AMENDED OPINION & ORDER

PAUL A. ENGELMAYER, District Judge:

This decision resolves a motion by the putative class plaintiffs in this multi-district litigation for leave to file a proposed Fourth Amended Complaint ("PFAC"). The Court has sustained as well-pled plaintiffs' Sherman Act § 1 claims covering the years 2013-2016. Fact discovery as to these claims is set to close soon. The Court, however, has twice ruled against class plaintiffs on their bid to also pursue claims covering the five preceding years, 2008-2012. For the reasons that follow, the Court denies the motion to amend to the extent that plaintiffs again seek to add claims for 2008-2012. The Court, however, grants the motion to the extent that plaintiffs seek to amplify on their factual allegations bearing on the 2013-2016 claims.

I. Background

This case centers on claims of § 1 violations affecting the market for interest rate swaps ("IRS" or "IRSSs"). Plaintiffs claim that the investment banks who dealt in IRSs (the "Dealer Defendants" or "Dealers") conspired to block the emergence and later the survival of electronic trading platforms that would have permitted [*15] IRSs to be traded on an anonymous, "all-to-all" basis. Such platforms, plaintiffs claim, would have provided price benefits to investors relative to the over-the counter ("OTC") model by which IRSs were historically traded, i.e., dealer-to-investor, with the investor's name disclosed to the dealer.

The Court has issued two decisions reviewing the claims and procedural history. On July 28, 2017, the Court issued a 108-page decision resolving motions to dismiss the Second Amended Complaints: one by the putative class of IRS investors ("SAC"); the other by non-class plaintiffs Javelin Capital Markets LLC ("Javelin") and Tera Group Inc. ("Tera"), each of which in or after 2013 opened electronic platforms for all-to-all trading of IRSs ("JTSAC"). See *In re Interest Rate Swaps Antitrust Litigation, 261 F. Supp. 3d 430 \(S.D.N.Y. 2019\)* ("IRS I"). On May 23, 2018, the Court issued a 59-page decision resolving class plaintiffs' motion for leave to file a proposed Third Amended Complaint ("PTAC"). See *In re Interest Rate Swaps Antitrust Litig., Nos. 16 MD 2704 \(PAE\) & 16 MC 2704 \(PAE\), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069 \(S.D.N.Y. May 23, 2018\)* ("IRS II").<sup>1</sup> The Court incorporates those decisions by reference and, in summarizing them below, recites only necessary background.

A. [*16] IRS I

On November 25, 2015, the initial complaint before this Court was filed. On June 2, 2016, the United States Judicial Panel on Multi-District Litigation transferred all related matters to this Court for coordinated or consolidated pretrial proceedings. Dkt. 1.<sup>2</sup> On December 9, 2016, after appointment of interim lead counsel for the class and the setting of a briefing schedule, class plaintiffs filed the SAC, Dkt. 142, and the Javelin/Tera plaintiffs filed the JTSAC, Dkt. 145.

On July 28, 2017, the Court, in IRS I, ruled on the motions to dismiss the SAC and JTSAC. The Court sustained the § 1 claims as to 2013-2016 (made by both sets of plaintiffs) but dismissed the § 1 claims as to 2008-2012 (made by class plaintiffs only). For each period, plaintiffs had pursued claims of per se illegal conduct.

As to the 2013-2016 period, the Court held that plaintiffs had plausibly pled a per se illegal group boycott among IRS Dealers. In this period, the Court held, plaintiffs had pled significant parallel conduct among the Dealers sufficient to give rise to an inference of an agreement among them aimed at boycotting and otherwise hobbling the platforms opened by Javelin, Tera, and a third entity, trueEX [*17] LLC ("trueEX"). In or after 2013, after the effective date of the Dodd-Frank Act, these three entities had each opened a "swap execution facility," or "SEF"—a platform on which IRSs could be electronically traded in an anonymous, "all-to-all" manner. Dodd-Frank, enacted July 21, 2010 and effective in 2013 after significant rulemaking and regulatory implementation, had anticipated, enabled, and mandated the opening of SEFs. See generally IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 472-81.

As to the 2008-2012 period, however, before Dodd-Frank's mandates had taken effect, the Court did not find plausible class plaintiffs' claims of a per se unlawful agreement among Dealers to prevent from coming into existence electronic trading platforms permitting all-to-all anonymous trading of IRSs. See id. at 463-72. Independently, the Court held, class plaintiffs lacked antitrust standing to pursue their pre-2013 claims. To pursue such claims, the Court noted, a plaintiff must be an "efficient enforcer" of the antitrust laws; a central factor in that inquiry is whether the plaintiff's claimed injury is speculative. The Court held that class plaintiffs' claims of injury from the failure of electronic trading to emerge in 2008-2012 were unduly speculative, as [*18] they required the finder of fact to postulate an "alternative history of IRS trading" that "require[d] too many leaps of imagination and guesswork for a claim of class injury to be viable." Id. at 494 (citation omitted). The Court, finally, held that plaintiffs' claims based on injuries incurred before November 25, 2011 fell outside the four-year statute of limitations and were time-barred. Id. at 487-90.

B. IRS II

After IRS I, the litigation proceeded to discovery, pursuant to a court-approved case management plan. See IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at *4. On February 21, 2018—the last day on which motions seeking leave to amend were authorized—class plaintiffs moved for leave to file the PTAC. 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, [WL] at *5. It sought to add a new class plaintiff, new allegations as to 2013-2016, and, most consequentially, to restore the putative class's claims as to 2008-2012. 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, [WL] at *6.

On May 23, 2018, the Court in IRS II resolved the motion for leave to amend. The Court authorized the addition of a new plaintiff and of new allegations as to 2013-2016. 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, [WL] at *8-9. The Court, however, denied the motion to restore the 2008-2012 claims, under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a), for the following reasons.

Futility: The PTAC did not remedy the deficiencies that had led to dismissal of the SAC's claims as to 2008-2012 and thus [*19] was futile. 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, [WL] at *9-19. This was so for multiple reasons, four of which the Court developed. First, the PTAC's theory of investor injury from the failure of electronic all-to-all IRS trading to then emerge remained "a product of speculation, imagination, and guesswork," [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*10](#), making class plaintiffs' claims of injury "far too conjectural to survive," [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*9](#). Second, the PTAC's allegations as to "Project Fusion," a joint venture among Dealers, did not make out per se unlawful conduct under § 1, and the PTAC's two paragraphs of allegations as to the rule of reason were too incomplete and spare to make out a rule of reason claim. [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*11-13](#). Third, the PTAC's allegations as to the Dealers' conduct towards Swapstream, a proposed platform of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange ("CME") for clearing transactions, also did not viably plead a § 1 violation, either per se (as the PTAC pled) or under the rule of reason (a theory the Court sua sponte considered). [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*13-17](#). Fourth, plaintiffs' claims predating November 25, 2011 remained time-barred. [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*18-19](#).

Independently, the Court held, considerations of delay, prejudice, and gamesmanship all required denial of the motion for leave to add claims for 2008-2012. [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*19-28](#).

Delay: The parties had organized and conducted discovery [*20] based on the 2013-2016 parameters. Discovery disputes had been negotiated and litigated based on the premise that these were the sole claims plaintiffs were pursuing. Permitting the 2008-2012 claims would have upended the negotiated and court-approved discovery schedule. Allowing the PTAC's pre-2013 claims "would [have been] functionally tantamount—or close to it—to allowing a new MDL-sized lawsuit to be hitched to the existing claims." [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*20](#); see also [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*20-22](#) (listing discovery areas uniquely relevant to 2008-2012 claims and assessing implications of reopened discovery, as to parties, third parties, and data gathering).

Prejudice: Adding the 2008-2012 claims would have prejudiced defendants, who for seven months had expended time and money in discovery based on the "only rational assumption as to this case's temporal scope: that plaintiffs' surviving claims were limited to 2013-2016." [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*22](#); see also [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*22-23](#).

Gamesmanship: Plaintiffs' counsel admitted that they had been intending and planning since the day IRS I issued to move to amend to revive the 2008-2012 claims. The Court chronicled plaintiffs' counsels' communications to the Court and the defense between IRS I and the PTAC's filing. Rather than disclose [*21] this intention, these communications instead repeatedly implied the opposite. [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*23-27](#). "In ways large and small," the Court stated, "plaintiffs' counsel throughout these seven months fed the false impression that the temporal scope of plaintiffs' claims was fixed at 2013-2016. The result was to mislead the Court and the defense and to occasion extensive work and expense that—had the retooled 2008-2012 claims proven viable—would have largely gone wasted." [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*24](#); see also [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*24-26](#) (reviewing communications). The Court rejected plaintiffs' counsels' justifications for such "coy" and "tactical" behavior—that the work product doctrine or the need to avoid witness tampering necessitated it. [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*27](#). This "unacceptable gamesmanship," [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*27](#), independently warranted denying the motion to add the 2008-2012 claims, [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*28](#).

After the decision in IRS II, plaintiffs filed a Third Amended Complaint, consistent with the Court's rulings. Dkt. 398. Discovery continued, pursuant to the case management plan.

C. The PFAC

On October 26, 2018, class plaintiffs filed a motion for leave to amend via a proposed Fourth Amended Complaint, Dkt. 590, the PFAC, Dkt. 693 (Declaration of Daniel L. Brockett Ex. A ("PFAC"),<sup>3</sup> and a memorandum of law in support, [*22] Dkt. 591 ("Pl. Mem."). Plaintiffs had alerted the Court that a motion to amend was under consideration. See Dkt. 408 (June 19, 2018 letter from plaintiffs); Dkt. 430 (July 17, 2018 joint status letter).

The Court describes the PFAC more fully below. In brief, it principally seeks to restore plaintiffs' 2008-2012 claims. As to these, the PFAC reprises and recasts plaintiffs' earlier allegations regarding the two episodes on which plaintiffs' prior claims as to 2008-2012 have mainly been based: (1) Tradeweb/"Project Fusion," in which Dealers jointly acquired part of the business of trading-platform company Tradeweb; and (2) CME/"Project Magellan," in which the Dealers jointly negotiated and reached agreement with CME regarding its "Swapstream" product. The PFAC adds limited allegations as to these episodes. It also includes allegations as to several new areas of alleged Dealer collaboration. More than earlier complaints, the PFAC pleads, as an alternative to its theory of per se § 1 liability, a claim of § 1 liability under the rule of reason for 2008-2012. The PFAC also expands on its allegations as to 2013-2016. In particular, to a greater degree than before, it seeks to account for the failure [*23] to emerge, after Dodd-Frank became effective in 2013, of all-to-all platforms permitting anonymous trading of IRSs other than the allegedly boycotted platforms of Javelin, Tera, and trueEX.

On December 4, 2018, defendants filed an omnibus memorandum of law in opposition to the motion for leave to file the PFAC, Dkt. 638 ("Def. Mem."), and a declaration in support, attaching exhibits, Dkt. 637 ("Playforth Decl."). On December 27, 2018, class plaintiffs filed a reply brief, Dkt. 664 ("Pl. Reply"), and a declaration in support, Dkt. 665 ("Brockett Decl.").

II. Legal Standards Governing the Motion to Amend

Class plaintiffs' motion to amend is subject to two Federal Rules of Civil Procedure: 15\(a\) and 16\(b\).

Rule 15\(a\) provides that a court "should freely give leave [to amend] when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\)\(2\). "[I]t is within the sound discretion of the district court to grant or deny leave to amend" under Rule 15. McCarthy v. Dun & Bradstreet Corp., 482 F.3d 184, 200 \(2d Cir. 2007\). "A district court has discretion to deny leave for good reason, including futility, bad faith, undue delay, or undue prejudice to the opposing party." Id. (citing Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 \(1962\)). As noted in IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at \*7, leave to amend under Rule 15\(a\) is properly denied upon a showing of prejudice or bad faith; "[a]mendment may be prejudicial when, [*24] among other things, it would 'require the opponent to expend significant additional resources to conduct discovery and prepare for trial' or 'significantly delay the resolution of the dispute.' AEP Energy Servs. Gas Holding Corp. v. Bank of Am., N.A., 626 F.3d 699, 725-26 \(2d Cir. 2010\) (quoting State Teachers Ret. Bd. v. Fluor Corp., 654 F.2d 843, 856 \(2d Cir. 1981\)); see also Cresswell v. Sullivan & Cromwell, 922 F.2d 60, 72 \(2d Cir. 1990\) ("The court plainly has discretion . . . to deny leave to amend where the motion is made after an inordinate delay, no satisfactory explanation is offered for the delay, and the amendment would prejudice the defendant.").

Because the present motion to amend was filed after the deadline set in the court-ordered case management plan, it—unlike the motion addressed in IRS II—is also subject to Rule 16\(b\). See Kassner v. 2nd Ave. Delicatessen, Inc., 496 F.3d 229, 243-45 \(2d Cir. 2007\) ("Rule 16\(b\) also may limit the ability of a party to amend a pleading if the deadline specified in the scheduling order for amendment of the pleadings has passed."); Fresh Del Monte Produce, Inc. v. Del Monte Foods, Inc., 304 F.R.D. 170, 174-76 \(S.D.N.Y. 2014\) (discussing interplay between Rules 15 and 16 in motions to amend). Rule 16\(b\) requires that the Court set a schedule, which "must limit the time to join other parties, amend the pleadings, complete discovery, and file motions." Fed. R. Civ. P. 16\(b\)\(3\)\(A\). Relevant here, Rule 16\(b\)\(4\) provides that such a schedule "may be modified only for good cause." Id. 16\(b\)\(4\).

<sup>3</sup> The Court notes that there are differences between the unredacted hard copy of the PFAC sent to the Court as a courtesy copy and the electronic version emailed to the Court on October 25, 2018 with plaintiffs' request to file it under seal. The differences include divergent paragraph numbering. The Court cites here to the paragraph numbers of the electronic version.

Where Rule 16\(b\) applies, it informs the Court's exercise of discretion under Rule 15\(a\): Although Rule 15\(a\) provides that leave to amend [*25] is to be freely given "when justice so requires," "a district court does not abuse its discretion in denying leave to amend the pleadings after the deadline set in the scheduling order where the moving party has failed to establish good cause pursuant to [Rule 16]." Parker v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 204 F.3d 326, 340 (2d Cir. 2000); see also Ramsay-Nobles v. Keyser, No. 16 Civ. 5778 (CM), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 214472, 2018 WL 6985228, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 18, 2018) ("[T]he 'good cause' standard is permitted but not mandated when a party seeks to amend its pleadings after the deadline set in the scheduling order." (citation omitted)).

As the Second Circuit has explained, the scheduling order for which Rule 16 provides serves an important purpose: "By limiting the time for amendments, [Rule 16] is designed to offer a measure of certainty in pretrial proceedings, ensuring that at some point both the parties and the pleadings will be fixed." Parker, 204 F.3d at 340 (quotation marks and citation omitted). Therefore, "a finding of 'good cause' depends on the diligence of the moving party" in complying with the deadline for amendments. Id. (citation omitted). In addition, a court applying Rule 16 has discretion to examine the Rule 15\(a\) factors, "in particular, whether allowing the amendment of the pleading at this stage of the litigation will prejudice defendants," Kassner, 496 F.3d at 244, as well as "futility, bad faith, [and] undue delay," McCarthy, 482 F.3d at 200 (citation omitted). [*26]

Practical considerations pertinent to the above multi-factor analysis include the duration of the case and the stage of discovery. In McCarthy, for example, the Second Circuit affirmed the denial of leave to amend under Rule 15 where the motion came "more than two months after discovery was completed and more than a year and a half after the filing of the original complaint." 482 F.3d at 201 (citation omitted). The district court had noted that "if the amendment is allowed, merits discovery will need to be reopened and the litigation will, in essence, start over—the same experts will likely need to produce new reports and be re-deposed." Id. (quotation marks, alteration, and citation omitted). Similarly, in Ramsay-Nobles, Chief Judge McMahon noted when applying Rules 15 and 16 that the proposed counterclaims had come less than a month before fact discovery's close and "would have required the reopening of a case for which extensive discovery has been conducted and one that has been proceeding for far too long." 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 214472, 2018 WL 6985228, at \*9 (quotation marks and citations omitted). Other decisions have denied motions to amend on similar grounds. See, e.g., Grochowski v. Phoenix Constr., 318 F.3d 80, 86 (2d Cir. 2003) (upholding denial of motion to amend under Rules 15 and 16 where "plaintiffs delayed more than one [*27] year before seeking to amend their complaint [and] discovery had been completed"); Wilson v. CoreLogic SafeRent, LLC, No. 14 Civ. 2477 (JPO), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15238, 2016 WL 482985, at *1-3 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 8, 2016) (denying under Rules 15 and 16 motion for leave to amend filed six months after deadline for amendment where motion sought to add to class claim).

III. The PFAC's Claims as to 2008-2012

The Court first addresses plaintiffs' motion to amend to add claims as to 2008-2012—the primary focus of the new allegations in the PFAC.

The PFAC's core allegation as to this period remains that the Dealers collaborated to impede the emergence of electronic platforms permitting all-to-all IRS trading on an anonymous basis. To this end, the PFAC amplifies on the two episodes at the heart of the 2008-2012 allegations in earlier complaints. These involve (1) "Project Fusion," the joint venture by which the Dealers in 2007 and 2008 invested in and took control of Tradeweb, and allegedly induced it not to pursue all-to-all electronic IRS trading, PFAC ¶¶ 133-204; and (2) CME, whose Swapstream trading platform the Dealers allegedly collectively shunned in 2007-2008 and whose launch of an IRS clearinghouse usable to the buy-side the Dealers allegedly acted to stall in 2008-2012 in "Project Magellan," id. in 205-96. These two episodes remain [*28] the centerpieces of plaintiffs' theories of how the Dealers, in 2008-2012, violated § 1.

The PFAC includes claims about two other joint ventures, in which Dealers participated with inter-dealer brokers ("IDBs")—ICAP and Tradition. The Dealers allegedly dissuaded these IDBs from supporting all-to-all anonymous trading. See id. ¶¶ 341-73 (Tradition); ¶¶ 394-413 (ICAP). Plaintiffs' earlier amended complaints contained allegations about ICAP and Tradition, but the PFAC's claims as to these entities are mostly new. The PFAC also newly alleges that the Dealers, in and after 2010, declined to support IDCG, a startup IRS clearinghouse. Id. ¶¶ 297-323. Finally, the PFAC newly alleges that the Dealers boycotted two trading platforms of non-party Bloomberg (ALLQ and BSEF), with the intention to pressure Bloomberg not to open, following Dodd-Frank, a SEF permitting all-to-all IRS trading. Id. ¶¶ 324-40.

Addressing these actions thematically, the PFAC alleges that the Dealers over time pursued two main strategies. Id. ¶ 8. First, they made "consortium investments" in critical IRS infrastructure," id. ¶ 8, such as Tradeweb and CME, with the goal of "mak[ing] sure those providers acted only to protect [*29] the dealers' interests," id. ¶ 9. Second, when that strategy proved unavailable or unsuccessful, the Dealers engaged in a group boycott of platforms such as Javelin, Tera, and/or trueEX, with the goal that the platform changed course or "withered on the vine." Id. ¶ 10.

A. Futility

Defendants argue that, for various reasons, the PFAC's 2008-2012 claims fail to state a claim and hence are futile. The Court here finds these claims futile in two respects. First, as before, class plaintiffs lack antitrust standing. Second, with one very narrow, arguable exception, the PFAC's 2008-2012 claims do not allege conduct that is per se illegal under § 1. The PFAC's principal theory, of per se liability, is thus not viable. In the interest of efficiency, the Court does not reach or resolve defendants' alternative arguments why these claims are futile. These include that the PFAC's claims as to Tradeweb, CME, and ICAP alleging conduct before November 25, 2011—and its claims as to IDCG, Tradition, and Bloomberg alleging conduct before October 25, 2014—are time-barred. In discussing, infra, the lack of good cause for amendment, the Court does, however, comment on the PFAC's new allegations of § 1 liability [*30] under the rule of reason.

1. Antitrust Standing

In both IRS I and IRS II, the Court held that class plaintiffs' theory of injury from the absence of electronic fora offering all-to-all anonymous trading was too speculative to make them "efficient enforcers" of the antitrust laws and thus give rise to antitrust standing, under cases including Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 \(1983\), and Gatt Communs., Inc. v. PMC Assocs., L.L.C., 711 F.3d 68 \(2d Cir. 2013\).

In IRS I, the Court explained:

[C]lass plaintiffs' theory of pre-2013 injury is extraordinarily conjectural, such that, had the § 1 claim as to that period not otherwise have been dismissed as implausible (and had the pre-2012 aspects of that claim not been dismissed as time-barred), the claim would not satisfy the requirements of antitrust standing. Among other infirmities, it is "entirely uncertain," Gatt, 711 F.3d at 79, that, absent the scheme, the necessary infrastructural preconditions for anonymous all-to-all trading, such as central clearing of IRS trades, would have developed before Dodd—Frank willed them into being in 2013. Plaintiffs' alternative history of IRS trading for the first five years of the class period (2008-2012) requires too many leaps of imagination and guesswork for a claim of class injury to be viable. See Reading Indus., Inc. v. Kennecott Copper Corp., 631 F.2d 10, [13] [(2d Cir. 1980)] (no antitrust standing [*31] where indirect purchaser at end of vertical distribution line "predicate[d] its claim of injury on a basis too tenuous and conjectural for a valid causal finding of anticompetitive effect and damages"); see also Paycom Billing Servs., Inc. v. Mastercard Int'l, Inc., 467 F.3d 283, 293 [(2d. Cir. 2006)] (no antitrust standing where chain of causation was "highly speculative" and was built on "conclusory allegation[s]").

IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 494. In IRS II, the Court rejected the PTAC's attempts to cure this problem, developing at greater length why plaintiffs' theory of investor injury was speculative:

The new allegations in the PTAC do not cure this fundamental problem. Plaintiffs' claim is still that, that but for defendants' conduct, all-to-all anonymous trading platforms would have developed years prior to Dodd-Frank, such that defendants' conduct caused them injury on their 2008-2012 IRS trades. But in various ways including the following, plaintiffs' 2008-2012 theory of injury remains a product of speculation, imagination, and guesswork.

First, the PTAC does not allege that any such platform actually developed in the pre-2013 period, or came anywhere close. In this respect, the PTAC's allegations as to 2008-2012, like the SAC's, sharply contrast with those regarding 2013-2016. With respect [*32] to 2013-2016, plaintiffs concretely allege collusion to boycott and otherwise stymie three extant all-to-all anonymous IRS trading platforms (Javelin, Tera, and [t]rueEx) accessible to the buy-side. Plaintiffs are joined in so alleging by two entities that operated such platforms, Javelin and Tera. In contrast, the PTAC does not allege that either CME or Tradeweb ever launched such a platform during 2008-2012. See discussion infra, at 23-29. Nor does the PTAC allege that—despite such a platform's ostensible business logic, its ostensible appeal at the time to the buy-side, and the ostensible existence of the technological and infrastructural "pillars" that could be adapted to support such a platform—any entity, including ones like Bloomberg that are not alleged to have been boycotted, ever launched or came close to launching such a platform until after Dodd-Frank's mandates took effect in 2013.

Second, while the PTAC adds detail to its allegations as to the existence among Dealers of clearing arrangements, post-trade processing technology, and the necessary legal infrastructure in the pre-2013 period, see PTAC ¶¶ 104-118, its repeated allegation that these building blocks would have been seamlessly [*33] adapted to the all-to-all context, see, e.g., id. ¶¶ 100, 110-111, 117, is conclusory. Plaintiffs posit the ready adaptation of such infrastructure as central clearing of trades from an inter-dealer environment in which swaps were traded among highly capitalized, repeat players to one that facilitated trading of sophisticated derivatives by any market participant, no matter how small, thinly capitalized, or inexperienced. But the PTAC does not concretely allege why this process would have been natural, fluid, or at all likely. On the contrary, the PTAC—tracking the observations of the [Commodities Futures Trading Commission ("CFTC")] when it later guided this process—elsewhere notes some of the formidable hurdles to such an evolution. See, e.g., PTAC ¶¶ 98, 100, 110, 115, 334, 345 (acknowledging that buy-side clearing would require "operational changes," "connections," legal arrangements, collateral arrangements, and retention of clearing agents).

Third, the PTAC's claim that buy-side firms would have participated in an anonymous, all-to-all platform had one been introduced before Dodd-Frank is an ipse dixit. Although the PTAC alleges that buy-side firms were interested conceptually [*34] in such a potential platform, the PTAC does not allege that any buy-side firm, before Dodd-Frank's mandates took effect, had invested in any of the collateral, technological, or legal arrangements needed to facilitate such participation in anonymous all-to-all trading. Class plaintiffs CPTF and LACERA, large public pension funds, do not allege that they did so. And while the PTAC lists large buy-side firms that had expressed interest in using central clearing so as to permit trading on an all-to-all platform, see, e.g., PTAC ¶¶ 133-134 (listing Allstate, BlackRock, DE Shaw, Freddie Mac and PIMCO as firms to whom CME "successfully reached out," and stating that Citadel, Countrywide Financial Corporation, Nomura, and other "asset managers, hedge funds, and proprietary trading firms" had committed to "an Early Adopter Program for clearing via Swapstream"), it does not allege that any such firm made any investment or took other concrete action toward this end pre-Dodd-Frank. None of these firms is party to this lawsuit.

Indeed, even after Dodd-Frank had mandated the central clearing and collateralization arrangements necessary to enable all-to-all swap trading, compliance with these obligations [*35] by buy-side participants proved challenging: Ultimately, the CFTC delayed implementation of its mandates, recognizing as late as December 2012 that buy-side firms were still scrambling to achieve "operational readiness" to clear their trades. As the Court earlier observed: "The CFTC delayed implementation of this mandate to 2013, in part due to 'multiple requests from buy-side entities for extra time to cope with the costs and burdens imposed by implementing mandatory clearing, which one commenter described as 'overwhelming.' See [IRS II, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 446 (quoting CFTC Clearing Rule at 74,320).

Fourth and finally, to resolve reliably class plaintiffs' claim to have experienced pricing injuries on their 2008-2012 trades as a result of the absence of the IRS trading platforms they imagine, a jury presumably would have to do more than merely posit the existence of some such platform. A jury would also have to conjure features of the platform or platforms that might have been, such as their design, mechanics, costs, entry barriers, efficiencies, limitations, regulatory constraints, and trading metrics and modalities. The PTAC scarcely addresses such matters, even as to the platforms that it claims CME and Tradeweb, but for the [*36] alleged boycott, would have introduced. Nor can the structural features of the allegedly aborted platforms be inferred from later events. While Dodd-Frank put into place a "SEF" framework for swaps trading, it cannot be assumed that the free market—but for the Dealers' allegedly illegal actions to quell CME and Tradeweb—would organically have arrived at the same place. The PTAC leaves these important parameters, which may well be inherently unknowable, to speculation.

In light of these and other factors, a jury evaluating plaintiffs' claims to have experienced injuries between 2008-2012 from the alleged conspiracy would thus be required to imagine a mode of market trading that—until mandated by a landmark federal statute and its implementing regulations aimed at stabilizing this corner of the financial system—never came to be (or even close). The PTAC's 2008-2012 claims would unavoidably require a jury to conjure an alternative history in which a form of marketplace that took federal legislation to bring about would have organically sprung up. Such would require an unacceptable amount of conjecture. The PTAC's claim of injury as to 2008-2012, anchored in an imagined alternate history, [*37] therefore remains unacceptably speculative. It is "too tenuous and conjectural for a valid causal finding of anticompetitive effect and damages." Reading, 631 F.2d at 13.

IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at \*10-11 (footnotes, including as to CFTC implementing rules for Dodd-Frank, omitted).

The PFAC tries again to fill this void. However, the Court's judgment, on close review of the new allegations and the documents from discovery on which these are based, is that the analysis above remains correct. The PFAC's theory of investor injury from the fact that an all-to-all marketplace permitting anonymous trading did not evolve to fruition during 2008-2012 still requires piling too many contingencies and assumptions. It remains far too conjectural to establish antitrust standing for class plaintiffs as efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws. This theory continues to stand in sharp contrast to class plaintiffs' allegations for 2013-2016, which involve a plot to boycott extant platforms, which have joined the investor plaintiffs in bringing this litigation against the Dealers.

The Court therefore affirms the analyses in IRS I and IRS II. The Court adds the following points, relevant to new material in the PFAC or arguments plaintiffs now make:

*First, to [*38]* a large extent, documents the PFAC newly cites reflect the unremarkable fact that, after Dodd-Frank, efforts were underway in the industry to build out the infrastructure necessary to support trading on SEFs consistent with Dodd-Frank's mandates. These included developing IRS clearing solutions accessible to the buy-side. See, e.g., Playforth Decl. Ex. 12 (email draft of CME clearing solution press release, Oct. 18, 2010) at 2 (identifying advisory group of 5 buy-side and 10 dealer participants in CME's clearing solution development, announcing its launch and "live test[ing]" that day with participation by PIMCO "and perhaps one other client," but adding: "[n]ote however there is material additional work required by the CME and the dealers before the platform is fully scalable"); id. Ex. 11 (Bank of America PowerPoint presentation, Dec. 6, 2010) (noting "only approximately 200 days before vanilla CDS and IRS will be mandated to cleared [sic] at an eligible clearinghouse," id. at 2, and noting CME's October 18, 2010 rollout, id. at 6); id. Ex. 10 (Barclays PowerPoint presentation, Dec. 6, 2011) at 5 (reporting the build-out of "BarCap's clearing platform" and "[c]urrently experiencing client ramp-up [*39] in OTC clearing ahead of mandatory dates" in a "Clearing update"); see also PFAC ¶ 446 & nn.535-36, 541 (citing all three documents).

Further, these documents, as defendants observe, reflect only the introduction of such clearing products and their usage on starter trades. See also, e.g., id. Ex. 9 (Citi OTC Derivatives Clearing Response to Caisse De Depot RFI, Dec. 6 2011) at 19 ("Citi's current OTC Derivatives Clearing business . . . reflect[s] our leadership position, albeit in a market with largely ceremonial client activity. Citi expect [sic] this to increase significantly, given the levels of client engagement and mandates won, as clearing becomes mandatory."); PFAC ¶ 446 & nn.537-38 (citing same). They do not reveal the existence of meaningful buy-side clearing infrastructure before Dodd-Frank's mandates. Still less do they reveal the industry's practical readiness for all-to-all anonymous IRS trading independent of Dodd-Frank or before 2013.<sup>4</sup> The fact that some buy-side clearing had begun as the industry moved to implement Dodd-Frank, see id. ¶ 446, similarly does not prove such readiness.

Second, the CFTC's rules and implementing regulations for Dodd-Frank underscore that [*40] major technological and infrastructural changes were needed to ready the industry for broad buy-side IRS clearing, that the industry was not ready for all-to-all anonymous IRS trading until long after Dodd-Frank's passage, and that Dodd-Frank's regulatory mandates were integral to achieving that readiness in 2013. In assessing whether plaintiffs' claim of injury is speculative, the Court takes notice of these historical events and the explanations given by the CFTC for its regulatory actions as reflecting the publicized condition of the market. See, e.g., Staer v. Hartford Fin. Servs. Grp., Inc., 547 F.3d 406, 425 (2d Cir. 2008) ("[I]t is proper to take judicial notice of the fact that . . . regulatory filings contained certain information [including] the publicized condition of the junk bond market during the relevant time period (citations omitted)); Cunningham v. Cornell Univ., 16 Civ. 6525 (PKC), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162420, 2017 WL 4358769, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 29, 2017) ("Courts regularly take notice of publicly available documents during regulatory filings." (citations omitted)). Such is all the more appropriate here insofar as the PFAC draws upon CFTC rule-making and implementing regulations for Dodd-Frank, see, e.g., PFAC ¶¶ 44950 & nn.547-53, and upon a buy-side commenter's submissions to the CFTC, see id. ¶ 442 & n.527; [*41] see also PTAC ¶ 333 & nn.124, 127-28 (citing buy-side comment letters on proposed CFTC rules).<sup>5</sup>

The CFTC's pronouncements reflect its determination that, even with Dodd-Frank's impetus, market infrastructure and buy-side participants were not yet ready for all-to-all SEF trading. These led to the CFTC's deferring until March 2013 the effective date of Dodd-Frank's mandate. See, e.g., Clearing Requirement Determination Under Section 2(h) of the CEA, 77 Fed. Reg. 74,284, 74,323 (Dec. 13, 2012) (IRS clearing requires "startup and ongoing costs relating to technology and infrastructure, new or updated legal agreements, . . . and costs related to collateralization of their positions."); id. at 74,324 ("In response to . . . concerns about legal documentation and operational readiness, the Commission has clarified that compliance with the clearing requirement will not be required for any swaps until March 11, 2013 . . .").<sup>6</sup> That there was "[r]obust [d]emand" from the buy-side for central clearing, PFAC

<sup>4</sup> On the Court's review, the PFAC cites just one pre-Dodd-Frank document reflecting any extant buy-side IRS clearing: a December 17, 2009 press release entitled "LCH.Clearnet Launches Buy-side Clearing for Global OTC Interest Rate Swaps." Playforth Decl. Ex. 14 at 1; see PFAC ¶ 442 & n.512 (citing same). Class plaintiffs have previously stated that "there was no investor clearing of IRS trades before Dodd-Frank." Dkt. 193 (class plaintiffs' consolidated opposition to defendants' motion to dismiss the SAC) at 45. The press release adds: "The extension of this proven service to customers of banks reflects a key pillar of the market changes being contemplated by regulators and legislators worldwide." Playforth Decl. Ex. 14 at I.

<sup>5</sup> For avoidance of doubt, the Court would still hold that plaintiffs' claimed injury for 2008-2012 is too speculative to support antitrust standing even had it not considered these regulatory materials. Neither party here argues that the Court's notice of the fact of regulatory events is improper. See Pl. Mem. at 20 n.74 (disputing defendants' characterization of CFTC comments); Def. Mem. at 14 n.9 (citing cases in support of the Court taking judicial notice of CFTC filings); Pl. Reply at 12 & n. 12 (disputing defendants' characterization of CFTC rules).

<sup>6</sup> Buy-side comment letters were to the same effect. See, e.g., Managed Funds Ass'n, Comment Letter on Proposed Clearing and Execution Implementation Rule, 76 Fed. Reg. 58,186, and Proposed Documentation and Margining Implementation Rule, 76 Fed. Reg. 58,176, at 2 (Nov. 4, 2011) (recognizing "current structural and economic barriers to widespread clearing [of swaps]"), <https://www.managedfunds.org/wp-content/uploads/2011/11/CFTC-Implementation-Rules-on-Clearing-Execution-Documentation-and-Margining-Final-MFA-Letter.pdf>; Def. Mem. at 14 n.9 (citing Vanguard Comment Letter on 76 Fed. Reg. 58,186, RN 3038-AD60, at 4, 6 (Nov. 4, 2011) ("time [is] needed" to "develop industry infrastructure," "implement complex operational connections," "educate clients," and "negotiate new trading agreements"—a "process [that] is so time intensive")); id. (citing Ass'n of Inst. Investors, Comment Letter on 76 Fed. Reg. 58,186, RIN 308-AD60, at 3 (Nov. 4, 2011) (a "voluminous amount of documentation" is necessary, which "requires negotiations and agreements [to] be made across thousands of accounts")); id. (citing Coal. for Derivatives End-Users, Comment Letter on 76 Fed. Reg. 58,186, RIN 3038-AD60, at 1, 4 (Nov. 4, 2011) (claiming more time is needed to put in place "technological connections" and legal agreements)); id. (citing Inv. Co.

¶¶ 440-46, does not make less speculative the claim that, absent alleged misconduct, this costly infrastructure would have grown up in 2008, or 2009, or 2010, or any time before Dodd-Frank compelled it. Tasking a jury to gauge the stack of many unknowable questions [*42] embedded in the PFAC's alternative history—for example, whether a sufficient number of buy-side entities would have invested in such infrastructure and undertaken such collateralization to make all-to-all anonymous trading of IRSs a reality as of a particular date—would unavoidably invite an exercise in guesswork, not reliable fact-finding.

Third, in claiming to have cured the problem of speculative injury noted in the SAC and PTAC, plaintiffs emphasize the PFAC's allegations that Dealers acted with the intent to slow the evolution of certain offerings (of Tradeweb, CME, Tradition, Bloomberg, and ICAP) which had the potential to lead towards all-to-all trading. See, e.g., PFAC ¶¶ 19, 153, 230-39, 249, 325-27, 352-53, 392-93. But these intentions do not establish the market's readiness for such trading at any time, including 2008-2012. Some PFAC allegations, in fact, describe Dealer actions aimed at post-Dodd-Frank (and indeed post-2012) platforms. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 325, 331-40 (allegations that Dealers, after Dodd-Frank, were concerned that Bloomberg would open a SEF permitting all-to-all IRS trading, and since 2012 have boycotted certain Bloomberg platforms); [*43] id. ¶¶ 344-73 (allegations that after Tradition announced in 2010 its intention to open a SEF-compliant platform, Dealers acted to take control over Tradition's SEF, did so by September 2013, and today govern it so as to frustrate all-to-all anonymous trading).

To be sure, the PFAC (even more than prior complaints) alleges instances in which Dealer personnel expressed hostility to all-to-all trading or acted with intent to discourage the market's evolution in that direction. But these do not show that, before 2013, the market was ready for this transformation. As the implementation of Dodd-Frank demonstrated, even when backed by regulatory mandates, the buy-side did not adapt on the CFTC's required timetable, necessitating an extension of the mandates until March 2013. Statements by Dealers in 2008-2012 fearing the eventual emergence of all-to-all trading do not mean that this market structure was then imminently viable.

The PFAC's claims as to 2008-2012 are therefore futile for lack of antitrust standing.

2. Claims of a Per Se § 1 Violation in 2008-2012

The PFAC, like plaintiffs' earlier complaints, dominantly pursues a § 1 theory of per se illegality. The Court first reviews its rulings as [*44] to the SAC's and PTAC's allegations in support of a per se theory, before assessing those in the PFAC.

a. The SAC

In IRS I, the Court sustained plaintiffs' per se theory as to 2013-2016, in that the SAC and JTSAC alleged "a recognized type of per se unlawful § 1 conspiracy: a group boycott," 261 F. Supp. 3d at 472, and parallel conduct and circumstantial evidence that made plausible the inference of a Dealer boycott aimed at the three new SEF platforms that offered all-to-all IRS trading, id. at 472-77. As to 2008-2012, however, the SAC's theory was based not on a boycott—for no all-to-all IRS trading platforms then existed—nor on meaningful parallel conduct, but largely on the Dealers' acquisition in 2007 alongside Thomson Corporation of a controlling stake in Tradeweb, allegedly in order to terminate a plan there to open such a platform.

The Court found the SAC's claim of aper se § 1 violation deficient for two reasons. First, its factual allegations as to the existence of such a plan at Tradeweb and of the Dealers' agreement to terminate it were hazy and conclusory.

Inst., Comment Letter on 76 Fed. Reg. 58,186, RIN 3038-AD60, at 2, 4 (Nov. 4, 2011) (stating that the CFTC "significantly underestimate[d] the time needed for the swap market to transition to the new framework" and that "[t]hese time periods are woefully insufficient"); id. (citing Fin. Servs. Roundtable, Comment Letter on 76 Fed. Reg. 58,186, RIN 3038-AD60, at 5 (Nov. 4, 2011) ("[E]stablishing clearing arrangements is resource-intensive")).

Id. at 466. Second, even assuming a well-pled agreement among Tradeweb's Dealer owners to terminate such a plan, the SAC did not plead facts under which an agreement would [*45] be per se unlawful:

The SAC's allegations as to Project Fusion do not fit into any category of agreement recognized as per se illegal. It alleges a decision among participating Dealer Defendants as to the strategic direction of a single financial technology company which they majority-owned pursuant to a joint venture. But, viewing the operation of a legitimate joint venture as akin to that of a single firm, modern antitrust law evaluates such joint conduct—including the creation of the joint venture itself, its business focus, its product selection, and its pricing—under the rule of reason, with the pleading requirements that standard imposes.

Id. at 467 (citations and footnote omitted). The Court added:

Plaintiffs do not cite any case in which a decision by competitors to invest in or acquire control over a business, or to direct the activities of a business, in the context of a legitimate joint venture, has been evaluated under the per se standard. And the SAC does not plead facts that remove the Project Fusion joint venture from Tradeweb, the subject of the joint venture, became a horizontal competitor of the Dealer Defendants which thereafter conspired with them. And Tradeweb was not such [*46] a competitor: As alleged, it was a provider of electronic trading platforms, not a market maker. And the SAC does not adequately plead that the Project Fusion joint venture was an illegitimate shell that offered no efficiency enhancements and served only to mask concerted conduct. The SAC's allegations as to Tradeweb—including as to non-defendant Thomson's minority-ownership of it, the Dealers' infusion of $280 million in it, and its existence and operation from 2007 forward—would not permit such an inference.

b. The PTAC

In the PTAC, plaintiffs based their theory of a per se violation of § 1 during 2008-2012 on two collaborations among Dealers.

The first was, again, "Project Fusion." But, the Court held in IRS II, the PTAC failed to rehabilitate the claims as to that arrangement. The PTAC had abandoned the SAC's conclusory claim that "Tradeweb was planning to introduce electronic all-to-all trading to the IRS market," IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at \* 11 (quoting the SAC), replacing it with the claim that Tradeweb was gradually upgrading its swap trading capabilities and was "primed to adopt all-to-all trading," id. (quoting PTAC ¶ 102), and that unspecified persons at Tradeweb had discussed [*47] doing so, id. (quoting PTAC ¶ 223). However, the Court held that "[t]hese reconfigured allegations about amorphous 'discussions' and Tradeweb's being 'primed' to adopt all-to-all trading, [PTAC] ¶ 102, again fall far short of plausibly alleging plaintiffs' critical background premise: that Tradeweb was planning in 2007 to launch all-to-all IRS trading." [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*12](#) (quoting IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 466); see also id. ("The PTAC's theory of a plot to block a Tradeweb plan to introduce all-to-all IRS trading thus starts with the ill-pled premise that there ever was such a plan.").

In any event, the Court held, the PTAC failed to rectify the other pleading deficiencies in the SAC's "Project Fusion" allegations. The PTAC dubbed the "Project Fusion" joint venture a "sham" and a "formalistic shell." But the facts pled were inconsistent with these labels, including:

"(1) The Dealers invested $280 million in Tradeweb; (2) they owned Tradeweb alongside existing owner Thomson; (3) Tradeweb, post-acquisition, was organized consistent with customary corporate formalities; (4) Tradeweb proceeded to expand other aspects of its trading platforms; and (5) its decision not to offer an all-to-all trading platform until 2013 put it on par [*48] with all other trading platforms of the day, including . . . Tera, Javelin, [t]rueEx, and Bloomberg."

*Id. at * 12* (quoting IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 468 n.17). Accordingly, the Court held, "even assuming a well-pled agreement among owners to terminate a Tradeweb plan to open an all-to-all IRS trading platform, the Project Fusion joint venture as alleged remains subject to review only under the Rule of Reason." Id. (citation omitted).

The second basis for the PTAC's claim of per se illegal conduct in 2008-2012 involved CME. The PTAC alleged that, in 2006, CME had acquired Swapstream, a trading platform focused on a limited number of dealer-to-dealer IRS swaps in Europe; that CME had hoped to transform Swapstream into a worldwide electronic platform for all-to-all IRS trading; but that CME could not secure Dealer agreement to participate. [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*13](#). CME then began joint negotiations with the Dealers, who were collectively represented by Edward Rosen of the Cleary Gottlieb law firm. These negotiations, in which the Dealers sought 'governance' over the platform, did not bear fruit. See id. (quoting PTAC ¶ 155). Eventually, CME initiated joint negotiations with the Dealers, again represented jointly by Rosen, regarding a "clearing-only solution" [*49] that would be "open to the buy-side." See id. (quoting PTAC ¶¶ 160-61). These "Project Magellan" negotiations led to a written agreement in which Dealers agreed to provide minimum clearing volume to CME in exchange for revenue sharing. The PTAC alleged that the agreement contained a "poison pill" that effectively disabled CME from launching an execution platform, by allowing the Dealers to "capture nearly all the profits." Id. (quoting PTAC ¶ 179).

In IRS II, the Court rejected this set of allegations, too, as a basis for a claim of a per se violation of § 1 during 2008-2012. Various PTAC factual allegations were contradicted by pled or cognizable facts. See [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*14](#). These included the PTAC's implication that Swapstream had launched a trading platform, which a close reading revealed had not happened, and its errant characterization of the "Project Magellan" agreement to contain a "poison pill" provision to neuter any CME plan to launch an IRS trading platform. See id. ("By its plain terms, the Magellan Agreement did not 'poison' CME's plans to launch an IRS clearinghouse."). The PTAC's discussion of CME also contained a significant number of conclusory or general allegations, including [*50] as to central allegations for the period before the Dealers' joint, counseled negotiations with CME had begun. [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*15](#).

As to the PTAC's well-pled allegations of collective action among Dealers regarding Swapstream, the Court noted, these "are centered on the period after joint negotiations between CME and the Dealers are alleged to have begun." Id. This activity, the Court held, did not fit within a category that courts applying § 1 had held susceptible to per se condemnation:

In that period, as pled, discussions and lawyered negotiations had begun between CME and the Dealers to reach agreement regarding the terms under which participating Dealers collectively would participate in CME's Swapstream platform. As reviewed above, the parleys during this period occurred in two phases: regarding (1) CME's initial proposal to revamp Swapstream; and (2) CME's ensuing proposal—which resulted in a negotiated business arrangement memorialized in the Magellan Agreement—to launch a stand-alone clearinghouse.

This paradigm of collective negotiations between multiple collaborating competitors and a shared counterparty or counterparties to explore facially legitimate business arrangements does not lend itself [*51] to per se condemnation. See, e.g., Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 501, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 \(1988\) (standard setting is subject to the Rule of Reason). As the Court reviewed in its discussion of Tradeweb, legitimate joint business ventures, including at the point of their creation, are subject to the Rule of Reason, and "business practice[s]" involving the "core activity of [a] joint venture . . . do not fall within the narrow category of activity that is per se unlawful." Texaco, Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 8, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 \(2006\); see id. at n.1; Nw. Wholesaler Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 298, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1985\) ("mere allegation of a concerted refusal to deal does not suffice" to merit per se condemnation "because not all concerted refusals to deal are predominantly competitive"); Major League Baseball Props., Inc. v. Salvino, 542 F.3d 290, 316 \(2d Cir. 2008\) ("Per se treatment is not appropriate . . . where the economic and competitive effects of the challenged practice are unclear"); see also In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 467 (collecting cases and holding "Project Fusion" subject to Rule of Reason review).

The facts pled reveal potential pro-competitive justifications from the collaboration here in connection with the Dealers' negotiations with CME, enough to persuade the Court that the conduct alleged—in contrast to a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy or the boycott pled against Javelin, Tera, and [t]rueEx—is not by nature suitable to condemnation per se. Both sets of discussions [*52] among the Dealers and CME had the potential, inter alia, (1) to launch a new venture by assuring CME of the critical mass of Dealer support it claimed to need; (2) to help CME set standards for a new modality of IRS trading acceptable to a broad range of market participants; and, (3) as in other business contexts involving negotiations with a swath of industry players, to avoid the inefficiencies associated with duplicative one-on-one negotiations. See, e.g., PTAC ¶ 135 (noting CME's goal to enlist one or more Dealers from each of "Tier 1" and "Tier 2").

That the second stage of Dealer/CME negotiations led to a counseled agreement between CME and most (although not all) Dealer Defendants also weighs against finding per se anti-competitiveness. The Magellan Agreement's text, too, reveals a pro-competitive justification: The revenue-sharing pact enabled the introduction of a novel clearing platform whose standing was enhanced by the agreed participation of reputable Dealers who agreed to provide minimum clearing volume to the CME. See id. ¶¶ 160, 179-180.

c. The PFAC

In pursuing a theory of per se § 1 illegality as to 2008-2012, the PFAC again principally relies on the [*53] Tradeweb and CME episodes, while also adding allegations about episodes relating to several other entities, discussed below.

As to Tradeweb and CME, the PFAC reorders and re-packages the PTAC's allegations—e.g., referring to the two episodes as embodying a "consortium strategy" across Dealers, see, e.g., PFAC ¶¶ 8,141-43—but adds limited new factual allegations. These do not disturb the Court's earlier assessment that these complex dealings do not fall into a recognized category of conduct which the courts have condemned per se. The Court holds, as before, that any § 1 assessment of the balance between the pro-competitive purposes and anti-competitive effects of these ventures must instead be under the rule of reason.

Tradeweb: The PFAC claims the "Project Fusion" joint venture was illegitimate because participating Dealers were motivated, in gaining control of Tradeweb and in setting its course, to shape IRS market developments so as to reduce the possibility that exchange-like trading would emerge. See, e.g., PFAC ¶¶ 15-17, 142, 154-55; see also Pl. Mem. at 8 (collecting PFAC allegations as to Dealers' aim to, inter alia, "negate[] the threat" of IRS exchange trading, id. (quoting PFAC [*54] ¶ 155 (alteration in original)) and "slow the inevitable slide to all-to-all," id. at 9 (quoting PFAC ¶ 191)). The PFAC claims that Dealers later ran Tradeweb "as a utility," preferring the interests of its Dealer majority owners over profit-maximization. PFAC ¶ 195. These allegations that the Dealers harbored such sectarian intentions track allegations in earlier complaints. See, e.g., IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 447-49 (discussing SAC and JTSAC).

The Court credits as well-pled that the Dealer personnel quoted in the PFAC had the intentions alleged: to steer Tradeweb's evolution, and to influence the evolution of the market, in a direction that maximized Dealers' economic interests, including to preserve trading margins. But whether per se condemnation under § 1 is available does not turn on subjective intent. The availability of the per se rule does not turn on case-specific determinations about the quality of evidence of (or pleadings as to) intent. It does not turn on the adjectives or metaphors used by competitors in emails. It is a categorical doctrine. Per se condemnation is available only when courts' "considerable experience" teaches that the category of restraint at issue has "manifestly anticompetitive effects" and [*55] "lack[s] any redeeming virtue." Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 \(2007\) (quotation marks and citations omitted); see also NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 137-38, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1998\) (declining to apply per se rule to alleged boycott claim despite allegation that defendants acted with a "special anticompetitive motive" to force the plaintiff out of business; Court did not "find a convincing reason why the presence of this special motive should lead to the application of the per se rule"); cf. Conn. Ironworkers Emp's Ass'n v. New England Reg'l Council of Carpenters, 324 F. Supp. 3d 293, 305 \(D. Conn 2018\) ("[A]llegedly pernicious motives on their own do not suffice to overcome the 'presumption in favor of [the] rule-of-reason standard.'" (quoting Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 726, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 \(1988\)).

Here, for the reasons given in IRS I and IRS II, the collaboration alleged in "Project Fusion" does not correspond to any category of activity among horizontal competitors that courts to date have condemned per se. It cannot be condemned on its face as an act of price-fixing, market allocation, or—in contrast to the Dealers' alleged actions in 2013-2016 towards the new opened SEFs—as a group boycott. Rather, its structure is that of a capitalized and operational joint venture. It cannot facially be condemned as an illegitimate sham.

The Court of course does not and cannot on the pleadings assess the net competitive impact of the "Project Fusion" [*56] joint venture. But whatever the evidence adduced on a well-pled rule of reason claim might have shown as to the balance of pro- and anti-competitive effects, plaintiffs' pleadings themselves reveal the venture's potential pro-competitive effects. These include, as noted, that after participants invested $280 million in Tradeweb's fledgling platform, Tradeweb expanded aspects of its trading operations. See IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at \*12 (quoting IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 468 n.17).<sup>7</sup> IRS I invited plaintiffs to "cite any case in which a decision by competitors to invest in or acquire control over a business, or to direct the activities of the business, in the context of a legitimate joint venture, has been evaluated under the per se standard." IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 467-68. Plaintiffs have not done so.<sup>8</sup>

CME: The PFAC's allegations, though re-sequenced, are in substance quite similar to those in the PTAC, including as to the successive rounds of joint negotiations between Dealers and CME on which the Court focused in IRS II. See PFAC ¶¶ 223-56 (first round followed by abandonment of Swapstream plan to open all-to-all platform); id. ¶¶ 257-93 (second round followed by execution of "Project Magellan" agreement, in which Dealers [*57] agreed to provide minimum clearing volume to CME in exchange for revenue sharing and opening of CME clearinghouse for buy-side IRS trades).

For the same reasons noted in IRS II, these business arrangements also do not resemble any that courts, based on considerable experience, have condemned as per se anti-competitive. See IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at \*15 (collecting cases). Plaintiffs do not cite any case in which a court has per se condemned a horizontal collaboration that is structurally or thematically similar to that pled. Nor do they cite any case so condemning a business agreement meaningfully akin to the written, counseled agreement with CME that resulted from these negotiations. Further making per se condemnation unavailable is the presence, on the pleadings, of the potential pro-competitive justifications noted in IRS II for these joint negotiations and outcomes. See id.

<sup>7</sup> Consistent with this, defendants note that documents cited in the PFAC reflect that after the Dealers' investment per "Project Fusion," Tradeweb's trading volume in IRSs, credit default swaps, and several other asset classes grew substantially from a de minimis base. See Def. Mem. at 28 & n.20 (quoting documents cited by the PFAC reflecting that Tradeweb IRS revenue grew from approximately $1.9 million in 2006 to approximately $21 million in 2009); cf. id. at 28 (quoting documents cited by the PFAC that articulate "Project Fusion" participants' purposes for investing as including launching "the first global trading network to offer clients the ability to trade any asset class in any currency on one platform 24 hours a day"). The PFAC contains allegations about post-"Project Fusion" business decisions by Tradeweb, for example, delaying the launch date of "click to trade" functionality, see PFAC ¶¶ 158, 181-87, or as to the direction of the later Dealerweb platform, see id. ¶¶ 188-95. The parties debate whether these later events bear on whether the "Project Fusion" joint venture was per se illegal. Compare Def. Mem. at 29-30 & n.22 with Pl. Reply at 19 & nn.34-35. The Court treats the PFAC as alleging that the joint venture, from its inception, was per se illegal, and that ensuing decisions by Tradeweb, given its control by Dealers, shed light on the motives of the Dealer participants in that venture. As noted, however, the pled facts, in totality, do not permit the venture to be condemned per se.

<sup>8</sup> For many of the same reasons, "quick look" analysis is unavailable here. It does not apply to collaborations among competitors that "might plausibly be thought to have a net procompetitive effect, or possibly no effect at all on competition." Major League Baseball Props., Inc. v. Salvino, Inc., 542 F.3d 290, 318 \(2d Cir. 2008\) (quoting Cal. Dental Ass 'n v. FTC, 526 U.S. 756, 771, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 \(1999\)).

To be sure, the PFAC adds concrete allegations as to the motives of participating Dealer personnel preceding and during the sequential joint discussions with CME. See, e.g., PFAC ¶¶ 230, 237, 239-43, 256, 293. As with Tradeweb, it is, in general, well-pled that these persons aspired to delay evolution of exchange trading, in favor of existing [*58] trading norms. But, again, as with Tradeweb, whether per se condemnation under § 1 is available turns on judicial experience with a category of business arrangement, not on participants' mentes reae. Otherwise, business arrangements that the courts have not condemned as per se and that may after discovery prove net pro-competitive could be held illegal at the threshold. This could deter economically worthwhile conduct. See, e.g., NYNEX, 525 U.S. at 137.

Otherwise, the main substantive change from the PTAC as to the CME narrative is that the PFAC drops the allegation that a "Project Magellan" agreement provision (§ 5.05) was a "poison pill"—an allegation the Court found inconsistent with the agreement's text. See IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at \*14. The PFAC now assails § 5.05 as "so onerous in practice that it effectively prevents CME from launching an IRS trading platform," PFAC ¶ 279, on account of its requirement of consultation with Dealer founding members over trading protocols, id., and its "most favored nation" and "right of first refusal" clauses, id. ¶ 280; see also id. ¶¶ 281-82 (discussing the effect of these clauses). The parties debate whether these terms have potential pro-competitive justifications. See Def. Mem. at 32 n.26 ("obvious" justifications [*59] include "incentiviz[ing] the Magellan dealers to support the new IRS clearing house by granting them a potential right to participate in the upside if CME successfully leveraged the new clearinghouse into a vertically integrated trading platform" (citing federal antitrust guidelines)); Pl. Reply at 22 n.43 (distinguishing guidelines as inapposite). In assessing the availability of per se condemnation of "Project Magellan," the Court, however, takes a holistic focus. For the reasons stated in IRS II, the overall agreement negotiated among the Dealers and CME is properly evaluated under the rule of reason. Whether any provision of that agreement, including § 5.05, is pro-or anti-competitive would form part of the rule of reason inquiry.

"A unitary conspiracy": Plaintiffs separately argue that they have alleged a "unitary conspiracy" that predated 2013 and should not be "forced to prosecute a truncated conspiracy." Pl. Reply at 1, 3. The import of this argument is not clear. The Court construes plaintiffs to argue that because they have alleged a viable claim of per se unlawful conduct for 2013-2016, and because they have also alleged collaboration among Dealers in the preceding five years, [*60] they are entitled to application of the per se rule for their allegations as to collaboration in 2008-2012.

To the extent this argument seeks to relieve plaintiffs of the pleading burdens imposed by the rule of reason for the Dealers' pre-2013 business arrangements as alleged, it is wrong. The character of the Dealer collaboration alleged in 2008-2012 is fundamentally different from that alleged in 2013-2016. For 2013-2016, plaintiffs have alleged conduct among horizontal competitors (a group boycott aimed at extant platforms) of a kind that is quintessentially unlawful per se. It does not follow, however, that earlier agreements among Dealers of a different character (e.g., the "Project Fusion" and "Project Magellan" joint ventures)—even if motivated by a common desire to have the market maintain name-disclosed RFQ trading and not evolve towards anonymous all-to-all trading—were therefore per se illegal. Plaintiffs have not shown that those earlier joint arrangements are of a kind that judicial experience has condemned as per se unlawful. To be sure, pre-2013 dealings among Dealers may prove admissible at a trial to shed light, inter alia, on the existence or nature of agreements among [*61] them during 2013-2016. But plaintiffs have not offered any authority why the fact of viably pled claims of per se illegal conduct in 2013-2016 alters the analysis that antitrust law uses to assess earlier agreements of a different character. See, e.g., City of Groton v. Conn. Light & Power Co., 662 F.2d 921, 928 \(2d Cir. 1981\) (even where alleged conduct is "interrelated and interdependent," courts must "analyze the various issues individually").

ICAP, Tradition, Bloomberg, and IDCG: Finally, although the Tradeweb and CME episodes remain the heart of plaintiffs' pre-2013 claims, the PFAC alleges joint Dealer conduct towards four other entities: ICAP, Tradition, Bloomberg, and IDCG. The Court elaborates on these allegations later, in the course of discussing delay and prejudice. The PFAC's allegations as to these episodes do not, however, warrant sustaining the claim of a per se violation of § 1 spanning 2008-2012.

As pled, two of the four episodes—those involving ICAP and Tradition—centrally involve a facially legitimate joint venture between Dealers and an inter-dealer broker. As such, these arrangements cannot be condemned per se, even if the motivations of participants were, as plaintiffs claim, to "[m]aintain the [s]tatus quo." Pl. Mem. at 26 (quotation [*62] marks omitted). Under the authorities above, they are to be evaluated under the rule of reason. As to ICAP, the PFAC alleges that ICAP developed an electronic trading platform (i-Swap) for European dealer-to-dealer trading. PFAC ¶ 397. It initially achieved "no traction" but, in 2011, ICAP, in "Project Snowflake," recruited three Dealers (Barclays, Deutsche Bank, JP Morgan) to support (by streaming prices to it) a revamped i-Swap trading platform in exchange for an equity stake and governance rights. Id. ¶ 402. i-Swap launched in the United States when the new SEF rules took effect in 2013. See id. ¶ 410. Plaintiffs allege that these Dealers have used their influence to induce ICAP not to open an all-to-all trading platform. See id. ¶¶ 394-413. As to Tradition, the PFAC alleges that other Dealers entered into a "Trad-X" joint venture with Tradition, in which they too agreed to support a new Trad-X trading platform in exchange for equity and governance rights. See id. ¶¶ 341-73. Trad-X launched in the United States in 2013. See id. ¶ 357.<sup>9</sup>

The PFAC's new allegations about a plot against non-party Bloomberg also do not support a per se claim for 2008-2012. The PFAC's allegations [*63] as to Bloomberg overwhelmingly relate to 2013-2016. Specifically, the PFAC alleges that Dealer personnel met with Bloomberg in late 2011 and early 2012 to discuss Bloomberg's forthcoming SEF and conveyed that they might support Tradeweb if a partnership between Bloomberg with the Dealers were not arranged. Id. ¶¶ 325-36. It alleges that, in 2013, Bloomberg decided to launch an anonymous CLOB, known as BSEF, which allowed RFQ trading and received CFTC approval, but that the Dealers, viewing BSEF as a threat to develop into an all-to-all trading platform, today "refuse to provide liquidity" to BSEF. Id. ¶ 340; see id. ¶¶ 338-40. The PFAC's only allegation as to Bloomberg services offered before 2013 is that, in 2011, Bloomberg extended an OTC trading screen called ALLQ to IRSs, id. ¶ 326, but that Goldman Sachs, "along with several other banks," withheld quote streams from ALLQ, id. ¶ 330 (quoting Playforth Decl. Ex. 43 (Goldman Sachs offsite management committee meeting slide notes) at 4) (emphasis omitted). The PFAC does not, however, allege any other parallel conduct or plus factors indicating that the decision by Goldman Sachs and other unspecified Dealers not to do business with [*64] ALLQ was coordinated. And, as defendants note, a document quoted in the PFAC appears to contradict this claim of Dealer non-participation, stating that "7 of the top 10 [dealers] "opted in" to ALLQ at its launch, and by 2013, '[a]ll dealers [were] live' on ALLQ." Def. Mem. at 42 & n.39 (quoting Playforth Decl. Exs. 40,41).<sup>10</sup>

Of the four newly alleged episodes, the PFAC's claims alleging a boycott are strongest as to IDCG. The PFAC alleges that IDCG was a small clearinghouse which in 2007 developed a promising clearing solution but which by <sup>9</sup> Apart from the fact that the "Project Snowflake" and "Trad-X" joint ventures do not resemble any of the species of arrangements among horizontal competitors that courts have condemned per se, defendants note a number of other problematic features of plaintiffs' claims of a Dealer conspiracy along the lines alleged. See Def. Mem. at 44-47. An example as to ICAP: In conflict with the PFAC's assertion that ICAP has "restricted all of its IRS trading platforms in the U.S. to dealers alone," PFAC ¶ 411, the SAC suggested that i-Swap's U.S. platform achieved a significant share of SEF trades and, in accordance with Dodd-Frank's "impartial access" mandate, has been "open for IRS trading by the buy side" since its launch, see IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 484-85. An example as to Trad-X: documents cited in the PFAC identify the group of Dealers supporting Trad-X as a "rival group" to the three Dealers supporting i-Swap, Playforth Decl. Ex. 50 (email from JP Morgan representative about "Project Snowflake" meeting), and state that "Trad-X will be a counter force to other platforms such as ICAP's i-SWAP, which is mainly supported by DB, JPM and BarCap," Playforth Decl. Ex. 51 (Credit Suisse PowerPoint presentation on "Project Trad-X").

<sup>10</sup> As with ICAP and Tradition, defendants identify other problematic features of the alleged plot among Dealers against Bloomberg. Def. Mem. at 41-44. An example as to the CLOB allegations: Defendants note that these rest almost entirely on allegations that there is minimal trading on this platform. The PFAC, however, lacks circumstantial evidence that this limited trading resulted from inter-Dealer coordination. And documents cited in the PFAC suggest independent reasons for the limited trading, i.e., that "many [buyside firms are] accustomed to receiving preferential quotes offered as part of the relationships they enjoy with their dealers," "prices being quoted for RFQs are very tight," Playforth Decl. Ex. 49 (internal JP Morgan email exchanges) at 2-3, and "most clients like to [RFQ] to find dealer axes that might not be reflected in the firm price," id. Ex. 48 (Citigroup chat exchanges) at 6; see also PFAC ¶ 570 & n.617 (acknowledging that Bloomberg "does not promote" its CLOB and offers it at least partially because "Dodd-Frank requires that all SEFs operate and offer an order book").

2011 had not "gain[ed] any traction." PFAC ¶ 314 (quotation marks and footnote omitted). The PFAC does not plead any non-conclusory claim of concerted Dealer activity towards IDCG until July 2010. That Dealers did not use IDCG before Dodd-Frank, despite pitches IDCG had made to them, id. ¶ 305, does not support inferring collective action. See *IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at *17* ("[P]arallel lack of interest is not indicative of an inter-Dealer agreement" because, "[a]s pled, such conduct was consistent with any Dealer's independent self-interest." (citation omitted)). However, the PFAC claims, in July 2010, after IDCG cleared a starter trade with emerging SEF Javelin, PFAC ¶ 308, [*65] Dealers exchanged emails "trying to figure out who was involved in Javelin and IDCG," id. ¶ 309-10. Thereafter, on August 11, 2010, a "bank group" meeting was held at Deutsche Bank involving representatives of six Dealers. Id. ¶ 311. The notes from the meeting state, inter alia, that "banks will oppose moves which move significant volumes to exchanges." Id. (quoting Playforth Decl. Ex. 38 at 2). Thereafter, the PFAC alleges, Dealers "kept up their engagement with IDCG on the surface," id. ¶ 315, but continued to give it limited support until its sale in 2012, id. ¶¶ 322-23.

Whether this plausibly pleads a per se agreement among the six Dealers thereafter to boycott IDCG presents a close question. On the one hand, the PFAC does not allege that these Dealers changed their behavior towards IDCG: both before and afterwards, as alleged, they gave limited support to IDCG. And, as defendants note, the notes from the August 11, 2010 meeting, in the main, address a different matter entirely from IDCG. They describe a meeting between LCH and its board-member banks whose purpose was to consider "how LCH could succeed in the US market." Playforth Decl. Ex. 38 at 1. They mention IDCG solely as one [*66] of a number of potential U.S. "partners" for LCH; the notes' reference to opposing "mov[ing] significant volumes to exchanges" appears in a list of general topics as to which "[t]here was broad agreement," id. at 2; see also id. at 2-3 (stating that the "discussion focused on the need for and attractiveness of US partners" for LCH; listing points of "agreement" among LCH and its board about potential partners; identifying five "potential partners," including IDCG, and indicating that one "[n]ext step[]" was to "investigate" IDCG). No aspect of the meeting notes other than the excerpt quoted in the PFAC supports the PFAC's theory. On the other hand, that excerpt is certainly suggestive. Significant, too, is that IDCG had just provided clearing assistance on a maiden trade the month earlier to Javelin. The Court has held, in IRS I, that plaintiffs have adequately pled a plot among Dealers to boycott and destroy Javelin's post-Dodd-Frank SEF. The PFAC's claim that certain Dealers exchanged emails about Javelin and IDCG after IDCG assisted with Javelin's starter trade makes more plausible that the Dealers that met thereafter and discussed IDCG agreed to shun it on account of its assistance to Javelin. The [*67] Court thus will assume arguendo that a plausible agreement has been pled among these Dealers effective August 2010 and lasting until IDCG's purchase in 2012 to continue not to utilize (i.e., to boycott) IDCG's services.<sup>11</sup>

However, this strand is alone among the many facts that the PFAC pleads as to 2008-2012 in (arguably) plausibly pleading an instance of a per se unlawful agreement. No others do so. The IDCG episode as pled involves an agreement among a subset of Dealers from August 2010 until 2012 to continue to make limited use of a single clearinghouse that had theretofore been largely in a state of disuse. It does not and cannot support the sweeping claim of per se illegality pursued by the PFAC as to 2008-2012: of a five-year agreement among all Dealer Defendants to boycott a host of concerns with some potential to one day facilitate all-to-all anonymous trading.

The Court, therefore, holds that to the extent that the PFAC claims that defendants' conduct during 2008-2012 was per se illegal, it is futile.

B. Delay, Prejudice, and Absence of Good Cause

<sup>11</sup> The PFAC's allegations as to later events regarding IDCG are of a different nature. It alleges that IDCG later unsuccessfully sought a consortium investment from Dealers and others, but that, because the Dealers insisted on excessive equity and governance rights, no agreement was reached. PFAC ¶ 316. This negotiation does not describe a boycott; any claim as to it would be analyzed, if at all, under the rule of reason. The allegation that, in 2012, IDCG sold itself to the Dealer-controlled clearinghouse LCH.Clearnet, which "neutralize[d] IDCG," id. ¶ 322, also does not describe per se unlawful conduct.

The Court next considers the related questions whether granting leave to add the PFAC's claims covering 2008 through 2012 would [*68] (1) unduly delay this litigation and (2) cause prejudice to the defense. After considered review, the Court holds yes as to both. The scale of delay and prejudice would far exceed that which permitting the PTAC's claims as to these five years would have caused. The Court further holds that plaintiffs have not shown good cause for pursuing these claims at this late date.

1. Delay

The issue of delay is framed by the chronology of this litigation.

Fact discovery began upon the July 28, 2017 decision in IRS I. Today, the deadline for fact discovery is April 10, 2019, some four weeks from now. Dkt. 549.

Throughout, fact discovery has entailed extended negotiations among the parties, and occasionally with third parties, as to scope and parameters. It has entailed resolution by the Court of intermittent disputes regarding such discovery. See, e.g., Dkt. 266 (October 10, 2017 decision); Dkt. 296 (October 24, 2017 decision); Dkt. 322 (January 8, 2018 decision); Dkt. 492 (August 22, 2018 decision); Dkt. 494 (August 22, 2018 decision); Dkt. 550 (September 21, 2018 decision); Dkt. 583 (October 19, 2018 decision); Dkt. 618 (November 13, 2018 decision); Dkt. 686 (January 23, 2019 decision). The Court [*69] has held monthly status calls with counsel, beginning in November 2017. Dkt. 268. These have enabled the Court informally to resolve, or guide the resolution of, many other discovery disputes (some concrete and some inchoate). These calls have kept the Court abreast of the discovery process.

Early in the fact discovery process, the Court resolved a dispute particularly important here: as to the start date of document discovery for the surviving (2013-2016) claims. Dkt. 266 (October 10, 2017 decision). Class plaintiffs had sought an order requiring defendants to produce documents created on or after January 1, 2009; defendants had proposed a start date of January 1, 2012. See Dkt. 265 (defendants' letter). The Court chose an intermediate start date: July 21, 2010, the date of Dodd-Frank's passage. Dkt. 266 at 2. This date, the Court held, balanced plaintiffs' interest in discovering defendants' "pre-conspiracy dealings" against the burdens of obliging the 11 defendant groups to make pre-conspiracy discovery. Id. Explaining why documents created after July 21, 2010 were more likely relevant than those created before, the Court stated: "[A]fter Dodd-Frank was enacted, it became materially [*70] more foreseeable that electronic all-to-all trading platforms for IRSs would one day develop." Id. The July 21, 2010 start date framed the parties' ensuing negotiations and many ensuing rulings on fact discovery disputes. These included an omnibus ruling on January 8, 2018, which resolved whether, and to what extent, a host of topics pertinent to events in 2007-2012 that plaintiffs sought to explore were relevant to the surviving claims. Dkt. 322.

Under the court-approved case management plan, the deadline for substantial completion of document discovery, as extended, was June 29, 2018.<sup>12</sup> As of December 2018, the parties and third parties had produced more than four million documents. See Brockett Decl. ¶ 6 & n.l. In addition, substantial data compilations, largely capturing the terms of IRS trades between 2013 and 2016, have been produced from multiple sources.

On October 26, 2018, plaintiffs filed the pending motion for leave to file the PFAC. Dkts. 590-92. The motion was filed more than eight months after the February 21, 2018 deadline set for amended pleadings in the case management plan. Briefing on the motion was completed in late December 2018, 10 months after that deadline.

<sup>12</sup> Document discovery continued after the substantial completion deadline. Today, as reflected on the Court's most recent status calls with counsel and counsel's submissions in advance of those calls, only discrete areas of document discovery remain incomplete. For example, the parties continue to discuss the adequacy of entries on certain privilege logs. Both sides have also sought—and the Court has authorized—discovery from custodians abroad pursuant to the Hague Convention; this discovery remains outstanding.

Fact [*71] depositions are nearing completion. The Court set by order a cap on each side's fact depositions. The Court, inter alia, authorized plaintiffs to take 110 depositions of fact witnesses across the 11 defendant groups and an additional five Rule 30\(b\)\(6\) depositions on data issues; and authorized defendants to take 30 depositions of fact witnesses across the three platform plaintiffs. Dkt. 583. As of the parties' February 20, 2019 joint status report, plaintiffs had taken or noticed 86 depositions of witnesses affiliated with defendants, defendants had taken 25 depositions of witnesses affiliated with plaintiffs, and an additional 25 depositions had been taken or noticed of third-party witnesses.

Also underway, consistent with the case management plan, is briefing on plaintiffs' motion for class certification. See Dkt. 522 (briefing schedule). On February 20, 2019, plaintiffs submitted their opening motion and expert reports. See Dkts. 722-25. Defendants are to depose plaintiffs' class certification experts by April 10, 2019; defendants are to submit opposition briefs and supporting expert reports by May 31, 2019; plaintiffs are to depose defendants' experts by June 28, 2019, and to submit replies [*72] in support of their motion by August 16, 2019. See Dkt. 522.

Particularly viewed in light of the mature stage of this litigation, permitting the PFAC to supplant the current pleadings would upend the schedule and introduce enormous delay. The PFAC would more than double the temporal duration covered by plaintiffs' claims, adding five years to the current four. It would introduce a vast array of events, entities, concepts, witnesses, custodians, trades, and data not presently in the case. Given the nature of the PFAC's claims as to defendants' alleged conduct during 2008-2012, it would also require the testing of a complex and layered theory of § 1 liability that could proceed at most under the rule of reason, markedly different from the far simpler per se theory of § 1 liability, involving a boycott of three new trading platforms, that plaintiffs have pursued as to 2013-2016. For these reasons, adding the PFAC would effectively re-start the discovery process in this long-running litigation.

Briefly:

As to topics, the PFAC would inject into this litigation, among others, the following five episodes. The Court has referred to them earlier in the context of analyzing whether a per se violation [*73] of § 1 has been adequately pled. The following synopses drawn from the PFAC underscore that each is complex, involved numerous participants, including a large number of non-parties to this lawsuit, played out over years, and transpired largely if not exclusively before the passage of Dodd-Frank:

Tradeweb/"Project Fusion": The PFAC alleges that, as one part of a "dealer consortium" strategy, see, e.g., PFAC ¶¶ 8, 144, the Dealers collectively invested in an existing IRS business as part of a joint venture, see PFAC ¶¶ 155-57. They did so with the goal of steering Tradeweb from developing its anticipated click-to-trade platform offering, which the Dealers viewed as "a precursor to all-to-all trading," id. ¶ 141, to market, see id. ¶¶ 143-44. The PFAC alleges that the Dealers' scheme to invest in Tradeweb so as to redirect its focus had its roots in memos and communications in 2006-2007, see, e.g., id. ¶¶ 145, 154, 157; entailed, post-investment, installing senior personnel of the Dealers on the boards of various Tradeweb business lines, see, e.g., id. ¶¶ 161-73 (identifying 23 such personnel); and led to Dealer-influenced decisions by Tradeweb not to launch a click-to-trade platform, [*74] id. ¶¶ 181-87, due to open in 2013, but instead to devote minimal resources to an inter-Dealer SEF called "Dealerweb," id. ¶¶ 188-93, and to develop a central limit order book, or CLOB, that today is "effectively closed off to the buy side," id. ¶ 203; see also id. ¶¶ 194-95.

CME/Swapstream/"Project Magellan": The PFAC alleges that, as part of the consortium strategy, the Dealers beginning in 2007 shunned the Swapstream clearing platform that CME had acquired, fearing CME would use that platform as a building block towards developing all-to-all anonymous trading. Id. ¶¶ 205-96. It alleges that internal memos and communications at one Dealer as to concerns about Swapstream date to 2006-2007. Id. ¶¶ 230-31. It alleges that CME approached the Dealers' strategic investment groups about supporting the platform; that Dealers' initial responses varied; and that Dealer personnel discussed Swapstream during and around board meetings of a separate entity, OTCDerivNet, and over email. Id. at ¶¶ 231-41. It alleges that in fall 2008, CME and the Dealers, the latter represented by a partner from the Cleary Gottlieb law firm, began "collective negotiations," id. ¶ 249, as to "governance" of, id. ¶ [*75] 252, and Dealer use of Swapstream, id. ¶¶ 249-54. In the end, the Dealers privately agreed not to support Swapstream during "at least one (and probably more) meetings among themselves." Id. ¶ 255. CME was left, by early 2009, with "no choice but to abandon Swapstream." Id. ¶ 256. Later, CME initiated joint negotiations with the Dealers regarding a "clearing-only solution" available only to the buy-side. Id. ¶ 257. Negotiations regarding this "Project Magellan" involved representatives of each Dealer, id. ¶ 260 (listing 14 Dealer personnel, plus the Cleary partner); in the negotiations, the Dealers took common positions and insisted on "governance' and 'control' over any IRS clearing platform," so as to prevent it from becoming used as the basis for an all-to-all trading platform, id. ¶ 273. The PFAC parses the revenue-sharing agreement to which CME and the Dealers eventually agreed, the terms of which, the PFAC alleges, together "effectively prevent[] CME from launching an IRS trading platform." Id. ¶ 279; see also id. ¶¶ 276-82. Finally, between 2008 and 2012, the Dealers delayed the launch of CME's clearinghouse via coordinated actions, including through use of a Dealer-controlled [*76] trade-processing entity, MarkitSERV, which CME found "impossible to deal with." Id. ¶ 291; see also id. IN ¶¶ 283-96. The result was that the Dealers made only limited use of CME to clear inter-dealer trades. Id. ¶ 294.

ICAP/"Project Snowflake": The PFAC alleges that, by 2009, ICAP had developed an IRS order book used by the Dealers, but that buy-side customers could not access this platform because ICAP had agreed with the Dealers to block buy-side access as part of a 2009 "détente." Id. ¶ 394. The détente arose after Tradeweb (substantially owned by Dealers) launched a trading platform for mortgage bonds called "Dealerweb," which had a "devastating impact" on ICAP's competing mortgage-bond-trading business. Id. ¶ 395. ICAP allegedly then threatened, in retaliation, to open an all-to-all electronic trading platform, building on a product ICAP had developed for the European inter-dealer-broker market called iSwap. Id. ¶¶ 394-97. In response, in 2009, the PFAC alleges, ICAP and the Dealers agreed that the Dealers would not further expand Dealerweb into the IRS inter-dealer-broker space and ICAP would not establish an all-to-all IRS trading platform Id. ¶¶ 398-401. Later, in 2011, three [*77] Dealers engaged in a transaction ("Project Snowflake") with ICAP under which, in exchange for an equity interest and these Dealers' agreement to stream prices to ICAP, these Dealers were given seats on ICAP's board and effective control of its platform. Id. ¶¶ 402-05. ICAP has since abided by its agreement with the Dealers. Id. ¶¶ 409-12.

IDCG: The PFAC alleges that IDCG, founded in 2007, developed a promising clearing solution for IRSs which was consistent with exchange-trading and favorably viewed by the buy-side. Id. ¶¶ 297-304. But, it alleges, unspecified Dealer-affiliated FCMs refused to clear through IDCG. Id. ¶ 307. And after platform plaintiff Javelin cleared its first swap in July 2010, the PFAC alleges, several Dealers communicated by email and, at a meeting including six Dealer personnel, agreed "to oppose moves which move significant volumes to exchanges," including IDCG. Id. ¶ 311 (emphases, quotation marks, and citation omitted). The PFAC further alleges that afterwards, although Dealers "kept up their engagement with IDCG on the surface," id. ¶ 315, and met with IDCG to discuss doing business together, the Dealers took a "unified position" that they would do so only [*78] if granted equity in the platform and, implicitly, "governance and control," id. ¶ 316. Later, six Dealers strung along a potential acquirer of IDCG (truClear LLC); the acquisition failed. Id. ¶¶ 317-19. Finally, the Dealers "sought to kill IDCG once and for all" by having LCH.Clearnet (which operated SwapClear, a Dealer-controlled clearinghouse) pursue the acquisition of IDCG. Id. ¶ 322. After the August 2012 acquisition, LCH.Clearnet "mothballed much of its technology." Id. ¶ 323.

Tradition: The PFAC alleges that Tradition announced in 2010, consistent with Dodd-Frank, that it would launch a SEF-compliant platform, and that, in October 2010, it approached the Dealers to form an advisory committee as to the SEF's operation. Id. ¶ 344. In March 2011, Tradition and the Dealers entered into a joint contract that provided for liquidity to be given to Tradition's SEF and for dominant Dealer participation on Tradition's "Product [Commit]tee," id. ¶ 346, which sets, inter alia, trading protocols, see id. ¶¶ 346-50. This gave the Dealers, by September 2013, "complete governance" over the SEF, known as Trad-X. Id. ¶ 351 (emphasis and citation omitted). However, Dealers remained concerned that [*79] Tradition might introduce all-to-all IRS trading with the buy side and used their governance power to limit buy-side access to Trad-X's view-only screens, to control clearing for Trad-X, to set access criteria, and to insist on non-anonymity of trading (i.e., "name give-up"). Id. ¶¶ 357-70.

In addition to these episodes,<sup>13</sup> the PFAC's claim of a plot to inhibit, pre-Dodd-Frank, the emergence of anonymous all-to-all electronic trading would inject the following three thematic topics into the case. Each, too, is complex, and implicates a large array of new concepts, events, persons (including third parties, and records).

Status of Market Infrastructure—Adaptability to All-to-All Trading: The PFAC broadly alleges that by 2007, the market was technologically ready for the introduction of electronic all-to-all trading of IRSs; that the "pillars" of electronic execution, post-trade processing, trade confirmation, order routing, and central clearing were in place and capable of adaptation from the context of inter-Dealer trades context to that of IRS trades made on an anonymous basis on an all-to-all exchange; that—notwithstanding the delays and difficulties that later led regulators to defer [*80] the effective date of Dodd-Frank's SEF mandates—clearing infrastructure in particular was readily adaptable to the context of clearing buy-side trades; and that buy-side customers as early as 2007 would have invested as necessary (e.g., in clearing services) to enable them to trade on an electronic all-to-all market. See id. ¶¶ 93, 110-21,440-52.

Steps by Dealers to Limit Buy-Side Clearing: The PFAC alleges that, years before Dodd-Frank, the Dealers erected artificial barriers to buy-side clearing. Id. ¶¶ 414-52. One step included "[t]ak[ing] [c]ontrol of [c]learing [i]nfrastructure." Id. ¶ 416. The PFAC alleges that, in 2000, Dealers founded OTCDerivNet, installed their personnel on its board, and used this new entity to secure control of SwapClear, an entity founded in 1999 by LCH.Clearnet to clear IRS trades. Id. ¶¶ 416-21. It alleges that the Dealers thereafter operated SwapClear as a utility, not as a profit-maximizing entity, which deterred other entities from opening clearing businesses; and also used OTCDerivNet as a forum to collude about market structure. Id. ¶¶ 422-25. After Dodd-Frank, the Dealers continued to impede buy-side clearing, for example by requiring clearing [*81] members of SwapClear to make large contributions of capital, limiting the buy-side's ability to utilize SwapClear. Id. ¶¶ 426-27.

Pre-Dodd-Frank Collaboration Among Dealers: The PFAC alleges that, in the years before Dodd-Frank, personnel across Dealers communicated about their concerns regarding potential "disintermediation" were electronic all-to-all exchanges to develop. See id. ¶ 122-32. Further, apparently at all relevant periods, the Dealers communicated about this topic and potential responses to the threat of disintermediation in trade associations, including the International Swaps and Derivatives Association, id. ¶ 374-75, and the Futures Industry Association, id. ¶¶ 376-81.

As the above review makes abundantly clear, adequate exploration of these alleged pre-Dodd-Frank episodes and topics would entail a vast amount of new discovery—documentary, testimonial, and expert. The Court so observed in noting the substantial delay that the PTAC would cause. See IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at \*20-22. The Court's assessment is that the delay the PFAC would occasion would be far greater, given the expanded number of complex episodes and the topics it implicates, and given that more than a year of fact discovery has passed [*82] since the decision denying leave to add the PTAC's claims as to 2008-2012.

As to document collection, review, and production, as the Court noted in IRS II, "the parties' agreements as to document production parameters in 2013-2016 would not, logically, control discovery relevant to the 2008-2012 claims." [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*20](#). Document production in this case is nearly complete. As to document custodians, given the PFAC's new claims, collection of electronic and hard-copy records would need to re-start, and would now need to reach back at least to the start of 2008 (if not earlier: the PFAC contains many allegations as to circumstances in 2006 and 2007, and some as to earlier years). Records retrieval would also assuredly be necessary for a very sizable new group of custodians. That is because, "at particular Dealers, given natural turnover and promotions and reassessments, there were assuredly different personnel responsible for IRS-related matters during the two periods," [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at 21](#), and because the many issues and incidents novel to the earlier period "likely involved substantially different personnel at particular Dealers from those as to whom discovery has been authorized as to 2013-2016," id.

<sup>13</sup> The Court has not included here the PFAC's allegations about Bloomberg, viewing these as occurring after Dodd-Frank and largely in or after 2013.

As to the delineation [*83] of topics and search terms that would guide document collection and review of materials germane to the new five years of claims, much as the Court noted in IRS II:

[T]he many distinct events, issues, entities, and players at issue in 2008-2012 similarly would require a fresh assessment of these parameters. So would the fact that plaintiffs' claims involve a materially different (pre-Dodd-Frank) regulatory environment than during 2013-2016. It is likely, too, that there would be rounds of discovery disputes requiring judicial intervention, including as to the start date for document review (numerous allegations in the [PFAC] date to 2007 and years before) and as to the permissibility of discovery into particular topics.

As to fact depositions, they too are close to complete. That plaintiffs would seek substantial new and reopened depositions of past and present defense personnel is inevitable, given the multi-chapter, multi-dimensional nature of the § 1 scheme among Dealers that the PFAC postulates, and that the PFAC names many dozens of Dealer personnel, including in connection with the episodes and topic areas synopsized above. Unavoidably, adding claims as to 2008-2012 would occasion, [*84] and justify, a new round of depositions. The Court's expectation is that between new and reopened depositions, the PFAC's added claims would credibly support depositions of approximately the same number of defense deponents as has been authorized for the existing claims.

The PFAC's expanded claims also implicate third parties. The Court's description of the PTAC applies: "Those identified on the face of the [PFAC] include numerous clearinghouses, interdealer brokers, other service providers, and industry associations." Id. The number of third-party entities implicated for 2008-2012 is, in fact, greater in the PFAC than the PTAC, given its expanded claims for this period. The number of such third parties vastly outstrips those implicated by plaintiffs' 2013-2016 claims, consistent with plaintiffs' simpler theory of § 1 liability for the later period (a boycott of three existing SEFs). Extensive and protracted third-party discovery—both documentary and deposition—would certainly be sought by both sides were the PFAC's 2008-2012 claims permitted to go forward. There would also assuredly be no shortage of disputes about the scale of such discovery (and how the expense occasioned by it is to [*85] be borne). Even as to the 2013-2016 claims, the Court has already been called upon on multiple occasions to resolve or pretermitted discovery disputes regarding third-party discovery. See, e.g., Dkts. 456 (Tradition), 550 (Tradition), 609 (ICAP and Tullett).

Finally, as to data, as the Court has previously noted:

[I]ndependent of electronic and hard-copy document discovery, the 2008-2012 claims would require—as have the 2013-2016 claims—the locating and harvesting of IRS trading data throughout the period. Such data is relevant, inter alia, to liability (including the existence of a pricing injury from the alleged conspiracy) and damages. Even assuming that such discovery demands did not give rise to disputes requiring extended negotiation and resolution, identifying and collecting this data, which before Dodd-Frank's SEF mandate took effect was likely held in decentralized locales, would likely take substantial time.

IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at \*21. The same need to identify, harvest, and review these data sets applies to the PFAC.

In IRS II, the Court's assessment was that an amendment to add the industry-wide, complex, and half-decade-long claims proposed by the PTAC . . . would obliterate the [then] May 21, 2018 deadline [*86] for substantial completion of document production. In connection with the 2013-2016 period, it took counsel for the many parties (and third parties) seven months of focused work, beginning from the date of the ruling on the motion to dismiss, to formulate and narrow discovery demands, negotiate discovery parameters including as to custodians and search terms and strings, and to litigate to completion most discovery disputes as to matters pertinent to that period. A similar exercise would now be necessitated as to plaintiffs' new claims.

[2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] \*21](#) (footnotes omitted). Considering related factors including the need to elongate deposition discovery, the Court's conservative estimate was that permitting the PTAC's 2008-2012 claims to stand would cause a delay of, at the very least, 12 months for the completion of fact discovery. Id. ¶ 22.

The Court's assessment here is that, relative to the PTAC, permitting the PFAC's 2008-2012 claims to stand would occasion a materially longer delay of the case schedule. Unlike at the time of IRS II, fact discovery today is close to complete. Even were fact discovery on the 2008-2012 claims to commence immediately, it would virtually all occur after the current [*87] April 10,2019 deadline for fact discovery. And with document production substantially complete and most depositions taken, there are limited opportunities to achieve efficiencies or economies of scale across discovery for the 2008-2012 and 2013-2016 events.

In effect, adding the 2008-2012 claims would again "allow[] a new MDL-sized lawsuit to be hitched to the existing claims." [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*20](#). And with fact discovery all but complete for 2013-2016, the processes of organizing and taking fact discovery for these two lawsuits would effectively proceed seriatim, with the 2013-2016 discovery wrapping up shortly after 2008-2012 fact discovery commenced. With limited efficiencies to be gained, fact discovery on the 2008-2012 claims would thus be tantamount to undertaking fact discovery in a new litigation.

In estimating the added length of fact discovery were the PFAC's 2008-2012 claims permitted, a fair starting point is the length of time such discovery will ultimately have taken as to plaintiffs' 2013-2016 claims. From the date of IRS I (July 28, 2017) to April 10,2019 was 20.5 months. To more precisely calibrate the extent of the delay in fact discovery that the PFAC would occasion, certain adjustments [*88] would need to be made. On the one hand, two factors would tend to reduce (at the margin) the extent to which the 2008-2012 claims would extend the fact discovery deadline. First, four weeks remain before the current fact discovery deadline. Second, as a result of the initial (2013-2016) round of fact discovery, both sides' counsel are doubtless more familiar with the concepts and terminology in this area, and with one another. This would facilitate discovery requests and negotiations. On the other hand, two factors would significantly elongate 2008-2012 discovery relative to 2013-2016 discovery. First, the PFAC's claims as to 2008-2012 are materially more complex and more difficult to discover than those for 2013-2016. These claims implicate more events, older events, older and harder to secure evidence, and—most importantly—far more varied episodes and third parties than do the 2013-2016 claims. Second, assuming arguendo that plaintiffs' § 1 claims as to 2008-2012 were held viable, the Court's assessment is that these claims, which largely involve claims related to the Dealers' "consortium investments," could at most state a claim under the rule of reason, in contrast to plaintiffs' [*89] 2013-2016 claims of aper se unlawful boycott of the nascent SEF platforms. The issues implicated by a rule of reason claim (e.g., as to the product and geographic markets, as to product substitutes and barriers to entry, and as to the anti-competitive effects versus the pro-competitive benefits of the challenged practices) would complicate and measurably add to the duration of fact discovery. See discussion infra p. 61.

All in, the Court's best estimate—based on its experience overseeing this litigation to date, its broader experience involving complex civil litigation, and its assessment of the unique features of the 2008-2012 claims—is that fact discovery attributable to the PFAC's 2008-2012 claims would, conservatively, add approximately 18-21 months to the current fact discovery deadline, and quite possibly more. Adding these claims would also further require a re-setting of all ensuing deadlines in the case management plan (e.g., class certification), with these deadlines presumably keyed to the new end dates for fact discovery.

In arriving at this estimate, the Court notes that plaintiffs, strikingly, do not engage at all with the implications of their claims for relevant fact discovery. [*90] They do not argue, for example, that the discovery addressed above would or could be provided with materially quicker dispatch. Nor, given the instructive experience of this litigation to date, could they credibly do so. Instead, plaintiffs declare that—as long as the defendants are ordered to produce to them productions that they have made to the CFTC in connection with a regulatory investigation—plaintiffs will "agree[]" not to pursue further document discovery and to a fact discovery extension of just three months. Pl. Mem. at 6; see also Pl. Reply at 6.

For a host of reasons, this bid is a non-starter. The Court has rejected plaintiffs' attempt to gain defendants' document productions in the CFTC's regulatory investigation (and in another civil litigation). See Dkt. 266. In the interests of all parties, and consistent with the integrity of the truth-seeking process, the metes and bounds of document production here are to be measured against the viable claims pursued in this litigation. A party's regulatory production may overlap only slightly with pertinent records in a civil litigation. And it may include materials outside the proper scope of discovery here, which plaintiffs have [*91] no right to access.<sup>14</sup>

Plaintiffs' suggestion that a fact discovery extension for the 2008-2012 claims can be cabined to three months is also inconsistent with their acknowledgement (in a footnote) that, if leave to amend is granted, they intend to pursue third-party discovery (and presumably third-party trading data). See Pl. Mem. at 6 n.18. Notably, too, plaintiffs have not foresworn deposition discovery, of defendants or third parties. This, too, makes facetious the estimate that a bare three-month fact discovery extension would suffice. Plaintiffs' request that they be allowed "full discovery" into the viability of all-to-all IRS trading platforms before 2013, so as to meet the defense that the investor plaintiffs' injuries are too speculative to supply antitrust standing, id. at 21, is also inconsistent with the notion of a three-month extension.

Finally, plaintiffs ignore defendants' right to discovery. Even if plaintiffs were taken to have unilaterally disarmed from any further fact discovery, defendants would have the right to pursue, presumably via new or amended subpoenas, third-party document discovery, data, and depositions germane to the added claims. And, for the reasons addressed, [*92] third-party discovery, by whichever party sought, is apt to be substantial and time-consuming. The Court would expect substantial third-party discovery to be directed by defendants, at a minimum, to the entities above whom the Dealers are alleged to have impaired, pressured, or boycotted; and to the buy-side entities whom the PFAC claims were deprived of an otherwise available and desired opportunity to trade IRSs anonymously on an all-to-all electronic platform.<sup>15</sup> See, e.g., PFAC ¶¶ 220-21,303-04,442 (listing such buy-side entities). Finally, to meet plaintiffs' broad claims as to 2008-2012, defendants would be expected to review and harvest their own records, including employee emails, covering the years of the new claims. Production of materials from among these records—e.g., in support of defense motions on summary judgment or opposing class certification or in connection with a joint pretrial order—would assuredly be met with demands for production of a fuller set.

Accordingly, plaintiffs' proposal to forgo certain document discovery is not a credible means of addressing the substantial delay that the PFAC would produce.

Plaintiffs, lastly, ask that, as an alternative [*93] to permitting the claims as to 2008-2012, the Court permit plaintiffs to pursue claims from the date of Dodd-Frank's enactment forward. This proposal is, presumably, keyed to the start date of document discovery. But this, too, is not a coherent means of redressing delay. As plaintiffs acknowledge, even if the start date of the class period were moved forward 30 months from January 1, 2008 to July 21, 2010, discovery would still be needed as to "the origins and impact of Defendants' conspiracy in the 2007-2010 period." Pl. Mem. at 6 n.19. That is because the alleged stratagems on which plaintiffs base their claims of a pre-2013 § 1 violation—e.g., Tradeweb /"Project Fusion," CME /"Project Magellan," ICAP /"Project Snowflake," IDCG, and Tradition—predate Dodd-Frank and often 2008. While plaintiffs' proposal would prune temporally the evidence bearing on investor damages, on plaintiffs' theory, substantially the same discovery would be needed to test issues bearing on § 1 liability, including the existence, origins, scope, and participation in the alleged scheme; whether investor plaintiffs' injuries are sufficiently non-speculative to support antitrust standing; and whether the elements of [*94] a rule of reason claim are met.

<sup>14</sup> The Court has further recognized the practical reality that "a regulated entity confronted with a regulatory subpoena may be unable or unwilling to resist the subpoena's document production demands, even where those demands, if made in federal civil litigation, would fail the standards of Rule 26." Dkt. 266 at 4.

<sup>15</sup> Defendants would also have the right to take document and deposition discovery of the class plaintiffs who did not trade IRSs post-2013 and thus have been out of this case since IRS I, i.e., for the entire discovery period. This could entail negotiations as to custodians and search terms, production of responsive documents, and depositions of these plaintiffs' employees and investment advisors.

The Court, accordingly, finds that permitting plaintiffs' 2008-2012 claims to proceed would cause substantial delay, realistically 18-21 months or more, to this litigation.

2. Prejudice

Drawing on its experience closely supervising pretrial proceedings in this litigation, the Court also finds that the amendment to add the 2008-2012 claims, even more than the proposed amendment in the PTAC, would palpably prejudice the defendants. Cf. IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at \*22-23.

In IRS II, the Court noted that as of the date of the PTAC, defendants had for seven months "expended time, money, and energy in the discovery phase of this litigation on the only rational assumption as to this case's temporal scope: that plaintiffs' surviving claims were limited to 2013-2016." [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*22](#). The Court noted that, based on that temporal premise, counsel had exchanged hundreds of discovery communications, held dozens of meet-and-confers, and "devoted enormous effort to reaching agreement on matters such as the as scope of discovery, search terms, and custodians." Id. (quotation marks and citation omitted). Counsel had also litigated a series of discovery disputes that turned on this time period, including those that involved [*95] the document-discovery start date and the proper subjects of document collection and review.

In finding prejudice, the Court noted:

The Court's resolution of these disputes in turn shaped the time-intensive discovery efforts that followed—including the identification of custodians, the formulation of search terms and search strings, the tabulation of "hit counts" aimed at measuring efficacy and burden and ensuing negotiations, and the collection of millions of documents. It is safe to assume that, on these efforts, each of the 11 defendant groups devoted very substantial time and incurred very substantial legal fees.

Id. (internal citation and footnote omitted). However:

Reviving the 2008-2012 claims would negate this work, waste these efforts, and largely send the parties back to the discovery drawing board. It would effectively overrule the Court's rulings setting the document-discovery start date and excluding (in whole or large part) a host of pre-Dodd Frank topics from the scope of permitted discovery. It would require counsel to start negotiating anew the expanded universe of discovery issues. It would require developing and testing new potential search terms to gauge the utility [*96] and burden of each. It would require counsel to revisit prior compromises based on aggregate burdens for each defendant in light of the added burdens presented by the amended allegations and extended time period. It would almost certainly open up new rounds of protracted litigation over discovery disputes. It is safe to say that the duplicative fees (of counsel and litigation support) and costs wasted by the need for this do-over, when measured across the 11 defense firms, would extend well into seven figures, to say nothing of the wasted time of client personnel.

Id. (footnote omitted).

These considerations apply with even greater force more than a year after IRS II. As of February 2018, at least some efficiencies remained achievable via coordinating discovery (document and deposition) on plaintiffs' 2008-2012 claims with as-yet unfinished discovery on the 2013-2016 claims. But today, those efficiencies are realistically all but gone, with document discovery complete save for loose ends, and deposition discovery due to close in under a month.

Were the PFAC's claims to be permitted, the substantial costs and burdens borne by defendants would therefore include ones that would have not [*97] existed had plaintiffs filed the PFAC within—or even close to—the February 21, 2018 deadline set in the case management plan. For each of the 11 defendant groups, the cumbersome, time-intensive, and costly processes associated with modern document discovery would need to begin from even closer to a "standing start," [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*20](#), than in the case of the PTAC.

There would first be the "laborious process of framing the document discovery to be produced for that period . . ." Id. Much time and expense would assuredly be spent on new rounds of negotiating search terms and protocols keyed to the PFAC's new claims, including testing these terms and protocols based on hits yielded by experimental search terms. This process would be all the more involved and time-consuming given the complex, multi-faceted nature of the conduct that the PFAC claims was part of an overall § 1 conspiracy during the years before SEFs took root in 2013 pursuant to Dodd-Frank. Substantial time would inevitably be spent, too, litigating discovery disputes. Once parameters were in place, each defendant would then need to identify, find, and collect millions of electronic (and hard copy) records from or for numerous custodians; retain [*98] and train a new set of contract lawyers about this litigation and the review protocols specific to it; put in place the mechanical apparatus for such review; and arrange and train teams for second-tier production tasks (e.g., privilege reviews).

As to depositions, plaintiffs have taken or noticed most allotted for defense personnel. And plaintiffs would undoubtedly demand new and reopened depositions to account for the five years of added claims. The Court would surely permit additional depositions, to allow for fair discovery of areas of conduct newly relevant in light of the PFAC. But the untimely date at which depositions as to events and concepts relevant to pre-2013 claims were decided upon too would prejudice defendants, relative to the scenario in which overall discovery was negotiated more holistically. Addressing all forms of discovery in IRS II, the Court noted that:

Adding five years of claims to the existing four years would not ineluctably entitle plaintiffs to the receipt of 125% more discovery. A nine-year conspiracy claim implicating numerous episodes, issues, and personnel would by its nature require thoughtful application of the proportionality command of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(1). To the extent [*99] that defense discovery for 2013-2016 had not already been produced to plaintiffs, a fair question would arise whether to revisit the agreed parameters of that discovery in the interest of keeping the overall discovery burden manageable.

[2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*21](#). Today, with deposition and document discovery largely complete as to 2013-2016, defendants have lost the ability to negotiate or move, in the wake of the added claims, for a reduced scope of discovery as to 2013-2016 in the interests of keeping manageable the overall discovery burden.

The Court therefore assesses that the tangible prejudice to defendants from plaintiffs' late amendment would substantially exceed the scale of prejudice estimated in IRS II from permitting the PTAC's similar amendment.

Plaintiffs, notably, do not challenge the account in IRS II as to the costs and burdens that adding the 2008-2012 claims would then have added. Nor do they dispute defendants' statement that adding such claims now would add to these costs and burdens. That is unavoidably correct. Plaintiffs instead argue that as a matter of law, the "time, effort and money" that a party's late amendment visits on its adversary cannot alone qualify as "prejudice." Pl. Mem. [*100] at 23-24 (quotation marks and citation omitted). Plaintiffs claim that only "legal prejudice" is cognizable, and that a defendant cannot show this where "the proposed amendment is simply variations on the original theme." Id. at 23 (quotation marks and citations omitted).

Plaintiffs incorrectly portray the law. As the authorities reviewed above recognize, an amendment may be prejudicial when it would require an opponent "to expend significant additional resources to conduct discovery . . ." AEP Energy Servs., 626 F.3d at 725 (quoting State Teachers Ret. Bd., 654 F.2d at 856). One case on which plaintiffs rely says precisely that. See Pasternack v. Shrader, 863 F.3d 162, 174 \(2d Cir. 2017\) ("A litigant may be 'prejudiced' within the meaning of [Rule 15(a)] if the new claim would: '(i) require the opponent to expend significant additional resources to conduct discovery and prepare for trial [or] (ii) significantly delay the resolution of the dispute . . .').

To be sure, in the two Second Circuit cases on which plaintiffs rely, leave to amend was held wrongly denied based solely on delay and associated litigation expenses. But these are easily distinguished. Miller v. Selsky, 234 F.3d 1262 (2d Cir. 2000), an unpublished opinion, solely involved [Rule 15. 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, \[WL\] at \*2](#). It did not involve Rule 16. And no discovery had taken place as of the date of the requested amendment. Id. Pasternack, too, was resolved [*101] only under Rule 15. The Circuit's decision does not address Rule 16. On the contrary, it states: "[I]t does not appear that there is any allegation of untimeliness based on a scheduling order."

863 F.3d at 174. The Circuit held only that the trial court had abused its discretion when it denied leave to amend because the litigation had lasted years and defendants had spent "a vast amount of money litigating the sufficiency of various complaints in this case." Id. (quotation marks and citation omitted). These cases do not bear on the situation here, where—long after the lapse of the amendment deadline and with fact discovery near complete—plaintiffs seek to add claims that would more than double the case's scope, far more than double its complexity, and require the re-starting of discovery at great cost and inefficiency.<sup>16</sup>

In fact, courts in this District have repeatedly found prejudice where motions to amend were filed late and after extensive discovery. See, e.g., Levy v. Young Adult Inst., No. 13 Civ. 2861 (JPO) (SN), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85278, 2016 WL 3637109, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. June 29, 2016) (denying leave to amend under Rule 16 when deadline to amend complaint had passed 2 years before); Eastman Chem. Co. v. Nestlé Waters Mgmt. & Tech., No. 11 Civ. 2589 (KPF), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46343, 2014 WL 1316772, at *5-10 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 1, 2014) (finding prejudice in a motion to amend two-and-a-half months after the deadline where amendment would have required, inter alia, a whole new area of discovery [*102] on "commercial reasonableness"); Pereira v. Cogan, No. 00 Civ. 619 (RJS), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21558, 2002 WL 31496224, at *3-4 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 8, 2002) (denying leave to amend after finding prejudice under Rule 15 where the motion to amend was filed 5 days before trial).

3. Good Cause

The Court, finally, addresses whether plaintiffs had good cause to move for leave to file the PFAC eight months after the deadline for amended pleadings. As briefed, this question turns on whether new discovery justified plaintiffs' late filing. Plaintiffs argue that the PFAC is based on "newly discovered evidence"—documents produced that revealed a viable § 1 claim. Pl. Mem. at 6; see also Pl. Reply at 3-5; Brockett Decl. ¶¶ 2-15 (describing counsels' pre-PFAC review and analysis of defense productions). Defendants counter that the PFAC essentially recycles the PTAC's factual allegations using different phrases and packaging, Def. Mem. at 4-5, and relies largely on public sources available before the PTAC's filing, id. at 5 & n.3, on statements of a consultant who has worked with plaintiffs since 2017, id. at 5-6, on unattributed assertions, id. at 6 & n.4, and on "new" documents mostly produced by the June 29, 2018 deadline for substantial completion of document production, id. at 6-7 (claiming over 75% of the documents cited in the PFAC were produced by that deadline). [*103] Defendants argue that, far from having good cause to file the PFAC out of time, plaintiffs failed to act with the required diligence.<sup>17</sup>

Were the question of "good cause" to turn on whether newly-found evidence justified the late filing, the Court's assessment is that defendants would have, on balance, the better of this argument. Having examined the series of amended complaints, actual and proposed, and the materials cited therein, the Court's judgment is that, as to the two episodes on which the PFAC overwhelmingly relies in claiming a 2008-2012 conspiracy—involving Tradeweb/"Project Fusion" and CME/Swapstream/"Project Magellan"—the PFAC's allegations are largely recycled from past complaints. These two episodes were the crux of the PTAC's claims as to 2008-2012. See IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at *11-13 (Tradeweb), *13-17 (CME). The Tradeweb episode had also been the crux of the 2008-2012 claims in the SAC, see IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 465-69. The PFAC newly packages these episodes as part of a "consortium strategy" among the Dealers during this period, aimed at investing in or otherwise coopting platforms or clearing products that had the potential to lead to all-to-all IRS trading. But a close examination reveals that, once such recasting efforts (and the PFAC's resequencing [*104] of allegations) are accounted for, the PFAC adds only minor, largely cosmetic details to these two central episodes.

<sup>16</sup> Also inapposite is S. African Apartheid Litig. v. Daimler AG, 617 F. Supp. 2d 228 (S.D.N.Y. 2009), the third case on which plaintiffs rely. It held that under Rule 15, the "practical prejudice" to a defendant "of being subject to greater awards" under the amended pleadings does not qualify as "legal prejudice," i.e., prejudice cognizable under Rule 15. Id. at 290 (footnote omitted). The Court here does not find prejudice based on the prospect of a larger award but on the factors addressed above.

<sup>17</sup> Towards the same end, defendants note that, more than three months before filing the PFAC, plaintiffs' counsel had acknowledged that they believed document discovery supported an amendment on the subjects the PFAC addresses. See Dkt. 408 (June 19, 2018 status letter); Dkt. 430 (July 17, 2018 status letter); Dkt. 457 (Transcript of July 19, 2018 telephone conference) at 61.

In contrast, as to three secondary episodes alleged in connection with the 2008-2012 conspiracy, the PFAC alleges new facts. These are that Dealers entered into joint ventures with the goal of gaining control over ICAP's i-Swap and Tradition's Trad-X platforms, and denied support to IDCG's startup clearinghouse. On review, it appears that the documents from which plaintiffs derive their claims as to these episodes were largely obtained in discovery. However, the heart of the PFAC's § 1 claims as to 2008-2012 remains the Tradeweb and CME episodes. These are pled in far more detail than any others. And they far more plausibly allege significant collective action by Dealers with the aim of steering the industry's long-term trajectory away from a course leading eventually towards all-to-all anonymous trading. Even putting aside defendants' challenges to the plausibility of the PFAC's pleadings as to ICAP, Tradition, and IDCG, the new allegations regarding them would not provide good cause for such a late, consequential, and disruptive pleading.

There is, however, an additional [*105] and more fundamental impediment to finding good cause: plaintiffs' failure, until the PFAC, to seriously pursue a rule of reason theory of § 1 liability. As described further below, the one area in which the PFAC moves plaintiffs' claims materially forward towards viability is in its articulation of a rule of reason theory. As the Court's decisions in IRS I and IRS II have made clear, given the focus of plaintiffs' 2008-2012 claims on the Tradeweb/"Project Fusion" and CME/"Project Magellan" episodes, this route, while imposing demanding pleading and proof requirements, had more potential to state a § 1 claim than did a theory of per se illegal conduct during this period. Yet, until filing the PFAC in late October 2018, plaintiffs all but disdained a rule of reason claim.

In IRS I, the Court canvassed the law as to the limited categories of agreements among horizontal competitors that the law treats as per se illegal, i.e., "agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality . . . ." National Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978). As to these categories of restraints, experience has enabled courts to "predict with confidence that the [*106] rule of reason will condemn it," and therefore permits courts to apply "a conclusive presumption that the restraint is unreasonable." Arizona v. Maricopa Cty. Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 344, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 & n.15. Paradigmatic examples, the Court noted, are horizontal agreements among competitors to fix prices or to divide markets, and group boycotts. See IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 467. The Court held plaintiffs' allegations regarding the 2013-2016 group boycott of Javelin, Tera, and trueEX to be of such a nature. Id. at 472.

But, as reviewed above, plaintiffs' flagship allegations as to 2008-2012, involving "Project Fusion," in which the Dealers jointly invested alongside Thomson in a controlling stake in Tradeweb, described an arrangement that was not susceptible to per se condemnation. The Court explained in detail why the SAC's allegations as to "Project Fusion" did not fit into any category of agreement recognized as per se illegal. See id. at 467-68. And the SAC had not seriously pursued any rule of reason claim as to "Project Fusion." See id. at 468 (outlining pleading requirements for rule of reason claim). It did not contain any section addressed to the rule of reason. And its factual allegations did not fill that void:

[T]here are no allegations in the SAC defining Tradeweb's product or geographic market, [*107] or, within that market, defining its market share or market power. There is, in fact, no allegation that Tradeweb had any presence, let alone power, in any market. And, vitally important, there are no allegations as to the pro-competitive benefits and anti-competitive harms of Tradeweb after the joint venture, whether in general or as to Tradeweb's specific choices after 2007 as to which trading platforms and asset classes to pursue and which to forego.

Therefore, even assuming it adequately pled an agreement among Dealers to terminate a Tradeweb plan to open an all-to-all trading platform, the SAC does not plead facts supporting, under the rule of reason, the inference that [that] agreement was anti-competitive so as to violate § 1.

Id. at 469 (footnote omitted).

The decision and discussion in IRS I was an invitation for plaintiffs to pursue, in a timely amended complaint, a claim under § 1 for 2008-2012 based on the rule of reason, at least as a carefully-pled alternative to a theory of illegality per se.

Plaintiffs, however, chose in the PTAC, filed on the final day permitted, again to pursue—almost exclusively—a per se theory. That theory remained defective, for the reasons reviewed above. See *IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at *12* (quoting [*108] IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 468 n.17). And the PTAC, like the SAC, made only a nominal hat tip towards a rule of reason claim as to Tradeweb:

The PTAC adds two paragraphs of allegations as to application of the Rule of Reason. See PTAC ¶¶ 281-282. These are far too spare and incomplete to close the gaps in the SAC's pleadings on this point. See [IRS II, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 468-469]. Like the SAC, the PTAC lacks allegations defining Tradeweb's product or geographic market, id. at 469. It loosely recites that "[t]he relevant market is the market for IRS," PTAC ¶ 281, compare SAC ¶¶ 398-400, but that allegation is a mismatch for Tradeweb's function as alleged, which was not as a buyer or seller of (nor a market maker for) ITSSs, but as a provider of electronic trading platforms, [IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 468]. As to that market, the PTAC does not make any allegations as to Tradeweb's market power, let alone regarding its actual or potential competitors and/or the barriers to other entrants. It is silent as to the market share of Tradeweb's then-competitors (e.g., Bloomberg, the New York Stock Exchange, Nasdaq, CME, or others). The assembled pleadings again do not allege "that Tradeweb had any presence, let alone power, in any market." Id. at 469.

The PTAC's failure to situate Tradeweb in any [*109] relevant market, as required, again leaves to conjecture the impact of this one market participant's alleged decision not to introduce a novel product (a new IRS trading platform) in favor of other business priorities. See id. at 469. And while the PTAC recites that this decision was anti-competitive because it "reduce[d] output," PTAC ¶ 280, it lacks non-conclusory allegations as to the pro-competitive benefits and anti-competitive harms of the joint venture's decision to focus Tradeweb's offerings (like those of competitor Bloomberg) on other products and platforms. Measured against the standards applicable to Rule of Reason claims, see [IRS II, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 468], the PTAC, like its predecessor, falls well short.

For similar reasons (and others), the Court in IRS II held the PTAC's allegations as to CME and "Project Magellan" defective. See *2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, [WL] at *13-17*. That project also centrally involved joint, counseled business negotiations between CME and the Dealers which could not be condemned as per se anti-competitive under § 1. See, e.g., *2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, [WL] at *16 & n.11* (reviewing facts inconsistent with per se condemnation). The Court then added:

That leaves the Rule of Reason. Potentially, a viable Rule of Reason claim could have been pled with respect [*110] to the Dealers' collective action as to CME, attempting to show overall anti-competitive effect in a defined market. But unlike with respect to Tradeweb, the PTAC does not even gesture in that direction with respect to Swapstream, confining itself to a theory of per se illegality.

In any event, the PTAC does not make the requisite pleadings to enable a Rule of Reason claim. It does not define the product or geographic market of the company, CME, whose offerings were allegedly skewed by the defendants' collective refusal to support an al-to-all IRS trading platform. Nor, although touting CME's capabilities, does it allege that CME had power in any market, including that for electronic exchanges with respect to swap trading generally or IRS trading in particular. See [IRS II, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 469]. And while the PTAC denounces the Dealers' conduct as anti-competitive, id. ¶¶ 193-196, it does not assess these anti-competitive impacts against the potential pro-competitive benefits of the agreement that the collaborating Dealers negotiated towards, and eventually struck, with CME, including those identified above.

2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, [WL] at *17.

In the PFAC, plaintiffs for the first time make more than a token effort to plead a rule of reason [*111] claim, alongside their predominant claim of a per se violation of § 1. See PFAC ¶¶ 626-72. In contrast to the SAC, which lacked rule of reason allegations, and the PTAC, which contained just two paragraphs as to the rule of reason, the PFAC contains concrete allegations as to the foundational concepts for a rule of reason claim. It defines the defendants' product market as the IRS market, id. ¶¶ 628-38; defines the geographic market as the United States, id. ¶¶ 639-41; sets out the Dealers' market shares, individually and in the aggregate, id. ¶¶ 642-45; makes allegations as to Dealers' market power in light of the Justice Department's Merger Guidelines, id. ¶¶ 646-49; addresses why the alternative market definition (the market for trading platforms) posited by defendants is, ostensibly, not correct, id. ¶¶ 650-52; alleges why the "Project Fusion" and "Project Magellan" joint ventures had anti-competitive purposes and effects, id. ¶¶ 653-58; and alleges, for each joint venture, why the anti-competitive effects of the venture outweigh the pro-competitive justifications, id. ¶¶ 659-72.

However, plaintiffs nowhere explain why it took until October 26, 2018 to first meaningfully pursue a rule [*112] of reason claim. The subject is unaddressed in the PFAC and in the plaintiffs' memoranda of law. No valid reason is apparent for plaintiffs' failure to pursue such a claim long ago. Plaintiffs cannot pin the absence of an earlier rule of reason claim on recent discovery. On the contrary, the PFAC's rule of reason allegations center on the very two episodes (Tradeweb and CME) as to which its factual allegations are in substance the same as in the PTAC. Moreover, as pled in the PFAC, plaintiffs' rule of reason claim does not cite, or turn at all on, new document discovery. The same rule of reason claim could equally have been made in (if not before) the PTAC or at any time after IRS II. The Court is left to infer that plaintiffs held off until late October 2018 to plead a rule of reason claim not for any reason inherent to that claim. Instead, it appears that plaintiffs deferred pursuing this theory until more than eight months after the deadline for moving to amend had lapsed, in the hope that such would never prove necessary—that the basis for a viable theory of per se liability for 2008-2012 would emerge in discovery.

It is far too late for a complex legal claim of this nature to be [*113] added, particularly without a convincing justification. A late pleading of this nature is highly disruptive. The addition of a rule of reason claim, by its nature, would inject into the case, on the brink of the fact discovery deadlines, a host of new factual issues. These include issues relating to the definitions of the product and the geographic markets, defendants' market share(s), entry barriers, potential entrants, and potential substitutes. Relevant issues would also be generated based on the parties' articulations of the anti-competitive effects of, and the pro-competitive justifications for, the various agreement(s) alleged among defendants during 2008-2012. Although expert analysis would surely be brought to bear as to these issues, a consequential expansion of fact discovery—above and beyond that which a per se claim for these years would necessitate—would be necessary to elicit evidence and to develop the record relating to unique elements of a rule of reason claim. Plaintiffs have not articulated good cause for disrupting the case schedule by first pursuing a rule of reason theory so late in the day. The Court finds none.

In finding an absence of good cause for first pursuing [*114] a rule of reason claim so close to the end date for fact discovery, the Court has no occasion to definitively resolve whether the PFAC has adequately pled such a claim. Defendants have chronicled deficiencies in the PFAC's iteration of that claim. See generally Def. Mem. 24-34. A number of these critiques appear substantial. These include that because the PFAC tightly focuses its rule of reason allegations on the Dealers' attempts to control Tradeweb and CME through the two joint ventures, a rule of reason claim can lie only if these entities had market power.<sup>18</sup>

<sup>18</sup> In its rule of reason allegations, the PFAC alleges that the anti-competitive effects of the "Project Fusion" and "Project Magellan" joint ventures outweighed their pro-competitive potential. See PFAC ¶¶ 661-65 (Tradeweb); id. ¶¶ 666-72 (CME). Its rule of reason pleadings focus on these two initiatives, and are not directed at the Dealers' conduct holistically during 2008-2012. As a result, there is a substantial argument that the proper subject of the market power inquiry under the rule of reason, as analyzed in IRS I and IRS II, is the market power of the two entities restrained by the defendants' joint ventures (i.e., Tradeweb and CME). As the Court has noted, these entities were providers of electronic trading platforms, not market makers. See IRS I, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 469; IRS II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86732, 2018 WL 2332069, at \*12-13; see also PFAC ¶ 627 (acknowledging that relevant question under the DOJ joint venture guidelines is whether "the joint venture has market power"). Therefore, although the PFAC alleges that the Dealers have a combined 70% market share in the "IRS market," PFAC ¶ 638, that market appears a mismatch for the rule of the reason claim as pled.

Notwithstanding the particular manner in which the PFAC is pled, the Court's judgment is that a viable rule of reason claim quite possibly could have been formulated for 2008-2012. Plaintiffs have amassed evidence of statements by officials at various Dealers preferring the traditional model of dealer-to-customer IRS trading and disfavoring the prospect of anonymous trading of IRSs on an exchange. Plaintiffs have also alleged various actions by Dealer personnel, including in connection with Projects "Fusion" and "Magellan," that [*115] made it less likely that exchange trading along the lines that plaintiffs preferred would take root. While the Dealers' complex business arrangements in 2008-2012--whether labeled as "consortium investments" or otherwise--do not implicate any category of conduct recognized as per se anti-competitive, a viable rule of reason claim potentially could have been pled for this period, alleging an overall agreement among Dealers to steer future IRS trading towards bilateral, party-disclosed trading and against the development of anonymous all-to-all exchange trading. Such a claim would, presumably, have alleged that the overall anti-competitive effects of this agreement outweighed the pro-competitive potential of such a course.

Had plaintiffs seriously pursued a rule of reason claim earlier in this litigation rather as an untimely after-thought, there would have been opportunity for considered briefing and decision, and to the extent found necessary, for a potentially curative amended complaint. The iterative process by which claims are assessed on a motion to dismiss and refined through an amended pleading is unusually well-tailored to complex claims such as under the rule of reason, which [*116] may require successive iterations to hone to viability. It is, however, far too late to embark on that journey now, with fact discovery due to close in under a month.

For the reasons above, the Court therefore does not find good cause to permit plaintiffs to file the PFAC more than eight months after the deadline for amended pleadings set in the case management plan. The episodes on which the PFAC's S.1 claim predominantly relies are not new. Indeed, they were articulated earlier in the SAC and/or the PTAC and do not substantially turn on new evidence. And plaintiffs failed to pursue earlier the one potentially viable theory of S.1 liability for 2008-2012, under the rule of reason, despite having ample opportunities to do so. Furthermore, that theory appears to require significant modification to approach viability and would significantly disrupt the existing schedule.

D. Conclusion

For the above reasons, the Court denies plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend, so as to add claims covering 2008-2012.

IV. The PFAC's Claims as to 2013-2016

The PFAC also adds a limited number of allegations bearing on the period 2013-2016. Most notably, it alleges why two entities—Tradeweb and Bloomberg—that potentially [*117] could have offered all-to-all anonymous trading of IRSs did not do so during this period.

As to Tradeweb, it alleges that Tradeweb could offer "an all-to-all RFQ platform," but that it chose instead to limit its RFQ "to facilitate dealer-to-client or dealer-to-dealer trading by allowing only dealers to respond to the quote

As an alternative to its theory of a rule of reason violation affecting the "IRS market," the PFAC does, cursorily, plead for the first time that "[d]efendants' own documents suggest that Tradeweb's share for execution of interest rate swaps with the buy side is at least 60% [and the] only other significant competitor is Bloomberg." Id. ¶ 652. But this allegation, too, is problematic. It is not anchored to the 2008-2012 time period. And the PFAC does not attempt to define the electronic trading platform market. It leaves unclear on what basis it claims for Tradeweb a 60% market share of the subset of that market consisting of "execution of interest rate swaps with the buy side," id., or whether such is a viably defined market, see Def. Mem. at 25-26. That the PFAC identifies numerous other electronic trading platforms for swaps trading makes the PFAC's passing suggestion that the platforms restrained had market power all the more problematic. See id. at 26.

requests submitted by the platform." PFAC ¶ 204. This, the PFAC alleges, "is the result of the Dealer Defendants' control of Tradeweb." Id.

As to Bloomberg, it alleges that Bloomberg's BSEF received regulatory approval from the CFTC on July 31, 2013 and was equipped to enable order book trading between any market participants. Id. ¶ 338. However, it alleges, the Dealers today refuse to provide liquidity to BSEF's CLOB except "on a name-disclosed basis," such that Bloomberg's CLOB therefore has "no volume on it." Id. ¶ 340 ("As a result of these tactics against Bloomberg's IRS trading platforms, the Dealer Defendants have succeeded in preventing Bloomberg from offering a meaningful all-to-all anonymous trading platform and have forced buy-side customers to trade IRS on Bloomberg via a non-anonymous RFQ protocol.").)

The Court will permit the addition of these allegations. [*118] The status during 2013-2016 of other platforms for the trading of IRSs is, for a variety of reasons, relevant context for plaintiffs' well-pled claims of a contemporaneous boycott by Dealers of Javelin, Tera, and trueEX. Among other things, to the extent that no other platforms permitting the all-to-all anonymous trading of IRSs are shown to have been operational during this period, plaintiffs' claim that an effective boycott of Javelin, Tera, and trueEX affected all investors who wished to trade IRSs in such a manner on such an exchange is strengthened. Separately, Dealers' actions during this period towards other platforms that carried the promise of enabling anonymous all-to-all IRS trading have the potential to bear significantly on the factfinder's determination whether the Dealers did or did not boycott Javelin, Tera, and trueEX. Consistent with its discovery rulings, the Court has assumed throughout that the Dealers' conduct towards other platforms during 2013-2016 besides the three boycott targets is within the scope of matters to be discovered. The Court therefore authorizes plaintiffs to file a FAC incorporating the PFAC's allegations bearing on the manner in which IRSs were [*119] and were not traded on Tradeweb and Bloomberg during 2013-2016. As these matters have been within the scope of existing authorized discovery, this amendment will not result in any change to the existing discovery schedule.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Court denies plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend to add allegations regarding 2008-2012 but grants the motion for leave to amend to add allegations regarding 2013-2016 as described above.

Alaska's Public Employment Relations Act (PERA) authorizes bargaining units of public employees to choose to be exclusively represented by a labor union for purposes of bargaining with public employers as to employment terms. To cover the costs of union representation, PERA authorized public employers and unions to agree that all represented employees would pay their proportionate share of the costs of representation, regardless of union membership. That is, a union could require through its collective bargaining agreement that public employers collect fair share fees from non-union members that would be remitted to the union to apply towards its bargaining activities. In the event an employee qualified as a religious objector to union activities under PERA, a bargaining agreement could nonetheless require that the employee pay a fair-share fee to the union, but the union has to donate the amount of that fee to a charity of its choosing.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of a plaintiff's claims. In reviewing such a motion, all allegations of material fact in the complaint are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. To be assumed true, the allegations, may not simply recite the elements of a cause of action, but must contain sufficient allegations of underlying facts to give fair notice and to enable the opposing party to defend itself effectively. Dismissal for failure to state a claim can be based on either the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory. Conclusory allegations of law are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To avoid dismissal, a plaintiff must plead facts sufficient to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Where a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief. In sum, for a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, the non-conclusory factual content, and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief. In all cases, evaluating a complaint's plausibility is a context-specific endeavor that requires courts to draw on judicial experience and common sense.

[*999] ORDER AND OPINION

[Re: Motions at docket 49, 53]

I. MOTIONS PRESENTED

At docket 49, Defendants NEA-Alaska, National Education Association, and Matanuska-Susitna Education Association ("Union Defendants") move to dismiss all of Plaintiffs' claims against them. They argue [*1000] that Plaintiffs' claim for prospective relief with respect to compulsory payments to unions must be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. They argue that Plaintiffs' § 1983 claim and Alaska tort claims for retrospective monetary relief in relation to these compulsory payments must be dismissed under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim. They argue that Plaintiff Kathryn McCollum's claim challenging Alaska's system of exclusive representative collective bargaining and asking for prospective relief and treble damages must also be dismissed under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\).

At docket 53, Defendant Matanuska-Susitna [**3] Borough School District ("School District") joins the Union Defendants' motion to the extent it addresses the more limited claims against it. Plaintiffs only seek prospective relief against the School District with respect to its collection of compulsory union payments and with respect to its exclusive collective bargaining activities.

Plaintiffs<sup>1</sup> respond at docket 56. Plaintiffs concede that the court lacks jurisdiction over their claims for prospective relief with respect to compulsory union payments, but they maintain that they are entitled to retrospective monetary

The Union Defendants reply at docket 58. The School District replies at docket 59. Oral argument was heard February 15, 2019.

II. BACKGROUND

HN1 Alaska's Public Employment Relations Act \("PERA"\) authorizes bargaining units of public employees to choose to be exclusively represented by a labor union for purposes of bargaining with public employers as to employment \*\*4 terms.<sup>2</sup> To cover the costs of union representation, PERA authorized public employers and unions to agree that all represented employees would pay their proportionate share of the costs of representation, regardless of union membership.<sup>3</sup> That is, a union could require through its collective bargaining agreement that public employers collect "fair share fees" from non-union members that would be remitted to the union to apply towards its bargaining activities. In the event an employee qualified as a religious objector to union activities under PERA, a bargaining agreement could nonetheless require that the employee pay a fair-share fee to the union, but the union had to donate the amount of that fee to a charity of its choosing.<sup>4</sup> Until recently, such fair-share fees were explicitly authorized by Supreme Court precedent, Abood v. Detroit Board of Education.<sup>5</sup> Abood held that public employees may be required to pay their proportionate share of the costs of union representation for collective bargaining purposes.<sup>6</sup>

[*1001] Matanuska-Susitna Education Association ("MSEA") is the union that represents a bargaining unit of the School District's employees. Plaintiffs McCollum and McKee are employees in \*\*5 that bargaining unit. The agreement between the School District and the employees includes a fair-share provision that required the School District to deduct fees from its payments to non-union members and remit them to MSEA. Plaintiff McCollum was not a union member at the time Plaintiffs filed their complaint; therefore, she was required to pay fair-share fees. Plaintiff McKee was a union member at the time. She alleges that she has long opposed the union but chose to remain in it because she otherwise would have had to pay a fair-share fee "and the difference in money between the full membership dues and the [fair-share fees] would not have been worth the loss of [her] vote and . . . influence . . . in collective-bargaining matters."<sup>7</sup>

The other plaintiffs are current or former public school teachers that worked in other school districts and were represented by NEA-Alaska affiliate unions for collective bargaining purposes. Plaintiffs Ness and Christopherson were compelled to pay non-union member fair-share fees to their representative union. Plaintiff Carmen was not a union member but was compelled, as a religious objector under AS 23.40.225, to pay fees to the union for charitable \*\*6 purposes. Plaintiff Liston is a retired teacher who had been a union member during his career but, parties wish to remove Plaintiff Crockett from the court's official caption, a motion to amend the caption must be filed with the court.

like Plaintiff McKee, alleges that he only became one because he otherwise would have been required to pay fair-share fees.

On June 27, 2018, the Supreme Court issued its decision in Janus v. AFSCME,<sup>8</sup> which overruled Abood and held that requiring non-union members to pay union fees as a condition of public employment "violates the First Amendment" and cannot continue.<sup>9</sup>

On August 2, 2018, Plaintiffs filed suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, Alaska common law, and federal antitrust law. Their complaint can be divided into four different requests: (1) a request for declaratory and injunctive relief to prevent the future collection of fair-share fees, including religious objector fees; (2) a request that the Union Defendants be required to refund all fair-share fees collected prior to Janus; (3) a request that the Union Defendants be required to refund a portion of union membership dues paid by Plaintiffs McKee and Liston; and (4) a request for prospective relief that would make Alaska's exclusive representative collective bargaining system unlawful and prevent its future use, as well as a request for treble damages to public employees [**7] who have not been allowed to negotiate on their own behalf.

IV. DISCUSSION [**9]

A. Prospective relief with respect to compulsory union fees

Plaintiffs concede in their response brief that they cannot seek injunctive relief against the Union Defendants and the School District to prevent the future collection of compulsory union fees because [*1003] there is not a current controversy to be resolved on this point.<sup>22</sup> The day Janus was announced, NEA-Alaska sent a letter to all non-union members in bargaining units represented by its local affiliates to inform them that it would cease collecting fair-share fees. It informed them that any such fees that had been collected in advance—to cover the period falling after the Janus decision date up to the end of the fiscal year—would be refunded. Refund checks were mailed the next day. NEA-Alaska local affiliates contacted school districts to notify them to immediately stop deducting fair-share fees. Given that it is undisputed that the collection of fair-share fees ceased immediately after Janus, there is no actual, live controversy sufficient to establish this court's jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' claims for prospective relief with respect to fair-share fees.<sup>23</sup>

Plaintiffs ask for monetary damages under § 1983 for the Union Defendants' collection of fair-share fees pre-Janus. They assert that the court's Janus decision is retroactive under Harper v. Virginia Department of Transportation.<sup>24</sup> Consequently, Plaintiffs assert that the Union Defendants' past collection of fair-share fees from them, as non-members, was a constitutional deprivation for which they are entitled to § 1983 damages. The Union Defendants contend that Janus was not meant to have a retroactive effect, but they note that the court need not make an affirmative ruling on the issue because regardless of how the civil retroactivity doctrine applies to the case, the good faith defense excuses them from liability under § 1983. They argue that they are shielded from monetary liability because they collected fair-share fees according to a presumptively valid state statute and as authorized under then-binding Supreme Court precedent, Abood.

As private defendants acting under the color of state law, the doctrine of qualified immunity from § 1983 suits is not available to the Union Defendants. The Supreme Court in Wyatt v. Cole<sup>25</sup> held as much based on the fact that the rationales [**11] justifying the application of qualified immunity to government officials are not transferrable to private parties.<sup>26</sup> However, in so holding, the Court did not foreclose "the possibility that private defendants faced with § 1983 liability . . . could be entitled to an affirmative defense based on good faith."<sup>27</sup> The Court recognized that "principles of equity and fairness may suggest . . . that private citizens who rely unsuspectingly on state laws they did not create and may have no reason to believe are invalid should have some protection from liability."<sup>28</sup> Since Wyatt, several circuit [*1004] courts, including the Ninth Circuit, have relied upon the defense in shielding private defendants from liability.<sup>29</sup> In Clement v. City of Glendale, the Ninth Circuit relied on the good faith defense when it affirmed that a private defendant, a towing company, was entitled to summary judgment as to the plaintiff's § 1983 claim against it for towing her car in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. It held that the facts of the case supported the application of the defense: the towing company "did its best to follow the law" in that "the tow was authorized by the police department, conducted under close police supervision and appeared to be [**12] permissible under both local ordinance and state law."<sup>30</sup>

Plaintiffs argue that Clement contradicts a prior Ninth Circuit case, Howerton v. Gabica.<sup>31</sup> They assert that Howerton makes "good-faith defenses . . . categorically inapplicable to private parties who violate section 1983."<sup>32</sup> Howerton, which came before Clement, held only that a private party cannot invoke the doctrine of qualified immunity from suit—a holding that the Supreme Court would later endorse in Wyatt. As noted above, the Court in Wyatt left open the possibility that private defendants could avail themselves of an affirmative defense based on good faith, a concept which the Court recognized as separate and distinct from qualified immunity.

Plaintiffs also argue that only private individuals, as opposed to private companies, can invoke good faith to protect themselves from § 1983 liability. They base such an argument on the fact that qualified immunity only applies to individual officials, not government entities. Again, however, qualified immunity is not the same as a good-faith affirmative defense. The rationale for qualified immunity—protecting individual officers from the threat of personal monetary liability for carrying out their duties—is [\[\*\*13\]](#) admittedly not transferrable to private entities. However, other rationales, such as principles of equity and fairness, support the application of the defense to private entities in certain circumstances.<sup>33</sup> Moreover, Clement, the controlling case law in this circuit allowed a private entity to assert the good-faith defense.

Plaintiffs alternatively argue that if the defense is indeed available to private defendants in § 1983 cases, its application is nonetheless limited. They argue that under Wyatt the defense can only be applied to a constitutional claim if the claim is analogous to a common law tort that would have conferred similar defenses when § 1983 was enacted. They argue that the most analogous tort in this situation is conversion, and because conversion does not include an intent element, the good faith defense cannot apply. Like the other three district courts in the Ninth Circuit to consider this argument, the court disagrees with Plaintiffs' construction of the defense.<sup>34</sup>

Clement did not interpret the defense in this limited manner. It applied the [\[\*1005\]](#) defense to a § 1983 claim without considering whether the common law would have conferred the defense with respect to an analogous tort. The [\[\*\*14\]](#) court was clearly more "concerned about the inequities of holding the private towing company liable" when it subjectively and reasonably believed it was following the law.<sup>35</sup> Indeed, the impetus for such a defense is rooted in concerns about the unfairness that would result from holding private parties retrospectively liable under § 1983 for following the law. When the Supreme Court held that private parties using a process established by state statute can be considered state actors for purposes of § 1983, it recognized that private individuals could unfairly be held liable if the state law is later held to be unconstitutional and suggested that the "problem should be dealt with . . . by establishing an affirmative defense."<sup>36</sup> As noted by the Union Defendants, the approach propounded by Plaintiffs "would increase the potential for unfairness by permitting some defendants that rely on presumptively valid state laws to assert the defense while others could not, based solely on the elements of various nineteenth-century common law torts."<sup>37</sup>

Even if the court must find a common law analogue, conversion is not the most closely related tort. "The core element of Plaintiffs' First Amendment claim . . . is not that the Unions [\[\*\*15\]](#) acquired property. Instead, [it] is premised upon their right not to be compelled by the government to associate with the Unions' expressive activities."<sup>38</sup> That is, their claim stems from the dignitary harm that comes from being compelled to support speech with which they disagree, not the taking of their property.

There are other common law torts with scienter elements that can be analogized to Plaintiffs' claim. Tortious interference with a contract is one such cause of action:

The wages from which Plaintiffs' agency fees were deducted were a contractual debt owed to Plaintiffs by their employer under the collective bargaining agreement. In 1871, such a debt could not provide the basis for a conversion claim. Instead, a plaintiff would have had to pursue a claim based on the third party's interference with the employer's satisfaction of its contractual obligations--- and malice or lack of justification was an element of [that tort] at common law.<sup>39</sup>

Abuse of process is also analogous to Plaintiffs' First Amendment claim. It is a "cause of action against private defendants for unjustified harm arising out of the misuse of governmental processes."<sup>40</sup> Here, Plaintiffs' claim against the Union Defendants depends [**16] on the use of governmental processes: their "invocation of Alaska statutes authorizing deduction of agency fees from employees' paychecks and transmission of those fees to the [Union Defendants]."<sup>41</sup> At common law, an abuse of process claim requires the plaintiff to establish that the defendant acted with malice or without probable cause. Given the array of common law torts with scienter elements that can be analogized to Plaintiffs' claim, the good-faith defense [*1006] would be available to the Union Defendants under Plaintiffs' approach.

Plaintiffs also assert that the defense is further limited in that it should only protect defendants from legal claims, as opposed to equitable ones. Plaintiffs argue that because they seek repayment from the Union Defendants based on equitable considerations, the defense cannot apply here. Plaintiffs' position is unavailing under the case law. Furthermore, as the Union Defendants persuasively argue in their reply brief:

Plaintiffs had no expectation of receiving the fair share fees paid to the Unions, and Plaintiffs already have received the benefits of collective bargaining representation paid for with those fees. Requiring the Unions to pay those [**17] funds to Plaintiffs as an equitable remedy would 'stand[ ] that remedy on its head.'<sup>42</sup>

Plaintiffs' argument is also flawed in that the relief they seek does in fact sound in law. Their fair-share fees paid for ongoing costs of representation the Union Defendants provided on their behalf. There is no segregated fund to which Plaintiffs' payments can now be traced, and therefore any relief would be paid from the Union Defendants' general assets. A "personal claim against the defendant's general assets . . . is a legal remedy, not an equitable one."<sup>43</sup>

Given that the good faith defense is indeed available to private defendants in § 1983 cases, the court must consider whether it in fact shields the Union Defendants from monetary liability here. In line with the three other district courts that have applied the defense under nearly identical facts, the court concludes that it does. As discussed above, "traditional principles of equity and fairness . . . underpin the [good faith] defense."<sup>44</sup> The Union Defendants collected fair-share fees in accordance with PERA and in accordance with then-binding Supreme Court precedent that upheld the constitutionality of such fees. "It would be highly inequitable to [**18] hold private parties retroactively liable for § 1983 damages in such a circumstance."<sup>45</sup>

Plaintiffs argue that the good faith defense should not apply to the facts here because the Union Defendants should have known that the Supreme Court was poised to overturn Abood given dicta in the Court's cases over the past six years. They argue it was beyond question that the Court had "grave misgivings about the constitutionality of public-sector agency shops" and the Union Defendants should not have continued to collect fees pursuant to these arrangements in the face of such uncertainty, which therefore precludes any argument that they collected fees in good faith.<sup>46</sup> But "reading the tea leaves of Supreme Court dicta has never been a precondition to good faith reliance on governing law."<sup>47</sup> Barring the use of the good-faith defense on a private defendant who relied on Supreme Court precedent to justify its conduct based on the likelihood of the Supreme Court overruling that precedent would indeed "imperil the rule of law."<sup>48</sup>

[*1007] Plaintiffs argue that, if nothing else, it is improper to dismiss a claim based on the good-faith defense pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). They assert that the defense is a subjective one [**19] that requires evidence of the defendant's actual state of mind. Therefore, they believe they need an opportunity to gather evidence as to what the Union Defendants subjectively believed about the continued lawfulness of such fees; that is, whether they understood such fees to be "constitutionally dubious."<sup>49</sup> Such evidence, they assert, would prove whether the Union Defendants were indeed acting in good faith or whether they were just collecting as much money as they could before the inevitable overruling of Abood. Again, this argument has been considered and correctly rejected as unworkable by the other courts addressing this same issue in these circumstances:

Admittedly, the subjective state of mind of a party asserting good faith is a common inquiry in cases discussing the defense. . . . But applying the subjectivity standard to this case results in a perverse outcome, if followed to its logical conclusion. Assuming that the Union Defendant (or, more accurately, an employee of the union), subjectively believed the Supreme Court would not overrule Abood, the Union Defendant's collection of [fair-share] fees, up until Janus, would be shielded by the good faith defense, but not so if the [**20] same employee instead subjectively believed (correctly) that the Supreme Court would overrule Abood. . . . Inviting discovery on the subjective anticipation of an unpredictable shift in the law undermines the importance of observing existing precedent and ignores the possibility that prevailing jurisprudential winds may shift. . . . The good faith defense should apply here as a matter of law.<sup>50</sup>

It is indisputable that the Union Defendants' collection of fair-share fees was lawful under state statute and then-binding Supreme Court precedent. No amount of discovery would prove otherwise.

Relatedly, Plaintiffs argue that dismissal is premature because the Union Defendants have not shown that its pre-Janus collection of fees from non-union members complied with Abood's restriction on the use of these fees for non-ideological activities only. They assert that discovery is needed on this compliance issue before the Union Defendants can establish a good-faith defense. Their argument is without merit. As noted by the Union Defendants "Plaintiffs do not allege the Unions failed to comply with Abood. Instead, Plaintiffs seek a refund of all fees the Unions received in reliance on Abood [**21]."<sup>51</sup> Their argument that discovery is needed on a different claim for different relief on a different class before the court can apply the good-faith defense simply does not track.

C. Monetary relief for union dues collected pre-Janus

Plaintiffs McKee and Liston were union members who paid union membership dues rather than fair-share fees. They allege that they only became members because they otherwise would have been forced to pay fair-share fees and the difference between the amount of the membership dues and the amount of the fair-share fees "would not have been worth the loss of their vote and whatever little influence they might have been able to exert in collective bargaining matters.<sup>52</sup> That is, [*1008] they believe the existence of the "unconstitutional agency shop" structure and its accompanying fair-share fees compelled their union membership. They seek a refund of a portion of their union membership fees exceeding the amount of the fair-share fees paid by non-union members. Given that the union members' claim is also based upon pre-Janus collection of fair-share fees, the court concludes that the good-faith defense applies here as well.

Other reasons support denial of the union members' [*22] claims. First, they admit that they made a decision to pay union membership dues in exchange for certain benefits: a right to vote in union elections and the ability to influence collective bargaining efforts. This voluntary choice precludes an argument that they were compelled to subsidize the Union Defendants' private speech. Indeed, "Janus says nothing about people who join a union, agree to pay dues, and then later change their mind about paying union dues."<sup>53</sup> Their assertion that their union memberships were compelled because they should have had the option to avoid union fees altogether, as Janus now makes clear, is unpersuasive. The fact that plaintiffs would not have opted to pay union membership fees if Janus had been the law at the time of their decision does not mean their decision was therefore coerced.

Second, Plaintiffs McKee and Liston's agreement to become union members in exchange for benefits created a contract between them and their unions that remains enforceable after Janus.<sup>54</sup> Plaintiffs cannot "seek to claw back money paid in exchange for already-provided contractual benefits . . . based on later changes in the law."<sup>55</sup> Plaintiffs argue that the Union Defendants cannot [*23] rely on this contractual argument to support dismissal under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) because the contract is not described or referenced in the complaint. However, the complaint admits that Plaintiffs McKee and Liston agreed to pay union membership dues in exchange for membership benefits. This admission alone supports the Union Defendants' contractual argument.

D. Monetary relief under Alaska common law

Plaintiffs argue that they are entitled to a refund of pre-Janus fair-share fees and dues under state tort law, specifically conversion and trespass to chattels, as well as "replevin, unjust enrichment, restitution, and any other legal or equitable cause of action that offers relief for the unlawful seizure of their personal property."<sup>56</sup> The Union Defendants are entitled to have these state law claims dismissed under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), because there can be no common law liability for conduct authorized by state statute. Plaintiffs do not dispute that PERA authorized fair-share fees, and the Alaska Labor Relations Agency, pursuant to PERA, promulgated regulations setting forth the procedures for collecting fees. This "comprehensive system to govern labor relations for public employees that includes fair-share fees . . . displaced [*24] any contrary common law in this area."<sup>57</sup> [*1009] Pursuant to Janus, the federal Constitution prohibits the continued enforcement of fair-share fee requirements under PERA; however, Janus "did not change the Alaska Legislature's determination that fair-share fees do not violate state law."<sup>58</sup> That is, Janus does not change the fact that PERA displaced any state common law tort claims that could have been brought with regard to fair-share fees collected prior to Janus.

Plaintiffs argue that because the statute is now unconstitutional it can no longer "confer immunity on otherwise tortious conduct."<sup>59</sup> The court disagrees. It cannot ignore the fact that the Union Defendants' collection of fair-share fees prior to Janus was authorized by state statute that was constitutional under controlling precedent. The court cannot now go back and impose tort liability under common law for that conduct. In any event, the court agrees with the Union Defendants that dismissal of Plaintiffs' tort law claims is also warranted because Plaintiffs cannot establish the elements of the various common law claims.<sup>60</sup>

E. Exclusive representative collective bargaining

Plaintiff McCollum uses the Supreme Court's issuance of Janus [**25] as an opportunity to challenge not only the Union Defendants' past collection of fair-share fees but also to more broadly challenge Alaska's system of exclusive representative collective bargaining. She contends that the Janus decision calls into doubt the constitutionality of exclusive union bargaining.<sup>61</sup> She alleges that Alaska's exclusive collective bargaining system infringes upon her associational freedoms because she "remains bound to the terms of employment negotiated by a union that she does not belong to and wants nothing to do with."<sup>62</sup>

Despite the dicta set forth in Janus that enticed Plaintiff McCollum to bring such a First Amendment challenge, binding Supreme Court precedent flatly rejects her position. In Minnesota State Board for Community Colleges v. Knight,<sup>63</sup> the Supreme Court held that a system of exclusive union representation does not violate the speech or associational rights of individuals who are not members of the union. Indeed, the Court in Janus reaffirmed as much, distinguishing between compelled financial support for a union's exclusive representation and the underlying system of exclusive union representation and acknowledging that states can continue to require that a union [**26] serve as the exclusive bargaining agent for its public employees.<sup>64</sup> Plaintiff McCollum now concedes that she cannot maintain her constitutional challenge to Alaska's system of exclusive union bargaining. She, however, maintains that the system is nonetheless unlawful under federal antitrust law.

Plaintiff's antitrust theory is that collective bargaining agreements stemming from Alaska's PERA are anti-competitive because they require compensation based on union-imposed pay scales and prevent individual employees from negotiating compensation based on individual performance and merits. Plaintiff fails to cite any case authority for her position. Indeed, it does not stand to reason that [*1010] "federal antitrust law" prohibits Alaska from structuring labor relations for its public-sector employees in the same way that Congress structured labor relations for private-sector and federal government employees and that approximately 40 other states have structured their public employee labor relations.<sup>65</sup> Federal antitrust law, which seeks to preserve competition in the private sector, simply does not encompass the way in which a state chooses to set employment terms for its public employees. As to employees [**27] not covered by federal labor relations law, Congress left states "free to legislate as they see fit, and [to] apply their own views of proper public policy to the collective bargaining process."<sup>66</sup>

Several exemptions and doctrines of federal antitrust law bolster this court's conclusion that Plaintiff's claim falls outside the ambit of federal antitrust law. First, antitrust laws do not "restrain a state or its officer or agents from activities directed by its legislature."<sup>67</sup> Plaintiff consequently cannot challenge PERA itself. The legislature's adoption of this exclusive representative bargaining system is "an undoubted exercise of state sovereign authority" and is immune without further analysis.<sup>68</sup>

The collective bargaining agreements between the Union Defendants and school districts, which are a result of this legislatively authorized system, likewise cannot be challenged under antitrust laws. Although non-state actors, the Union Defendants and school districts are undoubtedly carrying out the state's regulatory scheme through their collective bargaining, and the agreements that stem therefrom, and consequently enjoy state-action immunity from federal antitrust laws as to this conduct. [**28]<sup>69</sup> There are no issues of fact to develop on this issue; that is, it is indisputable that the challenged restraint—a collective bargaining agreement negotiated by a representative union—is "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy."<sup>70</sup>

Plaintiff argues that state immunity cannot be applied to dismiss her antitrust claim under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) because the Union Defendants, as private actors, cannot avail themselves of the state-action immunity defense unless, in addition to carrying out state policy, they are actively supervised by the state in carrying out that policy, which is an issue not discernible on the face of the complaint. The active supervision requirement, however, is inapplicable here because the [*1011] other party to the challenged collective bargaining agreement is the School District. "[U]nlike private parties, [local government] entities are not subject to the 'active state supervision requirement' because they have less of an incentive to pursue their own self-interest under the guise of implementing state policies."<sup>71</sup> A local government entity is entitled to a presumption that it "acts in the public interest" and consequently there is "little or no danger" that [**29] the entity would become "involved in a private price-fixing arrangement."<sup>72</sup>

Second, the labor of a human being cannot be a commodity whose price is protected under federal antitrust regulation.<sup>73</sup> Therefore, "restraints on the sale of the employee's services to the employer"—those employment terms set forth in a collective bargaining agreement—"are not themselves combinations or conspiracies in the restraint of trade or commerce under the Sherman Act" even if they "curtail the competition among employees."<sup>74</sup>

Indeed, the Ninth Circuit has held that restraints in a collective bargaining agreement fall within the labor exemption to federal antitrust law.<sup>75</sup>

Third, the court is persuaded that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine also shields collective bargaining agreements from a federal antitrust challenge. Under the doctrine, efforts to convince the government to act in an anticompetitive manner are protected by the First Amendment. Federal antitrust law therefore does not "regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from the government."<sup>76</sup> As long as the unions are not using the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome of the process, as an anticompetitive weapon, negotiating [**30] with public officials for employment terms that may in fact restrict competition is exempt from federal antitrust liability.<sup>77</sup>

V. CONCLUSION

Based on the preceding discussion, the motions at docket 49 and 53 are GRANTED. Plaintiffs' complaint is hereby dismissed in its entirety.

OPINION AND ORDER

MOSMAN, J.,

This matter comes before me on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss [37] Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint [35]. For the reasons stated on the record and the reasons stated below, I GRANT Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, with prejudice as to Claims One, Two, and Three. Claims Four, Five, Six, and Seven are dismissed with leave to amend.

DISCUSSION

For the reasons stated on the record, Plaintiff's antitrust claims (Claims [*2] One, Two, and Three) are dismissed with prejudice. Plaintiff's state law claims for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage (Claim Four), intentional interference with contractual relations (Claim Five), intentional interference with economic relations (Claim Six), and unfair competition (Claim Seven) are dismissed with leave to amend.

Claims Four, Five, and Six of Plaintiff Soul'd Out's Second Amended Complaint assert intentional interference claims under Oregon and California law. A plaintiff alleging intentional interference with economic or contractual relations must plead that the defendant acted wrongfully "by some measure beyond the fact of the interference itself." *Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc.*, 11 Cal. 4th 376, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436, 902 P.2d 740, 751 \(Cal. 1995\); *Top Serv. Body Shop, Inc. v. Allstate Ins. Co.*, 283 Ore. 201, 582 P.2d 1365, 1371 \(Or. 1978\). Soul'd Out advanced four ways in which Defendant Anschutz Entertainment Group (AEG) acted wrongfully. The first three rationales rely on the illegality of the contract at issue in this case: Soul'd Out alleges that the contract violated (1) antitrust law, (2) California's statutory prohibition on restraint of trade (Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600), and (3) Oregon's common law prohibition on restraint of trade. Resp. [40] at 31. The first rationale fails because, as noted above, Soul'd Out has not plausibly alleged an antitrust [*3] violation. The second and third rationales fail because I previously decided that Soul'd Out lacks standing to challenge the contracts formed between AEG and parties not before the Court as illegal restraints of trade. Op. & Order [34].

Soul'd Out also alleged that AEG's acted wrongfully in "fraudulently informing artists that the Soul'd Out Music Festival is a 'festival' within the meaning of the Radius Clause, whereas it is not." Resp. [40] at 31. AEG responded by noting that Soul'd Out did not allege any facts to support its allegation that AEG acted fraudulently. Mot. Dismiss [41] at 32 n.10. I agree.

To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.' A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.

The Second Amended Complaint provided no facts to support the allegation that AEG acted fraudulently. Nor is it reasonable to infer that AEG acted fraudulently if it told musicians that the Soul'd Out Festival was a "festival" as defined by the [*4] Radius Clause—Soul'd Out itself previously argued that it was such a festival. See, e.g., Tr. [32] at 25 ("We're both popular music festivals, as defined by their radius clause . . . .").

Soul'd Out has failed to plausibly allege that AEG acted wrongfully and has therefore failed to state a claim for intentional interference. Because this defect could be amended by pleading sufficient factual matter to support the claim that AEG acted fraudulently, Claims Four, Five, and Six are dismissed with leave to amend.

Soul'd Out's final claim alleges that the contract at issue in this case violates California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL), which prohibits "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." *Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200*. For the same reasons that Soul'd Out failed to plausibly allege that AEG acted wrongfully for the purposes of an intentional interference claim, I find that Soul'd Out has not plausibly alleged that AEG violated the UCL by acting unlawfully, unfairly, or fraudulently. Like the intentional interference claims, this deficiency could be corrected in an amended pleading. Therefore, Claim Seven is dismissed with leave to amend.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, I GRANT Defendants' Motion to [*5] Dismiss [37], with prejudice as to Claims One, Two, and Three. Claims Four, Five, Six, and Seven are dismissed with leave to amend. Plaintiff may file an amended complaint within thirty days of this Order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER RE SUTTER'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION OF COUNTS I AND III

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs UFCW & Employers Benefit Trust ("UEBT") and the People of the State of California (the "People") filed substantially similar complaints. Through the present motion, Sutter<sup>1</sup> moves for summary adjudication of Counts I and III of both complaints. Plaintiffs jointly oppose.

The matter was set for hearing on March 11, 2019. The Court provided the parties with a tentative ruling. Having considered the argument of the parties in addition to the pleadings on file, Sutter's motion is denied.

LEGAL STANDARD

"A party may move for summary judgment in an action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit or that there is no defense to the action or proceeding. The motion may be made at any time after 60 days have elapsed since the general appearance in the action or proceeding of each party against whom the motion is directed or at any earlier time after the general appearance that the court, with or without notice and upon good cause shown, may direct." (Cal. Code of Civ. Proc., § 437c\(a\)\(1\)) "A party may move for summary adjudication as to one or more [*2] causes of action within an action, one or more affirmative defenses, one or more claims for damages, or one or more issues of duty, if the party contends that the cause of action has no merit, that there is no affirmative defense to the cause of action, that there is no merit to an affirmative defense as to any cause of action, that there is no merit to a claim for damages, as specified in Section 3294 of the Civil Code, or that one or more defendants either owed or did not owe a duty to the plaintiff or plaintiffs. A motion for summary adjudication shall be granted only if it completely disposes of a cause of action, an affirmative defense, a claim for damages, or an issue of duty." (Id., § 437c\(f\)\(1\)).

"The purpose of the law of summary judgment is to provide courts with a mechanism to cut through the parties' pleadings in order to determine whether, despite their allegations, trial is in fact necessary to resolve their dispute." (Aguilar v. Atl. Richfield Co. \(2001\) 25 Cal.4th 826, 843, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493.)

"First, and generally, from commencement to conclusion, the party moving for summary judgment bears the burden of persuasion that there is no triable issue of material fact and that he is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." (Id. at 850.) "There is a triable issue of material fact if, and only if, [*3] the evidence would allow a reasonable trier of fact to find the underlying fact in favor of the party opposing the motion in accordance with the applicable standard of proof." (Ibid.) "[A] defendant bears the burden of persuasion that 'one or more elements of the 'cause of action' in question 'cannot be established,' or that 'there is a complete defense' thereto." (Ibid.)

"Second, and generally, the party moving for summary judgment bears an initial burden of production to make a prima facie showing of the nonexistence of any triable issue of material fact; if he carries his burden of production, he causes a shift, and the opposing party is then subjected to a burden of production of his own to make a prima facie showing of the existence of a triable issue of material fact." (Ibid.) "A burden of production entails only the presentation of 'evidence.'" (Ibid.)

"Third, and generally, how the parties moving for, and opposing, summary judgment may each carry their burden of persuasion and/or production depends on which would bear what burden of proof at trial." (Id. at 851.) "Thus, if a plaintiff who would bear the burden of proof by a preponderance of evidence at trial moves for summary judgment, [*4] he must present evidence that would require a reasonable trier of fact to find any underlying material fact more likely than not-otherwise, he would not be entitled to judgment as a matter of law, but would have to present his evidence to a trier of fact. By contrast, if a defendant moves for summary judgment against such a plaintiff, he must present evidence that would require a reasonable trier of fact not to find any underlying material fact more likely than not-otherwise, he would not be entitled to judgment as a matter of law, but would have to present his evidence to a trier of fact." (Ibid.)

The pleadings delimit the scope of the issues and frame the outer measure of materiality in a summary judgment proceeding. (Hutton v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co. \(2013\) 213 Cal.App.4th 486, 493, 152 Cal. Rptr. 3d 584.) The burden of a defendant moving for summary judgment only requires that he or she negate plaintiff's theories of liability as alleged in the complaint; a moving party need not refute liability on some theoretical possibility not included in the pleadings. (Ibid.)

DISCUSSION AND ANALYSIS

I. Count I

Count I is a claim for price tampering in violation of the Cartwright Act. (See UEBT Complaint ¶¶ 138-144; People's Complaint ¶¶ 140-146.) In short, the theory of liability [*5] set forth in the complaints is that Sutter's contracts with Network Vendors unlawfully control and tamper with the price terms that Self-Funded Payors may offer the enrollees of their Health Plans. (UEBT Complaint ¶ 138; People's Complaint ¶ 140.) The purpose of Sutter's contractual restrictions is to eliminate price competition and thereby stabilize and maintain prices for general acute care hospital services and ancillary products at supra-competitive levels in violation of the Cartwright Act. (UEBT Complaint ¶ 138; People's Complaint ¶ 140.) The conduct constitutes either a per se violation of California's antitrust laws or an unreasonable and unlawful restraint of trade. (UEBT Complaint ¶ 142; People's Complaint ¶ 144.)

There are two layers to Sutter's argument. First, Sutter contends that, as a matter of law, the only "price tampering" prohibited by the Cartwright Act is price fixing. (Motion, 11-12.) Second, Sutter argues that, as a matter of fact, Sutter did not fix prices. (Id. at 12-14.) Sutter asserts that Plaintiffs' rely on vertical restraints that indirectly resulted in prices. (Id. at 14-15.) Sutter argues that this theory is not cognizable. (Id. at 14-17.)

Plaintiffs disagree. [*6] First, Plaintiffs contend that claims based vertical tampering with price and price structures are cognizable under the Cartwright Act. (Opposition, 8-13.) Plaintiffs assert that they have evidence to support such a theory. (Id. at 13-14.) Second, if Sutter's legal position is correct, Plaintiffs argue that Plaintiffs have evidence of vertical price fixing. (Id. at 14-16.)

A. The Cartwright Act

Under the Cartwright Act, a "trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for any of the following purposes: ... (d) To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this State. [¶] (e) To make or enter into or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they do all or any combination of any of the following: ... (2) Agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure. [¶] (3) Establish or settle the price of any article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves [*7] and others, so as directly or indirectly to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity. [¶] (4) Agree to pool, combine or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected." (Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720\(d\), \(e\)\(2\)-\(4\).)

The Cartwright Act is this state's principal antitrust law. (In re Cipro Cases I & II \(2015\) 61 Cal.4th 116, 136, 187 Cal. Rptr. 3d 632, 348 P.3d 845.) The act's principal goal is the preservation of consumer welfare. (Ibid.) "At its heart is a prohibition against agreements that prevent the growth of healthy, competitive markets for goods and services and the establishment of prices through market forces. [Citation.] 'The act 'generally outlaws any combinations or agreements which restrain trade or competition or which fix or control prices' [citation], and declares that, with certain exceptions, 'every trust is unlawful, against public policy and void.' [Citations.]'" (Ibid. [internal citations omitted].)

"Though the Cartwright Act is written in absolute terms, in practice not every agreement within the four corners of its prohibitions has been deemed [*8] illegal." (Ibid.) Instead, based on common law prohibitions against restraints of trade, the broad prohibitions in the act are subject to an implied exception similar to one that validates reasonable restraints of trade under the federal Sherman Antitrust Act. (Id. at 136-37, 146.)

B. Vertical Price Tampering<sup>2</sup>

It is undisputed that the Cartwright Act prohibits both horizontal and vertical price fixing. (See, e.g., Motion, 12.) Where the parties part company is on the question of whether the Cartwright Act imposes liability on agreements that "might in any manner" affect prices. (Compare Motion, 12; Opposition, 9.)

---

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs do not base their claims on any agreement of any kind between Sutter and other hospitals or healthcare providers. (Plaintiffs' Response to Separate Statement ¶ 7.) Accordingly, the court need not discuss horizontal price fixing or horizontal price tampering.

Plaintiffs' argument is rooted in the broad language of the statute. (Opposition, 8-9.) But, as observed above, the statute does not prohibit every agreement that falls within the four corners of its prohibitions. (In re Cipro, 61 Cal.4th at 136-37.) Under the common law, reasonable restraints of trade are permitted. (Ibid.)

Accordingly, the first question presented here is whether vertical price tampering is, or may be, prohibited by the Cartwright Act. On that question, Plaintiffs direct the court's attention to Oakland-Alameda County Builders' Exchange v. F.P. Lathrop Construction Co. (1971) 4 Cal.3d 354, 93 Cal. Rptr. 602, 482 P.2d 226 ("Lathrop"). (See Opposition, 9-10.) There, the California Supreme Court held that "the rules of the Oakland-Alameda [¶9] County Bid Depository impose requirements on participating subcontractors and general contractors which involve illegal price tampering and group boycotts." (Lathrop, 4: Cal.3d at 369.) The bid depository rules provided the exclusive process by which general contractors could obtain bids from subcontractors in formulating their bids on prime contracts. (See id. at 357.) First, subcontractors submitted their bids to a lockbox by an appointed time. (See ibid.) Second, general contractors could use only the bids that had been submitted to the lockbox to formulate their bids for the prime contract, without any opportunity to negotiate lower bids. (See ibid.) The process violated the Cartwright Act for two reasons. First, it stifled price competition amongst subcontractors. (Id. at 362-64.) Second, it required general contractors to boycott subcontractors who failed to comply with the bid depository rules. (Id. at 364-65.)

Sutter argues that Lathrop is factually distinguishable because the bid depository rules precluded horizontal price competition — competition between subcontractors. (Motion, 16; Reply, 3.) Further, Sutter argues that cases involving vertical price competition are limited to vertical price fixing — situations [¶10] in which the supplier fixes the price at which the distributor will sell the product. Among other cases, Sutter highlights Kunert v. Mission Financial Services Corp. (2003) 110 Cal.App.4th 242, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 589 and Exxon Corp. v. Superior Court (1997) 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 195. (See Motion, 13-14; Reply, 4.)

In Kunert, the Court of Appeal evaluated whether the Kunerts could amend their complaint to state a claim for vertical price-fixing based on certain proposed allegations. (Kunert, 110 Cal.App.4th at 262.) The Court explained that a "vertical price-fixing agreement, commonly known as resale price maintenance, involves the efforts of a supplier to control the distribution of its product or service by retailers or distributors. [Citation.] Such an agreement limits the distributor's freedom to sell the supplier's product at a price independently selected by the distributor [citation]; instead, the supplier establishes the price at which its distributors may sell the supplier's products, resulting in maintenance of the resale price at a single level. The supplier's price restrictions are often enforced through the supplier's refusal to deal with a particular distributor. [Citation.] A vertical price-fixing or resale price maintenance agreement between supplier and distributor 'destroys horizontal competition as effectively as would a horizontal agreement among [¶11] distributors or retailers' [citation] and is per se unlawful under the Cartwright Act. [Citation]' (Id. at 263 [internal quotations omitted].) The proposed allegations were insufficient because "[t]he essence of resale price maintenance is the supplier's—in this case, Mission Financial's—control of the resale price of its automobile financing, setting it at the same level for all its dealers and thus restricting competition among the dealers on the financing rate. The Kunerts have not and cannot in good faith assert that Mission Financial set the financing rate dealers must charge their customers, or made any effort whatsoever to restrict the financing rate charged by the dealer." (Id. at 263-64.)

