudulent concealment for purposes of tolling a statute of limitations when it is obvious from the complaint that the plaintiff conducted absolutely no investigation with regard to due diligence, when there is some question as to the depth and scope of that investigation, a plaintiff should be allowed to proceed forward. Courts utilize a fact-based approach to the question whether reliance on oral assurances is a reasonable investigation under the circumstances.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Due Process

HN19[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

To comply with due process, a court's exercise of its power over an out-of-state defendant must not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. Personal jurisdiction comes in two varieties: specific jurisdiction, which is confined to adjudication of issues deriving from, or connected with, the very controversy that establishes jurisdiction, and general, all-purpose jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Challenges

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Questions of Fact & Law

HN20[] In Personam Actions, Challenges

The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing that personal jurisdiction exists. In the face of a properly supported motion for dismissal, the plaintiff may not stand on his pleading but must, by affidavit or otherwise, set forth specific facts showing that the court has jurisdiction. A district court, in its discretion may decide the motion upon the affidavits alone; it may permit discovery in aid of deciding the motion, or it may conduct an evidentiary hearing to resolve any apparent factual questions. Where a district court never addresses personal jurisdiction, only the first option is available on appeal, in which case the plaintiff's burden is "relatively slight," and the appellate court must construe the facts in a light most favorable to the plaintiff. In addition, because weighing any controverted facts is inappropriate at the appellate stage, dismissal is proper only if the plaintiff's alleged facts collectively fail to state a prima facie case for jurisdiction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

HN21[] Sherman Act, Jurisdiction

For Sherman Act claims, 15 U.S.C.S. § 22 authorizes service of process over an antitrust defendant wherever it may be found. When Congress has enacted such nationwide service of process statutes, personal jurisdiction exists whenever the defendant has sufficient minimum contacts with the United States to satisfy the due process requirements under the Fifth Amendment. This inquiry parallels the more traditional personal-jurisdiction analysis under which a defendant must have "minimum contacts" with the forum state pursuant to the state's long-arm statute.

HN22[] In Personam Actions, Purposeful Availment

To establish specific personal jurisdiction, a plaintiff must adequately show the following elements: (1) the defendant must purposefully avail himself of the privilege of acting in the forum state or causing a consequence in the forum state; (2) the cause of action must arise from the defendant's activities there; and (3) the acts of the defendant or consequences caused by the defendant must have a substantial enough connection with the forum state to make the exercise of jurisdiction over the defendant reasonable.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

HN23[] Piercing the Corporate Veil, Alter Ego

The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has adopted the alter-ego theory of personal jurisdiction, which provides that a non-resident parent corporation is amenable to suit in the forum state if the parent company exerts so much control over the subsidiary that the two do not exist as separate entities but are one and the same for purposes of jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Purposeful Availment

Torts > Procedural Matters > Commencement & Prosecution > In Personam Jurisdiction

HN24[] In Personam Actions, Purposeful Availment

A plaintiff can establish personal jurisdiction when it alleges that the defendant "expressly aimed" tortious conduct at the forum in question and the "brunt of the harm" is felt there.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Purposeful Availment

HN25[] In Personam Actions, Purposeful Availment

To satisfy the factor that a cause of action "arises from" a defendant's contacts with the forum, courts require only that the cause of action, of whatever type, have a substantial connection with the defendant's in-forum activities.

[*434] [2] KAREN NELSON MOORE, Circuit Judge. Plaintiffs-Appellants Carrier Corporation, Carrier SA, and Carrier Italia S.p.A. [*435] (collectively "Carrier") appeal the district court's dismissal of their claims under the Sherman Act and the Tennessee Trade Practices Act for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and for failure to state a claim. [2] Defendants-Appellees Outokumpu Oyj ("OTO"), Outokumpu Copper Products Oy ("OCP"), Outokumpu Copper (U.S.A.), Inc. ("Outokumpu U.S.A."), and Outokumpu Copper Franklin, Inc. ("Outokumpu Franklin") (collectively "Outokumpu"), and Mueller Industries, Inc. and Mueller Europe LTD cross-appealed, arguing that the district court's ruling can be affirmed on the alternative bases that Carrier's complaint is time-barred and that the district court lacked personal jurisdiction over Mueller Europe, OTO, and OCP. Carrier has since settled its claims with the two Mueller entities, and those defendants have been dismissed from this appeal. As to the remaining parties, we conclude that the district court had subject-matter jurisdiction over the present dispute and that Carrier's complaint is not time-barred. We further conclude that Carrier's complaint adequately states a Sherman Act claim against all of the Outokumpu Defendants and that the district court had personal jurisdiction over OTO and OCP individually. We therefore REVERSE district court's judgment as to all Outokumpu Defendants and REMAND for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

I. BACKGROUND

A. The Copper Tubing Market

Copper tubing normally [3] is "divided into two main product groups." Joint Appendix ("J.A.") at 0036 (Am. Compl. ¶ 41). First, there are "plumbing tubes . . . which are used for water, oil, gas, and heating installations." Id. Second, there are [3] "higher value-added industrial tubes." Id. The latter category is divided into several subgroups, the "most significant [of which] in terms of volume is tubing for airconditioning and refrigeration ("ACR") applications." Id. The present litigation concerns the market for ACR copper tubing.

Plaintiff Carrier Corporation is a Delaware corporation and Plaintiffs Carrier France SA and Carrier Italia S.p.A. are both subsidiaries of Carrier. Carrier, along with its affiliates, is "the world's largest manufacturer of air-conditioning and commercial refrigeration equipment" and consequently, one of the world's largest purchasers of ACR copper tubing. Id. ¶ 1. According to Carrier's complaint, Defendant OTO and its wholly owned subsidiary OCP are two Finnish companies that, during the relevant time period, produced or sold ACR copper tubing and, either directly or through their subsidiaries, imported it into the United States to sell to U.S. customers. Id. ¶¶ 22, 26. Carrier's [4] complaint further states that Defendants Outokumpu U.S.A. and Outokumpu Franklin, both American subsidiaries of OCP, were "engaged in the production or sale of ACR Copper Tubing in the United States." Id. ¶ 23-24. And Outokumpu Franklin in particular allegedly sold "substantial quantities of ACR Copper Tubing to Carrier in the United States." Id. ¶ 24. The complaint further alleges that OTO "had effective control over the commercial policy and business decisions of its subsidiaries, and did business through its subsidiaries." Id. ¶ 25.[1]

B. The European Commission's 2003 and 2004 Decisions

Much of this lawsuit revolves around two decisions issued by the Commission of [*436] the European Communities ("EC"). The first [5] came in December 2003, when the EC found that OTO and OCP, along with several other companies, participated in a conspiracy in which they "agreed on price targets and other commercial terms for industrial tubes, coordinated price increases, [and] allocated customers and market [4] shares" in violation of European law. J.A. at 0283 (EC ACR Decision ¶ 2). The EC determined that this conspiracy lasted from at least May 3, 1988 to March 22, 2001. The EC's findings, however, do not identify any conspiratorial agreements with respect to U.S. markets.

In September 2004, a separate EC decision found a similar violation of European law in the market for plumbing tubes. The EC again found OTO and OCP liable, this time along with with Mueller Industries and Mueller Europe. J.A. at 0072 (EC Plumbing Decision ¶¶ 1-2). The EC decision emphasized, however, that "the arrangements pertaining to plumbing tubes on the one hand and those relating to industrial tubes on the other hand involved different companies (and employees), and were organised in a different way." Id. ¶ 5. Once again, the decision did not address any whether any conspiracy extended beyond the European markets.

C. The Present Litigation

In [6] its amended complaint, Carrier essentially alleges that the European conspiracy uncovered by the EC was also directed at the U.S. market for ACR industrial tubes, thereby violating the Sherman Act and the Tennessee Trade Practices Act. Carrier is not the first plaintiff to make this allegation—the district judge in this case has also dismissed two similar cases involving essentially the same defendants. See Am. Copper & Brass, Inc. v. Boliden AB, No. 04-2771 DV (W.D. Tenn. Oct. 10, 2006) (unpublished opinion); In re ACR Copper Tubing Litig., No. 06-2207 (W.D. Tenn. July 26, 2007) (unpublished opinion).

Carrier specifically alleges that between 1988 and 2001, the Defendants conspired to raise the price for ACR tubing by developing "a customer and market allocation scheme" under which "Carrier's business in the United States was allocated to the Outokumpu defendants." J.A. at 21 (Am. Compl. ¶ 4). The other conspirators, including Wieland-Werke AG ("Wieland") and KM Europa Metal AG ("KME"), "agreed not to pursue" Carrier's U.S. business. Id. In return, Wieland and KME received Carrier's European business and the Outokumpu Defendants agreed not to aggressively pursue it. As a result of [7] these agreements, Carrier maintains that it "paid [5] artificially inflated and supra-competitive prices for ACR Copper Tubing in the United States, Europe and elsewhere." Id. ¶ 2.[2] Outokumpu, Wieland, and KME were able to do this, Carrier alleges, because "they were the three largest producers of ACR Copper Tubing in the world," which resulted in "circumstances [that] facilitated the conspiracy." Id. ¶ 5. Carrier also explains that Outokumpu, Wieland, and KME were eager to preempt alternative suppliers that could undercut their prices. To that end, "[t]hey enlisted the support of others in the conspiracy," including [*437] Mueller Industries and Mueller Europe. Id. ¶ 6. The Mueller entities agreed not to pursue Carrier's business in the ACR tubing market, and in return, the other conspirators allocated different markets to Mueller.

Carrier substantiates these claims in part by drawing from details found in the EC industrial-tubes decision. For instance, like the EC decision, the complaint alleges that Outokumpu and the other co-conspirators coordinated their conspiracy through the biannual [8] meetings of the trade association known as the Cuproclima Quality Association. In doing so, the complaint quotes various incriminating documents uncovered by the EC investigation, details the time and place of specific meetings, and also describes specific price targets set by the alleged conspirators.

[1] As this case was pending, Carrier reached a settlement agreement with both of the Mueller entities. Thus, in accordance with Sixth Circuit Rule 33(b) and Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 42(b), Mueller Industries, Inc. and Mueller Europe LTD have been dismissed from this appeal. Carrier Corp. v. Outokumpu Oyj, Nos. 07-6052, 07-6114 (6th Cir. Nov. 15, 2011) (unpublished orders). Cases Nos. 07-6115 and 07-6116 have also been dismissed. (6th Cir. Nov. 10, 2011) (unpublished order).

[2] On appeal, Carrier has limited its claims to purchases made within the United States. Carrier Br. 1 at 23 n.2.

Carrier's complaint also includes allegations that were not drawn from the EC decisions. Carrier argues that these allegations provide circumstantial evidence that the market-allocation scheme reached beyond the European markets and into the United States. Indeed, Carrier maintains that the market for ACR copper tubing was global in scope and, as further evidence of such an arrangement, points to an Outokumpu document uncovered in the EC investigation that references a "Global Agreement" between the co-conspirators. Along these lines, Carrier also reasons that any successful conspiracy must have involved the United States so as to prevent a multinational corporation like Carrier from "purchas[ing] all of the corporation's world-wide demand for ACR Copper Tubing in the United States and then ship[ping] those products to [6] facilities world-wide." Id. ¶ 59. Thus, Carrier maintains that "Defendants [9] and their co-conspirators singled out Carrier and other similarly situated companies by devising a unique global approach for fixing the prices of ACR Copper Tubing offered to Carrier." Id. ¶ 61. In support of this global conspiracy, Carrier further contends that Outokumpu scheduled yearly contract negotiations with U.S. customers that occurred after the fall Cuproclima meetings and during which the target prices and market allocations were set. Carrier also alleges that prices in the U.S. remained similar to those in other regions, which facilitated consistent pricing levels across the relevant markets. Likewise, Carrier claims that during the period between 1988 and 2001, none of Outokumpu's co-conspirators aggressively pursued business in one another's markets. But around 2003, after the cartel disbanded, Wieland and KME suddenly began soliciting Carrier's U.S. business.

In December 2006, Outokumpu moved to dismiss the amended complaint under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1), 12(b)(2), and 12(b)(6). The district court granted the motions on the basis that it lacked subject-matter jurisdiction over Carrier's Sherman Act claims. The district court justified the dismissal by [10] observing that the complaint merely "'cut-and-pasted,'" J.A. at 926 (July 27, 2006 Dist. Ct. Order at 6), facts from the EC decisions in a manner that rendered it "'wholly insubstantial.'" Id. at 928. The district court was also troubled by the complaint's use of "facts from the plumbing tubing and ACR tubing investigations as if they described a single conspiracy," which the district court concluded "undermined any credibility the complaint otherwise possessed." Id. at 927. According to the district court, the plaintiffs did "further injury to their argument" by drawing facts from the EC's decisions when they supported Carrier's claims while disregarding contradictory information, such as the fact that "the EC findings were limited to European conduct." Id. Apparently for the same reasons that it lacked subject-matter [*438] jurisdiction, the district court also concluded that the case "lack[ed] a legitimate factual foundation" and therefore warranted dismissal under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Id. at 931. Carrier appealed, and the Defendants cross-appealed, raising additional grounds on which to uphold the district court's judgment.

[7] II. ANALYSIS

A. Jurisdictional Prerequisites

Outokumpu [11] first argues that the district court correctly found subject-matter jurisdiction lacking because Carrier's complaint was "wholly insubstantial." See Outokumpu Br. at 26. Although the district court's reasoning was premised on its determination that the complaint had no substance of its own, Outokumpu's argument extends that focus and also maintains that Carrier fails to allege any substantial U.S.-market involvement, a required element for extraterritorial jurisdiction under the Sherman Act.[3] We conclude that under either theory, Carrier's allegations were sufficient to demonstrate the court's jurisdiction for purposes of a motion to dismiss.

[3] Outokumpu also argues that the district court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction because the alleged conspiracy did not have a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on United States commerce as is required under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1992 ("FTAIA"). 15 U.S.C. § 6a. HN1[] The FTAIA, however, specifically exempts from its reach

1. Jurisdiction Under the Sherman Act

Since Judge Learned Hand's leading opinion in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America (Alcoa), 148 F.2d 416, 443 (2d Cir. 1945), which proposed the need for practical limitations on the Sherman Act that would avoid global overreaching, HN2[] it has been generally established that the so-called "effects test" limits the Sherman Act "to those acts (1) that 'significantly' or 'directly' affect United States commerce, or (2) that are intended to have an effect, or (3) that are both intended to have and do have such an effect." IB Phillip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 272d, at 279-80 (3d [8] ed. 2006) (citing Alcoa, 148 F.2d at 443-44). These standards have since been widely incorporated into U.S. jurisprudence. Indeed, "it is well established by now that the Sherman Act applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States." [*439] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 796, 113 S. Ct. 2891, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612 (1993). The Supreme Court, however, has not delineated the precise bounds of the effects [14] test, and lower courts are not in agreement as to its exact scope. Cf. generally Dee-K Enters., Inc. v. Heveafil Sdn. Bhd., 299 F.3d 281, 286 (4th Cir. 2002) (addressing the scope of the effects test and discussing the complexities inherent in applying the test in cases such as this one, which involve a "mixture of foreign and domestic elements"). Nonetheless, we need not undertake that task at present because, regardless of the precise standard, Carrier has sufficiently alleged any threshold effect on U.S. commerce necessary to survive a motion to dismiss.

Hartford Fire involved Sherman Act claims by U.S. states and private domestic insurers alleging that a group of mainly foreign reinsurers conspired to limit coverage of certain casualty risks in a manner that would effectively prevent the domestic insurers from offering coverage for those risks in certain state markets. 509 U.S. at 795. Without laying out its reasoning, the Court accepted the reinsurers' concession that jurisdiction existed under the Sherman Act, even though the claims plainly involved "foreign conduct." Id. at 796-97.[4] [*440] The alleged impact

"import commerce" with foreign entities. Id. According to F. Hoffmann-LaRoche Ltd. v. Empagran S.A., 542 U.S. 155, 162, 124 S. Ct. 2359, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226 (2004), the FTAIA "initially lays down a general rule placing all [12] (non-import) activity involving foreign commerce outside the Sherman Act's reach" and then selectively brings some categories of that excluded conduct back within the Sherman Act's strictures. See also IB Phillip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 272i4, at 307-08 (3d ed. 2006). Areeda and Hovenkamp, in turn, have indicated that "[f]oreign import commerce involves transactions in which the seller is located abroad while the buyer is domestic and the goods flow into the United States." Id. at 290.

Carrier's claim here is limited to its domestic purchases, and thus, does not involve the type of foreign commerce that would be implicated by the FTAIA. As a result, even if the FTAIA does present a jurisdictional limitation—a question that we do not decide here—it does not apply to this case. Cf. Dee-K Enters., Inc. v. Heveafil Sdn. Bhd., 299 F.3d 281, 287 (4th Cir. 2002) (concluding, in a case involving mainly foreign producers selling rubber thread in the United States and elsewhere, that the FTAIA did not apply "[b]ecause this case involves importation of foreign-made goods, . . . conduct Congress expressly exempted from FTAIA coverage as 'involving . . . import trade or import [13] commerce . . . with foreign nations'" (third and fourth alterations in original)), cert. denied, 539 U.S. 969, 123 S. Ct. 2638, 156 L. Ed. 2d 675 (2003).

[4] We note that there is some confusion whether the Sherman Act's requirements in fact speak to subject-matter jurisdiction. The genesis of this confusion arises from the Supreme Court's description of the extraterritorial scope of the Sherman Act in Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 796 n.22, 113 S. Ct. 2891, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612 (1993), as relating to "jurisdiction." At the time, Justice Scalia's dissent disputed that characterization and sought to clarify that the term did not refer to the court's subject-matter jurisdiction and instead referenced the prerequisites for stating a claim on the merits. See id. at 813 (Scalia, J. dissenting); cf. Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law § 401 cmt. c [16] (1987) (indicating that the term "subject matter jurisdiction" may be used both in the context of Congress's power to prescribe legislation and in the context of a court's "jurisdiction to adjudicate"). Although Hartford did not squarely address the issue, many lower courts nonetheless continue to treat the Sherman Act's extraterritorial limitations as jurisdictional rather than as elements of a federal antitrust claim. See, e.g., Empagran S.A. v. F. Hoffmann-LaRoche, Ltd., 417 F.3d 1267, 1268-69, 368 U.S. App. D.C. 18 (D.C. Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1092, 126 S. Ct. 1043, 163 L. Ed. 2d 857 (2006); United States v. LSL Biotechnologies, 379 F.3d 672, 677-79 (9th Cir. 2004); United Phosphorus, Ltd. v. Angus Chem. Co., 322 F.3d 942, 948 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1003, 124 S. Ct. 533, 157 L. Ed. 2d 408 (2003). Recent Supreme Court decisions, however, raise significant questions about the wisdom of that approach.

on U.S. markets in this case is equally, [9] if not more, direct. Carrier alleges [15] that the U.S. market was intertwined in the conspirators' allocation efforts and that the result of that agreement was to raise prices artificially for ACR copper tubing for transactions between the co-conspirators and buyers in the United States. J.A. at 0039-40 (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 51, 54). Taking those allegations as true, as we must do at this stage in the litigation, we have no hesitation in concluding that Carrier's complaint meets any threshold jurisdictional requirement imposed by the Sherman Act on claims involving foreign conduct.

2. Subject-Matter Jurisdiction

Because Carrier has met any required threshold for stating a claim against a foreign entity under the Sherman Act, we proceed to consider whether the complaint [18] can survive Outokumpu's and the district court's assertion that the allegations were insufficient to survive Outokumpu's Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) challenge.

HN3[] Challenges to subject-matter jurisdiction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) "come in two varieties: a facial attack or a factual attack." Gentek Bldg. Prods. v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 491 F.3d 320, 330 (6th Cir. 2007). Under a facial attack, all of the allegations in the complaint must be taken as true, much as with a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Id. When the district court relies on a facial analysis, we review its findings de novo. Lovely v. United States, 570 F.3d 778, 781 (6th Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 130 S. Ct. 1054, 175 L. Ed. 2d 883 (2010). Under a factual attack, however, the court can actually weigh evidence to confirm the existence of the factual predicates for subject-matter jurisdiction. RMI Titanium Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 78 F.3d 1125, 1134 (6th Cir. 1996); see also 2 James Wm. Moore, Moore's Federal Practice § 12.30[4] (3d ed. 2000) ("[W]hen a court reviews a complaint under a factual attack, the allegations have no presumptive truthfulness, and the court that [19] must [10] weigh the evidence has discretion to allow affidavits, documents, and even a limited evidentiary hearing to resolve disputed jurisdictional facts."). When the district court does so, we review its findings for clear error. Lovely, 570 F.3d at 781-82. Outokumpu has presented arguments for both a facial and factual challenge to subject-matter jurisdiction, and we address each in turn.

a. Outokumpu's Facial Attack

HN4[] In order for Carrier's complaint to allege jurisdiction adequately, it must contain non-conclusory facts which, if true, establish that the district court had jurisdiction over the dispute. O'Bryan v. Holy See, 556 F.3d 361, 375-76 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 130 S. Ct. 361, 175 L. Ed. 2d 27 (2009). The district court dismissed Carrier's complaint on the basis that it is "wholly insubstantial." J.A. at 0930 (Dist. Ct. Op. at 10). We, however, disagree that this case presents one of the rare instances that permit a district court to dismiss a complaint because "the plaintiff's claims are clearly immaterial, made solely for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction or are wholly unsubstantiated and frivolous." Gentek, 491 F.3d at 332 (internal quotation marks omitted).

After Hartford, the Supreme Court has been much more wary of labeling statutory requirements as "jurisdictional." Seeking to create a "readily administrable bright line," the Court has since set out the general rule that "when Congress does not rank a statutory limitation on coverage as jurisdictional, courts should treat the restriction as nonjurisdictional [17] in character." Arbaugh v. Y & H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 516, 126 S. Ct. 1235, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1097 (2006); see also Reed Elsevier, Inc. v. Muchnick, 130 S. Ct. 1237, 1244, 176 L. Ed. 2d 18 (2010). Moreover, in Morrison v. National Australia Bank Ltd., 130 S. Ct. 2869, 2877, 177 L. Ed. 2d 535 (2010), the Court determined that questions concerning the extraterritorial application of § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, which has language that somewhat mirrors that in the Sherman Act, were not jurisdictional. These decisions have thus questioned the precedential value of the types of "drive-by jurisdictional rulings," Arbaugh, 546 U.S. at 511 (internal quotation marks omitted), seen in cases like Hartford. Cf. generally Howard M. Wasserman, Colloquy Essay, The Demise of "Drive-By Jurisdictional Rulings," 105 NW. U. L.REV. 947 (2011). Nonetheless, because the parties have not addressed this issue directly, and because our decision does not hinge on further elucidation of the meaning of "jurisdiction" in this context, we will save the resolution of this issue for another day.

Carrier's complaint describes, [20] in some detail, an elaborate worldwide conspiracy in which the U.S. market for ACR copper tubing was assigned to Outokumpu. Furthermore, Carrier alleges that this conspiracy caused the price of goods purchased within the United States to increase, which in turn caused a direct antitrust injury. In support of these allegations, the complaint references numerous specific dates [*441] during which the Cuproclima cartel met and the various agreements its members entered into. Assuming that these allegations are true, as we must, we conclude that Carrier has met any applicable requirement that it allege a non-conclusory effect on U.S. commerce. Cf. Hartford, 509 U.S. at 795-97 (finding jurisdictional requirements easily satisfied when complaint alleged that "London reinsurers . . . conspired to coerce primary insurers in the United States to offer" certain forms of coverage—a claim that alleged both an impact on the U.S. insurance market and that the reinsurers' "conduct in fact produced substantial effect").

[*11] Outokumpu, which attached the full EC decision to its motion to dismiss, counters that many of the details contained in the complaint are drawn from the EC industrial-tube decision that found [21] no evidence that the cartel's focus extended beyond Europe. Like the district court, Outokumpu argues that Carrier's complaint includes misleading quotes from the EC decision and omits language explaining that the conspiracy applied only to European markets. As a consequence, Outokumpu argues that any details regarding specific meetings and agreements occurring during the Cuproclima meetings are of no assistance to Carrier because they relate only to a European conspiracy. Furthermore, when those portions of the complaint are excluded, as Outokumpu insists they must be, Carrier is left with nothing more than conclusory allegations.

We are unpersuaded by this argument. Initially, Outokumpu overstates the degree to which Carrier's complaint conflicts with the EC decision. For instance, as Carrier points out, the EC industrial-tubes decision clearly states that "[i]nsofar as the activities of the cartel relate[] to sales in countries that are not members of the Community . . . they lie outside the scope of this Decision." J.A. at 0332 (EC ACR Decision ¶ 229). Thus, any silence on the part of the EC decision as to U.S. markets may simply reflect the limited scope of the decision. Outokumpu [22] responds that "even a cursory review of the EC's cartel decisions makes clear that Commission decisions addressing cartels that extend beyond Europe regularly describe the entire geographic scope of the cartel." Outokumpu Br. 2 at 47. But the mere fact that the EC does at times look beyond Europe should not trump its otherwise explicit statement that it is not concerned with outside markets.[5]

In addition, to the extent that there is a conflict between Carrier's allegations and the EC decision, we do not agree that Carrier is bound by the EC's findings. HN5[] Ordinarily, "[d]ocuments that a defendant attaches to a motion to dismiss are considered [12] part of the pleadings if they are referred to in the plaintiff's complaint and are central to her claim." Weiner v. Klais & Co., 108 F.3d 86, 89 (6th Cir. 1997) [23] (alteration in original) (internal quotation marks omitted). The general rule is that "[i]f inconsistent with the allegations of the complaint, the exhibit controls." Mengel Co. v. Nashville Paper Prod. & Specialty Workers Union, No. 513, 221 F.2d 644, 647 (6th Cir. 1955). We have recognized, however, that it is not always appropriate to "assume everything [in an exhibit] is true." Jones v. City of Cincinnati, 521 F.3d 555, 561 (6th Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1099, [*442] 129 S. Ct. 909, 173 L. Ed. 2d 109 (2009). In particular, although "[a] blanket adoption rule makes sense in the context of an attached contract or loan agreement because the contract represents an agreement between two or more parties to which the law binds them," the rule makes much less sense when, as is the case here, the exhibit is not a legally dispositive document. N. Ind. Gun & Outdoor Shows, Inc. v. City of South Bend, 163 F.3d 449, 455 (7th Cir. 1998). When an exhibit is a contract, it is reasonable to consider the entire document because the contract has independent legal significance. Here, however, Outokumpu is citing the EC's findings not merely to prove their existence but rather to prove the truth of the matters asserted within them. [24] See Jones, 521 F.3d at 561 (finding that transcripts of an interview attached to the plaintiff's complaint could be considered as an allegation that those statements were made, but the truth of those statements could not be considered on a motion to dismiss). To permit such a tactic would allow Outokumpu impermissibly to question the evidentiary foundation of Carrier's

[5] The Defendants further argue that, in any event, the EC decision provides no "positive" support for a finding of a U.S. conspiracy. Outokumpu Br. 4 at 10. But Carrier need not provide any additional support for its assertions. Carrier has directly alleged that the Defendants engaged in an unlawful U.S.- focused market-allocation scheme; it need not offer any additional evidentiary support at the pleading stage.

complaint, thereby depriving Carrier of the presumption of truth to which it is entitled at this stage of litigation. Indeed, Carrier should be free to draw facts from the EC decision to provide a "starting point" and then use those facts to construct a theory that differs from or even contradicts that of the EC. Carrier Br. 3 at 10 (emphasis omitted).[6]

[*13] Furthermore, Carrier offers additional circumstantial allegations that corroborate its claim that the market-allocation scheme extended to the United States. Although Carrier's complaint provides numerous circumstantial allegations, of particular interest is its claim that Wieland and KME initially refrained from aggressively competing for Carrier's U.S. business until 2003, and then suddenly began doing so at that time. It is true that the mere fact that competitors do not intrude upon one another's markets does not necessarily mean that an illegal market-allocation scheme is taking place. See Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 567-78, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). When two companies refrain from entering a market and then suddenly do so after a cartel dissolves, however, there are good grounds for suspicion. Defendants question why it is that KME and Wieland waited until two years after the Cuproclima conspiracy dissolved to enter [26] the United States if all that was stopping them was a supposed allocation conspiracy. It is certainly plausible, however, that these two companies would require time to reconfigure their operations so as to enable themselves to enter a new market. Similarly, 2003 is the year in which the EC's industrial-tubes investigation came to a close, and it is plausible for KME and Wieland to wait until that moment before engaging in what could be viewed as suspicious activity.

This analysis demonstrates that, contrary to Outokumpu's argument— [*443] and the district court's conclusion—Carrier's complaint does not fall within the rare exception created by Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682-83, 66 S. Ct. 773, 90 L. Ed. 939 (1946), which permits district courts to dismiss complaints that are "wholly insubstantial and frivolous." See also Musson Theatrical, Inc. v. Fed. Express Corp., 89 F.3d 1244, 1248 & n.1 (6th Cir. 1996) (stating that "[w]hen a 12(b)(1) motion attacks the face of a complaint . . . [t]he plaintiff must show only that the complaint alleges a claim under federal law, and that the complaint is "substantial," and defining "substantial" as "non-frivolous"). The exception on which Outokumpu and the district court relied is [27] quite narrow and ordinarily reserved for extremely weak claims. See, e.g., Moore v. Lafayette Life Ins. Co., 458 F.3d 416, 444 (6th Cir. 2006) (explaining that the rule from Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 66 S. Ct. 773, 90 L. Ed. 939 (1946), should apply "only where the plaintiff's claim has no plausible foundation or is clearly foreclosed by a prior Supreme Court decision" (internal quotation marks omitted)); [14] Apple v. Glenn, 183 F.3d 477, 478-79 (6th Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1198, 120 S. Ct. 1263, 146 L. Ed. 2d 118 (2000) (affirming dismissal due to lack of jurisdiction in a case in which the plaintiff "sued Senator John Glenn, Chief Justice William Rehnquist, and other top government officials, claiming that the defendants violated his First Amendment right to petition the government because they did not answer his many letters or take the action requested in those letters.").

The district court concluded that Carrier's complaint falls within the exception because it "cut-and-pasted" many sections of the EC decisions. As explained above, however, the mere fact that the complaint borrows its substance from the EC decision and then builds on the EC's findings does not render its allegations any less valid. Furthermore, even if all of the facts [28] taken from the EC decisions were stripped from the complaint, Carrier's complaint still offers additional allegations, such as its claims regarding KME and Wieland's sudden entry into the U.S. market. As even the district court noted, portions of Carrier's complaint "create[d] a close approximation of [the] factual predicate" needed to establish its claim. J.A. at 927 (Dist. Ct. Order at 7). Under such circumstances, Carrier's complaint comes nowhere near the level of frivolity required by the "wholly insubstantial and frivolous" exception, and the district court erred in dismissing the case on that basis.

[6] The Defendants maintain that the district court was permitted to take judicial notice of the EC decisions. They also argue that judicial notice is a permissible basis for considering a letter submitted by EC Director Kirtikumar Mehta, which reiterated that the scope of the EC industrial-tubes decision was "limited to the European territory." J.A. at 0919 (Mehta Letter at 1). But here again, judicial notice would be appropriate only to prove the fact that the decisions [25] and the letter existed, not the truth of the matters stated therein. Scotty's Contracting & Stone, Inc. v. United States, 326 F.3d 785, 790 n.1 (6th Cir. 2003) (HN6[]) "[J]udicial notice of a fact is generally only appropriate when there is no dispute regarding the fact.").

b. Outokumpu's Factual Attack

Outokumpu further argues that, even if Carrier's complaint facially appears to plead a U.S.-focused conspiracy, to the extent that the district court made factual findings in applying the "wholly insubstantial" standard and making its determination that the allegations lacked the requisite "U.S. nexus," we should review that analysis using the standards for a factual attack. Outokumpu Br. 2 at 55 n.17.

We first note that it is unclear whether the district court here made any findings of fact. Indeed, the court never explicitly stated that it was doing so. [29] The court did, however, assess the complaint's "credibility," J.A. at 927 (Dist. Ct. Op. at 7), and referenced its own power to "mak[e] reasonable inquiry into the facts," id. at 929 (Op. [15] at 9). Therefore, we assume that the district court found, as a matter of fact, that the conspiracy alleged in Carrier's complaint did not target U.S. markets.

HN7[] "[A] district court engages in a factual inquiry regarding the complaint's allegations only when the facts necessary to sustain jurisdiction do not implicate the merits of the plaintiff's claim." Gentek, 491 F.3d at 330. In other words, the [*444] district court is prohibited from making factual findings with respect to a jurisdictional issue when such a finding would adversely affect the merits of the plaintiff's case. Id. at 331. When "an attack on subject-matter jurisdiction also implicates an element of the cause of action, then the district court should find that jurisdiction exists and deal with the objection as a direct attack on the merits of the plaintiff's claim." Id. at 330 (internal quotation marks omitted).

HN8[] In the context of Sherman Act claims against foreign defendants, the extent of U.S.-market impact affects more than a court's jurisdiction; [30] it also speaks to whether there is "sufficient injury or anticompetitive effect to establish liability." Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law § 415, reporter's note 3 (1987). Thus, as Areeda and Hovenkamp have observed, the "'jurisdictional' and 'substantive' inquiries are not wholly independent." IB Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 273, at 326. That being the case, to the extent that the district court did render a factual finding, any such finding was improper. Cf. Hartford, 509 U.S. at 796 n.21 (explaining that the court was "bound to credit" allegations that foreign defendants conspired to coerce American insurers, the very conduct upon which the court found the requisite "substantial effect" to be based).

In conclusion, we hold that the district court did not lack subject-matter jurisdiction over Carrier's complaint. We therefore proceed to an evaluation of the merits of Outokumpu's Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

[*16] B. The Outokumpu Defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) Motion

The Defendants next argue that Carrier's complaint fails to state a claim. HN9[] We review de novo a district court's decision to grant a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Watson Carpet & Floor Covering, Inc. v. Mohawk Indus., Inc., 648 F.3d 452, 456 (6th Cir. 2011). [31] "We 'construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept its allegations as true, and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff." Id. at 456 (quoting In re Travel Agent Comm'n Antitrust Litig., 583 F.3d 896, 902 (6th Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 896, 178 L. Ed. 2d 746 (2011)).

HN10[] To survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), a complaint need only contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). In Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, however, the Supreme Court emphasized that it is not enough merely to plead a set of facts "consistent with" a claim to relief; there must also be enough "factual enhancement" to "nudge [the] claim[] across the line from conceivable to plausible." 550 U.S. at 557, 570. To conduct this analysis, a court should first identify factual allegations that are entitled to a presumption of truth—that is, those allegations that are more than just legal conclusions. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1950-51, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Then the court should "consider the factual allegations in [the] complaint to determine if they plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief." [32] Id. at 1951.

Carrier's claim falls under HN11[] § 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits conspiracies "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Here, the parties focus on the existence of a conspiracy impacting U.S. markets. Carrier's HN12[] complaint attempts to establish a Sherman Act violation by alleging "an explicit agreement to restrain trade," and therefore must "'plausibly [*445] suggest[],' rather than be 'merely consistent with,' an agreement to restrain trade in violation of the Sherman Act." Watson, 648 F.3d at 457 (quoting In re Travel Agent Comm'n Antitrust Litig., 583 F.3d at 908). To survive a motion to dismiss, these allegations must be specific enough to establish the relevant "who, what, where, when, how or why." Total Benefits Planning Agency, Inc. v. Anthem Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 552 F.3d 430, 437 (6th Cir. 2008) [17] (internal quotation marks omitted). Furthermore, they must "specify how [each] defendant [was] involved in the alleged conspiracy." In re Travel Agent Comm'n Antitrust Litig., 583 F.3d at 905.

Outokumpu first reiterates its previous argument that the alleged conspiracy had no effect on the United States. That argument, [33] however, fails for the same reasons as did Outokumpu's challenge to this court's subject-matter jurisdiction under the Sherman Act's effects test. Furthermore, as was also detailed above, the allegations extend well beyond the conclusory "if it happened there, it could have happened here" argument that has been rejected in other courts. In re Elevator Antitrust Litig., 502 F.3d 47, 52 (2d Cir. 2007).

Outokumpu's U.S. entities—Outokumpu U.S.A. and Outokumpu Copper Franklin—then argue that there are insufficient allegations as to their specific involvement in the conspiracy. The two U.S. entities' argument stems from Carrier's frequent use of blanket references to the "Outokumpu defendants," without always specifying the role that each corporate entity played in the conspiracy. Outokumpu U.S.A. and Outokumpu Copper Franklin further note that neither EC decision mentions their involvement. In addition, the complaint does not specifically identify either company as a member of the Cuproclima conspiracy.

Even in the absence of direct allegations that Outokumpu's U.S. entities were coconspirators at Cuproclima, however, the court may look beyond those entities' corporate forms if the complaint [34] presents facts to support a determination that the subsidiaries were alter egos of the parent corporation. Cf. Opdyke Inv. Co. v. City of Detroit, 883 F.2d 1265, 1272 (6th Cir. 1989) ("It is true that the parent and subsidiary companies . . . were separately incorporated, but they must be treated as a single entity under the antitrust laws." (citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp, 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984))); Bhd. of Locomotive Engineers v. Interstate Commerce Comm'n, 909 F.2d 909, 914 (6th Cir. 1990) (indicating that a wholly controlled subsidiary may be an "alter ego" of the parent company depending on the facts of a particular case). Thus, the [18] question becomes whether OTO and OCP's control over the U.S. entities was sufficiently extensive to permit imputation of the conspiracy to the U.S. entities.

For purposes of the motion to dismiss, Carrier's allegations are sufficient to support such a determination. The complaint identifies that the U.S. entities are responsible for selling the overpriced tubing directly to Carrier, stating, for instance, that "[d]uring the Relevant Period, [Outokumpu Copper Franklin] sold substantial quantities of ACR Copper Tubing to Carrier in the [35] United States." J.A. at 0028 (Am. Compl. ¶ 24). The complaint also identifies Outokumpu U.S.A. as "engaged in the production or sale of ACR Copper Tubing in the United States, Europe, and elsewhere, directly and/or through its affiliates and/or wholly-owned subsidiaries during the Relevant Period." Id. ¶ 23. More importantly, however, Carrier has alleged [*446] that the various Outokumpu entities were operated and deliberately portrayed to the outside world as a "single global enterprise" in which key executives overlapped between the U.S. and European entities and vital management personnel rotated through positions on both sides of the Atlantic. Id. ¶¶ 27-30. Under such circumstances, requiring Carrier to delineate in the complaint the role each subsidiary played in the conspiracy is unnecessary,[7] and Carrier's allegations against Outokumpu's U.S. entities are sufficient to survive the motion to dismiss.

[7] Outokumpu again reiterates its argument that Carrier's allegations are inconsistent with the findings in the EC decision. Specifically, Outokumpu points to statements limiting the Cuproclima cartel to European customers. As discussed above, this is unsurprising given that the scope of the [36] EC's decision was limited to Europe and therefore did not implicate Outokumpu's U.S. entities. Thus, as stated in Section II.A.1, our review is not constrained by the EC's decision to refrain from considering the existence of agreements beyond the European markets.

C. Statute of Limitations and Personal Jurisdiction

Turning to the cross-appeal, Outokumpu next argues that Carrier's complaint is time-barred and that the district court lacked personal jurisdiction over OTO and OCP. Because it decided the case on other grounds, the district court did not address either of these issues in its dismissal order.

[*19] As an initial matter, HN13[] "[i]t is the general rule . . . that a federal appellate court does not consider an issue not passed upon below." Katt v. Dykhouse, 983 F.2d 690, 695 (6th Cir. 1992) (alteration in original) (quoting Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 120, 96 S. Ct. 2868, 49 L. Ed. 2d 826 (1976)). We make an exception, however, for cases such as this one in which "the issue[s are] presented with sufficient clarity and completeness and [their] resolution will materially advance the progress of . . . already protracted litigation." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). This litigation has been ongoing since 2006, [37] and both Outokumpu and Carrier have fully briefed the statute-of-limitations and personal-jurisdiction issues. We therefore think it appropriate to address Outokumpu's arguments.

1. Statute of Limitations

HN14[] A Sherman Act claim must be brought "within four years after the cause of action accrued." 15 U.S.C. § 15b. The Amended Complaint indicates that the conspiracy ended in 2001. Carrier did not file its first complaint, however, until March 2006. Nonetheless, Carrier argues that the statute of limitations should be tolled under the doctrine of fraudulent concealment.

HN15[] "Three elements must be pleaded in order to establish fraudulent concealment: (1) wrongful concealment of their actions by the defendants; (2) failure of the plaintiff to discover the operative facts that are the basis of his cause of action within the limitations period; and (3) plaintiff's due diligence until discovery of the facts." Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389, 394 (6th Cir. 1975). A plaintiff must plead the factual allegations underlying a claim of fraudulent concealment with particularity. Friedman v. Estate of Presser, 929 F.2d 1151, 1160 (6th Cir. 1991). With regard to the "wrongful concealment" [38] element the plaintiff must point to "affirmative acts of concealment." Hamilton Cnty. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Nat'l Football League, 491 F.3d 310, 319 (6th Cir. 2007). "[M]ere silence or unwillingness to divulge wrongful activities is not sufficient." Browning v. Levy, 283 F.3d 761, 770 (6th Cir. 2002). Instead, there must be some "'trick or [*447] contrivance intended to exclude suspicion and prevent inquiry.'" Pinney Dock & Transp. Co. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1467 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 880, 109 S. Ct. 196, 102 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1988) (quoting Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U.S. (11 Otto) 135, 143, 25 L. Ed. 807 (1879)) [20] . Furthermore, in evaluating the due-diligence element, the court should evaluate such acts of active concealment as a factor in determining whether the plaintiff's investigation was reasonable under the circumstances. Campbell v. Upjohn Co., 676 F.2d 1122, 1128 (6th Cir. 1982). Thus "[a]ctions such as would deceive a reasonably diligent plaintiff will toll the statute; but those plaintiffs who delay unreasonably in investigating circumstances that should put them on notice will be foreclosed from filing, once the statute has run." Id.

Here, Carrier's complaint points to numerous instances in which the conspirators[8] [39] actively tried to hide their conduct. Some of these allegations lack any specificity, and therefore fall short of meeting the standard required to support a claim of fraudulent concealment. For instance, the complaint alleges that in 2001, after the EC began investigating Outokumpu, Outokumpu denied any wrongdoing. As stated above, however, HN16[] an unwillingness to provide information is not an "affirmative act." Furthermore, the complaint alleges that the Defendants "utiliz[ed] covert meetings" and "[gave] false and pretextual reasons for the pricing of ACR Copper Tubing sold . . . during the Relevant Period and [described] such pricing falsely as being the result of competitive factors rather than collusion." J.A at 0051-52 (Am. Compl. ¶ 104(a), (c)). This also lacks the requisite particularity, as it fails to specify "the time, place, and content of the alleged" fraudulent acts. U.S. ex rel. Bledsoe v. Cmty. Health Sys., Inc., 501 F.3d 493, 505 (6th Cir. 2007) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Other portions of the complaint, however, provide specific details regarding the nature of the alleged cover-up. For example, the complaint quotes the EC's findings that the conspirators "'established security rules to prevent a paper trail . . . and used a coding-system to hide the identity of the producers in their documents and spreadsheets.'" J.A. at 0052 (Am. Compl. ¶ 105). In contrast to those discussed above, these allegations—especially when coupled with the details referenced in the cited [21] portion of the EC decision and associated cross-references—are sufficiently particular to meet the pleading standard for fraudulent concealment. See J.A. at 0330 (EC ACR Dec. ¶ 218); In re Elec. Carbon Prods. Antitrust Litig., 333 F. Supp. 2d 303, 316 (D.N.J. 2004) (concluding that a plaintiff "injected precision" into its fraudulent-concealment claim "by pleading the findings of the United States Department of Justice and the European Commission" (internal quotation marks omitted)). Furthermore, such conduct is sufficiently affirmative for purposes of satisfying [41] the "wrongful concealment" element because the alleged actions involved taking active steps to hide evidence, as opposed to simply meeting in secret. See Bridgeport Music, Inc. v. Diamond Time, Ltd., 371 F.3d 883, 891 (6th Cir. 2004) (explaining that "hiding evidence" can constitute affirmative concealment). Finally, Carrier alleges that because of the co-conspirators' [*448] misstatements and attempts at suppressing evidence of illegal conduct, it had no knowledge of the Defendants' conspiracy until the release of the EC decision on December 16, 2003. Taken as true, these actions would have both concealed from Carrier the very "means of discovering [its] cause of action," Campbell, 676 F.2d at 1127, and prevented Carrier from discovering the basis for its antitrust claim within the limitations period. Carrier has thus adequately pleaded the first two prongs of a fraudulent-concealment claim.

As for the third prong of Dayco—Carrier's due diligence—Carrier's complaint acknowledges that it was aware that the EC was investigating Outokumpu for antitrust violations as early as 2001. This would appear to be enough to place Carrier on inquiry notice, which in turn would require Carrier diligently [42] to investigate its possible claim. Dayco, 523 F.2d at 394 (holding that government investigation into alleged antitrust violations prompted duty to investigate). Despite Carrier's failure to uncover the cartel, however, Carrier's complaint sufficiently alleges "reasonable diligence" in the investigation it undertook upon learning of the possible conspiracy. Indeed, this is not a instance in which the plaintiff presented a "mere allegation of due diligence without asserting what steps were taken." Id. Rather, Carrier alleges that prior to December 2003, an employee with the Global Purchasing Department named Fred Benedict contacted several copper tubing suppliers to ask them about the alleged conspiracy, but was unable to procure any information. Carrier's examination of the defendants' public [22] statements and filings also turned up no information relating to a possible cartel or other anticompetitive conduct. Later, after acquiring additional information from the EC decision, which Carrier asserts "provided the first means for beginning an analysis of cartel behavior and its effect on Carrier," Carrier alleges that it retained both outside counsel and an economic consultant to conduct [43] a more thorough investigation. J.A. at 0055 (Am. Compl. ¶ 111). We are not prepared to conclude that such efforts were insufficient to satisfy Dayco's "due diligence" requirement at such an early stage of litigation and without the benefit of discovery. Cf. Jones v. TransOhio Sav. Ass'n, 747 F.2d 1037, 1043 (6th Cir. 1984) (noting the panel's reluctance to dismiss fraudulent-concealment allegations prior to discovery); Duncan v. Leeds, 742 F.2d 989, 993 (6th Cir. 1984) (addressing the need to construe allegations of fraudulent concealment liberally and in the plaintiff's favor at such an early stage in the litigation). HN18[] Although we may dismiss a claim of fraudulent concealment when it is obvious from the complaint that the plaintiff conducted absolutely no investigation, see, e.g., Ruth v. Unifund CCR Partners, 604 F.3d 908, 911-14 (6th Cir. 2010), when there is some question as to the depth and scope of that investigation, a plaintiff should be allowed to proceed forward.[9] We therefore conclude [*449] that, taking the allegations in Carrier's favor

[9] Outokumpu argues that the panel's decision in Gumbus v. United Food & Commercial Workers Int'l Union, Nos. 93-5113, 93-5235, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 523, 1995 WL 5935 (6th Cir. Jan. 6, 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 811, 116 S. Ct. 61, 133 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1995), is to the contrary. We are not bound by Gumbus, however, as it is an unpublished decision. Moreover, our previous cases—including Campbell v. Upjohn Co., 676 F.2d 1122 (6th Cir. 1982), which Gumbus cites in support of the proposition that inquiry to company officials is insufficient to constitute due diligence—have not suggested that reliance on as we must at this stage in the litigation, Carrier has adequately pleaded its fraudulent-concealment claim, and its cause of action should not [44] be dismissed as time-barred.

[*23] 2. Personal Jurisdiction

Finally, we address OTO and OCP's argument concerning personal jurisdiction. HN19[] "To comply with due process, a court's exercise of its power over an out-of-state defendant must not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." Indah v. U.S. Sec. & Exchange Comm'n, 661 F.3d 914, 920 (6th Cir. 2011) (quoting Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (1945)) (internal quotation marks omitted). Personal jurisdiction comes in two varieties: specific jurisdiction, which "'is confined to adjudication of issues deriving from, or connected with, the very controversy that establishes jurisdiction,'" and "'general, all-purpose jurisdiction.'" Id. (quoting Goodyear Dunlop Tires Operations, S.A. v. Brown, __ U.S. __, 131 S. Ct. 2846, 2851, 180 L. Ed. 2d 796 (2011)).

HN20[] "The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing that [personal] jurisdiction exists." Theunissen v. Matthews, 935 F.2d 1454, 1458 (6th Cir. 1991). "[I]n the face of a properly supported motion for dismissal, the plaintiff may not stand on his pleading but must, by affidavit or otherwise, set forth specific facts showing that the court has jurisdiction." Id. A district court, [46] in its discretion "may decide the motion upon the affidavits alone; it may permit discovery in aid of deciding the motion; or it may conduct an evidentiary hearing to resolve any apparent factual questions." Id. Given that the district court here never addressed personal jurisdiction, only the first option is available on appeal. Thus, Carrier's burden is "relatively slight," Third Nat'l Bank in Nashville v. WEDGE Group, Inc., 882 F.2d 1087, 1089 (6th Cir. 1989) (internal quotation marks omitted), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1058, 110 S. Ct. 870, 107 L. Ed. 2d 953 (1990), and we must "construe the facts in a light most favorable" to Carrier, Bird v. Parsons, 289 F.3d 865, 871 (6th Cir. 2002) (internal quotation marks omitted). In addition, because weighing any controverted facts is inappropriate at this stage, dismissal is proper only if Carrier's alleged facts "collectively fail[] to state a prima facie case for jurisdiction." Theunissen, 935 F.2d at 1459.

HN21[] For Sherman Act claims, 15 U.S.C. § 22 authorizes service of process over an antitrust defendant "wherever it may be found." When Congress has enacted such nationwide service of process statutes, personal jurisdiction exists whenever the [24] defendant has "sufficient minimum [47] contacts with the United States" to satisfy the due process requirements under the Fifth Amendment. Med. Mut. of Ohio v. deSoto, 245 F.3d 561, 566-67 (6th Cir. 2001) (emphasis added); cf. Chrysler Corp. v. Fedders Corp., 643 F.2d 1229, 1237-39 (6th Cir. 1981) (indicating without expressly deciding that 15 U.S.C. § 22 permits nationwide process). This inquiry parallels the more traditional personal-jurisdiction analysis under which a defendant must have "'minimum contacts'" with the forum state pursuant to the [*450] state's long-arm statute. See Med. Mut. of Ohio, 245 F.3d at 566-67.

Because Carrier appears to assert only specific jurisdiction, our minimum-contacts analysis is likewise limited to that issue. Thus, HN22[] to establish personal jurisdiction in this case, Carrier must adequately show the following elements in accordance with the well-established test set forth in Southern Machine Co. v. Mohasco Industries, Inc., 401 F.2d 374, 381 (6th Cir. 1968):

> First, the defendant must purposefully avail himself of the privilege of acting in the forum state or causing a consequence in the forum state. Second, the cause of action must arise from the defendant's activities there. Finally, the acts of [48] the defendant or consequences caused by the defendant must have a substantial enough connection with the forum state to make the exercise of jurisdiction over the defendant reasonable.

company assurances as a matter of law always falls short of demonstrating the requisite due diligence. Campbell instead utilizes a more fact-based approach to the question whether reliance on oral assurances was a reasonable investigation under the circumstances. Although we determined that such reliance was not reasonable in that case given that the plaintiff already knew that he had substantial cause to mistrust the words and intentions of the officers on whose assurances he claimed to rely, id. at 1128, that conclusion does not compel recognition of a per se rule barring the use of direct inquiries to a company as [45] a reasonable means of investigation.

Applying that test here but analyzing contacts with the United States, we conclude that the district court had specific jurisdiction over the Finnish Outokumpu entities based on their ties to the United States.

Looking first to purposeful availment, we must determine whether OCP and OTO have "engaged in some overt actions connecting [them] with the forum state." Fortis Corporate Ins. v. Viken Ship Mgmt., 450 F.3d 214, 218 (6th Cir. 2006) (internal quotation marks omitted). With respect to OCP, Carrier argues that the company had sufficient contacts with the United States both independently and through its subsidiaries. In support of OCP's independent contacts, Carrier points to exhibits indicating that certain OCP officers lived in the United States and that OCP also sent personnel from Finland to work on the Carrier account on its behalf. Carrier also points [25] to an affidavit indicating at least one instance in which OCP employees traveled to the United States to conduct business with Carrier and to reports [49] indicating that OCP imported a certain amount of copper tubing into the United States. Similar facts support Carrier's claim that, because of the close interrelationship between OCP and its U.S. subsidiaries, the contacts of the U.S. subsidiaries can be attributed to OCP. Specifically, Carrier asserts that in addition to residing in the United States, many high-ranking OCP executives held day-to-day management responsibilities within the U.S. subsidiaries, and that the subsidiaries' boards of directors were dominated by OCP personnel. Carrier also points to evidence suggesting that OCP used its subsidiaries as agents responsible for forwarding copper tubing imports to customers like Carrier in the United States.

In contrast to its argument regarding OCP, Carrier's argument for personal jurisdiction over OTO rests entirely on the assertion that OCP's jurisdictional contacts can be attributed to OTO. In its complaint, Carrier alleged that OTO had "effective control over the commercial policy and business decisions of its subsidiaries, and did business through its subsidiaries." J.A. at 0028 (Am. Compl. ¶ 25). This was possible because of OCP's status as a wholly owned subsidiary of OTO [50] over which OTO publicly claimed to retain full operational control. R. 61-3 (Resp. in Opp'n to Mot. to Dismiss Am. Compl., Ex. 10 at 64). Such control is further supported by Carrier's allegation that OTO executives continue to dominate OCP's board of directors and by the EC's finding that OCP lacked any "real business autonomy." Id. ¶ 27.

HN23[] This circuit has adopted the alter-ego theory of personal jurisdiction, which "provides that a non-resident parent corporation is amenable to suit in the forum state if the parent company exerts so [*451] much control over the subsidiary that the two do not exist as separate entities but are one and the same for purposes of jurisdiction." Estate of Thomson v. Toyota Motor Corp. Worldwide, 545 F.3d 357, 362 (6th Cir. 2008). Taking Carrier's pleadings and supporting affidavits in its favor, we conclude that the above allegations facially support the application of this theory with respect to both OCP and OTO. Cf. Third Nat'l Bank, 882 F.2d at 1090 (finding personal jurisdiction over a [26] parent company that, among other things, was a 100% owner of the subsidiary and had directors serving on the subsidiary's board).

Furthermore, to the extent that the allegations [51] relate specifically to Outokumpu's anti-competitive conduct toward Carrier, the contacts are "enhanced" by the Calder-effects doctrine. Air Prods. & Controls, Inc. v. Safetech Int'l, Inc., 503 F.3d 544, 552-53 (6th Cir. 2007). In Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 (1984), the Supreme Court held that HN24[] a plaintiff can establish personal jurisdiction when it alleges that the defendant "expressly aimed" tortious conduct at the forum in question and the "brunt of the harm" is felt there. Calder, 465 U.S. at 789; see also Neal v. Janssen, 270 F.3d 328, 331 (6th Cir. 2001) ("[E]ven a single act by [a] defendant directed toward [the relevant forum] that gives rise to a cause of action can support a finding of minimum contacts sufficient to exercise personal jurisdiction without offending due process.").

Here, the conspiracy in which OCP and OTO allegedly participated had an explicit geographical focus. According to the complaint, one of the main pillars of the conspiracy was allocating Carrier's U.S. business to the Outokumpu defendants, thereby forcing Carrier to pay higher prices in the United States. Such conduct serves as a paradigmatic example of "expressly aiming" tortious conduct. Carrier [52] has thus sufficiently alleged purposeful availment under the Southern Machine test. As for the second part of the Southern Machine test, we conclude that Carrier's cause of action "arises from" its U.S. contacts. HN25[] To satisfy this factor, we "require[] only that the cause of action, of whatever type, have a substantial connection with the defendant's [inforum] activities." Bird, 289

F.3d at 875. Insofar as the complaint is premised on the alleged harm that Outokumpu "expressly aimed" at Carrier, that lenient standard is easily met. See Air Prods., 503 F.3d at 552.

Finally, although we recognize the need to use particular caution when extending personal jurisdiction to foreign defendants, see Fortis, 450 F.3d at 223, because OTC and OCP have not argued that exercising jurisdiction over them would be "unreasonable" under the third prong of the Southern Machine test, they have not rebutted the "inference of reasonableness" that arises when the plaintiff sufficiently [27] demonstrates the first two prongs of that test. Air Prods., 503 F.3d at 554 (internal quotation marks omitted). We therefore conclude that the district court had personal jurisdiction over OTO and OCP.[10] We emphasize however, [53] that our holding is based only on a facial analysis of Carrier's pleadings and exhibits. OTO and OCP are free to seek an evidentiary hearing or to raise this issue again at the summary-judgment stage. See Neogen Corp. v. Neo Gen Screening, Inc., 282 F.3d 883, 893 (6th Cir. 2002).

[*452] III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, we REVERSE the district court's judgment with respect to Outokumpu Oyj, Outokumpu Copper Products Oy, Outokumpu Copper (U.S.A.), Inc., and Outokumpu Copper Franklin, Inc. and REMAND for further proceedings.

End of Document

[10] In the related American Copper case, the district court also determined that it had personal jurisdiction over OTO and OCP. No. 04-2771-DV (W.D. Tenn. June 1, 2006) (unpublished opinion).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a court must accept the facts alleged in the complaint as true and grant all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Although a pleading is not required to contain detailed factual allegations, a pleading that offers labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. The court generally may not consider materials outside the pleadings, but it may consider some public records, materials that do not contradict the complaint, or materials that are necessarily embraced by the pleadings.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN2[] Intentional Interference, Elements

Under Minnesota law, a cause of action for tortious interference with contract requires a plaintiff to prove: (1) the existence of a contract between the plaintiff and a third party; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the contract; (3) the defendant intentionally procured the breach of the plaintiff's contract; (4) the defendant's procurement was without justification; and (5) resulting damages.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Although justification is an affirmative defense, under certain circumstances it may nevertheless provide the basis for a dismissal pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). If an affirmative defense such as a privilege is apparent on the face of the complaint that privilege can provide the basis for dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6). This means simply that the district court is limited to the materials properly before it on a motion to dismiss, which may include public records and materials embraced by the complaint.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Defenses

HN4[] Intentional Interference, Defenses

Generally, a defendant's actions are justified if it pursues its legal rights via legal means. The general rule with which the courts are concerned is that one has the right to be secure in his contracts and to pursue his business, free from the interference of others except where such others act in pursuance of a superior or equal right. Interference with a contract is unjustified, however, when it is done for the indirect purpose of injuring the plaintiff or benefitting the defendant. Ordinarily, whether interference is justified is an issue of fact, and the test is what is reasonable conduct under the circumstances.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

HN7[] Infringement Actions, Determinations

It has long been established that the owner of an intellectual property right may notify infringers of his claims, and warn them that, unless they desist, suits will be brought to protect him in his legal rights. The only limitation on the right to issue such warnings is the requirement of good faith. Pre-suit warning letters are a common, if not universal, feature of modern litigation, especially in the context of enforcing intellectual property rights. Such pre-suit warning letters are not only permissible, but in some cases they may actually be required. For example, trademark law requires that a defendant in a trademark infringement action have notice of the registered trademark. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1111.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN8[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes acts related to the constitutional right to petition the courts for grievance, unless the act is a mere sham. The First Amendment provides that Congress shall make no law abridging the right to petition the government for a redress of grievances. U.S. Const. amend. I. The Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which arose in the context of antitrust claims, provides immunity from claims that are based on the filing of lawsuits. The right of access to the courts is indeed but one aspect of the right of petition. This immunity has been extended to all claims, beyond federal antitrust claims, which are based on the petitioning of the courts or other governmental entities. The United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit has explicitly stated that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies to tortious interference with contract claims. Because the right to petition means more than simply the right to communicate directly with the government, protection under the doctrine necessarily includes those activities reasonably and normally attendant to effective petitioning.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN9[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Of the seven circuit courts that have encountered the question, six have found that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes pre-suit demand letters, so long as those demand letters are not a sham.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN10[] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom to Petition

In determining whether the burdened conduct falls under the protection of the Petition Clause, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit must give adequate breathing space to the right of petition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN11[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit recognized that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects conduct incidental to the prosecution of a lawsuit and stated that where the underlying litigation fell within the protection of the Petition Clause, such incidental conduct would also be protected. While responding to demands to settle unfounded claims is burdensome, it is likely less burdensome than if the opposing party, fearing liability in tort for demanding settlement of a possibly weak claim, proceeded directly to litigation. Moreover, the established sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides adequate protection against baseless claims asserted in pre-litigation settlement letters. The court concluded that restrictions on pre-suit demand letters may therefore raise substantial Petition Clause issues.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN12[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies when a lawsuit (or threatened lawsuit) is so objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. But if an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr. Even when the litigation is objectively meritless, the inquiry does not end there; the court must then examine the litigant's subjective motivation. To defeat a claim of Noerr immunity, a party must demonstrate both the objective and the subjective components of a sham.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN13[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

A defendant's invocation of adjudicative process to press legitimate claims is protected even though its purpose in doing so is to eliminate competition. It is only where a defendant's resort to the courts is accompanied or characterized by illegal and reprehensible practices such as perjury, fraud, conspiracy with or bribery of government decision makers, or misrepresentation, or is so clearly baseless as to amount to an abuse of process, that the Noerr-Pennington cloak of immunity provides no protection.

[*890] ORDER

Plaintiff Select Comfort Corporation ("Select Comfort") brought this action against Defendant The Sleep Better Store, LLC ("Sleep Better"), alleging various unfair competition and trademark infringement claims. In its Answer, Sleep Better alleged a counterclaim of tortious interference with contract (Count II), based upon a cease-and-desist letter that Select Comfort sent to third-party Overstock.com. Now before the Court is Select Comfort's 12(b)(6) Motion to Dismiss Count II of Defendant's Amended Answer and Counterclaim.

[*891] I. BACKGROUND

Select Comfort sells adjustable air beds under the Sleep Number® and Select Comfort® trademarks. Sleep Better, which recently changed its name to Dream Number, also sells adjustable air beds. Sleep Better contracted with Overstock.com to sell Sleep Better's beds on the Overstock.com [2] website. On June 30, 2011, Select Comfort sent a cease-and-desist letter to Overstock.com. The letter stated, in relevant part:

> It has recently come to our attention that Overstock.com is infringing Select Comfort's trademark rights under the federal Lanham Act and under state laws by using "Number Air Mattress" on its website located at www.overstock.com regarding the sale of adjustable air beds/mattresses. It is also using this term in advertisements on Nextag.com. We believe Overstock.com's use of the term "Number Air Mattress" is likely to cause confusion or mistake among consumers, or to deceive consumers as to the origin of Overstock.com's goods or as to Select Comfort's affiliation or connection with, or sponsorship or approval of, Overstock.com's goods and/or services or commercial activities. Furthermore, your use of the mark "Number Air Mattress" dilutes Select Comfort's famous and distinctive Sleep Number mark and creates an association with Select Comfort's mark that impairs its distinctiveness.
> Select Comfort has been vigorous in protecting its marks, and has successfully prevented registration and use of other "Number" marks for beds, adjustable beds and the like. Select [3] Comfort believes the likelihood for confusion and dilution is high when Overstock.com uses "Number Air Mattress" in connection with the promotion and sale of products on Overstock.com and Select Comfort will continue to protect its valuable Sleep Number mark in these instances.
> Select Comfort demands that Overstock.com immediately cease and desist from further use in any medium of the term "Number Air Mattress" or any similar term that would unlawfully cause confusion among consumers or dilute Select Comfort's marks.

Sleep Number has not registered the phrases "Number Air Mattress" or "Number Bed" with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. Nevertheless, in response to the cease-and-desist letter, Overstock.com agreed to stop using the phrase on its website. Although Select Comfort did not specifically request that Overstock.com remove any products from its website, Overstock.com also chose to remove Sleep Better's beds from sale on its website.

Sleep Better contends that Select Comfort's cease-and-desist letter constituted tortious interference with Sleep Better's contract with Overstock.com. In its Answer to First Amended Complaint and Counterclaim, Sleep Better alleged that Select Comfort's [4] cease-and-desist letter was an improper and unjustified demand, which "intentionally procured the breach of Sleep Better's contract with Overstock.com because Plaintiff's conduct resulted in Overstock.com's removal of Sleep Better's Number Beds from sale on Overstock.com's website." Answer to First Am. Comp. & Countercl. ¶¶ 13, 15. Select Comfort argues that the Court should dismiss the counterclaim because: (1) Sleep Better failed to plead the element that Select Comfort's demand letter procured an actual breach of contract between Sleep Better and Overstock.com; (2) Select Comfort was justified in sending the demand letter to protect its federally registered Sleep Number® trademarks; (3) the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes the pre-suit demand letter from tort liability; and (4) Minnesota's anti-SLAPP statutes [*892] protect Select Comfort from tort liability as a matter of law.

II. DISCUSSION

HN1[] When ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a court must accept the facts alleged in the complaint as true and grant all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Mulvenon v. Greenwood, 643 F.3d 653, 656 (8th Cir. 2011). [5] Although a pleading is not required to contain detailed factual allegations, "[a] pleading that offers 'labels and conclusions' or 'a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. The court "generally may not consider materials outside the pleadings," but "[i]t may . . . consider some public records, materials that do not contradict the complaint, or materials that are 'necessarily embraced by the pleadings." Noble Sys. Corp. v. Alorica Cent., LLC, 543 F.3d 978, 982 (8th Cir.2008) (quoting Porous Media Corp. v. Pall Corp., 186 F.3d 1077, 1079 (8th Cir.1999)). The cease-and-desist letter was attached to the Answer to the First Amended Complaint and Counterclaim, [6] and thus may be considered. See, e.g., Bradford v. Huckabee, 394 F.3d 1012, 1015 (8th Cir. 2005) (considering exhibits attached to the complaint as part of the complaint).

A. Failure to Plead the Essential Elements of a Tortious Interference with Contract Claim

HN2[] Under Minnesota law, a cause of action for tortious interference with contract requires Sleep Better to prove: (1) the existence of a contract between Sleep Better and a third party; (2) Select Comfort's knowledge of the contract; (3) Select Comfort intentionally procured the breach of Sleep Better's contract; (4) Select Comfort's procurement was without justification; and (5) resulting damages. Kallok v. Medtronic, Inc., 573 N.W.2d 356, 362 (Minn. 1998). Select Comfort asserts that Sleep Better failed to plead the essential element that Select Comfort's demand letter procured an actual breach of contract between Sleep Better and third-party Overstock.com. Select Comfort further asserts that it was justified in sending a letter to Overstock.com to protect its federally registered and incontestable Sleep Number® trademarks.

1. Intentional Procurement of Breach

Select Comfort argues that Sleep Better merely alleges that after Select [7] Comfort sent its cease-and-desist letter, Overstock.com removed Defendant's products from sale on its website— but Sleep Better "does not claim, or even suggest, that Overstock.com's decision to 'remove' its products was a breach of contract." Pl.'s Mem. Supp. 6. Select Comfort suggests that Overstock.com may have had the unilateral right to remove Sleep Better's products from its website, and so there may not have even been a breach of contract at all. Although Sleep Better's pleading does not directly allege that Overstock.com breached its contract with Sleep Better, it does allege that Select Comfort "intentionally procured the breach of Sleep Better's contract with Overstock.com because Plaintiff's conduct resulted in Overstock.com's [*893] removal of Sleep Better's Number Beds from sale on Overstock.com's website." Answer to First Am. Compl. & Countercl. ¶ 15. When granting all reasonable inferences in favor of Sleep Better, a fair reading of this paragraph adequately alleges an actual breach of contract.

2. Justification

Select Comfort asserts that it was justified in sending a letter to Overstock.com to protect its federally registered and incontestable Sleep Number® trademarks. HN3[] Although [8] justification is an affirmative defense, under certain circumstances it may nevertheless provide the basis for a dismissal pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). Noble Sys. Corp. v. Alorica Central, LLC, 543 F.3d 978, 982-83 (8th Cir. 2008). "If an affirmative defense such as a privilege is apparent on the face of the complaint . . . that privilege can provide the basis for dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6)." Id. at 983. "[T]his means simply that the district court is limited to the materials properly before it on a motion to dismiss, which may include public records and materials embraced by the complaint." Id.

HN4[] "Generally, a defendant's actions are justified if it pursues its legal rights via legal means." Id. (citing Langeland v. Farmers State Bank of Trimont, 319 N.W.2d 26, 32-33 (Minn. 1982)); Kjesbo v. Ricks, 517 N.W.2d 585, 588 (Minn. 1994) ("There is no wrongful interference with a contract where one asserts in good faith a legally protected interest of his own * * * believ[ing] that his interest may otherwise be impaired or destroyed by the performance of the contract or transaction." (internal quotation marks omitted)). "The general rule with which we are concerned is that one has the right [9] to be secure in his contracts and to pursue his business . . . free from the interference of others except where such others act in pursuance of a superior or equal right." Noble Sys. Corp., 543 F.3d at 983 (quoting Bennett v. Storz Broad. Co., 270 Minn. 525, 134 N.W.2d 892, 897 (Minn. 1965)); Bennett, 134 N.W.2d at 897 ("Liability for wrongful interference may be avoided by showing that the defendant was justified by a lawful object which he had a right to assert."). Interference with a contract is unjustified, however, "when it is done for the indirect purpose of injuring the plaintiff or benefitting the defendant." Furlev Sales & Assoc., Inc. v. N. Am. Auto. Warehouse, Inc., 325 N.W.2d 20, 27 (Minn. 1982). "Ordinarily, whether interference is justified is an issue of fact, and the test is what is reasonable conduct under the circumstances." Kjesbo, 517 N.W.2d at 588 (citing Bennett, 134 N.W.2d at 900). Select Comfort has the burden of proving justification. See id.

It is undisputed that Select Comfort has a legally protected interest in protecting its registered trademarks. Sleep Better concedes that it would have been reasonable for Select Comfort to "alert Overstock.com as to Plaintiff's 'Sleep [10] Number' mark." Def.'s Resp. Mem. 10. Sleep Better argues, however, that it was not reasonable for Select Comfort "to claim that Overstock.com's use of the term 'Number Air Mattress' constituted infringement or that the use of this term might cause consumer confusion or dilution of Plaintiff's 'Sleep Number' marks." Id. Sleep Better asserts that Select Comfort's demand letter was unjustified because Select Comfort had not registered the specific phrase "Number Air Mattress," and because, at least according to Sleep Better, the phrase "Number Air Mattress" is a purely descriptive term, which Sleep Better has been using since 2002. Sleep Better further argues that Select Comfort failed to provide any evidence of actual consumer confusion. Thus, Sleep Better contends that Select Comfort was unjustified because its motives were purely "designed [*894] to injure Sleep Better and benefit [Select Comfort]." Id.

The crux of Sleep Better's argument appears to be that Select Comfort was unjustified because, having not registered the specific phrase "Number Air Mattress," it could not reasonably assert that use of that phrase infringed its registered trademarks. To the extent that this is the argument, [11] Sleep Better misconstrues the protections afforded by trademark law. HN5[] Trademark law protects against not only the impermissible use of a specific registered mark, but also against the use of a similar mark that is likely to cause confusion among consumers or dilution of the registered mark. See 15 U.S.C. § 1114 (prohibiting the commercial use of "any reproduction, counterfeit, copy, or colorable imitation of a registered mark in connection with the sale . . . or advertising of any goods or services on or in connection with which such use is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive"); Id. § 1125(a) (prohibiting the "use[] in commerce [of] any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof . . . which is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive"); Id. § 1125(c) (providing that "the [12] owner of a famous mark that is distinctive . . . shall be entitled to an injunction against another person who . . . commences use of a mark or trade name in commerce that is likely to cause dilution by blurring or dilution by tarnishment of the famous mark, regardless of the presence or absence of actual or likely confusion, or of actual economic injury"); SquirtCo v. Seven-Up Co., 628 F.2d 1086, 1091 (8th Cir.1980) (affirming the district court's holding that use of the "QUIRST" mark infringed on the well-established "SQUIRT" mark); Roederer v. J. Garcia Carrión, S.A., 732 F. Supp. 2d 836 (D. Minn. 2010) (finding trademark infringement and unfair competition where the defendant's unregistered "CRISTALINO" mark was similar to the plaintiffs registered "CRISTAL" mark and created a likelihood of confusion).

HN6[] An infringing mark need only "resemble the registered mark" so that its use is "likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive." SquirtCo, 628 F.2d at 1091. There is no support for Sleep Better's proposition that a cease-and-desist letter is only justified where the allegedly infringing term is identical to the registered mark. Moreover, Select Comfort need not be correct [13] in its assertion that use of the term "Number Air Mattress" infringed or diluted its "Sleep Number" mark—it must only have "a good faith belief that its rights were being infringed." Kemp v. Tyson Foods, Inc., No. CIV 96-173 JRT/RLE, 2001 WL 391552, at *7 (D. Minn. Mar. 31, 2001); see also Celotex Co. v. Insulite Co., 39 F.2d 213, 217 (D. Minn. 1930) (explaining that when examining the propriety of pre-suit demand letters alleging patent infringement, the court need not determine whether infringement actually exists, but instead should only examine "whether the owner of such patent might believe in good faith" that infringement existed).

Here there is no indication that the demand letter was sent in bad faith or with an improper motive. First, despite Sleep Better's assertions, Select Comfort's letter did not falsely claim or misrepresent that Select Comfort had trademark rights to the phrase "Number Air Mattress"—it only claimed that use of such phrase caused confusion with or dilution of its registered "Sleep Number" mark. Second, any contention that Select Comfort's position was so incorrect on the face of the letter as to demonstrate bad faith is without merit. In fact, in its counterclaim, [14] Sleep Better acknowledges that one of the issues in this current litigation is Select Comfort's belief that the term "Number [*895] Bed" infringes its "Sleep Number" trademark. Answer to First Am. Compl. & Countercl. ¶ 9. This is essentially the same type of alleged infringement as described in the letter to Overstock.com. If, as Sleep Better asserts, use of the phrase "Number Air Mattress" or "Number Bed" so clearly does not infringe Select Comfort's registered trademark, then Sleep Better could have brought its own motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. It has not done so. The fact that Select Comfort's lawsuit against Sleep Better is based upon the same type of infringement as described in the cease-and-desist letter to Overstock.com is only further support that Select Comfort's demand was not made in bad faith.

Nor did Select Comfort employ any improper, illegal, or otherwise reprehensible means in sending the cease-and-desist letter to Overstock.com. [1] HN7[] It has long been established that the owner of an intellectual property right "may notify infringers of his claims, and warn them that, unless they desist, suits will be brought to protect him in his legal rights." Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 179 F. 115, 120 (8th Cir. 1910). [15] "The only limitation on the right to issue such warnings is the requirement of good faith." Id. Pre-suit warning letters are "a common, if not universal, feature of modern litigation," especially in the context of enforcing intellectual property rights. Sosa v. DIRECTV, Inc., 437 F.3d 923, 936 (9th Cir. 2006); see also Cardtoons v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n, 208 F.3d 885, 894 (10th Cir. 2000) (Lucero, J., dissenting) (noting "the reality of intellectual property law, in which the enforcement of legal rights, and thus the invocation of the legal process, is customarily commenced by a cease-and-desist letter"). Such pre-suit warning letters are not only permissible, but in some cases they may actually be required. For example, trademark law requires that a defendant in a trademark infringement action have notice of the registered trademark. See 15 U.S.C. § 1111 (2006). Further, it is sound public policy to encourage the use of pre-suit warning letters, rather than mandate a straight line to the court whenever a potential dispute arises. As the Eighth Circuit noted, the issuance of such a warning "would seem to be an act of prudence, if not of kindness." Virtue, 179 F. at 120 [16] (internal quotation marks omitted). Often such warnings result in final resolution of the dispute without the intervention of the courts. Even if they do not, they still can "streamlin[e] any subsequent litigation" and "reduc[e] legal costs and facilitat[e] access to the courts." Sosa, 437 F.3d at 936.

It is apparent on the face of the cease-and-desist letter that Select Comfort was seeking to protect its registered "Sleep [17] Number ® " trademark from confusion and dilution. There are no factual allegations in the pleadings to support any claims that Select Comfort acted with bad faith or employed improper means. Sleep Better's mere conclusory assertions that Select Comfort's conduct in sending the cease-and-desist letter was "improper," "unjustified," "intentional," and "willful" do not [*896] create a plausible claim of bad faith. See Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949 ("To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570)). For that reason, Sleep Better's tortious interference with contract counterclaim must be dismissed.

[1] Sleep Better does not appear to argue that Select Comfort employed improper means by sending a cease-and-desist letter. In fact, Sleep Better contends that had Overstock.com merely learned about its possible infringement by reading about this publicly-filed lawsuit between Select Comfort and Sleep Better, and as a result of obtaining that information chosen to remove Sleep Better's products from its website, then that, too, would have been unjustified interference by Select Comfort with the Sleep Better-Overstock.com contract. Thus, according to Sleep Better, any action performed by Select Comfort, no matter how remote or how lawful, that resulted in the Overstock.com's decision to remove Sleep Better's beds from its website would constitute tortious interference.

B.* Noerr-Pennington *Immunity

HN8[] The Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes acts related to the constitutional right to petition the courts for grievance, unless the act is a mere sham. The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that Congress shall make no law abridging the right "to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." U.S. Const. amend. I. The Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which arose in the context of antitrust claims, provides immunity [18] from claims that are based on the filing of lawsuits. "The right of access to the courts is indeed but one aspect of the right of petition." Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972). This immunity has been extended to all claims, beyond federal antitrust claims, which are based on the petitioning of the courts or other governmental entities. See, e.g., Porous Media Corp. v. Pall Corp., 186 F.3d 1077, 1080 n.4 (8th Cir. 1999) ("In addition, the First Amendment generally immunizes the act of filing a lawsuit from tort liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine."); Hinshaw v. Smith, 436 F.3d 997, 1003 (8th Cir. 2006) (stating that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine "is a defense to liability premised on the defendant's actions of exercising his own private rights to free speech and to petition the government"); Kellar v. VonHoltum, 568 N.W.2d 186, 192-93 (Minn. Ct. App. 1997) (holding that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies outside of the antitrust context and applying it to Minnesota tort claims). The Eighth Circuit has explicitly stated that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies to tortious interference with contract claims. See Hufsmith v. Weaver, 817 F.2d 455, 459 (8th Cir. 1987). [19] Because "[t]he right to petition means more than simply the right to communicate directly with the government," protection under the doctrine "necessarily includes those activities reasonably and normally attendant to effective petitioning." In re IBP Confidential Bus. Documents Litig., 755 F.2d 1300, 1310 (8th Cir. 1985).

Select Comfort argues that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes pre-suit demand letters, since such letters are "reasonably attendant to effective petitioning." Sleep Better contends that the doctrine does not apply in this context, since this case involves no antitrust claim and the demand letter was not sent to the government, does not ask the government for any "redress of grievances," and has not resulted in litigation against Overstock.com. Thus, Sleep Better asserts that there was no petition of the government, and "purely private threats of litigation" are not afforded immunity under the doctrine.

Although the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has not addressed this issue, this Court is not without guidance. HN9[] Of the seven other circuit courts that have encountered this question, six have found that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes pre-suit demand letters, [20] so long as those demand letters are not a "sham." See Sosa v. DIRECTV, Inc., 437 F.3d 923, 935 (9th Cir. 2006); Primetime 24 Joint Venture v. Nat'l Broad. Co., 219 F.3d 92, 100 (2d Cir. 2000); Glass Equip. Dev., Inc. v. Besten, Inc., 174 F.3d 1337, 1343-44 (Fed. Cir. 1999); McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1560 (11th Cir. 1992); CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842, 850-51 [*897] (1st Cir. 1985); Coastal States Mktg., Inc. v. Hunt, 694 F.2d 1358, 1366-67 (5th Cir. 1983).

In Sosa, a satellite television broadcaster sent more than 100,000 letters accusing the recipients of signal theft and violations of federal criminal statutes and threatening civil legal action unless the recipients agreed to pay an unspecified sum to settle the claim. 437 F.3d at 926. Although a number of recipients claimed to be innocent of the alleged conduct, the broadcaster would not withdraw its accusations or threats of litigation. Id. at 926-27. To avoid the costs of litigation, the recipients agreed to the settlement. Id. at 927. Subsequently, some of these recipients filed a class action lawsuit, claiming that the broadcaster violated the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) [21] through its mailing of baseless pre-suit demand letters. The district court dismissed the suit based on the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, and plaintiffs appealed. The Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal, holding that Noerr-Pennington immunity extended to pre-litigation demand letters that were not a sham. HN10[] "In determining whether the burdened conduct falls under the protection of the Petition Clause, we must give adequate 'breathing space' to the right of petition." Id. at 931-32 (quoting BE&K Constr. Co. v. NLRB, 536 U.S. 516, 531, 122 S. Ct. 2390, 153 L. Ed. 2d 499 (2002)). "Although the letters were not themselves petitions, the Petition Clause may nevertheless preclude burdening them so as to preserve the breathing space required for the effective exercise of the rights it protects." Id. at 933. HN11[] The court recognized that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects "conduct incidental to the prosecution" of a lawsuit and stated that "where the underlying litigation fell within the protection of the Petition Clause, such incidental conduct would also be protected." Id. at 935. "While responding to demands to settle unfounded claims is burdensome, it is likely less burdensome than if the opposing party, fearing [22] liability in tort for demanding settlement of a possibly weak claim, proceeded directly to litigation. Moreover, the established sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides adequate protection against baseless claims asserted in prelitigation settlement letters." Id. at 935-36. The court concluded that restrictions on pre-suit demand letters may therefore raise substantial Petition Clause issues.

Only one circuit court has held otherwise. In Cardtoons v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n, 208 F.3d 885 (10th Cir. 2000) (en banc), the Tenth Circuit held 7-3 that the First Amendment right to petition does not provide immunity from tort claims that are triggered by a pre-litigation cease-and-desist letter communicated between private parties. The court distinguished its case, which involved tort claims, from the other circuits' cases that had involved antitrust claims. In the context of non-antitrust claims, the court stated that "[a] letter from one private party to another private party simply does not implicate the right to petition, regardless of what the letter threatens." Because the letter was not sent to the government, did not ask the government for redress of grievances, [23] and was not known to the government prior to the lawsuit, the court found that Noerr-Pennington immunity did not apply.

The dissent in Cardtoons, however, rejected any distinction between antitrust cases and tort cases, explaining that although the doctrine arose in the antitrust context, the Supreme Court has focused its Noerr-Pennington analysis on the right to petition. Id. at 895-96 (Lucero, J., dissenting) ("Because of its foundation in the First Amendment right to petition, the Supreme Court has applied the Noerr-Pennington [*898] doctrine, by analogy, outside of it aborigine roots in antitrust law. . . . In light of [Supreme Court decisions], there can be little doubt that Noerr-Pennington immunity . . . is mandated by the First Amendment right to petition, irrespective of any independent statutory basis it might also have, and 'Noerr-Pennington immunity' has evolved into an umbrella term for First Amendment petitioning immunity."). [2] The dissent explained that cease-and-desist letters promote the interests served by the right to petition the courts—"[t]hey vindicate legal rights and promote adherence to important laws of commerce" and "are frequently used . . . to protect and vindicate [24] [] intellectual property rights." Id. at 897. Because "such letters are often the first formal step in the process of enforcing the law of intellectual property and vindicating economic interests," the denial of Noerr-Pennington immunity to such letters would "chill[] the right to petition the courts by handicapping activity immediately precedent to, and intimately associated with, recourse to the judicial process." Id. at 898.

The Court finds the reasoning articulated by the overwhelming majority of circuits and the dissent in Cardtoons to be persuasive. Sleep Better's argument that the Court should disregard the circuit court opinions dealing with antitrust claims is unavailing—the distinction between antitrust and non-antitrust cases is not relevant to the Noerr-Pennington analysis, given the Supreme Court's focus on the First Amendment right to petition, [25] rather than a statutory construction of the Sherman Act. See Cal. Motor Transport Co., 404 U.S. 508, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642; In re IBP Confidential Bus. Documents Litig., 755 F.2d at 1311 (stating that in California Motor Transport Co., the Supreme Court "explained the [Noerr] decision as resting squarely on the constitutionally guaranteed right to petition the government"); Hufsmith, 817 F.2d at 460 (holding that where Noerr-Pennington immunized conduct that formed the basis of an antitrust claim, the doctrine also extended to bar a tortious interference with contract claim based on the same conduct).

Moreover, Cardtoons simply does not apply where the statute creating the very rights to be protected provides for notice to potential litigants. See, e.g., Keystone Retaining Wall Sys., Inc. v. Rockwood Retaining Walls, Inc., No. 00-496, 2001 WL 951582, at *11 (D. Minn. Aug. 22, 2001) (distinguishing its facts from Cardtoons by noting that the patent statutes require notification of infringement prior to recovering damages, and that "the notice requirement of 35 U.S.C. § 287 put [plaintiff]'s actions within the ambit of immunized activity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine."). [3] Like patent statutes, the trademark [26] statutes also require such notice. See 15 U.S.C. § 1111

[2] The dissent explained that in California Motor Transport Co., 404 U.S. 508, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, the Supreme Court extended Noerr-Pennington immunity to the petitioning of courts. Cardtoons, 208 F.3d at 894. In doing so, "the Court relied primarily on the constitutional underpinnings of the doctrine," not the statutory basis in antitrust law. Id. at 894-95.

(2006) ("[I]n any suit for infringement . . . by such a registrant failing to give such notice of registration, no profits and no damages shall be recovered . . . unless the defendant had actual notice of the registration."). Therefore, even if the Court were to adopt the reasoning in Cardtoons, it would nevertheless be inapplicable to the case at hand.

[*899] In practice, the enforcement of intellectual property rights often begins with a cease-and-desist letter. Accepting Sleep Better's argument would mean "that the First Amendment protects an owner of intellectual property rights who blindsides an adversary with a lawsuit claiming infringement of those rights, but fails to shield that same owner when a more civilized notice and demand letter is sent in advance." Cardtoons, 208 F.3d at 894 [27] (Lucero, J., dissenting); see also Coastal States Mktg., Inc., 694 F.2d at 1367 ("The litigator should not be protected only when he strikes without warning. If litigation is in good faith, a token of that sincerity is a warning that it will be commenced and a possible effort to compromise the dispute."). The fact that no litigation with Overstock.com ensued only supports the proposition that such letters are desirable methods of petitioning by effectively and efficiently vindicating intellectual property rights. There can be no doubt that Select Comfort would be entitled to immunity had it simply filed a complaint against Overstock.com for infringement. Rather than suing Overstock.com, however, Select Comfort chose the "more civilized" route of sending a pre-suit demand letter.

Sleep Better argues that even if Noerr-Pennington immunity applies to pre-suit demand letters outside of the antitrust context, Select Comfort's conduct is still not immunized because it was merely a sham intended to disguise anticompetitive conduct. The Court disagrees. HN12[] The "sham exception" applies when a lawsuit (or threatened lawsuit) is so "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could [28] realistically expect success on the merits." Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993). But "[i]f an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr." Id. Even when the litigation is objectively meritless, the inquiry does not end there—the court must then "examine the litigant's subjective motivation." Id. at 60. To defeat a claim of Noerr immunity, a party must "demonstrate[e] both the objective and the subjective components of a sham." Id. at 61.

Sleep Better asserts that Select Comfort's threat of litigation was baseless because Select Comfort had not registered the term "Number Air Mattress," and according to Sleep Better, the term is a purely descriptive phrase that it had been using for years. For the same reasons, Sleep Better also argues that Select Comfort misrepresented its right to the "Number Air Mattress." Because Sleep Better believes that Select Comfort "was incorrect to state that Overstock's use of the term infringed [Select Comfort]'s trademark rights," it contends that the letter was merely a sham to disguise Select Comfort's [29] anticompetitive behavior.

Again, Sleep Better's argument hinges on its assertion that Select Comfort is just flat-out wrong in its allegation of trademark infringement. But whether the demand letter is a "sham" does not depend on Select Comfort's ultimate success or failure in pursuing its trademark infringement claims. See, e.g., BE & K Constr. Co., 536 U.S. at 531-32 (considering "reasonably based but unsuccessful lawsuits" and stating that the doctrine "protect[s] petitioning whenever it is genuine, not simply when it triumphs."). Moreover, as noted above, the pleadings do not reveal Select Comfort's claim to be objectively baseless. Even if it were a losing claim, more than that is needed to prove that a threat of litigation is a "sham." As the Eighth Circuit noted, > HN13[] [A] defendant's invocation of adjudicative process to press legitimate claims is protected even though its purpose in [*900] doing so is to eliminate competition. . . . It is only where a defendant's resort to the courts is accompanied or characterized by illegal and reprehensible practices such as perjury, fraud, conspiracy with or bribery of government decision makers, or misrepresentation, or is so clearly baseless as to amount [30] to an abuse of process, that the Noerr-Pennington cloak of immunity provides no protection.

[3] 35 U.S.C. § 287 provides that when the patented item is not marked as patented, "no damages shall be recovered by the patentee in any action for infringement, except on proof that the infringer was notified of the infringement and continued to infringe thereafter, in which even damages may be recovered only for infringement occurring after such notice."

Razorback Ready Mix Concrete Co., Inc. v. Weaver, 761 F.2d 484, 487 (8th Cir. 1985); see also id. at 488 (finding immaterial whether the defendants' motive was selfish or not). Here, there has been no indication of any such illegal or reprehensible practices or that the letter was merely a "sham" to conceal some sinister motive. Despite Sleep Better's argument that the cease-and-desist letter misrepresented Select Comfort's rights, the Court finds nothing in the pleadings to support this contention. Select Comfort did not assert that it had registered the specific phrase "Number Air Mattress"—rather, it stated only that Select Comfort believed that use of that phrase caused confusion with or dilution of its registered "Sleep Number" mark. On its face, the cease-and-desist letter articulates precisely the type of concerns that can legitimately form the basis of a lawsuit to protect federally registered trademarks.

Pre-suit demand letters are customarily used to protect intellectual property rights. These letters are "reasonably attendant" to litigation, especially where the trademark statute explicitly [31] provides for such pre-suit notification to alleged infringers. Absent any indication that Select Comfort's cease-and-desist letter was a "sham," the Court finds that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes Select Comfort from Sleep Better's tortious interference with contract counterclaim. [4]

III. CONCLUSION

Based on the files, records, and proceedings herein, and for the reasons stated above, IT IS ORDERED THAT:

1. Select Comfort's Renewed Motion to Dismiss Count II of Defendant's Answer to First Amended Answer and Counterclaim [Docket No. 54] is GRANTED.
2. Sleep Better's counterclaim of tortious interference with contract (Count II) is DISMISSED.

A motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication is properly granted if all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. (c).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN3[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

Both California and federal decisions urge caution in granting a defendant's motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case. Nevertheless, summary judgment is available, and always remains available, even in complex cases, including antitrust actions for an unlawful conspiracy under the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq. If a party moving for summary judgment in any action, including an antitrust action for unlawful conspiracy, would prevail at trial without submission of any issue of material fact to a trier of fact for determination, then he should prevail on summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

HN4[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

A violation of the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., requires a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons that seeks to achieve an anticompetitive end. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720. Consequently, only separate entities pursuing separate economic interests can conspire within the proscription of the antitrust laws against price fixing combinations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

HN5[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

Single firm monopolization is not cognizable under the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq. To maintain an action for a combination in restraint of trade under the Cartwright Act, the following elements must be established: (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy; (2) illegal acts done pursuant thereto; and (3) damage proximately caused by such acts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

HN6[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

The drafters intended that the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., apply, as its words had been construed, only to entities that "combine," in the sense of those who perdure (i.e., continue as separate, independent, competing entities during and after their collusive action)—and therefore the drafters did not intend the Cartwright Act to regulate the bona fide purchase and sale of one firm by another. The Cartwright Act cannot be used to challenge mergers and acquisitions. The drafters of the Cartwright Act intended to make their law applicable only to situations in which the parties improperly collude and continue as separate, independent entities, and not to situations in which, by virtue of purchase and sale, or merger, one or more of the entities ceases to exist. In a bona fide merger the entities lose forever their separate identities, and become a new, independent entity.

Judicial interpretation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2, while often helpful, is not dispositive on issues under the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

HN8[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN9[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

Judicial interpretation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2, while often helpful, is not directly probative of the intent of the drafters of the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq. Federal precedents must be used with caution because the acts, although similar, are not coextensive. The appropriate use of federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act is as an aid in interpreting our own Cartwright Act, not as controlling precedent.

HN10[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

An antitrust plaintiff under the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., must plead and prove that separate entities maintaining separate and independent interests, combined for the purpose of restraining trade. A complaint for antitrust violations which fails to allege such concerted action by separate entities maintaining separate and independent interests is subject to demurrer.

HN11[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

The Legislature did not intend the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., to regulate the bona fide purchase and sale of one firm by another. It applies only to those who continue as separate, independent, competing entities during and after their collusive action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

HN12[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

The Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., like all antitrust laws, is about the protection of competition, not competitors. Injury to a competitor is not equivalent to injury to competition; only the latter is the proper focus of antitrust laws.

Headnotes/Summary

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

Plaintiff pharmaceutical company sued defendant, a biopharmaceutical company with which plaintiff had a licensing agreement for development of plaintiff's product, alleging under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) that there was a conspiracy between defendant and a company with which defendant was merging (acquiring company). The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant. (Superior Court of San Mateo County, No. CIV478533, Carol L. Mittlesteadt and Marie S. Weiner, Judges.)

The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that even if the two merging companies were capable of conspiring, for purposes of the Cartwright Act, in the period between execution of an acquisition agreement and the consummation of the merger, no viable Cartwright Act claim was presented because there was no evidence of any premerger meeting of the minds specifically to restrain the trade of plaintiff's product. The complaint alleged that the acquiring company unilaterally decided to acquire defendant in order to further its own goal to dominate the market. Because this alleged anticompetitive purpose was attributed only to the acquiring company and to individuals and not to defendant, there was no combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for the purpose of preventing competition. The court also observed that the rationale of case law under the Cartwright Act—that the Cartwright Act was not intended to apply to situations in which, by virtue of purchase and sale, or merger, one or more of the entities ceases to exist—seems to apply equally where parties in the process of merging reach agreement to do that which the combined entity may freely do. (Opinion by Bruiniers, J., with Jones, P. J., and Simons, J., concurring.)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Cartwright Act—Requirements—Separate Entities—Mergers.

The drafters intended that the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) apply, as its words had been construed, only to entities that "combine," in the sense of those who perdure (i.e., continue as separate, independent, competing entities during and after their collusive action)—and therefore the drafters did not intend the Cartwright Act to regulate the bona fide purchase and sale of one firm by another. The Cartwright Act cannot be used to challenge mergers and acquisitions. The drafters of the Cartwright Act intended to make their law applicable only to situations in which the parties improperly collude and continue as separate, independent entities, and not to situations in which, by virtue of purchase and sale, or merger, one or more of the entities ceases to exist. In a bona fide merger the entities lose forever their separate identities, and become a new, independent entity.

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Cartwright Act—Interpretation—Sherman Act.

Judicial interpretation of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2), while often helpful, is not directly probative of the intent of the drafters of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.). Federal precedents must be used with caution because the acts, although similar, are not coextensive. The appropriate use of federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act is as an aid in interpreting our own Cartwright Act, not as controlling precedent.

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Cartwright Act—Premerger Conspiracy—Meeting of Minds.

No claim was presented under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) based on an alleged premerger conspiracy to restrain trade of plaintiff's pharmaceutical product, which was to be developed by defendant, the company acquired [*3] in the merger. Even if the merging companies were capable of conspiring in the period between execution of an acquisition agreement and the consummation of the merger, plaintiff failed to produce evidence of any premerger meeting of the minds specifically to restrain the trade of the product. The complaint alleged that the acquiring company unilaterally decided to acquire defendant in order to further its own goal to dominate the market. Because this alleged anticompetitive purpose was attributed only to the acquiring company and to individuals and not to defendant, there was no combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for the purpose of preventing competition.

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Cartwright Act—Scope.

The Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), like all antitrust laws, is about the protection of competition, not competitors. Injury to a competitor is not equivalent to injury to competition; only the latter is the proper focus of antitrust laws.

Opinion

[622] BRUINIERS, J.—A company lawfully acquires a competitor. Can the activities of the two companies in anticipation of the merger constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade under the Cartwright Act, the California antitrust statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.)?[1] [623] Appellant Asahi Kasei Pharma Corporation (Asahi) sued respondent CoTherix, Inc. (CoTherix), alleging that Asahi suffered damage from such a conspiracy between CoTherix and its now [*4] parent company, Actelion Ltd. (Actelion). The trial court, relying on the opinion of our Supreme Court in State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc. (1988) 46 Cal.3d 1147 [252 Cal. Rptr. 221, 762 P.2d 385] [2] (Texaco), held that the Cartwright Act has no application in these circumstances and granted summary adjudication in favor of CoTherix.[2] Asahi claims this was error. We affirm.

I. Background

Asahi is a Japanese corporation which develops and markets pharmaceutical products and medical devices. One of its products is Fasudil, a Rho-kinase[3] inhibitor which Asahi sought to market for treatment of pulmonary arterial hypertension (PAH).[4] PAH is a chronic, progressive and often fatal disease, [3] which is characterized by severe constriction and obstruction of the pulmonary arteries.

In order to market Fasudil in the United States (U.S.) for treatment of PAH, Asahi, on June 23, 2006, entered into a licensing agreement (the Licensing Agreement) with CoTherix, a California-based biopharmaceutical company focused on developing and commercializing products for the treatment of cardiovascular disease. CoTherix had previously obtained regulatory approval for its own inhaled PAH treatment drug, Ventavis. Under the terms of the Licensing Agreement, CoTherix agreed to obtain regulatory approvals for Fasudil, and to develop and commercialize it in North America [4] and Europe. CoTherix was to develop oral and inhaled formulations of Fasudil for treatment of PAH, and an oral formulation of Fasudil for treatment of stable angina. It was required to use commercially reasonable efforts to develop Fasudil, and to obtain U.S. regulatory approvals for Fasudil as soon as reasonably practicable.

[*5] Actelion is a Swiss pharmaceutical company. Actelion Pharmaceuticals US, Inc., is a U.S.-based operational subsidiary of Actelion (through an intermediate subsidiary). Actelion has, since December 2001, marketed the drug Tracleer (bosentan), an endothelin receptor antagonist in the form of an orally ingested tablet which is also used in the treatment of PAH, and which has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration for use in the U.S. Tracleer is what is known in the pharmaceutical [624] industry as a “blockbuster” drug, generating over $1 billion

[2] Asahi's third amended complaint alleged three causes of action against CoTherix for violation of California's Cartwright Act, false advertising law (§ 17500 et seq.), and unfair competition law (§ 17200 et seq.). On December 21, 2009, Judge Carol L. Mittlesteadt granted summary adjudication of the Cartwright Act claim as to CoTherix. On March 4, 2010, Asahi voluntarily dismissed its false advertising claim. On May 21, 2010, Judge Marie S. Weiner granted summary adjudication of the unfair competition law claim. A final judgment was accordingly entered by Judge Weiner in favor of CoTherix on July 8, 2010.

[4] Fasudil was originally formulated in 1984 for intravenous use in treatment of cerebral vasospasm after subarachnoid hemorrhage (a type of stroke), and received regulatory approval in Japan for this use. Asahi asserts that Fasudil also has additional potential uses beyond PAH treatment, including treatment of stable angina, arteriosclerosis, and other diseases or conditions in which Rho-kinase may be involved.

in revenue annually, and Actelion has held the dominant share of the relevant market. In 2006, 98 percent of Actelion's U.S. revenues were dependent upon Tracleer sales.

On January 9, 2007, Actelion, through an intermediate subsidiary, acquired all of the stock of CoTherix, pursuant to a tender offer under a November 19, [5] 2006 “Agreement and Plan of Merger” (the Acquisition Agreement). Actelion concurrently notified Asahi that it was discontinuing development of Fasudil for “business and commercial reasons.”

On November 19, 2008, Asahi filed suit against CoTherix and Actelion.[5] Among other claims, Asahi alleged that CoTherix and Actelion violated the Cartwright Act by forming a “combination” by “conspir[ing] together, pre-acquisition, … to mislead Asahi about Actelion's … intentions [to discontinue the development of] Fasudil,” which Actelion allegedly viewed as a potential competitor to Tracleer.

Asahi contends that Actelion was concerned about immediate threats to its Tracleer market share from the launch of competing products and feared that Fasudil would compete directly with Tracleer, causing potential pricing issues which would cost Actelion hundreds of millions of dollars in lost net revenue. Therefore, Asahi asserts, one of Actelion's goals in acquisition [6] of CoTherix was to terminate the development of Fasudil. In pursuit of this goal, Actelion purportedly directed CoTherix Chief Executive Officer Don Santel to falsely reassure Asahi, after the CoTherix acquisition was announced, that “CoTherix continues to operate in the ordinary course of business, which includes the development of Fasudil.” In reality, according to Asahi, Actelion never had any intention of permitting CoTherix to continue development of Fasudil, and CoTherix began halting and delaying work on Fasudil's development prior to close of the acquisition. Had it known the true facts, Asahi insists that it would have pursued contractual remedies against CoTherix and could have sued for injunctive relief under the Licensing Agreement, thereby delaying or [*6] aborting Actelion's planned acquisition. Thus, Asahi charges, Actelion conspired with CoTherix “for anticompetitive purposes to eliminate an upstart competitor in the relevant market for PAH treatments.”

On August 18, 2009, CoTherix and the other U.S. subsidiaries of Actelion (Actelion U.S. Holding Company, Actelion Pharmaceuticals US, Inc.) filed a motion for summary adjudication challenging, inter alia, Asahi's Cartwright [7] Act claim. CoTherix argued that the Cartwright Act is inapplicable to corporate acquisition transactions; that there were no triable issues of material fact as to whether CoTherix and Actelion had conspired to interrupt the development of Fasudil; and that Asahi lacked antitrust standing.

On December 22, 2009, the trial court entered its order granting summary adjudication of Asahi's Cartwright Act claim as to CoTherix and the other U.S. subsidiaries of Actelion.[6] The court, citing Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at page 1168, found that “Defendants have met their initial burden under [Code of Civil Procedure section] 437c[, subdivision] (p)(2) [625] of showing that this cause of action has no merit because the Cartwright Act does not apply to a merger … and the complaint does not allege any pre-merger violation of the Cartwright Act.” The court found that the third amended complaint alleged only unilateral intent by Actelion to eliminate Fasudil as a competitor to Actelion's products, and that Asahi's allegations that CoTherix and Actelion conspired to prevent Asahi from pursuing its contractual remedies against CoTherix under the Licensing Agreement “do not state a Cartwright Act [8] violation because they do not constitute allegations of a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for the purpose of restraining competition … .”

On March 19, 2010, defendants moved for summary adjudication of Asahi's seventh claim for violation of the unfair competition law. On May 21, 2010, the trial court granted the motion as to CoTherix.[7] That order disposed of all causes of action against CoTherix[8] and, accordingly, judgment was entered in CoTherix's favor on July 8, 2010. A timely notice of appeal was filed on July 21, 2010.

II. Discussion

A. Standard of Review

HN1[] A motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication is properly granted "if all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." (Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. (c).) [9] HN2[] We review an order granting or denying a motion for summary adjudication de novo. (Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal.4th 826, 860 [107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493] (Aguilar).) In our review, we are required to liberally construe, and draw all reasonable inferences from, the evidence in favor of the party opposing the motion. (Miller v. Department of Corrections (2005) 36 Cal.4th 446, 460, 470 [30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 797, 115 P.3d 77].) We strictly scrutinize a defendant's showing. (Saelzler v. Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 Cal.4th 763, 768 [107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 23 P.3d 1143].) "In applying this exacting standard of review, we are also mindful that HN3[] both California and federal decisions urge caution in granting a defendant's motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case." (Fisherman's Wharf Bay Cruise Corp. v. Superior Court (2003) 114 Cal.App.4th 309, 321 [7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 628].) Nevertheless, "summary judgment is available, and always remains available, even in complex cases," including antitrust actions for an unlawful conspiracy under the Cartwright Act. (Aguilar, at pp. 860–861.) "If a party moving for summary judgment in any action, including an antitrust action for unlawful conspiracy, would prevail at trial without submission of any issue of material fact to a trier of fact for determination, [10] then he should prevail on summary judgment." (Id. at p. 855.)

B. The Cartwright Act

In 1907, the California Legislature enacted the Cartwright Act[9] which " 'generally [626] outlaws any combinations or agreements which restrain trade or competition or which fix or control prices.' [Citation.]" (Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. County of Stanislaus (1997) 16 Cal.4th 1143, 1147 [69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329, 947 P.2d 291]; see Lowell v. Mother's Cake & Cookie Co. (1978) 79 Cal.App.3d 13, 23 [144 Cal. Rptr. 664].)

The focus of the Cartwright Act is "on the punishment of violators for the larger purpose of promoting free competition. (See Stats. 1907, ch. 530, p. 984 [*8] [the Cartwright Act is 'An act to define trust and to provide for criminal penalties and civil damages, and punishment of [entities [11] connected with trusts], and to promote free competition in commerce and all classes of business in this state'].)" (Clayworth v. Pfizer, Inc. (2010) 49 Cal.4th 758, 783 [111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 666, 233 P.3d 1066].) A successful plaintiff can recover treble damages. (§ 16750, subd. (a).)

CA(1)[] (1) HN4[] A Cartwright Act violation requires "a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons" that seeks to achieve an anticompetitive end. (§ 16720; see Antitrust and Unfair Competition Law Section, State Bar, Cal. State Antitrust and Unfair Competition Law (2009) § 2.02[D], p. 40 (hereafter, Cal. Antitrust & Unfair Competition).) Consequently, "[o]nly separate entities pursuing separate economic interests can conspire within the proscription of the antitrust laws against price fixing combinations." (Freeman v. San Diego Assn. of Realtors (1999) 77 Cal.App.4th 171, 189 [91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534] (Freeman), citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp.

[8] Asahi voluntarily dismissed its false advertising claim on March 4, 2010.

[9] Section 16720 provides in relevant part: "A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for any of the following purposes: [¶] (a) To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce. [¶] … [¶] (c) To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity." Section 16726 provides: "Except as provided in this chapter, every trust is unlawful, against public policy and void."

As we discuss further post, federal antitrust laws prohibit anticompetitive mergers. (See 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 (Sherman Act); 15 U.S.C. § 18 (Clayton Act).) A merger is illegal under section 1 of the Sherman Act if it effects [12] an unreasonable restraint of trade, while section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolies. (See Alaska Airlines v. United Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir. 1991) 948 F.2d 536, 540–541 [each Sherman Act section "focus[es] on different problems": "concerted conduct is subject to sanction [under § 1] if it merely restrains trade, unilateral conduct is subject to sanction [under § 2] only if it either actually monopolizes or threatens monopolization"].) A merger may be attacked under the Clayton Act if it has the potential to substantially lessen competition. (Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at p. 1165, fn. 18.)

"[T]he Cartwright Act is not derived from the Sherman Act, but rather from the laws of other states, and the Cartwright Act and the Sherman Act differ in wording and scope." (Cal. Antitrust & Unfair Competition, supra, § 1.05, p. 24.) The Cartwright Act bans combinations, but HN5[] single firm monopolization is not cognizable under the Cartwright Act. (Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at p. 1163; Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th at p. 200, fn. 32; but cf. Lowell v. Mother's Cake & Cookie Co., supra, 79 Cal.App.3d at p. 23 [holding that "monopoly is a prohibited restraint of trade" under the Cartwright Act].) [13] To maintain an action for a combination in restraint of trade under the Cartwright Act, "the following elements must be established: [627] (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy; (2) illegal acts done pursuant thereto; and (3) damage proximately caused by such acts. [Citation.]" (Kolling v. Dow Jones & Co. (1982) 137 Cal.App.3d 709, 718 [187 Cal. Rptr. 797].)

C. Texaco

CA(2)[] (2) In Texaco, the Attorney General contended that a proposed acquisition by Texaco of the assets of Getty Oil Company through merger was anticompetitive and sued under the Cartwright Act seeking to enjoin the merger.[10] (Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at pp. 1150–1151.) The trial court sustained Texaco's demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the complaint. Affirming, our Supreme Court extensively examined the historical antecedents of the Cartwright Act, and concluded that our Legislature had implemented the Cartwright Act intending to adopt the meaning of "combination" as used, and as judicially interpreted, in the 1889 Texas and 1899 Michigan legislation upon which the Cartwright Act was modeled, i.e., anticompetitive collusion between otherwise independent and competing entities. (Texaco, at pp. 1162–1163.) The court particularly noted the [14] Legislature's failure to adopt antimerger and antimonopoly provisions included in then recently amended antitrust legislation in other jurisdictions, and its failure to do so since, despite at least 26 other amendments subsequent to enactment in 1907. (Id. at pp. 1159–1163.)[11] "Given this history, we must conclude that HN6[] the drafters intended that their Act apply, as its words had been construed, only to entities that 'combine,' in the sense of those who perdure (i.e., continue as separate, independent, competing entities during and after their collusive action)—and therefore that the drafters did not intend the Cartwright Act to regulate the bona fide purchase and sale of one firm by another."[12] (Texaco, at p. 1163.) The court held that the provisions of the Cartwright Act could not be used to challenge mergers and acquisitions and found that "the drafters of the Cartwright Act intended to make their law applicable only to situations in which the parties improperly collude and continue as separate, independent entities, and not to situations in which, by virtue of purchase and sale, or merger, one or more of the entities ceases to exist." (Texaco, at p. 1167, some italics added.) In a bona fide [15] merger "the entities lose forever their separate identities, and become a new, independent entity." (Id. at pp. 1152–1153.)

[10] The Attorney General also alleged that the merger violated the Unfair Practices Act (§ 17000 et seq.). (Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at pp. 1150–1151.)

Also relevant to our discussion is the determination by the Supreme Court that the coordinated acts of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary do not constitute a combination or conspiracy under section 1 of the Sherman Act. (Copperweld, supra, 467 U.S. at p. 777.) Rejecting prior cases suggesting the possibility of "intra-enterprise" liability in this context, the Supreme Court held that "[T]he coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of a single enterprise for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. A parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate; their general corporate actions are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousnesses, but one. They are not unlike a multiple team of horses drawing a vehicle under the control of a single driver. With or without a formal 'agreement,' the subsidiary acts for the benefit of the parent, its sole shareholder. If a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary do 'agree' to a course of action, there is no sudden joining of economic resources that had previously served different interests, and there is no [17] justification for § 1 scrutiny." (Id. at pp. 772, 771; see also American Needle, Inc. v. National Football League (2010) 560 U.S. ___, ___ [176 L. Ed. 2d 947, 130 S.Ct. 2201, 2212] (American Needle).)

The Supreme Court acknowledged that the focus of section 1 of the Sherman Act on concerted behavior "leaves a 'gap' in the Act's proscription against unreasonable restraints of trade. … An unreasonable restraint of trade may be effected not only by two independent firms acting in concert; a single firm may restrain trade to precisely the same extent if it alone possesses the combined market power of those same two firms. Because the Sherman Act does not prohibit unreasonable restraints of trade as such—but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy—it leaves untouched a single firm's anticompetitive conduct … that may be indistinguishable in economic effect from the conduct of two firms subject to § 1 liability." (Copperweld, supra, 467 U.S. at pp. 774–775, citation omitted.)

Our own Supreme Court has not yet directly addressed the application and scope of Copperweld to the Cartwright Act. At least one appellate district has applied Copperweld in rejecting a Cartwright Act price-fixing claim brought against [18] a corporate real estate multiple listing service and its local real estate association shareholders. (Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th 171; see also Eddins v. Redstone (2005) 134 Cal.App.4th 290, 341–343 [35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 863] [applying Copperweld in sustaining summary adjudication of a claim of collusion under the Unfair Practices Act between commonly controlled companies]; Drum v. San Fernando Valley Bar Assn. (2010) 182 Cal.App.4th 247, 255–256 [106 Cal. Rptr. 3d 46] [applying Copperweld principles to claim [*11] under the unfair competition law]; cf. MacManus v A. E. Realty Partners (1987) 195 Cal.App.3d 1106, 1112 & fn. 4 [241 Cal.Rptr. 315] [distinguishing Copperweld and declining to decide application under the Cartwright Act to a purely intra-enterprise conspiracy or combination].) In another instance, the federal district court for the Central District of California dismissed a Cartwright Act conspiracy claim against a manufacturer and its wholly owned subsidiaries, finding that Copperweld would "likely … be persuasive to the Supreme Court of California." [629] (Newport Components v. NEC Home Electronics (C.D.Cal. 1987) 671 F.Supp. 1525, 1544, 1550.)[13]

[12] The court held that the Unfair Practices Act was likewise inapplicable. (Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at p. 1170.) This holding has been superseded by statute. (See Stop Youth Addiction, Inc. v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal.4th 553, 570 [71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 731, 950 P.2d 1086].)

Absent contrary direction from our Supreme Court, we believe that the rationale of Copperweld is entirely consistent with the approach of Texaco, and the established teaching of our own cases that HN8[] an indispensable element of any action under the Cartwright Act is proof of a "'combination of resources of two or more independent interests for the purpose of restraining commerce and preventing market competition … .' [Citation.]" (G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc. (1983) 147 Cal.App.3d 256, 266 [195 Cal. Rptr. 211], italics added.)

E. Application of Texaco

The trial court, in granting summary adjudication, found Texaco controlling. Asahi, acknowledging the continuing vitality of Texaco in the context of corporate mergers, seeks to narrowly interpret its scope and contends that Texaco has no application to premerger activities during the period that the acquired and acquiring entities maintain separate identities. We find the distinctions that Asahi attempts to draw unpersuasive.

Asahi argues that, unlike the Attorney General in Texaco, it does not seek to challenge the Actelion/CoTherix merger, but instead targets an anticompetitive premerger combination [20] or conspiracy resulting when "CoTherix and its executives … joined with Actelion to frustrate Asahi's rights under the [Licensing] Agreement so that the path would be clear for Actelion to prevent a vibrant competitive offering in the markets for PAH and [stable angina] treatments."

1. The Licensing Agreement

Asahi's theory of the case is premised on provisions of the Licensing Agreement anticipating potential change in control of CoTherix. Section 11.2(f) of the Licensing Agreement permitted Asahi to terminate the agreement in the event that CoTherix was acquired by a "Competitive Company," [*12] defined as "any Third Party … that conduct[s] Development or Commercialization of a Pulmonary Hypertension drug or Stable Angina drug … ." In that event, the Competitive Company was required to assume CoTherix's development obligations under the Licensing Agreement and provide written confirmation of its agreement to do so. Failure to do so would constitute a material breach of the Licensing Agreement, requiring relinquishment and return of all Asahi intellectual property and licenses, and allowing Asahi to terminate the agreement. Any party was entitled to "seek injunctive relief with [21] respect to any actual or threatened breach of this Agreement, which breach would cause irreparable harm to the Party seeking such relief, from a court of competent jurisdiction."[14]

2. Application of Texaco to Premerger Activities

CA(3)[] (3) Finding no directly applicable California authority to support its position, [630] Asahi relies primarily on federal cases under the Sherman Act, asserting that "the Cartwright Act is construed in accord with the interpretation courts give to the Sherman Act." There is a similarity in language and purpose between the federal and state statutes. The Cartwright Act, like the Sherman Act, "was enacted to promote free market competition and to prevent conspiracies or agreements in restraint or monopolization of trade." (Exxon Corp. v. Superior Court (1997) 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, 1680 [60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 195], [22] fn. omitted.) In Texaco, however, our Supreme Court recognized that the Sherman and Cartwright Acts differ in legislative intent and history, as well as in statutory construction and language, and explained that HN9[] "judicial interpretation of the Sherman Act, while often helpful, is not directly probative of the Cartwright drafters' intent … ." (Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at p. 1164.) "[F]ederal precedents must be used with caution because the acts, although similar, are not coextensive. [Citation.]" (Freeman, supra, 77 Cal.App.4th at p. 183, fn. 9.) "[T]he appropriate use of federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act is as an aid in interpreting our own Cartwright Act, not as controlling precedent … ." (Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Superior Court (1993) 14 Cal.App.4th 1224, 1240 [18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308]; see also Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft

[13] As we discuss post, HN7[] judicial interpretation of the Sherman Act, while often helpful, is not dispositive [19] on Cartwright Act issues. (Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at p. 1164.)

[14] Section 13.10 of the Licensing Agreement otherwise provides for mandatory and binding commercial arbitration of contractual disputes between the parties. Some exhibits submitted in relation to the motion for summary adjudication appear to be excerpts from testimony submitted in International Chamber of Commerce arbitration proceedings arising from this dispute. The outcome of that proceeding is not directly relevant to the issues before us.

Foods, Inc. (9th Cir. 2000) 232 F.3d 979, 985 [role of federal antitrust precedents in a Cartwright Act analysis is "limited: they are 'often helpful' but not necessarily decisive"].)

Some federal circuits appear to have at least implicitly recognized a potential cause of action under section 1 of the Sherman Act for a premerger [*13] combination or conspiracy—at least with respect [23] to per se antitrust violations such as price fixing.[15] (Vollrath Co. v. Sammi Corp. (9th Cir. 1993) 9 F.3d 1455 (Vollrath); Lantec, Inc. v. Novell, Inc. (10th Cir. 2002) 306 F.3d 1003 (Lantec).)

In Vollrath, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant, a subsidiary, and another later-acquired subsidiary violated the Sherman Act through a predatory pricing scheme for imported stainless steel mixing bowls. (Vollrath, supra, 9 F.3d at p. 1457.) The matter was submitted [24] to a jury on theories including both an attempt and conspiracy to monopolize in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, as well as conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, but the trial court granted a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. (Vollrath, at pp. 1457–1459.) The Ninth Circuit affirmed, and found, among other things, that the district court properly held that under Copperweld there could be no conspiracy following an acquisition of one of the defendants by another. (Id. at p. 1463.) Asahi asserts that Vollrath nevertheless recognized that the existence of a premerger conspiracy was an issue properly considered by a trier of fact. The conspiracy factually alleged in Vollrath, however, was [631] an agreement to engage in below-cost pricing so as to monopolize the stainless steel mixing bowl market, a violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act (Vollrath, at p. 1463), for which there is no analog in the Cartwright Act. Further, under federal law, anticompetitive mergers are subject to scrutiny under both sections of the Sherman Act, as well as under the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 18 [expressly prohibiting [25] an acquisition or merger "where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition … may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly"]). (United States v. First Nat. Bank (1964) 376 U.S. 665, 669–673 [12 L. Ed. 2d 1, 84 S. Ct. 1033].)

In Lantec, the plaintiff alleged that a merger between Novell and WordPerfect was unlawful as a vertical combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade under section 1 of the Sherman Act, and that Novell conspired with WordPerfect to monopolize the relevant software market in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. (Lantec, supra, 306 F.3d at pp. 1022–1023.) Following presentation of the claims to a jury, the trial court granted judgment for the [*14] defendants as a matter of law. (Id. at p. 1011.) The Tenth Circuit affirmed. Here again, a conspiracy to monopolize was alleged under section 2 of the Sherman Act, and the reviewing court only implicitly accepted the viability of a premerger conspiracy claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act in finding that Lantec had in any event failed to define a relevant market as a predicate to pursuing such claims. (306 F.3d at pp. 1024–1028.) Lantec's discussion [26] of premerger conduct of the defendants was limited entirely to the plaintiff's section 2 Sherman Act claims.

Asahi also directs our attention to Omnicare, Inc. v. UnitedHealth Group, Inc. (N.D.Ill. 2007) 524 F.Supp.2d 1031 (Omnicare), a federal trial court decision in the Seventh Circuit denying a motion to dismiss a section 1 Sherman Act claim based on alleged premerger price fixing by two prescription drug providers. This is the only case cited by Asahi that expressly discusses antitrust liability for concerted action between merging companies. The court found that the claim could not be dismissed at the pleading stage because "[i]t is at least plausible that two competitor corporations that are going through a process of merger continue to retain separate economic interests." (Omnicare, at p. 1039.) However, the plaintiff had alleged "that the decision to enter into a merger agreement on certain [anticompetitive] terms was itself an unlawful agreement" (id. at pp. 1037–1038), and the trial judge relied " 'California and federal antitrust law under the two acts generally distinguish between conduct that is per se unlawful and conduct that is evaluated under the rule of reason. not on any controlling case authority, but rather scholarly argument that combining firms should be continued to be treated as separate actors until a merger is fully consummated (id. at p. 1039, [27] citing to an argument now found in 7 Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application (3d ed. 2010) § 14E, ¶ 1464h, pp. 227–228 (hereafter, Areeda & Hovenkamp)).

Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp, in their multivolume treatise, address this specific point in a single sentence within a far more extensive analysis of "Intraenterprise Conspiracy" (Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, § 14E, ¶¶ 1462–1478, pp. 199–377)—a doctrine that the U.S. Supreme Court has since characterized as "defunct." (American Needle, supra, 560 U.S. at p. ___ [130 S.Ct. at p. 2210].) Their analysis and comment is, of course, also focused entirely on application of federal law, including sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and does not purport to address the scope of our Cartwright Act. The argument relied upon by the federal trial court in Omnicare and by Asahi here, begins with an observation that, "Acquisitions are tested [632] under the antitrust laws under a prophylactic standard that reaches most mergers that have any significant anticompetitive potential. Once we presume that a merger is lawful, the additional deterrence afforded by a continuing intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine is unnecessary [28] and unwise. … Any increment in anticompetitive potential that resulted from the merger should be challenged in a lawsuit challenging the merger itself. Assuming its legality, the post-merger firm must thereafter be regarded as a single entity. [¶] The flip side of [*15] the coin is that as a general rule firms contemplating mergers remain separate actors until their transaction is consummated." (Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, § 14E, ¶ 1464h, pp. 227–228, italics added & fns. omitted.) With regard to the italicized comment, the authors expressly noted their disagreement with a contrary holding in International Travel Arrangers v. NWA, Inc. (8th Cir. 1993) 991 F.2d 1389 (NWA). (Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, § 14E, ¶ 1464h, p. 228, fn. 41.)

In NWA, a tour operator sued Northwest Airlines, Inc., and affiliated companies, claiming violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and the Clayton Act, together with state law breach of contract and fraud claims. The jury found that Northwest Airlines did not conspire with a subsidiary prior to a merger, but found for the plaintiff on its claims that the defendants had monopolized and attempted to monopolize through predatory pricing. (NWA, supra, 991 F.2d at p. 1392.) [29] On a cross-appeal, the plaintiff contended that the trial court had improperly instructed the jury, arguing that the rule announced by the Supreme Court in Copperweld—"that a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary 'are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act,'—[could not] properly be applied to insulate from Sherman Act liability joint actions by two previously independent competitors taken after they had agreed to merge but before the merger had been consummated."[16] (NWA, at p. 1397.) The Eighth Circuit disagreed, approving the jury instruction (thus allowing the jury to determine the economic substance of the relationship between the two entities) and stating "[w]e do not conclude, as [plaintiff] would have us do, that only the formal consummation of a merger precludes the application of section 1 of the Sherman Act to an alleged conspiracy between the merging companies." (Id. at p. 1398.)

What the cited federal authorities suggest is that section 1 of the Sherman Act may, at least under some circumstances, reach premerger anticompetitive conduct, dependent upon the economic reality of the acquired and acquiring entities as independent actors. This approach appears to be generally consistent with the requirement of our own cases that HN10[] an antitrust plaintiff must plead and prove that separate entities maintaining separate and independent interests, combined for the purpose of restraining trade. (See Freeman, supra, [*16] 77 Cal.App.4th at p. 189; G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc., supra, 147 Cal.App.3d at p. 266 ["it is [633] well settled that a complaint for antitrust violations which fails to allege such [31] concerted action by separate entities maintaining separate and independent interests is subject to demurrer"].)[17]

Asahi directs our attention to no California case, however, and we have found none, applying the Cartwright Act to penalize conduct during the merger process that would unquestionably be exempt from antitrust scrutiny upon consummation of the merger. Copperweld teaches that where the entities possess an inherent unity of economic interest and purpose, they are not separate entities capable of conspiring. Even legally distinct entities do not conspire if they "pursue[] the common interests of the whole rather than interests separate from those of the [group] itself . … Because [such] coordination … does not represent a sudden joining of two independent sources of economic power previously pursuing separate [32] interests, it is not activity that warrants [Sherman Act section 1] scrutiny." (Copperweld, supra, 467 U.S. at pp. 770–771.)

"[S]ubstance, not form, should determine whether a[n] … entity is capable of conspiring under § 1." (Copperweld, supra, 467 U.S. at p. 773, fn. 21.) "[T]he question is not whether the defendant is a legally single entity or has a single name; nor is the question whether the parties involved 'seem' like one firm or multiple firms in any metaphysical sense. The key is whether the alleged 'contract, combination … , or conspiracy' is concerted action—that is, whether it joins together separate decisionmakers. The relevant inquiry, therefore, is whether there is a 'contract, combination … or conspiracy' amongst 'separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests,' … such that the agreement 'deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking,' … and therefore of 'diversity of entrepreneurial interests,' … and thus of actual or potential competition … . [¶] … [¶] … [T]he inquiry is one of competitive reality … ." (American Needle, supra, 560 U.S. at pp. ___ – ___ [130 S.Ct. at pp. 2211–2212], citations omitted.)

We have difficulty seeing how application [33] of the Cartwright Act in the context presented here would further the policy of " 'unrestrained interaction of competitive forces' " that the antitrust laws seek to advance. (Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson (1976) 16 Cal.3d 920, 935 [130 Cal. Rptr. 1, 549 P.2d 833].) The " 'central evil' addressed by Sherman Act § 1" is "the cartel eliminating competition that would otherwise exist." (Areeda & Hovenkamp, [*17] supra, § 14E, ¶ 1462b, p. 203.) The antitrust laws "supervise[] conspiracies because they increase market power or make possible a restraint that could not otherwise be achieved." (Ibid., italics added & fn. omitted.) Assuming a merger that is otherwise lawful,[18] the combination inherent in the merger is what eliminates competition that would otherwise exist, and which makes possible restraints that could not otherwise be [634] achieved. It is the merger itself that "deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking" and results in a single aggregation of economic power. (Copperweld, supra, 467 U.S. at p. 769; see American Needle, supra, 560 U.S. at p. ___ [130 S.Ct. at p. 2212].)

And the combination resulting from a merger may well have anticompetitive effects, whether intended or incidental. As the Supreme Court observed in Copperweld, "[a]n unreasonable restraint of trade may be effected not only by two independent firms acting in concert; a single firm may restrain trade to precisely the same extent if it alone possesses the combined market power of those same two firms." (Copperweld, supra, 467 U.S. at p. 775.) But in Texaco, our high court expressly concluded that HN11[] the Legislature "did not intend the Cartwright Act to regulate the bona fide purchase and sale of one firm by another," and that it applied only to those who "continue as separate, independent, competing entities during and after their collusive action." (Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at p. 1163, italics added.)

[18] CoTherix notes that both Actelion U.S. Holding Company and CoTherix filed preacquisition notifications of the proposed merger with [34] the U.S. Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission as required by the federal Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 (Pub.L. No. 94-435 (Sept. 30, 1976) 90 Stat. 1383), and that neither agency challenged the acquisition as anticompetitive. Since Asahi specifically disclaims any challenge to the validity of the merger, the effect of such a filing is not directly relevant to the issue before us.

A merger is definitionally a combination of formerly [35] separate interests. It is necessarily effectuated by "collusion" of the parties. The separate entities "possess an inherent unity of economic interest and purpose" in consummation of the merger, and the ultimate interests of the subsidiary and the parent are identical thereafter. (NWA, supra, 991 F.2d at p. 1397; see Copperweld, supra, 467 U.S. at pp. 771–773 & fn. 18; Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at pp. 1152–1153 [in a bona fide merger "the entities lose forever their separate identities, and become a new, independent entity"].) Alignment of the business objectives of the acquired company with the new parent is the inevitable result. The "competitive reality" is that independent economic decisionmaking is compromised, even if not eliminated, once companies have formally agreed to merge. That compromise is exemplified by the Acquisition Agreement executed here by Actelion and CoTherix. CoTherix, for example, on signing the Acquisition Agreement, surrendered its freedom of action in the conduct of its business affairs as an independent entity by obligating itself to numerous contractual covenants and conditions, including limitations on its [*18] preclosing ability to incur indebtedness, make certain capital expenditures, [36] and engage in certain dealings with its employees (Acquisition Agreement, art. VIII, § 8.1).

The coordinated or concerted action between Actelion and CoTherix alleged by Asahi, and the focus of its evidentiary showing, was that the principals of the two entities, in preparation for the proposed acquisition, agreed to give false assurances to Asahi that development of Fasudil would continue, while planning to do otherwise once Actelion controlled CoTherix. But the resulting loss of independent decisionmaking by CoTherix on the development of Fasudil, and the ultimate implementation of business objectives defined entirely by Actelion as the parent, were inherent in the combination between the two companies. It is difficult to see how our antitrust policies are furthered by saying that parties may not, in the process of merging, reach agreement to do that which the combined entity may freely do. The rationale of Texaco—that the Cartwright Act was intended to apply "only to situations in which the parties improperly collude and continue as separate, independent entities, and not to situations in which, by virtue of purchase and sale, or merger, one or more of the entities ceases to [37] exist" (Texaco, supra, 46 Cal.3d at p. 1167, [635] some italics added)—would seem equally applicable in these circumstances.

CA(4)[↑] (4) But even if we were to conclude (or find a triable factual issue) that Actelion and CoTherix remained capable of conspiring in the period between execution of the Acquisition Agreement and the consummation of the merger, we find that Asahi fails to present a viable claim here.

F. Asahi Fails to Establish a Viable Cartwright Act Claim

Asahi's theory of the case can best be summarized as follows: at least one of Actelion's purposes in acquisition of CoTherix was to eliminate Fasudil as a competitive threat to Tracleer; CoTherix was aware of Actelion's purpose; as part of an agreed "strategy" Actelion directed CoTherix and its principals to give false assurances to Asahi that development of Fasudil would continue under the Licensing Agreement; in reliance on those assurances, Asahi did not pursue available remedies which would have allowed it to impede or halt the Actelion/CoTherix merger.[19] Thus, Asahi concludes, CoTherix and Actelion "overcame a necessary hurdle" by dissuading Asahi from exercising its preacquisition rights and, by "[t]hwarting Asahi's exercise of its [Licensing] [*19] [38] Agreement rights[,] thwarted Fasudil's development as a competitive product." In other words, the conduct of the parties in the course of effectuating their merger ultimately achieved Actelion's intended anticompetitive result. Asahi fails to demonstrate, however, how Cartwright Act penalties would properly apply in such circumstances.

Asahi failed to produce evidence of any premerger meeting of the minds specifically to restrain the trade of Fasudil. As the trial court observed in its order, Asahi's complaint alleges that "Actelion, unilaterally, decided to acquire CoTherix in order to further its own goal to dominate the market." Because this alleged anticompetitive purpose was [19] At oral argument, Asahi's counsel contended that there was a conspiracy, during the period between the Acquisition Agreement and closing of the merger, to delay the approval process for Fasudil, and that Asahi suffered consequential damages during that period. Asahi neither pled nor argued such a claim in the trial court and presented no such argument in its briefing here.

"attributed only to Actelion and the Individual Defendants and not to CoTherix, … there [was] no combination of capital, skill or acts [39] 'by two or more persons' for the purpose of preventing competition." The agreement or collusive "strategy" on which Asahi bases its Cartwright Act claim was to " 'prevent Asahi from exercising its rights under the Fasudil Agreement in a way that could potentially disrupt Actelion's acquisition of CoTherix.' " In later granting summary adjudication in favor of Actelion, another trial judge separately found, "the only pre-merger agreement alleged … between Actelion and CoTherix is an agreement not to comply with the change of control provision of the [L]icense [A]greement … [, but this] … agreement is not a violation of the Cartwright Act because it is not an agreement to restrain competition, i.e., not an agreement to end the sale of Fasudil." Rather, "[t]he goal and purpose of the alleged 'conspiracy' [between CoTherix and Actelion] was to achieve a merger." In both instances the court found that the conduct alleged did not, as a matter of law, establish a violation of the Cartwright Act. We agree.

Asahi protests that it was not required to produce evidence of a shared common purpose or motive, but only the existence of a combination resulting in an anticompetitive effect. [40] The anticompetitive effect [636] that Asahi complains of, however, results not from any premerger agreement between the parties, but from ultimate consummation of the merger. Asahi's theory hinges on what it posits as its ability to impede or prevent the merger. Nothing in the Licensing Agreement provides for such a remedy. Citing section 13.10(b) of the Licensing Agreement, Asahi contends that, had it known the true facts, it "would have investigated all legal means to require the continued development of Fasudil" and that it "could have sued for injunctive relief, and thereby delayed or even caused a breakdown of Actelion's planned acquisition." While Asahi had the right to declare a material breach of the Licensing Agreement, and to terminate it, if it failed to receive reasonable assurances of continued development of Fasudil, nothing in the Licensing Agreement purports to give Asahi the right to prevent a "Change of Control," and Asahi fails to suggest how it could have successfully enjoined the merger. Certainly, as Texaco makes clear, it could not have done so under the Cartwright Act.

[*20] CA(5)[] (5) The essence of Asahi's claim is that CoTherix breached the terms of the Licensing Agreement, that [41] Actelion induced it to do so, and that development of Fasudil as a competitive product was "thwarted" as a result. What the undisputed evidence shows, however, is that development of Fasudil, at least by CoTherix, was thwarted by Actelion's acquisition of CoTherix. While Asahi presented voluminous evidence relating to the harm which it claims to have suffered as a result, HN12[] the Cartwright Act, like all antitrust laws, is about " ' " 'the protection of competition, not competitors.' " ' [Citation.]" (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163, 186 [83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527]; see also Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc. (7th Cir. 1989) 864 F.2d 1409, 1413 [Sherman Act "does not reach conduct that is only unfair, impolite, or unethical"].) OPINION AND ORDER

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Díaz Aviation Corporation (hereafter "Díaz Aviation") [1] filed a Verified Amended Complaint against defendants Airport Aviation Corp., José Algarín, and Rafael Matos (hereafter referred jointly as "Airport Aviation"), among other co-defendants who were dismissed. [2] (Docket No. 121).

Plaintiff Díaz Aviation claimed defendant Airport Aviation and its employees, individual defendants Algarín and Matos, interfered with the operation of Díaz Aviation's business which it considers is interference with interstate commerce and, thus, have restricted trade at the Luis Muñoz Marín International Airport in Carolina, Puerto Rico (hereafter "LMMIA"), an alleged violation of the Sherman Act. The acts of said defendants were based on plaintiff's submission on the pleadings that Airport Aviation represented itself as the only entity authorized to serve the Armed Forces of the United [*4] States upon having a contract with the Defense Department to provide aviation fuel to its military planes. Plaintiff also raised having suffered tort/damages upon the loss of sales from defendants' interference with its business by taking away its clients, which resulted in plaintiff firing employees, cutting costs and reducing its business. As way of interference plaintiff submitted the allegation defendants used the Ports Authority to remove plaintiff's trucks from the airport, interfere with its business, initiate eviction actions which were resolved in plaintiff's favor by state courts, among others. (Docket No. 121).

On February 27, 28 and 29, 2012, the non-jury trial in this case was held on the pending claims under the Sherman Act and for damages under Article 1802 of the Puerto Rico Civil Code. [3] Plaintiff presented twenty one (21) witnesses on its behalf and seven (7) exhibits, in addition to a Joint Exhibit. [4] At the conclusion of the non-jury trial and presentation of all evidence by plaintiff and having rested its case, defendants Airport Aviation, Algarín and Matos moved for non-suit. Fed.R.Civ.P. 52.

After considering the evidence presented at trial, including the testimonies and documents, and assessing credibility, the Court finds plaintiff has not met its burden in this case. [5] The undisputed evidence showed plaintiff

[1] Plaintiff Díaz Aviation has been identified in the proceedings also as [*3] d/b/a Borinquen Air and as d/b/a Amber Air.

[2] Co-defendants Puerto Rico Ports Authority, (hereafter "Ports Authority"), Federico Sosa Román, Alvaro Pilar, Arnaldo Deleo, Edgar Sierra, Eric Gracia and Fernando Bonilla were also included in the Verified Amended Complaint but were dismissed as per Opinion and Order issued on July 27, 2010, Partial Judgment, and Order of September 3, 2010. (Docket Nos. 188, 191 and 201). Co-defendant Edwin Santana De La Rosa was also included in the Verified Amended Complaint but was dismissed on November 7, 2011 and Partial Judgment was entered. (Docket Nos. 274 and 276).

[3] Plaintiff waived a jury trial at the Pre-Trial Conference. (Docket No. [*5] 297).

[4] On the first day of trial, Sixto Díaz-Saldaña (president and owner of Díaz Aviation) informed the court he was going to continue legally representing plaintiff Díaz Aviation during the trial and he was also going to testify on behalf of plaintiff. Defendants renewed their objection to Mr. Díaz-Saldaña acting as counsel and as a witness. After hearing the arguments and having advised plaintiff it should have retained counsel, attorney Díaz-Saldaña was allowed to represent and testify on behalf of plaintiff.

[5] The testimonial evidence presented [*6] by plaintiff is undisputed and all witnesses were in essence consistent in their testimonies, thus reducing credibility determinations by the undersigned to a bare minimum.

Díaz Aviation and defendant Airport Aviation have competed for a share of the aviation fuel dispensing to military aircrafts at the LMMIA. Defendant Airport Aviation operates pursuant to a contract with the Armed Forces and has not interfered with the operations of Díaz Aviation. As such, no Sherman Act violation, tort or damages have been established. Thus, the Court issues its findings of facts and conclusions of law.

STANDARD UNDER FED.R.CIV.P. 52

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 52 provides in pertinent part as follows:

> (1) In General. In an action tried on the facts without a jury or with an advisory jury, the court must find the facts specially and state its conclusions of law separately. The findings and conclusions may be stated on the record after the close of the evidence or may appear in an opinion or a memorandum of decision filed by the court. Judgment must be entered under Rule 58.
> (c) Judgment on Partial Findings. If a party has been fully heard on an issue during a nonjury trial and the court finds against the party on that issue, the court may enter judgment against the party on a claim or defense that, under the controlling law, can be maintained or defeated only with a favorable finding on that issue. The court may, however, decline to render any judgment until the close of the evidence. A judgment on partial findings must be supported by findings of fact and conclusions of law as [*7] required by Rule 52(a).

A district court in making bench findings did not have to account for every detail, discuss all of the evidence that supported each of the findings made, or respond individually to each evidentiary or factual contention made by the losing side. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 52(a). See Addamax Corp. v. Open Software Foundation, Inc., 152 F.3d 48 (1st Cir. 1998).

ANALYSIS

It is not clear from the Verified Amended Complaint under which Section of the Sherman Act plaintiff has made a claim. Thus, in an abundance of caution, we address Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

A. SHERMAN ACT, SECTION 1, CONSPIRACY TO RESTRAIN TRADE/COMMERCE.

Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. §1, provides:

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $1,000,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding [*8] 10 years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Plaintiff's submission as to a Sherman claim arises from the alleged existence of a conspiracy. An interpretation and application of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, prohibits "(e)very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations."

The Sherman Act is a statute to be applied to mean what it says, which is not one to invalidating the entire body of commercial contract law or the regular competition in a free market. National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 687-88, 98 S.Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978). It is for this reason that the Act, in accordance with both its legislative history and common law antecedents, has been tempered by the Rule of Reason. See Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 60, 31 S.Ct. 502, 515, 55 L. Ed. 619 (1911). The Rule does not exempt restraints which may be argued to be reasonable or expedient, but rather focuses on the reasonableness of the effect of the challenged restraint on competition. National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 688, 98 S.Ct. 1355, 1363, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978).

"The [*9] probability of successfully monopolizing a market is usually assessed through market share. The greater share a defendant initially controls, the greater the probability of achieving monopoly status." Hewlett-Packard Company v. Boston Scientific Corp., 77 F.Supp.2d 189, 198 (D. Mass. 1999) (citing Colorado Interstate Gas Co. v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America, 885 F.2d 683, 693-94 (10th Cir. 1989)). Thus, in order to state a claim under this section, a plaintiff must allege and prove that the defendant had market power in the relevant market to potentially achieve monopoly status. See CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842, 851 (1st Cir. 1985). It is plaintiff's burden to define and prove a viable relevant market, both geographically and by product. The principal factor in establishing a claim for attempted monopolization is defendant's market share in the relevant market. United States v. Microsoft, 253 F.3d 34, 81, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001). Also, as in any monopolization claim, plaintiff must prove that "significant" barriers to entry in the relevant market will make monopolization possible. Id. at 82-83. Other relevant factors include the strength and capacity of existing or potential [*10] competition, the concentration of the market, the trend towards greater or lesser concentration, the nature of the defendant's anticompetitive conduct, and the elasticity of consumer demand. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan., 506 U.S. 447, 459, 113 S.Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993).

An examination of the legality of any conduct alleged to be anticompetitive therefore necessitates a determination as to what the consequences of the conduct have been in the affected market.

Turning to this case, the evidence presented at trial shows the actions that plaintiff Díaz Aviation has assigned to defendants, as a possible violation of section 1, were mostly in regards to a third-party, the Ports Authority, which the evidence has not linked to any action by defendant Airport Aviation and the two co-defendants Algarín and Matos. The actions of defendant Airport Aviation's employees, co-defendants Algarín and Matos, to influence said non-party in their actions as to plaintiff, referring to instances of request for eviction from airport premises due to expiration of the lease contract and removal of permits from plaintiff's trucks were not presented. Rather, all that plaintiff submitted was that defendants Algarín [*11] and Matos at the time approached some military aircrafts that Díaz Aviation was servicing, at a location not identified, to provide the captain or main officer with a copy of the contract that was valid between defendant Airport Aviation and the Armed Forces.

The parties submitted jointly as Joint Exhibit I a copy of said contract that co-defendant AAS executed with the Defense Energy Support Center, acting on behalf of the U.S. Defense Air Logistics Agency (hereafter "DESC") (Contract No. SP0600-09-D-0076), to service into-plane fuel to military planes at LMMIA that covers a time period from April 1, 2009 to March 31, 2013. (Jointly Exhibit I). It is undisputed as well that, since 2002, plaintiff Díaz Aviation does not have a contract to provide plane services to military aircraft at the airport.

The evidence shows the captain of each aircraft was the ultimate decision maker as to whom serves fuel to its aircraft. Pursuant to the un-rebutted evidence presented at trial, this was done by the co-defendants in strict compliance with the obligations under the contract. Under the current contract, Airport Aviation services is to sell and serve fuel to a military airplane as long as Airport [*12] Aviation services is available, willing and capable of selling the fuel at the moment. (Joint Exhibit I). Otherwise, another company may sell the fuel to the military plane and still Airport Aviation will be paid the service fee by the government, as evidenced by Exhibit 12. As a matter of fact, the evidence showed that on two (2) instances in 2012, plaintiff Díaz Aviation sold fuel to two (2) military planes.

As to the specific situation with a C-130 airplane on February 20, 2010, the undisputed evidence showed through the testimony of Mr. Eric Gracia, Assistant Director of Operations at the LMMIA, that the airplane was parked in an area where it was not allowed to be parked. As such, in compliance with the regulations of the Federal Aviation Administration, the plane was ordered to be moved by the Ports Authority for safety reasons to an area where it did not interrupt the operations of the airport. The captain of the airplane decided to relocate the plane. No evidence was presented as to defendants participating in any way in this situation.

As [*13] to co-defendant Matos, Mr. Díaz-Saldaña admitted under oath having no evidence to substantiate plaintiff's claims against co-defendant Matos.

As to co-defendant Algarín, Mr. Díaz-Saldaña admitted the only link to him is an email by Mr. Algarín to Mr. Gil Rosario on October 23, 2009, informing of an incident between defendant Airport Aviation and plaintiff's employees as to fueling of a military plane that led to the filing of a complaint with the Puerto Rico Police. As testified by Mr. Algarín, this email expressed some concerns as to possible accidents while fueling airplanes at the airport and did not request the alleged "throwing out" of plaintiff's trucks as plaintiff alleged. Thus, for safety concerns, Algarín requested the Ports Authority's intervention. (Exhibit 6).

It is pellucidly clear that plaintiff Díaz Aviation has totally failed to show the concerted action requirement as to the conspiracy that it alleges is in violation of the Sherman Act. No credible evidence of exclusionary practice was presented at trial or that defendants asserted to be holding an exclusive contract for the sale of jet fuel to the Armed Forces.

The Highest Court stated in Fisher v. City of Berkeley, Cal., 475 U.S. 260, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986) [*14] that it has always limited the reach of the Sherman Act provision, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1, to unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy between separate entities. Even where a single firm's restraints directly affect prices and have the same economic effect as concerted action might have, there can be no liability in the absence of agreement.

Additionally, plaintiff Díaz Aviation also failed to establish through competent evidence that even the acts attributed to the Ports Authority, once more, a non-party to this action, were contrary to law, although the eviction process concluded in favor of plaintiff upon payment of advanced lease payments. The evidence showed the removal of the permits to operate on the airport's ramps from plaintiff's trucks, which resulted in being denied access to airport premises, resulted from non-renewal of the permits after they expired and for security/safety reasons.

Even if we were to credit the acts alleged from the non-party Ports Authority as to eviction and removal of permits that may have hindered plaintiff's operation at the LMMIA's premises, such a restraint imposed unilaterally by a government entity does not [*15] become concerted action within the meaning of the Sherman Act simply because it has a coercive effect upon the parties who must obey the law and the mere fact that all competing concessioneries must comply with the ordinance is not enough to establish a conspiracy among them.

Plaintiff offered a chain of emails (Exhibit 6) in relation to a C-130 plane serviced in October 22, 2009, as evidence of its claims under the Sherman Act against defendants. However, a review of Exhibit 6 and the testimonies in reference thereto, do not support plaintiff's allegations of an alleged conspiracy. As testified by Mr. Arnaldo Deleo (manager of the LMMIA), Airport Aviation operates at the airport, with the corresponding permits and authorizations of the Ports Authority. In relation to the email of Mr. Arnaldo Deleo to Mr. Díaz-Saldaña (Exhibit 6), Mr. Deleo testified plaintiff served a C-130 military plane on October 22, 2009 without having the required "fuel permit." Mr. Deleo informed Atty. Díaz-Saldaña the C-130 should have been serviced by Airport Aviation which had a contract in effect at the time with the Defense Department (Joint Exhibit I) and the required "fuel permit." As such, Mr. Deleo requested [*16] plaintiff to cease and desist, due to safety/security reasons, from interfering with another concessionaire (Airport Aviation) which was and still is duly authorized and with valid fuel permits to operate at the LMMIA. Thus, the concern as to this incident was one of security and/or safety of the operations at the LMMIA and nothing related to a conspiracy to limit trade and drive plaintiff out of business as it claims.

As to the portion of Exhibit 6 which contains a related email from Luis Varona of Airport Aviation to co-defendant Algarín, and as testified by Mr. Varona, the same also raises security concerns for plaintiff did not have the required fuel permit to fuel military planes. It also makes reference to the contract between Airport Aviation and the Department of Defense. (Joint Exhibit I).

Similarly plaintiff's attempt to introduce some sort of conspiracy as to the sale of aviation fuel at different prices to different businesses engaged in dispensing aircraft fuel at the LMMIA, failed to establish the concerted action to impose a higher price to plaintiff as part of a scheme to conspire and eliminate plaintiff's competition in the sale of aviation fuel. All that the evidence [*17] showed was that plaintiff's fuel was more expensive, reason for which some clients decided to acquire fuel from competing companies, such as Airport Aviation. An example being Roblex Aviation, whose owner, Mr. Roberto Rodríguez testified he no longer buys fuel from plaintiff as a business decision because Airport Aviation sells him the fuel for less and on time. As such, Roblex Aviation has $1,000.00 in savings per week.

Thus, no concerted action in restraint of trade or commerce was established. The mere allegation of a conspiracy between a third party gas/fuel company (i.e., Esso or Total) and defendants was undertaken with purpose of allowing defendants to become the dominant marketer of competitive sources of aviation fuel to military planes was merely a conclusory statement from plaintiff, without any showing or evidence from which it could be construed a scheme to monopolize or an exclusionary practice.

The factual allegations in support of plaintiff's claim that defendants established itself as a dominant marketer of aviation fuel in the LMMIA and that defendants were trying to monopolize the market at the LMMIA were contradicted by plaintiff's own evidence as to the existence [*18] of numerous other companies which compete in this same field both in the Verified Amended Complaint (Docket No. 121) and the testimonies of plaintiff's witnesses Atty. Díaz-Saldaña and his son Atty. Rodrigo Díaz-Muñoz, as to the existence of seven (7) other companies. See Havoco of America, Ltd. v. Shell Oil Co., 626 F.2d 549 (7th Cir. 1980) (conclusory evidence of a conspiracy being only the naked statement that one existed).

Moreover, as properly argued by defendants, the allegations of the Verified Amended Complaint nor the evidence presented at trial by plaintiff identified a market. No expert witness testimony was presented to place the Court in a position to define plaintiff's market and sales, the market defendants supposedly attempted to monopolize, the share of the participants of the market, the share of plaintiff and defendants or the other participants that could demonstrate to the Court there is a valid Sherman Act claim.

Furthermore, no evidence of threats, violence, intimidation, or force by defendant or its employees Matos and Algarín, in support of the alleged concerted action, was presented. The evidence (including the testimony of multiple witnesses) showed the employees [*19] of Airport Aviation just offered a copy of the contract to the pilots of the military planes in a polite manner in compliance with the obligations under the contract. (Joint Exhibit I). To the contrary, the evidence demonstrated through the testimony of Mr. Michael Santiago, supervisor of operations of Airport Aviation, that Mr. Díaz-Saldaña, on one instance, used obscene language against him and he (Mr. Santiago) felt threatened by Mr. Díaz-Saldaña while offering defendants' services to a military plane under the contract.

Plaintiff Díaz Aviation brought forth twenty one (21) witnesses, seven (7) exhibits and a Joint Exhibit to try to show the alleged conspiracy or the monopolization attempt to no avail. No evidence showed the alleged agreement by defendants with the Ports Authority or any other party to drive plaintiff out of business. Plaintiff's evidence just established that Airport Aviation secured a contract which is in effect until the year 2013 with a federal agency, Defense Logistics Agency, (Joint Exhibit I) which plaintiff previously had in 1998-2002. Plaintiff fails to recognize this valid contract at present and the evidence showed it sells fuel at a higher price than [*20] Airport Aviation under the contract which was obtained through procurement, competition and biding, to provide to the military fueling services at the most reasonable price available to the government. Plaintiff chose not to bid for said contract.

The witnesses and documents by plaintiff itself also demonstrate defendants were but attempting to inform to the captains of the military planes they had the contract with the Defense Department, were available to service their planes and honor the price in their contract, their obligation to be available and provide the fuel at said price. Ultimately, the decision from whom to buy the fuel was for the captain of the airplane.

A plaintiff alleging a conspiracy by defendants in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, must be able to show said defendants' actions were in agreement so as to damage its position in market and plaintiff has the burden of proving by preponderance of evidence that two or more companies (not the defendants as employees of the same company with each other) formed a common plan, scheme, or design to suppress actual competition in a relevant market, that they took steps in furtherance of that plan, and that those steps [*21] were designed to harm competition unreasonably. Sherman Anti-Trust Act, § 1, as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1. Computer Identics Corp. v. Southern Pacific Co., 756 F.2d 200 (1st Cir. 1985).

In Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502 (1911), the Highest Court stated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1, has been interpreted to proscribe only unreasonable restraints, and the accepted standard for testing whether a practice restrains trade in violation of § 1 is the rule of reason, pursuant to which the fact-finder weighs all of the circumstances of a case, including specific information about the relevant business and whether it has market power, as well as the restraint's history, nature, and anti-competitive or pro-competitive effect. The Court stated that only those restraints that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output are deemed unlawful per se.

There was no evidence whatsoever as to the above requirements showing that defendants agreed and/or conspired to engage in certain unreasonably anti-competitive activities in restraint of trade or commerce, in violation of Sherman Act § 1.

In evaluating these claims, [*22] one must keep in mind the special antitrust meaning of the terms "reasonable" and "unreasonable," a meaning that draws its content from the basic objectives of antitrust law's "rule of reason." The Supreme Court adopted the "rule of reason" in order to provide an intellectually, administratively, and legally satisfactory way to limit the Sherman Act's broad language, which, if taken literally, might forbid all agreements, good and bad, that were in any sense at all "in restraint of trade." See United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, 17 S.Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007 (1897); Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 60, 31 S.Ct. 502, 516, 55 L. Ed. 619 (1911).

Thus, the "rule of reason" limits the Act's literal words by forbidding only those arrangements the anticompetitive consequences of which outweigh their legitimate business justifications, 7 Areeda & Turner ¶ 1500 at 362-63, though certain anticompetitive practices, such as price fixing, so typically lack justification as to be per se unreasonable. 7 Areeda & Turner ¶ 1509.

"Anticompetitive", too, has a special meaning. It refers not to actions that merely injure individual competitors, that is, only plaintiff Díaz Aviation's [*23] business, but rather to actions that harm the competitive process. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 319-20, 328-34, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 1521, 1525-29, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962); see Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488-89, 97 S.Ct. 690, 697-98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). The law assesses both harms and benefits in light of the Act's basic objectives, the protection of a competitive process that brings to consumers the benefits of lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods. See Interface Group, Inc. v. Massachusetts Port Authority, 816 F.2d 9, 11-12 (1st Cir.1987); 7 Areeda & Turner ¶ 1502.

The practices and agreements that plaintiff has characterized as anti-competitive and a violation of anti-trust, were not per se unreasonable, for plaintiff should have shown that the likely anti-competitive effects of these practices outweighs the business and safety/security justifications, or at least that the defendants might achieve any legitimate business objectives in a significantly less restrictive way. 7 Areeda & Turner ¶ 1505b. See Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pipe Institute, 851 F.2d 478 (1st Cir. 1988).

In sum, no evidence was presented to show defendants requested [*24] or entered into any agreement with Ports Authority or any of its officers to evict plaintiff Díaz Aviation from its leased premises at the airport or to restrain trade of aviation fueling operations at the LMMIA.

As such, plaintiff has failed to prove a valid claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

B. SHERMAN ACT, SECTION 2, ATTEMPT TO MONOPOLIZE.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides:

> Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $1,000,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. 15 U.S.C. §2.

The Supreme Court has defined monopolistic power as the power to control prices or exclude competition. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966); United States v. E.I. du Pont De Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S.Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956).

To sustain a claim under section 2 of the Sherman [*25] Act, if such was the claim since the Amended Complaint nor the evidence presented particularized the grounds for plaintiff's claim under Sherman, that is, that defendants have attempted to monopolize the market for such item, plaintiff must succeed in linking defendants with both an intent to monopolize and a pattern of activity creating a dangerous probability of monopolization. See U.S. v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 393, 76 S.Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956); American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 785, 66 S.Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946); Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 396, 25 S.Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518 (1905).

To show monopolization in violation of Sherman Act, plaintiff must prove that defendant engaged in an act that helped create or maintain its alleged monopoly. Sherman Act; Fraser v. Major League Soccer, L.L.C., 284 F.3d 47 (1st Cir. 2002)

An intent to monopolize may be shown by direct evidence. United States v. Corn Products Ref. Co., 234 F. 964, 978 (S.D.N.Y.1916), appeal dismissed, 249 U.S. 621, 39 S. Ct. 291, 63 L. Ed. 805 (1919). The direct evidence of intent at most must show that defendant intended to eliminate plaintiff from the market. Intent may also be inferred from conduct, that is, indirect [*26] evidence. See, e.g., Union Leader Corp. v. Newspapers of New England, Inc., 180 F.Supp. 125, 140 (D.Mass.1959), aff'd in part, 284 F.2d 582 (1st Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 365 U.S. 833, 81 S. Ct. 747, 5 L. Ed. 2d 744 (1961).

The alleged conduct cannot be said either to have a potential dangerous probability of successful monopolization. See Syracuse Broadcasting Co. v. Newhouse, 236 F.2d 522, 526 (2d Cir. 1956); Keco Industries, Inc. v. Borg-Warner Corp., 334 F.Supp. 1240, 1245 (M.D.Pa.1971); United States v. Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc., 245 F.Supp. 737, 739 (E.D.N.Y.1965).

Plaintiff's presentation of evidence at trial completely lacked evidence to establish the following elements of a §2 monopolization or attempted monopolization claim: (1) the relevant product market, (2) the share of the market held by defendants; (3) strength of the competitors that compose the market; (4) potential barriers to entry into the market; (5) market trends: or (6) any other fact indicative that monopolization might be a success.

As above explained, no credible evidence was presented by plaintiff that defendants have attempted to monopolize the market for jet fuel. Plaintiff did not succeed in linking defendants (Airport Aviation, [*27] Matos or Algarín) with both an intent to monopolize and a pattern of activity creating a dangerous probability of monopolization. To the contrary, plaintiff's evidence at the trial showed, as explained above, there are several other companies in the business of aviation fuel dealing at the LMMIA, for which plaintiff has not proven a section 2 attempt-to-monopolize violation. See George R. Whitten, Jr., Inc. v. Paddock Pool Builders, Inc., 508 F.2d 547 (1st Cir. 1974).

Thus, no violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act was established.

B. PENDENT STATE TORT CLAIM UNDER ARTICLE 1802.

Plaintiff Díaz Aviation seemly presented a supplemental claim under state tort even though no specific allegations of negligent acts or omissions were included in the Verified Amended Complaint but just a mention of Article 1803 in the paragraph of "Jurisdiction". (Docket No. 121, p. 1).

Article 1802 of Puerto Rico's Civil Code, 31 P.R. Laws Ann. § 5141, provides for a right of action stemming from a person's negligence. Section 1802 provides that "[a] person who by an act or omission causes damage to another party through fault or negligence shall be obliged to repair the damage so done." 31 P.R. Laws Ann. § 5141.

Tort [*28] actions arise when there has been a violation of a right or an omission of a duty required by law. Under art. 1802 of the Civil Code of Puerto Rico, 31 L.P.R.A. § 5141, the person who, through fault or negligence, causes damage to another shall be obliged to repair the damage so done. Thereunder, an injured party has the right to recover for the damages actually suffered and for lost profit. Zeno v. Vázquez Rosario, 6 P.R. Offic. Trans. 462, 106 D.P.R. 324, 326-29 (1977) (torts); Pérez v. Sampedro, 86 P.R.R. 498, 86 D.P.R. 526, 530 (1962) (contracts). The goal in damages actions is to put the injured party as nearly as possible where he would have been had the breach not occurred. Cappalli, Tort Damages in Puerto Rico, 46 Rev.Jur.U.P.R. 241, 242 (1977); I-II J. Puig Brutau, Fundamentos de Derecho Civil 512 (1976).

First, first there must be an action or breach of duty from which recovery follows. However, evidence of any torts action (as a result of negligence, acts or omission by defendants) claimed under P.R. Civil Code Section 1802 as to the corporation Díaz Aviation or defendants AAS, Algarín or Matos was not presented or established at trial as to any act or breach that defendants undertook and from which the damages, [*29] had they been established or proven, may be recovered. Moreover, no credible evidence of causation or reliable evidence of damages was presented.

The attempt to establish damages to plaintiff's business with the testimonies in a vacuum of Atty. Díaz-Saldaña and his son, Atty. Rodrigo Díaz-Muñoz, without any expert witness and/or documentary evidence in support thereof (i.e., financial statements, income tax returns, invoices, evidence of sales and loss of profit, among others) was unsuccessful and unreliable. The assertions of Atty. Díaz-Saldaña and Díaz-Muñoz were conclusory with minimal factual basis in support thereof and considered self-serving.

As such, plaintiff has failed to prove a claim for damages under Article 1802.

CONCLUSION

In view of the above, the oral motion for non-suit under Fed.R.Civ.P. 52 by defendants Airport Aviation, Algarín and Matos is GRANTED. All remaining claims under the Sherman Act and Article 1802 of the Puerto Rico Civil Code are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. [6]

Judgment [*30] to be entered accordingly.

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION AND ORDER

SPATT, District Judge.

This case arises from the recall by Abbott Laboratories, Inc. ("Abbott" or "the Defendant") of five million containers of its Similac brand infant powder formula that were potentially contaminated with beetle parts and larvae, which could cause gastrointestinal discomfort and refusal to eat. The plaintiffs allege that Abbott engaged in unfair and deceptive practices by misrepresenting the safety of Similac and failing to timely warn consumers of the dangers associated with the contaminated product in violation of the consumer protection statutes in New York, Texas, Ohio, and New Hampshire.

Presently before the Court is a motion by Abbott for judgment on the pleadings and a motion by the plaintiffs to amend the complaint. For the reasons set forth below, the Court grants in part and denies in part both motions.

I. BACKGROUND

Abbott Laboratories, Inc. formulates, [*2] designs, manufactures, markets, advertises, distributes, and sells infant powder formulas under the brand name Similac. In September 2010, during an internal quality review at its Sturgis, Michigan facility ("the Sturgis Facility"), Abbott detected the presence of a common warehouse beetle and its larvae in its powdered formula. Subsequently, on September 20, 2010, Abbott notified the United States Food and Drug Administration ("FDA"), which determined that "while the formula containing these beetles poses no long-term health problems, there is a possibility that infants who consume formula containing the beetles or their larvae could experience gastrointestinal discomfort and refusal to eat as a result of small insect parts irritating the GI tract". (FDA Press Release, September 27, 2010, Knobler Decl. in Support of Abbott's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings, Ex. B.) As a result, on September 22, 2010, Abbott recalled five million containers of Similac infant formula products ("the Recall" or "the Recall program"). The details of the Recall program were set forth in the Declaration of Laurie Boogard filed in a related case, Vavak v. Abbott Laboratories, Inc., No. SACV-10-1995-JVS, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111408 (CD. Cal.) [*3] , and submitted to this Court as an attachment to Abbott's June 28, 2011 Notice of Supplemental Authority (Docket Entry # 19).

The plaintiffs in this case are: Shelley A. Leonard, a resident and citizen of the State of New York ("the New York Plaintiff); residents and citizens of the State of Texas Esther Alexander, Bridgett Herrera, and Velicia Mata ("the Texas Plaintiffs"); LeRon Davis, a resident and citizen of the State of Ohio ("the Ohio Plaintiff); and Ashley Sullivan, a resident and citizen of New Hampshire ("the New Hampshire Plaintiff and collectively "the Plaintiffs"). According to the Plaintiffs, they each purchased the recalled formula during an undefined "relevant time period", rather than purchasing a less expensive alternative, based on various statements by Abbott that indicated that Similac was safe for consumption by infants. The Plaintiffs also allege that their infant children became ill after consuming the contaminated Similac formula.

On October 10, 2010, the Plaintiffs commenced this action against Abbott in their individual capacity, as parents and natural guardians of their minor children, and as representatives of putative classes of similarly situated [*4] individuals from their respective states. In the complaint, and the amended class action complaint filed on December 2, 2010, the Plaintiffs seek declaratory, injunctive, and monetary relief based on Abbott's alleged unfair and deceptive acts and practices in misrepresenting that Similac was "safe for the consumption by infants" and failing to warn consumers or recall the contaminated formula sooner, in violation of: (1) New York General Business Law § 349 ("NYCPA"); (2) the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act ("TDTPA"), Tex. Code. Bus. & Com. § 17.41, et. seq.; (3) the Ohio Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("ODTPA"), Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 4165, et. seq., and Uniform Consumer Sales Practices Act ("OCSPA" and together with the ODTPA the "Ohio statutes"), Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1345, et. seq.; and (4) the New Hampshire Consumer Protection Act ("NHCPA"), N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 358-A, et. seq. (collectively the "consumer protection statutes").

On March 15, 2011, Abbott filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings seeking the dismissal of the Plaintiffs' claims under the consumer protection statutes and the cause of action seeking injunctive relief for failure to [*5] state a claim. In addition, Abbott also sought dismissal of: (1) any claim predicated on Abbot's representation that it is "dedicated to . . . complying with all applicable laws and regulations in the countries where [it] do[es] business" (Am. Compl., ¶ 24), or its failure to comply with certain federal laws, as preempted by federal law; (2) any class claim under the Ohio Uniform Consumer Sales Practices Act because the statute does not permit a class action under the circumstances alleged; (3) any claim under the Ohio Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act because the statute does not confer standing on a consumer; and (4) any claim under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act because the Plaintiffs failed to provide the requisite notice under the statute.

On September 21, 2011, the Plaintiffs moved to amend their complaint to: (1) include Kristie Pagan in the caption of this matter as a party plaintiff and potential representative of the putative New York class; (2) remove plaintiff Shelly

A. Leonard from the caption in this matter and dismiss her claims without prejudice with leave to renew her individual claims or any claims on behalf of her infant/child in the [*6] event the Court certifies a class under Federal of Civil Procedure 23; (3) include additional factual contentions "clarifying and amplifying the false, misleading, fraudulent and deceptive business practices employed by [the Defendant]" (Pl.'s Br. at 1); and (4) to remove the allegation expressly waiving the New York Plaintiffs' right to seek punitive damages under New York General Business Law § 349. Attached to the Plaintiffs' motion to amend was a proposed second amended complaint containing these changes.

Subsequently, on January 20, 2012, the Court directed the parties to submit supplemental briefing on whether the Recall program instituted by Abbott mooted the Plaintiffs' claims under the consumer protection statutes, which was an issue raised by Abbott in opposition to the motion to amend.

The Court addresses the two motions below. However, because an analysis of the Defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings is intertwined with an analysis of the Plaintiffs' motion to amend to add factual allegations, the Court will frame its analysis around the Plaintiffs' motion to amend. Thus, the Court addresses the legal arguments asserted in the Defendant's motion for judgment on [*7] the pleadings in conjunction with the motion to amend futility analysis.

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Motion to Amend

On February 18, 2011, United States Magistrate Judge William D. Wall issued a scheduling order, setting a September 2, 2011 deadline for joining new parties and amending the pleadings. Although the parties subsequently agreed to changes to the discovery cut-off deadlines, the deadline for joining new parties and amending the pleadings remained as September 2, 2011. Contrary to the Plaintiffs contention, an extension to the discovery deadlines does not automatically extend the deadline to join new parties or amend the pleadings. The Plaintiffs' instant motion to amend was filed on September 15, 2011, almost two weeks after the deadline set in the scheduling order. As such, the Court must consider Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b) ("Rule 16"), which "may limit the ability of a party to amend a pleading if the deadline specified in the scheduling order for amendment of the pleadings has passed." Kassner v. 2nd Avenue Delicatessen, Inc., 496 F.3d 229, 243 (2d Cir. 2007); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(4) ("A schedule may be modified only for good cause and with the judge's consent.").

"Where a scheduling [*8] order has been entered, the lenient standard under Rule 15(a), which provides leave to amend 'shall be freely given,' must be balanced against the requirement under Rule 16(b) that the Court's scheduling order 'shall not be modified except upon a showing of good cause.'" Grochowski v. Phoenix Construction, 318 F.3d 80, 86 (2d Cir. 2003) (quoting older versions of Rule 15(a) and Rule 16(b)). "[A] finding of 'good cause' depends on the diligence of the moving party." Parker v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 204 F.3d 326, 340 (2d Cir. 2000). To satisfy the good cause standard "the party must show that, despite its having exercised diligence, the applicable deadline could not have been reasonably met." *Sokol Holdings, Inc. v. BMB Munai, Inc. No. 05-CV-3749, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72659, 2009 WL 2524611, at 7 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 14, 2009) (citing Rent-A-Center Inc. v. 47 Mamaroneck Ave. Corp., 215 F.R.D. 100, 104 (S.D.N.Y. 2003)). However, the good cause standard is not satisfied when the proposed amendment rests on information "that the party knew, or should have known, in advance of the deadline." Id. (collecting cases).

If a court finds that good cause for extending the deadline exists, a party still has the burden to show [*9] that the proposed amendment is permissible under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 15 ("Rule 15"). Rule 15(a)(2) provides that "a party may amend its pleading only with the opposing party's written consent or the court' leave" and that "[t]he court should freely give leave when justice so requires." A court should deny leave to amend only upon "undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the [moving party], repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the [non-moving party,] . . . [or] futility." Foman v. Davis, 371

U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L.Ed. 2d 222 (1962); see also Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co v. Aniero Concrete Co., Inc., 404 F.3d 566, 603-04 (2d Cir. 2005). Amendments are generally favored because "they tend to facilitate a proper decision on the merits." Blaskiewicz v. Cnty of Suffolk. 29 F. Supp. 2d 134, 137 (E.D.N.Y. 1998). However, it is ultimately "within the sound discretion of the court whether to grant leave to amend." John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Amerford Int'l Corp., 22 F.3d 458, 462 (2d Cir. 1994) (citing Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L.Ed.2d 222 (1962)). Finally, the party opposing an amendment [*10] has the burden of proving that leave to amend would be prejudicial. See Blaskiewicz, 29 F. Supp. 2d at 137-38.

B. Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings and Futility

The Defendant has moved for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) ("Rule 12(c)"). In general, "the standard for addressing a Rule 12(c) motion for judgment on the pleadings is the same as that for a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim." Cleveland v. Caplaw Enters., 448 F.3d 518, 521 (2d Cir. 2006). In addition, the Defendant contends that the Court should deny the Plaintiffs leave to amend the complaint because the proposed amendments would be futile. As with a Rule 12(c) motion, a proposed amendment is futile if the proposed claim could not withstand a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. Lucente v. IBM Corp., 310 F.3d 243, 258 (2d Cir. 2002). The Court therefore applies the Rule 12(b)(6) standard in deciding the Defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings and in assessing the futility of the proposed second amended complaint.

Under the now well-established Twombly standard, a complaint should be dismissed only if it does not contain enough allegations of fact [*11] to state a claim for relief that is "plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly. 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929. 570. 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1974, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The Second Circuit has explained that, after Twombly, the Court's inquiry under Rule 12(b)(6) is guided by two principles. Harris v. Mills, 572 F.3d 66 (2d Cir. 2009) (citing Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868. 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009)).

"First, although 'a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint,' that 'tenet' 'is inapplicable to legal conclusions,' and '[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice.'" Id. at 72 (quoting Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949). "'Second, only a complaint that states a plausible claim for relief survives a motion to dismiss' and '[d]etermining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will . . . be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense.'" Id. (quoting Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950). Thus, "[w]hen there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and . . . determine whether they [*12] plausibly give rise to an entitlement of relief." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950.

In considering a motion to dismiss, this Court accepts as true the factual allegations set forth in the complaint and draws all reasonable inferences in the Plaintiffs' favor. Zinermon v. Burch, 494 U.S. 113, 118, 110 S. Ct. 975, 979, 108 L. Ed. 2d 100 (1990); In re NYSE Specialists Sees. Litig., 503 F.3d 89, 91 (2d Cir. 2007). Only if this Court is satisfied that "the complaint cannot state any set of facts that would entitle the plaintiff to relief" will it grant dismissal pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). Hertz Corp. v. City of New York. 1 F.3d 121, 125 (2d Cir. 1993). The issue on a motion to dismiss is "not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 198 (2d Cir. 2001) (quoting Scheuer v. Rhodes. 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974)).

In addition, in deciding Abbott's motion, the Court considers a number of documents submitted by the parties that are incorporated by reference in the complaint. Furthermore, the Court considers the documents attached to the parties supplemental briefing [*13] on the issue of mootness only with respect to that issue, and not with regard to the sufficiency of the allegations in the Plaintiffs' amended complaint or proposed second amended complaint.

III. APPLICATION

The Plaintiffs seek to amend their complaint to: (1) remove plaintiff Shelly A. Leonard from the caption in this matter and dismiss her claims without prejudice with leave to renew her individual claims or any claims on behalf of her infant/child in the event the Court certifies a class under Federal of Civil Procedure 23 ("Rule 23"); (2) include Kristie Pagan in the caption of this matter as a party plaintiff and potential representative of the putative New York class; (3) remove the allegation expressly waiving the New York Plaintiffs' right to seek punitive damages under the NYCPA; and (4) include additional factual contentions "clarifying and amplifying the false, misleading, fraudulent and deceptive business practices employed by [the Defendant]" (Pl.'s MTA Br. at 1). The Court addresses each of these proposed amendments separately below. Furthermore, as previously stated, the Court addresses the Defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings in conjunction with the Plaintiffs' [*14] motion to amend to add factual allegations.

A. As to the Plaintiffs' Motion for an Order Permitting Leonard to Voluntarily Dismiss Her Claims Without Prejudice

In the motion to amend, the Plaintiffs seek an order permitting Shelly A. Leonard, named plaintiff of the New York putative class, to voluntarily dismiss her claims without prejudice and with leave to renew her claims in the event the Court certifies the putative class. The basis for this request is that Leonard is an attorney at Blau, Brown & Leonard LLC, the law firm representing the Plaintiffs, and therefore "she cannot serve as a class representative, due to inherent conflicts of interest". (Pls.' MTA Br. at 7-8.) Because the Defendant has filed an answer in this action, the Plaintiffs' motion is properly classified as a motion for dismissal by court order pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 41(a)(2) ("Rule 41(a)(2)").

"Rule 41(a)(2) provides that except where all parties agree to a stipulation of dismissal, 'an action shall not be dismissed at the plaintiffs instance save upon order of the court and upon such terms and conditions as the court deems proper.'" Catanzano v. Wing, 277 F.3d 99, 109 (2d Cir. 2001) (quoting [*15] Rule 41 (a)(2)). In deciding whether to grant a motion for voluntary dismissal without prejudice, courts consider: "(I) the plaintiff's diligence in bringing the motion; (2) any 'undue vexatiousness' on plaintiff's part; (3) the extent to which the suit has progressed, including the defendant's effort and expense in preparation for trial; (4) the duplicative expense of relitigation; and (5) the adequacy of plaintiff's explanation for the need to dismiss." Id. at 109-10 (quoting Zagano v. Fordham Univ., 900 F.2d 12, 14 (2d Cir. 1990)).

Here, the Defendant does not contend that the Plaintiffs have acted with "undue vexatiousness" or that there is a risk of incurring the duplicative expense associated with a dismissed plaintiff commencing a second action. Accordingly, those factors support the Plaintiffs' motion. Rather, the Defendant contends that the Court should deny the motion because: (1) the Plaintiffs should have been aware from the time they commenced this action that Leonard was conflicted from serving as a class representative; (2) although Leonard has not been deposed, Abbott has incurred costs in preparing for her deposition, which was cancelled the day before it was supposed [*16] to take place; and (3) the Plaintiffs' explanation for the delay is inadequate because they disingenuously state that Leonard commenced this action in her individual capacity. The Court agrees with the Defendant that the Plaintiffs have offered a wholly insufficient excuse for their delay in moving to dismiss Leonard's claims in her capacity as a named plaintiff.

The Plaintiffs state that "Ms. Leonard rightfully determined to become a plaintiff in this action, in her individual capacity and as parent and natural guardian of her infant-child". (Pls.' MTA Br. at 7.) However, both the initial and amended complaints were characterized as "class action complaints" and include class allegations and a cause of action on behalf the "New York Class". The Court's jurisdiction in this action is premised on the Class Action Fairness Act. Indeed, given that she is asserting a state law claim and her individual damages are below the $75,000 threshold, Leonard could not have commenced this action in federal court without a good faith belief that it could be certified as a class action. Although it is a fact specific inquiry as to whether an employment relationship between a class representative and [*17] class counsel will constitute an insurmountable conflict, see In re Metlife Demutualization Litig., 229 F.R.D. 369, 376 (E.D.N.Y. 2005) ("Courts in this circuit have refused to certify cases involving a potential conflict of interest where attorneys sought to serve as both a class representative and counsel,

. . . Nevertheless, no bright line rule exists covering these kinds of employee/plaintiff to employer/class counsel relationships.") (citing Brick v. CPC Int'l, Inc., 547 F.2d 185, 186 (2d Cir. 1976), the Plaintiffs concede that there is an "inherent conflict[] of interest", and do not argue that their delay resulted from a mistaken belief that Leonard was qualified to represent the class. In contrast to a situation where a named plaintiff seeks to withdraw because facts revealed during discovery indicate that he or she has a conflict with the class, this conflict was known at the time the complaint was filed. Finally, Leonard, as an attorney, is not an innocent bystander to the errors of her counsel.

Nevertheless, the Court is mindful of the Second Circuit's guidance that "[g]enerally, . . . a voluntary dismissal without prejudice under Rule 41 (a)(2) will be allowed if the defendant [*18] will not be prejudiced thereby". Catanzano, 277 F.3d at 109 (internal quotation marks omitted). While the Defendant expended resources in preparation for Leonard's deposition, this does not rise to the level of prejudice sufficient to preclude a plaintiff from withdrawing a claim without prejudice. Accordingly, the Court grants the Plaintiffs' motion to voluntarily withdraw Leonard's individual claims without prejudice solely to her right to participate in the class in the event it is certified.

B. As to the Plaintiffs' Motion to Permit Pagan to Intervene as a Named Plaintiff and Putative New York Class Representative

Generally, the dismissal of the named plaintiff's claims before a motion for class certification has been filed would result in the dismissal of the complaint, or, in this case, the putative New York class' NYCPA cause of action. See Bowens v. Atl. Maint. Corp., 546 F. Supp. 2d 55, 76 (E.D.N.Y. 2008) ("The unnamed class members are not technically part of the action until the court has certified the class; therefore, once the named plaintiffs' claims are dismissed, there is no one who has a justiciable claim that may be asserted."); see also Phillips v. Ford Motor Co., 435 F.3d 785, 787 (7th Cir. 2006) [*19] ("Strictly speaking, if no motion to certify has been filed (perhaps if it has been filed but not acted on), the case is not yet a class action and so a dismissal of the named plaintiffs' claims should end the case."). In order to avoid this result, the Plaintiffs seek to add Kristie Pagan as a named plaintiff and potential representative of the putative New York class. The Plaintiffs contend that they did not engage in undue delay in seeking to add Pagan because she only retained the Plaintiffs' counsel on September 6, 2011, and they filed the instant motion nine days later.

Under Rule 20(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("Rule 20(a)"), "[a]ll persons may join in one action as plaintiff if they assert any right to relief. . . arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all these persons will arise in the action." Rule 20(a) should be liberally interpreted to "enable the court to promote judicial economy by permitting all reasonably related claims for relief by or against different parties to be tried in a single proceeding." *A.I.A. Holdings, S.A. v. Lehman Brothers, Inc., No. 97-CV-4978, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4175, 1998 WL 159059, at 5 (S.D.N.Y. April 1, 1998) [*20] (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

In addition, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 21 ("Rule 21") provides that "[o]n motion or on its own, the court may at any time, on just terms, add or drop a party." Fed. R. Civ. P. 21; see Garcia v. Pancho Villa's Huntington Vill., Inc., 268 F.R.D. 160, 165 (E.D.N.Y. 2010) (citing Duling v. Gristede's Operating Corp., 265 F.R.D. 91 (S.D.N.Y. 2010)); see also City of Syracuse v. Onondaga County, 464 F.3d 297, 308 (2d Cir. 2006). Rule 21 grants the court broad discretion to permit the addition of a party at any stage in the litigation. *Sullivan v. West New York Residential, Inc., No. 01-CV-7847. 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6498, 2003 WL 21056888, at 1 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 5, 2003).

Here, it is not the intervention of Pagan herself that the Defendant's oppose, but the intervention of any plaintiff that could continue to litigate this case on behalf of the New York putative class. The Plaintiffs lack of diligence in seeking to substitute a named plaintiff for the putative New York class prior to the deadline set in the scheduling order supports the Defendant's position.

However, at this stage in the litigation, before the Plaintiffs have moved for class certification and where [*21] the parties have only engaged in limited discovery, the Defendant would not be prejudiced by the intervention. By contrast, Pagan, as well as the putative New York class would be severely prejudiced by the dismissal of their NYCPA claims. As a result, the Court finds that the interests of justice as well as judicial economy weigh in favor of permitting Pagan to intervene, and therefore grants the Plaintiffs' motion to amend the complaint to add Pagan (hereinafter "the New York Plaintiff") as a named plaintiff and the representative of the putative New York class.

C. As to the Plaintiffs' Motion to Amend the Complaint to Remove the Express Waiver of the New York Plaintiffs' Right to Seek Punitive Damages under the NYCPA

Under the NYCPA, the treble damages available for willful and knowing misconduct are commonly referred to as a type of "limited punitive damages". Karlin v. IVF America, Inc., 93 N.Y.2d 282, 291, 690 N.Y.S.2d 495, 499, 712 N.E.2d 662, 666 (N.Y. 1999). This is because punitive damages above and beyond the trebling of actual damages are not an available remedy under the statute. See Mayline Enters., Inc. v. Milea Truck Sales Corp.. 641 F. Supp. 2d 304, 310 (S.D.N.Y. 2009).

In [*22] the amended complaint, the New York Plaintiff explicitly waived her entitlement to punitive damages under the NYCPA. (See Am. Compl., ¶ 72 ("ABBOTT is liable to plaintiff and members of the class for compensatory damages. Plaintiff expressly waives punitive damages available under New York General Business Law § 349, et. seq.").) In the proposed second amended complaint, the underlined sentence is surreptitiously removed. (See PSAC, ¶ 95 ("ABBOTT is liable to plaintiff and members of the class for all damages and relief available under New York General Law, § 349, et. seq.").). The Court says "surreptitiously" because, in identifying the proposed changes for the Court, the Plaintiffs fail to mention that the proposed second amended complaint asserts a claim for relief previously waived in the amended complaint. In fact, the Plaintiffs explicitly state that "[t]he averments in the proposed Second Amended Complaint do not change any legal theories of liability . . . ." (Pls.' MTA Br. at 5 (emphasis added).)

As a result of this proposed amendment, the Defendant's potential liability to a New York class would increase threefold. While increased exposure is not equivalent to the type of [*23] prejudice required to preclude an amendment, the enormity of this change highlights why the Court finds it problematic that the Plaintiffs failed to bring it to the attention of the Court.

Furthermore, the Plaintiffs failed to avail themselves of the opportunity in either their moving brief, or their reply brief, to explain to the Court why they delayed in amending the complaint to remove the punitive damages waiver. Nor could the Court conceive of any valid reason for the delay. In the amended complaint, based on the same set of factual allegations, the Texas Plaintiffs seek treble damages under the Texas statute on the ground that Abbott's "omissions and commissions" were "intentional, willful and with knowledge". (Am. Compl., ¶ 106.) This is the same standard the Plaintiffs must meet to obtain treble damages under the New York statute. See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(h). Thus, it would be disingenuous for the Plaintiffs to assert that they learned of the facts supporting a claim for punitive damages under the NYCPA during the course of discovery.

Although the Court has the discretion to permit an untimely amendment where, as here, the Defendant will not be prejudiced, the Court finds [*24] that exercising its discretion in this instance is unwarranted. Not only have the Plaintiffs failed to provide any explanation for their lack of diligence and delay, but their conduct in not highlighting this substantial change to the Court or addressing it in their reply brief is of concern to the Court. Thus, the Court denies the Plaintiffs' motion to amend the complaint to the extent they seek to assert a claim for punitive damages under the NYCPA.

D. As to the Defendant's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings and the Plaintiffs' Motion to Amend the Complaint to Add Factual Allegations

The Plaintiffs seek to amend the complaint to add additional factual allegations "clarifying and amplifying the false, misleading, fraudulent and deceptive business practices employed by [the Defendant]". (Pl.'s MTA Br. at 1.) The majority of these allegations relate to Abbott's knowledge of an insect infestation problem at its' Sturgis Facility from 2007 to 2010; its' negligence in maintaining its facility to prevent the insects from contaminating the products; and its' knowledge of 238 complaints between January 2010 and August 2010 about the presence of insect parts in the Similac produced at the [*25] Sturgis Facility.

As an initial matter, as with the Plaintiffs' motion to remove the punitive damages waiver, the Plaintiffs have failed to meet their burden of showing good cause for their undue delay, and the Defendant has failed to meet its burden of showing it would be prejudiced by the proposed amendments. However, unlike the removal of the punitive damages waiver, there is no evidence of untoward conduct on the part of the Plaintiffs, and therefore the Court finds that the balance of these factors weighs in favor of permitting the amendments. See Kassner v. 2nd Avenue Delicatessen Inc., 496 F.3d 229, 244 (2d Cir. 2007) ("The district court, in the exercise of its discretion under Rule 16(b), also may consider other relevant factors including, in particular, whether allowing the amendment of the pleading at this stage of the litigation will prejudice defendants."). Thus, the Court's analysis focuses on the futility of permitting the Plaintiffs to amend the complaint.

In opposing the Plaintiffs' motion to amend, the Defendant argues that the proposed amendments are futile because the proposed second amended complaint does not cure any of the defects that warrant the dismissal of [*26] the amended complaint. In particular, the Defendant contends that the Court should dismiss the amended complaint and deny the Plaintiffs leave to file the proposed second amended complaint because: (1) the Ohio Plaintiff, as a consumer and representative of a putative class, cannot state a claim under the Ohio statutes; (2) the Texas Plaintiffs have failed to comply with the TDTPA notice requirement; (3) the Plaintiffs have failed to plead violations of the consumer protection statutes with particularity in either their amended complaint or their proposed second amended complaint; and (4) the Recall program mooted the Plaintiffs claims under the state consumer statutes. The Court addresses each of these arguments in turn below.

1. Whether the Ohio Statutes Bar the Plaintiffs Consumer Class Action Complaint

The Ohio Plaintiff brings an action under the Ohio Consumer Sales Practices Act and the Ohio Deceptive Trade Practices Act, on behalf of herself and a putative Ohio subclass. The Defendant seeks dismissal of the OCSPA cause of action for failure to state a claim because the Ohio Plaintiff failed to plead that she satisfied the notice requirement that serves as a prerequisite to bringing [*27] a class action under the statute. With respect to the claims under the ODTPA, the Defendant contends that, because the Ohio Plaintiff is a consumer and not a competitor, she lacks standing and therefore the claim should be dismissed. The Court addresses the viability of the Ohio Plaintiff's claims under each statute separately.

a. OCSPA

The OCSPA provides that claims for violations of the OCSPA may not be brought "in a class action", unless the purported violation was either: (1) "an act or practice declared to be deceptive or unconscionable by a rule adopted [by the Attorney General] before the consumer transaction on which the action is based" or (2) "an act or practice determined by [an Ohio state court] to violate [the OCSPA] and committed after the decision containing the determination has been made available for public inspection . . . " Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1345.09(B) ("section 1345.09(B)"); Volbers-Klarich v. Middletown Mgmt., Inc., 125 Ohio St. 3d 494, 501-02, 2010 Ohio 2057, 929 N.E.2d 434, 4411 (Ohio 2010).

The Ohio Plaintiff does not argue that, if given the opportunity, she could meet the requisite pleading requirement of section 1345.09(B) by alleging that Abbott's conduct was previously [*28] declared deceptive or unconscionable in an administrative rule or judicial decision by the Ohio state court. Rather, the Plaintiff argues that the Supreme Court's decision in Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 1431, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 (2010) abrogates the OCSPA's prohibition against class actions unless the notice requirements in section 1345.09(B) are met. The Court disagrees.

In Shady Grove, the Supreme Court addressed whether Rule 23 governing class actions conflicted with New York Civil Practice Law § 901(b) ("section 901(b)"), which precludes class actions seeking penalties or statutory minimum damages. The plaintiff in Shady Grove had filed a putative class action in federal court premised on diversity jurisdiction, seeking to recover unpaid statutory interest under New York Insurance Law § 5106(a). 130 S. Ct. at 1436. Under New York law, statutory interest is a penalty, and therefore pursuant to section 901 (b), the plaintiff's claim would have been barred if he had brought it in New York state court. The district court dismissed the complaint for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction on the ground that section 901 (b) prohibited the [*29] proposed class action. Id. at 1437. In affirming the district court, the Second Circuit held that: (I) Rule 23 and section 901(b) did not conflict and (2) that section 901 (b) was "substantive" and must be applied by federal courts sitting in diversity. Id. In a 5-4 decision, the Supreme Court reversed.

Justice Scalia delivered the opinion of the Court with respect to Parts I and II-A. The Court set out the "familiar" framework for determining when to apply a federal rule that appears to conflict with a state law. First, the court must determine "whether Rule 23 answers the question in dispute." Id. If it does, then Rule 23 applies "unless it exceeds statutory authorization or Congress's rulemaking power." Id.

Applying this framework, a majority of the Court agreed that Rule 23 "creates a categorical rule entitling a plaintiff whose suit meets the specified criteria to pursue his claim as a class action" and the New York procedural statute "flatly contradict [ed]" Rule 23. Id. at 1438, 1441. The Court concluded that a conflicting state class action provision could apply in a diversity suit only if "Rule 23 is ultra vires," or outside the scope of the Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2071, et. seq. [*30] Id. at 1437.

In Part II-B, Justice Scalia, writing on behalf of himself and three other justices ("the plurality opinion"), noted that a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure is within the Rules Enabling Act if the Rule is procedural in nature, meaning that it "governs only the manner and the means by which the litigants' rights are enforced". Id. at 1442 (internal quotation marks omitted). Justice Scalia concluded that Rule 23 "really regulate[s] procedure" and therefore falls within the Rules Enabling Act because it "merely enables a federal court to adjudicate claims of multiple parties at once, instead of in separate suits" and "it leaves the parties' legal rights and duties intact and the rules of decision unchanged." Id. at 1442-43 (internal quotation marks omitted). In addition, Justice Scalia stated that, for Rules Enabling Act purposes, "the substantive nature of New York's law, or its substantive purpose, makes no difference". Id. at 1444 (emphasis in original).

Justice Stevens concurred in the narrow holding that Rule 23 and section 901(b) conflict, but wrote a separate opinion addressing whether Rule 23 violates the Rules Enabling Act as applied to New York law. See id. at 1448 [*31] (Stevens, J. concurring in part and concurring in judgment) (the "concurring opinion"). In contrast to the plurality opinion that categorically held that Rule 23 complied with the Rules Enabling Act, Justice Stevens agreed with the four justice dissent that "that there are some state procedural rules that federal courts must apply in diversity cases because they function as a part of the State's definition of substantive rights and remedies". Id. Specifically, Justice Stevens held that "[a] federal rule . . . cannot govern a particular case in which the rule would displace a state law that is procedural in the ordinary use of the terra but is so intertwined with a state right or remedy that it functions to define the scope of the state-created right." Id. at 1452. To avoid such a result, Justice Stevens concluded that, "[w]hen a federal rule appears to abridge, enlarge, or modify a substantive right, federal courts must consider whether the rule can reasonably be interpreted to avoid that impermissible result." Id.

The Plaintiffs argue that the restrictions on class actions under section 1345.09(B) of the OCSPA are not applicable in federal court after Shady Grove because the restriction [*32] conflicts with Rule 23. Specifically, the Plaintiffs contend that the plurality opinion is the controlling opinion, and therefore Shady Grove stands for the proposition that any state law restricting class actions in federal court is invalid.

"'When a fragmented Court decides a case and no single rationale explaining the result enjoys the assent of five Justices, the holding of the Court may be viewed as that position taken by those Members who concurred in the judgments on the narrowest grounds.'" United States v. Alcan Aluminum Corp., 315 F.3d 179, 189 (2d Cir. 2003) (quoting Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S. Ct. 990, 51 L. Ed. 2d 260 (1977)) (internal quotation marks omitted). "This rule is not a carte blanche; it only applies 'in instances where one opinion can meaningfully be regarded as "narrower" than another . . . that is to say, only when that narrow opinion is the common denominator representing the position approved by at least five justices.'" In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 812 F. Supp. 2d 390, 2011 WL 2848195, at *18 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (quoting Alcan Aluminum Corp., 315 F.3d at 189).

The Second Circuit has yet to directly address whether Justice Steven's [*33] concurrence is the controlling opinion. See Retained Realty, Inc. v. McCabe, 376 F. App'x 52, 55 (2d Cir. 2010) (noting that the decision in Shady Grove "does not set forth a single test for whether a Federal Rule is procedural and thus consonant with the Rules Enabling Act", but that it was unnecessary to determine whether the plurality opinion or concurring opinion controlled because "[u]nder either of these tests, [they] find that Rule 54(b), like every other Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ever examined by the Supreme Court, is procedural"). However, the Court agrees with the majority of district and circuit courts that have found Justice Stevens concurring opinion was on the "narrowest grounds", and therefore is the controlling opinion. This is because "although he found Rule 23 to conflict with § 901(b) along with the plurality, Justice Stevens' Rules Enabling Act analysis called for an analysis of the state's substantive rights and remedies that was consistent with approach of the four members of the dissent." In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 756 F. Supp. 2d 670, 675 (E.D. Pa. 201 0); see James River Ins. Co. v. Rapid Funding, LLC, 658 F.3d 1207, 1217 (10th Cir. 2011) ("Justice [*34] Stevens concurred, and the Tenth Circuit has understood his concurrence to be the controlling opinion in Shady Grove." (citing Garman v. Campbell Cnty. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 630 F.3d 977, 983 n. 6 (10th Cir. 2010)); Godin v. Schencks, 629 F.3d 79, 84 (1st Cir. 2010) (relying on Justice Steven's concurrence in holding that "[b]ecause Section 556 is 'so intertwined with a state right or remedy that it functions to define the scope of the state-created right,' it cannot be displaced by Rule 12(b)(6) or Rule 56". (quoting Shady Grove. 130 S. Ct. at 1452 (Stevens, J., concurring)); In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 812 F. Supp. 2d 390, 2011 WL 2848195, at * 18; In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., 779 F. Supp. 2d 642, 660 (E.D. Mich. 2011) ("Courts interpreting the Shady Grove decision ... have concluded that Justice Stevens' concurrence is the controlling opinion by which interpreting courts are bound."); Bearden v. Honeywell Int'l. Inc., No. 09-CV-1035, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83996, 2010 WL 3239285, at * 10 (M.D. Tenn. Aug. 16, 2010) ("Justice Stevens's concurrence is the controlling opinion")); Kline v. Mortgage Electronic Sec. Sys., No. 08-CV-408, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143391, 2010 WL 6298271, at *3 (S.D. Ohio 2010) (noting that the district courts in Ohio faced [*35] with this precise issue "have concluded unanimously 'that Justice Stevens' concurrence . . . is the controlling opinion by which [they are] bound.'") (quoting McKinney v. Bayer Corp., 744 F. Supp. 2d 733 (N.D. Ohio 2010)); In re Whirlpool Corp. Front-Loading Washer Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 08-WP-65000, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69254, 2010 WL 2756947 at *2 (N.D. Ohio July 12, 2010).

Furthermore, while the Plaintiffs do not address whether the class action restriction in the OCSPA is "intertwined" with the state substantive right, every court in Ohio to address this issue has held that section 1345.09(B) is substantive in nature and therefore not preempted by Rule 23 because it "is not a pan-substantive rule that applies to federal claims or to claims based on other states' laws. Rather, it applies only to 'a violation of Chapter 1345 of the [Ohio] Revised Code'—indicating its substantive nature." Whirlpool. 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69254, 2010 WL 2756947, at *2 (quoting Ohio Rev. Code § 1345.09)); see Kline, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143391, 2010 WL 6298271, at *3-*4 (adopting the reasoning in Whirlpool that section 1345.09(B) is substantive in nature and not preempted by Rule 23); McKinney, 744 F. Supp. 2d at 746-47 (same); cf. In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 812 F. Supp. 2d 390, 2011 WL 2848195, at *18 [*36] (holding that the plaintiffs could not assert a class action claim for violations of an Illinois antitrust law that includes in the text of the statute a provision "preclude[ing] private parties from asserting class actions on behalf of indirect purchasers" because "[u]nlike the New York law at issue in Shady Grove, its limitation is not contained in a generally applicable procedural rule but, rather, in the same paragraph of the same statute that creates the underlying substantive right.").

This Court finds the reasoning employed by those courts to be convincing and concludes that the Shady Grove decision does not mandate that Rule 23 invalidates the OCSPA's class action restrictions. As previously stated, the Ohio Plaintiff does not contend that she can meet the notice requirements for maintaining a class action under section 1345.09(B). Accordingly, the Court grants the Defendant's motion and dismisses the Ohio Plaintiff's OCSPA claim,

Pursuant to the ODTPA, "[a] person engages in a deceptive trade practice when, in the course of the person's business, vocation, or occupation, the person . . . "[r]epresents that goods or services have sponsorship, approval, characteristics, [*37] ingredients, uses, benefits, or quantities that they do not have", Ohio Rev. Code § 4165.02(A)(7), and/or "[r]epresents that goods or services are of a particular standard, quality, or grade, or that goods are of a particular style or model, if they are of another", Ohio Rev. Code § 4165.02(A)(9). The ODTPA "is substantially similar to the federal Lanham Act, and it generally regulates trademarks, unfair competition, and false advertising." *Dawson v. Blockbuster, Inc., 2006 Ohio 1240, 2006 WL 1061769, at 3 (Ohio Ct. App. 2006). The Defendant argues that the Court should dismiss the Ohio Plaintiff's ODTPA claim because, like the Lanham Act, the ODTPA only confers standing on competitors and not on individual consumers.

There is a split between courts in the Northern District of Ohio and the Southern District of Ohio on the question of whether a consumer can state a claim under the ODTPA. See McKinney v. Bayer Corp., 744 F. Supp. 2d 733, 749 (N.D. Ohio 2010) (collecting cases). On the one hand, at least one court in the Southern District of Ohio has held that "because the plaintiffs are individuals, 'and the statute by its plain language places no limitation on the type of individuals [*38] who are considered to be a 'person' and may pursue a claim,' the plaintiffs could maintain a cause of action based on alleged violation of the ODTPA". Id. at 749-50 (quoting Bower v. Int'l Business Machines, Inc., 495 F. Supp. 2d 837, 842 (S.D. Ohio 2007)).

By contrast, courts in the Northern District of Ohio have held that consumers lack standing under the ODTPA "[b]ecause the Lanham Act denies standing to consumers, and Ohio courts apply the same analysis applicable to the Lanham Act to ODTPA claims", Id. at 750 (citing Dawson, 2006 Ohio 1240, 2006 WL 1061769). Moreover, because the OCSPA and ODTPA regulate the same conduct, compare Ohio Rev. Code § 4165.02(A) with Ohio Rev. Code § 1345.02(B), "to confer standing on consumers under the DTPA would render the CSPA superfluous". *Robins v. Global Fitness Holdings, LLC, No. 11-CV-1373, 838 F. Supp. 2d 631, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5606, 2012 WL 163031, at * 15 (N.D. Ohio 2012)*; cf. Blankenship v. CFMOTO Powersports. Inc., 161 Ohio Misc.2d 5, 2011 Ohio 948, 944 N.E.2d 769 (Ohio Com. Pl. 2011). After analyzing the con diet in great detail, the court in McKinney certified the question to the Ohio Supreme Court. However, before the Ohio Supreme Court could reach the issue, the plaintiff in McKinney dismissed the claim. Nevertheless, [*39] the Court finds that the analysis regarding the similarities between the ODTPA and the Lanham Act identified in McKinney, Robins, and Blankenship to be compelling. Furthermore, the Court agrees with those courts that have found that reading the ODTPA to permit consumer claims would render the OCSPA superfluous. Thus, the Court finds that the ODTPA does not confer a private right of action on consumers, and therefore grants the Defendant's motion dismissing the Ohio Plaintiff's ODTPA claim.

Because the Court finds that the Ohio Plaintiff cannot state a claim under either statute, the Court dismisses the claims with prejudice. As a result, the Court will not address whether the pleadings otherwise satisfy the elements of an OCSPA or ODTPA claim.

2. Whether the Texas Plaintiffs Have Satisfied the TDTPA Notice Requirement

The Defendant contends that the Court should hold the Texas Plaintiffs' TDTPA claims in abeyance because they failed to comply with the notice requirements set forth in Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.505 ("section 17.505"). Section 17.505 states in relevant part:

> (a) As a prerequisite to filing a suit seeking damages under Subdivision (I) of Subsection (b) of Section 17.50 of [*40] this subchapter against any person, a consumer shall give written notice to the person at least 60 days before filing the suit advising the person in reasonable detail of the consumer's specific complaint and the amount of economic damages, damages for mental anguish, and expenses, including attorneys' fees, if any, reasonably incurred by the consumer in asserting the claim against the defendant. During the 60-day period a written request to inspect, in a reasonable manner and at a reasonable time and place, the goods that are the subject of the consumer's action or claim may be presented to the consumer.

Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.505(a). The purpose of the notice requirement is "to afford the opportunity for presuit negotiations and settlement in avoidance of lengthy and costly litigation". Hines v. Hash, 843 S.W.2d 464, 465-66 (Tex. 1992) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The notice requirement of the TDTPA is mandatory. Id. at 467. In addition, the plaintiff has the burden to plead and prove compliance with this provision. Keith v. Stoelting, Inc., 915 F.2d 996, 998 (5th Cir. 1990). Nevertheless, the penalty for failure to comply with the notice requirement is abatement [*41] of the action for 60-days, not dismissal, because "abatement of the action for the statutory notice period is more consistent with the purpose of notice than dismissal". Hines. 843 S.W.2d at 468-69.

When a plaintiff fails to comply with the notice requirement, a defendant has up to 30 days after the date it files the answer to file a plea in abatement, which, if granted, holds the case in abeyance for 60-days to allow the parties to engage in the settlement discussions anticipated by the statute. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.505(c); Hines, 842 S.W.2d at 469 ("To be timely, the request for an abatement must be made while the purpose of notice—settlement and avoidance of litigation expense—remains viable. Thus, defendant must request an abatement with the filing of an answer or very soon thereafter").

The Texas Plaintiffs do not dispute that they failed to provide the requisite notice either prior to commencing this action, or anytime thereafter. Rather, the Texas Plaintiffs submit that Abbott has waived its right to object to the lack of notice because it did not make a timely request for an abatement. The Court disagrees. The Defendant filed its answer on February 14, 2011, in which it specifically [*42] raised as an affirmative defense that the TDTPA claim was "barred by failure to plead and provide proper and timely notice, as required by [the statute]". (Answer § 126.) Twenty-nine days later, the Defendant filed the instant motion seeking the dismissal of the complaint, and again raising the objection that the Texas Plaintiffs have yet to comply with the notice requirement. Courts consider raising the notice requirement in a motion to dismiss "to be a timely objection to [a plaintiff's] failure to comply with the notice requirement". *Ramirez v. Am. Home Prods., No. C.A. B-03-155, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40577, 2005 WL 2277518, at * 10 (S.D. Tex. Sept. 16, 2005)*. Thus, the Court finds that the Defendant's request for an abatement was timely.

The Court therefore orders the Texas Plaintiffs' TDTPA claim abated for sixty days after the Texas Plaintiffs serve written notice on Abbott. The Texas Plaintiffs must provide notice within twenty days of the date this Order issues, and notify the Court when they have done so. If the Texas Plaintiffs fail to provide timely notice, the Court will dismiss their claim.

3. Whether the Plaintiffs State a Claim Under the New York, New Hampshire and Texas Consumer Protection Statutes

The [*43] Plaintiffs allege that the Defendant made affirmative misrepresentations and omissions with regard to the safety of Similac in violation of the consumer protection statutes. As previously stated, because the Court dismisses the claims under the Ohio statutes with prejudice on separate grounds, it will not address whether the Ohio Plaintiff plausibly stated a claim for a deceptive act or practice under the statutes. By contrast, because the Court is not dismissing the Texas Plaintiffs' claim for failure to comply with the notice requirement, but rather holding it in abeyance, the Court deems it prudent to address whether the Texas Plaintiffs' plausibly state a claim under the statute. Thus, this section addresses the sufficiency of the Plaintiffs claims under the New Hampshire, New York, and Texas statutes for the purposes of the Defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, and the futility analysis of the Plaintiffs' motion to amend, solely with respect to the factual allegations regarding the alleged deceptive acts and practices.

The New Hampshire Consumer Protection Act prohibits the use of "any unfair or deceptive act or practice in the conduct of any trade or commerce." N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 358—A:2. [*44] The act provides a non-exhaustive list of prohibited practices, including prohibitions against: (1) "Representing that goods or services have sponsorship, approval, characteristics, ingredients, uses, benefits, or quantities that they do not have . . . ", N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 358-A:2.V.; and (2) "Representing that goods or services are of a particular standard, quality, or grade, or that goods are of a particular style or model, if they are of another", N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 358-A:2.VII.

In addition, although not include in the enumerated list of prohibited practices, courts have found that "the failure to warn of a defective or dangerous condition can, under appropriate circumstances, constitute an unfair or deceptive trade practice under New Hampshire's Consumer Protection Act." *Herne v. Cooper Indus., Inc.,2005 DNH 144, 2005 WL 2671 540, at 4 (D.N.H. 2005). Moreover, regardless of whether it is among the enumerated list of prohibited practices, "in order for conduct to run afoul of the statute, it 'must attain a level of rascality that would raise an eyebrow of someone inured to the rough and tumble of the world of commerce.'" Hobin v. Coldwell Banker Residential Affiliates, Inc. 144 N.H. 626, 635, 744 A.2d 1134, 1141 (N.H. 2000) [*45] (quoting Barrows v. Boles, 141 N.H. 382, 390, 687 A.2d 979, 986 (N.H. 1996)).

With respect to damages, the NHCPA provides that "[i]f the court finds for the plaintiff, recovery shall be in the amount of actual damages or $1,000, whichever is greater," and the plaintiff" shall be awarded the costs of the suit and reasonable attorney's fees, as determined by the court." N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 358-A:10. Furthermore, the NHCPA provides that a court may award "as much as 3 times, but not less than 2 times" the amount of damages if it finds the violation was "willful or knowing". Id.

The New York Consumer Protection Act codified at Section 349 of the New York General Business Law declares that "[d]eceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service" in New York are unlawful. N.Y. Gen. Bus. § 349(a). "To make out a prima facie case under Section 349, a plaintiff must demonstrate that (1) the defendant's deceptive acts were directed at consumers, (2) the acts are misleading in a material way, and (3) the plaintiff has been injured as a result." Maurizio v. Goldsmith, 230 F.3d 518, 521 (2d Cir. 2000) (per curiam) (citing Oswego Laborers' Local 214 Pension Fund v. Marine Midland Bank. 85 N.Y.2d 20, 25, 623 N.Y.S.2d 529, 647 N.E.2d 741, 744 (N.Y. 1995)); [*46] Stutman v. Chemical Bank, 95 N.Y.2d 24, 709 N.Y.S.2d 892, 731 N.E.2d 608 (2000).

Furthermore, a consumer can maintain a cause of action under the NYCPA based on omissions "where the business alone possesses material information that is relevant to the consumer and fails to provide this information." Oswego, 85 N.Y.2d at 26, 623 N.Y.S.2d at 533, 647 N.E.2d at 745. With respect to damages, "[c]itizens can enjoin an unlawful business practice, recover actual damages (or $50, whichever is greater) and obtain attorney's fees. In addition, if a defendant knowingly or willfully engages in a deceptive practice, the court may, in its discretion, award treble damages up to a maximum of $1,000". Stutman, 95 N.Y.2d at 29, 709 N.Y.S.2d at 895-96, 731 N.E.2d at 611-12 (citing General Business Law § 349(h)).

Finally, to establish a violation of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, plaintiffs must show that: (1) they fit the statutory definition of "consumer;" (2) the defendant engaged in one of the false, misleading, or deceptive acts enumerated in the statute; and (3) these acts constituted a "producing cause" of the plaintiffs' damages. Doe v. Boys Clubs of Greater Dallas, Inc., 907 S.W.2d 472, 478 (Tex. 1995). [*47] Among the affirmative statements prohibited by the statute are representations that products have "characteristics, ingredients, uses, benefits, or quantities which they do not have", Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.46(b)(5), and that products "are of a particular standard, quality, or grade, or that goods are of a particular style or model, if they are of another", Tex. Bus & Com. Code Ann. §17.46(b)(7). With respect to omissions, the TDTPA explicitly prohibits "failing to disclose information concerning goods or services which was known at the time of the transaction if such failure to disclose such information was intended to induce the consumer into a transaction into which the consumer would not have entered had the information been disclosed". Tex. Bus. & Com. Code. § 17.46(b)(24).

Violations of the TDTPA permit a plaintiff to recover "actual damages" under either the "out of pocket" rule or the "benefit of the bargain" rule, whichever gives the consumer the greater recovery. Leyendecker & Assocs., Inc. v. Wechter, 683 S.W.2d 369, 373 (Tex. 1984); W.O. Bankston Nissan. Inc. v. Walters. 754 S.W.2d 127, 128 (Tex. 1988) (defining out-of-pocket and benefit-of-the-bargain damages). In addition, [*48] the statute permits additional damages for "mental anguish" up to the three times the amount of actual damages for TDTPA violations that were committed "knowingly" or "intentionally". Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.50(b)(1).

In its motion, the Defendant does not separately address the sufficiency of the Plaintiffs' claims under each state statute. Rather, the Defendant mainly argues that all of the consumer protection statute claims should be dismissed because: (1) the statements and omissions underlying the claims are not plead with the particularity required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) ("Rule 9(b)"); and (2) even under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a) ("Rule 8(a)"), the Plaintiffs fail to state a claim under the state statutes because the alleged misrepresentations are either too vague to state a claim or constitute non-actionable puffery or opinion.

a. As to the Applicable Pleading Standard

The parties dispute whether the Court should analyze the sufficiency of the Plaintiffs' consumer protection statute claims under the liberal pleading standard of Rule 8(a) or the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b).

In the Second Circuit, the controlling case on the pleading [*49] standard governing consumer protection statutes is Pelman v. McDonald's Corp., 396 F.3d 508 (2d Cir. 2005). In Pelman, the plaintiffs alleged that McDonalds engaged in deceptive practices by, among other acts, misrepresenting the nutritional quality of its food through a combination of advertisements and failing to disclose that certain of its foods were substantially less healthy than advertised. The district court dismissed the plaintiffs' NYCPA claim on the grounds that the plaintiffs failed to plead facts supporting a causal connection between their consumption of McDonald's food and their alleged injuries, and because the plaintiffs' "allegations of a generalized campaign to create a false impression were vague and conclusory". 396 F.3d at 511, 512 n.5.

The Second Circuit vacated the district court decision, holding that "because § 349 extends well beyond common-law fraud to cover a broad range of deceptive practices, and because a private action under § 349 does not require proof of the same essential elements (such as reliance) as common-law fraud, an action under § 349 is not subject to the pleading-with-particularity requirements of Rule 9(b), but need only meet the bare-bones [*50] notice-pleading requirements of Rule 8(a)". Id. at 511 (internal citations omitted). With respect to the "vague and conclusory allegations" regarding the generalized campaign, the court held that "the cure for such deficiencies, in a claim not required to be plead with particularity, is a motion for a more definite statement under Rule 12(e), rather than dismissal". Id. at 512 n.5 (citing Swierkiewcz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 514-15, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L.Ed. 2d 1 (2002)).

The Defendant contends that the Court should limit Pelman to its facts because it related to an "advertising scheme" as opposed to "literally false statements of material fact with scienter intending to induce reliance", and asserts that the Second Circuit's decision in Rombach v. Chang. 355 F.3d 164 (2d Cir. 2004) should control. (Def.'s MTD Br. at 8-9.) In Rombach. the Second Circuit held that whether a plaintiff's claims "sound[s] in negligence or in fraud" for the purposes of applying Rule 9(b), depends not on whether the allegations are "styled or denominated as fraud or expressed in terms of the constituent elements of a fraud cause of action" but rather whether the "wording and imputations of the complaint [*51] are classically associated with fraud". 355 F.3d at 171-72. The Defendant argues that the decision in Rombach cannot be squared with the decision in Pelman. which distinguished NYCPA and fraud claims in part because NYCPA claims do not require a showing of reliance and scienter. Based on Rombach and a narrow reading of Pelman. the Defendant contends that because the Plaintiffs allege the type of intentional conduct that "sounds in fraud", and because they allege reliance on particular advertisements rather than a general "advertising scheme", their claims should be held to the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b).

However, the Defendant's attempt to limit Pelman to its facts cannot be credited in light of the Second Circuit's decision in City of New York v. Smokes-Spirits.com, Inc., 541 F.3d 425 (2d Cir. 2008), which cited Pelman for the proposition that Rule 8(a) was applicable to two sets of NYCPA claims. The first NYCPA claim alleged that "defendants intentionally failed to inform their customers that they must pay taxes and omitted the amount of taxes owed to the City and the State from the advertised prices". 541 F.3d at 455. Despite the fact that this allegation was pled [*52] in terms of "intentional" conduct, the Second Circuit did not apply Rule 9(b). The second NYCPA claim alleged "that defendants represented to customers that the cigarettes are "tax free," that their customers do not have to pay taxes, and/or that defendants did not have to file Jenkins Act reports", Id. at 456. Unlike Pelman, this allegation was premised not on an "advertising scheme", but allegedly false statements about the defendant's "tax-free" status. However, the Second Circuit still applied Rule 8(a).

Read together, Pelman and Smoke-Spirits.com establish a categorical rule that NYCPA claims, regardless of whether they "sound in fraud", or are premised on specific misrepresentations rather than an "advertising scheme", are not subject to the heightened pleading requirement of Rule 9(b). See *Welch v. TD Ameritrade Holding Corp., No. 07-CV-6904, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65584, 2009 WL 2356131, at 24 n. 13 (S.D.N.Y. July 27, 2009) (following Rombach in ruling that a plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim for a fraudulent securities scheme was subject to Rule 9(b), but that the section 349 claim premised on the same allegations was subject to Rule 8(a) because "the Second Circuit has held that, as a categorical matter, [*53] claims under § 349 are only required to meet the requirements of Rule 8(a)") (citing Smokes-Spirits.Com, 541 F.3d at 455); *Ng v. HSBC Mortg. Corp., No. 07-CV-5434, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40109, 2010 WL 889256, at 14 (E.D.N.Y. March 10, 2010) ("Deceptive conduct that does not rise to the level of actionable fraud, may nevertheless form the basis of a claim under New York's Deceptive Practices Act, which was created to protect consumers from conduct that might not be fraudulent as a matter of law, and also relaxes the heightened standards required for a fraud claim.").

As to the non-New York statutes, whereas the Plaintiffs fail to address the applicable pleading standard to the NHCPA and TDTPA claims, the Defendant presumes that, because federal district courts in New Hampshire and Texas apply a heightened pleading standard to the claims under their state statutes, this Court should as well. Contrary to the Defendant's assumption, this Court is not bound by the pleading standard applied by district courts in other states to that state's law.

Although the substantive requirements of the NHCPA and TDTPA are governed by the law of their respective states of origin, any pleading requirements are governed by federal law, [*54] which controls procedural matters in diversity cases. "Whether plaintiffs' claims must comply with the pleading burdens imposed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) by virtue of the complaint 'sounding in fraud' or being 'grounded in fraud' is an issue of federal law, not state law." *Ackerman v. Coca-Cola Co., No. 09-CV-395, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73156, 2010 WL 2925955, at * 18 n. 31 (E.D.N.Y. July 21, 2010)*. Here, the Court is bound by the law of Second Circuit. See Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Banc of America Securities LLC. 254 F. Supp. 2d 390, 396 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) ("[B]ecause Rule 9(b) is a rule promulgated pursuant to a federal statute, this Court is required to follow the precedent of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit with respect to the interpretation and application of Rule 9(b)."); see also Desiano v. Warner-Lambert & Co., 467 F.3d 85, 91 (2d Cir. 2006). Thus, the relevant issue is whether the Second Circuit would apply Rule 8(a) to the non-New York statutes because, like the NYCPA, they are either distinguishable in form or purpose from fraud claims. See *Keegan v. Am. Honda Motor Co,. Inc., 838 F. Supp. 2d 929, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3007, 2012 WL 75443, at *21-22 (C.D. Cal. 2012) (acknowledging that although the Second Circuit [*55] under Pelman would apply Rule 8(a) to the plaintiffs' NYCPA claim, it was bound by Ninth Circuit precedent to apply Rule 9(b) to the NYCPA claims); Petri v. Gatlin. 997 F. Supp. 956, 973 (N.D. Ill. 1997) ("Because the DTPA is substantially similar to the ICFA, we assume arguendo that Rule 9(b) applies to statutory fraud claims under Texas law as well.").

Similar to the NYCPA, the New Hampshire statute also does not include the elements of reliance or scienter. Although the Texas statute requires a plaintiff to prove reliance in order to prevail on a TDTPA claim, Henry Schein. Inc. v. Stromboe, 102 S.W.3d 675, 686 (Tex. 2002) (identifying reliance as an element of plaintiffs' TDTPA claims), a plaintiff is not required to show that the defendant acted "knowingly or intentionally". Miller v. Keyser, 90 S.W.3d 712, 716 (Tex. 2002). In addition, just as the New York Court of Appeals has held that "[i]n contrast to common-law fraud, [the NYCPA] is a creature of statute based on broad consumer-protection concerns", Gaidon v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am., 94 N.Y.2d 330, 343, 704 N.Y.S.2d 177, 182, 725 N.E.2d 598, 603 (N.Y. 1999), the Texas Supreme Court has explicitly noted that "[a] primary [*56] purpose of the enactment of the DTPA was to provide consumers a cause of action for deceptive trade practices without the burden of proof and numerous defenses encountered in a common law fraud or breach of warranty suit." Smith v. Baldwin. 611 S.W.2d 611 (Tex. 1980); see also Miller. 90 S.W.3d at 716; Eagle Properties, Ltd. v. Scharbauer, 807 S.W.2d 714 (Tex. 1990). Thus, in light of the similarities between the NYCPA and the analogous New Hampshire and Texas statutes, the Court finds that the applicable pleading standard to claims under all three statutes is the notice pleading requirements of Rule 8(a).

b. Misrepresentations and Omissions

The Plaintiffs allege that Abbott violated the NHDPA, NYCPA, and TDTPA by misleading consumers as to the safety of Similac through the following affirmative statements: (1) Similac was "safe for the consumption by infants"; (2) Abbott was "dedicated to the highest standards of manufacturing and marketing — and to complying with all applicable laws and regulations in the countries where [they] do business"; (3) Similac "provid[es] babies with excellent nutrition for growth and development and has been clinically proven to aid brain, bone and immune [*57] system development"; and (4) Abbott is "committed to conducting research to ensure that formula-fed infants receive the highest quality products to meet their nutritional needs". Abbott contends that these statements are either objectively non-misleading, or amount to mere puffery or opinion and therefore are not actionable under the consumer protection statutes.

"A material claim is one that 'involves information that is important to consumers and, hence, likely to affect their choice of, or conduct regarding, a product.'" Bildstein v, MasterCard Int'l Inc., 329 F. Supp. 2d 410, 414 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (quoting Novartis Corp. v. F.T.C., 223 F.3d 783, 787, 343 U.S. App. D.C. 111 (D.C. Cir. 2000)). The relevant inquiry is not whether the statement is literally false. Am. Home Prods. Corp. v. Johnson & Johnson. 577 F.2d 160, 165 (2d Cir. 1978). Rather, "[w]hat is important in determining whether a statement is misleading is the over-all impression it tends to create on the public." Country Tweeds, Inc. v. F.T.C., 326 F.2d 144, 148 (2d Cir. 1964); Beer v. Bennett. 160 N.H. 166, 170, 993 A.2d 765, 768 (N.H. 2010) ("Moreover, even if the individual representations could be read as literally true, the advertisement [*58] could still violate the CPA if it created an overall misleading impression.").

However, statements that are vague or "either mere puffery or hyperbole" such that "a reasonable consumer would not view [them] as significantly changing the general gist of available information . . . are not material, even if they were misleading." In re Ford Motor Co. Securities Litig., Class Action, 381 F.3d 563, 570 (6th Cir. 2004). "Simply stated, puffing is sales talk that the buyer should discount when making a transaction because no reasonable person under the circumstances would rely on the statement when contemplating a purchase." *Tylka v. Gerber Prods. Co., No. 96-CV-1647, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10718, 1999 WL 495126, at 5 (N.D. Ill. July 1, 1999).

If an alleged misrepresentation would not deceive a reasonable person because it is vague or amounts to mere puffery or opinion, then a claim under the consumer protection statutes may be dismissed, as a matter of law, on a motion to dismiss. Lacoff v. Buena Vista Publishing, Inc., 183 Misc.2d 600, 705 N.Y.S.2d 183, 191 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2000) (dismissing claims under sections 349 and 350 because certain language "is not actionable, as it is simply puffery or opinion"); Helena Chemical Co. v. Wilkins, 47 S.W.3d 486, 502 (Tex. 2001) [*59] ("The DTPA does not mention "puffing" as a defense. However, this Court has recognized that "mere puffing" statements are not actionable under sections 17.46(b)(5) or 17.46(b)(7).") (citing Pennington v. Singleton, 606 S. W.2d 682, 687 (Tex. 1980)); *Private Jet Servs. Group, Inc. v. Sky King, Inc., 2006 DNH 116, 2006 WL 2864057, at 5 (D.N.H. 2006) ("Mere puffery that does not represent that the company adheres to particular standards or requirements is not actionable under [the NHCPA]. Further, in general only factual misstatements, not statements of opinion, constitute actionable misrepresentations.") (internal citations omitted).

The Court finds that the majority of the statements cited by the Plaintiffs in support of their claims either have nothing to do with the safety of Similac, or are too vague to mislead a reasonable consumer and therefore are immaterial. Specifically, the statements that Similac "provid[es] babies with excellent nutrition for growth and development and has been clinically proven to aid brain, bone and immune system development" and that Abbott is "'committed to conducting research to ensure that formula-fed infants receive the highest quality products to [*60] meet their nutritional needs'" are not material, and therefore not actionable, because they have no bearing on the safety of the product for the ingestion by infants and "[a]n infant formula containing beetles could nonetheless improve immunity, bone strength, and brains and eyes, and provide important nutrition". *Vavak v. Abbott Labs., Inc., SACV 10-1995 JVS, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 155962, 11 (C.D.Cal. March 7, 2011): accord *Bland v. Abbott Labs.. Inc., No. 11-CV-430, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1732, 2012 WL 32577, at 2 (W.D. Ky Jan. 6, 2012); Gray v. Abbott Labs., Inc., No. 10-CV-6377, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80189, 2011 WL 3022274 (N.D. Ill. July 22, 2011); Jasper v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 834 F. Supp. 2d 766, 2011 WL 2672519 (N.D. Ill. 2011).

Furthermore, the statement that Abbott is "dedicated to the highest standards of manufacturing and marketing — and to complying with all applicable laws and regulations in the countries where [they] do business" is not actionable under the consumer protection statutes. This aspirational statement is simply too vague for a reasonable consumer to rely on it in any material way in making a decision to purchase the Defendant's products. General statements about compliance with safety and quality standards are non-actionable [*61] "puffery" where, as here, they fail to identify specific requirements or standards. See *Private Jet Servs. Group. Inc. 2006 DNH 116, 2006 WL 2864057, at 5 (holding that statements about the high quality of the defendant's services were "mere puffery" and therefore not actionable under the NHCPA because "they do not provide any implied or express warranties as to quality or any representations about compliance with specific requirements or standards"); *Cleveland Mack Sales, Inc. v. Foshee, No. I4-CV-59, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 6164, 2001 WL 1013393, at 4 (Tex. Ct. App. 2001) ("Imprecise or vague statements are generally considered puffing, and are not actionable under the DTPA, while statements of material fact are actionable;') (citing Douglas v. Delp, 987 S.W.2d 879, 886 (Tex. 1999)); *Tylka, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10718, 1999 WL 495126, at 8 ("'The people and resources of the Gerber Products Company are dedicated to assuring that the company is the world leader in, and advocate for, infant nutrition, care and development,' simply presents no basis for consumer deception.").

Contrary to the Plaintiffs' contention, a statement that Abbot is "dedicated . . . to complying with all applicable laws and regulations" is distinguishable from false or even literally [*62] true statements that mislead a consumer to believe that a product is FDA-approved. Those allegations involve the "peculiar form that marketing has taken as having a specialized, implicit meaning in the eyes of the consumer [ ] that the drug is FDA-approved." Mutual Pharm. Co. v. Ivax Pharms., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 2d 925, 941 (CD. Cal. 2006) (holding that plaintiffs presented viable claims that defendant had falsely implied that its drugs were FDA approved by placing them on comparative clinical databases). For example, in In re Bayer Corp, Combination Aspirin Products Marketing and Sales Practices Litigation, 701 F. Supp. 2d 356 (E.D.N.Y. 2010), the case relied upon by the Plaintiffs for this proposition, the court found that the plaintiffs stated a claim under a number of state consumer protection statutes based on the plaintiffs' allegation that Bayer falsely implied that its drug was FDA-approved "by employing valid FDA-approved statements about the virtues of the component parts of the combination products". Id. at 374.

By contrast, in the statement cited by the Plaintiffs, the Defendant vaguely references a dedication to complying with unspecified standards and all of the laws and [*63] regulations in the countries where it operates. As the Plaintiffs themselves allege in the amended and proposed second amended complaints, Abbott "markets its products in more than 130 countries". (Am. Compl., ¶ 20; PSAC, ¶ 20.) A broadly stated goal to comply with the laws of 130 countries is puffery and therefore cannot materially mislead a reasonable consumer. See Bernstein v. Extendicare Health Servs., Inc., 607 F. Supp. 2d 1027, 1032 (D. Minn. 2009) (holding that "[s]tatements that a nursing home will comply with or exceed 'applicable laws,' or that it has established 'rigorous standards,' are similar to statements that services provided will be 'high quality.'" and therefore constitute non-actionable puffery under the Minnesota Deceptive Trade Practices Act).

Because the Court finds that the statement that Abbott is "dedicated to the highest standards of manufacturing and marketing — and to complying with all applicable laws and regulations in the countries where [they] do business" is not actionable, it is unnecessary to address the Defendant's contention that the Plaintiffs reliance on this statement is preempted by the Food Drug and Cosmetics Act ("FDCA"). Neither must the [*64] Court resolve at this stage what evidence regarding Abbott's compliance with FDA regulations may or may not ultimately be admissible to support the Plaintiffs' claims.

However, the Court finds that the allegation that the "product packaging describes Similac as being a formula approved and used most by hospitals, because it is safe for the consumption by infants" (Am. Compl., ¶ 25) plausibly supports a claim based on affirmative misrepresentations under the consumer protection statutes. Moreover, by identifying the alleged misrepresentation as being located on the "product packaging" and alleging that they "relied" on this statement in purchasing and paying a premium price for the contaminated formula, the Plaintiffs have satisfied the requisite causal connection between the deceptive act and their injuries to sustain a claim under all three statutes, as well as the reliance element of the TDTPA.

Although the Plaintiffs have not quoted a specific advertisement, this is not required under Rule 8(a). This case is distinguishable from the Court's decision in Woods v. Maytag ("Maytag I"), No. 10-CV-599, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116595, 2010 WL 4314313 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 2, 2010), where the Court dismissed a claim under the [*65] NYCPA based on alleged misrepresentations, which, unlike the allegations in the instant case, were plead on "information and belief. Contrary to the Defendant's characterization, the Court dismissed the plaintiff's NYCPA claim premised on omissions, not affirmative misrepresentations, because the plaintiff "vaguely allege[d] that Defendants 'knew' of the alleged defect". *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116595, 2010 WL 4314313, at * 16*. As discussed below, because a failure to disclose for the purposes of stating a claim under the NYCPA only arises when a defendant "exclusively possess information that a reasonable consumer would want to know and could not discover without difficulty", a plaintiff cannot plead that an omission constituted a deceptive practice based on conclusory allegations of knowledge. Id. Indeed, in a later opinion, the Court denied Maytag's motion to dismiss the plaintiff's NYCPA claim based on omissions in his amended complaint because the plaintiff alleged facts plausibly alleging that Maytag had knowledge of product defect and engaged in a "deceptive act or practice" by failing to warn consumers. See Woods v. Maytag ("Maytag II"), 807 F. Supp. 2d 112, 129 (E.D.N.Y. 2011).

Furthermore, while certain [*66] statements that a product is "safe" may constitute puffery, it is an actionable deceptive practice to mislead consumers into believing a product is safe for a particular use when it is not. See In re Bayer Corp., 701 F. Supp. 2d at 375 (holding that the plaintiffs allegations that "Bayer misrepresented the safety and effectiveness of the combination products" was a "traditional claim of consumer misrepresentation"). However, because the Plaintiffs have not identified a specific advertisement for the Court to assess whether the language used would mislead a reasonable customer, the Court cannot find as a matter of law that advertising that a product is "approved and used most by hospitals, because it is safe for the consumption by infants" is non-actionable puffery. See, e.g., Chacanaca v. Quaker Oats Co., 752 F. Supp. 2d 1111, 1125-26 (N.D. Cal. 2010) ("The insistence that a product with (allegedly) dangerous additives is nonetheless 'wholesome,' . . ., arguably could mislead a reasonable consumer. Accordingly, at this juncture, the term 'wholesome' cannot be deemed to constitute non-actionable puffery."); cf. Cecere v. Loon Mt. Rec. Corp., 155 N.H. 289, 297-98, 923 A.2d 198 (2007) (granting summary [*67] judgment on CPA claim to defendants where plaintiff "alleged that the defendants violated the CPA by falsely advertising that the terrain park and specifically its jumps were 'state of the art' and 'safe for the use by patrons for the specific purpose of snow boarding'" but produced "no advertising by the defendants representing that the terrain park was 'state of the art' or 'safe for ... snowboarding'"); Sergeant Oil & Gas Co., Inc. v. Nat'l Maintenance & Repair, Inc., 861 F. Supp. 1351, 1362 (S.D. Tex. 1994) ("Whether a statement constitutes merely an expression of opinion or "puffing," or an actionable misrepresentation depends on several factors, including the specificity of the statement and the comparative levels of the buyer's and seller's knowledge concerning the subject matter of the transaction.") (citations omitted).

Finally, the Court also finds that the Plaintiffs have stated claims under the consumer protection statutes based on omissions. The Plaintiffs allege that Abbott engaged in a deceptive practice by omission, because Abbott was aware that the Similac was contaminated with insect parts and therefore not "safe for ingestion by infants", and failed to disclose that [*68] information to consumers.

All three statutes require either actual or constructive knowledge to state a claim based on omissions. See *Maytag I. 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116595, 2010 WL 4314313, at * 15* ("As with fraud claims, when a defendant exclusively possesses information that a reasonable consumer would want to know and could not discover without difficulty, failure to disclose can constitute a deceptive or misleading practice") (citing Oswego Laborers' Local 214 Pension Fund v. Marine Midland Bank, 85 N.Y.2d 20, 27, 623 N.Y.S.2d 529, 647 N.E.2d 741 (N.Y. 1995)); Doe v. Boys Clubs of Greater Dallas, Inc., 907 S.W.2d 472, 479 (Tex. 1995) ("To be actionable under the DTPA, a failure to disclose material information necessarily requires that the defendant have known the information and have failed to bring it to the plaintiff's attention.") (emphasis in original); Beer v. Bennett, 160 N.H. 166, 170, 993 A.2d 765, 768-69 (N.H. 2010) (holding that although the NHCPA does not require that a misrepresentation or omission be knowing or intentional in order to recover the minimum statutory damages, "the statute's plain language 'indicates that some element of knowledge on the part of the defendant is required'".) (quoting [*69] Kelton v. Hollis Ranch, 155 N.H. 666, 668, 927 A.2d 1243 (N.H. 2007)).

In the amended complaint, the Plaintiffs stated in conclusory terms that Abbott "had actual and/or constructive notice that Similac contained contaminants, including insect/bettle particles and larvae, when placing these products into the stream of commerce". (Am. Compl., ¶ 45.) Absent from the amended complaint were facts that, if true, would render this contention plausible. However, in the proposed second amended complaint, the Plaintiffs allege additional facts that, when viewed in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs, plausibly allege that the Defendant had "actual or constructive" knowledge of the contamination "when placing [Similac] into the stream of commerce". In particular, the Plaintiff alleges that: (1) Abbott was aware of a beetle infestation in the Sturgis Facility that became progressively worse from January 2007 until 2010 based on reports provided by its exterminator, (PSAC, ¶¶ 53-58, 60); (2) Abbott was aware that the equipment in the facility responsible for preventing insects from contaminating the product was defective and poorly maintained, (PSAC, ¶¶ 41-48, 61); and (3) Between January [*70] 2010 and August 2010, Abbott "received 238 infestation complaints for product manufactured at the Sturgis, Michigan facility" (PSAC, ¶ 52).

Whether Abbott's failure to disclose the existence of the customer complaints about insect parts in its product constitutes a material omission "depends upon the volume and accuracy of those complaints". St. Patrick's Home for Aged and Infirm v. Laticrete Int'l, Inc., 264 A.D.2d 652, 655-56, 696 N.Y.S.2d 117, 122 (1st Dep't 1999) ("Non-disclosure of a single, unsubstantiated allegation of product failure is not sufficient. On the other hand, concealment of scores of complaints about the defective nature of a product would clearly approach fraud."). Notably, the mere existence of product complaints does not in and of itself prove that the product was unsafe. Whether these complaints provided actual knowledge of the product contamination, and whether these complaints provided actual knowledge that contamination with beetle parts was "unsafe", are factual issues that the Court does not need to decide on a motion to dismiss. Indeed, at this stage in the litigation, what the Plaintiffs can "prove" is irrelevant. The parties submitted declarations and [*71] documentary evidence regarding these complaints in conjunction with their supplemental briefing on mootness. However, because these documents are not incorporated by reference in the complaint, the Court cannot consider them on a motion to dismiss without converting the motion into one for summary judgment, which the Court declines to do.

Here, the Plaintiffs have alleged that: (1) Abbott knew about the presence of insect parts in the formula manufactured at the Sturgis Facility from 238 consumer complaints; (2) Abbott intentionally withheld this information to induce customers to purchase the formula; and (3) the Plaintiffs would not have purchased Similac and/or paid the premium price for Similac had they known of the contamination. Thus, the Plaintiffs have plausibly stated a claim under all three statutes based on the Defendant's omissions. See *Szymczak v. Nissan North America, Inc., No. 10-CV-7493, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153011, 2011 WL 7095432, at 16 (S.D.N.Y. 2011). ("Here, plaintiffs' allegations include sufficient detail and a plausible narrative for how defendants knew of the radiator defect. At this stage, the Court can only assume the narrative is true. Therefore, the Court will not dismiss the Section 349 [*72] claims as to plaintiffs Szymczak, Lopez, Greathouse, and Jackson . . . but will leave those plaintiffs to their proof."); *In re Sony VAIO Computer Notebook Trackpad Litig., No. 09-Cv-2109, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115142, 2010 WL 4262191, at 5 (S.D. Cal. 2010) (holding that the plaintiffs plausibly alleged claims under the California, New Jersey, and Florida consumer protection statutes based on omissions because the plaintiffs "alleged that Sony knew about a material fact, the defective trackpad, from numerous consumer complaints, but concealed that information from Plaintiffs [and] Plaintiffs further allege that if they had known about the defect. Plaintiffs never would have purchased the notebooks at the prices they paid."); *Doll v. Ford Motor Co., 814 F.Supp.2d 526, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95427, 2011 WL 3820324, at 16 (D. Md. 2011) ("Plaintiffs have adequately pled a claim under the New York Deceptive Trade Practices Act. In the Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs contend that Ford misled consumers by withholding material information regarding the defective torque converter, and, as a result, consumers were harmed by high repair and replacement costs. This Court finds that Ford's alleged omissions are consumer orientated, materially misleading, [*73] and are the source of the Plaintiff's injuries.").

Accepting the allegations set forth in the amend complaint and proposed second amended complaint as true, and viewing them in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, they have stated viable claims under the NHCPA, NYCPA, and TDTPA based on affirmative misrepresentations and omissions. Accordingly, the Defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings on this ground is denied, and the Plaintiffs' motion to amend the complaint to add the additional factual allegations is granted. The amendment is not futile.

4. Whether the Recall Program Moots the Plaintiffs Consumer Protection Act Claims

On January 20, 2012, the Court directed the parties to submit supplemental briefing on whether the voluntary recall mooted the Plaintiffs' claims, an argument raised by the Defendant in opposition to the motion to amend. As the Court noted in its supplemental briefing order, a number of courts also handling cases against Abbott based on the contaminated Similac subject to the Recall had held that, because Abbott had offered to reimburse consumers through the Recall, any claims by plaintiffs seeking damages for economic loss or restitution were moot.

Most [*74] comparable to the instant case was Jovine v. Abbott Laboratories, Inc., 795 F. Supp. 2d 1331 (S.D. Fla. 2011), when the plaintiff sought to recover unspecified damages for Abbott's violation of the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA"). Although the court found that the plaintiff adequately alleged an unfair or deceptive practice under the statute, the court dismissed the claim on the ground that the plaintiff "[could not] plausibly allege that he suffered damages insofar as the amount he paid for the product, for he alleges that Defendants issued a voluntary recall". Id. at 1334. The court further noted that, "[t]o the extent Plaintiff predicates his FDUTPA damages on injury he suffered beyond the purchase price of the product", those damages were barred by the statutory limitation on "actual damages". Id.

Here, the Plaintiffs are similarly vague with regard to the damages they seek. Although the Plaintiffs allege that their children suffered personal injuries, the Plaintiffs do not expressly seek damages on this ground. Furthermore, while in their supplemental briefing the Plaintiffs assert that the New York Plaintiff incurred medical costs associated with her [*75] child's condition allegedly caused by the contaminated formula, this allegation is not included in the amended or proposed second amended complaints. Nevertheless, the Court finds that, even assuming the Plaintiffs are only seeking their out-of-pocket costs for the purchase, the option of recouping that cost through the Recall program does not moot their claims.

As the Defendant concedes in its supplemental brief, the reimbursement offer through the Recall program does not moot the Plaintiffs' claims in the constitutional sense, because it would not offer the Plaintiffs the complete remedy they seek. Rather, the Defendant argues that the existence of the Recall program renders the Plaintiffs unable to state a claim for damages under the state deceptive practice statutes. The Court disagrees.

While the Court recognizes that other courts in the Similac cases have reached a different conclusion, there is no bar preventing plaintiffs from forgoing compensation through a voluntary refund program in order to pursue their claims in a consumer class action. In contrast to the cases cited by the Defendant, the conditions of the Recall program were not part of the "benefit-of-the-bargain" when [*76] they purchased the product, see Thiedemann v. Mercedes-Benz USA, LLC, 183 N.J. 234, 251, 872 A.2d 783 (N.J. 2005) ("Indeed, the warranty provided as part of the contract of sale or lease is part of the benefit of the bargain between the parties. The defects that arise and are addressed by warranty, at no cost to the consumer, do not provide the predicate "loss" that the [New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act ("CFA")] expressly requires for a private claim under the CFA . . . ."), nor do the Plaintiffs claim that the Recall program constituted a deceptive act or practice, see *Jorge v. Toyota Motor Insurance Services, Inc., 2006 N.J. Super. Unpub. LEXIS 2079, 2006 WL 2129026, at 4-5 (N.J. Super. A.D. 2006) (finding no ascertainable loss under the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act where the plaintiff failed to avail herself of repair or replacement services that were subject of a vehicle services agreement between the parties that the plaintiff alleged was unfair and deceptive, rendering the claimed loss hypothetical and therefore not cognizable).

The wisdom of the Plaintiffs' decision to forgo the Recall program is questionable, particularly in light of the number of cases that have denied class certification in consumer class actions [*77] because a voluntary recall and/or refund program provided a superior method of compensating the putative class members. As the court explained in In re Aqua Dots Products Liability Litigation, 270 F.R.D. 377 (N.D. Ill. 2010):

> Where available refunds afford class members a comparable or even better remedy than they could hope to achieve in court, a class action would merely divert a substantial percentage of the refunds' aggregate value to the class lawyers. For this reason, among others, rational class members would not choose to litigate a multiyear class action just to procure refunds that are readily available here and now. Not so for the class lawyers; . . . At bottom, this is a suit to recover the purchase price of tainted Aqua Dots. Since the defendants will provide a refund-without needless judicial intervention, lawyer's fees, or delay-to any purchaser who asks for one, there is no realistic sense in which putative class members would be better off coming to court. From their perspective, a class action is not the superior alternative. The court therefore declines to certify any of the proposed classes.

Id. at 383-85; see also In re Phenylpropanolamine (PPA) Prods. Liab. Litig., 214 F.R.D. 614, 621-23 (W.D. Wash. 2003) [*78] (holding that the voluntary refund program was superior to a class action to recover for economic injuries resulting from the purchase of recalled products, regardless of the facts that the program had proof of purchase requirements; that the majority of the refunds were provided to retailers; and that each individual had to actually seek out a refund, and holding that the need to use the class action vehicle to deter future misconduct was diminished by the multitude of personal injury actions commenced against the defendant based on the same product defect); Chin v. Chrysler Corp., 182 F.R.D. 448, 463 (D.N.J. 1998) ("The lack of superiority of a nationwide class action in this case is also shown by the fact that, as a result of Chrysler's voluntary recall, it is unclear if there is any useful remedy this Court could fashion under the laws of certain states even for those Plaintiffs who have suffered problems with their ABS systems.").

Furthermore, the New York and New Hampshire statutes provide for a minimum amount of statutory damages. Thus, even assuming the Plaintiffs were able to prove injury, but their damages were less than the statutory minimum, they would still be entitled [*79] to the minimum amount of statutory damages. Kim v. BMW of Manhattan, Inc., 11 Misc.3d 1078[A], 819 N.Y.S.2d 848, 2005 NY Slip Op 52293[U] (Table) (N.Y. Sup. 2005) ("Plaintiffs here have not alleged pecuniary damages. Accordingly, they are entitled to the statuary damages of $50."); Becksted v. Nadeau. 155 N.H. 615, 926 A.2d 819 (N.H. 2007) ("[NHDPA] does not require a showing of actual damages for the claimant to be awarded the statutory minimum and attorney's fees."); Carter v. Lachance, 146 N.H. 11, 14, 766 A.2d 717 (2001) ("[T]he statute mandates that the trial court award the prevailing plaintiff the minimum of $1,000 in damages plus costs and reasonable attorney's fees."); cf Mayline Enters., Inc. v. Milea Truck Sales Corp., 641 F. Supp. 2d 304, 309 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) ("Defendant claims that the [Federal Odometer Act claim] should be dismissed because plaintiff suffered no actual damages. But this is a silly argument; one can never have no damages for violation of a statute that provides for statutory damages."). In fact, the New Hampshire Supreme Court has specifically noted that the damages provisions of the statute "relieve the plaintiff from the usual requirement of pleading and proving damages and of [*80] pleading costs and attorney's fees." Preferred Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Docusearch, Inc., 149 N.H. 759, 829 A.2d 1068 (N.H. 2003).

Accordingly, the Court finds that the existence of the Recall program does not render the parties claims under the NYCPA and the NHDPA moot. The Texas statute presents a more complicated question.

Under the TDTPA, it is a "defense to a cause of action", if, within 30 days of receiving notice of the claim, the defendant "tendered to the consumer: (1) the amount of actual damages claimed; and (2) the expenses, including attorneys' fees, if any, reasonably incurred by the consumer in asserting the claim against the defendant." Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.506(d). The reasonableness of a defendant's tender is a fact-specific inquiry.

As previously stated, the Texas Plaintiffs have yet to provide the Defendant with a notice setting forth "in reasonable detail . . . the amount of economic damages, damages for mental anguish, and expenses, including attorneys' fees, if any, reasonably incurred by the consumer in asserting the claim against the defendant." See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.505(a). By contrast, in the case relied upon by the Defendant, Stanley v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 839 F. Supp. 430, 434 (N.D. Tex. 1993), [*81] the plaintiff had timely provided the defendants, Wal-Mart and Toys-R-Us ("Toys"), with notice prior to initiating the lawsuit. Thus, the Court was able to assess the reasonableness of the defendants tender in dismissing the plaintiffs' TDTPA claim on summary judgment.

The Defendant seeks to have this Court find, as a matter of law, that the Recall program reasonably satisfies any potential amount of damages. However, as indicated in the complaint, the Texas Plaintiffs seek damages under the Texas statute not only for out-of-pocket losses, but also for mental anguish. The Court cannot say at this stage in the litigation that the Texas Plaintiffs will be unable to recover for mental anguish. Furthermore, the Court is unlikely to find a request for all the attorneys' fees associated with commencing and prosecuting the instant case to be reasonable. Indeed, it would undermine the statute to reward attorneys who disregard the plain language of its provisions by failing to provide "presuit" or even "timely" notice. However, there may be some reasonable level of attorneys' fees associated with preparing the notice and litigating any disputes over the reasonableness of the tender. Ultimately, [*82] without more specific information about the amount requested, the Court cannot, as a matter of law, rule that the Recall program would reasonably compensate the Texas Plaintiffs. Thus, whether the Defendant's Recall program constitutes a reasonable offer under the statute is not ripe for review.

5. Whether the Plaintiffs have Stated a Claim for Injunctive Relief

In both the amended and proposed second amended complaints, the Plaintiffs assert a claim for injunctive relief, seeking "an order prohibiting, restraining and preliminarily/permanently enjoining ABBOTT from engaging in the false, misleading, or deceptive acts or practices alleged herein". (Am. Compl., ¶ 112; PSAC, ¶ 135.) However, under all three consumer protection statutes, an injunction is a remedy, and not a separate cause of action. See N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 358-A:10; N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349(h); Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.50(b)(2); see also Chiste v. Hotels.com L.P., 756 F. Supp. 2d 382, 406-07 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (dismissing a plaintiff's causes of action for declaratory and injunctive relief based on NYCPA violations because "[d]eclaratory judgments and injunctions are remedies, not causes of action", but deeming these [*83] remedies "added to [the plaintiff's] ad damnum clause"). Thus, the Plaintiffs may seek injunctive relief in their Prayer for Relief, but the Defendant's motion to dismiss the request for injunctive relief as a separate claim is granted.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is hereby:

ORDERED, that plaintiff Shelly A. Leonard's claims are dismissed pursuant to Rule 41(a)(2) without prejudice with leave to renew her individual claims or any claims on behalf of her infant/child in the event the Court certifies a class under Federal of Civil Procedure 23, and it is further

ORDERED, that the Plaintiffs' motion to add Kristie Pagan as a plaintiff and putative New York class representative is granted, and it is further

ORDERED, that the Plaintiffs' motion to amend the complaint to remove the New York Plaintiffs express waiver of punitive damages under the NYCPA is denied, and it is further

ORDERED, that the Defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Rule 12(c) dismissing the Ohio Plaintiff's claims under the OCSPA and ODTPA is granted, and it is further

ORDERED, that the Texas Plaintiffs' TDTPA claim is abated for sixty days after the Texas Plaintiffs serve written notice [*84] on Abbott. The Texas Plaintiffs must provide notice within twenty days of the date this Order issues, and notify the Court when they have done so, and it is further

ORDERED, that the Defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Rule 12(c) as to the Plaintiffs' claims under the NYCPA, NHCPA, and TDTPA is denied, and it is further

ORDERED, that the Defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Rule 12(c) as to the Plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief is granted, and it is further ORDERED, that the Plaintiffs are directed to file a second amended complaint consistent with the rulings contained herein within 20 days of the date of this order. If the Texas Plaintiffs do not comply with the notice requirement within twenty days of the date of this order, the Court will consider a motion by the Defendant to dismiss any claims asserted on behalf of the Texas Plaintiffs in the second amended complaint.

SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM

ROBERT F. KELLY, Sr. J.

Presently before the Court is the Motion for Protective Order filed by European Telecommunications Standards Institute ("ETSI"), the response in opposition by Plaintiff, Trueposition, Inc. ("Trueposition"), and ESTI's reply. For the reasons provided below, ESTI's Motion for a Protective Order will be denied.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY[1]

TruePosition [*3] describes itself as a "leading innovator in developing and marketing high accuracy location products that operate over cellular telecommunications networks." (Am. Compl. ¶ 3.) It devotes substantial resources annually to research and development for positioning technology. (Id. ¶ 10.) TruePosition alleges that ETSI is a "not-for-profit" standard-setting organization ("SSO") [2] located in France comprised of more than 700 member companies from 62 countries, including countries outside of Europe. (Id. ¶ 15.) According to TruePosition, "[t]he business of ETSI is, fairly and impartially, to create globally applicable standards for information and telecommunications technologies, including for mobile telecommunications." (Id.)

This action stems from the alleged anticompetitive conduct of major players in the international telecommunications market within the context of a SSO. (Id. ¶¶ 1-9.) TruePosition alleges that LM Ericsson Telephone [*4] Company (Telefonaktiebolaget LM Ericsson) ("Ericsson"), Qualcomm, Inc., and Alcatel-Lucent USA, Inc. ("ALU") (collectively, the "Corporate Defendants") conspired to exclude its positioning technology, Uplink Time Difference of Arrival ("UTDOA"), [3] from standards promulgated by a SSO, 3GPP. (Id.) According to TruePosition, the Corporate Defendants were able to exclude UTDOA by collaboratively manipulating 3GPP's processes and procedures. (Id. ¶ 6.) TruePosition further alleges that ETSI and 3GPP ("SSO Defendants") participated in the conspiracy to exclude UTDOA from 3GPP standards by failing in their obligations to ensure that the Corporate Defendants complied with 3GPP Rules. (Id. ¶¶ 114-122.)

TruePosition filed a Complaint on July 20, 2011. Therein, TruePosition alleged that the conduct described above violated United States antitrust law giving rise to two causes of action: (1) violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; and (2) violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. TruePosition's Section 1 claim was asserted against all Defendants, while TruePosition's Section 2 claim [*5] was only asserted against Ericsson and ALU.

[1] A more in-depth factual and procedural background is provided in the Court's prior Memorandum Opinion dated January 6, 2012. See Trueposition, Inc. v. LM Ericsson Tel. Co., No. 11-4574, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1646, 2012 WL 33075 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 6, 2012).

[2] Third Generation Partnership Project ("3GPP") is a not-for-profit SSO located in France that is in business to "fairly and impartially . . . create global standards for mobile telecommunications technologies based on objective technical merit." (Am. Compl. ¶ 14.)

[3] "Positioning technology" refers to technology used to locate mobile handsets.

A majority of Defendants moved to dismiss the Complaint. Instead of dismissing the action, we allowed Trueposition to file an amended complaint curing any defects set forth in our January 6, 2012 Memorandum Opinion. Notably, ETSI moved for dismissal on the premise that we lack personal jurisdiction over it. In our Memorandum Opinion, we concluded that TruePosition's claim of jurisdiction was not frivolous, but limited jurisdictional discovery was needed in order to determine whether personal jurisdiction exists over ETSI. Trueposition filed an Amended Complaint on February 3, 2012. (See Am. Compl.) The Amended Complaint contains only one count asserted against all Defendants entitled "Combination Conspiracy in Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1)." (Id. ¶¶ 139-153.)

II. DISCUSSION

A. The Hague Convention on Taking Evidence Abroad in Civil or Commercial Matters, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1781, Mar. 18, 1970

The matter before the Court is a discovery dispute between TruePosition and ETSI. ETSI has moved for a protective order on the premise that the jurisdictional discovery between the parties must be secured through the Hague Convention [*6] on Taking Evidence Abroad in Civil or Commercial Matters, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1781, Mar. 18, 1970 ("Hague Evidence Convention"). TruePosition argues that the discovery should proceed in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. For the reasons that follow, the jurisdictional discovery shall be conducted pursuant to the Federal Rules.

The Hague Evidence Convention "prescribes certain procedures by which a judicial authority in one contracting nation may request evidence located in another contracting state." [4] Societe Nationale Industrielle Aerospatiale v. United States District Court for the Southern District of Iowa, 482 U.S. 522, 524, 107 S. Ct. 2542, 96 L. Ed. 2d 461 (1987); see also In re Automotive Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 358 F.3d 288, 299 (3d Cir. 2004). Notably, the Hague Evidence Convention is not mandatory and "was intended to establish optional procedures that would facilitate the taking of evidence abroad." Id. at 538. It "does not provide exclusive procedures for obtaining documents and information located in a foreign signatory nation's territory." In re Automotive Refinishing Paint, 358 F.3d at 300 (citing Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 533-36). "Accordingly, the Convention does not deprive [*7] the District Court of its jurisdiction to order, under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a foreign national party to the proceeding to produce evidence physically located within its territory." Id. (citing Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 539-40).

Significantly, the United States Supreme Court in Aerospatiale rejected a rule of first resort to the Hague Evidence Convention holding that the determination of whether to resort to the Hague Evidence Convention or the Federal Rules of Civil [*8] Procedure requires "prior scrutiny in each case of the particular facts, sovereign interests, and likelihood that such resort will prove effective." Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 546. "Aerospatiale rejects . . . a rule of first resort favoring the Convention on grounds of international comity and respect for 'judicial sovereignty' of the signatory nation in which evidence is sought is located." In re Automotive Refinishing Paint, 358 F.3d at 300 (citing Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 542-43). In Aerospatiale, the Supreme Court identified the following five factors to be considered in a comity analysis: (1) the importance of the documents or information requested to the litigation; (2) the degree of specificity of the requests; (3) whether the information originated in the United States; (4) the availability of alternative means of securing the information; and (5) the extent to which noncompliance with the requests would undermine important interests of the United States, or compliance of the requests would undermine important interests of the state where the information is located. [5] 482 U.S. at 543-44 & n.28. Courts construing the holding in Aerospatiale have articulated two additional factors [*9] to be considered: (1) good faith of the party resisting discovery; and (2) the hardship of compliance on the party or witness from whom discovery is sought. See Strauss v. Credit Lyonnais, 249 F.R.D. 429, 454-56 (E.D.N.Y. 2008); In re Global Power Equipment Group Inc., 418 B.R. 833, 847 (Bank. D. Del. 2009) (citing Strauss, 249 F.R.D. at 454-56). It is important to note that no one factor is dispositive. In re Global Power, 418 B.R. at 847.

[4] There is no disagreement amongst the parties that both the United States and France are contracting states under the Hague Evidence Convention. ETSI alleges, under the Hague Evidence Convention, that Letters of Request are the best method of taking discovery. "Upon receipt of a Letter of Request, which must provide specific information regarding the lawsuit and information sought to be discovered, the signatory state 'shall [then] apply the appropriate measure of compulsion as is customary for the execution of orders issued by the authorities of its own country.'" Pronova BioPharma Norge AS v. Teva Pharms. USA, Inc., 708 F. Supp. 2d 450, 452 (D. Del. 2010) (quoting Hague Evidence Convention, Art. 3, 10).

ETSI, as the proponent for the Hague Evidence Convention's application in this case, bears the burden of persuasion as to the optional use of its procedures. See In re Automotive Refinishing Paint, 358 F.3d at 305; see also In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 120 F. Supp. 2d 45, 52 n.7 (D.D.C. 2000) (listing cases). "The burden is not great, however, since the 'Convention procedures are available whenever they will facilitate the gathering of evidence by the means authorized in the Convention.'" Id. (quoting Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 541). When deciding whether to require [*10] parties to resort to the Hague Evidence Convention, courts must be mindful of "unnecessary, or unduly burdensome, discovery." Id.

Importantly, we also point out that there is no exception to the Aerospatiale holding for jurisdictional discovery. See In re Automotive Refinishing Paint, 358 F.3d at 302 ("[W]e see no legal barrier to exercising the discretion given to trial courts by Aerospatiale in cases of jurisdictional discovery.") "It is well established that the trial court has inherent power and jurisdiction to decide whether it has jurisdiction." Id. at 303. "[T]he distinction drawn . . . between 'merits' discovery and 'jurisdictional' discovery [is] predicated on a false dichotomy of having and not having jurisdiction, [and] amounts to no real difference because the court has jurisdiction for either type of discovery." Id.

B. Analysis

ETSI argues that it "faces potential criminal liability under French law if it responds to discovery requests that do not comply with the Hague Convention." (ETSI Mem. Law Support Mot. Protective Order at 1.) ETSI points to a French Blocking Statute, French Penal Code Law No. 80-538, which is a French criminal statute that prescribes sanctions for [*11] French nationals who disclose information during foreign discovery without using the procedures established under the Hague Evidence Convention. See French Penal Code Law No. 80-538. Specifically, the French Blocking Statute provides:

> Article 1A of French Penal Code Law No. 80-538
> Subject to applicable treaties or international agreements, it is prohibited for a natural person having the French citizenship or residing in France as well for a director, representative, agent or an employee of a legal entity having its registered office or a branch in France, to communicate by writing, orally or in any other form, in whatever place or location, to Foreign Public Authorities any documentation or information in economic, commercial, industrial, financial or technical fields, whenever such communication may be detrimental to the sovereignty, security or essential economic interests of France or to Public Order as specified if need be by the administrative authority.
> Article 1, bis
> Subject to applicable treaties or international agreements and laws and regulations, it is prohibited for anyone to request, look for, or transmit in writing, orally or in any other form, any document or information [*12] in economic, commercial, industrial, financial or technical fields for the purpose of gathering evidence in view of foreign civil or administrative proceedings or in the framework of said proceedings.

[5] The five factors listed above, elucidated by the Supreme Court in Aerospatiale, are set forth in the Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law of the United States § 442(1)(c).

French Penal Code Law No. 80-538. Additionally, ETSI asserts that a proper balancing of French and United States interests pursuant to the comity analysis in Aerospatiale shows that due respect should be given to France's sovereign interest in ensuring that discovery in France is conducted in compliance with the Hague Evidence Convention. (ETSI's Reply at 2.)

Trueposition argues that the procedures pursuant to the Hague Evidence Convention do not apply, even in light of the French Blocking Statute. Relying upon the Supreme Court decision in Aerospatiale, and the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit's holding in In re Automotive Refinishing Paint, Trueposition argues that its jurisdictional discovery was properly propounded under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. [*13] (Trueposition's Mem. Law Opp'n ETSI's Mot. for Protective Order at 2.) Trueposition argues that the French Blocking Statute does not mandate that jurisdictional discovery in this case be governed by the Hague Evidence Convention, and that the comity factors specified in Aerospatiale overwhelmingly support discovery pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (Id. at 13.)

The French Blocking Statute is not dispositive of whether the Hague Evidence Convention should be utilized in this case. As noted by the Supreme Court in Aerospatiale, blocking statutes "do not deprive an American court of the power to order a party subject to its jurisdiction to produce evidence even though the act of production may violate that statute." Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 544 n.9; see also In re Automotive Refinishing Paint, 358 F.3d at 300 (stating that Aerospatiale reiterates the well-settled view that blocking statutes do not deprive U.S. courts of their jurisdiction to order a foreign national party to produce evidence located within its country through the Federal Rules); Schindler Elevator Corp. v. Otis Elevator Co., 657 F. Supp. 2d 525, 533-34 (D.N.J. 2009) (party's reliance on Swiss Penal Law [*14] unavailing pointing out that foreign statutes prohibiting discovery do not bind American courts); *In re Aspartame Antitrust Litig., No. 06-1732, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109670, 2008 WL 2275531, at 4 (E.D. Pa. May 13, 2008) (finding that a Swiss blocking statute does not mandate that the Hague Convention should be utilized over the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure); Strauss, 249 F.R.D. at 454 ("The Supreme Court examined . . . the French Blocking Statute, and ordered discovery notwithstanding the penalties that could be imposed.") Specifically addressing the French Blocking Statute, the Aerospatiale Court stated that "[i]t is clear that American courts are not required to adhere blindly to the directives of such a statute." Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 544.

Our analysis of the comity factors as they pertain to the specific facts of this case shows that several factors favor Trueposition, while others favor ETSI. The documents in question deal with jurisdictional discovery regarding ETSI's contacts with the United States and are relevant discovery. In fact, such limited jurisdictional discovery, which is not nearly as intrusive as merits discovery, has been ordered by this Court so that we can determine whether personal [*15] jurisdiction over ETSI is proper. See In re Automotive Refinishing Paint, 358 F.3d at 302 ("[W]e see no legal barrier to exercising the discretion given to trial courts by Aerospatiale in cases of jurisdictional discovery."). The discovery requests are specific and adequately tailored to the jurisdictional issue at hand. The majority of the documents at issue, or possibly all of the documents, originated in France because ETSI's only offices and its employees are located in France.

As for the availability of alternative means of securing the information, "the Federal Rules are the normal methods for litigation involving foreign national parties," In re Automotive Refinishing Paint, 358 F.3d 288; however, the Hague Evidence Convention was intended to establish optional procedures for facilitating the taking of evidence abroad. See Aerospatiale, 482 U.S. at 538. Even though both the Federal Rules and the Hague Evidence Convention are means of securing information, it must be noted that the procedures required pursuant to the Hague Evidence Convention are much more likely to be time-consuming than the procedures under the Federal Rules. See In re Automotive Refinishing Paint, 358 F.3d at 300 [*16] ("Aerospatiale notes that in many situations, the Convention procedures would be unduly time-consuming and expensive, and less likely to produce needed evidence than direct use of the Federal Rules."); see also *In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., No. 06-1775, 278 F.R.D. 51, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30598, 2010 WL 1189341, at 2 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 29, 2010) ("[T]he outcome of a request pursuant to the Convention is by no means certain, and making the request will undeniably result in delays of unknown, and perhaps considerable, duration.") Both parties in this case have a strong interest in an efficient and speedy means of obtaining this jurisdictional discovery so that the threshold issue of personal jurisdiction over ETSI can be resolved, and this case, in which time is of the essence, can progress forward.

Regarding the hardship of compliance potentially undermining important interests of the United States and France, we find that several strong national interests of the United States are implicated. This action involves allegations of alleged anticompetitive conduct of major players in the international telecommunications market within the context of a conspiracy claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. [*17] There is a strong national interest in enforcing the policies of free market competition that underlie the Sherman Act, especially in an antitrust case involving the international telecommunications market. Trueposition has an interest in bringing these claims in a timely fashion before an American court and, similarly, the United States has an interest in fully and fairly adjudicating such suits before the federal judiciary. The French interest is a sovereign interest in managing access to information within its borders, as well as attempting to protect its citizens from discovery in foreign litigation. As previously stated, the discovery in this case is limited to jurisdictional discovery and does not seem to be the vexatious discovery that the French are attempting to protect their citizens from with the French Blocking Statute. Upon consideration of the interests of both countries, it is clear that France's relatively weak national interest in prohibiting disclosure of information regarding jurisdictional contacts of a SSO with worldwide membership is outweighed by the significant national interests of the United States outlined above.

The final factors regarding the good faith [*18] of the party resisting discovery and the potential hardship that compliance with the discovery request imposes upon ETSI weigh slightly in favor of ETSI. ETSI is a French entity and, thereby, it falls under the purview of the French Blocking Statute which specifically prohibits production of documents relating to foreign judicial or administrative proceedings. "The prospect that the foreign litigant would face criminal penalties rather than civil penalties weighs in favor of the objecting party." In re Global Power, 418 B.R. at 849 (quoting Strauss, 249 F.R.D. at 454). "If, however, the objecting litigant is a party to the action, courts accord that party's hardship less weight." Id. (quoting Strauss, 249 F.R.D. at 454). Notably, as Trueposition points out, ETSI has presented no evidence that the French Blocking Statute has ever been enforced in the context of a federal suit, not even an antitrust case, filed in the United States regarding jurisdictional discovery. [6] In addition, ETSI does not present any evidence showing that it faces a significant risk of prosecution by complying with Trueposition's discovery requests under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. In fact, there are [*19] "other courts [that] have held 'the French Blocking Statute does not subject defendant to a realistic risk of prosecution, and cannot be construed as a law intended to universally govern the conduct of litigation within the jurisdiction of a United States court.'" In re Global Power, 418 B.R. at 850 (quoting Bodner v,. Paribas, 202 F.R.D. 370, 375 (E.D.N.Y. 2000)).

In this case, the interests of comity as set forth by the Supreme Court in Aerospatiale weigh in favor of using the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The strong national interest of the United States in enforcing the policies of free market competition that underlie the Sherman Act, especially in an antitrust case involving the international telecommunications market, is significant in comparison to the weak national interest of France in prohibiting disclosure of information regarding jurisdictional contacts of a French entity with worldwide membership and protecting its citizens from burdensome discovery in foreign litigation. Likewise, the United States has a strong interest in fully and fairly adjudicating Sherman Act suits before the federal judiciary in an efficient and timely fashion. The French sovereign interest of managing access to information within its borders, as well as attempting to protect its citizens from discovery in foreign litigation, pales in comparison to the interests at stake for the United States. In light of the above, and [*21] being sensitive to the fact that ETSI is a foreign litigant attempting to follow the laws of its own nation, we conclude that ETSI has failed to meet its burden of persuasion that the Hague

[6] In support of its argument that the French Blocking Statute is enforced, ETSI refers to In re Advocat "Christopher X," Cour de Cassation, Chambre Criminelle [Criminal Chamber of Supreme Court], Paris, Dec. 12, 2007, No. 07-83228, a 2007 case in which the French Supreme Court upheld the conviction and €10,000 fine against an attorney found to have violated the French Blocking Statute. (ETSI Mem. Law Support Mot. Protective Order at 7 n.13.) The facts in this case significantly differ from the facts in Christopher X. This case involves a Court Order for jurisdictional discovery, and does not involve allegations of false statements as found in Christopher X. Also, numerous courts have discounted the fear of criminal prosecution in light of the ruling in Christopher X as a basis for permitting French litigants to invoke the [*20] Hague Evidence Convention. See *In re Air Cargo, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30598, 2010 WL 1189341, at 3; In re Global Power, 418 B.R. at 849; Strauss, 249 F.R.D. at 450.

Evidence Convention should be followed in this case. Accordingly, ETSI is ordered to comply with Trueposition's discovery requests as set forth in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

III. CONCLUSION

ETSI's Motion for a Protective Order requiring Trueposition to withdraw its jurisdictional discovery under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and pursue such discovery in accordance with the Hague Evidence Convention, is denied. A party seeking a protective order under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(c) has the burden of establishing good cause. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c); see also Pansy v. Borough of Stroudsburg, 23 F.3d 772, 786 (3d Cir. 1994) ("In the context of discovery, it is well-established that a party wishing to obtain an order of protection over discovery material must demonstrate that 'good cause' exists for the order of protection."). Additionally, as previously explained, the party seeking the application of the Hague Evidence Convention rather than the Federal Rules bears the burden of [*22] persuasion. See In re Automotive Refinishing Paint, 358 F.3d at 305. ETSI has failed to meet either burden. Consequently, its Motion for Protective Order is denied, and the jurisdictional discovery at issue shall proceed according to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. ETSI's request for oral argument is denied.

An appropriate Order follows.

ORDER

AND NOW this 6th day of March, 2012, upon consideration of the Motion for Protective Order filed by European Telecommunications Standards Institute ("ETSI"), the response in opposition by Plaintiff, Trueposition, Inc. ("Trueposition"), and ESTI's reply, it is hereby ORDERED that:

1. the Motion (Doc. No. 89) is DENIED;
2. ETSI's request for an oral argument is DENIED; and
3. the jurisdictional discovery between Trueposition and ETSI shall be conducted pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Opinion

Plaintiffs Kathleen Conroy, James Linden, Nancy Linden, Michael Greenspan, Joyce Greenspan, and Jonathan Weiss appeal from an order denying their motion for class certification of their "third amended class action complaint" against defendants Fresh Del Monte Produce, Inc., Del Monte Fresh Produce Company and Del Monte Fresh Produce, N.A., Inc. (hereinafter also referred to as Del Monte). They argue that the trial court applied incorrect legal criteria and made erroneous legal assumptions in denying their request for class certification. We disagree and affirm the order.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

In 2004, federal class action litigation was commenced against Del Monte, "on behalf of all those who purchased 'Fresh Del Monte Gold[™]' pineapples . . . in the United States . . . [from] March 1, 1996" forward. (In re Fresh Del

Monte Pineapples Antitrust Litigation (S.D.N.Y. Feb, 20, 2008, No. 1:04-md-1628 (RMB), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1838*, pp. *3-4 [nonpub. opn.].)[1] The federal plaintiffs included "both Direct Purchasers, i.e., all those who purchased Fresh Del Monte Gold™ pineapples [*2] directly from Del Monte (such as [retail grocery stores]), and Indirect Purchasers, i.e., 'all end-payors,' including 'consumers, the last persons . . . in the chain of distribution' who purchased such pineapples. (Id. at p. *5.) It was alleged that "Del Monte 'improperly obtained and maintained a monopoly over the propagation, marketing, and sale of fresh, whole, extra-sweet pineapple . . . by: (i) securing a patent, through the prosecution of a fraudulent patent application with the United States Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") for a pineapple variety it knew, and has now admitted, was unpatentable . . .; (ii) issuing intentionally false and misleading letters to competitors and others stating that the "Fresh Del Monte Gold ™" pineapple was patented by [Del Monte] and threatening litigation if they engage in the propagation, marketing, or sale of that pineapple . . .; [and] (iii) commencing and pursuing sham patent litigation in order to foreclose competition in the fresh, whole, extra-sweet pineapple market . . . .'" It was further alleged that "'Del Monte used its unlawfully obtained monopoly power to charge supracompetitive[2]] prices for the [Fresh Del Monte Gold ™] pineapples, [*3] thereby causing both direct and indirect purchasers of [such] pineapples to sustain injury to their business and property.' [Citation.]" (Id. at p. *4.)

After the filing of the federal lawsuit, plaintiffs in this state court litigation (hereinafter referred to as "plaintiffs") filed separate lawsuits, which were consolidated in the state trial court. After the trial court sustained two demurrers, plaintiffs filed a third amended class action complaint, alleging a single cause of action for violation of the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.[3]) "on behalf of a putative class of California indirect purchasers [consumers] of Fresh Del Monte Gold™ pineapples." The factual allegations in support of the UCL claim are essentially identical to those in the parallel federal complaint. According to plaintiffs, Del Monte's alleged conduct violates the UCL because "it [*4] threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law (namely the Sherman Act § 2),[4] as well as violates the policy and spirit of both federal and California state antitrust laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition in the whole, fresh extra-sweet pineapple market. Further, [Del Monte's] conduct constitutes a practice that offends established public policies of not engaging in anti-competitive activity and thwarts fair competition in the marketplace." Plaintiffs also allege that Del Monte's conduct violates the UCL provision that prohibits unfair conduct in violation of the public policy concerns articulated in the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45(a)[5]). Plaintiffs seek declaratory relief, restitution, interest, punitive damages, attorney fees, and costs.

In 2008, the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York certified a nationwide class of direct pineapple purchasers with respect to their "claims of monopolization" under Section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 2) for which they sought injunctive relief and treble damages. (In re Fresh Del Monte Pineapples Antitrust Litigation, supra, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18388, pp. *5, 14)~ However, the federal district court denied class

2 "Supracompetitive" means artificially high. (Sanders v. Brown (9th Cir. 2007) 504 F.3d 903, 909.)

3 "We shall refer to Business and Professions Code section 17200 et seq. as the unfair competition law (UCL) even though this is not a legislatively adopted name for these codes sections. However, our Supreme Court refers to these sections in the same way. [Citation.]" (Smith v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 700, 705, fn. 3, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399; [*5] see Manufacturers Life Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 10 Cal.4th 257, 263, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 220, 895 P.2d 56.)

4 Section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 2), reads: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, . . ., shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . . ." "Use of monopoly power 'to destroy threatened competition' is a violation of the 'attempt to monopolize' clause of § 2 of the Sherman Act. [Citations.]" (Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States (1973) 410 U.S. 366, 377, 93 S. Ct. 1022, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359.)

5 15 United States Code section 45, subdivision (a), reads, in pertinent part: "Unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, are hereby declared unlawful."

certification to indirect purchasers (which included [*6] California indirect purchasers) on the grounds that class litigation would not be "manageable" for two principal reasons: "(1) [indirect purchaser] Plaintiffs failed to satisfy their burden of 'present[ing] a damages model that can be used on a class-wide basis' . . . and (2) [indirect purchaser] Plaintiffs failed to present a reliable method of distributing any damages to putative Class Members." (*Id. at pp. 17, 33, 26.) Certification of an "Indirect Purchaser Class seeking only injunctive relief" was also denied because injunctive relief was being pursued by the certified class of direct purchasers, who were "more directly injured by the [alleged] antitrust activit[y] and in a better position to prosecute a claim based upon that activity," and therefore, "[a] '"significant antitrust violation [would not go] undetected or unremedied.'" [Citations.]" (*Id. at pp. 42-43.)[6]

Thereafter, in May of 2009, plaintiffs [*7] in this state lawsuit moved to certify their third amended complaint as a class action.[7] The motion was opposed by Del Monte. After oral argument and the submission of supplemental motion papers, the trial court denied the motion for the following stated reasons: "Despite the common questions that exist, very substantial individual questions must be resolved to establish injury to class members who purchased pineapples from different direct purchasers in different competitive markets throughout the State. Even if liability can be established, Plaintiffs have not sustained their burden of showing how members of the class who may have been injured by defendants' anticompetitive behavior many years ago can be notified and participate in any kind of cost effective claims process. Further, because the anticompetitive conduct ended five years ago and is being pursued in the direct purchaser class action in federal court, defendants and others similarly situated continue to have ample incentives to comply with the federal antitrust law and California's [UCL]." In so ruling, the trial court adopted pertinent portions of the federal district court's decision refusing to certify a federal indirect [*8] purchaser class. (*In re Fresh Del Monte Pineapples Antitrust Litigation, supra, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18388, at pp. 17-21, 26-30, 33-42.)[8]

Plaintiffs filed a timely notice of appeal. (See Linder v. Thrifty Oil Co. (2000) 23 Cal.4th 429, 435, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 2 P.3d 27 ["denial of certification to an entire class is an appealable order"] (Linder).)

[6] According to Del Monte, the federal indirect purchasers sought interlocutory review of the denial of their motion for class certification, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure, rule 23(f), and the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit denied their petition.

[7] In their complaint, plaintiffs propose a class defined as: "All persons and entities who currently reside in California and who, at any time prior to May 6, 2003, purchased a pineapple with the 'Gold' designation indirectly from Defendants (the 'Class')." Excluded from the proposed class were "Defendants, their parents, subsidiaries and affiliates." In their motion for class certification, the class period was modified to run "from April 1, 2000, through and including the date of trial, or until the anticompetitive effects of the conduct alleged herein have subsided, whichever is earlier (the 'Class Period')." In its order denying class certification, the trial court stated that plaintiffs propose a class defined as: "'All persons and entities who resided in California during the period April 1, 2000, through April 1, 2009 (the 'Class Period') and who during the Class Period purchased a pineapple with a 'Gold' designation indirectly from Defendants for their own use and not for resale.'"

[8] Since this appeal was perfected, the United States Court [*9] of Appeals for the Second Circuit dismissed the federal direct purchasers' class action in a summary order on the merits. (American Banana Co. v. J. Bonafede Co. (2d Cir., 2010) 407 Fed. Appx. 520, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 23022.) The federal circuit court held that direct purchasers' claims failed because, assuming Del Monte possessed monopoly power in a market limited to the Fresh Del Monte Gold™ pineapple, there was no showing that Del Monte's conduct had the requisite anticompetitive effect of delaying its competitors' entry into the market. (*Id. at pp. 2, 4-5.)

the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes certification [*10] of a class when "the question is one of a common or general interest, of many persons, or when the parties are numerous, and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court." To obtain certification, "the class proponent must demonstrate that there is an ascertainable, manageable class of plaintiffs and a well-defined community of interest among class members, such that litigating the controversy as a class action would be a superior method of resolving the dispute and of substantial benefit to the litigants and the court. [Citations.]" (Walsh v. IKON Office Solutions, Inc. (2007) 148 Cal.App.4th 1440, 1450, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 534 (Walsh).) "The community of interest requirement involves three factors: '(1) predominate common questions of law or fact; (2) class representatives with claims or defenses typical of the class; and (3) class representatives who can adequately represent the class.' [Citation.] Other relevant considerations include the probability that each class member will come forward ultimately to prove his or her separate claim to a portion of the total recovery and whether the class approach would actually serve to deter and redress alleged wrongdoing. [Citation.]" (Linder, supra, 23 Cal.4th at p. 435.) [*11] However, "group action also has the potential to create injustice," and therefore, "trial courts are required to '"carefully weigh respective benefits and burdens and to allow maintenance of the class action only where substantial benefits accrue both to litigants and the courts."' [Citation.]" (Ibid.)

"Because trial courts are ideally situated to evaluate the efficiencies and practicalities of permitting group action, they are afforded great discretion in granting or denying certification." (Linder, supra, 23 Cal.4th at p. 435.) Thus, "[o]ur task on appeal is . . . to determine . . . whether the trial court has abused its discretion in denying certification." (Osborne v. Subaru of America, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal.App.3d 646, 654, 243 Cal. Rptr. 815.) "Absent other error, we will 'not disturb a trial court ruling on class certification which is supported by substantial evidence unless (1) improper criteria were used [citation]; or (2) erroneous legal assumptions were made [citation].' [Citation.] '"So long [*13] as [the trial] court applies proper criteria and its action is founded on a rational basis, its ruling must be upheld." [Citations.]' [Citation.]" (Caro v. Procter & Gamble Co. (1993) 18 Cal.App.4th 644, 655, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 (Caro).) We conclude that in this case the trial court applied appropriate criteria and did not make erroneous legal assumptions in denying plaintiffs' motion for class certification.

In concluding that a class of indirect purchasers would be neither manageable nor superior to alternative methods of resolving the parties' controversy, the trial court explained: "There is a point where the individual monetary claims are so small in comparison to the costs of administration that even the benefits of a class action do not justify pursuit of the claims. In that circumstance, the interests of the absent class members might no longer be served by collective active. [Citations.] [¶] In this case it appears that class certification will not confer any appreciable monetary benefit on the absent class members. The Court can identify several ways to distribute any monetary recovery, but none would effectively return money to the injured parties. [Fn. omitted.] [¶] Ideally, the Plaintiffs could [*14] locate the actual persons who bought Del Monte extra-sweet pineapples in the class period and distribute the appropriate amounts of any monetary relief to those persons. It will, however, be difficult, if not impossible, to identify the specific persons who purchased Del Monte extra sweet pineapples during the class period, particularly during the early years when Plaintiffs' proof of illegal overcharges to direct purchasers will be strongest. Plaintiffs suggest using retailer data from their loyalty card programs to determine which persons purchase pineapples and then to provide notice directly to them. This approach is seriously flawed because not all retailers collect such data, any collected data likely has not been retained for more than the most recent portion of the class period, and the retailers have no obligation to turn over their data. [Citation.][10] A second approach would be a broad notice program through appropriate publications followed by class member self-identification. This is a potential option, but one that historically has not been particularly effective. People tend not to remember, much less keep records of, what specific groceries they bought last month, much [*15] less several years ago. [Citations.][11] Further, given the small amounts involved for any individual class members they would have little incentive to self-identify, particularly if doing so required them to respond to a notice by filling out a claim form and mailing it back. [¶] Even assuming that Plaintiffs could identify the members of the class or a notice program would lead the members of the class to self-identify, it is highly probable that the administrative costs of identifying the class members and returning a few dollars to each would significantly outweigh the value of the distribution itself. Assuming that Plaintiffs prove that Del Monte overcharged by an average of $0.20 per pound of pineapples over the class period, that an average of $0.10 per pound overcharge was passed through to consumers, and that a hypothetical consumer filing a claim bought 15 pounds of pineapples each year for 5 years, then the consumer's recovery would be $7.50. [Citations.][12] The time and expense of providing notice, making the claim, processing the claim, and paying the claim could easily outweigh the value of the claim itself." Citing to the declarations of plaintiffs' experts Melissa Kanter [*16] and Katherine Kinsella, the trial court concluded that "Plaintiffs' proposals to identify frequent pineapple purchasers or current pineapple purchasers and distribute any monetary relief to them d[id] not appear reasonable on the facts of this case. [Citations.] Plaintiffs have not shown that they can develop evidence showing that those who purchased pineapples during the early years of the class period when Plaintiffs are most likely to be able to establish that monopoly overcharges occurred and those who are currently buying pineapples are the same people. [Citation.]" Finally, the trial court noted that although it "could approve a plan of cy pres distribution under [Code of Civil Procedure section] 384 that would benefit the class indirectly," it did not appear that the statutory provision authorized certification of a class action "when the [c]ourt finds little or no prospect of being able to distribute any significant portion of a damages award to members of the class in a cost effective manner."

[9] "Before 2004, any person could assert representative claims under the unfair competition law to obtain restitution or injunctive relief against unfair or unlawful business practices. Such claims did not have to be brought as a class action, and plaintiff had standing to sue even without having personally suffered any injury. [Citations.]" (Arias, supra, 46 Cal.4th at p. 977.) However, in 2004, "the electorate passed Proposition 64, an initiative measure," which amended Business and Professions Code 17203 "to provide that a private plaintiff may bring a representative action under this law only if the plaintiff has 'suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of such unfair competition' and 'complies with Section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure . . . .' [Fn. omitted.]" (Arias, supra, 46 Cal.4th at pp. 977.) "Notably absent from the ballot materials [for Proposition [*12] 64] is any indication that the purpose of the initiative was to alter the way in which class actions operate in the context of the UCL. Indeed other than the requirement that the representative plaintiff comply with Code of Civil Procedure section 382, the ballot materials contain no reference whatsoever to class actions, nor is there any indication that Proposition 64 was intended in any way to alter the rules surrounding class action certification." (In re Tobacco II Cases, supra, 46 Cal.4th at p. 318.)

We see no merit to plaintiffs' arguments challenging "[t]he trial court's superiority and manageability determinations." As explained by our Supreme Court in Blue Chip Stamps v. Superior Court (1976) 18 Cal.3d 381, 386, 134 Cal. Rptr. 393, 556 P.2d 755 (Blue Chip Stamps): "[W]hen potential recovery to the individual is small and when substantial time and expense would be consumed in distribution, the purported class member is unlikely to receive any appreciable benefit. The damage action being unmanageable and without substantial benefit to class members, it must then be dismissed. (In re Hotel Telephone Charges (9th Cir. 1974) 500 F.2d 86, 91-92 (potential recovery of $6 per class member); Devidian v. Automotive Service Dealers Assn. (1973) 35 Cal.App.3d 978, 986, 111 Cal. Rptr. 228 [*18] (most claims $10 or less); Stilson v. Reader's Digest Assn., Inc. (1972) 28 Cal.App.3d 270, 273-274, 104 Cal. Rptr. 581 (millions of class members entitled to nominal damages).)"

By moving for certification of a "smaller, more manageable California-only indirect purchaser class," plaintiffs asserted that they could overcome the manageability concerns raised by the federal district court as to the federal indirect purchaser plaintiffs' failure to offer a meaningful proposal for distributing relief to absent class members.[13]

[10] At this point in the order, the trial court cited to portions of the deposition testimony of plaintiffs' expert Melissa Kantor.

[11] At this point in the order, the trial court cited to [*17] portions of the federal district court decision in *In re Fresh Del Monte Pineapples Antitrust Litigation, supra, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18388, at pp. 26-30, 36-42.

[12] At this point in the order, the trial court cited to the declaration of plaintiffs' expert Gary L. French, PhD., and supporting tables attached to the declaration, that showed that consumers bought pineapples infrequently, and the alleged overcharges paid by direct purchasers ranged from $0.00 to $0.40 per pound.

[13] In concluding that the federal plaintiffs' "proposed 'formal claims procedure' [was] also not a reliable method of distributing damages" to a class of indirect purchasers (consumers) of Fresh Del Monte Gold™ pineapples, the federal district court found: "(i) Plaintiffs have not established what percentage of the Indirect Purchaser Class is likely to receive notice of the claims process [citations]; (ii) given the relatively small claims involved in terms of monetary value (and the proposed payment of claims in coupons), only a small percentage of Class Members would likely file claims [citations]; (iii) many filed claims are not likely to be accurate or verifiable [citations]; and (iv) the cost of notice and claims administration (which Plaintiffs failed to estimate) might

Thus, plaintiffs proffered the affidavits of two experts to demonstrate "a manageability plan for this action that was lacking in" the federal litigation. However, the experts were not asked and did not proffer any estimates of the costs of their proposed methods of identifying and notifying putative class members and the administration of any claims procedure. Rather, plaintiffs merely argued, in a conclusory fashion, that "the costs of administration and notice likely will be negligible in comparison to the total aggregate benefit to the class." Consequently, we conclude that the trial court acted well within its discretion by finding in substance that plaintiffs' evidence did not [*19] overcome the manageability issues identified by the federal district court. Contrary to plaintiffs' suggestion, the trial court did not have an obligation "to create . . . cost-effective and meaningful notice and fund distribution programs." Instead, "plaintiffs' failure to propose . . . how the litigation of individualized damages could be handled in a manageable fashion as part of its proposed class action bars plaintiffs' claim that the trial court failed '"to consider the use of . . . innovative procedural tools proposed by a party to certify a manageable class."'" (Evans v. Lasco Bathware, Inc. (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 1417, 1429, fn. 6, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 354 (Evans), quoting Sav-On Drug Stores, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 34 Cal.4th 319, 339, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 906, 96 P.3d 194 (Sav-On Drug Stores), italics added in Evans.) Nor do we see any merit to plaintiffs' assertion that the trial court "simply assumed, without relying on any record evidence, that administrative costs would outweigh the value of the distribution itself [citation]." The trial court's example of a hypothetical consumer's recovery was based on evidence proffered by plaintiffs' expert. Given that plaintiffs do not challenge the court's example that a putative class [*20] member's monetary recovery could be as low as $7.50, we see no error in the trial court's finding that "[t]he time and expense of providing notice, making the claim, processing the claim, and paying the claim could easily outweigh the value of the claim itself."

Plaintiffs [*21] also argue that the trial court misinterpreted the concept of a "cy pres" or "fluid recovery" as described in Code of Civil Procedure section 384.[14] "The term 'fluid recovery' refers to the application of the equitable doctrine of cy près in the context of a modern class action." (Granberry v. Islay Investments (1995) 9 Cal.4th 738, 750, fn. 7, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 650, 889 P.2d 970.) It "developed as a means by which to distribute the residue of a favorable class action judgment remaining after payment to those class members who have sufficient interest in obtaining recovery and can produce the documentation necessary to file individual claims." (Kraus v. Trinity Management Services, Inc. (2000) 23 Cal.4th 116, 127-128, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 485, 999 P.2d 718 (Kraus).) Contrary to plaintiffs' contentions, "[w]e do not read the trial court's comments as necessarily denying the existence of the remedy of [fluid recovery] in a properly certified class action, but as a determination that plaintiffs here failed to carry their burden of establishing the prerequisites for a certifiable class. [Citation.] The court was saying that by itself," plaintiffs' desire to distribute any restitutionary relief by a fluid recovery mechanism was not sufficient to demonstrate that [*22] certification of a class was appropriate in this case. (Frieman v. San Rafael Rock Quarry, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal.App.4th 29, 35, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 82 (Frieman).) We see no abuse of discretion in the trial court's finding.

Plaintiffs' reliance on Corbett v. Superior Court (2002) 101 Cal.App.4th 649, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 (Corbett), and In re Vitamin Cases (2003) 107 Cal.App.4th 820, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425, both cases decided by Division Two of this court, and Bruno v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal.App.3d 120, 179 Cal. Rptr. 342 (Bruno), decided by Division Two of the Fourth District Court of Appeal, is misplaced. "The court in Corbett specified: 'Where a class has properly been certified, a plaintiff in a UCL action may seek disgorgement of unlawful profits into a fluid recovery fund.' (Corbett, supra, 101 Cal.App.4th at p. 655, italics added.) Even according to Corbett, a desire for a particular remedy is not itself [*23] a reason for certification." (Frieman, supra, 116 Cal.App.4th at pp. 35-36.) Similarly, the court in Bruno held only that a fluid class recovery was not prohibited in Cartwright Act[15] class actions. (Bruno, overwhelm any relatively minimal benefit to the Class [citations]." (*In re Fresh Del Monte Pineapples Antitrust Litigation, supra, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18388, at pp. 40-41.)

[14] Code of Civil Procedure section 384 reads, in pertinent part: "(a) It is the intent of the Legislature in enacting this section to ensure that the unpaid residuals in class action litigation are distributed, to the extent possible, in a manner designed either to further the purposes of the underlying causes of action, or to promote justice for all Californians."

[15] The Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et. seq.) is our state [*24] law that governs certain forms of antitrust conduct. As the trial court noted in its order: "Because no Cartwright Act claim is presented, but only a [Business and Professions Code section] 17200 claim based upon [a] violation of the Sherman Act, an important question not addressed on this motion is supra, 127 Cal.App.3d at p. 135.) The Bruno court specifically commented that "damages distribution" was to be addressed in the first instance by the trial court "when it considered whether the lawsuit might be maintained as a class action," and was "but one of several factors that must be weighed and balanced to determine the correctness of maintaining a class action." (Id. at p. 135, fn. 10; see Kraus, supra, 23 Cal.4th at p. 135 ["fluid recovery might be appropriate in a consumer class action"].) In In re Vitamin Cases, the appellate court's discussion of the appropriateness of a fluid recovery distribution was made in the context of approving a class action settlement. (107 Cal.App.4th a pp. 826-832.) Contrary to plaintiff's argument, the In re Vitamin Cases court did not focus or otherwise discuss in general the potential use of fluid recovery in deciding the appropriateness of certifying a class. (Ibid.)

Plaintiffs also challenge the trial court's reliance on the then pending federal direct purchasers class action. As explained by the trial court, a state class action was not necessary to deter defendant's allegedly anti-competitive action "[b]ecause the federal court has certified a class action on behalf of direct purchasers such as grocery stores." "[I]f plaintiffs prevail in that case defendants will be liable for treble damages based on the total overcharge" paid by direct purchasers, and Del Monte "will not be able to mitigate [its] damages by asserting that the federal plaintiffs passed the overcharge down through the chain of distribution. [*25] [Citations.]" Thus, "[a] plaintiffs' victory in the federal action [would] subject Del Monte to damages that [would] provide an effective deterrent to unlawful behavior. Although brought by private parties, the federal action is equivalent in its deterrent effect to an enforcement action by public prosecutors. [Citation.]"

Contrary to plaintiff's contention, a trial court may take into consideration """the advantages of alternative procedures for handling the total controversy""" in determining whether litigation may be maintained as a class action. (Caro, supra, 18 Cal.App.4th at p. 661.) The fact that plaintiffs' state lawsuit asserts a UCL cause of action, while the federal direct purchasers class action asserted causes of action based on federal antitrust law, did not preclude the trial court from looking at the federal proceeding as both actions involved the same alleged misconduct by Del Monte. (Ibid.; see also *In re Fresh Del Monte Pineapples Antitrust Litigation, supra, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18388, at p. 31 ["[t]he existence of relevant pending litigation may not favor certification [of an indirect purchaser class action], because 'to the extent plaintiffs pursue a class vehicle [*26] as a means of punishing defendants, preventing their retention of "ill gotten gains," or deterring future behavior, the existing [Direct Purchaser Class Action] may well serve those purposes'"].)

In their reply brief, plaintiffs argue that the trial court's reliance on the federal class action no longer supports its denial of class certification because the federal direct purchasers class action has now been dismissed.[16] However, "it would be eminently unfair to assess a trial court's exercise of discretion based on matters not before it at the time of decision." (Reese v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (1999) 73 Cal.App.4th 1225, 1237, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 346.) Additionally, dismissal of the federal litigation does not, by itself, warrant reversal. In assessing the appropriateness of class certification, the trial court properly considered and concluded the then-pending federal litigation would provide a better method of both adjudicating the parties' controversy and deterring any future antitrust violations by Del Monte. Concededly, dismissal of the federal class action now eliminates any potential monetary benefits that might have accrued to the benefit of California citizens. Nevertheless, the fact that the federal [*27] litigation has resulted in a favorable outcome to Del Monte does not support plaintiffs' argument that the trial court's denial of class certification now results in an unjust advantage to Del Monte.

Plaintiffs also raise several arguments challenging the trial court's finding that certification was not appropriate because individual questions would predominate over common questions regarding the impact of Del Monte's allegedly anti-competitive conduct on putative class members. After examining whether substantial evidence supports "the trial court's finding on predominance and draw[ing] inferences from the evidence in favor of the order" (Soderstedt v. CBIZ Southern California, LLC (2011) 197 Cal.App.4th 133, 144, 127 Cal. Rptr. 3d 394), we conclude that plaintiffs' arguments are unavailing.

whether the federal doctrine precluding actions by indirect purchasers for violation of the Sherman Act is part of [p]laintiffs' claim in this case. [Citation.] That issue would be a common one and the Court has not addressed it in ruling on this motion."

When, as here, the putative class members are indirect purchasers, a two-step analysis is necessary to determine the adverse impact caused by Del Monte's alleged anti-competitive conduct. (Somers v. Apple, Inc. (N.D. Cal. 2009) 258 F.R.D. 354, 358.) Plaintiffs must first show that direct purchasers (retailers) paid a supracompetitive cost for Fresh Del Monte Gold™ pineapples, and then plaintiffs [*28] must show that the direct purchasers, in turn, passed through some or all of the supracompetitive cost in the nature of supracompetitive prices to indirect purchasers (consumers). (Ibid.) Consequently, the fact that the trial court found plaintiffs had shown that common issues of law and fact would predominate in determining the aggregate amount Del Monte allegedly overcharged direct purchasers does not affect the trial court's ruling regarding the predominance factor as applied to the pass through of overcharges from direct purchasers to indirect purchasers, as plaintiffs suggest.

We also see no significance to plaintiffs' argument that "whether tracing is required and, if so, how it may be accomplished, are themselves questions common to the Class." In addressing plaintiff's motion for certification, the trial court properly considered "'how a trial on the merits would be conducted if a class were certified.' [Citations.] This, in turn, 'entails identifying the substantive issues that will control the outcome, assessing which issues will predominate, and then determining whether the issues are common to the class,' a process that ultimately 'prevents the class from degenerating into [*29] a series of individual trials.' [Citation.]" (Bell Atlantic Corp. v. AT&T Corp. (5th Cir. 2003) 339 F.3d 294, 302.) Plaintiffs assert that Del Monte sold millions of Fresh Del Monte Gold™ pineapples to thousands of customers. If the litigation proceeded as a class action, the trial court found that it would be faced with the complex task of evaluating "the pricing decisions of each California" direct purchaser "in each of the separate California markets" in which the direct purchasers sold pineapples in order to ascertain the impact of Del Monte's conduct on indirect purchasers, namely, whether any overcharges were passed through from retailers to putative class members. (See also Keating v. Philip Morris, Inc. (Minn. App. 1987) 417 N.W.2d 132, 137-138 ["lawsuit would remain unmanageable" even if liability and damages issues were bifurcated because it "would still leave the problem of determining the fact . . . of damage for each" indirect purchaser].)

Plaintiffs argue, however, that the impact of Del Monte's alleged anti-competitive conduct can be demonstrated without a showing of individual injury to putative class members, citing to B.W.I Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal.App.3d 1341, 235 Cal. Rptr. 228 [*30] (B.W.I Custom Kitchen) and Rosack v. Volvo of America Corp. (1982) 131 Cal.App.3d 741, 182 Cal. Rptr. 800 (Rosack). However, in those cases concerning price fixing—a per se violation of both federal and state antitrust laws—the courts have held that when a conspiracy to fix prices has been established and plaintiffs have established that they purchased the affected goods or services, the fact of injury or impact on a consumer can be treated as a common question for class certification because "a jury can infer the fact of injury," thereby "eliminat[ing] the need for each class member to prove individually the consequences of the defendants' actions to him or her." (Rosack, supra, 131 Cal.App.3d at p. 753; see B.W.I Custom Kitchen, supra, 191 Cal.App.3d at p. 1348.) In this case, we are not concerned with price fixing, but only allegations that Del Monte's purported market monopolization constituted unfair competition. The injury to consumers caused by Del Monte's allegedly wrongful conduct must be shown, and not inferred, as the UCL does not authorize "'an award of . . . restitution on behalf of a consumer who was never exposed in any way to an allegedly wrongful business practice.'" (Knapp v. AT&T Wireless Services, Inc. (2011) 195 Cal.App.4th 932, 945, 124 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565.)

We [*31] are also not persuaded by plaintiffs' argument that "[g]iven that the putative Class may be restored in the amount of Del Monte's ill-gotten gain realized as a result of its wrongful conduct (see, e.g., Juarez v. Arcadia Financial, Ltd. (2007) 152 Cal.App.4th 889, 913, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 382 [(Juarez)]), . . . 'tracing' monies paid by pineapple purchasers through the chain of distribution back to Del Monte is not an element of proof of their UCL claim." The UCL does not authorize disgorgement of "'all profits to a plaintiff who does not have an ownership interest in those profits.'" (Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 29 Cal.4th 1134, 1147, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937). Thus, even if plaintiffs could show the existence of a vested interest in any profits Del Monte may have received as a result of collecting moneys pursuant to their alleged wrongful business practices, plaintiffs would still have to establish that Del Monte's profits "can be traced directly to the ill-gotten funds" acquired from putative class members. (Juarez, supra 152 Cal.App.4th at p. 917 & fn. 16.) Indeed, plaintiffs concede as much in their third amended class action complaint in which they allege that they "can trace the overcharge they and all other [*32] members of the class paid in connection with their pineapple purchases through the retailers to Del Monte." Consequently, we conclude the trial court correctly considered that "[t]o prove causation/fact of injury on a classwide basis," plaintiffs would have to demonstrate a class-wide method of tracing the alleged supracompetitive prices through the chain of distribution from Del Monte to putative class members.

We also reject plaintiffs' contention that the trial court impermissibly treated their class certification motion as one for summary judgment by assessing the credibility of the parties' conflicting expert testimony as to whether and how to determine "the pass-through of overcharges (from retailers to consumers) resulting from Defendants' [alleged] anticompetitive conduct," and then adopting the opinion of defendants' expert on the merits. Plaintiffs' expert opined that proof defendant's conduct caused harm to consumers could be demonstrated on a class-wide basis because a trier of fact could presume that one hundred percent of Del Monte's alleged unlawful supracompetitive prices was passed through from retailers to consumers. The plaintiffs' expert's opinion was based on the [*33] following factors: Del Monte charged the same prices to grocery stores without regard to store size or geography, grocery stores had thin profit margins, and consumers were not price sensitive when shopping for pineapples. In rejecting the opinion of plaintiffs' expert, the trial court found in substance that the declaration of defendants' expert persuasively demonstrated that a presumption of a one hundred percent pass-through of overcharges from retailers to consumers was not supported by either economic theory or an empirical analysis of the available data between wholesale price changes and retail price changes across time and location.[17]

Despite plaintiffs' arguments to the contrary, we conclude that "the trial court was within its discretion to credit [Del Monte's] evidence . . . over [plaintiffs'], and we have no authority to substitute our judgment [*34] for the trial court's respecting this or any other conflict in the evidence. [Citation.]" (Sav-On Drug Stores, supra, 34 Cal.4th at p. 331; Walsh, supra, 148 Cal.App.4th at p. 1462.) "The trial court was not deciding—nor are we—the merits of plaintiffs' case. . . . We need not conclude that [defendant's] evidence is compelling, or even that the trial court would have abused its discretion if it had credited [plaintiffs'] evidence instead. '[I]t is of no consequence that the trial court believing other evidence, or drawing other reasonable inferences, might have reached a contrary conclusion.' [Citations.]" (Sav-On Drug Stores, supra, 34 Cal.4th at p. 331; see Caro, supra, 18 Cal.App.4th at p. 656.) Instead, we conclude only that a reasonable court could find, as did the trial court in this case, that the "causation/ fact of injury" element of liability was not capable of proof on a class-wide basis, and "would essentially result in 'thousands of minitrials, rendering [the] case unmanageable and unsuitable for class action treatment.' [Citation.]" (In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig. (N.D. Cal. 2008) 253 F.R.D. 478, 505; see also, *In re Fresh Del Monte Pineapples Antitrust Litigation, supra, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18388, at pp. 19, 21 [*35] [court rejected opinion of plaintiffs' expert that "[b]y assuming a 100% pass-through rate [of monopoly overcharges from direct purchasers to indirect purchasers] throughout the entire Class Period, . . . total damages [could] be calculated based upon aggregate data, thus avoiding the 'difficulties' in 'find[ing] data for the actual transaction prices paid by consumers and the quantities of pineapples purchased by consumers over the relevant time period'"].)

Plaintiffs' reliance on In re Cipro Cases I & II (2004) 121 Cal.App.4th 402, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (Cipro Cases) is misplaced. The Cipro Cases court "did not hold a trial court abuses its discretion when it declines to certify a class on the grounds that individual showings of damages predominate over common issues merely because the class proponent offered a formula to calculate classwide damages, which formula the trial court rejected. To the contrary, the Cipro Cases court upheld the trial court's discretionary determination because it recognized '[t]he trial court is in the best position to weigh the advantages of class treatment against its disadvantages' (Cipro Cases, supra, 121 Cal.App.4th at p. 416), and specifically stated it was not an abuse [*36] of discretion to adopt a formula to calculate damages in that case because it was 'within the trial court's discretion to weigh the inherent imperfections of such approximations against the vindication of important statutory policies and the burden to the courts of proving damages on a strictly individual basis.' (Id. at p. 418.)" (Evans, supra, 178 Cal.App.4th at p. 1432.) Indeed, in this case, the only reason that proving the monetary harm suffered by consumers "with exactitude presents difficulty . . . is that it would prove unwieldy in a class action setting to prove each member's right to recovery and the amount.

[17] Plaintiffs' expert conceded that he did not devise a retail level model or propose an empirical methodology for measuring pass-through rates for indirect purchasers of Fresh Del Monte Gold™ pineapples because such methodologies could not be implemented without reasonably good and representative data, which was not made available to him.

However, that latter factor supports, rather than undermines, the determination that individual issues predominated over common issues." (Id. at p. 1432, fn. 9.)

Finally, we reject plaintiffs' argument that an affirmance of the trial court's order "would recast California's long-standing practice of protecting its citizens from the wrongful conduct of those, like [d]efendants, who illegally obtain small amounts from large numbers of consumers, in favor of a policy that: (a) presumes that small individual claims militate against class certification, and (b) permits a trial [*37] court to look to other jurisdictions or parties to protect the interests of California citizens in advance of any benefit being obtained for the proposed class." By affirming the trial court order, we conclude only that on this record the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that certification of a class of indirect purchasers was not shown to be appropriate. "Perhaps another trial judge considering the matter in the first instance would have allowed class treatment, but that does not merit reversal. 'A record presenting facts on which reasonable minds may differ is not a record establishing an abuse of discretion.' [Citation.] The ruling here does not exceed the bounds of reason or result in a miscarriage of justice." (Ali v. U.S.A. Cab Ltd. (2009) 176 Cal.App.4th 1333, 1351-1352, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 568.)

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment is warranted under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a) when evidence reveals no genuine dispute regarding any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The rule mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. The party moving for summary judgment bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the record which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. The nonmoving party must then go beyond the pleadings and designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. In reviewing the evidence, factual controversies are to be resolved in favor of the nonmovant, but only when both parties have submitted evidence of contradictory facts. When such contradictory facts exist, the court may not make credibility determinations or weigh the evidence. However, conclusory allegations, speculation, unsubstantiated assertions, and legalistic arguments have never constituted an adequate substitute for specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN2[] Intentional Interference, Elements

Under Mississippi law, recovery for intentional interference with contract is only allowed against those who intentionally and improperly interfere with the performance of a contract, while mere negligent interference is no cause of action at all. The elements of tortious/intentional interference with contract are: (1) that the acts were intentional and willful; (2) that they were calculated to cause damage to the plaintiffs in their lawful business; (3) that they were done with the unlawful purpose of causing damage and loss, without right or justifiable cause on the part of the defendant; and (4) that actual damage and loss resulted. The element of willfulness and calculation does not require a showing on the part of the plaintiff that defendant had a specific intent to deprive plaintiff of contractual rights. Rather, the requisite intent is inferred when defendant knows of the existence of a contract and does a wrongful act without legal or social justification that he is certain or substantially certain will result in interference with the contract. Once the plaintiff has established a prima facie case of interference, the defendant may rebut with proof that his actions were either without knowledge of the existence of the contract, or were justified. Further, the plaintiffs must prove that the contract would have been performed but for the alleged interference.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN3[] Intentional Interference, Elements

The nature of the actor's conduct is a chief factor in determining whether the conduct is improper or not, despite its harm to the other person. Several Mississippi cases have considered whether the defendant displayed bad acts exceeding the realm of legitimate competition' and whether the defendant's acts were committed without legal or social justification. Courts have recognized the right to engage in legitimate competition. It is proper to engage in competition for prospective gain, as long as tortious acts are not employed to further that gain. The Mississippi Supreme Court further made clear that it is not a tort to fairly compete with a business rival for a prospective customer. A competitor should feel free to acquire business for himself by fair and reasonable means.

HN4[] Commercial Interference, Contracts

The aggressive marketing of a company's products or services, of necessity, is intended to impact the business of competitors by the increase in its market share and the decrease in the earnings potential of those others operating in the same sphere. Such actions in and of themselves are lawful, and without more, do not give rise to a cause of action. Thus, the court concluded that aggressiveness in the pursuit of business, even when described as playing hardball, is not illegal.

Section 1 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) of the Sherman Act states: Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. Taken literally, the applicability of § 1 to every contract, combination or conspiracy could be understood to cover every conceivable agreement, whether it be a group of competing firms fixing prices or a single firm's chief executive telling her subordinate how to price their company's product. But even though, if read literally, § 1 would address the entire body of private contract, that is not what the statute means. Not every instance of cooperation between two people is a potential contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The meaning of the term contract, combination or conspiracy is informed by the basic distinction in the Sherman Act between concerted and independent action that distinguishes § 1 of the Sherman Act from § 2. Section 1 applies only to concerted action that restrains trade. Section 2, by contrast, covers concerted and independent action, but only if that action monopolizes, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, or threatens actual monopolization, a category that is narrower than restraint of trade. Monopoly power may be equally harmful whether it is the product of joint action or individual action.

HN6[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

The United States Supreme Court defined a tying arrangement as: an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different, or tied, product. Tying agreements deny competitors free access to the market for the tied product, not because the party imposing the tying requirements has a better product or a lower price but because of his power or leverage in another market. An illegal tying arrangement has four basic characteristics: (1) two separate products; (2) sufficient economic power in the tying market to coerce purchase of the tied product; (3) involvement of a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied market; and (4) anticompetitive effects in the tied market. An illegal tying arrangement has four basic characteristics: (1) two separate products; (2) sufficient economic power in the tying market to coerce purchase of the tied product; (3) involvement of a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied market; and (4) anticompetitive effects in the tied market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The United States Supreme Court has condemned tying arrangements when the seller has some special ability, usually called market power, to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market. The market must be defined so as to include all reasonable substitutes for the product. One way a seller can achieve market power or appreciable economic power is by producing a unique product, which has little or no competition from functionally similar products or services. Consumer preference for a brand name alone does not establish product uniqueness necessary for appreciable economic power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN8[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

To state a claim for monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. Monopoly power is defined as the power to control prices or exclude competition. and is also referred to as a high degree of market power. To succeed on their claims, plaintiffs must show that defendants have engaged in improper conduct that has or is likely to have the effect of controlling prices or excluding competition, thus creating or maintaining market power. As a prerequisite to any antitrust claim, the plaintiff must allege a relevant market in which the anticompetitive effects of the challenged activity can be assessed. Without a definition of the relevant market, there is no way to measure a company's ability to act as a monopolist. A relevant market is comprised of a market for the specific product at issue, the market for reasonably interchangeable products, and a geographic market, the area in which sellers of the relevant product effectively compete.

HN9[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit explained that economic power derived from contractual arrangements affecting a distinct class of consumers cannot serve as a basis for a monopolization claim. Moreover, the Second Circuit observed, if a parietal rule requiring some students to reside in college or university housing runs afoul of the antitrust laws, it has largely escaped the notice of the many colleges and universities across the country that have had and continue to have those rules and the notice of the millions of students who have attended those institutions in the more than a century since the Sherman Act was enacted.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Presently before the Court is a Motion for Summary Judgment [41] filed by Defendant Aramark Corporation. After reviewing the motion, responses, rules, and authorities, the Court finds as follows:

BACKGROUND

This dispute arises from a leasing agreement for a Subway franchise between Plaintiffs George Hightower and Hightower Foods ("Plaintiffs" or "Hightower") and Mississippi State University ("MSU"). Plaintiffs contend that Aramark Corporation ("Defendant" or "Aramark"), the company selected by MSU to manage campus dining services, tortiously interfered with the leasing agreement at issue.

In 1993, MSU leased space in Colvard Union to Subway Real Estate Corporation for the purpose of operating a Subway restaurant. This property was subleased to Lee Jabob, a Subway franchisee. In 2003, Jacob assigned his sublease to Plaintiff George Hightower, [*2] who took over the operation of the Subway restaurant in Colvard Union. Also in 2003, MSU apparently started planning to renovate Colvard Union and, because of this, MSU and Subway Real Estate Corporation signed an amendment to the leasing agreement on October 3, 2003. The amendment recognized MSU's intent to renovate, providing that MSU could close Colvard Union for renovations after providing six months written notice to Subway. This amendment also offered Subway Real Estate Corporation four additional one-year options to lease the space, with the first option to commence on May 17, 2005 and expire on May 16, 2006, and the final option to expire on May 16, 2009.

In October 2005, MSU informed Hightower via written letter that it wished to terminate the leasing agreement effective April 1, 2006, due to impending renovations to Colvard Union. MSU offered Hightower the availability of a temporary location to operate during the renovations. MSU additionally requested Hightower's contact information in order to send him a Request for Proposal ("RFP") if MSU decided to re-bid for food court vendors. In November 2005, Hightower requested a temporary location as had been offered and, subsequently, [*3] MSU proceeded with renovations to Colvard Union and Hightower began operating Subway out of a mobile unit in August 2006. [1]

On November 9, 2006, MSU announced that it planned to utilize a management services company to operate its campus dining sources. According to Plaintiffs, Bill Broyles, MSU's Assistant Vice President of Student Affairs-apparently acting without knowledge of the amendment to Hightower's leasing agreement-informed Hightower that he would no longer be permitted to return to Colvard Union. Subsequent to this, MSU issued a public invitation to negotiate, seeking proposals from companies that could provide campus dining management services. This invitation to negotiate mentioned MSU's current food service locations and identified several food locations excluded from the contract; however, the Subway restaurant operated by Hightower was not mentioned in the invitation to negotiate.

Defendant Aramark submitted proposals to MSU in response to MSU's public invitation to negotiate. [2] In [*4] January 2007, MSU selected Defendant to operate its dining services. Shortly thereafter, and also in January 2007, Bill Broyles informed Hightower that he had only recently learned of the October 2003 amendment that gave Subway the option to renegotiate the rental rate and return to Colvard Union upon completion of the renovations. After learning of this amendment, MSU appears to have engaged in discussions with both Hightower and the Defendant.

First, in February 2007, MSU informed Defendant Aramark of the amendment to the Subway leasing agreement. According to Defendant, MSU asked if Aramark's proposal would change if Subway returned to Colvard Union. Defendant alleges it asserted that, while its financial proposal might change, Subway's return would not be a "deal breaker." Next, MSU entered into discussions with the Plaintiffs concerning the discovery of the amendment. Defendant asserts that Bill Broyles and Don Buffman, MSU's Director of Procurement, invited Hightower and Paul Bisbee, Subway's Development Agent, to negotiate a new rental rate—pursuant to Section 4 of the amendment—if Subway elected to return [*5] to Colvard Union until May 16, 2009 (i.e., until the expiration of the lease). [3] Hightower, however, did not agree to the rental rate or the terms proposed during the meeting. [4] Apparently, MSU

[1] According to Plaintiffs, in anticipation of "a return and continued lease with MSU, Hightower spent over $70,000.00 in renovating a modular unit for a temporary location at MSU's request."

[2] It is undisputed that other companies also submitted proposals to MSU.

[3] The parties appear to have met in either February or March of 2007 to discuss Subway's potential return to Colvard Union. This meeting appears to have taken place before the execution of the management services contract between MSU and Defendant.

was subsequently notified by Paul Bisbee that Subway was electing not to return to Colvard Union. Thus, on March 29, 2007, Subway Real Estate Corporation's attorney, Michael Donahue, sent MSU a "proposed lease termination" for the termination of the lease agreement. However, it appears that Hightower refused to sign the termination agreement and, instead, Plaintiffs opted to file a lawsuit against MSU for breach of the October 2003 amendment to the leasing agreement. Given this, Hightower continued to operate his Subway in the mobile unit on MSU's campus.

On May 23, 2007, after receiving Hightower's notice of claim, MSU contacted Subway Real Estate Corporation via written letter and again attempted to negotiate Subway's return to Colvard Union in accordance with the October 2003 amendment. MSU requested acceptance of the terms discussed in the letter by June 4, 2007. The June 4, 2007 deadline appears to have passed without acceptance of the rental amount by either Subway Real Estate Corporation or Hightower and, on September 6, 2007, MSU informed Hightower that he must remove his mobile unit from the MSU campus by October 31, 2007. Thereafter, Plaintiffs filed suit against MSU and, on December 19, 2007, Plaintiffs filed a motion for temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction in chancery court, which appears to have been later transferred to the circuit court.

In January 2008, MSU began proceedings in justice court to evict Hightower from the mobile unit. After a hearing, the justice court issued an eviction order against Hightower in February 2008. Hightower appealed the order, and the circuit court subsequently entered an order granting MSU's request for a writ of removal on May 2, 2008. As such, [*7] Hightower removed the mobile unit several days after the circuit court's order. During the pendency of Plaintiffs' lawsuit against MSU—which is still ongoing in the in the Circuit Court of Okitibbeha County—Plaintiffs filed this action against Defendant Aramark for tortious interference of contract. Defendant has filed motion for summary judgment, arguing it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on Plaintiffs' claim.

LEGAL STANDARD

HN1[] Summary judgment is warranted under Rule 56(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure when evidence reveals no genuine dispute regarding any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The rule "mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986).

The party moving for summary judgment "bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those [*8] portions of [the record] which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Id. at 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548. The nonmoving party must then "go beyond the pleadings" and "designate 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Id. at 324, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (citation omitted). In reviewing the evidence, factual controversies are to be resolved in favor of the nonmovant, "but only when . . . both parties have submitted evidence of contradictory facts." Little v. Liquid Air Corp., 37 F.3d 1069, 1075 (5th Cir. 1994) (en banc). When such contradictory facts exist, the Court may "not make credibility determinations or weigh the evidence." Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Prods., Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 150, 120 S. Ct. 2097, 147 L. Ed. 2d 105 (2000). However, conclusory allegations, speculation, unsubstantiated assertions, and legalistic arguments have never constituted an adequate substitute for specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial. TIG Ins. Co. v. Sedgwick James of Wash., 276 F.3d 754, 759 (5th Cir. 2002); SEC v. Recile, 10 F.3d 1093, 1097 (5th Cir. 1997); Little, 37 F.3d at 1075.

ANALYSIS AND DISCUSSION

[4] According to Plaintiffs, one of the reasons for this disagreement surrounded the fact that Hightower would allegedly not be able to use the new debit system, known as "Flex Dollars." The Court discusses [*6] this in more detail infra.

HN2[] Under Mississippi law, recovery for intentional [*9] interference with contract is only allowed against those who "intentionally and improperly interfere with the performance of a contract," while mere negligent interference is no cause of action at all. Morrison v. Miss. Enterprise for Tech. Inc., 798 So. 2d 567, 574 (Miss. 2001). The elements of tortious/intentional interference with contract are:

(1) that the acts were intentional and willful;

(2) that they were calculated to cause damage to the plaintiffs in their lawful business;

(3) that they were done with the unlawful purpose of causing damage and loss, without right or justifiable cause on the part of the defendant (which constitutes malice); and

(4) that actual damage and loss resulted.

Par Indus., Inc. v. Target Container Co., 708 So. 2d 44, 48 (Miss. 1998). With respect to the elements of willfulness and calculation, the court in Liston v. Home Ins. Co., explained that

> The element of willfulness and calculation does not require a showing on the part of the plaintiff that defendant had a specific intent to deprive plaintiff of contractual rights. Rather, the requisite intent is inferred when defendant knows of the existence of a contract and does a wrongful act without legal or [*10] social justification that he is certain or substantially certain will result in interference with the contract. Cranford v. Shelton, 378 So. 2d 652, 655 (Miss. 1980) (quoting Ramondo v. Pure Oil Co., 159 Pa. Super. 217, 48 A. 2d 156 (1946); Restatement (Second) of Torts § 766 (comment j). Once plaintiff has established a prima facie case of interference, the defendant may rebut with proof that his actions were either without knowledge of the existence of the contract, or were justified. Mid-Continent Telephone Corp. v. Home Telephone Co., 319 F. Supp. 1176, 1200 (N.D. Miss. 1970).

In their complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendant "intentionally entered into a contract with MSU, whereby it would take over the property being leased by Plaintiff, with full knowledge [*11] of lease." Further, Plaintiffs assert that it was Defendant's "intent to interfere with that contract," and that Defendant's alleged interference with Plaintiffs' contract is the "sole and exclusive reason why Plaintiff was being prevented from returning to the [MSU] Student Union." After a thorough review of the record, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs cannot demonstrate that Defendant tortiously interfered with the leasing agreement between Hightower and MSU.

Defendant, along with several other companies, responded to a request from MSU for proposals to provide management services for campus dining. As aptly set forth by Defendant, the timeline in this matter is important:

- In October 2005, MSU informed Hightower via written letter that it wished to terminated its leasing agreement effective April 1, 2006.
  Through this letter, MSU also informed Hightower that, in the event that MSU decided to re-bid for food court vendors, it "may" send Hightower an RFP.
- On November 6, 2006, MSU announced via a press release that it intended to utilize a management services company for its campus dining services.
- On November 13, 2006, MSU issued a public invitation to negotiate and requested that [*12] interested companies submit bids for the contract to provide management services.
  The invitation to negotiate does not mention Subway, either that it was currently in operation or that it would remain on campus.

[5] In 1998, the Mississippi Supreme Court held that the Liston case was "instructive as it pertains to the element of intent." Par Indus., 708 So. 2d at 48.

• Aramark, along with several other companies, submitted proposals in response to the invitation to negotiate from MSU.
• In January 2007, MSU completed the process for evaluating proposals and selected Aramark's proposal.

• In February 2007, at Aramark and MSU's initial meeting to negotiate the terms of the management services contract, Aramark, after its proposal was selected by MSU, was first informed of Hightower's leasing agreement. [6]
• At this meeting, MSU asked Aramark how it would affect Aramark's proposal if Subway remained on campus.

• Aramark, in acknowledging that it would not profit from Subway's sales, noted that while it would affect the financial terms of its proposal, it would not be a "deal breaker" for Subway to remain its operation on campus.

The evidence demonstrates that MSU was already considering the termination of Plaintiff's leasing agreement even prior to the public solicitation of proposals, thus also prior to Aramark responding to such proposals. Hightower [*13] admits as much in his deposition testimony:

Q: So November of 2006, you're realizing that MSU is not planning to let you return to [Colvard] Union?
A: Paul [Bisbee] told me they weren't going to.

Therefore, Hightower knew that MSU was considering the termination of his lease prior to Aramark's involvement in this action. In fact, Aramark did not learn of Hightower's lease until after it had responded to the invitation to negotiate and after its proposal was selected by MSU. Even beyond this, however, there is otherwise no evidence that Aramark induced MSU to breach Hightower's leasing agreement after learning of the lease.

HN3[] "The nature of the actor's conduct is a chief factor in determining whether the conduct is improper or not, despite its harm to the other person." Rest. 2D of Torts § 767 cmt. c. An illustrative example can be found in the Restatement (Second) of Torts: B is under contract to sell goods to C. B offers to sell them A, who knows of the contract. A accepts the offer and receives the goods. A has not induced the breach and is not subject [*14] to liability. Rest. 2D of Torts § 766 cmt. n. Here, Plaintiffs have put forth no evidence of any active and improper solicitation by Aramark of MSU's business. Rather, the record evidence only demonstrates that Aramark responded to a public inquiry from MSU. Id. (noting that "A's active solicitation of B's business is more likely to make his interference improper than his mere response to an inquiry from B"). Aramark informed MSU that it had no objection to Subway returning to Colvard Union. Certainly, responding to a public invitation to negotiate without knowledge of the prior leasing agreement and, upon learning of such an agreement, having no objection to it being performed does not amount to an "intermeddling" tort, see Morrison v. Miss. Enter. For Tech., Inc., 798 So. 2d 567, 575 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001), such as the one brought in this action.

Several Mississippi cases are instructive on this point. See McBride Consulting Service, LLC v. Waste Mgmt of Miss., 949 So. 2d 52, 56 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006) ("[S]everal Mississippi cases . . . have considered whether the defendant displayed 'bad acts exceeding the realm of legitimate competition' and whether the defendant's acts were committed [*15] without legal or social justification.") (citing to MBF Corp. v. Century Bus. Communications, Inc., 663 So. 2d 595 (Miss. 1995) and Par Industries, 708 So. 2d at 48). In MBF Corporation, the Mississippi Supreme Court was faced with an action for tortious interference with business relationships. [7] The court began by noting that "[c]ourts have recognized the right to engage in legitimate competition . . . It is proper to engage in competition for prospective gain, as long as tortious acts are not employed to further that gain." 663 So. 2d at 598 (citing Prosser

[6] Bill Broyles learned of Subway's amendment to the leasing agreement in January 2007, shortly before MSU's February 2007 meeting with Aramark.

[7] This tort is "closely intertwined" with an action for tortious interference with contract. See McBride, 949 So. 2d at 56; MBF Corp., 663 So. 2d at 599 ("The tort of interference with business relations is closely aligned with that of interference with [*17] a contract."). While, by definition, the two torts may be distinguishable from one other depending on the tortious acts employed, in order to prove tortious interference with business relations, the plaintiff has to show the same type of elements as those needed to prove a tortious interference with contract claim. See MBF Corp., 663 So. 2d at 599. Thus, this Court finds the MBF Corporation case instructive in terms of demonstrating the type of acts that would be considered unlawful and beyond the realm of legitimate competition.

AND KEATON, THE LAW ON TORTS, § 130, 1012 (5th ed. 1984)). The Mississippi Supreme Court further made clear that it is "not a tort to fairly compete with a business rival for a prospective customer. A competitor should feel free to acquire business for himself by fair and reasonable means." Id. (internal citations omitted). After noting this, and examining the defendant's actions in that case, the court concluded that the record revealed several instances in which defendant went far beyond the realm of legitimate competition. Id. The facts established that defendant's acts were intentional, willful, and calculated to cause damage [*16] to plaintiff's customer base and, in turn, to the entire business. Id. at 599. The defendant had intentionally and willfully taken files from the premises of MBF, as well as hired its two key salesmen and instructed these salesmen to copy customer files containing vital information while the salesmen were still employed at MBF. Id. In addition, defendant supplied the salesmen with defendant's purchase order invoices which were used to obtain orders on behalf of defendant from MBF customers. Id. Along the same lines, information was spread to MBF customers that MBF was closing its Jackson branch office. Id. The defendant's acts were not the result of justifiable purpose, but instead were clearly motivated by the unlawful purpose of causing damage or loss. Id. The record in the MBF Corporation case provides an example of the kind of acts that constitute a tortious interference claim—acts that are most certainly not present in this action.

The case of McBride Consulting Service is also instructive. There, the Court of Appeals of Mississippi held that the defendant did not act unlawfully by offering lower rates to consumers who negotiated directly instead of through a broker. McBride, 949 So. 2d at 52. As background, McBride Consulting is a waste broker that would enter into at will contracts with small businesses to serve as their exclusive agent for the negotiation of waste disposal contracts. McBride would then negotiate with a third party waste disposal company a collective price for the waste disposal of its clients, and McBride would serve as paying agent for its clients. McBride made its [*18] money from the cost savings obtained for its clients by this collective negotiation. Waste Management was a third party waste disposer with whom McBride negotiated waste disposal for its clients. McBride apparently worked aggressively to grow its business, and this included making contracts with businesses for whom Waste Management was already the contracted waste disposer. Apparently recognizing that waste brokers were a growing group, Waste Management adopted a national policy which required that (1) the rates to be charged to waste brokers be established by the regional office, (2) these rates be in upper tiers of the rate scales, and (3) the waste brokers sign a standard contract. The policy mandated that if a broker declined to execute the standard contract, then Waste Management would not do business with him. McBride refused to execute the standard contract.

At some point in the process, Waste Management became concerned that its relationship with McBride was less than satisfactory. Among the concerns expressed by Waste Management were (1) the refusal of McBride to sign the standard contract and (2) its perception that McBride was tardy in the payment of the invoices sent to [*19] it. To address these concerns, Waste Management undertook a series of aggressive actions, including offering to individual businesses lower prices than those prices which it was willing to give to McBride. Waste Management made clear that these lower rates were only available to customers who dealt directly with it. As a result of the lower rates offered directly by Waste Management, a number of McBride's clients chose to contract directly with Waste Management rather than have their needs brokered by McBride. McBride filed suit against Waste Management for (1) intentional interference with a contractual relations and (2) intentional interference with business relationships. At the conclusion of McBride's case-in-chief, the trial court, finding insufficient evidence to submit the matter to the jury, entered judgment for the defendants.

The court of appeals affirmed the trial court. The McBride court's opinion began in a similar fashion as the MBF Corporation court's, noting that,

> HN4[] The aggressive marketing of a company's products or services, of necessity, is intended to impact the business of competitors by the increase in its market share and the decrease in the earnings potential of [*20] those others operating in the same sphere. Such actions in and of themselves are lawful, and without more, do not give rise to a cause of action.

949 So. 2d at 56 (emphasis added). The court of appeals went on to find as follows:

> There was evidence presented from which it might be concluded that some contracts between McBride and its clients were terminated because Waste Management offered lower rates to these businesses. These were > rates which Waste Management refused to extend to McBride. Waste Management says that its efforts were justified and legal because they were intended to keep its customers and increase its revenues. The effort to increase profitability, without more is not improper. However, the effort may be conducted under circumstances which render it improper, and therefore actionable. Cenac v. Murry, 609 So. 2d 1257, 1269 (Miss. 1992) (citing Wesley v. Native Lumber Co., 97 Miss. 814, 820, 53 So. 346, 347 (1910)). Likewise, the refusal of Waste Management to extend to a waste broker the same or lesser rates than those given to direct customers is not per se improper. Wertz v. Ingalls Shipbuilding, Inc., 790 So. 2d 841, 848(¶ 27) (Miss. Ct. App. 2000) (citing RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 766 [*21] (1977)). Nor has McBride produced evidence of actions by Waste Management which were unlawful. Without proof of some improper action by Waste management, McBride's claim must fail.

Id. Thus, the court concluded that "aggressive[ness] in the pursuit of business," even when "described as playing hardball," is "not illegal." Id. Here, the record is void of any type of evidence even similar to that engaged in by the parties in McBride, a case in which the court found the tortious interference claim to fail.

In their response in opposition to summary judgment, Plaintiffs do not appear to contest many of the underlying facts in this action, or the timeline of events. Rather, unlike what appears to be alleged in their complaint, Plaintiffs raise two separate, yet interrelated, arguments: the first relating to MSU's debit systems and the second involving alleged antitrust violations. The Court begins by first providing background of MSU's debit systems.

The student debit systems at issue are "Money Mate" and "Flex Dollars." The Money Mate program appears to be comparable to a prepaid debit card system that students may use to purchase a myriad of items, including food on and off campus, books, [*22] and medical services at the Student Health Center. The MSU Flex Dollars program is similar to Money Mate, as it is a prepaid debit card system; however, unlike Money Mate, Flex Dollars appears to only be used to purchase food at on-campus facilities. In an attempt to meet the element of "malice" necessary to support a tortious interference claim, Plaintiffs assert that Defendant wrongfully interfered with its continued access to the aforementioned MSU debit systems. Hightower asserts that Money Mate was approximately forty percent of his total sales. According to Hightower, he was informed at the February 2007 meeting that the debit system was going to be altered, and that the new debit system, Flex Dollars, would only be used by Defendant Aramark. According to Plaintiffs, tortious interference exists because only Aramark could use the new Flex Dollars system. The Court concludes that Plaintiffs' argument fails for several reasons.

To begin with, there is no evidence in the record, either from deposition testimony or the leasing agreement itself, which demonstrates that Hightower ever had a contractual right to participate in either the Money Mate or Flex Dollars systems. See Hennessey v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 564 F.2d 1136, 1143 (5th Cir. 1977) [*23] ("Ordinarily, such a claim must be premised upon a valid contract. . . ."). In fact, by Plaintiffs' own admission, Flex Dollars is a new debit system at MSU—one apparently not even in existence when Hightower's contract was entered into. If Hightower had no contract with MSU to utilize either debit system, it logically follows that Aramark could not tortiously (or otherwise) interfere with such a nonexistent agreement. Even beyond this, however, there is no evidence that Aramark used the Flex Dollars system as method of inducing MSU to terminate its leasing agreement with Hightower. As noted supra, MSU informed Hightower—prior to Aramark submitting its proposal—that it wished to terminate Hightower's leasing agreement. Further, Plaintiffs have presented no evidence that Aramark played any role in the decision made by MSU to exclude Subway from the Flex Dollars program. In fact, the record demonstrates just the opposite. Bill Broyles, MSU's Vice President of Student Affairs, testified as follows:

> A: No. We discussed with Aramark the possibility of Mr. Hightower coming back on campus.
> Q: [*24] Okay. Did you ever bring up to Mr. Nelson [of Aramark] the possibility of Subway being allowed to accept the Flex Dollars and how that could work?
> A: No, I didn't.
> Q: Okay. Why didn't you?
> A: Didn't think about it.

Thus, MSU concedes that it did not even consult Aramark about Subway being, or not being, allowed to use Flex Dollars.

While Plaintiffs contend that "Hightower could not compete with Aramark's restaurants when MSU was forcing the entire freshman population to make their purchases of meals from Aramark by paying in advance for their meals [i.e., using Flex Dollars], which could only be used at an Aramark restaurant," this argument, like the majority of allegations in Plaintiffs' brief in opposition, couches the alleged "wrongdoing" in terms of actions by MSU. [8] Along the same lines, while Hightower avers that he could not utilize the Flex Dollars program (again, a program Hightower had no contractual right to utilize), the Court has methodically mined the record and found no evidence that Hightower would have been excluded from continuing to utilize MSU's Money Mate program. The Money Mate program appears to exist in conjunction with Flex Dollars, and Money Mate comprised, according [*25] to Hightower, forty percent of Hightower's total sales.

Plaintiffs additionally advance an argument grounded in antitrust law as an attempt to demonstrate that Defendant acted with malice when entering its agreement with MSU. At the outset, and before addressing Plaintiffs' antitrust allegations, the Court notes that many of Plaintiffs' arguments appear to put the proverbial cart before the horse. That is, several of Plaintiffs' arguments focus only on the actual contract between Aramark and MSU and, whether under the law, the contract itself is proper without first establishing that Aramark— the Defendant in this action— actually wrongfully "interfered" (i.e., the claim asserted is indeed one for tortious interference, not one for antitrust [*26] violations) with Hightower's leasing agreement, or otherwise caused or induced MSU to terminate that agreement. [9] By way of example:

> Assume that A has a contract with B, and A writes to B saying it wishes to terminate its contract with B. Then, a year later, C responds to a public solicitation from A without knowledge of A's preexisting agreement with B. Even if the contract that A and C subsequently enter into is void or voidable due to some federal or state regulation, it would not automatically mean that C "tortiously interfered" with A and B's preexisting contract solely because of the potential unlawfulness of A and C's current contract. B would still have to demonstrate the elements of tortious interference, which include a showing that C's actions were "calculated" to cause damage to B.

If Aramark did not "interfere" with MSU and Hightower's leasing agreement (i.e., if Plaintiffs cannot prove that the contract would have been performed but for the alleged interference from Aramark), then even if Aramark's contract with MSU violates some provision of the Sherman Act, it would appear that such a violation would be irrelevant to the tortious interference claim.

As noted above, it is undisputed that MSU sought to terminate Hightower's leasing agreement in 2005. Specifically, on October 31, 2005, the Director of Procurement and Contracts for MSU sent Hightower and Subway Real Estate Corporation a written letter stating,

> Due to impending renovation of the Colvard Union, Mississippi State University wishes to terminate its contract with your company effective April 1, 2006. If you are interested in a temporary location while renovations are in process, please contact me within [*28] thirty days. Also, please provide contact information so that we may send you an RFP in the event that we decide to re-bid for food court vendors.

Over a year after MSU informed Hightower that it wished to terminate his leasing agreement, MSU issued its public invitation to negotiate. Without knowledge of Hightower's leasing agreement, Aramark merely responded to this

[8] In fact, if portions of Plaintiffs' brief were read in isolation, it would initially appear that the lawsuit is actually against MSU - not Aramark. For example, Plaintiffs assert that "MSU was willing to grant an exclusive contract to Aramark, despite MSU's preexisting lease with Hightower because it [i.e., MSU] expected to make about $12,000,000.00 over ten years from Aramark." (Emphasis added). This statement confers no malicious intent on Aramark.

[9] Stated more simply, [*27] it does not automatically flow from MSU's alleged breach of its agreement with Hightower that the company to now obtain a contract with MSU caused, or otherwise induced, that alleged breach. Proof of tortious interference or some type of unlawful inducement still must be shown. See Morrison v. Miss. Enter. For Tech., Inc., 798 So. 2d 567, 575 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001) ("Tortious interference is based on intermeddling - a tort occurs if without sufficient reason, one person intentionally interferes with another's contract even if the interference is by giving information that is completely accurate, when the purpose was to cause interference and injury results.") (emphasis added).

pubic invitation. Aramark was only one of several companies to respond to this public request. Thus, even if Aramark's proposal would not have been selected by MSU, another company's would have been, and that other company would presumably then be the target defendant in this action. Given this, it is hard to qualify Aramark's response to MSU's public invitation as the "but for" cause of Hightower's leasing agreement being terminated. That is, if merely responding to a public invitation to negotiate is the initial action by Aramark that, under Plaintiffs' theory, subjects it to liability for tortious interference, then it would follow that every other company who responded, yet was not selected, would also be liable. However, such is not the case.

Yet, because the Restatement (Second) of Torts § 767 briefly mentions antitrust [*29] violations in terms of a way to show that the alleged interference was improper, the Court will squarely address Plaintiffs' Sherman Act arguments. Specifically, the Restatement states as follows,

> Unlawful conduct. Conduct specifically in violation of statutory provisions or contrary to established public policy may for that reason make an interference improper. This may be true, for example, of conduct that is in violation of antitrust provisions or is in restraint of trade or of conduct that is in violation of statutes, regulations, or judicial or administrative holdings regarding labor relations.

Rest. 2D Of Torts § 767 cmt. c. (emphasis added). According to Plaintiffs, "[a]n agreement that one may not be a freshman student at MSU unless he or she pays for food from a single vendor (Aramark) is a plainly anti-competitive tying agreement which has been held to violate public policy in other contexts." [10] Plaintiffs maintain that the contract is unlawful under both the Sherman Act as well as Mississippi antitrust statutes.

HN5[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act states: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Taken literally, the applicability of § 1 to "every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" could be understood to cover every conceivable agreement, whether it be a group of competing firms fixing prices or a single firm's chief executive telling her subordinate how to price their company's product. But even though, if "read literally," § 1 would address "the entire body of private contract," that is not what the statute means. See Nat'l

[10] Plaintiffs' brief also states, "According to the evidentiary materials, Aramark specified that Hightower, if he were to continue his lease on campus, could not utilize [*30] this new debit system." Plaintiffs further state, "the evidentiary materials have established that Aramark would allow an exception to its exclusive food contract with MSU only if Hightower were excluded from using the debit system (Flex Dollars). . . ."

The Court is unsure as to what evidentiary materials Plaintiffs refer to. In fact, Plaintiffs fail to even cite to a portion of the record to support such assertions. See Williams v. Valenti, 432 F. App'x 298, 303 (5th Cir. 2011) (noting that the district court is "not required to search the record in support of evidence supporting a party's opposition to summary judgment"). As Defendant notes, Plaintiffs appear to be misconstruing the record evidence in an attempt to create the (mis)impression that Aramark mandated Subway's exclusion from the debit program. Plaintiffs do this by wrongfully imputing statements by MSU officials, specifically Bill Broyles, to Defendant Aramark. Specifically, it was Bill Broyles of MSU, not Aramark, that stated, "We told him [Hightower] . . . that he could not accept the Flex Dollars for meal purchases." Dep. of Broyles at 23. Further, as noted above, Broyles also testified as follows:

> Q: Did y'all discuss [*31] with Aramark the possibility of allowing Mr. Hightower to accept the Flex Dollars?
> A: No. We discussed with Aramark the possibility of Mr. Hightower coming back on campus.
> Q: Okay. Did you ever bring up to Mr. Nelson [of Aramark] the possibility of Subway being allowed to accept the Flex Dollars and how that could work?
> A: No, I didn't.
> Q: Okay. Why didn't you?
> A: Didn't think about it.

Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 688, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978); [*32] Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006) ("This Court has not taken a literal approach to this language"); cf. Bd. of Trade of Chicago v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918) (reasoning that the term "restraint of trade" in § 1 cannot possibly refer to any restraint on competition because "[e]very agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To bind, to restrain, is of their very essence"). Not every instance of cooperation between two people is a potential "contract, combination . . ., or conspiracy, in restraint of trade." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

The meaning of the term "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" is informed by the "'basic distinction'" in the Sherman Act "'between concerted and independent action'" that distinguishes § 1 of the Sherman Act from § 2. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). Section 1 applies only to concerted action that restrains trade. Section 2, by contrast, covers both concerted and independent [*33] action, but only if that action "monopolize[s]," see 15 U.S.C. § 2, or "threatens actual monopolization," see Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 767, 104 S. Ct. 2731, a category that is narrower than restraint of trade. Monopoly power may be equally harmful whether it is the product of joint action or individual action.

In Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1953), HN6[] the Supreme Court defined a tying arrangement as: "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product . . . ." 356 U.S. at 5, 78 S. Ct. 514. Tying agreements "deny competitors free access to the market for the tied product, not because the party imposing the tying requirements has a better product or a lower price but because of his power or leverage in another market." Id. at 6, 78 S. Ct. 514. An illegal tying arrangement has four basic characteristics: (1) two separate products (the tying and the tied product); (2) sufficient economic power in the tying market to coerce purchase of the tied product; (3) involvement of a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied market; and (4) anticompetitive [*34] effects in the tied market. Driskill v. Dallas Cowboys Football Club, Inc., 498 F.2d 321 (5th Cir. 1974); see also Yentsch v. Texaco, Inc., 630 F.2d 46 (2d Cir. 1980) (noting that to state a claim for an illegal tie, a plaintiff must allege "five specific elements: first, a tying and a tied product; second, evidence of actual coercion by the seller that in fact forced the buyer to accept the tied product; third, sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce purchaser acceptance of the tied product; fourth, anticompetitive effects in the tied market; and fifth, involvement of a 'not insubstantial' amount of interstate commerce in the tied market.").

HN7[] The Supreme Court "ha[s] condemned tying arrangements when the seller has some special ability—usually called 'market power'—to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 13-14, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984). The market must be defined so as "to include all reasonable substitutes for the product." Id. at 37-38, n.7, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (O'Connor, J. concurring). One way a seller can achieve market power or "appreciable economic [*35] power" is by producing a unique product, which has little or no competition from functionally similar products or services. See Lee v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 23 F.3d 14, 16 (1st Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 964, 115 S. Ct. 427, 130 L. Ed. 2d 340 (1994). Consumer preference for a "brand name alone does not establish product 'uniqueness' necessary for [appreciable economic power]." Id. at 17.

Courts have routinely rejected Sherman Act challenges such as the one Plaintiffs attempt to bring in this action. For example, in Lee, the First Circuit held that the University of Rhode Island's ("URI") policy to condition semester registration upon the payment of a fee for use of the on-campus health clinic was not an illegal tying arrangement. Id. at 15. The university required full-time undergraduate students to pay the health clinic fee. Id. In order to use the clinic, students were also required to carry supplemental insurance. The university offered supplemental insurance through "a private health care underwriter, which URI sponsor[ed] as its 'default' insurer." Id. The plaintiffs alleged that "conditioning continued matriculation at URI on payment of the . . . clinic fee and/or the [*36] . . . supplemental insurance premium" was an illegal tying arrangement. Id.

The court explained that "URI obviously is a 'unique' institution in a colloquial sense, [however, the] appellants cannot claim that other institutions of higher education do not or cannot provide 'functionally similar' educational offerings to potential URI applicants." Id. at 17. Therefore, the court held that the plaintiffs had failed to state a claim that URI possessed appreciable economic power "in the tying market for a university education." Id.

Similarly, the court in Hack v. President and Fellows of Yale College, 16 F. Supp. 2d 183 (D. Conn. 1998), aff'd, 237 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 1999) addressed an action for damages and injunctive relief brought by freshman and sophomore students at Yale College claiming that the defendants had denied them permission to reside off campus. The antitrust claim was based on the school's mandated housing program, and defendants argued that the complaint failed to sufficiently alleged that Yale obtained the requisite economic market power to make the tying agreement illegal under 15 U.S.C. § 1. The plaintiffs argued that, because their complaint alleged that a Yale education [*37] was unique, they had sufficiently stated their tying claim. In response to this argument, the court noted that, with respect to the uniqueness of a product, the Supreme Court has explained that "the question is whether the seller has some advantage not shared by his competitors in the market for the tying product. Without any such advantage differentiating his product from that of his competitors, the seller's product does not have the kind of uniqueness considered relevant in prior tying-clause cases." United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc., 429 U.S. 610, 620-21, 97 S. Ct. 861, 51 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1977) (Fortner II). Applying the Supreme Court's logic to the case before it, the court reasoned that plaintiffs' complaint "fail[ed] to sufficiently allege that Yale has the requisite economic market power in the tying product market—in either the broader university education market or the narrower Ivy League education market—to coerce the plaintiffs to accept the tied-product[:] residence hall accommodations." Hack, 16 F. Supp. 2d at 195.

Along the same lines as discussed in Lee and Hack, courts have also uniformly rejected claims under Section Two of the Sherman Act. HN8[] To state [*38] a claim for monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). Monopoly power is defined as "the power to control prices or exclude competition . . . and is also referred to as a high degree of market power[.]" Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). To succeed on their claims, plaintiffs must show that defendants have "engaged in improper conduct that has or is likely to have the effect of controlling prices or excluding competition, thus creating or maintaining market power." Id. at 226-27 (citing PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 315 F.3d 101, 108 (2d Cir. 2002)). As a prerequisite to any antitrust claim, the plaintiff must allege a relevant market in which the anticompetitive effects of the challenged [*39] activity can be assessed. See Geddie v. Seaton, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55106, 2006 WL 2263335, at *5 (N.D. Tex. Aug. 8, 2006). "Without a definition of the relevant market, there is no way to measure a company's ability to act as a monopolist." United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 63 F.3d 95, 104 (2d Cir. 1995). A relevant market is comprised of a market for the specific product at issue, the market for reasonably interchangeable products, and a geographic market, the area in which sellers of the relevant product effectively compete. See United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956).

For example, in Delta Kappa Epsilon (DKE) Alumni Corp. v. Colgate University, 492 F. Supp. 2d 106 (N.D.N.Y. 2007), the court addressed and rejected a monopolization claim under Section Two of the Sherman Act based on the university required housing program. The Delta Kappa Epsilon court noted, > Here, Colgate and its students enter into a unique contractual arrangement which governs both parties' conduct during the tenure of their relationship. It is undisputed that "a number of colleges with which [Colgate] competes to enroll high school graduates provide functionally similar educational [*40] offerings and have the potential to take significant numbers of students away from [Colgate]." Hamilton, 106 F. Supp. 2d at 412. In fact, just as colleges are competing with their peers to enroll the best applicants, high school students also face tough competition in seeking admittance into a highly select college like Colgate. Once potential Colgate students receive their offers of admission, they compare and contrast their options, weighing a cluster of factors, such as academic reputation, location, sporting facilities, and student diversity. Indeed, students may consider housing among other factors in ultimately choosing a college.

> Once a student decides to enroll in a particular college, a unique and distinctive relationship commences between school and student that governs that student's four-year tenure. Over the next four years, an undergraduate student lives and studies in a "quasi-parented" environment, where the school, in loco parentis, creates and enforces policies for the protection and welfare of its students. Here, Colgate has exercised these rights, namely, its "parietal" rights, see Hack, 237 F.3d at 85, in creating a residential policy that is part of a Colgate education. [*41] As such, the court holds, as a matter of law, that Colgate's residential policy is an effect of the exercise of its lawful and appropriate parietal rights.

Id. at 117 (brackets in original). Similarly, HN9[] the Second Circuit on appeal in Hack v. President & Fellows of Yale College, 237 F.3d 81, 85 (2d Cir. 2000) explained that "[e]conomic power derived from contractual arrangements affecting a distinct class of consumers cannot serve as a basis for a monopolization claim." Moreover, the Circuit observed, > if a parietal rule requiring some students to reside in college or university housing runs afoul of the antitrust laws, it has largely escaped the notice of the many colleges and universities across the country that have had and continue to have those rules and the notice of the millions of students who have attended those institutions in the more than a century since the Sherman Act was enacted.