In Exxon, Exxon franchisee service station dealers alleged that Exxon violated, inter alia, the Cartwright Act by requiring them to pay excessive rates for gasoline. (Exxon, 51 Cal.App.4th at 1677.) The Court of Appeal analyzed the restraint as a vertical non-price restraint that is tested under the rule of reason such that the plaintiffs were required to prove that the restraint had an anticompetitive effect in the relevant market in order to prevail. (Id. at 1680-81.)

Sutter's cases, especially read in conjunction with Lathrop,<sup>3</sup> do not establish that "vertical [*12] price tampering" is lawful so long as it does not rise to the level of price fixing. Rather, "price tampering," as described in Count I, may be actionable under the Cartwright Act. Sutter concedes that if Sutter is correct that the "price tampering" described in the complaints constitutes only a "non-price vertical restraint," the result is that the restraints are "evaluated just like any other alleged unreasonable restraint of trade" — not that the claim is invalid. (Motion, 23; Exxon, 51 Cal.App.4th at 1680-81; Kunert, 110 Cal.App.4th at 263-64 [concluding that the Kunerts could not plead vertical price-fixing because they could not allege that Mission Financial set financing rates or "made any effort whatsoever to restrict the financing rate charged by the dealer"].)<sup>4</sup>

C. Sutter's Initial Burden

To meet its initial burden, Sutter must meet Plaintiffs' theory of liability as alleged in the complaints. (See Hutton, 213 Cal.App.4th at 493.) Sutter has not done so.

To carry its initial burden, Sutter refers to interrogatory responses in an effort to show that Plaintiffs have disclaimed any intent to show horizontal price tampering or vertical price fixing. (See Sutter Separate Statement ¶¶ 1-9.) This is consistent with Sutter's legal argument that "vertical price tampering" [*13] is not a cognizable offense, only vertical price fixing. But Sutter concedes that "non-price vertical restraint[s]" are evaluated "like any other alleged restraint of trade." (Motion, 23.) Plaintiffs alleged that what the conduct they alleged constituted "price tampering" constitutes "an unreasonable and unlawful restraint of trade." (UEBT Complaint ¶ 142; People's Complaint ¶ 144.) Accordingly, consistent with Sutter's own argument, demonstrating that Plaintiffs' cannot prove price fixing does not indicate that the conduct they describe as "price tampering" is lawful. Accordingly, Sutter has not carried its initial burden of producing evidence that Plaintiffs will be unable to establish an element of their first cause of action.

II. Count III

Count III is a claim for combination to monopolize in violation of the Cartwright Act. (See UEBT Complaint ¶¶ 156-160; People's Complaint ¶¶ 158-162.) In short, the theory of liability set forth in the complaints is that Sutter compelled Health Plan Vendors to agree to contract terms through which Sutter unlawfully restrains trade with the purpose and effect of obtaining or maintaining monopoly power with the relevant geographic markets, which [*14] in turn allows Sutter to demand supra-competitive prices. (UEBT Complaint ¶¶ 156-157; People's Complaint ¶¶ 158-159.)

There are again two layers to Sutter's argument. First, Sutter argues that a "combination to monopolize" claim can only be maintained where the members of the combination shared a specific intent to monopolize the market. (See Motion, 17-20.) Second, Sutter contends that, as a matter of fact, the Health Plan Vendors, or insurers, did not have a specific intent to help Sutter monopolize the market. (Id. at 20-23.)

Plaintiffs' disagreement is with the Sutter's first line of argument. Plaintiffs assert that they need not show that all combining parties shared a specific intent to monopolize to support a claim for a combination to monopolize. (See Opposition, 16-19.)

A. Essential Elements

<sup>3</sup> The Lathrop court did not focus on any distinction between horizontal and vertical price competition. Instead, it underscored the fact that one of the central purposes of the Cartwright Act is to promote price competition. (Lathrop, 4 Cal.3d at 362-63.)

<sup>4</sup> The point Sutter is making here is that Sutter believes that all three theories of liability set forth in Counts I, II, and III should have been included in a single cause of action for unreasonable restraint of trade. (Motion, 23.) However, Sutter does not cite authority to support its implied assertion that the court should remove valid and distinct theories of liability from the case because they could have been alleged as a single cause of action.

1. The Cartwright Act

"[T]he Cartwright Act is not derived from the Sherman Act, but rather from the laws of other states, and the Cartwright Act and the Sherman Act differ in wording and scope." (Asahi Kasei Pharma Corp. v. CoTherix, Inc. \(2012\) 204 Cal.App.4th 1, 8, 138 Cal. Rptr. 3d 620 (citation omitted).) "The Cartwright Act bans combinations, but single firm monopolization is not cognizable under the Cartwright Act. [Citations.] To maintain an action for combination in restraint [*15] of trade under the Cartwright Act, 'the following elements must be established: (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy; (2) illegal acts done pursuant thereto; and (3) damage proximately caused by such acts. [Citation.]' [Citation.]" (Ibid. [internal citations omitted].)<sup>5</sup>

"[A]greements to establish or maintain a monopoly are restraints of trade made unlawful by the Cartwright Act. [Citations.] Under general antitrust principles, a business may permissibly develop monopoly power, i.e., 'the power to control prices or exclude competition' [citation], through the superiority of its product or business acumen. To acquire or maintain that power through agreement and combination with others, however, is quite a different matter. [Citation.]" (In re Cipro, 61 Cal.4th at 148; see also Lowell v. Mother's Cake & Cookie Co. \(1978\) 79 Cal.App.3d 13, 23, 144 Cal. Rptr. 664 ["Though not specifically listed, monopoly is a prohibited restraint of trade. The offense of monopoly involves the willful acquisition of the power to control prices or exclude competition from commerce in a particular geographic area with respect to a specific product"].)

2. In re Cipro

The In re Cipro Court was presented with a "reverse payment" patent settlement whereby a brand-name drug manufacturer paid a generic in exchange [*16] for the generic dropping its patent challenge and consenting to stay out of the market. (In re Cipro, 61 Cal.4th at 130.) Summarizing its ruling, the Court stated that parties "illegally restrain trade when they privately agree to substitute consensual monopoly in place of potential competition that would have followed a finding of invalidity or noninfringement." (Ibid.) In its analysis, the Court addressed whether reverse payment settlements are subject to a rule of reason analysis and, if so, how the analysis should be structured. (Id. at 148.) In that context, the Court made the foregoing observation that agreements to establish or maintain a monopoly are unlawful restraints of trade. (Ibid.) As an example, the Court noted that a firm may not pay its only potential competitor not to compete in return for a share of the profits that firm can obtain by being a monopolist. (Ibid.) In the meat of its analysis, the Court described how the rule of reason analysis applies where a plaintiff challenges a reverse payment patent settlement. (See id. at 151-160.) The focus of the analysis is on whether the settlement fund includes a payment made in exchange for a delay in market entry. (See ibid.) Specific intent is never discussed.

3. Plaintiffs' [*17] Argument

Plaintiffs' argument is straightforward. A "combination to monopolize" is a restraint of trade. (Opposition, 16; In re Cipro, 61 Cal.4th at 148 ["agreements to establish or maintain a monopoly are restraints of trade made unlawful by the Cartwright Act".]) The elements of a claim for a combination in restraint of trade do not include a shared specific intent to create a monopoly. (Opposition, 16-17; Asahi Kasei, 204 Cal.App.4th at 8; Kolling v. Dow Jones & Co. \(1982\) 137 Cal.App.3d 709, 720, 187 Cal. Rptr. 797 ["the 'conspiracy' or 'combination' necessary to support an antitrust action can be found where a supplier or producer, by coercive conduct, imposes restraints to which distributors involuntary adhere".]) Accordingly, Plaintiffs conclude that they need not show a shared specific intent to create a monopoly.

4. Sutter's Arguments

a. Whether Counts II and III are Duplicative

First, Sutter argues that the court should disregard Plaintiffs' reference to the elements of a combination in restraint of trade because Plaintiffs pled a separate cause of action for "unreasonable restraint of trade." (Reply, 8; see also Motion, 23.) As detailed more fully below, the manner in which Plaintiffs organized their legal theories does not govern the court's determination of the essential elements of the Plaintiffs' legal claims. [*18]

Turning to the complaints, Plaintiffs allege that the "combination to monopolize" addressed in Count III violates the Cartwright Act because, at minimum, it constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade. (UEBT Complaint ¶ 158; People's Complaint ¶ 160.) In Count II, Plaintiffs allege that similar conduct constituted, at minimum, an unreasonable restraint of trade, but do not allege that Sutter had the specific intent to obtain or maintain monopoly power. (See UEBT Complaint ¶¶ 146, 152, 157; People's Complaint ¶¶ 148, 154, 159.) Accordingly, Plaintiffs alleged that the conduct addressed in Counts II and III is unlawful under the Cartwright Act for the same reason — it constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade. (UEBT Complaint ¶¶ 152, 158; People's Complaint ¶¶ 154, 160.)

Sutter suggests that if its motion is granted the Count III theory can, in the absence of specific intent to monopolize, be pursued under Count II. (Motion, 23.) But Sutter's motion seeks relief that would remove the Count III theory from the case. Sutter has not cited authority to support the proposition that a distinct theory of liability can be removed from a case on summary adjudication because it was pled [*19] as a separate cause of action. Instead, Sutter argues that Count III is invalid because Plaintiffs do not have evidence of a specific intent to monopolize shared by the insurers. The court's present analysis is limited to that challenge.

b. Sherman Act

Second, Sutter contends that the specific intent requirement it would impose is required by analogous cases interpreting the Sherman Act. (See Motion, 18-19.) However, a review of those cases does not lead to the conclusion that Plaintiffs must prove a shared specific intent to monopolize to prevail on Count III.

Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $1,000,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." (15 U.S.C. § 2)<sup>6</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $1,000,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." (15 U.S.C. § 1) Plaintiffs suggest that the court should analogize their claim to a claim for conspiracy to monopolize under Section 1, which Plaintiffs contend lacks a specific intent requirement. (See Opposition, 19; City of Vernon v. Southern California Edison Co. (9th Cir. 1992) 955 F.2d 1361, 1371 [stating in dicta that a Section 1 conspiracy to monopolize may exist even where one of the conspirators participates involuntarily or under coercion].) This line of argument is tangential. Plaintiffs' primary argument is that federal law is inapposite. (See Opposition, 18.) The reason that Sutter turns to Section 2 of the Sherman Act is because it deals specifically with monopolization. It is the strength of the analogy between Section 2 and California law that determines the weight to be given to Sutter's argument.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act applies to both actual monopolies and the preliminary steps that can lead to monopoly, but [*20] conduct falling short of a monopoly is not illegal unless it is part of a plan to monopolize or to gain such other control of a market as is equally forbidden. (See United States v. Aluminum Co. of America \(2d Cir. 1945\) 148 F.2d 416, 431-32.) Attempt-to-monopolize and conspiracy to monopolize claims require a specific intent to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce, but conspiracy claims do not require proof that the conspiracy resulted in a dangerous threat of achieving monopoly power. (See, e.g., Auraria Student Housing at the Regency, LLC v. Campus Village Apartments, LLC \(10th Cir. 2016\) 843 F.3d 1225, 1233 [attempt-to-monopolize and conspiracy to monopolize claims require a specific intent to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce, but conspiracy claims do not require proof that the conspiracy resulted in a dangerous threat of achieving monopoly power]; Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co. \(9th Cir. 1995\) 51 F.3d 1421, 1437 n.8.) Sutter explains that specific intent is necessary because "combination or conspiracy to monopolize is an inchoate offense—it prohibits an agreement to monopolize even if monopolization does not in fact occur." (Motion, 19.)

There are two California cases that treat agreements to establish or maintain a monopoly as unlawful restraints of trade under the Cartwright Act. (See In re Cipro, 61 Cal.4th at 148; Lowell, 79 Cal.App.3d at 23; see also Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell \(9th Cir. 1986\) 803 F.2d 1473, 1478 [citing Lowell for the proposition that monopoly is a prohibited restraint of trade under the Cartwright Act and [*21] stating, in dicta, that a claim for conspiracy to monopolize between two actors is cognizable under the Cartwright Act].) Sutter notes that the discussions in those cases include citations to cases interpreting Section 2 of the Sherman Act. (Motion, 17-19; Lowell, 79 Cal.App.3d at 23 citing [United States v. Grinnell Corp. \(1966\) 384 U.S. 563, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 and Aluminum Co. to support the proposition that the "offense of monopoly involves the willful acquisition of the power to control prices or exclude competition from commerce in a particular geographic area with respect to a specific product]; In re Cipro, 61 Cal.4th at 148-49 [citing numerous federal cases in explaining examples of prohibited conduct]<sup>7</sup>.)

The fact that California cases cited to Section 2 cases in outlining general principles of monopoly law does not, in itself, indicate that the Cartwright Act tracks Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Instead, In re Cipro adopts an approach to evaluating the anticompetitive effects of an agreement to establish or maintain a monopoly in the unique reverse patent settlement context by formulating an analysis focusing on whether the settlement eliminates competition beyond the point at which competition would have been expected in the absence of the agreement.<sup>8</sup> (In re Cipro, 61 Cal.4th at 151-60.) This is consistent with the language in In re Cipro, Lowell, and [*22] Dimidowich that monopoly is one form of prohibited restraint of trade. The upshot is this: an agreement to monopolize is prohibited by the Cartwright Act if it constitutes an unreasonable restraint on trade. This is consistent with the theory pled in the complaints. (DEBT Complaint ¶ 158 [alleging that combination to monopolize constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade]; People's Complaint ¶ 160 [same].)<sup>9</sup> Shared specific intent amongst all co-conspirators is not an essential element of that offense. (Kolling, 137 Cal.App.3d at 720.)

B. Sutter's Initial Burden

Because Plaintiffs are not required to prove that the insurers had a specific intent to help Sutter form a monopoly, Sutter has not carried its initial burden. (See Sutter Separate Statement ¶¶ 2, 10-65 [the facts on which the motion

<sup>8</sup> During oral argument Sutter suggested that In re Cipro is limited to reverse patent settlement cases. The court respectfully rejects such a limited interpretation of the opinion.

<sup>9</sup> This conclusion is also consistent with Sutter's position that the claim is nothing more than a further theory that Sutter unreasonably restrained trade. (Motion, 23.) At the same time, it is consistent with Plaintiffs' argument that a "combination to monopolize" is analyzed like any other restraint of trade. (Opposition, 16-17.) To the extent there is nothing more here than a disagreement as to whether the theory should have been pled as part of the second cause of action rather than as the third cause of action, Sutter has not explained why this pleading formality makes a difference.

is based are intended to show that the insurers with which Sutter contracted did not act out of a desire to help Sutter secure a monopoly or to restrain trade]; Motion, 17-23 [argument predicated on the absence of specific intent].)

CONCLUSION AND ORDER

For all these reasons, Sutter's motion is denied.<sup>10</sup>

FINAL JUDGMENT AS TO DEFENDANT GS CALTEX CORPORATION

WHEREAS Plaintiff, United States of America, filed its Complaint on November 14, 2018, the United States and Defendant GS Caltex Corporation [*2] ("GS Caltex"), by their respective attorneys, have consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law;

WHEREAS, on such date as may be determined by the Court, GS Caltex will plead guilty pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11\(c\)\(1\)\(C\) (the "Plea Agreement") to an Information to be filed in United States v. GS Caltex Corporation [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the "Criminal Action") that will allege a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, relating to the same events giving rise to the allegations described in the Complaint;

WHEREAS, this Final Judgment does not constitute any evidence against or admission by any party regarding any issue of fact or law;

NOW, THEREFORE, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or final adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED:

I. JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and each of the parties consenting hereto. The Complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted to the United States against GS Caltex under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §1.

II. APPLICABILITY

This Final Judgment applies to GS Caltex, as defined [*3] above, and all other persons in active concert or participation with any of them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

III. PAYMENT

GS Caltex shall pay to the United States within ten (10) business days of the entry of this Final Judgment the amount of fifty-seven million, five hundred thousand dollars ($57,500,000), less the amount paid (excluding any interest) pursuant to the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1, to satisfy all civil antitrust claims alleged against GS Caltex by the United States in the Complaint. Payment of the amount ordered hereby shall be made by wire transfer of funds or cashier's check. If the payment is made by wire transfer, GS Caltex shall contact Janie Ingalls of the Antitrust Division's Antitrust Documents Group at (202) 514-2481 for instructions before making the transfer. If the payment is made by cashier's check, the check shall be made payable to the United States Department of Justice and delivered to: Janie Ingalls, United States Department of Justice Antitrust Division, Antitrust Documents Group, 450 5th Street, NW, Suite 1024, Washington, D.C. 20530. In the event of a default in payment, [*4] interest at the rate of eighteen (18) percent per annum shall accrue thereon from the date of default to the date of payment.

IV. COOPERATION

GS Caltex shall cooperate fully with the United States regarding any matter about which GS Caltex has knowledge or information relating to any ongoing civil investigation, litigation, or other proceeding arising out of any ongoing federal investigation of the subject matter discussed in the Complaint (hereinafter, any such investigation, litigation, or proceeding shall be referred to as a "Civil Federal Proceeding").

The United States agrees that any cooperation provided in connection with the Plea Agreement and/or pursuant to the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1 will be considered cooperation for purposes of this Final Judgment, and the United States will use its reasonable best efforts, where appropriate, to coordinate any requests for cooperation in connection with the Civil Federal Proceeding with requests for cooperation in connection with the Plea Agreement and the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1, so as to avoid unnecessary duplication and expense.

GS Caltex's cooperation shall include, but not be limited [*5] to, the following:

- (a) Upon request, completely and truthfully disclosing and producing, to the offices of the United States and at no expense to the United States, copies of all non-privileged information, documents, materials, and records in its possession (and for any foreign-language information, documents, materials, or records, copies must be produced with an English translation), regardless of their geographic location, about which the United States may inquire in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including but not limited to all information about activities of GS Caltex and present and former officers, directors, employees, and agents of GS Caltex;
- (b) Making available in the United States, at no expense to the United States, its present officers, directors, employees, and agents to provide information and/or testimony as requested by the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including the provision of testimony in trial and other judicial proceedings, as well as interviews with law enforcement authorities, consistent with the rights and privileges of those individuals;
- (c) Using its best efforts to make available in the United States, at no [*6] expense to the United States, its former officers, directors, employees, and agents to provide information and/or testimony as requested by the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including the provision of testimony in trial and other judicial proceedings, as well as interviews with law enforcement authorities, consistent with the rights and privileges of those individuals;
- (d) Providing testimony or information necessary to identify or establish the original location, authenticity, or other basis for admission into evidence of documents or physical evidence produced by GS Caltex in any Civil Federal Proceeding as requested by the United States; and
- (e) Completely and truthfully responding to all other inquiries of the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding.

However, notwithstanding any provision of this Final Judgment, GS Caltex is not required to: (1) request of its current or former officers, directors, employees, or agents that they forgo seeking the advice of an attorney nor that they act contrary to that advice; (2) take any action against its officers, directors, employees, or agents for following their attorney's advice; or (3) [*7] waive any claim of privilege or work product protection.

The obligations of GS Caltex to cooperate fully with the United States as described in this Section shall cease upon the conclusion of all Civil Federal Proceedings (which may include Civil Federal Proceedings related to the conduct of third parties), including exhaustion of all appeals or expiration of time for all appeals of any Court ruling in each such Civil Federal Proceeding, at which point the United States will provide written notice to GS Caltex that its obligations under this Section have expired.

V. ANTITRUST COMPLIANCE PROGRAM

A. Within thirty (30) days after entry of this Final Judgment, GS Caltex shall appoint an Antitrust Compliance Officer and identify to the United States his or her name, business address, telephone number, and email address. Within forty-five (45) days of a vacancy in the Antitrust Compliance Officer position, GS Caltex shall appoint a replacement, and shall identify to the United States the Antitrust Compliance Officer's name, business address, telephone number, and email address. GS Caltex's initial or replacement appointment of an Antitrust Compliance Officer is subject to the approval of the [*8] United States, in its sole discretion.

B. The Antitrust Compliance Officer shall institute an antitrust compliance program for the company's employees and directors with responsibility for bidding for any contract with the United States. The antitrust compliance program shall provide at least two hours of training annually on the antitrust laws of the United States, such training to be delivered by an attorney with relevant experience in the field of United States antitrust law.

C. Each Antitrust Compliance Officer shall obtain, within six months after entry of this Final Judgment, and on an annual basis thereafter, on or before each anniversary of the entry of this Final Judgment, from each person subject to Paragraph V.B of this Final Judgment, and thereafter maintaining, a certification that each such person has received the required two hours of annual antitrust training.

D. Each Antitrust Compliance Officer shall communicate annually to all employees that they may disclose to the Antitrust Compliance Officer, without reprisal, information concerning any potential violation of the United States antitrust laws.

E. Each Antitrust Compliance Offer shall provide to the United States within [*9] six months after entry of this Final Judgment, and on an annual basis thereafter, on or before each anniversary of the entry of this Final Judgment, a written statement as to the fact and manner of GS Caltex's compliance with Section V of this Final Judgment.

VI. RETENTION OF JURISDICTION

This Court retains jurisdiction to enable any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out or construe this Final Judgment, to modify or terminate any of its provisions, to enforce compliance, and to punish violations of its provisions.

VII. ENFORCEMENT OF FINAL JUDGMENT

A. The United States retains and reserves all rights to enforce the provisions of this Final Judgment, including the right to seek an order of contempt from the Court. GS Caltex agrees that in any civil contempt action, any motion to show cause, or any similar action brought by the United States regarding an alleged violation of this Final Judgment, the United States may establish a violation of the decree and the appropriateness of any remedy therefor by a preponderance of the evidence, and GS Caltex waives any argument that [*10] a different standard of proof should apply.

B. The Final Judgment should be interpreted to give full effect to the procompetitive purposes of the antitrust laws and to restore all competition the United States alleged was harmed by the challenged conduct. GS Caltex agrees that they may be held in contempt of, and that the Court may enforce, any provision of this Final Judgment that, as interpreted by the Court in light of these procompetitive principles and applying ordinary tools of interpretation, is stated specifically and in reasonable detail, whether or not it is clear and unambiguous on its face. In any such interpretation, the terms of this Final Judgment should not be construed against either party as the drafter.

C. In any enforcement proceeding in which the Court finds that GS Caltex has violated this Final Judgment, the United States may apply to the Court for a one-time extension of this Final Judgment, together with such other relief as may be appropriate. In connection with any successful effort by the United States to enforce this Final Judgment against GS Caltex, whether litigated or resolved prior to litigation, GS Caltex agrees to reimburse the United States for the [*11] fees and expenses of its attorneys, as well as any other costs including experts' fees, incurred in connection with that enforcement effort, including in the investigation of the potential violation.

VIII. EXPIRATION OF FINAL JUDGMENT

Unless this Court grants an extension, this Final Judgment shall expire seven (7) years from the date of its entry, except that after five (5) years from the date of its entry, this Final Judgment may be terminated upon notice by the United States to the Court and GS Caltex that the continuation of the Final Judgment no longer is necessary or in the public interest.

IX. PUBLIC INTEREST DETERMINATION

Entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest. The parties have complied with the requirements of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16, including making copies available to the public of this Final Judgment, the Competitive Impact Statement, and any comments thereon and the United States' responses to comments. Based upon the record before the Court, which includes the Competitive Impact Statement and any comments and response to comments filed with the Court, entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest.

SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

This Settlement Agreement (Agreement) is entered into among the United States of America, acting through the Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice and the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Ohio, on behalf of the Defense Logistics Agency (DLA) and the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) (collectively the "United States"), GS Caltex Corporation (GS Caltex), and Relator [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] (hereafter collectively referred to as "the Parties"), through their authorized representatives.

RECITALS

A. GS Caltex is a South Korea-based energy company that produces various petroleum products that it sells to South Korean and international customers, including the United States Department of Defense (DoD).

B. On February 28, 2018, Relator, a resident and citizen of South Korea, filed a qui tam action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio captioned United States ex rel. [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] v. GS Caltex, et al., Civil Action No. [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT], pursuant to the qui tam provisions of the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(b\) (the Civil [*13] FCA Action). Relator contends that GS Caltex conspired with other South Korean entities to rig bids on DoD contracts to supply fuel to U.S. military bases throughout South Korea beginning in 2005 and continuing until 2016, including DLA Post, Camps, and Stations contracts and/or contract amendments ("PC&S contracts") executed in 2006, 2009, 2011, and 2013, and AAFES contracts executed in 2008.

C. On such date as may be determined by the Court, GS Caltex will plead guilty pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11\(c\)\(1\)\(C\) (the "Plea Agreement") to an Information to be filed in United States v. GS Caltex Corporation, Criminal Action No. [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the "Criminal Action") that will allege that GS Caltex participated in a combination and conspiracy beginning at least in or around March 2005 and continuing until at least in or around October 2016, to suppress and eliminate competition on certain contracts solicited by the DoD to supply ultra-low sulfur diesel and gasoline to numerous U.S. Army, Navy, Marine, and Air Force installations in Korea, known as PC&S contracts, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

D. GS Caltex will execute a Stipulation with the Antitrust Division of the United States Department [*14] of Justice in which GS Caltex will consent to the entry of a Final Judgment to be filed in United States v. GS Caltex Corporation, Civil Action No. [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the Civil Antitrust Action) that will settle any and all civil antitrust claims of the United States against GS Caltex arising from any act or offense committed before the date of the Stipulation that was undertaken in furtherance of an attempted or completed antitrust conspiracy involving PC&S and/or AAFES fuel supply contracts with the U.S. military in South Korea during the period 2005 through 2016.

E. The United States contends that it has certain civil claims against GS Caltex arising from a conspiracy with other South Korean entities to rig bids on DoD contracts to supply fuel to U.S. military bases throughout South Korea executed between 2005 and 2013, including DLA PC&S contracts and AAFES contracts, as well as the conduct described in the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action. The conduct referenced in this Paragraph, as well as the conduct, actions, and claims alleged by Relator in the Civil FCA Action is referred to below as the Covered Conduct.

F. With the exception of any admissions that are made [*15] by GS Caltex in connection with the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action, this Settlement Agreement is neither an admission of liability by GS Caltex nor a concession by the United States or Relator that their claims are not well founded.

G. Relator claims entitlement under 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\) to a share of the proceeds of this Settlement Agreement and to Relator's reasonable expenses, attorneys' fees and costs.

To avoid the delay, uncertainty, inconvenience, and expense of protracted litigation of the above claims, and in consideration of the mutual promises and obligations of this Settlement Agreement, the Parties agree and covenant as follows:

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1.a. GS Caltex shall pay to the United States $42,621,000 (FCA Settlement Amount), of which $28,414,474 is restitution. Relator's right pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\) to reasonable expenses, attorneys' fees and costs will be addressed separately by Relator, Relator's counsel and GS Caltex.

1.b. Interest at an annual rate of three (3) percent shall accrue on the FCA Settlement Amount beginning on the Effective Date of this Agreement and continuing until the date that both of the following events have occurred: (i) the Plea Agreement is accepted by the Court in [*16] the Criminal Action; and (ii) the proposed Final Judgment is entered by the Court in the Civil Antitrust Action (Accrued Interest).

1.c. The total FCA payment due from GS Caltex shall be the FCA Settlement Amount plus any Accrued Interest (Total FCA Settlement Amount). GS Caltex shall pay the Total FCA Settlement Amount by electronic funds transfer no later than seven (7) business days after both events identified above in Paragraph 1.b. have occurred (Payment Due Date). The Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice shall provide to counsel for GS Caltex written payment instructions and confirmation of the Total FCA Settlement Amount no later than five (5) business days before the Payment Due Date. If GS Caltex does not pay the Total FCA Settlement Amount on or before the Payment Due Date, interest at an annual rate of nine (9) percent shall accrue on the Total FCA Settlement Amount beginning on the first calendar day after the Payment Due Date and shall continue to accrue until paid.

1.d. If GS Caltex's Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action is not accepted by the Court or the Court does not enter the Final Judgment in the Civil Antitrust Action, this Agreement shall [*17] be null and void at the option of either the United States or GS Caltex. If either the United States or GS Caltex exercises this option, which option shall be exercised by notifying all Parties, through counsel, in writing within five (5) business days of the Court's decision, the Parties will not object and this Agreement will be rescinded. If this Agreement is rescinded, GS Caltex will not plead, argue or otherwise raise any defenses under the theories of statute of limitations, laches, estoppel or similar theories, to any civil or administrative claims, actions or proceedings arising from the Covered Conduct that are brought by the United States within ninety (90) calendar days of rescission, except to the extent such defenses were available on the day on which Relator's qui tam complaint in the Civil FCA Action was filed.

2. Subject to the exceptions in Paragraph 3 (concerning excluded claims) below, and conditioned upon GS Caltex's full payment of the Total FCA Settlement Amount, the United States releases GS Caltex together with its current and former parent corporations; direct and indirect subsidiaries; brother or sister corporations; divisions; current or former corporate owners; [*18] and the corporate successors and assigns of any of them from any civil or administrative monetary claim the United States has for the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733; the Program Fraud Civil Remedies Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3801-3812; Contract Disputes Act, 41 U.S.C. §§ 7101-7109; or the common law theories of breach of contract, payment by mistake, unjust enrichment, and fraud, or under any statute creating causes of action for civil damages or civil penalties which the Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice has authority to assert and compromise pursuant to 28 C.F.R. Part 0, Subpart I, § 0.45\(d\).

3. Notwithstanding the release given in paragraph 2 of this Agreement, or any other term of this Agreement, the following claims of the United States are specifically reserved and are not released:

- a. Any liability arising under Title 26, U.S. Code \(Internal Revenue Code\);
- b. Any criminal liability, except to the extent detailed in the Plea Agreement;
- c. Except as explicitly stated in this Agreement, any administrative liability, including the suspension and debarment rights of any federal agency;
- d. Any liability to the United States (or its agencies) for any conduct other than the Covered Conduct;
- e. Any liability [*19] based upon obligations created by this Agreement;
- f. Any liability of individuals;
- g. Any liability for express or implied warranty claims or other claims for defective or deficient products or services, including quality of goods and services;
- h. Any liability for failure to deliver goods or services due; and
- i. Any liability for personal injury or property damage or for other consequential damages arising from the Covered Conduct.

4. Relator and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns shall not object to this Agreement but agree and confirm that this Agreement is fair, adequate, and reasonable under all the circumstances, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(c\)\(2\)\(B\). The determination of Relator's share, if any, of the FCA Settlement Amount pursuant to 31 U.S.C. §3730\(d\) is a matter that shall be handled separately by and between the Relator and the United States, without any direct involvement or input from GS Caltex. In connection with this Agreement and this Civil FCA Action, Relator, on behalf of himself and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns agrees that neither this Agreement, nor any intervention by the United States in the Civil FCA Action in order to dismiss the Civil FCA Action, nor any dismissal [*20] of the Civil FCA Action, shall waive or otherwise affect the ability of the United States to contend that provisions in the False Claims Act, including 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\)\(3\), bar Relator from sharing in the proceeds of this Agreement, except that the United States will not contend that Relator is barred from sharing in the proceeds of this Agreement pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(e\)\(4\). Moreover, the United States and Relator, on behalf of himself and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns agree that they each retain all of their rights pursuant to the False Claims Act on the issue of the share percentage, if any, that Relator should receive of any proceeds of the settlement of his claims, and that no agreements concerning Relator share have been reached to date.

5. Relator, for himself, and for his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns, releases GS Caltex, together with its predecessors, successors, assigns, shareholders, subsidiaries, businesses, affiliates, divisions, sister companies, owners, directors, officers, agents, employees, and counsel, from any action, in law or in equity, suits, debts, liens, contracts, agreements, covenants, promises, liability, obligations, claims, demands, rights of [*21] subrogation, contribution and indemnity, damages, loss, cost or expenses, direct or indirect, of any kind or nature whatsoever (including without limitation any civil monetary claim Relator has on behalf of the United States for the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act. 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733), known or unknown, fixed or contingent, foreign (including Korean), state or federal, under common law, statute or regulation, liquidated or unliquidated, claimed or concealed, and without regard to the date of occurrence, which Relator ever had, now has, may assert, or may in the future claim to have, against GS Caltex by reason of any act, cause, matter, or thing whatsoever from the beginning of time to the date hereof. Relator represents and warrants that he and his counsel are the exclusive owner of the rights, claims, and causes of action herein released and none of them have previously assigned, reassigned, or transferred or purported to assign, reassign or transfer, through bankruptcy or by any other means, any or any portion of any claim, demand, action, cause of action, or other right released or discharged under this Agreement except between themselves and their counsel. Notwithstanding the foregoing, [*22] or any other terms of this Agreement, this Agreement does not resolve or release Relator's right pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\) to reasonable expenses necessarily incurred, plus reasonable attorneys' fees and costs relating to the Covered Conduct, the amount of which will be addressed separately by Relator, Relator's counsel, and GS Caltex.

6. GS Caltex waives and shall not assert any defenses GS Caltex may have to any criminal prosecution or administrative action relating to the Covered Conduct that may be based in whole or in part on a contention that, under the Double Jeopardy Clause in the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution, or under the Excessive Fines Clause in the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution, this Agreement bars a remedy sought in such criminal prosecution or administrative action.

7. GS Caltex fully and finally releases the United States, its agencies, officers, agents, employees, and servants, from any claims (including attorney's fees, costs, and expenses of every kind and however denominated) that GS Caltex has asserted, could have asserted, or may assert in the future against the United States, its agencies, officers, agents, employees, and servants, related to the Covered Conduct and the United States' investigation and prosecution thereof.

8. GS Caltex, for itself and on behalf of its predecessors, successors, [*23] assigns, shareholders, subsidiaries, businesses, affiliates, divisions, sister companies, owners, directors, officers, agents, employees, and counsel, releases Relator, together with his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns from any action, in law or in equity, suits, debts, liens, contracts, agreements, covenants, promises, liability, obligations, claims, demands, rights of subrogation, contribution and indemnity, damages, loss, cost or expenses, direct or indirect, of any kind or nature whatsoever, known or unknown, fixed or contingent, foreign (including Korean), state or federal, under common law, statute or regulation, liquidated or unliquidated, claimed or concealed, and without regard to the date of occurrence, which GS Caltex ever had, now has, may assert, or may in the future claim to have, against Relator by reason of any act, cause, matter, or thing whatsoever from the beginning of time to the date hereof. GS Caltex represents and warrants that it and its counsel are the exclusive owner of the rights, claims, and causes of action herein released and none of them have previously assigned, reassigned, or transferred or purported to assign, reassign or transfer, [*24] through bankruptcy or by any other means, any or any portion of any claim, demand, action, cause of action, or other right released or discharged under this Agreement except between themselves and their counsel. Notwithstanding the foregoing, or any other terms of this Agreement, this Agreement does not resolve or release GS Caltex's right pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\) to assert defenses to Relator's claimed attorneys' fees, expenses, and costs relating to the Covered Conduct, the amount of which will be addressed separately by Relator, Relator's counsel, and GS Caltex.

9. a. Unallowable Costs Defined: All costs (as defined in the Federal Acquisition Regulation, 48 C.F.R. § 31.205-47) incurred by or on behalf of GS Caltex, and its present or former officers, directors, employees, shareholders, and agents in connection with:

- (1) the matters covered by this Agreement, any related plea agreement, and any related civil antitrust agreement;
- (2) the United States' audit(s) and civil and any criminal investigation(s) of the matters covered by this Agreement;
- (3) GS Caltex's investigation, defense, and corrective actions undertaken in response to the United States' audit(s) and civil and any criminal investigation(s) in connection [*25] with the matters covered by this Agreement (including attorney's fees);
- (4) the negotiation and performance of this Agreement, any related plea agreement, and any related civil antitrust agreement;
- (5) the payment GS Caltex makes to the United States pursuant to this Agreement and any payments that GS Caltex may make to Relator, including costs and attorneys' fees, are unallowable costs for government contracting purposes (hereinafter referred to as Unallowable Costs).

b. Future Treatment of Unallowable Costs: Unallowable Costs will be separately determined and accounted for by GS Caltex, and GS Caltex shall not charge such Unallowable Costs directly or indirectly to any contract with the United States.

c. Treatment of Unallowable Costs Previously Submitted for Payment: Within 90 days of the Effective Date of this Agreement, GS Caltex shall identify and repay by adjustment to future claims for payment or otherwise any Unallowable Costs included in payments previously sought by GS Caltex or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates from the United States. GS Caltex agrees that the United States, at a minimum, shall be entitled to recoup from GS Caltex any overpayment plus applicable interest [*26] and penalties as a result of the inclusion of such Unallowable Costs on previously-submitted requests for payment. The United States, including the Department of Justice and/or the affected agencies, reserves its rights to audit, examine, or re-examine GS Caltex's books and records and to disagree with any calculations submitted by GS Caltex or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates regarding any Unallowable Costs included in payments previously sought by GS Caltex, or the effect of any such Unallowable Costs on the amount of such payments.

10. GS Caltex agrees to cooperate fully and truthfully with the United States in connection with the Civil FCA Action. The Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice will use reasonable best efforts, where appropriate, to coordinate any requests for cooperation in connection with the Civil FCA Action with requests for cooperation in connection with the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action and the Civil Antitrust Action, so as to avoid unnecessary duplication and expense. GS Caltex's ongoing, full, and truthful cooperation shall include, but not be limited to:

a. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, producing at [*27] the offices of counsel for the United States in Washington, D.C. and not at the expense of the United States, complete and un-redacted copies of all non-privileged documents related to the Covered Conduct wherever located in GS Caltex's possession, custody, or control;

b. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, making current GS Caltex directors, officers, and employees available for interviews, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, by counsel for the United States and/or their investigative agents, not at the expense of the United States, in the United States or Hong Kong unless another place is mutually agreed upon;

c. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, (i) using best efforts to assist in locating former GS Caltex directors, officers, and employees identified by attorneys and/or investigative agents of the United States, and (ii) using best efforts to make any such former GS Caltex directors, officers, and employees available for interviews, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, by counsel for the United States and/or their investigative agents, not at the expense of the United States, in the [*28] United States or Hong Kong unless another place is mutually agreed upon; and

d. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, making current GS Caltex directors, officers, and employees available, and using best efforts to make former GS Caltex directors, officers, employees available, to testify, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, fully, truthfully, and under oath, without falsely implicating any person or withholding any information, (i) at depositions in the United States, Hong Kong, or any other mutually agreed upon place, (ii) at trial in the United States, and (iii) at any other judicial proceedings wherever located related to the Civil FCA Action.

11. This Agreement is intended to be for the benefit of the Parties only.

12. Upon receipt of the payment of the Total FCA Settlement Amount described in Paragraph 1.a-c., above, or receipt of the Total FCA Settlement Amount and any additional interest that accrues if GS Caltex does not pay on or before the Payment Due Date, the United States and Relator shall promptly sign and file a Joint Stipulation of Dismissal, with prejudice, of the claims filed against GS Caltex in the Civil FCA Action, pursuant [*29] to Rule 41\(a\)\(1\), which dismissal shall be conditioned on the Court retaining jurisdiction over Relator's claims to a relator's share and recovery of attorneys' fees and costs pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\).

13. Except as provided herein, each Party shall bear its own legal and other costs incurred in connection with this matter. The Parties agree that Relator and GS Caltex will not seek to recover from the United States any costs or fees related to the preparation and performance of this Agreement.

14. Each party and signatory to this Agreement represents that it freely and voluntarily enters into this Agreement without any degree of duress or compulsion.

15. This Agreement is governed by the laws of the United States. The exclusive jurisdiction and venue for any dispute relating to this Agreement is the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio. GS Caltex agrees that the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio has jurisdiction over it for purposes of the Civil FCA Action. For purposes of construing this Agreement, this Agreement shall be deemed to have been drafted by all Parties to this Agreement and shall not, therefore, be construed against any Party for that reason [*30] in any subsequent dispute.

16. This Agreement constitutes the complete agreement between the Parties on the subject matters addressed herein. This Agreement may not be amended except by written consent of the Parties.

17. The undersigned counsel represent and warrant that they are fully authorized to execute this Agreement on behalf of the persons and entities indicated below.

18. This Agreement may be executed in counterparts, each of which constitutes an original and all of which constitute one and the same Agreement.

19. This Agreement is binding on GS Caltex's successors, transferees, heirs, and assigns.

20. This Agreement is binding on Relator's successors, transferees, heirs, and assigns.

21. All parties consent to the United States' disclosure of this Agreement, and information about this Agreement, to the public, as permitted by order of the Court. This Agreement shall not be released in un-redacted form until the Court unseals the entire Civil FCA Action.

22. This Agreement is effective on the date of signature of the last signatory to the Agreement (Effective Date of this Agreement). Electronic copies of signatures shall constitute acceptable, binding signatures for purposes of [*31] this Agreement.

FINAL JUDGMENT AS TO DEFENDANT HANJIN TRANSPORTATION CO., LTD.

WHEREAS Plaintiff, United States of America, filed its Complaint on November [*2] 14, 2018, the United States and Defendant Hanjin Transportation Co., Ltd. ("Hanjin"), by their respective attorneys, have consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law;

WHEREAS, on such date as may be determined by the Court, Hanjin will plead guilty pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11\(c\)\(1\)\(C\) (the "Plea Agreement") to an Information to be filed in United States v. Hanjin Transportation Co., Ltd. [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the "Criminal Action") that will allege a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, relating to the same events giving rise to the allegations described in the Complaint;

WHEREAS, this Final Judgment does not constitute any evidence against or admission by any party regarding any issue of fact or law;

NOW, THEREFORE, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or final adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED:

I. JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and each of the parties consenting hereto. The Complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted to the United States against Hanjin under Section 1 of the Sherman [*3] Act, 15 U.S.C. §1.

II. APPLICABILITY

This Final Judgment applies to Hanjin, as defined above, and all other persons in active concert or participation with any of them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

III. PAYMENT

Hanjin shall pay to the United States within ten (10) business days of the entry of this Final Judgment the amount of six million, one hundred eighty-two thousand dollars ($6,182,000), less the amount paid (excluding any interest) pursuant to the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1, to satisfy all civil antitrust claims alleged against Hanjin by the United States in the Complaint. Payment of the amount ordered hereby shall be made by wire transfer of funds or cashier's check. If the payment is made by wire transfer, Hanjin shall contact Janie Ingalls of the Antitrust Division's Antitrust Documents Group at (202) 514-2481 for instructions before making the transfer. If the payment is made by cashier's check, the check shall be made payable to the United States Department of Justice and delivered to: Janie Ingalls, United States Department of Justice Antitrust Division, Antitrust Documents Group, 450 5th Street, NW, Suite 1024, [*4] Washington, D.C. 20530. In the event of a default in payment, interest at the rate of eighteen (18) percent per annum shall accrue thereon from the date of default to the date of payment.

IV. COOPERATION

Hanjin shall cooperate fully with the United States regarding any matter about which Hanjin has knowledge or information relating to any ongoing civil investigation, litigation, or other proceeding arising out of any ongoing federal investigation of the subject matter discussed in the Complaint (hereinafter, any such investigation, litigation, or proceeding shall be referred to as a "Civil Federal Proceeding").

The United States agrees that any cooperation provided in connection with the Plea Agreement and/or pursuant to the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1 will be considered cooperation for purposes of this Final Judgment, and the United States will use its reasonable best efforts, where appropriate, to coordinate any requests for cooperation in connection with the Civil Federal Proceeding with requests for cooperation in connection with the

Plea Agreement and the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1, so as to avoid unnecessary duplication and expense. [*5]

Hanjin's cooperation shall include, but not be limited to, the following:

- (a) Upon request, completely and truthfully disclosing and producing, to the offices of the United States and at no expense to the United States, copies of all non-privileged information, documents, materials, and records in its possession (and for any foreign-language information, documents, materials, or records, copies must be produced with an English translation), regardless of their geographic location, about which the United States may inquire in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including but not limited to all information about activities of Hanjin and present and former officers, directors, employees, and agents of Hanjin;
- (b) Making available in the United States, at no expense to the United States, its present officers, directors, employees, and agents to provide information and/or testimony as requested by the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including the provision of testimony in trial and other judicial proceedings, as well as interviews with law enforcement authorities, consistent with the rights and privileges of those individuals;
- (c) Using its best efforts [*6] to make available in the United States, at no expense to the United States, its former officers, directors, employees, and agents to provide information and/or testimony as requested by the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including the provision of testimony in trial and other judicial proceedings, as well as interviews with law enforcement authorities, consistent with the rights and privileges of those individuals;
- (d) Providing testimony or information necessary to identify or establish the original location, authenticity, or other basis for admission into evidence of documents or physical evidence produced by Hanjin in any Civil Federal Proceeding as requested by the United States; and
- (e) Completely and truthfully responding to all other inquiries of the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding.

However, notwithstanding any provision of this Final Judgment, Hanjin is not required to: (1) request of its current or former officers, directors, employees, or agents that they forgo seeking the advice of an attorney nor that they act contrary to that advice; (2) take any action against its officers, directors, employees, or agents for [*7] following their attorney's advice; or (3) waive any claim of privilege or work product protection.

The obligations of Hanjin to cooperate fully with the United States as described in this Section shall cease upon the conclusion of all Civil Federal Proceedings (which may include Civil Federal Proceedings related to the conduct of third parties), including exhaustion of all appeals or expiration of time for all appeals of any Court ruling in each such Civil Federal Proceeding, at which point the United States will provide written notice to Hanjin that its obligations under this Section have expired.

V. ANTITRUST COMPLIANCE PROGRAM

A. Within thirty (30) days after entry of this Final Judgment, Hanjin shall appoint an Antitrust Compliance Officer and identify to the United States his or her name, business address, telephone number, and email address. Within forty-five (45) days of a vacancy in the Antitrust Compliance Officer position, Hanjin shall appoint a replacement, and shall identify to the United States the Antitrust Compliance Officer's name, business address, telephone number, and email address. Hanjin's initial or replacement appointment of an Antitrust Compliance Officer is subject [*8] to the approval of the United States, in its sole discretion.

B. The Antitrust Compliance Officer shall institute an antitrust compliance program for the company's employees and directors with responsibility for bidding for any contract with the United States. The antitrust compliance program shall provide at least two hours of training annually on the antitrust laws of the United States, such training to be delivered by an attorney with relevant experience in the field of United States antitrust law.

C. Each Antitrust Compliance Officer shall obtain, within six months after entry of this Final Judgment, and on an annual basis thereafter, on or before each anniversary of the entry of this Final Judgment, from each person subject to Paragraph V.B of this Final Judgment, and thereafter maintaining, a certification that each such person has received the required two hours of annual antitrust training.

D. Each Antitrust Compliance Officer shall communicate annually to all employees that they may disclose to the Antitrust Compliance Officer, without reprisal, information concerning any potential violation of the United States antitrust laws.

E. Each Antitrust Compliance Offer shall provide [*9] to the United States within six months after entry of this Final Judgment, and on an annual basis thereafter, on or before each anniversary of the entry of this Final Judgment, a written statement as to the fact and manner of Hanjin's compliance with Section V of this Final Judgment.

VI. RETENTION OF JURISDICTION

This Court retains jurisdiction to enable any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out or construe this Final Judgment, to modify or terminate any of its provisions, to enforce compliance, and to punish violations of its provisions.

VII. ENFORCEMENT OF FINAL JUDGMENT

A. The United States retains and reserves all rights to enforce the provisions of this Final Judgment, including the right to seek an order of contempt from the Court. Hanjin agrees that in any civil contempt action, any motion to show cause, or any similar action brought by the United States regarding an alleged violation of this Final Judgment, the United States may establish a violation of the decree and the appropriateness of any remedy therefor by a preponderance of the evidence, and Hanjin waives [*10] any argument that a different standard of proof should apply.

B. The Final Judgment should be interpreted to give full effect to the procompetitive purposes of the antitrust laws and to restore all competition the United States alleged was harmed by the challenged conduct. Hanjin agrees that they may be held in contempt of, and that the Court may enforce, any provision of this Final Judgment that, as interpreted by the Court in light of these procompetitive principles and applying ordinary tools of interpretation, is stated specifically and in reasonable detail, whether or not it is clear and unambiguous on its face. In any such interpretation, the terms of this Final Judgment should not be construed against either party as the drafter.

C. In any enforcement proceeding in which the Court finds that Hanjin has violated this Final Judgment, the United States may apply to the Court for a one-time extension of this Final Judgment, together with such other relief as may be appropriate. In connection with any successful effort by the United States to enforce this Final Judgment against Hanjin, whether litigated or resolved prior to litigation, Hanjin agrees to reimburse the United States for [*11] the fees and expenses of its attorneys, as well as any other costs including experts' fees, incurred in connection with that enforcement effort, including in the investigation of the potential violation.

VIII. EXPIRATION OF FINAL JUDGMENT

Unless this Court grants an extension, this Final Judgment shall expire seven (7) years from the date of its entry, except that after five (5) years from the date of its entry, this Final Judgment may be terminated upon notice by the United States to the Court and Hanjin that the continuation of the Final Judgment no longer is necessary or in the public interest.

IX. PUBLIC INTEREST DETERMINATION

Entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest. The parties have complied with the requirements of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16, including making copies available to the public of this Final Judgment, the Competitive Impact Statement, and any comments thereon and the United States' responses to comments. Based upon the record before the Court, which includes the Competitive Impact Statement and any comments and response to comments filed with the Court, entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest.

SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

This Settlement Agreement (Agreement) is entered into among the United States of America, acting through the Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice and the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Ohio, on behalf of the Defense Logistics Agency (DLA) and the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) (collectively the "United States"), Hanjin Transportation Co., Ltd. (Hanjin), and Relator [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] (hereafter collectively referred to as the Parties"), through their authorized representatives.

RECITALS

A. Hanjin is a South Korea-based logistics company with South Korean and international customers, including the United States Department of Defense (DoD).

B. On February 28, 2018, Relator, a resident and citizen of South Korea, filed a qui tam action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio captioned United States ex rel. [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] v. GS Caltex, et al., Civil Action No. [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT], pursuant to the qui tam provisions of the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. § 3730(b) (the Civil FCA Action). Relator contends that Hanjin conspired [*13] with other South Korean entities to rig bids on DoD contracts to supply fuel to U.S. military bases throughout South Korea beginning in 2008 and continuing until 2016, including DLA Post, Camps, and Stations contracts executed in 2009 and 2013, and AAFES contracts executed in 2008.

C. On such date as may be determined by the Court, Hanjin will plead guilty pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(c)(1)(C) (the "Plea Agreement") to an Information to be filed in United States v. Hanjin Transportation Co., Ltd., Criminal Action No. [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the "Criminal Action") that will allege that Hanjin participated in a combination and conspiracy beginning at least in or around March 2005 and continuing until at least in or around October 2016, to suppress and eliminate competition on certain contracts solicited by the DoD to supply ultra-low sulfur diesel and gasoline to numerous U.S. Army, Navy, Marine, and Air Force installations in Korea, including PC&S contracts, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

D. Hanjin will execute a Stipulation with the Antitrust Division of the United States Department of Justice in which Hanjin will consent to the entry of a Final Judgment to be filed in *United States v. Hanjin [*14] Transportation Co., Ltd.*, Civil Action No. [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the Civil Antitrust Action) that will settle any and all civil antitrust claims of the United States against Hanjin arising from any act or offense committed before the date of the Stipulation that was undertaken in furtherance of an attempted or completed antitrust conspiracy involving PC&S and or AAFES fuel supply contracts with the U.S. military in South Korea during the period 2005 through 2016.

E. The United States contends that it has certain civil claims against Hanjin arising from a conspiracy with other South Korean entities to rig bids on DoD contracts to supply fuel to U.S. military bases throughout South Korea beginning in 2008 and continuing to 2016, including DLA Post, Camps, and Stations contracts executed in 2009 and 2013, and AAFES contracts executed in 2008. The conduct described in this Paragraph, as well as the conduct, actions, and claims alleged by Relator in the Civil FCA Action is referred to below as the Covered Conduct.

F. With the exception of any admissions that are made by Hanjin in connection with the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action, this Settlement Agreement is neither an [*15] admission of liability by Hanjin nor a concession by the United States or Relator that their claims are not well founded.

G. Relator claims entitlement under 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\) to a share of the proceeds of this Settlement Agreement and to Relator's reasonable expenses, attorneys' fees, and costs.

To avoid the delay, uncertainty, inconvenience, and expense of protracted litigation of the above claims, and in consideration of the mutual promises and obligations of this Settlement Agreement, the Parties agree and covenant as follows:

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1. Hanjin agrees to pay to the United States $6,182,000 (FCA Settlement Amount) by electronic funds transfer no later than thirteen (13) business days after the Effective Date of this Agreement pursuant to written instructions to be provided by the Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice. Relator claims entitlement under 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\) to Relator's reasonable expenses, attorneys' fees and costs. The FCA Settlement Amount does not include the Relator's fees and costs, and Hanjin acknowledges (without waiving any applicable arguments or defenses) that Relator retains all rights to seek to recover such expenses, attorneys' fees, and costs from Hanjin pursuant [*16] to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\).

2. Subject to the exceptions in Paragraph 4 (concerning excluded claims) below, and conditioned upon Hanjin's full payment of the FCA Settlement Amount, the United States releases Hanjin together with its current and former parent corporations; direct and indirect subsidiaries; brother or sister corporations; divisions; current or former corporate owners; and the corporate successors and assigns of any of them from any civil or administrative monetary claim the United States has for the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733; the Program Fraud Civil Remedies Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3801-3812; Contract Disputes Act, 41 U.S.C. §§ 7101-7109; or the common law theories of breach of contract, payment by mistake, unjust enrichment, and fraud.

3. Except as set forth in Paragraph 1 (concerning Relator's claims under 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\)), and subject to the exceptions in Paragraph 4 below, and conditioned upon Hanjin's full payment of the FCA Settlement Amount, Relator, on behalf of: (a) his respective heirs, successors, assigns, agents and attorneys; and (b) his companies ([TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT]., together with their direct and indirect subsidiaries, brother or sister corporations, divisions, current or former corporate owners, and the corporate [*17] successors and assigns of any of them); hereby fully and finally releases, waives, and forever discharges Hanjin, together with its direct and indirect subsidiaries, brother or sister corporations, divisions, current or former corporate owners, and the corporate successors and assigns of any of them, from: (i) any civil monetary claim Relator has on behalf of the United States for the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733; (ii) any claims or allegations Relator has asserted or could have asserted against Hanjin arising from the Covered Conduct; and (iii) all liability, claims, demands, actions or causes of action whatsoever, whether known or unknown, fixed or contingent, in law or in equity, in contract or in tort, under any federal, Korean, or state statute or regulation or otherwise, or in common law, including claims for attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses of every kind and however denominated, that Relator would have standing to bring or which Relator may now have or claim to have against Hanjin and/or its direct and indirect subsidiaries, brother or sister corporations, divisions, current or former corporate owners, and the corporate successors and assigns of any of them. [*18]

4. Notwithstanding the releases given in paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Agreement, or any other term of this Agreement, the following claims of the United States are specifically reserved and are not released:

- a. Any liability arising under Title 26, U.S. Code (Internal Revenue Code);
- b. Any criminal liability, except to the extent detailed in the Plea Agreement;
- c. Except as explicitly stated in this Agreement, any administrative liability, including the suspension and debarment rights of any federal agency;
- d. Any liability to the United States (or its agencies) for any conduct other than the Covered Conduct;
- e. Any liability based upon obligations created by this Agreement;
- f. Any liability of individuals;
- g. Any liability for express or implied warranty claims or other claims for defective or deficient products or services, including quality of goods and services;
- h. Any liability for failure to deliver goods or services due; and
- i. Any liability for personal injury or property damage or for other consequential damages arising from the Covered Conduct.

5. Relator and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns shall not object to this Agreement but agree and confirm that this Agreement [*19] is fair, adequate, and reasonable under all the circumstances, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(c\)\(2\)\(B\). In connection with this Agreement and this Civil FCA Action, Relator, on behalf of himself and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns, agrees that neither this Agreement, nor any intervention by the United States in the Civil FCA Action in order to dismiss the Civil FCA Action, nor any dismissal of the Civil FCA Action, shall waive or otherwise affect the ability of the United States to contend that provisions in the False Claims Act, including 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\)\(3\), bar Relator from sharing in the proceeds of this Agreement, except that the United States will not contend that Relator is barred from sharing in the proceeds of this Agreement pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(e\)\(4\). Moreover, the United States and Relator, on behalf of himself and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns agree that they each retain all of their rights pursuant to the False Claims Act on the issue of the share percentage, if any, that Relator should receive of any proceeds of the settlement of his claims, and that no agreements concerning Relator share have been reached to date.

6. Hanjin waives and shall not assert any defenses Hanjin may have to [*20] any criminal prosecution or administrative action relating to the Covered Conduct that may be based in whole or in part on a contention that, under the Double Jeopardy Clause in the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution, or under the Excessive Fines Clause in the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution, this Agreement bars a remedy sought in such criminal prosecution or administrative action.

7. Hanjin fully and finally releases the United States, its agencies, officers, agents, employees, and servants, from any claims (including attorney's fees, costs, and expenses of every kind and however denominated) that Hanjin has asserted, could have asserted, or may assert in the future against the United States, its agencies, officers, agents, employees, and servants, related to the Covered Conduct and the United States' investigation and prosecution thereof.

8. Hanjin, together with its direct and indirect subsidiaries, brother or sister corporations, divisions, current or former corporate owners, and the corporate successors and assigns of any of them, hereby fully and finally releases, waives, and forever discharges the Relator, together with his respective heirs, successors, assigns, agents and attorneys, and his companies ([TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT]) from any claims or allegations Hanjin has asserted or could have asserted, [*21] arising from the Covered Conduct, and from all liability, claims, demands, actions or causes of action whatsoever, whether known or unknown, fixed or contingent, in law or in equity, in contract or in tort, under any federal, Korean, or state statute or regulation or otherwise, or in common law, including claims for attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses of every kind and however denominated, that it would have standing to bring or which Hanjin may now have or claim to have against Relator and his heirs, successors, assigns, agents, and attorneys. Relator hereby represents that neither he nor his companies, [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] performed business with Hanjin.

9. a. Unallowable Costs Defined: All costs (as defined in the Federal Acquisition Regulation, 48 C.F.R. § 31.205-47) incurred by or on behalf of Hanjin, and its present or former officers, directors, employees, shareholders, and agents in connection with:

- (1) the matters covered by this Agreement, any related plea agreement, and any related civil antitrust agreement;
- (2) the United States' audit(s) and civil and any criminal investigation(s) of the matters covered by this Agreement;
- (3) Hanjin's investigation, defense, and corrective actions undertaken [*22] in response to the United States' audit(s) and civil and any criminal investigation(s) in connection with the matters covered by this Agreement (including attorney's fees);
- (4) the negotiation and performance of this Agreement, any related plea agreement, and any related civil antitrust agreement;
- (5) the payment Hanjin makes to the United States pursuant to this Agreement and any payments that Hanjin may make to Relator, including costs and attorneys' fees, are unallowable costs for government contracting purposes (hereinafter referred to as Unallowable Costs).

b. Future Treatment of Unallowable Costs: Unallowable Costs will be separately determined and accounted for by Hanjin, and Hanjin shall not charge such Unallowable Costs directly or indirectly to any contract with the United States.

c. Treatment of Unallowable Costs Previously Submitted for Payment: Within 90 days of the Effective Date of this Agreement, Hanjin shall identify and repay by adjustment to future claims for payment or otherwise any Unallowable Costs included in payments previously sought by Hanjin or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates from the United States. Hanjin agrees that the United States, at a minimum, shall [*23] be entitled to recoup from Hanjin any overpayment plus applicable interest and penalties as a result of the inclusion of such Unallowable Costs on previously-submitted requests for payment. The United States, including the Department of Justice and/or the affected agencies, reserves its rights to audit, examine, or re-examine Hanjin's books and records and to disagree with any calculations submitted by Hanjin or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates regarding any Unallowable Costs included in payments previously sought by Hanjin, or the effect of any such Unallowable Costs on the amount of such payments.

10. Hanjin agrees to cooperate fully and truthfully with the United States in connection with the Civil FCA Action. Hanjin's ongoing, full, and truthful cooperation shall include, but not be limited to:

a. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, producing at the offices of counsel for the United States in Washington, D.C. and not at the expense of the United States, complete and un-redacted copies of all non-privileged documents related to the Covered Conduct wherever located in Hanjin's possession, custody, or control, including but not limited to, reports, memoranda [*24] of interviews, and records concerning any investigation of the Covered Conduct that Hanjin has undertaken, or that has been performed by another on Hanjin's behalf;

b. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, making current Hanjin directors, officers, and employees available for interviews, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, by counsel for the United States and/or their investigative agents, not at the expense of the United States, in the United States or Hong Kong, unless another place is mutually agreed upon;

c. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, (i) using best efforts to assist in locating former Hanjin directors, officers, and employees identified by attorneys and/or investigative agents of the United States, and (ii) using best efforts to make any such former Hanjin directors, officers, and employees available for interviews, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, by counsel for the United States and/or their investigative agents, not at the expense of the United States, in the United States or Hong Kong, unless another place is mutually agreed upon; and

d. upon request by the United States [*25] with reasonable notice, making current Hanjin directors, officers, and employees available, and using best efforts to make former Hanjin directors, officers, employees available, to testify, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, fully, truthfully, and under oath, without falsely implicating any person or withholding any information, (i) at depositions in the United States, Hong Kong, or any other mutually agreed upon place, (ii) at trial in the United States, and (iii) at any other judicial proceedings wherever located related to the Civil FCA Action.

11. This Agreement is intended to be for the benefit of the Parties only.

12. Upon receipt of the payment of the FCA Settlement Amount described in Paragraph 1 above, the United States and Relator shall promptly sign and file a Joint Stipulation of Dismissal, with prejudice, of the claims filed against Hanjin in the Civil FCA Action, pursuant to Rule 41 \(a\)\(1\), which dismissal shall be conditioned on the Court retaining jurisdiction over Relator's claims to a relator's share and recovery of attorneys' fees and costs pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\).

13. Except with respect to payment (if any) by Hanjin of Relator's attorneys' fees, expenses, and [*26] costs pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\), each Party shall bear its own legal and other costs incurred in connection with this matter. The Parties agree that Relator and Hanjin will not seek to recover from the United States any costs or fees related to the preparation and performance of this Agreement.

14. Each party and signatory to this Agreement represents that it freely and voluntarily enters in to this Agreement without any degree of duress or compulsion.

15. This Agreement is governed by the laws of the United States. The exclusive jurisdiction and venue for any dispute relating to this Agreement is the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio. Hanjin agrees that the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio has jurisdiction over it for purposes of the Civil FCA Action. For purposes of construing this Agreement, this Agreement shall be deemed to have been drafted by all Parties to this Agreement and shall not, therefore, be construed against any Party for that reason in any subsequent dispute.

16. This Agreement constitutes the complete agreement between the Parties on the subject matters addressed herein. This Agreement may not be amended except by written [*27] consent of the Parties.

17. The undersigned counsel represent and warrant that they are fully authorized to execute this Agreement on behalf of the persons and entities indicated below.

18. This Agreement may be executed in counterparts, each of which constitutes an original and all of which constitute one and the same Agreement.

19. This Agreement is binding on Hanjin's successors, transferees, heirs, and assigns.

20. This Agreement is binding on Relator's successors, transferees, heirs, and assigns.

21. All parties consent to the United States' disclosure of this Agreement, and information about this Agreement, to the public, as permitted by order of the Court. This Agreement shall not be released in un-redacted form until the Court unseals the entire Civil FCA Action.

22. This Agreement is effective on the date of signature of the last signatory to the Agreement (Effective Date of this Agreement). Facsimiles of signatures shall constitute acceptable, binding signatures for purposes of this Agreement.

FINAL JUDGMENT AS TO DEFENDANT SK ENERGY CO., LTD.

WHEREAS Plaintiff, United States of America, filed its Complaint on November 14, 2018, the United States and Defendant SK Energy Co., Ltd. ("SK [*2] Energy"), by their respective attorneys, have consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law;

WHEREAS, on such date as may be determined by the Court, SK Energy will plead guilty pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(c)(1)(C) (the "Plea Agreement") to an Information to be filed in United States v. SK Energy Co., Ltd. [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the "Criminal Action") that will allege a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, relating to the same events giving rise to the allegations described in the Complaint;

WHEREAS, this Final Judgment does not constitute any evidence against or admission by any party regarding any issue of fact or law;

NOW, THEREFORE, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or final adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED:

I. JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and each of the parties consenting hereto. The Complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted to the United States against SK Energy under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §1.

II. APPLICABILITY

This Final Judgment applies to SK Energy, as defined above, [*3] and all other persons in active concert or participation with any of them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

III. PAYMENT

SK Energy shall pay to the United States within ten (10) business days of the entry of this Final Judgment the amount of ninety million, three hundred eighty-four thousand, eight hundred and seventy-two dollars ($90,384,872), less the amount paid (excluding any interest) pursuant to the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1, to satisfy all civil antitrust claims alleged against SK Energy by the United States in the Complaint. Payment of the amount ordered hereby shall be made by wire transfer of funds or cashier's check. If the payment is made by wire transfer, SK Energy shall contact Janie Ingalls of the Antitrust Division's Antitrust Documents Group at (202) 514-2481 for instructions before making the transfer. If the payment is made by cashier's check, the check shall be made payable to the United States Department of Justice and delivered to: Janie Ingalls, United States Department of Justice Antitrust Division, Antitrust Documents Group, 450 5th Street, NW, Suite 1024, Washington, D.C. 20530. In the [*4] event of a default in payment, interest at the rate of eighteen (18) percent per annum shall accrue thereon from the date of default to the date of payment.

IV. COOPERATION

SK Energy shall cooperate fully with the United States regarding any matter about which SK Energy has knowledge or information relating to any ongoing civil investigation, litigation, or other proceeding arising out of any ongoing federal investigation of the subject matter discussed in the Complaint (hereinafter, any such investigation, litigation, or proceeding shall be referred to as a "Civil Federal Proceeding").

The United States agrees that any cooperation provided in connection with the Plea Agreement and/or pursuant to the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1 will be considered cooperation for purposes of this Final Judgment, and the United States will use its reasonable best efforts, where appropriate, to coordinate any requests for cooperation in connection with the Civil Federal Proceeding with requests for cooperation in connection with the Plea Agreement and the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1, so as to avoid unnecessary duplication and expense.

SK Energy's cooperation [*5] shall include, but not be limited to, the following:

- (a) Upon request, completely and truthfully disclosing and producing, to the offices of the United States and at no expense to the United States, copies of all non-privileged information, documents, materials, and records in its possession (and for any foreign-language information, documents, materials, or records, copies must be produced with an English translation), regardless of their geographic location, about which the United States may inquire in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including but not limited to all information about activities of SK Energy and present and former officers, directors, employees, and agents of SK Energy;
- (b) Making available in the United States, at no expense to the United States, its present officers, directors, employees, and agents to provide information and/or testimony as requested by the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including the provision of testimony in trial and other judicial proceedings, as well as interviews with law enforcement authorities, consistent with the rights and privileges of those individuals;
- (c) Using its best efforts to make available [*6] in the United States, at no expense to the United States, its former officers, directors, employees, and agents to provide information and/or testimony as requested by the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including the provision of testimony in trial and other judicial proceedings, as well as interviews with law enforcement authorities, consistent with the rights and privileges of those individuals;
- (d) Providing testimony or information necessary to identify or establish the original location, authenticity, or other basis for admission into evidence of documents or physical evidence produced by SK Energy in any Civil Federal Proceeding as requested by the United States; and
- (e) Completely and truthfully responding to all other inquiries of the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding.

However, notwithstanding any provision of this Final Judgment, SK Energy is not required to: (1) request of its current or former officers, directors, employees, or agents that they forgo seeking the advice of an attorney nor that they act contrary to that advice; (2) take any action against its officers, directors, employees, or agents for following their [*7] attorney's advice; or (3) waive any claim of privilege or work product protection.

The obligations of SK Energy to cooperate fully with the United States as described in this Section shall cease upon the conclusion of all Civil Federal Proceedings (which may include Civil Federal Proceedings related to the conduct of third parties), including exhaustion of all appeals or expiration of time for all appeals of any Court ruling in each such Civil Federal Proceeding, at which point the United States will provide written notice to SK Energy that its obligations under this Section have expired.

V. ANTITRUST COMPLIANCE PROGRAM

A. Within thirty (30) days after entry of this Final Judgment, SK Energy shall appoint an Antitrust Compliance Officer and identify to the United States his or her name, business address, telephone number, and email address. Within forty-five (45) days of a vacancy in the Antitrust Compliance Officer position, SK Energy shall appoint a replacement, and shall identify to the United States the Antitrust Compliance Officer's name, business address, telephone number, and email address. SK Energy's initial or replacement appointment of an Antitrust Compliance Officer is subject [*8] to the approval of the United States, in its sole discretion.

B. The Antitrust Compliance Officer shall institute an antitrust compliance program for the company's employees and directors with responsibility for bidding for any contract with the United States. The antitrust compliance program shall provide at least two hours of training annually on the antitrust laws of the United States, such training to be delivered by an attorney with relevant experience in the field of United States antitrust law.

C. Each Antitrust Compliance Officer shall obtain, within six months after entry of this Final Judgment, and on an annual basis thereafter, on or before each anniversary of the entry of this Final Judgment, from each person subject to Paragraph V.B of this Final Judgment, and thereafter maintaining, a certification that each such person has received the required two hours of annual antitrust training.

D. Each Antitrust Compliance Officer shall communicate annually to all employees that they may disclose to the Antitrust Compliance Officer, without reprisal, information concerning any potential violation of the United States antitrust laws.

E. Each Antitrust Compliance Offer shall provide [*9] to the United States within six months after entry of this Final Judgment, and on an annual basis thereafter, on or before each anniversary of the entry of this Final Judgment, a written statement as to the fact and manner of SK Energy's compliance with Section V of this Final Judgment.

VI. RETENTION OF JURISDICTION

This Court retains jurisdiction to enable any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out or construe this Final Judgment, to modify or terminate any of its provisions, to enforce compliance, and to punish violations of its provisions.

VII. ENFORCEMENT OF FINAL JUDGMENT

A. The United States retains and reserves all rights to enforce the provisions of this Final Judgment, including the right to seek an order of contempt from the Court. SK Energy agrees that in any civil contempt action, any motion to show cause, or any similar action brought by the United States regarding an alleged violation of this Final Judgment, the United States may establish a violation of the decree and the appropriateness of any remedy therefor by a preponderance of the evidence, and SK Energy [*10] waives any argument that a different standard of proof should apply.

B. The Final Judgment should be interpreted to give full effect to the procompetitive purposes of the antitrust laws and to restore all competition the United States alleged was harmed by the challenged conduct. SK Energy agrees that they may be held in contempt of, and that the Court may enforce, any provision of this Final Judgment that, as interpreted by the Court in light of these procompetitive principles and applying ordinary tools of interpretation, is stated specifically and in reasonable detail, whether or not it is clear and unambiguous on its face. In any such interpretation, the terms of this Final Judgment should not be construed against either party as the drafter.

C. In any enforcement proceeding in which the Court finds that SK Energy has violated this Final Judgment, the United States may apply to the Court for a one-time extension of this Final Judgment, together with such other relief as may be appropriate. In connection with any successful effort by the United States to enforce this Final Judgment against SK Energy, whether litigated or resolved prior to litigation, SK Energy agrees to reimburse [*11] the United States for the fees and expenses of its attorneys, as well as any other costs including experts' fees, incurred in connection with that enforcement effort, including in the investigation of the potential violation.

VIII. EXPIRATION OF FINAL JUDGMENT

Unless this Court grants an extension, this Final Judgment shall expire seven (7) years from the date of its entry, except that after five (5) years from the date of its entry, this Final Judgment may be terminated upon notice by the United States to the Court and SK Energy that the continuation of the Final Judgment no longer is necessary or in the public interest.

IX. PUBLIC INTEREST DETERMINATION

Entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest. The parties have complied with the requirements of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16, including making copies available to the public of this Final Judgment, the Competitive Impact Statement, and any comments thereon and the United States' responses to comments. Based upon the record before the Court, which includes the Competitive Impact Statement and any comments and response to comments filed with the Court, entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

This Settlement Agreement (Agreement) is entered into among the United States of America, acting through the Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice and the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Ohio, on behalf of the Defense Logistics Agency (DLA) and the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) (collectively the "United States"), SK Energy Co., Ltd. (SK Energy), and Relator [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] (hereafter collectively referred to as "the Parties"), through their authorized representatives.

RECITALS

A. SK Energy is a South Korea-based energy company that produces various petroleum products that it sells to South Korean and international customers, including the United States Department of Defense (DoD).

B. On February 28, 2018, Relator, a resident and citizen of South Korea, filed a qui tam action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio captioned United States ex rel. [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] v. GS Caltex, et al., Civil Action No. [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT], pursuant to the qui tam provisions [*13] of the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(b\) (the Civil FCA Action). Relator contends that SK Energy conspired with other South Korean entities to rig bids on DoD contracts to supply fuel to U.S. military bases throughout South Korea beginning in 2005 and continuing until 2016, including DLA Post, Camps, and Stations (PC&S) contracts executed in 2006, 2009, and 2013, and AAFES contracts executed in 2008.

C. On such date as may be determined by the Court, SK Energy will plead guilty pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11\(c\)\(1\)\(C\) (the "Plea Agreement") to an Information to be filed in United States v. SK Energy Co., Ltd., Criminal Action No. [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the "Criminal Action") that will allege that SK Energy participated in a combination and conspiracy beginning at least in or around March 2005 and continuing until at least in or around October 2016, to suppress and eliminate competition on certain contracts solicited by the DoD to supply fuel to numerous U.S. Army, Navy, Marine, and Air Force installations in Korea, including PC&S contracts and the 2008 AAFES contract, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

D. SK Energy will execute a Stipulation with the Antitrust Division of the United States Department of Justice [*14] in which SK Energy will consent to the entry of a Final Judgment to be filed in United States v. SK Energy Co., Ltd., Civil Action No. [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the Civil Antitrust Action) that will settle any and all civil antitrust claims of the United States against SK Energy arising from any act or offense committed before the date of the Stipulation that was undertaken in furtherance of an attempted or completed antitrust conspiracy involving PC&S and/or AAFES fuel supply contracts with the U.S. military in South Korea during the period 2005 through 2016.

E. The United States contends that it has certain civil claims against SK Energy arising from the conduct described in the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action and in the Stipulation in the Civil Antitrust Action, as well as the conduct, actions, and claims alleged by Relator in the Civil FCA Action. The conduct referenced in this Paragraph is referred to below as the Covered Conduct.

F. With the exception of any admissions that are made by SK Energy in connection with the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action, this Settlement Agreement is neither an admission of liability by SK Energy nor a concession by the United States [*15] that its claims are not well founded.

G. Relator claims entitlement under 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\) to a share of the proceeds of this Settlement Agreement and to Relator's reasonable expenses, attorneys' fees and costs.

To avoid the delay, uncertainty, inconvenience, and expense of protracted litigation of the above claims, and in consideration of the mutual promises and obligations of this Settlement Agreement, the Parties agree and covenant as follows:

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1.a. SK Energy agrees to pay to the United States $71,866,000 (FCA Settlement Amount), of which $47,910,887 is restitution, by electronic funds transfer no later than thirteen (13) business days after the Effective Date of this Agreement pursuant to written instructions to be provided by the Civil Division of the Department of Justice. Relator claims entitlement under 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\) to Relator's reasonable expenses, attorneys' fees and costs. The FCA Settlement Amount does not include the Relator's fees and costs, and SK Energy acknowledges that Relator retains all rights to recover such expenses, attorneys' fees, and costs from SK Energy pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\).

1.b. If SK Energy's Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action is not accepted by the Court or the Court does [*16] not enter a Final Judgment in the Civil Antitrust Action, this Agreement shall be null and void at the option of either the United States or SK Energy. If either the United States or SK Energy exercises this option, which option shall be exercised by notifying all Parties, through counsel, in writing within five (5) business days of the Court's decision, the Parties will not object and this Agreement will be rescinded and the FCA Settlement Amount shall be returned to SK Energy. If this Agreement is rescinded, SK Energy will not plead, argue or otherwise raise any defenses under the theories of statute of limitations, laches, estoppel or similar theories, to any civil or administrative claims, actions or proceedings arising from the Covered Conduct that are brought by the United States within ninety (90) calendar days of rescission, except to the extent such defenses were available on the day on which Relator's qui tam complaint in the Civil FCA Action was filed.

2. Subject to the exceptions in Paragraph 4 (concerning excluded claims) below, and conditioned upon SK Energy's full payment of the FCA Settlement Amount, the United States releases SK Energy together with its current and [*17] former parent corporations; direct and indirect subsidiaries; brother or sister corporations; divisions; current or former corporate owners; and the corporate successors and assigns of any of them (the "SK Energy Released Parties") from any civil or administrative monetary claim the United States has for the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733; the Program Fraud Civil Remedies Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3801-3812; Contract Disputes Act, 41 U.S.C. §§ 7101-7109; or the common law theories of breach of contract, payment by mistake, unjust enrichment, and fraud.

3. Except as set forth in Paragraph 1 (concerning Relator's claims under 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\)), and conditioned upon SK Energy's full payment of the FCA Settlement Amount, Relator, for himself and for his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns, releases the SK Energy Released Parties from (a) any civil monetary claim the Relator has or may have for the claims set forth in the Civil FCA Action, the Civil Antitrust Action, the Criminal Action, and the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733, up until the date of this Agreement; and (b) all liability, claims, demands, actions, or causes of action whatsoever, whether known or unknown, fixed or contingent, in law or in equity, in [*18] contract or in tort, under any federal, state, or Korean statute, law, regulation or doctrine, that Relator, his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns otherwise has brought or would have standing to bring as of the date of this Agreement, including any liability to Relator arising from or relating to the claims Relator asserted or could have asserted in the Civil FCA Action, up until the date of this Agreement. Relator further represents he does not know of any conduct by the SK Energy Released Parties or any current or former owners, officers, directors, trustees, shareholders, employees, executives, agents, or affiliates of the SK Energy Released Parties that would constitute a violation of the False Claims Act other than the claims set forth in the Civil FCA Action and the Covered Conduct, and Relator acknowledges and agrees that his representations are a material inducement to SK Energy's willingness to enter into this Agreement.

4. Notwithstanding the releases given in paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Agreement, or any other term of this Agreement, the following claims of the United States are specifically reserved and are not released:

- a. Any liability arising under Title [*19] 26, U.S. Code (Internal Revenue Code);
- b. Any criminal liability, except to the extent detailed in the Plea Agreement;
- c. Except as explicitly stated in this Agreement, any administrative liability, including the suspension and debarment rights of any federal agency;
- d. Any liability to the United States (or its agencies) for any conduct other than the Covered Conduct;
- e. Any liability based upon obligations created by this Agreement;
- f. Any liability of individuals;

- g. Any liability for express or implied warranty claims or other claims for defective or deficient products or services, including quality of goods and services;

- h. Any liability for failure to deliver goods or services due; and

- i. Any liability for personal injury or property damage or for other consequential damages arising from the Covered Conduct.

5. Relator and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns shall not object to this Agreement but agree and confirm that this Agreement is fair, adequate, and reasonable under all the circumstances, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(c\)\(2\)\(B\). The determination of Relator's share, if any, of the FCA Settlement Amount pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\) is a matter that shall be handled separately by and between the Relator [*20] and the United States, without any direct involvement or input from SK Energy. In connection with this Agreement and this Civil FCA Action, Relator, on behalf of himself and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns agrees that neither this Agreement, nor any intervention by the United States in the Civil FCA Action in order to dismiss the Civil FCA Action, nor any dismissal of the Civil FCA Action, shall waive or otherwise affect the ability of the United States to contend that provisions in the False Claims Act, including 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(d\)\(3\), bar Relator from sharing in the proceeds of this Agreement, except that the United States will not contend that Relator is barred from sharing in the proceeds of this Agreement pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(e\)\(4\). Moreover, the United States and Relator, on behalf of himself and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns agree that they each retain all of their rights pursuant to the False Claims Act on the issue of the share percentage, if any, that Relator should receive of any proceeds of the settlement of his claims, and that no agreements concerning Relator share have been reached to date.

6. SK Energy waives and shall not assert any defenses SK Energy may [*21] have to any criminal prosecution or administrative action relating to the Covered Conduct that may be based in whole or in part on a contention that, under the Double Jeopardy Clause in the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution, or under the Excessive Fines Clause in the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution, this Agreement bars a remedy sought in such criminal prosecution or administrative action.

7. SK Energy fully and finally releases the United States, its agencies, officers, agents, employees, and servants, from any claims (including attorney's fees, costs, and expenses of every kind and however denominated) that SK Energy has asserted, could have asserted, or may assert in the future against the United States, its agencies, officers, agents, employees, and servants, related to the Covered Conduct and the United States' investigation and prosecution thereof.

8. Conditioned upon Relator's agreement herein, the SK Energy Released Parties fully and finally release Relator his heirs, successors, assigns, agents and attorneys (the "Relator Released Parties"), from (a) any civil monetary claim SK Energy has or may have now or in the future against the Relator Released Parties related to the claims set forth in the Civil FCA Action, the Civil Antitrust Action, the Criminal Action, and the Covered Conduct under the [False \[\*22\] Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733](#), and the Relator's investigation and prosecution thereof, including attorney's fees, costs, and expenses of every kind and however denominated, up until the date of this Agreement; and (b) all liability, claims, demands, actions, or causes of action whatsoever, whether known or unknown, fixed or contingent, in law or in equity, in contract or in tort, under any federal, state, or Korean statute, law, regulation or doctrine, that the SK Energy Released Parties otherwise have brought or would have standing to bring as of the date of this Agreement, including any liability to SK Energy arising from or relating to claims the SK Energy Released Parties asserted or could have asserted related to the Civil FCA Action, up until the date of this Agreement. The SK Energy Released Parties further acknowledge and agree that these representations are a material inducement to Relator's willingness to enter into this Agreement.

9. a. Unallowable Costs Defined: All costs (as defined in the Federal Acquisition Regulation, 48 C.F.R. § 31.205-47) incurred by or on behalf of SK Energy, and its present or former officers, directors, employees, shareholders, and agents in connection with:

- (1) the matters covered [*23] by this Agreement, any related plea agreement, and any related civil antitrust agreement;
- (2) the United States' audit(s) and civil and any criminal investigation(s) of the matters covered by this Agreement;
- (3) SK Energy's investigation, defense, and corrective actions undertaken in response to the United States' audit(s) and civil and any criminal investigation(s) in connection with the matters covered by this Agreement (including attorney's fees);
- (4) the negotiation and performance of this Agreement, any related plea agreement, and any related civil antitrust agreement;
- (5) the payment SK Energy makes to the United States pursuant to this Agreement and any payments that SK Energy may make to Relator, including costs and attorneys' fees, are unallowable costs for government contracting purposes (hereinafter referred to as Unallowable Costs).

b. Future Treatment of Unallowable Costs: Unallowable Costs will be separately determined and accounted for by SK Energy, and SK Energy shall not charge such Unallowable Costs directly or indirectly to any contract with the United States.

c. Treatment of Unallowable Costs Previously Submitted for Payment: Within 90 days of the Effective Date of this [*24] Agreement, SK Energy shall identify and repay by adjustment to future claims for payment or otherwise any Unallowable Costs included in payments previously sought by SK Energy or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates from the United States. SK Energy agrees that the United States, at a minimum, shall be entitled to recoup from SK Energy any overpayment plus applicable interest and penalties as a result of the inclusion of such Unallowable Costs on previously-submitted requests for payment. The United States, including the Department of Justice and/or the affected agencies, reserves its rights to audit, examine, or re-examine SK Energy's books and records and to disagree with any calculations submitted by SK Energy or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates regarding any Unallowable Costs included in payments previously sought by SK Energy, or the effect of any such Unallowable Costs on the amount of such payments.

10. SK Energy agrees to cooperate fully and truthfully with the United States in connection with the Civil FCA Action. The Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice will use reasonable best efforts, where appropriate, to coordinate any requests for cooperation [*25] in connection with the Civil FCA Action with requests for cooperation in connection with the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action and the Civil Antitrust Action, so as to avoid unnecessary duplication and expense. SK Energy's ongoing, full, and truthful cooperation shall include, but not be limited to:

- a. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, producing at the offices of counsel for the United States in Washington, D.C. and not at the expense of the United States, complete and un-redacted copies of all non-privileged documents related to the Covered Conduct wherever located in SK Energy's possession, custody, or control, including but not limited to, reports, memoranda of interviews, and records concerning any investigation of the Covered Conduct that SK Energy has undertaken, or that has been performed by another on SK Energy's behalf;
- b. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, making current SK Energy directors, officers, and employees available for interviews, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, by counsel for the United States and/or their investigative agents, not at the expense of the United States, in the United [*26] States or Hong Kong, unless another place is mutually agreed upon;
- c. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, (i) using best efforts to assist in locating former SK Energy directors, officers, and employees identified by attorneys and/or investigative agents of the United States, and (ii) using best efforts to make any such former SK Energy directors, officers, and employees available for interviews, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, by counsel for the United States and/or their investigative agents, not at the expense of the United States, in the United States or Hong Kong, unless another place is mutually agreed upon; and
- d. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, making current SK Energy directors, officers, and employees available, and using best efforts to make former SK Energy directors, officers, employees available, to testify, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, fully, truthfully, and under oath, without falsely implicating any person or withholding any information, (i) at depositions in the United States, Hong Kong, or any other mutually agreed upon place, (ii) at trial in the United [*27] States, and (iii) at any other judicial proceedings wherever located related to the Civil FCA Action.

11. This Agreement is intended to be for the benefit of the Parties only.

12. Upon receipt of the payment of the FCA Settlement Amount described in Paragraph 1 above, the Court's acceptance of SK Energy's Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action, and the Court's entry of a Final Judgment in the Civil Antitrust Action, the United States and Relator shall promptly sign and file a Joint Stipulation of Dismissal, with prejudice, of the claims filed against SK Energy in the Civil FCA Action, pursuant to Rule 41\(a\)\(1\), which dismissal shall be conditioned on the Court retaining jurisdiction over Relator's claims to a relator's share and recovery of attorneys' fees and costs pursuant to 31 U.S.C. §3730\(d\).

13. Except with respect to the recovery of Relator's attorneys' fees, expenses, and costs pursuant to 31 U.S.C. §3730\(d\), each Party shall bear its own legal and other costs incurred in connection with this matter. The Parties agree that Relator and SK Energy will not seek to recover from the United States any costs or fees related to the preparation and performance of this Agreement.

14. Each party and signatory to this Agreement represents [*28] that it freely and voluntarily enters in to this Agreement without any degree of duress or compulsion.

15. This Agreement is governed by the laws of the United States. The exclusive jurisdiction and venue for any dispute relating to this Agreement is the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio. SK Energy agrees that the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio has jurisdiction over it for purposes of this case. For purposes of construing this Agreement, this Agreement shall be deemed to have been drafted by all Parties to this Agreement and shall not, therefore, be construed against any Party for that reason in any subsequent dispute.

16. This Agreement constitutes the complete agreement between the Parties on the subject matter addressed herein. This Agreement may not be amended except by written consent of the Parties.

17. The undersigned counsel represent and warrant that they are fully authorized to execute this Agreement on behalf of the persons and entities indicated below.

18. This Agreement may be executed in counterparts, each of which constitutes an original and all of which constitute one and the same Agreement.
19. This Agreement [*29] is binding on SK Energy's successors, transferees, heirs, and assigns.
20. This Agreement is binding on Relator's successors, transferees, heirs, and assigns.
21. All parties consent to the United States' disclosure of this Agreement, and information about this Agreement, to the public, as permitted by order of the Court. This Agreement shall not be released in un-redacted form until the Court unseals the entire Civil FCA Action.
22. This Agreement is effective on the date of signature of the last signatory to the Agreement (Effective Date of this Agreement). Facsimiles of signatures shall constitute acceptable, binding signatures for purposes of this Agreement.

A demurrer tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint. In ruling on preliminary objections, the courts must accept as true all well-pled allegations of material fact as well as all inferences reasonably deducible from the facts. However, unwarranted inferences, conclusions of law, argumentative allegations or expressions of opinion need not be accepted. For preliminary objections to be sustained, it must appear with certainty that the law will permit no recovery, and any doubt must be resolved in favor of the non-moving party.

The Legislature sought by Pennsylvania's Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (UTPCPL), 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1-201-9.3, to benefit the public at large by eradicating, among other things, "unfair or deceptive" business practices. Just as earlier legislation was designed to equalize the position of employer and employee and the position of insurer and insured, this Law attempts to place on more equal terms seller and consumer. These remedial statutes are all predicated on a legislative recognition of the unequal bargaining power of opposing forces in the marketplace. Instantly, the Legislature strove, by making certain modest adjustments, to ensure the fairness of market transactions. No sweeping changes in legal relationships were occasioned by the Law, since prevention of deception and the exploitation of unfair advantage has always been an object of remedial legislation. Although the UTPCPL did articulate the evils desired to be remedied, the statute's underlying foundation is fraud prevention. Since the UTPCPL was in relevant part designed to thwart fraud in the statutory sense, it is to be construed liberally to effect its object of preventing unfair or deceptive practices.

In addition, the UTPCPL authorizes actions by private parties and imbues the Attorney General, as well as district attorneys throughout the Commonwealth, with the power to file suit if they have reason to believe that any person is using or is about to use any method, act or practice declared by 73 Pa. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court recognized long ago that residential leases are functionally equivalent to a property sale in many ways, and that residential leases fall within the scope of "trade" and "commerce" under the Pennsylvania Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law, 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1-201-9.3. There is substantial common-law authority that the leasing of property is identical to the sale of the premises. When land is leased to a tenant, the law of property regards the lease as equivalent to a sale of the premises for the term. Courts of other jurisdictions have considered leases as the sale of an interest in real estate, or as the sale of the possession, occupancy and profits of land for a term. Still other courts recognize that the lessee's interest is tantamount to absolute ownership of the premises for the term. It is certainly the modern understanding of the common law of leases that a tenant is a purchaser of an estate in land.

Given the General Assembly's intent that the Pennsylvania Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law, 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1-201-9.3, be liberally interpreted, so as to benefit the public at large by eradicating, among other things, unfair or deceptive business practices, § 2(3) of the Law's express language covers business and commercial leases as well, not just those which involve consumers or are residential in nature. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court interpreted § 2(3) of the Pennsylvania Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law, 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1-201-9.3, as containing two distinct and independent clauses, the latter of which does not modify or qualify the preceding terms. 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-2\(3\). Instead, the second clause is appended to the end of the first clause's definition and is prefaced by "and includes," thus indicating an inclusive and broader view of trade and commerce than expressed by the antecedent language. Therefore, this second clause operates as a catch-all of sorts, enabling "trade" and "commerce" to be defined in terms of common usage and not just through the narrower, more specific language of the first clause. 1 Pa.C.S. § 1903\(a\). Pennsylvania courts generally use dictionaries as source material to determine the common and approved usage of terms not defined in statutes. "Trade" and "commerce," in part and respectively, are defined as the business of buying and selling or bartering commodities and the exchange or buying and selling of commodities on a large scale involving transportation from place to place.

The Pennsylvania Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (UTPCPL), 73 Pa. Stat. The key phrase is "in the conduct," which, when read in the full context of the language used in § 3 of the UTPCPL, pertains to all unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices connected to UTPCPL-defined "trade" or "commerce," regardless of who is committing these unlawful acts.

While the Pennsylvania Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (UTPCPL), 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1-201-9.3, places restrictions on the ability of private parties to file suit, the Law creates no such impediment for the Attorney General. Instead, the Attorney General is imbued with the express authority to file suit against "any person," whenever the Attorney General determines that such a person is using or is about to use any method, act or practice declared by [73 Pa. ### HN16 [blue] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The Pennsylvania Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (UTPCPL), 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. §§ 201-1-201-9.3, is not designed to render all antitrust violations actionable and the scope of actionable antitrust behavior under the UTPCPL is narrower than under federal antitrust law. The UTPCPL provides two avenues through which activities can be declared "unfair methods of competition" or "unfair or deceptive acts or practices." First, the General Assembly may define a given activity as unlawful by statute in § 2(4) of the Law. 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-

2(4). Second, the Attorney General, by virtue of § 3.1 of the Law, may also promulgate definitions of these terms through the administrative rulemaking process. 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-3.1. Neither the Attorney General nor the General Assembly has thus far used their powers to expressly define monopolistic behavior, joint ventures, or market sharing agreements as examples of "unfair methods of competition" or "unfair or deceptive acts or practices." Such activities are not per se unlawful for purposes of the UTPCPL.

[*53] OPINION BY JUDGE CEISLER

In these combined interlocutory appeals by permission, we address two issues of first impression pertaining to Pennsylvania's Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (Law or UTPCPL).<sup>1</sup> The first is whether Appellee Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, [**2] Office of Attorney General (Attorney General), can bring a cause of action against lessees pursuant to the UTPCPL, due to allegedly wrongful conduct perpetrated by the lessees in the context of leasing subsurface mineral rights from private landowners. The second issue is whether the Attorney General can bring a cause of action against those lessees, pursuant to the UTPCPL, for alleged violations of antitrust law. The Court of Common Pleas of Bradford County (Trial Court) answered both questions in the affirmative; however, after thorough consideration, we affirm in part and reverse in part.

The Attorney General filed suit in the Trial Court against Appellants Anadarko Petroleum Corporation and Anadarko E&P Onshore LLC (Anadarko), as well as Chesapeake Energy Corporation, Chesapeake Appalachia, LLC, Chesapeake Operating, LLC, and Chesapeake Energy Marketing, LLC (Chesapeake), (collectively, Appellants). In the complaint, the Attorney General alleges that, pursuant to both the UTPCPL and Pennsylvania antitrust common law, Appellants acted unlawfully by using deceptive, misleading, and unfair tactics, and committed antitrust violations, in their efforts to secure subsurface [**3] mineral rights leases from private landowners. See Second Amended Complaint at 1-4, 29-105.<sup>2</sup> These leases allow Appellants to extract natural gas from the Marcellus Shale formations underneath these private landowners' properties, in exchange for royalties and other types of payments. Id. at 14-28.

<sup>2</sup> Black's Law Dictionary defines "antitrust law," in relevant part, as: "The body of law designed to protect trade and commerce from restraints, monopolies, price-fixing, and price discrimination." Antitrust Law, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014), available at <https://1.next.westlaw.com/Document/lfdbf7970808411e4b391a0bc737b01f9/View/FullText.html>. As discussed in more detail infra, the Attorney General alleges that Appellants committed antitrust violations by entering into joint venture and market sharing agreements, as well as by giving private landowners incomplete and misleading information that was materially relevant to the mineral rights leases.

The Attorney General alleges that Appellants agreed to split the portion of "northeast Pennsylvania within the Marcellus Shale gas play" between them, so that Anadarko and Chesapeake would each effectively have exclusive areas in which to [**54] seek mineral rights leases, without the fear that the other would tender competing offers to private landowners who were prospective lessors. See Second Amended Complaint at 62-76.

In response to the Attorney General's Second Amended Complaint, Appellants each filed preliminary objections. As part of their overall preliminary objections, Appellants made two arguments that are relevant to these interlocutory appeals. First, they demurred<sup>3</sup> on the basis that the Attorney General could not state claims against them under the UTPCPL, because this law could only be applied to address the allegedly deceptive or unfair conduct of sellers in the context [**4] of a consumer transaction. Anadarko's Preliminary Objections at 11; Chesapeake's Preliminary Objections at 2-3. Since they had leased subsurface mineral rights, Appellants argued that they were effectively buyers in these transactions, and that their conduct was thus not actionable under the terms of the UTPCPL. Anadarko's Preliminary Objections at 11-13; Chesapeake's Preliminary Objections at 3. Second, they demurred on the grounds that antitrust claims could not be made under the UTPCPL, as this law was not designed to be an antitrust statute. Anadarko's Preliminary Objections at 28-32; Chesapeake's Preliminary Objections at 5-6.

The [**5] Trial Court sustained Appellants' Preliminary Objections in part and overruled them in part. Of relevance to these interlocutory appeals, the Trial Court held that the Attorney General could sue Appellants pursuant to the UTPCPL, since the companies were conducting trade or commerce, as those terms were defined in the Law, and determined that the Law permitted the Attorney General to pursue antitrust claims against these companies under the UTPCPL. Tr. Ct. Op. at 16-33, 47-50. After making these rulings, the Trial Court sua sponte certified these issues for interlocutory appeal, recognizing that they are questions of first impression in which different interpretations of the law were being debated. Id. at 73-75, 79, 81-82. Appellants then filed separate petitions for permission to appeal on an interlocutory basis,<sup>4</sup> which the Honorable Bonnie Brigance Leadbetter granted, consolidating Appellants' respective appeals and limiting them to the following two questions:

1. Whether a cause of action may be brought under the [UTPCPL] for alleged wrongful conduct by lessees in oil and gas lease transactions.
2. Whether a cause of action may be brought under the [UTPCPL] for alleged antitrust violations.

Commonwealth Court [**6] Order, 3/12/18, at 2-3. The parties subsequently filed responsive briefs and appeared for en banc argument. These issues are now ready for our consideration.<sup>5</sup>

[*55] The UTPCPL

HN4 [↑] The Legislature sought by the [UTPCPL] to benefit the public at large by eradicating, among other things, 'unfair or deceptive' business practices. Just as earlier legislation was designed to equalize the position of employer and employee and the position of insurer and insured, this Law attempts to place on more equal terms seller and consumer. These remedial statutes are all predicated on a legislative recognition of the unequal bargaining power of opposing forces in the marketplace.

Instantly, the Legislature strove, by making certain modest adjustments, to ensure the fairness of market transactions. No sweeping changes in legal relationships were occasioned by the [Law], since prevention of deception and the exploitation of unfair advantage has always been an object of remedial legislation.

Although the [UTPCPL] did articulate the evils desired to be remedied, the statute's underlying foundation is fraud prevention. . . .

Since the [UTPCPL] was in relevant part designed to thwart fraud in the statutory [**7] sense, it is to be construed liberally to effect its object of preventing unfair or deceptive practices.

Com., by Creamer v. Monumental Props., Inc., 459 Pa. 450, 329 A.2d 812, 815-17 (Pa. 1974) (footnotes and internal citations omitted).

HN5 [↑] Per the UTPCPL's express language, the General Assembly has "declared unlawful" 21 separate categories of "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce[,"] as well as any acts or practices designated as such by the Attorney General through the administrative rulemaking process. Section 3 of the UTPCPL, 73 P.S. § 201-3; see Sections 2(4) and 3.1 of the UTPCPL, 73 P.S. §§ 201-2(4), 201-3.1.<sup>6</sup> Of relevance here is the subsection that prohibits "[e]ngaging in any other fraudulent or deceptive conduct which creates a likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding." Section 2(xxi) of the UTPCPL, 73 P.S. § 201-2(4)(xxi).

HN7 [↑] The Law defines "'trade' and 'commerce'" as "the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of any services and any property, [**8] tangible or intangible, real, personal or mixed, and any other article, commodity, or thing of value wherever situate, and includes any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this Commonwealth." Section 2(3) of the UTPCPL, 73 P.S. § 201-2(3). In addition, the UTPCPL authorizes actions by private parties and imbues the Attorney General, as well as district attorneys throughout this Commonwealth, with the power to file suit if they "[have] reason to believe that any person is using or is about to use any method, act or practice declared by [73 P.S. § 201-3] to be unlawful, and that proceedings would be in the public interest[.]" Section 4 of the UTPCPL, 73 P.S. § 201-4.

The Attorney General's UTPCPL Claims Against Appellants

In this interlocutory appeal, Appellants argue that the Trial Court erred by holding that the Attorney General could sue [*56] them pursuant to the UTPCPL. According to Appellants, since they merely leased subsurface mineral rights from private landowners, they were not selling or distributing anything and consequently, the UTPCPL does

HN6 [↑] The Attorney General may adopt, after public hearing, such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement and administration of this act. Such rules and regulations when promulgated pursuant to the act of July 31, 1968 (P.L. 769, No. 240), [as amended, 45 P.S. §§ 1102-1602, and 45 Pa. not apply to their conduct, as the lease transactions do not satisfy the statutory definition of 'trade or commerce[.]'" Appellants' Br. at 13, 18-19. Instead, Appellants contend that the UTPCPL is designed to [**9] only protect consumers against the underhanded behavior of sellers, rather than all parties to a given transaction. Id. at 13, 16-17.

In addition, Appellants maintain that the Trial Court erred in finding that these leases constituted "distribution of services," which is part of the definition of "'trade' and 'commerce'" found in 73 P.S. § 201-2\(3\). Id. at 19-20. Appellants argue that the Trial Court was bound by the Attorney General's averments in its Second Amended Complaint, which make clear "that the object of the lease arrangement was for [Appellants] and other gas companies to purchase outright landowners' interests in oil and gas deposits beneath the surface of their land." Id.

Furthermore, Appellants state that the Trial Court erred by finding that their conduct fell within the second clause of the UTPCPL's definition of "'trade' and 'commerce,'" which states, "'trade' and 'commerce' . . . includes any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this Commonwealth." Id. at 20-21; see 73 P.S. § 201-2\(3\). According to Appellants, the doctrine of eiusdem generis<sup>7</sup> requires this second clause to be read as referring to activities of the "same general nature or class" as those mentioned in the first clause<sup>8</sup> of Section 2\(3\) of the UTPCPL. Appellants' Br. at 21. Consequently, the Trial [**10] Court should not have used the ordinary definition of "'trade' and 'commerce'" when deciding whether Appellants' actions were trade or commerce for purposes of the Law, not only because of the doctrine of eiusdem generis, but also because reading the second clause as being independent would effectively render the first clause's narrower definition superfluous. Id. at 22-25.

We disagree. Contrary to Appellants' desired conclusion, we find that their conduct in relation to the aforementioned leases constitutes "'trade' and 'commerce,'" as those terms are understood in the context of the Law. As we have already noted, Section 2\(3\) of the UTPCPL states that 'Trade' and 'commerce' mean the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of any services and any property, tangible or intangible, real, personal or mixed, and any other article, commodity, or thing of value wherever situate, and includes any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this Commonwealth.

73 P.S. § 201-2\(3\).

Per this statutory language, and our case law, these leases were, in essence, sales. HN10 [↑] The Pennsylvania Supreme Court recognized long ago that residential leases [*57] are functionally equivalent to a property sale in many ways, and [**11] that residential leases fall within the scope of "'trade' and 'commerce'" under the UTPCPL. See Monumental Props., Inc., 329 A.2d at 820-26. As the Monumental Properties court noted, there is substantial common-law authority that the leasing of property is identical to the sale of the premises. Dean Prosser accurately states the general rule:

'When land is leased to a tenant, the law of property regards the lease as equivalent to a sale of the premises for the term.'

W. Prosser, Handbook of the Law of Torts [§] 63, at 399 (4th ed. 1971) (footnote omitted).

Courts of other jurisdictions have considered leases as the sale of an interest in real estate, e.g., Brenner v. Spiegle, 116 Ohio St. 631, 632, 5 Ohio Law Abs. 380, 157 N.E. 491, 492-493 \(1927\), or as the 'sale of the

...

It is certainly the modern understanding of the common law of leases that '(a) tenant is a purchaser of an estate in land[.]' *Pines v. Persson, 14 Wis.2d 590, 594, 111 N.W.2d 409, 412 \(1961\)*.

Id. at 822-23 (some footnotes and citations omitted). We recognize that Monumental Properties focused upon residential leases, and stated that the UTPCPL "attempts to place on more equal terms seller and consumer." *Id. at 816*. However, HN11[↑] given the General Assembly's intent [**12] that the Law be liberally interpreted, so as "to benefit the public at large by eradicating, among other things, 'unfair or deceptive' business practices[.]" *id. at 815*, we find that Section 2\(3\)'s express language covers business and commercial leases as well, not just those which involve consumers or are residential in nature. See *Danganan, 179 A.3d at 16* ("[W]e recognize . . . the wide range of conduct the [UTPCPL] was designed to address, including equalizing the bargaining power of the seller and consumer, ensuring the fairness of market transactions, and preventing deception and exploitation, all of which harmonize with the statute's broad underlying foundation of fraud prevention.").

Here, under the terms of the at-issue leases, the private landowners effectively relinquish title to Appellants for natural gas that is extracted from their land during the lease term, in exchange for some combination of up-front and royalty payments. See, e.g., Second Amended Complaint, Exs. G, H, Q. We fail to see how that is functionally different from a sale of property.

Furthermore, in Danganan, HN12[↑] our Supreme Court interpreted Section 2\(3\) of the UTPCPL as containing two distinct and independent clauses, the latter of which "does not modify or qualify the preceding [**13] terms. 73 P.S. § 201-2\(3\). Instead, [the second clause] is appended to the end of the [first clause's] definition and [is] prefaced by 'and includes,' thus indicating an inclusive and broader view of trade and commerce than expressed by the antecedent language." *Danganan, 179 A.3d at 16*. Therefore, this second clause operates as a catch-all of sorts, enabling "'trade' and 'commerce'" to be defined in terms of common usage and not just, as argued by Appellants, through the narrower, more specific language of the first clause. See 1 Pa. C.S. § 1903\(a\).<sup>9</sup> [**58] "Pennsylvania courts generally use dictionaries as source material to determine the common and approved usage of terms not defined in statutes." *THW Grp., LLC v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 86 A.3d 330, 343 \(Pa. Cmwlth. 2014\)*. Consequently, we turn to Merriam-Webster's Dictionary, which defines "trade" and "commerce," in relevant part and respectively as, "the business of buying and selling or bartering commodities"<sup>10</sup> and "the exchange or buying and selling of commodities on a large scale involving transportation from place to place."<sup>11</sup>

Again, Appellants have, by virtue of leasing subsurface mineral rights, purchased time-limited rights to whatever natural gas is situated underneath the private landowners' properties. Thus, these transactions are, in the context of the UTPCPL, "'trade' [**14] or 'commerce'."<sup>12</sup>

Having decided that Appellants' leases qualify under the Law as "'trade' or 'commerce,'" the question then becomes whether this type of activity can give rise to a UTPCPL action by the Attorney General. We find that it can. As noted <sup>9</sup> HN13[↑] "Words and phrases shall be construed according to rules of grammar and according to their common and approved usage; but technical words and phrases and such others as have acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning or are defined in this part, shall be construed according to such peculiar and appropriate meaning or definition." 1 Pa. C.S. § 1903\(a\).

<sup>12</sup> Because of our holding that these leases are "sales," within the context of Section 2\(3\)'s first clause, and "'trade' or 'commerce,'" within the context of Section 2\(3\)'s second clause, we do not address Appellants' argument that the Trial Court erred in ruling that the leases constitute "'trade' or 'commerce'" because they qualify as "distribution of services."

above, HN14<sup>12</sup> the UTPCPL states that "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce as defined by subclauses (i) through (xxi) of [73 P.S. § 201-2] and regulations promulgated under [73 P.S. § 201-3.1] are hereby declared unlawful." 73 P.S. § 201-3. The key phrase here is "in the conduct," which, when read in the full context of the language used in Section 3 of the UTPCPL, pertains to all "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices" connected to UTPCPL-defined "'trade' or 'commerce'," regardless of who is committing these unlawful acts.

Additionally, HN15<sup>13</sup> while the UTPCPL places restrictions on the ability of private parties to file suit,<sup>13</sup> the Law creates no such [\[\*59\]](#) impediment for the Attorney General. Instead, the Attorney General is imbued with the express authority to file suit against "any person," whenever the Attorney General determines that such a person "is using or is about to use any method, act or practice declared [\[\*\*15\]](#) by [\[73 P.S. § 201-3\]](#) to be unlawful, and that proceedings would be in the public interest[.]" 73 P.S. § 201-4. Section 2\(2\) of the Law defines "person" as "natural persons, corporations, trusts, partnerships, incorporated or unincorporated associations, and any other legal entities." Id. at § 201-2\(2\). Given that the Appellants are comprised of various corporations and other legal entities, they are thus subject to suit under the UTPCPL.

Tying this all together, the Attorney General has asserted that Appellants, which are UTPCPL-classified "persons," have operated deceptively, misleadingly, and unfairly "in the conduct of any trade or commerce" (i.e., the leasing of subsurface mineral rights from private landowners). Second Amended Complaint at [\[\*\*17\]](#) 1-4, 29-78, 82-105; 73 P.S. § 201-3; see 73 P.S. § 201-2\(4\)\(xxi\) (defining "[u]nfair methods of competition" and 'unfair or deceptive acts or practices'[.]' in relevant part, as "[e]ngaging in any other fraudulent or deceptive conduct which creates a likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding"). Therefore, the Attorney General has stated legally viable claims against Appellants. For these reasons, we hold that the Trial Court properly overruled Appellants' demurrers that their behavior in securing these leases was not actionable under the UTPCPL.

The Attorney General's Antitrust Actions under the UTPCPL

<sup>13</sup> Sections 7\(a\) and 9.2\(a\)-\(b\) of the UTPCPL limit private actions to those initiated by buyers, consumers, and lessees:

(a) Where goods or services having a sale price of twenty-five dollars ($25) or more are sold or contracted to be sold to a buyer, as a result of, or in connection with, a contact with or call on the buyer or resident at his residence either in person or by telephone, that consumer may avoid the contract or sale by notifying, in writing, the seller within three full business days following the day on which the contract or sale was made and by returning or holding available for return to the seller, in its original condition, any merchandise received under the contract or sale. Such notice of rescission shall be effective upon depositing the same in the United States mail or upon other service which gives the seller notice of rescission.

73 P.S. § 201-7\(a\).

(a) Any person who purchases or leases goods or services primarily [\[\*\*16\]](#) for personal, family or household purposes and thereby suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the use or employment by any person of a method, act or practice declared unlawful by [\[73 P.S. § 201-3\]](#), may bring a private action to recover actual damages or one hundred dollars ($100), whichever is greater. The court may, in its discretion, award up to three times the actual damages sustained, but not less than one hundred dollars ($100), and may provide such additional relief as it deems necessary or proper. The court may award to the plaintiff, in addition to other relief provided in this section, costs and reasonable attorney fees.

(b) Any permanent injunction, judgment or order of the court made under [\[73 P.S. § 201-4\]](#) shall be prima facie evidence in an action brought under [\[73 P.S. § 201-9.2\]](#) that the defendant used or employed acts or practices declared unlawful by [\[73 P.S. § 201-3\]](#).

Appellants argue that the Trial Court erred in ruling that the Attorney General could use the UTPCPL to pursue claims against them that were rooted in alleged violations of antitrust law. Appellants note that the UTPCPL "does not prohibit joint ventures or in any way purport to regulate or penalize agreements among businesses[.]" such as those entered into by Appellants during their efforts to secure the aforementioned leases. Appellants' Br. at 13-14, 29. Instead, Appellants assert that the Attorney General is simply attempting to "retroactively and unilaterally" rewrite the UTPCPL, in order to get around the General [**18] Assembly's repeated failure to pass an antitrust statute, and the fact that damages are not recoverable under Pennsylvania antitrust common law. Id. at 13-14, 27-32.

According to Appellants, "[n]either the 'trade or commerce' definition in [\[73 P.S.\] § 201-2\(3\)](#) nor the catchall provision in [\[73 P.S.\] § 201-2\(4\)\(xxi\)](#) addresses agreements between market participants or in any other way purports to regulate competition." Id. at 29. Appellants note that the UTPCPL contains specific statutory definitions of "unfair methods of competition" and "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" [*60] that do not include joint venture agreements, such as the kind in which Appellants were involved. Appellants' Reply Br. at 16-17. Appellants opine that this is what differentiates the UTPCPL from federal antitrust statutes such as the Federal Trade Commission \(FTC\) Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 41-58, which contains no definition of "unfair methods of competition" and "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" and, thus, renders unlawful a far broader swath of activities than the UTPCPL.<sup>14</sup> Id. at 16-18. Consequently, Appellants conclude that the General Assembly's intent that the UTPCPL be liberally construed should not be interpreted in a way that disregards the plain language of the Law or permits the creation of antitrust provisions [**19] that are not explicitly contained within the UTPCPL. Appellants' Br. at 32-33.

We agree with Appellants that HN16[] the UTPCPL is not designed to render all antitrust violations actionable and that the scope of actionable antitrust behavior under the UTPCPL is narrower than under federal antitrust law. As we have already noted, the UTPCPL provides two avenues through which activities can be declared "unfair methods of competition" or "unfair or deceptive acts or practices." First, the General Assembly may define a given activity as unlawful by statute in Section 2\(4\) of the Law. Second, the Attorney General, by virtue of Section 3.1 of the Law, may also promulgate definitions of these terms through the administrative rulemaking process. 73 P.S. § 201-3.1. Given that neither the Attorney General nor the General Assembly has thus far used their powers to expressly define monopolistic behavior, joint ventures, or market sharing agreements as examples of "unfair methods of competition" or "unfair or deceptive acts or practices," we find that such activities are not per se unlawful for purposes of the UTPCPL. Consequently, the only manner in which these activities can give rise to viable UTPCPL actions is if they fit within one of the [**20] categories of behavior deemed, by rule or in the Law itself, "unfair methods of competition" or "unfair or deceptive acts or practices."

The Attorney General's Second Amended Complaint contains two claims which allege antitrust violations by Appellants under the UTPCPL. The first can be discerned in Count III, in which the Attorney General asserts that Appellants' allegedly unlawful joint venture and market sharing agreements violated the UTPCPL through "impairment of choice and the competitive process[.]" Second Amended Complaint at 65-67. According to the Attorney General, these agreements "created the likelihood of confusion and misunderstanding" amongst the private landowners under whose land the desired natural gas was situated, by eliminating the prospect of competition between potential lessees and depressing the amount of compensation the landowners received in return for leasing their land to Appellants. Id. at 66-70.

Thus, the Attorney General essentially argues through Count III that Appellants' joint venture and market sharing agreements intrinsically violated the UTPCPL. As we have already explained, the plain terms of the UTPCPL do not support such a conclusion. Rather, the Attorney [**21] General's claim that the mere existence of these business dealings created "impairment of choice and the competitive process" is insufficient and does not enable Count III to fit within any of the 21 categories of "unfair methods of competition" or "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" listed in Section 2\(4\) of the Law. [*61] Furthermore, the Attorney General has thus far declined to deem joint ventures or market sharing agreements as "unfair methods of competition" or "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" under the <sup>14</sup> Section 5 of the FTC Act merely states: "Unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, are hereby declared unlawful." 15 U.S.C. § 45\(a\)\(1\).

UTPCPL through the administrative rulemaking process. Consequently, the Attorney General has failed to state a viable UTPCPL-based antitrust claim in Count III, and, therefore, the Trial Court erred by overruling Appellants' demurrers to Count III of the Attorney General's Second Amended Complaint.

The second UTPCPL-based antitrust claim can be discerned in Count IV, in which the Attorney General argues that Appellants deceived and acted unfairly towards private landowners by giving them misleading information, and/or failing to disclose information, regarding the open market's true appetite for subsurface mineral rights leases, as well as whether the terms of the agreed-to leases "were [**22] competitive and fair." Id. at 72-76.

With regard to Count IV, however, we find that the Attorney General has articulated a legally viable UTPCPL claim. The Attorney General's assertions in Count IV regarding Appellants' allegedly disingenuous and misleading behavior brings that claim within the ambit of Section 2\(4\)\(xxi\) of the Law, which defines "[u]nfair methods of competition" and "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" as "[e]ngaging in any other fraudulent or deceptive conduct which creates a likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding." 73 P.S. § 201-2\(4\)\(xxi\). Hence, the Trial Court did not err by overruling Appellants' demurrers to Count IV of the Attorney General's Second Amended Complaint.

Conclusion

In summation, we hold that the Attorney General was permitted to file a UTPCPL-based lawsuit against Appellants, but can only pursue antitrust claims through the UTPCPL where the so-called "antitrust" conduct qualifies as "unfair methods of competition" or "unfair or deceptive acts or practices," as those terms have been either statutorily defined in the UTPCPL or by the Attorney General through the administrative rulemaking process. Thus, in light of the requirement that, in order to sustain a demurrer, "it must appear with [**23] certainty that the law will permit no recovery, and any doubt must be resolved in favor of the non-moving party[.]" Christ the King Manor, 911 A.2d at 633, we reverse the Trial Court regarding its decision to overrule Appellants' demurrers to Count III of the Attorney General's Second Amended Complaint, but otherwise affirm the Trial Court. Furthermore, we direct Appellants to each file an Answer to the Second Amended Complaint within 20 days of this matter's record being returned to the Trial Court.<sup>15</sup>

Dissent

CONCURRING AND DISSENTING OPINION BY JUDGE COVEY

I concur with the Majority that the Bradford County Common Pleas Court (trial court) erred by overruling the demurrers of Anadarko Petroleum Corporation and Anadarko E&P Onshore LLC, Chesapeake Energy Corporation, Chesapeake Appalachia, LLC, Chesapeake Operating, LLC, and Chesapeake Energy Marketing, LLC (Chesapeake [**25] Appellants), (collectively, Appellants) to Count III of the Attorney General's Second Amended Complaint. However, I do not agree that the Attorney General has stated legally viable claims against Appellants, as lessees, under the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law (UTPCPL).<sup>1</sup> Because the Majority manipulates the language of the UTPCPL for a purpose the General Assembly never intended and, as a result, Appellants find themselves facing liability for conduct that, prior to the Majority's pronouncement, neither Appellants (nor anyone else) could have foreseen would be considered a violation of state law, I respectfully dissent from those portions of the Majority opinion.

The UTPCPL is a consumer protection statute. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has recognized that [t]he UTPCPL was created to even the bargaining power between consumers and sellers in commercial transactions, and to promote that objective, it aims to protect the consumers of the Commonwealth against fraud and unfair or deceptive business practices. As a remedial statute, it is to be construed liberally to effectuate that goal.

Commonwealth v. Golden Gate Nat'l Senior Care LLC, 194 A.3d 1010, 1023 (Pa. 2018) (citation omitted; bold and underline emphasis added).

In Meyer v. Community College of Beaver County, 625 Pa. 563, 93 A.3d 806 (Pa. 2014), our Supreme [**26] Court explained, "the [*63] legislature enacted the UTPCPL to account for the fundamental inequality between buyer and seller, and to protect consumers from exploitative merchants." Id. at 814 (bold and italic emphasis added). In Commonwealth v. Monumental Properties, Inc., 459 Pa. 450, 329 A.2d 812 (Pa. 1974), the Pennsylvania Supreme Court stated that the [UTPCPL] was designed to equalize the market position and strength of the consumer vis-a-vis the seller. A perception of unfairness led the Legislature to regulate more closely market transactions. The mischief to be remedied was the use of unfair or deceptive acts and practices by sellers. As part of the [UTPCPL's] object, fraudulent conduct that would mislead or confuse a consumer was banned.

Id. at 820 (bold and italic emphasis added). The Monumental Properties Court recognized: "The Legislature directed that consumers were to be safeguarded by the [UTPCPL]. . . . [T]enants are in every meaningful sense consumers." Id. at 826 (emphasis added).

Based thereon, the Majority acknowledges that lessee Appellants are purchasers, i.e., consumers of "time-limited rights to whatever natural gas is situated underneath the private landowners' properties."<sup>2</sup> Majority Op. at 10-11; see also Majority Op. at 9 (recognizing that the lease transactions are not "functionally [**27] different from a sale of property"). Conversely, the private landowners were sellers in the subject transactions.

Appellants correctly observe:

No court has ever interpreted the UTPCPL as authorizing a claim by or on behalf of a seller against a person who acquires something from the seller or as separately authorizing a right of action against a person simply because that person is involved in any form of commercial transaction.<sup>3</sup>

Chesapeake Appellants' Br. at 25.

Section 3 of the UTPCPL declares unlawful "[u]nfair methods of competition [*64] and unfair or deceptive acts [**28] or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce . . . ." 73 P.S. § 201-3. Section 2(3) of the UTPCPL. Section 2(3) of the UTPCPL defines "trade" and "commerce" as "the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of any services and any property, tangible or intangible, real, personal or mixed, and any other article, commodity, or thing of value wherever situate, and includes any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this Commonwealth." 73 P.S. § 201-2(3) (emphasis added). Notwithstanding that Section 2(3) of the UTPCPL specifically defines trade or commerce as "offering for sale, sale or distribution" (i.e., the act of selling), the Majority, citing to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court's decision in Danganan v. Guardian Protection Services, 179 A.3d 9 (Pa. 2018), interprets the definition's second clause (which describes but does not limit what selling includes) to apply to the act of purchasing. The Majority misreads Danganan.

The issue before the Court in Danganan was whether a non-Pennsylvania resident could maintain a cause of action against a Pennsylvania-headquartered business, based on out-of-state transactions. The Court considered the text of Section 2(3) of the UTPCPL, explaining that

An oil and gas lease is a misnomer as it operates as a fee simple determinable for the mineral estate[;] [a] fee simple determinable for the mineral estate operates to sever the ownership of certain minerals from the ownership of the surface of the land[; and t]he mineral estate conveyed by Pennsylvania Landowners typically includes all geologic horizons including, but not limited to, Marcellus Shale and Utica Shale.

Second Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 77-79, Reproduced Record at 980a (emphasis added).

<sup>3</sup> The UTPCPL describes only unlawful activity by a seller, and provides protections for buyers. See, e.g., Section 2(4) of the UTPCPL, 73 P.S. § 201-2(4) (defining "[u]nfair methods of competition" and "unfair or deceptive acts or practices"); see also Section (5) of the UTPCPL, 73 P.S. § 201-5 (permitting the Attorney General to accept an assurance of voluntary compliance by stipulation "for voluntary payment by the alleged violator providing for the restitution by the alleged violator to consumers, of money, property or other things received from them in connection with a violation of [the UTPCPL]." (emphasis added)); Section 7 of the UTPCPL, 73 P.S. § 201-7 (providing buyers under a contract for $25 or more, a 3-day cancellation period, requiring particular information and notice to be provided to the buyer, and requiring a seller to honor such cancellation within 10 business days); Section 9.2 of the UTPCPL, as amended, added by Section 1 of the Act of November 24, 1976, P.L. 1166, 73 P.S. § 201-9.2 (creating a private cause of action for "[a]ny person who purchases or leases goods or services primarily for personal, family or household purposes and thereby suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal" by a UTPCPL violation) (emphasis added); Section 9.3 of the UTPCPL, as amended, added by Section 1 of the Act of June 25, 1997, P.L. 287, 73 P.S. § 201-9.3 (providing dog purchaser protection and imposing obligations on the seller).

the plain language definitions of 'person' and 'trade' and 'commerce' evidence no geographic limitation or residency requirement relative to the [UTPCPL's] [**29] application. Although the trade and commerce definition includes a clause relating to conduct that 'directly or indirectly affect[s] the people of this Commonwealth,' that phrase does not modify or qualify the preceding terms. 73 P.S. § 201-2\(3\). Instead, it is appended to the end of the definition and prefaced by 'and includes,' thus indicating an inclusive and broader view of trade and commerce than expressed by the antecedent language. See id. (defining those terms as 'the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of any services and any property, . . . and any other article, commodity, or thing of value wherever situate, and includes any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this Commonwealth').

Danganan, 179 A.3d at 16 (emphasis added). The Danganan Court held that, given the General Assembly's use of the words "and includes," the second clause description did not limit the first clause only to "trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this Commonwealth." 73 P.S. § 201-2\(3\). Because the UTPCPL describes "the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of any services and any property" to include "any trade or commerce affecting the people of this Commonwealth[.]" it [**30] is logical that the Supreme Court did not read the first clause to apply to only "trade or commerce affecting the people of this Commonwealth." 73 P.S. § 201-2\(3\).

Here, the Majority incorrectly construes Danganan to justify its disregard of the first clause in the UTPCPL's definition of "trade" or "commerce." Rather than concluding that the first clause is not limited by the second, as the Supreme Court in Danganan did, the Majority concludes that the second clause is not limited by the first. This interpretation completely ignores the General Assembly's use of the words "and includes" and renders the first clause unnecessary. 73 P.S. § 201-2\(3\). Perhaps best demonstrating the error of the Majority's approach, the Majority consults the dictionary for the definition of "trade" and "commerce" notwithstanding that the UTPCPL already defines "trade" and "commerce" in the first clause. "The legislature may create its own dictionary, and its definitions may be different from [*65] ordinary usage. When it does define the words used in a statute, the courts need not refer to the technical meaning and derivation of those words as given in dictionaries, but must accept the statutory definitions." Commonwealth v. Massini, 200 Pa. Super. 257, 188 A.2d 816, 817 \(Pa. Super. 1963\) (emphasis added); see also Commonwealth v. Lobiondo, 501 Pa. 599, 462 A.2d 662, 664 \(Pa. 1983\). Here, [**31] although the statute defines the terms "trade" and "commerce," the Majority nevertheless disregards the statutory definition in favor of the dictionary definition, which it may not do. By ignoring this well-established principle, the Majority erroneously concludes that the UTPCPL "pertains to all '[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices' connected to UTPCPL-defined 'trade' or 'commerce,'" regardless of who is committing these unlawful acts[.]" and authorizes a UTPCPL action against Appellants, the consumers in the commercial transaction. Majority Op. at 11 (bold emphasis added).

I believe that the Majority misconstrues the terms "trade" and "commerce" as used in Section 2\(3\) of the UTPCPL in a way that is wholly inconsistent with the UTPCPL's legislative purpose. Thereby, the Majority holds that the UTPCPL, a consumer protection statute intended to bolster consumers' bargaining powers, can authorize legal action against a purchaser. "It is a primary canon of construction that statutes must be construed in such a way as to effectuate the legislative purpose and policy." Commonwealth v. Wanamaker, 450 Pa. 77, 296 A.2d 618, 623 \(Pa. 1972\). "The most basic tenet of statutory construction is that a court must effectuate the intent of the General Assembly [**32] ." Gardner v. Workers' Comp. Appeal Bd. \(Genesis Health Ventures\), 585 Pa. 366, 888 A.2d 758, 761 \(Pa. 2005\) (emphasis added). The Majority's holding completely ignores the legislative purpose and erroneously relies on a dictionary definition, thereby undermining the General Assembly's intent. Consequently, the Majority has overstepped its authority by ignoring the statutory definition of "trade" or "commerce" and substituting a definition that directly conflicts with the legislature's purpose to protect consumers.

Further, the Majority's "trade" and "commerce" interpretation conflicts with Pennsylvania Superior Court decisions Schwarzwaelder v. Fox, 2006 PA Super 61, 895 A.2d 614 \(Pa. Super. 2006\) and DeFazio v. Gregory, 2003 PA Super 418, 836 A.2d 935 \(Pa. Super. 2003\), wherein the Court held that the UTPCPL served to protect buyers rather than sellers. The Schwarzwaelder Court held that where plaintiffs did not purchase from the defendant, the UTPCPL is inapplicable.

Recently, the Pennsylvania Superior Court explained:

The UTPCPL is for consumer protection. It undoes the ills of sharp business dealings by vendors, who, as here, may be counseling consumers in very private, highly technical concerns. . . . [T]hose consumers may be especially reliant upon a vendor's specialized skill, training, and experience in matters with which consumers have little or no expertise. Therefore, the legislature has placed the duty of UTPCPL [**33] compliance squarely and solely on vendors; they are not to engage in deceitful conduct and have no legally cognizable excuse, if they do.

Gregg v. Ameriprise Fin., Inc., 2018 PA Super 252, 195 A.3d 930, 940 \(Pa. Super. 2018\) (bold and italic emphasis added). Although Schwarzwaelder, DeFazio and Gregg involved lawsuits by private parties rather than the Attorney General, all such actions are confined to the UTPCPL's definition of "trade" and "commerce," which applies both to actions by the Attorney General and by private [*66] parties. Thus, the aforementioned cases are instructive.

By imposing a consumer protection statute's restrictions, prohibitions and burdens on consumers, the Majority's analysis and ruling is a gross misinterpretation and misapplication of the UTPCPL. Such ruling is inconsistent with the UTPCPL's statutory purpose, creates a never-intended or anticipated UTPCPL cause of action that is completely contrary to the General Assembly's intent, and creates a dangerous precedent.

With respect to Count IV, the second UTPCPL-based antitrust claim, the Second Amended Complaint alleges therein that Appellants violated the UTPCPL:

- a. Each time a[n Appellant] failed to disclose the existence of the joint venture agreement, the market allocation agreement and the option [**34] of the other [Appellant] to acquire an interest in the lease in the course of negotiating an oil and gas lease with a Pennsylvania Landowner within the area of mutual interest covering the Marcellus Shale gas play;
- b. Each time a Pennsylvania Landowner received an artificially deflated acreage signing bonus from a[n Appellant]; and
- c. Each time a Pennsylvania Landowner received an artificially deflated royalty from a[n Appellant].

Reproduced Record (R.R.) at 1034a-1035a. The Majority concludes that the claim which clearly targets an alleged restraint of trade falls "within the ambit of Section 2\(4\)\(xxi\) of the Law,<sup>4</sup>" given the "Appellants' allegedly disingenuous and misleading behavior . . ." Majority Op. at 16.<sup>5</sup>

Appellants properly argue:

The UTPCPL does not provide on its face any remedy for alleged antitrust violations. . . . Neither the 'trade or commerce' definition in [\[Section\] 2\(3\) of the UTPCPL](#), nor the catchall provision in [\[Section\] 2\(4\)\(xxi\) of the UTPCPL](#) addresses agreements between market participants or in any other way purports to regulate competition.

Chesapeake Appellants' Br. at 29. Appellants also correctly observe that the "Pennsylvania General Assembly has tried 24 times to pass an antitrust statute that would [**35] have provided a remedy for alleged anticompetitive practices since the enactment of the UTPCPL in 1968, but each time the measure has failed."<sup>6</sup> Chesapeake [*67] Appellants' Br. at 30-31; see also, R.R. at 675a.

<sup>5</sup> For the reasons previously discussed, I believe that Count IV of the Second Amended Complaint must also be dismissed since Appellants' conduct, as purchasers, does not fall within the UTPCPL's definition of "trade" and "commerce."

<sup>6</sup> Appellants' exhibit listed 25 bills. The last bill, Senate Bill 578 of 2015, was described as still pending. On August 29, 2017, Senator Greenleaf reintroduced Senate Bill 578 of 2015 as Senate Bill 858 P.N. 1122 of 2017 (Senate Bill 858), and it was

There is no dispute that the General Assembly has not enacted a state antitrust statute. By affirming the trial court's decision to overrule Appellants' demurrers to Count IV, the Majority erroneously interprets the UTPCPL to create a statutory prohibition unapproved by the General Assembly, and wields that unauthorized and un-enacted prohibition to punish consumers under the purported authority of a consumer protection statute. This is judicial overreach.

In consultation with the Office of Attorney General, I am reintroducing Senate Bill 578, a comprehensive antitrust law. . . .

The legislation authorizes only the Attorney General to file a civil action for an antitrust violation. The purpose of the law is to allow for a full and fair recovery to satisfy claims arising from an antitrust injury sustained by the Commonwealth and its residents and to provide the investigative tools to satisfactorily achieve this objective. The language is derived from other states' statutes and federal law.

The legislation is intended to make illegal any contract, conspiracy or combination in restraint of trade and any monopolization in restraint of trade. The legislation also makes illegal any mergers or acquisitions that lessens competition substantially in any line of commerce. The legislation provides for criminal penalties for obstructing compliance with a subpoena and for knowingly removing or falsifying documents to be produced. Any such obstruction [**36] or falsification constitutes a misdemeanor of the second degree.

The legislation incorporates exemptions that are judicially recognized under federal antitrust laws. The Commonwealth Court would have original jurisdiction for all actions for violations of the statute.

[*9] MEMORANDUM OPINION

The plaintiff, Helen Krukas, individually, and on behalf of all others similarly situated (except for individuals residing in California), as well as the general public, brings this putative class action against the defendants, AARP Inc., ("AARP"), AARP Services Inc. ("ASI"), and AARP Insurance Plan ("AARP Trust") (collectively referred to as "AARP"), alleging a violation of the Washington D.C. Consumer Protection Procedures Act \("CPPA"\), D.C. Code § 28-3901 et seq. [\[\*\*2\]](#), as well as common law violations of conversion, unjust enrichment, and fraudulent concealment, based on her purchase of a Medicare supplemental health insurance policy, also known as a

"Medigap" policy, administered by AARP. See Compl. ¶¶ 1, 16, 17, 88, ECF No. 1. These statutory and common law claims are predicated on the plaintiff's allegations that she was "fooled into paying AARP an undisclosed 4.95% commission" when purchasing her Medigap policy and, since "AARP is not licensed as an insurance broker or agent," the defendants "may not legally collect these commissions." Id. ¶ 1. Pending before the Court is the defendants' Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). See Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss & Mem. in Supp. ("Defs.' Mem."), ECF No. 8.<sup>1</sup> For the reasons set forth below, the defendants' motion is denied.<sup>2</sup>

I. BACKGROUND

The plaintiff challenges AARP's role in soliciting, marketing, and administering Medigap policies, a state-regulated form of health insurance to supplement Medicare. Since at least 1997, AARP has held, in its name, group Medigap policies underwritten by UnitedHealth Group and UnitedHealthcare Insurance Company (collectively, "UnitedHealth") and offered participation in those group policies to individual AARP members and the general public. See Compl. ¶¶ 22, 37, 51. The plaintiff alleges that AARP's administration and provision of other services in support of these group Medigap policies amounted to acting as an unlicensed insurance agent, that the "royalties" paid to AARP as a percentage of premiums constituted illegal commissions, and that AARP materially misrepresented the nature and source of the "royalties," causing consumers to pay more for AARP Medigap policies [**3] than they otherwise would. See Compl. ¶¶ 4-15. The following discussion [*10] provides a general overview of Medigap policies and summarizes the plaintiff's allegations, claims against AARP, and desired relief.

A. Medigap Policies Generally

A Medigap policy is insurance offered by a private insurer to help pay for certain "gaps" in Medicare coverage. See United States v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Md., Inc., 989 F.2d 718, 721 \(4th Cir. 1993\) (citing Pub. L. No. 96-265, § 507, 94 Stat. 441, 476 (codified as amended at 42 U.S.C. § 1395ss)). The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services has described a Medigap policy as "health insurance [sold by private insurance companies that] can help pay some of the health care costs that Original Medicare doesn't cover, like coinsurance, copayments, or deductibles." CTRS. FOR MEDICARE & MEDICAID SERVS., CHOOSING A MEDIGAP POLICY: A GUIDE TO HEALTH INSURANCE FOR PEOPLE WITH MEDICARE 5 (2019), <https://www.medicare.gov/Pubs/pdf/02110-Medicare-Medigap-guide.pdf> [hereinafter "CMS Medigap Guide"]; see also Compl. ¶ 29 ("Medigap plans offer extra coverage to Medicare beneficiaries . . . such as first-dollar coverage and reduced co-payment and deductibles.").<sup>3</sup> "Each standardized Medigap policy must offer the same basic benefits, no matter which insurance company sells it. Cost is usually the only difference between [**4] [standardized] Medigap policies . . . sold by different insurance companies," CMS Medigap Guide at 9, because "[d]ifferent insurance companies may charge different premiums for the same exact policy," id. at 13. Indeed, "big differences" may occur "in the premiums that different insurance companies charge for exactly the same coverage." Id. at 19. Age, where a person lives, medical underwriting, and discounts may affect an insurance company's choice of what premium to charge. Id. at 17.

<sup>2</sup> The defendants' request for oral argument is denied because the ample briefing is sufficient to resolve the pending motion. See D.D.C. Local Civil Rule 7(f) (allowance of an oral hearing is "within the discretion of the Court").

<sup>3</sup> While matters "outside the pleadings" generally may not be considered on a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion without converting the motion to one for summary judgment, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(d\), this conversion rule is not triggered by consideration of "documents incorporated into the complaint by reference, and matters of which a court may take judicial notice." Tellabs, Inc. v. Makor Issues & Rights, Ltd., 551 U.S. 308, 322, 127 S. Ct. 2499, 168 L. Ed. 2d 179 \(2007\). Judicial notice is taken of the CMS Medigap Guide, which is issued by a component of a federal agency, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. See Fed. R. Evid. 201\(b\); Cannon v. District of Columbia, 717 F.3d 200, 205 n.2, 405 U.S. App. D.C. 141 \(D.C. Cir. 2013\) (taking judicial notice of public records posted online); Johnson v. Comm'n on Presidential Debates, 202 F. Supp. 3d 159, 167 \(D.D.C. 2016\) (same).

B. AARP's Alleged Role in Administering UnitedHealth's Medigap Policies

The plaintiff, currently a resident of Boca Raton, Florida, originally purchased a UnitedHealth Medigap policy from AARP in Louisiana in 2012, and continuously maintained this coverage by paying her monthly premium to AARP until November 2016. See Compl. ¶ 20; Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Mot. to Dismiss ("Pl.'s Opp'n") at 16, ECF No. 13. Her most recent renewal of her AARP Medigap policy coverage occurred when she resided in Florida. See Compl. ¶ 20; Pl.'s Opp'n at 16. She alleges that "[b]ut for Defendants' deceptive and unlawful acts . . . [she] would not have agreed to pay an additional 4.95% above the premium for an AARP Medigap policy, and would have sought out other, cheaper [**5] and lawful Medigap insurance." Compl. ¶ 20.

Defendant AARP is a non-profit membership organization for seniors aged 50 years or older, with reportedly over 40 million members, about half of whom are over the age of 65. See id. ¶¶ 2, 21, 25. The organization is organized under the laws of [*11] the District of Columbia and maintains its national headquarters and primary place of business in Washington, D.C., id. ¶ 21, which is where AARP establishes its "corporate policies and practices, including those for AARP Medigap policies," id. Defendant ASI is a wholly owned subsidiary of AARP, organized under the laws of Delaware, with its primary place of business in Washington, D.C. Id. ¶ 22. As AARP's taxable, "for-profit" division, ASI "negotiates, oversees, and manages lucrative contracts with AARP's insurance business partners." Id. AARP created ASI in 1999 pursuant to a settlement agreement with the U.S. Internal Revenue Service (IRS), following an IRS investigation into the income that AARP earned through endorsement deals. See id. ¶¶ 22, 36.

Defendant AARP Trust is a grantor trust organized by AARP under the laws of Washington, D.C., where the Trust maintains its primary place of business. [**6] Id. ¶ 22. AARP is not a licensed insurance broker or agent. Id. ¶ 8. Rather, AARP, through AARP Trust, serves as the group policy holder for Medigap coverage underwritten by UnitedHealth. See id. ¶ 22. In this role, AARP Trust maintains depository accounts to collect insurance premiums from individual purchasers of Medigap policies through AARP's group plan and, as part of that premium, AARP Trust also collects the challenged 4.95% "royalty" charge assessed on every Medigap policy sold or renewed. See id. ¶¶ 22, 52, 54. AARP Trust remits premiums to UnitedHealth, and transfers the money collected as a 4.95% "royalty" to AARP and ASI. Id. ¶¶ 22, 56, 57; see also id. ¶ 52 ("In accordance with the agreement [with UnitedHealth] . . . collections [of premiums] are remitted to third-party insurance carriers . . . , net of the contractual royalty payments that are due to AARP, Inc., which are reported as royalties.") (quoting AARP's 2016 Audited Financial Statement) (emphasis added).

A joint venture agreement ("Agreement"), first entered in 1997, governs AARP and UnitedHealth's relationship with respect to Medigap insurance. Id. ¶ 37; see also Defs.' Mem., Ex. 1 (Agreement), ECF No. 8-1.<sup>4</sup> The [*7] Complaint provides detail on the evolution of the Agreement over time, most notably that AARP was initially entitled to an "allowance," which was renamed a "royalty" after AARP's 1999 settlement with the IRS. Compl. ¶¶ 39, 40. Under the Agreement, AARP agrees to: (1) market, solicit, sell and renew AARP Medigap policies with UnitedHealth; (2) collect and remit premium payments on behalf of UnitedHealth; (3) generally administer the AARP Medigap program; and (4) otherwise act as UnitedHealth's agent. Id. ¶ 38. The Agreement makes clear that AARP owns all solicitation materials related to the Medigap program. Id. ¶ 47 (citing Agreement Subsection 7.2, "Member Communications"). "[I]n exchange for AARP's administering of the insurance program and its marketing, soliciting, and selling or renewing of AARP Medigap policies on behalf of UnitedHealth, as well as its collecting and remitting insurance premiums on behalf of UnitedHealth, AARP earns a 4.95% commission—disguised [*12] as a 'royalty'—on each policy sold or renewed." Id. ¶ 45. In 2016, AARP generated $880 million in revenues from "royalties," of which 68% came from UnitedHealth insurance products, including Medigap Policies and other [*8] insurance products. See id. ¶¶ 28, 32, 33, 37. The $880 million in royalty revenue equated to over 54% of AARP's 2016 total operating revenue. Id. ¶ 32.

The nature of the 4.95% charge, and AARP's representations to consumers regarding this charge, are the focus of the plaintiff's claims. While the defendants describe the 4.95% charge as a royalty compensating AARP for UnitedHealth's use of its intellectual property, see id. ¶¶ 40-45, the plaintiff alleges, relying on a Ninth Circuit case for support, that the 4.95% charge is an illegal and not properly disclosed commission compensating AARP for agreeing to act as UnitedHealth's agent in connection with the marketing, solicitation, sale, and administration of Medigap policies. See id. ¶¶ 49, 62-68; see also id. ¶ 6 (citing Friedman v. AARP, Inc., 855 F.3d 1047, 1052-53 (9th Cir. 2017) (finding that the plaintiff had sufficiently alleged that AARP's royalty fits California's definition of "commission wages" as "compensation paid to any person for services rendered in the sale of such employer's property or services and based proportionately upon the amount or value thereof" and holding that AARP's retention of this commission could plausibly violate [*9] California law)). The plaintiff suggests that AARP characterizes its "commission" as a "royalty" to avoid oversight by insurance regulators and to avoid paying taxes on the income generated through insurance sales, whereas other associations "do the right thing and acquire a license to act as an agent." Compl. ¶ 8 & n.1 (citing example of the automobile club AAA, which is licensed to sell insurance).

According to the plaintiff, "AARP and UnitedHealth, together and through their respective subsidiaries, have orchestrated an elaborate scheme where AARP, as the de facto agent of UnitedHealth, helps market, solicit, and sell or renew AARP Medigap policies and generally administers the AARP Medigap program for UnitedHealth, in exchange for an undisclosed and illegal 4.95% commission that AARP collects from" plaintiff and other consumers when they pay AARP for their Medigap policies. Id. ¶ 4. The plaintiff further complains that "[d]espite the fact that AARP is not licensed as an insurance agent," id. ¶ 8, AARP received "a 4.95% commission from every policy sold or renewed," id., which "constitutes an illegal kickback," id. Set against the local statutory bar prohibiting unlicensed entities [*10] from engaging in the solicitation of insurance or accepting a commission for the sale or renewal of an insurance policy, id. ¶¶ 8, 74 (citing D.C. Code §§ 31-1131.13(b); 31-2502.31; 31-1131.03), the plaintiff bolsters her allegation that AARP has acted as an unlicensed insurance agent or broker by pointing to AARP's marketing materials, which are owned by AARP under the Agreement, id. ¶¶ 47, 72, and explicitly state "[t]his is a solicitation of insurance," id. ¶ 51 (citing AARP sponsored websites, www.aarphealthcare.com and www.aarpmedicareplans.com, as well as AARP's television, Internet, and print advertisements).

The plaintiff identifies certain harms resulting from AARP's actions, alleging that "[h]ad AARP disclosed the fact that the 'member contribution amount' that [she] paid monthly to AARP included an embedded 4.95% commission payment to AARP, [she] would have sought out another Medigap policy offering the same services for a lower rate. . . . [o]r if Defendants had acted within the bounds of the law, AARP would not have been able to collect" the 4.95% charge." Id. ¶ 11; see also id. ¶¶ 12, [*13] 77, 79, 81, 82. The plaintiff avers that "[b]ut for Defendants' deceptive and unlawful acts, [she] would not have [*11] agreed to pay the 4.95% illegal insurance commission," id. ¶ 14 and that she was injured both by paying this commission and by being denied information that would have prompted her to seek out and purchase another Medigap policy for a lower price, id. ¶ 15. The plaintiff notes that "[o]ther Medigap policies offered without the highly regarded 'AARP Brand' provide identical benefits, often at a lower cost in part because those insurers do not secretly charge consumers unlawful insurance-agent commissions on top of the premiums assessed." Id. ¶ 78.

Based on the foregoing, the plaintiff alleges that AARP collects an illegal commission, acts as an unlicensed insurance agent, and materially misrepresents information about the 4.95% charge, all of which constitute violations of the CCPA and common law.

C. Claims Against AARP

The plaintiff brings four claims, asserting, in Count One, that AARP violated the CCPA, D.C. Code § 28-3901 et seq., by engaging in an unlawful trade practice by misrepresenting material facts concerning the 4.95% payment and the fact that AARP is not a licensed insurance broker or agent in its solicitation materials, letters to prospective consumers, billing statements, renewal letters, and website. [\[\*\*12\]](#) Compl. ¶¶ 5, 92-103. The plaintiff alleges financial harm from these unlawful trade practices and being "deprived of truthful information regarding [her] choice" of Medigap policies, id. ¶ 100, because she would have sought a different Medigap policy that did not incorporate a 4.95% "commission that AARP is not legally entitled to," id. ¶ 97. For these alleged violations of the CCPA, the plaintiff seeks damages and injunctive relief. Id. ¶ 101.

In Count Two, the plaintiff claims the defendants' conversion of her "ownership right to the 4.95% of [her] payments that was wrongfully charged and illegally diverted to AARP as a commission," id. ¶¶ 104-06, resulted in damages in the amount of the premium for which she was wrongfully charged, id. ¶ 107.

In Count Three, the plaintiff alleges unjust enrichment, based on her conferral of a benefit to the defendants "in the form of the hidden 4.95% charge on top of [her] monthly premium payments that [was] unlawfully and deceptively charged and illegally diverted to AARP as a commission." Id. ¶ 109. The defendants "voluntarily accepted and retained this benefit," id. ¶ 110, which was "collected without proper disclosure and amounted to a commission [\[\*\*13\]](#) in violation of" District of Columbia law, id. ¶ 111, such that the defendants' retention of this benefit without paying its value to the plaintiff would be "inequitable," id.

Finally, in Count Four, the plaintiff alleges fraudulent concealment stemming from AARP's "conceal[ing] or fail[ing] to disclose [the] material fact" that AARP was collecting a 4.95% commission, id. ¶ 113, that AARP "knew or should have known that this material fact should be disclosed or not concealed," id. ¶ 114, that it concealed the fact "in bad faith," id. ¶ 115, in spite of its "duty to speak," id. ¶ 118, and that it thereby "induced [the plaintiff] to act by purchasing an AARP-endorsed Medigap plan," id. ¶ 116. The plaintiff alleges that she suffered damages as a result of this fraudulent concealment, id. ¶ 117.

As relief, the plaintiff seeks orders: (1) requiring AARP to restore all money or other property taken by means of unlawful acts or practices, id. at 30; (2) requiring the disgorgement of all sums taken from consumers by means of deceptive practices, [\[\*14\]](#) together with all proceeds, interest, income, and accessions, id.; (3) certifying a proposed class of "[a]ll persons in the United States, excluding California, [\[\*\*14\]](#) who purchased or renewed an AARP Medigap Policy," id. ¶ 84, with plaintiff as Class Representative and her counsel as Class Counsel, id. at 30; and (4) awarding court costs and reasonable attorneys' fees and any other relief the Court deems just and proper, id.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

To survive a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\), the "complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Wood v. Moss, 572 U.S. 744, 757-58, 134 S. Ct. 2056, 188 L. Ed. 2d 1039 \(2014\) (quoting Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\)). A claim is facially plausible when the plaintiff pleads factual content that is more than "merely consistent with" a defendant's liability," and "allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 557, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\)); see also Rudder v. Williams, 666 F.3d 790, 794, 399 U.S. App. D.C. 45 \(D.C. Cir. 2012\). Although "detailed factual allegations" are not required to withstand a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, a complaint must offer "more than labels and conclusions[] and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action" to provide "grounds" for "entitle[ment] to relief," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (internal quotation marks omitted; alteration in original), and "nudge[] [the] claims across the line from conceivable to plausible," id. at 570; see Banneker Ventures, LLC v. Graham, 798 F.3d 1119, 1129, 418 U.S. App. D.C. 398 \(D.C. Cir. 2015\) ("Plausibility requires more than a sheer possibility that a defendant [\[\*\*15\]](#) has acted unlawfully.") (internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, "a complaint [does not] suffice if it tenders 'naked assertion[s]' devoid of 'further factual enhancement.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557) (second alteration in original).

In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to plead a claim for which relief can be granted, the court must consider the complaint in its entirety, accepting all factual allegations in the complaint as true, "even if doubtful in fact," and construe all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555; Nurridin v. Bolden, 818 F.3d 751, 756, 422 U.S. App. D.C. 83 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (per curiam) ("We assume the truth of all well-pleaded factual allegations and construe reasonable inferences from those allegations in the plaintiff's favor.") (citing Sissel v. United States HHS, 760 F.3d 1, 4, 411 U.S. App. D.C. 301 (D.C. Cir. 2014)). The court, however, "is not required to accept the plaintiff's legal conclusions as correct," Sissel, 760 F.3d at 4, nor is it required to "accept inferences drawn by [a] plaintiff[] if such inferences are unsupported by the facts set out in the complaint." Nurridin, 818 F.3d at 756 (alterations in original) (quoting Kowal v. MCI Communications Corp., 16 F.3d 1271, 1276, 305 U.S. App. D.C. 60 (D.C. Cir. 1994)).

III. DISCUSSION

The defendants raise, under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), several threshold issues challenging the justiciability of the plaintiff's claims, as well as the sufficiency of the plaintiff's factual allegations to support the plausibility of [**16] her claims. Specifically, the defendants argue that the Complaint must be dismissed due to: (1) the primary jurisdiction doctrine; (2) the filed-rate doctrine; and (3) operation of the applicable statute of limitations.<sup>5</sup> [*15] In addition, the defendants raise choice-of-law issues as to whether Florida, Louisiana, or District of Columbia law applies to this action.<sup>6</sup> These threshold issues—none of which warrants dismissal—are addressed, before turning to consideration of whether the plaintiff has plausibly stated a claim.

A. The Primary Jurisdiction Doctrine Does Not Bar The Instant Claims

The defendants seek a stay or dismissal of this action under the primary jurisdiction doctrine. See Defs.' Mem. at 50-51. The primary jurisdiction doctrine applies where a court has jurisdiction over a claim or set of claims, but adjudication of those claims "requires the resolution of issues which, under a regulatory scheme, have been placed within the special competence of an administrative body; in such a case the judicial process is suspended pending referral of such issues to the administrative body for its views." United States v. W. Pac. R.R. Co., 352 U.S. 59, 63-64, 77 S. Ct. 161, 1 L. Ed. 2d 126, 135 Ct. Cl. 997 (1956); see also Reiter v. Cooper, 507 U.S. 258, 268, 113 S. Ct. 1213, 122 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1993) (describing primary jurisdiction doctrine as "specifically [**17] applicable to claims properly cognizable in court that contain some issue within the special competence of an administrative agency" to which "referral" may be made, "staying further proceedings so as to give the parties reasonable opportunity to seek an administrative ruling"); Am. Ass'n of Cruise Passengers v. Cunard Line, Ltd., 31 F.3d 1184, 1186, 308 U.S. App. D.C. 177 (D.C. Cir. 1994) (explaining that the primary jurisdiction doctrine may be invoked when the agency is "best suited to make the initial decision on the issues in dispute, even though the district court has subject-matter jurisdiction"); Lawlor v. District of Columbia, 758 A.2d 964, 973 (D.C. 2000) (explaining that the primary jurisdiction doctrine "comes into play whenever enforcement of the claim requires the resolution of issues which, under a regulatory scheme, have been placed within the special competence of an administrative body" (quoting Drayton v. Poretsky Mgmt., Inc., 462 A.2d 1115, 1118 (D.C. 1983))).

<sup>5</sup> The defendants correctly frame these justiciability arguments as reasons to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), rather than as reasons to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1). See Sickle v. Torres Advanced Enter. Sols., LLC, 884 F.3d 338, 345 & n.3 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (noting that "merits-based barrier" to claims posed by preemption challenge is subject to review under Rule 12(b)(6), by contrast to jurisdictional challenge implicating the power of the forum to adjudicate the dispute, which is resolved under Rule 12(b)(1)); Sierra Club v. Jackson, 648 F.3d 848, 853, 396 U.S. App. D.C. 297 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (noting that "distinction between a claim that is not justiciable because relief cannot be granted upon it and a claim over which the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction is important," and finding justiciability challenge subject to review under Rule 12(b)(6)); see also Wilson v. EverBank, N.A., 77 F. Supp. 3d 1202, 1233 n.6 (S.D. Fla. 2015) (collecting cases holding that a motion to dismiss under the filed-rate doctrine is properly treated as part of a motion to dismiss under 12(b)(6)).

<sup>6</sup> The defendants also initially argued that the first-to-file rule favored dismissal or a stay of this case because an earlier filed, pending case in Florida asserted similar claims. See Defs.' Mem. at 28-37. That Florida case has since been voluntarily dismissed, which the defendants concede "disposes" of their first-to-file argument. See Defs.' Notice of Supp. Auth. at 2, ECF No. 25.

Noting that state regulatory agencies comprehensively regulate virtually all aspects of the Medigap market, including approval for rates and advertising, and that the plaintiff already has this mechanism for raising her concerns, the defendants urge that this case be stayed while the plaintiff pursues relief before a state regulatory agency. See Defs.' Mem. at 37. [*16] For example, in the District of Columbia, AARP's Medigap program is regulated [**18] by the District of Columbia Department of Insurance, Securities and Banking ("DISB"), pursuant to D.C. Code § 31-3701 et seq. and D.C. MUN. REGS. tit. 26-A, § 2200 et seq. UnitedHealth must file proposed rates with DISB, which reviews the rates to ensure that they are reasonable, see D.C. Code § 31-3704, and further requires at least 75% of aggregate group policy Medigap premiums to be paid toward benefit claims, see D.C. Mun. Regs. tit. 26-A, § 2212.1(a). If a Medigap policy fails to meet this loss ratio standard, insurers must rebate excess revenue. Id. §§ 2213.2, 2213.4. DISB also enforces prohibitions against misleading advertising, see id. §§ 2224.1, 2224.2, and, to this end, insurers are required to submit advertisements to DISB for review, see id., § 2223.1; D.C. Code § 31-3708. DISB also limits compensation and commission arrangements. See D.C. MUN. REGS. tit. 26-A, § 2217. The defendants suggest that due to this comprehensive regulation, primary jurisdiction rests with DISB or insurance regulators in Florida or Louisiana, rather than with this Court.

Four factors are relevant to determining whether to apply the primary jurisdiction doctrine: "(1) whether the issue is within the conventional expertise of judges; (2) whether the issue lies within the agency's discretion or requires the exercise of agency expertise; (3) whether there is a substantial danger of inconsistent rulings; [**19] and (4) whether a prior application to the agency has been made." APCC Servs., Inc. v. WorldCom, Inc., 305 F. Supp. 2d 1, 13 (D.D.C. 2001); see also United States v. Philip Morris USA Inc., 686 F.3d 832, 837, 402 U.S. App. D.C. 34 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (noting that "no fixed formula exists" but that "some principles emerge from our precedents," including a "concern for uniform outcomes," the "advantages of allowing an agency to apply its expert judgment," and whether the question is "within the particular competence of an agency" (internal alterations and citations omitted)). Consideration of these factors demonstrates that no stay is necessary to permit DISB or any other state insurance agency the first opportunity to opine on the merits of the plaintiff's instant claims.

The plaintiff has not made a prior application to DISB, or to any other state insurance agency that regulates Medigap insurance, and thus no apparent danger of inconsistent rulings between this Court and a state insurance agency is presented that, as a matter of comity, would warrant this Court abstaining. While mindful that DISB has the authority to review rates and even advertising related to Medigap insurance, and that nothing prevents a consumer troubled by the 4.95% charge from alerting DISB to her concerns rather than pursuing a nationwide class action, the mere availability of regulatory [**20] review is not sufficient reason to apply the primary jurisdiction doctrine. Simply put, DISB has no exclusive jurisdiction over the claims at issue here.

Moreover, rather than requiring agency expertise, the claims at issue here—whether advertising is deceptive or misleading, and related common law claims of conversion, unjust enrichment and fraudulent concealment—are regularly subject to judicial review and therefore fall squarely within the conventional expertise of the courts. The Supreme Court's decision in Nader v. Allegheny Airlines, 426 U.S. 290, 292, 96 S. Ct. 1978, 48 L. Ed. 2d 643 (1976), well illustrates this point. There, the Court declined the defendant's request to stay the plaintiff's common law tort suit for fraudulent misrepresentation stemming from the airline's overbooking policy and refer the claim to the Civil Aeronautics [*17] Board. Noting that the plaintiff was not challenging the airline's tariff and that the Board's authority to ban deceptive practices did not displace the tort suit, the Court held that the tort suit was "within the conventional competence of the courts, . . . the judgment of a technically expert body was not likely to be helpful in the application of the [tort] standards." Id. 304-06. See also Philip Morris USA Inc., 686 F.3d at 838 (observing that "courts consistently have refused [**21] to invoke the primary jurisdiction doctrine for 'claims based upon fraud or deceit'—claims that are "within the conventional competence of courts" (citing Dana Corp. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield Mut. of N. Ohio, 900 F.2d 882, 889 (6th Cir. 1990) and In re Long Distance Telecomms. Litig., 831 F.2d 627, 633-34 (6th Cir. 1987))). Likewise, here, the plaintiff does not directly challenge the reasonableness of the insurance rates charged and has chosen to pursue in this Court her CCPA and common law claims. These statutory and tort claims may be resolved without the need for "an informed evaluation of the economics or technology of the regulated industry." Nader, 426 U.S. at 305. Thus, the expertise vested in a specialized regulatory agency, which expertise might make the agency the preferred forum in some instances, is not necessary to resolve the claims at issue here. Accordingly, the primary jurisdiction doctrine does not bar this suit.

B. The Filed-Rate Doctrine Does Not Bar The Instant Claims

Following a brief review of the purpose and scope of the filed-rate doctrine, the defendants' arguments urging application of this doctrine are considered. The Court concludes the filed-rate doctrine does not apply here.

1. The Filed-Rate Doctrine Generally

The parties spill much ink disputing whether the judicially created filed-rate doctrine (also known as the "filed-tariff" doctrine) [**22] requires dismissal of this case. The filed-rate doctrine "forbids a regulated entity to charge rates for its services other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory entity." Ark. La. Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 (1981). The filed[-]rate doctrine has its origins in [the Supreme] Court's cases interpreting the Interstate Commerce Act ["ICA"], . . . and has been extended across the spectrum of regulated utilities." Id. (internal citations omitted). One of those originating cases was Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Railway Co., 260 U.S. 156, 43 S. Ct. 47, 67 L. Ed. 183 (1922), in which the Supreme Court rejected antitrust challenges to rates that had been filed with and approved as reasonable by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Regardless of the regulated industry involved, "[t]he considerations underlying the doctrine are preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to [e]nsure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant." Ark. La. Gas Co., 453 U.S. at 577-78 (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted). The Second Circuit has termed these interests as "two 'companion principles'—(1) preventing carriers from engaging in price discrimination as between ratepayers (the 'nondiscrimination strand') and (2) preserving the exclusive [**23] role of federal agencies in approving rates . . . that are 'reasonable' by keeping courts out of the rate-making process (the 'nonjusticiability strand')." Marcus v. AT&T Corp., 138 F.3d 46, 58 (2d Cir. 1998).

A corollary of the filed-rate doctrine is that regulatory agencies have the [*18] sole authority to decide whether rates are reasonable and "[n]o court may substitute its own judgment on reasonableness for the judgment" of the regulatory agency. Ark. La. Gas Co., 453 U.S. at 577. This principle typically has a statutory basis and has been expressed, for example, in Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) cases, due to provisions in the Natural Gas Act, 15 U.S.C. § 717c et seq., that require regulated entities to file their rates and deem such rates are lawful only if they are "just and reasonable" as determined by the Commission. See Ark. La. Gas Co., 453 U.S. at 577 ("The authority to decide whether the rates are reasonable is vested by [15 U.S.C. § 717c(a)] of the [Natural Gas] Act solely in the Commission."). In telecommunications cases, the corollary is derived from the tariff-filing provisions of the Federal Communications Act ("FCA"), 47 U.S.C. § 203(a). See Marcus, 138 F.3d at 58. In ICA cases, the corollary reflects the Interstate Commerce Commission's authority to determine that filed rates are "reasonable and non-discriminatory." See Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc., 476 U.S. 409, 411, 415, 106 S. Ct. 1922, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413 (1986) (citing Keogh, 260 U.S. at 161; 49 U.S.C. § 10101 et seq.).

In the FCA, FERC and [**24] ICA contexts, the filed-rate doctrine supports the supremacy of federal regulation over certain federal as well as state and common law claims. Thus, when plaintiffs attempt to evade the filed-rate doctrine by bringing claims seeking relief that would affect the approved rates charged by the entities subject to the regulatory regimes of the ICA, FERC or FCA, the claims have been dismissed. See, e.g., AT&T Co. v. Cent. Office Tel., Inc., 524 U.S. 214, 222, 118 S. Ct. 1956, 141 L. Ed. 2d 222 \(1998\) (stating, in the context of a case seeking to apply state law claims to a federally regulated telecommunications carrier, that "even if a carrier intentionally misrepresents its rate and a customer relies on the misrepresentation, the carrier cannot be held to the promised rate if it conflicts with the published tariff"); id. at 223-24 (refusing to hold the filed-rate doctrine inapplicable to claims regarding the "provisioning of services and billing," and noting that "[a]ny claim for excessive rates can be couched as a claim for inadequate services and vice versa" (internal quotation marks omitted)); Ark. La. Gas Co., 453 U.S. at 580 ("[W]hen [C]ongress has established an exclusive form of regulation, 'there can be no divided authority over interstate commerce.'" (quoting Missouri P. R. Co. v. Stroud, 267 U.S. 404, 408, 45 S. Ct. 243, 69 L. Ed. 683 \(1925\))); S. Union Co. v. FERC, 857 F.2d 812, 817, 273 U.S. App. D.C. 21 \(D.C. Cir. 1988\) ("[T]he preemptive effect of the [Natural Gas Act] is [**25] not . . . limited to state actions that directly and expressly relate to the price term of sale transactions. The test is instead whether state law conflicts or interferes with attainment of federal law objectives."); City of Moundridge v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 471 F. Supp. 2d 20, 45 \(D.D.C. 2007\) ("The filed[-]rate doctrine 'provides that state law, and some federal law (e.g. antitrust law), may not be used to invalidate a filed rate or to assume a rate would be charged other than the rate adopted by the federal agency in question.' . . . when 'the relief sought by plaintiff would require the court to set damages by assuming a hypothetical rate,' it violates the filed[-]rate doctrine." (internal alterations, brackets, and citations omitted)).

Notwithstanding that the filed-rate doctrine preempts "those suits that seek to alter the terms and conditions provided for in the tariff," this doctrine "does not serve as a shield against all actions based in state law." [Cent. Office \[\*19\] Tel., 524 U.S. at 229-31](#) (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring) ("The tariff does not govern . . . the entirety of the relationship between the common carrier and its customers."). Where a claim does not seek to alter the terms and conditions of a tariff, "[t]here is no direct relationship [to the filed-rate doctrine] at all and it is [**26] simply not the case that any action which might arguably and coincidentally implicate rates, much less those determined by a state, rather than a federal agency, is governed by the doctrine." Arroyo-Melecio v. Puerto Rican Am. Ins. Co., 398 F.3d 56, 73 \(1st Cir. 2005\). Similarly, in the preemption context, courts have recognized that federal regulatory regimes do not necessarily preempt state law actions prohibiting deceptive business practices, false advertisement, or common law fraud. See Marcus, 138 F.3d at 54. Indeed, "states may have an equal or greater interest in preventing [a carrier from misrepresenting the nature of its rates] as manifested by state consumer protection laws." Id.

Thus, the filed-rate doctrine operates to bar only claims, which, if successful, would undermine the critical policies underlying the filed-rate doctrine in the first place: nondiscrimination among customers and nonjusticiability as to the reasonableness of a rate. See id. at 59 ("[T]he focus for determining whether the filed[-]rate doctrine applies is the impact the court's decision will have on agency procedures and rate determinations." (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting H.J. Inc. v. Nw. Bell Tel. Co., 954 F.2d 485, 489 \(8th Cir. 1992\))). In other words, the filed-rate doctrine bars claims that would require a regulated entity to charge more or less than the [**27] rate approved by the federal regulatory authority but does not reach those claims for which the remedy would leave the regulated entity in compliance with the approved rate.

Consequently, when a claim seeks to vindicate rights or tortious harms without disturbing a properly filed rate—for example, by seeking prospective injunctive relief against the regulated entity—the filed-rate doctrine poses no obstacle. See, e.g., Square D, 476 U.S. at 417, 422 & n.28 (explaining that filed-rate doctrine barred antitrust price-fixing claims for treble damages against regulated entities for their rates fixed by ICC since "rights as defined by the tariff cannot be varied or enlarged by either contract or tort of the carrier," but injunctive antitrust actions are permitted); Marcus, 138 F.3d at 62-63 (affirming dismissal of common law fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims and state false advertising claims for damages against telecommunications company for its billing policies, because the regulated entity was required to charge the rates on file, but explaining that "a suit for injunctive relief appears not to interfere with the nondiscrimination policy underlying the filed rate doctrine"); cf. Alicke v. MCI Communs. Corp., 111 F.3d 909, 913, 324 U.S. App. D.C. 150 \(D.C. Cir. 1997\) (affirming dismissal of fraud claims against a telecommunications [**28] company on grounds other than filed-rate doctrine, without addressing "whether the district court correctly held that the filed[-]tariff doctrine bars all the claims made in the complaint. As such, we leave for another day the question whether there are any circumstances in which injunctive relief may be based upon a billing practice disclosed in a filed tariff").

Contrary to the defendants' contention, this case does not fall neatly into the body of cases in which the filed-rate doctrine has been found to apply. The plaintiff raises no challenge to the setting or reasonableness of the Medigap insurance rates, asserts no claims against the regulated entity responsible for filing, and obtaining [*20] approval for, those rates, and thus seeks no damages from a regulated entity or even a third-party that would vary or enlarge the approved rate. Instead, the plaintiff challenges the conduct of a third-party doing business with the regulated entity and seeks relief that may be awarded without any alteration in the approved premiums collected by the regulated entity. As discussed further below, and as other courts have found, this makes a difference. See, e.g., Williams v. Duke Energy Int'l, Inc., 681 F.3d 788, 796-98 \(6th Cir. 2012\) (reversing district court's holding [**29] on preclusive effect of filed-rate doctrine and holding that the doctrine is inapplicable to claims challenging "side-agreements" made by utility's affiliate for rebates to favored customers allowing those customers to pay lower rates than plaintiffs since a "ruling by this court will have no effect on the filed tariff or rate" (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)); Alston v. Countrywide Fin. Corp., 585 F.3d 753, 764-65 \(3d Cir. 2009\) (finding that "[t]he filed-rate doctrine bars suit from" plaintiffs who "think that the price they paid . . . was unfair," but not claims "alleg[ing] a violation of fair business practices through the use of illegal kickback payments" (internal citation omitted)); Alpert v. Nationstar Mortg. LLC, 243 F. Supp. 3d 1176, 1182 \(W.D. Wash. 2017\) (collecting cases challenging kickbacks and concluding that the filed-rate doctrine "will bar kickback claims as long as they upset the principles set forth in Keogh," but does not serve as a bar where the plaintiffs do not challenge the filed rates); Jackson v. Nov. 17, 2014\) (drawing a distinction between a challenge to the defendants' conduct [**30] in an alleged kickback scheme and a challenge to the rates themselves, and noting that the regulated entity's conduct with respect to third parties "is not dependent upon or made pursuant to any ratemaking authority"); Valdez v. Saxon Mortg. Servs., Inc., No. 2:14-cv-03595-CAS\(MANx\), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 182640, 2014 WL 7968109, at \*10-11 \(C.D. Cal. Sept. 29, 2014\) (same); Cannon v. Wells Fargo Bank N.A., 917 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1036-38 \(N.D. Cal. 2013\) (acknowledging contrary authority but permitting plaintiffs to maintain a lawsuit challenging kickbacks rather than the cost of insurance).

2. Assuming The Filed-Rate Doctrine Applies To State-Regulated Insurance Rates, Plaintiff's Claims Are Not Barred

At the outset, the parties do not dispute but assume, without analysis, that the filed-rate doctrine extends beyond comprehensive federal regulatory regimes, which have specific statutory provisions granting a regulatory agency some exclusivity regarding the setting of reasonable rates or tariffs as well as the constitutional underpinning of the Supremacy Clause. The Court makes the same assumption that the filed-rate doctrine applies in a case raising statelaw claims implicating state-regulated insurance rates. See In re N.J. Title Ins. Litig., No. 08-1425, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92310, 2009 WL 3233529, at \*3 \(D.N.J. Oct. 5, 2009\) (noting that "a number of courts have recognized that the filed[-]rate doctrine applies in the context of private suits challenging insurance rates approved [**31] by state regulatory agencies") (collecting cases).<sup>7</sup> [*21] The parties disagree whether the filed-rate doctrine bars the plaintiff's claims.

<sup>7</sup> The D.C. Circuit has not addressed whether the filed-rate doctrine applies to state-regulated insurance rates. Likewise, the D.C. Court of Appeals has not addressed this issue and only references the filed-rate doctrine in the context of public utilities. See, e.g., Office of People's Counsel v. D.C. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 989 A.2d 190, 193 \(D.C. 2010\); District of Columbia v. District of Columbia, PSC, 905 A.2d 249, 256-57 \(D.C. 2006\); Watergate E., Inc. v. D.C. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 662 A.2d 881, 888-89 \(D.C. 1995\). The defendants, for their part, point to no provision of District of Columbia law requiring the plaintiff to exhaust any remedies with a state insurance agency prior to filing suit. Indeed, as for the CCPA claim, the D.C. Court of Appeals has explained that the legislative history of the CCPA confirms that it "may be used even when other laws provide 'different enforcement procedures and mechanisms.'" Atwater v. D.C. Dep't of Consumer & Regulatory Affairs, 566 A.2d 462, 467 \(D.C. 1989\) (quoting Council of the District of Columbia, Comm. on Pub. Servs. & Consumer Affairs, Rep. on Bill No. 1-253, at 24 (Mar. 24, 1976)); see also Osbourne v. Capital City Mortg. Corp., 727 A.2d 322, 325 \(D.C. 1999\) ("[W]hile the CCPA is broad in the conduct it proscribes, even more important perhaps is the array of enforcement mechanisms it contains."). Cf. Alpert, 243 F.

The defendants argue that because Medigap policies are extensively regulated in each state, and because the plaintiff was charged precisely the premium filed with, and approved by, the state regulatory agencies in Florida and Louisiana, she is barred from challenging those rates except by bringing appropriate action before those state regulatory agencies. See Defs.' Mem. at 23-28. Otherwise, the defendants contend, the plaintiff would violate the nonjusticiability principle of the filed-rate doctrine because her claim attacks the rate that insurance regulators have already approved, and would violate the nondiscrimination principle because she seeks damages that, if paid, would reduce the rate below the rate on file with state regulators. Id. at 26-27 ("[B]y seeking a refund of the portion of the rate she claims is improper (i.e., the royalty), Plaintiff seeks to effectively pay a lower rate than the filed rate paid by other insureds under the Policy. That claim is exactly the type of collateral attack barred by the filed rate doctrine.").

[**32] The plaintiff counters that the filed-rate doctrine does not bar her suit because she challenges neither the setting of the rates nor their reasonableness, or even the collection by the regulated entity, UnitedHealth, of the Medigap insurance premiums. See Pl.'s Opp'n at 16-18, (acknowledging that filed-rate doctrine "generally bars suits asserting that the filed rate was unreasonable" but highlighting that "Plaintiff does not seek a refund for or challenge the appropriateness, reasonableness, or legality of the premiums UnitedHealth received for AARP Medigap coverage"). Instead, she claims damages only from the defendants' misrepresentations and deceitful tactics that prevented consumers from making informed decisions about the undisclosed and unlawful "commission" the defendants collected. Compl. ¶ 83; see also id. ¶¶ 59, 60 (quoting AARP's own executives' statements before Congress in 2011 that the royalties—what the plaintiff challenges—have "nothing to do" with premiums). In this way, the "Court is being asked to rule on the misleading and deceitful nature of Defendants' conduct when it solicits its members to purchase AARP Medigap," but is "not [being asked] to alter the rate or make a determination of the rate's reasonableness." Pl.'s Opp'n at 18. As the plaintiff points out, UnitedHealth is not a defendant in this action and would not be liable for any refund she seeks. See id.

[*22] The defendants urge wholesale rejection of the plaintiff's theory that the filed-rate doctrine is inapplicable when the plaintiff challenges only the conduct by a third-party in charging an allegedly illegal commission "to consumers on top of the premiums." Compl. ¶ 58 (emphasis omitted). The defendants point to UnitedHealth and AARP's Agreement, which expressly states that the royalty is paid out of the premium rate approved by state regulators, and to UnitedHealth's public rate filings in Florida, which indicate the same. Defs.' Mem. at 27-28. The defendants also note that, as to the claim of allegedly misleading advertising, the Florida Insurance Commissioner already has the authority to determine whether an insurance advertisement has a capacity or tendency to mislead or deceive. Id. at 26. As noted above, DISB has this authority as well. See supra Section III.A.

For the reasons that follow, this Court holds that the filed-rate [**33] doctrine cannot be used as a shield to bar review of claims predicated on fraudulent misrepresentation against a third-party doing business with a regulated entity just because those claims have some relation to filed rates for state insurance coverage. First, at the motion-to-dismiss stage, without a full record regarding the information UnitedHealth filed concerning its rates and the precise role of the payments to AARP in each state in question, concluding that this suit "seek[s] to alter the terms and conditions provided for in the tariff," Central Office Telephone, 524 U.S. at 229 (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring), would be premature. Although the defendants attached a number of exhibits to their motion to dismiss, including copies of UnitedHealth's rate filings in Louisiana and Florida (but not the District of Columbia), the defendants did not seek to, and the Court declines to, convert their dismissal motion to one for summary judgment. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d) (requiring, "[i]f, on a motion under Rule 12(b), . . . matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court," that motion "be treated as one for summary judgment under Rule 56"). Thus, the Court looks only to the plaintiff's Complaint, which alleges that consumers are not informed [**34] that expenses charged to them as part of a premium include a 4.95% royalty UnitedHealth is contractually obligated to pay AARP. Importantly, the plaintiff does not seek to "enforce agreements to provide services on terms different from those listed in the tariff," which "is all that the tariff governs," Central Office Telephone, 524 U.S. at 229, but rather to hold AARP responsible for violating state laws banning unfair and deceptive trade practices and related common law claims, see *id. at 230* (the filed-rate doctrine "does not affect whatever duties state law might impose" on the regulated entity).

Second, the plaintiff's claims focus on her relationship with AARP and its affiliates, not with UnitedHealth, the regulated entity responsible for filing rates. This fact underscores that the plaintiff challenges behavior independent of the terms and conditions of the filed rate. The plaintiff alleges that, through unfair and deceptive trade practices, the defendants collect and retain a commission to which they are not legally entitled. Should the plaintiff prevail on these claims to require AARP to stop collecting that "commission" on extant terms, no change to UnitedHealth's rates would necessarily follow. Indeed, nothing about the plaintiff's [\[\*\*35\]](#) claims against AARP and its affiliates prevents UnitedHealth from continuing to collect precisely the approved rates. Any follow-on disruption to UnitedHealth and AARP's side agreement regarding the "royalty" [\[\*23\]](#) payment and whether, as a result of this disruption, UnitedHealth will decide to change the rates filed going forward is irrelevant to an analysis of whether the filed-rate doctrine bars plaintiff's claims against AARP now. As the Second Circuit held, "the focus for determining whether the filed[-]rate doctrine applies is the impact the court's decision will have on agency procedures and rate determinations." *Marcus, 138 F.3d at 59* (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also *Medco Energi US, L.L.C. v. Sea Robin Pipeline Co., L.L.C.*, 729 F.3d 394, 399 \(5th Cir. 2013\) (per curiam) (explaining that filed-rate cases "ask this question: when the plaintiff's claims—at least on their face—do not attempt to challenge a filed rate, do the claims implicate the parties' rights and liabilities under that rate?") (internal quotation marks, alterations, and citation omitted). Any decision that AARP's advertising practices violate District of Columbia consumer protection laws or related common law claims has no effect on agency procedures and rate determinations and does not affect plaintiff [\[\*\*36\]](#) or UnitedHealth's rights and liabilities under that rate. Therefore, the filed-rate doctrine is not implicated.

A recent case, challenging as unlawful the commissions paid by a telephone service provider to a Sheriff's Office for inmate telephone calls when state law allegedly did not authorize such commission payments, illustrates why the plaintiff's claims here are independent of a challenge to the rates UnitedHealth files. In *Pearson v. Hodgson*, the Court held that the filed-rate doctrine posed no bar to the plaintiffs' claim that the telephone provider's commission payments violated state law and helped the Sheriff's Office to "circumvent state law." *No. 18-cv-11130-IT, 363 F. Supp. 3d 197, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 214338, 2018 WL 6697682, at \*9 \(D. Mass. Dec. 20, 2018\)*. The court reasoned that the claim "stands independent of any challenges to the specific rates charged," id., and "is enough to survive a motion to dismiss," id. Acknowledging that parts of the complaint "may implicate the cost of" the inmate call services, id., the Pearson Court nonetheless found that the plaintiffs were not "alleging that a contractual rate . . . differed from the [filed] rates," id., but only that "what [the telephone provider] is doing with the revenue that it receives from the telephone calls" [\[\*\*37\]](#) may violate state law, "and the filed[-]rate doctrine does not shield [the telephone provider] from claims of unfair or deceptive acts relating to their use of these funds," id.

Just as the Pearson Court reasoned that challenging allegedly unfair and deceptive practices in payments by the provider to the Sheriff's Office of unlawful commissions was "independent of any challenges to the specific rates charged," id., so too here: so long as the claims challenge the deceptive and misleading statements and acts concerning the collection of allegedly unlawful payments, without seeking any change to the rate—and where the rate-filer is not even a defendant—the filed-rate doctrine is no obstacle.<sup>8</sup>

Although the defendants rely on several decisions from the Second, Fifth and Eleventh Circuits that have applied the filed-rate doctrine to bar actions for common law fraud or claims seeking relief under state consumer protection statutes, those cases are distinguishable on their facts. See Defs.' Mem. at 23-28 (citing [*Medco F\*241 Energi, 729 F.3d 394; Hill v. BellSouth Telecomms., Inc.*, 364 F.3d 1308, 1315 \(11th Cir. 2004\); Marcus, 138 F.3d 46; Wegoland Ltd. v. <sup>8</sup> Indeed, on Pearson's logic, which allowed a suit against the regulated entity, even a suit against UnitedHealth might withstand the filed-rate doctrine so long as the plaintiff challenged not the rates, but the unlawful allocation of funds. The Court need not decide this issue, however, as UnitedHealth is not a defendant in the instant action.

The defendants rely in particular on Patel, where the Eleventh Circuit held that [**38] the filed-rate doctrine barred the plaintiffs' state and federal claims, including for breach of contract, tortious interference, and unjust enrichment, against a regulated insurance company and mortgage service providers, which had an exclusive arrangement to place the insurance company's hazard insurance. Patel, 904 F.3d at 1317. In that case, the plaintiffs expressly challenged the premium insurance rates they were charged for hazard insurance required to be maintained on real property securing the plaintiffs' mortgage loans ("force-placed insurance"), which premiums were allegedly "artificially inflated" to cover the cost of the insurance company's alleged "kickback" to mortgage loan servicers. Id. at 1317, 1326. In reaching this conclusion, the Eleventh Circuit focused on "[t]he most obvious basis," id. at 1325, namely, "the fact that the plaintiffs repeatedly state that they are challenging [the insurance company's] premiums," id. at 1325-26, using language targeting "artificially inflated premiums," "unreasonably high force-placed insurance premiums," and "amounts charged for insurance coverage," id. at 1326, such that "[t]he plain language of the complaints therefore shows that the plaintiffs are challenging the reasonableness of [the insurance company's] [**39] premiums; and since these premiums are based upon rates filed with state regulators, plaintiffs are directly attacking those rates as being unreasonable as well," id. The court described these claims "directly challenging the rates ... filed with state regulators" as "textbook examples of the sort of claims that we have previously held are barred by the nonjusticiability principle." Id.

The other circuit cases on which the defendants rely are distinguishable from the plaintiff's claims for precisely the reason Patel is: in each case, the plaintiffs directly challenged the filed rate. See e.g., Medco, 729 F.3d at 399 (concluding that the plaintiff's claim against regulated entity for "misrepresentation about repair times, though 'extra-contractual,' involve the specific subject matter of the tariff [concerning interruptible pipeline service]"); Hill, 364 F.3d at 1316-17 (holding that misrepresentation claims against a telecommunications provider for not disclosing that it passed a federally required fee through to consumers as part of its filed rate "in effect" challenged the rate because it "seeks recovery of [the] . . . undisclosed charges" and damages would therefore reduce the filed rate (internal quotation marks and citation [**40] omitted)); Marcus, 138 F.3d at 59-62 (holding that the filed-rate doctrine prohibited false advertising claims for damages against telecommunications provider for its practice of "rounding up" the length of a long-distance call because any damages would have the effect of reducing the rate); Wegoland, 27 F.3d at 20-21 (concluding that the filed-rate doctrine blocked common law fraud claims against a telecommunications carrier that provided regulating agencies with misleading information in seeking approval of its rate, because in calculating damages the court would have to determine what the reasonable rate would have been absent the fraud).

By contrast to Patel and the other circuit cases on which the defendants rely, the Complaint at issue does not challenge the amount of the Medigap insurance rate [**25] or the amount collected by the insurance provider that has been approved by state insurance agencies. The focus of the plaintiff's claims is not the approved rate but AARP's description and practices related to the payments collected by AARP from each premium paid. The crafting of the claims here carefully avoids any direct criticism of the approved Medigap rates, as well as skipping any direct claims against the insurance provider. This [**41] makes a difference since, again, this suit against AARP targets not the insurance premiums but the disclosures about the defendants' side agreement with a regulated entity and, if successful, does not alter the rate the regulated entity is entitled to charge.

This is not the first case to raise the question whether the filed-rate doctrine bars state consumer protection or common law fraud claims against AARP and/or UnitedHealth for the same 4.95% "royalty" charge at issue here. Those courts to address this issue have reached different outcomes, but closer scrutiny shows this is due to differences in the claims asserted. The defendants highlight that district courts in Texas and New York have held that the filed-rate doctrine barred state law claims regarding the 4.95% charge. Defs.' Mem. at 19 (citing Peacock v. AARP, Inc., 181 F. Supp. 3d 430, 441 (S.D. Tex. 2016); Roussin v. AARP, Inc., 664 F. Supp. 2d 412, 415-19 (S.D.N.Y. 2009), aff'd, 379 F. App'x 30 (2d Cir. 2010) (summary order)). District courts in California and New Jersey have rejected this position. See Bloom v. AARP, Inc., No. 18-cv-2788-MCA-MAH (D.N.J. Nov. 30, 2018), Order at

2-4, ECF No. 40; *Levay v. AARP, Inc., No. 17-09041 DDP (PLAx), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116585, 2018 WL 3425014, at *7 (C.D. Cal. July 12, 2018)*; Friedman v. AARP, Inc., 283 F. Supp. 3d 873, 877-79 (C.D. Cal. 2018).<sup>9</sup>

The reasoning of the two [**42] courts that have applied the filed-rate doctrine to bar claims regarding the 4.95% charge is neither binding nor persuasive given the differences in the claims here. In Peacock, for example, the plaintiffs "flatly allege[d] that the rates are illegal," 181 F. Supp. 3d at 440, and asserted claims that "attack[ed] the legality vel non of the rates charged by [AARP and UnitedHealth] for group insurance," id. at 441. The Peacock Court therefore had no trouble concluding that this direct attack on the filed rates was barred by the filed-rate doctrine. Id. This reasoning is easily distinguishable since the instant suit is not filed against UnitedHealth and does not challenge the legality of the approved rates charged by UnitedHealth. Rather, the plaintiff's claims challenge AARP's practices and disclosures regarding the defendants' retention of a portion of the rates UnitedHealth filed.

Roussin similarly sheds little light on the filed-rate doctrine's application to the instant claims. Although the plaintiff in Roussin sued only AARP and its affiliates, and not UnitedHealth, her suit directly attacked the reasonableness of the filed [*26] rates by arguing that the defendants had "failed to fulfill their fiduciary duties to keep [**43] insurance premiums reasonable," 664 F. Supp. 2d at 414 (internal quotation marks omitted), a claim the court concluded "at base, challeng[ed] the reasonableness of the cost of her AARP-sponsored health insurance rates," id. at 415, and would require the court to determine whether the rates were reasonable as a predicate to assessing AARP's breach of any duty to the plaintiff, see id. at 417, 419. No such determination about the reasonableness of the Medigap insurance rate is necessary here. For these reasons, Peacock and Roussin are inapposite.

By contrast, the district courts in New Jersey and California, which rejected application of the filed-rate doctrine to bar claims challenging the 4.95% charge under state consumer protection laws, are more closely analogous to the instant suit. In Bloom, the plaintiff sued both AARP and UnitedHealth and their affiliates for failing to disclose, and for false and misleading material statements about, UnitedHealth's payment of the 4.95% commission to AARP. The court found that "'the filed[-]rate doctrine simply does not apply' where a Plaintiff challenges 'allegedly wrongful conduct, not the reasonableness or propriety of the rate that triggered that conduct.'" Bloom, No. 18-cv-2788, Order at 2 [**44] (quoting Alston, 585 F.3d at 765).

Similarly, the plaintiffs in Levay and Friedman were not barred from pursuing unfair business practices and false advertising claims against both AARP and UnitedHealth because the claims were "essentially about false or misleading advertising, and not challenges to the reasonableness of the actual rates that were approved by the [state department of insurance]," Levay, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116585, 2018 WL 3425014, at \*7, and were "more akin to challenges to Defendants' alleged misrepresentations, rather than challenges to the approved rate, or challenges to whether the rate is reasonable in light of the statutorily prescribed loss ratios for Medigap insurance," Friedman, 283 F. Supp. 3d at 878 (footnote omitted).

The Levay Court further explained that the theory of injury did "not concern the price of the insurance policy per se," but was that "consumers were 'duped' into joining AARP and paying membership fees in order to access the AARP-branded policies from UnitedHealth," without being told that AARP made "a commission on each sale" and had this ulterior motive to recommend the policies. See Levay, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116585, 2018 WL 3425014, at \*5. As such, the Levay Court concluded that the state insurance agency's "rate determination is different from what is at issue here—whether the lender mischaracterized [**45] the nature of the charges. . . . [u]nder this theory of recovery, the adjudication of Plaintiffs' claims would not improperly encroach on . . . rate-making authority." [2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116585, \[WL\] at \*7](#) (internal quotation marks, alterations, and citation omitted). The Friedman Court similarly reasoned that "the gravamen of the complaint is not the premium rate per se, but the failure to disclose the allegedly fraudulent nature of the commission charged to borrowers," such that the challenged payments "appear to fall outside of the scope of the . . . regulatory approval of rates," and the filed-rate doctrine. 283 F. Supp. 3d at 878-79 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

<sup>9</sup> AARP and UnitedHealth have sought dismissal due, inter alia, to the filed-rate doctrine in other cases challenging the 4.95% charge, but those dismissal motions remain pending. See, e.g., Dane v. Unitedhealthcare Ins. Co., No. 18-cv-792-SRU (D. Conn.); Christoph v. AARP, Inc., No. 18-cv-3453-NIQA (E.D. Pa.). In addition, other similar cases have been dismissed voluntarily without a decision on the merits. See, e.g., Sacco v. AARP, Inc., No. 18-cv-14041-JEM (S.D. Fla. Jan. 23, 2019), Stipulation of Dismissal, ECF No. 89 (a putative class action filed on behalf of Florida residents against AARP and UnitedHealth and raising Florida law claims was stayed by the Southern District court of Florida and then voluntarily dismissed upon the Eleventh Circuit's denial of a petition for rehearing in Patel); Baruch v. AARP, Inc., No. 18-cv-1563-AJN (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 26, 2018), Notice of Voluntary Dismissal, ECF No. 30 (a putative class action filed on behalf of New York residents raising New York state claims against AARP and UnitedHealth).

Just as in Bloom, Levay and Friedman, the plaintiff's state law claims against AARP and its affiliates regarding AARP's allegedly deceptive conduct and unfair business practices are independent of any approved rates UnitedHealth filed in the District of Columbia, or any other state. Thus, resolution of these claims about whether the plaintiff was deceived by and injured by the defendants' false representations [*27] concerning the 4.95% charge, or its incorporation as part of the premiums on file, does not necessitate any determination about the reasonableness of the [**46] rate.

Accordingly, the filed-rate doctrine does not bar the plaintiff's claims.

C. Choice of Law

The defendants contend that because the plaintiff originally purchased a Medigap policy in 2012 when she resided in Louisiana, and later renewed that coverage while residing in Florida, either Louisiana or Florida law should apply. Defs.' Mem. at 17 n.3, 28. The plaintiff seeks application of District of Columbia law. Pl.'s Opp'n at 22-28. The Court agrees that District of Columbia law applies, though without agreeing with all of the plaintiff's reasoning.

The plaintiff first submits that her claims must be considered under District of Columbia law due to a provision in the group policy indicating as much. See Compl. ¶ 22 (quoting the Certificate of Insurance as stating that AARP "issued the Group Policy in the District of Columbia. . . . [and] [i]t provides insurance for AARP members and is governed by the laws of the District of Columbia"); Pl.'s Opp'n at 22-24. The defendants argue persuasively, however, that this provision only governs contractual claims related to the insurance policy and does not apply to the tort claims alleged here. See Defs.' Mem. at 32 n.9; Defs.' Reply at 23. The [**47] Court agrees that the contractual choice-of-law provision does not necessarily bind parties with respect to non-contractual causes of action, such as those asserted here. See Base One Techs., Inc. v. Ali, 78 F. Supp. 3d 186, 192 \(D.D.C. 2015\) (noting that contractual choice-of-law provisions do not bind parties with respect to tort actions) (citing Minebea Co., Ltd. v. Papst, 377 F. Supp. 2d 34, 38-39 \(D.D.C. 2005\)). Nevertheless, under a choice-of-law analysis, the plaintiff prevails on the issue of which state's law governs this action.

When exercising diversity jurisdiction, the choice-of-law rules of the forum apply. Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg. Co., 313 U.S. 487, 496, 61 S. Ct. 1020, 85 L. Ed. 1477 \(1941\); Shaw v. Marriott Int'l, Inc., 605 F.3d 1039, 1045, 390 U.S. App. D.C. 422 \(D.C. Cir. 2010\). Under District of Columbia law, the first step in a choice-of-law analysis is determining "whether a 'true conflict' exists between the laws of the [competing] jurisdictions—that is, whether more than one jurisdiction has a potential interest in having its law applied and, if so, whether the law of the competing jurisdictions is different." In re APA Assessment Fee Litig., 766 F.3d 39, 51-52, 412 U.S. App. D.C. 324 \(D.C. Cir. 2014\) (citing GEICO v. Fetisoff, 958 F.2d 1137, 1141, 294 U.S. App. D.C. 279 \(D.C. Cir. 1992\); Fowler v. A & A Co., 262 A.2d 344, 348 \(D.C. 1970\)). If there is no conflict, the law of the District of Columbia applies by default. See Estate of Doe v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 808 F. Supp. 2d 1, 20-21 \(D.D.C. 2011\). If a conflict does exist, courts must employ a "modified governmental interests analysis which seeks to identify the jurisdiction with the most significant relationship to the dispute." Washkoviak v. Sallie Mae, 900 A.2d 168, 180 \(D.C. 2006\) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Oveissi v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 573 F.3d 835, 842, 387 U.S. App. D.C. 366 \(D.C. Cir. 2009\) ("District of [**48] Columbia courts blend a 'governmental interests analysis' with a 'most significant relationship' test." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)). The Court addresses each of these issues seriatim.

1. Florida and Louisiana Law Conflicts With District of Columbia Law

"A conflict of laws does not exist when the laws of the different jurisdictions [*28] are identical or would produce the identical result on the facts presented." USA Waste of Md., Inc. v. Love, 954 A.2d 1027, 1032 \(D.C. 2008\) (footnote omitted). On the other hand, a conflict may be found when two jurisdictions have different applicable laws, which would result in different outcomes. See id. In this case, the defendants argue vigorously that if the plaintiff were to litigate her claims under Florida law or Louisiana law, the outcome of this case would be different because her claims would be barred by the filed-rate doctrine. Defs.' Reply at 10-11 (citing Patel, 904 F.3d at 1320, 1326 \(Florida law\)); Defs.' Mem. at 27 n.8 (citing Medco Energi, U.S., LLC v. Sea Robin Pipeline Co., 895 F. Supp. 2d 794, 816 \(W.D. La. 2012\), aff'd, 729 F.3d 394 \(\(Louisiana law\)\)). The plaintiff appears to concede a conflict with Louisiana law, while suggesting her claim is distinguishable from Florida-law claims barred by the filed-rate doctrine because UnitedHealth is not a defendant in the action. See Pl.'s Opp'n at 18 & n.5.<sup>10</sup> No matter. Even assuming a demonstrated [*49] conflict among the laws of these three jurisdictions, consideration of the "governmental interest" and "significant relationship" tests confirms that the plaintiff's claims are governed by District of Columbia law.

2. Governmental Interest Test Favors Application of District of Columbia Law

The governmental interest analysis requires a court to "evaluate the governmental policies underlying the applicable laws and determine which jurisdiction's policy would be most advanced by having its law applied to the facts of the case under review." Oveissi, 573 F.3d at 842 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The defendants point out that Florida and Louisiana have comprehensive regulatory schemes for Medigap insurance and therefore have a strong governmental interest in having their laws applied. See Defs.' Mem. at 30-32. Moreover, they contend that Florida and Louisiana's interests outweigh the interests of the District of Columbia because the defendants' "place of business bears no meaningful connection to claims regarding a Louisiana and Florida resident who purchased Louisiana-and Florida-regulated insurance." Id. at 31-32.

The plaintiff counters that the most heavily weighted factor is the place of the [*50] conduct causing injury, which "favors the District of Columbia because that is where AARP devised its scheme, prepared and approved of the marketing materials, entered into the Agreement with UnitedHealth, and where AARP Trust skimmed off 4.95% of Plaintiff's Medigap payments and forwarded it to AARP and ASI." Pl.'s Opp'n at 25-26. The plaintiffs' argument, based on the nature of the claims here, is more persuasive.

The plaintiff is seeking to vindicate her own rights, and the rights of those similarly situated under the District of Columbia's CCPA. For CCPA claims, "[t]he District of Columbia has an interest in protecting its own citizens from being victimized by unfair trade practices and an interest in regulating the conduct of its business entities." Shaw, 605 F.3d at 1045 (emphasis added). Indeed, the CCPA is not limited in its application to consumers or companies who are residents of the District, so the plaintiff's residence in Florida or previous residence in Louisiana does not prevent her from stating a claim under the CCPA. See D.C. Code § 28-3904 [*29] (it is a violation of the CCPA for any "person" to engage in deceptive trade practices); see also Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 180-83 (allowing non-residents to bring claims under the CCPA and claims under [*51] District of Columbia common law). Even if Florida or Louisiana have an equal interest as the District of Columbia in applying their own laws, in such a situation the law of the forum state should apply. See Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 182 (citing Logan v. Providence Hosp. Inc., 778 A.2d 275, 278 \(D.C. 2001\)). Thus, the District of Columbia has a strong governmental interest in the application of the CCPA in this case.

3. The Significant Relationship Test Favors Application of D.C. Law

<sup>10</sup> Notably, the plaintiff made this argument before the Eleventh Circuit issued its opinion in Patel, holding that the filed-rate doctrine applies when an intermediary passes the cost of regulator-approved rates on to a third party. See 904 F.3d at 1322.

When evaluating which jurisdiction has the "most significant relationship" to the case, courts in the District of Columbia "must consider the factors enumerated in the RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 145, which are: (1) the place where the injury occurred; (2) the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred; (3) the domicile, residence, nationality, place of incorporation, and place of business of the parties; and (4) the place where the relationship, if any, between the parties is centered." Oveissi, 573 F.3d at 842 (internal quotation marks, alterations, and citations omitted); Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 180.<sup>11</sup> The weighing of these four factors demonstrates that the District of Columbia has a more significant relationship to the plaintiff's misrepresentation and deceptive advertising claims, as well as the common law claims based on the same set of facts.

a. The Place of Injury

The first factor requires the Court to consider the place where the injury to [*30] the plaintiff occurred. In a typical misrepresentation case, the injury occurs where the plaintiff "received the alleged misrepresentations and made their payments." Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 181. In this case, the plaintiff alleges that the defendants violated the CCPA by falsely advertising and misrepresenting the source and purpose of the 4.95% charge. The parties agree that the place of the plaintiff's injury for her misrepresentation claims are Florida or Louisiana, where she "received the alleged misrepresentations," Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 181. See Pl.'s Opp'n at 25; Defs.' Mem. at 30-31.

Yet, according to the Restatement and the D.C. Court of Appeals, "the place of injury is less significant in the case of fraudulent misrepresentations" than "in the case of personal injuries and of injuries to tangible things." Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 181-82 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted) (stating that there was a "discounted value of the place of injury in cases . . . involving claims of misrepresentation"); see also RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 145 cmt. f ("[T]he place of injury is less significant in the case of fraudulent misrepresentations and of such [**53] unfair competition as consists of false advertising and the misappropriation of trade values.") (internal citation omitted). Accordingly, although this factor weighs in favor of applying Florida or Louisiana law, the significance of this result is diminished because of the nature of the claims.

b. The Place Where the Conduct Causing the Injury Occurred

<sup>11</sup> In reply, the defendants suggest that Section 148 of the Second Restatement concerning "fraud and misrepresentation," should be applied here rather than Section 145. See Defs.' Reply at 21-22. While the D.C. Court of Appeals has previously looked to Section 148 as a "useful framework for selecting the law which applies to multi-state misrepresentation claims," Hercules & Co., Ltd. v. Shama Restaurant Corp., 566 A.2d 31, 43 (D.C. 1989), more recent cases primarily look to Section 145, see Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 182 n.18 (relying on Section 145 but noting the result would be no different under Section 148); Jones v. Clinch, 73 A.3d 80, 82 (D.C. 2013) (citing Hercules but nonetheless relying on Section 145 when analyzing a CCPA claim alleging misrepresentation); see [**52] also In re APA Assessment Fee Litig., 766 F.3d at 53-55 (following Washkoviak and conducting an analysis of choice of law for misrepresentation claims under Section 145, but concluding there would be no difference if the question were considered under Section 148); Margolis v. U-Haul Int'l, Inc., 818 F. Supp. 2d 91, 102 n.7 (D.D.C. 2011) (pointing to counsel's concession that "there is no case under the CCPA in the Superior Courts or in federal court that has ever applied [Section] 148") (internal alteration and quotation marks omitted); Mobile Satellite Commun's, Inc. v. Intelsat USA Sales Corp., 646 F. Supp. 2d 124, 130 (D.D.C. 2009) (noting that the D.C. Court of Appeals "has applied [Section] 145 even in cases of fraudulent misrepresentation," and citing both Washkoviak and Hercules). Given this background, the Court concludes that Section 145 provides the appropriate framework. The plaintiff's motion for leave to submit a surreply to address this argument (among others) is therefore unnecessary. See Pl.'s Mot. for Leave to File Surreply, ECF No. 17. Further, as the defendants note, see Defs.' Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. for Leave to File Surreply at 4, ECF No. 18, the plaintiff has failed to attach her proposed surreply for the Court's consideration. See id. (citing Glass v. Lahood, 786 F. Supp. 2d 189, 231 (D.D.C. 2011) (in which the plaintiff submitted her proposed surreply so that the Court could evaluate whether it was warranted); Crummey v. Soc. Sec. Admin., 794 F. Supp. 2d 46, 54, 63-64 (D.D.C. 2011) (same)). Therefore, the plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File a Surreply is denied as both defective and unnecessary, since the issues the plaintiff seeks to address would not aid in the Court's resolution of the pending motion to dismiss.

The second factor in the choice-of-law analysis requires assessment of where the conduct causing the injury occurred. According to the Restatement, as previously discussed, "the place of injury does not play so important a role for choice-of-law purposes in the case of false advertising. . . . Instead, the principal location of the defendant's conduct is the contact that will usually be given the greatest weight." RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 145 cmt. f. See also Margolis, 818 F. Supp. 2d at 102-03 (quoting Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 181-82 for the proposition that the place of injury has a "discounted value" in cases involving claims of misrepresentation).

Likewise, in cases alleging a misrepresentation, the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred is the place where the defendant has its principal place of business and sets its policies and practices. See Wu v. Stomber, 750 F.3d 944, 949, 409 U.S. App. D.C. 448 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (Kavanaugh, J.) (holding that the "conduct causing the injury" occurred in [**54] the location of the defendant's principal place of business); Restatement (Second) Of Conflict Of Laws § 145 cmt. e (where the conduct occurred will usually be given particular weight when the place of injury "can be said to be fortuitous or when for other reasons it bears little relation to the occurrence and the parties with respect to the particular issue. . . . such as in the case of fraud and misrepresentation"). The defendants do not dispute that they set their practices and policies in the District of Columbia, where AARP is headquartered and where each of the AARP affiliates has its primary place of business. As a result, this second factor favors the application of District of Columbia law.

c. The Residence, Place of Incorporation, and Place of Business of the Parties

The third factor of the choice-of-law analysis focuses on the residency of the parties in the case. At the time she purchased AARP's Medigap policies, the plaintiff was a resident either of Louisiana or of Florida. See Pl.'s Opp'n at 25. The [*31] defendants AARP, AARP Trust, and ASI are all incorporated, headquartered, and maintain their primary place of business in the District of Columbia. Id. at 26 (citing Compl. ¶¶ 21-23). As already noted, the District of Columbia has an [**55] interest in regulating the conduct of businesses incorporated there. See Shaw, 605 F.3d at 1045. Although the states of Florida and Louisiana may have an interest in regulating insurance companies within their states, AARP is not such an insurance company. Moreover, to the extent those other states have an interest in regulating third-parties involved in the sale of insurance policies within their states, those interests are less than that third-party's place of incorporation and place of business. In any event, where interests may be equal, the forum state's law applies. See Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 182. Consideration of this factor thus favors application of District of Columbia law.

d. Where the Relationship Between the Parties is Centered

The fourth Restatement factor instructs the Court to determine where the relationship between the parties is centered. The defendants suggest that because Medigap policies are subject to state regulation, the plaintiff's relationship to the defendants was centered in Louisiana, where she originally purchased her Medigap policy, and Florida, where she renewed it. See Defs.' Mem. at 31. The plaintiff counters that the fourth factor "clearly favors the District of Columbia above any other jurisdiction [**56] [because] (1) the AARP membership organization is located in the District of Columbia and AARP membership is a requirement for purchasing Medigap insurance policies; (2) AARP's decision to market AARP Medigap Policies to AARP members emanated from the District of Columbia; and (3) it is where AARP Trust segregates Plaintiff's money, forwarding her premiums to UnitedHealth and diverting 4.95% to AARP and ASI." Pl.'s Opp'n at 26 (citing Compl. ¶¶ 22, 23, 71).

In this action, where the gravamen of the plaintiff's complaint is misrepresentation and false advertising, the Court agrees that the plaintiff's relationship with the defendants is centered in the District of Columbia, where the defendants have their primary place of business and where they make their policies and practices regarding advertising.

4. District of Columbia Law Is Applied

Having considered both the governmental interest analysis and the significant relationship test, informed by the four factors outlined by Section 145 of the Second Restatement, the Court concludes that District of Columbia law should govern this dispute. The place of the plaintiff's alleged injury due to the defendants' alleged misrepresentations and failure to [\[\*\*57\]](#) disclose certain information occurred in Louisiana or Florida, but the alleged misconduct emanated from District of Columbia, where the defendants are headquartered and have their primary place of business. As the plaintiff alleges, "AARP formulated and conceived its role in the scheme largely in the District of Columbia, directed the scheme complained of . . . from the District of Columbia, and its communications and other efforts to execute the scheme largely emanated from the District of Columbia. . . . [including] AARP's decision to market AARP Medigap policies to AARP members, its policies and practices relating to AARP Medigap Policies, including the . . . decision to collect the 4.95% commission." Compl. ¶¶ 70-71. In light of the fact that this case involves allegations of misrepresentation, for which the place of the alleged injury is [\[\*32\]](#) less important than in other tort cases, see In re APA Assessment Fee Litig., 766 F.3d at 54 (citing Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 182), bolstered by the District of Columbia's interest in regulating companies incorporated under its laws, District of Columbia law will be applied to the instant claims.

D. Statutes of Limitations

The defendants raise yet another threshold issue: namely, that the plaintiff filed the instant Complaint [\[\*\*58\]](#) outside of the statute of limitations under both Louisiana and District of Columbia law, since she first purchased her Medigap policy in 2012. See Defs.' Mem. at 37-38. The plaintiff counters that she last renewed her policy in November 2016, within the District of Columbia's three-year statute of limitations for the filing of her Complaint in 2018, and in any event her claim should be allowed under either a "continuing tort" or "fraudulent concealment" theory. See Pl.'s Opp'n at 32-34 & n.17. For the following reasons, the Court declines, at this stage, to dismiss the Complaint as untimely.

A defendant may raise a statute of limitations defense "in a pre-answer motion under . . . Rule 12\(b\)." Smith-Haynie v. District of Columbia, 155 F.3d 575, 577, 332 U.S. App. D.C. 182 \(D.C. Cir. 1998\). The D.C. Circuit has "repeatedly held," however, that "courts should hesitate to dismiss a complaint on statute of limitations grounds based solely on the fact of the complaint." Firestone v. Firestone, 76 F.3d 1205, 1209, 316 U.S. App. D.C. 152 \(D.C. Cir. 1996\) (per curiam). "[S]tatute of limitations issues often depend on contested questions of fact, [so] dismissal is appropriate only if the complaint on its face is conclusively time-barred." Bregman v. Perles, 747 F.3d 873, 875, 409 U.S. App. D.C. 143 \(D.C. Cir. 2014\) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting de Csepel v. Republic of Hungary, 714 F.3d 591, 603, 404 U.S. App. D.C. 358 \(D.C. Cir. 2013\)).

Under District of Columbia law, the plaintiff must bring her CCPA and related common [\[\*\*59\]](#) law claims within three years from the time when her right to maintain the action accrued. See D.C. Code § 12-301\(8\); Comer v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 108 A.3d 364, 369 n.7 \(D.C. 2015\). A claim accrues when the plaintiff has "either 'actual notice of her cause of action' or is deemed to be on 'inquiry notice' by failing to 'act reasonably under the circumstances in investigating matters affecting her affairs, where 'such an investigation, if conducted, would have led to actual notice.'" Medhin v. Hailu, 26 A.3d 307, 310 \(D.C. 2011\) (quoting Harris v. Ladner, 828 A.2d 203, 205-06 \(D.C. 2003\)). "[W]hat constitutes the accrual of a cause of action is a question of law; the actual date of accrual, however, is a question of fact." Medhin, 26 A.3d at 310 (internal alteration, quotation marks, and citation omitted). Moreover "[w]hat is 'reasonable under the circumstances' is a highly factual analysis. The relevant circumstances include, but are not limited to, the conduct and misrepresentations of the defendant, and the reasonableness of the plaintiff's reliance on the defendant's conduct and misrepresentations." Diamond v. Davis, 680 A.2d 364, 372 \(D.C. 1996\).

Related to the assessment of the reasonableness of reliance, the District of Columbia recognizes a "discovery rule" that operates to trigger the accrual date for the limitations period upon discovery of the injury when the alleged tortious conduct obscures when the injury occurred. [\[\*60\]](#) See Hughes v. Abell, 794 F. Supp. 2d 1, 12 \(D.D.C. 2010\). Under this rule, a cause of action accrues "when one knows or by the exercise of reasonable diligence should know (1) of the injury, (2) its cause in fact, and (3) of some evidence of wrongdoing." [\[\*33\]](#) Id. (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Morton v. Nat'l Med. Enters., Inc., 725 A.2d 462, 468 (D.C. 1999)). "[W]hen one person defrauds another, there will be a delay between the time the fraud is perpetrated and the time the victim awakens to that fact." In re Estate of Delaney, 819 A.2d 968, 981 (D.C. 2003) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

Relatedly, the District of Columbia also recognizes a "continuing tort doctrine," which allows a plaintiff to recover for harms that would otherwise be time barred when she suffers "(1) a continuous and repetitious wrong, (2) with damages flowing from the act as a whole rather than from each individual act, and (3) at least one injurious act . . . within the limitation period." Beard v. Edmondson & Gallagher, 790 A.2d 541, 547-48 (D.C. 2002) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). This doctrine may apply when the claimed "injury might not have come about but for the entire course of conduct." Pleznac v. Equity Residential Mgmt., L.L.C., 320 F. Supp. 3d 99, 104 (D.D.C. 2018) (internal quotation marks and emphasis omitted) (quoting John McShain, Inc. v. L'Enfant Plaza Props., Inc., 402 A.2d 1222, 1231 n.20 (D.C. 1979)).

As to this latter theory, the defendants argue that the continuing tort doctrine is inapplicable to a situation where the plaintiff makes a series [**61] of periodic payments, all stemming from an initial wrong outside of the limitations period, relying heavily on Pleznac, a case that is not binding on this Court. Defs.' Reply at 15-16 (citing Pleznac). The plaintiff in Pleznac alleged that she was fraudulently induced into signing a lease and that the renewal of that lease, occurring within the statute of limitations period, allowed her to bring a claim for the initial fraud. Pleznac, 320 F. Supp. 3d at 105-06. The Court rejected that argument, but held open the possibility that a plaintiff in a similar situation could "seek[] relief based on . . . subsequent lease renewals. . . . [because] [i]t could theoretically be the case that the renewals were independent acts of deception rather than mere injuries flowing from the initial misrepresentations or omissions." Id. at 105. The possibility that the Court held open in Pleznac applies here where the plaintiff alleges that AARP misrepresented the nature of the 4.95% charge both when she originally bought her policy and when she renewed it, and that therefore each renewal was an "independent act[] of deception" subject to the continuing tort doctrine. Id.

In any event, assuming that the plaintiff's claim did not accrue until she [**62] learned the specifics of the 4.95% charge constituting a "royalty" UnitedHealth owed AARP and that consumers were charged the royalty in conjunction with their premium payments, she does not specify in her Complaint when she learned those details. Nor does any party address whether the plaintiff should be deemed to have been on inquiry notice of her claim as a result of the filing, as early as 2009, of other lawsuits against AARP with similar allegations, as well as AARP's testimony in 2011 before the House Ways and Means Committee, which testimony and related Congressional investigations are cited in the Complaint, see Compl. ¶¶ 48, 59-61. Moreover, the Complaint does not specify when the plaintiff viewed the defendants' advertisements or statements regarding the 4.95% charge, or when the plaintiff learned facts leading her to believe that such advertisements or statements were materially false. These dates may be relevant to an analysis of whether the plaintiff's claims are time barred or whether the discovery rule should apply. Yet, given that these factual matters remain unknown, and since the Complaint is not "on its face" conclusively [*34] time barred, Bregman, 747 F.3d at 875, dismissal for statute of limitations [**63] reasons is not appropriate at this time.

E. The Plaintiff Plausibly States a Claim for Relief

The plaintiff asserts four claims against all three defendants: unfair trade practices under the CCPA, conversion, unjust enrichment, and fraudulent concealment. Since the factual allegations sufficiently state plausible claims, as explained further below, the defendants' motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is denied.

1. Count One States a Violation of the CCPA

The CCPA is a "comprehensive statute designed to provide procedures and remedies for a broad spectrum of practices which injure consumers." Atwater, 566 A.2d at 465. This law is expressly intended to "be construed and applied liberally to promote its purpose." D.C. Code § 28-3901(c). The plaintiff invokes the CCPA to challenge the defendants' conduct in marketing, soliciting members to enroll in, and administering Medigap policies. Specifically, the plaintiff alleges that AARP committed an unlawful trade practice, in violation of the CCPA, by issuing solicitation materials, letters to prospective consumers, billing statements, renewal letters, and website statements containing misrepresentations of material facts concerning the 4.95% payment and AARP's collection and receipt, [**64] without being a licensed insurance broker or agent, of a commission on each policy sale or renewal. Compl. ¶¶ 5, 92-96. The plaintiff claims financial harm by these unlawful trade practices because she would have sought a different Medigap policy that did not incorporate a 4.95% "commission that AARP is not legally entitled to," id. ¶ 97, and because the defendants' actions "deprived [her] of truthful information regarding [her] choice" of Medigap policies, id. ¶ 100.

The defendants challenge the validity of this CCPA claim on four grounds: (1) the CCPA does not apply to transactions conducted outside the District of Columbia, Defs.' Mem. at 38-39; (2) the plaintiff lacks standing because she does not allege an injury in fact, id. at 39-41; (3) the defendants do not qualify as a "merchant" under the CCPA, id. at 41; and (4) unfair trade practices through material misrepresentations have not been sufficiently pled, id. at 42-44. Each of these arguments falls short.

a. The CCPA Applies to the Alleged Transactions

The CCPA applies to the transactions alleged in this case. The defendants argue that the CCPA only "establishes an enforceable right to truthful information from merchants about consumer goods and services that [**65] are or would be purchased, leased, or received in the District of Columbia," and, since the plaintiff never alleges that she purchased, leased, or even saw any advertisements in the District of Columbia, the CCPA claim should be dismissed. Defs.' Mem. at 39 (emphasis omitted) (citing D.C. Code § 28-3901\(c\)). Noting that the CCPA must "be construed and applied liberally to promote its purpose," Pl.'s Opp'n at 35 (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting D.C. Code § 28-3901\(c\)), the plaintiff contends that, regardless of her connections to other states, the CCPA applies when "the plaintiff . . . avers that the defendant[s'] actions in the District of Columbia gave rise to the plaintiff's claims under the CCPA," which the plaintiff has done here, Pl.'s Opp'n at 35 (emphasis omitted) (quoting Renchard v. Prince William Marine Sales, Inc., 87 F. Supp. 3d 271, 283 \(D.D.C. 2015\)). The Complaint expressly alleges that "AARP formulated and conceived its role in the scheme largely in the District of Columbia, directed the [*35] scheme . . . from the District of Columbia, and its communications and other efforts to execute the scheme largely emanated from the District of Columbia. . . . [including] the oversight of the marketing . . . and decision to collect the 4.95% commission" Compl. ¶¶ 70, 71. These allegations sufficiently [**66] "aver[] that the defendants' actions in the District of Columbia gave rise to [her] claims under the CCPA." Renchard, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 283 (emphasis omitted).

The defendants question the plaintiff's reliance on Renchard, see Defs.' Reply at 17, a case in which a yacht owner asserted a CCPA claim against the Virginia company that financed his yacht purchase and subsequently seized the yacht in the District of Columbia for failure to make payment for improvements made to the yacht in the District of Columbia. See Renchard, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 274-76. The Court found no merit to defendants' claims that the CCPA would involve extraterritorial conduct because in Renchard, the District of Columbia was "where the injury occurred and the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred." Id. at 283. The defendants attempt to distinguish Renchard by pointing out that the Court also noted that the yacht was received in the District of Columbia, whereas in this suit the plaintiff purchased and received insurance in Florida and Louisiana. Defs.' Reply at 17. Yet this overlooks the Court's strong reliance on the plaintiff's allegations that "the defendants' actions in the District of Columbia gave rise to the plaintiff's claims under the CCPA," Renchard, 87 F. Supp. 3d at 283 (emphasis in original), [**67] and that even if other states may have interests in the matter, "the injury complained of, and direct conduct contributing to that injury, occurred in Washington D.C.," id. The same is true here: the plaintiff alleges that the defendants' false advertising and unfair business practices emanated from the District of Columbia, where they are based, and, as noted supra in Section III.C.3, the place of the plaintiff's injury is less important in false representation cases than where the conduct causing the injury occurred.

Furthermore, this Court has previously held that the CCPA had "extraterritorial" application and could govern disputes between out-of-state plaintiffs and a defendant headquartered in the District of Columbia. See Shaw v. Marriott Int'l, Inc., 474 F. Supp. 2d 141, 147 & n.4, 149 (D.D.C. 2007). Indeed, Shaw noted that "courts in the District of Columbia have already concluded that its policies are advanced by application of the CCPA to cases involving non-District of Columbia consumers, merchants, and transactions." Id. at 149-50 (citing Williams v. First Gov't Mortg. & Inv'r Corp., 176 F.3d 497, 499, 336 U.S. App. D.C. 71 (D.C. Cir. 1999); Washkoviak, 900 A.2d at 177, 180-81); see also In re APA Assessment Fee Litig., 766 F.3d at 53-55 (upholding the District Court's choice-of-law analysis applying District of Columbia law when out-of-state plaintiffs sued a defendant headquartered in the District of Columbia for misrepresentations [**68] regarding membership fees).

In light of this precedent, the Court concludes that the CCPA applies to the conduct alleged in this case.

b. The Plaintiff Has Standing to Bring a CCPA Claim

Contrary to the defendants' contentions, the plaintiff has standing to pursue this CCPA claim. The "irreducible constitutional minimum" of standing consists of three elements. Lujan v. Defs. Of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). The plaintiff must have suffered (1) an injury in fact (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of the defendant and (3) that is likely [*36] to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision. City of Boston Delegation v. FERC, 897 F.3d 241, 248 (D.C. Cir. 2018). The injury in fact must be both "concrete and particularized" and "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

The defendants contend that the plaintiff suffered no injury in fact because she paid precisely the premium that was approved by state regulatory agencies, Defs.' Mem. at 40, and even if she believes she should have received more information about the royalties deducted from that premium, she "has not alleged, and cannot plausibly allege, any loss caused by United[Health]'s allocation of premium revenue to program expenses, including the AARP royalty," id. According [**69] to the defendants, the plaintiff cannot avoid this flaw in her alleged injury in fact by positing that had she known about the defendants' alleged misconduct, she would have purchased Medigap insurance from another company. See id. (citing Compl. ¶ 79). The defendants further contend that the plaintiff "alleges no facts making this bald assertion plausible," including, for example, "what alternative carrier Plaintiff would have considered, the rates offered by that hypothetical alternative provider, or whether those rates were lower." Defs.' Mem. at 40. Consequently, this "conclusory statement that she would have purchased different coverage does not," in the defendants' view, "permit an inference that she suffered any loss." Id. at 40-41.

Drawing all inferences in the plaintiff's favor, as is required at this procedural stage, she has sufficiently alleged financial harm. See Attias v. CareFirst, Inc., 865 F.3d 620, 622, 627-28, 431 U.S. App. D.C. 273 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (recognizing that allegations, rather than evidence of injury, may support standing at the motion-to-dismiss stage). This is especially true in the context of Medigap policies, which are often identical in every respect except for price. See CMS Medigap Guide at 9, 13, 19 ("Different insurance companies may charge different premiums for the same exact [**70] policy."). The plaintiff asserts that she has sufficiently alleged an injury in fact based on: (1) the financial harm she suffered when AARP misled her into paying an illegal 4.95% commission; and (2) the violation of her statutory right to truthful information. Pl.'s Opp'n at 37. The plaintiff has sufficiently alleged that, had she understood what was presented to her as a "premium" to "pay expenses incurred by the [AARP] Trust in connection with the insurance programs and to pay the insurance company for . . . insurance coverage," Compl. ¶ 64, also included a 4.95% charge intended to meet UnitedHealth's royalty obligations, she would have sought out a different, lower-priced policy, and therefore she was financially harmed by the allegedly misleading advertisements. These allegations suffice to establish an injury in fact at this stage.

In making this determination, resolving whether the 4.95% charge is properly characterized as a "commission" or a "royalty" or an unlawful "kickback" is unnecessary. Regardless of labels, all the plaintiff is required to do is sufficiently to allege economic harm, "a classic form of injury-in-fact." Osborn v. Visa Inc., 797 F.3d 1057, 1064, 418 U.S. App. D.C. 193 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); [**71] see also Carpenters Indus. Council v. Zinke, 854 F.3d 1, 5, 428 U.S. App. D.C. 243 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Kavanaugh, J.) ("A dollar of economic harm is still an injury-in-fact for standing purposes."). She has sufficiently stated an injury in fact, as other courts have found with respect to virtually identical allegations regarding the same 4.95% charge. See Levay, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116585, 2018 WL 3425014, at \*4-5; Friedman, 283 F. Supp. 3d at 879-80 (holding that the [*37] plaintiff had established an injury, but dismissing the claim because the plaintiff no longer held a Medigap policy and therefore had no standing to pursue injunctive relief).<sup>12</sup>

The plaintiff has sufficiently alleged financial harm as a result of the defendants' actions, and thus has met the injury in fact requirement to seek damages in Count One alleging a violation of the CCPA.<sup>13</sup>

c. The Defendants Qualify as Merchants Under the CCPA

The defendants argue that the CCPA only applies to "merchants" who supply "goods and services," whereas none of the defendants sold, supplied, or transferred insurance policies to the plaintiff in a consumer-merchant relationship. Defs.' Mem. at 41-42. "[T]he CCPA does not cover all consumer transactions, and instead only covers 'trade practices arising out of consumer-merchant relationships.'" Sundberg v. TTR Realty, LLC, 109 A.3d 1123, 1129 \(D.C. 2015\) (quoting Snowder v. District of Columbia, 949 A.2d 590, 599 \(D.C. 2008\)). The CCPA defines "merchant" as one [**72] "who in the ordinary course of business does or would sell, lease (to), or transfer, either directly or indirectly, consumer goods or services . . . or would supply the goods or services which are or would be the subject matter of a trade practice." D.C. Code § 28-3901\(a\)\(3\). Persons or entities sufficiently "connected with the supply side of the consumer transaction" meet the CCPA's definition of a merchant. Adler v. Vision Lab Telecomm., Inc., 393 F. Supp. 2d 35, 39 \(D.D.C. 2005\) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Save Immaculata/Dunblane, Inc. v. Immaculata Preparatory Sch., 514 A.2d 1152, 1159 \(D.C. 1986\)).

The plaintiff alleges that "AARP's solicitation, marketing, and sale of AARP Medigap Policies constitutes the sale of consumer goods or services in the ordinary course of business." Compl. ¶ 53. In support, the plaintiff points out that, under the Agreement with UnitedHealth, AARP: (1) markets, solicits, sells, and renews AARP Medigap policies, id. ¶ 38; (2) collects and remits premium payments on behalf of [*38] UnitedHealth, id.; (3) owns all solicitation materials related to the AARP Medigap program, id. ¶ 47; (4) performs quality control and generally oversees UnitedHealth operations relating to the Medigap program, id. ¶ 48; (5) has authority over UnitedHealth's operations regarding the Medigap program, id.; (6) gives prior review and approval over all communication [**73] regarding the Medigap program, id.; (7) has the authority to consult, review, and consent to premium levels and rates and sales and distribution plans, id.; and (8) has review and modification authority over UnitedHealth's Medigap-related contracts with certain third-party vendors, id. The plaintiff posits that the 4.95% royalty charge is how UnitedHealth "compensates AARP to act as its agent in connection with the marketing, solicitation, sale, and administration of AARP Medigap policies." Id. ¶ 49; see also id. ¶¶ 50-52 (describing this "agency" relationship); id.

<sup>12</sup> As for the plaintiff's argument that she has alleged standing by virtue of asserting a violation of her statutory right to truthful information, the Court agrees with the defendants that this alleged violation, without more, is insufficient to establish standing. See Defs.' Mem. at 39-40; Pl.'s Opp'n at 37-38. "Although it might violate the CCPA to present misleading information even if no one was misled, a private plaintiff cannot bring a suit in federal court to enforce that claim unless he or she has suffered an injury in fact." Mann v. Bahi, 251 F. Supp. 3d 112, 119 \(D.D.C. 2017\) (citing Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 136 S. Ct. 1540, 1548, 194 L. Ed. 2d 635 \(2016\)). The plaintiff does not have standing unless she can allege that the defendants violated the CCPA and that she suffered an injury in fact as a result. See Hancock v. Urban Outfitters, Inc., 830 F.3d 511, 514, 424 U.S. App. D.C. 251 \(D.C. Cir. 2016\); Silvious v. Snapple Beverage Co., 793 F. Supp. 2d 414, 417 \(D.D.C. 2011\) (collecting cases for the proposition that "a lawsuit under the CCPA does not relieve a plaintiff of the requirement to show a concrete injury-in-fact to himself").

<sup>13</sup> The plaintiff lacks standing, however, to pursue injunctive relief under the CCPA, see Compl. ¶ 103, because she does not allege that she is currently enrolled in an AARP Medigap policy. See Owner-Operator Indep. Drivers Ass'n, Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Transp., 879 F.3d 339, 346 \(D.C. Cir. 2018\) (plaintiffs must demonstrate standing separately for each form of relief sought, and standing for prospective relief requires showing continuing or imminent harm); Levay, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116585, 2018 WL 3425014, at \*3 (holding that plaintiffs lacked standing to pursue injunctive relief when they had not alleged how they would continue to be harmed by AARP's misrepresentations concerning the Medigap policies).

¶ 73 (suggesting that these activities render AARP an unlicensed insurance agent or broker). In other words, according to the plaintiff, "the [defendants'] involvement in the allegedly fraudulent [scheme] in this case is . . . far greater than a mere recommendation for services." McMullen v. Synchrony Bank, 164 F. Supp. 3d 77, 92 \(D.D.C. 2016\).

Notwithstanding all of the defendants' alleged activities to connect consumers to Medigap policies, the defendants argue that they are not "merchants" within the meaning of the CCPA because the plaintiff has not alleged that they "sold, supplied, or transferred insurance policies" in a manner creating a consumer-merchant relationship. Defs.' Mem. [*74] at 41. To the extent the plaintiff does allege such activities, see, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 38-52, the defendants dismiss these allegations as "bare legal conclusions regarding AARP's actions" under its Agreement for licensing intellectual property. Defs.' Mem. at 42. To the contrary, the plaintiff has alleged far more than "bare legal conclusions" and has, in fact, provided ample detail concerning AARP's extensive responsibilities with respect to marketing, advertising, soliciting, and administering Medigap policies to allow the reasonable inference that the defendants are so "connected with the supply side of the consumer transaction" so as to constitute merchants under the CCPA. See Adler, 393 F. Supp. 2d at 39 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Moreover, the defendants' reliance on Adler to distinguish their activities is based on an apparent misinterpretation of its holding. The defendants cite Adler for the proposition that a "defendant that sent unsolicited advertisements on behalf of third party was not a 'merchant' within the meaning of the CCPA because the plaintiffs did not purchase or receive services from defendant." Defs.' Mem. at 42. The defendants' case summary ignores Adler's holding that the defendants [*75] were merchants, but no consumer-merchant relationship existed because the plaintiffs never bought anything, and thus were not consumers. 393 F. Supp. 2d at 40. Adler explicitly held that parties who do more than merely recommend goods and services may qualify as merchants under the CCPA, id. at 39-40, consistent with the holdings in other cases from this Court addressing this issue. See, e.g., Hall v. S. River Restoration, Inc., 270 F. Supp. 3d 117, 123 \(D.D.C. 2017\) (CKK); McMullen, 164 F. Supp. 3d at 91-92 \(JEB\); Ihebereme v. Capital One, N.A., 730 F. Supp. 2d 40, 52 \(D.D.C. 2010\) (ESH). Based on the plaintiff's allegations of the defendants' extensive involvement in marketing, selling, and administering Medigap policies to consumers, the defendants do far more than endorse UnitedHealth's Medigap policies.

For the foregoing reasons, the plaintiff has sufficiently alleged facts plausibly [*39] showing that the defendants meet the CCPA's definition of "merchant."

d. The Plaintiff Sufficiently Alleged Material Misrepresentations

Finally, the plaintiff has sufficiently and plausibly alleged that the defendants engaged in unfair trade practices under the CCPA by materially misrepresenting information about the 4.95% charge.

The CCPA forbids a variety of "unfair or deceptive trade practice[s], whether or not any consumer is in fact misled, deceived, or damaged thereby," D.C. Code § 28-3904, and "establishes an enforceable right [*76] to truthful information from merchants about consumer goods and services that are or would be purchased, leased, or received in the District of Columbia." Mann, 251 F. Supp. 3d at 116-17 (citing D.C. Code §§ 28-3901 to 28-3903; id. § 28-3901\(c\)) (establishing enforceable right to truthful information). A "trade practice" is "any act which does or would create, alter, repair, furnish, make available, provide information about, or, directly or indirectly, solicit or offer for or effectuate, a sale, lease or transfer, of consumer goods and services." D.C. Code § 28-3901\(a\)\(6\).

The plaintiff asserts violations of three CCPA "unfair or deceptive trade practice" provisions, claiming the defendants (1) misrepresented a material fact which has a tendency to mislead, in violation of id. § 28-3904\(e\); (2) failed to state a material fact if such failure tends to mislead, in violation of id. § 28-3904\(f\); and (3) used innuendo or ambiguity as to a material fact, which has a tendency to mislead, in violation of id. § 28-3904\(f-1\). Compl. ¶ 93. As to each CCPA provision, the plaintiff points to three basic categories of misrepresentations: (1) the defendants' statements or omissions regarding the 4.95% charge, including its amount, what it is used for, and who pays it, see Compl. ¶ 96; (2) the defendants' activities as a de facto [*77] or unlicensed insurance agent of UnitedHealth, rendering their activities on behalf of UnitedHealth to be unfair trade practices, id.; and (3) the defendants' misrepresentation of the 4.95% charge a "royalty" when it qualifies as a commission and may not lawfully be collected by AARP under District of Columbia law, id.

In assessing whether the plaintiff's allegations plausibly plead an unfair or deceptive trade practice through use of material misrepresentations, a court must "consider an alleged unfair trade practice 'in terms of how the practice would be viewed and understood by a reasonable consumer.'" Saucier v. Countrywide Home Loans, 64 A.3d 428, 442 \(D.C. 2013\) (quoting Pearson v. Chung, 961 A.2d 1067, 1075 \(D.C. 2008\)). The same "reasonable consumer" standard applies to the question of whether information has a tendency to mislead. See Saucier, 64 A.3d at 442. "How the practice would be viewed by a reasonable consumer is generally a question for the jury," Mann, 251 F. Supp. 3d at 126, although "there are times when it is sufficiently clear to be determined as a matter of law," id. (citing Alicke, 111 F.3d at 912 (determining that no reasonable person could interpret the consumer phone contract at hand in the manner the plaintiff had asserted)). For claims under D.C. Code § 28-3904 \(e\), \(f\), and \(f-1\), "a statement or 'omission is material if a significant number of unsophisticated consumers would find that information important in determining a course of action." Mann, 251 F. Supp. 3d at 126 (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Saucier, 64 A.3d at 442). "Ordinarily the question of materiality should not be treated [**78] as a matter of law." Saucier, 64 A.3d at 442 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

With respect to the first category of alleged misrepresentations, concerning [*40] the defendants' statements or omissions regarding the nature and purpose of the 4.95% charge, the plaintiff identifies two specific material misrepresentations: (1) AARP's disclaimer indicating that premiums are used to pay expenses incurred by AARP Trust and to pay UnitedHealth for insurance coverage; and (2) AARP's disclosure that UnitedHealth pays royalty fees to AARP for use of its intellectual property. See Compl. ¶ 96. The statements are made on AARP's websites, see Compl. ¶ 51, and "through television commercials . . . mailings, and [print] advertisements," id. ¶ 50. Although the plaintiff does not specify when she saw these statements or came to believe they were misleading, the defendants concede that the identified statements appear on AARP products or sponsored advertising, and have even attached exhibits of the advertising materials. See Defs.' Mem. at 17-18 (referring to Ex. 2 and Ex. 3 and quoting language disclosing the existence of the "royalty"). The only question, then, is whether the plaintiff has sufficiently alleged [**79] that the statements are materially misleading under the CCPA.

The plaintiff alleges that AARP's Medigap disclaimer misleads consumers by stating that "premiums [collected from consumers] are used to pay expenses incurred by [AARP] Trust in connection with the insurance programs and to pay the insurance company for [consumer's] insurance coverage," Compl. ¶ 64, which, the plaintiff alleges, is "highly misleading and deceptive in that Defendants do not disclose that the amounts members are paying are not just 'premiums' to pay for the actual insurance coverage, and the administrative expenses incurred by the AARP Trust, but a 4.95% commission on top of the premiums that AARP remits to UnitedHealth," that AARP is in any event not entitled to collect because it is not an insurance agent or broker, id. ¶¶ 65, 75; see also Pl.'s Opp'n at 43.

Even if the 4.95% charge is not a commission, however, the plaintiff alleges that the disclaimer nevertheless misrepresents what the amounts collected from consumers are used for, "obfuscat[ing] the cost of the Medigap premiums [and] leading reasonable consumers to pay more than what they otherwise would." Pl.'s Opp'n at 43 (citing Compl. ¶ 99). That is, [*80] the plaintiff alleges that if the defendants disclosed that consumers were being charged "premiums . . . to pay expenses incurred by [AARP] Trust in connection with the insurance programs and to pay the insurance company for [consumer's] insurance coverage," Compl. ¶ 64, and a 4.95% charge (on the amount of the premium) to satisfy UnitedHealth's obligation to "pay[] royalty fees to AARP for the use of its intellectual property. . . . [which] fees are used for the general purposes of AARP," Compl. ¶¶ 5, 67, they would not be misled because they would reasonably understand that their "premiums" included a specific charge—calculated as a percentage of those premiums—paid solely to AARP and unconnected to their insurance coverage. See Pl.'s Opp'n at 43.

The defendants' disclosure regarding that charge, "included on correspondence to" the plaintiff and other consumers, Compl. ¶ 67, according to the plaintiff, is misleading on its own. See Pl.'s Opp'n at 45 n.19; Compl. ¶¶ 62-65. The disclosure indicates that "UnitedHealthcare Insurance Company pays royalty fees to AARP for the use of its intellectual property. These fees are used for the general purposes of AARP." Compl. ¶¶ 5, 67. This disclosure [**81] is allegedly "false and misleading" by failing to inform consumers that they, and not UnitedHealth, will be required to pay this "royalty." Id. ¶ 5. Nor does the disclosure inform consumers that the "royalty" is [*41] equivalent to 4.95% of their premiums. Id. ¶¶ 5, 67. Again, nowhere does AARP disclose that any portion of the "premiums" is in fact used to pay the "royalties" UnitedHealth is obligated to pay AARP. See id. ¶¶ 65, 62 ("[W]hile AARP and UnitedHealth disclose the existence of a payment in general to AARP—which they term a 'royalty' paid for the use of AARP's intellectual property—they hide the fact that the cost of AARP Medigap insurance includes a percentage-based commission to AARP, funded by consumers (and not UnitedHealth), in addition to the insurance premium paid to UnitedHealth for coverage.") (emphasis in original).

Based on these allegations, the plaintiff has sufficiently alleged that both misrepresentations, independently but even more so when considered together, would be misleading to the reasonable consumer. Contrary to the statement made in the AARP Medigap disclaimer, royalties owed by UnitedHealth are neither "expenses incurred by [AARP] Trust" nor payment to [*82] UnitedHealth for "insurance coverage." Compl. ¶ 64. Especially in combination with the defendants' representations elsewhere that UnitedHealth pays "royalty fees" to AARP for "use of its intellectual property" and that such fees are "used for the general purposes of AARP," id. ¶ 5, the plaintiff has sufficiently alleged that a consumer may lack information to understand that UnitedHealth satisfied its contractual obligations to AARP by including an additional, percentage-based charge as part of the premium. See Pl.'s Opp'n at 45-46; Compl. ¶¶ 64-67.

Having concluded that the plaintiff sufficiently alleged that the two statements were misleading, the Court also concludes that she has sufficiently alleged that they were material. A matter is material if: "a reasonable [person] would attach importance to its existence or nonexistence in determining his or her choice of action in the transaction in question; or the maker of the representation knows or has reason to know that its recipient regards or is likely to regard the matter as important in his or her choice of action, although a reasonable [person] would not so regard it." Saucier, 64 A.3d at 442 (internal alterations omitted) (quoting Restatement Of The Law (Second) Torts § 538(2)).

Based on the disclosures [*83] the plaintiff quotes in her Complaint, a reasonable consumer could lack information to understand that: (1) a portion of her premiums satisfied UnitedHealth's obligation to pay royalties to AARP; (2) such royalties were calculated as a percentage of what she paid for Medigap coverage; and (3) the operable percentage was 4.95%. This additional charge was billed to the plaintiff as part of her premium, the price of which, as already noted, is generally the sole differentiating factor among Medigap policies. This price, and its components, are factors that a reasonable person would likely attach importance to in determining whether to buy a Medigap policy and whether to buy an AARP-sponsored one. Therefore, these factors may likely be material to a reasonable consumer.

At this stage, regardless of whether the 4.95% charge is properly deemed a "royalty" rather than a "commission," the plaintiff has stated a claim under the CCPA based on the defendants' allegedly materially misleading representations concerning the 4.95% charge.

With respect to the second and third categories of alleged misrepresentations and unfair or deceptive practices, concerning whether the defendants are de facto or [*84] unlicensed insurance agents of UnitedHealth and whether the 4.95% royalty, paid as a percentage of premiums, qualifies as a commission that may not lawfully be collected by AARP under District [*42] of Columbia law, see Compl. ¶ 96, the plaintiff notes that "it is well-established under the CCPA that 'a merchant that presents misleading information about its services in violation of another statute commits an unlawful trade practice, even if that statute is not specifically enumerated elsewhere in the CCPA,'" Pl.'s Mem. at 43-44 (citing Mann, 251 F. Supp. 3d at 121; Osbourne, 727 A.2d at 325-26). The plaintiff argues that if the defendants solicit insurance without being licensed to do so, they are misleading consumers about the services they are authorized by law to perform in violation of the CCPA. Compl. ¶ 96 Further, because AARP is not licensed as an insurer, it is not legally allowed to collect a commission. Id. The plaintiff alleges that AARP's disclosures regarding the 4.95% charge misled consumers by leading them to believe that the charge is part of the premiums paid to UnitedHealth rather than a commission AARP would not otherwise be authorized to collect. See id. ¶¶ 6, 62-65, 96-97.

District of Columbia law bars the payment or receipt [*85] of commissions in consideration for the sale, solicitation, or negotiation of insurance if the person paid was required to be licensed and was not. D.C. Code § 31-1131.13.

Persons who sell, solicit, or negotiate insurance must be licensed to do so. Id. § 31-1131.03. Key terms in this statutory provision are further defined, with "Sell" defined to mean "to sell or exchange a contract of insurance by any means, for money or its equivalent, on behalf of an insurance company," id. § 31-1131.02\(16\), and "Solicit" defined to mean "attempting to sell insurance or asking or urging a person to apply for a particular kind of insurance from a particular company," id. § 31-1131.02\(17\). "Commission" is not defined. See id. § 31-1131.02 (the definitions section for insurance regulations).

The defendants are not licensed insurance agents. Despite this, the plaintiffs allege that the defendants have agreed to: (1) market, solicit, sell and renew AARP Medigap policies with UnitedHealth; (2) collect and remit premium payments on behalf of UnitedHealth; (3) generally administer the AARP Medigap program; and (4) otherwise act as UnitedHealth's agent. Id. ¶ 38. In addition, AARP owns all solicitation materials related to the Medigap program. Id. ¶ 47, and its advertisements plainly [**86] state "This is a solicitation of insurance," id. ¶ 51. Further, in exchange for AARP's services on behalf of UnitedHealth, it "earns a 4.95% commission—disguised as a 'royalty'—on each policy sold or renewed." Id. ¶ 45.

Although District of Columbia law does not define "commission," the plaintiff has adequately alleged that the defendants solicit insurance without being licensed to do so and that the 4.95% charge, calculated as a percentage of premiums, represents the payment or receipt of "a commission, service fee, brokerage fee, or other valuable consideration" for the sale, solicitation, or negotiation of insurance, which is prohibited if the person paid was required to be licensed and was not. D.C. Code § 31-1131.13. The plaintiff has also sufficiently alleged that the defendants' advertisements and disclaimers concerning that charge and their role in soliciting insurance misled consumers about the services they are legally authorized to perform and their right to receive payment in consideration for the sale of insurance. See Mann, 251 F. Supp. 3d at 126 (holding that whether a business's "statements implied that it was licensed in D.C. is a question of fact for the jury").

Finally, the plaintiff has adequately alleged that the [**87] defendants' statements obscuring AARP's status as an unlicensed insurance agent that was not entitled to [*43] receive a commission were material, because had she understood that AARP received an unlawful commission for each sale, she would have sought a lower-priced Medigap insurance policy or one sold by a company that complied with District of Columbia laws. See Compl. ¶¶ 81-83 . Therefore, as to the second and third categories of misstatements, the plaintiff has sufficiently alleged that the defendants have committed an unfair trade practice in violation of the CPPA.

Accordingly, the defendants' motion to dismiss Count I is denied.

2. Count Two States a Claim of Conversion

In Count Two, the plaintiff alleges conversion of her ownership right to the 4.95% of her payments that was wrongfully charged and illegally diverted to [*44] AARP as a commission. Id. ¶¶ 104-07. She contends that the defendants "wrongly asserted dominion" over 4.95% of her payments, id. ¶ 106, and that she is entitled to damages in the amount for which she was wrongfully charged, id. ¶ 107.

As a general principle, conversion is defined as "any unlawful exercise of ownership, dominion or control over the personal property of [**88] another in denial or repudiation of [her] rights thereto." Hall v. District of Columbia, 867 F.3d 138, 151, 432 U.S. App. D.C. 150 \(D.C. Cir. 2017\) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Chase Manhattan Bank v. Burden, 489 A.2d 494, 495 \(D.C. 1985\)). "[M]oney can . . . be the subject of a conversion claim 'if the plaintiff has the right to a specific identifiable fund of money.'" Papageorge v. Zucker, 169 A.3d 861, 864 \(D.C. 2017\) (quoting McNamara v. Picken, 950 F. Supp. 2d 193, 194 \(D.D.C. 2013\)).

The defendants contend that the plaintiff's conversion claim fails because she has not identified the right to any specific identifiable source of money. See Defs.' Mem. at 45 & n.11 (citing McNamara, 950 F. Supp. 2d at 194). This is incorrect. The plaintiff's Complaint alleges that for every AARP Medigap policy sold or renewed, AARP Trust collects premium payments that include the 4.95% charge, Compl. ¶ 54, that AARP Trust then deducts funds equivalent to the 4.95% charge and remits that amount to AARP, Inc. and ASI, with 8% going to ASI and 92% going to AARP, Inc, id. ¶¶ 55, 57, and that the Agreement AARP has with UnitedHealth clearly delineates between the amount billed and paid by consumers, referred to as "Member Contributions," and the premiums remitted to UnitedHealth, referred to as "SHIP Gross Premiums," id. ¶ 58. The plaintiff alleges that she has a right to the money accumulated as a result of the 4.95% charge—namely: Member Contributions minus SHIP Gross Premiums. [**89] The Court is persuaded that this rationale sufficiently alleges a right to a specific, identifiable source of money.

The plaintiff also sufficiently alleges that the defendants' assertion of dominion over this source of funds was wrongful. As noted elsewhere, the plaintiff has adequately alleged that she was misled into paying the 4.95% charge because she did not understand that 4.95% of her premiums were being used to make allegedly unlawful commission payments, and, had she understood the nature of the arrangement, she would have sought other coverage. The defendants' motion to dismiss this claim is therefore denied.

3. Count Three States a Claim of Unjust Enrichment

In Count Three, the plaintiff alleges unjust enrichment based on allegations that she conferred a benefit on defendants "in the form of the hidden 4.95% charge on top of [her] monthly premium payments that [was] unlawfully and deceptively charged and illegally diverted to AARP as a commission," id. ¶ 109, that the defendants "voluntarily accepted and retained this benefit," id. ¶ 110, which was "collected without proper disclosure and amounted to a commission in violation of" District of Columbia law, id. ¶ 111, and that [**90] it would be "inequitable" for the defendants to retain the benefit without paying its value to the plaintiff, id.

An unjust enrichment claim under District of Columbia law requires the plaintiff to allege that she (1) conferred a benefit on the defendants; (2) the defendants retained the benefit that was conferred; and (3) it would be unjust for the defendant to retain the benefit under the circumstances. See Euclid St., LLC v. D.C. Water & Sewer Auth., 41 A.3d 453, 463 n.10 (D.C. 2012). The doctrine applies "when a person retains a benefit (usually money) which in justice and equity belongs to another." Falconi-Sachs v. LPF Senate Square, LLC, 142 A.3d 550, 556 (D.C. 2016) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Jordan Keys & Jessamy, LLP v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 870 A.2d 58, 63 (D.C. 2005)).

The plaintiff undisputedly conferred on the defendants a benefit they retained. See Defs.' Mem. at 46 (conceding that the defendants retained a benefit). The defendants argue, however, that the plaintiff cannot show that any benefits were retained unjustly because the "premium paid by Plaintiff afforded her the exact coverage she elected when she purchased the policy, and the royalty paid by United[Health] to AARP was simply a[] [fully disclosed] expense incurred by United[Health] in licensing intellectual property from AARP for its operation of the program." Id. Further, the defendants note that the plaintiff "received [**91] precisely the Medigap coverage she purchased at the rate mandated." Id.

The plaintiff does not contest the coverage she received, but insists that, under the circumstances, the defendants retained 4.95% of her premiums unjustly. Specifically, she argues the defendants are not insurance agents and cannot retain a commission, yet nevertheless collected 4.95% of her premium without proper disclosures or licensing. Pl.'s Opp'n at 48-50. Regardless of whether the charge is a "commission" or not, the plaintiff alleges that she was deceived regarding the cost and purposes of her premiums. She understood these premiums to amount to a sum certain, which sum would be used to pay expenses incurred by AARP Trust in connection with her Medigap program and to pay UnitedHealth for the coverage itself. Compl. ¶ 64. Yet a portion of those premiums in fact satisfied UnitedHealth's obligations to pay "royalties" to AARP—a fact that she alleges was never fully disclosed and that would have affected how she compared Medigap policy rates. See id. ¶ 11.

Given these allegations of misrepresentation, the defendants' argument that no unjust enrichment claim exists when the plaintiff received her coverage as expected [**92] and was told that UnitedHealth paid royalties to AARP erroneously assumes the plaintiff understood (or did not care) that such royalties were paid as a percentage of the plaintiff's premiums. The plaintiff plainly alleges she did not understand this fact and that it was material to her.

The D.C. Circuit, in an analogous context, held that plaintiffs had properly stated an unjust enrichment claim when they alleged that they were misled into paying a special assessment fee because they believed payment of such fee was necessary to retain membership in an organization. See In re APA Assessment Fee Litig., 766 F.3d at 48. In fact, the fee was used to pay for lobbying services. Id. at 47. The defendants' argument that such lobbying services [*45] were performed adequately was accordingly no barrier to the plaintiffs' claims, which rested, as do the plaintiff's claims here, on an allegation that the purpose of the payment was misrepresented to them. Id. at 48; see also id. at 47 (holding that a theory of "mistaken payment of money not due" is "one of the core cases of restitution") (internal quotation marks, alterations, and citation omitted).

Under the circumstances, the plaintiff has sufficiently alleged that the defendants unjustly retained money accrued as a result [**93] of the 4.95% charge. The defendants' motion to dismiss this claim is thereby denied.

4. Count Four States a Claim of Fraudulent Misrepresentations or Omissions

The plaintiff titles her claim in Count IV "Fraudulent Concealment" and alleges that the defendants "concealed or failed to disclose [the] material fact . . . that AARP was collecting a 4.95% commission," Compl. ¶ 113, that AARP "knew or should have known that this material fact should be disclosed or not concealed," id. ¶ 114, that the defendants concealed the fact "in bad faith," id. ¶ 115, and in spite of their "duty to speak," id. ¶ 118, and that the defendants thereby "induced [the plaintiff] to act by purchasing an AARP-endorsed Medigap plan," id. ¶ 116. The plaintiff alleges that she suffered damages as a result of this fraudulent concealment, id. ¶ 117.

At the outset, the defendants rebut the plaintiff's fraudulent concealment claim relying solely on cases addressing the claim in the context of whether the statute of limitations should be tolled. See Defs.' Mem. at 48 n.13 (citing Larson v. Northrop Corp., 21 F.3d 1164, 1172, 305 U.S. App. D.C. 416 (D.C. Cir. 1994); Quick v. EduCap, Inc., 318 F. Supp. 3d 121, 143 (D.D.C. 2018); Woodruff v. McConkey, 524 A.2d 722, 728 (D.C. 1987)). Indeed, generally, a plaintiff need not assert a fraudulent concealment claim in the Complaint until after the defendant has answered asserting [**94] a statute of limitations affirmative defense. See Firestone, 76 F.3d at 1210. The source of the confusion may be the plaintiff's reliance on Howard University v. Watkins, 857 F. Supp. 2d 67 (D.D.C. 2012) for the elements of a fraudulent concealment claim under District of Columbia law, see Pl.'s Opp'n at 50 (citing Howard Univ., 857 F. Supp. 2d at 75). Howard University, in turn, cites for the elements of this claim another case, Alexander v. Washington Gas Light Co., 481 F. Supp. 2d 16, 36-37 (D.D.C. 2006), which outlined the elements of a fraudulent concealment claim under Maryland law. The plaintiff's fourth claim is assumed to be pleading a related claim for fraudulent misrepresentations or omissions under District of Columbia law, which requires showing that the defendant: "(1) made a false representation of or willfully omitted a material fact; (2) had knowledge of the misrepresentation or willful omission; (3) intended to induce another to rely on the misrepresentation or willful omission; (4) the other person acted in reliance on that misrepresentation or willful omission; and (5) [the other person] suffered damages as a result of that reliance." Sundberg, 109 A.3d at 1130-31 (internal alterations quotation marks, alterations, and citations omitted). A false representation may be either an affirmative misrepresentation or a failure to disclose a material fact when a duty to disclose that fact has arisen. [**95] Id. at 1131.

Fraudulent misrepresentation claims are subject to the heightened pleading standard under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b), requiring a plaintiff to plead "with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake," FED. R. CIV. P. 9(b).<sup>14</sup> [*46] Intent, however, may be pleaded generally. Id. The information necessary to establish a fraud claim often includes "specific fraudulent statements, who made the statements, what was said, when or where these statements were made, and how or why the alleged statements were fraudulent." Brink v. Cont'l Ins. Co., 787 F.3d 1120, 1127, 415 U.S. App. D.C. 332 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). "[T]he point of Rule 9\(b\) is to ensure that there is sufficient substance to the allegations to both afford the defendant the opportunity to prepare a response and to warrant further judicial process." United States ex rel. Heath v. AT&T, Inc., 791 F.3d 112, 125, 416 U.S. App. D.C. 289 (D.C. Cir. 2015).

<sup>14</sup> By contrast, claims alleging violations of the CCPA are not subject to this heightened pleading standard. See, e.g., Frese v. City Segway Tours of Wash., D.C., 249 F. Supp. 3d 230, 235 (D.D.C. 2017); McMullen, 164 F. Supp. 3d at 90-91; Campbell v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, 130 F. Supp. 3d 236, 267 (D.D.C. 2015) (collecting cases).

The plaintiff has adequately pled the "who, what, where, when, and how" of her fraudulent misrepresentation claim. See Pl.'s Opp'n at 50 & nn.24-28. She has alleged that AARP, Inc., ASI, and AARP Trust, Compl. ¶¶ 2, 21, 22, concealed that 4.95% of plaintiff's premiums paid UnitedHealth's "royalties" to AARP, id. ¶¶ 5, 6, 62, 64, 67, that such misrepresentations and omissions were printed in documents sent to the plaintiff and published online, id. ¶¶ 5, 51, 67, [**96] that these misrepresentations have existed in some form since 1999, including when the plaintiff bought or renewed her policy, id. ¶¶ 40-45, 20, and that the plaintiff reasonably relied on the misrepresentations to her detriment because she would not have purchased a Medigap policy whose premiums included a "royalty" charge, but instead would have purchased a lower-priced policy offering identical benefits, id. ¶¶ 20, 79, 81. Those allegations are sufficient, at this stage of the proceedings, to state a claim for fraudulent misrepresentation or omission.

The plaintiff also adequately alleges that the defendants failed to disclose a material fact—the nature and purpose of the 4.95% charge, which they had knowledge of—when a duty to disclose that fact had arisen. Under District of Columbia law, a party to a transaction has no duty of disclosure unless the party is a fiduciary to the other or the party knows that the other is acting unaware of a material fact that is unobservable or undiscoverable by an ordinarily prudent person upon reasonable inspection. Sandza v. Barclays Bank PLC, 151 F. Supp. 3d 94, 107 (D.D.C. 2015). One party's "superior knowledge can give rise to a duty to disclose," id., or such duty may arise "as a result of a partial disclosure," [**97] Intelect Corp. v. Cellco P'ship GP, 160 F. Supp. 3d 157, 187 (D.D.C. 2016) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The plaintiff alleges that defendants had a "duty to speak given that they were parties to transactions with [plaintiff] . . . [and] had a duty to say enough to prevent their words from misleading [plaintiff] . . . and they had special knowledge about the material[] facts that [plaintiff] . . . did not possess." Compl. ¶ 118.

The defendants suggest that their public rate filings and disclosure that AARP received a 4.95% royalty from UnitedHealth were observable or discoverable by an ordinarily prudent person upon reasonable inspection, and therefore the plaintiff has failed to establish fraudulent misrepresentation. Defs.' Mem. at 48-49. In general, "examining readily available public records [is] part of the responsibility of an 'ordinarily prudent person' conducting a 'reasonable inspection,' and . . . failure to perform this basic due diligence preclude[s] a fraud claim." [Sununu v. Philippine \[\*47\] Airlines, Inc.](#), 792 F. Supp. 2d 39, 52 (D.D.C. 2011). Here, however, the plaintiff has adequately alleged that the defendants' disclaimer that UnitedHealth paid AARP a "royalty" was only a partial disclosure, as it did not sufficiently alert consumers to the undiscoverable or unobservable fact that they were being [**98] charged 4.95% of their premiums in order to satisfy that obligation. See Compl. ¶ 67. Moreover, the plaintiff further alleges that the defendants are so entwined in the solicitation of and administration of UnitedHealth's insurance policies that the defendants should be considered unlicensed insurance agents or brokers. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 8, 47, 51, 73. While the Court declines to resolve that issue at this stage of the proceedings, allowing the plaintiff's claims to go forward will supplement the record as to whether this alleged role creates a fiduciary duty or any other duty to disclose. *But see Attias v. CareFirst, Inc., No. 15 cv-00882 (CRC), 365 F. Supp. 3d 1, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14387, 2019 WL 367984, at *16 (D.D.C. Jan. 30, 2019)* (noting that District of Columbia generally considers the relationship between the insurer and the insured to be a contractual, rather than fiduciary relationship) (citing cases).

For the reasons already discussed, see supra Section III.E.1.d, the plaintiff has adequately alleged that the defendants' misrepresentations or omissions regarding the nature, cost, and purpose of the 4.95% charge may be material because they affected her understanding of the cost of her Medigap insurance. She has further sufficiently alleged that this misrepresentation [**99] was intended to induce consumers to purchase AARP-sponsored Medigap insurance over other policies that offered identical benefits, believing that their premiums paid only for "expenses incurred by [AARP] Trust in connection with the insurance programs and to pay the insurance company for [consumer's] insurance coverage," Compl. ¶ 64, obscuring the fact that consumers were also being charged a 4.95% "royalty" fee, and that she relied on AARP's partial disclosures in making her purchasing decisions, foregoing the chance to purchase insurance that did not include such charge.

The plaintiff's allegations sufficiently state a fraudulent misrepresentation or omission claim, and the defendants' motion to dismiss is therefore denied.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the defendants' motion to dismiss, ECF No. 8, is denied as to all counts in the plaintiff's Complaint.

An Order consistent with this Memorandum Opinion will be entered contemporaneously.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS AND TO MODIFY CLASS ALLEGATIONS

Presently before the Court is the Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings and Motion to Modify Class Allegations ("Mot.," ECF No. 73) filed by Defendant OnStar, LLC ("OnStar"). Also before the Court are Plaintiff Kathryn M. Robinson's Opposition to ("Opp'n," ECF No. 83) and Defendant's Reply in Support of ("Reply," ECF No. 86) the Motion. The Court vacated the hearing on the Motion and took the matters under submission without oral argument. Having carefully considered the parties' pleadings, arguments, [*2] and the law, the Court GRANTS IN PART AND DENIES IN PART Defendant's Motion as follows.

BACKGROUND

I. Defendant OnStar

OnStar is a fully owned subsidiary of General Motors LLC that provides a hands-free calling, navigation, and emergency assistance service called OnStar Telematics Service ("OTS"). See Class Action Compl. ("Compl."), ECF No. 1-2, ¶¶ 1, 6, 14. OTS equipment and software comes installed in most General Motors-manufactured vehicles, including Chevrolet, Buick, and Cadillac. Id. ¶ 17. OTS is also available as an aftermarket product and service for those who install OnStar For My Vehicle ("FMV"). Id. OTS calling services are routed on AT&T's cellular network, so OnStar resells AT&T cellular network minutes to those using OTS. Id. ¶ 6.

OnStar offers its OTS both to those registering for a free trial period, which can last for several months up to one year, id. ¶ 15, and to those who pay for a subscription. Id. ¶ 14. Those who register for a free, initial trial period of OTS may register their vehicles' OTS equipment with OnStar by (1) pressing a blue OnStar button on the rearview mirror, which initiates a cellular telephone call to an OnStar agent; (2) calling OnStar's toll-tree [*3] number; or (3) visiting OnStar's website. Id. ¶ 15. Once the free initial period has concluded, registrants may subscribe to continue to have access to OTS by paying a monthly fee, which can range between $19.99 and $34.99 per month depending on the service. Id. ¶ 16. Approximately fifty percent of registrants for the free trial period elect to subscribe to OTS. Id. ¶ 17.

OnStar has approximately 6 million active subscribers in the United States, and Plaintiff estimates that approximately 360,000 of these subscribers are located in California. Id.

II. Plaintiff's Experience with Defendant OnStar

On December 15, 2013, Plaintiff's husband, Scott Robinson, leased a new 2014 Cadillac ATS sedan (VIN 1G6AA5RX0E0103492) (the "Vehicle") from Hoehn Buick GMC Cadillac in Carlsbad, California. Compl. ¶ 18. Plaintiff accompanied her husband to the dealership, id., and has a community property interest in the Vehicle lease agreement and is the person who primarily operates the Vehicle. Id. ¶ 19. Plaintiff sat next to her husband as he signed several documents pertaining to the lease of the Vehicle. See ECF No. 71 ("Ans.") ¶ 18 (quoting ECF Nos. 35-11, 47 ("Tr.") at 26:6-27:21).<sup>1</sup> Among these document [*4] was the GM Customer Incentive and OnStar Acknowledgment, see Ans. ¶ 26, in which Mr. Robinson acknowledge that (1) he had "received the Terms and Conditions applicable to the OnStar Services"; (2) "the OnStar services [we]re provided under a continuous service contract that w[ould] remain in effect until cancelled by [him] or OnStar"; (3) "if [he] provid[ed] OnStar with [his] credit or debit card information at any time, it w[ould] be kept securely on file and w[ould] be automatically charged when payment for [his] OnStar Plan bec[a]me[] due"; and (4) "[n]otice of the payment due date, the monthly amount due and how to update or remove [his] credit or debit card information w[ould] be provided at least 30 days prior to any charges." Id.; see also Tr. at 8:18-9:7, 26:6-28:9; ECF No. 35-2 ("Ex. 1-A").

<sup>1</sup> On a motion for judgment on the pleadings, as here, the Court may take into account the parties' pleadings and any documents physically attached to those pleadings or incorporated by reference. See, e.g., Gonzalez v. Planned Parenthood of L.A., No. CV 05-8818 AHM FMOX, 2011 WL 1481398, at \*2 \(C.D. Cal. Apr. 19, 2011\). Although the defendant generally "cannot rely on factual allegations contained in the answer . . . [because] all allegations in the answer are automatically deemed denied," Rutter Group Prac. Guide Fed. Civ. Pro. Before Trial Ch. 9-E, OnStar cites to the transcript of Plaintiff's testimony at an April 19, 2016 evidentiary hearing in responding to Plaintiff's allegations. See generally Ans. In ruling on OnStar's Motion, the Court may consider Plaintiff's testimony, as incorporated by reference into OnStar's Answer, which constitutes a binding judicial admission. See, e.g., Yagman v. Allianz Ins., No. LACV1500921JAKJCX, 2015 WL 5553462, at \*3 \(C.D. Cal. July 9, 2015\) (granting Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss on the basis of statement made by the plaintiff at oral argument); see also Hornberger v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., No. SACV141645DOCRNBX, 2015 WL 13310465, at \*3 \(C.D. Cal. Jan. 22, 2015\) (judicial admissions may be considered in ruling on a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6)), aff'd, 677 F. App'x 336 \(9th Cir. 2017\); Baez v. Falor, No. CIV.A. 09-1149, 2011 WL 5406148, at \*6 \(W.D. Pa. Sept. 21\) (testimony from evidentiary hearing may be considered in resolving motion for judgment on the pleadings), report and recommendation adopted, 2011 WL 5374986 \(Nov. 8, 2011\).

The Vehicle was outfitted with the equipment and software to access OTS and came with a one-year period of free OTS. Compl. ¶ 20. The dealer told Plaintiff that, to activate the one year of free access to OTS, she would have to register the Vehicle with OnStar from inside the vehicle. Id. ¶ 21; see also Tr. at [*5] 28:15-29:19.

On December 17, 2013, Plaintiff pressed the blue OnStar button on the Vehicle's rearview mirror, initiating a cellular telephone call to an OnStar agent. Compl. ¶ 22. During the call with a live OnStar agent, Plaintiff registered the Vehicle to receive free OTS. Id. At no time during that call did the OnStar agent mention that there were terms or conditions to receive the free OTS, nor did the agent read or refer to any terms or conditions. Id. The agent also did not inform Plaintiff that she would be required to agree to pay for OTS after the free OTS terminated. Id. ¶ 29. At no time during that call did Plaintiff agree to pay for OTS after the one-year free OTS period expired, id. ¶ 23, nor did she agree to automatic renewal of OTS. Id. ¶ 30.

During the registration call, however, Plaintiff did agree to purchase sixty minutes on AT&T's cellular network, minutes that would enable Plaintiff to make calls using OTS rather than her cellular telephone. Id. ¶¶ 24-25. Plaintiff paid $5.47 for the minutes, providing the OnStar agent with her Bank of America debit card account number. Id. ¶ 25.

After activating OTS, Plaintiff received several documents from OnStar regarding the [*6] service and its cancellation, see Ans. ¶ 29, specifically:

- Emails dated December 17, 2013, and January 16, 2014, from OnStar Subscriber Services to Plaintiff regarding "OnStar Vehicle Diagnostics report from your Cadillac ATS" and noting that Plaintiff's "Hands-Free Calling" has an "Expiration" of "12/16/2014 (or when OnStar subscription ends, whichever comes first)," id.; see also Tr. at 31:21-33:18; ECF Nos. 35-8 ("Ex. 10") & 35-9 ("Ex. 11"); and
- A brochure entitled "Terms and Conditions of Your OnStar Service Effective as of August, 2010," mailed to Plaintiff's home address, providing, among other things, that "[t]he purchase or lease price of your Car may have included a prepayment for a period of time for a specified OnStar Plan. If so, you must arrange for payment to us after this period of time expires. If you have a payment account on file with us, we will automatically start charging you monthly as set out above."<sup>2</sup> Ans. ¶ 29; see also Tr. at 16:9-17:20; ECF No. 35-4 ("Ex. 4") (emphasis in original).

On December 17, 2014, OnStar took $29.90 for OTS from [*7] Plaintiff's bank account using her debit card account number. Compl. ¶ 33. OnStar also debited $29.90 from Plaintiff's bank account in January, and again in February, 2015. Id. ¶ 34. When Plaintiff first noticed the charges in March 2015, she immediately called OnStar and instructed it to stop taking money from her bank account and to cancel her OnStar account. Id. ¶ 35. OnStar has not refunded Plaintiff any part of the $89.70 that was debited from her account without her authorization. Id. ¶ 36.

III. Other Consumers' Experience with Defendant OnStar

Plaintiff believes that her experience with OnStar was not an isolated incident and that "OnStar engages in a nationwide practice of surreptitiously obtaining consumers' debit and credit card numbers, . . . [t]hen, without obtaining the consumers' written authorization or express informed consent, OnStar charges Registrants' debit and credit cards up to $34.99 every month for purported OTS services." Compl. ¶ 38. Plaintiff notes that there are numerous complaints about OnStar's billing practices available on consumer websites. See Compl. ¶ 39.

IV. Plaintiff Sues Defendant OnStar

---

<sup>2</sup>The Terms and Conditions also provided that "WE BOTH AGREE, TO THE FULLEST EXTENT PERMITTED BY LAW, TO USE CONFIDENTIAL ARBITRATION, NOT LAWSUITS (except for small claims court cases) TO RESOLVE THE DISPUTE." Tr. at 17:11-17; Ex. 4 (emphasis in original).

On July 2, 2015, Plaintiff filed a putative class action against [*8] OnStar in the Superior Court of the State of California, County of San Diego. See generally ECF No. 1-2. Plaintiff's Complaint alleged violations of the Electronic Funds Transfer Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1693 et seq. ("EFTA") and the Automatic Renewal Law, California Business and Professions Code §§ 17600 et seq. ("ARL"), as well as unlawful and unfair business practices under California Business and Professions Code §§ 17200 et seq. ("UCL"). See generally id.

OnStar removed to this Court, the Honorable William Q. Hayes, on August 4, 2015. See generally ECF No. 1. On September 11, 2015, OnStar moved to dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint on the grounds that the dispute was subject to an enforceable arbitration agreement. See ECF No. 15. Judge Hayes set the matter for oral argument on February 3, 2016, see ECF No. 21, after which he set an evidentiary hearing for April 2016, see ECF Nos. 21-23, to resolve four material factual disputes, see ECF No. 24 at 5:1-8:25; see also ECF No. 30, specifically:

1. Whether the OnStar Terms & Conditions ("T&C") upon which OnStar base[d] its Motion were in existence at the time Scott Robinson leased the Vehicle ("Issue #1");
2. Whether a copy of the T&C was in the glovebox of the Vehicle ("Issue #2");
3. Whether the T&C was available on www.onstar.com at the time of the Vehicle lease ("Issue #3"); [and]
4. Whether OnStar mailed a copy [*9] of the T&C to Plaintiff ("Issue #4").

ECF No. 30 at 1. The evidentiary hearing was held on April 19, 2016. See ECF No. 32.

On August 25, 2016, Judge Hayes granted OnStar's motion to dismiss and to compel arbitration, concluding that "Plaintiff [had] received a copy of the OnStar Terms and Conditions and assented to those terms, including the arbitration agreement." ECF No. 49 at 12. Plaintiff appealed. See ECF No. 51.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed on May 1, 2018. See ECF No. 62. It determined that Plaintiff and OnStar formed an agreement when she called OnStar to activate her one-year trial subscription, but that the agreement, when formed, did not include the terms and conditions. Id. at 2. Consequently, the subsequently mailed terms and conditions, which included the arbitration clause, constituted an offer to modify the agreement, which Plaintiff did not accept. Id.

On remand, Judge Hayes recused, and the case was reassigned to this Court. See ECF No. 63. OnStar filed its Answer on June 12, 2018, see generally ECF No. 71, and the instant Motion followed on July 19, 2018. See generally ECF No. 73.

LEGAL STANDARD

Any party may move for judgment on the pleadings "[a]fter the [*10] pleadings are closed—but early enough not to delay trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). A motion for judgment on the pleadings attacks the legal sufficiency of the claims alleged in the complaint. See Patel v. Contemporary Classics of Beverly Hills, 259 F.3d 123, 126 (2d Cir. 2001). The Court must construe "all material allegations of the non-moving party as contained in the pleadings as true, and [construe] the pleadings in the light most favorable to the [non-moving] party." Doyle v. Raley's Inc., 158 F.3d 1012, 1014 (9th Cir. 1998). Judgment on the pleadings is proper when the moving party clearly establishes on the face of the pleadings that no material issue of fact remains to be resolved and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., Inc., 896 F.2d 1542, 1550 (9th Cir. 1990). "Analysis under Rule 12(c) is 'substantially identical' to analysis under Rule 12(b)(6) because, under both rules, 'a court must determine whether the facts alleged in the complaint, taken as true, entitle the plaintiff to a legal remedy.'" Chavez v. United States, 683 F.3d 1102, 1108 (9th Cir. 2012).

ANALYSIS

OnStar requests that the Court enter judgment on the pleadings on Plaintiff's claims for violation of the EFTA on the grounds that she has denied the existence of any agreement establishing a preauthorized electronic fund transfer, for violation of the ARL on the grounds that the statute does not confer a private right of action, and for violation of the UCL on the grounds [*11] that OnStar's conduct was not unlawful and that Plaintiff consented to be charged for OTS and failed to avoid or mitigate the alleged harm. See Not. of Mot.; see also Mot. at 1-2. Alternatively, and to the extent that the Court declines to dismiss Plaintiff's EFTA claim, OnStar requests that the Court modify Plaintiff's class allegations pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 on the grounds that the Court lacks jurisdiction over claims of alleged class members who are not California citizens concerning actions unrelated to California and Plaintiff cannot maintain a class action for actual damages under EFTA. See Not. of Mot.; see also Mot. at 2-3.

I. Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

A. First Cause of Action: Violation of the Electronic Funds Transfer Act

Plaintiff's first cause of action alleges that OnStar violated Section 1693\(a\) of the EFTA by "uniformly and routinely initiat[ing] preauthorized electronic fund transfers and t[aking] money from the bank accounts of Plaintiff and members of the Nationwide EFTA Class without obtaining their written authorization for the transfers." Compl. ¶¶ 56, 58. Section 1693e\(a\) provides that "[a] preauthorized electronic fund transfer from a consumer's account may be authorized by the consumer only in writing, [*12] and a copy of such authorization shall be provided to the consumer when made." The EFTA defines a "preauthorized electronic fund transfer" as "an electronic fund transfer authorized in advance to recur at substantially regular intervals." 15 U.S.C. § 1693a\(10\).

OnStar argues that Plaintiff's EFTA claim must be dismissed because "Plaintiff alleges that she did not enter into any electronic fund transfer agreement" and "[a] natural reading of the EFTA provides that it is limited to transfers pursuant to agreement." Mot. at 6. In support of its argument, OnStar points to the Federal Reserve's Official Staff Interpretation, which provides:

The requirements of the regulation apply only to an account for which an agreement for EFT services to or from the account has been entered into between:

- i. The consumer and the financial institution (including an account for which an access device has been issued to the consumer, for example);
- ii. The consumer and a third party (for preauthorized debits or credits, for example), when the account-holding institution has received notice of the agreement and the fund transfers have begun.

Mot. at 6 (emphasis omitted) (quoting 12 C.F.R. Pt. 205, Supp. I § 205.3\(a\)). OnStar maintains that "[c]ourts around the country [*13] have . . . held that [the] EFTA does not apply where, as here, the plaintiff herself claims no transfer agreement exists between the parties." Id. at 7 (citing Sharkey v. NAC Marketing Co., No. 12 C 4353, 2012 WL 5967409, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 28, 2012)).

Plaintiff counters that "Section 1693e\(a\) of the EFTA makes vendors like OnStar liable for failing to obtain the required agreement in the required form," Opp'n at 9 (emphasis omitted) (citing Wike v. Vertrue, Inc., 566 F.3d 590, 592 (6th Cir. 2009); DeForest v. Pepper Tree Inc., No. SACV 17-02092-CJC(JDEX), 2018 WL 1005300, *5 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 20, 2018); Herman v. SeaWorld Parks & Entm't, Inc., No. 8:14-cv-3028-T-35JSS, 2017 WL 1376169, *7 (M.D. Fla. Apr. 17, 2017); Kleiner v. Earthlink, Inc., No. 2:16-cv-1609-WHO, 2017 WL 345525, *3-4 (E.D. Cal. Jan. 24, 2017); Starks v. Geico Indem. Co., No. CV-15-5771-MWF (PJW), 2015 WL 12942282, *4 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 10, 2015); FTC v. Grant Connect, LLC, 827 F. Supp. 2d 1199, 1230-31 (D. Nev. 2011), aff'd in part and vacated in part on other grounds, 763 F.3d 1094 (9th Cir. 2014); In re Easysaver Rewards Litig., 737 F. Supp. 2d 1159, 1182-83 (S.D. Cal. 2010); Nordberg v. Trilegiant Corp., 445 F. Supp. 2d 1082, 1094 (N.D. Cal. 2006)), and "OnStar's argument rests on a misconstruction of the cited staff interpretation." Id.

Although the reasoning of Sharkey has superficial appeal, it is premised on an untenable misunderstanding of the EFTA. Citing Section 1693\(a\)\(12\), the district court in Sharkey claims that "at least one other section of the EFTA protects consumers from unauthorized electronic fund transfers initiated without the authority of the consumer." Id. at *3. Section 1693\(a\)\(12\), however, is the statutory definition of an "unauthorized electronic fund transfer," and no other provision of the EFTA holds accountable third parties who withdraw unauthorized electronic fund transfers from the account of a consumer. Cf. 15 U.S.C. § 1693c (requiring financial institutions to disclose [*14] to consumers consumers' liability for unauthorized electronic fund transfers); 15 U.S.C. § 1693f (regarding obligation of financial institutions to resolve errors, including unauthorized electronic fund transfers); 15 U.S.C. § 1693g (regarding liability of consumers for unauthorized electronic fund transfers). The Court therefore finds persuasive the reasoning of other courts that "whether a transfer is 'unauthorized' under § 1693a\(12\) only speaks to the allocation of liability between the parties and has no bearing on a determination of whether there was a violation of § 1693e\(a\)." Starks, 2015 WL 12942282, at *5 (citing Wike, 566 F.3d at 594-95).

The only in-Circuit authority on which OnStar relies, Merritt v. Yavone, LLC, No. 6:15-CV-0269-TC, 2015 WL 9256682 (D. Or. Nov. 5), report and recommendation adopted, 2015 WL 9165898 \(Dec. 15, 2015\), is distinguishable. In Merritt, the plaintiff ordered a "free trial" of a weight loss product, authorizing a $5.00 charge for shipping and handling. *Id. at *1*. A month later, the defendants debited her bank account in the amount of $79.99. Id. Because Plaintiff did not allege that the transfers were recurring, the magistrate judge recommended that the plaintiff's EFTA claim be dismissed. *Id. at *5*. Here, by contrast, OnStar debited Plaintiff's account on a monthly basis. See Compl. ¶¶ 33-34.

Plaintiff's [*15] in-Circuit authorities are more persuasive and more in line with the purpose of the EFTA, which "is a remedial statute accorded 'a broad, liberal construction in favor of the consumer.'" Simone v. M & M Fitness LLC, No. CV-16-01229-PHX-JJT, 2017 WL 1318012, at *2 (D. Ariz. Apr. 10, 2017) (quoting Begala v. PNC Bank, Ohio, Nat'l Ass'n, 163 F.3d 948, 950 (6th Cir. 1998)); accord Smith v. Bank of Haw., No. CV 16-00513 JAO-RLP, 2019 WL 404423, at *11 (D. Haw. Jan. 31, 2019) ("Congress intended for courts to broadly construe [CCPA's] provisions [like EFTA and TILA] in accordance with its remedial purpose.") (citing Stout v. FreeScore, LLC, 743 F.3d 680, 684 (9th Cir. 2014); Clemmer v. Key Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 539 F.3d 349, 353 (6th Cir. 2008)). Courts therefore have allowed claims under the EFTA to proceed where, as here, see Compl. ¶¶ 25-37, "Plaintiff[] allege[s] that Defendant did not obtain any authorization, much less written authorization, prior to debiting [her] accounts on a recurring monthly basis." DeForest, 2018 WL 1005300, at *5; accord Starks, 2015 WL 12942282, at *4; see also In re Easysaver Rewards Litig., 737 F. Supp. 2d at 1182 ("The electronic transfer of funds by consumers to purchase goods (at brick and mortar stores or over the internet) falls within the plain language of the statute and its governing regulations."); Nordberg, 445 F. Supp. 2d at 1095 ("[P]laintiffs' allegations that defendant failed to secure authorization from plaintiffs is supported by the plain text of the EFTA and its implementing regulations."). The Court therefore concludes that Plaintiff's allegations are sufficient to demonstrate a violation of Section 1693e\(a\). Consequently, the Court DENIES [*16] OnStar's Motion as to Plaintiff's first cause of action for violation of the EFTA.

B. Second Cause of Action: Violation of the Automatic Renewal Law

Relying on Johnson v. Pluralsight, LLC, 728 Fed. App'x 674 (9th Cir. 2018), and Lopez v. Stages of Beauty, LLC, 307 F. Supp. 3d 1058 (S.D. Cal. 2018), see Mot. at 9, OnStar argues that "[t]he Court should dismiss Plaintiff's second claim because private individuals cannot assert causes of action under California's Automatic Renewal Law." Id. at 8. Plaintiff counters that "the ARL plainly contemplates private enforcement by preserving 'all available civil remedies,'" Opp'n at 11, and "OnStar's two cited cases, neither of which is binding, are unpersuasive and should not be followed." Id. at 12. OnStar notes that Plaintiff cites no authority supporting that the ARL creates a private cause of action. See Reply at 3.

Although not binding, see 9th Cir. R. 36-3\(a\), the Court finds persuasive the Ninth Circuit's reasoning in Johnson and its holding that the ARL does not create a private action. See 728 Fed. App'x at 676; see also Lopez, 307 F. Supp. 3d at 1067-69. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS OnStar's Motion as to Plaintiff's second cause of action for violation of California's ARL.

C. Third and Fourth Causes of Action: Violation of the Unfair Competition Law

1. Plaintiff's Standing

A plaintiff has standing to sue under the UCL if she "has suffered injury [*17] in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204; accord Kwikset Corp. v. Super. Ct., 51 Cal. 4th 310, 322 \(2011\) ("To satisfy the . . . standing requirements [under the UCL] . . . , a party must now (1) establish a loss or deprivation of money or property sufficient to qualify as injury in fact, i.e., economic injury, and (2) show that that economic injury was the result of, i.e., caused by, the unfair business practice or false advertising that is the gravamen of the claim.") (emphasis in original). OnStar does not appear to challenge that Plaintiff adequately has alleged economic harm, instead challenging only the sufficiency of Plaintiff's allegations concerning causation and reliance. See Mot. at 9-12.

a. Causation

For purposes of standing under the UCL, "[t]he phrase 'as a result of' in its plain and ordinary sense means 'caused by' and requires a showing of a causal connection." Veera, 6 Cal. App. 5th at 915-16 (quoting Kwikset, 51 Cal. 4th at 326-27). OnStar contends that "Plaintiff's Unfair Competition Law claims fail because she fails to allege an injury 'as a result of unfair competition' . . . because it is clear that she knew of OnStar's billing practices[,] namely that her debit card would be charged after the expiration of the trial period[,] well before [*18] the charges in question were made." Mot. at 9 (quoting Kwikset Corp., 51 Cal. 4th at 321). Plaintiff argues that OnStar's arguments concerning her purported knowledge hinge on facts alleged in OnStar's Answer on which the Court cannot rely for purposes of the instant Motion. See Opp'n at 13. Further, "such facts cannot excuse a defendant's violations of other clear statutes requiring earlier disclosure in a different manner, nor strip away a plaintiff's UCL standing to assert those violations." Id. (emphasis in original) (citing Veera v. Banana Republic, LLC, 6 Cal. App. 5th 907, 916-20 \(2016\); Medrano v. Honda of N. Hollywood, 205 Cal. App. 4th 1, 12 \(2012\)).

Based on the facts properly before the Court on this Motion,<sup>3</sup> see supra pages 1-6 & n.1, the Court concludes that Plaintiff has adequately alleged causation. Plaintiff received two emails in the months after she enrolled in OTS showing that her OnStar Subscription would expire on December 14, 2014, that she was enrolled in "Continuous Coverage," and that her "Hands-Free Calling" expired on "12/16/2014 (or when OnStar subscription ends, whichever comes first)." See Exs. 10-11. The emails provided no notice that OnStar would charge the debit card information it had retained from Plaintiff's purchase of minutes after expiration of the trial period, let alone the cost of those services. See [*19] generally id. Similarly, the Terms and Conditions mailed to Plaintiff's home address—again, after she provided her debit card information to OnStar—indicate that Plaintiff would have to "arrange for payment to [OnStar] after th[e free trial] period of time expires" and that, "[i]f [Plaintiff] ha[d] a payment account on file with [OnStar], [it] w[ould] automatically start charging [Plaintiff] monthly." See Ex. 4. When Plaintiff provided her debit card number to the OnStar agent to activate her free OTS trial period, Plaintiff was not told that her debit card would be kept on file by OnStar or used to pay for the continuance of OTS after the end of the free trial period. See Compl. ¶¶ 22-32. On this record and at this stage, the Court cannot conclude that "Plaintiff consented to being charged." See Mot. at 9. Consequently, the Court concludes that Plaintiff adequately has alleged causation for purposes of standing for her UCL claims.

b. Reliance

Because "reliance is the causal mechanism of fraud," the California Supreme Court has required that "a plaintiff 'proceeding on a claim of misrepresentation as the basis of his or her UCL action [to] [*20] demonstrate actual reliance on the allegedly deceptive or misleading statements, in accordance with well-established principles <sup>3</sup>To be clear, the Court does not consider the October 14, 2014 email from OnStar, see Tr. at 75:9-83:10, 84:11-85:15, 96:7-101:13; ECF Nos. 35-5 ("Ex. 5"), 35-7 ("Ex. 8"), to which Mr. Nicholis Festa, OnStar's director of marketing, see Tr. at 46:20-47:2, testified at April 19, 2016 evidentiary hearing. Because Plaintiff did not testify to her receipt of the October 14, 2014 email, it is not a judicial admission binding as to her. See, e.g., Am. Title Ins. Co. v. Laclelaw Corp., 861 F.2d 224, 226 \(9th Cir. 1988\) ("Factual assertions in pleadings and pretrial orders, unless amended, are considered judicial admissions conclusively binding on the party who made them.") (emphasis added).

---

regarding the element of reliance in ordinary fraud actions." Kwikset Corp., 51 Cal. 4th at 326-27 (quoting In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 306, 326 \(2009\)). But "[a] consumer's burden of pleading causation in a UCL action should hinge on the nature of the alleged wrongdoing rather than the specific prong of the UCL the consumer invokes." Durell v. Sharp Healthcare, 183 Cal. App. 4th 1350, 1363 \(2010\). Consequently, a plaintiff "need not plead reliance [where] . . . the alleged . . . violation[s] do not] require[] allegations of fraud or deception." Franz v. Beiersdorf, Inc., 745 F. App'x 47, 48 \(9th Cir. 2018\) (citing Medrano, 205 Cal. App. 4th at 12 (quoting In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 326)); accord Kwikset, 51 Cal. 4th at 326 n.9 ("[W]e need express no views concerning the proper construction of the cause requirement in [non-fraud-based UCL] cases."); In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 325 n.17 ("We emphasize that our discussion of causation in this case is limited to such cases where, as here, a UCL action is based on a fraud theory . . . There are doubtless many types of unfair business practices in which the concept of reliance, as discussed here, has no application.").")

OnStar claims that "Plaintiff must also plead reliance where, as here, the claims sound in some kind of deception," but that "Plaintiff never states that the alleged omissions or misrepresentations were an immediate cause [*21] of the injury, or that she did not want to have her subscription renewed automatically." Mot. at 10-11. Plaintiff counters that, "[i]n the 'unlawful' prong context, a plaintiff who paid a fee that the defendant was not authorized by law to charge (as here) has standing to assert that violation under the UCL" and "'reliance' is irrelevant to such statutory claims." Opp'n at 12-13 (citing Lopez, 307 F. Supp. 3d at 1070; Ivanoff v. Bank of Am., N.A., 9 Cal. App. 5th 719, 732 \(2017\); Medrano, 205 Cal. App. 4th at 11-14).

A review of Plaintiff's Complaint reveals that her allegations here do not sound in fraud and, consequently, the Court agrees with Plaintiff that she need not plead reliance to establish standing under the UCL. Fundamentally, Plaintiff's UCL claims are based on allegations that OnStar charged Plaintiff's debit card without her consent. See, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 77, 81, 92, 99, 105-07. Such claims "do not sound in fraud" and therefore do not "require reliance as to . . . allegations of causation." See Kissel v. Code 42 Software, Inc., No. SACV151936JLSKESX, 2016 WL 7647691, at *8 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 14, 2016) (declining to require reliance for UCL claim based on violation of ARL). The Court therefore concludes that Plaintiff has adequately alleged standing to assert her UCL claims.

2. Third Cause of Action: Unlawful Business Practices

"By proscribing any unlawful business practice, [the UCL] borrows violations [*22] of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable." Alvarez v. Chevron Corp., 656 F.3d 925, 933 n.8 \(9th Cir. 2011\) (quoting Cel-Tech Commc'n, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180 \(1999\)). Plaintiff's claims under the unlawful prong of the UCL are predicated on violations of the EFTA; the ARL; the Telemarketing Sales Rule of the Federal Trade Commission, 16 C.F.R. §§ 310 et seq. ("TSR"); and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45 ("FTC Act").

a. Violations of the Electronic Funds Transfer Act

Having concluded that Plaintiff's allegations are sufficient to state a violation of the EFTA, see supra Section I.A, the Court concludes that Plaintiff's allegations are also sufficient to demonstrate a violation of the unlawful prong of the UCL. See, e.g., DeForest, 2018 WL 1005300, at \*3 n.2 ("Because Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged an EFTA claim, they have also stated a claim under the 'unlawful prong' of the UCL."); Cody v. SoulCycle Inc., No. CV156457GHKJEMX, 2016 WL 11129525, at *5 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 22, 2016) ("Plaintiffs have stated a plausible claim for violation of the EFTA. . . . Thus, Plaintiffs have sufficiently stated a UCL claim based on unlawful business practices."); Starks, 2015 WL 12942282, at \*5 ("Because Plaintiff has sufficiently alleged an EFTA claim, the 'unlawful prong' of their UCL claim advances."). The Court therefore DENIES OnStar's Motion as to Plaintiff's third cause of action for violation of the unlawful prong of the UCL; however, [*23] because "[t]he purpose of a motion for judgment on the pleadings is to dispose of issues or unmeritorious controversies," Provenzano v. United States, 123 F. Supp. 2d 554, 556 \(S.D. Cal. 2000\) (citing La Jolla Village Homeowners' Ass'n v. Super. Ct., 212 Cal. App. 3d 1131, 1140-41 (1989)), the Court also addresses whether Plaintiff's allegations are sufficient to state a claim based on a violation of the ARL, the TSR, and the FTC Act.

b. Violations of California's Automatic Renewal Law

Under the ARL, it is "unlawful for any business that makes an automatic renewal offer or continuous service offer to a consumer in this state to . . . [c]harge the consumer's credit or debit card . . . for an automatic renewal or continuous service without first obtaining the consumer's affirmative consent to the agreement containing the automatic renewal offer terms or continuous service offer terms." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17602(a)(2). But "[i]f a business complies with the provisions of this article in good faith, it shall not be subject to civil remedies." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17604(b).

OnStar claims that its "good faith compliance immunizes [it], and renders the alleged Automatic Renewal Law violation unable to support a claim under the Unfair Competition Law." Mot. at 13. Plaintiff rejoins that "OnStar's 'good faith,' or lack thereof, is a fact-intensive question requiring discovery," Opp'n at 14, and, in any event, [*24] OnStar's Acknowledgment "form does not even come close to adhering to the ARL," id. at 15, because "[i]t plainly does not meet the font and typeface requirements of section 17601\(c\)"; "does not constitute an 'explicit' and 'affirmative consent' to the continuous service terms, as [section 17602\(a\)\(2\)] of the ARL requires"; and "does not state, in a 'clear and conspicuous manner[]' either the amount of the 'recurring' charges or a 'description of the cancellation policy[,]'" as required by sections 17601\(b\)\(2\) and \(3\) and 17602(a)(1). Opp'n at 15-16.

"[OnStar] has provided no case law in support of its argument that its actions complied in good faith with the requirements of the ARL, as laid out in section 17604\(b\)." See Johnson, 728 F. App'x at 677. Further, at this stage, "[OnStar] cannot defeat a claim by referencing an affirmative defense not clearly established by the complaint, and on which [it] bear[s] the burden to demonstrate." Price v. Synapse Grp., Inc., No. 16-CV-01524-BAS-BLM, 2017 WL 3131700, at \*7 \(S.D. Cal. July 24, 2017\) (citing Brownmark Films, LLC v. Comedy Partners, 682 F.3d 687, 690 \(7th Cir. 2012\)). Consequently, for purposes of this Motion, the Court determines that Plaintiff adequately has alleged that OnStar violated the provisions of the ARL for purposes of establishing a violation of the unlawful prong of the UCL.

c. Violations of the FTC's Telemarketing Sales Rule

Pursuant to the TSR, "[i]t is a deceptive telemarketing act or practice and a violation of [*25] this Rule for any seller or telemarketer to . . . fail[] to disclose truthfully, in a clear and conspicuous manner, . . . [t]he total costs to purchase, receive, or use . . . any . . . services . . . that are the subject of the sales offer . . . [or] the fact that the customer's account will be charged unless the customer takes an affirmative action to avoid the charge(s)." 16 C.F.R. §§ 310.3\(a\)\(1\)\(i\), \(vii\). Further, "[i]t is an abusive telemarketing act or practice and a violation of this Rule for any seller or telemarketer to . . . [c]aus[e] billing information to be submitted for payment . . . without the express informed consent of the customer" and, "[i]n any telemarketing transaction, the seller or telemarketer must obtain the express informed consent of the customer . . . to be charged for the goods or services . . . and to be charged using the identified account." 16 C.F.R. § 310.4\(a\)\(7\). "Telephone calls initiated by a customer . . . that are not the result of any solicitation by a seller . . . or telemarketer" are "exempt from this Rule." 16 C.F.R. § 310.6\(b\)\(4\). The TSR defines a "telemarketer" as "any person who, in connection with telemarketing, initiates or receives telephone calls to or from a customer," 16 C.F.R. § 310.2\(ff\), and "telemarketing" as "a plan, program, [*26] or campaign which is conducted to induce the purchase of goods or services . . . by use of one or more telephones." 16 C.F.R. § 310.2\(gg\). A "seller" is "any person who, in connection with a telemarketing transaction, provides, offers to provide, or arranges for others to provide goods or services to the customer in exchange for consideration." 16 C.F.R. § 310.2\(dd\).

OnStar argues that the TSR is inapplicable because "Plaintiff . . . initiated the call to OnStar" and the TSR "expressly exempts . . . telephone calls the customer initiated." Mot. at 13 (citing 16 C.F.R. § 310.6\(b\)\(4\)). Plaintiff counters that "the exemption applies only to customer-initiated calls that are not the result of any solicitation by a seller . . . or telemarketer." Opp'n at 17 (citing 16 C.F.R. § 310(b)(4)). Plaintiff notes that she alleges that "OnStar solicited plaintiff and the class members to press the blue button and become OnStar registrants by offering them a 'free trial'" and that the exemption is therefore inapplicable. Id. (citing Compl. ¶¶ 15, 21-22).

Although Plaintiff alleges that she initiated the call to OnStar, see Compl. ¶ 22, she also alleges that she placed the call because the dealer of the Vehicle informed her that "to activate the one year of free OTS, she would have to [*27] register the Vehicle with OnStar from inside the Vehicle." See id. ¶ 21. OnStar argues that this does not qualify as "solicitation" because "an unnamed employee at an independent, third party dealership, and not anyone connected with OnStar, informed Plaintiff" that she would have to register the Vehicle. Reply at 6. And, even if there were solicitation, "Plaintiff's call was not a result of a solicitation by a 'seller'" because "any communications between the dealer and Plaintiff were, by definition, not 'in connection with a telemarketing transaction'" and "the dealer did not 'provide[], offer[] to provide, or arrange[] for others to provide' OnStar services." Id. at 6-7 (quoting 16 C.F.R. § 310.2\(d\)) (citing FTC v. Lifewatch Inc., 176 F. Supp. 3d 757, 782 \(N.D. Ill. 2016\)).

OnStar cannot escape Plaintiff's allegations under the TSR so easily. Plaintiff has alleged that OnStar is "a fully owned subsidiary of General Motors LLC," Compl. ¶ 6, and that "OTS equipment and software comes installed in most General Motors-manufactured vehicles, such as . . . Cadillac." Id. ¶ 17. The "GM Customer Incentive and OnStar Acknowledgment" form signed by Plaintiff's husband is signed by an "Authorized Dealer" representative. See Ex. 1-A. At this stage, the Court therefore concludes [*28] that Plaintiff adequately has alleged that OnStar arranged for its own agents and others—namely, GM and its dealers—to provide OnStar's OTS. See, e.g., FTC v. Stefanchik, 559 F.3d 924, 930 \(9th Cir. 2009\) (affirming that defendant who entered into agreement with third party to conduct telemarketing sales for defendant was a seller under the TSR); see also FTC v. MacGregor, 360 F. App'x 891, 894 \(9th Cir. 2009\) (same).

Further, given the dearth of applicable authority, the Court is not prepared to conclude at this time that OnStar's solicitation through GM and its dealers was not "in connection with" telemarketing. Plaintiff alleges that the dealer told her to register the Vehicle for the OTS trial by pressing the blue button in the Vehicle, which connected Plaintiff to a live OnStar agent. See Compl. ¶¶ 21-22. During this call, the OnStar agent advertised and sold AT&T minutes to Plaintiff. See id. ¶¶ 24-25. Plaintiff adequately has alleged that OnStar indirectly solicited her to call its own agents, who operated as telemarketers and engaged in telemarketing under the TSR. Consequently, the Court concludes that Plaintiff sufficiently has alleged that OnStar violated the TSR for purposes of Plaintiff's unlawful UCL claims.

d. Violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act

Under the FTC Act, [*29] "[u]nfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, are hereby declared unlawful." 15 U.S.C. § 45\(a\)\(1\). "A violation of the TSR constitutes an unfair or deceptive act or practice in or affecting commerce, in violation of section 5\(a\) of the FTC Act." FTC v. Lalonde, 545 F. App'x 825, 840 \(11th Cir. 2013\) (15 U.S.C. §§ 57a\(d\)\(3\), 6102\(c\)); accord Stefanchik, 559 F.3d at 930 & n.17. Because the Court has concluded that Plaintiff adequately has alleged a violation of the TSR,<sup>4</sup> the Court also concludes that she adequately has alleged a violation of Section 5\(a\) of the FTC Act for purposes of her claim under the unlawful prong of the UCL.

3. Fourth Cause of Action: Unfair Business Practices

"[T]he proper definition of 'unfair' conduct against consumers 'is currently in flux' among California courts." Davis v. HSBC Bank Nev., N.A., 691 F.3d 1152, 1169 \(9th Cir. 2012\) (quoting Lozano v. AT&T Wireless Servs., Inc., 504 F.3d 718, 735 \(9th Cir. 2007\)); accord Hodson v. Mars, Inc., 891 F.3d 857, 866 \(9th Cir. 2018\). Courts therefore apply one or more of three different tests for unfairness: the balancing test, South Bay Chevrolet v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 72 Cal. App. 4th \(1999\); the tethering test, Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th 163; and the Section 5 test, Camacho v. Automobile Club, 142 Cal. App. 4th 1394 \(2006\). Compl. ¶ 104.

<sup>4</sup> As discussed above, see supra pages 12-13 & note 3, the Court also concludes based on the record before it that Plaintiff's alleged injury was not "reasonably avoidable," as advocated by OnStar. See Mot. at 15.

OnStar claims that "a growing number of both Federal and State courts have applied the Section 5 test, demonstrating an emerging consensus." Mot. at 17 (citing Smith v. Ford Motor Co., 462 F. App'x 660, 665 \(9th Cir. 2011\); Allred v. Frito-Lay N. Am., Inc., No. 17-CV-1345 JLS \(BGS\), 2018 WL 1185227, at \*6 \(S.D. Cal. Mar. 7, 2018\); Simpson v. Cal. Pizza Kitchen, Inc., 989 F. Supp. 2d 1015, 1026 \(S.D. Cal. 2013\); Daugherty v. Am. Honda Motor Co., 144 Cal. App. 4th 824, 839 \(2006\)). Plaintiff does not advocate for any particular test. See Compl. ¶¶ 104-07; see also Opp'n at 20-23. The Court evaluates each of the tests [*30] in turn.

a. Section 5 Test

"[T]he factors that define unfairness under section 5 are: (1) the consumer injury must be substantial; (2) the injury must not be outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or competition; and (3) it must be an injury that consumers themselves could not reasonably have avoided." Camacho, 142 Cal. App. 4th at 1403 \(2006\) (Orkin Exterminating Co. v. F.T.C., 849 F.2d 1354, 1364 \(11th Cir. 1988\)); see also 15 U.S.C. § 45\(n\).

Although OnStar advocates for use of the Section 5 test, see Mot. at 16-17, it appears that the Ninth Circuit has rejected application of the Section 5 test in recent consumer cases. See, e.g., Hodsdon, 891 F.3d at 866 (applying Cel-Tech tethering test and South Bay balancing test to consumer claim under unfair prong of UCL regarding manufacturer's failure to disclose use of child and slave labor in supply chain); Davis, 691 F.3d at 1170 ("The question then is whether we are to apply the [tethering test] in Cel-Tech, or to follow the former balancing test under South Bay."); Rubio v. Capital One Bank, 613 F.3d 1195, 1205 \(9th Cir. 2010\) (applying balancing and tethering tests); Lozano, 504 F.3d at 736 ("[W]e decline to apply the FTC standard in the absence of a clear holding from the California Supreme Court."); McVicar v. Goodman Glob., Inc., 1 F. Supp. 3d 1044, 1054 \(C.D. Cal. 2014\) ("The Ninth Circuit has rejected the section 5 test in the consumer context.") (citing Lozano, 504 F.3d at 736). The Court therefore declines to apply the Section 5 test here.

b. Balancing Test

Under the balancing test, "an 'unfair' business practice occurs when it offends an established [*31] public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." S. Bay Chevrolet, 72 Cal. App. 4th at 886-87 (quoting People v. Casa Blanca Convalescent Homes, Inc., 159 Cal. App. 3d 509, 530 \(1984\)). In applying this test, the Court must weigh the practice's "impact on its alleged victim, balanced against the reasons, justifications and motives of the alleged wrongdoer." Id. at 886 (quoting State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Super. Ct., 45 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1103-04 \(1996\), abrogated by Cel-Tech Commc'n, Inc., 20 Cal. 4th 163). "In brief, the court must weigh the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim." Id. (quoting State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 45 Cal. App. 4th at 1104).

OnStar claims that "Plaintiff reasonably knew and understood that OnStar would charge Plaintiff for the OnStar service, and Plaintiff received numerous forms of notice and warning concerning the charges," Mot. at 17 (citing Compl. ¶¶ 20-21; Ans. ¶¶ 3, 8-11), which "alone is enough to render Plaintiff's claim invalid." Id. (citing S. Bay Chevrolet, 72 Cal. App. 4th at 887; Davis, 691 F.3d at 1170). And "[t]he fact that OnStar's Terms and Conditions were readily available online further cautions against finding that any alleged lack of disclosure constituted unfair or immoral conduct." Id. at 17-18 (citing Hodsdon v. Mars, Inc., 162 F. Supp. 3d 1016, 1027 \(N.D. Cal. 2016\)).

Plaintiff, on the other hand, argues that the Complaint alleges that she did not know or understand that her debit card would be charged and, in any event, the notices and Terms and [*32] Conditions on which OnStar relies "did not adequately advise plaintiff that her debit card would be charged without her consent." Opp'n at 22 (emphasis in original). In any event, "failing to adequately disclose, or obtain informed consent to, monthly charges benefits neither consumers nor competition." Id. at 20 (citing FTC v. Amazon.com, Inc., No. C14-1038-JCC, 2016 WL 10654030, at \*11 \(W.D. Wash. July 22, 2016\)).

Plaintiff's allegations suffice to demonstrate unfair conduct under the balancing test. As discussed above, see supra pages 12-13 & note 3, the Court cannot conclude based on the record before it that OnStar adequately advised Plaintiff that her debit card would be charged for continuation of OTS after the expiration of her free trial period. And while the free trial of OTS may benefit consumers, see Mot. at 16, OnStar focuses on the wrong practice for purposes of this test: Plaintiff alleges not that the free trial itself is unfair to consumers, but rather that OnStar's failure to obtain consumers' authorization or consent prior to charging their stored credit or debit cards for continuation of OTS past the free trial period is. See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 105. Even if OTS itself and/or the free trial period has utility, OnStar's unauthorized charging of its consumers for [*33] continuation of that service does not. See Amazon.com, Inc., 2016 WL 10654030, at *10 ("[T]he 'benefit' of ensuring a streamlined experience is not incompatible with the practice of affirmatively seeking a customer's authorized consent to a charge."). The Court therefore determines that Plaintiff adequately has alleged that OnStar engaged in an unfair business practice under the balancing test.

c. Tethering Test

Pursuant to the tethering test, "unfairness . . . under section 17200 [must] be tethered to some legislatively declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition." Cel-Tech Commc'nns, Inc., 20 Cal. 4th at 186-87. Although Cel-Tech was limited to anticompetitive practices between competitors, see id.; see also id. at 187 n.12, "some courts in California have extended the Cel-Tech definition to consumer actions, while others have applied the old balancing test, or borrowed the three-pronged test set forth in the FTC Act." Davis, 691 F.3d at 1170 (citing Lozano, 504 F.3d at 736; Durell, 183 Cal. App. 4th at 1364-66).

OnStar advocates that "Plaintiff does not allege that OnStar's conduct violates the 'letter, policy, or spirit of the antitrust laws, or that it harms competition,' which alone is enough to find that no claim has been stated," Mot. at 18 (quoting Davis, 691 F.3d at 1170), and "Plaintiff also fails to identify how OnStar's conduct violates the policy or spirit of any law, and [*34] fails to identify what those policies and spirits are." Id. Plaintiff disputes that the tethering test is limited to antitrust law, noting that "[t]he test has been applied in cases in which a defendant's conduct violated the spirit or purpose of a wide range of laws." Opp'n at 21-22 (citing Candelore v. Tinder, Inc., 19 Cal. App. 5th 1138, 1155-56 (2018); West v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A., 214 Cal. App. 4th 780, 806 (2013)). Plaintiff also notes that "[t]he complaint plainly alleges that OnStar violated the spirit, and the letter, of the EFTA, the ARL, the TSR, and the FTC Act—all of which are intended to prevent the very kind of deception in which OnStar engaged, namely, charging consumers' debit and credit cards without obtaining the consumers' prior express and informed consent." Id. at 22 (citing Compl. ¶¶ 52, 65, 84, 97, 106).

Here, Plaintiff adequately has alleged that OnStar violated the letter of several laws, including the EFTA, the ARL, and the TSR, see supra Sections I.A, I.C.2.a—c, as well as their underlying policies. See Compl. ¶¶ 52, 65, 84, 106. The Court therefore concludes that Plaintiff adequately has alleged that OnStar engaged in an unfair business practice under the unfair prong of the UCL. See, e.g., Lopez, 307 F. Supp. 3d at 1073 (concluding that the plaintiff plausibly alleged a claim under the unfair prong of the UCL [*35] where he plausibly alleged that the defendant's conduct or practices violated the ARL); Jenkins v. j2 Glob., Inc., No. CV139226DSFMRWX, 2014 WL 12687417, at *5 (C.D. Cal. May 23, 2014) (concluding that the plaintiffs stated a claim under the unfair prong of the UCL where they also stated actionable claims under the CLRA and ARL); Chavez v. Bank of Am. Corp., No. C-10-0653 JCS, 2012 WL 1594272, at *8 (N.D. Cal. May 4, 2012) (concluding that the plaintiff stated a claim under the unfair prong of the UCL where he alleged that he was charged monthly for a credit monitoring service in which he did not enroll); cf. Starks, 2015 WL 12942282, at *7 (dismissing claim under unfair prong of UCL where the plaintiffs failed to allege violation of public policy behind EFTA in their operative complaint). The Court therefore DENIES OnStar's Motion as to Plaintiff's fourth cause of action for violation of the unfair prong of the UCL.

II. Motion to Modify Class Allegations

Because the Court has declined OnStar's Motion to dismiss Plaintiff's EFTA claims, see supra Section I.A, OnStar requests that the Court "delete allegations involving class members residing outside of the state of California" and "eliminate claims under EFTA seeking actual damages." Mot. at 19.

A. Nationwide Class Allegations

Relying on Bristol-Myers Squibb Company v. Superior Court, 137 S. Ct. 1773, 1776 (2017), OnStar argues that it "is not subject to personal jurisdiction with respect to the claims of the unnamed class members" [*36] who reside outside of California, and those class allegations should be dismissed." Mot. at 19. Plaintiff rejoins that "OnStar waived this defense by failing to raise it in its original and amended Rule 12(b) motions," Opp'n at 23, and, "[e]ven if OnStar had not waived its personal jurisdiction defense, the defense fails because Bristol-Myers does not apply to federal courts, and even if it did, it does not apply to federal-question cases specifically." Id. at 24 (citing In re Packaged Seafood Prod. Antitrust Litig., 338 F. Supp. 3d 1118, 1172-73 (S.D. Cal. 2018); In re Morning Song Bird Food Litig., No. 12-CV-1592 JAH (AGS), 2018 WL 1382746, at *5 (S.D. Cal. Mar. 19, 2018)).

"District courts in this circuit regularly deny motions to strike class allegations as premature." Brown v. DIRECTV, LLC, No. CV1301170DMGCFEX, 2014 WL 12599363, at *2 (C.D. Cal. May 27, 2014) (collecting cases); see also Colgate v. JUUL Labs, Inc., 345 F. Supp. 3d 1178, 1196 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (motion to strike nationwide class allegations as premature); Montemayor v. GC Servs. LP, 302 F.R.D. 581, 588 (S.D. Cal. 2014) (concluding that motion to strike class allegations based on failure to meet commonality and predominance requirements because "[t]he issue is better address[ed] during a motion for class certification"); In re Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. Wage & Hour Litig., 505 F. Supp. 2d 609, 615 (N.D. Cal. 2007) ("[W]hile there is little authority on this issue within the Ninth Circuit, decisions from courts in other jurisdictions have made clear that dismissal of class allegations at the pleading stage should be done rarely and that the better course is to deny such a motion because the shape and form of a class action evolves only through the process [*37] of discovery.") (internal quotation marks omitted) (collecting cases). Accordingly, the Court DENIES WITHOUT PREJUDICE OnStar's Motion insofar as it relates to Plaintiff's nationwide class allegations.

B. Actual Damages Allegations

OnStar additionally contends that "Plaintiff's EFTA class is improper to the extent it seeks actual damages" because "EFTA allows for recovery of actual damages only to the extent that a consumer sustained damages 'as a result of' violations of EFTA," which "[c]ourts routinely interpret . . . as requiring consumers to show injury, detrimental reliance, and causation." Mot. at 23 (citing In re TD Bank, N.A. Debit Card Overdraft Fee Litig., No. CV 6:15-MN-2613-BHH, 2018 WL 1003548, at *26 (D.S.C. Feb. 22, 2018); Brown v. Wells Fargo & Co., 284 F.R.D. 432, 447 (D. Minn. 2012); Stilz v. Glob. Cash Network, Inc., No. 10 CV 1998, 2010 WL 3975588, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 7, 2010); Martz v. PNC Bank, N.A., No. CIV.A.06-1075, 2007 WL 2343800, at *8 (W.D. Pa. Aug. 15, 2007)). Consequently, "numerous courts have held that class actions cannot be maintained for actual damages." Id. at 24-25 (citing In re TD Bank, 2018 WL 1003548, at *28; Mabary v. Hometown Bank, N.A., 888 F. Supp. 2d 857, 860 (S.D. Tex. 2012); Brown v. Wells Fargo & Co., 284 F.R.D. at 447; Martz, 2007 WL 2343800, at *8).

Plaintiff does not appear to object, arguing only that "[c]laims for EFTA statutory damages are routinely certified for class treatment" and, "if discovery shows that OnStar's EFTA violations are ongoing, plaintiffs will seek injunctive relief." Opp'n at 25 (citing Kemply v. Cashcall, Inc., No. 08-CV-03174-MEJ, 2016 WL 1055251, at *15-18 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 16), stricken in part on other grounds, 2016 WL 6892693 (Nov. 23, 2016)). Because the parties appear to agree that Plaintiff cannot seek actual damages [*38] on a class-wide basis, the Court GRANTS OnStar's Motion and STRIKES Plaintiff's class claim for actual damages under the EFTA.

CONCLUSION

In light of the foregoing, the Court GRANTS IN PART AND DENIES IN PART Defendant's Motion (ECF No. 73). Specifically, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion as to Plaintiffs first, third, and fourth causes of action; DENIES WITHOUT PREJUDICE Defendant's Motion as to Plaintiff's nationwide class allegations; and GRANTS Defendant's Motion as to Plaintiff's second cause of action and class claim for actual damages under the EFTA.

STARK, U.S. District Judge:

Defendants-Counterclaim Plaintiffs Autel Robotics USA LLC and Autel Aerial Technology Co., Ltd. (collectively, "Autel") assert, in their operative Second Amended Answer ("SAA"), antitrust counterclaims against Plaintiffs-Counterclaim Defendants SZ DJI Technology Co., Ltd. ("SZ DJI"), DJI Europe B.V. ("DJI BV"), and DJI Technology Inc. ("DJI US") (collectively, "DJI"). (D.I. 277) DJI has moved to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\), contending that Autel has not alleged facts that plausibly support any of its antitrust counterclaims. (D.I. 282) After reviewing the parties' [*2] briefing (D.I. 283, 291, 301), the Court will grant DJI's motion.

I. BACKGROUND

On August 11, 2016, DJI filed suit against Autel for patent infringement relating to drone technology and operation. (D.I. 1) Autel filed an amended answer to DJI's complaint on May 23, 2018, which included counterclaims for monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, attempted monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, predatory pricing in violation of sections 17043 and 17044 of the California Unfair Practices Act, and predatory pricing in violation of section 481-3 of the Hawaii Unfair Practices Act. (D.I. 241 at ¶¶ 211-41) DJI moved to dismiss these antitrust counterclaims on June 29, 2018 (D.I. 266), to which Autel responded by filing a second amended answer (D.I. 277) ("SAA"), mooting the earlier motion. DJI filed the present motion on September 14, 2018. (D.I. 282)

Autel describes a drone as an "aircraft without a human pilot aboard, controlled by a ground-based operator, with a system of communications between the two." (D.I. 291 at 2) The parties agree that DJI holds a powerful, if not controlling, position in the drone industry. (Id. at 3; D.I. 283 at 6) Autel characterizes its antitrust counterclaims as relating specifically [*3] to the market for "prosumer" drones, which are "[m]ore than toys and less than fully-configured professional units," are "easy to use," "and contain certain 'pro' features, like improved cameras, navigation software and growing intelligence." (D.I. 291 at 3) (citing SAA at ¶ 61) Autel alleges that DJI has captured the majority of the growth of this market, fueling its monopoly power. (Id.) Autel further alleges that using this market power, "DJI has repeatedly engaged in predatory pricing to blunt the advance of new competitors and ultimately drive them out of the prosumer drone market entirely or, at a minimum, to its fringes." (Id.) "[N]early a dozen companies have attempted to bring new and better 'prosumer' drones to American consumers . . . [b]ut each time DJI has perceived a new threat, DJI has used its dominant market share to maintain and extend its monopoly by predatorily cutting its prices, below cost, to undercut the advent of the competitor drone." (Id. at 4) Autel describes "a continuing pattern of DJI's anti-competitive conduct," whereby DJI tactically lowers its price below cost to drive out each new competitor that enters. (Id. at 4-7)

Conversely, DJI characterizes its success as stemming [*4] from "several key advantages over its competitors," namely "the largest research and development team in the industry with a state-of-the-art R&D infrastructure" and a "manufacturing facility in Shenzhen, China . . . with direct access to the best supply chain of electronic components." (D.I. 283 at 6) DJI asserts that, despite its large market share, it does not have monopoly power, as shown by allegations Autel included in its SAA, including that "as many as a dozen companies (including Autel) introduce[ed] new products to the market over the past few years at prices comparable to and often lower than those offered by DJI." (Id. at 7) (citing SAA at ¶¶ 62, 70, 100, 112, 115, 124-26, 149) "Thus, according to Autel's own allegations, DJI's years of alleged predatory pricing practices did nothing to deter a steady onslaught of new and persistent competition." (Id. at 7) DJI further blames the exit of these competitors on their own "failure and troubles." (Id. at 8)

DJI insists that Autel's allegations of below-cost pricing are "nothing more than speculation," pointing out that Autel "does not, for example, identify any of DJI's advertised prices, does not identify any prices offered by DJI resellers, and does [*5] not identify any transactions in which a purchaser actually paid the prices alleged." (Id. at 8-9) (citing SAA at ¶¶ 69(a), 127(a), 127(c), 69(b), 127(d), 69(c), 128) DJI provides the Court with a DJI accounting document that Autel obtained through discovery (on the pending patent claims) and which forms the basis of Autel's pricing and cost allegations.<sup>1</sup> This accounting document provides DJI's revenue, cost, gross profit, and quantity of drones sold by DJI for each month in 2016. Autel replies to DJI's analysis of its accounting document by asking the Court to deny DJI's motion to allow the parties to ascertain "[t]he real meaning of DJI's internal financial analysis, produced during discovery on DJI's patent claims, which Autel contends demonstrates DJI's predatory pricing." (D.I. 291 at 1) DJI finds further flaws in Autel's counterclaims, including Autel's "measure of cost" and whether DJI had the ability to recoup lost profits.

<sup>1</sup> The Court may properly look to this document (D.I. 284-6; D.I. 284-8) in evaluating the motion to dismiss, even though it is not cited in the SAA, because it is plainly integral to and a basis for Autel's counterclaims. See In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1426 \(3d Cir. 1997\) (stating that party "cannot prevent a court from looking at the texts of the documents on which its claim is based by failing to attach or explicitly cite them"); Pension Benefit Guar. Corp. v. White Consol. Indus., 998 F.2d 1192, 1196 \(3d Cir. 1993\) ("A court may consider an undisputedly authentic document that a defendant attaches as an exhibit to a motion to dismiss if the plaintiff's claims are based on the document."); D.I. 291 at 10 (Autel acknowledging its counterclaims rely on "facts derived from [this] document, among other sources"))

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Rule 12(b)(6) Motion to Dismiss

Evaluating a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) requires the Court to accept as true all material allegations of the complaint. See Spruill v. Gillis, 372 F.3d 218, 223 (3d Cir. 2004). "The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled [*6] to offer evidence to support the claims." In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d at 1420 (internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, the Court may grant such a motion to dismiss only if, after "accepting all well-pleaded allegations in the complaint as true, and viewing them in the light most favorable to plaintiff, plaintiff is not entitled to relief." Maio v. Aetna, Inc., 221 F.3d 472, 481-82 (3d Cir. 2000) (internal quotation marks omitted).

A well-pleaded complaint must contain more than mere labels and conclusions. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009); Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). A plaintiff must plead facts sufficient to show that a claim has substantive plausibility. See Johnson v. City of Shelby, 574 U.S. 10, 135 S. Ct. 346, 347, 190 L. Ed. 2d 309 (2014). A complaint may not be dismissed, however, for imperfect statements of the legal theory supporting the claim asserted. See id. at 346.

"To survive a motion to dismiss, a civil plaintiff must allege facts that 'raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact).'" Victaulic Co. v. Tieman, 499 F.3d 227, 234 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). A claim is facially plausible "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. At bottom, "[t]he complaint must state enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of [each] [*7] necessary element" of a plaintiff's claim. Wilkerson v. New Media Tech. Charter Sch. Inc., 522 F.3d 315, 321 (3d Cir. 2008) (internal quotation marks omitted).

The Court is not obligated to accept as true "bald assertions," Morse v. Lower Merion Sch. Dist., 132 F.3d 902, 906 (3d Cir. 1997) (internal quotation marks omitted), "unsupported conclusions and unwarranted inferences," Schuylkill Energy Res., Inc. v. Pa. Power & Light Co., 113 F.3d 405, 417 (3d Cir. 1997), or allegations that are "self-evidently false," Nami v. Fauver, 82 F.3d 63, 69 (3d Cir. 1996).

B. Predatory Pricing

The Supreme Court has described a two-part framework for analyzing price-based monopolization under the Sherman Act:

First a plaintiff seeking to establish competitive injury resulting from a rival's low prices must prove that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs . . . . The second prerequisite to holding a competitor liable under the antitrust laws for charging low prices is a demonstration that the competitor had a reasonable prospect, or, under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a dangerous probability, of recouping its investment in below-cost prices.

Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 222-24, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993); see also Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 317 (3d Cir. 2007) ("A claim of attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act must allege (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.") (internal quotation marks omitted). Similarly, [*8] California and Hawaii predatory pricing statutes require Plaintiff to plead (and ultimately prove) below-cost pricing coupled with an intent to destroy competition. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17043; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481-3; see also generally Varentec, Inc. v. Gridco, Inc., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86185, 2017 WL 2438846, at \*9 \(D. Del. June 6, 2017\) ("Each of defendant's state law claims is based on the same below-cost pricing allegations underlying its federal predatory pricing claims.").

III. DISCUSSION

Autel Does Not Sufficiently and Plausibly Allege Below-Cost Pricing

Autel does not sufficiently and plausibly plead that DJI priced its prosumer drones below costs. As DJI argues, Autel's allegations "are not based on the prices DJI actually charged for the drones it sold in a given month." (D.I. 283 at 12) In fact, "Autel does not identify any of DJI's advertised prices, nor any of the prices advertised by any of DJI's many resellers, nor any actual transaction prices." (Id. at 14) Instead, Autel merely takes the DJI accounting document it obtained in patent-related discovery, divides revenue by quantity, and alleges the resulting figure to be the monthly price. Autel alleges nothing to plausibly show that this is the method DJI uses to determine price or that Autel's resulting figures are in any way representative of DJI's actual prices. As DJI points [*9] out, Autel's method does not account for "among other things, refunds and returns on products that were sold in other months." (Id. at 14 n. 16) As DJI also argues, "the document records negative 'revenue' in numerous months, which implies — using the math that Autel uses to derive 'price' — that DJI in those months must have paid its customers to take its drones." (D.I. 301 at 6)

Also, unlike the other cases involving allegations of below-cost pricing (on information and belief) and without factual basis and purely speculative. It is insufficient to plead "conclusory allegations in support of . . . predatory pricing claims." Varentec, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86185, 2017 WL 2438846, at \*5.

Finally, the Supreme Court has expressly cautioned against allowing antitrust claims like the ones pled by Autel from proceeding where the allegations are inadequate, as they are here. "[C]utting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition. Thus, mistaken inferences in cases such as this one are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 594, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\). Even if DJI's pricing drove out competitors, this does not constitute a plausible allegation that it was DJU's below-cost predatory pricing that caused [*10] others to fail.

In short, the Court agrees with DJI: "[A]ll of the facts alleged in the Counterclaim (as opposed to Autel's conclusory assertions) are fully consistent with robust competition in a growing market, including allegedly declining prices, increasing output, product innovation, and repeated new entry. Because there is no plausibly alleged anticompetitive conduct, Autel cannot satisfy the requirements for stating a predatory pricing claim under federal or state antitrust law." (D.I. 301 at 1)

Having failed to allege a below-cost price,<sup>2</sup> or other facts demonstrating that DJI sold prosumer drones in a predatory manner, Autel's antitrust counterclaims, both federal and state, will be dismissed.

---

<sup>2</sup> Given the Court's conclusions, it is not necessary to address DJI's separate contention that Autel's claims fail also because of the meaning of "cost" as used in the DJI accounting sheet. (See D.I. 283 at 12-14; D.I. 291 at 15-19) Nor will the Court reach DJI's identification of deficiencies in Autel's pleading of intent to monopolize, likelihood of recoupment, or the relevant market.

For the reasons stated above, the Court will grant Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss.

ORDER ON DEFENDANTS' PARTIAL MOTION TO DISMISS

Pending before the Court is Defendants Maine Controls, LLC and Mechanical Services, LLC's (collectively "Maine Controls") partial motion to dismiss pursuant to M.R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Plaintiff Patriot Mechanical, LLC ("Patriot") opposes the motion. The Court heard oral argument on the motion on February 26, 2019. A. Robert Ruesch, Esq. appeared for Maine Controls and Dan Feldman, Esq. appeared for Patriot.

BACKGROUND

The following facts are taken from Maine Controls' Complaint and for purposes of this motion are treated as admitted. Patriot, an HVAC contractor, requested a quote from Maine Controls on the cost of services and component parts in preparing its bid for a project at the City of Portland, Maine's North Deering fire station (the "Project"). (Pl's Compl. ¶¶ 9, 16.) Patriot assumed that Maine Controls components and services were required to win the contract. (Pl's Compl. ¶¶ 10-12.) Maine Controls quoted a base bid price of $82,250 (the "Quote") for the services and components necessary for the Project. (Pl's Compl. ¶ 17.) Patriot believed this to be the standardized [*2] quote given to any and all mechanical contractors who sought a quote for the Project. (Pl's Compl. ¶ 19.) Furthermore, Patriot believed that Maine Controls wanted Patriot to believe that the Quote was a standardized quote given to any and all mechanical contractors who sought a quote for the Project. (Pl's Compl. ¶ 20.) Patriot used the Quote in its bid for the Project. (Pl's Compl. 23.) Patriot's bid was roughly $25,000 higher than the winning bid for the Project. (Pl's Compl. ¶ 24.) This resulted in damages to Patriot both in the form of lost profits for failing to submit a winning bid for the Project and for damage to Patriot's reputation for submitting an artificially inflated bid. (Pl's Compl. ¶ 36.) Patriot filed an eleven-count complaint against Maine Controls for these alleged misdeeds; in the instant motion, Maine Controls seeks dismissal of eight of those counts.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

In reviewing a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), courts "consider the facts in the complaint as if they were admitted." Bonney v. Stephens Mem. Hosp., 2011 ME 46, ¶ 16, 17 A.3d 123. The complaint is viewed "in the light most favorable to the plaintiff to determine whether it sets forth elements of a cause of action or alleges facts that would entitle [*3] the plaintiff to relief pursuant to some legal theory." Id. (quoting Saunders v. Fisher, 2006 ME 94, ¶ 8, 902 A.2d 830). "Dismissal is warranted when it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff is not entitled to relief under any set of facts that he might prove in support of his claim." Id. "The legal sufficiency of a complaint challenged pursuant to M.R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is a question of law" and thus subject to de novo appellate review. Marshall v. Town of Dexter, 2015 ME 135, ¶ 2, 125 A.3d 1141.

DISCUSSION

I. Fraud

In Count I, Patriot pleads fraud against Maine Controls. To prevail on a fraud claim, a plaintiff must prove the following elements by clear and convincing evidence:

(1) A party made a false representation, (2) The representation was of a material fact, (3) The representation was made with knowledge of its falsity or in reckless disregard of whether it was true or false, (4) The representation was made for the purpose of inducing another party to act in reliance upon it, and (5) The other party justifiably relied upon the representation as true and acted upon it to the party's damage.

Barr v. Dyke, 2012 ME 108, ¶ 16, 49 A.3d 1280 (citing Flaherty v. Muther, 2011 ME 32, ¶ 45, 17 A.3d 640). In its motion to dismiss, Maine Controls claims that Patriot's allegation that the Quote contained information that was knowingly false or provided with reckless disregard as to its falsity [*4] fails as a matter of law because the putative misrepresentation—the Quote—cannot be true or false. Patriot responds that in fact Maine Controls represented that the Quote was for what "the services and parts would cost a bidder" when it knew that the cost was in fact significantly lower. (Pl's Compl. ¶¶ 39-42.)

Although most causes of action are allowed to be pleaded generally, Maine Controls points out that M.R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires "the circumstances constituting fraud" to be "stated with particularity." Under this standard, Patriot's general allegations that the Quote was represented as being the cost (as opposed to the price) of the requested services and components is insufficient to adequately plead the "false representation" element of fraud. The mere fact that Maine Controls' Quote was addressed to "mechanical contractor" rather than Patriot simply does not make the Quote a lie, even if Patriot were to ultimately prove at trial that the Quote is not an accurate representation of the actual cost of the requested parts and services. See Eaton v. Sontag, 387 A.2d 33, 38 \(Me. 1978\) (Every man has the right to ask any price he sees fit [for his goods or services]).

Patriot has therefore failed to properly allege that Maine [*5] Controls made a false representation when it issued the Quote under M.R. Civ. P. 9(b). The Complaint therefore fails to allege an essential element of fraud. Maine Controls' motion is granted with respect to Count I.

II. Negligence

Patriot pleads negligent misrepresentation (Count II) and negligence (Count VI) against Maine Controls. In its motion, Maine Controls does not argue that Patriot has failed to adequately allege the elements of either claim. Instead, Maine Controls argues that these claims are barred by the economic loss doctrine. Patriot responds that the economic loss doctrine is only applicable to actions based on product failure and merely limits "tort recovery for a defective product's damage to itself." Oceanside at Pine Point Condominium Owners Ass'n v. Peachtree Doors, Inc., 659 A.2d 267, 270 \(Me. 1995\).

In general, the economic loss doctrine prevents recovery in tort for purely economic damages and has been applied to bar tort claims in actions grounded in breach of contract or warranty theories, including claims involving breach of a service contract. Oceanside at Pine Point Condo. Owners Ass'n., 659 A.2d at 269-71. Patriot is correct that the Law Court has not yet recognized application of the economic loss doctrine outside the context of tangible property. Other Maine courts, including the U.S. District Court for the District [*6] of Maine, the Maine Superior Court, and this Court have applied the doctrine to service contracts as well. See Me. Rubber Int'l v. Envtl. Mgmt. Grp., Inc., 298 F. Supp. 2d 133, 136 (D. Me. 2004); Twin Homes, Inc. v. Molley, No. CV-01-298, 2002 Me. Super. LEXIS 209 (Nov. 14, 2002); Bayreuther v. Gardner, No. CV-99-352, 2000 Me. Super. LEXIS 140 (June 21, 2000); SME Corp. v. Belfast Bridge, LLC, No. BCD-WB-CV-07-28, *2009 Me. Bus. & Consumer LEXIS 25, at *26-27* (Bus. & Consumer Ct. Apr. 8, 2009, Humphrey, C.J.).

Patriot's negligence claim alleges only that Maine Controls breached a duty. (Pl's Compl. ¶ 83.) Presumably, this duty arose out of Patriot's request for a quote from Maine Controls. As explained in more detail below, Patriot's only other possible alternative basis for imposition of a duty—the existence of a confidential relationship between the parties—is wholly inadequate as a matter of law. The parties are both commercial entities whose relationship could at best be described as a commercial contract.<sup>1</sup> See Schmid Pipeline Constr. v. Summit Nat. Gas of Me., Inc., No. 1:13-cv-464-GZS, *2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100435, at *10 (D. Me. June 23, 2014)* (where "dispute is over the 'value and quality of what was purchased,' in the absence of any facts of a special relationship between the parties that might give rise to duty in tort (e.g., a fiduciary relationship), an aggrieved party's recourse should be governed by the terms of the contract. Whether a court [*7] formally extends application of the economic loss doctrine to bar tort recovery, or whether a court determines that recognition of a duty in tort under the circumstances is not appropriate, the result is the same."). Therefore, Plaintiffs' remedy for an alleged breach of the undefined "duty" necessarily sounds only in contract. See id.

Several of the cases cited above recognize that the economic loss doctrine bars claims for negligent misrepresentation in actions based on contract or warranty theories. See id. at *5-6, 10; Me. Rubber Int'l. 298 F. Supp. 2d at 136; Peachtree Doors, 659 A.2d at 269-71. Patriot's complaint alleges Maine Controls "made false statements, misrepresentations and representations;" all related to the Quote that Patriot used in its bid for the Project. (Pl's Compl. ¶ 52.) As with Plaintiffs' negligence claim, this claim is at best a mislabeled contract claim, the recovery for which sounds in contract alone. Plaintiffs' claims for negligence and negligent misrepresentation will be dismissed.

III. Defamation

In Counts III and IV, Patriot alleges that Maine Controls is liable for defamation and defamation per se. Maine Controls argues that Patriot has failed to allege any of the elements of defamation. A claim for [*8] defamation requires (1) a false and defamatory statement concerning another, (2) an unprivileged publication to a third party, (3) fault amounting at least to negligence on the part of the publisher, and (4) either actionability of the statement irrespective of special harm (defamation per se) or the existence of special harm caused by the publication. Cole v. Chandler, 2000 ME 104, ¶ 5, 752 A.2d 1189.

The supposedly defamatory statement is the Quote. Patriot's opposition devotes several pages to persuading the Court that the Quote is a statement. However, regardless of whether the Quote is a statement, the allegations are insufficient to show that it is either false or defamatory. It is not false because it is incapable of being true or false by its very nature, as explained above. See Eaton, 387 A.2d at 38. It is not defamatory because it does not "tend[] so to harm [Patriot's] reputation . . . as to lower [it] in the estimation of the community or to deter third persons from associating or dealing with [it]." Schoff v. York Cty., 2000 ME 205, ¶ 9 n.3, 761 A.2d 869 (citing Bakal v. Weare, 583

<sup>1</sup> Maine Controls has not moved for dismissal of Patriot's breach of contract claim, Count IX, in the instant motion. (Pl's Compl. ¶¶ 96-101.) As noted in Me. Rubber Int'l, Patriot still have "the traditional recourse for breach of contract and any damages [it] can prove under contract law standards, given the contract [it] entered into. Contract law allows for foreseeable damages arising from the breach (though these may be limited by the contractual language.)" 298 F. Supp. 2d at 138 & n. 7; see also Peachtree Doors, 659 A.2d at 271 ("Plaintiffs' claims for economic damages—the costs of all repairs, renovation, corrections and replacements related to the Defendant's defective performance of its contract—are properly addressable under a warranty theory.").

A.2d 1028, 1029 (Me. 1990); Restatement (Second) of Torts § 559(1977)). In fact, the statement says nothing about Patriot whatsoever. "[A] statement is defamatory only if it is of or concerning a plaintiff." Gaudette v. Davis, 2017 ME 86, ¶ 25 n.10, 160 A.3d 1190 (citing Hudson v. Guy Gannett Broad. Co., 521 A.2d 714, 716 (Me. 1987)). Furthermore, there is no allegation that Maine Controls "published" the Quote [*9] to anyone third party. In paragraph sixty-six of its complaint, Patriot alleges that Maine Controls made statements that "were unprivileged publications to a third party" but provides no further detail; other factual allegations seem inconsistent with the notion that Maine Controls shared the Quote with anyone other than Patriot. (See PI's Compl. ¶¶ 23, 33.) In opposition to Maine Control's motion to dismiss, Patriot clarified that it is relying on an agency theory whereby Maine Controls made Patriot its agent by providing a quote that was designed to be shared with another. Patriot cites no authority for this novel theory of publication and the Court is not aware of any.