Id.; see also Hamilton Chapter of Alpha Delta Phi, Inc. v. Hamilton College, 106 F. Supp. 2d 406, 413 (N.D.N.Y. 2000) (rejecting monopolization challenge to college's required housing and meal programs and finding that "[s]tudents do not - indeed cannot - shop separately for individual college services [*42] or characteristics, but rather must select one college which offers a group of services and qualities"); E. Food. Servs. v. Ponticial Catholic Univ. Ass'n, Inc., 357 F.3d 1, 8-9 (1st Cir. 2004) (rejecting exclusive-dealing challenge to university's selection of suppliers for campus vending machines).

While Plaintiffs in the case sub judice attempt to satisfy the "malice" element of their tortious interference claim by alleging violations of antitrust provisions, Plaintiffs fail to cite to a single case, or any other authority, that has found analogous university programs to run afoul of such antitrust laws. In fact, Plaintiffs do nothing more than make a blanket statement that the contract is unlawful; Plaintiffs' brief is entirely void of the analysis needed to mount an argument that Defendant has acted contrary to the Sherman Act or comparable Mississippi statutes. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have failed to establish the element of malice necessary to support a claim for tortious interference. Plaintiffs have further failed to establish that any of Defendant Aramark's actions were willfully and intentionally calculated to cause damage to Plaintiffs or that Hightower's leasing agreement [*43] would have been performed but for Aramark's alleged interference.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment is GRANTED.

So ordered on this, the 9th day of March, 2012.

Opinion

ORDER

This matter is before the court on Plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction [10].

I. Background

A. Procedural History and Facts

Plaintiff, C-E Minerals, Inc. filed the instant declaratory judgment action against Defendant, CARBO Ceramics, Inc., on August 4, 2011. Plaintiff asks the court to declare a particular provision in the parties' requirements supply contract to be a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiff also asks the court to find this provision is an illegal, unreasonable, and unenforceable restraint of trade under Georgia and Alabama state law. C-E asks the court to grant preliminary injunctive relief enjoining CARBO from enforcing or threatening to enforce the [*2] provision of the contract. The court heard argument on Plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction on February 15, 2012.

The facts in this case are undisputed. C-E owns and operates a facility for the mining, processing, and sale of kaolin clay in Andersonville, Georgia. CARBO owns and operates a manufacturing facility in Eufaula, Alabama, for the manufacture and sale of ceramic proppants which are used in the extraction of oil and natural gas. C-E supplies to CARBO clay that is used in the manufacture of the proppants.

In 1995, the parties signed a clay Supply Agreement which lasted for a term of eight years until December 31, 2003. The parties then signed a second Raw Material Requirements Agreement ("the Supply Agreement") which is at issue in this litigation. The term of the second Supply Agreement ran from January 1, 2004 through December 31, 2010. Unlike the first agreement, this Supply Agreement contained a non-compete clause which reads:

> Without intending to limit the legal rights of either party, CARBO and C-E agree as follows: that CARBO will not enter into direct competition with C-E in the manufacture of calcined clay for general sale to refractory or other related industry, [*3] and that C-E will not enter into competition with CARBO in the manufacture or sale of ceramic proppants. This agreement will endure for 3 years after the expiration of this contract.

See Supply Agreement, ¶ 5.[1] The Supply Agreement expired on December 31, 2010, and Paragraph 5's non-compete clause is set to expire on December 31, 2013. Despite the existence of this clause, counsel for C-E admitted at oral argument that C-E is currently manufacturing and selling ceramic proppants.

In 2006, C-E corresponded with CARBO and stated C-E's position that Paragraph 5 was invalid and unenforceable. C-E stated that it did not intend to follow Paragraph 5, but that it would abide by the other provisions in the Agreement. CARBO responded that it believed Paragraph 5 to be enforceable and reserved its right to seek to enforce that portion of the Supply Agreement. The parties continued under the terms of the Supply Agreement despite their differing views on the enforceability of Paragraph 5.

There are shortages of supply in the lightweight ceramic proppant market. Despite the fact that CARBO has increased its prices, it routinely sells out its inventory for ceramic proppants.

B. Contentions

Plaintiff argues [*4] that Paragraph 5 is a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act because it is a horizontal market allocation where actual or potential customers have agreed to refrain from competing in a particular market. Because Paragraph 5 violates antitrust law, Plaintiff contends, it cannot be enforced. Plaintiff also avers that Paragraph 5 violates Georgia law governing non-compete agreements because it contains no geographical restriction and violates Alabama state law because it limits the quantity of a commodity to be mined in Alabama, as well as violating federal antitrust law.

Defendant first argues that Plaintiff cannot seek equitable relief from the court because it comes with "unclean hands" by delaying taking any action with respect to Paragraph 5 despite the fact that it believed it was unenforceable in 2006. Defendant further responds that Paragraph 5 is not a horizontal market allocation agreement, rather Paragraph 5 is an ancillary confidentiality provision which the parties negotiated because Defendant agreed to accept clay from deposits in Georgia instead of Alabama and certain confidential information would need to be exchanged in order to determine whether the composition of the [*5] Georgia clay would work in Defendant's manufacturing process. Because Paragraph 5 is an ancillary agreement and not a naked restraint of trade, Defendant avers, the court must consider it under the Rule of Reason and Plaintiff has not — and cannot — make an argument that Paragraph 5 violates the Rule of Reason. Defendant avers that Paragraph 5 does not violate Georgia state law as it currently stands because Georgia's legislature has made the policy decision to more broadly accept non-compete agreements.

II. Discussion

A party seeking a preliminary injunction must show "(1) a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of the underlying case, (2) the movant will suffer irreparable harm in the absence of an injunction, (3) the harm suffered by the movant in the absence of an injunction would exceed the harm suffered by the opposing party if the injunction issued, and (4) an injunction would not disserve the public interest." N. Am. Med. Corp. v. Axiom Worldwide, Inc., 522 F.3d 1211, 1217 (11th Cir. 2008) (internal quotation marks omitted).

A. Federal Antitrust

It is axiomatic that Section 1 prohibits only those agreements which unreasonably restrain competition. See Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 58-64, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619 (1911). There are a variety of agreements which can unreasonably restrain competition. "A restraint may be adjudged [*6] unreasonable either because it fits within a class of restraints that has been held to be 'per se' unreasonable, or because it violates what has come to be known as the 'Rule of Reason.'" F.T.C. v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 457-58, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986). The Supreme Court established the per se rule in Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958) when it stated: "there are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Id. at 5. See also Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting Co., 441 U.S. 1, 8, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979).

Once an agreement is determined to be a per se violation, the unreasonableness of the restraint is presumed. See, e.g., Levine v. Central Florida Medical Affiliates, Inc., 72 F.3d 1538, 1546 (11th Cir. 1996) (citing Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 344-45, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982) and United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 397-98, 47 S. Ct. 377, 71 L. Ed. 700 (1927)). The per se rule is the "trump card" of antitrust law. "When an antitrust plaintiff successfully plays it, he need only tally his score." United States v. Realty Multi-List, Inc., 629 F.2d 1351, 1362-63 (5th Cir. 1980). Rule of Reason cases, on the other hand, require the court to "engage in a comprehensive analysis of the agreement's purpose and effect to determine whether it unreasonably restrains competition." See Levine, 72 F.3d at 1546 (citing Broadcast Music, 441 U.S. at 24-25).

There is no "bright line" rule as to what separates a per se case from a Rule of Reason case. See, e.g., National Bancard Corp. (NaBanco) v. VISA U.S.A., Inc., 779 F.2d 592, 598 (11th Cir. 1987) (quotation and citation omitted). The [*7] "presumption" is that the rule-of-reason standard apples to section 1 cases. See, e.g. Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1567 (11th Cir. 1991). The per se rule is applied "only when history and analysis have shown that in sufficiently similar circumstances the rule of reason unequivocally results in a finding of liability." Levine, 72 F.3d at 1546 (citing Consultants & Designers, Inc. v. Butler Serv. Group, Inc., 720 F.2d 1553, 1562 (11th Cir. 1983)).

"Certain types of practices, however, have emerged as traditionally per se violations." NaBanco, 779 F.2d at 598 (citing United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 80 S. Ct. 503, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, (1960) (vertical price fixing agreements); Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 71 S. Ct. 971, 95 L. Ed. 1199 (1951) (horizontal market divisions); International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 68 S. Ct. 12, 92 L. Ed. 20 (1947) (tying agreements); Fashion Originators' Guild v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 61 S. Ct. 703, 85 L. Ed. 949, 32 F.T.C. 1856 (1941) (group boycotts)).

Plaintiff contends that Paragraph 5 falls into the per se category because it is a horizontal market division. "An agreement between competitors to allocate markets is . . . clearly anticompetitive. Such an agreement has the obvious tendency to diminish output and raise prices." Valley Drug Co. v. Geneva Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 344 F.3d 1294, 1304 (11th Cir. 2003). The Supreme Court has explained that an agreement between competitors to allocate market > is usually termed a "horizontal" restraint, in contradistinction to combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, e.g., manufacturers and distributors, which are termed "vertical" restraints. This Court has reiterated time and time again that "horizontal territorial limitations . . . are naked restraints of trade with no purpose [*8] except stifling of competition." Such limitations are per se violations of the Sherman Act.

See United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972).

The first step the court must take, obviously, is determining whether Paragraph 5 is a horizontal market allocation. Defendant strongly urges that the requirements Supply Agreement is a vertical agreement and Paragraph 5 is merely ancillary to this vertical agreement because it serves the legitimate business purpose of (1) preventing C-E from competing unfairly using confidential information, (2) fostering loyalty, and (3) preventing abusive tactics from a supplier turned competitor. In other words, Defendant argues that Paragraph 5 is not a "naked" restraint.

The court finds that the case of Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 111 S. Ct. 401, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1990), is instructive on this point. There, HBJ began offering a Georgia bar review course on a limited basis in 1976. HBJ was in direct competition with BRG from 1977 to 1979. In early 1980, the two companies entered into an agreement that gave BRG an exclusive license to market HBJ's materials in Georgia and to use HBJ's trade name Bar/Bri. The parties also agreed that HBJ would not complete with BRG in Georgia and that BRG would not compete with HBJ outside of Georgia. Id. at 47. The Court found this agreement [*9] unlawful on its face. Id. at 49. "Such agreements are anticompetitive regardless of whether the parties split a market within which both do business or whether they merely reserve one market for one and another for the other." Id. at 49-50. An important aspect of Palmer for this case is the fact that the Supreme Court specifically rejected the argument that a market allocation agreement could not violate antitrust law unless the two entities had previously competed against one another. Id. at 49.

The court agrees with Defendant that the Supply Agreement on its own is a vertical agreement, but that does not end the analysis. The effect of Paragraph 5 was to delay or prevent C-E from entering the market for ceramic proppants. Thus, C-E is a "potential" competitor of CARBO in the ceramic proppant market. (Likewise, the effect of Paragraph 5 was to bar CARBO from entering the market for the supply of clay and thus, CARBO was a potential competitor of C-E in the clay market.) Paragraph 5, therefore, is a horizontal allocation of at least the proppant market because it bars C-E, a potential competitor, from entering the market. See, e.g., General Leaseways, Inc. v. National Truck Leasing Ass'n, 744 F.2d 588, 591 (7th Cir. 1984) (Posner, J.) ("when firms in the same line of business agree not to enter each [*10] other's territories they violate section 1 of the Sherman Act even if they might be able to show that dividing markets and yielded economic benefits greater than any plausible estimate of the costs in diminished competition; that, in short, horizontal market divisions are illegal per se."). The fact that such a horizontal allocation agreement is contained within a vertical agreement does not save it.

Defendant next contends that even if the court were to find that Paragraph 5 represents some kind of "horizontal" agreement, it is not a per se violation because it is not a "naked restraint" of trade, but rather an "ancillary restraint" that results in "efficiency-enhancing integration" among the parties to the agreement. See NaBanco, 779 F.2d at 603. That is, Paragraph 5 was "necessary" to the Supply Agreement.[2] Defendant's primary argument that Paragraph 5 is ancillary is the contention that Paragraph 5 is actually a confidentiality agreement. Defendant argues that with the information C-E could glean about CARBO's manufacturing processes during the testing of the

[2] Because the court finds Paragraph 5 neither "essential" nor "necessary" to the Supply Agreement, the court need not decide which is the precise formulation of the standard under antitrust law. Compare American Needle, Inc. v. NFL, 560 U.S. 183, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 2216-17, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010) (using "essential") with Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS, 441 U.S. 1, 23, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979) (using "necessary") and National Bancard Corp. v. VISA, U.S.A., Inc., 779 F.2d 592, 601 (11th Cir. 1986) (same).

Georgia clay, C-E would be able to shorten its path to market by three years. Thus, the parties agreed to a three year restriction to protect C-E from "free [*11] riding" off of CARBO's know-how.

The main problem with CARBO's argument is that Paragraph 5 looks nothing like a confidentiality agreement. As an initial matter, it never mentions "confidentiality." Furthermore, nothing in Paragraph 5 or the Supply Agreement prohibits C-E from breaching the alleged confidentiality of any information it gleans from CARBO. C-E could sell the information to a competitor of CARBO with impunity. On the other hand, C-E is prevented from selling ceramic proppants even if it purchased the proppants from someone else and did not manufacture the proppants itself through information it may have gleaned during CARBO's testing of the Georgia clay.

Moreover, CARBO did not protect any of its information. As Plaintiff noted, in patent filings, CARBO has long revealed the composition of clay appropriate for the manufacture of proppants. Those patent filings included a chemical analysis of clay from Andersonville, Georgia, the same location from which C-E intended to supply CARBO. The only evidence CARBO points to concerning its own efforts to protect confidentiality is a form non-disclosure agreement that any visitor to CARBO's proppant plant must sign, [*12] including visitors from C-E. But this general form does not relate to any of the matters CARBO now argues should have been kept confidential, including clay composition.

There are some exceptional circumstances which might move a horizontal agreement out of the per se category, such as entities working together to bring a new product to the market — a product that would not reach market unless the entities worked as described in their agreement. See, e.g., American Needle, Inc. v. National Football League, 560 U.S. 183, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 2216-17, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010).

The parties' Supply Agreement, however, does not fit this category. The Supply Agreement is a straightforward raw materials supply agreement. There is no doubt that in the absence of Paragraph 5, either these parties or other companies would sell kaoline to proppant manufacturers. That is, the Supply Agreement and Paragraph 5, in particular, are not required to guarantee the existence of ceramic proppants. The fact that the parties had a previous Supply Agreement that did not contain a Paragraph 5-like mutual allocation is ample evidence for the fact that Paragraph 5 is not ancillary to the Supply Agreement. There is no hint of partnership or joint venture between CARBO and C-E. To the contrary, theirs is an arms-length relationship. [*13]

Defendant also raises some general defenses to Plaintiff's motion. Defendant argues that Plaintiff delayed in challenging the validity of Paragraph 5, waiting for the end of the term of Supply Agreement and in the meantime accruing benefits under the Supply Agreement. Defendant contends that Plaintiff's failure to take action with respect to Paragraph 5 in 2006 prevented CARBO from protecting its legitimate business interest in confidentiality in ways other than the enforcement of Paragraph 5. This laches/in pari delicto argument, however does not apply to antitrust actions. See, e.g., Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors of PSA, Inc. v. Edwards, 437 F.3d 1145, 1153 (11th Cir. 2006) (in pari delicto does not apply in enforcement of antitrust laws).

Defendant's unclean hands argument is essentially a reformulation of its laches argument. Furthermore, Defendant's unclean hands argument cuts both ways. Plaintiff clearly repudiated Paragraph 5 of the Supply Agreement in 2006 and Defendant took no steps to mandate its enforcement at that time just as Plaintiff took no steps to bar its enforcement. Rinks v. Courier Dispatch Group, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4728, 2001 WL 34090167 (N.D. Ga. Apr. 11, 2001) (Forrester, J.), cited by Plaintiff, is distinguishable because the court's ruling relied to a great extent on the fact that the plaintiff had just accepted a monetary settlement in exchange [*14] for signing an agreement releasing any claims she had against her employer when she turned around and sued her employer. The court's ruling hinged on the release agreement and not the underlying non-compete agreements.

In sum, the court finds Plaintiff has a substantial likelihood of demonstrating that Paragraph 5 is a horizontal market allocation that is a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. In the alternative, the court also considers whether Paragraph 5 violates state law.

B. State Law

Although the Supply Agreement provided that Alabama law would apply, Georgia courts would first consider whether the agreement violated Georgia's public policy. See, e.g., Siech v. Hobbs Group, LLC, 198 Fed. Appx. 840, 841 n.1 (11th Cir. 2006); Convergys Corp. v. Keener, 276 Ga. 808, 582 S.E.2d 84 (2003) (law of jurisdiction chosen by parties governs contractual rights unless application of other jurisdiction's law would violate Georgia public policy). If the agreement would not be enforceable under Georgia law, it is violative of Georgia's public policy. Id.

When "determining whether the application of [foreign] law creates a conflict, the Court should apply Georgia's public policy as it existed at the time [the employee] entered into the Non-Compete." Boone v. Corestaff Support Servs., Inc., 805 F. Supp. 2d 1362 (N.D. Ga. 2011) (Story, J.). Due to recent statutory and constitutional amendments, questions [*15] have been raised as to what constitutes Georgia law on the subject. Id. The Georgia legislature passed a new restrictive covenant law in 2009 which gives more favorable treatment to restrictive covenants than they would have received in the past. Id. at 1377. Furthermore, a constitutional amendment adopting that law became effective on January 1, 2011. Id.

Several courts have held, however, that the statutory and constitutional amendments do not apply to agreements entered into before the effective date of the legislation. See, e.g., Boone, 805 F. Supp. 2d at 1369 (discussing 2011 law); Bunker Hill Intern., Ltd. v. Nationsbuilder Ins. Servs., Inc., 309 Ga. App. 503, 505 n. 1, 710 S.E.2d 662 (2011) (discussing 2009 law); Gordon Document Prods., Inc. v. Service Techs., Inc., 308 Ga. App. 445, 448 n. 5, 708 S.E.2d 48 (2011) (discussing 2009 law); Cox v. Altus Healthcare and Hospice, Inc., 308 Ga. App. 28, 30, 706 S.E.2d 660 (2011) (discussing 2009 law).

Having determined that the new statutory and constitutional amendments should not be applied retroactively, the court must consider whether Paragraph 5 violates Georgia law as it existed at the time the parties entered into Supply Agreement in 2003. Under Georgia law, contracts that restrain trade are void against public policy. See, e.g., W.R. Grace & Co. v. Mouyal, 262 Ga. 464, 465, 422 S.E.2d 529 (1992). Courts generally consider duration, territorial coverage, and scope of activity in determining whether a particular restraint is reasonable. Id. (citing Watson v. Waffle House, 253 Ga. 671, 673, 324 S.E.2d 175 (1985)). See also Koger Properties v. Adams-Cates Co., 247 Ga. 68, 274 S.E.2d 329 (1981) ("Georgia law prohibits contracts or agreements, tending to defeat or [*16] lessen competition or in general restraint of trade. However, covenants against competition in employment contracts are considered in partial restraint of trade, and they are enforceable if strictly limited in time and territorial effect, and if they are otherwise reasonable considering the business interests of the employer sought to be protected and the effect on the employee.").

Georgia applies different levels of scrutiny to restrictive covenants depending on the context of the business arrangement. The lowest level of scrutiny is given to agreements signed in connection with the sale of a business; the highest level of scrutiny goes to agreements signed in the employment context. Defendant also argues that Georgia law requires that the court consider the bargaining capacities of the parties and any independent consideration given for the covenant. However, the case Defendant cites for this proposition — Palmer & Cay, Inc. v. Marsh & McLennan Companies, Inc., 404 F.3d 1297 (11th Cir. 2005) — does not support it. Palmer & Cay discussed an intermediate level of scrutiny that Georgia applies to professional partnership agreements because the partners have relatively equal bargaining power and share equally in consideration. Id. at 1303 n.12.

Supply agreements, such as the instant agreement, [*17] are not considered to be analogous to a contract for the sale of a business. See, e.g., Amstell, Inc. v. Bunge Corp., 213 Ga. App. 115, 443 S.E.2d 706 (1994). There, Amstell developed a fiber base concentrate to be used in the production of fiber-fortified milk. It contracted with Carlin Foods Corporation to manufacture and distribute the concentrate. Id. at 115. Carlin executed a nondisclosure agreement. Id. Bunge Corporation became a party to these agreements after it acquired Carlin Foods. Id. The agreements also contained a non-compete clause which stated that for three years after the term of the agreement, Bunge agreed not to produce, or assist or consult in the production of, any concentrates or finished products which are fiber-fortified milk concentrates. Id. Bunge also agreed not to develop, produce, license or market fiber-based concentrates for the production of fiber-containing milks or dairy base for the production of shakes and ice cream. Id. at 115-16. Amstell eventually sued Bunge for breaching the covenants not to compete and Bunge defended by arguing the covenants were not valid.

The court first determined that the non-compete at issue was not analogous to a contract for the sale of a business but rather the non-compete was ancillary to an independent contractor [*18] manufacturing and distributorship agreement. As such, it should be treated as an employment rather than a sales contract. Id. at 116. "Such a covenant is enforceable only where it is strictly limited in time and territorial effect and is otherwise reasonable considering the business interest of the employer sought to be protected and the effect on the employee." Id. (quotation and citation omitted). Because the non-competes in Amstell contained "absolutely no territorial limits, they are invalid." Id.

The court finds the supplier-manufacturer relationship between Plaintiff and Defendant analogous to the facts of Amstell. Defendant argues that Amstell does not apply to the instant situation because there, the distributor had less bargaining power and the non-compete was one-sided. These factors, however, were not particularly relevant to the court's analysis. The Amstell court, rather, found that the parties' relationship most closely matched an employment relationship and therefore the non-compete agreements had to be given careful scrutiny.

In determining the nature of the parties' relationship here, Georgia law, as reflected by Amstell, has already accounted for bargaining power and consideration, [*19] and has determined that it should receive the strict scrutiny associated with employment covenants, and not sale-of-business or partnership covenants. Furthermore, consideration of the facts in this case show that the Supply Agreement is an arms-length negotiation between two sophisticated business partners. The fact that both parties had reasons for wanting to structure the deal as they did does not mean that any particular party had excessive bargaining leverage. The only context in which Georgia courts apply the "much less scrutiny" standard suggested by Defendant is the sale of business, which this clearly is not.

Moreover, setting aside the issue of which level of scrutiny applies, the court has located no Georgia case — and the parties have not identified one — in which the court has approved a worldwide territorial restriction. CARBO exports proppants to 50 countries and C-E and its affiliated companies obtain kaolin from 18 countries. This scope of business is not sufficient to support the much broader worldwide territorial restriction contained in Paragraph 5. Regardless of whether CARBO had a legitimate business interest of protecting confidential information — an allegation [*20] the court above found not too convincing — that interest still does not support a worldwide restriction.

For these reasons, the court finds that Plaintiff has a substantial likelihood of demonstrating that Paragraph 5 is also invalid under Georgia restrictive covenant law.

C. Remaining Preliminary Injunction Factors[3]

The court must now consider whether Plaintiff will suffer irreparable harm absent an injunction and balance the harms. See, e.g., MacGinnitie v. Hobbs Group, LLC, 420 F.3d 1234, 1242-43 (11th Cir. 2005). As to federal antitrust law, the court's ruling that Paragraph 5 is a per se violation essentially ends the inquiry. Moreover, because the court determined that it is substantially likely that Paragraph 5 violates federal antitrust law, the enforcement of the court's injunction is not limited to Georgia.

With respect to Georgia non-compete law, Defendant argues that the alleged harm Plaintiff suffers can be addressed through monetary remedies. However, in MacGinnitie, where the Eleventh Circuit reviewed a district court order denying a motion for preliminary injunction with respect to a non-compete provision, the Court of Appeals held that the unenforceable restrictions on the plaintiff's access to customers, employees, and information was an "irreparable [*21] harm" that could not be "undone through monetary remedies." Id. at 1242. "These injuries are in the form of lost opportunities, which are difficult, if not impossible, to quantify. Georgia public policy is clear that restrictive covenants in employment contracts are disfavored as potential restraints of trade which tend to lessen competition. Because of this public policy, the Georgia courts and this court have not hesitated to find irreparable harm in cases involving covenants not to compete." Id. (citations omitted). Likewise, here, C-E's irreparable harm is not being able to pursue opportunities in the ceramic proppants market.

[3] The court is puzzled by Defendant's argument that Plaintiff's requested injunction would violate Defendant's First Amendment right to petition any court. Plaintiff filed an action for declaratory judgment and a motion for a preliminary injunction. Defendant has fully participated in litigating before the court and raised counterclaims of breach of contract, disgorgement, and unjust enrichment. The fact that the court has determined that Plaintiff has a substantial likelihood of demonstrating that Paragraph 5 is invalid does not mean that Defendant did not have an opportunity to petition the court as to its views of Paragraph 5.

On balancing of the harms, the MacGinnitie court held that Georgia public policy disfavored restrictive covenants because of their "negative effect on competition" and therefore, the harms weighed in favor of striking the covenant. Id. at 1243. "Loss of business due to free and fair competition is not a harm; violation of legal rules designed to promote such competition is a harm." Id. As such, the court finds that the remaining three factors to consider in whether to issue a preliminary injunction weigh in Plaintiff's favor.

D. Bond

Defendant requests that if the court grants Plaintiff's [*22] motion for preliminary injunction, the court should set an appeal bond at $20-$30 million, a figure that reflects CARBO's estimate of the profits C-E would make in the ceramic proppants markets during the intended three year term of Paragraph 5. Plaintiff responds that Defendant's cause of action regarding Paragraph 5 would be breach of contract for which the appropriate remedy is CARBO's damages and not C-E's disgorgement of profits. Plaintiff, therefore, asks the court to require a minimal bond or none at all.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65(c) provides "the court may issue a preliminary injunction . . . only if the movant gives security in an amount that the court considers proper to pay the costs and damages sustained by any party found to have been wrongfully enjoined or restrained." Id. The determination of the amount of an injunction bond is within the discretion of the court and the court may decide to require no security at all. See, e.g., BellSouth Telecommunications, Inc. v. MCIMetro Access Transmission Services, LLC, 425 F.3d 964, 970-71 (11th Cir. 2005).

The court agrees that Defendant would not be entitled to disgorgement of C-E's profits as measure of damage for its breach of contract claim. Furthermore, the court finds that Plaintiff has a high probability of succeeding on the merits of its claim. In the absence of any [*23] evidence or further suggestion on bond, bond is hereby fixed in the sum of $100,000.

III. Conclusion

The court GRANTS Plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction [10].

Defendant is ENJOINED from seeking to enforce the provisions of Paragraph 5.

IT IS SO ORDERED this 13th day of March, 2012.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS

THIS CAUSE comes before the Court pursuant to Defendants International Business Machines Corporation ("IBM") and IBM Global Financing ("IGF")'s (collectively, "Defendants") motion to dismiss the second amended complaint, filed September 26, 2011 [DE 19]. Plaintiff QSGI, Inc. ("QSGI," or "Plaintiff") responded on October 28, 2011 [DE [*2] 24]. Defendants replied on November 7, 2011 [DE 28]. This motion is ripe for adjudication.

I. BACKGROUND

QSGI alleges that it built a business based on its particular practice of "purchas[ing] used IBM mainframe computers on the open market," changing their processing capacity, or reconfiguring them, and reselling them to end-user customers. (Compl. ¶¶ 11, 13.) Specifically, QSGI claims that its ability to downgrade the processing capacity of used IBM mainframes was critical to its success and that it needed IBM microcode and parts to do so. (Id. ¶ 13.) The Complaint does not identify any other third party that engaged in this particular business practice.

According to the Complaint, in or around 2007 IBM adopted a policy that it would only sell the parts and microcode needed to reconfigure a used IBM mainframe computer if it had been installed and in use by the customer for at least six months (the "six-month rule"). (Id. ¶¶ 13, 16.) Moreover, QSGI alleges that, while IBM enforced the six-month rule against QSGI, it did not enforce the rule against IGF, permitting IGF to change the capacity of used IBM mainframes prior to shipping. (Id. ¶¶ 16, 18.) [1] Because QSGI's business model allegedly [*3] centered on selling changed-capacity mainframes, QSGI asserts that IBM's policy disadvantaged it relative to IGF, forcing QSGI out of business. (Id. ¶¶ 13, 16-18.)

QSGI frames its Complaint as one of monopolization, alleging that IBM used its "monopoly power to quash QSGI's ability to compete and exist in the marketplace for used IBM mainframe computers." (Id. ¶ 18.) For its causes of action, QSGI first asserts a violation of the Florida Antitrust Act and, second, repackages the same claim as a violation of the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA"). (See id. ¶ 1.) Defendants move for the dismissal of both claims.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

On a motion to dismiss, while the Court takes the plaintiff's allegations as true, "conclusory allegations, unwarranted factual deductions or legal conclusions masquerading as facts will not prevent dismissal." Davila v. Delta Air Lines, Inc., 326 F.3d 1183, 1185 (11th Cir. 2003) (citing South Florida Water Mgm't Dist. v. Montalvo, 84 F.3d 402, 406 (11th Cir. 1996)). Plaintiff's [*4] obligation to provide the grounds for his entitlement to relief requires more than "labels and conclusions," and a "formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Ashcroft v. Iqbal,556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1964-65, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). "The point is to 'give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" Davis v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 516 F.3d 955, 974 (11th Cir. 2008) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1964, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) and finding allegations insufficient to meet Twombly standard). A complaint's factual allegations "must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 127 S.Ct. at 1965. "Only a complaint that states a plausible claim for relief survives a motion to dismiss." Ashcroft, 129 S.Ct. at 1950. A determination of whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief requires the reviewing court "to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. When a plaintiff fails to plead factual content permitting the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, it has not "shown" entitlement to relief. [*5] Id. (quoting Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(2)).

[1] IGF is not a legal entity, but rather an IBM business unit that in the United States is a business segment of IBM Credit LLC, a wholly owned subsidiary of IBM.

A. Failure to Plead Antitrust Injury

Antitrust standing requires a specific showing of antitrust injury, that is, that there is a public harm from the alleged conduct that coincides with a plaintiff's private harm. See Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1449-50 (11th Cir. 1991). As the Eleventh Circuit has stated, "antitrust injury [i]s the touchstone for antitrust standing." Austin v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Ala., 903 F.2d 1385, 1389 (11th Cir. 1990); see also NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Co., 507 F.3d 442, 450 (6th Cir. 2007) (antitrust injury is a "'necessary , but not always sufficient' condition of antitrust standing" (quoting Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110 n.5, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986)). As such, where a plaintiff's antitrust claim merely alleges harm to an individual competitor, dismissal is warranted. See Spanish Broad. Sys. of Fla., Inc. v. Clear Channel Comms., Inc., 376 F.3d 1065, 1069 (11th Cir. 2004) ("Critically, under both sections [One and Two of the Sherman Act], an antitrust plaintiff must show harm to competition in general, rather than merely damage to an individual competitor."); Pierson v. Orlando Reg'l Healthcare Sys., Inc., 619 F.Supp.2d 1260, 1276 (S.D. Fla. 2009) [*6] (finding no standing to bring Sherman Act or Florida Antitrust Act claims where "[t]he Amended Complaint alleges many detriments to Plaintiff, but it does not allege 'antitrust injury'"). Federal antitrust standing law applies to Florida Antitrust Act claims. See All Care Nursing Serv., Inc. v. High Tech Staffing Servs., Inc., 135 F.3d 740, 745 n.11 (11th Cir. 1998) ("Federal and Florida antitrust laws are analyzed under the same rules and case law.").

Absent factual allegations of antitrust injury, an antitrust claim will fail under Twombly and Iqbal. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949; Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Without such allegations, there can be no plausible claim to relief on an antitrust claim that could withstand dismissal. See, e.g., NicSand, 507 F.3d at 451 ("a 'naked assertion' of antitrust injury, the Supreme Court has made clear, is not enough; an antitrust claimant must put forth factual 'allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with)' antitrust injury" (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557)).

Properly pleading antitrust injury requires allegations, rooted in fact, of the anticompetitive effects of the conduct alleged to violate the antitrust laws. Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1450 [*7] ("[Plaintiffs] must plead and prove that the injury they have suffered derives from some anticompetitive conduct and is the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent."). QSGI makes no allegations as to the structure of the alleged market for used IBM mainframe computers. While QSGI alleges that IBM has a 35% market share of a purported "new mainframe computer market" (Compl. ¶ 7), it fails to allege IBM's market share in the purported used IBM mainframe computer market. QSGI also fails to allege what its own market share was before and after IBM's purported adoption of the six-month rule in 2007; how many competitors are in the purported used IBM mainframe market; the strength of any other competitor in the purported market; how other competitors were impacted, if at all; or why QSGI's exit from that market would result in uncompetitive prices to customers. QSGI has not identified a single competitor (other than itself) that supposedly has been harmed by IBM's six-month rule; nor has QSGI identified a single customer adversely affected by the rule. QSGI has not explained how competition in the alleged market has been reduced by IBM's rule, or how customers could have been adversely [*8] affected. On the contrary, QSGI alleges that its business model involved purchasing used IBM mainframe computers on the "open"—i.e., freely competitive—market. (Compl. ¶ 11.) QSGI gives no reason to think that this "open market" does not still exist.

In Spanish Broadcasting, Spanish Broadcasting System ("SBS") brought antitrust claims under the Sherman Act against Clear Channel Broadcasting ("CC") and Hispanic Broadcasting Channel ("HBC") alleging that CC and HBC had conspired to harm SBS, induced its employees to breach their employment contracts, hindered its ability to raise capital, and discouraged advertisers from purchasing ad time on SBS. 376 F.3d at 1069-70. SBS's allegations of harm included "weakened stock prices, restricted access to capital markets, loss of employees, damaged reputation, and loss of advertising revenue." Id. at 1072. The district court dismissed SBS's complaint, and the Eleventh Circuit affirmed, holding that SBS's complaint failed to allege harm to competition. Id. at 1072-74, 1076-77. The Court of Appeals noted that the complaint contained "no allegations at all about a factual connection between the conduct alleged and overall impact on the advertising [*9] market." Id. at 1072. The court rejected SBS's argument that as the primary competitor in its alleged market, any damage to SBS inherently damaged competition, explaining that SBS had failed to meet its burden of supporting this inference with "specific factual allegations" such as "specific damage done to consumers in the relevant market." Id. at 1072-73.

Here, all the allegations concern the unique impact of IBM's six-month rule on QSGI's chosen business strategy. QSGI offers a few wholly conclusory allegations to the effect that IBM used its purported market power to "injure[] competition", "restrict competition" and "render[] it impossible for competition to exist." (Compl. ¶¶ 22, 23.) Such naked assertions of harm to competition cannot withstand dismissal under the Twombly and Iqbal pleading standard. See CBC Cos. v. Equifax, Inc., 561 F.3d 569, 571-72 (6th Cir. 2009) (allegations of "restricting competition", "decreasing options" and "increasing . . . costs" insufficient to establish antitrust standing). Accordingly, QSGI's antitrust claim is dismissed. See George Haug Co. v. Rolls Royce Motor Cars Inc., 148 F.3d 136, 140 (2d Cir. 1998) (affirming dismissal for lack of antitrust [*10] standing where "Plaintiff has failed to plead its own market share" or the "market share purportedly absorbed by" the defendant's alleged co-conspirator); Glades Pharms., LLC v. Murphy, No. 1:06-CV-0940, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90154, 2006 WL 3694625, at *3 (N.D. Ga. Dec. 12, 2006) (dismissing complaint, noting that "[t]he complaint makes no mention of how many competitors are in the [relevant] market or why [defendant's] entrance into the market would 'reduce prices'").

QSGI's reliance on Global Candle Gallery Licensing Co. v. Nabozny, No. 8:08-CV-2532, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111580, 2009 WL 3852794 (M.D. Fla. Nov. 18, 2009), is unavailing. The Global Candle antitrust plaintiff, unlike QSGI, identified a relevant market and made specific allegations of antitrust injury. See 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 111580, [WL] at *3.

The Court disregards QSGI's conclusory allegations about purportedly uncompetitive prices because they are contradicted by other specific factual allegations in the complaint. See United States ex rel. Nicholas v. JFK Med. Ctr., No. 01-8158-CIV, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28169, 2002 WL 31941007, at *2 (S.D. Fla. Nov. 15, 2002) (court not required to credit "internally inconsistent" allegations). For example, QSGI claims to have purchased used IBM mainframe computers on the "open market." (Compl. [*11] ¶ 11.) If used IBM mainframe computers are available for purchase on the "open market," then QSGI is not the only entity that can purchase them. There is nothing in the complaint to suggest that customers cannot buy them, too, or that the elimination of QSGI's middleman services actually reduced the supply of used IBM mainframe computers. QSGI's allegation that IBM has a 35% market share necessarily leaves 65% of the market to competitors. This allegation is also inconsistent with QSGI's antitrust claim. QSGI's Florida Antitrust Act claim is dismissed.

B. Failure to State a FDUPTA Claim

A claim under FDUPTA has three elements: "(1) a deceptive or unfair practice; (2) causation; and (3) actual damages." Siever v. BWGaskets, Inc., 669 F.Supp.2d 1286, 1292 (M.D. Fla. 2009). A FDUTPA claim may be alleged as a "per se violation premised on the violation of another law proscribing unfair or deceptive practice." Hap v. Toll Jupiter, Ltd. P'ship, No. 07-81027-CIV-RYSKAMP, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5866, 2009 WL 187938, at *9 (S.D. Fla. Jan. 28, 2009).

QSGI makes no allegations that IBM's purported adoption in 2007 of the six-month rule is in any way deceptive. QSGI also fails to allege any facts suggesting that IBM's conduct [*12] was at all unfair other than a conclusory assertion that use of "monopoly power" is an "unfair business practice." (Compl. ¶ 25.) QSGI's FDUTPA allegations are, thus, merely a repackaging of the allegations offered for its antitrust claims. When, as here, a plaintiff's FDUTPA claim is based on the same allegations as its antitrust claim, failure to establish a violation of antitrust law is sufficient to conclude that the plaintiff has also failed to state a FDUTPA claim. See JES Props., Inc. v. USA Equestrian, Inc., No. 802CV1585T24MAP, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43122, 2005 WL 1126665, at *19 & n.23 (M.D. Fla. May 9, 2005) ("Plaintiffs concede that their FDUPTA claims 'survive' or 'fall' with their antitrust claims."); see also Hunter v. Bev Smith Ford, LLC, No. 07-80665-CIV-RYSKAMP, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34982, 2008 WL 1925265, at *9 (S.D. Fla. Apr. 29, 2008) (plaintiffs based all FDUTPA allegations on violations of state and federal statutes that the court had already considered and rejected, thus there could be no FDUTPA violation). Because QSGI's antitrust claim have been dismissed, QSGI's FDUTPA claim cannot survive.

The FDUPTA claims is also subject to dismissal because QSGI failed to plead "actual damages" as required by Florida law. "[A]ctual [*13] damages" under section 501.211(2) is "a term of art." Eclipse Med., Inc. v. Am. Hydro-

Surg. Instruments, Inc., 262 F.Supp.2d 1334, 1357 (S.D. Fla. 1999). "The measure of actual damages is the difference in the market value of the product or service in the condition in which it was delivered according to the contract of the parties," except that where a product is "rendered valueless" as a result of a defect, "purchase price is the appropriate measure of damages." Jovine v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 795 F.Supp.2d 1331, 1344 (S.D. Fla. 2011) (quoting Rollins, Inc. v. Heller, 454 So.2d 580, 585 (Fla. 4th DCA 1984); see also Eclipse Med., 262 F.Supp.2d at 1357.

QSGI has failed to plead any facts from which one could plausibly infer the degree to which, or even whether, the market value of any product has changed as a result of IBM's purported conduct. Nor has QSGI pled that any product has been rendered valueless as a result of a defect such that a purchase price (also not alleged) could stand in as the market value for purposes of actual damages.

All that remains is QSGI's repeated claim to consequential damages in the form of "lost profits" and "lost business." (Compl. ¶¶ 17, 18, 26, 31.) But [*14] consequential damages are not recoverable under FDUTPA. Eclipse Med., 262 F.Supp.2d at 1357 ("Florida courts specifically reject the recovery of consequential damages under FDUTPA."). Because QSGI failed to plead facts sufficient to show actual damages under FDUTPA, the FDUPTA claim is dismissed..

IV. CONCLUSION

THE COURT, having considered the pertinent portions of the record and being otherwise fully advised, hereby

ORDERS AND ADJUDGES that the motion to dismiss, filed September 26, 2011 [DE 19], is GRANTED. The second amended complaint is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. QSGI may have fifteen days from the date of this order to file an amended complaint.

DONE AND ORDERED at Chambers in West Palm Beach, Florida, this 13th day of March, 2012.

This matter comes before the Court on defendant Beatport L.L.C.'s Motion to Dismiss [CM/ECF document #15]; defendant AM Only, Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss [#25]; defendants Bradley Roulier and BMJ&J L.L.C.'s Motion to Dismiss [#32], and Defendant [2] Beatport L.L.C.'s Motion for Sanctions [#30]. All of these motions have been fully briefed.

Facts

Beginning during the 1990's, plaintiff Regas Christou founded several nightclubs in Denver, including R.M.C. Holdings, L.L.C. ("The Church"), Molon Lave, Inc. ("2 A.M."), 1037 Broadway, Inc. ("Bar Standard f/k/a "The Shelter"), City Hall L.L.C. ("City Hall"), 775 Lincoln St., Inc. ("Funky Buddha Lounge"), and 1055 Broadway, Inc. ("The Living Room"). Mr. Christou is also affiliated with Bouboulina, Inc. ("Vinyl"). These clubs are alleged to comprise the South of Colfax Nightlife district ("SOCO"). Complaint [#1] at 3.

The SOCO clubs, especially The Church and Vinyl, emphasize "Electronic Dance Music" and live performance by DJs. Id. at ¶4. Mr. Christou has been instrumental in developing the Electronic Dance Music market in Denver. Id. at ¶16. Both The Church and Vinyl are nationally recognized clubs in the Electronic Dance Music scene. Id. ¶17.

Defendant Bradley Roulier is a co-founder and member of Beatport, LLC ("Beatport") and founder and member of BMJ&J, L.L.C. d/b/a Beta Nightclub ("Beta"). Id. at ¶6. Starting in 1998, Mr. Roulier was employed by Mr. Christou as a talent buyer and assisted [3] in booking top DJs to perform at SOCO venues. Id. at ¶18. While he was still employed by Mr. Christou, Mr. Roulier, along with several partners, conceived of the idea that would become Beatport. Id. at ¶19. In 2003, Beatport was founded as an online marketplace for downloading music that catered to consumers and producers of Electronic Dance Music. Id. at ¶19-20. Mr. Christou co-signed a $50,000 loan to start Beatport in exchange for Mr. Roulier's promise that Mr. Christou would later be given partial ownership of the company. Id. at ¶20. Mr. Christou also initially assisted in Beatport's promotion by advertising Beatport in SOCO's print and online advertisements, [*1063] distributing promotional flyers, and financing a promotional video. Id. at ¶23. Mr. Roulier never transferred any ownership interest to Mr. Christou. Id. at 33.

By 2005 Beatport was a commercial success, with over one million purchases and song downloads from the website. Id. at ¶24. The website claims that "Beatport is the most relevant online source of electronic music in the world." Id. at ¶ 31. Beatport gained popularity and success by differentiating itself from other music marketplaces such as Apple's iTunes. Id. at [4] ¶26. Unlike other music download websites, Beatport offered music at higher bit rates and without Digital Rights Management (DRM) controls, which enabled DJ's to re-mix and use music downloaded from Beatport during their live performances. Id. Beatport's dominance in the Electronic Dance Music community meant that Beatport became financially important for DJs. Id. at ¶25. Plaintiffs allege that favorable promotion, or the lack thereof, on Beatport can "make or break album sales." Ibid.

Beatport entered into a partnership with German hardware manufacturer, Native Instruments GmbH, to provide the seamless integration of music downloads from Beatport and hardware used by DJs. Id. at ¶27. Plaintiffs believe that Native Instruments GmbH has subsequently acquired a majority interest in Beatport due to Beatport's importance to the Electronic Dance Music community. Id. at ¶29.

Mr. Roulier initially expressed interest in purchasing The Church from Mr. Christou, but instead he opened a competing nightclub in Denver. While still employed by Mr. Christou, and while still in negotiations regarding the purchase of The Church, Mr. Roulier opened the nightclub Beta in March 2008. Plaintiffs allege that [5] Mr. Roulier and the other defendants leveraged their ownership of Beatport to coerce DJs to boycott SOCO's venues and only perform at Beta's Beatport lounge. Id. at ¶34. Plaintiffs allege that Beatport has the ability to remove all artists on a DJ's label from its online marketplace if the DJ performs at a SOCO venue. Id. at ¶46.

Beatport allegedly began using its position to coerce DJ's into performing only at Beta in 2008. Ibid. Because access and promotion on Beatport are critical to both a DJ's and a label's success, many DJs and agents were allegedly compelled to agree with Beatport and Beta's demands. For example, plaintiffs allege that DJ Charissa Saverio ("DJ Rap"), just prior to formalizing an agreement with The Church, was contacted by Mr. Roulier and told that if she wanted continued access and label support on Beatport she must play at Beta and not at The Church. Id. at ¶ 52. Mr. Roulier told DJ Rap's booking agency, Bullit Booking, that "he would pull both of DJ Rap's record labels entirely off Beatport if DJ Rap played at SOCO's clubs." Id. DJ Rap canceled her performance at The Church and instead performed at Beta.

Plaintiffs quote an "owner of a major Electronic Dance [6] Music record label" as saying that Beta and Mr. Roulier are "using their Beatport connections to make sure things happen." Id. at ¶ 54. In an interview with the Denver Post, Mr. Roulier was quoted as saying "[w]ith [Beta's] relationship with Beatport we think most of the DJs will want to play for us." Id. at ¶55.

As a result plaintiffs allege that the SOCO clubs were squeezed out of the market. Plaintiffs brought the present action alleging nine claims for relief: (1) Unlawful tying in violation of 15 U.S.C. §1 against Beatport, Beta and Mr. Roulier; (2) Monopolization in violation of 15 U.S.C. §2 against Beta and Mr. Roulier; (3) Attempted monopolization in violation of 15 U.S.C. §2 against Beta and Mr. [*1064] Roulier; (4) Conspiracy to Monopolize in violation of 15 U.S.C. §2 against all defendants;[1] (5) Conspiracy to eliminate competition by unfair means in violation of 15 U.S.C. §1 against all defendants; (6) Theft of trade secrets in violation of C.R.S. § 7-74-101 against Beatport, Beta, and Mr. Roulier; (7) Violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act (RICO), 28 U.S.C. §1962 against all defendants; (8) Intentional interference with prospective business expectances [7] against Mr. Roulier[2]; and (9) Civil conspiracy against all defendants.

Beatport filed a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) on January 12, 2011 [#15]. Plaintiffs responded [#38] and Beatport replied [#57]. Defendants Bradley Roulier and BMJ&J (Beta) also filed a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a), 9(b), 12(b)(1), and 12 (b)(6) on February 7, 2011 [#32]. Plaintiffs responded [#42] and Beta replied [#59].

Standard

Motion to Dismiss: 12(b)(6)

When reviewing a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) the Court "must accept all the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint as true and must construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Alvarado v. KOB-TV, L.L.C., 493 F.3d 1210, 1215 (10th Cir. 2007) (citing David v. City & County of Denver, 101 F.3d 1344, 1352 (10th Cir. 1996). However, a complaint must set forth a plausible, not merely a possible, claim. Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007); Atwell v. Gabow, 311 Fed. Appx. 122, 125 (10th Cir. 2009). [8] "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570).

Motion to Dismiss: 9(b)

Allegations of fraud are subject to a heightened pleading standard. The requirements of Rule 9(b) dictate that "[i]n alleging a fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). The complaint must "set forth the time, place and contents of the false representation, the identity of the party making the statement and the consequences thereof." Koch v. Koch Industries, Inc., 203 F.3d 1202, 1236 (10th Cir. 2000) (citing Lawrence Nat'l Bank v. Edmonds, 924 F.2d 176, 180 (10th Cir. 1991)).

[2] This claim was originally asserted against Mr. Roulier and AM Only.

Conclusions

Defendants seek the dismissal of all claims asserted against them. Prior to the evaluation of plaintiffs' antitrust claims the Court must first evaluate plaintiffs' definition of the relevant markets:

Relevant Markets

In order to state a cause of action under either Section 1 [9] or Section 2 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must adequately define the relevant market. Defining the relevant market for purposes of antitrust analysis requires the plaintiffs to define both a product market and a geographic market. Plaintiffs allege two separate relevant markets in their Complaint. The first such market is "the market for digital downloads of DRM-free, high fidelity Electronic Dance Music suitable for playing on high performance sound systems. [*1065] Complaint ¶35. In plaintiffs' estimation, this is a distinct submarket of the broader market for the sale of Electronic Dance Music. Id. at ¶37. Due to the costs associated with re-mixing and finding sufficient audio fidelity, plaintiffs allege that there are no reasonably substitutable products. The substitution of other musical genres or formats would be insufficient and unreasonably costly. Id. at ¶36. Because digital downloads are available anywhere an internet connection exists, plaintiffs define their relevant geographic market as global.

The second market pertinent to plaintiffs' claims is "the market for live performance by A-list DJs playing Electronic Dance Music. Complaint ¶38. "A-list" DJs are allegedly a distinct [10] sub-market in the broader market for live performances by DJs. Id. at ¶37. Plaintiffs argue that this sub-market is recognized by both consumers and industry insiders and is "characterized by unique pricing and sensitivity to price changes." Id. This product, according to plaintiffs, also has no reasonable substitute. Plaintiffs define the geographic market as the "Denver metro area" because of the "low cross-elasticity of demand by consumers inside the Denver metro area with providers outside of it." Id. at ¶38.

Defendants argue that all of plaintiffs' antitrust claims must fail because they have failed properly to define the relevant market. In particular, Beta and Mr. Roulier argue that plaintiffs do not address reasonable interchangeability or cross-elasticity of demand in the proposed relevant markets. Defendants also argue that plaintiffs' definitions of the submarkets are insufficient.

The plaintiff must define the relevant market by making specific reference to "the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). A plaintiff's failure sufficiently to [11] define the relevant market is cause for dismissal of the claim. Campfield v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins., 532 F.3d 1111, 1118 (10th Cir. 2008). "Where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand...even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted." Ibid. (quoting Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436-37 (3d Cir. 1997)).

Plaintiffs argue that they have adequately defined the market in their complaint. The Court agrees. In plaintiff's market for "digital downloads of DRM-free, high fidelity Electronic Dance Music" plaintiffs have alleged that there are "no reasonable substitutes." Complaint ¶36. Plaintiffs argue that there is no substitute because of unique characteristics in the industry, such as the need to re-mix the music, and the demand for high quality sound. Ibid. Although plaintiffs do not also use the phrase "cross-elasticity of demand," that is not fatal to their market definition. The basic test for product market definition is "reasonable [12] interchangeability." Telecor Communications, Inc. v. Southwestern Bell, 305 F.3d 1124, 1131 (10th Cir. 2002). "Interchangeability may be measured by, and is substantially synonymous with, cross elasticity." Ibid. (citing Brown Shoe Co, 370 U.S. at 325). Plaintiffs have alleged a product market definition that addresses the reasonable interchangeability of other products.

The second product market alleged by plaintiffs is the market for "live performances by A-list DJs playing Electronic [*1066] Dance Music." Complaint ¶38. Here, plaintiffs address interchangeability by stating that there are "no reasonably substitutable services...because substitution of non-live performances or live performances of other genres of music would impose on consumers a substantial and unreasonable cost." Id. at ¶39. According to plaintiffs, A-list DJs are a distinct sub-market because A-list DJs are able to draw larger crowds to venues, and consumer are willing to pay more for the tickets based on the DJ's talent and name recognition. Ibid. The plaintiffs do not, as Beatport would like, list or describe other reasonable substitutes. However, that is excusable given plaintiffs' theory that there are no reasonable [13] substitutes for these services. Plaintiffs have addressed reasonable interchangeability with regard to their product market. Plaintiffs also address potential cross-elasticity of demand in the geographic market: "there is extremely low cross-elasticity of demand by consumers inside the Denver metro area with providers outside of it." Id. at ¶38. In other words, consumers in the Denver Metro area are unlikely to travel outside of that market to attend a show.

The Court finds that plaintiffs' pleadings amount to "more than a cursory mention of a relevant product and geographic market." *Total Renal Care, Inc. v. Western Nephrology and Metabolic Bone Disease, P.C., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80821, 2009 WL 2596493 at 7 (D. Colo. Aug. 21, 2009). This Court agrees with the sentiment of the Second Circuit, as well as other circuits, that "[b]ecause market definition is a deeply fact-intensive inquiry, courts hesitate to grant motions to dismiss for failure to plead a relevant product market." Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 199-200 (2d Cir. 2001).

Therefore, the Court will not dismiss plaintiffs' antitrust claims for failure to sufficiently define the relevant market. Each claim, and defendants' arguments in favor of dismissal, [14] will be addressed below.

(1) UNLAWFUL TYING: CLAIM 1

Plaintiffs' first claim for relief alleges that defendants Beatport, Beta, and Mr. Roulier violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act through an unlawful tying arrangement. Beatport, Beta, and Mr. Roulier assert three arguments that support their contention that plaintiffs fail to state a claim for unlawful tying. First, defendants argue that plaintiffs fail to plead that Beatport had sufficient economic power in the tying product market. Second, plaintiffs fail to plead that the alleged tying arrangement had a substantially adverse effect on competition in the tied market. Third, plaintiffs lack standing.[3]

Failure to Plead Sufficient Market Power & Failure to Plead Adverse Effect on Competition

The Court will address defendant's first two arguments together. To support a claim for illegal tying, the plaintiff must set forth sufficient facts to allege (1) two separate products; (2) a sale or agreement to sell one product or service conditioned on the purchase of another; (3) seller has sufficient power in the tying product's market to enable it [15] to restrain trade in the market for the tied product; and (4) a substantial volume of commerce affected in the tied product market. Fortner Enterprises v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 498-99, 89 S. Ct. 1252, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 (1969). In their motion to dismiss, defendants initially argued that plaintiffs insufficiently alleged facts to prove any element. However, in their reply defendants [*1067] have narrowed their objections to those facts alleged in the third element: sufficient power in the tying product's market [#57 at 2].

Plaintiffs define the two separate products as "Electronic Music downloads and live performance by DJs." Complaint ¶70. Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts such that the Court finds that it is plausible that these are in fact distinct products. Plaintiffs have also alleged facts, and described a few specific instances, in which the defendants conditioned sales, promotion, and availability on Beatport with an agreement to perform only at Beta. See Complaint, ¶¶52-53, 43. Plaintiffs have also alleged facts that could plausibly demonstrate that a substantial amount of interstate commerce in DJ performance is affected. See id. ¶¶ 17, 52-53, 62-63, 67, 76. Plaintiffs has adequately alleged the first, [16] second and fourth elements.

[3] Beta and Mr. Roulier adopt Beatport's standing argument in their Motion to Dismiss [#32 at 7].

Defendants maintain that even if these other elements are met, plaintiffs have not sufficiently pled the third element. Defendants argue that plaintiffs have not indicated what share of the alleged product market they possess. Plaintiffs are correct that the test for a tying claim does not require that plaintiffs demonstrate that defendants have "monopoly" power in the tying market. Courts use two tests to analyze tying claims: the per se rule and the "rule of reason." See Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984). In a per se analysis the Court focuses on the seller's share of the tying market. Nobody in Particular Presents, Inc. v. Clear Channel Communications, 311 F.Supp.2d 1048 (D. Colo. 2004) (citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 17). "When a seller's share of the tying market is high, or when the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer, the Supreme Court has held that the likelihood that market power is being used to restrain competition in a separate market is sufficient to make a per se condemnation appropriate." Id. Under a rule of reason analysis the Court must first make a determination "of whether [17] the challenged restraint has a substantially adverse effect on competition....The inquiry then shifts to an evaluation of whether the procompetitive virtues of the alleged wrongful conduct justifies the otherwise anticompetitive impacts." Law v. National Collegiate Athletic Association, 134 F.3d 1010, 1016 (10th Cir. 1998) (internal citations omitted).

To survive defendants' motion to dismiss, plaintiff must plead sufficient facts to demonstrate that the defendants had sufficient power to force or coerce the tying of the products. Here, plaintiffs allege that defendants have sufficient market power in the market for Electronic Dance Music downloads. The Court finds that plaintiffs have pled sufficient facts to demonstrate that their claim is plausible. See Complaint ¶¶30-31, 42, 71-72. Plaintiffs have also pled sufficient facts to demonstrate that the restraint has had a substantially adverse effect on competition for live performances of A-List DJs. See id. ¶¶ 52-53, 55, 63, 76, 99.

Defendants Beta and Mr. Roulier advance a related argument that SOCO's Section 1 claims must fail because they have failed to plead substantial foreclosure of the market.[4] However, under the rule of reason [18] standard a plaintiff need only plead facts of anticompetitive conduct if the parties compete in the same market. See *Nobody in Particular Presents Inc. v. [1068] Clear Channel Communications, 311 F.Supp.2d 1048, 1097-98 (D. Colo. 2004). Here, plaintiffs have pled facts that demonstrate the required alleged anticompetitive effect within the same market. Although more facts and evidence will be necessary to prove their tying claims, plaintiffs currently have pleaded sufficient facts in their complaint to survive a motion to dismiss.

Standing

Defendants next argue that plaintiffs lack standing to bring a tying clam under §1 of the Sherman Act because they did not purchase on-line music downloads or live performances by A-list DJs playing Electronic Dance Music. Defendants allege that while Vinyl and The Church may have standing, plaintiffs have failed to allege sufficient facts to demonstrate an injury against the other SOCO clubs. Further, Defendants maintain that Mr. Christou, as an individual, does not have standing to bring an antitrust claim on behalf of a corporation.

Antitrust [19] standing requires plaintiff to show "(1) an antitrust injury; and (2) a direct causal connection between the injury and a defendant's violation or the antitrust law." Tal v. Hogan, 453 F.3d 1244, 1253 (10th Cir. 2006) (citing Ashley Creek Phosphate Co. v. Chevron USA, Inc., 315 F.3d 1245, 1254 (10th Cir. 2003)). Under Tenth Circuit law, two categories of parties have standing to challenge an illegal tying arrangement: "the purchasers who are forced to buy the tied product to obtain the tying product...and the competitor who is restrained from entering the market for the tied product." Sports Racing Services, Inc. v. Sports Car Club of America, 131 F.3d 874, 887 (10th Cir. 1997).

[4] Beta and Mr. Roulier's argument advocates for the dismissal of all plaintiffs' section 1 claims, both claims 1 and 5.

Plaintiffs assert that they possess standing to bring an antitrust claim by virtue of their status as competitors who are foreclosed from the market. First, plaintiffs must establish a cognizable antitrust injury that flows from [20] defendants' conduct. Here, plaintiffs have alleged that the market for live performance of A-list DJs, in which the SOCO clubs participate, is restrained by defendants' activities. Plaintiffs Vinyl and The Church allege antitrust injuries of lost past and future profits, decreased ability to compete, and decreased value of real property [#1] ¶122). All of the SOCO clubs allege, in general, that the defendants' unlawful practices have "prevented SOCO from competing in the market for live Electronic Dance Music...and foreclosed to SOCO an amount of business and profit substantial enough as to not be merely de minimis." Id. at ¶77. The SOCO nightclubs further allege that they have been further injured in its loss of actual and potential customers and profits, reputation, and ability to form business partnerships and book live performances.

Under the second prong, plaintiffs must allege a direct causal connection between these injuries and the defendants' conduct. SOCO alleges that defendants' tying practices foreclosed significant portions of the market, causing the aforementioned injuries. Id. at ¶76. SOCO further alleges that revenue from patrons' visiting all of SOCO's clubs has decreased [21] since SOCO's ability to book A-list DJs has been impaired by defendants conduct. Id. at ¶78. SOCO also alleges that defendants' conduct was and is specifically aimed at excluding [*1069] the SOCO clubs from the market. Id. at ¶48.

To bring a claim for unlawful tying the plaintiffs must be a member of one of the two categories described in Tenth Circuit law. Plaintiffs allege that they fit in the second category of allowed plaintiffs: a "competitor who is restrained from entering the market for the tied product." Sports Racing, 131 F.3d at 887. As has been discussed above, SOCO has repeatedly alleged that they have been foreclosed from the market for live performance of A-list DJs.

As to defendants' argument that plaintiffs have not demonstrated that Beatport has sufficient economic interest, the Court finds that plaintiffs have alleged that Beatport, through common ownership and through the "Beatport Lounge," has an economic interest in allegedly forcing DJs to perform only at Beta. Therefore, given all of the facts described above, the Court finds that all of the SOCO clubs have standing to bring an antitrust claim for unlawful tying. To survive further, SOCO will need to present additional [22] evidence and facts to prove harm to SOCO nightclubs other than Vinyl and The Church. However, at this point the Court finds there are sufficient facts to support antitrust standing.

(b) Mr. Christou

In their reply, defendants argue that Mr. Christou does not have standing to pursue antitrust claims in his individual capacity. Section 4 of the Clayton Act authorizes private individuals to bring antitrust suits. An individual who is "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States..." 15 U.S.C. §15(a). By virtue of the "by reason of" language, courts have imposed a standing requirement requiring legal causation. See Western Systems, Inc. v. Dynatech Corp., 610 F. Supp. 585, 588 (D. Colo. 1985). The Court must "evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them." Assoc. General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983).

"Standing cannot be established without an antitrust injury, but the existence of an antitrust injury does not automatically confer standing." City of Chanute v. Williams Natural Gas Co., 955 F.2d 641, 652 n. 14 (10th Cir. 1992). [23] An 'antitrust injury' is an injury of the type "antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Id. Although defendants are correct that it is "settled law that shareholders and employees do not have standing to sue for antitrust violations that injure a corporation," the Court interprets plaintiffs' argument to be that Mr. Christou himself has suffered injury to his "business or property," separate from the injury sustained by the named corporations. The question now is whether Mr. Christou has stated sufficient facts to demonstrate that he was directly injured by anti-competitive behavior and thus can maintain standing.

[5] Defendants argue that the complaint lacks specific allegations with regard to Molon Lave, Inc ("2am"), City Hall, L.L.C. ("City Hall"), 1037 Broadway, Inc. ("Bar Standard"), 776 Lincoln St., Inc. ("Funky Buddha Lounge"), and 1055 Broadway, Inc. ("The Living Room").

In their complaint, plaintiffs argue that "the reputation of SOCO's clubs and Mr. Christou have been diminished, resulting in inability to form business partnerships and greatly increased costs of booking live performances, including but not limited to A-List DJs." Complaint ¶78. However, Mr. Christou cannot demonstrate sufficient causation to satisfy the Clayton Act by damage to his reputation: "injury to his reputation, dignity and emotional damages are not the type of injuries redressable by the antitrust [24] laws..." Tal v. Hogan, 453 F.3d 1244, 1254 (10th Cir. 2006).

[*1070] It is further alleged that the defendant's actions have negatively affected the real property value of the SOCO component properties (#1, ¶78). Mr. Christou can assert personal injury based on the loss of property value of his SOCO properties. To evaluate whether this injury is sufficient, the Court looks to factors enumerated by the Supreme Court: "(1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the plaintiff's injury; (2) the defendant's intent or motivation; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's injury — i.e. whether it is one intended to be redressed by the antitrust laws; (4) the directness or indirectness of the connection between the plaintiff's injury and the market restraint resulting from the alleged antitrust violation; (5) the speculative nature of the damages sought; and (6) the risk of duplicative recoveries or complex damages apportionment." Sharp v. United Airlines, Inc., 967 F.2d 404, 406-07 (10th Cir. 1992) (citing Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1987)). The Tenth Circuit has formulated this inquiry into a two-part test: (1) whether there was an antitrust injury, and (2) whether the [25] antitrust injury resulted directly from the antitrust violation. See id at 407, n.2.

Applying the above factors, the Court finds that Mr. Christou has not alleged sufficient facts to demonstrate that he has suffered an antitrust injury that is the direct result of an antitrust violation. Plaintiffs offer no facts that show that Mr. Christou is the owner of the properties affected, how the valuations of the properties were affected, or how the defendants' actions caused or at least contributed to the devaluation of real property. While plaintiffs state that Mr. Christou owns the named corporations, they give no indication as to the ownership of the physical property. There are simply not enough facts here to find that Mr. Christou has standing. Therefore, defendant's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED as to plaintiff Regas Christou.

Defendants Beta and Mr. Roulier argue that plaintiffs' second claim for monopoly and third claim for attempted monopoly should be dismissed, because plaintiffs have failed to define the relevant market and have failed to make factual allegations that support their monopolization claims.[6] As discussed above, the Court [26] finds that plaintiffs have sufficiently defined the relevant markets to survive a motion to dismiss. Therefore, the Court will address Beta's and Mr. Roulier's remaining argument.

Beta and Mr. Roulier argue that plaintiffs have failed to plead a claim for monopoly because: (1) they are incapable of monopoly or attempted monopoly, because they are not a supplier in the market for A-list DJs; (2) Plaintiffs fail to allege specific barriers to entry or durability; and (3) Plaintiffs have not alleged a specific intent to monopolize.

First, the plaintiffs are not arguing that defendants maintain a monopoly in the market for A-list DJs. Rather, their allegation is that defendants' have created a monopoly in the market for A-list DJ performances. Both plaintiffs and defendants are alleged to be members of that market. In their complaint plaintiffs argue that Mr. Roulier opened a competing nightclub, Complaint ¶32, and Mr. Roulier pressured DJs to boycott performances at SOCO's clubs. Id. at ¶¶44, 48, 60, 67. Defendants contend that plaintiffs' monopoly claim [*1071] must [27] fail, because defendants are purchasers not suppliers of A-list DJs. This misconstrues plaintiffs' argument: plaintiffs allege monopolization in the supply of performances to the public, not A-list DJs themselves.

[6] Plaintiffs do not assert a claim for violation of Sherman Act §2's prohibition of unlawful monopolies against defendant Beatport.

Defendants next argue that plaintiffs' monopolization claim must fail because plaintiffs fail "to specifically allege barriers or durability, and SOCO has not distinguished Beta's relative growth as arising from anything other than Beta's own efforts and good timing." [#32 at 7-8]. I do not agree that plaintiffs have failed to allege these factors. Plaintiffs describe the high entry barriers associated with the live performance market: "the industry expertise needed to manage the required venue; the ability to develop a reputation in the industry as being a desirable and popular venue; the legal and regulatory costs of acquiring events permits and liquor licenses; and the costs of acquiring and maintaining venues for the performance of live music of sufficient size and quality to generate enough revenue to pay A-list DJs' fee." Complaint ¶103. As to durability, plaintiffs state that defendants' activities are ongoing. See id. at ¶97. As to defendants' argument that the plaintiffs [28] have not distinguished their growth from anything other than "Beta's own efforts and good timing," defendants need only glance through the complaint to see that plaintiffs accuse Beta of all sorts of nefarious conduct aimed at squeezing plaintiffs out of the market and gaining a monopoly. Whether those allegations are true still must be determined, but plaintiffs' allegations are contained in the Complaint.

Beta and Mr. Roulier also argue that plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claim fails because plaintiffs have not alleged the required elements. In order to make out a claim for attempted monopoly, plaintiffs must allege "(1) relevant market...; (2) dangerous probability of success in monopolizing the relevant market; (3) specific intent to monopolize; and (4) conduct in furtherance of such an attempt." TV Comm'ns Network, Inc. v. Turner Network Television, Inc., 964 F.2d 1022, 1025 (10th Cir. 1992).

As discussed above, the Court finds that plaintiffs have adequately pled the relevant market. Plaintiffs have adequately alleged the third and fourth elements as well. Plaintiffs have pled a specific intent to monopolize by stating that "Beta and Mr. Roulier engaged in the predatory and [29] anticompetitive conduct described above, including illegal tying, exclusive dealing, reciprocal dealing, monopoly leveraging, market allocation, group boycott and the concerted combination of these actions with the specific intent to destroy competition and monopolize the relevant market." Complaint ¶106. These alleged activities demonstrate a specific intent to monopolize, as well as actions in furtherance of an attempted monopoly. Plaintiffs elaborate further on these actions in paragraphs 83 through 97 in their complaint.

In order to successfully state a claim for attempted monopoly plaintiffs must satisfy the second element: dangerous probability of success on the merits. In support of this element plaintiffs point to the following statement in their complaint: "Beta and Mr. Roulier currently control significantly more than half the market for live performance by A-list DJs in the Denver metro area, and have demonstrated dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in the relevant market." Complaint, Doc. #1, ¶ 107. Beta and Mr. Roulier argue that this statement is insufficient and not specific enough to adequately plead the required element. However, this statement taken together [30] with the other allegations in the Complaint [*1072] demonstrates allegations of rapid growth and dominance in the relevant market. See Complaint ¶¶34, 50-53, 67-68. The Court finds that plaintiffs have adequately stated a claim for attempted monopoly.

(3) ANTITRUST CONSPIRACY: CLAIMS 4 & 5

In their fourth claim for relief, plaintiffs assert an action for Conspiracy to Monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Claim five asserts an action for Conspiracy to eliminate conspiracy by unfair means in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Beatport argues that both of these claims fail because (1) plaintiffs do not support their allegation of a specific intent to monopolize; (2) plaintiffs have not demonstrated that the alleged violation cannot be explained by lawful free market behavior, and (3) related entities and individuals cannot conspire with each other to violate antitrust laws.[7] Beta and Mr. Roulier contend that the conspiracy claims must fail because: (1) defendants are not competitors at the same market level; (2) a corporation cannot conspire with its own employees; and (3) plaintiff cannot demonstrate that defendants had a specific intent to monopolize.

[7] Defendants Beta [31] and Mr. Roulier adopt Beatport's argument on this point in their Motion to Dismiss [#32, p. 9].

Conspiracy to Monopolize: Claim 4

To make out a conspiracy to monopolize claim the plaintiff must plead facts which allege "(1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize; (2) overt acts done in furtherance of the combination or conspiracy; (3) an effect upon an appreciable amount of interstate commerce; and (4) a specific intent to monopolize." Lantec, Inc. v. Novell, Inc., 306 F.3d 1003, 1028 (10th Cir. 2002).

Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts to demonstrate the existence of a conspiracy to monopolize. Specifically, plaintiffs allege that Beatport and Beta are closely tied through common ownership, complaint ¶43, that Beatport and Beta cross-promote, id. at ¶44, and Beatport and Beta's financial interests are aligned. Ibid. Further, plaintiffs' complaint alleges that defendants communicated with agents and A-list DJs and coerced them to play only at Beta and further the exclusion of SOCO clubs from the market. Id. at ¶48-49. Plaintiffs allege that "Defendants agreed to tie access to and promotion by Beatport's electronic marketplace to the condition that DJs boycott [32] SOCO's clubs and perform exclusively at Beta." Id. at ¶110. These facts demonstrate evidence of a common scheme.

Plaintiff likewise alleges overt acts committed in furtherance of the conspiracy, i.e., that defendants contacted DJs and agents in order to obtain their monopoly. Id. ¶¶48, 49.

The third element requires that plaintiffs demonstrate an appreciable effect on interstate commerce. Plaintiffs allege a substantial effect on the market for A-list DJs. See Complaint ¶116. Although plaintiffs focus on the performance market in the Denver metro area, the reach of Beatport's website is international, and the DJs themselves come from areas beyond the Denver metro area. Therefore, plaintiffs have adequately pled the third element.

Finally, plaintiffs must demonstrate that the defendants had the specific intent to monopolize. In their motions to dismiss, Beatport, Beta, and Mr. Roulier argue that plaintiffs have failed adequately to plead this factor. However, the Court finds that the above referenced facts, if taken as true, demonstrate that defendants had a specific intent to conspire to form a monopoly. [*1073] Thus, plaintiffs have adequately stated a claim for conspiracy to monopolize.

Conspiracy [33] to Eliminate Competition by Unfair Means: Claim 5

A claim for conspiracy to eliminate competition by unfair means requires the plaintiff to allege facts that show that the "defendant entered a ... conspiracy that unreasonably restrains trade in the relevant market." TV Communications Network, Inc. v. Turner Network, 964 F.2d 1022, 1027 (10th Cir. 1992). The Court must then determine whether the conspiracy "(1) constitutes a per se violation of the statute or (2) its purpose or effect is to create an unreasonable restraint of trade." Ibid.

Defendants' arguments can be summarized as follows: (1) defendants cannot conspire with one another, because they are either employees or closely related entities; (2) plaintiffs have not pled sufficient facts under a per se analysis; and (3) plaintiffs have not demonstrated that the defendants' behavior cannot be explained by a lawful purpose.

Defendants argue that "[a] corporation is not capable of conspiring with itself." Lantec, 306 F.3d at 1028 (citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769-72, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)). Beatport, as well as Beta and Mr. Roulier, argue that related entities cannot, by definition, enter into a conspiracy. Nor [34] can a corporation conspire with its own employees.

Copperweld holds that "wholly owned subsidiar[ies]...are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of §1 of the Sherman Act." 467 U.S. at 777. Copperweld does not hold, as defendants state, that "related entities" cannot conspire with each other. Here, Beatport is not a wholly owned subsidiary of Beta. This Court does not find that the actions of Beta and Beatport "must be viewed as that of a single enterprise for purposes of §1 of the Sherman Act." Id. at 771. Although some common ownership exists between Beta and Beatport, it is not sufficient in this case to warrant dismissal of plaintiffs' antitrust conspiracy claims under Copperweld.

Defendants also argue that an entity cannot conspire with its own employees, i.e., Mr. Roulier cannot, by definition, conspire with Beta or Beatport. However, while "a corporation cannot conspire with itself for antitrust purpose...[the Tenth Circuit] recognizes a limited exception to the intra-corporate doctrine where the employees of a corporation have an independent personal stake and thus stand to benefit from conspiring with the corporation to restrain trade." Bell v. Fur Breeders Agricultural Co-op., 348 F.3d 1224, 1233 (10th Cir. 2003) [35] (internal citations omitted). As part owner of Beatport and owner of Beta, Mr. Roulier has an "independent personal stake" in restraint of trade of Beta's competitors. This situation sits firmly within the "independent personal stake" exception.

Second, defendants attack plaintiffs' fifth claim because they have not alleged sufficient facts under a per se analysis. In their response, plaintiffs clarify that they are proceeding under a rule of reason analysis. See Mid-West Underground Storage v. Porter, 717 F.2d 493, 497 (10th Cir. 1983) (holding that "conspiracies of the type alleged herein should be assessed under the rule of reason."). It is unnecessary for plaintiffs to meet the per se pleading standards.

Beatport also argues that "the complaint contains no facts to suggest that any of the impacts about which plaintiffs complain cannot be explained by lawful behavior." [#15 at 10]. Defendants argue that Twombly requires that plaintiffs demonstrate that the alleged antitrust violation [*1074] cannot be explained by lawful free market behavior. Instead, per defendants' argument, Beatport's, Beta's, and Mr. Roulier's actions can "just as easily be explained by the fact that in 2008 Beta was [36] a new club that generated intense interest in the marketplace." Id. at 10-11. Twombly holds that "proof of a §1 conspiracy must include evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action." 550 U.S. at 554. If taken as true, the above discussed facts support viable arguments that tend to exclude the possibility that defendants were motivated by lawful independent purposes. Plaintiffs need not disprove all possible lawful explanations at this stage. Thus, plaintiffs have adequately stated a claim for conspiracy to eliminate competition by unfair means.

Therefore, defendants' motions to dismiss are DENIED as to plaintiffs' claims four and five.

(4) THEFT OF TRADE SECRETS: CLAIM 6

In plaintiffs' sixth claim for relief plaintiffs contend that defendants misappropriated their trade secrets, including login information for profiles on MySpace, lists of MySpace "friends," confidential lists of personal cell phone numbers and email addresses for DJs, agents, and promoters, and customer lists. Beatport moves to dismiss this claim because plaintiffs have (1) failed to allege sufficient allegations to demonstrate that plaintiffs' lists are trade secrets, specifically, that plaintiffs' [37] MySpace profile and "friends" list do not qualify as trade secrets; and (2) plaintiffs do not allege that the misappropriation was known by Beatport.[8]

"Under Colorado law, to prove theft or misappropriation of a trade secret, plaintiff must show: (i) that he or she possessed a valid trade secret, (ii) that the trade secret was disclosed or used without consent, and, (iii) that the defendant knew, or should have known, that the trade secret was acquired by improper means." Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chemical Indus. Ltd., 9 F.3d 823, 847 (10th Cir. 1993).

Trade Secrets

A "trade secret" is the "whole or any portion or phase of any scientific or technical information, design, process, procedure, formula, improvement, confidential business or financial information, listing of names, addresses, or telephone numbers, or other information relating to any business or profession which is secret and of value." C.R.S. §7-74-102(4). Additionally, the owner of the trade secret must have "taken measures to prevent the secret from becoming available to persons other than those selected by the owner to have access [38] thereto for limited purposes." Ibid. Apart from the MySpace profiles and "friends," the other asserted trade secrets allegedly stolen by defendants qualify as trade secrets under Colorado law because they are "listings of names, addresses, or telephone numbers, or other information relating to any business...which is secret and of value." Ibid. Plaintiffs claim that these lists and online profiles are secured and safeguarded and access is restricted to specific personnel. Complaint ¶129.

[8] Defendants Beta and Bradley Roulier do not challenge claim 6 in their Motion to Dismiss [#32].

Beatport argue that plaintiffs' MySpace profile cannot constitute a trade secret. Plaintiffs argue that this is an issue of first impression in the circuit. The Court has not found relevant case law on point in this or any circuit. However, the Tenth Circuit has outlined several factors that courts should consider in making trade [*1075] secret determinations: "(1) whether proper and reasonable steps were taken by the owner to protect the secrecy of the information; (2) whether access to the information was restricted; (3) whether employees knew customers' names from general experience; (4) whether customers commonly dealt with more than one supplier; (5) whether customer information could be readily obtained [39] from public directories; (6) whether customer information is readily ascertainable from sources outside the owner's business; (7) whether the owner of the customer list expended great cost and effort over a considerable period of time to develop the files; and (8) whether it would be difficult for a competitor to duplicate the information." Hertz v. Luzenac Group, 576 F.3d 1103, 1115 (10th Cir. 2009) (citing Colorado Supply Co. v. Stewart, 797 P.2d 1303, 1306-07 (Colo. App. 1990)).

Beatport contends that information such as a list of MySpace "friends" is broadcast to the public via the Internet and thus cannot be considered a trade secret. Plaintiffs, however, maintain that social networking profiles are customer lists according to the factors laid out in Colorado Supply and Hertz. First, plaintiffs took reasonable steps to protect the secrecy of the information. Plaintiffs state that they "secured and safeguarded [the profiles] to prevent access to or use by anyone other than those limited personnel requiring access." Complaint ¶129. Plaintiffs secured the profiles through web profile login and passwords. Id. at ¶131.

The second factor is similar to the first, asking the Court to inquire [40] whether access to the information was restricted. Plaintiffs have pled that the login and password information was restricted to personnel who required access in order to promote SOCO clubs. Id. at ¶129, 131.

The third factor asks whether employees knew the customers' names from general experience. This factor is not specifically addressed in the complaint, but the nature of the alleged trade secrets at issue militate in favor of trade secret status. Social networking sites enable companies, such as the SOCO clubs, to acquire hundreds and even thousands of "friends." These "friends" are more than simple lists of names of potential customers. "Friending" a business or individual grants that business or individual access to some of one's personal information, information about his or her interests and preferences, and perhaps most importantly for a business, contact information and a built-in means of contact. Even assuming that employees generally knew the names of all of the "friends" on SOCO's MySpace pages, it is highly unlikely, if not impossible, that employees knew the contact information and preferences of all those on the "friends" list from general experience.

The fourth factor [41] addresses whether customers dealt with more than one supplier. MySpace members or members of other social networking sites may "friend" as many businesses or individuals as they wish. It is possible if not probable that plaintiffs' MySpace "friends" were friends with other Denver clubs. Nothing prevents Beatport from "friending" an identical list of people.

However, the fifth and sixth factors highlight the trade secret-like use of the MySpace profile and friends lists. Both factors in effect direct the Court to look at whether the alleged misappropriator could have obtained the same information from a public directory or another source outside of the plaintiffs' business. These factors appear to address the crux of the parties' disagreements. Beatport frames the list as a mere list of people's names. In Beatport's estimation this list is open to the public, and anyone could easily see and write down who SOCO's "friends" [*1076] are. However, plaintiffs contend that this list is actually akin to a database of contact information. The trade secret is not merely the list of names but their email and contact information as well as the ability to notify them and promote directly to them via their [42] MySpace accounts. Plaintiffs argue that "the critical information consisting of these friends' personal contact information and their permission to be contacted cannot be compiled from publicly available sources." Docket #38, p. 21, ¶5. The names themselves, readily available to the public, are not the important factor. The ancillary information connected to those names cannot be obtained from public directories and is not readily ascertainable from outside sources, and thus this militates in favor of trade secret classification.

The seventh factor asks whether the owner of the customer list expended great cost and effort to develop it. Although plaintiffs' complaint does not plead a specific dollar amount, it appears that SOCO expended at least some cost and effort in developing the social networking aspect of its business. While employed by SOCO, Mr. Roulier was paid to "assist in building, maintaining and using these lists and web profiles." Complaint ¶128. This indicates that SOCO expended some amount of money, time, and resources into developing these lists for promotional purposes.

Finally, the Court must consider whether a competitor could easily duplicate the information. Given [43] adequate time and effort, Mr. Roulier could most likely duplicate or nearly duplicate the list of MySpace friends that SOCO had developed. However, this would involve individually contacting thousands of individuals with friend requests, and it is by no means clear that all of those individuals would grant Beatport permission to contact them. While Mr. Roulier may be able to duplicate a near approximation of the list, duplicating it exactly and doing so within a time frame in which the list would still be useful to him is less likely.

Whether plaintiffs' MySpace friends list is a trade secret is question of fact. See Hertz v. Luzenac Group, 576 F.3d 1103, 1106 (10th Cir. 2009). However, given the weight of the Colorado Supply factors, the Court finds that plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts to maintain their trade secret claim at the motion to dismiss stage.

Misappropriation by Beatport

Beatport contends that plaintiffs have not pled sufficient facts to demonstrate that Beatport knew or should have known that the trade secrets were acquired by improper means. Beatport argues that a court in this district has already rejected the proposition that Beatport can be held strictly liable [44] for any misappropriation on the part of its employee, Mr. Roulier. Ciena Communications v. Nachazel, No. 09-cv-02845, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90460, 2010 WL 3489915 (D. Colo. Aug. 31, 2010). Beatport further states that this lack of basis warrants an award of attorney's fees and costs pursuant to C.R.S. §7-74-105.

Ciena does not stand for the proposition for which Beatport is offering it. It does not hold that an employee's misappropriation can never be imputed to the employer, rather, it holds that "[a]n employer who is unaware of an employee's misappropriation of another's trade secret would not be liable...." *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90460, [WL] at 4. In Ciena, the employee allegedly misappropriated the trade secrets prior to being hired by the new employer. The Court found that the plaintiff had pled insufficient facts to demonstrate that the employee's company had misappropriated any trade secrets or even known of the employee's alleged misappropriation. Plaintiffs here allege that Mr. Roulier misappropriated the trade secrets while he was a member and officer at Beatport. In Ciena, there were no allegations [*1077] that the employee actually used the stolen trade secrets, while here it is alleged that Mr. Roulier misappropriated and used plaintiffs' [45] trade secrets. Mr. Roulier's relationship with the company is also not equivalent. He is a co-founder and officer of Beatport, not a mere employee.

Even if Beatport and Mr. Roulier's relationship were purely employee-employer, however, the language of the statute allows misappropriation to be attributed to the employing company if company "knew or should have known that the trade secret was acquired by improper means." Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Chemical Indus., 9 F.3d 823, 847 (10th Cir. 1993). Plaintiffs have alleged a public use of the misappropriated trade secrets, i.e., the promotion of Beatport via plaintiffs' MySpace page and friends. That is sufficient, at this stage of the case, to support the implied allegation that Beatport knew or should have known of improper acquisition.

The Court finds that plaintiffs' have sufficiently pled misappropriation of trade secrets as against Mr. Roulier, Beta, and Beatport. Defendants' Motions are DENIED as to claim 6. An award of attorney's fees is not warranted.

(5) RICO: CLAIM 7

Plaintiffs' seventh claim alleges violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1962, against all defendants. Plaintiffs [46] allege that defendants created an informally organized enterprise to pursue the goal of leveraging Beatport's influence to exclude SOCO's clubs from the market for A-list DJs and prevent SOCO from competing with Beta. Beatport, Mr. Roulier, and Beta argue that (1) plaintiffs have pled insufficient facts pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 and 9(b) to make out the adequate predicate acts and a general racketeering claim, and (2) plaintiffs have failed adequately to plead an "enterprise."

To make out a claim under RICO, plaintiffs must plead sufficient facts to make plausible (1) conduct; (2) of an enterprise; (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985). The "threat of treble damages and injury to reputation which attend RICO actions justify requiring plaintiff to frame its pleadings in such a way that will give the defendant, and the trial court, clear notice of the factual basis of the predicate acts." Cayman Exploration Corp. v. United Gas Pipe Line Company, 873 F.2d 1357, 1362 (10th Cir. 1989). The requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) that fraud must be pled with particularity applies to RICO claims. Ibid. This means that the [47] complaint "must set forth the time, place and contents of the false representations, the identity of the party making the false statements, and the consequences thereof." Lawrence Nat'l Bank v. Edmonds, 924 F.2d 176, 180 (10th Cir. 1991).

Defendants argue that plaintiffs have not met the requirements of Rule 9(b) with regard to their predicate acts. The plaintiffs must plead facts that demonstrate that the alleged enterprise engaged in a "pattern of racketeering activity." Defendants must have engaged in racketeering activity as enumerated in §1961(1) of RICO. Racketeering activity is defined "to mean any of numerous acts 'chargeable' or 'indictable' under enumerated state and federal laws, including state-law murder, arson, and bribery statutes, federal mail and wire fraud statutes." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 509, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985). These acts are referred to as "predicate acts" and are listed in §1961. Where, as here, the alleged predicate offense [*1078] involves fraud, "to meet Rule 9(b), a plaintiff must identify with specificity the circumstances constituting the fraud in the predicate acts." Brooks v. Bank of Boulder, 891 F.Supp. 1469, 1477 (D. Colo. 1995). To show a pattern [48] of racketeering activity, plaintiffs "must show the defendant committed racketeering predicate offenses which are related and amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity." Id. at 1477-78 (citing H.J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 239, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1989)).

Plaintiffs allege that defendants' scheme includes predicate acts of "wire fraud, mail fraud, bank fraud and theft.[9]" Complaint ¶141. Plaintiff's allegations of mail and bank fraud include little more than this bare assertion. Plaintiffs plead no specific facts that indicate mail fraud. See Id. at ¶¶137-154. Plaintiffs' allegations of fact regarding bank fraud amount to an allegation that customers who purchased tickets at Beta and the Beatport Lounge used money paid through various financial institutions. To state a claim for bank fraud plaintiffs must plead facts that allege that defendant: "knowingly executes, or attempts to execute, a scheme or artifice (1) to defraud a financial institution; or (2) to obtain any of the moneys, funds, credits, assets, securities or other property owned by, or under the custody or control of, a financial institution, by means of false or fraudulent pretenses..." 18 U.S.C. § 1344. [49] The fact that Beta and Beatport customers may have paid through various financial institutions is insufficient to allege bank fraud.

Plaintiffs also argue that they have alleged sufficient facts to make out the predicate act of wire fraud. To do so plaintiffs must demonstrate that the defendants "devised or [intended] to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud...by means of wire, radio, or television communications in interstate or foreign commerce...." 18 U.S.C. §1343. In support of their wire fraud claim, plaintiffs allege that the "enterprise" communicated to patrons of live performance by A-list DJs in the Denver metro area via MySpace pages belonging to The Church and Vinyl [#1, ¶142]; fraudulent communications to SOCO via phone and email that represented their intention to "alternate" A-list DJs with SOCO's clubs, id. at ¶145; and the "Enterprise used interstate wire and mail communications to carry out its activities...." Id. at ¶150. These facts are insufficient to meet the specificity requirements of Rule 9(b). Aside from the reference to MySpace communication, [50] plaintiffs have not alleged any specific circumstances, details, or dates that indicate how and when the alleged Enterprise carried out its wire fraud. These facts do not demonstrate a pattern of racketeering activity. See 18 U.S.C. §1961(5). Plaintiffs do not meet RICO's pleading requirements. See Cayman Exploration Corp., 873 F.2d at 1362. Therefore, the Court finds that plaintiffs have failed to state a claim with regard to their RICO claim. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED as to Claim 7.

(6) CIVIL CONSPIRACY: CLAIM 9

Beatport argues that plaintiffs' claim for civil conspiracy should be dismissed because they assert "nothing new and fail for the same reasons Plaintiffs' antitrust, RICO, and trade secret claims fail." [#15, p. 19]. To make out the elements of a civil conspiracy claim under Colorado law, plaintiff must show: (1) two [*1079] or more persons; (2) an object to be accomplished; (3) a meeting of the minds on the object or course of action; (4) one or more unlawful overt acts; and (5) damages as the proximate result thereof. Jet Courier Serv., Inc. v. Mulei, 771 P.2d 486, 502 (Colo. 1989). That the basis of this claim serves as the factual bases for other claims is not grounds [51] for dismissing plaintiffs' civil conspiracy claims. Plaintiffs' surviving claims may serve to fulfill the third element of "one or more unlawful overt acts."

Therefore, plaintiffs' civil conspiracy claim as asserted against all defendants[10] will not be dismissed. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is DENIED as to Claim 9.

Defendant Beatport's Motion for Sanctions [#30].

On February 7, 2011 Beatport filed a Motion for Sanctions pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. The subject of the motion was the Complaint. Beatport argued that not only are Mr. Vail's legal claims insufficient, but that "the nature of the insufficiency demonstrates that Mr. Vail either undertook no legal research whatsoever or ignored well-established law when drafting Plaintiffs' complaint." [#30 at 6]. Further, Beatport states "even a cursory review of an antitrust law treatise, a review of a few of the leading civil RICO cases, and basic research regarding who can properly be liable for the alleged theft of a trade secret would have revealed the lack of legal foundation of Plaintiffs' allegations." Ibid.

Rule 11, as [52] applicable here, provides that when an attorney files a complaint, he "certifies that to the best of [his] knowledge, information and belief, formed after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances," that (1) it was not filed for an improper purpose, (2) the claims are warranted by existing law or a nonfrivolous argument for extending the law, and (3) there is, or likely will be after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery, evidentiary support for the factual allegations. Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(b). In other words, an attorney may not file a complaint for which there is not a good faith basis in fact and in law. Subsection (c) of the rule authorizes courts to impose appropriate sanctions for violation of the rule.

The motion seeking Rule 11 sanctions was filed before plaintiffs responded to the motion to dismiss. It was filed before plaintiff provided its Rule 26 disclosures. It was, of course, filed before Beatport had any idea how the Court might rule on the motion to dismiss.

The motion contends, first, that plaintiffs' claims were all "frivolous." This section of the motion amounts to a summary of the arguments presented in the motion to dismiss. As it turns [53] out, the Court did not dismiss the antitrust claims other than those of Mr. Christou, notwithstanding Beatport's suggestion that even a cursory review of an antitrust treatise would compel otherwise. The Court did not dismiss the trade secret claim. The Court did dismiss the RICO claims, but the fact that claims do not survive a motion to dismiss does not mean that they were filed in bad faith or that they lacked a good faith basis. Disagreement and fact disputes are the stuff of the adversarial system. The Court does not find that the RICO claims were "frivolous" to the point that they warrant Rule 11 sanctions.

[10] Defendants Beta and Mr. Roulier did not argue that this claim should be dismissed in their motion to dismiss.

Beatport also argues that plaintiff's counsel did not conduct an adequate pre-filing investigation of the factual bases for the claims. This argument is largely based on defendants' Google research of [*1080] the websites of certain DJs. This research purportedly showed either that a DJ did not list dates at Beta (for example, Tiesto, Armin van Buuren, Christopher Lawrence, Sharam, Bad Boy Bill, Deadman5 are shown as having no listings at Beta in 2010) or that a DJ did list dates at plaintiffs' clubs in those years (for example, DJ Rap is shown as having been at two of the plaintiffs' [54] clubs in 2010). The implication is that defendants could not have coerced those DJ's to perform at Beta to the exclusion of plaintiffs' clubs. From that premise, defendants draw the conclusion that plaintiffs' counsel inadequately investigated the antitrust claims.

In fact, the premise itself was mistaken, as defendants appear to admit in their reply. [#47] at 2-3. Moreover, as indicated by the description of certain recorded conversations in plaintiffs' response brief at 4-5 — whether or not those recordings ultimately are admissible under the Rules of Evidence — defendants would have been wise to await the disclosures before assuming and asserting that plaintiffs' counsel had made such an inadequate investigation as to justify Rule 11 sanctions.

In short, having reviewed not only the Complaint and the briefing on the motion to dismiss but also the motion, response and reply concerning Rule 11 sanctions, the Court finds that defendants have not shown the lack of a good faith basis for the allegations of the Complaint that would warrant such sanctions. Rather, it appears to this Court that the motion reflects a lack of judgment. That is not to say, of course, that it is improper to seek [55] sanctions for violations of Rule 11. It is to say that using Rule 11 prematurely and carelessly is improper.

Rule 11(c)(2) provides that the Court may award the party who prevails on a Rule 11 motion its reasonable expenses including attorney's fees incurred with respect to the motion. The Court exercises its discretion in this instance not to impose sanctions. However, with respect to all future matters, the Court will consider sanctions if necessary and appropriate. Please always bear in mind that hard feelings between the parties do not alter counsel's obligation to conduct their zealous representation with the courtesy and civility due to one another.

Order

1. Defendant Beatport's Motion to Dismiss [#15], and defendants Bradley Roulier's and Beta's Motion to Dismiss [#32] are GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. The motions are GRANTED as to all antitrust claims asserted by Mr. Christou individually and as to plaintiffs' RICO claim. The motions are otherwise DENIED.
2. Defendant AM Only's Motion to Dismiss [#25] is DENIED as MOOT.[11]
3. Defendant Beatport's Motion for Sanctions [#30] is DENIED.

DECISION and ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

On April 18, 2011, Plaintiff Otis Michael Bridgeforth ("Plaintiff") filed a Complaint asserting that Defendants: (1) violated his Fourteenth Amendment right to due process of law; and (2) engaged in a conspiracy to violate antitrust laws. See Dkt. No. 1 ("Complaint"). Presently before the Court is Defendants' Motion to dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint in its entirety. Dkt. No. 12 ("Motion").

II. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff alleges that he was accepted to attend Schenectady County Community College ("SCCC"). Compl. at 4. However, because he was arrested on a weapons charge in August 2007, Plaintiff never actually attended SCCC. Id. at 8. In September 2007, [*2] Defendants placed Plaintiff's federal loans into default, thereby causing a "loss of monetary deprivation and loss of educational and athletic opportunities." Id. at 4. Plaintiff first discovered that he was in default when he contacted the United States Department of Education on February 11, 2010. Id. Plaintiff claims that Defendants placed him in default status without due process of law, and as part of a conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws. See generally id.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

To survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a plaintiff's complaint must plead sufficient facts to suggest a plausible claim for relief. Bell Atlantic v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 563, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The court must accept all factual allegations contained in the complaint as true, and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. In re NYSE Specialists Securities Litig., 503 F.3d 89, 95 (2d Cir. 2007). The factual allegations in the complaint "must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. A complaint is not sufficient if it contains only "[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory [*3] statements." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555).

IV. DISCUSSION

Defendants claim that Plaintiff's due process claims are untimely because they were brought more than three years after Plaintiff's loans were placed into default status in September 2007. Mot. at 3. Plaintiff's § 1983 claims are indeed governed by a three-year statute of limitations. See Cloverleaf Realty v. Town of Wawayanda, 572 F.3d 93, 94 (2d Cir. 2009). However, "a section 1983 cause of action accrues . . . when the plaintiff knows or has reason to know of the injury which is the basis of his action." Pearl v. City of Long Beach, 296 F.3d 76, 80 (2d Cir. 2002) (quotations and citations omitted). According to the Complaint, Plaintiff first became aware that his loans had been placed in default status on February 11, 2010. Compl. at 4. The timeliness of Plaintiff's due process claims — filed on April 18, 2011 — therefore turns on whether Plaintiff should have known about his default status prior to April 18, 2008.

However, it is not necessary for the Court to reach this issue at this time. Plaintiff litigated an identical claim in the District of Delaware, [*4] suing American Education Services and the United States Department of Education for violating his due process rights by placing his deferred student loans into default without notifying him, thereby preventing him from receiving funds to continue his education. Bridgeforth v. Am. Educ. Servs., 412 F. App'x 433 (3d Cir. 2011). The Third Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal of Plaintiff's due process claims as "frivolous," finding that Plaintiff had no property right in either "his loans' not going into default" or in "receiving additional federal grants or loans." Id. at 435-36. The Court adopts the reasoning of the Third Circuit, and dismisses Plaintiff's due process claims on that basis.

Finally, Plaintiff's antitrust claim is dismissed because there are insufficient allegations in Plaintiff's Complaint to suggest a plausible antitrust claim. The three elements of an antitrust claim are: (1) a violation of antitrust law; (2) injury and causation; and (3) damages. See In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litig., 280 F.3d 124, 136 (2d Cir. 2001). Plaintiff's Complaint contains only a naked assertion that Defendants violated relevant antitrust law, without allegations of [*5] any specific violation of law, any causally related injury, or any resulting damages; Plaintiff's antitrust claims are therefore also dismissed.

V. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, it is hereby:

ORDERED, that Defendant's Motion to dismiss (Dkt. No. 12) is GRANTED; and it is further ORDERED, that Plaintiff's Complaint (Dkt. No. 1) is DISMISSED;[1] and it is further ORDERED, that the Clerk serve a copy of this Order on all parties.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

ORDER

Now before the Court is Defendants' Motion to Dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), filed on July 1, 2011. (Doc. 58.) Plaintiffs filed a Response on August 5, 2011. (Doc. 61.) Defendant filed a Reply on August 26, 2011. (Doe. 62.)

After reviewing the parties' briefing, the evidence, and the applicable law, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss.

I. Background

The background information is taken from Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint which the Court accepts as true for the purposes of this motion. Plaintiff Nukote ("Nukote") produced and sold remanufactured inkjet and laser cartridges for over a decade and was one of two major companies capable of creating and selling remanufactured cartridges to the large office supply retailer market (e.g., Office Depot, Staples, Office Max). (Doc. 55 at 4.) Nukote's largest competitor for the last ten years was Defendant Clover ("Clover"). During this time, Nukote sold its inkjet and laser cartridges to Office Depot, while Clover sold to Staples and Office Max. (Doc. 55 at 4.)

Nukote argues that in an attempt to control cartridge prices and the market for empty cartridges, Clover suggested [*3] that the two companies work together to raise prices and profits, but Nukote refused. (Doc: 55 at 4.) After these failed attempts, Nukote alleges that Clover attempted to merge with Nukote, but this was also unsuccessful. Next, Nukote argues that Clover implemented a new plan to completely remove Nukote as a competitor in the market, effectively granting Clover a monopoly. (Doc. 55 at 5.) As part of this plan, Nukote alleges that Clover used its resources to obtain confidential information about Nukote's customer base, manufacturing, pricing, and expansion plans.. Additionally, Nukote claims that Clover targeted key Nukote employees for hiring, the first being Steve Noyes ("Noyes") and the second Michael Ducey Jr. ("Ducey"). Although both Noyes and Ducey were subject to Nukote's "Business Practices and Conflict of Interest Statement" (the "Confidentiality Policy"), Nukote alleges that Ducey sent an email to his personal email about highly confidential Nukote trade secrets hours before his resignation. Nukote argues that Clover encouraged Noyes and Ducey to breach the Confidentiality Policy in order to gain valuable information about Nukote. (Doe. 55 at 7.)

After recruiting Nukote employees, [*4] Nukote claims that Clover then began to go after Nukote's largest client, Office Depot. In order to obtain Office Depot's business, Nukote claims that Clover misrepresented its abilities and prices and then hired Ippolito "Dino" Gaspardo ("Gaspardo") to gain knowledge of Nukote's manufacturing capacity. Subsequently, Office Depot switched from Nukote to Clover for purchasing remanufactured inkjet and laser cartridges. Nukote claims that the loss of Office Depot's business forced the company into Chapter 11 Bankruptcy. Due to Clover's actions, Nukote argues that it is entitled to $100,000,000 in damages.

II. Legal Standard & Analysis

A. 12(b)(6) Standard

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a), a complaint must contain "a short, plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). Federal Rule 12(b)(6) provides for the dismissal of a complaint when a defendant shows that the plaintiff has failed to state a claim for which relief can be granted. "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Iqbal v. Ashcroft, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). The factual matter contained in the complaint must allege actual facts, not legal conclusions [*5] masquerading as facts. Id. at 1949-50 ("Although for the purposes of a motion to dismiss we must take all of the factual allegations in the complaint as true, we 'are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.'" (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555)). Additionally, the factual allegations of a complaint must state a plausible claim for relief. Id. A complaint states a "plausible claim for relief' when the factual allegations contained therein infer actual misconduct on the part of the defendant, not a "mere possibility of misconduct." Id.; see also Jacquez v. Procunier, 801 F.2d 789, 791-92 (5th Cir. 1986).

The Court's focus in a 12(b)(6) determination is not whether the plaintiff should prevail on the merits but rather whether the plaintiff has failed to state a claim. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 563 n.8 (holding "when a complaint adequately states a claim, it may not be dismissed based on a district court's assessment that the plaintiff will fail to find evidentiary support for his allegations or prove his claim to the satisfaction of the factfinder."); Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974) (overruled on other grounds) (finding the standard for a 12(b)(6) motion is "not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims").

B. Count One: Civil Conspiracy [*6]

Nukote alleges that Clover committed civil conspiracy by interfering with Nukote's existing contracts, illegally restraining trade in violation of Texas law, misappropriating its trade secrets and confidential information, and encouraging Nukote employees to breach their fiduciary duties. (Doc. 55 at 10.) Sitting in diversity, the Court applies the substantive law of the forum state. Aubris Res. LP v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 566 F.3d 483, 486 (5th Cir. 2009). Under Texas law, an actionable civil conspiracy is a combination by two or more persons to accomplish an unlawful purpose or to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means. Massey v. Armco Steel Co., 652 S.W.2d 932, 934 (Tex. 1983). Furthermore, civil conspiracy requires specific intent to agree "to accomplish an unlawful purpose or to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means." Triplex Commc'n, Inc. v. Riley, 900 S.W.2d 716, 719 (Tex. 1995). The essential elements of a civil conspiracy claim are: (1) two or more persons; (2) an object to be accomplished; (3) a meeting of minds on the object or course of action; (4) one or more unlawful, overt acts; and (5) damages as the proximate result. Id. Moreover, in Texas, a defendant's liability for conspiracy depends on participation in some underlying tort for which the plaintiff seeks to hold at least one of the named defendants liable. Carroll v. Timmers Chevrolet, Inc., 592 S.W.2d 922, 925 (Tex. 1979).

As part of its First Amended Complaint, [*7] Nukote alleges in Count Two the tort of tortious interference with contracts against Clover. Since "a defendant's liability for conspiracy depends on participation in some underlying tort for which the plaintiff seeks to hold at least one of the named defendant's liable," this count can support a claim of civil conspiracy. See Walsh v. Am. Tele-Network Corp., 195 F.Supp.2d 840, 850-51 (ED. Tex. 2002). Furthermore, Nukote alleges that Clover and its former employees conspired together to put Nukote out of business by participating in unlawful actions, such as interference with contracts, unfair competition by misappropriation, breach of fiduciary duty, etc., and as a result Nukote sustained damages from these actions. Thus, Nukote has stated a claim of civil conspiracy against Clover. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Nukote's Civil Conspiracy Claim.

C. Count Two: Tortious Interference with Contracts

Nukote alleges that Clover tortiously interfered with its contracts with Office Depot and S.P. Richards and former Nukote employees and as a proximate result Nukote suffered damages. (Doc. 55 at 11.) Clover argues that Nukote's claim of tortious interference with contracts is actually a claim for fraud and should be plead with the particularity [*8] required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). (Doc. 58 at 10.) The basis for Clover's argument proceeds from the fact that Nukote alleges Clover "intentionally" misrepresented its abilities. (Doc. 58 at 10.) However, the Fifth Circuit has recognized that under Rule 9(b), "malice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of the mind of a person may be averred generally." Tuchman v. DSC Commc'ns Corp., 14 F.3d 1061, 1068 (5th Cir. 1994). Therefore, heightened pleading is not required.

In Texas, the elements for tortious interference with contracts are: (1) the existence of a contract subject to interference; (2) a willful and intentional act of interference; (3) the act was the proximate cause of damage; and (4) actual damage or loss. Fluorine on Call, Ltd. v. Fluorogas Ltd., 380 F.3d 849, 864 (5th Cir. 2004). Nukote has alleged (1) that a contract existed between Nukote and its former employees, Noyes, Ducey, and Gaspardo, and its former customer, Office Depot; (2) that Clover willfully and intentionally interfered with these existing contracts; (3) this willful and intentional interference was the proximate cause of damages suffered by Nukote; and (4) Nukote sustained actual damages as a result of this interference. The allegations in the Complaint are more than conclusory factual assertions. Therefore, Nukote has stated a cause of action against Clover for tortious [*9] interference with contracts. See Walsh, 195 F.Supp.2d at 849-50. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Nukote's Tortious Interference with Contracts claim.

D. Count Three: Unfair Competition by Misappropriation

Nukote alleges that Clover's actions constitute misappropriation of its trade secrets, confidential and other proprietary information, without the consent of Nukote, to the detriment of Nukote, and for Clover's own commercial advantage. (Doe. 55 at 12.) Under Texas law, a plaintiff can recover for misappropriation of a trade secret by establishing that (1) a trade secret existed; (2) the trade secret was acquired through a breach of a confidential relationship or was discovered by improper means; (3) the defendant used the trade secret without the plaintiff's authorization; and (4) the plaintiff suffered damages as a result. IAC, Ltd. v. Bell Helicopter Textron, Inc., 160 S.W.3d 191, 197 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth 2005, no pet.). A trade secret is any formula, pattern, device or compilation of information, which is used in one's business and presents an opportunity to obtain an advantage over competitors who do not know or use it. In re Bass, 113 S.W.3d 735, 739 (Tex. 2003). Customer lists, pricing information, client information, customer preferences, buyer contacts, blueprints, marketing strategies, and drawings have all been recognized [*10] as trade secrets. Global Water Group, Inc. v. Atchley, 244 S.W.3d 924, 928 (Tex. App.—Dallas 2008, pet. denied).

As part of its trade secret misappropriation claim, Nukote alleges that Clover obtained its customer, pricing and vendor lists, as well as business expansion plans by hiring former Nukote employees, such as Noyes, Ducey, and Gaspardo, and encouraging them to breach their Confidentiality Policy with Nukote. Additionally, Nukote alleges that Clover used this information without its authorization and subsequently experienced damages as a result. Since Texas law recognizes customer lists, pricing and vendor lists and business expansion plans as trade secrets, Nukote's factual allegations state a plausible state law claim for misappropriation of trade secrets. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Nukote's Unfair Competition by Misappropriation claim.

E. Count Four: Aiding & Abetting a Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Nukote alleges that even though Clover knew of Nukote's fiduciary relationships with its former employees, Clover willing participated in assisting Nukote's former employees to breach their agreements with Nukote and steal Nukote's trade secrets, confidential, and/or proprietary business information. (Doc. 55 at 13.) Clover argues that it had [*11] no knowledge of the fiduciary relationship between Nukote and its former employees, and thus did not knowingly participate in the breach of fiduciary duty. (Doc. 58 at 11.)

Under Texas law, "where a third party knowingly participates in the breach of duty of a fiduciary, such third party becomes a joint tortfeasor with the fiduciary and is liable as such." Kinzbach Tool Co. v. Corbett-Wallace Corp., 138 Tex. 565, 160 S.W.2d 509, 514 (Tex. 1942). Therefore, in order to establish a claim for knowing participation in a breach of fiduciary duty under Texas law, a plaintiff must assert: (1) the existence of a fiduciary relationship; (2) that the third party knew of the fiduciary relationship; and (3) that the third party was aware that it was participating in the breach of that fiduciary relationship. Meadows v. Hartford Life Ins. Co., 492 F.3d 634, 639 (5th Cir. 2007). In the present case, Nukote has alleged: (1) that Nukote had fiduciary relationships with its former employees; (2) Clover targeted these specific employees because it was aware of these fiduciary relationships; and (3) Clover knew they were participating in the breach of that fiduciary relationship. Thus, Nukote has plead sufficient facts to survive Clover's 12(b)(6) Motion to Dismiss. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Nukote's Aiding and Abetting a [*12] Breach of Fiduciary Duty claim.

F. Count Five: Aiding & Abetting: Assisting & Participating

Nukote alleges that Clover aided and abetted Nukote's former employees' tortious conduct by assisting and participating in the tortious conduct. (Doc. 55 at 13.) Clover argues that this claim should be dismissed since Texas law does not recognize a tort in aiding or abetting: assisting and participating. (Doc. 58 at 13.) The Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876 incorporates this principle, imposing liability on a person for the conduct of another which causes harm if the defendant "does a tortious act in concert with the other or pursuant to a common design with him." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876 (1977). However, the Texas Supreme Court has expressly declined to approve this theory of liability. See Gaulding v. Celotex Corp., 772 S.W.2d 66, 71 (Tex. 1989). Therefore, whether this theory of liability is recognized in Texas is an open question. Juhl v. Airington, 936, S.W.2d 640, 643 (Tex. 1996).

Nevertheless, the Texas Supreme Court stated that if they did adopt § 876(a) of the Restatement (Second) of Torts, they "would require allegations of specific intent, or perhaps gross negligence, to state a cause of action." Id. at 644. Nukote argues that in addition to Clover's own participation in tortious conduct against Nukote, Clover intended to provide substantial assistance [*13] to aid Nukote's former employees in their tortious conduct against Nukote. Although there is a question of whether this theory of liability is recognized in Texas, Nukote has alleged that Clover had specific intent to assist and participate in the tortious conduct, and thus has plead sufficient facts to state a cause of action based on the Texas Supreme Court's interpretation of this claim. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Nukote's Aiding and Abetting: Assisting and Participating Claim.

G. Count Six: Aiding & Abetting: Assisting or Encouraging

Nukote alleges that Clover aided and abetted Nukote's former employees' tortious conduct by assisting and participating in the tortious conduct. (Doc. 55 at 14.) Clover argues that this claim should be dismissed since Texas law does not recognize a tort in aiding or abetting: assisting or encouraging, and that Nukote is actually alleging fraud, which must be plead with particularity under Federal Rule 9(b). (Doc. 58 at 13-14.) Here, however, Nukote's claims are not based on fraud or mistake, but rather tortious acts that Clover assisted or encouraged Nukote's former employees to commit against Nukote with malicious intent. Therefore, [*14] since these allegations are not based on fraud or mistake, this claim is not held to the higher pleading standard.

The Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876(b) imposes liability on a person for the conduct of another if the defendant, "knows that the other's conduct constitutes a breach of duty and gives substantial assistance or encouragement to the other so to conduct himself." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876 (1977). Essentially, rather than imposing liability for an agreement, this section imposes liability "for substantially assisting and encouraging a wrongdoer in a tortious act." Juhl, 936 S.W. 2d at 644. Again, whether this theory of liability is recognized in Texas is an open question. Id at 643.

However, the Texas Supreme Court did imply that if they were to adopt § 876(b), plaintiffs would need to allege substantial assistance in order to state a cause of action. Id. at 644. Additionally, the Texas Supreme Court listed the following factors to give guidance to determine whether the defendant substantially assisted the wrongdoer: (1) the nature of the wrongful act; (2) the kind and amount of assistance; (3) the relation of the defendant and the actor; (4) the presence or absence of the defendant at the occurrence of the wrongful act; and (5) the defendant's state of mind. Id. Nukote alleges that [*15] Clover provided substantial assistance and encouraged Nukote's former employees to breach their fiduciary duty with Nukote and disclose confidential and proprietary information about Nukote in order to gain control of the market for remanufactured ink jet and laser jet cartridges. Moreover, Nukote alleges that as a direct and proximate result of these actions, Nukote suffered damages. Therefore, Nukote has plead enough facts to state a cause of action for Aiding and Abetting: Assisting or Encouraging. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Nukote's Aiding and Abetting: Assisting or Encouraging Claim.

H. Count Seven: Agreement in Restraint of Trade in Violation of Texas Law

Nukote alleges that Clover, together with Texas mass merchants, such as Office Depot, have made agreements that constitute restraints on trade and thus violate section 15.05(a) of the Texas Antitrust Act. (Doc. 55 at 15.)

Clover argues that this claim should be dismissed because Nukote has not properly alleged the relevant market. (Doc. 58 at 16.) In interpreting § 15.05(a) of the Texas Antitrust Act, the Court should look to federal judicial interpretations of § 1 of the Sherman Act. DeSantis v. Wackenhut Corp., 793 S.W.2d 670, 687 (Tex. 1990). For a plaintiff to prevail on a § 1 claim, [*16] the plaintiff "must show that the defendants (1) engaged in a conspiracy (2) that produced some anti-competitive effect (3) in the relevant market." Johnson v. Hosp. Corp. of Am., 95 F.3d 383, 392 (5th Cir. 1996). Additionally, it is important to note that the Supreme Court held that courts should be reluctant to dismiss antitrust complaints before the plaintiff has an opportunity for discovery. See Hosp. Bldg. Co. v. Tr. of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 746, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1976). Moreover, the Supreme Court has held that "the test for sufficiency...is whether the claim is wholly frivolous." Radovich v. Nat'l Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 453, 77 S. Ct. 390, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456 (1957). Further, "[w]hile the complaint might have been more precise" it would not be dismissed where the court was "not prepared to say that nothing can be extracted from [it] that falls under the Act of Congress." Id. Therefore, in order to demonstrate a claim of unreasonable restraint of trade under § 1, Nukote must establish that: (1) Clover and other Texas mass merchants engaged in a conspiracy, (2) the conspiracy had the effect of restraining trade, and (3) trade was restrained in the relevant market. See Apani SW., Inc. v. Coca-Cola Enters., 300 F.3d 620, 627 (5th Cir. 2002). Nukote has properly alleged that Clover and other Texas mass merchants have conspired together to prohibit Nukote from having access to empty ink jet and laser cartridges, and this conspiracy has led to Nukote being excluded from the relevant [*17] market.

Additionally, in order to state an antitrust claim, the complaint must plausibly define the relevant product market and geographic market. Id. The alleged geographic market must correspond to the commercial realities of the industry and be economically significant. Id. at 628. Further, a proposed product market must include all "commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes." United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). If the alleged relevant market "does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products...the relevant market is legally insufficient, and a motion to dismiss may be granted." Apani, 300 F.3d at 628.

In the present case, Nukote plausibly defines the relevant geographic and product market. The relevant geographic market is "the area of effective competition." Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 328, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961). The Supreme Court further defined the area of effective competition as the "area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies." Id. at 327. As previously stated, the alleged geographic market must correspond with the commercial realities of the industry, but this area "may be as small as a single metropolitan area." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 337, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). Furthermore, when examining whether the proposed geographic market is consistent with the "commercial [*18] realities" of an industry, courts look to many factors including regulatory restrictions, transportation barriers, and other characteristics of the relevant product market. Apani, 300 F.3d at 626. Additionally, the alleged geographic market must be economically significant. Id. at 628. Therefore, "when assessing economic significance, a court must determine whether the geographic area contains an appreciable segment of the product market." Id. at 629. Nukote limited the relevant market to Texas because they inferred that Texas consumers of remanufactured ink jet cartridges will not turn to office supply retailers outside of Texas to purchase these products. Moreover, Nukote alleged that an appreciable proportion of the sale of remanufactured ink jet cartridges in Texas was affected by the agreement. Thus, the relevant geographic market is large enough to meet the requirements set forth by the Supreme Court, and the injury to competition is sufficiently significant to be a violation of the Act. Id.

Additionally, Nukote alleges a plausible relevant product market—the sale of remanufactured ink and laser cartridges at large office supply retailers. In its pleadings, Nukote acknowledges that Texas consumers of ink jet and laser [*19] cartridges have two choices; (1) OEM cartridges; or (2) compatible and remanufactured cartridges. (Doc. 55 at 15.) However, Nukote distinguishes the two products based on the price differential between the two products, the remanufactured cartridges distinct quality, unique production facilities, specialized vendors and environmental friendliness. Therefore, the proposed product market Nukote alleges has been affected by the agreement properly excludes OEM cartridges and thus the relevant market is legally sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss.

After careful analysis, the Court finds that Nukote's claim for agreement in restraint of trade passes the "test of sufficiency." Nukote properly alleged that: (1) Clover and other Texas mass merchants engaged in a conspiracy, (2) the conspiracy had the effect of restraining trade, and (3) the trade was restrained in the relevant market. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Nukote's Agreement in Restraint of Trade Claim.

I. Count Eight: Monopolization in Violation of Texas Law

Nukote alleges that the purported agreement in restraint of trade has resulted in Clover obtaining a majority market share for remanufactured [*20] ink and laser cartridges to office supply retailers in Texas, and thus, constitutes a monopoly in violation of § 15.05(b) of the Texas Antitrust Act. (Doc. 55 at 18.) Clover argues that this claim should be dismissed because Nukote has not alleged any facts supporting the conclusion that Clover monopolized the market. (Doc. 58 at 24.) To state a claim for monopolization, the plaintiff must allege: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. Alcatel USA, Inc. v. DGI Techs., Inc., 166 F.3d 772, 781 (5th Cir. 1999).

The first step in establishing a monopolization claim is for the plaintiff to establish the relevant product market. Id. As noted above, Nukote has properly established the relevant product market. Next, the plaintiff must allege the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and that the monopolization was the result of willful acquisition or maintenance of that power was not the result of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. Id. Nukote claims that Clover's acquisition of monopoly power is not a "consequence of a superior product, [*21] business acumen, or historic accident," but rather the result of the willful acquisition obtained by interfering with Nukote's contracts and misappropriating Nukote's trade secrets. Further, Nukote alleges that Clover entered into exclusive dealing contracts with all of the large office supply retailers in order to maintain its monopoly on remanufactured ink jet and laser cartridges. See E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., 637 F.3d 435, 441 (4th Cir. 2011) (noting that "exclusive dealing arrangements can constitute an improper means of acquiring or maintaining a monopoly"). Therefore, Nukote has plead sufficient facts to establish a claim for monopolization in violation of Texas law. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Nukote's Monopolization Claim.

J. Count Nine: Attempted Monopolization in Violation of Texas Law

Nukote alleges an alternative claim for attempted monopolization in violation of § 15.05(b) of the Texas Antitrust Act. (Doc. 55 at 20.) Clover asserts that Nukote failed to plead any facts asserting that Clover attempted to monopolize the market. (Doc. 58 at 24.) The Supreme Court held that in order "to demonstrate attempted monopolization a plaintiff must prove (1) that the defendant engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct [*22] with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993).

The first element of an attempted monopolization claim requires that the plaintiff show that the defendant engaged in anticompetitive or predatory conduct. "Predatory or anticompetitive conduct is that which unfairly tends to be exclusionary or tends to destroy competition." Great W. Directories v. Sw. Bell Tel. Co., 63 F.3d 1378, 1385 (5th Cir. 1995), withdrawn and superseded in part, 74 F.3d 613 (1996). "Exclusionary conduct is conduct that tends to exclude or restrict competition and is not supported by a valid business reason." Id. Furthermore, other courts have held that "[i]n order to rise to a section two violation, however, the exclusionary conduct must appear reasonably capable of contributing significantly to creating or maintaining a monopoly power." Instructional Sys. Dev. Corp. v. Aetna Cas. And Sur. Co., 817 F.2d 639, 649 (10th Cir. 1987). In its pleadings, Nukote alleges that Clover engaged in anticompetitive or predatory conduct by engaging in tortious interference with its contracts, unfair competition by misappropriation, and creating agreements in restraint of trade. Furthermore, Nukote alleges that this conduct was done with the specific intent to monopolize and, if successful, Clover has a dangerous probability of achieving and maintaining monopoly [*23] power. Therefore, Nukote has plead sufficient facts to establish an alternative claim for attempted monopolization in violation of Texas law. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Nukote's Attempted Monopolization claim.

K. Count Ten: Exclusive Dealing in Violation of Texas Law

Nukote alleges that Clover violated § 15.05(c) of the Texas Antitrust Act by entering into exclusive dealing contracts with all the large office supply retailers, such as Office Depot and S.P. Richards. (Doc. 55 at 21.) Clover argues this claim should be dismissed because Nukote's allegations are not sufficient to state a claim for exclusive dealing. (Doc. 58 at 27.) Exclusive dealing "occurs when a seller agrees to sell its output of a commodity to a particular buyer, or when a buyer agrees to purchase its requirements of a commodity exclusively from a particular seller. Apani, 300 F.3d at 625. Moreover, the Supreme Court identified a three-step test to state a claim for exclusive dealing; (1) the relevant product market must be identified; (2) the relevant geographic market must be identified; and (3) the competition foreclosed by the arrangement must constitute a substantial share of the relevant market. Tampa Elec. Co., 365 U.S. at 327-28.

As discussed [*24] above, Nukote has established the relevant product and geographic market. After the relevant market has been identified, it must then be determined whether the arrangement foreclosed competition in a substantial share of the established market. Id. Essentially, the opportunities for other competitors to enter into or remain in the market must be significantly limited. Id. at 328. Furthermore, the Supreme Court held that in order "to determine substantiality...it is necessary to weigh the probable effect of the contract on the relevant area of effective competition, taking into account the relative strength of the parties, the proportionate volume of commerce in the relevant market...and the probable immediate and future effects which pre-emption of that share of the market might have on effective competition therein." Id. at 329. Nukote alleges that Clover has entered into exclusive arrangements with the large office supply retailers to be the exclusive suppliers of remanufactured ink jet and laser cartridges. As a result of these exclusivity contracts, Nukote claims that competition in market for remanufactured ink cartridges has been significantly limited. Therefore, Nukote has plead sufficient facts [*25] to survive Defendant's Motion to Dismiss, Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Nukote's Exclusive Dealing claim.

L. Standing to Assert Antitrust Claims

Finally, in addition to its Motion to Dismiss, Clover asserts that Nukote lacks standing to assert its antitrust claims because it has not shown antitrust injury. In order to have standing to pursue an antitrust suit, a plaintiff must show: (1) injury to the plaintiff proximately caused by the defendants' conduct; (2) antitrust injury; and (3) proper plaintiff status. Doctor's Hosp. of Jefferson, Inc. v. Se. Med. Alliance, Inc., 123 F.3d 301, 305 (5th Cir. 1997). The first and third elements are not disputed here.

Antitrust injury must be established for a plaintiff to bring an action under § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. The Supreme Court described antitrust injury as "an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Furthermore, the antitrust "injury should reflect the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Id. It should be "the type of loss that the claimed violations...would be likely to cause." Id. Moreover, the Fifth Circuit has stated that "antitrust injury for standing purposes should be viewed from the perspective of the plaintiff's position in the marketplace." Doctor's Hosp., 123 F.3d at 305. [*26] The Fifth Circuit further expanded on the standing issue, stating, "the standing inquiry...ensures that the plaintiff's demand for relief ultimately serves the purposes of the antitrust law to increase consumer choice, lower prices and assist competition, not competitors." Id. at 306. In the present case, Nukote's alleged injury flows from the alleged exclusionary conduct of its competitor, Clover. See id. at 305 (stating that the plaintiff's alleged losses and competitive disadvantage because of its exclusion fell within the conceptual bounds of antitrust injury). Therefore, Nukote has properly alleged antitrust injury. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss based on Nukote's lack of standing to bring an antitrust claim.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES the Defendant's Motion to Dismiss.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

A complaint's well-pleaded facts generally are assumed true on Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) and Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motions, and all reasonable inferences are drawn in the plaintiff's favor. Also pertinent at the Rule 12(b) stage are exhibits attached to the complaint, *Fed. R. Civ. In addition, orders entered and filings made in the trial court and other courts are subject to judicial notice, as are adjudicative facts capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned. To the extent an exhibit or a judicially noticed court document or fact contradicts the complaint's allegations, the exhibit or court document takes precedence.

Ill. Admin. Code, tit. 35, § 301.345, provides that "Population Equivalent" is a term used to evaluate the impact of industrial or other waste on a treatment works or stream. One population equivalent is 100 gallons (380 liters) of sewage per day, containing 0.17 pounds (77 grams) of BOD (5) (five day biochemical oxygen demand) and 0.20 pounds (91 grams) of suspended solids. The impact on a treatment works is evaluated as the equivalent of the highest of the three parameters. Impact on a stream is the higher of the BOD (5) and suspended solids parameters.

The causation component of § 1964(c)—whether an alleged RICO injury was caused by reason of a violation of the statute—has also been considered a component of standing. As such, the issue represents a jurisdictional requirement which remains open to review at all stages of the litigation.

This rule has three exceptions: when the refiling of the state claims is barred by the statute of limitations; where substantial judicial resources have already been expended on the state claims; and when it is clearly apparent how the state claim is to be decided.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiffs Ed Fiala and Tim Kobler Custom Homes, Inc. brought this action in the Circuit Court of the Sixteenth Judicial Circuit, Kane County, Illinois, against Defendants Wasco Sanitary District, Robert Skidmore, Raul Brizuela, Gary Sindelar, Charles Muscarello, Patrick Griffin, Jerry Boose, Kenneth Blood, Fox Mill Limited Partnership ("FMLP"), B&B Enterprises, and Hudson Harrison, alleging violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq., and Illinois law. After the case was removed to federal court, Defendants moved to dismiss under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6). Docs. 18, 21, 24, 28, 32. Because Plaintiffs' alleged injuries do not satisfy the requirements of RICO standing, the RICO claims are dismissed. And having disposed of the only federal claims in the case, the court remands the state law claims to state court.

Background

HN1[] A complaint's well-pleaded facts generally are assumed true on Rule 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) motions, and all reasonable inferences [*3] are drawn in the plaintiff's favor. See Reger Dev., LLC v. Nat'l City Bank, 592 F.3d 759, 763 (7th Cir. 2010); Patel v. City of Chi., 383 F.3d 569, 572 (7th Cir. 2004). Also pertinent at the Rule 12(b) stage are exhibits attached to the complaint, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(c); Witzke v. Femal, 376 F.3d 744, 749 (7th Cir. 2004), and exhibits attached to the parties' briefs that are "referred to" in the complaint and "central to [the plaintiff's] claim," Wright v. Associated Ins. Cos., 29 F.3d 1244, 1248 (7th Cir. 1994). See Hecker v. Deere & Co., 556 F.3d 575, 582-83 (7th Cir. 2009) (collecting cases). In addition, orders entered and filings made in this and other courts are subject to judicial notice, as are "adjudicative facts capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." United States v. Stevens, 500 F.3d 625, 628 n.4 (7th Cir. 2007) (internal quotation marks omitted); see Cancer Found., Inc. v. Cerberus Capital Mgmt. LP, 559 F.3d 671, 676 n.2 (7th Cir. 2009). To the extent an exhibit or a judicially noticed court document or fact contradicts the complaint's allegations, the exhibit or court document takes precedence. [*4] See Forrest v. Universal Sav. Bank, F.A., 507 F.3d 540, 542 (7th Cir. 2007). The following facts are stated as favorably to Plaintiffs as permitted by the complaint and other materials that may be considered on a Rule 12(b) motion.

Fiala owns a home in the Fox Mill subdivision, which is located within the borders of the Wasco Sanitary District, a municipal entity that provides its constituents with water and sanitary sewer services. Doc. 88 at ¶¶ 1, 3. Kobler is a developer that built homes in Fox Mill. Id. at ¶ 2. According to the second amended complaint, which is the operative pleading, Defendants for many years have engaged in an illegal scheme to misdirect funds from the District to B&B and FMLP, which own homes in Fox Mill and which allegedly are corporate alter egos. Id. at ¶¶ 18, 19(f), 46(a) & (ww). The scheme allegedly commenced in 1994, when the District and FMLP entered into an annexation agreement ("Fox Mill Agreement") under which the District would annex the Fox Mill subdivision, id. at ¶ 20, which in turn would receive water and sewer services from the District, Doc. 1-3 at 10-11. The Fox Mill Agreement further provided that the District would enter into agreements for [*5] reimbursement to FMLP for a portion of the cost of wastewater and water facilities constructed or paid for by FMLP. Doc. 1-4 at 2-3. Although the District and FMLP never executed any such agreement, Doc. 88 at ¶ 28, the District has since 1994 reimbursed

FMLP and B&B by allowing them to collect connection fees from existing and prospective District customers, id. at ¶ 25.

The complaint alleges that these reimbursements were prohibited by the Sanitary Act of 1936, 70 ILCS 2805/1 et seq., as it stood at the time the Fox Mill Agreement was executed. Doc. 88 at ¶ 27. The Sanitary Act later was amended to permit such reimbursements, but Plaintiffs contend that the amended statute still requires that the connection fees first be paid to the District and only then turned over to FMLP. Doc. 42 at 23. Plaintiffs assert that the District, notwithstanding the amendment, directed developers to pay connection fees directly to FMLP and B&B prior to their receiving sanitation services. Doc. 88 at ¶ 26; Doc. 42 at 2. Kobler paid connection fees to FMLP and B&B, as have numerous others. As a result, funds that should have been used by the District for infrastructure and capacity instead were paid to [*6] FMLP or B&B. This diversion of funds has required the District to charge higher fees, assessments, and property taxes, which Fiala would not have paid absent the illegal arrangement.

Defendants allegedly perpetrated this scheme through a host of illegal and fraudulent activities. The District's three trustees during the relevant time period—Skidmore, Brizuela, and Sindelar—had undisclosed financial or familial relations to B&B and its principals, Boose and Blood. Doc. 88 at ¶ 46(s), (t), (y), (z), (aa), (dd), (ee). The trustees filed statements of financial interest that failed to reveal those interests. Id. at ¶ 46(u), (y), (z), (aa), (dd), (ee). The trustees, FMLP, B&B, Boose, and Blood, with the assistance of Griffin (B&B's attorney) and Muscarello (the District's attorney), filed or caused to be filed false applications and certifications with state regulators concerning the District's wastewater capacity. Id. at ¶ 46(e), (n), (r), (v), (bb), (gg), (hh), (oo).

Harrison is another home developer in the District. In 2005, Harrison sought to annex into the District an area called Norton Farms that he wanted to develop. Id. at ¶ 29. The District denied Harrison's request. Id. at ¶ 30. [*7] Harrison renewed the application in 2008, this time retaining Griffin as his attorney. Id. at ¶ 31. Harrison then agreed to pay $2.65 million in exchange for the annexation and the receipt of sufficient wastewater capacity for the homes in Norton Farms ("Norton Farms Agreement"). Id. at ¶ 33. The 2008 application was approved. Id. at ¶ 32. Plaintiffs maintain that Harrison bribed Brizuela (one of the trustees) by giving him a recorded interest in real property. Id. at ¶¶ 46(ss) & (tt); Doc. 42 at 11. Plaintiffs also allege that Harrison's retention of Griffin as his attorney was another bribe intended to gain the District's approval. Doc. 88 at ¶ 46(rr).

The Norton Farms Agreement had negative consequences for Fiala. According to the second amended complaint, Fiala received 3.5 "population equivalents" ("PEs") with the purchase of his home. Id. at ¶ 1; Doc. 42 at 27; Doc. 105 at 6. A PE represents the amount of wastewater one individual is expected to generate in one day, which state law estimates to be 100 gallons. See 225 ILCS 225/3(6). Applicable regulations assume that a single-family home uses 3.5 PEs. See 35 Ill. Admin. Code § 370 App. A. The second amended complaint alleges that [*8] Fiala, by virtue of purchasing a single-family home that was connected to the District's facilities, "owns" 3.5 PEs. Doc. 88 at ¶ 1. As a result of the Norton Farms Agreement, one PE was "stolen" from Fiala and every other homeowner in the Fox Mill subdivision and then "sold" to Harrison to give the Norton Farms development sufficient wastewater capacity. Id. at ¶ 46(j), (o), (x), (ii), (pp), (vv). Each PE allegedly is worth $10,000. Ibid. The District's "sale" of Fiala's and other homeowners' PEs to Harrison increased the District's wastewater usage beyond its capacity, resulting in the spraying of wastewater effluent into public waterways. Id. at ¶ 46(ww).

The second amended complaint purports to state claims under RICO and Illinois law. Id. at ¶ 15. For the RICO claim, which is set forth in Count I of the second amended complaint, Plaintiffs seek actual damages, treble damages, attorney fees, and costs. Id. at p. 46. For the state law claims, which are set forth in Counts II-V, Plaintiffs seek compensatory and punitive damages, and ask the court to nullify the Norton Farms Agreement; to declare that the Fox Mill Agreement does not permit FMLP or B&B to seek the reimbursements; to [*9] require that all monies received by B&B, FMLP, or "the B&B Family" be returned to the individuals and entities from whom the monies were wrongfully obtained; to declare that the amendment to the Sanitary District Act of 1936 does not apply retroactively to any project constructed prior to its enactment; and to declare that any excess PEs are the District's property. Id. at ¶ 67(a), (b), (c), (e) (f), and p. 50. Plaintiffs ask the court under the Illinois Public Officer Prohibited Activities Act, 50 ILCS 105/3, to declare that the trustee defendants violated that statute and to nullify any District contract executed while one of the trustees held office, and, pursuant to 50 ILCS 105/4, to remove the trustees from public office and to appoint a receiver until a proper election for successor trustees can be held. Id. at ¶¶ 70(a) & (b), 73, 74.

Discussion

Five sets of defendants have filed five separate motions to dismiss. One argument made or adopted by all Defendants is that Plaintiffs lack RICO standing. That argument, which is correct and which disposes of the RICO claims, is addressed first, followed by consideration of the state law claims.

I. RICO Claims

RICO provides that HN2[] "[a]ny person [*10] injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue ... in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). HN3[] "The phrase 'injured in [his] business or property' has been interpreted as a standing requirement—rather than an element of the cause of action—which must be satisfied in order to prevail on a RICO claim." Evans v. City of Chi., 434 F.3d 916, 924 (7th Cir. 2006) (citing Gagan v. Am. Cablevision, Inc., 77 F.3d 951, 958-59 (7th Cir. 1996)). Therefore, "to establish standing to sue for a violation of § 1962, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant's overt act in furtherance of the RICO conspiracy injured the plaintiff's business or property." Gagan, 77 F.3d at 959.

The portions of Plaintiffs' second amended complaint and briefs that conceivably bear upon RICO standing generously can be read to maintain that Plaintiffs suffered the following injuries: (1) Defendants misappropriated one of Fiala's PEs and reassigned it to Harrison's homes in Norton Farms; (2) Defendants' actions "endangered the health [*11] and welfare of Fiala and others similarly situated"; (3) because Kobler and other developers paid B&B or FMLP the connection fees that should have been paid to the District, insufficient investments were made in infrastructure and capacity, leading the District to charge Fiala and other homeowners higher fees, assessments, and property taxes to make up the shortfall; (4) as a result of Defendants' actions, Kobler was forced to pay "illegal fees" to B&B that it would not have paid "but for Defendants' wrongful acts." Doc. 42 at 26-27; Doc. 88 at ¶¶ 18, 19(m) 38, 46(ww) & (zz), 51, 59, 62; Doc. 105 at 4-6. Plaintiff forfeited any argument regarding the third and fourth alleged injuries by failing to argue in their briefs that those injuries establish RICO standing. And putting aside forfeiture, none of the alleged injuries satisfy the RICO standing requirement.

A. Misappropriation and Reassignment of PEs

The first alleged injury—the taking and reassignment of Fiala's PE—rests on the premise that PEs are property that Fiala owned and that one PE supposedly was taken from Fiala and reassigned to Norton Farms. After all, if the PEs are not property, then Fiala could not own "his" PEs and [*12] a PE could not have been wrongfully taken from him. And if the PE was not wrongfully taken from Fiala, then he cannot be said to have suffered an "injury in business or property" under 18 U.S.C. § 1694(c). See Rylewicz v. Beaton Servs., Ltd., 698 F. Supp. 1391, 1396 (N.D. Ill. 1988) HN4[] ("The term 'property' [in § 1964(c)] contemplates something owned or possessed that an individual has a legitimate claim of entitlement to.").

The second amended complaint alleges that Fiala "owns 3.5 PEs" by virtue of purchasing a home in the Fox Mills subdivision. Doc. 88 at ¶ 1. HN5[] That allegation is "a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation," and thus need not be accepted as true on a Rule 12(b) motion. Bonte v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 624 F.3d 461, 465 (7th Cir. 2010). In their briefs opposing dismissal, which is where Plaintiffs need to support their legal conclusions, Plaintiffs cite no legal authority for the proposition that a PE is property belonging to a homeowner. Docs. 42, 105. And the legal authority that is available establishes that Fiala did not own any PEs.

HN6[] The nature of a PE is established by Illinois law. Different types of residences are designated different numbers of PEs. See 35 Ill. Admin. Code § 370 [*13] App. A (designating one PE for an efficiency or studio apartment, 1.5 PEs for a one-bedroom apartment, three PEs for a two- or three-bedroom apartment, 3.5 PEs for a single-family dwelling, and 2.25 PEs for a mobile home). A PE is "an average waste loading equivalent to that produced by one person which is defined as 100 gallons per day." 225 ILCS 225/3(6). This unit of measurement is used to estimate the wastewater usage and environmental impact of various structures. As the regulations explain:

> HN7[] "Population Equivalent" is a term used to evaluate the impact of industrial or other waste on a treatment works or stream. One population equivalent is 100 gallons (380 liters) of sewage per day, containing 0.17 pounds (77 grams) of BOD (5) (five day biochemical oxygen demand) and 0.20 pounds (91 grams) of suspended solids. The impact on a treatment works is evaluated as the equivalent of the highest of the three parameters. Impact on a stream is the higher of the BOD (5) and suspended solids parameters.

35 Ill. Admin. Code § 301.345. The manner in which Illinois law uses this unit of measurement is illustrated by a regulation prohibiting effluent from a "source whose untreated waste load is [*14] 10,000 population equivalents or more" from being discharged into the Chicago River System or Calumet River System. Id. § 304.120(b).

Illinois law makes clear, then, that the 3.5 PEs assigned to Fiala's single-family home do nothing more, and nothing less, than designate the amount of wastewater the home is presumed to generate. This designation, in turn, is used to estimate the Fiala home's impact on the District's treatment capacity and surrounding environment. Illinois courts refer to PEs in precisely this way and no other. See, e.g., N. Moraine Wastewater Reclamation Dist. v. Ill. Commerce Comm'n, 392 Ill. App. 3d 542, 912 N.E.2d 204, 217, 332 Ill. Dec. 18 (Ill. App. 2009); Vill. of Fox River Grove v. Pollution Control Bd., 299 Ill. App. 3d 869, 702 N.E.2d 656, 663, 234 Ill. Dec. 316 (Ill. App. 1998); Metro Util. v. Ill. Commerce Comm'n, 193 Ill. App. 3d 178, 549 N.E.2d 1327, 1328, 140 Ill. Dec. 455 (Ill. App. 1990); Greater Peoria Sanitary & Sewage Disposal Dist. v. Pollution Control Bd., 185 Ill. App. 3d 9, 540 N.E.2d 934, 935, 133 Ill. Dec. 68 (Ill. App. 1989); Unity Ventures v. Pollution Control Bd., 132 Ill. App. 3d 421, 476 N.E.2d 1368, 1369-1370, 87 Ill. Dec. 376 (Ill. App. 1985).

The nature of PEs under Illinois law conclusively defeats Plaintiffs' submission that the 3.5 PEs are property that Fiala acquired by virtue of purchasing a home in Fox Mills. Plaintiffs do not [*15] and could not allege that Fiala's wastewater services were in any way limited by the supposed "theft" of one of his PEs. If Fiala's home produced more than 2.5 PEs (250 gallons) of wastewater on any given day after the "theft" of one PE, he would not have faced any penalty or paid any charges for continuing to flush his toilet or run his shower, dishwasher, or washing machine. Fiala could not sell his PEs to a neighbor, thereby diminishing the amount of water he was entitled to use and increasing the amount of water his neighbor could use. And there is no support in law or logic for Plaintiffs' conclusory allegation that the value of Fiala's home was diminished by the "loss" of one PE, Doc. 42 at 27, for there is no basis to believe that his actual wastewater services were affected in any way by the "loss."

In short, Fiala's PEs are not property and cannot have been taken or stolen from him. The supposed theft therefore does not provide a basis for RICO standing.

B. Harm to Fiala's "Health and Welfare" Due To The Spraying and Discharge of Effluent

The second amended complaint alleges that Defendants "spray[ed] excess effluent in violation of Illinois law and [Environmental Protection [*16] Agency ("EPA")] regulations for the purpose of falsifying the capacity of the [District's] system," "spray[ed] effluent when the ground is over saturated in violation of [Illinois Environmental Protection Agency] regulations," and "discharge[d] effluent directly into Mill Creek in violation of both State and Federal EPA regulations." Doc. 88 at ¶ 38. The complaint alleges that these actions "endanger[ed] the health and welfare of the Plaintiffs and the citizens within the [District] and Illinois." Id. at ¶ 39. Plaintiffs' briefs do not elaborate on the complaint's allegations, other than to say that "Defendants have also endangered the health and welfare of Fiala and others similarly situated." Doc. 42 at 27.

Plaintiffs nowhere assert that the spraying and discharge of effluent diminished the value of their homes or property. The alleged environmental harms therefore cannot establish RICO standing. HN8[] The Seventh Circuit has held "not only that personal injuries do not provide standing in civil RICO actions, but also that pecuniary losses flowing from those personal injuries are insufficient to confer standing under § 1964(c)." Evans, 434 F.3d at 926 (citation omitted); see also id. at 931 [*17] ("personal injuries and the pecuniary losses stemming therefrom do not establish standing under the civil RICO statute"). As the Seventh Circuit explained:

> HN9[] In the civil RICO context, personal injuries which may result in pecuniary losses, but are nonetheless insufficient to provide standing under § 1964(c) have been found to include injury to mental health or emotional distress; sickness, poisoning and emotional distress; emotional distress due to loss of security and peace; injury stemming from the harassment and intimidation of federal witnesses; loss of income due to wrongful death of a family member/source of support; and inability to pursue or obtain meaningful employment.

Id. at 926 (citations omitted). Likewise, RICO plaintiffs may not recover for "physical and emotional injuries due to harmful exposure to toxic waste." Genty v. Resolution Trust Corp., 937 F.2d 899, 918-19 (3d Cir. 1991). It follows that Plaintiffs cannot seek redress under RICO for the alleged harm to their "health and welfare."

C. Payment of Higher Fees, Property Taxes, and Assessments

As noted above, Plaintiffs allege that because Kobler and other developers paid B&B or FMLP the connection fees that should have [*18] been paid to the District, insufficient investments were made in the District's infrastructure and capacity, requiring the District to charge Fiala and other home owners higher fees, assessments, and property taxes to make up the shortfall. Although Plaintiffs specifically disclaim any reliance on Fiala's taxpayer status, Doc. 88 at ¶ 61 ("Plaintiff FIALA is not seeking any recovery under [RICO] in his capacity as a taxpayer."), the second amended complaint references Fiala's payment of higher fees, taxes, and assessments, id. at ¶¶ 1, 18, 46(ww). In their briefs opposing dismissal, however, Plaintiffs do not argue that the overpayments constitute an injury for purposes of RICO standing. Any RICO standing argument based on the alleged overpayments accordingly has been forfeited. See Alioto v. Town of Lisbon, 651 F.3d 715, 721 (7th Cir. 2011) ("Longstanding under our case law is the rule that HN10[] a person waives an argument by failing to make it before the district court. We apply that rule where a party fails to develop arguments related to a discrete issue, and we also apply that rule where a litigant effectively abandons the litigation by not responding to alleged deficiencies in a motion [*19] to dismiss.") (citations omitted); Bonte, 624 F.3d at 466 ("Failure to respond to an argument—as the [plaintiffs] have done here—results in waiver."); Wojtas v. Capital Guardian Trust Co., 477 F.3d 924, 926 (7th Cir. 2007); Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. E. Atl. Ins. Co., 260 F.3d 742, 747 (7th Cir. 2001) (a party's failure to oppose an argument permits an inference of acquiescence, and "acquiescence operates as a waiver"); *Walsh v. Arrow Fin. Servs., LLC, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9972, 2012 WL 255802, at 3 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 27, 2012) (citing cases); *Shaffer v. Nat'l Passenger R.R. Corp., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119727, 2011 WL 4916493, at 2 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 17, 2011) (citing cases).

Any such argument would have failed in any event due to the "indirect purchaser" rule. HN11[] The rule holds that a plaintiff cannot seek damages under RICO where it is an indirect purchaser, meaning where it alleges that it paid the costs of a RICO scheme that were passed on by the scheme's direct victim. See BCS Servs, Inc. v. Heartwood 88, LLC, 637 F.3d 750, 753-57 (7th Cir. 2011). The rule is regularly invoked to defeat the kind of RICO claim at issue in this case. In Carter v. Berger, 777 F.2d 1173 (7th Cir. 1985), for example, the defendant bribed employees of the Cook County [*20] Board of Appeals to obtain lower property assessments for his clients. The bribes indisputably violated RICO, and the plaintiff taxpayers sued the defendant on the theory that Cook County had increased their taxes to make up the shortfall caused by the lower assessments given the defendant's clients. See id. at 1174-75. The Seventh Circuit held that the indirect purchaser rule defeated the claim, explaining that HN12[] RICO does not provide redress for taxpayers who were overcharged due to costs being "passed on" by the scheme's direct victim, which in Carter was the County. Id. at 1175-76.

Other decisions are in accord. In Wooten v. Loshbough, 951 F.2d 768 (7th Cir. 1991), the plaintiff was a judgment creditor of a company driven into bankruptcy by the defendant's RICO violations. While acknowledging that "the defendants' activities made it less likely that [the plaintiff] would collect her judgment[,]" the court held that her claim was barred by the indirect purchaser rule. Id. at 769. And in Illinois ex rel. Ryan v. Brown, 227 F.3d 1042 (7th Cir. 2000), the plaintiff taxpayers brought suit on behalf of the State of Illinois to recoup interest lost due to the state treasurer's placement [*21] of state monies in a non-interest bearing account, a decision that allegedly resulted from a bribery scheme that violated RICO. In holding that the plaintiffs were not the scheme's direct victims and thus could not sue under RICO, the Seventh Circuit cited Carter, describing it as a case where > the directly injured party was the county, whose tax collections had been less than they should have been because of the acts of bribery and mail fraud at issue; those plaintiffs claimed that they too were injured because their tax assessments were too high, as a result of the depressed levels other people's taxes.

Id. at 1045. The Seventh Circuit ruled that because "the State of Illinois itself was directly injured by the misdirection of its funds into non-interest bearing accounts and the pockets of miscreants[,] ... the State is the proper party to be suing, not the plaintiffs." Id. at 1045-46.

As in Carter, Wooten, and Ryan, the indirect purchaser rule bars Plaintiffs from invoking RICO to recover the amounts by which the District allegedly was compelled to overcharge them due to the siphoning away of money by FMLP and B&B. The direct victim of Defendants' scheme, and thus the only appropriate [*22] RICO plaintiff, is the District itself.

Although this result may seem odd at first glance because the second amended complaint names the District as a defendant, the complaint makes clear that the District is not a RICO defendant. In its third paragraph, the complaint states: "No money is being sought from the [District] in this action, but instead they are named herein as an interested party under Count II with the right to notice that this action may adjudicate their rights to certain property." Doc. 88 at ¶ 3 (emphasis added). Count I is the RICO claim, while Count II seeks equitable and declaratory relief under a variety of state law theories. Moreover, the third paragraph's reference to "their rights to certain property" suggests that Plaintiffs (correctly) view the District as the victim, not the perpetrator, of a RICO scheme allegedly concocted by the other defendants. The point is confirmed by the complaint's first paragraph, which alleges that Fiala brought this suit "in his individual capacity as a homewoner in Fox Mill and as a taxpayer for the misappropriation of general public funds for which the municipality [the District] has a right to collect, pursuant to Golden v. City of Flora[,] ... 408 Ill. 129, 96 N.E.2d 506, 508 (Ill. 1951)." [*23] Id. at ¶ 1 (emphasis added). Again, the allegation that the District "has a right to collect" funds that the RICO scheme diverted elsewhere suggests that the District is the scheme's victim and not among its perpetrators. The District's status as a nominal defendant therefore does not undermine the conclusion that it is the direct victim of the alleged RICO scheme and thus the only appropriate RICO plaintiff.

Carter recognizes HN13[↑] an exception to the "indirect purchaser" rule in RICO cases "'where the direct purchaser is owned or controlled by' the wrongdoer." 777 F.2d at 1178 (quoting Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 736 n.16, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977)). The rationale for this exception, which arose from antitrust law, is that where the wrongdoers control the direct purchaser, "the direct purchaser would have little or no incentive to sue on [its] own behalf, thus leaving the indirect purchaser without recourse for any antitrust injuries." *Doe v. Ariz. Hosp. & Healthcare Ass'n, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42871, 2009 WL 1423378, at 6 (D. Ariz. Mar. 19, 2009). Those circumstances were present at the inception of this lawsuit in April 2010, when the three trustee defendants controlled the District's three-member board. But two [*24] of the trustees (Brizuela and Sindelar) were replaced in November 2010, giving majority control of the District's board to non-conflicted trustees. See Wasco Sanitary District Trustees, http://wascosd.org/AboutWSD/Trustees/tabid/110/ Default.aspx (last visited Mar. 15, 2012) (identifying Ryan Strauss as President, Thomas Bihun as Vice President, and Skidmore as Trustee); Bihun, Strauss win in Wasco Sanitary District, Kane County Chronicle, Nov. 3, 2010 (reporting that Strauss and Bihun defeated Brizuela and William Scanlon in the November 2010 election), available at http://fwix.com/news/11230082 (last visited Mar. 15, 2012); Kane County Elections, 2010 General Election Contest Results, http://www.kanecountyelections.org/ElectionResults/2010-11-02/Contests.asp (last visited Mar. 15, 2012) (same); Josh Stockinger, Wasco candidates disagree on legal fees, Chicago Daily Herald, Oct. 25, 2010, at 4 (reporting that Strauss and Bihun ran as a slate against Brizuela and Scanlon in the November 2010 election).

The non-conflicted trustees have had the authority since November 2010 to seek redress for the alleged siphoning of funds away from it and to FMLP and B&B. See 70 ILCS 2805/3(d) HN14[] ("[a] [*25] majority of the board of trustees shall constitute a quorum"). Because there remains no impediment to suit by the direct purchaser, and because there has been no such impediment since November 2010, the "own or control" exception to the indirect purchaser rule does not apply. It follows—even putting aside Plaintiffs' forfeiture of the argument that the alleged overpayment of fees, property taxes, and assessments provide a basis for RICO standing—that Plaintiffs are not the proper parties to seek redress under RICO for that alleged injury.

D. Payment of "Illegal Fees" by Kobler to B & B

Finally, the second amended complaint alleges that Kobler was injured when forced to pay "illegal fees" to B&B as a result of the reimbursement agreement between the District and B&B. There are two conceivable alleged injuries here. The first is that Kobler "would not have had to pay [the illegal fees] but for the Defendants' wrongful acts." Doc. 88 at ¶ 62. Any argument that this injury provides a basis for RICO standing has been forfeited because Plaintiffs' briefs do not press this point in opposing dismissal; in fact, the briefs do not mention this point at all. See Alioto, 651 F.3d at 721; Bonte, 624 F.3d at 466; [*26] Wojtas, 477 F.3d at 926; Cincinnati Ins. Co., 260 F.3d at 747; *Walsh, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9972, 2012 WL 255802, at 3; *Shaffer, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119727, 2011 WL 4916493, at 2.

The second conceivable injury, which is not forfeited, arises from the allegation that "Kobler ... w[as] induced to pay monies directly to defendants after being falsely advised by defendants that B&B and/or FMLP owned the rights to sell P.E.'s as some type of commodity." Doc. 42 at 27. The argument appears to be that the reimbursement arrangement caused harm because the fees first should be paid to the District and then given to B&B, not paid directly to B&B. This alleged injury does not establish RICO standing. Plaintiffs do not contend that the homes Kobler built did not receive wastewater services in exchange for the payments; indeed, the homes did. Nor do Plaintiffs submit that the fees were any higher than they would have been had the fees been paid directly to the District. Accordingly, the fact that money is paid directly to B&B rather than passed through the District does not deprive Kobler of any money (beyond what it would have paid anyway) or services. It follows that the direct payments did not injure Kobler's "business or property" under § 1964(c) [*27] and thus that it cannot predicate RICO standing.

II. State Law Claims

Having dismissed the RICO claims, which are the only federal claims, the court must decide the proper disposition of the state law claims. HN15[] If the dismissal of the RICO claims is for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under Rule 12(b)(1), the court must remand the state law claims without considering whether to retain supplemental jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1367. See Arbaugh v. Y&H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 514, 126 S. Ct. 1235, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1097 (2006); Miller v. Herman, 600 F.3d 726, 730 (7th Cir. 2010). In Evans v. City of Chicago, supra, HN16[] the Seventh Circuit definitively held that RICO standing implicates subject matter jurisdiction, not the merits of the RICO claim:

> HN17[] The phrase "injured in business or property" has been interpreted as a standing requirement—rather than an element of the cause of action—which must be satisfied in order to prevail on a RICO claim. The causation component of § 1964(c)—whether an alleged RICO injury was caused "by reason of" a violation of the statute—has also been considered a component of standing. As such, the issue represents a jurisdictional requirement which remains open to review at all stages of the litigation.

434 F.3d at 924 [*28] (citations and some internal quotation marks omitted); accord, e.g., RWB Servs., LLC v. Hartford Computer Grp., Inc., 539 F.3d 681, 686 (7th Cir. 2008); Gagan, 77 F.3d at 958. On that understanding, the dismissal of the RICO claims is for lack of jurisdiction under Rule 12(b)(1), mandating remand of the state law claims.

It is possible that the Seventh Circuit might revisit the issue and conclude that RICO standing goes to the merits of a RICO claim, thus making Rule 12(b)(6) and not Rule 12(b)(1) the appropriate vehicle for a dismissal grounded on lack of RICO standing. The Seventh Circuit has long considered antitrust standing, a close cousin of RICO standing, to be non-jurisdictional. See Hammes v. AAMCO Transmissions, Inc., 33 F.3d 774, 778 (7th Cir. 1994) ("despite the suggestive terminology, 'antitrust standing' is not a jurisdictional requirement and is therefore waivable"). And the Second, Third, and Ninth Circuits have held that RICO standing goes to merits and not the court's jurisdiction. See, e.g., Canyon Cnty. v. Syngenta Seeds, Inc., 519 F.3d 969, 974 n.7 (9th Cir. 2008) ("we review the question of whether the [plaintiff] satisfies civil RICO's standing requirements under [*29] the standard for Rule 12(b)(6)"); Lerner v. Fleet Bank, N.A., 318 F.3d 113, 129-30 (2d Cir. 2003) (Sotomayor, J.) (RICO standing "is not jurisdictional in nature under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), but is rather an element of the merits addressed under a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion for failure to state a claim"); Maio v. Aetna, Inc., 221 F.3d 472, 481 n.7 (3d Cir. 2000) ("While we have designated section 1964(c) as the 'standing' provision of RICO, we point out that our method of analysis in prior cases has been to consider issues of RICO and antitrust standing in the context of reviewing motions to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), despite the fact that the 'injury to business or property' and proximate causation requirements are considered aspects of the plaintiff's 'standing' to sue under section 1964(c) of RICO and section 4 of the Clayton Act.") (citation omitted).

If the Seventh Circuit were to agree with the Second, Third, and Ninth Circuits, then the dismissal of the RICO claims here would be on the merits under Rule 12(b)(6), thus requiring the court to decide whether to retain or relinquish supplemental jurisdiction over the state law claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1367. (The parties [*30] are not diverse, so there is no original jurisdiction under the diversity statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1332.) Under those circumstances, the court would exercise its discretion under § 1367(c) to relinquish jurisdiction over the state law claims and remand them to state court.

HN18[] Section 1367(c)(3) provides that a district court "may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a claim" if "the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction." 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3). "As a general matter, when all federal claims have been dismissed prior to trial, the federal court should relinquish jurisdiction over the remaining pendant state claims." Williams v. Rodriguez, 509 F.3d 392, 404 (7th Cir. 2007). This rule has three exceptions: "when the [refiling] of the state claims is barred by the statute of limitations; where substantial judicial resources have already been expended on the state claims; and when it is clearly apparent how the state claim is to be decided." Ibid. None of those exceptions apply here, making remand appropriate. See Courtney v. Halleran, 485 F.3d 942, 950-51 (7th Cir. 2007) (affirming the district court's dismissal of the state law claims under [*31] § 1367(c)(3) after it dismissed the RICO claims, which were the only federal claims in the case); Cenco Inc. v. Seidman & Seidman, 686 F.2d 449, 458-59 (7th Cir. 1982) (suggesting that relinquishing jurisdiction over the state law claims would be appropriate because the RICO claims, which were the only federal claims in the case, had been dismissed).

Remand is independently appropriate under HN19[] § 1367(c)(1), which applies where a state law claim "raises a novel or complex issue of State law." 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(1). As noted above, Plaintiffs' state law claims ask the court under the Illinois Public Officer Prohibited Activities Act, 50 ILCS 105/3, to declare that the District's trustees violated that statute, to nullify any District contract executed while one of the trustees held office, and, under 50 ILCS 105/4, to appoint a receiver until a proper election for successor trustees can be held. Such claims, which strike at the heart of an Illinois municipality's ability to govern itself, are better resolved by the Illinois judiciary. *See Marshall v. Cnty. of Cook, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136959, 2011 WL 5980454, at 4 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 29, 2011) (citing cases).

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs' RICO claims [*32] are dismissed. Jurisdiction is relinquished over the state law claims, which are remanded to the Circuit Court of the Sixteenth Judicial Circuit, Kane County, Illinois. The dismissal of the RICO claims is without prejudice to Plaintiffs pursuing their state law claims in state court.

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

For purposes of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion, a court must accept as true all well-pleaded allegations in the complaint and must construe the pleading in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs. Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), a complaint must contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, providing the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. This standard does not require detailed factual allegations, but a pleading that offers labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Consistent with Rule 12(b)(6), a court may consider the allegations contained in the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, matters of public record and records of which the court may take judicial notice.

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint need allege only enough facts to state a claim of relief that is plausible on its face so as to test whether plaintiffs have nudged their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible to survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion. Thus, a complaint is subject to dismissal when the plaintiff fails to plead factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.

HN4[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

To determine whether a particular claim is subject to and meets the Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) pleading standard, courts hold that where the plaintiff grounds her claims in allegations of fraud--and the claims thus sound in fraud--the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) apply. Conversely, claims that do not sound in fraud are not held to the heightened pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). However, there is no requirement that fraud or mistake be a necessary element of a prima facie claim in order for Rule 9(b) to apply. In cases where fraud is not a necessary element of a claim, a plaintiff may choose nonetheless to allege in the complaint that the defendant has engaged in fraudulent conduct. In some cases, the plaintiff may allege a unified course of fraudulent conduct and rely entirely on that course of conduct as the basis of a claim. In that event, the claim is said to be grounded in fraud or to sound in fraud, and the pleading of that claim as a whole must satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b).

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law

Antitrust claims generally are not subject to the heightened pleading requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), but Rule 9(b) applies when fraud is the basis for the antitrust violation alleged. Where an antitrust claim is based on fraud--on misrepresentations in the information given to consumers and on misrepresentations in the information given to others, and where plaintiffs allege that the defendants accomplished the goal of their conspiracy through fraud, the complaint is subject to Rule 9(b).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN6[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

To satisfy the Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) pleading requirements, a complaint may either describe the circumstances of the alleged fraud with precise allegations of date, time, or place or may use some other means of injecting precision and some measure of substantiation into their allegations of fraud. At the very least, plaintiffs also must allege who made a misrepresentation to whom and the general content of the misrepresentation. This pleading standard not only gives defendants notice of the claims against them, but also combats frivolous suits brought solely to extract settlements from defendants and provides an increased measure of protection for their reputations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN7[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

While a significant purpose of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) is to provide notice of the precise misconduct at issue, courts should apply the rule with some flexibility and should not require plaintiffs to plead issues that may have been concealed by the defendants. Accordingly, the particularity rule is somewhat relaxed when key factual information remains within the defendant's control. Relaxation, however, does not translate into, or otherwise authorize, boilerplate and conclusory allegations, and plaintiffs must accompany their legal theory with factual allegations that make their theoretically viable claim plausible. Allegations based upon information and belief are permissible, but only if the pleading sets forth specific facts upon which the belief is reasonably based. A boilerplate allegation that plaintiffs believe the necessary information lies in defendants' exclusive control, if made, must be accompanied by a statement of facts upon which their allegation is based. In cases of corporate fraud, even under a nonrestrictive application of Rule 9(b), pleaders must allege that the necessary information lies within defendants' control, and their allegations must be accompanied by a statement of the facts upon which the allegations are based. In other words, even a relaxed fit requires some tailoring.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 continues to apply even when under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) malice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). For purposes of its meaningful presence in Rule 9(b) the word generally is a relative term and it is to be compared to the particularity requirement applicable to fraud or mistake. By way of example, Rule 9 merely excuses a party from pleading discriminatory intent under an elevated pleading standard. It does not give him license to evade the less rigid--though still operative--strictures of Rule 8. Plaintiffs must still allege facts that show the court their basis for inferring that the defendants acted with scienter. Rule 8 does not empower a respondent to plead the bare elements of his cause of action, affix the label general allegation, and expect his complaint to survive a motion to dismiss.

Both standing and mootness also frequently appear as threshold requirements for the maintenance of federal class actions and must be considered in addition to the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 when deciding whether a particular action may be certified. It is important when considering the applicability of these two doctrines to class actions to keep in mind that these concepts serve both constitutional and prudential concerns: they ensure that a justiciable or live issue is presented, thereby satisfying the U.S. Const. art. III requirement that federal courts only entertain cases or controversies, and they seek to ascertain whether the person asserting the claim is sufficiently interested so that full litigation of the issues involved can be assumed. Notably, this latter concern also is addressed through the Rule 23 requirements that the class representative be a member of the class, and be an adequate representative for the class.

HN10[] Class Members, Named Members

When a class action is introduced into the standing equation, the requirement that a named plaintiff must have standing to bring it is unaltered. Insofar that a case may be a class action adds nothing to the question of standing, for even named plaintiffs who represent a class must allege and show that they personally have been injured, not that injury has been suffered by other, unidentified members of the class to which they belong and which they purport to represent. Simply put, one cannot acquire individual standing by virtue of bringing a class action.

HN12[] Justiciability, Standing

Generally, U.S. Const. art. III standing is a threshold issue for any case, including class actions. U.S. Const. art. III, § 2 limits the federal judicial power to the adjudication of cases and controversies. Absent Article III standing, a federal court does not have subject matter jurisdiction to address a plaintiff's claims, and they must be dismissed. Moreover, a plaintiff must demonstrate standing for each claim he seeks to press. Standing as to one claim is simply not communicative across other separate claims for relief.

A dismissal for lack of statutory standing is effectively the same as a dismissal for failure to state a claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN14[] Standing, Injury in Fact

The irreducible constitutional minimum of U.S. Const. art. III standing entails three elements. Those constitutional standing requirements are: (1) an injury in fact; (2) a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of--the injury has to be fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant, and not the result of the independent action of some third party not before the court; and (3) a showing that it be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Personal Stake

HN15[] Standing, Injury in Fact

To establish injury in fact, a plaintiff must allege an injury that is both (1) concrete and particularized and (2) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical. Each of these definitional strands imposes unique constitutional requirements. An injury is concrete if it is real, or distinct and palpable, as opposed to merely abstract, while an injury is sufficiently particularized if it affects the plaintiff in a personal and individual way. The second requirement--actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical--makes plain that if a harm is not presently or actually occurring, the alleged future injury must be sufficiently imminent. Imminence is somewhat elastic, but requires, at the very least, that the plaintiffs demonstrate a realistic danger of sustaining a direct injury. In other words, there must be a realistic chance--or a genuine probability--that a future injury will occur in order for that injury to be sufficiently imminent.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Personal Stake

HN16[] Standing, Injury in Fact

The consideration of the injury-in-fact element bears particular significance because the nature of a party's injury is relevant to the determination of whether she has alleged such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues. While all three of these elements are constitutionally mandated, the injury-in-fact element is often determinative. To meet the standing requirements of U.S. Const. art. III, a plaintiff must allege personal injury fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct and likely to be redressed by the requested relief. A plaintiff's complaint must establish that he has a personal stake in the alleged dispute, and that the alleged injury suffered is particularized as to him. A court's attention must turn to the named plaintiffs to ask whether they have a personal stake sufficient to confer Article III standing based upon their specific allegations and the relief which they seek.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Personal Stake

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN17[] Standing, Personal Stake

Standing is a question of whether a plaintiff is sufficiently adverse to a defendant to create a U.S. Const. art. III case or controversy, or at least to overcome prudential limitations on federal-court jurisdiction; cause of action is a question of whether a particular plaintiff is a member of the class of litigants that may, as a matter of law, appropriately invoke the power of the court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN18[] Justiciability, Standing

Statutory standing is generally described as involving whether a plaintiff comes within the zone of interests for which the cause of action was available. The merits inquiry such as whether a private right of enforcement exists and the statutory standing inquiry often overlap, and the question whether a plaintiff has a cause of action under a statute, and the question whether any plaintiff has a cause of action under the statute are closely connected--indeed, depending upon the asserted basis for lack of statutory standing, they are sometimes identical, so that it would be exceedingly artificial to draw a distinction between the two. Nonetheless, questions of U.S. Const. art. III standing are distinguishable from both concepts.

Statutory standing can be understood as simply another element of proof for an antitrust claim, rather than a predicate for asserting a claim in the first place.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN20[] Private Actions, Standing

It is necessary for a court to distinguish U.S. Const. art. III standing issues from statutory standing and cause of action issues because the question whether a plaintiff states a claim for relief goes to the merits' in the typical case, not the justiciability of a dispute, and conflation of the two concepts can cause confusion Statutory standing, that is, the possession of a viable claim or right to relief, not to a jurisdictional requirement, is distinct from jurisdictional standing in that Article III standing is required to establish a justiciable case or controversy within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, whereas lack of antitrust standing affects a plaintiff's ability to recover, but does not implicate the subject matter jurisdiction of the court. Whether a party has standing under Article III is a distinct inquiry from whether the party may assert a cause of action under state or federal law. A party may have standing under Article III, but fail to assert a cause of action under state law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN21[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

It is firmly established that the absence of a valid, as opposed to arguable, cause of action does not implicate subject-matter jurisdiction, that is, a courts' statutory or constitutional power to adjudicate a case. Jurisdiction is not defeated by the possibility that the averments might fail to state a cause of action on which the petitioners could actually recover. Rather, a district court has jurisdiction if the right of the petitioners to recover under their complaint will be sustained if the Constitution and laws of the United States are given one construction and will be defeated if they are given another, unless the claim clearly appears to be immaterial and made solely for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction or where such a claim is wholly insubstantial and frivolous.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN22[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The U.S. Supreme Court has criticized the implications of treating the validity of a cause of action as jurisdictional. Under that approach, each element of every cause of action would have a legitimate claim to being a jurisdictional requirement--essentially eviscerating the distinction between the jurisdictional and merits inquiry, and requiring a court to dismiss a claim for lack of jurisdiction whenever the plaintiff does not prevail. An exception arises when a claim is so insubstantial, implausible, foreclosed by prior decisions of the court, or otherwise completely devoid of merit as not to involve a federal controversy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN23[] Private Actions, Standing

A U.S. Const. art. III standing inquiry simply does not require considering the elements of a state claim as jurisdictional prerequisites. To inject the condition that plaintiffs must satisfy certain elements of state antitrust claims into a constitutional standing analysis would result in an impermissible out-of-the-box merits inquiry. The Article III requirement of remediable injury in fact, except with regard to entirely frivolous claims, has nothing to do with the text of the statute relied upon.

Whether a statutory provision that establishes a threshold for relief is jurisdictional or goes to the merits determines whether a failure to comply with the provision is grounds for dismissal, at any time in the litigation, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), or whether a failure to meet the threshold is merely a basis for summary judgment or for dismissal for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), matters that are subject to very different procedural rules and limits. Under the bright line rule of Arbaugh v. Y & H Corp., federal statutory threshold requirements should not be treated as jurisdictional unless Congress has clearly stated that they are.

HN25[] Standing, Requirements

The focus of the doctrine of antitrust standing is somewhat different from that of standing as a constitutional doctrine. Harm to an antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact. After all, monetary harm is a classic form of injury in fact. Indeed, it is often assumed without discussion.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN27[] Legislation, Interpretation

Because it is presumed that Congress expresses its intent through the ordinary meaning of its language, every exercise of statutory interpretation begins with an examination of the plain language of the statute. When the statute's language is plain, the sole function of the courts--at least where the disposition required by the test is not absurd--is to enforce it according to its terms. When the language of a statute is plain and its meaning clear, the rules of statutory construction do not permit courts to search for meaning beyond the statute's express terms. The most fundamental rule of statutory construction is the plain meaning rule, which provides that if a statute is not ambiguous, then a court must apply the statute according to its terms. Words in a statute are given their plain, ordinary, and commonly understood meaning, unless they are defined by statute or unless a contrary intention plainly appears. Courts give words their plain meaning and effect, and read statutes as a whole, as well as enactments relating to the same subject.

Restitution under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203 is confined to restoration of any interest in money or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by means of such unfair competition. A restitution order against a defendant thus requires both that money or property have been lost by a plaintiff, on the one hand, and that it have been acquired by a defendant, on the other. But the economic injury that an unfair business practice occasions may often involve a loss by the plaintiff without any corresponding gain by the defendant, such as, for example, a diminishment in the value of some asset a plaintiff possesses. A plaintiff who alleges that a defendant's defamatory statements diminished its assets and reduced its market capitalization adequately alleges California Unfair Competition Law standing.

A person is enriched if he receives a benefit at another's expense. The term benefit denotes any form of advantage. Thus, a benefit is conferred not only when one adds to the property of another, but also when one saves the other from expense or loss. Even when a person has received a benefit from another, he is required to make restitution only if the circumstances of its receipt or retention are such that, as between the two persons, it is unjust for him to retain it. For a benefit to be conferred, it is not essential that money be paid directly to the recipient by the party seeking restitution.

Antitrust violations constitute FDUTPA violations, in part, because § 501.204(2) provides that in determining what constitutes an unfair method of competition under § 501.204(1), due consideration and great weight shall be given to the interpretations of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts relating to § 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45(a)(1). Section 45(a)(1) encompasses violations of the antitrust laws. Florida law recognizes that a FDUTPA claim may arise from a violation of antitrust laws such as the Sherman Act and other state antitrust laws because such a violation in and of itself is an unfair method of competition.

Thus viewed, the fairness or unfairness of particular conduct is not an abstraction to be derived by logic. Rather, the fair or unfair nature of particular conduct is to be judged by viewing it against the background of actual human experience and by determining its intended and actual effects upon others. As used in the North Carolina Unfair and Deceptive Trade Practices Act, the words unfair methods of competition encompass any conduct that a court of equity would consider unfair. More specifically, a practice is unfair if it is unethical or unscrupulous, and it is deceptive if it has a tendency to deceive.

Plaintiffs need not plead the unavailability of remedy provided by law to state a claim for unjust enrichment under Florida law. The elements of an unjust enrichment claim are a benefit conferred upon a defendant by the plaintiff, the defendant's appreciation of the benefit, and the defendant's acceptance and retention of the benefit under circumstances that make it inequitable for him to retain it without paying the value thereof. To state a claim for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must plead the following elements: 1) the plaintiff has conferred a benefit on the defendant; 2) the defendant has knowledge of the benefit; 3) the defendant has accepted or retained the benefit conferred; and 4) the circumstances are such that it would be inequitable for the defendant to retain the benefit without paying fair value for it.

The unavailability of an adequate remedy at law is not within the parameters of the prima facie claim for unjust enrichment as articulated by Massachusetts courts. The sine qua non of unjust enrichment is that the defendant has been unjustly enriched. Even where a person has received a benefit from another, he is liable to pay therefor only if the circumstances are such that, as between the two persons, it is unjust for him to retain it. The term is not descriptive of conduct which, standing alone, would justify an action for recovery. Unjust enrichment is an essentially equitable doctrine requiring proof of some misconduct, fault or culpable action on the part of the defendant as wrongdoer which renders his retention of a benefit at the expense of another contrary to equity and good conscience. Unjust enrichment, as a basis for restitution, requires more than benefit. The benefit must be unjust, a quality that turns on the reasonable expectations of the parties. To recover for unjust enrichment under Massachusetts law, a plaintiff must show that (1) the defendant knowingly received a benefit (2) at his expense (3) under circumstances that would make retention of that benefit unjust.

Furthermore, in New Mexico, there is no requirement that the creation of a statutory remedy at law for a particular type of claim will automatically supplant an equitable remedy that addresses the same claim. [Any] major departure from the long tradition of equity practice should not be lightly implied. Likewise, unjust enrichment constitutes an independent basis for recovery in a civil-law action, analytically and historically distinct from the other two principal grounds for such liability, contract and tort.

In Utah, the benefit conferred satisfies the requirement if the defendant's retention of the benefit would be unjust without providing compensation. Unjust enrichment does not result if the defendant has received only an incidental benefit from the plaintiff's service.

When a federal court sitting in diversity must make a prediction as to a precise legal issue a certain legal standard must be satisfied. In doing so, the court is required to consult and evaluate particular sources of legal authority: In adjudicating a case under state law, courts are not free to impose their own view of what state law should be; rather, courts are to apply existing state law as interpreted by the state's highest court in an effort to predict how that court would decide the precise legal issues before them. In the absence of guidance from the state's highest court, federal courts must look to decisions of state intermediate appellate courts, of federal courts interpreting that state's law, and of other state supreme courts that have addressed the issue. Federal courts must also consider analogous decisions, considered dicta, scholarly works, and any other reliable data tending convincingly to show how the highest court in the state would decide the issue at hand.

[*875] GENE E.K. PRATTER, J.

I. Introduction

Indirect purchasers [1] of domestic eggs and egg products charge producers of those goods, and the producers' trade groups, with conspiring to manipulate the supply of, and thereby fix prices for, domestically-sold eggs and egg products. The Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint (hereinafter, the "IPSAC") [2] alleges violations of federal and state law. The 22 state jurisdictions at issue geographically reach considerably farther than a rooster's most vigorous crows can be heard. In total, the IPSAC contains 51 claims: a Section 1 Sherman Act claim for injunctive relief, 20 state antitrust claims, 9 state consumer protection claims, and 21 state unjust enrichment claims. [3]

In response, Defendants have jointly filed the Motion sub judice which tries to crack, if not wholly topple, most of the Plaintiffs' claims by seeking full or partial dismissal of all counts. [4] Defendants argue that the IPSAC is deficient in a number of ways, inter alia, lack of standing (in the various applications of that term) and failure to state a claim consistent with the demands of Rules 8 and 9(b). As outlined below and as delineated in the accompanying Order, the Court grants the Motion in part and denies it in part.

II. Background

This multidistrict litigation concerns numerous consolidated and coordinated actions based upon allegations of a conspiracy [*876] in violation of the Sherman Act among egg producers and trade groups to manipulate the supply of eggs and egg products and thereby affect the domestic prices of those goods. See In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., 588 F. Supp. 2d 1366, 1367 (J.P.M.L. 2008). The plaintiffs are direct purchasers (such as grocery stores, commercial food manufacturers, restaurants, other food service providers, and other entities who purchase directly from Defendants or other egg producers) and indirect purchasers (individual consumers who purchased from other parties along the distribution chain) of eggs and egg products. The direct purchaser plaintiffs fall into additional categories: "Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs" who have brought a consolidated class action against Defendants, and "Direct Action Plaintiffs" [4] who are pursuing individual actions against Defendants.

---

[1] Indirect purchasers buy products not directly from the product's original source but from other parties further along the distribution chain. See generally Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 726, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977); [2] IPSAC ¶¶ 19-44, 107-08, 505.

[2] The IPSAC is the operative pleading for the indirect purchaser plaintiffs, replacing or superseding all of the previously-filed individual and consolidated complaints.

[3] This inventory does not include the claims that Plaintiffs withdrew at oral argument. At that time, Plaintiffs withdrew all of their claims arising under Maine or Puerto Rico law. They also withdrew consumer protection claims based upon the laws of Michigan, South Dakota, or Wisconsin.

[4] The Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Second Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint is filed at Docket No. 332. Plaintiffs responded to the Motion (Doc. [3] No. 355), and Defendants filed a reply brief (Doc. No. 385). The parties submitted several supplemental materials to the Court. At oral argument all counsel ably presented on the Motion, and the transcript of the argument is in the record at Docket No. 597.

In this Opinion the Court addresses one, albeit a multifaceted one, of the Defendants' pending motions to dismiss the IPSAC. [5] The Court previously addressed motions to dismiss filed by virtually the same group of Defendants concerning the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint. See Sept. 26, 2011 Mem. and Order, 2011 WL 4465355 (Doc. Nos. 562 and 563); Oct. 14, 2011 Mem. and Order, 2011 WL 4945864 (Doc. Nos. 581 and 582); Nov. 30, 2011 Opinion and Order, 2011 WL 5980001 (Doc. Nos. 593 and 594). Much of the history and many of the dynamics of this litigation are outlined in detail in those prior decisions, and will not be repeated here except as appropriate and necessary predicates to the rulings here.

III. Factual Allegations[6]

As the parties are already well-aware, [5] and indeed, have represented to the Court, the IPSAC alleges virtually the same underlying facts as the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' complaint, notwithstanding some (generally minor) factual distinctions, and as to be expected, authored in a different drafting style. Both pleadings set forth factual allegations concerning the Defendants' alleged conspiracy to decrease the supply of eggs and thereby increase egg prices, the Defendants' conduct undertaken in relation thereto, and the nature of the egg industry in terms of structure, production practices, and market dynamics. See Sept. 26, 2011 Mem. and Order, 2011 WL 4465355, at *1-3 (describing the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs 'core allegations). Although the two pleadings have much in common, they are nonetheless separate and distinct complaints, and the Court briefly outlines the IPSAC's main allegations as follows.

Plaintiffs—to wit, 23 individuals and three corporations—bring this action on behalf of themselves individually and as class actions on behalf of other similarly situated indirect purchasers. These individual named Plaintiffs are residents of, or incorporated in, Arizona, California, the District of Columbia, Florida, Kansas, [6] Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, or Wisconsin. IPSAC ¶¶ 19-44. They each purportedly "indirectly purchased shell eggs and/or egg products during the Class Period" and suffered economic injury by paying "supra-competitive prices for shell eggs and egg [*877] products" as a result of the Defendants' alleged violations of federal and state law. Id. ¶¶ 8, 19-44.

Plaintiffs request federal injunctive relief pursuant to Section 16 of the Clayton Act on behalf of themselves and a nationwide class. As to the state law claims, Plaintiffs, individually and on behalf of members of the proposed classes, [7] seek a variety of remedies, including, inter alia, damages, restitution, and disgorgement.

As alleged, the Plaintiffs' federal and state claims are based upon [7] the Defendants' conduct relating to > a long-running conspiracy between and among Defendants and certain unnamed co-conspirators extending from at least January 1, 2000 through the present . . . with the purpose and effect of fixing, raising, and maintaining and/or stabilizing prices and restricting output of both shell eggs and egg products (collectively, "eggs") sold indirectly to Plaintiffs and other indirect purchasers in the United States, including the Class Jurisdictions.

IPSAC ¶ 1; see also id. ¶¶ 6, 140. Defendants supposedly took "coordinated efforts" to advance the aims of the conspiracy. Id. ¶ 7. According to Plaintiffs, coordination among Defendants was facilitated by the trade group Defendants, United Egg Producers ("UEP"), United Egg Association ("UEA"), and United States Egg Marketers ("USEM"); most of the other named Defendants are allegedly members of some of these groups. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 49, 51, 137, 255, 286. Many of the Defendants' decisions, discussions, and agreements concerning various aspects

[5] The Court is separately addressing the Defendants' other pending motions to dismiss relating to the IPSAC.

[6] Except when distinctions are necessary for clarity, the general use of the term "eggs" and "egg" in this Opinion will be consistent with the IPSAC's definition, i.e., "eggs" is inclusive of "shell eggs" and "egg products."

[7] The members of these proposed classes, individuals and entities, are defined by their state of residency with respect to each of the 22 state jurisdictions at issue and who "indirectly purchased shell eggs and/or egg products produced from shell eggs produced from Defendants' or their co-conspirators' caged birds during the Class Period." Id. ¶¶ 108.

of the conspiracy apparently occurred at, or are connected to, these trade groups' committee and member meetings, and were communicated to Defendants through UEP's newsletter. [8] See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 143-47, 152-156, 158-167, 170, 173-76, 192-209, 212-17.

The Defendants' "coordinated efforts" allegedly were mechanisms to reduce the supply of eggs in terms of either egg production or availability in the egg market. By reducing the supply of eggs, Defendants apparently sought to manipulate certain features of the domestic egg market as a means of increasing egg prices. Those market features include the price inelasticity of demand for eggs, the lack of product substitutes for eggs, minimal product differentiation among eggs, and industry consolidation. Id. ¶¶ 2, 127-31. Because of these market features—and more particularly, the inelasticity of demand—"small reductions in supply can lead to sharp increases in egg prices." Id. ¶ 2.

The specific "coordinated efforts" undertaken throughout the alleged conspiracy period entailed various flock reduction, chick hatch reduction, molting, and hen disposal initiatives, as well as the adoption of and compliance with the United Egg Producers Certification Program and the United States Egg Marketers export program. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 6, 170, 219, 293.

The UEP Certification Program originated as an "animal husbandry program" that [9] mandated lower cage space densities for hens, but evolved into a program whereby egg producers would comply with the Program's guidelines in order to be able to sell or market eggs with a logo indicating that the eggs were certified under the Program. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 158, 160, 224, 298. The IPSAC alleges that initially

> [c]ertification required a producer to (a) meet [a] cage space allowance . . . [of an] [*878] average of 56 square inches per hen . . . ; (b) commit to meeting the guideline for beak trimming . . . ; (c) commit to meeting the guidelines for molting . . . ; (d) commit to meeting the guidelines for handling and transportation for both pullets and spent hens . . . ; (e) agree to be audited annually by a 3rd party independent auditor to confirm that the company is meeting guidelines; (f) agree to provide UEP with a copy of the audit results upon the completion of each audit; and (g) recognize that passing the audit is necessary in order to maintain the certification status.

Id. ¶ 159. The Certification Program's guidelines also required (or eventually came to require): reduction in chick hatch, 100% of an egg producers' egg production be in compliance with the guidelines, and a [10] prohibition on the practice of "backfilling cages to replace mortality." See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 174-75, 202, 295.

The USEM export program "aimed to have its members export shell eggs even when the export prices were lower than domestic egg prices" with the alleged purpose of "raising domestic U.S. prices through reduced supply." Id. ¶ 240. One central feature of the export program was that "USEM members that did not provide eggs for the export would agree to 'repay' or 'reimburse' the USEM members that provided eggs for the export in order to 'share' any losses incurred when exporting shell eggs at below-market prices." Id. ¶ 243.

As described in the IPSAC, the Defendants' "coordinated efforts" enabled Defendants to realize the ultimate objectives of their conspiracy: decreased egg supply, and thus higher egg prices and greater revenues and profits. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 150, 181-83, 247, 312, 323.

[8] The Court's jurisdiction over the Plaintiffs' state law claims is predicated on the diversity of the parties and supplemental jurisdiction. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 1332, 1367. HN1[] In such circumstances the Court is "required to apply the substantive law of the state whose law governs the action." [11] Spence v. ESAB Group, Inc., 623 F.3d 212, 217 (3d Cir. 2010) (citing Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78, 58 S. Ct. 817, 82 L. Ed. 1188 (1938)).

Yet many of the parties' arguments concerning the Motion at bar "put in mind of the concept of 'general' common law that prevailed in the era of Swift v. Tyson. The assumption is that the common law of the 50 states and the District of Columbia . . . is

HN2[] For [12] purposes of this Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court must accept as true all well-pleaded allegations in the complaint and must construe the pleading in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs. Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 231 (3d Cir. 2008) (citation omitted). Of course, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2), a complaint must contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," providing the defendant "fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atlantic Corp. [*879] v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (alteration in original) (citation omitted). This standard "does not require 'detailed factual allegations,'" but a "pleading that offers 'labels and conclusions' or 'a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). Consistent with Rule 12(b)(6), the Court may consider the allegations contained in the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, matters of public record and records of which the Court may take judicial notice. See Tellabs, Inc. v. Makor Issues & Rts., 551 U.S. 308, 322, 127 S. Ct. 2499, 168 L. Ed. 2d 179 (2007); [13] Pension Benefit Guar. Corp. v. White Consol. Indus., 998 F.2d 1192, 1196 (3d Cir. 1993).

HN3[] A complaint need allege "only enough facts to state a claim of relief that is plausible on its face" so as to test whether "plaintiffs . . . have . . . nudged their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible" to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. Thus, a complaint is subject to dismissal when the plaintiff fails to plead "factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556).

B. Rule 9(b)

HN4[] To determine whether a particular claim is subject to and meets the Rule 9(b) pleading standard, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals has held that "where the plaintiff grounds [her] claims in allegations of fraud—and the claims thus 'sound in fraud'—the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) apply." In re Suprema Specialties, Inc. Sec. Litig., 438 F.3d 256, 270 (3d Cir. 2006); see also Cal. Pub. Emps.' Ret. Sys. v. Chubb Corp., 394 F.3d 126, 161-62 (3d Cir. 2004). Conversely, "claims . . . that do not sound in fraud are not held to the heightened [14] pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9 (b)." In re Adams Golf, Inc. Secs. Litig., 381 F.3d 267, 273 n.5 (3d Cir. 2004) (citing Shapiro v. UJB Fin. Corp., 964 F.2d 272, 288 (3d Cir. 1992)). However, there is no requirement that fraud or mistake be a necessary element of a prima facie claim in order for Rule 9(b) to apply. See Chubb, 394 F.3d at 161 (discussing this law with respect to a section 11 Securities Act claim); see also Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103 (9th Cir. 2003) ("In cases where fraud is not a necessary element of a claim, a plaintiff may choose nonetheless to allege in the complaint that the defendant has engaged in fraudulent conduct. In some cases, the plaintiff may allege a unified course of fraudulent conduct and rely entirely on that course of conduct as the basis of a claim. In that event, the claim is said to be 'grounded in fraud' or to 'sound in fraud,' and the pleading of that claim as a whole must satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b)." (emphasis added)).

The Third Circuit Court of Appeals illustrated the application of this standard in the context of an antitrust claim in Lum v. Bank of America, 361 F.3d 217 (3d Cir. 2004), [15] abrogation on other grounds recognized by In re Insurance Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 323 n.22 (3d Cir. 2010). There, the Court of Appeals recognized that HN5[] "antitrust claims generally are not subject to the heightened pleading requirement of Rule 9(b)," but basically uniform and can be abstracted in a single [encapsulation of 'law']." Matter of Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 51 F.3d 1293, 1300 (7th Cir. 1995). Tempting as that potential shortcut might be in the face of such a significant task as presented by the Motion at hand, the Court simply cannot accept such notions.

The purpose of the Erie doctrine and "the intent of that decision was to insure that . . . the outcome of the litigation in the federal court should be substantially the same, so far as legal rules determine the outcome of a litigation, as it would be if tried in a State court." Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. York, 326 U.S. 99, 109, 65 S. Ct. 1464, 89 L. Ed. 2079 (1945). Accordingly, the Court adheres to Erie's guidance in evaluating the Defendants' Motion and exhorts the parties to do likewise as this litigation proceeds.

that Rule 9(b) applies when "[f]raud is the basis for the antitrust violation alleged." Id. at 220. In Lum, the plaintiffs claimed that the defendant banks "allegedly violated the Sherman Act by agreeing to misrepresent the 'prime rate' [as] the lowest rate available to their most creditworthy borrowers, when in fact" other lower rates [*880] below the prime rate were offered to certain other borrowers, and by allegedly giving "false information about their 'prime rate' both to consumers who were seeking credit and to leading financial publications." Id. at 220. According to the plaintiffs, such alleged fraudulent conduct inflated the prime rate, and thereby resulted in the plaintiffs "being charged higher interest." Id. The Court of Appeals determined that the "antitrust claim is . . . based on fraud—on misrepresentations in the information given to consumers and on misrepresentations in the information given to . . . independent [16] financial publications," id. at 220, and "[b]ecause plaintiffs allege that the defendants accomplished the goal of their conspiracy through fraud, the Amended Complaint is subject to Rule 9(b)." Id. at 228; see also Insur. Brokerage, 618 F.3d at 347-48 (reaffirming the Lum rationale concerning the application of Rule 9(b) in an antitrust case).

HN6[] To satisfy the Rule 9(b) pleading requirements, a complaint may either describe "the circumstances of the alleged fraud with precise allegations of date, time, or place" or may use "some [other] means of injecting precision and some measure of substantiation into their allegations of fraud." Bd. of Trs. of Teamsters Local 863 Pension Fund v. Foodtown, Inc., 296 F.3d 164, 172 n.10 (3d Cir. 2002) (citation omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Rolo v. City Investing Co. Liquidating Trust, 155 F.3d 644, 658 (3d Cir. 1998), abrogation on other grounds recognized by Forbes v. Eagleson, 228 F.3d 471, 483-84 (2000); Seville Indus. Mach. Corp. v. Southmost Mach. Corp., 742 F.2d 786, 791 (3d Cir. 1984). At the very least, "[p]laintiffs [17] also must allege who made a misrepresentation to whom and the general content of the misrepresentation." Lum, 361 F.3d at 224. This pleading standard not only gives defendants notice of the claims against them, but also combats "frivolous suits brought solely to extract settlements" from defendants and "provides an increased measure of protection for their reputations." In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1418 (3d Cir. 1997).

HN7[] While a significant purpose of Rule 9(b) is to provide notice of the precise misconduct at issue, courts "should . . . apply the rule with some flexibility and should not require plaintiffs to plead issues that may have been concealed by the defendants." Rolo, 155 F.3d at 658. Accordingly, the particularity rule is somewhat relaxed when key factual information remains within the defendant's control. Burlington Coat, 114 F.3d at 1418. "Relaxation," however, does not translate into, or otherwise authorize, boilerplate and conclusory allegations, and plaintiffs "must accompany their legal theory with factual allegations that make their theoretically viable claim plausible." Id. Allegations "based upon information and belief" are permissible, [18] "but only if the pleading sets forth specific facts upon which the belief is reasonably based." *Hollander v. Ortho-McNeil-Janssen Pharm., Inc., No. 10-cv-0836-RB, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113005, 2010 WL 4159265, at 4 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 21, 2010) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted); see also Weiner v. Quaker Oats Co., 129 F.3d 310, 319 (3d Cir. 1997) ("[A] boilerplate allegation that plaintiffs believe the necessary information 'lies in defendants' exclusive control,' if made, must be accompanied by a statement of facts upon which their allegation is based." (quoting Shapiro v. UJB Fin. Corp., 964 F.2d 272, 285 (3d Cir. 1992) (internal quotation marks omitted)); Craftmatic Securities Litigation v. Kraftsow, 890 F.2d 628, 645 (3d Cir. 1989) (determining that in cases of corporate fraud, "even under a non-restrictive application of [Rule 9(b)], pleaders must allege that the necessary information lies within defendants' control, and their allegations must be accompanied by a statement of the facts [*881] upon which the allegations are based"). In other words, even a "relaxed fit" requires some tailoring.

Likewise, HN8[] Rule 8 continues to apply even when under Rule 9(b) "[m]alice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions [19] of a person's mind may be alleged generally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). For purposes of its meaningful presence in Rule 9(b) the word "'generally' is a relative term" and "it is to be compared to the particularity requirement applicable to fraud or mistake." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1954. By way of example, "Rule 9 merely excuses a party from pleading discriminatory intent under an elevated pleading standard. It does not give him license to evade the less rigid—though still operative—strictures of Rule 8." Id.; cf. Burlington Coat, 114 F.3d at 1418 ("[P]laintiffs must still allege facts that show the court their basis for inferring that the defendants acted with 'scienter.'"); *United States ex rel. Pilecki-Simko v. Chubb Instit., 443 Fed. Appx. 754, 2011 WL 3890975, at 3 (3d Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (recognizing that under Iqbal "Rule 8 does not empower respondent to plead the bare elements of his cause of action, affix the label 'general allegation,' and expect his complaint to survive a motion to dismiss." (quoting Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1954)). [9]

V. Legal Discussion[10]

A. Article III Standing as to Four State Antitrust Claims

Defendants contend that the 26 named Plaintiffs have no standing, as would be demanded by Article III of the Constitution, to pursue antitrust claims under the laws of Iowa, Mississippi, North Dakota, and South Dakota. Specifically, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to allege an injury that would provide a basis for constitutional standing to bring claims under those four states' antitrust laws. The defense argument is that the named Plaintiffs have "failed to show that they suffered any [22] injury entitling them to bring the[] claims" because no named Plaintiffs are alleged to reside, or to have purchased eggs, in those four states. Defs.' Mot. at 5.

Plaintiffs retort that the "named [class] representatives meet normal standing requirements," [*882] and that "each of the named Plaintiffs has been injured in the same way by the same conduct that has injured other members of the proposed classes." Pls.' Resp. at 56-57 & n.39. Thus, the Plaintiffs' argument is that because Defendants have not objected to the named Plaintiffs' standing to pursue the IPSAC's federal antitrust claim and other state claims, and given that "each Plaintiff has standing to pursue an action under federal antitrust law and the laws of several states, there is no longer a question of the court having subject matter jurisdiction over the claims asserted by Plaintiffs on the basis of the facts alleged." Id. at 56, 58. Plaintiffs claim that "[i]f a named plaintiff who has standing can, under Rule 23's criteria, represent the interests of out of state class members, then once the class is certified, a plaintiff from each state will be present and 'standing' will be established." Id. at 57. Plaintiffs contend [23] that this reasoning leads to the conclusion that at the motion to dismiss stage "it is not necessary that there be named plaintiffs in each state for which damages are sought." Id. at 59.

Plaintiffs characterize the defense arguments as raising "what are really [class] certification issues in the guise of standing at this point in the litigation," id. at 57, particularly the adequacy of an out-of-state named Plaintiff to serve as class representative as to a particular state claim, id. at 56 n.39; Tr. at 91:15-21. They assert that consideration of such issues should be deferred until the class certification stage of this litigation on the grounds that the issues are "premature because class certification issues are 'logically antecedent' to questions about standing in that . . .

[9] Although it appears that Rule 9(b) is generous in permitting a generalized pleading in this regard, one treatise has noted that this sentence [20] "suggests that the [Rule's] draftsmen felt a need to qualify the first sentence to insure that it was not interpreted to require a party pleading fraud or mistake to allege the specific circumstances of fraudulent intent, knowledge of the falsity of a statement, or mistaken belief in its truth." 5A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1301.

[10] Before proceeding further on this Motion, the Court is compelled to comment upon the parties' approach to articulating and supporting their arguments. In many respects, the parties' respective work is indeed impressive. However, at other times, the parties' work product contained deficiencies ranging from a dearth of meaningful (indeed, sometimes even unreliable) citation to legal authority, erroneous characterizations of the opposing parties' arguments (or worse, ignoring those arguments or failing to comprehend and directly address their substance),and complete omission of legal analysis. In some respects this has led to additional challenges for the Court to try to evaluate the efficacy of the arguments. Certainly that effort has been made more time consuming as a result—albeit, there [21] was never quite a need to resort to soliciting all of the queen's horses and all of the queen's men to piece the parties' arguments together. Such advocacy is, fortunately, uncharacteristic of the fine professionals who have, to date, appeared in this case.

At times, the press of business can make consistently high level performance extremely difficult. The Court urges the litigators involved in this case to rededicate themselves to presenting their clients' positions in the most compelling light appropriate whenever possible and to have the well-earned and deserved confidence to forego arguments put forth merely for arguments' sake.

the 'standing' asserted by Defendants would not exist but for Plaintiffs' asserting claims on behalf of a class." Pls.' Resp. at 56-57.

Despite the divergent positions, amid the parties' arguments there is an apparent consensus that the Court may consider the standing of the named Plaintiffs at this time. Indeed, Defendants make this assertion outright, whereas embedded in the Plaintiffs' arguments is the contention [24] that named Plaintiffs have standing to bring the four states' antitrust claims at this time and have alleged that they have suffered an injury. But, to the extent that Plaintiffs invoke "logically antecedent" language and charge that Defendants are actually raising questions as to the named Plaintiffs' adequacy as class representatives, they obfuscate the narrower issue raised by Defendants' motion, namely, whether the named Plaintiffs have alleged facts that plausibly demonstrate injury-in-fact sufficient to confer upon them individual Article III standing to bring antitrust claims under the laws of Iowa, Mississippi, North Dakota, and South Dakota. [11] As to this actual issue presented as explained infra, the Court [*883] concludes that the named Plaintiffs have Article III standing to pursue causes of action under the four states' antitrust laws.

1. Requirements for Article III Standing

[11] Because the singular issue at bar is the named Plaintiffs' individual Article III standing to bring the antitrust claims under the laws of Iowa, Mississippi, North Dakota, and South Dakota, the issue presented does not arise as a result of, or invoke, issues relating to class certification or implicate the standing of proposed class members. Certainly, [25] sometimes the factors and facts considered during a class certification inquiry overlap with Article III standing, but nonetheless Article III standing is analytically and conceptually distinct from those other matters. See generally Wright & Miller, supra, §1785.1 (HN9[ ] "[B]oth standing and mootness also frequently appear as threshold requirements for the maintenance of federal class actions and must be considered in addition to the requirements of Rule 23 when deciding whether a particular action may be certified. It is important when considering the applicability of these two doctrines to class actions to keep in mind that these concepts serve both constitutional and prudential concerns: they ensure that a justiciable or live issue is presented, thereby satisfying the Article III requirement that federal courts only entertain cases or controversies, and they seek to ascertain whether the person asserting the claim is sufficiently interested so that full litigation of the issues involved can be assumed. Notably, this latter concern also is addressed through the Rule 23 requirements that the class representative be a member of the class, and be an adequate representative for the class." [26] (footnotes omitted)).

There is long-standing precedent to the effect that HN10[ ] when a "class action" is introduced into the standing equation, the requirement that a named plaintiff must have standing to bring it is unaltered. Insofar that a case "may be a class action . . . adds nothing to the question of standing, for even named plaintiffs who represent a class 'must allege and show that they personally have been injured, not that injury has been suffered by other, unidentified members of the class to which they belong and which they purport to represent.'" Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 357, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1996) (quoting Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 40, n. 20, 96 S. Ct. 1917, 48 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1976)). Simply put, "one cannot acquire individual standing by virtue of bringing a class action." See 1 A. Conte & H. Newberg, Class Actions § 2:5 (4th ed. 2002).

Accordingly, there is no reason to defer consideration of the particular Article III standing issue raised by Defendants until class certification. The succinct conclusion in In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 692 F. Supp. 2d 524, 534 (E.D. Pa. 2010), is also applicable here: "Named plaintiffs must have case or controversy standing; the potential standing problem [27] in this case is not created by class certification. Therefore class certification is not logically antecedent to the standing problem." Other courts similarly have held that HN11[ ] when the issue presented in a motion to dismiss concerns solely whether the named plaintiffs have standing to assert class action claims, the named plaintiffs' standing is a threshold issue, and there is no reason to defer the named plaintiffs' standing determination until class certification. See, e.g., In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 260 F.R.D. 143, 153-55 (E.D. Pa. 2009); Sheet Metal Workers Local 441 Health & Welfare Plan v. GlaxoSmithKline, PLC, 263 F.R.D. 205, 211 (E.D. Pa. 2009) (hereinafter "SMW"); *In re Magnesium Oxide Antitrust Litig., No. 10-5943, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121373, 2011 WL 5008090, at 10 (D.N.J. 2011); In re Packaged Ice Antitrust Litig., 779 F. Supp. 2d 642, 656 (E.D. Mich. 2011).

This Court agrees with the legal analysis articulated in Flonase and those other courts' decisions as to these issues involving named plaintiffs' standing, and determines that the rationale advanced by those courts is applicable to this case. In short, the Court concludes that it is not required to defer an Article III standing inquiry [28] as to the named Plaintiffs.

HN12[] Generally, Article III standing is a threshold issue for any case, including class actions. See Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 498, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (1975); Ehrheart v. Verizon Wireless, 609 F.3d 590, 606 (3d Cir. 2010). Article III, § 2, of the Constitution limits the federal judicial power to the adjudication of "Cases" and "Controversies." "Absent Article III standing, a federal court does not have subject matter jurisdiction to address a plaintiff's claims, and they must be dismissed." Berg v. Obama, 586 F.3d 234, 242 (3d Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks omitted). Moreover, "a plaintiff must demonstrate standing for each claim he seeks to press." DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 U.S. 332, 353, 126 S. Ct. 1854, 164 L. Ed. 2d 589 (2006). Standing as to one claim is simply not "communicative" across other separate claims for relief. Id. [12]

[*884] HN14[] The "irreducible constitutional minimum" of Article III standing entails three elements. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). Those constitutional standing requirements are: "(1) an 'injury in fact'; (2) 'a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of—the injury has to be fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant, and not the result of the independent action of some third party not before the court'; and (3) a showing that it 'be likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.'" N.J. Physicians, Inc. v. President of United States, 653 F.3d 234, 238 (3d Cir. 2011) (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560-61).

Of [30] these three elements, Defendants here place only the injury-in-fact element at issue. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals has articulated the nature of an injury that is sufficient to confer Article III standing:

> HN15[] To establish injury in fact, a plaintiff must allege an injury that is both (1) 'concrete and particularized' and (2) 'actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical.' Each of these definitional strands imposes unique constitutional requirements. An injury is "concrete" if it is "real,", or "distinct and palpable, as opposed to merely abstract," while an injury is sufficiently "particularized" if it "affect[s] the plaintiff in a personal and individual way." The second requirement—"actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical"—makes plain that if a harm is not presently or "actual[ly]" occurring, the alleged future injury must be sufficiently "imminent." Imminence is "somewhat elastic," but requires, at the very least, that the plaintiffs "demonstrate a realistic danger of sustaining a direct injury." In other words, there must be a realistic chance—or a genuine probability—that a future injury will occur in order for that injury to be sufficiently imminent.

Id. at 238 [31] (citations omitted).

HN16[] The consideration of the injury-in-fact element bears particular significance because the nature of a party's injury "is relevant to the determination of whether she has 'alleged such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues.'" Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 99 S. Ct. 2264, 60 L. Ed. 2d 846 (1979) (quoting Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 204, 82 S. Ct. 691, 7 L. Ed. 2d 663 (1962)); see also Toll Bros., Inc. v. Township of Readington, 555 F.3d 131, 138 (3d Cir. 2009) ("While all three of these elements are constitutionally mandated, the injury-in-fact element is often determinative."). "To meet the standing requirements of Article III, '[a] plaintiff must allege personal injury fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct and likely to be redressed by the requested relief.' For our purposes, the italicized words in this quotation . . . are the key ones. [This Court] ha[s] consistently stressed that a plaintiff's complaint must establish that he has a 'personal stake' in the alleged dispute, and that the alleged injury suffered is particularized as to him." Raines, 521 U.S. at 818-19 (citations omitted). Accordingly, the Court's [32] attention must turn to the named Plaintiffs to ask whether they have a personal stake sufficient to confer Article III standing based upon "their specific allegations and the relief which they seek." [*885] Goode v. City of [12] Generally, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals considers motions to dismiss for lack of standing as Rule 12(b)(1) motions. See Ballentine v. United States, 486 F.3d 806, 810, 48 V.I. 1059 (3d Cir. 2007). Defendants here have classified their motion as one to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6). Plaintiffs agree with this [29] standard of review. The Court is willing to accept the categorization of the instant challenge as a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, recognizing that it could also be evaluated as a Rule 12(b)(1) claim. The difference between Rule 12(b)(1) and Rule 12(b)(6) does not change the analysis or the outcome. See Baldwin v. Univ. of Pittsburgh Med. Ctr., 636 F.3d 69, 73 (3d. Cir. 2011) (noting that HN13[] "[a] dismissal for lack of statutory standing is effectively the same as a dismissal for failure to state a claim").

2. Named Plaintiffs' Article III Standing

Defendants argue that all named Plaintiffs in this case lack Article III standing to pursue the four states' antitrust claims "because they do not and cannot allege to have been injured under the laws of these jurisdictions." Defs.' Mot. at 5. As a fundamental premise of their argument, Defendants claim that "each of the relevant states requires at least some part of the alleged injury to have occurred in that particular state," id. at 6, and Defendants further posit that meeting this in-state injury requirement can only be accomplished either by an allegation that named Plaintiffs are residents of, or actually purchased eggs in, those states. Here, the IPSAC does neither.

While the Defendants' Motion only asks the Court to decide whether the named Plaintiffs have Article III standing as to the four specific state antitrust [33] claims, their argument—by invoking elements of those claims and arguing that those elements impose certain in-state requirements as to injury—is pecking at similar, but conceptually distinct, questions. These questions ask whether Plaintiffs have a right to maintain a private enforcement action under the states' statutes, and whether the Plaintiffs have a cause of action—which, by way of example, may ask more specifically whether the alleged injury is legally and judicially cognizable. These inquiries go to issues of whether the states' statutes authorize these named Plaintiffs to sue, issues which are sometimes cloaked in terms such as "statutory standing" or "antitrust standing," and question whether the scope of the rights of action under the four states' antitrust statutes include the Plaintiffs' alleged injury.

The Supreme Court has drawn some distinctions among these concepts. In one opinion, the Court defined "standing" and "cause of action" as follows:

> HN17[] standing is a question of whether a plaintiff is sufficiently advers[e] to a defendant to create an Art[icle] III case or controversy, or at least to overcome prudential limitations on federal-court jurisdiction; cause of action [34] is a question of whether a particular plaintiff is a member of the class of litigants that may, as a matter of law, appropriately invoke the power of the court . . . .

Davis, 442 U.S. at 239 n.18 (citation omitted). HN18[] The Court has generally described an issue of "statutory standing" as involving whether a plaintiff comes "within the 'zone of interests'" for which the cause of action was available." See Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 97, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1998) (citing Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp. v. Nat'l Assn. of R.R. Passengers, 414 U.S. 453, 465 n.13, 94 S. Ct. 690, 38 L. Ed. 2d 646 (1974)). [13] The Court has further clarified that "the merits inquiry [such as whether a private right of enforcement exists] and the statutory standing inquiry often 'overlap,'" and that the "question whether this plaintiff has a cause of action under the statute, and the question whether any plaintiff has a cause of action under the statute are closely connected—indeed, depending upon the asserted basis for lack of statutory standing, they are sometimes identical, so that it would be exceedingly [*886] artificial to draw a distinction between the two." Id. 97 n.2 (citation omitted). Nonetheless, questions of Article III standing are distinguishable [35] from both concepts.

Indeed,HN20[] it is necessary for the Court to distinguish Article III standing issues from "statutory standing" and cause of action issues because "the question whether a plaintiff states a claim for relief 'goes to the merits' in the typical case, not the justiciability of a dispute, and conflation of the two concepts can cause confusion." Bond v. United States, 131 S. Ct. 2355, 2362, 180 L. Ed. 2d 269 (2011) (citation omitted); cf. Sullivan, 667 F.3d at 307 & n.35 ("Statutory standing [i.e., "the possession of a viable claim or right to relief, not to a jurisdictional requirement,"] is distinct from jurisdictional standing in that 'Article III standing is required to establish a justiciable case or controversy within the jurisdiction of the federal courts,' whereas 'lack of antitrust standing affects a plaintiff's ability to recover, but does not implicate the subject matter jurisdiction of the [36] court.'" (quoting Gerlinger v. Amazon.com Inc., 526 F.3d 1253, 1256 (9th Cir. 2008)); id. at 349 n.15 (Jordan, J., dissenting) ("Whether a party has standing under Article III is a distinct inquiry from whether the party may assert a cause of action under state or federal law. . . . [T]he Supreme Court made clear that a party may have standing under Article III, but fail to assert a cause of action under state law.").

The Supreme Court's analysis continues:

> HN21[] It is firmly established in our cases that the absence of a valid (as opposed to arguable) cause of action does not implicate subject-matter jurisdiction, i.e., the courts' statutory or constitutional power to adjudicate the case. . . . '[J]urisdiction . . . is not defeated . . . by the possibility that the averments might fail to state a cause of action on which petitioners could actually recover.' Rather, the district court has jurisdiction if "the right of the petitioners to recover under their complaint will be sustained if the Constitution and laws of the United States are given one construction and will be defeated if they are given another," unless the claim "clearly appears to be immaterial and made solely for the purpose [37] of obtaining jurisdiction or where such a claim is wholly insubstantial and frivolous."

Steel Co., 523 U.S. at 89 (quoting Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682, 685, 66 S. Ct. 773, 90 L. Ed. 939 (1946) (citations omitted)). HN22[] The Supreme Court has "criticized the implications of treating the validity of a cause of action as jurisdictional. . . . Under that approach, each element of every cause of action would have a legitimate claim to being a jurisdictional requirement—essentially eviscerating the distinction between the jurisdictional and merits inquiry (and requiring a court to dismiss a claim for lack of jurisdiction whenever the plaintiff does not prevail)." Nesbit v. Gears Unlimited, Inc., 347 F.3d 72, 80 (3d Cir. 2003) (citation omitted) (discussing Steel Co., 523 U.S. 83, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210). An exception arises when a claim is "so insubstantial, implausible, foreclosed by prior decisions of this Court, or otherwise completely devoid of merit as not to involve a federal controversy." Steel Co., 523 U.S. 83, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Nesbit, 347 F.3d at 80.

Thus, even if Defendants are correct that the four states' statutes require an intrastate injury—either due to in-state residency or in-state purchase of eggs—such [38] an argument is beside the point. HN23[] An Article III standing inquiry simply does not require considering the elements of a state claim as "jurisdictional prerequisites." To inject the condition that Plaintiffs must satisfy certain elements of the [*887] state antitrust claims into a constitutional standing analysis would result in an impermissible out-of-the-box merits inquiry. "[T]he Article III requirement of remediable injury in fact . . . (except with regard to entirely frivolous claims) has nothing to do with the text of the statute relied upon." Steel Co., 523 U.S. at 97 n.2. [14]

As it happens, the Article III constitutional standing criterion is met here as to the four states' antitrust claims. The IPSAC alleges that the named Plaintiffs paid artificially inflated prices for eggs because of the Defendants' conspiracy. [15] That is, the named Plaintiffs allegedly personally purchased eggs at artificially inflated prices—a [14] Cf. 2 Moore et al., Federal Practice § 12.30 (3d ed. 2011) (HN24[] "Whether a statutory provision that establishes a threshold for relief is jurisdictional or goes to the merits determines whether a failure to comply with the provision is grounds for dismissal (at any time in the litigation) under Rule 12(b)(1), or whether a failure to meet the threshold is merely a basis for summary judgment or for dismissal for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6), matters that are subject to very different procedural rules and limits. Under the "bright line" rule of Arbaugh v. Y & H Corp., [federal] statutory threshold requirements [39] should not be treated as jurisdictional unless Congress has clearly stated that they are.").

[15] See, e.g., IPSAC ¶ 8 ("Plaintiffs . . . have been forced to pay supra-competitive prices for shell eggs and egg products and, thus, as a result of Defendants' illegal actions, have suffered antitrust injury."); id. ¶ 18 ("[E]ach Plaintiff purchased shell eggs and/or egg products in the state in which they reside or conduct business and suffered an economic injury as a result of Defendants' illegal conduct described in this Complaint."); id. ¶¶ 359, 411, 476, 490 ("As a direct and proximate result of Defendants' unlawful and anticompetitive practices, including combinations and contracts to restrain trade and monopolize the relevant markets, Plaintiff[s] . . . have been injured in their business and/or property in that they paid supra-competitive, artificially inflated prices for shell eggs and egg products.").

monetary injury—which constitutes actual harm. Cf. Associated Gen. Contractors of Calif. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n.31, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) (HN25[] "[T]he focus of the doctrine of 'antitrust standing' is somewhat different from that of standing as a constitutional doctrine. Harm to the antitrust plaintiff is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact . . . ."). After all, "[m]onetary harm is a classic form of injury in fact. Indeed, it is often assumed without discussion." Danvers Motor Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 432 F.3d 286, 293 (3d Cir. 2005) (citation omitted). Furthermore, this injury purportedly was caused by the Defendants' alleged conspiratorial conduct which named Plaintiffs complain violated the [40] four states' laws.

This injury can be redressed, if granted, by the relief sought by named Plaintiffs, which includes, inter alia, monetary damages to compensate for their financial harm as a result of conspiracy. See, e.g., IPSAC ¶¶ 9, C, D, E (describing relief requested). [16] Cf. D.R. Ward Constr. Co. v. Rohm and Haas Co., 470 F. Supp. 2d 485, 492-93 (E.D. Pa. 2006) (finding [41] that constitutional standing to bring certain state antitrust claims was met because "Plaintiffs allege that they paid inflated prices for products with plastics additives due to an overcharge on plastics additives which was passed on to them from the intervening links within the distribution chain, that plaintiffs' overpayment for products containing [*888] plastic additives was caused by the conspiracy among defendants to charge inflated prices for plastics additives, and that judicial relief will compensate plaintiffs for these injuries, restoring plaintiffs to the position they were in prior to the price-fixing scheme"). [17]

Moreover, the named Plaintiffs' four state antitrust claims at issue here are not wholly immaterial, frivolous, or devoid of merit for purposes of constitutional standing. The defense argument that the named Plaintiffs lack injury sufficient to confer standing is contingent upon the claim that the four states' laws do not allow named Plaintiffs to recover for their alleged injuries arising from the Defendants' alleged conspiratorial conduct. Defendants argue that "each of the relevant states requires at least some part of the alleged injury to have occurred in that particular state," and Defendants cite to certain statutory language and one case in support of their construction of the laws. See Defs.' Mot. at 6 & n.3.

However, on their faces the four states' statutory provisions can plainly be construed to not require in-state residency or an in-state purchase, but rather only that some of the Defendants' conduct [44] occurred, or the effects of which were felt, within the state—thereby violating the statute. [18] Indeed, [*889] when read literally, the [16] Furthermore, such relief is afforded in private enforcement actions brought under the four statutes. See Iowa Code § 553.12 (". . . may bring suit to . . . 2. Recover actual damages . . ."); Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-9 (" . . . may recover all damages of every kind sustained by him or it . . ."); N.D. Cent. Code § 51-08.1-08 (". . . may bring an action for . . . damages sustained . . ."); S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1-14.3 (". . . may bring an action for . . . damages sustained . . .").

[17] To the extent that named Plaintiffs seek the redress of injunctive relief in relation [42] to any of their federal or state claims, it is less clear from the IPSAC's allegations whether those Plaintiffs have Article III standing for such relief. HN26[] Article III standing is to be considered in light of the specific allegations and the relief sought, which with respect to injunctive relief requires consideration of whether a plaintiff is "likely to suffer future injury." Lyons, 461 U.S. at 102; see also Penn. Prison Soc. v. Cortes, 508 F.3d 156, 165- 68 (3d Cir. 2007) (discussing case law concerning injury-in-fact and likelihood of facing personal injury); Clark v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 736 F. Supp. 2d 902, 924-35 (D.N.J. 2010) (dismissing for lack of Article III standing the portion of a California Unfair Competition Law claim seeking injunctive relief because plaintiff had cancelled her health insurance policy and thus "no longer face[d] a threat of continued harm with regard to [Defendant's] disclosures about the . . . policy"). The IPSAC does not explicitly allege facts that named Plaintiffs face the prospect of future injury, and the IPSAC only alleges that the named Plaintiffs suffered past harm. See, e.g., IPSAC ¶ 19 ("This Plaintiff indirectly purchas*ed* shell eggs [43] and/or egg products during the Class Period and was injured as a result of Defendants' illegal conduct." (emphasis added)). Thus, if Plaintiffs seek leave to amend the IPSAC, clarifying amendments may be appropriate with respect to Article III standing for injunctive relief.

[18] Not only the federal courts embrace the plain meaning rule of statutory construction, but so, too, do the appellate courts of the states here concerned. See Murphy v. Millennium Radio Group, LLC., 650 F.3d 295, 302 (3d Cir. 2011) (HN27[] "'Because it is presumed that Congress expresses its intent through the ordinary meaning of its language, every exercise of statutory interpretation begins with an examination of the plain language of the statute. . . . When the statute's language is plain, the sole language of these respective provisions authorizes broad private enforcement, and thereby can be read to afford relief to all persons whose injuries may have occurred outside of the state, but are causally related to an antitrust violation. As to these four statutes, Defendants fail to discount the existence of possible constructions of those statutes other than their own. They cite no legal authority to support their construction of the statutes, nor do they point to legal authority foreclosing alternative interpretations of those states' laws.

For example,HN28[] under the Iowa Competition Law, "[t]he state or a person who is injured or threatened with injury by conduct prohibited under this chapter may bring suit" for various specified forms of relief. Iowa Code § 553.12. Such prohibited conduct includes a "contract, combination, or conspiracy between two or more persons shall not restrain or monopolize trade or commerce in a relevant market." Id. § 553.4. These provisions can be read to permit a broad class of persons to maintain a civil enforcement action so long as they suffer an injury resulting from a violation of the law. Upon an unadorned reading of the Competition Law, and contrary to the Defendants' position, a cognizable injury under the statute does not appear to be exclusively restricted to injuries of residents, or injuries sustained intrastate.

HN29[] The North Dakota Antitrust Act contains similarly broad language: "[a] person threatened with injury or injured in that person's business or property by a violation of this chapter may bring an action for appropriate injunctive or other equitable [47] relief, [and] damages sustained." N.D. Cent. Code § 51-08.1-08(2). The Act prohibits "[a] contract, combination, or conspiracy between two or more persons in restraint of, or to monopolize, trade or commerce in a relevant market." Id. § 51-08.1-02. As with the Iowa Competition Law, a cognizable injury does not appear to be restricted to residents' injuries, or injuries experienced due to transactions occurring within North Dakota's borders.

HN30[] South Dakota's antitrust law also grants a private right of action for a person injured by a violation of that antitrust provision and does not contain statutory language that explicitly requires an intrastate injury. Under that law, "[a] person injured in his business or property by a violation of this chapter may bring an action for appropriate injunctive or other equitable relief, damages sustained and, as determined by the court, taxable costs and reasonable attorney's fees." See S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1-14.3. The law also provides: "A contract, combination, or conspiracy between two or more persons in restraint of trade or commerce any part of which is within this state is unlawful." Id. § 37-1-3.1 (emphasis added).

Furthermore, as to these [48] three states' antitrust laws, there is a dearth of interpretative authority with respect to whether and to what extent, if any, there is an "intrastate" requirement as to a presumptive plaintiff's injury in order for that injury to be cognizable. With respect to the Iowa Competition Law specifically, one commentator notes that an "unusual feature of both Sections 4 and 5 of the Iowa Competition Law is their explicit reference to 'relevant market,' which is defined in Section 3 of the law to mean 'the geographical area of actual or potential competition in a line of commerce, all or any part of which is within this state.' Neither [*890] the phrase 'potential competition' nor the phrase 'within this state' is statutorily defined or judicially interpreted as yet . . . . [T]he latter may be a basis

Fareway Stores, Inc., 762 N.W.2d 142, 146 (Iowa 2009)* ("'When the language of a statute is plain and its meaning clear, the rules of statutory construction do not permit us to search for meaning beyond the statute's express terms.'" for restricting state jurisdiction." 1 ABA Section of Antitrust Law, State Antitrust Practice and Statutes, ch. 18-1, § 17.a. (4th ed. 2009) (emphasis added) (footnotes omitted). [19]

HN31[] The Mississippi antitrust law states: "[a]ny person, natural or artificial, injured or damaged by a trust and combine as herein defined, or by its effects direct or indirect, may recover all damages of every kind sustained by him or it and in addition a penalty of five hundred dollars ($500.00)." Miss. Code Ann. §75-21-9. The statute defines a "trust or combine," as "a combination, contract, understanding or agreement, expressed or implied, between two or more persons, corporations or firms or association of persons or between any one or more of either with one or more of the others, when inimical to public welfare and the effect of which would be . . . [t]o restrain trade." Id. §75-21-1. Like the other three previously discussed statutes, one plausible construction of this Mississippi statutory language does not require that cognizable injury be limited to residents' injuries or injuries suffered within the state. [20]

In support of their construction of the Mississippi antitrust law, Defendants cite *In re Microsoft Corporation Antitrust Litigation, No. MDL 1332, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15612, 2003 WL 22070561, at 1-2 (D. Md. Aug. 22, 2003), for the proposition that "under Mississippi law, following [52] Standard Oil Co. of Ky. v. State, 107 Miss. 377, 65 So. 468, 471 (Miss. 1914), that in order for a claim to come within the scope of the Mississippi antitrust statute, a plaintiff must allege "at least some conduct . . . [*891] which was performed wholly intrastate." Defs.' Mot. at 6 n.3. However, this lone legal authority fails to buttress the Defendants' proposed construction of the law. As a starting point, the Defendants' characterization of Microsoft is erroneous. Indeed, the ellipses in the quote stand in the place of the words "by Microsoft." That is, the Microsoft Court determined that Mississippi requires some of the defendant's conduct offensive to the antitrust statute be "performed wholly intrastate." Moreover, the decision simply does nothing to support the Defendants' contention as to the permissible scope of a presumptive plaintiff's injuries for recovery under the law. Whether a defendant's conduct need be "performed wholly intrastate" is an entirely distinct issue from whether a plaintiff's injury need to have occurred in-state—i.e., where the effect of the conduct transpires. Defendants raise no legal authority other than Microsoft to support their construction of the law.

[19] As to the South Dakota antitrust law, some federal courts have determined that in order to allege that a plaintiff is entitled to bring suit thereunder, it must be alleged that either a part of the conspiracy or the conspiracy's [49] restraint of trade occurred within South Dakota. See In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 350 F. Supp. 2d 160, 172 (D. Me. 2004) ("The statutory language is ambiguous as to whether it is a part of the conspiracy or a part of the trade or commerce that must be within the state. Nevertheless, it is logical to assume that the state intended its antitrust coverage to be as broad as possible. Therefore, I conclude that the plaintiffs need only allege that a part of the trade or commerce occurred within South Dakota."); In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 602 F. Supp. 2d 538, 581 (M.D. Pa. 2009) ("[A] plaintiff must allege only that defendant's conduct produced anticompetitive effects within South Dakota"); In re Intel Corp. Microprocessor Antitrust Litig., 496 F. Supp. 2d 404, 414 (D. Del. 2007) (following other courts' determinations that "allegations that part of the trade or commerce occurred within South Dakota were sufficient to bring the related conspiracy into the reach of South Dakota law"); In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., 516 F. Supp. 2d 1072, 1098 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (agreeing "that South Dakota's antitrust statute should [50] be read to cover unlawful anticompetitive conduct, as long as any part of it 'is within [South Dakota]'—i.e., as long as any part of it takes place or has an effect within the state").

[20] For purposes of this analysis, the Court need not decide at this time whether the Mississippi [51] statute is ambiguous or whether its plain meaning applies. (This is true for all four state antitrust statutes at issue for that matter). However, one Mississippi court has noted that one statutory provision sets forth the legislative intent of the antitrust statute, which may have some bearing on the construction of the statute:

> Even if the [antitrust] statute was ambiguous, which it clearly is not [with respect to the Attorney General's enforcement of the law], the legislative intent of the act is clearly to 'suppress' all trust and monopolies. Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-39 (1972). The Mississippi Code states "[the Mississippi Antitrust Act] shall be liberally construed in all courts to the end that trusts and combines may be suppressed, and the benefits arising from competition in business preserved to the people of this state."

Hood ex rel. State v. BASF Corp., No. 56863, 2006 WL 308378, at *4 (Miss. Ch. Jan. 17, 2006) (unpublished).

In sum, it appears [53] that there is an absence of definitive legal authority as to whether vel non an extraterritorial injury that might be traced to an antitrust violation is cognizable under the Iowa, Mississippi, North Dakota, and South Dakota antitrust statutes. Either construction of those four laws is possible and neither can be said to be strained or without appropriate attribute. Indeed, HN32[] some "[s]tate antitrust laws can extend to transactions involving interstate commerce" and "some state statutes, or judicial interpretations of those provisions may expressly address the extraterritorial effects of a state's antitrust law." 1 ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments, 625 (6th ed. 2007). Moreover, the existence of these statutory construction issues certainly suggests that the named Plaintiffs' claims pursuant to these states' antitrust laws cannot be deemed foreclosed by case law, or otherwise completely devoid of merit. See Nesbit, 347 F.3d at 80 ("'[D]ismissal for lack of jurisdiction is not appropriate merely because the legal theory alleged is probably false, but only because the right claimed is so insubstantial, implausible, foreclosed by prior decisions of this Court, or otherwise [54] completely devoid of merit as not to involve a federal controversy.'" (quoting Growth Horizons, Inc. v. Delaware Cnty., 983 F.2d 1277, 1280-81 (3d Cir.1993) (internal quotation marks omitted). And, accordingly, the Plaintiffs have Article III standing to bring these claims, and the Court denies the Defendants' motion in this respect. [21]

B. Utah Antitrust Claim[22]

[*892] The Court concludes that it is appropriate to dismiss the Plaintiffs' Utah antitrust claims arising from damages that occurred before May 1, 2006. According to Defendants, May 1, 2006 is the effective date of an amendment to the Utah Antitrust Act—specifically to amend HN34[] Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-918(1)—which authorized indirect purchasers to recover for [56] violations of the Act. Such statutory provisions are sometimes known in antitrust parlance as an "Illinois Brick repealer" amendment because such plaintiffs could not, or were not explicitly authorized by law to, recover prior to the amendment. Several courts have observed the nature of the Utah amendment is akin to an Illinois Brick repealer. See California v. Infineon Techs. AG, No. C 06-4333, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120058, 2008 WL 1766775, at *4-5 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 15, 2008) (concluding that the amendment to the Utah Antitrust Act was an Illinois Brick repealer and "that indirect purchaser standing was not available prior to 2006"); In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131002, 2010 WL 5094289, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 8, 2010) (reaching the same conclusion). HN35[] In Utah, a "statute is not to be applied retroactively unless the statute expressly declares that it operates retroactively." Goebel v. Salt Lake City S. R.R. Co., 2004 UT 80, 104 P.3d 1185, 1197-98 (Utah 2004). [57] Defendants contend that because the Utah Antitrust Act did not permit indirect purchasers to recover for antitrust injuries prior to the amendment's effective date, dismissal of the Plaintiffs' claims for damages suffered prior to May 1, 2006 is warranted.

Plaintiffs do not dispute the Defendants' characterization of Utah law in any of the aforementioned respects; nor do they dispute the cited legal authority. Indeed, Plaintiffs do not raise any challenge to the defense contention that Plaintiffs cannot recover for claims arising from damages accruing before May 1, 2006 under the Utah Antitrust Act.

[21] In light of this analysis, the Court is not proceeding to further consider prudential standing concerns at this time. The Court concludes such analysis is also not required at present because Defendants have only challenged the named Plaintiffs' Article III constitutional standing. Furthermore, HN33[] there is no requirement that prudential standing issues must always be resolved before the merits—and certainly not, as in this case, when the parties have not framed prudential standing issues explicitly or suitably for the Court's consideration. See Bowers v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 346 F.3d 402, 416 (3d Cir. 2003) (recognizing that although the Supreme Court in Steel Co. "specifically indicated that 'Article III jurisdiction is always an antecedent question'" that decision "should not be understood as requiring courts to answer all questions of 'jurisdiction,' [55] broadly understood, before addressing the existence of the cause of action sued upon." (footnote omitted) (citing Steel Co., 523 U.S. at 97 n.2)); Jordon v. AG of the United States, 424 F.3d 320, 325 n.8 (3d Cir. 2005) (recognizing same); St. Matthew's Slovak Roman Catholic Congregation v. Most Reverend, 106 F. App'x 761, 766 n.5 (3d Cir. 2004) (unpublished) (recognizing same).

[22] Defendants have characterized this argument as a "standing" issue by claiming that "Plaintiffs have no standing to sue for damages arising before May 1, 2006." Defs.' Mot. at 9. Based on the Court's prior discussion of Article III constitutional standing, "statutory standing," and "antitrust standing," the Court refrains from using the term "standing" in the context of this issue to avoid possible confusion about the precise legal issue at bar.

Accordingly, the Court determines that it is appropriate to grant the Defendants' motion to dismiss the Plaintiffs' claims under the Utah Antitrust Act arising from damages that occurred prior to May 1, 2006. [23]

C. Scope of the IPSAC's Definition of "Egg Products"

Defendants raise a challenge to the scope of the IPSAC's definition of "egg products" with respect to "manufactured products incorporating processed eggs such [59] as baked goods and mayonnaise" on [*893] the basis of Associated General Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983), and its progeny. The IPSAC defines egg products as "either shell eggs substitutes such as liquid, frozen, and dry eggs, or manufactured products incorporating processed eggs such as baked goods and mayonnaise." IPSAC ¶ 124. Defendants seek to partially dismiss certain of the Plaintiffs' federal and state antitrust claims with respect to alleged injuries relating to purchases of manufactured products incorporating processed eggs.

In response, Plaintiffs agree that the IPSAC definition of egg products is "overly inclusive" by including "manufactured products incorporating processed eggs such as baked goods and mayonnaise," and further "agree to limit the scope of egg products in this action to 'shell substitutes such as liquid, frozen, and dry eggs,' the portion of the definition of egg products set forth in the [IPSAC] that Defendants do not challenge." Pls.' Mot. at 62. Given the Plaintiffs' agreement to narrow the definition, the Court grants without prejudice the Defendants' Motion as to this issue. Plaintiffs may seek leave to proceed with [60] their proposed amendment with the appropriate motion or equivalent procedure to achieve pleading precision on this point as by for example, stipulation, and the Court expects that the amendment or stipulation will be respectful of the discussions among counsel on this point.

D. Separate Egg Products Conspiracy

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have alleged a separate conspiracy relating to egg products which should be dismissed for failure to state a claim. However, because this challenge hinges?at least to some degree—upon the definition of "egg products" in the IPSAC, and given that the definition of egg products will be amended pursuant to Plaintiffs' aforementioned agreement to do so, it would be improvident for the Court to consider this argument at this time in the absence of the actual amendment or stipulation. Accordingly, the Court denies the Motion in this respect without prejudice to Defendants to raise these or similar arguments based upon the amended definition of "egg products," if the circumstances so warrant. [24]

[23] To the extent that the defense may have obliquely raised the issue in connection with its Motion, the Court does not address whether the Plaintiffs' claims arising from conduct that occurred prior to May 1, 2006 may be dismissed. The Defendants' briefing and oral argument did not present or frame this question in a sufficient fashion that would allow the Court to address it. Similarly, [58] Plaintiffs have articulated only that they oppose the Defendants on this score.

Defendants cite but a single legal authority in connection with this issue, In re Aftermarket Filters Antitrust Litigation, No. 08-cv-04883, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104114, 2009 WL 3754041 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2009). However, that case only addressed the question of whether "any claim for relief prior to the effective date of [the Utah] statute[] must be dismissed" and not the separate and distinct question of whether dismissal of claims arising from conduct occurring before May 1, 2006 was warranted. Mem. of Law in Support of Defs.' Joint Mot. to Dismiss the Consolidated Indirect Purchaser Comp., at 17, Aftermarket Filters, No. 08-cv-04883 (Doc. No. 196) (N.D. Ill. Feb. 2, 2009) (emphasis added). Because this issue is largely undefined, particularly in light of the defense's failure to proffer any other supporting legal authority or analysis, the Court declines to undertake the burden of deciding this issue in its present posture.

[24] To determine whether it might be appropriate to raise this or a similar issue again following the Plaintiffs' agreement to amend the definition of "egg products" [61] and whether a Rule 12(b)(6) motion might be the appropriate means to do so, the Defendants should refer to the Court's prior decision on a motion in which most of the same Defendants here raised similar issues directed to the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' pleading in this multidistrict litigation. See Oct. 14, 2011 Mem. and Order, 2011

E. State Consumer Protection Claims

Defendants move to dismiss all of the Plaintiffs' alleged consumer protection claims under nine states' laws: California, the District of Columbia, Florida, Kansas, Massachusetts, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, and West Virginia.

1. California

Defendants mount a dual challenge to the Plaintiffs' claim under the California Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"). First, Defendants argue that the alleged claim fails to satisfy both Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 8 and 9(b) because the IPSAC does not contain adequate factual allegations of deceptive conduct and instead only relies on alleged antitrust violations. Second, [62] [*894] Defendants contend that, even if the federal pleading standards are met, the IPSAC provides no grounds for the Plaintiffs' claim for restitution under the UCL.

HN36[] The UCL prohibits engaging in "unfair competition," which is defined, inter alia, as "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. "[A] person who has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition" may bring suit for such a violation. Id. § 17204; see also id. § 17203; Californians for Disability Rights v. Mervy's, LLC, 39 Cal. 4th 223, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 57, 138 P.3d 207, 210 (Cal. 2006) (explaining how the Section 17204 "prescribes who may sue to enforce the UCL"); Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 4th 310, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d 877, 885 (Cal. 2011) ("To satisfy the narrower standing requirements . . . , a party must now (1) establish a loss or deprivation of money or property sufficient to qualify as injury in fact, i.e., economic injury, and (2) show that that economic injury was the result of, i.e., caused by, the unfair business practice or false advertising that is the gravamen of the claim." (emphasis in original)). Remedies include [63] injunctive relief, civil penalties, and those remedies that "may be necessary to restore to any person in interest any money or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by means of such unfair competition." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203; see also In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20, 29 (Cal. 2009) ("[P]revailing plaintiffs are generally limited to injunctive relief and restitution." (quoting Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937, 943 (Cal. 2003)). [25]

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs cannot satisfy the pleading standards in alleging a UCL claim because Plaintiffs "are clearly attempting to restyle a supply control theory into [a] consumer fraud claim[]" by "dress[ing] their antitrust case in the clothes of a consumer fraud claim" and that certain allegations in the IPSAC of fraudulent [64] conduct "are insufficient to comply with Federal Rule 8." Defs.' Mot at 22-23. Plaintiffs counter by arguing that the Defendants' alleged antitrust violations are the grounds for their UCL claim, and that the requisite alleged antitrust violation is the unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice.

Indeed, HN38[] antitrust violations can constitute "unfair competition" under the UCL. See Sheet Metal Workers Local 441 Health & Welfare Plan v. GlaxoSmithKline, PLC, 737 F. Supp. 2d 380, 406 (E.D. Pa. 2010) (hereinafter "SMW") (finding that defendants "by filing sham lawsuits designed to prevent the entry of generic alternatives into the market for Wellbutrin SR," which plaintiffs allege to be "an unfair and illegal business practice," is "anti-competitive conduct [that] falls under the broad scope of the CUCL"); see also Korea Supply, 63 P.3d at 943 ("Section 17200 'borrows' violations from other laws by making them independently actionable as unfair competitive practices," and allows "'a practice [to be] deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law.'" (quoting Cel-Tech Commc'ns Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d

WL 4945864 (denying without prejudice the motion to dismiss a distinct antitrust claim as to egg products in the direct purchaser class action plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint).

[25] HN37[] Once a plaintiff has satisfied the injury requirement under Section 17203 of the UCL, "[s]uch injuries satisfy the plain meaning of section 17204's 'lost money or property' requirement, qualify as injury in fact, and would permit a plaintiff to seek an injunction against the offending business practice even in the absence of any basis for restitution." Kwikset, 246 P.3d at 895.

*[895] 527, 540 (Cal. 1999)); 1 State Antitrust Practice, supra, [65] ch. 6-61 to -62, §§ 1.a., l.c. (describing the UCL to "operate[] as a consumer protection law with antitrust applications" and that "claims under the UCL often accompany, or arise out of, alleged antitrust violations"). Defendants do not directly dispute that the UCL prohibits antitrust violations. Instead, they contend, more generically, that some consumer fraud causes of action "require Plaintiffs to plead more than simply the elements of an antitrust violation," such as deceptive conduct and reliance. Defs.' Reply at 8. Be that as it may, the Defendants do not demonstrate that such circumstances exist here, and they do not identify such additional elements for a UCL claim arising from an alleged antitrust violation.

The Court agrees that it is an analytically sensible and entirely fair operation of pleading standards and substantive law to conclude that the IPSAC's allegations giving rise to alleged antitrust violations also give rise to the Plaintiffs' UCL claim. Plaintiffs have alleged that they suffered injury in fact and lost money or property due to the Defendants' practices of "unfair competition." See, e.g., IPSAC ¶ 332 ("As a direct and proximate result of Defendants' unlawful [66] practices, including combinations and contracts to restrain trade and allocate relevant markets, Plaintiff [and class members] have been injured in their business and/or property in that they paid more for shell eggs and egg products than they otherwise would have paid in the absence of Defendants' unlawful conduct."). The IPSAC alleges, supported by other factually specific allegations concerning the contours of the conspiracy, that Defendants committed "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act[s] or practices[s] in violation of" the UCL by "engaging in a continuing unlawful trust and concert of, the substantial terms of which were to fix, raise, stabilize, and maintain prices of, allocate markets for, and restrain and manipulate the supply of shell eggs and egg products at supra-competitive levels." IPSAC ¶¶ 329-30. More specifically, such conduct entails the Defendants purportedly advancing the goals of their antitrust conspiracy through eight alleged "collective actions," which included various flock reduction and early molting initiatives, and actions taken in connection with the United Egg Producers Certification Program and the United States Egg Marketers export program. [67] Whatever else it may be, if it occurred, the unlawful price-fixing alleged in the IPSAC surely would constitute unfair competition within the meaning of the UCL.

Defendants have not contended that the IPSAC fails to allege an antitrust violation for purposes of bringing a UCL claim (except with respect to injuries relating to certain egg products), nor have they raised any arguments that Plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently allege their separate California antitrust claim under Section 16720, California Business and Professions Code. See IPSAC ¶¶ 325-28. Thus, the Defendants' argument does not support the conclusion that Plaintiffs have failed to meet the Rule 8 pleading requirements as to their UCL claim.

Contrary to the Defendants' contention otherwise, case law from the Third Circuit does not require that the heightened pleading standard under Rule 9(b) be applied to the Plaintiffs' UCL claim. This particular alleged violation of the UCL is simply not grounded in fraud nor does it "sound in fraud." The Plaintiffs' UCL claim arises from the alleged conduct—namely, the alleged conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs as allegedly advanced by the eight collective actions—which, as [*896] alleged, [68] is not based on fraudulent acts. [26] As such, the UCL claim does not entirely rely on a course of fraudulent conduct, in contrast to the Third Circuit's Lum case, so as to require the application of Rule 9(b).

As to the Defendants' second challenge to the Plaintiffs' UCL claim, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged their eligibility for seeking restitution. The California Supreme Court has explained:

> HN39[] Restitution under section 17203 [of the UCL] is confined to restoration of any interest in "money or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by means of such unfair competition." (Italics added.) A restitution order against a defendant thus requires both [69] that money or property have been lost by a plaintiff, on the one hand, and that it have been acquired by a defendant, on the other. . . . But the economic injury that an unfair business practice occasions may often involve a loss by the plaintiff without any [26] Even Defendants argue that insofar that the IPSAC alleges that the logo for the Animal Care Certified program was misleading, "these allegations do not form the basis of Plaintiffs' consumer fraud claims" and that "Plaintiffs' causes of action make it exceedingly clear that Plaintiffs are seeking damages resulting only from the allegedly 'artificially high' egg prices and are concerned with Defendants' conduct only as it relates to the alleged reduction in the supply of eggs." Defs.' Mot. at 39-40.

> corresponding gain by the defendant, such as, for example, a diminishment in the value of some asset a plaintiff possesses. (See Overstock.com, Inc. v. Gradient Analytics, Inc. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 688, 716, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 29 [a plaintiff who alleged that a defendant's defamatory statements diminished its assets and reduced its market capitalization adequately alleged UCL standing]; Huntingdon Life Sciences, Inc. v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA, Inc. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1228, 1240, 1262, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 521 [a plaintiff whose home and car were vandalized by defendant animal rights protesters adequately alleged lost property under Prop. 64].)

Kwikset Corp., 246 P.3d at 895 (parentheticals and brackets in original).

Thus, the issue at hand is whether Plaintiffs have connected their alleged loss—which they claim is the loss of "money by paying more than they should have for eggs as a result of Defendants' unfair method of competition," Pls.' Resp. at 24—with [70] a "corresponding gain" by and of the Defendants. Defendants argue that while such a gain might be demonstrated by alleging that Plaintiffs "purchased eggs originating from any of the Defendants," Plaintiffs have failed to do so. Defs.' Mot. at 33. For example, an allegation that a plaintiff "paid money to a retailer to purchase [defendant] Microsoft's product based on false or misleading statements on the product package" would demonstrate eligibility for restitution because it can be inferred that the plaintiffs' payment for the product to the retailer benefitted Microsoft. Shersher v. Superior Court, 154 Cal. App. 4th 1491, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 634, 636 (Cal. Ct. App. 2007). Presumably, Defendants here argue that these Plaintiffs have not met the Shersher standards.

However, legal authority also exists to propose that a "corresponding gain" may be able to be a more broadly-defined benefit conferred upon the defendant by a plaintiff. Troyk v. Farmers Group, Inc., 171 Cal. App. 4th 1305, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 589 (Cal. Ct. App. 2009), reflects reasoning that HN40[] restitution under the UCL applies traditional restitution principles:

> " 'A person who has been unjustly enriched at the expense of another is required [*897] to make restitution to the other.' [71] (Rest., Restitution, § 1.) 'A person is enriched if he receives a benefit at another's expense. (Id., com. a, p. 12.) The term "benefit" "denotes any form of advantage." (Id., com. b, p. 12.) Thus, a benefit is conferred not only when one adds to the property of another, but also when one saves the other from expense or loss. Even when a person has received a benefit from another, he is required to make restitution "only if the circumstances of its receipt or retention are such that, as between the two persons, it is unjust for him to retain it." (Id., com. c, p. 13.)' (Ghirardo v. Antonioli [14 Cal. 4th 39, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687, 924 P.2d 996 (Cal. 1996)]) 'For a benefit to be conferred, it is not essential that money be paid directly to the recipient by the party seeking restitution.' (California Federal Bank v. Matreyek (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 125, 132, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58 . . . .)" . . . .

Id. at 617 (quoting County of Solano v. Vallejo Redevelopment Agency, 75 Cal. App. 4th 1262, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 41, 52 (Cal. Ct. App. 1999)).

In this manner, the factual allegations that relate to the Plaintiffs' California unjust enrichment claim are relevant as to the UCL claim. As discussed in greater detail infra, in relation to the arguments focused on the Plaintiffs' unjust [72] enrichment claims—and specifically the general discussion concerning the conferral of benefits upon Defendants [27]—there are factual allegations in the IPSAC that suggest that Defendants acquired a "corresponding gain" resulting from the Plaintiffs' alleged purchase of eggs at an over-inflated price due to the Defendants' alleged unfair business practice. See IPSAC ¶¶ 332-34. [28] Accordingly, at this time, the Court cannot conclude as a matter

[27] The Court notes that Defendants have not sought dismissal of the California unjust enrichment claim on the basis of failure to adequately plead the "conferral of a benefit," although, as discussed infra, the defense does challenge certain of the unjust enrichment claims on that and other grounds.

[28] The Court reads the reference to Arizona in the last sentence of the referenced pleading paragraph to be a typographical error, given that these allegations are essentially cookie-cutter as to each state unjust enrichment claim:

of law that the Plaintiffs' claim for restitution under the UCL must be dismissed. The Court denies the Defendants' motion to dismiss.

2. District of Columbia

Defendants contest the Plaintiffs' claim under the District of Columbia Consumer Protection and Procedures Act ("DCCPPA") for failure to state a claim under the pleading standards of Rules 8 and 9(b) because, according to Defendants, "more than simply the elements of an antitrust violation" must be alleged. Defendants also argue that a DCCPPA claim requires pleading unconscionable conduct but the IPSAC fails to sufficiently plead that element.

HN41[] The DCCPPA prohibits "unlawful trade practices." The Act defines "trade practice" to be "any act which does or would create, alter, repair, furnish, make available, provide information about, or, directly or indirectly, solicit or offer for or effectuate, a sale, lease or transfer, of consumer [*898] goods or services." D.C. Code § 28-3901(a)(6). The Act enumerates a [74] non-exclusive list of specific practices that constitute violations of the Act. See D.C. Code § 28-3904; District Cablevision Ltd. Partnership v. Bassin, 828 A.2d 714, 723 (D.C. 2003). Additionally, "the statute obviously contemplates that procedures and sanctions provided by the Act will be used to enforce trade practices made unlawful by other statutes." See Atwater v. District of Columbia Dep't of Consumer & Regulatory Affairs, 566 A.2d 462, 466 (D.C. 1989); see also Bassin, 828 A.2d at 723 ("Trade practices that violate other laws, including the common law, also fall within the purview of the CPPA.").

Just as the California UCL encompasses violations of the California antitrust law, HN42[] violations of the District of Columbia Antitrust Act of 1980, D.C. Code § 28-4501, et seq., can constitute unlawful trade practices within the purview of the DCCPPA. See Marbry v. EMI Music Distrib., Civil Action No. 3731-00, 129 Daily Wash. L. Rptr. 2065, 2067 (D.C. Super. Ct. June 12, 2001) ("That a price fixing violation of the [District of Columbia] Antitrust Act is also a violation of the CPPA is apparent from the purpose and text of the consumer protection statute.") [29]; Chocolate, 602 F. Supp. 2d at 584 [75] ("[T]he DCCPPA subsumes a Sherman Act claim and creates an indirect purchaser cause of action for conspiratorial price fixing regardless of whether defendants have engaged in deceptive conduct."); In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1126 (N.D. Cal. 2008) ("In light of this case law expansively interpreting the DCCPPA as a 'comprehensive' statute designed to remedy 'all improper trade practices,' the Court finds that plaintiffs may maintain a claim for defendant's alleged price-fixing under the statute . . . ." (citing Bassin, 828 A.2d at 722-23)); New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 183 ("Since Bassin declares that the DCCPPA can be used as a remedy for improper trade practices that violate other laws, the statute is broad enough to cover the alleged illegal [antitrust] conspiracy here.").

Likewise, the Court's rationale which led to the conclusion that Defendants had not demonstrated that Plaintiffs had failed to plead a California UCL claim also applies here. Plaintiffs have alleged that their DCCPPA claim is based upon the alleged antitrust violation. See, e.g., IPSAC ¶ 340-41 (alleging that "Defendants agreed to, and did in fact, act in restraint of trade or commerce by unfairly and deceptively fixing, raising, stabilizing, and maintaining prices of,

> The Defendants were able to achieve their increased revenues and profits from their sales of [73] eggs to California indirect purchasers because the demand for eggs by indirect purchasers is relatively price inelastic, as Defendants understood. Thus, the ability of Defendants to profit from their sales of eggs to indirect purchasers in California was connected to and due to the increased prices paid for Defendants eggs by indirect purchasers in [California].

Id.

[29] Marbry explicitly addressed a defense argument on a motion to dismiss an indirect purchaser class action on a theory of a price-fixing conspiracy among distributors of compact discs ("CDs"), which contended that the DCCPPA "protects against deceptive trade practices, not unfair competition. Since plaintiff has not alleged any misrepresentation that deceived her, [76] the consumer protection count, defendants say, must be dismissed." Marbry, 129 Daily Wash. L. Rptr. at 2067. The Court disagreed, noting, inter alia, that the "CPPA's list of unlawful trade practices is not exclusive and includes trade practices made illegal by later-enacted statutes. . . . If selling CDs is a trade practice, price fixing CDs, just as plainly, is an improper trade practice under the CPPA for which a consumer has the right to bring a lawsuit . . . ." Id.

allocating markets for, and restraining and manipulating the supply of shell eggs and egg products at supracompetitive levels" and that this "conduct constitutes 'unlawful trade practices'" under the DCCPPA). Defendants do not raise any objections to the [77] effect that Plaintiffs have inadequately alleged an antitrust violation. [30] [*899] Defendants also have raised no valid arguments that an antitrust violation by itself cannot comprise an unlawful trade practice within the meaning of the DCCPPA. The DCCPPA prohibits "unlawful trade practices," and, although certain of the enumerated "unlawful trade practices" as defined by D.C. Code § 28-3904 may require the element of unconscionable conduct to be alleged, Defendants have not identified any authority that suggests that an allegation of "unconscionable conduct" is required in order for a violation of the Antitrust Act to constitute an unlawful trade practice under the DCCPPA for pleading purposes. [31] Indeed, credible judicial analysis rejects this exact argument. See *Aftermarket Filters, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104114, 2009 WL 3754041, at 9 [78] (HN43[]) "[T]he District of Columbia Consumer Protection Act . . . does not require a showing of concealment or deception to support a claim."). Consequently, both of the Defendants' arguments—that Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for relief consistent with the demands of Rule 8 and that Plaintiffs "must plead that the defendant engaged in 'unconscionable' conduct" under the DCCPPA—are unpersuasive.

Furthermore, the Court's reasoning as to why a Rule 9 pleading standard does not apply to the Plaintiffs' UCL claim applies to the DCCPPA claim as well. The Plaintiffs' claim for the DCCPPA violation is based upon factual allegations that [80] do not entirely rely on fraud, and thus the Plaintiffs' DCCPPA claim does not sound in fraud so as to require the application of Rule 9 under Third Circuit case law.

Neither of the Defendants' objections to the Plaintiffs' DCCPPA claim are meritorious, and the Court denies the Defendants' Motion as to the Plaintiffs' DCCPPA claim.

3. Florida

Defendants move to dismiss the claim that their alleged conduct violated the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA"). They argue this claim is deficient under the pleading standards [*900] of Rules 8 and

[30] Plaintiffs have brought a District of Columbia antitrust claim (see IPSAC ¶¶ 336-39) which they argue is the basis for their DCCPPA claim. See Pls.' Resp. at 5 ("[T]he CPPA claims in this case . . . are based on violation of another D.C. law (its antitrust law) . . . ."). Defendants do not argue that Plaintiffs have failed to state a D.C. antitrust claim, except with respect to injuries relating to certain egg products.

[31] The two cases upon which Defendants rely for this position are inapposite. Neither of those cases, In re Flash Memory Antitrust Litigation, 643 F. Supp. 2d 1133 (N.D. Cal. 2009) and In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litigation, 527 F. Supp. 2d 1011 (N.D. Cal. 2007), addressed the question of whether a violation of the D.C. antitrust law is an unlawful trade practice under the DCCPPA.

For example, in Flash Memory, that court determined that the antitrust price-fixing theory at issue could be brought under the DCCPPA because the Act "proscribes the imposition of prices that are 'unconscionably high,' i.e., prices that are 'unreasonably favorable' to the seller, where 'the buyer did not have a meaningful choice of alternatives under the circumstances.'" Id. at 1157-58. In reaching this [79] conclusion, the court relied on a District of Columbia Court of Appeals case that addressed D.C. Code § 28-3904(r), a DCCPPA provision that prohibits "mak[ing] or enforc[ing] unconscionable terms or provisions of sales or leases." Id. at 1158 (citing Ford v. Chartone, Inc., 908 A.2d 72 (D.C. 2006)). Because the court's attention was directed to those issues, Flash Memory did not speak to whether a violation of the D.C. antitrust law is an unlawful trade practice, which is what Plaintiffs argue here and, as discussed above, does not require alleging unconscionable conduct.

Moreover, to the extent that Defendants, by citing D.C. Code § 28-3904(r), contend that Plaintiffs have brought a DCCPPA claim pursuant to that provision, see Pls.' Reply at 16, they are in error. Plaintiffs confirmed at oral argument that their DCCPPA claim rests on the Defendants' alleged violation of the D.C. Antitrust Act and not subdivision (r). See Tr. at 95:22-96:2; 96:17-21.

9(b), contending that a claim under the FDUTPA requires Plaintiffs to plead allegations of fraudulent conduct, even when the unfair method of competition is alleged to be antitrust violations.

HN44[] The FDUTPA prohibits "[u]nfair methods of competition, unconscionable acts or practices, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce." Fla. Stat. § 501.204(1). The three elements of a FDUTPA claim are "'(1) a deceptive act or unfair practice; (2) causation; and (3) actual damages.'" *In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., No. 08-CV-3301, 815 F. Supp. 2d 867, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109572, 2011 WL 4464823, at 13 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 26, 2011) (quoting Rollins, Inc. v. Butland, 951 So. 2d 860, 869 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2006)).

HN45[] The [81] first element of the claim encompasses antitrust violations because "the acts proscribed by subsection 501.204(1) include antitrust violations." Mack v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 673 So. 2d 100, 104 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996); see also In re Florida Microsoft Antitrust Litig., No. 99-27340, 2002 WL 31423620, at *2-3 (Fla. Cir. Ct. Aug. 26, 2002) (citing same); *Marco Island Cable, Inc. v. Comcast Cablevision of South, Inc., No. 2:04-CV-26-FTM-29DNF, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45116, 2006 WL 1814333, at 6 (M.D. Fla. July 3, 2006) (citing same); *Flonase, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109572, 2011 WL 4464823, at 14 (citing same); *RDK Truck Sales & Serv. Inc. v. Mack Trucks, Inc., No. 04-4007, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43245, 2009 WL 1441578, at 20 (E.D. Pa. May 19, 2009) (citing same). Antitrust violations constitute FDUTPA violations, in part, because "section 501.204(2) provides that in determining what constitutes an 'unfair method of competition' under subsection 501.204(1), 'due consideration and great weight shall be given to the interpretations of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts relating to s. 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. 45(a)(1).' Section 5(a)(1) of the FTC Act encompasses violations of the antitrust laws." Mack, 673 So. 2d at 104. [82] It follows that Florida law recognizes that a FDUTPA claim may arise from a violation of antitrust laws such as the Sherman Act and other state antitrust laws because such a violation in and of itself is an unfair method of competition. See id. (citing F.T.C. v. Ind. Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 454, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986)). [32]

Thus, contrary to the Defendants' arguments otherwise, no allegations of fraudulent conduct must be pled in order for Plaintiffs to sufficiently allege under Rule 8 a FDUTPA claim based upon an antitrust violation. Indeed, once again, Plaintiffs are alleging that the Defendants' alleged antitrust violation is itself the unfair method of competition prohibited by the FDUTPA. See, e.g., Pls.' Resp. at 4-5; IPSAC ¶¶ 348-49 (alleging that "Defendants agreed to, and did in fact, act in restraint of trade or commerce by unfairly and [83] deceptively fixing, raising, stabilizing, and maintaining prices of, allocating markets for, and restraining and manipulating the supply of shell eggs and egg products at supracompetitive levels . . . ." and such conduct "constitute[s] unfair and deceptive trade practices in violation of [the FDUTPA]"). Defendants do not contend that Plaintiffs wholly have failed to sufficiently allege antitrust violations. Accordingly, their argument that the IPSAC fails to state a FDUTPA claim falls short. [33]

[*901] The Court denies the Defendants' motion as to the FDUTPA claim.

4. Kansas

Defendants argue for the dismissal of the Plaintiffs' claim under the Kansas Consumer Protection Act ("KCPA") because "Kansas law does not permit Plaintiffs to reformulate or rephrase their antitrust claims as [KCPA] claims" and thus the IPSAC's allegations do [84] not support a cognizable claim under the KCPA. Defs.' Mot at 28-29. They also contend that Plaintiffs fail to state a KCPA claim in satisfaction of the pleading standards of Rules 8 and 9(b).

[32] Although Defendants generally argue that "consumer fraud causes of action require Plaintiffs to plead more than simply the elements of an antitrust violation," Defs.' Reply at 8, they have not provided any authority that this is true under Florida law in circumstances where an alleged antitrust violation is the purported unfair method of competition.

[33] Additionally, for the same reasons the Court already discussed in relation to the consumer protections claims of California and the District of Columbia, the Plaintiffs' factual allegations that give rise to their antitrust and consumer protection claims under Florida law do not sound in fraud so as to require the application of Rule 9 under Third Circuit case law.

HN46[] The KCPA prohibits a supplier from "engag[ing] in any deceptive act or practice in connection with a consumer transaction." Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-626(a). "Consumer transaction" is defined as "a sale, lease, assignment or other disposition for value of property or services within this state . . . to a consumer; or a solicitation by a supplier with respect to any of these dispositions." Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-624(c). The Act sets forth a non-exclusive list of conduct that "whether or not any consumer has in fact been misled" constitutes "deceptive acts or practices." Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-626(b). One such "deceptive act or practice" is "the willful failure to state a material fact, or the willful concealment, suppression or omission of a material fact." Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-626(b)(3). Plaintiffs claim this provision as the basis for their KCPA claim. Pls.' Resp. at 21.

HN47[] For Plaintiffs to establish their KCPA claim based upon Section 50-626(b)(3) they must allege these elements: (1) Plaintiffs were consumers; [85] (2) Defendants were suppliers; (3) Defendants willfully failed to state, concealed, suppressed, or omitted, a certain matter or information; and (4) that certain matter or information was a material fact. See Pattern Instructions Kan. 4th Civil § 129.04; *see also Cole v. Hewlett Packard Co., 84 P.3d 1047, at 7 (Kan. Ct. App. 2004). The "use of 'willful' in the KCPA includes an intent to harm the consumer." Unruh v. Purina Mills, LLC, 289 Kan. 1185, 221 P.3d 1130, 1139 (Kan. 2009). For purposes of Section 50-626(b)(3), a "'matter is material if it is one to which a reasonable person would attach importance in determining his choice of action in the transaction involved.'" Farrell v. Gen. Motors Corp., 249 Kan. 231, 815 P.2d 538, 548 (Kan. 1991) (quoting Griffith v. Byers Constr. Co., 212 Kan. 65, 510 P.2d 198, 205 (Kan. 1973)). However, "K.S.A. 50-626(b)(3) does not proscribe mere nondisclosure of a material fact." Heller v. Martin, 14 Kan. App. 2d 48, 782 P.2d 1241, 1244 (Kan. App. 1989); see also Pattern Instructions Kan. 4th Civil § 129.04.

In contrast to the California, the District of Columbia, and Florida claims discussed above, Plaintiffs contend that their KCPA claim is "not merely a restatement of [their] Kansas antitrust claims." Pls.' [86] Resp. at 20. Rather, Plaintiffs contend in their briefing that their KCPA claim is one arising from a subset of the broader conduct attributed to the alleged conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs:

> Defendants engaged in unfair and deceptive acts by public[ly] claiming to reduce their flock size pursuant to recommended animal husbandry guidelines—which are by definition guidelines promoting the health of the chickens and quality of the eggs—to obtain consumer-oriented certification from the UEP . . . when in fact the guidelines were nothing more than a cover for Defendants' illegal conspiracy to limit supply.

[*902] Id. However, the Court need not consider whether a KCPA claim arising from such delineated conduct states a claim for relief consistent with the applicable pleading standards because the Plaintiffs' proffered description of their claim does not comport with the IPSAC.

As alleged in the IPSAC, the KCPA claim is premised upon allegations relating to the entire conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs. As alleged, "Defendants agreed to, and did in fact, act in restraint of trade or commerce by unfairly and deceptively fixing, raising, stabilizing, and maintaining prices of, allocating [87] markets for, and restraining and manipulating the supply of shell eggs and egg products at supracompetitive levels" and "[b]y reason of the foregoing, Defendants and their co-conspirators have engaged in conduct that constitutes deceptive and unconscionable acts and practices" under the KCPA. IPSAC ¶¶ 367-68.

A fair reading of these allegations suggests that the purported deceptive activity is broadly comprised of the entire alleged agreement to reduce the supply of eggs and the collective various alleged actions undertaken to advance the object of the agreement. These allegations (as well as the other IPSAC allegations specifically pled as to the KCPA claim which allege, inter alia, the effects of the conduct, unequal bargaining power, and so forth, see id. ¶¶ 369-72—none of which invoke any element of a KCPA claim under Section 50-626(b)(3)) simply do not plausibly suggest that Defendants willfully failed to state, concealed, suppressed, or omitted a certain matter or information to which a reasonable person would attach importance in determining his choice of action in the transaction involved.

Given that the Plaintiffs' KCPA claim as articulated in the operative pleading does not [88] satisfy Rule 8, the Court grants the Defendants' motion to dismiss this claim without prejudice. [34]

5. Massachusetts

Defendants attack Plaintiffs' Massachusetts Consumer Protection Act ("G.L. ch. 93A") claim because of the Plaintiffs' failure to allege compliance with the Act's pre-suit notification procedures. They also claim that Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim consistent with the demands of Rules 8 and 9(b) because Plaintiffs do not sufficiently plead allegations of fraudulent conduct and that allegations of antitrust violations alone are inadequate to allege a violation of G.L. ch. 93A.

HN48[] Generally, a plaintiff is required to provide a defendant with a written demand for relief of the specific deceptive practices claimed before commencing a suit for a G.L. ch. 93A violation. The relevant statutory language provides:

> At least thirty days prior to the filing of any such action, a written demand for relief, identifying the claimant [89] and reasonably describing the unfair or deceptive act or practice relied upon and the injury suffered, shall be mailed or delivered to any prospective respondent.

Mass. Gen. Laws. ch. 93A § 9(3); see also In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 692 F. Supp. 2d 524, 539-40 (E.D. Pa. 2010). "A demand letter listing the specific deceptive practices claimed is a prerequisite to suit and as a special element must be alleged and proved." Entrialgo v. Twin City Dodge, Inc., 368 Mass. 812, 333 N.E.2d 202, 204 (Mass. 1975); see also Spring v. Geriatric Auth. of Holyoke, 394 Mass. 274, 475 N.E.2d 727, 735 (Mass. 1985) (citing same). [*903] However, this prerequisite does "not apply . . . if the prospective respondent does not maintain a place of business or does not keep assets within the commonwealth." Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 93A § 9(3); see also *Okoye v. Bank of New York Mellon, No. 10-11563-DPW, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82769, 2011 WL 3269686, at 4 (D. Mass. July 28, 2011).

Invoking the exception, Plaintiffs contend that the requirement of pre-suit notification does not pertain to them because the IPSAC does not allege that Defendants, as the "prospective respondents," maintain places of business or keep assets within Massachusetts. Defendants do not dispute this rebuttal. [90] Indeed, no such dispute would be sensible, given that the IPSAC plainly does not recite any factual allegations that the Defendants' places of business or assets are located in Massachusetts. Accordingly, pleading pre-suit notification is not required here.

HN49[] "A party alleging a violation of G.L. c. 93A, § 9(1), must establish (1) that the defendant has committed a violation of G.L. c. 93A, § 2; (2) injury; and (3) a causal connection between the injury suffered and the defendant's unfair or deceptive method, act, or practice." Herman v. Admit One Ticket Agency LLC, 454 Mass. 611, 912 N.E.2d 450, 454 (Mass. 2009). G.L. ch. 93A, § 2, provides that "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are . . . unlawful."

The Massachusetts Supreme Court has recognized:

> HN50[] In analyzing what constitutes unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices, which are not defined in G.L. c. 93A, this court looks to interpretations by the Federal Trade Commission and Federal courts of § 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTC Act) . . . . The Federal Trade Commission may, under § 5(a)(1) of the FTC Act, enforce the antitrust [91] laws, including the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, but it is not confined to their specific prohibitions. . . . It may bar incipient violations of those statutes, . . . , and conduct which, although not a violation of the letter or spirit of the antitrust laws, is > nevertheless either an unfair method of competition, or an unfair or deceptive act or practice . . . . To the extent that the same conduct may violate both the antitrust laws and the FTC Act, such conduct may be the subject of simultaneous parallel enforcement actions.

[34] The Court need not determine or even address whether the pleading satisfies Rule 9(b) at this time. However, the Court recognizes that Plaintiffs did not raise any objection to the Defendants' claim that Rule 9 pleading standards apply to the KCPA claim.

Ciardi v. F. Hoffmann-La Roche, Ltd., 436 Mass. 53, 762 N.E.2d 303, 309 (Mass. 2002) (citations and footnote omitted). Consistent with this rationale, the court concluded that HN51[] allegations that "in essence state that the defendants engaged in price-fixing of . . . products at artificially inflated levels to [the plaintiff's] detriment" plead an "unfair method of competition" in violation of G.L. ch. 93A. Id. [35] "Thus in Massachusetts, [*904] courts have not adhered to the premise that an indirect purchaser cannot sue the manufacturer for antitrust violations." Flonase, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 545.

This summary of Massachusetts law demonstrates that Defendants err in contending that Plaintiffs are impermissibly bringing an antitrust case restyled as a consumer protection violation under the Massachusetts Consumer Protection Act. Plaintiffs are alleging that the purported conspiracy to reduce the [93] supply of eggs and egg products and thereby artificially increase those products' prices is a G.L. ch. 93A violation. See IPSAC ¶¶ 389-90 (pleading that "Defendants agreed to, and did in fact, act in restraint of trade or commerce by unfairly and deceptively fixing, raising, stabilizing, and maintaining prices of, allocating markets for, and restraining and manipulating the supply of shell eggs and egg products at supracompetitive levels" and that as a result "Defendants and their co-conspirators engaged in '"unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices"' in knowing and willful violation of M.G.L.A c. 93A"). As the Court has already noted, Defendants do not argue that the IPSAC's allegations are insufficient to state federal and other state antitrust claims (except as to injuries relating to certain egg products), and Defendants even appear to argue that the allegations plead antitrust violations. See Defs.' Reply at 8. Given that Massachusetts allows indirect purchasers to bring what are in essence antitrust violations pursuant to G.L. ch. 93A, no allegations of fraudulent conduct must be pled in order to sufficiently allege a G.L. ch. 93A claim. [36]

In sum, the Defendants' arguments do not raise any valid basis for dismissing the Massachusetts law claim, and the Court denies their motion in this respect.

6. New Mexico

Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs insufficiently plead an "unconscionable trade practice" within the meaning of the New Mexico Unfair Practices Act ("NMUPA"), and thus fail to state a claim based upon a violation of that Act.

HN52[] The NMUPA provides: "Unfair or deceptive trade practices and unconscionable trade practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful." N.M. Stat. Ann. § 57-12-3. The Act separately defines both "unfair

[35] The court summarized the plaintiff's complaint as follows:

> The plaintiff alleges that, [92] beginning in January, 1990, the defendants conspired among themselves to restrain free trade of vitamin products by suppressing and eliminating competition. The conspiracy consisted of formal and informal collusion by the defendants to: (1) fix, increase, and maintain prices for vitamin products; (2) coordinate price increases among themselves for the sale of vitamin products; (3) allocate among themselves the volume of sales and market shares of vitamin products; (4) allocate among themselves all or part of certain contracts to supply vitamin products to various customers; and (5) refrain from submitting bids, or submit collusive, noncompetitive, and rigged bids. The effect of the defendants' alleged conduct was to restrict competition in the sale of vitamin products in Massachusetts and to force consumers to pay prices for such products that were artificially inflated.

Id. at 306-07.

[36] Furthermore, [94] because the factual allegations of the contours of the alleged conspiracy and the "collective efforts," as discussed above in relation to the other state antitrust claims, do not sound in fraud, heightened pleading under Rule 9(b) is not required.

or deceptive trade practice" and "unconscionable trade practice," but the Court need evaluate only the latter concept in order to resolve this Motion. The NMUPA defines an "unconscionable trade practice" as:

> an act or practice in connection with the sale, lease, rental or loan, or in connection with the offering for sale, lease, rental or [95] loan, of any goods or services, including services provided by licensed professionals, or in the extension of credit or in the collection of debts that to a person's detriment:
> (1) takes advantage of the lack of knowledge, ability, experience or capacity of a person to a grossly unfair degree; or
> (2) results in a gross disparity between the value received by a person and the price paid.

N.M. Stat. § 57-12-2(E) (emphasis added).

These provisions of the NMUPA appear largely undeveloped, and there is only sparse case law that has addressed either of the two definitions of "unconscionable trade practice." The law has developed [*905] enough, however, for the Court to appreciate that HN53[] an inquiry into either definition is necessarily fact-intensive, and a multitude of factors may be appropriate for consideration as to whether an act or practice is an "unconscionable trade practice."

For example, as to the second definition of an "unconscionable trade practice" involving "gross disparity" between price paid and "value received," Defendants have argued that in Hernandez v. Wells Fargo Bank N.M., N.A., 2006 NMCA 18, 139 N.M. 68, 128 P.3d 496, 499 (N.M. Ct. App. 2005), the Court's single use of "benefit received" in place of "value [96] received" is meaningful. See id. (concluding that Plaintiff "does not raise an evidentiary issue that there was a gross disparity between the overdraft fee and the benefit received"). That is, according to Defendants, "value received" is defined as "benefit received." Expanding upon this notion, Defendants argue that, assuming the truth of the IPSAC's allegations, the pleading highlights that egg consumers actually receive the benefit of the bargain even when purchasing eggs at certain artificially elevated prices because there are "many benefits of eggs" and the high inelasticity of consumer demand serves to reflect consumers' perceived benefits from eggs. Defs.' Reply at 17 (citing IPSAC ¶¶ 127, 145, 181); see also IPSAC ¶ 128. In economic terms, Defendants appear to argue that consumers derive a high level of utility from eggs, and that this utility is the measure of "benefit received" and, thus, of "value received."

However, the Defendants' reading of Hernandez and arguments based upon that reading are not entirely, much less inexorably, justified. Rather, the Hernandez usage of "benefit received" can be read as merely a synonym for "value received," not intended to convey any substantive [97] difference of "message." Indeed, although the Hernandez Court uses the term "benefit received," it does not further elaborate or provide any discussion that might illuminate the meaning of the term, including whether vel non it implicates consumer utility. [37]

[37] What Defendants appear to discount in Hernandez is that court's recognition that the value received for a good or service must be evaluated by considering the specific factual circumstances of the good or service and its purchase. This includes considering factors specific to the production side of that good or service, including, inter alia, the provider's costs, industry regulation, general industry practices, actions of the providers' competitors, and a providers' business plan and marketing strategy. See Hernandez, 128 P.3d at 498 (discussing how, at summary judgment, a defendant bank's proffered affidavit attesting to these factors in relation to the service at issue, a bank's overdraft fees, "meets the requirements of a prima facie showing that there is no gross disparity between the value received by Plaintiff and the fee he paid for that value"). Additionally, LensCrafters, Inc. v. Kehoe, No. 28,145, 2010 N.M. App. Unpub. LEXIS 426, 2010 WL 4924992, at *8 (N.M. Ct. App. Oct. 15, 2010), [98] writ. cert. granted, 150 N.M. 560, 263 P.3d 902 (N.M. 2011), suggests that facts concerning the nature of the specific good or service at issue might also require evaluation. See id. (determining that, to the extent that the NMUPA might apply to a lease of equipment, as a subpart of a lease for office space, to withstand summary judgment, a plaintiff would need to present "evidence to evaluate the equipment portion of the sublease agreement or any apportionment of the overall lease to the equipment" in order to determine whether a provision allowing for a $12,000 per year increase in rent "was a gross disparity in value between what [plaintiff] was paying in rent and what he received under the equipment portion of the agreement"). These cases, then, suggest that a variety of factors may be appropriately considered in determining whether gross disparity between value received and price paid exists.

At this time, the Court need only address whether the IPSAC's allegations plead the second definition of "unconscionable trade practice" under the NMUPA. [*906] In this respect, Plaintiffs plead that the act or practice that constitutes the unconscionable trade practice in violation of the NMUPA is that "Defendants [99] agreed to, and did in fact, act in restraint of trade or commerce by unfairly and deceptively fixing, raising, stabilizing, and maintaining prices of, allocating markets for, and restraining and manipulating the supply of shell eggs and egg products at supracompetitive levels." IPSAC ¶¶ 440-41. The IPSAC alleges that "as a direct and proximate result of" that conduct, "Plaintiff and the New Mexico Indirect Purchaser State Class have been injured." Id. ¶ 445. The IPSAC alleges that Plaintiffs "have been injured in their businesses and property in that they have paid more for shell eggs and processed egg products than they otherwise would have paid in the absence of Defendants' unlawful conduct." Id. ¶ 314; see also id. ¶ 8 (alleging that the injury is the payment of "supra-competitive prices for shell eggs and egg products").

Defendants quantify the alleged artificially-inflated price increase by example, alleging that Defendants attributed their alleged export program—one of the eight collective actions allegedly advancing the conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs—to a 40% increase in the domestic prices of eggs. See id. ¶ 247 ("As the Wall Street Journal reported on September 23, [100] 2008: The industry group [UEP] itself credited the [export] campaign with helping to boost domestic egg prices, which rose more than 40% in the next year."). In light of these allegations, and given this early stage of the litigation, the Court concludes that dismissal of the NMUPA claim as a matter of law is not warranted at this time. [38]

The case law discussed above demonstrates that a fact-intensive inquiry is required to determine whether Defendants' engaged in conduct related to the sale of eggs that resulted in a "gross disparity" between the benefit received and the price paid. Moreover, although Defendants have proposed one approach to pleading gross disparity (one not entirely supported by the legal authority cited), they have not identified any case law specific to the NMUPA that has held that gross disparity between value received and price paid cannot be sufficiently pled [101] based upon factual allegations that Plaintiffs paid artificially-inflated prices for eggs as a result of a supply-side price-fixing conspiracy. [39]

Indeed, there is case law that has concluded otherwise. Several federal courts that have considered similar factual allegations (some even less specific than those in the IPSAC) have determined that such allegations are sufficient to state a NMUPA claim based upon gross disparity and are sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss. See, e.g., TFT-LCD, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1127 (denying motion to dismiss NMUPA claim based [102] upon allegations that "defendants' conspiracy resulted in significant artificial increases in the [*907] price of LCDs, which resulted in a 'gross disparity' between the value received by the New Mexico plaintiff and class and the prices paid by them for LCD"); Chocolate, 602 F. Supp. 2d at 586 (determining HN54[] allegations that plaintiffs "paid 'artificially inflated prices for' chocolate candy products . . . , that defendants stabilized prices at noncompetitive levels . . ., and that plaintiffs 'paid more for [chocolate candy] products than they would have paid in the absence of [the alleged] antitrust violations,'" were adequate to plead a claim under the NMUPA); *Aftermarket Filters, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104114, 2009 WL 3754041, at 9 ("[P]laintiffs plead that they paid 'supra-competitive' prices for the filters they received. This allegation is sufficient to allege gross disparity [for purposes of pleading an NMUPA claim].").

Accordingly, the Court denies the motion to dismiss the NMUPA claim. [40]

[38] Because the allegations that give rise to the NMUPA claim are based upon the second definition of "unconscionable trade practice" and those allegations do not sound in fraud, consideration of Rule 9(b) is not required here for reasons previously discussed supra in relation to other state antitrust claims.

[39] Although Defendants contend that the NMUPA requires Plaintiffs to plead "something more than merely alleging that the price of a product was unfairly high," the case cited by Defendants in support of this position does not appear to have reached that conclusion based upon consideration of New Mexico law. See In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig., 527 F. Supp. 2d 1011, 1029-30 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (citing the consumer protection laws of Arkansas and the District of Columbia for the proposition that "pleading unconscionability requires something more than merely alleging that the price of a product was unfairly high").

7. New York

Defendants move to dismiss the Plaintiffs' claim brought pursuant to General Business Law § 349 of the New York Consumer Protection Statute. They argue that Plaintiffs do not state such a claim for relief because, inter alia, the IPSAC does not contain factual allegations that plausibly suggest that the conduct purported to be the basis for the Section 349 claim caused the Plaintiffs' harm.

HN55[] General Business Law § 349 prohibits "[d]eceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state." N.Y. Gen. Bus. Laws § 349(a). As the Court of Appeals of New York has summarized:

> A plaintiff under section 349 must prove three elements: first, that the challenged act or practice was consumer-oriented; second, that it was misleading in a material way; and third, that the plaintiff suffered injury as a result of the deceptive act. Whether a representation or an omission, the deceptive practice must be "likely to mislead a reasonable consumer acting reasonably under the circumstances." A deceptive practice, however, need not reach the level of common-law fraud to be actionable under section 349. In addition, [104] a plaintiff must prove "actual" injury to recover under the statute, though not necessarily pecuniary harm.
> Further, as we have repeatedly stated, reliance is not an element of a section 349 claim. The plaintiff, however, must show that the defendant's "material deceptive act" caused the injury.

Stutman v. Chem. Bank, 95 N.Y.2d 24, 731 N.E.2d 608, 611-612, 709 N.Y.S.2d 892 (N.Y. 2000) (internal citations omitted).

HN56[] "[T]o qualify as a prohibited act under the statute, the deception of a consumer must occur in New York." Goshen v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 98 N.Y.2d 314, 774 N.E.2d 1190, 1195, 746 N.Y.S.2d 858 (N.Y. 2002). Furthermore, "[a]n antitrust violation may violate section 349, but only if it is deceptive." New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 197; see also New York v. Daicel Chem. Indus., Ltd., 42 A.D.3d 301, 303, 840 N.Y.S.2d 8 (N.Y. App. Div. 2007) (" . . . General Business Law § 349 . . . only applies to anti-competitive conduct that is premised on the deception of consumers."); In re Automotive Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 515 F. Supp. 2d 544, 554 (E.D. Pa. 2007) ("A number of courts and commentators have observed that the absence of the reference to unfair competition or unfair practices in § 349 'indicates that anticompetitive conduct [105] that is not premised on consumer deception is [*908] not within the ambit of the statute.'" (quoting Leider v. Ralfe, 387 F. Supp. 2d 283, 295 (S.D.N.Y. 2005)).

Plaintiffs argue that their Section 349 claim arises from "Defendants deceptively hid[ing] their price-fixing conspiracy from Plaintiffs, affecting the broad public interest in New York[,] . . . by provid[ing] pretextual reasons for rising prices, citing, among other reasons, animal husbandry guidelines as the reason for curtailments in supply." Pls.' Resp. at 26. However, this theory does not plainly emanate from the actual allegations pled by the Plaintiffs as to the Section 349 claim as articulated in the IPSAC. To the extent that the IPSAC arguably invokes concepts of "hiding" and "pretext," it appears that to do so Plaintiffs primarily rely on the vague, convenient catch-all adverb "deceptively" that does appear in their pleading.

The IPSAC alleges that "Defendants agreed to, and did in fact, act in restraint of trade or commerce by unfairly and deceptively fixing, raising, stabilizing, and maintaining prices of, allocating markets for, and restraining and manipulating the supply of shell eggs and egg products at supracompetitive [106] levels." IPSAC ¶ 454 (emphasis added). As alleged, this "knowing and willful conduct of the Defendants . . . constitutes materially misleading consumer-oriented deceptive acts or practices within the meaning of N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349

[40] In light of the Court's determination that Plaintiffs may proceed with their NMUPA claim at this time, the Court does not determine whether Plaintiffs have also stated such a claim pursuant to the first definition of an "unconscionable [103] trade practice."

[because] Defendants' actions materially misled New York consumers and resulted in consumer injury and broad adverse impact on the public at large, and harmed the public interest of New York State in an honest marketplace in which economic activity is conducted in a competitive manner." Id. ¶ 455. According to the IPSAC, "[a]s a result of Defendants' illegal conduct Plaintiffs and members of the New York Indirect Purchaser State Class paid supra-competitive, artificially inflated prices for shell eggs and egg products" and Plaintiffs are "seeking actual damages only for their injuries." Id. ¶¶ 457-58.

Plaintiffs defend these allegations by claiming that there is case law to suggest that allegations that plead "in a conclusory fashion that defendants engaged in deceptive conduct" in order to conceal the alleged price-fixing conspiracy satisfies the requisite pleading standard. Pls.' Resp. at 25. But this argument is at odds with and is directly contradicted [107] by the principle that HN57[] in order to sufficiently plead a claim a plaintiff must provide "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (citation omitted). Certainly, "[w]hile legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950. Arguably, some factual allegations in support of the Section 349 claim that are not conclusory may be nesting in the IPSAC—but it is not clear from the IPSAC or the Plaintiffs' briefing on which precise factual allegations the Section 349 claim relies (and, accordingly, whether they plausibly suggest a Section 349 claim).

Regardless, there are insufficient factual allegations in the IPSAC to plausibly suggest that the alleged "hiding" of the antitrust conspiracy from Plaintiffs through pretextual explanations for rising egg prices actually caused the Plaintiffs' alleged injury. "HN58[] [W]hile the statute does not require proof of justifiable reliance, a plaintiff seeking compensatory damages must show that the defendant engaged in a material deceptive act or practice that caused actual, although not [108] necessarily pecuniary, harm." Oswego Laborers' Local 214 Pension Fund v. Marine Midland Bank, N.A., 85 N.Y.2d 20, 647 N.E.2d 741, 745, 623 N.Y.S.2d 529 (N.Y. 1995); Small v. [*909] Lorillard Tobacco Co., Inc., 94 N.Y.2d 43, 56, 720 N.E.2d 892, 698 N.Y.S.2d 615 (N.Y. 1999) (recognizing that actual harm must be caused by a defendant's material deceptive act or practice). In other words, "deception does not, in and of itself, constitute an injury." *Cox v. Microsoft Corp., 809 N.Y.S.2d 480 (Table), 10 Misc. 3d 1055[A], 2005 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 2712, 2005 WL 3288130, at 4 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005).

As Defendants correctly argue, the IPSAC does not plausibly suggest that the purported pretextual explanations for the rising egg prices are the actual cause of the Plaintiffs' alleged harm of paying artificially-inflated prices for eggs. Indeed, as this articulation of the Plaintiffs' Section 349 claim demonstrates, Plaintiffs would have paid artificially-inflated egg prices before Defendants allegedly began to offer pretextual reasons for those increases. Moreover, there are no factual allegations, or causation theories proffered, by Plaintiffs that would suggest that the Defendants' alleged misleading conduct caused artificially-inflated egg prices after the challenged conduct allegedly occurred. Because this element [109] of a Section 349 claim has not been sufficiently pled, Plaintiffs cannot have stated a claim that Defendants have violated Section 349 for purposes of meeting the demands of Rule 8. [41] The Court grants without prejudice the Defendants' motion to dismiss this claim.

8. North Carolina

Defendants urge that the Plaintiffs' claim under Section 75-1.1 of the North Carolina Unfair and Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("UDTPA") be dismissed on the grounds that the IPSAC does not allege facts suggesting that a plaintiff detrimentally relied on a deceptive statement or misrepresentation. They assert this claim is deficiently pled under Rules 8 and 9(b).

HN59[] Section 75-1.1 of the UDTPA provides: "Unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, are declared unlawful." N.C. Gen. Stat. §75-1.1(a). Certain violations of state and federal law can constitute a per se violation of Section 75-1.1. See generally Noel L.

[41] Given the Court's decision, the Court need not address at this time whether Rule 9(b) applies here.

Allen, North Carolina Unfair Business Practice § 9.04 (3d ed. 2004) (Oct. 2011 Supplement) (discussing per se violations [110] of Section 75-1.1).

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has found that HN60[] one such per se violation is a violation of federal antitrust law. See ITCO Corp. v. Michelin Tire Corp., 722 F.2d 42, 48 (4th Cir. 1983) ("[Plaintiff] asserts that anticompetitive actions which run afoul of the proscriptions of the Sherman Act—in particular, actions in furtherance of a horizontal conspiracy to fix prices—are also actions banned by the North Carolina act. We agree."), aff'd on rehearing, 742 F.2d 170 (4th Cir. 1984); see also Allen, supra, §§ 16.10, 26.01. In reaching this conclusion, the Court of Appeals explained:

> Highly persuasive to us is the fact that the substantive provisions of the North Carolina act are reproduced verbatim from § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1), and that the North Carolina Supreme Court, consistent with that observation, had held that "[b]ecause of the similarity in language, it is appropriate for us to look to the federal decisions interpreting the FTC Act for guidance in construing the meaning of . . . § 75-1.1." Of course, it is an accepted tenet of basic antitrust law that § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission [*910] Act sweeps within its prohibitory [111] scope conduct also condemned by § 1 of the Sherman Act.

ITCO Corp., 722 F. 2d at 48 (internal citations omitted). [42]

HN61[] Apart from per se violations, plaintiffs have alternative recourse in pleading a prima facie UDTPA violation in terms of "unfair methods of competition" and "unfair or deceptive acts or practices." The UDTPA distinguishes between these two concepts. See Henderson v. U.S. Fidelity & Guar. Co., 346 N.C. 741, 488 S.E.2d 234, 239 (N.C. 1997).

As for the latter concept, HN62[] to set forth the elements for a prima facie claim of "unfair or deceptive practices," North Carolina law requires a plaintiff to demonstrate that: "(1) defendant committed an unfair or deceptive act or practice, (2) the action in question was in or affecting commerce, and (3) the act proximately caused injury [112] to the plaintiff." Dalton v. Camp, 353 N.C. 647, 548 S.E.2d 704, 711 (N.C. 2001) (citing Spartan Leasing Inc. v. Pollard, 101 N.C. App. 450, 400 S.E.2d 476, 482 (N.C. Ct. App. 1991)).

As to the former concept, according to the Court of Appeals of North Carolina, HN63[] "[n]o precise definition of 'unfair methods of competition' as used in [Section 75-1.1] exists." United Laboratories, Inc. v. Kuykendall, 102 N.C. App. 484, 403 S.E.2d 104, 109 (N.C. Ct. App. 1991) (quoting McDonald v. Scarboro, 91 N.C. App. 13, 370 S.E.2d 680, 684 (N.C. Ct. App. 1988)). Rather, a case-by-case assessment is required:

> Unfair competition has been referred to in terms of conduct "which a court of equity would consider unfair." . . . Thus viewed, the fairness or unfairness of particular conduct is not an abstraction to be derived by logic. Rather, the fair or unfair nature of particular conduct is to be judged by viewing it against the background of actual human experience and by determining its intended and actual effects upon others.

Id.; see also Universal Furniture Intern., Inc. v. Collezione Europa USA, Inc., 618 F.3d 417, 439 (4th Cir. 2010) ("As used in the UDTPA, the words 'unfair methods of competition' encompass 'any conduct that a court of equity would consider unfair.' [113] . . . More specifically, a 'practice is unfair if it is unethical or unscrupulous, and it is deceptive if it has a tendency to deceive.'" (citing Polo Fashions, Inc. v. Craftex, Inc., 816 F.2d 145, 148 (4th Cir. 1987))). [43]

[42] The legal authority is opaque as to whether a violation of North Carolina antitrust constitutes a Section 75-1.1 claim. See Allen, supra, § 27.01 (recognizing that "some courts and commentators have viewed the Chapter 75 antitrust prohibitions to be coincidentally illegal under § 75-1.1, [and] at least one court has regarded part of former N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-5 to be outside the scope of § 75.1-1" (footnote omitted)).

[43] There is no unequivocal law in North Carolina that bars consumers from bringing a UDTPA claim based upon an "unfair method of competition." See John F. Graybeal, Unfair Trade Practices, Antitrust and Consumer Welfare in North Carolina, 80

The Defendants' objections to the UDTPA claim are based entirely upon the contention that Plaintiffs must allege their reliance on a defendant's statement or misrepresentation and have failed to do so. This argument directly invokes a prima facie claim for an "unfair or deceptive practice." However, as the foregoing summary of North Carolina law concerning the UDTPA demonstrates, a Section 75-1.1 claim may also arise in the form of a per se violation, such as a violation of the [114] Sherman [*911] Act, or an "unfair or deceptive practice," which defies a precise legal test. As such, for a Section 75-1.1 violation, a plaintiff is not always obligated to plead allegations of reliance on a statement or misrepresentation, and therefore, the Defendants' argument does not compel dismissal as a matter of law.

Furthermore, given that a violation of the Sherman Act constitutes a per se violation of Section 75-1.1, and acknowledging that Defendants have not raised any arguments on the grounds that Plaintiffs entirely have failed to sufficiently allege federal antitrust violations, for that reason alone the motion to dismiss this claim cannot succeed. A fair reading of the IPSAC's allegations suggests that the Defendants' alleged federal antitrust violation is the basis for the Section 75-1.1 claim. See, e.g., Pls.' Resp. at 4-5; IPSAC ¶¶ 466-67, 469 (alleging that "Defendants agreed to, and did in fact, act in restraint of trade or commerce by unfairly and deceptively fixing, raising, stabilizing, and maintaining prices of, allocating markets for, and restraining and manipulating the supply of shell eggs and egg products at supracompetitive levels . . . ." and that the "Defendants' [115] unlawful practices, including combinations and contracts to restrain trade and allocate the relevant markets" constitutes the violation of Section 75-1.1). [44]

Thus, it is appropriate to deny the Defendants' motion as to the Section 75-1.1 claim.

9. West Virginia

Defendants argue for the dismissal of the Plaintiffs' West Virginia Consumer Credit and Protection Act ("WVCCPA") on the grounds that Plaintiffs failed to allege that they satisfied the statutorily-required pre-suit notice and provision for an opportunity to cure.

HN64[] The WVCCPA requires that before bringing suit for a violation of the Act a consumer must notify the seller of the alleged violation at issue:

> [N]o action may be brought pursuant to the provisions of this section until the consumer has informed the seller or lessor in writing and by certified mail of the alleged violation and provided the seller or lessor twenty days from receipt of the notice of violation to make a cure offer: Provided, That the consumer shall have ten [116] days from receipt of the cure offer to accept the cure offer or it is deemed refused and withdrawn.

W. Va. Code § 46A-6-106(b) (emphasis in original). [45]

Plaintiffs admit that they have failed to allege pre-suit notification. At oral argument, Defendants agreed to allow Plaintiffs to cure the omissions via amendment. Tr. 81:4-82:3. Accordingly, the Court grants the motion to dismiss the WVCCPA claim without prejudice to Plaintiffs to undertake to cure the acknowledged shortcoming. [46]

N.C. L. Rev. 1927, 1991-98 (2002) (discussing North Carolina law concerning whether consumers, as opposed to competitors, may pursue an unfair method of competition claim under the UDTPA). Defendants have raised no arguments for dismissal on this basis.

44 The Court determines that the antitrust conspiracy alleged does not sound in fraud for the reasons already discussed supra in relation to other state claims. Thus, Rule 9(b) does not apply to this claim.

45 Considering a summary judgment motion, one court recently concluded thatHN65[] "the plaintiff's failure to comply with the mandatory prerequisite set forth in Section 46A-6-106(b) bar[red] her from bringing a claim." *Stanley v. Huntington Nat. Bank, No. 1:11CV54, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9448, 2012 WL 254135, at 7 (N.D. W.Va. Jan. 27, 2012).

[*912] F. State Unjust Enrichment Claims

Defendants move to dismiss all 21 of the Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims. Plaintiffs have brought those claims under the laws of Arizona, California, the District of Columbia, Florida, Iowa, [117] Kansas, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

At the outset, the Court notes that the prima facie elements for various state unjust enrichment claims are not entirely birds of a feather. That is, it is well-accepted thatHN66[] the "elements necessary to allege unjust enrichment vary state by state." Flonase, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 541 (citing Powers v. Lycoming Engines, 245 F.R.D. 226, 230-31 (E.D. Pa. 2007), vacated on other grounds, 328 F. App'x 121 (3d Cir. 2009) (unpublished); and Restatement (First) of Restitution § 1 (1937)); see also SMW, 737 F. Supp. 2d at 424. Nonetheless, the common denominator is the shared principle that it is unjust for a defendant who is enriched at the expense of the plaintiff to accept and retain the ill-gotten benefit. See Flonase, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 541; SMW, 737 F. Supp. 2d at 424; see generally Restatement (First) of Restitution § 1; Restatement (Third) of Restitution and Unjust Enrichment § 1 (2011).

As to virtually each of the Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims—excepting those brought under the laws of Arizona, North [118] Dakota, and Tennessee—the IPSAC poses the following three cookie-cutter allegations:

> A. By engaging in the unlawful conduct described herein, Defendants received higher prices for their eggs that were sold to indirect purchasers in the [Name of State] than would have been possible absent the illegal conduct. See, e.g., IPSAC ¶¶ 333, 345, 353.
> B. The Defendants were able to achieve their increased revenues and profits from their sales of eggs to [Name of State] indirect purchasers because the demand for eggs by indirect purchasers is relatively price inelastic, as Defendants understood. Thus, the ability of Defendants to profit from their sales of eggs to indirect purchasers in [Name of State] was connected to and due to the increased prices paid for Defendants eggs by indirect purchasers in [Name of State]. See, e.g., IPSAC ¶¶ 334, 346, 354.
> C. Defendants were enriched by their illegal activities at the expense of [Name of State] indirect purchasers of eggs and thus Defendants should be ordered to make restitution for the benefit of [Name of State] indirect purchasers because it would be unjust to allow Defendants to retain the benefits of their sales of eggs at illegally inflated prices. [119] See, e.g., IPSAC ¶¶ 335, 347, 355.

Defendants raise several arguments for dismissal of the unjust enrichment claims—some specific to certain state's laws and others more broadly generalized to the law of several states. The Court addresses these arguments in turn.

1. Unjust Enrichment Claim: North Dakota

Defendants have raised several grounds for the dismissal of the Plaintiffs' North Dakota unjust enrichment claim. Plaintiffs have stated that they "do not contest dismissal of the North Dakota claims for unjust enrichment." Pls. Resp. at 52 n.34. Therefore, the Court grants the Defendants' motion to dismiss the unjust enrichment claim under North Dakota law, and will proceed to discuss in this decision the Plaintiffs' remaining 20 unjust enrichment claims.

[*913] 2. Unjust Enrichment as an Independent Cause of Action: California and Mississippi

[46] Because the Court is dismissing for lack of pre-suit notification allegations, the Court does not address Defendants' arguments for dismissal on the basis of Rules 8 and 9(b).

Defendants claim that neither the laws of California nor Mississippi recognize unjust enrichment as an independent cause of action. Rather, in those states, Defendants contend, the principles of unjust enrichment apply only as a measure of damages. Plaintiffs defend the IPSAC by asserting that both of these states' courts recognize a separate cause of action [120] for unjust enrichment. The Court concludes that the Plaintiffs' position on this point is the correct one.

HN67[] California courts, including the Supreme Court of California, have acknowledged that parties may pursue causes of action arising from an unjust enrichment claim under California law. See, e.g., Ghirardo v. Antonioli, 14 Cal. 4th 39, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687, 924 P.2d 996, 1002-03 (Cal. 1996) (recognizing that although plaintiff did not have a statutory claim for relief, he "was, however, entitled to seek relief under traditional equitable principles of unjust enrichment" and articulating the legal standard for such a claim as one where "an individual may be required to make restitution if he is unjustly enriched at the expense of another"); Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Dintino, 167 Cal. App. 4th 333, 346, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 38 (Cal. Ct. App. 2008) ("[U]njust enrichment is a common law obligation implied by law based on the equities of a particular case and not on any contractual obligation."); First Nationwide Sav. v. Perry, 11 Cal. App. 4th 1657, 1662-63, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 173 (Cal. Ct. App. 1992) (articulating the contours of an unjust enrichment claim under California law); Marina Tenants Assn. v. Deauville Marina Dev. Co., 181 Cal. App. 3d 122, 134, 226 Cal. Rptr. 321 (Cal. Ct. App. 1986) ("It is [121] of course the law that when one obtains a benefit which may not be justly retained, unjust enrichment results, and restitution is in order."). [47] Granted, there appears to be something of a schism among California state courts as to this point of law. See Graphics Processing Units, 527 F. Supp. 2d at 1029 (citing various state appellate cases to demonstrate that "California courts are split on whether unjust enrichment can exist as a separate claim"). Yet even Defendants concede that there are "cases that have allowed unjust enrichment causes of action" in California. Defs.' Reply at 27. Given that California courts have not uniformly or definitively barred an independent cause of action for unjust enrichment, this Court cannot agree with Defendants that as a matter of law Plaintiffs may not pursue an unjust enrichment claim under California law. The Court will permit this claim to move ahead, and denies the Motion as to this issue.

Likewise, with respect to Mississippi, there is considerable authority that supports the existence of an independent state law claim for unjust enrichment. See, e.g., Owens Corning v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 868 So. 2d 331, 342-43 (Miss. 2004) (evaluating whether a Mississippi unjust enrichment claim survives summary [*914] judgment); Omnibank of Mantee v. United Southern Bank, 607 So. 2d 76, 92-93 (Miss. 1992) (summarizing Mississippi case law as to guiding principles pertaining to an unjust enrichment claim); Dorsey Miss. Sales, Inc. v. Newell, 251 Miss. 77, 168 So. 2d 645, 651 (Miss. 1964) (discussing Mississippi law as to an unjust enrichment [123] claim based upon quasi-contract theory). One federal district court recently examined the precise issue sub judice with a thoughtful survey of Mississippi law, as applied by Mississippi courts and federal courts sitting in diversity, and concluded that HN69[] "there is a substantial body of Mississippi case law that treats unjust enrichment as a separate cause of action." See In re Light Cigarettes Mktg. Sales Practices Litig., 751 F. Supp. 2d 183, 194-95 (D. Me. 2010). This Court embraces that district court's sound analysis and ultimate conclusion of law by reference here. See id. 193-96. Accordingly, the Court will not dismiss as a matter of law the Plaintiffs' Mississippi unjust enrichment claim on these grounds.

3. Absence of Adequate Remedy at Law: 10 Jurisdictions

[47] See also 1 Witkin Summary Cal. Law Contracts § 1013 (HN68[] "The right to restitution or quasi-contractual recovery is based upon unjust enrichment. Where a person obtains a benefit that he or she may not justly retain, the person is unjustly enriched. The quasi-contract, [122] or contract 'implied in law,' is an obligation (not a true contract . . .) created by the law without regard to the intention of the parties, and is designed to restore the aggrieved party to his or her former position by return of the thing or its equivalent in money."); see generally Douglas L. Johnson & Neville L. Johnson, What Happened To Unjust Enrichment In California? The Deterioration of Equity in the California Courts, 44 Loy. L.A. L. Rev. 277 (2010) (advancing the thesis that an independent cause of action for unjust enrichment exists under California law).

Defendants move to dismiss the unjust enrichment claims under the laws of 10 states—Arizona, Florida, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, and Vermont—on the grounds that Plaintiffs have failed to allege the absence of an adequate remedy at law. According to Defendants, the absence of an adequate remedy at law is a "necessary element" of an equitable claim for unjust enrichment under [124] these states' laws.

As discussed above, the elements necessary to establish an unjust enrichment vary state by state, and some jurisdictions require proof of elements that others do not require. Consequently, an evaluation of the Defendants' argument simply requires determining whether the absence of an adequate remedy at law is actually an element of the prima facie case for unjust enrichment under the law of a given state—for which Plaintiffs would have the burden of proof. Some jurisdictions may only recognize this legal precept as an affirmative defense or some other equitable consideration, [48] while others may not embrace it in any form. [49]

If the first scenario applies, the Plaintiffs must plead that element of the prima facie claim under state law. If the latter several scenarios apply, Plaintiffs have no [*915] obligation [126] to plead the unavailability of an adequate remedy at law. Certainly, when a jurisdiction does not recognize such a legal principle in the context of unjust enrichment, it need not be pled. And even if a jurisdiction recognizes an adequate remedy at law as an affirmative defense or equitable consideration, HN71[] a plaintiff does not carry the burden of proof, and furthermore generally has no obligation under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8 to anticipate and plead in opposition to that defense—except, perhaps, when the defense will be an inevitable response given what is pled on the face of the complaint. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a); Wright & Miller, supra, § 1276 (recognizing that pleading "allegations that seek to avoid or defeat a potential affirmative defense . . . are not an integral part of the plaintiff's claim for relief and lie outside his or her burden of pleading"); id. § 1226 ("The pleader must be careful not to allege facts that constitute a defense to his claim for relief . . . . A complaint containing [such] a built-in defense usually is vulnerable under Rule 12(b)(6) to a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted."); see also Rycoline Prods., Inc. v. C & W Unlimited, 109 F.3d 883, 886 (3d Cir. 1997) [127] (acknowledging that an affirmative defense must be apparent on the face of the complaint to be subject to a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss).

Furthermore, under any of the aforementioned scenarios, that a complaint alleges an unjust enrichment claim and also brings alternative claims for relief that might constitute adequate remedies at law is of no consequence under the pleading constraints of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. HN72[] Rule 8 allows plaintiffs to plead claims in the alternative despite inconsistencies "in both legal and factual allegations." Indep. Enters. Inc. v. Pittsburgh Water and Sewer, 103 F.3d 1165, 1175 (3d Cir. 1997); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 (d)(2), (3). The Rule "has been interpreted to mean that a court may not construe a plaintiff's first claim as an admission against another alternative or inconsistent claim." Indep. Enters., 103 F.3d at 1175 (internal quotations and brackets omitted). It follows that regardless of whether or not a jurisdiction requires proving the absence of an adequate remedy at law as part of the prima facie claim for unjust enrichment, an unjust enrichment claim cannot be deficient on the grounds that the complaint also alleges claims at [128] law for alternative forms of relief.

[48] See 66 Am. Jur. 2d Restitution and Implied Contracts § 28 (recognizing that an adequate remedy at law can be a defense to unjust enrichment); 3 Dan B. Dobbs, Law of Remedies §12.8(2) at 204 (2d ed. 1993) (recognizing that the adequacy test need not be a part of the prima facie case and can be "one factor to be considered in deciding whether relief is warranted").

[49] This latter proposition is illustrated by the Restatement (Third) of Restitution (2011). Section 4(2) of the Restatement provides that HN70[] the unavailability of an adequate remedy at [125] law is not a consideration in an unjust enrichment claim: "A claimant otherwise entitled to a remedy for unjust enrichment, including a remedy originating in equity, need not demonstrate the inadequacy of available remedies at law." Id. § 4(2). As the comment to Section 4(2) explains: "Although some remedies in restitution are indeed equitable in origin, there is no requirement that a claimant who seeks any of the remedies described in this Restatement must first demonstrate the inadequacy of a remedy at law. An argument to the contrary should appear antiquated today, but § 4(2) is included to remove any doubt." See also 1 George E. Palmer, Law of Restitution § 1.6 at 34 (1978) ("Although an occasional decision suggests that restitution will be denied when alternative remedies are considered adequate, innumerable cases demonstrate that this is incorrect." (footnote omitted)). Moreover, the Restatement does not include "adequate remedy at law" among the possible defenses to unjust enrichment. See id. §§ 62-70.

As a starting point, the Court concludes that the absence of an adequate remedy at law is not an element of the prima facie case for unjust enrichment under the laws of 9 of the jurisdictions at issue—Florida, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, and Vermont. [50] Defendants [*917] have

[50] The Court reaches this conclusion based upon the following assessment of the laws of the nine states.

Florida

HN73[] Plaintiffs need not plead the unavailability of remedy provided by law to state a claim for unjust enrichment under Florida law. The Supreme Court of Florida has acknowledged that the "elements of an unjust enrichment claim are 'a benefit conferred upon a defendant by the plaintiff, the defendant's appreciation of the benefit, and the defendant's acceptance and retention of the benefit under circumstances that make it inequitable for him to retain it without paying the value thereof.'" Florida Power Corp. v. City of Winter Park, 887 So. 2d 1237, 1241 n.4 (Fla. 2004). [129] (citing Ruck Bros. Brick, Inc. v. Kellogg & Kimsey, Inc., 668 So. 2d 205, 207 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1995)). Lower courts in Florida have held that to "state a claim for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must plead the following elements: 1) the plaintiff has conferred a benefit on the defendant; 2) the defendant has knowledge of the benefit; 3) the defendant has accepted or retained the benefit conferred; and 4) the circumstances are such that it would be inequitable for the defendant to retain the benefit without paying fair value for it." Golden v. Woodward, 15 So.3d 664, 670 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2009); see also Henry M. Butler, Inc. v. Trizec Properties, Inc., 524 So. 2d 710, 711-12 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1988) (articulating same).

Massachusetts

HN74[] The unavailability of an adequate remedy at law is not within the parameters of the prima facie claim for unjust enrichment as articulated by Massachusetts courts:

> [T]he sine qua non of unjust enrichment is that the defendant has been unjustly enriched.
> "Even where a person has received a benefit from another, he is liable to pay therefor only if the circumstances are such that, as between the two persons, it is unjust for him to retain it."
> . . . [130] . The term is not descriptive of conduct which, standing alone, would justify an action for recovery. Unjust enrichment is an essentially equitable doctrine requiring proof of some misconduct, fault or culpable action on the part of the defendant as "wrongdoer" which renders his retention of a benefit at the expense of another contrary to equity and good conscience.

DeSanctis v. Labell's Airport Parking Inc., 1991 Mass. App. Div. 37, 40 (Mass. App. Ct. 1991) (citation omitted). "Unjust enrichment, as a basis for restitution, requires more than benefit. The benefit must be unjust, a quality that turns on the reasonable expectations of the parties." Community Builders, Inc. v. Indian Motocycle Assocs., Inc., 44 Mass. App. Ct. 537, 692 N.E.2d 964, 979 (Mass. App. Ct. 1998). The First Circuit Court of Appeals articulated the elements for unjust enrichment under Massachusetts law, which are in accord with the aforementioned standards: "To recover for unjust enrichment under Massachusetts law, [plaintiff] must show that (1) [defendant] knowingly received a benefit (2) at his expense (3) under circumstances that would make retention of that benefit unjust." Frappier v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 645 F.3d 51, 58 (1st Cir. 2011) [131] (citing Mass. Eye & Ear Infirmary v. QLT Phototherapeutics, Inc., 552 F.3d 47, 57 (1st Cir. 2009)).

Minnesota

HN75[] The prima facie elements of an unjust enrichment claim, as articulated by the Supreme Court of Minnesota, do not include the absence of an adequate remedy at law. That court has held:

> To establish an unjust enrichment claim, the claimant must show that the defendant has knowingly received or obtained something of value for which the defendant "in equity and good conscience" should pay. Klass v. Twin City Fed. Sav. and cited no authority that disturbs this conclusion. It follows that Plaintiffs are not required to plead factual allegations

> Loan Ass'n, 291 Minn. 68, 190 N.W.2d 493, 494-95 (1971). "[U]njust enrichment claims do not lie simply because one party benefits from the efforts or obligations of others, but instead it must be shown that a party was unjustly enriched in the sense that the term 'unjustly' could mean illegally or unlawfully." First Nat'l Bank v. Ramier, 311 N.W.2d 502 (Minn. 1981).

ServiceMaster of St. Cloud v. GAB Business Services, Inc., 544 N.W.2d 302, 306 (Minn. 1996).

Nevada

HN76[] Under Nevada law, the unavailability of an adequate remedy at law is not a part of the prima facie case for unjust enrichment. According to the Supreme Court of Nevada:

> "Unjust enrichment is the unjust retention of a benefit [132] to the loss of another, or the retention of money or property of another against the fundamental principles of justice or equity and good conscience." Nevada Industrial Dev. v. Benedetti, 103 Nev. 360, 363 n.2, 741 P.2d 802, (1987). This court has observed that the essential elements of unjust enrichment "are a benefit conferred on the defendant by the plaintiff, appreciation by the defendant of such benefit, and acceptance and retention by the defendant of such benefit." Unionamerica Mtg. v. McDonald, 97 Nev. 210, 212, 626 P.2d 1272 (1981).

Topaz Mut. Co., Inc. v. Marsh, 108 Nev. 845, 839 P.2d 606, 613 (Nev. 1992).

New Mexico

HN77[] The unavailability of an adequate remedy at law is not counted among the elements of an unjust enrichment claim under New Mexico law. "To prevail on a claim for unjust enrichment, 'one must show that: (1) another has been knowingly benefitted at one's expense (2) in a manner such that allowance of the other to retain the benefit would be unjust.'" City of Rio Rancho v. Amrep Southwest Inc., 2011 NMSC 37, 150 N.M. 428, 260 P.3d 414, 428-429 (N.M. 2011) (citing Ontiveros Insulation Co. v. Sanchez, 2000 NMCA 51, 129 N.M. 200, 3 P.3d 695 (N.M. Ct. App. 2000)).

Furthermore, in New Mexico, "[t]here is no requirement that the creation of a statutory remedy at law for [133] a particular type of claim will automatically supplant an equitable remedy that addresses the same claim. [Any] major departure from the long tradition of equity practice should not be lightly implied." Starko, Inc. v. Presbyterian Health Plan, Inc., Nos. 27,992, 29,016, 2012 NMCA 53, 276 P.3d 252, 2011 N.M. App. LEXIS 136, 2011 WL 6429048 (N.M. Ct. App. Dec. 15, 2011) (quoting Sims v. Sims, 1996 NMSC 78, 122 N.M. 618, 930 P.2d 153 (N.M. 1996)). "Likewise, . . . 'unjust enrichment constitutes an independent basis for recovery in a civil-law action, analytically and historically distinct from the other two principal grounds for such liability, contract and tort.'" Id. (quoting Hydro Conduit Corp. v. Kemble, 110 N.M. 173, 793 P.2d 855, 860 (N.M. 1990)).

North Carolina

HN78[] As to unjust enrichment under North Carolina law, the pleading of an absence of an adequate remedy at law is not necessary to state a claim. The Supreme Court of North Carolina has observed:

> In order to establish a claim for unjust enrichment, a party must have conferred a benefit on the other party. The benefit must not have been conferred officiously, that is it must not be conferred by an interference in the affairs of the other party in a manner that is not justified in the circumstances. The benefit must not be [134] gratuitous and it must be measurable. . . . [T]he defendant must have consciously accepted the benefit.

Booe v. Shadrick, 322 N.C. 567, 369 S.E.2d 554, 556 (N.C. 1988); see also Progressive American Ins. Co. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 184 N.C. App. 688, 647 S.E.2d 111, 116 (N.C. Ct. App. 2007) (quoting same).

HN79[] The prima facie claim for unjust enrichment under South Dakota law does not necessarily involve addressing an adequate remedy at law. "In order to establish unjust enrichment, three elements must be proven: (1) a benefit was received; (2) suggesting such an absence as to those states' unjust enrichment claims.

HN82[] As to the jurisdiction of Arizona, the Court determines that the absence of an adequate remedy at law is a prima facie element of a claim for unjust enrichment. [51] Plaintiffs must allege facts which, taken as true, plausibly suggest this [136] element of the claim in order to survive a [*918] 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss the unjust enrichment claim dependent upon Arizona state law. [52]

The Defendants' argument thus follows that the IPSAC's allegations specific to Arizona are insufficient to comply with the Plaintiffs' obligation to plead that "they lack an adequate remedy at law." The IPSAC's allegations as to Arizona specifically plead:

> The enrichment of Defendants that occurred because of Defendants' illegal activities was without legally cognizable justification. To the extent legal remedies do not sufficiently accomplish disgorgement of Defendants' illegal profits from their sales to indirect purchasers in Arizona, Defendants should be ordered to the recipient was cognizant of that benefit; and (3) the retention of the benefit without reimbursement would unjustly enrich the recipient." Mack v. Mack, 2000 SD 92, 613 N.W.2d 64, 69 (S.D. 2000); see also Hofeldt v. Mehling, 2003 SD 25, 658 N.W.2d 783, 788 (S.D. 2003) (same).

Utah

HN80[] Proof of an absence of an adequate remedy at law is not required to state a prima facie claim for unjust enrichment in Utah. The Supreme Court of Utah has held:

> In order to prevail on a claim for unjust enrichment, three elements must be met. See Berrett v. Stevens, 690 P.2d 553, 557 (Utah 1984). First, there must be a benefit conferred on one person by another. See id. Second, the conferee must appreciate [135] or have knowledge of the benefit. See id. Finally, there must be "the acceptance or retention by the conferee of the benefit under such circumstances as to make it inequitable for the conferee to retain the benefit without payment of its value." Id. The plaintiff must prove all three elements to sustain a claim of unjust enrichment.

Vermont

HN81[] To establish a prima facie claim for unjust enrichment under Vermont law, Plaintiffs are not obliged to show the unavailability of an adequate remedy at law. "[T]he elements of unjust enrichment [are]: whether '(1) a benefit was conferred on defendant; (2) defendant accepted the benefit; and (3) defendant retained the benefit under such circumstances that it would be inequitable for defendant not to compensate plaintiff for its value.'" Reed v. Zurn, 187 Vt. 613, 992 A.2d 1061, 1066 (Vt. 2010) (quoting Center v. Mad River Corp., 151 Vt. 408, 561 A.2d 90, 93 (Vt. 1989)).

[51] In Arizona, the prima facie claim for unjust enrichment includes the element of the absence of an adequate remedy at law. "In Arizona, five elements must be proved to make a case of unjust enrichment: (1) an enrichment; (2) an impoverishment; (3) a connection between the enrichment and the impoverishment; (4) absence of justification for the enrichment and the impoverishment and (5) an absence of a remedy provided by law." See Community Guardian Bank v. Hamlin, 182 Ariz. 627, 898 P.2d 1005, 1008 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1995) (citing Sierra Vista v. Cochise Enters., 144 Ariz. 375, 697 P.2d 1125, 1131 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1984)) (emphasis added); accord State v. Arizona Pension Planning, 154 Ariz. 56, 739 P.2d 1373, 1376 (Ariz. 1987).

[52] Defendants contend that the standard for "determining whether a remedy is 'adequate" is "the 'availability' of a remedy not the 'likelihood of its success.'" Defs.' Mot. at 50 (quoting Tudor Development Group, Inc. v. U.S. Fidelity & Guar. Co., 968 F.2d 357, 364 (3d Cir. 1992)). However, in proposing this legal standard, which appears to be an articulation of Pennsylvania [137] law, Defendants identify no legal authority that demonstrates that this standard is recognized under the law of Arizona. In the absence of legal authority, the Court cannot conclude that the Defendants' proposed standard for "adequate remedy at law" is the standard applied in Arizona. Certainly, the Court has insufficient basis to presume that the highest court in that state would embrace such a requirement.

> make restitution for the benefit of Arizona indirect purchasers because it would be unjust to allow Defendants to retain the benefits of their sales of eggs at illegally inflated prices.

IPSAC ¶¶ 324 (emphasis added). [138] In light of Rule 8(d)(2)'s permissiveness of alternative pleading, given the IPSAC's italicized language above, and allowing for all inferences to be drawn in favor of Plaintiffs, the Court cannot rule as a matter of law that Plaintiffs have failed to plausibly suggest that there is an absence of an adequate remedy at law. The factual allegations in the IPSAC are consistent with the absence of an adequate remedy at law as to the recovery of either all or part of the Defendants' enrichment as connected to the Plaintiffs' impoverishment.

In sum, the Court denies the Defendants' motion to dismiss the 10 state unjust enrichment claims on the grounds of the availability of an adequate remedy at law.

4. Benefit of Bargain: 20 Jurisdictions

Defendants attack generally all 20 of the Plaintiffs' remaining unjust enrichment claims on the grounds that unjust enrichment is unavailable as an "independent cause of action" when Plaintiffs have received the "benefit of the bargain" for which they contracted. Based upon the lone two cases Defendants cite as authority for their argument, the Court discerns that Defendants are invoking the principle embodied in Section 107(1) of Restatement (First) of Restitution:

> HN83[] A [139] person of full capacity who, pursuant to a contract with another, has performed services or transferred property to the other or otherwise has conferred a benefit upon him, is not entitled to compensation therefor other than in accordance with the terms of such bargain, unless the transaction is rescinded for fraud, mistake, duress, undue influence or illegality, or unless the other has failed to perform his part of the bargain.

See also New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 210 (citing same); Intel Corp., 496 F. Supp. 2d at 421 (citing same).

However, Defendants do not raise appropriate grounds for such a dismissal because their argument is based upon what is essentially a model law rather than actual law. Beyond raising the principle, as articulated by the First Restatement, [*919] and broadly contending that it should be the basis for dismissing all 21 unjust enrichment claims, Defendants have not cited any jurisdiction-specific authority to demonstrate that any of the 21 jurisdictions have actually adopted this legal principle as part of their unjust enrichment jurisprudence. Even assuming, arguendo, that all of those jurisdictions might have adopted the principle, Defendants have not [140] established whether those jurisdictions apply it in the manner that Defendants propose. As repeated (and, indeed, already demonstrated) above, states have differing bodies of law on unjust enrichment. Because Defendants have expressed their argument in terms of a model principle of unjust enrichment—as opposed to the actual law of the 21 jurisdictions at issue—the Court determines that it cannot dismiss the Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims on these conceptual grounds as a matter of law. The Court denies the motion in this respect.

5. Exhaustion of Remedies: Tennessee

HN84[] Under Tennessee law, although Plaintiffs "need not be in privity with a defendant to recover under a claim of unjust enrichment," Plaintiffs must allege that they have exhausted all remedies against parties with whom Plaintiffs were in privity of contract. Freeman Indus., LLC v. Eastman Chem. Co., 172 S.W.3d 512, 525 (Tenn. 2005); see also Paschall's, Inc. v. Dozier, 219 Tenn. 45, 407 S.W.2d 150, 155 (Tenn. 1966) ("[B]efore recovery can be had against the landowner on an unjust enrichment theory, the furnisher of the materials and labor must have exhausted his remedies against the person with whom he had contracted, and still has [141] not received the reasonable value of his services."). Alternatively, such exhaustion need not be demonstrated "if the pursuit of the remedies would be futile." Freeman, 172 S.W.3d at 526; see also *Window Gallery of Knoxville v. Davis, No. 03A01-9906-CH-00225, 1999 Tenn. App. LEXIS 775, 1999 WL 1068730, at 2, 4 (Tenn. Ct. App. Nov. 24, 1999) (observing the same). According to Defendants, dismissal of the Plaintiffs' Tennessee unjust enrichment claim is warranted because Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts that plausibly suggest either the satisfaction of the "exhaustion-of-remedies element" or the futility of such remedial efforts.

HN85[] Courts interpreting Tennessee law have found that remedial efforts are futile in several kinds of circumstances. For example, one Tennessee court has held that remedial efforts are futile when a plaintiff can demonstrate that the party with whom it was in privity of contract is "judgment proof." *See Bank of Nashville v. Chipman, No. M2010-01581-COA-R3-CV, 2011 Tenn. App. LEXIS 425, 2011 WL 3433012, at 5-6 (Tenn. Ct. App. Aug. 5, 2011). In that case, the plaintiff bank had entered into a loan agreement with a husband who never repaid the loan and then transferred all of his personal assets, except for his [142] IRA, to his wife. *2011 Tenn. App. LEXIS 425, [WL] at 5-6. The appellate court recognized that there was sufficient evidence that the husband had no personal assets, and hence sufficient evidence of futility, and upheld the trial court's finding that the wife was unjustly enriched. *2011 Tenn. App. LEXIS 425, [WL] at 6.

Some federal courts sitting in diversity have found that HN86[] consumer plaintiffs have adequately pled futility of pursuing remedies under Tennessee law by alleging, inter alia, that the resellers of a product (i.e., the parties in privity of contract with plaintiffs) were not involved in the producer defendants' price-fixing conspiracy, and thus not liable for or the cause of the plaintiffs' alleged losses resulting from that conspiracy. See In re TFT-LCD Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d 1179, 1192-93 (N.D. Cal. 2009); In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 749 F. Supp. 2d 224, 242 (M.D. Pa. 2010). Plaintiffs argue that these cases are instructive here, and the Court agrees.

[*920] The IPSAC sets forth factual allegations that plausibly suggest that Plaintiffs suffered losses due to the Defendants' alleged conspiracy to reduce the supply of eggs and thereby increase egg prices, and the Defendants' alleged conduct in furtherance of that [143] conspiracy. Plaintiffs have also alleged that "the parties from whom indirect purchasers bought the eggs directly were not, so far as indirect purchasers are aware, a party to, or involved in, the Defendants' illegal activities which caused the increased egg prices to Tennessee indirect purchasers." IPSAC ¶ 505. In light of these facts pled, Plaintiffs have plausibly suggested that the pursuit of any remedies against the parties from whom they directly purchased eggs (and thus presumably with whom Plaintiffs were in privity of contract) would be futile because those parties are, as alleged, not directly or indirectly liable for the Plaintiffs' losses due to their lack of involvement in the conspiracy. Cf. TFT-LCD (Flat Panel), 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1192-93 ("Plaintiffs respond that futility is self-evident in these circumstances where the alleged price-fixing was done by the defendants in the manufacture of LCD panels and LCD products, and there has been no allegation that the resellers were involved in the conspiracy. The Court agrees that under the facts alleged in the complaint, futility is evident."). [53]

Accordingly, the Court denies the Defendants' motion to dismiss the Tennessee unjust enrichment claim on these grounds.

6. Unjust Enrichment Claim Prior to May 1, 2006: Utah

In tandem with their previously-discussed argument that the Utah Antitrust Act does not permit indirect purchasers to recover damages accruing before May 1, 2006, Defendants also claim that the Plaintiffs' Utah claim for unjust enrichment arising from conduct occurring prior to May 1, 2006 should be dismissed. It appears [145] that Defendants are contending that, as a general rule of thumb, indirect purchasers should be barred from pursuing an unjust enrichment claim in those jurisdictions where indirect purchasers cannot obtain relief under that jurisdiction's

[53] It does not appear that Plaintiffs must plead facts that demonstrate the futility [144] of other types of remedies against the egg resellers because the IPSAC does not allege any facts that might suggest such alternative means of relief for the Plaintiffs' losses, such as, by way of example, an unjust enrichment claim against the resellers. Cf. Chocolate, 749 F. Supp. 2d at 242 (determining that at the motion to dismiss stage the consumer "plaintiffs simply lack a cognizable remedy against the direct purchasers" (emphasis added)). However, whether Plaintiffs will be able to successfully demonstrate on the merits the futility of exhausting all remedies against egg resellers (assuming that they were in privity of contract with Plaintiffs for purposes of Tennessee law) is an open question.

antitrust and/or consumer protection laws due to lack of standing or otherwise. Defendants contend that Utah qualifies as one such jurisdiction—at least prior to the May 1, 2006 effective date of the Utah Antitrust Act amendment that provides for indirect purchaser recovery under the Act. See Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-918. To be clear, Defendants do not challenge the Plaintiffs' pursuit of an unjust enrichment claim for alleged conduct that occurred on or after May 1, 2006. Thus, Defendants are only challenging the temporal scope of the Utah unjust enrichment claim and seeking partial dismissal of this claim. [54]

[*921] At this time, the Court does not find that the Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim for conduct occurring before May 1, 2006 must be dismissed as a matter of law. Simply put, Defendants have not presented this issue to the Court in a manner conducive to resolution. Indeed, no party has called upon any legal authority specific to Utah law on this issue, and this issue, by involving questions of common law preclusion and conflicts with statutory law, is one that must be addressed by examining the specific body of law of the jurisdiction at issue. See Erie, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S. Ct. 817, 82 L. Ed. 1188 (requiring HN87[] federal courts to apply the substantive law of the state in which [147] the claim arose).

This analytical approach should not be remarkable given that courts have approached similar questions as to a particular jurisdiction's preclusion of an unjust enrichment claim in the context of indirect purchasers by examining the law of the specific jurisdiction. See, e.g., In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig., 241 F. Supp. 2d 563, 565 (D. Md. 2003) (concluding that because a Kentucky court "held that a more specific statute controls over a more general one [under Kentucky law]," "a claim for damages for antitrust violations cannot be asserted under the Kentucky Consumer Protection Act where they cannot be asserted under Kentucky's version of the Sherman Act" and "[t]his same reasoning equally applies to a common law claim for unjust enrichment arising from antitrust violations"); In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig., 401 F. Supp. 2d 461, 464 (D. Md. 2005) (determining that "the specific bar on indirect purchaser recovery incorporated into South Carolina's antitrust statutes prohibits Plaintiff's general common-law claim [for unjust enrichment]" because South Carolina law recognizes that "Where conflicting provisions exist, the last in point of time or order [148] of arrangement prevails. . . . Specific laws prevail over general laws"); Aikens v. Microsoft Corp., 159 F. App'x 471, 477 (4th Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (analyzing Louisiana's Civil Code, which provides that "the unjust enrichment remedy is 'subsidiary' in nature and 'shall not be available if the law provides another remedy for the impoverishment or declares a contrary rule'" and recognizing that "the [indirect purchaser] plaintiffs cannot sue to recover monetary damages under Louisiana antitrust law" to conclude plaintiffs "cannot employ a subsidiary unjust enrichment claim to circumvent this rule"); cf. Mack v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 673 So. 2d at 103 (concluding that the "DTPA should . . . be construed harmoniously and consistently with the Florida legislature's clear intent to allow only direct purchasers to sue for alleged price-fixing conspiracies" because the Florida Supreme Court has observed that "[c]ourts should avoid a construction which places in conflict statu[t]es which cover the same general field"; rather, where two statutes "relat[e] to the same purpose" they should be construed in harmony" (quoting City of Boca Raton v. Gidman, 440 So. 2d 1277, 1282 (Fla. 1983)).

Defendants [149] have referenced—through citation rather than analytical discussion—the rationales of several federal courts in support of their argument. Defs.' Mot. at 43 (citing Flonase, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 541-43; Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912, 936-37 (3d Cir. 1999); and *TFT-LCD [922] (Flat Panel), 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1191). By invoking those authorities, Defendants appear to rely on those cases' expression of the general principle—albeit, a principle not based upon or attributed to the laws of any specific jurisdictions—that a common law claim cannot circumvent, "end run," undermine, or subvert a statute. See, e.g., Flonase, 692 F. Supp. 2d at 542 ("Certain states have adopted Illinois Brick and deny indirect purchaser plaintiffs recovery under their state antitrust statutes. These states have adopted the policy of Illinois Brick to allow only direct purchasers, and not indirect purchasers, to recover from a defendant for antitrust violations. Allowing indirect purchasers to recover and recoup a benefit from the defendant under an unjust enrichment theory would circumvent the policy choice of Illinois Brick."); TFT-LCD (Flat Panel), 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1191 [150] (recognizing that "a number of cases . . . stand for th[e] general proposition" that indirect purchasers "may not circumvent the restrictions on antitrust claims under [certain states] by reframing those claims as unjust enrichment actions"); see also New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 209 (recognizing that permitting "freestanding" unjust enrichment claims "could result in restitution undermining another body of substantive law, to the extent that the scope of antitrust laws and consumer protection statutes is designed to permit unfettered economic activity in matters that are not within their proscription"; and that permitting "parasitic" unjust enrichment claims "would subvert the statutory scheme to allow these same indirect purchasers to secure, for the statutory violation, restitutionary relief at common law (or in equity)"). [55]

[54] Defendants originally presented this argument in a far broader context, claiming generally that the Court should dismiss the "Plaintiffs' tag-along unjust enrichment claims in states where Plaintiffs' lack standing to bring their primary claims or where the primary claim fail[s] as a matter of law. Thus, for the same reasons that each of Plaintiffs['] [146] statutory claims fail, their unjust enrichment claims should be dismissed as well." Defs.' Mot. at 43. Defendants did not identify the specific unjust enrichment claims that they were seeking to dismiss. Following the Plaintiffs' response brief, Defendants limited their argument to a charge that "Plaintiffs are attempting . . . an 'end run' around the Illinois Brick prohibitions of . . . Utah. . . . As such, Plaintiffs may not bring an unjust enrichment claim under . . . Utah law for conduct that occurred prior to May 1, 2006." Defs.' Reply at 23.

However, even if the general principles, as expressed by those [152] cases, are recognized across various state jurisdictions, that does not mean that a given jurisdiction, such as Utah, has adopted a particular legal principle or whether that principle is the only guidance that bears consideration. Compare 2B N. Singer & J. Singer, Sutherland on Statutory Construction § 50.1 (7th ed. 2008) (HN88[] "In cases of conflict between legislation and the common law, legislation governs because it is the latest expression of the law.") with id. ("Where there is a limitation by statute which is capable of more than one construction the statute must be given that construction which is consistent with common law. . . . The legislature is presumed to know the common law before a statute was enacted. Absent an indication that the legislature intends a statute [*923] to supplant common law, courts should not give it that effect." (footnote omitted)).

The cases upon which Defendants rely in no way indicate how Utah law treats the interplay between its statutory and common law schemes, and when common law might be precluded by statute (and statutory interpretation).HN89[] There is specific Utah law concerning statutory construction. See, e.g., Utah Code Ann. §§ 68-3-1, 68-3-2 (before and [153] after May 11, 2010 amendment); Daniels v. Gamma West Brachytherapy, LLC, 2009 UT 66, 221 P.3d 256, 270 (Utah 2009) ("A statute preempts a common law claim by specifically adopting a limitation or prohibition on a claim or by comprehensively addressing a particular area of law such that it displaces the common law."). Furthermore, unjust enrichment claims have deep roots in Utah law both pre-and post-dating Illinois Brick. See, e.g., Baugh v. Darley, 112 Utah 1, 184 P.2d 335, 337-40 (1947); Desert Miriah, Inc. v. B & L Auto, Inc., 2000 UT 83, 12 P.3d 580, 582-83 (Utah 2000). Defendants have not broached such matters; nor have they addressed whether or what role, if any, equity and the court's jurisdiction in equity might bear upon or play in determining the issue presented.

Moreover, Defendants have not established that the law of Utah ever affirmatively adopted the rationale of Illinois Brick as a "policy", statute, or otherwise prior to May 1, 2006. Cf. In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig., 127 F. Supp. 2d 702, 723 (D. Md. 2001) ("Some states . . . have adopted the policy that . . . . '[a]llowing [plaintiffs] to sue under [55] To the extent that Defendants rely on Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d at 936-37, such reliance is misplaced. In Steamfitters, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, addressing Pennsylvania law, distinguished unjust enrichment claims based upon tort from unjust enrichment claims based upon breach of contract. [151] The Court of Appeals determined that when an unjust enrichment claim is based upon a tort, its causation analysis is essentially the same as the tort. The court had earlier determined that the plaintiff's tort claim failed because causation was too remote. And in applying that same causation analysis to the unjust enrichment claim, the court determined that, like the tort claim, the unjust enrichment claim could be dismissed for remoteness. The court was thus treating the analyses under the two claims as if they were the same.

As a result, the court held, "We can find no justification for permitting plaintiffs to proceed on their unjust enrichment claim once we have determined that the District Court properly dismissed the traditional tort claims because of the remoteness of plaintiffs' injuries from defendants' wrongdoing." Id. at 937. Consequently, this statement cannot be read, as Defendants appear to believe, to stand for the proposition that dismissal of the tort claim in itself was the reason why the unjust enrichment claim was dismissed. Rather, the court dismissed both claims based on the same underlying rationale.

[the state deceptive trade practices act] on allegations that are virtually identical to the antitrust [154] allegations . . . would essentially permit an end run around the policies allowing only direct purchasers to recover under the Antitrust Act.' . . . Nevertheless, this policy has not been universally adopted. . . . In my judgment, [defendant] Microsoft paints with too broad a brush in seeking to extend this policy to states that have not affirmatively adopted it." (internal citations omitted)). [56] Likewise, Defendants have not addressed whether the specific amendments to the Utah Antitrust Act have any bearing on this issue. See, e.g., Utah Code Ann.§ 76-10-918 ("Actions may be brought under this section regardless of whether the plaintiff dealt directly or indirectly with the defendant. This remedy is an additional remedy to any other remedies provided by law. It may not diminish or offset any other remedy.").

This panoply of issues—and even others that have not been mentioned [57]—could have considerable bearing upon the disposition of the Defendants' argument for dismissal. [*924] But in the absence of analysis of any of these matters or in the context of any law specific to Utah, the Court cannot meaningfully discern their implications, and thus cannot appropriately or confidently rule as a matter of law on the partial dismissal of the Plaintiffs' claim. Therefore, the Court denies the Defendants' motion in this respect. [58]

7. Standing to Assert Unjust Enrichment Claim for Egg Products: New York

Defendants contend that the Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim under New York law fails insofar that the Plaintiffs' alleged losses resulting from "egg products" purchases of "manufactured products incorporating processed eggs such as baked goods and mayonnaise" are too remote to support such a claim. Defendants previously objected under Associated General Contractors to the breadth of the IPSAC's definition of "egg products" due to its inclusion of "manufactured products incorporating processed eggs," and now invoke those arguments as grounds for dismissing the Plaintiffs' New York unjust enrichment claim as to injuries due to purchases of "manufactured products incorporating processed eggs."

As previously discussed, Plaintiffs have agreed [157] to narrow the IPSAC's definition of "egg products" to not include "manufactured products incorporating processed eggs," and because this definition is central to the Defendants' arguments, the Court will refrain from considering the Defendants' argument at present without the actual amendment. Consequently, Court denies the Motion without prejudice to Defendants to raise these grounds for dismissal of the New York unjust enrichment claim based upon the amended definition of "egg products" as may then become appropriate.

8. Benefits Conferred on Defendants: 16 Jurisdictions

[56] This Court earlier observed in this Opinion that there is legal authority that has determined that indirect purchasers cannot not recover for damages accruing prior to the May 1, 2006 effective date of the amendment to the Utah Antitrust Act. However, the Court granted the Defendants' motion insofar that Plaintiffs did not dispute this authority and did not raise any objections [155] to Defendants' arguments. The Court's decision thus did not address or identify the specific operative law invoked by Defendants in support of their argument and whether such law constituted an affirmative adoption of Illinois Brick as a policy prior to May 1, 2006.

[57] This category of factors might include, inter alia, consideration of the Plaintiffs' theory of their Utah unjust enrichment claim—whether the claim is "parasitic" or "freestanding"—and the factual allegations pled in support of the claim. See New Motor Vehicles, 350 F. Supp. 2d at 209 (discussing how indirect purchasers could have brought their unjust enrichment claim under either theory); D.R. Ward, 470 F. Supp. 2d at 506 [156] (recognizing that "equitable remedies for unjust enrichment claims are often awarded when state statutory claims prove unsuccessful" (citing In re Cardizem Antitrust Litig., 105 F. Supp. 2d 618, 669 (E.D. Mich. 2000)).

[58] Of course, Defendants may renew this argument—insofar that Defendants choose to further and appropriately develop the argument—at another stage in this litigation.

All parties agree that an unjust enrichment claim under the laws of 16 jurisdictions—the District of Columbia, Florida, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin—requires Plaintiffs to plead as an element of the claim that they conferred a benefit upon Defendants. However, the parties dispute two matters concerning the requisites for pleading this element as to the 16 claims: (1) whether the IPSAC is devoid of factual allegations that Plaintiffs conferred any benefit upon Defendants; and (2) whether 10 of [158] the 16 jurisdictions at issue require (or likely would require) the conferral of a "direct benefit" as opposed to an "indirect benefit." The Court discusses these narrow issues in turn. [59]

a. Factual Allegations of Any Benefit Conferred

Defendants claim that the IPSAC does not allege that Plaintiffs conferred any benefit upon Defendants, and as a result, all 16 claims are deficient. Defendants initially posit that the only way to satisfy this element is for Plaintiffs to allege that they either "(1) purchased eggs that originated from Defendants' birds or (2) purchased eggs directly from Defendants." [*925] Defs.' Mot. at 23-24. According to Defendants, these are the only types of allegations that can show that Plaintiffs conferred a benefit on Defendants for purposes of the law of each of the 16 jurisdictions. As the parties' briefing proceeded, Defendants recalibrated and narrowed [159] their original argument. Nonetheless, this argument in its original and modified forms does not provide appropriate grounds for dismissal of the 16 claims at this time.

To start, Defendants failed to cite any persuasive legal authority in support of their initial claim that the two particular types of factual allegations as to the origin of the eggs purchased are necessary in all 16 jurisdictions at issue. Defendants have generally cited in a footnote one case per jurisdiction only to show that "a claim for unjust enrichment requires a plaintiff to plead and prove that it conferred a benefit upon the defendant." Defs.' Mot. at 44. Instead, Defendants have only cited Myzel v. Fields, 386 F. 2d 718, 744 n.21 (8th Cir. 1967), for the proposition that "Plaintiffs fail to meet this requirement [of pleading the conferral of benefit element] because no named Plaintiff alleges that it purchased eggs originally for any of the Defendants, let alone a specific Defendant." Defs.' Mot. at 44. Relying on the Restatement (First) of Restitution, Myzel merely articulates the observation that "an action for money had and received or for unjust enrichment differs at common law from tortious conversion [160] primarily on the basis that all the defendants may be held jointly liable in tort, while only those who have benefited are liable, and then only to the extent thereof, in an action for unjust enrichment." Id. at 744 n.21. The case simply does not do the legwork that is necessary to support Defendants' argument specific to each of the 16 jurisdictions.

Although Defendants appear to narrow the issue presented in their reply brief, the recalibrated argument does not comport with the IPSAC's allegations. Defendants raise no objections to the Plaintiffs' rebuttal that it is unnecessary to plead factual allegations concerning specifics about the origins of their purchases and that the 16 jurisdictions are permissive in allowing the "conferral" to be non-monetary form of advantage. Indeed, Defendants accept this proposition of law, stating that "restitution is typically available where—to take a textbook example—a doctor provides medical assistance to the incapacitated victim of an automobile accident." Defs.' Reply at 25. Even so, Defendants argue: "However, the IPSAC is devoid of any allegations of any such non-monetary 'benefit' that Plaintiffs conferred on Defendants." Id.

The Defendants' [161] characterization of the IPSAC is incorrect as the IPSAC has alleged certain factual allegations to show that the Defendants' alleged benefit is conferred by virtue of the act of the named Plaintiffs' purchasing eggs. Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that the egg market has particular "structural features":

> (a) the lack of product differentiation or high substitutability of product between different producers; (b) the prevalence of cross marketing arrangements that facilitate price communication between rivals; (c) relative concentration within the industry; and (d) high demand price inelasticity.

[59] The Defendants have presented these issues in such a way that the Court is not being asked to address any questions involving whether for purposes of Rule 12(b)(6) Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged facts that plausibly suggest the "conferral of a benefit" element, as defined by each of the jurisdictions' law.

IPSAC ¶ 119. Plaintiffs further plead as to each of the 16 jurisdictions that Defendants leveraged these particular facets of the egg market to advance the aims of their alleged conspiracy, thereby receiving the "benefit" of increased revenues and profits because the prices in the egg market as a whole were artificially inflated:

> The Defendants were able to achieve their increased revenues and profits [*926] from their sales of eggs to [Name of State] indirect purchasers because the demand for eggs by indirect purchasers is relatively price inelastic, as Defendants understood. Thus, the ability of Defendants [162] to profit from their sales of eggs to indirect purchasers in [Name of State] was connected to and due to the increased prices paid for Defendants eggs by indirect purchasers in [Name of State].

See, e.g., IPSAC ¶¶ 346, 354, 361.

This narrative of factual allegations plausibly suggests that the Plaintiffs' losses in purchasing eggs at artificially-inflated prices are connected to the Defendants' benefits. A fundamental function of the egg market as alleged in the IPSAC is the demand for eggs, as manifested by consumer purchases of eggs. Thus, even if Plaintiffs did not purchase eggs from a retailer who purchased from a specific Defendant, Defendants nevertheless obtained the benefit of Plaintiffs purchasing eggs at an artificially inflated price because each and every egg purchase by consumers would contribute to increasing (or sustaining at an artificial level) egg prices in a market in which the alleged supply of eggs was artificially decreased. In other words, the claim is that Defendants allegedly manipulated the supply curve of the market recognizing that because demand was inelastic and eggs are essentially a commodity good (i.e., minimal product differentiation), prices would increase [163] in response to, and as a result of, consumer purchases regardless of whether they were purchased from a Defendant or a non-conspirator. Accordingly, any demand-side activity in the egg market, i.e., the Plaintiffs' purchases, would financially benefit Defendants generally because their eggs would be selling at a market price that was artificially inflated. See also IPSAC ¶ 56 n.4 (describing the company, Urner Barry, Inc., as "a price reporting service for the egg industry . . . [which produces] newsletters [that] publish egg price quotations that are widely relied on in the setting of wholesale egg prices under spot purchasers and long-term contracts"). [60]

[60] However, to the extent that Plaintiffs also argue that the IPSAC has factual allegations from which it can be inferred that the eggs purchased originated with the Defendants, this approach is unsuccessful. The Plaintiffs' characterizations of the IPSAC are inconsistent with the actual allegations.

In defining the various state class members, the IPSAC alleges as to each class that "[a]ll individuals and entities residing in [Name of State] that indirectly purchased shell eggs and/or egg products produced from shell eggs produced [164] from Defendants' or their co-conspirators' caged birds." IPSAC ¶ 108. However, as Defendants correctly argue, there are no factual allegations as to the origin of the eggs purchased by the named individual Plaintiffs. See IPSAC ¶¶ 19-44 ("This Plaintiff indirectly purchased shell eggs and/or egg products during the Class Period and was injured as a result of Defendants' illegal conduct."). The claims brought by the named individual Plaintiffs are the focus of this motion to dismiss.

Plaintiffs argue that "the policies at issue - the conspiracy—are the official policies of a membership organization[] representing 'more than 95% of [the] nation's laying hens' and essentially all the largest producers." Pls.' Resp. at 41 (citing IPSAC ¶¶ 47-51). By highlighting this allegation, Plaintiffs attempt to imply that 95% of laying hens in the egg industry were subject to the alleged conspiracy, and as such, when Plaintiffs made any egg purchase, they more than likely were purchasing from the Defendants. However, the factual allegation cited describes UEP alone and not the named Defendants as a group, so the allegation can only stand for what it says: UEP as an organization represents 95% of domestic [165] laying hens (by representing 198 producer members, IPSAC ¶ 136).

While UEP as an organization might represent that percentage of laying hens, that does not necessarily mean that 95% of laying hens were covered by the alleged conspiracy. As alleged, UEP was not an egg producer itself. See also id. ¶ 283 ("UEP has declared that it did not sell eggs to consumers."); id. ¶ 284 ("UEP does not 'market' its members' products."). And given the alleged operation of the conspiracy, it would be incumbent upon producers to effectuate the eight "coordinated actions," and thus adopt and institute UEP's policies. If follows that the hens that UEP "represents," are not hens controlled by UEP, and thus would not reflect the number of hens actually producing "conspiracy eggs." See also id. ¶ 162 ("As of May 6, 2002, 123 companies with ownership of 167 million hens filed for "Application of Certification" and agreed to implement the guidelines

[*927] Thus, contrary to the Defendants' argument otherwise, Plaintiffs have pled factual allegations that plausibly suggest that they conferred a non-monetary form of advantage—the act of purchasing eggs. As alleged, these acts, given the conditions of the egg market and the Defendants' conduct in furtherance of the conspiracy, allowed Defendants to obtain the benefit of "increased revenues and profits from their sales of eggs."

The Defendants' final retuning of their argument also does not provide sufficient grounds for dismissal. Defendants assert, "even if such allegations were found in the IPSAC, and even if Plaintiffs had explained how they 'conferred' this 'benefit' on Defendants, Plaintiffs have not cited a single authority permitting an unjust enrichment claim based on such an allegation." Defs.' Reply at 25 n.18. Even assuming this is true, Defendants likewise [167] have not cited any authority (and certainly no authorities specific to each of the 16 jurisdictions) that bars an unjust enrichment claim based upon such a factual premise as a matter of law. But Defendants have accepted the Plaintiffs' legal proposition that a "'benefit' conferred can be any form of advantage, not just the indirect payment of money." Defs.' Reply at 25 (emphasis added). This legal proposition embraces the notion that a plaintiff can "confer" her conduct to enrich a defendant. It follows that the Court cannot conclude at this time as a matter of law as to the 16 jurisdictions at issue that the Plaintiffs' factual allegations that their acts of purchasing eggs conferred the Defendants' benefit of increased revenues from their egg sales are insufficient to show that plaintiffs conferred any benefit upon Defendants. [61] In this respect, the Defendants' motion to dismiss is denied.

b. Conferral of a "Direct Benefit"

For reasons previously discussed, supra, Plaintiffs have not alleged that they directly [168] conferred a benefit upon Defendants. In other words, Plaintiffs have not pled facts to show that the named Plaintiffs' purchased eggs directly from Defendants. [62] Defendants argue that this deficiency is fatal to the Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims in 10 jurisdictions—the District of Columbia, Florida, Kansas, Minnesota, New York, North Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, and West Virginia. As to those jurisdictions, Defendants contend that only by pleading a [*928] direct purchase from Defendants can Plaintiffs maintain this claim.

Thus, the issue presented by the Defendants' next argument is whether the law of those 10 jurisdictions require (or likely would require) the conferral of a "direct benefit" as opposed to an "indirect benefit." If a jurisdiction requires such a "direct benefit" to state a claim, then dismissal of the Plaintiffs' claim is warranted. The Court proceeds to examine what the law of the 10 jurisdictions requires as to this element in terms of two categories: (1) 5 jurisdictions that Defendants claim require a "direct [169] benefit," and (2) 5 jurisdictions that Defendants claim likely require a "direct benefit."

i. Claimed "Direct Benefit" Jurisdictions

Defendants claim that "Plaintiffs must prove that they directly conferred a benefit on Defendants" as to unjust enrichment claims brought under the laws of Florida, Kansas, New York, North Carolina, and Utah. The Court including increasing space allowance on 100% of their facilities. As of July 1, 2002, it was 137 companies, representing 188 million layers.").