In sum, Patriot has failed to state a claim for defamation under either a traditional or "defamation per se" theory. Counts III and IV of Patriot's Complaint must be dismissed.

IV. Antitrust

Patriot alleges that Maine Controls violated Maine's antitrust laws, 10 M.R.S. §§ 1101-1102.<sup>2</sup> Maine Controls responds that Patriot has failed to adequately allege necessary elements under both section 1101 and 1102.

In Count VII, Patriot alleges a violation of 10 M.R.S. § 1101, which provides: "Every contract, combination in the form of trusts or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint [*10] of trade of commerce in this State is declared to be illegal. Whoever makes any such contract or engages in any such combination or conspiracy is guilty of a Class C crime." Maine Controls argues that Patriot has not alleged the existence of a "contract, combination in the form of trusts or otherwise, or conspiracy" because the Complaint at most alleges a "conspiracy" between the two Defendants, and because the two Defendants are in fact the same company, that company could not have "conspired with itself." See Podiatrist Ass'n v. La Cruz Azul de P.R., Inc., 332 F.3d 6, 12 (1st Cir. 2003) ("the plaintiff must show concerted action between two or more separate parties" under the federal analog to 10 M.R.S. § 1101).<sup>3</sup> Patriot does not necessarily challenge this requirement, but argues that the alleged conspiracy is not necessarily between the two Defendants<sup>4</sup> but rather between the Defendants and the other bidders on the Project who got a quote from Maine Controls.

The problem with Patriot's argument is that the Complaint does not allege a conspiracy between Maine Controls and anyone else who requested a quote for Maine Controls' services and components for the Project. Patriot only alleges that "[t]he defendants entered into a [*11] contract, combination or conspiracy regarding the quote for components and service for the [Project]." (PI's Compl. ¶ 86.) There are no allegations with respect to who the Defendants entered into this alleged conspiracy with. Patriot claims that it alleges a conspiracy between Maine Controls and the other bidders on the Project in paragraphs twenty-four through twenty-six and paragraph thirty-two of the Complaint. However, these allegations claim only that Maine Controls offered a lower quote to the winning bidder and that Patriot lost the bid as a result. This is not at all the same as alleging that Maine Controls conspired with the other bidders to "fix" a quote for the winning bidder. Cf. In re Insurance Brokerage Antitrust Litigation, 618 F.3d 300, 336 (3d Cir. 2010) ("Bid rigging—or more specifically, as alleged in this case, bid rotation—is quintessentially collusive behavior subject to per se condemnation under [the federal analog to 10 M.R.S. § 1101]."). At oral argument, Patriot conceded that it is "not aware of a conspiracy in the classic sense" between Maine Controls and any other bidder. In sum, Count VII must be dismissed for failure to allege a contract, combination in the form of trusts or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade.

<sup>3</sup> Maine courts may consider federal antitrust law as persuasive authority when construing Maine's antitrust statute. McKinnon v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 2009 ME 69, ¶ 19, 977 A.2d 420.

<sup>4</sup> Patriot does not object to the Court considering Def's Ex. C, a public filing with the Maine Secretary of State that shows Maine Controls is an assumed name of Mechanical Services. See Moody v. State Liquor & Lott. Comm'n, 2004 ME 20, ¶ 11, 843 A.2d 43. However, in its written opposition, Patriot does argue that it is a question of fact as to whether the two Defendants are in fact the same company, notwithstanding its allegation in paragraph 15 of its Complaint: "The exact relationship between Maine Controls and Mechanical services is unclear but it appears that for all intents and purposes, they are the same entity." (emphasis added). It seems that Def's Ex. C is dispositive of this factual issue, but in any event, it is not really relevant to Patriot's section 1101 claim. The effect of the Defendants' combined control of the market in Maine, and whether that effect is anticompetitive, is more properly considered in the context of a section 1102 claim, which is discussed below.

Count VIII alleges an antitrust [*12] violation under 10 M.R.S. § 1102, which provides: "Whoever shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize or combine or conspire with any other persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce of this State shall be guilty of a Class C crime." Maine Controls argues that Patriot has not defined the relevant market or alleged an "antitrust injury," both of which are essential elements to state a claim under section 1102. At oral argument, Patriot claimed that discovery will be necessary to define the relevant market and otherwise responds that it has alleged an "antitrust injury" sufficient to state a claim under section 1102.

At least one U.S. District Court in the First Circuit has dismissed an antitrust claim for failure to adequately "allege a relevant geographic and product market in which trade was unreasonably restrained or monopolized." N. Am. Energy Sys., LLC v. New Eng. Energy Mgmt., 269 F. Supp. 2d 12, 16 (D. Conn. 2002) (citing cases). Cf. Envirnmt'l Exch., Inc. v. Casella Waste Sys., No. CV-05-25, 2005 Me. Super. LEXIS 140, at *5-6, 12-14 (Oct. 24, 2005, Hjelm, J.) (denying motion to dismiss plaintiff's section 1102 claim where relevant geographic and product market specifically alleged to be "sources of clean fly ash in northeastern Maine"). Like in N. Am. Energy Sys., LLC, and unlike Envirnmt'l Exch., Inc., Patriot's allegations include virtually [*13] no definition of the relevant market in terms of either geographic scope or products. In paragraph eleven, Patriot alleges that Maine Controls was in a position to "corner the market" because "the North Deering Fire Station already us[ed] its components." Later, Patriot alleges that Maine Controls "monopolize[d] trade for components and services . . . regarding a part of the trade or commerce of the State of Maine." (Pl's Compl. ¶¶ 92-93.) At the oral argument, Patriot suggested "pre-existing boilers with components in them" as the product market and "boilers in the state of Maine, maybe smaller" as the relevant geographic market. The problem with Patriot's suggestion at oral argument is that it goes beyond what was actually alleged in the Complaint, which describes only a single transaction besides a passing reference to "a part of the trade or commerce of the State of Maine." (Pl's Compl. ¶ 93.) Maine Controls is entitled to have notice of what Patriot intends to prove in terms of the geographic and product market that Maine Controls has allegedly monopolized. See N. Am. Energy Sys., LLC, 269 F. Supp. 2d at 16. Even if Patriot proves the allegation that Maine Controls was in a position to "corner the market" on the Project, [*14] i.e. it was the only vendor that could provide the necessary services and components on the Project and therefore could essentially charge whatever it wanted and decide who won the bid, it does not follow that Maine Controls therefore had a monopoly over the servicing of all pre-existing boilers in Maine.

The question of whether Patriot has alleged an antitrust injury is in some ways dependent on whether Patriot can allege a geographic and product market over which Maine Controls has a monopoly. As alleged, Patriot is a would-be customer of Maine Controls who sought to obtain Maine Controls' components and services, and thus a "presumptive proper" plaintiff. See In re Compact Disc Min. Advertised Price Antitrust Litig., 456 F. Supp. 2d 131, 146 (D. Me. 2006). Couched in terms of a single transaction<sup>5</sup>—the Quote on the Project—Patriot's injury seems much more like a claim for breach of contract than antitrust. See Central Distrib., Inc. v. Labatt US Operating Co., No. BCD-CV-12-33, 2012 Me. Bus. & Consumer LEXIS 41, at *15 ("[Plaintiff] has alleged no facts as to how the competition among wholesalers has been weakened or affected. The gist of this claim is really a restatement of a breach of contract action."). In effect, Patriot has pleaded "no more than 'labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements [*15] of a cause of action," and therefore "fails to state a claim for antitrust statute violations." Id. (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007)). Therefore, Count VIII must be dismissed for failure to allege a definable relevant geographic and product market in which trade was constrained or any injury resulting from Maine Control's purported anticompetitive conduct.

V. Breach of Duty of a Confidential Relationship

In Count XI, Patriot alleges the existence of a confidential relationship between Patriot and Maine Mechanical and, further, that Maine Mechanical breached a duty of loyalty that it owed to Patriot by virtue of that relationship. However, Patriot does not allege any specific facts of a particular relationship, only reciting the basic elements of a fiduciary duty. (Pl's Compl. ¶¶ 103-09.)

"To survive a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff must allege facts with sufficient particularity to enable the court to determine whether, if true, such facts could give rise to a fiduciary relationship." Ramsey v. Baxter Title Co., 2012 ME 113, ¶ 6, 54 A.3d 710 (quotations omitted). "Reciting the basic elements of a fiduciary relationship cannot substitute for an articulation in the complaint of the specific facts of a particular relationship." Id.; see also Bryan R. v. Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc. of N.Y., Inc., 1999 ME 114, ¶ 21, 738 A.2d 839 ("because the law does [*16] not generally require individuals to act for the benefit of others, the factual foundations of an alleged fiduciary relationship must be pled with specificity").

In opposition to Maine Controls' motion to dismiss, Patriot does not argue that it has alleged facts necessary to meet the higher pleading standard for breach of fiduciary duty. Instead, Patriot argues that it is entitled to the inference that a fiduciary relationship arose between the parties based on the Quote. See, e.g., Brown v. Me. State Emples. Ass'n, 1997 ME 24, ¶ 5, 690 A.2d 956 (motion to dismiss only granted when "treating the material allegations of the complaint as true and examining the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff . . . it alleges the elements of a cause of action against the defendant or alleges facts that could entitle the plaintiff to relief under some legal theory") (quotation omitted). However, this general pleading standard is significantly narrowed when the existence of a fiduciary or confidential relationship is alleged. A plaintiff must plead specific facts for the Court to determine whether those facts could give rise to a fiduciary relationship. Ramsey, 2012 ME 113, ¶ 6, 54 A.3d 710; Bryan R., 1999 ME 114, ¶ 21, 738 A.2d 839. The facts alleged here do not meet this standard. Patriot requested a quote from Maine [*17] Controls in an arms-length transaction; that was the extent of their relationship based on the facts alleged in the complaint. See Oceanic Inn, Inc. v. Sloan's Cove, LLC, 2016 ME 34, ¶ 18, 133 A.3d 1021 (fiduciary duty "does not arise merely because of the existence of . . . business relationships"). Patriot has not stated a claim for breach of confidential relationship based on the allegations in the Complaint. Maine Controls motion to dismiss is granted with respect to Count XI.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing it is ORDERED:

That Defendants Maine Controls and Mechanical Services' motion for partial dismissal is GRANTED. Counts I, II, III, IV, VI, VII, VIII, and X of Plaintiff Patriot Mechanical's Complaint are dismissed

The Clerk is requested to enter this Order on the docket for this case by incorporating it by reference. M.R. Civ. P. 79(a).

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter comes before the Court upon the motions of Plaintiff BanxCorp ("Plaintiff" or "BanxCorp") and Defendant Bankrate, Inc. ("Defendant" or "Bankrate") for summary judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56. ECF Nos. 389, 405, 466. The parties opposed each other's motions (ECF Nos. 413, 417), and filed replies (ECF Nos. 419, 421). In addition, Defendant filed a motion to strike the declaration of Norbert Mehl (ECF No. 416) and a motion to strike the report and opinions of Stan V. Smith, Ph.D (ECF No. 415). Plaintiff opposed both motions (ECF Nos. 422, 423), and Defendant filed replies in response (ECF Nos. 426, 427).<sup>1</sup> Oral argument was heard [*2] on the aforementioned motions in this matter. ECF No. 473. For the reasons set forth below, Defendant's motion for summary judgment is granted and Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment is denied. Further, Defendant's motion to strike the declaration of Norbert Mehl is denied and Defendant's motion to strike the report and opinions of Stan V. Smith, Ph.D is moot.

II. BACKGROUND

A. Factual Background

This action arises from the parties' competition to maintain websites providing information to the general public about interest rates for financial products.

1. The Parties

Plaintiff BanxCorp was founded by Norbert Mehl in 1984 as a print and online publisher of financial information. See Plaintiff's Statement of Material Facts ("PSMF"), ECF No. 410-1, ¶ 19; Defendant's Statement of Material Facts ("DSMF"), ECF No. 405-2, ¶ 149. In 1995 or 1996, BanxCorp began operating a website, BanxQuote.com, which listed interest rates offered by different financial service providers ("FSPs"). See PSMF ¶¶ 25, 104; DSMF ¶¶ 152, 154. BanxCorp lost its value as a going concern and exited the market by December 31, 2010. See PSMF ¶¶ 463-64.

Defendant Bankrate owns and operates a number of websites that publish [*3] financial data and advice. DSMF ¶ 1; Plaintiff's Responsive Statement of Material Facts ("PRSMF"), ECF No. 417-1, ¶ 1. In 1996, Bankrate began offering information concerning interest rates for various financial products on its flagship website, Bankrate.com. See PSMF ¶ 26; DSMF ¶ 2.

2. The Relevant Product Market

Plaintiff labels the relevant product market in this litigation the market for "fee-based aggregated bank rate table listings with interactive functionalities on the internet" ("FABRTL"), and contends the relevant geographic market is the whole of the United States. PSMF ¶¶ 1, 3. During the time period at issue, both BanxQuote.com and Bankrate.com offered information concerning bank rates. A visitor to either of those websites could "interact" with the websites by typing in parameters for a particular financial product—such as a mortgage loan in the visitor's zip code—which would cause the website to generate a table listing interest rates for that financial product. See October 14, 2015 Oral Argument Transcript ("Tr.") 21:4-23:5, 90:9-20. Some or all of the bank rate listings in the table were hyperlinked to the FSP's website. See PSMF ¶ 8; DSMF 8. By clicking on the hyperlink [*4] for a rate, a visitor could navigate directly from BanxQuote.com or Bankrate.com to the website of the FSP offering that rate to consumers. PSMF ¶ 8; DSMF ¶ 8; Tr. 23:16. FSPs paid BanxCorp and Bankrate to have their interest rates appear on the rate tables in the form of hyperlinks. PSMF ¶ 7; DSMF ¶ 8.

<sup>1</sup> In a prior Order (ECF No. 465), the Court addressed Plaintiff's submission (ECF No. 440) regarding discovery disputes and, upon agreement of the parties, reserved certain issues regarding the expert report of Mark Glueck and related sanctions requests. The Court herein addresses those remaining issues.

Defendant Bankrate's rate tables differ from those of Plaintiff BanxCorp in one key respect: Bankrate's tables also contain a sample of competitive interest rates displayed in a form that Bankrate calls "editorial listings." See DSMF ¶ 94-95. Unlike the paid rate listings, these "editorial listings" are not offered for sale nor are they hyperlinked. See DSMF ¶ 95; Tr. 26:4-10.<sup>2</sup> According to Bankrate, the purpose of editorial listings is to provide consumers with additional context to make comparisons with paid rate listings and to make tables with comparatively few paid listings appear fuller. See DSMF ¶¶ 97-98.

3. The Parties' Businesses

a) The Parties' Pricing Models

Until October 1, 2005, both BanxCorp and Bankrate charged FSPs a flat fee for hyperlinked rate listings to appear on a rate table. See PSMF ¶ 6; DSMF ¶¶ 109, 157. On October 1, 2005, Bankrate adopted a "cost-per-click" model [*5] where FSPs paid Bankrate each time a visitor to Bankrate.com clicked on the FSP's listing. See PSMF ¶ 6; DSMF ¶¶ 110, 112. In or about February 2006, BanxCorp also adopted a cost-per-click pricing model. PSMF ¶ 6; DSMF ¶ 122; PRSMF ¶ 122.

b) Bankrate's Co-Branding Partnership Agreements

Defendant Bankrate has developed "co-branding" partnerships with various media outlets, such as Bloomberg.com. See, e.g., PSMF ¶ 272; DSMF ¶ 61-62. Pursuant to those co-branding partnerships, the co-brand partners' websites display financial information provided by Bankrate. DSMF ¶ 62; PRSMF ¶ 62. A visitor to the co-brand partner's website who clicks on Bankrate's financial information content will be directed to a separate "co-brand website" containing FABRTL that Bankrate owns and manages. DSMF ¶¶ 62-65.<sup>3</sup> Bankrate's co-branding agreements typically contain exclusivity provisions that preclude the co-brand partner from displaying a competitor's FABRTL during the term of the agreement. See PSMF ¶ 298; DSMF ¶ 71.

c) Bankrate's Paid Search Engine Marketing

Bankrate also drives consumer traffic to its website through paid search engine marketing. DSMF ¶ 44; PRSMF ¶ 44. Bankrate bids at auction on certain [*6] search terms that a consumer might type into a search engine. See DSMF ¶ 45; PRSMF ¶ 45. In general, if Bankrate wins the bid for a search term, an advertisement for Bankrate.com will appear at the top of the search engine's paid search results list whenever a visitor to the search engine types in that search term. See DSMF ¶ 46; PRSMF ¶ 46. Each time a visitor to the search engine clicks on one of Bankrate's advertisements, Bankrate typically pays the search engine. See DSMF ¶ 47; PRSMF ¶ 47.

d) Bankrate's Acquisitions of MMIS/Interest.com and Bankaholic

In December 2005, Bankrate acquired Mortgage Market Information Services, Inc. ("MMIS") and its subsidiary, Interest.com (collectively, "MMIS/Interest.com"), a website that published and advertised interest rates. See PSMF ¶¶ 252, 254; DSMF ¶¶ 135, 139. In September 2008, Bankrate acquired Bankaholic, which owned Bankaholic.com, a website that provided consumers with non-hyperlinked interest rates. PSMF ¶ 259; DSMF ¶¶ 140, 142.

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiff contends that "some of Bankrate's [editorial] listings are hyperlinked and others are not," PRSMF ¶ 8, but its evidence does not support that assertion.

<sup>3</sup> Although Plaintiff purports to dispute the foregoing paragraphs in Defendant's Statement of Material Facts, it appears to accept Defendant's description of the basic mechanics of its co-branding partnerships. See PRSMF ¶¶ 62-65.

B. Procedural Background<sup>4</sup>

Presently before the Court is Plaintiff's Seventh Amended Complaint in this procedurally complex antitrust matter ("7AC" or "Seventh Amended Complaint"). [*7] ECF No. 378. The Seventh Amended Complaint asserts the following claims against Defendant Bankrate: monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (Count I); attempted monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act (Count II);

<sup>4</sup> The Court notes that Defendant moved to strike the declaration of Plaintiff's witness Norbert Mehl, ECF No. 416. The Court has considered Mr. Mehl's declaration and finds to the extent it was based on his personal knowledge, Defendant's motion to strike the declaration of Mr. Mehl is denied. Nevertheless, insofar as Mr. Mehl speculates about matters beyond his personal knowledge and offers legal conclusions, the Court finds Mr. Mehl's declaration unhelpful and disregards those portions of the declaration. See S.E.C. v. Adoni, 60 F. Supp. 2d 401, 402 \(D.N.J. 1999\) (denying motion to strike affidavits because "it would be more appropriate to disregard those portions of the affidavits that were not factual recitations based on personal knowledge."); D.N.J Civ. R. 7.2; Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\)\(4\); Reynolds v. Dep't of Army, No. 08-2944, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65600, 2010 WL 2674045, at \*9 \(D.N.J. June 30, 2010\) (rejecting affidavit that reflected the affiant's "perceived view" of the facts rather than actual knowledge of them); PNY Techs., Inc. v. Samsung Elecs. Co., Ltd., No. 10-4587, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46500, 2011 WL 1630856, at \*3 \(D.N.J. Apr. 29, 2011\) (noting that a declaration must present a basis in fact for the "conclusory assertion" that it was made on personal knowledge); Cant Strip Corp. of Am. v. Schuller Int'l Inc., No. 92-2212, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21045, 1995 WL 767805, at \*4 \(D. Ariz. Sept. 27, 1995\) (opinions made by owners of plaintiffs in affidavits regarding relevant antitrust market and market power are not competent evidence but improper legal conclusions). Further, such deficiencies are problematic for lay witness testimony offered pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 701. See Fed. R. Evid. 701. Moreover, Plaintiff did not offer Mr. Mehl as an expert witness. See Pl. Opp. to Def.'s Mot to Strike, ECF No. 423, at 4. Therefore, Mr. Mehl may not offer testimony within the scope of Federal Rule of Evidence 702. See, e.g., Hirst v. Inverness Hotel Corp., 544 F.3d 221, 225, 50 V.I. 1122 \(3d Cir. 2008\).

In addition, Plaintiff requested that this Court strike several of Defendant's declarations and the expert report of Mark Glueck. ECF No. 417-2. In the Court's September 26, 2014 Order deciding a motion to set aside a pretrial order of the Magistrate Judge (ECF No. 438), the parties agreed, and the Court advised, that certain issues regarding the opinions of Mr. Glueck would be decided in conjunction with the parties' summary judgment motions. ECF No. 465, at 2, 4. The Court now decides this issue. The Defendant has informed the Court that it is "not relying upon Mr. Glueck's opinions in any way in connection with the pending summary judgment motions" and has asked this Court to "disregard the few citations to Mr. Glueck's reports contained in the summary judgment briefs." ECF No. 443 at n.2. Accordingly, the Court has disregarded any citation to Mr. Glueck's report in the summary judgment briefing and Plaintiff's motion to strike the expert report of Mr. Glueck is moot. Any related request for sanctions is inappropriate under the circumstances of this case where there appears to be no evidence to show that Defendant had any knowledge of the alleged issues surrounding Mr. Glueck. See Tr. 86:25-87:5; Ford Motor Co. v. Summit Motor Prod., Inc., 930 F. 2d. 277, 289 \(3d Cir. 1991\) (sanctions are prescribed only in exceptional circumstances where a party's conduct is unreasonable) (citation omitted).

Plaintiff also requested that this Court strike the third-party declarations of Philip N. Mancuso, Alexandra Poison, and John Walsh for failure to identify these witnesses as required by Rule 26\(a\) or \(c\). ECF No. 417-2 at 18. Defendant states that Bankrate instead satisfied the requirements of Rule 26\(e\)\(1\)\(A\) because the additional declarants became known to Plaintiff "during the discovery process." See ECF No. 419-2 at 5. Courts do not exclude statements of witnesses who are made known through discovery. See, e.g., Newman v. GHS Osteopathic, Inc., 60 F.3d 153, 156 \(3d Cir. 1995\) (no abuse of discretion when district court refused to exclude testimony because other party knew names of witnesses and scope of their knowledge). Thus, the Court will not exclude the declarations of Philip N. Mancuso, Alexandra Poison, and John Walsh. Finally, Plaintiff argues that the declaration of Ms. Poison should be disregarded based on the "sham affidavit doctrine." ECF No. 417-2 at 21. The sham affidavit doctrine states that "a party may not create a material issue of fact or defeat summary judgment by filing an affidavit disputing his or her own sworn testimony without demonstrating a plausible explanation for the conflict." Baer v. Chase, 392 F.3d 609, 624 \(3d Cir. 2004\). In the instant case, there is no applicable earlier sworn statement or deposition testimony by Ms. Poison. Plaintiff attempts to contradict Ms. Poison's declaration with an internal business document produced to Plaintiff in response to a Rule 45 Subpoena, which is not a sworn statement or deposition testimony. See Caro Assocs. II, LLC v. Best Buy Co., No 09-97, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29155, 2012 WL 762304, at \*4 \(D.N.J. Mar. 6, 2012\) (sham affidavit doctrine did not apply where sworn testimony contradicted by email). Accordingly, the Court finds that the doctrine does not apply under these circumstances.

anticompetitive mergers or acquisitions in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18 (Count III); and violation of the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-1 et seq. (Count IV). 7AC ¶¶ 296-321. Plaintiff seeks a declaratory judgment, injunctive relief, and treble damages. Id. at 109-10.

The parties each moved for summary judgment on all counts of the Seventh Amended Complaint. ECF Nos. 389, 405, 466. The Court heard oral argument on the parties' motions. ECF No. 473.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

Summary judgment is appropriate if the "depositions, documents, electronically stored information, affidavits or declarations, stipulations . . . admissions, interrogatory answers, or other materials" demonstrate that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, and, construing all facts and inferences in a light most favorable to the non-moving party, "the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1986\) (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 56); see also Pollock v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Long Lines, 794 F.2d 860, 864 \(3d Cir. 1986\).

The moving party has the initial burden of showing the absence of [*8] a genuine issue of material fact. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323. Once the moving party meets this burden, the non-moving party has the burden of identifying specific facts to show that, to the contrary, there exists a genuine issue of material fact for trial. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\). In order to meet its burden, the nonmoving party must "go beyond the pleadings and by [its] own affidavits, or by the 'depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file,' designate 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324 (citation omitted); see also Lujan v. Nat'l Wildlife Fed'n, 497 U.S. 871, 888, 110 S. Ct. 3177, 111 L. Ed. 2d 695 \(1990\) (stating that "[t]he object of [Rule 56(e)] is not to replace conclusory allegations of the complaint . . . with conclusory allegations of an affidavit"); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1986\). A fact is "material" if a dispute about that fact "might affect the outcome of the suit under governing [substantive] law," and a "genuine" issue exists as to that fact "if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non[-]moving party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. The Court's role is to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial, not to weigh the evidence and decide the truth of the matter. Id. at 249.

To survive summary judgment on an antitrust claim, "an antitrust plaintiff must produce economically plausible [*9] evidence supporting the elements of its claim." Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Intl, Inc., 423 F.3d 374, 380 \(3d Cir. 2005\) (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588). In addition, "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences that can be drawn from ambiguous evidence." Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

IV. DISCUSSION

A. Sherman Act: Monopolization

Section 2 of the Sherman Act "makes it unlawful to monopolize . . . interstate or international commerce." Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 306 \(3d Cir. 2007\) (citing 15 U.S.C. § 2). "Liability under § 2 requires '(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.'" Id. at 306-07 (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 \(1966\)).

"Monopoly power is the ability to control prices and exclude competition in a given market." Id. at 307 (internal citation omitted). A hallmark of monopoly power is the ability to "profitably raise prices without causing competing firms to expand output and drive down prices" in that market. Id. (citing Harrison Aire, 423 F.3d at 380). For the reasons set forth below, the Court finds that Plaintiff's evidence does not raise a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether Bankrate unlawfully monopolized interstate commerce in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

1. Possession [*10] of Monopoly Power

The existence of monopoly power may be proven through either direct or circumstantial evidence. See id.; Harrison Aire, 423 F.3d at 381. For the reasons set forth below, the Court finds Plaintiff adduces neither direct nor circumstantial evidence that Bankrate possessed monopoly power.

a) Direct Evidence

Monopoly power may be proven through direct evidence of supracompetitive pricing and restricted output. Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 307 (citing United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 51, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 \(D.C. Cir. 2001\)). Plaintiff's evidence does not support a reasonable inference that Bankrate charged supracompetitive prices and restricted output for the following reasons.

First, there is no evidence Bankrate ever charged supracompetitive prices. Supracompetitive prices "are prices that are at least a small but significant amount above competitive levels." In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 338 F. Supp. 2d 517, 537 n.28 \(D.N.J. 2004\); see also Harrison Aire, 423 F.3d at 380. Here, Plaintiff cannot show supracompetitive pricing because there is no evidence establishing a baseline measure of competitive pricing in the market for FABRTL. Plaintiff contends merely that Bankrate increased prices for FABRTL between 2005 and 2009 without experiencing a decline in demand for its product. See PSMF ¶¶ 32-34. Proof of increased prices alone, however, is insufficient to establish supracompetitive pricing. See Xerox Corp. v. Media Scis., Inc., 660 F. Supp. 2d 535, 549 \(S.D.N.Y. 2009\) (evidence [*11] of price increases did not establish supracompetitive prices); In re Ebay Seller Antitrust Litig., No. 07-01882, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19480, 2010 WL 760433, at \*5 \(N.D. Cal. Mar. 4, 2010\) ("Evidence that eBay has raised prices over a period of years, and that several of its employees believe that the company may have raised them too high, proves nothing with respect to whether the prices are supracompetitive."). Cf. Harrison Aire, 423 F.3d at 381 (holding that evidence a defendant charged prices higher than those of its aftermarket competitors is insufficient to support a reasonable inference of monopoly power, as "a firm's comparatively high price may simply reflect a superior product"). Without some quantitative measure of competitive market prices, a factfinder could not determine whether Bankrate's prices exceeded competitive levels.

Second, even if Plaintiff were able to show supracompetitive pricing, its claim would still fail because there is no evidence of decreased output. "A predator has sufficient market power when, by restricting its own output, it can restrict marketwide output and, hence, increase marketwide prices." Rebel Oil Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 \(9th Cir. 1995\) (citing Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law ¶ 501, at 322 (1978)). Here, Plaintiff's evidence illustrates the converse: from 2002 through February 5, 2008, Bankrate's output grew due to increases [*12] in the number of advertisers. See PSMF ¶¶ 32, 35.

b) Circumstantial Evidence

The existence of monopoly power may also be inferred through the "structure and composition of the relevant market." Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 307 (citation omitted). To support such an inference, "a plaintiff typically must plead and prove that a firm has a dominant share in a relevant market, and that significant 'entry barriers' protect that market." Id. (citations omitted). For the reasons set forth below, the Court finds that Plaintiff has also failed to adduce circumstantial evidence of Bankrate's monopoly power.

i. Proposed Relevant Market

As a threshold matter, the Court must consider whether Plaintiff has met its burden of defining the relevant market. See U.S. Horticultural Supply v. Scotts Co., 367 F. App'x 305, 309 \(3d Cir. 2010\) (citation omitted). A plaintiff fails to meet its burden if it does not define its proposed relevant market in terms of "the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Id. (citing Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). Reasonable interchangeability measures the extent to which "one product is roughly equivalent to another for the use to which it is put." Id. (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). "The greater the positive cross-elasticity [*13] of demand between two products is, the closer substitutes they are." SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1063 (3d Cir. 1978) (citation omitted).

Plaintiff purports to establish a market for FABRTL through (1) a statement that the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") issued regarding Google's proposed acquisition of DoubleClick; (2) statements by Bankrate's CEO, Thomas Evans, that FSPs were continuing to purchase FABRTL despite Bankrate's price increases; (3) Bankrate's price increases; and (4) "the distinct look and feel" of FABRTL. See Pl. Br. in Support, ECF No. 410, at 11-14; Pl. Br. in Opp., ECF No. 417, at 16 (citing Appendix H8, ECF No. 417-4), 22. This evidence, however, is inadequate to establish interchangeability of use or cross-elasticity of demand.<sup>5</sup>

First, the FTC's statement regarding Google's proposed acquisition of DoubleClick is inadequate to establish Plaintiff's proposed relevant market. The statement explains the FTC's decision to close its investigation into whether the acquisition would violate federal antitrust law. Pl.'s Appendix Ex. H8, ECF No. 417-4. To the extent the statement is relevant at all to this Court's inquiry, it appears to undermine rather than support Plaintiff's argument that there is a market limited [*14] to FABRTL. The statement identifies a discrete advertising sector comprising advertising space sold by "publishers in the online advertising business"—a broad category that could include FABRTL suppliers as well as suppliers of other forms of advertising. Id. at 3. Moreover, the FTC's statement is insufficient because it does not purport to test interchangeability or cross-elasticity of demand with regard to FABRTL. Indeed, it does not even reference FABRTL.

Second, Mr. Evans's anecdotal statements that Bankrate was able to raise prices without driving away FSPs do not substitute for quantitative data showing interchangeability or cross-elasticity. See U.S. Horticultural Supply, Inc. v. Scotts Co., No. 04-5182, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2327, 2009 WL 89692, at *18-19 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 13, 2009) (finding that "statements from industry actors" and "marketing documents" were insufficient to establish a relevant market absent quantitative evidence of price increases or price stability in substitute products in response to an increase in the defendant's prices).

Third, evidence of Defendant's price increases alone cannot establish cross-elasticity of demand between Defendant's FABRTL and other products. Plaintiff's analysis lacks necessary information about the prices of potentially substitutable products and the demand for such products. [*15] See U.S. Horticultural Supply, 367 F. App'x at 310-11 (holding the plaintiff's market definition was legally inadequate where the plaintiff's expert report lacked "specific information relating to price increases or price stability for substitute products in relation to a rise in the price of [the defendant's product]").

Fourth, the Court does not find that evidence of the "distinct look and feel" of FABRTL, without more, provides sufficient grounds to identify a distinct FABRTL market. The case on which Plaintiff relies illustrates merely that the "distinct look and feel" of a product may contribute to a finding of a distinct product market when offered in conjunction with other forms of economic evidence. See F.T.C. v. Staples, Inc., 970 F. Supp. 1066, 1075-77 (D.D.C. 1997). As Plaintiff fails to offer such economic evidence, the Court does not find that the purported unique aesthetic qualities of FABRTL support a finding that FABRTL comprises a distinct market. See Menasha Corp. v.

---

<sup>5</sup> Plaintiff also argues that its expert, Stan V. Smith, provides testimony with respect to issues related to the relevant market. Pl. Br. in Reply, ECF No. 421, at 6. Mr. Smith admits that his knowledge in this regard is limited to the market as defined in the Seventh Amended Complaint, without referring to "other publicly available revenue figures pertaining to the relevant market from other companies identical to Banxcorp or Bankrate." ECF No. 390-3 at 11-12; see also id. at 7 ("The evolution of the market for Bank Rate Websites is described in the 7AC . . . I am not providing any opinion regarding these issues."); id. ("The structure of the relevant market before and after the alleged monopolization is set forth in the 7AC . . . I am not providing any opinion regarding these issues.").

News Am. Mktg. In-Store, Inc., 354 F.3d 661, 664 (7th Cir. 2004) (noting that physical differences between products do not necessarily create separate economic markets for those products).

Accordingly, Plaintiff's evidence fails to support its proposed FABRTL market with "reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand" and is, therefore, legally insufficient. [*16] U.S. Horticultural Supply, 367 F. App'x at 310-11 (quoting Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997)).

ii. Dominant Share of the Market

Even if Plaintiff's proposed relevant market were legally sufficient, Plaintiff has failed to show Defendant has a dominant share of that market. To prove market share, Plaintiff states that 79 million U.S. households used online banking in 2011 and that Bankrate had 170 million visitors to its sites, from which Plaintiff concludes that Bankrate has a 90% market share. See Pl's Br. in Opp., ECF No. 417, at 18. Not only is the Court unable to decipher Plaintiff's math, but Plaintiff's metrics are irrelevant. Market share must be based on sales of FABRTL to FSP advertisers, not on web visitors, because it is undisputed that FSPs, not web visitors, actually purchase FABRTL. See U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 999 (11th Cir. 1993) ("When assessing market shares for the purpose of ascertaining market power the appropriate measure of a firm's share is the quantity of goods or services actually sold to consumers."); TransWeb, LLC v. 3M Innovative Props. Co., 16 F. Supp. 3d 385, 409-10 (D.N.J. 2014) (expert testimony analyzing the plaintiff's and defendant's "actual costs and sales data" was needed to show the defendant had a dominant share of the relevant market). Moreover, even if the number of web visitors were an appropriate measure of sales of FABRTL to FSPs, [*17] Plaintiff's evidence concerns Bankrate's website as a whole—which contains various forms of financial information and commentary other than FABRTL<sup>6</sup>—without specifying the proportion of those visitors who visit pages containing FABRTL, specifically.

iii. Barriers to Market Entry

Finally, there is no evidence of significant barriers to entry for market competitors. "Barriers to entry are factors, such as regulatory requirements, high capital costs, or technological obstacles, [which] prevent new competition from entering a market in response to a monopolist's supracompetitive prices." Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 307 (internal citations omitted). Plaintiff's argument regarding entry barriers appears to rely on the following statement by Bankrate's CEO, Thomas Evans:

One of the things that is a tremendous gating item for us, we believe is in terms of competition, and barriers for competition, is how does anybody else break into this, if we have tied up all the best newspaper relations, the best co-brand relationships and we've got a dynamic organic traffic website. How does anybody else get into this business and compete with Bankrate? I look at it as both an offensive marketing opportunity, as well as a defensive opportunity. [*18]

PSMF ¶ 340. Mr. Evans's statement, which, at most, suggests Bankrate may have perceived there to be high barriers to entry, does not substitute for actual evidence of high barriers to entry. "The antitrust statutes do not condemn, without more, such colorful, vigorous hyperbole." Advo, Inc. v. Phila. Newspapers, Inc., 51 F.3d 1191, 1199 (3d Cir. 1995) (rejecting antitrust claim based on isolated statements made in the defendant's business plan). Plaintiff provides no testimony from other market participants, expert testimony, or quantitative data indicating would-be competitors were unable to enter the market due to Bankrate's alleged supracompetitive prices. Moreover, BanxCorp CFO and Senior Vice President Batsheva Mehl conceded that there were in fact low barriers to entry for Banxcorp in the FABRTL market. Certification of R. Scott Thompson, "Thomson Cert," Ex. 9, Tr. 192:13-19. Accordingly, the Court finds Plaintiff has failed as a matter of law to establish circumstantial evidence of monopoly power.

2. Willful Acquisition or Maintenance of Monopoly Power

Willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power "must be accompanied by some anticompetitive conduct on the part of the possessor." Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 308 (citing Verizon Commc'n Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004)). Anticompetitive conduct is "generally defined as conduct [*19] to obtain or maintain monopoly power as a result of competition on some basis other than the merits." Id. (citing LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 147 (3d Cir. 2003)). Conduct is only anticompetitive, however, where it harms "the competitive process itself," not merely a competitor's business. Id. (citing Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 224, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993)).

Plaintiff contends that Defendant engaged in the following forms of anticompetitive conduct: (1) predatory pricing of FABRTL, including offering FSPs free editorial rate listings; (2) predatory bidding of keywords on interne search engines; and (3) entering into co-branding agreements that foreclosed competition.<sup>7</sup> See Pl. Br. in Support, ECF No. 405-1, at 30 (citing 7AC 16). For the reasons set forth below, the Court finds that Plaintiff's evidence is insufficient to raise a question of material fact as to Bankrate's alleged anticompetitive conduct.

a) Predatory Pricing

A plaintiff asserting a predatory pricing claim must prove two elements: (1) the defendant reduced the prices of its product to below an appropriate measure of its costs; and (2) there is a likelihood that the defendant had a dangerous probability of recouping losses incurred from below-cost pricing. See ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 272 (3d Cir. 2012) (citing Brooke Grp., 509 U.S. at 222-24). "Regardless of the measure of a [*20] defendant's costs on which a plaintiff premises a predatory pricing claim, a plaintiff cannot anchor its case on theoretical speculation that a defendant is pricing below that measure. Indeed, [a]s a practical matter, it may be that only direct evidence of below-cost pricing is sufficient to overcome the strong inference that rational businesses would not enter into conspiracies . . . ." Advo, 51 F.3d at 1198 (alteration in original) (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 584 n.8 (emphasis added)).

Plaintiff advances three theories of predatory pricing. First, it asserts that Bankrate priced FABRTL below cost when it launched its cost-per-click pricing structure in 2005, driving competitors out of the market and eventually allowing Bankrate to raise prices profitably. Second, it contends that Bankrate provided editorial listings for free, allowing it to undercut competitors. See Pl. Br. in Support, ECF No. 405, at 34-36. Third, it argues that Bankrate's practice of waiving licensing fees as part of its co-branding partnerships was anticompetitive. None of these contentions, however, raises a genuine dispute of material fact because there is no evidence Bankrate priced FABRTL below cost.

First, Plaintiff's contention that Bankrate priced FABRTL [*21] below cost in 2005 relies on statements by Bankrate's CEO that he believed that Bankrate's product was "underpriced relative to value," or "under market." PSMF ¶ 54. At best, these statements could show Bankrate's prices were below "general market levels," which is insufficient to demonstrate predation. See Advo, 51 F.3d at 1198 (internal citation and quotation marks omitted); see also ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 273 ("Low, but above-cost, prices are generally procompetitive . . . ." (internal citation omitted)). Plaintiff also asserts that Bankrate priced FABRTL below cost because its cost-per-click pricing for certain keywords was below the average of the top five maximum bids for those same keywords on Yahoo!. See PSMF ¶ 345. However, Plaintiff must demonstrate Bankrate priced FABRTL below some appropriate measure of its own costs; search engines like Yahoo! provide an inappropriate measure of, or comparison to, Bankrate's costs. See Advo, 51 F.3d at 1198-99 ("Despite extensive discovery, Advo apparently is unable to produce any direct evidence that PNI offered to distribute circulars at prices below any relevant measure of [its] cost . . . . This omission provided sufficient grounds for granting summary judgment.").

Second, Plaintiff's argument that Bankrate [*22] engaged in predatory conduct by giving away its editorial listings for free also fails as a matter of law. There is no evidence that Plaintiff offered editorial listings to FSPs in connection with the sale of its paid, hyperlinked listings. Even if Plaintiff had proffered such evidence, to demonstrate that promotional pricing—such as a "free first listing"—is predatory, Plaintiff must demonstrate that Defendant's overall prices were below cost. Directory Sales Mgmt. Corp. v. Ohio Bell Tel. Co., 833 F.2d 606, 614 (6th Cir. 1987); see also Morgan v. Ponder, 892 F.2d 1355, 1362 (8th Cir. 1989). As discussed above, Plaintiff has failed to do so and, accordingly, cannot show that Bankrate's editorial listings were predatory.

Plaintiff's third argument fails for the same reason. Plaintiff asserts that Bankrate licensed FABRTL to its co-branding partners for free but offers no evidence that Bankrate's co-branding agreements led to below-cost pricing of Bankrate's FABRTL. Accordingly, Plaintiff's evidence is inadequate to show predatory pricing.

b) Predatory Bidding

Plaintiff next alleges that Bankrate engaged in predatory bidding of search-engine keywords. In a predatory bidding scheme, a monopolist bids up the market price of a critical input to such high levels that rival buyers cannot survive and, as a result, the monopolist [*23] acquires or maintains monopoly power. See ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 279 (citing Weyerhaeuser Co. v. Ross-Simmons Hardwood Lumber Co., 549 U.S. 312, 320, 127 S. Ct. 1069, 166 L. Ed. 2d 911 (2007)). "'If all goes as planned,' once rivals have been driven out, the predatory bidder will reap . . . profits to offset the losses that it suffered during the high-bidding stage." Id. (quoting Weyerhaeuser, 549 U.S. at 321). Therefore, to establish predatory bidding, "[a] plaintiff must prove that the alleged predatory bidding led to below cost pricing of a predator's outputs." Id. (alteration in original) (citing Weyerhaeuser, 549 U.S. at 325).

There is no evidence that Bankrate's bids on search-engine terms led to below-cost pricing of Bankrate's FABRTL. Plaintiff contends that internal Bankrate documents show that Bankrate's return on investment ("ROI") for its paid search advertising was negative in early 2007. See PSMF ¶¶ 354, 355. That argument, however, relies on incomplete evidence. Specifically, Plaintiff points to a single column in Bankrate's spreadsheets labelled "Partial ROI," which does not include the revenue generated from Bankrate's page views. See id.; Pl. Ex. G8 at BR00125297. The entire spreadsheet shows clearly that Bankrate's total return on investment was consistently positive. See Pl. Ex. G8 at BRO0125297. Accordingly, the Court finds no basis on which a rational factfinder [*24] could conclude Bankrate engaged in predatory bidding.

c) Co-Branding Agreements

Finally, Plaintiff argues Bankrate's co-branding agreements with other online media outlets were anticompetitive because they foreclosed competition in the FABRTL market. To prove foreclosure of competition, "it is not necessary that all competition be removed from the market. The test is not total foreclosure, but whether the challenged practices bar a substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit." United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 191 (3d Cir. 2005). To that end, "[c]ourts routinely observe that 'foreclosure levels are unlikely to be of concern where they are less than 30 or 40 percent.' B & H Med., L.L.C. v. ABP Admin., Inc., 526 F.3d 257, 266 (6th Cir. 2008) (quoting Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 373 F.3d 57, 68 (1st Cir. 2004)).

Plaintiff contends that most of Bankrate's co-branding arrangements were anticompetitive because they lasted from two to eight years, PSMF ¶ 272, and allowed Bankrate to provide rate tables exclusively to its co-branding partners for the duration of the contract. See, e.g., PSMF ¶ 309. These contentions, however, do not raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding anticompetitive conduct.

First, Plaintiff's evidence establishes only that most of Bankrate's co-branding relationships, not the contractual agreements themselves, lasted from [*25] two to eight years. In fact, it is undisputed that most of the co-branding contracts had one-year terms. See DSMF ¶ 83. Such short-term contracts "present little threat to competition." See ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 286. Further, Plaintiff does not claim it was barred from entering into co-branding contracts with Bankrate's former co-branding partners once those partners' contracts with Bankrate expired.<sup>8</sup> Accordingly, there is no evidence indicating that Bankrate's co-branding relationships "effectively foreclosed the business of competitors." LePage's, 324 F.3d at 157.

Second, the contracts' exclusivity provisions cannot by themselves establish anticompetitive conduct. See, e.g., Race Tires Am., Inc. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corp., 614 F.3d 57, 76 \(3d Cir. 2010\) ("[E]xclusive supply contracts or exclusive dealing agreements have been frequently upheld when challenged on antitrust grounds."); Barr Labs., Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 978 F.2d 98, 111 \(3d Cir. 1992\) (noting the "existence of legitimate business justifications for the [exclusive dealing] contracts"); Menasha, 354 F.3d at 663 (explaining that competition to be an exclusive supplier "is a vital form of rivalry, and often the most powerful one, which the antitrust laws encourage rather than suppress" (citation omitted)); Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 69 ("Permitting an antitrust action to proceed any time a firm enters into an exclusive deal would both discourage a presumptively [*26] legitimate business practice and encourage costly antitrust actions.").<sup>9</sup>

Moreover, the record is devoid of the quantitative evidence necessary to show market foreclosure. There is no evidence, for example, of the scope of possible co-brand partners or the percentage of total FABRTL advertising revenue generated by co-branding partnerships. Without such data, it would be impossible to determine whether Bankrate's co-branding agreements foreclosed a substantial percentage of the market. See, e.g., B & H Med., 526 F.3d at 266-67 (affirming summary judgment on the plaintiff's exclusive dealing claim where the plaintiff lacked evidence of the sales revenue generated by the purported exclusive-dealing agreement).

Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding the elements of its monopolization claim and, therefore, grants summary judgment to Defendant on that claim.

B. Sherman Act: Attempted Monopolization

Section 2 of the Sherman Act also prohibits attempted monopolization. See 15 U.S.C. § 2. A defendant has attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act where it "(1) . . . has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous [*27] probability of achieving monopoly power." Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 317. As to the second element, specific intent to monopolize need not be shown through direct evidence; "it may be inferred from predatory or exclusionary conduct." Penn. Dental Ass'n v. Med. Serv. Ass'n of Penn., 745 F.2d 248, 261 \(3d Cir. 1984\) (citations omitted). As to the third element, "a dangerous probability of monopoly may exist where the defendant firm possesses a significant market share when it undertakes the challenged anticompetitive conduct." Barr Labs., 978 F.2d at 112 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

As discussed above, Plaintiff has failed to show Bankrate's conduct was predatory or exclusionary. Accordingly, there is no basis on which to infer Bankrate had specific intent to monopolize. To the extent Plaintiff proffers the foregoing statements by Bankrate's CEO as direct evidence of specific intent, its evidence is insufficient. Again, "[t]he antitrust statutes do not condemn, without more, such colorful, vigorous hyperbole . . . . Isolated and unrelated snippets of such language 'provide no help in deciding whether a defendant has crossed the elusive line separating aggressive competition from unfair competition." Advo, 51 F.3d at 1199 (quoting Morgan, 892 F.2d at 1359).

<sup>8</sup> At oral argument, Plaintiff appeared to argue that it had difficulty obtaining co-branding partners because potential co-branding partners preferred to work with Bankrate due to Bankrate's higher web traffic. Tr. 114:17-115:4. However, Plaintiff fails to explain how Bankrate's apparent success at maintaining co-branding partnerships is distinguishable from "development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." See Broadcom, 501 F.3d 297 at 307 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Moreover, the Third Circuit has rejected the argument, when offered "without some limiting principle," that a defendant's superior market reputation is a barrier to entry. See Advo, 51 F.3d at 1201-02.

Finally, there is no evidence Bankrate had a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly [*28] power because, as discussed above, there is no evidence of high barriers to market entry. "[W]ithout barriers to entry it would presumably be impossible to maintain supracompetitive prices for an extended time." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 591 n.15. Accordingly, Plaintiff has failed to proffer evidence from which a reasonable jury could conclude Defendant attempted monopolization.

C. Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act proscribes acquisitions whose effect "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." 15 U.S.C. § 18. In order to establish a prima facie violation of Section 7, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the acquisition "produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market . . ." United States v. Phila. Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 363, 83 S. Ct. 1715, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915 (1963). Thus, "[d]etermination of the relevant product and geographic markets is a necessary predicate to deciding whether a merger contravenes the Clayton Act." United States v. Marine Bancorporation, Inc., 418 U.S. 602, 618, 94 S. Ct. 2856, 41 L. Ed. 2d 978 (1974) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

Plaintiff alleges that Bankrate's acquisition of two firms, MMIS/Interest.com and Bankaholic, violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act. See 7AC ¶¶ 308-312.<sup>10</sup> As discussed above, Plaintiff has failed as a matter of law to establish its proposed [*29] relevant market. Accordingly, it cannot show Bankrate's acquisitions violated Section 7. See Marine Bancorporation, Inc., 418 U.S. at 618.

Even if Plaintiff had established a relevant market, Plaintiff's evidence is inadequate to show that Bankrate acquired an undue market share. Plaintiff merely estimates the relative values of Bankrate and MMIS/Interest.com at the time of the acquisition. See PSMF ¶ 258. However, because Plaintiff offers no evidence of the total value of the FABRTL market, such estimates cannot establish that Bankrate's share of the FABRTL market became undue as a result of the MMIS/Interest.com acquisition. Moreover, Plaintiff proffers no quantitative evidence regarding Bankrate's acquisition of Bankaholic.<sup>11</sup> Accordingly, the Court finds Plaintiff has failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to its Clayton Act claim.

D. New Jersey Antitrust Act

The New Jersey Antitrust Act is construed in accordance with federal jurisprudence on the Sherman Act. See N.J.S.A. 56:9-18 (mandating that the New Jersey Antitrust Act "shall be construed in harmony with the ruling judicial interpretations of comparable Federal antitrust statutes and to effectuate, insofar as practicable, a uniformity in the laws of those states which enact [*30] it"); St. Clair v. Citizens Fin. Grp., 340 F. App'x 62, 65 n.2 (3d Cir. 2009); Desai v. St. Barnabas Med. Ctr., 103 N.J. 79, 510 A.2d 662, 671 (N.J. 1986). "Accordingly, the state law antitrust claims are only viable if the corresponding federal claims are sufficient." St. Clair, 340 F. App'x at 65 n.2. Banxcorp's claims for relief under the New Jersey Antitrust Act mirror its claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 7 of the Clayton Act. As this Court has already found those claims cannot survive summary judgment, it must also grant summary judgment to Defendant on Plaintiff's New Jersey Antitrust Act claim.

<sup>10</sup> Insofar as Plaintiff's summary judgment briefing references other acquisitions, those acquisitions were not pleaded in the Seventh Amended Complaint and are therefore not properly before this Court. The Court notes that a plaintiff "may not amend his complaint through arguments in his brief in opposition to a motion for summary judgment." See *Baklayan v. Ortiz, No. 11-3943, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115712, 2012 WL 3560384, at *3 (D.N.J. Aug. 15, 2012)* ("The Third Circuit has made clear that a plaintiff may not amend his complaint through arguments raised in an opposition brief.") (citation omitted).

<sup>11</sup> Plaintiff also points to a statement by Bankrate's former CEO, Elisabeth DeMarse, that "Bankrate had an acquisition strategy aimed at buying number 1 and number 2 in every category [] in the consumer finance markets." See PSMF ¶ 246. However, Ms. DeMarse's testimony concerns Bankrate's acquisition of creditcards.com, see Pl. Appx. G27 at Tr. 87:14-20, 88:12-24, which is not at issue in the Seventh Amended Complaint, see 7AC ¶¶ 308-312.

V. CONCLUSION<sup>12,13</sup>

Having reviewed the record, briefing, and the parties' positions as presented at oral argument, the Court grants Defendant's motion for summary judgment and denies Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. Further, Defendant's motion to strike the declaration of Norbert Mehl is denied and Defendant's motion to strike the report and opinions of Stan V. Smith, Ph.D is moot.

An appropriate Order accompanies this Opinion.

ORDER

CECCHI, District Judge.

This matter comes before the Court upon the motions of Plaintiff BanxCorp ("Plaintiff" or "BanxCorp") and Defendant Bankrate, Inc. ("Defendant" or "Bankrate") for summary judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56. ECF Nos. 389, 405, 466.<sup>1</sup> In addition, Defendant [*31] filed a motion to strike the declaration of Norbert Mehl (ECF No. 416) and a motion to strike the report and opinions of Stan V. Smith, Ph.D (ECF No. 415). Oral argument was heard on the aforementioned motions in this matter. ECF No. 473. For the reasons set forth in this Court's corresponding Opinion,

IT IS on this 21 day of March, 2019,

ORDERED that Defendant's motion for summary judgment, (ECF No. 405), is hereby GRANTED; it is further

<sup>12</sup> Defendant also argues that (1) Plaintiff lacks antitrust injury and therefore standing under the antitrust laws, (2) many of Plaintiff's claims are time barred, and (3) Plaintiff lacks Article III standing to seek injunctive relief. As detailed at length throughout this Opinion, Plaintiff has failed to demonstrate that Defendant engaged in the type of anti-competitive practices barred by antitrust law, and thus Plaintiff cannot establish an antitrust injury in this case. See Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 \(1990\) ("[A] plaintiff must prove the existence of an antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful . . . injury, although causally related to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as an antitrust injury unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny.") (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Defendant also raised arguments regarding the timeliness of Plaintiff's claims and Plaintiff's request for injunctive relief. The Court need not consider Defendant's additional arguments because Defendant is entitled to summary judgment on all counts of the Seventh Amended Complaint.

<sup>13</sup> Defendant moved to strike the declaration of Plaintiff's witness, Stan V. Smith. ECF No. 415. Mr. Smith's declaration contains his opinions on damages, which is not relevant given the procedural posture. Thus, Defendant's motion to strike the declaration and opinions of Mr. Smith is moot.

<sup>1</sup> In a prior Order (ECF No. 465), the Court addressed Plaintiff's submission (ECF No. 440) regarding discovery disputes and, upon agreement of the parties, reserved certain issues regarding the expert report of Mark Glueck and related sanctions requests. In the Opinion accompanying this Order, the Court addresses those remaining issues.

ORDERED that Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, (ECF No. 389, 466), is hereby DENIED; it is further

ORDERED that Defendant's motion to strike the declaration of Norbert Mehl, (ECF No. 416), is hereby DENIED; it is further

ORDERED that Defendant's motion to strike the report and opinions of Stan V. Smith, Ph.D (ECF No. 415), is hereby MOOT; and it is further

ORDER

Currently pending before the court in the above-captioned case is Defendants Genesis Healthcare System and Matthew Perry's ("Defendants") Motion [*3] to Dismiss Counts I, II, V, VI, VII, and VIII of the Complaint (ECF No. 28). For the following reasons, the court grants the Motion in part and denies it in part.

I. BACKGROUND

In the aftermath of the financial collapse of Coshocton Memorial Hospital Association ("CCMH" or "Debtor"), Plaintiff CH Liquidation Association Liquidation Trust and Joseph Oriti, in his capacity as Debtor Representative and Liquidation Trustee of the estate of CCMH ("Plaintiff"), filed a Complaint seeking redress for the injuries allegedly caused by eight Defendants (ECF No. 1). Relevant to the pending Motion, Plaintiff names Genesis Healthcare System ("Genesis") for breach of contract (Count I), and breach of fiduciary duty (Count II), and Genesis and the CEO of Genesis Matthew Perry ("Perry") for violations of federal and state antitrust law under the Sherman Act and the Valentine Act (Counts V-VIII).

A. Factual Background

Debtor operated a general acute care not-for-profit hospital in Coshocton, Ohio, as well as a number of primary care and specialty physician clinics. (Compl. ¶15, ECF No. 1.) Genesis is an integrated health care delivery system that is located in Zanesville, Ohio, approximately thirty miles [*4] from CCMH. (Id. ¶¶ 17, 42.) Plaintiff states that there was overlap between Debtor and Genesis' primary service areas, and the two were considered competitors for market share in the region. (Id. ¶ 50.)

Perry is the current President and CEO of Genesis. (Id. ¶ 18.) Plaintiff states that in 2007, when Perry became CEO of Genesis, he and Genesis' chief financial officer Paul Masterson ("Masterson") developed a strategic plan for Genesis to capture and control patient market share in Genesis' service region. (Id. ¶ 45.) Plaintiff also maintains that Perry and Masterson knew that in order for the plan to succeed, Genesis would need to attract patients from other hospitals and health care systems. (Id. ¶ 49.)

As early as the fall of 2008, at a time of financial difficulty for CCMH and other rural hospitals, CCMH began a complicated relationship with Genesis. The relationship started with a representative from Genesis and a representative from CCMH, each serving as equals on a threemember not-for-profit healthcare alliance board. (Id. ¶¶ 57-64.) However, in May of 2012, Genesis learned that CCMH was facing severe financial difficulties. (Id. ¶ 82.) Shortly thereafter, Perry noted in a Genesis [*5] Executive Committee meeting that Genesis could face a loss of market share if CCMH affiliated with a competing health care system. (Id. ¶ 84.) Around that same time, Genesis approached then-CEO of CCMH Robert Miller ("Miller" or "former CCMH CEO") about a proposal for Genesis to manage CCMH. (Id. ¶¶ 90-96.) By the end of May, Perry, with Miller's assistance, met with the full CCMH Board, and the Board agreed to move forward with developing the Management Agreement. (Id. ¶¶ 97, 104-105.) Genesis and CCMH executed the Management Agreement on June 18, 2012. (Id. ¶ 163.)

The Management Agreement tasked Genesis with improving CCMH's operational and financial performance, enhancing CCMH's quality of patient care, and increasing access to health care for the benefit of the community. (Id. ¶ 179.) Plaintiff states that in carrying out CCMH's goals, the Management Agreement gave Genesis full authority, power, and control to manage, administer, and operate CCMH. (Id. ¶ 180.) In particular, the Management Agreement gave Genesis control over CCMH's executive/operations management, financial management, strategic planning, medical staff administration, physician recruitment, facility management, [*6] most human resources, supply chain management, and management and approval of all of CCMH's hospital-based physician contracts. (Id. ¶¶ 181, 190-193.) The Management Agreement also gave Genesis authority to employ and oversee CCMH management personnel, such as the CEO and CFO of CCMH. (Id. ¶¶ 182-189.) Finally, Plaintiff maintains that Genesis further controlled CCMH through providing CCMH a $4 million loan. (Id. ¶¶ 313-337.)

During the period in which Genesis managed CCMH, Plaintiff alleges that Genesis, under Perry's leadership: (1) recruited, hired, and employed physicians for Genesis to the detriment of CCMH; (2) took advantage of its relationship with CCMH to increase referrals and transfers to Genesis; (3) engaged in a financial scheme that required CCMH employees to use Genesis' medical network and; (4) negotiated an agreement in bad faith that required CCMH to exclusively use Genesis' laboratory services. (Id. ¶¶ 226-246, 261-296, 338-334.) Plaintiff also alleges that Genesis used its control to keep competing healthcare systems out of the market. (Id. ¶¶ 247-260.) Plaintiff claims that, because of these actions, Genesis failed to meet its duties and obligations in managing [*7] CCMH in good faith. (Id. ¶ 380.) Plaintiff also contends that Genesis failed to take appropriate action with respect to CCMH staffing and financial management. (Id. ¶¶ 380-420.) Thus, Plaintiff claims that CCMH deteriorated under Genesis' control. (Id. ¶ 6.)

In the fall of 2015, CCMH's financial situation continued to erode. (Id. ¶ 420.) In November of 2015, CCMH and Genesis suspended the Management Agreement and in 2016, the parties terminated the Management Agreement. (Id. ¶¶ 423-425.)

B. Procedural History

On June 30, 2016, CCMH filed its voluntary petition under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of Ohio. (Id. ¶ 30.) CCMH continued to operate as debtor-in-possession pursuant to 11 U.S.C. §§ 1107\(a\) and 1108 after the Petition Date. (Id. ¶¶ 30-31.) On October 3, 2016, the Bankruptcy Court entered an order approving CCMH's sale of substantially all of its assets, and the sale transaction closed on October 31, 2016. (Id. ¶¶ 32-33.) On July 12, 2017, the Bankruptcy Court confirmed the Chapter 11 plan (the "Plan"), and the Plan became effective on August 1, 2017. (Id. ¶¶ 34, 36.) Plaintiff filed the Complaint in the present action on April 3, 2018. [*8] On June 11, 2018, Defendants filed a Motion to Dismiss ("Motion") pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) and Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 7012\(b\) with respect to Count I (breach of contract against Genesis), Count II (breach of fiduciary duty against Genesis), Count V (violation of Sherman Act § 1 against Genesis and Perry), Count VI (violation of Sherman Act § 2 against Genesis), Count VII (attempted violation of Sherman Act § 2 against Genesis), and Count VIII (violation of Valentine Act against Genesis and Perry).<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff submitted a Response (ECF No. 48) on July 13, 2018, and Defendants replied (ECF No. 55) on July 27, 2018.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

The United States Supreme Court clarified the law regarding what a plaintiff must plead in order to survive a motion made pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) in Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\) and in Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\). When determining whether the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief can be granted, the court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept all factual allegations as true, and determine whether the complaint contains "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. The plaintiff's obligation "requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. at 555. Even though a complaint [*9] need not contain "detailed" factual allegations, its "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all the allegations in the Complaint are true." Id. A court is "not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986).

The Court, in Iqbal, further explained the "plausibility" requirement, stating that "[a] claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." 556 U.S. at 678. Furthermore, "[t]he plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. This determination is a "context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. at 679.

III. LAW AND ANALYSIS

A. Breach of Contract as to Genesis (Count I)

Plaintiff alleges that Genesis breached the Management Agreement because Genesis managed CCMH for Genesis' own benefit, rather than in CCMH's interest to survive as a standalone hospital. (Compl. ¶ 442.) In particular, Plaintiff claims [*10] that Genesis breached Sections 1.3, 1.3(b), 1.3, 1.4, 3.3.4, and 6.1 of the Management Agreement because, among other things, Genesis failed to perform its obligations as a manager in good faith, operate CCMH on a financially prudent basis, exercise reasonable efforts to ensure that CCMH maintained a medical staff qualified to meet patient needs, allow the CCMH Board to exercise proper control, maintain a process by which managed care contract information was not shared between CCMH and Genesis, and ensure the confidentiality of CCMH's proprietary information. (Id. ¶¶ 443-448.)

Defendants argue that Plaintiff's claim should be dismissed because CCMH failed to provide notice of a breach within ten days of the breach, in accordance with § 9.8 of the Management Agreement ("Notice Provision"). (Mot. 6-7, ECF No. 28.) Section 9.8 of the Management Agreement reads:

Any claim or cause of action against Manager [Genesis] for breach or non-performance under this Agreement shall be presented to Manager in writing within ten (10) days from the date of the breach or non-performance, or shall be forever waived. Otherwise the failure of any Party to exercise any right or enforce any remedy contained [*11] in this Agreement shall not operate as or be construed to be a waiver or relinquishment of the exercise of such right or remedy, or of any other right or remedy herein contained.

(Opp'n 16, ECF No. 48.) According to Defendants, Plaintiff never provided notice of breach of contract and, therefore, Plaintiff waived this claim. (Mot. at 7-8.).

Plaintiff, on the other hand, contends that the provision should not be enforced because it is ambiguous. Plaintiff does not dispute Defendants' interpretation of the first sentence of the provision to require notice of a breach to Genesis within ten days or else Plaintiff forfeits the claim. However, Plaintiff interprets the second sentence to state that failure to exercise any right shall not operate as a waiver of such right. (Opp'n at 16-17.) Accordingly, Plaintiff argues that the sentences are contradictory, and further discovery is required to understand the parties' intent in drafting this section. (Id. at 17.)

The court finds that the two sentences can be read together. Because the two are not in conflict, the section is not ambiguous. See United States v. Donovan, 348 F.3d 509, 512 (6th Cir. 2003) (noting that where there is no ambiguity in contractual language, the court should determine the parties' [*12] intent from the plain language of the contract rather than through extrinsic evidence). Parties do not dispute that the first sentence plainly requires Plaintiff to notify Genesis of a breach of contract claim within ten days of the breach. The second sentence can be construed to supplement the first sentence. For instance, the second sentence can be read to preserve CCMH's future breach of conflict claims. Thus, even if CCMH failed to notify Genesis of a breach of contract claim in the first instance, the second sentence provides that CCMH's failure to exercise its right to notify Genesis and bring the claim in the first instance does not preclude it from bringing a future claim should another breach occur. The court is not called upon to determine the precise meaning of the second sentence in the disputed provision, but by way of the example provided, the court finds that the two sentences can be read compatibly. Because there is no inherent conflict between the two sentences, the court finds that the plain meaning of the first sentence applies. Therefore, CCMH was required to give notice of a breach of contract pursuant to the first sentence of § 9.8 of the Management Agreement. [*13] See also Lincoln Elec. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 210 F.3d 672, 684 \(6th Cir. 2000\) ("If a contract is clear and unambiguous . . . there is no issue of fact to be determined.").

However, Plaintiff also contends that the Notice Provision is unconscionable. (Id. at 19.) A provision of a contract is unconscionable where there is "(1) substantive unconscionability, i.e. unfair and unreasonable contract terms, and (2) procedural unconscionability, i.e., individualized circumstances surrounding each of the parties to a contract such that no voluntary meeting of the minds was possible." Garrett v. Hooters-Toledo, 295 F. Supp. 2d 774, 779 \(N.D. Ohio 2003\). A determination of substantive unconscionability involves "consideration of the terms of the agreement and whether they are commercially reasonable." Hayes v. Oakridge Home, 122 Ohio St. 3d 63, 2009-Ohio 2054, 908 N.E.2d 408, 414 \(Ohio 2009\). Procedural unconscionability involves the court's assessment of each party's bargaining power, and whether there was such a severe imbalance that a party was not able to meaningfully assess the contract or assert their rights in contract negotiations. Garrett, 295 F. Supp. 2d at 779; Christ Holdings, L.L.C. v. Schleappi, 2016- Ohio 4664, 67 N.E.3d 47, 54 \(Ohio Ct. App. 7th Dist. 2016\) (noting that in regard to procedural unconscionability, "[c]ourts consider each party's age, education, intelligence, business acumen and experience, who drafted the contract, and whether alterations in the printed terms were possible.").

Plaintiff argues that the provision is substantively [*14] unreasonable because the conflicts of interest of both CCMH's key personnel and the CCMH Board precluded a breach of contract claim from being raised. (Opp'n at 18.) However, Plaintiff's assertion is irrelevant to whether the Notice Provision is commercially reasonable. See Hayes, 908 N.E.2d at 408 \(Ohio 2009\). In fact, courts routinely enforce provisions that require a party to provide notice to the other party of a breach of contract even in the absence of conflict of interest issues. See, e.g., Moraine Materials Co. v. Cardinal Operating Co., No. CA 16782, 1998 Ohio App. LEXIS 5387, 1998 WL 785363, at \*4-5 \(Ohio Ct. Appl. 1998\) (upholding a 10-day written notice provision for breach of contract); see also Au Rustproofing Ctr., Inc. v. Gulf Oil Corp., 755 F.2d 1231, 1237 \(6th Cir. 1985\) (enforcing a notice provision because "[a] right of action requiring notice as a condition precedent cannot be enforced unless the notice provided for has been given.").

Plaintiff also fails to show procedural unconscionability. Both Genesis and CCMH are sophisticated business entities and both were represented by counsel. See Airlink Comms., Inc. v. Owl Wireless, LLC, No. 3:10 CV 2296, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106673, 2011 WL 4376123, at \*4 \(N.D. Ohio Sept. 20, 2011\) (declining to find procedural unconscionability where both parties are sophisticated business entities that were represented by counsel). However, Plaintiff argues that there was a disparity in bargaining power because the Management Agreement was negotiated in bad faith by parties with conflicted interests, such as former [*15] CCMH CEO Miller, who was employed by Genesis following the execution of the Management Agreement. (Opp'n at 19.) However, Plaintiff's argument rests on unsupported assumptions, including that Genesis' alleged influence was so overpowering that no other CCMH Board member or key personnel at CCMH could have acted adversely to Genesis' interests. Thus, Plaintiff has not alleged plausible allegations that CCMH and CCMH's Board, who ultimately voted to approve the Management Agreement, was at such a disadvantage in these negotiations that "no voluntary meeting of the minds was possible." Garrett, 295 F. Supp. 2d at 779. Accordingly, Plaintiff has not shown that the Notice Provision is unconscionable.

In any case, Plaintiff also argues that CCMH provided Genesis adequate notice through the agreement to terminate Genesis' management of CCMH ("Termination Agreement").<sup>2</sup> (Opp'n at 20.) But even if Genesis' breaches were cumulative and continuous as Plaintiff asserts, CCMH and Genesis suspended their contract in November of 2015. (Compl. ¶ 423.) The Termination Agreement was not executed until June 2016. (Id. ¶ 424.) Thus, CCMH still failed to give notice within the ten days required by § 9.8 of the Management Agreement.

For [*16] the foregoing reasons, Plaintiff has not alleged plausible factual allegations to support the non-enforcement of the Notice Provision on grounds of ambiguity or unconscionability. Accordingly, the court finds the provision to be applicable to Plaintiff's breach of contract claim. *Salazar v. Progressive N. Ins. Co., No. 1:13 CV 2653, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193253, 2014 WL 12596528, at \*2-4 \(N.D. Ohio Sept. 30, 2014\)* (enforcing a valid condition precedent in a contract and dismissing the plaintiff's claim for failure to satisfy that condition precedent). Because CCMH failed to give notice as required by the Management Agreement, the court dismisses Plaintiff's breach of contract claim against Genesis.

B. Breach of Fiduciary Duty as to Genesis (Count II)

To maintain a claim for breach of fiduciary duty, the plaintiff must prove the existence of a duty arising from a fiduciary relationship, the defendant's failure to carry out the duty, and an injury that resulted proximately from the defendant's failure to observe the duty. *Puhl v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 2015- Ohio 2083, 34 N.E.3d 530, 536 \(Ohio Ct. App. 12th Dist. 2015\)*. In Ohio, a fiduciary relationship is defined as one "in which special confidence and trust is reposed in the integrity and fidelity of another and there is a resulting position of superiority of influence, acquired by virtue of this special trust." *Hope Acad. Broadway Campus v. White Hat Mgmt., L.L.C., 145 Ohio St. 3d 29, 2015-Ohio 3716, 46 N.E.3d 665, 676 \(Ohio 2015\)*. To determine the existence of a fiduciary relationship [*17] between two parties, courts must consider "whether a party agreed to act primarily for the benefit of another in matters connected with its undertaking." Id. Furthermore, the "parties' characterization of their relationship in the contracts is not controlling." Id. at 675-76. Courts must look to the parties' actions to determine if a duty exists. See *N & G Constr., Inc., v. Lindley, 56 Ohio St. 2d 415, 417 n.1, 384 N.E.2d 704 \(1978\)* ("[A] description by the parties of their future relationship is not necessarily determinative when viewed in light of their actual subsequent activities."). Consequently, "there is generally no fiduciary relationship between an independent contractor and his employer unless both parties understand that the relationship is one of special trust and confidence." *Daly v. New York Life Ins. Co., No. 1:12CV125, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162074, 2017 WL 4349032, at \*5 \(S.D. Ohio Sept. 30, 2017\)* (quoting *Schulman v. Wolske & Blue Co., L.P.A., 125 Ohio App. 3d 365, 708 N.E.2d 753, 758 \(Ohio Ct. App. 1998\)*). Finally, whether a fiduciary relationship exists is a question of fact dependent upon the circumstances in each case. Id.

Genesis asserts that it did not enter into a fiduciary relationship with CCMH because the Management Agreement expressly provides that Genesis was to act and perform as an independent contractor. (Mot. at 8.) Genesis further maintains that a fiduciary relationship requires one party to "act primarily for the benefit of another," but its independent contractor [*18] status and the Management Agreement's express statements that Genesis and CCMH were not to be considered joint entities is further evidence that Genesis never intended to subvert its own interests to that of CCMH's. (Mot. at 8-9; Reply at 13.) However, Plaintiff has pled sufficient factual allegations to show that Genesis and CCMH entered into a fiduciary relationship.

In a similar case, the Ohio Supreme Court found that a company who was authorized to "operate 'all functions' of [the schools'] day-to-day operations" and "act in key matters on behalf of the schools" owed a fiduciary duty to a group of charter schools even though the company's contract stated that the company was an independent contractor. *Hope Acad. Broadway Campus, 46 N.E.3d at 676*. Based on these activities, the Ohio Supreme Court determined that it was "evident that the schools have granted broad discretion to [the company], placing special confidence and trust in the management companies and placing them in positions of superiority and influence." Id. In this case, Plaintiff points to provisions of the Management Agreement authorizing Genesis to oversee the administration of CCMH and its day-to-day operations as evidence that CCMH placed its "trust and confidence" [*19] in Genesis. Hope Acad. Broadway Campus, 46 N.E.3d at 676. Furthermore, Plaintiff's Complaint cites to several instances in which Genesis exclusively managed key areas of CCMH's administration, such as physician recruitment and healthcare plans for CCMH employees. (Compl. ¶¶ 226-246, 281-296.) Thus, despite Genesis' contractual status as an independent contractor of CCMH, its actions, both agreed to in the contract and as executed, are "hallmarks of a fiduciary relationship." Hope Acad. Broadway Campus, 46 N.E.3d at 675-76.

<sup>2</sup> Clause B of the Termination Agreement reads: "Each party reserves all of its rights, remedies, claims, defenses and affirmative defenses arising under, related to, or subject to the provisions of section 9.8 of the Management Agreement. Nothing in this Agreement shall be deemed to affect either Party's rights related to Section 9.8 in any way." (Opp'n at 20.)

In addition, Genesis' independent status and its actions in carrying out its own interests need not be mutually exclusive of a commitment to act for CCMH's benefit, as a fiduciary relationship requires. For instance, the court could infer that Genesis entered into the Management Agreement in the best interest of both Genesis and CCMH in continuing to provide medical services to those in their common primary service area. (Compl. ¶¶ 48, 51-52, 84.) Accordingly, Plaintiff has sufficiently pled factual allegations to support that a fiduciary relationship could have plausibly existed between Genesis and CCMH, such that Genesis owed a fiduciary duty to CCMH.

In addition, Genesis maintains that Plaintiff cannot proceed on its breach of fiduciary duty claim because [*20] it is duplicative of Plaintiff's breach of contract claim. (Mot. at 9.) Plaintiff contends that its breach of fiduciary duty claim is distinct from its breach of contract claim because it is a claim based in tort. (Opp'n at 26.) In Ohio, "[a] claim of breach of a fiduciary duty is basically a claim of negligence, albeit involving a higher standard of care. Strock v. Pressnell, 38 Ohio St. 3d 207, 527 N.E.2d 1235, 1243 (Ohio 1988). To have a cognizable tort claim, the plaintiff must "allege a breach of some positive legal duty imposed by law because of the relationship of the parties, rather than from a mere omission to perform a contract obligation." Academic Imaging, LLC v. Soterion Corp, 352 F. App'x 59, 64-65 (6th Cir. 2009). In other words, when a duty is imposed by a contract, the tort claim fails. See, e.g., *Infocision Mgmt. Corp. v. Found. for Moral Law, Inc., No. 5:09 CV 951, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77033, 2009 WL 2781749, at *5 (N.D. Ohio Aug. 28, 2009)*; *K & D Farms, Ltd. v. Enervest Operating, L.L.C., No. 2015CA00038, 2015 Ohio App. LEXIS 4364, 2015 WL 6507785, at *8 (Ohio Ct. App. 5th Dist. 2015)*.

As the court has already determined above, Plaintiff has established a plausible claim that a fiduciary relationship exists even though the duty, as Defendants argue themselves, is not expressly addressed in the Management Agreement. However, Genesis argues that Plaintiff's alleged damages are the same as those that arise from the breach of contract claim. (Mot. at 10.) Genesis asserts that this is evidence that Plaintiff's breach of fiduciary claim cannot be made independent of Plaintiff's breach of contract claim. In [*21] addition, Genesis contends that Plaintiff plainly references portions of the Management Agreement in arguing that Genesis has a fiduciary duty and Genesis breached that duty. (Reply at 14.) Genesis maintains that Plaintiff's reliance on the Management Agreement also shows that the fiduciary duty claim is based on the contract.

However, Genesis mischaracterizes Plaintiff's assertions. Although Plaintiff refers to the Management Agreement, Plaintiff does so only insofar as to show that there is factual support for its claim that Genesis had a fiduciary duty. While Plaintiff alleges the same injuries here as it did under its breach of contract claim, the source of the injury in its breach of fiduciary claim is distinct from that of its breach of contract claim. In other words, Genesis' fiduciary duty does not arise from a contract. Accordingly, the court finds that Plaintiff has provided sufficient support that its breach of fiduciary duty claim could be maintained separate from its breach of contract claim. Thus, Plaintiff's breach of fiduciary claim survives Defendants' Motion to Dismiss.

C. Violations of Federal and State Antitrust Laws as to Genesis and Perry (Counts V-VIII)

Plaintiff [*22] alleges that Genesis and Perry violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (Count V) and the Valentine Act, Ohio Rev. Code § 1331.01 et seq. (Count VIII). Plaintiff also claims that Genesis violated and attempted to violate Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (Counts VI, VII).

The parties do not dispute that the Valentine Act is interpreted in the same manner as the Sherman Act, its federal counterpart. Johnson v. Microsoft Corp., 106 Ohio St. 3d 278, 2005- Ohio 4985, 834 N.E.2d 791, 795 (Ohio 2005).

Thus, Plaintiff's Valentine Act claim rises and falls with its Sherman Act claims. See Nilavar v. Mercy Health Sys. W. Ohio, 494 F. Supp. 2d 604, 621 (S.D. Ohio 2005) (granting summary judgment to the defendants on a Valentine Act claim based on a grant of summary judgment to the defendants on a Sherman Act claim); Richter Concrete Corp. v. Hilltop Basic Res., Inc., 547 F. Supp. 893, 920 (S.D. Ohio 1981) (finding that a failure to prove claims under the Sherman Act constitutes a failure to prove the claim under the Valentine Act). However, the parties disagree on the issue of whether Plaintiff has standing to bring claims under antitrust law.

Antitrust standing and Article III standing are not one and the same. NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Co., 507 F.3d 442, 449 (6th Cir. 2007). Antitrust standing requires a different analysis because antitrust laws were "enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). The test for antitrust standing consists of five factors: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including [*23] the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market; (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative; (4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and (5) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation. Defiance Hosp. v. Fauster-Cameron, Inc., 344 F. Supp. 2d 1097, 1106 (N.D. Ohio 2004) (quoting Southhaven Land Co., Inc. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1085 (6th Cir. 1983)).

Of particular relevance to Defendants' Motion are the first two factors which require that "for an antitrust plaintiff to have antitrust standing, he or she must have suffered an antitrust injury." MacNealy v. Dayton Osteopathic Hosp. Inc., No. C-3-88-402, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21312, 1993 WL 1377513, at *6 (S.D. Ohio Mar. 3, 1993). As the United States Supreme Court has instructed, antitrust injury "should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of the anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489. In order to show an antitrust injury, the plaintiff's injury must be aligned with that of consumers. See Tri-Gen, Inc. v. Int'l Union of Operating Engineers, Local 150, AFL-CIO, 433 F.3d 1024, 1031 (7th Cir. 2006) ("[A] plaintiff must demonstrate consumer injury to have standing to assert antitrust violations."). In addition, it is generally difficult for a plaintiff-competitor to show that it has antitrust standing because it typically "gains from higher prices and loses from lower prices—just the opposite of the consumer interest." MacNealy v. Dayton Osteopathic Hosp. Inc., No. C-3-88-402, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21312, 1993 WL 1377513, at *8 (S.D. Ohio Mar. 3, 1993); [*24] see also Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 583, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (noting that when the parties are competitors, both parties stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price, and thus, one party cannot recover for a conspiracy to impose restraints that have the effect of either raising market price or limiting output).

Plaintiff asserts that it suffered an antitrust injury when Genesis controlled and limited physician recruitment, and, thus, increased the prices for medical services in the region which Genesis and CCMH both served. (Opp'n at 29; Compl. ¶¶ 481, 506.) Plaintiff states that Genesis would make hiring and recruitment decisions at CCMH for Genesis' own benefit. For example, Plaintiff states that Genesis would pursue physician candidates first and place candidates at CCMH only if they were not suitable for Genesis. (Compl. ¶¶ 228, 233.) Furthermore, Plaintiff maintains that because CCMH was precluded from any recruitment decisions, it was not able to set physician compensation rates. (Compl. ¶¶ 229, 235, 236.) Genesis, on the other hand, was able to set higher salaries for potential candidates and entice physicians to work at Genesis rather than CCMH. (Id.) Therefore, Plaintiff claims that Genesis lowered competition [*25] because CCMH was not able to adequately hire physicians to compete with Genesis' physicians. (Opp'n at 29-30; Compl. ¶ 229.) Thus, Plaintiff alleges that Genesis' actions "reduced output" and increased the prices for medical services in the region. Presumably, Plaintiff is arguing that as a result of the physician hiring restrictions that Genesis imposed on CCMH which "reduced output" of physicians in the region, CCMH was unable to compete in the market.

The court finds that Plaintiff does not have standing to pursue its antitrust claims. First, Plaintiff has not plausibly alleged that "the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury" is one that the antitrust laws were intended to protect. Southhaven Land Co., Inc. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1085 (6th Cir. 1983). Although Plaintiff alleges that Genesis reduced the availability of physicians, Genesis only reduced the number of physicians available to CCMH. Plaintiff does not allege that Genesis reduced the total number of physicians in the market. Thus, Plaintiff's output-restriction allegation fundamentally differs from that of other antitrust cases where the claimed reduction in output marketwide leads to higher prices for consumers. See, e.g., Defiance Hosp. v. Fauster-Cameron, Inc., 344 F. Supp. 2d 1097, 1108 (N.D. Ohio 2004) (finding that a hospital had antitrust standing to sue an anesthetic [*26] services provider who controlled the market in anesthetic services and refused its services to the hospital unless it signed certain exclusivity agreements). Even if CCMH suffered an injury as a result of Genesis' restrictions on CCMH's physician recruitment, Plaintiff has not alleged that such injury was equally suffered by consumers because there were fewer physicians available in the market to consumers.

Second, Plaintiff does not allege a plausible "causal connection between the antitrust violation," Southhaven Land Co., Inc., 715 F.2d at 1085, and the increased medical services costs to consumers, which CCMH claims caused CCMH to be "squeezed out of the Coshocton market." (Opp'n at 31.) Accepting Plaintiff's allegations that Genesis monopolized physician recruitment in the region as true, it is plausible that consumers could have suffered increased market prices for medical services as a result. Nelson v. Monroe Regional Med. Center, 925 F.2d 1555, 1566-67 (7th Cir. 1991) (discussing how the anti-competitive effects of a clinic's merger with a medical center could lead to "decreased output, and increased prices"). But it does not follow that CCMH would have necessarily suffered from an increase in medical prices in the region. In fact, CCMH would have benefitted from a rise in prices that it could [*27] charge for medical services, whether or not it was a knowing or willing participant in the alleged Genesis scheme. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582-83, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). To the extent that Plaintiff alleges that it was driven out of the market by Genesis, Plaintiff has not sufficiently pled facts that this was caused by an increase in the medical services prices, and not, instead, by other alleged acts in Plaintiff's Complaint.

Therefore, Plaintiff does not have standing to pursue its Sherman Act claims and these claims are dismissed. Accordingly, the court also dismisses Plaintiff's Valentine Act claims.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the court grants Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (ECF No. 28) as to Counts I, VI, and VII against Defendant Genesis Healthcare Systems, and Counts V and VIII against Defendants Genesis Healthcare Systems and Matthew Perry. The court denies Defendants' Motion as to Count II against Defendant Genesis Healthcare Systems.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER

Before the court is All Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment. Doc. no. 262. Upon due consideration of the parties' submissions, the court [*2] makes its determination.

I.

Introduction

In the Second Amended Complaint, plaintiff seeks relief against defendants under thirteen claims. Seven of the claims are based upon violations of the Lanham Act and its Oklahoma counterpart. Four claims are tort claims and two claims are for breach of contract. Defendants move for partial summary judgment with respect to all claims except the breach of contract claims.

Initially, defendants assert the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the Lanham Act claims to the extent they seek to recover any relief based upon defendants' foreign sales of radio remote control (RRC) products. The total amount of these sales, defendants represent, is 56,608,254.76 euros (€). As to any United States sales, defendants acknowledge the court has subject matter jurisdiction. Defendants, however, argue that Abitron Germany GmbH (ABIG) and Abitron Austria GmbH (ABIA) (collectively Abitron entities) have no liability for infringing on the "Hetronic" trademark because they sold RRCs under the "Abitron" trademark. All defendants assert that they have no liability for infringing on other trade names and trade dress which are the subject of the Lanham Act claims [*3] because they own the trade names and trade dress.

Next, defendants challenge plaintiff's tort claims, arguing that the specific remedy plaintiff seeks — $5.4 million in attorneys' fees spent pursuing a civil action against plaintiff's former President, Torsten Rempe (Rempe) — is not recoverable. Defendants contend the attorney's fees are not "collateral damages" for purposes of the conversion claim, and under the Oklahoma Legislature's 2011 enactment of 23 O.S. § 15, they are not responsible for costs incurred pursuing Rempe's share of plaintiff's harm.

Defendants additionally argue that plaintiff has no actionable conversion claim or civil conspiracy claim against the Abitron entities.

Lastly, defendants argue that they are entitled to partial summary judgment on the "breach of indemnity" claim included in plaintiff's expert's report but not alleged by plaintiff in the Second Amended Complaint.

Plaintiff opposes defendants' partial summary judgment motion in all respects.

II.

Standard of Review

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(a) provides that "[a] party may move for summary judgment, identifying each claim or defense—or part of each claim or defense—on which summary judgment is sought." Rule 56(a), Fed. R. Civ. P. Summary judgment is appropriate under [*4] Rule 56(a) if "the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Id. In deciding whether summary judgment is appropriate, the court does not weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter asserted, but only determines whether there is a genuine issue of material fact for trial. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). A dispute is "genuine" "if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Id. at 248. A fact is "material" if under the substantive law, it is essential to the proper disposition of the claim. Id. In adjudicating a motion for summary judgment, the court views the evidence and draws all reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. McGehee v. Forest Oil Corporation, 908 F.3d 619, 624 (10th Cir. 2018).

III.

*Lanham Act Claims*a. Extraterritorial Application

In Counts 3 through 8 of the Second Amended Complaint, plaintiff alleges claims against defendants under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1051, et seq. Specifically, plaintiff alleges claims of trademark infringement in violation of sections 32 and 43\(a\) of the Lanham Act,<sup>1</sup> unfair competition in violation of section 43\(a\), false designation of origin in violation of section 43\(a\), trademark counterfeiting and infringement in violation of section 32, and [*5] contributory trademark infringement in violation of sections 32 and 43\(a\). In their motion, defendants challenge the extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act to the alleged infringement, unfair competition and false designation of origin involving defendants' foreign sales of RRCs and spare parts.<sup>2</sup> In support of this challenge, defendants rely upon a three-factor test established by the Second Circuit in Vanity Fair Mills, Inc. v. T. Eaton Co., 234 F.2d 633, 642 \(2d Cir. 1956\),<sup>3</sup> for determining whether the Lanham Act can be applied beyond the boundaries of the United States. According to defendants, plaintiff — having the burden of establishing subject matter jurisdiction — cannot prove any of the three factors (defendant's conduct had a substantial effect on United States commerce; defendant is a United States citizen; and there is no conflict with trademark rights established under the foreign law) with respect to their foreign sales. Therefore, defendants argue the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over plaintiff's Lanham Act claims involving their foreign sales.<sup>4</sup>

Plaintiff responds that defendants' infringing conduct justifies extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act under the Vanity Fair test. First, plaintiff asserts that defendants' infringing [*6] conduct has had a substantial effect on United States commerce by diverting sales from plaintiff, causing customer confusion and harming plaintiff's reputation. Additionally, plaintiff points out that defendants have had substantial ties with the United States because they entered into distribution and license agreements governed by Oklahoma law, and while operating under those agreements, received training in Oklahoma, hired Rempe and his company to assist in competing with plaintiff and circulated contact information for a United States distributor. Plaintiff also points out that after termination of the distribution and license agreements, defendants obtained the "Abitron" trademark in the United States, contracted with a United States distributor to sell RRCs, and after the distributorship relationship ended, held themselves out as offering RRCs for sale in the United States. In addition, plaintiff asserts that the Abitron entities have attended trade shows in the United States and exhibited products at foreign trade shows directed at United States citizens. Further, plaintiff maintains that defendants' direct and indirect sales in the United States are substantial in that they [*7] total over €2 million.

<sup>4</sup> Defendants concede the court has subject matter jurisdiction over the Lanham Act claims involving direct sales into the United States. According to defendants, these sales were made by ABIG and Hetronic Germany GmbH. These sales, defendants assert, total €219,237.07 (€202,134.12 of RRCs and €17,102.95 of spare parts). Plaintiff challenges defendants' sales figures not only for direct sales to the United States but also for the foreign sales previously noted. For purposes of adjudicating defendants' motion, the court need not address plaintiff's challenge.

Second, plaintiff argues that even though defendants are not United States citizens, they have availed themselves of United States laws. Plaintiff again points out that defendants entered into distribution and license agreements with it. According to plaintiff, the distribution agreements contained Oklahoma choice-of-law and forum-selection clauses. Plaintiff also emphasizes that defendants have had substantial ties with the United States as previously described.

Third, plaintiff contends that extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act is appropriate since there is no conflict with any valid foreign trademark. Plaintiff asserts that defendants do not possess any valid, registered trademark in any foreign country to which they sell. Plaintiff states that it owns the registered trademarks for HETRONIC® and NOVA® in the United States as well as in the European Union. The OHIM<sup>5</sup> proceeding challenging the NOVA® trademark registration in the European Union, plaintiff contends, should not preclude this court from applying the Lanham Act to the foreign sales because that proceeding was filed only after this lawsuit was commenced and it argues subsequent events do not [*8] oust jurisdiction. Further, plaintiff posits that defendants' bare assertion of a conflict between United States and German trademark laws does not warrant refusal to exercise jurisdiction with respect to the foreign sales.

Although satisfying the Second Circuit's Vanity Fair three-factor test, plaintiff points out that the Ninth Circuit has established a similar three-factor test, which incorporates the test it developed to determine the extraterritorial reach of antitrust laws in Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America, N.T. and S.A., 549 F.2d 597, 613 (9th Cir. 1976). See, Star-Kist Foods, Inc. v. P.J. Rhodes & Co., 769 F.2d 1393, 1395 (9th Cir. 1985). Under this test, in order for the Lanham Act to apply extraterritorially: (1) the alleged violations must create some effect on U.S. foreign commerce; (2) the effect must be sufficiently great to present a cognizable injury to the plaintiff under the Lanham Act; and (3) the interests of and links to U.S. foreign commerce must be sufficiently strong in relation to those of other nations to justify an assertion of extraterritorial authority.<sup>6</sup> According to plaintiff, there is reason to believe the Tenth Circuit would follow the Timberlane factors because it previously adopted those factors to determine the extraterritorial application of antitrust law in Montreal Trading Ltd. v. Amex Inc., 661 F.2d 864, 869 (10th Cir. 1981). Plaintiff contends that the first two factors [*9] largely mirror the Vanity Fair substantial-effect-on-United States-commerce factor and it has demonstrated that that factor cuts in plaintiff's favor. Plaintiff asserts that the third factor articulated in Timberlane weighs in favor of extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act because defendants' infringing conduct has sufficiently strong links to United States foreign commerce.

Defendants, in reply, urge the court to follow the Vanity Fair test, and in so doing, find that the Lanham Act does not apply to their foreign sales. They contend that there has been no substantial effect on the United States because they operate in Europe and nearly all of their sales involved foreign customers. Defendants assert that their direct sales of RRCs totaling €202,134.12 are a tiny fraction of the collective sales at issue and argue that most of the direct sales do not even involve the Lanham Act because they were made to plaintiff or its affiliates or were made by ABIG under the "Abitron" name. Although they do not contest jurisdiction over the direct sales to the United States, defendants argue that plaintiff wants to use those sales as a springboard to reach over €56 million in sales, [*10] which defendants argue should not be permitted. Defendants also assert that the rights to the "NOVA" name are in dispute in European Union and maintain that the dispute belongs there since the trademarks or trade names originated in Germany and were created by a predecessor, Hetronic Steuersysteme GmbH. Moreover, defendants state that ABIG holds the trademark registration in Germany on the NOVA, GL, GR and GA names. They also point out that it is undisputed they are not United States citizens. Further, defendants argue that plaintiff has cited no well-reasoned case to support extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act over their foreign sales.

<sup>6</sup> The third factor breaks down into a seven-part test exploring such things as the degree of conflict with foreign law and the nationality and allegiance of the parties. See, Star-kist Foods, Inc., 769 F.2d at 1395.

Defendants therefore seek partial summary judgment limiting the amount of sales to which plaintiff can seek relief under the Lanham Act to €202,134.12 in direct sales of RRCs and €17,102.95 in spare parts.<sup>7</sup>

In determining the extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act, the court finds that it is a "merits question" and not a question of the court's subject matter jurisdiction. See, *Morrison v. National Australia Bank Ltd., 561 U.S. 247, 253-254, 130 S. Ct. 2869, 177 L. Ed. 2d 535 \(2010\)* (extraterritorial reach of §10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is a "merits question" not a "question of subject-matter jurisdiction"); see also [*11] *Trader Joe's Co. v. Hallatt, 835 F.3d 960, 968 \(9th Cir. 2016\)* ("We hold that the extraterritorial reach of the Lanham Act is a merits question that does not implicate federal courts' subject-matter jurisdiction.") (citing *Morrison, 561 U.S. at 253-54*); and *A.O. Smith Corporation v. USA Smith Industry Dev. Inc., 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77283, 2017 WL 2224539, \*2 \(D. Colo. May 22, 2017\)* (agreeing with the conclusion in Trader Joe's that "the extraterritorial reach of the Lanham Act goes to the merits of a trademark claim").

As defendants concede that the Lanham Act applies to direct sales into the United States, the court need not address the Act's application to those claims. The question for the court is whether the Lanham Act applies to defendants' foreign sales.

The Supreme Court has made it clear that, in appropriate circumstances, the Lanham Act can be applied extraterritorially to conduct in a foreign country. See, *Steele v. Bulova Watch Co., 344 U.S. 280, 73 S. Ct. 252, 97 L. Ed. 319, 1953 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 424 \(1952\)*. The Court, however, has not set forth a specific framework for determining when the extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act is warranted. The Tenth Circuit also has not established a formulation for making that determination, but other circuit courts have. *McBee v. Delica Co., Ltd., 417 F.3d 107 \(1st Cir. 2005\)*; *Vanity Fair, 234 F.2d at 642*; *Nintendo of America, Inc. v. Aeropower Co., Ltd., 34 F.3d 246, 250 \(4th Cir. 1994\)*; *American Rice, Inc. v. Arkansas Rice Growers Co-op. Ass'n, 701 F.2d 408, 414 \(5th Cir. 1983\)*; *Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 769 F.2d at 1395*; and *International Cafe, S.A.L. v. Hard Rock Cafe Intern. \(U.S.A.\), Inc., 252 F.3d 1274, 1278 \(11th Cir. 2001\)*. As has been discussed, defendants urge the court to use the Second Circuit's Vanity Fair test and plaintiff applies the Vanity Fair test to counter defendants' arguments but also advocates the use of the Ninth [*12] Circuit's Timberlane test. Upon review and out of an abundance of caution, the court will apply both tests. Courts have found the Vanity Fair test to be the "most commonly employed test." *International Academy of Business and Financial Management, Ltd v. Mentz, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7714, 2013 WL 212640, at \*5 \(D. Colo. Jan. 18, 2013\)*. Nonetheless, as stated by plaintiff, the Tenth Circuit has endorsed the analysis set forth in Timberlane as containing the appropriate elements governing consideration of extraterritorial application of the Sherman Act. And that same analysis has been applied by the Ninth Circuit in determining the extraterritorial reach of the Lanham Act. See, *Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 769 F.2d at 1395*.

Vanity Fair Test

The Vanity Fair test asks whether (1) the defendant's conduct had a substantial effect on United States commerce; (2) the defendant is a United States citizen; and (3) there exists a conflict with trademark rights established under foreign law. Vanity Fair Mills, Inc., 234 F.2d at 642. The Second Circuit, stated, in Vanity Fair, that "the absence of one of the above factors might well be determinative," but the absence of two "is certainly fatal" as to the extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act. Id. at 643. However, the Second Circuit subsequently noted that it has not applied the Lanham Act extraterritorially, absent a substantial effect on United States commerce. See, Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Arco Globus Intern. Co., Inc., 150 F.3d 189, 192 n. 4 (2d Cir. 1998).

*Substantial [*13] Effect on United States Commerce*

The court finds that plaintiff has proffered evidence, viewed in a light most favorable to plaintiff, sufficient to establish that defendants' alleged infringing conduct has had a substantial effect on United States commerce. As recognized by the First Circuit in McBee v. Delica Co., Ltd., 417 F.3d at 126, "[c]ourts have considered sales diverted from American companies in foreign countries in their analyses." Id. (citing Totalplan Corp. of Am. v. Colborne, 14 F.3d 824, 830-831 (2d Cir. 1994) and American Rice, Inc., 701 F.2d at 414-415); see also, Bulova, 344 U.S. at 283-84 and Warnaco Inc. v. VF Corp., 844 F. Supp. 940, 950-952 (S.D.N.Y. 1994), but see, Tire Engineering and Distribution, LLC v. Shandong Linglong Rubber Company, Ltd., 682 F.3d 292, 311 (4th Cir. 2012) (diversion-of-sales theory applicable only in cases involving defendant United States companies). Plaintiff has demonstrated that the use by Hetronic Germany GmbH (HG) and Hydronic Steuersysteme GmbH (HCEE) of KH parts, while under contract with plaintiff, precluded sales of "Hetronic" parts to HG and HCEE, resulting in a significant drop in revenue. Plaintiff was entitled to revenue from the sale of "Hetronic" parts because of the distribution agreements executed by HG and HCEE. It has also demonstrated that defendants' sales of RRCs, after termination of the distribution agreements and after the formation of the Abitron entities, precluded sales of Hetronic's RRCs in the same markets. The evidence shows that like defendants, Hetronic advertises, [*14] promotes and sells RRCs worldwide. Hetronic and defendants have competed, and do compete, in many of the same markets.

Courts have also considered customer confusion and harm to reputation in analysis of the substantial effect factor. Atlantic Richfield Co., 150 F.3d at 192-193; A.V. by Versace, Inc. v. Gianni Versace, S.p.A., 126 F. Supp.2d 328, 340-341 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); Libbey Glass, Inc. v. Oneida Ltd., 61 F. Supp.2d 720, 724 (N.D. Ohio 1999); Warnaco Inc., 844 F. Supp. at 951-952. Viewed in a light favorable to plaintiff, the record evidence raises genuine issues of material fact as to customer confusion and harm to reputation to plaintiff in the United States due to defendants' alleged infringing conduct.

In sum, the court finds, after viewing the record evidence in a light most favorably to it, that plaintiff has proffered evidence to satisfy the "substantial effect on United States commerce" factor.

Citizenship of Defendants

It is undisputed that none of the defendants are citizens of the United States. Plaintiff, however, urges the court to find that this factor nonetheless weighs in favor of plaintiff because defendants have had substantial ties to the United States through the distribution and license agreements, attending training in Oklahoma, hiring Rempe and his company to consult with them, hiring a United States distributor, and obtaining a trademark for "Abitron" in the United States. The court notes that courts [*15] have treated foreign citizens as United States citizens when these defendants resided in the United States and did business in the United States or controlled a United States company. See, A.V. by Versace, Inc. v. Gianni Versace, S.p.A., 126 F. Supp. 2d 328, 337 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (finding that defendant, who "resided in and [had] done business in the United States for over forty years" was a "constructive" United States citizen); Calvin Klein Indus., Inc. v. BFK Hong Kong, Ltd., 714 F. Supp. 78, 80 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (finding that a foreign defendant could be treated as a United States citizen because he "resid[ed] in New York and is the controlling force behind" a New York corporation). In the case at bar, none of the defendants have resided in the United States or conducted business for many years in the United States or controlled a United States corporation. The court recognizes that some courts have also considered agreements or joint ventures between foreign citizens and American citizens as well as foreign citizens' consent to jurisdiction in the United States in analyzing the United States citizen factor. NewMarkets Partners LLC v. Oppenheim, 638 F.Supp.2d 394, 407 (S.D. N.Y. 2009); Warnaco Inc., 844 F. Supp. at 952. However, the court is not convinced that the distribution and license agreements and other domestic activities described by plaintiff suffice to demonstrate (resolving all factual doubts in favor of plaintiff) that defendants are in effect "constructive" [*16] United States citizens for purposes of the Vanity Fair test. The court therefore concludes that plaintiff has not presented evidence adequate to satisfy the United States citizenship factor.

Conflict of Law

In Vanity Fair, the Second Circuit concluded that "the remedies provided by the Lanham Act . . . should not be given an extraterritorial application against foreign citizens acting under presumably valid trade-marks in a foreign country." Vanity Fair Mills, 234 F.2d at 643. Plaintiff has proffered evidence that it owns the registered trademark for "Hetricnic" in the United States and other countries, including Germany and the European Union. Defendants do not challenge this. The court finds no conflict of law with trademark rights established under foreign law with respect to the "Hetricnic" name.

As to the trade names, other than "NOVA," there is no evidence of valid registrations by defendants for any of the trade names as of the time of filing of this action against defendants. In reply, defendants proffer evidence that ABIG obtained registrations for GL, GR and GA<sup>8</sup> names. Even if the court were to consider these registrations, which were proffered for the first time in reply, the registrations appear to have been [*17] obtained after suit was filed against ABIG in April of 2015. Consequently, defendants were not operating under any valid registrations under foreign law for the GL, GR and GA names at the times relevant to this action. Although plaintiff seeks injunctive relief on the Lanham Act claims, it also seeks damages. Those damages are calculated from August, 2012. And as to ABIG, damages are sought after it began operations in September of 2014. The court discerns no rights under foreign law with respect to the GL, GR and GA names with which a damage award might conflict. Moreover, there are other trade names at issue, such as ERGO, as to which there is no conflict with any trademark rights established under foreign law.

With respect to "NOVA" trade name, plaintiff has shown that it owns the registered trademark for "NOVA" in the United States and the European Union. Defendants argue that the pending OHIM proceeding, which was commenced in July 2015 after this lawsuit was filed, should preclude the court from applying the Lanham Act extraterritorially. Defendants also point out for the first time in reply that ABIG has obtained registration of the "NOVA" name in Germany. Even if the court were [*18] to consider that evidence, the trademark registration appears to have been obtained in 2016 after this action was filed. As discussed, while plaintiff seeks injunctive relief for its Lanham Act claims, it also seeks damages. The court discerns no rights under foreign law with respect to the "NOVA" name with which a damage award might conflict. Further, although defendants argue that there are differences between German law and United States law with respect to trademarks or trade names, the Vanity Fair test looks to whether there exists a "conflict with trade-mark rights established under foreign law." Vanity Fair Mills, Inc., 234 F.2d at 642 (emphasis added). Lastly, the court finds that even if the OHIM proceeding were to result in a cancellation of plaintiff's registered trademark for "NOVA," defendants have not satisfied the court that application of the Lanham Act would conflict with German trademark law regarding the unregistered trade name of "NOVA." The alleged differences proffered by defendants between German law and United States law do not provide significant guidance for this court so as to enable the court to conclude that an actual conflict exists.<sup>9</sup> Although the court should avoid deciding a case where "the [*19] exercise of such power is fraught with possibilities of discord and conflict with the authorities of another country," see, Vanity Fair Mills, 234 F.2d at 647, the court is not convinced that there is a real prospect of discord and conflict with respect to plaintiff's Lanham Act claims.<sup>10</sup>

In reply, defendants cite Star-Kist Foods, Inc. and Pinkberry, Inc. v. JEC Intern. Corp., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140669, 2011 WL 6101828 \(C.D. Calif. Dec. 7, 2011\), in opposition to extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act extraterritorially where petitions to cancel trademark proceedings are pending. However, the court notes that the cancellation proceedings in both cases occurred prior to the filing of the infringement cases and in Star-Kist Foods, Inc., plaintiff was sought only injunctive relief. Star-Kist Foods, 769 F.2d at 1394-1395; Pinkberry, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140669, 2011 WL 6101828, \*1. Moreover, both cases applied the Timberlane test, not the Vanity Fair test, for determining extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act.

In sum, the court finds that the record evidence, viewed favorably in favor of plaintiff, does not indicate a conflict with trademark rights established under foreign law.

Applying the Vanity Fair Test

The record evidence establishes that two of the Vanity Fair factors have been satisfied and one of those factors includes substantial effect on United States commerce. Balancing those factors against the United States citizen factor, [*20] the court concludes that extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act to defendants' foreign sales based upon the Vanity Fair test is appropriate.

Timberline Test

As a prerequisite to extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act under the Timberline test, "first, there must be some effect on American foreign commerce; second, the effect must be sufficiently great to present a cognizable injury to plaintiffs under the federal statute; and third, the interests of and links to American foreign commerce must be sufficiently strong in relation to those of other nations to justify an assertion of extraterritorial application." Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 769 F.2d at 1395.

Some Effect on American Foreign Commerce

The court concludes that plaintiff has presented adequate evidence, viewed in its favor, to establish the first Timberlane factor—some effect on American foreign commerce.<sup>11</sup> Plaintiff has proffered evidence that HG and HCEE's use of KH parts diverted sales of "Hetricnic" parts and defendants' sales of RRCs diverted sales of plaintiff's RRCs in the same markets. See, Reebok Intern., Ltd. v. Marnatech Enterprises, Inc., 970 F.2d 552, 555 \(9th Cir. 1992\) and American Rice, Inc., 701 F.2d at 414-415; see also, Totalplan Corp. of Am., 14 F.3d at 830-831.

Cognizable Injury to Plaintiff under the Lanham Act

The court concludes that plaintiff has satisfied the second Timberlane requirement because HG [*21] and HCEE's use of KH parts prevented plaintiff from selling its parts to defendants and defendants' sales of RRCs to customers prevented plaintiff from selling its RRCs to those same customers. Defendants' activities caused economic injury to <sup>10</sup> The court further notes that in their motion, defendants represent that the law of Austria would also apply to some foreign sales. However, defendants have provided nothing but a bare assertion that Austrian trademark law is different from United States trademark law. The court finds that a bare assertion is not adequate to show a conflict of law.

<sup>11</sup> The Ninth Circuit has said that "[a] defendant's foreign activities need not have a substantial effect or even significant effect on American commerce, rather, 'some effect' may be sufficient." Trader Joe's Company v. Hallatt, 835 F.3d 960, 969 \(9th Cir. 2016\). plaintiff, which injury is cognizable under the Lanham Act. See, Ocean Garden, Inc. v. Marktrade Co., Inc., 953 F.2d 500, 503 (9th Cir. 1991); see also, Pinkberry, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140669, 2011 WL 6101828, at *4 ("A loss of current and prospective business opportunity is a cognizable injury under the Lanham Act.") Interests of and Links to American Foreign Commerce in Relation to Others

The third factor—interests of and links to American foreign commerce must be sufficiently strong in relation to those of other nations—includes examination and balancing of seven relevant factors. They are:

[1] the degree of conflict with foreign law or policy, [2] the nationality or allegiance of the parties and the locations or principal places of business of corporations, [3] the extent to which enforcement by either state can be expected to achieve compliance, [4] the relative significance of effects on the United States as compared with those elsewhere, [5] the extent to which there is explicit purpose to harm or affect American commerce, [6] the foreseeability of such effect, and [7] the [*22] relative importance[,] to the violations charged[,] of conduct within the United States as compared with conduct abroad.

Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 769 F.2d at 1395 (bracketed material added). "No one factor is dispositive; each factor is just one consideration to be balanced." Trader Joe's Company v. Hallatt, 835 F.3d 960, 973 (9th Cir. 2016) (internal quotation omitted).

i. Degree of Conflict

The first relevant factor involves the degree of conflict with foreign law or policy. In the court's view, this factor weighs in favor of extraterritorial application. As previously discussed, there is no conflict with foreign law or policy with respect to the registered trademark of "Hetric." With respect to the trade names, other than "NOVA," the court finds that there is no conflict with foreign law or policy. Although ABIG registered the names, GL, GR and GA, in Germany, it did so after this lawsuit was commenced, and the court finds no conflict with respect to plaintiff's requested relief in the form of damages. Defendants also have not shown as a matter of law that application of the Lanham Act to claims involving unregistered trade names would conflict with German law or any other foreign law. And, there is no evidence of any pending or ongoing adversarial proceeding involving the unregistered [*23] trade names. The Ninth Circuit has noted that if "there are no pending proceedings" abroad, then it would not "be an affront to the foreign country's sovereignty or law." Ocean Garden, 953 F.2d. at 503. While defendants have challenged plaintiff's registered trademark for "NOVA" in the OHIM proceeding, any cancellation of the mark would result in plaintiff claiming ownership of the unregistered trade name and defendants have not shown as a matter of law that application of the Lanham Act to claims involving the unregistered trade name would conflict with German law or any other foreign law. (Defendants also claim ownership of the unregistered trade name of "NOVA" for the period relevant to this action.)

ii. Nationality and Allegiance of Parties/Locations or Principal Place of Business

As to the second factor, nationality or allegiance of the parties and locations or principal places of business, plaintiff is a United States corporation, headquartered in Oklahoma City. Defendants HG and ABIG are German corporations. ABIG took over HG's operations in September of 2014 and is headquartered in Langquaid, Germany. Defendants HCEE and ABIA are Austrian corporations. ABIA took over HCEE's operations in August of 2014 and [*24] is headquartered in Altheim, Austria. Defendant, Albert Fuchs, is domiciled in Austria, and defendant, ABI Holding, Inc., is an Austrian corporation.

Plaintiff has proffered evidence that HG was a distributor for plaintiff pursuant to distribution agreements from April of 2010 until June of 2014 and HCEE was a distributor for plaintiff from September of 2008 until June of 2014. And during this same time, HG and HCEE were licensees of plaintiff pursuant to license agreements. The evidence, viewed in a light favorable to plaintiff, reveals that HG and HCEE used their status as distributors and licensees to assist in their alleged infringing conduct. The evidence also shows that HG and HCEE hired plaintiff's former President, a United States citizen, as a consultant to assist them. After the termination of the distribution and license agreements, the evidence, viewed in plaintiff's favor, demonstrates that HG and HCEE continued to hold themselves out as plaintiff's distributors and licensees. Thereafter, the Abitron companies were formed and took over HG and HCEE's operations, taking all employees but one. They applied for and registered the "Abitron" trademark in the United States and [*25] hired a United States distributor to sell products in competition with Hetronic. Defendants also sold some products into the United States. The evidence also shows that Fuchs, either directly or through ABI, owned and controlled HG, HCEE and the Abitron companies. Thus, even though defendants are foreign nationals, the evidence, viewed in plaintiff's favor, shows that they also have had substantial ties to the United States and thus exhibited some "allegiance" to the United States. See, e.g., Best Western Intern. Inc. v. 1496815 Ontario, Inc., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18447, 2007 WL 779699, * 6 n. 13 (D. Ariz. March 13, 2007) (finding "significant importance in the existence of the Arizona forum selection clause when considering 'allegiance to the parties' to a location."). The court concludes that the substantial ties to the United States edges the second factor in favor of extraterritorial application.

iii. Achieving Compliance

The third factor addresses the extent to which an order by this court can be expected to achieve compliance with the Lanham Act. Plaintiff points out that defendants have complied with all orders of the court in this case and there is no evidence from defendants to suggest that the court cannot achieve defendants' compliance with any final U.S. judgment. There is no indication that a final [*26] judgment in favor of plaintiff would not be enforceable in Germany or Austria. As a result, the court concludes that the third factor weighs in favor of extraterritorial application.

iv. Relative Significance of Effects on the United States

With respect to the fourth factor, relative significance of effects on the United States as compared with those elsewhere, the court finds that this factor weighs in favor of extraterritorial application. The alleged illegal use of the "Hetronic" trademark and other trade names and trade dress has significantly impacted a domestic United States corporation. The presence of losses affecting a domestic corporation cuts in favor of extraterritorial application. See, Ocean Garden, 953 F.2d at 504.

v. Explicit Purpose to Harm or Affect United States Commerce and Foreseeability

Factors five and six evaluate the extent to which there is an explicit purpose to harm or affect American commerce and the foreseeability of such effect. Generally, "[i]ntentional and unauthorized use of a U.S. corporation's trademark abroad amounts to an explicit purpose to harm U.S. commerce." Pinkberry, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140669, 2011 WL 6101828, *7 (citing Ocean Garden, 953 F.2d at 504). Here, the court finds that this factor weighs in favor of extraterritorial application. Plaintiff has proffered [*27] evidence, viewed in a light most favorable to it, establishing that defendants' alleged infringing acts were intentional and unauthorized. And because defendants' conduct was intentional, "it automatically follows that a negative effect was foreseeable." MGM Resorts Intern. v. Unknown Registrant of www.imgurcasino.com, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128397, 2015 WL 5674374, * 6 (D. Nev. July 8, 2015). Thus, the court concludes that the fifth and six factors favor extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act.

vi. Relative Importance to Violations Charged

The final relevant factor assesses the relative importance, to the violations charged, of conduct that occurred within the United States as compared with conduct abroad. The evidence reveals the alleged infringing acts with respect to foreign sales occurred overseas. And, arguably, the conduct most important to defendants' operations happened overseas. Because the infringing activity with respect to foreign sales occurred abroad, the court concludes that this factor weighs against extraterritorial application. See, Trader Joe's Company, 835 F.3d at 975.

In sum, balancing the relevant factors, the court concludes that plaintiff has satisfied the third criterion of the Timberlane test — interests of and links to American foreign commerce must be sufficiently [*28] strong in relation to those of other nations.

Resolving the Timberlane Test

After consideration and balancing of all three Timberlane criteria, the court concludes that analysis under the Timberlane test supports the extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act to defendants' foreign sales.

Ruling

Applying the Vanity Fair and Timberlane tests, the court rules that the Lanham Act reaches extraterritorially to defendants' foreign sales. Therefore, the court finds defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on the Lanham Act claims to the extent that defendants challenge those claims on the ground the Act does not apply extraterritorially to their foreign sales.<sup>12</sup>

b. Lanham Act Claims Against Abitron Entities

Defendants also challenge the Lanham Act claims against the Abitron entities to the extent that they are based upon infringement of the "Hetronic" registered trademark. Defendants point out that plaintiff, to establish its claims, must show that the Abitron defendants used the trademark in commerce. However, defendants assert that the evidence shows that neither ABIG nor ABIA ever sold a product labeled "Hetronic." Rather, defendants claim the evidence shows that the Abitron entities [*29] used the "Abitron" trademark in selling RRCs.

Plaintiff, in response, counters that the record evidence shows that the Abitron entities used the "Hetronic" name on their websites, in metatags, and email domains to sell their products. It points out that the Tenth Circuit, in Australian Gold, Inc. v. Hatfield, 436 F.3d 1228, 1239 (10th Cir. 2006), found that that sort of conduct constituted impermissible infringement. Plaintiff also asserts that ABIG and ABIA sold "Hetronic" parts under their own name, either by covering the "Hetronic" logo with an "Abitron" sticker or scratching the "Hetronic" logo off. This, plaintiff argues, constitutes reverse palming or passing off in violation of the Lanham Act.<sup>13</sup>

Upon review, the court finds that ABIG and ABIA are not entitled to summary judgment on the Lanham Act claims. Plaintiff has proffered evidence to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the Abitron entities infringed on the "Hetronic" registered trademark by using it on their websites, placing it in website metatags and using it in email domains. See, Australian Gold, Inc., 436 F.3d at 1239 (defendants' unauthorized use of manufacturer's trademarks on websites and website metatags constituted infringement in violation of Lanham Act because it caused initial interest confusion for customers). [*30]

The court also finds that plaintiff has proffered evidence sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether ABIG and ABIA violated section 43(a) of the Lanham Act<sup>14</sup> by placing "Abitron" stickers on previously <sup>12</sup> Defendants also appear to challenge extraterritorial application of Oklahoma unfair competition law to their foreign sales. This claim is alleged in Count 9 of the Second Amended Complaint. As defendants rely upon the same authorities to challenge that claim, the court, for the reasons already expressed, finds that defendants are not entitled to partial summary judgment on the common-law unfair competition claim.

<sup>13</sup> In its response, plaintiff claims that ABIG and ABIA sold products with the "Hetronic" trademark to Hydronic Handelsges m.b.H, another Fuchs' owned corporation. The evidence cited in support of the claim (doc. no. 260, ¶ 103), indicates that HG and HCEE sold the Hetronic-labeled parts to Hydronic Handelsges m.b.H.

<sup>14</sup> Section 43(a) precludes any person from using "any false designation of origin" which "is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive as to the affiliation, connection, or association of such person with another person, or as to the origin, sponsorship, or approval of his or her goods, services, or commercial activities by another person." 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(A).

labeled "Hetronic" parts and products or carving the "Hetronic" label off and selling the parts and products as "Abitron" parts and products. See, Arrow United Industries, Inc. v. Hugh Richards, Inc., 678 F.2d 410, 415 \(6th Cir. 1982\) (manufacturer which showed competitor reduced the size of manufacturer's standard product and affixed the competitor's own identifying mark on the result raised sufficiently serious questions going to the merits of a Lanham Act claim to make them fair ground for litigation).<sup>15</sup>

Accordingly, viewing the record evidence in a light most favorable to plaintiff, the court concludes that the Abitron entities, ABIG and ABIA, are not entitled to summary judgment on the Lanham Act claims.

c. Ownership of Trade Names and Trade Dress

Lastly, defendants challenge plaintiff's Lanham Act and Oklahoma counterpart claims, arguing that the plaintiff does not own the NOVA, ERGO, EURO, FE, GL, GR, HH, Mini, TG and Pocket products, their trade names and the trade dress. Defendants maintain that HG's predecessor, Hetronic Steuersysteme GmbH (HS), created all [*31] products, except the Pocket, in the 1990s, prior to plaintiff's predecessor's existence, and the trade names and trade dress were later transferred from HS to Hetronic Deutschland (HD), HG's immediate predecessor. Defendants also maintain that one product, the Pocket, was developed in 2002, after plaintiff's predecessor, Hetronic International, Inc., came into existence, but they assert that that product was governed by the Research & Development Agreement signed by plaintiff's predecessor and HS. The Research & Development Agreement, defendants contend, provided that the trade names and know-how developed under that agreement belonged to HS. Defendants posit that HS also transferred the Pocket product, trade name and trade dress to HD. Although plaintiff purchased the assets of certain Hetronic companies in 2008, defendants contend that HD was not one of those companies. Defendants point out that the purchase agreement specifically excluded HD and its assets. In response to plaintiff's assertion that prior to its purchase of the Hetronic companies, the trade names and trade dress belonging to HD were transferred to plaintiff's predecessor, defendants argue that the transfer was purportedly [*32] accomplished by a written document but that the only existing written documents addressing trademarks show that the Hetronic name was transferred, but trade names and trade dress were not. Defendants further contend that the trade names and trade dress possessed by HD were transferred to HG in 2010. Thus, defendants argue that there can be no Lanham Act claim based upon defendants' use of the NOVA, ERGO, FE, GL, GR, HH, Mini, TG and Pocket products.

In response, plaintiff contends that defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on the Lanham Act and Oklahoma counterpart claims on the ground of ownership. Plaintiff argues that the evidence shows that it owns all the relevant product marks and trade dress. According to plaintiff, defendants' first-to-use argument is irrelevant because the product marks and trade dress were transferred to plaintiff's predecessor prior to plaintiff's purchase of all the predecessor's assets. Plaintiff contends that by the time HD sold its assets, including intellectual property to HG, it did not have any intellectual property to sell. Further, plaintiff contends that defendants have waived any ownership rights or are estopped from challenging ownership [*33] by operating as plaintiff's licensee.

Defendants, in reply, argue that plaintiff has not created any factual dispute as to ownership of the relevant trade names and accompanying trade dress. Defendants posit that the written assignment, on which plaintiff's relies to show the transfer of the trade names and trade dress to plaintiff's predecessor, transfers only the "Hetronic" name and nothing else. Defendants contend that under Tenth Circuit authority, the transfer of one trademark does not carry with it the transfer of another, unnamed trademark. Accordingly, defendants maintain that they are entitled to summary judgment on the Lanham Act and Oklahoma counterpart claims based upon plaintiff's lack of ownership.

The court has addressed the issue of ownership of the trade names and trade dress in adjudicating plaintiff's summary judgment motion. In so doing, the court has determined that genuine issues of material fact exist as to the ownership of the trade names and trade dress developed up until 2008. The court remains convinced that genuine <sup>15</sup> In response to plaintiff's summary judgment motion on the section 43\(a\) claim, defendants raise additional arguments to challenge the merits of the claim. Those grounds were not raised in support of defendants' motion, so the court declines to address those arguments here.

issues of material fact exist on the ownership issue. Hence, the court concludes that defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on the Lanham [*34] Act and Oklahoma counterpart claims due to plaintiff's lack of ownership of the NOVA, ERGO, EURO, FE, GL, GR, HH, Mini, TG and Pocket trade names and trade dress.<sup>16</sup>

IV.

Tort Claims

a. Recovery of Attorneys' Fees

Plaintiff's claims against defendants include tort claims of conversion, aiding and abetting Rempe's breach of fiduciary duty, tortious interference with Rempe's employment agreement and civil conspiracy. Defendants represent that during discovery, plaintiff stated that the dollar amount of damages for these claims would be provided by plaintiff's expert. Defendants assert that the only damages calculated by plaintiff's expert is the attorneys' fees paid ($5.4 million) in pursuing the civil action against Rempe, Hetronic International, Inc. v. Torsten Rempe, Case No. CIV-14-787-F.<sup>17</sup>

Defendants argue that plaintiff may not recover the attorneys' fees as damages for the conversion claim because the fees do not constitute collateral damages. Defendants maintain that to recover the fees, plaintiff must show that the Rempe action had to be filed to obtain relief from the conversion allegedly committed. According to defendants, plaintiff did not need to file the Rempe action for the alleged [*35] conversion of the documents obtained by virtue of their access to the documents under the distribution agreements. They also argue that plaintiff did not need to file the Rempe action to recover the three documents allegedly stole by Rempe and sent to defendants. Defendants maintain that plaintiff could have obtained complete relief for the alleged conversion of documents by suing these defendants. They also point out that some of the claims alleged against Rempe, as well as counterclaims he filed, were based on conduct for which defendants are not responsible. Defendants further point out that the remedy plaintiff sought in the Rempe action was return of all documents Rempe improperly obtained from plaintiff and only three of those documents are the subject of the conversion claim in this action.

In addition, defendants assert that they are not responsible for the attorneys' fees under the tort theories alleged against Rempe because 23 O.S. § 15 requires plaintiff to recover from Rempe for the harm he caused. They assert that under § 15, there is no joint liability; there is only several liability. Consequently, defendants contend that plaintiff cannot recover the attorneys' fees as collateral [*36] damages.

Plaintiff, in response, argues that its damages for the tort claims are not limited to attorneys' fees incurred in the Rempe action. According to plaintiff, its discovery response to Hetronic Germany GmbH's Interrogatory No. 22, as twice supplemented, details all damages it incurred. See, Ex. 163, attachment 2 to doc. no. 269, pp. 44-50. Plaintiff also points out that it seeks substantial injunctive and other relief in addition to monetary relief.

As to the attorneys' fees, plaintiff asserts that the fees are a permissible component of damages because the fees were caused by defendants' tortious conduct. It asserts that the tortious actions of defendants forced plaintiff to sue Rempe to protect plaintiff's business interests and mitigate future losses due to defendants' conduct. Plaintiff contends that all claims alleged against Rempe related to defendants' scheme to compete with it. Additionally, plaintiff contends that it need not prove the that Rempe action was required in order to obtain complete relief from defendants' wrong. Fees are recoverable under the collateral litigation rule, plaintiff asserts, if they were one of the elements of damages flowing from the original [*37] wrongful act of defendants.

<sup>16</sup> The court concludes that to the extent defendants are challenging the state-law unfair competition claim based upon the issue of ownership, defendants are likewise not entitled to partial summary judgment.

<sup>17</sup> Defendants' partial summary judgment record does not contain the paragraphs of plaintiff's expert's report which discuss the $5.4 million attorneys' fees. See, Attachments 1 and 2 of doc. no. 263. Nonetheless, the referenced paragraphs of the report, ¶¶ 89-91, are in the court's record at Ex. 152, attachment 88 to doc. no. 261, p. 38, and there appears to be no dispute over the expert's statements.

Plaintiff further contends that its claim for fees is not based on the three documents Rempe emailed to defendants. Plaintiff contends that these documents were not the sole basis of plaintiff's claims against Rempe or for the conversion claim against defendants. According to plaintiff, it filed suit against Rempe to protect its interests and mitigate its damages stemming from defendants' misconduct, including tortious interference with Rempe's contract, aiding and abetting Rempe's breach of fiduciary duty, and conspiracy. Further, plaintiff argues that it is not precluded from recovering the attorneys' fees because a few of its allegations against Rempe did not stem from defendants' misconduct. Plaintiff asserts that the bulk of the lawsuit concerned defendants' misconduct and defendants' argument goes, at most, to the amount of damages that should be awarded and not liability. Finally, plaintiff argues that § 15 does not bar recovery of the fees because cases adjudicated since its enactment have continued to acknowledge the collateral litigation exception and the statute only eliminates joint liability for torts "based on fault," not intentional torts.

In reply, [*38] defendants argue that despite plaintiff's statements, the only dollar amount of damages claimed by plaintiff for the four tort claims is the $5.4 million of attorneys' fees from the Rempe action. Defendants assert that, although requested, plaintiff's discovery responses to Hetronic Germany GmbH's Interrogatory No. 22 never stated a dollar amount of its damages. Defendants state that in response to Abitron Germany GmbH's Interrogatory No. 22, see, Ex. 3, attachment no. 3 to doc. no. 262, p. 15, plaintiff represented that additional details and calculations for the damages would be provided by its expert, and the expert, in his report, set forth the $5.4 million attorneys' fees as damages for the tort claims.

Defendants contend that § 15 destroys plaintiff's "collateral damages" theory. They also argue that, even if § 15 does not apply and joint liability still exists as argued by plaintiff, plaintiff can escape the American Rule's prohibition on recovery of attorney's fees only if it shows that it was compelled by defendants' misconduct to file the Rempe action. Defendants assert that if defendants and Rempe are jointly liable as plaintiff avers, then plaintiff was permitted to sue Rempe and [*39] defendants separately. Separating the tort claims against "jointly" liable parties, defendants posit, does not make attorneys' fees recoverable and since there are no other damages claimed, defendants contend they are entitled to summary judgment.

Upon review, the court finds that defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on the tort claims based upon the relief sought by plaintiff.

Initially, it is not clear from the record, as defendants argue, that plaintiff is only seeking the $5.4 million in attorneys' fees as relief. The court declines to rule at this stage that plaintiff cannot recover any damages other than the $5.4 million in attorneys' fees if plaintiff's expert did not provide a dollar amount for all damages plaintiff referenced in response to Hetronic Germany GmbH's Interrogatory No. 22. (That may be a matter for another day.) Further, plaintiff seeks equitable relief in addition to monetary relief for the tort claims of conversion, aiding and abetting Rempe breach of fiduciary duty and tortious interference with Rempe's employment agreement. Defendants have not cited any authority to the effect that plaintiff cannot seek to recover the equitable relief it seeks under [*40] these tort theories. See, "Wherefore" paragraphs of Count 10, Count 11 and Count 12 of the Second Amended Complaint, requesting "return of all Hetronic materials," "return all confidential Hetronic information and anything downloaded from H-Pro," "return all Hetronic information obtained from Rempe," and "permanently enjoining [defendants] from publicly disclosing or otherwise using Hetronic's confidential and proprietary information," and "enjoining [defendants or their successors] from assisting Rempe in his possessing, accessing, and using Hetronic's information."

To the extent that plaintiff intends to seek the $5.4 million in attorneys' fees for the claims of aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty, tortious interference with employment contract, and civil conspiracy, the court concludes that the fees are recoverable.

At the outset, the court rejects defendants' argument that § 15 applies to the intentional tort claims. The court previously determined in Husky Ventures, Inc. v. B55 Investments, Ltd. and Christopher McArthur, Case No. CIV-15-93-F, that § 15 does not apply to a claim for tortious interference with contract and business relationships. In so doing, the court stated in [*41] part:

Section 15 only applies when there is a "civil action based on fault and not arising out of contract." The "based on fault" qualification is stated twice in § 15, once in subsection (A) and once in subsection (C). "Fault" is not a concept generally understood as applying to intentional torts. See generally, Graham v. Keuchel, 1993 OK 6, 847 P.2d 342, 361-362 (Okla. 1993) (discussing fault in the context of negligence claims). The phrase "based on fault" must mean something. Clearly, the phrase is intended is to qualify the types of civil actions not arising out of contract, to which § 15 applies. The most logical interpretation of "based on fault," is that this phrase excludes from the coverage of § 15, claims like fraud, or intentional tort claims, which do not encompass the concept of degree of fault in the same way that, for example, negligence claims do. The tort of intentional interference with contracts or business relationships is an intentional tort which includes no concept of fault or degree of care. Tortious interference with business or contractual relationships is not a "a civil claim based on fault and not arising out of contract." As a result, the interference is not covered by § 15.

Doc. no. 279, p. 11. Applying the above analysis, the court also concludes that § 15 does not apply [*42] to plaintiff's claims against defendants for aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty, tortious interference with employment contract and civil conspiracy. In the court's view, these torts are intentional torts which include no concept of fault or degree of care. Therefore, the court finds that § 15 does not preclude plaintiff from seeking to recover the $5.4 million in attorney's fees.

Under Oklahoma law, attorneys' fees are generally not a proper element of damages. However, as stated by the Tenth Circuit, "where the wrongful acts of the defendant have involved the plaintiff in litigation with others, or have placed him in such relation with others as to make it necessary for him to incur attorney fees to protect his interests, attorney fees [are] recoverable in such cases as one of the elements of damages flowing from the original wrongful act of the defendant." Hetric International, Inc. v. Rempe, 697 Fed. Appx. 589, 590 (10th Cir. 2017) (quoting Barnes v. Oklahoma Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 OK 55, 11 P.3d 162, 181 (Okla. 2000) (citing Griffin v. Bredouw, 1966 OK 226, 420 P.2d 546, 547 (Okla. 1966)). The Tenth Circuit also stated "[w]here the natural and proximate consequence of a wrongful act has been to involve plaintiff in litigation with others, there may, as a general rule, be a recovery in damages against the author of such act of the reasonable expenses incurred in such litigation, together [*43] with compensation for attorney's fees." Id. (quoting Sec. State Bank of Comanche v. W.R. Johnston & Co., 1951 OK 40, 204 Okla. 160, 228 P.2d 169, 173 (1951)); see also, Restatement (Second) of Torts, § 914 ("One who through the tort of another has been required to act in the protection of his interests by bringing or defending an action against a third person is entitled to recover reasonable compensation for loss of time, attorney fees and other expenditures thereby suffered or incurred in the earlier action.)

The court concludes that plaintiff has raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the Rempe action was a natural and proximate consequence of the wrongful acts of defendants which are the bases for the aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty, tortious interference with contract and civil conspiracy claims. Plaintiff claims that defendants enlisted Rempe's assistance and cooperation and conspired with him to illegally compete with plaintiff. It also claims that defendants sought and received confidential information from Rempe and paid him for consulting services. These wrongful acts, plaintiff asserts, forced it to sue Rempe, among other things, for breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty and conspiracy to protect its business interests and mitigate future losses due to defendants' misconduct. [*44] The court concludes that, viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to plaintiff, as the non-moving party, a reasonable jury could conclude that the alleged tortious conduct of defendants required plaintiff to sue Rempe to protect their business rights and mitigate its losses. Thus, the attorneys' fees expended in the Rempe action would be recoverable as damages for the aiding and abetting breach of fiduciary duty, tortious interference with contract and civil conspiracy claims.<sup>18</sup>

<sup>18</sup>This leaves plaintiff in the position of suing, in this case, to recover more than $5 million spent pursuing Rempe, to get what would appear to be an uncollectable judgment which included $3.1 million in attorneys' fees incurred in this case. That claim will be measured by at least a minimal standard of reasonableness (see, doc. no. 211 in CIV-14-0787), to say nothing of the jury's consideration of whether that whole exercise made any sense in the first place. Without deciding, at this point, whether Rule 3.7 of the Oklahoma Rules of Professional Conduct (as adopted by this court) would preclude counsel of record in this case from testifying on the first issue (reasonableness of the fees — see, Rule 3.7 (a)(2)), it seems unlikely that counsel in this case would

As to defendants' challenge that plaintiff's attorneys' fees also consist of time spent pursuing wrongs by Rempe unrelated to this action, i.e., dealings with TeleRadio or Genge & Thoma, the court agrees with plaintiff that this challenge goes to the amount of damages recoverable and not to the issue of whether attorneys' fees from the Rempe action themselves would be recoverable.

With respect to defendants' wrongful acts of conversion alleged in Count 10 of the Second Amended Complaint, the court is not convinced that plaintiff has raised a genuine issue of material fact on the question of whether the Rempe action was a natural and proximate consequence of those wrongful acts. In the court's [*45] view, defendants' "possession" of the materials inconsistent with the rights of plaintiff did not require plaintiff to sue Rempe.<sup>19</sup> Those wrongful acts did not cause plaintiff to sue Rempe to protect its business rights or mitigate its losses. The court therefore concludes that plaintiff is not entitled to recover the $5.4 million in attorneys' fees as damages on the conversion claim. Even though plaintiff may not recover the attorneys' fees as collateral damages, the court cannot conclude (as previously discussed) that plaintiff has no remedy for the alleged conversion. The court notes that plaintiff states, in response to Hetronic Germany GmbH's Interrogatory No. 22, that it may recover "the fair market value of the documents converted by defendants . . ." Ex. 163, attachment 2 to doc. no. 269, p. 50. Further, plaintiff seeks the return of all Hetronic materials. Accordingly, the court concludes that defendants are entitled to partial summary judgment determining that plaintiff is not entitled to recover, as a remedy for conversion, the $5.4 million in attorneys' fees expended in the Rempe action. But that is as far in defendants' favor as this ruling goes. Defendants are not entitled [*46] to partial summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff has no remedy for conversion and therefore cannot establish all the essential elements of the conversion claim.

b. Claims Against Abitron Entities

Defendants assert that it is unclear whether plaintiff is suing ABIG and ABIA, for conversion because the purported conversion occurred before the entities existed. However, defendants point out that the Second Amended Complaint alleges the claim against "the Fuch Companies," suggesting that they are included. Defendants initially contend that the claim is not actionable because the alleged conversion is of "confidential information," see, doc. no. 163, ¶ 254, which Rempe stole or wrongfully obtained, and conversion does not lie for intangible things like "information." Doc. no. 262, p. 62. Although plaintiff previously represented to the court in opposing defendants' dismissal motions that the conversion claim is based on tangible property, such as drawings, schematics and other documents, defendants maintain that the claim is not based upon defendants' possession of the physical items but rather their use of the information. Defendants point out that plaintiff, as part of its relief, [*47] seeks to enjoin their "use" of the confidential information. Regardless, defendants argue that plaintiff cannot recover against the Abitron entities because conversion requires a taking of personal property and the alleged conversion (three emails sent by Rempe in February of 2014) occurred prior to their existence.

Defendants similarly argue that if the civil conspiracy claim is asserted against the Abitron entities, the claim is not actionable because the conspiracy is alleged to have occurred before the Abitron entities existed. Defendants state that the civil conspiracy claim requires a meeting of the minds on the conspiratorial object or course of action. Defendants point out that the "meeting of the minds" is alleged to have occurred while Rempe was employed by plaintiff and HG and HCEE were plaintiff's distributors. This all occurred, defendants assert, prior to the formation of the Abitron entities. Moreover, defendants contend that the alleged conspiracy was a conspiracy to compete against plaintiff and that the Abitron entities, not being under contract with plaintiff, were entitled to compete against plaintiff.

Plaintiff responds that its conversion claim encompasses much [*48] more than the documents sent with the emails from Rempe. Plaintiff asserts that it has shown that defendants wrongfully took and retained possession of its be eligible to testify on the second issue (whether the whole exercise made any sense in the first place). The exceptions in Rule 3.7 would not appear to go that far.

<sup>19</sup> "Conversion is defined by Oklahoma law as any act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's personal property in denial of or inconsistent with his right therein." American Biomedical Group, Inc. v. Techtrol, Inc., 2016 OK 55, 374 P.3d 820, 825 \(Okla. 2016\) (quotation omitted).

documents, software, drawings, schematics and its RRC parts. It contends that after it terminated HG and HCEE as distributors and licensees, defendants retained materials, belonging to plaintiff, to which the companies had been afforded access because of the contractual relationship. Plaintiff asserts that the companies no longer had authority to sell materials with the "Hetronic" brand or to represent themselves as affiliated with "Hetronic." Plaintiff states that the companies, rather than returning the materials to plaintiff, sold some materials to Hydronic Handelsges mbh, another Fuchs company, and transferred others to the Abitron entities. The materials, plaintiff asserts, included drawings of every "Hetronic" part, and the Abitron entities still have access to those materials. Plaintiff argues that defendants have ignored the fact that as part of the relief requested, plaintiff seeks the return of all "Hetronic" materials, including, but not limited to, documents, software, drawings and equipment.

Plaintiff also contends that [*49] the Abitron entities are liable for conversion because they improperly obtained and have retained the materials without plaintiff's consent. Moreover, it asserts that the Abitron entities are successors-in-interest making them liable for HG and HCEE's actions.

To the extent that the court concludes that the property defendants took from Hetronic and retained does not constitute tangible property, as required for a conversion claim, plaintiff urges the court to permit the claim to proceed as a claim for misappropriation of confidential business information. Plaintiff maintains that Oklahoma recognizes the tort of misappropriation of business information, a species of intangible property.

With respect to the conspiracy claim, plaintiff points out that courts have ruled that a party who joins an ongoing conspiracy may be held accountable for the acts or statements made prior to his entry into the conspiracy, if such acts or statements were made in furtherance of the conspiracy. Consequently, plaintiff asserts that the fact the conspiracy began before the Abitron entities existed is irrelevant to their liability. Plaintiff contends that the Abitron entities joined the conspiracy in 2014 [*50] when they took over HG and HCEE's businesses and took steps to further the conspiracy to compete against plaintiff using Hetronic materials.

The court concludes that defendants have not demonstrated that they are entitled to partial summary judgment on the conversion claim against the Abitron entities. "Conversion is defined by Oklahoma law as any act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's personal property in denial of or inconsistent with his right therein." American Biomedical Group, Inc. v. Techtrol, Inc., 2016 OK 55, 374 P.3d 820, 825 \(Okla. 2016\) (quotation omitted). "This definition does not include intangible property." Id. "It does require that some form of wrongful possession or act of control over the property must occur." Id. (quotation omitted). "It is not necessary that the property wrongfully came into a party's possession, but only that the property was taken or appropriated without the owner's consent." Id. (emphasis in original). Further, "[i]t is the law in Oklahoma that where one converts personal property and sells it to another who has knowledge of the conversion, the two may be joined in an action for conversion." State ex rel. Williams v. Neustadt, 149 F.2d 143, 145 \(10th Cir. 1945\) (citing Probst v. Bearman, 1919 OK 188, 76 Okla. 71, 183 P. 886, 888 \(Okla. 1919\)).

After the termination of HG and HCEE's distribution agreements, the companies retained plaintiff's materials, including drawings, [*51] schematics and other materials. Plaintiff has raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether possession of those materials was wrongful. In addition, plaintiff has raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the Abitron entities had knowledge of the alleged conversion by their predecessors when they transferred plaintiff's materials to them.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>20</sup> The court rejects defendants' argument that the conversion claim as pled is seeking relief based upon a conversion of intangible property. Although Count 10 refers to "confidential information," it also refers to defendants taking "possession" of "confidential information." This can include the drawings, schematics, documents and equipment which plaintiff refers. And although plaintiff does seek to enjoin the "use" of the confidential information, it also seeks the return of the materials.

Because the court concludes that there is evidence, viewed in plaintiff's favor, to support the conversion claim as pled, the court need not decide whether plaintiff's claim should be construed as a claim for misappropriation of confidential business information. The court notes, however, that the issue of whether plaintiff can maintain a conversion claim was originally raised by defendants in their challenge to the First Amended Complaint, and in seeking to file the Second Amended Complaint, plaintiff did not seek to include any misappropriation claim.

Turning to the civil conspiracy claim, the court finds that summary judgment is not appropriate. Plaintiff has cited law, which defendants have not challenged, for the proposition that if a party joins a conspiracy, however late, it becomes in law a party to the acts previously done by others in pursuance of the conspiracy. See, Chemetron Corp. v. Business Funds, 682 F.2d 1149, 1181 (5th Cir. 1982); see also, UnitedHealth Group, Inc. v. Columbia Cas. Co., 836 F.Supp.2d 912, 920-21 (D. Minn. 2011). Viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to plaintiff, the court concludes that plaintiff has raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether a conspiracy existed and as to whether the Abitron entities joined an ongoing conspiracy and then took steps to further it. Therefore, the court finds that defendants' motion as to the conspiracy claim against the Abitron entities should be denied.

V.

Indemnity Claim

"As a cautionary measure," see, doc. no. 262, ECF p. 65, defendants request [*52] partial summary judgment on the "breach of indemnity claim," which defendants represent is addressed in plaintiff's expert's report but not alleged as a claim in the Second Amended Complaint. Defendants state that plaintiff's expert's report includes a claim of $10,319,865 for indemnification under the license agreements. The Second Amended Complaint, defendants assert, does not mention "indemnity" and while it does mention the license agreements, it does not allege a breach of those agreements.

Plaintiff, in response, concedes that it has not brought a claim for breach of indemnity against defendants. It asserts that indemnity is a remedy, not a claim. According to plaintiff, the license agreements clearly entitle Hetronic to indemnification from HG and HCEE for the costs of this litigation, which centers on their misuse of the intellectual property licensed to them — such as improperly using the "Hetronic" mark both while the license agreements were in effect and after they were terminated. Plaintiff also contends that it is entitled to indemnification with respect to the OHIM suit challenging plaintiff's ownership of the "NOVA" trademark registration. Plaintiff asserts that its expert [*53] "indicates [that] these damages are not from any purported breach of an indemnity obligation, but instead [are] due to Hetronic under the terms of the License Agreement."<sup>21</sup> Doc. no. 269, at 77 — 78. To the extent the court agrees with defendants, plaintiff states that it will file another action against HG and HCEE to have them comply with the indemnity obligations under the license agreements.

Upon review, the court concludes that defendants are entitled to partial summary judgment to the extent that plaintiff seeks to recover indemnification under the license agreements as a measure of damages from HG and HCEE. Although plaintiff asserts that the indemnification sought is a remedy and not a claim, plaintiff does not point to any of the alleged claims for which the indemnification remedy would be available. The Second Amended Complaint makes no mention of seeking indemnification from the defendant companies for the OHIM proceedings or this proceeding. The court therefore concludes that plaintiff is not entitled to seek indemnification under the license agreements in the amount of $10,319,865 as a measure of damages with respect to any of the claims in this action. The court concludes [*54] that defendants' motion should be granted as to the indemnification remedy for any of plaintiff's alleged claims.

VI.

Conclusion

Based upon the foregoing, All Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (doc. no. 262) is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part.

The court determines, under the applicable Rule 56 standards, that plaintiff is not entitled to seek, as a remedy for conversion, the $5.4 million in attorneys' fees incurred in pursuing the civil action against its former President, [*540] This matter concerns antitrust allegations in the Medicare Part D ("Part D") prescription drug market. D.E. 64. Plaintiff, Shire US, Inc. ("Shire"), alleges that Defendants are engaged in an "ongoing, overarching, and interconnected scheme" to systematically block Plaintiff from competing with Defendants in the Part D prescription drug market for treatment of dry eye disease in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and state law. D.E. 64 ¶¶ 1, 25. Defendants consist of Allergan, Inc.; Allergan Sales, LLC; and Allergan USA, Inc. (collectively "Defendants" or "Allergan"). The present matter comes before the Court on Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs First Amended Complaint ("FAC") for failure to state a claim pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). D.E. 14. The Court reviewed all submissions<sup>1</sup> and held oral argument [\[\*\*2\]](#) on February 26, 2019. For the reasons that follow, Defendants' motion to dismiss is granted.

I. BACKGROUND<sup>2</sup>

Plaintiff Shire alleges that Allergan is coercing Part D prescription drug plans to effectively exclude Shire's superior dry eye disease ("DED") treatment drug from the market through a combination of anticompetitive bundling and exclusive dealing arrangements. FAC ¶ 1. DED occurs when the eye does not produce enough tears or when tears are not of the correct consistency. Id. ¶ 34. The disease is evidenced by inflammation and damage to the ocular surface, resulting in blurry or fluctuating vision and eye fatigue. Id. About one million Americans currently receive prescription drug treatment for DED. Id. ¶ 36.

The Parties and Their Products

Shire and Allergan are competitors in the pharmaceutical industry. Id. Shire is a [*541] New Jersey pharmaceutical company that develops, manufactures, markets, and distributes pharmaceutical products worldwide. Id. ¶ 26. Allergan is a Delaware pharmaceutical company that engages in research, development, manufacturing, sales, distribution, and marketing of specialty pharmaceutical products. Id. ¶ 30.

Both companies offer a prescription drug for the treatment [**3] of DED. Shire offers Xiidra® and Allergan offers Restasis®. Id. ¶ 1. Xiidra and Restasis are the only FDA-approved prescription drugs on the market for treatment of DED. Id. ¶ 38. There are no reasonably available substitutes to treat DED. Id. ¶ 116. Over-the-counter treatments, such as artificial tears, are insufficient to treat the underlying inflammation that causes DED. Id.

The FDA approvals for Xiidra and Restasis are different in scope. Id. In July of 2016, the FDA approved Shire's Xiidra for treatment of both the symptoms and signs of DED. Id. ¶ 8. Clinical studies show that patients taking Xiidra experienced relief from DED symptoms of within as little as two weeks, and from underlying inflammatory conditions within six to twelve weeks. Id. ¶ 8. In contrast, the FDA has approved Restasis® only for treatment of a specific symptom of DED — reduced tear fluid volume — which affects only ten percent of those with DED. Id. ¶ 38. Restasis has been on the market for fifteen years, during which time patients have reported ocular burning from using the drug. Id. ¶¶ 1, 40. One study indicated that 23% of patients discontinued use of Restasis within three months of first using it and 43% [*4] of patients stopped use within six months. Id. ¶ 40. Clinical studies reflect that it typically takes longer than six months for Restasis to become effective. Id. ¶ 40.

Given Xiidra's potential advantages over Restasis, it has been referred to by industry officials as a "big game changer." Id. ¶ 47. In the two years following its launch in 2016, Xiidra captured approximately 35% of the commercial DED market, and around 10% of the Part D DED market. Id. ¶ 122. Restasis maintains approximately 90% of the Part D DED market. Id. ¶ 131.

The Part D DED Market

For purposes of its antitrust claims, Plaintiff identifies the Part D DED market as the relevant product market. Id. ¶ 115. Congress passed Medicare to provide affordable medical assistance to the elderly, and enacted Part D specifically as an optional outpatient prescription drug program for senior citizens to receive discounted and subsidized prescription drugs. Id. ¶¶ 50-53. Because DED is a condition that progresses with age, it Plaintiff's letter providing supplemental authority will be referred to as "Pl. Ltr., D.E. 48. Defendants' response to Plaintiff's letter will be referred to as "Def. Resp., D.E. 50.

<sup>2</sup> The facts are derived from Plaintiff's FAC. D.E. 64. When reviewing a motion to dismiss, the Court accepts as true all well-pleaded facts in the complaint. Fowler v. UPMC Shadyside, 578 F.3d 203, 210 (3d Cir. 2009). Additionally, a district court may consider "exhibits attached to the complaint and matters of public record" as well as "an undisputedly authentic document that a defendant attaches as an exhibit to a motion to dismiss if the plaintiff's claims are based on the document." Pension Ben. Guar. Corp. v. White Consol. Indus., Inc., 998 F.2d 1192, 1196 (3d Cir. 1993).

disproportionally affects the elderly. Id. ¶ 37. Prescriptions for DED treatment under Part D account for approximately 40% of all DED prescriptions.

Participants in Part D can choose from a variety of plans. [**5] Id. ¶ 53. The list of drugs covered by a particular plan is called the plan's "formulary." Id. ¶ 54. Formularies offer drugs in a number of tiers that dictate the patient's copayment. Id. ¶ 61. Drugs with the lowest copayment are listed in the "preferred" tier, followed by the "non-preferred" tier. Id. ¶ 61. If a drug is not listed on a formulary, then it is considered "not covered" and the patient must either pay for the drug in full (at a price that is typically two to five times higher than that listed on the formulary) or have his or her physician file a successful appeal with the plan seeking an exception.<sup>3</sup> Id. [*542] Hence, drugs not covered on formularies are faced with a competitive disadvantage in the Part D marketplace. Id. ¶ 64.

Plaintiff alleges that commercial prescription drug plans are not substitutes for Part D because individuals covered by Part D (individuals aged 65 and older or with permanent disabilities) receive lower premiums for a comprehensive list of prescription drugs. Thus, Part D participants have no need for traditional, commercial prescription drug plans. Id. ¶ 117. In fact, Plaintiff alleges that it, Defendants, and other industry participants recognize Part [**6] D as its own independent market, often using different staff or hiring third parties to engage with Part D administrators. Id. ¶ 118. Plaintiff adds that the Part D administrators also treat the Part D DED market differently than any separate commercial business that they may engage in. Id. ¶ 120.

The Alleged Anticompetitive Conduct

Plaintiff essentially alleges two forms of anticompetitive conduct by Defendants: anticompetitive bundling and exclusive dealing contracts. Id. ¶¶ 126-27. First, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants engaged in anticompetitive bundling by contracting with "Plan 1" and "Plan 2" to offer Restasis in a bundled portfolio of drugs at a price below its average variable cost. Id. ¶¶ 86, 91, 97. Second, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants engaged in an exclusive dealing contract with "Plan 3" whereby the plan is contractually barred from offering any other DED drug on its formulary for the foreseeable future. Id. ¶ 107.

A review of the seller-side of the Part D market is required to properly understand these claims. "Pharmaceutical companies negotiate annually with Part D plans to gain placement of their drugs on the plans' formularies for the coming year." Id. ¶ 68. The [**7] negotiations usually begin around April of "the preceding plan year and culminate in August of the same year when the plans finalize their formularies for the coming year." Id. Certain Part D plans delegate their negotiation and selection process to administrators. Id. ¶ 72. For example, "several of the top ten Part D plans and many smaller ones use another top ten plan (Plan 3) to negotiate and administer their formulary coverage." Id. As a result, Plan 3 negotiates with pharmaceutical companies on behalf of numerous Part D plans. Id. Similarly, "[p]harmaceutical companies typically contract with third party agents to oversee negotiations with plans for placement of their drugs on the plans' formularies," often to "keep[] [their] dealings with Part D plans separate from [their] dealings for commercial business." Id. ¶ 71.

During these annual negotiations, a pharmaceutical company seeks to secure its drugs' preferential placement on the Part D plan's formulary by minimizing the Part D plan's costs in offering the drugs. Id. ¶ 69. Although pharmaceutical companies do not sell their drugs directly to Part D plans, Part D plans reimburse pharmacies for dispensing covered drugs to participants. [**8] Id. ¶ 60. Therefore, to lower the plan's reimbursement expenses, pharmaceutical companies offer rebates and discounts to patients who acquire a prescription drug through a particular Part D plan. Id. ¶¶ 69-70. Pharmaceutical companies also offer price protection, meaning that if the price for their drug increases during the contractual term, rebates will also proportionally increase, ensuring that the plans do not incur any additional costs. Id. ¶ 70.

<sup>3</sup> For a successful appeal, a physician must establish (i) failure of the drug listed on the formulary to effectively treat the patient's condition, or (ii) the patient's inability to tolerate the side effects or other problems caused by the drug listed on the formulary. Id. ¶¶ 63-65.

The top three plans in Part D are Plan [*543] 1, Plan 2, and Plan 3.<sup>4</sup> About 70% of the Part D prescriptions for DED treatment are derived from the three plans. Id. ¶ 109. Despite Plaintiff's view that Xiidra is superior to Restasis, Plaintiff has been unable to secure a "preferred" position for Xiidra on any of the formularies of these plans. Id. ¶¶ 87-109. Plaintiff alleges that this is because Defendants have unlawfully engaged in (1) anticompetitive bundling with Plan 1 and Plan 2, and (2) improper exclusionary contracting with Plan 3.<sup>5</sup> Id. ¶¶ 86, 91, 97, 107.

Shire alleges that Allergan's technique of "bundling" rebates across its products, including Restasis, to secure exclusivity on top plans' formularies constitutes unlawful anticompetitive [**9] conduct. Id. ¶ 148. Allergan offers a number of products in its Part D portfolio aside from Restasis. Id. ¶ 74. Among these other products are Lumigan®, Combigan®, and Alphagan P®. Id. The FDA approved Lumigan, Combigan, and Alphagan P for treatment of high eye pressure in patients with glaucoma or ocular tension. Id. ¶¶ 75-77. The FDA has not approved a generic substitute for any of these three drugs in the United States. Id. For the four quarters spanning from the third quarter of 2016 to the second quarter of 2017, the three glaucoma drugs accounted for almost $750,000,000 of Allergan's sales in Part D plans. Id. ¶ 78. Restasis accounted for $719,000,000 of Allergan's sales in Part D plans during this same period. Id. Thus, Plaintiff alleges that Allergan has "more than enough financial wherewithal" to offer Restasis to Part D plans "at an effective price that is below Allergan's average variable cost" and potentially even "for free" given the commercially advantageous positioning of Allergan's other offerings. Id.

Regarding Plan 1, which is responsible for nearly 25% of the Part D DED market, Plaintiff offered "substantial rebates and discounts" in attempts to have Xiidra placed [**10] on the plan's formulary. Id. ¶ 89. In response, Plan 1 informed Plaintiff that any placement of Xiidra on its formulary would result in the loss of rebates from Allergan, stating that "[y]ou could give [Xiidra] to us for free, and the numbers still wouldn't work." Id. ¶ 89. Further, Plan 1 told Plaintiff that it would need Allergan's "permission" for Xiidra to be listed on the formulary. Id. ¶ 90. Plan 1 eventually listed Xiidra on its formulary but only in its "non-preferred" tier, resulting in copayments that are two to five times higher than if Xiidra was listed in the "preferred tier" with Restasis. Id. Plaintiff believes that if the plan's formulary included Xiidra in any capacity other than "non-preferred," Plan 1 would "lose the price protection, rebates, and discounts on the entirety of Allergan's Part D portfolio." Id. ¶ 91. Plaintiff alleges that '[t]his makes it impossible for Shire to offer discounts on Xiidra that compete with the bundled rebates provided by Allergan and keep Xiidra's price above its cost." Id.

Regarding Plan 2, which is responsible for over 11% of the Part D DED market, Plaintiff also offered "substantial rebates and discounts" to list Xiidra on its formulary. [**11] [*544] Id. ¶¶ 92-93. Plan 2 stated that listing Xiidra on its formulary would contractually cause Plan 2 to lose all of its "price protection" and "bundled rebates" from Allergan. Id. ¶ 93. Plan 2 added that it would need to first "check with Allergan and get its permission[.]" Id. ¶ 94. Nevertheless, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services ("CMS"), who contract with Part D administrators, id. ¶ 53, later informed Plan 2 that it would have to offer Xiidra given its formulary classifications. Id. ¶ 94. Plan 2, however, only placed Xiidra on its formulary as "non-preferred" with prior authorization and "step through" requirements. This means that Plan 2 patients must first try Restasis and experience "failure" before Plan 2 will contribute towards their prescriptions for Xiidra. Id. ¶ 94. Additionally, the copay for Xiidra is still two to five times higher than if it was listed in the "preferred" tier. Id. ¶ 95. Plaintiff alleges that "[t]his makes it impossible for Shire to offer discounts on Xiidra that compete with the bundled rebates provided by Allergan and keep Xiidra's price above its cost." Id. ¶ 97.

Plaintiff alleges that Defendants had an exclusionary agreement with Plan 3. Id. [**12] ¶ 107. Plan 3 is responsible for 34% of the Part D DED market. Id. ¶ 98. Plaintiff alleges that it met the pricing requirements that Plan 3 had indicated would secure Xiidra's listing on Plan 3's formulary. Id. ¶ 100. Plan 3 confirmed that the offered pricing would "get it done" and that Plaintiff need not improve its offer. Id. ¶ 100. Plan 3 later retracted these statements, explaining that Xiidra could not be added to the formulary because it would create "too much disruption" as Allergan's contract with Plan 3 prohibited offering another DED treatment on the formulary. Id. ¶¶ 101-102. A "Shire executive" then asked Plan 3 how it could "get out" of this position in the future, to which Plan 3 responded, "you don't."<sup>6</sup> Id. ¶ 102. Therefore, Xiidra is "not covered" by Plan 3's formulary, requiring Plan 3 patients to pay two to five times more for Xiidra than if Xiidra was listed as a "preferred" drug on the formulary like Restasis. Id. ¶ 104. Plaintiff alleges that Defendants' agreement with Plan 3 prohibits the plan from contracting with Defendants' competitors (such as Plaintiff) beyond the one-year term, regardless of the offer that the competitor may make. Id. ¶ 107.

<sup>4</sup> As noted, Plan 3 actually refers to four separate top-ten plans that are negotiated jointly through one administrator. Id. ¶ 98. The FAC does not indicate whether Plan 1 and Plan 2 negotiate through an administrator or through their own representatives.

<sup>5</sup> Plaintiff does not attach the actual contracts between Allergan and these Part D plans but notes that "[a]greements of this nature are not available to the public and typically contain confidentiality provisions that prohibit their disclosure to anyone except the parties to the agreements." Id. ¶ 108. Therefore, Plaintiff drew on its own interactions with the Part D plans to form its factual allegations.

Plaintiff also [**13] relies on a public statement by Allergan's CEO in mid-2017, stating that Allergan has "blocked" Plaintiff from the Part D DED market. Id. ¶ 14. Plaintiff continues that the financial terms (including discounts, rebates, and price protection) that Plaintiff offered the three Part D plans "far exceeded" the discount rates on Xiidra that Plaintiff successfully offered to commercial prescription drug plans. Id. ¶ 106. Thus, Plaintiff alleges that Allergan is engaged in an "overarching and interconnected scheme of anticompetitive tactics, which have successfully blocked Shire's access to the Part D market[.]" Id. ¶ 108.

Plaintiff alleges that Allergan's conduct will effectively deny or severely limit Part D beneficiaries' access to Xiidra, the only drug approved for the treatment of both the signs and symptoms of DED. Id. ¶ 136. Plaintiff asserts that Defendants' conduct forces Part D patients (i) to make higher copayments for Xiidra; (ii) to accept less value for their copayment because Restasis is inferior to Xiidra; and (iii) to incur higher costs for DED treatment by purchasing a topical steroid used in conjunction with Restasis treatment, which is unnecessary when using Xiidra. Id. [**14] ¶ 137. Plaintiff continues [*545] that it "will continue to lose millions of dollars in sales and profits from within the [Part D DED market]" as a result of Defendants' actions. Id. ¶ 151.

II. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiff filed its Complaint on October 2, 2017, alleging seven causes of action: (I) monopolization under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (II) attempted monopolization under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (III) agreements in restraint of trade under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (IV) monopolization under the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J.S. § 56:9-4; (V) attempted monopolization under the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J.S. § 56:9-4; (VI) agreements in restraint of trade under the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J.S. § 56:9-3; and (VII) tortious interference with business relationships. Compl. ¶ 25. Defendants filed a motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) on December 5, 2017. D.E. 14. Plaintiff filed opposition, D.E. 31, to which Defendants replied, D.E. 32. Plaintiff filed a letter of supplemental authority, D.E. 48, and Defendants responded, D.E. 50.

On September 28, 2018, Plaintiff sought leave to amend its Complaint for the sole purpose of including money damages in the relief sought. D.E. 55. Because the proposed amendment did not alter any of the substantive allegations [**15] set forth in the original Complaint, the parties agreed that Defendants' pending motion to dismiss would apply to the FAC. See D.E. 58. On February 26, 2019, the Court held oral argument on the motion. D.E. 70.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure permits a defendant to move to dismiss a count for "failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted[.]" To withstand a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), a plaintiff must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\). A complaint is plausible on its face when there is enough factual content "that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Although the plausibility standard "does not impose a probability requirement, it does require a pleading to show more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Connelly v. Lane Constr. Corp., 809 F.3d 780, 786 (3d Cir. 2016) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). As a result, a plaintiff must "allege sufficient facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will uncover proof of [his] claims." Id. at 789.

<sup>6</sup> Plaintiff does not identify who (by position) from Plan 3 made these statements. Similarly, Plaintiff does not indicate the position of the "Shire executive."

In evaluating the sufficiency of a complaint, a district court must accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable [**16] inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Phillips v. Cty. of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 231 (3d Cir. 2008). A court, however, is "not compelled to accept unwarranted inferences, unsupported conclusions or legal conclusions disguised as factual allegations." Baraka v. McGreevey, 481 F.3d 187, 211 (3d Cir. 2007). If, after viewing the allegations in the complaint most favorable to the plaintiff, it appears that no relief could be granted under any set of facts consistent with the allegations, a court may dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim. DeFazio v. Leading Edge Recovery Sols., No. 10-2945, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131357, 2010 WL 5146765, at *1 (D.N.J. Dec. 13, 2010).

IV. ANALYSIS

Defendants argue that Plaintiff fails to plausibly plead a relevant product market and fails to sufficiently allege anticompetitive [*546] conduct. Def. Br. at 2-5, 13-39. Because the antitrust claims fail, Defendants continue, so must the tortious interference claim. Id. at 39-40. Plaintiff responds that it has plausibly alleged the relevant market and anticompetitive conduct. Pl. Opp'n at 14-38. It adds that tortious interference can exist separate and apart from the alleged anticompetitive conduct. Id. at 38-40.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. A Section 1 claim consists of two elements: [**17] (1) "the plaintiff must show that the defendant was a party to a contract, combination . . . or conspiracy," and (2) "the plaintiff must show that the conspiracy . . . imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 315 (3d Cir. 2010) (internal quotations omitted).

Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits "monopoliz[ing], or attempt[ing] to monopolize, or combin[ing] or conspir[ing] with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Monopolization is demonstrated through "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1062 (3d Cir. 1978) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). For attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must show that a defendant "(1) had specific intent to monopolize the relevant market, (2) engaged in anti-competitive or exclusionary conduct, and (3) possessed sufficient market power to come dangerously close to success." Barr Labs., Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 978 F.2d 98, 112 (3d Cir. 1992); see also Phila. Taxi Ass'n, Inc. v. Uber Techs., Inc., 886 F.3d 332, 339 (3d Cir.), cert. denied sub nom. Phila. Taxi Ass'n, Inc. v. Uber Techs., Inc., 139 S. Ct. 211, 202 L. Ed. 2d 126 (2018).

Further, "the New Jersey Antitrust Act shall be construed in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of comparable [**18] federal antitrust statutes." Eisai, Inc. v. Sanofi Aventis U.S., LLC, 821 F.3d 394, 402 n.11 (3d Cir. 2016) (quoting State v. N.J. Trade Waste Ass'n, 96 N.J. 8, 19 (1984)), 472 A.2d 1050. Both parties agree on this point. Def. Br. at 12 n.6; Pl. Opp'n at 12-37. Therefore, the Court analyzes the antitrust claims pursuant to federal law.

In an antitrust matter, two markets must be defined: the relevant product market and the relevant geographic market. See LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 146 \(3d Cir. 2003\) (analyzing a Section 2 claim); Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 722-27 \(3d Cir. 1991\) (analyzing a Section 1 claim). Defendants contend that Plaintiff's relevant product market — the Medicare Part D DED market — is implausibly narrow. Def. Br. at 14. In support, Defendants argue that because Plaintiff is alleging supplier exclusion, the relevant product market must be defined from the supplier's perspective. Id. at 15. Defendants argue, as a result, that the relevant product market must include the commercial prescription insurance market. Id. at 22-23. Defendants also note that there is no allegation that Part D DED sales are essential to Shire's survival. Id. at 24.

[*547] Plaintiff responds that the injury is both to Shire and Part D DED patients, therefore the relevant product market should also take into account the consumer's perspective. Pl. Opp'n at 14-15. Plaintiff also notes that from the supplier's perspective, suppliers treat the [*19] Part D market independently from the commercial market, and practical indicia also demonstrate that the Part D market is distinct from the commercial market. Id. at 15-20.