Regardless, to the extent that Plaintiffs are attempting to intimate that the IPSAC alleges that the Defendants' laying [166] hens collectively produced 95% (or an otherwise high percentage) of the egg market (including egg products as currently defined by the IPSAC) and thus that the Plaintiffs' alleged egg purchases were originally produced by Defendants, this is unproductive. There are no allegations that directly or inferentially support such a claim.

[61] This is not to say that at another stage of the litigation that similar arguments—arguments further developed in relation to jurisdiction-specific law—might or might not prevail.

[62] Defendants appear to argue that by definition only direct purchasers, and not indirect purchasers, can meet this "direct benefit" requirement.

determines that none of these states' laws necessarily require as a matter of law for Plaintiffs to "prove that they directly conferred a benefit on Defendants" in order to state an unjust enrichment claim.

aa. Florida

Defendants rely on Peoples National Bank of Commerce v. First Union National Bank of Florida, 667 So. 2d 876 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996) and several cases that adopt its rationale, including Extraordinary Title Services, LLC v. Florida Power & Light Co., 1 So.3d 400 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2009), to argue that Florida law requires pleading that a plaintiff directly confer a benefit upon a defendant. In Peoples National, the state court determined that the plaintiff "could not and did not allege that it had directly conferred a benefit on the defendants" and that "if any benefit was conferred upon each [defendant] in the form of overpayments, [170] it could only have been conferred upon them by [a third-party with which plaintiff and defendants had entered into a loan agreement], not [defendant]." Peoples National, 667 So. 2d at 879.

The Court agrees that it appears the courts in Peoples National and the cases cited by Defendants have determined that an allegation or evidence of a "direct benefit" is required. Nonetheless, there exists other valid Florida law that does not require direct interactions between the plaintiff and defendant in order for a benefit to have been conferred. See Variety Children's Hosp., 385 So. 2d 1052,1053-54 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1980) (holding that a mother was unjustly enriched when a "the hospital rendered its services to her child" because she received the "'legal' benefit" of fulfilling her lawful "duty to provide support for a minor child"); Hillman Constr. Corp. v. Wainer, 636 So. 2d 576, 577-78 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1994) (determining that a general contractor plaintiff had sufficiently stated a claim for unjust enrichment against a commercial rental property owner because contractor had made "several improvements [to the property] which ha[d] enhanced the value of the premises and allowed the owner [171] to relet them at an increased rent" after a former commercial tenant, who had contracted with the contractor to perform the services but failed to pay the contractor and filed for bankruptcy); Merkle v. Health Options, Inc., 940 So. 2d 1190, 1199 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2006) (concluding that a medical service provider plaintiff had an unjust enrichment claim against HMO defendants for medically treating the HMOs' subscribers).

Shands Teaching Hospital and Clinics, Inc. v. Beech Street Corp., 899 So. 2d 1222 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2005), illustrates how Florida law allows unjust enrichment claims to arise from the conferral of an [*929] indirect benefit. In Shands, the state appellate court held that the plaintiff had sufficiently pled that the defendant "was unjustly enriched at [the plaintiff's] expense." Id. at 1228. The plaintiff, a hospital, alleged that it conferred a benefit on the defendant, a third-party healthcare claims administrator, by providing medical services to the members of a PPO pursuant to a hospital provider agreement. Id. at 1227. The agreement's "terms conditioned [the hospital's] obligation to give discounts on receipt of timely payments." Id. The claims administrator who [172] was under a separate contract with the PPO, however, "did not make timely payments" and "did not make undiscounted payments," which resulted in underpayments to the hospital. Id. Thus, as alleged, the administrator, "despite the underpayments, . . . continued to reap the full benefit of [the hospital]'s services, which enabled [the administrator] to avoid breaching [its contract with the PPO] (and incurring liability for penalties)." Id. at 1227-28. Based upon these allegations, the court determined that, as pled, the administrator "was unjustly enriched by the value of services [the hospital] provided (in excess of the discounted rates at which [the hospital] was paid, when paid at all) to the extent they resulted in economic benefit conferred on [the administrator] under [the contract with the PPO]." Id. at 1228.

This line of cases demonstrates that HN90[] Florida courts recognize "that some benefit must flow to the party sought to be charged." Coffee Pot Plaza Partnership v. Arrow Air Conditioning and Refrigeration, Inc., 412 So. 2d 883, 884 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1982) (emphasis added) (citing Variety Children's Hosp., 385 So. 2d at 1053)); see also Commerce P'ship 8098 LP v. Equity Contracting Co., 695 So. 2d 383, 386 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1997) [173] ("Because the basis for recovery does not turn on the finding of an enforceable agreement, there may be recovery under a contract implied in law even where the parties had no dealings at all with each other." (citing Variety Children's Hosp., 385 So. 2d at 1053)).

Given that Florida law does not appear to require the conferral of a direct benefit exclusively, as Defendants claim, the Court cannot dismiss the Florida unjust enrichment claims as a matter of law by reason of a failure to adequately allege that Plaintiffs conferred a direct benefit upon Defendants.

bb. Kansas

The Court is not persuaded that HN91[] Kansas law requires the pleading of a conferral of a direct benefit. In support of their position, Defendants cite one, unpublished decision from the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals, Spires v. Hospital Corporation of America, 289 F. App'x 269, 273 (10th Cir. 2008) (unpublished), that the Court finds to be inapposite. That case addressed the issue of "unjust enrichment against parent corporations in the context of veil-piercing." Id. at 273 & n.2. No other legal authority to support such a theory of unjust enrichment under Kansas law has been cited to the Court.

Moreover, Defendants have [174] not raised any objections to the Plaintiffs' claim that "there is no requirement of a 'direct benefit' or even an in-kind benefit passing from plaintiffs to defendants under Kansas law," nor did Defendants challenge the cases cited by Plaintiffs in support of that claim. Pls.' Resp. at 45. [63] Indeed, the Court confirms that the cases cited by Plaintiffs demonstrate that Kansas law does not mandate the conferral of a direct [*930] benefit under an unjust enrichment. See, e.g., Peterson v. Midland Nat'l Bank, 242 Kan. 266, 747 P.2d 159, 166-67 (Kan. 1987) (observing that unjust enrichment can "arise[] . . . where an expenditure by one person adds to the property of another" and that plaintiff's "delivery of hay to the cattle which otherwise would have died" constituted a benefit to defendant, which had a security interest in the cattle, under circumstances where a plaintiff was hired by a third-party upon defendant's promise that it "would bear the cost" of delivering the feed); Sec. Ben. Life Ins. Corp. v. Fleming Cos., 21 Kan. App. 2d 833, 908 P.2d 1315, 1323 (Kan. App. 1995) (determining that allegations that plaintiff installed a new cash register system to improve a grocery store owned by a party that transferred the store [175] to the defendants as collateral for an unpaid loan the day the system installation was completed were sufficient to state an unjust enrichment claim).

In sum, Kansas unjust enrichment law allows claims for the conferral of indirect benefits. Thus, a failure to plead a "direct benefit" cannot be appropriate grounds for dismissal, and the Court will not dismiss the Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim under Kansas law.

cc. New York

In Sperry v. Crompton Corp., 8 N.Y.3d 204, 863 N.E.2d 1012, 1018, 831 N.Y.S.2d 760 (N.Y. 2007), the Court of Appeals of New York held HN92[] "a plaintiff need not be in privity with the defendant to state a claim for unjust enrichment," but their relationship cannot be "too attenuated." One federal court has explained that this means that "a product's indirect purchaser cannot assert an unjust enrichment claim against an entity that manufactured one of that product's ingredients," but that an "indirect purchaser can assert such an unjust enrichment claim against the manufacturer of the product itself." Waldman v. New Chapter, Inc., 714 F. Supp. 2d 398, 403-04 (E.D.N.Y. 2010); [176] see also SMW, 263 F.R.D. at 216 (recognizing that "strict privity between the plaintiff and defendant is not required" and discussing instances when "New York courts have found numerous relationships 'too attenuated' to support" an unjust enrichment claim).

This case law demonstrates that the Defendants' contention that "Plaintiffs must prove that they directly conferred a benefit on Defendants" is misplaced as to New York law. New York law does not require such a direct relationship. Indeed, the solitary case that Defendants cited in support of their position, In re Bayou Hedge Funds Investment Litigation, 472 F. Supp. 2d 528, 532 (S.D.N.Y. 2007), was issued a month earlier than Sperry, and does not embody the current state of New York law. Cf. Waldman, 714 F. Supp. 2d at 403 ("Defendant accurately describes [63] Defendants do not address the Plaintiffs' argument on this point of Kansas law, suggesting that Defendants have abandoned this argument.

New York law in 1997, as the S.D.N.Y. understood it. But this is not the law today, as promulgated by New York's own courts.").

Thus, although Plaintiffs have not alleged facts suggesting the conferral of a direct benefit, such a deficit is not in and of itself fatal to a New York unjust enrichment claim as a matter of law. The motion to dismiss on these grounds is denied.

dd. North [177] Carolina

Defendants argue that North Carolina law requires Plaintiffs to plead the conferral of a direct benefit in order to state an unjust enrichment claim as announced by Effler v. Pyles, 94 N.C. App. 349, 380 S.E.2d 149, 152 (N.C. Ct. App. 1989). In Effler, in evaluating a summary judgment motion, the appellate court determined that the plaintiff did not confer a benefit upon the defendant. The plaintiff was the former mother-in-law of a man who had remarried; the defendant was the man's second wife. Id. at 150. The mother-in-law was the co-signer of a note that [*931] enabled her daughter, the first wife, and her then-son-in-law to buy a house. Id. The man and the first wife had promised the mother-in-law that they would make the payments on the loan. Id. After the first wife died, the mother-in-law made loan payments for the property after the man stopped making the payments. Id. Later, the man conveyed the property to himself and his second wife as tenants by the entireties, and then the couple sold the house, but did not apply the proceeds to the note that plaintiff had co-signed. Id. The mother-in-law brought the unjust enrichment claim against the second wife, contending that the second wife benefitted [178] from the funds that were not applied to the plaintiff's note. Id. The court concluded:

> Plaintiff has not shown that she conferred a benefit on defendant [second wife]. [Second wife] received title to the property through her husband. Although he had previously acquired his interest in this property with plaintiff's assistance, this does not satisfy plaintiff's burden of showing that she conferred a benefit directly on defendant [second wife].

Id. at 152.

Defendants rely on the holding's reliance on the word "directly" as an accurate embodiment of North Carolina law, and highlight that another court has recognized the same. See Defs.' Mot. at 45 n.23 (citing Baker Constr. v. City of Burlington, 200 N.C. App. 435, 683 S.E.2d 790 (N.C. Ct. App. 2009) (Table) (unpublished)). In Baker, the appellate court remarked, citing Effler, that "this Court has limited the scope of a claim of unjust enrichment such that the benefit conferred must be conferred directly from plaintiff to defendant, not through a third party." 683 S.E.2d 790. Indeed, several other state courts have read Effler's usage of "directly" similarly. See Norman Owen Trucking, Inc. v. Morkoski, 131 N.C. App. 168, 506 S.E.2d 267, 274 (N.C. Ct. App. 1998) (recognizing [179] that an "essential element of plaintiff's claim" requires showing the "direct receipt by [defendant] of any benefit in consequence of plaintiff's performance of its contract with [a third-party]" and "show[ing] that [defendant] 'consciously accepted'"); see also *Town of Carolina Shores v. Continental Ins. Co., Inc., No. 7:10-CV-13-D, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114017, 2010 WL 4338437, at 5 (E.D.N.C. Oct. 26, 2010) ("The benefit would not be conferred directly from [defendant] to [plaintiff]. Rather, the benefit would be conferred through a third party, the Town. Furthermore, as mentioned, [plaintiff] acquired [the property] through a foreclosure sale.").

Nonetheless, the Court is not convinced at this time that the Supreme Court of North Carolina would agree with this narrow, highly technical, approach to an unjust enrichment theory of liability. First, there is some indication in Effler itself that its usage of the word "directly" is an aberration in North Carolina law because the decision references no case law or legal authority that might explain its specific rationale on this point or word choice. Indeed, "the Effler court relied on the North Carolina Supreme Court's decision in Booe v. Shadrick, 322 N.C. 567, 369 S.E.2d 554 (N.C. 1988). [180] Booe did not, however, require that a benefit be direct to state an unjust enrichment claim." TFT-LCD (Flat Panel), 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1190. Another North Carolina court has restricted the Effler holding to its facts, stating that the "'direct benefit' rule does not address such a scenario [as presented by the facts of the case] and, accordingly, does not foreclose equitable relief on these facts." *Perkins v. HealthMarkets, Inc., No. 06 CVS 21053, 2007 NCBC LEXIS 25, 2007 WL 2570242, at 9 (N.C. Super. Ct. July 30, 2007) (unpublished).

[*932] Second, and more significantly, a Supreme Court of North Carolina decision issued subsequent to Effler is instructive on that court's more expansive view of unjust enrichment and the role or particulars of the conferral of a benefit element. In Embree Constr. Group, Inc. v. Rafcor, Inc., 330 N.C. 487, 411 S.E.2d 916 (N.C. 1992), the Supreme Court addressed the issue of whether a general contractor plaintiff, which had entered into an agreement to build a restaurant with the property owner and completed the construction before the owner defaulted on its construction loan with bank defendant, had stated a claim for unjust enrichment against the defendant bank. The defendant bank did not [181] allegedly "benefit directly" from plaintiff within the meaning of Effler. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant bank was unjustly enriched at plaintiff's expense because the bank did not disburse the funds remaining in the construction loan to plaintiff, but also acquired the completed building as a security for the loan, thereby receiving the benefit it had bargained under the loan agreement with the property owner. Id. at 919, 922. Based upon those facts alleged, the court agreed that the bank defendant was unjustly enriched. Id. at 922.

That the claim in Embree arose in the context of an equitable lien is of little consequence because it is still invokes the same principles of unjust enrichment that are recognized under North Carolina law. [64] Indeed, both the Embree and Effler decisions rely on Booe. See Embree, 411 S.E.2d at 923 (HN93[] "'A person who has been unjustly enriched at the expense of another is required to make restitution to the other.'" (quoting Booe, 369 S.E.2d at 555-56)); Effler, 380 S.E.2d at 152 ("In [182] order to establish a claim for unjust enrichment, a party must have conferred a benefit on the other party [and] the defendant must have consciously accepted the benefit.'" (quoting Booe, 369 S.E.2d at 555)).

Accordingly, the Court determines that HN94[] North Carolina law embraces a broader definition of "conferral of a benefit" beyond only the conferral of a direct benefit. See also TFT-LCD (Flat Panel), 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1190 (following Booe's articulation of an unjust enrichment claim in lieu of Effler and recognizing that Booe" did not . . .require [183] that a benefit be direct to state an unjust enrichment claim"); SMW, 737 F. Supp. 2d at 442 ("Because the cases following Effler place into serious question any argument that Effler stands for a direct benefit requirement in North Carolina, I do not believe this is a valid ground for dismissal of plaintiffs' North Carolina unjust enrichment claim."); Metric Constructors, Inc. v. Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi, Ltd., 72 F. App'x 916, 921 (4th Cir. 2003) (unpublished) (recognizing that Embree "suggests a broader approach to unjust enrichment than is indicated by Effler's 'direct benefit' rule"). Therefore, the Court cannot agree that North Carolina law on unjust enrichment requires Plaintiffs to allege a "direct benefit," and denies the motion to dismiss in this regard.

ee. Utah

The Court does not adopt the Defendants' claim that Utah law necessarily [*933] requires a plaintiff to plead the conferral of a "direct benefit." Defendants have cited several Utah Supreme Court cases that have used the term "direct benefit" in the decisions. However, in those cases the usage of the term does not conform with the Defendants' characterization of the law. [65]

[64] See id. at 923 (recognizing that a remedy for unjust enrichment is an equitable lien); see generally Restatement (First) of Restitution § 4 ("In situations in which a person is entitled to restitution, he is entitled, in an appropriate case, to one or more of the following remedies: . . . (d) a decree by a court of equity that a lien upon the subject matter or its proceeds be established, enforced, discharged, or reduced."); Restatement (Third) of Restitution & Unjust Enrichment § 56 ("An equitable lien secures the obligation of the defendant to pay the claimant the amount of the defendant's unjust enrichment as separately determined.").

[65] One of those cases cited, Concrete Products Co. v. Salt Lake County, 734 P.2d 910 (Utah 1987), [184] is entirely inapposite because its facts are based upon the finding that the defendant received no benefit whatsoever. See id. at 912 (recognizing that as a result of the plaintiffs' supply of concrete for curbs and gutters for a development in the county, the defendant, the County, would not receive a benefit because the "County will raise no revenue from the curbs and gutters, nor will it acquire a building with intrinsic value. Instead, it will incur the expenses of cleaning and maintaining curbs and gutters with no resale value or intrinsic economic worth.").

In Baugh v. Darley, 112 Utah 1, 184 P.2d 335 (Utah 1947), the Supreme Court determined that the real estate agent plaintiff had not unjustly enriched the defendant, a former owner of a property that was sold to plaintiff. The Court recognized:

> The mere fact that a person benefits another is not of itself sufficient to require the other to make restitution therefor. . . . Services officiously or gratuitiously furnished are not recoverable. . . . Nor are services performed by the plaintiff for his own advantage, and from which the defendant benefits incidentally, recoverable.
> Services performed by the plaintiff outside the terms of [185] the agreement [of sale] would, of course, ordinarily be voluntary and, therefore, such services could not in any case be recoverable regardless of the statute of frauds. However, one might perform work or services intended for his own benefit, or for the benefit of another, in reliance upon as distinguished from in pursuance of an unenforceable agreement. Generally, unless such services enhance or benefit the property of the defendant or otherwise confer on him a direct benefit, they do not form the basis for a contract imposed by law because there is no 'unjust enrichment' as that term is used in law. Where such services operate to confer a direct benefit upon the defendant, they may be recoverable.

Id. at 337 (emphasis added).

In another case cited by Defendants, Jeffs v. Stubbs, 970 P.2d 1234 (Utah 1998), the Supreme Court more recently addressed the conception of "direct benefit" under Utah law. In Jeffs, the court observed that Darley spoke to the third element of unjust enrichment under Utah law, "the acceptance or retention by the conferee of the benefit under such circumstances as to make it inequitable for the conferee to retain the benefit without payment of its value," rather [186] than the first element, namely, "a benefit conferred on one person by another." Id. (quoting Am. Towers Owners Ass'n v. CCI Mech., Inc., 930 P.2d 1182, 1192 (1996), abrogated on other grounds by Davencourt at Pilgrims Landing Homeowners Ass'n v. Davencourt at Pilgrims Landing, LC, 2009 UT 65, 221 P.3d 234 (2009)). The court further explained that "direct benefit" should be understood in the broader context of the principles of unjust enrichment:

> We addressed the third element in Baugh v. Darley, 112 Utah 1, 184 P.2d 335 (1947). This court stated:
> Unjust enrichment of a person occurs when he has and retains money or benefits which in justice and equity belong to another. The benefit may be ... beneficial services conferred . . . .
> . . . .
> [*934] Services officiously or gratuitously furnished are not recoverable. Nor are services performed by the plaintiff for his own advantage, and from which the defendant benefits incidentally, recoverable.
> Id. at 337 (internal citations omitted). Here, the claimants improved the land in reliance upon the [owner defendant]'s representations that they could live on the land for the rest of their lives. Even though the claimants intended to benefit from the improvements by occupying them [187] during their lifetimes, the claimants' services still conferred a direct, not incidental, benefit on the [owner defendant].

Id. at 1248 (emphasis added).

Both of these decisions demonstrate that the use of "direct" is used to draw a distinction from "incidental," as in the realm of a "by-product," specifically to explicate that "services performed by the plaintiff for his own advantage" cannot constitute grounds for unjust enrichment. Indeed, the Supreme Court of Utah has articulated this principle another way:

> HN95[] The benefit conferred satisfies this requirement if the defendant's retention of the benefit would be unjust without providing compensation. . . . [U]njust enrichment does not result if the defendant has received only an incidental benefit from the plaintiff's service . . . .

Emergency Physicians Integrated Care v. Salt Lake County, 2007 UT 72, 167 P.3d 1080, 1086 (Utah 2007); see also Berrett v. Stevens, 690 P.2d 553, 558 (Utah 1984) ("The value of services performed by a person for his own advantage and from which another benefits incidentally are not recoverable."). Furthermore, Utah law recognizes that benefits under unjust enrichment are broadly defined. Darley, 184 P.2d at 337 ("The benefit [188] may be an interest in money, land, chattels, or choses in action; beneficial services conferred; satisfaction of a debt or duty owed by him; or anything which adds to his security or advantage."). Thus, neither of the cases cited by Defendants provides sufficient support for their argument that under Utah law "Plaintiffs must prove that they directly conferred a benefit on Defendants," i.e., pleading that Plaintiffs purchased directly from Defendants.

Accordingly, the Court concludes that HN96[] Utah law does not mandate that a plaintiff demonstrate that she directly conferred a benefit upon a defendant. The Court denies the motion in this respect.

ii. Likely "Direct Benefit" Jurisdictions

Defendants argue that the courts of five jurisdictions—the District of Columbia, Minnesota, South Dakota, Vermont, and West Virginia—"have not ruled on whether a plaintiff must directly confer a benefit upon defendant." Defs.' Mot. at 46. Nonetheless, they contend that it is appropriate for the Court to predict that these five jurisdictions would require a plaintiff to confer a direct benefit on a defendant in order to field an unjust enrichment claim solely because some other jurisdictions require the same [189] unjust enrichment elements and have held that the conferral of a direct benefit is required.

The Third Circuit Court of Appeals has explained that HN97[] when a federal court sitting in diversity must make a prediction as to a precise legal issue a certain legal standard must be satisfied. In doing so, the Court is required to consult and evaluate particular sources of legal authority:

> In adjudicating a case under state law, we are not free to impose our own view of what state law should be; rather, we are to apply existing state law as interpreted by the state's highest court in an effort to predict how that court would decide the precise legal issues before us. Kowalsky v. Long Beach Township, 72 F.3d 385, 388 [*935] (3d Cir. 1995). In the absence of guidance from the state's highest court, we must look to decisions of state intermediate appellate courts, of federal courts interpreting that state's law, and of other state supreme courts that have addressed the issue. Wiley, 995 F.2d at 459-60. We must also consider "analogous decisions, considered dicta, scholarly works, and any other reliable data tending convincingly to show how the highest court in the state would decide the issue at hand." McGowan v. University of Scranton, 759 F.2d 287, 291 (3d Cir. 1985) [190] (quoting McKenna v. Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp., 622 F.2d 657, 663 (3d Cir. 1980)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Koppers Co., Inc. v. Aetna Cas. and Sur. Co., 98 F.3d 1440, 1445 (3d Cir. 1996).

Defendants have urged the Court to predict that the five jurisdictions likely would require a "direct benefit" if the issue was presented to those jurisdictions' highest courts. However, aside from arguing that the Court should look to the five jurisdictions that Defendants claim do require a direct benefit (a conclusion that the Court declined as to each of those jurisdictions, supra), Defendants have provided no other legal authority from which the Court might predict, consistent with the Third Circuit standard, whether those five jurisdictions would require pleading a "direct benefit." Certainly, especially in a far-ranging case such as this, the task is decidedly daunting to collect and analyze non-definitive case law and then predict what various courts around the country would do with a case, recognizing that it is entirely possible that those predictions may—indeed, likely will—be not entirely consistent. But given the posture of these issues as presented to the Court at this time, [191] it is virtually impossible for the Court to undertake this task with any certainty now. Plaintiffs have argued that "in light of the general principles underlying such [unjust enrichment] actions—to prevent parties from benefitting from their wrongdoing—[which] apply in all states, absent strong evidence from the relevant state courts, this court should not imply such a requirement." Pls. Resp. at 42. Defendants have not raised any argument disagreeing with this proposition.

Furthermore, Plaintiffs contend the unjust enrichment claims do "not require such a direct benefit," and provide moderate analysis of the "conferral of a benefit" requirement on a state-by-state basis as to the District of Columbia, Minnesota, South Dakota, Vermont, and West Virginia. Pls.' Resp. at 42-43, 47, 49-52. In their reply brief, Defendants do not address such analyses whatsoever with respect to the claims brought under the laws of the District of Columbia, Minnesota, and Vermont. Through their silence, it appears Defendants have no objections to the Plaintiffs' justifications for their claims. Insofar that Defendants have apparently protested certain of the Plaintiffs' supporting legal authority as to [192] unjust enrichment claims of South Dakota and West Virginia, the Court does not agree with the Defendants' contention that W.J. Bachman Mechanical Sheetmetal Co., Inc. v. Wal-Mart Real, 2009 SD 25, 764 N.W.2d 722, 732-33 (S.D. 2009), or Prudential Insurance Co. of America v. Couch, 180 W. Va. 210, 376 S.E.2d 104, 109 (W.Va. 1988), support their claim that Plaintiffs must allege that they directly conferred a benefit on Defendants. [66]

It follows that the Court declines at this time to make the predictions of law for [*936] which Defendants advocate. The Court determines that it is appropriate to deny the motion to dismiss the unjust enrichment claims under the laws of the District of Columbia, Minnesota, South Dakota, Vermont, and West Virginia on the grounds that Plaintiffs failed to allege that they conferred a direct benefit upon Defendants.

VI. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court denies in part and grants in part the Defendants' motion consistent with the [193] terms delineated in this Opinion. Insofar that the Court grants in part the Motion without prejudice, Plaintiffs may seek leave to amend their complaint upon the appropriate motion, or stipulation, provided that they do so promptly.

An appropriate Order follows.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 19th day of March, 2012, upon consideration of the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Second Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint (Docket No. 332), and the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' response (Doc. No. 355), the Defendants' reply (Doc. No. 385), and the parties' supplemental filings thereto, and for the reasons stated in the accompanying Opinion, it is hereby ORDERED that the Motion (Doc. No. 332) is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part consistent with the terms of the Court's Opinion. [1]

[66] The Defendants' contention that these two cases support their position is contradicted by the Defendants' original position that these jurisdictions "have not ruled on whether a plaintiff must directly confer a benefit upon defendant." Defs.' Mot. at 46.

[1] To wit, the Court dismisses the Utah Antitrust Act claim with respect to alleged damages occurring prior to May 1, 2006 contained in Count XXII.

The Court dismisses without prejudice: (1) the federal and state antitrust claims with respect to alleged injuries relating to purchases of manufactured products incorporating [194] processed eggs contained in Counts I, II, III, IV, VI, VII, X, XI, XII, XIII, XIV, XV, XVI, XVII, XVIII, XX, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, and XXV; (2) the Kansas Consumer Protection Act claim contained in Count VII; (3) the General Business Law § 349 of the New York Consumer Protection Statute claim contained in Count XVI; (4) the West Virginia Consumer Credit and Protection Act claim contained in Count XXIV; and (5) the North Dakota unjust enrichment claim contained in Count XVIII.

Additionally, pursuant to the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' withdrawal of certain claims at oral argument, the following claims are dismissed: (1) all claims brought under Maine law contained in Count VIII; (2) all claims brought under Puerto Rico law contained in Count XIX; (3) the claim brought under Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 445.901, et seq. contained in Count X; (4) the claim brought under S.D. Codified Laws Ann. §37-24, et seq. contained in Count XX; and (5) the claim brought under Wis. Stat. §§ 100.18, et seq. contained in Count XXV.

Insofar that the Court grants in part the Motion without prejudice, Plaintiffs may seek leave to amend their complaint upon the appropriate motion, or stipulation, provided that [195] they do so promptly.

HN4[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When deciding a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the court must accept the material facts alleged in the complaint as true, draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiffs, and decide whether it is plausible that plaintiffs have a valid claim for relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, and assert a cause of action with enough heft to show entitlement to relief and enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations. The plausibility standard set forth in Twombly and Ashcroft v. Iqbal obligates the plaintiff to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief through more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action. Plausibility at the pleading stage is nonetheless distinct from probability, and a well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof of the claims is improbable, and recovery is very remote and unlikely.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

The party who seeks to exercise the jurisdiction of the court bears the burden of establishing the court's jurisdiction. To survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) motion, a plaintiff must clearly allege facts demonstrating that the plaintiff is a proper party to invoke judicial resolution of the dispute. Although the plaintiff bears the ultimate burden of establishing jurisdiction by a preponderance of the evidence, until discovery takes place, a plaintiff is required only to make a prima facie showing by pleadings and affidavits that jurisdiction exists. When considering a party's standing, a court accepts as true all material allegations of the complaint, and must construe the complaint in favor of the complaining party. If a plaintiff has failed to allege facts supportive of standing, it is within the court's discretion to allow or to require the plaintiff to supply, by amendment to the complaint or by affidavits, further particularized allegations of fact deemed supportive of standing.

Section 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158(e), applies to union signatory subcontracting clauses so long as they are sought or negotiated in the context of a collective bargaining agreement, and the proviso does not shelter only clauses aimed at preventing shoulder-to-shoulder friction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN11[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Certain clauses in collective bargaining agreements, even those concerning the construction industry, can act as a direct restraint on the business market in a manner having substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential. Restrictive clauses may be challenged under federal antitrust laws unless the clause is protected by both the construction industry proviso and an antitrust labor exemption.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN12[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Courts have long recognized the tension between national antitrust policy and national labor policy. In light of the competing interests of congressional policy favoring both collective bargaining under the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) and free competition in business, two antitrust exemptions are recognized. The statutory exemption provides that union activity is exempt from antitrust liability so long as the union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups. The non-statutory exemption provides that, where the alleged anticompetitive conduct is inherent in the collective-bargaining process, concerns only the parties to the collective bargaining relationship, and relates to wages, hours, conditions of employment, or other relevant subjects of collective bargaining, the restraints are lawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

HN13[] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

A court assessing whether an agreement is protected by the non-statutory exemption should consider the relative impact of the agreement on the product market and the interests of the union members. The court should first consider whether the agreement at issue furthers goals that are protected by national labor law and are within the scope of traditionally mandatory subjects of collective bargaining. Second, the court should consider whether the agreement imposes a direct restraint on the market that has substantial anticompetitive effects that do not follow naturally from the collective bargaining agreement. If the agreement is a legitimate collective bargaining agreement, then the "touchstone in assessing its validity must be the policies embodied in federal labor law. Traditionally, mandatory subjects in a collective bargaining agreement include wages, hours, fringe benefits, workplace conditions, and other subjects that are more likely to embody legitimate employee concerns about compensation, workplace, or security, and less likely to be restraints on competition. Accordingly, agreements between unions and firms that do not employ the unions' members are treated as encompassing non-mandatory subjects.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Pleading a § 1 claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made in restraint of trade. A plaintiff must offer plausible grounds to infer an agreement, which means enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN15[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Generally, restrictions on entities with whom contractors can subcontract are entirely permissible so long as those restrictions affect only the parties to the agreements, and the agreements concern wages, hours, or conditions of employment in the context of bona fide arm's length bargaining.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN16[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

An agreement between a union and an employer outside a collective bargaining relationship, which imposes a direct restraint upon a business market, and which is not justified by congressional labor policy because it has actual or potential anticompetitive effects that would not flow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions, is not exempt from antitrust scrutiny.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN17[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

A 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim, unlike a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim, is aimed at a pernicious market structure in which the concentration of power saps the salubrious influence of competition. To establish a defendant's liability under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. Monopoly power is a matter of capacity — the possession of power to control prices or exclude competition. Before monopoly power may be assessed, the relevant geographic and product markets must be defined.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

HN18[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

A claim of attempted monopolization requires the plaintiff to plead (1) anticompetitive conduct; (2) intent to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of obtaining monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN19[] Standing, Requirements

A private plaintiff must demonstrate standing in order to bring a federal antitrust action. In the Second Circuit, the court assumes the existence of a violation when addressing the issue of standing. In evaluating whether a plaintiff has standing, the district court must consider whether a plaintiff has pled: (1) an injury in fact to a plaintiff's business or property; (2) that is not remote from or duplicative of that sustained by a more directly injured party; (3) that qualifies as an antitrust injury; and (4) that translates into reasonably quantifiable damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN20[] Standing, Requirements

Mere injury or the possibility of injury is not enough to confer standing; the plaintiffs must demonstrate an antitrust injury. The antitrust injury requirement obligates a plaintiff to demonstrate, as a threshold matter, that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. The requirement to demonstrate standing applies with equal force to claims, such as those here, for equitable relief.

RULING AND ORDER ON MOTION TO DISMISS

This case arises out of the negotiation and enforcement of` a union [*3] signatory subcontracting clause in the New England Regional Council of Carpenters' ("Council of Carpenters") collective bargaining agreements ("agreements") with non-party construction companies and construction managers ("construction employers"). Plaintiffs allege that the Council of Carpenters attempted to and has successfully prevented plaintiffs from bidding on, being awarded, benefitting from and performing construction work typically performed by the plaintiff union organizations. The union signatory subcontracting clause in the agreements broadens the scope of work that must be allocated to the Council of Carpenters' members ("Carpenters") in a manner that excludes signatories of the plaintiff unions from competing for work even though the construction employers do not currently employ or intend to employ Carpenters on the job sites at issue.

For example, plaintiffs allege that Fusco, Inc., the construction manager on a New London school project, entered into an agreement with the Council of Carpenters that shifts relevant work traditionally performed by the members of plaintiff unions to the "general trades" category. Carpenters typically perform "general trades" work. Accordingly, [*4] Carpenters can now "claim" work on the job site and plaintiff employers can no longer bid on the work traditionally performed by its signatory plaintiff unions. The use of a union signatory subcontracting clause to give a particular union a monopoly in a particular market is not necessarily unlawful. Plaintiffs allege that, because there are no Carpenters performing bargaining unit work on the disputed job sites, there can be no legitimate business purpose for the exclusion of the plaintiff organizations/employers. The exclusion of plaintiffs from the marketplace absent a legitimate business justification, plaintiffs contend, constitutes a restraint on trade in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and a violation of labor laws.

Defendant counters that this is nothing more than a jurisdictional dispute between labor organizations, and that its union signatory subcontracting clause is lawful and expressly permitted by the National Labor Relations Act ("NLRA") and the non-statutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws. Although courts generally accept that a certain amount of anti-competitive conduct will occur in the labor organization arena, not every anti-competitive act [*5] is protected by the NLRA or the labor exemption to the antitrust laws. Accepting the allegations in the complaint as true, the agreements between the Council of Carpenters and the construction employers are not true collective bargaining agreements because those agreements do not embody a desire to set the terms and working conditions of Carpenters working on the identified job sites. Accordingly, the agreements are not axiomatically either exempt from scrutiny under the NLRA or subject to the antitrust labor exemption. For the following reasons, the Council of Carpenters' motion to dismiss (doc. # 17) is granted in part and denied in part.

I. Background

The facts relied on in this ruling are drawn from the complaint. For present purposes, I accept the material allegations of the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiffs.

A. The Parties

1. Defendant

The Council of Carpenters is a labor organization that engages in organized labor activities in the New England region. The Council of Carpenters has entered into collective bargaining agreements with non-party general contractors and construction companies including Suffolk Construction, Fusco Co., Dimeo [*6] Construction, Bond Brothers, Turgeon Construction Co., and Berry & Son.

2. Plaintiff Employer Association Parties

Connecticut Ironworkers Employers Assoc., Inc. is a Connecticut corporation that engages in collective bargaining on behalf of employers who do business with various labor organizations, including plaintiff labor organizations.

Associated Sheet Metal and Roofing Contractors of Connecticut, Inc. ("Sheet Metal Contractors") is a Connecticut corporation that engages in collective bargaining on behalf of member employers and with Plaintiff Sheet Metal Workers Local Unions concerning relevant work.

3. Plaintiff Employer Parties

M.R.S. Enterprises ("M.R.S.") is a Connecticut corporation that employs plaintiff union members in the relevant market area and negotiates collective bargaining agreements with plaintiff unions.

Barrett, Inc. ("Barrett") is a Connecticut corporation that performs relevant work within the relevant market area and employs Sheet Metal Workers union members.

Ernest Peterson ("Peterson") and Berlin Steel Construction Co. ("Berlin Steel") are [*7] Connecticut corporations that perform relevant work in the relevant market area and employ plaintiff union organizations' members.

4. Plaintiff Pension Fund Parties

Sheet Metal Workers' Local No. 40 Pension Fund ("Local 40 Fund"), a defined benefit pension plan under ERISA, is comprised of members of the Sheet Metal Worker's Local No. 40 whose members perform relevant work in the relevant market area. Local 40 Fund is not permitted to carry a "funding standard account deficiency" at the end of its 13-year rehabilitation. If employers who are signatories to the Local 40 Fund are forced to allocate work to non-members of Local 40, the pension fund will be underfunded and may trigger withdrawal liability that would jeopardize the pension rights of the participants.

Iron Workers' Local Nos. 15 and 424 Pension Funds ("Local 15 Fund" and "Local 424 Fund") are defined benefit pension plans under ERISA and are comprised of members of The International Association of Bridge, Structural, Ornamental and Reinforcing Iron Workers' Local Nos. 15 and 424 ("Locals 15 and 424"). The members of Locals 15 and 424 perform relevant work in the relevant market area. The plaintiff Pension Funds are also subject [*8] to funding requirements as well and their signatory employers also risk the triggering of withdrawal liability in the event of a funding deficiency.

Contributions to the plaintiff Pension Funds are based on a fixed sum per hour worked. If plaintiff employers and labor union organization members are frozen out of relevant work then plaintiff employers, union organization members, and employer associations will face increased pension contributions to compensate for the reduction of hours performed by union members. In some instances the plaintiff employers who are forced to hire Carpenters may be exposed to double payments if the plaintiff employers are required to fund plaintiff pension funds as well as benefit funds for defendant Carpenters.

5. Plaintiff Labor Organization Parties[1]

The plaintiff labor organization parties (collectively "the unions" or "union plaintiffs" or "union members") are comprised of the following organizations: The International Association of Bridge, Structural, Ornamental and Reinforcing Iron Workers' Local Nos. 15, 37 and 424; Sheet Metal Workers' Local Nos. 38 and 40; Painters, Drywall Finishers, Glaziers and Allied Trades District Council 11 of the International Union of Painters and Allied Trades ("IUPAT"), AFL-CIO; IUPAT Glaziers Locals No. 1331 and 1274. Each is an unincorporated association and labor organization that engages in collective bargaining and enforcement of collective bargaining agreements with signatory employers on behalf of its members.

B. Relevant Work and Market Area

The "relevant work" at issue in the case includes: exterior building enclosure systems such as exterior metal panels, composite wall panels, foam panels, and insulated panel systems; exterior panelized window systems, punched windows, curtain walls, store fronts; and metal roofing systems and related components. The relevant work typically falls within the jurisdiction of Iron Workers, [*10] Glaziers, and Sheet Metal Workers, but not Carpenters. The "relevant market area" is Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Western Massachusetts.

C. Facts Alleged in the Complaint

The Council of Carpenters negotiated a union signatory subcontracting clause into certain agreements with construction employers that barred signatories to those agreements from subcontracting work to any firm that is not also a signatory of the Council of Carpenters. The agreements, characterized as collective bargaining agreements, do not concern job sites at which Carpenters perform relevant work. The Council of Carpenters enforces the union

[1] Several of the plaintiffs are unincorporated associations and labor organizations within the meaning of 29 U.S.C. § 152(5). HN1[] Section 152(5) defines a labor organization as: "any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, [*9] wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work."

signatory subcontracting clause of the agreements to the exclusion of the plaintiff labor organizations, who cannot perform relevant work; plaintiff employers, who cannot bid on relevant work; and the remaining plaintiffs, who cannot benefit from the performance of such work. The language of the union signatory subcontracting clause requires that relevant work traditionally performed by Iron Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, and Glaziers within the relevant market area be performed by Carpenters regardless of who bid the work. This arrangement, plaintiffs argue, conflicts with [*11] the traditional course of conduct in the relevant market area. Traditionally, relevant work such as metal siding, exterior siding systems, or metal installations was performed by Iron Workers, Sheet Metal Contractors, and Glaziers.

Prior to 2009, the Council of Carpenters had never sought to bid on or perform relevant work, and the collective bargaining agreements entered into by the Council of Carpenters from 1999 through April 2010 do not claim the relevant work. Since 2008, however, the Council of Carpenters has sought to amend its current agreements to broaden the scope of work claimed by the Council of Carpenters to include relevant work traditionally performed by plaintiff union organizations. In doing so, the union signatory subcontracting clause of the agreements prohibits its signatories from hiring subcontractors to perform relevant work who are not also signatories with the Council of Carpenters. The above-described conduct is aimed at monopolizing the relevant work in the relevant market area to the exclusion of the plaintiff employers and plaintiff union organizations.

The exclusion of plaintiff employers and union organizations serves no legitimate business justification [*12] because, as six of the seven specific examples set forth in the Complaint demonstrate, Carpenters do not actually perform relevant work on the job sites covered by the union signatory subcontracting clause. The plaintiffs identify the following examples:

1. 360 State Street Project, New Haven, Connecticut

The State Street Project was performed under a Project Labor Agreement. Plaintiff unions were party to the agreement. Article III of the Agreement stated that work assignments shall be based on subcontractor preference. Although Carpenters were not performing bargaining unit work at the job site, Suffolk Construction, the construction manager on the site, had an agreement with the Council of Carpenters that only the Council of Carpenters' signatories could perform relevant work on the job site. One subcontractor, after lengthy negotiation, was permitted to perform work claimed by Glaziers with members of Glaziers even though that subcontractor did not have an agreement with the Council of Carpenters.

2. New Rowe Residences, New Haven, Connecticut

The Council of Carpenters worked in concert with Dimeo Construction, construction manager on the project, to assign metal siding work (traditionally [*13] defined as "Division 7" work) to Carpenters. By reclassifying the work as "General Trades" or "Carpenters" and stating that "all work to be completed with Union Carpenters," the parties prevented plaintiff employers and signatories to plaintiff unions from bidding on the work. The agreement to reserve relevant work for Carpenters does not serve a legitimate business purpose because Dimeo does not intend to have Carpenters perform bargaining unit work on the job site.

3. St. Francis Hospital, Hartford, Connecticut

Turner Construction is the construction manager for the St. Francis Hospital, Hartford, Connecticut project. No Carpenters are performing bargaining work at the job site. The Council of Carpenters, nonetheless, attempted to coerce Turner Construction into telling plaintiff employers that they cannot bid the relevant work unless all work is awarded to Carpenters. Turner did not acquiesce to the pressure.

4. Bryant University Project, Smithfield, Rhode Island

Bond Brothers, the construction manager at the Bryant University Project in Smithfield, Rhode Island, is a signatory to the Council of Carpenters. Bond Brothers has included in its "scope checklist" for "glass and glazing" [*14] (relevant work) that all glass/glazing subcontractors must also be signatories to the Council of Carpenters. Accordingly, plaintiff employers and/or signatories to plaintiff unions were prohibited from bidding on the job even though the construction manager had no intention of using Carpenters to perform the relevant work.

5. Immaculate Conception Catholic Regional School, Cranston, Rhode Island

M.R.S. was awarded a contract to perform relevant work on the job site. E. Turgeon ("Turgeon") was the general contractor. On May 14, 2009, Turgeon sent a letter to M.R.S. notifying it that the contract would be cancelled because M.R.S. intended relevant work to be performed by plaintiff union members and that Turgeon had an exclusive relationship with the Council of Carpenters and M.R.S. was not a signatory to the Council of Carpenters.

6. Bay State Medical Center Hospital Project, Springfield, Massachusetts

The project was governed by a Project Labor Agreement. Plaintiff unions and construction manager, Berry & Son, Inc., were party to the Project Labor Agreement, which provided that subcontractors would appropriately assign all work in question. Nonetheless, a separate memorandum of understanding [*15] between Berry & Son and the Council of Carpenters stated that certain work would be performed only by Carpenters, including work traditionally performed by Glaziers. The memorandum of understanding violated the terms of the Project Labor Agreement. Carpenters are not, however, performing any bargaining unit work on the project and Berry & Son does not intend for Carpenters to perform work on the job site. Plaintiff unions and employers were not permitted to bid on the project because of the agreement between Berry & Son and the Council of Carpenters, notwithstanding the Project Labor Agreement.

7. Schools Project, New London, Connecticut

Fusco, Inc. is the construction manager on the job site. Originally the scope of work on the project included relevant work, which is traditionally performed by plaintiff unions. Fusco redrafted the specifications and scope of work to include a "General Trades" category. Fusco reclassified the "Roofing Package" as work included in "General Trades." Signatories of the Council of Carpenters traditionally bid on General Trades work. The effect of the change was to preclude plaintiff labor organizations and their signatory contractors from bidding the work [*16] in question. Fusco, however, does not have Carpenters performing bargaining unit work on the site.

D. Counts One and Two

In count one of the complaint, plaintiffs allege that the conduct set forth above constitutes a violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The complaint alleges that the Council of Carpenters, in concert with its signatories, has attempted to restrain trade by prohibiting contractors unaffiliated with the Council of Carpenters from bidding, being awarded, and performing work traditionally performed by plaintiff union members. That conduct, plaintiffs allege, exceeds that allowed by the labor exemptions in that it consists of an agreement between a labor organization and an employer that serves no legitimate business purpose and, although characterized as done pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement, is outside the collective bargaining process. Plaintiffs also claim that the agreements at issue are designed to expand the Council of Carpenters' jurisdiction and restrict the jurisdiction of plaintiffs. All plaintiffs seek declaratory relief and M.R.S. seeks damages.

In count two, M.R.S. alleges a violation of HN2[] 29 U.S.C. § 187, which sets forth that "[i]t shall [*17] be unlawful, for the purpose of this section only, in an industry or activity affecting commerce, for any labor organization to engage in any activity or conduct defined as an unfair labor practice in section 158(b)(4) of this title." [2] M.R.S. alleges that the Council of Carpenters has engaged in conduct that encourages and induces individuals, including general contractors and construction managers affiliated with the Council of Carpenters, to refrain from engaging in commerce with plaintiffs. In doing so, the Council of Carpenters is attempting to force M.R.S. to enter into an agreement with the Council of Carpenters or accept being frozen out of the bidding process. M.R.S. seeks actual damages for the loss of the Immaculate Conception Catholic Regional School Project.

[2] Initially, count two was brought on behalf of all plaintiffs. Plaintiffs have conceded that only M.R.S. has standing to pursue the claims alleged in count two. Doc. # 23 at 25. Accordingly, count two is dismissed with respect to all plaintiffs except M.R.S.

HN4[] When deciding a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the court must accept the material facts alleged in the complaint as true, draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiffs, and decide whether it is plausible that plaintiffs have a valid claim for relief. Ashcroft v. Meltz, 85 F.3d 51, 53 (2d Cir. 1996).

HN5[] Under Twombly, "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level," and assert a cause of action with enough heft to show entitlement to relief and "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." 550 U.S. at 555, 570; see also Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1940 ("While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations."). The plausibility standard set forth in Twombly and Iqbal obligates the [*19] plaintiff to "provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief" through more than "labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (quotation marks omitted). Plausibility at the pleading stage is nonetheless distinct from probability, and "a well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof of [the claims] is improbable, and . . . recovery is very remote and unlikely." Id. at 556 (quotation marks omitted).

Defendant also moves to dismiss the claims of the plaintiff union and pension funds for lack of standing. HN6[] The party who seeks to exercise the jurisdiction of the court bears the burden of establishing the court's jurisdiction. Thompson v. County of Franklin, 15 F.3d 245, 249 (2d Cir. 1994). To survive a Rule 12(b)(1) motion, a plaintiff must clearly allege facts demonstrating that the plaintiff is a proper party to invoke judicial resolution of the dispute. Id. Although the plaintiff bears the ultimate burden of establishing jurisdiction by a preponderance of the evidence, "until discovery takes place, a plaintiff is required only to make a prima facie showing by pleadings and affidavits [*20] that jurisdiction exists." Koehler v. Bank of Bermuda, 101 F.3d 863, 865 (2d Cir. 1996). Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 501, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (1975))*. If a plaintiff has failed to allege facts supportive of standing, it is within the court's discretion to allow or to require the plaintiff to supply, by amendment to the complaint or by affidavits, further particularized allegations of fact deemed supportive of standing. Id.

III. Discussion

Council of Carpenters moves to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim for violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. HN7[] As a general rule, agreements to refrain from dealing with others, such as the union signatory subcontracting clause at issue here, are "vulnerable to challenge under federal antitrust laws unless they are protected by both the construction industry proviso and by an exemption from antitrust scrutiny." Local 210, Laborer's Intern. Union of North America v. Labor Relations Division Assoc. General Contractors of America, N.Y.S. Chapter, Inc., 844 F.2d 69, 73 (2d Cir. 1988). [*21] The Council of Carpenters contends that the Construction Industry Proviso of section 8(e) of the NLRA and the non-statutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws permit defendant to enter into the challenged union signatory subcontracting clause. Defendant further claims that plaintiffs fail to meet the requirements of Twombly and Iqbal in pleading an antitrust claim and that the union and pension fund plaintiffs lack standing to bring their claims. Before considering the adequacy of the pleadings, I address the application of the construction industry proviso and non-statutory labor exemption from the antitrust laws to the union signatory subcontracting clause.

A. The Construction Industry Proviso

In 1959, Congress enacted the Landrum-Griffin amendments to the NLRA. The amendments included section 8(e), codified at 29 U.S.C. §158(e), and commonly referred to as the "hot-cargo" provision, which provides:

> HN8[] It shall be an unfair labor practice for any labor organization and any employer to enter into any contract or agreement, express or implied, whereby such employer ceases or refrains or agrees to cease or refrain from handling, using, selling, transporting or otherwise dealing in any [22] of the products of any other employer, or to cease doing business with any other person, and any contract or agreement entered into heretofore or hereafter containing such an agreement shall be to such extent unenforceable and void: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall apply to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the construction, alteration, painting, or repair of a building, structure, or other work: Provided further, That for the purposes of this subsection and subsection (b)(4)(B) of this section the terms "any employer", "any person engaged in commerce or an industry affecting commerce", and "any person" when used in relation to the terms "any other producer, processor, or manufacturer", "any other employer", or "any other person" shall not include persons in the relation of a jobber, manufacturer, contractor, or subcontractor working on the goods or premises of the jobber or manufacturer or performing parts of an integrated process of production in the apparel and clothing industry: Provided further, That nothing in this subchapter shall [*23] prohibit the enforcement of any agreement which is within the foregoing exception.

Plainly read, the proviso would seem to shelter the union signatory [*24] subcontracting agreements because the proviso expressly states that section 8(e) does not apply to agreements that limit the contracting of construction site work. In Connell Construction Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, however, HN9[] the Supreme Court held that literal compliance with the proviso is insufficient and that section 8(e) should be interpreted in light of its "statutory setting and the circumstances surrounding its enactment." 421 U.S. 616, 628, 95 S. Ct. 1830, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1975). After a review of the legislative history of section 8(e), the Court held that, even though Congress expressly permitted labor organizations and employers in the construction industry to enter into agreements otherwise prohibited, Congress intended the proviso to apply only to agreements in the context of a collective-bargaining relationship. Id. at 629-33. The Court, principally concerned with job sites at which union workers and nonunion workers were employed, i.e., shoulder-to-shoulder friction, went on to state that agreements "with 'stranger' contractors, not limited to any particular job site" were not agreements obtained in the context of a collective-bargaining relationship. Id. at 631-33. The collective-bargaining [*25] process concerns only the parties to the collective bargaining relationship, and relates to wages, hours, conditions of employment, or other relevant subjects of collective bargaining. Id. at 622. Accordingly, under the holding of Connell, the Council of Carpenters' union signatory subcontracting clause falls within the protective reach of the proviso only if the agreements containing the clause were obtained in the context of a collective-bargaining relationship.

Plaintiffs contend that the union signatory subcontracting clauses at issue here, although incorporated into agreements purporting to be collective bargaining agreements, are not protected by the proviso because the agreements are not true collective bargaining agreements. The agreements between the Council of Carpenters and the construction employers, plaintiffs allege, do not encompass the traditional subjects of collective bargaining but serve only to expand the Carpenters' scope of work and jurisdiction and to freeze plaintiff unions out of the market. Although the complaint does not explicitly allege that the agreements were obtained outside the context of a collective-bargaining agreement, the complaint does state that [*26] Carpenters do not perform work on the job sites at issue nor does the Council of Carpenters intend its members to perform work on those job sites. The complaint also alleges that there is no legitimate business purpose for the subcontracting agreements.

The Council of Carpenters counters that, because plaintiffs refer to the agreements as collective-bargaining agreements, plaintiffs are estopped from denying the validity of the agreements. It also contends, relying on the Supreme Court's holding in Woelke & Romero Framing, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 456 U.S. 645, 102 S. Ct. 2071, 72 L. Ed. 2d 398 (1982), that it does not matter whether its members are performing work on the specified job sites in order for its agreements to fall under the proviso's protection. Both arguments fail at this stage.

Regardless of the term used to describe the agreements between the Council of Carpenters and the construction employers, if the agreements do not embody the traditional subjects of collective bargaining, the union signatory subcontracting clause of the agreement is not protected by the proviso. The holding in Woelke that the union signatory subcontracting clause in that case was lawful even though the underlying concern was not shoulder-to-shoulder [*27] friction between union and non-union members, as had been the issue in Connell, has no bearing on the facts of the instant case. The Woelke Court considered the impact of section 8(e) on union signatory subcontracting clauses sought in the context of the renegotiation of a collective bargaining agreement. Id. at 648. The Court held that HN10[] section 8(e) applies to union signatory subcontracting clauses so long as they are sought or negotiated in the context of a collective bargaining agreement, and that the proviso did not shelter only clauses aimed at preventing shoulder-to-shoulder friction. Id. at 654. Here, plaintiffs allege that the union signatory subcontracting clauses between the Council of Carpenters and the construction employers are not part of a true collective bargaining agreement. Accordingly, even if it is permissible for the Council of Carpenters to enter into union signatory subcontracting clauses pertaining to job sites at which it does not have members performing work or intending to perform work, the Council of Carpenters must nevertheless demonstrate that the clause was sought or negotiated in the context of a collective-bargaining relationship — a showing that has [*28] not been made at the pleading stage in this case.

B. Non-Statutory Labor Exemption to the Antitrust Laws

Defendant also moves to dismiss on the basis that its agreements are shielded from antitrust scrutiny by the non-statutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws. The defense appears on the face of the complaint and therefore it is properly raised in a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. McKenna, 386 F.3d at 436. In Connell, the Court recognized that HN11[] certain clauses in collective bargaining agreements, even those concerning the construction industry, can act as a "direct restraint on the business market" in a manner having "substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential." 421 U.S. at 625. Restrictive clauses like the one at issue in this case may be challenged under federal antitrust laws unless the clause is protected by both the construction industry proviso and an antitrust labor exemption. Local 210, 844 F.2d at 73.

"[T]he [Sherman] Act is aimed primarily at combinations having commercial objectives and is applied only to a very limited extent to organizations, like labor unions, which normally have other objectives." Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213 n.7, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). [*29] Nevertheless, "[i]t would be a surprising thing if Congress, in order to prevent a misapplication of [antitrust] legislation to labor unions, had bestowed upon such unions complete and unreviewable authority to aide business groups to frustrate its primary objective." Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 325 U.S. 797, 809-10, 65 S. Ct. 1533, 89 L. Ed. 1939 (1945).

HN12[] Courts have long recognized the tension between national antitrust policy and national labor policy. In light of the competing interests of congressional policy favoring both collective bargaining under the NLRA and free competition in business, two antitrust exemptions are recognized. Connell, 421 U.S. at 622. The statutory exemption provides that union activity is exempt from antitrust liability "so long as [the] union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups." [3] United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 232, 61 S. Ct. 463, 85 L. Ed. 788 (1941). The non-statutory exemption provides that, where the alleged anticompetitive conduct is inherent in the collective-bargaining process, concerns only the parties to the collective bargaining relationship, and relates to wages, hours, conditions of employment, or other relevant subjects [*30] of collective bargaining, the restraints are lawful. See Connell, 421 U.S. at 622. Having already concluded that protection by the proviso is not apparent from the complaint, I consider whether the non-statutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws bars plaintiffs' claims.

In this circuit, HN13[] a court assessing whether an agreement is protected by the non-statutory exemption should consider the relative impact of the agreement on the product market and the interests of the union members. See Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79. The Local 210 decision also instructs the district court to balance the conflicting policies embodied in labor and antitrust laws. The court should first consider whether the agreement at issue furthers goals that are protected by national labor law and are within the scope of traditionally mandatory subjects of collective bargaining. Second, the court should consider whether the agreement imposes a direct restraint [*31] on the market that has substantial anticompetitive effects that do not follow naturally from the collective bargaining agreement. If the agreement is a legitimate collective bargaining agreement, then the "touchstone in assessing its validity must be the policies embodied in federal labor law." Id. at 81. Traditionally, mandatory subjects in a collective bargaining agreement include wages, hours, fringe benefits, workplace conditions, and other subjects that are more likely to embody legitimate employee concerns about compensation, workplace, or security, and less likely to be restraints on competition. See 1B Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, at ¶ 256d3 (3d ed. 2007). Accordingly, agreements between unions and firms that do not employ the unions' members are treated as encompassing non-mandatory subjects. Id.

Accepting the allegations in the complaint as true, it is not evident from the face of the complaint that collective-bargaining agreements between the Council of Carpenters and the construction employers further goals that are protected by national labor law and are within the scope of traditionally mandatory subjects of collective bargaining and the restraints [*32] imposed on the marketplace naturally flow from the collective bargaining agreements. If plaintiffs prove that the agreements between Carpenters and construction employers are not true collective-bargaining agreements because the agreements do not set wages, hours, terms and conditions of work and other relevant subjects of collective bargaining, the union signatory subcontracting clause would not have been obtained within the collective-bargaining relationship and would not be entitled to protection under the non-statutory labor exemption. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss on those grounds is denied.

C. Antitrust Injury

1. Section 1

HN14[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Pleading a section 1 claim "requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made" in restraint of trade. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. A plaintiff must offer "plausible grounds to infer an agreement," which means "enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that [*33] discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement." Id.

Here, plaintiffs allege that the union signatory subcontracting clause violates antitrust laws because the Council of Carpenters has no legitimate business reason for restricting plaintiffs' ability to bid on, be awarded, perform, and benefit from performing work on the job sites. HN15[] Generally, restrictions on entities with whom contractors can subcontract are entirely permissible so long as those restrictions affect only the parties to the agreements, and the agreements concern wages, hours, or conditions of employment in the context of bona fide arm's length bargaining. Areeda ¶ 256d at 113-14. Courts have found antitrust violations where agreements concern other issues. Connell, 421 U.S. at 625-26 (even where the goal of the union is legal, i.e., organizing as many subcontractors as possible, agreements outside those of a lawful collective bargaining agreement cannot claim a non-statutory exemption from the antitrust laws). HN16[] An agreement between a union and an employer, > outside a collective bargaining relationship, which imposes a direct restraint upon a business market, and which is not justified by congressional labor policy [*34] because it has actual or potential anticompetitive effects that would not flow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions, is not exempt from antitrust scrutiny.

Larry V. Muko, Inc. v. Southwestern Pa. Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 609 F.2d 1368, 1373 n.99 (3d Cir. 1979), cert denied, 459 U.S. 916, 103 S. Ct. 229, 74 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1982).

Here, if the Council of Carpenters' union signatory subcontracting clauses are not part of a bona fide arm's length collective bargaining relationship and serve only to exclude plaintiffs' union members from job sites without also protecting the wages, hours and working conditions of Carpenters, the agreements could violate antitrust laws. Defendant counters that plaintiffs' contention that the Council of Carpenters has entered into the union signatory subcontracting clauses in an attempt to expand work jurisdiction to work not traditionally performed by its members in the relevant market areas necessarily defeats the allegation that the Council of Carpenters lacks a legitimate purpose in entering into the agreements. Even if the Council of Carpenters has entered into the agreements in an effort to expand its scope of work and jurisdiction, doing [*35] so does not negate the anti-competitive impact of the agreements if the Council of Carpenters has not negotiated the agreements within the context of a collective bargaining relationship. Indeed, if plaintiffs prove that the agreements are not part of a legitimate collective bargaining process, it does not matter what plaintiffs allege the Council of Carpenters' ultimate goal might be. Accepting as true that Carpenters do not intend to perform work on the six job sites identified in the complaint, it is plausible that discovery will reveal that those agreements are not the by-product of a collective-bargaining relationship and therefore violate the antitrust laws. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss for failure to state a section 1 claim is denied.

2. Section 2

Plaintiffs have alleged that the Council of Carpenters has attempted to monopolize the relevant work in the relevant market area for Carpenters in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2. Compl. at ¶ 61. HN17[] A section 2 claim, unlike a section 1 claim, is aimed at a "pernicious market structure in which the concentration of power saps the salubrious influence of competition." Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 272 (2d Cir. 1979), [*36] cert denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 100 S. Ct. 1061, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783 (1980). To establish a defendant's liability under section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Delaware & Hudson Ry. Co. v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 902 F.2d 174, 178 (2d Cir. 1990) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). "Monopoly power 'is a matter of capacity — the possession of power to control prices or exclude competition.'" Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Hearst/ABC Viacom Entm't Servs., 746 F. Supp. 320, 327 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (citing Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d at 272). "Before monopoly power may be assessed, the relevant geographic and product markets must be defined." Broadcast Music, Inc., 746 F. Supp. at 327.

Here, the geographic market is the New England region and the relevant product market is the construction industry. Accepting the allegations in the complaint as true, the Council of Carpenters possesses the monopoly power to exclude competition [*37] from the construction industry within the New England region. The inquiry next turns to whether plaintiffs have adequately pled attempted monopolization. HN18[] To do so requires the plaintiff to plead "(1) anticompetitive conduct; (2) intent to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of obtaining monopoly power." Delaware & Hudson Ry., 902 F.2d at 180. For the reasons already discussed, the plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged anticompetitive conduct. See Section C (1), supra. With respect to the two remaining elements, accepting as true that the Council of Carpenters has monopoly power, plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that the Council of Carpenters intends for its agreements to exclude others from the market and, if successful, it follows that there exists a dangerous probability that the Council of Carpenters would obtain monopoly power. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss for failure to state a section 2 claim is denied.

D. Standing of Union and Pension Funds to Bring Antitrust Claims

Defendant also moves to dismiss the claims of the plaintiff unions and pension funds on the ground that the harms complained of are too remote and indirect to confer standing. [4] HN19[] A private plaintiff [*38] must demonstrate standing in order to bring a federal antitrust action. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., 479 U.S. 104, 110, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 & nn.5-6 (1986). In the Second Circuit, the court assumes the existence of a violation when addressing the issue of standing. Daniel v. American Bd. of Emergency Med., 428 F.3d 408, 436-37 (2d Cir. 2005). In evaluating whether a plaintiff has standing, the district court must consider whether plaintiff has pled: (1) an injury in fact to plaintiff's business or property, (2) that is not remote from or duplicative of that sustained by a more directly injured party, (3) that qualifies as an antitrust injury, and (4) that translates into reasonably quantifiable damages. Id.

HN20[] Mere injury or the possibility of injury is not enough to confer standing; the plaintiffs must demonstrate an antitrust injury. "The antitrust injury requirement obligates a plaintiff to demonstrate, as a threshold matter, 'that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as [*39] an individual competitor will not suffice.'" George Haug Co. v. Rolls Royce Motor Cars, Inc., 148 F.3d 136, 139 (2d Cir. 1998) (quoting Capital Imaging v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 543 (2d Cir. 1993)). The requirement to demonstrate standing applies with equal force to claims, such as those here, for equitable relief. See generally Cargill, Inc., 479 U.S. at 111-12.

Assuming for the purposes of this motion that the challenged agreements are anti-competitive, the agreements first and foremost harm the plaintiff employers — M.R.S., Barrett, Peterson, and Berlin Steel. The plaintiff employers have been prevented from bidding on the following projects: New Rowe Residences, Bryant University, Immaculate Conception Catholic Regional School (M.R.S. only), Bay State Medical Center, and the New London Schools. [5] The plaintiff employers have suffered a lost opportunity to compete. That is a recognized injury under antitrust law.

The union plaintiffs have also [*40] stated an injury that is recognized under antitrust law. The facts alleged in the complaint indicate that Council of Carpenters prevented members of the plaintiff-unions from bidding on relevant work. In arguing that the this harm is too indirect to support standing, the Council of Carpenters relies heavily on Associated General Contractors of Cal v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). That case, however, is distinguishable. In Associated General Contractors, the defendant was an employer association that had allegedly attempted to coerce general contractors and potential clients to hire non-union contractors and subcontractors. Id. at 902-03. The Supreme Court held that the union-plaintiffs' injury was too remote to confer standing.

In conducting its standing inquiry, the Court noted that it was "appropriate to focus on the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury," because "the Sherman Act was enacted to assure customers the benefits of price competition, and our prior cases have emphasized the central interest in protecting the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market." Id. at 908. The Court held that there was no standing in part because "the Union [*41] was neither a consumer nor a competitor in the market in which trade was restrained." Id. at 909.

In this case, in contrast, the plaintiff-unions are competitors in the market in which trade was restrained. Here, the defendant-union has allegedly attempted to block rival unions from job sites. In essence, the defendant-union is attempting to monopolize work that had previously been performed by the plaintiff-unions' members, and push the plaintiff-unions out of the relevant market. The plaintiff-unions thus are part of the class the Sherman Act was designed to protect, because the harm here goes to "the central interest in protecting the economic freedom of the participants in the relevant market." Id. at 908.

Finally, in Associated General Contractors, the allegations were much vaguer than the allegations in this case. Specifically, in Associated General Contractors there was no allegation that any construction "firm was prevented from doing business with any union firms." Id. at 911. Here, such allegations form the basis for the complaint. In short, the plaintiff-unions have alleged sufficient facts to demonstrate that they have standing to bring this case, and the motion to dismiss [*42] the union plaintiffs for lack of standing is denied.

[4] Note that the Council of Carpenters did not move to dismiss the claims by the employer association plaintiffs on standing grounds.

[5] With respect to the 360 State Street and St. Francis projects, the complaint states that the plaintiffs were not prevented from bidding on those projects because the contractors did not acquiesce to pressure from Carpenters.

Unlike the unions' injuries, the possibility of injury to the pension fund plaintiffs is both remote and indirect. The pension fund plaintiffs argue that they risk becoming underfunded at some point in the future if Carpenters are permitted to enforce the union signatory subcontracting clause. The injury is wholly indirect, being based entirely on the consequences of direct harm to the union plaintiffs, and thus too remote to confer standing. The pension fund plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate an antitrust injury that would confer standing for a claim for money damages.

Although the pension fund plaintiffs appear to acknowledge that they do not have standing to pursue a claim for money damages, they argue that they do have standing to pursue a claim for declaratory or injunctive relief. The pension fund plaintiffs are correct that the "antitrust standing analysis is more flexible and less demanding for claims for injunctive relief than it is for those seeking money damages, because 'one injunction is as effective as 100, and . . . 100 injunctions are no more effective than one.'" Freedom Holdings, Inc. v. Cuomo, 592 F. Supp. 2d 684, 693 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) [*43] (quoting Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 111 n.6, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427). Nevertheless, even a plaintiff seeking injunctive relief must satisfy Article III standing requirements, and thus assert an injury that is "sufficiently direct and non-speculative." Id. at 694. The injury of the pension fund plaintiffs is completely indirect and speculative, and as such, cannot satisfy even the lower standing requirements for injunctive relief. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss the pension fund plaintiffs for lack of standing is granted.

E. Labor Law Violation

In the second count, M.R.S. alleges that the Council of Carpenters, in concert with its signatory construction employers, has violated 29 U.S.C. § 158(b)(4) (section 8(b)(4) of the NLRA) by encouraging and inducing its signatory contractors to refrain from engaging and entering into contracts with M.R.S. in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 187. M.R.S. claims that the Council of Carpenters attempted to force M.R.S. to enter into agreements with the Council of Carpenters for work not traditionally performed by Carpenters and thus to expand the relevant work performed by Carpenters into the jurisdiction of work traditionally performed by plaintiffs. [*44] Furthermore, M.R.S. contends that the conduct is aimed at expanding the Council of Carpenters' representation to employees performing work not traditionally performed in the relevant market area. This includes job sites in which there are no Carpenters performing bargaining unit work.

HN21[] Section 8(b)(4) of the NLRA makes it unlawful to, inter alia, threaten, coerce, or restrain any person engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce, where the object thereof is forcing or requiring any person to cease using, selling, handling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in the products of any other producer, processor, or manufacturer, or to cease doing business with any other person. Here, M.R.S. alleges that Carpenters forced Turgeon, a Carpenters signatory, to cease doing business with M.R.S. in violation of section 8(b)(4).

Council of Carpenters moves to dismiss the claim on the basis that M.R.S. fails to state a claim under section 8(b)(4); defendant also argues that, because M.R.S. allegedly could not transact business in Rhode Island at the time the May 2009 contract was rescinded, its claim must fail. Defendant maintains that, because the union signatory subcontracting clause [*45] is part of a valid collective bargaining agreement, any restraint is protected by the construction industry proviso. Because it is not settled that the challenged union signatory subcontracting agreements are part of a valid collective bargaining agreement, whether the agreements are protected by the construction industry proviso is an open question. Furthermore, whether M.R.S. could transact business in Rhode Island cannot be determined from the face of the complaint. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss the second count of the complaint is denied.

IV. Conclusion

Accepting as true the allegations in the complaint, the challenged agreements between Carpenters are not necessarily protected by the construction industry proviso or the non-statutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws. Accordingly, the plaintiffs have stated an antitrust claim. Nevertheless, the pension fund plaintiffs have asserted an injury that is both indirect and speculative, and thus, the motion to dismiss count one for lack of standing is granted with respect to those plaintiffs. The motion to dismiss count one is denied in all other respects.

So ordered.

Summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The plain language of Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In deciding a motion brought under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, the court must view the evidence in a light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, giving that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences. Yet, the nonmoving party may not rely merely on allegations or denials in its own pleading, but must, by affidavits or as otherwise provided in Rule 56, set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial. Rule 56(e)(2). Moreover, any supporting or opposing affidavits must be made on personal knowledge, set out facts that would be admissible in evidence, and show that the affiant is competent to testify on the matters stated. Rule 56(e)(1). Finally, a mere scintilla of evidence is insufficient to withstand a summary judgment motion; rather, there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the non-moving party.

HN3[] Sherman Act, Claims

In the Sixth Circuit, motions for summary judgment are disfavored in antitrust litigation. This general rule does not preclude the use of summary judgment in an antitrust case in which there clearly are no genuine issues of fact to try, indeed, the very purpose of a motion for summary judgment, to eliminate a trial where it would be unnecessary and merely result in delay and expense, warrants summary disposition of such cases when appropriate. Accordingly, the absence of any relevant probative evidence in support of a litigant's antitrust claims will expose such claims to summary judgment disposition.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. To establish a claim under § 1, the plaintiff must establish that the defendants contracted, combined or conspired among each other, that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets, that the objects of and conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal and that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

If the challenged anticompetitive practice is deemed illegal per se, further examination of the practice's impact on the market or the pro-competitive justifications for the practice is unnecessary for finding a violation of antitrust law. Rather, in the case of practices that are proscribed per se, the plaintiff need only prove that (1) two or more entities engaged in a conspiracy, combination, or contract, (2) to effect a restraint or combination prohibited per se (wherein the anticompetitive effects within a relevant geographic and product market are implied), (3) that was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's antitrust injury.

A conspiracy among competing entities to fix wages, like an analogous horizontal price-fixing conspiracy, would be subject to per se treatment. Absent direct evidence of an explicit agreement among the entities to fix wages, the requisite conspiracy may be established through circumstantial evidence of business behavior which evidences a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement.

HN7[] Sherman Act, Claims

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 of the Sherman Act case. Thus, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. The plaintiffs, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed the plaintiffs. "Mistaken inferences" in assessing the evidence of a claimed antitrust conspiracy are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect.

HN8[] Sherman Act, Claims

The Sixth Circuit has adopted a two-part inquiry for evaluating the propriety of summary judgment in an antitrust conspiracy case. First, the court must determine whether plaintiffs' evidence of conspiracy is ambiguous, that is, whether it is as consistent with the defendants' permissible independent interests as with an illegal conspiracy. If so, the court must inquire whether the plaintiffs have produced evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were pursuing these independent interests. A plaintiff thus fails to demonstrate a conspiracy if, using ambiguous evidence, the inference of a conspiracy is less than or equal to an inference of independent action.

The defendants' uniformity in their actions as merely one of several important factors a court should evaluate in determining whether a plaintiff's circumstantial evidence of antitrust conspiracy is sufficient to withstand summary judgment.

HN10[] Sherman Act, Claims

Plaintiffs need not prove parallel pricing in order to prevail on an antitrust conspiracy claim based on circumstantial evidence. Parallel pricing is merely one such form of circumstantial evidence upon which a plaintiff may permissibly rely to establish concerted action in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

HN11[] Sherman Act, Claims

While evidence of parallel conduct provides one means by which a plaintiff in a § 1 of the Sherman Act case may make a circumstantial showing of concerted activity, the case law establishes no hierarchy of the sorts of circumstantial evidence a plaintiff must produce to withstand summary judgment. Rather, circumstantial evidence of any sort will do, provided that it demonstrates business behavior which evidences a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement.

The analysis of a per se claim for antitrust conspiracy is governed by the over-arching requirement that plaintiffs' evidence must reasonably tend to prove that defendants had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective and must further tend to exclude the possibility that defendants were acting independently.

Plaintiffs need not produce evidence of a formal agreement among the defendants in order to prove that the engaged in a conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The typical price-fixing agreement is usually accomplished in a manner that can ordinarily only be proved by inferences drawn from relevant and competent circumstantial evidence, including the conduct of the defendants charged.

HN14[] Sherman Act, Claims

The Sixth Circuit has identified four factors that a court should consider in evaluating the circumstantial evidence offered in support of a § 1of the Sherman Act conspiracy claim: (1) whether the defendants' actions, if taken independently, would be contrary to their economic self-interest; (2) whether the defendants have been uniform in their actions; (3) whether the defendants have exchanged or have had the opportunity to exchange information relative to the alleged conspiracy; and (4) whether the defendants have a common motive to conspire.

Under either the per se or the rule of reason theory of antitrust violation, the plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. A private plaintiff must make this same showing of antitrust injury, i.e., that the plaintiff has been adversely affected by an anticompetitive aspect of the defendant's conduct, in order to recover damages under a per se theory. This causal link between an antitrust violation and antitrust injury must be proved as a matter of fact and with a fair degree of certainty.

Under a conventional rule-of-reason approach, a court must engage in a thorough analysis of the relevant market and the effects of the restraint in that market. Even in cases where a challenged practice is subject to scrutiny under the rule of reason, rather than subject to condemnation as per se unlawful, the practical difference between these two analytical approaches is sometimes negligible, and the courts occasionally find that a less searching rule of reason analysis is sufficient under the facts of a particular case. The court's categories of analysis of anticompetitive effect are less fixed than terms like "per se," "quick look," and "rule of reason" tend to make them appear. Because the purpose of the rule of reason inquiries into market definition and market power is to determine whether an arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition, proof of actual detrimental effects, such as a reduction of output, can obviate the need for an inquiry into market power, which is but a surrogate for detrimental effects.

[*605] OPINION AND ORDER REGARDING DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

At a session of said Court, held in the U.S. Courthouse, Detroit, Michigan on March 22, 2012

PRESENT: Honorable Gerald E. Rosen Chief Judge, United States District Court

I. INTRODUCTION

In this case, the Plaintiff registered nurses ("RNs"), Pat Cason-Merenda and Jeffrey A. Suhre, seek to recover on behalf of themselves and a class of RNs against eight Detroit-area hospitals, alleging that the Defendant health care providers have violated § 1 of the federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, by (i) conspiring among themselves and with other local hospitals to hold down the wages of RNs employed by these institutions, and (ii) exchanging compensation-related information among themselves in a manner that has reduced competition among Detroit-area hospitals in the wages paid to RNs. This Court's subject matter jurisdiction rests upon Plaintiffs' assertion of claims arising [4] under federal law. See 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

Through the motions presently before the Court, the five remaining Defendants seek awards of summary judgment in their favor on each of Plaintiffs' claims against them. [1] In separate motions brought by Defendant Detroit Medical Center and the four other Defendant hospitals — specifically, Defendants Henry Ford Health System, Mount Clemens General Hospital, Inc., William Beaumont Hospital, and Trinity Health Corp. —Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to produce either direct or circumstantial evidence of any agreement among Detroit-area hospitals to fix RN compensation, and that the evidence, to the contrary, reflects independent decisionmaking by each of the Defendant health care institutions. The five moving Defendants further contend that the record fails to establish any anticompetitive effects resulting from the exchange of compensation-related information among Detroit-area hospitals. [2]

These two summary judgment motions have been fully and thoroughly briefed by the parties. [3] In addition, the Court held [*606] an August 11, 2011 hearing on these motions, at which counsel offered extensive and skillful argument in support of their respective positions. Having reviewed the parties' briefs and the accompanying, voluminous record, and having carefully considered the arguments of counsel at the August 11 hearing, the Court now is prepared to rule on Defendants' motions for summary judgment. This opinion and order sets forth the Court's rulings on these motions.

II. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

According to [7] Plaintiffs' third corrected class action complaint, Plaintiff Pat Cason-Merenda is a registered nurse ("RN") who has been employed by the Defendant Detroit Medical Center ("DMC") since November of 2002. During this same time frame, Plaintiff Jeffrey A. Suhre has worked as an RN at Providence Hospital, a health care facility owned and operated by Defendant St. John Health. In their complaint, Plaintiffs allege that the eight Defendant hospitals, along with other hospitals in the Detroit metropolitan area, have conspired among themselves to depress the level of compensation paid to their RN workforces, and that they have implemented a scheme of exchanging compensation-related information that has reduced competition among Detroit-area hospitals in the compensation of their RN employees. In bringing these claims under federal antitrust law, Plaintiffs seek to represent a class of individuals who were employed as RNs by any of the Defendant hospitals at any time from December 12, 2002 through the present. [4]

[1] Following lengthy negotiations overseen by a court-appointed special master, Professor Eric Green, three of the eight Defendant hospitals — St. John Health, Oakwood Healthcare Inc, and Bon Secours Cottage Health Services — agreed to settle the claims [5] against them, and these settlements were embodied in final orders and judgments entered by the Court on September 8, 2010. More recently, following the August 11, 2011 hearing on the five remaining Defendants' summary judgment motions, the Court appointed the Honorable Layn R. Phillips as special master to conduct further settlement negotiations. To date, this latest round of extensive and complex negotiations has yielded tentative settlements between Plaintiffs and two more Defendant hospitals, Mount Clemens General Hospital, Inc. and William Beaumont Hospital. Because these latter settlements have not yet been finalized or formally submitted to the Court for approval, the Court will continue to include Mount Clemens and Beaumont among the group of five remaining Defendant hospitals referenced in the balance of this opinion.

[2] In addition to joining in the motion brought by the other Defendant hospitals, Defendant Mount Clemens General Hospital separately moved for summary judgment on the ground that the wages paid to its largely unionized RN workforce have been determined solely through a lawful collective bargaining process, and have not been affected by any alleged conspiracy to [6] fix RN compensation or any sharing of wage-related information with other local hospitals. In light of the tentative settlement reached between Plaintiffs and Mount Clemens, the Court denies this separate motion without prejudice, and will revisit this motion only in the event that this settlement is not finalized.

[3] Because of the considerable overlap in the arguments advanced in the summary judgment motions filed by the Detroit Medical Center and the four other Defendant hospitals, Plaintiffs have filed a single, consolidated response in opposition to these two motions.

[4] Plaintiffs' pending motion for class certification defines the class somewhat more narrowly, but this broader characterization suffices for present purposes. In addition, the Court [8] notes that the December 2002 commencement of the class period

A. The Exchange of Compensation-Related Information Among the Defendant Hospitals

Although Plaintiffs have accused the Defendant hospitals of committing two distinct violations of federal antitrust law, these two theories of recovery rest upon a common factual predicate — namely, that Defendants have routinely engaged in substantial exchanges of information about how they compensate their RN workforces. Accordingly, the Court finds it appropriate to recount in considerable detail the evidence in the record reflecting these exchanges of wage-related information. In particular, Plaintiffs have identified three principal mechanisms through which this information has been shared among Detroit-area hospitals: (i) direct [9] contacts between employees of the various hospitals who were involved in the process of determining RN compensation at their respective institutions; (ii) health care industry organizations and meetings that addressed nursing issues, including compensation; and (iii) third-party surveys of RN compensation sponsored by the Defendant hospitals. The Court reviews each of these mechanisms in turn.

1. Direct Exchanges of Wage-Related Information Among Employees of Detroit-Area Hospitals

The record reveals that it was not uncommon — particularly in the early days of [*607] the relevant time period from December of 2002 forward — for an employee of one of the Defendant hospitals to contact his or her counterpart at another Detroit-area hospital and obtain information relating to the compensation of RNs. Indeed, as Plaintiffs observe, each of the Defendant hospitals has acknowledged in the course of this litigation that its employees communicated with employees of other hospitals during the pertinent time period regarding RN compensation. (See Plaintiffs' Consolidated Response Br. at 14 (citing Defendants' answers and interrogatory responses).) As detailed below, these direct contacts took a variety [10] of forms.

First, from 1989 until October of 2003, Thomas Dabrowski of Defendant William Beaumont Hospital conducted quarterly surveys of the compensation paid to nurses and other employees at a number of Detroit-area hospitals. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 12, compilation of survey results for October 2002, January 2003, April 2003, and July 2003.) Each of the Defendant hospitals other than Bon Secours participated in at least one of these surveys. [5] The participant hospitals then were provided with aggregated survey results, [6] which disclosed, among other information, the average minimum and maximum pay ranges and actual pay rates for a number of positions. As Plaintiffs observe, the information provided by the participant hospitals typically reflected current (as opposed to historical) pay rates and ranges, (see, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 13, 30), and on at least one occasion, one of presumably reflects the four-year statute of limitations for federal antitrust claims, see 15 U.S.C. § 15b, with this suit having been filed in December of 2006. Finally, because two of the Defendant hospitals, Beaumont and Trinity, were not added as parties until June of 2007, the limitation period for the claims against these Defendants presumably extends back only to June of 2003, rather than December of 2002.

[5] As Plaintiffs note, the human resources manager for Defendant Mount Clemens, Paula Mutch, testified at her deposition that "[i]t was practice in Mount Clemens to participate [11] in third-party surveys, so the hospital did not participate in direct surveys," and she further clarified that "direct" meant "hospital-to-hospital" surveys. (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. MM, Mutch Dep. at 40.) This testimony, however, is contradicted by the evidence showing that Mount Clements did, in fact, participate in at least two of the surveys conducted by Mr. Dabrowski of Beaumont Hospital. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 12C, 12D.) Although Defendants complain that Plaintiffs have "misquote[d]" this testimony and taken it "out of context," (Defendants' Reply Br. at 7 n.7), the Court fails to see how Ms. Mutch's testimony can be squared with the record on this point.

[6] The parties draw a distinction in their briefs between "aggregated" compensation data —in which the information from a number of sources is combined and reported collectively — and "disaggregated" data — in which the information received from each source is kept and reported separately, albeit sometimes with a generic name (e.g., "Hospital A") substituted for the true source of the data. As discussed below, this distinction between "aggregated" and "disaggregated" data has significance under a statement issued by [12] the U.S. Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission in August of 1996, which sets forth the antitrust enforcement policies of these federal agencies with regard to certain forms of joint activity in the health care industry. See U.S. Dep't of Justice & Federal Trade Comm'n, Statements of Antitrust Enforcement Policy in Health Care (1996) ("DOJ/FTC Guidelines") (attached as Ex. 32 to Defendant DMC's Motion for Summary Judgment).

the survey participants, Defendant Trinity, disclosed its plan for a future merit increase, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 14). [7]

In addition to these regular Beaumont surveys, the Defendant hospitals requested and provided RN compensation-related information [*608] on an ad hoc basis. Plaintiffs have produced, for example, [13] a number of documents exchanged among the Defendant hospitals in 2001 — before the commencement of the class period in December of 2002 —disclosing various aspects of their respective RN compensation packages. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 5 (Henry Ford providing information to Bon Secours); Ex. 6 (summary of information obtained by Oakwood from a number of the Defendant hospitals); Ex. 7 (Oakwood providing nurse wage information to Trinity); Ex. 8 (Henry Ford disclosing information it obtained about retention bonus practices of several Defendant hospitals); Ex. 9 (Oakwood advising Beaumont of its practices regarding shift differential pay).) These ad hoc information exchanges continued into 2002, (see, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 17 (February 2002 e-mail in which Trinity human resources employee states that she spoke to a Mount Clemens employee about nurse technician rates and "in exchange" obtained the latter hospital's physician assistant rates); Ex. 21 (Beaumont responding in July 2002 to Oakwood request for information); Ex. 22 (March 2002 fax from Trinity to Oakwood providing a copy of Trinity's "Salaried Employee Merit" policy); Ex. 26 (Henry Ford document dated May 2002 [14] disclosing information learned in survey of signing bonuses paid by other Defendant hospitals); Ex. 27 (November 2002 chart summarizing information obtained by Henry Ford regarding other Defendant hospitals' projected merit increases for 2003); Ex. 31 (Oakwood providing current wage information in mid-2002 in response to survey by Trinity)), and also extended into the post-December 2002 class period, (see, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 15 (May 2003 email exchange between DMC and St. John employees disclosing nurse pay rates); Ex. 19 (September 2004 e-mail exchange between DMC and Beaumont employees disclosing the two hospitals' most recent bedside nurse pay increases); Ex. 23 (April 2003 e-mail from St. John employee reporting information obtained from Mount Clemens); Ex. 25 (December 2006 chart compiled by Mount Clemens consultant reporting signing bonuses and loan forgiveness programs offered by other Detroit-area hospitals); Ex. 28 (December 2006 response by Bon Secours employee to St. John's request for information regarding signing bonuses and loan forgiveness); Ex. 32 (May 2003 e-mail from St. John employee reporting information obtained from Beaumont regarding pay raises awarded [15] earlier that month and new RN pay ranges); Ex. 33 (July 2005 e-mail from DMC employee reporting call received from St. John employee disclosing St. John's and Oakwood's midnight shift premiums for RNs); Ex. 94 (March 2006 e-mail correspondence indicating that St. John's personnel "check[ed] with our competition" to determine how a proposed pay increase compared with the increases given by Oakwood and Henry Ford); Ex. 102 (September 2004 Beaumont report of survey of other Detroit-area hospitals regarding recent pay increases for bedside nurses)).

More generally, the record discloses that Defendants' human resources and compensation staff retained contact lists of their counterparts at other Detroit-area hospitals. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 10A (June 2002 contact list maintained by Oakwood's compensation department in order to survey "local competitors" as part of a "job evaluation process"); Ex. 10B (contact list maintained by St. John); Ex. 10C (June 2003 contact information maintained by DMC for use in conducting "local surveys"); Ex. 10D (June 2006 list of contacts used by DMC to obtain compensation-related information from Henry Ford); Ex. JJ, Logan Dep. at 72-73 (testifying [16] to a [*609] list of contacts maintained at Henry Ford prior to August of 2003).) The documentary record, as well as the deposition testimony of certain of these employees, reflects a widespread belief in the quid pro quo nature of these contacts — that is, an understanding that if one of the Defendant hospitals wished to obtain compensation-related information from other Detroit-area hospitals, the best way to achieve this result was to share its own information with these other institutions. (See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 10E (January 2006 memo from DMC's director of compensation to her staff stating that "I am a big believer in networking and always find my compensation colleagues to be very generous in sharing information, and of course appreciate any information in return"); Ex. 16

[7] As noted, Beaumont's direct hospital-to-hospital surveys ceased in October of 2003, when a Beaumont management official issued a memo stating that the hospital would thereafter rely on twice-yearly surveys conducted by a third party, Sullivan, Cotter & Associates. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 11.) This memo further urged hospital officials to "[a]ttempt to use published salary survey information if at all possible," and stated that "[a]d hoc survey requests should be limited to positions that are critical or where there is a recruiting and/or retention issue." (Id.)

(undated fax from Trinity human resources employee to her counterpart at Oakwood stating that "I'm returning your wage survey and hope you can help me out with one I'm conducting"); Ex. 20 (July 2003 e-mail from Oakwood's chief nursing officer, Barbara Medvec, authorizing the disclosure of certain wage information to a St. John's hospital "if [17] you can also get what they are currently at and/or considering"); Ex. D, Barcome Dep. at 83 (explaining that Trinity would participate in surveys even if it was not given the results, "[b]ecause then if we wanted to have that information, then more than likely they would share it with us"); Ex. M, Dabrowski Dep. at 60-61 (testifying that he felt comfortable calling his counterparts at other hospitals when he had questions, and that they would likewise call him with their questions).) As aptly summarized by Jan Wiseman of Trinity's corporate compensation department in a January 2007 e-mail, "I know that in the past, there have been many informal calls made between organizations and that information has been pretty freely shared." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 35.) [8]

[*610] 2. The Exchange of Wage-Related Information at Industry Meetings or Through Health Care Industry Organizations

Plaintiffs next point to certain health care industry meetings and organizations as mechanisms through which the Defendant hospitals exchanged wage-related information. First, Plaintiffs cite working group meetings attended by the chief executive officers of some of the Defendant hospitals in 2004 through 2006. Yet, as Defendants point out, there is no evidence in the record that issues of nurse compensation were discussed at these meetings, or that compensation-related information [20] was exchanged.

Nonetheless, other industry organizations, as well as contacts established through these organizations, evidently provided a means for disseminating wage-related information among employees of the Defendant hospitals. First, in late 2005, a "Health Care Roundtable" was formed as a subgroup of the Michigan Ontario Compensation Association ("MOCA"), an all-industry organization. This group met quarterly and although its membership is not clear, all eight Defendant hospitals evidently received notice of its meetings. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 38.) [9]

When members of the Health Care Roundtable were invited to propose topics for discussion at a scheduled meeting in January of 2006, Carolyn LeGault of Trinity's corporate compensation group suggested that the group could address "market sensitive jobs, recruitment challenges and how current pay plans are affected by the external market and competition for a limited pool of candidates." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 37.) In response, Eileen

[8] Defendants again complain that Plaintiffs have presented this quote in a misleading light, given that Wiseman was responding to an e-mail from an employee at a Trinity hospital in Grand Rapids (and not a Detroit-area hospital) referencing a past practice of calling competing hospitals for salary information and asking whether this was "still permissible." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 35.) Yet, while Wiseman's comment may have [18] been prompted by an inquiry from a Grand Rapids employee, her response — prefaced as it was by the words "I know" —presumably was based upon her personal knowledge of what she referred to as a past practice of "many informal calls" and "pretty freely shared" information. (Id.) Before moving to Trinity's corporate compensation department, Wiseman was employed from 1997 to 2003 as a compensation analyst and compensation specialist at Trinity's St. Joseph Mercy Hospital in Ann Arbor. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. DDD, Wiseman Dep. at 12-13.) In that position, she likely would have been familiar with St. Joseph Mercy-Ann Arbor's participation in the April and July 2003 wage surveys conducted by Beaumont, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 12C, 12D), and she testified that she provided compensation-related information to her counterparts at other hospitals on at least a "sporadic basis" while employed at St. Joseph Mercy, (Wiseman Dep. at 121). Thus, there is an evidentiary basis for Wiseman's claim of personal knowledge as to a past practice of informal contacts and freely shared information. In addition, the record certainly includes examples of Trinity's contacts with other Detroit-area [19] hospitals to exchange wage-related information, (see, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 7, 17, 31), and Wiseman's statement could well have been informed by these instances of information sharing. Regardless, then, of Wiseman's somewhat ambiguous deposition testimony as to her awareness of the exchange of salary information between Trinity and other hospitals, (see Defendants' Reply, Ex. SSS, Wiseman Dep. at 101-02), her above-quoted statement need not be read as limited to Grand Rapids hospitals or based on something other than her own knowledge and experience as a compensation professional at Trinity.

[9] In addition, all eight Defendant hospitals participated in a 2006 salary survey conducted by MOCA. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 72.)

Vernor of DMC stated that she was "so glad those are [21] issues you want to address, Carolyn, as those are issues for the DMC as well, but I did not think other health care systems would want to discuss their trade secrets!" (Id.) The minutes of the January 2006 meeting indicate that the attendees discussed "[m]arket [s]ensitive" positions, including RNs, and addressed the problem of "[b]idding wars" that "inflate market rates" and cause employees to "go down [the] street for $.10/hr[.]" (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 39.)

Following this meeting, Amy Lumetta of Henry Ford sent an e-mail to MOCA's then-president, Carol Breen, expressing an interest in "continuing the discussion from the last round table, but trying to focus a bit more on the pay practices, etc. vs. supply and demand concerns," and suggesting that the results of a MOCA survey of Detroit-area hospitals' pay practices for market sensitive jobs could be used "as a reference point in the discussion." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 40.) The minutes of the Health Care Roundtable's April 2006 meeting reflect that this survey was, in fact, a principal topic of discussion, with an outside presenter opining that health care institutions "always use[] compensation-relat[ed] solutions" to their [22] RN shortages but urging them to "shift their thinking to break this cycle." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 41.) [10]

[*611] Next, employees of the Defendant hospitals exchanged compensation-related information and discussed their pay [23] practices at meetings of the Health Care Recruiters Association of Metropolitan Detroit ("HCRAMD"). Frances Dombrowski of Beaumont — who served as vice president of the HCRAMD in 2006 and president in 2007 —testified that this organization helped its members to "understand the [nursing] market [and] what was happening with other organizations," with one relevant aspect of this market being compensation. (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. N, Dombrowski Dep. at 33-34.) Ms. Dombrowski was aware of discussions at the HCRAMD meetings regarding the pay practices of the member health care institutions, and she agreed that one of the benefits of membership in the organization was the opportunity to obtain this information from other members. (See id. at 54-56.) Likewise, Alicia Horvath of Bon Secours — who served as vice president of the HCRAMD in 2002 and president in 2003 — agreed that it was "typical" for members to share RN compensation information at meetings, and for members to discuss salary ranges, planned raises, and the timing of annual increases. (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. AA, Horvath Dep. at 101-02, 110; see also Ex. XX, Stacey Dep. at 30-31 (Gloria Stacey of Mount Clemens testifying that [24] information relating to nurse compensation was exchanged at HCRAMD meetings "[m]aybe a couple times a year"); Ex. 24 (sheet circulated by Ms. Stacey at an HCRAMD meeting requesting information from other hospitals regarding the hiring bonuses paid to ICU nurses); Ex. 43 (minutes of January 2002 HCRAMD meeting reflecting that members shared details of their retention/sign-on bonuses).)

Beyond their interactions at meetings, employees of the Defendant hospitals used their membership in the HCRAMD as a mechanism for obtaining compensation-related information from other hospitals. Ms. Dombrowski of Beaumont testified that she received e-mails from other HCRAMD members sharing pay information. (See Dombrowski Dep. at 86-87.) In addition, Plaintiffs have produced a number of documents evidencing exchanges of compensation-related information among HCRAMD members. (See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 45A (August 2003 e-mail to members reporting disaggregated results — with each participating hospital identified by name —of survey of RN wages, along with dates of anticipated pay increases); Ex. 45B (August 2004 e-mail from Henry Ford seeking pay information for operating room nurses, with response [25] from Mount Clemens providing the name and contact information for its nurse recruiter); Ex. 45C (October 2004 response by Henry Ford to member's request for pay and other information for licensed practical nurses ("LPNs")); Ex. 45D (June 2005 Oakwood document compiling information learned from HCRAMD members regarding scholarship and loan forgiveness programs for nurses); Ex. 45E (July 2005 e-mail from St. John employee seeking (and receiving) information from [10] Beyond the matters actually discussed at the roundtable meetings, these gatherings provided an opportunity for employees who handled compensation-related issues at their respective Detroit-area hospitals to meet their counterparts at other local institutions. Following one of these meetings in late 2005, Eileen Vernor of DMC circulated to her co-workers a list of "health care compensation contacts" who had attended the meeting, stating that "[t]hese may or may not be familiar names but could be useful as you market pric[e] jobs or benchmark compensation practices." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 10E.) Vernor further opined that "[o]pportunities to meet [these individuals] face-to-face are always valuable in reinforcing these contacts and establishing relationships," with these "compensation colleagues" having proved "to be very generous in sharing information." (Id.) Thus, she urged her co-workers to attend the forthcoming January 2006 roundtable meeting hosted by DMC.

HCRAMD members regarding midnight shift premiums); Ex. 45F (September 2005 Henry Ford e-mail reporting sign-on bonus and loan forgiveness information obtained from other HCRAMD members); Ex. 45G (December 2005 e-mail from St. [*612] John employee to other HCRAMD members summarizing information received from membership regarding new nurse graduate pay practices).)

Finally, Plaintiffs point to the Southeast Michigan Healthcare Workforce Partners as a means though which human resources executives at the Defendant hospitals met and discussed compensation-related issues. According to St. John's senior vice president and chief worklife officer, Mary Naber, the members of this group pooled their money to hire a third party, Watson Wyatt, to [26] "conduct a survey about the workforce labor shortage," and the resulting survey report included nurse compensation data. (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. NN, Naber Dep. at 166-67, 175.) The group then met to discuss the survey data and to "plan[] tactics . . . from the data." (Id.)

3. The Exchange of Wage-Related Information Through Third-Party Surveys

The Defendant hospitals observe, and Plaintiffs acknowledge, that salary surveys conducted by third parties are commonly used in a wide range of industries, including health care, as a legitimate tool in establishing competitive wage rates. As the parties recognize, an August 1996 policy statement issued by the U.S. Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission expressly addresses such surveys, explaining that these federal agencies "will not challenge, absent extraordinary circumstances, provider participation in written surveys of . . . wages, salaries, or benefits of health care personnel," so long as (i) the survey in question is "managed by a third-party," (ii) the "information provided by survey participants is based on data more than 3 months old," (iii) "there are at least five providers" participating in the survey, with no [27] participant's data "represent[ing] more than 25 percent" of a given reported statistic, and (iv) the "information disseminated is sufficiently aggregated such that it would not allow recipients to identify the . . . compensation paid by any particular provider." DOJ/FTC Guidelines, Statement 6(A) at 63. In Plaintiffs' view, however, the record in the present case indicates that at least some of the third-party surveys sponsored or relied upon by the Defendant hospitals in determining their RN compensation have deviated in one or more respects from the criteria set forth in the DOJ/FTC Guidelines.

First, Plaintiffs have produced evidence that from January of 2001 [11] to March of 2004, the results of various third-party surveys were reported to the sponsoring Defendant hospitals with unmasked, named hospital data, including wage rates and effective dates. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 46 (compiling several third-party surveys sponsored by Defendants Henry Ford and St. John, the results of which were reported to the sponsoring hospitals in disaggregated form and with the name of each participating hospital (and its data) expressly identified).) [12] In addition, Oakwood's former director [28] of compensation, Rhonda Bunce, testified [*613] that she had received the results of nurse compensation surveys with individual hospitals explicitly identified. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. J, Bunce Dep. at 82.) Similarly, Linda Budd of Budd & Associates — a one-person firm frequently used by the Defendant hospitals to conduct wage surveys — testified that she initially reported the results of surveys with the participating hospitals identified by name, but that she switched to code letters "after a few years." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. I, Budd Dep. at 34.)

Plaintiffs also point to instances where a Defendant hospital was given a "key" that permitted it to identify the hospitals participating in a third-party survey. Ms. Bunce of Oakwood, for example, testified that she had received keys that would enable her to identify the hospitals that had participated in third-party surveys sponsored by Oakwood. (See Bunce Dep. at 84-85.) In addition, the record includes evidence that Ms. Budd provided St. John

[11] As Plaintiffs point out, this was the earliest date for which documents were produced during discovery in this case. (See 8/29/2007 Order at 4 (ordering the production of documents dating back to January 1, 2001).)

[12] Notably, in a document prepared by St. John's wage and salary division, a report of the results of a July 2002 third-party survey — with disaggregated, unmasked hospital-by-hospital RN wage data for most of the Defendant hospitals in this case — is immediately preceded by a description of the DOJ/FTC Guidelines, including the recommendation that only aggregated salary data should be disclosed. (See Plaintiffs' Response, [29] Ex. 46C.)

with a key that would enable it to identify each hospital's data as reported in a March 2004 survey, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 48), and that Ms. Budd once advised a Bon Secours employee that Oakwood was "Hospital L," but that "[y]ou never heard that from me!," (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 49).

Next, Plaintiffs point to several instances in which survey results were reported in disaggregated form, under circumstances that made it possible for the Defendant hospitals to "break the code" and determine which data corresponded to which hospital. At times, for example, Ms. Budd would provide updated survey results to a sponsoring hospital with a new participant identified by the next consecutive letter of the alphabet, making it easy [30] to identify this new participant and its corresponding data. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 50 (compiling examples of this practice in updated survey data provided by Ms. Budd to the sponsoring hospital, Mount Clemens, in October of 2006).) In other instances, a Defendant hospital could be identified through characteristics unique to it but known to other hospitals — e.g., the time of year that a given hospital awarded pay increases, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 51, 52, 56), or a reference to job titles that were unique to a particular institution, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 53, 54). As stated by Ann Vano, St. John's former director of compensation, there were "many sources" from which she could determine which hospital corresponded to which letter code. (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. BBB, Vano Dep. at 77.)

Moreover, while the DOJ/FTC Guidelines advocate the disclosure of only aggregated data, the results of third-party surveys often were reported to the Defendant hospitals in disaggregated form. Most notably, until some time in 2004, Ms. Budd provided disaggregated data to all of the hospitals involved in her surveys, both sponsors and participants. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. [31] 57; see also Budd Dep. at 154-55.) When sponsors began to complain that they were receiving the same data as participants, Ms. Budd ceased to supply the survey participants with disaggregated data, but continued to provide this data to the survey sponsors. (See Budd Dep. at 154-55; see also Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 122 (disaggregated data from August 2004 survey provided to sponsor Mount Clemens).) Even then, Ms. Budd provided the disaggregated results of a November 2005 Oakwood-sponsored survey to Henry Ford, stating that she was "[a]lways happy to oblige [her] old 'alma mater'" where she had worked before forming her own business. (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 196; see also Ex. 200 (providing disaggregated results of November 2002 St. John-sponsored survey to non-participant Bon Secours as a "freebie," [*614] with Ms. Budd noting "don't say I never gave you anything").) Similarly, in 2004, Defendant Henry Ford sponsored a "Nursing Pay Policy Survey" in which the participants — including each of the eight Defendant hospitals —were asked to share a wide range of competitively sensitive information, including whether the participant targeted its RN base pay to a market percentile and, if so, [32] what this percentile was. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 74.) The results of this survey were reported in disaggregated form, albeit with the participating hospitals identified by letter codes rather than by name. (Id.)

In addition, the results reported in Ms. Budd's surveys sometimes ran counter to the recommendation in the DOJ/FTC Guidelines that participant data should be more than three months old. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 58 (compiling examples of survey data reported by Ms. Budd that were less than three months old).) At least on some occasions, it apparently was a matter of some importance that the survey data be as up-to-date as possible. As one example, Rachelle Hulett, DMC's director of compensation programs, sent a March 25, 2002 e-mail to Ann Vano of St. John in connection with a critical jobs survey sponsored by St. John and conducted by Ms. Budd, stating that "[a]s promised, we will report our 2002 ranges (effective April)." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 64.) [13] In another instance, St. John requested in early March of 2004 that Ms. Budd conduct a "brief survey to see if the RN data reported in their December [2003] survey is already obsolete," (Plaintiffs' Response, [33] Ex. 66), even though St. John had received this survey data just two months earlier, in January of 2004, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 46E). [14] Indeed, Plaintiffs have identified several instances of the Defendant hospitals divulging information in third-party surveys as to their projected future pay increases, with the bulk of this data reported in a disaggregated format.

[13] As Plaintiffs note, the results of this survey reflect that one participant did, in fact, report data effective April of 2002, making it evident to St. John that this data had been supplied by DMC.

[14] Again, Plaintiffs note that Ms. Budd evidently complied with this request and provided updated survey data to St. John in March of 2004. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 46G.)

(See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 71 (compiling surveys conducted by Ms. Budd each year between 2001 and 2005 of the participating hospitals' planned pay increases for the coming year); Ex. 72 (report of similar survey conducted by MOCA Health Care Roundtable in 2006 to determine the participating hospitals' planned 2007 pay increases, albeit with results reported in aggregated form).)

Finally, Plaintiffs point to evidence that certain surveys were "third-party" [34] in name only, with participant data routed through the sponsoring hospital on its way to the third party. In June of 2003, for instance, DMC provided its average rates of pay for a number of positions directly to Oakwood for inclusion in a survey sponsored by the latter hospital, and Oakwood then forwarded this information to Ms. Budd so that it could be incorporated into the results of her "third-party" survey. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 60, 61.) Again in January of 2004, Oakwood personnel gathered survey data directly from several other health care institutions and forwarded this information to Ms. Budd, who combined this data with information received directly from other hospitals and distributed the results of this "third-party" survey to the participants. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. QQ, Perez Dep. at 40-41; Ex. 62.) More generally, the record discloses instances in which the sponsoring institutions [*615] were significantly involved in the design of surveys and the presentation of their results, which seemingly runs counter to the notion of a "third-party" survey. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. MM, Mutch Dep. at 92, 106-07 (Mount Clemens employee testifying that she instructed [35] Ms. Budd as to which categories of nurses to include in her survey and what types of information to gather); Ex. I, Budd Dep. at 183 (testifying that Henry Ford devised the questions to ask in a 2005 survey); Ex. 59 (compilation of e-mails sent by Oakwood and St. John employees to Ms. Budd between 2001 and 2003, specifying such details as the survey participants, the positions to be addressed in the survey, the specific information to be obtained regarding these positions, and the manner in which the results should be presented).)

B. The Role of Competitor Wage Information in Defendants' Compensation Decisions

Plaintiffs concede that there is "no smoking gun here," (Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 7) — i.e., no direct evidence of an agreement among the Defendant hospitals to depress the wages of their RNs. Likewise, nothing in the record explicitly contradicts the evidence presented by Defendants — principally in the form of declarations offered by high-ranking executives at each of the Defendant hospitals — that they looked to the wages paid by other hospitals as merely one of several factors used in establishing the rates of compensation for their RN workforces, and that each Defendant [36] institution independently set its own RN compensation rates. Nonetheless, Plaintiffs point to evidence that they view as illustrating each Defendant hospital's significant — and, in Plaintiffs' view, inappropriate — use of and reliance upon compensation-related information that it obtained directly from competitors, or that otherwise failed to comport with the "safety zone" criteria set forth in the DOJ/FTC Guidelines for the exchange of wage data among health care providers. The evidence pertaining to each Defendant hospital is summarized below, albeit with the three settling Defendants omitted from this review. [15]

1. Detroit Medical Center

According to Robert Griswold, Jr., DMC's director of compensation, his institution has a compensation policy of "try[ing] to approximate the median of the market, giving consideration to our budget constraints and ability to pay." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. V, Griswold 9/17/2008 Dep. at 26.) In order to implement this policy, DMC's compensation team would "look at the survey data that we have to establish what the market is," and arrive at a "market pricing" from which a recommendation would be forwarded to management. (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. U, Griswold

[15] Although this survey of the record focuses on the five remaining Defendants, this should not be construed as suggesting that the conduct of the three settling Defendant hospitals is wholly irrelevant to the proper disposition of Plaintiffs' claims against the remaining Defendants. Rather, the activities of each alleged co-conspirator in the claimed antitrust conspiracy may properly be considered in resolving Plaintiffs' claims, even if a particular co-conspirator is no longer (or has never been) a party to the case. Accordingly, while the compensation practices of the [37] settling Defendants have been omitted from the present review, some of these practices are mentioned later in this opinion as pertinent to the Court's analysis of the parties' arguments in support of or opposition to Defendants' motions.

4/10/2008 Dep. at 21; see also Ex. EE, Krueger Dep. at 26.) These market analyses were based in part upon two third-party surveys commissioned by DMC during and shortly before the class period — [*616] one conducted by Towers Perrin in 2001-02, and the second conducted by Sullivan Cotter in 2003. (See Defendants' Motion, Ex. L.1, Krueger Decl. at ¶ 7.) In addition, DMC participated [38] in wage surveys conducted or sponsored by other hospitals — e.g., the surveys conducted by Beaumont between October 2002 and July 2003, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 12), and the surveys conducted by Linda Budd, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. V, Griswold Dep. at 47) — because this participation would enable DMC to "get a copy of the results for free." (Id.)

Yet, if no published survey data was available, DMC's manager of compensation programs, Rachelle Hulett, testified that it was acceptable to directly contact the hospital's competitors. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. BB, Hulett Dep. at 96-97.) As corroboration for this testimony, Plaintiffs point to specific occasions when such contacts occurred. In August of 2006, for example, DMC's then-director of compensation, Eileen Vernor, directed Thomasine Krueger of the compensation team to obtain wage information from DMC's Detroit-area competitors. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. EE, Krueger Dep. at 49.) Notably, Krueger refused to do so, stating her view that Vernor's request was "outside the [antitrust] guidelines that we try to follow." (Id. at 50.) Krueger testified that Vernor was "angry" with this refusal and instructed her to get [39] another member of the compensation team to obtain the information, (id.), and Vernor ultimately contacted the other hospitals herself to secure the desired wage data, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. CCC, Vernor Dep. at 165; see also Ex. 157 (wage data obtained from Beaumont, Henry Ford, and St. John, including scheduled St. John pay increase in September 2006)). [16] Apart from this incident, Plaintiffs have produced evidence of other instances in which DMC employees — often at the instruction of their superiors — directly contacted competing hospitals to obtain wage-related information. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 160 (February 2001 e-mail from Ruthann Liagre, DMC's then-vice president of human resources, asking Ms. Krueger to make a "couple of quick phone calls to our closest competitors" to inquire about their certification bonuses); Ex. 162 (August 2003 e-mail from Ms. Hulett stating that the "VPs are very interested in what other health care systems do for PDL [professional development ladder], in terms of how they pay (hours worked, benefit level, ladder level, etc.)," and asking Ms. Cracium to "do a call around to see what's up"); Ex. 163 (Ms. Liagre conducting a "[q]uick and [40] dirty" September 2003 survey of other health care systems' projected or scheduled pay increases, and then reporting this information to DMC's chief operating officer, Gwen MacKenzie); Ex. 164 (June 2006 e-mail from Ms. Krueger reporting staff nurse pay rates obtained from "SUPER confidential" source at Henry Ford, apparently at the request of DMC's director of human resources, Paulette Griffin).)

[*617] Once [41] the compensation team gathered this data, whether from surveys or through direct contacts, and formulated its "market pricing" recommendations, the recommendations and underlying "base rate information" were forwarded to DMC's "executive leadership for decision-making by them." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. V, Griswold Dep. at 165.) As one example, the data obtained by Ms. Vernor through her August 2006 contacts with other Defendant hospitals was forwarded to Deloris Hunt, DMC's corporate vice president of human resources, and this information evidently was shared with DMC's chief executive officer, Mike Duggan, at a meeting shortly thereafter. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 165.) [17] The wage rates for nurses at competitor hospitals also were provided to Michael Prusaitis, DMC's director of patient care budget monitoring, for use in DMC's budgeting process. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. CCC, Vernor Dep. at 172-74; Ex. SS, Prusaitis Dep. at 13.)

[16] As Plaintiffs observe, another member of the compensation team had reminded Ms. Vernor about the antitrust guidelines just a few months earlier. Specifically, upon receiving Vernor's January 2006 e-mail (quoted earlier) in which she advised the team of some "health care compensation contacts" and characterized these colleagues as "very generous in sharing information," (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 10E), team member Cynthia Cracium responded that "[a] few years ago, many of our former contacts made the decision to work through 3rd party agencies due to the anti-trust laws, and we lost some valuable contacts," and she further stated that "[i]t's still very awkward asking for information directly from other hospitals due to the legal issues that could arise." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 158.)

[17] When asked at his deposition whether he thought it was appropriate for DMC's human resources personnel to communicate with other hospitals about the pay packages offered by their respective institutions, Mr. Duggan responded that "I never gave [42] [it] any thought one way or the other." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. O, Duggan Dep. at 57.)

Plaintiffs view the record as revealing, at least in one instance, that this data gathered from other hospitals formed the basis for a lower merit pay increase than had been recommended. Specifically, they point to a December 2005 memo stating that DMC's compensation department had recommended a 3 percent merit increase for 2006, but that only a 2 percent merit increase had been approved. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 166.) When asked to identify the basis for this 2 percent merit increase, as opposed to the 3 percent increase advocated by the compensation department, Mr. Duggan testified that "I would certainly not raise [employee] wages unnecessarily given the narrow margin that we're always operating on to keep our hospitals open," and he explained that "I try to raise in every specialty what is necessary to keep us competitive and keep our positions filled, and I try not to pay more than that because it jeopardizes the viability of our hospital system." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. O, Duggan Dep. at 53.) [18]

2. Henry Ford Health System

According to Robert G. Riney, Henry Ford's executive vice president and chief operating officer, Henry Ford has established "market targets" for each job title, and the market target for "market sensitive positions" — a category that includes RNs — is "the 66th percentile of the market." (Defendants' Motion, Ex. N, Riney Decl. at ¶ 11; see also Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. Y, Harland Dep. at 53, 55-56.) In assessing how the actual wage rates paid [44] to Henry Ford employees compare to these market targets, and in determining more generally the salary structures and pay practices for RNs and other positions, [*618] a team of executives on the "Total Rewards Committee" relies in part on a "Competitive Pay Analysis" prepared each year by Henry Ford's compensation department. (See Riney Decl. at ¶ 11.) In this Competitive Pay Analysis, the compensation department makes recommendations as to the percentage wage increases for market sensitive positions and all other positions. (See id. at ¶ 15; see also Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 117 (November 2002 Competitive Pay Analysis making recommendations for 2003).)

In formulating its Competitive Pay Analysis each year, Henry Ford's compensation department relied in part upon information it gathered or learned regarding local competitors' pay rates and projected increases. (See Harland Dep. at 19; see also Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. PP, Parkinson-Tripp Dep. at 46, 109.) In the early days of the class period, there were occasions when employees in the compensation department would obtain this information by directly contacting their counterparts at other Detroit-area hospitals. (See Plaintiffs' Response, [45] Ex. 118 (November 2002 e-mail stating that compensation department employee had been directed to "call around to local competitors to get a feel for what they are projecting"); Ex. 119 (report of information learned from other local hospitals regarding projected 2003 merit increases). [19]) In 2003, however, the compensation department staff were reminded of the antitrust guidelines regarding exchanges of information among competitors, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. KK, Lumetta Dep. at 33-34), [20] and Henry Ford employees thereafter largely ceased to request compensation-related information directly from competitors, (but see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 109 (September 2005 fax from human resources employee with chart of compensation data from other Detroit-area hospitals and names of contacts from whom this information evidently was obtained); Ex. 116 (minutes of July 2006 meeting indicating

[18] DMC complains in its reply brief that Plaintiffs have misrepresented Mr. Duggan's testimony [43] on this point. In testimony immediately preceding the above-quoted passage, Mr. Duggan noted that the 2 percent merit increase for 2006 was only one of the pay increases for which nurses could be eligible — for example, nurses could receive additional increases by moving to a higher step in DMC's "Promoting Excellence" program, (see DMC's Motion, Ex. 4, Krueger Decl. at ¶¶ 28, 33) — and he explained that he "look[ed] at all of the nurses' increases in a year together" in making compensation decisions. (DMC's Motion, Ex. 10, Duggan Dep. at 52.) In DMC's view, then, Mr. Duggan had "rejected the premise" of the subsequent question by Plaintiffs' counsel that elicited his above-quoted testimony. (See DMC's Reply Br. at 14.)

[19] As Defendants point out in their reply brief, the information obtained on this latter occasion evidently led the compensation department to [46] recommend a greater wage increase than it had recommended in an earlier draft of its Competitive Pay Analysis. (See Defendants' Reply, Ex. JJJ, Parkinson-Tripp Dep. at 192-94.)

[20] Although the cited testimony of Henry Ford employee Amy Lumetta appears to make reference to a memo that has been held to be protected by the attorney/client privilege, (see 2/24/2009 Order), the Court nonetheless may consider Ms. Lumetta's testimony as to the actions taken by Henry Ford's compensation department following the dissemination of this memo.

that Henry Ford's chief nursing officer, Ronnie Hall, planned to "send[] someone to Oakwood to find out" this competitor's contingent rate of pay for RNs).) [21]

[*619] Yet, despite this reminder, Henry Ford employees continued to provide wage-related information in response to direct inquiries from other hospitals. (See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 110 (Henry Ford providing St. John with information regarding nurse wages and practices in January of 2006); Ex. 111 (March 2006 e-mail in which St. John employee states that she "confirmed [pay increases] with HFH 2 weeks ago"); Ex. 113 (June 2006 e-mail from member of DMC compensation team reporting information received from "SUPER confidential" Henry Ford source regarding staff nurse pay range and recent change in pay scale).) Henry [48] Ford also continued to both sponsor and participate in third-party surveys, with the results of these surveys occasionally reported to the hospital in a disaggregated format. (See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 71D (Henry Ford-sponsored survey conducted by Linda Budd in November 2003, reporting salary planning information in disaggregated form); Ex. 74 (results of 2004 "Nursing Pay Policy Survey" sponsored by Henry Ford, reported in disaggregated form); Ex. 196 (disaggregated results of November 2005 Oakwood-sponsored survey given to Henry Ford by Ms. Budd, who stated that she was "[a]lways happy to oblige [her] old 'alma mater'").)

Finally, in at least some years during the relevant period, Henry Ford sponsored third-party surveys of other Detroit-area hospitals' planned salary increases for the coming year. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 71D, 120 (survey conducted in late 2003 of projected increases for 2004); Ex. 121 (survey conducted in September of 2004 of projected increases for 2005).) Although Defendants claim that the "Competitive Pay Analysis" reports furnished by Henry Ford's compensation department to the executive-level Total Rewards Committee presented the survey data [49] "in highly aggregated form," (Defendants' Motion, Br. in Support at 7), Plaintiffs correctly observe that the December 2003 and October 2004 reports incorporated the disaggregated results of the two above-referenced salary planning surveys, albeit with the participant hospitals identified by letter codes rather than by name. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 120, 121.)

3. Mount Clemens General Hospital

Mount Clemens is the only Defendant hospital with a unionized RN workforce. In preparation for its union negotiations, Mount Clemens commissioned third-party surveys of nurse wage-related information at other Detroit-area and Michigan hospitals. (See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 57B (February 2004 survey conducted by Linda Budd reporting detailed RN salary structure data in disaggregated form, but with hospitals identified by letter code rather than name); Ex. 122 (updated August 2004 survey conducted by Ms. Budd due to prolonged union negotiations, with data again in disaggregated form and reporting some data that was only a month old).) Mount Clemens states without contradiction, however, that the data from these surveys were shared with the nurses' bargaining team during negotiations, [50] (see Defendants' Motion, Ex. BB, Klinger Dep. at 189; Ex. CC, Horde Dep. at 71, 92), and, on some occasions, were shared directly with the RNs themselves, (see Horde Dep. at 92-94). In addition, the compensation actually paid by Mount Clemens to its unionized RN workforce is disclosed in the

[21] Beyond these examples of direct contacts, Plaintiffs point more generally to a March 2002 report generated by Henry Ford's "Market-Based Compensation Recalibration Team." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 108.) As Plaintiffs observe, this report referenced such measures as "[f]requent audit of competitor pay rates and practices," "[a]ggressive collection of market compensation information from informal sources," and "[c]onstant monitoring of compensation competitiveness" by "keep[ing] in touch with other Compensation representatives from the various hospitals throughout the year as to future plans and any changes to current pay practices." (Id.) In a supplemental [47] affidavit, however, Mr. Riney states that he was a co-leader of this team, and he asserts (i) that the March 2002 report included only "draft recommendations," (ii) that "Henry Ford did not take any action with regard to any specific recommendations" in the report, (iii) that the report "does not reflect compensation setting practices, processes, or philosophy at Henry Ford," and (iv) that "no department at Henry Ford, including the Compensation Department, ever implemented any of the [report's] recommendations." (Defendants' Reply, Ex. HHH, Riney Suppl. Decl. at ¶¶ 5-6.)

collective bargaining agreements ("CBAs") reached with the nurses' union, copies of which are distributed to each union member. [22]

[*620] Beyond this, Plaintiffs have identified an instance in March of 2006 when, in preparation for upcoming union negotiations, two of the hospital's representatives in the negotiations — David Klinger, Mount Clemens' then-vice president of human resources, and Priscilla Horde, a human resources consultant — obtained from an Oakwood employee a copy of an Oakwood-sponsored survey of RN pay. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 123 (January 2006 [51] survey of RN wages paid by local hospitals, reported in an aggregated format).) When these 2006 negotiations again extended through the year, Mount Clemens employees obtained the results of a more recent Oakwood-sponsored survey, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 124 (August 2006 survey results provided to Mount Clemens)), and also initiated direct contact in November of 2006 with their counterparts at Beaumont, St. John, and Trinity to obtain the specific wage rates for these hospitals, with this disaggregated, unmasked data then included in a packet given to Mount Clemens' negotiating representatives, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 125; see also Ex. CC, Klinger Dep. at 58-60, 83-84). Finally, Plaintiffs note that on one occasion, a Mount Clemens human resources consultant, Gloria Stacey, obtained information from her counterparts at an HCRAMD meeting regarding the hiring bonuses paid to ICU nurses. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 24 (undated sheet disclosing this information for various local hospitals).) [23] As Defendants point out, however, there is no evidence that any of the information obtained by Mount Clemens through direct contacts with other hospitals had any impact on Mount [52] Clemens' negotiations with the RN union.

4. William Beaumont Hospital

Defendant Beaumont's vice president of human resources, Ronald Lilek, has stated in an affidavit that Beaumont "established a minimum target for Inpatient RN base wage paygrade maximum at between the 60th and 80th percentile, with a target of the 75th percentile, of the highest actual rate paid in the market." (Defendants' Motion, Ex. S, Lilek Decl. at ¶ 25.) In determining its base hourly rate for RNs and endeavoring to meet this target, Beaumont relied in part on survey data. (See id. at ¶¶ 21, 26.) As discussed earlier, until October of 2003, Beaumont obtained this survey data through its own quarterly surveys conducted by one of its employees, Tom Dabrowski, who directly requested compensation information from other Detroit-area hospitals, and all of the Defendant hospitals other than Bon Secours participated in one or more of these surveys. Thereafter, Beaumont switched to surveys conducted by a third [53] party, Sullivan Cotter & Associates. [24]

Even after Beaumont made this transition to third-party surveys, its employees continued to occasionally contact their counterparts at other hospital for compensation-related information. In July of 2006, for example, Mr. Dabrowski sought [*621] and received information from DMC regarding its student loan programs for nurses and other positions. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 101.) In September of 2004, Mr. Dabrowski compiled a list of information he had obtained from other local hospitals regarding their most recent pay increases for bedside nurses. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 102.) More generally, Beaumont's director of compensation, David Misner, testified that he would permit direct contacts on occasions where "we were maybe looking to survey a singular job, [54] and to go out and get a custom survey through a third party would have been expensive [and] very time

[22] Consequently, on those occasions when Mount Clemens employees responded to inquiries from other hospitals or third-party surveys regarding the hospital's wage rates for RNs or plans for future increases, such information was readily obtainable from the current CBA, which was widely available to all members of the Mount Clemens RN union.

[23] While Defendants claim that this information was gathered outside the class period, in 2001, the passage of Ms. Stacey's deposition cited in support of this contention is silent as to the date of this document.

[24] As Plaintiffs note, at around the time Beaumont began to use Sullivan Cotter to conduct wage surveys, this outside firm sent Beaumont a September 2003 letter stating that "[a]s a result of the Justice Department guidelines regarding survey data exchanges, you would like to 'outsource' the collection of competitive pay data from key healthcare organizations." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 202.)

consuming," but he stated that, so far as he was aware, such contacts occurred only "on a sporadic basis." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. LL, Misner Dep. at 141, 183.)

In Plaintiffs' view, the record discloses several instances in which Beaumont used information from the local market to award smaller wage increases or to reduce planned or requested increases in other forms of compensation. In September of 2003 and again in May of 2005, Beaumont's chief operating officer, Kenneth Matzick, determined that budgeted 2.5 percent wage increases for the hospital's nurses should not be awarded, citing the recommendations of human resources personnel that "[b]ased upon a review of the recently completed nursing survey," a smaller 2.0 percent increase was appropriate. (Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 104A, 104C.) Likewise, a pay increase that was "anticipated" for December of 2006 was cancelled, with Beaumont's director of human resources, Lucy Vail, explaining that "pay is market-based" and that "[w]e led the market when the increases were given in the summer, resulting in pay as much as $2.00 over top [55] of the market," so that "there is no need to increase pay at this time." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 99.) In addition, a length-of-service ("LOS") increase was reduced by one percent in 2005, based on a "survey of six area hospitals indicat[ing] that Beaumont[']s LOS increases ha[ve] been inconsistent with what is occurring in the wage market." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 105.) Finally, the results of a June 2005 ad hoc survey of local hospitals were cited as a basis for rejecting a requested increase in the then-current $3.00/hour on-call rate for the acute hemodialysis staff. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 106; see also Ex. 103 (April 2003 recommendation, based on market data, that the on-call rate for cardiac cath lab staff be increased to $3.00/hour rather than the requested $4.00/hour, although the requested increase to $4.00/hour was later granted in September 2004).)

5. Trinity Health Corp.

There are three Trinity hospitals involved in this case: (i) St. Joseph Mercy Oakland in Pontiac, Michigan ("Trinity-Oakland"), (ii) St. Mary Mercy Hospital in Livonia ("Trinity-Livonia"), and (iii) the former St. Joseph Mercy Macomb in Clinton Township ("Trinity-Macomb"). [25] Although these hospitals [56] are affiliated with Trinity, each of them operates independently, and each has a separate nurse compensation structure with distinct rates of pay and no effort to coordinate with the other Trinity facilities.

None of the three Defendant Trinity hospitals commissioned any third-party wage surveys during the class period. However, Trinity's corporate compensation group collected market wage data from a variety of sources, and used this information [*622] to prepare and disseminate market analyses to each of the three Trinity affiliates. Trinity's corporate recommendation to these affiliates was to target their base pay to the 50th percentile of the market, and all three affiliates adopted this target. In addition to the market analyses furnished by Trinity's corporate compensation group, each of the three Trinity affiliates participated in and received the results of third-party surveys, such as Linda Budd's surveys. (See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 128 (affiliates received disaggregated results of survey [57] conducted by Ms. Budd in May 2003); Ex. 129 (affiliates received disaggregated results of survey conducted by Ms. Budd in November 2003).)

Plaintiffs also cite evidence of employees at the three Trinity affiliates initiating direct contacts with their counterparts at other Detroit-area hospitals to obtain wage- related information, although some of these contacts predate the June 2003 commencement of the class period applicable to Trinity. As to Trinity-Livonia, for example, Plaintiffs point to the testimony of Judy Seybert, an employee in the hospital's human resources department until February of 2003, who stated that she would request wage information from other Detroit-area hospitals when instructed by her supervisor to do so. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. VV, Seybert Dep. at 82-83; see also Ex. 139 (December 2001 request for wage information from Oakwood); Ex. 140 (September 2002 request for wage information from a number of hospitals, with response from Oakwood).) Similarly, Christine Barcome, a compensation analyst at Trinity-Oakland, testified that prior to the arrival of a new supervisor, Martha Murphy, in 2002 or 2003, she would contact competitor hospitals at management's [58] request to obtain market data for RN compensation. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. D, Barcome Dep. at 15, 97-98, 108-09; see also Ex. 135 (September 2001 request to Oakwood); Ex. 136 (January 2003 request to Oakwood).) [26]

Next, Plaintiffs have produced evidence that Trinity-Macomb employees also made direct contacts with their counterparts at other Detroit-area hospitals to obtain compensation-related information. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 131 (May 2004 request for information with response from St. John); see also Ex. 130 (April 2005 e-mail from Trinity-Macomb's then-vice president of human resources stating that he "may possibly be able to validate/nullify . . . through some additional sources" the information obtained by his staff regarding cath-lab on-call rates paid at other hospitals).) The hospital's administrative director of human resources, Lynn Urban, has testified that she considered it part of her duties to obtain wage range information from hospitals outside of the Trinity network. [59] (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. AAA, Urban Dep. at 38-39.) Ms. Urban further testified that she occasionally used the RN wage range information she received through these direct contacts in analyzing whether Trinity-Macomb's RN wages should be increased and the level to which they should be increased. (See id. at 38.) Finally, beyond the contacts she initiated, Ms. Urban responded to direct contacts from other hospitals seeking nurse wage information, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 133 (February 2002 e-mail reflecting that Ms. Urban provided information effective January 2002 to a counterpart at St. John)), and employees at the other two Trinity hospitals did likewise, (see Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 137 (Ms. [*623] Barcome of Trinity-Oakland providing copy of documents from the hospital's policy and procedure manual); Ex. 14 (Ms. Barcome responding to Beaumont October 2003 survey with current information and indication of planned merit increase in November); Ex. 102 (Ms. Barcome responding to September 2004 Beaumont survey); Ex. 141 (Ms. Seybert of Trinity-Livonia responding to August 2002 Beaumont survey)).

III. ANALYSIS

A. The Standards Governing Defendants' Motions

Through the two motions [60] addressed in the present opinion, each of the five remaining Defendants — Detroit Medical Center, Henry Ford Health System, Mount Clemens General Hospital, William Beaumont Hospital, and Trinity Health Corp. [27] — seeks summary judgment in its favor on each of Plaintiffs' two claims brought under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Under the pertinent Federal Rule, HN1[] summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). [28] As the Supreme Court has explained, "the plain language of Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2552, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986).

HN2[] In deciding a motion brought under Rule 56, the Court must view the evidence "in a light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, giving that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences." Smith Wholesale Co. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 477 F.3d 854, 861 (6th Cir. 2007). Yet, the nonmoving party "may not rely merely on

[26] Shortly after Ms. Murphy became her supervisor, however, Ms. Barcome was directed not to contact other hospitals to obtain compensation-related information. (See Barcome Dep. at 97-98.)

[27] As noted earlier, two of these Defendants, Mount Clemens General Hospital and William Beaumont Hospital, recently reached tentative settlement agreements [61] with Plaintiffs, but these settlements have not yet been finalized.

[28] Rule 56 has recently been revised in various respects, but the language quoted here (and immediately below) reflects the Rule as it read when Defendants filed their motions. Under the current Rule, the bulk of the quoted language from subsection (c) has been moved to subsection (a), but the recent amendments do not appear to have altered the overarching standards for resolving a summary judgment motion.

allegations or denials in its own pleading," but "must — by affidavits or as otherwise provided in [Rule 56] — set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2). Moreover, any supporting or opposing affidavits "must be made on personal knowledge, set out facts that would be admissible in evidence, and show that the affiant is competent to testify on the matters [62] stated." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(1). Finally, "[a] mere scintilla of evidence is insufficient" to withstand a summary judgment motion; rather, "there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the non-moving party." Smith Wholesale, 477 F.3d at 861 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

As Plaintiffs point out, the Sixth Circuit recently observed that HN3[] "[i]n this circuit, motions for summary judgment are disfavored in antitrust litigation." Smith Wholesale, 477 F.3d at 862. Yet, the court then emphasized:

> This general rule . . . does not preclude the use of summary judgment in an [*624] antitrust case in which there clearly are no genuine issues of fact to try —indeed, the very purpose of a motion for summary judgment, to eliminate a trial where it would be unnecessary and merely result in delay and expense, warrants summary disposition of such cases when appropriate. Accordingly, the absence of any relevant probative evidence in support of a litigant's antitrust claims will expose such claims to summary judgment disposition.

477 F.3d at 862 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Moreover, Defendants correctly note the willingness of both the Supreme Court [63] and the Sixth Circuit to award or affirm summary judgment in antitrust cases, so long as "there is no genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Smith Wholesale, 477 F.3d at 880-81; Wallace v. Bank of Bartlett, 55 F.3d 1166, 1170 (6th Cir. 1995); Nurse Midwifery Associates v. Hibbett, 918 F.2d 605, 617 (6th Cir. 1990). With these principles in mind, then, the Court turns to the challenges advanced in Defendants' motions.

B. Plaintiffs' Per Se Claim of a Conspiracy to Depress RN Compensation

1. The Law Governing Per Se Claims Under § 1 of the Sherman Act

HN4[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Sixth Circuit has stated:

> [T]o establish a claim under section 1, the plaintiff must establish that the defendants contracted, combined or conspired among each other, that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets, that the [64] objects of and conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal and that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

Expert Masonry, Inc. v. Boone County, Ky., 440 F.3d 336, 342 (6th Cir. 2006) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Yet, HN5[] if the challenged anticompetitive practice is deemed illegal per se, "further examination of the practice's impact on the market or the procompetitive justifications for the practice is unnecessary for finding a violation of antitrust law." Expert Masonry, 440 F.3d at 342 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Rather, in the case of practices that are "proscribed per se, the plaintiff need only prove that (1) two or more entities engaged in a conspiracy, combination, or contract, (2) to effect a restraint or combination prohibited per se (wherein the anticompetitive effects within a relevant geographic and product market are implied), (3) that was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's antitrust injury." 440 F.3d at 342 (citations omitted).

In Count I of their complaint, Plaintiffs allege that the Defendant hospitals "and their co-conspirators have engaged in a continuing conspiracy in restraint [65] of trade to depress the compensation of RNs employed at hospitals in the Detroit [metropolitan area]." (Third Corrected Class Action Complaint at ¶ 51.) The parties agree that such HN6[] a conspiracy among competing hospitals to fix wages, like an analogous horizontal price-fixing conspiracy, would be subject to per se treatment. See Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 198 (2d Cir. 2001); Fleischman v.

Albany Medical Center, 728 F. Supp.2d 130, 157 (N.D.N.Y. 2010); see also DOJ/FTC Guidelines, Statement 6(B) at 64 ("If an exchange [*625] among competing providers of . . . cost information results in an agreement among competitors as to . . . the wages to be paid to health care employees, that agreement will be considered unlawful per se."). Absent direct evidence of an explicit agreement among the Defendant hospitals to fix RN wages — which Plaintiffs acknowledge they have not produced — the requisite conspiracy may be established through circumstantial evidence of "business behavior which evidences a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement." Wallace, 55 F.3d at 1168 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

The Supreme Court [66] has adopted what this Court previously characterized as a "fairly stringent" standard for assessing circumstantial evidence of an alleged conspiracy in violation of § 1. In re Northwest Airlines Corp., 208 F.R.D. 174, 195 (E.D. Mich. 2002). In particular, the Supreme Court has emphasized:

> HN7[] [A]ntitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case. Thus, in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S.Ct. 1464, 79 L.Ed.2d 775 (1984), we held that conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Id., at 764, 104 S.Ct., at 1470. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. 465 U.S., at 764, 104 S.Ct., at 1471. [The plaintiffs] in this case, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed [the plaintiffs].

Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588, 106 S. Ct. at 1356-57 [67] (citations omitted). The Court further cautioned that "mistaken inferences" in assessing the evidence of a claimed antitrust conspiracy "are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594, 106 S. Ct. at 1360.

In the wake of this Supreme Court precedent, HN8[] the Sixth Circuit has adopted a "two-part inquiry for evaluating the propriety of summary judgment in an antitrust conspiracy case." Riverview Investments, Inc. v. Ottawa Community Improvement Corp., 899 F.2d 474, 483 (6th Cir. 1990) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also In re Northwest Airlines, 208 F.R.D. at 195. First, the Court must determine whether Plaintiffs' evidence of conspiracy is ambiguous — that is, whether it is "as consistent with the defendants' permissible independent interests as with an illegal conspiracy." Riverview Investments, 899 F.2d at 483 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). If so, the Court must inquire whether Plaintiffs have produced "evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were pursuing these independent interests." 899 F.2d at 483 (internal quotation marks and citation [68] omitted). "A plaintiff thus fails to demonstrate a conspiracy if, using ambiguous evidence, the inference of a conspiracy is less than or equal to an inference of independent action." 899 F.2d at 483; see also In re Northwest Airlines, 208 F.R.D. at 195-96.

2. There Is No Inflexible Requirement that Plaintiffs Must Produce Evidence of Parallel Conduct in Order to Establish a Conspiracy Through Circumstantial Evidence.

As a threshold matter — and, indeed, as the principal argument Defendants [*626] have advanced against Plaintiffs' per se claim in the brief in support of their combined summary judgment motion — Defendants contend that Plaintiffs "cannot even get to first base" on their claim of a per se violation of § 1 without proof that the Defendant hospitals engaged in parallel conduct in their setting of RN wages. (Defendants' Motion, Br. in Support at 22.) In Defendants' view, the law is clear that "[w]here antitrust plaintiffs rely on circumstantial evidence to prove a Section 1 conspiracy claim, they must first demonstrate that the defendants' actions were parallel." (Id. at 21 (quoting In re Beef Industry Antitrust Litigation, 907 F.2d 510, 514 (5th Cir. 1990)).) Defendants suggest [69] that Plaintiffs cannot make this threshold showing, citing a report and accompanying graph reflecting the opinion of their economic expert, Dr. Daniel Rubinfeld, that the RN wages paid by the Defendant hospitals "were not similar and did not change in a parallel way." (Defendants' Motion, Br. in Support at 22-23.) As discussed below, however, while parallel conduct can serve as one form of circumstantial evidence of a § 1 conspiracy to fix prices or wages — and while the absence of parallel conduct might serve to undercut an inference of conspiracy that might otherwise arise from the evidentiary record — the Court does not read the pertinent case law as mandating this particular form of proof in order to sustain a § 1 conspiracy claim.

There is no question that many (perhaps most) § 1 price-fixing claims rest in part upon allegations of parallel conduct. See, e.g., Wallace, 55 F.3d at 1168 (plaintiffs attempted to establish § 1 claim by contending that the defendant banks "all charge essentially the same fee for NSF checks"); In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litigation, 385 F.3d 350, 354-55 (3d Cir. 2004) (plaintiffs alleged that "[s]everal times during the class period, [the defendant] flat [70] glass producers raised their 'list prices' for flat glass by the same amount and within very close time frames"); In re Baby Food Antitrust Litigation, 166 F.3d 112, 122 (3d Cir. 1999) ("In an effort to reinforce their claim of collusive pricing, plaintiffs presented the testimony of an expert for the purpose of showing a pattern of parallel price increases in each of the five baby food product categories throughout the certified time period."); In re Beef Industry, 907 F.2d at 512 (plaintiff cattlemen alleged that the defendant meat packers "violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by using an information exchange . . . and consciously parallel pricing to depress live cattle prices"). This stands to reason because, in the absence of direct evidence of an agreement to fix prices, the most likely way that such an arrangement would manifest itself to outsiders — and potential plaintiffs — would be through parallel action that gives rise to a suspicion of unlawful coordination in restraint of trade. See In re Travel Agent Commission Antitrust Litigation, 583 F.3d 896, 903 (6th Cir. 2009) (observing that "[a]llegations of concerted action by competitors are frequently based on a pattern of uniform [71] business conduct").

Nonetheless, this Court is aware of no case law — nor have Defendants identified any — that mandates that a plaintiff's portfolio of circumstantial evidence in a § 1 case must include proof of parallel conduct. To the contrary, in Re/Max International, Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d 995, 1009 (6th Cir. 1999), the Sixth Circuit cited HN9[] the defendants' "uniform[ity] in their actions" as merely one of several "[i]mportant factors" a court should evaluate in determining whether a plaintiff's circumstantial evidence of antitrust conspiracy is sufficient to withstand summary judgment. Similarly, Plaintiffs point to the decision in InterVest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 163-65 (3d Cir. 2003), in which [*627] the court first addressed the plaintiff's attempt to establish a conspiracy "on the [b]asis of [c]ircumstantial [e]vidence," and then, upon finding that this effort failed to produce evidence that would support a "reasonable inference[] of concerted action," proceeded to ask as a separate matter whether the plaintiff had shown that the defendants "engaged in activity that approximates conscious parallelism." [29]

Indeed, in another RN wage-fixing case presently pending in the Northern [73] District of New York, the court expressly rejected the very same argument advanced by Defendants here, holding that the HN10[] plaintiffs in that case "need not prove parallel pricing in order to prevail on [a] per-se claim based on circumstantial evidence." Fleischman v. Albany Medical Center, 728 F. Supp.2d 130, 158 (N.D.N.Y. 2010). As succinctly stated by the court in that case, "[p]arallel pricing is merely one such form of circumstantial evidence" upon which a plaintiff may permissibly rely to establish concerted action in violation of § 1. Fleischman, 728 F. Supp.2d at 158 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

[29] Defendants' effort to explain away the InterVest [72] decision is unpersuasive. In Defendants' view, while the court in that case used separate headings in its opinion entitled "Conspiracy on the Basis of Circumstantial Evidence" and "Conspiracy on the Basis of Consciously Parallel Behavior," InterVest, 340 F.3d at 163, 165, this does not necessarily mean that the court viewed these as "distinct ways" of proving a § 1 agreement. (Defendants' Reply Br. at 20.) Yet, at the very beginning of the second of these two sections of its opinion, the court expressly stated that "[w]ithout any evidence of communication between the [defendants] or other reasonable inferences of concerted action," the plaintiff was obligated to proceed through a showing of conscious parallelism. InterVest, 340 F.3d at 165. The import of this language seems fairly clear — namely, that a showing of conscious parallelism is only one of the available avenues of proving a § 1 conspiracy by circumstantial means. Here, of course, there is substantial evidence of communications among the Defendant hospitals, which InterVest identifies as an alternative method for raising an inference of concerted action.

The cases cited by Defendants are not to the contrary. In the decision upon which they principally rely for their posited rigid requirement of parallel conduct, In re Beef Industry, Defendants quote only the language that aids their cause — i.e., that a plaintiff in a § 1 conspiracy case "must first demonstrate that the defendants' actions were parallel" — while notably omitting the language that immediately precedes it — namely, that this standard applies to plaintiffs who "rel[y] on circumstantial evidence of conscious parallelism to prove a § 1 claim." In re Beef Industry, 907 F.2d at 514 [74] (emphasis added). As Plaintiffs aptly note, this "unsurprising statement" by the court is "frankly little more than a tautology — if your theory of the case is based upon parallel conduct then you must show parallel conduct!" (Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 92.) Likewise, Defendants' selective quotation from the decision in City of Moundridge v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 429 F. Supp.2d 117, 132 (D.D.C. 2006), notably truncates the court's complete statement that a showing of parallel conduct is "the first element necessary in showing a conspiracy with conscious parallelism." (Emphasis added.)

In short, HN11[] while evidence of parallel conduct provides one means by which a plaintiff in a § 1 case may make a circumstantial showing of concerted activity, the case law establishes no hierarchy of the sorts of circumstantial evidence a plaintiff must produce to withstand summary judgment. Rather, circumstantial evidence of any sort will do, provided that it demonstrates "business behavior which evidences a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, [*628] or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement." Wallace, 55 F.3d at 1168 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Accordingly, the [75] Court rejects Defendants' contention that Plaintiffs' per se claim fails for lack of evidence of parallel conduct. [30]

3. Plaintiffs' Evidence in Support of Their Per Se Claim Fails to Give Rise to an Inference of Conspiracy Stronger Than the Inference of Independent Action.

Having disposed of Defendants' threshold challenge based on the absence of evidence of parallel conduct, the Court now returns to the more general evidentiary standards by which Plaintiffs' per se claim of conspiracy must be judged. As noted earlier, HN12[] the analysis of this claim is governed by the overarching requirement that Plaintiffs' evidence must "reasonably tend[] to prove that [Defendants] had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective," and must further "tend[] to exclude the possibility that [Defendants] were acting independently." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471.

As discussed at length below, the Court believes that the record evidence and the inferences that may fairly be drawn from this record give rise to a [76] very close question on Plaintiffs' per se claim, and that fair-minded jurists could reasonably disagree as to the resolution of this question. Certainly, Plaintiffs have produced a great deal of evidence which, if fully credited and granted generous inferences, could circumstantially support a finding of concerted, albeit sophisticated, interactions among the Defendant hospitals for the purpose of suppressing RN wages, at least over time. However, after thorough review and careful consideration of this substantial body of evidence — and given the fairly stringent and somewhat elevated standard Plaintiffs must meet to establish their per se claim of conspiracy to fix wages — the Court finds that the inference of independent action arising from the record is at least as strong as the inference of a conspiracy to depress RN wages. It follows that an award of summary judgment to Defendants is warranted on Plaintiffs' per se § 1 claim.

At the outset of this inquiry, the Court acknowledges Plaintiffs' well-taken point that HN13[] they need not produce evidence of a formal agreement among the Defendant hospitals in order to prove that these health care institutions engaged in a conspiracy in violation [77] of § 1. See United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 142-43, 86 S. Ct. 1321, 1329, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1966). As one appellate court has observed, the courts are not "so naive as to believe that a formal signed-and-sealed contract or written resolution would conceivably be adopted at a meeting of price-fixing conspirators in this day and age;" to the contrary, "the typical price-fixing agreement is usually accomplished" in a manner that "can ordinarily only be proved by inferences drawn from relevant and competent circumstantial evidence, including the conduct of the defendants charged." Esco Corp. v. United States,

[30] In light of this conclusion, the Court need not address Plaintiffs' contention that they have, in fact, presented evidence of parallel conduct.

340 F.2d 1000, 1006-07 (9th Cir. 1965). Moreover, this antitrust suit, in its present summary judgment posture, is subject to the usual rule that Plaintiffs, as the non-moving parties, must be given "the benefit of all reasonable inferences" that may be drawn from the evidence, Smith Wholesale, 477 F.3d at 861, and "the question of what weight should be assigned to competing permissible inferences remains within [*629] the province of the fact-finder at trial," Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 253 (2d Cir. 1987).

HN14[] The Sixth Circuit has identified four factors that a court should consider [78] in evaluating the circumstantial evidence offered in support of a § 1 conspiracy claim:

> (1) whether the defendants' actions, if taken independently, would be contrary to their economic self-interest; (2) whether the defendants have been uniform in their actions; (3) whether the defendants have exchanged or have had the opportunity to exchange information relative to the alleged conspiracy; and (4) whether the defendants have a common motive to conspire.

Re/Max International, 173 F.3d at 1009. Accordingly, the Court addresses each of these factors in turn, as well as other considerations identified by the parties, and then returns to the overarching inquiry whether the entire body of circumstantial evidence produced by Plaintiffs, considered as a whole, "tend[s] to exclude the possibility of independent conduct." Re/Max International, 173 F.3d at 1009.

T(a) Evidence of Actions Taken by the Defendant Hospitals That Are Inconsistent with Their Independent Interests

As the first category of circumstantial evidence offered in support of their per se § 1 claim, Plaintiffs contend that they have identified myriad instances and ways in which the Defendant hospitals have acted inconsistently with [79] their independent pursuit of their respective self-interests. Upon reviewing the evidence offered by Plaintiffs in support of this proposition, the Court agrees that most (but not all) of it tends to give rise to an inference of conspiracy that has greater force than the opposing inference of independent action.

First and foremost, Plaintiffs naturally point to the substantial body of evidence revealing the Defendant hospitals' regular requests for and exchange of competitively sensitive information regarding the wages paid to their RN workforces, projected wage increases, and the pay philosophies underlying their RN wage determinations. As set forth above in the Court's recitation of the voluminous record, Plaintiffs have produced evidence of Defendants' repeated exchanges — through both direct contacts and third-party surveys — of (i) detailed, current information as to the wages paid to their RN workforces, (see, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 46E, 46G, 157) ; (ii) their planned future pay increases, (see, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 71, 120, 121), and (iii) their overall philosophies and targets in setting RN wages, (see, e.g., Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 74). A fair number [80] of these exchanges violated one or more of the criteria set forth in the DOJ/FTC Guidelines, including the recommendations (i) that wage surveys should be managed by a third party, (ii) that survey participants provide information that is more than three months old, and (iii) that the survey data be reported in a "sufficiently aggregated" form "such that it would not allow recipients to identify the . . . compensation paid by any particular provider." DOJ/FTC Guidelines, Statement 6(A) at 63.

As Defendants correctly observe, HN15[] the "exchange of price data" — or, here, wage data — "among competitors does not invariably have anticompetitive effects," but may to the contrary "increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 441 n.16, 98 S. Ct. 2864, 2875 n.16, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854 (1978); see also Wallace, 55 F.3d at 1169; In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 126. In Wallace, 55 F.3d at 1169 & n.5, for example, the court recognized that the [*630] defendant banks "naturally are interested in surveying the market to determine what other banks are charging in order to make strategic competitive decisions," and that the banks' publication [81] of their fees also served "to advise customers of the charges they must pay." In addition, the DOJ/FTC Guidelines expressly emphasize that the "safety zones" described therein are not to be taken "as defining the limits of joint conduct that is permissible under the antitrust laws." DOJ/FTC Guidelines at 6.

Nonetheless, the brute fact remains that any pro-competitive objectives identified by the Defendant hospitals — and, as Plaintiffs observe, Defendants are long on generalities but short on specifics in this regard — could just as well have been achieved through exchanges that fell comfortably within the "safety zone" identified in the DOJ/FTC Guidelines. Plaintiffs state without contradiction that they do not seek to condemn the use of surveys in general, and they point to reputable, nationally recognized firms that "report the results of properly aged and highly aggregated data gathered from enormous numbers of participants." (Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 28 & n.28 (citing an example of a Watson Wyatt survey that "had hundreds of participants").) Yet, rather than relying on such third-party surveys that fully comported with the DOJ/FTC Guidelines, the Defendant hospitals time and [82] again sought and obtained RN wage-related information through direct contacts and surveys that fell short of the DOJ/FTC "safety zone" criteria. Defendants are notably silent as to how it was necessary to their independent competitive interests to proceed in this fashion, rather than confining their exchanges to the "safety zone."

To the contrary, the manner in which the Defendant hospitals actually exchanged wage information, at least on many occasions, certainly appears to have been inconsistent with not only the DOJ/FTC Guidelines, but also each participating hospital's independent self-interest. There is no dispute that these hospitals compete with each other in the market for RNs. (See Defendants' Motion, Br. in Support at 12 (acknowledging that "Defendants compete for nurses with each other . . . .").) [31] Against this backdrop, while it is understandable that each Defendant hospital would like to know what its competitors are paying their RNs, it is far less clear why a hospital would respond to a competitor's request for this information regarding its own RN wages and pay practices. As the Supreme Court observed in the analogous context of information-sharing among sellers, HN16[] "if [83] one seller offers a price concession for the purpose of winning over one of his competitor's customers, it is unlikely that the same seller will freely inform its competitor of the details of the concession so that it can be promptly matched and diffused." United States Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 456, 98 S. Ct. at 2883; see also In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906 F.2d 432, 450 (9th Cir. 1990) (noting that the disclosure of "sensitive price information might be considered contrary to a firm's self-interest," and thus could support a jury's finding of a "common understanding" among the companies sharing this information). Likewise, in [*631] this case, if one of the Defendant hospitals sought to recruit a competitor's RNs by raising its own wages, [32] it would surely run counter to this purpose to notify the competitor about the increased wage rate. Yet, there is nary an example in the record of a Defendant hospital refusing a request for wage-related information on the ground that it was unwilling to disclose this competitively sensitive data.

Still less clear is what pro-competitive [85] justification exists for exchanging information regarding projected future wage increases, as the Defendant hospitals occasionally did in this case. The court in In re Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 369, viewed an analogous disclosure of a planned future price increase as "qualitatively different" from the type of information exchange it had deemed insufficient to establish a conspiracy in an earlier case, In re Baby Food. Similarly, the Second Circuit opined in Todd, 275 F.3d at 211, that "exchanges of future price information are considered especially anticompetitive." See also DOJ/FTC Guidelines, Statement 6(B) at 64 ("Exchanges of . . . future compensation of employees are very likely to be considered anticompetitive."). Along the same lines, the Court is at a loss to identify — and Defendants do not suggest — a pro-competitive justification for the Defendant hospitals' willingness to disclose to each other information regarding their overarching pay philosophies and target

[31] The parties do dispute, however, whether there is a shortage of hospital nurses in the Detroit area. (Compare [84] Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 63-65 (citing evidence in support of the proposition that "during the class period, there was a shortage of bedside nurses in Detroit") with Defendants' Reply Br. at 25 (asserting that Plaintiffs' claim of a nurse shortage rests solely upon the "discredited utilization analysis" of its expert).) The Court finds it unnecessary to weigh in on this subject, in light of its disposition of Plaintiffs' per se § 1 claim on grounds independent from this question.

[32] As Plaintiffs observe, this scenario appears to be more hypothetical than real. In particular, the record fails to disclose any instance in which a Defendant hospital used wage data gathered from its competitors as part of an explicit attempt to "outbid" other hospitals for RNs. Such conduct, of course, would lend considerable support to the claim that Defendants' information exchanges served a pro-competitive purpose. By the same token, the absence of such conduct tends to suggest that the Defendant hospitals were acting inconsistently with their own interests by failing to exploit an advantage provided through their knowledge of their competitors' rates of RN compensation.

rates of RN pay within the local market, as occurred in at least one instance. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 74 (December 2004 nursing pay policy survey sponsored by Henry Ford and conducted by Linda Budd).) [33]

Certainly, it is telling that when Plaintiffs and their counsel invited various employees of the Defendant hospitals to suggest a pro-competitive justification for their exchange of information with their counterparts at other Detroit-area hospitals, none was able to do so. For example, Defendant Beaumont's director of compensation, David Misner, testified that he had "no idea why we would want to share" RN wage-related information with other hospitals. (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. LL, Misner Dep. at 221.) Other employees testified that in their past experience working in other industries or parts of the country, they did not directly contact their competitors for wage information. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. DD, Kontos Dep. at 27-28 (stating that he did not contact competitors when employed in the automotive industry "[b]ecause of the antitrust laws"); Ex. QQ, Perez Dep. at 16-17).) Still another employee testified that her employer, Defendant Trinity, shared its wage data in third-party surveys "in [87] order to receive the results of the survey." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. D, Barcome Dep. at 81.) As Plaintiffs observe, this sort of quid pro quo understanding supports an inference of concerted action rather than independent conduct.

Moreover, even to the extent that the Defendant hospitals utilized third-party [*632] surveys rather than direct contacts to obtain market wage data — thereby employing a practice that was at least potentially more compliant with the DOJ/FTC Guidelines and less suggestive of collusive action — Plaintiffs properly point to the "pretextual" nature of at least some of these surveys. In particular, several such surveys were conducted by Linda Budd, a former human resources employee at Henry Ford, who carried out the surveys and reported the results in a manner that Defendants could not have believed consistent with the truly independent third-party surveys contemplated by the Guidelines. As noted earlier, Ms. Budd occasionally permitted sponsoring hospitals to design their own surveys, decide which institutions to survey, and determine how the results should be presented. In addition, she initially reported her survey results with the participating hospitals identified [88] by name, and even when she switched to letter codes, she continued to provide disaggregated results to the sponsoring institution (and sometimes to participating hospitals as well), and her letter codes occasionally were easily deciphered (or she herself disclosed the key). Under this record, just as there seemingly was no pro-competitive justification for the Defendant hospitals to disclose their wage data directly to their competitors, it is difficult to see why these hospitals thought it was in their independent self-interest to disclose this data to Ms. Budd, where competitors could so readily determine its source.

Defendants' various efforts to downplay the significance of this substantial body of evidence of competitively suspect information exchanges are unavailing. First, although Defendants note that most of the direct hospital-to-hospital contacts involved lower-level employees, they do not seriously contend that these employees were acting on their own or against the wishes of their superiors. [34] To the contrary, the higher-level decisionmakers at each of the Defendant hospitals have acknowledged that they considered market wage data in making RN wage determinations, and [89] the record shows that at least some of this data was acquired through direct contacts, particularly in the early portion of the class period. Similarly, to the extent Defendants contend that such contacts were only "sporadic," Plaintiffs have managed to compile quite a record of these "sporadic" contacts. In any event, many of these contacts merely filled the gaps between "numerous third party surveys," which occurred so frequently that they "in effect, constantly provided [the Defendant hospitals] with current information concerning each others['] pay rates." (Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 34-35 (recounting the number and frequency of surveys undertaken during the class period).)

[33] Plaintiffs [86] observe that during the class period, none of the Defendant hospitals has deviated from the market percentile targets disclosed in this survey.

[34] As Plaintiffs observe, given the time and effort involved in responding to some of the more detailed surveys, (see Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 12-13 n.16 (citing evidence of the time spent by employees of the Defendant hospitals to complete surveys), it is highly doubtful that a lower-level employee would have undertaken this task unless directed to do so, and it is also doubtful that a hospital's senior management would look the other way or remain ignorant as its compensation staff engaged in this task.

Defendants' [90] remaining quibbles with Plaintiffs' characterization of their information exchanges warrant little discussion. While Defendants point to their occasional use of masked and/or aggregated survey results, there is ample evidence of survey results reported to the Defendant hospitals in unmasked and/or disaggregated form. Likewise, although one or more of the Defendant hospitals at times commissioned surveys conducted by truly independent third parties — e.g., Defendant Beaumont's use of Sullivan Cotter after October of [*633] 2003 — this does not require that the Court (or the trier of fact) disregard the significant evidence of direct contacts or the use of "third parties" in name only, such as Ms. Budd. Finally, while Defendants fault Plaintiffs for their occasional citation to information exchanges that occurred prior to the class period, Plaintiffs correctly observe that HN17[] these exchanges may form the basis for a recovery, so long as it can be shown that they affected wage determinations made during the class period. See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 806, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971). In any event, the record plainly is not confined to information exchanges that [91] occurred prior to the commencement of the class period in December of 2002.

In sum, the record of information sharing in this case provides considerable evidence of conduct by the Defendant hospitals that was inconsistent with the independent pursuit of their own interests. Both the nature and extent of these information exchanges and the manner in which they were undertaken serve to distinguish this case from the decisions cited by Defendants, in which the courts found that exchanges of information were at least as consistent with the defendants' individual interests as with a shared design or purpose. In Wallace, 55 F.3d at 1169, for example, the Sixth Circuit held that the defendant banks' publication of their NSF fees served "a legitimate interest in providing customers relevant information regarding the fees associated with their checking accounts," and nothing in that case suggests that the banks surveyed the fees charged by their competitors through methods that would have fallen outside the DOJ/FTC "safety zone" — or, for that matter, that they gathered anything beyond publicly available information.

The other case principally relied upon by Defendants, In re Baby Food, is also [92] distinguishable. The court in that case found that much of the information sharing evidence produced by the plaintiffs amounted to nothing more than "sporadic exchanges of shop talk among field sales representatives who lack pricing authority." In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 125. Although Defendants here make a similar effort to downplay purportedly "sporadic" exchanges of wage-related information among "low-level" employees, the Court already has explained that the record of Defendants' sharing of this information was hardly "sporadic," but instead consisted of fairly regular surveys augmented by direct contacts. In addition, it is important to note that the "low-level" employees here generally worked in the Defendant hospitals' compensation departments, and were expressly charged with the tasks of gathering competitive compensation information and recommending wage increases. While these employees may have lacked ultimate wage-setting authority, the evidence shows that they were participants in the process leading up to the decisions made by those who possessed this authority, and that at least some of the data they gathered played a role in this process. Thus, it cannot be so readily [93] said here, as in In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 125, that there is no "evidence that the exchange of information had an impact on pricing decisions." [35]

Next, while Plaintiffs' claims of conduct inconsistent with the Defendant hospitals' independent interests rest principally upon Defendants' willingness to share wage-related [*634] information, Plaintiffs further contend that Defendants acted contrary to their self-interests by purportedly agreeing to refrain from "active recruitment [of RNs] from other defendant hospitals, even when it [wa]s known that certain hospitals [we]re paying their nurses low wages." (Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 80.) Yet, the one isolated example of this conduct cited by Plaintiffs does not support an inference of conspiracy rather than independent conduct. Specifically, Plaintiffs point to an occasion in 2003 when Oakwood and St. John agreed, following complaints from DMC, to abandon recruitment efforts directly targeted at DMC nurses. At the time, DMC [94] was experiencing a severe financial crisis, and it contemplated closing two of its facilities, Detroit Receiving Hospital and Hutzel Women's Hospital, which resulted in "a number of nurses leaving or considering leaving" DMC's employ. (DMC's Motion, Ex. 2, Natale Decl. at ¶ ¶16, 18.) The evidence produced by Plaintiffs indicates that St. John and Oakwood initially viewed these developments as an opportunity to recruit DMC nurses, but that they backed off these efforts following complaints from DMC officials. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 34.)

[35] The Court returns below to a more detailed assessment of the evidence produced by Plaintiffs that purports to establish the impact of the Defendant hospitals' information exchanges on their wage-setting decisions.

The Court does not view this isolated incident as evidencing any sort of broader agreement among the Defendant hospitals not to recruit each others' RNs. As revealed in one of the documents produced by Plaintiffs regarding this episode, two high-level St. John officials — the hospital's corporate director of workforce planning, Jim Flanegin, and its senior vice president of human resources, Dan Zuhlke — discussed DMC's complaints about St. John's recruiting effort and "came to the conclusion that at this time it is better for all of us in the long run that we support the DMC rather than attack them." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 34A.) The undisputed [95] record shows that DMC operates several "safety-net" hospitals in the City of Detroit, and that it provides "the majority of care to the indigent, uninsured, and underinsured citizens of Detroit," totaling "approximately $250 million of uncompensated care annually." (Defendants' Motion, Ex. K.1, Duggan Decl. at ¶¶ 5, 8.)

Under these circumstances, Plaintiffs' claim of conduct against a hospital's self-interest cannot be evaluated solely by reference to the willingness of a competitor to "raid" DMC's RN workforce. Rather, the record indicates that other factors played a role in Oakwood's and St. John's decisions to "stand down" from recruiting DMC nurses. The evidence suggests, in particular, that it would be consistent with the other Defendant hospitals' self-interests to ensure that DMC's safety-net facilities remained available to serve indigent and uninsured patients who would otherwise seek uncompensated care at their facilities. Indeed, it is clear from the evidence produced by Plaintiffs that the other Defendant hospitals did not altogether abandon their efforts to recruit DMC nurses, but instead continued to employ "other [recruitment] resources" in lieu of direct, targeted appeals [96] to DMC's RN workforce. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 34B, 34D.) This incident, then, does not serve as an additional example of the Defendant hospitals acting contrary to their own self-interests.

(b) Evidence of Uniformity in Defendants' Actions

The next factor to consider in the Court's evaluation of Plaintiffs' circumstantial evidence of conspiracy is "whether the defendants have been uniform in their actions." Re/Max International, 173 F.3d at 1009. In one respect, it can readily be said that the Defendant hospitals were uniform in their actions — namely, in their willingness to provide competitively sensitive [*635] compensation-related information to other Detroit-area hospitals, whether through direct contacts or third-party surveys.

Yet, beyond this broad level of generality, the evidence of uniform conduct is far more mixed. As observed by Defendants — and as noted in the report of their expert, Daniel Rubinfeld — there was not "uniform circulation, participation in, or receipt of surveys" by the Defendant hospitals, and Defendants "used surveys in different ways and to different degrees in their compensation setting." (Defendants' Motion, Ex. G, Rubinfeld Report at ¶ 16.) As examples [97] of these disparate practices, Defendants point out that Trinity did not commission any surveys during the class period, and that DMC commissioned only one during this time frame, while St. John asked Linda Budd to conduct annual surveys and Beaumont used semi-annual surveys conducted by Sullivan Cotter. [36] Given the expense of these surveys, (see Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 12 n.15 (citing evidence that the surveys cost "anywhere from a few hundred dollars to well over $1000 per survey")), it surely would have behooved Defendants to pool their resources in furtherance of any purported scheme to depress RN wages, yet they did not do so. In addition, Defendants differed in their use of direct contacts to obtain wage-related information from other Detroit-area hospitals — as observed earlier, Henry Ford largely ceased this practice in 2003, while Beaumont continued to permit such direct contacts as warranted by the particular circumstances (e.g., when seeking information for only a single job).

Next, Defendants point out that [98] Plaintiffs have not shown "that any two hospitals utilized the same set of surveys and information about the market to set their RN compensation." (Defendants' Motion, Br. in Support at 15.)

[36] In addition, Mount Clemens operated on an altogether different schedule, seeking survey data in advance of its union negotiations approximately every three years.

For example, in the instances noted by Plaintiffs where Beaumont cited market data to reduce the magnitude of wage increases — or, on one occasion, to determine that a previously anticipated pay increase would not be given — the record indicates that Beaumont relied exclusively on the surveys it had sponsored or conducted. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Exs. 99, 104.) More generally, the record is bereft of evidence of any common pool of market data being used by two or more Defendant hospitals in making their RN compensation decisions. To be sure, and as this Court has previously recognized, "minor variances in the particular means . . . chosen" by each Defendant hospital to set its RN wages do not defeat an inference of conspiracy, because HN18[] "an agreement need not dictate every conceivable aspect of each conspirator's behavior in order to violate § 1." In re Northwest Airlines, 208 F.R.D at 199. Yet, the inference of conspiracy Plaintiffs seek to draw here is certainly weakened by the evidence that [99] each Defendant hospital gathered and used its own unique set of market information as it carried out its separate wage analysis and determined its own rates of RN compensation.

Finally, and most significantly, the record reflects a decided lack of uniformity in the end results of each Defendant hospital's wage-setting process. Defendants' expert, Dr. Rubinfeld, has concluded upon his analysis of the underlying wage data that "there are substantial differences in the rate of change, levels, and forms of compensation among the Defendant hospitals." (Defendants' Motion, Ex. G, Rubinfeld Report at ¶ 17.) To emphasize this point, Defendants cite two graphs prepared [*636] by Dr. Rubinfeld illustrating the different annual rates of change in the wages paid by the Defendant hospitals to their RN workforces. (See Defendants' Motion, Br. in Support at 23, 24.) The first of these graphs shows that in 2005-06, for example, the annual change in mean total hourly RN wages ranged from 1.2 percent (for Mount Clemens) to 10.0 percent (for Trinity's St. Joseph-Macomb Hospital). (See Rubinfeld Report, App. G at 5.) [37] The second graph, which maps the annual change in mean base wages for RNs, shows that in 2005-06, [100] for example, the annual increases ranged from 2.05 percent (for Mount Clemens) to 10.23 percent (for Trinity's St. Mary-Livonia Hospital). (See id., App. G at 39.) [38] In general, it is difficult to look at these graphs (or the underlying data from which they are derived) and discern a strong pattern or clear-cut uniformity in the wage-setting decisions made by the Defendant hospitals during the class period.

To be sure, Plaintiffs seek to refute this apparent evidence of disparate wage-setting decisions by pointing to a graph prepared by their expert, Orley Ashenfelter, that Plaintiffs view as "demonstrat[ing] parallel compensation behavior among the Defendants." (Plaintiffs' Response [101] Br. at 93 (citing Defendants' Motion, Ex. C, Ashenfelter Report, Fig. 1).) In particular, this graph purports to show that the mean wage rates paid by the Defendant hospitals during the class period followed roughly similar trajectories. Yet, the underlying data reflected in this graph is the very same data relied upon by Defendants' expert, Dr. Rubinfeld, in the graphs reproduced in Defendants' brief. Dr. Rubinfeld's more specific year-by-year, hospital-by-hospital analysis of the underlying data reveals the key point obscured in Dr. Ashenfelter's much more general presentation of this data — namely, that while there might have been an overall, fairly modest upward trend in the wage rates paid by each of the Defendant hospitals during the class period, this overall trend was formed through individual, periodic wage determinations that varied significantly from one hospital to another (and from one year to the next within the same hospital system). Under analogous circumstances, the court in In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 129, discounted an expert's use of "trend lines" as "revealing nothing more than that the transaction prices tended to increase over time." Accordingly, the Court finds [102] that the evidence of the Defendant hospitals' uniformity of action — or lack thereof — tends to favor an inference of independent rather than coordinated conduct.

(c) Evidence of Defendants' Exchange of Information Relative to Their Alleged Conspiracy

[37] If one compares the underlying total hourly wage rates paid by the Defendant hospitals, rather than the annual rates of change, the rates for 2006 range from $30.64 (for one of the Henry Ford hospitals) to $38.66 (for one of the Oakwood facilities). (See id., App. G at 16.)

The next factor identified by the court in Re/Max International, 173 F.3d at 1009, as relevant to the evaluation of circumstantial evidence of a § 1 conspiracy is "whether the defendants have exchanged or have had the opportunity to exchange information relative to the alleged conspiracy." As already discussed, there is ample evidence in this case of the exchange of compensation-related information that would have enabled the Defendant hospitals to monitor each others' wage determinations [*637] and thereby sustain the wage-fixing conspiracy alleged by Plaintiffs.

To be sure, Defendants correctly observe that HN19[] "[t]he exchange of [wage] data and other information among competitors does not invariably have anticompetitive effects," but rather may "in certain circumstances increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive," United States Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 441 n.16, 98 S. Ct. at 2875 n.16; see also Continental Cablevision of Ohio, Inc. v. American Electric Power Co., 715 F.2d 1115, 1119 (6th Cir. 1983) [103] (HN20[] "[I]n the absence of a purpose or effect to restrain competition, or some other evidence of an actual agreement to restrain competition, we hold that the exchange of price data does not offend § 1 of the Sherman Act."). Yet, as previously noted, at least some of the information exchanges that occurred here trigger heightened concerns of anticompetitive impact. In particular, some of these exchanges involved disaggregated or unmasked (or both) competitor wage data, some occurred through direct contacts between competitors, and some involved current wage information or, in some cases, even future projected wage increases. Moreover, Defendants have failed to suggest why information exchanges that lacked these troublesome features, and that instead remained within the "safety zone" articulated in the DOJ/FTC Guidelines, would not have sufficed to achieve the business objectives they have identified as driving their compensation decisions. Under these circumstances, this factor tends to support the inference that the Defendant hospitals were engaged in an unlawful conspiracy, as opposed to pursuing their own independent interests.

(d) Evidence of Defendants' Common Motive to Conspire

The [104] fourth and final factor identified by the Sixth Circuit in Re/Max International, 173 F.3d at 1009, is "whether the defendants have a common motive to conspire." As a general matter, such a common motive is clear in this case, where Plaintiffs state without contradiction that RN wages are the largest single item in the Defendant hospitals' budgets. More generally, Defendants acknowledge that "[a]ll companies have an incentive to lower input prices." (Defendants' Reply Br. at 32.) Yet, as Defendants point out, the evidence of common motive here is not especially compelling, given that "[p]rofit is always a motivating factor in the conduct of a business." In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 134. Thus, while this factor perhaps tilts slightly in favor of Plaintiffs' claim of conspiracy, it cannot be said that it has a particularly strong "tend[ency] to exclude the possibility of independent conduct." Re/Max International, 173 F.3d at 1009.

(e) Other Forms of Circumstantial Evidence Identified by the Courts as Indicative of an Unlawful Conspiracy

Beyond the four factors cited in Re/Max International, Plaintiffs address a number of other factors that the courts have considered in analyzing circumstantial [105] evidence of a § 1 conspiracy. [39] First, Plaintiffs address the factor of plausibility, which can alter the evidentiary burden they must shoulder to give rise to a permissible inference of collusive action. As the Supreme Court has explained, HN21[] "if the factual context renders [the plaintiffs'] claim implausible — if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense — [the plaintiffs] must come forward with more [*638] persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587, 106 S. Ct. at 1356; see also In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litigation, 295 F.3d 651, 661 (7th Cir. 2002) ("More evidence is required the less plausible the charge of collusive conduct."). Here, however, where the motive to conspire is straightforward and fairly evident, and where Plaintiffs have alleged

[39] As noted by Plaintiffs, [106] the courts sometimes refer to these considerations as "plus factors" which, when considered along with evidence of parallel conduct, can give rise to an inference of conspiracy sufficient to withstand summary judgment. See, e.g., Wallace, 55 F.3d at 1168.

a "garden-variety [wage]-fixing conspiracy" among a number of competitors who stand on relatively equal footing, Plaintiffs' per se claim "involves no implausibility," In re High Fructose Corn Syrup, 295 F.3d at 661, and they need not make the "more persuasive" showing that Matsushita demands when a claim "simply makes no economic sense."

Next, Plaintiffs point to certain structural characteristics of the relevant market which, in their view, would make a wage-fixing conspiracy feasible, including the high "switching costs" associated with a nurse changing jobs, the low elasticity of the supply of RNs, and the frequent sharing of wage information that would enable a quick response to any "cheating" by a co-conspirator. Defendants, in contrast, question the factual basis for the claims of Plaintiffs and their experts concerning high switching costs and low elasticity of supply. More importantly, Defendants contend that the characteristics of the relevant market tend to undercut rather than support an inference of conspiracy, where this market is not highly concentrated, the RN workforce is heterogenous, and the Defendant hospitals likewise are heterogenous purchasers of nursing services, with each hospital having different needs for these services that varied over time. [107] Defendants further cite their different pay structures, their distinct timetables for wage decisions, and the disparate components of each Defendant hospital's RN compensation package as making it difficult to coordinate compensation decisions and depress the wages of RNs across-the-board, since information sharing and collusion as to one component of RN wages, such as the base wage rate, would not necessarily prevent effective competition as to other aspects of the overall nurse compensation package.

Plaintiffs next assert that the inference of conspiracy is strengthened by the evidence of opportunities to meet and collude, where the record discloses meetings attended by the chief executive officers of the four largest Defendant hospital systems —DMC, Henry Ford, St. John, and Oakwood ? and where other health care industry groups provided forums to meet and discuss compensation-related information and to identify contacts from whom to obtain this information. In response, however, Defendants note the absence of evidence that their chief executive officers actually discussed any issues concerning nurse pay at their face-to-face meetings — to the contrary, those who have testified have [108] denied that any such discussions occurred. Similarly, there is no evidence that the discussions among lower-level employees at other health care industry meetings had any impact on any Defendant's subsequent wage determinations.

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that further support for an inference of conspiracy can be found in Defendants' apparently knowing transgressions of the "safety zone" criteria set forth in the DOJ/FTC Guidelines. As recounted earlier, the record discloses that during the course of the class period, nearly every Defendant hospital became aware, if it was not previously aware, that direct contacts to obtain a competitor's wage data did not comport with the Guidelines, and that some of the third-party surveys in which they participated also failed to comply with one or more of the Guidelines' "safety zone" criteria. This [*639] awareness, however, did not lead to full compliance; instead, employees in Defendants' compensation departments continued to exchange wage information, albeit perhaps on a more sporadic and ad hoc basis. As Plaintiffs observe, such willful disregard for the DOJ/FTC Guidelines lends at least some support to the inference that Defendants were engaged in [109] a conspiracy to depress RN wages, since it evidences a willingness to engage in information-sharing activity that has been identified in the Guidelines as having potentially anticompetitive effects.

(f) Plaintiffs' Circumstantial Evidence Viewed in Its Totality

Having now addressed each of the several categories of circumstantial evidence offered by Plaintiffs in support of their per se § 1 claim, the Court now considers whether this body of evidence, viewed as a whole, meets the rather stringent standard governing § 1 claims. As noted, the Supreme Court has instructed that this evidence, viewed in a light most favorable to Plaintiffs, must "reasonably tend[] to prove that [Defendants] had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective," and must further "tend[] to exclude the possibility that [Defendants] were acting independently." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471. The record produced by Plaintiffs, in other words, must give rise to an inference of conspiracy that is stronger than the competing inference of independent action. Riverview Investments, 899 F.2d at 483.

As previously indicated, the record here makes this question indeed [110] a close one, but the Court ultimately concludes that Plaintiffs have not met this standard. Out of the four factors identified by the Sixth Circuit as especially pertinent to this inquiry, see Re/Max International, 173 F.3d at 1009, the one that most strongly supports an inference of conspiracy is the evidence of actions taken by the Defendant hospitals that seemingly ran counter to their independent interests — most notably, their willingness to regularly share competitively sensitive wage data. On the other hand, the factor that most significantly undercuts this inference is the evidence of the lack of uniformity in the Defendant hospitals' wage-setting decisions. These two factors, in the Court's view, are largely determinative of the question whether Plaintiffs' per se § 1 claim can withstand summary judgment.

Upon juxtaposing the evidence concerning these two most critical factors, the Court cannot say that the inference of conspiracy is stronger than the inference of independent action. The record leaves no room for doubt that each Defendant hospital was highly interested in learning about the wage rates and pay practices of other Detroit-area hospitals as it went about the process [111] of establishing its own RN compensation package. Indeed, it was necessary for Defendants to obtain information about the prevailing RN wage rates in the Detroit-area market, given each Defendant hospital's acknowledgment that it set a target rate of RN compensation by reference to this prevailing market rate — e.g., Defendant Beaumont set a target at the 75th percentile of the highest rate paid in the market, while Defendant Henry Ford sought to pay its RNs at the 66th percentile of this market. All are agreed that Defendants would not run afoul of § 1 if they independently pursued these wage-setting objectives by resort to information obtained in accordance with the "safety zone" criteria set forth in the DOJ/FTC Guidelines. Yet, the record reveals numerous examples of wage-related information exchanges that failed to satisfy these criteria.

[*640] As discussed earlier, the Court readily agrees with Plaintiffs that these repeated exchanges of RN wage data outside the Guidelines' "safety zone" could permissibly be viewed by the trier of fact as running counter to the Defendant hospitals' independent interests. Nonetheless, under the totality of the record presented here, the Court finds that [112] this evidence of conduct contrary to Defendants' self-interests gives rise to only a modest inference of conspiracy. The record discloses a number of explanations for Defendants' exchange of wage-related data outside the Guidelines' "safety zone," including: (i) the continued adherence to historical practice, such as Beaumont's quarterly survey of nurse compensation from 1989 until the fall of 2003; (ii) quid pro quo understandings that if a given request for information was honored, the recipient hospital was more likely to provide its own information if requested at a later date; (iii) expediency, with compensation personnel determining in particular cases that additional information would be desirable regarding a specific position or component of an overall compensation package in advance of an immediately forthcoming wage-setting decision; and (iv) individual ad hoc decisions to provide information, such as Linda Budd's provision of disaggregated survey data to her "alma mater," Henry Ford. What the record does not disclose, however, is any shared understanding or agreement that these exchanges of data were to be used to ensure uniformity among the Defendant hospitals in their [113] RN wage-setting practices, rather than as part of each Defendant hospital's independent process of establishing its own RN compensation package.

To be sure, Plaintiffs point out that they need not produce "smoking gun" evidence of such a shared understanding or agreement, and that it is enough if the record gives rise to an inference that Defendants were operating under such a coordinated arrangement. Any such inference, however, must overcome the competing inference that arises from the evidence of the Defendant hospitals' actual use of the wage-related information they exchanged among themselves during the relevant period. As discussed earlier in the Court's survey of the evidence concerning uniformity (or non-uniformity) in Defendants' actions, this wage data was compiled and put to use in a series of discrete, individualized RN compensation decisions, with Defendants' decisionmaking processes varying in (i) their degree of sponsorship of and participation in surveys, (ii) their reliance on direct contacts to obtain wage-related information, and (iii) their selection of surveys and market information to consider in setting RN compensation. Moreover, the outcomes of these discrete [114] decisionmaking processes do not reveal any discernible pattern of coordinated wage-setting, but instead reflect material differences in the rates at which each Defendant hospital's RN wages changed from year to year. In short, the record of each Defendant's RN wage-setting is sufficiently individualized and idiosyncratic to undermine any reasonable inference that the Defendant hospitals acted with a unity of purpose.

In this limited respect, then, the Court recognizes the force of Defendants' point that Plaintiffs' per se § 1 claim is seriously weakened, albeit not outright defeated, by the absence of evidence of parallel conduct. As discussed earlier, the Court does not read the relevant case law as mandating a showing of parallel conduct in order to sustain a § 1 conspiracy claim. Yet, under the record presented here, it surely is more difficult to arrive at a reasonable inference of collective wage-fixing if the Defendants hospitals did not, in fact, engage in parallel conduct or reach parallel results in their compensation decisions for [*641] their respective RN workforces. Although Defendants need not have marched in lock-step in their gathering and use of competitor wage data and in [115] their setting of RN wages, the evidence here simply features too wide a disparity among the Defendant hospitals' processes for determining RN compensation and the outcomes of these processes to support a reasonable inference of a conspiracy in violation of § 1.

In the end, Plaintiffs' per se § 1 claim rests principally on an admittedly significant body of evidence of regular sharing of wage-related information that seemingly ran counter to the Defendant hospitals' independent self-interests, and arguably undermined their ability to compete against each other in their formulation of RN compensation packages. Under this record, it is fair to say that Defendants could have confined their information exchanges to the "safe harbor" of the DOJ/FTC Guidelines, and thereby achieved all of their legitimate, pro-competitive objectives without disclosing unmasked, competitively sensitive wage data to other local hospitals. Even accepting, however, that Defendants' information exchanges were sub-optimal from an economic and competitive standpoint, the courts have cautioned against "second-guessing" of business judgments, "even where the evidence concerning the rationality of the challenged activities [116] might be subject to reasonable dispute." In re Citric Acid Litigation, 191 F.3d 1090, 1101 (9th Cir. 1999). The record here fails to establish that Defendants traveled beyond the realm of independent (albeit economically questionable) business practices and into the impermissible territory of coordinated wage-fixing, such that the inference of conspiracy is stronger than the competing inference of independent action. It follows that Defendants are entitled to summary judgment in their favor on Plaintiffs' Count I claim of a per se § 1 violation.

C. Plaintiffs Have Produced Sufficient Evidence to Withstand Summary Judgment as to the Causal Element of Their "Rule of Reason" Claim.

The next challenge advanced in Defendants' joint summary judgment motion is directed at both of Plaintiffs' claims — i.e., their Count I claim of a per se antitrust violation through an agreement to fix wages, and their Count II "rule of reason" claim that the Defendant hospitals conspired among themselves to exchange wage information in a manner that harmed competition by depressing RN wages. [40] Defendants point out — and Plaintiffs do not dispute — that HN22[] under either of these theories, "Plaintiffs must prove [117] antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick TCorp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977); see also Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 341-45, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 1893-95, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990) (confirming that a private plaintiff must make this same showing of antitrust injury — i.e., that the plaintiff has been "adversely affected by an anticompetitive aspect of the defendant's conduct" — in order to recover damages under [*642] a per se theory). The Sixth Circuit has emphasized that this "causal link" between an antitrust violation and antitrust injury "must be proved as a matter of fact and with a fair degree of certainty." Shreve Equipment, Inc. v. Clay Equipment Corp., 650 F.2d 101, 105 (6th Cir. 1981). Defendants maintain that Plaintiffs have failed as a matter of law to make this showing. Although the question again is a close one, here the Court disagrees.

[40] In light of the Court's decision to grant summary judgment in Defendants' favor on Plaintiffs' per se claim, it is not necessary to address any additional challenges [118] to this claim. Nonetheless, because Defendants' present challenge as to the element of causation applies equally to Plaintiffs' per se and "rule of reason" claims, and because (as will be seen) the analysis is precisely the same as to either of these theories of recovery, the discussion that follows need not be strictly confined to Plaintiffs' "rule of reason" claim.

It is clear, as a threshold matter, that Plaintiffs have not pursued one of the possible avenues for establishing a causal link between an antitrust violation and antitrust injury — i.e., proof through expert testimony. One of Plaintiffs' experts, Dr. Ashenfelter, testified that he made no effort to draw any conclusions as to "whether a particular information exchange led to a suppression of wages or not," that he had not "actually used the [information] exchanges to study whether — what the effect of the exchange was on wages," and that he had not "made that connection." (Defendants' Motion, Ex. Z, Ashenfelder Dep. at 26.) Plaintiffs' other expert, Gregory Vistnes, similarly testified that he had not "attempted to make a direct causal link between the information exchange and the resulting conduct of the hospitals," that [119] he "was not looking at whether or not there were actual effects from any of the communications," and that the "magnitude of the effect [of the information exchanges] and whether the effect left wages above or below what the competitive price or wage should have been, was not an issue that I was looking at." (Defendants' Motion, Ex. AA, Vistnes Dep. at 213, 240, 252.)

Next, it is equally clear that the requisite causal link cannot be inferred solely from the fact that Defendants exchanged wage data, even if — as the evidence indicates — a number of these exchanges fell outside the "safety zone" articulated in the DOJ/FTC Guidelines. As noted earlier, HN23[] "[t]he exchange of [wage] data and other information among competitors does not invariably have anticompetitive effects." United States Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 441 n.16, 98 S. Ct. at 2875 n.16. The Guidelines themselves reiterate this point:

> Participation by competing providers in surveys of prices for health care services, or surveys of salaries, wages or benefits of personnel, does not necessarily raise antitrust concerns. In fact, such surveys can have significant benefits for health care consumers. Providers can use information derived from [120] price and compensation surveys to price their services more competitively and to offer compensation that attracts highly qualified personnel.

DOJ/FTC Guidelines, Statement 6 at 61. Likewise, Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Vistnes, testified that "as a general matter an information exchange in this type of a context could be pro[]competitive and lead to . . . either [an] increase or [a] reduction in wages," and he further recognized that "a fact-based investigation of any case could show that conditions falling outside those [DOJ/FTC] safety zones are unlikely to cause competitive harm." (Defendants' Motion, Ex. AA, Vistnes Dep. at 200; see also Ex. Z, Ashenfelter Dep. at 34-35 (agreeing that in the absence of collusion, information exchanges can be procompetitive).)

Nonetheless, Plaintiffs correctly note that they may forge the necessary link between Defendants' alleged antitrust violations and antitrust injury without expert testimony, and they contend that the record in this case is sufficient for the trier of fact to infer such a connection. As to the starting point of this causation analysis — the antitrust violations — Plaintiffs have, of course, alleged violations of two sorts: (i) a [121] [*643] conspiracy to depress RN wages, and (ii) a conspiracy to exchange wage-related information in a manner that harmed competition by depressing RN wages. As is evident from the descriptions of these two alleged violations, these claims rest upon a common theory of antitrust injury — namely, that the wages paid by the Defendant hospitals to their RN workforces have been held below the competitive level that would prevail in the absence of Defendants' antitrust violations. [41] The question, then, is whether the evidentiary record would permit the trier of fact to infer a causal connection between the two sorts of antitrust violations alleged by Plaintiffs and the antitrust injury identified by their expert. As discussed below, while there are obstacles in the evidentiary paths by which Plaintiffs seek to traverse the gap between a claimed antitrust violation and antitrust injury, the Court nonetheless concludes that the record is sufficient to allow the trier of fact to hear Plaintiffs' evidence and decide the issue of causation.

[41] This theory of antitrust injury, in turn, rests upon a "benchmark" analysis performed by Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Ashenfelter, who has computed a true "competitive" [122] wage for RNs by reference to the fees paid by the Defendant hospitals for agency nurses. As a separate basis for an award of summary judgment in their favor, Defendants challenge Dr. Ashenfelter's agency fee benchmark analysis on a number of grounds. The Court, however, views this subject as more amenable to resolution in the context of Defendants' separate motion to exclude the expert testimony of Dr. Ashenfelter, which raises the same arguments (among others). Accordingly, the Court declines to address Defendants' challenges to Dr. Ashenfelter's expert analysis in the present opinion, but instead will address these matters (as necessary) in a later ruling.

First, Plaintiffs contend that the record in this case discloses a practice among the Defendant hospitals of regular exchanges of wage data "on demand," exchanges of a nature and frequency that both the courts and Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Vistnes, have deemed likely to result in depressed, sub-competitive wages. The Court already has recounted the substantial evidence of the Defendant hospitals' regular exchanges of unmasked and disaggregated compensation-related information, both through direct contacts and through third-party surveys [123] that failed to comport with the DOJ/FTC Guidelines in one or more respects. What is more, Plaintiffs have produced evidence — also summarized earlier — that this wage data, while often gathered by lower-level employees, was routinely passed up to the hospitals' executive leadership for use in making wage determinations. Indeed, as Plaintiffs aptly observe, "[i]t could hardly be otherwise," where "[t]he hospitals would hardly have spent thousands of dollars a year to commission surveys and devote[d] extensive resources to completing these surveys if they never used them," and where "hospital executives would not have ordered employees to spend time contacting other hospitals to gather information that was not to be used." (Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 95 (citations omitted).) Thus, while Defendants take issue with Plaintiffs' characterization of the evidence as establishing a "policy of on-demand information exchanges," (id. at 99), the Court finds that the record would permit a trier of fact to reach this conclusion.

Against this evidentiary backdrop, Plaintiffs point to case law which, in their view, recognizes the reasonableness of an inference that such "on-demand" exchanges of wage [124] information will result in depressed, sub-competitive wages. First, Plaintiffs note the Supreme Court's recognition in United States Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 457, 98 S. Ct. at 2883, that "[r]egardless of its putative purpose, the most likely consequence of any such agreement [among competitors] [*644] to exchange price information would be the stabilization of industry prices." The Court explained that this likely anticompetitive effect arises from the fact that "each seller would know that his price concession could not be kept from his competitors," so that "no seller participating in the information-exchange arrangement would . . . have any incentive for deviating from the prevailing price level in the industry." United States Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 457, 98 S. Ct. at 2883. Similarly, in a case where, as here, the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants participated in regular surveys of the compensation paid to hospital employees — in that case, medical residents — the court stated:

> [I]t is reasonable to infer that the annual nature of the survey provides the institutional defendant co-conspirators the information they need to keep compensation levels depressed; each institutional defendant is able [125] to set compensation levels consistent with the previous year knowing that the levels will be checked against those of the coming year with the next Survey.

Jung v. Association of American Medical Colleges, 300 F. Supp.2d 119, 167 (D.D.C. 2004). Finally, beyond this recognition of their theory of causation in the case law, Plaintiffs point to the opinion of their expert, Dr. Vistnes, that information exchanges of the sort engaged in by the Defendant hospitals here "can facilitate coordination and soften competition," which in turn "can affect prices" (or, here, wages). (Defendants' Motion, Ex. L, Vistnes 3/20/2009 Expert Report at 45, 53.)

As Defendants point out, however, this case law and Dr. Vistnes's expert opinion share a common infirmity — each addresses Plaintiffs' proffered theory of causation in the abstract, without specifically identifying the sort of evidence that would establish that a particular exchange of wage or price information actually caused softened competition or wage (or price) stabilization in a given case. Most notably, in United States Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 456, 98 S. Ct. at 2883, the Court prefaced its above-cited discussion of the possible anticompetitive effects [126] of information exchanges by stating that it was addressing this matter only "[a]s an abstract proposition," based on "economic theory and common human experience." Similarly, the decision in Jung, 300 F. Supp.2d at 167, arose in the context of a motion to dismiss, so the court had no occasion to address the sort of proof the plaintiffs would ultimately need to produce in support of their claim that the alleged information exchange in that case "facilitated the stabilization of medical resident compensation." Finally, and as noted earlier, Dr. Vistnes's theory of softened competition is just that, a theory — by his own admission, he did not "attempt[] to make a direct causal link between the information exchange and the resulting conduct of the hospitals," nor did he consider whether the effect of Defendants' information exchanges "left wages above or below what the competitive price or wage should have been." (Vistnes Dep. at 213, 252.)

Yet, while the discussions in United States Gypsum and Jung might have been limited to abstract principles, the procedural posture here enables the Court to consider these principles in light of a voluminous record which, as stated, could be viewed as [127] evidencing a practice of on-demand exchanges of wage data. As thoroughly recounted earlier in this opinion, the Defendant hospitals regularly reached out to each other to obtain specific information about their local competitors' wage rates and practices, and Defendants have acknowledged that their compensation decisions were based, at least to some extent, on considerations of their relative standing or wage percentile in the local market. This record establishes, [*645] at a minimum, the necessary background conditions to trigger the concern that was recognized in United States Gypsum and Jung only as an abstract or hypothetical proposition — namely, that each Defendant could comfortably hold the various elements of its RN compensation package to the minimum level needed to meet its objectives, secure in the knowledge that it did not need to outbid local competitors whose wage rates and practices were unknown. In addition, the Court has accepted, for present purposes, the assertion of Plaintiffs and their expert, Dr. Ashenfelter, that RN wages at the Defendant hospitals have in fact been held below competitive levels. Under a comparable record, the court in another RN wage-suppression suit [128] found that the plaintiffs' theory of causation in that case, resting largely upon Dr. Vistnes's expert opinion as to the competition-softening effect of information exchanges, was "persuasive for inferring causation" and sufficient for the plaintiffs to withstand summary judgment. Fleischman, 728 F. Supp.2d at 164-65.

Even assuming that more is needed to remove Plaintiffs' theory of causation from the realm of abstraction, the Court is satisfied that the record here gives rise to issues of fact as to causation that a trier of fact should be permitted to resolve. In particular, Plaintiffs have produced evidence suggesting that wage-related data exchanged among the Defendant hospitals — data which, as discussed, was sometimes shared through direct contacts or through surveys that did not satisfy the DOJ/FTC "safety zone" criteria —was actually relied upon and brought to bear in Defendants' decisions to reduce elements of their RN compensation packages below the levels that were contemplated before this data became available. Plaintiffs cite, for example, the instances (discussed earlier) in which Beaumont executives expressly referenced market surveys of RN wages in explaining decisions [129] to award smaller-than-recommended pay increases. The record also includes the testimony of DMC's chief executive officer, Mike Duggan, explaining that a smaller than recommended merit increase for 2006 was motivated by a desire not to "raise [employee] wages unnecessarily," and stating more generally that DMC "tr[ies] to raise in every specialty what is necessary to keep us competitive and keep our positions filled," but "tr[ies] not to pay more than that." (Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. O, Duggan Dep. at 53.) Similarly, Plaintiffs point to a set of "speaker's notes" accompanying a St. John salary increase proposal for fiscal year 2003/04, indicating that disaggregated, unmasked wage range data that had been very recently obtained from other Defendant hospitals was used as a basis for recommending that the maximum rate for St. John's nurses be set just below the next lowest maximum range. (See Plaintiffs' Response, Ex. 91; see also Exs. 92, 93 (another set of speaker's notes showing that competitor RN wage rates were used in St. John's March 2004 process of setting its RN compensation, with the resulting increase set at the minimum level of the 3.5-to-5.0 percent increase under consideration).) [130] [42]

To be sure, this body of evidence suffers from weaknesses that undercut the inferences Plaintiffs wish to draw from it. First, it is highly anecdotal, shedding light [*646] on only a handful of the many RN compensation decisions made by the Defendant hospitals during the class period. As discussed earlier, Defendants and their expert have produced graphs that summarize the net effect of these decisions on RN wages, and these graphs reveal a significant degree of variance among the Defendant hospitals in their rates of change and underlying wage rates during the class period. [43] Thus, even making the most of the examples cited by Plaintiffs, they still face a difficult challenge in persuading a trier of fact to infer that RN wages in the market as a whole were depressed as a result of the exchange of wage-related data among the Defendant hospitals. While it may be true, as Plaintiffs

[42] In light of these and other examples cited by Plaintiffs, the Court fails to see how Defendants can tenably claim that Plaintiffs have not "present[ed] any evidence . . . that wages would have been higher in the absence of the information exchanges challenged in their brief." (Defendants' Reply Br. at 45.)

[43] Plaintiffs, of course, have submitted a graph prepared by their own expert, Dr. Ashenfelter, that purports to show greater uniformity in Defendants' wage-setting decisions and resulting wage rates over the class period. This "battle of the experts" must be left for the trier of fact to resolve.

[131] assert, that the requisite causal connection need not be established through an exhaustive compilation of "specific example[s] of . . . particular wage cut[s] that can be linked to . . . specific exchanges of information," (Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 99), there surely are limits to how much a trier of fact will be willing, or even permitted, to extrapolate from a modest number of wage-limiting decisions to market-wide setting of wages at sub-competitive levels.

Next, and more generally, Plaintiffs face a challenge in ensuring that the requisite finding of causation rests upon conduct that violates antitrust law, as opposed to conduct that does not. As explained, exchanges of wage data are not per se unlawful, and Plaintiffs' own expert, Dr. Vistnes, has acknowledged that an exchange of wage data may be pro-competitive, even if it results in a wage reduction. (See Vistnes Dep. at 200.) Moreover, [132] the law is clear that HN24[] a private plaintiff in an antitrust case may recover damages only for losses attributable to "a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior." Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 344, 110 S. Ct. at 1894. Thus, Defendants correctly observe that Plaintiffs can recover only by showing that the sub-competitive wage levels identified by Dr. Ashenfelter were caused by a "competition-reducing aspect or effect" of the Defendant hospitals' exchange of wage data.

Nevertheless, while all of this may give rise to thorny issues of proof, the Court declines to adopt Defendants' proposed solution — i.e., a ruling as a matter of law that Plaintiff cannot make this showing. Taking Defendants' argument to its logical conclusion, a plaintiff seemingly could never prevail in a wage-suppression (or parallel pricing) suit based on a theory of information sharing, because even if a group of competitors shared all of their confidential business data in making wage (or price) decisions — or, indeed, convened in the same conference room and reached their decisions at the same time — the plaintiff still would be left to somehow identify and separate out the particular aspects [133] of this information-sharing arrangement that were unlawful, and then prove that these decisions would have been different if the competitors had engaged in only a "permissible" exchange of data. Even assuming one could arrive at a settled understanding of the lawful versus unlawful aspects of an exchange of wage (or price) data — e.g., by adopting the DOJ/FTC Guidelines, with their preference for masked, aggregated, and aged data — there would still remain the difficulty of forging a specific causal link between an anti-competitive wage (or price) [*647] decision and an unlawful component of the data exchange that preceded it.

The Court does not read the pertinent case law as imposing such an insurmountable standard of proof. As revealed in the foregoing discussion of this law, the courts view certain types of information exchanges as triggering concerns of anticompetitive effects, and the DOJ/FTC Guidelines likewise speak to these concerns. The record in this case features ample evidence of exchanges of wage data that implicate these concerns and exceed the Guidelines' "safety zone," and Plaintiffs also have produced at least some evidence that the data gathered in these exchanges was used [134] in reaching decisions that had an unfavorable (or less favorable) impact upon nurse compensation. Finally, Plaintiffs have proffered the opinion of their expert, Dr. Ashenfelter, that the RN workforces at the Defendant hospitals are being paid at sub-competitive levels. This record, viewed as a whole, serves to blunt Defendants' criticism that Plaintiffs seek to try their case in the abstract —i.e., that Plaintiffs have argued only that "causation in an information exchange case is theoretically possible," but have failed to present facts that would support "a concrete theory of causation in this case." (Defendants' Reply Br. at 44.) Having reviewed the record here in light of the relevant case law and governing legal standards, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have produced sufficient evidence from which a trier of fact could infer the requisite causal link between an antitrust violation and antitrust injury.

D. Plaintiffs Need Not Offer a Detailed Analysis of the Relevant Market in Order to Pursue Their "Rule of Reason" Claim.

Finally, in a challenge directed solely at Plaintiffs' Count II "rule of reason" claim, Defendants argue that this claim is defeated by Plaintiffs' failure to [135] establish the relevant market within which to evaluate their allegations of anticompetitive effects. In particular, Defendants challenge the assertion of Plaintiffs and their expert, Dr. Ashenfelter, that the relevant market in this case consists only of RNs employed at hospitals in the Detroit metropolitan area, and not RNs who work for non-hospital employers such as physicians' offices, ambulatory surgery centers, nursing homes, and public health agencies. In response, Plaintiffs contend that they need not produce a detailed or formal market analysis in this case, where they have produced direct proof of the anticompetitive effects of Defendants' exchange of wage data. As discussed below, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have the better of the argument on this issue.

HN25[] Under a "conventional rule-of-reason approach," a court must "engage in a thorough analysis of the relevant market and the effects of the restraint in that market." Realcomp II, Ltd. v. Federal Trade Commission, 635 F.3d 815, 825 (6th Cir. 2011). As both sides agree, however, even in cases where a challenged practice is subject to scrutiny under the "rule of reason," rather than subject to condemnation as per se unlawful, [136] the "practical difference" between these two analytical approaches "is sometimes negligible," Re/Max International, 173 F.3d at 1013, and the courts occasionally find that a "less searching Rule of Reason analysis" is sufficient under the facts of a particular case, In re Northwest Airlines, 208 F.R.D. at 206. The Supreme Court has acknowledged "[t]he truth . . . that our categories of analysis of anticompetitive effect are less fixed than terms like 'per se,' 'quick look,' and 'rule of reason' tend to make them appear." California Dental Association v. Federal Trade Commission, 526 U.S. 756, 779, [*648] 119 S. Ct. 1604, 1617, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999). Of particular pertinence here, the Supreme Court has explained that "[s]ince the purpose of the [rule of reason] inquiries into market definition and market power is to determine whether an arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition, proof of actual detrimental effects, such as a reduction of output, can obviate the need for an inquiry into market power, which is but a surrogate for detrimental effects." Federal Trade Commission v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 460-61, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 2019, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986) (internal quotation [137] marks and citation omitted).

In Plaintiffs' view, they have offered such proof of "actual detrimental effects" here, and thus need not propound a detailed market analysis. Specifically, they point to Dr. Ashenfelter's benchmark analysis of the fees paid by the Defendant hospitals for agency nurses. This analysis, if credited, [44] serves as direct proof of a detrimental impact upon the wages paid to RNs by the Defendant hospitals. Moreover, Plaintiffs have identified a sufficient basis for attributing this detrimental impact to Defendants' exchange of information regarding the compensation paid to their RN workforces, where the case law, see, e.g. Todd, 275 F.3d at 211-13, the DOJ/FTC Guidelines, and the opinion of Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Vistnes, all lend support to the proposition that information exchanges of the sort engaged in here can be expected to soften competition and have an anticompetitive effect on the wages paid to RNs. [45] Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' "rule of reason" claim is not defeated by the absence of a detailed analysis of the relevant market and Defendants' power within that market. See Fleischman, 728 F. Supp.2d at 163-64 (concluding under a similar [138] record that a detailed market analysis was unnecessary).

Next, to the extent Defendants argue that Plaintiffs must at least "show the rough contours of a relevant market," Republic Tobacco Co. v. North Atlantic Trading Co., 381 F.3d 717, 737 (7th Cir. 2004), the Court is satisfied that Plaintiffs and their expert have met this more relaxed standard of "rule of reason" analysis. As Plaintiffs observe, to see that Dr. Ashenfelter's exclusion of non-hospital RNs was reasonable, one need look no further than the Defendant hospitals' own conduct in commissioning and conducting wage surveys and in their direct exchanges of compensation-related information. In particular, "Defendants have commissioned literally scores of surveys to assist them in setting the wages for their hospital nurses and engaged in hundreds of phone calls and emails to help with that process, and [*649] those surveys and contacts always seek information only on what other hospitals are paying their hospital nurses." (Plaintiffs' Response Br. at 126.) Although Defendants point to an exception or two that seem to prove the rule, and they further cite some evidence that they have competed with non-hospital employers in their [140] recruitment of nurses, there is no basis in the record for believing that Plaintiffs' exclusion of non-hospital RNs and employers from the relevant market has significantly distorted the analysis of the anticompetitive effects of Defendants' exchange of wage data under the rule of reason.

[44] Again, Defendants argue separately that this benchmark analysis is subject to exclusion, but the Court leaves this argument for another day.

[45] To be sure, and as discussed above, the Court recognizes that Plaintiffs face difficulties of proof in showing that Defendants' exchanges of wage data actually did have an anticompetitive effect on RN wages, and that this effect was brought about by unlawful aspects of these exchanges. As explained, this evidentiary obstacle arises from the difficulty of isolating the impact of the unlawful, versus the lawful, aspects of these information exchanges. Yet, the detailed market analysis sought by Defendants would not aid Plaintiffs (or the trier of fact) in resolving this difficulty, but instead would address a different question ? namely, whether Defendants' exchanges of information perhaps might not raise concerns of anticompetitive effect because, for example, any tendency of these exchanges to depress RN wages would be offset or overcome by the ability of RNs to pursue employment in a non-hospital setting. As indicated below, the Court is satisfied that the more abbreviated market analysis [139] offered by Plaintiffs sufficiently addresses this question.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above,

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the motion for summary judgment brought by Defendants Henry Ford Health System, Mount Clemens General Hospital, Inc., William Beaumont Hospital, and Trinity Health Corp. (docket #376) is GRANTED IN PART, with the moving Defendants awarded summary judgment in their favor as to Count I of Plaintiffs' Third Corrected Class Action Complaint, and DENIED IN PART, as to the moving Defendants' challenge to Count II of Plaintiffs' Third Corrected Class Action Complaint. Likewise, IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendant Detroit Medical Center's motion for summary judgment (docket #358) is GRANTED IN PART, with respect to Count I of the complaint, and DENIED IN PART, with respect to Count II of the complaint.

Finally, in light of the tentative settlement reached between Plaintiffs and Defendant Mount Clemens General Hospital, [141] IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendant Mount Clemens General Hospital's renewed motion for summary judgment (docket #355) is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

I. INTRODUCTION AND PROCEDURAL [*969] BACKGROUND[1]

On [6] June 13, 2002, Malinda Heerwagen filed a putative class action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, alleging claims of monopolization, attempted monopolization, and unjust enrichment against Clear Channel, Inc. and related entities. Heerwagen claimed that the defendants had engaged in anticompetitive conduct in connection with their nationwide promotion of live music concerts. On August 11, 2003, the district court denied Heerwagen's motion for class certification, concluding that the putative class's antitrust claims required a separate analysis for each relevant geographic market, and, therefore, certification of a nationwide class was unwarranted. The Second Circuit affirmed. Heerwagen v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, Inc. et al., 435 F.3d 219 (2d. Cir. 2006). Heerwagen subsequently dismissed the case voluntarily.

Twenty-two regional putative class actions subsequently were filed against Clear Channel, Inc. and related entities, alleging substantively identical claims of: (1) Monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (2) Attempted Monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; and (3) Unjust Enrichment. These [7] actions ultimately were consolidated and assigned to this Court as part of this Multi-District Litigation ("MDL").

On November 1, 2006, this Court issued an order staying discovery in every action except those in the following five geographic markets: Los Angeles, Chicago, New Jersey/New York, Boston, and Denver. (Dkt. 36, 37). On October 22, 2007, this Court issued an order certifying classes in these five markets and denying Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings as to Plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claims. (Dkt. 160); Thompson v. Clear Channel Communs., Inc. (In re Live Concert Antitrust Litig.), 247 F.R.D. 98 (C.D. Cal. 2007).

On November 16, 2009, the Court denied Plaintiffs' motion for approval of plan for class notice, and further ordered that the action be stayed pending the Ninth Circuit's en banc decision in Dukes v. Wal-Mart*, 509 F.3d 1168 (9th Cir. 2007)*. (Dkt. 215). On October 7, 2010, the Court granted Defendants' motion to lift the stay, denied Defendants' motion for reconsideration based on the Ninth Circuit's decision in Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571 (9th Cir. 2010) (en banc), and ordered the parties to submit a joint stipulation as to [8] how best to proceed with this action. (Dkt. 240).

Pursuant to the parties' stipulation, the Court entered an Order Regarding Scheduling of Action on December 10, 2010. (Dkt. 260) Under this stipulated order, the parties agreed to limit further discovery to the Denver and Los Angeles markets. "The remaining three certified template markets (Chicago, New York and Boston) shall be stayed until the Denver and Los Angeles markets are tried or otherwise resolved." (Id).

On February 7, 2011, Defendants filed a Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Regarding Statute of Limitations (with respect to the Denver and Los Angeles actions). (Dkt. 271). On April 7, 2011, the Court granted the motion. (Dkt. 310).

The following motions are currently pending before the Court:

[*970] • Defendants' Motion to Exclude the Testimony of Dr. Owen R. Phillips, (Dkt. 403);
• Defendants' Motion for Class Decertification, (Dkt. 410);
• Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Denver Action), (Dkt. 438);
• Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Los Angeles Action), (Dkt. 441);

A more detailed factual and procedural history is set forth in this Court's October 22, 2007 Order Granting Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. (Dkt. 160); Thompson v. Clear Channel Communs., Inc. (In re Live Concert Antitrust Litig.), 247 F.R.D. 98 (C.D. Cal. 2007).

• Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike Declaration of Julia Vander Ploeg, (Dkt. 516).

For the reasons set forth below, Defendants' Motion to Exclude the Testimony of Dr. Owen R. Phillips, (Dkt. 403), is GRANTED IN PART. Defendants Motions for Summary Judgment, (Dkt. 438, 441), are GRANTED. The remaining motions are DISMISSED AS MOOT.

II. PRIOR CLASS CERTIFICATION ORDER

As noted above, on October 22, 2007, the Court issued an Order Granting Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (in the Chicago, Boston, New York/New Jersey, Denver, and Los Angeles markets). In re Live Concert Antitrust Litig., 247 F.R.D. 98 (C.D. Cal. 2007). At that time, however, the Court was bound by then-governing Ninth Circuit precedent, under which district courts were precluded from resolving factual disputes — and, in particular, weighing conflicting expert testimony — at the class certification stage. Thus, the Court concluded "Dukes [v. Wal-Mart, Inc., 474 F.3d 1214, 1229 (9th Cir. 2007)] clearly precludes the Court from conducting a Daubert analysis or weighing expert testimony," id. at 116 n.7, and effectively accepted as true, for purposes of that motion only, the representations of Plaintiffs' [10] expert. "[T]his order views the allegations, expert testimony, and evidence through the very narrow prism permitted by Dukes. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have satisfied the requirements of Rule 23[.]" Id. at 155.

The original decision in Dukes, however, was subsequently withdrawn and replaced by Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571 (9th Cir. 2010) (en banc), which was, in turn, reversed by the Supreme Court in Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 (2011). In its decision, the Supreme Court enunciated a significantly different standard than that applied by this Court in its 2007 Class Certification Order. "[C]ertification is proper only if the trial court is satisfied, after a rigorous analysis, that the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been satisfied . . . . Frequently that 'rigorous analysis' will entail some overlap with the merits of the Plaintiffs' underlying claim. That cannot be helped." Dukes, 131 S.Ct. at 2551. The Court went on to observe, "The District Court concluded that Daubert did not apply to expert testimony at the certification stage of class-action proceedings. We doubt that is so[.]" Id. at 2553-54.

In short, the Court's prior Order Granting Class Certification [11] was based on a legal standard that is no longer in effect, which precluded the Court from undertaking a meaningful analysis of either the underlying facts of the case or the representations of the parties' respective experts. As such, that order has little to no precedential value at this point in the litigation. The Court is writing on a proverbial "clean slate."

III. PENDING MOTIONS (ORDER OF ANALYSIS)

There are several motions currently pending before the Court, including: (1) [*971] Defendants' motion to exclude the testimony of Plaintiff's expert Dr. Owen Phillips, pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 702; and (2) Defendants' motions for summary judgment as to the Denver and Los Angeles markets. These motions require two distinct inquiries. First, the Court must evaluate the admissibility of Dr. Phillips' proffered expert testimony in its role as "gatekeeper" under Rule 702. See Claar v. Burlington N. R.R., 29 F.3d 499, 501 (9th Cir. 1994) (prior to ruling on summary judgment motion, "[t]he trial judge must ensure that any and all scientific testimony or evidence admitted is not only relevant, but reliable. The primary locus of this obligation is Rule 702.") (emphasis in original) (quoting [12] Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., 509 U.S. 579, 589, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469(1993)).

Second, the Court will evaluate the merits of Defendants' motions for summary judgment, considering Dr. Phillips' testimony only to the extent that it is admissible under Rule 702. See generally id. at 504-05 (affirming summary judgment based on the exclusion of testimony by plaintiffs' damages expert, holding: "To survive [defendant's] motion for summary judgment, plaintiffs were required to offer admissible expert testimony showing that exposure to chemicals in the workplace played some part in producing their injuries.").

IV. DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO EXCLUDE TESTIMONY OF DR. OWEN R. PHILLIPS

A. Legal Standard

Federal Rule of Evidence 702 governs the admissibility of expert testimony in federal courts. Rule 702 provides:

> A witness who is qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education may testify in the form of an opinion or otherwise if:
> (a) the expert's scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will help the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue;
> (b) the testimony is based on sufficient facts or data;
> (c) the testimony is the product of reliable principles [13] and methods; and
> (d) the expert has reliably applied the principles and methods to the facts of the case.

Fed. R. Evid. 702. [2]

"[T]he admissibility of all expert testimony is governed by the principles of Rule 104(a). Under that Rule, the proponent has the burden of establishing that the pertinent admissibility requirements are met by a preponderance of the evidence." Fed. R. Evid. 702, Notes of Advisory Committee on 2000 amendments (citing Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 107 S. Ct. 2775, 97 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1987)).

The admissibility of expert testimony is a question for the Court. Fed. R. Evid. 104(a); Bourjaily, 483 U.S. at 175-76. To that end, the Supreme Court has recognized the obligation of the trial court to fulfill a "gatekeeping role" in order to "ensure that any and all [expert] testimony [14] ... is not only relevant, but reliable." Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., 509 U.S. 579, 589, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993). "The objective of that [gatekeeping] requirement is . . . to make certain that an expert, whether basing [*972] testimony upon professional studies or personal experience, employs in the courtroom the same level of intelle;ctual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field." Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 152, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999).

With respect to the reliability of expert testimony, the Supreme Court in Daubert identified several factors that the court may consider when making its determination, including: (1) whether the expert's technique or theory can be or has been tested; (2) whether the technique or theory has been subject to peer review and publication; (3) the known or potential rate of error of the technique or theory when applied; (4) the existence and maintenance of standards and controls; and (5) whether the technique or theory has been generally accepted in the scientific community. Daubert, 509 U.S. at 594; accord Kumho, 526 U.S. at 151 (holding Daubert factors may be applied to non-scientific expert testimony, depending upon "the particular circumstances [15] of the particular case at issue").

The Supreme Court has emphasized, however, that these factors are not exclusive, and that "the law grants a district court the same broad latitude when it decides how to determine reliability as it enjoys in respect to its ultimate reliability determination." Kumho, 526 U.S. at 142 (emphasis in original). "[T]he trial judge must have considerable leeway in deciding in a particular case how to go about determining whether particular expert testimony is reliable." Id. at 152. Thus, the admissibility of expert testimony is "a subject peculiarly within the sound discretion of the trial judge, who alone must decide the qualifications of the expert on a given subject and the extent to which his opinions may be required.'" United States v. Chang, 207 F.3d 1169, 1172 (9th Cir. 2000) (quoting Fineberg v. United States, 393 F.2d 417, 421 (9th Cir. 1968)).

Effective December 1, 2011, "[t]he language of Rule 702 has been amended as part of the restyling of the Evidence Rules to make them more easily understood and to make style and terminology consistent throughout the rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only. There is no intent to change any result in any ruling on evidence admissibility." Fed. R. Evid. 702, Notes of Advisory Committee on 2011 amendments.

Since "[d]istrict courts are not required to hold a Daubert hearing before ruling on the admissibility of scientific evidence," this Court may rule on Defendant's Daubert motion on the basis of the parties' papers. In re Hanford Nuclear Reservation Litigation, 292 F.3d 1124, 1138 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing United States v. Alatorre, 222 F.3d 1098, 1100 (9th Cir. 2000)).

B. [16] Discussion

Defendants argue that the testimony of Plaintiffs' expert economist, Dr. Owen Phillips, should be excluded on several grounds. In particular, Defendants seek to exclude Dr. Phillips' testimony regarding: (1) the fact and amount of damages; (2) causation of Plaintiffs' injury; (3) the definition of the relevant product market; (4) Defendants' share of the relevant market; and (5) Defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct. The Court will address each of these issues in turn.

1. Damages and Causation

Dr. Phillips performed several statistical analyses in order to estimate the damages suffered by Plaintiffs as a result of Defendants' allegedly anticompetitive conduct. These analyses are of four basic types: (1) the "Yardstick" approach; (2) the "Before-and-After" approach; (3) the "pooled sample" analysis; and (4) damages attributable to ticket surcharges. Defendants do not dispute that Dr. Phillips is qualified as an expert economist, nor do they dispute that statistical analysis may, under appropriate circumstances, properly be admitted into evidence. Instead, Defendants contend that Dr. Phillips failed to "reliably appl[y] the principles and methods [of proper statistical [17] analysis] to the facts of the case" in violation of Rule 702(d).

[*973] a. Legal Requirements For Statistical Analysis

As a general matter, flaws in a proffered expert's analysis typically go to the weight, rather than the admissibility, of the expert's testimony. See, e.g., Hemmings v. Tidyman's Inc., 285 F.3d 1174, 1188 (9th Cir. 2002) ("In most cases, objections to the inadequacies of a study are more appropriately considered an objection going to the weight of the evidence rather than its admissibility. Vigorous cross-examination of a study's inadequacies allows the jury to appropriately weigh the alleged defects and reduces the possibility of prejudice.") (internal citation omitted). "In some cases, however, the analysis may be 'so incomplete as to be inadmissable as irrelevant.'" Id. (quoting Bazemore v. Friday, 478 U.S. 385, 400, n.10, 106 S. Ct. 3000, 92 L. Ed. 2d 315 (1986)).

A somewhat unique body of law has developed governing whether and under what circumstances statistical analysis proffered by an expert — and, in particular, regression analyses such as those conducted by Dr. Phillips — pass muster under Rule 702. In the seminal case Bazemore v. Friday, 478 U.S. 385, 106 S. Ct. 3000, 92 L. Ed. 2d 315 (1986), the Supreme Court held that the Court of [18] Appeals for the Fourth Circuit erred in ignoring statistical evidence presented by plaintiffs in connection with their employment discrimination claim. Id. at 386. The Court reasoned:

> While the omission of variables from a regression analysis may render the analysis less probative than it otherwise might be, it can hardly be said, absent some other infirmity, that an analysis which accounts for the major factors "must be considered unacceptable as evidence of discrimination." Normally, failure to include variables will affect the analysis' probativeness, not its admissibility.

Id. at 400. The Court further reasoned that "[t]here may, of course, be some regressions so incomplete as to be inadmissible as irrelevant; but such was clearly not the case here." Id. at 400, n. 10.

"Bazemore, however, does not give blanket approval to the introduction of all evidence derived from multiple regression analyses." Penk v. Or. State Bd. of Higher Educ., 816 F.2d 458, 464-65 (9th Cir. 1987). Instead, courts have recognized that by its own terms, the Supreme Court's reasoning in Bazemore applies only to a regression analysis "which accounts for the major factors." See Bazemore, 478 U.S. at 400. Thus, [19] in Bickerstaff v. Vassar College, 196 F.3d 435, 449 (2d Cir. 1999), the Second Circuit concluded that the district court properly gave plaintiff's expert report "no probative value," holding:

> the district court did not reject Gray's regression analysis because it included less than all the relevant variables; rather, it found the evidence not probative because it omitted the major variables. Thus . . . Gray's statistical analysis falls within the Bazemore exception - that "there may . . . be some regressions so incomplete as to be inadmissible as irrelevant."

Id. at 449 (quoting Bazemore, 478 U.S. at 400 n.10) (internal citations omitted).

The importance of accounting for the relevant "major variables" has been recognized as particularly important in the context of antitrust litigation.

> Damage estimates in antitrust cases hinge on careful statistical analysis, reasonable assumptions, reliable data, and the robustness of the results. If any of these areas are circumspect, then the analysis could provide faulty conclusions [*974] as to the existence or the amount of damages.

2A P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 399c, p. 447 (3d ed. 2006).

> The correct application of the before-and-after approach [20] [in the context of an alleged conspiracy to monopolize] requires using the prices in the "before" period as an evidentiary foundation for inferring what the prices would have been in the conspiracy period but for the illegal activity. The determination of the "but for" prices, however, must take into account nonconspiratorial factors that would have caused prices to be different in the conspiracy period even if there had been no conspiracy.

Id. ¶ 399b, at 446 (emphasis added) (discussing potential problems with the application of the "before-and-after" and "yardstick" methodologies in antitrust cases).

> By not including any additional variables in the regression, the possibility of omitted variable bias is high. In other words, there are omitted factors that may influence market share growth. These omitted factors could confound the results of the statistical analysis by biasing the damage estimates. In this way, the regression results do not necessarily identify an effect of USTC's alleged behavior on Conwood's market-share growth by state. Rather, the results only suggest a relationship between initial market share and market-share growth. Because the possibility of omitted variable [21] bias is high, we cannot, therefore, infer anything from these results as to whether there was any illegal behavior and, if so, whether that behavior had any anticompetitive effects.

Id. ¶ 399c2, at 455 (discussing flaws in plaintiff's statistical analysis in Conwood Company, LP v. United States Tobacco Company, 290 F.3d 768 (6th Cir. 2002)).

Accordingly, the key question regarding the admissibility of Dr. Phillips' statistical analyses is whether they account for the "major factors." In making this determination, the Court cannot simply assume that variables omitted from the analysis are, in fact, "major factors" which should have been included. There must be some indication that the excluded variables would have impacted the results. See Sobel v. Yeshiva University, 839 F.2d 18, 34 (2d Cir. 1988) ("We read Bazemore to require a defendant challenging the validity of a multiple regression analysis to make a showing that the factors it contends ought to have been included would weaken . . . the analysis."). The burden of proof, however, remains on the proponent of the expert testimony. See Bourjaily, 483 U.S. at 175-76.

b. "Yardstick" Approach

Dr. Phillips' "Yardstick" methodology of calculating [22] damages is fairly straightforward. (See Dkt. 494, Exh. A, Economic Report of Owen R. Phillips. Ph.D. as it Relates to Denver and Los Angeles Markets ("Phillips Expert Report"), at ¶¶ 264-66). In each geographic market (Denver and Los Angeles), Dr. Phillips calculated the average ticket price for rock concerts promoted by Defendants, and compared this amount to the average ticket price for rock concerts promoted by other promoters (i.e., the "yardstick"). Dr. Phillips found that the average ticket price was higher for rock concerts promoted by Defendants, and concluded that this disparity in price was the result of Defendants' anticompetitive conduct. Dr. Phillips then calculated the difference between these average ticket prices in each market, and multiplied this amount by the total number of tickets sold by Defendants during the relevant time period, resulting in estimated damages of $21,700,599 (Denver market) and $70,596,699 (Los Angeles market). (Dkt. 494, Exh. B, Rebuttal Economic [*975] Report of Owen R. Phillips. Ph.D. as it Relates to Denver and Los Angeles Markets ("Phillips Rebuttal Report"), at 39 (revised damages calculations)).

Dr. Phillips' "Yardstick" comparison, however, simply [23] assumes — without further examination — that the difference in average ticket prices observed by Dr. Phillips is due entirely to Defendants' allegedly anticompetitive conduct. The analysis does not account for any other possible explanation(s) for this disparity. Among other variables, Dr. Phillips' analysis fails to account for differences in artist quality/popularity. Common sense dictates that a more popular music artist typically will command higher ticket prices than a less popular artist. Thus, if Defendants consistently promoted concerts for highly popular acts, one would expect their average ticket prices to be higher than those of rival promoters.

Dr. Phillips himself has acknowledged that artist popularity affects ticket prices and that Defendants promoted many of the most popular artists during the relevant time period. During the June 4, 2007 hearing on class certification, for example, the following exchanges with Dr. Phillips took place:

> Q. And you realize that there are factors in addition to considering the competitive price versus the monopoly price that you would have to consider in this analysis, correct?
> A. Well, there's going to be complications, because as Clear [24] Channel became larger, they also [began] attracting the very best talent. . . . But I think there needs to be a check done on the quality of the artists that Clear Channel promotes versus the rest of the market so that damages aren't. . . overestimated in effect.
> Q. Is there a way, as an economist, that you can do that check for quality in doing a damage analysis here?
> A. Yes.
> . . . .
> THE COURT. It seems to me that if Clear Channel was attracting the best talent, that, as you said, that talent would command a higher ticket price, correct?
> WITNESS. Correct.
> THE COURT. So the damage analysis would have to include some further analysis to account for that qualitative difference in talent, correct?
> WITNESS. Yes, to see if there is a difference.
> . . . .
> Q. Do you believe that using those average ticket prices will bias damages against Clear Channel?
> A. It's possible. And that is why we have to look at differences in qualities of the artists. . . . [W]e have to make some adjustments for quality in doing the damage analysis.

(Dkt. 405, Exh. 2, at 41:6 - 51:1; see also id. at 43:17-23 (artist popularity can be accounted for by using, e.g., CD sales)).

The only "check" that Dr. Phillips performed to account [25] for artist popularity, however, was to compare Defendants' promoter share (measured in ticket sales) of the "Top 100" rock acts in each geographic market to Defendants' share of the overall market. Dr. Phillips concluded that "Clear Channel's market share for the Top 100 Acts is consistent with its market share in the remainder of the market." (Phillips' Expert Report, at ¶ 263). The glaring flaw in this purported analysis is that the Top 100 rock acts in each market account for virtually all of the relevant ticket sales. [3] In other words, the Top 100 [*976] acts in each geographic market effectively comprise the entire market. Thus, Dr. Phillips' "analysis" amounts to nothing more than a simple tautology: Defendants' share of the overall market is consistent with Defendants' share of the overall market. Dr. Phillips conceded as much in his deposition:

> Q. So your conclusion is that Clear Channel's share of all concerts is the same as Clear Channel's share of all concerts?
> A. In Los Angeles, yeah.

(Dkt. 405-3, Phillips Depo., at 102:11-14).

> Q. So the [Top 100] analysis is meaningless? [referring to the Denver market]
> A. The money is in the top 100 concerts.
> Q. The top 100 analysis is meaningless?
> A. [26] Right. Yeah. The top 100 — the money is in the top 100 concerts.

(Phillips Depo., at 103:7-11).

In contrast, Defendants have submitted evidence that the artists promoted by Defendants during the relevant time period were, on average, more popular than the artists promoted by rival promoters. [4] This evidence is consistent with Dr. Phillips' observation that Defendants attracted "the very best talent."

Moreover, in order to demonstrate the impact of Dr. Phillips' failure to account for artist popularity, Defendants' expert economist, Dr. Janusz Ordover, conducted a comparison of ticket prices for concerts promoted by Defendants to concerts promoted by other promoters for the same artists. Dr. Ordover found [27] that Defendants' ticket prices generally were comparable to, and in several instances lower than, those of competing promoters for concerts by the same artist. (Ordover Expert Report, ¶¶ 170-80).

In his Rebuttal Report, Dr. Phillips contends that Dr. Ordover's analysis fails to account for venue size and, therefore, "is meaningless because the venue size is an important determinant of how prices are set. . . . A popular artist in a small venue will command a higher price than the same performance at a large venue." (Phillips Rebuttal Report, at 34). This assertion by Dr. Phillips, however, simply provides another reason to exclude his "Yardstick" analysis, which similarly fails to account for venue size (or artist popularity, or any variable other than the identity of the concert promoter).

In any event, while Dr. Ordover's analysis may be flawed, artist popularity is undoubtedly a "major factor" in determining ticket prices, which should have been included in Dr. Phillips' "Yardstick" analysis. The failure to do so renders this analysis "so incomplete as to be inadmissible as irrelevant." See Bazemore, 478 U.S. at 400, n.10.

Plaintiffs have not met their burden of establishing that Dr. [28] Phillips' "Yardstick" damages analysis satisfies the requirements of Rule 702. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Exclude this testimony.

c. "Before-and-After" Approach

Dr. Phillips' "Before-and-After" analysis is similarly flawed. In performing this analysis, Dr. Phillips first analyzed average ticket prices (for all live rock music [*977] concerts in the Denver and Los Angeles markets) from 1981

From 2000 to 2006, the Top 100 artists accounted for 95% of ticket revenue in Los Angeles and 94% of ticket revenue in Denver. (Dkt. 485-2, Expert Report of Janusz A. Ordover, Ph.D. ("Ordover Expert Report"), ¶ 167).

From 2001 to 2006, Defendants' share of the top 25 acts in Denver was 63%, compared with a 48% share of the rest of the market; Defendants' share of the top 25 acts in Los Angeles was 71%, compared with a 37% share of the rest of the market. (Ordover Expert Report, ¶ 169).

through 1998, a period that Dr. Phillips characterizes as "competitive." (See Phillips Expert Report, at ¶¶ 267-73). Dr. Phillips then uses this data to "predict" the expected average ticket prices from 2000 through 2006. [5] Next, Dr. Phillips compares these expected average ticket prices to the actual average ticket prices from 2000 to 2006. Because the actual ticket prices are higher than the "expected" values, Dr. Phillips concludes that Defendants' entry into the market in 2000 caused an increase in ticket prices. Based on the difference between the expected ticket prices and the actual prices, Dr. Phillips calculates damages as follows:

"Before-and-After" Damages Calculations[6]

	Convergence Model	Linear Time Trend Model
Denver	$36,005,988	$21,295,572
Los Angeles	$126,772,722	$69,725,212

With respect to Dr. Phillips' "Before-and-After" analysis, the court's holding in In re Remec Inc. Sec. Litig., 702 F. Supp. 2d 1202 (S.D. Cal. 2010) is instructive. There, the plaintiffs' expert performed a multivariate regression analysis (as part of an "event study") to analyze the impact of "corrective disclosures" [7] on the stock price of a public company. Id. at 1271-72. The plaintiffs' expert first created a "market index" and an "industry index" (the "independent variables") to account for the market and industry forces that one would expect to impact the company's stock price. Id. He then used these independent variables to calculate the daily predicted return on the company's stock (i.e., the "dependent variable"). Id. Finally, the plaintiffs' expert compared this predicted return with the actual return during [30] the relevant time period and found that on the day following a corrective disclosure, the actual stock return "varie[d] markedly from the predicted return." Id. Based on his analysis, the plaintiffs' expert concluded that the corrective disclosures had caused these declines in stock price. Id.

The court granted defendants' motion to exclude the above-described analysis, holding that it did not meet Rule 702's standards for admissibility as articulated in Daubert. Id. at 1273-74. The court reasoned:

> Dr. Nye predetermines the results of his analysis. Nye purports to test the hypothesis that REMEC's corrective disclosures exerted a material negative influence on the per-share price of REMEC stock during the class period. . . . Nye's model assumes that the difference between actual return and predicted return is necessarily a result of company-specific information.
> Dr. Nye makes no attempt to account for other possible causes, i.e., industry-specific news (for example, [31] if an increase in global sales of defense products due to an increase in U.S. presence in Iraq was announced during the class period), market-specific news (for example, if a 5% decline in stock prices occurred across the market due to an announcement of an expected drop in consumer sales in December), or other measurable [*978] macroeconomic variables (for example, the inflation rate and GDP).

Id. at 1273 (emphasis added).

[5] Dr. Phillips performed two versions of the "Before-and-After" analysis, one using a "convergence" model to predict future ticket prices, and one [29] using a "linear trend model" to predict future ticket prices. (See Phillips Expert Report, at ¶¶ 267-73). Both analyses are flawed for the reasons set forth below.

[6] See Phillips Rebuttal Report, at 39 (revised damages calculations).

[7] "A 'corrective disclosure' is a disclosure that reveals the fraud [allegedly perpetrated by defendants on a public company], or at least some aspect of the fraud, to the market." In re Remec Inc., 702 F. Supp. 2d at 1266-67.

Accordingly, the court held that Dr. Nye's expert opinion was not relevant and reliable as required under Rule 702. Id. at 1275.

> Where a study accounts for the "major factors" but not "all measurable variables," it is admissible. [Bazemore v. Friday, 478 U.S. 385, 400, 106 S. Ct. 3000, 92 L. Ed. 2d 315 (1986).] However, where significant variables that are quantifiable are omitted from a regression analysis, the study may become so incomplete that it is inadmissible as irrelevant and unreliable. Bickerstaff, 196 F.3d at 449. Because the burden of proving helpfulness and relevance rests on the proponent of a regression analysis, it is the proponent who must establish that other major factors have been accounted for in a regression analysis. Dr. Nye makes no attempt to do so [32] here, aside from his assertion/assumption that company-specific information is the only major factor.

Id. at 1273.

Notably, Dr. Phillips' "Before-and-After" analysis is significantly less robust than the analysis rejected by the Court in In re Remec Inc. Sec. Litig. There, the expert's analysis accounted for two independent variables (the "market index" and the "industry index"), in addition to the corrective disclosures that allegedly caused the declines in stock price. Here, Dr. Phillips' "Before-and-After" analysis accounts for no independent variables other than time. [8] Moreover, in In re Remec Inc. Sec. Litig., the expert observed stock declines after several corrective disclosures by the defendants, arguably supporting his hypothesis that the disclosures were, in fact, the cause of the declines. Here, only one "event" (i.e., the entry of Defendants into the market in 2000) was considered. Finally, as discussed in more detail below, Dr. Phillips improperly excluded data from the year 1999 from his analysis.

Thus, as in [33] In re Remec Inc. Sec. Litig., Dr. Phillips impermissibly assumes that any observed increase in average ticket prices after 2000 is due entirely to Defendants' anticompetitive conduct, without meaningfully testing this assumption. In particular, Dr. Phillips' analysis impermissibly fails to account for at least two major variables, both of which he has conceded could impact ticket prices: (1) changes in artist quality over the relevant time period; and (2) the emergence of digital downloading of music (using, e.g., Napster or iTunes) and its impact on the price of tickets for live concerts.

With respect to artist quality, Dr. Phillips testified in his deposition that he believes ticket prices have increased due to changes in the "quality" of rock concerts, and that this increase began prior to Defendants' entry into the market.

> I let the market self-adjust for quality. So when you look at the market, you can see prices even before the entry of Clear Channel going up. Even without any anticompetitive behavior in the market, I see prices going up, and I presume and I believe that's because of quality changes in rock and roll concerts. So I am saying that the self-adjustment took place in [34] the market.

(Phillips Depo., at 88:11-18). (See also Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 274 (referring to "the emergence of 'superstar' acts in the late 1990s that continued to exist throughout the class period here").

[*979] Nevertheless, Dr. Phillips' "Before-and-After" analyses fail to account for changes in concert quality during the relevant time period. In effect, Dr. Phillips simply assumes - without analysis - that to the extent concert quality changed from 1981 through 1998, concert quality continued to change from 2000 to 2006 at precisely the same rate. This is, of course, not necessarily true. For example, if the Rolling Stones and other highly popular acts began touring more heavily in 2000, one would expect average concert "quality" (and, consequently, average ticket prices) to increase. Moreover, given Dr. Phillips' stated belief that changes in concert quality affect ticket prices, such changes undoubtedly constitute a "major factor," which should have been accounted for under Bazemore and its progeny.

In his Rebuttal Report, Dr. Phillips incorporates the Consumer Price Index ("CPI") into his analysis. This minor modification does not affect the Court's reasoning.

With respect to the emergence of digital downloading, at least one industry observer has concluded that the increasing availability of music on the Internet is the "main reason" for [35] the recent increase in concert ticket prices.

> I suspect the main reason [for rising ticket prices] is that the growing ability of fans to download music free from the Web - legally or illegally - has cut into artists' revenues. Millions of people have downloaded music from Napster, Morpheus and KaZaA - and bought fewer records as a result. Music sales are plummeting, putting downward pressure on artists' royalties.
> In this environment, concerts take on a different meaning for artists and their managers. In pre-Napster days, concert prices were kept below their market rate to help sell albums, a complementary good. Now concert prices are set with an eye toward maximizing concert revenue.
> Bands have always had cadres of fans, whose loyalty conferred monopoly power. Yet they were reluctant to exploit this power by charging higher prices because they wanted to sell more albums. When revenue from albums began to dry up, it was natural for bands to raise concert prices.
> . . . .
> It is not that bands have become greedier; it is that the technology changed to make it less profitable to charge below-market prices for concerts.

(Dkt. 405-12, Alan B. Krueger, Economic Scene; Music sales slump, concert [36] ticket costs jump and rock fans pay the price, New York Times (October 17, 2002)).

In his deposition, Dr. Phillips conceded that digital downloading of music has, in fact, affected artists' approach to concert profitability.

> Q. What is Napster?
> A. Napster is a digital download music site back in the late '90s.
> Q. 1998, 1999, right?
> A. Yes.
> Q. Didn't that fundamentally change the pricing of concert tickets?
> MS. CONNOLLY: Objection to form.
> A. Possibly. You know, it's interesting. I don't—it's hard to sort out the impact of Napstar (sic) from iTunes, and in my mind, Napster really started the digital download movement, but I think iTunes really had more of an impact.
> Q. (BY MR. JACOBSON) So isn't it true before Napster and iTunes that artists performed in concerts to promote record sales, while after Napster and during iTunes, artists now release records to promote concert revenue?
> MS. CONNOLLY: Objection to form.
> Q. (BY MR. JACOBSON) Isn't that undeniably true?
> MS. CONNOLLY: Same objection.
> [*980] A. I don't know if it's true because here's what I think. I think that all along there's a relationship there where an artist will do a concert to promote their recordings and they will do recordings to promote [37] their concerts. It's a complementary relationship, but I think, you know, over time, given the popularity of digital downloads that the complementary relationship has changed. I'm not quite sure how it has changed, but it has changed, and artists are doing more concerts now because they have the opportunity to make more profit from the concert, more revenue from the concert relative to their recordings than I think before.
> Q. All right. So how does your Before-and-After analysis capture that impact?
> A. It captures the trend. I mean the trend begins, and it just maps it out.

(Phillips Depo., at 211:24 - 213:10).

Notably, the emergence of digitally-available music on the Internet (in approximately 1998/1999 according to Dr. Phillips) occurred immediately prior to 2000, the year in which Dr. Phillips concluded Defendants' entry into the market caused ticket prices to increase. This fundamental change in marketplace dynamics clearly qualifies as a "major factor," which should have been accounted for -in some fashion - in Dr. Phillips' analysis.

Finally, and perhaps most troubling to the Court, Dr. Phillips' "Before-and-After" analyses completely ignore the dramatic increase in ticket prices [38] that occurred in 1999, the year before Clear Channel entered the rock concert promotion market. To the Court's chagrin, Dr. Phillips simply excluded 1999 from his data set, and performed the "Before-and-After" analyses as though 1999 had never occurred.

Dr. Phillips explains that he excluded data from 1999 because "during this year SFX [whom Clear Channel ultimately acquired] was actively acquiring and consolidating concert promoters. In my opinion there was anticompetitive conduct taking place, and there were Department of Justice investigations in the company's conduct. Including 1999 would be using an anticompetitive year in the markets to predict future competitive prices beginning in 2001." (Phillips Rebuttal Report, at 36 (citing a September 3, 1998 Los Angeles Times article)).

This purported explanation for the exclusion of 1999 fails for several reasons. First, according to Dr. Phillips' own data, Defendants' market share in 1999 was 2.34% in the Denver market and 0.0% in the Los Angeles market. (See Phillips Rebuttal Report, Revised Exhs. 1, 2). [9] These de minimis market shares are insufficient as a matter of law to support monopolistic conduct. See 2 J. Von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation § 25.03 [3] [a], [39] at 25-37 (Matthew Bender 2d ed.) (hereinafter "Antitrust Laws and Trade")("[C]ourts have held that a low market share (generally below 40 percent) either precludes a finding of monopoly power or requires a finding of no monopoly power.").

Second, this explanation is directly contrary to Dr. Phillips' previous representations to this Court, based upon which the Court granted Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification. See In re Live Concert Antitrust Litig., 247 F.R.D. at 136 & n.32 ("At the hearing, Phillips testified that he could determine whether Clear Channel imposed a monopoly overcharge through a variety of methods. First, Phillips testified that he could use the relevant market [*981] in 1999 as a benchmark because Clear Channel possessed a small market presence in 1999 and its ticket prices were comparable with competitors' ticket prices in 1999. This approach is commonly referred to as the 'before-and-after' approach.") (citing Hearing Tr. at 39:25-40:19).

Finally, even if anticompetitive conduct was, in fact, occurring in 1999, this conduct would not justify the wholesale exclusion of 1999 from Dr. Phillips' analysis. [40] The law is clear that Dr. Phillips must account for major factors (such as allegedly anticompetitive conduct in 1999); he cannot simply ignore them and perform the analysis as if they did not exist.

The exclusion of 1999 undoubtedly had a significant impact on the results of Dr. Phillips' analysis. (See generally Ordover Expert Report, ¶ 192). As demonstrated in the chart below, the average ticket prices (for all concerts) in both Denver and Los Angeles increased dramatically in 1999. In Los Angeles, the change in average ticket price from 1998 to 1999 represented the largest one-year increase (30.11%) in the twenty-five years studied by Dr. Phillips. In fact, average ticket prices in Los Angeles actually decreased in 2000, the year that Dr. Phillips concludes Defendants' entry into the market caused ticket prices to rise to supracompetitive levels. Moreover, by excluding the significant price increase that occurred in 1999 from the "before" period, Dr. Phillips' model effectively builds the full amount of this increase into his estimated damages - notwithstanding the fact that this increase occurred before [41] Defendants' entry into the market. As such, the analysis is hopelessly flawed.

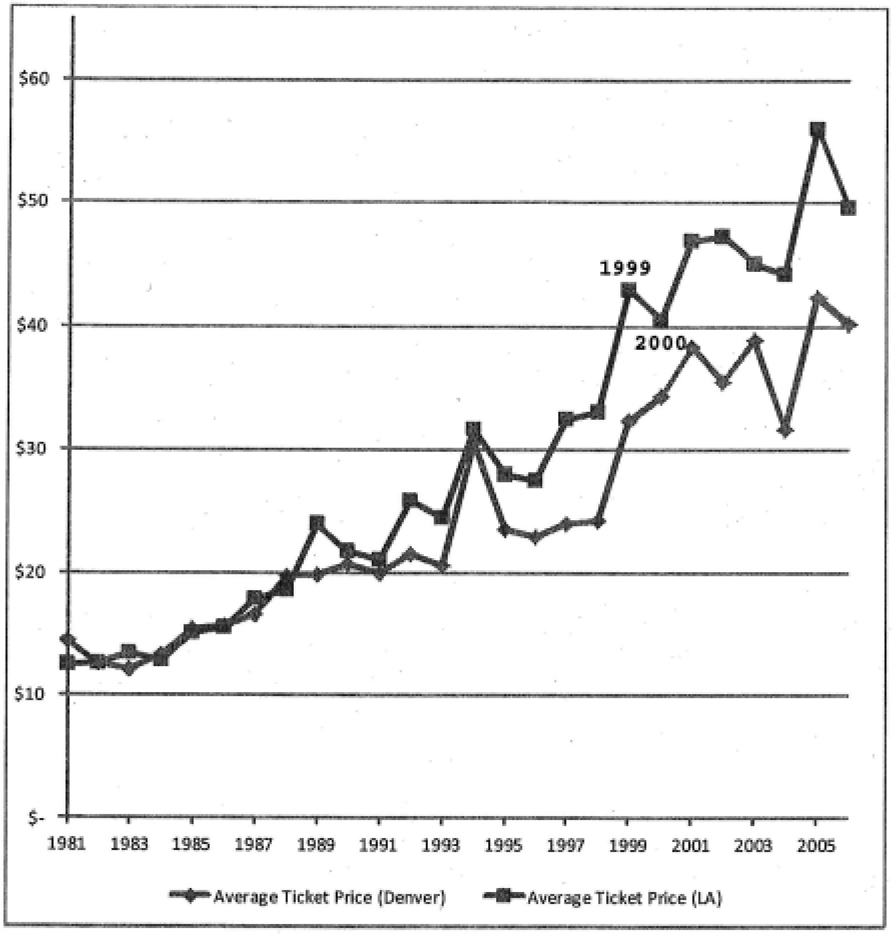
Source: Phillips Rebuttal Report, Appendix 1: Revised Exhibit 5 (Denver Market), Revised Exhibit 7 (Los Angeles Market).



[*982]

Plaintiffs have not met their burden of establishing that Dr. Phillips' "Before-and-After" approach to calculating damages satisfies the requirements of Rule 702. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Exclude this testimony.

d. "Pooled Sample" Analysis

In his Rebuttal Report, Dr. Phillips performed an additional "pooled sample" analysis. For purposes of this analysis, Dr. Phillips combined all concerts from 1981-2006 (including concerts in both Los Angeles and Denver). (See Phillips Rebuttal Report, at 39, 64-67). He then analyzed this data in order to test his hypothesis that a "structural break" occurred in 2000. According to Dr. Phillips, this analysis "allows for a structural break in the market starting in 2000." (Id. at 64).

This "pooled sample" analysis is fatally flawed for the same basic reason discussed above; namely, it fails to account for any "major factors" (other than Defendants' entry into the market in 2000) that could have [42] caused and/or contributed to an increase in ticket prices. Moreover, the "pooled sample" analysis fails even to consider whether a so-called "structural break" occurred in any year other than [*983] 2000. To the contrary, Dr. Phillips concedes that there may be "structural breaks" in other years; he simply did not test for them. (See Dkt. 405-4, Phillips Depo., at 450:8-452:8). Finally, the "pooled sample" analysis impermissibly combines two geographic markets (Denver and Los Angeles) in order to reach the desired result. While these MDL actions have been consolidated for the sake of judicial efficiency, this Court consistently has recognized that the antitrust analysis in each case must be done on a market-specific basis.

Plaintiffs have not met their burden of establishing that Dr. Phillips' "pooled sample" analysis satisfies the requirements of Rule 702. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Exclude this testimony.

e. Ticket Surcharges

In his Expert Report, Dr. Phillips opines that Defendants' monopoly power allowed them to add a variety of surcharges to the base price of tickets for the concerts they promoted. (See Phillips Expert Report, ¶¶ 276-82). "[W]hile Clear Channel [43] assesses these charges, for the most part its competitors do not." (Id. at ¶ 279). In particular, Dr. Phillips contends that Defendants charged "monopoly rent" in the form of: (1) facility maintenance fees ("FMF"); and (2) parking fees in certain Los Angeles venues, which were charged regardless of whether the purchaser actually parked at the venue in question. According to Dr. Phillips, the total damages attributable to these surcharges is $2,753,709.12 (Denver) and $12,043,947.41 (Los Angeles). (Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 282).

Defendants do not argue in their Daubert Motion that Dr. Phillips' testimony regarding these surcharges should be excluded; Defendants address these surcharges only in their Motions for Summary Judgment. Nor can the Court discern any obvious reason why this testimony should be excluded under Rule 702. The damage calculations appear to be straightforward, with no apparent methodological flaws that would render them unreliable. With respect to causation, Dr. Phillips' opinion that Defendants' monopoly power allowed them to assess the above-described surcharges generally appears to be within his area of expertise as an economist.

Accordingly, the Court will not [44] exclude Dr. Phillips' damages calculations based on the ticket surcharges assessed by Defendants under Rule 702.

2. Definition of the Relevant Market

Dr. Phillips opines that for purposes of Plaintiffs' antitrust claims, the relevant product market is comprised of "live rock music concerts." (See Phillips Expert Report, ¶¶ 40-64). Defendants contend that this opinion should be excluded under Rule 702, because Dr. Phillips failed to utilize a reliable methodology in defining this purported market. As a result, Defendants contend that Dr. Phillips' proposed market definition is both under-inclusive and over-inclusive; under-inclusive in that it improperly excludes concerts that are reasonable substitutes for concerts included in Dr. Phillips' definition (e.g., concerts by certain "pop" artists); over-inclusive in that it improperly includes concerts that are not reasonable substitutes for one another (e.g., "classic rock" concerts, which are not reasonable substitutes for "heavy metal" concerts). (See Motion, at 16).

For the reasons set forth below, the Court agrees that Plaintiffs have failed to meet their burden of establishing that Dr. Phillips' proposed definition of the relevant product [45] market is sufficiently reliable and helpful to the trier of fact to warrant inclusion under Rule 702 and Daubert.

a. Applicable Substantive Law

"For antitrust purposes, a 'market is composed of products that have reasonable [*984] interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced - price, use and qualities considered.'" Paladin Assocs. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1163 (9th Cir. 2003) (quoting Int'l Boxing Club, Inc. v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 250, 79 S. Ct. 245, 3 L. Ed. 2d 270 (1959)). "The product market includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand." Oltz v. St. Peter's Cmty. Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1446 (9th Cir. 1988).

> In standard antitrust analysis, the court considers both "demand elasticity" and "supply elasticity" in determining whether anticompetitive effects are likely. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1436. In other words, courts determine the degree to which price increases will cause marginal buyers to turn to other products or marginal suppliers to increase output of the product.

United States v. Oracle Corp., 331 F. Supp. 2d 1098, 1118 (N.D. Cal. 2004).

As this Court observed in its previous Order Granting Class Certification, [46] calculating the cross-elasticity of demand is often an economist's first step in defining the relevant product market. See In re Live Concert Antitrust Litig., 247 F.R.D. at 123. Nevertheless, while calculating the cross-elasticity of demand (and supply) is the preferred methodology, it is not an absolute requirement. In Independent Ink, Inc. v. Trident, Inc., 210 F. Supp. 2d 1155 (C.D. Cal. 2002), for example, the court observed that in order to define the relevant product market:

> Plaintiff must proffer "market data, figures or other relevant material adequately describing the nature, cost, usage, or other features of competing products" to determine the bounds of the relevant market.

Id. at 1170-71 (quoting Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 669 F. Supp. 998, 1018 (E.D. Cal. 1987), aff'd, 929 F.2d 1404 (9th Cir. 1991)).

> Reliable measures of supply and demand elasticities provide the most accurate estimates of relevant markets. However, it is ordinarily quite difficult to measure cross-elasticities of supply and demand accurately. Therefore, it is usually necessary to consider other factors that can serve as useful surrogates for cross-elasticity data.

U.S. Anchor Mfg. v. Rule Indus., 7 F.3d 986, 995 (11th Cir. 1993) [47] (quoting International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 104 F.T.C. 280, 409 (1984)).

In the seminal Brown Shoe decision, the Supreme Court identified several "practical indicia," which it concluded could be relied upon to determine the boundaries of a product submarket for purposes of antitrust analysis.

> The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. However, within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes. The boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors.

Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962).

Although Brown Shoe involved the challenge of a merger under Section 7 of the [*985] Clayton Act, courts have recognized that its submarket analysis is equally applicable to claims brought under [48] the Sherman Act.

> Although Brown Shoe involved a claim under Clayton Act § 7, its submarket analysis is applicable in Sherman Act cases. See Greyhound, 559 F.2d at 494 n. 7. Such applicability follows because the same considerations essential to line of commerce analysis under the Clayton Act are essential to market analysis under the Sherman Act. Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 512 F.2d 1264, 1270-71 (9th Cir. 1975).

Thurman Industries, Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1375 n.1 (9th Cir. 1989).

Moreover, while the Court in Brown Shoe was evaluating the definition of a product "submarket" (where the relevant product "market" already had been defined), the Ninth Circuit has observed: "Because every market that encompasses less than all products is, in a sense, a submarket, these [Brown Shoe] factors are relevant even in determining the primary market to be analyzed for antitrust purposes." Olin Corp. v. FTC, 986 F.2d 1295, 1299 (9th Cir. 1993) (citing United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 449-55, 84 S. Ct. 1738, 12 L. Ed. 2d 953 (1964)).

> "[S]ubmarket indicia" are best viewed as "proxies for cross-elasticities [of supply and demand], and thus the identification of a submarket [49] is in principle no different than the identification of a relevant market." This is to say that nothing would be lost by deleting the word "submarket" from the antitrust lexicon.

2A Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ¶ 533, at 257 (quoting Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 792 F.2d 210, 218 n.4, 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142 (D.C. Cir. 1986)).

While the Ninth Circuit has acknowledged that the practical indicia identified in Brown Shoe are "relevant" to the definition of the primary product market, see Olin, 986 F.2d at 1299, it has never expressly held that a plaintiff (and, more specifically, a plaintiff's expert economist) can define the relevant product market exclusively by reference to these "practical indicia." This case provides an additional wrinkle, in that Dr. Phillips effectively bases his proposed product market definition entirely upon his qualitative assessment of the market, without any supporting quantitative economic analysis. [11] Even where [*986] an economist is unable to calculate the cross-elasticity of demand (and/or supply), at least two of the practical indicia identified in Brown Shoe — "distinct prices" and "sensitivity to price changes" — would appear to lend themselves well to [50] a quantitative approach.

The Court has had some difficulty in locating cases addressing the unique circumstances presented in this case. Nevertheless, for purposes of the instant motion, the Court assumes [52] that an expert economist may, under appropriate circumstances, define the relevant product market through an entirely qualitative assessment of the "practical indicia" identified in Brown Shoe. See generally Nobody in Particular Presents, Inc. v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, Inc., 311 F. Supp. 2d 1048, 1082 (D. Colo. 2004) (collecting cases in which courts held that a plaintiff may define the relevant product market without calculating the cross-elasticity of demand, so long as sufficient evidence of other indicia of reasonable interchangeability is introduced).

Under these circumstances, however, the Court will closely scrutinize Dr. Phillips' proposed product market definition in order to ensure that his analysis is sufficiently robust to warrant admission under Rule 702 and Daubert. See generally Grason Elec. Co. v. Sacramento Mun. Utility Dist., 571 F. Supp. 1504, 1521 (E.D. Cal. 1983) ("As the defendant fairly observes, such a determination [of the relevant product market] generally requires a detailed examination of 'market data, figures or other relevant material adequately describing the nature, cost, usage or other features of competing products.'") (quoting Morton Buildings, Inc. v. Morton Buildings, Inc., 531 F.2d 910, 919 (8th Cir. 1976)) [53] (emphasis added).

b. Dr. Phillips' Definition of the Relevant Product Market

Here, the Court finds that Dr. Phillips' proffered definition of the relevant product market is inadmissible for two independent, albeit related, reasons. First, Dr. Phillips failed to satisfy Rule 702's requirements in formulating his

---

Dr. Phillips has, of course, performed a number of quantitative analyses, several of which are discussed earlier in this Order. Notably, however, none of these analyses address the fundamental question of what products should be included in the relevant market. Instead, they primarily relate to the calculation of Defendants' market share (presuming the product market is defined as Dr. Phillips proposes) and damages. (See generally Phillips Expert Report, Exhs. 1-10; cf. id. at ¶¶ 50-62 (defining the relevant product market without reference to quantitative economic analysis)).

During his deposition, Dr. Phillips conceded, "I didn't look at any particular cross-price elasticity analyses. I looked at the qualitative evidence in defining the market," but went on to state "I did look at the prices of Clear Channel and their sales and tracked their prices and sales as part of my definition of the market." (Phillips Depo., at 373:8-13). In support, Dr. Phillips cited Exhibits 1 and 2 of his Expert Report. (Id. at 376:14-15). These Exhibits are not, however, analyses of what products should be included in the relevant product market. Instead, they appear to be precisely [51] what they are entitled, namely, analyses of "[Denver/Los Angeles] Rock Concert Ticket Prices and Sales, Clear Channel Market Shares and Damage Calculations." When analyzing and defining the relevant product market in his Expert and Rebuttal Reports, Dr. Phillips does not rely on either of these Exhibits. (See Expert Report, at ¶¶ 50-62; Rebuttal Report, at 1-3; 7-9). As one would expect, Dr. Phillips instead relies on these Exhibits to support his opinions regarding Defendants' market share, monopoly power, and damages calculations.

Accordingly, Dr. Phillips' unsupported statements at his deposition, indicating that Exhibits 1 and 2 support his proposed product market definition, do not transform his admittedly qualitative evaluation of the relevant product market into a quantitative analysis. See Kumho, 526 U.S. at 157 ("[N]othing in either Daubert or the Federal Rules of Evidence requires a district court to admit opinion evidence that is connected to existing data only by the ipse dixit of the expert.").

definition of the relevant product market; i.e., in determining that the relevant product market is comprised of "live rock music concerts." Second, Dr. Phillips failed to utilize a reliable methodology to populate this market as defined; i.e., in determining which performers qualify as "rock" artists, and thus which concerts qualify as "rock" concerts, under his proposed definition.

(1) Definition of the Relevant Market

In formulating his proposed definition of the relevant product market ("live rock music concerts"), Dr. Phillips: (1) failed reliably to apply his chosen methodology to the facts of this case; (2) failed adequately to consider the "practical indicia" identified in Brown Shoe; and (3) failed to consider the cross-elasticity of supply. The Court will address each of these deficiencies in Dr. Phillips' analysis in turn.

(a) The SSNIP Test

In his Expert Report, Dr. Phillips [54] states that in defining the relevant product market, he utilized the methodology set forth [*987] in the U.S. Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission's Horizontal Merger Guidelines, issued August 19, 2010 (the "Horizontal Merger Guidelines"). The Court will refer to this methodology as the "SSNIP" methodology. [12] As described by Dr. Phillips in his Expert Report, the SSNIP methodology requires an iterative approach. "In order to define a relevant market, economists begin with the narrowest definition of a product (or product group) and expand that definition until all reasonable substitutes are included." (Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 41 (emphasis in original)); see also 2 Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade, § 24.04[2], at 24-69, 24-70 (describing methodology set forth in the 1992 Guidelines).

As a general matter, the Court assumes that the SSNIP methodology may, under appropriate circumstances, provide an acceptable framework with which to define a relevant product market for purposes of antitrust analysis under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. See generally 2 Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade, § 24.02, at 24-34 ("The Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission have issued a set of guidelines describing how those agencies will review transactions generally and define markets specifically when considering a proposed combination. The guidelines do not deviate from judicial precedent but attempt to provide a simplified approach. These guidelines are not binding on the courts."); see also Thurman Industries, 875 F.2d at 1375 n.1 (noting Brown Shoe's analysis of the relevant market under Section 7 of the Clayton Act (i.e., in a merger case) is applicable in Sherman Act cases).

After careful review of Dr. Phillips' Expert Report, however, it is apparent to the Court that Dr. Phillips did not reliably apply the SSNIP methodology to the facts of this case. Accordingly, Dr. Phillips' market definition must be excluded. [56] See Rule 702(d) (expert testimony is admissible only where "the expert has reliably applied the principles and methods to the facts of the case.").

Here, Dr. Phillips did not employ the iterative approach called for under the SSNIP methodology. Instead, his market analysis both started and ended with the purported market for live "rock" music concerts. Dr. Phillips never meaningfully considered any narrower definition of the market, nor did he ever "expand that definition until all reasonable substitutes [were] included" as required under his own formulation of the SSNIP methodology. See id. In his deposition, for example, Dr. Phillips conceded that he never specifically evaluated any potential product markets narrower than his proposed market of live rock music concerts.

See Horizontal Merger Guidelines, at 9 ("Specifically, the test requires that a hypothetical profit-maximizing firm, not subject to price regulation, that was the only present and future seller of those products ("hypothetical monopolist") likely would impose at least a small but significant and non-transitory increase in price ('SSNIP') on at least one product in the market, including [55] at least one product sold by one of the merging firms.").

Q. What did you do to apply the smallest market principle in this case?

A. . . .[M]y smallest market principle stopped at the music genre rock.
Q. You would agree, wouldn't you, that there are subgenres of rock?
A. There are.
. . . .

Q. What did you do to test whether applying the smallest market principle one could determine a market under your own methodology that is [*988] smaller than rock, such as a subgenre?

[Objection to [57] form]
A. It's subjective in the sense that rock concerts generally substitute for one another. . . .

(Phillips Depo., at 123:17 - 124:17 (emphasis added)).

Thus, instead of starting with the "narrowest definition of a product (or product group)" - e.g., an identifiable "subgenre" of rock - and expanding that definition until he was satisfied that all reasonable substitutes were included, Dr. Phillips simply started his analysis with the assumption that "rock" concerts constituted the relevant market, and looked for corroborating evidence without meaningfully testing this assumption. See Claar v. Burlington N. R.R., 29 F.3d 499, 502-03 (9th Cir. 1994) ("Coming to a firm conclusion first and then doing research to support it is the antithesis of [the proper application of the scientific method under Daubert].").

As a result, instead of answering the critical question: "What products comprise the relevant market?" Dr. Phillips, analysis devolved into a determination of: "Which performers qualify as 'rock' musicians?"

Q. To populate your relevant market and to exclude those outside of it, it was purely and simply a determination of, quote, whether an artist was, quote, rock or not, correct?
[Objection]

A. [58] That was the main determinant, rock —
Q. What else was there?
A. —did they do rock music.
Q. What else was there?
A. That was the determination. It was rock, yeah.
Q. Okay.
A. Were they rock or not. If they were rock, they were in the market. If not, they were out of the market.

(Phillips Depo., at 116:24 - 117:14).

This approach impermissibly predetermined the results of Dr. Phillips' analysis; i.e., that the relevant product market is comprised of live music concerts by "rock" artists. See generally In re Remec Inc. Sec. Litig., 702 F. Supp. 2d at 1273 (expert analysis inadmissible where expert's methodology "predetermines the results of his analysis.").

Dr. Phillips' failure even to consider the possibility of a narrower product market is also contrary to the approach outlined in the Horizontal Merger Guidelines, upon which Dr. Phillips purported to rely, which stresses the importance of defining the relevant market as narrowly as possible.

> Market shares of different products in narrowly defined markets are more likely to capture the relative competitive significance of these products, and often more accurately reflect competition between close substitutes. As a result, properly defined antitrust [59] markets often exclude some substitutes to which some customers might turn in the face of a price increase even if such substitutes provide alternatives for those customers.

(Horizontal Merger Guidelines, at 8).

In evaluating Dr. Phillips' market analysis, the Court's focus is exclusively on Dr. Phillips' methodology, not his results. See GE v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136, 146, 118 S. Ct. 512, 139 L. Ed. 2d 508 (1997) ("[T]he 'focus, of course, must be solely on principles and methodology, not on the conclusions that they generate. . . . [But a] court may conclude that there is simply too great an analytical gap between the data and the opinion proffered.") (citations omitted). Here, the Court finds that Dr. Phillips' failure to analyze, in a meaningful way, the possibility of a narrower or broader product market renders his purported application [*989] aof the SSNIP methodology unreliable under Rule 702(d).

(b) Brown Shoe Analysis

In addition to the methodological deficiencies discussed above, the Court also finds that Dr. Phillips' analysis of the relevant product market does not adequately consider the "practical indicia" identified in Brown Shoe, and fails to satisfy Rule 702's requirements on this basis as well.

As noted above, Dr. [60] Phillips' failure to calculate the cross-elasticity of demand (or supply) is not necessarily fatal to his proposed market definition. Further, the Court has assumed that (under appropriate circumstances) an expert economist may define the relevant product market based entirely on a qualitative assessment of the "practical indicia" identified in Brown Shoe, i.e.: (1) industry or public recognition of the market as a separate economic entity; (2) the product's peculiar characteristics and uses; (3) unique production facilities; (4) distinct customers; (5) distinct prices; (6) sensitivity to price changes; and (7) specialized vendors. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325.

The existence of three or four of these indicia has been held "sufficient to delineate a submarket[.]" 2 Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade, § 24.02[2][a], at 24-86.

(i) Analysis Based on a Single Factor

Here, Dr. Phillips' analysis of the relevant market rests, for all intents and purposes, on a single Brown Shoe practical indicium: "industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity." Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325. As described by Dr. Phillips in his Expert Report:

> [T]he collective perceptions of buyers [61] and sellers and other persons close to the industry must be relied upon to make a determination of the relevant market. Specifically, if participants in and agents close to the industry perceive goods to be close substitutes in the sense defined by the Merger Guidelines, economists are inclined to place the goods in the same market.

(Phillips Expert Report, ¶ 43 (emphasis in original omitted)).

Even assuming that this statement is correct (and the "collective perceptions of buyers and sellers and other persons close to the industry" support Dr. Phillips' proposed definition of the relevant product market), [13] the

For purposes of this analysis, the Court accepts Dr. Phillips' conclusion that there is industry/public recognition of the purported market for "live rock music concerts" (i.e., the first Brown Shoe practical indicium is satisfied). Nevertheless, the Court notes that the industry materials upon which [62] Dr. Phillips purports to rely in reaching this conclusion are far from consistent.

For example, the website www.allmusic.com, upon which Dr. Phillips relied in order to classify various artists by music genre, (see Phillips Depo., at 140-41), does not identify "rock" as a stand-alone music category, but instead lists an umbrella category for "pop" and "rock" combined (i.e., "pop/rock"). The website further identifies a number of different sub-genres of "pop/rock" music. (See http://www.allmusic.com/explore/genre/pop-rock-d20).

Similarly, Dr. Phillips cites a June 8, 2009 USA Music Preferences report for the proposition that "there is a well-defined market for the promotion of rock concerts" and "rock music appeals to very different audiences than [do other types of music.]"). (See Phillips Rebuttal Report, at 7 & n.17 (citing David McLaughlin, USA Music Preferences, Appendix 1: Music Preferences in the U.S. 1982-2002 (June 8, 2009), available at http://www.scribd.com/doc/16203729/Usa-Music- fundamental flaw in Dr. [*990] Phillips' analysis is that he goes no further. In focusing on industry/public recognition of the purported market for live rock music concerts, Dr. Phillips either ignores, or addresses in cursory fashion, the remaining six Brown Shoe practical indicia.

The Court briefly addresses each of these additional Brown Shoe practical indicia below.

(a) Peculiar Characteristics and Uses

The closest that Dr. Phillips' Report comes to identifying a peculiar characteristic or use of "live rock music concerts" is quoting, without further discussion, [64] the dictionary definition of "rock music." (See Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 50 ("Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary (p. 1020) defines rock music as 'popular music played on electronically amplified instruments and characterized by a persistent heavily accented beat, [with] much repetition of simple phrases . . . .'")). The mere quotation of a dictionary definition - absent more - simply does not constitute meaningful expert economic analysis of this factor. Moreover, Dr. Phillips' Expert Report fails to consider whether the above-quoted definition applies exclusively to "rock" music, or whether it accurately characterizes a broader category of music (e.g., "rock/pop") or whether it would, in contrast, better characterize one or more sub-genres of "rock" (e.g., "classic rock" or "heavy metal").

Dr. Phillips' failure adequately to consider this factor is noteworthy in that "'peculiar characteristics and uses,' although not necessary to the finding of a submarket, is the factor most often cited by courts in cases where product submarkets are demonstrated." 2 Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade, § 24.02[2][c], at 24-71.

(b) Unique Production Facilities

In the section of Dr. Phillips' [65] Expert Report entitled "The Relevant Market," Dr. Phillips does not discuss the presence (or absence) of any purportedly "unique production facilities" for live rock music concerts. (see Phillips Expert Report, at ¶¶ 40-64). In the preceding section, entitled "Production Inputs for Live Concerts," Dr. Phillips opines that there are three "production inputs" for live music concerts in general: (1) music talent (i.e., the music artist(s) performing at the concert); (2) radio promotion (i.e., advertising and promotion for the concert on one or more radio stations); and (3) venue (i.e., the physical location at which the concert is held). (Id. at ¶¶ 28-39). Dr. Phillips, however, describes these production inputs as necessary components for the promotion of all live music concerts. (See id.). He does not argue that these production inputs are unique to the purported market for live rock music concerts, such that they support his proposed definition of the relevant product market under Brown Shoe. (See generally Phillips Expert Report, at ¶¶ 28-39 (discussing "production inputs"); ¶¶ 50-62 (discussing product market); ¶¶ 239-47 (discussing barriers to entry)).

The Court further addresses [66] the three "production inputs" identified by Dr. Phillips below.

[*991] (i) Venue

Preferences)). This Report, however, does not analyze "rock" as a stand-alone category. Instead, it divides "rock" into two categories — "Classic Rock/Oldies" and "Rock/Heavy Metal" — each of which [63] the Report analyzes independently.

To reiterate, the Court does not cite these inconsistent industry definitions of various music genres in an attempt to refute Dr. Phillips' conclusion that there is industry/public recognition of the purported market for "live rock music concerts." Instead, the Court notes these inconsistencies because they underscore the importance of performing a thorough analysis of the practical indicia identified in Brown Shoe, which (as discussed below) Dr. Phillips failed to do. See generally Grason, 571 F. Supp. at 1521 (determination of the relevant product market requires a "detailed examination" of the relevant materials). In other words, the Court could envision a scenario in which the evidence supporting a single Brown Shoe indicium was so overwhelming that it (at least arguably) would obviate the need for meaningful analysis of the remaining indicia. This is not such a case.

With respect to venue, Dr. Phillips expressly conceded in his deposition that this "production input" is not unique to live rock music concerts.

> Q. Isn't it true that all promoters use the same facilities to promote rock concerts as they do country and jazz concerts?
> A. I would say so. There's music venues, and it doesn't really depend on the music.

(Phillips Depo., at 151:20-24).

(ii) Radio Promotion

With respect to the radio "production input," Dr. Phillips notes in his Expert Report that radio stations often play a "mix" of different types of music, (see, e.g., Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 53 ("there are formats like contemporary Hit Radio (CHR) which play a mix of rock and popular music")), [14] and that there is "cross-promotion" among radio stations, meaning that "rock" concerts may be promoted on radio stations that play non-"rock" music. (See Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 81 ("A fifth Clear Channel station, KFMD (KHIH) is a top 40, contemporary hits station, and cross-promotes with rock music concerts, and could be added to the above list [of radio stations relevant to the purported 'rock' market]")).

While Dr. Phillips expressly excludes "pop" music concerts from his definition of the relevant product market, (See Dkt. 405, Yen Decl., Exh. 17 (defining concerts as either "rock", "pop", or "other")), Dr. Phillips expressly includes "pop" radio stations (i.e., "contemporary hits" stations) in his analysis of the "radio" production input. (See, e.g., Phillips Expert Report at ¶ 88 ("This list [of "rock" radio stations] specifically includes CHR formats."); id. at ¶¶ 81, 89-90).

(iii) Music Talent

Similarly, when evaluating Clear Channel's allegedly anticompetitive conduct in his Expert Report, Dr. Phillips treats "rock" and "pop" artists as functionally interchangeable. When discussing Clear Channel's alleged control of the relevant "production inputs", for example, Dr. Phillips states:

> When promoting concerts, [Clear Channel] owns or controls radio inputs, venues, and much of its music talent through long-term exclusive contracts with artists such as the Rolling Stones, Madonna, U2, Jay-Z, Shakira, Nickelback and the Jonas Brothers.

(Id. at ¶ 27). While Dr. Phillips categorizes [68] The Rolling Stones, Madonna, U2 and Nickelback as "rock" artists, he classifies both Shakira and the Jonas Brothers as "pop" artists, and Jay-Z as "other". (See Dkt. 405, Yen Decl., Exh. 17). Nevertheless, Dr. Phillips refers to these non-"rock" artists as "production inputs" in precisely the same manner as he refers to "rock" artists. (See also, e.g., Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 126 (discussing allegedly anticompetitive behavior in connection with "Wango Tango[,] an annual day-long concert festival promoted by Clear Channel's KIIS FM radio. The festival invites a collection of pop and rock artists to perform free of charge at large venues in Southern California")).

Dr. Phillips does not base his definition of the relevant product market on any purported uniqueness of production facilities. (See Phillips Expert Report, at ¶¶ 40-62). Moreover, to the extent that [*992] Dr. Phillips' Expert Report can be said to address this issue, it does so in a manner contrary to his ultimate conclusion that the relevant market is comprised only of live rock music concerts. Cf. 2 Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade, § 24.02[2][f], at 24-76, 24-

---

See also [67] Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 76 (discussing various radio stations "that often play high percentages of rock music").

77 ("Evidence that a product . . . requires facilities [69] or technology markedly different from that used to produce its alleged substitutes supports the existence of a submarket.") (emphasis added).

(c) Distinct Prices and Specialized Vendors

With respect to "distinct prices" and "specialized vendors," Dr. Phillips does not address these indicia as they relate to his proposed product market definition of live rock music concerts. He addresses them only as to live music concerts generally.

> It is also my opinion live music concerts are separate products from other live events or other types of entertainment. They have several features distinct from performances that are filmed or purely audio . . . . [C]oncerts are distinct from movies, videos, and audio recordings. ... In addition, there are distinct prices for concert tickets. . . . And there are specialized vendors. The major promoters — Clear Channel and Anschutz Entertainment Group (AEG) — do not sell or rent video or audio recordings except as an adjunct to specific concerts.

(Phillips Expert Report, at ¶¶ 60-61).

(d) Sensitivity to price changes

Dr. Phillips does not address this factor.

(e) Distinct Customers

The only portion of Dr. Phillips' market analysis that arguably addresses the issue [70] of distinct customers for "live rock music concerts" states: "[According to a survey by the U.S. Census Bureau,] '[s]even in ten young adults (age 18 to 24) say they like rock, compared with only 7 percent of adults aged 75 and older.'" (Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 52). [15]

The mere observation that younger people are more likely to listen to rock music, however, is insufficient — on its own — to constitute meaningful expert analysis of this factor. As a preliminary matter, the cited survey appears to address general music listening patterns (e.g., when listening to music on the radio); it says nothing about live concert attendance, which is the relevant issue in this case. Moreover, as with all Brown Shoe indicia, the purpose of the "distinct customers" inquiry is to distinguish the products in the proposed market (or submarket) from potential substitutes. Here, however, Dr. [71] Phillips does not purport to identify any "distinct" customer base for live rock music concerts, nor does he make any attempt to differentiate any such customer base from that of potentially larger markets (e.g., the market for live "rock/pop" music concerts), or smaller markets (e.g., the market for live "classic rock" or "heavy metal" concerts). [16]

The Report similarly states: "A survey conducted for the National Endowment for the Arts by the U.S. Census Bureau found that, for example, 'Country audiences have a distinct demographic profile, and they tend not to cross over into other types of music.'" (Id.; see also Phillips Rebuttal Report, at 7 & n.17).

16

In his Rebuttal Report, Dr. Phillips purports to bolster his analysis based on discussions with his students regarding their music listening patterns. (See Phillips Rebuttal Report, at 8). The definition of the relevant product market cannnot, however, properly be based on such "limited anecdotal evidence." Metro Indus. v. Sammi Corp., 82 F.3d 839, 848 (9th Cir. 1996) (quoting Vollrath Co. v. Sammi Corp., 9 F.3d 1455, 1462 (9th Cir. 1993)).

(f) Brown Shoe Practical Indicia: Conclusion

The Court has found minimal case law addressing the application of Rule 702's [*993] requirements to an expert economist's proposed product market definition based on an analysis of the practical indicia identified in Brown Shoe. In related contexts, however, several courts have held that, in the absence of additional economic analysis, the relevant product market [72] cannot be defined solely by reference to a single Brown Shoe factor. See 2 Kalinowsi, Antitrust Laws and Trade, § 24.02[2][b], at 24-70 ("Industry recognition of a separate market, alone, does not suffice to establish a submarket."); id. at § 24.02[2][a], at 24-67 (the presence of three or four Brown Shoe factors is sufficient to define a market); see also IT&T v. General Tel. & Elecs. Corp., 518 F.2d 913, 932 (9th Cir. 1975) (holding district court clearly erred in finding a valid submarket based on only two Brown Shoe indicia: industry recognition (including statements by the defendant itself) and distinct customers).

While not directly on point, the Court finds these cases helpful by analogy. In particular, the Court finds that Dr. Phillips' purported analysis of the relevant product market — which focuses almost entirely on a single Brown Shoe factor (industry/public recognition), with little relevant analysis of the remaining six factors [17] — is neither sufficiently reliable nor sufficiently helpful to the trier of fact to satisfy Rule 702's requirements.

(ii) Economic Significance

Moreover, an indispensable component of any market analysis based on the practical indicia identified in Brown Shoe is an evaluation of the economic significance of these indicia.

> Whether or not a court is justified in carving out a submarket depends ultimately on whether the factors which distinguish one purported submarket from another are "economically significant" in terms of the alleged anticompetitive effect.

IT&T, 518 F.2d at 932. Here, Dr. Phillips not only failed meaningfully to consider any Brown Shoe indicia other than industry/public recognition, but he also failed to provide any meaningful discussion as to whether and how any such indicia are "economically significant" in this particular case. Instead, Dr. Phillips' analysis of the relevant product market essentially boils down to: plenty [74] of people (including consumers and industry participants) recognize "rock" as a type of music; therefore, the relevant market in this case is comprised of "live rock music concerts." A key ingredient missing from Dr. Phillips' Expert Report, however, is economic analysis (be it quantitative or qualitative) tying these statements by industry observers to Dr. Phillips' ultimate conclusion that the relevant market is comprised of "live rock music concerts."

(c) Cross-Elasticity of Supply

When defining the relevant product market, Dr. Phillips admittedly failed to consider cross-elasticity of supply.

> Q. How did you apply the principle of cross-elasticity of supply in your analysis? It's not mentioned in your report, is it?
> A. No, it's not.
> Q. So how did you apply that principle in this case?
> A. Yeah, I didn't give it much thought.

As discussed above, to the extent that Dr. Phillips addressed the remaining six Brown Shoe factors, he did so primarily by [73] reference to product markets (i.e., the market for all live music concerts, or "rock/pop" music concerts) other than what he contends is the relevant product market in this case (i.e., live rock music concerts). Thus, to the extent that this mismatched analysis is relevant to Dr. Phillips' proposed product market definition, it undermines his ultimate conclusion.

[*994] (Phillips Depo, at 150:21-151:3). "But defining a market on the basis of demand considerations alone is erroneous. A reasonable market definition must also be based on 'supply elasticity.'" Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1436 (9th Cir. 1995) (internal citations omitted).

In some respects, the "unique production facilities" indicium identified [75] in Brown Shoe can be viewed as a proxy for the cross-elasticity of supply.

> [I]f two products can be manufactured with the same or similar equipment, i.e., a manufacturer of one can shift with little expense to production of the other, this is evidence of "cross-elasticity of supply.' Evidence of cross-elasticity of supply or production flexibility may be adduced to support a broad market definition.

2 Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade, § 24.02[2][f], at 24-77.

As discussed above, however, to the extent that Dr. Phillips considered "unique production facilities," he did so in a manner that undermined his proposed market definition (by focusing on "production inputs" common to all live music concerts — or in some cases common to "rock" and "pop" concerts — as opposed to production inputs unique to live rock music concerts).

(d) Definition of the Relevant Market: Conclusion

Dr. Phillips' analysis of the relevant product market: (1) fails to comport with Dr. Phillips' chosen methodology (i.e., the "SSNIP" methodology); (2) is effectively predicated on the analysis of a single Brown Shoe factor; and (3) fails to consider the cross-elasticity of supply. Accordingly, the Court finds that this [76] purported definition of the relevant product market is neither sufficiently reliable nor sufficiently helpful to the trier of fact to warrant admission under Rule 702.

(2) Populating the Relevant Market

The Court's discussion in the preceding section focused on Dr. Phillips' opinion that the relevant product market is comprised of "live rock music concerts." This section addresses the means by which Dr. Phillips populated this purported market; i.e., his determination of which artists qualify as "rock" artists and, therefore, which concerts qualify as "rock" concerts, such that they should be included in the market as defined by Dr. Phillips.

As set forth in more detail below, to the extent that Dr. Phillips relied on his own subjective opinion in order to determine which performers qualify as "rock" artists, he is not qualified to make this determination. Further, to the extent that Dr. Phillips purported to rely on "industry information" in order to categorize the artists at issue, he did not utilize a reliable methodology for interpreting and applying this information. Under either view, this testimony is inadmissible under Rule 702 and Daubert.

(a) Opinions Outside of Dr. Phillips" [77] Area of Expertise

In connection with his analysis of the relevant product market, Dr. Phillips made a concert-by-concert determination of whether the performer(s) at issue qualified as "rock" artists. Dr. Phillips, however, has no expertise in this area. Nor can the Court discern any meaningful application of Dr. Phillips' expertise as an economist to these determinations.

When discussing his methodology for defining the relevant market, Dr. Phillips noted, "Indeed, some of what I did was similar to what Live Nation Music Analyst Dan Condon testified he did when his work called for him to categorize a particular artist by genre: namely, when a particular artist was not already categorized by the company, he looked to industry [*995] sources like Pollstar." [18] (Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 62, n.85 (emphasis added)). Similarly, when asked in his deposition, "Isn't a juror perfectly capable of determining whether Paul McCartney is rock?" Dr. Phillips replied: "Yes, and in fact, the juror may be part of the fan base that has preferences for Paul McCartney or The Rolling Stones or someone else." [19] (Phillips Depo., at 128:22 - 129:2).

Thus, in determining whether each performer qualified as a "rock" artist, Dr. Phillips was, in his own words, doing the work of a "music analyst" (or perhaps a lay juror). He was not relying on his experience and expertise as an economist. See 4 J. [79] McLaughlin, Weinstein's Federal Evidence § 702.04[6], at 702-68.9 (Matthew Bender 2d ed. 2011) ("[E]ven though a proposed witness might possess credentials to render some expert opinions, the trial court may, and perhaps must, exclude on grounds of disqualification any testimony that extends beyond the witness's demonstrated expertise.").

(b) Unreliable Methodology

Plaintiffs argue that in categorizing the music artists at issue, Dr. Phillips simply relied on the types of materials typically used by experts in his field (consumer surveys, trade publications, etc.). The Court recognizes, as a general matter, that economists are entitled to rely on relevant trade publications and comparable industry materials when conducting an economic analysis of a particular industry. Here, however, the manner in which Dr. Phillips utilized the industry publications upon which he relied - and the corresponding lack of any discernable economic analysis of these materials - render his categorization of music artists unreliable under Rule 702(c) (expert testimony is admissible only where it "is the product of reliable principles and methods").

More specifically, Dr. Phillips categorized each concert that [80] took place during the relevant time period as "rock", "pop" or "other." (See Dkt. 405, Yen Decl., Exh. 17; Phillips Depo., at 134:3-25). With respect to this categorization, Dr. Phillips listed a "source" for each artist. (See id.). Dr. Phillips' primary source was Billboard. (Id. at 139:4-6). Billboard, however, does not categorize artists by genre (e.g., as a "rock" artist). [20] (Id. at 139:7-21; 141:16-18). Consequently, Dr. Phillips read the Billboard "bio" for each artist, and made a "subjective determination based upon [his] opinion" as to whether that artist qualifies as a "rock" musician. (Id. at 141:19-23). In some cases, additional sources were consulted (e.g., www.allmusic.com), but Dr. Phillips recorded only the "primary" source for each artist in his Report. (Id. at 135:5-8). Dr. Phillips decided for himself which source(s) to rely on when categorizing each artist. (Id. at 135:2-3). He [*996] did not consult a music expert when making this determination.

Under certain circumstances, it would be appropriate for an [78] economist to rely on work performed by a music analyst as a basis for further economic analysis. Here, however, Dr. Phillips does not purport to rely on work done by Dan Condon (or any other music analyst). Instead, he categorized artists — i.e., performed the work of a "music analyst" — himself.

19

When asked, "What evidence can you point to supporting your market definition that a member of the jury couldn't do on their own?" Dr. Phillips responded, "Well, if a member of a jury had a Ph.D. in economics and wanted to immerse themselves in this case for nine or ten years, they'd have a go at it, they'd have a possibility of reaching the same opinions I did." (Phillips Depo., at 128:14-21). With respect to the specific task of categorizing artists as "rock" versus non-"rock", however, Plaintiffs do not argue that a Ph.D. in economics is required (or that Dr. Phillips' background in any way qualifies him to make this determination on his own).

20

From the record before the Court, there [81] does not appear to be any "definitive" industry resource that categorizes artists in this manner.

[21] (Id. at 143:4-6). See generally 4 J. McLaughlin, Weinstein's Federal Evidence § 703.04 [3] & n.26, at 703-19 (under Rule 703, expert may reasonably rely on opinions of other experts).

By way of example, in Dr. Phillips' Expert Report, the "source" listed for Simon & Garfunkel is "Billboard." (See Phillips Depo., at 167:7-25). Simon & Garfunkel's Billboard bio refers to the group as "[t]he most successful folk-rock duo of the '60s." (Phillips Depo., at 167:7-9). Dr. Phillips, however, categorized Simon & Garfunkel as "pop," not "rock." (Id. at 167:22-25). When asked why, Dr. Phillips responded: "Because considering all of the industry information, they were considered to be more folk than rock." (Id. at 168:2-4). Dr. Phillips was unable to specifically identify any such "industry information," nor was it listed in his Report. (Id. at 169:4-13).

In effect, Dr. Phillips' explanation for this classification is: I am an economist, I reviewed a large amount of "industry information" — which does not explicitly categorize artists as "rock" versus non-"rock", which is not specifically [82] identified in my Report, and which I am unable specifically to recall — and this industry information supports my conclusion. [22] This "methodology" does not satisfy the requirements of Rule 702 or Rule 703. See Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 157, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999) ("Of course, [the expert] himself claimed that his method was accurate, but, as we pointed out in Joiner, 'nothing in either Daubert or the Federal Rules of Evidence requires a district court to admit opinion evidence that is connected to existing data only by the ipse dixit of the expert.") (quoting General Elec. Co. v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136, 143, 118 S. Ct. 512, 139 L. Ed. 2d 508 (1997)).

The Court's conclusion may have been different if Billboard, or any other resource identified by Dr. Phillips, provided a comprehensive, objectively-verifiable categorization of music artists. Courts consistently have allowed [83] economists to rely on such data. See, e.g., Clinchfield R. Co. v. Lynch, 784 F.2d 545, 553-54 (4th Cir. 1986) (expert entitled to rely on reports of the United States Census Bureau); see also 2 Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade § 24.02[2][b] & n.170, at 24-70 (Industrial classification codes of the U.S. Census Bureau may be used as evidence of "industry or consumer recognition" under Brown Shoe). Here, however, the "industry information" upon which Dr. Phillips purports to rely failed to provide the specific information that he needed, forcing Dr. Phillips to engage in further non-economic analysis in order to categorize the artists at issue.

As noted in the Court's prior Class Certification Order, the definition of any product market necessarily will entail some "gray area" around the edges. Here, however, Dr. Phillips applied an unreliable methodology in determining whether every concert at issue in this litigation qualified as a "rock" concert, which should be included in the relevant product market. This unreliable methodology does not merely implicate the "gray area" [84] at the fringes; it fatally undermines Dr. Phillips' [*997] definition of the relevant product market in its entirety.

c. NIPP Litigation

In Nobody in Particular Presents, Inc. v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, Inc., 311 F. Supp. 2d 1048, 1082 (D. Colo. 2004) ("NIPP"), a Denver-based concert promoter brought an antitrust action against Clear Channel Communications, Inc., Clear Channel Broadcasting, Inc. (Defendants in this litigation) and other entities. In that case, Dr. Phillips offered expert testimony regarding several potentially relevant product markets, including the 21

In contrast, Dr. Phillips relied on the assistance of a music expert when performing his market analysis in the NIPP litigation, which is discussed further below. (See Phillips Depo., at 143:4-144:21).

22

Dr. Phillips also contends that Defendants' internal classifications of certain artists support his conclusions. These internal classifications, however, are similarly ambiguous. (See, e.g., Phillips Depo., at 162:13-63:3 (arguing that Defendants' classification of Madonna as "rock/pop" supports his categorization of Madonna as "rock" instead of "pop")).

purported market for rock music concerts. See id. at 1083. In response to Defendants' motion to exclude Dr. Phillips' testimony, the court held:

> Although Dr. Phillips did not calculate cross-elasticity of demand, he did rely on other economic data, including industry materials, pricing data, and public recognition of the market, all of which have been held relevant to determining the scope of a market. Additionally, Dr. Phillips does not base his opinion on his subjective beliefs but on his research of industry materials regarding the industry's categorization of rock music. Because Dr. Phillips relies on sufficient data and applies [85] that data to define the market, his opinion is sufficiently reliable for admission on the issue of market definition under Daubert. The court elects to refrain from ruling on defendants' motion as to the admissibility of Dr. Phillips' opinion on damages at this time, since [that] decision is not relevant to the summary judgment motion. [23]

Id. at 1120. Both Plaintiffs and Dr. Phillips cite the NIPP decision in support of their proposed product market definition. The court's decision in NIPP, however, is not binding on this Court. Moreover, the NIPP case is distinguishable from the instant action in several key-respects.

As a preliminary matter, the court in NIPP undertook an extensive analysis of Dr. Phillips' proposed market definitions in connection with defendants' motion for summary judgment, followed by a very brief discussion (quoted above) of defendants' motion to exclude Dr. Phillips' testimony under Rule 702. As noted earlier, this Court's analysis proceeds in the reverse order: first, a thorough examination of Dr. Phillips' proffered expert testimony in the Court's role as "gatekeeper" under Rule 702; second, an analysis of Defendants' motions for summary judgment, considering Dr. Phillips' testimony only to the extent that it is admissible under Rule 702. See Claar v. Burlington N. R.R., 29 F.3d 499 (9th Cir. 1994).

Furthermore, in NIPP, Dr. Phillips relied on the assistance of a music expert in performing his market analysis. In this case, no music expert was retained. [87] [24] (See [*998] Phillips Depo., at 143:4-144:21 (discussing the use of a music expert in NIPP, but not in this litigation)).

Moreover, in evaluating the plaintiff's proposed product market in NIPP, the court relied, in part, on a pricing comparison in which "Dr. Phillips set[] forth average ticket prices for both rock, rock-pop, and all music concerts." NIPP, 311 F.Supp.2d at 1084. Here, Dr. Phillips cites no such comparative-pricing analysis in support of his proposed product market definition (nor does Plaintiff argue that Dr. Phillips' proposed product market definition is based on any such analysis). [25] Instead, in defining the relevant product market, Dr. Phillips compared the average

While the NIPP court declined to rule on the admissibility of Dr. Phillips' opinion on damages, its brief discussion of this issue in connection with defendants' motion for summary judgment supports this Court's analysis of Dr. Phillips' damages calculations (discussed above):

> To the extent that NIPP argues that Clear Channel's prices are above industry average based on a comparison between average ticket prices charged in a given year by Clear Channel versus average ticket prices charged by other promoters, Clear Channel is correct that NIPP's failure to consider the [86] different costs born by Clear Channel is fatal to NIPP's argument. If Clear Channel promotes all of the most expensive, top artists, Clear Channel's ticket prices will be higher than tickets sold by other promoters, and this price difference does not indicate monopolistic pricing or conduct.

NIPP, 311 F. Supp. 2d at 1100-01.

In connection with his Expert Report submitted in this case, Dr. Phillips lists "NIPP" as the source for his classification of certain music artists. (See Yen Decl., Exh. 17). Presumably, the music expert in NIPP assisted Dr. Phillips in classifying these artists. Given the relatively small number of artists for which Dr. Phillips lists "NIPP" as the source, however, his prior use of a music expert in NIPP does not materially affect the Court's analysis in this case.

price of live music concerts generally [88] to entirely different forms of entertainment (e.g., movies). (See Phillips Expert Report, at ¶ 60).

Notably, the plaintiffs in NIPP argued in support of multiple relevant product markets, leading the court to conclude, "Alternatively, a reasonable jury could surely find that NIPP has set forth evidence of practical indicia showing a distinct market for all live music concerts." NIPP, 311 F.Supp.2d at 1084. Here, in contrast, the only relevant product market argued by Plaintiffs is the purported market for live rock music concerts.

The court in NIPP concluded that plaintiff raised a triable issue of fact with respect to cross-elasticity of supply. See NIPP, 311 F.Supp.2d at 1085. Here, Dr. Phillips conceded that he did not consider cross-elasticity of supply in his analysis.

Finally, [89] the court's decision in NIPP did not address the methodology employed by Dr. Phillips, which is the focus of this Court's analysis under Rule 702. The methodology employed by Dr. Phillips in NIPP differed in at least one material respect from the methodology employed here, namely, the use of a music expert to categorize artists by music type. Because the court in NIPP did not further elaborate on its Daubert findings, this Court is unable to discern whether Dr. Phillips' methodology in that case differed in other material respects as well.

d. Definition of the Relevant Market: Conclusion

The Court finds that Dr. Phillips' Expert Report fails to satisfy Rule 702's requirements in both: (1) defining the relevant product market; and (2) populating this market for purposes of his analysis. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have failed to meet their burden of demonstrating that Dr. Phillips' opinion regarding the definition of the relevant product market is admissible under Rule 702.

3. Defendants' Market Share & Exclusionary Conduct

Finally, Defendants argue that the Court should exclude Dr. Phillips' opinions regarding Defendants' share of the relevant market and Defendants' allegedly anticompetitive [90] conduct. The gravamen of Defendants' arguments as to this testimony, however, is not that Dr. Phillips is unqualified to offer opinions on these matters (or that his methodology is so flawed as to warrant exclusion under Rule 702). Instead, Defendants argue that Dr. Phillips' [*999] opinions on these issues are insufficient, as a matter of law, to support Plaintiffs' antitrust claims. Accordingly, these arguments are not amenable to analysis under Rule 702, but instead should be analyzed under the summary judgment standard.

V. DEFENDANTS" MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

A. Legal Standard

Rule 56(c) requires summary judgment for the moving party when the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, shows that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, and that the moving party is

Nor has the Court located any such analysis in the voluminous record. See generally Carmen, 237 F.3d at 1029 ("A lawyer drafting an opposition to a summary judgment motion may easily show a judge, in the opposition, the evidence that the lawyer wants the judge to read. It is absurdly difficult for a judge to perform a search, unassisted by counsel, through the entire record, to look for such evidence.").

entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); Tarin v. Cnty. of Los Angeles, 123 F.3d 1259, 1263 (9th Cir. 1997).

The moving party bears the initial burden of establishing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. See Celotex Corp v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). The moving party may satisfy its Rule 56(c) burden by "'showing' — that is, pointing out to [91] the district court — that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325. Once the moving party has met its initial burden, Rule 56(e) requires the nonmoving party to go beyond the pleadings and identify specific facts that show a genuine issue for trial. See id. at 323-24; Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). A scintilla of evidence or evidence that is merely colorable or not significantly probative does not present a genuine issue of material fact. Addisu v. Fred Meyer, 198 F.3d 1130, 1134 (9th Cir. 2000). Only genuine disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law, i.e., "where the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party," will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment. See Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248.

Under Local Rules 56-2 and 56-3, these triable issues of fact must be identified in the non-moving party's "Statement of Genuine Issues" and supported by "declaration or other written evidence." See also Sullivan v. Dollar Tree Stores, Inc., 623 F.3d 770, 779 (9th Cir. 2010) ("Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(e)(2) requires [92] a party to "set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial."). If the non-moving party fails to identify the triable issues of fact, the court may treat the moving party's evidence as uncontroverted, so long as the facts are "adequately supported" by the moving party. Local Rule 56-3; see also International Longshoremen's Ass'n, AFL-CIO v. Davis, 476 U.S. 380, 398 n.14, 106 S. Ct. 1904, 90 L. Ed. 2d 389 (1986) ("[I]t is not [the Court's] task sua sponte to search the record for evidence to support the [parties'] claim[s]."); Carmen v. San Francisco United School District, 237 F.3d 1026, 1029 (9th Cir. 2001) ("A lawyer drafting an opposition to a summary judgment motion may easily show a judge, in the opposition, the evidence that the lawyer wants the judge to read. It is absurdly difficult for a judge to perform a search, unassisted by counsel, through the entire record, to look for such evidence.").

B. Sherman Act Claims

Defendants argue that summary judgment is warranted based, inter alia, on Plaintiffs' failure to raise a triable issue of fact as to the relevant product market.

"As long held by the Supreme Court, proof of a relevant market is an essential element of a Section 2 monopolization and attempted [93] monopolization case." 2 Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade, § 24.01[3][a], at 24-5, 24-6 (citing *Spectrum [1000] Sports v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 457, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993) ("[I]t is beyond doubt that [a monopolization claim under Sherman Act § 2] requires proof of market power in a relevant market.); Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 459 ("[P]etitioners may not be liable for attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act absent proof of a dangerous probability that they would monopolize a particular market[.]")).

For the reasons set forth above, Dr. Phillips' testimony regarding the relevant product market is inadmissible under Rule 702. Plaintiffs do not argue (nor does the Court conclude) that there is an adequate evidentiary basis in the record, absent Dr. Phillips' testimony, for a jury to find that Plaintiffs have defined an economically significant product market. See IT&T, 518 F.2d at 932. Accordingly, summary judgment is appropriate with respect to Plaintiffs' claims of monopolization and attempted monopolization in the Denver and Los Angeles markets. See Thurman Indus., Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1380 (9th Cir. 1989) (affirming district court's order granting summary judgment, [94] where plaintiff failed to raise a triable issue of fact as to its proposed product submarket definition); Plush Lounge Las Vegas LLC v. Hotspur Resorts Nev., Inc., 371 Fed. Appx. 719, 721 (9th Cir. 2010) (affirming summary judgment as to plaintiff's claim under Sherman Act § 2, where the district court excluded under Rule 702 significant portions of the declarations of plaintiff's proffered experts).

In rare instances, a claim under the Sherman Act may succeed absent a specifically-defined product market.

2B Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ¶ 531, at 241 (citing Republic Tobacco Co. V. N. Atl. Trading Co., Inc., 381 F.3d 717, 736-39 (7th Cir. 2004)).

Here, however, Plaintiffs do not argue that Defendants' conduct was so "highly suspicious" that it can support an antitrust claim absent a properly-defined product market. Nor do they argue that Defendants' alleged anticompetitive [95] behavior may be evaluated under a "quick look" analysis. Instead, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants' activities, even if lawful when viewed in isolation, amount to a violation of the Sherman Act when considered in their entirety. (See generally MSJ Opposition (Denver), at 9-11 (arguing that Defendants' conduct must be evaluated as a whole)). Accordingly, this action does not involve the rare circumstances under which a Sherman Act claim may succeed absent a viable definition of the relevant product market.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment are GRANTED with respect to Plaintiffs' claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act (in the Denver and Los Angeles markets). Based on the Court's conclusion that summary judgment is warranted based on Plaintiffs' failure adequately to define the relevant product market, the Court need not address Defendants' remaining arguments as to the merits of Plaintiffs' antitrust claims.

C. Unjust Enrichment Claims

Plaintiffs' claims of unjust enrichment are predicated entirely on their Section 2 claims. Accordingly, Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment are GRANTED with respect to Plaintiffs' [96] claims of unjust enrichment.

[*1001] VI. REMAINING MOTIONS

The Court hereby DISMISSES AS MOOT Defendants' Motion for Class Decertification (as to Case Nos. 2:05-CV-06704 (Los Angeles market) and 2:06-CV-04987 (Denver market)), (Dkt. 410); Plaintiffs' Motion for Approval of Plan for Class Notice, (Dkt. 460); Plaintiffs' Motion to Exclude the "Affinity Analysis" of Dr. Janusz Ordover, (Dkt. 469); and Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike Declaration of Julia Vander Ploeg, (Dkt. 516) .

VII. FURTHER BRIEFING

The parties are hereby ORDERED promptly to meet and confer and to submit a joint stipulation as to how best to proceed with the remaining MDL actions before this Court within twenty-one (21) days of the date of this Order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING-IN-PART AND DENYING-IN-PART PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO DISMISS DEFENDANT'S COUNTERCLAIMS AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES

On February 3, 2012, Plaintiff DriveCam, Inc. ("DriveCam") filed a motion to dismiss, strike or alternatively bifurcate and stay Defendant SmartDrive Systems, Inc's. ("SmartDrive") counterclaims and affirmative defenses. (Doc. No. 66.) On March 5, 2012, SmartDrive filed its opposition. (Doc. No. 73.) On March 13, 2012, DriveCam filed its reply. (Doc. No. 77.) On March 19, 2012 the Court held a [*2] hearing on DriveCam's motion. Clement S. Roberts appeared for DriveCam, and Geoffrey D. Oliver and Nicola A. Pisano appeared for SmartDrive.

Background

On May 6, 2011, DriveCam filed a complaint alleging that SmartDrive infringed U.S. Patent Nos. 6,389,340 ("the '340 patent"), 7,804,426 ("the '426 patent") and 7,659,827 ("the '827 patent"). (Doc. No. 1.) On October 20, 2011, DriveCam filed an amended complaint adding allegations of trade secret misappropriation against SmartDrive. (Doc. No. 34.) On January 3, 2012, SmartDrive raised the affirmative defense of inequitable conduct, and counterclaims of Walker Process fraud, sham litigation, trade secret misappropriation, and unfair competition. (Doc. No. 55.) DriveCam seeks dismissal of SmartDrive's affirmative defense and counterclaims, or an order to bifurcate and stay SmartDrive's antitrust counterclaims until resolution of the patent suit. (Doc. No. 66.)

I. Legal Standard for a Motion to Dismiss

A motion to dismiss a complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of the claims asserted in the complaint. Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir. 2001). The pleading must contain a short and plain statement showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). This requirement functions to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "While [*3] a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. "All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs. However, conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim." Epstein v. Wash. Energy Co., 83 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 1996); see also Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id.

"Generally, a district court may not consider any material beyond the pleadings in ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion." Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., Inc., 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 n. 19 (9th Cir. 1990). The court may, however, consider the contents of documents specifically referred to and incorporated into the complaint. Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 (9th Cir. 1994) overruled on other grounds by Galbraith v. County of Santa Clara, 307 F.3d 1119, 1127 (9th Cir. 2002). A court may also consider [*4] judicially noticed facts to show whether a complaint states a cause of action. Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Metropolitan Engravers, Ltd., 245 F.2d 67, 70 (9th Cir. 1956).

For claims alleging fraud, "a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud." Fed. R. Civ. P 9(b). A plaintiff pleading a fraud claim must specify the "who, what, when, where, and how of the misconduct charged." Kearns v. Ford Motor Co.,567 F.3d 1120, 1124 (9th Cir. 2009). The pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) apply to Walker Process claims. MedImmune, Inc. v. Genentech, Inc., 427 F.3d 958, 967 (Fed. Cir. 2005), rev'd on other grounds, 549 U.S. 118, 127 S. Ct. 764, 166 L. Ed. 2d 604 (2007).

II. Legal Standard for Inequitable Conduct

To prove inequitable conduct, the accused infringer must show by clear and convincing evidence that the applicant (1) misrepresented or omitted material information from the patent office, and (2) intended to deceive the patent office. Therasense, Inc. v. Becton, Dickinson & Co., 649 F.3d 1276, 1287 (Fed. Cir. 2011). "[A] court must weight the evidence of intent to deceive independent of its analysis of materiality." Id. at 1290. "A district court should not use a 'sliding scale,' where a weak showing of intent may be found sufficient based on a strong showing of materiality." Id. "Because direct evidence of deceptive intent is rare, a district court may infer intent from indirect and circumstantial evidence." Id. But intent to deceive the patent office cannot be inferred solely from materiality. Id. Furthermore, intent to deceive must be "the single [*5] most reasonable inference able to be drawn from the evidence." Id. (quoting Star Scientific, Inc. v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 537 F.3d 1357, 1366 (Fed. Cir. 2008)). "In a case involving nondisclosure of information, clear and convincing evidence must show that the applicant made a deliberate decision to withhold a known material reference." Therasense, 649 F.3d at 1290 (quoting Molins PLC v. Textron, Inc., 48 F.3d 1172, 1181 (Fed. Cir. 1995)) (emphasis in original). "Proving that the applicant knew of a reference, should have known of its materiality, and decided not to submit it to the PTO does not prove specific intent to deceive." Therasense, 649 F.3d at 1290. A charge of inequitable conduct will survive a motion to dismiss only if the pleading "recites facts from which the court may reasonably infer that a specific individual both knew of invalidating information that was withheld from the PTO and withheld that information with a specific intent to deceive the PTO." Delano Farms Co. v. Cal. Table Grape Comm'n, 655 F.3d 1337, 1350 (Fed. Cir. 2011).

For the '827 patent, the first amended paragraph specifically names three of DriveCam's officers, Mr. Gunderson, Mr. Moeller and Mr. Lefluer, as individuals acting on behalf of DriveCam. (Id. at ¶ 37.) These individuals are inventors of the '827 patent. (Id. at ¶ 74.) Specifically, SmartDrive alleges that DriveCam failed to disclose to the PTO that it had offered for sale the subject matter of the '827 patent as embodied in the Hindsight 20/20 Version [*6] 4.0 vehicle event recorder, and related software and publications, more than a year before filing the application for the '827 patent. (Id. at ¶ 10a.) SmartDrive also alleges that DriveCam failed to disclose invalidating prior art, including the '340 patent during prosecution of the '827 patent. (Id. at ¶ 39.) SmartDrive further claims that DriveCam failed to disclose the User's Manual for the DriveCam system that was on sale and in public use more than two years before the '222 application that gave rise to the '827 patent. (Id. at ¶¶ 30-31, 35, 38.) SmartDrive alleges that "DriveCam and its alleged inventors deliberately withheld the User's Manual and the '340 patent from the Patent Examiner handling prosecution of the '222 application so as to fraudulently induce the Examiner to issue the '827 patent." (Id. at ¶ 44.) The first amended answer further provides that the patent application filings were motivated by a "desire to compete with substantially similar systems disclosed by SmartDrive. . . irrespective of the lack of inventiveness of the alleged inventions disclosed in the DriveCam applications." (Id. at ¶ 37.)

For the '426 patent, the first amended paragraph specifically names Mr. Etcheson as a Senior Software Engineer that acted on behalf of DriveCam. [*7] (Id. at ¶ 79.) Mr. Etcheson is the inventor of the '426 patent. (Id. at ¶ 77.) SmartDrive specifically alleges that DriveCam failed to disclose the Hindsight 20/20 prior art or the '340 patent. (Id. at ¶¶ 10c, 55.) SmartDrive alleges that DriveCam specifically intended to deceive the patent office because of its "desire to compete with substantially similar systems disclosed by SmartDrive. . . irrespective of the lack of inventiveness of the alleged inventions disclosed in the DriveCam applications." (Id. at ¶ 54.)

Based on these specific assertions, the Court determines that SmartDrive's first amended answer alleges a desire to compete with SmartDrive that provides a reasonable inference that specific inventors knowingly withheld invalidating information from the PTO with the specific intent to deceive the PTO. Accordingly, the Court denies DriveCam's motion to dismiss the inequitable conduct defense with respect to the '827 and '426 patents.[1] Delano Farms, 655 F.3d at 1350 (a charge of inequitable conduct survives a motion to dismiss if the pleading "recites facts from which the court may reasonably infer that a specific individual both knew of invalidating information that was withheld from the PTO and withheld that information with a specific intent [*8] to deceive the PTO").

Turning to the '340 patent, the first amended answer does not provide any allegations that specific individuals knew of invalidating information and withheld that information with a specific intent to deceive the patent office. Therefore, the first amended answer lacks facts that would lead to a reasonable inference that a specific individual deliberately withheld information with the intent to deceive the patent office. Accordingly, the Court concludes that SmartDrive's inequitable conduct defense fails to allege facts supporting a specific intent to deceive the patent office and grants DriveCam's motion to dismiss or alternatively strike the inequitable conduct defense with respect to the '340 patent, with thirty days leave to amend if it can do so.

III. Legal Standard for Sham Litigation

Sham litigation is a private action brought without the genuine purpose of procuring favorable government action. Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 59, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L.

[1] The Court recognizes the difficulty of proving inequitable conduct by the clear and convincing evidence standard after Therasense. Even though the court concludes that SmartDrive satisfies the pleading standard in Delano Farms, DriveCam may bring a motion for summary judgment on the inequitable conduct issue at an appropriate time.

Ed. 2d 611 (1993). To prove that a lawsuit is a sham, the movant must first show that the lawsuit is objectively baseless in that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. Id. at 60. Secondly, the movant must show that the litigant possesses the subjective motivation [*9] to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of governmental process. Id. at 60-61. Additionally, the movant must show a substantive antitrust violation. Id. at 61. Litigation is not considered a sham so long as at least one claim in the lawsuit has objective merit. Id. at 60 (specifying that "the lawsuit must be objectively baseless").

SmartDrive alleges that this litigation is a sham because (i) "DriveCam's amendment to include trade secret misappropriation and other state law claims in this litigation is a sham, lacks any factual basis, and was brought solely because it became plain to DriveCam that it could not prevail on its meritless patent infringement claims," and (ii) "DriveCam knew when it filed the case that. . . the '340, '426, and '827 patents are invalid and/or unenforceable." (Doc. No. 55 at ¶ 66-67.) With respect to the trade secret claim, SmartDrive specifically alleges that DriveCam lacked "any good faith basis" and brought this claim "solely to perpetuate DriveCam's in terrorem campaign to interfere with SmartDrive's customers." (Id. at ¶ 10e.)

DriveCam pleads plausible facts that support its trade secret claim. (Doc. No. 34 at ¶¶ 45-46). For example, DriveCam identified several [*10] categories of trade secret information, including "materials relating to development of new products," "customer lists, sales pipelines, product roadmaps and confidential technical information," and "training materials." (Id.) DriveCam specifically alleges that Mr. Frietas and Mr. Mitchell, former employees of DriveCam, had access to confidential materials and disclosed trade secret information to SmartDrive. (Id. at ¶¶ 45-47.) SmartDrive does not show that DriveCam's trade secret claim is objectively baseless such that no litigant could expect success on the merits. Furthermore, SmartDrive's opposition to DriveCam's motion to dismiss does not directly address whether the trade secret claim is objectively baseless. Therefore, the Court concludes that the lawsuit does not constitute sham litigation and grants DriveCam's motion to dismiss SmartDrive's sham litigation counterclaim.

IV. Legal Standard for Walker Process Fraud

"Walker Process antitrust liability is based on the knowing assertion of a patent procured by fraud on the PTO." Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1071 (Fed. Cir. 1998) (referring to Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965)). In Walker Process, the Supreme Court held that obtaining a "patent by knowingly and willfully misrepresenting facts to the Patent Office" [*11] is sufficient "to strip [a patentee] of its exemption from the antitrust laws." Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 177. The first barrier for a Walker Process claim is to show that the patent was obtained through actual fraud upon the patent office. Dippin' Dots, Inc. v. Mosey, 476 F.3d 1337, 1346 (Fed. Cir. 2007). To demonstrate Walker Process fraud, the claimant must make showings of intent to deceive the patent office, and that the patent would not have issued but for the patentee's misrepresentation or omission. Id. at 1347.

Additionally, the movant must show a violation of all elements of § 2 of the Sherman Act to assert a Walker Process claim. Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 174. Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolization or attempts to monopolize trade or commerce among the states or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C. § 2. To establish monopolization or attempt to monopolize, it is necessary to appraise the market power of the litigant and the relevant market for the product at issue. Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 177. The movant must also show an antitrust injury. Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. General Telephone Co. of Cal., 190 F.3d 1051, 1054-55 (9th Cir. 1999).

DriveCam asserts that SmartDrive's Walker Process counterclaim fails because the complaint does not plead facts showing a specific intent to deceive the patent office. The Court concludes that SmartDrive's first amended answer and counterclaim allege a specific intent to deceive the patent office with respect [*12] to the '827 and '426 patents, but does not plead facts supporting an specific intent to deceive with respect to the '340 patent. Furthermore, DriveCam asserts that the counterclaim does not plead facts establishing the relevant market, does not plead facts establishing that DriveCam has market power, and does not plead facts establishing an antitrust injury. The Court turns to these issues.

A. Relevant Market

The relevant market "encompasses notions of geography as well as product use, quality, and description. . . [and] includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand." Tanaka v. Univ. S. Cal. 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001). Determining the relevant market is a fact intensive inquiry. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 482, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). Additionally, a relevant antitrust market does not need to be pled with specificity. Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1045 (9th Cir. 2008). The complaint must allege specific facts to show a plausible legal antitrust claim. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. The relevant product market alleged in a complaint will survive a motion to dismiss "unless it is apparent from the face of the complaint that the alleged market suffers a fatal legal defect." Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045.

SmartDrive's counterclaim asserts that the relevant market is for "SAAS in-vehicle video event recorder safe driving programs." (Doc. No. 55 at ¶ 8.) [*13] SmartDrive claims that the allegations show significant interchangeability and a high degree of cross-elasticity of demand for brands of SAAS in-vehicle video event recorder safe driving programs. Additionally, SmartDrive argues that there is little interchangeability and low levels of cross-elasticity of demand between SAAS in-vehicle video event recorder safe driving programs and drive programs with non-SAAS systems. Paragraphs 12-16 of SmartDrive's counterclaim describe the advantages of its system, define the relevant market, describe DriveCam's implementation of SmartDrive's concept, and distinguish the SAAS market from the non-SAS market.

DriveCam disagrees with SmartDrive's market definition, particularly with the limitation of the market to exclude a variety of in-vehicle event recorders other than video with a SAAS system. DriveCam argues that SmartDrive's market definition is too narrow. But the question of whether the market should include other products is better resolved at the summary judgment stage. See Image Tech. Servs. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1203 (9th Cir. 1997) ("Ultimately what constitutes a relevant market is a factual determination for the jury."); Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O'Finley & Co., 676 F.2d 1291, 1299 (9th Cir. 1982) ("The definition of the relevant market is basically a fact question dependent [*14] upon the special characteristics of the industry involved."). The Court concludes that SmartDrive's counterclaim pleads a plausible relevant product market in SAAS in-vehicle video event recorder safe driving programs that is sufficient to survive DriveCam's motion to dismiss.

B. Market Power

The essence of market power is the ability to "control prices or exclude competition." Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1475 (9th Cir. 1997). Market power does not need to be pled with specificity. Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045. SmartDrive's counterclaim alleges that DriveCam has had monopoly power since 2007 and continues to hold monopoly power today. (Doc. No. 55 at ¶¶ 19 & 22.) SmartDrive's counterclaim further states that "DriveCam currently holds about 65% market share." (Id. at ¶ 19.) Over two-thirds of the market may constitute a monopoly. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481 (citing Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946)).

DriveCam challenges the factual basis for the market power allegations, since DriveCam only entered the market in 2007. (Doc. No. 55 at ¶ 13.) But the 2007 entry into a video based product technology market does not defeat the plausibility of the allegations of current market power and anticompetitive activity.

DriveCam also points to inconsistencies in the allegations of market power. For example, the allegation of the [*15] growth of SmartDrive's market share (Id. at ¶ 21) is inconsistent with DriveCam's market power (Id. at ¶ 22). But the counterclaim also alleges that DriveCam is using unlawful anticompetitive conduct to restrict SmartDrive's ability to compete in the market and to maintain DriveCam's monopoly power. (Id. at ¶¶ 69-70, 76.)

In reviewing the allegations of market power, the Court concludes that DriveCam's challenges are better suited for a motion for summary judgment. The Court concludes that SmartDrive pleads facts sufficient to support the allegation that DriveCam has market power.

C. Antitrust Injury

A litigant must allege an "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes [the accused] acts unlawful." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990). The four requirements for an antitrust injury are: "(1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing and injury to the [litigant], (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc., 190 F.3d at 1055. An antitrust injury must allege more than that its business was damaged, it must also allege that the accused behavior stifled competition. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 115, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) ("[T]he antitrust [*16] laws. . . were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'") (internal citations omitted) (emphasis in original).

SmartDrive alleges three forms of supposed antitrust injury: (i) DriveCam's lawsuit caused existing and potential customers to forgo purchases of SmartDrive's products; (ii) DriveCam interfered with SmartDrive's existing and potential customers by false and deceptive statements; and (iii) attorneys' fees incurred by SmartDrive in defending against DriveCam's lawsuit. (Doc. No. 55 at ¶¶ 70-73.)

1. Injury From DriveCam's Lawsuit

SmartDrive alleges that DriveCam's lawsuit caused existing and potential customers to forgo purchases of SmartDrive's products and that DriveCam filed this lawsuit to harm competition by pushing DriveCam out of the market. The fact that DriveCam is litigating its patents against SmartDrive does not constitute antitrust injury. See Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60-61 ("the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals 'an attempt to interfered directly with the business relationships of a competitor,' through the 'use [of] the governmental process-as opposed to the outcome of that process—as an anticompetitive weapon) (internal citations omitted) (emphasis [*17] in original). SmartDrive has not adequately alleged that this lawsuit is a baseless attempt to use the process of litigation for improper purposes. SmartDrive cannot show an antitrust injury by simply alleging harm it might suffer based on the outcome of these proceedings. Therefore, the Court concludes that the filing of this lawsuit against SmartDrive does not constitute an antitrust injury.

2. Injury From SmartDrive's Statements

Both the Ninth and Federal Circuits have held that threats of suit and ancillary communications about the suit, like suits themselves, are protected under the Petition Clause. Globetrotter Software, Inc. v. Elan Computer Grp., Inc., 362 F.3d 1367, 1376 (Fed. Cir. 2004); Sosa v. DirecTV, Inc., 437 F.3d 923, 933 (9th Cir. 2006.) As the court explained in Sosa, although the communications about the suit are "not themselves petitions, the Petition Clause may nevertheless preclude burdening them so as to preserve the breathing space required for effective exercise of the rights it protects." Sosa, 437 F.3d at 933. A relevant exception exists if communications are themselves shams. Globetrotter Software, 362 F.3d at 1376-77 (communications to customers are protected unless they are both objectively baseless and improperly motivated); EcoDisc Tech. AG v. DVD Format/Logo Licensing Corp., 711 F. Supp. 2d 1074, 1082 (C.D. Cal. 2010) ("Under Sosa, all communications between private parties related to litigation—including presuit demand letters and settlement offers—are [*18] entitled to immunity.").

SmartDrive alleges that DriveCam made statements to existing and potential customers that SmartDrive would be unable to satisfy its contractual obligations or act as a reliable source of supply as a result of this lawsuit. (Doc. No. 55 at ¶ 73.) These statements do not constitute an antitrust injury. Communications about this lawsuit are protected under the Petition Clause. Sosa, 437 F.3d at 935 ("communications between private parties are sufficiently within the protection of the Petition Clause. . . so long as they are sufficiently related to petitioning activity"). SmartDrive has not adequately alleged that this lawsuit is a sham, nor that the communications are a sham. SmartDrive cannot show an antitrust injury by alleging harm it might suffer based on the outcome (as opposed to the process) of this proceeding. See*Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60-61* ("the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals 'an attempt to interfered directly with the business relationships of a competitor,' through the 'use [of] the governmental process-as opposed to the outcome of that process—as an anticompetitive weapon) (internal citations omitted) (emphasis in original). Therefore, the Court concludes that DriveCam's statements [*19] to customers do not constitute an antitrust injury.

3. Injury from Attorneys' Fees

"[T]he costs incurred in the defense of a suit filed in violation of the antitrust laws constitute antitrust injury." Rickards v. Canine Eye Registration Found., Inc.,783 F.2d 1329, 1334-35 (9th Cir. 1986); see also Handgards, Inc. v. Ethicon, Inc., 601 F.2d 986, 997 (9th Cir. 1979) ("In a suit alleging antitrust injury based upon a bad faith prosecution theory it is obvious that the costs incurred in defense of the prior patent infringement suit are an injury which 'flows' from the antitrust wrong."). SmartDrive asserts that it suffers an antitrust injury by incurring attorneys' fees in defending this lawsuit. (Doc. No. 55 at ¶¶ 70-74.) SmartDrive further asserts that this lawsuit violates antitrust laws because DriveCam is knowingly asserting patents that it procured by fraud on the PTO. (Id. at ¶¶ 10(a)-10(c).) Therefore, the Court concludes that SmartDrive has adequately pled an antitrust injury based on its attorneys' fees under Ninth Circuit precedent.

In summary, the Court concludes that SmartDrive has pled a cognizable Walker Process counterclaim. Accordingly, the Court denies DriveCam's motion to dismiss SmartDrive's Walker Process counterclaim.

V. Legal Standard for Unfair Competition

Violation of antitrust law also violates California's unfair competition [*20] laws. See Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). SmartDrive alleges that "DriveCam's business practices detailed above," by which SmartDrive references DriveCam's supposed violations of the Sherman Act, violate California's unfair competition laws. (Doc. No. 55 at ¶ 100.) Therefore, SmartDrive's counterclaim for unfair competition is derivative of its Sherman Act counterclaims. Because the Court declines to dismiss SmartDrive's Walker Process counterclaim, the Court declines to dismiss SmartDrive's derivative state unfair competition claim. Accordingly, the Court denies DriveCam's motion to dismiss SmartDrive's unfair competition counterclaim.

VI. Legal Standard for Trade Secret

Under California law, a trade secret must both: (1) derive "independent economic value, actual or potential, from not being generally known to the public or to other persons who can obtain economic value from its disclosure or use;" and (2) be "the subject of efforts that are reasonable under the circumstances to maintain its secrecy." Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.1(d).

DriveCam challenges the sufficiency of SmartDrive's trade secret pleadings. Specifically, DriveCam asserts that SmartDrive failed to allege facts supporting a reasonable inference that DriveCam misappropriated trade [*21] secrets. SmartDrive identifies Sam Kim as a former SmartDrive employee with obligations of confidentiality to SmartDrive. (Doc. No. 55 at ¶ 106.) But SmartDrive does not allege that Sam Kim misappropriated any trade secrets. The mere fact that Mr. Kim worked for both parties does not create an inference that he misappropriated trade secrets. SmartDrive merely alleges in a conclusory fashion that unnamed former employees improperly disclosed trade secrets. (Id. at ¶ 109.) But SmartDrive does not allege factual content allowing a reasonable inference that a specific individual acting for DriveCam misappropriated trade secrets. Therefore, the Court grants

DriveCam's motion to dismiss SmartDrive's trade secret misappropriation counterclaim, with thirty days leave to amend if SmartDrive can do so.

VII. Legal Standard for Bifurcation of Antitrust Counterclaims

Bifurcation is a frequently employed case management decision that allows the parties to initially focus their litigation on the patent claims because the "[c]onvenience of all is served in trying the less complex patent issues first." In re Innotron Diagnostics, 800 F.2d 1077, 1084-1085 (Fed. Cir. 1986); accord Hydranautics v. FilmTec Corp. 70 F.3d 533, 536 ("In many cases. . . the court would sever the [antitrust] issues and resolve the infringement [*22] case first."). SmartDrive's Walker Process counterclaim depends upon its contention that the patents-in-suit are invalid, unenforceable and not infringed. Resolution of these issues will eliminate or reduce some of the proof necessary to ultimately decide the antitrust counterclaims. Therefore, the Court concludes that the interest of judicial economy is best served by bifurcating SmartDrive's Walker Process antitrust counterclaim. Accordingly, the Court grants DriveCam's motion to bifurcate SmartDrive's remaining Walker Process counterclaim pending resolution of the patent infringement claims.

VIII. Request for Judicial Notice

Federal Rule of Evidence 201 permits judicial notice of adjudicative facts, which are defined as facts "not subject to reasonable dispute." Fed. R. Evid. 201(b). A judicially noticed fact must be one that is not subject to reasonable dispute in that it is either: (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned. Id. A court may take judicial notice of "[r]ecords and reports of administrative bodies." Barron v. Reich, 13 F.3d 1370, 1377 (9th Cir. 1994); see also Interstate Natural Gas Co. v. S. Cal. Gas Co., 209 F.2d 380, 385 (9th Cir. 1953) ("We may take judicial notice of records and reports [*23] of administrative bodies.").

DriveCam requests that this Court take judicial notice of Exhibit A, an office action from the patent office relating to U.S. Patent Application No. 95/001,779. (Doc. No. 66-3.) The document requested by DriveCam is published by the patent office and is therefore ascertainable and verifiable. Accordingly, the Court takes judicial notice of DriveCam's Exhibit A.

SmartDrive requests that this Court take judicial notice of (1) Exhibit A, DriveCam's response to the ex parte reexamination initial office action filed with the patent office regarding the '340 patent; and (2) Exhibit B, an office action summary from the patent office relating to U.S. Patent Application No. 11/382,239. (Doc. No. 73-2.) The documents requested by SmartDrive are published by the patent office and are therefore ascertainable and verifiable. Accordingly, the Court takes judicial notice of SmartDrive's Exhibit A and B.

DriveCam requests that this Court take judicial notice of (1) Exhibit A, SmartDrive's response to DriveCam's third set of interrogatories; (2) Exhibit B, SmartDrive's responses and objections to DriveCam's first set of requests for admission; (3) Exhibit 1 to the Roberts declaration [*24] containing sealed documents from SmartDrive's production; and (4) Exhibit 2 to the Roberts declaration containing sealed documents from SmartDrive's production. (Doc. Nos. 78 & 81-3.) On a motion to dismiss, the Court generally does not consider any material beyond the pleadings. Hal Roach Studios, 896 F.2d at 1555 n. 19. The Court declines to convert the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. Discovery responses are not the type of information "not subject to reasonable dispute" under Federal Rule of Evidence 201. Accordingly, the Court declines to take judicial notice of the parties' discovery responses.

IX. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing, the Court denies DriveCam's motion to dismiss SmartDrive's inequitable conduct defense with respect to the '827 and '426 patents, but grants DriveCam's motion to dismiss or alternatively strike

SmartDrive's inequitable conduct defense with respect to the '340 patent with 30 days leave to amend; grants DriveCam's motion to dismiss SmartDrive's sham litigation counterclaim; denies DriveCam's motion to dismiss SmartDrive's Walker Process and unfair competition counterclaims; grants DriveCam's motion to dismiss SmartDrive's trade secret misappropriation counterclaim with 30 days leave to amend; grants DriveCam's motion to bifurcate [*25] SmartDrive's Walker Process antitrust counterclaim; and grants DriveCam's and SmartDrive's request for judicial notice except as noted.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

The court may consider documents of which judicial notice is taken, along with the allegations in the plaintiffs' complaint, on a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the court assumes the facts alleged in the complaint are true.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim for which relief can be granted under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The purpose of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) is to test the legal sufficiency of the complaint. Generally, a plaintiff's burden at the pleading stage is relatively light.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In ruling on a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12, the court analyzes the complaint and takes all allegations of material fact as true and construes them in the lights most favorable to the nonmoving party. Dismissal may be based on a lack of a cognizable legal theory or on the absence of facts that would support a valid theory. A complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory. The factual allegations must be definite enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level. However, a complaint does not need detailed factual allegations to survive dismissal. Rather, a complaint need only include enough facts to state a claim that is plausible on its face. That is, the pleadings must contain factual allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) a right to relief.

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Effect of Agreements

HN6[] Settlements, Effect of Agreements

In California, interpretation of a settlement agreement is governed by contract principles. However, a settlement agreement's bare assertion that a party will not be liable for a broad swath of potential claims does not necessarily make it so. At the same time, a settlement agreement may preclude a party from bringing a related claim in the future even though the claim was not presented and might not have been presentable in the class action, but only where the released claim is based on the identical factual predicate as that underlying the claims in the settled class action. A class settlement may also release factually related claims against parties not named as defendants.

HN12[] Real Estate Settlement Procedures, Kickbacks & Prohibited Fees

Settlement service is defined as any service provided in connection with a real estate settlement. 12 U.S.C.S. § 2602(3). This language indicates that the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act covers only those services provided, not necessarily required, in connection with a closing.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > Elements of Contract Claims

HN13[] Breach of Contract Actions, Elements of Contract Claims

The elements of a cause of action for breach of contract are: (1) the existence of the contract; (2) performance by the plaintiff or excuse for nonperformance; (3) breach by the defendant; and (4) damages.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN14[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

There is implied in every contract a covenant by each party not to do anything which will deprive the other parties thereto of the benefits of the contract.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > Elements of Contract Claims

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN15[] Breach of Contract Actions, Elements of Contract Claims

A breach of contract may be established on the basis of either an express provision of the contract or on the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. An implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing cannot contradict the express terms of a contract. Further, because the implied covenant operates to protect the express covenants or promises of a contract, it cannot impose substantive duties or limits on the contracting parties beyond those incorporated in the specific terms of the parties' agreement.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > Elements of Contract Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN16[] Breach of Contract Actions, Elements of Contract Claims

Facts alleging a breach, like all essential elements of a breach of contract cause of action, must be pleaded with specificity. Thus, to state a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, a plaintiff must identify the specific contractual provision that was frustrated.

HN17[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

In New Jersey, a covenant of good faith and fair dealing is implied in every contract. Implied covenants are as effective components of an agreement as those covenants that are express. Although the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing cannot override an express term in a contract, a party's performance under a contract may breach that implied covenant even though that performance does not violate a pertinent express term. Because the breach of the implied covenant arises only when the other party has acted consistent with the contract's literal terms, if a party is found to have breached an express term of the contract, there can be no separate breach of the implied covenant.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN18[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Even a defendant who does not breach a contract may still be liable for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing if they fail to perform the contract in good faith.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN19[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

The covenant of good faith finds particular application in situations where one party is invested with a discretionary power affecting the rights of another. Such power must be exercised in good faith. The exercise of discretionary powers is evaluated under the implied covenant to assure that the promises of the contract are effective and in accordance with the parties' legitimate expectations. However, the covenant cannot be read to prohibit a party from doing that which is expressly permitted by an agreement. On the contrary, as a general matter, implied terms should never be read to vary express terms.

HN20[] Contract Interpretation, Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Under New Jersey law, even when a party has acted consistent with the contract's literal terms, the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing allows a court to judge whether a party has exercised bad faith or ill motive in carrying out discretionary activities to which it has been granted unilateral authority by the contract. Thus, in exercising discretionary authority as expressly authorized by an agreement, if a party does so arbitrarily, unreasonably, or capriciously, with the objective of preventing the other party from receiving its reasonably expected fruits of the contract, the party taking the action may breach the covenant. A breach of the good faith obligation must include a finding of improper motive: Without bad motive or intention, discretionary decisions that happen to result in economic disadvantage to the other party are of no legal significance.

A claim for unfair competition under the California Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., may be brought by a person who has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204. Therefore, to establish standing under the UCL a plaintiff must (1) establish a loss or deprivation of money or property sufficient to qualify as injury in fact, i.e., economic injury, and (2) show that that economic injury was the result of, i.e., caused by, the unfair business practice that is the gravamen of the claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN22[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

A plaintiff proceeding on a claim of misrepresentation as the basis of his or her California Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., action must demonstrate actual reliance on the allegedly deceptive or misleading statements, in accordance with well-settled principles regarding the element of reliance in ordinary fraud actions. Consequently, a plaintiff must show that the misrepresentation was an immediate cause of the injury-producing conduct. However, a plaintiff is not required to allege that the challenged misrepresentations were the sole or even the decisive cause of the injury-producing conduct. Reliance as used in the ordinary fraud context has always been understood to mean reliance on a statement for its truth and accuracy. It follows that a UCL fraud plaintiff must allege he or she was motivated to act or refrain from action based on the truth or falsity of a defendant's statement, not merely on the fact it was made.

The California Unfair Competition Law (UCL), *Cal. To establish a violation of the UCL, a plaintiff may establish a violation under any one of these prongs. To state a cause of action based on an unlawful business act or practice under the UCL, a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to show a violation of some underlying law.

HN25[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Fraudulent, as used in the California Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., does not refer to the common law tort of fraud but only requires a showing that members of the public are likely to be deceived. Although fraud is not a necessary element of a claim under the UCL, where a plaintiff alleges a unified course of fraudulent conduct and relies entirely on that course of conduct as the basis of that claim, the claim is said to be grounded in fraud or to sound in fraud, and the pleading as a whole must satisfy the particularity requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). To satisfy Rule 9(b), the plaintiff must include the who, what, when, where, and how of the fraud. The plaintiff must set forth what is false or misleading about a statement, and why it is false. A claim for fraud must be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN26[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

In consumer cases, the California Supreme Court has not established a definitive test to determine whether a business practice is unfair under the California Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. A split of authority has developed among the California Courts of Appeal, which have applied three tests for unfairness in consumer cases. The test applied in one line of cases requires that the public policy which is a predicate to a consumer unfair competition action under the unfair prong of the UCL must be tethered to specific constitutional, statutory, or regulatory provisions. A second line of cases applies a test to determine whether the alleged business practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers and requires the court to weigh the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim. The test applied in a third line of cases draws on the definition of "unfair" in Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45(n), and requires that (1) the consumer injury must be substantial; (2) the injury must not be outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or competition; and (3) it must be an injury that consumers themselves could not reasonably have avoided.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

Contracts Law > Remedies > Restitution

HN30[] Types of Contracts, Quasi Contracts

Although there is some disagreement among California courts as to whether unjust enrichment may be asserted as a standalone claim under California law, the United States District Court for the Northern District of California has recognized that the confusion is largely semantic. The court explained that even though California law may not recognize unjust enrichment as an independent claim, such a claim may be understood as one for restitution, which is recognized under California law.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Restitution

HN31[] Remedies, Restitution

To state a claim for restitution, a plaintiff must plead receipt of a benefit and the unjust retention of the benefit at the expense of another. Even when a person has received a benefit from another, he is required to make restitution only if the circumstances of its receipt or retention are such that, as between the two persons, it is unjust for him to retain it. Case law explains that restitution may be awarded in lieu of breach of contract damages when the parties had an express contract, but it was procured by fraud or is unenforceable or ineffective for some reason. To prevail on a claim for restitution, a plaintiff need not establish bad faith on the part of the defendant, so long as the recipient of the funds was not entitled to the funds.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > Scope of Declaratory Judgments

HN32[] Remedies, Injunctions

Injunctive relief is a remedy and not, in itself, a cause of action, and a cause of action must exist before injunctive relief may be granted. Additionally, a claim for declaratory relief is duplicative and unnecessary when it is commensurate with the relief sought through other causes of action.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > General Overview

HN33[] Preliminary Considerations, Venue

Generally, venue must be established as to each cause of action. However, if venue is proper on one claim, the court may find pendent venue for claims that are closely related. The decision to apply pendent venue to closely related claims is a discretionary decision. A court may consider the principles of judicial economy, convenience, avoidance of piecemeal litigation, and fairness to the litigants in making its decision.

Civil Procedure > ... > Venue > Federal Venue Transfers > Convenience Transfers

HN34[] Federal Venue Transfers, Convenience Transfers

28 U.S.C.S. § 1404(a) allows the court to transfer an action for the convenience of parties and witnesses and in the interest of justice to any other district or division where it might have been brought. Section 1404(a) displaces the common law doctrine of forum non conveniens and differs from forum non conveniens in that it allows courts to transfer actions in the interest of justice rather than having to dismiss them. However, courts draw on forum non conveniens considerations when deciding whether a 28 U.S.C.S. § 1404 transfer is appropriate. In particular, courts considering this issue balance the preference that is traditionally accorded the plaintiff's choice of forum against the burden to the defendant of litigating in an inconvenient forum. The defendant must make a strong showing of inconvenience to upset the plaintiff's choice of forum.

[*934] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS [Docket No. 48]

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs Patricia McNeary-Calloway, Colin MacKinnon, Terrie McKinnon, Andrea North, and Sheila M. Mayko (collectively "Plaintiffs") initiated this putative class action on June 20, 2011, challenging Defendants JPMorgan Chase, N.A. and Chase Bank USA, N.A.'s (together "Defendants," or "Chase") practice of purchasing "force-placed" hazard insurance policies for home mortgage borrowers who fail to maintain adequate insurance. Defendants now bring a Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint ("the Motion"). Plaintiffs oppose the Motion. The parties have consented to the jurisdiction of the undersigned magistrate judge pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(c). For the reasons stated below, the Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part.

II. REQUESTS FOR JUDICIAL NOTICE

Defendants request that the Court take judicial notice of three documents that are matters of public record. Request for Judicial Notice in Support of Defendants' Motion [3] to Dismiss Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint ("Defs.' RJN"), 1-2. Plaintiff has not objected to Defendant's request or challenged the authenticity of any of the attached documents. Accordingly, the Court takes judicial notice of these records pursuant to Rule 201 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. Further, HN1[] the Court may consider these documents, along with the allegations in Plaintiffs' complaint, on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights v. City and County of San Francisco, 464 F. Supp. 2d 938, 941 (N.D. Cal. 2006).

Plaintiffs also request that the Court take judicial notice of three documents that are matters of public record. Plaintiffs' Request for Judicial Notice ("Pls.' RJN"). Defendants have not objected to Plaintiffs' request or challenged the authenticity of any of the attached documents. Accordingly, the Court takes judicial notice of these records pursuant to Rule 201 of the Federal Rules of Evidence.

III. BACKGROUND

A. Factual Background[1]

Defendants JPMorgan Chase and Chase Bank originate mortgage loans and acquire loans from other lenders. Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), ¶ 58. Prior to its merger into JPMorgan, Chase Home Finance acted as the servicer to these loans. Id. Each loan is secured by a deed of trust on the underlying property. Id. In order to protect its interest in the secured property, mortgage loan contracts typically allow the lender or third party servicer to "force-place" hazard insurance when the homeowner fails to maintain such insurance. Id. at ¶ 60. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants have purchased force-placed insurance ("FPI") "from insurers that provide a financial benefit to Defendants and/or their affiliates and at rates that far exceed borrower-purchased hazard insurance (while providing substantially [*935] less coverage)." Id. at ¶ 4. Additionally, Plaintiffs maintain that FPI policies are often improperly backdated to collect premiums for periods that have already passed. Id. at ¶ 2. Such policies can also be duplicative, where FPI coverage [5] becomes effective immediately following the termination of the borrower's policy, because the lender is temporarily protected under the Lender's Loss Payable Endorsement (LLPE) in the borrower's policy. Id. at ¶ 86.

Plaintiffs bring this action on behalf of a purported nationwide class consisting of all persons whose hazard insurance was force-placed by Defendants beginning June 16, 2007. Id. at ¶ 123. Plaintiffs' action also includes two purported subclasses, a California subclass and a New Jersey subclass. Id.

The specific allegations concerning the Plaintiffs' FPI policies are as follows:

(1) Patricia McNeary-Calloway

On or about September 13, 2007, Ms. McNeary-Calloway and her husband, James B. Calloway, Jr., obtained a $540,000 refinance mortgage loan from Chase Bank, secured by their primary residency in Oakland, California. Id. at ¶ 18. In connection with their mortgage loan, Ms. McNeary-Calloway and her husband purchased a hazard insurance policy from California Casualty with an annual premium of $1,640. Id. at ¶ 19.

On July 4, 2009, Mr. Calloway passed away due to complications from a serious illness. Id. at ¶ 20. During Mr. Calloway's illness and following his death, Ms. McNeary-Calloway [6] faced financial difficulties and was unable to make her hazard insurance payments. Id. Her policy lapsed effective August 26, 2009. Id. On or about January 8, 2010, Chase Home Finance purchased a one-year insurance policy with American Security Insurance Company ("ASIC"), backdated to August 26, 2009, with an annual premium of $4,233, charged to Ms. McNeary-Calloway's escrow account. Id. at ¶ 21. The policy was backdated, despite the fact that there was no damage to the property or claims arising out of the property for the lapse period. Id. The ASIC policy provided substantially less coverage than Ms. McNeary-Calloway's previous policy. Id. at ¶ 22.

In September 2010, Ms. McNeary-Calloway received a letter from Chase Home Finance, stating that, effective August 26, 2010, Chase Home Finance had renewed the FPI policy for another year at the same rate. Id. at ¶ 24. Following the receipt of this letter, Ms. McNeary-Calloway obtained her own insurance policy from Farmers Insurance Group with an annual premium of $1,103 and an effective date of September 1, 2010. Id. at ¶ 25. After receiving notice of this policy, Chase Home Finance sent Ms. McNeary-Calloway a letter stating that it canceled [7] the FPI policy, but charged her escrow account for retroactive coverage for the period extending from August 26, 2010 to September 1, 2010. Id. at ¶ 26.

(2) Colin and Terrie MacKinnon

[1] The Court assumes the allegations in the complaint to be true for the purposes of this motion. See Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 338 (9th Cir. 1996) [4] (HN2[]) on motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the court assumes the facts alleged in the complaint are true).

Plaintiffs Colin and Terrie MacKinnon ("the MacKinnons") reside in San Diego, California, having purchased their home in 1994 with a loan from Royal Bank of Canada. Id. at ¶ 27. In July 2005, the MacKinnons refinanced through an online mortgage broker and Chase Home Finance purchased the loan very shortly after closing. Id. The MacKinnons had hazard insurance through AAA with an annual premium of $440. Id. Unbeknownst to them, the MacKinnons' homeowners' insurance policy lapsed on July 20, 2008. Id. at ¶ 28. The MacKinnons believe that the lapse was due to a computer error on the part of AAA. Id.

[*936] On November 5, 2010, Chase Home Finance sent the MacKinnons a notice stating that an FPI policy had been purchased from ASIC with an annual premium of $1,782, and backdated to cover the period between August 18, 2009 and August 18, 2010. Id. at ¶ 29. The MacKinnons do not recall seeing the notice at the time. Id. at ¶ 30. They later became aware of the lapse in coverage in December 2010 and immediately reinstated [8] their AAA policy, effective December 10, 2010. Id.

In January 2011, the MacKinnons noticed two charges to their escrow account for FPI. Id. at ¶ 31. Specifically, on October 27, 2010, Chase Home Finance charged the MacKinnons a premium of $1,782 for a FPI policy backdated to cover the period from August 18, 2009 to August 18, 2010. Id. Three days later, on October 30, 2010, Chase Home Finance charged the MacKinnons a premium of $1,782 for an FPI policy backdated to cover the period from August 18, 2010 to August 18, 2011. Id. Once Chase Home Finance received proof of the MacKinnons' insurance policy reinstated as of December 10, 2010, it provided a pro-rated refund of $1,226 for the period of December 10, 2010 through August 18, 2011. Id. at ¶ 32. Accordingly, the MacKinnons were charged a total of at least $2,338 for FPI policies. Id. There was no damage to the property or claims arising out of the property for the lapse period. Id. at ¶ 33.

(3) Andrea North

Plaintiff Andrea North resides in Yorba Linda, California. Id. at ¶ 35. On or about April 3, 2008, Ms. North obtained a loan from JPMorgan for the purchase of her home. [2] Id. Ms. North obtained a homeowner's insurance policy from [9] State National Insurance Co. with an annual premium of $1,084. Id. However, after Ms. North became seriously ill in 2009, her homeowner's insurance policy was canceled effective April 23, 2009, for non-payment of the premium. Id.

On December 8, 2009, Chase Home Finance charged Ms. Woo and Ms. North $5,377 for a FPI policy from ASIC, backdated to April 23, 2009. Id. at ¶ 36. Ms. North's FPI policy was backdated, despite the fact that there was no damage to the property or claims arising out of the property for the lapse period. Id. On May 2, 2010, Chase Home Finance sent Ms. Woo and Ms. North a letter stating that it had renewed the policy for another $5,377, effective April 23, 2010. Id. at ¶ 37. Subsequently, Ms. Woo and Ms. North obtained their own insurance policy from Towers Select Insurance Co., effective June 8, 2010, for an annual premium of $1,134. Id. at ¶ 38.

Chase Home Finance canceled the second FPI policy effective June 8, 2010, but did not refund the initial $5,377 for the first FPI policy or the amount charged for the second FPI policy in effect from April 23, 2010 [10] until June 8, 2010. Id. at ¶ 39.

(4) Sheila M. Mayko

Plaintiff Sheila M. Mayko resides in Riverside, New Jersey. Id. at ¶ 40. On or about January 11, 2002, Ms. Mayko purchased a residence at 200 Heulings Avenue, Riverside, NJ with a loan obtained from Chase Bank. Id. On or about June 30, 2003, Ms. Mayko obtained a $135,209 refinance loan with Chase Bank secured by the property at 200 Heulings Avenue. Id.

In January 2010, Ms. Mayko missed the 2010 hazard insurance premium payment of $1,064. Id. at ¶ 42. On January 19, [*937] 2010, Ms. Mayko's hazard insurance company, Preferred Mutual Insurance Company, sent a notice of cancellation stating the policy would be cancelled effective February 23, 2010 if payment was not made.

[2] Ms. North's mother, Helen Woo, was a co-signer on the note, but was not a party to the mortgage contract.

Id. at ¶ 43. On January 26, 2010, Chase paid Ms. Mayko's annual premium of $1,064 to Preferred Mutual from Ms. Mayko's escrow account, leaving that account with a negative balance. Id. at ¶ 44.

Chase subsequently canceled Ms. Mayko's existing policy and force-placed coverage with another carrier. Id. at ¶ 46. On July 23, 2010, Chase Home Finance sent Ms. Mayko a letter informing her that it had force-placed a one-year homeowner's insurance policy on her property with ASIC at [11] a cost of $3,177.34. Id. at ¶ 47. The insurance was backdated to May 13, 2010. Id. at ¶ 50. The insurance premium payment was charged against Ms. Mayko's escrow account. Id. at ¶ 47. The FPI policy supplied substantially less coverage than Ms. Mayko's previous policy in that it protected only Chase Home Finance and covered only the structure of the home. Id. at ¶ 48. Additionally, Mayko's dwelling was insured for the same amount under the FPI policy as it was under Ms. Mayko's existing policy ($328,000). Id. at ¶ 49.

Plaintiffs assert the following seven claims in their FAC:

(1) Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act ("RESPA"), *12 U.S.C. § 2607: Plaintiffs claim that Defendants violated RESPA's prohibition on accepting fees, kickbacks, or things of value in two ways. First, pursuant to "captive reinsurance arrangements," [3] Defendants' subsidiary received an "unlawfully excessive" split of borrowers' FPI premiums. Id. at ¶¶ 65, 140. Second, Defendants unlawfully received commissions from FPI providers in return for agreeing to exclusively force-place insurance with those providers. Id. at ¶¶ 66, 141. Under the commission arrangement, "the provider of the force-placed insurance policy pays [12] a commission either directly to the servicer or to a subsidiary posing as an insurance 'agent.' Typically, under such an arrangement, commissions are paid to a 'licensed insurance [*938] agency' that is simply an affiliate or subsidiary of the servicer and exists only to collect the kickbacks or commissions collected from the force-placed insurance provider." Id. at ¶ 66. These reinsurance and commission arrangements, totaling as much as forty percent of the premiums paid by homeowners, were not for services actually furnished or performed, and/or exceeded the value of such services. Id. at ¶¶ 65, 142.