The Third Circuit has not yet ruled on this issue, that is, the appropriate relevant product market when a supplier alleges that it has been improperly excluded. Although the matter is not free from doubt, the Court finds that under the circumstances alleged (that is, a supplier allegedly excluded from a market), the relevant product market consists of those to whom the supplier can sell unless special circumstances exist. As a result, Plaintiff's proposed relevant market — Medicare Part D — is not plausibly pled because it is too narrow. The proposed market fails to account for others, such as non-government payers, to whom Plaintiff can sell its product.

Before turning to the analysis of the relevant product market, the Court notes the overarching aim of antitrust law that permeates all aspects of the legal analysis: "[t]he purpose of the Sherman Act is not to protect businesses from the working of the market; it is to protect the public from the failure of the market." Brokerage Concepts, Inc. v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 140 F.3d 494, 518 \(3d Cir. 1998\) (quoting Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 441 \(3d Cir. 1997\)). Antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors, [*20] and can relegate an entire class of competitors to "oblivion" unless consumers are also hurt by the lack of competition. Id. (citing Town Sound & Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 494 \(3d Cir. 1992\)).

Plaintiff points to Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1962\), in support of its position. Brown Shoe concerned a proposed merger between two large manufacturers and retail sellers of shoes. Id. at 296-97. The government challenged the merger under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, which addresses mergers that substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. Id. The Supreme Court discussed the analysis necessary in defining a relevant product market. Id. at 325-28. The majority explained that the "outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Id. at 325. However, the Court in Brown Shoe noted that within a broad market, well-defined submarkets can also exist. Id. The Court stated that the boundaries of these submarkets depend on "practical indicia" such as "industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized [*21] vendors[]." Id. Applying these factors, the Supreme Court upheld the district court's finding that the distinct product markets in Brown Shoe were men's, women's, and children's shoes. Id. at 326.

In United States v. Aetna Inc., 240 F. Supp. 3d 1, 8 \(D.D.C. 2017\), another case on which Plaintiff relies, the district court was again faced with a government challenge pursuant to Section 7 of the Clayton Act as to a proposed merger between Aetna and Humana. Aetna and Humana were two of the largest health insurance companies [*548] in the country. Id. One issue that the court confronted was whether the relevant product market consisted of general Medicare or of the narrower Medicare Advantage. Id. at 11-16. Medicare is a baseline federal government health insurance program for seniors, while Medicare Advantage plans are private insurance programs offered to Medicare-eligible seniors that typically include a broader scope of coverage than that of traditional Medicare. Id. at 11-13.<sup>7</sup> Using the Brown Shoe factors, the Aetna court concluded that the relevant product market was the narrower Medicare Advantage. Id. at 29. The judge in Aetna recognized that the healthcare industry and related publications identified Medicare and Medicare Advantage as distinct markets. Id. at 24. Further, according to the trial judge, both [**22] Aetna and Humana reported Medicare Advantage results separately in their annual financial reports. Id. The court in Aetna continued that both companies divided employees into Medicare Advantage-specific groups, used separate IT platforms for Medicare Advantage, and set pricing on a different track for Medicare Advantage. Id. The Aetna court recognized that "[e]vidence abounds of intense, local competition between Medicare Advantage plans" and therefore "the evidence tends to establish the existence of a market for the sale of individual Medicare Advantage plans."<sup>8</sup> Id. at 29.

As noted, the Third Circuit has not expressly addressed the issue before the Court. Yet, in Brokerage Concepts, Inc. v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 140 F.3d 494 (3d Cir. 1998), the Circuit engaged in a pertinent analysis as to determining a relevant product market. In Brokerage Concepts, "Gary's"<sup>9</sup> consisted of a small chain of pharmacies in Pennsylvania. Id. at 501. Defendant U.S. Healthcare, Inc., had a health maintenance organization ("HMO") as well as third-party administrator ("TPA") business, both run through its subsidiaries. Id. at 501, 504. A TPA is an organization that provides important services for employers who wish to self-insure for their health benefit insurance needs. Id. at 504. An HMO is a network of healthcare [**23] providers (including doctors, hospitals, and pharmacies) in a geographic region that individuals can subscribe to in order to get reduced copayments for healthcare services within the network. Id. at 505. Under the defendant's HMO prescription purchase program, the HMO's subscribers selected one pharmacy from a network of providers; the subscribers could thereafter purchase their medications from the selected pharmacy for a small co-pay. Id. For participating pharmacies, the defendant's HMO paid "a set monthly amount based on the number of U.S. Healthcare subscribers designating that pharmacy[.]" and pharmacies wanted to be in the HMO network for financial reasons. Id.

In 1991, all of Gary's stores were approved providers in the defendant's HMO pharmacy network. Id. That same year, [*549] Gary's decided to self-insure for its own employees' health benefits and was, therefore, in need of a TPA. Id. Instead of selecting the defendant's TPA, however, Gary's chose the plaintiff. Id. As a result, the defendant retaliated against Gary's in the HMO arena by conducting on-site audits, placing one store on a freeze for three months, and not processing an application for a new store. Id. at 505-506. Not surprisingly, Gary's [**24] switched to the defendant's TPA. Id. The plaintiff sued the defendant for, among other things, a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 507-08. The plaintiffs theory of liability was that the defendant improperly used its market power in the HMO area to force Gary to switch to the defendant's TPA. Id. at 508, 510.<sup>10</sup>

To evaluate plaintiffs Section 1 claim, Chief Judge Becker explained that the court first had to define the relevant product and geographic markets. Id. at 513. As to the product market, the court in Brokerage Concepts indicated that "[t]he outer boundaries of a product market are determined by evaluating which products would be reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purpose." Id. (citations omitted). "Interchangeability implies that one product is roughly equivalent to another[.]" the Circuit observed, and "while there might be some degree of preference for the one over the other, either would work effectively." Id. (internal quotations and citations omitted).

<sup>7</sup> The Aetna court also had to determine whether the public exchanges under the Affordable Care Act could comprise a separate relevant market.

<sup>8</sup> The Aetna decision followed trial so that the district court had information not be available at the motion to dismiss state. For example, the court in Aetna considered econometric evidence indicating that a merger would substantially dampen competition in the Medicare Advantage market and evidence demonstrating how head-to-head competition in the Medicare Advantage market benefited consumers by lowering premiums and copays. Id. at 33-45.

<sup>9</sup> "Gary's" full name was Eagleville Pharmacy, Incorporated d/b/a I Got It at Gary's. Brokerage Concepts, Inc., 140 F.3d at 501, 505.

<sup>10</sup> The plaintiff characterized the defendant's actions as a form of unlawful tying. Id. at 508, 510. Ultimately, the Third Circuit disagreed and found that the alleged conduct fell somewhere between a tying arrangement and reciprocal dealing. Id. at 511.

Chief Judge Becker continued that a measure of interchangeability is "cross elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Id. at 513-14 (quoting Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 437 (3d Cir. 1997), which was quoting Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325). "When there is cross-elasticity of demand between products in a [**25] market, 'the rise in the price of a good within [the] relevant market would tend to create a greater demand for other like goods in that market.'" Id. at 514 (quoting Tunis Bros., 952 F.2d at 722).

The plaintiff argued that the relevant product market was a "single brand market[,] meaning only members of the defendant's HMO with prescription drug benefits. Id. The Circuit rejected the plaintiffs proposed market as too narrow. Id. Chief Judge Becker reasoned that the defendant HMO's members are interchangeable with members from other HMOs as well as uninsured persons who purchase prescription drugs. Id. The court in Brokerage Concepts found that the fact that pharmacies remained in the defendant's HMO network even when defendant lowered reimbursement amounts did not demonstrate a lack of cross-elasticity of demand. Critically, Chief Judge Becker indicated that the plaintiff's claim had to be analyzed from Gary's perspective and not from the viewpoint of the members of the defendant's HMO. Id. at 515; see also id. at 514 ("Thus the issue is which products, if any, Gary's, the consumer, would find to be reasonably interchangeable with, or substitutable for, [the defendant's] members who purchase prescription drugs."). As noted, the Circuit concluded [**26] that from Gary's perspective, the defendant's HMO members were interchangeable with uninsured persons who buy prescription drugs and other HMOs' members. Id. at 514-15.

Although the Third Circuit has not ruled on the pending issue, the Eighth Circuit has. In Little Rock Cardiology Clinic PA v. Baptist Health, 591 F.3d 591, 594 (8th Cir. 2009), the plaintiff started its own [*550] hospital and alleged that defendant, the largest hospital company in the state, used its superior market power to force a large health insurance company to terminate its relationship with the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued for violations of Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 595.

The plaintiff defined the relevant product market as patients covered by private insurance, thereby excluding uninsured patients and patients covered by government insurance programs. Id. at 596-97. Relying in part on Brokerage Concepts, the Eighth Circuit rejected the plaintiff's proposed product market as unduly narrow. Id. The Little Rock court reasoned as follows:

[The plaintiff] argues that the product market should be limited to patients using private insurance because private insurance and government insurance—the other primary method of payment—are not reasonably interchangeable. The trouble with this theory is that it analyzes the issue from the wrong side [**27] of the transaction. It may be true that, from the patient's perspective, private insurance and Medicare/Medicaid are not reasonably interchangeable. For a variety of reasons, including age and financial considerations, a person with private insurance may not qualify for these government programs. But this lawsuit is not about the options available to patients, it is about the options available to shut-out cardiologists.

Id. at 597 (emphases added). The Little Rock court continued that the plaintiff's claims "boil down to the allegation that, due to [the defendant]'s allegedly unlawful actions, [the plaintiff] has access to fewer patients," therefore, "[t]he relevant question, then, is to whom might the cardiologists at [the plaintiff's hospital] potentially provide medical service?" Id. The Eight Circuit recognized that the plaintiff can provide service to patients "from either a government program such as Medicare or Medicaid, or from a private insurer." Id. (emphasis in original). Thus, the court concluded, "[p]atients able to pay their medical bill, regardless of the method of payment, are reasonably interchangeable from the cardiologist's perspective—the correct perspective from which to [**28] analyze the issue in this case." Id. (emphasis added). The court in Little Rock emphasized that the key inquiry in shut-out supplier cases is to whom can the supplier sell its product. Id.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>11</sup> The Third Circuit in Federal Trade Commission v. Penn State Hershey Medical Center, 838 F.3d 327, 339-41 (3d Cir. 2016), disagreed with the Little Rock court's analysis as to relevant geographic market. The Circuit explained that in determining the relevant geographic market, the Little Rock court (although not expressly), used the "Elzinga—Hogarty test," which "first, [looks to] the number of customers who come from outside the proposed market to purchase goods and services from inside of it, and, second, [looks to] the number of customers who reside inside the market but leave that market to purchase goods and services."

The First Circuit has reached the same conclusion. See Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 373 F.3d 57, 67 \(1st Cir 2004\) (explaining that "the concern in an ordinary exclusive dealing claim by a shut-out supplier is with the available market for the supplier" and "for Walgreens and Stop & Shop, their potential customers are presumptively all retail customers for prescription drugs—not just that smaller sub-group who are [*551] insured or reimbursed." (emphasis in original)).

Certain courts have recognized that suppliers may nevertheless establish a special sub-group of buyers if the supplier shows that special circumstances exist. See, e.g., Stop & Shop, 373 F.3d at 67 ("Conceivably . . . there might be some special circumstance that ma[kes] separate consideration of [a] sub-group appropriate[] [b]ut . . . there is no hint in this case."). As to health care insurance markets, at least one district court has indicated that special circumstances are met when a supplier can show that if it is shut out of a particular sub-market, the supplier's long-term viability is jeopardized. \*\*29 See Methodist Health Servs. Corp. v. OSF Healthcare Sys., No. 13-01054, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37887, 2015 WL 1399229 \(C.D. Ill. Mar. 25, 2015\). In Methodist Health, the plaintiff sued the defendant under Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act. [2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37887, \[WL\] at \*1](#). The parties were competing hospitals, but only the defendant provided certain essential medical services, such as tertiary pediatric services, Level 3 neonatal intensive care, and Level 1 trauma care. Id. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant used these exclusive services as leverage over commercial health insurers, claiming that the defendant threatened to withdraw from these commercial insurers' networks if the insurers included the plaintiff in their networks. [2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37887, \[WL\] at \*2](#). The plaintiff asserted that they needed the business of these commercial insurers to supplement the comparatively low payments from government insurers. [2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37887, \[WL\] at \*3](#).

The Methodist Health court, at the motion to dismiss stage, permitted the complaint to go forward although the plaintiff defined the relevant product market only as commercial payers, excluding government payers. [2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37887, \[WL\] at \*7](#). The district judge found that the plaintiff had adequately pled special circumstances; that is, the plaintiff alleged (and the defendant admitted) "that access to privately-insured patients is critical to a healthcare provider's long-term sustainability in light of \*\*30 the comparatively low prices providers are required to charge patients covered by government plans for the same services—prices that, in certain cases, may be below cost." Id. (internal citations omitted). Later, at the summary judgment stage, the Methodist Health court found for the defendant. Methodist Health Servs. Corp. v. OSF Healthcare Sys., No. 13-1054, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136478, 2016 WL 5817176, at \*9 \(C.D. Ill. Sept. 30, 2016\), aff'd, 859 F.3d 408 \(7th Cir. 2017\). Nevertheless, the court again reiterated that commercial and government payers are "not interchangeable from the perspective of a hospital" as "government payers pay significantly less than commercial payers" so much so that "payments from government insurers do not cover the providers' costs." Id. In other words, the Methodist Health court permitted the relevant product market to consist solely of commercial insurers due to special circumstances, that is, if the plaintiff relied solely on government insurance, the plaintiff may have gone out of business.

Turning to the matter at hand, the Court finds that when a supplier who is allegedly shut out of a market (or a substantial portion of the market), the relevant product market consists of all persons or entities to whom that supplier can reasonably sell unless special circumstances exist. As a result, Plaintiff's product market of \*\*31 Medicare Part D is unduly narrow because it excludes others, notably commercial payers, to whom Plaintiff can sell Xiidra. Plaintiff also has not plausibly alleged special circumstances here. The Court therefore grants Defendants' motion to dismiss on this ground. This ruling follows the Eighth Circuit's decision in Little Rock and the First Circuit's ruling in Stop & Shop. However, the ruling also finds \*552 support in the Third Circuit's Brokerage Concepts decision. There, the Circuit did not limit the relevant market to potential pharmacy customers from the defendant's HMO as the plaintiff had advocated. The Third Circuit found that the defendant's HMO members who purchase prescription drugs were interchangeable with members of other prescription plans and uninsured persons because the proper perspective was that of Gary's, the pharmacy chain in question.

Id. at 339-40. The Circuit recognized that this test is "utilized in non-healthcare markets to define the relevant geographic market" and even "was once the preferred method to analyze the relevant geographic market," but "subsequent empirical research demonstrated that [it] resulted in overbroad markets with respect to hospitals." Id. Thus, the Circuit found this test to be "inconsistent" with the hypothetical monopolist test, its preferred test for determining the relevant geographic market. Id. at 339.

In other words, perspective is critical. In this case, the proper perspective is from the supplier's vantage point rather than the customer's view. For example, citing Brown Shoe and Aetna, Plaintiff places great emphasis on the fact it "separate[s]" its sales between commercial payers and government payers, e.g., FAC ¶ 118, and it does [**32] plausibly plead this fact. In addition, the Court would be very surprised if Defendants did not do same. Putting aside price differentials, commercial and government health insurance entails different regulatory schemes. Id. ¶¶ 119-120. However, and critically, both Brown Shoe and Aetna dealt with potential mergers that were going to harm competition vis-a-vis consumers — not suppliers.<sup>12</sup> The same has not been alleged here, and the Court finds that Plaintiff's relevant product market is not plausibly pled.

Anticompetitive Conduct

As noted, Plaintiff alleges two forms of anticompetitive conduct: Defendants' bundling agreements with Plans 1 and 2, as well as an exclusive dealing agreement with Plan 3. FAC ¶¶ 91, 97, 107. Defendants claim that their conduct is "nothing more than lawful competition on the merits," because (1) Defendants do not have monopoly power over their bundled glaucoma drugs; (2) Defendants' agreements with the plans are only for one-year; and (3) Defendants' combined pricing is not below the collective costs of the relevant drugs. Def. Br. at 25-39. Plaintiff responds that (1) Defendants have monopoly power over Restasis in the Part D market and do not [**33] need to have monopoly power over any of the non-competing glaucoma drugs; (2) Plaintiff lacks comparable glaucoma drugs to compete with Defendants' Part D bundle; and (3) Defendants' one-year contracts can still be anticompetitive. Pl. Opp'n at 24-35.

The Third Circuit has reviewed numerous cases involving bundling agreements and exclusive dealing arrangements. E.g., Eisai Inc. v. Sanofi Aventis U.S. LLC, 821 F.3d 394 (3d Cir 2016); ZF Meritor LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254 (3d Cir 2012); LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141 (3d Cir 2003) (en banc); SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056 (3d Cir 1978). SmithKline concerned cephalosporins, a class of antibiotics. SmithKline, 575 F.2d at 1059. Due to its patents, the defendant enjoyed a monopoly in the cephalosporin market for years. Id. In 1973, the plaintiff began selling Ancef, a cephalosporin that competed directly with the defendant's Kefzol. Id. In response, the defendant devised a revised marketing program so that if a purchaser bought three of the defendant's cephalosporins, the buyer received a 3% discount. Id. at 1059-60. The defendant's bundle included two cephalosporins, Keflin and Keflex, for which the defendant faced no market competition. Id. at 1060-61. As a result, the plaintiff had to offer a 16% to 35% discount on its one product, Ancef, to be able to compete with the [*553] defendant's bundled rebate. Id. at 1062. Even with the plaintiff's competition, the defendant's market share had [**34] only been reduced to 88.6% by 1975. Id. at 1060.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 1062. The Third Circuit determined that the defendant's rebate programs insulated Kefzol from true price competition with Ancef. Id. at 1065. The SmithKline court found that "the act of willful acquisition and maintenance of monopoly power was brought about by linking products on which [the defendant] faced no competition [Keflin and Keflex] with a competitive product, Kefzol." Id. The Circuit continued that "[t]he result was to sell all three products on a non-competitive basis in what would have otherwise been a competitive market for Ancef and Kefzol" and that "[t]he effect of the [revised marketing program] was to force [the plaintiff] to pay rebates on one product, Ancef, equal to rebates paid by [the defendant] based on volume sales of three products." Id. Thus, the court in SmithKline concluded that the defendant's revised marketing plan "associate[d] [the defendant]'s legal monopolistic practices with an illegal activity that directly affected the price, supply, and demand of Kefzol and Ancef," thereby violating Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Id.

<sup>12</sup> Thus, if the Court was confronted with a proposed merger of Plaintiff and Defendants, then the relevant product market might very well be Medicare Part D because the Court would be viewing the issue from the consumer's perspective. The consumer's perspective was the relevant viewpoint in both Brown Shoe and Aetna.

In LePage's, the defendant manufactured Scotch [\[\*\*35\]](#) tape and controlled over 90% of the transparent tape market. 324 F.3d at 141. The plaintiff entered the private label transparent tape market, meaning that it manufactured transparent tape sold under a retailer's name rather than under the plaintiff's name. Id. By 1992, the plaintiff's product accounted for 88% of the private label transparent tape market. Id. The defendant then decided to enter the same market. Id. The defendant instituted two programs, both consisting of bundled rebates, with major retailers. Id. at 144-45. The products in the bundled rebates consisted of goods from over six of the defendant's product lines. Id. at 154. The rebates were considerable and, importantly, if a retail customer failed to meet the target in any single product line, then it lost the entire rebate. Id. The plaintiff sued the defendant for violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 145.

In evaluating the plaintiff's antitrust claims, the Third Circuit in LePage's discussed its earlier opinion in SmithKline, where it recognized that the gravamen of the defendant's Section 2 violation was that the defendant "linked a product on which it faced competition with products on which it faced no competition." Id. at 156 (emphasis added) (citing SmithKline, 575 F.2d at 1065). Similarly, the Circuit [\[\*\*36\]](#) recognized that in LePage's, the defendant's bundled rebates exploited its monopoly power over Scotch tape, as Scotch tape was indispensable to any retailer in the transparent tape market. Id. The court determined that the defendant thus "used its monopoly in transparent tape, backed by its considerable catalog of products, to squeeze out" the plaintiff from the private label transparent tape market. Id. The Circuit also concluded that the defendant's rebate programs were designed to have major retailers deal exclusively with the defendant, as the defendant set targets to force a retailer to either drop any non-Scotch products or lose the maximum rebate. Id. at 159. The Circuit accordingly found the defendant in violation of Section 2. Id.

More recently, in ZF Meritor, the relevant market was heavy duty ("HD") truck transmissions in North America. 696 F.3d at 263. There were only four direct purchasers, referred to as the Original Equipment Manufacturers ("OEMs"), of HD transmissions in North America. Id. at 264. Truck buyers, the ultimate consumers [\[\*554\]](#) of HD transmissions, could select the transmission and other components of their trucks from OEM catalogues called "data books." Id. Data books listed component choices as "standard" or "preferred/preferentially-priced," [\[\*\*37\]](#) with the latter being the lowest priced component in the data book among comparable products. Id. Data book placement was essential for success in the HD transmissions industry. Id.

The defendant was a monopolist in the market for HD transmissions in North America since the 1950s. Id. The plaintiff entered the market in 1989, and then joined a joint venture in 1999 to develop another competing transmission. Id. In response, the defendant entered into long-term agreements ("LTAs") with each OEM for at least a five-year duration that included a conditional rebate program. Id. at 265. Under the conditional rebate programs, OEMs could only receive rebates if they purchased a specified percentage of their requirements from the defendant (a "market share penetration target"), generally anywhere from 87% to 97.5% of the OEMs' requirements. Id. The LTAs also required the OEMs to publish the defendant's product as the standard offering in their data books. Id. Moreover, two of the LTAs required OEMs to remove competitors' products from their data books completely. Id. Finally, the LTAs required the OEMs to "preferentially price" the defendant's transmissions against its competitors' products, which was [\[\*\*38\]](#) sometimes achieved by OEMs raising the price of a competitor's product. Id. at 266.

After the defendant entered into the LTAs with the OEMs, the defendant imposed additional price penalties on customers who selected the plaintiff's product and urged OEMs to "force feed" the defendant's product to customers. Id. at 267. Although the defendant's prices were generally lower than the plaintiff's prices, the defendant's prices were never below its costs. Id. at 268. Due to the defendant's actions, the plaintiff's market share dropped to 8% by 2003 and then to 4% by 2005; ultimately the plaintiff went out of business in 2007. Id. The plaintiff sued the defendant pursuant to Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act as well as Section 3 of the Clayton Act. Id.

The ZF Meritor court defined an exclusive dealing contract as an "an agreement in which a buyer agrees to purchase certain goods or services only from a particular seller for a certain period of time." Id. at 270. The Third Circuit recognized that such agreements can be procompetitive, as they assure supply, price stability, outlets, investments, and planning. Id. Yet, the court in ZF Meritor also indicated that exclusive dealing arrangements can be anticompetitive, especially when "one supplier of [*39] goods or services unreasonably . . . deprive[s] other suppliers of a market for their goods." Id. Anticompetitive effects, the Circuit observed, is of "special concern when [the restraints are] imposed by a monopolist." Id. at 271.

The ZF Meritor court ruled that "[d]ue to the potentially procompetitive benefits of exclusive dealing agreements, their legality is judged under the rule of reason [test]." Id. Under the rule of reason test, the Third Circuit determined that "[t]he legality of an exclusive dealing arrangement depends on whether it will foreclose competition in such a substantial share of the relevant market so as to adversely affect competition." Id. (citing Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 328, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961)). The Circuit explained that "[i]n other words, an exclusive dealing arrangement is unlawful only if the 'probable effect' of the arrangement is to substantially lessen competition, rather than merely disadvantage [*555] rivals." Id. (citing Tampa Elec. Co., 365 U.S. at 329). The ZF Meritor court indicated that the following factors are relevant in conducting the analysis: relative market power, substantial market foreclosure, contract duration, actual anticompetitive effects versus procompetitive effects, coercive behavior, and a customer's ability to terminate agreements. [***40] Id. at 271-72.<sup>13</sup> The circuit noted that the presence of exclusive dealing is a threshold requirement. Id. at 282.

In applying the facts to this framework, the ZF Meritor court first explained that the plaintiff established exclusive dealing. Id. at 282-84. Although the LTAs did not expressly require exclusive dealing, the Circuit recognized that the LTAs' market penetration targets served, in effect, as mandatory purchase requirements. Id. at 282. The Third Circuit likened these agreements to the bundled rebates in LePage's, where no express exclusivity requirement existed, but the agreements were designed to, and did, operate as exclusive dealing agreements nonetheless. Id. (citing LePage's, 324 F.3d at 157-58). Additionally, the court in ZF Meritor recognized that exclusive dealing agreements typically cover 100% of the buyer's needs but that "partial" exclusive dealing can still be unlawful. Id. at 283. The ZF Meritor panel continued the LTAs, as partial exclusive dealing contracts, could be unlawful because there were only four OEMs, the defendant was a long dominant supplier, and the defendant entered into long-term agreements with each OEM covering 90% of the customer base. Id. The Circuit concluded that the plaintiff had met the threshold requirement [***41] by pleading partial, de facto exclusive dealing arrangements. Id. at 284.

The ZF Meritor court then turned to market conditions, recognizing that "[e]xclusive dealing will generally only be unlawful where the market is highly concentrated, the defendant possesses significant market power, and there is some element of coercion present." Id. (citing Tampa Elec. Co., 365 U.S. at 329). The Circuit recognized that HD transmissions are expensive to produce, must be modified by geographic region, and "must pass through the highly concentrated intermediate market in which the OEMs operate." Id. at 285. The court noted that other than the plaintiff, "no significant external supplier ha[d] entered the market for the [preceding] twenty years," as the market had "long been dominated" by the defendant. Id. at 284. Thus, the court in ZF Meritor found that the defendant had "leveraged its position as a supplier of necessary products to coerce the OEMs into entering into the LTAs" even though "many of the terms of the LTAs were unfavorable to the OEMs and their customers." Id. at 285. The Circuit recognized that "a monopolist may use its power to break the competitive mechanism and deprive customers of the ability to make a meaningful choice," and that the case before [***42] it "involve[d] precisely the combination of factors" that resulted in "the rare [*556] case in which exclusive dealing would pose a threat to competition." Id.

The court in ZF Meritor then examined the extent of market foreclosure, the length of the LTAs, and anticompetitive provisions in the agreements. Id. at 286-87. The Circuit recognized that the defendant foreclosed a significant portion of the market, as the defendant entered into a LTA with each of the four OEMs and essentially required them to purchase 80% to 97.5% of their requirements from the defendant. Id. at 286. The impact, the court noted, was that the plaintiff's overall market share dropped, from 8-14% in 2003, to 4% in 2005. Id. The ZF Meritor court also observed that the LTAs were not short-term agreements. Id. at 287. The Circuit noted that courts have found agreements for under a year to be presumptively lawful and agreements for one to two years to be lawful under certain circumstances. Id. at 286-87. Although long-term exclusive dealing contracts are not per se unlawful, the ZF Meritor court found that the defendant's five-year exclusive dealing contracts with all four OEMs to secure over 85% of the market were "unprecedented." Id. Finally, the Circuit recognized [**43] that "the LTAs were replete with provisions that a reasonable jury could find anticompetitive," recognizing that defendant's provisions barring certain competitors' products from being listed in the OEMs' data books as a "disaster" for the competitors. Id. at 287. The ZF Meritor court concluded that "there was more than sufficient evidence for a jury to conclude that the cumulative effect of [the defendant]'s conduct was to adversely affect competition." Id. at 289.

In Eisai, the defendant sold Lovenox, an injectable anticoagulant drug, since 1993. Eisai, 821 F.3d at 399. In 2005, the plaintiff purchased a license to sell Fragmin, a competing injectable anticoagulant drug. Id. The relevant product market consisted of two other injectable anticoagulant drugs available in the United States from 2005 to 2010. Id. Lovenox had the largest market share at 81.5% to 92.3%, and Fragmin had the second largest at 4.3% to 8.2%. Id. United States hospitals used group purchasing organizations ("GPOs") to negotiate their drug contracts. Id. at 400. The defendant offered the GPOs a program where hospitals received price discounts based on the volume of Lovenox purchased in comparison to other competing drugs. Id. If purchases of Lovenox were under 75% [**44] of total anticoagulant purchases, hospitals only received a flat 1% discount. Id. Yet, as the percentage of Lovenox increased, hospitals received discounts ranging from 9% to 30%. Id. The program also included a formulary access clause that limited a hospital's ability to give competing drugs priority status on its formularies. Id.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for violations of Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act, Section 3 of the Clayton Act, and sections of the New Jersey Antitrust Act. Id. at 401. The district court granted summary judgment for the defendant. Id. On appeal, the Eisai court again recognized that exclusive dealing contracts can have procompetitive benefits such as a consistent supply and price stability, but under the rule of reason, such contracts are unlawful when "the 'probable effect' of the arrangement is to substantially lessen competition, rather than merely disadvantage rivals." Id. at 403.

The Third Circuit reviewed its past decisions in LePage's and ZF Meritor. Id. at 404-07. The Circuit described its decision in LePage's, in light of ZF Meritor, as a matter in which a single-product producer is excluded through a bundled rebate program offered by a producer of multiple products, with the rebates conditioned on purchases across [**45] the multiple product [*557] lines. Id. at 405. The Eisai court found the decision in LePage's inapposite because nothing in the record indicated that "an equally efficient competitor was unable to compete" with the defendant. Id. at 406. The court in Eisai also distinguished ZF Meritor where noncompliance with the dominant manufacturer's agreements "would jeopardize the [customer's] relations with the dominant manufacturer" and potentially cut off the customer's supply. Id. By comparison, in Eisai, even if a GPO chose to terminate the defendant's agreement in its entirety, "it could still obtain Lovenox at the wholesale price," it would simply forgo the 1% discount. Id. The court in Eisai also explained that contracting with "a few dozen hospitals out of almost 6,000 in the United States is not enough to demonstrate 'substantial foreclosure'—particularly, if the reason a hospital did not change to Fragmin was due to price, i.e., the loss of the discounts offered by the Program." Id. at 404. Finally, the Eisai court noted that the only example of an anticompetitive effect was a price increase in the defendant's drug, but the increase was consistent with the overall market. Id. at 407. Therefore, Eisai court upheld the district court's [**46] grant of summary judgment for the defendant. Id. at 408.

This Court makes a few observations in light of the foregoing cases. At the outset, neither bundled rebates nor exclusive dealing contracts are inherently anticompetitive. In fact, both can be procompetitive and potential anticompetitive effects are subject to a fact-sensitive analysis. One example of anticompetitive conduct, as discussed in SmithKline, occurs when a defendant offers a bundled rebate in which it links the competitive product with a product over which the defendant has a monopoly. Here, Plaintiff has not alleged that Defendants have a monopoly over the glaucoma drugs<sup>14</sup> which it bundles with Restasis, the product competing with Plaintiff's Xiidra. As a result, SmithKline does not support Plaintiff's position.

A second scenario was discussed in Lepage's, which offered a variation on SmithKline. In both cases, the defendant tied its bundled rebate to a product over which it had a monopoly. However, in LePage's, the defendant went further and linked its bundled rebate to several product lines. The plaintiff, however, did not have competing product lines with which it could link its private label transparent tape. Here, as noted, [**47] Plaintiff has not plausibly alleged that Defendants have a monopoly over their bundled glaucoma drugs. Moreover, Plaintiff — a large pharmaceutical company — has also not asserted that it did not have other available products that it could offer Plan 1 or Plan 2 as part of a bundled rebate. LePage's, therefore, also does not support Plaintiff's position.

Additionally, Plaintiff does not find relief pursuant to ZF Meritor. ZF Meritor dealt with a highly concentrated market, HD transmissions, that had significant barriers to entry. Plaintiff has not made similar allegations concerning the pharmaceutical drug market in which it operates. Moreover, because the market in ZF Meritor was so highly-concentrated and because the defendant had been dominant in the market for decades, the OEMs had to have access to the defendant's products. No similar allegation has been made here as to Restasis; that is, Plaintiff has not asserted that either government or commercial payers must have Restasis (or other Defendant products).

[*558] More importantly, ZF Meritor involved contracts that were at least five years in length. The contracts at issue here are for one year and are open to competitive bidding on an [**48] annual basis. FAC ¶ 68. As the Third Circuit observed in ZF Meritor, short-term agreements present little threat to competition. ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 286 (citing cases where courts found that contracts under one-year in duration are presumptively lawful and contracts for one to two years are lawful). Plaintiff relies on an unnamed person from Plan 3 indicating, in response to Plaintiff's inquiry as to how to compete with Defendants moving forward, that "you don't." FAC ¶ 102. This statement supports Plaintiff's position, but it is not sufficient to carry Plaintiff's plausibility burden. Plaintiff does not indicate who within Plan 3 made the statement, so it is not clear that the speaker had authority to make such a broad pronouncement for Plan 3. Moreover, the statement can be interpreted as business posturing for future negotiations. Most importantly, the statement only pertains to Plan 3 — it fails to account for future dealings with Plans 1 and 2.

In sum, Plaintiff has not plausibly pled the requisite anticompetitive conduct. For this independent reason, the motion to dismiss is granted.

Tortious Interference

Defendants argue that because Plaintiff's tortious interference count is premised on the alleged [**49] anticompetitive conduct, and because the Plaintiff's anticompetitive conduct is not plausibly pled, the tortious interference count must also be dismissed. Def. Br. at 40. Plaintiff replies that tortious interference can encompass conduct broader than anticompetitive behavior; thus, its claim may stand even if the Court grants Defendants' motion to dismiss as to the antitrust allegations. Pl. Opp'n at 39-40.

Under New Jersey law, tortious interference has four elements: "(1) a reasonable expectation of economic advantage to plaintiff, (2) interference done intentionally and with 'malice,' (3) causal connection between the interference and the loss of prospective gain, and (4) actual damages." Varrallo v. Hammond Inc., 94 F.3d 842, 848 (3d Cir. 1996) (citing Printing Mart—Morristown v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 116 N.J. 739, 563 A.2d 31 (1989)). The Court agrees with Plaintiff that, as a matter of law, tortious interference can cover wrongful conduct other than antitrust activity. However, as pled, the only improper conduct on which Plaintiff bases its claim for tortious interference is Defendants' alleged anticompetitive activity. FAC ¶¶ 200-208. As a result, because the Court is dismissing Plaintiff's antitrust counts, it also dismisses Plaintiff's tortious interference count.

V. CONCLUSION

In sum, the Court grants [**50] Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, D.E. 14. The Court dismisses all counts without prejudice. Plaintiff has thirty (30) days to file a second amended complaint, if it so chooses, consistent with this Opinion. If Plaintiff fails to file a second amended complaint, the dismissal of Plaintiff's counts will be with prejudice. An appropriate Order accompanies this Opinion.

ORDER

John Michael Vazquez, U.S.D.J.

For the reasons expressed in the accompanying Opinion, and for good cause shown,

IT IS on this 22th day of March, 2019,

ORDERED that Defendants' motion to dismiss, D.E. 14, Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, D.E. 64, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim is GRANTED without prejudice; and it is further ORDERED that Plaintiff has thirty (30) days to file a second amended complaint, if it so chooses, consistent with the accompanying Opinion. If Plaintiff fails to file a second amended complaint within thirty (30) days, the dismissal of Plaintiff's counts will be with prejudice.

[\[\*618\] MEMORANDUM](#)

JOYNER, J.

Before the Court are Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 50), Plaintiffs' Opposition thereto (Doc. No. 54), [**2] Defendants' Reply in Support thereof (Doc. No. 56), and Plaintiffs' Sur-reply thereto (Doc. No. 57). For the reasons set forth below, we grant Defendants' Motion.

This case arises from Plaintiffs' Walgreen Co. and The Kroger Co. ("Retailer Plaintiffs") allegations that Defendants Johnson & Johnson and Janssen Biotech, Inc. (collectively "Janssen") ("J&J") violated federal antitrust laws through an anticompetitive scheme to exclude competition, maintain a monopoly over, and artificially inflate prices for Defendants' biologic infliximab drug, Remicade. Pl. Comp. ¶1. These allegations stem from facts set forth in this Court's Memorandums denying J&J's motion to dismiss Pfizer's complaint and denying in part J&J's motion to dismiss Direct and Indirect Purchasers' amended complaints. See Pfizer [*619] Inc. v. Johnson & Johnson, 333 F. Supp. 3d 494, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 135261 (E.D. Pa. 2018); Doc. No. 58. See Direct and Indirect Purchasers v. Johnson & Johnson, No. 17-cv-04326 and No. 18-cv-00303. In the instant case, Plaintiffs, indirect purchasers, allege that inflated prices for Remicade were passed on to them as overcharges on their purchases of the drug from pharmaceutical wholesalers ("Wholesalers"), AmerisourceBergen Drug Corporation [**3] and Cardinal Health, Inc. Wholesalers purportedly assigned to Plaintiffs their "rights" under their distributor agreements with JOM Pharmaceutical Services, Inc., a subsidiary of J&J.

At the heart of the dispute here is Defendants' argument that Plaintiffs lack antitrust standing because Wholesalers' purported assignment of "rights" under the Agreements was void pursuant to an anti-assignment provision. Plaintiffs maintain that their antitrust claims are not encompassed by the purported assignments, and may proceed.

I. Factual Background

The following facts are undisputed: Defendants manufacture and market Remicade. (Pl. Resp. to Def. Stmt. Facts at ¶2, Doc. No. 54-1). Plaintiffs purchase Remicade from AmerisourceBergen Drug Corporation ("Amerisource") and from Cardinal Health, Inc. ("Cardinal"), pharmaceutical wholesalers who purchase Remicade directly from Defendants. Id. at ¶5. Wholesalers' direct purchases of Remicade are governed by Distribution Agreements (together, "the Agreements") with JOM Pharmaceutical Services, Inc. ("JOM"). Id. at ¶6. The Agreements are governed by New Jersey law. Id. Section 4.4 of the Agreements between Wholesalers and Defendants each includes a non-assignment provision [**4] containing the following language:

Except as provided in this section, neither party may assign, directly or indirectly, this agreement or any of its rights or obligations under this agreement, either voluntarily or involuntarily (whether by merger, acquisition, consolidation, dissolution, operation of law, change of control or otherwise), without prior written consent of the other party. . . . Any purported assignment in violation of this section will be void.

Def. Br. Exs. A and B, Doc. 50-3.

On January 23, 2018, Wholesalers purportedly assigned their claims against Defendants over alleged overcharges for Remicade to Plaintiffs. (Pl. Resp. to Def. Stmt. Facts at ¶10, Doc. No. 54-1 at 3). The purported assignment agreements stated, "[Amerisource] hereby conveys, assigns and transfers to Walgreens all of its rights, title and interest in and to all Direct Purchaser Claims it may have against Defendants under the antitrust laws of the United States." "[Cardinal] hereby conveys, assigns and transfers to Kroger all of its rights, title and interest in and to all Direct Purchaser Claims it may have against Defendants under the antitrust laws of the United States." Id.; See Def. Br. Exs. C [**5] and D.

On June 6, 2018, Plaintiffs filed the underlying action against Defendants. See Pl. Compl., Doc. No. 1. Plaintiffs' complaint asserts federal antitrust claims purportedly assigned to them by Wholesalers, in addition to asserting claims on their own behalf. (Pl. Resp. to Def. Stmt. Facts at ¶12, Doc. No. 54-1). On December 7, 2018, this Court denied Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' direct purchaser antitrust claims (those that do not depend on assignments from Wholesalers). See Doc. No. 48, fn 2. Now, Plaintiffs concede that "their purchases of Remicade were indirect" and that any purchases not covered by a purported assignment "will not be [*620] included in [their] damages model." Pl. Opp. at 54.

In our December 7th, 2018 Order we also converted Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' indirect purchaser antitrust claims (Doc. No. 36) into a summary judgment proceeding, pursuant to the Third Circuit's direction that "[i]f matters outside the bounds of the complaint are considered by the district court, the merits of the claim must be tested by way of motion for summary judgment." JM Mech. Corp. v. United States, 716 F.2d 190, 197 (3d Cir. 1983). The instant motion for summary judgment is fully briefed and ripe for the Court's adjudication, [**6] now that Plaintiffs have been afforded "a reasonable opportunity to present all material" pertinent under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. See Doc. No. 48.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

Summary judgment is appropriate "if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). New Jersey law, which we find applicable to the issue of non-assignment provisions in the distributor Agreements in this case, instructs that "interpretation or construction of a contract is usually a legal question for the court, 'suitable for a decision on a motion for summary judgment.'" Driscoll Const. Co. v. State Dep't of Transp., 371 N.J. Super. 304, 853 A.2d 270, 276 (N.J. App. Div. 2004) (citation omitted).

"As to materiality. . . .[o]nly disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). For a dispute about a material fact to be "genuine," the evidence must be "such that a reasonable jury" could find for the nonmovant. In re Tribune Media Co., 902 F.3d 384, 392 (3d Cir. 2018) (citing Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248). To survive summary judgment, the party opposing it "must set forth specific facts" "that properly can be resolved only by a finder of fact because they may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250 (citing First Nat'l Bank v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 288-289, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968)). At summary judgment we view the evidence [**7] "in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (quoting United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655, 82 S. Ct. 993, 8 L. Ed. 2d 176 (1962)).

III. DISCUSSION

Defendants, J&J, assert four arguments for summary judgment. First, Defendants argue that they are parties to the Agreements. Second, Defendants argue that the anti-assignment provisions in the Agreements encompass Plaintiffs' statutory antitrust claims. Third, Defendants argue that the anti-assignment provisions are enforceable under New Jersey law. Fourth, Defendants argue that Wholesalers' assignments to Plaintiffs are void because they were made without Defendants' consent, thereby violating the clear and specific anti-assignment provisions. In sum, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs are barred from asserting an antitrust cause of action because these statutory claims would not exist but for the void assignments. Plaintiffs oppose summary judgment on three grounds: first, that Defendants are not parties to the Agreements; second, that Plaintiffs' antitrust claims are outside the scope of the Agreements; and third, that even if the Wholesalers' assignments violated the anti-assignment provisions, [**621] federal common law allowing for valid assignment of antitrust claims should preempt state law enforcing [**8] anti-assignment provisions.

A. Whether Defendants are Parties to the Agreements

Defendants seek to enforce the anti-assignment provisions of the Agreements, arguing that they are parties to the Agreements. Defendants argue that the Agreement discloses that they are the parent company (Johnson & Johnson) and affiliate (Janssen) of the signatory, JOM, to whom they delegated authority to enter Agreements governing distribution of Defendants' drug, Remicade. Furthermore, Defendants argue, the Agreements explicitly apply to claims involving JOM's parent company, subsidiaries, or affiliates. Exs. A and B §§ 4.21(a). Plaintiffs, on the other hand, argue that JOM signed the Agreements not as Defendants' agent, but as the only party to the contract. Therefore, Plaintiffs' argument goes, Defendants cannot oppose the purported assignments because they are not parties to the Agreements. Pl. Opp. at 9. Id. We find there is no dispute that Defendants are parties to the Agreements.

"Agency is the fiduciary relationship that arises when one person (a 'principal') manifests assent to another person (an 'agent') that the agent shall act on the principal's behalf and subject to the principal's control, and the agent [**9] manifests assent or otherwise consents so to act." Restat 3d of Agency, § 1.01 (3rd 2006). New Jersey law, applying the Restatement \(Third\) of Agency §6.01, has held that a "principal will be bound by contracts with third parties entered into by an agent with actual authority to act on his behalf." Allegheny/AA Bail Bonds, Inc., Atty. in Fact for Allegheny Cas. Co. v. Wright, Nos. A-2066-07T2, A-2071-07T2, 2011 N.J. Super. Unpub. LEXIS 699 at \*15 \(Super. Ct. App. Div. Mar. 22, 2011\). To create "[a]ctual authority (express or implied)" the principal need only communicate "written or spoken or other conduct" that, "reasonably interpreted, causes the agent to believe that the principal desires him so to act on the principal's account." Id. (quoting Jennings v. Reed, 381 N.J. Super. 217, 231, 885 A.2d 482 \(Super. Ct. App. Div. 2005\) (citations omitted)). Generally, in contracts where the principal's identity is known to the other contracting party, "the principal, not the agent, is liable on the contract." Looman Realty Corp. v. Broad St. Nat'l Bank, 32 N.J. 461, 476, 161 A.2d 247 \(1960\). "Nevertheless, an agent acting for a disclosed principal may agree with the other contracting party that the agent also will be a party to the contract." Id. (citation omitted). Ordinarily, however, "[a] principal who deals with third parties through an agent. . . expects to become a party to transactions entered into on the principal's behalf by the agent. When the third party knows the identity of the [**10] principal, the third party ordinarily expects that the principal, and not the agent, will become a party to the transaction." Restat 3d of Agency, § 6.01 Cmt b (3rd 2006).

In this case, JOM, the signatory to the Agreements, is a subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson and the agent of Janssen Biotech, Inc. for the purpose of entering distribution contracts. "Schedule A" of the Agreements (Ex. A at 25, Ex. B at 23) names Janssen Biotech, Inc. as an "affiliate" (also referred to as a "Manufacturer," Exs. A and B at 1) of JOM for purposes of the Agreements. The language of the Agreements expressly provides that JOM's affiliates have delegated authority to JOM to enter distribution agreements on their behalf. See Exs. A and B at 1, "[JOM] is an Authorized Distributor of Record for the [*622] Products with authority delegated by the Manufacturers to designate additional Authorized Distributors of Record (each an "ADR") on their behalf for distribution of Products. . . .[JOM] and its affiliates desire to retain Distributor [Wholesalers] to provide the necessary Services."

Here, we find no genuine dispute that for the purposes of the distribution Agreements, JOM is an agent of Defendants, as JOM was delegated authority to enter the [**11] Agreements on behalf of their named affiliates, the "principals." There is also no dispute that the principals were "disclosed" to the other contracting party in Schedule A of the Agreements. Therefore, applying New Jersey law, we find it is beyond reasonable dispute that Defendants are parties to the Agreements when they are named in the Agreement as an "affiliate" of the signatory and when the Agreements provide that JOM is authorized to enter the Agreement on the affiliates' (Defendants') behalf. See Allegheny/AA Bail Bonds, Inc., Atty. in Fact for Allegheny Cas. Co., 2011 N.J. Super. Unpub. LEXIS 699 at *15.

B. Applicable Law

The Parties do not dispute that New Jersey law applies to the anti-assignment provisions. See Pl. Opp. at 6, "[b]oth sides agree that the two Distribution Agreements are governed by state law — in this case, the law of New Jersey. . . . [which] generally follows the Restatement of Contracts." See Bel-Ray Co. v. Chemrite (Pty) Ltd., 181 F.3d 435, 442 (3d Cir. 1999).

The dispute is over whether Plaintiffs' antitrust claims are encompassed by the anti-assignment provisions in the Agreements. Defendants contend that the Agreements' prohibition on assignment of "rights" without consent necessarily includes a prohibition on assignment of statutory causes of action, such as the right to recover overcharge damages. Accordingly, where the anti-assignment [**12] provisions have been violated, under New Jersey law the purported assignments are void, and, as a result, Plaintiffs' have no basis on which to assert their statutory claims. By contrast, Plaintiffs argue that the anti-assignment provisions narrowly prohibit performance of the contract, while the right to bring a statutory antitrust claim is "in some way independent of, or pre-existing to, the 'rights or obligations'" that the provisions prohibit from being assigned. Def. Br. at 12. If Plaintiffs' statutory claims exist independent of the Agreements, Plaintiffs argue, then federal common law, not New Jersey law, will resolve the issue at summary judgment. We find there is no reasonable dispute that the anti-assignment provisions prohibited assignment of rights under the Agreements, including statutory causes of action; therefore, we grant summary judgment for Defendants, where Plaintiffs' antitrust claims exist by virtue of void assignments.

It is established that "under controlling federal law, . . . antitrust claims are assignable." Gulfstream III Assocs., Inc. v. Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., 995 F.2d 425, 431 \(3d Cir. 1993\) (quoting In re Fine Paper Litig., 632 F.2d 1081, 1090 \(3rd Cir. 1980\)). In Wallach v. Eaton Corp., the Third Circuit clarified that in the antitrust context, "an effective assignment must directly reference antitrust [**13] claims in order to ensure that any transfer of direct purchaser status is crystal clear, thereby 'eliminating' any problems of split recoveries or duplicative liability." Wallach v. Eaton Corp., 837 F.3d 356, 370 \(3d Cir. 2016\) (quoting Gulfstream III Assocs., Inc. v. Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., 995 F.2d 425, 440 \(3d Cir. 1993\)). The Wallach court went on to hold that under the Restatement, "consideration is not required under [*623] federal common law to give effect to an otherwise express assignment." Id. at 371.

However, a threshold question is whether the assignment in issue is valid. See Lehigh Valley Hosp. v. UAW Local 259 Soc. Sec. Dep't, No. 98-4116, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12219, at \*9 \(E.D. Pa. Aug. 10, 1999\) (reasoning that "[b]efore this Court even addresses whether the assignee of a plan participant has standing to sue [on the basis of statutory claims] under ERISA, however, it must first determine if the alleged assignment in this case is valid."). It follows that when considering the validity of an assignment of "rights," the Third Circuit has held, albeit in the context of statutory ERISA claims, not antitrust claims, that there is "no compelling reason to stray from the 'black-letter law that the terms of an unambiguous private contract must be enforced.'" Am. Orthopedic & Sports Med. v. Indep. Blue Cross Blue Shield, 890 F.3d 445, 453 \(3d Cir. 2018\) (citation omitted). A district court is "correct" to look to the law of the state in the distributor Agreement's choice-of-law provision to determine the effect of the Agreement, and to apply that state's [**14] principles of interpreting assignment provisions. See Hartig Drug Co. v. Senju Pharm. Co., 836 F.3d 261, 274 \(3d Cir. 2016\).

Furthermore, the Third Circuit made clear in Wallach, in line with §317 of the Restatement, that it rejects the "antiquated distinction" between "rights" under a contract, which may be assigned or contractually prohibited from being assigned, and non-contractual causes of action: "the historical common-law rule that a chose in action could not be assigned has largely disappeared." 837 F.3d at 369 (quoting Restat 2d of Contracts, § 317 cmt (c)). See In re Fine Paper Litig., 632 F.2d at 1090 ("[a]lthough the common law did not favor the assignment of causes of action, by and large that attitude has been overcome."). See also Am. Orthopedic & Sports Med., 890 F.3d at 453 (quoting City of Hope Nat'l Med. Ctr. v. Healthplus, Inc., 156 F.3d 223, 229 \(1st Cir. 1998\)) (holding that statutory causes of action are encompassed by non-assignment provisions when it joined "an overwhelming consensus among Courts of Appeals that 'ERISA leaves the assignability or non-assignability of [statutory rights] under ERISA-regulated welfare plans to the negotiations of the contracting parties.'").

Here, we agree with Defendants that New Jersey law, not federal common law applies to the assignment issue in this case. Plaintiffs' argument that federal common law preempts even an invalid assignment is not supported by Third Circuit law. Wallach and Gulfstream, holding that antitrust claims [**15] are assignable under federal common law, apply to valid assignments only. Here, there is no valid assignment. The anti-assignment provisions in the distributor Agreements between Wholesalers (direct purchasers) and Defendants (drug manufacturer) clearly manifested an intent to prohibit assignment of any rights or obligations under the Agreements without the consent of either party; indeed, the provisions specified that assignments in violation of the provisions would be void. Wholesalers violated these provisions by purporting to assign their rights under the Agreements to Retailer Plaintiffs, without Defendants' consent. We agree with Defendants that "neither Wallach, nor Gulfstream, nor In re Fine Paper Litig. (none of which addresses anti-assignment provisions affecting statutory causes of action in the antitrust context) supports the notion that the 'federal common law' of antitrust assignment instruments overrides an anti-assignment clause in the underlying sales contract that is valid as a matter of state law." Def. Rep. Br. at 12.

[*624] Finally, the Third Circuit has adopted the "plain meaning" approach to whether statutory claims are encompassed within the scope of a non-assignment [**16] provision prohibiting assignment of "rights" under a contract. Here, Plaintiffs try to advance the argument rejected by the First Circuit in City of Hope (whose reasoning the Third Circuit adopted in American Orthopedic), "[i]n effect, [that we] read into ERISA's allowance for the assignability of ERISA-regulated welfare plan benefits a bar to the contractual non-assignability of such benefits." City of Hope Nat'l Med. Ctr., 156 F.3d at 229. Similarly here, Plaintiffs ask us to read into federal common law's allowance for assignability of antitrust claims a bar to the contractual non-assignability of those claims.

Yet, there is no federal common law, nor New Jersey state contract law, nor grounding in the Restatement, to support this view. The First Circuit has held and the Third Circuit has concurred that limiting non-assignment provisions so that they do not pertain to "causes of action" ("as distinguished from 'rights or benefits'") "would strain the plain meaning of the contract language at issue in this case." Id. at 229. We agree. To read the anti-assignment provisions here, which clearly prohibit assignment of "this agreement or any of its rights or obligations under this agreement . . . without the prior written consent" (Exs. A [**17] and B §§4.4) (emphasis added), to limit "rights" as distinguished from "causes of action," would "strain the plain meaning" of the contract. See Wallach v. Eaton Corp., 837 F.3d at 369 (noting that "a distinction" between 'rights' under a contract and 'causes of action' arising by virtue of the existence of the contract has been abandoned by the Restatement, §317, and by the Third Circuit.).

Extending this reasoning to non-assignment clauses in the context of statutory ERISA claims, the Third Circuit has recently held that "anti-assignment clauses in ERISA-governed health insurance plans as a general matter are enforceable." Am. Orthopedic & Sports Med. v. Indep. Blue Cross Blue Shield, 890 F.3d 445, 453 (3d Cir. 2018). Plaintiffs argue that American Orthopedic applies only within the ERISA context and only where the statutory claims "aris[e] out of the insurers' breach of the insurance contract, not [to] antitrust claims based on an 'extrinsic legal regime' unrelated to the rights and obligations created by the distribution agreement." Pl. Br. at 17 (citing Hartig Drug, 836 F.3d at 275 n.17). Although the anti-assignment provision in Hartig arises in the antitrust context, while American Orthopedic addresses anti-assignment clauses in the ERISA context, the anti-assignment language in Hartig differs from the anti-assignment language here.

The Hartig anti-assignment clause [**18] states, "[t]his Agreement may not be assigned by either party without the prior written consent of the other party. Notwithstanding the forgoing, either party may assign its rights and obligations hereunder without the consent of the other party to a subsidiary or affiliate . . . ." 836 F.3d at 275 (emphasis added). Here, by contrast, the assignment provisions state, "neither party may assign. . . this agreement or any of its rights or obligations under this agreement . . . without the prior written consent of the other party," Exs. A and B §§4.4 (emphasis added). Thus, the anti-assignment provision in Hartig prohibits assignment only of the Agreement, while the anti-assignment provision here clearly and specifically prohibits assignment of "rights" under the Agreement without consent of the other contracting party.

[*625] We find Plaintiffs' argument that the non-assignment provisions here do not encompass rights to bring statutory causes of action untenable. Without the assignment of Wholesalers' rights under the Agreements, Plaintiffs would have no basis from which to assert the Wholesalers' claim for overcharges on purchases of Remicade. Thus, Plaintiffs' antitrust claims flow from the purported assignment [**19] of Wholesalers' rights. Therefore, we find that there is no genuine dispute that Plaintiffs' allegations of anticompetitive overcharges for Remicade (Compl. ¶¶ 1, 60-61) are "assignment-based claims." Def. Br. at 10. Accordingly, New Jersey law applies when interpreting the anti-assignment provisions of the Agreements. See Hartig Drug, 836 F.3d at 274.

C. Applying New Jersey Law to the Anti-Assignment Provisions

Defendants argue that under New Jersey law, the anti-assignment agreement invalidates Wholesalers' assignment of their rights under the agreement, since Defendants did not consent. We agree with Defendants and grant summary judgment on the grounds that it is beyond reasonable dispute that the anti-assignment provision manifested the parties' intent to prohibit assignment of rights under the Agreement, including antitrust causes of action.

375 F. Supp. 3d 616, *6251 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50206, **19

Where an anti-assignment provision unambiguously expresses the clear intent to prohibit assignment of "rights" under a contract, New Jersey law will enforce the provision. See Torpey v. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Tex., Civil Action No. 12-cv-7618 (JAP), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11412 (D.N.J. Jan. 30, 2014) (holding that "where a plan contains an anti-assignment provision, the provision is enforceable and the assignment is ineffectual."). [**20] For rights to "to 'arise under' an agreement, a claim [based on those rights] need not be identifiable as an issue explicitly covered by the agreement, but merely must be engendered by virtue of the relationship the agreement established." *Am. Fin. Capital Corp. v. Princeton Elecs. Prods., No. 95-4568, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3412, at *27-28 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 19, 1996)* (citing Becker Autoradio U.S.A., Inc. v. Becker Autoradiowerk GmbH, 585 F.2d 39 (3d Cir. 1978)).

"As a general rule of law, where the parties' intent is clear, courts will enforce non-assignment provisions." Davidowitz v. Delta Dental Plan of Cal., Inc., 946 F.2d 1476, 1478 (9th Cir. 1991). See *Med-X Glob., LLC v. Azimuth Risk Sols., LLC, No. 17-13086, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60543 at *6 (D.N.J. Apr. 10, 2018)* (quoting Somerset Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Horizon Blue Cross & Blue Shield of N.J., 345 N.J. Super. 410, 415, 785 A.2d 457 (Super. Ct. App. Div. 2001)) ("[a]nti-assignment provisions are generally enforceable under contract law, derived from a contracting party's freedom to place restraints on alienation.").

New Jersey courts interpreting assignment provisions apply the Restatement. See Somerset Orthopedic Assocs., P.A., 345 N.J. Super. at 415. Indeed, the New Jersey Supreme Court held in Owen that §322 of the Restatement "embodies the general, now-majority rule that contractual provisions prohibiting or limiting assignments operate only to limit the parties' right to assign the contract, but not their power to assign, unless the parties manifest with specificity an intent to the contrary." Owen v. CNA Ins/Cont'l Cas. Co., 167 N.J. 450, 771 A.2d 1208, 1214 (N.J. 2001) (citing Restat 2d of Contracts, § 322 (2nd 1981)). Thus, as the court held in Somerset, "[w]here a contract uses specific and express language [*626] sufficiently manifesting an intention to prohibit the power of assignment without the consent of one or more of the contracting parties, [**21] courts generally uphold these contractual anti-assignment clauses." Somerset Orthopedic Assocs., P.A., 345 N.J. Super. at 415. To manifest an intent to limit a party's power to assign, thereby making an assignment without consent of the other party void, "the non-assignment provision generally must state that non-conforming assignments (i) shall be 'void' or 'invalid,' or (ii) that the assignee shall acquire no rights or the non-assigning party shall not recognize any such assignment." Id.

Plaintiffs argue that the anti-assignment provisions in the Agreements do not encompass their "rights" to bring statutory antitrust claims, citing district court opinions, none from the Third Circuit, in support. Yet, in United Food & Commer. Workers Local 1776 v. Teikoku Pharma United States, Inc., No. 14-md-02521-WHO, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94220 (N.D. Cal. July 17, 2015) ("Lidoderm"); In re TFT-LCD Antitrust Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88723, 2011 WL 3475408 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 9, 2011) ("Flat Panel"); and Meijer, Inc. v. Barr Pharms., Inc., 572 F. Supp. 2d 38 (D.D.C. 2008), where district courts found that statutory causes of action for antitrust violations were beyond the scope of non-assignment provisions, the non-assignment clauses "[were] limited to the assignment of duties and obligations under the [distributor agreements] themselves." *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94220 at *43*. The provisions here were not so limited.

The anti-assignment provision in Lidoderm "[did] not clearly prevent wholesalers from assigning [**22] claims arising out of antitrust law." *2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94220 at *42*. Here, by contrast, the non-assignment provisions here do meet the standard for clear and specific manifestation of an intent to limit a party's power to assign. In Owen, the New Jersey Supreme Court considered a broad anti-assignment provision stating, "...the aforesaid deferred lump sum payments shall not be subject to assignment. . ." 771 A.2d at 1218. And the Court viewed the provision's broad language as "merely. . .a covenant not to assign. [Because] [i]t contains no specific prohibition on the power to make an assignment, and it does not specifically state that the assignments are 'void.'" Id. (quoting Bel-Ray, supra, 181 F.3d at 442). In this case, by contrast, the assignment provisions clearly state, "neither party may assign. . .this agreement or any of its rights or obligations under this agreement. . .without the prior written consent of the other party. . . .Any purported assignment in violation of this section will be void." Exs. A and B §§4.4 (emphasis added). Thus, under New Jersey law interpreting anti-assignment provisions, we find it is beyond genuine dispute that the anti-assignment provisions here manifested a clear intent to prohibit assigning rights under the Agreements [**23] without the parties' consent and expressly indicated such assignments would be void.

Plaintiffs angle for yet another view, arguing that statutory antitrust claims are not contemplated by language in the assignment provision barring assignment of "rights." Yet New Jersey courts have not treated statutory antitrust claims as exempted from a clear and specific non-assignment provision. In this case, the Wholesalers' rights to recover antitrust damages against Defendants, although statutory in nature, exist "by virtue of the relationship,' established by the Agreements—indeed, 'there is no context other than [those] preexisting contractual relationship[s] in which [those rights] could have arisen.'" Def. Br. at 11 (quoting *Am. I*6271 Fin. Capital Corp. v. Princeton Elecs. Prods.*, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3412, at *27-28). Thus, we find there is no reasonable dispute that the anti-assignment provisions here encompass Plaintiffs' antitrust claims because their claims exist by virtue of the Agreements and that the assignments of "rights" under the Agreements, without consent of Defendants, are void. Therefore, there is no genuine dispute that Plaintiffs' antitrust claims, which they assert by virtue of void assignments, are barred.

D. Plaintiffs' Unassigned Claims

Plaintiffs "do not dispute [**24] that their purchases of Remicade were indirect." Pl. Opp. at 9. Accordingly, any claim for overcharges on purchases of Remicade by Plaintiffs arose through the unauthorized assignment by Wholesalers of rights under their distributor Agreements. These assignment-based antitrust claims, grounded in invalid assignments, cannot proceed.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment is GRANTED. An appropriate Order will follow.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 25th day of March, 2019 upon consideration of Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 50), Plaintiffs' Opposition thereto (Doc. No. 54), Defendants' Reply in Support thereof (Doc. No. 56), and Plaintiffs' Sur-reply thereto (Doc. No. 57), it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

1. Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment is GRANTED;
2. Judgment shall be entered in favor of Defendants and against Plaintiffs on all counts contained in Plaintiffs' Complaint.

BY THE COURT:

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

WILLIAM E. SMITH, Chief Judge.

Before the Court are the parties' cross motions for summary judgment. Defendants Alcor Scientific Inc. and Francesco Frappa seek summary judgment on Counts I, II and IV of Plaintiff Alifax Holding SpA's Second Amended and Supplemental Complaint and Counts I and II of the Defendants' Amended Counterclaim (ECF Nos. 142, 143). Alifax moves for summary judgment on Count III of the Amended [*2] Counterclaim (ECF Nos. 159, 166). The Court has closely reviewed this action's voluminous and complex record. After careful consideration, and as set forth herein, the Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment is DENIED, and Plaintiff's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment is GRANTED.

I. Background

Alifax is an Italian corporation that develops and produces clinical diagnostic instruments.<sup>1</sup> Pl.'s Statement of Disputed Facts ("PSDF") ¶ 3, ECF No. 167; see also Second Am. & Suppl. Compl. ¶ 1, ECF No. 68. Among Alifax's products are instruments known as erythrocyte sedimentation rate ("ESR") analyzers. ESR measures how quickly red blood cells (erythrocytes) descend and sediment in a patient blood sample and is commonly considered to detect nonspecific inflammation. PSDF ¶¶ 13-14. Whereas the traditional way of calculating ESR — the Westergren method — requires one to two hours of testing, Alifax's instruments produce an ESR value in under one minute. See id.; Pl.'s Statement of Additional Disputed Facts ("PSADF") ¶ 1, ECF No. 176-2; Defs.' Resp. to Pl.'s Statement of Undisputed Facts ("DSDF") ¶ 20, ECF No. 170-4.

Alifax holds two patents [*3] pertaining to ESR measurement. PSDF ¶¶ 6, 10, 12. U.S. Patent No. 6,632,679 ("679 Patent") protects a diagnostic method for quickly measuring a blood sample's ESR. See Second Am. & Suppl. Compl. Ex. A, ECF No. 68-1. U.S. Patent No. 7,005,107 ("107 Patent") covers the apparatus designed to carry out the patented method. See id. at Ex. B. The Court issued its claim construction ruling concerning these patents in April 2014. See Alifax Holding SpA v. Alcor Sci. Inc. (Alifax I), No. CV 14-440 S, 2017 WL 1533430, at *1 (D.R.I. Apr. 27, 2017).

Defendant Francesco Frappa is another principal player. It is unnecessary to repeat Frappa's personal history with Alifax and its former subsidiary, Sire Analytical S.r.l., in detail here.<sup>2</sup> See Alifax Holding SpA v. Alcor Sci. Inc. (Alifax II), No. CV 14-440 WES, 2019 WL 317638, at *1-3 (D.R.I. Jan. 8, 2019). It is enough to understand that Sire employed Frappa for nearly a decade and that his duties included hardware and software development as well as work on Alifax's ESR analyzers, including the development of a plastic capillary photometer sensor. See id. at *1-2; DSDF ¶ 24; Galiano Aff. ¶ 13, ECF No. 162. Frappa departed Alifax in late 2011 and [*4] by May 2012 was working with Rhode Island-based competitor Alcor on that company's ESR instrument. Alifax II, 2019 WL 317638, at *2; see also PSDF ¶ 1. Before leaving, Frappa forwarded certain information concerning an "anemia factor" and myeloma from his Sire email account to a personal account. Alifax II, 2019 WL 317638, at *2; Defs.' Resp. to Pl.'s Statement of Additional Undisputed Facts ("DSADF") ¶¶ 168-70, ECF No. 171-6.

Within a year of Frappa's arrival, Alcor began promoting and producing its own ESR analyzer: the iSED. See Second Am. & Suppl. Compl. ¶ 43; Defs.' Ans. to Pl.'s Second & Suppl. Am. Compl. & First Am. Countercl. ("Ans.") ¶ 43, ECF No. 71. The iSED applies the principles of syllectrometry and — like Alifax's analyzers — produces an ESR value in just twenty seconds. See PSDF ¶¶ 37, 55; DSADF ¶ 147; Ans. ¶ 43. In layman's terms, the iSED detects changes in optical density as light passes through a blood sample. Blood is pumped through the device's light-measuring component, the flow is abruptly stopped, and red blood cells begin to aggregate. See PSDF ¶¶ 21, 57; DSADF ¶ 140. As aggregation occurs, the device processes the changing optical density data. [*5] See PSDF ¶¶ 21, 57; DSADF ¶ 140. The graphical depiction of this data (the transmittance of light over time) yields a characteristic shape known as a syllectogram:

<sup>2</sup> Over the course of this litigation Sire merged completely into Alifax. See Alifax II, 2019 WL 317638, at *1 n.3. Unless otherwise noted, the Court refers herein to both entities simply as "Alifax."

See PSDF ¶¶ 21, 23, 57. Alcor describes the area under the syllectogram's curve (the diagram's shaded portion) as the sample's "aggregation index." Id. ¶¶ 23, 57. The aggregation index can be correlated to reference values from traditional Westergren tests to determine a blood sample's ESR.<sup>3</sup> Id. ¶ 57. It is undisputed that the iSED does not expressly measure, record, or report any measurement for the viscosity, elasticity, or density of blood. Id. ¶¶ 46-54.

Optical density measurements are converted to an ESR value by an algorithm contained in the iSED's software. See id. ¶ 128. Like most computer programs, this software evolved over time. Id. ¶¶ 127-130. It is undisputed, however, that at some early (but as-yet undefined) stage of development the iSED software's source code included in its conversion algorithm the same unusual numerical constants (2.2, 1000, -3 and ^1.9) used in the code for Alifax's ESR analyzers. See id. ¶¶ 124-25, 127; DSADF ¶ 167. This specific software iteration was labeled "Version 104A."<sup>4</sup> See PSDF ¶ [*6] 127. Alcor contends that the edition of Version 104A containing the Alifax constants was a "pre-production version that never shipped in any functional iSED machine." Defs.' Mem. In Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J. ("Defs.' Mem.") 25-26, ECF No. 142-1. It is undisputed, however, that Alcor sold at least some iSED units to customers with software identified as "Version 104A" installed.<sup>5</sup> See DSADF ¶¶ 175-177.

In the midst of this litigation, Alifax filed three copyright registration applications. See PSDF ¶¶ 111-114. These three applications matured into copyright registrations. See id. The copyrights cover source code and other materials, including its conversion algorithm and constants, that Alifax alleges it uses in its ESR analyzers. Second Am. & Suppl. Compl. ¶ 78.

II. Legal Standard

In the crucible of summary judgment, the Court must assay the parties' evidence "to ascertain whether a need for trial exists." Theriault, 890 F.3d at 348. A trial may be averted if a movant shows "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Garcia-Garcia v. Costco Wholesale Corp., 878 F.3d 411, 417 (1st Cir. 2017) (quoting [*7] Ameen v. Amphenal Printed Circuits, Inc., 777, F.3d 63, 69 (1st Cir. 2015)) (quotation marks omitted); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. A fact is "[m]aterial" if it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Audette v. Town of Plymouth, 858 F.3d 13, 19-20 (1st Cir. 2017) (quoting Mulloy v. Acushnet Co., 460 F.3d 141, 145 (1st Cir. 2006)). A dispute is "genuine" if "there is evidence that would allow a reasonable jury to find for the non-moving party." Id. at 20. A court may consider the entire factual record in making these decisions. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

A nonmovant can withstand the scrutiny of summary judgment by producing "definite, competent evidence" of a genuinely disputed material fact of such probative force that, "if it is credited, a factfinder could resolve the case in favor of the nonmovant." Murray v. Kindred Nursing Ctrs. W. LLC, 789 F.3d 20, 25 (1st Cir. 2015) (quotation marks omitted). An examining court is obliged to construe the record "in the light most hospitable to the nonmoving party" and to draw "all reasonable inferences in that party's favor." Theriault, 890 F.3d at 348 (quotation marks omitted). A nonmovant cannot, however, rely on bald assertions, [*8] improbable inferences, or unsupported speculation to preserve its claims for trial. Garcia-Garcia, 878 F.3d at 417.

III. Discussion

A. Alcor's Motion for Summary Judgment

---

<sup>4</sup> The parties refer to the disputed code as both "Version 104A" and "Version 1.04A." For consistency, the Court will use the former.

<sup>5</sup> As further explained herein, the record shows that the Version 104A identifier may have been used for multiple early iterations of code, only one or some of which may have contained Alifax's purportedly proprietary constants. See, e.g., DSADF ¶¶ 175-182; Frappa Decl. ¶ 3, ECF No. 171-7; Defs.' Mem. 25-26. Even a cursory review of the docket for this action reveals that source code related discovery has been fraught. Such discovery has continued for months after the parties filed their dispositive motions. The Court's conclusions herein, however, are based solely on the record as it existed when the parties' filed their motions.

Alifax characterizes the Defendants' motion as a "blunderbuss." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. for Partial Summ. J. ("Pl.'s Opp'n") 1, ECF No. 167. The description is apt. The Defendants seek a favorable judgment on almost every claim in this action: patent infringement, invalidity, trade secret misappropriation, and copyright infringement. The Court considers these claims one by one.

1. Patent Infringement

Alifax alleges that the iSED infringes on claims 1-3, 6, and 8 of the '679 Patent and claims 1, 2, and 4-6 of the '107 Patent.<sup>6</sup> See PSDF ¶¶ 4, 8; Pl.'s First Supp. Disclosure of Asserted Claims and Infringement Contentions 1, ECF No. 145-2. Infringement allegations require a two-part analysis. See Playtex Prods., Inc. v. Procter & Gamble Co., 400 F.3d 901, 905-06 (Fed. Cir. 2005). First, the Court must interpret the scope and meaning of the asserted patent claims. Id. The Court's claim construction ruling for this action is memorialized in Alifax I, 2017 WL 1533430, at *1 (D.R.I. Apr. 27, 2017). Second, the "properly [*9] construed claims" must be compared "to the allegedly infringing device." Playtex Prods., 400 F.3d at 906. That is the task at hand. Alcor can only prevail on its motion if such a comparison shows that "on the correct claim construction, no reasonable jury could [find] infringement on the undisputed facts or when all reasonable factual inferences are drawn in favor of [Alifax]." Netword, LLC v. Centraal Corp., 242 F.3d 1347, 1353 (Fed. Cir. 2001).

At trial, Alifax has the burden of showing that the iSED meets each claim limitation of the '679 and '107 patents, either literally or under the doctrine of equivalents. Playtex Prod., 400 F.3d at 906 (Fed. Cir. 2005); Intelllicall, Inc. v. Phonometrics, Inc., 952 F.2d 1384, 1389 (Fed. Cir. 1992) ("[I]nfringement requires that every limitation of a claim be met literally or by a substantial equivalent.") These are factual inquiries. DePuy Spine, Inc. v. Medtronic Sofamor Danek, Inc., 469 F.3d 1005, 1013 (Fed. Cir. 2006). And genuinely disputed factual issues are not appropriate for resolution on summary judgment. Thus, the Court is mindful of the Federal Circuit's admonition to take "great care" when weighing summary judgment on an infringement [*10] claim. Cole v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., 102 F.3d 524, 528 (Fed. Cir. 1996); see also D.M.I., Inc. v. Deere & Co., 755 F.2d 1570, 1573 (Fed. Cir. 1985) ("[A] motion for summary judgment of infringement or noninfringement should be approached with a care proportioned to the likelihood of its being inappropriate.").

Concerning the '679 Patent, the Court has construed the limitation from the asserted claims "processed to obtain said speed of sedimentation, viscosity, elasticity and density" to mean "processing the acquired optical density or absorbance data to obtain the speed of sedimentation, viscosity, elasticity and density." Alifax I, 2017 WL 1533430, at *5 (emphasis added). The Court has similarly construed the limitation "determine[ing] the speed of sedimentation, viscosity, elasticity and density" of the asserted claims in the '107 Patent to mean "processing the acquired optical density or absorbance data to obtain the speed of sedimentation, viscosity, elasticity and density, by comparing the data with numerical constants stored in the memory of a processing unit." Id. at 6 (emphasis added).

"Obtaining a parameter in the context of the patents-in-suit," Alcor argues, "means obtaining [*11] a numerical value for that parameter." Defs.' Reply in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. ("Defs.' Reply") 5, ECF No. 171-2. It is undisputed that the iSED does not measure, record, or report any measurement for the viscosity, elasticity, or density of blood. PSDF ¶¶ 46-54. Thus, Alcor reasons that the iSED does not "obtain" these parameters and does not infringe on either patent. Defs.' Mem. 11. There is a good measure of logical appeal in this argument. It depends, however, upon reading limitations into the claims that do not exist. None of the asserted claims, as construed by the Court, include the limitation that the iSED measures, calculates, records, reports, or obtains a "numerical value" for the parameters of viscosity, elasticity, and density of blood. See Alifax I, 2017 WL 1533430, at *5-6. The Court's claim construction simply does not support Alcor's argument.

How then might the iSED "obtain" the viscosity, elasticity, and density of a blood sample? Alifax's expert, Dr. Brian Bergeron, provides an answer that is at least plausible, if oblique. He opines that the "correlated parameters" (viscosity, elasticity, and density) are a "function of data obtained from the [iSED's] optical [*12] density readings"; thus by processing optical density measurement data the iSED "obtains the correlated parameters." Expert Report of Brian Bergeron, M.D. ("Bergeron Report") ¶ 21, ECF No. 144-11; DSADF ¶¶ 140-142; see also Pl.'s Opp'n 4. He also purports to explain how these three parameters are functions of optical density data in his sworn report. Bergeron Report ¶ 21. The Court's observation that "the [679 Patent's] specification informs that the viscosity, elasticity, and density of the blood sample are parameters that are considered correlated to the speed of sedimentation of the blood sample" accords with the substance of Dr. Bergeron's proposed conclusion. Alifax I, 2017 WL 1533430, at *5.

Alcor and its expert reject this rationale and criticize Dr. Bergeron's conclusions. See, e.g., Kyotmaa Decl. ¶¶ 9-12, ECF No. 171-5; Defs.' Reply 5. But Alcor has not moved to exclude Dr. Bergeron's opinions under Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579 (1993), or its progeny. His sworn conclusions are supported by articulated facts and reasoning; the Court has no basis to find that he is unqualified to provide such opinions. See Hayes v. Douglas Dynamics, Inc., 8 F.3d [*13] 88, 92 (1st Cir. 1993) (holding that to defeat summary judgment an expert affidavit must "include the factual basis and the process of reasoning which makes the conclusion viable"); Garside v. Osco Drug, Inc., 895 F.2d 46, 50 (1st Cir. 1990) (holding "[e]xpert opinion is admissible and may defeat summary judgment" so long as "it appears that the affiant is competent to give an expert opinion." (emphasis omitted)). At this juncture Alifax is entitled to the benefit of all reasonable inferences. Theriault, 890 F.3d at 348. And it is the function of the finder of fact at trial, not the Court at summary judgement, to resolve such evidentiary conflicts. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249 (1986); Scripps Clinic & Research Found. v. Genentech, Inc., 927 F.2d 1565, 1581 (Fed. Cir. 1991) (reversing summary judgment of infringement based on existence of disputed "questions of scientific and evidentiary fact"), overruled on other grounds by Abbott Labs. v. Sandoz, Inc., 566 F.3d 1282, 1293 (Fed. Cir. 2009). Consequently, the Court finds that summary judgment is precluded on the issue of non-infringement. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a).

2. Patent Invalidity

Alcor also seeks summary judgement [*14] on Counts I and II of the Defendants' Counterclaim.<sup>7</sup> Countercl. ¶¶ 39-42. It calls on the Court to declare the '679 and '107 patents invalid because their common specification fails to satisfy the written description and enablement requirements under 35 U.S.C. § 112.<sup>8</sup> Defs.' Mem. 12. Both arguments fail for the same reason: these requirements are measured by an objective standard, and a material dispute exists concerning the knowledge, training, and experience of a "person of ordinary skill in the art."

Succeeding on a claim of invalidity under Rule 56 is an uphill battle. Schumer v. Lab. Computer Sys., Inc., 308 F.3d 1304, 1316 (Fed. Cir. 2002) ("The burden of proving invalidity on summary judgment is high."). Patents are presumed valid. 35 U.S.C. § 282. This presumption can only be overcome if a challenging party produces "such clear and convincing evidence . . . that no reasonable jury could find otherwise." Eli Lilly & Co. v. Barr Lab., Inc., 251 F.3d 955, 962 (Fed. Cir. 2001); see also High Concrete Structures, Inc. v. New Enter. Stone & Lime Co., Inc., 377 F.3d 1379, 1382 (Fed. Cir. 2004). Again, "all justifiable inferences" must be drawn in favor of Alifax. See Schumer, 308 F.3d [*15] at 1315.

The written description and enablement requirements are two distinct prerequisites mandated by 35 U.S.C. § 112. See Ariad Pharm., Inc. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 598 F.3d 1336, 1340 (Fed. Cir. 2010). The written description requirement "is part of the quid pro quo of the patent grant and ensures that the public receives a meaningful disclosure in exchange for being excluded from practicing an invention for a period of time." Ariad Pharm., 598 F.3d at 1354. A description suffices if "the disclosure . . . reasonably conveys to those skilled in the art that the inventor had possession of the claimed subject matter as of the filing date." Id. at 1351. Answering this factual question "requires an objective inquiry . . . from the perspective of a person of ordinary skill in the art." Id. As for § 112's second requirement, a specification is "enabled" if "one skilled in the art, after reading the specification, could practice the claimed invention without undue experimentation." See AK Steel Corp. v. Sollac, 344 F.3d 1234, 1244 (Fed. Cir. 2003). Thus, with respect to both requirements, the patents must be scrutinized from an objective point of view — that is, from the perspective of a "person [*16] of ordinary skill in the art." See Ariad Pharm., 598 F.3d at 1354; Nat'l Recovery Techs., Inc. v. Magnetic Separation Sys., Inc., 166 F.3d 1190, 1196 (Fed. Cir. 1999) ("[W]ith respect to enablement the relevant inquiry lies in the relationship between the specification, the claims, and the knowledge of one of ordinary skill in the art."); In re Vaeck, 947 F.2d 488, 496 n.23 (Fed. Cir. 1991) ("The first paragraph of § 112 requires nothing more than objective enablement.").

<sup>7</sup> As the Defendants correctly note, an invalid patent cannot be infringed, thus granting summary judgment on Counts I and II of its Counterclaim would be an alternative basis to grant summary judgment in its favor on Count I of Alifax's Second Amended and Supplemental Complaint. Defs.' Mem. 17.

This common denominator is Alcor's stumbling block. Alcor's expert, Dr. Harri Kytomaa, opines on one hand that a "person having ordinary skill in the art" would have "a bachelor's degree [in] mechanical engineering or a related field" or no degree whatsoever but "at least five years of experience . . . in medical devices . . ." Pl.'s Statement of Additional Undisputed Facts ("PSAUF") Ex. U, Kytomaa Dep. at 42:11-43:9, ECF No. 167. Dr. Bergeron, on the other hand, opines that such a person would have:

a Ph.D. in a field related to medical diagnostic testing, or an M.D. and at least three years of training or experience developing or using medical diagnostic devices, or an M.S. in a field related to medical diagnostic [*17] testing and at least five years of training or experience developing or using medical diagnostic devices.

Id. at Ex. F, Bergeron Rebuttal Report ¶ 22. These differences are material. "[I]f there is conflicting evidence as to what one of ordinary skill in the art would have known," a multitude of courts have found, "resolution of that conflict is not appropriate on a motion for summary judgment." Scanner Techs. Corp. v. Icos Vision Sys. Corp., N.V., 253 F. Supp. 2d 624, 633 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (quotation marks omitted) (denying summary judgment on written description and enablement issues); see also Am. Tech. Ceramics Corp. v. Presidio Components, Inc., No. 14-CV-6544(KAM)(GRB), 2018 WL 1525686, at *15 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 27, 2018) (finding conflict between expert opinions "alone creates a disputed issue of material fact as to the sufficiency of the written description because a reasonable finder of fact could conclude . . . that defendant cannot prove indefiniteness by clear and convincing evidence"); Intellectual Ventures I, LLC v. Canon Inc., 143 F. Supp. 3d 143, 178 (D. Del. 2015) ("The disagreement between the experts on whether one of ordinary skill could practice the invention without [*18] undue experimentation and whether the inventors had possession of the invention present genuine disputes of material fact better left to the province of the jury.").<sup>9</sup>

3. Trade Secret Misappropriation

Alifax alleges that the Defendants misappropriated three trade secrets in violation of R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-41-1 et seq., the Rhode Island Uniform Trade Secrets Act ("RIUTSA"): (1) the use of a plastic capillary photometer sensor ("CPS") in an automated ESR analyzer; (2) software and firmware concerning the acquisition and conversion of photometric measurements to an ESR value; and (3) certain information concerning myeloma and an "anemia factor." See generally Pl.'s Opp'n 12-20. Under RIUTSA, a "trade secret" is defined as:

- [I]nformation, including a formula, pattern, compilation, program, device, method, technique, or process, that:
  - (i) Derives independent economic value, actual or potential, from not being generally known to, and not being readily ascertainable by proper means by, other persons who can obtain economic value from its disclosure or use; and
  - (ii) Is the subject of efforts that are reasonable under the circumstances to maintain its secrecy.

R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-41-1(4). Misappropriation [*19] includes the acquisition of a trade secret "by a person who knows or has reason to know that the trade secret was acquired by improper means." Id. § 6-41-1(2)(i). "Improper means" are in turn defined as "theft, bribery, misrepresentation, breach or inducement of a breach of a duty to maintain secrecy, or espionage through electronic or other means." Id. § 6-41-1(1). RIUTSA also prohibits disclosure or use of another's trade secret without consent by a person who (1) used "improper means" to acquire it, or (2) "knew or had reason to know" that the trade secret was "[d]erived from or through a person who owed a duty to the person seeking relief to maintain its secrecy." Id. § 6-41-1(2)(ii)(B).

i. The Capillary Photometer Sensor

The Defendants argue that because "[c]lear, plastic photometers used to measure properties of fluids have been on the market for decades," Alcor's particular use of a plastic CPS is "generally known" and not protectable under RIUTSA. Defs.' Mem. 19. The Defendants also repeatedly fault Alifax for failing to produce an expert who opines that the CPS constitutes a trade secret. Id. at 18. The Court is unpersuaded by these arguments.

Alifax's alleged trade secret is [*20] not, as Alcor describes it, the generic use of a plastic CPS to "measure properties of fluids." Id. at 19. It is narrower: the use of a plastic CPS "in an automated system that takes photometric readings of a blood sample in a capillary tube following the stoppage of a pump—in other words, as part of an automated ESR analyzer."<sup>10</sup> Pl.'s Opp'n 13; see also Pl.'s Second Am. Identification of Misappropriated Trade Secrets ¶ 1, ECF No. 137-27(describing CPS trade secret as "[u]sing a plastic capillary photometer sensor . . . as the place where photometric measurements are taken to be used in the calculation of erythrocyte sedimentation rate ("ESR") and related parameters"). The "generally known" use of a plastic CPS in other fluid-measurement applications does not, in and of itself, vitiate this contention. As the Second Circuit held in its oft-cited ruling in Imperial Chem. Indus. Ltd. v. Nat'l Distillers & Chem. Corp., 342 F.2d 737, 742 (2d Cir. 1965), "a trade secret can exist in a combination of characteristics and components, each of which, by itself, is in the public domain, but the unified process, design and operation of which, in unique combination, affords a competitive advantage [*21] and is a protectable secret." See also Water Servs., Inc. v. Tesco Chems., Inc., 410 F.2d 163, 173 (5th Cir. 1969) (holding protectable trade secret consisted of "the application of known techniques and the assembly of available components to create the first successful system in the industry").

Alifax's marshalling of the evidence showing that its use of a plastic CPS in an ESR analyzer was not generally known, and thus had some independent economic value, is relatively anemic. The Court has nevertheless parsed the record and concludes that — drawing, as it must, all reasonable inferences in Alifax's favor — a juror could reasonably find that its use of a plastic CPS as a component of its automated ESR analyzer constituted a trade secret. It is undisputed that the plastic CPS was intended to remedy variables in the optical path created when Teflon tubing was used for the reading chamber. PSDF ¶ 86. Although the record before the Court is meager, Alifax's officers testified that the company "invented capillary photometry" and that its application of the CPS in this case was novel or new. See PSAUF Ex. J, Galiano Dep. at 9:3-19; DSUF Ex. 24, Spezzotti Dep., at 148:5-20. It is undisputed [*22] that Frappa was Alifax's Senior Manager of hardware and software/firmware design, and Alifax contends that he worked on the CPS project — codenamed "Mecca" — before his departure from Alifax. DSDF ¶ 24; Galiano Aff. ¶ 13. In particular, Frappa worked on a detailed internal report on the development and testing of a plastic reading cell. See PSAUF Ex. I; DSADF ¶ 162.<sup>11</sup>

Despite the Defendants' suggestion to the contrary, expert testimony is not required to show the existence of a trade secret.<sup>12</sup> Such a determination is made "on a case-by-case basis, like any other case arising under any other area of law." BladeRoom Grp. Ltd. v. Emerson Elec. Co., 331 F. Supp. 3d 977, 982 (N.D. Cal. 2018). Trade secret misappropriation claims are commonly pursued without expert testimony. See, e.g., Bimbo Bakeries USA, Inc. v. Botticella, 613 F.3d 102, 110 (3rd Cir. 2010) (affirming order granting preliminary injunction where district court held, without noting reliance on any expert testimony, that recipe for English muffins constituted protectable trade

<sup>10</sup> Alifax has abandoned any claim that the Defendants misappropriated trade secrets concerning "the means of creating the capillary channel in the plastic block or the use of screws with Teflon washers to connect the block to the Teflon tubing." Pl.'s Opp'n 13 n.2.

<sup>11</sup> The Defendants argue, among other things, that Alifax has no evidence that the iSED "uses" the CPS trade secret it allegedly misappropriated. Use, however, is not required under RIUTSA. § 6-41-1(2)(i) (defining misappropriation to include acquisition by improper means).

secret as plaintiff "produce[d] bread 'from scratch'"); Patriot Rail Corp. v. Sierra R.R. Co., No. 2:09-cv-0009-TLN-AC, 2015 WL 4662720, at [*23] *6-8 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 5, 2015) (finding fact witness testimony and documents supported the jury's determination that trade secrets existed and were misappropriated); StrikePoint Trading, LLC v. Sabolyk, No. SA CV071073DOC(MLGx), 2011 WL 13187269, at *4 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 21, 2011) (affirming verdict as jury heard sufficient testimony about the amount of time, money, and labor plaintiff expended to develop and maintain its client list, as well as efforts to keep it secret); Henkel Corp. v. Cox, 386 F. Supp. 2d 898, 902 (E.D. Mich. 2005) (finding, without citing expert testimony, that formula for unreleased product had independent economic value and was a trade secret). Alifax's failure to proffer an expert opinion here is therefore not dispositive of its CPS-related trade secret claim.

ii. The Software/Firmware Trade Secrets

Alifax's claims of software and firmware trade secret misappropriation have dwindled over time. See Pl.'s Opp'n 15 n.3. The Court understands that only two such theories remain: the alleged misappropriation of (1) the "means of [optical] signal acquisition," and (2) the means of converting photometric measurements to an ESR value, i.e. the conversion algorithm and its [*24] "very unusual constants." See Mot. Hearing Tr. 32:17-33:19, Sept. 25, 2018 (describing remaining software/firmware trade secret claims); Pl.'s Opp'n 14-15.

Alcor presses a preemption defense to nullify both allegations. Section 301(a) of the Copyright Act provides that all state law causes of action that are substantively equivalent to a federal copyright infringement claim are preempted. 17 U.S.C. § 301(a); see also Data Gen. Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1164 (1st Cir. 1994), abrogated on other grounds by Reed Elsevier, Inc. v. Muchnick, 559 U.S. 154 (2010). However, "if a state cause of action requires an extra element, beyond mere copying, preparation of derivative works, performance, distribution or display, then the state cause of action is qualitatively different from, and not subsumed within, a copyright infringement claim and federal law will not preempt the state action." Data Gen. Corp., 36 F.3d at 1164 (quotation marks omitted).

The First Circuit is one of many courts that have rejected Alcor's argument. A claim of trade secret misappropriation under state law "that requires proof of a breach of a duty of confidentiality" is not preempted by the Copyright [*25] Act "because participation in the breach of a duty of confidentiality — an element that forms no part of a copyright infringement claim — represents unfair competitive conduct qualitatively different from mere unauthorized copying." Id. at 1165; accord GlobeRanger Corp. v. Software AG U.S., Inc., 836 F.3d 477, 486-87 (5th Cir. 2016) ("Because trade secret law protects against not just copying but also any taking that occurs through breach of a confidential relationship or other improper means, all ten circuits that have considered trade secret misappropriation claims have found them not preempted by the Copyright Act.") (and cases cited therein). The apparent inability of Alifax's Rule 30(b)(6) witness to articulate the factual distinctions between its trade secret and copyright infringement causes of action (Alcor's only support for this defense) is irrelevant. See Defs.' Mem. 23. In Alifax II, the Court found that Frappa owed Alifax "a post-employment duty of loyalty prohibiting the disclosure or use of Alifax's confidential or proprietary information in a manner that was likely to [injure] Alifax's business." Alifax II, 2019 WL 317638, at *11. Alifax alleges that, at a minimum, [*26] Alcor knew or had reason to know that Frappa owed such duties to Alifax. See Second Am. & Suppl. Compl. ¶¶ 64-65. The RIUTSA claim is thus not preempted.

Turning to the RIUTSA claims' substance, the Court finds that summary judgment is again inappropriate. The Court disagrees with the Defendants' assertion that Dr. Bergeron "conceded at deposition that acquiring a signal and converting the signal . . . is not a trade secret." Defs.' Mem. 20-21. Dr. Bergeron was asked whether the first sentence of Paragraph 45 of his report "is a trade secret."<sup>13</sup> PSAUF Ex. A, Bergeron Dep. at 94:18-20. His response — "[t]hat statement is not a trade secret as far as I know," id. at 94:21-22 — is hardly an ironclad admission. It is at best susceptible of multiple interpretations, including that the statement in his report was not a trade secret. In any event, Dr. Bergeron opines:

<sup>13</sup> The statement read: "Assuming that this signal could be acquired, one would then have to convert the signal data into a value that correlates with that of a standard or modified Westergren test." Bergeron Report ¶ 45, ECF No. 145-11.

[I]t was not generally known and would not have been readily ascertainable how to acquire signal data for a blood sample . . . . As one who designs and builds instruments, I expect that it would take a skilled engineer—but with no previous experience designing ESR analyzers based on stop-flow capillary technology—at least one entire [*27] month working full time just to program the signal acquisition feature of the instrument.

Bergeron Report ¶ 44; see also Bergeron Dep. at 89:1-18. As for whether converting optical signals to an ESR value could constitute a trade secret, Dr. Bergeron's report further belies Alcor's contention, even if it is inconsistent with other evidence. Bergeron Report ¶ 46 ("[A]n algorithm that would produce such commercially acceptable results was not generally known to or readily ascertainable by workers in the field using proper means.") The Court is not poised to resolve such disputes under Rule 56. See Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249; Scripps Clinic & Research Found., 927 F.2d at 1581.

The Defendants' additional argument is that Alifax's conversion algorithm and unique constants could not be used in the iSED device because "specific conversion parameters . . . are device dependent" is also unavailing. Defs.' Mem. 21. Assuming for argument's sake the validity of the Defendants' underlying proposition, this conclusion has no bearing on Alifax's misappropriation claim. It is undisputed that Alifax's conversion algorithm and constants (an alleged trade secret) were incorporated into some iteration of [*28] the source code for Version 104A of the iSED's software. See PSDF at ¶¶ 124-25, 127, 131; DSADF ¶ 167; see also DSADF Ex. B., Smith Decl. ¶¶ 5-6, ECF No. 171-11. A fact finder could therefore reasonably conclude that Alcor at least acquired this trade secret during the iSED's development. Acquisition by improper means, even without disclosure or use, is actionable under RIUTSA. See R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-41-1(2)(i).

iii. The Myeloma and Anemia Factor Information

There is uncontested evidence that Frappa sent information concerning myeloma and an "anemia factor" to a personal email account in the waning days of his employment with Alifax. See DSADF ¶ 168; PSAUF Ex. M, Frappa Dep. at 112:13-17. One email attached "a nice memo containing a condensate [sic] of known information available on the Internet" written by an Alifax employee concerning myeloma. Frappa Dep. at 113:5-11; DSADF ¶ 170; PSAUF Ex. N (myeloma email attachment). Another email attached a spreadsheet with "a substantial quantity of data" concerning an "anemia factor" related to tests on an ESR analyzer. Frappa Dep. at 106:21-111:3. As the Court has already explained, whether Frappa or Alcor disclosed or used this information [*29] to develop the iSED is not dispositive if it was allegedly acquired by "improper means." See R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-41-1(2)(i).

Alcor nevertheless casts doubt on whether the transmitted information, much of which was publicly available, embodies a trade secret. Public availability alone, however, does not disqualify internal compilations from RIUTSA protection. Like the Uniform Trade Secrets Act, the statute specifically contemplates the protection of information formatted as a "compilation." See R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-41-1(4). As the Eighth Circuit explained in AvidAir Helicopter Supply, Inc. v. Rolls-Royce Corp., 663 F.3d 966, 972 (8th Cir. 2011), "[c]ompilations of non-secret and secret information can be valuable so long as the combination affords a competitive advantage and is not readily ascertainable." The quantum of non-public information in the compilation is moreover irrelevant. Id. ("[T]he effort of compiling useful information is, of itself, entitled to protection even if the information is otherwise generally known." (quoting N. Elec. Co. v. Torma, 819 N.E.2d 417, 426 (Ind. Ct. App. 2004)); Penalty Kick Mgmt. Ltd. v. Coca Cola Co., 318 F.3d 1284, 1291 (11th Cir. 2003) ("[E]ven if [*30] all of the information is publicly available, a unique combination of that information, which adds value to the information, also may qualify as a trade secret.")).

Alifax's evidence supporting this theory of misappropriation is — again — sparse. In late August 2012, Frappa travelled to Rhode Island to meet with Alcor's founder, who was interested in a potential working relationship. See Alifax II, 2019 WL 317638, at *2. Upon returning to Italy, he notified Alifax of his intent to resign as of September 1, 2011, but explained that he would remain at the company for the two-month notice period set forth in his contract. Id. It was during this period, and just four days before his departure, that Frappa forwarded the disputed information to a personal email account. See DSADF ¶ 168; Frappa Dep. at 112:13-17. Frappa knew when he sent the messages that he was going to work for Alcor, Frappa Dep. at 104:6-9, and he conceded at deposition that the compilations had some value, id. at 106:21-111:3, 113:5-11, 114:24-115:4. This narrative is thin, but the Court cannot say that no juror could reasonably find that, as internally compiled and maintained by Alifax, the myeloma and anemia factor information [*31] had some independent economic value conferring a competitive advantage on the company.

4. Copyright Infringement

The Defendants' last salvo targets Alifax's copyright infringement claim. Alifax alleges that Alcor willfully copied the company's conversion algorithm (with its recognizable constants) into the iSED's source code to convert optical signals to an ESR value.<sup>14</sup> PSDF ¶ 124. To prevail, Alifax must prove at trial (1) control of a valid copyright, and (2) copying of the original elements of the work by Alcor. See Airframe Sys., Inc. v. L-3 Commc'n Corp., 658 F.3d 100, 105 (1st Cir. 2011); Coquico, Inc. v. Rodriguez-Miranda, 562 F.3d 62, 66 (1st Cir. 2009). The first prong is not in dispute. Alifax holds copyright registrations for the allegedly duplicated source code at issue. See PSDF ¶¶ 111-114. No party has suggested that Alifax's source code was not copyrightable. The unanswered question is whether Alcor is entitled to a judgment that, as a matter of law, it did not unlawfully copy the protected material.

Not every instance of copying constitutes copyright infringement. Johnson v. Gordon, 409 F.3d 12, 17-18 (1st Cir. 2005) (citing Feist Publ'n, Inc. v. Rural Tel. Serv. Co., 499 U.S. 340, 361 (1991)). The copying must be wrongful, and such a finding is based on a two-part test. First, Alifax must demonstrate "actual copying," i.e., "that, as a factual matter, the putative infringer copied the protected work." Coquico, Inc., 562 F.3d at 66-67. Second, Alifax must prove Alcor's coping "was so egregious as to render the allegedly infringing and infringed works substantially similar." Id. at 66. As the First Circuit instructed in Johnson, "[t]he substantial similarity requirement focuses holistically on the works in question and entails proof that the copying was so extensive that it rendered the works so similar that the later work represented a wrongful appropriation of expression." 409 F.3d at 18. This quality ordinarily must be evaluated from the perspective of "the ordinary observer."<sup>15</sup> Airframe Sys., 658 F.3d at 106. De minimis copying — the reproduction of "such a small amount of the plaintiff's work . . . that the two works cannot be said to be substantially similar" — is not actionable infringement. Situation Mgmt. Sys. v. ASP Consulting LLC, 560 F.3d 53, 58-59 (1st Cir. 2009) (citing 2 Nimmer & Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 8.01[G], at 8-26 (2008)). [*33]<sup>16</sup> Given the fact-intensive nature of these criteria, summary judgment on copyright infringement issues is "unusual." Segrets, Inc. v. Gillman Knitwear Co., 207 F.3d 56, 62 (1st Cir. 2000).

Here, Alifax has produced direct evidence of "actual copying." Dr. Bergeron and Alcor's code expert, Daniel Smith, each observed the Alifax constants in the iSED software's source code. See PSDF ¶¶ 124, 127; DSADF ¶¶ 167, 174; PSAUF Ex. K, Smith Dep. at 121:12-123:20, ECF No. 167. The constants were observed in the source code for software identified as "Version 104A." See PSDF ¶¶ 124-25, 127; DSADF ¶¶ 167, 174; Smith Dep. at 121:12-123:20. Alcor nevertheless contends that it did not infringe Alifax's copyright registration as (1) the constants were only present in a "pre-production" iteration of Version 104A that "never shipped in any functional iSED machine," and (2) due to different electronics and mechanical engineering, conversion constants are necessarily device specific; Alifax's constants are not fungible data and would not work in any device sold to a customer. Defs.' Mem. 26; [*34] Defs.' Reply 19.

<sup>14</sup> This cause of action is alleged only against Alcor. See Second Am. & Suppl. Compl. ¶¶ 77-85. Furthermore, whatever its original strategy may have been, Alifax no longer alleges a separate theory of infringement based on the so-called "2006 Source Code Module," a section of Alcor's code identifying Frappa as its author and stating "Copyright: Alifax Tech." See Pl.'s Opp'n 20; Defs.' Mem. 24. Alifax suggests that the 2006 Source Code Module is merely evidence of willfulness. Pl.'s Opp'n 20.

<sup>15</sup> As the First Circuit highlighted in Airframe Systems: "Where, as here, the copyrighted work involves specialized subject matter such as a computer program, some courts have held that the ordinary observer is a member of the work's intended audience who possesses specialized expertise." 658 F.3d 106 n.7 (quotation marks omitted). The First Circuit does not appear to have ironed the wrinkles out of this standard, but it is unnecessary to do so here.

<sup>16</sup> Put another way, de minimis copying is "a technical violation of a right so trivial that the law will not impose legal consequences." Ringgold v. Black Entm't Television, Inc., 126 F.3d 70, 74 (2d Cir. 1997); see also UpdateCom, Inc. v. FirstBank P.R., Inc., No. CIV. 10-1855 SCC, 2014 WL 346436, at *3 (D.P.R. Jan. 30, 2014) (finding "11 lines of 5,000, or about 0.22%—constituted de minimis copying in the absence of other evidence.").

After carefully reviewing the record, the Court cannot grant summary judgment on either basis. Regarding Alcor's first argument, there is evidence that an iteration of Version 104A contained the protected work. See PSDF ¶¶ 124, 127; DSADF ¶¶ 167, 174; Smith Dep. at 121:12-123:20. It is also undisputed that Alcor's records show that at least one iSED — and possibly more<sup>17</sup> — was sold with software identified as "Version 1.04A" installed. DSADF ¶ 177; PSAUF Ex. L, ECF No. 167. The parties have produced dueling expert opinions concerning whether the "Version 104A" containing Alifax's protected constants could be the same software installed on one or more iSED units when sold. See DSADF ¶ 185; PSAUF Ex. P, Bergeron Decl.; Smith. Decl. ¶¶ 5-9. It is not the Court's role to select a victor at this stage.

Alcor's argument that conversion constants are device specific (and thus useless to anyone else even if copied) would side-step these complications. However, as the parties should be acutely aware, the record before the Court concerning the evolution of Version 104A is muddy and unsettled. For example, it is undisputed that tests to correlate the iSED's method of measuring [*35] ESR to the standard Westergren methodology were conducted December 2012 and January 2013 with an iSED prototype. DSADF ¶ 188. It is unclear, and the parties dispute, what software version the prototype device ran.<sup>18</sup> See DSADF ¶¶ 186-191. The test protocol designated the software as "software version 1.00." Id. ¶ 189. But at his deposition, Frappa could not recall what was meant by "software version 1.00" and explained that "[in] the very early stages of development of the software, the tracking of the changes were not kept in a religious way."<sup>19</sup> Frappa Dep. 61:14-62:5. He further described version 1.00 as the "very, very first code written for the analyzer," while noting that the code identified in the test protocol may have been incorrect. Id. at 71:17-72:8. At the same time, it is undisputed that the "first version" of the iSED's software incorporated Alifax's constants. See PSDF ¶¶ 124, 127; DSADF ¶¶ 167, 174; Smith Dep. at 121:12-123:20. Reasonable jurors could interpret these facts to find that Alcor made some use of Alifax's conversion constants. Thus, the record before the Court is not ripe for summary judgment.

The Court perceives the core of Alcor's non-infringement [*36] arguments to be a de minimis copying defense expressed in technical terms. In other words, any alleged use Alcor could have made of Alifax's protected work was trivial, and "the law does not concern itself with trifles." Ringgold, 126 F.3d at 74. Such a conclusion may reflect a rational interpretation of the evidence, but based on the present state of the record, a final determination must be reserved for a jury.

A. Alifax's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment

Alifax moves for summary judgment on Count III of Alcor's counterclaim, which alleges that Alifax intentionally interfered with Alcor's prospective contractual relations by filing this action, which has in turn "caused distributors to withdraw from negotiations with Alcor." Ans. ¶ 47. The gravamen of Alcor's cause of action is that Alifax's claims of patent infringement, trade secret misappropriation, and copyright infringement are "objectively baseless" and that this action was filed to serve anti-competitive ends. Id. ¶ 46; Defs.' Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. for Summ. J. 1, ECF No. 180. Alifax's principle basis for judgment in its favor is the Noerr-Pennington doctrine — a rule established to protect a litigant's constitutional right [*37] to petition the government for redress. Pl.'s Mot. for Summ. J. 12-14, ECF No. 166.

<sup>17</sup> The document Alcor produced listing all the iSED instruments it sold to customers includes the software installed at the time of manufacture or "as [of] the date of service, whichever is later." DSADF Ex. A, Frappa Decl. ¶ 7. Alcor does not appear to genuinely dispute that until October 2013, iSED units were sold with some iteration of Version 104A installed, though it disputes whether Alifax's conversion constants were present in that software. See DSADF ¶ 182.

<sup>18</sup> The dates of these tests appear to predate all the so-called "commit" files submitted by Alcor from its code repository in an attempt to demonstrate that iSED units in March 2013 were not sold with an iteration of Version 104A that contained Alifax's constants. See Frappa Decl. ¶¶ 17-19.

<sup>19</sup> Frappa's affidavit in support of summary judgment is more confident and contends that the prototype ran software that did not include Alifax's constants. See generally Frappa Decl.

The Court agrees that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine should control here. The doctrine was born from twin antitrust cases, see Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127 (1961) and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657 (1965), but is rooted in fundamental First Amendment principles. Sosa v. DIRECTV, Inc., 437 F.3d 923, 929 (9th Cir. 2006) (stating the doctrine "derives from the First Amendment's guarantee of "the right of the people . . . to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." (quoting U.S. Const. amend. I.)). As described by the Ninth Circuit in Theme Promotions, Inc. v. News America Marketing FSI, 546 F.3d 991, 1006 (9th Cir. 2008), "[t]he essence of the Noerr—Pennington doctrine is that those who petition any department of the government for redress are immune from statutory liability for their petitioning conduct." The protection offered by this form of immunity includes petitioning activities in "all departments of the Government," including bringing legitimate disputes in U.S. courts. Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited [*38], 404 U.S. 508, 510 (1972).

Alcor urges the Court to cabin the doctrine's applicability to the facts of its origin — antitrust cases. The Court is unpersuaded. Noerr-Pennington immunity has a broad "constitutional foundation." Sosa, 437 F.3d at 930; Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1518 (9th Cir. 1996), as amended (Jan. 15, 1997) (describing Noerr-Pennington as a "general rule" that includes "the approach of citizens . . . to administrative agencies . . . and to courts" (quotation marks omitted); Whelan v. Abell, 48 F.3d 1247, 1254 (D.C. Cir. 1995) ("As Noerr—Pennington rests on the conclusion that the filing of claims in court . . . is part of the protected right to petition, it is hard to see any reason why . . . common law torts . . . might not in some of their applications be found to violate the First Amendment."). As the Third Circuit concluded, "the purpose of Noerr—Pennington as applied in areas outside the antitrust field is the protection of the right to petition." We, Inc. v. City of Phila., 174 F.3d 322, 327 (3d Cir. 1999). Courts across the country have thus applied the doctrine to other causes of action, including common law torts such as tortious interference, that could [*39] chill the constitutional right of petition.<sup>20</sup> See, e.g., Theme Promotions, 546 F.3d at 1006-07 (9th Cir. 2008) (applying Noerr-Pennington to claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage under California law); Pers. Dept', Inc. v. Prof'l Staff Leasing Corp., 297 F. App'x. 773, 779 (10th Cir. 2008) (holding that Noerr—Pennington can provide immunity from liability arising from a tortious interference claim); Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, Local 734 Health & Welfare Tr. Fund v. Philip Morris Inc., 196 F.3d 818, 826 (7th Cir. 1999) ("Although the Noerr—Pennington doctrine originated in antitrust law, its rationale is equally applicable to RICO suits."); Video Int'l Prod., Inc. v. Warner—Amex Cable Commc'nns, Inc., 858 F.2d 1075, 1084 (5th Cir. 1988) (applying Noerr-Pennington to tortious interference with contract claim); Sierra Club v. Butz, 349 F. Supp. 934, 938-39 (N.D. Cal. 1972) (applying Noerr-Pennington to contractual interference claim).<sup>21</sup>

Alcor's contentions that the Rhode Island [*40] Supreme Court has not fully embraced the Noerr-Pennington principles or that the Rhode Island Limits on Strategic Litigation Against Public Participation ("Anti-SLAPP") statute, R.I. Gen. Laws § 9-33-1 et seq., displaces this doctrine are untenable. Like many of the courts cited above, the Rhode Island Supreme Court recognized in Pound Hill Corp. v. Perl that "[a]lthough the [Noerr-Pennington] doctrine arose in a context of application of the antitrust statutes, it is based upon the First Amendment right to petition the government for redress of grievances." 668 A.2d 1260, 1263 (R.I. 1996). In Hometown Properties, Inc. v. Fleming, the Court unambiguously stated, "This Court has adopted the Noerr—Pennington premise and has applied its protection to common-law tort claims." 680 A.2d 56, 60 (R.I. 1996). Count III of Alcor's counterclaim is a common law tort claim.

<sup>20</sup> As the U.S. District Court for the District of Massachusetts recently observed, "The First Circuit has not decided whether the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is applicable to state law claims as a matter of federal law." United Food & Commercial Workers Unions & Emp'rs Midwest Health Benefits Fund v. Novartis Pharm. Corp., No. 15-CV-12732, 2017 WL 2837002, at *9 (D. Mass. June 30, 2017), aff'd, 902 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2018).

<sup>21</sup> Alcor cites a statement from this Court's ruling in In re Loestrin 24 Fe Antitrust Litig., 261 F. Supp. 3d 307, 338 (D.R.I. 2017), as support for its position. The Court stated, "Generally, under the Noerr—Pennington doctrine, a Sherman Act violation cannot be predicated upon mere attempts to influence the passage or enforcement of laws." Id. (quotation marks omitted). The Court did not specifically hold that Noerr-Pennington could not apply to state-law tort claims. Id. at 348.

Furthermore, nowhere in the Rhode Island Supreme Court's relevant rulings does the Court purport to limit the applicability of Noerr-Pennington to issues of "public concern," as Alifax suggests. The "private" nature of such cases is commonplace. See, e.g., Theme Promotions, Inc., 546 F.3d at 1006-07 (a dispute between an advertiser [*41] and a publisher concerning whether right of first refusal agreements between publisher and packaged goods companies violate antitrust law or constituted tortious interference with prospective economic advantage). The frequent invocation of this doctrine in actions related to matters of public concern does not necessarily limit its applicability to actions involving such matters. As the Supreme Court acknowledged in Hometown Properties, the Rhode Island Anti-SLAPP statute compliments the Noerr-Pennington doctrine by "protect[ing] valid petitioning activities." 680 A.2d at 61. The statute cannot, however, displace a doctrine drawn from a federal constitutional right to petition. See Theme Promotions, Inc., 546 F.3d at 1007 (holding as "Noerr-Pennington protects federal constitutional rights, it applies in all contexts, even where a state law doctrine advances a similar goal").

The Court also finds that the "sham exception" to Noerr-Pennington immunity is inapplicable as a matter of law. Sham petitioning activities are not entitled to protection. See Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. at 144. The criteria for identifying such nonsense lawsuits are well-defined. An action is considered [*42] a "sham" if it is (1) objectively baseless, and (2) subjectively motivated by a desire to abuse process rather than obtain judicial relief. Prof'l Real Estate Inv'rs, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60-61 (1993). A lawsuit is only "objectively baseless" if "no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits," id., and a finding of objective merit obviates the need to inquire as to motive. See id. at 57 ("[A]n objectively reasonable effort to litigate cannot be sham regardless of subjective intent.").

A legion of federal courts, including the Federal Circuit, have held that a denial of summary judgment precludes a finding of objective baselessness as a matter of law. See, e.g., Beckman Instruments, Inc. v. LKB Produkter AB, 892 F.2d 1547, 1551 (Fed. Cir. 1989) ("find[ing] it difficult to agree that [an] inequitable conduct defense was 'baseless' when it survived a motion for summary judgment and was rejected only after findings were made on disputed facts"); Twin City Bakery Workers & Welfare Fund v. Astra Aktiebolag, 207 F. Supp. 2d 221, 224 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) ("[A]llowing claims of infringement of four of the six asserted patents to proceed beyond [*43] summary and two of the four to proceed through trial, preclude any contention that defendants' litigation is so baseless as not to warrant Noerr-Pennington immunity."); Nobelpharma Ab v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 930 F. Supp. 1241, 1255 (N.D. Ill. 1996) (denial of motion for summary judgment "foreclosed" the argument that the patent infringement lawsuit was objectively baseless); Gen-Probe, Inc. v. Amoco Corp., Inc., 926 F. Supp. 948, 958 (S.D. Cal. 1996) ("A denial of summary judgment means that the nonmoving party has produced enough evidence that a rational jury could find in its favor. A party with sufficient evidence to support a jury finding in its favor has probable cause to bring a lawsuit.").

The Court has denied the Defendants' request for summary judgment on the three claims Alcor contends are unfounded. If reasonable minds can differ concerning the Defendants' liability, the same reasonable minds could not conclude that Alifax could not "realistically expect success on the merits." Prof'l Real Estate Inv'rs, 508 U.S. at 60-61; see also Avitech, LLC v. Embrex, Inc., WMN-04-3082, 2008 WL 11287093, *5 (D. Md. Aug. 19, 2008) (holding that if a reasonable jury could find infringement, [*44] "a reasonable jury could not find that [patentee] could not have held a reasonable belief that there was a chance that its infringement claim would succeed"). Accordingly, as a matter of law Alifax is entitled to judgment in its favor on Count III of Alcor's First Amended Counterclaim.

IV. Conclusion

Alifax has avoided "the swing of the summary judgment ax," United States v. One Lot of U.S. Currency ($68,000), 927 F.2d 30, 32 (1st Cir. 1991) (Selya, J.), at times by a whisker. Regardless, having found that reasonable minds could differ as to the veracity of Alifax's claims, this action falls squarely within the First Amendment's petitioning protections as articulated under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Consequently, for the foregoing reasons, the Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (ECF Nos. 142, 143) is DENIED, and Plaintiff's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Count III of the First Amended Counterclaim (ECF Nos. 159, 166) is GRANTED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[*514] MEMORANDUM OPINION

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff, Premier Comp Solutions, LLC ("Premier" or "Plaintiff"), initiated this action by filing a seven (7) count Amended Complaint against Defendants, UPMC ("UPMC"), UPMC Benefit Management Services, Inc. ("UPMC-BMS"), UPMC Health Benefits, Inc.<sup>1</sup> ("UPMC-HB") (collectively the "UPMC Defendants"), and MCMC, LLC ("MCMC") (collectively the "Defendants"), alleging (1) violation of Section 2 of the Sherman [**2] Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 et seq., attempted monopolization against UPMC (Count I); (2) violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, group boycott, against the UPMC Defendants (Count II); (3) violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, attempted monopolization against UPMC (Count III); (4) violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, exclusive dealing, against all Defendants (Count IV); (5) violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, restraint of trade, against all Defendants (Count V); (6) violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, attempted monopolization against UPMC and WorkPartners (Count VI); (7) common law Unfair Competition against [*515] all Defendants (Count VII). Premier contends, inter alia, that the Defendants conspired to drive Premier from the market in workers' compensation cost containment services. The UPMC Defendants and MCMC have filed Motions for Summary Judgment, Premier has responded and the matter is now before the Court.

II. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Premier is a limited liability company organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, located in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. UPMC Concise Statement of Undisputed Material Facts ("UPMC CSUMF") ¶¶ 1 & 2. Premier provides cost containment services to workers' compensation insurers and [**3] third party administrative ("TPA") service providers in twenty-one (21) states including Pennsylvania. Am. Compl. ¶¶ 20, 21 & 25; UPMC CSUMF ¶ 10; Premier's Response to UPMC Concise Statement of Undisputed Material Facts ("Premier Resp.") ¶ 10. The services provided by Premier include:

- (1) Medical Bill Review and Repricing — Preferred Provider Organization ("PPO") discount network access, electronic data interface ("EDI") transfer services, and the issuance of savings reports to clients on a monthly, quarterly, and/or annual basis;
- (2) Physical Therapy ("PT") and Diagnostic ("MRI") discount network access — Scheduling of all PT/MRI appointments, verification and tracking of attendance for all appointments, PT utilization review services, obtaining all PT treatment notes and MRI imaging reports, tracking PT appointments and treatment compliance, issuance of detailed PT utilization reports for all active and discharged patients as well as PT outcomes by body part on a monthly, quarterly, and/or annual basis and the issuance of network savings reports to clients on a monthly, quarterly, and annual basis;
- (3) Panel Development - Investigation and vetting of potential panel providers for qualifications, [**4] licensing, and quality of care, providing ongoing panel maintenance, panel implementation, and verification of the accuracy of the panel provider information of all panels every six months and/or when demographic (address, phone number, etc.) changes occur, providing customer service and receiving feedback regarding client satisfaction with all PCS services through the use of written customer surveys;
- (4) Injury Management — Scheduling of all physician, PT and MRI appointments for managed panel clients, obtaining work status information after every appointment and forwarding it to adjuster and/or employer.

UPMC CSUMF ¶ 10; Premier Resp. ¶ 10.

UPMC BMS (d/b/a WorkPartners) is a licensed TPA in Pennsylvania that originally began providing workers' compensation TPA services to UPMC entities in 1997, and later began providing workers' compensation TPA (and other) services to other public and private employers. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 40. UPMC HB (d/b/a WorkPartners) is licensed to provide workers' compensation insurance in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and began selling workers' compensation insurance in Pennsylvania in 2010. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 42 & 43. WorkPartners uses vendors to provide inter alia [**5] medical bill repricing and panel generation services to its clients. MCMC Concise Statement of Undisputed Material Facts ("MCMC CSUMF") ¶ 5. Both UPMC BMS and UPMC HB are wholly [*516] owned subsidiaries of UPMC. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 44.

Medical bill review and repricing is the process by which a company reviews medical bills to ensure there are no errors in the billing and to reduce provider charges. Bills from healthcare providers for services rendered to workers' compensation claimants are reviewed to assure the providers' documentation supports their billed charges, and billed charges in excess of the amounts allowed under the appropriate state's workers' compensation fee schedule are disallowed and reduced accordingly. The repricing company then reprices the bill and generates Explanation of Reimbursement ("EOR") forms which reflect the providers' billed charges, workers' compensation fee schedule reductions, medical bill review reductions, PPO discounts, and amounts payable to the provider. The repricing company transmits the EORs to their clients and the clients remit payment to the providers with copies of the EORs. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 15; MCMC CSUMF ¶ 2(b).

Premier performs repricing services for [**6] clients in Pennsylvania and twenty-one (21) states outside of Pennsylvania, according to the workers' compensation laws and fee schedules of those states, including the states with the largest volume, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Ohio, and Utah. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 19. Premier has a PPO network access contract with the Coventry Health Care ("Coventry") workers' compensation PPO network, which is the largest such network in the nation. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 16. Premier also accesses the Prime Health Services Network ("Prime") PPO, located in Brentwood, Tennessee, which includes more than 700,000 medical service providers throughout the United States. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 17. In 2014, approximately 6.84% of Premier's overall revenue was derived from its medical bill review and repricing services. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 21.

MCMC provides medical bill review and repricing services to, among other types of customers, workers' compensation insurers, workers' compensation TPA services providers and self-insured employers. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 53. Medical bill review and repricing services for UPMC WorkPartners have always been provided by MCMC, except that Premier provided bill review and repricing for four (4) of WorkPartners' [**7] TPA clients relevant here: (1) the City of Pittsburgh; (2) Port Authority of Allegheny County; (3) Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission and (4) Allegheny County. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 55; Premier Resp. ¶ 55; MCMC CSUMF ¶¶ 7, 9 & 10. MCMC is not a panel provider and has provided no panel generation services to WorkPartners. MCMC CSUMF ¶ 11.

Though WorkPartners contends that it does not engage in or sell medical bill review and repricing services of workers' compensation medical bills, UPMC CSUMF ¶ 48, Premier contends that WorkPartners bundles services in their TPA bids to include repricing services. Premier Resp. ¶ 48. In that regard, WorkPartners does not give the employer the option to carve out the repricing services to an independent repricing vendor such as Premier. Id.

With regard to Premier's physical therapy and diagnostic network, Premier entered into direct discount contracts with a large number of outpatient healthcare providers who render services in the fields of physical therapy and diagnostic imaging (e.g. MRI and CT). UPMC CSUMF ¶ 23. These direct contract relationships form what Premier called its "PT Network" and "MRI Network" which is also referred to as its "PT/MRI Network." UPMC [**8] CSUMF ¶ 24. Premier has the largest and most extensive PT/MRI network in Pennsylvania, [*517] containing over 995 PT providers and 265 diagnostic imaging providers across the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 25.

Panel development and maintenance, as practiced by Premier, is the process by which Premier develops functional and customized panel listings of healthcare providers to be utilized by employees who incur work-related injuries and illnesses. Premier assists the employer to implement a panel in compliance with Pennsylvania's Workers' Compensation Act and to understand the proper use of the panel. The panels are posted at the employer's workplace and are comprised of healthcare providers who are geographically located near the place of employment and who provide the medical services most likely to be needed by the employees of the particular employer. Premier updates and reissues the employer panels when provider demographics change and at the request of the employer. Premier verifies the accuracy of panel provider information for all its clients' panels every six months and communicates any changes to their employer and insurance carrier clients. Premier also investigates and [**9] vets potential panel providers for qualifications, current licensing and quality of care. Premier Resp. ¶ 29. Premier generally does not earn money for this service separate from its connection with use of its PT/MRI Network. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 32. When providing its panel management product to WorkPartners, Premier earned revenue only when injured employees were scheduled with and received treatment from providers in Premier's PT/MRI Network. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 33.

WorkPartners generated provider panels for certain of its fully-insured and TPA clients located in close proximity to UPMC's hospitals and physician practices across the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 45; Premier Resp. ¶ 45. WorkPartners does not generate or maintain provider panels for any employers other than its workers' compensation insurance and TPA services clients. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 47. WorkPartners contends that it does not market or sell provider panel generation or maintenance services. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 46. Employers have the right under the Workers' Compensation Act to select their own providers, which allows Premier to market its services to those employers, even if such employers are fully insured by or receive TPA services [**10] from WorkPartners. Premier Resp. ¶ 46. To prevent such competition, Premier contends that once an employer makes the decision to purchase workers' compensation insurance from WorkPartners, WorkPartners mandates that such employer use only WorkPartners approved providers. Id. Premier further contends that WorkPartners informed their employer-insureds that their workers' compensation premiums were based on the insureds use of WorkPartners' approved panels, which were often panels consisting of UPMC owned and affiliated providers. Id.

Premier's injury management services involve providing injured workers with assistance in scheduling appointments for medical treatment with panel providers, assuring the employer and claimed adjuster receive prompt diagnosis, treatment, and work status information, tracking physical therapy ("PT") treatment and reporting utilization information to the client, and scheduling all PT and diagnostic testing ("MRI/CT") with Premier discount network providers whenever possible to maximize the cost savings for employers and insurance carriers. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 35; Premier Resp. ¶ 35. Premier schedules patients for treatment inside and outside of Pennsylvania with network [**11] medical service providers in Pennsylvania and neighboring states who provide medical services to employees of Pennsylvania employers. [*518] UPMC CSUMF ¶ 36; Premier Resp. ¶ 36.

In April of 2006, Premier entered into a Medical Review and Repricing Agreement (the "Repricing Agreement") with WorkPartners. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 59; Am. Comp. ¶ 52. Premier became a subcontractor to WorkPartners to provide medical bill review and repricing services for three of UPMC WorkPartners' TPA clients: (1) the City of Pittsburgh; (2) Port Authority of Allegheny County; and (3) Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 60.

In August 2010, Premier began generating provider panels for certain of WorkPartners' new commercial insured clients. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 61. In addition to Premier's panel development, its services included appointment scheduling, injury management, and PT/MRI network services. Premier Resp. ¶ 61. During the panel generation relationship with WorkPartners, every panel developed by Premier, and the included providers, required the approval of WorkPartners' Jason Gallagher ("Gallagher"). UPMC CSUMF ¶ 62; UPMC Exs. AD, AE & AF. WorkPartners required that Premier list UPMC owned and affiliated physicians [**12] and other providers whenever geographically feasible. Premier Resp. ¶ 62.

On October 31, 2013, Linda Schmac ("Ms. Schmac"), President and co-owner of Premier, wrote an email to Deborah Mehalik, WorkPartner's Manager of Network Services ("Mehalik"), which, on its face, described inefficiencies she believed were caused by WorkPartner's use of multiple vendors for their medical review and repricing, while using Premier's generated provider panels, but not using Premier for medical review and repricing. Schmac's email also appears to recommend that WorkPartners use MCMC for all its "panel development, implementation and maintenance, and PT/MRI network usage" to remedy the issues caused by multiple vendors. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 64; UPMC Ex. AH. Specifically, Ms. Schmac wrote:

Don<sup>2</sup> and I have discussed this issue at length and we believe the manual processes that [WorkPartners] has had to put into place to accommodate using our panel PT/MRI network program are too prone to human error and are no longer [] in [WorkPartners'] best interest. . .

Because [WorkPartners] does not utilize our repricing service, we do not have the ability to determine if your insureds are complying with the panels we have developed, [**13] implemented manage, and continue to maintain for [WorkPartners.] Further, we do not have the ability to capture our PT/MRI network bills through repricing. Nor do we have the ability to detect if any of our network providers inadvertently bill [WorkPartners] directly for services which could potentially result in [WorkPartners] paying both [Premier] and our network provider directly for the same services. While our network providers are contractually obligated to bill [Premier] for all services we schedule, this does happen from time to time, but can be easily detected through repricing so that our clients do not ever pay double for the services. . .

Due to the growth of [WorkPartners] and since [WorkPartners] will not consider using our repricing service which would automate these manual processes and completely eliminate these problems, we feel it would be in [WorkPartners'] best interest to transition all of [WorkPartners'] panel development, implementation, and maintenance, and PT/MRI network usage to MCMC. [WorkPartners] has grown to the point that [*519] they need an integrated cost containment solution. Having [Premier] perform the services we do and having MCMC perform the repricing [**14] is cost prohibitive, labor intensive, and inefficient for both our organizations.

Please understand that we absolutely loathe making this recommendation to [WorkPartners] as we sincerely enjoy working with all of you and greatly appreciate the business, and we obviously do not like having to recommend to our clients that they use our competitors' services. However, this recommendation is in the best interest of [WorkPartners] as you need a more integrated cost containment program. As always, you can count on us to make the transition to MCMC as smooth as possible for [WorkPartners].

UPMC Ex. AH. Upon reviewing Ms. Schmac's email, WorkPartners was concerned that Premier would discontinue its panel generation services and began exploring alternatives to Premier's panel generation services. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 67 & 68; MCMC CSUMF ¶ 35.

Premier, however, contends that Ms. Schmac wrote the email at Mehalik's request because Mehalik wanted to show WorkPartners' executives the inefficiency of not having one vendor providing the repricing, PT/MRI network provider services and panel generation services. Premier Response ¶ 64. Because MCMC was allegedly double and triple paying bills and paying the full [**15] provider bill amount, Mehalik asked Ms. Schmac to send her the email so Mehalik had some leverage to convince WorkPartners to reconsider the repricing vendor. Premier Ex. 11. pp. 78-86. Though Ms. Schmac was asking WorkPartners to transition the panels to MCMC, both Ms. Schmac and Mehalik knew that was not possible because MCMC did not provide panel generation. Id.

The ploy appeared to work as in January 2014, WorkPartners had Mehalik conduct a test audit and prepare an audit report that compared the relative capabilities of Premier, MCMC and another vendor, Align Networks. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 69; MCMC CSUMF ¶ 36. Mehalik, a registered nurse, had never done an audit report before. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 70 & 71; MCMC CSUMF ¶ 43. Mehalik, however, had the necessary background, experience and competency to prepare the comparative audit report. Premier Response ¶ 72. In her report, Mehalik recommended that WorkPartners switch from MCMC to Premier and consolidate repricing and panel generation services with Premier. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 73. WorkPartners' CEO, David Weir ("Weir"), not Mehalik, had the authority to make the final decision regarding whether to change the repricing vendor. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 77.

After the [**16] completed audit, WorkPartners continued to review and develop a revised business model for their internal repricing, network, PPO and panel development structure. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 76; MCMC CSUMF ¶¶ 45 & 46. Ms. Schmac was aware that WorkPartners, despite the audit report, continued to review and investigate all of its options. In fact, in an email to James Cottone and Steven Wagner of WorkPartners dated July 10, 2014, Ms. Schmac stated:

I'm very pleased to learn that [Premier] performed well with regard to the repricing test audit and most importantly, that [WorkPartners] is very satisfied with the services we currently provide to some of your TPA clients. . .

If there is anything we can do to help [WorkPartners] with the onerous task of reviewing your entire repricing, network, PPO, and panel development structure, please do not hesitate to let me know. . .

[*520] We will remain patient while [WorkPartners] works through this grueling process and explores its various options. . .

UPMC Ex. AO. Premier was aware, then, that WorkPartners did not simply rely on Mehalik's audit report and recommendation that Premier be given all the repricing business in its revised business model.

On February 20, 2014, [**17] Jason Gallagher ("Gallagher"), the Medical Delivery Coordinator at WorkPartners, requested that Premier provide WorkPartners a spreadsheet containing a list of the provider panels of

WorkPartners' insured employer clients. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 78. Prior to requesting the provider panel information in spreadsheet form, WorkPartners already possessed a copy of all the panels generated by Premier for WorkPartners' insured either in paper or PDF. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 78.

Gallagher explained the purpose for his request was to assist with creating a "provider scorecard system" for providers serving WorkPartners' insureds to "better track our providers and which panels they reside on. All part of my project to track outcomes for our providers." UPMC CSUMF ¶ 79. Premier contends, however, that the real reason for WorkPartners' requests for panel provider data was to steal Premier's confidential compilation of such data so that WorkPartners could create its own panel tool capable of allowing it to develop panels itself and terminate the services of Premier. Premier Response ¶¶ 80 & 81.

In August 2014, WorkPartners began referring new workers' compensation insured employers to Align Networks ("Align") for panel [**18] generation. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 82. On November 13, 2014, Mehalik and another WorkPartners' employees met with representatives of Premier during which Premier was informed that: (1) WorkPartners would not switch its repricing vendor for its commercial-insured business from MCMC to Premier; (2) Premier would retain its repricing business for WorkPartners' self-insured TPA clients, Allegheny County, Port Authority of Allegheny County, City of Pittsburgh, and the Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission; (3) there was an opportunity for Premier to work with UPMC WorkPartners' self-insured TPA business in the future; and (4) WorkPartners was trying another vendor for panel formation on new insured clients. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 83, 84, 85, 86 & 87; MCMC CSUMF ¶¶ 51 & 52.

During the meeting, Ms. Schmac accused WorkPartners of being dishonest and unethical. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 90. Soon thereafter, Mr. Schmac cut off online access to the provider panels that Premier continued to manage on behalf of WorkPartners. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 91. Because WorkPartners indicated at the meeting that it was not sure if it was going to transition the 1,100 WorkPartners insureds' panels from Premier to Align, Ms. Schmac instructed Premier employees [**19] to cease updating the WorkPartners insureds' panels until WorkPartners confirmed whether or not Premier would maintain this business. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 92; Premier Response ¶ 92. On November 26, 2014, WorkPartners informed Premier that WorkPartners had no present intention to change the current arrangement with Premier regarding the panels Premier managed on behalf of WorkPartners' insured. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 94.

On January 6, 2015, WorkPartners sent an email to Premier requesting additional "panel, provider and provider location data" from Premier for the reasons set forth in the email. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 95; UPMC Ex. AZ. In a response email on that same day, Ms. Schmac, obviously upset at the request for addition panel data, stated:

[*521] With all due respect, . . . it was our understanding that [WorkPartners] made the decision to use Align to create their panels, and since we have not received a panel request from [WorkPartners] since August, I would have to assume [WorkPartners] continues to use Align. That being said, I can't imagine that [WorkPartners] would expect us [to] invest tens of thousands of dollars to create special IT programs and processes for just the existing panels we manage for UPMC.

[**20] UPMC Ex. AZ. In an internal email dated January 7, 2015, Andrew Yohe ("Yohe"), a WorkPartners Vice President, advised:

[I]f [Premier] refuses to provide the information it leaves me well beyond suspect of the actual performance of their network. As it stands, our relationship with [Premier] is one in which we are absolutely living in the dark. We don't know what providers our clients are using, we can't judge the performance of those providers and we don't have an effective methodology of evaluating that we're paying competitive rates within their network. Their rates and provider performance could be top notch, but I have no way of telling that. If we can't come to terms on how to obtain this data, I would suggest that we need to establish an exit strategy.

Id. (emphasis in original). In an email dated January 9, 2015, Linda Schmac indicated that Premier would not provide WorkPartners the data it requested, stating:

. . . given that [WorkPartners] has made the decision to discontinue using [Premier] for new panel development in lieu of Align, I have made the decision not to comply with [WorkPartners'] request for us to provide the extensive list of IT services you have outlined in the agenda below.

UPMC Ex. BA.

Premier admits, however, that it provided panel information and data to Wal-Mart, through its wholly owned TPA, Claimed Management Inc. [**21] ("CMI"), that allowed CMI to measure provider outcomes and utilization. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 226; Premier Response ¶ 226. Premier also admits that it provided PT/MRI billing data to an insurer client, Brickstreet, explaining:

the purpose of the transmission was to integrate [Premier] PT/MRI invoices electronically with Brickstreet's claim system. Had [WorkPartners] awarded [Premier] its commercial bill repricing account, [Premier] would have implemented a customized electronic interface to WorkPartners'] specifications for [Premier's] PT and MRI network invoices.

UPMC CSUMF ¶ 240; Premier Response ¶ 240. Premier acknowledged that overutilization can negatively impact cost containment, therefore, it was reasonable for a payer/insurer to be concerned about PT/MRI overutilization. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 230, 232; Premier Response ¶ 230.

Dr. Joseph P. Fuhr, Jr. ("Dr. Fuhr"), an economist with experience in analyzing antitrust issues in healthcare markets and identified by Premier as its expert, also agreed that it is appropriate and reasonable for workers' compensation insurers, like WorkPartners, to request such panel information and utilization data in order to: understand provider performance; determine [**22] what drives increasing physical therapy costs; and to analyze provider outcomes. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 233, 235. Moreover, Dr. Fuhr agreed that if a repricer, particularly one like Premier that derives revenue from utilization, refused to provide such information, it would be reasonable [*522] for an insurer to look for a different repricer. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 234.

On February 17, 2015, despite Premier's refusal to provide the data requested, WorkPartners sent Premier a draft of a non-exclusive Master Services Agreement ("MSA") to replace the Agreement that had been in place since 2006,<sup>3</sup> which would allow Premier to service the approximately 1100 panels it generated for WorkPartners' new commercial insured clients. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 100; UPMC Ex. BC. On February 18, 2015, Ms. Schmac replied to WorkPartners, in relevant part:

Given the very short amount of time you have given us to review this one-sided, unreasonable agreement (8 business days), . . . there is no way I could possibly execute this agreement by March 1.

Further, no repricing vendor including your current vendor, MCMC, who accesses the Coventry PPO network and is therefore mandated to use them as a primary network could sign this without significant [**23] revisions. I will forward this agreement to our attorney, the Dept of Justice, our mutual clients, and Coventry, and I will respond back to you when I and they all have had adequate time to review it.

Premier Response ¶ 101. On February 27, 2015, without any attempted negotiation with WorkPartners, Ms. Schmac informed WorkPartners that Premier was not willing to enter into the proposed MSA and requested that the panel provider database requested and sent to WorkPartners "under false pretenses" be returned "along with a statement representing that the data has not been used for any purpose and there are no other [copies]." UPMC CSUMF ¶ 103; Premier Response ¶ 103. On March 26, 2015, WorkPartners provided written notice to Premier that it would terminate the 2006 Repricing Agreement, effective April 30, 2015. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 110.

The crux of Premier's complaint, therefore, arises from WorkPartners' unilateral decision not to consolidate its medical bill repricing and panel generation business with one vendor, but instead, after an evaluation of its repricing and panel generation vendors, chose to consolidate all repricing work with its incumbent provider, MCMC, and to direct its panel generation [**24] work to non-party Align Networks. Premier contends that such decision was made after WorkPartners requested certain confidential panel information from Premier and despite a WorkPartners' generated report indicating that Premier was superior to MCMC as a repricing vendor.

<sup>3</sup> WorkPartners contends that on March 3, 2015, it sent MCMC and Align Networks each a draft Master Services Agreement that was substantially the same as the MSA sent to Premier. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 105, 106.

As an initial matter, this Court must note the Supreme Court's thoughts on vendor selection set forth in Nynex Corp. v. Discon, 525 U.S. 128, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1998\):

The freedom to switch suppliers lies close to the heart of the competitive process that the antitrust laws seek to encourage. Cf. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 62, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619 \(1911\) (noting "the freedom of the individual right to contract when not unduly or improperly exercised [is] the most efficient means for the prevention of monopoly"). At the same time, other laws, for example, "unfair competition" laws, business tort laws, or regulatory laws, provide remedies for various "competitive practices thought to be offensive to proper standards of business morality." 3 P. AREEDA & H. HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW P651d, p. 78 (1996). Thus, this Court has refused to apply per se reasoning in cases involving that kind of [*523] activity. See Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 225, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 \(1993\) ("Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust [*25] laws"); 3 AREEDA & HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW supra, P651d, at 80 ("In the presence of substantial market power, some kinds of tortious behavior could anticompetitively create or sustain a monopoly, [but] it is wrong categorically to condemn such practices . . . or categorically to excuse them").

Id. at 137. See also InterVest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 158 \(3d Cir. 2003\) (finding no antitrust violation where defendant made a unilateral decision not to do business with the plaintiff, but to do business with a competitor of plaintiff).

III. LEGAL STANDARD FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

There is no "special burden on plaintiffs facing summary judgment in antitrust cases." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\). A court must generally apply "the same summary judgment standards that apply in other contexts." In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 357 \(3d Cir. 2004\). Accordingly, a court will enter summary judgment when the evidence shows "no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(a\). As in other summary judgment contexts, we "review the record as a whole and in the light most favorable to the nonmovant, drawing reasonable inferences in its favor." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d 383, 396 \(3d Cir. 2015\).

The Third Circuit, however, has recognized "an important distinction" to this general standard in antitrust cases. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d at 357. "[A]ntitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous [*26] evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\). Specifically, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. The "acceptable inferences which can be drawn from circumstantial evidence vary with the plausibility of the plaintiff's theory and the dangers associated with such inferences." Petrucci's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1232 \(3d Cir. 1993\). When a plaintiff's theory "makes no economic sense," therefore, the plaintiff must produce "more persuasive evidence." In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d at 357. Even with a plausible theory, however, "a plaintiff relying on ambiguous evidence alone cannot raise a reasonable inference of conspiracy sufficient to survive summary judgment." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d at 396-397. See also Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 513 F. Supp. 1100, 1140 \(E.D. Pa. 1981\) ("It is now settled that summary judgment is appropriate in those antitrust cases where plaintiffs, after having engaged in extensive discovery, fail to produce 'significant probative evidence' in support of the allegations in their complaint.") (citations omitted). The reason for this more rigorous standard is that mistaken inferences are especially costly in antitrust cases, since they could penalize desirable competitive behavior and "chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. at 594; See [*27] also Valspar Corp. v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 873 F.3d 185, 192 \(3d Cir. 2017\).

[*524] Notwithstanding, when the moving party has carried its burden under Rule 56\(c\), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). In the language of the Rule, the nonmoving party must come forward with "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P 56\(e\). Further, the nonmoving party cannot rely on unsupported assertions, conclusory allegations, or mere suspicions in attempting to survive a summary judgment motion. Williams v. Borough of W. Chester, 891 F.2d 458, 460 (3d Cir. 1989) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)). The non-moving party must respond by pointing to sufficient cognizable evidence to create material issues of fact concerning every element as to which the non-moving party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Simpson v. Kay Jewelers, Div. Of Sterling, Inc., 142 F. 3d 639, 643 n. 3 (3d Cir. 1998), quoting Fuentes v. Perskie, 32 F.3d 759, 762 n.1 (3d Cir. 1994).

Further, summary judgment is not disfavored in the antitrust context. Race Tires Am., Inc. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corp., 614 F.3d 57, 73 (3d Cir. 2010). The entry of summary judgment in favor of an antitrust defendant may actually be required in order to prevent lengthy and drawn-out litigation, which may have a chilling effect on competitive market forces. See, e.g., Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 541 (2d Cir. 1993).

IV. DISCUSSION

A. General Antitrust Requirements

"For plaintiffs suing under federal antitrust laws, one of the prudential limitations is the requirement of 'antitrust standing.'" Ethylpharm S.A. Fr. v. Abbott Labs., 707 F.3d 223, 232 (3d Cir. 2013) (quoting [*28] City of Pittsburgh v. W. Penn Power Co., 147 F.3d 256, 264 (3d Cir. 1998)). The Supreme Court has articulated several factors that guide our analysis of whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing:

- (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; (3) the directness of the injury, which addresses the concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Ethylpharm S.A. Fr. v. Abbott Labs., 707 F.3d at 232-33 (citing Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 545, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)). "The second factor, antitrust injury, 'is a necessary . . . condition of antitrust standing.' If it is lacking, [a court] need not address the remaining [] factors." Id. at 233 (quoting Barton & Pittinos, Inc. v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 118 F.3d 178, 182 (3d Cir. 1997)) (citation omitted). To state a viable antitrust injury, a plaintiff must generally show that it is a competitor or a consumer in the relevant product and geographic markets in which competition was adversely impacted. See id. Assessing antitrust injury necessarily involves consideration [*29] of the relevant product and geographic markets. See Bocobo v. Radiology Consultants of South Jersey, P.A., 305 F. Supp. 2d 422, 425 (D.N.J. 2004), aff'd, 477 F. App'x 890 (3d Cir. 2012). Plaintiff has the burden of defining both of these markets. See Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, 124 F.3d 430, 436 [*525] (3d Cir. 1997); Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 726 (3d Cir. 1991).

At Counts II, IV, & V of the Amended Complaint, Premier alleges violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. To establish a Section 1 violation, a plaintiff must prove (1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the concerted action was illegal; and (4) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d at 442. In order to satisfy the requirement of a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy," there must be "some form of concerted action." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 117 (3d Cir. 1999). "The existence of an agreement is the hallmark of a Section 1 claim." Id.; see also Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 999 (3d Cir. 1994) (The "very essence of a section 1 claim . . . is the existence of an agreement.").

Further, a plaintiff must allege that there has been an antitrust injury. An antitrust injury is the type of injury that the antitrust laws were enacted [**30] to prevent - an injury to competition rather than competitors. See Alberta Gas Chems. Ltd. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours and Co., 826 F.2d 1235, 1241 (3d Cir. 1987) ("antitrust law aims to protect competition, not competitors"). In order to allege an injury to competition, a plaintiff must allege an injury to competition in a particular relevant market. See Eichorn v. AT & T Corp., 248 F.3d 131, 147-48 (3d Cir. 2001). The plaintiff bears the burden of defining the relevant market. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d at 436.

In addition to demonstrating an agreement, the § 1 plaintiff must show that "the conspiracy to which the defendant was a party imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade." Toledo Mack Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Mack Trucks, Inc., 530 F.3d 204, 218 (3d Cir. 2008). In most cases, courts "apply the so-called rule of reason, a case-by-case inquiry designed to assess whether challenged conduct is an anticompetitive practice." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d at 395.

At Counts I, III, & VI of the Amended Complaint, Premier alleges attempted monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. To prevail on an attempted monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant (1) engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) specific intent to monopolize and with (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d at 442. As to the first element, "a firm engages in anticompetitive conduct when it attempts to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency" [**31] or when it competes "on some basis other than the merits." West Penn Allegheny Health Sys., Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 108-109 (citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985)).

As to the second element, a mere intention to prevail over rivals or improve market position is insufficient to show a "specific intent to monopolize." BanxCorp v. Bankrate Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 149912, *69 (D. N.J. 2011). "Even an intent to perform acts that can be objectively viewed as tending toward the acquisition of monopoly power is insufficient, [**526] unless it also appears that the acts were not 'predominantly motivated by legitimate business aims.'" Penn. Dental Ass'n v. Med. Serv. Ass'n of Penn., 745 F.2d 248, 260-261 (3d Cir. 1984) (quoting Times Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 627, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953)). "Direct evidence of specific intent need not be shown; it may be inferred from predatory or exclusionary conduct." Penn. Dental Ass'n v. Med. Serv. Ass'n of Penn, 745 F.2d at 261 (citations omitted).

Determining whether the third element, a "dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power," exists, requires "inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 459, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). As previously stated, the plaintiff has the burden of defining the market. See Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436; Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d at 726.

B. Market Definition

The thread common to Premier's required showing of antitrust standing, and violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act is the existence of a properly defined market. Defining the relevant market requires identification of both the product at issue and the geographic market for [**32] that product. Spectrofuge Corp. v. Beckman Instruments, Inc., 575 F.2d 256, 276 (5th Cir. 1978). Construction of the relevant market, as well as a showing of monopoly power, must be based on expert testimony. Bailey v. Allgas, Inc., 284 F.3d 1237, 1246 (11th Cir. 2002) (citing Colsa Corp. v. Martin Marietta Servs., Inc., 133 F.3d 853, 855 n.4 (11th Cir. 1998)). A relevant product market describes those groups of producers that have the actual or potential ability to take significant amounts of business away from each other because of the similarity of their products. SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1063 (3d Cir. 1978). "A market definition must look at all relevant sources of supply, either actual rivals or eager potential entrants to the market." Id.

A court may dismiss a case:

[w]here the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted.

Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436.

"The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436 (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. U.S., 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). The relevant "product market" is comprised of "commodities reasonably [**33] interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes." United States v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 394, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). Interchangeability "implies that one product is roughly equivalent to another . . . [and] while there might be some degree of preference for the one over the other, either would work effectively." Allen-Myland, Inc. v. Int'l Bus. Machs. Corp., 33 F.3d 194, 206 (3d Cir. 1994). When assessing reasonable interchangeability, "[f]actors to be considered include [*527] price, use and qualities." Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d at 722. Factors that may be relevant include "industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Brown Shoe Co. v. U.S., 370 U.S. at 325.

"Cross-elasticity of demand is a measure of the substitutability of products from the point of view of buyers. More technically, it measures the responsiveness of the demand for one product [X] to changes in the price of a different product [Y]." Mylan Pharms. Inc. v. Warner Chilcott Pub. Ltd. Co., 838 F.3d 421, 437 (3d Cir. 2016) (citing Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, 124 F.3d at 438 n.6). Where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual [**34] inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient. Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436.

Citing a California District Court case, Premier argues that calculating cross-elasticity of demand is "not an absolute requirement." See In re Live Concert Antitrust Litig., 863 F. Supp. 2d 966, 984 (C.D. Cal. 2011). Instead, Premier contends that there are many other factors and "practical indicia"<sup>4</sup> that may be used to define the boundaries of a relevant market for antitrust purposes. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. at 325 (listing such "practical indicia" as "industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors"). The District Court of the District of Columbia has emphasized that evidence other than expert testimony—i.e., documents, testimony, and other forms of qualitative evidence—is relevant to determining the relevant antitrust markets. See FTC v. Sysco Corp., 113 F. Supp. 3d 1, 36-37 (D.D.C. 2015) (taking expert testimony into consideration but ultimately deciding that the relevant market must comport with the "business realities" of the market under consideration); United States v. Anthem, Inc., 236 F. Supp. 3d 171, 197-198 (D.D.C.

<sup>4</sup> The Live Concert Court specifically noted, however, that the Ninth Circuit has "never expressly held that a plaintiff (and, more specifically, a plaintiff's expert economist) can define the relevant product market exclusively by reference to these 'practical indicia.'" In re Live Concert Antitrust Litig., 863 F. Supp. 2d at 985.

2017) (focusing on such as "defendants' own ordinary course of business operations, and the other practical [**35] indicia" to determine market definition)<sup>5</sup>

In defining the relevant product market, however, Premier fails to direct this Court to any evidence with regard to the Brown Shoe factors, any "practical indicia" that defines the boundaries of the relevant market, or the "business realities" of the market. Moreover, without quantitative analysis, Premier's expert, Dr. Fuhr defines the relevant product markets as follows:

In this case, there are two relevant product markets. In the first product [*528] market, there are two separate markets. The first consists of both insured employers who purchase workers' compensation policies and derivatively cost containment services. Also included in this market are self-insured employers who purchase [workers' compensation] third-party administration services from UPMC WorkPartners ("WP") and cost containment services that are purchased in conjunction with the administration of workers' compensation claims.

Cost containment constitutes a value cluster market. (Memorandum Opinion 2/18/16)<sup>6</sup> The cost containment services consist of panel development, telephonic injury management, PT and Diagnostic network access, and medical bill review services. A detailed [**36] description of these services is set forth in the Amended Complaint, Paragraph 28.

The second relevant product market is medical services consumed by individuals receiving workers' compensation benefits. The provider market is defined by the type of medical services routinely purchased by workers' compensation claimants.

Fuhr Report<sup>7</sup> ECF 274, Ex. B, p. 3. In its Amended Complaint, Premier alleges two (2) relevant product markets:

[B]oth insured employers who purchase workers' compensation policies and derivatively cost containment services sold by firms such as [UPMC-HB] and [UPMC-BMS] and [Premier] and self-insured employers who purchase third party administration (workers compensation) services from [UPMC-BMS] and cost-containment services that are purchased in conjunction with the administration workers compensation claims. Am. Compl. ¶ 43; and

[M]edical services consumed by individuals receiving workers' compensation benefits. This provider market is defined by the types of medical services routinely purchased by workers compensation claimants. Am. Compl. ¶ 44.

Because this Court was uncomfortable dismissing an antitrust case at the pleadings stage, it allowed this case to proceed to [**37] discovery, however, after years of discovery, and allowing Premier every opportunity to establish its claims, Premier offers no justification for the above-stated product markets.

Nor does this Court find any plausible support, factual or analytical, for Premier's proposed "cluster" market. Cluster markets are used as a matter of analytical convenience when all or most relevant market participants sell all or most all of the relevant products, and have similar shares in each of the segments. See Emigra Grp., LLC v. Fragomen, Del Rey, Bernsen & Loewy, LLP, 612 F. Supp. 2d 330, 353-55 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (explaining cluster market rationale and requirement that "market shares and entry conditions are similar for each" clustered product). Moreover, the Supreme Court has stated that competitors "must offer all or nearly all" the types of services in the cluster. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 572 n.6, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966).

<sup>5</sup> Premier, however, fails to direct this Court to any Third Circuit case holding that non-quantitative Brown Shoe factors or the "practical indicia" and/or "real world evidence" of the District of Columbia District Court, are sufficient to define a relevant market with or without an expert.

<sup>7</sup> "When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict." In an antitrust case, an expert opinion generally must "incorporate all aspects of the economic reality" of the relevant market. See ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 290 (3d Cir. 2012).

In this instance, none of the competitors identified by Premier offer the same set of [*529] services as those Premier included in the "cluster." UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 145-146; Premier Response ¶¶ 145-146. WorkPartners does not offer itself as a competitor in the market with respect to any cost containment services, and MCMC offers only medical bill repricing in the alleged market. This Court, therefore, finds Premier's attempts to define a relevant [**38] product market necessary to show antitrust standing, and violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act are legally insufficient.

Nor does the Court find that Premier has established a relevant geographic market. The relevant geographic market "is that area in which a potential buyer may rationally look for the goods or services he seeks." Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 212 (3d Cir. 2005). Determined within the specific context of each case, a market's geographic scope must "correspond to the commercial realities of the industry" being considered and "be economically significant." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. at 336-337. "Congress prescribed a pragmatic, factual approach to the definition of the relevant market and not a formal, legalistic one." Id. at 336. Courts generally measure:

a market's geographic scope, the "area of effective competition," by determining the areas in which the seller operates and where consumers can turn, as a practical matter, for supply of the relevant product. This approach evaluates the geographic aspect of the elasticity of a specified market—that is, how far consumers will go to obtain the product or its substitute in response to a given price increase and how likely it is that a price increase for the product in a particular location will induce outside suppliers [**39] to enter that market and increase supply-side competition in that location.

Heerwagen v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, 435 F.3d 219, 227 (2d Cir. 2006) (citations omitted); see also Atl. Exposition Servs. v. SMG, 262 Fed. Appx. 449, 452 (3d Cir. 2008). The geographic market, therefore, is not comprised of the region in which the seller attempts to sell its product, but, rather, is comprised of the area where customers would look to buy such a product. Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d at 726.

Premier, again without quantitative analysis, defines the relevant geographic market as western Pennsylvania<sup>8</sup>. Premier offers no support for its proposed geographic market, but concludes that "testimony from UPMC's own witnesses create a genuine issue of material fact<sup>9</sup>," stating:

Steve Wagner, the Senior Claims Manager for WP, agreed that panel development by and for [WorkPartners] would generally have been confined to Western PA. (Ex. 73, pp. 157-58.) Also, Defendants' own expert witness, Dr. David Reitman, testified that "[he] would expect someone living in Western PA to be treated by a medical service provider most of the time in Western PA."

Premier Brief, p. 34. Though such statements may be true, such evidence is too simplistic and fails to account for the business realities of either the workers' compensation insurance business or the cost containment services related thereto. [**40] An [*530] insured of WorkPartner's for example who has business locations in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia would look for panel development in all three states<sup>10</sup> as an injured worker would seek to be treated by a medical provider near his home.

<sup>9</sup> Premier also suggests that the scope of the relevant geographic market is a question of fact, and therefore an issue for the jury. In U.S. Horticultural Supply v. Scotts Co., 367 Fed. App'x 305 (3d Cir. 2010), however, the Third Circuit affirmed summary judgment where the plaintiff failed to factually support its proposed geographic market. Id. at 311-312.

<sup>10</sup> Premier admits that it has developed provider panels for employers throughout Pennsylvania as well as for employers located in other states, including New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Tennessee, Virginia and others. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 188. Moreover, Premier generated over 2,800 new employer panels between its termination by UPMC and early January 2017, for employers located in Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Ohio, Maryland and West Virginia. See UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 211 & 212.

The geographic market for workers' compensation insurers is at least the entire state of Pennsylvania. WorkPartners is not limited to sales only to employers located in western Pennsylvania, nor are employers in western Pennsylvania limited to insurers in Premier's proposed geographic market. Employers in western Pennsylvania can and do regularly purchase insurance or TPA services from entities outside of Pennsylvania. See UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 174-176.

Similarly, the relevant geographic market for TPA services for workers' compensation self-insured employers is more likely nationwide, but in the very least the full state of Pennsylvania. In fact, Premier admits that many of WorkPartners' TPA competitors, including HealthSmart Solutions, Sedgwick, Gallagher Bassett, Broadspire, PMA, York and others, are large, national companies that provide TPA services across the nation. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 179.

The Court also agrees that the relevant geographic market [**41] for the services provided by Premier is broader than western Pennsylvania. Premier provides cost containment services to workers' compensation insurers and TPA services to providers in twenty-one (21) states including Pennsylvania. Am. Compl. ¶¶ 20, 21 & 25; UPMC CSUMF ¶ 10; Premier Resp. ¶ 10. Moreover, Premier's competitors for cost containment services located outside western Pennsylvania compete for customers in this area, across the entire state, and nationally. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 180-181. Premier's expert, Dr. Fuhr, testified that the markets for repricing, physical therapy networks, and MRI networks are national in scope. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 186.

Premier has offered no evidence to support its proposed geographic market. Moreover, its proposed geographic market is woefully narrow, and does not represent the business realities of either the workers' compensation insurance business or the cost containment service business. Premier's proposed relevant geographic market is legally insufficient to show antitrust standing, or violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

Finally, citing Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 307 \(3d Cir. 2007\), Premier argues that a definition of the relevant markets in this instance is unnecessary because "there is direct [**42] evidence of monopoly power." Premier Brief at 33. Premier contends that there is sufficient evidence regarding UPMC's possession of monopoly or market power in the second product market, workers' compensation medical services. In support, Premier directs this Court to the testimony of UPMC President and CEO Jeffrey A. Romoff before the Pennsylvania House of Representatives Insurance Committee in 2011 during which Mr. Romoff stated "Let me agree that UPMC and Highmark are both monopolies." Premier Ex. 74, pp., 65, 72-73).

Mr. Romoff's testimony, however, appears to relate to general acute care services [*531] on both the provider side (hospitals) and the insurance side. Id. p. 73. There is no evidence that Mr. Romoff's statement has any relation to the markets alleged in this case. The workers' compensation medical services market proposed by Premier consists mainly of outpatient services, including PT and diagnostic services, not in-patient acute care services. See UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 163 & 164. As set forth in Section D below, Premier is unable to direct this Court to either direct or circumstantial evidence of the UPMC Defendants' monopoly power in the relevant markets proposed by Premier. Accordingly, [**43] Premier must prove the existence of a properly-defined relevant product and geographic market.

In order to succeed in showing antitrust standing, a Section 1 violation or a Section 2 violation, a plaintiff must prove the existence of a properly-defined relevant product and geographic market. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. at 454; Pastore v. Bell Tel. Co. of Pennsylvania, 24 F.3d 508, 512-14 \(3d Cir. 1994\); Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 117 \(3d Cir. 1980\) (holding that proof of relevant market was critical in Section 2 attempted monopolization cases); United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 81-82, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 \(D.C. Cir. 2001\) (holding plaintiff failed to establish a dangerous probability of success because it failed to define the relevant market). Premier's failure to define the relevant markets in this instance dooms its antitrust claims, and will result in summary judgment in favor of Defendants. Notwithstanding, the Court will address the issues regarding antitrust standing and Premiers claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

C. Antitrust Standing

In order to assert an antitrust claim, a plaintiff is required to show it has antitrust standing. See City of Pittsburgh v. W. Penn Power Co., 147 F.3d at 264. Antitrust injury, "is a necessary . . . condition of antitrust standing. If it is lacking, [a court] need not address the remaining [] factors." Ethypharm S.A. Fr. v. Abbott Labs., 707 F.3d at 233 (quoting Barton & Pittinos, Inc. v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 118 F.3d 178, 182 \(3d Cir. 1997\)) (citation omitted). The threshold element of antitrust injury is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that [**44] flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 \(1977\). This requirement ensures that antitrust laws are enforced "for the protection of competition, not competitors." Id. at 488. Moreover, only anti-competitive actions between competitors give rise to Sherman Act liability. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 \(1984\); Novak v. Somerset Hosp., 625 Fed. App'x at 67.

It is well established that an antitrust injury reflects an activity's anti-competitive effect on the competitive market. Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 344, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 \(1990\) ("The antitrust injury requirement . . . ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior."). An antitrust plaintiff must allege not only personal harm, but also that the defendant's conduct affected the "prices, quantity or quality of goods or services" in the relevant market. Mathews v. Lancaster Gen. Hosp., 87 F.3d 624, 641 \(3d Cir. 1996\) (citing Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d at 728); see also Eichorn v. AT&T Corp., 248 F.3d 131, 140 \(3d Cir. 2001\) ("[T]he antitrust laws were designed to [*532] protect market-wide anticompetitive activities").

The Third Circuit has consistently held that an individual plaintiff personally aggrieved by an alleged anti-competitive agreement has not suffered an antitrust injury unless the activity has a wider impact on the competitive market. See, e.g., City of Pittsburgh v. West Penn Power Comp., 147 F.3d 256, 266-67 \(3d Cir. 1998\) (holding action that did not lessen competition in a "marketplace" was not antitrust injury). [**45] Premier must show, therefore, that the anticompetitive effect of WorkPartners' alleged illegal anti-competitive activity created market-wide injury in order to fall within the protections of the Sherman Act. Eichorn v. AT&T Corp., 248 F.3d at 141 ("an individual plaintiff personally aggrieved by an alleged anti-competitive agreement has not suffered an antitrust injury unless the activity has a wider impact on the competitive market.").

Here, Premier has failed to demonstrate that: (1) it is a competitor of the UPMC Defendants; (2) its injury stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendants' behavior; (3) it was shut out of the relevant market; and (4) there was harm to competition in the relevant market.

As a vendor/service provider for WorkPartners, Premier was in a vertical relationship with WorkPartners, not a horizontal relationship, and was not a competitor. Premier does not sell workers' compensation insurance or TPA services in competition with WorkPartners. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 128, 142-143. Premier is not a licensed provider of health care or medical services. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 14. Further, WorkPartners does not offer any "cost containment" services other than to its own clients, and, thus, WorkPartners [**46] and Premier do not compete. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 150-157.

Moreover, the termination of a vendor does not produce an antitrust injury, as such Premier's harm did not result from harm associated with competitive harm to the market. To the contrary, Premier's harm was the direct result of WorkPartner's decision to hire Align to generate panels for its new insureds, and Premier's failure to negotiate and sign the MSA offered by WorkPartners in February of 2015. WorkPartner's failure to replace its incumbent repricing vendor, MCMC, with Premier caused no harm to Premier because it cannot lose business it did not have. Further, the fact that Premier was found to be the more effective repricing vendor in Mehalik's audit report is of no moment. "Paying inflated purchasing prices to vendors, without more does not constitute an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Cottman Transmission Sys., LLC v. Kershner, 536 F. Supp. 2d 543, 559 \(E.D. Pa. 2008\) (quoting 2660 Woodley Road Joint Venture v. ITT Sheraton Corp., 369 F.3d 732, 738 \(3d Cir. 2004\)).

Premier has failed to show that it is foreclosed from a properly-defined relevant market. To demonstrate substantial foreclosure, a plaintiff "must both define the relevant market and prove the degree of foreclosure."<sup>11</sup> Although "[t]he test is not total foreclosure," the challenged practices must "bar a [**47] substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit." United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 191 (3d Cir. 2005). Dr. Fuhr, Premier's expert, did not opine that Premier was substantially foreclosed from any market. MCMC CSUMF ¶ 69<sup>12</sup> UPMC Ex. Q, p. 318. Further, [*533] Premier admits that, other than WorkPartners, it is able to work with employers insured by all other insurance carriers and TPA's in Pennsylvania. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 201. Premier also believes that it is the largest panel generator in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and it currently manages as many as 20,000 active provider panels in Pennsylvania. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 158 & 160. Moreover, Premier generated over 2,800 new employer panels between its termination by UPMC and early January 2017, for employers located in Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Ohio, Maryland and West Virginia. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 211 & 212. Further, WorkPartners' termination of Premier did not prevent, or otherwise hinder, its ability to develop its PT/MRI Network either inside or outside of Pennsylvania. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 205. Any contention by Premier that it is foreclosed from any properly-defined relevant market in this matter is pure fantasy.

Finally, Premier has failed to show harm to competition in the relevant [**48] market. Premier's expert, in fact, offers no opinion as to how any relevant market was harmed by WorkPartners' termination of Premier. See Broadcom Corp., 501 F.3d at 308 ("There must be proof that competition, not merely competitors, has been harmed"); See also Eisai, Inc. v. Sanofi Aventis U.S., LLC, 821 F.3d 394, 403 (3d Cir. 2016) (An exclusive dealing agreement is illegal under the rule of reason "only if the 'probable effect' of the arrangement is to substantially lessen competition, rather than merely disadvantage rivals."). A court must also analyze the likely or actual anticompetitive effects such as whether there was reduced output, increased price, or reduced quality in goods or services.). Premier's expert described the harm to competition in this matter as follows:

It is clear that [Premier] and competition [sic] have been severely damaged by [WorkPartners'] anticompetitive actions. The potential elimination of [Premier], a low-priced competitor can lead to less competition, less choice for the consumer and higher prices in the market and thus has potential to harm consumers.

Fuhr Report, ECF 274, Ex. B, pp. 10-11 (Emphasis added). Such alleged harm is pure speculation by Dr. Fuhr. Premier, in fact, was not eliminated from the market. Moreover, neither Dr. Fuhr nor Premier [**49] provides any evidence that: (1) insurance premiums have risen; (2) consumers for repricing services have been harmed, either with higher prices or reduced quality or supply; (3) TPA prices have risen; or (4) output has decreased in any relevant market. Dr. Fuhr conducted no analysis of WorkPartners' prices, nor did he show any price effect resulting from WorkPartners' use of MCMC and Align. Premier, therefore, has failed to show it has antitrust standing, and its antitrust claims fail as a matter of law.

Assuming, however, that Premier could demonstrate antitrust standing, the Court finds that its claims under Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman fail as a matter of law on substantive grounds.

D. Section 2 of the Sherman Act (Counts I & III)

To prevail on an attempted monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant (1) engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) specific intent to monopolize and with (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d at 442. Focusing on the third element, Premier is unable to demonstrate that WorkPartners has a dangerous probability of obtaining monopoly power in a relevant market.