Plaintiffs claim they were harmed by the unlawful kickback scheme because the "kickbacks and unearned fees unnecessarily and artificially inflate settlement service charges," and thus Plaintiffs have been overcharged. Id. at ¶ 146. Even if Plaintiffs weren't overcharged, "RESPA section 8(d)(2) indicates that damages are based on the settlement service amount with no requirement [of an] overcharge." Id. at ¶ 145.

[3] Under a "captive reinsurance arrangement," according to Plaintiffs, the provider of the FPI policy agrees to reinsure the FPI policy with a subsidiary, or "captive reinsurer," of the referring servicer. FAC, at ¶ 67. In exchange for receiving a portion of the borrowers' premiums, the subsidiary is supposed to assume a portion of the insurer's risk of loss. Id. Defendants purportedly agreed to take on this risk under an "excess of loss" captive reinsurance arrangement. Id. at ¶ 102. Plaintiffs, however, allege that the excess of loss arrangement "does not necessarily result in any actual 'losses' [13] being shifted to the reinsurer." Id. at ¶ 99. Plaintiffs explain why this is so as follows:

> [I]n an excess of loss reinsurance arrangement, the reinsurer is liable only for a specified corridor or "band" of loss, with the losses below and above the band being covered by the force-placed insurance provider. In other words, the reinsurer is liable only for claims, or a percentage thereof, above a particular point, commonly known as an attachment or entry point, and subject to a ceiling, commonly known as a detachment or exit point. Under this structure, then, the reinsurer's liability begins, if ever, only when the force-placed insurance provider's incurred losses and expenses reach the attachment point and ends when such losses reach the detachment point.
> The likelihood of the reinsurer experiencing any real losses under this arrangement depends not only on the amount of losses paid by the force-placed insurer (i.e. whether the amount of claims paid by the insurer ever reaches the band where the reinsurer's responsibility to pay claims attaches) but also on whether the reinsurance agreement between the reinsurer and the force-placed insurance provider exposes the reinsurer to any real [14] possibility that it may be required to contribute its own money when called upon by the force-placed insurance provider to pay for its share of losses.

Id. at ¶¶ 100-101.

(2) Breach of the Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing: Plaintiffs claim that the mortgage contracts between Plaintiffs and Defendants, to the extent those contracts allow Defendants to force-place insurance, forbid Defendants from force-placing insurance "capriciously" or in "bad faith." Id. at ¶ 152. Plaintiffs claim Defendants breached this duty of good faith in at least the following respects:

- "Failing to make any effort whatsoever to maintain borrowers' existing insurance policies and, instead . . . [,] forcing borrowers to pay for insurance from providers of Defendants' choice;"
- Entering into [15] arrangements with FPI providers whereby Defendants received unlawful kickbacks and commissions, resulting in Defendants overcharging Plaintiffs for the cost of insurance;
- "Failing to seek competitive bids [for FPI policies] on the open market or otherwise making good faith efforts to reasonably exercise their discretion;"
- "Assessing excessive, unreasonable, and unnecessary insurance policy premiums against Plaintiffs and Class and misrepresenting the reason for the cost of the policies;"
- "Backdating force-placed insurance policies to cover time periods which have already passed and for which there was already absolutely no risk of loss . . . due to the passing of time and/or the lender's coverage under a Lender's Loss Payable Endorsement;"
- Misrepresenting borrowers' obligation to pay for such backdated coverage;
- "Failing to provide borrowers with any opportunity whatsoever to opt out of having their force-placed insurance policies provided by an insurer with whom Defendants had a commission and/or captive reinsurance arrangement."

Id. at ¶ 153. Plaintiffs claim they have suffered damages as a result of the above breaches. Id. at ¶ 154.

(3) Breach of Contract: Plaintiffs claim that [16] Defendants have breached their obligation in the mortgage contracts to exercise their discretion to force-place insurance "in a reasonable manner." Id. at ¶ 158. Specifically, Defendants engaged in three practices that constitute such a breach of the contract: (1) "requiring borrowers to pay amounts for insurance coverage that exceed the amounts necessary to protect the mortgagee's interest in the secured property;" (2) backdating FPI policies to cover periods of time where no loss occurred; and (3) "requiring borrowers to pay for FPI policies despite the existence of a Lender's Loss Payable Endorsement . . . ." Id. at ¶ 159. Plaintiffs claim they [*939] were damaged as a result of Defendants' breach. Id. at ¶ 161.

(4) Unlawful Business Practices Under *Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq.: Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' actions and business practices are unfair, unlawful, and/or fraudulent under Section 17200. Plaintiffs base their UCL claim on Defendants' actions and practices as described in their RESPA, breach of the implied covenant, and breach of contract claims. Id. at ¶ 166. Plaintiffs claim they have lost money or property as the result of Defendants' conduct. Id. at ¶ 167. Plaintiffs [17] seek damages, disgorgement of profits, restitution, and an injunction preventing Defendants' conduct. Id. at ¶ 168.

(5) Violation of the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act ("NJCFA"), *N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:8-2: Plaintiffs claim that Defendants have engaged in "unconscionable acts and practices," as described in the preceding claims, in violation of the NJCFA. Id. at ¶ 172. Plaintiffs claim that such practices are unconscionable because "they are unethical, immoral, oppressive, and harmful and depart from the standard of good faith, honesty . . . and fair dealing established under the NJCFA." Id. at ¶ 171. Further, "Defendants' conduct was deceptive and fraudulent, concealing numerous material facts and misrepresenting others." Id. Plaintiffs have suffered damages as a result of this conduct. Id. Plaintiffs seek damages, treble damages, restitution, injunctive relief, and attorney's fees, among other forms of relief. Id. at ¶ 177.

(6) Unjust Enrichment/Disgorgement: Plaintiffs assert a claim for unjust enrichment, alleging that Defendants wrongfully obtained "millions of dollars in purported commission payments and reinsurance premiums," all derived from borrowers' FPI premium payments. Id. [18] at ¶ 179. Plaintiffs seek restitution and disgorgement of these funds. Id. at ¶ 182.

(7) Declaratory and Injunctive Relief: Finally, Plaintiffs claim that they, and the class they purport to represent, will be irreparably injured in the future by Defendants' conduct. Id. at ¶ 184. Accordingly, Plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief asserting:

> that Defendants: (a) are prohibited from force-placing insurance when the servicer knows or has reason to know that the borrower has a policy in effect that meets the minimum requirement of the loan documents; (b) cannot force-place insurance that is in excess of the replacement cost of the improvements on the mortgaged property; (c) are prohibited from purchasing the force-placed insurance from a subsidiary, affiliate, or any entity in which they have an ownership interest; (d) are prohibited from splitting fees, giving or accepting kickbacks or referral fees, or accepting anything of value in relation to the purchase or placement of the force-placed insurance; (e) must make reasonable efforts to continue or reestablish the borrower's existing insurance policy if there is a lapse in payment; [] (f) must purchase any force-placed insurance [19] for a commercially reasonable price; and (g) are prohibited from backdating force-placed insurance policies absent evidence of damage to the property or claims arising out of the property during any lapse periods.

B. The Wahl Settlement

On June 2, 2011, after nearly three and a half years of litigation, a court in this district certified a class for settlement purposes which comprised the following:

> [A]ll current and former California homeowner/borrowers who during the period from January 28, 2004 through [June 2, 2011] were additional insureds under a lender and/or servicer placed [*940] residential fire or hazard insurance policy issued by American Security Insurance Company ("ASIC") insuring improvements to the homeowner/borrowers' real property (an "LPI policy"), who paid some or all of the first year premiums for an ASIC LPI policy.

*Wahl v. Am. Sec. Ins. Co., C08-00555-RS, Dckt. No. 176, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59559 at 8, Findings and Order Certifying Class for Settlement Purposes, Directing the Issuance of Class Notice, and Scheduling a Fairness Hearing (N.D. Cal.). The claims in the case were based on ASIC's alleged practice of force-placing hazard insurance for periods during which prior hazard insurance [20] would have been in effect for the mortgage lender pursuant to the homeowners' LLPE had it not been cancelled by ASIC's placement of FPI.

That class was finally certified and a settlement entered into judgment on September 30, 2011. The settlement includes a Release that "forever discharge[s]" the Releasees "from any claims or liabilities arising from or related to the Released Claims." Wahl, Dckt. No. 190, Final Order and Judgment, at *4. For purposes of the Release, the term "Realeasees" means:

> American Security Insurance Company, doing business in its own name, and its predecessors, successors and assigns, and all of its respective past and present divisions, subsidiaries, parent companies, and affiliated companies (which shall include any person or entity which Controls, is Controlled by, or is under Common Control with any such party), including but not limited to any direct or indirect subsidiary of Assurant, Inc., and all of the officers, directors, employees, agents, brokers, distributors, representatives and attorneys of all such entities. Releasees shall also specifically include all lenders, servicers, agents or any of their affiliated entities purchasing or originating the [21] issuance of a Policy or Policies by American Security Insurance Company, and all of their respective past and present divisions, subsidiaries, parent companies, and affiliated companies (which shall include any person or entity which Controls, is Controlled by, or is under Common Control with any such party). The term "Control" (including without limitation, with correlative meaning, the terms "Controlled by" and "under Common Control with"), as used with respect to any entity, means the possession, directly or indirectly, of the power to direct or cause the direction of the management and policies of such entity, whether through ownership of voting securities or otherwise.

Id. at *5 (emphasis added).

The term "Released Claims" means "all claims and causes of action arising out of the facts alleged in the Action which have been, or could have been, may be, or could be alleged or asserted in the Action by Plaintiff or the Class Members against Releasees." Id. (emphasis added).

Plaintiff Andrea North is the only member of the class who opted-out of the settlement that is a plaintiff in the present case. Wahl, Dckt. No. 180, Declaration of Tore Hodne in Support of Reply to Motion for Final [22] Approval of Class Action Settlement.

C. The Motion

Defendants filed their Motion to Dismiss on November 21, 2011, arguing that each cause of action fails to state a claim for relief under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

Defendants first assert that the Wahl settlement precludes all of the claims brought by the individual California Plaintiffs—with the exception of Plaintiff Ms. North, who opted-out of the settlement—and the purported California subclass. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' [*941] First Amended Complaint ("Motion"), 9. Defendants contend that the "General Release in Wahl covered any and all past, present, or future claims that the California named-Plaintiffs or the putative California subclass had, may have had or could have had against Chase as the lender or servicer of the loans under which the American Security lender-placed fire and hazard insurance policies at issue in this Action arose." Motion at 9 (citing RJN, Ex. A ("Wahl Final Order and Judgment"), 29). Defendants further assert that the scope of the Release in Wahl "'specifically include[s] all [23] lenders, servicers, . . . purchasing or originating the issuance of a Policy or Policies by American Security Insurance Company.'" Id. at 10 (citing citing RJN, Ex. A ("Wahl Final Order and Judgment"), 29). Because Defendants are lenders and/or servicers purchasing or originating insurance policies by ASIC, Defendants argue they are deemed Releasees and therefore all claims released in Wahl now brought by any member of the Wahl settlement class fail as a matter of law. Id. Defendants add that, to the extent that Plaintiff Ms. North or any of the other seven Chase-related California opt-outs want to assert claims under California law, they must do so by way of individual actions, not as class actions under Rule 23, because the putative class is so small and easily identifiable as to make joinder of all members practicable as a matter of law. Id. at 11 (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(1)).

Even if the Wahl opt-out Plaintiff, Ms. North, and the New Jersey Plaintiff, Ms. Mayko, pursue their individual claims, Defendants assert that each claim in the FAC fails as a matter of law for the reasons stated below.

Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act, 12 U.S.C. § 2607 et seq.: Defendants argue that [24] Plaintiffs' RESPA claim fails for two reasons. First, the conduct Plaintiffs allege falls outside the scope of RESPA. Id. at 11-12. Specifically, RESPA prohibits kickbacks, unearned fees, and fee-splitting only in connection with "a real estate settlement service." Id. (citing 12 U.S.C. §§ 2607(a) & (b)). Because "real estate settlement" under RESPA is synonymous with "closing" of the loan, Defendants argue, RESPA governs only conduct directly related to the closing of the loan. Id. at 12 (citing Fitch v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 709 F. Supp. 2d 510, 514 (E.D. La. 2010); *Ford v. New Century Mortgage Corp., 797 F. Supp. 2d 862, 2011 WL 2490720, at 4 (N.D. Ohio 2011); *Gens v. Wachovia Mortgage Corp., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49709, 2011 WL 1791601, at 6 (N.D. Cal. May 10, 2011); 24 C.F.R. § 3500.2(b)). Defendants contend that federal courts, including the Ninth Circuit, have drawn a "temporal distinction" whereby RESPA's prohibition on kickbacks, fees, and fee-splitting applies only "to fees or costs 'payable at or before settlement' of the loan, not to 'post-settlement fees paid by mortgagors after they have purchased their houses' and after the loan has closed." Id. (quoting Bloom v. Martin, 77 F.3d 318, 321 (9th Cir. 1996); [25] citing Greenwald v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n of Boston, 446 F. Supp. 620, 625 (D. Mass. 1978), aff'd, 591 F.2d 417 (1st Cir. 1979)). Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' RESPA claim falls outside of RESPA's scope for one additional reason: RESPA "'does not extend to overcharges,'" at least to the extent that the overcharge was for services actually rendered. Id. (quoting Martinez v. Wells Fargo Home Mortgage, Inc., 598 F.3d 549, 554 (9th Cir. 2010)). Accordingly, Defendants contend that the claim fails as a matter of law since the alleged kickbacks and fees for FPI incurred after the closing of the loan, and because the alleged overcharge is not covered by RESPA.

Second, Defendants argue that because Plaintiffs' loans closed between 2002 and 2008, Plaintiffs' RESPA claim, brought in [*942] 2011, is time-barred under RESPA's one-year statute of limitations. Id. at 12-13 (citing 12 U.S.C. § 2614; *Parmer v. Wachovia, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43866, 2011 WL 1807218, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 22, 2011); *Gens, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49709, 2011 WL 1791601, at 6). Defendants contend that equitable tolling does not apply here because Plaintiffs' mortgage contracts "expressly warn" that if the borrower failed to maintain appropriate insurance, Defendants may force-place [26] such insurance at a significant increase in cost and altered coverage. Id. at 13. Defendants reject any attempt by Plaintiffs to justify the delay based on lack of expertise or the need to obtain counsel. Id. at 13-14 (citing Santos v. U.S. Bank N.A., 716 F. Supp. 2d 970, 977 (E.D. Cal. 2010); Garcia v. Brockway, 526 F.3d 456, 466 (9th Cir. 2008)).

Breach of the Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing & Breach of Contract:

Defendants assert that both Plaintiffs' contract claims fail as a matter of law for the same reason: Plaintiffs' mortgage contracts are unambiguous in establishing Defendants' prerogative to force-place insurance "in the amount and for the periods that Chase required." Id. at 14-15 (citing FAC, Exs. 1, 7, 17 at ¶ 5, 18 at ¶ 4). Additionally, the contracts show that the parties "agreed that this amount would be sufficient to protect Chase's interest in the Property, not that of Plaintiffs." Id. at 15. Defendants assert that the "unambiguous language in the Plaintiffs' contracts trumps the allegations in their complaint" and the Court should therefore grant Defendants' motion to dismiss as to both contract claims. Id. at 14-15 (citing *Barrous v. BP P.L.C., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108933, 2010 WL 4024774, 4 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 13, 2010); [27] Thompson v. Ill. Dep't of Prof'l Regulation, 300 F.3d 750, 754 (7th Cir. 2002); *Hayes v. Wells Fargo Home Mortgage, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79769, 2006 WL 3193743, at 4 (E.D. La. Oct. 31, 2006); *Rodriguez v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79632, 2011 WL 2946381, 3 (E.D. Cal. July 21, 2011); Lass v. Bank of Am., N.A., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89519 (D. Mass. Aug. 10, 2011)).

Unlawful Business Practices Under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq.: Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to state a claim under any of the UCL's three prongs, and contend that Plaintiffs' seek remedies—damages and disgorgement of profits—not allowed under the UCL. Id. at 18 (citing In re Napster Inc. Copyright Litig., 354 F. Supp. 2d 1113, 1126 (N.D. Cal. 2005)).

Defendants assert that Plaintiffs' claim under the "unlawful" prong of the UCL rises and falls with their RESPA claim. Id. at 16. Because Plaintiffs' RESPA claim fails, Plaintiffs' cannot maintain their UCL claim based on Defendants' alleged unlawful conduct. Id. Plaintiffs' claim based on the "unfair" prong also fails since Plaintiffs "cannot satisfy any of the tests that California courts use" to evaluate whether conduct is unfair. Id. at 16-17. Pursuant to those tests, Defendants contend that [28] Plaintiffs "have not pled any facts showing that Chase's alleged conduct 'threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.'" Id. at 17 (quoting Byars v. SCME Mortgage Bankers, Inc., 109 Cal. App. 4th 1134, 1147, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 796 (2003)). Nor have Plaintiffs pled facts sufficient to establish any of the three factors under the balancing test: "'(1) the consumer injury must be substantial; (2) the injury must not be outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or competition; and (3) it must be an injury that consumers themselves could not reasonably have avoided.'" Id. (quoting Davis v. Ford Motor Credit Co., [*943] 179 Cal. App. 4th 581, 597, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 697 (2009)). Finally, under the "fraudulent" prong, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' claim fails because Plaintiffs have not pled the alleged fraud with any particularity, Id. (citing Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1124 (9th Cir. 2009)), nor can Plaintiffs demonstrate that members of the public are likely to be deceived by Defendants' conduct in light of the unambiguous [29] language in the mortgage contracts. Id. (citing Buller v. Sutter Health, 160 Cal. App. 4th 981, 986, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 47 (2008)).

Violation of the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act ("NJCFA"), N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:8-2:

Defendants assert that Plaintiff's claim under the NJCFA fails for at least three reasons. First, Plaintiffs fail to establish any unlawful conduct as required by the NJCFA. Id. at 18 (citing N.J. Citizens Action v. Schering-Plough Corp., 367 N.J. Super. 8, 842 A.2d 174, 176 (N.J. 2003)). Second, Plaintiff Mayko makes no allegation, and cannot make any allegation, that she was induced or lured into making any purchase. Id. (citing Joe Hand Promotions, Inc. v. Mills, 567 F. Supp.2d 719, 724 (D.N.J. 2008)). Third, Plaintiffs fail to allege any specific fraud under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) as they must to state a NJCFA claim. Id. (citing *Capogrosso v. State Farm Ins. Co., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97544, 2009 WL 3447068, at 3 (D.N.J. 2009)).

Alternatively, Defendants contend that, if the Court declines to dismiss Plaintiffs' NJCFA claim on the merits, the claim should be dismissed or transferred for improper venue and/or forum non-conveniens. Id. at 19. Applying the principles of judicial economy, convenience, and fairness to the litigants, Defendants [30] argue that the Court should dismiss or transfer the case to New Jersey because all of the events related to the NJCFA claim occurred there. Id. at 19-20 (citing *Remley v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7990, 2001 WL 681257, at 3 (N.D. Cal. June 4, 2001); C.H. James & Co. v. Fed. Food Marketers Co., 927 F. Supp. 187, 190 (S.D. W.Va. 1996)).

Unjust Enrichment/Disgorgement & Injunctive and Declaratory Relief: Defendants argue that there is no independent cause of action for unjust enrichment. Id. at 19 (citing Bosinger v. Belden CDT, Inc., 358 Fed. Appx. 812, 815 (9th Cir. 2009); *Romero v. Mortgage Co., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69673, at 8 (N.D. Cal. June 28, 2011)). Likewise, injunctive relief is a remedy and not, in itself, a cause of action. Id. (citing *Gomez v. Wachovia Mortgage Corp., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3799, 2010 WL 291817, at 8 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 19, 2010); Peterson v. Wash. Mut. Bank, et al., 10-cv-01462-JCS, slip op. at *16-17 (N.D. Cal. July 29, 2010)). Declaratory relief is similarly not a cause action. Id. (citing Weiner v. Klais & Co., 108 F.3d 86, 92 (6th Cir. 1997); *Gomez, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3799, 2010 WL 291817, at 2). Accordingly, Defendants ask this Court to dismiss these claims with prejudice. Id.

D. The Opposition

In response to Defendants' [31] Motion, Plaintiffs reject Defendants' argument that the Wahl settlement precludes the claims of the non-opt-out California Plaintiffs and the California subclass. Plaintiffs contend that, despite the language in the Release, Defendants cannot be considered Releasees because Defendants were non-parties to the Wahl case, listed nowhere in the Wahl settlement documents, did not bargain for any benefit in, nor contribute to, the settlement, and were not even aware of the settlement until well after final approval. Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss ("Opposition"), 5. Plaintiffs also contend that the Release should reflect the settlement notice, which states that only ASIC will be released. Opposition [*944] at 5-6 (citing RJN, Ex. 3 (Wahl Notice of Class Action Settlement)).

Additionally, Plaintiffs apply the doctrine of res judicata and argue that their claims are not precluded by Wahl because that case involved different claims. Id. at 5. According to Plaintiffs, Wahl "focused exclusively on the insurer-defendant's provision of coverage backdated to the end of the expired policy thus overlapping with the extended coverage provided by the LLPE . . . ." Id. (citing RJN, Ex. [32] 1 (Wahl, FAC)). Plaintiffs contend that the first amended complaint in Wahl, unlike Plaintiffs' FAC, "contain[s] no allegations of lender misconduct, of collusion between any lender (much less [JPMorgan Chase]) and insurers to circumvent federal law, of unlawfully inflated excessive premiums for the force-placed insurance, of inappropriately limited coverage, of backdated policies beyond the timeframe of the LLPE, of RESPA prohibited kickbacks, or of any claims against the lender like those presented in this case." Id. Plaintiffs assert that the "interests" and "rights" sought to be protected by Plaintiffs were not addressed in Wahl and their claims are therefore not precluded. Id. at 6-7 (citing *Daniels v. Anaconda Minerals Co., 2011 US. Dist. LEXIS 23920, at 31 (D. Mont. Mar. 9, 2011)).

Plaintiffs further contend that Defendants cannot "categorically limit Plaintiffs' claims to those asserted in Wahl simply because they relate to force-placed insurance." Id. at 7. Rather, because the claims brought in Wahl do not arise from the "same factual predicate" as the "much broader" claims asserted against Defendants here, the settlement does not preclude the claims. Id. (citing RJN, Ex. [33] 2 (Wahl, Plaintiff's Motion for Preliminary Approval of Class Action Settlement); Hesse v. Sprint Corp., 598 F.3d 581, 590 (9th Cir. 2010); E. & J. Gallo Winery v. Encana Energy Servs., Inc., 388 F. Supp. 2d 1148, 1157 (E.D. Cal. 2005)). Plaintiffs do state that "[t]he sole common factor between the two cases is the existence of allegations surrounding the overlap between the LLPE and force-placed insurance." Id. at 8.

In addition to different claims, Plaintiffs argue that their case is not precluded because the injuries alleged by Plaintiffs "are plainly distinct from those alleged in Wahl." Id. at 7 (citing *Negrete v. Allianz Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113815, at 35 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 13, 2010)). "In Wahl, there were no damages sought from the lender[;] rescission of the force-place insurance contract was sought[.] [T]here was no relief sought with respect to the mortgage, and there were certainly no RESPA claims." Id.

Plaintiffs respond to Defendants' arguments regarding the specific claims asserted in Plaintiffs' FAC as follows.

Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act, 12 U.S.C. § 2607 et seq.: Plaintiffs reject Defendants' assertions that Plaintiffs' claim falls outside [34] RESPA's scope and that Plaintiffs' claim is time-barred.

First, Plaintiffs argue that the statutory language, a Department of Housing and Urban Development ("HUD") regulation, and case law support their conclusion that FPI is a "settlement service" under 12 U.S.C. § 2607(b). Regarding the HUD regulation, Plaintiffs cite to the following language in "Regulation X":

> Settlement service means any service provided in connection with a prospective or actual settlement, including, but not limited to, any one or more of the following:
> * * *
> (10) Provision of services involving mortgage insurance;
> [*945] (11) Provision of services involving hazard, flood, or other casualty insurance or homeowner's warranties;
> (12) Provision of services involving mortgage life, disability, or similar insurance designed to pay a mortgage loan upon disability or death of a borrower, but only if such insurance is required by the lender as a condition of the loan;

Id. at 9 (citing 24 C.F.R. § 3500.2(b) (2011)). Plaintiffs contend that this language "clearly" establishes that "settlement services include hazard insurance and other insurance 'required by the lender as a condition of the loan.'" Id.

Second, in further support of [35] their proposition that FPI is a settlement service, Plaintiffs analogize to cases holding that mortgage insurance qualifies as a settlement service. Id. at 9-10 (citing Munoz v. PHH Corp., 659 F. Supp. 2d 1094, 1099 (E.D. Cal. 2009); Kay v. Wells Fargo & Co., 247 F.R.D. 572, 576 (N.D. Cal. 2007); Alston v. Countrywide Fin. Corp., 585 F.3d 753, 756 n.2 (3d Cir. 2009)). Plaintiffs argue that the Munoz decision, in particular, "recognizes that the determinative factor with regard to whether a particular service qualifies as a '[s]ettlement service' for purposes of Section 8 is not when the payment is tendered but rather, whether the purchase of the service, and the corresponding obligation to pay, are required by the lender in order for the transaction to close." Id. at 10. Because FPI, like mortgage insurance, is required in order for the transaction to close, FPI should be considered a settlement service. Id.

Plaintiffs next attempt to distinguish cases cited by Defendants, including a case in this district directly on point. Plaintiffs argue that this Court should not follow Gens v. Wachovia Mortgage Corp., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49709 (N.D. Cal. May 10, 2011), because there the pro [36] se plaintiff was overly litigious, creating a tortured procedural history and leaving the court with little patience to conduct a "thoughtful analysis" into whether FPI qualifies as a settlement service. Id. at 11. Moreover, Plaintiffs argue, the court's holding that FPI is not a settlement service is dicta: the "primary reason the pro se plaintiff's RESPA claims were dismissed was because the claims were time-barred." Id. (citing *Gens, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49709, at 16-17).

Plaintiffs also reject Defendants' argument that RESPA "does not extend to overcharges." Id. at 11-12 (citing Motion at 12). Defendants' assertion that an "overcharge" does not fall under RESPA if the payment was for services that were actually performed is inapplicable here, Plaintiffs argue, because Defendants and their affiliates overcharged, but "did not provide any bona fide services." Id. at 12.

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that their RESPA claim is not barred by the one-year statute of limitations for two reasons. First, Plaintiff McNeary-Calloway filed her original complaint on June 20, 2011, which was less than a year after Defendants force-placed her hazard insurance "in or around September 5, 2010." Id. [37] (citing FAC at ¶ 24; FAC, Ex. 4 (McNeary-Calloway FPI Policy Notice)). Second, even if the claim falls outside the statute of limitations, Plaintiffs argue the statute should be equitably tolled. Id. Plaintiffs reject Defendants' contentions that the mortgage contracts disclosed all information relevant to Plaintiffs' claims, arguing instead that Defendants concealed the basis for such claims and it wasn't until, at the earliest, news reports in November 2010 revealed the true nature of the FPI industry that the statute should begin to run. Id. at 13-14. Plaintiffs contend that Defendants never disclosed that Defendants would receive a financial [*946] benefit, that their reinsurance arrangements did not actually provide for a real transfer of risk, and that Plaintiffs would be required to pay for redundant or unnecessary backdated coverage. Id. at 13.

Breach of the Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing & Breach of Contract:

Plaintiffs contend that their contract claims are viable because, while the mortgage contracts afforded Defendants the discretion to force-place insurance that is "required," the manner in which Defendants exercised this discretion breached the contract's express [38] terms and its implied covenant. Id. at 15. The contract "does not entitle Defendants to force-place backdated, unnecessary hazard insurance with unreasonably high premiums for which Defendants received an improper kickback." Id. Plaintiffs cite to two cases where courts found allegations of bad faith force-placement of insurance sufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss mortgage contract-based claims. Id. at 17 (citing Abels v. JPMC Bank, N.A., 678 F. Supp. 2d 1273 (S.D. Fla. 2009); Williams v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119136 (S.D. Fla. Oct. 14, 2011)). Plaintiffs conclude that whether Defendants properly exercised their discretion under the contract is a question of material fact not to be decided on a motion to dismiss. Id. at 16 (citing *Low v. SDI Vendome S.A., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27603, at 17 (C.D. Cal. Jan. 7, 2003)).

Unlawful Business Practices Under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq.: Plaintiffs reject Defendants' arguments that their UCL claim fails. Plaintiffs maintain that their claim is viable under the "unlawful" prong because they assert a valid RESPA claim. Id. at 18. Regarding the "unfair" prong, Plaintiffs assert that this district has adopted [39] a three-part test with the following elements for determining unfairness in a consumer class action: "'(1) a substantial consumer injury; (2) the injury outweighs any countervailing benefits to consumers or competition; and (3) the injury could reasonably been avoided.'" Id. at 19 (citing Kilgore v. KeyBank, N.A., 712 F. Supp. 2d 939, 951-52 (N.D. Cal. 2010)). Plaintiffs argue they were injured because they were required to "pay exorbitant prices for [FPI]" and forced to "pay for duplicative and unnecessary coverage." Id. Plaintiffs argue that this injury is not outweighed by any countervailing interest, and could not have reasonably been avoided. Id. at 19-20.

Plaintiffs also contend that they adequately state a claim under the "fraudulent" prong, having satisfied Rule 9(b) by identifying the who, what, where, when, and how of the alleged fraudulent conduct. Id. at 20. The scheme Plaintiffs lay out in their FAC is sufficiently particular, they assert. Id. (citing Linear Tech. v Applied Materials, Inc., 152 Cal. App. 4th 115, 134-5, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 221 (2007)). Plaintiffs reject Defendants' contention that Plaintiffs are unable to show that, given the language in the mortgage contracts, members of the general [40] public are likely to be deceived by Defendants' conduct. Id. Rather, Defendants' scheme is composed of "secret arrangements" undisclosed in the mortgage contracts, therefore making Defendants' reliance on the mortgage contracts unavailing. Id.

Finally, Plaintiffs make clear that they are seeking "disgorgement and/or restitution, not damages, from JPMC for its violations of the UCL." Id. at 21.

Violation of the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act ("NJCFA"), N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:8-2:

Plaintiffs argue that they have stated a cause of action under the NJCFA, despite Defendants' contentions to the contrary. First, Plaintiffs reject Defendants' assertion [*947] that Plaintiffs must establish an underlying unlawful act in order to state a NJCFA claim. Id. at 21-22. Instead, under the statute "an 'unlawful practice' is any 'unconscionable commercial practice, deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, or the knowing concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact.'" Id. (quoting N.J. S.A. §56:8-2; Cox v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 138 N.J. 2, 19, 647 A.2d 454, 463 (1994)). Plaintiffs maintain that, under the statute, "unconscionable" means a lack of "good faith and honesty." Id. [41] Defendants' FPI practices departed from this standard of good faith and honesty in several ways; specifically, Plaintiffs contend "that Defendants never told Plaintiffs that when force-placing insurance they would make no effort to shop for a reasonably priced policy, that Defendants did not disclose that they would receive a kickback for each policy force-placed, did not advise that no effort would be made to renew the existing policies, and did not disclose that the policies Defendants purchased for Plaintiffs would be backdated to cover periods during which no risk existed." Id. at 22.

Second, Plaintiffs reject Defendants' "narrow" construction of the NJCFA, requiring that the alleged conduct induced or lured Plaintiffs. Id. at 22-23. Plaintiffs contend that the statute requires only that the unlawful practice at issue be "'in connection with' the sale or advertisement of a commercial product or service or the 'subsequent performance' related thereto." Id. at 23 (citing N.J. S.A. §56:8-2). Plaintiffs argue that Defendants' practices were "in connection with" "Plaintiffs' entry into the initial mortgages or refinances and the [] purchase of [FPI]." Id.

Third, Plaintiffs argue that [42] they have pled their NJCFA claim with the particularity required by Rule 9(b). They contend that to satisfy Rule 9(b) in the context of a NJCFA claim in a class action complaint, "the complaint need only contain 'sufficient detail as to [a named plaintiff's] claims to apprise [a defendant] of that plaintiff's exact grounds for relief and the specific conduct that plaintiff charges.'" Id. at 24 (quoting Pacholec v. Home Depot USA, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68976 (D.N.J. Sept. 25, 2006)).

Finally, because viable claims asserted under California law exist, Plaintiffs insist that transfer of the NJCFA claim to the District of New Jersey is not warranted. Id. at 25. Plaintiffs ask this Court to apply the pendant venue doctrine in order to honor Plaintiffs' chosen forum. Id. Plaintiffs further contend that the California and New Jersey consumer claims "address the same [FPI] scheme," and California courts regularly adjudicate NJCFA claims in conjunction with other California consumer claims, particularly where the claims have a common nucleus of operative facts. Id. (citing In re Sony VAIO Computer Notebook Trackpad Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115142, at *13-18 (S.D. Cal. Oct. 28, 2010); [43] Lucent Techs., Inc. v. Dicon Fiberoptics, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37646, at *3 (N.D. Cal. May 10, 2007)).

Unjust Enrichment/Disgorgement & Injunctive and Declaratory Relief: Plaintiffs argue that, contrary to Defendants' contentions, California courts and the Ninth Circuit recognize a cause of action for unjust enrichment. Id. (citing Lectrodryer v. Seoul Bank, 77 Cal. App. 4th 723, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 881, 883 (2000); Ben & Jerry's Franchising, Inc. v. Porghavami, 418 Fed. Appx. 607 (9th Cir. 2011)). Regarding the injunctive and declaratory relief claim, Plaintiffs assert that "dismissal would be premature" at this stage in the litigation, but even if the Court decides to dismiss this cause of action, injunctive or declaratory [*948] relief would still be available if warranted. Id. at 24-25 n.8 (citing Wagner v. Aurora Loan Servicing, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 148726, at *20 (D. Haw. Dec. 27, 2011)).

E. The Reply

In response to the Opposition, Defendants cite to specific language in the Wahl first amended complaint to argue that Plaintiffs here plead "factual allegations challenging the identical arrangements between lenders and [ASIC]" that were at issue in Wahl, and therefore Plaintiffs' claims [44] are precluded. Defendants' Reply in Support of Motion to Dismiss ("Reply"), 5 (citing Wahl FAC at ¶ 14). Moreover, Defendants point out, Plaintiffs concede that their Complaint contains factual allegations that are "common" and "overlapping" with Wahl. Reply at 5.

IV. ANALYSIS

A. Legal Standard

1. Rule 12(b)(6)

HN3[] A complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim for which relief can be granted under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). "The purpose of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) is to test the legal sufficiency of the complaint." N. Star Int'l v. Ariz. Corp. Comm'n, 720 F.2d 578, 581 (9th Cir. 1983). Generally, a plaintiff's burden at the pleading stage is relatively light. Rule 8(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure states that HN4[] "[a] pleading which sets forth a claim for relief . . . shall contain . . . a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a).

HN5[] In ruling on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12, the court analyzes the complaint and takes "all allegations of material fact as true and construe(s) them in the lights most favorable to the non-moving party." Parks Sch. of Bus. v. Symington, 51 F.3d 1480, 1484 (9th Cir. 1995). [45] Dismissal may be based on a lack of a cognizable legal theory or on the absence of facts that would support a valid theory. Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). A complaint must "contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 562, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (citing Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984)). The factual allegations must be definite enough to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Id. at 1965. However, a complaint does not need detailed factual allegations to survive dismissal. Id. at 1964. Rather, a complaint need only include enough facts to state a claim that is "plausible on its face." Id. at 1974. That is, the pleadings must contain factual allegations "plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with)" a right to relief. Id. at 1965 (noting that this requirement is consistent with Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), which requires that the pleadings demonstrate that "the pleader is entitled to relief").

B. Whether the Wahl Settlement Precludes the Claims

Defendants argue [46] that the Wahl settlement released any and all of the claims brought by Plaintiffs McNeary-Calloway and the MacKinnons. Plaintiffs contend that the settlement has no effect on this action because they bring different claims that do not share any common factors with the claims in Wahl, except in regards to their allegations concerning the overlap of LLPE and FPI. The Court finds that the Wahl settlement limits the scope of the Plaintiffs' claims.

[*949] 1. Identical Factual Predicate

a. Background Law

HN6[] "In California, interpretation of a settlement agreement is governed by contract principles." Howard v. Am. Online Inc., 208 F.3d 741, 747 (9th Cir. 2000) (citing General Motors Corp. v. Superior Court, 12 Cal. App. 4th 435, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 622 (1993). However, "a settlement agreement's bare assertion that a party will not be liable for a broad swath of potential claims does not necessarily make it so." Hesse v. Sprint Corp., 598 F.3d 581, 590 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Williams v. Boeing Co., 517 F.3d 1120, 1134 (9th Cir. 2008) ("While Boeing may have drafted the settlement agreement to include as broad a release as possible, the release would have only been enforceable as to subsequent claims . . . depending upon the [47] same set of facts.")). At the same time, "[a] settlement agreement may preclude a party from bringing a related claim in the future 'even though the claim was not presented and might not have been presentable in the class action,' but only where the released claim is 'based on the identical factual predicate as that underlying the claims in the settled class action.'" Id. (citing Williams, 517 F.3d at 1133; Class Plaintiffs v. City of Seattle, 955 F.2d 1268, 1287 (9th Cir. 1992)); see also Reyn's Pasta Bella, LLC v. Visa USA, Inc., 442 F.3d 741, 748 (9th Cir. 2006) (holding that a settlement release encompasses a plaintiff's claims if they arise from an "identical factual predicate" as the claims asserted by the settling plaintiff in the previous litigation). "A class settlement may also release factually related claims against parties not named as defendants . . . ." Reyn's Pasta, 442 F.3d at 748 (citing Class Plaintiffs, 955 F.2d at 1287-89).

b. Application of Law to Facts

Plaintiffs argue that the claims of the non-opt-out members of the Wahl class are not precluded, relying primarily on the doctrine of res judicata. The Court, however, declines to apply res judicata in evaluating [48] the preclusive effects of the settlement; rather, consistent with the Ninth Circuit precedent cited above, the Court will analyze the issue under the "identical factual predicate" doctrine. Similarly, to the extent Defendants argue that the Court need only apply California contract law, the Court rejects that argument. To be sure, California contract law does apply to the settlement's interpretation. But interpretation is only the first question. The Court must also decide which claims fall within, or outside, the Court's interpretation of the settlement. The Court applies the "identical factual predicate" doctrine for this latter purpose.

As an initial matter, the Court will first address Plaintiffs' argument that any preclusive effects of the settlement should not apply to Defendants because they should not be considered "Releasess." Plaintiffs argue that Defendants cannot be considered Releasees because Defendants were non-parties to the Wahl case, listed nowhere in the Wahl settlement documents, did not bargain for any benefit in, nor contribute to, the settlement, and were not even aware of the settlement until well after final approval. Opposition at 5. Plaintiffs are incorrect [49] for several reasons.

First, Defendants are included in the Stipulation of Settlement provided by the Wahl parties beginning on May 12, 2011. See Wahl, Dckt. No.173, Declaration of Plaintiff's Counsel in Support of Motion for Settlement, Ex. 1 ("Stipulation of Settlement"). The Stipulation of Settlement was explicitly referenced in the Court's preliminary approval of the settlement, the notice to the class, and fully incorporated into the Court's final order approving the settlement on September 30, 2011. See Dckt No. 176, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59559, Findings [*950] and Order Certifying Class for Settlement Purposes, Directing the Issuance of Class Notice, and Scheduling a Fairness Hearing, [slip op.] at *2, 3, 5; RJN, Ex. 3 (Wahl Notice of Class Action Settlement), ¶¶ 13, 25; Wahl, Dckt. No. 189, Final Order and Judgment, ¶ 1. The relevant portion of the definition of "Releasees" in the Stipulation of Settlement is identical to the definition of that term in the Court's final order approving the settlement. To the extent Plaintiffs argue that the Releasees must be listed by name, the Court rejects that argument. It is enough that the definition states that lenders and servicers purchasing or originating ASIC FPI policies [50] are considered Releasees. [4]

[4] Plaintiffs appear to suggest that this Court should collaterally review the adequacy of notice to the class because the notice fails to explicitly reveal the full scope of the Release. The Court, however, finds that the "Releasees" definition was disclosed to the class well before final approval of the settlement. Although it is true that the notice itself did not explicitly reveal that other parties besides ASIC would be released as a result of the settlement, the notice did state that, in addition to releasing ASIC, staying in the class > means that all of the Court's orders concerning the Class will apply to you and legally bind you, including the Release described in detail in the Stipulation of Settlement. This Release provision describes exactly the legal [51] claims you give up if this settlement is approved and you do not exclude yourself.

RJN, Ex. 3 (Wahl Notice of Class Action Settlement), ¶ 13 (emphasis added). The notice also informs members of the class that the Stipulation of Settlement includes more details and that a copy may be obtained by downloading it from the Internet or writing to class counsel. Id. at ¶ 25. Additionally, Plaintiffs give no indication that they were not otherwise apprised of the Wahl litigation or knew of the Releasees definition prior to final approval of the settlement; indeed, many of the changes in Plaintiffs' FAC, filed while final approval of the settlement was pending, suggest that Plaintiffs were attempting to salvage their case in light of the settlement's effects. Therefore, even if the adequacy of notice was subject to collateral review, the Court concludes that, at a minimum, these Plaintiffs were provided "an adequate basis for informed decision-making" since they knew, through the Stipulation of Settlement or otherwise, that Defendants were included as Releasees. See McCubbrey v. Boise Cascade Home & Land Corp., 71 F.R.D. 62, 68 (N.D. Cal. 1976) (Pekham, J.) (finding that plaintiffs bringing [52] parallel litigation were not adequately informed of settlement's terms only where plaintiffs received insufficient informal and formal notice).

Second, because a class settlement may also release factually related claims against parties not named as defendants, it does not matter that Defendants were not parties in Wahl. See Reyn's Pasta, 442 F.3d at 748. Finally, Plaintiffs cite to no authority for the proposition that Defendants must contribute to the settlement in order for the settlement to release them, and the Court finds no such rule.

Next, the Court finds that the settlement released "all claims and causes of action arising out of the facts alleged in the Action which have been, or could have been, may be, or could be alleged or asserted in the Action by Plaintiff or the Class Members against Releasees." Wahl, Dckt. No. 189, Final Order and Judgment, at *5 (emphasis added). At the same time, the settlement did not release or "affect any claims not arising from, nor regarding, nor relating in any way to the Released Claims." Id. at *9. The Court interprets this language to be a general release of all claims against Releasees to the extent those claims "depend[] upon the same set of facts" as the claims in Wahl. Williams, 517 F.3d at 1134.

For purposes of determining the bases on which Plaintiffs McNeary-Calloway and the MacKinnions are precluded from asserting their claims, the allegations in Plaintiffs' FAC can be divided broadly into [*951] two independent categories: 1) allegations related to force-placing ASIC insurance policies that included coverage for periods of time where [53] an LLPE was in place; and 2) allegations related to force-placing ASIC insurance policies that did not include coverage for periods of time where an LLPE was in place. Both categories are discussed below.

The Court finds that the first category of allegations is precluded by the Wahl settlement. Plaintiffs admit that the existence of allegations surrounding the placement of FPI despite the existence of an LLPE is a "common factor between the two cases." Opposition at 8. Plaintiffs' contention that, despite the shared set of facts, their claims based on backdating over LLPE periods should not be precluded because of the "different parties, claims and relief sought herein" fails as a matter of law. As discussed above, what matters is whether a claim shares an identical factual predicate with the released claims. The practice of force-placing ASIC hazard insurance polices that included coverage for periods of time where prior hazard insurance would have been in effect for the mortgage lender pursuant to the homeowners' LLPE had it not been cancelled by the FPI, was the central allegation in the Wahl action, used to support all of plaintiff's claims. Here, Plaintiffs admit to making the [54] identical allegation in at least some of the claims. The Court therefore finds that all of the California non-opt-out Plaintiffs' claims arising out of FPI polices that were placed with ASIC (the only insurer at issue in Wahl) which overlapped, or cancelled, the LLPE period, are barred by the settlement.

The Court finds that the second category of allegations are not precluded by the Wahl settlement. The force-placing of insurance policies which did not include coverage for any LLPE period was not the basis for any of the claims asserted in Wahl. As stated by the Wahl Court, "Wahl's claims in this action all arise from her basic contention that when ASIC issues a 'force placed' policy upon the cancellation of a homeowner's policy, but before the lender's protections under an LLPE have expired, the ASIC policy 'overlaps' the prior coverage and therefore 'provides no actual coverage.'" *Wahl v. Am. Sec. Ins. Co., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51033, 2008 WL 2444802, at 1 (N.D. Cal. June 16, 2008) (emphasis original). Here, the non-opt-out Plaintiffs' complaint includes allegations that Defendants force-placed insurance policies that did not overlap with LLPE coverage. The allegations related to those policies depend on a [55] different set of facts as the claims that gave rise to the settlement.

The Ninth Circuit's holding in Hesse v. Sprint Corp. is instructive in this case. In Hesse, the court considered whether a broad release of claims in a nationwide settlement agreement between Sprint and its customers, the Benny settlement, precluded a class action involving a Washington state tax that Sprint charged to its Washington customers. Hesse, 598 F.3d at 584. The court found that the Washington class action was not precluded because the claims did not share an identical factual predicate with the claims resolved in the Benny settlement. The court reasoned as follows:

> The claims underlying the Benney Settlement dealt exclusively with specific nationwide surcharges to recoup the costs of compliance with federal programs, whereas the claims at issue in the present case involve Sprint's statewide surcharge to recoup the cost of the Washington B & O Tax allegedly in violation of a Washington statute. The superficial similarity between the two class actions is insufficient to justify the release of the later claims by the settlement of the former. Both involve claims that Sprint improperly billed government [*952] > taxes [56] or fees to its customers, but they deal with different surcharges, imposed to recoup different costs, that were alleged to be improper for different reasons.

Id. at 591.

As in Hesse, the two actions here share a "superficial similarity" in that both deal with claims that FPI policies were imposed for periods of time where coverage was unnecessary. But the claims here involve different policies that did not overlap with, or cancel, LLPE coverage and that are alleged to be improper for different reasons. The Court concludes that claims raised in this case arising out of the force-placement of policies that did not overlap with, or cancel, LLPE coverage, are not predicated on the same set of facts as the claims of the Wahl plaintiff, and therefore were not released by the Wahl settlement. [5]

The Court declines to rule at this stage of the case on the issue of whether the California non-opt-out Plaintiffs' (Ms. McNeary-Calloway and the MacKinnons) claims are barred based on this interpretation of the settlement. That decision will depend on, inter alia, whether the policies purchased by Plaintiffs before FPI included LLPE coverage, and when that coverage lapsed. The parties did not brief these issues in any detail, and it is best left for summary judgment, where the Court will have before it a fully developed factual record.

C. Whether Plaintiffs State a Claim for Violation of RESPA

Defendants seek dismissal of Plaintiffs' RESPA claim on the grounds that the claim falls outside RESPA's scope and that the claim is time-barred. The Court finds that Plaintiffs do not state a claim under RESPA, and grants Defendants' Motion on that basis only.

1. Background Law

Plaintiffs' RESPA claim is based on Section 2607(a)-(b), which reads:

> (a) Business referrals
> HN7[] No person shall give and no person shall accept any fee, kickback, or thing [58] of value pursuant to any agreement or understanding, oral or otherwise, that business incident to or a part of a real estate settlement service involving a federally related mortgage loan shall be referred to any person.
> (b) Splitting charges
> HN8[] No person shall give and no person shall accept any portion, split, or percentage of any charge made or received for the rendering of a real estate settlement service in connection with a transaction involving a federally related mortgage loan other than for services actually performed.

12 U.S.C. § 2607 (emphasis applied).

HN9[] Under RESPA, the term "settlement service" includes:

---

[5] To the extent Defendants argue that the claims in this case and in Wahl overlap with respect to allegations of a scheme between Defendants and FPI providors, the Court finds that the Wahl plaintiff's claims were not based on such allegations. The Wahl plaintiff did allege a scheme between ASIC and mortgage lenders, similar to the scheme alleged here. See Wahl, Dckt. No. 14, Plaintiff's First Amended [57] Complaint, ¶ 14. But that allegation in the Wahl complaint consists of a mere paragraph and is not the factual predicate for any of the Wahl plaintiff's claims.

> any service provided in connection with a real estate settlement including, but not limited to, the following: title searches, title examinations, the provision of title certificates, title insurance, services rendered by an attorney, the preparation of documents, property surveys, the rendering of credit reports or appraisals, pest and fungus inspections, services rendered by a real estate agent [*953] or broker, the origination of a federally related mortgage loan (including, but not limited to, the taking of loan applications, loan processing, and the underwriting and funding of loans), [59] and the handling of the processing, and closing or settlement[.]

12 U.S.C. § 2602(3).

HN10[] The Code of Federal Regulations defines settlement services as "any service provided in connection with a prospective or actual settlement, including . . . [the] [p]rovision of services involving hazard, flood, or other casualty insurance or homeowner's warranties." 24 C.F.R. § 3500.2. A "settlement" is "the process of executing legally binding documents regarding a lien on property that is subject to a federally related mortgage loan," i.e. the "closing" or "escrow." 24 C.F.R. § 3500.2(b). Finally, HN11[] Section 2607 has a statute of limitations of one year "from the date of the occurrence of the violation." 12 U.S.C. § 2614.

2. Application of Law to Facts

a. "Settlement Service" Under RESPA Section 2607

The parties dispute whether FPI constitutes a "settlement service" under RESPA. The plain language of the statute and its implementing regulations require the Court to conclude that, under these facts, FPI is not a "settlement service" under RESPA. Plaintiffs' claim under Section 2607 fails as a matter of law and is accordingly dismissed with prejudice.

Plaintiffs argue that the "determinative factor" in deciding [60] whether a particular service qualifies as a "settlement service" is whether the purchase of the service "is required by the lender in order for the transaction to close." This argument, however, is contrary to plain words of the statute. HN12[] "Settlement service" is defined as "any service provided in connection with a real estate settlement." 12 U.S.C. § 2602(3). This language indicates that RESPA covers only those services provided—not necessarily required?in connection with a closing. It is undisputed here that Defendants did not provide, nor were any way involved in, the hazard insurance purchased in connection with the closing of the loans. Rather, Plaintiffs, without any involvement of the Defendants, first purchased the hazard insurance policies on the open market and only some two to eight years after the closing of their respective loans did Defendants "provide" hazard insurance. Moreover, the policies first purchased by Plaintiffs are not at issue in this case. The fact that hazard insurance was required in order to close the loan is irrelevant here in deciding whether the hazard insurance at issue is a "settlement service."

Plaintiffs cite to Kay v. Wells Fargo & Co., 247 F.R.D. 572 (N.D. Cal. 2007) [61] and Munoz v. PHH Corp., 659 F. Supp. 2d 1094 (E.D. Cal. 2009), in support of their proposition. Those cases held that mortgage insurance provided in connection with the settlement constitutes a settlement service, notwithstanding that the risk insured or the premiums made incur after the closing of the loan. Kay, 247 F.R.D. at 576; Munoz, 659 F. Supp. 2d at 1098-99. The courts there reasoned that since mortgage insurance was required in order to close the loan, the provision of mortgage insurance occurred at the closing of the loan, rather than at some point in time after settlement when the risk would arise or the premium would be paid. Id. While it is true that, like the mortgage insurance in Kay and Munoz, hazard insurance was required to close Plaintiffs' loans, Plaintiffs' argument ignores the basic requirement that the service about which Plaintiffs complain must be provided to the borrower in connection with the settlement. The allegations in Plaintiffs' FAC state that Defendants provided hazard insurance [*954] upon a lapse in the borrower's coverage only well after the closing of loans. Because RESPA covers only the provision of services "in connection with" the closing of the loan, [62] the Court cannot conclude that providing hazard insurance years after settlement qualifies as a settlement service. See Bloom v. Martin, 77 F.3d 318, 320-21 (9th Cir. 1996) (finding that services provided, and fees assessed, at some indeterminate time after the settlement are not "settlement services" under RESPA); see also *Gens v. Wachovia Mortg. Corp., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49709, at 17-18 (N.D. Cal. May 10, 2011) (Koh, J.) (holding that defendant's purchase of hazard insurance some two to three years after the closing of the loan "does not fall within the ambit of RESPA because the alleged fees are not connected to the 'settlement' or closing of the loan"); *Lass v. Bank of Am., N.A., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89519, 2011 WL 3567280, at 6 (D. Mass. Aug. 11, 2011) (finding that 15-year period between closing of the loan and the force-placement of insurance too great in order to find that the service was "in connection with a real estate settlement"). [6]

D. Whether Plaintiffs State a Viable Contract Claim

Plaintiffs [63] bring two contract-based claims: a breach of contract claim based on an express provision, and a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim. The Court finds that all California Plaintiffs state a breach of contract claim based on a breach of an express term of the contracts, as well as a claim based on a breach of the implied covenant. The Court also finds that the New Jersey Plaintiff states a claim under New Jersey law as to either theory of breach.

1. Background Law

HN13[] The elements of a cause of action for breach of contract are: 1) the existence of the contract; 2) performance by the plaintiff or excuse for nonperformance; 3) breach by the defendant; and 4) damages. First Commercial Mortgage Co. v. Reece, 89 Cal. App. 4th 731, 745, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 23 (2001). HN14[] "There is implied in every contract a covenant by each party not to do anything which will deprive the other parties thereto of the benefits of the contract." Harm v. Frasher, 181 Cal. App. 2d 405, 417, 5 Cal. Rptr. 367 (1960). HN15[] A breach of contract may be established on the basis of either an express provision of the contract or on the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. See Storek & Storek, Inc. v. Citicorp Real Estate, Inc., 100 Cal. App. 4th 44, 55, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 267 (2002) [64] (recognizing that "every contract imposes upon each party a duty of good faith and fair dealing in the performance of the contract such that neither party shall do anything which will have the effect of destroying or injuring the right of the other party to receive the fruits of the contract"). An implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing cannot contradict the express terms of a contract. Id. (citing Carma Developers (Cal.), Inc. v. Marathon Dev. Cal., Inc., 2 Cal. 4th 342, 374, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 467, 826 P.2d 710 (1992)). Further, because "the implied covenant operates to protect the express covenants or promises of [a] contract ... [it] cannot impose substantive duties or limits on the contracting parties beyond those incorporated in the specific terms of [the parties'] agreement." McClain v. Octagon Plaza, LLC, 159 Cal. App. 4th 784, 805, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 885 (2008).

[*955] HN16[] "Facts alleging a breach, like all essential elements of a breach of contract cause of action, must be pleaded with specificity." Levy v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 150 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 54 (2007). Thus, to state a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, a plaintiff must identify the specific contractual provision that was frustrated. [65] See Lingad v. Indymac Fed. Bank, 682 F. Supp. 2d 1142, 1154 (2010).

HN17[] In New Jersey, a covenant of good faith and fair dealing is implied in every contract. Sons of Thunder, Inc. v. Borden, Inc., 148 N.J. 396, 420, 690 A.2d 575 (1997). Implied covenants are as effective components of an agreement as those covenants that are express. Aronsohn v. Mandara, 98 N.J. 92, 100, 484 A.2d 675 (1984). Although the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing cannot override an express term in a contract, a party's performance under a contract may breach that implied covenant even though that performance does not violate a pertinent express term. Sons of Thunder, Inc., 148 N.J. at 419. Because the breach of the implied covenant arises only when the other party has acted consistent with the contract's literal terms, if a party is found to have breached an express term of the contract, there can be no separate breach of the implied covenant. Wade v. Kessler Inst.,

[6] Because the Court finds that Plaintiffs' FPI policies do not constitute a "settlement service" under RESPA, the Court need not decide whether any of Plaintiffs' claims are barred by the statute of limitations.

172 N.J. 327, 344-45, 798 A.2d 1251 (2002) (citing Wilson v. Amerada Hess Corp., 168 N.J. 236, 240, 773 A.2d 1121 (2001)).

2. Application of Law to Facts

a. Breach of an Express Provision

Plaintiffs maintain that Defendants breached the contracts' express term that supposedly limits Defendants' [66] discretion to force-place insurance only to the extent such insurance "is required." Defendants contend that the mortgage contracts unambiguously gives Chase the discretion to force-place insurance in the amount and for the time periods it requires. The Court cannot conclude that Plaintiffs' contracts authorize all of Defendants' alleged wrongful actions in the complaint.

The mortgage contracts for the California Plaintiffs have identical language, reading as follows:

> Borrower shall keep the improvements now existing or hereafter erected on the Property insured against loss by fire, hazards included within the term 'extended coverage,' and any other hazards . . . for which Lender requires insurance. This insurance shall be maintained in the amounts (including deductible levels) and for the periods that Lender requires. What Lender requires pursuant to the preceding sentences can change during the term of the Loan.

> If Borrower fails to maintain any of the coverages described above, Lender may obtain insurance coverage, at Lender's option and Borrower's expense. Lender is under no obligation to purchase any particular type or amount of coverage. Therefore, such coverage shall cover [67] Lender, but might or might not protect Borrower, Borrower's equity in the Property, or the contents of the Property, against any risk, hazard or liability and might provide greater or lesser coverage than was previously in effect. Borrower acknowledges that the cost of the insurance coverage so obtained might significantly exceed the cost of insurance that Borrower could have obtained.

FAC, Exs. 1, 7, 17 at ¶ 5.

Pursuant to the contracts' terms, Defendants are afforded broad discretion to compel borrowers to insure against particular [*956] hazards, at particular amounts, and for certain periods of time. However, broad discretion is not unlimited discretion. Nothing in the contract necessarily authorizes charges regardless of amount and regardless of whether Defendants receive a portion of the premiums. Nor does anything in the contract authorize backdating FPI policies to cover periods of time where no loss occurred. Because the Court cannot say that the contracts' terms unambiguously authorize Defendants' alleged behavior, the Court denies Defendants' motion to dismiss the California Plaintiffs' breach of contract claim. [7] See Barrous v. BP P.L.C., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108933, 2011 WL 4024774, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 13, 2010) [68] (Koh, J.) ("A court may resolve contractual claims on a motion to dismiss if the terms of the contract are unambiguous.").

Plaintiff Mayko's mortgage contract contains slightly different language that could be interpreted as explicitly restricting the lender's discretion in force-placing insurance. Ms. Mayko's contract reads, in part:

> Borrower shall insure all improvements on the Property . . . against any hazards . . . for which Lender requires insurance. This insurance shall be maintained in the amounts and for the periods that Lender requires.
> . . .

[7] Defendants' reliance on Lass v. Bank of Am., N.A., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89519, 2011 WL 3567280 (D. Mass. Aug. 10, 2011) is misplaced. In Lass, the court held that the plaintiff's mortgage contract authorized the lender to increase the amount of flood insurance required beyond the amount required at the time the mortgage was executed. 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89519, [WL] at *3. Because that aspect of Plaintiffs' mortgage contracts are not at issue in this case, the Court finds Lass unhelpful in evaluating Plaintiffs' claim.

> If Borrower . . . fails to perform any [] covenants and agreements contained in this Security Instrument . . . then Lender may do and pay whatever is necessary to protect the value [69] of the Property and Lender's rights in the Property, including payment of taxes, hazard insurance and other items . . . .

FAC, Ex. 18 (Ms. Mayko's Mortgage Contract) at ¶¶ 4, 7 (emphasis added). This language provides a basis for the claim that Defendants may force-place insurance only to the extent such insurance "is necessary" to protect the property's value and Defendants' rights in the property. Moreover, like the California Plaintiffs' contracts, Ms. Mayko's contract does not provide Defendants with unlimited discretion to force-place insurance. Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss is also denied as to Plaintiff Mayko's claim.

b. Breach of the Implied Covenant

HN18[] Even a defendant who does not breach a contract may still be liable for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing if they fail to perform the contract in good faith. See Carma, 2 Cal. 4th at 373. Here, the California Plaintiffs argue that even though Defendants reserved the discretion to force-place insurance, they exercised that discretion in bad faith by force-placing "backdated, unnecessary hazard insurance with unreasonably high premiums for which Defendants received an improper kickback." Opposition at 15.

HN19[] "The [70] covenant of good faith finds particular application in situations where one party is invested with a discretionary power affecting the rights of another. Such power must be exercised in good faith." Carma, 2 Cal. 4th at 372; see Perdue v. Crocker Nat'l Bank, 38 Cal. 3d 913, 923, 216 Cal. Rptr. 345, 702 P.2d 503 (1985) ("[W]here a contract confers on one party a discretionary power affecting the rights of the other, a duty is imposed to exercise that discretion [*957] in good faith and in accordance with fair dealing.") (internal quotations omitted). The exercise of discretionary powers is evaluated under the implied covenant to assure that the promises of the contract are effective and in accordance with the parties' legitimate expectations. See Carma, 2 Cal. 4th at 373-74; *Gabana Gulf Distrib., Ltd. v. GAP Int'l Sales, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1658, 2008 WL 111223, at 8 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 9, 2008) (Breyer, J.); *Schwarzkopf v. Int'l Bus. Machs., Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46813, 2010 WL 1929625, at 13 (N.D. Cal. May 12, 2010) (Fogel, J.). However, the covenant cannot "be read to prohibit a party from doing that which is expressly permitted by an agreement. On the contrary, as a general matter, implied terms should never be read to vary express terms." Carma, 2 Cal. 4th at 374.

Defendants [71] contend that Carma forecloses Plaintiffs' claim that the implied covenant restricts Defendants' express contractual right because such a restriction would vary the express terms. The California Supreme Court's decision in Carma, however, is not so straightforward. In Carma, the parties had entered into a commercial lease agreement which stated that if the tenant procured a potential sublessee and asked the landlord for consent to sublease, the landlord had the right to terminate the lease, enter into negotiations with the prospective sublessee, and appropriate for itself all profits from the new arrangement. Id. at 351-52. In upholding the right of the landlord to exercise its discretion and realize a profit at the expense of the tenant, the Court held that the landlord's "termination of the lease in order to claim for itself [a profit] was expressly permitted by the lease and was clearly within the parties' reasonable expectations." Id. at 376.

Unlike in Carma, however, the actions at issue here—backdating FPI unnecessarily and force-placing insurance with unreasonably high premiums in order to facilitate kickbacks to Defendants—were not expressly bargained for in the contract. Rather, [72] Defendants merely bargained for the right to exercise discretion over the scope and extent of coverage borrowers were required to maintain. Pursuant to Carma, that discretion, as to acts and conduct not expressly provided for in the contract, must comport with the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Moreover, although the Court in Carma found the landlord's actions to be expressly agreed to in the contract, the Court still required that the landlord's actions come within the parties' "reasonable expectations." Id. at 376; see Gutierrez v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 730 F. Supp. 2d 1080, 1122 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (Alsup, J.) (recognizing Carma's holding that the implied covenant will not vary express terms of the contract, but finding that Carma also "emphasized that express grants of discretion were still subject to 'the reasonable expectations of the parties'").

Other courts applying Carma's principles have come to similar conclusions as this Court. In Locke v. Warner Bros., Inc., 57 Cal. App. 4th 354, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 921 (1997), the actress Sandra Locke entered into a contract with Warner whereby Warner was given a right of first refusal over developing Locke's movie projects. Id. at 358. After [73] refusing to develop any of Locke's projects, Locke sued alleging breach of the implied covenant. Id. at 359. The court in Locke rejected Warner's contentions that the implied covenant did not apply to its actions because its right to refuse Locke's projects was expressly provided for in the contract. Id. at 367. The court found instead [*958] that the contract gave Warner merely the discretion with respect to developing Locke's projects. Id.

Applying Carma and Locke, Gabana Gulf Distrib., Ltd. v. GAP Int'l Sales, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1658, 2008 WL 111223 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 9, 2008) (Breyer, J.), also held that the implied covenant governed a party's right to exercise discretion in performing the contract. *2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1658, [WL] at 8. Gabana involved a clothing distribution contract between Gap and Gabana, whereby Gabana could purchase first-line goods from Gap and then resell them in certain Middle Eastern countries. *2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1658, [WL] at 2. Gap, however, required Gabana to first seek its approval before it could resell the goods, with Gap reserving the right to disapprove, in its sole discretion, Gabana's request. Id. Gabana later filed suit, alleging that Gap was refusing its proposals in bad faith. Gap argued that the implied covenant was inapplicable [74] since the contract expressly provided it the right to deny any proposals. After finding that there was no breach of the express terms of the contract because the agreement gave Gap sole discretion to approve or disapprove Gabana's proposals, the Court found that the implied covenant did govern Gap's use of its discretion. *2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1658, [WL] at 8. The Court reasoned that "Gap merely bargained for the right to exercise 'discretion' over proposals made by Gabana; Gap did not bargain for the right to refrain from approving all proposals altogether." Id.

Relying on the principles in Carma, Locke, and Gabana, the Court finds that the implied covenant governs Defendants' discretion in force-placing insurance. Although Defendants have the right to set the scope and extent of hazard insurance coverage—and explicitly warn that FPI may be "significantly" more expensive than coverage on the open market—the Plaintiffs here have stated a claim under the implied covenant that Defendants abused this discretion by acting in bad faith and outside the reasonable expectations of the parties. Whether Defendants' acts were done in bad faith and not within the reasonable expectations of the parties is a question of fact [75] that cannot be decided at the pleading stage. *See Gabana, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1658, 2008 WL 111223 at 8; Locke, 57 Cal. App. 4th at 367. Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss the California Plaintiffs' breach of the implied covenant claim is denied.

For the New Jersey Plaintiff, a similar outcome results. HN20[] Under New Jersey law, even when a party has acted consistent with the contract's literal terms, the implied covenant allows a court to judge whether a party has exercised bad faith or ill motive in carrying out discretionary activities to which it has been granted "unilateral authority" by the contract. See Wilson, 168 N.J. at 251. Thus, in exercising discretionary authority as expressly authorized by an agreement, if a party does so "arbitrarily, unreasonably, or capriciously, with the objective of preventing the other party from receiving its reasonably expected fruits of the contract," the party taking the action may breach the covenant. Id. at 251. A breach of the good faith obligation must include a finding of improper motive: "Without bad motive or intention, discretionary decisions that happen to result in economic disadvantage to the other party are of no legal significance." Id.

The Court interprets [76] the breach of the implied covenant claim, as it relates to the New Jersey Plaintiff, to be pled in the alternative to her breach of contract claim based on a breach of an express term of the contract. See Wade, 172 N.J. at 344-45 (holding that there can be no separate breach of the implied covenant where there is a breach of the contract's express terms). Based [*959] on the allegations in the FAC, the Court cannot conclude, as a matter of law, that the Defendants did not breach the implied covenant with respect to the New Jersey Plaintiff.

E. Whether Plaintiffs State a Viable UCL claim

Defendants seek to dismiss Plaintiffs' Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 ("UCL") claim on three grounds: 1) Plaintiffs are unable to establish "unlawful" conduct since their RESPA claim fails as a matter of law; 2) Plaintiffs have not pled their claim under the "fraudulent" prong with particularity, nor can they demonstrate that members of the public are likely to be deceived by Defendants' conduct; and 3) Plaintiffs cannot satisfy any of the tests that California courts use to evaluate whether conduct is "unfair" under the UCL. The Court concludes that Plaintiffs' state a UCL claim under the unfair prong.

1. Background [77] Law

a. Standing

HN21[] A claim for unfair competition under the UCL may be brought "by a person who has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204. Therefore, to establish standing under the UCL a plaintiff must "(1) establish a loss or deprivation of money or property sufficient to qualify as injury in fact, i.e., economic injury, and (2) show that that economic injury was the result of, i.e., caused by, the unfair business practice . . . that is the gravamen of the claim." Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 4th 310, 337, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d 877 (2011).

HN22[] A plaintiff "proceeding on a claim of misrepresentation as the basis of his or her UCL action must demonstrate actual reliance on the allegedly deceptive or misleading statements, in accordance with well-settled principles regarding the element of reliance in ordinary fraud actions." In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 306, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (2009). Consequently, "a plaintiff must show that the misrepresentation was an immediate cause of the injury-producing conduct . . . ." Id. at 326. However, a "plaintiff is not required to allege that [the challenged] misrepresentations were the sole or even [78] the decisive cause of the injury-producing conduct." Id. "'Reliance' as used in the ordinary fraud context has always been understood to mean reliance on a statement for its truth and accuracy. It follows that a UCL fraud plaintiff must allege he or she was motivated to act or refrain from action based on the truth or falsity of a defendant's statement, not merely on the fact it was made." Kwikset Corp.,51 Cal. 4th at 327 n. 10.

Although In Re Tobacco concerned a claim only under the fraudulent prong, HN23[] it has been held that, under any prong, a UCL claim that is based in fraud must be supported by allegations of reliance in order to properly be pled. See Kwikset Corp., 51 Cal. 4th at 326 (finding In Re Tobacco's reliance requirement apposite to plaintiff's claim under the unlawful prong alleging misrepresentation and deception); *Carney v. Verizon Wireless Telecomm., Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47161, 2010 WL 1947635, at 3 (S.D. Cal. May, 13, 2010) ("[F]or UCL claims . . . the plaintiff must show actual reliance regardless of whether the claim arises under the 'unfair,' 'unlawful' or 'fraudulent' prong of the UCL."); *In re Actimmune Mktg. Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90480, 2010 WL 3463491, at 8 (N.D. Cal. Sep. 1, 2010) (Patel, J.) ("Since [79] Tobacco II, at least one California Court of Appeal and one federal district court have held that a plaintiff must plead 'actual reliance,' even if their claim arises under the unlawful or unfair prongs, so long as the pleadings assert a [*960] cause of action grounded in misrepresentation or deception.").

b. UCL Violation

HN24[] The UCL prohibits "unfair competition," which is defined as any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. To establish a violation of the UCL, a plaintiff may establish a violation under any one of these prongs. To state a cause of action based on an unlawful business act or practice under the UCL, a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to show a violation of some underlying law. People v. McKale, 25 Cal. 3d 626, 635, 159 Cal. Rptr. 811, 602 P.2d 731 (1979).

HN25[] "'Fraudulent,' as used in the statute, does not refer to the common law tort of fraud but only requires a showing that members of the public 'are likely to be deceived.'" Olsen v. Breeze, 48 Cal. App. 4th 608, 618, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 818 (1996). Although fraud is not a necessary element of a claim under the UCL, where a plaintiff "allege[s] a unified course of fraudulent conduct and rel[ies] entirely on that course of conduct [80] as the basis of that claim[,] . . . the claim is said to be 'grounded in fraud' or to 'sound in fraud,' and the pleading . . . as a whole must satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b)" of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Kearns v. Ford Motor, Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009) (citing Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103-04 (9th Cir. 2003)). To satisfy Rule 9(b), the plaintiff must include "the who, what, when, where, and how" of the fraud. Vess, 317 F.3d at 1106 (citations omitted). "The plaintiff must set forth what is false or misleading about a statement, and why it is false." Decker v. Glenfed, Inc., 42 F.3d 1541, 1548 (9th Cir. 1994). A claim for fraud must be "specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong." Semegen v. Weidner, 780 F.2d 727, 731 (9th Cir. 1985).

Finally, while there is disagreement among California courts regarding the definition of "unfair" business practices, three tests have been applied, as the court in Phipps v. Wells Fargo explains:

> HN26[] In consumer cases, such [81] as this, the California Supreme Court has not established a definitive test to determine whether a business practice is unfair. Drum v. San Fernando Valley Bar Ass'n, 182 Cal. App. 4th 247, 256, 106 Cal. Rptr. 3d 46 (2010). A split of authority has developed among the California Courts of Appeal, which have applied three tests for unfairness in consumer cases. Drum, 182 Cal.App.4th at 256, 106 Cal.Rptr.3d 46.
> The test applied in one line of cases requires "that the public policy which is a predicate to a consumer unfair competition action under the 'unfair' prong of the UCL must be tethered to specific constitutional, statutory, or regulatory provisions." Drum, 182 Cal.App.4th at 256, 106 Cal.Rptr.3d 46 (citing Bardin v. Daimlerchrysler Corp., 136 Cal.App.4th 1255, 1260-1261, 39 Cal.Rptr.3d 634 (2006); Davis v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 179 Cal.App.4th at 581, 595-596, 101 Cal.Rptr.3d 697 (2009); Gregory v. Albertson's Inc., 104 Cal.App.4th 845, 854, 128 Cal.Rptr.2d 389 (2002).
> A second line of cases applies a test to determine whether the alleged business practice "is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers and requires the court to weigh the [82] utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim." Drum, 182 Cal.App.4th at 257, 106 Cal.Rptr.3d 46 (citing Bardin, 136 Cal.App.4th at 1260, [*961] 39 Cal.Rptr.3d 634; Davis, 179 Cal.App.4th at 594-595, 101 Cal.Rptr.3d 697)).
> . . .
> The test applied in a third line of cases draws on the definition of "unfair" in section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45, subd. (n)), and requires that "(1) the consumer injury must be substantial; (2) the injury must not be outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or competition; and (3) it must be an injury that consumers themselves could not reasonably have avoided." Drum, 182 Cal.App.4th at 257, 106 Cal.Rptr.3d 46 (citing Davis, 179 Cal.App.4th 597-598, 101 Cal.Rptr.3d 697; *Camacho v. 2. Application of Law to Facts

a. Unlawful Conduct

In order to maintain a claim under the UCL based on unlawful conduct, a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to establish a violation of some law. In their complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' violation of RESPA serves [83] as the basis for their UCL claim. As discussed above, Plaintiffs RESPA claim fails as a matter of law.

Because Plaintiffs are unable to establish any underlying unlawful conduct, their UCL claim based on unlawful conduct fails to state a claim and it is accordingly dismissed.

b. Fraudulent Conduct

As discussed above, a plaintiff bringing a UCL claim based in fraud must plead reliance on the misrepresentations or failures to disclose in order to establish standing. Plaintiffs fail to allege reliance and their claim under the fraudulent prong is dismissed on this basis.

The Court finds that Plaintiffs' UCL claim under the fraudulent prong is grounded, in part, in fraud. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants "[m]isrepresent[] in their force-placed insurance notices that borrowers were obligated to pay for backdated insurance coverage" despite the absence of any risk of loss. FAC at ¶ 165(l). Plaintiffs further allege a lucrative scheme consisting of pre-arranged exclusive agreements between Defendants and ASIC. This scheme was kept secret from borrowers and actively concealed through notices that misrepresent Defendants' business interest in its FPI practice. Moreover, Plaintiffs concede their [84] claim under the fraudulent prong is based in fraud when they argue in the Opposition that their claim meets the heightened pleading standard for fraud claims under Rule 9(b).

Although Plaintiffs must plead reliance in order to support their claim grounded in fraud, no Plaintiff alleges reliance based on any of the conduct that could support a claim under the fraudulent prong. Plaintiffs' claim based on fraudulent conduct is accordingly dismissed with leave to amend.

c. Unfair Conduct

As with the fraudulent prong, Plaintiffs must plead reliance if their claim under the unfair prong is grounded in fraud. As discussed above, Plaintiffs make no allegation of reliance in relation to any conduct based in fraud. Therefore to the extent Plaintiffs' claim under the unfair prong is based on allegations sounding in fraud, the claim must be dismissed.

Although Plaintiffs' FAC makes considerable reference to Defendants' alleged scheme to deceive and mislead Plaintiffs about its business arrangements, Plaintiffs also make allegations that are not based on fraud. The Court will therefore examine Plaintiffs' claim under the unfair prong with reference only to Defendants' non-fraudulent conduct.

[*962] Defendants [85] contend that Plaintiffs are unable to state a claim under any of the tests developed by the California courts in evaluating a claim under the unfair prong. The Court declines to grant Defendants' Motion on the "unfair" prong of the UCL claim as to any Plaintiff because the Court cannot say, as a matter of law, that Defendants alleged conduct would not violate any of the three tests for unfair conduct. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants unfairly force-placed exorbitantly priced hazard insurance on their property and backdated the policy despite no damage to the property or claims arising out of the property during the backdated period. This practice was disadvantageous to Plaintiffs and unsupported by any apparent reason other than the fact that Defendants stood to benefit financially from the high-priced, backdated policy. Moreover, Defendants' arrangement with ASIC resulted in financial gains to Defendants, at Plaintiffs' expense, and created incentives for Defendants to seek policies with the highest premiums. The Court cannot say that this allegation fails as a matter of law.

Defendants' contention that Plaintiffs could have avoided the alleged unfair conduct ignores Plaintiffs' factual [86] allegations. Ms. McNeary-Calloway faced financial difficulties in the wake of her husband's death and, apparently, concluded that she could no longer afford to make her hazard insurance payments. Ms. North faced similar financial hardship following a serious illness. The MacKinnons allege that their coverage lapsed due to a computer error. The Court cannot say, as a matter of law, that Plaintiffs could reasonably have avoided Defendants' alleged unfair practice.

F. Whether the New Jersey Plaintiff States a Claim under to the NJCFA

Defendants argue that Plaintiff Mayko's claim under the NJCFA fails for three reasons: 1) Plaintiff fails to satisfy Rule 9(b)'s pleading requirements; 2) because Plaintiff's RESPA claim fails, Plaintiff has not plead any viable underlying unlawful conduct; and 3) Plaintiff has not alleged that she was induced or lured into making any purchase. The Court denies Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff Mayko's NJCFA claim.

1. Background Law

HN27[] The Consumer Fraud Act ("CFA"), N.J.S.A. 56:8-1, et seq., provides a private cause of action to consumers who are victimized by fraudulent practices in the marketplace. Gonzalez v. Wilshire Credit Corp., 207 N.J. 557, 576, 25 A.3d 1103 (2011). [87] A consumer who can prove "(1) an unlawful practice, (2) an 'ascertainable loss,' and (3) 'a causal relationship between the unlawful conduct and the ascertainable loss,' is entitled to legal and/or equitable relief, treble damages, and reasonable attorneys' fees." Id. (citing N.J.S.A. 56:8-19).

HN28[] An unlawful practice under the CFA is the:

> use or employment by any person of any unconscionable commercial practice, deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, or the knowing, concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact with intent that others rely upon such concealment, suppression or omission, in connection with the sale or advertisement of any merchandise or real estate, or with the subsequent performance of such person as aforesaid, whether or not any person has in fact been misled, deceived or damaged thereby.

N.J.S.A. 56:8-2.

HN29[] CFA claims claims "'sounding in fraud' are subject to the particularity requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b)." Capogrosso v. State Farm Ins. Co, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97544, [*963] 2009 WL 3447068, at *3 (D.N.J. Oct. 21, 2009) (quoting Dewey v. Volkswagen, 558 F. Supp. 2d 505, 524 (D.N.J. 2008)).

2. Application of Law to Facts

Plaintiff does not deny [88] her CFA claim "sounds in fraud" and she is therefore required to plead with particularity as required by Rule 9(b). Plaintiff argues that she has satisfied Rule 9(b), and the Court agrees. Plaintiff alleges that, in connection with the loan transaction, Defendants failed to disclose to Plaintiff that when force-placing insurance they would make no effort to shop for a reasonably priced policy, that they would receive a kickback for each policy force-placed, that no effort would be made to renew the existing policies, and that the policies Defendants purchased for Plaintiffs would be backdated to cover periods during which no risk existed. See, e.g., FAC ¶¶ 2-3, 6, 65-79, 84-86, 172. Plaintiff further alleges a scheme consisting of pre-arranged exclusive agreements between Defendants and ASIC, whereby Defendants had a financial interest in force-placing policies and purchasing policies with the highest possible premiums. See FAC ¶ 172. Regarding Defendants' notice of FPI, Defendants misrepresent and fail to disclose the true nature of the reinsurance arrangement. Id. Defendants also misrepresent why FPI premiums are considerably higher than normal hazard insurance premiums, failing [89] to disclose that the premiums are inflated in order to cover the kickbacks to Defendants. Id. The allegations of the scheme, and its profitability for Defendants, is sufficient to plead an intent by Defendants to conceal its FPI practice. The Court concludes that these allegations are sufficient to meet the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) and adequately plead an "unlawful practice" under the CFA. [8]

[8] Defendants cite to no authority for their argument that Plaintiff must plead an actual violation of a statute in order to satisfy the "unlawful practice" requirement. Indeed, the statute itself, quoted above, explicitly defines the term, and a violation of a statute is clearly not a prerequisite to a finding of an "unlawful practice."

The Court also finds that Plaintiff has adequately pled an "ascertainable loss" and a "causal relationship" between the loss and Defendants' conduct. Defendants' argument that Plaintiff must also plead that Defendants' conduct lured or induced Plaintiff to enter into the loan transaction is unconvincing. The case Defendants cite in support of their argument, Joe Hand Promotions, Inc. v. Mills, 567 F. Supp. 2d 719 (D.N.J. 2008), dismissed a CFA claim based [90] on a letter threatening litigation if the recipient, Taylor, did not pay a settlement related to a television licensing dispute. Id. at 723. The court in Joe Hand concluded that the alleged fraudulent conduct, embodied in the letter, "did not induce Taylor to purchase anything . . . . Thus, the fraudulent conduct alleged was not done 'in connection with' the sale or advertisement of merchandise[.]" Id. at 723-24. This Court, however, can find no court that has since followed Joe Hand's reading of the CFA requirements. Rather, the decision appears contrary to the New Jersey Supreme Court's holdings that the CFA "does not require proof of reliance." Lee v. Carter, 203 N.J. 496, 522, 4 A.3d 561 (2010) (quoting Gennari v. Weichert Co. Realtors, 148 N.J. 582, 607, 691 A.2d 350 (1997)). The Court denies Defendants' motion to dismiss the CFA claim.

G. Unjust Enrichment Claim

1. Background Law

HN30[] Although there is some disagreement among California courts as to whether unjust enrichment may be asserted as a stand-alone claim under California law, [*964] this Court has recognized that the confusion is largely semantic. Nordberg v. Trilegiant Corp., 445 F. Supp. 2d 1082, 1100 (N.D. Cal. 2006) (Patel, J.). The court in Nordberg explained [91] that even though California law may not recognize unjust enrichment as an independent claim, such a claim may be understood as one for restitution, which is recognized under California law. Id. Therefore, the Court considers whether Plaintiff's sixth claim, styled as a claim for unjust enrichment, states a claim for restitution.

HN31[] To state a claim for restitution, a plaintiff "must plead 'receipt of a benefit and the unjust retention of the benefit at the expense of another.'" *Walters v. Fidelity Mortgage of Cal., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36839, 2010 WL 1493131, at * 12 (E.D. Cal., Apr. 14, 2010)* (quoting Lectrodryer v. Seoulbank, 77 Cal. App. 4th 723, 726, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 881 (2000)). "Even when a person has received a benefit from another, he is required to make restitution 'only if the circumstances of its receipt or retention are such that, as between the two persons, it is unjust for him to retain it.'" Ghirardo v. Antonioli, 14 Cal. 4th 39, 51, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687, 924 P.2d 996 (1996) (quoting Restatement of Restitution, § 1, cmt. c). In McBride v. Boughton, the court explained that "restitution may be awarded in lieu of breach of contract damages when the parties had an express contract, but it was procured by fraud or is unenforceable or ineffective for some reason." [92] McBride, 123 Cal.App. 4th at 388. To prevail on a claim for restitution, a plaintiff need not establish bad faith on the part of the defendant, so long as the recipient of the funds was not entitled to the funds. See Lectrodryer, 77 Cal. App. 4th at 726.

2. Application of Law to Facts

Plaintiffs' FAC states a valid claim for restitution. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants unjustly charged Plaintiffs for backdated policies and that Defendants wrongfully earned commissions and kickbacks at Plaintiffs' expense.

H. Whether Plaintiffs State a Claim for Injunctive and Declaratory Relief

The Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to state a claim for injunctive or declaratory relief because those are not causes of action.

HN32[] "I]njunctive relief is a remedy and not, in itself, a cause of action, and a cause of action must exist before injunctive relief may be granted." Camp v. Bd. of Supervisors, 123 Cal. App. 3d 334, 356, 176 Cal. Rptr. 620 (1981) (quoting Shell Oil Co. v. Richter, 52 Cal. App. 2d 164, 168, 125 P.2d 930 (1942)). Additionally, "[a] claim for declaratory relief is duplicative and unnecessary when it is commensurate with the relief sought through other causes of action." *Vogan v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132944, 2011 WL 5826016, at 8 (E.D. Cal. Nov. 17, 2011). [93] Plaintiffs' arguments for declaratory relief are entirely remedial in nature rather than pertinent to a stand-alone claim. If Plaintiffs satisfy the legal standard to obtain those forms of relief, then they will be granted as a remedy. See FAC at 45.

I. Whether the NJCFA Claim Should be Dismissed for Improper Venue or Transferred to a Proper Venue

Defendants ask that Plaintiff North's CFA claim be dismissed for improper venue or, in the alternative, transferred to a federal district court in New Jersey pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a). The Court rejects this request.

HN33[] Generally, venue must be established as to each cause of action. Legal Additions LLC v. Kowalski, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41835, 2009 WL [*965] *1226957, at 11 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 30, 2009) (Chen, J.) (citing Rothstein v. Carriere, 41 F. Supp. 2d 381, 386 (E.D.N.Y. 1999)). However, if venue is proper on one claim, the court may find pendent venue for claims that are closely related. Id.; see Beattie v. United States, 756 F.2d 91, 100-104, 244 U.S. App. D.C. 70 (D.C. Cir.1984), overruled on other grounds in Smith v. United States, 507 U.S. 197, 113 S. Ct. 1178, 122 L. Ed. 2d 548 (1993). The decision to apply pendent venue to closely related claims is a discretionary decision. Beattie, 756 F.2d at 103. A court may consider [94] the principles of judicial economy, convenience, avoidance of piecemeal litigation, and fairness to the litigants in making its decision. Id.

HN34[] Section 1404(a) allows the court to transfer an action "[f]or the convenience of parties and witnesses [and] in the interest of justice . . . to any other district or division where it might have been brought." Section 1404(a) displaces the common law doctrine of forum non conveniens and differs from forum non conveniens in that it allows courts to transfer actions in the interest of justice rather than having to dismiss them. Decker Coal v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 805 F.2d 834, 843 (9th Cir. 1986). However, courts draw on forum non conveniens considerations when deciding whether a § 1404 transfer is appropriate. Id. In particular, courts considering this issue balance the preference that is traditionally accorded the plaintiff's choice of forum against the burden to the defendant of litigating in an inconvenient forum. Id. The defendant must make a strong showing of inconvenience to upset the plaintiff's choice of forum.

Defendants argue that venue is improper only as to Plaintiff Mayko's CFA claim, and the Court should decline to exercise pendent [95] venue over that claim. The Court finds that, even if there is improper venue as to the CFA claim, principles of pendent venue are satisfied here since the CFA claim is closely related to the California Plaintiffs' UCL claim and "it does not seem too inconvenient" to include the claim with the other claims in this action. Id. at 104. Although Defendants assert that the CFA claim involves activities and residents located exclusively in New Jersey, Defendants have not met their burden in showing that their preferred forum is more appropriate given the relatedness of the claims, the convenience of the parties and witnesses, and the interests of justice. Defendants' motion to dismiss the CFA claim based on improper venue, or transfer the claim based on Section 1404(a), is accordingly denied.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Defendant's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. An amended complaint, if any, shall be filed within thirty (30) days of the date of this order. Plaintiffs are granted leave to amend only to plead facts showing reliance on any alleged misrepresentations.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[1] Global Reinsurance Corporation-U.S. Branch, Formerly Known as Gerling Global Reinsurance Corporation-U.S. Branch, Respondent, v Equitas Ltd. et al., Appellants.

Prior History: [1] Appeal, by permission of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the First Judicial Department, from an order of that Court, entered January 18, 2011. The Appellate Division (1) reversed, on the law, a judgment of the Supreme Court, New York County (Bernard J. Fried, J.), which had dismissed the second amended complaint upon an order of that court (op 24 Misc 3d 264, 876 NYS2d 325 [2009]) granting defendants' motion to dismiss the second amended complaint; and (2) reinstated the complaint. The following question was certified by the Appellate Division: "Was the order of this Court, which reversed the order of the Supreme Court, properly made?"

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN1[] Sherman Act, Claims

An antitrust claim under the Donnelly Act, General Business Law § 340 et seq., or under its essentially similar federal progenitor, § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., must allege both concerted action by two or more entities and a consequent restraint of trade within an identified relevant product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN2[] Sherman Act, Claims

Although there are situations in which a fully integrated entity that takes over and consolidates economic functions formerly performed competitively will be deemed sufficiently autonomous in its subsequent operations to preclude their characterization as conspiratorial within the meaning of the antitrust laws, the pertinent inquiry in determining whether there is concerted or unilateral activity is one of substance and not form; what is important is how the parties to the alleged anticompetitive conduct actually operate.

Product markets are defined for antitrust purposes by the applying the rule of reasonable interchangeability.

HN4[] Sherman Act, Claims

Ordinarily, a Donnelly Act, General Business Law § 340 et seq., or Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., plaintiff, to survive a motion to dismiss in a rule of reason case, must minimally allege that conspirators possessed power within the relevant market to produce a market-wide anticompetitive effect. Defined in the context of sales, market power is the ability to raise prices significantly without losing business, but more generally may be understood as the capacity to impose onerous economic terms without suffering competitive detriment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN5[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

While on a CPLR 3211 motion to dismiss, the allegations of the complaint must be accepted as true and construed liberally in the plaintiff's favor and in the antitrust context courts are hesitant to dismiss complaints on the pleadings based on the sufficiency of product market allegations, it is nonetheless the case that there is no per se rule barring dismissal where the complaint simply does not allege a conspirator's basic capacity to inflict market-wide anticompetitive injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN6[] Sherman Act, Claims

It is market-wide effect that is crucial to an antitrust claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., or Donnelly Act, General Business Law § 340 et seq., not the existence of otherwise compensable individual injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

HN7[] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

The extraterritorial reach of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., is limited under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982, 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a, which provides that the Sherman Act shall not apply to conduct involving non-import trade or commerce with foreign nations. The only ground for excepting to this general rule of inapplicability where imports are not involved is where the conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on domestic commerce, and such effect gives rise to a Sherman Act claim. § 6a(1)(A), (2).

Headnotes/Summary

Headnotes

Monopolies -- Donnelly Act -- Reinsurance Coverage -- Relevant Product Market

1. Plaintiff, a New York branch of a German reinsurance corporation, failed to state an antitrust claim under the Donnelly Act (General Business Law § 340 et seq.) against defendants, London, England based entities engaged in the business of providing retrocessionary reinsurance that were created so as to reinsure certain otherwise uninsurable pre-1993 non-life retrocessionary obligations of Lloyd's of London syndicates. An antitrust claim under the Donnelly Act, or under its essentially similar federal progenitor, section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC § 1 et seq.), must allege both concerted action by two or more entities and a consequent restraint of trade within an identified relevant product market. Although a perhaps colorable claim of concerted action was discernable from the complaint, and there was a nominal allegation of a worldwide market, there was no allegation of any anticompetitive effect attributable to the posited conspiracy beyond the Lloyd's marketplace. The Lloyd's syndicates were capable of insulating themselves from each other's competitive behavior in the area of claims management and could by that device attempt to cap their liabilities under certain previously issued coverage, but there were no allegations in the complaint from which it was possible to gather that they were capable of avoiding the business consequences of this approach in the global market. Plaintiff was perhaps injured by an anticompetitive restraint in the Lloyd's market, but that was not a circumstance from which it was possible to conclude that there was some broader anticompetitive effect, or even a capacity to produce such an effect, in the relevant world market.

Monopolies -- Donnelly Act -- Reinsurance Coverage -- Foreign Conspiracy

2. Plaintiff, a New York branch of a German reinsurance corporation, failed to state an antitrust claim under the Donnelly Act (General Business Law § 340 et seq.) against defendants, London, England based entities engaged in the business of providing retrocessionary reinsurance that were created so as to reinsure certain otherwise uninsurable pre-1993 non-life retrocessionary obligations of Lloyd's of London syndicates. The complaint alleged, essentially, that a German reinsurer through its New York branch purchased retrocessional coverage in a London marketplace and consequently sustained economic injury when retrocessional claims management services were by agreement within that London marketplace consolidated so as to eliminate competition over their delivery. Injury so inflicted, attributable primarily to foreign, government approved transactions having no particular New York orientation and occasioning injury here only by reason of the circumstance that plaintiff's purchasing branch happens to be situated here, was not redressable under New York State's antitrust statute. Even assuming that the extraterritorial reach of the Donnelly Act is as extensive as that of its federal counterpart, the Sherman Act (15 USC

§ 1 et seq.), the Sherman Act would not reach a competitive restraint, imposed by participants in a British marketplace, that only incidently affected commerce in this country.

[*726] [*72] [188] Chief Judge Lippman.

At issue is the sufficiency and extraterritorial reach of plaintiff's claim under New York State's antitrust statute, commonly known as the Donnelly Act (General Business Law § 340 et seq).

[*73] [189] Plaintiff is a New York branch of a German reinsurance corporation. Defendants (hereinafter collectively referred to as Equitas) are London, England based entities engaged in the business of providing retrocessionary reinsurance. Retrocessionary [*8] reinsurers, or [2] retrocessionaires as they are known, write coverage for risks ceded to them by reinsurers, in this transactional context referred to as "cedents."

According to the complaint, this action arises from practices employed in connection with the handling of claims made under retrocessional reinsurance treaties providing what is known as "non-life" coverage. Among the risks insured under this heading are those of environmental, catastrophic and asbestos related origin. Liabilities under policies insuring such risks typically are of the "long tail" variety; they may surface long after the policy period and it is clear in retrospect that underwriters did not accurately appreciate the magnitude of "non-life" risks or the unusual persistence of the liability they would engender.

Over the years, Lloyd's of London, an insurance marketplace composed of numerous competing insurance syndicates, themselves composed of individual underwriting participants (natural persons referred to as Names), issued, through its syndicates substantial non-life retrocessional coverage. By the early 1990s, it became evident that the liabilities arising under this coverage were mounting at an alarming [*9] rate and would soon outstrip the syndicates' reserves.

The syndicates individually proved unable to respond to this impending crisis, in significant part because in competing with each other for prospective business it was their practice to pay retrocessionary claims without haggling and without imposing onerous administrative burdens on their cedents. It was thus proposed that, since individual action by the syndicates to limit [*727] liability by more closely scrutinizing claims would be commercially unviable, the Names should agree to repose decision making with respect to the handling of certain liabilities arising under pre-1993 Lloyd's non-life retrocessionary coverage, in a newly created entity--a reinsurer that would, because it would be in perpetual "run-off" (i.e., merely concluding obligations under existing coverage and not soliciting new business), be free to adopt a more aggressive approach to the handling of claims. This proposal, as set forth by the governing body of Lloyd's in a "Reconstruction and Renewal Plan" (R&R plan), was approved by the Names and subsequently reviewed and found unobjectionable by United Kingdom and European Union antitrust regulatory authorities, [*10] i.e., the United Kingdom Department of Trade and Industry and the European Commission. [1]

It was pursuant to the R&R plan that Equitas was created in 1996 to reinsure the otherwise uninsurable non-life retrocessionary obligations of the Lloyd's syndicates. And, in accordance with a Reinsurance and Runoff Contract (RROC), the Names reinsured with Equitas [3] their risks under the Lloyd's syndicates' pre-1993 non-life retrocessionary treaties. The consideration for this coverage was comprised of some £14.7 billion in assets (premiums paid for the subject coverage) held by the syndicates and significant additional contributions by the Names individually, and by Lloyd's and its functionaries. Although [74] [190] subsequent to these transfers and until 2009 [2] the Names remained severally liable under the coverage extended by the syndicates, pursuant to the RROC Equitas was given plenary power to manage claims arising under the subject pre-1993 coverage. [3] The Names were concomitantly barred from reaching the funds transferred in exchange [*11] for the reinsurance provided by Equitas.

Plaintiff reinsurer purchased coverage for some of its non-life risks from Lloyd's retrocessionaires. The risks ceded by it to [*728] Lloyd's syndicates underwritten by pre-1993 retrocessionary coverage were, subsequent to the adoption of the R&R plan, in turn ceded by the Lloyd's retrocessionaires to Equitas under the RROC. According to plaintiff, Equitas adopted a "hard-nosed" approach to the handling of its claims, involving among other practices, holding payments due hostage to concessions by plaintiff and imposing extraordinarily onerous documentation requirements. [*12] In addition to commencing arbitration proceedings against the underwriters in which it sought damages for these alleged abuses under the governing insurance treaties, plaintiff filed this action in March 2007, asserting in its original complaint a Donnelly Act claim as well as one sounding in tortious interference with contractual relations.

On a CPLR 3211 motion preceding the one now before us, the tortious interference claim was dismissed, upon the ground then urged by Equitas that the wrongful conduct attributed by plaintiff to it had not been performed by it as a stranger to the contracts said to have been interfered with, but in its capacity as the claims handling agent of the contractually bound Names (*20 Misc 3d 1115[A], 867 NYS2d 16, 2008 NY Slip Op 51362[U], 8 [2008]). The motion court, however, sustained plaintiff's Donnelly Act claim finding, as is here relevant, that plaintiff had [4] adequately alleged in the claim's support a geographical market for retrocessional non-life insurance limited to the Lloyd's marketplace. The court nonetheless granted plaintiff's request to amend its complaint to allege that the relevant market was global. [4]

[1] The R&R plan was also submitted for comment to various US government agencies, among them the New York State Department of Insurance, which registered no objection.

[2] In 2009, Equitas, with the approval of the British High Court undertook finally to relieve the Names of their obligations under the retrocessional treaties at issue (see Matter of Names at Lloyd's for the 1992 & Prior Years of Account, Represented by Equitas Ltd., [2009] EWHC 1595 [Ch], 2009 WL 1949482 [July 7, 2009]).

[3] Under section 9.2 (a) of the RROC, Equitas was authorized "to adjust, handle, agree, settle, pay, compromise or repudiate any Claim, return premium, reinsurance premium or any other insurance or reinsurance liability on behalf of the Syndicate or Closed Year Syndicate."

[4] This amendment, as the parties [*13] then understood, would be essential to the action's survival, since there was no factually plausible contention that the Lloyd's marketplace was the relevant market in assessing whether Equitas's claims handling practices had an anticompetitive effect upon the retrocessional non-life insurance market.

The resulting second amended complaint, the pleading now at issue, alleges in support of the Donnelly Act claim that prior to the R&R plan and the consequent creation of Equitas, retrocessional non-life claims handling with respect to pre-1993 Lloyd's coverage was performed by the individual Lloyd's syndicates which, because they competed with each other for new business and were thus anxious to curry favor with potential cedents, were disposed to settle claims expeditiously and fairly. Following the R&R plan and the centralizing of all decision making respecting the handling of the subject category of claims in Equitas pursuant to the RROC, there ceased to be any competitive [*729] [75] [191] disincentive to the adoption of sharp claims management practices--Equitas had no interest in attracting prospective business; its sole mission was to marshal its fund with the considerable amount of parsimony necessary [*14] to cover the avalanche of liabilities that had led to its existence. The complaint further alleged that Lloyd's concentration of claims management decision making power in Equitas would operate to suppress competition in the delivery of a crucial component of the retrocessional non-life coverage product, namely, claims management, and that it would do so not only within the Lloyd's marketplace, but in the world. [5]

After the filing of the second amended complaint, Equitas again moved to dismiss pursuant to CPLR 3211. In deciding this motion, Supreme Court focused upon the circumstance that the complaint, while nominally alleging that the pertinent geographical market for the particular species of coverage at issue was global, actually seemed to continue to rely upon the existence of a cognizable submarket confined to the Lloyd's marketplace. Given the new allegations that there was a worldwide market for retrocessional non-life coverage, and the absence of any allegation that the coverage available [*16] in the Lloyd's marketplace could not be acquired elsewhere on competitive terms, the court concluded that Lloyd's was not a viable [*730] submarket and on that ground dismissed the Donnelly Act claim, since an assertion of market power adequate to sustain a claim for restraint of trade may only be demonstrated within the context of an identified relevant market or submarket (24 Misc 3d 264, 273-274, 876 NYS2d 325 [Sup Ct, NY County 2009]).[6] [5]

> "36. In 1993, in 1996, at the time this action was commenced, and currently, the Lloyd's syndicates collective1y had market power in the worldwide market for retrocessional coverage.
> "(a) In 1993, in 1996, at the time this action was commenced, and currently, the Lloyd's marketplace was the single most significant seller of most forms of non-life retrocessional coverage to reinsurers worldwide.
> "(b) In 1993, in 1996, at the time this action was commenced, and currently, the Lloyd's marketplace provides the benchmark for prices, terms, and conditions for most forms of non-life retrocessional coverage.
> "(c) In 1993, in 1996, at the time this action was commenced, and currently, any reinsurer, and any [*15] reinsurance broker, wishing to purchase retrocessional coverage would have to at least consider approaching Lloyd's for quotes and would have to take into account the terms and conditions offered by various Lloyd's syndicates in determining what to purchase, and on what terms.
> "(d) For many lines of retrocessional business, and in many years, competition within the Lloyd's marketplace is more significant to prospective purchasers of retrocessional coverage than is competition between Lloyd's as a whole and other sellers, because Lloyd's is expected to, and does, set the lead in establishing coverage."

[6] Although there are Appellate Division decisions recognizing this basic requirement of a Donnelly Act claim (see e.g. Creative Trading Co. v Larkin-Pluznick-Larkin, Inc., 136 AD2d 461, 462, 523 NYS2d 102 [1st Dept 1988]), there do not appear to be any cases from our Court. It does not seem, however, that there would be much room for doubt as to the requirement. It is logically necessary to a coherent allegation of a trade restraint and has been recognized by federal courts in assessing the adequacy of pleadings alleging violations under the Sherman Act (15 USC § 1 et seq.; see e.g. Newcal Indus. v Ikon Office Solution, 513 F3d 1038, 1045 [9th Cir 2008] cert denied 557 US 903, 129 S Ct 2788, 174 L Ed 2d 290 [2009]), after which the Donnelly Act is modeled [*17] (see State of New York v Mobil Oil Corp., 38 NY2d 460, 463, 344 NE2d 357, 381 NYS2d 426 [1976]).

On plaintiff's appeal from the subsequently entered judgment dismissing the [76] [192] complaint, [7] the Appellate Division, with one justice dissenting, reversed and reinstated the Donnelly Act claim. The Court found that the complaint adequately pleaded a worldwide market. And, while acknowledging that the crucial allegations contained in paragraph 36 of the amended pleading (n 5, supra), did not separately allege market power--i.e., that Lloyd's was capable of unilaterally raising prices for retrocessional non-life coverage in the relevant market significantly without losing any business (see CDC Techs., Inc. v IDEXX Lab., Inc., 186 F3d 74, 81 [2d Cir 1999])--the allegations read together and liberally construed were, in the Court's view, adequate to that purpose (82 AD3d 26, 35, 921 NYS2d 1 [1st Dept 2011]). The Court rejected, either expressly or impliedly, defendants' remaining contentions, among them that there was no actionable conspiracy because Equitas had at all relevant times acted unilaterally and pursuant to agreements (the R&R plan and the RROC) approved by the United Kingdom and European [*18] regulatory authorities; and that, even if a London-based conspiracy to restrain trade was adequately alleged, it could not be reached under a New York State antitrust statute presumptively without extraterritorial effect.

The Appellate Division granted Equitas leave to appeal, certifying to this Court the question of whether its order reversing the order of Supreme Court was properly made. We now reverse.

[*731] HN1[] An antitrust claim under the Donnelly Act, or under its essentially similar federal progenitor, section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC § 1 et seq.; see Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v Abrams, 71 NY2d 327, 335, 520 NE2d 535, 525 NYS2d 816 [1988]; Mobil Oil Corp., 38 NY2d at 463), must allege both concerted action by two or more entities and a consequent restraint of trade within an identified relevant product market (see e.g. Home Town Muffler v Cole Muffler, 202 AD2d 764, 765, 608 NYS2d 735 [3d Dept 1994]; Creative Trading, 136 AD2d at 462; Capital Imaging Assoc., P.C. v Mohawk Val. [6] Med. Assoc., 996 F2d 537, 542-543 [2d Cir 1993], [*19] cert denied 510 US 947, 114 S Ct 388, 126 L Ed 2d 337 [1993]). Equitas argues that the second amended complaint fails sufficiently to allege either element.

For present purposes, we assume, without deciding, that a conspiracy is alleged. In favor of that assumption we note that, although the complaint contains allegations that Equitas acted independently of the syndicates in discharging its claims management function and was a legally and financially autonomous entity, it also alleges in substance that the collective assumption of the claims management function previously performed by the syndicates individually was Equitas's raison d'|frtre under the RROC and that Equitas from its inception and at all relevant subsequent times acted, if not as an agent in the traditional sense, at least as a preprogrammed instrumentality of the Names. Indeed, it will be recalled that in obtaining the dismissal of plaintiff's tortious interference claim Equitas itself represented that it was the claims agent of the Names, and, according to the complaint the allegations of which we must at this juncture accept as true, Equitas had no other purpose but that of fixing and capping the Names' liability [*20] under the subject pre-1993 coverage. HN2[] Although there are situations in [77] [193] which a fully integrated entity that takes over and consolidates economic functions formerly performed competitively will be deemed sufficiently autonomous in its subsequent operations to preclude their characterization as conspiratorial within the meaning of the antitrust laws (see e.g. Texaco Inc. v Dagher, 547 US 1, 126 S Ct 1276, 164 L Ed 2d 1 [2006]), the pertinent inquiry in determining whether there is concerted or unilateral activity is one of substance and not form (American Needle, Inc. v National Football League, 560 US --, --, 130 S Ct 2201, 2211-2212, 176 L Ed 2d 947 [2010]); what is important is how the parties to the alleged anticompetitive conduct actually operate (560 US at --, 130 S Ct at 2209). Here, there is discernible from the pleading a perhaps colorable claim that Equitas was engaged in concerted activity when it exercised [*732] in place of and on behalf of the coexisting Lloyd's syndicates consolidated decision making authority over the management of the syndicates' pre-1993 retrocessional non-life liabilities.

[1] The substantive problem with this action is rather that although a worldwide market [*21] is nominally alleged, as is evidently essential since it is clear that the retrocessional non-life product is available globally and that there is no distinct legally cognizable submarket, [8] there [7] is no allegation of any anticompetitive effect attributable to the posited conspiracy beyond the Lloyd's marketplace.

[7] The Donnelly Act claim and the pendent claim for injunctive relief were all that remained of the complaint following the motion court's earlier dismissal of plaintiff's tortious interference claim.

HN4[] Ordinarily, a Donnelly or Sherman Act plaintiff, to survive a motion to dismiss in a rule of reason case, such [*22] as this one, [9] must minimally allege that conspirators possessed power within the relevant market to produce a market-wide anticompetitive effect (see Capital Imaging, 996 F2d at 546). Defined in the context of sales, market power is the ability to raise prices significantly without losing business (see CDC Techs., 186 F3d at 81), but more generally may be understood as the capacity to impose onerous economic terms without suffering competitive detriment. Here, there is no allegation of any such power in the relevant worldwide market. While the Lloyd's syndicates were capable of insulating themselves from each other's competitive behavior in the area of claims management and could by that device attempt to cap their liabilities under certain previously issued coverage, there are no allegations from which it is possible to gather that they were capable of avoiding the business consequences of this approach in the global market.

[*733] Recognizing that HN5[] on a CPLR 3211 motion to dismiss the allegations of the complaint must be accepted as true and [78] [194] construed liberally in the plaintiff's favor (Cron v Hargro Fabrics, 91 NY2d 362, 366, 694 NE2d 56, 670 NYS2d 973 [1998]), and that in the antitrust context courts are "hesitant" to dismiss complaints on the pleadings based on the sufficiency of product market allegations (Todd, 275 F3d at 200), it is nonetheless the case that there is no per se rule barring dismissal where the complaint simply does not allege a conspirator's basic capacity to inflict market-wide anticompetitive injury (see id.). Here, there is no dispute as to the relevant market and, accordingly, no need for factual development on that point. The pertinent analytic focus is instead upon whether the complaint alleges the requisite power within the relevant worldwide market on the part of the claimed conspirators. We cannot conclude that it does. [8]

The allegations in paragraph 36 of the complaint do not singly [*24] or in combination allege market power as that term of art is defined in the antitrust lexicon. Lloyd's may, as plaintiff alleges, be the single most significant vendor of retrocessional non-life coverage; it may set the benchmark for the terms of such coverage and its quotes may be viewed as essential by reinsurers and reinsurance brokers; there may in addition be lines of retrocessional coverage with respect to which price competition with Lloyd's is considered more significant than competition in the world market. None of this, however, would justify the inference that Lloyd's could at will generally engage in "run-off" type claims management behavior and retain its business in a global market. Plaintiff was perhaps injured by an anticompetitive restraint in the Lloyd's market, but that is not a circumstance from which it is possible to conclude that there was some broader anticompetitive effect, or even a capacity to produce such an effect, in the relevant world market. HN6[] It is market-wide effect that is crucial to an antitrust claim under the Sherman Act or Donnelly Act (see CDC Techs. Inc., 186 F3d at 80-81), not the existence of otherwise compensable individual injury. Plaintiff [*25] is evidently pursuing contract claims against Lloyd's underwriters in arbitration based on the same claims handling practices presently alleged. The question here is whether plaintiff may, premised on such allegations of localized individual harm, seek an award of treble damages for an antitrust violation. Inasmuch as it is the market-wide nature of the harm that would justify any such award, the answer, we believe, must be no.

[8] Although, as noted (see supra at 729), the second amended complaint, while alleging a worldwide product market, retained its claim of a distinct submarket confined to Lloyd's, the latter is not a legally viable allegation. HN3[] Product markets are defined for antitrust purposes by applying the rule of "reasonable interchangeability" (see Todd v Exxon Corp., 275 F3d 191, 201 [2d Cir 2001]) and, particularly in light of the second amended complaint's allegation that the relevant market is global, i.e., that the subject Lloyd's product is interchangeable with retrocessional reinsurance products available worldwide, there is no plausible explanation for the persisting submarket allegation (see id. at 200). Global, accordingly, appears to have abandoned its submarket claim.

[9] There is no contention in this case of a per se violation; whether any restraint on trade for which defendants are shown to have been responsible was unreasonable is a bona fide issue in this litigation. There is no dispute that the purported conspiracy arose [*23] as a response to the impending ruin of the Lloyd's marketplace, an event that defendants contend would have significantly reduced competition in the world market for retrocessional non-life coverage.

[2] Even if this pleading deficiency could be cured--and we perceive no reason to suppose that the formidable hurdle of [*734] alleging market power could be surmounted by plaintiff--there would remain as an immovable obstacle to the action's maintenance, the circumstance that the Donnelly Act cannot be understood to extend to the foreign conspiracy plaintiff purports to describe.

The complaint alleges, essentially, that a German reinsurer through its New York branch purchased retrocessional coverage in a London marketplace and consequently sustained economic injury when retrocessional claims management services were by agreement within that London marketplace consolidated so as to eliminate competition over their delivery. Injury so inflicted, attributable primarily [*26] to foreign, government approved transactions having no particular New York orientation and occasioning injury here only by reason of the circumstance that plaintiff's purchasing branch happens to be situated here, is not redressable under New York State's antitrust statute. That this is so is demonstrable when the Donnelly Act is considered in the context of federal antitrust law.

[*79] [195] Assuming that the extraterritorial reach of the Donnelly Act is as extensive as that of its federal counterpart, the Sherman Act--an assumption that we do not ultimately embrace--it seems fairly clear that the Sherman Act would not reach a competitive restraint, imposed by participants in a British marketplace, that only incidently affected commerce in this country.

HN7[] The Sherman Act's extraterritorial reach is limited under the Foreign Trade [9] Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA) of 1982 (15 USC § 6a), which provides that the Sherman Act "shall not apply to conduct involving [non-import] trade or commerce … with foreign nations." The only ground for excepting to this general rule of inapplicability where imports are not involved [10] is where the conduct has a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" [*27] on domestic commerce, and "such effect gives rise to a [Sherman Act] claim" (15 USC § 6a [1] [A] ;[2]; F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd v Empagran S.A., 542 US 155, 162, 124 S Ct 2359, 159 L Ed 2d 226 [2004]). The London conspiracy here alleged was, according to the complaint, worldwide in its orientation; there is nothing in the pleadings to justify an inference that it targeted United States commerce specially or that its effect upon commerce in [*735] this country was substantial. Even if there were, however, the viability of a Sherman Act claim would still finally depend upon whether the domestic effect of the foreign conspiracy would itself "give rise" to a claim under the Sherman Act (id.). Plaintiff, although alleging individual injury in New York, has not alleged harm to competition in this country (see E & L Consulting, Ltd. v Doman Indus., 472 F3d 23, 28 n 3 [2d Cir 2006], cert denied 552 US 816, 128 S Ct 97, 169 L Ed 2d 22 [2007] ["It should go without saying … that a party cannot establish antitrust injury without establishing a violation of the antitrust laws, which, under Section 1 (of the Sherman Act), must involve an injury to competition"]). The only harm to competition alleged [*28] is within a particular London reinsurance marketplace. It seems clear that even if plaintiff had an otherwise viable Sherman Act claim based on harm to competition in the relevant global market, which it does not, it still would not, premised on its allegations of domestic harm, have a jurisdictional predicate for that claim. It is not necessary to know precisely the extent of the Donnelly Act's extraterritorial reach to understand that it cannot reach foreign conduct deliberately placed by Congress beyond the Sherman Act's jurisdiction. The federal limitation upon the reach of the Sherman Act, predicated upon and an expression of the essentially federal power to regulate foreign commerce, would be undone if states remained free to authorize "little Sherman Act" claims that went beyond it. The established presumption is, of course, against the extraterritorial operation of New York law (see McKinney's Consolidated Laws of NY, Book 1, Statutes § 149), and we do not see how it could be overcome in a situation where the analogue federal claim would be barred by congressional enactment.

It is not an answer to this analysis to observe, as plaintiff does, that under the McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USC § 1011 et seq.) regulation of the "business of insurance" is [10] committed to the states (15 USC § 1012 [b]). What is at issue here is not in the main the regulation of the "business [80] [196] of insurance," a matter within the special competence and jurisdictional reach of domestic state regulators, but the address of a purported foreign conspiracy to restrain trade, a matter to be dealt with, if at all, under the significantly distinct antitrust rubric (see Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v Royal Drug Co., 440 US 205, 210-211, 99 S Ct 1067, 59 L Ed 2d 261 [1979]). The question now before us--as to the extraterritorial reach of our state antitrust law--is, then, not one as to which the McCarran-Ferguson Act commitment is relevant. What is [*736] instead highly relevant is that the Donnelly Act's reach must be understood as part of a jurisdictional continuum whose outermost extension [*30] is defined by federal antitrust law. While it is true that the scope of federal subject matter jurisdiction under the Sherman Act, as limited by the FTAIA and federal decisions following Empagran (542 US 155, 124 S Ct 2359, 159 L Ed 2d 226 [2004], supra) is frequently far from obvious, we think it sufficiently evident that the Sherman Act would not reach the purely foreign conspiracy here claimed, the anticompetitive effect of which beyond the Lloyd's marketplace is not made out.

[10] There is no contention that the reinsurance product purchased by plaintiff at the Lloyd's marketplace [*29] was an import. Nor are there allegations that the alleged conspiracy was directed at any defined import market in this country (see Animal Science Prods., Inc. v China Minmetals Corp., 654 F3d 462, 471 n 11 [3d Cir 2011]).

Nonetheless, we do not ultimately ground our determination that the Donnelly Act does not reach the presently claimed conspiracy upon the FTAIA. Even if the Sherman Act could reach the purported conspiracy, it would not follow that the Donnelly Act should be viewed as coextensive. For a Donnelly Act claim to reach a purely extraterritorial conspiracy, there would, we think, have to be a very close nexus between the conspiracy and injury to competition in this state. That additional element is not discernible from the pleadings before us. It would be a very great, and we think unwarranted, supposition that the authors of the Donnelly Act intended to allow, on a predicate such as the one here alleged, the sort [*31] of highly intrusive international projection of state regulatory power now proposed.

Having said this, it should be emphasized that our decision should not be understood as placing some new limitation on the reach of the Donnelly Act. This is simply a rare instance in which a state antitrust action has tested the outer jurisdictional limits not only of state but federal antitrust law.

Accordingly, the order of the Appellate Division should be reversed, with costs, the judgment of Supreme Court reinstated and the certified question answered in the negative.

Smith, J. (concurring). I agree with the result reached by the majority, and with most of the reasoning in the majority opinion. My only reservation is about the majority's analysis (which, as it acknowledges, is not essential to its decision) of whether the allegations in the complaint would state a claim under the federal antitrust laws. The implications of the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 (15 USC § 6a) for this case (and for many other cases) are, to me at least, far less than clear. I would prefer to express no opinion about them, and simply to rely on the state law grounds explained at page 736 of the [*32] majority opinion (and on the similar [11] reasoning contained in [*737] the Appellate Division dissent [82 AD3d 26, 40-41 (2011)]), which sufficiently support the conclusion that the extraterritorial reach of the Donnelly Act does not extend to the transactions at issue here.

Judges Ciparick, Graffeo, Read and Jones concur with Chief Judge Lippman; Judge Smith concurs in a separate opinion, except insofar as Chief Judge Lippman's opinion discusses whether the allegations of the complaint would state a claim under the federal antitrust laws, in which Judge Pigott concurs.

Order reversed, etc.

HN4[] Standing, Requirements

The antitrust laws generally afford a private right of action to any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has established a two part test to determine whether a plaintiff has adequately alleged antitrust standing: (1) Whether the plaintiff has asserted a cognizable "antitrust injury"; and (2) whether the plaintiff is a proper plaintiff to assert a violation of the antitrust laws. The plaintiffs must establish both parts of this test; otherwise, they lack antitrust standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN5[] Standing, Requirements

An antitrust claimant must show more than merely an "injury casually linked" to a competitive practice; it must prove an antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN6[] Sherman Act, Scope

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, provides in part: every contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states is declared to be illegal. While § 1 appears to prohibit every restraint of trade, the United States Supreme Court has interpreted the statute as condemning only those combinations which constitute unreasonable restraints of trade. In order to establish their claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs must prove that the defendants (1) participated in an agreement that; (2) unreasonably unrestrained trade in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN7[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

With regard to an antitrust claim, whether an agreement unreasonably restrains trade is determined under one of two approaches: the per se rule or the rule of reason. In per se cases, evidence of actual effect on competition is not required because these actions are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable. A restraint on trade is per se illegal when the practice facially appears to be one that would almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN8[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

With regard to an antitrust claim, examples of practices which are per se illegal are horizontal price fixing, market allocation, group boycotts or tying arrangements, activities which are considered inherently anti-competitive. Restraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been denominated as horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints. There is often no bright line separating per se from rule of reason analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

With regard to an antitrust claim, a per se rule is inappropriate where the effects of a particular restraint are unclear, even where aspects of the restraint may appear to be facially anti-competitive. Per se analysis should not be extended to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

With regard to an antitrust claim, there is a presumption in favor of a rule-of-reason standard. Under the rule of reason analysis, the plaintiff bears the burden of establishing that the conduct complained of produces significant anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN11[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

While applying any one of antitrust's modes of analysis might involve many fact questions, the selection of a mode is entirely a question of law. To be sure, the United States Supreme Court has stated that the rule of reason requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition. But that statement was not meant to indicate that the fact finder should determine whether the per se rule or the rule of reason applied to a particular set of facts. Rather, it meant that once the court decided that the rule of reason should apply, disputed factual questions about reasonableness should be left to the jury. In a footnote the court made clear that determining the rule of decision was a question of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN12[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

With regard to an antitrust claim, in the first instance, courts must distinguish between some types of unlawful anticompetitive restraints that are per se illegal under the antitrust laws, and the far-larger type of restraints that should be analyzed under the rule of reason approach. If a court determines that a practice is illegal per se, further examination of the practice's impact on the market or the pro-competitive justifications for the practice is unnecessary for finding a violation of antitrust law, suggesting that the decision as to whether a practice is illegal per se is one committed to the court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

With regard to an antitrust claim, the United States Supreme Court has repeatedly noted that the per se rule should be applied to conduct only after courts have had considerable experience with certain business relationships. Since it seems quite clear that the per se rule should be applied to conduct only after it has been examined carefully by the courts, not juries, it also seems rather clear that the question of whether allegedly unlawful conduct is subject to per se analysis or rule of reason analysis is a legal question for the court, not a question for the jury. A court must first determine whether the conduct alleged to be unlawful is the type of conduct that has a pernicious effect on competition and lacks any redeeming virtue, to be considered illegal per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN14[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has succinctly defined the two major types of antitrust conspiracies as follows: Courts have identified two major types of antitrust conspiracies to restrain trade: horizontal and vertical. Horizontal conspiracies involve agreements among competitors at the same level of market structure to stifle trade, such as agreements among manufacturers or among distributors to fix prices for a given product, and therefore may constitute per se violations of antitrust law. Vertical conspiracies, on the other hand, involve agreements among actors at different levels of market structure to restrain trade, such as agreements between a manufacturer and its distributors to exclude another distributor from a given product and geographic market. Vertical restraints are analyzed under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN15[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

With regard to an antitrust claim, as an initial matter the court must determine whether or not the agreement alleged by the plaintiffs is horizontal in nature, which may constitute a per se violation of antitrust law, or vertical in nature, which must be analyzed under the rule of reason. In making this determination the labels used by the plaintiffs are largely irrelevant and the decision will be made against a backdrop of several well established principles. First of all, there is an automatic presumption in favor of the rule of reason standard. Secondly, the category of agreements to be analyzed under a per se analysis has been shrinking over the last few years. Finally, the per se rule should be applied only in "clear cut cases" of trade restraints that are so unreasonably anticompetitive that they present straightforward questions for reviewing courts. The per se analysis should not be extended to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiffs are retail sellers of processed milk who purchase directly from defendants Dean Foods Company ("Dean") and/or Dairy Farmers of America, Inc. ("DFA") who bring this purported class action under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § § 1-2 and Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14. [1] Plaintiffs' complaint alleges causes of action for violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act against Dean, DFA, and National Dairy Holdings, LP ("NDH") (agreement not to compete) (Count I); violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act against Dean, DFA, NDH, Southern Marketing Agency, Inc. ("SMA") and Dairy Marketing Services, LLC ("DMS") (conspiracy to unreasonably restrain trade) (Count II); violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act against Dean (unlawful monopolization) (Count III); violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act against Dean (attempt to monopolize) (Count IV); and violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act against Dean, DFA, and NDH (conspiracy to monopolize) (Count V).

On August 4, 2010, the Court granted Defendant's motion for summary judgment on Counts II, III and IV and denied the motion as to Counts I and V, [Doc. 863]. Currently pending before the Court are two related motions which this order will address: (1) Defendants' motion for reconsideration of the Court's August 4, 2010 order denying summary judgment as to Counts I and V, [Doc. 952], and (2) Defendants' supplemental motion for summary judgment as to Counts I and V, [Doc. 1026]. The parties have now exhaustively briefed the pending motions, the Court has heard oral argument and the motions are ripe for disposition. For the reasons which follow, defendants' motion for reconsideration will be GRANTED IN PART (as to Count V) and DENIED IN PART (as to Count I) and the supplemental motion for summary judgment will be GRANTED, Counts I and V of plaintiffs' complaint will be DISMISSED, and judgment will be entered on the Court's orders in favor of defendants.

I. The Motion For Reconsideration, [Doc. 952]

A. Count I

[1] Although there is a pending class certification motion, no class has been [*5] certified in this case.

Defendants argue that the Court erroneously held that disputed issues of material fact require trial of the conspiracy count (Count I) of the plaintiffs' complaint [*6] under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Defendants acknowledge that the Court recognized the correct standards but they say that the Court failed to properly apply them. They specifically argue that the Court clearly erred when it found that the parties' competing views of the evidence and the inferences to be drawn from that evidence create material issues of fact for trial without requiring plaintiffs to produce "evidence that tends to exclude the possibility" that the challenged conduct was the result of independent action. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984). Plaintiffs, of course, disagree.

Although the Court will grant Defendants' pending supplemental motion for summary judgment as to Count I, the Court believes that it both correctly stated and correctly applied the proper standards in its prior memorandum opinion. The motion for reconsideration as to Count I, therefore, will be DENIED. Because the Court may not have articulated its views as clearly as it could have in the prior order, the Court will briefly discuss two of the issues raised by the motion and response.

The first deals with the proper application of the summary judgment standard in antitrust [*7] cases. Although the parties appear to agree on the definition of the standard, they disagree strenuously on the manner in which it is applied. Defendants seem to argue that the standard is met when they respond to Plaintiffs' ambiguous evidence with evidence of their own unilateral, independent business decisions related to the conduct. In other words, they seem to argue that they meet the standard whenever they offer any argument from which the jury could draw from their conduct an inference of independent business decision, as well as an inference of action in furtherance of an antitrust conspiracy. They then appear to argue, not that Plaintiffs must show a jury question, but that Plaintiffs must prove that the action was not taken unilaterally, but in concert with others in an illegal conspiracy. Plaintiffs describe Defendants' efforts as an "upside down view" of the standard because Defendants urge the Court to require Plaintiffs to produce "overwhelming evidence" of joint illegal conduct. The Court agrees with Plaintiffs on this point and an example will illustrate the point.

Plaintiffs have offered evidence which, if believed by the jury, establishes that Defendants have acted [*8] contrary to their independent economic interest, for instance, that DFA/NDH acquired spin-off plants from the Dean/Suiza merger which were doomed to failure from the outset. Defendants respond that acquisition of the plants satisfied a legitimate business purpose, i.e., satisfaction of the government's concern about the merger, and that DFA had an interest in supplying raw milk to these plants. From this circumstantial evidence the jury could draw one of two inferences - the one argued by plaintiffs or the one urged by defendants. Yet, one of these inferences, if accepted by the jury, "tends to exclude the possibility" that the conduct was the result of independent action. Defendants want the Court to decide this dispute in the summary judgment motion context, not at trial by a jury. That is not the proper standard. If it is, then no antitrust case would ever reach the jury as long as the defendant could merely suggest a plausible business reason for complained of conduct.

Secondly, Defendants argue that the Court erroneously considered the "cumulative effect" of the evidence, violating both Supreme Court and Sixth Circuit standards against aggregating such evidence. In the prior memorandum [*9] opinion, the Court observed:

> Defendants rather convincing respond to many of the individual allegations made by plaintiffs and the Court would be constrained to agree with defendants on many of the individual issues raised by the respective parties in their briefs, if the Court viewed each separate document or transcript of testimony in isolation. Defendants appear to invite the Court to do just that; however, the Court must view the record as a whole and, while testimony or documentary exhibits viewed in isolation might not create a genuine issue of material fact, the cumulative effect of such evidence does so. See American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 147 F.2d 93, 107 (6th Cir. 1945) ("Acts done to give effect to the conspiracy may be, in themselves, wholly innocent acts. Yet, if they are part of the sum of the acts which are relied upon to effectuate the conspiracy which the statute forbids, they come within its prohibition.").
> That the parties have many disputes about the appropriate inferences which could be drawn by a reasonable jury with respect to such a large volume of evidence simply illustrates the existence of genuine issues of > material fact with respect to the conspiracy [*10] claim. It is not the strength of the plaintiffs' case on the merits that is being tested by this motion; rather, the Court must determine only whether or not there are genuine issues of material fact without weighing the evidence, resolving issues of credibility of witnesses or resolving factual disputes. Simply put, that is a matter for a jury.

[Doc. 863, at 12-13]. The Court simply observed the established rule that separate acts legal in themselves may be part of the sum of the acts relied upon to effectuate the conspiracy. None of the cases cited by Defendants change that rule.

B. Count V

As noted above, the Court previously denied Defendants' motion for summary judgment as to Count V, the claim of conspiracy to monopolize against Dean, DFA and NDH. Relying on cases from other circuits, the Court held that "HN1[] [i]t is doubtful that the contours of the geographic market must be as precisely defined, if at all, in a conspiracy to monopolize claim as opposed to a monopolization or attempt to monopolize claim." [Doc. 863, at 36]. Defendants suggest in this motion that the cases relied upon by the Court predated the United States Supreme Court decision in Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993) [*11] and are contrary to clear Sixth Circuit precedent. Plaintiffs respond that Defendants are "wrong about the law." First, they argue that the Spectrum Sports case did not hold, as Defendants argue, that a determination of the relevant geographic market is an element of a conspiracy to monopolize claim and, secondly, that none of the Sixth Circuit cases cited by Defendants so hold.

In Spectrum Sports, a jury verdict was returned finding that Spectrum Sports had, among other things, "monopolized, attempted to monopolize, and/or conspired to monopolize." Id. at 448. The Ninth Circuit, noting that the jury had found a violation of § 2 without specifying whether the basis of its verdict was monopolization, attempt to monopolize or conspiracy to monopolize, concluded that a case of attempted monopolization had been established and affirmed. Id. at 452. More specifically, the Ninth Circuit held that it was not necessary for a plaintiff to present evidence of a dangerous probability of monopolization in a relevant market, a holding in conflict with the holding of all other circuit courts of appeals. The Supreme Court reversed. Id. at 453. This Court agrees with Plaintiffs that Spectrum Sports [*12] cannot clearly be interpreted to hold that plaintiffs must prove a relevant geographic market to succeed on its conspiracy to monopolize claim.

The Sixth Circuit, however, appears to have been relatively clear about the rule in this circuit. The Sixth Circuit most recently addressed the issue in Kentucky Speedway, LLC v. NASCAR, Inc., 588 F.3d 908 (6th Cir. 2009). In that case, Kentucky Speedway sued NASCAR alleging a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act and made claims for monopolization, attempt to monopolize and conspiracy to monopolize under § 2. The district court granted summary judgment on all claims and the Sixth Circuit affirmed, holding that HN2[] a plaintiff alleging a violation of § 2 must define "the relevant market within which the alleged anti-competitive effects . . . occur," and that Kentucky Speedway's claim failed because it "lacks the ability to define the relevant markets." Id. at 916, 919. [2]

Likewise, in Re/Max Int'l, Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d 995 (6th Cir. 1999), the Sixth Circuit affirmed the dismissal of a conspiracy to monopolize claim for failure to establish the relevant geographic market. Plaintiffs acknowledge this but argue that the Sixth Circuit "appears to have merely assumed the answer without explicitly considering" the issue. Nevertheless, the result in Re/Max is clear. Counter-plaintiff's claim of conspiracy to monopolize was dismissed because counter-plaintiff could not establish the relevant market. [3]

[2] Plaintiffs acknowledge the holding of the Kentucky Speedway case, as they must. They claim, however, that the Sixth Circuit "did not explicitly consider the question of whether market definition is a necessary element of a conspiracy-to-monopolize claim." The record here establishes, [*13] however, that plaintiffs in the Kentucky Speedway case expressly argued in their brief that their conspiracy to monopolize claim did not require proof of a relevant market, a position the Sixth Circuit rejected.

[3] Defendants also cite Michigan Division-Monument Bldrs. of America v. Mich. Cemetery Ass'n., 524 F.3d 726 (6th Cir. 2008) as a Sixth Circuit case affirming dismissal of a claim of conspiracy to monopolize for failure to establish a relevant geographic

It thus appears that this Court erred in failing to apply these controlling Sixth Circuit precedents. It seems rather clear that definition of the relevant geographic market by plaintiffs for all their § 2 claims is required. Under these circumstances, justice requires that the Court reconsider its prior ruling and grant the motion for summary judgment as to the conspiracy to monopolize claim to avoid "a manifest error of law," unless defendants have waived their argument as claimed by plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs argue that defendants have waived any argument that market definition is required for plaintiffs' § 2 conspiracy claims by not making the claim in their opening brief, citing *Rich v. Gobble, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24641, 2009 WL 801774 at 22 (E.D. Tenn. Mar. 24, 2009) ("HN3[] parties generally waive issues in the district court when they are raised for the first time in motions for reconsideration or reply briefs."). Plaintiffs, however, overlook that defendants did in fact raise the argument in their opening brief in connection with all of plaintiffs' § 2 claims and the Court specifically considered [*15] those claims. Defendants have not waived their argument.

II. The Supplemental Motion For Summary Judgment, [Doc. 1026].

In addition to the reasons advanced by Defendants in the motion for reconsideration, they urge additional grounds on which the Court should grant summary judgment as to Counts I and V: (1) Counts I and V fail because Plaintiffs cannot establish antitrust injury; (2) Count I fails because Plaintiffs cannot establish the relevant geographic and product market; and (3) Count V fails because Plaintiffs cannot establish specific intent to monopolize. As necessary, the Court will address these grounds one at a time.

A. Antitrust Injury

HN4[] The antitrust laws generally afford a private right of action to "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C § 15. The Sixth Circuit has established a two part test to determine whether a plaintiff has adequately alleged antitrust standing: (1) Whether the plaintiff has asserted a cognizable "antitrust injury," and (2) whether the plaintiff is a proper plaintiff to assert a violation of the antitrust laws. Indeck Energy Servs. v. Consumers Energy Co., 250 F.3d 972, 976 (6th Cir. 2000). [*16] Plaintiffs must establish both parts of this test; otherwise, they lack antitrust standing.

Here, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have not established antitrust injury of the type antitrust laws were intended to prevent. HN5[] "An antitrust claimant must show more than merely an 'injury casually linked' to a competitive practice; it 'must prove an antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.'" NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Company, 507 F.3d 442, 450 (6th Cir. 2007) (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)). In other words, plaintiffs in antitrust cases must prove that the harm for which they seek recovery flows from that which makes defendants' conduct anti-competitive. Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489.

Defendants focus primarily on the expert opinions of Professor Ronald Cotterill, upon whom plaintiffs rely for proof of injury and damages in this case. Professor Cotterill, they claim, "does not offer evidence of injury caused by the alleged anti-competitive conduct that is the focus of Plaintiffs' Complaint." Defendants argue that the damages model [*17] used by Professor Cotterill measures the impact of the Dean-Suiza merger rather than the alleged anti-competitive conduct. More specifically, they argue that Professor Cotterill's primary damages model compares actual prices during the relevant period to what he estimates prices would have been if the Dean-Suiza merger had not occurred. [4] Professor Cotterill's alternative damages models built on what defendants see as a flawed primary market. The Court agrees with Plaintiffs that it is not entirely clear that the case involved such claim. It is clear, however, that the complaint alleged a "conspiracy to restrain trade and/or [*14] to monopolize" in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act but the Sixth Circuit does not further expand upon the matter.

model and also estimates the impact of individual plant closings, which defendants argue are not anti-competitive. Furthermore, Defendants argue that even if there were a conspiracy to lessen competition for sales of processed milk, Plaintiffs cannot show that such a conspiracy injured Food Lion because the prices Food Lion paid Dean for processed milk were determined pursuant to a negotiated formula, the components of which were based on objective factors having nothing to do with the alleged anti-competitive behavior. Thus, they argue that any increased prices to Food Lion occurred "by reason of" the negotiated formula, not any alleged anti-competitive behavior.

Plaintiffs' response is predictable. They generally argue that Professor Cotterill's opinions, using reliable and widely accepted methodology, properly establish both injury and damages. In response to Defendants' specific claim that Professor Cotterill is measuring damages caused by the Dean-Suiza merger, Plaintiffs respond that Professor Cotterill "is comparing the before period with the conspiracy period," and they define the "before" period as the period of time immediately before the merger. Plaintiffs spend a good part of their response on an argument that a methodology comparing the period before the alleged conspiracy with the conspiracy period is an accepted methodology. As the Court understands it, Defendants do not quarrel with the methodology itself. While acknowledging that customers like Breto and Food Lion purchase through negotiated list prices, they argue that everyone who purchases milk, whether through negotiated prices or otherwise, suffers harm when parties succeed in conspiring [*19] to fix prices and they point to Professor Cotterill's opinion that formula pricing did not insulate Food Lion and Breto from overcharges.

On the issue related to Professor Cotterill, this Court agrees with the Defendants. While Defendants insist that Professor Cotterill has not measured impact caused by the merger, Professor Cotterill himself acknowledged, as Defendants point out, that that is precisely what he did. Professor Cotterill testified in his deposition that his task was "to analyze whether in fact the creation of NDH [through the merger] and the assertion [to DOJ] that there would be economies of size and lower prices through efficiencies generated by that creation from January 1, 2002 going forward [i.e. from merger], whether that in fact was true or not . . ." [Doc. 1149, Ex. 12, Cotterill depo. April 12, 2010, p. 267 ll. 15-20]. Professor Cotterill's expert report is even clearer. He states in that report that "the model I estimate is similar to the approach employed by the Department of Justice in its analysis of potential anticompetitive effects from the 2001 Dean-Suiza merger." [Cotterill report, March 5, 2010, ¶ 114] (emphasis added). Further, he stated that "the DOJ [*20] used this model to estimate the price impact of the proposed merger between Dean and Suiza, finding a predicted average price increase of six cents per gallon, or 2.5%, for affected Suiza customers in the sixteen state region analyzed. The application in this litigation is largely the same . . ." [Id.].

Thus, in this Court's view, it is largely beyond question that Professor Cotterill has measured the price impact of the merger itself and it is inescapable that the price increases he identifies as injury to the Plaintiffs in this case are related, if not totally, then at least in part, to the merger itself, conduct which is not challenged in this case. Further, it appears to the Court that Professor Cotterill cannot, and did not, measure how prices would have increased in the absence of a conspiracy. He simply compared pre-merger prices to post-merger prices. In short, Professor Cotterill's analysis does not create a material issue of fact on the question of whether the price increases were "by reason of" an illegal conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws and Plaintiffs do not allege an injury of the kind which the antitrust laws are designed to prevent. [5]

Because Plaintiffs cannot establish antitrust injury, i.e., there is not a genuine issue for trial on the issue, Counts I and V fail and defendants are entitled to summary judgment as to Counts I and V on this basis alone. [6]

[4] The Dean-Suiza merger closed in December 2001. The instant lawsuit was filed in August, [*18] 2007. Plaintiffs have expressly disclaimed any legal challenge to the merger, clearly recognizing that such a challenge is time barred by the four year limitations period of 15 U.S.C. § 15b.

[5] Professor Cotterill [*21] himself appears to admit that the required causal connection is not present in his analysis. See [Doc. 1149, Ex. 12, at p. 66, ll. 13-14].

[6] As a result of the Court's ruling with respect to Professor Cotterill's expert opinions and the absence of any genuine issue of fact related to antitrust injury, the Court will not consider the other argument made by defendants, that is, that the prices Food

B. Relevant Geographic Market

The Court has previously stated that "Plaintiffs allege a horizontal agreement among Dean, DFA and NDH to lessen competition for sales of processed milk to retailers in the southeast and, in fact, not to compete for such sales." [Doc. 863 at 8]. Plaintiffs describe the conspiracy as a quid pro quo agreement between Dean and DFA (they allege that NDH was a false competitor controlled [*22] by DFA) in which Dean agreed to buy raw milk only from DFA in exchange for DFA's agreement to lessen competition in the bottled milk market. They further claim that full supply agreements were the "means by which Dean paid off DFA for NDH's participation in the conspiracy." [Doc. 1128 at 2]. The Court has previously held that Plaintiffs lack standing to challenge these raw milk agreements and has dismissed Count II on that basis, [see Doc. 863], but plaintiffs continue to see these agreements as being at "the heart" of their Count I conspiracy claims. The Court has previously held and now reaffirms that the evidence as a whole creates genuine issues of material fact as to whether Defendants entered into the alleged agreement.

Defendants argue, however, in this motion that Plaintiffs' Count I claim, no matter how it is characterized or labeled by Plaintiffs, is in reality, not a claim of a horizontal, per se illegal conspiracy, but rather a claim of an illegal conspiracy involving contracts between firms at different levels of the distribution chain — i.e. between a bottler of processed milk and a supplier of raw milk (Dean and DFA) which is essentially vertical in nature and subject [*23] to the rule of reason analysis. Because Plaintiffs cannot prove a relevant geographic market, Defendants argue that the conspiracy claim — Count I — fails. Plaintiffs respond that the conspiracy, if proven, is per se unlawful and no proof of a geographic market is required. They claim, alternatively, that even if the case were judged under the rule of reason standard, there is evidence of the appropriate geographic market.

Given this Court's ruling with respect to Professor Froeb's testimony, Plaintiffs cannot prove the relevant antitrust geographic market. If, therefore, the case is judged by the per se standard, the case must be submitted to the jury for resolution of the fact question of whether Defendants engaged in the alleged conspiracy. If, on the other hand, the case is judged by the rule of reason standard, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment because there is no genuine issue of fact as to the relevant geographic market. The question of whether the alleged conspiracy is horizontal and per se illegal or essentially vertical and judged under the rule of reason standard is, therefore, a critical one for Plaintiffs. Many of the issues related to this question have been [*24] considered and decided in relation to summary judgment motions in the coordinated case of the dairy farmer plaintiffs and the Court's analysis in that case, much of which is incorporated herein, is set out in Doc. 1639.

At the hearing on the supplemental motion for summary judgment on December 16, 2010, the Court posed a question to the parties — i.e., whether the question of whether the alleged conspiracy is one subject to per se analysis or one subject to rule of reason analysis is a question for a jury or the Court. By letter brief filed on December 30, 2010, [Doc. 1222], plaintiffs argue that the Court cannot, as a matter of law, determine whether pro se or rule of reason analysis applies to the case, relying almost exclusively on In re Sulfuric Acid Antitrust Litigation, 743 F.Supp.2d 827, (N.D. Ill. 2010), a case where defendants asked the court to hold that rule of reason analysis applied and the district court declined to do so, holding that "[it] is not the Court's task to determine whether Defendants' conduct would be subjected to the rule of reason if the facts are as they claim." Id. at 866-67. The court found that the evidence presented an issue of fact as to whether a per se violation had occurred, e.g. whether certain defendants "stood in [*28] a horizontal, vertical, or hybrid relationship with co-defendants." Id. at 868.

Defendants responded to Plaintiffs' letter brief, [Doc. 1244], arguing that Sulfuric Acid has no application because here, unlike that case, there are no disputed issues of fact to be decided. They argue, on the contrary, that the case presents a "classic rule of reason case" based on "Plaintiffs own allegations." [Id. at 2]. In other words, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' own view of the case establishes that the case is subject to rule of reason analysis. They also argue that whether Plaintiffs "quid pro quo" agreement should be evaluated under the rule of reason analysis is a question of law for the Court.

The question of the appropriate rule of law to be applied to the conspiracy alleged by the Plaintiffs in their complaint is to be determined by the Court or is a question of fact for the jury has not been precisely answered in the Sixth Circuit. This Court concludes, however, the Sulfuric Acid decision notwithstanding, that the weight of authority supports Defendants' argument that determination of the appropriate rule of law to be applied is a question of law to be decided by the Court and that approach [*29] also appears to be consistent with the Sixth Circuit's application of the legal rules involved.

A leading antitrust treatise recognizes that the selection of the mode of analysis is a question of law for the court:

> HN11[] While applying any one of antitrust's modes of analysis might involve many fact questions, the selection of a mode is entirely a question of law. To be sure, the Supreme Court stated in Maricopa that "the rule of reason requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition." But that statement was not meant to indicate that the fact finder should determine whether the per se rule or the rule of reason applied to a particular set of facts. Rather, it meant that once the court decided that the rule of reason should apply, disputed factual questions about reasonableness should be left to the jury. In a footnote the court made clear that determining the rule of decision was a question of law.

*XI Herbert Hovencamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1909b at 279 (2d Ed. 2005) (citing Perceptron, Inc. v. Sensor Adaptive Machs., Inc., 221 F.3d 913 (6th Cir. 2000)). This statement is also consistent with [*30] decisions of the Sixth Circuit. For instance, in Expert Masonry, Inc. v. Boone County, Kentucky, 440 F.3d 336 (2006), the Sixth Circuit said: HN12[] "In the first instance, courts must distinguish between some types of unlawful anticompetitive restraints that [are] . . . per se illegal under the antitrust laws, and the far-larger type of restraints that should be analyzed under the rule of reason approach . . . ."). Id. at 342 (emphasis added). Likewise, in United States v. Cooperative Theatres of Ohio, Inc., 845 F.2d 1367 (6th Cir. 1988), although a criminal case, the district court held as a matter of law that the alleged conduct constituted a per se violation of the Sherman Act, a ruling affirmed by the Sixth Circuit. See also Care Heating & Cooling, Inc. 427 F.3d at 1012 ("if a court determines that a practice is illegal per se, further examination of the practice's impact on the market or the procompetitive justifications for the practice is unnecessary for finding a violation of antitrust law," suggesting that the decision as to whether a practice is illegal per se is one committed to the court).

The approach is likewise consistent with that taken by the United States Supreme Court and [*31] other circuit courts of appeals. HN13[] The Supreme Court has repeatedly noted that the per se rule should be applied to conduct only after courts have had "considerable experience with certain business relationships." United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972). Since it seems quite clear that the per se rule should be applied to conduct only after it has been examined carefully by the courts, not juries, it also seems rather clear that the question of whether allegedly unlawful conduct is subject to per se analysis or rule of reason analysis is a legal question for the court, not a question for the jury. See also Northern Pacific Railway Company, 356 U.S. at 5 (suggesting that the court must first determine whether the conduct alleged to be unlawful is the type of conduct that has a "pernicious effect on competition and lacks any redeeming virtue . . .," to be considered illegal per se); Copy-Data Systems, Inc. v. Toshiba America, Inc., 663 F.2d 405 (2d Cir. 1981) (where the district judge had held, after hearing argument from both sides, that Toshiba had imposed a horizontal, illegal per se territorial restriction on Copy-Data, a holding reversed by the Second Circuit [*32] on appeal as a matter of law).

It is beyond question that Plaintiffs present their claim as a horizontal, per se illegal conspiracy to restrain trade and fix prices on the part of the Defendants, [see Complaint, Doc. 87, ¶ 162], arguing only alternatively that the agreements at issue violate § 1 of the Sherman Act under rule of reason analysis. In addition, Plaintiffs have repeatedly referred to their claim as a horizontal, per se claim in their pleadings and at oral argument. The labels attached to the conduct by the Plaintiffs are not determinative, however, i.e. that Plaintiffs repeatedly state that the conspiracy they allege is a horizontal, per se illegal conspiracy to fix prices and allocate markets does not make it so. In fact, the Supreme Court has recognized just that. See California Dental Ass'n. v. Federal Trade Commission, 526 U.S. 756, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999).

HN14[] The Sixth Circuit has succinctly defined the two major types of antitrust conspiracies as follows:

> Courts have identified two major types of antitrust conspiracies to restrain trade: horizontal and vertical. Crane & Shovel Sales Corp. v Bucyrus-Erie Co., 854 F.2d 802, 805 (6th Cir. 1988). Horizontal conspiracies involve agreements among [*33] competitors at the same level of market structure to stifle trade, such as agreements among manufacturers or among distributors to fix prices for a given product, and therefore may constitute per se violations of antitrust law. Id.; see also Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126, 131 (2d Cir. 1978). Vertical conspiracies, on the other hand, involve agreements among actors at different levels of market > structure to restrain trade, "such as agreements between a manufacturer and its distributors to exclude another distributor from a given product and geographic market." Crane & Shovel Sales Corp., 854 F.2d at 805.

Care Heating & Cooling, 427 F.3d at 1013. Vertical restraints are analyzed under the rule of reason. Id. (citing Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 57-58, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977)). To the extent there was any lingering doubt about whether vertical restraints are subject to per se or rule of reason analysis, that suggestion was quashed by the United States Supreme Court in Leegin Creative Leather Products, Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) (vertical restraints to be judged according to the rule of reason). See also Total Benefits Planning Agency, Inc. v. Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield, 552 F.3d 430 (6th Cir. 2008).

HN15[] As [*34] an initial matter then, the Court must determine whether or not the agreement alleged by the plaintiffs is horizontal in nature, which may constitute a per se violation of antitrust law, or vertical in nature, which must be analyzed under the rule of reason. In making this determination, as set forth above , the labels used by the plaintiffs are largely irrelevant and the decision will be made against a backdrop of several well established principles. First of all, "[t]here is an automatic presumption in favor of the rule of reason standard." Care Heating & Cooling, 427 F.3d at 1012 (citing Business Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. at 726; Continental T.V., Inc., 433 U.S. at 49). Secondly, the category of agreements to be analyzed under a per se analysis has been shrinking over the last few years. See Leegin. Finally, the per se rule should be applied only in "clear cut cases" of trade restraints that are so unreasonably anticompetitive that they present straightforward questions for reviewing courts. NHL Players Assoc., 325 F.3d at 718 (citing Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 49-50). See also Balmoral Cinema, 885 F.2d at 316 ("per se analysis should not be extended 'to restraints imposed in the context [*35] of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious . . . .'").

As noted above, the essence of Plaintiffs' conspiracy claim is a quid pro quo agreement between competitors at the same level of the distribution chain (Dean and NDH) almost totally carried out through the use of agreements involving the supply of raw milk among a group of firms at other levels of the distribution chain (Dean and DFA, NDH and DFA). At oral argument, Plaintiffs presented the Court with a chart illustrating their claim which showed a triangular relationship with Dean and NDH as horizontal competitors and DFA in a vertical relationship to both Dean and NDH. Plaintiffs suggest that two horizontal competitors, Dean and NDH, "are central to the argument" while at the same time arguing that it is the full supply agreements for raw milk between vertical actors that are "at the heart" of their claims.

Plaintiffs equate the arrangement among the firms sued here with those in In re Pressure Sensitive Label Stock Antitrust Litigation, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85466, 2007 WL 4150666 (M.D. Pa. 2007) (not reported in F.Supp.2d) and argue that the court there rejected the "exact same arguments" Defendants [*36] make in this case. In a footnote in that opinion, deciding a class certification motion, the district judge noted that Defendants had argued at oral argument that the agreement in question was not a horizontal agreement. As the Court understands the parties in that case, the plaintiffs, in the business of processing and converting pressure sensitive label stock ("PSL"), sued defendants, PSL producers, for conspiring "to fix, raise, maintain or stabilize prices for self-adhesive label stock . . . and to allocate and restrict output in the market for self-adhesive label stock sold in the United States." *2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85466, [WL] at 1.

One of the defendants ("UPM") was a paper supplier as well as the owner of another defendant ("Raflatac"), a PSL producer. Avery, another PSL producer, competed with Raflatac, and also had a contract with Raflatac's parent, UPM, to supply paper to Avery. The gist of the alleged illegal agreement challenged was that Avery would purchase large quantities of paper stock from UPM in consideration of UPM agreeing to refrain from competing with Avery in the PSL market through Raflatac. Thus, the paper supply agreement was a critical element of plaintiffs' antitrust claims. Defendants [*37] claimed that the antitrust arrangement was a dual distribution arrangement, not a horizontal agreement. The district court rejected that position, finding that "the agreement was between competitors and, therefore, horizontal," *2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85466, [WL] at 12, FN7. The instant case, Plaintiffs argue, "mirrors Pressure Sensitive," and they characterize the arrangement as "3-way agreement trading vertical supply for horizontal non-competition."

Defendants here do not claim the arrangement among Dean, NDH and DFA is a dual distribution arrangement. They claim rather that the substantial vertical elements of the agreement challenged here make the case analogous to cases decided under the rule of reason. It is for this reason that the Court does not find Pressure Sensitive to be particularly helpful in resolving this question. The district judge in Pressure Sensitive, while noting that the paper supply agreement between UPM and Avery was a critical element of the alleged conspiracy, apparently never considered the nature of the agreement in the terms posed by Defendants here.

The issue presented here is a difficult one. On the one hand, Plaintiffs' argue that the essence of the agreement here is that two horizontal [*38] competitors, Dean and NDH, are central and that the agreement should therefore be subjected to per se analysis. On the other hand, Plaintiffs also allege that NDH is a false competitor, completely controlled by DFA, and that the full supply agreements for raw milk are at the heart of their claims. In reality, it appears to the Court that the essence of the agreement alleged by the Plaintiffs is one between Dean in its role as a processor of bottled milk and DFA in its role as a supplier of raw milk and that the milk supply agreements for raw milk are central to the completion of the alleged conspiracy. Under these circumstances, the Court agrees with Defendants that the agreement has substantial vertical elements such that the alleged agreements challenged by Plaintiffs ought to be subject to the rule of reason analysis, requiring that Plaintiffs establish the relevant geographic antitrust market, something they cannot do. For this reason, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment as to Count I of Plaintiffs' complaint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN3[] Standing, Requirements

The statutory language allowing private prosecution of antitrust laws is construed to limit the bringing of such action to (1) those who have suffered the type of injury antitrust laws were intended to prevent and (2) those whose injuries are a result of the defendants' unlawful conduct. The former is commonly referred to as antitrust injury and the latter as antitrust standing. Judicial precedent outlines several factors to be considered in determining whether a plaintiff is the proper party to bring a private action under the antitrust laws: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the plaintiff's injury; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's injury and the relationship between the plaintiff's injury and the type of activity sought to be redressed under the antitrust laws; and (3) the speculative nature of the plaintiff's claim for damages and the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN4[] Standing, Requirements

Where a more directly injured class of potential antitrust plaintiffs exists, courts are left with very little leeway to address the likelihood of whether any members of that class would actually bring suit.

The antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN6[] Private Actions, Remedies

Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation. There is a proximate cause element. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say one that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN7[] Private Actions, Remedies

Antitrust actions require that the plaintiffs allege an injury to the public, not just themselves.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN8[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine extends absolute immunity from antitrust laws to businesses and other associations when they join together to petition legislative bodies, administrative agencies or courts for action that may have anticompetitive effect. This is particularly true when part of the petitioning is a publicity campaign directed at the general public and seeks legislative or executive action. These efforts enjoy antitrust immunity even when the campaign employs unethical and deceptive methods.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN9[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Where adjudicative petitioning is concerned fraudulent representations can destroy Noerr-Pennigton immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN10[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

There are two branches of the exception to the Noerr-Pennigton doctrine in regards to litigation: (1) sham lawsuits; and (2) fraudulent misrepresentations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN11[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

A misrepresentation renders an adjudicative proceeding a sham for purposes of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine only if the misrepresentation (1) was intentionally made, with knowledge of its falsity; and (2) was material, in the sense that it actually altered the outcome of the proceeding. Although successful petitioning activity may not, as a general matter, be deemed a sham, the fraud exception can remove that immunity if success is achieved by means of intentional falsehoods. If the government's action was not dependent upon the misrepresented information, the misrepresented information was not material.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN12[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

As to the sham lawsuit branch of the exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the lawsuits must first be objectively meritless before any exploration of subjective intent can be undertaken. A successful action, by definition, cannot be objectively meritless. Only if a court makes the determination that a lawsuit was objectively meritless may it then inquire into the plaintiff's subjective intent in an exploration of whether the intent was not to win, but to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

Although the Noerr-Pennington doctrine originated in antitrust law, its rationale is equally applicable to RICO suits.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN15[] Private Actions, Standing

RICO standing is an easier standard to meet than antitrust standing. For instance, injury that is not necessarily anticompetitive injury is sufficient under RICO. But RICO standing is still a hurdle greater than mere U.S. Const. art. III standing, and requires a proximate cause analysis because the language of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964(c) provides treble damages. Every court that to address this issue holds that injuries proffered by plaintiffs in order to confer RICO standing must be concrete and actual, as opposed to speculative and amorphous.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN19[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

Under RICO, a plaintiff must prove four elements: (1) conduct; (2) of an enterprise; (3) through a pattern; (4) of racketeering activity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > Elements

HN20[] Wire Fraud, Elements

An act of wire fraud requires a showing that (1) the defendants participated in a scheme to defraud; (2) the defendants intended to defraud; and (3) the defendants used wires in furtherance of the fraudulent scheme.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > Fraud

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN21[] Claims, Fraud

A scheme to defraud requires the making of a false statement or material misrepresentation, or the concealment of material fact. A plaintiff must allege a situation in which someone was misled or fraudulently induced to engage in activity to their detriment. Not all questionable conduct is a scheme or artifice to defraud as those terms are used in the mail and wire fraud statutes. A misrepresentation is material if it has the natural tendency to influence, or is capable of influencing, the decision of the decisionmaking body to which it was addressed. The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has repeatedly rejected RICO claims that rely so heavily on mail and wire fraud allegations to establish a pattern.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > General Overview

HN22[] Fraud Against the Government, Mail Fraud

The wire and mail fraud statutes are incredibly broad, and require only a willful act by the defendant with the specific intent to deceive or cheat, usually for the purpose of getting financial gain for oneself or causing financial loss to another.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN23[] Intentional Interference, Elements

To state a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, a plaintiff must allege (1) a reasonable expectancy of entering into a valid business relationship, (2) the defendant's knowledge of the expectancy, (3) an intentional and unjustified interference by the defendant that induced or caused a breach or termination of the expectancy, and (4) damage to the plaintiff resulting from the defendant's interference.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Defenses

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

HN24[] Intentional Interference, Defenses

As with antitrust issues, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides immunity for economic advantage interference that comes as part of a petitioning of government. Illinois, for policy reasons, does not recognize the filing of a lawsuit, even a baseless one, as grounds for a tortious interference suit. The only proper cause of action based on the filing of a lawsuit is either malicious prosecution or abuse of process.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > Elements

HN25[] Abuse of Process, Elements

The only elements necessary to plead a cause of action for abuse of process are: (1) the existence of an ulterior purpose or motive and (2) some act in the use of legal process not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceedings.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > Elements

HN26[] Abuse of Process, Elements

In order to satisfy the first element of an abuse of process claim, a plaintiff must plead facts that show that the defendant instituted proceedings against him for an improper purpose, such as extortion, intimidation, or embarrassment. In order to satisfy the second element, the plaintiff must plead facts that show a misapplication of process, or, in other words, the plaintiff must show that the process was used to accomplish some result that is beyond the purview of the process. When process is used only for its intended purpose, there has been no misapplication of process.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > General Overview

HN27[] Intentional Torts, Abuse of Process

Process is not used in the context of an abuse of process claim in the general sense, as in the legal process of suing someone, prosecuting the case, receiving judgment, etc. Rather it is used in the literal, legal sense of something issued by the court. Process is issued by the court, under its official seal and must be distinguished from pleadings, which are created and filed by the litigants.

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Actual Fraud > Elements

HN28[] Actual Fraud, Elements

Common law fraud requires (1) a false statement of material fact; (2) the party making the statement knew or believed it to be untrue; (3) the party to whom the statement was made had a right to rely on the statement; (4) the party to whom the statement was made did rely on the statement; (5) the statement was made for the purpose of inducing the other party to act; and (6) the reliance by the person to whom the statement was made led to that person's injury.

HN30[] Breach of Fiduciary Duty, Elements

A predicate to any liability based on a theory of an inducement of a breach of a fiduciary duty is the existence of a fiduciary duty in the first instance. If that duty exists, the elements of the inducement claim require alleging the third party (1) colluded with the fiduciary in committing a breach of duty; (2) induced or participated in such breach; and (3) obtained the benefits resulting from the breach of duty.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN33[] Defenses, Public Policy Violations

The Illinois Supreme Court clarified that the test of enforceability is more than an examination of time and geography restrictions or other rote lists. Instead, its reasonability is a totality-of-the-circumstances question, judged by whether the covenant (1) is no greater than is required for the protection of a legitimate business interest of the employer-promisee; (2) does not impose undue hardship on the employee-promisor, and (3) is not injurious to the public. Time and geography restrictions may also be examined.

The tort of interference with a contract requires, as its first element, a valid contract.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > Elements

HN35[] Conversion, Elements

To prove conversion, a plaintiff must establish that (1) he has a right to the property; (2) he has an absolute and unconditional right to the immediate possession of the property; (3) he made a demand for possession; and (4) the defendant wrongfully and without authorization assumed control, dominion, or ownership over the property.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > General Overview

HN36[] Intentional Torts, Conversion

Parties may recover for conversion of intangible assets. Once confidential information is released to competitors, it hardly can be said that the data is still confidential. Thus, the original owner would be deprived of the benefit of the information.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > General Overview

HN37[] Intentional Torts, Conversion

Copies of documents, rather than the documents themselves, should not ordinarily give rise to a claim for conversion. The reason for this rule is that the possession of copies of documents, as opposed to the documents themselves, does not amount to an interference with the owner's property sufficient to constitute conversion.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > General Overview

HN38[] Intentional Torts, Conversion

The law is clear that intangible property can be converted. But the cases indicate that that intangible property must have some value in terms of confidentiality, trade secrets, proprietary business information or the like.

HN39[] Provisional Remedies, Replevin

An action for replevin may be brought to recover wrongfully detained goods or chattels. A replevin action cannot be maintained until a counter-claimant has made a demand for the surrender of the property and the defendant has refused. At trial, a counter-claimant must prove the defendant is wrongfully detaining the property. The property must be described in sufficient detail to distinguish it from similar chattels and a counter-claimant must state that he is the owner of the property or is otherwise entitled to lawful possession of it.

Opinion

[*737] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Before the Court are Defendants' Motions to Dismiss Plaintiffs' [2] Consolidated Complaint, and the Consolidated Motion of the two Rubloff entities to dismiss the Counter-Complaint of Defendant The Saint Consulting Group (hereinafter, "Saint"). For the following reasons, the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss are granted and the Rubloff entities' Motion to Dismiss is denied in part and granted in part.

I. BACKGROUND

At the heart of this case is the battle for grocery shoppers' dollars in suburban Chicago. Plaintiffs develop shopping centers and say Defendants used sneaky and underhanded tactics to try to kill or delay their developments, which would have included grocery stores that compete with Defendant SuperValu, Inc. ("SuperValu").

Plaintiffs brought actions alleging federal and state antitrust violations, RICO violations, tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, common law fraud, abuse of process and conspiracy to commit overt tortious and unlawful acts.

Defendants do not really deny they were sneaky, but claim being sneaky is legal under the Constitution. Defendant Saint brings Counterclaims against the two Rubloff entities, contending these Plaintiffs paid a former Saint employee to hand over confidential information, which exposed [3] their underhanded tactics. Saint alleges inducement of breach of fiduciary duty, conversion, replevin, tortious interference with contractual relations and misappropriation of trade secrets.

A. The Parties

Plaintiff Rubloff Development Group, Inc. ("Rubloff Development") is a Rockford, Illinois corporation. Plaintiff Rubloff Mundelein, LLC ("Rubloff Mundelein") is also in Rockford. (The Rubloff entities are referred to collectively as "Rubloff"). Rubloff develops commercial real estate, including shopping centers. All other Plaintiffs are collectively referred to as "McVickers," and have their primary place of business in Buffalo Grove, Illinois. They, too, develop commercial real estate.

Defendant SuperValu, Inc. ("SuperValu") is a Delaware corporation headquartered in Minnesota. It has interests in many grocery store chains, such as Albertson's, Jewel-Osco, Cub and others.

Defendant Saint is both incorporated in and has its principal place of business in Massachusetts. It is a consulting firm that advertises itself as "protect[ing] clients from unwanted competition" and touts its staff as "Walmart killers."

B. The Developments

Rubloff acquired a purchase option on a parcel near Mundelein, [4] Illinois (the "Mundelein Development") that was annexed to the village in 2005. Rubloff planned to develop a shopping center, and signed an agreement with Menards to buy part of [*738] the parcel. It also reached an agreement "in principle" with Walmart for another portion of the parcel and signed lease agreements with several other big-name stores. Rubloff expected construction to start in 2007 and finish in 2008.

In December 2005, Rubloff began talking with landowners near the parcel as part of its development efforts. Rubloff contends these meetings were going along just swimmingly - that nearby landowners did not object to the development in principle - when it ran into a wall.

Several landowners retained the unfortunately named attorney William Graft ("Graft"), who began pressing certain objections to the development, both in hearings with the village and in court. Landowners objected to the loss of wetlands, possible grease and oil runoff from the parking lot, traffic congestion, landscaping plans, fencing, lighting and other concerns. Two groups of landowners (the "Acker" plaintiffs and the Ivanhoe Country Club "Ivanhoe") sued the Mundelein in the fall of 2007 in Lake County Circuit [5] Court, alleging violations of due process rights in zoning approvals Mundelein had granted. These cases were consolidated. Ivanhoe also filed suit directly against Rubloff in January 2009, alleging nuisance and trespass against the not-yet-developed shopping center. The legal fight continued until January 2011, when Mundelein and Rubloff settled all three lawsuits, with Rubloff agreeing to certain redesigns and paying out a total of $200,000 to various plaintiffs.

The battles caused great delay and the Mundelein development is still not built, and may never be, according to Plaintiffs. Rubloff claims millions of dollars of expenses due to the delays and millions in lost profits.

Meanwhile, in New Lenox, Illinois, McVickers was also planning a shopping center (the "New Lenox Development"). It acquired 73 acres in 2005, and signed land sale contracts with Walmart and Menards. It also had lease or purchase agreements with Aldi Foods and many other big-name stores. Like Rubloff, it expected to break ground in 2007 and complete construction in 2008. It, too, ran into problems getting permits from New Lenox and the Illinois Department of Transportation ("IDOT"). Its construction start was [6] delayed until late 2009, forcing it to pay additional purchase option fees and suffer the loss of several stores. It also claims lost sales tax revenue due to the delays, and attributes Menards' indefinite delay in building on its parcel to the delays.

All of this bad fortune would likely have been attributed simply to the whim of NIMBY ("Not In My Backyard") residents had it not been for a man named Greg Olson ("Olson"). Or, more accurately, a man named Leigh Mayo ("Mayo"), which was Greg Olson's real name. Mayo contacted Rubloff co-founder Robert Brownson ("Brownson") in August 2009 and dropped a bombshell.

Mayo was an agent provocateur for Saint and used the pseudonym of Olson to organize local opposition to the Mundelein development. SuperValu had retained Saint in 2007 and Mayo, in turn, had engaged Graft to represent community landowners before the Mundelein Village board and in the state court proceedings. Plaintiffs allege community members were never told that Graft was actually being paid by SuperValu. Saint's practice was to have "project managers" like Mayo use pseudonyms, even employing e-mail accounts utilizing the pseudonyms.

Over the course of several meetings, Saint alleges, [7] Brownson, a lawyer, learned that Mayo had signed a confidentiality agreement but nonetheless induced him (by paying Mayo) to turn over roughly 3,000 Saint documents. The documents [*739] revealed that Saint's avowed purpose was to delay or kill the development, and delays won at village hearings and in court were celebrated with glee. In one report to SuperValu, Saint boasted "the hearings under administrative review could take an enormous amount of time as court dockets are clogged and a Judge will allow us to present testimony for as long as we desire." Pl.'s Compl. 8. Attorney Graft celebrated delays as well, updating Saint on litigation progress and also reveling in delays. "Happy 1 year Anniversary, by the way. We cost these guys [Rubloff] a ton of money," he wrote to Saint. Id. at 14.

Other questionable tactics included the rewriting of expert reports for use in litigation, "backchannel" communications with a Lake County judge to try to get a read on how that litigation would turn out, and attorney Graft's failure to promptly forward settlement offers to his landowner clients, presumably as another delay tactic.

The exposure of these documents to public light in a Wall Street Journal [8] article cost Saint at least one client, it alleges.

C. Procedural Background

Plaintiffs and Saint agreed to proceed to summary judgment on one count of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, which sought a declaratory judgment that "no privilege, trade secret, or other protection exists" in the Saint documents Rubloff acquired. The Court reviewed the documents and ruled on June 30, 2011 on a declaratory judgment count that Saint's various contentions, including claims of confidential business information, were without merit. The one exception to this ruling was twelve pages dealing with an unrelated Hoffman Estates matter and attorney Graft. Saint claimed the same attorney-client privilege in regard to those twelve pages that it had in regard to Graft legal documents concerning the Mundelein development. The Court found no privilege as to the latter documents because Saint was not Graft's client (the landowners were), even if Graft had been paid by Saint or SuperValu. But because there was no evidence before the Court on whether a similar client arrangement existed in the Hoffman Estates matter, the Court presumed the documents were indeed privileged.

On September 15, 2011, the Court denied [9] a motion to reconsider the summary judgment, despite Saint's contention that Rubloff was threatening further exposure of the documents to leverage a settlement.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

HN1[] On a motion to dismiss, all of a plaintiff's and counter-plaintiff's allegations are treated as true. FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6); *Wigod v. Complaints and counter-complaints will survive a motion to dismiss if they contain sufficient factual matter to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). However, "threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice. Id. at 1940.

HN2[] Claims of fraud are subject to a heightened pleading standard, requiring a pleader to state with "particularity" the circumstances of fraud. FED. R. CIV. P. 9(b).

III. DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS

A. Antitrust Issues

1. Antitrust Standing and Injury

HN3[] The statutory language allowing private prosecution of antitrust laws has been construed to limit the bringing of such action to (1) those who have suffered the type of injury antitrust laws were [10] intended to prevent [*740] and (2) those whose injuries are a result of defendants' unlawful conduct. Serfecz v. Jewel Food Stores, 67 F.3d 591, 595 (7th Cir. 1997) (hereinafter, Serfecz II). The former is commonly referred to as "antitrust injury" and the latter as "antitrust standing." Kochert v. Greater Lafayette Health Servs., 463 F.3d 710, 716-719 (7th Cir. 2006). The Supreme Court has outlined "several factors to be considered in determining whether a plaintiff is the proper party to bring a private action under the antitrust laws: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the plaintiff's injury; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's injury and the relationship between the plaintiff's injury and the type of activity sought to be redressed under the antitrust laws; and (3) the speculative nature of the plaintiff's claim for damages and the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages." Serfecz II, 67 F.3d at 595-596 (quoting Associated Gen. Contractors, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 537-546, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)).

In Serfecz II, a shopping center owner (Serfecz) sued a grocery store chain, Jewel, and a shopping center under antitrust [11] laws. Jewel had moved out of Serfecz's center to a nearby center, but refused to relinquish the empty store in Serfecz's center to prevent competition by a new tenant.

Because the alleged antitrust activity was monopolization of the grocery store market in the local area, the district court and appellate court found Serfecz had neither antitrust standing nor injury relative to the grocery store market. As neither a competitor nor customer of a grocery store, (Serfecz was deemed a supplier of lease space to grocery stores) Serfecz's injury (lost value to his shopping center) was too indirect to the antitrust activity alleged. Serfecz II, 67 F.3d at 598. He also had no antitrust standing because he was not the party who could most efficiently vindicate the purposes of the antitrust laws. Id. at 598 (suggesting competing grocery stores or Jewel customers would have standing).

HN4[] "Where a more directly injured class of potential plaintiffs exists, we are left with very little leeway to address the likelihood of whether any members of that class would actually bring suit. While the result may be somewhat frustrating in this particular case, it does provide a straightforward rule of law." *Serfecz v. Jewel Food Stores, No. 92-C-4171, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12239, at 27-28 (N.D. Ill. August 31, 1994) [12] (hereinafter, Serfecz I).

But when the antitrust activity was defined as an attempt to monopolize the retail shopping center market, the outcome was different. Serfecz had both antitrust standing and injury. In that instance, plaintiffs were "direct participants in this market." Serfecz II, 67 F.3d at 599; *Serfecz I, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12239 at 33-34.

Plaintiffs argue that, under Serfecz II, they too have standing when the market is framed as the retail shopping center market. This is true, and the Court finds Plaintiffs have the requisite antitrust standing in the shopping center market, but not the grocery store market.

However, Serfecz II, where one of the defendants was a shopping center, also shows why Plaintiffs in this case do not have anticompetitive injury in the shopping center market.

In Serfecz II, anticompetitive injury as a result of the antitrust activity was clear: One of the defendants was a participant in the shopping center market and was trying to foreclose competition in that market.

[*741] Here, Plaintiffs have clearly stated the anticompetitive injury to the grocery store market (SuperValu's retention of high market share allows it to raise grocery prices) but not to [13] the shopping center market. Plaintiffs note they have incurred millions of dollars in damages, and that the Mundelein development may have been successfully scuttled. But HN5[] the antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Plaintiffs have not alleged their injury was a result of any anticompetitive activity of Plaintiffs with respect to the shopping center market.

That is not surprising because SuperValu (a grocery store chain) and Saint (their consultant) logically would have an interest in the shopping center market only as incidental to the grocery store market. That is why Plaintiffs repeatedly refer to shopping center developments only in terms of Wal-Mart. (E.g., "The objective of the conspiracy was to increase SuperValu's market power by preventing competition from Wal-Mart at the Mundelein Development." Pls.' Compl. 29.)

HN6[] "Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation." Serfecz II, 67 F.3d at 595. There is a proximate cause element. Id. "[P]laintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say . . . [14] [one] that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 488, 489 (1977) (citations omitted).

Here, there is no causal connection between the antitrust violation (restraining competing grocery stores in the Chicagoland area to raise grocery prices) and the Plaintiffs' injury (loss of a shopping center or its devaluation).