[*534] The question of whether a defendant had a [*50] dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing is a fact-intensive inquiry. Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d at 319. Courts are to consider factors such as the defendant's market share, the strength of the competition, likely developments in the industry, entry barriers, the nature of the defendant's anti-competitive conduct, and the elasticity of demand. See, e.g., Pastore v. Bell Tel. Co., 24 F.3d at 513; Barr Laboratories, Inc. v. Abbott Laboratories, 978 F.2d 98, 112 \(3d Cir. 1992\).

Courts primarily look to the size of a defendant's market power to determine whether a defendant presents a dangerous probability of gaining monopoly power. Pennsylvania Dental Ass'n v. Medical Serv. Ass'n of Pa., 745 F.2d 248, 260 \(3d Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1016, 105 S. Ct. 2021, 85 L. Ed. 2d 303 (1985). The leading antitrust commentators have stated that "the basic thrust of the classic rule is the presumption that attempt does not occur in the absence of a rather significant market share." 3 PHILLIP AREEDA & DONALD F. TURNER, ANTITRUST LAW P 820 (1978).

Areeda and Turner have suggested a rule of thumb for determining whether a particular market share may be indicative of a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Id. at P 835c. For defendants who control 30% or less of the relevant market, claims of attempted monopolization should be "presumptively" rejected. Id.; See ID Sec. Sys. Can., Inc. v. Checkpoint Sys., Inc., 249 F. Supp. 2d 622, 648 \(E.D. Pa. 2003\) ("As a matter of law, a market share of less than 30 percent is presumptively insufficient to establish [*51] the market power that is a prerequisite to a defendant's enjoying a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power."). Where a defendant has a market share in the range of 30-50%, attempt claims should be rejected unless the defendant's conduct strongly suggests an ability to garner monopoly power. 3 PHILLIP AREEDA & DONALD F. TURNER, ANTITRUST LAW at P 835c; accord M&M Med. Supplies & Serv., Inc. v. Pleasant Valley Hosp., Inc., 981 F.2d 160, 168 \(4th Cir. 1992\) (en banc) ("[C]laims involving between 30% and 50% shares should usually be rejected, except when conduct is very likely to achieve monopoly or when conduct is invidious."); See also Mahaska Bottling Co. v. PepsiCo Inc., 271 F. Supp. 3d 1054, 1076, \(S.D. Iowa 2017\) (Aggregated market share of over 50% figures did not suffice to establish that PepsiCo possesses a dangerous probability of monopolizing any market.).

Although these are not rigid rules of law, the views of these oft-cited commentators, when applied in conjunction with prevailing case law, create a useful framework for analyzing Section 2 claims of attempted monopolization. See Acme Mkts. v. Wharton Hardware & Supply Corp., 890 F. Supp. 1230, 1241-1242 \(D. N.J. 1995\). Applying this framework to the present case, the Court concludes as a matter of law that the UPMC Defendants do not present a dangerous probability of obtaining monopoly power based upon the undisputed facts, and giving the Premier the benefit of favorable inferences.

Here, [*52] Premier's market definition for "cost containment" services is defined as being "derivative" to (or supplied "in conjunction with") workers' compensation insurance and/or TPA services. See Am. Compl. ¶ 43. WorkPartners competes with respect to insurance and TPA services. WorkPartners could only harm competition in the Premier-defined "cost-containment" services market if it possessed market power in workers' compensation insurance and TPA services. The record, however, fails to show that that WorkPartners [*535] has monopoly power or a dangerous probability of achieving it.

Between 2011 and 2016, over 100 insurance carrier groups have sold workers' compensation insurance in Pennsylvania. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 117. WorkPartners competes against all other workers' compensation insurance carriers in Pennsylvania, including Eastern Alliance Group, Highmark Insurance Group, Lackawanna Insurance Group, Liberty Mutual, PMA Insurance and Travelers, for workers' compensation insurance. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 118 & 119.

WorkPartners' began selling workers' compensation insurance in 2010 and did not have a market share higher than three percent (3%) in any of the years 2011 - 2015. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 120 & 126. In 2015, the [*53] year Premier was terminated, WorkPartners had a share of Pennsylvania workers' compensation insurance premiums between 2.5% - 2.8%, which was the the twelfth (12th) largest market share in Pennsylvania. UPMC CSUMF ¶¶ 121, 122 & 126. Moreover, even if the relevant geographic market was restricted to "western Pennsylvania," WorkPartners share of workers' compensation insurance premiums in that region was only approximately 6.1%. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 177. This Court finds that such market share is too low to create a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly.

Premier also fails to direct this Court to any evidence in the record of market shares for workers' compensation TPA services, and Dr. Fuhr did not gather any information relating to such shares, either in western Pennsylvania or any other geographic area. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 139. Accordingly, there is no basis for Premier to claim that WorkPartners holds market power or a dangerous probability of achieving a monopoly in TPA services. Similarly, Premier fails to show that the UPMC Defendants have monopoly power in the market for workers' compensation medical services. Dr. Fuhr offered no structural analysis of market for workers' compensation [**54] medical services, and included no estimates of market shares from which market power could be inferred. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 162. Further, the UPMC Defendants' inpatient revenues account for less than 14% of total workers' compensation medical expenses paid in 2015 in western Pennsylvania. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 171; UPMC Exhibit A ¶ 112.

Market share is not all determinative, however, and may be offset by other evidence bearing upon competitive conditions within the industry, such as proof that the market remains highly competitive, that the defendant controls key materials or technology, and the presence or absence of other barriers to new market entry or expansion by existing competitors. Race Tires Am., Inc. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corp., 660 F. Supp. 2d 590, 603 (W.D. Pa. 2009); See, e.g., U.S. v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 53, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (reversing findings that Microsoft had attempted to monopolize an alleged market for internet browser software, where the government failed to either properly define the relevant market or to demonstrate the presence of substantial barriers to entry.). The large number of competitors in Pennsylvania in both the workers' compensation insurance and workers' compensation insurance TPA markets is an indication of the absence of barriers to entry in such markets. Moreover, there is no evidence of record [**55] bearing upon such competitive conditions that would indicate WorkPartners has a dangerous probability of achieving a monopoly in any of the relevant markets. Premiers failure to establish the third element of its attempted monopolization claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act dooms its claims at Counts I & III of the Amended Complaint.

[*536] E. Section 1 of the Sherman Act (Counts II & IV)

To establish a Section 1 violation, a plaintiff must prove (1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets<sup>13</sup> (3) that the concerted action was illegal; and (4) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d at 442. Failure to satisfy any one of these elements precludes a plaintiff from establishing a viable restraint-of-trade claim. Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir. 2005) ("Without proof of all of these elements, a Section 1 claim cannot be maintained.").

In order to satisfy the requirement of a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy," there must be "some form of concerted action." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 117 (3d Cir. 1999). "The existence of an agreement is the hallmark of a Section 1 claim." Id.; see also Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 999 (3d Cir. 1994) (The "very essence of a section 1 claim . . . is the existence of an agreement.").

In addition to demonstrating an agreement, [**56] the § 1 plaintiff must show that "the conspiracy to which the defendant was a party imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade." Toledo Mack Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Mack Trucks, Inc., 530 F.3d 204, 218 (3d Cir. 2008). In most cases, courts "apply the so-called rule of reason, a case-by-case inquiry designed to assess whether challenged conduct is an anticompetitive practice." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 801 F.3d at 395. Premier is unable to show either an exclusive contract, concerted action, or an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Premier alleges that WorkPartners and MCMC conspired to exclude Premier from the relevant markets. MCMC was the incumbent repricing vendor for WorkPartners, and WorkPartners refused to replace MCMC with Premier despite a WorkPartners' report that indicated Premier would be the better company to serve as WorkPartners' repricing vendor. The Sherman Act, however, "does not require competitive bidding, and a buyer can conspire with a new supplier to take the place of its present supplier." [Advanced Power Sys., Inc. v. Premier offers no evidence that would convince this Court that the MSA offered to MCMC, to remain as the repricing vendor, was anything but a unilateral decision made by WorkPartners. There is no evidence of concerted action or a conspiratorial agreement between MCMC and WorkPartners to foreclose Premier from a properly defined market.

<sup>13</sup> This Court has already found that Premier has failed in its attempt to define the relevant product and geographic markets, and has also failed to show an antitrust injury. Further analysis of Premier's alleged Section 1 claims is purely academic.

Agreements that do not fall under per se illegality are analyzed under the "rule of reason" to determine whether they are an unreasonable restraint on trade. [Burtch v. Premier may satisfy this burden by proving the existence of actual anticompetitive effects, or Defendants' market power. Id. As set forth in Sections C and D above, the Court has determined that Premier is unable to demonstrate any anticompetitive effects in a relevant market or that WorkPartners has market power in such market. Premier's Claim at Count IV of the Amended Complaint fails as a matter of law.

Premier also contends that UPMC, UPMC-HB and WorkPartners "have together, in concert, refused to deal with [Premier] for the purpose of monopolizing the market and refused to permit their insureds and self-insureds to deal with [Premier]." See Amended Complaint ¶ 199. Section 1 applies only to concerted action and does not proscribe independent action by a single entity, regardless of its purpose and effect on competition. [Am. UPMC-BMS are wholly owned subsidiaries of UPMC. UPMC CSUMF ¶ 44; Premier Response ¶ 44. Premier's claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act against the UPMC Defendants (Count II), therefore, fails as a matter of law.

[*538] F. Antitrust Claims-Misappropriation of Trade Secrets (Counts V & VI)

Premier contends that the alleged misappropriation of its trade secrets by MCMC and WorkPartners effectively creates a per se violation of the Sherman Act. In support Premier cites to Albert Sauter Co. v. Richard S. Sauter Co., 368 F. Supp. 501, 513 (E.D. Pa. 1973) and SI Handling Sys., Inc. v. Heisley, 658 F. Supp. 362 (E.D. Pa. 1986). The mere commission of an intentional tort, however, does not create a per se violation of the Sherman Act which requires a showing of anticompetitive effect and/or a restraint of trade.

The Third Circuit criticized Sauter and rejected the proposition that the mere intentional commission of a state tort constitutes a per se antitrust violation, finding that a plaintiff was required to show that the commission of a state tort constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade in order to succeed under the Sherman [**60] Act. Franklin Music Co. v. Am. Broad. Cos., 616 F.2d 528, 558 (3d Cir. 1979). Moreover, the SI Handling Sys., Inc. court specifically stated that "[t]he intent necessary for a § 1 violation, however, must be an anti-competitive intent and may not simply be inferred from what plaintiff characterizes as unlawful or 'immoral' acts designed to injure." SI Handling Systems, Inc. v. Heisley, 658 F. Supp. at 378. To explain the difference, the court quoted Judge Sloviter's concurrence in Franklin Music Co. as follows:

There is a substantial difference between intent to injure a party which supports a tort recovery and the type of anticompetitive intent on which a Sherman Act § 1 claim can be founded. For example, if two disgruntled customers conspire to burn a department store which would, if accomplished, have the effect of destroying its business, it seems improbable that a court would hold that the intent which suffices to support a claim under state tort law is itself also enough to support a claim for violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The anticompetitive intent which acts as a "surrogate for effects" must be targeted directly to the victim in its competitive aspects - injury to the victim qua competitor. It follows that plaintiff in this case cannot resurrect its antitrust claim because of its success before the jury [**61] on the intentional state tort claims, even though the necessary predicate of that success was the finding of an intent to injure plaintiff.

SI Handling Systems, Inc. v. Heisley, 658 F. Supp. at 378-379 (quoting Franklin Music Co. v. Am. Broad. Cos., 616 F.2d at 556 (Sloviter, J. concurring)).

More importantly, the Supreme Court agreed that business torts do not create per se antitrust violations:

... other laws, for example, "unfair competition" laws, business tort laws, or regulatory laws, provide remedies for various "competitive practices thought to be offensive to proper standards of business morality." 3 P. AREEDA & H. HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW P651d, p. 78 (1996). Thus, this Court has refused to apply per se reasoning in cases involving that kind of activity. See Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 225, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 (1993) ("Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws").

Nynex Corp. v. Discon, 525 U.S. at 137.

Therefore, Premier is not excused from its rule of reason obligations, which require proof of relevant market definitions, market power, antitrust injury, harm to competition, and market wide price increases [*539] and quantity reductions. Because Premier is not able, nor has it attempted to, demonstrate such noncompetitive effects of the alleged misappropriation of its trade secrets, its claims [**62] set forth at Counts V and VI of the Amended Complaint also fail and will be dismissed.

G. Unfair Competition Under State Law (Count VII)

Because the Court shall enter Summary Judgment in favor of the Defendants on all of Premier's Federal claims, the Court will decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the lone state law claim. Premier can pursue such claim in the parallel state action filed in the Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania at No. GD-15-007247.

V. CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, Defendants' motions for summary judgment shall be granted. An appropriate Order follows.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

THIS MATTER is before the Court on Defendant Southside Oil, LLC's ("Southside") Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings (the "Motion for Judgment") (ECF No. 43) and Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to File a Second Amended Complaint (the "Motion to Amend") (ECF No. 47). This action arises from a contract dispute between Southside, a wholesale distributor of ExxonMobil motor fuels, and Plaintiffs, who are ten Maryland retail gasoline stations.<sup>1</sup> The Motions are ripe for disposition, and no hearing is necessary. See Local Rule 105.6 (D.Md. 2018). For the reasons outlined below, the Court will grant Southside's Motion and deny Plaintiffs' [*2] Motion.

---

<sup>1</sup>The ten Plaintiffs are Best Effort First Time, LLC; HMA, Inc.; AJ&R Petroleum, Inc.; Fuel Management, Inc.; Energy Management, Inc.; Duncan Services, Inc.; Japan Plus, Inc.; Japan Plus Two, Inc.; Japan Plus Four, Inc.; and Jamal & Luqman, Inc. (Am. Compl., ECF No. 14).

I. BACKGROUND<sup>2</sup>

In 2009, ExxonMobil sold its marketing assets, including some gas stations. (Am. Compl. ¶ 6, ECF No. 14). Plaintiffs' stations were some of those sold from ExxonMobil to Southside. (Id.). Southside bought Exxon-branded fuel for resale directly from ExxonMobil under a dealer agreement wherein Southside "step[ped] into the shoes of" ExxonMobil as Plaintiffs' landlord and supplier of fuels. (Id. ¶¶ 5-6). Prior to closing the deal, Plaintiffs, along with others, instituted lawsuits against ExxonMobil and the proposed purchasers, including Southside. (Id. ¶ 7). Those lawsuits settled on the basis of individualized agreements between Southside and each Plaintiff (the "Settlement Agreements"). (Id. ¶ 8).

Included in the Settlement Agreements were terms permitting Plaintiffs to purchase the service stations they had previously leased from ExxonMobil. (Id. ¶ 9). Each Plaintiff's right to purchase was conditioned upon entering into twenty-year fuel supply contracts with Southside (the "Supply Contracts"). (Id.). The Settlement Agreements required each Plaintiff to purchase all of its fuel from Southside for the twenty-year term of the Supply Contracts and to purchase a [*3] minimum number of gallons every year. (Id.).

The Settlement Agreement negotiations focused on the per-gallon price for each grade of gasoline and diesel fuel in the Supply Contracts. (Id. ¶ 10). Plaintiffs sought a price that would enable their business to be profitable while meeting the minimum volume requirement. (Id.). Plaintiffs also did not want an "open-price term" contract because they wanted to limit the amount Southside could increase the fuel prices. (Id. ¶¶ 10-11). An open-price term contract permits the seller to increase the price to whatever the market will bear. (Id. ¶ 12).

Plaintiffs and Southside ultimately agreed on a "rack plus" pricing formula. (Id. ¶ 13). The "rack plus" pricing formula involves two numbers: the rack price and the mark-up. (Id. ¶ 13). The rack price is the per-gallon price refiners, like ExxonMobil, charge to distributors, like Southside, when distributors purchase fuel in full transport loads. (Id. ¶ 14). The rack price is essentially the distributor's cost for the product. (Id. ¶¶ 13-15). The mark-up is the distributor's built-in profit margin, which when added to the rack price yields the mark-up price. (Id. ¶¶ 16-17).

The Settlement Agreements [*4] provided that Southside would add a cents-per-gallon mark-up of between 1.5¢ and 6.5¢, and each Plaintiff negotiated its particular rack-plus price in their individual Supply Contracts with Southside. (Id. ¶¶ 17, 26). The parties also agreed that Plaintiffs would pay federal and state taxes, environmental fees, and freight charges on top of the rack-plus per-gallon price. (Id. ¶ 18). The Supply Contracts contained identical arbitration provisions (the "Arbitration Provisions"), which provided that, "[a]ny monetary claim arising out of or relating to this agreement, or any breach thereof, shall be submitted to arbitration . . ." (Id. ¶ 30).

In 2015, Southside began charging Plaintiffs a per-gallon price that was considerably more than the rack price plus the agreed-upon cents-per-gallon mark-up. (Id. ¶ 38). Southside charged Plaintiffs a mark-up of as much as 12¢ or 13¢. (Id.). Southside had negotiated an agreement with ExxonMobil wherein ExxonMobil would sell its fuels to Southside at a per gallon price that was "considerably lower" than the price it charged to other distributors. (Id. ¶ 39). Southside then calculated the rack price based on the non-discounted prices ExxonMobil charged [*5] other distributors instead of its own discounted price, which it regarded as "something different." (Id.).

When Plaintiffs realized that the prices Southside charged other Maryland ExxonMobil stations with open-price term contracts were "considerably lower than the prices" Southside charged Plaintiffs "for the very same products, at the very same time," they asked Southside to provide ExxonMobil's rack prices so they could determine if Southside was charging them more than the permitted cents-per-gallon amounts. (Id. ¶ 40). Southside provided Plaintiffs with price information, which showed that Southside's prices to Plaintiffs were considerably higher than the applicable cents-per-gallon amount above the rack prices, despite Southside's claim that they were not. (Id. ¶¶ 41, 43).

Southside told Plaintiffs that "rack prices" within the meaning of their contracts were not what Southside paid to ExxonMobil but rather the prices ExxonMobil charged other distributors who did not have a special discounted agreement. (Id. ¶¶ 42-43).

In order to earn a profit, Plaintiffs had to raise their retail prices above a competitive level. (Id. ¶ 45). As a result, Plaintiffs lost business to their lower-priced [*6] competitors, including other Maryland Exxon dealers who purchased from Southside at lower prices. (Id.).

On March 27, 2017, Plaintiffs sued Southside. (ECF No. 1). In their five-count Amended Complaint, they allege: Breach of Contract - Pricing (Count I); Breach of Contract - Rebates (Count II); violation of 15 U.S.C. § 13 \(2018\) - Price Discrimination (Count III); Lack of Consideration for the Arbitration Provision (Count IV); and Arbitration Provision - Unlawful Waiver of Rights (Count V). (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 48-81).

On March 30, 2018, the Court dismissed Counts IV and V, and compelled Plaintiffs to arbitrate Counts I and II. (Mar. 30, 2018 Mem. Op. at 27, ECF No. 38). The only remaining claim before this Court, therefore, is Count III, for which Plaintiffs request declaratory and injunctive relief. (Am. Compl. at 23).

On April 30, 2018, Southside filed its Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. (ECF No. 43). On May 14, 2018, Plaintiffs filed an Opposition. (ECF No. 46). Plaintiffs contemporaneously filed their Motion for Leave to File a Second Amended Complaint, seeking to address the deficiencies in Count III of its Amended Complaint. (ECF No. 47). On May 29, 2018, Southside filed its Reply, (ECF [*7] No. 48), and its Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion (ECF No. 49). To date, the Court has no record the Plaintiffs filed a Reply.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Southside's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

1. Standard of Review

Southside moves under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(c\) for judgment on the pleadings. "Under Rule 12\(c\), a party may move for judgment on the pleadings any time after the pleadings are closed, as long as it is early enough not to delay trial." Prosperity Mortg. Co. v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's, No. GLR-12-2004, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98286, 2013 WL 3713690, at \*2 \(D.Md. July 15, 2013\). The pleadings are closed when the defendant files an answer. See Burbach Broad. Co. of Del. v. Elkins Radio Corp., 278 F.3d 401, 405 \(4th Cir. 2002\).

A Rule 12\(c\) motion is governed by the same standard as Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motions to dismiss. Id. at 406. The purpose of a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion is to "test[ ] the sufficiency of a complaint," not to "resolve contests surrounding the facts, the merits of a claim, or the applicability of defenses." King v. Rubenstein, 825 F.3d 206, 214 \(4th Cir. 2016\) (quoting Edwards v. City of Goldsboro, 178 F.3d 231, 243 \(4th Cir. 1999\)). A complaint fails to state a claim if it does not contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," Fed.R.Civ.P. 8\(a\)\(2\), or does not "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face," Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\)). A claim is facially plausible "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable [*8] for the misconduct alleged." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). "Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). Though the plaintiff is not required to forecast evidence to prove the elements of the claim, the complaint must allege sufficient facts to establish each element. Goss v. Bank of America, N.A., 917 F.Supp.2d 445, 449 \(D.Md. 2013\) (quoting Walters v. McMahan, 684 F.3d 435, 439 \(4th Cir. 2012\)), aff'd sub nom. Goss v. Bank of America, NA, 546 F.App'x 165 \(4th Cir. 2013\).

In considering a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, a court must examine the complaint as a whole, consider the factual allegations in the complaint as true, and construe the factual allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 268, 114 S. Ct. 807, 127 L. Ed. 2d 114 \(1994\); Lambeth v. Bd. of Comm'r's, 407 F.3d 266, 268 \(4th Cir. 2005\) (citing Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 \(1974\)). But, the court need not accept unsupported or conclusory factual allegations devoid of any reference to actual events, United Black Firefighters v. Hirst, 604 F.2d 844, 847 \(4th Cir. 1979\), or legal conclusions couched as factual allegations, Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

2. Analysis

In Count III, Plaintiffs allege a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act of 1936 \(the "RPA"\). The RPA, an amendment to § 2\(a\) of the Clayton Antitrust Act, prohibits price discrimination by producers. 15 U.S.C. § 13. A business violates the RPA when it sells two of the same or similar products at different prices to different buyers within a brief period and those sales cause injury to competition. Id. at § 13\(a\).<sup>3</sup> There are three categories of [*9] competitive injuries that give rise to an RPA claim: primary line, secondary line, and tertiary line. See Volvo Trucks N. America, Inc. v. Reeder-Simco GMC, Inc., 546 U.S. 164, 176, 126 S. Ct. 860, 163 L. Ed. 2d 663 \(2006\). Here, Plaintiffs allege a secondary-line injury, which involves price discrimination that injures competition among the discriminating seller's customers, typically referred to as "favored" and "disfavored" purchasers. Id.; see Texaco Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 558 n.15, 110 S. Ct. 2535, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492 \(1990\).

To establish a prima facie case of secondary-line injury under the RPA, Plaintiffs must show that: (1) the fuel sales were made in interstate commerce; (2) the fuel sold to them was of "like grade and quality" as that sold to the other buyers; (3) Southside discriminated in price between Plaintiffs and other fuel purchasers; and (4) the effect of such discrimination was "to injure, destroy, or prevent competition" to the advantage of the other purchasers. [*10] Volvo Trucks, 546 U.S. at 176 (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\)).

The Court's March 30, 2018 Memorandum Opinion concluded that Plaintiffs had adequately stated a claim as to the third and fourth elements of the RPA claim. ((Mar. 30, 2018 Mem. Op. at 22-27, ECF No. 38). The Court did not address the second element because Southside did not dispute it in its motion to dismiss. (See id.). However, Southside now asserts that Plaintiffs do not state a claim as to the second element of the RPA. It asserts that, "because the gasoline was not purchased on like terms and conditions, pursuant to established case law, the goods themselves cannot be of 'like grade or quality,' an essential element of an RPA claim." (Def.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. J. Pleadings ["Def.'s Mot."] at 2, ECF No. 43-1). The Court agrees.

The Supreme Court has established that the RPA "proscribes unequal treatment of different customers in comparable transactions." F.T.C. v. Borden Co., 383 U.S. 637, 643, 86 S. Ct. 1092, 16 L. Ed. 2d 153 \(1966\). In Borden, the Court determined that physically or chemically identical products sold under both nationally advertised and private labels are of "like grade and quality," because "economic factors inherent in brand names and national advertising should not be considered in the jurisdictional inquiry under the statutory [*11] 'like grade and quality' test." Id. at 645-46 (quoting Report of The Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 158 (1955)). The Supreme Court applied this holding in a subsequent case regarding the sale of branded and unbranded gasoline, noting that branded gasoline and unbranded gasoline are "of like grade and quality." Texaco Inc., 496 U.S. at 556 n.14.

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition . . . .

While the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has not addressed the standard for determining whether goods sold under different contract terms are of "like grade and quality" for the purposes of the RPA, several other federal circuit courts have. See Aerotec Int'l, Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 836 F.3d 1171 (9th Cir. 2016); Cleveland v. Viacom, Inc., 73 F.App'x 736 (5th Cir. 2003) (unpublished); Coastal Fuels of Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Caribbean Petroleum Corp., 990 F.2d 25 (1st Cir. 1993); A.A. Poultry Farms, Inc. v. Rose Acre Farms, Inc., 881 F.2d 1396 (7th Cir. 1989); FLM Collision Parts, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 543 F.2d 1019 (2d Cir. 1976). These cases provide the Court with adequate guidelines by which to evaluate Plaintiffs' allegations. The Court now considers whether the Amended Complaint sufficiently alleges that the fuel sold to Plaintiffs was of like grade or quality as that sold to other buyers under different contract terms.

In A.A. Poultry, the Seventh Circuit determined that eggs crated and sold immediately were not of like grade and quality as eggs segregated from on-line egg production, known as "specials." 881 F.2d at 1407-08. The court reasoned that, "[a]lthough 'special' eggs as delivered may be physically [*12] indistinguishable to the buyer, they are not fundamentally the same good, for the same reason a seat on the 6:00 a.m. flight from Chicago to New York is not the same as a seat on the 5:00 p.m. flight, and a seat on the 5:00 p.m. flight reserved two weeks in advance is not the same as a seat on that flight for which the passenger had to stand by." Id. at 1408. The court also noted that "[n]o one supposes that a seller must charge the same price on contracts signed at different times, or on long-term contracts and spot sales." Id. at 1407.

Likewise, in Viacom, the Fifth Circuit found no violation of the RPA where retail video stores received a lower price through their agreements to purchase an entire output of videos under long-term purchase obligations, whereas other retailers paid more because they could choose the titles to purchase after learning of the box office results. 73 F.App'x at 741. The court concluded, "[a]s a result of the significant differences . . . between the terms of the agreements, any disparities in amounts paid cannot support a claim for price discrimination." Id.

The Ninth Circuit has also held that "[u]nlawful secondary-line price discrimination exists only to the extent that the differentially priced [*13] product or commodity is sold in a 'reasonably comparable' transaction." Aerotec, 836 F.3d at 1188 (quoting Tex. Gulf Sulphur Co. v. J.R. Simplot Co., 418 F.2d 793, 807 (9th Cir. 1969)). In Aerotec, the plaintiff, an independent servicer of Honeywell products, alleged that Honeywell discriminated against it under the RPA by giving greater discounts off the catalog price for the same replacement parts to Honeywell-affiliated servicers. Id. at 1187-88. The Ninth Circuit explained that the plaintiff was "mistaken in its premise that any transactional differences are not reflective of materially different terms," because "servicers under an affiliate contract are subject to substantial obligations that are not imposed on independent repair shops like [the plaintiff]." Id. at 1188.

Finally, the Second Circuit has also adhered to the principles outlined above, finding no RPA violations when varying prices were the result of "different terms of sale." FLM Collision Parts, 543 F.2d at 1026 ("The [RPA], as its language indicates, requires equality of treatment among purchasers, but it does not require a seller to adopt a single uniform price under all circumstances."); see Coalition For A Level Playing Field, LLC v. Autozone, Inc., 737 F.Supp.2d 194, 216-17 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 7, 2010) (noting that the "[RPA] does not prohibit price differences that reflect materially different contract terms" and that "[t]he complaint . . . ignores the possibility that these contract [*14] differences account for the lower prices paid by the retailer defendants").

In this case, there is no question that the commodities at issue are physically identical: Exxon-branded gasoline and diesel. As the case law from other circuits makes clear, however, physically identical products are not always "of like grade and quality" for the purposes of the RPA. Even if they are physically identical, goods that are sold under "materially different terms" are not "of like grade and quality." Plaintiffs argue that the differences in the contracts—specifically, the Plaintiffs' twenty-year supply contract with "rack plus" pricing versus their competitors' "short-term ([three] year) open-price term contracts"—are not materially different terms, and consequently, do not affect the "grade and quality" of the fuel at issue. (Pls.' Resp. Opp'n Def.'s Mot. J. Pleadings ["Pls.' Opp'n"] at 2-3, ECF No. 47). The Court is not persuaded.

The fuel sold in this case is akin to the eggs sold in A.A. Poultry and the videos sold in Viacom, where the physically identical eggs and physically identical videos, respectively, were sold under materially different contract terms, rendering the products not of like [*15] grade and quality. See A.A. Poultry, 881 F.2d at 1407-08; Viacom, 73 F.App'x at 741. Here, the Amended Complaint alleges that Plaintiffs' competitors "purchased under open-price term contracts," which it specifically distinguishes from its own negotiated "rack plus" pricing formula. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 12-13, 40). Plaintiffs state, "Under an 'open-price term' contract, there is no practical limit on the per gallon profit the seller can earn. That is, the seller can mark up the product over its cost to whatever extent the market will bear, with no per gallon ceiling on the amount of the seller's profit margin." (Id. ¶ 12). Under 'rack plus' pricing, by contrast, Southside could only charge Plaintiffs a certain number of cents over and above ExxonMobil's "rack price." (Id. ¶¶ 13-15, 26). It is not surprising, then, that these two clearly different pricing terms resulted in different fuel prices for Plaintiffs and their competitors. The difference between the fuels at issue are the result of separately negotiated pricing contracts, as specifically alleged in the Amended Complaint, (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 12-13, 26, 40), and not a result of being branded or unbranded. Borden, 383 U.S. at 640.

In their Opposition to Southside's Motion, Plaintiffs also concede that the contracts contain [*16] material differences. They state, "[I]long-term and short-term open-price term contracts are fundamentally different." (Pls.' Opp'n at 3). While Plaintiffs attempt to argue that these "fundamental" differences are not "material" differences, they later argue that "the only 'material differences' between Plaintiffs' contracts and the open-price term contracts do not justify the lower prices charged to Plaintiffs' competitors." (Id. at 13). Instead "these differences would support lower prices to Plaintiffs." (Id.). This argument, however, only supports the notion that the fuel sold to Plaintiffs is not of like grade and quality as that sold to its competitors.

Plaintiffs next argue that, if the lower price had been in their favor, there would be no RPA violation because they bargained for that lower price, but because the lower price is not in their favor, then there is an RPA violation. The RPA and antitrust law are not so fickle, nor are they meant to counteract the effects of knowledgeably negotiated contract terms. The RPA "signals no large departure from antitrust law's primary concern, interbrand competition." Volvo Trucks, 546 U.S. at 168.

In sum, the Court concludes that, based on the Amended Complaint's allegations, [*17] Plaintiffs fail to plausibly allege that the fuel they bought from Southside is of like grade and quality as the fuel Southside sold to other retailers. Just as the Twombly Court dismissed an antitrust conspiracy complaint in a case "with no 'reasonably founded hope that the [discovery] process will reveal relevant evidence' to support an antitrust claim," the Court sees no "reasonably founded hope" that discovery in this antitrust case will reveal relevant evidence to support Plaintiffs' RPA claim. See 550 U.S. at 559-60 (alteration in original) (internal quotations omitted) (quoting Dura Pharms., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336, 347, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577 (2005)). Therefore, the Court will grant Southside's Motion for Judgment and dismiss Count III of the Amended Complaint.

B. Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to File a Second Amended Complaint

1. Standard of Review

Rule 15(a)(2) provides that "[t]he court should freely give leave [to amend a complaint] when justice so requires." Justice does not require permitting leave to amend when amendment would prejudice the opposing party, the moving party has exhibited bad faith, or amendment would be futile. See Edell & Assocs., P.C. v. Law Offices of Peter G. Angelos, 264 F.3d 424, 446 (4th Cir. 2001) (citing Edwards v. Goldsboro, 178 F.3d 231, 242 (4th Cir. 1999)). Leave to amend is futile when an amended complaint could not survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. See U.S. ex rel. Wilson v. Kellogg Brown & Root, Inc., 525 F.3d 370, 376 (4th Cir. 2008). "Leave to [*18] amend, however, should only be denied on the ground of futility when the proposed amendment is clearly insufficient or frivolous on its face." Johnson v. Oroweat Foods Co., 785 F.2d 503, 510 (4th Cir. 1986) (citing Davis v. Piper Aircraft Corp., 615 F.2d 606, 613 (4th Cir. 1980)).

2. Analysis

Plaintiffs request leave of the Court to file a Second Amended Complaint to cure the identified deficiencies in Count III of their Amended Complaint. Southside contends that granting Plaintiffs leave to amend would be futile because the Second Amended Complaint is deficient on its face and cannot survive a motion to dismiss. The Court agrees with Southside.

In an effort to address the deficiencies in their Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs' new allegations "compare and contrast the contracts, describe their differences and similarities, and the basis on which they do not result [in] non-comparable transactions that affect the grade or quality of the products sold." (Mem. P&A Supp. Pls.' Mot. Leave File 2d Am. Compl. ["Pls.' Mot."] at 7, ECF No. 47-2).<sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs state that they "were not given the opportunity to enter a three-year open-price term contract like the ones entered between Southside and Plaintiffs' competitors." (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 10, ECF No. 47-4). They name the original price ExxonMobil charged Southside—"Posted Price"—and [*19] the new price ExxonMobil started charging Southside in 2015—"Formula Price." (Id. ¶ 35). Plaintiffs then state their dispute with Southside "centers on the meaning of the term 'Rack.'" (Id. ¶ 36). Specifically, Plaintiffs believe "rack" should mean the Formula Price, whereas Southside maintains it means the Posted Price. (Id.). Further, they allege that their rack-plus price term contracts and competitors' open-price term contracts "are not substantively different from one another with respect to credit, terms of payment, credit card processing, payment of credit card fees, trademark protection, service station image and appearance standards, minimum purchase requirements, taxes and fees associated with the products, and the terms governing resale of the products to consumers." (Id. ¶ 45). Plaintiffs make the argument discussed above that, if anything, the differences between their contracts and those their competitors negotiated mean Southside should them a lower, not a higher, price. (Id. ¶ 46). Plaintiffs argue that because their competitors' open-price contracts vest pricing discretion in Southside, that Southside exercised its discretion to charge Plaintiffs' competitors less [*20] than Plaintiffs, which has injured Plaintiffs.

While Plaintiffs' new allegations give more context to the formation and substance of their contracts with Southside, they cannot escape the "fundamental" difference that persists between their contracts and their competitors' contracts: the rack-plus price term and the open-price term. The Second Amended Complaint maintains this distinction when it states, "[u]nder Plaintiffs' contracts with Southside, the per gallon price is a certain cents per-gallon (e.g., [three] cents, four cents) over 'Rack,'" and "[t]he open-price term contracts of Plaintiffs' competitors vest discretion in Southside, subject to the UCC's 'good faith' requirement, to set the prices for sales to retailers." (2d Am. Compl. ¶¶ 36-37). Plaintiffs even concede that certain other contractual differences could justify differences in price, but argue that those differences should only be in their favor: "[a]lthough there are non-price differences between the [P]laintiffs' contracts and the open-price term contracts, the differences do not justify a lower per gallon price to [P]laintiffs' competitors." (Id. ¶ 46). As explained above, this argument is incompatible [*21] with the purpose of antitrust law and the RPA. See Volvo Trucks, 546 U.S. at 176 ("Mindful of the purposes of the [RPA] and of the antitrust laws generally, we have explained that [the RPA] does not 'ban all price differences charged to different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality'; rather, the Act proscribes 'price discrimination only to the extent that it threatens to injure competition.'") (quoting Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 220, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993)). Here, Plaintiffs' "rack-plus price" term is the product of its own negotiation with Southside, a contract term that the Second Amended Complaint identifies as "the most important provision to be negotiated" with Southside. (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 10). The purpose of the RPA or antitrust law is not to undo that negotiation in order to give Plaintiffs the result they expected but did not receive.

In addition, as noted above, there is no "reasonably founded hope" that discovery will reveal relevant evidence to cure Plaintiffs' claim, because the pricing differences are inherent in the contracts themselves, and no amount of fact-finding could change what has already been negotiated and settled. Plaintiffs' amendments simply do not justify the burdensome expense of discovery, particularly in the antitrust context. [*22] See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 558 ("[I]t is one thing to be cautious before dismissing an antitrust complaint in advance of discovery, but quite another to forget that proceeding to antitrust discovery can be expensive.").

After reviewing the proposed Second Amended Complaint, the Court concludes that the amendments are clearly insufficient on their face because the deficiencies present in the Amended Complaint persist. See Kellogg Brown & Root, 525 F.3d at 376; Johnson, 785 F.2d at 510. Thus, the Court concludes that leave to amend would be futile and will deny Plaintiffs' Motion.

The Court is mindful that the effect of this ruling will be to limit the Plaintiffs' claims for relief to their breach of contract claims in arbitration. (Mar. 30, 2018 Mem. Op. at 27 ("The Court will deny the Motion to Dismiss without prejudice as to Counts I and II because those Counts will be submitted to arbitration.")). This is appropriate because, as Plaintiffs state in their proposed Second Amended Complaint, their dispute with Southside "centers on the meaning of the term 'Rack,'" (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 36), a quintessential question of contract interpretation.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court will grant Southside's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings (ECF No. 43) and deny [*23] Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to File a Second Amended Complaint (ECF No. 47). A separate Order follows.

Entered this 29th day of March, 2019.

/s/ George L. Russell, III

United States District Judge

ORDER

For the reasons set forth in the foregoing Memorandum, it is this 29th day of March, 2019, by the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, hereby:

ORDERED that Defendant's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings (ECF No. 43) is GRANTED;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to File a Second Amended Complaint (ECF No. 47) is DENIED; and

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the parties FILE a joint status report addressing how this case will proceed within fourteen (14) days of the date of this Order.

Opinion

[*202] OPINION AND ORDER

J. PAUL OETKEN, District Judge:

A group of plaintiffs bring this putative securities class action against the drug manufacturer Mylan N.V. and several of its officers, in connection with the alleged misclassification of the EpiPen, a rebate scheme involving the EpiPen, and the alleged inflation of prices for various generic drugs. On March 28, 2018, the Court granted in part and denied in part Defendants' motion to dismiss the prior class action complaint (Dkt. No. 69), and Plaintiffs subsequently filed the operative amended complaint (Dkt. No. 89).

Defendants now move to dismiss the new allegations in the amended complaint. (Dkt. No. 95.) For the reasons that follow, the motion is granted in part and denied in part.

I. Background*A. Procedural History

Plaintiffs are purchasers of Mylan's common stock. On October 11, 2016, Plaintiff Stef Van Duppen initiated this action against Mylan N.V., Mylan Inc., and officers Heather Bresch and [*203] John Sheehan. (Dkt. No. 1.) Separately, Plaintiff Landon W. Perdue filed an action against Mylan N.V., Mylan Inc., and officers Heather Bresch, Paul B. Campbell, Robert J. Coury, Kenneth S. Parks, and John D. Sheehan on October 13, 2016. (See Perdue v. Mylan N.V., No. 16 Civ. 8000, Dkt. No. 1.) On January 9, 2017, the Court consolidated the two cases for pre-trial purposes, appointed Lead Plaintiffs, and approved Lead Counsel. (Dkt. No. 26.) Lead Plaintiffs subsequently filed an Amended Class Action Complaint (Dkt. No. 39) asserting claims under: (1) Section 10\(b\) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 ("Exchange Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 78j\(b\), and Rule 10b-5, 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5, against all Defendants; (2) Section 20\(a\) of the Exchange Act, 15 U.S.C. § 78t\(a\), against the individual Defendants; and (3) Section 1 of the Israeli Securities Law of 1968, against all Defendants.

Defendants jointly moved to dismiss the complaint (Dkt. No. 45), and the Court granted the motion in part (Dkt. No. 69). The Court dismissed Plaintiffs' securities claims to the extent they relied on an alleged "pay-for-delay" agreement with Teva Pharmaceuticals, alleged agreements with schools regarding the EpiPen, and an alleged agreement to allocate the market [*203] for the generic drug doxycycline hydiate delayed [*204] release ("Dox DR"). (Dkt. No. 69 at 27-30, 34.) The Court also determined that certain statements alleged in the complaint were not actionable. (Dkt. No. 69 at 11-12, 17, 20.) Finally, the Court declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the Israeli securities law claim, given the complex issues and exceptional circumstances presented in this case. (Dkt. No. 69 at 36-40.) Plaintiffs' remaining securities claims—premised on the misclassification of the EpiPen in the Medicaid rebate scheme and the alleged price-fixing agreements concerning five generic drugs—survived the motion to dismiss.

On July 6, 2018, Plaintiffs filed the operative Second Amended Class Action Complaint ("Amended Complaint"). (Dkt. No. 89 ("Compl.")) Defendants now move to partially dismiss the Amended Complaint (Dkt. No. 95), challenging the sufficiency of its new allegations (Dkt. No. 96 at 1 & n.1).

B. Factual Background

The facts of this case are described in this Court's prior opinion. See In re Mylan N.V. Sec. Litig., No. 16 Civ. 7926, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52084, 2018 WL 1595985, at \*1-3 \(S.D.N.Y. Mar. 28, 2018\). Here, the Court recounts background necessary to resolving the instant motion, as well as those new facts alleged for the first time in the Amended Complaint. The factual allegations in the Amended Complaint are [*205] assumed true for the purposes of this motion.

Mylan is a developer, manufacturer, and distributor of brand-name and generic pharmaceuticals. (Compl. ¶ 2.) This action arises out of Mylan's conduct regarding the drug EpiPen Auto-Injector ("EpiPen") and several generic drugs. (Id.) Mylan is a public company, trading on the NASDAQ Global Select Market. (Compl. ¶ 30.) Lead Plaintiffs Menorah Mivtachim Insurance Ltd., Menorah Mivtachim Pensions and Gemel Ltd., Phoenix Insurance Company Ltd., Meitav DS Provident Funds and Pension Ltd., and Dan Kleinerman ("Plaintiffs") bring this action on behalf of themselves and a class of individuals who purchased the common stock of Mylan N.V. or Mylan, Inc. between February 21, 2012, and October 30, 2017. (Compl. ¶¶ 1, 29.) Defendants in this action include Mylan N.V., Mylan, Inc., and various Mylan executives who served during the class period (collectively, "Mylan"). (Compl. ¶¶ 30–37.)

The conduct giving rise to this action falls into two categories of alleged wrongdoing: (1) Medicaid misclassification, and (2) antitrust violations. First, the Amended Complaint alleges that Mylan unlawfully misclassified the EpiPen as a generic drug for purposes of [**6] the Medicaid Drug Rebate Program ("MDRP"). (Compl. ¶ 5; Dkt. No. 69 at 2-3; see generally Compl. ¶¶ 39-97.) The previous complaint outlined the details of this alleged misclassification, along with various statements that Plaintiffs alleged to have misled investors in connection with the misclassification. (See, e.g., Dkt. No. 39 ¶¶ 33-90, 201-04.) Plaintiffs repeat those allegations in the Amended Complaint, and present several additional statements that Plaintiffs contend were also rendered misleading by the failure to disclose the alleged misclassification. (See, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 242-43, 289-91.)

Second, the Amended Complaint alleges that Mylan entered into a number of anticompetitive agreements to block competitors from the market and inflate the prices of various drugs. (Compl. ¶¶ 12-13, 15-18; see also Dkt. No. 69 at 3-4.) The Amended Complaint repeats allegations from the previous complaint that Mylan schemed to manipulate the market to maintain a supracompetitive price for the generic drug Doxy DR, and schemed to fix prices for the generic drugs albuterol sulfate, benazepril, clomipramine, divalproex, and propranolol. (Compl. ¶ 115; Dkt. No. 39 ¶ 104.) [*204] Although Plaintiffs' claims [**7] regarding market allocation of Doxy DR were previously dismissed for failure to plausibly allege scienter, the Amended Complaint contains new allegations regarding the agreement of Mylan executives to engage in market allocation with respect to Doxy DR, in an attempt to cure the pleading deficiency. (Compl. ¶¶ 127, 130-31, 134-45.)

The Amended Complaint includes new allegations regarding Mylan's alleged antitrust misconduct. Among these are allegations that Mylan engaged in price fixing in the markets for three other generic drugs: doxycycline monohydrate ("Doxy Mono"), glipizide-metformin, and verapamil. (Compl. ¶¶ 187-200, 405.)

Plaintiffs' new allegations also include claims that Mylan engaged in anticompetitive conduct regarding the EpiPen and a competing epinephrine autoinjector—the Auvi-Q produced by Sanofi-Aventis. (Compl. ¶¶ 12-13.) Specifically, the Amended Complaint alleges that Mylan offered EpiPen at a rebate of 30% or more to third-party payors in the medical insurance market, on the express condition that the payors would decline to reimburse for the Auvi-Q. (Compl. ¶ 104.) As a result, Mylan blocked the Auvi-Q from accessing half of the market for epinephrine autoinjectors, [**8] and caused its market share to drop. (Compl. ¶¶ 107-08, 110.) Sanofi decided not to relaunch Auvi-Q, and is suing Mylan for antitrust violations in connection with the alleged conduct. (Compl. ¶ 113.)

Furthermore, the Amended Complaint adds an additional corrective disclosure relevant to allegations of loss causation: On October 31, 2017, a group of 47 state attorneys general issued a press release publicizing new allegations from an amended complaint that the group would be filing in their ongoing antitrust action against Mylan ("State AG action"). (Compl. ¶ 394.) On that day, Mylan shares fell $2.53, or 6.62%. (Compl. ¶ 395.)

Finally, the previous complaint brought claims against five of Mylan's executives. (Dkt. No. 39 ¶¶ 28-32.) To that group of individual Defendants, the Amended Complaint also adds Rajiv Malik, who served as the President of Mylan from January 1, 2012, to the present, and has served as an Executive Director of Mylan since 2013. (Compl. ¶ 35.) The Amended Complaint adds allegations about Malik's involvement in the challenged conduct, including six allegedly misleading statements made by Malik and Malik's sale of Mylan stock in a manner potentially evidencing his [**9] scienter. (Compl. ¶¶ 127, 130, 141-42, 307-08, 409.)

II. Legal Standard

To survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\), "a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Wilson v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 671 F.3d 120, 128 (2d Cir. 2011) (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678).

The Court must "accept[] as true the factual allegations in the complaint and draw[] all inferences in the plaintiff's favor." Allaire Corp. v. Okumus, 433 F.3d 248, 249-50 (2d Cir. 2006) (quoting Scutti Enters., LLC v. Park Place Entm't Corp., 322 F.3d 211, 214 (2d Cir. 2003)). However, "the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions. Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

[*205] "Securities fraud claims are [also] subject to the heightened pleading standards established by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\) and the [Private Securities Litigation Reform Act ("PSLRA")], 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4." Shanawaz v. Intellipharmaceutics Int'l Inc., 348 F. Supp. 3d 313, 322 (S.D.N.Y. 2018). Where a claim alleges "fraud or mistake," Rule 9\(b\) provides that "a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\). The PSLRA requires [*10] a claim for securities fraud to "specify each statement alleged to have been misleading, the reason or reasons why the statement is misleading, and, if an allegation regarding the statement or omission is made on information and belief, the complaint shall state with particularity all facts on which that belief is formed." 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4\(b\)\(1\).

III. Discussion

Under Rule 10b-5\(b\), it is "unlawful for any person . . . [t]o make any untrue statement of a material fact or to omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading . . . in connection with the purchase or sale of any security." 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5. To state a claim for relief under Section 10\(b\) and Rule 10b-5, "a plaintiff must show '(1) a material misrepresentation or omission by the defendant; (2) scienter; (3) a connection between the misrepresentation or omission and the purchase or sale of a security; (4) reliance upon the misrepresentation or omission; (5) economic loss; and (6) loss causation.'" Menaldi v. Och-Ziff Capital Mgmt. Grp. LLC, 164 F. Supp. 3d 568, 576 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) (quoting Stoneridge Inv. Partners, LLC v. Scientific-Atlanta, 552 U.S. 148, 157, 128 S. Ct. 761, 169 L. Ed. 2d 627 (2008)).

Mylan contends that the new allegations in the Amended Complaint fail to state a claim under this standard for several reasons, including [*11] that: (1) certain alleged misstatements are not actionable; (2) conduct that Mylan was purportedly required to disclose is not adequately alleged to violate antitrust laws; (3) certain loss causation allegations are deficient; (4) allegations against Defendant Rajiv Malik are not actionable, unsupported by scienter, or time-barred; and (5) allegations regarding the generic drug Doxy DR are unsupported by scienter. The Court addresses each in turn.

A. Actionable Statements

As the Court explained in its previous opinion in this case (Dkt. No. 69 at 8), Section "10\(b\) and Rule 10b-5\(b\) do not create an affirmative duty to disclose any and all material information," Matrixx Initiatives, Inc. v. Siracusano, 563 U.S. 27, 44, 131 S. Ct. 1309, 179 L. Ed. 2d 398 (2011). Rather, "omissions are actionable under § 10(b) only when a corporation has a duty to disclose." Menaldi, 164 F. Supp. 3d at 579. As relevant here, a company has a duty to disclose material information when "necessary to avoid rendering existing statements misleading by failing to disclose material facts." Id.

Mylan identifies two categories of alleged misstatements in the Amended Complaint which it contends are not actionable in light of this Court's previous opinion: (i) statements of historical income; and (ii) statements respecting future regulatory scrutiny. (Dkt. No. 96 [**12] at 11-12.) First, Mylan contends that the Amended Complaint continues to include quantitative statements of earnings from Mylan's Form 10-K and Form 10-Q filings, which the Court previously determined to be "not actionable" in its prior opinion.<sup>1</sup> (Dkt. No. [*206] 96 at 11; Dkt. No. 69 at 11 ("[T]he mere statement of historical financial information does not give rise to a duty to disclose illegal conduct that may have contributed to that performance.").)

Mylan requests that these statements from 10-K and 10-Q reports about Mylan's financial performance—both those repeated from the prior complaint and alleged for the first time in the Amended Complaint—be dismissed. (Dkt. No. 96 at 12.) As Mylan observes, Plaintiffs do not respond to this argument. (Dkt. No. 101 at 5.) Accordingly, for the reasons given in the Opinion of March 28, 2018 (Dkt. No. 69 at 11), the Court reiterates that quantitative statements of earnings contained in Mylan's Forms 10-K and 10-Q are not actionable misstatements. Mylan's request to dismiss these allegations from the Amended Complaint is granted.

Second, with respect to certain statements about sources of income, Mylan contends that Plaintiffs have merely repackaged [**13] already-dismissed allegations that Mylan misleadingly "failed to disclose an 'acute risk' of fines" (Dkt. No. 69 at 12), as allegations that Mylan misleadingly failed to disclose that its actions were "likely to raise regulatory scrutiny" (Dkt. No. 96 at 12 (quoting Compl. ¶ 320).)<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs acknowledge the Court's holding "that Mylan was not obligated to disclose that its past conduct put it at risk of future regulatory scrutiny" (Dkt. No. 100 at 15), but nonetheless argues that being unable to accurately judge the risk of regulatory scrutiny through Mylan's omissions about past conduct made the omissions material (Dkt. No. 100 at 16).

It appears that the parties do not actually disagree about whether certain statements are actionable, but would benefit from clarification about the grounds on which they are actionable. The Court thus reiterates that "Mylan's statements explaining income" are actionable because the statements "put its sources of income at issue," and the statements were misleading for failing to disclose the extent to which Mylan's income was inflated by its misclassification of the EpiPen and its other alleged anticompetitive activities. (Dkt. No. 69 at 12.) Although [**14] the concealment of the risk of regulatory scrutiny may contribute to the materiality of the omissions for investors, the statements explaining income were not themselves misleading for failing to disclose a risk of future regulatory scrutiny. As such, insofar as the Amended Complaint could be read to allege that certain statements are misleading due to a failure to disclose future regulatory risk, those allegations are dismissed.

B. Legality of Underlying Misconduct

Corporations are under no general duty "to disclose corporate mismanagement or uncharged criminal conduct." In re Sanofi Sec. Litig., 155 F. Supp. 3d 386, 403 \(S.D.N.Y. 2016\). However, a corporation's failure to disclose underlying unlawful conduct can be actionable under Section 10\(b\) and Rule 10b-5 where affirmative statements were made misleading by the corporation's failure to disclose the alleged wrongdoing. See Menaldi, 164 F. Supp. 3d at 581. To state a claim for failure to disclose unlawful conduct, a plaintiff must plead with particularity the statements that were made misleading by the defendant's failure to disclose, and [*207] must adequately plead that the underlying misconduct occurred and was unlawful. See id. at 578-79.

Here, the Amended Complaint alleges two new sources of unlawful conduct which, Plaintiffs contend, rendered certain of Mylan's [**15] affirmative statements misleading: (1) an anticompetitive rebate scheme whereby Mylan's rebates on the EpiPen excluded Sanofi's Auvi-Q from a large segment of the market for epinephrine autoinjectors, in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act (Compl. ¶¶ 103-114); and (2) agreements to fix the prices of three generic drugs, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (Compl. ¶¶ 18, 187-200). Mylan contends that Plaintiffs failed to adequately plead the existence and illegality of this underlying misconduct. (Dkt. No. 96 at 5-11.)

As an initial matter, Plaintiffs contend that they need not allege that these two bases of conduct constituted antitrust violations, because in any event Mylan's failure to disclose their existence to investors was misleading. (Dkt. No. 100 at 2, 10-11, 14.) According to Plaintiffs, the Amended Complaint makes clear that "these omissions were misleading regardless of whether or not the conditional rebates" or pricing agreements "constituted antitrust violations." (Dkt. No. 100 at 11.)

The Court disagrees with this construction of the Amended Complaint. Paragraph 14, which Plaintiffs rely on for this argument as to the EpiPen rebate scheme, provides that:

Mylan repeatedly failed [**16] to tell the whole truth about the ways in which it competed and about the reasons for its financial success, including in the market for epinephrine autoinjectors, by failing to disclose this anticompetitive conduct. While Mylan's conduct certainly violated U.S. antitrust laws, including Sherman Act Section 2, investors cared about this conduct in any event due to the significant liability to which it exposed Mylan.

(Compl. ¶ 14.) This paragraph clearly states that the challenged failure "to tell the whole truth" was premised on "anticompetitive conduct." (Id.) And such conduct would only "expose[] Mylan" to "significant liability" (id.), if it was, indeed, in violation of antitrust laws. Furthermore, the remainder of the allegations in the Amended Complaint involving the Sanofi rebate scheme clearly portray the conduct as an antitrust violation. (See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 114.)

Paragraph 18 contains similar language regarding the alleged price-fixing agreements: "Mylan's statements suggested that it did not compete through collusion with competitors on prices, when in fact it did, and while Mylan's collusion certainly violated U.S. antitrust laws, investors cared about such collusion in any event [**17] due to the significant liability to which it exposed Mylan." (Compl. ¶ 18.) But again, the agreements only exposed Mylan to liability if they were, in fact, unlawful.<sup>3</sup>

Because the Amended Complaint alleges that omissions regarding the EpiPen rebate scheme and generic drug price-fixing agreements were misleading because the underlying conduct violated antitrust laws, then, Plaintiffs must adequately allege that such conduct occurred and was unlawful in order to survive a motion to dismiss. See Menaldi, 164 F. Supp. 3d at 578.

1. EpiPen Rebate Scheme

Mylan argues that Plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead that the challenged EpiPen rebate scheme constituted [**208] an antitrust violation.<sup>4</sup> (Dkt. No. 96 at 7-8.) To allege a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff "must show harm to competition in the relevant market." Solent Freight Servs., Ltd. v. Alberty, 914 F. Supp. 2d 312,

<sup>3</sup> Furthermore, even if the Amended Complaint could be reasonably read to allege that the omissions were misleading even if the challenged conduct was not unlawful, the complaint fails to allege with particularity why, absent any antitrust violation, such statements would be misleading. (See Dkt. No. 69 at 30 n.10; Dkt. No. 101 at 2.)

<sup>4</sup> Mylan also contends in its opening brief that Plaintiffs improperly "cut[] and past[ed]" their allegations from a complaint in another case. (Dkt. No. 96 at 6-7.) However, Mylan's reply brief states that the other case involved "a different complaint that had different allegations." (Dkt. No. 101 at 3.) The Court thus considers any argument about the improper copying of these allegations to have been abandoned.

In addition, Mylan briefly asserts that Plaintiffs fail to allege scienter with respect to these claims. (Dkt. No. 96 at 8-9.) But because "a 'single, conclusory, one-sentence argument' [] is insufficient to adequately raise an issue," LG Elecs., Inc. v. Wi-LAN USA, Inc., No. 13 Civ. 2237, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99827, 2014 WL 3610796, at \*3 n.3 \(S.D.N.Y. July 21, 2014\) (quoting Cuoco v. Moritsugu, 222 F.3d 99, 112 n. 4 \(2d Cir. 2000\)), the Court does not address it.

323 \(E.D.N.Y. 2012\). As the Court noted in its previous opinion (Dkt. No. 69 at 29), to overcome the presumptive legality of exclusive-dealing agreements, plaintiffs must adequately allege "an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market," George Haug Co. v. Rolls Royce Motor Cars Inc., 148 F.3d 136, 139 \(2d Cir. 1998\), and that the arrangements' "anticompetitive effects outweigh [their] procompetitive effects," E & L Consulting, Ltd. v. Doman Indus. Ltd., 472 F.3d 23, 29 \(2d Cir. 2006\) (citation omitted).

Mylan contends that Plaintiffs' allegations [\[\*\*18\]](#) on both scores are insufficiently conclusory. (Dkt. No. 96 at 8.) The Court disagrees.

Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint adequately alleges both harm to competition in the relevant market, and the predominance of anticompetitive effects, to survive a motion to dismiss. Plaintiffs allege with particularity that the EpiPen rebate scheme blocked Sanofi from accessing a significant portion of the market for epinephrine autoinjectors. (Compl. ¶¶ 106-12; see Dkt. No. 100 at 12.) And Plaintiffs also adequately allege that, despite the rebates offered, the ultimate price of EpiPen actually rose as a result of the rebate scheme, resulting in net anticompetitive effects. (Compl. ¶¶ 100, 105; see Dkt. No. 100 at 13.) The Court agrees with Plaintiffs that these allegations of anticompetitive effects are sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss. See In re Namenda Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., No. 15 Civ. 7488, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83446, 2017 WL 4358244, at \*10 \(S.D.N.Y. May 23, 2017\) (describing burden-shifting framework for Section 2 monopolization claims, whereby plaintiff need initially only "establish[] that a monopolist's conduct is anticompetitive or exclusionary" (citation omitted)).<sup>5</sup>

[*209] 2. Generic Drug Price Fixing

Mylan also [\[\*\*19\]](#) contends that Plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead allegations of illegal price fixing with respect to the generic drugs Doxy Mono, glipizide-metformin, and verapamil. (Dkt. No. 96 at 9-11.) Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, plaintiffs can plead an unlawful price-fixing agreement by asserting either (1) "direct evidence" of an unlawful agreement, or (2) "circumstantial facts supporting the inference that a conspiracy existed." Mayor & City Council of Balt. v. Citigroup, Inc., 709 F.3d 129, 136 \(2d Cir. 2013\). "[T]o survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), a plaintiff need only allege 'enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made.'" Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 321 \(2d Cir. 2010\) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556).

Here, Plaintiffs purport to rely on "direct evidence" of an alleged price-fixing agreement. (Dkt. No. 100 at 14-15; Compl. ¶ 405.) Direct evidence includes, "for example, . . . a recorded phone call in which two competitors agreed to fix prices at a certain level." Citigroup, 709 F.3d at 136. But where a "complaint's references to an agreement . . .

<sup>5</sup> In support of their argument that they have sufficiently alleged an underlying antitrust violation to survive a motion to dismiss, Plaintiffs rely on the fact that a court overseeing an antitrust action challenging the same rebate scheme denied a similar motion to dismiss. (Dkt. No. 100 at 11 (citing In re EpiPen \(Epinephrine Injection, USP\) Mktg., Sales Practices & Antitrust Litig., No. 17 MD 2785, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 209710, 2017 WL 6524839, at \*12 \(D. Kan. Dec. 21, 2017\)\)). Mylan contends that this antitrust case is not relevant, because the pleading standards for antitrust and securities actions differ. (Dkt. No. 101 at 3.)

The particularity pleading requirement in securities actions clearly applies to the facts underlying scienter and the alleged fraud or conspiracy. See 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4\(b\)\(1\)-\(2\); Gamm v. Sanderson Farms, Inc., No. 16 Civ. 8420, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9944, 2018 WL 1319157, at \*3 \(S.D.N.Y. Jan. 19, 2018\). But Mylan cites no authority for the proposition that the particularity requirement also applies to the illegality of underlying misconduct, including the reasons the conduct had greater anticompetitive effects than procompetitive effects. See Menaldi, 164 F. Supp. 3d at 578 n.5 (declining to resolve whether "in securities fraud actions premised on a failure to disclose underlying criminal conduct, the underlying conduct is subject to heightened pleading standards or plausibility pleading analysis").

But the Court need not resolve this question here. Regardless of the applicable pleading standard for antitrust misconduct nestled in a securities case, and in light of the fact that the Court bases its decision primarily on the substance of the complaint in this case, the Court considers the result in the In re EpiPen antitrust litigation as offering only persuasive support for the conclusion that Plaintiffs' allegations regarding the Sanofi rebate scheme sufficiently allege anticompetitive conduct to survive a motion to dismiss.

mention[] no specific time, place, or person involved in the alleged conspiracies," a plaintiff has failed to allege direct evidence sufficient to put a defendant on notice. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n.10.

The Amended Complaint alleges that "[a]n employee at Mylan and the employee at Heritage<sup>6</sup> with primary responsibility [**20] for communicating with Mylan about Doxy Mono pricing reached an agreement on a call on April 23, 2014 to raise prices for Doxy Mono, in addition to glipizide-metformin and verapamil." (Compl. ¶ 190; see also id. ¶¶ 193, 197.) The Amended Complaint also alleges that after the call, "the employee at Heritage sent an email to" a specific Mylan executive (Compl. ¶ 190), and that there was "frequent contact" between the sellers of these generic drugs at the time (Compl. ¶ 189; see also Compl. ¶¶ 193, 198).

The Court agrees with Mylan that these allegations of direct agreement are insufficient. (Dkt. No. 96 at 10-11; Dkt. No. 101 at 4.) Plaintiffs' direct evidence boils down to a single April 23, 2014 phone call. But the allegations surrounding the alleged call do not identify which employees were involved, where the call took place, or the contours of the alleged agreements. Plaintiffs' conclusory allegations regarding that single phone call are thus insufficiently detailed to constitute direct evidence suggesting that an agreement was made. See Iowa Pub. Emps.' Ret. Sys. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., 340 F. Supp. 3d 285, 318-19 (S.D.N.Y. 2018) (characterizing four separate pieces of direct evidence—with speakers, dates, and content identified in greater detail—as "slim" but "adequately [**21] pleaded").

Plaintiffs often rely on circumstantial evidence of a price-fixing agreement, as opposed to direct evidence, [**210] because "this type of 'smoking gun' can be hard to come by, especially at the pleading stage." Citigroup, 709 F.3d at 136. And Plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead such a smoking gun here. Therefore, because Plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead the existence of unlawful price-fixing agreements involving Doxy Mono, glipizide-metformin, and verapamil, the Amended Complaint's new allegations involving these three generic drugs are dismissed.

C. Loss Causation

To establish loss causation for a claim under Rule 10b-5, a plaintiff must allege "that the subject of the fraudulent statement or omission was the cause of the actual loss suffered,' i.e., that the misstatement or omission concealed something from the market that, when disclosed, negatively affected the value of the security." Lentell v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 396 F.3d 161, 173 (2d Cir. 2005) (citation omitted). At the motion to dismiss stage, a court must determine whether the complaint has sufficiently pleaded "that the loss [was] foreseeable and that the loss [was] caused by the materialization of the concealed risk." Id.

Here, Mylan argues that Plaintiffs have not sufficiently pleaded loss causation [**22] as to statements from Mylan during a certain period, or as to a particular corrective disclosure.

First, Mylan contends that any of its statements made between February 21, 2012 and February 28, 2013, cannot satisfy loss causation because the price paid for stock during the period from February 2012 to March 2013 was lower than at any other point during the class period. (Dkt. No. 96 at 13-14.) Mylan relies on the PSLRA's 90-day bounce-back rule, under which "if the mean trading price of a security during the 90-day period following the [disclosure of information correcting the misstatement] is greater than the price at which the plaintiff purchased his stock then that plaintiff would recover noting." Acticon AG v. China N.E. Petroleum Holdings Ltd., 692 F.3d 34, 39 (2d Cir. 2012) (citation omitted); 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(e)(1).

Plaintiffs respond that the 90-day bounce-back period limitation does not apply to class members who "held shares through a partial corrective disclosure and sold the shares prior to the end of the Class period." (Dkt. No. 100 at 23.)<sup>7</sup> "Aside from imposing the 'bounce back' cap on recoverable damages, Congress did not otherwise disturb the traditional out-of-pocket method for calculating damages in the PSLRA," a method "under which damages consist of the difference [**23] between the price paid and the 'value' of the stock when purchased." Action AG, 692 F.3d at 39-40 (cleaned up). The Second Circuit has made clear, however, that "a securities [*211] fraud plaintiff who purchased stock at an inflated purchase price must still prove that she suffered an economic loss, and that that loss was proximately caused by defendant's misrepresentation." Id. at 40.

<sup>6</sup> Heritage Pharmaceuticals Inc. is another pharmaceutical company, which sells some of the same generic drugs as Mylan and is alleged to have entered various price-fixing agreements with Mylan. (See, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 125-26, 188-90.)

Plaintiffs satisfy the requisite pleading requirements here because in addition to alleging purchase at an "inflated price," they "allege[] that the price of [Mylan] stock dropped after the alleged fraud became known." Id. Whether certain class members who sold their shares before full corrective disclosures were made can ultimately demonstrate a proximately caused economic loss will be decided at a later stage of this litigation.

Second, Mylan argues that allegations of loss based on an October 31, 2017 announcement about the State AG action must be dismissed, because the announcement was not a corrective disclosure. (Dkt. No. 96 at 14; see Compl. ¶¶ 22, 394-395.) "In order to plead corrective disclosure, plaintiffs must plausibly allege a disclosure of the fraud by which the available public information regarding the company's financial condition [**24] was corrected, and that the market reacted negatively to the corrective disclosure." Carpenters Pension Tr. Fund of St. Louis v. Barclays PLC, 750 F.3d 227, 233 \(2d Cir. 2014\) (cleaned up). To constitute a corrective disclosure, a statement must "reveal some then-undisclosed fact with regard to the specific misrepresentations alleged in the complaint." Cent. States Se. & Sw. Areas Pension Fund v. Fed. Home Loan Mortg. Corp., 543 F. App'x 72, 75 \(2d Cir. 2013\) (quoting In re Omnicom Grp., Inc. Sec. Litig., 597 F.3d 501, 511 \(2d Cir. 2010\)). For that reason, a "negative characterization of already-public information" does not qualify. In re Omnicom Grp., 597 F.3d at 512.

Here, Mylan contends that the announcement and accompanying amended complaint in the State AG action "did not disclose any new material information relevant to Plaintiffs' claims." (Dkt. No. 96 at 15.) Plaintiffs counter that the announcement and release of the amended complaint contained "never previously revealed" information about (i) the involvement of Defendant Malik in Mylan's "illegal market allocation activity," and (ii) the findings of an investigation about price fixing as to the three new generic drugs. (Dkt. No. 100 at 24.)

Not all of the facts disclosed in the announcement and accompanying amended complaint in the State AG action were previously unknown to the market. For example, as Mylan correctly notes, detailed information about the market allocation of Doxy DR, and existence of investigations into the [**25] three new generic drugs, had indeed been publicly released earlier. (Dkt. No. 96 at 15.) Nevertheless, the October 31, 2017 announcement disclosed new information pertaining to Malik's participation in the Doxy DR scheme, as well as the findings of an investigation into the price fixing of the three generic drugs. (Dkt. No. 100 at 24.) The Court concludes that Plaintiffs have sufficiently pleaded that the announcement "reveal[ed] some then-undisclosed fact[s] with regard to the specific misrepresentations alleged in the complaint." Cent. States, 543 F. App'x at 75. Overall, the Court concludes that these allegations are sufficient, at this stage, "to provide [the] defendant[s] with some indication of the loss and the causal connection that the plaintiff has in mind." Fin. Guar. Ins. Co. v. Putnam Advisory Co., LLC, 783 F.3d 395, 404 \(2d Cir. 2015\) (quoting Dura Pharms., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336, 347, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577 \(2005\).

<sup>7</sup> Plaintiffs also respond that Mylan's challenge to loss causation for misstatements made during this period is barred by the law of the case doctrine or Rule 12\(g\). (Dkt. No. 100 at 22.) A court, in its discretion, can decline to allow parties to relitigate "issues expressly or impliedly decided earlier in the proceeding." In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 544 F. Supp. 2d 277, 284 \(S.D.N.Y. 2008\). And Rule 12\(g\) prevents a party that has made a Rule 12 motion from "mak[ing] another motion under this rule raising a defense or objection that was available to the party but omitted from its earlier motion." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(g\).

As Mylan correctly notes, however, this particular question was not actually decided in the Court's previous opinion. (Dkt. No. 101 at 6 n.3.) And notwithstanding Rule 12\(g\), "[a]n amended complaint . . . entitles a defendant to raise substantive arguments aimed at 'judicial resolution of the controversy' in a new responsive pleading, even if those arguments were not raised in response to the original complaint." In re Parmalat Sec. Litig., 421 F. Supp. 2d 703, 713 \(S.D.N.Y. 2006\). The Court will thus address this argument.

However, as noted above, price-fixing allegations regarding those three generic drugs are dismissed for failure to adequately plead underlying misconduct. The [*212] October 31, 2017 corrective disclosure thus applies only to statements rendered misleading as to the alleged unlawful market allocation of Doxy DR.

D. Allegations Against Malik

Next, Mylan seeks to dismiss the allegations against newly added Defendant Rajiv Malik, arguing that: (1) certain [**26] of Malik's statements are not actionable; (2) the Amended Complaint failed to plead a strong inference of scienter; and (3) the Amended Complaint fails to plead control-person liability under Section 20.

1. Actionable Statements

Mylan first argues that certain of Malik's statements made during the class period are not actionable as material misrepresentations or omissions. The Amended Complaint adds six statements by Malik during the class period. (Compl. ¶¶ 307, 319, 324, 339, 345, 351.) Mylan characterizes these statements as addressing three topics: (i) historical financial performance; (ii) optimistic characterizations of results and opinions about future performance; and (iii) the performance of Mylan's generics business. (Dkt. No. 96 at 17.)

These first two categories of statements, according to Mylan, are not actionable in light of the Court's prior opinion and relevant precedent. (Id.) And Plaintiffs do not dispute that Malik's statements on such topics, as alleged in the Amended Complaint, cannot form the basis for their claims. (Dkt. No. 101 at 7; Dkt. No. 100 at 16.) Accordingly, the Court holds that only Malik's statements in the third category, pertaining to performance of Mylan's [**27] generic drug segment, are potentially actionable.

Mylan also contends that any claims against Malik based on statements made before July 2012 are barred by the Exchange Act's five-year statute of repose. (Dkt. No. 96 at 24-25 (citing 28 U.S.C. § 1658\(b\)\(2\).) Plaintiffs concede this point (Dkt. No. 100 at 2 n.2), and so the Court does not address it further.

2. Scienter

As to the statements by Malik that are not inactionable as a matter of law, Mylan contends that the Plaintiffs insufficiently plead scienter. (Dkt. No. 96 at 18-23.)

To adequately plead scienter, a complaint must "state with particularity facts giving rise to a strong inference that the defendant[s] acted with the required state of mind." 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4\(b\)\(2\). "To qualify as 'strong' . . . an inference of scienter must be more than merely plausible or reasonable—it must be cogent and at least as compelling as any opposing inference of nonfraudulent intent." Tellabs, Inc. v. Makor Issues & Rights, Ltd., 551 U.S. 308, 314, 127 S. Ct. 2499, 168 L. Ed. 2d 179 \(2007\).

"The requisite state of mind in a Rule 10b-5 action is 'an intent to deceive, manipulate or defraud.'" Ganino v. Citizens Utils. Co., 228 F.3d 154, 168 \(2d Cir. 2000\) (quoting Ernst & Ernst v. Hochfelder, 425 U.S. 185, 193 n.12, 96 S. Ct. 1375, 47 L. Ed. 2d 668 \(1976\)). This requisite scienter "can be established by alleging facts to show either (1) that defendants had the motive and opportunity to commit fraud, or (2) strong circumstantial evidence of conscious [**28] misbehavior or recklessness." ECA & Local 134 IBEW Joint Pension Tr. of Chi. v. JP Morgan Chase Co., 553 F.3d 187, 198 \(2d Cir. 2009\). Circumstances that may "give rise to a strong inference of the requisite scienter" include allegations that the defendants "(1) benefitted in a concrete and personal way from the purported fraud; (2) engaged in deliberately illegal behavior; (3) knew facts or had access to information suggesting that their public statements were not accurate; or (4) failed to check information they had a duty to monitor." Id. at 199 (quoting [*213] Novak v. Kasaks, 216 F.3d 300, 311 \(2d Cir. 2000\)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Here, Plaintiffs attempt to plead scienter as to Defendant Malik through allegations of "conscious misbehavior" (Dkt. No. 100 at 17), i.e., that Malik "knew facts or had access to information suggesting that their public statements were not accurate," ECA, 553 F.3d at 199.

a. Scienter as to the EpiPen and Generic Drug Price Fixing

Plaintiffs contend that they have adequately pleaded scienter as to all Defendants—including Malik—with respect to the EpiPen and generic drug price fixing.<sup>8</sup> (Dkt. No. 100 at 17, 20-21.) Specifically, the Amended Complaint alleges that pricing decisions involved all top executives at Mylan (Compl. ¶¶ 122, 404); that "by virtue of his responsibilities as President," Malik "w[as] privy to, and [**29] participated in the fraudulent conduct described in this Complaint" (Compl. ¶ 397); and that EpiPen is part of Mylan's "core business operations" (Compl. ¶¶ 39, 398).

Mylan contends that there are no allegations—from a confidential witness ("CW") or otherwise—connecting Malik to the alleged price fixing of generic drugs or to EpiPen products. (Dkt. No. 96 at 18 n.13, 20-21.) Plaintiffs respond that the same allegations that are sufficient to plead a strong inference of scienter as to the other individual Defendants are also sufficient as to Malik. (Dkt. No. 100 at 17, 20-21.)

Indeed, the Court concluded in its prior opinion that the allegations from the CW about pricing decisions adequately pleaded scienter as to the individual executive Defendants for generic drug price fixing. (Dkt. No. 69 at 34.) That conclusion was based on allegations that the CW specifically "confirmed that Defendants Coury and Bresch, as successive CEOs, and Defendants Sheehan and Parks, as successive CFOs, each knew of and approved all material drug pricing decisions made by the Company." (Compl. ¶¶ 121, 403.)

But it is not alleged that the CW mentioned the involvement of Malik in such decisions; nor is it alleged [**30] that the CW had any interactions with Malik. See Glaser v. The9, Ltd., 772 F. Supp. 2d 573, 594 \(S.D.N.Y. 2011\) (discounting allegations from CWs where there was "no allegation that those sources ever had any contact with . . . the Individual Defendants"). And even though the CW attested to "work[jing] with Mylan President Tony Mauro on costing decisions," the Amended Complaint omits whether the CW had the same contact with the subsequent president, Malik. (Compl. ¶ 403.)

The allegations as to the knowledge and involvement of other individual Defendants are insufficient to plead with particularity a strong inference of scienter as to Malik. See Kinra v. Chi. Bridge & Iron Co., No. 17 Civ. 4251, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87548, 2018 WL 2371030, at \*6 \(S.D.N.Y. May 24, 2018\) ("Scienter must be separately pled and individually supportable as to each defendant; scienter is not amenable to group pleading." (citation omitted)). Furthermore, [*214] with respect to the EpiPen, the allegation that it is part of Mylan's "core business" is insufficient, by itself, to support a strong inference of scienter as to Malik. See New Orleans Emps. Ret. Sys. v. Celestica, Inc., 455 F. App'x 10, 14 n.3 \(2d Cir. 2011\) ("[A]llegations of a company's core operations . . . can provide supplemental support for allegations of scienter, [but] they cannot establish scienter independently.").

Overall, Plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead scienter as to Defendant Malik with [**31] respect to the EpiPen, or the alleged price fixing of generic drugs.

b. Scienter as to Doxy DR Market Allocation

<sup>8</sup> Mylan pointedly does not address "scienter allegations concerning the EpiPen," contending that they "do not apply" to Malik, because his alleged misstatements concern only the generics segment and there are no allegations that he was involved with EpiPen products. (Dkt. No. 96 at 18 n.13.) Plaintiffs do not directly address this point, instead arguing that the Amended Complaint pleads scienter as to all Defendants for the EpiPen rebate scheme. (Dkt. No. 100 at 17.) Because allegations regarding Malik's scienter as to the EpiPen rebate scheme and generic drug price fixing substantially overlap, the Court addresses scienter as to both. Even assuming that Malik had involvement with EpiPen products, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead scienter to establish Malik's primary liability for misstatements pertaining to EpiPen products.

To establish Malik's scienter as to claims that Mylan engaged in illegal market allocation of the market for the generic drug Doxy DR, the Amended Complaint alleges that Malik was personally involved in a conversation with the president of a competing pharmaceutical company, in which Malik agreed to the market allocation. (Compl. ¶¶ 129-131.)

Nevertheless, Mylan argues the Amended Complaint fails to plead scienter because the fact that these allegations were taken from the State AG action means that they cannot be considered as factual allegations in this case and must be disregarded.<sup>9</sup> (Dkt. No. 96 at 21-23.) For this position, Mylan relies on several cases from this District in which courts have held that "unproven allegations" taken from a complaint in another matter "do not constitute factual allegations" and are thus immaterial under Rule 12\(f\). In re CRM Holdings, Ltd. Sec. Litig., No. 10 Civ. 975, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66034, 2012 WL 1646888, at \*26 \(S.D.N.Y. May 10, 2012\); see, e.g., Janbay v. Canadian Solar, Inc., No. 10 Civ. 4430, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47125, 2012 WL 1080306, at \*5 \(S.D.N.Y. Mar. 30, 2012\); Low v. Robb, No. 11 Civ. 2321, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6836, 2012 WL 173472, at \*9 \(S.D.N.Y. Jan. 20, 2012\).

Plaintiffs argue to the contrary that "[t]he weight of authority in this District and others holds that reliance on well-pleaded factual allegations in complaints in other actions is appropriate." (Dkt. No. 100 at 19.) [**32] Indeed, the weight of authority holds that plaintiffs may base factual allegations on complaints from other proceedings because "neither Circuit precedent nor logic supports . . . an absolute rule" against doing so. Youngers v. Virtus Inv. Partners Inc., 195 F. Supp. 3d 499, 516 n.10 \(S.D.N.Y. 2016\) (brackets and citation omitted); see, e.g., HSH Nordbank AG v. RBS Holdings USA Inc., No. 13 Civ. 3303, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36087, 2015 WL 1307189, at \*3-4 \(S.D.N.Y. Mar. 23, 2015\); In re Fannie Mae 2008 Sec. Litig., 891 F. Supp. 2d 458, 471 \(S.D.N.Y. 2012\); In re Bear Stearns Mortg. Pass-Through Certificates Litig., 851 F. Supp. 2d 746, 768 n.24 \(S.D.N.Y. 2012\).

The Court agrees that "[i]t makes little sense to say that information from such a study—which [a complaint] could unquestionably rely on if it were mentioned in a news clipping or public testimony—is immaterial simply because it is conveyed in [*215] an unadjudicated complaint." In re Bear Stearns, 851 F. Supp. 2d at 768 n.24. To the extent the cases on which Mylan relies suggest that Second Circuit precedent requires a different result, other cases in this District have cogently explained that those decisions emanate from a misconstruction of Circuit precedent. See id.; In re OSG Sec. Litig., 12 F. Supp. 3d 619, 620-21 \(S.D.N.Y. 2014\); VNB Realty, Inc. v. Bank of Am. Corp., No. 11 Civ. 6805, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132250, 2013 WL 5179197, at \*3 \(S.D.N.Y. Sept. 16, 2013\).

In a particularly relevant case, one court "permitt[ed] plaintiffs to borrow allegations from the NYAG's complaint," where the "facts [we]re derived from a credible complaint based on facts obtained after an investigation" and counsel "indicated that they ha[d] reached out to attorneys at the NYAG to verify the allegations." Strougo v. Barclays PLC, 105 F. Supp. 3d 330, 343 \(S.D.N.Y. 2015\). The same circumstances obtain here: Plaintiffs' allegations regarding [**33] Malik's involvement originate from the State AG action, were the result of a government investigation, and were verified by Plaintiffs' counsel in this case. (Compl. ¶¶ 17 n.1, 124; Dkt. No. 100 at 20.) The Court thus treats allegations borrowed from the State AG complaint as a proper basis for the pleadings in this case.

Because the Amended Complaint's reliance on allegations from the State AG action was Mylan's sole argument against scienter as to the Doxy DR market allocation in its opening brief, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded Malik's scienter as to this conduct.

<sup>9</sup> Mylan's reply brief also raises "additional reliability problems" with "Plaintiff's scienter allegations." (Dkt. No. 101 at 8; see id. at 9.) But Mylan's opening brief does not raise these arguments, or otherwise dispute that the allegations in the Amended Complaint as to Malik's involvement in the Doxy DR allocation are sufficient to raise a strong inference of scienter, if they could be properly considered. (See Dkt. No. 96 at 21 ("Plaintiff's allegations . . . do not create an inference of scienter against Mr. Malik because the Doxy DR allegations are based on the unadjudicated complaint filed by the CTAG.").)

"[A]rguments raised for the first time in reply should not be considered, because the plaintiff[] had no opportunity to respond to those new arguments." Bertuglia v. City of New York, 839 F. Supp. 2d 703, 737 \(S.D.N.Y. 2012\). As such, the Court will not consider these "additional reliability problems" raised for the first time in Mylan's reply brief.

***

Overall, Plaintiff's claims for primary liability under Section 10\(b\) against Defendant Malik survive Mylan's motion to dismiss to the extent those claims are limited to statements about the performance of the generic segment, and allegations that those statements were misleading for failing to disclose the Doxy DR market allocation conduct.

3. Control-Person Liability

Section 20\(a\) of the Exchange Act imposes liability on "every person who, directly or indirectly, controls any person liable" for securities fraud. 15 U.S.C. § 78t\(a\). "To establish a prima facie case of control person liability, a plaintiff must show (1) a primary violation \*\*34 by the controlled person, (2) control of the primary violator by the defendant, and (3) that the defendant was, in some meaningful sense, a culpable participant in the controlled person's fraud." ATSI Commc'ns, Inc. v. Shaar Fund, Ltd., 493 F.3d 87, 108 \(2d Cir. 2007\). Importantly, "there can be no control person liability without a 'primary violation' of the Exchange Act." Menaldi, 164 F. Supp. 3d at 576 (quoting Wilson v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 671 F.3d 120, 139 \(2d Cir. 2011\)).

As the Court held above, Plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead a primary violation under Section 10\(b\) with respect to the alleged price fixing of the three new generic drugs: Doxy Mono, glipizide-metformin, and verapamil. Plaintiffs' Section 20\(a\) control-liability claims against Malik therefore fail as they relate to those three alleged price-fixing agreements. The Amended Complaint succeeds in pleading a primary violation—and the first element of control liability is thus satisfied—as to the remaining underlying conduct, namely, the EpiPen Medicaid misclassification, the EpiPen rebate scheme, Doxy DR market allocation, and the price fixing of five other generic drugs: albuterol sulfate, benazepril, clomipramine, divalproex, and propranolol.

As to the third element of control liability, "[m]ost courts in this district have held," and the parties agree here, that "culpable participation is a \*\*35 scienter requirement for which a plaintiff must allege \*216 some level of culpable participation at least approximating recklessness in the section 10\(b\) context in order to survive a motion to dismiss." In re Inv. Tech. Grp., Inc. Sec. Litig., No. 15 Civ. 6369, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48484, 2018 WL 1449206, at \*7 \(S.D.N.Y. Mar. 23, 2018\) (citation omitted). Mylan contends that the Amended Complaint fails to allege that Malik was a "culpable participant" in the purported primary violations. (Dkt. No. 96 at 24.) Plaintiffs respond that because they adequately allege Malik's scienter with respect to the primary violations, they have adequately alleged Malik's culpable participation. (Dkt. No. 100 at 25.)

Indeed, because Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded Malik's scienter as to the allegations of Doxy DR market allocation, they have adequately pleaded Malik's culpable participation as to the same conduct, and Malik's six statements allegedly rendered misleading by failure to disclose the conduct. But the Court has held that the Amended Complaint fails to adequately plead Malik's scienter as to the other conduct, and Plaintiffs have shown no basis for distinguishing between the scienter required for primary liability and control liability. As such, Plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead Malik's culpable participation regarding the allegations \*\*36 involving the EpiPen and generic drug price fixing, and the statements rendered misleading by the failure to disclose that conduct.

Finally, as to the second element of control liability, Mylan concedes that Malik had control over the six statements that he personally made. (Dkt. No. 96 at 24; Dkt. No. 101 at 10.) Accordingly, Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded a control-liability claim against Malik, but only to the extent such a claim is premised on allegations that the six statements made by Malik were misleading for failure to disclose the Doxy DR market allocation.

E. Claims Against Mylan Regarding Doxy DR

In addition to repleading the allegations that survived the earlier motion to dismiss and adding new allegations premised on different underlying misconduct, the Amended Complaint also attempts to cure a particular deficiency in Plaintiffs' previous complaint. Plaintiffs claim that certain of Mylan's statements were misleading because they failed to disclose that Mylan engaged in anticompetitive behavior, in violation of antitrust law, in allocating the market for the generic drug Doxy DR. (Compl. ¶¶ 123-152.)

The Court held in the Opinion of March 28, 2018 that Plaintiffs had "plausibly [**37] plead[ed] the existence of a market allocation arrangement between Mylan and Heritage" with respect to Doxy DR. (Dkt. No. 69 at 30-31.) However, the Court held that Plaintiff's failed to adequately plead scienter. (Dkt. No. 69 at 34.)

In the Amended Complaint, borrowing from the State AG action, alleges that Defendant Rajiv Malik, Mylan's President, agreed with the president of Heritage on a May 8, 2013 phone call, to allocate the market for Doxy DR between their two pharmaceutical companies. (Compl. ¶¶ 129-132.) Plaintiffs contend that the Amended Complaint adequately pleads scienter as to the Doxy DR agreement, given the involvement of Malik. (Dkt. No. 100 at 2, 18.)

Mylan argues that the complaint again fails to adequately plead scienter solely because "Plaintiffs rely entirely on the unproven allegations copied from the CTAG's complaint to supplement their previously dismissed allegations of scienter as to Doxy DR." (Dkt. No. 96 at 23.) As explained above, the Court rejects this argument and considers the allegations in the Amended Complaint, regardless of whether they originated in the State AG action.

[*217] From those allegations, the Amended Complaint adequately pleads Malik's scienter [**38] as to the Doxy DR agreement. And because the Court may "readily attribute[] the scienter of management-level employees to corporate defendants," In re Marsh & McLennan Cos., Inc. Sec. Litig., 501 F. Supp. 2d 452, 481 (S.D.N.Y. 2006), the Court imputes the scienter of Malik, the president of Mylan, to the corporation. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have overcome the deficiency of their prior complaint and adequately pleaded scienter as to the Doxy DR claims.

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' motion to partially dismiss the Second Amended Class Action Complaint is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. Defendants shall file an answer to the surviving claims within three weeks from the date of this order.

The Clerk of Court is directed to close the motion at Docket Number 95.

Opinion

FACTUAL BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

THIS MATTER arises from allegations of antitrust and price-fixing activities related to roll-on, roll-off cargo shipping. Plaintiff Mercedes-Benz USA, LLC ("MBUSA") filed this action on August 30, 2018 against four separate sets of defendants: (1) Nippon Yusen Kabushiki Kaisha and NYK Line (North America), Inc. (collectively, the "NYK Defendants"); (2) Wallenius Wilhelmsen Logistics, AS, a/k/a Wallenius Wilhelmsen Ocean AS, and Wallenius Wilhelmsen Logistics Americas, LLC (collectively, the "WWL Defendants"); (3) Mitsui O.S.K. Lines, Ltd. and Mitsui O.S.K. Bulk Shipping (USA), LLC (collectively, the "MOL Defendants"); and (4) Kawasaki Kisen Kaisha, Ltd. and "K" Line Americas, Inc. (collectively, the "K Line Defendants") (the NYK Defendants, WWL Defendants, MOL Defendants, and K Line Defendants are collectively referred to in this Opinion as "Defendants").

MBUSA purchased roll-on, roll-off shipping services from Defendants to ship new Mercedes-Benz automobiles to or from the United States. Between 1997 and 2013, Defendants agreed not to compete [*3] for MBUSA's business or agreed to fix the prices they would charge for MBUSA services. This agreement was unknown until September 6, 2012 when the press reported that antitrust authorities from the United States, European Union, and Japan raided Defendants' corporate offices as part of an ongoing criminal price-fixing investigation. Sometime afterwards, Defendants entered into guilty pleas and admitted to their illegal conduct. However, MBUSA was not compensated for the damages it suffered as a result of Defendants' antitrust activities.

On July 26, 2013, direct purchasers of roll-on, roll-off shipping services filed a class action complaint in federal court against Defendants, asserting federal antitrust claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, relating to Defendants' agreements to fix, stabilize, or maintain the prices of, and allocate the market for, vehicle carrier services. In that case, the putative class purported to represent all persons and entities in the United States that purchased vehicle carrier services directly from any one of the Defendants (or any current or former subsidiary or affiliate thereof) or any of their co-conspirators during the class period.

After the direct [*4] purchaser case was consolidated for discovery with the indirect purchaser cases, the direct purchasers amended their complaint. The direct purchasers' substantive claims and factual allegations were similar to those in their initial complaint, and the putative class was defined as all persons and entities that purchased vehicle carrier services for shipments to or from the United States directly from any of the Defendants or any current or former predecessor, subsidiary, or affiliate of each, at any time during the period from January 1, 2000 to December 31, 2012. While MBUSA was included in the class definition, no class notice was sent, no class was certified, no class settlement notice was sent, and MBUSA did not have the opportunity to opt out of the class.

On August 28, 2015, the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey dismissed the direct purchasers' amended complaint. That dismissal was affirmed by the Third Circuit Court of Appeals on January 18, 2017, and the United States Supreme Court denied certiorari on October 2, 2017. MBUSA filed this case in the Superior Court of New Jersey on August 30, 2018 asserting claims under the New Jersey Antitrust Act. [*5] MBUSA also asserted claims against each individual defendant for breach of contract, breach of the implied duty of good faith and fair dealing, and tortious interference. Those contract-related claims are allegedly based on different law and different facts than the federal antitrust claims asserted by the putative direct purchaser class.

Defendants removed MBUSA's case to the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey on September 11, 2018. MBUSA subsequently moved to remand the case on October 11, 2018. MBUSA's motion to remand was granted on December 12, 2018 and this matter was remanded to the Superior Court of New Jersey and reopened that same day.

Defendants now jointly move to dismiss Plaintiff's complaint. Defendants argue that the Superior Court of New Jersey lacks jurisdiction to adjudicate this matter, because the Federal Maritime Commission is the proper and exclusive forum for any claims based on the conduct alleged above. The claim that the Shipping Act reflects Congress's clear intent to create a uniform, comprehensive federal regulatory scheme for ocean common carriers, and the same law of conflict preemption that led to the District of New Jersey and [*6] the Third Circuit to dismiss the putative class plaintiffs' claims under various states' laws requires the dismissal of MBUSA's virtually identical claims under New Jersey law. Plaintiffs oppose the motion, stating that the Shipping Act does not preempt any of MBUSA's claims.

For the reasons set forth below, Defendants' renewed consolidated joint motion to dismiss is GRANTED.

RULE OF LAW

I. Conflict Preemption and the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution

"The preemption doctrine is based on the Supremacy Clause, which provides that 'the Laws of the United States . . . shall be the supreme Law of the Land . . . any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.' In re Vehicle Carrier Servs. Antitrust Litig., 846 F.3d 71, 83 (3d Cir. 2017) (quoting U.S. Constitution art. VI, cl. 2); accord Hous. Auth. & Urban Redev. Agency of the City of Atl. City v. Taylor, 171 N.J. 580, 587, 796 A.2d 193 (2002). "Under the Supremacy Clause . . . any state law, however clearly within a State's acknowledged power, which interferes with or is contrary to federal law, must yield." Gade v. Nat'l Solid Wastes Mgmt. Ass'n., 505 U.S. 88, 108, 112 S. Ct. 2374, 120 L. Ed. 2d 73 (1992); accord Estate of Brust v. ACF Indus., LLC, 443 N.J. Super. 103, 113, 127 A.3d 729 (App. Div. 2015). Because conflict preemption is rooted in the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, New Jersey courts must apply the same standards as the Supreme Court of the United States and other federal courts.

"[E]ven if Congress has not occupied the field, state law is naturally preempted to the extent of any conflict with federal statute." Crosby v. Nat'l Foreign Trade Council, 530 U.S. 363, 372, 120 S. Ct. 2288, 147 L. Ed. 2d 352 (2000). Federal law is not required to contain an express preemption clause to [*7] displace state law. Id. (under the doctrine of implied preemption, "[e]ven without an express provision for preemption . . . state law must yield to a congressional Act"). Conflict preemption occurs where "compliance with both federal and state regulations is a physical impossibility" or whenever "state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." Arizona v. United States, 567 U.S. 387, 399, 132 S. Ct. 2492, 183 L. Ed. 2d 351 (2012).

When Congress creates an exclusive cause of action before a specialized administrative body, the most minor obstacle will not be tolerated. Rice v. Santa Fe Elevator Corp., 331 U.S. 218, 236, 67 S. Ct. 1146, 91 L. Ed. 1447 (1947). "The test, therefore, is whether the matter on which the State asse[r]ts the right to act is in any way regulated by the Federal Act. If it is, the federal scheme prevails though it is a more modest, less pervasive regulatory plan than that of the State." Id. Therefore, whether any federal legislation preempts state law claims requires an examination of Congress's intent in passing the legislation, including its purpose, language, structure, and legislative history.

II. The Shipping Act of 1984

The Third Circuit has provided a thorough analysis of Congress's intent in passing the Shipping Act of 1984 (the "Shipping Act") in the related [*8] federal litigation, In re Vehicle Carrier Services. 846 F.3d at 84. Both the federal courts and New Jersey state courts apply the same principles for conflict preemption. Focusing on the purpose of the Shipping Act, the Third Circuit explained the following:

One purpose of the Act is to 'establish a nondiscriminatory regulatory process for the common carriage of goods by water in the foreign commerce of the United States with a minimum of government intervention and regulatory costs.' [] A second purpose is to ensure that U.S.-flag ships are on a level playing field with foreign vessels.

To help achieve these goals, the Shipping Act broadened the antitrust immunity provisions in the Shipping Act of 1916 that had eroded over time through what Congress viewed as overly narrow judicial interpretations. Specifically, the Shipping Act expressly provides for complete federal antitrust immunity, including immunity from criminal prosecution by the Department of Justice under the Sherman Act and civil suits by private plaintiffs under the Clayton Act, for various agreements between ocean carriers, including those that are filed with the Federal Maritime Commission (the "FMC"). 46 U.S.C. § 40307\(a\) ("The antitrust laws do not apply to . . . an agreement [*9] (including an assessment agreement) that has been filed and effective under this chapter"); In re Vehicle Carrier Servs., 846 F.3d at 80-81.

Agreements between or among ocean common carriers covered by this grant of immunity specifically include, among others, agreements to: (1) "discuss, fix, or regulate transportation rates, including through rates, cargo space accommodations, and other conditions of service;" (2) "engage in an exclusive, preferential, or cooperative working arrangement between themselves or with a marine terminal operator," (3) "control, regulate, or prevent competition in international ocean transportation," and (4) "discuss and agree on any matter related to a service contract." 46 U.S.C. § 40301\(a\)\(1\)-\(7\).

Even when an agreement is not filed and effective with the FMC, the Shipping Act expressly provides immunity from private antitrust suits under the Clayton Act for any alleged damages resulting from an unfiled agreement. Id. at 40307\(d\) ("A person may not recover damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act \(15 U.S.C. § 26\), for conduct prohibited by this part."); In re Vehicle Carrier Servs., 846 F.3d at 81 (explaining that "[i]f an agreement has not been filed, it cannot become effective and thus operating under such an unfiled agreement is prohibited" and that "[a] party injured by activities occurring under [*10] such an unfiled, and hence, not effective, agreement may not obtain Clayton Act relief.")

The Shipping Act provides an exclusive remedy for violations of the Shipping Act through administrative proceedings before the FMC. H.R. Rep. No. 98-53(I), at 12. The Shipping Act provides detailed procedures by which the FMC, on its own accord or based on an action commenced by a private party, may investigate, decide, and if appropriate issue relief for violations of the Shipping Act. 46 U.S.C. §§ 41301-41309. The Third Circuit provides a clear overview of these procedures:

[The Shipping Act] does provide an avenue for relief before the FMC. Either on a complaint filed by a private party, 46 U.S.C. § 41301\(a\), or its own motion, the FMC may investigate alleged violations of the Shipping Act. In such proceedings, the parties may engage in discovery, and request hearings before the FMC. If a plaintiff shows the Act has been violated, the FMC may assess penalties, award damages of up to double the amount of the actual injury, grant attorneys' fees, and provide a means to obtain equitable relief . . . . Congress gave the FMC this broad authority to, among other things, provide a deterrent effect which has previously been available only by invoking the [*11] antitrust laws.

In re Vehicle Carrier Servs., 846 F.3d at 85.

As the Third Circuit summarized, "the Shipping Act's text, scheme, and legislative history demonstrate Congress's intent to create a comprehensive, predictable federal framework to ensure efficient and nondiscriminatory international shipping practices." Id. at 82.

DECISION

I. MBUSA's State Law Claims are Preempted by the Shipping Act

A. Claims under the New Jersey Antitrust Act

After examining Congress's intent in passing the Shipping Act, the Third Circuit determined that the multi-district litigation ("MDL") plaintiffs' state law antitrust claims were preempted by the Shipping Act in In Re Vehicle Carrier Servs., 846 F.3d at 85. It stated that "Congress sought to limit the application of the antitrust laws to enable U.S.-flag carriers to compete against their foreign counterparts who may not be subject to similar restrictions." Id. Enabling a party to bring state antitrust claims directly conflicts with this goal. Id. ("Put simply, to subject the carriers to potential state antitrust liability would essentially undo Congress's work in expanding antitrust immunity and undermine its efforts to assist U.S.-flag ships avoid a competitive disadvantage.").

The Third Circuit's determination that the MDL plaintiffs' state law [*12] antitrust claims were preempted applies directly to the claims brought by MBUSA under the New Jersey Antitrust Act. Therefore, MBUSA's claims must also be dismissed with prejudice as preempted.

B. State Claims Sounding in Contract and Tort Law

After holding that the MDL plaintiffs' state antitrust claims were preempted, the Third Circuit further held that the MDL plaintiffs' remaining state law claims, asserted under various states' consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws, were similarly preempted. "While these state laws reflect the exercise of traditional police powers, applying them here would allow the states to impose rules in an area Congress has historically regulated: maritime commerce." Id. As with the state antitrust claims, allowing these state consumer protection and unjust enrichment claims to be adjudicated would "thwart Congress's goal of ensuring uniform regulation of ocean common carriers' business practices." Id. at 86. The Third Circuit emphasized that Congress created a specific enforcement mechanism and means for private parties to obtain relief before the FMC, and "allowing state laws to impose different standards would upset this carefully crafted scheme." Id. at 86-87.

The Third [*13] Circuit's analysis in In re Vehicle Carrier Services regarding miscellaneous state law claims applies equally to MBUSA's remaining state law claims sounding in breach of contract and tortious interference. While these specific claims were not plead in In re Vehicle Carrier Services, it is of no relevance, because the Third Circuit focused on the effect the state claims would have on the ability to achieve the purposes of the Shipping Act, not on the particular causes of action themselves.

Upon closer inspection, MBUSA's breach of contract and tortious interference state law claims are based on the same underlying factual allegations as MBUSA's state antitrust claims. Therefore, they would have the same interference with federal law, and should likewise be preempted. Id. at 85. The gravamen of each of MBUSA's claims is the same as the claims alleged in In re Vehicle Carrier Services — that is alleged harm to purchasers of vehicle carrier services as a result of alleged secret, unfiled agreements among ocean common carriers. All of MBUSA's claims are based on the same underlying factual allegations as alleged by the MDL plaintiffs, and all of which uniquely involved alleged violations of the Shipping [*14] Act. As such, MBUSA's claims must be similarly dismissed with prejudice, as they conflict with Congress's objectives in enacting the Shipping Act.

C. State Law Claims Related to Service Contracts are Preempted by the Shipping Act

MBUSA contends that the precedent in In re Vehicle Carrier Services does not apply to claims involving service contracts, and therefore, such claims are not preempted by the Shipping Act. However, the Third Circuit clearly held that the Shipping Act preempts state law claims, even when such claims relate to service contracts. As explained in the In re Vehicle Carrier Services opinion, under 46 U.S.C. §§ 41102\(b\) and 40302\(a\), ocean common carriers are required to file with the FMC certain agreements enumerated in 46 U.S.C. § 40301\(a\), including, among others, agreements "between and among ocean common carriers" to "discuss, fix, or regulate transportation rates," to "control, regulate, or prevent competition in international ocean transportation," or to "discuss and agree on any matter related to a service contract" in order to comport with the regulatory scheme established by Congress. In re Vehicle Carrier Servs., 846 F.3d at 80 (internal citations omitted).

Furthermore, operating under an unfiled and ineffective agreement is a prohibited act, in which [*15] injured parties may not obtain antitrust relief under the Clayton Act. Id. at 81, 83, 85-87. Instead, the Shipping Act provides that the exclusive private remedy for any alleged harm caused by prohibited conduct is a claim for reparations before the FMC.

MBUSA's complaint alleges that Defendants met and conspired with other providers of vehicle carrier services to agree to overcharge customers, like MBUSA and exchanged competitively sensitive information about prices, customers, and routes in order to rig bids, allocate customers or markets, and fix prices for vehicle carrier services. These allegations are precisely the type of conduct that would constitute a violation of the Shipping Act, as operating under unfiled and ineffective agreements to "discuss and agree on any matter related to a service contract" is prohibited by the Shipping Act. 46 U.S.C. § 40301 \(a\)\(7\); In re Vehicle Carrier Servs., 846 F.3d at 82 ("There is no dispute that operating under unfiled price fixing and/or market allocation agreements is prohibited under sections 40301 and 40302 of the Shipping Act.").

Because the Shipping Act is clear that Defendants' alleged operation under unfiled agreements related to service contracts is prohibited by the Act, and the exclusive remedy for any conduct prohibited by the Act is [*16] a claim for reparations before the FMC, the result is likewise clear: MBUSA's state law claims are preempted and must be dismissed with prejudice.

Footnote 12 in In re Vehicle Carrier Services also does not lend support to MBUSA's position that the Third Circuit's opinion is inapplicable to service contracts. In the MDL action, plaintiffs argued that service contracts for the shipping of newly assembled motor vehicles should not be barred by the Shipping Act. However, the Third Circuit held that this argument did not change the outcome of the case, because "[t]his exemption from filing service contracts for newly assembled motor vehicles . . . does not relieve Defendants from their obligation to file the other agreements referred to in § 40301\(a\) or \(b\) with the FMC." Id. at 83 n. 12. Therefore, Defendants would have been required to file the agreements concerning service contracts with the FMC. Id. This holding directly rebuts MBUSA's position that the aforementioned opinion does not apply to MBUSA's service contract claims.

Finally, MBUSA points to 46 U.S.C. § 40502 to support its assertion that its claims are not preempted and that In re Vehicle Carrier Services does not apply to its claims regarding service contracts. That [*17] section provides that "the exclusive remedy for a breach of a service contract is an action in an appropriate court." 46 U.S.C. § 40502\(f\). Such a suggestion, however, is misplaced, and does not save MBUSA's claims from preemption.

The courts and the FMC have both consistently have explained that 46 U.S.C. § 40502\(f\) applies only to allegations involving "mere contract disputes" and not instances where the claims involve issues particular to the Shipping Act. See, e.g. In re Containership Co. (TCC) A/S, 466 B.R. 219, 227 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2012) (discussing that the "dividing line between a mere contract dispute and an alleged violation that is 'particular to the Shipping Act'" and noting that "courts have deferred to the FMC to address issues that are specifically and expressly addressed in the Shipping Act, such as whether . . . certain shipping practices are illegal and discriminatory and in violation of the Act"); CargoOne, Inc. v. COSCO Container Lines, Co., Ltd., 28 S.R.R. 1635, 1645 (FMC 2000) ("[T]he test is whether a complainant's allegations are inherently a breach of contract, or whether they also involve elements peculiar to the Shipping Act."). Courts have retained jurisdiction over mere contract disputes that were not peculiar to the Shipping Act, and did not require the FMC's specialized [*18] expertise. See, e.g., Mitsui O.S.K. Lines, Ltd. v. Evans Delivery Co., 948 F. Supp. 2d. 406, 409 (D.N.J. 2013) (exercising jurisdiction over contract claims regarding failure to deliver goods pursuant to transportation order).

MBUSA's claims are premised on alleged conduct that is "particular to the Shipping Act" and of which are not mere contract disputes, making § 40502\(f\) inapplicable, and leaving a claim for reparations before the FMC as the exclusive private remedy. MBUSA's claims involving alleged secret, unfiled agreements among ocean common carriers are among those that Congress specifically reserved for the specialized expertise of the FMC. In re Vehicle Carrier Servs., 846 F.3d at 86. MBUSA's attempt to disguise such claims in the language of state contract law in order to avoid the exclusive Shipping Act remedies designed by Congress "would essentially undo Congress's work in expanding antitrust immunity" and thus "allowing [such claims] to proceed would pose an obstacle to achieving Congress's objectives in passing the Act." Id. at 85-87.

II. Whether Defendants are U.S.-flag Carriers is Unrelated to Whether the Shipping Act Preempts MBUSA's Claims

MBUSA also argues that its claims are not preempted because Defendants are not U.S.-flag carriers. However, a review of the Shipping Act, as well as the Third Circuit's opinion in [*19] In re Vehicle Carrier Services shows that this assertion is also incorrect. Reading the Shipping Act as a whole discloses that, although one of Congress's purposes in passing the Shipping Act was "to ensure that U.S.-flag ships are on a level playing field with foreign vessels," another purpose of the Act was to "establish a nondiscriminatory regulatory process for the common carriage of goods by water in the foreign commerce of the United States with a minimum of government intervention and regulatory costs." In re Vehicle Carrier Servs., 846 F.3d at 85 (citing 46 U.S.C. §§ 40101\(1\)-\(2\)).

Congress achieved these purposes by enacting a comprehensive statutory scheme that applies to all ocean common carriers within the jurisdiction of the United States, regardless of their flag. See, 46 U.S.C. § 40102\(6\) (defining "common carrier" as any person, not limited to flag, that "holds itself out to the general public to provide transportation by water of passengers or cargo between the United States and a foreign country for compensation."); see also, H.R. Rep. No. 98-53(I), at 24 (1983) ("[The bill] attempts to provide clearcut rules and procedures applicable to both foreign-flag and U.S.-flag operators within an equitable and competitive commercial environment.").

No relevant provision of the [*20] Shipping Act creates a different set of rules for U.S. versus non-U.S. flag carriers, and the Third Circuit has never hinted that the Shipping Act exemptions applied only to U.S.-flag carriers. Therefore, this argument against preemption also fails, and MBUSA's claims must be dismissed with prejudice.

III. MBUSA's Antitrust Claims are Time-Barred by the New Jersey Antitrust Act's Four-Year Statute of Limitations

While the Court has determined that MBUSA's complaint must be dismissed as the claims it sets forth are preempted by the Shipping Act, it also notes that MBUSA's antitrust claims are time-barred by a four-year statute of limitations. Under the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J.S.A. 56:9-1, a cause of action "based upon a conspiracy in violation of [the] act" must be commenced "within 4 years after the plaintiff discovered, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have discovered the facts relied upon for proof of the conspiracy." N.J.S.A. 56:9-14; see, Cetel v. Kirwan Fin. Grp., Inc., 460 F.3d 494, 510 n. 11 (3d Cir. 2006) (noting that "the New Jersey Antitrust Act [has a] four-year statute of limitations.").

MBUSA has waited approximately six years after it either knew or should have known of its potential claims in order to file its complaint. While this case was pending [*21] in federal court, MBUSA conceded that its claims accrued no later than September 6, 2012. This date was when the leading news agencies worldwide reported on global antitrust investigations into alleged price fixing and other alleged anticompetitive conduct by defendants and related investigative raids of Defendants' offices by antitrust authorities in the United States, Europe, and Asia. However, MBUSA did not file its complaint until August 30, 2018 — nearly six years later.

A. MBUSA Knew or Should Have Known it had Potential Claims No Later than September 6, 2012

Under the New Jersey Antitrust Act, the accrual date for a cause of action sounding in conspiracy is governed by the "discovery rule." Even under that generous rule, the accrual date is only delayed "until the injured party discovers, or by an exercise of reasonable diligence and intelligence should have discovered that [it] may have a basis for an actionable claim." R.L. v. Voytac, 199 N.J. 285, 299, 971 A.2d 1074 (2009); see also, N.J.S.A. 56:9-14. MBUSA, as the party "claiming the indulgence of the rule," bears the burden of proving that its application is warranted. Yarchak v. Trek Bicycle Corp., 208 F. Supp. 2d 470, 487 (D.N.J. 2002).

In New Jersey, the "application of the discovery rule is objective." Martinez v. Cooper Hosp.-Univ. Med. Ctr., 163 N.J. 52, 747 A.2d 266 (2000). Courts seek to determine "whether the plaintiff knew [*22] or should have known of sufficient facts to start the statute of limitations running." Id. "[K]nowledge of fault for purposes of the discovery rule has a circumscribed meaning: it requires only the awareness of facts that would alert a reasonable person exercising ordinary diligence that a third party's conduct may have caused or contributed to the cause of the injury[.]). Savage v. Old Bridge-Sayreville Medical Group, P.A., 134 N.J. 241, 248, 633 A.2d 514 \(1993\).

In this instance, MBUSA would have or should have known that it may have been injured by Defendants on September 6, 2012, the date of the highly-publicized "dawn raids" of Defendants' offices, and high-profile investigations by antitrust authorities around the world. Therefore, MBUSA either had actual knowledge or must be charged with constructive knowledge of the "dawn raids" of Defendants' offices and global antitrust investigations on September 6, 2012. Moreover, as a significant automotive original equipment manufacturer ("OEM") that imports, distributes, and sells Mercedes-Benz automobiles and light trucks in the United States, and as a purported direct purchaser of vehicle carrier services, MBUSA has close, substantial involvement in the vehicle carrier services market on a day-to-day basis. Therefore, MBUSA [*23] either actually knew or should have known of the antitrust investigations receiving widespread attention in the industry.

Against this backdrop, the Court must conclude that MBUSA simply slept on its potential claims while other, similarly situated automotive OEMs with access to the same widely-reported information as MBUSA acted with reasonable diligence, as the law requires, to pursue their claims. Therefore, MBUSA's claims under the New Jersey Antitrust Act are dismissed as time-barred.

B. A Reasonable Plaintiff Would Have Engaged in Further Inquiry Related to the Widely Reported Antitrust Investigations

MBUSA is also charged with inquiry notice of any further knowledge discoverable through a reasonable diligent investigation. County of Hudson v. Janiszewski, 520 F. Supp. 2d, 631, 634, \(D.N.J. 2007\); Mathews v. Kidder, Peabody & Co., 260 F.3d 239, 255 \(3d Cir. 2011\); Cetel, 460 F.3d at 508.

The widespread publicity regarding the September 6, 2012 "dawn raids" and the global antitrust investigations, at a bare minimum, triggered MBUSA's duty to investigate its potential claims with reasonable diligence. MBUSA was "plainly on inquiry notice" as a result of the "multiplicity and specificity" of information available to it about Defendants' alleged wrongdoing. See, e.g., GO Computer Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 508 F.3d 170, 179 \(4th Cir. 2007\); Isaak v. Trumbull Sav. & Loan Co., 169 F.3d 390, 400 \(6th Cir. 1999\). Many news reports were widely circulated internationally, [*24] and were detailed and specific, identifying Defendants by name and highlighting that the government investigations concerned alleged price fixing and other alleged anticompetitive conduct by Defendants.

Despite these reports, MBUSA ignored them, or failed to conduct a reasonable inquiry, if any inquiry at all, and thus "cannot obtain the benefit that a finding of reasonable diligence will confer." Cetel, 460 F. 3d at 508. Therefore, MBUSA's claims are untimely and must be dismissed.

C. Class Action Tolling does not Apply, and thus Cannot Save MBUSA's Time-Barred Claims

MBUSA argues that the filing of federal Clayton Act claims by a putative class of direct purchasers in the New Jersey MDL action "tolled" the statute of limitations on MBUSA's putative New Jersey Antitrust Act claim. However, no such class action tolling applies in this instance.

The doctrine of class action tolling that MBUSA seeks to invoke is sometimes referred to as the "American Pipe" rule. Under American Pipe, "the commencement of a class action [that is ultimately not certified due to a lack of numerosity] suspends the applicable statute of limitations as to all asserted members of the class who would have been [*25] parties had the suit been permitted to continue as a class action." American Pipe & Constr. Co. v. Utah, 414 U.S. 538, 553-54, 94 S. Ct. 756, 38 L. Ed. 2d 713 \(1974\). The weight of authority holds that American Pipe tolling is afforded only to subsequent individual causes of actions or claims identical to the ones alleged in the earlier putative class action. Johnson v. Ry, Express Agency, Inc., 421 U.S. 454, 467, 95 S. Ct. 1716, 44 L. Ed. 2d 295 (1975).

In adopting class action tolling, New Jersey courts have expressly relied on American Pipe and discussed it at length. Staub v. Eastman Kodak Co., 320 N.J. Super. 34, 47-52, 726 A.2d 955 (App. Div. 1999). Relying on American Pipe, Staub held that "if the pendency of a putative class action does not toll the statute of limitations for individual claimants who would be members of the class if it is certified, potential class members who have 'discovered' their claims would be compelled to file suit to avoid expiration of the period of limitations." Id. at 56 (internal citations omitted).

MBUSA also misconstrues American Pipe in arguing that the statute of limitations on its state antitrust claim should be tolled because a previous federal court action asserted substantially the same claims as those asserted by MBUSA under the New Jersey Antitrust Act in this case. However, mere similarity in claims is not enough to warrant American Pipe tolling because "the policies underlying American Pipe and like precedents simply [*26] do not apply in the cross-jurisdiction context," such as between the federal courts and state courts. In re Copper Antitrust Litig., 436 F.3d 782, 794-95 (7th Cir. 2006). "However similar or dissimilar the function of federal antitrust law may be with respect to state law, the federal claim is part of a distinct body of law that must be pursued in a wholly different court system. This fact cuts decisively against the application of the policies of American Pipe across jurisdictional lines." Id. at 794.

When considering the foregoing, it is abundantly clear that class action tolling under the American Pipe rule is inappropriate given the circumstances, and MBUSA's state antitrust claims must be dismissed as time-barred.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Defendants' motion to dismiss MBUSA's complaint is GRANTED.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Consolidation of Actions

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

HN1 Trials, Consolidation of Actions

Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a)(2) provides that a court may consolidate actions involving a common question of law or fact. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a)(1). The objective of consolidation is to administer the court's business with expedition and economy while providing justice to the parties. Consolidation of separate actions does not merge the independent actions into one suit. The party seeking consolidation bears the burden of demonstrating the commonality of law, facts or both in cases sought to be combined. Once the threshold requirement of establishing a common question of law or fact is met, the decision to consolidate rests in the sound discretion of the district court. The court weighs the interests of judicial economy against the potential for new delays, expense, confusion, or prejudice. Considerations of convenience and economy must yield to a paramount concern for a fair and impartial trial. Consolidation is not justified or required simply because the actions include a common question of fact or law. When cases involve some common issues but individual issues predominate, consolidation should be denied.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Consolidation of Actions

HN2 Trials, Consolidation of Actions

In deciding whether to consolidate actions, the trial court must consider whether the specific risks of prejudice and possible confusion are overborne by the risk of inconsistent adjudications of common factual and legal issues, the burden on the parties, witnesses and available judicial resources posed by multiple lawsuits, the length of time required to conclude multiple suits as against a single one, and the relative expense to all concerned of the single-trial, multiple-trial alternatives. Care must be taken that consolidation does not result in unavoidable prejudice or unfair advantage. Even though conservation of judicial resources is a laudable goal, if the savings to the judicial system are slight, the risk of prejudice to a party must be viewed with even greater scrutiny.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Appointments

HN3 Class Attorneys, Appointments

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g)(3) provides that the court may designate interim counsel to act on behalf of the putative class before determining whether to certify the action as a class action. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g)(3). Designation of interim counsel clarifies responsibility for protecting the interests of the class during precertification activities, such as making and responding to motions, conducting any necessary discovery, moving for class certification, and negotiating settlement. Designation of interim counsel is particularly appropriate when a number of lawyers have filed related copycat actions.

HN4 Class Attorneys, Appointments

The considerations set out in Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g)(1), which govern the appointment of post-certification class counsel, are equally applicable to a decision on whom to designate as interim class counsel. In deciding whether to designate plaintiff's counsel as interim class counsel, courts consider: (1) the work counsel has done in identifying or investigating potential claims in the action; (2) counsel's experience in handling class actions, other complex litigation, and the types of claims asserted in the action; (3) counsel's knowledge of the applicable law; and (4) the resources that counsel will commit to representing the class. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g)(1)(A). The court will also consider whether plaintiff's counsel will fairly and adequately represent the interests of the putative class. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g)(4).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) provides for a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). This type of motion tests the legal sufficiency of the plaintiff's complaint. When reviewing a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), a court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept its allegations as true, and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. A court, however, need not accept as true legal conclusions or unwarranted factual inferences. Legal conclusions masquerading as factual allegations will not suffice.

A plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level. To survive dismissal, the plaintiff must offer sufficient factual allegations to make the asserted claim plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the pleaded factual content allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.

HN7 [down arrow] False Advertising, State Regulation

Preemption may be either expressed or implied, and is compelled whether Congress's command is explicitly stated in the statute's language or implicitly contained in its structure and purpose. In all preemption cases, and especially where Congress has legislated in a field in which the States have traditionally occupied, courts start with the assumption that the historic police powers of the States were not to be superseded by the Federal Act unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress. Environmental regulation is a field that the states have traditionally occupied. The same is true of consumer protection and advertising regulations. Where the statute does not expressly preempt state law, preemption may be implied. The U.S. Supreme Court has recognized two types of implied preemption: field preemption, where the scheme of federal regulation is so pervasive as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it, and conflict preemption, where compliance with both federal and state regulations is a physical impossibility, or where state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\), in alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\). The purpose of Rule 9\(b\) is to put defendants on notice of the nature of the claim. It is a principle of basic fairness that a plaintiff should have an opportunity to flesh out her claim through evidence unturned in discovery. Rule 9\(b\) does not require omniscience; rather the Rule requires that the circumstances of the fraud be pled with enough specificity to put defendants on notice as to the nature of the claim. Although Rule 9\(b\) heightens the pleading standard, it always must be read against the backdrop of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8, which aims simply to put a defendant on notice of the claims against him so that he may reasonably respond to the allegations in the complaint.

HN14 [ ] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

For purposes of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\), the specificity required for allegations of affirmative misrepresentations is necessarily different than the specificity required for allegations of fraudulent omissions. When it comes to claims of fraud by omission or fraudulent concealment, the plaintiff faces a slightly more relaxed pleading burden; the claim can succeed without the same level of specificity required by a normal fraud claim. There is a disparate burden between the two types of fraud because fraudulent acts occur at a specific time, but fraudulent omissions occur over a period of time. While fraudulent acts can be specifically described, fraudulent omissions are, by very definition, more amorphous.

Even in the context of a fraudulent omission claim, Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\) requires a plaintiff to set forth the who, what, when, where, and how of the alleged omission. Plaintiffs must set forth: (1) precisely what was omitted; (2) who should have made a representation; (3) the content of the alleged omission and the manner in which the omission was misleading; and (4) what the defendant obtained as a consequence of the alleged fraud.

Statements of cleanliness convey inherently subjective concepts and constitute non-actionable opinions. Additionally, promises of efficiency and reliability cannot form the basis for a fraud claim. Courts are much more likely to find representations actionable when assertions make specific representations, especially numerically quantifiable representations. However, representations that merely contain numbers are not necessarily enough to qualify as actionable statements under a fraud theory. Factors that generally demonstrate that a numerical claim is actionable include: (1) if an advertisement expressly states that the product was tested by the advertising company; and (2) if the advertisement compares the product to a specific competitor by name. This does not apply in actions involving the Lanham Act.

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) establishes bases for both criminal and civil suits. A RICO civil suit may be brought by any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\). Section 1962 provides that it shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt. § 1962\(c\). In other words, a party advancing a civil RICO claim must establish their right to sue and then further allege the following elements: (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity.

Plaintiffs may assert a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) claim only if they can identify an injury to their business or property by reason of a violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\). In so limiting the scope of RICO standing, Congress exhibited an intention to exclude personal injury—that is, an injury to a person, such as a broken bone, a cut, or a bruise or a bodily injury. Similarly, a RICO injury must be concrete, not intangible or speculative. RICO plaintiffs must identify a reasonable and principled basis of recovery which is not based upon mere speculation and surmise. A plaintiff must, at a minimum, show some direct, pecuniary injury to his own pocket that is unrelated to a claimed personal injury.

There is a distinction between damages theories where an ascertainable and reasonably quantifiable overpayment occurred at the time of injury and speculative damages theories which are contingent on some future event, lost profit, or unanticipated future expense. Therefore, a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) plaintiff may recover for money invested on the basis of misrepresentations, but not for loss of the profits, which the plaintiffs expected to receive from an investment. Likewise, a RICO plaintiff may recover for overpayment when they buy a used car after being told it was new, but may not recover for overpayment simply because the tires they purchased may be defective. A RICO plaintiff may recover money paid pursuant to insurance policies that plaintiffs chose because the defendants falsely represented that the potential investors could completely avoid payment of any future federal income taxes, but cannot recover for loans granted to debtors based upon misrepresentations by the debtors because the plaintiffs would suffer damages only if the debtors defaulted and because the amount of damages was speculative until the creditor's bargained for remedies were exhausted.

HN21 [ ] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

In order to state a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) claim, plaintiffs must plausibly allege the existence of an enterprise engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\). But, the definition of enterprise for RICO purposes is exceedingly broad. The statute defines enterprise as any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(4\). On its face, the definition appears to include both legitimate and illegitimate enterprises within its scope; it no more excludes criminal enterprises than it does legitimate ones. A RICO association-in-fact must have at least three structural features: a purpose, relationships among those associated with the enterprise, and longevity sufficient to permit these associates to pursue the enterprise's purpose.

HN22 [ ] Claims, Fraud

To state a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) claim based on mail or wire fraud, a plaintiff must allege the following three elements: (1) devising or intending to devise a scheme to defraud (or to perform specified fraudulent acts); (2) involving a use of the mails; and (3) for the purpose of executing the scheme or attempting to do so. The plaintiffs must allege that the defendants possessed the specific intent to deceive or defraud. The scheme to defraud must involve misrepresentations or omissions reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension. The plaintiffs need not show actual reliance, but must demonstrate that the misrepresentations or omissions were material. Specific intent to defraud or deceive exists if the defendant by material misrepresentations intends the victim to accept a substantial risk that otherwise would not have been taken.

A defendant may commit mail fraud even if he personally has not used the mails. A mail fraud conviction requires only a showing that the defendant acted with knowledge that use of the mails would follow in the ordinary course of business, or that a reasonable person would have foreseen use of the mails. In other words, there is no requirement that the defendant have actually intended that the mails (or wire) be used. And, further, the mailings may be innocent or even legally necessary. The use of the mails need only be closely related to the scheme and reasonably foreseeable as a result of the defendant's actions.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has repeatedly confirmed that concealment of material facts can constitute a fraudulent scheme sufficient to establish Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act liability. In relation both to mail fraud and wire fraud, there is no technical or precise definition of an unlawful scheme to defraud. The standard is a reflection of moral uprightness, of fundamental honesty, fair play and right dealing in the general and business life of members of society. A fraudulent scheme may be demonstrated by proof that it was reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension, and communications of half-truths and concealment of material facts are both actionable. The Sixth Circuit has never articulated a duty to disclose requirement.

**HN26** [] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

A plaintiff's right to sue requires a showing that the defendant's violation not only was a but for cause of his injury, but was the proximate cause as well. The plaintiff must show some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged. Importantly, the causation inquiry must focus on the alleged link between the predicate acts and the asserted injury. A purported link that is too remote, purely contingent, or indirect is insufficient to confer standing. The general tendency of the law, in regard to damages at least, is not to go beyond the first step. An attenuated causation theory creates difficulties in apportioning damages between plaintiffs and attributing damages to defendants. A challenge to a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act suit based on asserted lack of proximate causation, however, is often best resolved at summary judgment, not at the pleading stage.

**HN27** [blue icon] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Threshold individual standing is a prerequisite for all actions, including class actions. A potential class representative must demonstrate individual standing vis-as-vis the defendant; he cannot acquire such standing merely by virtue of bringing a class action. The growing consensus, however, is that class certification issues are logically antecedent to U.S. Const. art. III concerns, at least when the named plaintiffs possess U.S. Const. art. III standing. In other words, where class certification is the source of the potential standing problems, class certification should precede the standing inquiry.

The question of whether state law claims may be advanced on behalf of unnamed plaintiffs is indistinguishable from the Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 analysis. Federal courts have a duty to confirm subject matter jurisdiction in every case pending before them. U.S. Const. art. III, § 2 limits federal court jurisdiction to cases and controversies. The doctrine derived from U.S. Const. art. III, § 2 imposes the requirement of standing: federal jurisdiction exists only if the dispute is one which is appropriately resolved through the judicial process. For standing to exist, three elements must be satisfied: injury in fact, causation, and redressability. Injury in fact exists when the plaintiff has suffered an invasion of a legally protected interest that is both concrete and particularized and actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical. Causation exists if the injury is one that fairly can be traced to the challenged action of the defendant. The redressability requirement is satisfied if the plaintiff's injury is likely to be redressed by a favorable decision. Standing can exist even if the alleged injury may be difficult to prove or measure.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN30 Standing, Injury in Fact

Claims of overpayment, wherein a plaintiff paid a premium but did not receive the anticipated consideration, are cognizable injuries in fact. The causation requirement in standing is not focused on whether the defendant caused the plaintiff's injury in the liability sense; the plaintiff need only allege injury that fairly can be traced to the challenged action of the defendant, and not injury that results from the independent action of some third party not before the court.

A. Procedural Background

On January 10, 2018, Plaintiffs Len Gamboa, Jeff Retmier, Nikiah Nudell, David Bates, Pete Petersen, and William Sparks, individually, and on behalf of all other similarly situated individuals (collectively, "Plaintiffs" or the "Gamboa Plaintiffs"), commenced this action (the "Gamboa Action") against Defendants Ford Motor Company ("Ford"), Robert Bosch GmbH ("Bosch GmbH"), [**5] and Robert Bosch LLC ("Bosch LLC") (collectively, "Defendants"). (Doc # 1) Plaintiffs allege that Defendants unlawfully manufactured and sold defective vehicles that had defective emissions controls in violation of: the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), (d) (Count 1); and various state consumer protection statutes (Counts 2-57). (Id.)

On April 6, 2018, Plaintiffs James Ruston, Vic Sparano, Andreas Alsdorf, Jeffrey Martin, Ken Ryan, Christopher Dieterick, Johnny Tolly, Kohen Marzolf, and Bruce Szepelak, individually, and on behalf of all other similarly situated individuals filed a Complaint (the "Ruston Action")<sup>1</sup> against all Defendants from the Gamboa Action. These plaintiffs are represented by the same attorneys who represented the [*864] Gamboa Plaintiffs. The same attorneys who represented Defendants in the Gamboa Action are representing Defendants in the Ruston Action. In the Ruston Action, the plaintiffs allege that in connection with Ford's vehicles, Defendants were in violation of: RICO (Count 1); and various state consumer protection statutes (Counts 2-63).

On April 20, 2018, Plaintiffs Glenn Goodroad, Jr., Richard Castro, [**6] Alan Flanders, Edward Hatten, Michael King, William McKnight, Luther "Ed" Palmer, Don Recker, Ivan Tellez, Brian Urban, Christina Bouyea, Value Additives LLC, and Michael Wilson, individually, and on behalf of all other similarly situated individuals filed a Complaint (the "Goodroad Action")<sup>2</sup> against all Defendants from the Gamboa Action as well as James Hackett

("Hackett"), Mark Fields ("Fields"), and Volkmar Denner in the United States District Court, Northern District of California. Attorneys Elizabeth J. Cabraser, David Stellings, Gretchen Freeman Cappio, Jason Henry Alperstein, Lynn L. Sarko, and Paul Jeffrey Geller represent the plaintiffs. Ford is represented by Attorneys Jeffrey M. Yeatman, Joel A. Dewey ("Dewey"), Stephanie A. Douglas, and Susan M. McKeever. Attorney Dewey represents Hackett and Fields. Attorney Matthew D. Slater represents Bosch GmbH and Bosch LLC in the Goodroad Action. In the Goodroad Action, the plaintiffs allege that in connection with Ford's vehicles, the defendants were in violation of: RICO (Count 1); and fraud by concealment (Count 2).

On June 14, 2018, the plaintiffs and defendants in the Goodroad Action [**7] agreed to stipulate to a transfer of the case to the Eastern District of Michigan. When the parties agreed to this stipulation, they both expressed that once their case was transferred, they would work with the plaintiffs from the Gamboa and Ruston Actions to file a consolidated amended complaint in the Eastern District of Michigan. (Doc # 39-2) On June 14, 2018, the Honorable Beth Labson Freeman signed a Stipulation and Order to Transfer the Class Action Complaint Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404\(a\). On June 15, 2018, the Goodroad case was transferred from the Northern District of California to the Eastern District of Michigan.<sup>3</sup>

On July 31, 2018, Dina Badagliacco ("Badagliacco") individually, and on behalf of all other similarly situated individuals filed a Complaint (the "Badagliacco Action")<sup>4</sup> against all Defendants from the Gamboa Action. Attorneys Sharon S. Almonrode, Melvin B. Hollowell, and E. Powell Miller represent Badagliacco. The same attorneys who represented Defendants in the Gamboa Action are representing Defendants in the Badagliacco Action. In the Badagliacco Action, Badagliacco alleges that in connection with Ford's vehicles, Defendants were [**8] in violation of: RICO (Count 1); New Jersey's Consumer Fraud Act (Count 2); and fraud by concealment under New Jersey common law (Count 3).

On April 9, 2018, Gamboa Plaintiffs filed a Motion for the Appointment of Interim Class Counsel. (Doc # 27) Defendants filed their Response to this Motion on April 23, 2018. (Doc # 31) On April 27, 2018, Gamboa Plaintiffs filed their Reply. (Doc # 33)

On April 9, 2018, Ford filed a Motion to Dismiss Gamboa Plaintiffs' Complaint. [*865] (Doc # 28) Gamboa Plaintiffs filed their Response to this Motion on June 15, 2018. (Doc # 35) On July 18, 2018, Ford filed its Reply. (Doc # 42)

On August 17, 2018, Ford filed a second Motion to Consolidate Cases. (Doc # 46) Plaintiffs have not [**9] responded to this Motion.

These five Motions are currently before the Court. A hearing on these five Motions was held on September 17, 2018.

B. Factual Background

Plaintiffs are suing Ford, Bosch GmbH, and Bosch LLC for allegedly selling vehicles that were not sold to consumers as advertised. (Doc # 1) According to Plaintiffs, Ford made several claims to consumers regarding its Ford F-250 and F-350 "Super Duty" vehicles that were untrue, including that its: (1) 6.7-liter Power Stroke Diesel is the "Cleanest Super Diesel Ever"; (2) proven technology and innovative strategies were used to meet the latest federal emissions standards; (3) vehicles reduced nitrogen oxide ("NOx") by 80% over previous models; and (4) vehicles were "best-in-class" with respect to fuel economy and that they were the most tested Power Stroke diesel engines ever. (Id. at 9.) Plaintiffs contend that scientifically valid emissions testing revealed that Ford's Super Duty vehicles emit levels of NOx that are many times higher than: (1) its gasoline counterparts; (2) what a reasonable consumer would expect; (3) what Ford had advertised; (4) the Environmental Protection Agency's ("EPA") maximum standards; and (5) the levels set [**10] for the vehicles to obtain a certificate of compliance, which allows them to be sold in the United States. (Id.) Plaintiffs state in their Complaint that exposure to the pollutants from NOx has been linked with "serious respiratory illnesses and premature death due to respiratory-related or cardiovascular-related effects." (Id. at 12.)

Plaintiffs' claims are based on the fact that they believe that "Ford's top selling Super Duty vehicles often emit far more pollution on the road than in the emissions-certification testing environment." (Id. at 10.) Plaintiffs argue that Ford's vehicles employ "defeat devices" to turn down emissions controls when the vehicles sense that they are not in the certification test cycle. (Id.) According to Plaintiffs, Ford benefits by using defeat devices because they allow Ford to reverse the traditional order of the exhaust treatment components and put the selective catalytic reduction in front of the diesel particulate filter. (Id. at 11.) Plaintiffs state that in modern vehicles with electronic engine controls, defeat devices are almost always activated by illegal software in each vehicle's engine control module. (Id.) Plaintiffs contend that these defeat devices give Ford the ability [**11] to obtain and market higher power and fuel efficiency from its engines while still passing cold-start emissions certifications tests. (Id.)

Plaintiffs argue that Ford's representations are "deceptive and false" and should cause Ford to be held legally responsible for selling their vehicles while omitting information that would be material to a reasonable consumer. (Id. at 16.) It is Plaintiffs' contention that Ford had a duty [*866] to disclose that in real-world driving conditions, Ford's vehicles could "only achieve high fuel economy, power, and durability by reducing emission controls in order to spew NOx into the air." (Id. at 18.) Plaintiffs further contend that Ford was responsible for disclosing to consumers that their vehicles may be "clean" diesels in certain circumstances, but are "dirty" diesels under common driving conditions. (Id.)

Plaintiffs bring their present lawsuit forward against the named Defendants because they believe that they are all responsible for the harms associated with Ford's alleged misrepresentations. While these are Ford's vehicles, Plaintiffs name Bosch GmbH and Bosch LLC as defendants because Plaintiffs allege that they were active and knowing participants in Ford's scheme. [**12] (Id. at 18-19.) Plaintiffs claim that Bosch GmbH and Bosch LLC developed, manufactured, and tested electronic diesel controls that allowed Ford to implement the defeat devices. (Id.)

Plaintiffs bring this action individually, but also on behalf of all other current and former owners or lessees of the vehicles. (Id. at 19.) Plaintiffs are seeking damages, injunctive relief, and equitable relief for Defendants' alleged misconduct related to the design, manufacture, marketing, sale, and leasing of the vehicles. (Id.)

II. MOTION TO CONSOLIDATE CASES

A. Standard of Review

HN1  Rule 42(a)(2) provides that a court may consolidate actions involving "a common question of law or fact." Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a)(1); Cantrell v. GAF Corp., 999 F.2d 1007, 1011 (6th Cir. 1993). The objective of consolidation is to administer the court's business with expedition and economy while providing justice to the parties. Advey v. Celotex Corp., 962 F.2d 1177, 1181 (6th Cir. 1992). Consolidation of separate actions does not merge the independent actions into one suit. Id. at 1180. The party seeking consolidation bears the burden of demonstrating the commonality of law, facts or both in cases sought to be combined. Young v. Hamric, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43634, 2008 WL 2338606 at \*4 \(E.D. Mich. 2008\). Once the threshold requirement of establishing a common question of law or fact is met, the decision to consolidate rests in the sound discretion of the district court. Stemler v. Burke, 344 F.2d 393, 396 (6th Cir. 1965). The court weighs [**13] the interests of judicial economy against the potential for new delays, expense, confusion, or prejudice. Banacki v. OneWest Bank, FSB, 276 F.R.D. 567, 571 \(E.D. Mich. 2011\). Considerations of convenience and economy must yield to a paramount concern for a fair and impartial trial. Id. at 572. Consolidation is not justified or required simply because the actions include a common question of fact or law. Id. When cases involve some common issues but individual issues predominate, consolidation should be denied. Id.

HN2 The trial court must consider whether the specific risks of prejudice and possible confusion are overborne by the risk of inconsistent adjudications of common factual and legal issues, the burden on the parties, witnesses and available judicial resources posed by multiple lawsuits, the length of time required to conclude multiple suits as against a single one, and the relative expense to all concerned of the single-trial, multiple-trial alternatives. Cantrell, 999 F.2d at 1011 (citations omitted). "Care must be taken that consolidation does not result in unavoidable prejudice or unfair advantage." Id. Even though conservation of judicial resources is a laudable goal, if the savings to the judicial system are slight, the risk of prejudice to a party must be viewed with even [**14] greater scrutiny. Id.

[*867] B. Whether Plaintiffs Have Sufficiently Demonstrated That They Will be Prejudiced if the Four Actions are Consolidated

Defendants request that the Ruston, Goodroad, and Badagliacco Actions be consolidated with the Gamboa Action under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42. (Doc # 39; Doc # 46) The Court finds that Defendants have demonstrated that it is necessary to consolidate these four actions. First, Defendants have adequately satisfied their requirement of demonstrating that the four actions share common questions of law and fact. In the four actions, the Gamboa, Ruston, Goodroad, and Badagliacco Plaintiffs allege that Ford was dishonest with regard to the claims that were made about its vehicles that are equipped with 6.7-liter Power Stroke diesel engines. All of the plaintiffs similarly contend that because of these alleged misrepresentations, Ford violated RICO and various consumer protection state statutes. All of the plaintiffs argue that they have been harmed by Ford in the same manner, and request the same relief. Commonality of law and facts exist.

The Court has a legitimate interest in judicial economy here that is not outweighed by potential prejudice. In Plaintiffs' Response, their only [**15] substantial argument raised demonstrating prejudice is insufficient. Plaintiffs argue that they would be unfairly prejudiced by consolidation because it would unfairly give Defendants the opportunity to revise their previously submitted motions to dismiss, which they would then in theory offer this Court in response to a consolidated complaint. (Doc # 44, Pg ID 1876-1877) Due to this "unfairness," Plaintiffs request that this Court only consider consolidating these actions after ruling on the Defendants' pending motions to dismiss. (Id. at 1877.)

The Court does not consider Defendants' ability to potentially revise their previous motions prejudicial enough to warrant denying Defendants' Motions to Consolidate Cases. If Defendants were to alter their motions to dismiss, Plaintiffs will still be afforded with the chance to adequately respond to any such filings. Plaintiffs have not shown prejudice that would result from the consolidation. For the sake of efficiency, time, and resources, in this instance, it is in the interest of judicial economy to consolidate the four actions.

III. MOTION FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF INTERIM CLASS COUNSEL

A. Standard of Review

HN3 [↑] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23\(g\)\(3\) provides that "[t]he court may designate interim [**16] counsel to act on behalf of the putative class before determining whether to certify the action as a class action." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(g\)\(3\). "[D]esignation of interim counsel clarifies responsibility for protecting the interests of the class during precertification activities, such as making and responding to motions, conducting any necessary discovery, moving for class certification, and negotiating settlement." Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) § 21.11. Designation of interim counsel is particularly appropriate when a number of lawyers have filed related "copycat" actions. Tolmasoff v. Gen. Motors, LLC, No. 16-11747, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85101, 2016 WL 3548219, at \*9 \(E.D. Mich. June 30, 2016\).

HN4 [↑] Courts have determined that the considerations set out in Rule 23\(g\)\(1\), which govern the appointment of post-certification class counsel, are equally applicable to a decision on whom to designate as interim class counsel. Id. (citing In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., 240 F.R.D. 56, 57 \(E.D.N.Y. 2006\)). In [*868] deciding whether to designate Plaintiff's counsel as interim class counsel, courts consider: (1) the work counsel has done in identifying or investigating potential claims in the action; (2) counsel's experience in handling class actions, other complex litigation, and the types of claims asserted in the action; (3) counsel's knowledge of the applicable law; and (4) the resources that counsel will commit to representing the class. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(g\)\(1\)\(A\). The Court will also [**17] consider whether Plaintiff's counsel will "fairly and adequately represent the interests of the [putative] class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(g\)\(4\).

B. Whether it is Appropriate to Designate Interim Class Counsel

Plaintiffs request that the Court appoint E. Powell Miller ("Miller") of the Miller Law Firm and Steve Berman ("Berman") of the Hagens Berman Law Firm as interim co-lead class counsel, and an interim executive committee consisting of Miller, Berman, Christopher A. Seeger of the Seeger Weiss Law Firm, and James Cecchi of the Carella Byrne Law Firm to assist them in this case. (Doc # 27, Pg ID 1161) Plaintiffs state that appointment of class counsel is appropriate at this time in order to define the roles and responsibilities of the different law firms presently involved with this case and that are representing the individual plaintiffs. (Id.) Plaintiffs have sufficiently demonstrated that each aforementioned attorney has spent a significant amount of time and energy identifying and investigating potential claims in the Gamboa Action. (Id. at 1162-1163.) In Plaintiffs' Motion, they thoroughly explain in detail that each aforementioned attorney has extensive experience handling class actions and complex litigation, including [**18] automobile defect cases. (Id.) Additionally, Plaintiffs believe that having four law firms lead this litigation will ensure that there are sufficient resources available to handle this high stakes action. (Doc # 27, Pg ID 1163)

Defendants' only argument in response to Plaintiffs' Motion is that Plaintiffs' request is premature because "there are only two lawsuits in this Court," and therefore, there is no need to establish interim class counsel nor an interim executive committee. (Doc # 31, Pg ID 1539-1540) This argument fails however because at this point in the case, there are now four similar lawsuits before this Court. Defendants have not demonstrated that there is any reason to deny Plaintiffs' request to appoint both interim class counsel and an interim executive committee to assist with the complexities involved in this case. The Court grants Plaintiffs' Motion.

IV. DEFENDANTS FORD MOTOR COMPANY AND ROBERT BOSCH LLC'S MOTIONS TO DISMISS<sup>5</sup>

A. Standard of Review

HN5 [↑] Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides for a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). This type of motion tests the legal sufficiency of the plaintiff's complaint. Davey v. Tomlinson, 627 F. Supp. 1458, 1463 (E.D. Mich. 1986). When reviewing a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), a [**19] court must "construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept its allegations as true, and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff." Directv Inc. v. Treesh, 487 F.3d 471, 476 (*869) (6th Cir. 2007). A court, however, need not accept as true legal conclusions or unwarranted factual inferences." Id. (quoting Gregory v. Shelby Cnty., 220 F.3d 433, 443, 446 (6th Cir. 2000)). "[L]egal conclusions masquerading as factual allegations will not suffice." Eidson v. Tenn. Dep't of Children's Servs., 510 F.3d 631, 634 (6th Cir. 2007).

<sup>5</sup> Ford and Bosch LLC essentially make the same arguments in their Motions to Dismiss (Doc # 28; Doc # 29). In certain sections however, Bosch LLC makes separate arguments, and the Court has addressed those accordingly.

As the Supreme Court has explained, HN6 "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level... ." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (citations omitted); see LULAC v. Bredesen, 500 F.3d 523, 527 (6th Cir. 2007). To survive dismissal, the plaintiff must offer sufficient factual allegations to make the asserted claim plausible on its face. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 663, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "A claim has facial plausibility when the pleaded factual content allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." (Id.)

B. Clean Air Act

Ford alleges that all of Plaintiffs' state law claims are expressly and impliedly preempted by the Clean Air Act \("CAA"\), 42 U.S.C. § 7543(a).

HN7 "[Preemption] may be either [**20] expressed or implied, and 'is compelled whether Congress' command is explicitly stated in the statute's language or implicitly contained in its structure and purpose.'" Gade v. Nat'l Solid Wastes Mgmt. Ass'n, 505 U.S. 88, 98, 112 S. Ct. 2374, 120 L. Ed. 2d 73 (1992) (quoting Jones v. Rath Packing Co., 430 U.S. 519, 525, 97 S. Ct. 1305, 51 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1977)). In all preemption cases, and especially where "Congress has 'legislated...in a field in which the States have traditionally occupied,'...[courts] 'start with the assumption that the historic police powers of the States were not to be superseded by the Federal Act unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress.'" Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr, 518 U.S. 470, 485, 116 S. Ct. 2240, 135 L. Ed. 2d 700 (1996) (quoting Rice v. Santa Fe Elevator Corp., 331 U.S. 218, 230, 67 S. Ct. 1146, 91 L. Ed. 1447 (1947)). "Environmental regulation is a field that the states have traditionally occupied." Merrick v. Diageo Americas Supply, Inc., 805 F.3d 685, 694 (6th Cir. 2015). The same is true of consumer protection and advertising regulations. See In re Ford Fusion & C-Max Fuel Econ. Litig., No. 13-MD-2450 KMK, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 155383, 2015 WL 7018369, at *28 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 12, 2015); Gilles v. Ford Motor Co., 24 F.Supp.3d 1039, 1047 (D. Colo. 2014). Where the statute does not expressly preempt state law, preemption may be implied. The Supreme Court has recognized:

two types of implied preemption: field preemption, where the scheme of federal regulation is so pervasive as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it, and conflict preemption, where compliance with both federal and state regulations is a physical impossibility, or where state law stands as an obstacle [**21] to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.

Ford's preemption arguments are premised on Section 209 of the CAA. That section, codified at 42 U.S.C. § 7543, reads as follows:

[*870] No State or any political subdivision thereof shall adopt or attempt to enforce any standard relating to the control of emissions from new motor vehicles or new motor vehicle engines subject to this part. No State shall require certification, inspection, or any other approval relating to the control of emissions from any new motor vehicle or new motor vehicle engine as condition precedent to the initial retail sale, titling (if any), or registration of such motor vehicle, motor vehicle engine, or equipment.

42 U.S.C. § 7543\(a\).

Section 7543 also specifies, that "[n]othing in this part shall preclude or deny to any State or political subdivision thereof the right otherwise to control, regulate, or restrict the use, operation, or movement of registered or licensed motor vehicles." Id. at § 7543\(d\).

1. Express Preemption

Ford alleges that Section 209 of the CAA expressly preempts Plaintiffs' state law claims. According to Ford, since the Supreme Court recently decided that there is no longer a presumption against preemption, this Court is required to evaluate [\[\*\*22\]](#) Plaintiffs' claims based on the plain language of the CAA. See Puerto Rico v. Franklin Cal. Tax-Free Tr., 136 S. Ct. 1938, 1946, 195 L. Ed. 2d 298 \(2016\) (explaining that any claim of preemption must be grounded in statutory language). The CAA explicitly preempts "any standard relating to the control of emissions." 42 U.S.C. § 7543\(a\). Ford argues that Plaintiffs' state law claims fall under this CAA provision because they are filled with conclusions pertaining to Ford's vehicles' emission levels. Ford acknowledges that courts have held that plaintiffs' claims are not preempted by the CAA if plaintiffs do not attempt to enforce a numerical standard. See, e.g., In re Duramax Diesel Litig., 298 F. Supp. 3d 1037, 1058-59 \(E.D. Mich. 2018\) ("Duramax"). However, Ford argues that these rulings are not supported by the CAA's text, and even if they are, Plaintiffs are attempting to enforce a standard "based purely on numeric comparisons between Plaintiffs' own emissions measurements and federal standards."

In response, Plaintiffs argue that the Supreme Court's ruling in Franklin California Tax-Free confirms that their state law claims are valid according to the CAA's plain language. Plaintiffs claim that they are not seeking to enforce any numerical emissions levels, and state that their fraud-on-the-consumer claims only seek to redress Ford's deception. Plaintiffs explain [\[\*\*23\]](#) that the Supreme Court construes the term "standard" narrowly, and only refers to "requirements such as numerical emissions levels with which vehicles or engines must comply...or emission-control technology with which they must be equipped." Engine Mfrs. Ass'n v. S. Coast Air Quality Mgmt. Dist., 541 U.S. 246, 253, 124 S. Ct. 1756, 158 L. Ed. 2d 529 \(2004\).

Courts in this district have recently ruled on claims that are similar to the Plaintiffs'. In Counts v. General Motors, LLC, 237 F. Supp. 3d 572 \(E.D. Mich. 2017\) ("Counts I") and Duramax, courts held that HN8 the CAA does not preempt state-law consumer fraud claims because they do not seek to set or enforce any emissions standards or obligations. Counts I, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 591 ("Plaintiffs' claims...focus on the deceit about compliance, rather than the need to enforce compliance") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1062 ("The gravamen of [plaintiffs'] state law claims is that they purchased a vehicle which polluted at levels far greater than a reasonable consumer would expect."). [\[\*871\]](#) While this Court is not bound by the rulings from Counts I and Duramax, it does find those holdings to be persuasive. Ford has not attempted to distinguish Counts I and Duramax from this present case. Instead, Ford argues that both the Counts I and Duramax courts reached decisions that were inconsistent with the CAA. The Court agrees that Plaintiffs' state [\[\*\*24\]](#) law claims pertain to Ford's alleged fraudulent claims and not emissions standards.

Ford also argues that Plaintiffs' state law claims should be dismissed because they are premised on the fact that Ford's vehicles allegedly contain illegal "defeat devices." In Ford's Motion, it mentions that in Counts I, the Court held that when plaintiffs sue defendants for manufacturing a vehicle that emits an excessive amount of NOx or particulate emissions in violation of EPA regulations, or claim that vehicles are not equipped with properly functioning and federally required emission-control technology, their claims are preempted by the CAA. Ford goes on to recognize that in Counts I and Duramax, the Court found that plaintiffs' claims were not preempted because they did not attempt to define the term "defeat device" using the EPA definition, and therefore, they did not technically allege the existence of a defeat device. Ford argues that those holdings do not apply in the present case. Ford claims that Plaintiffs defined "defeat device" using the exact wording of federal law, and do not make generalized claims like plaintiffs did in Counts I and Duramax. Ford further claims that Plaintiffs "cannot [\[\*\*25\]](#) simultaneously base their claims on these federal predicates, and then disclaim them in favor of some theoretical parallel state standard in an attempt to evade preemption."

Plaintiffs argue that their claims do not require proof that Ford used a "defeat device" as defined by federal law, and state that they are not seeking to replace existing EPA certification tests. Plaintiffs contend that their claims are analogous to the plaintiffs' claims from Counts I and Duramax because they are similarly using the term "defeat device" as "shorthand to describe Ford's bait and switch by touting its intentionally defective technology." Furthermore, Plaintiffs have stated that in order to prove their fraud claims, they are not required to demonstrate directly or indirectly that Ford committed fraud on the EPA by using a defeat device. Plaintiffs believe that they can alternatively prove their fraud claims by reference to what a reasonable consumer would have expected of the "clean" vehicles without proof of Ford's regulatory noncompliance.

The Court agrees that Plaintiffs' claims are not contingent on their ability to prove that Ford used defeat devices in its vehicles. Although Ford correctly asserts [**26] that this present case is dissimilar from Counts I and Duramax because Plaintiffs define "defeat device" using the exact statutory language that Congress has used in its definition,<sup>6</sup> Ford fails to point out that even if Plaintiffs were no longer able to refer to Ford's alleged use of defeat devices, Plaintiffs could still succeed with their fraud claims. The true issue with regard to Plaintiffs' fraud claims is whether or not Ford materially deceived (under the various state laws) its consumers. The Court finds that Plaintiffs have sufficiently stated a claim for fraud, under state laws, without relying on Ford's alleged use of defeat devices.

2. Implied Preemption

In addition to express preemption, Ford claims that Plaintiffs' state law claims are impliedly preempted. As explained previously, HN9 [↑] there are two types of [*872] implied preemption. The first, field preemption, occurs where federal regulations are so expansive that Congress has left no room for supplemental state regulation. Defendants do not advance a field preemption argument. Field preemption is inapplicable in this case because HN10 [↑] the CAA includes a "savings clause" wherein Congress expressly confirms that states retain [**27] the ability to regulate "the use, operation, or movement" of motor vehicles. § 7543\(d\). See also Geier v. Am. Honda Motor Co., 529 U.S. 861, 868, 120 S. Ct. 1913, 146 L. Ed. 2d 914 \(2000\).

HN11 [↑] The second kind of implied preemption that courts have recognized is conflict preemption. Gade, 505 U.S. at 98. There are two types of conflict preemption. First, conflict preemption exists when compliance with both federal and state requirements is physically impossible. Id. Ford does not advance that argument. Second, conflict preemption exists when state law would operate as an obstacle to "the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." Id. (internal citations omitted). Ford argues that Plaintiffs' claims represent an obstacle to Congress's purpose and objectives in enacting the CAA. Specifically, Ford argues that if this Court grants Plaintiffs relief pursuant to its state law claims, "[t]his would lead to confusion for consumers, place manufacturers in impossible positions, and undermine the federal scheme and plan for consistent information and testing relating to emissions for new automobiles."

Ford's argument fails because it incorrectly addresses Plaintiffs' state law claims. HN12 [↑] The Court in Duramax said that in order for a car company to argue that claims arising from state [**28] consumer protection statutes are impliedly preempted by the CAA, a defendant would have to prove that Congress intended for the CAA to regulate the scope of a vehicle manufacturer's disclosure obligations to consumers. Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1064. Ford has not provided this Court with any legal authority to support that position. Plaintiffs' state law claims are not impliedly preempted by the CAA.

C. Rule 9(b)

Ford argues in its Motion that Plaintiffs' state law claims do not comply with Rule 9\(b\) because they do not adequately plead an actionable misrepresentation or omission.

HN13 [↑] Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\), "[i]n alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\). The purpose of Rule 9\(b\) is to put defendants on notice of the nature of the claim. See Williams v. Duke Energy Int'l, Inc., 681 F.3d 788, 803 \(6th Cir. 2012\) ("[I]t is a principle of basic fairness that a plaintiff should have an opportunity to flesh out her claim through evidence unturned in discovery. Rule 9\(b\) does not require omniscience; rather the Rule requires that the circumstances of the fraud be pled with enough specificity to put defendants on notice as to the nature of the claim." (internal citations omitted)). [**29] "Although Rule 9\(b\) heightens the pleading standard, it always must be read 'against the backdrop' of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8, which aims simply to put a defendant on notice of the claims against him so that he may reasonably respond [to] the allegations in the complaint." State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Pointe Physical Therapy, LLC, 107 F. Supp. 3d 772, 788 \(E.D. Mich. 2015\).

HN14 [↑] The specificity required for allegations of affirmative misrepresentations is necessarily different than the specificity [*873] required for allegations of fraudulent omissions. Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1055. "When it comes to claims of fraud by omission or fraudulent concealment, the plaintiff faces a slightly more relaxed pleading burden; the claim 'can succeed without the same level of specificity required by a normal fraud claim.'" Beck v. FCA US LLC, 273 F.Supp.3d 735, 751 \(E.D. Mich. 2017\) (quoting Baggett v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 582 F.Supp.2d 1261, 1267 \(C.D. Cal. 2007\)). There is a disparate burden between the two types of fraud because fraudulent acts occur at a specific time, but fraudulent omissions occur over a period of time. Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1055. While fraudulent acts can be specifically described, fraudulent omissions are, by very definition, more amorphous. Id.

HN15 [↑] Even in the context of a fraudulent omission claim, Rule 9\(b\) requires a plaintiff to set forth the "who, what, when, where, and how" of the alleged omission. Republic Bank & Tr. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 683 F.3d 239, 256 \(6th Cir. 2012\). Plaintiffs must set forth: (1) precisely what was omitted; (2) who should have made a representation; [**30] (3) the content of the alleged omission and the manner in which the omission was misleading; and (4) what [defendant] obtained as a consequence of the alleged fraud. Republic Bank & Tr. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 683 F.3d 239, 256 \(6th Cir. 2012\).

1. Whether Plaintiffs Adequately Comply with Rule 9\(b\)

Ford claims that Plaintiffs are in violation of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\) because no Plaintiff states with any specificity what deceptive statements they were exposed to before purchasing their vehicles. Ford further argues that it did not deceive Plaintiffs, and distinguished their claims from the claims made by the plaintiffs in Counts I and Duramax. Specifically, Ford contends that in Counts I and Duramax, General Motors was responsible for a "pervasive advertising campaign" that focused on the concept of "clean diesel" or "green" "environmentally friendly trucks." According to Ford, it only made the following claims in its advertisements:

- The 29-page 2011 brochure (Doc # 1, Ex. 6) twice refers to the "cleanest Super Duty diesel ever" — a comparative statement relative to Super Duty engines — but none of the individual Plaintiffs claim to have purchased a 2011 model year vehicle. And when discussing emissions, it measures Ford's compliance strictly against government standards.
- The 28-page 2012 [**31] brochure (Id. at Ex. 7.) refers to the subject vehicles as the "cleanest Super Duty diesel ever" on only one occasion, and again measures compliance strictly against government standards. The only individual Plaintiff who claims to have purchased a 2012 vehicle bought it used in 2015, and does not allege that he ever saw this brochure (much less this specific statement in this brochure) prior to his purchase.

- The 30-page 2013 brochure (Id. at Ex. 8.) refers to the subject vehicles as the "cleanest Super Duty diesel ever" on one occasion and again measures compliance strictly against government standards. No individual Plaintiff claims to have purchased a 2013 model year vehicle.
- The 24-page 2014 brochure (Id. at Ex. 9.) does not make any reference to the Super Duty as a "clean diesel" or "low emission" vehicle. One individual Plaintiff claims to have purchased a new 2014 Super Duty vehicle. (Id.)
- [*874] • The 25-page 2015 brochure (Id.) does not refer to the Super Duty as being a "clean diesel" or "low emission" vehicle. It merely mentions that the vehicle's new "high pressure fuel injectors achieve a more efficient, cleaner burn."
- The 25-page 2016 brochure (Id. at Ex. 11.) does not refer [**32] to the Super Duty as a "clean diesel" or "low emission" vehicle. It merely mentions that the vehicle's "best-in class" diesel fuel economy is "maintained with the help of high-pressure fuel injectors that achieve a clean, efficient burn."
- The 31-page 2017 brochure (Id. at Ex. 12.) does not make any reference to the Super Duty as being a "clean diesel" or "low emission" vehicle. No individual Plaintiff claims to have purchased a 2017 model year vehicle.

(Doc # 28, Pg ID 1455-1457) Ford argues that the term "cleanest Super Duty diesel ever," which the Plaintiffs state in their Complaint, was only used sparingly between 2011 and 2013. Ford further argues that no plaintiff alleges that they viewed any of the aforementioned product brochures, or relied upon any advertisements before buying their vehicles.

Plaintiffs argue that they satisfied Rule 9\(b\)'s standard that applies when plaintiffs' claims are based on fraudulent omissions because they identified the "who, what, when, where, and how" of Ford's alleged omissions and misstatements. Plaintiffs claim that in their Complaint, they stated that:

the "who" is defendants; the "what" is the identified Ford Super-Duty Truck models and the representations [**33] and omissions knowingly made by Ford; the "when" is prior to the sale or lease of the Affected Vehicles (including during the production years of the Affected Vehicles and during plaintiffs' selection of their vehicles); the "where" is the various means through which defendants promoted the Affected Vehicles as identified in the Complaint, including through the dealerships where plaintiffs bought or leased their vehicles; the "how" is misrepresentations and omissions resulting in premium payments that would not have otherwise been made; and the "why" is "engine power" and "increased profits."

(Doc # 35, Pg ID 1725-1726) Plaintiffs contend that they are not obligated to address their claims based on Ford's fraudulent omissions with any additional specificity, and claim that Ford has not identified any of their state law claims that require a heightened standard that they are required to abide by. Plaintiffs also rebut Ford's reliance argument by arguing that reliance is not an element for many of their state law claims, where, as here, the omission or misrepresentation is a material part of an extensive campaign. Plaintiffs claim that they sufficiently demonstrated that they bought Ford's [**34] vehicles on the reasonable but mistaken belief, due to Ford's omission and concealment of material facts, that each vehicle "was a 'clean diesel' and/or a 'low emission diesel,' complied with U.S. emissions standards, was EPA-certified, and would retain all of its promised fuel economy and performance throughout its useful life."

Plaintiffs' state law claims have satisfied Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\). Plaintiffs have stated: (1) precisely what was omitted—material facts regarding the vehicles' engines; (2) who should have made a representation—Ford; (3) the content of the alleged omission and the manner in which the omission was misleading—the content being that the vehicles had clean diesel engines and low emissions diesel engines, and the manner being that [*875] those claims were false; and (4) what [defendant] obtained as a consequence of the alleged fraud—increased profits. Plaintiffs have sufficiently stated valid fraudulent omissions claims under Rule 9\(b\).

2. Whether Plaintiffs State Actionable Misrepresentations or Omissions

a. Misrepresentations

Ford argues that affirmative misrepresentation claims fail when they are based on non-actionable puffery upon which no reasonable person would have relied. Ford claims that the [**35] statements it made regarding its vehicles could not have caused individuals to rely on those types of comments, and cannot form the basis of a fraud action. Ford also argues that Plaintiffs did not state in their Complaint what affirmative misrepresentations state the basis of their claims.

Ford is correct in asserting that Plaintiffs' misrepresentations are nonactionable puffery. Courts in the Sixth Circuit have explained that HN16<sup>7</sup> statements of cleanliness convey "inherently subjective" concepts and constitute non-actionable opinions. *Seaton v. TripAdvisor LLC, 728 F.3d 592, 598 \(6th Cir. 2013\)*. Additionally, promises of efficiency and reliability "cannot form the basis for a fraud claim." *Ram Int'l Inc. v. ADT Sec. Servs., Inc., No. 11-10259, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127263, 2011 WL 5244936, at \*6 \(E.D. Mich. Nov. 3, 2011\)*, aff'd, *555 Fed.Appx. 493 \(6th Cir. 2014\)*. Courts are much more likely to find representations actionable when assertions make specific representations, especially numerically quantifiable representations. *Counts I, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 597*. However, representations that merely contain numbers are not necessarily enough to qualify as actionable statements under a fraud theory. Id. Factors that generally demonstrate that a numerical claim is actionable include: (1) if an advertisement expressly states that the product was tested by the advertising company; and (2) if the advertisement compares the product to a specific competitor [**36] by name.<sup>7</sup> Id. (citing *Southland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d 1134, 1145 \(9th Cir. 1997\)*).

Here, the only advertisement that Plaintiffs allege contain anything related to a specific, numerically quantifiable statement is found in paragraph 96 of the Complaint. That advertisement states that "[Ford's] cleanest super duty diesel ever reduces nitrogen oxide (NOx) levels by more than 80% compared to last year." (Doc # 1, Pg ID 65) As the Counts I court stated, this type of a claim regarding emissions, while a statistic, is not quantifiable by itself. *Counts I, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 597* (holding that an advertisement that stated that an engine generated at least 90% less NOx was non-actionable). Further, Ford does not specifically assert in its advertisement that this claim was based on testing, and does not compare their vehicles' engines to any identifiable competitor's product. Since all of the other representations made by Ford are non-actionable, all of Ford's alleged affirmative misrepresentations amount to non-actionable puffery.

b. Omissions

Ford argues that Plaintiffs' claims based on fraudulent omissions should be dismissed because Plaintiffs have not proven that Ford had a duty to disclose any alleged omitted information that was material. Ford alludes to the fact that the information [**37] that it allegedly omitted was not material because a reasonable consumer would not have behaved differently had the omitted information been disclosed. Additionally, Ford argues that even if it did withhold material information from [*876] consumers, this material information only relates to EPA regulations, and would be preempted. In Duramax, the Court rejected an argument similar to Ford's, but Ford attempts to distinguish Duramax from this case. Ford argues that in Duramax, GM's advertisements did not expressly reference EPA regulations, but here, Ford explicitly references regulatory requirements in connection with its cars' emissions. Further, Ford states that even if Ford's misrepresentations and omissions were material, Plaintiffs cannot demonstrate that Ford had exclusive knowledge of these facts.

Plaintiffs argue in response that their allegations are not limited to statements concerning federal regulations. Plaintiffs also claim that if Ford had disclosed any relevant information to consumers regarding the presence of defeat devices or unlawful emissions levels to authorized Ford dealerships or to the media, that information would have been passed on to consumers, and Plaintiffs [**38] would have behaved differently. Plaintiffs also argue that Ford's lack of exclusive knowledge argument is without merit because even if it were properly raised, which

Plaintiffs do not believe is the case, Ford did have "exclusive knowledge" of the defeat devices due to their status as the manufacturer of the vehicles involved in this case.