HN7[] Antitrust actions require that Plaintiffs allege an injury to the public, not just themselves. *Pelfresne v. Vill. Of Lindenhurst, 03-6905, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176 44 (N.D.Ill. July 26, 2004). There is no allegation as to the anticompetitive effect upon the retail shopping center market, be it in increased prices or decreased output.

Thus, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' injuries are too remote from the anticompetitive behavior and effects alleged (restriction of trade of grocery stores, leading to higher grocery prices).

Both Defendants and Plaintiffs acknowledge in their briefs that, for the purposes [15] of the actions alleged here, federal and Illinois antitrust acts are identical. Pls.' Opp'n. 26, n. 15. Therefore, the outcome is the same with respect to the state law antitrust claims.

2. Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Even if Plaintiffs could adequately allege antitrust standing and injury, Noerr-Pennington would provide protection for almost all the alleged antitrust activities.

HN8[] The Noerr-Pennington doctrine extends "absolute immunity" from antitrust laws to "businesses and other associations when they join together to petition legislative bodies, administrative agencies or courts for action that may have anticompetitive effect." Mercatus Group, LLC v. Lake Forest Hosp., 641 F.3d 834, 841 (7th Cir. 2011). This is particularly true when part of the petitioning is a publicity campaign directed at the general public and seeks legislative or executive action. These efforts enjoy "antitrust immunity even when the campaign employs unethical and deceptive methods." Id. at 844 (citing Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. [*742] Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 (1988)).

a. Misrepresentations to Municipalities, IDOT and the Public Regarding the Developments

Given the allowance for unethical and deceptive methods [16] in the legislative and executive arena, and in any accompanying public relations campaign, the Court finds Noerr-Pennington is applicable to those allegations concerning Defendants' alleged misrepresentations to villages, IDOT and landowners about Plaintiffs' development. As will be seen, an exception to Noerr-Pennington is more readily had for adjudicative proceedings, but Plaintiffs do not allege that these misrepresentations to municipalities, IDOT and the public were in the context of adjudicative proceedings.

I. Sham Litigation and Fraudulent Litigation

HN9[] Where adjudicative petitioning is concerned, however, fraudulent representations can destroy Noerr-Pennigton immunity. Mercatus, 641 F.3d at 842 ("[T]here is little doubt that fraudulent misrepresentations may render purported petitioning activity a sham not protected from antitrust liability.")

HN10[] There are two branches of the doctrine in regards to litigation: (1) sham lawsuits; and (2) fraudulent misrepresentations. Id. Plaintiff states allegations relevant to both.

HN11[] "[A] misrepresentation renders an adjudicative proceeding a sham only if the misrepresentation (1) was intentionally made, with knowledge of its falsity; and (2) was material, [17] in the sense that it actually altered the outcome of the proceeding." Id. at 843. "[A]lthough successful petitioning activity may not, as a general matter, be deemed a sham, the fraud exception can remove that immunity if success is achieved by means of intentional falsehoods." Id. "If the government's action was not dependent upon the misrepresented information, the misrepresented information was not material." Id. (emphasis added) (quoting Kottle v. Northwest Kidney Ctrs., 146 F.3d 1056, 1060 (9th Cir. 1998).

Here, the alleged fraud was a misrepresentation of who was funding the state lawsuit, rewritten expert reports used in litigation (Plaintiff did not allege that the rewritten report was false), backdoor communications with the judge for a read on how a ruling may come out (which turned out to be inaccurate, because the judge ruled for Mundelein), and Graft's failure to promptly report settlement offers to his clients. None of these implicate materiality with respect to the government's (i.e., the judge's) action; indeed there is no allegation of misrepresentation to the judge at all. Therefore, these are immaterial, and the misrepresentation exception cannot be found on these [18] grounds.

HN12[] As to the sham lawsuit branch, the lawsuits must first be objectively meritless before any exploration of subjective intent can be undertaken. Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993) (hereinafter, "PREI"). A successful action, by definition, cannot be objectively meritless. Id. at 61. Only if a court makes the determination that a lawsuit was objectively meritless may it then inquire into the plaintiff's subjective intent in an exploration of whether the intent was not to win, but to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. Id. at 60-61.

Plaintiffs allege the Lake County suits were undertaken "without regard to merit" but do not allege they were objectively meritless. They point out that Saint founder P. Michael Williams has written a book referencing similar dilatory litigation, and allege on "information and belief" that [*743] Saint has initiated dozens or hundreds of such lawsuits against Walmart developments without regard to merit, and that most have been unsuccessful. Plaintiffs believe the sham lawsuit exception is wider (in terms of being looser as to the "objectively meritless" requirement) when multiple [19] lawsuits are at stake.

But the Court does not so read the law concerning multiple lawsuits, particularly because in PREI, Justice Stevens' concurrence explicitly made that case and the seven-justice majority did not buy into it. Id. at 73 ("Repetitive filings, some of which are successful and some unsuccessful, may support an inference that the process is being misused," Stevens wrote). This case seems to fit neatly into Justice Stevens' prediction, but it was decidedly not the view adopted by the majority.

Additionally, while Plaintiffs in this case allege "dozens" of such suits filed by Defendants across the nation to the detriment of Wal-Mart, only three lawsuits (two of which were consolidated) were filed against Plaintiffs or their interests. If there is a sham lawsuit exception to Noerr-Pennington here, it must come from these three state court suits.

In the consolidated zoning cases, at least thirteen counts were filed. Two counts were dismissed by the landowner plaintiffs and three counts were dismissed on summary judgment. The state court granted judgment for Mundelein on one count on the pleadings, and issued a directed finding on six counts after the plaintiffs rested their [20] case in a bench trial. Only one count went all the way through trial, and the judge ruled for Mundelein on it. The zoning cases were pending in the state appellate court and the third lawsuit was pending in the state circuit court when all three were settled under the same agreement.

Rubloff paid $200,000 and made significant concessions regarding the design of the development to settle the suits. That settlement is fatal to the sham litigation argument. See New West, L.P. v. City of Joliet, 491 F.3d 717, 722 (7th Cir. 2007) (noting a lawsuit that was settled for a significant amount could not form the basis for the sham litigation exception).

ii. Private Conduct in Regards to the Menards Tenant

HN13[] Noerr-Pennington does not apply when conduct is not geared toward the petitioning of government. Mercatus, 641 F.3d at 850-851. Toward that end, Plaintiffs also allege that Saint contacted a shopping center owner who was landlord to a Menards store that was slated to move into Rubloff's Mundelein development. Saint encouraged the owner to lock Menards into a long-term lease in order prevent Menards from moving into the Rubloff development and thereby "kill . . . or . . . serious[ly] delay" Rubloff's [21] development. Pls.' Compl. 15 (quoting Saint memo to SuperValu). While such conduct may not fall under Noerr-Pennington, it is not actionable antitrust conduct. "A territorial admonition to a competitor - like other speech made in the commercial context - does not violate the antitrust laws unless it leads to an agreement to restrain trade or is accompanied by some sort of 'enforcement mechanism' designed to somehow coerce or compel that competitor to heed the admonition." Id. Here, there was even less than an admonition to a competitor; it was a suggestion to Planitiffs' customer. Plaintiffs do not allege that there was any coercion or enforcement mechanism to this suggestion. As a result, it is not actionable.

The Court is uncertain as to whether Plaintiffs can plead additional facts to surmount the problems with these antitrust claims, but as this is the first substantive pleading as to these claims, it gives Plaintiffs [*744] the benefit of the doubt and dismisses them without prejudice.

B. RICO Counts

Plaintiffs claim violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(c) and 1962(d).

1. Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

HN14[] "Although the Noerr-Pennington doctrine originated in antitrust law, its rationale is equally applicable [22] to RICO suits." Int'l Bhd. Of Teamsters, Local 734 Health & Welfare Trust Fund et al. v. Philip Morris, 196 F.3d 818, 826 (7th Cir. 1999). Therefore, it provides the same protection with regards to the RICO charges, eliminating the petitioning of the municipalities, IDOT and the courts (as well as the attendant public relations campaign) from liability. See Section A.2. above.

2. RICO Standing

Neither Defendant brings up RICO standing, and admittedly, HN15[] it is an easier standard to meet than antitrust standing. For instance, injury that is not necessarily anticompetitive injury is sufficient under RICO. Schacht v. Brown, 711 F.2d 1343 (7th Cir. 1983). But RICO standing is still a hurdle greater than mere Article III standing, and requires a proximate cause analysis because the language of Section 1964(c) provides treble damages. Anza v. Ideal Steel Supply Corp., 547 U.S. 451, 126 S. Ct. 1991, 164 L. Ed. 2d 720 (2006) ("Proximate cause is . . . required."). "[E]very court that has addressed this issue has held that injuries proffered by plaintiffs in order to confer RICO standing must be 'concrete and actual,' as opposed to speculative and amorphous." Evans v. City of Chicago, 434 F.3d 916, 932 (7th Cir. 2006). HN16[] "[A] cause of [23] action does not accrue under RICO until the amount of damages becomes clear and definite." Id. One of the factors weighing against standing is difficulty in ascertaining the amount of the Plaintiffs' damages that are attributable to Defendants' wrongful conduct. Gregory P. Joseph, CIVIL RICO: A DEFINITIVE GUIDE 53 (3d ed. 2010) (referencing Hemi Group LLC v. City of N.Y., 130 S.Ct. 983, 175 L. Ed. 2d 943 (2010) and other collected cases).

Here, Plaintiffs have alleged mail and wire fraud as the predicate acts, and the injury of lost value of their development and millions of dollars of expenses caused by Defendants' delay of the projects. Plaintiffs have made vague references to damages amounts, but essentially they remain speculative, to the extent that Defendants alone caused them. To be sure, they were instrumental, but Plaintiffs' allegation that negotiations would have gone flawlessly with nearby landowners had Defendants not stepped in is nothing more than supposition and conclusion.

Plaintiffs contend that, had they known the real scope of the battle (i.e., that Defendants were stirring up landowners rather than the opposition being a true grass-roots uprising), they could have defeated the opposition [24] much more quickly and effectively. This, too, is supposition and conclusion, and even if true, gives no measure of how much of Plaintiffs' damages were attributable to Defendants' predicate acts, and how much is the normal expenditure by suburban shopping mall developers in the age of NIMBY.

Because the damages alleged in this Complaint are speculative and amorphous, and therefore causation of them cannot be shown, there is no RICO standing.

3. RICO Elements

HN17[] "While dismissal of a RICO claim is appropriate if the plaintiff fails to allege sufficient facts to state a claim that is plausible on its face, the adequate number of facts varies depending on the complexity of the case." Kaye v. D'Amato, 357 Fed.Appx. 706, 710 (7th Cir. 2009). HN18[] [*745] "Allegations of fraud in a civil RICO claim are subject to the heightened pleading standard set forth in Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b), which requires . . . particularity." Id.

HN19[] Under RICO, a plaintiff must prove four elements: (1) conduct; (2) of an enterprise; (3) through a pattern; (4) of racketeering activity. Id.

Here, Plaintiffs' pled the "pattern" using the predicate acts of wire and mail fraud. HN20[] "An act of wire fraud requires a showing that (1) [25] Defendants participated in a scheme to defraud; (2) Defendants intended to defraud; and (3) Defendants used wires in furtherance of the fraudulent scheme. HN21[] A scheme to defraud requires 'the making of a false statement or material misrepresentation, or the concealment of material fact.'" Id. at 714. A plaintiff must allege "a situation in which [someone] was misled or fraudulently induced to engage in activity to their detriment. Id. Not all questionable conduct is a "'scheme or artifice to defraud' as those terms are used in the mail and wire fraud statutes." Id. A misrepresentation is material if it has the natural tendency to influence, or is capable of influencing, the decision of the decision-making body to which it was addressed. United States v. Fernandez, 282 F.3d 500, 508 (7th Cir. 2002). The Seventh Circuit has "repeatedly rejected RICO claims that rely so heavily on mail and wire fraud allegations to establish a pattern." Jennings v. Auto Meter Prods., 495 F.3d 466, 475 (7th Cir. 2007)

Here, the alleged falsehoods were that Defendants misrepresented to the zoning litigation plaintiffs that SuperValu and Saint were not behind the opposition and litigation, and that conduct induced [26] Plaintiffs into responding differently. The schemes to defraud, Plaintiffs say, included "back channel" communications with a judge to get a feel on what the ruling would be, the alteration of expert reports that were submitted in that litigation (but not that those reports were false as submitted), and the failure of the zoning attorney to promptly notify his clients of settlement offers that prolonged the litigation (the complaint does not say how long the notification delay was).

The question of whether this is a "scheme to defraud" is close. HN22[] The wire and mail fraud statutes are incredibly broad, and require only "a willful act by the defendant with the specific intent to deceive or cheat, usually for the purpose of getting financial gain for oneself or causing financial loss to another." United States v. O'Connor, 656 F.3d 630, 644 (7th Cir. 2011).

Saint and SuperValu unquestionably intended to cost Rubloff money, they did it to financially enrich SuperValu, and they went to great lengths of deception in trying to do it. At the motion to dismiss stage, this Court would allow this theory if it were not for the Noerr-Pennington, doctrine and, as shall be shown shortly, Rule 9(b).

a. [27] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b)

Accepting that this is a sufficient scheme to defraud under the wire and mail fraud statutes, plaintiffs have not even come close to the particularity required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) for fraud allegations.

How the misrepresentations were made or communicated to zoning litigation clients is never explained, nor are the dates or approximate time frames (the "when"), nor are the actors who made the communications and received them (the "who"). Plaintiffs do not even specify whether these were affirmative misrepresentations to the zoning litigation clients, or just omissions. Plaintiffs cite to a Northern District Court decision and some Seventh Circuit decisions where Rule 9(b) standards were relaxed, but all took place [*746] before the Supreme Court reinvigorated pleading standards with Bell Atlantic Corporation v. Twombly (550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)) and Ashcroft v. Iqbal (556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009)). In any event, those cases do not stand for the wholesale abandonment of at least as much specificity as possible, which has not been met here, and Plaintiffs' offer to amend seems to concede this. A concrete assertion of how the wires or mails were used [28] in furtherance of the scheme is also needed, although this is likely easily remedied by repleading.

Because the claims of fraudulent conduct are not pled with specificity, they are dismissed without prejudice.

b. RICO Conspiracy

Since Plaintiffs have not adequately pled any violation of the predicate acts of wire and mail fraud, they have no standing to plead a conspiracy claim under Section 1962(d)). See, generally, Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 496, 120 S. Ct. 1608, 146 L. Ed. 2d 561. The conspiracy claims are dismissed without prejudice.

C. Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

HN23[] To state a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, "a plaintiff must allege (1) a reasonable expectancy of entering into a valid business relationship, (2) the defendant's knowledge of the expectancy, (3) an intentional and unjustified interference by the defendant that induced or caused a breach or termination of the expectancy, and (4) damage to the plaintiff resulting from the defendant's interference." Voyles v. Sandia Mortg. Corp., 196 Ill. 2d 288, 751 N.E.2d 1126, 1134, 256 Ill. Dec. 289 (Ill. 2001).

HN24[] As with antitrust issues, Noerr-Pennington provides immunity for economic advantage interference that comes as part of a petitioning [29] of government. King v. Levin, 184 Ill. App. 3d 557, 540 N.E.2d 492, 132 Ill. Dec. 752 (Ill. App. Ct. 1989). Illinois, for policy reasons, does not recognize the filing of a lawsuit, even a baseless one, as grounds for a tortious interference suit. The only proper cause of action based on the filing of a lawsuit is either malicious prosecution or abuse of process. Havoco of Am., Ltd. V. Hollobow, 702 F.2d 643, 647 (7th Cir. 1983) (citing Lyddon v. Shaw, 56 Ill. App. 3d 815, 372 N.E.2d 685, 14 Ill. Dec. 489 (Ill. Ap. Ct. 1978).

Plaintiffs correctly note that Cacique, Inc. v. Gonzalez runs counter to Havoco, ruling that a tortious interference action can be based on the filing of a lawsuit when that lawsuit is malicious. Cacique, Inc. v. Gonzalez, No. 03-C-5430, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4966 (N.D. Ill. March 26, 2004). Cacique cites as its authority Stafford v. Puro (63 F.3d 1436 (7th Cir. 1995)) and Prince v. Zazove, 959 F.2d 1395 (7th Cir. 1992) (hereinafter, Prince II). In Stafford, the alleged tortious conduct was not the filing of a lawsuit, so it is inapposite to this case. In Prince, the alleged tortious conduct was, in part, the filing of an adversarial complaint in an existing bankruptcy proceeding. *Prince v. Zazove, No. 89-C-5256, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2718 at 13 (N.D.Ill. March 7, 1991) [30] (hereinafter, Prince I). But Prince I and Prince II dealt with a different matter: a privilege of qualified immunity for submissions made to the court in existing lawsuits when those matters are relevant to the pending proceeding. *Prince I, 1991 U.S. Dist LEXIS 2718 at 13 (citing to Bond v. Pecaut, 561 F.Supp. 1037, 1038 (N.D. Ill. 1983) (dealing with qualified immunity for the contents of a letter sent to a judge in a custody proceeding). Therefore, Prince II is also inapposite to this case.

[*747] Accordingly, the Court is bound to follow the Seventh Circuit precedent, and so Havoco controls.

For the reasons stated in Section A, Defendants are entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity for their actions petitioning the courts, municipalities and IDOT, and the accompanying public relations campaign, so no tortious interference claim can be had for those activities. Additionally, Havoco and Lyddon prevent a tortious interference action for the filing of those lawsuits.

Accordingly, all that is left is the non-petitioning activity of Saint's contact with the Menards' landlord (See Section A, supra) and its attempt to prevent Menards from moving to Plaintiffs' planned Mundelein development. However, [31] Plaintiffs fail under this set of allegations too, because they did not plead that such efforts induced or caused a breach or termination of the expectancy with Menards. Therefore, the tortious interference counts are dismissed without prejudice.

D. Abuse of Process Claims

HN25[🡅] "The only elements necessary to plead a cause of action for abuse of process are: (1) the existence of an ulterior purpose or motive and (2) some act in the use of legal process not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceedings." Kumar v. Bornstein, 354 Ill. App. 3d 159, 820 N.E.2d 1167, 1173, 290 Ill. Dec. 100 (Ill. App. Ct. 2004) (emphasis in original).

HN26[🡅] "In order to satisfy the first element, a plaintiff must plead facts that show that the defendant instituted proceedings against him for an improper purpose, such as extortion, intimidation, or embarrassment. In order to satisfy the second element, the plaintiff must plead facts that show a misapplication of process, or, in other words, the plaintiff must show that the process was used to accomplish some result that is beyond the purview of the process. When process is used only for its intended purpose, there has been no misapplication of process." Neurosurgery & Spine Surgery, S.C. v. Goldman, 339 Ill. App. 3d 177, 790 N.E.2d 925, 930, 274 Ill. Dec. 152 (Ill. App. Ct. 2003) [32] (internal citations omitted).

HN27[🡅] "Process" is not used here in the general sense - as in "the legal process" of suing someone, prosecuting the case, receiving judgment, etc. Rather it is used in the literal, legal sense of something issued by the court. "'Process' is issued by the court, under its official seal and must be distinguished from pleadings, which are created and filed by the litigants." Commerce Bank, N.A. v. Plotkin, 255 Ill. App. 3d 870, 627 N.E.2d 746, 749, 194 Ill. Dec. 409 (Ill. App. Ct. 1994).

In Plotkin, plaintiff Commerce Bank had received all appropriate approvals from the city of Peoria to develop a piece of property into a shopping center. Plotkin then instituted a meritless suit against Commerce, plaintiff alleged, for the sole purpose of scaring off financing for the deal in order to extort a settlement out of Commerce. Commerce was damaged by having to sell, rather than lease, its land and lost millions. The court found that while the first element was satisfied, the second was not because there was "no allegation of any misuse of 'process' by the court." Id.

Likewise, here, Plaintiffs have adequately alleged the first element, the existence of an ulterior motive and an improper purpose. They charge Defendants [33] pulled the strings on litigation that ostensibly sought to restore the landowner plaintiffs' Due Process rights, but in fact was geared to cost Rubloff money and institute endless delay of its development. Plaintiffs' pleadings are replete with communications from attorney Graft to Defendants celebrating his achievement of delay after delay and costing Rubloff "a ton of money" - [*748] purposes that are clearly improper to any litigation.

But Defendants allege nothing in terms of a process issued by the court. Although they adequately pled the first element, they missed the second. Should Defendants be able to surmount this difficulty, the Court does not believe Defendants' other objections to this cause of action have merit, and the action is dismissed without prejudice.

E. Common Law Fraud

HN28[] Common law fraud requires "(1) a false statement of material fact; (2) the party making the statement knew or believed it to be untrue; (3) the party to whom the statement was made had a right to rely on the statement; (4) the party to whom the statement was made did rely on the statement; (5) the statement was made for the purpose of inducing the other party to act; and (6) the reliance by the person to [34] whom the statement was made led to that person's injury." Cramer v. Ins. Exch. Agency, 174 Ill. 2d 513, 675 N.E.2d 897, 905, 221 Ill. Dec. 473 (Ill. 1996).

Plaintiffs essentially argue here that Saint and SuperValu actively misrepresented that they were the parties behind the opposition to the developments. For example, Saint's project manager used a pseudonym, the reasonable implication being that he did so in order to keep Plaintiffs from learning who was behind the effort to stymie the developments. Plaintiffs also allege Defendants misrepresented to the citizen litigants the funding source of the litigation.

Plaintiffs' theory is that these misrepresentations were intended to be communicated to Plaintiffs, and in fact were. Plaintiffs allege they relied on them, and fought the lawsuits and citizen opposition as if it were genuine grass-roots community opposition rather than a commercially motivated opposition. Had they known their true opponent, "the Rubloff Plaintiffs could have effectively addressed that opposition, obtained the necessary approvals for the Mundelein Development, and have proceeded . . . to build the development." Pls.' Compl. 35.

Undoubtedly, false statements (fake names and a lawyer's omission to [35] his client as to who was actually footing the bill) were made here. And Plaintiffs make a colorable argument that these falsehoods were intended to reach the Defendants. (Otherwise, why not announce yourself and your opposition?) But the allegation that such reliance caused the injury here is shaky at best. Plaintiffs claim if they had known the real enemy, they would have prevailed much more quickly, and it was this reliance on the fact that SuperValu was not behind the opposition which caused the injury. As discussed in the standing section of the RICO count, this is too speculative to sustain allegations of reliance.

In any case, HN29[] claims of common law fraud are also subject to the heightened pleading standards of Federal rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) and, as discussed in the RICO section, were not met by the complaint. The common law fraud claims are dismissed without prejudice.

F. Common Law Conspiracy

As Plaintiffs said themselves, "Plaintiffs conspiracy claims survive to the same extent as do their underlying substantive claims." Pls.' Opp'n., 35. With all substantive claims dismissed, this claim must fail. It is dismissed without prejudice.

G. Declaratory Judgment Claim

Plaintiffs [36] sought a declaratory judgment in regards to their use of Defendants' documents. This issue was dealt with in the Court's orders of June 30, 2011, and the parties did not argue it in their briefing. Accordingly, this count is dismissed as moot.

[*749] IV. RUBLOFF'S MOTION TO DISMISS CROSS-COMPLAINT

A. Inducement of Breach of Fiduciary Duty

HN30[] A predicate to any liability based on a theory of an inducement of a breach of a fiduciary duty is the existence of a fiduciary duty in the first instance. Alpha Sch. Bus Co. v. Wagner, 391 Ill. App. 3d 722, 910 N.E.2d 1134, 1151, 331 Ill. Dec. 378 (Ill. App. Ct. 2009). If that duty exists, the elements of the inducement claim require alleging the third party (1) colluded with the fiduciary in committing a breach of duty; (2) induced or participated in such breach; and (3) obtained the benefits resulting from the breach of duty. Id.; see also Regnery v. Meyers, 287 Ill. App. 3d 354, 679 N.E.2d 74, 80, 223 Ill. Dec. 130 (Ill. App. Ct. 1997).

Rubloff and Saint seem to agree that a fiduciary duty exists for an ex-employee who has signed a confidentiality agreement that is applicable after the termination of employment.

Rubloff maintains that if the agreement is not breached, or was invalid, no fiduciary duty has been breached. This is correct. [37] HN31[] "Claims based on . . . breach of fiduciary duty stand or fall with those based on contract." Composite Marine Propellers, Inc. v. Van Der Woude, 962 F.2d 1263, 1265 (7th Cir. 1992). HN32[] Illinois views post-employment restrictive covenants that insist on absolute secrecy of any and all information as unreasonable and unenforceable because a person is allowed to make a living, and cannot possibly not utilize any information from his past job. See, e.g., Serv. Ctrs. of Chicago, Inc. v. Minogue, 180 Ill. App. 3d 447, 535 N.E.2d 1132, 1137, 129 Ill. Dec. 367 (Ill. App. Ct. 1989); North American Paper Co. v. Unterberger, 172 Ill. App. 3d 410, 526 N.E.2d 621, 624, 122 Ill. Dec. 362 (Ill. App. Ct. 1988); Sencon Sys., Inc. v. W.R. Bonsal Co., No. 85-C-8250, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2833 (N.D. Ill. April 6, 1988).

After the parties briefed this case, the Illinois Supreme Court revised its understanding of post-employment restrictive covenants in the context of non-compete agreements. Reliable Fire Equip. Co. v. Arredondo, No. 111871, 965 N.E.2d 393, 2011 Ill. LEXIS 1836, 358 Ill. Dec. 322, 2011 IL 111871 (Ill. December 1, 2011). HN33[] It clarified that the test of enforceability is more than an examination of time and geography restrictions or other rote lists. Instead, its reasonability is a totality-of-the-circumstances question, judged by [38] whether the covenant (1) is no greater than is required for the protection of a legitimate business interest of the employer-promisee; (2) does not impose undue hardship on the employee-promisor, and (3) is not injurious to the public. Time and geography restrictions may also be examined. *Id. at 7-8.

In this case, Saint's broad demand that Mayo "treat as strictly confidential any and all information" (emphasis added) forever, was clearly greater than required. Illinois Courts in the past have declined to rewrite such overly broad restrictions to give them any effect. See Minogue, Unterberger, and Sencon, cited above. The employee here, if held to the literal words of the contract, would not be able to hold another job in the same field, which would clearly be an undue hardship. And as this amounts to a restraint of trade, as defined by the Illinois state law precedents, would also be injurious to the public. The Court also believes that allowing an agreement to stand that would essentially sanction the misleading of dozens of landowners as to how they were used as pawns by SuperValu and Saint in their commercial fight against Walmart would also be injurious to the public.

Therefore, [39] the agreement is unenforceable, and void as a matter of Illinois law. [*750] Because the fiduciary duty rises and falls with the contract, this claim fails.

Because the entirety of the contract was before the Court for review, and is deemed unenforceable as a matter of law, this count cannot be replead to state a cause of action. Therefore, the action is dismissed with prejudice.

B. Tortious Interference with Contractual Relations

HN34[] The tort of interference with a contract requires, as its first element, a valid contract. HPI Health Care Services, Inc. v. Mt. Vernon Hospital, Inc., 131 Ill. 2d 145, 545 N.E.2d 672, 676, 137 Ill. Dec. 19 (Ill. 1989). Thus, the lack of a valid contract (See II.A., supra) is fatal to this claim, and it is likewise dismissed with prejudice.

C. Conversion

HN35[] "To prove conversion, a plaintiff must establish that (1) he has a right to the property; (2) he has an absolute and unconditional right to the immediate possession of the property; (3) he made a demand for possession; and (4) the defendant wrongfully and without authorization assumed control, dominion, or ownership over the property." Cirrincione v. Johnson, 184 Ill. 2d 109, 703 N.E.2d 67, 70, 234 Ill. Dec. 455 (Ill. 1998).

The parties spar over whether the documents at issue in this case [40] represent property recognized under this action. Rubloff cites Conant v. Karris, 165 Ill. App. 3d 783, 520 N.E.2d 757, 763, 117 Ill. Dec. 406 (Ill. App. Ct. 1987).

There are two types of property here: the physical paper (if any) taken from Saint, and the intangible information contained within them. HN36[] "[P]arties may recover for conversion of intangible assets." Stathis v. Geldermann, Inc., 295 Ill. App. 3d 844, 692 N.E.2d 798, 807, 229 Ill. Dec. 809 (Ill. App. Ct. 1998). "Once confidential information is released to competitors, it hardly can be said that the data is still confidential. Thus, the original owner would be deprived of the benefit of the information." Conant v. Karris, 165 Ill. App. 3d 783, 520 N.E.2d 757, 763, 117 Ill. Dec. 406 (Ill. App. Ct. 1987) (ruling that even though plaintiff retained the information that was the subject of the conversion action, conversion could nonetheless still be alleged).

Rubloff argues that Conant stands for the proposition that non-confidential information is not property, and the only thing of value would be the actual paper (if any were taken, rather than electronic documents) upon which the information was written. Because the Court already issued summary judgment finding the documents contained no trade secrets, or privileged, confidential or proprietary business [41] information (save a handful), Rubloff says, there is no property subject to conversion here, unless it is the actual physical paper.

Rubloff also cites FMC Corp. v. Capital Cities/ABC, Inc. (915 F.2d 300, 305 (7th Cir. 1990)) for the proposition that proprietary value of documents must be present for conversion to lie. FMC referenced Supreme Court decisions approving of treating confidential information as a convertible property, and that such a ruling mirrors the trend several states have adopted. Id.

FMC also noted that HN37[] "copies of documents, rather than the documents themselves, should not ordinarily give rise to a claim for conversion." Id. at 303. "[T]he reason for this rule is that the possession of copies of documents - as opposed to the documents themselves - does not amount to an interference with the owner's property sufficient to constitute conversion. Id. In that case, however, the court found a cause of conversion, because the plaintiff no longer had the originals or any copies of them.

Rubloff says Mayo took only copies from Saint, and thus a cause of action should not [*751] lie because Saint has originals (or at least equivalent copies).

Saint cites Hecny Transportation, Inc. v. [42] Chu, et al. for the proposition that information, whether privileged, confidential or not, can be the subject of a conversion action. Hecny Transportation, 430 F.3d 402, 405 (7th Cir. 2005) ("An assertion of trade secret in a customer list does not wipe out claims of theft, fraud, and breach of the duty of loyalty that would be sound even if the customer list were a public record.")

First, as to whether Saint has adequately alleged that originals were taken, as opposed to merely copies, we take Saint's use of the word "document" at face value, as indicating an original. At this stage, all of a Saint's allegations are taken as true. If evidence later develops that Saint was misspeaking, and they meant copies, it can be resolved on summary judgment or at trial.

As to whether information that is non-confidential or not proprietary can be converted, the Court believes Saint is misreading Hecny. That ruling was in the context of a defendant who had a fiduciary duty to the owner of the documents. The conversion charge also involved physical equipment, such as the fax machine and computer.

The case stated:

> If Hecny had put its customer list on its web site for the world to ogle, that would not [43] have permitted its managers to go into covert competition using Hecny's own depot and staff, or to walk off with computers and fax machines, as Hecny alleges Chu did. Trade secrets just have nothing to do with Hecny's principal claims.

Id. at 405 (emphasis added). As the Court has already noted, there was no fiduciary duty in this case. That, and the physical equipment are what distinguishes Hecny. To read the case the way Saint suggests would mean that someone, even a competitor, who was browsing the web and came across the above-mentioned hypothetical customer list, and then tried to sell directly to those customers, would be guilty of conversion or theft. That cannot be.

The court's language of "trade secrets just have nothing to do with Hecny's principal claims" indicates that the court was assailing the notion that just because one is not guilty of trade secret violations, he is not granted immunity for unrelated torts, which was essentially what the District Court had ruled.

HN38[] The law is clear that intangible property can be converted. But the cases indicate that that intangible property must have some value in terms of confidentiality, trade secrets, proprietary business information [44] or the like. As the Court already ruled that the documents at issue had no such content, they cannot be converted (unless Saint has no originals or copies of those documents). However, the paper itself can be the subject of a conversion claim, and to the extent that twelve pages of documents were ruled to be privileged, an action of conversion will lie for the information in those documents as well.

Therefore, within that scope, the counter-plaintiff has properly alleged a cause of conversion, and the motion to dismiss is denied as to this count.

D. Replevin

HN39[] An action for replevin may be brought to recover wrongfully detained goods or chattels. A replevin action cannot be maintained until a counter-claimant has made a demand for the surrender of the property and the defendant has refused. At trial, a counter-claimant must prove the defendant is wrongfully detaining the property. First Illini Bank v. Wittek Indus., 261 Ill. App. 3d 969, 634 N.E.2d 762, 763, 199 Ill. Dec. 709 (Ill. App. Ct. 1994). The property must be described in [*752] sufficient detail to distinguish it from similar chattels and a counter-claimant must state that he is the owner of the property or is otherwise entitled to lawful possession of it. Robert G. Markoff [45] & Lawrence O. Taliana, Replevin, Detinue, and Attachment (available at http://www.iicle.com/links/CredRts09-Ch5-Markoff.pdf (2009) (originally published in CREDITORS RIGHTS IN ILLINOIS (Illinois Institute for Continuing Legal Education, 2009)).

Because of the above determination regarding the nature of the property at interest, Saint has adequately alleged the elements for a replevin action. To the extent that the documents were found to be property in the above conversion discussion, a replevin action will also lie. The motion to dismiss is denied.

E. Misappropriation of Trade Secrets

As Saint concedes in its response (Dkt. 126, 10), this cause of action is foreclosed by the June 30, 2011 summary judgment order, and Saint filed the count to make its record and preserve its appeal. It is so preserved, and the count is dismissed with prejudice.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein, Defendants' Motions to Dismiss are granted in their entirety, and Plaintiffs' Complaint is dismissed without prejudice as to each count. Plaintiff Rubloff's Motion to Dismiss is granted in part and denied in part. Counts I, IV and V are dismissed with prejudice. Counts II and III state valid causes of [46] action.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

[*817] OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiff SanDisk Corp. holds a number of patents covering flash memory technology that it licenses to companies under broad licensing agreements. Defendants Kingston Technology Co., Inc. and Kingston Technology Corp. (hereafter Kingston) refused to enter into the agreements and instead pursued this action against SanDisk, alleging that the required licenses restrain trade beyond the legal monopoly that patents extend to their holders. To prevail, Kingston had to show at trial both that SanDisk's licensing terms exceeded the scope of its patents and that the licenses have an anticompetitive effect upon the USB flash drive market in the United States. It failed to make the second showing, that SanDisk's licenses will have an anticompetitive effect. Accordingly, judgment will be entered for SanDisk on Kingston's counterclaims under [5] § 1 of the Sherman Act and the California Unfair Competition Law.

EVIDENTIARY RULINGS

As an initial matter, the parties are at odds over the admission of certain designations of deposition testimony that they submitted in lieu of live testimony for some witnesses. When I have relied on deposition testimony in reaching my decision, I have done so after resolving the specific objections to that testimony in favor of the party propounding the testimony. It is not necessary to discuss those objections, most of which were grounded on relevance, prejudice, lack of foundation or lack of personal knowledge.

Three objections require more specific discussion. Both sides objected to the submission of deposition testimony from any individual who was not unavailable to testify in person within the meaning of Fed. R. Civ. P. 32 or who testified live at trial. Dkt. #464-11; dkt. #468-2. Neither side made it clear which witnesses it had in mind. Several of the designations are from witnesses who also testified at trial, such as Douglas Hauck, Darwin Chen and E. Earle Thompson. However, these individuals were officers and designees under Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(6), which means that under Rule 32(a)(3) an [6] adverse party may use their deposition testimony for any purpose, regardless of their availability. Fey v. Walston & Co., Inc., 493 F.2d 1036, 1046 (7th Cir. 1974). I will overrule each [*818] side's attempt at a general objection, but I will use deposition testimony from these individuals only if it was submitted by the adverse party.

The final evidentiary dispute concerns SanDisk's objection to Kingston's post trial submission of deposition testimony from Brett Reed. This testimony is not admissible because it is hearsay. Reed was SanDisk's damages expert in two patent cases that SanDisk brought previously against Kingston and others, 07-cv-605 and 07-cv-607. In this case, SanDisk disclosed Reed initially as a damages expert but never provided Kingston any expert reports by him and did not list him as a trial witness. On July 26, 2011, Kingston filed supplemental disclosures in this case in which it identified Reed as a potential defense witness for the first time. SanDisk objected to Kingston's calling him, arguing among other things that Reed's deposition testimony would not be admissible under Rules 402, 403, 801 or 802. Dkt. #388. Although Kingston chose not to call Reed at trial, it [7] has designated certain portions of the deposition he gave in the 2007 cases, which it wants the court to consider as substantive evidence.

Kingston says that SanDisk's objection is untimely because SanDisk failed to file a motion in limine to exclude Reed's testimony, but there is nothing to this argument. Kingston knew both that SanDisk objected to any testimony from Reed and why it did. Because Kingston never called Reed as a trial witness, the court had no occasion to address the issue during the trial.

The only ground that Kingston asserts for admitting Reed's prior deposition testimony is that it constitutes a party admission and is therefore an exception to the hearsay rule under Fed R. Evid. 801(d)(2). None of the categories of statements deemed party admissions by Rule 801(d)(2) apply to Reed's testimony. Kingston has not shown that SanDisk manifested its belief that all of Reed's statements were true, Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(B), that Reed is SanDisk's agent, Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(C), or that SanDisk authorized Reed to speak on its behalf. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(D). The mere fact that SanDisk used Reed as an expert witness in a prior case does not mean that SanDisk believed [8] all of Reed's deposition statements were true, that Reed was within SanDisk's control or that SanDisk authorized him to speak on its behalf in all matters. Kirk v. Raymark Industries, Inc., 61 F.3d 147, 164 (3d Cir. 1995) ("In theory, despite the fact that one party retained and paid for the services of an expert witness, expert witnesses are supposed to testify impartially in the sphere of their expertise.").

Kingston cites two cases in which courts found that a party "authorized" its expert's previous deposition testimony within the meaning of Rule 801(d)(2)(C), but neither case supports its position in this case. In In re Hanford Nuclear Reservation Litigation, 534 F.3d 986, 1016 (9th Cir. 2008), the plaintiff submitted expert testimony about causation at a trial in which the jury was unable to reach a decision. When the case was retried, plaintiff's counsel sought to introduce the same expert's testimony on certain topics but exclude his prior causation testimony, which was damaging to the plaintiff's position. The district court denied the plaintiff's motion to exclude the prior adverse testimony and allowed the defendants to cross examine the expert. The Court of Appeals for the [9] Ninth Circuit upheld the district court's ruling, holding that the expert's prior causation testimony was fair game for cross examination because his statements became party admissions when he testified at the first trial. In Glendale Federal Bank, FSB v. United States, 39 Fed. Cl. 422 (Fed. Cl. 1997), the plaintiff sought to introduce deposition testimony from the defendant's expert witnesses as substantive evidence. [*819] The court held that the defendant had "authorized" the statements of the experts whom it listed as trial witnesses but not the expert who it withdrew after depositions but before trial. Id. at 425. The court reasoned that it was fair to tie a party to its expert's testimony if it retained the expert through trial but that a rule tying a party to its expert's deposition after it withdraws the expert would hinder its ability to control and develop its case.

Unlike the testimony under consideration in Glendale and In re Hanford, Reed's deposition testimony was given in a separate case. Because SanDisk never proffered Reed's testimony in this case, it is neither reasonable nor fair to find that SanDisk authorized Reed's deposition testimony so that it can be deemed a party [10] admission and used against SanDisk. Reed's deposition testimony is inadmissible hearsay in this case and will be excluded.

From the evidence presented at the trial, the admissible portions of the designation depositions and facts stipulated by the parties, I find the following facts.

BACKGROUND

A. The Parties

Plaintiff SanDisk Corp. and defendants Kingston Technology Co. and Kingston Technology Corp. compete to be the largest sellers of USB flash memory drives, nationally and internationally. SanDisk is a vertically integrated manufacturer of flash memory products. It designs, manufactures and markets flash memory chips, controllers, systems and consumer products and sells the finished products worldwide.

Defendants are privately owned companies. They were founded in 1987 to produce memory for personal computers and began selling flash memory products in 2003.

B. Flash Memory and the Flash Memory Industry

Flash memory is a type of solid-state memory technology that stores information when not powered. Flash memory products are sold in different formats, including Compact Flash cards, Secure Digital cards, MultiMediaCard and USB flash drives. USB flash drives consist of one or more flash memory [11] chips (also called devices) and a controller that are assembled on a circuit board into a flash memory system, which is covered in a casing and sold to consumers. The controller is crucial to the workings of the flash memory chips, because it communicates with the host system to enable the chips to store data.

The flash memory industry has seen rapid technological development. Between 2003 and 2009, the capacity of flash memory products increased from between 16 and 256 megabytes to 1 gigabyte (1,024 megabytes) and 4 gigabytes. Between 2000 and 2010, output of NAND flash memory devices (measured by shipments of one gigabyte units) increased by a compounded annual growth rate of more than 125%, while the average sales price fell by a compound annual rate of more than 56.5%.

The participants in the flash memory industry include chip, controller and systems manufacturers, system aggregators and resellers. Six chip manufacturers, SanDisk, Intel, Toshiba, Samsung, Micron Technology, Inc. and Hynix, earned 99% of worldwide revenue from the sales of flash memory chips in 2010. The number of chip manufacturers is limited by the high fixed costs of fabrication facilities, which can take takes [12] several years to build and may cost up to $8 billion. Except for Hynix, all the major chip manufacturers are vertically integrated, which means in the context of this case that they manufacture [*820] chips, controllers and systems, although they may not place the systems in a casing and sell the final product to retailers or consumers.

Several firms manufacture and sell flash memory controllers, such as Hitachi, Ltd., Phison Electronics Corp., Silicon Motion Technology Corp., Skymedi and Solid State System Co., Ltd. Systems aggregators purchase components, such as flash memory chips, controllers and circuit boards on the open market, assemble them into flash memory systems, place them in a housing and sell the finished product to retailers or directly to consumers. Resellers purchase fully assembled flash memory systems, place them in housings labeled with their brand and resell the finished products.

C. Markets

USB flash drives have few if any adequate substitutes in the field of portable memory storage. Rewritable compact discs and digital versatile discs have much smaller capacity, are slower, are damaged more easily, require a separate drive and are not as portable. External hard drives [13] serve a different purpose and follow different pricing patterns. They are larger, slower and require an external power supply. Even the smallest external hard drive is physically larger than most flash drives. Flash drives are much cheaper than comparable hard drives for up to 16 gigabytes of memory, but even when the per gigabyte price for flash drives exceeds that of external hard drives, consumers still do not use external hard drives as substitutes for flash drives. The pricing for USB flash drives is largely independent of the pricing of external hard drives or CDs and DVDs.

Other flash memory systems such as Secured Digital cards (SD cards) and Compact Flash cards offer the closest substitutes, but they serve different functions and have limitations that USB flash drives do not. SD, Micro-SD and Compact Flash cards are thin cards used in phones or cameras that serve primarily as digital film substitutes.

Unlike USB flash drives, they are not readily compatible with computers and often require a special adapter to interface with a computer's USB port. When both are necessary, the combination is almost twice the price of a USB flash drive. Changes in the price of SD or Compact Flash [14] cards do not seem to have any correlative effect on the USB flash drive market or any influence on the pricing decisions of USB flash drive manufacturers. In the contemporary market, no close substitutes exist for USB flash drives.

A large number of firms sell USB flash drives in the United States. Market shares have fluctuated significantly over time, with no firm having a dominant market share. Impediments to entry are few: the percentage of the market held by small firms with less than a 1% market share increased from 16 to 35% between 2006 and 2010 and the percentage held by private labels sales doubled from 5 to 10%. In addition, between 2000 and 2010, output of USB flash drives increased by more than 125% annually while prices decreased by more than 56.5%, despite an increase in demand for flash memory devices.

The market for flash memory technology consists of the market for the technology to produce flash memory chips and assemble them into flash memory systems like USB flash drives. SanDisk enjoys market power in the market for flash memory technology. Not only does SanDisk have 1,700 United States patents relating to flash memory technology, it was unable to identify at trial [15] a commercially viable flash memory product that does not practice its technology or any flash memory firm that does not use its technology in its flash memory systems. SanDisk takes [*821] the position that anyone selling flash memory systems in the United States needs a license from it and it enforces this position with litigation. SanDisk also licenses the manufacturers that sell 89% of the flash memory chips in the world. Only one flash memory chip manufacturer, Micron, has not accepted a license with SanDisk, but SanDisk requires manufacturers that use Micron chips in their own systems to pay SanDisk a royalty on the unlicensed chips.

D. SanDisk's Market Activity

Since 2007, SanDisk's annual expenditures on flash memory research and development have averaged around $400 million. Slightly more than half of this is spent on chip technology; the rest is spent on the technology to incorporate these chips into flash memory systems. In 1995, SanDisk held 30 United States patents relating to flash memory technology, 36 pending United States patents and several pending foreign patents. By 2011, SanDisk had more than 1,100 pending patent applications and more than 1,700 flash memory patents in the [16] United States, along with more than 1,100 flash memory patents in foreign countries, including China, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Korea, the Netherlands, Taiwan and the United Kingdom. SanDisk chooses to file for patent protection in these particular countries because most flash memory products are manufactured in or shipped through those countries. In Taiwan, SanDisk has about 240 flash memory patents and 700 pending applications; in China, it has 190 flash memory patents and 700 pending applications. SanDisk has no patents in Africa, Latin America or Eastern Europe.

SanDisk uses its patented technology to manufacture flash memory chips and flash memory systems in various formats, including Secure Digital cards and USB flash drives. SanDisk's largest share of the USB flash drives market was 34% of worldwide revenue in 2006 and 40% of United States revenue in 2009. By 2011, its market share had dropped to 18% worldwide and 34% in the United States.

In addition to manufacturing flash memory products, SanDisk licenses its patents to companies throughout the flash memory industry. Between 1995 and 2009, it earned $2.5 billion in royalty revenues from its flash memory licenses, an amount [17] that corresponds roughly to its research and development expenditures. SanDisk and its licensees accounted for 89% of worldwide revenue from flash memory chips in 2010. The only large chip manufacturer that is not a licensee of SanDisk is Micron, which has a market share of between 8 and 10%. SanDisk also licenses flash memory aggregators, which include PNY Technologies, Inc., Riteck, Silicon Motion, TDK Corp., Trek and Welldone Technologies.

SanDisk's general licensing practice is to offer only worldwide and non-exclusive cross-licenses for its full portfolio within certain "fields of use." Each party to the license receives the right to use all of the other's existing flash memory patents and any new patents acquired during the term of the cross-license. The licensees and SanDisk remain free to license their existing and new patents to third parties. SanDisk does not license its patents individually or vary the royalty rate according to the number of patents the licensee uses. The licenses cover a "device-level" field of use, a "system-level" field of use or both. Device-level royalties are calculated as a percentage of the sales price or value of the flash memory chips, while system-level [18] royalties are calculated as a percentage of the sales price of the flash memory product containing the system. If a licensee sells flash memory systems that contain an unlicensed chip, it pays an additional royalty on the value of the chip. SanDisk has [*822] an express policy of not licensing manufacturers to sell controllers separately.

In 1995, SanDisk entered into portfolio cross-licenses with Intel; in 1997, it entered into similar licenses with Toshiba and Samsung. These firms agreed to pay royalties on all worldwide sales of flash memory chips and products, whether or not they practiced SanDisk's patents. In 2002, Toshiba's cross-license became royalty free as part of its joint venture with SanDisk to manufacture flash memory wafers. Under SanDisk's latest agreement with Samsung, Samsung pays a 2.5% royalty on the sales price of flash memory chips or any finished product, regardless whether it uses licensed or unlicensed chips. These agreements also give SanDisk the right to purchase 20% of Toshiba's output and 10% of Samsung's output. In 2007, SanDisk entered a portfolio cross-license with Hynix.

E. SanDisk's Lawsuits and Standard Card Licensing Offer

In 2007, SanDisk filed a patent [19] infringement suit before the International Trade Commission against numerous flash memory aggregators. In October 2007, SanDisk filed two actions in this court, 07-cv-605 and 07-cv-607, against many of the same aggregators, charging that they had infringed seven of SanDisk's flash memory patents. In December 2007, SanDisk sent a "standard card license" offer to each of the defendants in the cases, including Kingston. Exh. #1501. When SanDisk presented the licensing offer, it told the defendants that the offer was non-negotiable and that it would pursue them in litigation until they accepted the license.

The standard card license followed SanDisk's general licensing practices. The aggregator licensee would pay system-level royalties equal to 4% of the sales price from any flash memory product sold worldwide. If it used unlicensed flash memory chips, it would pay an additional royalty of 4% or 8% of the cost or fair value of the chip. The total royalty was capped at $4.00 a unit. The royalty would not vary by the percentage of the licensees' sales in the United States and would include sales in countries in which SanDisk holds no patents or has never filed patent infringement claims. [20] The aggregators would not be required to use SanDisk's technology or purchase anything from SanDisk. The aggregators' licenses would last five years, although some of SanDisk's other licenses last seven years.

Several defendants in the ITC and the 2007 cases negotiated settlement agreements with cross-licenses. Many signed the standard licensing agreement with few changes. In June 2007, Ritek accepted a licensing agreement under which it would pay an initial $970,000 lump sum, a 4% royalty on the sales price of each licensed product up to $4.00 a unit (4.5% in the first year with no maximum) and an additional 4% on the price of unlicensed chips. In December 2007, Trek entered an agreement to pay a 3% royalty on sales price of any USB flash drives sales worldwide and an additional 4% royalty on the price or value of any unlicensed chips. Between January 2008 and October 2008, SanDisk entered licensing agreements with at least nine other companies, including Infotech Logistic, LLC and PNY. All of the licenses used a worldwide royalty base and required royalty payments at the chip and system level.

Buffalo Technology USA was one of the aggregators that SanDisk sued before the ITC in the [21] 2007 cases. From 2004 to 2007, Buffalo's domestic sales of flash memory products doubled each year to more than $400,000. Buffalo did not believe it had violated any of SanDisk's patents, but it agreed to a consent judgment in March 2008, in which it agreed to stop selling any flash memory products in the United [*823] States that were not purchased from SanDisk or its licensees. In April 2010, SanDisk voluntarily dismissed Buffalo from the 2007 cases because Buffalo had substantially complied with the consent order.

F. Kingston's Market Activity

When Kingston began selling flash memory products in 2003, it acted as a reseller, purchasing completed flash memory systems from third parties, placing them in a casing and selling them under its brand. In 2005, Kingston became an aggregator. It assembled its own flash memory systems from chips purchased from large chip manufacturers licensed by SanDisk and controllers purchased from specialized manufacturers. The chips make up 77% of the average cost of Kingston's flash drive; the controller makes up the remaining 6.2%.

Between 2006 and 2008, Kingston's worldwide revenue from USB flash drives increased from $336 million to $814.8 million. During that [22] period, a significant oversupply of flash memory chips enabled Kingston to purchase chips from manufacturers cheaply, sometimes below the manufacturer's cost. (Manufacturers sometimes find it financially advantageous to sell chips below cost rather than stockpile them.) Kingston's strategy was to increase its market share by underpricing competitors, even if doing so reduced its profit margin. In 2008, Kingston overtook SanDisk as the world's largest seller of USB flash drives and obtained its highest market share in the United States, at around 13%.

In 2009, Kingston changed its domestic manufacturing from an aggregator model back to a reseller model to limit its potential liability from SanDisk's lawsuits. Kingston now purchases pre-assembled USB flash drives cards from a single supplier, Toshiba; places them in the external casing; and sells them under its label. Kingston's market share in the United States began dropping after it adopted the reseller model. Its domestic expansion reversed and its market share fell from 13% in 2008 to 9% in 2009 and 2010. Kingston's foreign operations continue to use the aggregator model. Kingston's share of the worldwide revenue from USB flash drive [23] sales increased from 28% in 2008 and 2009 to 31% in 2010.

G. Proceedings in this Case

On May 4, 2010, SanDisk filed this suit, alleging that Kingston had infringed six different patents held by SanDisk. Kingston filed counterclaims for injunctive relief, alleging that SanDisk had violated various antitrust and unfair competition laws. I granted Kingston's motion for summary judgment with respect to SanDisk's infringement claims, dkt. #312, and SanDisk's motion for summary judgment with respect to Kingston's monopolization and attempted monopolization counterclaims under § 2 of the Sherman Act and Wis. Stat. § 133.03. Dkt. #327. Kingston proceeded to trial before the court on one of its counterclaims under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, alleging that SanDisk's license agreements unreasonably restrain trade in the United States USB flash drive market by requiring double royalties and a worldwide royalty base, and its counterclaim under the California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, alleging that SanDisk's discriminatory licenses constitute unfair business acts or practices.

OPINION

A. Section 1 of the Sherman Act

1. Legal background

Section 1 of the Sherman [24] Act prohibits acts of "conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. "[T]o establish liability under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate [*824] that the defendants conspired to achieve an unlawful objective and that the resulting restraint of trade was unreasonable." Bi-Rite Oil Co. v. Indiana Farm Bureau Cooperative Association, 908 F.2d 200, 202 (7th Cir. 1990) (citations omitted).

Kingston argues that SanDisk's licensing terms exceed the scope of its patents and that these licenses will restrain trade in the USB flash drive market in the United States. Because Kingston is not alleging that SanDisk's licensing agreements are per se unreasonable restraints, the licensing agreements are evaluated under the "rule of reason," Leegin Creative Leather Products v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007), which requires "an inquiry into market power and market structure designed to assess a [restraint's] actual effect." Id. at 886 (quoting Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)).

Kingston must identify the relevant market and "show that the challenged restraint has an adverse impact on competition in the relevant market." Bi-Rite Oil, 908 F.2d at 203. [25] Kingston does not have to prove that SanDisk has a monopoly or a dangerous probability of achieving a monopoly in the market, but in this circuit at least, it must meet a market power threshold. Valley Liquors, Inc v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 666-67 (7th Cir. 1987). Market power may be inferred from a substantial market share (generally around 50% but perhaps as low as 17% with additional evidence about the elasticity of demand and supply) or shown by direct evidence of anticompetitive effects on price or output. Id.; Toys "R" Us, Inc. v. F.T.C., 221 F.3d 928, 937 (7th Cir. 2000). After meeting this threshold, Kingston must demonstrate that SanDisk has or will use its market power to take actions that will likely reduce output or raise prices in the relevant market. Id.

In a case involving patents such as this one, it is not enough for a defendant to prove that a patentee's licensing of patents will raise prices or decrease output. As I explained in prior opinions in this case, Nov. 15, 2010 Order, dkt. #100, at 13-15; Oct. 13, 2011 Order, dkt. #327, at 27, the patentee's legal monopoly gives it the right to restrain competition within the scope of its patent. A patentee [26] does not restrain trade unreasonably unless it uses its patent monopoly to restrain competition beyond the scope of its legal monopoly. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 135-36, 139-41, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969); Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 62.

To succeed at this stage of its § 1 claim, Kingston had to prove that SanDisk uses its licenses to restrain trade beyond the scope of its patents. To that end, Kingston argued that SanDisk restrained trade beyond the scope of its patents by requiring its licensees to pay royalties on worldwide sales even in nations in which SanDisk has no patent rights and by using a system-level "field of use" that produced "double royalties" on the same patents for the same products. Even if Kingston could prove its contention that the license terms exceeded the scope of the patents, it would still have to prove that imposition and enforcement of these challenged terms will adversely affect the USB flash drive market in the United States.

In summary, to prove its claim under § 1, Kingston needed to prove at trial both that (1) the worldwide royalty base or systems-level field of use terms in SanDisk's licenses exceed the scope of its patents and (2) imposing [27] these invalid licensing terms on competitors was likely to increase price or decrease output in the USB flash drive market. Kingston was [*825] unable to prove the second of these prerequisites to its claim, that is, that the challenged license terms would have an adverse effect upon the market for USB flash drives in the United States. Therefore, it is not necessary to address the first prerequisite, which is that SanDisk uses licensing terms that are beyond the scope of its patents.

2. Relevant markets and market power

Kingston argues, and I agree, that two relevant markets can be used to evaluate the competitive effect of SanDisk's licensing practices. As described earlier, one is the market for USB flash drives, in which no close substitutes exist for USB flash drives; the other is the United States market for flash memory technology in which SanDisk enjoys market power through its large flash memory technology patent portfolio, for which no substitute exists.

3. Anticompetitive effects

Kingston has a straightforward theory about how SanDisk's licenses adversely affect competition. If SanDisk uses its power in the technology market to force aggregators to pay worldwide and double royalties, [28] the aggregators' costs will rise and they will either pass their costs on to consumers, switch to a reseller model or exit the market. Prices will increase (or, at least, not fall as fast) because aggregators are more efficient and have used their cost advantage to drive down prices. SanDisk has two incentives to eliminate aggregators: the price of its USB flash drives would increase and its royalties would increase because they are calculated as a percentage of the price of each flash drive sold.

The core of Kingston's theory is that forcing aggregators to pay higher royalty costs will raise the market price for USB flash drives. Dr. Russell Mangum, Kingston's expert witness, testified that as a matter of general economic theory, when the costs for suppliers increase, the supply curve shifts inward and either price increases or the quantity supplied decreases.

Kingston's theory focuses on a single variable, an increase in cost for the entire market. It neglects the fact that even if paying SanDisk's royalties increases aggregators' costs, aggregators provide only part of the supply of USB flash drives. The relevant question is whether increased costs for aggregators will raise the overall [29] market price. This is a matter of proof, not of mere assumption that aggregators can pass on higher costs with higher prices. It requires consideration of the nature of the market and possible responses of aggregators and other firms to the higher royalty costs. In addition, the theory does not take into account SanDisk's relevant patents on flash memory chips and systems. Kingston fails repeatedly to distinguish the effects of SanDisk's valid royalty demands from its allegedly improper ones. Instead, it assumes that the correct comparison is between a situation in which aggregators pay no royalties to SanDisk and a situation in which aggregators agree to SanDisk's standard licensing program. Obviously this is incorrect. The relevant question is whether the alleged extension of SanDisk's royalties beyond the scope allowed by its patents will adversely effect competition.

Once some of the complexity of the real counterfactual question comes into focus, several questions demand analysis:

> (1) if aggregators must pay SanDisk's putatively invalid royalty demands, will they pay the royalties to continue their current operations, switch to being resellers or leave the United States markets?
> (2) [30] if aggregators pay the royalties or remain as resellers, what will happen to the price and quantity of USB flash drives in the United States?
> [*826] (3) if some aggregators leave the market, will other aggregators, resellers or vertically integrated manufacturers increase their production of USB flash drives and prevent a drop in quantity or increase in price?

Kingston failed to present sufficient evidence to allow the court to reach reliable conclusions about any of these three questions.

a. If aggregators must pay SanDisk's putatively invalid royalty demands, will they pay the royalties, switch to being resellers or leave the United States markets?

Kingston has adduced no persuasive evidence about what effect, if any, SanDisk's putatively invalid licensing terms have had or will have on aggregators generally or on Kingston in particular. It asserts that SanDisk's licensing program has already caused aggregators to reduce production and exit the market. In support of this assertion, Kingston compiled the following evidence about the performance of aggregators in the United States USB flash drive market:

> Since 2006, the number of aggregator and reseller firms has fallen and several large firms [31] have reduced their sales. Memorex sold $86 million in USB flash drives in 2006 but its sales decreased by more than $21 million in 2007 and fell precipitously after 2008. Memorex signed a license with SanDisk in late 2007. Imation had more than $11 million in sales in 2006, but its sales fell to around $613,000 by 2010. Imation was sued by SanDisk in 2007 and signed a license in January 2011. Ritek and A-Data have also reduced their presence after 2006.
> Several aggregators reduced their USB flash drive sales after signing licenses with SanDisk in 2007. Buffalo sold $400,000 worth of USB flash drives in the United States in 2007, but stopped all sales after its consent judgment. Welldone, Add-on and Infotech have stopped sales in the United States since accepting licenses. Welldone paid $788,000 in royalties in 2009 but none in 2010 or 2011. Add-on paid approximately $20,000 in royalties in 2008 and 2009 but none in 2010 or 2011. Interactive Media, Kaser and TSR all agreed to licenses but paid no royalties. These three firms either stopped selling USB flash drives, switched to being resellers or stopped paying royalties, but Kingston submitted no evidence about which of these things [32] occurred.

Kingston argues that this evidence shows that SanDisk's licensing program has hurt competition in the USB flash drive market. Although Dr. Mangum, Kingston's expert, introduced this evidence, he never made any such claim. In fact, Mangum clarified his testimony on cross examination, explaining that he was not saying that SanDisk's licensing program caused these aggregators to reduce their sales. Tr. Trans., dkt. #465, at 96-97, 105-06. This was a wise admission. He performed no analysis, quantitative or qualitative, to determine why the aggregators reduced their sales or to rule out potential causes other than the licenses. In fact, several of these firms reduced their sales for reasons unrelated to SanDisk's lawsuits or licenses. Memorex's sales fell by almost 25% in the year before it signed a license with SanDisk. Imation was planning to leave the market in 2007 and reduced its sales by more than 94% before entering a license with SanDisk. Kingston adduced no evidence to suggest that SanDisk's licensing program caused these aggregators to reduce their sales.

Mangum made a second clarification, which was that he was not offering an opinion about what effect SanDisk's licenses [33] have had on prices or output in the flash [*827] drive market since 2007. Tr. Trans., dkt. #465, at 131. This admission is revealing because he was presented with a convenient natural experiment. SanDisk began its aggregator licensing program in 2007. Mangum could have used this event to analyze the effects of SanDisk's licenses on aggregators and market conditions, but he did not. The evidence that was presented suggests that the market has remained competitive despite SanDisk's aggregator licensing program. A large number of firms sell USB flash drives, none is dominant and their shares have fluctuated over time. Few impediments to entry are visible. Small firms sold more than a third of all USB flash drives, a percentage that has doubled in recent years. Such low concentration, high volatility and ease of entry are indicators of vibrant competition. The anecdotal evidence from Kingston's witnesses further confirms the competitive nature of the USB flash drive market. Sun Dep., dkt. # 464-6, at 77; Ciano testimony, Tr. Trans., dkt. #458, at 62; J. Thompson Dep., dkt. #453-2, at 99-100. Kingston adduced no evidence showing that SanDisk's aggregator licensing program has damaged competition [34] in the USB flash drive market since 2007.

Kingston's primary argument is that SanDisk's licenses will harm competition in the future by forcing aggregators to leave the market. As evidence, Kingston offered testimony from officers of several aggregators that they cannot compete while paying SanDisk's royalties. It followed this with a series of arguments that it will likely leave the United States market rather than pay royalties under SanDisk's proposed terms.

The testimony that Kingston elicited from executives of other aggregator firms was largely conclusory. Kingston submitted deposition testimony from Jeff Thompson, the President, CEO and founder of Edge Tech, a company that sold approximately $7.5 million in USB flash drives in the United States in 2007. SanDisk sued Edge Tech in 2007 and sent it the standard card license. SanDisk told Thompson that no changes would be made to the license, but Thompson did not want changes. He wanted all the aggregators to sign similar agreements because Edge Tech might be unable to compete if it paid higher royalties than its competitors.

Edge Tech paid $190,871 in royalties in 2008 and $28,650 in 2009, but none in 2010 or 2011. From 2008 to 2009, [35] Edge Tech's gross profit from USB flash drives decreased around 70%, and it was not profitable in 2010. If Edge Tech paid royalties in 2010 and 2011 similar to those that it paid in 2008, it would owe around $124,000 annually, bringing its annual losses to $200,000. Thompson stated that Edge Tech would not be competitive if it paid these royalties and would likely stop selling USB flash drives. Id. at 63-64.

Although Edge Tech's losses would increase if it paid SanDisk's royalties and Thompson may reasonably predict his company's response to such losses, his deposition testimony does not prove that SanDisk's allegedly improper licensing terms will cause Edge Tech to leave the USB flash drive market. Thompson never suggested that SanDisk's license caused Edge Tech's problems that began in 2009. In fact, Edge Tech suffered losses in 2010 or 2011 while paying no royalties. Moreover, Thompson did not testify that he believed SanDisk's royalty demands were outside the scope of its patents. In short, Kingston has not proven by a preponderance of the evidence that improper terms in SanDisk's license will cause Edge Tech to reduce its sales or leave the United States markets.

Kingston presented [36] similar testimony from Mark Ciano, Vice President of Finance for PNY. PNY has sold flash memory [*828] products in the United States since 2000, averaging approximately $150 million in USB flash drives sales annually. Until 2009, PNY was a reseller and purchased 95% of its products as completed systems. Ciano oversees PNY's accounting, treasury and human resources departments and supervises the calculation of the royalties that PNY pays under its license with SanDisk.

SanDisk sued PNY in 2007 and sent it the standard card license offer. PNY asked for changes to the worldwide royalty base, but SanDisk's CEO responded that > my offer to [PNY's representative] was based on the clear understanding that they were going to accept without any material changes to our standard contract. I specifically told [PNY's representative] for establishing a fair playing field to all licensees, we do not have the room to customize agreements for each license. He agrees that it's not to be a lawyer-to-lawyer negotiations but that we could keep it simple (i.e., virtually no changes—he raised none with me).

Exh. 655. Several days later, PNY signed a licensing agreement containing SanDisk's standard worldwide royalty [37] base and field of use provisions. Exh. 1541.

PNY did not believe that these provisions would affect it, because it would not owe royalties on systems it purchased from SanDisk's licenses for resale. However, in 2009, PNY switched to an aggregator model. Now it purchases only 10 to 15% of its systems complete. To date, PNY has paid about $800,000 in royalties on more than $150 million in sales. SanDisk sued PNY after an audit concluded that it had withheld between $21 and $30 million in royalty payments, an amount equal to PNY's profit for the last two years. PNY contests the audit and denies that it owes these sums under their agreement. Ciano testified that if PNY paid the disputed royalties, it would be unable to compete.

However, Ciano admitted that PNY has never considered leaving the United States market. In fact, during the time in which PNY has had a license from SanDisk, PNY's prices fell 20% and its sales increased. Moreover, Ciano has substantially conflicting incentives for his testimony. In the lawsuit over the disputed royalties, PNY filed antitrust counterclaims alleging that the worldwide licenses and double royalties violate antitrust laws. PNY likely regrets accepting [38] these license terms because it did not foresee that it would switch to an aggregator model. In light of PNY's past market performance and Ciano's conflict of interest, I am not persuaded by Ciano's conclusory testimony that SanDisk's license will cause PNY to reduce its USB flash drive sales or exit the United States market.

Finally, Kingston argues that SanDisk's licensing demands will likely cause Kingston to leave the USB flash drive market in the United States and that if it leaves, competition will be harmed. Kingston's argument rests on two premises: (1) it cannot afford to continue acting as a reseller and (2) it cannot afford to pay the royalties charged under SanDisk's standard licensing offer to be an aggregator.

To support the first premise, Kingston relies primarily on its sagging domestic performance. After it adopted the aggregator model, Kingston's market share in the United States increased from 8% in 2005 to 13% by 2008. The next year, it switched back to a reseller model in the United States and its domestic expansion underwent a reversal. Its market share declined to 9% in 2009 and 2010. Meanwhile, its worldwide market share remained stable in 2009 and increased from [39] 28 to 31% in 2010.

[*829] Darwin Chen, Kingston's Vice President of Sales and Marketing, testified about how switching to a reseller model has affected Kingston. Chen has been responsible for strategy, business development and product management in Kingston's flash memory business since 2003. Chen does not believe the reseller model is sustainable, because Kingston can no longer search for the cheapest components from different manufacturers. This hinders its ability to expand its market by competing on price and maintain the perception that it is a price leader. Chen testified that if Kingston must continue operating as a reseller, it cannot be competitive and will eventually leave the market.

Mangum testified that, in his opinion, the reseller model caused Kingston's sales to stagnate in the United States, suggesting that it is not a viable long-term business model. I do not find his conclusion reliable. The bases for it were conversations with Kingston's executives and his theoretical analysis of the reseller and aggregator models. He performed no direct analysis of Kingston's performance. Mangum did not compare Kingston's costs or profits as a reseller to those of other manufactures, analyze [40] Kingston's domestic costs before and after switching to the reseller model or compare Kingston's domestic costs as a reseller to its foreign costs in countries where it remained an aggregator. Kingston submitted spreadsheets that appear to contain the necessary data, Exhs. 197, 198, 200, and 468, but offered no testimony to explain them. Mangum also failed to consider alternative explanations for Kingston's decline in sales, an omission that undermines his opinion.

Kingston introduced no data to support a finding that it would have been more competitive domestically if it had remained an aggregator. The bare correlation between Kingston's declining market share and its switch to a reseller model is weak evidence that the reseller model is less advantageous, but not sufficient to prove that Kingston will leave the market rather than remain a reseller, even when Chen's testimony is taken into consideration. Kingston has not proven by a preponderance of the evidence that maintaining the reseller model in the United States is an unacceptable alternative to paying SanDisk's licensing fees and that it will be forced to leave the United States USB flash drive market to avoid the fees.

Instead [41] of offering useful empirical analysis about the market conditions in the United States, Kingston insisted on comparing its profit margin when paying no royalties to its profit margin if it paid SanDisk's worldwide royalty on both fields of use. If Kingston pays worldwide royalties on both fields of use, it would owe approximately $40 million a year in royalties from sales in countries in which SanDisk has no patents and in which its competitors pay no royalties. Its average net profit on worldwide sales would drop from 3.2% to .9%. Kingston argues that this $40 million should be considered a royalty on United States sales, because SanDisk is using the United States license as leverage to extract foreign royalties to which it has no legal right. Under Kingston's theory, the effective royalty on its United States sales would average around 40% and its average profit margin on domestic sales would fall to -19.2%. According to Mangum and Chen, Kingston would exit the United States market rather than accept such a high loss on its United States sales.

This calculation is misleading because Kingston has specified the counterfactual situation incorrectly. The $40 million figure does not account [42] for the portion of royalties within the scope of SanDisk's patents, such as royalties on flash memory chips in countries in which it has patents. [*830] Kingston manufactures all of its flash memory products in China, Taiwan and the United States, countries in which SanDisk has flash memory patents. Chen testified that SanDisk has never shown Kingston any of its Taiwanese or Chinese patents, but this testimony is not proof that those patents do not cover Kingston's products.

Kingston offered one calculation that would control for SanDisk's valid foreign royalties. If Kingston paid royalties only on sales in the United States, its average margin on domestic sales would fall from a 1.6% profit to -.7% loss. However, neither Mangum nor Chen testified about whether Kingston would leave the United States market to avoid such minimal losses. Moreover, even this -.7% figure is misleading. When Mangum calculated the -.7% average loss, he included the years after 2008 when Kingston's margins were allegedly lower because it was acting as a reseller and it would not owe any royalties. Even if I were to overlook that error, this calculation does not account for SanDisk's right to royalties for its flash [43] memory chip patents. Kingston is still operating on the false assumption that the proper baseline for comparison is a situation in which it pays no royalties, failing to differentiate the effect of the valid from the allegedly invalid royalties.

b. If aggregators pay SanDisk's licenses or become resellers, will the quantity of USB flash drives supplied in the United States decrease or will the price of USB flash drives increase?

Even if Kingston had proven that SanDisk's licensing program would injure Kingston or other aggregators, Kingston must show more than injury to one or a few firms. A firm may unreasonably restrain trade by excluding competitors, but only if the exclusion raises prices above the competitive level or drives output below it. Roland Machinery Co. v. Dresser Industries, Inc., 749 F.2d 380, 394 (7th Cir. 1984). The federal antitrust laws are concerned not with the welfare of competitors but the health of the competitive process, and healthy competition has winners and losers. Id. at 393. Kingston has adduced no convincing evidence that prices will increase or output will decrease in the USB flash drive market if aggregators face higher costs because they pay SanDisk's [44] licenses or switch to a reseller model. The nature of the USB flash drive market and the evidence about firms' pricing behavior suggest that neither price nor output would be adversely affected.

Kingston had access to evidence about whether competition in USB flash drive market is affected when aggregators switch to the reseller model or pay SanDisk's royalties. Kingston became a reseller in 2009, but Mangum did not analyze the effects on the market price or output after such a large aggregator switched to the reseller model. Id. at 91-92, 95. Many aggregators accepted SanDisk's licenses in 2007, yet Mangum did not analyze the affect on the market when they began paying royalties.

The evidence that Kingston did present suggests that market prices are unlikely to change if aggregators begin paying royalties or switch to a reseller model. Edge Tech began paying royalties in 2008 but did not raise prices to offset this cost. PNY paid royalties in 2008 and switched from being a reseller to an aggregator in 2009, but its prices continued to fall and its sales continued to increase. Kingston did not raise its prices after switching to the reseller model in 2008.

The USB flash drive market is [45] so competitive that firms cannot pass on their cost increases by raising the price of their USB flash drives, as Kingston's own witnesses testified. Mangum, Tr. Trans., dkt. #465, 91-95; Chen, Tr. Trans., dkt. #455, [*831] 125-27. The USB flash drive market is largely commodified because drives from different firms are not readily distinguishable from one another. Because consumer's primary concern is storage capacity and price, firms set their prices according to the market price rather than on their costs. Tr. Trans., dkt. #465, at 89-90; Ciano, Tr. Trans., dkt. #458, 57-58. Mangum testified that in the 2007 cases, he had concluded that even if Kingston had been required to a pay a 4% royalty on United States sales, it would have been unable to raise its prices because of the competitive market. Tr. Trans., dkt. #465, at 81. Aggregators' profit margins will diminish if they begin paying SanDisk's royalties or switch to a reseller model, but Kingston did not prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the market prices or quantity supplied would be adversely affected.

c. If aggregators leave the market, will the price of USB flash drives increase or output decrease?

Even if Kingston had [46] proven that SanDisk's licenses would force aggregators to leave the market, it did not prove that the loss of aggregators would affect competition in the United States flash drive market. Kingston's argument is that aggregators play a special role in fostering price competition in the USB flash drive markets. Kingston has two arguments to support this proposition: (1) aggregators are more efficient than vertically integrated manufacturers and use their cost advantage to foster price competition; and (2) prices are already higher in the United States than in foreign markets because more aggregators compete in foreign markets.

Kingston's argument that aggregators are more efficient relies on its theoretical analysis of the USB flash drive market and on statements by SanDisk's executives about the competitive situation in 2006 and 2007. Kingston's theoretical analysis ignores the benefits of vertical integration and overstates aggregators' advantages.

According to Kingston's theory, fabricators have high fixed costs and low marginal costs, which gives them an incentive to continue full production of chips. When demand weakens, this causes periods of oversupply that permit aggregators to [47] purchase chips at low cost. When one such period of oversupply occurred in 2006, aggregators gained a competitive edge. In particular, Kingston used its cost advantage to compete on price and expand its United States market share. In response, SanDisk devised its licensing program to target the aggregators who posed a competitive threat.

Kingston's analysis of the importance of aggregators ignores the efficiency advantages of vertical integration. By receiving components through internal channels, vertically integrated firms spend fewer resources locating components in the merchant market (they must still spend some resources to track and price inputs correctly). In addition, by participating in the upstream (manufacturing) and downstream (retail) market, a vertically integrated firm increases downstream competition and reduces the profit margin taken by intermediate firms in the supply chain.

Moreover, Kingston's analysis overstates aggregators' advantage in times of oversupply. When market prices fall, the cost of components falls for everyone. The "cost" of chips falls for a vertically integrated firm because it should value chips that it uses internally at their opportunity cost, [48] which is the price it could obtain by selling them to a third party. Many vertically integrated firms also sell flash memory chips and benefit when aggregators purchase chips and prop up prices. Furthermore, when supply is limited and prices rise, aggregators will lose [*832] any purported cost advantage they had. A complete analysis would have compared the respective costs and benefits of each method of production. Neither Mangum nor Kingston undertook such an analysis.

Kingston's internal documents confirm my conclusion that the facts are more complicated than the theoretical picture Kingston presented at trial. Kingston argued that vertically integrated firms have higher costs because of their investments in facilities and patents. However, in an internal presentation entitled "Competitive Analysis," Kingston concluded that SanDisk had higher net margins because its fabrication facility and intellectual property lowered its costs. Exh. 20. The internal documents suggest that even Kingston recognizes that vertical integration may have efficiency advantages.

Dr. Mangum, Kingston' expert, testified at trial that aggregators have lower costs, but his opinions on this subject relied entirely [49] on statements from employees and executives of SanDisk and Kingston. Tr. Trans., dkt. #458, at 136-44; dkt. #465, at 10-12, 132. When Kingston identified specific statements on which Mangum relied, the statements were limited to certain time periods and speculative conclusions lacking any apparent foundation. E.g. Tr. Trans., dkt. #458, at 143-44; Tr. Trans., dkt. #465, at 38-40. The only objective evidence on which Mangum relied to conclude that aggregators had lower component costs was a market report from 2007, in which Gartner reported that Kingston, along with Transcend and A-Data, gained market share by purchasing large quantities of chips at low cost. Kingston produced no evidence that aggregators enjoyed similar purchasing advantages at other times or that this advantage in times of oversupply outweighed the disadvantages when supply and demand were aligned. More important, as I explained above, vertically integrated firms and aggregators should value their components similarly. If aggregators are more efficient, it must be because their incremental costs are lower, but Kingston produced no data about the cost of assembling, marketing or distributing USB flash drives. Therefore, [50] I conclude that Kingston has failed to show that aggregators are more efficient, on balance, than vertically integrated firms.

Kingston also argued that it is a particularly efficient firm and would represent a special loss to the USB flash drive market. It maintained that as a large aggregator, it can purchase chips opportunistically at prices lower than the spot market and even lower than SanDisk can produce them. It failed to substantiate these claims. The only data it offered about its component costs was specific to the first quarter of 2008. It produced no evidence that it enjoyed similar advantages at other times or that its costs for assembling, marketing or distributing USB flash drives are lower than the costs of SanDisk, other vertically integrated firms or other aggregators.

Kingston has also not proven that the loss of aggregators would lead to price increases. Kingston offered no data to support its theory that aggregators' prices are lower than the prices charged by SanDisk or other vertically integrated manufacturers. To predict the effect of increasing the costs for aggregators or forcing aggregators to exit the market, Kingston would have had to analyze the potential [51] reactions by firms unaffected by SanDisk's challenged licenses. The likelihood that a reduction in output by a large aggregator would increase market prices depends on the capacity and incentive of other firms to increase production or to enter the market. Kingston's expert did not undertake this analysis. Moreover, he ignored available evidence to test the theory that the [*833] loss of a large aggregator would raise prices. Two large aggregators, Memorex and Imation, stopped selling USB flash drives between 2006 and 2010. Mangum did not analyze whether their exit increased prices or whether other firms responded with increased output.

Several features of the USB flash drive market suggest that it could absorb the loss of Kingston or other aggregators with little effect because other firms would increase output. Small firms have demonstrated their capacity to expand output, more than doubling their share to 35% between 2007 and 2010. Private label USB flash drives also doubled their market share to 10%. In addition, flash memory chip manufacturers would have strong incentives to replace any reduction in output by aggregators. These firms have a strong incentive to maintain high levels of [52] production and to insure that there are uses for their chips. The cost to expand downstream is low because it is comparatively simple and cheap to assemble chips and controllers into flash drives. Chip manufacturers like Samsung and Toshiba already have a large retail presence. If Kingston or other aggregators were to reduce their output, these manufacturers will likely expand into the downstream market or sponsor an aggregator to use its chips.

Kingston's expert did not give adequate attention to these potential market effects. Mangum argued that his market share analysis showed that other firms are not waiting to take over Kingston's output, but he did not provide a comprehensive survey of market participants or analyze the capacity of particular firms or types of firms to increase output. The fact that some firms have left the market does not suggest that other firms are not able to expand output. On the contrary, Memorex and Imation left the market with no apparent effect on price or output. Mangum did note that SanDisk had concluded in an internal presentation that Samsung was unlikely to expand downstream into SD cards because of a conflict among its internal divisions. However, [53] he did not discuss Samsung's incentive to insure downstream demand or the fact that Samsung has partnerships with downstream firms. Even if Mangum's view of the presentation were correct, that still leaves four other large chip manufacturers.

In the absence of reliable empirical data to support its theoretical analysis of the USB flash drive market and aggregators' competitive advantage, Kingston rested its case primarily on statements by SanDisk's executives supposedly acknowledging that aggregators play a crucial role in maintaining competition. Kingston relies heavily on two comments by SanDisk's founder and former CEO, Dr. Harari. In a 2007 quarterly earnings call, Harari told investors in 2007 that SanDisk's profit margins were low because of the "crazy competitive" situation. Exh. 289. In testimony before the International Trade Commission in 2007, he said that SanDisk "has many capable competitors such as Kingston, Imation and Transcend and these competitors put enormous pricing pressures on the market for our products." Harari Dep., dkt. #468-10, at 26. These isolated comments are not very probative. In the first, Harari is describing a specific time period and does not even [54] mention aggregators. In the second, he acknowledges that competition from these firms decreases prices, but he never suggests that their aggregator model makes them more efficient or gives them a competitive edge.

Kingston also cites deposition testimony by SanDisk's Vice President of Retail Sales, Douglas Hauck. Hauck stated that, historically, aggregators' prices have been lower than SanDisk's prices in the United [*834] States and that SanDisk tried raising its prices in 2009 but competition from aggregators forced it to bring them back down. Hauck Dep., dkt. #468-5, at 87. Hauck also testified that SanDisk does not use cost reductions to reduce prices "proactively." Id. at 281. Hauck's testimony offers some support for Kingston's claim that aggregators have lower prices and compete on price more readily, but his general statements are not enough to corroborate Kingston's theory about the role aggregators play in the USB flash drive market. His testimony does not prove that aggregators are more efficient, that SanDisk used its licenses to exclude aggregators and raise prices or that such a strategy has any likelihood of success. More important, SanDisk's beliefs were not relevant to the [55] issues at trial. As to those, Kingston needed reliable evidence about efficiency and market price.

Kingston's final argument is that prices for USB flash drives in the United States are higher than prices in foreign markets because more aggregators compete in foreign markets. Kingston submitted a chart listing prices charged for USB flash drives on April 1, 2011 by Kingston, Transcend, A-Data and PNY in the United States and various foreign regions. Exh. 672. Mangum used this chart to draw conclusions about the markets in the United States and foreign regions, but it is not a reliable basis for comparing USB flash drive prices. Rather than listing the average price for USB flash drives, it lists only the prices charged by four aggregators; it does not control for general differences in consumer prices across these regions and it does not indicate whether similar price differences existed at other times. The chart does not offer any basis on which to hypothesize possible causes of these differences as of April 1, 2011. Finally, it does not compare prices across the same regions. It lists A-Data and Kingston's prices in Latin America, Europe and the United States, PNY's prices in the [56] United States, the United Kingdom and Germany, and Transcend's prices in Latin America, Europe and the United Arab Emirates but not the United States.

Chen, Kingston's Vice President of Sales and Marketing, testified that prices are lower in European markets because more aggregators compete in Europe. His testimony is not particularly persuasive; the only bases for his conclusion were his experience in these markets as a businessman and the prices listed in the price chart discussed above. Although Kingston proved that its own prices were higher in the United States than in Europe or Latin America, the cause of this difference remains unclear. Chen attributes Kingston's higher prices to its litigation costs and to its reseller model. However, as I noted above, Kingston offered no empirical data to corroborate this assertion, Kingston does not set its prices based on its costs and Kingston's prices did not change after it switched to a reseller model. Therefore, I conclude that Kingston has not shown that greater competition from aggregators causes international prices for USB flash drives to be lower than prices in the United States.

Because Kingston has failed to prove that SanDisk's [57] putatively invalid licensing terms have adversely affected competition or that they will have such an effect in the future, SanDisk is entitled to judgment in its favor on Kingston's Sherman Act counterclaim.

B. California's Unfair Competition Law

The California Unfair Competition Law prohibits "unfair competition," which it defines as "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising and any act prohibited by [the California false advertising statute]." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Kingston argues [*835] that SanDisk's system-level royalties impose unfairly discriminatory royalties on downstream firms and that California recognizes that price discrimination in supplier relationships can be unfair even if it is not an not antitrust violation. Motors, Inc. v. Times Mirror Co., 102 Cal. App. 3d 735, 740-41, 162 Cal. Rptr. 543 (Cal. Ct. App. 2d Dist.1980).

However, the California Supreme Court rejected the broad public policy balancing test used to define "unfair" practices in Motors, Inc., replacing it with the following test:

> When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's "unfair" act or practice invokes section 17200, [58] the word "unfair" in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.

Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 186-87, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527, 544 (Cal. 1999). Kingston argues that the Cel-Tech test is limited to direct competitors and the court did not purport to define unfair practices in a vertical supply relationship such as between SanDisk and its licensees. Id. at 187 n.12. However, Kingston cites no cases indicating that California courts would apply the old fairness balancing test to vertical supplier relationships. Scripps Clinic v. Superior Court, 108 Cal. App. 4th 917, 940, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101 (Cal. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 2003) (noting uncertainty about whether balancing tests applies to other unfair practices). Moreover, SanDisk and its licensees have both a supplier and a competitor relationship. Kingston complains that aggregators face a disadvantage when competing with SanDisk in downstream markets. In other words, Kingston complains about [59] having to compete on unfair terms. In this situation, I conclude that the California Supreme Court would require Kingston to show an incipient violation of the antitrust laws. Because I have concluded that Kingston has not proven that SanDisk's licenses are likely to be harmful to competition, SanDisk is entitled to judgment on Kingston's counterclaim under the California law.

In the alternative, SanDisk's patent licensing terms would be shielded by the "safe-harbor" doctrine, which prevents a plaintiff from asserting an unfair competition claim if other legislative provisions "'bar' the action or clearly permit the conduct." Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 182-184, 973 P.2d at 544 . The Patent Act permits patent owners to use price discrimination to maximize their licensing income, absent a showing of anticompetitive effects. USM Corp. v. SPS Technologies, Inc., 694 F.2d 505, 512-13 (7th Cir. 1982). Kingston argues that the California legislature has not expressly authorized price discrimination by a patent-holder, but the California Unfair Competition Law cannot make illegal a practice that is recognized by the federal courts as a lawful exercise of a patent. If it did prohibit discriminatory [60] pricing in the absence of anticompetitive effects, its decision would be preempted by the patent laws because policy decisions about the fair use of patents falls to Congress. Biotechnology Industry Organization v. District of Columbia, 496 F.3d 1362, 1373-74 (Fed. Cir. 2007). Either Kingston's counterclaim falls within the Unfair Competition Law "safe-harbor" or actions under the law for discriminatory patent licensing are preempted by federal law; under either approach, SanDisk is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

[*836] ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that plaintiff SanDisk Corp. is entitled to judgment in its favor on defendants Kingston Technology Co. Inc. and Kingston Technology Corp.'s remaining counterclaims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and under the California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. The clerk of court is directed to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff on defendants' count XXIV: Sherman Act Section 1 and count XXV: California Unfair Competition Law.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

The plaintiff in this case is JetAway Aviation, LLC ("JetAway"), a Colorado limited liability company in which Steve [*2] Stuhmer is the managing principal, as plaintiff. The defendants are The Board of County Commissioners of the County of Montrose, Colorado; Montrose County Building Authority, a Colorado Nonprofit Corporation; Jet Center Partners LLC, a Colorado Limited Liability Company; William Patterson; Kevin Egan; and James Rumble. Black Canyon Jet Center LLC, a Colorado limited liability company, was merged into JCP and is no longer an entity.

JetAway claims that all of the defendants acted collusively to prevent it from providing services to the public as a fixed base operator ("FBO") on the Montrose Regional Airport in Montrose County, Colorado ("Airport"). The geographical location of the Airport makes it attractive to general aviation for tourists and recreational users for southwest Colorado destinations, particularly the ski and resort facilities at Telluride, Crested Butte and other nearby attractions. It serves commercial airlines and local general aviation users as well.

FBO services were provided by V.I.P. Flyers, a Colorado corporation until 1991 when the District Court for Montrose County entered a permanent injunction against it for a violation of certain agreements. James Rumble ("Rumble") [*3] owned and managed that company.

From 1991 to January, 2006, the County provided FBO services, including the sale of aviation fuel and a terminal for the use of pilots and passengers of private aircraft. The terminal building was closed in 2002 because of asbestos concerns. The County installed a double-wide trailer as a temporary measure.

The governing authority for Montrose County is a three member Board of County Commissioners ("BOCC"). Recognizing the need for better facilities, the BOCC began consideration of contracting with a private provider for services. The members then were David Ubell, Betsy Hale and Leo Lange.

Rumble, Kevin Scott and Kevin Egan formed a business in 2002 for the single purpose of obtaining and operating an FBO at the Airport. Scott had FBOs at other comparable airports.

The question of privatization of the Airport was discussed publicly in Montrose. William Patterson had been the Treasurer of the Airport authority when V.I.P. Flyers had the FBO and he was well acquainted with Rumble. Both of them lived in Montrose.

All three members of the BOCC favored privatization and they directed the County Attorney, James Fritze to draft a Request for Proposal ("RFP") and [*4] to develop minimum standards for FBO operations at the Airport.

In 2004, the BOCC retained a financial consulting firm to compare the anticipated financial results of privatization with continuing County operation, which would require an estimated $2 million investment in necessary capital improvements. The reported conclusion was that projected cash flows for the period 2006 through 2010 made continued county operation the more appropriate action.

The question of privatization of the Airport was discussed in the election for county commissioners in November 2004. Patterson and Allan Belt, proponents of privatization, were elected. They joined the incumbent, Ubell, in January, 2005.

In 2004, JetAway purchased a building adjacent to the Airport that had been used as a manufacturing facility. Through agreements with the County, JetAway began providing "through the fence" FBO services to Airport users but it was restricted from selling aviation fuel.

The County issued a Request for Proposals with a response date of April 1, 2005 (Ex. A-23).

This RFP was different from a request for competitive bids with specifications. It asked each proposer to submit a business plan with no preconceptions [*5] except for adherence to the Airport's Minimum Standard requirements. The terms and conditions of the RFP included the following:

The County reserved the right:

1 To select one, two, or more respondents with whom the County may pursue negotiations pursuant to this RFP.

2 To reject any and all proposals received pursuant to this RFP for whatever reason deemed necessary or for no specified reason.

3 To amend or otherwise modify this RFP prior to the submission date and to cancel this RFP with or without the substitution of another RFP.

4 To request more detailed qualifications statements and/or references and to conduct investigations with respect to the qualifications and/or reputations claimed by proposer.
5 To not proceed with the evaluation process as indicated by this RFP for whatever reason.
6 To require additional information to clarify or supplement proposals.
7 To expressly waive any non-compliance with an insubstantial requirement of this RFP in any proposal submitted.
8 To negotiate regarding unacceptable provisions incorporated in an otherwise acceptable proposal.
Exhibit A-23

While the RFP was for a lease, there was no legal description of the premises. That, too, would be negotiated.

The [*6] County formed a committee (FBO Committee) to review the proposals, to recommend whether to privatize the Airport and, if so, which applicant should be accepted. The county manager, Dennis Hunt, and Scott Brownlee, Airport Manager, selected the members of the FBO Committee. Brownlee, County Attorney Fritze, a banker and three airport employees were appointed.

Steve Stuhmer, a principal of JetAway, delivered its proposal to the airport administration office at about 3:00 p.m. on April 15, 2005. The proposal was in multiple binders in a footlocker that was sealed and marked. When Stuhmer returned about an hour later, he saw that the footlocker had been opened. JCP's proposal was delivered almost two hours later.

Jeanette Anderies, an airport employee and member of the FBO review committee, opened the footlocker and was seen looking at a copy of JetAway's proposal by Scott Brownlee who admonished her. When Stuhmer returned, he was told that Anderies had gone for the day.

The JetAway proposal was based on its existing facility. The land was to be conveyed to the County at no cost and leased back to JetAway which would also lease the adjacent Airport land to develop a ramp area. JetAway pointed [*7] out that this was a unique proposal which would provide a full range of FBO services immediately. Ex. A-27.

The JCP proposal provided for construction of a hangar, terminal and a parking area on leased space on the Airport.

The FBO review committee recommended that the County continue to operate the FBO but if the contrary conclusion was reached the negotiations should be with JCP.

On August 15, 2005, Commissioners Ubell, Patterson and Belt unanimously voted to negotiate with JCP. On December 5, 2005, the County adopted amended minimum standards, replacing some of the 2003 standards referred to in the RFP. The amended standards conformed to the JCP FBO Agreement, executed on the same day.

JetAway did not stop its efforts to provide FBO services after JCP's agreement. In addition to its multiple proposals, JetAway has engaged the County in litigation in the District Court of Montrose County regarding its lease agreements for the JetAway facility. That litigation ultimately resulted in an injunction barring JetAway's access to the Airport. JetAway also filed two complaints with the FAA, contending that denial of its access to the Airport violated the conditions of Federal grants. The FAA [*8] rejected those complaints.

This case was filed on December 10, 2007. After prolonged discovery and motion hearings, the claims now before this court are for violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, for denial of equal protection of the law in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, and for an unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce.

All of the defendants are accused of collusion in the RFP process. The plaintiff attempts to equate this case with the type of bid rigging that constitutes a per se violation of the Sherman Act. It does not fit. They involve horizontal competitors who agree on which bidder will win the contest. Here the allegation is that the County had selected JCP to be the FBO operator even before issuing the RFP. The disputed evidence may support that finding. That, however, is not illegal. The County made it clear that the RFP was only the first step in the selection process. The proposals were reviewed to determine the entity with which negotiations would be conducted. The County was free to make that selection without the use of an RFP.

The plaintiff's retained economist, Dr. Philip Nelson, compared the proposals of JCP and JetAway, reaching the conclusion [*9] that JetAway's approach would have been significantly better for the financial benefit to the County both in the short and long term. That, however, is not determinative of the antitrust claims.

The plaintiff suggests that Patterson, Egan or someone for JCP had knowledge of JetAway's proposal before JCP's bid was submitted. There is evidence that Anderies saw the plaintiff's proposal when it was delivered and that she left the office shortly thereafter. It is only an unwarranted speculation that she communicated what she saw to anyone acting on behalf of JCP or that JCP had sufficient time to alter its proposal before submitting it a few hours later.

The County's preference for JCP was demonstrated by accepting the modification of the minimum standards it proposed and by accepting JCP's proposals in negotiating the final terms of the FBO contract.

The execution of the FBO contract with JCP on December 5, 2005, did not deter JetAway from pursuing an opportunity to provide FBO services. It continued to provide aircraft hangaring, a pilot lounge and related services from its offsite location until it was enjoined by the state court.

JetAway did not limit its efforts to persuasion. It filed [*10] four lawsuits against the County in January, 2006, shortly after JCP began operations. It complained to the FAA that the Airport violated the terms of the grant by granting an exclusive to JCP.

These efforts failed and as of this time JetAway's business has been shut down in consequence of the state court litigation.

JetAway contends that all of its efforts to conduct business on the Airport have been blocked by the combined efforts of the defendants to preserve an illegal monopoly.

The critical legal question in this case is whether JetAway has provided sufficient admissible evidence to support a finding that there has been an injury to competition.

The plaintiff argues that its proposal was so much better than that of JCP, the selection of the latter injured the citizenry of Montrose County financially. It further contends that the defendants' protection of JCP from later entry by JetAway has caused injury to the users of the Airport by subjecting them to higher prices and inferior services.

The plaintiff's forensic witness, Dr. Nelson, has constructed an elaborate theory of liability and damages. He has defined the relevant market as FBO services at the Airport and that may be accepted. [*11] What is most significant is his conclusion that while there may be a period of competition between two competing FBO's, for a limited time, perhaps one year, the market can sustain only one operator.

It is well established law that the anti-competitive conduct that violates the Sherman Act must have more than a temporary effect on the market. Taking all of Dr. Nelson's assumptions at face value, the net effect of his analysis is that if JetAway had been able to compete as a second FBO on equal terms with JCP the result would have been that JCP's business would fail and JetAway would be the sole survivor. In essence, the plaintiff admits that the size of the business opportunity at the Airport limits that market to a single FBO operator. Thus, their case falls within the rule that the antitrust law does not criminalize the protection of one monopolist from the aggressive efforts of another seeking to replace it.

JetAway has gone to great lengths to attempt to prove sinister motives to keep it out of the Airport. It makes much of the notes taken by Commissioner David White during two conversations with Kevin Scott after Scott left JCP and during White's exploration of his concerns about [*12] JCP's leases with the County. The plaintiff's interpretation of these notes are suggestive of manipulation of the former commissioners and the partisanship of William Patterson to control the process to ensure JCP's success.

The notes are inadmissible double hearsay. In his deposition, White could not explain his notes and the plaintiff's interpretation is not supported by Scott's testimony in his deposition. At best what is shown is favoritism toward JCP and antagonism toward JetAway, particularly Stuhmer.

It may be that the Commissioners who signed the FBO agreement with JCP did not act in the best interest of their constituents and permitted themselves to be unduly influenced by personalities. That is a matter of political concern; it is not an antitrust conspiracy.

JetAway has sued Patterson individually. He is protected from liability for damages by the Local Government Antitrust Act of 1984 (LGAA), 15 U.S.C. §§ 34-36. The plaintiff seeks to avoid that immunity by contending that Patterson's conduct was not within the scope of his official capacity. There has been a vigorous effort to prove by inference that Patterson's actions were improperly motivated by personal interest. His [*13] prior experience at the Airport with Rumble, his friendship with Rumble and his distaste for Stuhmer have been stressed.

The plaintiff argues that the die was cast for privatization and the preferred selection of JCP at a meeting with Scott and Rumble after Patterson's election and before he took office. Assuming the fairness of that interpretation, all of the actions that were necessary to accomplish the presumed plan were taken by Patterson in his official capacity. There is no evidentiary support for the suggestion that Patterson's official actions were corrupted by any presumed personal advantage.

Because the LGAA precludes a damages recovery from Montrose County, JetAway asks for injunctive relief by requiring that it be given an airport access for a competing FBO. There has been a collateral controversy in this case regarding a 9 acre site that may be developed. That, however is, in itself, a problematic matter. Compliance with the safety related requirements of the FAA and other regulatory restrictions of the County would entail such extensive involvement of this Court into the governance of Montrose County that would itself be an extension of equitable power of questionable validity [*14] under the constitutional limitations of federalism. At any rate, the relief sought is impracticable.

The Montrose County Building Authority is a Colorado Nonprofit Corporation formed for the limited purpose of holding legal title to the Airport land. It is not protected by the LGAA. It leases the Airport to the County and its non-government status was used to issue certificates of participation to obtain financing for improvements to the Airport, including the construction of an access road and an aircraft parking apron for the benefit of JCP's operation. The plaintiff protests the use of public funds for private benefit but it has not shown the illegality of these financing arrangements and there has been no showing of any active involvement of the MCBA in any of the actions claimed to be in violation of the Sherman Act.

JetAway claims damages from JCP and its principals, Kevin Egan and James Rumble as conspirators with the County and as direct actors in creating a monopoly. They defend by asserting that all of these dealings with the County are within the shield of the First Amendment under the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine.

The Supreme Court, in deciding Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991), [*15] emphasized the distinction between the purpose of the antitrust laws to protect competition in the business world and the political decisions of governmental officials even when those decisions have been infected by "selfishly motivated agreement with private interests." Id. at 383.

The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals applied Noerr-Pennington in G F Gaming Corp. V. City of Black Hawk, Colo., 405 F.3d 876 (10th Cir. 2005) and Coll v. First American Title Ins. Co., 642 F.3d 876 (10th Cir. 2011). In the latter case, the court concluded that even bribery of public officials to induce decision making with anti-competitive effect does not create an exception to this immunity. All of the conduct complained of in this case against the non-government defendants required decision making by County officials and, therefore, all of it comes within Noerr-Pennington immunity.

The defendants are entitled to summary judgment of dismissal of the claims of violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

JetAway claims a violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment because it was intentionally treated differently from JCP. This is a "class of one" claim requiring proof that the County [*16] acted arbitrarily by imposing requirements that were different from those affecting JCP for the purpose of barring JetAway's entry to the Airport. This argument has no merit. Assuming that Patterson and others were in part motivated by ill will towards Stuhmer and his company, there are a myriad of reasons for the County's preference of JCP for this business relationship. Many of those reasons are identified in the rulings of the state court that resulted in the closure of the plaintiff's through the fence operations.

The final effort to obtain some relief in this civil action is the claim that in establishing JCP's monopoly the County has imposed a burden on interstate commerce by enabling JCP to manipulate prices. This argument runs contrary to the plaintiff's contention that the relevant market for measuring competition is the local airport. There is nothing to support a finding that there has been harm to the free flow of commerce between the states.

Upon the foregoing, it is ORDERED, that the defendants' motions for summary judgment are granted. The Clerk shall enter judgment for the defendants, dismissing this civil action and for an award of costs.

HN2[] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. While § 1 could be interpreted to proscribe nearly all contracts, the U.S. Supreme Court has never taken a literal approach to its language. Rather, the U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly observed that § 1 outlaws only unreasonable restraints.

HN3[] Sherman Act, Claims

An appellate court addressing a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim generally evaluates whether a practice unreasonably restrains trade in violation of § 1 under the rule of reason. In its design and function the rule of reason distinguishes between restraints with anticompetitive effect that are harmful to the consumer and restraints stimulating competition that are in the consumer's best interest.

HN4[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

The U.S. Supreme Court has identified a small number of restraints of trade that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output, such as horizontal agreements among competitors to fix prices, or to divide markets. The court deems these restraints to be per se unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN5[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

In the case of tying claims, a per se rule is applied in some circumstances. A tying arrangement will constitute a per se violation of the Sherman Act if the plaintiff proves (1) that the defendant tied together the sale of two distinct products or services; (2) that the defendant possesses enough economic power in the tying product market to coerce its customers into purchasing the tied product; and (3) that the tying arrangement affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce in the tied product market.

HN7[] Sherman Act, Claims

In order to state a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim under the rule of reason, plaintiffs must plead four separate elements. First, plaintiffs must plead facts which, if true, will prove (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intended to harm or restrain trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations; (3) which actually injures competition. In addition to these elements, plaintiffs must also plead (4) that they were harmed by the defendant's anticompetitive contract, combination, or conspiracy, and that this harm flowed from an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny. This fourth element is generally referred to as antitrust injury or antitrust standing.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN8[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

In order to plead injury to competition, the third element of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim, sufficiently to withstand a motion to dismiss, a section one claimant may not merely recite the bare legal conclusion that competition has been restrained unreasonably. Rather, a claimant must, at a minimum, sketch the outline of the injury to competition with allegations of supporting factual detail. Such allegations must raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of an injury to competition. Thus, a complaint's allegation of a practice that may or may not injure competition is insufficient to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Where a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief. In addition, plaintiffs must plead an injury to competition beyond the impact on the plaintiffs themselves.

HN9[] Sherman Act, Claims

In sketching the outline of an injury to competition for purposes of the third element of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 analysis, the claimant must identify a contract, combination or conspiracy that has an anticompetitive effect. Courts have held that agreements between competitors in the same market (referred to as horizontal agreements) may injure competition. For example, a horizontal agreement that allocates a market between competitors and restricts each company's ability to compete for the other's business may injure competition. A horizontal agreement (either explicit or tacit) to set prices may injure competition because the result of such an agreement, if effective, is the elimination of one form of competition, namely price. Or a group of competitors may act in concert to harm another competitor or exclude that competitor from the market and thus protect dealers from real or apparent price competition from the targeted competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Courts have concluded that agreements between firms operating at different levels of a given product market (referred to as vertical agreements), such as agreements between a supplier and a distributor, may or may not cause an injury to competition. Vertical agreements that foreclose competitors from entering or competing in a market can injure competition by reducing the competitive threat those competitors would pose. Some types of vertical agreements can also injure competition by facilitating horizontal collusion. Other types of vertical agreements do not necessarily threaten an injury to competition. Such restrictions, in varying forms, are widely used in our free market economy and there is substantial scholarly and judicial authority supporting their economic utility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN11[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

"Tying" is defined as an arrangement where a supplier agrees to sell a buyer a product (the tying product), but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product. The potential injury to competition threatened by this practice is that the tying arrangement will either harm existing competitors or create barriers to entry of new competitors in the market for the tied product, or will force buyers into giving up the purchase of substitutes for the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN12[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Courts distinguish between tying arrangements in which a company exploits its market power by attempting to impose restraints on competition in the market for a tied product (which may threaten an injury to competition) and arrangements that let a company exploit its market power by merely enhancing the price of the tying product (which does not).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Market conditions may be such that a specific tying arrangement does not have anticompetitive effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Defenses

HN14[] Tying Arrangements, Defenses

When a purchaser is "forced" to buy a product he would not have otherwise bought even from another seller in the tied product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed. Where there is no competition in the tied market, there can be no antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Defenses

HN15[] Tying Arrangements, Defenses

A tying arrangement may be a response to a competitive market rather than an attempt to circumvent it. Buyers often find package sales attractive; a seller's decision to offer such packages can merely be an attempt to compete effectively—conduct that is entirely consistent with the Sherman Act. Like other vertical restraints, tying arrangements may promote rather than injure competition. The U.S. Supreme Court has made clear that manufacturer-imposed vertical restraints, even when their intent and competitive impact is to limit the freedom of the retailer to dispose of the purchased products as he desires, are often pro-competitive. While such restraints limit intrabrand competition, they may increase interbrand competition, such as by inducing retailers to engage in promotional activities or to provide services that might not be provided by retailers in a purely competitive situation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN16[] Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

A plaintiff bringing a rule of reason tying case cannot succeed in stating the third element of a Section 1 claim merely by alleging the existence of a tying arrangement, because such an arrangement is consistent with pro-competitive behavior. Intrusion upon consumers' freedom of choice by compelling the purchase of unwanted products has been implicitly rejected by the U.S. Supreme Court as a sufficient independent basis for antitrust liability. Rather, the plaintiff must allege an actual adverse effect on competition caused by the tying arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN17[] Sherman Act, Claims

Plaintiffs may not substitute allegations of injury to the claimants for allegations of injury to competition. Plaintiffs must plead antitrust injury, the fourth element necessary to state a Section 1 claim, in addition to, rather than in lieu of, injury to competition. That is, in order to state a claim successfully, plaintiffs must allege both that defendant's behavior is anticompetitive and that plaintiff has been injured by an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny. It is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition.

Specifically, to plead this element, plaintiffs must allege facts that if taken as true would allow them to recover for an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

HN19[] Sherman Act, Claims

Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To bind, to restrain, is of their very essence. Businesses may choose the manner in which they do business absent an injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN20[] Sherman Act, Claims

Allegations that an agreement has the effect of reducing consumers' choices or increasing prices to consumers does not sufficiently allege an injury to competition. Both effects are fully consistent with a free, competitive market. Even vertical agreements that directly prohibit retail price reductions, eliminating downward competitive pressure on price and thereby resulting in higher consumer prices (commonly referred to as resale price maintenance agreements), are not unlawful absent a showing of actual anticompetitive effect. Higher consumer prices can result from pro-competitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN22[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

When the seller's power is just used to maximize its return in the tying product market, where presumably its product enjoys some justifiable advantage over its competitors, the competitive ideal of the Sherman Act is not necessarily compromised.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Vertical restraints, such as resale price maintenance, should be subject to more careful scrutiny if the practice is adopted by many competitors.

Injury to competition must be alleged to state a violation of Sherman Act, specifically 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Opinion

[*1195] IKUTA, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs, a putative class of retail cable and satellite television subscribers, appeal the dismissal of the third version of their complaint against television programmers (Programmers)[1] and distributors (Distributors).[2] The complaint alleged that Programmers' practice of selling multi-channel cable packages violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. In essence, plaintiffs seek to compel programmers and distributors of television programming to sell each cable channel separately, thereby permitting plaintiffs to purchase only those channels [2] that they wish to purchase, rather than paying for multi-channel packages, as occurs under current market practice. Plaintiffs appeal the dismissal with prejudice of their complaint for failure to state a claim. We affirm.

I

The television programming industry can be divided into upstream and downstream markets. In the upstream market, programmers such as NBC Universal and Fox Entertainment Group own television programs (such as "Law and Order") and television channels (such as NBC's Bravo and MSNBC, and Fox Entertainment Group's Fox News Channel and FX) and sell them wholesale to distributors. In the downstream retail market, distributors such as Time Warner and Echostar sell the programming channels to consumers.[3]

According to plaintiffs' third amended complaint, Programmers have two categories of programming channels: "must-have" channels with high demand and a large number of viewers, and a group of less desirable, low-demand channels with low viewership. Plaintiffs allege that "[e]ach programmer defendant, because of its full or partial ownership of a broadcast channel and its ownership or control of multiple important cable channels, has a high degree of market power vis-a-vis all distributors," and that Programmers exploit this market power by requiring distributors, "as a condition to purchasing each programmer's broadcast channel and its 'must have' cable channels," to "also acquire and resell to consumers all the rest of the cable channels owned or controlled by each programmer" and "agree they will not offer unbundled [i.e., individual] cable [*1196] channels to consumers." "As a consequence," plaintiffs contend, "distributors can offer consumers only prepackaged tiers of cable channels which consist of each programmer's entire offering of channels." Plaintiffs allege that these business practices [4] impair competition among Distributors for consumer business, and therefore the Programmers and Distributors are in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs seek monetary damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15.[4] Plaintiffs also seek an injunction to compel Programmers to make channels available on an individual basis.

The district court dismissed plaintiffs' first amended complaint without prejudice on the ground that plaintiffs failed to show that their alleged injuries were caused by an injury to competition. In their second amended complaint, plaintiffs alleged that Programmers' practice of selling packaged cable channels foreclosed independent programmers from entering and competing in the upstream market for programming channels. The district court subsequently denied defendants' motion to dismiss, holding that plaintiffs had adequately pleaded injury to competition.

After preliminary discovery efforts on the question whether the Programmers' practices had excluded independent programmers from the upstream market, the plaintiffs decided to abandon this approach.[5] Pursuant to a stipulation among the parties, plaintiffs filed their third amended complaint, which deleted all allegations that the Programmers and Distributors' contractual practices foreclosed independent programmers from participating in the upstream market, along with a motion requesting the court to [6] rule that plaintiffs did not have to allege foreclosure in the upstream market in order to defeat a motion to dismiss. The parties also agreed that Programmers and Distributors could file a motion to dismiss, and that if Programmers and Distributors prevailed, this third complaint would be dismissed with prejudice. The district court entered an order on October 15, 2009 granting Programmers and Distributors' motion to dismiss the third amended complaint with prejudice because plaintiffs failed to allege any

The court may award under this section, pursuant to a motion by such person promptly made, simple interest on actual damages for the period beginning on the date of service of such person's pleading setting forth a claim under the antitrust laws and ending on the date of judgment, or for any shorter [5] period therein, if the court finds that the award of such interest for such period is just in the circumstances.

The parties have disclaimed any contention that [9] the tying practices in this case are per se antitrust violations.

1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Thus, a complaint's allegation of a practice that may or may not injure competition is insufficient to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570; see also Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557) (internal quotation marks omitted)). In addition, [11] plaintiffs must plead an injury to competition beyond the impact on the plaintiffs themselves. McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988).

HN9[] In sketching the outline of an injury to competition for purposes of this third element, the claimant must identify a contract, combination or conspiracy that has an anticompetitive effect. Courts have held that agreements between competitors in the same market (referred to as "horizontal agreements") may injure competition. For example, a horizontal agreement that allocates a market between competitors and "restrict[s] each company's ability to compete for the other's [business]" may injure competition. United States v. Brown, 936 F.2d 1042, 1045 (9th Cir. 1991). A horizontal agreement (either explicit or tacit) to set prices may injure competition because the result of such an agreement, "if effective, is the elimination of one form of competition," namely price. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 213-14, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940) (quoting United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 397, 47 S. Ct. 377, 71 L. Ed. 700 (1927)). Or a group of competitors may act in concert to harm another competitor or exclude that competitor from the market and thus [12] "protect . . . dealers from real or apparent price competition" from the targeted competitor. United States v. Gen. Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 146-47, 86 S. Ct. 1321, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1966). Plaintiffs' complaint does not allege the existence of any horizontal agreements.

HN10[] Courts have also concluded that agreements between firms operating at different levels of a given product market (referred to as "vertical agreements"), such as agreements between a supplier and a distributor, may or may not cause an injury to competition. Vertical agreements that foreclose competitors from entering or competing in a market can injure competition by reducing the competitive threat those competitors would pose. Some types of vertical agreements can also injure competition by facilitating horizontal collusion. See Leegin, 551 U.S. at 893, 897-98. Other types of vertical agreements do not necessarily threaten an injury to competition. Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 54-57, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977) ("Such restrictions, in varying forms, are widely used in our free market economy" and "there is substantial scholarly and judicial authority supporting their economic utility.").

[*1199] The complaint in this case focuses on a type of vertical [13] agreement that creates a restraint known as "tying." HN11[] Tying is defined as an arrangement where a supplier agrees to sell a buyer a product (the tying product), but "only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product . . . ." N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). The potential injury to competition threatened by this practice is that the tying arrangement will either "harm existing competitors or create barriers to entry of new competitors in the market for the tied product," Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 14, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984), abrogated in part on other grounds by Ill. Tool Works Inc. v. Indep. Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006); Cascade, 515 F.3d at 912, or will "force buyers into giving up the purchase of substitutes for the tied product," United States v. Loew's, 371 U.S. 38, 45, 83 S. Ct. 97, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11 (1962), abrogated in part on other grounds by Ill. Tool Works, 547 U.S. 28, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26.

But HN12[] courts distinguish between tying arrangements in which a company exploits its market power by attempting "to impose restraints on competition in the market for a tied product" (which may threaten an injury to competition) and arrangements that let a company exploit its market [14] power "by merely enhancing the price of the tying product" (which does not). Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14. For example, in Blough v. Holland Realty, Inc., we concluded that an alleged tying arrangement did not threaten an injury to competition. 574 F.3d 1084, 1088 (9th Cir. 2009). In that case, plaintiffs entered into contracts with defendant-homebuilders to purchase undeveloped lots plus newly constructed homes. In order to purchase the developed lots, plaintiffs were required to pay a percentage fee to defendant-realtors on top of the purchase price. Id. Plaintiffs alleged that the homebuilders were unlawfully tying the realtors' services to the sale of developed lots in violation of the Sherman Act. Id. We disagreed, holding that because the plaintiffs would not have otherwise purchased realtor services, the percentage fee was best viewed as part of the cost of purchasing the developed lot. Id. at 1090.

Further, HN13[] market conditions may be such that a specific tying arrangement does not have anticompetitive effects. See Driskill v. Dall. Cowboys Football Club, Inc., 498 F.2d 321, 323 (5th Cir. 1974). For example, in Driskill, the plaintiff alleged that defendant, the Dallas Cowboys, [15] had unlawfully tied the sale of undesirable preseason tickets to the sale of season ticket packages. Id. at 322. But the court noted that the Dallas Cowboys had a lawful monopoly in the market for the tied product, preseason tickets, so the tying arrangement could not adversely affect competition in the tied product market; there was no competition to affect. Id. at 323. As the Supreme Court has noted, HN14[] "when a purchaser is 'forced' to buy a product he would not have otherwise bought even from another seller in the tied product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16; see also Blough, 574 F.3d at 1090 ("'[W]here there is no competition in the tied market, there can be no antitrust violation.'" (quoting Reifert v. S. Cent. Wis. MLS Corp., 450 F.3d 312, 318 (7th Cir. 2006))).

Indeed, courts have noted that HN15[] a tying arrangement may be a response to a competitive market rather than an attempt to circumvent it. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12 ("Buyers often find package sales attractive; a seller's decision to offer such packages [16] can merely [*1200] be an attempt to compete effectively—conduct that is entirely consistent with the Sherman Act."). Like other vertical restraints, tying arrangements may promote rather than injure competition. See Continental, 433 U.S. at 54-57 (1977) (identifying ways in which non-price vertical restraints may benefit competition); Leegin, 551 U.S. at 895-96 (noting that even though vertical price restraints can lead to higher prices, "prices can be increased in the course of promoting pro-competitive effects"). In Continental, the Supreme Court made clear that manufacturer-imposed vertical restraints, even when their "intent and competitive impact" is to "limit[ ] the freedom of the retailer to dispose of the purchased products as he desire[s]," are often pro-competitive. 433 U.S. at 46, 54-55. While such restraints limit intrabrand competition, they may increase interbrand competition, such as by "induc[ing] retailers to engage in promotional activities or to provide service[s]" that "might not be provided by retailers in a purely competitive situation." Id. at 55.

Therefore,HN16[] a plaintiff bringing a rule of reason tying case cannot succeed in stating the third element of a Section 1 claim [17] merely by alleging the existence of a tying arrangement, because such an arrangement is consistent with pro-competitive behavior. See Hirsh v. Martindale-Hubbell, Inc., 674 F.2d 1343, 1349 n.19 (9th Cir. 1982) ("[I]ntru[sion] upon consumers' freedom of choice by compelling the purchase of unwanted products . . . has been implicitly rejected by the Supreme Court as a sufficient independent basis for antitrust liability."). Rather, the plaintiff must allege an "actual adverse effect on competition" caused by the tying arrangement. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 31.

HN17[] Plaintiffs may not substitute allegations of injury to the claimants for allegations of injury to competition. Plaintiffs must plead "antitrust injury," the fourth element necessary to state a Section 1 claim, in addition to, rather than in lieu of, injury to competition. See Atl. Richfield, 495 U.S at 334-35, 344. That is, in order to state a claim successfully, plaintiffs must allege both that defendant's behavior is anticompetitive and that plaintiff has been injured by an "anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny." Id. at 334 ("[I]t is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from [18] continued competition." (quoting Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 109-10, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986))). Specifically, to plead this element, plaintiffs must allege facts that if taken as true would allow them to recover for "an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc., 182 F.3d 1096, 1102 (9th Cir. 1999) (quoting Atl. Richfield, 495 U.S. at 334) (internal quotation marks omitted).

III

We consider whether plaintiffs have stated a Section 1 claim in their third amended complaint in light of these principles. The key issue raised by this appeal is whether plaintiffs have adequately pleaded that the alleged Programmer-Distributor agreements actually injure competition.

There is no dispute that the complaint alleges the existence of a tying arrangement. In fact, according to the plaintiffs' complaint, the Programmer-Distributor agreements at issue consist of two separate tying arrangements. First, in the [*1201] upstream market, each Programmer requires each Distributor that wishes to purchase that Programmer's high-demand channels (the tying product) to purchase all [19] of that Programmer's low-demand channels (the tied product) as well.[8] Second, in the downstream market, Distributors sell consumers cable channels only in packages consisting of each Programmer's entire offering of channels. Thus, consumers, like Distributors, are allegedly required to purchase each Programmer's low-demand channels, which they do not want (the tied product), in order to gain access to that Programmer's high-demand channels, which they do want (the tying product).

But as explained above, HN18[] tying arrangements, without more, do not necessarily threaten an injury to competition. Therefore, the complaint's allegations regarding the two separate tying arrangements do not, by themselves, constitute a sufficient allegation of injury to competition. Rather, plaintiffs must also allege facts showing that an injury to competition flows from these tying arrangements. [20] We conclude that such allegations are not present in the complaint.

First, it is clear that the complaint does not allege the types of injuries to competition that are typically alleged to flow from tying arrangements. The complaint does not allege that Programmers' practice of selling "must-have" and low-demand channels in packages excludes other sellers of low-demand channels from the market, or that this practice raises barriers to entry into the programming market.[9] Nor do the plaintiffs allege that the tying arrangement here causes consumers to forego the purchase of substitutes for the tied product. Loew's, 371 U.S. at 45. Nothing in the complaint indicates that the arrangement between the Programmers and Distributors forces Distributors or consumers to forego the purchase of alternative low-demand channels. Cf. id. Indeed, Plaintiffs disavow any intent to allege that the practices engaged in by Programmers and Distributors foreclosed rivals from entering or participating in the upstream or downstream markets. Cf. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14; Cascade, 515 F.3d at 912 ("Tying arrangements are forbidden on the theory that, if the seller has market power over the tying product, [21] the seller can leverage this market power through tying arrangements to exclude other sellers of the tied product."). Nor does the complaint allege that the tying arrangements pose a threat to competition because they facilitate horizontal collusion. See Leegin, 551 U.S. at 893, 897-98.

Instead of identifying such standard-issue threats to competition, the complaint alleges that the injury to competition stems from Programmers' requirement that channels must be sold to consumers in packages. According to the complaint, the required sale of multi-channel packages harms consumers by (1) limiting the manner in which Distributors compete with one another in that Distributors are unable to offer a la carte programming, which results in (2) reducing consumer choice, and (3) increasing prices. These assertions do not sufficiently allege an injury to competition for purposes of stating a Section 1 claim. First, because Section 1 does not proscribe all contracts [*1202] that limit the freedom of the contracting parties, a statement that parties have entered into a contract that limits some freedom of action (in [22] this case, by circumscribing the distributors' ability to offer smaller packages or channels on an unbundled basis) is not sufficient to allege an injury to competition. See Continental, 433 U.S. at 46, 54-55; Bd. of Trade, 246 U.S. at 238 ("HN19[] Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To bind, to restrain, is of their very essence."). Businesses may choose the manner in which they do business absent an injury to competition.[10] See Pac. Bell Tel. Co. v. Linkline Commc'ns, Inc., 555 U.S. 438, 448, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009). Therefore, the mere allegations that Programmers have

[8] We assume for purposes of this opinion, without deciding, that high-demand and low-demand channels are actually separate products, and do not address the question whether it is more apt to view each Programmer's block of channels as a single product, which would preclude any argument that there was an illegal tying arrangement.

[9] Thus, there is effectively "zero foreclosure" of competitors. Blough, 574 F.3d at 1090-91.

[10] A rule to the contrary could cast doubt on whether musicians would be free to sell their hit singles only as a part of a full album, or writers to sell a collection of short stories. Indeed, such a rule would call into question whether Programmers and Distributors could sell cable channels at all, since such channels are themselves packages of separate television programs.

chosen to limit the ability of Distributors to offer Programmers' channels for sale individually does not state a cognizable injury to competition.

Second, HN20[] allegations that an agreement has the effect of reducing consumers' choices or [23] increasing prices to consumers does not sufficiently allege an injury to competition. Both effects are fully consistent with a free, competitive market. See Leegin, 551 U.S. at 895-97; Continental, 433 U.S. at 55. Even vertical agreements that directly prohibit retail price reductions, eliminating downward competitive pressure on price and thereby resulting in higher consumer prices (commonly referred to as resale price maintenance agreements), are not unlawful absent a showing of actual anticompetitive effect. See Leegin, 551 U.S. at 895. As Leegin explained, higher consumer prices can result from pro-competitive conduct. Id. at 895-97. Had the plaintiffs succeeded in pleading an injury to competition, the complaint's allegations of reduced choice (due to the inability to purchase a la carte programming) and increased prices would sufficiently plead the fourth element of a Section 1 claim, namely that they had been harmed by the challenged injury to competition. But here, these allegations show only that plaintiffs have been harmed as a result of the practices at issue, not that those practices are anticompetitive.[11] Therefore, these allegations do not, without more, allege an injury [24] to competition "that is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570.

Plaintiffs disagree, and argue that under the rule in Loew's, 371 U.S. 38, 83 S. Ct. 97, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11, and Ross v. Bank of America, N.A. (USA), 524 F.3d 217 (2d Cir. 2008), they have sufficiently alleged an injury to competition by alleging that the agreements have the effect of reducing choice and increasing prices. This argument is unavailing. In Loew's, the United States brought antitrust actions against six major film distributors, alleging that the defendants had conditioned [25] the license or sale of one or more feature films upon the acceptance [*1203] by television stations of a package or block containing one or more unwanted or inferior films. Id. at 40. The Court observed that the restraint injured competition because the movie studios' block booking forced the television stations to forego purchases of movies from other distributors. Id. at 49. The relevant injury in Loew's was to competition, not to the ultimate consumers, because the challenged practice forced television stations to forego the purchase of other movies, and therefore created barriers to entry for competing movie owners. Cf. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14. Here, Plaintiffs have not alleged that the contracts between Programmers and Distributors forced either Distributors or consumers to forego the purchase of other low-demand channels (a result analogous to the competitive injury in Loew's), but only that consumers could not purchase programs a la carte and they did not want all of the channels they were required to buy from Distributors. HN21[] "[C]ompelling the purchase of unwanted products" is not itself an injury to competition. Hirsh, 674 F.2d at 1349 n.19. We have explained why this is so:

> In [26] order to obtain desired product A, let us suppose, the defendant's customer is forced to take product B, which it does not want, cannot use, and would not have purchased from anyone. This is typically the equivalent of a higher price for product A. From the viewpoint of the defendant seller, its revenue on product A consists of the A price plus the excess of the B price over B's cost to the seller. From the viewpoint of the customer, the cost of obtaining the desired product A is the nominal A price plus the excess of the B price over its salvage value. This has nothing to do with gaining power in the B market or upsetting competition there.

Blough, 574 F.3d at 1089-90 (quoting IX Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1724b, at 270 (2004 & Supp. 2009)); see also Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14 ("HN22[] When the seller's power is just used to maximize its return in the tying product market, where presumably its product enjoys some justifiable advantage over its competitors, the competitive ideal of the Sherman Act is not necessarily compromised."). Nor does plaintiffs' citation to Ross support their argument; that case involved allegations of horizontal collusion, which has [27] not been alleged by plaintiffs in this case, and pertained to standing, not injury to competition. 524 F.3d at 223, 225.

[11] Plaintiffs claim that Theme Promotions, Inc. v. News America Marketing FSI, 546 F.3d 991, 1004 (9th Cir. 2008), supports their argument that reduced consumer choice and increased prices are sufficient to establish an injury to competition. Plaintiffs are mistaken: Theme Promotions held only that such injuries, when they are the result of an anticompetitive practice, constitute antitrust injury, not that any practice causing such harms was anticompetitive. Rather, the injury to competition in Theme Promotions was that plaintiff 's right-of-first-refusal agreements had "foreclosed competition in a substantial share of [the] market." Id. at 1001-03. The case is inapposite.

Plaintiffs also contend that because most or all Programmers and Distributors engage in the challenged practice, we should hold that in the aggregate, the practice constitutes an injury to competition. We cannot rule out the possibility that competition could be injured or reduced due to a widely applied practice that harms consumers. See Leegin, 551 U.S. at 897 (indicating that HN23[] vertical restraints, such as resale price maintenance, "should be subject to more careful scrutiny" if the practice is adopted by many competitors). But the plaintiffs here have not alleged in their complaint how competition (rather than consumers) is injured by the widespread practice of packaging low- and high-demand channels.[12] The complaint did not allege that Programmers' sale of cable channels in packages [*1204] has any effect on other programmers' efforts to produce competitive programming channels or on Distributors' competition as to cost and quality of service. Nor is there any allegation that any programmer's decision to offer its channels only in packages constrained other programmers [28] from offering their channels individually if that practice was competitively advantageous. In sum, the complaint does not include any allegation of injury to competition, as opposed to injuries to the plaintiffs. See also Abcor Corp. v. AM Int'l, Inc., 916 F.2d 924, 930-31 (4th Cir. 1990) (finding that aggregating a defendant's acts, none of which was anticompetitive individually, did not demonstrate an injury to competition).

IV

HN24[] Injury to competition must be alleged to state a violation of Sherman Act § 1. Kendall, 518 F.3d at 1047. Plaintiffs' complaint does not allege facts that "raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of" injury to competition. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 566. Thus, plaintiffs' complaint did not allege facts that, taken as true, "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570. [29] Dismissal was proper.

AFFIRMED.

End of Document

[12] Indeed, because Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that the restraints at issue in this case were imposed by Programmers, not Distributors, Leegin suggests that any competitive threat is diminished. 551 U.S. at 898 ("If . . . a manufacturer adopted the policy independent of retailer pressure, the restraint is less likely to promote anticompetitive conduct.").

CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

Proceedings: (IN CHAMBERS) Order Re: Plaintiff's Motion to Dismiss Counterclaims of Counterclaimants Deyon K. Davis, Deyon Davis Music, and Cinematic Tunes, Inc. (DE 49)

I. INTRODUCTION

On December 30, 2010, Broadcast Music, Inc. ("BMI") filed a Complaint against Deyon K. Davis ("Davis"); Deyon Davis Music; Cinematic Tunes, Inc.; and five other individuals (collectively, "Defendants") alleging various causes of action under California law. On October 13, 2011, BMI filed a First Amended Complaint ("FAC"). The allegations in the Complaint center around Defendants' alleged conspiracy to obtain unearned royalty payments.

On December 2, 2011, Davis, Deyon Davis Music, and Cinematic Tunes, Inc. (collectively, "Counterclaimants") filed a Counterclaim against BMI for (1) breach of contract, (2) breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, (3) conversion, (4) negligent misrepresentation, (5) negligence, (6) violation of California Business & Professions Code § 17200 et seq., (7) rescission, and (8) declaratory relief. Subsequently, BMI filed a Motion to Dismiss ("Motion") [*2] Counterclaimants' Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Counterclaims pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("Rule") 12(b)(6). Counterclaimants neither opposed BMI's Motion nor filed a Notice of Non-Opposition. Instead, Counterclaimants filed an untimely First Amended Counterclaim, which was later stricken by the Court.

Presently before the Court is BMI's Motion to Dismiss the above-mentioned counterclaims as pleaded in the original Counterclaim. For the following reasons, the Court GRANTS BMI's Motion.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The following facts are taken from the Counterclaim and are construed in the light most favorable to the Counterclaimants.

A. BMI Is a Performance Rights Organization

BMI, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers ("ASCAP"), and the Society of European Stage Authors & Composers ("SESAC") are three United States performance rights organizations ("PROs"). Generally, PROs license copyrighted works for public performances and pay royalties to the copyright owners.

BMI describes itself as a nonprofit organization that collects performance royalties for writers and publishers, and distributes the royalties after deducting a portion for operating expenses.

B. Davis and BMI Enter into Various Affiliation [*3] Agreements

Davis, individually and through his businesses, Deyon Davis Music and Cinematic Tunes, entered into three affiliation agreements with BMI.

First, on June 29, 1992, Davis, a songwriter and entrepreneur, executed a BMI standard affiliate agreement for songwriters (the "Writer Agreement"). Pursuant to the Writer Agreement, Davis granted BMI the right to license his copyrighted works for public performances. In exchange, BMI agreed to track the public performances of Davis's works and pay Davis royalties for those performances. Specifically, BMI agreed to use its "then current system of computing the number of [public] performances" of Davis's copyrighted works to estimate the amount of royalties owed to him. (Countercl. ¶ 22.)

Second, on May 23, 1995, through the fictitious business name Deyon Davis Music ("DDM"), Davis executed a BMI standard affiliate agreement for music publishers (the "DDM Agreement"). Pursuant to the DDM Agreement, Davis assigned to BMI the right to license public performances of works in which Davis owned a copyright interest. The terms of the DDM Agreement were substantially similar to the terms of the Writer Agreement.

Finally, in 2007, Davis formed Cinematic [*4] Tunes, Inc. ("CTI") to serve as a music publisher for songwriters with whom he had become acquainted. On February 14, 2008, CTI entered into a BMI standard affiliate agreement for music publishers (the "CTI Agreement"). Pursuant to the CTI Agreement, CTI granted BMI the right to license its copyrighted works for public performances. The terms of the CTI Agreement were also substantially similar to the terms of the Writer Agreement and the DDM Agreement.

According to Counterclaimants, the terms of the Writer Agreement, the DDM Agreement, and the CTI Agreement (collectively, the "Affiliation Agreements") led them to believe that BMI could accurately track the public performances of their copyrighted works.

C. BMI Discovers Inaccurate Cue Sheets and Commences an Investigation

In June 2010, BMI contacted Counterclaimants on the belief that it had overpaid them more than $1 million in royalties for two seasons of the television series So You Think You Can Dance and one season of the television show Superstars of Dance. To accurately determine royalty payments owed to its affiliates, BMI relies on "cue sheets" — records prepared by media producers that list every musical composition used in [*5] a particular broadcast and the nature of each use. BMI claimed its reliance on incorrect cue sheets had resulted in overpayment and demanded that Counterclaimants immediately repay the excess funds. Max Golay ("Golay"), an employee of the producers of So You Think You Can Dance and Superstars of Dance, an acquaintance of Davis, and one of the songwriters represented by CTI confessed to altering the cue sheets and implicated Davis in a fraudulent scheme to submit falsified cue sheets for those shows.

Subsequently, BMI investigated other possible overpayments to Counterclaimants by contacting representatives of various networks and production companies, with whom Golay had no connection or affiliation. According to Counterclaimants, this investigation inflicted irreparable harm to their business and reputation. On June 20, 2010, BMI advised Counterclaimants that it would not pay them any royalties until BMI completed its investigation and was repaid for the overpayments. Counterclaimants allege that BMI's decision to withhold subsequently earned royalties violated the mandatory procedure for resolution of royalty disputes as contained in the Affiliation Agreements.

III. JUDICIAL STANDARD [*6]

A party may move to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a court must take the allegations in the challenged complaint as true and construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996). However, a court need not accept as true unreasonable inferences, unwarranted deductions of fact, or conclusory legal allegations cast in the form of factual allegations. See W. Mining Council v. Watt, 643 F.2d 618, 624 (9th Cir. 1981). A pleading must contain sufficient factual matter that, if accepted as true, states a claim that is plausible on its face. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). A claim is facially plausible when there are sufficient factual allegations to draw a "reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id.

When a plaintiff has alleged a claim for fraud, the pleadings must meet the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) to survive a motion to dismiss. Rule 9(b) requires that "the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity" but intent "may be averred generally." In the Ninth Circuit, Rule 9(b) has been interpreted to require allegations of fraud to "state the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties [*7] to the misrepresentation." Schreiber Distrib. Co. Serv-Well Furniture Co., 806 F.2d 1393, 1401 (9th Cir. 1986).

IV. DISCUSSION

BMI has moved to dismiss the counterclaims for conversion, negligent misrepresentation, negligence, violation of California Business & Professions Code § 17200 et seq., and rescission. The Court will address each of the contested counterclaims in turn.

A. Conversion

First, BMI argues that Counterclaimants' conversion claim is synonymous with their breach of contract claim and should be dismissed. The Court agrees.

To state a claim for conversion, a plaintiff must prove: (1) the plaintiff's ownership or right to possession of the property; (2) the defendant's conversion by a wrongful act or disposition of property rights; and (3) damages. Burlesci v. Petersen, 68 Cal. App. 4th 1062, 1065, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 704 (Ct. App. 1998).

Counterclaimants fail to allege sufficient facts as to their ownership of the property. Counterclaimants allege that they are "owners or possessors of personal property — i.e., copyright royalty payments earned by Counterclaimants pursuant to the [Affiliation] Agreements." (emphasis added) (Countercl. ¶ 54.) They allege that BMI interfered with their right of possession by withholding those payments. "However, a mere contractual right of payment, without more, does not entitle the obligee to the immediate possession necessary to establish a cause of action for the [*8] tort of conversion." In re Bailey, 197 F.3d 997, 1000 (9th Cir. 1999) (citing Imperial Valley Co. v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., 187 Cal. 352, 202 P. 129 (1921)). In California, "conduct amounting to a breach of contract becomes tortious only when it also violates a duty independent of the contract arising from principles of tort law." Erlich v. Menezes, 21 Cal. 4th 543, 551, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 886, 981 P.2d 978 (1999).

Here, Counterclaimants' sole basis for establishing a claim to ownership of the royalty payments is BMI's contractual obligation to pay Counterclaimants those amounts. BMI's alleged failure to do so may constitute breach of contract, but not conversion. Additionally, Counterclaimants do not allege that BMI's conduct in withholding their royalty payments violates a duty independent of the Affiliation Agreements. Therefore, the Court finds that Counterclaimants fail to state a claim for conversion.

B. Negligent Misrepresentation

Next, BMI argues that Counterclaimants fail to allege sufficient facts to state a claim for negligent misrepresentation. The Court agrees.

Negligent misrepresentation requires "(1) a misrepresentation of a past or existing material fact, (2) without reasonable grounds for believing it to be true, (3) with intent to induce another's reliance on the fact misrepresented, (4) ignorance of the truth and justifiable reliance thereon by the party to whom the misrepresentation [*9] was directed, and (5) damages." Fox v. Pollack, 181 Cal. App. 3d 954, 962, 226 Cal. Rptr. 532 (Ct. App. 1986). Claims that are "grounded in fraud" or "sound in fraud" must satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b). Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103-04 (9th Cir. 2003). Negligent misrepresentation is grounded in fraud, therefore a party pleading it must meet the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b). See, e.g., Neilson v. Union Bank of Cal., N.A., 290 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1141 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (citing Glen Holly Entm't, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 100 F. Supp. 2d 1086, 1093 (C.D. Cal. 1999).

To the extent that Counterclaimants rely on statements outside of the Affiliation Agreements to support their negligent misrepresentation claim, their claim fails for failure to comply with the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b). Counterclaimants simply allege that "BMI [falsely] represented to Counterclaimants that BMI could accurately track the public performance of their music on television." (Countercl. ¶ 60.) These allegations fail to satisfy the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) because Counterclaimant fail to state the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation. See Schreiber Distrib. Co. Serv-Well Furniture Co., 806 F.2d 1393, 1401 (9th Cir. 1986).

To the extent that Counterclaimants allege that the terms of the Affiliation Agreements constitute a misrepresentation, they fail to state an independent tort under California law. In California, "the duty that gives rise to tort liability [must be] either [*10] completely independent of the contract or arise[] from conduct which is both intentional and intended to harm." Erlich, 21 Cal. 4th at 552. Counterclaimants recite various terms of the Affiliation Agreements and allege that these terms led them to believe that BMI could accurately track the public performances of their copyrighted works. However, merely reciting various terms of a contract, without more, is insufficient to state an independent tort claim. See id.

In light of the foregoing, the Court finds that Counterclaimants fail to adequately allege a claim for negligent misrepresentation.

C. Negligence

Counterclaimants base their negligence claim on two distinct theories of liability. The Court will examine each theory in turn.

First, Counterclaimants allege that BMI had a duty to use reasonable care when investigating allegations of fraud or overpayments against Counterclaimants and it breached that duty by conducting an improper investigation.

However, Counterclaimants fail to allege sufficient facts to properly allege a claim for negligence. The well-known elements of a negligence claim are: (1) duty, (2) breach of duty, (3) legal causation, and (4) damages. Friedman v. Merck & Co., 107 Cal. App. 4th 454, 463, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 885 (Ct. App. 2003). "The existence of a duty is a question of law [*11] for the court." Kentucky Fried Chicken of Cal., Inc. v. Super. Ct., 14 Cal. 4th 814, 819, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 756, 927 P.2d 1260 (1997). In considering whether the defendant owes plaintiff a legal duty, courts consider the following factors: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant and community if a duty of care and liability for breach are imposed; and (7) the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved. Thompson v. Cnty. of Alameda, 27 Cal. 3d 741, 750, 167 Cal. Rptr. 70, 614 P.2d 728 (1980).

Counterclaimants' only factual allegations indicating the existence of a legal duty owed by BMI are based on the "virtue of the parties' relationship." However, Counterclaimants fail to explain how this relationship creates a duty of care. The only relationship between the parties is a contractual one, and as previously discussed, "the duty that gives rise to tort liability [must be] either completely independent of the contract or arise[] from conduct which is both intentional and intended to harm." Erlich, 21 Cal. 4th at 552. Here, there is no allegation of a duty independent of the contractual [*12] relationship between the parties. Furthermore, Counterclaimants fail to provide any authority indicating that a legal duty arises in situations similar to the one here, and the Court is not aware of any such authority. In the absence of such authority, the Court declines to impose a duty of care on BMI. See, e.g., Baugh v. CBS, Inc., 828 F. Supp. 745, 758 (N.D.Cal.1993) (declining to find a duty of care where "[p]laintiffs provide[d] no authority for the proposition that a legal duty arises in [their specific] situation and the Court [was] not aware of any such authority."). Accordingly, Counterclaimants' first theory of liability fails.

Second, Counterclaimants allege that BMI had a duty to exercise reasonable care in tracking public performances of compositions covered by the Affiliation Agreements, and it breached that duty by failing to employ reasonable procedures to ensure and promote the accurate tracking of public performances of Counterclaimants' copyrighted works. (Countercl. ¶¶ 67-68.) To support the existence of this duty, Counterclaimants recite various terms of the Affiliation Agreements, which require BMI to calculate, using its own methods, the amount of royalty Counterclaimants should receive for their copyrighted works. [*13] Again, Counterclaimants' arguments make it clear that BMI's only "duty" to exercise reasonable care in tracking the public performances of Counterclaimants' copyrighted works is a contractual obligation. BMI's alleged breach of that duty does not support an independent negligence claim. Accordingly, Counterclaimants' second theory of liability also fails because Counterclaimants fail to allege that BMI had a duty of care independent of the Affiliation Agreements. See Erlich, 21 Cal. 4th at 552.

In light of the foregoing, the Court finds that Counterclaimants fail to state a claim for negligence.

D. Violation of California Business and Professions Code § 17200

To bring a claim under California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), codified in California Business & Professions Code § 17200 et seq.[1], a plaintiff must allege an "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice." A business practice may be unfair or fraudulent in violation of § 17200 even if the practice does not violate any law. Olszewski v. Scripps Health, 30 Cal. 4th 798, 827, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 69 P.3d 927 (2003). Counterclaimants' §

[1] Unless otherwise indicated, all section references are to the California Business & Professions Code.

17200 claim is based on allegations of both unfair and fraudulent conduct; the Court will analyze each theory in turn.

1. Unfair Business Practices

In California, a UCL claim may be predicated on a breach of contract, provided the breach of contract also constitutes conduct that is unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent. [*14] Puentes v. Wells Fargo Home Mortg., Inc., 160 Cal. App. 4th 638, 645, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 903 (Ct. App. 2008).

California courts have defined unfair business practices in two separate contexts. In the context of consumer actions, a California Court of Appeal has held that "an 'unfair' business practice occurs when it offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." S. Bay Chevrolet v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 72 Cal. App. 4th 861, 886-87, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301 (Ct. App. 1999). However in a later decision, the California Supreme Court rejected the balancing test of South Bay in suits involving unfairness to the defendant's competitors and held that in those instances unfair means "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). Recognizing that California's unfair competition law is in a flux, the Ninth Circuit has held that district courts may apply either of these tests to determine whether a business practice is unfair. Lozano v. AT & T Wireless Servs., Inc., 504 F.3d 718, 736 (9th Cir. 2007).

Because BMI is a nonprofit organization, this case is neither a consumer action nor an action between two competitors. Nonetheless, § 17200 is sufficiently broad to reach the activities [*15] of nonprofit organizations such as BMI. See e.g., Bondanza v. Peninsula Hosp. & Med. Ctr., 23 Cal. 3d 260, 266, 152 Cal. Rptr. 446, 590 P.2d 22 (1979). In the absence of further guidance, the Court is left with the standards articulated in South Bay and Cel-Tech to determine whether a particular business practice is unfair in the context of this case.

Here, Counterclaimants allege that BMI's decision to withhold Counterclaimants' payments while investigating the royalty dispute forms part of an unfair business practice. Counterclaimants' allegations amount only to a breach of contract. They make no allegations as to how this breach of contract is also unfair either as it relates to antitrust laws or as to the South Bay balancing test. Therefore, the Court finds that Counterclaimants' factual allegations are not sufficient to state a claim under the unfairness prong of the UCL.

2. Fraudulent Business Practices

Under California's UCL, fraudulent conduct "requires a showing [that] members of the public are likely to be deceived." Saunders v. Super. Ct., 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 839, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1994) (internal quotation marks omitted). Moreover, claims alleging fraudulent conduct under § 17200 must satisfy the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b). Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103-04 (9th Cir. 2003). Counterclaimants allege that "BMI holds itself out to the public as a not-for-profit corporation primarily motivated [*16] by the desire to serve and advance the interests of writers and publishers." (Countercl. ¶ 71.) Additionally, Counterclaimants allege that BMI's statements "imply that [BMI] is as protective of writer's and publishers' rights as ASCAP and SESAC." (emphasis added) (Id.) These statements, Counterclaimants allege, are likely to deceive members of the public into affiliating with BMI, rather than ASCAP or SESAC.

Counterclaimants' allegations fail to state a claim for several reasons. Counterclaimants fail to state the time, place, and specific content of the misleading statements. Moreover, although Counterclaimants believe that BMI falsely represented itself to be as protective of writers' and publishers' rights as ASCAP and SESAC, Counterclaimants fail to plead any facts supporting this allegation. There is no fact that suggests BMI has ever compared its operations to those of ASCAP's or SESAC's. Therefore, the Court finds that the alleged misleading statements cannot serve as a predicate for Counterclaimants' UCL claim.

In light of the foregoing, the Court finds that Counterclaimants fail to state a plausible UCL claim.

E. Rescission

Finally, BMI argues that Counterclaimants' rescission [*17] claim also fails for failure to state a claim. The Court agrees.

California law permits a party to a contract to rescind the contract if, among other things, that party's consent was given by mistake or if the consideration for the obligation of that party fails, in whole or in part, through the fault of the party against whom rescission is sought. Cal. Civ. Code §§ 1689(b)(1)-(2). Counterclaimants argue that when Davis entered into the Affiliation Agreements, he mistakenly believed that BMI could accurately track the public performances of his copyrighted works. In addition, Counterclaimants allege that, by withholding royalty payments from Counterclaimants, BMI has caused the consideration for Davis's obligations under the Affiliation Agreements to fail.

Generally, when a party has been injured by a breach of contract, that party can choose either to treat the contract as rescinded and recover damages resulting from the rescission or to treat the contract as repudiated by the other party and recover damages to which he would have been entitled to under the contract. Alder v. Drudis 30 Cal. 2d 372, 381-82, 182 P.2d 195 (1947). An action for rescission is to undo the contract and place the parties in the position they were in prior to entering into the contract, whereas an [*18] action for breach of contract presumes the existence of the contract and allows a party to collect damages under the contract. See Akin v. Certain Underwriters At Lloyd's London, 140 Cal. App. 4th 291, 296, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 284 (2006). These two actions are alternative remedies and "the election of one bars recovery under the other." Id.

In this case, Counterclaimants are bringing a claim both for breach of contract and recession. Counterclaimants seek to retain the benefits of the Affiliation Agreements (i.e., royalty payments under those agreements), which the Court construes as an affirmation of those contracts. See Id. at 297. Therefore, Counterclaimants are barred from seeking recovery under their recession cause of action. Id. at 296.

In light of the following, the Court finds that Counterclaimants fail to state a claim for rescission.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS BMI's Motion.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER REGARDING MOTIONS TO DISMISS FILED BY HOSPITAL DEFENDANTS

I. BACKGROUND/FACTS

On January 21, 2011, Plaintiff [*4] City of Pontiac ("City of Pontiac") filed a proposed class action against Defendants Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan ("Blue Cross") and twenty-two hospitals: Ascension Health, Genesys Regional Medical Center, St. Mary's of Michigan Medical Center, St. Joseph Health System, Borgess Health d/b/a/ Borgess Medical Center, St. John Providence Health System d/b/a St. John Hospital & Medical Center; St. John Providence Health System d/b/a Southfield Providence Hospital, St. John Providence Health System d/b/a Providence Park Hospital-Novi, St. John Providence Health System d/b/a/ St. John Hospital-North Shore Campus, St. John Providence Health System d/b/a St. John Macomb-Oakland Hospital, St. John Providence Health System d/b/a St. John River District Hospital-East China, Botsford Hospital, Covenant HealthCare d/b/a Covenant Medical Center, Gratiot Community Hospital, Marquette General Health System d/b/a Marquette General Hospital, Metro Health d/b/a Metro Health Hospital, MidMichigan Health d/b/a MidMichigan Medical Center-Midland, Munson Healthcare d/b/a Munson Medical Center, Sparrow Health System d/b/a Sparrow Hospital, William Beaumont Hospital-Royal Oak, William Beaumont Hospital-Troy, [*5] and William Beaumont Hospital-Grosse Pointe (collectively, "Hospital Defendants"). The Complaint alleges: Unlawful Conspiracy and Agreements in Violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act (Count I); Violations of the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act, M.C.L.A. § 445.772 (Count II); and, Unjust Enrichment (Count III).

Plaintiff claims that, since 2007, Blue Cross and the 22 Hospital Defendants have illegally contracted, conspired and engaged in anti-competitive conduct, including the execution and enforcement of a special type of "most favored nation" clause known as an "MFN-Plus" contract. (Comp., ¶ 1) The "MFN-plus" contract requires each of the Hospital Defendants to charge higher prices for hospital services to non-Blue Cross purchasers and insureds by fixed percentages ranging from 23% to 39%. (Comp., ¶ 1) The "MFN-plus" agreements have harmed competition by: 1) reducing the ability of other health insurers to compete with Blue Cross, or actually excluding Blue Cross' competitors in certain markets; 2) raising the prices for hospital services paid by Blue Cross' competitors and by all non-Blue Cross purchasers and insureds; and/or 3) by fixing and inflating the prices the Hospital Defendants

[*6] charge for hospital services. (Comp., ¶ 1) The City of Pontiac alleges that the "MFN-plus" agreements are per se violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and Section 2 of the Michigan Antitrust Reform act, M.C.L.A. § 445.772 and have unlawfully fixed prices and restrained trade throughout the relevant markets. (Comp., ¶ 2)

Blue Cross is the largest provider of commercial health insurance in Michigan, covering more than three million Michigan residents, more than 60% of the commercially insured population. (Comp., ¶ 3) Blue Cross insures more than nine times as many Michigan residents as its next largest commercial health insurance competitor, with revenues in excess of $10 billion in 2009 and has market power in the sale of commercial health insurance in each of the relevant geographic areas alleged in the Complaint. (Comp., ¶4) Blue Cross competes with for-profit and nonprofit health insurers and is the largest non-governmental purchaser of health care services, including hospital services, in Michigan, purchasing from all 131 general acute care hospitals in Michigan, more than $4 billion in hospital services in 2007. (Comp., ¶¶ 5-6) Blue Cross has sought to include [*7] MFNs in many of its contracts with hospitals, including 70 of Michigan's 131 general acute care hospitals. (Comp., ¶ 7) The 70 hospitals operate more than 40% of Michigan's acute care hospital beds. (Comp., ¶ 7)

Blue Cross generally enters into two types of MFNs, which require a hospital to provide hospital services to Blue Cross' competitors and all non-Blue Cross purchasers and insureds either at higher prices than Blue Cross pays or at prices no less than Blue Cross pays. (Comp., ¶ 8) The "MFN-plus" requires the Hospitals to charge some or all other commercial insurers more than the Hospitals charge Blue Cross, typically by a specified percentage differential. (Comp., ¶ 8(A)) The "Equal-to MFNs" have been entered into with small, community hospitals, requiring the hospitals to charge other commercial insurers at least as much as they charge Blue Cross. (Comp., ¶ 8(B))

Blue Cross has sought and obtained MFNs in many Hospital contracts in exchange for increases in the prices Blue Cross pays for the hospitals' services. (Comp., ¶ 9) The City of Pontiac alleges that in these instances, Blue Cross has purchased protection from competition by causing hospitals to raise the minimum prices [*8] they can charge to Blue Cross' competitors and all non-Blue Cross purchasers and insures, but in doing so has also increased Blue Cross' own costs. (Comp., ¶ 9) The City of Pontiac claims that Blue Cross has not sought or used MFNs to lower its own costs of obtaining hospital services. The City of Pontiac asserts that the Hospital Defendants' MFNs have caused many hospitals to: 1) raise prices to Blue Cross' competitors and all non-Blue Cross purchasers and insureds by substantial amounts, or 2) demand prices that are too high to allow competitors to compete, effectively excluding them from the market. (Comp., ¶ 10) By denying Blue Cross' competitors access to competitive hospital contracts, the City of Pontiac alleges that the MFNs have deterred or prevented competitive entry and expansion in health insurance markets in Michigan, and have increased prices for health insurance sold by Blue Cross and its competitors, and increased prices for hospital services sold to all non-Blue Cross purchasers and insureds. (Comp., ¶ 10) The City of Pontiac notes that the United States Department of Justice and the Michigan Attorney General [1] filed a lawsuit against Blue Cross on October 10, 2010, [*9] relying on an in-depth investigation over multiple years alleging antitrust violations of the same nature as set forth in the City of Pontiac's Complaint and seeking injunctive relief only.

In lieu of Answers, all Hospital Defendants have joined in a Motion to Dismiss the Complaint, along with two other more specific motions filed by various hospitals. [2] Blue Cross filed a joint response to all three motions. Replies have been filed and a hearing was held on the matter.

A. Motion to Dismiss Standard of Review

Rule 12(b)(6) of the Rules of Civil Procedure provides for a motion to dismiss based on failure to state [*10] a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), the Supreme Court explained that "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do[.] Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level...." Id. at 555 (internal citations omitted). Although not outright overruling the "notice pleading" requirement under Rule 8(a)(2) entirely, Twombly concluded that the "no set of facts" standard "is best forgotten as an incomplete negative gloss on an accepted pleading standard." Id. at 563. To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Id. at 556. The plausibility standard is not akin to a "probability requirement," but it asks [*11] for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Ibid. Where a complaint pleads facts that are "merely consistent with" a defendant's liability, it "stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of 'entitlement to relief.'" Id. at 557. Such allegations are not to be discounted because they are "unrealistic or nonsensical," but rather because they do nothing more than state a legal conclusion-even if that conclusion is cast in the form of a factual allegation." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1951, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009). In sum, for a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, the non-conclusory "factual content" and the reasonable inferences from that content, must be "plausibly suggestive" of a claim entitling a plaintiff to relief. Id. Where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged-but it has not "show [n]"-"that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 8(a)(2). The court primarily considers the allegations in the complaint, although matters of public record, orders, items appearing in the record of the case, and exhibits attached [*12] to the complaint may also be taken into account. Amini v. Oberlin College, 259 F.3d 493, 502 (6th Cir. 2001).

B. Joint Motion to Dismiss by All Hospital Defendants

The Hospital Defendants raise five arguments to support their motion to dismiss: 1) the City of Pontiac's per se theory fails as a matter of law; 2) if the City of Pontiac seeks recovery under the rule of reason, its Complaint is legally deficient; 3) all of the City of Pontiac's federal and state antitrust damages claims are barred by the state action doctrine; 4) the City of Pontiac is an indirect purchaser and therefore cannot recover for the alleged overcharges under the Sherman Act; and, 5) the City of Pontiac's unjust enrichment claim fails as a matter of law. Because the City of Pontiac is only alleging a per se theory as to the Hospital Defendants, as alleged in its Complaint and affirmed in its response, the rule of reason analysis need not be addressed.

C. Sherman Act (Count I) and Michigan Anti-Trust Act (Count II)

1. Per Se Theory

The Hospital Defendants argue that no case supports the City of Pontiac's claim that an "MFN-plus" clause in separate and individual negotiations with different hospitals, each a supplier [*13] to Blue Cross, can constitute a per se violation of the federal or state antitrust laws. The Hospital Defendants assert that this case presents a quintessential vertical restraint: hospitals supply hospital services to Blue Cross, a buyer, and Blue Cross is seeking what the City of Pontiac describes as a restraint-the "MFN-plus" clauses in its contracts with the Hospital Defendants.

In response, the City of Pontiac asserts that the vast majority of the Hospital Defendants' arguments are directed at issues that are not even a part of its case and the motions are largely an attempt at misdirection. The City of Pontiac asserts that it only seeks to challenge the "MFN-plus" provisions and the conspiracy and coordinated efforts that led to the creation of such provisions. The City of Pontiac alleges that Blue Cross paid millions of dollars to the Hospital Defendants to ensure their complicity in the "MFN-plus" scheme. The City of Pontiac admits that it is not challenging the MFN provisions as pursued by the Government and other class plaintiffs. (Pontiac Resp. Br., p. 3) The City of Pontiac agrees that an MFN is a vertical restraint because it primarily affects the prices that hospitals [*14] charge Blue Cross. (Pontiac Resp. Br., pp. 3-4) The City of Pontiac asserts that it is challenging the "MFN-plus" provision which is a horizontal restraint because it primarily affects and fixes the prices the Defendant Hospitals charge everyone else. The City of Pontiac argues that "MFN-plus" agreements are rare, but are facially anticompetitive, and have yet to be tested as a matter of law.

The City of Pontiac clams that the "MFN-plus" scheme exists because Blue Cross literally bought and paid for these restraints to disadvantage its competitors and to prevent "any slippage in our [pricing] differential from what we experience today." (Comp., ¶¶ 82, 86-86, 92, 111) Alternatively, the City of Pontiac claims that in response to Blue Cross' MFNs, the Hospital Defendants and other Hospitals concluded together, likely through discussions at industry Participating Hospital Agreement meetings, that no single Hospital could risk increasing prices to their non-Blue Cross customers without driving some business to nearby competitors, whereby a deal was struck in which each Hospital agreed to join the conspiracy and charge higher prices by fixed percentages ranging from 10% to 39% so long as [*15] each of their closest competitors also agreed to participate in the scheme. The City of Pontiac claims that the effect of this horizontal agreement among the Hospitals was to level the playing field amongst themselves so that no Hospital would be competitively disadvantaged by accepting or being forced to accept an MFN.

Section 1 of the Sherman Acts provides that, "[e]very contract, in combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. ..." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 1 prohibits every agreement in restraint of trade. Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 342, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982). The Supreme Court has held that Congress intended to prohibit only "unreasonable" restraints of trade. Id. at 342-43. Generally, restraints of trade are evaluated using a "rule of reason" analysis. State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997). There are restraints of trade that are deemed unlawful per se because such restraints "have such predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect, and such limited potential for procompetitive benefit." Id. "Per se treatment is appropriate '[o]nce [*16] experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the Court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it.'" Id. (quotation omitted). The per se rule is applied when the restraint facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output. In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litigation, 332 F.3d 896, 905 (6th Cir. 2003)(quotation omitted). The per se approach applies a "conclusive presumption" of illegality to certain types of agreements and no consideration is given to the intent behind the restraint, to any claimed pro-competitive justifications, or to the restraint's actual effect on competition. Id. (citations omitted).

Horizontal restraints are subject to the per se rule as recognized by the Supreme Court. Id. at 906 (citing, National College Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 100, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984)("Horizontal price fixing and output limitation are ordinarily condemned as a matter of law under an 'illegal per se' approach because the probability that these practices are anticompetitive is so high.")) Horizontal price fixing and market allocation are thought to be so inherently anticompetitive that each is [*17] illegal per se without inquiry into the harm actually caused. Id. (quoting Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)). A classic example of a per se violation is an agreement between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories in order to minimize competition. Such concerted action is usually termed 'horizontal' restraint, which is distinguishable from combinations of persons at different levels of the market structure, manufacturers and distributors, which are termed 'vertical' restraints. Id. All vertical price restraints are to be judged under the rule of reason standard. Total Benefits Planning Agency, Inc. v. Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield, 552 F.3d 430, 435 (2008).

To determine whether a per se violation has occurred based on a horizontal restraint, the district court must examine the complaint to determine whether each of the defendant is wholly owned and controlled by a certain parent company and where there is a "sister" relationship between each of the defendants, whether these defendants are "incapable, as a matter of law, of conspiring to form a horizontal ... violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act." Id. [*18] Horizontal agreements must be shown between competing manufacturers. Id.

Reviewing the Complaint, the Court finds that the City of Pontiac has failed to state a claim of per se violation by the Hospital Defendants. First, looking at the relationship between Blue Cross and the Hospital Defendants, there is no allegation of horizontal relationship because Blue Cross and the Hospital Defendants are at different levels of the market structure-Blue Cross as the purchaser of hospital services from the Hospital Defendants. (Comp., ¶ 6) Blue Cross competes with for-profit and non-profit health insurers. (Comp., ¶ 5) There are no allegations that Blue Cross competes with the Hospital Defendants. The relationship between Blue Cross and the Hospital Defendants is vertical. Therefore, as to Blue Cross and the Hospital Defendants, there is no horizontal relationship and the per se rule does not apply to the agreements between Blue Cross and the Hospital Defendants.

As to the relationship between the Hospital Defendants, many of the named-Hospital Defendants are incapable of conspiring with each other in a horizontal relationship since they appear to have "sister" relationships with each other. Specifically, [*19] the Complaint alleges that Defendant Ascension Health is a healthcare organization and network that provides health care services through more than 500 affiliated hospitals and facilities in 20 states, including other named Defendants: Genesys Regional Medical Center, St. Mary's Michigan Medical Center, St. Joseph Health System, Borgess Medical Center, St. John Hospital & Medical Center, Southfield Providence Hospital, Providence Park Hospital-Novi, St. John Hospital-North Shore Campus, St. John Macomb-Oakland, and St. John River District Hospital. (Comp., ¶¶ 18-29) As to the Ascension Health-related Defendants, as noted by the Sixth Circuit in Total Benefits, these defendants are "incapable, as a matter of law, of conspiring to form a horizontal ... violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act." 552 F.3d at 435.

Regarding the relationship between all Hospital Defendants, the Complaint is devoid of any allegations that there exists horizontal agreements between the Hospital Defendants to fix the prices of hospital services. The Complaint merely alleges that each Hospital Defendant "joined Blue Cross's conspiracy" by signing and enforcing one or more MFN-plus contract with Blue Cross that [*20] fix and inflate the price of hospital services in Michigan. (Comp., ¶¶ 18-29) Count 1 of the Complaint alleges that the provider agreements "between Blue Cross and one or more of the Hospital Defendants" violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act. (Comp., ¶¶ 137-143) Nothing in the Complaint asserts that the Hospital Defendants, between them, agreed to fix and inflate the price of hospital services in Michigan. The City of Pontiac argues in response that "the Hospitals concluded together (likely through discussions at industry PHA meetings) that no single Hospital could risk increasing prices to their non-Blue Cross customers without driving some business to nearby competitors; whereby a deal was struck in which each Hospital agreed to join the conspiracy and charge higher prices by fixed percentages ranging from 10% to 39% so long as each of their closest competitors also agreed to participate in the scheme." (Pontiac Resp., p. 8) However, this factual allegation is not found anywhere in the Complaint.

In a Rule 12(b)(6) Motion, the Court considers the allegations in the Complaint. The City of Pontiac asserts in its response that it offered to include "clarifications" of its claims in a [*21] formal amendment to the Complaint but that the Hospital Defendants refused such an amendment, preferring instead to attack the current Complaint as originally filed. (Pontiac Resp., p. 2) However, the Hospital Defendants' agreement to file an Amended Complaint is not required under Rule 15(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, which provides that a party may file an amended pleading once as a matter of course within 21 days after service of a motion under Rule 12(b). Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(1)(B). The City of Pontiac may also amend its pleading by leave of court. The City of Pontiac filed no amended Complaint or a motion to amend the Complaint. As noted by the Sixth Circuit in Total Benefits, "[w]ith a motion to dismiss pending, Total Benefits had every reason to make sure their amended complaint met the standard of adequate notice pleading and 'plausibility.' 552 F.3d at 438. The Sixth Circuit held that a district court, without a request, is not required to allow the parties an opportunity to amend a complaint because "it would render a motion to dismiss useless in disposing of unfit claims." Id. "[I]t is not the district court's role to initiate amendments" and a district court does [*22] not abuse its discretion in failing to grant a party leave to amend where such leave is not sought. Id. This District's rules provide that no counter motion be contained in a response to a motion and that a separate motion must be filed. (ECF Policies and Procedures, R5(e))

As to the City of Pontiac's claim it requires discovery to support its allegations, the Sixth Circuit has interpreted Iqbal to mean that discovery cannot serve as the means to obtain the facts required in a complaint. See New Albany Tractor v. Louisville Tractor, 650 F.3d 1046, 1051 (6th Cir. 2011). In Albany Tractor, the plaintiff was unable to provide facts related to the allegations because the information was retained by the defendants. Id. "[N]o discovery may be conducted in cases such as this, even when the information needed to establish a claim of discriminatory pricing is solely within the purview of the defendant or a third party, as it is here." Id. The City of Pontiac is not entitled to discovery in order to support any of its allegations in its Complaint.

The City of Pontiac has failed to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under its per se theory as to the Hospital Defendants. The Hospital [*23] Defendants are dismissed as to Count 1 (Sherman Act) and Count 2 (Michigan Anti-Trust Act) of the Complaint. M.C.L.A. § 445.784(2) provides that "[i]t is the intent of the legislature that in construing all sections of this act, the courts shall give due deference to interpretations given by the federal courts to comparable antitrust statutes." "Because Michigan antitrust law follows federal precedents, our reasoning regarding the federal antitrust claims applies equally to the state antitrust claims." Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. Am. Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., 185 F.3d 606, 619 n. 4 (6th Cir. 1999).

2. Rule of Reason

As noted above, the City of Pontiac has only alleged a per se horizontal claim against the Hospital Defendants and has not alleged a vertical relationship between the Hospital Defendants. The Complaint alleges "Defendants' MFN-plus contracts are per se violations of the antitrust laws. (Comp., ¶ 140) The rule of reason is not applicable to the City of Pontiac's allegations.

3. State Action Doctrine

The Hospital Defendants argue that the City of Pontiac's antitrust damages claims are alternatively barred by the doctrine of state action immunity, [*24] incorporating the defenses raised by Blue Cross in its Motion to Dismiss against the United States. The Hospital Defendants argue that Blue Cross' state action immunity automatically shields the Hospital Defendants.

In response, the City of Pontiac asserts that perhaps only two of the Hospital Defendants may remotely be tied to any state action.

The Hospital Defendants' argument that because Blue Cross is considered a "quasi-public entity," the Hospital Defendants are also shielded from damages is without merit. Courts have held that Blue Cross is not a public entity but a private entity and that Blue Cross, itself, has so argued in other cases. Riverview Investments, Inc. v. Ottawa Cmty. Improvement Corp., 899 F.2d 474, 480-82 (6th Cir. 1992). Blue Cross manages its own business, controls its contracting relationship with providers and controls its substantive surpluses. M.C.L.A. §§ 550.1301(2), 550.1301(1), 550.1206(1). This Court has accepted Blue Cross' arguments that it is a private entity, not a state actor. *Loftus v. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27867, 2010 WL 1139338, 4 (E.D. Mich. Mar. 24, 2010)(Hood). The Hospital Defendants' alternative theory to dismiss the case under the [*25] state actor theory is without merit and denied on this basis.

4. Indirect Purchaser

The Hospital Defendants argue that the City of Pontiac is not a direct-purchaser of Blue Cross since it entered an agreement with Humana to obtain administrative services.

In response, the City of Pontiac argues that it made payments to each of the Hospitals directly and, therefore, it is a direct purchaser for purposes of antitrust laws. The Complaint alleges that the City of Pontiac is a "self-insured" municipality which paid for hospital services directly to the Hospital Defendants. (Comp., ¶¶ 41-44)

In Illinois Brick v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977), the Supreme Court established a bright-line rule that only direct purchasers may sue their suppliers for overcharges based on violations of the federal antitrust laws. Id. at 744-45. At the pleading stage, it appears that the City of Pontiac has sufficiently alleged that as a self-insured municipality, it is a direct purchaser who paid for hospital services directly to the Hospital Defendants. The Hospital Defendants' Motion to Dismiss based on this alternative argument is denied.

D. Unjust Enrichment Claim (Count III)

The Hospital Defendants argue that the [*26] City of Pontiac has failed to state an unjust enrichment claim. In response, the City of Pontiac asserts it has sufficiently pled such a claim.

The basis for a claim of unjust enrichment follows from a contract implied-in-law, an implied contract imposed by fiction of law intended to enable justice to be accomplished even in cases where no contract was intended. *Williams v. Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23372, 2009 WL 799162 6 (E.D. Mich. Mar. 24, 2009)(unpublished)(citing Cascaden v. Magryta, 247 Mich. 267, 225 N.W. 511 (1929)). Michigan law will sustain a claim of unjust enrichment when the plaintiff is able to establish the requisite elements: "(1) the receipt of a benefit by defendant from plaintiff, and (2) an inequity resulting to plaintiff because of the retention of the benefit by the defendant." Sweet Air Inv., Inc. v. Kenney, 275 Mich. App. 492, 504, 739 N.W.2d 656 (2007). "There is no claim for unjust enrichment when there exists a valid contract covering the same subject matter." Iverson Industries, Inc. v. Metal Management Ohio, Inc., 525 F. Supp. 2d 911 (E.D. Mich. 2007). In Morris Pumps v. Centerline Piping, Inc., 273 Mich. App. 187, 199-200, 729 N.W.2d 898 (2006), the Michigan Supreme Court stated that "we perceive no reason [*27] why a plaintiff should not be allowed to simultaneously and alternatively assert a contract claim against one defendant with whom an express contract exists and a quantum meruit [unjust enrichment] claim against a different defendant with whom no express contract exists." Id. (italics added). A defendant's mere receipt of a benefit belonging to the plaintiff is not enough to state a claim for unjust enrichment; the circumstances must make it unjust for the defendant to retain the benefit. In re Estate of McCallum, 153 Mich. App. 328, 335, 395 N.W.2d 258 (1986)("A person who without mistake, coercion or request has unconditionally conferred a benefit upon another is not entitled to restitution, except where the benefit was conferred under circumstances making such action necessary for the protection of the interests of the other or of third persons.")

In this matter, the City of Pontiac alleges that the Hospital Defendants have received a benefit from the City of Pontiac which resulted in an inequity to the City of Pontiac because of the Hospital Defendants' retention of the benefit in the form of higher fees for hospital services under the MFN-plus agreement with Blue Cross. (Comp., ¶ 153-54) The City [*28] of Pontiac has alleged that it has no adequate remedy at law. (Comp., ¶ 155) As to each Hospital Defendant the City of Pontiac pled that it made one or more payments to each of the Hospital Defendants "for hospital services that were inflated by the MFN-plus contracts and arrangement challenged herein." (Comp., ¶¶ 18-40)

The factual basis supporting the City of Pontiac's unjust enrichment claims against the Hospital Defendants fails to state a plausible claim. The City of Pontiac's factual claim is that the Hospital Defendants retained the benefit "in the form of higher fees for hospital services under the MFN-plus agreement with Blue Cross." There is no allegation that each of the Hospital Defendant made a mistake, coerced or requested the City of Pontiac to confer a benefit to that particular hospital. The allegation is that "the price of hospital services at individual hospitals direct affects health insurance premiums for the customers that use those hospitals." (Comp., ¶ 53) It is the "customers" that use the hospitals. Although the City of Pontiac may have paid for the price of hospital services, those services were not requested either by the City of Pontiac or the Hospital Defendants. [*29] There are no factual circumstances alleged which would make it unjust for the Hospital Defendants to retain the benefit the City of Pontiac may have conferred to the Hospital Defendants, as a result of one of the City of Pontiac's employees or retirees using the Hospital Defendants' services. The Hospital Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the unjust enrichment claim in Count III must be granted for failure to state a plausible claim.

E. Gratiot Community Hospital, Metro Health, MidMichigan Health, Covenant HealthCare and Marquette General Hospital's Motion to Dismiss

These Hospital Defendants also joined in the above-motion but filed a separate motion to specifically address the claims against these specific Hospital Defendants. These Specific Hospital Defendants argue that the City of Pontiac failed to allege facts supporting antitrust injury; that the City of Pontiac failed to allege payments to Gratiot Community Hospital; that the City of Pontiac failed to allege competitive harm to Humana, the payor through which the City of Pontiac alleges it made its payments; that the City of Pontiac failed to allege facts as to relevant market; and, that the City of Pontiac failed to allege anticompetitive [*30] intent. Given that the Court granted the Joint Motion to Dismiss, this motion is moot.

F. Munson Healthcare and Sparrow Health System's Motion to Dismiss

These specific Hospital Defendants also joined in the main motion to dismiss. The only issue these Hospital Defendants raise in their separate motion is that the City of Pontiac failed to make plausible allegations that it has suffered antitrust injury. Again, as noted above, such a requirement is not needed given that the City of Pontiac's allegation is a horizontal per se violation claim. However, given that the Court granted the Joint Motion to Dismiss, this motion to dismiss is moot.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above,

IT IS ORDERED that Joint Motion to Dismiss (Doc. No. 85, filed 4/18/2011) is GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Complaint is DISMISSED as to all the following Hospital Defendants:

Ascension Health;
Genesys Regional Medical Center;
St. Mary's of Michigan Medical Center;
St. Joseph Health System;
Borgess Health d/b/a/ Borgess Medical Center;
St. John Providence Health System d/b/a St. John Hospital & Medical Center;
St. John Providence Health System d/b/a Southfield Providence Hospital;

St. John Providence Health [*31] System d/b/a Providence Park Hospital-Novi;
St. John Providence Health System d/b/a/ St. John Hospital-North Shore Campus;
St. John Providence Health System d/b/a St. John Macomb-Oakland Hospital;
St. John Providence Health System d/b/a St. John River District Hospital-East China;