The Court agrees that based on the court's decision in Counts v. Gen. Motors, LLC, No. 16-CV-12541, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60031, 2017 WL 1406938, at \*4 \(E.D. Mich. Apr. 20, 2017\) ("Counts II"), Ford had a duty to disclose information about the defeat devices that were installed in their vehicles because the omissions were material and not necessarily connected to EPA regulations. In Counts II, GM argued that because the plaintiffs' fraudulent concealment claims were premised on GM secretly using defeat devices in its vehicles, plaintiffs could not succeed with those claims because they were inextricably tied to EPA regulations, and so, even if they were material, they would be preempted by federal law. Counts II, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60031, 2017 WL 1406938, at \*3-4. The Counts II court ruled that although it would be relevant to the plaintiffs' claims to prove that the vehicles they bought contained defeat devices as defined by federal law, they could prevail without demonstrating that GM did not comply with EPA regulations because [**39] they were attempting to hold GM liable for concealing material facts, specifically the non-functionality of certain technology within the vehicles. [2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60031, \[WL\] at 4](#) The Counts II court explained that if GM's argument was to be accepted, "consumers would be unable to hold vehicle manufacturers liable for any intentionally defective technology, if the technology also impacted or concealed the vehicle's emissions levels." Id.

Our case is analogous to Counts II. Throughout Plaintiffs' Complaint, several Plaintiffs mention that if Ford did not omit information regarding its vehicles' fuel economy, performance, and emissions, they would either not have purchased their vehicles or paid less money for them. Since Ford's alleged fraudulent omissions are material (because these plaintiffs would have behaved differently) and not all connected to EPA regulations (and therefore not preempted by federal law), Ford's argument with regard to materiality fails at this time. Furthermore, Ford's argument pertaining to it lacking exclusive knowledge of defeat devices also fails. Ford was the company responsible for manufacturing its vehicles, and it would be difficult to argue that it was unaware of any defeat devices [**40] in their automobiles. See Counts I, 237 F. Supp. 3d at 600 (ruling that it would be impossible for GM to be unaware about defeat devices in its vehicles because they were in a "superior position to know" about their existence).

[*877] D. RICO

HN17 [+] RICO establishes bases for both criminal and civil suits. A RICO civil suit may be brought by "[a]ny person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter." 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\). Section 1962 provides that: "It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." Id. at § 1962\(c\). In other words, a party advancing a civil RICO claim must establish their right to sue and then further allege the following elements: "(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Heinrich v. Waiting Angels Adoption Servs., Inc., 668 F.3d 393, 404 \(6th Cir. 2012\) (quoting Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 87 L.Ed.2d 346 \(1985\)).

1. Standing

HN18 [+] Plaintiffs may assert a RICO claim only if they can identify an injury to their "business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962." 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\). In so limiting the scope of RICO standing, Congress exhibited an intention [**41] to exclude "personal injury—that is, an injury 'to a person, such as a broken bone, a cut, or a bruise' or a 'bodily injury.'" Jackson v. Sedgwick Claims Mgmt. Servs., Inc., 731 F.3d 556, 564 \(6th Cir. 2013\) (quoting Black's Law Dictionary 857 (9th ed. 2009)). Similarly, a RICO injury must be concrete, not intangible or speculative. See Saro v. Brown, 11 Fed.Appx. 387, 389 \(6th Cir. 2001\). See also Fleischhauer v. Feltner, 879 F.2d 1290, 1299 \(6th Cir. 1989\) (explaining that RICO plaintiffs must identify a "reasonable and principled basis of recovery" which is "not based upon mere speculation and surmise"); Short v. Janssen Pharm., Inc., No. 1:14-CV-

1025, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61123, 2015 WL 2201713, at \*3 \(W.D. Mich. May 11, 2015\) ("Short must, at a minimum, show some direct, pecuniary injury to his own pocket that is unrelated to the claimed personal injury.").

HN19 [↑] In Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., the Supreme Court interpreted § 4 of the Clayton Act, which authorizes "[a]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property" by reason of an antitrust law violation to bring suit. 442 U.S. 330, 337, 99 S. Ct. 2326, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 \(1979\). The Supreme Court held that "where petitioner alleges a wrongful deprivation of her money because the price of the hearing aid she bought was artificially inflated by reason of respondents' anticompetitive conduct, she has alleged an injury in her 'property' under § 4." Id. at 342. That holding did not involve the RICO statute, but the Sixth Circuit has held that "Reiter's commonsense observation [**42] about § 4 applies with equal logical force to § 1964\(c\)." Jackson, 731 F.3d at 564.

Ford argues that Plaintiffs lack the standing necessary to bring a RICO action against it because Plaintiffs do not prove that they were "injured in [their] business or property by reason of a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\)." Ford argues that Plaintiffs' injuries are speculative. Ford claims that Plaintiffs' RICO claim should be dismissed in its entirety because their "premium price" theory fails. According to Ford, under RICO, it is not enough for Plaintiffs to allege in a conclusory manner that they have cognizable injuries due to paying a "premium price" of approximately $8,400 for their vehicles based on false promises of "power, performance, fuel economy, and environment friendliness." Ford contends that Plaintiffs have not articulated how, in a quantifiable manner, [*878] they did not get the benefit of their bargain.

Plaintiffs respond by stating that they do not lack standing because their claim is in fact cognizable under RICO. Plaintiffs argue that their cognizable injury derives from the fact that they overpaid for their vehicles considering that their vehicles were not sold to them as promised. (Doc # 34, Pg ID 1652-1658) Plaintiffs argue that this [**43] court should reach the same conclusion that the Court did in In re Chrysler-Dodge-Jeep EcoDiesel Litig., 295 F. Supp. 3d 927 \(N.D. Cal. 2018\) ("EcoDiesel") with regard to the plausibility of their overpayment injury argument. Plaintiffs assert that in EcoDiesel, the Court held that the plaintiffs were allowed to use overpayment as a cognizable RICO injury while claiming that their vehicles "could not achieve the advertised towing power, performance, and/or fuel economy without cheating emissions tests." EcoDiesel, 295 F. Supp. 3d at 946.

HN20 [↑] Courts have held that there is a distinction between damages theories where the (ascertainable and reasonably quantifiable) overpayment occurred at the time of injury and speculative damages theories which are contingent on some future event, lost profit, or unanticipated future expense. Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1070-71. Therefore, a RICO plaintiff may recover for money invested on the basis of misrepresentations, but not for loss of the profits, which the plaintiffs expected to receive from that investment. See Fleischhauer, 879 F.2d at 1300. Likewise, a RICO plaintiff may recover for overpayment when they buy a used car after being told it was new, see Bailey v. Atl. Auto. Corp., 992 F. Supp. 2d 560, 579 \(D. Md. 2014\), but may not recover for overpayment simply because the tires they purchased may be defective, see In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. Tires Prods. Liab. Litig., 155 F. Supp. 2d at 1095 \(S.D. Ind. 2001\), rev'd on other grounds In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 288 F.3d 1012 \(7th Cir. 2002\). A RICO plaintiff may recover money paid pursuant [**44] to insurance policies that plaintiffs chose because "the defendants falsely represented that the potential investors could completely avoid payment of any future federal income taxes," see Hofstetter v. Fletcher, 905 F.2d 897, 1988 WL 107371, at \*6 \(6th Cir. 1988\), but cannot recover for loans granted to debtors based upon misrepresentations by the debtors because the plaintiffs would suffer damages only if the debtors defaulted (and because the amount of damages was speculative until the creditor's bargained for remedies were exhausted), see First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 768 \(2d Cir. 1994\).

Here, Plaintiffs allege that they overpaid for their vehicles based on Ford's alleged omissions. Plaintiffs claim that if not for learning of Ford's misrepresentations, without knowing what information was omitted (that pollutants were only reduced during testing), they would not have purchased Ford's automobiles. Under Duramax, Plaintiffs' claims are premised on overpayment that occurred at the time of their injuries and are not speculative. Plaintiffs have adequately alleged that they have cognizable injuries, and therefore standing.

2. Prima Facie Elements of a RICO Violation

As indicated above, plaintiffs alleging that RICO has been violated are required to plead the essential elements of a violation, including: "(1) [**45] conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Heinrich, 668 F.3d at 404 \(6th Cir. 2012\) (citations omitted). Ford asserts that Plaintiffs have not met two of these essential elements: (1) the existence [*879] of an enterprise; and (2) the required predicate acts.

a. RICO "Enterprise"

Ford alleges that Plaintiffs are not considered a legal racketeering "enterprise" under RICO. Ford argues that Plaintiffs only offer conclusory allegations suggesting that Ford and Bosch GmbH and Bosch LLC ("Bosch Defendants") constituted an enterprise. Ford claims that RICO does not apply to acts of separate businesses in pursuit of their ordinary business activities, even if those activities cross the line into predicate acts under the statute. Ford further argues that because Ford and Bosch Defendants came together for legitimate purposes (engaging in a manufacturer-supplier relationship), in the ordinary course of business, no RICO enterprise existed as a matter of law. Plaintiffs argue that Ford cannot escape liability for its fraudulent activity solely by claiming that it engaged in a legitimate activity. Plaintiffs assert that even if any legitimate activity excuse were plausible, the purpose of an alleged enterprise's [**46] activity is a question for the jury, and not a question to be resolved at this stage. Plaintiffs assert that Ford's arguments are only based on non-binding and distinguishable precedent.

HN21 [+] In order to state a RICO claim, plaintiffs must plausibly allege the existence of an enterprise engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\). But, the definition of "enterprise" for RICO purposes is exceedingly "broad." Boyle v. United States, 556 U.S. 938, 944, 129 S. Ct. 2237, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1265 \(2009\). The statute defines "enterprise" as "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(4\). "On its face, the definition appears to include both legitimate and illegitimate enterprises within its scope; it no more excludes criminal enterprises than it does legitimate ones." United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 580-81, 101 S. Ct. 2524, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246 \(1981\). A RICO association-in-fact "must have at least three structural features: a purpose, relationships among those associated with the enterprise, and longevity sufficient to permit these associates to pursue the enterprise's purpose." Boyle, 556 U.S. at 946.

Case law demonstrates that it is irrelevant whether or not Ford and Bosch Defendants engaged in legitimate activity. A review of Plaintiffs' Complaint shows that all three [**47] of the structural features required for a RICO association-in-fact have been alleged: (1) the purpose of the relationship between Ford and Bosch Defendants was to engage in business to manufacture vehicles; (2) the relationship between the parties has been well-documented; and (3) the parties have been in business together for at least ten years. (Doc # 1, Pg ID 34) Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged a racketeering "enterprise" between Ford and Bosch Defendants for purposes of Plaintiffs' RICO claim.

b. Mail and Wire Fraud

Ford argues that this Court should dismiss Plaintiffs' RICO claim for failure to sufficiently plead predicate acts of mail or wire fraud for three reasons. First, Ford claims that Plaintiffs' claim is predicated on a preempted fraud-on-the-regulators theory. According to Ford, because Plaintiffs allege that Ford and Bosch Defendants formed an enterprise for the express purpose of fraudulently obtaining certificates of conformity ("COC") from the EPA in order to sell vehicles, this constitutes an attempt to privately enforce the CAA, and is preempted and within [*880] exclusive province of the EPA. Second, Ford asserts that Plaintiffs' claim that are predicated on advertisements [**48] to consumers is non-actionable because: "(i) Plaintiffs have failed to identify with any specificity which statements are at issue; (ii) the few supposed misrepresentations they do identify are puffery; and (iii) Plaintiffs have failed to allege that the alleged affirmative misrepresentations and or omissions were material."

Finally, Ford claims that Plaintiffs have not alleged multiple instances of mail and wire fraud that are plead with factual specificity as mandated by Rule 9\(b\).

Plaintiffs respond by arguing that Ford's assertions regarding their failure to plead predicate acts of mail or wire fraud are unfounded. First, Plaintiffs state that their RICO claim is not predicated on a preempted fraud-on-the-regulators theory because plaintiffs allege they were defrauded. Plaintiffs argue that even though they allege that Ford intended to deceive regulators and made fraudulent mail and wire communications to regulators, neither of those allegations are essential to their RICO claim. Plaintiffs said that those allegations are merely collateral matters. Second, Plaintiffs argue that they do offer their allegations about Ford's concealment with specificity in their Complaint. Plaintiffs specifically [\[\*\*49\]](#) point to paragraphs 92 through 110 of their Complaint to find specific allegations. For those reasons, Plaintiffs contend that their allegations are sufficient under Rule 9\(b\).

HN22 [↑] To state a claim based on mail or wire fraud, the Plaintiffs must allege the following three elements: "(1) devising or intending to devise a scheme to defraud (or to perform specified fraudulent acts); (2) involving a use of the mails; and (3) for the purpose of executing the scheme or attempting to do so." United States v. Kennedy, 714 F.3d 951, 958 \(6th Cir. 2013\) (quoting United States v. Frost, 125 F.3d 346, 354 \(6th Cir. 1997\)). Plaintiffs must allege that Defendants possessed the "specific intent to deceive or defraud." Frost, 125 F.3d at 354. The "scheme to defraud must involve 'misrepresentations or omissions reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension.'" Bender v. Southland Corp., 749 F.2d 1205, 1216 \(6th Cir. 1984\) (quoting United States v. Van Dyke, 605 F.2d 220, 225 \(6th Cir. 1979\)). Plaintiffs need not show "actual reliance," but must demonstrate that the misrepresentations or omissions were "material." United States v. Daniel, 329 F.3d 480, 487 \(6th Cir. 2003\). Specific intent to defraud or deceive exists if "the defendant by material misrepresentations intends the victim to accept a substantial risk that otherwise would not have been taken." Id. at 488.

HN23 [↑] Importantly, "[a] defendant may commit mail fraud even if he personally has not used the mails." Frost, 125 F.3d at 354 (citing United States v. Griffith, 17 F.3d 865, 874 \(6th Cir. 1994\)). "A mail fraud conviction requires [\[\*\*50\]](#) only a showing that the defendant acted with knowledge that use of the mails would follow in the ordinary course of business, or that a reasonable person would have foreseen use of the mails." Id. In other words, there is no requirement that the defendant have actually intended that the mails (or wire) be used. Id. And, further, "[t]he mailings may be innocent or even legally necessary." Id. (quoting United States v. Oldfield, 859 F.2d 392, 400 \(6th Cir. 1988\)). The use of the mails "need only be closely related to the scheme and reasonably foreseeable as a result of the defendant's actions." Id. (quoting Oldfield, 859 F.2d at 400).

HN24 [↑] "When pleading predicate acts of mail or wire fraud, in order to satisfy the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9\(b\), [\[\*881\]](#) a plaintiff must '(1) specify the statements that the plaintiff contends were fraudulent, (2) identify the speaker, (3) state where and when the statements were made, and (4) explain why the statements were fraudulent.'" Heinrich, 668 F.3d at 404 (quoting Frank v. Dana Corp., 547 F.3d 564, 570 \(6th Cir. 2008\)).

This Court finds that based on a review of Plaintiffs' Complaint, they have sufficiently stated allegations of mail or wire fraud in relation to their RICO claim. First, Plaintiffs have alleged that Ford intended to defraud Plaintiffs based on its undoubted knowledge of its vehicles' defeat devices. [\[\*\*51\]](#) Second, Plaintiffs allege that Ford defrauded Plaintiffs by omitting facts through U.S. mail and online. (Doc # 1, Pg ID 164-167) Third, Plaintiffs allege that Ford has engaged in a scheme due to engaging in a course of action to deprive Plaintiffs of their money. See United States v. Daniel, 329 F.3d 480, 485 \(6th Cir. 2003\) (explaining that a scheme to defraud "includes any plan or course of action by which someone intends to deprive another by...deception of money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises."). According to the relevant standards, Plaintiffs properly alleged the existence of mail or wire fraud.

c. Bosch LLC's Duty to Disclose

Bosch LLC argues that in order for Plaintiffs to succeed on a theory of fraud by omission, Plaintiffs must allege that Bosch LLC had an independent duty to disclose information to them. Bosch LLC cites to cases where courts have determined that omissions intended to create fraudulent representations can only constitute a violation of a mail fraud if the defendant had a duty to disclose material information. According to Bosch LLC, Plaintiffs have not alleged any facts that would support that Bosch LLC owed them a duty to disclose.

Plaintiffs argue that they are [**52] not required to allege that Bosch LLC had an independent duty to disclose information to them. Plaintiffs assert that they alleged in their Complaint that Defendants concealed the truth from, and communicated half-truths to, Plaintiffs and class members. Plaintiffs further assert that in those instances, courts have held that plaintiffs need not allege that RICO defendants had an independent duty to disclose.

Some non-controlling cases do appear to support the proposition that in order for plaintiffs to be able to rely on omissions to establish fraud, they need prove that defendants must have a duty to disclose. See United States v. Skeddle, 940 F.Supp. 1146, 1149 \(N.D. Ohio 1996\) ("Because the "scheme to defraud of property or money" counts are based on what was not said (i.e., omissions), the defendants are culpable under this branch of the mail fraud statute only if the government proves the defendants had a duty to disclose their interest in the transactions."); Gould, Inc. v. Mitsui Min. & Smelting Co., 750 F.Supp. 838, 843 \(N.D. Ohio 1990\) ("[T]here has been no attempt to delineate what facts were omitted or what duty defendants had to disclose information to Gould, which is necessary when one alleges a material omission."). See also United States v. Benny, 786 F.2d 1410, 1418 \(9th Cir. 1986\) ("[A] non-disclosure can only serve as a basis for a fraudulent scheme when there exists [**53] an independent duty that has been breached by the person so charged."); United States v. Rabbitt, 583 F.2d 1014, 1026 \(8th Cir. 1978\).

But, other courts have expressly rejected this rationale. United States v. Colton, 231 F.3d 890, 901 \(4th Cir. 2000\) ("Concealment often is accompanied by an affirmative misrepresentation or a violation of [*882] an independent statutory or fiduciary disclosure duty, but neither is "essential" for actionable fraud."); United States v. Keplinger, 776 F.2d 678, 697 \(7th Cir. 1985\) ("It requires no extended discussion of authority to demonstrate that omissions or concealment of material information can constitute...fraud cognizable under the mail fraud statute, without proof of a duty to disclose the information pursuant to a specific statute or regulation."); United States v. Allen, 554 F.2d 398, 410 \(10th Cir. 1977\).

HN25 [+] The Sixth Circuit has, however, repeatedly confirmed that concealment of material facts can constitute a fraudulent scheme sufficient to establish RICO liability. See, e.g., Daniel, 329 F.3d at 487; Dana Corp. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield Mut. of N. Ohio, 900 F.2d 882, 885 \(6th Cir. 1990\); Am. Eagle Credit Corp. v. Gaskins, 920 F.2d 352, 354 \(6th Cir. 1990\); Bender, 749 F.2d at 1216. See also United States v. Chew, 497 Fed.Appx. 555, 563 \(6th Cir. 2012\) ("[I]n relation both to mail fraud and wire fraud, there is no technical or precise definition of an unlawful 'scheme to defraud.' The standard is a reflection of moral uprightness, of fundamental honesty, fair play and right dealing in the general and business life of members of society.") (internal citations omitted); In re ClassicStar Mare Lease Litig., 823 F.Supp.2d 599, 627 \(E.D. Ky. 2011\) ("A fraudulent scheme may be demonstrated by proof that it was reasonably [**54] calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension, and communications of half-truths and concealment of material facts are both actionable."). Since to the Court's knowledge, the Sixth Circuit has never articulated a duty to disclose requirement, the Court declines to abide by such a requirement. Therefore, Plaintiffs were not required to prove that Bosch LLC had a duty to disclose any information about the defeat devices.

d. Whether Ford Proximately Caused Plaintiffs' Injuries

Ford argues that even if Plaintiffs adequately pleaded a RICO injury and required predicate acts, they have not alleged that the injury was "by reason of" a RICO violation under Rule 9\(b\)'s heightened pleading requirements. Ford claims that any type of causal link between Ford's alleged "fraud-on-the-regulator" conduct and Plaintiffs' claimed injuries is indirect and attenuated. Ford argues that the court in Duramax incorrectly ruled that the plaintiffs did not fail to plead proximate causation because alleged intervening acts were carried out by co-conspirators, and not third parties. Ford argues that this conclusion reached in Duramax was wrong because the Court overlooked the EPA's acceptance of allegedly [**55] fraudulent COC's, which Ford believes was an intervening factor by a third party that broke the causal link between the violations and the injury.

Plaintiffs respond by contending that the court was not incorrect in Duramax. Plaintiffs assert that there is no case law that demonstrates that if a manufacturer defrauds the EPA and the public, it may escape liability as a matter of law by claiming that the EPA's approval of the fraudulent COC breaks the chain of proximate causation. Plaintiffs argue that if the EPA knew that the Defendants' submissions were false, that might constitute an intervening cause. However, Plaintiffs are arguing that the EPA did not know about Defendants' fraud; therefore, their approval of the fraudulent COCs did not constitute an intervening cause.

The Supreme Court has "held that HN26[↑] a plaintiff's right to sue...required a showing that the defendant's violation not only was a 'but for' cause of his injury, but was the proximate cause as well." [*Holmes v. Sec. Inv'r Prot. Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 1\*883\] 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 \(1992\)*](#). The plaintiff must show "some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged." Id. Importantly, the causation inquiry must focus on the alleged link between the "predicate acts" and the asserted [**56] injury. *Heinrich v. Waiting Angels Adoption Servs., Inc., 668 F.3d 393, 405 \(6th Cir. 2012\)*. A purported link that is "too remote," "purely contingent," or "indirect" is insufficient to confer standing. *Holmes, 503 U.S. at 271*. According to the Supreme Court, "[t]he general tendency of the law, in regard to damages at least, is not to go beyond the first step." Id. (quoting *Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 534, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 \(1983\)*). An attenuated causation theory creates difficulties in apportioning damages between plaintiffs and attributing damages to defendants. See id. at 273. A challenge to a RICO suit based on asserted lack of proximate causation, however, is often best resolved at summary judgment, not at the pleading stage. See *Trollinger v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 370 F.3d 602, 615 \(6th Cir. 2004\)*.

The connection between the predicate acts (Ford's alleged deceit) and the asserted injury (Plaintiffs' economic losses) are sufficient to demonstrate that Ford is the proximate cause of Plaintiffs' injuries. Plaintiffs allege that but for Ford's alleged fraudulent omissions, they would not have purchased Ford's vehicles. This connection is not too distant or indirect. There is also no support for Ford's argument that the EPA's approval of the fraudulent conduct broke the chain of causation. As Plaintiffs argue, the EPA did not know about any alleged omissions.

e. Whether Bosch LLC Proximately Caused Plaintiffs' Injuries

[**57] Bosch LLC claims that Plaintiffs fail to allege that they were injured "by reason of" a predicate offense committed by Bosch LLC. Bosch LLC argues that Plaintiffs do not sufficiently allege that its actions were a substantial cause of their injuries. Bosch asserts that even though Plaintiffs allege that Bosch LLC produced the Electronic Diesel Control Unit 17 and sold it to Ford, there were additional factors that substantially caused Plaintiffs' alleged injuries, including, but not limited to: (1) the alleged premium that Ford charged for the vehicles; (2) Ford's advertising campaign related to the vehicles; (3) fluctuations in consumer demand for vehicles like Plaintiffs' and other market forces; and (4) potential future modifications to the vehicles. Bosch LLC also argues that Plaintiffs do not allege a direct link between their claimed injuries and Bosch LLC's purported conduct.

Plaintiffs argue that they adequately allege that Bosch LLC's conduct was a substantial factor in causing their purported injuries. Plaintiffs argue that they would not have overpaid for Ford's vehicles if they did not contain the defeat devices that Bosch LLC designed and helped implement as part of Defendants' [**58] unlawful scheme. Plaintiffs argue that the "direct link" between their injuries and Bosch LLC's conduct is that Bosch entities participated not just in the development of the defeat devices, but also in the scheme to prevent U.S. regulators from uncovering the device's true functionality. Plaintiffs further argue that without Bosch LLC's knowing participation, the scheme would not have existed at all.

Based on the above standards that courts have implemented to analyze proximate causation under RICO, Plaintiffs have sufficiently demonstrated that there was a direct link between the injuries that they allege they suffered and Bosch LLC's [*884] conduct. But for Bosch LLC working with Ford to make the defeat devices, Plaintiffs would not have overpaid for the vehicles. Further, as courts have noted, Bosch LLC's assertion about proximate causation is best resolved at the summary judgment stage.

V. Whether Plaintiffs are Permitted to Assert Claims on Behalf of Absent Class Members Under the Laws of Other States

Ford argues that Plaintiffs are not permitted to bring claims under the laws of forty-seven states because there are only six named Plaintiffs who reside in five states, and who allegedly [**59] bought trucks in five states. Those states being: (1) Arizona; (2) California; (3) Illinois; (4) Pennsylvania; and (5) Texas. Ford asserts that this Court should determine that the named Plaintiffs lack standing to assert claims in all of the states where they do not reside or claim to have suffered an injury. Ford acknowledges that federal courts have deferred this question of standing until the class certification stage, but argues that some courts are beginning to address this question sooner in the litigation process in order to refrain from subjecting defendants to the expense and burden of nationwide discovery without first securing plaintiffs who clearly have standing.

In response, Plaintiffs argue that courts have been very clear about not resolving questions regarding the standing of plaintiffs until the class certifications stage. Plaintiffs point to several cases to demonstrate this "growing consensus" among federal courts. Further, Plaintiff argues that the main case that Ford relies on in making its argument is an outlier and runs afoul of many other cases.

HN27 [↑] "Threshold individual standing is a prerequisite for all actions, including class actions." Fallick v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 162 F.3d 410, 423 \(6th Cir. 1998\). "A potential class representative [**60] must demonstrate individual standing vis-as-vis the defendant; he cannot acquire such standing merely by virtue of bringing a class action." Id. The growing consensus, however, is that "class certification issues are...logically antecedent' to Article III concerns," at least when the named plaintiffs possess Article III standing. See Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 831, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715 \(1999\); Kaatz v. Hyland's Inc., No. 16 CV 237 \(VB\), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87348, 2016 WL 3676697, at \*4 \(S.D.N.Y. July 6, 2016\); Storey v. Attends Healthcare Prods., Inc., No. 15-CV-13577, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72505, 2016 WL 3125210, at \*3 \(E.D. Mich. June 3, 2016\); In re Auto. Parts Antitrust Litig., 29 F.Supp.3d 982, 1000 \(E.D. Mich. 2014\). In other words, "where 'class certification is the source of the potential standing problems,' class certification should precede the standing inquiry." In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 812 F.Supp.2d 390, 406 \(S.D.N.Y. 2011\) (quoting In re Grand Theft Auto Video Game Litig., No. 06 MD 1739, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78064, 2006 WL 3039993, at \*2 \(S.D.N.Y. Oct. 25, 2006\)).

All of the named Plaintiffs in our case have Article III standing. If the class is certified, those Plaintiffs will be able to advance state law claims on behalf of unnamed Plaintiffs. HN28 [↑] The question of whether the state law claims may be advanced on behalf of unnamed Plaintiffs is indistinguishable from the Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 analysis. See Kaatz v. Hyland's Inc., No. 16 CV 237, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87348, 2016 WL 3676697, at \*4 \(S.D.N.Y. July 6, 2016\) ("That standing inquiry is more appropriately addressed at the class certification stage when courts consider the commonality and typicality prerequisites of class actions."). The claims premised on the law of states where no named Plaintiff lives will therefore not be dismissed for lack of [**885] standing. See Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1089.

VI. Article III Standing

Bosch [**61] LLC makes a separate argument in its Motion with regard to Plaintiffs' Article III standing. Bosch LLC argues that Plaintiffs lack Article III standing for three reasons. First, Bosch LLC argues that Plaintiffs seek redress based on hypothetical future events, namely injuries that may occur "when and if" Ford recalls its vehicles and degrades the Ford clean diesel engine performance and fuel efficiency in order to make its vehicles compliant with EPA standards. According to Bosch LLC, Plaintiffs' harms are not "actual" or "imminent" in accordance with Article III. Second, Bosch LLC relies on Bledsoe v. FCA US LLC, 307 F. Supp. 3d 646 \(E.D. Mich. 2018\), a recent decision in which the Court held that in the context of Fiat-Chrysler vehicles, the plaintiffs' claims to Article III standing were disregarded for being conclusory, or upon implausible inferences because the plaintiffs injuries were based on their expert's testing of a single vehicle that purportedly showed higher NOx emissions than the federal standards allow. Bosch LLC claims that Plaintiffs' claims are similar since they also failed to put forth any description of the purported defeat device or when and under what circumstances it is triggered in the truck they tested. Third, Bosch LLC argues that Plaintiffs' [\[\*\*62\]](#) overpayment theory cannot be traced to Bosch LLC because there is no evidence that Bosch LLC advertised directly to consumers or had any control over the price of Ford's vehicles.

Plaintiffs argue in response that they sufficiently alleged that they suffered economic injuries at the time they purchased their vehicles as a result of overpaying for them due to Defendants' wrongful conduct. Plaintiffs further argue that in nearly identical circumstances, courts have rejected Bosch LLC's argument that such allegations are conjectural. Further, Plaintiffs claim that Bosch LLC misreads the court's standing rule in Bledsoe. Plaintiffs claim that in Bledsoe, the court held that plaintiffs lacked standing for failure to allege the injury-in-fact prong of the standing analysis because they solely relied on test results for a single vehicle and extrapolations from those results. Plaintiffs argue that here, they assert reasonable, plausible grounds for why their testing indicates that defeat devices were used in Ford's vehicles, and falls within the category of diesel emissions fraud cases that the court in Bledsoe distinguished. Plaintiffs also argue that courts have repeatedly rejected Bosch [\[\*\*63\]](#) LLC's argument that the lack of a direct connection between itself and plaintiffs who are purchasers of the vehicles in question precludes Article III standing.

HN29 Federal courts have a duty to confirm subject matter jurisdiction in every case pending before them. Valinski v. Detroit Edison, 197 Fed.Appx. 403, 405 (6th Cir. 2006). Article III, § 2 of the U.S. Constitution limits federal court jurisdiction to "Cases" and "Controversies." The doctrine derived from Art. III, § 2 imposes the requirement of standing: federal jurisdiction exists only if the dispute is one "which [is] appropriately resolved through the judicial process." Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 155, 110 S. Ct. 1717, 109 L. Ed. 2d 135 (1990). For standing to exist, three elements must be satisfied: injury in fact, causation, and redressability. Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). Injury in fact exists when the plaintiff has suffered "an invasion of a legally protected interest" that is both "concrete and particularized" and "actual or imminent," not [\[\*886\]](#) "conjectural or hypothetical." Id. at 560 (citations omitted). Causation exists if the injury is one "that fairly can be traced to the challenged action of the defendant." Simon v. E. Kentucky Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 41, 96 S. Ct. 1917, 48 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1976). The redressability requirement is satisfied if the plaintiff's injury is "likely to be redressed by a favorable decision." Id. at 38. Standing can exist even if the alleged injury "may be difficult to prove or measure." Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, U.S. , 136 S.Ct. 1540, 1549, 194 L.Ed.2d 635 (2016).

Plaintiffs' overpayment theory [\[\*\*64\]](#) is sufficient to provide standing to sue Bosch LLC because of its role in the use and concealment of a cheat device that allegedly constrained the emissions control system of the vehicles purchased by Plaintiffs. Accepting Plaintiffs' allegations as true, they paid a premium for a "clean diesel" vehicle, which actually polluted at levels dramatically higher than a reasonable consumer would expect. In other words, they paid for a product that did not operate in the way they believed it did. HN30 Claims of overpayment, wherein a plaintiff paid a premium but did not receive the anticipated consideration, are cognizable injuries in fact. See Wuliger v. Manufacturers Life Ins. Co., 567 F.3d 787, 794 (6th Cir. 2009). The alleged injuries are traceable to Bosch LLC's actions, and there is, accordingly, a traceable connection between the plaintiffs' injuries and the complained-of conduct of the defendant. Id. at 796 (quoting Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 103, 118 S. Ct. 1003, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210 (1998)). And, financial damages are fully redressable by a favorable decision. Duramax, 298 F. Supp. 3d at 1053. Therefore, although Bosch LLC's role in the alleged fraudulent concealment is more indirect than Ford's role, "the causation requirement in standing is not focused on whether the defendant 'caused' the plaintiff's injury in the liability sense; the plaintiff need only allege 'injury [\[\*\*65\]](#) that fairly can be traced to the challenged action of the defendant, and not injury that results from the independent action of some third party not before the court.'" Wuliger, 567 F.3d at 796 (quoting Simon v. E. Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 41-42, 96 S. Ct. 1917, 48 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1976))). While Bosch LLC may ultimately prevail in its argument that it should not be held liable for Plaintiffs' overpayment, Plaintiffs' allegation that Bosch LLC was intimately involved in the creation of the component that caused the overpayment establishes Article III standing.

VII. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Defendants' Motions to Consolidate Cases (Doc # 39; Doc # 46) are GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the following cases are consolidated: Gamboa et al. v. Ford Motor Company et al., Case No. 2:18-cv-10106; Ruston et al. v. Ford Motor Company et al., Case No. 2:18-cv-11108; Goodroad, Jr. et al. v. Ford Motor Company et al., Case No. 2:18-cv-11900; and Badagliacco v. Ford Motor Company et al., Case No. 2:18-cv-12379.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiffs' Motion for the Appointment of Interim Class Counsel (Doc # 27) is GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendants Ford Motor Company and Robert Bosch LLC's Motions to Dismiss (Doc # 28; Doc # 29) are DENIED; although [**66] these Motions are denied, as noted above, Plaintiffs are not permitted to proceed with their claims that pertain to Defendants' alleged affirmative misrepresentations.

[*887] IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiffs will have 30 days from the date of the entry of this Order to file a single consolidated amended complaint.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendants will have 30 days from when Plaintiffs' consolidated amended complaint is filed to file an answer to the consolidated amended complaint.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the parties shall meet and confer and submit a Rule 26(f) report with proposed scheduling dates 21 days from when Defendants' answer is filed; after the Rule 26(f) report has been filed, the Court will issue a scheduling conference order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

TALWANI, D.J.

Pending before the court is Defendants Marc Beer, Melanie Detloff, William Dull, Greg Fenner, Mark Fitzpatrick, Craig Fraser, James Frigge, Daniel Rader, David Scheer, and Mark Sumeray's Joint Motion to Dismiss (the "Joint Motion") [#147] all remaining claims in Relators Michele Clark, Tricia Mullins, and Kristi Winger Szudlo's Second Amended Complaint [#69]. For the following reasons, Defendants' Joint Motion [#147] is ALLOWED as to claims against David Scheer, but is otherwise DENIED.

Relators Clarke, Mullins, and Szudlo are former sales representatives at Aegerion Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Aegerion"). [*3] Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 8-10 [#69]. Defendants Beer, Detloff, Dull, Fenner, Fitzpatrick, Fraser, Frigge, and Dr. Sumeray are former employees of Aegerion; Defendant Scheer was on Aegerion's Board of Directors. Id. ¶¶ 11-21.

In 2000 or 2001, Dr. Daniel Rader, an employee of the University of Pennsylvania (UPenn), approached Bristol-Meyer Squibb Company about donating a drug it had been developing to UPenn. Id. ¶¶ 19, 22, 36-39. Bristol-Meyer Squibb did so, and Dr. Rader began to develop the drug through the Food and Drug Administration's ("FDA") orphan drug program. See id. ¶¶ 40-42. The orphan drug program incentivizes innovation of drugs for patient populations below 200,000 in the United States by allowing a cheaper and easier FDA approval process that does not require the same evidence of safety and efficacy as for non-orphan drugs. Id. ¶ 41.

From June 2003 to February 2004, Dr. Rader conducted a study of the drug on six individuals with Homozygous Familial Hypercholesterolemia ("HoFH"). Id. ¶ 42. HoFH is a life-threatening genetic lipid disorder inherited from both parents.<sup>2</sup> Id. ¶ 30. The FDA and others in the scientific community estimate only one in one million people in the United States, [*4] or approximately 300 people, have the disorder.<sup>3</sup> Id. ¶¶ 2, 32. Dr. Rader proposed expanding <sup>1</sup> To survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), Relators' Second Amended Complaint [#69] must "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The court accepts all factual allegations in Relators' Second Amended Complaint [#69] as true and draws all reasonable inference in favor of Relators. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678-79, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

<sup>2</sup> People suffering from HoFH have limited or no ability to remove from their blood the "bad cholesterol" low-density lipoproteins ("LDL-C"). Id. ¶ 28, 30. If untreated, people with HoFH have extremely high LDL-C levels, typically between 500mg/dL and 1,000 mg/dL. Id. ¶ 30. Patients with HoFH develop atherosclerosis, or narrowing and blockage of the arteries, as early as age ten. Id. HoFH patients are at extremely high risk of cardiovascular problems and many are at risk for serious cardiac events starting in their 20s. Id. If left untreated, life expectancy of people with HoFH is 33 years. Id. Historically, HoFH has been difficult to treat because traditional "high cholesterol" treatments are ineffective. Id. ¶ 33.

use of the drug beyond the HoFH population, but the FDA informed Dr. Rader and UPenn "that the expanded use of the product in the additional groups of patients shifts the risk-benefit profile of the development program" in an adverse direction. Id.

Dr. Rader recruited a former colleague, Defendant David Scheer, to incorporate Aegerion in 2005 for the purpose of commercializing the drug. Id. ¶ 46. UPenn granted Aegerion the exclusive right to "research, develop, commercialize, make, have made, offer for sale and sell" the drug, which Aegerion renamed AEGR-733. Id. ¶¶ 49, 52. Dr. Rader was a member of Aegerion's Scientific Advisory Board as early as 2007 and Aegerion sold him a significant amount of stock at a fraction of its value. Id. ¶¶ 51-52.

Aegerion acknowledged in a statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission that the HoFH patient population was approximately 300 people, but also claimed that the drug has the potential to treat a much larger population with "severe refractory hypercholesterolemia,"<sup>4</sup> or approximately 30,000 people. Id. at ¶ 50, 54. Aegerion [*5] renamed AEGR-733 Lomitapide, commercially known as Juxtapid, and Dr. Rader proposed to the FDA that his FDA Phase III clinical trial of Juxtapid be expanded to the "severe refractory hypercholesterolemia" patient population. Id. The FDA told Dr. Rader that if he wished to do so, he would need to expand his then-current trial beyond the thirty-six subjects being proposed and conduct a second—and possibly additional—trials in high risk HeFH patients, as there was "uncertainty regarding the long-term consequences of Lomitapide-associated hepatic steatosis." Id. ¶ 54, 57. Aegerion decided not to conduct the additional trial proposed by the FDA due to "financial constraints," and instead decided to remain with the smaller HoFH population. Id. ¶¶ 54, 57-58.

In October 2007, the FDA formally granted Juxtapid an orphan drug designation for the treatment of HoFH. Id. ¶ 56. In May 2010, the FDA expressed concern to Aegerion executives about potential "off-label use" of Juxtapid. Id. ¶ 58. Aegerion agreed to implement post-approval supply constraints to protect against this risk. Id.

In September 2010, Aegerion appointed a new CEO, Defendant Marc Beer. Id. at 59. Aegerion's Chief Medical Office [*6] abruptly resigned, and his position remained vacant until July 2011. Id. at ¶¶ 59, 65. Late in 2010, Aegerion announced at a conference that it had adopted a new estimate that the number of adult patients with HoFH in the United States was 3,000 patients instead of 300 patients. Id. ¶ 60. Dr. Rader endorsed this number, even though it was contrary to his prior assertions. Id. ¶¶ 61-62. Dr. Rader and Aegerion attempted to introduce this proposed new "functional" HoFH population to the FDA, but the FDA responded that this expanded "functional HoFH" definition too closely resembled the "severe refractory heterozygous FH population" for which Aegerion had not sought approval, "and expand[ed] the target population almost 10-fold." See id. ¶¶ 54, 57, 62.

In July 2011, Aegerion recruited Defendant Dr. Mark Sumeray as its Chief Medical Officer. Id. ¶ 65. In February 2012, Aegerion submitted to the FDA a New Drug Application for Juxtapid limited solely to HoFH. Id. ¶ 66. In December 2012, the FDA approved Juxtapid for use in patients with HoFH. Id. ¶ 72. Aegerion initially priced Juxtapid at $235,000 for a year's therapy and increased that price to $329,587 for a year's therapy by June 2014. [*7] Id. ¶ 163.

Despite receiving approval for the use of Juxtapid in a limited population, Aegerion<sup>5</sup> trained their sales representatives—including Relators—to aggressively market the drug as an off-label solution for a much larger swath of the public, including individuals with HeFH or simply with high cholesterol, and regularly pushed the inflated assertion that there were 3,000 potential HoFH patients. See, e.g. id. ¶¶ 75-81, 83-91, 93, 95-103, 105-07, 109-10, 114, 134. This off-label marketing scheme included instructing its sales staff that genetic testing was a threat to Juxtapid sales, and they should not mention HoFH when speaking with doctors and patients. See id. ¶¶

<sup>3</sup> Heterozygous familial hypercholesterolemia, or HeFH, is inherited from one but not both parents. Id. ¶ 35. The prevalence of HeFH is far more widespread than HoFH and is accepted to be around 1 in 500. Id.

<sup>4</sup> Patients with "severe refractory hypercholesterolemia" are patients with high cholesterol who did not respond to other cholesterol-reducing treatments. Id. ¶ 54.

76-79, 83, 84, 98, 99. Aegerion directed sales staff to ask doctors misleading questions to make them think the drug was suitable for patients with "severe refractory lipids," id. ¶ 76, 91, 98, 107-110; see also id. ¶¶ 87, 99, and to tell doctors that: there was "no definition" of HoFH, id. ¶¶ 76, 77, 78, 99, 107; doctors could determine who had HoFH without genetic testing, id. ¶ 100; the disease was not one in one million but rather one in 265, and the one in a million figure was outdated, see id. ¶¶ 76, 81, 84, 90, [*8] 91, 102-104, 114; and, Aegerion would not engage them as speakers unless they prescribed Juxtapid, see id. ¶¶ 96, 98, 105, 106. Aegerion also told sales staff to go to patients' homes to obtain consent form signatures and suggested that sales people complete medical forms themselves, id. ¶ 80. Aegerion encouraged its sales staff to "data mine" patient databases of medical practices for candidates matching Aegerion's definition of the "functional equivalent of HoFH." Id. ¶¶ 83, 85, 86, 88, 89. The sales team further set up a so-called "hunting" competition amongst sales staff, aggressively placing pressure on the staff to track down potential Juxtapid patients using this expanded use of the drug. See id. ¶¶ 93-95.

In July 2013, Defendant Beer announced that Aegerion would no longer report metrics other than sales of Juxtapid. Id. ¶ 120. By the late 2013, about a year after the launch of Juxtapid, Aegerion had 374 Juxtapid patients, over ninety of whom were Medicare patients (24%). Id. ¶¶ 121, 149, 150.

Relators filed their initial Complaint in this qui tam action under seal on July 26, 2013.

In November 2013, the FDA sent Aegerion a letter warning that Defendant [*9] Beer's public statements "provide evidence that Juxtapid is intended for new uses, for which it lacks approval and for which its labeling does not provide adequate directions for use," making it in violation of the Federal Food and Drug and Cosmetic Act. Id. ¶ 134. The FDA instructed Aegerion to correct the false impressions made by instituting a "comprehensive plan of action to disseminate truthful, non-misleading, and complete corrective messages." Id.

On January 9, 2014, Aegerion announced that it was under investigation by the United States Attorney's Office in Boston, and that it was working on responding to a subpoena. Id. ¶ 135. Defendants Beer and Fraser resigned effective immediately. Id. ¶ 137.

On May 12, 2016, Aegerion announced that it would pay $40 million over five years to the United States to settle allegations of off-label marketing. Id. ¶ 138.

b. Procedural History

Relators' initial sealed Complaint [#3], brought on behalf of the United States and various states, alleged that Aegerion's off-label marketing scheme caused false claims for reimbursement to be submitted to the government, in violation of the federal False Claims Act ("FCA"), 31 U.S.C. § 3729, et seq., and various state analogs. Relators [*10] filed a sealed Amended Complaint [#12] on March 18, 2014, adding Defendants Beer, Fenner, and Fraser. On September 2, 2017, the court granted Relators leave to file their Second Amended Complaint adding Defendants Detloff, Dull, Fitzpatrick, Frigge, Rader, Scheer, Sumeray, and the Trustee of Pennsylvania. See Elec. Order [#64].

On September 22, 2018, the United States gave formal notice that the United States, Relators, and Aegerion had reached a settlement agreement to resolve the claims against Aegerion, and that the United States was therefore intervening as to Defendant Aegerion. Notice of Intervention [#63]. Once this notice was filed, the case was unsealed. See docket.

Relators filed the operative Second Amended Complaint [69] on September 27, 2017. The United States subsequently filed a Stipulation of Dismissal as to Aegerion Pharmaceuticals, Inc. [#98], and the court entered a corresponding Order of Dismissal [#103]. The United States and the Plaintiff States subsequently declined to intervene as to the individual Defendants. Notice of Election to Decline Intervention [#99]; Notice of Election [#110].<sup>6</sup> Relators dismissed their claims as to Dr. Rader and UPenn, Stipulation of Dismissal [*11] as to

The Joint Motion to Dismiss [#147] on behalf of the remaining Defendants followed. The court first address the common arguments raised as to all remaining Defendants, before turning to arguments raised on behalf of individual Defendants.

II. Joint Motion to Dismiss — Counts 1 and 2

In Count 1, Relators allege that the Defendants' marketing scheme caused health care providers to submit claims for Juxtapid coverage to Medicare and other government healthcare programs for unapproved use and non-medically accepted indications, in violation of the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(1)(A). Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 2, 200-204 [#69]. In Count 2, Relators allege that the Defendants have knowingly made, used, or caused to be made or used, false records or statements which were material to false or fraudulent claims, in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3279(a)(1)(B). Id. ¶¶ 205-209.

a. Rule 9(b)

Defendants first argue that Relators have failed to identify a specific patient [*12] who was prescribed Juxtapid for an off-label use where the government was billed, or even where the claim was submitted to the government for payment, and therefore fail to meet the particularity requirement required under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Joint Mem. 7-9 [#152]. Moreover, Defendants argue that the "indirect claim" standard does not apply in this case because Relators failed to plead with specificity that any third parties submitted Juxtapid claims, and even if any such claims were submitted by third parties, that the Defendants induced submission of such claims. Id. at 9-10. Finally, even if the indirect claim standard does apply, Defendants assert that Relators have failed to provide enough facts to support any inference of fraud "beyond possibility." Id. at 11-13.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) requires claims of fraud to be stated with particularity in order to give defendants sufficient notice of plaintiffs' claims, to protect defendants from damage to their reputation by meritless claims, to discourage "strike suits," and to prevent the filing of suits that seek to use the discovery process as a fishing expedition. United States ex rel. Nargol v. Depuy Orthopaedics, Inc., 865 F.3d 29, 38 (1st Cir. 2017); Doyle v. Hasbro, Inc., 103 F.3d 186, 194 (1st Cir. 1996). The rule does so by requiring that, "[i]n alleging fraud . . . a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting [*13] fraud." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) (emphasis added). This requirement includes "set[ting] forth the 'who, what, when, where, and how' of the alleged fraud." United States ex rel. Ge v. Takeda Pharm. Co. Ltd., 737 F.3d 116, 123 (1st Cir. 2013) (citations omitted). To meet rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement, a relator's allegations must identify particular false claims for payment that were submitted to the government, and include at least some details, such as: dates, content, identification numbers, amounts, services billed, individuals involved, and the length of time between the fraud and the claim submission. Id. (citing United States ex rel. Karvelas v. Melrose-Wakefield Hosp., 360 F.3d 220, 232-33 (1st Cir. 2004), abrogated on other grounds by Allison Engine Co. v. U.S. ex rel. Sanders, 553 U.S. 662, 128 S. Ct. 2123, 170 L. Ed. 2d 1030 (2008)).

The First Circuit has recognized a distinction between complaints alleging direct submission of false claims and those alleging that defendants induced third parties to file false claims. United States ex rel. Duxbury v. Ortho Biotech Prods., L.P., 579 F.3d 13, 29 (1st Cir. 2009); see also United States ex rel. Rost v. Pfizer, Inc., 507 F.3d 720, 733 (1st Cir. 2007). In the "indirect claim" cases, the First Circuit has applied a "more flexible standard" under which "a relator [can] satisfy Rule 9(b) by providing 'factual or statistical evidence to strengthen the inference of fraud beyond possibility,' without necessarily providing details as to each false claim." Duxbury, 579 F.3d at 29. Instead, in these indirect claim cases, a claim that does not provide particular details of false claims "may nevertheless survive by alleging particular details [*14] of a scheme to submit false claims paired with reliable government thus requested that, "should either the Relators or the Defendants propose that this action be dismissed, settled or otherwise discontinued, this Court solicit the written consent of the United States before ruling or granting its approval." Id. The Plaintiff States made a similar request. Notice of Election 2-3 [#110].

indicia that lead to a strong inference that claims were actually submitted. Id. (quoting United States ex rel. Grubbs v. Kanneganti, 565 F.3d 180, 190 (5th Cir. 2009)). "[W]hile there is no 'checklist of mandatory requirements' that each allegation in a complaint must meet to satisfy Rule 9(b)," Lawton ex rel. United States v. Takeda Pharm. Co., Ltd., 842 F.3d 125, 131 (1st Cir. 2016) (quoting Karvelas, 360 F.3d at 233), "the evidence necessary to achieve this inference generally requires the relator to plead, inter alia, the 'specific medical providers who allegedly submitted false claims,' the 'rough time periods, locations, and amounts of claims,' and 'the specific government programs to which the claims were made,'" id. (quoting United States ex rel. Kelly v. Novartis Pharms. Corp., 827 F.3d 5, 13 (1st Cir. 2016)).

The allegations in the complaint show that Relators asserted both direct and indirect claims. Specifically, Relators have alleged that "Defendants' aggressive off-label marketing . . . caused patients, pharmacies and others (including Aegerion sales representatives, like Defendant Detloff) to claim Medicare payments for Juxtapid used in unauthorized and/or unacceptable ways." Second Am. Compl. ¶ 146 [#69]; see also id. ¶ 1 ("This case arises from Defendants' scheme to aggressively off-label market Aegerion's core drug, Juxtapid, and cause false claims to be submitted to . . . government healthcare [*15] programs . . . .") (emphasis added). Accordingly, Relators assert that Aegerion both induced third parties and directly submitted false claims to the government for reimbursement.

To the extent that Relators seek relief for claims directly submitted by Aegerion sales representatives, the more exacting standard under Rule 9(b) applies. And, because Relators fail to allege the details of any specific false claim directly submitted by Aegerion or the Defendants for reimbursement from the government, any direct claims against the Defendants are insufficient to state a claim. As to Relators' indirect claims, however, the court must apply the more flexible pleading standard. After doing so, the court finds that Relators have adequately pled a fraudulent scheme and reliable indicia that lead to a strong inference that false claims were submitted.

Unlike in Rost, Relators have provided at least some factual or statistical evidence to strengthen the inference of fraud beyond a possibility. Relators have alleged that the Aegerion knew—and that it is accepted in the scientific community—that there are approximately 300 patients in the United States with HoFH, but that approximately one year after Juxtapid's [*16] launch, Aegerion reported 374 Juxtapid patients, over ninety of whom were Medicare patients (24%). Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 121, 149, 150 [#69]. Moreover, there were 622 Medicare Part D claims for Juxtapid in 2013, 1,992 in 2014, 2,511 in 2015, and 992 in 2016. See Decl. of Benjamin Towbin in Support of Defs.' Joint Mot. to Dismiss ¶ 6 [#152-4].<sup>7</sup> The Second Amended Complaint further alleges that Aegerion announced that it would settle allegations of off-label marketing for $40 million dollars in 2016, Second Am. Compl. ¶ 138 [#69], and that Relators entered into a Settlement Agreement with Aegerion, which Relators have incorporated by reference into the Second Amended Complaint, see id. at 8 n.2, that provided further evidence that Aegerion engaged in a fraudulent off-marketing scheme, and that "Aegerion knowingly caused false or fraudulent claims for Juxtapid to be submitted to the Federal health care programs."<sup>8</sup>

Relators' other allegations add to the inference of fraud. Chart A contains redacted information about fifteen patients covered by government healthcare programs that were prescribed Juxtapid by March 2013. Id. ¶ 153. The chart includes patients' (redacted) dates of birth, their referral dates, [*17] prescription details, insurance providers, shipment dates, and—for some of the patients—their LDL levels, cholesterol drug history, and whether they <sup>7</sup> Defendants have asserted that the court can take judicial notice of the exhibits attached to their memorandum because they are referenced in the complaint and are publicly available government documents. Joint Mem. 4 n.5 [#152]. Relators notified the court at the hearing on this motion that they have no objection to the court's consideration of these exhibits.

<sup>8</sup> Defendants argued at the hearing on this motion that they were not parties to the Settlement Agreement and do not agree to the factual basis underlying that settlement. Defendants may certainly address the underlying facts during this litigation, and the court makes no factual determination at this time. At this procedural juncture, the court considers the Settlement Agreement only to the extent that it makes the inference that Aegerion caused the submission of false claims more plausible.

previously received apheresis.<sup>9</sup> Id. Chart B, entitled "Juxtapid Patients Likely Covered by Government Healthcare Programs," provides much of the same information included in Chart A for fourteen more patients. Id. ¶ 159.<sup>10</sup>

Relators allege that average LDL-C levels for patients who been previously treated for HoFH is between 300-700 mg/dL, and for untreated patients is between 500-1,000 mg/dL. Id. ¶¶ 30, 157. Yet, Chart A shows that at least some Juxtapid patients covered by government healthcare programs had LDL-C levels significantly below these levels. Id. ¶ 153. Further, some of those with reduced LCL-C levels were neither on cholesterol medication nor previously had apheresis. Id.

Given these allegations, the complaint satisfies Rule 9\(b\) purposes of protecting Defendants from meritless claims, discouraging strike suits, and preventing fishing expeditions. Coupled with Relators' allegations outlining Defendants' targeting of individuals covered by government programs, see id. ¶¶ 140, 149-152, and detailing the manner in which Aegerion employees [*18] promoted the drug, the court finds that Relators have provided adequate factual or statistical allegations at this stage to strengthen the inference of fraud beyond possibility.

b. Subjective Medical Judgments

Next, Defendants jointly argue that the claims submitted for reimbursement were based on the doctors' independent medical judgments of the patients' medical necessity and Relators therefore have failed to plead with particularity that claims for reimbursement were false. According to Defendants, Juxtapid could be prescribed by doctors if they complied with the Juxtapid Risk Evaluation and Mitigation Strategy (REMS), which Defendants state only requires that doctors find that the patient has a "clinical or laboratory diagnosis consistent with HoFH." Defendants argue that Relators have not alleged enough facts to show that any of the health care providers' REMS certifications were false, and thus have not sufficiently plead any false claims. Joint Mem. at 13-18 [#152].

For support, Defendants point to United States ex rel. Nowak v. Medtronic, Inc., in which the court stated that the relators could not demonstrate that a claim was false or fraudulent where "[e]ach individual health [*19] care provider's medical judgment is an essential element" of relator's claim." 806 F. Supp. 2d 310, 354 \(D. Mass. 2011\). Nowak's holding, however, is a narrow one and applies only in the context of medical devices, where claims for Medicare reimbursement are judged under a "reasonable and necessary standard." Id. at 318-19, 354. The Nowak court specifically distinguished that case from cases involving off-label drug use. Id. at 354 ("Nowak's reasoning, however, omits out an important step in the analysis in the medical device context. . . . The categorical approach for off-label drug use . . . is inapplicable here." (first emphasis in original, second emphasis added)). Nowak is inapposite. Nor does the Defendants' reliance on United States ex rel. Jones v. Brigham & Women's Hosp., 678 F.3d 72 \(1st Cir. 2012\), better serve them. Jones concerned a grant proposal that relied on scientific data alleged to be false. Id. While acknowledging that "scientific judgments . . . about which reasonable minds may differ cannot be false," id. at 87, the court held that it was a matter for the jury to decide whether the scientist at issue had falsified data, id. at 96.

Neither the First Circuit nor any court in this district has found that claims for coverage of drugs cannot be false if supported by the judgment of the prescribing doctor. And, Relators claim here [*20] is that the Defendants used their off-label marketing scheme to mislead doctors about how to diagnosis HoFH, thereby corrupting the diagnosis process itself. See Second Am. Compl. ¶ 83 [#69]. As in Jones, the court finds that there is a genuine issue about <sup>9</sup> LDL apheresis is a procedure for individuals with mortally high cholesterol, which, according to Dr. Rader, involves "physical purging of the blood to remove LDL cholesterol. Patients have the 3-4-hour procedure involving two intravenous lines every one to two weeks. This procedure is very taxing on patients and treats the symptoms of the disease as opposed to the disease mechanism itself, and it is also costly. While apparently beneficial, the apheresis treatment merely delays the progress of the disease." SAC ¶ 33 [#69].

<sup>10</sup> At the hearing on this motion, Relators' counsel stated that they have the names of patients and doctors referenced in Charts A and B but did not include them in the complaint in order to maintain those individuals' confidentiality. Although the court could require Relators to amend their complaint to add this information, the court will not require Relators to do so in the interest of patient confidentiality. The court notes, as it did at the hearing, that this evidence can be addressed on summary judgment.

whether the information Defendants gave to medical prescribers, which led to prescriptions for off-label use, was misleading.

c. Causation

Defendants next argue that even if Relators have sufficiently pled that there were offlabel Juxtapid prescriptions that resulted in false claims, they have not pled with particularity that the Defendants' off-label promotion caused any of the false claims to be submitted. Joint Mem. at 18-19 [#151].

Relators must show that at least some subset of claims made for government reimbursement were false as a result of Defendants' actions. See Ge, 737 F.3d at 124; see also D'Agostino v. ev3, Inc., 845 F.3d 1, 8 \(1st Cir. 2016\) ("[D]efendant's conduct must include not just materiality but also causation."). Here, Relators have alleged numerous efforts made by Aegerion salespeople to expand the definition of HoFH and mislead doctors into prescribing Juxtapid to patients who do not have HoFH, or even a diagnosis consistent with HoFH. The court need not repeat [*21] its analysis here. Relators' allegations provide sufficient indicia of reliability that Aegerion's off-label marketing scheme caused fraudulent claims for Juxtapid to be submitted to federal health care programs.

d. Materiality

Defendants challenge the sufficiency of Relators' allegations that their purportedly fraudulent representations were material to the government's decision to pay any claims for reimbursement for Juxtapid. Joint Mem. 21-25 [#152]. Relying on the Supreme Court's 2016 decision in Universal Health Services, Inc. v. United States ex rel. Escobar, Defendants say that the complaint fails scrutiny under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 8 and 9\(b\) because the government was aware of Relators' allegations as of 2013 yet continued to reimburse Juxtapid claims through 2016. Id. at 21-25 (citing 136 S. Ct. 1989, 2003-04, 195 L. Ed. 2d 348 \(2016\) ("[I]f the Government pays a particular claim in full despite its actual knowledge that certain requirements were violated, that is very strong evidence that those requirements are not material.")).

As the First Circuit stated on remand in Escobar, "mere awareness of allegations concerning noncompliance with regulations is different from knowledge of actual noncompliance." United States ex rel. Escobar v. Universal Health Services, Inc., 842 F.3d 103, 110 \(1st Cir. 2016\) (emphasis added). There is no indication that from 2013 through [*22] 2016, while the government paid claims for Juxtapid, the government had "actual knowledge" of "actual noncompliance," rather than mere awareness of allegations of noncompliance. Moreover, as this court has previously recognized, actual knowledge may not be determinative of materiality as there may be other reasons why the government continues to pay these claims. See United States ex re. Williams v. City of Brockton, No. 12-cv-12193, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178032, 2016 WL 7429176 \(D. Mass. Dec. 23, 2016\) (Talwani, J.).

e. Public Disclosure

As a final argument pertaining to summary dismissal of Counts 1 and 2, the Defendants contend that Relators' allegations stem from information that was publicly available, and therefore Relators' claims must be dismissed pursuant to the public disclosure bar on qui tam actions, 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(e\)\(4\)\(A\). Joint Mem. 25-28 [#152]. Furthermore, Defendants assert that none of the Relators are an "original source" of the publicly available information, and therefore this exception to the public disclosure bar under 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(e\)\(4\)\(A\)\(iii\) does not apply. Id. at 28-30.

Under the public disclosure bar, the court shall dismiss a qui tam action or claim if the same allegations were publicly disclosed: in a federal criminal, civil, or administrative hearing in which the government is a party; [*23] in a congressional, Government Accountability Office, or other Federal report, hearing, or investigation; or from the news media. 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(e\)\(4\)\(A\). "That bar is designed to foreclose qui tam actions in which a relator . . . attempts to free-ride by merely repastinating previously disclosed badges of fraud. . . . [T]he bar seeks to prevent 'parasitic' suits." United States ex rel. Ondis v. City of Woonsocket, 587 F.3d 49, 53 \(1st Cir. 2009\) (internal citations omitted). An exception to the public disclosure bar applies if the relator was the "original source" and voluntarily disclosed to the government the information on which the false claim allegations are based, or if the relator provided "knowledge that is independent of and materially add to the publicly disclosed allegations." 31 U.S.C. § 3730\(e\)\(4\)\(A\), \(B\).

Relators' claims are not barred by public disclosure. Although Aegerion made public its inflated estimate of the prevalence HoFH population, these statements do not by themselves constitute the false claims alleged in the Second Amended Complaint. Rather, it is Aegerion's alleged internal off-label marketing scheme and efforts to convince doctors to prescribe Juxtapid for non-HoFH patients, and the resultant false claim submissions, that make up Relators' claims. "[T]here is no public disclosure when [*24] the 'essential background information' is publicly available but no allegation of fraud . . . has been made publicly available." Nowak, 806 F. Supp. 2d at 328. Relators may not be the original source of Aegerion's publicly disclosed statements, but they allegedly were the original source of the off-label marketing scheme and purportedly false claim submissions, the information upon which the false claim allegations are based. See Second Am. Compl. ¶ 26.

The Defendants added in the Second Amended Complaint, which was filed after the case was unsealed, also raise the public disclosure bar specifically as it pertains to Relators' allegations against them. See David Scheer's Mem. in support of Joint Mot. to Dismiss ("Scheer Mem.") [#151]; Melanie Detloff and James Frigge's Mem. in support of Joint Mot to Dismiss ("Detloff/Frigge Mem.") [#154]; William Dull's Mem. in support of Joint Mot. to Dismiss ("Dull Mem.") [#159]; Mark Fitzpatrick's Memorandum in support of Joint Mot to Dismiss ("Fitzpatrick Mem.") [#155]; Mark Sumeray's Memorandum in support of Joint Mot. to Dismiss ("Sumeray Mem.") [#156]. But the information that Relators have provided as it pertains to individual Defendants is their alleged involvement within [*25] Aegerion in the scheme, during a period of time when Relators, who were employed by Aegerion between 2012 and 2014, claim first-hand knowledge. Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 4, 8-10, 69, 75-76, 81, 83-84, 92-93, 97-99, 104-105, 149, 153, 159 [#69]. Moreover, Relators allege that they provided the government with a copy of their Second Amended Complaint on or about July 27, 2017, id. ¶ 26, and they sought leave from this court to file their Second Amended Complaint on September 15, 2017, a week before the case was unsealed. The court does not find any of the claims against the Defendants barred by public disclosure.

Accordingly, for the foregoing reasons, the court declines to summarily dismiss Count 1 and 2 of the Second Amended Complaint.

III. Joint Motion to Dismiss — Count 3: Conspiracy

Count 3 alleges that the Defendants conspired to commit a breach of the FCA, in violation of 31 U.S.C. § 3729\(a\)\(1\)\(C\). Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 210-213 [#69]. To prove a defendant is liable for conspiring to defraud the government by getting a false or fraudulent claim allowed or paid, a relator must show that "the defendant conspired with one or more persons to get a false or fraudulent claim allowed or paid by the United States; and [*26] one or more conspirators performed any act to effect the object of the conspiracy." United States v. President & Fellows of Harvard College, 323 F. Supp. 2d 151, 196. \(D. Mass. 2004\).

Defendants contend that there can be no conspiracy where all Defendants allegedly were acting as agents of Aegerion, and therefore could not have conspired as Aegerion—including its agents—cannot conspire with itself. Joint Mem. 19-20 [#152]. Moreover, the Defendants assert that Relators' allegations fail to plead any particular facts to show the existence of any agreement between the parties, let alone an agreement to defraud the government. They argue that the conspiracy claims therefore must be dismissed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) and 9\(b\). Id. at 19-21.

The Supreme Court has referred to the doctrine that a corporation cannot conspire with its own employees or agents as "antitrust law's intracorporate conspiracy doctrine." Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, 533 U.S. 158, 166, 121 S. Ct. 2087, 150 L. Ed. 2d 198 \(2001\). "Outside of the antitrust context, the scope of the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine is far from settled." Mass. ex rel. Martino-Fleming v. S. Bay Mental Health Ctr., Inc., 334 F. Supp. 3d 394, 403 n.4 \(D. Mass. 2018\). In Cedric Kushner Promotions, for example, the Supreme Court found an individual to be a separate entity under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\), from the closely held corporation of which he was president and sole shareholder. The Supreme Court found no consistency with "antitrust [*27] law's intracorporate conspiracy doctrine[]," noting that that doctrine "turns on specific antitrust objectives." The First Circuit, in turn, has shown resistance to extending the doctrine outside of the antitrust context. See Stathos v. Bowden, 728 F.2d 15, 20-21 (1st Cir. 1984) ("We doubt that this 'intracorporate' exception should be read broadly. The cases employing it have rested in large part on precedent drawn from the antitrust field.").

In the FCA context, one court in this district, while not resolving the issue, has noted that "it is questionable whether [the doctrine] would apply . . ." Presidents & Fellows of Harvard Coll., 323 F. Supp. 2d at 198 n. 40. Other district courts have concluded that the doctrine does apply. See Fleming, 334 F. Supp. 3d at 403 (applying the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine in the FCA context); United States ex re. Hagerty v. Cyberonics, Inc., 95 F. Supp. 3d 240, 269 (D. Mass. 2015) (same).

The court does not need to reach the issue here because, in this case, Relators have alleged that Dr. Rader, a non-Aegerion employee, was a part of this conspiracy. See Second Am. Compl. at 8 n.3; ¶¶ 205-209 [#69]. Relators allege that Dr. Rader conspired with the Aegerion employees, and that he was intimately involved in the FDA process and expanding use of Juxtapid to those with "functional HoFH." Id. at ¶ 62. Although Dr. Rader is alleged to have been a member of Aegerion's [*28] Scientific Advisory Board, Dr. Rader was not an employee of Aegerion and is alleged to have acted as an independent decisionmaker. His alleged interest in the financial success of Aegerion—increased value in the stock that he held and potentially increased royalty payments to his separate employer, UPenn, see id. ¶¶ 51-52, 124-133—is distinct from the company's financial interest. And, the fact that Dr. Rader has been dismissed from this action does not change his inclusion as part of the alleged conspiracy. See, e.g., United States ex rel. Head v. Kane Co., 798 F. Supp. 2d 186, 201 (D.D.C. 2011) ("[I]t is well-settled that 'all co-conspirators need not be joined to permit any one or more to be held liable for an unlawful conspiracy.'" (quoting Ass'n for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic, 558 F. Supp. 487, 498 (D.D.C. 1093))).

Moreover, as previously noted, the Second Amended Complaint sufficiently pleaded facts that the Defendants worked in concert to devise and implement Aegerion's off-label marketing scheme, and that marketing scheme caused false claims to be made to the United States government. Accordingly, Relators' conspiracy claim (Count III) has been adequately plead such that it survives this motion to dismiss.

IV. The Individual Defenses

Each Defendant individually argues that the Second Amended Complaint must be dismissed as to that [*29] Defendant. The court examines those individual arguments not addressed above.

a. David Scheer

Defendant Scheer is President of Scheer & Company, Inc., a venture capital firm. Second Am. Compl. ¶ 20 [#69]. The complaint alleges that Dr. Rader recruited Defendant Scheer to establish Aegerion in order to commercialize Juxtapid, id. ¶¶ 43-48, and that Defendant Scheer served on Aegerion's Board of Directors from 2004 through 2016, id. ¶¶ 20, 196. Defendant Scheer argues that Relators fail to allege with particularity any link between him and the alleged fraud, that any act by him was material to the submission of any false claim, that he entered into an agreement to defraud the government, or that he had actual knowledge or a reckless disregard of any false claim. Scheer Mem. at 5-10 [#151]. Finally, he says he is not responsible for Aegerion's misconduct simply because of his position as a member of the Board. Id. at 8-10.

The Second Amended Complaint outlines Defendant Scheer's prior entrepreneurial endeavors, and his role in establishing and attracting investors to Aegerion prior to it having obtained the rights to develop and sell the drug. Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 43-49 [#69]. Relators also include [*30] a number of conclusory allegations regarding Scheer's overall plan and intentions. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 62 ("expanding the target population tenfold was precisely what Dr. Rader, Scheer, Beer and other Defendants intended"); id. ¶ 196 ("Defendant Scheer conspired with the other Individual Defendants to establish Aegerion as a company ostensibly serving the needs of the HoFH population, but all the while the goal of the conspiracy was to sell Juxtapid in the off-label market. . . . Scheer would have known that Aegerion could not have achieved its peak sales, in excess of the entire patient population in the United States, without trespassing into off-label marketing"). However, the only allegation potentially tying him to the off-label marketing scheme itself, or even alleging any action by Defendant Scheer after the launch of Juxtapid, is that he attended a Juxtapid launch party in Cabo San Lucas, where he "would have heard [Defendant] Fraser make the presentation on "The Art of Not Defining HoFH," and he "knew that glowing financial predictions ultimately depend on sales for off-label use"); Id. ¶ 77 (internal quotation marks removed). Relators allege no facts that Defendant Sheer directed, [*31] implemented, participated or conspired in the alleged marketing scheme.

The Complaint further alleges that Defendant Scheer traded Aegerion stock for a net gain of $1,696,000. Id. ¶ 199. But the allegation that Defendant Scheer sold Aegerion stock does not provide a sufficient connection between him and the alleged fraud. See id. ¶ 199. "A relator does not satisfy the requirements of Rule 9\(b\) merely by pleading "fraud by hindsight." D'Agostino, 153 F. Supp. 3d at 532 n.9 (quoting Gross v. Summa Four, Inc., 93 F.3d 987, 991 (1st Cir. 1996)); cf. United States v. St. Michael's Credit Union, 880 F.2d 579, 602 (1st Cir. 1989) (noting the prejudicial danger of guilt by association).

Although Relators have a sufficiently alleged that Aegerion employees caused the submission of false claims generally, and that Defendant Scheer benefitted from those submissions, Relators have failed to allege facts showing a connection between Defendant Scheer and the off-label marketing scheme. Accordingly, Relators allegations against Defendant Scheer do not meet even the more-relaxed standard for indirect claims under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\). Accordingly, the Joint Motion to Dismiss [#147] is ALLOWED as to all claims against Defendant Scheer.

b. James Frigge and Melanie Detloff

Defendants Frigge and Detloff were former top selling Aegerion sales representative. Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 13, 18 [#69]. They argue that [*32] the allegations against them are not sufficiently particular to meet to satisfy the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\). Detloff/Frigge Mem. at 1-9 [#154].

The Second Amended Complaint alleges that Defendant Detloff presented "best practices" for recruiting Juxtapid patients by going to patients' homes to get them to sign consent forms and attempting to recruit those patients' family members while there. Second Am. Compl. ¶ 80 [#69]. Relators further allege that Defendant Detloff personally filled out a statement of medical necessity form, id. ¶¶ 80, 146, 168, and was listed as the salesperson on three Medicare patients on Chart A, one of whom was 64 years old, id. ¶ 153. As to Defendant Frigge, Relators allege that Defendant Frigge sent medical providers a misleading letter that Aegerion has "a drug in final review with the FDA for patients with a form of Familial Hypercholesterolemia," as opposed to identifying HoFH, and that Aegerion was working with Dr. Rader "to identify the appropriate patient population." Id. ¶¶ 67-68 (emphasis added). Relators further allege that Defendant Frigge participated in the internal sales "hunt," which purportedly encouraged Aegerion sales staff to market Juxtapid for [*33] off-label use. Id. ¶¶ 93-94.

When looking at the allegations against Defendants Detloff and Frigge in the context of the entire Second Amended Complaint, the court finds that Relators allegations against the two sales representatives satisfy the requirements of Rule 9\(b\). Defendant Frigge argues that because the letter he allegedly sent to medical providers states that the drug is for "a form of Hypercholesterolemia," it is therefore truthful and cannot serve as the basis of a false claim. Detloff/Frigge 6-7 [#154] (citing United States ex rel. Jones v. Brigham and Women's Hosp., 750 F. Supp. 2d 358, 366 (D. Mass. 2010), vacated and remanded, 678 F.3d 72 (1st Cir. 2012)). But whether this language was intended to mislead is a genuine issue of material fact better left for the jury. Cf. Jones, 678 F.3d at 96 ("[C]onstruing all facts in favor of Relator, we conclude that Jones generated a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the Defendants acted knowingly when allegedly making false representations in the Application.").

Defendant Detloff makes a similar argument, averring that she made no misstatements in furtherance of the alleged off-label marketing scheme. Detloff/Frigge Mem. 7-8 [#154]. However, as with Defendant Frigge's letter, there is a genuine issue as to whether her statements were intended to encourage the off-label marketing [*34] scheme.

Relators have alleged enough facts showing Defendants Detloff and Frigge's knowledge and participation in the off-label marketing scheme to satisfy Rule 9\(b\)'s particularity requirement. Accordingly, the Joint Motion is DENIED as to Defendants Frigge and Detloff.

c. Mark Fitzpatrick

Defendant Fitzpatrick was Aegerion's Chief Financial Officer from May 2011 to June 2015. Second Am. Compl. ¶ 15 [#69]. Relators state that Defendant Fitzpatrick was on an investor call when Defendant Beer told investors that Aegerion would no longer offer metrics other than sales, id. ¶ 120, and, as CFO, knew the predicted revenue that Aegerion had expected to collect and Aegerion's actual revenue, see id. ¶ 174. Defendant Fitzpatrick also presented the company's financial information at quarterly investor calls, including one stating expectations for "U.S. growth" in July 2014 (when the market was presumably already saturated). Id. ¶ 176.

Defendant Fitzpatrick argues his participation in quarterly investor calls during which the company's financial condition was discussed is insufficient to show that he had knowledge, or was deliberately ignorant, of the truth or falsity of Juxtapid claims. Fitzpatrick Mem. [*35] 1-8 [#155]. Accordingly, Defendant Fitzpatrick argues that the Second Amended Complaint must be dismissed against him pursuant to Rules 12\(b\)\(6\) and 9\(b\). Id. at 6-8.

Although a close call, the Second Amended Complaint has alleged enough to survive a motion to dismiss. Although Defendant Fitzpatrick may have been one step removed from the off-label marketing and sales itself, his intimate knowledge of the company's financial situation, the company's rapid growth beyond what would be possible but for the off-label marketing, and his participation in the investor call at which Defendant Beer announced that Aegerion would no longer offer non-sales metrics, is sufficient to show a willful blindness to the fact that Juxtapid was being marketed and sold for off-label use. And, unlike the allegations against Defendant Scheer, Relators allege at least some affirmative act that Defendant Fitzpatrick took in the operation of Aegerion during the time that the off-label marketing scheme was taking place from which a reasonable juror could infer his knowledge and participation in the scheme.

Accordingly, the Joint Motion [#147] is DENIED as to Defendant Fitzpatrick.

d. Mark Sumeray

Defendant Sumeray served as Aegerion's Chief [*36] Medical Officer from the summer of 2011 through February 2016. Second Am. Compl. ¶ 21 [#69]. Relators have alleged that Defendant Sumeray told investors on several occasions that the HoFH population in the U.S. was 3,000 instead of 300, and that there "may be a more significant population of [HoFH] patients in need of therapy than we had initially anticipated." Id. ¶¶ 130, 189-192.

Defendant Sumeray argues that the Second Amended Complaint is void of allegations that he participated in the marketing of Juxtapid or did anything other than attend meetings where others purportedly made false statements having nothing to do with marketing. Sumeray Mem. 1-4 [#156]. He contends that any statements that he made were qualified statements that by their nature cannot be false, and the allegations against him lack the precision necessary to show the falsity of the claims, or any knowledge thereof, under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 9\(b\) and 12\(b\)\(6\). Id. at 4, 7.

Despite these contentions, Defendant Sumeray's statements that the HoFH population may not just be larger than originally anticipated, but ten-fold what Aegerion originally said to be the actual population of HoFH patients in the United States, lead to the natural inference that he was [*37] both aware of and participating in the company's strategy to inflate this number to increase sales. These inflated estimates were pivotal to the alleged off-label marketing scheme.

Accordingly, because Relators have sufficiently pled Defendant Sumeray's involvement in the alleged fraud, the court DENIES the Joint Motion [#147] as to Defendant Sumeray.

e. Craig Fraser

Defendant Fraser, an Aegerion employee from October 2011 to August 2015, was Aegerion's President in charge of U.S. Commercial and Global Manufacturing and Supply Chain and Chief Operating Officer ("COO"). Second Am. Compl. ¶ 17 [#69]. The Second Amended Complaint includes various allegations that Defendant Fraser actively participated in the off-label marketing and sales scheme that resulted in false claim submissions. Relators alleged that: Defendant Frasier stated to Relator Clark that "3750 is our target @ label and off label," id. ¶ 69 (emphasis in original); Defendant Fraser made a presentation entitled "The Art of Not Defining HoFH" at the Juxtapid Launch

Meeting in January 2013, id. ¶ 76; Defendant Fraser instructed sales representative to use misleading techniques to try to convince doctors to prescribe Juxtapid [*38] for patients without HoFH, see id. ¶¶ 76, 93, 100-101; he further instructed the Aegerion sales force to push the theory that the definition of HoFH was debatable, id. ¶ 99; Defendant Fraser was present during Defendant Detloff's "best practices" presentation, id. ¶ 80; he encouraged sales representatives to "data mine" for Juxtapid candidates by ignoring the FDA-approved indication, id. ¶ 85; and Defendant Fraser engaged in a competition with other executives during which he obtained prescriptions for Juxtapid for patients for both on and off-label use, id. ¶ 178.

Defendant Fraser argues that none of the facts alleged tie him to any false claims submitted to the government for reimbursement. Fraser Mem. 2 [#157]. But this argument states no more than the joint argument discussed and rejected above. The Joint Motion [#147] is DENIED as to claims against Defendant Fraser.

f. Marc Beer

Defendant Beer is Aegerion's former CEO before his departure in July 2015. Second Am. Compl. ¶ 12 [#69]. Defendant Beer argues that Relators did not point to any specific directions he gave to the Aegerion sales team to promote Juxtapid for off-label use, and therefore fail to meet Rule 9(b)'s heightened standard [*39] for fraud allegations. Beer Mem. 3-5 [#158]. He asserts the Second Amended Complaint must therefore be dismissed as to the claims against him.

As to Defendant Beer specifically, Relators alleged that the off-label marketing scheme began once Defendant Beer became CEO of Aegerion, see Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 59-60 [#69], and that Defendant Beer promoted Dr. Rader's "functional" HoFH theory, see id. ¶¶ 59-64. Defendant Beer made numerous public appearances at which he alleged that the estimate of patients with HoFH was 3,000 as opposed to 300, id. ¶¶ 81, 91, 102-104, 106, 114, intentionally misinterpreted scientific data at an investor conference, id. ¶¶ 109, 110, and only provided investors with revenue amounts rather than number of sales of Juxtapid, id. ¶ 120. Moreover, Relators contend that Defendant Beer placed pressure on the sales representatives to aggressively sell Juxtapid and to "data mine" for Juxtapid candidates by ignoring the FDA-approved indication, id. ¶¶ 85-86, 92-94, tracked the number of Juxtapid claims paid by government healthcare programs, while refusing to disclose that information, id. ¶ 148, and intentionally sought out medical practices with a high number of Medicare [*40] and Medicaid patients, see id. ¶¶ 152-153.

Relators have asserted particularized allegations against Defendant Beer sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 9(b) or 12(b)(6). Relators sufficiently allege that Defendant Beer was intimately involved with, and participated in, the off-label marketing scheme. Accordingly, the Joint Motion to Dismiss [#147] is denied as to Defendant Beer.

g. William Dull

Defendant Dull is the former Director of the Southeast Region sales territory and Vice President of Global Marketing for Aegerion. Second Am. Compl. ¶ 14 [#69]. Relators allege that Defendant Dull was present while Defendant Detloff made her "best practices" pitch, which outlined many of practices used in Aegerion's off-label marketing scheme. Id. ¶ 80. Defendant Dull is alleged to have encouraged the practice of data mining databases for potential Juxtapid patients and encouraging the sales team to target large practices to perform these searches. Id. ¶ 89. He is also alleged to have taken a lead role in at least one training session of the Aegerion sales team meetings at which the "best practices" presentation was made. Id. ¶ 170.

Defendant Dull argues that the allegations against him are [*41] inadequate, as a matter of law, to show that he had the requisite scienter to participate in the conspiracy, and that Relators have failed to show that his actions caused false claim submissions or were material to the payment of those claims. Dull Mem. at 1-3 [#159].

Based on the allegations in the Second Amended Complaint and the inferences to be drawn from them, Defendant Dull was at the very least deliberately indifferent to the off-label marketing scheme occurring in his presence, and at worst was an active participant in the alleged conspiracy. Therefore, the Joint Motion to Dismiss [#147] is DENIED as to Defendant Dull.

h. Greg Fenner

Defendant Fenner was National Sales Director during his employment at Aegerion from July 2012 to March 2017. Second Am. Compl. ¶ 15 [#69]. Defendant Fenner argues that the Second Amended Complaint fails to allege with particularity that he caused the submission of false claims, and that he acted with the requisite state of mind for false claims to be submitted. Fenner Mem. 1-5 [#160].

The allegations specific to Defendant Fenner in the Second Amended Complaint are that he was present during Defendant Detloff's "best practices" presentation, Second [*42] Am. Compl. ¶ 80 [#69]; that he presented HoFH as more prevalent than was supported by accepted literature and urged against genetic testing as a means of diagnosing HoFH, id. ¶ 81; that he presented a PowerPoint presentation at the Aegerion National Sales meeting, of which the "Lessons Learned" included "not defining HoFH patients," "case based selling," "REMS not an impediment," and "EMR patient mining," id. ¶ 83; see also id. ¶ 85. He is further alleged to have set out the bonus incentive for the sales "hunt," id. ¶¶ 93-95, and cautioned sales rep that they must choose speakers that "believe in our definition of HoFH" to give speeches about HoFH, id. ¶ 96. Defendant Fenner is alleged to have put action to his words, telling one doctor that Aegerion could not engage him as a speaker unless he prescribed more Juxtapid. Id. ¶ 105. The Second Amended Complaint also includes allegations that Defendant Fenner told Relator Szudlo that the term HoFH was a faux pas when speaking to doctors' offices, and that she should talk to doctors using misleading generalities about the use of Juxtapid. Id. ¶¶ 97-99.

The Second Amended Complaint thus sufficiently alleges that Defendant Fenner was not only [*43] well informed and aware of the off-label marketing scheme but was pushing the scheme to the sales team. Given these allegations, his mental state while taking these actions is a question for the jury. See Karvelas, 360 F.3d at 228 (Rule 9(b)) does not require a qui tam relator to "plead with particularity allegations concerning defendants' knowledge, reckless disregard, or deliberate ignorance on the submission of false claims. The characterization of a state of mind, after all, does not lend itself to detailed pleading.").

Accordingly, the court DENIES the Joint Motion to Dismiss [#147] as to claims against Defendant Fenner.

V. Conclusion

For the reasons set foregoing reasons, the court ALLOWS in part and DENIES in part the Joint Motion to Dismiss [#147]. Because the Second Amended Complaint [#69] does not sufficiently allege that Defendant Scheer was a participant in the off-label marketing of Juxtapid that caused the submission of false claims for reimbursement from government health care providers, the joint motion to dismiss is ALLOWED as to Defendant Scheer. All claims against Defendant Scheer are DISMISSED.<sup>11</sup> The joint motion to dismiss is otherwise DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require that a complaint provide a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). The complaint must include enough facts to raise a right to relief above the speculative level. Pleadings that contain nothing more than a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action do not satisfy Rule 8, and neither do pleadings that are based merely upon labels and conclusions or naked assertions without supporting factual allegations. In deciding a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, courts view the allegations in the complaint in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering a motion to dismiss, a court should (1) eliminate any allegations in the complaint that are merely legal conclusions; and (2) where there are well-pleaded factual allegations, assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief. That task is context specific, and to survive the motion, the allegations must permit the court, based on its judicial experience and common sense to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct. If the court determines that well-pleaded facts, accepted as true, do not state a claim that is plausible, the claims must be dismissed.

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity

HN3 Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

In Versiglio, the Eleventh Circuit held that the Board of Dental Examiners was an arm of the State of Alabama and therefore entitled to Eleventh Amendment immunity from a claim asserted under the Fair Labor Standards Act. The Eleventh Circuit based its decision on a ruling by the Alabama Supreme Court that the Board was an arm of the state entitled to immunity from a breach-of-contract claim under Alabama's constitution. Although whether an agency qualifies as an arm of the state is a federal question with a federal standard, the Eleventh Circuit observed that whether that standard is met is determined by carefully reviewing how the agency is defined by state law. Because the Alabama Supreme Court had defined the Board as an arm of the state for purposes of immunity under the Alabama constitution, and because federal courts give great deference to how state courts characterize the entity in question, the Eleventh Circuit held the Board immune from suit on a federal claim in federal court.

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN4 Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

Under Eleventh Circuit precedent, whether an entity is an arm of the state must be assessed in light of the particular function in which the entity was engaged when taking the actions out of which liability is asserted to arise. In Walker, for example, the Eleventh Circuit held that local school boards in Alabama were not arms of the state with respect to employment-related decisions like hiring, assignment, and compensation. Thus, they were not immune under the Eleventh Amendment from suits challenging those decisions under federal law.

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN5 Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

The Eleventh Circuit uses four factors to determine whether an entity is an "arm of the State" in carrying out a particular function: (1) how state law defines the entity; (2) what degree of control the State maintains over the entity; (3) where the entity derives its funds; and (4) who is responsible for judgments against the entity. Although it did not expressly apply this four-factor test, the Eleventh Circuit in Versiglio squarely held that the Board of Dental Examiners of Alabama is immune from suits challenging the Board's payment of overtime wages to its employees. this lawsuit.

HN6 [down arrow] Administrative Law, Agency Rulemaking

The Board of Dental Examiners of Alabama's rulemaking and enforcement authority is constrained by legislative guidelines. Ala. Code § 34-9-43\(a\). The Alabama Legislature has defined what constitutes the practice of dentistry, Ala. Code §§ 34-9-6 and 34-9-7, and Board regulations defining and regulating the practice of dentistry must not conflict with any statute which defines the practice of dentistry, Ala. Code § 34-9-43.2\(c\). The Legislature has also limited the fine that may be imposed for violating a Board regulation to not more than five thousand dollars for each offense. Ala. Code § 34-9-5. Finally, the Legislature has directed the Legislative Services Agency to engage in some form of review of the Board's regulations. Ala. Code § 41-22-22.1. In short, the state has established a number of mechanisms by which it exercises a degree of control over the Board's rulemaking and enforcement functions. The Eleventh Circuit has found similar considerations relevant in concluding that a state exercised sufficient control over an entity to render it an arm of the state for sovereign immunity purposes.

HN7 [down arrow] Administrative Law, Agency Rulemaking

A review of the Alabama Code reveals that the state has provided scant guidance to the Board of Dental Examiners of Alabama on the subject of how it should pay its employees. Indeed, the only direction the Legislature has apparently given is that Board members shall receive as compensation a sum to be fixed by the Board; that the secretary and secretary-treasurer shall each receive such compensation as may be fixed by the board; and that the board is authorized to expend such funds as shall be necessary to pay salaries. Ala. Code § 34-9-41. Thus, there can be no doubt that the control Alabama maintains over the Board's rulemaking and enforcement functions is at least as great as (probably greater than) the control it exercises over the Board's payment of its employees.

Because the Eleventh Circuit held in Versiglio that the Board of Dental Examiners of Alabama was immune from a claim based on its payment of employees, that decision compels the conclusion that the Board is also immune from claims based on its rulemaking and enforcement decisions. The four-factor Eleventh Amendment immunity test does not yield a different result.

HN9 Parties, Real Party in Interest

In addition to barring suits against the state itself, the *Eleventh Amendment* also bars suits against state officials when the state is the real, substantial party in interest. The state is the real party in interest if the effect of the judgment would be to restrain the government from acting.

HN10 Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

The United States Supreme Court has recognized an important exception to *Eleventh Amendment* immunity. Under the doctrine of Ex parte Young, the *Eleventh Amendment* does not bar suits seeking prospective relief against state officials to prevent them from violating federal law.

HN11 Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

In determining whether the doctrine of Ex parte Young avoids an *Eleventh Amendment* bar to suit, a court need only conduct a straightforward inquiry into whether the complaint alleges an ongoing violation of federal law and seeks relief properly characterized as prospective. It is well settled that a plaintiff may properly assert claims for prospective injunctive and declaratory relief against state officials alleged to be violating federal law. Moreover, prospective relief is equally available whether the law that state officials are allegedly violating is a federal statute (like the Sherman Act) or the Constitution.

HN12 Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

In Pennhurst, the United States Supreme Court held that Ex parte Young was inapplicable in a suit against state officials on the basis of state law. The Court therefore concluded that a claim that state officials violated state law in carrying out their official responsibilities is a claim against the State that is barred by the *Eleventh Amendment*. As a result, though official-capacity suits seeking prospective relief are permissible under Ex parte Young for violations of federal law, they are impermissible under the *Eleventh Amendment* for violations of state law. The Pennhurst Court further held that even supplemental state-law claims against state officials brought alongside federal claims are likewise barred by the *Eleventh Amendment*.

HN13 Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

In Pennhurst, the United States Supreme Court reasoned that the Eleventh Amendment generally bars officer suits where the state is the real party in interest, regardless of the relief sought. Absent state consent to suit or congressional abrogation of immunity, the only route around this general bar to suit is the doctrine of Ex parte Young, which permits federal courts to order prospective relief against state officials for ongoing violations of federal law. But Pennhurst held that Ex parte Young was inapplicable in a suit against state officials on the basis of state law. Without Ex parte Young, then, any claim that state officials violated state law in carrying out their official responsibilities is a claim against the State that is barred by the Eleventh Amendment. That includes claims for declaratory relief no less than claims for injunctive relief.

HN14 [+] Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

Although the relief sought in Pennhurst was an injunction ordering state officials to conform their conduct to state law, Pennhurst's rule applies equally to a suit seeking a declaration that the conduct of state officials violates state law. Pennhurst's rule was based on the idea that it is difficult to think of a greater intrusion on state sovereignty than when a federal court instructs state officials on how to conform their conduct to state law. A judgment declaring that the conduct of state officials violates state law does just that. It is no less an intrusion on state sovereignty than an injunction forbidding the state officials' conduct. Under Pennhurst, the Eleventh Amendment bars declaratory relief based on alleged state-law violations no less than it does injunctive relief.

HN15 [+] Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

In an official-capacity claim, the relief sought is only nominally against the official and in fact is against the official's office and thus the sovereign itself. Individual-capacity claims, on the other hand, seek to impose individual liability upon a government officer for actions taken under color of state law. In an individual-capacity claim, the real party in interest is the individual, not the sovereign.

The federal antitrust laws provide an important safeguard for the United States' free-market economy. Indeed, the antitrust laws are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and the free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection of the fundamental personal freedoms. To this end, the antitrust laws declare a considered and decisive prohibition by the federal government of cartels, price fixing, and other combinations or practices that undermine the free market.

HN17 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Despite the liberal federal policy favoring competition embodied in the Sherman Act, states have long chosen to regulate certain spheres of their economies in ways that restrict competition, in order to promote other important values. For example, states sometimes impose restrictions on occupations, confer exclusive or shared rights to dominate a market, or otherwise limit competition to achieve public objectives. The United States Supreme Court has long recognized that if every duly enacted state law or policy were required to conform to the mandates of the Sherman Act, thus promoting competition at the expense of other values a State may deem fundamental, federal antitrust law would impose an impermissible burden on the States' power to regulate. For that reason, the Supreme Court in Parker interpreted the antitrust laws to confer immunity on anticompetitive conduct by the States when acting in their sovereign capacity. This doctrine has come to be known as Parker or state-action immunity from the federal antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN18 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Parker immunity exists to avoid conflicts between the federal policy of robust competition embodied in the Sherman Act and a state's sovereign authority to regulate local activities (even in anticompetitive ways) to promote the health, safety, and morals of its citizens. For that reason, an entity may not invoke Parker immunity unless the actions in question are an exercise of the State's sovereign power. State legislation automatically qualifies as an exercise of the state's sovereign power and is ipso facto exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN19 [+] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

Parker immunity does not always apply when a state delegates regulatory authority to a nonsovereign actor, instead of regulating itself by legislation. In that case, anticompetitive conduct by the nonsovereign actor receives Parker immunity only if the conduct results from procedures that suffice to make the anticompetitive conduct the State's own. In other words, the question is whether the nonsovereign actor's anticompetitive conduct should be deemed state action and thus shielded from the antitrust laws.

HN20 [+] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

For purposes of Parker immunity, a nonsovereign actor is one whose conduct does not automatically qualify as that of the sovereign State itself. Perhaps counterintuitively, even state agencies may qualify as nonsovereign actors for purposes of Parker immunity, particularly where they are controlled by active participants in the regulated market. Indeed, limits on Parker immunity are most essential when the state delegates its regulatory power to active market participants, because active market participants may be incentivized to regulate in a manner that promotes their own private interests instead of the state's policy goals.

HN21 [+] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

Deciding whether a nonsovereign actor is enforcing state policy or furthering private interests can be a difficult task, especially where the nonsovereign actor is controlled by active market participants. Thus, the United States Supreme Court has held that a nonsovereign actor controlled by active market participants enjoys Parker immunity only if it satisfies both elements of the two-part test set forth in Midcal. Under the Midcal test, anticompetitive conduct by a nonsovereign actor receives Parker immunity only if (1) the state has articulated a clear policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct; and (2) the state provides active supervision of the anticompetitive conduct. Midcal's clear-articulation requirement is met where the displacement of competition is the inherent, logical, or ordinary result of the exercise of authority delegated by the state legislature. And, the active-supervision requirement demands, among other things, that state officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy.

HN22 [+] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

For purposes of Parker immunity, the active-supervision inquiry is flexible and context-dependent. The key question is whether the State's review mechanisms provide realistic assurance that a nonsovereign actor's anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests. The few constant requirements of active supervision are that the state supervisor: review the substance of the anticompetitive decision, not merely the procedures followed to produce it; have the power to veto or modify particular decisions to ensure they accord with state policy; and not itself be an active market participant. Beyond that, however, the adequacy of supervision will depend on all the circumstances of a case.

HN23 [+] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

The rule announced in by the U.S. Supreme Court in N.C. Dental -- that certain state entities must satisfy Midcal's two-part test to claim Parker immunity -- applies to nonsovereign actors controlled by active market participants. In N.C. Dental, the Supreme Court squarely held that North Carolina's Dental Board was such a nonsovereign actor, despite its status as a state agency. The powers, duties, and composition of Alabama's Dental Board are nearly identical to those of the North Carolina Dental Board the Supreme Court considered in N.C. Dental. Both Boards are created by state law and empowered by the state to regulate the practice of dentistry and enforce the state's prohibition of the unauthorized practice of dentistry. Ala. Code §§ 34-9-40, 34-9-43. Both Boards are comprised of a controlling number of active participants in the market for dental services, who are in turn selected by other members of the dental profession. Ala. Code § 34-9-40. Neither North Carolina's nor Alabama's Dental Practice Act creates a mechanism by which Board members may be removed from office by other state officials. Ala. Code § 34-9-40. And both Boards are empowered to promulgate rules and regulations governing the practice of dentistry, provided those mandates are not inconsistent with a state statute. Ala. Code § 34-9-43.2\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN24 [+] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

The similarities between the North Carolina Dental Board and the Board of Dental Examiners of Alabama compel the conclusion that the Alabama Board is also a nonsovereign actor controlled by active market participants for purposes of Parker immunity, and that the principles set forth by the United States Supreme Court in N.C. Dental therefore apply to it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN25[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

The United States Supreme Court has provided little guidance on what entities qualify as nonsovereign actors for purposes of Parker immunity. But in N.C. Dental, the Court did cite Hoover for the following proposition: for purposes of Parker, a nonsovereign actor is one whose conduct does not automatically qualify as that of the sovereign State itself. The portion of Hoover cited by the Court identified two state entities that were sovereign for purposes of Parker immunity and whose conduct therefore automatically qualified as the conduct of the state: the state legislature and the state supreme court when acting legislatively rather than judicially. The Hoover Court expressly left open the question whether the governor of a state stands in the same position as the state legislature and supreme court for purposes of the state-action doctrine. Thus, sovereign actors for purposes of Parker immunity appear to be limited to governmental bodies like a state legislature or supreme court (or perhaps the governor) that constitute the apex of a coequal branch of state government. But whatever the limits of that category, as N.C. Dental makes abundantly clear, state agencies are not simply by their governmental character sovereign actors for purposes of state-action immunity. Accordingly, their actions are not automatically cloaked in Parker immunity.

HN26[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

The test for determining what state entities are arms of the state entitled to sovereign immunity under the Eleventh Amendment is different from the test for determining whether a state agency is a nonsovereign actor for purposes of Parker immunity. The Eleventh Circuit employs a four-factor test to determine whether a state agency is an arm of the state with respect to a particular function it performs. Because of the different tests that apply, it is possible for a state agency to be sovereign for purposes of Eleventh Amendment immunity but nonsovereign for purposes of Parker immunity.

In 2016, shortly after the United States Supreme Court's 2015 N.C. Dental decision, the Alabama Legislature enacted Ala. Code § 41-22-22.1. The statute requires the legal division of the Legislative Services Agency (LSA) to review each rule certified to it by a state board or commission that regulates a profession, a controlling number of the members of which are active market participants in the profession. § 41-22-22.1\(a\). The LSA must determine whether the rule may significantly lessen competition. If it concludes the rule will not decrease competition, no further action is required. But if it finds that the rule may significantly lessen competition, it must determine whether the rule was made pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to displace competition and then certify those determinations to a legislative committee. § 41-22-22.1\(b\). The chair of the committee must then call a meeting of the committee to review the substance of the rule, determine whether the rule may significantly lessen competition, and if so, whether it was made pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to displace competition. If the committee fails to act on a rule, the rule shall not become effective and shall be placed on the agenda of the committee at each subsequent meeting until the committee disposes of the rule.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

HN34 [+] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

The Commerce Clause grants Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. Although the Clause only expressly speaks of powers granted to Congress, the United States Supreme Court has long held that the Clause also has a dormant aspect, which imposes substantive restrictions on permissible state regulation of interstate commerce. The dormant or negative aspect of the Commerce Clause prohibits economic protectionism -- that is, regulatory measures designed to benefit in-state economic interests by burdening out-of-state competitors.

HN35 [+] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

The Eleventh Circuit evaluates Dormant Commerce Clause challenges using a two-tiered analysis. The first tier applies if a state regulation directly regulates or discriminates against interstate commerce, or has the effect of favoring in-state economic interests. If that showing is made, the regulation is invalid unless shown to advance a legitimate local purpose that cannot be adequately served by reasonable nondiscriminatory alternatives. The second tier applies if the regulation has only indirect effects on interstate commerce and regulates evenhandedly. In that case, a court applies the balancing test of, which asks whether the State's interest is legitimate and whether the burden on interstate commerce clearly exceeds the local benefits. The two tiers of analysis are not clearly distinguishable. Under either tier, the critical consideration is the overall effect of the regulation on both local and interstate activity.

HN36 [+] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

In Dormant Commerce Clause, bona fide safety regulations bear a strong presumption of validity. Under the tier-two Pike balancing test, if safety justifications are not illusory, federal courts will not second-guess legislative judgment about their importance in comparison with related burdens on interstate commerce. But a state's mere incantation of a purpose to promote the public health or safety does not insulate a state law from Commerce Clause attack. Even regulations designed to promote public health and safety may further the purpose so marginally, and interfere with commerce so substantially, as to be invalid under the Commerce Clause. Courts must therefore weigh the state's asserted safety purpose against the degree of interference with interstate commerce, giving sensitive consideration to the weight and nature of the state regulatory concern in light of the extent of the burden imposed on interstate commerce.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

HN37 [+] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

A state's mere incantation of a rational basis for a regulation does not preclude Dormant Commerce Clause scrutiny.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Judicial Review > Standards of Review

HN38 [+] Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

Under equal protection doctrine, rational basis review applies unless the classification at issue infringes fundamental rights or concerns a suspect class. Similarly, rational basis review applies to substantive due process challenges to state professional regulations because the right to practice a particular profession is not a fundamental one. Under rational basis review, state policies enjoy a strong presumption of validity. Courts ask only whether the enacting government body could have been pursuing a legitimate government purpose in enacting the measure. If a legitimate goal for the law conceivably exists, courts ask only whether a rational basis exists for the enacting governmental body to believe that the legislation would further the hypothesized purpose. This inquiry occurs entirely in the abstract because the actual motivations of the enacting governmental body are entirely irrelevant, as is whether the legitimate basis was actually considered by the legislative body. The government has no obligation to produce evidence to sustain the rationality of the challenged measure, and the complaining party has the burden to negate every conceivable basis which might support it. Unsurprisingly, almost every statute subject to the very deferential rational basis standard is found to be constitutional.

[*1222] MEMORANDUM OPINION

In September 2018, the Board of Dental Examiners of Alabama ("Board" or "Dental Board") sent a cease-and-desist letter to SmileDirectClub, LLC ("SmileDirect"). The letter and subsequent communications from the Board informed SmileDirect that certain services it performs for customers at its Alabama shop can only be performed at facilities where a licensed dentist is physically present. Because SmileDirect does not have a licensed dentist physically present at its facility, the Board considers SmileDirect's nondentist personnel to be engaged in the unauthorized practice of dentistry. It therefore ordered SmileDirect to immediately cease performing those services without a supervising dentist present at the facility.

SmileDirect and one of its affiliated dentists, Dr. Blaine Leeds, claim that the Board's actions violate federal and state law. They filed this action against the Board and its members (in their official and individual capacities). SmileDirect and Dr. Leeds ("Plaintiffs") seek (1) an injunction forbidding the Board and its members ("Defendants") from requiring SmileDirect to have a dentist physically present at its facility [*3] and (2) a declaration that Defendants' conduct is unlawful. (Doc. # 29 at 46). Defendants have moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and failure to state a claim. (Doc. # 32); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\), 12\(b\)\(6\). After careful consideration, and for the reasons explained below, the court concludes that the motion (Doc. # 32) is due to be granted in part and denied in part.

SmileDirect operates a web-based teledentistry platform that connects patients seeking clear aligner therapy with licensed dentists. (Doc. # 29 at ¶ 23). Dentists like Dr. Leeds contract with SmileDirect to provide certain support services that enable them to treat patients remotely, often across state lines. (Id.). The platform enables Dr. Leeds, who has an Alabama dental license but resides in Nashville, Tennessee, to provide corrective teeth realignment for patients in Alabama who have mild to moderate malocclusion (i.e., improperly positioned teeth when the jaws are closed). (Id.).

SmileDirect's business model operates as follows. A prospective patient considering clear aligner therapy first visits one of [*1223] SmileDirect's physical locations, known as "SmileShops." (Id. at ¶ 29). There, SmileDirect [*4] employees use an iTero device -- described by Plaintiffs as "essentially a wand with a camera" -- to rapidly take thousands of digital photographs of the patient's teeth and gums. (Id. at ¶ 30). The iTero is inserted into the patient's mouth "at varying angles to photograph the teeth and tissue." (Id. at ¶ 92).<sup>2</sup> The iTero does not use ionizing radiation, x-rays, or gamma rays; instead, it simply takes digital photographs. (Id. at ¶¶ 29-30). After each use of the iTero, SmileDirect employees remove and discard the disposable cover on the device and clean the wand with a disinfecting wipe. (Id. at ¶¶ 95-96). SmileDirect employees also take standard digital photographs of the patient's teeth and gums using a regular digital camera. (Id. at ¶ 31).

<sup>1</sup> For purposes of ruling on Defendants' motion to dismiss, the court treats the factual allegations of the Amended Complaint (Doc. # 29) as true, but not its legal conclusions. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678-79, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\).

<sup>2</sup> Though the Amended Complaint does not expressly state that the iTero is inserted into the patient's mouth, Plaintiffs filed an affidavit in support of their motion for a temporary restraining order representing to the court that it is. (Doc. # 3-4 at 5, ¶¶ 8-9). Additionally, other statements in the Amended Complaint strongly imply that the iTero is inserted into the patient's mouth. (Doc. # 29 at ¶ 95) ("The iTero is also easy to clean between uses and thus presents no meaningful risk of cross-contamination as long as the person performing the photography removes and discards the disposable cover and wipes the wand with a disinfecting wipe after each use.").

The iTero images are then sent to a dental lab, which creates a three-dimensional model of the prospective patient's teeth, bite, gums, and palate. (Id. at ¶¶ 32, 87). Dr. Leeds or another Alabama-licensed dentist then reviews the three-dimensional model -- along with the standard digital photographs, the patient's health and dental histories, and other pertinent information -- to decide whether clear aligner therapy may be appropriate. (Id. at [**5] ¶¶ 32-36). The dentist reviews these materials to identify any periodontal disease, cavities, or other conditions that would require further clearance or prevent the patient from receiving clear aligner therapy through SmileDirect. (Id. at ¶ 31). If the dentist determines clear aligner therapy is appropriate and the patient agrees, the dentist writes a prescription to a lab to have the clear aligners fabricated and shipped. (Id. at 2). The patient then receives a series of custom-made removable plastic retainers that are placed on the patient's teeth to move them in small increments until the desired positioning is achieved. (Id. at ¶ 23).

On September 20, 2018, the Board sent SmileDirect a cease-and-desist letter stating that SmileDirect was engaged in the unauthorized practice of dentistry. (Id. at ¶ 59). Plaintiffs allege the letter was sent in response to a complaint the Board received from a competing Alabama-licensed dentist about SmileDirect's operations. (Id. at ¶ 58). On October 3, 2018, representatives from SmileDirect met with the Board to explain the function of the iTero and their belief that its use does not constitute a dental procedure that would require the presence of a licensed [**6] dentist on site. (Id. at ¶ 61). Six days later, the Board emailed the following message to counsel for SmileDirect: "Thank you for coming by the Board office last week to discuss Smile Direct Club. I reviewed the situation with the Board last Friday in detail. I was directed to inform you that your client immediately must cease and desist performing the services that are considered the practice of dentistry (i.e. digital imaging) without a supervising dentist present." (Id. at ¶ 62). SmileDirect and Dr. Leeds responded by filing this lawsuit. (Doc. # 1).

The Board's cease-and-desist letter and subsequent communications were based on certain provisions of the Alabama Dental Practice Act, Ala. Code § 34-9-1 et seq., [*1224] and a regulation promulgated by the Board pursuant to its authority to "[a]dopt rules and regulations to implement" the Act, id., § 34-9-43\(a\)\(10\). The Act defines what constitutes the practice of dentistry in Alabama, stating in relevant part:

Any person shall be deemed to be practicing dentistry who does any of the following:

...

(7) Uses a roentgen, radiograph, or digital imaging machine for the purpose of making dental roentgenograms, radiographs, or digital images . . . .

Id., § 34-9-6. However, the Act goes on to exempt [**7] certain practices that would otherwise fall within this definition from being considered the practice of dentistry:

Nothing in this chapter shall apply to the following practices, acts, and operations:

...

(5) The use of roentgen machines or other means for making radiographs, digital images, or similar records, of dental or oral tissues under the supervision of a licensed dentist or physician . . . .

Id., § 34-9-7\(a\).

The Board contends the iTero is a "digital imaging machine" and that the images it produces are "digital images" within the meaning of Alabama Code § 34-9-6. (Doc. # 29 at ¶¶ 2, 62-68). It therefore understands persons who use the iTero to be practicing dentistry—unless they do so "under the supervision of a licensed dentist or physician." Ala. Code § 34-9-7\(a\)\(5\).

The Board also claims SmileDirect's use of an iTero violates one of the Board's regulations. (Doc. # 29 at ¶¶ 2, 62-68). The regulation defines dental hygienists, dental assistants, and dental laboratory technicians as "[a]llied dental personnel" and identifies certain dentistry-related duties they are permitted to perform. Ala. Admin. Code 270-X-3-10. Under the regulation, dental assistants and dental hygienists may "[m]ake dental radiographs or digital images." Id. Importantly, however, all [**8] of the duties listed—including making digital images—are "[s]ubject to the prohibition that no intra-oral procedure can be performed unless under the direct supervision of a duly licensed dentist as defined by Board rule." Id. "Direct supervision" is defined by another Board regulation as "supervision by a dentist who authorizes the intraoral procedure to be performed, is physically present in the dental facility and available during performance of the procedure, examines the patient during the procedure and takes full professional responsibility for the completed procedure." Ala. Admin. Code 270-X-3-06. Because SmileDirect employees make intraoral digital images using an iTero at a facility where no licensed dentist is physically present, the Board understands them to be engaged in the unauthorized practice of dentistry, in violation of Alabama Administrative Code 270-X-3-10.

Plaintiffs contend that the Board's actions against SmileDirect are not motivated by a desire to protect the public from the unauthorized practice of dentistry. Instead, Plaintiffs argue the Board -- which by statute consists of six dentists and one dental hygienist who are all selected by other members of the dental profession, Ala. Code § 34-9-40 -- seeks to protect Alabama dentists from competition [\[\*9\]](#) by innovators like SmileDirect and Dr. Leeds, who provide clear aligner therapy at lower prices than traditional dentists. They claim that use of the iTero poses no health or safety risks and that the Board's requirement that SmileDirect have a licensed dentist physically present at its SmileShops cannot be justified by anything besides economic protectionism. Plaintiffs therefore filed this lawsuit against the Board and each of its members (in their individual and official capacities), asserting claims [\[\*1225\]](#) under the Sherman Antitrust Act, U.S. Constitution, and Alabama Constitution. (Doc. # 29 at ¶¶ 107-185).

The Board and its members, for their part, claim that the physical-presence requirement serves important public health and safety purposes and that all of Plaintiffs' claims are due to be dismissed.

II. Legal Standard

HN1 [↑] The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require that a complaint provide "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). The complaint must include enough facts "to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 \(2007\). Pleadings that contain nothing more than "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action" do not [\[\*10\]](#) satisfy Rule 8, and neither do pleadings that are based merely upon "labels and conclusions" or "naked assertion[s]" without supporting factual allegations. Id. at 555, 557. In deciding a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, courts view the allegations in the complaint in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Watts v. Fla. International Univ., 495 F.3d 1289, 1295 \(11th Cir. 2007\).

HN2 [↑] In considering a motion to dismiss, a court should "1) eliminate any allegations in the complaint that are merely legal conclusions; and 2) where there are well-pleaded factual allegations, 'assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief.'" Kivisto v. Miller, Canfield, Paddock & Stone, PLC, 413 F. App'x 136, 138 \(11th Cir. 2011\) (quoting ADA v. Cigna Corp., 605 F.3d 1283, 1290 \(11th Cir. 2010\)). That task is context specific, and to survive the motion, the allegations must permit the court, based on its "judicial experience and common sense . . . to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 \(2009\). If the court determines that well-pleaded facts, accepted as true, do not state a claim that is plausible, the claims must be dismissed. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570.

III. Analysis

Plaintiffs assert claims under (1) the Sherman Antitrust Act, (2) the U.S. Constitution's Dormant Commerce, Equal Protection, and Due Process Clauses, and (3) the Alabama constitutional provisions guaranteeing due process of law. They also request a declaratory judgment [\[\*11\]](#) that the Board's challenged conduct exceeded its authority under the Alabama Dental Practice Act. For the reasons explained below, the court concludes that Plaintiffs may proceed with their Sherman Act and Dormant Commerce Clause claims against the Board members in their official capacities. Before addressing Plaintiffs' various claims, the court first deals with several threshold issues concerning sovereign immunity.

A. The Board of Dental Examiners is Entitled to Sovereign Immunity

As a threshold matter, the Board argues it is entitled to sovereign immunity under the Eleventh Circuit's decision in Versiglio v. Bd. of Dental Examiners of Alabama, 686 F.3d 1290 (11th Cir. 2012). The court agrees. Plaintiffs' claims against the Board itself are barred by sovereign immunity and must therefore be dismissed.

In Versiglio, the Eleventh Circuit held that the Board of Dental Examiners was an arm of the State of Alabama and therefore entitled to Eleventh Amendment immunity from a claim asserted under the Fair Labor Standards Act. 686 F.3d at 1291-93. HN3 [↑] The Eleventh Circuit based its [*1226] decision on a ruling by the Alabama Supreme Court that the Board was an arm of the state entitled to immunity from a breach-of-contract claim under Alabama's constitution. See Ex parte Bd. of Dental Examiners of Alabama, 102 So. 3d 368, 370, 386 (Ala. 2012). Though "[w]hether an agency qualifies as an arm of the state is a federal question with a federal [**12] standard," the Eleventh Circuit observed that "whether that standard is met [is] determined by carefully reviewing how the agency is defined by state law." Versiglio, 686 F.3d at 1291. Because the Alabama Supreme Court had defined the Board as an arm of the state for purposes of immunity under the Alabama constitution, and because federal courts give "great deference to how state courts characterize the entity in question," the Eleventh Circuit held the Board immune from suit on a federal claim in federal court. Id. at 1292-93.

Plaintiffs argue that Versiglio does not bar their claims against the Board because the Board's challenged conduct in this case (enforcing a state statute and regulation) differs from its challenged conduct in Versiglio (incorrectly paying Board employees and miscalculating overtime wages). Plaintiffs are correct that HN4 [↑] under Eleventh Circuit precedent, "[w]hether an entity is an 'arm of the state' must be assessed in light of the particular function in which the entity was engaged when taking the actions out of which liability is asserted to arise." Walker v. Jefferson Cty. Bd. of Educ., 771 F.3d 748, 757 (11th Cir. 2014) (quoting Manders v. Lee, 338 F.3d 1304, 1308 (11th Cir. 2003) (en banc)) (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted). In Walker, for example, the Eleventh Circuit held that local school boards in Alabama [**13] were not arms of the state with respect to employment-related decisions like hiring, assignment, and compensation. Id. Thus, they were "not immune under the Eleventh Amendment from suits challenging those decisions under federal law." Id. But the function-specific nature of Eleventh Amendment immunity does not help Plaintiffs in this case.

HN5 [↑] The Eleventh Circuit "uses four factors to determine whether an entity is an 'arm of the State' in carrying out a particular function: (1) how state law defines the entity; (2) what degree of control the State maintains over the entity; (3) where the entity derives its funds; and (4) who is responsible for judgments against the entity." Manders, 338 F.3d at 1309. Though it did not expressly apply this four-factor test, the Eleventh Circuit in Versiglio squarely held that the Dental Board is immune from suits challenging the Board's payment of overtime wages to its employees. See Versiglio, 686 F.3d at 1291-93; see also Versiglio v. Bd. of Dental Examiners of Alabama, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153680, 2010 WL 11520474, at *1 (N.D. Ala. Aug. 27, 2010) (district court opinion describing Versiglio's claim as one "for alleged unpaid overtime" under the FLSA). Thus, the only question even arguably presented here is whether the four-factor test calls for a different result with respect to the Board's function of enforcing state statutes and regulations, which is the conduct [*1227] Plaintiffs challenge in this lawsuit.

It is difficult to see how the first, third, and fourth factors could call for a different result when applied to the Board's function of enforcing statutes and regulations instead of paying its employees. Plaintiffs have not suggested that state law defines the Board differently with respect to its regulatory and enforcement functions than it does with respect to its employee-payment functions. Nor have they argued that the source of the Board's funds or the party responsible for judgments against it differ when the challenged conduct is the Board's enforcement of statutes and regulations rather than its payment of employees. Instead, Plaintiffs argue the degree-of-control [*1227] factor makes all the difference and "weighs decisively against a finding that the Dental Board is an arm of the state" when engaged in the conduct challenged in this lawsuit. (Doc. # 44 at 3). The court is unpersuaded.

Plaintiffs marshal a variety of arguments to show that the State of Alabama exercises little to no control over the Board with respect to the challenged activities in this lawsuit, namely, promulgating regulations and issuing cease-and-desist letters to enforce [**15] statutes and regulations. (Id. at 3-5). But given the Eleventh Circuit's holding in Versiglio, the critical issue is not the absolute degree of control the state exercises over the Board's challenged activities, considered in the abstract. The decisive question is whether the state exercises any less control over the Board's rulemaking and enforcement functions than it does over the Board's payment of its employees. After all, Versiglio necessarily held that whatever degree of control the state exercises over the Board with respect to its wage payments to employees is sufficient to render the Board an arm of the state as to that function.

Plaintiffs have offered no reason to think that the state exercises any less control over the Board's rulemaking and enforcement functions than it does over the Board's payment of employees, such that Versiglio can be persuasively distinguished—and the court is unable to think of one. Indeed, if anything, it seems likely that the state exercises more control over the Board's rulemaking and enforcement decisions than it does over its wage payments to employees. For example, HN6[<sup>15</sup>] the Board's rulemaking and enforcement authority is constrained by legislative guidelines. [**16] See Ala. Code § 34-9-43\(a\) (granting the Board authority to adopt rules and regulations "subject to" the provisions of Chapter 9 of the Alabama Code). The Alabama Legislature has defined what constitutes the practice of dentistry, id., §§ 34-9-6 and 34-9-7, and Board regulations defining and regulating the practice of dentistry must "not conflict with any statute which defines the practice of dentistry," id., § 34-9-43.2\(c\). The Legislature has also limited the fine that may be imposed for violating a Board regulation to "not more than five thousand dollars . . . for each offense." Id., § 34-9-5. Finally, the Legislature has directed the Legislative Services Agency to engage in some form of review of the Board's regulations, though the parties dispute the nature and extent of that review. See id., § 41-22-22.1; (Docs. # 29 at ¶ 56; 33 at 6-9). In short, the state has established a number of mechanisms by which it exercises a degree of control over the Board's rulemaking and enforcement functions.

The Eleventh Circuit has found similar considerations relevant in concluding that a state exercised sufficient control over an entity to render it an arm of the state for sovereign immunity purposes. See Miccosukee Tribe of Indians v. Fla. State Athletic Comm'n, 226 F.3d 1226, 1232 (11th Cir. 2000) ("[Florida] has provided [legislative] guidelines to limit the Commission's ability [**17] to make regulations and, consequently, has some control over the Commission's rule making powers."). But again, the question is not whether the measures described above would give Alabama sufficient control over the Board to render it an arm of the state as a matter of first principles. The question is how Alabama's control over the Board's rulemaking and enforcement functions compares to its control over the Board's payment of employees, a function for which the Eleventh Circuit has already held that the Board is entitled to sovereign immunity. See Versiglio, 686 F.3d at 1291-93. HN7[<sup>16</sup>] A review of the Alabama Code reveals that the state has provided scant guidance to the Board on the subject of how it should pay its employees. Indeed, the only direction [<sup>1228</sup>] the Legislature has apparently given is that Board members "shall receive as compensation a sum to be fixed by the board"; that the secretary and secretary-treasurer shall each "receive such compensation as may be fixed by the board"; and that "[t]he board is authorized to expend such funds as shall be necessary . . . to pay salaries." Ala. Code § 34-9-41. Thus, there can be no doubt that the control Alabama maintains over the Board's rulemaking and enforcement functions is at least as [**18] great as (probably greater than) the control it exercises over the Board's payment of its employees. Versiglio therefore controls this case.

HN8[<sup>17</sup>] Because Versiglio held the Board immune from a claim based on its payment of employees, that decision compels the conclusion that the Board is also immune from claims based on its rulemaking and enforcement decisions. The four-factor Eleventh Amendment immunity test does not yield a different result. If anything, the Board has a stronger claim to Eleventh Amendment immunity in this case than it did in Versiglio. Accordingly, all of Plaintiffs' claims against the Board itself are due to be dismissed under Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. See Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 678, 94 S. Ct. 1347, 39 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1974) ("[T]he Eleventh Amendment defense . . . partakes of the nature of a jurisdictional bar . . ."); Silver v. Baggiano, 804 F.2d 1211, 1213 (11th Cir. 1986) (describing Eleventh Amendment immunity as "a jurisdictional issue"). As discussed below, however, some of Plaintiffs' claims may proceed against the Board members in their official capacities.

B. Plaintiffs' Federal Claims Against the Board Members in Their Official Capacities Are Not Barred by Sovereign Immunity

HN9 In addition to barring suits against the state itself, the Eleventh Amendment also bars suits against state officials "when the state is the real, substantial party in interest." [**19] Pennhurst State Sch. & Hosp. v. Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 101, 104 S. Ct. 900, 79 L. Ed. 2d 67 (1984) (internal quotation marks omitted). The state is the real party in interest "if the effect of the judgment would be to restrain the Government from acting." Id. at 101 n.11 (internal quotation marks omitted). That is exactly what this lawsuit seeks to do. Plaintiffs seek an injunction forbidding the enforcement of state law against them and a declaration that the Board members' official conduct in this case is unlawful. (Doc. # 29 at 46). Thus, though Plaintiffs have nominally asserted their claims against the Board members, the real party in interest in this lawsuit is the State of Alabama. The Eleventh Amendment would ordinarily bar such a suit. Pennhurst, 465 U.S. at 100-102. But not here.

HN10 The Supreme Court has recognized an important exception to Eleventh Amendment immunity that applies here. Under the doctrine of Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 28 S. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714 (1908), the Eleventh Amendment does not bar suits seeking prospective relief against state officials to prevent them from violating federal law. Id. at 102. Here, even though the Eleventh Amendment bars Plaintiffs' claims against the Board itself, Plaintiffs' federal claims may proceed against the individual Board members in their official capacities pursuant to the doctrine of Ex parte Young.

HN11 "In determining whether the doctrine of Ex parte Young avoids an Eleventh Amendment bar to suit, a court need only conduct a [**20] straightforward inquiry into whether the complaint alleges an ongoing violation of federal law and seeks relief properly characterized as prospective." [*1229] Verizon Maryland, Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n of Maryland, 535 U.S. 635, 645, 122 S. Ct. 1753, 152 L. Ed. 2d 871 (2002) (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted). Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint (Doc. # 29) readily satisfies that standard. It seeks an injunction restraining the Board members from enforcing a state statute and regulation in contravention of controlling federal law—specifically, various provisions of the U.S. Constitution and the Sherman Antitrust Act. (Doc. # 29 at 46). It is well settled that a plaintiff may properly assert such claims for prospective injunctive and declaratory relief against state officials alleged to be violating federal law. Verizon Maryland, 535 U.S. at 645-46. Moreover, prospective relief is equally available whether the law that state officials are allegedly violating is a federal statute (like the Sherman Act) or the Constitution. See id. (permitting suit for prospective relief against state officials alleged to be violating a federal statute and administrative order); Doe 1-13 By & Through Doe, Sr. 1-13 v. Chiles, 136 F.3d 709, 720-21 (11th Cir. 1998) (affirming prospective injunctive relief forbidding state officials from continuing to violate a federal statute); Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 664, 94 S. Ct. 1347, 39 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1974) (explaining that [**21] Ex parte Young permits suits to enjoin state officials from prospectively violating the Constitution). Plaintiffs' federal claims against the individual Board members fall squarely within the Ex parte Young exception to Eleventh Amendment immunity, and may therefore proceed.

Though Ex parte Young permits Plaintiffs' federal claims to proceed, it does not avoid an Eleventh Amendment bar to Plaintiffs' state-law claims. HN12 In Pennhurst, the Supreme Court held that Ex parte Young was "inapplicable in a suit against state officials on the basis of state law." 465 U.S. at 106. The Court therefore concluded "that a claim that state officials violated state law in carrying out their official responsibilities is a claim against the State that is [barred] by the Eleventh Amendment." Id. at 121. As a result, though official-capacity suits seeking prospective relief are permissible under Ex parte Young for violations of federal law, they are impermissible under the Eleventh Amendment for violations of state law. Id. at 103-06. The Pennhurst Court further held that even supplemental state-law claims against state officials brought alongside federal claims are likewise barred by the Eleventh Amendment. Id. at 117-21.

Here, Pennhurst bars Plaintiffs' state-law claims against the Board members. In Count Nine of the Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs [**22] seek a declaratory judgment that the Board members' enforcement of state law to require nondentists who use an iTero to be directly supervised by an on-site dentist violates Plaintiffs' right to due process under the Alabama Constitution. (Doc. # 29 at ¶ 185). In Count Ten, Plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment that the Board members exceeded their authority under the Alabama Dental Practice Act by requiring nondentists who use an iTero to be directly supervised by an on-site dentist. (Id. at ¶ 192). The only difference between the relief sought here and the relief sought in Pennhurst is that Plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment against the Board members for violations of state law, rather than an injunction. But that slim difference in the relief sought does not take Plaintiffs' state-law claims against the Board members outside of the Pennhurst rule.

HN13 [↑] In Pennhurst, the Court reasoned that the Eleventh Amendment generally bars officer suits where the state is the real party in interest, regardless of the relief sought. 465 U.S. at 102 [*1230] ("[A] suit against state officials that is in fact a suit against a State is barred regardless of whether it seeks damages or injunctive relief."). Absent state consent to suit or [**23] congressional abrogation of immunity, the only route around this general bar to suit is the doctrine of Ex parte Young, which permits federal courts to order prospective relief against state officials for ongoing violations of federal law. Id. But Pennhurst held that Ex parte Young was "inapplicable in a suit against state officials on the basis of state law." Id. Without Ex parte Young, then, any "claim that state officials violated state law in carrying out their official responsibilities is a claim against the State that is [barred] by the Eleventh Amendment." Id. at 121. That includes claims for declaratory relief no less than claims for injunctive relief.

HN14 [↑] Though the relief sought in Pennhurst was an injunction ordering state officials to conform their conduct to state law, Pennhurst's rule applies equally to a suit seeking a declaration that the conduct of state officials violates state law. Pennhurst's rule was based on the idea that "it is difficult to think of a greater intrusion on state sovereignty than when a federal court instructs state officials on how to conform their conduct to state law." Id. at 106. A judgment declaring that the conduct of state officials violates state law does just that. It is no less [**24] an intrusion on state sovereignty than an injunction forbidding the state officials' conduct. Under Pennhurst, the Eleventh Amendment bars declaratory relief based on alleged state-law violations no less than it does injunctive relief.

This conclusion follows inexorably from Pennhurst's reasoning and is confirmed by Eleventh Circuit precedent. The Eleventh Circuit's decision in Silver v. Baggiano, 804 F.2d 1211 \(11th Cir. 1986\) is particularly instructive. Silver was a suit against a state official seeking both declaratory and injunctive relief for violations of state law. Id. at 1213. The Eleventh Circuit held that all of the claims based on state law were barred by the Eleventh Amendment. Id. at 1215. The court did not distinguish between the plaintiff's claims for injunctive relief and his claims for declaratory relief. Id. at 1214. Instead, it explained that either form of relief would run against the state and was therefore barred by the Eleventh Amendment. Id. ("A declaratory judgment or injunction against [the state official] would clearly compel the government of Alabama to act . . . .") (emphasis added).<sup>3</sup>

As in Silver, a judgment declaring that the Board members' actions violate the Alabama Constitution or an Alabama statute would run against the State of Alabama. The "effect of the judgment would [**25] be to restrain the Government from acting," by preventing the enforcement of state laws against SmileDirect. Pennhurst, 465 U.S. at 101 n.11 (internal quotation marks omitted). That is precisely the type of relief the Eleventh Amendment forbids. Id. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' claims against the Board members in their official capacities for violating the Alabama Constitution and for exceeding their authority under the Alabama Dental Practice Act (Counts Nine and Ten) must be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(1\).

Finally, Plaintiffs' individual-capacity claims against the Board members [*1231] are also due to be dismissed. HN15 [↑] "In an official-capacity claim, the relief sought is only nominally against the official and in fact is against the official's office and thus the sovereign itself." Lewis v. Clarke, 137 S. Ct. 1285, 1291, 197 L. Ed. 2d 631 (2017). Individual-capacity claims, "on the other hand, seek to impose individual liability upon a government officer for actions taken under color of state law." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). In an individual-capacity claim, "the real party in interest is the individual, not the sovereign." Id.

Here, Plaintiffs' claims against the Board members are clearly of the official-capacity variety. Plaintiffs do not seek to impose personal liability [**26] upon the Board members by, for example, seeking an award of damages against the individual officers for their allegedly unlawful conduct. Cf. Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau

<sup>3</sup> Silver also held that removal of an action from state to federal court by state officials did not waive the officials' Eleventh Amendment immunity. 804 F.2d at 1214-15. That holding was later abrogated by Lapides v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. Sys. of Georgia, 535 U.S. 613, 122 S. Ct. 1640, 152 L. Ed. 2d 806 (2002). But Silver otherwise remains good law.

of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 389-90, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619 (1971). Nor do they seek to enjoin the Board members with respect to conduct "undertaken by individuals acting independently of their offices." United States v. Alabama, 791 F.2d 1450, 1457 (11th Cir. 1986). Instead, Plaintiffs seek injunctive and declaratory relief that would forbid the Board members (or any of their successors, for that matter) from acting in their official capacities to enforce state law in a manner that requires SmileDirect to keep a licensed dentist on site when its employees use an iTero. (Doc. # 29 at 46). As discussed above, Plaintiffs' requested relief would run against the state itself, not merely against the individual Board members. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' individual-capacity claims against the Board members "fail[ ] to state a claim upon which relief may be granted" and must therefore be dismissed under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). Feit v. Ward, 886 F.2d 848, 858 (7th Cir. 1989).<sup>4</sup>

Plaintiffs argue that their individual-capacity antitrust claims against the Board members are valid and should not be dismissed because the Board members are active market participants with an incentive to pursue their own self-interests under the guise of [\[\*\*27\]](#) implementing state policies. (Doc. # 41 at 25). Plaintiffs contend the Board members can therefore "be held individually accountable" for violating the antitrust laws. (Id.).

That might well be true. In North Carolina State Board of Dental Examiners v. F.T.C., the Supreme Court left open "the question whether agency officials, including board members, may, under some circumstances, enjoy immunity from [antitrust] damages liability." 574 U.S. 494, 135 S. Ct. 1101, 1115, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 \(2015\) (emphasis added). Thus, it is at least possible that the Board members could be held personally liable in damages for using their office to violate the antitrust laws. (To be clear, the court takes no position on that question at this time). But the fact remains that, in this case, Plaintiffs have not sought relief against the Board members in their individual capacities. Instead, all of Plaintiffs' requested relief (an injunction forbidding the Board members from enforcing state law and a judgment declaring [\[\*1232\]](#) the Board members' official conduct unlawful) would run against the state, not against the individual Board members. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' individual-capacity antitrust claims must be dismissed under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). See Feit, 886 F.2d at 858.

To sum up: All of Plaintiffs' claims against [\[\*\*28\]](#) the Board itself are barred by sovereign immunity. Plaintiffs' state-law claims against the Board members in their official capacities are likewise barred by sovereign immunity under Pennhurst. Additionally, because Plaintiffs' requested relief would run against the state, not the individual Board members, all of their individual-capacity claims fail to state a claim and are due to be dismissed. However, Plaintiffs' federal claims for prospective equitable relief against the Board members in their official capacities are not barred by sovereign immunity. The court therefore proceeds to address whether Plaintiffs have stated a claim against the Board members in their official capacities under the various provisions of federal law they claim the Board members are violating.

C. Plaintiffs Have Stated a Claim Against the Board Members Under the Sherman Act

Both Dr. Leeds and SmileDirect assert section 1 Sherman Act claims against the members of the Dental Board. (Doc. # 29 at 1, 29, 32). The Board members respond that these claims should be dismissed because they are entitled to state-action immunity from Sherman Act claims under Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943) and its progeny. For the reasons explained below, the court concludes [\[\*\*29\]](#) a definitive ruling on Parker immunity would be premature at this time. Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims, as pleaded, are sufficient to survive a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss on Parker immunity grounds. Further factual development will be required to determine whether the Board members are entitled to Parker immunity. The Board members may therefore raise the Parker immunity defense at a later stage in this litigation, in a motion for summary judgment, if appropriate.

<sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs concede as much with respect to their federal and state constitutional claims against the Board members. In their motion to dismiss, the Board members asked the court to dismiss all of Plaintiffs' individual-capacity claims. (Doc. # 33 at 29). In response to that motion, Plaintiffs argued only that their individual-capacity antitrust claims should go forward. (Doc. # 41 at 25). They did not dispute that their individual-capacity constitutional claims should be dismissed. (Id.). Thus, Plaintiffs have abandoned their non-antitrust individual-capacity claims by failing to address the Board members' arguments that they should be dismissed. See Chambers v. Cherokee Cty., 743 F. App'x 960, 962 (11th Cir. 2018).

1. Legal Framework

HN16 [↑] The federal antitrust laws provide an important safeguard for our free-market economy. North Carolina State Bd. of Dental Examiners v. F.T.C., 574 U.S. 494, 135 S. Ct. 1101, 1109, 191 L. Ed. 2d 35 (2015) ("N.C. Dental"). Indeed, the antitrust laws "are as important to the preservation of economic freedom and our free-enterprise system as the Bill of Rights is to the protection of our fundamental personal freedoms." United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972). To this end, "[t]he antitrust laws declare a considered and decisive prohibition by the Federal Government of cartels, price fixing, and other combinations or practices that undermine the free market." N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1109.

HN17 [↑] Despite the liberal federal policy favoring competition embodied in the Sherman Act, states have long chosen to regulate certain spheres of their economies in ways that restrict competition, in order to promote other important values. [**30] For example, states sometimes "impose restrictions on occupations, confer exclusive or shared rights to dominate a market, or otherwise limit competition to achieve public objectives." Id. The Supreme Court has long recognized that "[i]f every duly enacted state law or policy were required to conform to the mandates of the Sherman Act, thus promoting competition at the expense of other values a State may deem fundamental, federal antitrust law would impose an impermissible burden on the States' power to regulate." Id. For that reason, the Supreme Court in Parker "interpreted the antitrust laws to confer immunity on [*1233] anticompetitive conduct by the States when acting in their sovereign capacity." N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1110. This doctrine has come to be known as Parker or state-action immunity from the federal antitrust laws.

HN18 [↑] Parker immunity exists to avoid conflicts between the federal policy of robust competition embodied in the Sherman Act and a state's sovereign authority to regulate local activities (even in anticompetitive ways) to promote the health, safety, and morals of its citizens. Id. For that reason, "[a]n entity may not invoke Parker immunity unless the actions in question are an exercise of the State's [**31] sovereign power." Id. (emphasis added). State legislation automatically qualifies as an exercise of the state's sovereign power and is "ipso facto . . . exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 568, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 (1984)). HN19 [↑] But Parker immunity does not always apply when a state delegates regulatory authority to a nonsovereign actor, instead of regulating itself by legislation. In that case, anticompetitive conduct by the nonsovereign actor receives Parker immunity only if the conduct results "from procedures that suffice to make [the anticompetitive conduct] the State's own." Id. at 1111. In other words, the question is whether the nonsovereign actor's anticompetitive conduct "should be deemed state action and thus shielded from the antitrust laws." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted) (emphasis added).

HN20 [↑] For purposes of Parker immunity, "a nonsovereign actor is one whose conduct does not automatically qualify as that of the sovereign State itself." Id. Perhaps counterintuitively,<sup>5</sup> even state agencies may qualify as nonsovereign actors for purposes of Parker immunity, particularly where they are controlled by active participants in the regulated market. Id. at 1111. Indeed, limits [**32] on Parker immunity "are most essential" when the state delegates its regulatory power "to active market participants," because active market participants may be incentivized to regulate in a manner that promotes their own private interests instead of the state's policy goals. Id.

HN21 [↑] Deciding whether a nonsovereign actor is enforcing state policy or furthering private interests can be a difficult task, especially where the nonsovereign actor is controlled by active market participants. Thus, the Supreme Court has held that a nonsovereign actor controlled by active market participants enjoys Parker immunity only if it satisfies both elements of the two-part test set forth in California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980). N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1110-12. Under the Midcal test, anticompetitive conduct by a nonsovereign actor receives Parker immunity only if (1) the state has articulated a clear policy to allow the anticompetitive conduct; and (2) the state provides active supervision of the anticompetitive conduct. Id. at 1112.

Midcal's clear-articulation requirement is met "where the displacement of competition is the inherent, logical, or ordinary result of the exercise of authority delegated by the state legislature." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). And, the active-supervision [**33] requirement demands, among other things, "that state officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

[*1234] The Supreme Court applied these principles in N.C. Dental to conclude that the North Carolina State Board of Dental Examiners was not entitled to Parker immunity for its regulation of teeth whitening services provided by nondentists. Id. at 1116-17. The North Carolina Dental Board was quite similar to Alabama's Dental Board in its powers, duties, and composition. North Carolina's Board was empowered by statute to regulate the practice of dentistry. Id. at 1107. North Carolina's Dental Practice Act required six of the Board's eight members to be licensed dentists engaged in the active practice of dentistry. Id. at 1108. Those members were elected by other North Carolina dentists in elections conducted by the Board. Id. The other two Board members were a practicing dental hygienist (elected by other licensed hygienists) and a nondentist "consumer" (who was appointed by the governor). Id.

North Carolina's Dental Practice Act authorized the Board to promulgate rules and regulations [**34] governing the practice of dentistry in North Carolina, provided they were not inconsistent with the Act and were approved by the North Carolina Rules Review Commission, whose members were appointed by the state legislature. Id. The Board was also required to comply with North Carolina's Administrative Procedure Act, Public Records Act, and open-meetings law. Id.

Dentists in North Carolina began offering teeth whitening services in the 1990s. Id. By 2003, nondentists began competing with dentists in the teeth whitening market, often charging lower prices for their services than the dentists did. Id. Dentists complained to the Board about their new competitors, and the Board opened an investigation into nondentist teeth whitening. Id. The investigation did not result in the promulgation of a formal rule or regulation reviewable by North Carolina's Rules Review Commission, even though the Dental Practice Act did not, "by its terms, specify that teeth whitening is 'the practice of dentistry.'" Id. Instead, the Board began issuing cease-and-desist letters to nondentist teeth whiteners. Id. The letters directed the nondentists to cease their teeth whitening services because teeth whitening [**35] constituted the practice of dentistry, which the nondentists were not authorized to engage in. Id. As a result of the Board's actions, "[n]ondentists ceased offering teeth whitening services in North Carolina." Id.

When the Federal Trade Commission charged the Board with violating federal antitrust law through these actions, the Board asserted the defense of Parker immunity. Id. at 1110. The Supreme Court rejected that argument, however. The Court ruled that the Board, despite its status as a state agency, was a nonsovereign actor controlled by active market participants. Id. at 1110-11. The Court therefore held that the Board must satisfy both the clear-articulation and active-supervision prongs of Midcal to receive Parker immunity for its regulation of nondentist teeth whitening. Id. at 1110, 1112. The Court assumed without deciding that the clear-articulation requirement was satisfied but held that the Board "did not receive active supervision by the State when it interpreted the Act as addressing teeth whitening and when it enforced that policy by issuing cease-and-desist letters to nondentist teeth whiteners." Id. at 1110. Because the Board failed to show active state supervision, it could not invoke Parker immunity. Id.

In holding [**36] that the Board failed to satisfy Midcal's active-supervision requirement, the Court relied heavily on the fact that the statute the Board was purportedly enforcing with its cease-and-desist letters said "nothing about teeth whitening, a [*1235] practice that did not exist when it was passed." Id. at 1116. Additionally, when the Board decided to take action against nondentist teeth whiteners, it "relied upon cease-and-desist letters threatening criminal liability, rather than any of the powers at its disposal that would invoke oversight by a politically accountable official." Id. at 1116. "With no active supervision by the State," the Court concluded that state officials "may well have been unaware that the Board had decided teeth whitening constitutes 'the practice of dentistry' and sought to prohibit those who competed against dentists from participating in the teeth whitening market." Id. In short, because there was "no evidence [ ] of any decision by the State to initiate or concur with the Board's actions against the nondentists," the North Carolina Dental Board failed Midcal's active-supervision requirement.

HN22[↑] In reaching this conclusion, the Court explained that the active-supervision inquiry "is flexible and [**37] context-dependent." Id. The key question "is whether the State's review mechanisms provide realistic assurance that a nonsovereign actor's anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). The "few constant requirements of active supervision" are that the state supervisor: "review the substance of the anticompetitive decision, not merely the procedures followed to produce it"; "have the power to veto or modify particular decisions to ensure they accord with state policy"; and "not itself be an active market participant." Id. at 1116-17 (internal quotation marks omitted). Beyond that, however, "the adequacy of supervision . . . will depend on all the circumstances of a case." Id. at 1117.

2. N.C. Dental Applies to the Alabama Dental Board

HN23[↑] The rule announced in N.C. Dental -- that certain state entities must satisfy Midcal's twopart test to claim Parker immunity -- applies to "nonsovereign actor[s] controlled by active market participants." 135 S. Ct. at 1110. In N.C. Dental, the Supreme Court squarely held that North Carolina's Dental Board was such a nonsovereign actor, despite its status as a state agency. Id. at 1110-11. The powers, duties, and composition [**38] of Alabama's Dental Board are nearly identical to those of the North Carolina Dental Board the Supreme Court considered in N.C. Dental. Both Boards are created by state law and empowered by the state to regulate the practice of dentistry and enforce the state's prohibition of the unauthorized practice of dentistry. Ala. Code §§ 34-9-40, 34-9-43; N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1107. Both Boards are comprised of a controlling number of active participants in the market for dental services, who are in turn selected by other members of the dental profession. Ala. Code § 34-9-40; N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1108. Neither North Carolina's nor Alabama's Dental Practice Act creates a mechanism by which Board members may be removed from office by other state officials. Ala. Code § 34-9-40; N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1108. And both Boards are empowered to promulgate rules and regulations governing the practice of dentistry, provided those mandates are not inconsistent with a state statute. Ala. Code § 34-9-43.2(c); N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1108. HN24[↑] The similarities between the two Boards compel the conclusion that the Alabama Board is also a "nonsovereign actor controlled by active market participants" for purposes of Parker immunity, and that the principles set forth in N.C. Dental therefore apply to it. Id. at 1110.

[*1236] There might appear to be some tension in treating Alabama's Dental Board as a nonsovereign actor for [**39] purposes of Parker immunity while simultaneously holding, as discussed above, that the Board is an arm of the state entitled to sovereign immunity under Versiglio, 686 F.3d at 1291. But that tension is simply a consequence of the fact that different tests govern whether an entity is considered "sovereign" for purposes of Parker immunity and Eleventh Amendment immunity, and of the reality that this court is bound by both the Supreme Court's decision in N.C. Dental and the Eleventh Circuit's decision in Versiglio.

HN25[↑] The Supreme Court has provided little guidance on what entities qualify as "nonsovereign actors" for purposes of Parker immunity. But in N.C. Dental, the Court did cite Hoover, 466 U.S. at 567-68 for the following proposition: "For purposes of Parker, a nonsovereign actor is one whose conduct does not automatically qualify as that of the sovereign State itself." 135 S. Ct. at 1111. The portion of Hoover cited by the Court identified two state entities that were "sovereign" for purposes of Parker immunity and whose conduct therefore automatically qualified as the conduct of the state: the state legislature and the state supreme court when acting legislatively rather than judicially. Hoover, 466 U.S. at 567-68. The Hoover Court expressly left open the question "whether the Governor of a State [**40] stands in the same position as the state legislature and supreme court for purposes of the state-action doctrine." Id. at 568 n.17. Thus, sovereign actors for purposes of Parker immunity appear to be limited to governmental bodies like a state legislature or supreme court (or perhaps the governor) that constitute the apex of a coequal branch of state government. But whatever the limits of that category, as N.C. Dental makes abundantly clear, "[s]tate agencies are not simply by their governmental character sovereign actors for purposes of state-action immunity." 135 S. Ct. at 1111. Accordingly, their actions are not automatically cloaked in Parker immunity.

HN26[↑] The test for determining what state entities are "arms of the state" entitled to sovereign immunity under the Eleventh Amendment is different. As described above, the Eleventh Circuit employs a four-factor test to determine whether a state agency is an arm of the state with respect to a particular function it performs. See Manders, 338 F.3d at 1309. Because of the different tests that apply, it is possible for a state agency to be "sovereign" for purposes of Eleventh Amendment immunity but "nonsovereign" for purposes of Parker immunity. And, that is precisely the position the Alabama Dental Board is in. As explained above, [**41] the Board is an arm of the state entitled to sovereign immunity under the Eleventh Circuit's controlling decision in Versiglio. But, under the equally binding N.C. Dental decision, the Board is a "nonsovereign actor" for purposes of Parker immunity.

What is the effect of Versiglio and N.C. Dental on this case? As explained above, suit against the Board itself is barred by sovereign immunity under Versiglio. None of Plaintiffs' claims, including their antitrust claims, may proceed against the Board itself. However, under Ex parte Young, Plaintiffs' federal claims for prospective relief against the Board members, including specifically their antitrust claims, are not barred by sovereign immunity. Those claims may therefore proceed, if they are not barred by Parker immunity. The court therefore turns to the Parker immunity issue. Because the Board members are active market participants in the dental profession, the court must analyze their assertion of Parker immunity under N.C. Dental.

[*1237] 3. A Rule 12(b)(6) Dismissal on Parker Immunity Grounds Would Be Premature

In light of N.C. Dental, it is clear that the Board members' Rule 12(b)(6) motion<sup>6</sup> to dismiss Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims as barred by Parker immunity is [**42] premature. There are two possible scenarios in which the Board members might be entitled to Parker immunity. But under either scenario, the factual record on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion is insufficient for the court to determine whether the Board members may in fact claim Parker immunity for their challenged conduct in this case. The Board members' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' official-capacity Sherman Act claims must therefore be denied.

First, the Board members may be entitled to Parker immunity if the Alabama Dental Practice Act by its terms specifies that using an iTero without a dentist on site constitutes the unauthorized practice of dentistry. In N.C. Dental, the Supreme Court repeatedly emphasized that, while North Carolina's Dental Practice Act prohibited the unauthorized practice of dentistry, it never mentioned teeth whitening, a practice that did not exist when the Act was passed. 135 S. Ct. at 1108, 1110, 1116. The Act was simply silent on whether teeth whitening constituted the practice of dentistry. Id. at 1110. But North Carolina's Dental Board nonetheless interpreted the Act to apply to teeth whitening and enforced the Act by issuing cease-and-desist letters to nondentist teeth whiteners who competed with dentists. [**43] Id. Because the Board's interpretation and enforcement of the state's broad ban on unauthorized dental practice presented the opportunity for "private self-dealing," the Court required the Board to show its anticompetitive conduct was actively supervised and approved by the state in order to claim Parker immunity. Id. at 1112. In other words, to claim Parker immunity, the Board had to show that its prohibition of nondentist teeth whitening was really the state's prohibition of nondentist teeth whitening. Id. at 1111.

Had North Carolina's Dental Practice Act expressly defined teeth whitening as the practice of dentistry, the Dental Board would plainly have been entitled to Parker immunity in enforcing the state's clear statutory prohibition of nondentist teeth whitening. See id. at 1116. After all, HN28 [↑] state legislation is "ipso facto . . . exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws." Id. at 1110 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Hoover, 466 U.S. at 567 ("We find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature." (internal quotation marks omitted, emphasis added) (quoting Parker, 317 U.S. at 350-51)). If North Carolina's legislature [**44] had expressly defined teeth whitening as the practice of dentistry and directed the state's Dental Board to take action against nondentist teeth whiteners, there would have been no risk of private self-dealing by the Board. Rather, the Board's actions in carrying out the legislature's express directive would have been "an exercise of the State's sovereign power" and <sup>6</sup> Defendants have moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims pursuant to both Rule 12(b)(1) (lack of subject-matter jurisdiction) and Rule 12(b)(6) (failure to state a claim). (Doc. # 32). HN27 [↑] Because Parker immunity is a waivable, nonjurisdictional affirmative defense, Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Med. Ctr., 874 F.2d 755, 756 (11th Cir. 1989) (en banc), the court construes Defendants' request to dismiss Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims as a motion under Rule 12(b)(6) rather than Rule 12(b)(1).

therefore cloaked in Parker immunity. N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1110. As N.C. Dental explained, Midcal's active-supervision requirement [*1238] could have been satisfied by evidence of a "decision by the State to initiate . . . the Board's actions against the nondentists." Id. at 1116. Such a decision -- enshrined in statutory text -- would have shown beyond all dispute that the state had "approve[d]" the Board's actions against the nondentist teeth whiteners, thus cloaking them in Parker immunity. Id. at 1112.<sup>7</sup>

The Alabama Board members argue that, by sending a cease-and-desist letter to SmileDirect, they were merely enforcing an express, specific statutory directive of the Legislature that forbids unsupervised nondentists from using a digital imaging [**45] machine to make dental digital images. (Doc. # 29 at ¶¶ 2, 62-68). HN30↑ The Alabama Dental Practice Act provides that any person who "[u]ses a roentgen, radiograph, or digital imaging machine for the purpose of making dental roentgenograms, radiographs, or digital images" "shall be deemed to be practicing dentistry." Ala. Code § 34-9-6 (emphasis added). The only exception to this rule is if the person makes dental digital images "under the supervision of a licensed dentist or physician." Id., § 34-9-7\(a\). In that case, the Act does not apply. Id.

The Board members contend the iTero device is a "digital imaging machine" and that the images it produces are "digital images" within the meaning of Alabama Code § 34-9-6. They therefore assert the Act permits nondentists to use the device only "under the supervision of a licensed dentist or physician." Id., § 34-9-7\(a\). And they further take the position that the term "supervision" in Alabama Code § 34-9-7\(a\) requires the physical presence of a licensed dentist at facilities where an iTero is used.

The Board members might be entitled to Parker immunity under this analysis, but only if the iTero and the images it produces clearly qualify as a "digital imaging" [*1239] machine" and "digital images" as those terms are used in Alabama Code §§ 34-9-6 and 34-9-7\(a\).<sup>8</sup> To make [**46] this determination, a factual record is necessary. The court cannot determine whether the iTero is a "digital imaging machine" (as that term is used in § 34-9-6) unless it has more information about the iTero. What type of imaging mechanism does the iTero use? How does that mechanism compare to the mechanisms of roentgens and radiographs, the other two means of creating dental images listed in § 34-9-6? What was the meaning of the term "digital imaging machine" when § 34-9-6 was adopted? Did it have a specialized meaning in the field of dentistry? Did the technology used in the iTero even exist <sup>7</sup> N.C. Dental is susceptible of two different readings concerning when state agencies must show active supervision to claim Parker immunity. On the first reading, if a state entity (even one controlled by active market participants) is engaged in anticompetitive conduct mandated by the express statutory instructions of the legislature, that entity need not establish Midcal's active-supervision requirement to claim Parker immunity. See Hoover, 466 U.S. at 569 ("Where the conduct at issue is in fact that of the state legislature . . . , we need not address the issues of 'clear articulation' and 'active supervision.'"). That reading is based on the fact that the statute the Board was enforcing in N.C. Dental said nothing about teeth whitening, a practice that did not exist when the statute was enacted. In other words, the Board in N.C. Dental had to show active supervision because the state had never expressly instructed it to prohibit teeth whitening by nondentists. But if the state had expressly instructed it to prohibit teeth whitening by nondentists, there would have been no need for the Board to show any further active supervision.

On the other hand, N.C. Dental could instead be read broadly to mean that state agencies controlled by active market participants must always show active supervision to claim Parker immunity, no matter how clear and specific the statutory mandate they are enforcing is. But even on that reading, the N.C. Dental decision makes clear that a state agency controlled by active market participants can show active supervision by pointing to a "decision by the State to initiate . . . the [specific anticompetitive conduct at issue]." 135 S. Ct. at 1116. An express statutory mandate directing the active market participants to engage in the specific anticompetitive conduct at issue would surely qualify.

The court need not pick between those two readings of N.C. Dental because, in either case, the result is the same. HN29↑ Whether the active-supervision requirement does not apply when a state agency controlled by active market participants is enforcing an express, specific statutory mandate of the legislature, or whether such a mandate satisfies the active-supervision requirement, the result is the same: the agency receives Parker immunity.

<sup>8</sup> The Board members would also have to show that the term "supervision" in Alabama Code § 34-9-7\(a\) requires a dentist's physical presence at the facility where the digital imaging is performed.

when § 34-9-6 was adopted? These and numerous other factual questions must be answered before the court can determine whether the iTero counts as a "digital imaging machine" under § 34-9-6 and whether the images the iTero produces are "digital images" as that term is used in §§ 34-9-6 and 34-9-7\(a\).

To be sure, in their papers, both Plaintiffs and Defendants have offered their answers to some of these questions. But the answers are either contained in pleadings (Doc. # 29 at ¶¶ 29-30, 32, 64) or are derived from matters outside the pleadings that the court may not consider on a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion (Doc. # 33 at 9-11). See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(d\). Fact discovery will be necessary to determine [**47] the veracity of Plaintiffs' and Defendants' competing claims about the nature of the iTero procedure and whether it is covered by the Alabama Dental Practice Act. The ultimate question for purposes of Parker immunity is whether the Alabama Legislature clearly proscribed the use of an iTero without a dentist physically present when it enacted the Alabama Dental Practice Act. That question cannot be answered on the record accompanying a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss.

Second, even if the Alabama Dental Practice Act does not expressly authorize the Board's challenged conduct in this case, the Board members may still be entitled to Parker immunity if the state actively supervised their decision to interpret and enforce the Act as prohibiting the use of an iTero without a dentist physically present.<sup>9</sup> Unlike the Board in N.C. Dental, which never issued "a formal rule or regulation reviewable by the independent Rules Review Commission," id. at 1108, 1116, Alabama's Dental Board did promulgate a formal regulation forbidding nondentists from performing any intraoral procedures unless under the direct supervision of a dentist. See Ala. Admin. Code 270-X-3-10. Additionally, the Board's regulation received some type of statutorily authorized review and [**48] approval by the Legislative Services Agency, though the parties dispute the nature and extent of that review. See Ala. Code § 41-22-22.1; (Docs. # 29 at ¶ 56; 33 at 6-9). These procedures may "suffice to make [the Board's anticompetitive conduct] the State's own" and therefore immunize the Board from antitrust liability. N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1111. But making that determination will require a factual record that is simply not present on a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss.

[*1240] HN31[] Although Midcal's active-supervision inquiry "is flexible and context-dependent," one of its "few constant requirements" is that the state supervisor must "review the substance of the anticompetitive decision, not merely the procedures followed to produce it." Id. at 1116. Here, Plaintiffs have alleged that "any review pursuant to an Alabama statute of the Board's [challenged] regulation, . . . if it occurred at all, was perfunctory, ministerial, and nonsubstantive." (Doc. # 29 at ¶ 56). That allegation is enough to defeat the Board members' claim to Parker immunity at the motion-to-dismiss stage. HN32[] The court must accept Plaintiffs' plausible factual allegations as true when considering a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678-79. If Plaintiffs' allegation turns out to be true and no state supervisor [**49] in fact reviewed the substance of the Board's anticompetitive policy, the Board members will not be entitled to Parker immunity. Dismissal on Parker immunity grounds would therefore be improper at this time.

The Board members attach to their motion to dismiss certain documents that they claim establish Midcal's active-supervision requirement. (Doc. # 33-1). The parties dispute whether the court may properly consider these extrinsic documents in ruling on the Board members' motion to dismiss. (Docs. # 41 at 12-14; 46 at 2-3). But the court need not resolve that issue because, even if it were to consider the documents, they are insufficient to establish that the Board members are entitled to Parker immunity.

The documentary evidence submitted by the Board members includes certified records relating to the promulgation of the Board regulation that prohibits taking intraoral digital images without a dentist on site. (Doc. # 33-1 at 3-13). It also includes a "memo to file" showing that the Legislative Services Agency ("LSA") conducted an antitrust review of the regulation and found it would not affect competition. (Id. at 14-16). Finally, an affidavit of the director of the LSA's Legal Division authenticates [**50] the documents. (Id. at 2).

<sup>9</sup>Of course, in this scenario, the Board members must also establish Midcal's clear-articulation requirement to receive Parker immunity. N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1110. The court does not address that requirement at this time because the Board members cannot show active supervision on the limited Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) record.

Even assuming the LSA qualifies as a "state supervisor" under N.C. Dental, 135 S. Ct. at 1117 (and, to be clear, the court takes no position on that question at this time), the "memo to file," standing alone, cannot establish that the LSA "review[ed] the substance of the [Board's] anticompetitive decision, not merely the procedures followed to produce it." Id. at 1116. The memo to file spends a mere four sentences discussing the Board's challenged regulation, Alabama Administrative Code 270-X-3-10. Indeed, in its entirety, the memo's discussion of the challenged provision reads as follows:

Rule 270-X-3-10, Duties of Allied Dental Personnel, lists the procedures that may be performed by dental hygienists, dental assistants, and dental laboratory technicians. The amendment adds to the list of procedures the making of digital images. . . . [The Rule] do[es] not significantly lessen competition. [It] do[es] not affect competition at all.

(Doc. # 33-1 at 15-16). These four sentences alone do not establish that the state reviewed and approved the substance of the Board's anticompetitive policy in this case. In fact, because the LSA found the regulation would "not affect competition at all" (Doc. # 33-1 at 16), the regulation apparently never reached the stage of [**51] Alabama's statutory review process at which its substance would have been reviewed.

HN33 [↑] In 2016, shortly after the Supreme Court's 2015 N.C. Dental decision, the Alabama Legislature enacted Alabama Code § 41-22-22.1. See S.B. 80, 2016 Leg., Reg. Sess. (Ala. 2016). The statute requires the LSA's Legal Division to "review each rule certified to it by a state board or commission" [*1241] that regulates a profession, a controlling number of the members of which are active market participants in the profession." Ala. Code § 41-22-22.1(a). The LSA must "determine whether the rule may significantly lessen competition." Id. If it concludes the rule will not decrease competition, no further action is required. Id. But if it finds that the rule "may significantly lessen competition," it must "determine whether the rule was made pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to displace competition" and then "certify those determinations" to a legislative committee. Id., S 41-22-22.1(b). The chair of the committee must then "call a meeting of the committee to review the substance of the rule, determine whether the rule may significantly lessen competition, and if so, whether it was made pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy to displace competition." Id. (emphasis [**52] added). The committee shall then "approve, disapprove, disapprove with a suggested amendment, or allow the agency to withdraw the rule for revision." Id. If the committee fails to act on a rule, "the rule shall not become effective and shall be placed on the agenda of the committee at each subsequent meeting until the committee disposes of the rule." Id.

The memo to file submitted by the Board members suggests that the challenged regulation in this case never received the substantive review by a legislative committee provided for in Alabama Code § 41-22-22.1(b). Instead, the LSA determined that the Board's regulation would "not affect competition at all," and that determination evidently ended the review process. (Doc. # 33-1 at 16). In other words, the LSA did not understand the policy embodied in the Board's regulation to have any anticompetitive effects. The memo to file, standing alone, is therefore insufficient to show that the Board received active state supervision when it interpreted the Dental Practice Act as applying to SmileDirect and enforced that policy by issuing a cease-and-desist letter. For that reason, the Board members have not yet shown they are entitled to Parker immunity. Their motion to [**53] dismiss Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims on that basis is accordingly due to be denied.

D. Plaintiffs Have Stated a Claim Against the Board Members Under the Dormant Commerce Clause

Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, both Dr. Leeds and SmileDirect assert claims under the Dormant Commerce Clause against the members of the Dental Board. (Doc. # 29 at 26-27). They claim the Board members' interpretation and enforcement of Alabama Code § 34-9-6 and Alabama Administrative Code 270-X-3-10 burden out-of-state economic interests without serving any legitimate local purpose. Because Plaintiffs have adequately alleged a Dormant Commerce Clause violation, the Board members' motion to dismiss this claim will be denied.

HN34 [↑] The Commerce Clause grants Congress the power "[t]o regulate Commerce . . . among the several States." U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. Though the Clause only expressly speaks of powers granted to Congress, the Supreme Court has long held that the Clause also has a "dormant" aspect, which imposes "substantive restriction[s] on permissible state regulation of interstate commerce." Dennis v. Higgins, 498 U.S. 439, 447, 111 S. Ct. 865, 112 L. Ed. 2d 969 (1991) (internal quotation marks omitted). The dormant or negative aspect of the Commerce Clause "prohibits economic protectionism—that is, regulatory measures designed to benefit in-state economic interests by burdening out-of-state competitors." New Energy Co. of Indiana v. Limbach, 486 U.S. 269, 273, 108 S. Ct. 1803, 100 L. Ed. 2d 302 (1988).

[*1242] HN35↑ The Eleventh Circuit evaluates Dormant Commerce Clause challenges using a two-tiered [**54] analysis. Bainbridge v. Turner, 311 F.3d 1104, 1108 (11th Cir. 2002). The first tier applies if a state regulation "directly regulates or discriminates against interstate commerce, or has the effect of favoring in-state economic interests." Island Silver & Spice, Inc. v. Islamorada, 542 F.3d 844, 846 (11th Cir. 2008) (internal quotation marks omitted). If that showing is made, the regulation is invalid unless "shown to advance a legitimate local purpose that cannot be adequately served by reasonable nondiscriminatory alternatives." Id. (brackets omitted). The second tier applies if the regulation "has only indirect effects on interstate commerce and regulates evenhandedly." Bainbridge, 311 F.3d at 1109 (internal quotation marks omitted). In that case, a court applies the balancing test of Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 142, 90 S. Ct. 844, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1970), which asks "whether the State's interest is legitimate and whether the burden on interstate commerce clearly exceeds the local benefits." Bainbridge, 311 F.3d at 1109 (internal quotation marks omitted). "[T]he two tiers of analysis are not clearly distinguishable." Id.; see also Amerijet Int'l, Inc. v. Miami-Dade Cty., 627 F. App'x 744, 752 (11th Cir. 2015). Under either tier, "the critical consideration is the overall effect of the [regulation] on both local and interstate activity." Bainbridge, 311 F.3d at 1109 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Plaintiffs argue the allegations of their Amended Complaint are sufficient to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion under either tier of analysis. The court concludes [**55] Plaintiffs have adequately alleged a Dormant Commerce Clause violation under the second tier. It therefore need not address the first tier at this time.

The regulation Plaintiffs challenge requires a licensed dentist to be physically present at facilities where nondentists perform intraoral procedures, including using an iTero to make digital images of teeth. Plaintiffs allege that the regulation burdens interstate commerce: it prevents out-of-state dentists like Dr. Leeds from serving patients across state lines, and it impedes SmileDirect's ability to offer a platform to out-of-state dentists who wish to serve Alabama patients. (Doc. # 29 at ¶¶ 68, 71-72, 79, 83-85, 90-91). According to Plaintiffs, requiring SmileDirect to employ highly paid licensed dentists at its SmileShops would prove prohibitively expensive and would effectively prevent SmileDirect from partnering with out-of-state dentists to serve Alabama patients. (Id.). In other words, Plaintiffs argue, the regulation burdens the practice of dentistry across state lines and protects those in-state dentists who provide clear aligner therapy at their offices from competition by out-of-state dentists who, using SmileDirect's platform, could [**56] provide the same treatment to Alabama patients at a lower cost. (Id.).

Plaintiffs also allege that the regulation serves no legitimate state interest and produces no local benefits. They allege that using an iTero to make digital images of a person's teeth is a simple, safe procedure. (Id. at ¶¶ 86-88). The iTero is the size and shape of a pen and is covered with a disposable sheathe to ensure that no germs are transmitted between patients. (Id. at ¶ 86, 95). SmileDirect staff also wipe the iTero wand with a disinfecting wipe after each use. (Id. at ¶¶ 95-96). The iTero does not use any radiation, but instead uses digital camera technology to create a digital model of a person's teeth and gums. (Id. at ¶¶ 92-94). Additionally, SmileDirect staff wear non-allergenic nitrile gloves when using the iTero. (Id. at ¶ 97). SmileDirect has performed hundreds of thousands of digital scans nationwide, and hundreds of scans in Alabama alone, [*1243] without receiving a single complaint of physical injury, infection, or other adverse patient outcome associated with the use of the iTero. (Id. at ¶ 99). Based on these allegations, Plaintiffs claim that the use of an iTero presents no risk to consumers that [**57] would be eliminated by a dentist's physical presence at SmileDirect's facilities. (Id. at ¶ 980). Plaintiffs therefore argue that the state has no legitimate interest in imposing the regulation besides economic protectionism and that the burdens on interstate commerce imposed by the regulation clearly exceed any local benefits it affords.

The Board responds that its regulation provides important health and safety benefits to Alabama consumers and that Plaintiffs therefore have failed to state a claim under the Dormant Commerce Clause. (Doc. # 33 at 25-26). The Board argues that requiring the physical presence of a licensed dentist when the iTero is used provides the following local benefits: (1) dentists can ensure that sterilization procedures are followed to prevent the spread of illness; (2) dentists can use their skill and training in the event of a sudden medical emergency, such as a patient experiencing an allergic reaction from contact with latex gloves, or the iTero inadvertently dislodging a patient's crown; (3) dentists can diagnose preexisting conditions that contraindicate the use of clear aligner therapy in the first place, such as gum disease; and (4) dentists can verify in real time [**58] that a patient's oral cavity is being accurately imaged by the iTero device. (Id. at 24).

HN36[↑] In Dormant Commerce Clause challenges, "bona fide safety regulations" bear "a strong presumption of validity." Kassel v. Consol. Freightways Corp. of Delaware, 450 U.S. 662, 670, 101 S. Ct. 1309, 67 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1981). Under the tier-two Pike balancing test, "[i]f safety justifications are not illusory, [federal courts] will not second-guess legislative judgment about their importance in comparison with related burdens on interstate commerce." Locke v. Shore, 634 F.3d 1185, 1194 (11th Cir. 2011) (quoting Kassel, 450 U.S. at 670). But a state's mere "incantation of a purpose to promote the public health or safety does not insulate a state law from Commerce Clause attack." Kassel, 450 U.S. at 670. Even regulations designed to promote public health and safety "may further the purpose so marginally, and interfere with commerce so substantially, as to be invalid under the Commerce Clause." Id. Courts must therefore weigh the state's asserted safety purpose against the degree of interference with interstate commerce, giving "sensitive consideration" to the "weight and nature of the state regulatory concern in light of the extent of the burden imposed" on interstate commerce. Id. at 670-71 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The court cannot conduct the "sensitive" balancing test mandated by the Supreme Court's Dormant Commerce Clause precedents without a factual record. Id. at 670. The state's [**59] asserted safety justifications for requiring the physical presence of a dentist at SmileDirect's facilities may well not be illusory, but Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged that they are, and that the real reason for the regulation is economic protectionism. Discovery will be necessary to determine whether the Board's regulation serves its asserted safety purposes and how severely the regulation burdens interstate commerce. Only then will the court be able to determine whether the Board's regulation passes muster under the Dormant Commerce Clause. HN37[↑] A state's mere incantation of a rational basis for a regulation does not preclude Dormant Commerce Clause scrutiny. Id. Accordingly, dismissal of Plaintiffs' [*1244] Dormant Commerce Clause claims on Rule 12(b)(6) review would be improper.

E. Plaintiffs Have Failed to State an Equal Protection or Substantive Due Process Claim

Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, both Dr. Leeds and SmileDirect assert claims under the Fourteenth Amendment's Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses. (Doc. # 29 at 36-37, 39-40). Dr. Leeds claims the Board's regulation unlawfully distinguishes between Alabama-licensed dentists practicing in Alabama and Alabama-licensed dentists practicing out of state, without a rational basis for such a distinction. (Id. at ¶ 153). Dr. Leeds also argues that [**60] he has a substantive due process right to practice his profession across state lines and that the Board's regulation burdens this right without any rational basis for doing so. (Id. at ¶¶ 167-69). SmileDirect claims the Board's regulation unlawfully distinguishes between persons who use an iTero without a dentist physically present and persons who use an iTero with a dentist physically present, without a rational basis for that distinction. (Id. at ¶¶ 160-62). SmileDirect also argues that it has a substantive due process right to offer a teledentistry platform to dentists who wish to remotely provide clear aligner therapy and that the Board's regulation burdens this right without any rational basis for doing so. (Id. at ¶¶ 174-76). For the reasons explained below, Plaintiffs' equal protection and substantive due process claims are due to be dismissed.

The parties agree (correctly) that rational basis review applies to Plaintiffs' equal protection and substantive due process claims. HN38[↑] Under equal protection doctrine, rational basis review applies unless the classification at issue "infringes fundamental rights or concerns a suspect class." United States v. Castillo, 899 F.3d 1208, 1213 (11th Cir. 2018) (internal quotation marks omitted). Similarly, [**61] rational basis review applies to substantive due process challenges to state professional regulations "because the right to practice a particular profession is not a fundamental one." Locke, 634 F.3d at 1195. As neither fundamental rights nor suspect classifications are at issue in this case, rational basis review applies.

Under rational basis review, state policies enjoy "a strong presumption of validity." Castillo, 899 F.3d at 1213 (internal quotation marks omitted). Courts ask only whether "the enacting government body could have been purs[u]ing a legitimate government purpose" in enacting the measure. Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). If a legitimate goal for the law conceivably exists, courts "ask only whether a rational basis exists for the enacting governmental body to believe that the legislation would further the hypothesized purpose." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). "This inquiry occurs entirely in the abstract because the actual motivations of the enacting governmental body are entirely irrelevant, as is whether the legitimate basis was actually considered by the legislative body." Id. (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted). "[T]he government has no obligation to produce evidence to sustain the rationality" [**62] of the challenged measure, "and the complaining party has the burden to negate every conceivable basis which might support it." Id. (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted). "Unsurprisingly, almost every statute subject to the very deferential rational basis standard is found to be constitutional." Id. (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted).

Plaintiffs cannot possibly mount a successful challenge to the Board's regulation under the deferential rational basis standard, and their equal protection and substantive [*1245] due process claims therefore necessarily fail. Defendants and their amicus have identified several legitimate goals for requiring the physical presence of a licensed dentist at facilities where an iTero is used. Using an iTero to make digital images of teeth is an intraoral procedure that involves inserting the device into patients' mouths. Hypothetical legitimate goals for requiring a dentist's physical presence at facilities where an iTero is used include: (1) ensuring proper sterilization procedures are followed to prevent the spread of illness; (2) ensuring that a skilled, trained dentist is available in the event of a sudden medical emergency caused by the [**63] iTero inadvertently dislodging a patient's crown; (3) ensuring that a licensed dentist has the opportunity to diagnose preexisting conditions that contraindicate the use of clear aligner therapy in the first place, such as gum disease; and (4) ensuring that a dentist can verify in real time that the iTero is accurately capturing a patient's oral cavity, to avoid having the procedure repeated and to prevent patients from receiving clear aligners that were fabricated based on inaccurate images. (Docs. # 33 at 24; 47-1 at 21).

All of these purposes are legitimate state interests that could justify the Board's regulation. Moreover, a rational basis undoubtedly exists for believing that the regulation would further those hypothesized purposes. Rational arguments exist that requiring a licensed dentist to be physically present at facilities where an iTero is used would advance each of the interests identified above. And importantly, that is all that is required under rational basis review. It does not matter if the challenged law is based only on "rational speculation unsupported by evidence or empirical data" or even if the law "seems unwise or if the rationale for it seems tenuous." Locke, 634 F.3d at 1196 (internal [**64] quotation marks and ellipses omitted). The challenged regulation in this case readily meets the low bar of rational basis review.

Because the rational basis inquiry occurs entirely in the abstract, no evidentiary record is necessary for the court to assess this challenge. And, no evidence that Plaintiffs might uncover through discovery could change the court's analysis above. Plaintiffs have simply failed to plausibly allege an equal protection or substantive due process claim, and the Board members' Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss those claims will therefore be granted.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons explained above, Defendants' motion to dismiss (Doc. # 32) is due to be granted in part and denied in part. Plaintiffs' Sherman Act and Dormant Commerce Clause claims against the Board members in their official capacities may proceed. But all claims against the Board itself are barred by Eleventh Amendment sovereign immunity. Plaintiffs' state constitutional and statutory claims against the Board members in their official capacities are likewise barred by Eleventh Amendment sovereign immunity under Pennhurst. And though Plaintiffs' federal claims for prospective relief against the Board members are not barred by sovereign immunity, their equal protection [**65] and substantive due process claims fail to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Finally, all of Plaintiffs' individual-capacity claims fail to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. A separate order will be entered.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim will have facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. This standard demands more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Plausibility depends on a host of considerations: the full factual picture presented by the complaint, the particular cause of action and its elements, and the existence of alternative explanations so obvious that they render plaintiff's inferences unreasonable.

HN2 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering a motion to dismiss, a court must accept as true all well-pleaded facts alleged in the complaint and must draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. A complaint need not make detailed factual allegations, but it must contain more than mere labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action. Finally, though all allegations contained in the complaint are assumed to be true, this tenet is inapplicable to legal conclusions.

HN3 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Procedural Matters

Antitrust claims in particular must be reviewed carefully at the pleading stage because false condemnation of competitive conduct threatens to chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect. However, there are no heightened pleading requirements for antitrust cases, and dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.

HN4 [down arrow] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Section 2 of the federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, makes it unlawful for any person to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. To state a § 2 claim of monopolization, a plaintiff must allege (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. To state a claim for attempted monopolization in violation of § 2, a plaintiff must allege (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct; with (2) a specific intent to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. To successfully plead a claim of conspiracy to monopolize in violation of § 2, a plaintiff must allege (1) concerted action; (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy; and (3) specific intent to monopolize.

HN5 [down arrow] Standing, Requirements

Standing is a threshold, pleading-stage inquiry, and a complaint that fails to allege standing must be dismissed. An antitrust plaintiff must establish constitutional standing under U.S. Const. art. III as well as antitrust standing. To plead antitrust standing, a plaintiff must allege more than just an injury causally linked to unlawful conduct. Several factors have been identified that courts should consider in determining whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing: (1) the causal connection between the violation and the harm; (2) the presence of an improper motive; (3) the type of injury and whether it was one Congress sought to address; (4) the directness of the injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex damage apportionment.

HN6 [down] Standing, Requirements

The Second Circuit has applied the factors for determining antitrust standing using a two-pronged analysis. First, a plaintiff must allege that it suffered antitrust injury. Second, the plaintiff must demonstrate that it meets the efficient enforcer factors that make it a proper antitrust plaintiff.

HN7 [down] Standing, Requirements

To establish antitrust injury, a plaintiff must allege facts showing that it suffered injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. Courts in the Second Circuit employ a three-step analysis to determine whether a plaintiff has plausibly alleged antitrust injury. First, the plaintiff must identify the practice complained of and the reasons the practice is or might be anticompetitive. Second, the court must identify the actual injury alleged by the plaintiff. Third, the court must compare the anticompetitive effect of the practice at issue to the actual injury alleged by the plaintiff.

HN8 Standing, Requirements

It is not enough for a plaintiff to allege that it has suffered antitrust injury. It must also establish that it is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. The four efficient enforcer factors require a court to consider:(1) the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury; (2) the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement; (3) the speculative nature of the alleged injury; and (4) the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims so as to avoid duplicative recoveries.

HN9 Remedies, Injunctions

Plaintiffs must demonstrate antitrust standing whether they seek monetary or injunctive relief. The extent to which the efficient enforcer factors apply when plaintiffs sue for injunctive relief depends on the circumstances of a case. Because one injunction is as effective as 100, and, concomitantly, 100 injunctions are no more effective than one, some of these factors are not relevant in suits for injunctive relief. Although the efficient enforcer factors related to damages may not be directly relevant to an action for injunctive relief, the principles underlying those factors still inform the analysis.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Personal Stake

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN10 Remedies, Injunctions

In regard to the efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws factors in an action for injunctive relief, issues with complex and speculative damages concern the fact and nature of harm (that is, damage) as much as a calculation of dollars and cents. Is determining the fact of damage complex? Does remedying plaintiff's injury through injunctive relief present complex issues? Similarly, to assess the potential for duplicative recovery, a court must reasonably ask not only whether there is another plaintiff who will recover a quantum that would account for monetary damage, but also whether the relief one plaintiff seeks more generally (such as injunctive relief), is being adequately pursued by another, better situated-party. Thus, the factors are reasonably applicable to actions in which only injunctive relief is sought. Finally, in all cases a court is cautioned to be mindful the manageability of litigation. That is, allowing actions to proceed in which plaintiffs seek overlapping relief and in which their presence provides no additional benefit may well add to manageability issues.

The use of pass-on theories to establish standing in treble damages actions is admonished, in part due to the concern that the massive evidence and complicated theories involved in tracing the effect of an overcharge through the distribution chain would impose burdens on the effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. That concern is no less present in the context of an action for an injunction, as the question of whether a party several levels down in the distribution chain suffered an injury at all may be as complicated and indeed intertwined with quantifying the damages associated with the injury.

Under the first prong of a claim under § 2 of the federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, to make out an antitrust claim, a plaintiff must allege a relevant product market in which the anti-competitive effects of the challenged activity can be assessed. Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition in a given market. It can be pleaded directly through allegations of control over prices or the exclusion of competition, or it may be inferred from a defendant's large share of the relevant market. A plaintiff pleading monopolization, or attempted monopolization, generally must define the relevant market, because without a definition of that market there is no way to measure the defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition. It is important to recognize that, because market definition is a deeply fact-intensive inquiry, courts hesitate to grant motions to dismiss for failure to plead a relevant product market.

HN20 [] Sherman Act, Claims

A monopolist, no less than any other competitor, is permitted and indeed encouraged to compete aggressively on the merits, and any success it may achieve solely through the process of invention and innovation is necessarily tolerated by the antitrust laws. It follows then that, as a general rule, courts are properly very skeptical about claims that competition has been harmed by a dominant firm's product design changes. However, changes in product design are not immune from antitrust scrutiny and in certain cases may constitute an unlawful means of maintaining a monopoly under § 2 of the federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. It is not the product introduction itself, but some associated conduct, that supplies the violation. Under the case law, when a monopolist combines product withdrawal with some other conduct, the overall effect of which is to coerce consumers rather than persuade them on the merits, and to impede competition, its actions are anticompetitive under the Sherman Act.

Patent misuse relates primarily to a patentee's actions that affect competition in unpatented goods or that otherwise extend the economic effect beyond the scope of the patent grant. Misuse is closely intertwined with antitrust law, and most findings of misuse are conditioned on conduct that would also violate the antitrust laws. The key inquiry under this fact-intensive doctrine is whether, by imposing an express condition on the post-sale use of a patented product, the patentee has impermissibly broadened the physical or temporal scope of the patent grant with anticompetitive effect. A common example of such impermissible broadening is the use of a patent which enjoys market power in the relevant market to restrain competition in an unpatented product.

profits even through the period that the exclusionary practices were occurring. Under § 2 of the Sherman Act, it is not necessary that all competition be removed from the market. The test is not total foreclosure, but whether the challenged practices bar a substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit. Suppose an established manufacturer has long held a dominant position but is starting to lose market share to an aggressive young rival. A set of strategically planned exclusive-dealing contracts may slow the rival's expansion by requiring it to develop alternative outlets for its product, or rely at least temporarily on inferior or more expensive outlets. Consumer injury results from the delay that the dominant firm imposes on the smaller rival's growth.

A plaintiff asserting a monopolization claim based on misleading advertising must overcome a presumption that the effect on competition of such a practice was de minimis. However, courts recognize that false and misleading statements may provide a basis for antitrust claims. The Second Circuit has adopted several factors for a court to consider in determining whether a plaintiff has overcome the presumption of de minimis effect. These include whether the representations were (1) clearly false; (2) clearly material; (3) clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance; (4) made to buyers without knowledge of the subject matter; (5) continued for prolonged periods; and (6) not readily susceptible of neutralization or other offset by rivals. At the motion to dismiss stage, an allegation that a representation was false and misleading in certain respects is sufficient to go forward with the discovery process to substantiate a claim that the representation was clearly false, clearly material, and clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance.

The federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2, prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. A plaintiff claiming a § 1 violation under the Act must first establish a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities. If a § 1 plaintiff establishes the existence of an illegal contract or combination, it must then proceed to demonstrate that the agreement constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade either per se or under the rule of reason. In addition, a plaintiff must independently show antitrust injury, to ensure that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN35 [blue icon] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Conduct considered illegal per se is invoked only in a limited class of cases, wherein a defendant's actions are so plainly harmful to competition and so obviously lacking in any redeeming pro-competitive values that they are conclusively presumed illegal without further examination. However, most antitrust claims are analyzed under a rule of reason, according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed, and the restraint's history, nature, and effect.

Because unlawful conspiracies tend to form in secret, such proof will rarely consist of explicit agreements. Rather, conspiracies nearly always must be proven through inferences that may fairly be drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators. Therefore, to prove an antitrust conspiracy, an antitrust plaintiff should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the defendant and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

At the pleading stage, a complaint claiming conspiracy must contain enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. This standard does not impose a probability requirement; a claim may survive a motion to dismiss even if a judge believes the chances of recovery to be very remote or unlikely. It also does not require a plaintiff to show that the allegations suggesting agreement are more likely than not true or that they rule out the possibility of independent action. A court ruling on a motion to dismiss need not choose among plausible interpretations of the evidence. A complaint must contain enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement.

Antitrust law distinguishes vertical and horizontal price restraints. Restraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been denominated as horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints. Courts have long recognized the existence of hub-and-spoke conspiracies in which an entity at one level of the market structure, the hub, coordinates an agreement among competitors at a different level, the spokes. These arrangements consist of both vertical agreements between the hub and each spoke and a horizontal agreement among the spokes to adhere to the hub's terms, often because the spokes would not have gone along with the vertical agreements except on the understanding that the other spokes were agreeing to the same thing.

Nowhere in the Vermont Consumer Fraud Act is there any requirement that the definition of who may sue under the Act must be consistent with the definition of who may sue under federal antitrust law. Rather, the Vermont Legislature clearly has intended the Act to have as broad a reach as possible to best protect consumers against unfair trade practices. This intent underlies a private remedy section that allows suits by any consumer with no suggestion of a distinction between direct and indirect purchasers.

There is no need to make the direct-indirect distinction under the Wisconsin antitrust statute. Wis. Stat. § 133.18\(1\) explicitly allows any person injured directly or indirectly to sue upon the statute. Similar language is not found in the federal law. This, coupled with the Wisconsin Legislature's instruction that courts give the most liberal construction to achieve the aim of competition, compels the conclusion that an ultimate consumer who pays a higher price for goods and services indirectly due to a secret rebate comes within the ambit of the statute.

[*208] OPINION & ORDER

VERNON S. BRODERICK, United States District Judge:

Before me are four motions to dismiss filed by Defendant Keurig Green Mountain, Inc. ("Keurig" or "Defendant"),<sup>1</sup> formerly known as Green Mountain Coffee Roasters, Inc. and as successor to Keurig, Incorporated, in this multi-district litigation. This Opinion & Order addresses all pending motions, which seek dismissal of four separate amended complaints: (1) the First Amended and Supplemental Complaint of Plaintiff JBR, Inc. (d/b/a Rogers Family <sup>1</sup> Keurig, Inc. became a wholly-owned subsidiary of Defendant Keurig Green Mountain, Inc. in 2006, which merged into Green Mountain Coffee Roasters, Inc. on December 31, 2013. (TreeHouse AC 1 n.1.) I will refer to Defendant as Keurig throughout this Opinion & Order whether referring to Defendant, Green Mountain Coffee Roasters, or Keurig, Inc. unless otherwise noted.

Company) ("Rogers"), a privately held roaster, packager, and seller of coffee products, which alleges that Keurig has engaged in anticompetitive practices that had the effect of excluding Rogers from the market for cups or pods used in Keurig's single-server brewer machines, (No. 14-CV-4242, Doc. 83 (the "Rogers Amended Complaint" or "Rogers AC")); (2) the Amended and Supplemental Complaint of Plaintiff TreeHouse Foods, Inc., a food manufacturer [**3] operating in the United States, as well as its wholly-owned subsidiaries Plaintiff Bay Valley Foods, LLC ("Bay Valley") and Plaintiff Sturm Foods, [*209] Inc. ("Sturm") (collectively, "TreeHouse"), which claims that Keurig's allegedly anticompetitive practices excluded TreeHouse from the same market, (No. 14-CV-905, Doc. 86; (the "TreeHouse Amended Complaint" or "TreeHouse AC")); (3) the Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint of direct purchaser Plaintiffs Kenneth B. Burkley, Roger Davidson, Judy Hoyer, Benjamin Krajcir, James G. Long, Linda Major, Sally Rizzo, Henry A. Rocker, David Rosenthal, and Todd W. Springer (collectively, the "DPP Named Plaintiffs"), individually and on behalf of a class of direct purchaser plaintiffs, (collectively, the "DPPs"), which claims that Keurig's allegedly anticompetitive practices caused the DPPs to be overcharged for their purchases of cups or pods used in Keurig's single-server brewer machines, (Doc. 237 (the "DPP Amended Complaint" or "DPP AC")); and (4) the Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint of indirect purchaser Plaintiffs Yelda Mesbah Bartlett, Lavinia Simona Biasell, Linda Bouchard, Bouchard & Sons Garage, Inc., Jessica Searles [**4] Cristani, Kathryn Pauline D'Agostino, Jonna Dugan, Michael J. For the reasons stated herein, Keurig's motions are granted in part and denied in part.

I. Background<sup>4</sup>

A. Keurig's Products and the Relevant Markets

Keurig manufactures and sells Single Serve Brewers<sup>5</sup> and Portion Packs<sup>6</sup> in, [*211] among other places, the United States. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 9, 82; TreeHouse AC ¶ 3; DPP AC ¶¶ 1, 7; IPP SAC ¶ 7.) Keurig introduced the K-Cup Brewer,<sup>7</sup> the first commercially successful Single Serve Brewer, to the United States market in or around 1998. (Rogers AC ¶ 19; see also IPP SAC ¶ 110.) While Portion Packs come in many different forms, to be usable with a particular Single Serve Brewer, a Portion Pack must be compatible with that Single Serve Brewer. (DPP AC ¶ 8.)

<sup>3</sup> Although Keurig moves to dismiss the amended complaints in their entirety, its briefing does not address every cause of action specifically. In this Opinion & Order, I address only those causes of action that have been briefed by the parties. Arguments concerning causes of action not addressed in Keurig's briefing are considered waived, and those claims survive.

<sup>4</sup> Unless otherwise noted, the facts set forth herein are drawn from the allegations of the various amended complaints. I assume those allegations to be true for purposes of ruling on these motions. See Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 508 n.1, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 \(2002\). My references to these allegations should not be construed as a finding as to their veracity, and I make no such findings. In addition, this section is not an exhaustive review of the factual allegations made by the parties; rather, it merely provides a summary of the facts relevant to this case in general. Therefore, to the extent necessary, additional facts are elaborated upon in the legal discussion below.

<sup>5</sup> For ease of reference, this footnote and the five that follow establish unifying definitions for certain types of products and/or technologies that are referred to by varying terms across the four amended complaints. "Single Serve Brewers" refers to what Plaintiffs have referred to as "Single Serve Brewers," (Rogers AC ¶ 9 ("pressurized hot water brewing equipment that is capable of brewing at least a single serving of coffee or other hot beverages")), "Single-Serve Brewers," (TreeHouse AC ¶ 3 ("pressurized hot water brewing equipment that can be used to brew one or more servings at a time of coffee, tea, cider, hot cocoa, or other hot beverages or food products, such as soups and oatmeal, from a portion pack that is inserted into the brewer")); DPP AC ¶ 7 ("electronic low-pressure brewer which runs hot water through a disposable, single-use portion pack containing coffee and to a far lesser extent, other hot beverage components (like tea or hot chocolate) . . . to make beverages in small quantities (i.e., one or two-serving cups"))), and "Portion Pack Brewers," (IPP SAC ¶ 5 ("machines designed to be capable of brewing a variety of hot beverages, such as coffee, tea, and hot chocolate, in predefined portions from sealed portion packs"))).

<sup>6</sup> "Portion Packs" refers to what Plaintiffs have referred to as "Portion Packs." (Rogers AC ¶ 9 ("disposable cartridges, capsules, pods, or packs containing pre-measured beverage portions that are used in Single Serve Brewers to prepare a wide variety of beverages and food products"); TreeHouse AC ¶ 3 ("disposable cartridges, capsules, pods, or packs containing prepared beverage or food product portions that are used in Single-Serve Brewers to make a wide variety of beverages and food products")); DPP AC ¶ 7 ("disposable, single-use portion pack containing coffee and to a far lesser extent, other hot beverage components (like tea or hot chocolate").) Although the IPPs do not use it as a defined term, they refer to "portion packs" as "cartridges, disks, or cups" that "hold[] coffee grounds and other material for brewing hot beverages" in a Single Serve Brewer. (IPP SAC ¶¶ 5-6.)

<sup>7</sup> "K-Cup Brewer" refers to what Plaintiffs have referred to as "K-Cup Brewers," (Rogers AC ¶ 9 ("Single Serve Brewers manufactured or licensed by Keurig for use with K-Cups")); TreeHouse AC ¶ 3 (same); DPP AC ¶ 9 ("Keurig's most popular Single-Serve Brewer")), and "Keurig Portion Pack Brewers," (IPP SAC ¶ 7).

The same year it introduced the K-Cup Brewer, Keurig introduced its branded Portion Packs, or K-Cups,<sup>8</sup> which are compatible with and used in K-Cup Brewers. (See TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 3, 110.) Today, K-Cups also include Portion Packs licensed by Keurig that are compatible with K-Cup Brewers. (Rogers AC ¶ 31; TreeHouse AC ¶ 4; DPP AC ¶ 9; IPP SAC ¶ 9.)

K-Cups are not the only Portion Packs that are compatible [**8] with K-Cup Brewers. Keurig's competitors, including Rogers and TreeHouse, manufacture, distribute, and sell their own Competitor Cups,<sup>9</sup> which are Portion Packs that are compatible with K-Cup Brewers. (Rogers AC ¶ 31; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 105-06; DPP AC ¶ 9; IPP SAC ¶¶ 8-11.) Compatible Cups<sup>10</sup>—Portion [*212] Packs that are compatible with K-Cup Brewers—thus include (i) K-Cups, and (ii) Competitor Cups. (Rogers AC ¶ 31; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 105-06; DPP AC ¶ 9; IPP SAC ¶¶ 8-11.)

Since Keurig's initial introduction, Keurig has designed, manufactured, and sold a variety of different K-Cup Brewers marketed either for use in the individual consumer's home or for use outside the home at locations such as office buildings, hotels, and gas stations. (Rogers AC ¶ 19.) K-Cup Brewers are compatible only with Compatible Cups, and Portion Packs designed to work in other Single Serve Brewers are not compatible with K-Cup Brewers. (IPP SAC ¶ 93.) Keurig has dominated the markets for the design, manufacture, and sale of Single Serve Brewers, Portion Packs, and Compatible Cups. Specifically, in the United States, Keurig controls at least 89% of the market for Single Serve Brewers (the "Single Serve Brewer Market"), 73% of [**9] the market for Portion Packs (the "Portion Pack Market"), and 95% of the market for Compatible Cups (the "Compatible Cup Market"). (Rogers AC ¶¶ 27, 46, 59; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 6, 83, 128, 151; DPP AC ¶¶ 9, 10; IPP SAC ¶¶ 69, 87.)

B. Growing Competition Against Keurig

Until 2012, Keurig had patents covering the filter technology used in its K-Cups ("K-Cup Filter Patents"). (TreeHouse AC ¶ 4; DPP AC ¶¶ 4, 15; IPP SAC ¶ 125.) Virtually all Compatible Cups on the market were K-Cups until 2010. (Rogers AC ¶ 34.) In 2010, TreeHouse decided to undertake a substantial investment in order to enter the Compatible Cup market, (TreeHouse AC ¶ 210), but because the K-Cup Filter Patents covering the use of filters in Portion Packs had not yet expired, TreeHouse decided to manufacture and sell Competitor Cups that did not contain filters. (Id. ¶ 214.) In August 2010, TreeHouse subsidiary Sturm introduced the first Compatible Cups for use in K-Cup Brewers that were neither sold by Keurig nor under a Keurig license. (Id. ¶ 215; Rogers AC ¶ 35; DPP AC ¶¶ 126-27; IPP SAC ¶ 128.)

In October 2011, Rogers introduced to the market its first Compatible Cups for use in K-Cup Brewers, in its proprietary OneCup format [**10] under its "San Francisco Bay" and "Organic Coffee Company" brands. (Rogers AC ¶ 36.) Rogers' initial version of OneCup reduced the environmental footprint and contained 30% to 35% less packaging than other Compatible Portion Packs. (Id.) In October 2013, Rogers introduced a unique 97% biodegradable Compatible Cup. (Id.) Rogers sells or has sold its packs through retailers such as Costco and <sup>8</sup> "K-Cups" refers to what Plaintiffs have referred to as "K-Cups," (Rogers AC ¶ 31 ("single-serve Portion Packs sold by Keurig under its brand name as well as those sold under its licensees' brand names"); TreeHouse AC ¶ 4 ("Compatible Cups that are made by, or under a license from, [Keurig]")); DPP AC ¶ 9 ("Portion Packs sold by Keurig under its brand name as well as those sold under its licensees' brand names")), and "Keurig K-Cups," (IPP SAC ¶ 9 ("Keurig Compatible Cups that are made or licensed by Keurig"))).

<sup>9</sup> "Competitor Cups" refers to what Plaintiffs have referred to as "Competing Portion Packs," (Rogers AC ¶ 31 ("Portion Packs [compatible with K-Cup Brewers that are] manufactured, distributed and sold by Keurig's competitors"), "Competitive Cups," (TreeHouse AC ¶ 4 ("K-Cup-format Portion Packs made by [Keurig's] competitors")); IPP SAC ¶ 12 ("Portion packs made, distributed, or sold by Cup Competitors for use in Keurig Portion Pack Brewers")), and "Competitor Cups," (DPP AC ¶ 9 ("Portion Packs [that are compatible with K-Cup Brewers that are] manufactured, distributed and sold by Keurig Competitors"))).

<sup>10</sup> "Compatible Cups" refers to what Plaintiffs have referred to as "Compatible Portion Packs," (Rogers AC ¶ 9 ("disposable pods or cups that are compatible with [K-Cup Brewers]")), "Compatible Cups," (TreeHouse AC ¶ 4 ("disposable pods or cups that are compatible with [K-Cup Brewers]")); DPP AC ¶ 9 ("Portion Packs that are compatible with the K-Cup Brewer")), and "Keurig Compatible Cups," (IPP SAC ¶ 8 ("The only type of portion packs that will work in the [K-Cup Brewer]")).

Amazon. (Id. ¶¶ 70, 289.) Sales of its OneCup Portion Pack account for more than 40% of Rogers' business. (Id. ¶ 277.)

When the K-Cup Filter Patents expired in 2012, a number of companies launched, or announced plans to launch, Portion Packs compatible with K-Cup Brewers. (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 15, 216-18.) TreeHouse launched its first filtered Competitor Cups in the Fall of 2012, which were sold at a lower price than Keurig's filtered K-Cups. (Id. ¶ 219.) Between September 2012 and December 2013, TreeHouse subsidiary Bay Valley entered into supply arrangements with dozens of retailers for filtered Competitor Cups. (Id. ¶ 220.)

C. Keurig's Anti-Competitive Conduct

Threatened by this competitive pressure, Keurig took various steps to regain [*213] its "complete control" of the market for Competitor Cups, including [**11] (i) filing baseless lawsuits against Rogers and TreeHouse, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 158-75; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 226-40; DPP AC ¶¶ 125-38; IPP SAC ¶¶ 124-35); (ii) entering into "non-competition," tying, and exclusive dealing agreements and threatening companies who would do business with Compatible Cup manufacturers, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 87-154; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 225, 241-397; DPP AC ¶¶ 139-96; IPP SAC ¶¶ 141-206); (iii) redesigning K-Cup Brewers and introducing the Keurig 2.0 K-Cup Brewer (the "2.0 Brewer") to lock out Competitor Cups and misinforming customers about the motivation for, and the abilities of, this lock-out technology, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 176-232; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 225, 398-458; DPP AC ¶¶ 221-35; IPP SAC ¶¶ 136-40); and (iv) maligning Competitor Cups and otherwise interfering with competitors' business relationships, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 233-67; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 225, 459-548; DPP AC ¶¶ 197-220).

1. Patent Litigations

Within a matter of weeks after Sturm's introduction of its Competitor Cups, Keurig sued Sturm for patent and trademark infringement and false advertising, (the "TreeHouse Litigation"). (Rogers AC ¶ 158; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 228-30; DPP AC ¶ 128; IPP SAC ¶ 129.) The District Court for the District of [**12] Delaware dismissed Keurig's patent claims on summary judgment, which Keurig appealed. (Rogers AC ¶ 163; TreeHouse AC ¶ 235; DPP AC ¶¶ 131-33; IPP SAC ¶¶ 130-31.) The Federal Circuit affirmed the District Court's ruling, reasoning that Keurig was attempting to make an "end-run" around the patent laws with "a tactic that the Supreme Court has explicitly admonished," and that it was attempting "to impermissibly restrict purchasers of Keurig brewers from using non-Keurig [Competitor Cups] by invoking patent law." (Rogers AC ¶ 170 (quoting Keurig, Inc. v. Sturm Foods, Inc., 732 F.3d 1370, 1374 (Fed. Cir. 2013)); TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 236-37 (same); DPP AC ¶¶ 133, 137 (same); IPP SAC ¶ 131 (same).)

Similarly, in 2011, Keurig sued Rogers, just weeks after Rogers began selling its Competitor Cups. (Rogers AC ¶ 158; TreeHouse AC ¶ 239; DPP AC ¶ 136; IPP SAC ¶ 133.) In May 2013, the District Court for the District of Massachusetts granted Rogers' motion for summary judgment, holding that Rogers' designs were "sufficiently distinct" and quoted the district court's decision in the TreeHouse Litigation in admonishing Keurig for "attempting to institute a postsale restriction that prevents non-Keurig cartridges from being used in Keurig brewers." (Rogers AC ¶ 321 (quoting [**13] Keurig, Inc. v. JBR, Inc., No. 11-11941-FDS, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73845, 2013 WL 2304171, at *12 (D. Mass. May 24, 2013), aff'd, 558 F. App'x 1009 (Fed. Cir. 2014)); TreeHouse AC ¶ 239 (same); DPP AC ¶ 136; IPP SAC ¶ 134 (same).) After Keurig appealed, the Federal Circuit Court affirmed the district court's grant of summary judgment in Rogers' favor. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 171, 322; IPP SAC ¶ 135.)

Keurig pursued its claims relying on a theory of liability that had been previously rejected by the United States Supreme Court, as noted by the Federal Circuit in denying Keurig's appeal of the District Court's ruling in the TreeHouse action. (Rogers AC ¶ 170; TreeHouse AC ¶ 236; DPP AC ¶ 133; IPP SAC ¶ 131.) Plaintiffs allege that Keurig's patent claims had no objective basis, and they imposed costs on competitors and cast a cloud over the legality and legitimacy of competitors' products, which impeded market acceptance of those products and deterred other competitors from entering the market. (Rogers ¶¶ 172-74; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 238-40; DPP AC ¶ 138; IPP SAC ¶¶ 124-27.)

2. Exclusive and Restrictive Agreements

Plaintiffs allege that Keurig has entered into over 600 exclusive and restrictive agreements with various entities involved in the line of manufacture and distribution of Compatible Cups, as well as with [**14] potential competitors. For example, Keurig entered into exclusive agreements with, or otherwise coerced, suppliers of the machinery required to manufacture Compatible Cups; suppliers of the cups, lids, and filters required in Compatible Cups; and suppliers of the lock-out technology, a special taggant ink that is included on the lid of the Compatible Cup, incorporated in the 2.0 Brewer, to keep competitors from sourcing the technology. (Treehouse AC ¶¶ 2, 54, 143, 244-85, 401; DPP AC ¶¶ 169-91; IPP SAC ¶¶ 141-52.)

In addition, Keurig has locked up virtually all of the distributors who provide Compatible Cups for use outside of the home (the "Away-From-Home Market Segment") in long-term exclusive contracts. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 87-106; DPP AC ¶¶ 162-68; IPP SAC ¶¶ 173-200.) Keurig—in an apparent effort to foreclose the entry of or expansion by competitors in the home use market—entered into exclusive contracts with large retailers that serve the consumers who use Compatible Cups at home (the "At-Home Market Segment"), (Rogers AC ¶¶ 107-11; DPP AC ¶¶ 162-68; IPP SAC ¶¶ 173-200). That effort has been aided by Keurig's exclusive contracts with numerous major coffee brands ("Roasters"), which limited [**15] the ability of Roasters to provide inputs to or enter into other agreements with Competitor Cup manufacturers, as well as prevent Roasters from entering the Single Serve Brewer Market. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 112-54; Treehouse AC ¶¶ 286-330; DPP AC ¶¶ 139-61; IPP SAC ¶¶ 153-72.) As of November 2014, Keurig admitted that it has "now signed the large majority of previously unlicensed portion pack volume to our system and we're in the process of transitioning these brands." (Rogers AC ¶ 201 (quoting Keurig Green Mountain's (GMCR) CEO Brian Kelley on Q4 2014 Results - Earnings Call Transcript, Seeking Alpha (Nov. 20, 2014),

3. False Advertising and Promotional Efforts

Keurig has engaged in false, deceptive, and/or misleading advertising and promotional efforts directed at consumers and retail customers regarding the key qualities and characteristics of its K-Cup Brewers, K-Cups, [**16] and Competitor Cups made by TreeHouse, Rogers, and others. (Rogers AC ¶ 233; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 459-62; DPP AC ¶¶ 197-220.) Those efforts were intended to and did drive up Keurig's own sales while eliminating or diminishing competition from Competitive Cup makers by sullyng their reputations. (TreeHouse AC ¶ 459.)

For example, despite learning that competitors had developed Compatible Cups that worked in the 2.0 Brewer, Keurig has continued to convey to purchasers of the 2.0 Brewers through the packaging and the promotional materials provided with the brewers that only Keurig brand cups would work with the 2.0 Brewer. (Id. ¶ 471.) The packaging of the 2.0 Brewer states "Works only with Keurig Brand Packs," and the user manual warns consumers that their "Keurig 2.0 brewer will [**215] not work with packs that don't have the Keurig logo," among other misrepresentations. (Id. ¶ 472.) The 2.0 Brewer itself displays the misleading message that "[t]his pack wasn't designed for this brewer" when a consumer attempts to use a Competitive Cup in it. (Rogers AC ¶ 251; see also TreeHouse AC ¶ 472.) In addition, Keurig through its websites, social media, and customer service representatives, disseminated [**17] false and misleading messaging regarding quality and safety issues with respect to Competitor Cups. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 246-47, 253; TreeHouse AC ¶ 473; DPP AC ¶¶ 199, 202-11.) Such statements caused or likely will cause consumers to mistakenly believe that only K-Cups work with 2.0 Brewers, and therefore that they have to buy higher priced K-Cups rather than Competitor Cups to use their 2.0 Brewers. (TreeHouse AC ¶ 478; DPP AC ¶¶ 218-20.) Keurig has also made misstatements to consumers about quality and safety issues with the use of non-Keurig cups in the 2.0 Brewer, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 234-37, 240-42; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 479-92), about how use of unlicensed Compatible Cups affects the brewer warranty, (Rogers AC ¶ 238; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 493-99; DPP AC ¶¶ 213-15), as well as misrepresentations made to both consumers and retailers about compatibility and quality issues, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 256-67; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 501-28).

4. 2.0 Brewer

Keurig successfully implemented a plan, known as "Project Squid," to recapture market share lost to unlicensed Competitive Cup makers by designing a brewer that would only function with K-Cup and Keurig-licensed Compatible Cups. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 176-91; Treehouse AC ¶¶ 398-403; **18 see also DPP AC ¶¶ 221-35; IPP SAC ¶¶ 136-40.) The new brewer, referred to as the "2.0 Brewer," was solely intended to further lock out competitors. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 183, 190; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 398, 401; IPP SAC ¶ 136.)

In or about July 2012, Keurig began working on an "authentication" mechanism with Sagentia, a global product development firm, that would enable Keurig to manufacture Single Serve Brewers that provide degraded or non-functionality when used with competitors' Portion Packs. (Rogers AC ¶ 177; Treehouse AC ¶ 400.) Keurig thus developed a "taggant," a special kind of ink, which could be identified by the 2.0 Brewer's sensors to authenticate that the Portion Pack was a Keurig or Keurig-licensed pack. (Rogers AC ¶ 184; TreeHouse AC ¶ 503.) Keurig announced the 2.0 Brewer in November 2013. (Rogers AC ¶ 192.) In connection with the rollout, Keurig knowingly made false representations that its lockout technology had consumer benefits, (id. ¶¶ 214-32; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 404-31; DPP AC ¶ 271), and disparaged all Competitor Cups, including those of Rogers and TreeHouse, to retailers, distributors, consumers, and the general public, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 233-67; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 463-548; DPP AC ¶¶ **19 197-220). Although advertised as a closed system with technology that would not allow the brewer to function with non-Keurig or Keurig-licensed Portion Packs, (Rogers AC ¶ 192), some competitors have reverse-engineered 2.0 Brewer-compatible Portion Packs, (id. ¶ 47; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 457, 465).

D. Effects of Keurig's Anti-Competitive Conduct

Keurig's anti-competitive conduct has negatively impacted competition in the Portion Pack Market, and the Compatible Cup Market. (Rogers AC ¶ 268; TreeHouse AC ¶ 549.) This has resulted in harm to manufacturers of Competitor Cups, including Rogers and TreeHouse, potential market entrants, distributors, retailers, [*216] and consumers. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 268-89; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 551-68.)

More specifically, through its anti-competitive conduct, Keurig is able to sell its K-Cup Brewers at or below cost to create a captive base of consumers while at the same time selling its K-Cups to those consumers at supra-competitive prices. (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 131, 196, 587; DPP AC ¶ 11; see also Rogers AC ¶ 314.) Keurig's anti-competitive conduct has thus caused consumers to pay supra-competitive prices for K-Cups. (IPP SAC ¶¶ 32-35.) In particular, Keurig's conduct has had the effect **20 of overcharging the DPPs, who are direct purchasers of K-Cups. (Id. ¶ 30.) Direct purchasers, in turn, passed these overcharges on to the IPPs, who are end-user consumers of K-Cups, either directly or through intermediaries. (IPP SAC ¶ 30.) The IPPs claim that because the distribution channel for K-Cups "is not complex, generally involving only one or two intermediaries between Keurig and the [IPPs]," and because K-Cups are individual products that remain unaltered through the distribution chain, "the chain of commerce for this market allows for the tracing of overcharges that have passed through the chain of commerce to [IPPs]." (Id. ¶ 31.)

II. Procedural History

On February 11, 2014, TreeHouse filed a complaint against Keurig alleging antitrust and related violations. (No. 14-CV-905, Doc. 2.) Shortly thereafter, on March 13, 2014, Rogers filed its complaint in the Eastern District of California. (No. 14-CV-4242, Doc. 1.) The Rogers and TreeHouse lawsuits were two of many similar actions filed in early 2014 in federal district courts around the country alleging that Keurig engaged in unlawful anticompetitive conduct related to the 2.0 Brewer.<sup>11</sup> Among those suits were numerous actions [**21] filed by individual direct purchasers and individual indirect purchasers. On March 20, 2014, the named plaintiff in one of the related cases moved the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ("JPML") to centralize all of the cases concerning the 2.0 in a single multidistrict litigation ("MDL") in this District. (See Doc. 1.) The proposed MDL encompassed three types of actions: direct purchaser class actions, indirect purchaser class actions, and individual actions by Competitor Plaintiffs. (Id. at 1.) Although the Competitor Plaintiffs opposed centralization, (id.), the JPML concluded that all of the related actions, including those filed by the direct purchasers and indirect purchasers, raised "virtually identical factual questions concerning the conduct of Keurig." (Id. at 2.) On June 3, 2014, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1407, the JPML transferred these related actions to this District and assigned the action to me for consolidated pretrial proceedings as part of the MDL. (Id. at 3.) On May 28, 2014, I appointed interim co-lead counsel for the Named Plaintiffs and proposed direct purchaser Plaintiff class. (No. 14-CV-1609, Doc. 19.) On June 26, 2014, I appointed interim co-lead counsel for the Named Plaintiffs and proposed [**22] indirect purchaser Plaintiff class. (Doc. 36.) On July 24, 2014, the DPPs filed a Consolidated Class Action Complaint, (Doc. 65), and the IPPs filed a Consolidated Amended Indirect Purchaser Class Action Complaint, (Doc. 61).

On August 11, 2014, Rogers filed a motion seeking a preliminary injunction. (Doc. 84.) I denied the motion on September 19, 2014, finding that Rogers had not made a clear showing that it is imminently likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of the requested injunction. (Docs. [*217] 145, 160.) On August 5, 2014, I issued an order setting the schedule for Keurig's anticipated motions to dismiss. (Doc. 70.) In accordance with that schedule, Keurig filed motions to dismiss the four consolidated actions, (Docs. 162, 165, 168, 171), on October 6, 2014.

Rogers filed its Amended Complaint on December 8, 2014, (No. 14-CV-4242, Doc. 83), TreeHouse filed its Amended Complaint on December 2, 2014, (No. 14-CV-905, Doc. 86), the DPPs served their Amended Complaint on November 25, 2014, (No. 14-CV-1609, Doc. 42),<sup>12</sup> and the IPPs served their Second Amended Complaint on November 25, 2014, (Doc. 206).<sup>13</sup> Thereafter, consistent with the briefing schedule proposed by the parties, (Doc. [**23] 215), on February 2, 2015, Keurig filed its motions to dismiss (1) Rogers' Amended Complaint, (Docs. 226-28); (2) TreeHouse's Amended Complaint, (Docs. 223-25); (3) the DPPs' Amended Complaint, (Docs. 229-30), and (4) the IPPs' Second Amended Complaint, (Docs. 231-32). On April 13, 2015, Rogers filed a memorandum in opposition to Keurig's motion to dismiss, (Doc. 253), as did TreeHouse, (Doc. 254), the DPPs, (Docs. 251-52), and the IPPs, (Doc. 255).<sup>14</sup> Keurig filed replies in further support of its motion to dismiss the DPPs' Amended Complaint on May 11, 2015, (Doc. 261), and in further support of its motions to dismiss the Rogers' Amended Complaint, (Docs. 265-66), the TreeHouse Amended Complaint, (Doc. 264), and the IPPs' Second Amended Complaint on May 13, 2015, (Doc. 267). The parties have also submitted various letters regarding supplemental authority. (E.g., Docs. 276-77, 282, 284, 292, 298-99, 362-63.)

III. Legal Standard

IV. Discussion

The claims brought by Rogers, TreeHouse, the DPPs, and the IPPs overlap to a significant degree, as do, in certain respects, the motions to dismiss those claims. Rogers brings seventeen causes of action pursuant to (1) the Sherman Act Section 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (2) the Sherman Act Section 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (3) the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14; (4) federal patent law; (5) the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\); (6) common law tort; and (7) California state antitrust and consumer protection laws. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 294-414.) TreeHouse's Amended Complaint raises twenty causes of action pursuant to (1) the Sherman Act Section 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (2) the Sherman Act Section 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (3) the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14; (4) federal patent law; (5) the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\); and (6) various state laws. (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 569-691.) The DPPs' Amended Complaint raises six causes of action pursuant to (1) the Sherman Act Section 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (2) the Sherman Act Section 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (3) the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14; and (4) common law unjust enrichment laws of the fifty states [**26] and the District of Columbia. (DPP AC ¶¶ 254-300.) The IPPs' Second Amended Complaint raises eleven causes of action pursuant to (1) the Sherman Act Section 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (2) the Sherman Act Section 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (3) the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14; (4) the antitrust and unfair competition laws of twenty-one states and the District of Columbia;<sup>15</sup> (5) the consumer protection and unfair trade practices laws of seven states;<sup>16</sup> (6) and the common law unjust enrichment laws of seventeen states and the District of Columbia.<sup>17</sup> (IPP SAC ¶¶ 225-516.)

Keurig moves to dismiss the amended complaints in their entirety with prejudice. [*219] (See Rogers Def. Mem. 2; TreeHouse Def. Mem. 3; DPP Def. Mem. 1; IPP Def. Mem. 2.)<sup>18</sup> For the sake of clarity and efficiency, where possible, I address the applicable law pertaining to the respective motions to dismiss together. Keurig also challenges the standing of the DPPs and the IPPs to raise the antitrust claims.

A. Sherman Act Section 2 Claims

Rogers, TreeHouse, and the DPPs bring four overlapping causes of action pursuant to Section 2 of the Sherman Act: (1) monopolization, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 294-303; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 569-76; DPP AC ¶¶ 254-59); (2) exclusive dealing (Rogers AC ¶¶ 304-11; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 577-84; DPP AC ¶¶ 260-67); (3) monopoly [**27] leveraging, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 312-17; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 585-93; DPP AC ¶¶ 268-73); and (4) attempted monopolization in the alternative, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 377-82; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 619-24; DPP AC ¶¶ 274-78). The IPPs bring causes of action seeking injunctive relief only for monopolization and attempted monopolization. (IPP SAC ¶¶ 277-94.) Rogers and TreeHouse bring three additional overlapping claims for: (1) sham litigation (Rogers AC ¶¶ 318-31; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 594-602); (2) tying, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 338-53; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 611-18); and (3) conspiracy to monopolize, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 363-69; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 625-31). Rogers also asserts an eighth cause of action for anticompetitive product design, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 354-62), and the DPPs allege a fifth cause of action for declaratory and injunctive relief, (DPP AC ¶¶ 279-89).

HN4 [↑] Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, ("Section 2"), makes it unlawful for any person to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. To state a Section 2 claim of monopolization, a plaintiff must allege "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market [**28] and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 315 F.3d 101, 105 (2d Cir. 2002) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). To state a claim for attempted monopolization in violation of Section 2, a plaintiff must allege "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc., v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). To successfully plead a claim of conspiracy to monopolize in violation of Section 2, a plaintiff "must allege (1) concerted action, (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) specific intent to monopolize." [*220] Discover Fin. Servs. v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 598 F. Supp. 2d 394, 405 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (quoting Elec. Commc'n Corp. v. Toshiba Am. Consumer Prods., Inc., 129 F.3d 240, 246 (2d Cir. 1997)).

Keurig raises myriad challenges to the Section 2 claims, which I analyze in turn below as related to each individual motion. However, before I reach Keurig's challenges to the Section 2 claims, I first address Keurig's challenge to the DPPs' and the IPPs' standing to raise these claims.

1. Standing

a. Applicable Law

<sup>18</sup> "Rogers Def. Mem." refers to the Memorandum of Law in Support of Defendant's Motion to Dismiss First Amended and Supplemental Complaint filed by JBR, Inc. (Doc. 227.) "TreeHouse Def. Mem." refers to the Memorandum of Law in Support of Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Amended and Supplemental Complaint filed by TreeHouse Foods, Inc., Bay Valley Foods, LLC, and Sturm Foods, Inc. (Doc. 224.) "DPP Def. Mem." refers to the Memorandum of Law in Support of Defendant's Motion to Dismiss the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint. (Doc. 230.) "IPP Def. Mem." refers to the Memorandum of Law in Support of Defendant's Motion to Dismiss the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint. (Doc. 232.)

HN5 Standing is "a threshold, pleading-stage inquiry," and a complaint that fails to allege standing must be dismissed. Gatt Commc'n's, Inc. v. PMC Assocs., L.L.C., 711 F.3d 68, 75-76 (2d Cir. 2013) (quoting NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Co., 507 F.3d 442, 450 (6th Cir. 2007) (en banc)). An antitrust plaintiff must establish constitutional standing [**29] under Article III as well as antitrust standing. Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n.31, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) (hereinafter, "AGC"); In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 585 F.3d 677, 688 (2d Cir. 2009). To plead antitrust standing, a plaintiff must allege more than just an injury causally linked to unlawful conduct. Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76. The Supreme Court has identified several factors that courts should consider in determining whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing: (1) the causal connection between the violation and the harm; (2) the presence of an improper motive; (3) the type of injury and whether it was one Congress sought to address; (4) the directness of the injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex damage apportionment. AGC, 459 U.S. at 537-44.

HN6 The Second Circuit has applied the AGC factors using a two-pronged analysis. First, a plaintiff must allege that it suffered antitrust injury. Daniel v. Am. Bd. of Emergency Med., 428 F.3d 408, 443 (2d Cir. 2005). Second, the plaintiff must demonstrate that it meets the "efficient enforcer" factors that make it a "proper antitrust plaintiff." Id.

HN7 To establish antitrust injury, a plaintiff must allege facts showing that it suffered "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Courts in this circuit employ a three-step analysis [**30] to determine whether a plaintiff has plausibly alleged antitrust injury. Gatt, 711 F.3d at 76. First, the plaintiff must identify the practice complained of and the reasons the practice is or might be anticompetitive. Id. Second, the court must identify the actual injury alleged by the plaintiff. Id. Third, the court must compare the anticompetitive effect of the practice at issue to the actual injury alleged by the plaintiff. Id.

HN8 It is not enough for a plaintiff to allege that it has suffered antitrust injury. It must also establish that it is an "efficient enforcer" of the antitrust laws. The four "efficient enforcer" factors require the court to consider:

- (1) the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury; (2) the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement; (3) the speculativeness of the alleged injury; and (4) the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims so as to avoid duplicative recoveries.

In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 688 (quoting [*221] Volvo N. Am. Corp. v. Men's Int'l Prof'l Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 66 (2d Cir. 1988)).

HN9 Plaintiffs must demonstrate antitrust standing whether they seek monetary or injunctive relief. Paycom Billing Servs., Inc. v. Mastercard Int'l, Inc., 467 F.3d 283, 290 (2d Cir. 2006). "The extent to which [the efficient enforcer] [**31] factors apply when plaintiffs sue for injunctive relief depends on the circumstances of the case." Daniel, 428 F.3d at 443; see also Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 111 n.6, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) ("Thus, because standing under § 16 raises no threat of multiple lawsuits or duplicative recoveries, some of the factors other than antitrust injury that are appropriate to a determination of standing under § 4 are not relevant under § 16."); Freedom Holdings, Inc. v. Cuomo, 624 F.3d 38, 52 (2d Cir. 2010) ("In the antitrust context, courts have articulated several 'efficient enforcer' factors to avoid the 'duplicative recoveries' that would result from allowing 'every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation' to sue for treble damages." (quoting Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 475-77, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 & n.11 (1982))). Because "one injunction is as effective as 100, and, concomitantly, . . . 100 injunctions are no more effective than one," Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. at 261, some of these factors are "not relevant" in suits for injunctive relief, Cargill, 479 U.S. at 111 n.6. Although the efficient enforcer factors related to damages may not be directly relevant to an action for injunctive relief, the principles underlying those factors still inform the analysis. As District Court Judge Katherine Forrest articulated when applying the AGC factors to dismiss a claim by a class of indirect purchasers seeking injunctive relief in an antitrust case:

HN10 [↑] In this regard, issues [**32] with complex and speculative damages concern the fact and nature of harm (that is, damage) as much as a calculation of dollars and cents. Is determining the fact of damage complex? Does remediating plaintiff's injury through injunctive relief present complex issues?

Similarly, to assess the potential for duplicative recovery, the Court must reasonably ask not only whether there is another plaintiff who will recover a quantum that would account for monetary damage, but also whether the relief one plaintiff seeks more generally (such as injunctive relief), is being adequately pursued by another, better situated-party. Thus, the AGC factors are reasonably applicable to actions in which only injunctive relief is sought. Finally, in all cases the court is cautioned to be mindful the manageability of litigation. That is, allowing actions to proceed in which plaintiffs seek overlapping relief and in which their presence provides no additional benefit may well add to manageability issues.

b. Application to DPPs

Here, the DPPs are direct purchasers of the defendant's product, the K-Cups, and allege that Keurig's [**33] anticompetitive conduct caused them to pay supra-competitive prices. (DPP AC ¶¶ 5-6, 23-24.) Such an injury plainly is "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489. Although the conduct of which the DPPs complain largely targeted Keurig's direct competitors, such as TreeHouse and Rogers, the DPPs' alleged injury [**222] of overcharge was "inextricably intertwined" with the conduct's anti-competitive effects and thus "flow[ed] from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." McCready, 457 U.S. at 484 (internal quotation marks omitted). The DPPs have therefore pled antitrust injury.

With regard to the "efficient enforcer" factors that bear on whether the DPPs are "proper" antitrust plaintiffs, each factor supports the DPPs' antitrust standing. With regard to the directness of the injury, Keurig argues, citing to specific allegations of Keurig's anticompetitive scheme aimed at its competitors, that the claims of harm are "attenuated." (DPP Def. Mem. 5-6.) Keurig's focus on the allegations related to the scheme is misplaced and misstates the DPPs' alleged harm: the payment of supra-competitive prices, set by Keurig, for K-Cups bought directly from Keurig or its agents. (DPP AC ¶¶ 245, 258.) As an initial [**34] matter, the DPPs' injury—like the direct purchaser plaintiffs in DDAVP—was that they were forced to pay "supra-competitive prices as a result of defendants' anticompetitive conduct" thereby preventing the competitive market entry of others and the lower prices that would have resulted for the direct purchasers. In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 688. The defendants in DDAVP—like Keurig here—argued that anticompetitive conduct targeted defendants' competitors and therefore the harm to the direct purchaser plaintiffs was too far removed. The Second Circuit rejected that argument. As was the case with the direct purchaser plaintiffs in DDAVP, even though the injuries to the DPPs were "derivative of the direct harm experienced by the defendants' competitors, harming competitors was simply a means for the defendants to charge the plaintiffs higher prices." Id. The directness of the injury to DPPs—the payment of supra-competitive prices—supports the DPPs' antitrust standing.

As to the second factor, motivation and alternative enforcers, Keurig argues that TreeHouse and Rogers have filed lawsuits and are motivated to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement. (DPP Def. Mem. 6.) Here, Keurig attempts to argue that [**35] TreeHouse and Rogers are more motivated than the DPPs and that, therefore, the DPPs should not enjoy antitrust standing. This misstates the law; the issue is not what plaintiff is the most motivated. "The second factor simply looks for a class of persons naturally motivated to enforce the antitrust laws . . . Even if the competitors might be the most motivated, the plaintiffs are also significantly motivated due to their 'natural economic self-interest' in paying the lowest price possible." In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 689 (citing Daniel, 428 F.3d at 444). Moreover, because TreeHouse and Rogers are seeking lost profits while the DPPs are seeking overcharges, "[d]enying the plaintiffs a remedy in favor of a suit by competitors would thus be 'likely to leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied.'" Id. (quoting AGC, 459 U.S. at 542). The DPPs are motivated enforcers, and therefore this factor supports their antitrust standing.

Keurig argues further that the third and fourth factors, speculative nature of injury and difficulty of apportionment, weigh against the DPPs' standing because "[t]he injury DPPs allege is highly speculative, with alleged damages that would be nearly impossible to determine." (DPP Def. Mem. 7.) However, I find that [**36] the nature of the alleged injury—the overpayment for K-Cups purchased directly from Keurig or its agents—is not speculative. With regard to apportionment, lost profits—sought by Keurig's competitors—are separate from the overcharges the DPPs seek to recover. However, "[e]ven assuming some overlap [*223] between lost profits and overcharges . . . , the two are conceptually different measures that we think can be fairly apportioned in order to avoid duplicative recoveries." In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 689. These factors also weigh in favor of the DPPs' standing.

Therefore, all four efficient enforcer factors support the DPPs antitrust standing.<sup>19</sup>

c. Application to the IPPs

HN11 [+] Although the IPPs assert only a claim for injunctive relief under the federal antitrust laws, they must still demonstrate antitrust standing to assert such a claim. Paycom, 467 F.3d at 290 (holding that private antitrust plaintiffs must demonstrate antitrust standing whether they seek monetary or injunctive relief). Unlike the DPPs, the IPPs fail to sufficiently allege that they are efficient enforcers, and therefore, they lack antitrust standing.

First, the IPPs' alleged injury is, by definition, indirect. The IPPs allege that they were "end-user[s]" who purchased Keurig K-Cups through [**37] distribution channels "generally involving only one or two intermediaries" between the IPPs and Keurig. (IPP SAC ¶ 28.) They do not allege that Keurig directly overcharged them, but rather that one or more intermediaries passed on overcharges to the IPPs. HN12 [+] The Supreme Court clearly admonished the use of pass-on theories to establish standing in treble damages actions, in part due to the concern that "the massive evidence and complicated theories" involved in tracing the effect of an overcharge through the distribution chain would impose "burdens . . . on the effective enforcement of the antitrust laws." Ill. Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 741, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977) (internal quotation marks omitted). That concern is no less present in the context of an action for an injunction, as the question of whether a party several levels down in the distribution chain suffered an injury at all may be as complicated and indeed intertwined with quantifying the damages associated with the injury.

Second, there are alternative enforcers that are better situated to bring suit, and have brought suit. The DPPs in particular seek injunctive relief that largely, if not completely, overlaps with the injunctive relief sought by the IPPs. (Compare DPP AC ¶ 302(f)-(h), [**38] with IPP SAC at 116.) Given the claims brought by the DPPs and the Competitor Plaintiffs, denying the IPPs' federal claims is not "likely to leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied." AGC, 459 U.S. at 542. Although it is true that an efficient enforcer need not be the "most motivated" enforcer, In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 689, the existence of the DPPs and the Competitor Plaintiffs "diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party . . . to perform the office of a private attorney general," AGC, 459 U.S. at 542. This factor, therefore, weighs against a finding of antitrust standing.

Third, and related to the directness inquiry, the IPPs' alleged injury is speculative [*224] "because the claimed damages are too indirect and may have been produced by factors independent from any alleged overcharge." In re Lithium Ion Batteries Antitrust Litig., No. 13-MD-2420 YGR, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141358, 2014 WL 4955377, at *15 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 2, 2014). The IPP Second Amended Complaint alleges that "[t]he distribution channel for Keurig K-Cups is not complex, generally involving only one or two intermediaries between Keurig and the end-user consumer Plaintiffs," (IPP SAC ¶ 28), and that "Keurig's anticompetitive conduct resulted in direct purchasers being overcharged for Keurig K-Cups, and such overcharges were passed on by direct purchasers [**39] to Plaintiffs and the members of the Classes in whole or in part," (id. ¶ 30). These conclusory allegations fail to describe with sufficient factual detail the chain of distribution between Keurig and the IPPs, leaving numerous questions unanswered. Who were the intermediaries? How often was there one intermediary versus two or more? How does one know to what extent, if at all, any of the intermediaries passed on the overcharges to the next link in the chain? The IPPs' Second Amended Complaint sheds no light on any of these questions, and thus, this factor weighs against a finding of antitrust standing. See In re Aluminum Warehousing Antitrust Litig., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121435, 2014 WL 4277510, at *22 (dismissing claims when "plaintiffs [were] one or more levels down the supply/distribution chain").

<sup>19</sup> Keurig also argues that the DPPs lack standing to bring claims related to the 2.0 Brewer because, in part, they do not allege they purchased the 2.0 Brewer and because, if the DPPs had issue with the limited choice of Compatible Cups afforded by the 2.0 Brewer, they simply need not buy it. (DPP Def. Mem. 7-8.) However, the DPPs allege that Keurig engaged in a multi-dimensional monopolization scheme designed to frustrate competition on the merits in order for Keurig to maintain, if not increase, the supra-competitive prices Keurig charges the DPPs for the K-Cups the DPPs purchased directly from Keurig. (DPP AC ¶¶ 245, 258.) Conduct related to the 2.0 Brewer is relevant to the DPPs' claims to the extent it allowed Keurig to maintain supra-competitive pricing.

The IPPs emphasize that they "purchased the exact product sold by Keurig," but just not directly from Keurig. (IPP Def. Mem. 11-12.) However, the fact that the product did not change as it flowed down the line of distribution does not preclude the possibility that independent factors, such as costs for transportation, handling, storage, or any other service—rather than overcharges passed down from Keurig—could have led to the IPPs' purported damages. The vague allegation that "[t]he [**40] distribution channel for Keurig K-Cups is not complex," (IPP SAC ¶ 28), does not cure the speculative nature of the alleged harm. Moreover, if the allegation is accurate the IPPs should have provided the details of the distribution channel—including its length—with more specificity since the IPPs have had ample opportunities to do so.

Finally, while the difficulty in apportioning damages would not hinder a finding of antitrust standing in this action for injunctive relief, the IPPs do request relief that is largely duplicative of the relief requested by the DPPs, as discussed above. The IPPs' "roles as plaintiffs thus compounds manageability issues without providing any clear benefit." In re Aluminum Warehousing Antitrust Litig., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121435, 2014 WL 4277510, at *23.

Because each of the efficient enforcer factors weighs against the IPPs' federal antitrust standing, their federal antitrust claims are dismissed.<sup>20</sup> The DPPs, however, adequately pled antitrust standing. As such, I will move on to address Keurig's remaining challenges to the federal antitrust claims of Rogers, TreeHouse, and the DPPs.

2. Monopoly Power

a. Applicable Law

HN13 Turning to the first prong of a Section 2 claim, "to make out an antitrust [*225] claim, '[a] plaintiff must allege a relevant product market in which [**41] the anti-competitive effects of the challenged activity can be assessed.'" Commercial Data Servers, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5600, 2002 WL 1205740, at *4 (quoting Carrell v. The Shubert Org., Inc., 104 F. Supp. 2d 236, 264 (S.D.N.Y. 2000)). Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition in a given market. Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571. It can be pled directly through allegations of control over prices or the exclusion of competition, or it may be inferred from a defendant's large share of the relevant market. Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs. Inc., 386 F.3d 485, 500 (2d Cir. 2004). A plaintiff pleading monopolization, or attempted monopolization, generally must define the relevant market, because "without a definition of that market there is no way to measure the defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition." Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 455-56 (quoting Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965)). It is important to recognize that, "[b]ecause market definition is a deeply fact-intensive inquiry, courts hesitate to grant motions to dismiss for failure to plead a relevant product market." Todd, 275 F.3d at 199-200 (citing Found. for Interior Design Educ. Research v. Savannah Coll. of Art & Design, 244 F.3d 521, 531 (6th Cir. 2001) ("Market definition is a highly fact-based analysis that generally requires discovery.")).

---

<sup>20</sup> I note that some courts analyze antitrust standing separately under Section 1 and Section 2. See In re Zinc Antitrust Litig., 155 F. Supp. 3d 337, 360-65 (S.D.N.Y. 2016). Both Keurig and the IPPs conflate the analysis. (See IPP Def. Mem. 5-9; IPP Opp. 9-13.) At any rate, I find that, for the same reasons that the efficient enforcer factors weigh against the IPPs' federal antitrust standing under Section 2, they also weigh against the IPPs' federal antitrust standing under Section 1, and their Section 1 claims are also dismissed.

b. Application to the Competitor Plaintiffs and the DPPs

Keurig attacks the Section 2 claims of Rogers, TreeHouse, and the DPPs by arguing that they failed to allege monopoly power in a properly defined relevant market. (Rogers Def. Mem. 16-22; TreeHouse Def. Mem. 27-32; DPP Def. Mem. 18-24.) Rogers, TreeHouse, [\[\*\*42\]](#) and the DPPs allege two separate relevant product markets in which Keurig's anticompetitive conduct arose: (1) the Single Serve Brewer Market; and (2) the Compatible Cup Market. (Rogers AC ¶ 17; TreeHouse AC ¶ 64; DPP AC ¶ 53.) The Competitor Plaintiffs also allege the Portion Pack Market as a third relevant product market. (Rogers AC ¶ 17; TreeHouse AC ¶ 64.)

i. Single Serve Brewers Market

Keurig attacks Plaintiffs' Single Serve Brewers Markets in several ways. First, with respect to Rogers' market—which it defines as the market for the design, manufacture, and sale of "pressurized hot water brewing equipment that is capable of brewing at least a single serving of coffee or other hot beverages," (Rogers AC ¶¶ 9, 17)—Keurig argues that Rogers does not define what "pressurized" means and, because "[a]ny brewer can brew 'at least one serving,' . . . [Rogers is] gerrymandering a market definition to suit its case," (Rogers Def. Mem. 16). However, as Rogers alleges, Keurig itself defines "competing systems" as Rogers does in defining Single Serve Brewers. Specifically, Keurig's licensing agreements describe "competing systems" as having the following characteristics: (1) "A brewing chamber [\[\*\*43\]](#) designed to be pierced during the brewing process to allow hot water in and the brewed beverage out;" and (2) "[a] pressurized brewing process that takes place at pressures less than 30 psi inside the brewing chamber." (Rogers AC ¶ 13). Further, in these agreements, Keurig clarifies that it does not compete with "hopper-based single-cup coffee systems" and "espresso pod-based systems," (id. ¶ 14), let alone standard drip brew coffee systems. In this vein, Rogers has sufficiently pled a market for Single Serve Brewers. See Todd, 275 F.3d at 199-200.

Second, Keurig attempts to attack the market definition alleged by Rogers, [\[\*226\]](#) TreeHouse, and the DPPs by highlighting their allegations that Keurig sells its Single Serve Brewers at or below cost, (Rogers Def. Mem. 16 (citing Rogers AC ¶ 314); see also TreeHouse Def. Mem. 27-28; DPP Def. Mem. 19 (citing DPP AC ¶ 193)), and arguing that "[n]o firm would price at or below cost unless it faced competition," (Rogers Def. Mem. 16 (citing Dennis W. Carlton & Jeffrey M. Perloff, Modern Industrial Organization 88 (4th ed. 2005) ("A monopolist . . . sets a price above marginal cost.")); see also DPP Def. Mem. 19). Keurig cites no case law, and I am aware of none, in which a [\[\*\*44\]](#) court has found that a monopolist charging at or below cost forecloses Section 2 claims as a matter of law. Indeed, Keurig cites in support of its proposition Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 \(2d Cir. 1979\), in which the court notes that "the differential between price and marginal cost is used as an indication of the degree of monopoly power," id. at 275 n.12, but immediately goes on to note that "high prices, far from damaging competition, invite new competitors into the monopolized market," id.

It is clear that, when there are allegations of monopolization of a tied market, a monopolist might in fact charge at or below cost for the tying product to extract monopoly surplus from the tied product. Monopolists may "evade price control in the tying product through clandestine transfer of the profit to the tied product." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 487, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\) (Scalia, J., dissenting) (quoting Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 513-14 \(1969\), 89 S. Ct. 1252, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 (White, J., dissenting)); see Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 272 ("It is not a defense to liability under § 2 that monopoly power has not been used to charge more than a competitive price . . . ."); Xerox Corp. v. Media Scis., Inc., 660 F. Supp. 2d 535, 539 \(S.D.N.Y. 2009\) (denying dismissal where sales were "at a low margin or a loss, hoping to earn a profit through later [aftermarket] sales") ("Xerox III"); see also Rogers AC ¶¶ 131, 195-209; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 131, 195-209, 587; DPP AC ¶ 192 ("Keurig's business [\[\*\*45\]](#) model depends upon its ability to leverage its Single-Serve Brewer monopoly in order to restrain competition and extract monopoly profits from the K-Cups it sells in the Compatible Cup Market."). In sum, pricing Single Serve Brewers at or below cost in no manner suggests that the Single Serve Brewer Market is somehow broader than defined, or that Keurig does not in fact enjoy monopoly power in that market.

Third, the DPPs allege a Single Serve Brewers Market that is distinct from traditional coffee in that it is more convenient and efficient. Keurig argues that the DPPs' market definition fails because "a difference in process or convenience does not create a plausible inference that end products do not compete." (DPP Def. Mem. 19.) However, the DPPs do not simply allege a difference in process but describe a difference in fact—the DPP Amended Complaint details why traditional drip coffee machines are not interchangeable with and do not compete with Single Serve Brewers. (See DPP AC ¶¶ 55-58.) HN14<sup>21</sup> Further, Keurig's recitation of the law misses the mark because courts have found that functionality and consumer perspective is an important part of a market evaluation. See In re Payment Card Interchange Fee & Merch. Disc. Antitrust Litig., 562 F. Supp. 2d 392, 399 (E.D.N.Y. 2008) ("The contours of [**46] the relevant market track the cross-elasticity of demand: the extent to which products or services are perceived by consumers to be reasonably interchangeable for the same purposes . . . The cross-elasticity of demand analysis depends on information about consumer behavior and perceptions [*227] and is accordingly 'a deeply fact-intensive inquiry.'" (quoting Todd, 275 F.3d at 199)).<sup>21</sup>

Therefore, at this stage, Plaintiffs' plausibly allege a market covering Single Serve Brewers. For example, the Rogers Amended Complaint alleges that Keurig "controls approximately 89% of total unit sales and 93% of total dollar sales in the Single Serve Brewer Market." (Rogers AC ¶ 27.) Similarly, the TreeHouse Amended Complaint alleges that Keurig "controls approximately 93% of the Single-Serve Brewer Market." (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 83, 87-88, 90-94.) The DPPs, in turn, allege that during the entire relevant time period,<sup>22</sup> Keurig has dominated the Single-Serve Brewer market with at least 88% market share. (DPP AC ¶¶ 9, 75, 101.) HN15<sup>21</sup> These allegations support an inference of a "substantial monopoly" and monopoly power. See Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571 (87% is a "substantial monopoly"); Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 \(1946\) ("over 80%" constitutes "a substantial monopoly"). Indeed, while unnecessary, see [**47] Geneva Pharms., 386 F.3d at 500 ("Monopoly power . . . can be proven directly through evidence of control over prices or the exclusion of competition, or it may be inferred from a firm's large percentage share of the relevant market."), the Competitor Plaintiffs go on to allege that Keurig has exercised this monopoly power to restrain competition in the Single Serve Brewer Market, (see Rogers AC ¶ 30; TreeHouse AC ¶ 89).

ii. Compatible Cup and Portion Pack Markets

Keurig also challenges the Plaintiffs' allegations of Keurig's monopoly power in the Compatible Cup and Portion Pack Markets and, relatedly, the Competitor Plaintiffs' allegations of a Portion Pack Market. In particular, Rogers alleges that, after taking steps to regain market share it lost to market entrants, as of November 2014, Keurig controls approximately 95% of the Compatible Cup Market. (Rogers AC ¶ 46.) According to Rogers, the alternative Portion Pack Market, in addition to Compatible Cups, includes portion packs that do not fit in or work with K-Cup Brewers. (See id. ¶ 53.) Rogers alleges that, "[a]s of early 2013, Keurig controls approximately 73% of the Portion Packs Market." (Id. ¶ 58.) TreeHouse alleges that in 2014, Keurig controlled 86% of [**48] the Compatible Cup Market and after taking steps to regain market share it lost to market entrants, Keurig now controls approximately 95% of the Compatible Cup Market. (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 125-30.) TreeHouse also alleges the same alternative Portion Pack Market, (see id. ¶¶ 145-57), and similarly claims that Keurig "possesses and exercises monopoly power over the Portion Pack Market" and "controls over 73% of the Portion Pack Market," (id. ¶ 151). The DPPs allege that Keurig, through outright brand ownership or exclusive licensing, controlled, at its lowest point, an 86% share of the Compatible Cup Market, which has grown to a 95% share as a result of Keurig's purported anticompetitive [*228] conduct. (See DPP AC ¶¶ 105-07, 113, 169, 242.)

Keurig argues that both the Compatible Cup and Portion Pack Markets are "aftermarkets" for consumables, sold for use with the primary product, Single Serve Brewers, and therefore the allegations of market share alone are insufficient. (See, e.g., DPP Def. Mem. 21-23.) Keurig relies upon the Court's holding in Xerox III, which provided that:

<sup>21</sup> Keurig also argues that the DPP Amended Complaint lacks allegations concerning the 2.0 Brewer specifically. (DPP Def. Mem. 20-21.) These arguments are irrelevant to the definition of the Single Serve Brewer Market as all Keurig's Single Serve Brewers fit into this market definition, and the law does not require the DPPs to allege how much of that market is claimed specifically by the 2.0 Brewer.

<sup>22</sup> The DPPs define the Class Period as encompassing all persons or entities that purchased at least one K-Cup between September 7, 2010 and the present. (DPP AC ¶ 245.)

[F]or a nonmonopolist producer of a durable good to be held to have monopoly power in the aftermarket for parts, service, [**49] or supplies, a plaintiff generally must show that (i) customers who own the good are "locked in" by the prohibitive costs of switching to an alternate product, and (ii) the lock-in permitted those customers to be exploited, either because (a) some limitation on information undermined their ability to know that the aftermarket goods and services were being sold at high prices, or (b) the defendant changed its aftermarket prices after the lock-in occurred.

Xerox III, 660 F. Supp. 2d at 547 (emphasis added). As is clear, this case applies only to a "nonmonopolist" producer in the primary market; in other words, for Xerox III to apply, the Single Serve Brewer Market must be competitive. As discussed above, Plaintiffs have clearly alleged it is not.<sup>23</sup> Applying the correct standard to Plaintiffs' allegations, they have clearly alleged a plausible Compatible Cup Market and a plausible Portion Pack Market, in the alternative.<sup>24</sup>

3. Maintenance of Monopoly Power

a. Applicable Law

HN18 [↑] As noted above, there are three elements to a claim for monopolization, the [*229] second of which requires that a plaintiff allege "the willful acquisition or maintenance of [monopoly] power as distinguished from growth [**50] or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S., at 570-71. A monopolist's conduct violates Section 2 if it "(1) tends to impair the opportunities of rivals, [and] also (2) either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way." Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605 n.32, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985) (internal quotation marks omitted).

b. Application to Rogers, TreeHouse, and the DPPs

Plaintiffs have pled similar facts relevant to these elements and, therefore, many of Keurig's challenges to those allegations overlap.

<sup>23</sup> HN16 [↑] I also note that in Eastman Kodak, the Supreme Court expressly rejected "adopt[ing] any exception to the usual antitrust analysis" when assessing monopoly power in an aftermarket, noting that the Court has always "treat[ed] derivative aftermarkets as it has every other separate market." 504 U.S. at 479 n.29.

<sup>24</sup> The Competitor Plaintiffs allege that because Portion Packs that do not work in K-Cup Brewers are not interchangeable with Compatible Cups, the Compatible Cup Market "is the appropriate relevant market in which to evaluate the harm caused by Keurig's unlawful and anticompetitive conduct to competition for the manufacturing, licensing, and sale of Portion Packs that compete with K-Cups, i.e., Competing Portion Packs." (Rogers AC ¶ 54; see also TreeHouse AC ¶ 149.) For purposes of the current motion, it suffices that the Competitor Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged both Compatible Cup and Portion Pack Markets; discovery will illuminate which market is appropriate in which to analyze the alleged anticompetitive conduct. See Found. for Interior Design Educ. Research, 244 F.3d at 531.

With respect to the DPPs, Keurig also argues that, because its competitors have enjoyed some growth, there is no dangerous probability of monopoly, an element for the claim of attempted monopolization. (DPP Def. Mem. 23-24.) This argument fails. First, the DPPs have adequately alleged direct evidence of Keurig's market power and its exercise thereof. (See, e.g., DPP AC ¶ 103 ("Keurig has the power to exclude competition in the Single-Serve Brewer Market. Keurig has unlawfully exercised its power to exclude competition in the Single-Serve Brewer Market by coercing distributors and retail customers to enter into exclusive agreements, which require that only Keurig Single-Serve Brewers be sold or used by these entities.").) Further, the presence of limited competitor growth does not, as Keurig states, "negate[] any attempted monopolization claim. See Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 273 n.11 ("The precipitous decline [of defendant's market share is] not dispositive."). HN17 [↑] As discussed further below, the law does not require a complete lack of growth to sustain a Section 2 claim. See Conwood Co. v. U.S. Tobacco Co., 290 F.3d 768, 784 (6th Cir. 2002) (affirming monopoly maintenance where plaintiff's market share was increasing and market was expanding).

In particular, Rogers has pled facts showing that Keurig "has engaged and continues to engage in a scheme of anticompetitive acts to block independent competitors from the markets in which it operates." (Rogers AC ¶ 8.) Specifically, Rogers has alleged that Keurig has effectively restrained the Portion Pack and Compatible Cup Markets by (1) coercing distributors and retailers to enter into anticompetitive exclusive agreements that restrain market entry, exclude competitors, and unreasonably restrain competition; (2) conspiring with competitor roasters and coffee brands to enter into anticompetitive agreements to exclude competitors, unreasonably restrain competition, allocate [**51] markets, and limit output; (3) filing objectively and subjectively baseless litigations and appeals against manufacturers of Competitor Cups, including Rogers; (4) tying the purchase of K-Cups to the purchase of K-Cup Brewers in order to unreasonably restrain competition from Competitor Cup manufacturers; (5) interfering with Rogers' business relationships by making false and disparaging comments to customers and potential customers regarding Rogers' products; (6) threatening to unreasonably restrain competition through the introduction of technology that unnecessarily and unjustifiably excludes competitors from the Compatible Cup Market; (7) raising competitors' costs above those that would exist under competitive conditions by requiring the manufacturers of Competitor Cups to enter restrictive licensing agreements; and (8) making material misrepresentations to retailers, distributors, and consumers regarding the compatibility, performance, safety, and quality of Competing Portion Packs as compared to K-Cups. (Rogers AC ¶ 297.) TreeHouse and the DPPs have asserted very similar, and often identical, allegations. (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 2, 45, 572; DPP AC ¶¶ 8, 257.) To the extent that there [**52] are differences in the allegations among the three, I find the differences are not material to my consideration of this issue.

I review Keurig's challenges to the sufficiency of these allegations in turn.

i. Product Design

Keurig argues that Plaintiffs' product design claims fail to allege anticompetitive conduct. (See, e.g., Rogers Def. Mem. 4-6.) HN19↑ Keurig notes that, "[w]hen it comes to product design, a firm 'may generally bring its products to market whenever and however it chooses,'" and that the only narrow exception to this "rule" would arise when a monopolist coerces consumers into buying a new product, (id. at 5 (quoting Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 287); see also DPP Def. Mem. 15-17). Rogers "cannot allege that consumers have been coerced into buying the 2.0 brewer [*230] here," according to Keurig, because "Keurig continues to make K-Cups that work in 1.0 brewers," and because Keurig did not and does not hide the fact that the 2.0 Brewer is designed to lock-out Competitor Cups. (Rogers Def. Mem. 5-6.) In connection with TreeHouse's allegations that the introduction of the 2.0 Brewer was intended to lock competitors out of the market for Compatible Cups and maintain its monopoly, to the detriment of consumers, (TreeHouse AC [**53] ¶¶ 10-13, 373, 385, 402-03, 422-32), Keurig also argues that it was not required to pre-disclose to its competitors how the 2.0 Brewer would function to facilitate their ability to reverse engineer Compatible Cups that would function with the machine and that it would be improper for me to consider whether the innovations in the 2.0 Brewer were necessary or if alternatives existed, (TreeHouse Def. Mem. 16-17).

HN20↑ "A monopolist, no less than any other competitor, is permitted and indeed encouraged to compete aggressively on the merits, and any success it may achieve solely through 'the process of invention and innovation' is necessarily tolerated by the antitrust laws." Foremost Pro Color, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 703 F.2d 534, 544-45 (9th Cir. 1983), overruled on other grounds as recognized in Chroma Lighting v. GTE Prods. Corp., 111 F.3d 653, 657 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 281). It follows then that, "[a]s a general rule, courts are properly very skeptical about claims that competition has been harmed by a dominant firm's product design changes." United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 65, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001). However, "changes in product design are not immune from antitrust scrutiny and in certain cases may constitute an unlawful means of maintaining a monopoly under Section 2." Allied Orthopedic Appliances Inc. v. Tyco Health Care Grp. LP, 592 F.3d 991, 998 (9th Cir. 2010). As recognized by the Second Circuit, "it is not the product introduction itself, but some associated conduct, that supplies the [**54] violation." Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 286 n.30. "[U]nder Berkey Photo, when a monopolist combines product withdrawal with some other conduct, the overall effect of which is to coerce consumers rather than persuade them on the merits, and to impede competition, its actions are anticompetitive under the Sherman Act." N.Y. ex rel. Schneiderman v. Actavis PLC, 787 F.3d 638, 654 (2d Cir. 2015), cert. dismissed sub nom. Allergan PLC v. New York, 136 S. Ct. 581, 193 L. Ed. 2d 421 (2015) (internal citations omitted).

With this law in mind, if Rogers, TreeHouse, and the DPPs had only alleged anticompetitive product design, such allegations would likely not withstand Keurig's motion to dismiss; however, the amended complaints are filled with allegations of "associated conduct"—including, for example, allegations of exclusive dealing, tying agreements, and product disparagement—the overall effect of which is to coerce customers to purchase K-Cups over Competitor Cups, rather than to compete on the merits.

Further, Plaintiffs' allegations detailing Keurig's intent in developing the 2.0 Brewer support their product design claims. Rogers' Amended Complaint alleges that a stated objective in redesigning its brewer in 2012 was to "redesign the K cup holders in new brewers to lock out the competitors." (Rogers AC ¶ 183.) TreeHouse's Amended Complaint points to Keurig's Project [\[\*\*55\]](#) Squid and the "My K-Cup" redesign project, with the stated objective to "redesign the Kcup holders in new brewers to lock-out the competitors." (TreeHouse AC ¶ 14.) The DPP Amended Complaint alleges that a stated objective in [\[\*231\]](#) redesigning the 2.0 Brewer in 2012 was to "redesign the K-cup holders and new brewers to lock out the competitors." (DPP AC ¶ 228.) HN21<sup>15</sup> While Keurig argues to the contrary, the Supreme Court has made clear that "intent is . . . relevant to the question whether the challenged conduct is fairly characterized as 'exclusionary' or 'anticompetitive.'" Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 602. "[C]onsiderations of subjective intent are sometimes essential," such as when "innovations both harm rivals and fail to benefit consumers." 3 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 651c2, at 115 (3d ed. 2008) ("The real question is what the innovator had in mind."). At this stage, Plaintiffs' allegations that the 2.0 Brewer and its innovations were not intended to benefit consumers, but rather were intended to harm competition in the Compatible Cup Market, support their Section 2 monopolization claims. (See Rogers AC ¶¶ 214-32; DPP AC ¶¶ 221-35; TreeHouse AC ¶ 398 ("[T]he 2.0 KCup Brewer was not developed for any [\[\*\*56\]](#) purported consumer benefit; rather 'the new Keurig 2.0 brewer with its lock-out technology was developed solely for the purpose of locking out competition'" (quoting the Declaration of Andrew Gross in Support of Rogers' Motion for a Preliminary Injunction ¶ 8, attached as Ex. 12 to the Rogers Amended Complaint)).

ii. Patent Litigation and Patent Misuse

The Competitor Plaintiffs and the DPPs claim that the Patent Litigation constitutes illegal monopolization arising under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. HN22<sup>16</sup> "A single lawsuit can violate antitrust law as long as it is both an objective and subjective sham." In re DDAVP, 585 F.3d at 686. "First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits . . . . [S]econd[,] the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Prof'l Real Estate Inv'rs, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Keurig argues that Plaintiffs fail to allege objective and subjective baselessness or antitrust injury resulting from the Patent Litigation. I analyze each prong in turn.

First, the Competitor Plaintiffs have alleged that the Patent Litigation was objectively [\[\*\*57\]](#) baseless. Id.; see Rogers AC ¶¶ 174, 330 ("Keurig initiated the suits against Sturm and Rogers knowing that it could not prove infringement due to patent exhaustion."); TreeHouse AC ¶ 41 ("These Competitive Cups did not infringe any of [Keurig]'s patents because they did not contain a filter. But that did not stop [Keurig] from pursuing a baseless lawsuit to try to keep Competitive Cups off the market."), ¶¶ 43, 227-28, 230-31. In addition, contrary to Keurig's argument, the DPPs do not merely allege "that Keurig lost the prior [patent infringement] litigations." (DPP Def. Mem. 14.) Rather, the DPPs allege, consistent with their argument that the Patent Litigation was objectively baselessness, that "[n]o reasonable litigant could have realistically expected to succeed on the merits of such claims, and, thus, Keurig's complaint was objectively baseless." (DPP AC ¶ 129.) The DPPs go on to detail the deficient bases for the failed patent suits. (See id. ¶¶ 125-38.) For example, Keurig alleged that Sturm's Compatible Cups infringed Keurig's patents directed at brewers and methods of brewing, not even asserting any patents covering K-Cups themselves. (See id. ¶ 128.) These assertions are [\[\*\*58\]](#) sufficient to allege objective baselessness, and therefore Plaintiffs have met the first prong of stating a sham [\[\*232\]](#) litigation claim. While Keurig attempts to argue that Rogers' allegations fail because it did not file a motion to dismiss the Patent Litigation and because the Federal Circuit heard argument on the appeal, which it would not have done if the appeal were frivolous, (Rogers Def. Mem. 7), neither of these facts are fatal to a sham litigation claim, see, e.g., Mitsubishi

Heavy Indus., Ltd. v. Gen. Elec. Co., 720 F. Supp. 2d 1061, 1067 (W.D. Ark. 2010) (concluding that defendant's failure to file a motion to dismiss does not indicate that the defendant thought that the action was not a sham because "[a] complaint can meet all the pleading requirements of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and still, as a factual matter, be frivolous").<sup>25</sup>

Second, the Competitor Plaintiffs allege that Keurig embarked upon the Patent Litigation in "an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Profl Real Estate Inv'rs, 508 U.S. at 60-61 (internal quotation marks omitted). Rogers alleges that:

[R]ather than attempting to prove infringement, the real reason that Keurig initiated [the Patent Litigation] was to harm Rogers' and Sturm's ability to compete with Keurig's Compatible Portion Packs business [**59] by causing Rogers and Sturm to divert resources from marketing their respective Compatible Portion Packs businesses to defend against Keurig's claims and to incur substantial legal fees associated with their defenses, thereby increasing . . . the costs [of] Rogers' and Sturm's Compatible Portion Pack products. On information and belief, Keurig initiated these suits to harm Rogers' and Sturm Foods' ability to compete with Keurig's Compatible Portion Packs business also by creating confusion and doubt among Rogers' and Sturm's potential and existing customers about the commercial viability of Rogers' and Sturm's Compatible Portion Pack products, and by delaying Rogers' and Sturm's ability to grow their respective Compatible Portion Pack businesses.

(Rogers AC ¶ 174.) Similarly, TreeHouse alleges that the Patent Litigation:

[W]as instituted in an attempt to interfere with TreeHouse's ability to compete in the Compatible Cup Market, to intimidate market entrants, to raise a rival's costs, to harm TreeHouse's reputation, to sow doubt and confusion as to the legality of purchasing and selling Competitive Cups, and to deprive TreeHouse of resources that would have otherwise been spent on bringing [**60] more Competitive Cups to consumers at favorable prices.

(TreeHouse AC ¶ 238.) The DPPs also allege that Keurig filed the sham suits against its competitors "for the purpose of interfering with their ability to compete in the Compatible Cup Market." (DPP AC ¶ 257.) The Competitor Plaintiffs and the DPPs have therefore adequately pled objective baselessness and direct interference with their business relationships. See Profl Real Estate Inv'rs, 508 U.S. at 60.

[*233] In connection with the DPPs, Keurig also argues that the DPPs' allegations that the patent suits were subjectively baseless are conclusory. (DPP Def. Mem. 15.) However, the DPPs point specifically to language in the opinions of the district and circuit courts positing that Keurig was misusing patent law to improperly interfere with competitors and take control of the Compatible Cup Market. (See DPP AC ¶¶ 132, 137.) For example, the DPPs quote the Federal Circuit: "Keurig is attempting to impermissibly restrict purchasers of Keurig brewers from using non-Keurig [Compatible Cups] by invoking patent law." (Id. ¶ 137 (quoting Keurig, Inc. v. Sturm Foods, 732 F.3d at 1374).)

Keurig next argues that the Competitor Plaintiffs and the DPPs failed to allege antitrust injury. (See, e.g., Rogers Def. Mem. 8.) However, Rogers [**61] alleges that it "devoted significant resources to the defense against these baseless claims, including approximately $2 million in legal costs and fees," (Rogers AC ¶¶ 173, 329), and TreeHouse alleges that, "[a]s a result of this sham litigation and appeal, Plaintiffs were forced to incur three years' worth of litigation fees and costs, rather than use those resources to compete against [Keurig]. Competition in the market for Compatible Cups has thus been harmed," (TreeHouse AC ¶ 602). HN23 Litigation costs incurred in defending against a sham litigation are "a well recognized type of antitrust injury . . ." Bio-Tech. Gen. Corp. v.

<sup>25</sup> Keurig has cited no case law, and I have found none, in which a court finds a sham litigation claim to fail as a matter of law when a court of appeals grants oral argument on an appeal, especially where, as here, the only decisions on the merits were the summary judgment decision which admonished Keurig that "patent holders may not invoke patent law to enforce restrictions on the postsale use of their patented products," Keurig, Inc. v. JBR, Inc., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73845, 2013 WL 2304171, at *15, and the decision by the Federal Circuit summarily affirming the district court's grant of summary judgment, 558 F. App'x 1009 (Fed. Cir. 2014).

Genentech, Inc., 886 F. Supp. 377, 380 (S.D.N.Y. 1995), aff'd, 66 F.3d 344 (Fed. Cir. 1995). Additionally, the DPP Amended Complaint makes clear that Keurig filed the sham suits against its competitors "for the purpose of interfering with their ability to compete in the Compatible Cup Market." (DPP AC ¶ 257.) Therefore, the Competitor Plaintiffs, and the DPPs have adequately alleged antitrust injury in connection with this claim.<sup>26</sup>

Keurig also challenges the Competitor Plaintiffs' patent misuse claim for lack of a live controversy. Keurig argues that to state a claim for patent misuse, requires an "affirmative act" to enforce patents; a subjective fear of harm [**62] will not suffice. (Rogers Def. Mem. 8 (quoting Prasco LLC v. Medicis Pharm. Corp., 537 F.3d 1329, 1338-39 (Fed. Cir. 2008)).) Keurig also contends that because the Patent Litigation was resolved there is no live controversy to adjudicate, (TreeHouse Def. Mem. 26), and, to the extent the patent misuse claim arises from the introduction of the 2.0 Brewer, that TreeHouse has not alleged any attempted patent use or threat of patent litigation connected to the 2.0 Brewer, (id. at 27).

HN24 [↑] "Patent misuse relates primarily to a patentee's actions that affect competition in unpatented goods or that otherwise extend the economic effect beyond the scope of the patent grant." C.R. Bard, Inc. v. M3 Sys., Inc., 157 F.3d 1340, 1372 (Fed. Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1130, 119 S. Ct. 1804, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1008 (1999); see also Mallinckrodt, Inc. v. Medipart, Inc., 976 F.2d 700, 703-04 (Fed. Cir. 1992). Abrogated on other grounds, 137 S. Ct. 1523, 198 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2017) ("The concept of patent misuse arose to restrain practices that did not in themselves violate any law, but that [*234] draw anticompetitive strength from the patent right, and thus were deemed to be contrary to public policy."). "Misuse is closely intertwined with antitrust law, and most findings of misuse are conditioned on conduct that would also violate the antitrust laws." Linzer Prod. Corp. v. Sekar, 499 F. Supp. 2d 540, 552 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (internal quotation marks omitted). "The key inquiry under this fact-intensive doctrine is whether, by imposing [an express condition on the post-sale use of a patented [**63] product], the patentee has impermissibly broadened the physical or temporal scope of the patent grant with anticompetitive effect." B. Braun Med., Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 124 F.3d 1419, 1426 (Fed. Cir. 1997) (internal quotation marks omitted). A common example "of such impermissible broadening [is the use of] a patent which enjoys market power in the relevant market . . . to restrain competition in an unpatented product . . ." Id. (citing 35 U.S.C. § 271(d)(5)).

The Competitor Plaintiffs allege that Keurig has sought to extend the protections afforded its K-Cup Brewer patents by restricting purchasers of Keurig's Single Serve Brewers from using Competing Portion Packs and that Keurig has engaged in patent misuse by tying unpatented products, K-Cups, to patented products, Keurig's Single Serve Brewers. (Rogers AC ¶ 336; TreeHouse AC ¶ 607.) They also allege that Keurig has monopoly power in the tying market, the Single Serve Brewer Market. (Rogers AC ¶ 27; TreeHouse AC ¶ 83); see III. Tool Works Inc. v. Indep. Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 43, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006). This is an affirmative act and is, at this stage, sufficient to state a claim for patent misuse.

In sum, the Competitor Plaintiffs and the DPPs have stated a claim for sham litigation and for patent misuse, and Keurig's motions to dismiss these claims are denied.

iii. Exclusive Dealing and Substantial [**64] Foreclosure

Keurig next argues that the exclusive dealing claims fail because the Competitor Plaintiffs and the DPPs have failed to allege substantial foreclosure required to support a Section 2 claim. (Rogers Def. Mem. 8-12; TreeHouse Def. Mem. 6-15; DPP Def. Mem. 8-14).<sup>27</sup>

---

<sup>26</sup> Although its allegations are sufficient, Rogers also alleges that the Patent Litigation was designed to and did slow Rogers' entry into the market by casting a pall of illegitimacy over the Rogers products. (See Rogers AC ¶ 172 ("Moreover, the lawsuits were used by Keurig to sow doubt and confusion amongst consumers about the viability of Competing Portion Packs. On information and belief, Keurig used the existence of the lawsuit in order to convince distributors and third parties to stop doing business with Rogers and Sturm.").)

<sup>27</sup> HN25 [↑] As Keurig notes, substantial foreclosure is an element of an exclusive dealing claim whether that claim is brought pursuant to Section 1 or Section 2 of the Sherman Act, or Section 3 of the Clayton Act. (See Rogers Def. Mem. 9 n.9.; TreeHouse Def. Mem. 7 n.4; DPP Def. Mem. 8 n.8.) Keurig's anticompetitive exclusive dealing conduct supports the following

HN26[] To state a Section 2 claim based on exclusive dealing arrangements, a plaintiff "must allege as a threshold matter a substantial foreclosure of competition in the relevant market." Commercial Data Servers, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5600, 2002 WL 1205740, at \*7 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 328, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 \(1961\) (holding that the competition foreclosed must "constitute a substantial share of the relevant market").

As noted above, the DPPs allege two relevant markets, the Single Serve Brewer Market and the Compatible Cup Market. The Competitor Plaintiffs allege the same, [*235] as well as a Portion Pack Market in the alternative to a Compatible Cup Market. Rogers alleges that Keurig's exclusive agreements with "Keurig Authorized Re-Distributors" and large distributors foreclose Competitor Cup manufacturers' access to approximately 80% of the Compatible Cup Market sales to Away-From-Home customers, (Rogers AC ¶ 98); that Keurig has exclusive agreements with retailers and distributors for the At-Home Market Segment that prohibits [***65] them from marketing any Competitor Cups, (id. ¶¶ 107-08); and that Keurig has exclusive agreements with competitor brands and roasters that restrict them from selling products to, licensing brands to, or allowing Competitor Cup manufacturers to manufacture Competitor Cups for the brand, (id. ¶¶ 120-21). TreeHouse alleges that Keurig "has entered into unduly restrictive, anticompetitive, and exclusionary agreements with companies at every level of the Compatible Cup distribution system" which "are not only unduly restrictive and unreasonable in length, but also serve the anticompetitive purpose of substantially foreclosing competitors from access to resources they need to compete with." (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 241-42; see also id. ¶¶ 7, 185.) The DPPs allege that Keurig dominates the Single Serve Brewer and Compatible Cup Markets, with an 88% and 95% share, respectively, of each. (DPP AC ¶¶ 101, 107.) The DPPs allege that:

Keurig, at its lowest market-share point, controlled approximately 86% of the Compatible Cup Market. The remaining 14% of the Compatible Cup Market was then composed of sellers of unlicensed and private label Competitor Cups. Responding to this market share loss to Competitor [***66] Cups, Keurig reinforced its anti-competitive scheme by, among other actions, furthering its web of exclusionary arrangements throughout the Compatible Cup supply and distribution chain. As a result, Keurig has almost entirely recouped its lost market share and now controls roughly 95% of the Compatible Cup Market.

(Id. ¶ 107 (internal footnote omitted).)

These allegations notwithstanding, Keurig points to Plaintiffs' allegations that they and other competitors have continued selling Competitor Cups and, in some circumstances, have increased sales of Competitor Cups despite Keurig's alleged anti-competitive conduct. (Rogers Def. Mem. 9; TreeHouse Def. Mem. 7; DPP Def. Mem. 8-9.) Keurig argues that "courts in this Circuit and others have found no foreclosure where competitors experienced a 'sales increase,' and even where competitors simply 'remained in the market and successfully competed.'" (Rogers Def. Mem. 9 (quoting CDC Techs. v. IDEXX Labs., Inc., 186 F.3d 74, 80 \(2d Cir. 1999\) and Bowen v. N.Y. News, Inc., 366 F. Supp. 651, 679 \(S.D.N.Y. 1973\), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 522 F.2d 1242 \(2d Cir. 1975\)); see also TreeHouse Def. Mem. 7; DPP Def. Mem. 8-9.)

This argument fails for two main reasons. First, it ignores the allegations that Keurig's exclusionary contracts have substantially foreclosed competition in the [***67] Portion Pack and Compatible Cup Markets causing the Competitor Plaintiffs to lose significant sales and profits, Keurig's profits to increase, and the DPPs to pay supra-competitive prices for K-Cups. (See Rogers AC ¶ 310; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 6, 130, 366-72; DPP AC ¶¶ 107, 112.) HN27[] Second, it misreads the law on substantial foreclosure, which does not require a complete lack of growth to sustain a Section 2 claim. "Of course, the law has never required complete market exclusion as a prerequisite to suit. Indeed, some successful § 2 plaintiffs have both grown their market [*236] shares and earned high profits even through the period that the exclusionary practices were occurring." 3 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, claims raised by Rogers: claim 1 (monopolization); claim 2 (exclusive dealing); claim 3 (monopoly leveraging); claim 8 (conspiracy to monopolize); claim 9 (conspiracy and group boycott); claim 10 (attempted monopolization); claim 12 (violation of the Cartwright Act); claim 13 (unfair competition); and claim 15 (violation of California's Unfair Competition Law). Additionally, TreeHouse alleges exclusive dealing in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, Section 3 of the Clayton Act, and Illinois, Wisconsin, and New York law. (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 577-84.)

Antitrust Law ¶ 651b5, at 108-09 (3d ed. 2008) (citing Conwood, 290 F.3d at 784 (affirming monopoly maintenance where plaintiff's market share was increasing and market was expanding)). "Under [Section 2] of the Sherman Act, it is not necessary that all competition be removed from the market. The test is not total foreclosure, but whether the challenged practices bar a substantial number of rivals or severely restrict the market's ambit." United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 191 (3d Cir. 2005), cert. denied 546 U.S. 1089, 126 S. Ct. 1023, 163 L. Ed. 2d 853 (2006).

Suppose an established manufacturer has long held a dominant position but [**68] is starting to lose market share to an aggressive young rival. A set of strategically planned exclusive-dealing contracts may slow the rival's expansion by requiring it to develop alternative outlets for its product, or rely at least temporarily on inferior or more expensive outlets. Consumer injury results from the delay that the dominant firm imposes on the smaller rival's growth.

ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 271 (3d Cir. 2012) (internal quotation marks omitted).<sup>28</sup> The Competitor Plaintiffs and the DPPs have adequately alleged substantial foreclosure from the relevant markets, and the Competitor Plaintiffs' allegations that they have managed to grow their businesses, as well as any suggestions that competitors may have still been able to reach consumers, are not fatal to these allegations. HN28[↑] The extent to which competitors were excluded, and whether it is sufficient to support an antitrust claim, is fact-dependent and not properly disposed of on a motion to dismiss.<sup>29</sup>

Next, Keurig raises five specific challenges to Rogers', TreeHouse's, and the DPPs' allegations of substantial foreclosure, which [**69] overlap to some extent and to which I now turn.

1) Substantial Foreclosure Based on Licensing Agreements

Plaintiffs allege that Keurig's exclusive licensing agreements with various brand owners, including coffee roasters, food [*237] manufacturers, and celebrity chefs, are unlawful. (See Rogers AC ¶¶ 112-54; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 286-339; DPP AC ¶¶ 139-61.) Keurig challenges the Plaintiffs' allegations by arguing that "alleging substantial foreclosure requires both a numerator (the partners allegedly locked up) and a denominator (all of the available partners)." (Rogers Def. Mem. 9 (citing Wellnx Life Scis., Inc. v. Iovate Health Scis. Research, Inc., 516 F. Supp. 2d 270, 295 n.8 (S.D.N.Y. 2007)); see also TreeHouse Def. Mem. 8 (same); DPP Def. Mem. 9 (same).)

Wellnx does not support Keurig's argument. The court in that case noted, in the cited footnote, that "[t]he amended complaint contains no facts relating to the named distributors' shares of the consumer market. There are no allegations from which significant foreclosure could be reasonably inferred." 516 F. Supp. 2d at 295 n.8. HN29[↑] Nowhere is there mention that a numerator and denominator must be alleged for a Plaintiff to survive a motion to dismiss a Section 2 claim. At the motion to dismiss stage, such specific mathematical pleading is unnecessary. See <sup>28</sup> The cases cited by Keurig in support of its argument that any growth of a competitor is fatal, as a matter of law, to any claims of substantial foreclosure, are easily distinguishable on their facts. In CDC Technologies v. IDEXX Laboratories, Inc., which Keurig argues is "fatal to all of [Rogers'] exclusive dealing claims," (Rogers Def. Mem 9), the court found, on a motion for summary judgment, that plaintiff failed to show that the exclusive distributorship arrangements at issue had an actual adverse effect on competition in the market. 186 F.3d 74, 80 (2d Cir. 1999). Unlike the court in CDC Technologies, the motions before me are motions to dismiss not motions for summary judgment. Moreover, Rogers here alleges clearly adverse effects stemming from Keurig's exclusive dealing arrangements. In Bowen v. New York News, Inc., after trial, the court determined that the defendant's exclusive agreements did not prevent alternative channels of access to the market. 366 F. Supp. 651, 679-80 (S.D.N.Y. 1973), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 522 F.2d 1242 (2d Cir. 1975). Here, at this stage of the litigation, I need not consider whether or not their might be alternative channels of access to the market by the Competitor Plaintiffs.

<sup>29</sup> I note also that allegations of substantial foreclosure have been upheld where a plaintiff alleges exclusion from two retailers. See *Commercial Data Servers, Inc. v. IBM Corp., No. 00-CV-5008, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5600, 2002 WL 1205740, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 15, 2002)* (finding that plaintiff's allegations of foreclosure from two resellers "may indeed be sufficient to substantially foreclose competition, depending on the particular facts relating to those resellers" and denying defendant's motion to dismiss based on lack of alleged substantial foreclosure).

Xerox v. Media Scis. Int'l., Inc., 511 F. Supp. 2d 372, 390 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) ("Xerox I") (holding that plaintiff's [**70] allegations that it was "exclud[ed] from much of the market" was sufficient to allege substantial foreclosure and survive defendant's motion to dismiss); see also E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., 637 F.3d 435, 452 n.12 (4th Cir. 2011) ("While Kolon did not allege a specific percentage of market foreclosure in its Counterclaim, it would be problematic to reject its Counterclaim, with its extensive factual allegations, solely on that basis at the pre-discovery, motion-to-dismiss stage, when Kolon likely has insufficient information to calculate a precise number."); LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 158-59 (3d Cir. 2003) (upholding a verdict despite the fact that plaintiff had not alleged specific percentage of foreclosure; it was sufficient that the dominant competitor had created the strong incentives for consumers to deal with it exclusively); Synergetics USA, Inc. v. Alcon Labs., Inc., No. 08 Civ. 3669(DLC), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47466, 2009 WL 1564113, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. June 4, 2009) (holding that plaintiff asserting a tying claim need only "identi[fy] a plausible theory of impact on a substantial volume of commerce").

Next, Keurig argues that there are other brands with which competitors could partner, and that Rogers, TreeHouse, and the DPPs admit that having access to an established brand is not necessary to win business. (Rogers Def. Mem. 10; TreeHouse Def. Mem. 11; DPP Def. Mem. 12.) Similarly, Keurig maintains that there [**71] are no allegations that competitors are foreclosed from competing to work with Keurig's established partners, such as Kroger or BJ's, who contracted with Keurig after working with Rogers, (Rogers Def. Mem. 10), or Starbucks and Wolfgang Puck, with whom TreeHouse competed for deals, (DPP Def. Mem. 12), and that "[w]hen a plaintiff loses business due to competition, that loss is 'not of concern under the antitrust laws,'" (Rogers Def. Mem. 10 (quoting Cargill, 479 U.S. at 116); see also TreeHouse Def. Mem. 12; DPP Def. Mem. 12). These arguments are irrelevant. HN30 [+] As the Supreme Court in Cargill went on to clarify, "the antitrust laws do not require the courts to protect small businesses from the loss of profits due to continued competition, but only against the loss of profits from practices forbidden by the antitrust laws." Cargill, Inc., 479 U.S. at 116. As discussed in detail, Plaintiffs have alleged various practices that run afoul of the antitrust laws and that Keurig has undertaken a scheme of various anticompetitive and unlawful acts to restrict the normal functioning [*238] of a healthy competitive market. (See Rogers AC ¶ 8; TreeHouse AC ¶ 2; DPP AC ¶ 13.)

2) Substantial Foreclosure Based on Input Contracts<sup>30</sup>

Keurig argues that TreeHouse and [**72] the DPPs improperly limit their allegations to domestic suppliers of inputs. (TreeHouse Def. Mem. 9; DPP Def. Mem. 9-10.) To the contrary, however, TreeHouse and the DPPs have plausibly alleged a national geographic market based on the "area to which consumers can practically turn for alternative sources of the product and in which the antitrust defendants face competition." Heerwagen v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, 435 F.3d 219, 228 (2d Cir. 2006), abrogated on other grounds by In re Initial Pub. Offerings Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006). TreeHouse clearly alleges that:

The relevant geographic market is the United States. To compete effectively within the United States, Compatible Cup manufacturers and sellers need distribution assets and relationships within the United States. Compatible Cup manufacturers and sellers located outside of the United States that lack such assets and relationships are unable to constrain the prices of Compatible Cup manufacturers and sellers that have such domestic assets and relationships.

(TreeHouse AC ¶ 191.) TreeHouse further alleges, with regard to machinery, that "[b]eing forced unnecessarily to obtain large machinery from overseas . . . substantially raises TreeHouse's and other Competitive Cup makers' costs, thereby depriving Competitive Cup makers of fair competition on the merits." [*73] (Id. ¶ 256.) In sum, TreeHouse has adequately alleged a national geographic market.

Finally, Keurig challenges TreeHouse's and the DPPs' exclusive dealing claims by noting that although TreeHouse and other competitors had to expend resources to train suppliers when they were not able to contract with existing input suppliers, TreeHouse has no right to freeride on Keurig's developments and investments, and that this does not harm competition generally. (TreeHouse Def. Mem. 9-10; DPP Def. Mem. 11.) First, Keurig indeed may seek to limit how competitors or potential competitors might free-ride on its investments. However, Keurig may not unlawfully restrict other parties in its manufacturing and distribution chain from contracting with competitors—TreeHouse and the DPPs allege that Keurig is not protecting against free-riding on its own investments, but is rather blocking competitors from accessing inputs and distribution networks that others created. (See TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 242, 581 (Keurig's exclusive dealing agreements "serve the anticompetitive purpose of substantially foreclosing competitors from access to resources they need to compete with [Keurig]"); DPP AC ¶ 170 ("Keurig restricts [**74] the ability of machinery manufacturers to sell machinery to Keurig competitors who intend to use it to make Compatible Cups, but allows machinery manufacturers to sell the same machinery for other purposes. Thus, these anticompetitive agreements cannot be justified by any purportedly procompetitive purpose, such as to ensure a reliable supply of materials used in K-Cups.").)

---

<sup>30</sup> Keurig opposes TreeHouse's and the DPPs' substantial foreclosure claims related to the inputs of Compatible Cups—at least in part—by arguing that such claims require Plaintiffs to allege a numerator and denominator. For the reasons stated above, that argument is unpersuasive and I will not repeat my analysis here.

HN31  Regardless, Keurig's arguments are premature; as Circuit Judge Frank H. Easterbrook has noted, "competitive [*239] and exclusionary conduct look alike." Dial Corp. v. News Corp., 165 F. Supp. 3d 25, 36 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) (quoting On Identifying Exclusionary Conduct, 61 Notre Dame L. Rev. 972, 972 (1986)). The metes and bounds of when such behavior impermissibly crosses the line from competitive to violative of the Sherman Act is a highly contextual analysis. See Caribbean Broad. Sys., Ltd. v. Cable & Wireless PLC, 148 F.3d 1080, 1087, 331 U.S. App. D.C. 226 (D.C. Cir. 1998). Similarly, any procompetitive justification for such restrictions is not appropriately weighed on a motion to dismiss. See Maxon Hyundai Mazda v. Carfax, Inc., No. 13-cv-2680 (AJN), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 139480, 2014 WL 4988268, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 29, 2014) ("[T]o survive a motion to dismiss they must plead plausible allegations that, if true, would show such an adverse effect; if Plaintiffs then provide evidence of anticompetitive effects, Defendant will later have the opportunity to show the procompetitive effects of the agreements.").

3) [[**75]] Substantial Foreclosure Based on Distribution

Keurig next challenges Rogers's, TreeHouse's, and the DPPs' claims of substantial foreclosure from distributors. Keurig argues that Rogers, TreeHouse, and other competitors were able to utilize alternative channels of distribution to reach consumers, thereby precluding a substantial foreclosure claim. (Rogers Def. Mem. 11-12; TreeHouse Def. Mem. 13-14; DPP Def. Mem. 13-14.) Keurig further argues that Plaintiffs' allegations that Keurig locked up distributors to the Away-From-Home Market Segment do not support a substantial foreclosure claim because Plaintiffs failed to allege substantial foreclosure from the defined relevant market. (Rogers Def. Mem. 11-12; TreeHouse Def. Mem. 13-14; DPP Def. Mem. 13-14.)

HN32  Exclusive dealing violates the law when it has the effect of raising rivals' costs by foreclosing efficient means of distribution to actual or potential competitors. Dentsply, 399 F.3d at 193-95. Contrary to Keurig's arguments, even if alternative means of reaching consumers are "viable," that is not the test: the question is whether any alternative channels provide "effective means of competition" and whether those alternative channels "pose a real threat to defendant's [**76] monopoly." Id. at 193 (internal quotation marks omitted). Further, the requisite foreclosure may be found even if only a segment of the market is foreclosed, such as the Away-From-Home Market Segment here. See United States v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 344 F.3d 229, 240 (2d Cir. 2003) (upholding verdict for plaintiff based on foreclosure in a market "segment"); United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 70-71, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (finding Section 2 violated by substantial foreclosure of a "majority" of competition in only "one of the two major [distribution] channels"). Because Rogers and TreeHouse allege that no other viable means of distribution exist outside of those foreclosed by Keurig, (see, e.g., Rogers AC ¶¶ 86, 97, 311; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 186, 344, 346, 348), and the DPPs allege that "consumers and commercial customers have been impeded or entirely prevented from accessing the types and flavors of beverages offered by competitor Compatible Cup manufacturers," (DPP AC ¶ 239; see also id. ¶¶ 162-68), and because foreclosure can be measured in a particular segment, Plaintiffs have adequately alleged substantial foreclosure of distribution.

4) Substantial Foreclosure Based on Retailers

Keurig challenges Rogers's, TreeHouse's, and the DPPs' substantial foreclosure allegations related to retailers. Keurig contends that Rogers and TreeHouse [*240] only [**77] allege purportedly exclusive agreements with two retailers, which is insufficient to support a substantial foreclosure argument. (Rogers Def. Mem. 12; TreeHouse Def.

Mem. 14-15.) Keurig also argues that the DPPs' claim on this issue fails because Keurig's competitors were able to reach consumers, and because the DPPs fail to allege a denominator to determine the extent of alleged exclusion. (DPP Def. Mem. 13-14.)

As an initial matter, allegations of substantial foreclosure have been upheld where a plaintiff alleges exclusion from only two retailers. See Commercial Data Servers, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5600, 2002 WL 1205740, at \*7 (finding that plaintiff's allegations of foreclosure from two resellers "may indeed be sufficient to substantially foreclose competition, depending on the particular facts relating to those [resellers]" and denying defendant's motion to dismiss based on lack of alleged substantial foreclosure). Moreover, as discussed above, precise mathematical allegations are not required at the pleading stage. See Xerox I, 511 F. Supp. 2d at 390. Rogers', TreeHouse's, and the DPPs' allegations of substantial foreclosure from retailers are sufficient to warrant allowing the case to proceed.

iv. Marketing

Keurig's final challenge to Rogers's, TreeHouse's, and the DPPs' Section 2 claims concerns [\[\*\*78\]](#) allegations that Keurig's marketing violated Section 2. (Rogers Def. Mem. 13-16; TreeHouse Def. Mem. 19-23; DPP Def Mem. 17-18.)

HN33 [A] plaintiff asserting a monopolization claim based on misleading advertising must 'overcome a presumption that the effect on competition of such a practice was de minimis.'" Nat'l Ass'n of Pharm. Mfrs., Inc. v. Ayerst Labs., Div. of & Am. Home Prod. Corp., 850 F.2d 904, 916 \(2d Cir. 1988\) (quoting Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 288 n.41). However, "courts recognize that false and misleading statements may provide a basis for antitrust claims." Alternative Electrodes, LLC v. Empi, Inc., 597 F. Supp. 2d 322, 332 \(E.D.N.Y. 2009\) (citing Ayerst, 850 F.2d at 916 (stating that "[a]dvertising that emphasizes a product's strengths and minimizes its weaknesses does not, at least unless it amounts to deception, constitute anticompetitive conduct violative of § 2 [of the Sherman Act]")). The Second Circuit has adopted several factors for a court to consider in determining whether a plaintiff has overcome the presumption of de minimis effect. These include whether the representations "were (1) clearly false, (2) clearly material, (3) clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance, (4) made to buyers without knowledge of the subject matter, (5) continued for prolonged periods, and (6) not readily susceptible of neutralization or other offset by rivals." Ayerst, 850 F.2d at 916 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Second Circuit in Ayerst found that, at the [\[\*\*79\]](#) motion to dismiss stage, an allegation that the representation was "false and misleading in certain respects" was sufficient "to go forward with the discovery process to substantiate its claim that the [representation] was clearly false, clearly material, and clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance." Id.

Although Keurig attacks certain specifics of the Competitor Plaintiffs' allegations, for example by claiming that statements were not susceptible to neutralization, (Rogers Def. Mem. 13), that retailers are not buyers without knowledge of the subject matter, (id. at 14), and that statements concerning how the 2.0 Brewer operates were not clearly false, (TreeHouse Def. Mem. 23), these challenges are more appropriately raised on summary judgment, after discovery has illuminated the truth or falsity of the statements in question, the time frame of their dissemination, and [\[\*241\]](#) whether the statements were susceptible to neutralization. Similarly, Keurig's challenges to certain of the DPPs' allegations—including by claiming that the DPPs concede that the statements are susceptible to neutralization, (DPP Def. Mem. 17-18), and that statements that non-approved products may void the warranty are true, [\[\*\*80\]](#) (id. at 18)—are more properly addressed at summary judgment.<sup>31</sup>

Here, the Competitor Plaintiffs and the DPPs have sufficiently alleged that Keurig made statements that were false and misleading to customers and that those statements have cost competitors' businesses or had a supra-competitive effect. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 268-73; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 462, 459-548; DPP AC ¶¶ 197-220.) Therefore, Plaintiffs are entitled to discovery in order to substantiate their disparagement claims.

<sup>31</sup> Keurig's argument that the DPPs concede the purported misstatements are susceptible to neutralization points only to allegations that Rogers, "had the opportunity to take steps to neutralize many of the statements." (DPP Def. Mem. 18.) This is insufficient to find, as a matter of law, that the statements were in fact susceptible to neutralization.

B. Sherman Act Section 1 Claims

1. Applicable Law

HN34 [↑] The Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. "[A] plaintiff claiming a § 1 violation must first establish a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities." Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir. 1993). "If a § 1 plaintiff establishes the existence of an illegal contract or combination, it must then proceed to demonstrate that the agreement constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade either per se or under the rule of reason." Id. at 542. "In addition, a plaintiff must independently show antitrust injury, in order to ensure that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing [**81] aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior." Primetime 24 Joint Venture v. Nat'l Broad. Co., 219 F.3d 92, 103 (2d Cir. 2000) (internal quotation marks omitted).

HN35 [↑] "Conduct considered illegal per se is invoked only in a limited class of cases, where a defendant's actions are so plainly harmful to competition and so obviously lacking in any redeeming pro-competitive values that they are conclusively presumed illegal without further examination." Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 542 (internal quotation marks omitted). However, "most antitrust claims are analyzed under a 'rule of reason,' according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed, and the restraint's history, nature, and effect." State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997).

HN36 [↑] Conduct that stems from independent decisions is permissible under antitrust law, see Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 321 (2d Cir. 2010), as are "independent responses to common stimuli," and "interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556 n.4 (internal quotation marks omitted). To establish a conspiracy in violation of Section 1, then, proof of joint or concerted action is required. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984). Overall, "[c]ircumstances must [**82] reveal a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, [*242] or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement." Id. at 764 (internal quotation marks omitted).

HN37 [↑] "Because unlawful conspiracies tend to form in secret, such proof will rarely consist of explicit agreements. Rather, conspiracies 'nearly always must be proven through inferences that may fairly be drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators.'" In re Elec. Books Antitrust Litig., 859 F. Supp. 2d 671, 681 (S.D.N.Y. 2012) (quoting Anderson News, L.L.C. v. Am. Media, Inc., 680 F.3d 162, 183 (2d Cir. 2012)). Therefore, to prove an antitrust conspiracy, "the antitrust plaintiff should present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the [defendant] and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764 (internal quotation marks omitted).

HN38 [↑] At the pleading stage, a complaint claiming conspiracy must contain "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556; accord In re Elevator Antitrust Litig., 502 F.3d 47, 50 (2d Cir. 2007). This standard does not impose a "probability requirement"; a claim may survive a motion to dismiss even if a judge believes the chances of recovery to be very remote or unlikely. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556; see also Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 184 ("Because plausibility is a standard lower than probability, a given set of actions may well be subject to diverging interpretations, [**83] each of which is plausible. The choice between or among plausible inferences or scenarios is one for the factfinder." (internal citations omitted)). It also does not require a plaintiff to show that the allegations suggesting agreement "are more likely than not true or that they rule out the possibility of independent action." Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 184. "A court ruling on a motion to dismiss need not choose among plausible interpretations of the evidence." In re Elec. Books Antitrust Litig., 859 F.

Supp. 2d at 681 (citing Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 189-90). A complaint must contain "enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556.

HN39[] Antitrust law distinguishes vertical and horizontal price restraints. "Restraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been denominated as horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints." Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 \(1988\). "[C]ourts have long recognized the existence of 'hub-and-spoke' conspiracies in which an entity at one level of the market structure, the 'hub,' coordinates an agreement among competitors at a different level, the 'spokes.'" United States v. Apple, Inc., 791 F.3d 290, 314 \(2d Cir. 2015\) (quoting Howard Hess Dental Labs. Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 602 F.3d 237, 255 \(3d Cir. 2010\)). "These arrangements consist of both vertical agreements between the hub and each spoke and [**84] a horizontal agreement among the spokes 'to adhere to the hub's terms,' often because the spokes 'would not have gone along with the vertical agreements except on the understanding that the other spokes were agreeing to the same thing.'" Id. (quoting VI Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1402c (3d ed. 2010)). HN40[] "Existing case law makes clear that a hub-and-spoke theory is cognizable under Section 1 only if there are both vertical agreements between the hub and each spoke, and also a [*243] horizontal agreement among the various spokes with each other." In re Zinc Antitrust Litig., 155 F. Supp. 3d 337, 376 \(S.D.N.Y. 2016\) (citing United States v. Apple, 791 F.3d at 314).

2. Application to Rogers and TreeHouse

The Competitor Plaintiffs allege that Keurig has violated Section 1 through its purported exclusive dealing, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 304-11; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 577-84); tying arrangements, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 338-53; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 611-18); conspiracy to monopolize, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 363-69; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 625-31); and concerted refusals to deal and group boycott, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 370-76; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 632-38). In short, the Competitor Plaintiffs allege that Keurig entered into horizontal and hub-and-spoke conspiracies to restrain competition with coffee brands, distributors, and retailers.

Keurig challenges the Competitor [**85] Plaintiffs' Section 1 claims, arguing that the Competitor Plaintiffs have not alleged any facts to support the existence of any unlawful horizontal agreements, nor the existence of any agreement among the spokes in the purported hub-and-spoke conspiracy. Further, as Keurig attempts to characterize the agreements at issue as vertical in nature, Keurig argues that any such vertical agreements were not unlawfully anticompetitive. (Rogers Def. Mem. 22-24; TreeHouse Def. Mem. 32-34.)

a. Horizontal Conspiracy

HN41[] The Supreme Court has held that parties can be horizontal competitors regardless of whether they currently compete in the same market. Palmer v. BRG of Ga., Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 46-48, 111 S. Ct. 401, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349 \(1990\); see also Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 378, 93 S. Ct. 1022, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359 \(1973\). Here, Rogers has alleged that, through various anticompetitive agreements Keurig has removed the potential for competition from the largest roasters and brands that would be the most likely to compete against Keurig-branded Portion Packs.

For example, the 2013 "Noncompetition Agreement Between Green Mountain Coffee Roasters, Inc. and Global Baristas, LLC" provides that [Keurig's brand] Tully's "will not, and will cause its respective subsidiaries and Affiliates not to, directly or indirectly, operate in the Coffee Business in [the] United States of [**86] America, Canada, Mexico and the Islands of the Caribbean" for five years. Although Global Baristas concurrently entered into a supply and license agreement for Keurig to supply K-Cups using the Tully's brand, the broad prohibition on competition is not reasonably necessary or tailored to achieve any procompetitive effects associated with that arrangement.

(Rogers AC ¶ 122 (internal citation omitted).) Use of such agreements has permitted Keurig to "eliminate[] competition with the largest roasters and brands that would otherwise have the most financial incentives to enter into the Single Serve Brewer Market and to work with Competing Portion Pack manufacturers to increase output or decrease prices." (Id. ¶ 123.)

Similarly, TreeHouse alleges that:

[Keurig] itself is a roaster that owns its own brand names, [and therefore] would be a direct, horizontal competitor of other roasters and brands, but for its "Non-Competition" agreements with those companies. . . . Specifically, licensed roasters and brands agree: (1) not to sell beverage products to Competitive Cup makers; (2) not to license brands to Competitive Cup makers; and (3) not to permit Competitive Cup makers to manufacture [*244] Competitive [**87] Cups for the brand . . . .

(TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 287, 289.) Further, TreeHouse alleges that by entering into an unlawful scheme, "[Keurig] and its [Licensees] can limit competition from lower-priced Competitive Cups by agreeing . . . not to do business with Competitive Cup manufacturers unless they also become licensed and cede control of their pricing and output to [Keurig] in order to elevate prices." (Id. ¶ 299; see id. ¶¶ 286-300.)

Keurig challenges these allegations by pointing to case law that finds supply agreements—such as those covering intellectual property, distribution, or manufacturing—to be vertical rather than horizontal agreements. (Rogers Def. Mem. 22 (citing Elecs. Commc's Corp. v. Toshiba Am. Consumer Prods. Inc., 129 F.3d 240, 243-44 (2d Cir. 1997); AT&T Corp. v. JMC Telecom, L.L.C., 470 F.3d 525, 531 (3d Cir. 2006); Generac Corp. v. Caterpillar Inc., 172 F.3d 971, 977 (7th Cir. 1999)); see also TreeHouse Def. Mem. 33 (same).) The Second Circuit held in Toshiba that, under the facts of that case, the distributor plaintiff and manufacturer defendant were party to vertical agreements even though they also happened to compete at the distribution level (the manufacturer distributed its products independently as well as through a distributor in a so-called "dual distribution" arrangement). 129 F.3d at 243. However, that is not what is alleged here. The Competitor Plaintiffs allege that Keurig entered into agreements [**88] with licensees who would otherwise compete in the Compatible Cup Market, and who would potentially seek to enter and compete in the Single Serve Brewer Market. (See Rogers AC ¶¶ 122-23; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 286-300.) Such anticompetitive agreements are directly related to the competitive landscape in the Compatible Cup and Single Serve Brewer Markets, unlike in Toshiba, where the market in which the parties happened to compete was not relevant to the anticompetitive claims. While Rogers includes only one example of a specific agreement with a potential competitor, (Rogers AC ¶ 122), this, coupled with allegations that Keurig has entered into similar agreements with other potential competitors, is sufficient to state a claim for horizontal agreement in restraint of trade, as are TreeHouse's Section 1 claims based on purported unlawful horizontal agreements among competitors.

b. Hub-and-Spoke Conspiracy

Next, Keurig challenges the Competitor Plaintiffs' allegations of a hub-and-spoke conspiracy, arguing that Rogers fails to allege any agreement among the "spokes" and that TreeHouse fails to allege agreement among the brand owners or any other possible "spokes." (Rogers Def. Mem. 23; TreeHouse Def. Mem. [**89] 33-34.) I find that the Competitor Plaintiffs allege facts that support the conclusion that the "spokes" have agreed to enter into restrictive agreements with Keurig to keep prices at a supra-competitive level.

For example, Rogers alleges that an "expansive system of exclusionary and noncompetition agreements is orchestrated by Keurig, and coffee and other beverage brands that enter into a license or manufacturing agreement with Keurig do so with the express knowledge of Keurig's anticompetitive agreements with other competitor roasters and brands." (Rogers AC ¶ 148.) Beyond just "conscious parallelism," see Mayor & City Council of Baltimore, Md. v. Citigroup, Inc., 709 F.3d 129, 136 (2d Cir. 2013), Rogers alleges that the terms of Keurig's agreements with roasters and brands are well known within the market, and each company would have known that its competitors had entered into these agreements. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 123, [*245] 128.) Further, Rogers alleges that "[co-conspirators entered into [multi-year exclusionary] agreements with the knowledge and agreement that distributors and other resellers will be required to enter into, or already have entered into, agreements that limit their freedom to do business outside of specified authorized locations," thereby restraining the ability [**90] of Competitor Cup manufacturers to enter into their own agreements with distributors or other resellers. (Id. ¶¶ 366-67.) TreeHouse alleges that "the coffee and beverage brands' agreements not to deal with Competitive Cup makers that could otherwise increase their product output and sales revenue and provide a back-up or second manufacturer or the like" can only be explained by a conspiracy to sustain supra-competitive prices for K-Cups by restraining price competition. (TreeHouse AC ¶ 307.)

HN42 [+] The Competitor Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged "facts supporting the inference that a conspiracy existed." Mayor & City Council of Baltimore, Md., 709 F.3d at 136; see also Starr, 592 F.3d at 327 (referencing "behavior that would plausibly contravene each defendant's self-interest in the absence of similar behavior by rivals" (internal quotation marks omitted)). Given that a plaintiff is not required to show, at the pleading stage, that the allegations suggesting agreement "are more likely than not true or that they rule out the possibility of independent action," Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 184, I find that the Rogers Amended Complaint and the TreeHouse Amended Complaint allege "enough fact[s] to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556.

c. Group [**91] Boycott and Concerted Refusal to Deal

HN43 [+] The Supreme Court "has long held that certain concerted refusals to deal or group boycotts are so likely to restrict competition without any offsetting efficiency gains that they should be condemned as per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act." Nw. Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 290, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985). A concerted refusal to deal or group boycott is "an agreement to pressure a supplier or customer not to deal with another competitor." Reading Int'l, Inc. v. Oaktree Capital Mgmt. LLC, 317 F. Supp. 2d 301, 318 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (citing Nw. Wholesale Stationers, Inc., 472 U.S. at 294).

The same allegations that support a conspiracy to restrain trade also support a claim for a concerted refusal to deal or group boycott in violation of Section 1. Specifically, Rogers alleges that Keurig has restrained competition in the Portion Pack and Compatible Cup Markets by (1) conspiring with competitor roasters and coffee brands to enter into anticompetitive agreements to refuse to deal with Competitor Cup manufacturers; and (2) coercing distributors and retailers to enter into anticompetitive agreements to refuse to deal with Competitor Cup manufacturers. (Rogers AC ¶ 373; see, e.g., id. ¶¶ 146-47.) These allegations are sufficient to plausibly state a group boycott claim.

TreeHouse alleges that Keurig secured a network of agreements from licensees (1) not to deal [**92] with Competitor Cup makers themselves; and (2) to further require that licensees' distributors likewise refuse to deal with Competitor Cup makers by becoming "Roaster Nominated Keurig Authorized Distributor[s]"<sup>32</sup> [*246] bound by the same contractual prohibitions in the direct Keurig Authorized Distributor agreements. (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 303-04; see also id. ¶¶ 4-5, 19-20, 244-51.) TreeHouse adequately alleges a vertical group boycott that would violate Section 1, even if the allegations were insufficient to support horizontal restraints. HN44 [+] "Vertical refusals to deal are agreements among persons or organizations at different levels of the market structure not to deal with other market participants." Moccio v. Cablevision Sys. Corp., 208 F. Supp. 2d 361, 378 (E.D.N.Y. 2002) (citing United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972)). To the extent that TreeHouse alleges agreements in which licensees, distributors, or manufacturers are vertically aligned with Keurig, as opposed to horizontally, the TreeHouse Amended Complaint adequately alleges vertical group boycott claims.

In sum, the Competitor Plaintiffs have adequately pled violations of Section 1 and therefore Keurig's motions to dismiss their Section 1 claims are denied.<sup>33</sup>

<sup>32</sup> "Roaster Nominated Keurig Authorized Distributors" is defined by Keurig as "A company that was nominated by a Licensed Roaster and has an effective distribution agreement with Keurig that specifies a geographical territory and channels of distribution. These companies purchase Keurig Products from Keurig and exclusively the nominating Licensed Roaster's K-Cups from the nominating Licensed Roaster, KARDs, or Keurig for resale." (Treehouse AC ¶ 303.)

<sup>33</sup> Keurig also argues that the Competitor Plaintiffs' Section 1 claims fail because they do "not allege that [they have] been injured from any alleged elevation in prices." (Rogers Def. Mem. 24; see also TreeHouse Def. Mem. 12.) This argument fails. The Competitor Plaintiffs allege antitrust injury and even assuming that they may be able to enjoy the effects of Keurig's conduct

C. Lanham Act False Advertising Claims

1. Applicable Law

Section 43(a)(1) of the Lanham Act [\[\*\*93\]](#) provides:

Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services . . . uses in commerce . . . any . . . false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which . . . in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities, shall be liable in a civil action by any person who [\[\*247\]](#) believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.

15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1). HN45 To prevail on a false-advertising claim under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, "a plaintiff must show that either: 1) the challenged advertisement is literally false, or 2) while the advertisement is literally true it is nevertheless likely to mislead or confuse consumers." Johnson & Johnson Merck Consumer Pharm. Co. v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., 960 F.2d 294, 297 (2d Cir. 1992). "[I]n addition to proving falsity, the plaintiff must also show that the defendants 'misrepresented an inherent quality or characteristic' of the product." Nat'l Basketball Ass'n v. Motorola, Inc., 105 F.3d 841, 855 (2d Cir. 1997) (quoting Ayerst, 850 F.2d at 917). "This requirement is essentially one of materiality . . ." Id.

2. Application to Rogers and TreeHouse

First, Keurig argues that Rogers' allegations concerning Keurig's statements to consumers relate to statements that are "soft" or true, (Rogers [\[\*94\]](#) Def. Mem. 24-25), HN46 which are not actionable under the Lanham Act. See Lipton v. Nature Co., 71 F.3d 464, 474 (2d Cir. 1995) ("Subjective claims about products, which cannot be proven either true or false, are not actionable under the Lanham Act." (internal quotation marks omitted)); Nat'l Lighting Co. v. Bridge Metal Indus. LLC, 601 F. Supp. 2d 556, 564-65 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (granting motion to dismiss where allegations did not allege the statement was false and there was no indication that consumers would be misled). Keurig similarly argues that TreeHouse condemns only subjective statements of quality, performance, and safety. (TreeHouse Def. Mem. 35.)

The Rogers Amended Complaint and TreeHouse Amended Complaint detail numerous purported misrepresentations made in the course of advertising through a variety of traditional and social media advertising platforms. (Rogers AC ¶ 234; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 417, 471, 473, 475, 487.) HN47 Keurig's argument that mere "suggestions" about differences in quality, or implications in advertising that Competitor Cups are of inferior quality are not actionable under the Lanham Act, is incorrect. See Vidal Sassoon, Inc. v. Bristol-Myers Co., 661 F.2d 272, that results in supra-competitive pricing for Compatible Cups—something for which there is no evidence—this supposed "benefit" alone is insufficient to contradict the injury they allege. (See, e.g., Rogers AC ¶ 343 (alleging antitrust injury in the form of restraints entry, consumer choice, and incentives to create new products, among others); TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 549-64 (alleging antitrust injury in the form of restraints in output, consumer choice, incentives to create new products, and price competition).) See also N.Y. MedScan LLC v. N.Y. Univ. Sch. of Med., 430 F. Supp. 2d 140, 146 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (finding that a plaintiff establishes antitrust injury "by alleging adverse effects on the price, quality, or output of the relevant good or service"). In support of its argument, Keurig cites from Original Appalachian Artworks, Inc. v. Granada Electronics, Inc., 816 F.2d 68, 74 (2d Cir. 1987) ("Artworks"). The district court in Artworks found, and the Second Circuit agreed, that Granada's business model was only feasible because of the allegedly artificially inflated prices in the United States, because Granada was buying the cheap goods in Europe and selling them at a profit in the United States. See Original Appalachian Artworks, Inc. v. Granada Elecs., Inc., No. 85 Civ. 9064 (WCC), 1986 WL 2402 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 20, 1986), aff'd, 816 F.2d 68 (2d Cir. 1987). In other words, it was because of the allegedly artificially inflated prices that Granada was able to profitably conduct business. The Competitor Plaintiffs' businesses would exist without Keurig charging supra-competitive prices. Keurig has not shown how the Competitor Plaintiffs' business model is comparable to the business model in that case, and Artworks therefore does not apply.

277 \(2d Cir. 1981\) ("Whether or not the statements made in the advertisements are literally true, § 43\(a\) of the Lanham Act encompasses more than blatant falsehoods. It embraces innuendo, indirect intimations, and ambiguous suggestions [\[\*95\]](#) evidenced by the consuming public's misapprehension of the hard facts underlying an advertisement." (internal quotation marks omitted)). Similarly, although Keurig categorizes certain qualifiers used, such as "perfect," as "puffery," this characterization ignores the context in which the qualifiers were used. For example, the TreeHouse Amended Complaint alleges that consumers were misled about the necessity of using Keurig brand cups, as opposed to Competitor Cups that Keurig directly or by implication labeled of inferior quality, and the functioning of the lock-out technology introduced in the 2.0 Brewer. (See TreeHouse AC ¶ 640.) HN48[↑] Such statements involve more than the mere use of qualifiers and cross the line into statements of direction or fact. See Pizza Hut, Inc. v. Papa John's Int'l, Inc., 227 F.3d 489, 501-02 \(5th Cir. 2000\) (finding that in certain contexts, what appears to be puffery "is no longer mere opinion, but rather takes on the characteristics of a statement of fact"). In any event, any challenge based on the actual truth or falsity of the statements, (see Rogers Def. Mem. 25-26), is not appropriately raised on a motion to dismiss. HN49[↑] At the motion to dismiss stage, an allegation that the representation was "false and [\[\*248\]](#) misleading in certain respects" [\[\*96\]](#) is sufficient "to go forward with the discovery process to substantiate [plaintiff's] claim that the [representation] was clearly false, clearly material, and clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance." Ayerst, 850 F.2d at 916.

Keurig also argues that its statements to consumers who called to complain about the 2.0 Brewers are not "advertising" and cannot satisfy the dissemination requirement. (See Rogers Def. Mem. 26-27.) Similarly, Keurig argues that messages displayed on the 2.0 Brewer and messages in the 2.0 Brewer warranty cannot be considered advertising since those messages were received by consumers who had already purchased the brewer and thus were not made "for the purpose of influencing consumers to buy defendant's goods or services." (Id. (quoting Fashion Boutique of Short Hills, Inc. v. Fendi USA, Inc., 314 F.3d 48, 57-58 \(2d Cir. 2002\)); see also TreeHouse Def. Mem. 36.)

HN50[↑] The Second Circuit has adopted a three-part test to determine if the statements at issue are covered by the Lanham Act: the speech is covered if it is (1) commercial speech; (2) for the purpose of influencing consumers to buy defendant's goods or services; and, (3) "although representations less formal than those made as part of a classic advertising campaign may suffice, they must be disseminated sufficiently to [\[\*97\]](#) the relevant purchasing public." Fashion Boutique of Short Hills, 314 F.3d at 56. Under this standard, the Competitor Plaintiffs' allegations sufficiently state a claim for relief under the Lanham Act.

The Competitor Plaintiffs allege that the challenged statements made to consumers of the 2.0 Brewer are in fact intended to influence those consumers "to purchase defendant's goods," namely the Keurig-licensed K-Cups. For example, the Competitor Plaintiffs allege that, to discourage consumers from using Competitor Cups, Keurig warns customers that use of Competitor Cups may void their brewer warranties, even though Keurig honors brewer warranties when consumers use such cups, or stop the brewer from functioning. (See Rogers AC ¶¶ 238, 242; TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 493-99.) Furthermore, Keurig cites no case law, and I have found none, in which a court has held that warranty policies fall outside the scope of the Lanham Act as a matter of law. In fact, the Lanham Act does not define the metes and bounds of what qualifies as "commercial advertising or promotion."

Moreover, I note that certain of Keurig's statements were made to consumers by using Facebook and Amazon.com. Assuming, as Keurig asserts, that these statements were all made to consumers [\[\*98\]](#) who had already purchased the brewer, they were made in the open. In other words, they were available to be viewed by not only consumers who owned brewers but also by consumers who were contemplating purchasing brewers. This type of communication is materially different from a one-on-one communication between a manufacturer and a consumer inquiring about the product owned by the consumer. Therefore, such statements are appropriately viewed as being made for consumption by a wider audience for the purpose of influencing other consumers to buy defendant's goods or services.

Finally, Keurig challenges Rogers' allegations of false or misleading statements made to retail customers. Specifically, Keurig argues that Rogers does not have standing to challenge the statements because it "does not explain how Keurig's allegedly inaccurate statements to retailers . . . about how the 2.0 [Brewer's] interactive technology works were the proximate cause of harm to [Rogers]," and Rogers has not pled materiality. (Rogers Def. Mem. 28.) However, Rogers has sufficiently [*249] alleged that Keurig's misrepresentations are material and have caused injury. (Rogers AC ¶¶ 258-62, 270-74 (alleging that Keurig misrepresented [**99] the simplicity of the 2.0 Brewer, causing Rogers to lose business with companies such as Costco).) HN51 Therefore, Rogers has standing and the claims survive. See Lexmark Int'l., Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118, 140, 134 S. Ct. 1377, 188 L. Ed. 2d 392 (2014) ("To invoke the Lanham Act's cause of action for false advertising, a plaintiff must plead (and ultimately prove) an injury to a commercial interest in sales or business reputation proximately caused by the defendant's misrepresentations.").

D. State Law and Common Law Claims

1. Rogers' State and Common Law Claims

Rogers brings claims for violations of three California statutes—the Cartwright Act, the Unfair Competition Law, and the False Advertising Law—alleging tortious interference with contractual relationships under California law, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and common law unfair competition.

a. The Cartwright Act

HN52 Rogers alleges that Keurig violated California's Cartwright Act, codified at California Business and Professions Code § 16720, which "prohibits, among other things, any combination '[t]o prevent competition in [the] sale or purchase of . . . any commodity' or to '[a]gree in any manner to keep the price of . . . [any] commodity . . . at a fixed or graduated figure.'" Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 986 (9th Cir. 2000) (quoting Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720\(c\) and \(e\)\(2\)). "The Cartwright Act is modeled after Section 1 of the [**100] Sherman Act, and to state a claim under the Cartwright Act, plaintiffs must allege that (1) there was an agreement, conspiracy, or combination between two or more entities; (2) the agreement was an unreasonable restraint of trade under either a per se or rule of reason analysis; and (3) the restraint affected interstate commerce." In re Aluminum Warehousing Antitrust Litig., No. 13-md-2481 (KBF), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140765, 2014 WL 4743425, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 15, 2014) (internal quotation marks omitted), aff'd, 833 F.3d 151 (2d Cir. 2016). Because I find that Rogers has adequately pled violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, Rogers' Cartwright Act claim survives.

b. California Unfair Competition Law

HN53 Rogers alleges violations of California's Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200, et seq., ("UCL"), which bans "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Id. § 17200. To state a claim under the UCL, a plaintiff must show "a loss or deprivation of money or property sufficient to qualify as injury in fact, i.e., economic injury, and . . . that the economic injury was the result of, i.e. caused by, the unfair business practice." Allergan, Inc. v. Athena Cosmetics, Inc., 640 F.3d 1377, 1382 (Fed. Cir. 2011) (internal citation marks omitted). "Under the 'unlawful' prong, 'the UCL borrows violations from other laws by making them independently actionable as unfair competitive practices.'" Merced Irrigation Dist. v. Barclays Bank PLC, 165 F. Supp. 3d 122, 143 (S.D.N.Y.) [**101], reconsideration denied, 178 F. Supp. 3d 181 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) (quoting Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1143, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003)). Courts in this district have allowed parties to plead UCL claims predicated on antitrust violations. Id. (citing In re LIBOR-Based Fin. Instruments Antitrust Litig., No. 11 MDL 2262NRB, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 147561, 2015 WL 6243526, at *95 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 20, 2015)).

[*250] Keurig argues that because Rogers' Sherman Act and Lanham Act claims should be dismissed, the UCL claim should also fail. Because, as discussed above, Rogers' Sherman Act and Lanham Act claims survive, the UCL claim also survives.

c. California False Advertising Law

Rogers alleges violations of HN54<sup>34</sup> California's False Advertising Law, which bans "untrue or misleading" advertisements. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500. Keurig contends that Rogers' § 17500 claim fails because its Lanham Act claim fails. (Rogers Def. Mem. 29 (citing Appliance Recycling Ctrs. v. JACO Envtl., Inc., 378 F. App'x 652, 654-56 (9th Cir. 2010)).) Because I find that Rogers has adequately pled a Lanham Act claim, Rogers' § 17500 claim survives.

d. Tortious Interference with Contractual Relations

HN55<sup>35</sup> To state a claim for tortious interference with contractual relations under California law, a plaintiff must plead: "(1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage." Fresno Cnty. Hosp. & Med. Ctr. v. Souza, No. CV F 07-0325 LJO SMS, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56048, 2007 WL 2120272, at \*7 \(E.D. Cal. July 23, 2007\) [*102] (citing Pac. Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal. 3d 1118, 1126, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587 (1990)). Rogers alleges that Keurig's conduct supports a claim for tortious interference with contractual relations, and in response Keurig argues that Rogers fails to allege any specific contractual relationship with which Keurig interfered. (Rogers Def. Mem. 29-30.) HN56<sup>36</sup> Rogers counters that there is no requirement for a plaintiff to identify, in the pleadings, the specific contractual relationship disrupted and cites Sebastian Int'l, Inc. v. Vincenzo Russolillo, 162 F. Supp. 2d 1198, 1203-04 (C.D. Cal. 2001), in which the court noted that "under California law, the Plaintiff does not have to identify the specific contractual relations which have allegedly been disrupted." The court went on to clarify that

If a potential defendant was completely unaware of contractual relations with a third party, then it would be impossible to infer any intent to interfere on the defendant's part. However, such intent can certainly be inferred if the defendant knows that contractual relations with a third party exist, but does not know the specific identity of the contractual party.

Id. at 1204. Rogers' allegations are sufficient to infer that Keurig was aware of the existence of contracts with third parties. Because Rogers alleges that Keurig's anticompetitive [*103] and unlawful actions compelled Kroger to cancel its private label program with Rogers, (Rogers AC ¶¶ 206-12, 273), that other customers have followed suit, (id. ¶¶ 268-83), and that Keurig intended to interfere with competitors' relationships to monopolize the Compatible Cup Market, (see, e.g., id. ¶¶ 8, 12), Rogers has stated a claim for tortious interference under California law.

e. Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

Finally, Keurig does not argue that Rogers has failed to allege the elements of an intentional interference with prospective economic advantage claim. Rather, Keurig argues that it is entitled to a "competitor's privilege," and therefore the claim should be dismissed. (Rogers Def. Mem. 30.) HN57<sup>37</sup> Keurig cites in support of its argument [*251] Orion Tire Corp. v. Gen. Tire, Inc., No. CV 92-2391AAH\(EEX\), 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20224, 1992 WL 295224 \(C.D. Cal. Aug. 17, 1992\), in which the district court noted that "there exists a broad privilege afforded to a competitor to divert a prospective relationship to itself." *Id. at *3*. However, it is clear from Orion Tire that such a privilege does not defeat a claim when the plaintiff has already "effectively allege[d] that [the defendant] used fraud or any other unlawful means to accomplish its goal." [*104] Id. Because, as discussed, Rogers has plausibly alleged that Keurig engaged in a variety of anticompetitive conduct in order to interfere with Rogers' potential customers, (see Rogers AC ¶ 409), this claim survives.<sup>34</sup>

2. TreeHouse's State Law Claims

<sup>34</sup> To the extent that Keurig argues that this claim should be dismissed because Rogers failed to allege under which state's laws it was asserting a claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, I find this argument fails because it is clear from the context of the claim that Rogers asserts this claim under California law. I note that all other common law claims raised by Rogers are under only California law and that the original complaint was filed in California. Indeed, Keurig tacitly recognizes this because its argument for dismissal of this claim is based upon California case law.

The TreeHouse Amended Complaint alleges claims for violations of the Illinois, Wisconsin, and New York antitrust laws; the Illinois and New York false advertising laws; the Illinois and Wisconsin unfair competition laws; as well as claims for negligent and intentional interference with business relations under New York law, and for tortious interference under New York, Wisconsin, and Illinois law.

a. Illinois, Wisconsin, and New York Antitrust Laws

TreeHouse brings claims pursuant to Illinois, Wisconsin, and New York antitrust laws. As Keurig concedes, (Treehouse Def. Mem. 38), each of these state antitrust statutes apply Sherman Act standards. See Gatt, 711 F.3d at 81; Baker v. Jewel Food Stores, Inc., 355 Ill. App. 3d 62, 69, 823 N.E.2d 93, 291 Ill. Dec. 83 \(2005\); Olstad v. Microsoft Corp., 2005 WI 121, 284 Wis. 2d 224, 246-47, 700 N.W.2d 139 \(2004\). Because I have found that TreeHouse's Sherman Act claims survive, the New York, Illinois, and Wisconsin antitrust claims also survive.

b. Illinois and New York False Advertising Laws

HN58 [↑] TreeHouse's Illinois and New York false advertising claims, which are governed by the same standards as the Lanham [**105] Act, survive for the same reasons that the Lanham Act claims survive. See Muzikowski v. Paramount Pictures Corp., 477 F.3d 899, 907 \(7th Cir. 2007\) (assuming without deciding that the standards for § 43(a) of the Lanham Act apply to Illinois false advertising claims); Avon Prods., Inc. v. S.C. Johnson & Son, Inc., 984 F. Supp. 768, 800 \(S.D.N.Y. 1997\) (stating that the "standards for bringing a claim under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act are substantially the same as those applied to" New York false advertising claims); see also TreeHouse Def. Mem. 39 n.27 (conceding that the Lanham Act standard applies to Illinois and New York false advertising claims).

c. Illinois and Wisconsin Unfair Competition Laws

TreeHouse also alleges state unfair competition claims pursuant to Illinois and Wisconsin law. (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 646-49, 658-61.) Keurig does not challenge TreeHouse's Illinois claim, and therefore that claim survives. See [*252] In re Ford Fusion & C-Max Fuel Econ. Litig., No. 13-MD-2450 \(KMK\), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 155383, 2015 WL 7018369, at \*39 \(S.D.N.Y. Nov. 12, 2015\). Keurig concedes that TreeHouse's Wisconsin claim survives if the Amended Complaint alleges conduct that is "actionable under another statute or the common law." (TreeHouse Def. Mem. 39 (quoting Thermal Design, Inc. v. Am. Soc'y of Heating Refrigerating, & Air-Conditioning Eng'r's, Inc., No. 07-C-765, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34344, 2008 WL 1902010, at \*8-9 \(E.D. Wis. Apr. 25, 2008\))) Because, as discussed above, TreeHouse has adequately alleged violations of other statutes and common law, this claim survives. Cf. Curtis-Universal, Inc. v. Sheboygan Emergency Med. Servs., Inc., 43 F.3d 1119, 1123 \(7th Cir. 1994\).

d. [Negligent and Intentional Interference with Business Relations \[\*\*106\] Under New York Law](#)

TreeHouse also alleges negligent and intentional interference with business relations in violation of New York law. (TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 662-70.) HN59 [↑] A plaintiff asserting a claim for tortious interference with business relations under New York law must plead "the defendant's interference with business relations existing between the plaintiff and a third party, either with the sole purpose of harming the plaintiff or by means that are dishonest, unfair or in any other way improper." Martin Ice Cream Co. v. Chipwich, Inc., 554 F. Supp. 933, 945 \(S.D.N.Y. 1983\) (internal quotation marks omitted). A plaintiff's "valid antitrust claims . . . provide the unlawful purpose and unjustifiable cause element of its claim of tortious interference with contract." Commodore Bus. Machs., Inc. v. Montgomery Grant, Inc., No. 90 Civ. 7498 \(LMM\), 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 262, 1993 WL 14503, at \*3 \(S.D.N.Y. Jan. 13, 1993\); see also Martin Ice Cream, 554 F. Supp. at 946 ("It is beyond dispute that a conspiracy to unreasonably restrain trade or to monopolize trade would constitute improper means. Thus, if [plaintiff] is able to prove the antitrust violations . . . , it will also be able to prove improper means.")

Keurig argues that a claim for tortious interference with business relations under New York law cannot stand based on "actions taken in furtherance of 'normal economic selfinterest.'" (TreeHouse Def. Mem. 39 (quoting JBCHoldings NY, LLC v. Pakter, 931 F. Supp. 2d 514, 536 \(S.D.N.Y. 2013\))). Although Keurig argues that [**107] its conduct was indeed in furtherance of its own normal, economic self-interest, TreeHouse's Amended Complaint alleges to the contrary, and, as discussed above, states valid claims for conspiracy to restrain trade and to monopolize; therefore, this exception to the application of New York law does not apply. See JBCHoldings NY, 931 F. Supp. 2d at 535-36. Accordingly, TreeHouse has plausibly stated a claim for negligent and intentional interference with business relations in violation of New York law.

e. Tortious Interference Under New York, Illinois, and Wisconsin Law

Keurig also challenges TreeHouse's tortious interference with contract claims, brought pursuant to New York, Illinois, and Wisconsin law. (See TreeHouse AC ¶¶ 671-80, 685-91.) HN60[<sup>15</sup>] Under New York law, "the elements of tortious interference with contract are (1) the existence of a valid contract between the plaintiff and a third party; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the contract; (3) the defendant's intentional procurement of the third-party's breach of the contract without justification; (4) actual breach of the contract; and (5) damages resulting therefrom." Kirch v. Liberty Media Corp., 449 F.3d 388, 401 (2d Cir. 2006) (internal quotation marks omitted). Tortious interference [*253] with contract under Illinois and Wisconsin law [**108] require similar showings. See A-Abar Elec. Supply, Inc. v. Emerson Elec. Co., 956 F.2d 1399, 1404 (7th Cir. 1992) (articulating substantially similar elements); Sean Morrison Entm't, LLC v. O'Flaherty Heim Egan & Birnbaum, Ltd., No. 13-cv-753-bbc, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28696, 2014 WL 896616, at *3 (W.D. Wis. Mar. 6, 2014) (same).

Keurig argues that "TreeHouse makes factual allegations of only one contract with a third party," that "TreeHouse fails to allege Keurig knew of that contract," and that the only statements alleged to have been made before that contract was terminated were statements "about warranty, which are not alleged to be the but/for cause of termination." (TreeHouse Def. Mem. 40.) TreeHouse alleges that it had entered into a Co-Manufacturing Supply Agreement with Unilever on August 13, 2012, which Unilever terminated on December 27, 2012. (TreeHouse AC ¶ 296.) Thereafter, in March 2013, Unilever announced an agreement with Keurig by which it would become a licensee of the Keurig brand. (Id.) TreeHouse alleges [o]n information and belief, the contract entered into between [Keurig] and Unilever prohibited Unilever from proceeding with its co-manufacturing agreement with Sturm. On information and belief, Unilever's termination of the Sturm contract was the direct result of [Keurig's] interference with Sturm's business relations [**109] and [Keurig's] misleading and deceptive statements, including statements about the forthcoming 2.0 K-Cup Brewers, Sturm's ability to make Competitive Cups that would work in 2.0 K-Cup Brewers, and [Keurig's] threats that using Competitive Cups in [Keurig] KCup Brewers would void consumers' warranties, among other anticompetitive strong-arm tactics.

(Id.) This sufficiently states a claim for tortious interference with contract, but I note that this is the only contract alleged to have been terminated or breached due to Keurig's interference. HN61[<sup>16</sup>] Therefore, TreeHouse's state law tortious interference with contract claims survive solely related to this one contract. See Leibowitz v. Cornell Univ., 445 F.3d 586, 591 (2d Cir. 2006) (at the pleading stage, "a plaintiff is required . . . to give a defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests").

With regard to the HN62[<sup>17</sup>] claim for tortious interference under Illinois law, Keurig also argues that TreeHouse has failed to allege tortious interference with prospective business expectancy under Illinois law because "competition is a complete defense." (TreeHouse Def. Mem. 39.) However, this exception applies only if the "defendant's actions are not . . . anti-competitive," EOne, Inc. v. Oshkosh Truck Corp., No. 06CV1391, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83254, 2006 WL 3320441, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 13, 2006). As discussed [**110] at length above, TreeHouse adequately alleges anti-competitive conduct. Therefore, Keurig cannot defeat this claim based upon this exception and it survives.

3. DPPs' Unjust Enrichment Claims

The DPPs allege that "[i]t would be inequitable under unjust enrichment principles in the District of Columbia and each of the fifty states for Keurig to be permitted to retain any of the overcharges for K-Cups derived from Keurig's unfair and unconscionable methods, acts, and trade practices alleged in this Complaint." (DPP AC ¶ 296.) Keurig challenges these claims on three grounds: (1) that such claims "are not linked to any particular state"; (2) that such claims "are not premised on anything other than DPPs' deficient antitrust claims, and they must be dismissed along with those claims"; and (3) [*254] that the named DPPs lack constitutional standing to assert such claims "under the laws of the states where they neither reside nor purchased [the KCups]." (DPP Def. Mem. 24 & n.31.)

First, the DPPs have alleged unjust enrichment claims pursuant to particular state laws, specifically that of "the District of Columbia and each of the fifty states." (DPP AC ¶ 296.) HN63<sup>35</sup> "The laws governing claims for unjust enrichment [**111] vary from state to state. Some states recognize unjust enrichment as a separate free-standing claim, while others do not." In re Flash Memory Antitrust Litig., 643 F. Supp. 2d 1133, 1163 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Keurig has not undertaken a state-by-state analysis of the unjust enrichment laws of the fifty states, and, no challenge having been made by Keurig, I need not and decline to independently address the viability of these claims under each state's law at this stage. In addition, it is clear based on the foregoing that the DPPs' antitrust claims are sufficient.

HN64<sup>36</sup> Finally, while it is true that courts have held that "named plaintiffs lack standing to bring claims on behalf of a class under the laws of states where the named plaintiffs have never lived or resided," In re HSBC Bank, USA, N.A., Debit Card Overdraft Fee Litig., 1 F. Supp. 3d 34, 50 (E.D.N.Y. 2014) (internal quotation marks omitted), it is also true that because class certification is logically antecedent to the question of standing to assert state-law claims, many courts in this district have deferred determination of the standing issue until the class certification issues have been fully resolved, see, e.g., In re DDAVP Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 903 F. Supp. 2d 198, 213-14 (S.D.N.Y. 2012) ("[T]he issue 'is not whether the Named Plaintiffs have standing to sue Defendants—they most certainly do—but whether their injuries are sufficiently similar [**112] to those of the purported Class to justify the prosecution of a nationwide class action,' which is properly determined at the class certification stage, when this Court may consider commonality and typicality issues with respect to the named plaintiffs and other putative class members." (quoting In re Grand Theft Auto Video Game Consumer Litig. \(No. II\), No. 06 MD 1739 (SWK)(MHD), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78064, 2006 WL 3039993, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 25, 2006)); see also In re Digital Music Antitrust Litig., 812 F. Supp. 2d 390, 406 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (finding that named plaintiffs' claims related to conduct "alleged to be the same no matter where any plaintiff resides," and deferring determination on standing until class certification). I will defer determination of standing related to the DPPs' unjust enrichment claims brought pursuant to the law of states where no named plaintiff resides or purchased a K-Cup.<sup>35</sup> Therefore, [*255] Keurig's motion to dismiss the DPPs' unjust enrichment claims is denied without prejudice.

4. IPPs' State Law Antitrust Claims

Keurig moves to dismiss the IPPs' first and ninth causes of action brought under the antitrust and unfair competition laws of twenty-two states.<sup>36</sup> (IPP Def. Mem. 8, 25-26, Tables A-E.) Keurig bases its motion on three grounds: 1) the IPPs have failed to plead antitrust standing under the laws [**113] of nineteen states that have adopted the AGC test for antitrust standing, (id. Tables A & B); 2) the IPPs have failed to plead the substantive elements of an

<sup>35</sup> Keurig also moves to dismiss the IPPs' claims brought under the laws of states where no named plaintiff was harmed, arguing that Mahon v. TICOR Title Ins. Co., 683 F.3d 59, 64 (2d Cir. 2012), requires dismissal on this ground. (IPP Def. Mem. 9-10.)

HN65<sup>37</sup> The Court in Mahon did not hold that it was necessary in all cases to determine the standing issue prior to the class certification issue. See 683 F.3d at 65 ("As such, we think the Court's 'logical antecedence' language is relevant when resolution of class certification obviates the need to decide issues of Article III standing." (citing Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 612, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997))). Rather, Mahon preserved the logical antecedence exception to the general rule that Article III standing is a prerequisite to class certification. See Okla. Police Pension & Ret. Sys. v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 986 F. Supp. 2d 412, 419 n.3 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (explaining that the logical antecedence exception, while narrow, applies to "nation-wide class actions in which claims [are] brought under parallel provisions of different states' consumer protection or antitrust laws"). In addition, Mahon held that a plaintiff does not have standing to bring a class action against defendants that did not injure her. 683 F.3d at 65. Here, in the case of both the DPPs and IPPs, each named plaintiff has alleged that he or she has suffered an injury-in-fact as a result of Keurig's conduct. (DPP AC ¶¶ 25-35; IPP SAC ¶¶ 37-63.)

antitrust claim under the laws of all twenty-two states because each state interprets its antitrust laws in parallel with, or more narrowly than, the federal antitrust laws, (id. at 25, Table C); and 3) the IPPs have failed to plead an antitrust claim under the laws of five states that require a specific nexus between defendant's conduct and intrastate commerce within those states, (id. at 26, Table E).

For the reasons set forth below, Keurig's motion is granted with respect to the IPPs' antitrust claims under the laws of Michigan, Mississippi, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, and South Dakota. Their claims under the antitrust laws of the remaining fifteen states—Arizona, California, the District of Columbia, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Tennessee, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin—survive Keurig's motion to dismiss.

a. Antitrust Standing

Keurig argues that the IPPs' state antitrust claims for damages should be dismissed under the laws of nineteen of the twenty-two states under which [**114] the IPPs allege claims because those states have adopted the AGC test for antitrust standing, and the IPPs fail to satisfy that test. (IPP Def. Mem. Tables A & B; IPP Def. Reply 1-3.)<sup>37</sup> The IPPs contend that they have standing under AGC, and that even if they did not, each of the states to which Keurig objects has determined to apply neither the bar against indirect purchaser claims in Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, nor the federal standing analysis in AGC. (IPP Opp. 5-13, Tables A & B.)

HN66[] The role of a federal district court adjudicating a state law claim is to determine the content of state law and apply it appropriately. To do so, the court "look[s] to the state's decisional law, as well as to its constitution and statutes." Santalucia v. Sebright Transp., Inc., 232 F.3d 293, 297 \(2d Cir. 2000\). When the content of state law is unsettled, the court "is obligated to 'carefully predict how the state's highest court would resolve the uncertainty or ambiguity.'" Id. (alterations omitted) (quoting Travelers Ins. Co. v. 633 Third Assocs., 14 F.3d 114, 119 \(2d Cir. 1994\)). The court must give the "fullest weight" to the pronouncements of the state's highest court while giving "proper" [*256] regard" to the rulings of the state's lower courts. Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

Keurig contends that the IPPs have failed to allege antitrust standing under the laws of [**115] nineteen states because those states apply the AGC factors to determine whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing.<sup>38</sup> (IPP Def. Mem. Table A.) Keurig asserts that fourteen of those states have expressly adopted the AGC test, citing both state and federal case law.<sup>39</sup> (Id. Table B.) For the five remaining states that have not expressly adopted AGC, Keurig cites statutes and case law purportedly harmonizing state antitrust law with federal antitrust law.<sup>40</sup> (Id.) I address each state below.

i. Iowa and Nebraska

Of the fourteen jurisdictions that Keurig claims have expressly adopted AGC, only two have decisional authority from the highest court in that state directly addressing the issue: Iowa and Nebraska. HN67[] The highest courts of both states have held that the AGC factors apply to a determination of whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. See Southard v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 734 N.W.2d 192, 198 \(Iowa 2007\) ("[W]e apply the AGC factors to determine whether the plaintiffs may recover under Iowa law."); Kanne v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 272 Neb. 489, 723 N.W.2d 293, 299 \(Neb. 2006\) ("We conclude that appellants lack standing under Associated General Contractors to seek recovery for Visa and MasterCard's alleged violation of the Junkin Act.").

The courts in Southard and Kanne dealt with essentially identical facts. Both cases were brought [**116] against Visa and Mastercard by plaintiff classes of consumers who made purchases from merchants who accept Visa or Mastercard as a form of payment. Southard, 734 N.W.2d at 194; Kanne, 723 N.W.2d at 295. The plaintiffs brought the actions under the antitrust laws of both states, alleging that the defendants had engaged in tying arrangements that forced merchants to pay inflated fees for processing transactions, which the merchants then passed on to the plaintiff consumers. Southard, 734 N.W.2d at 194-95; Kanne, 723 N.W.2d at 295-96. The Iowa and Nebraska Supreme Courts both affirmed the dismissal of the plaintiffs' claims, applying the AGC factors to conclude that the plaintiffs lacked antitrust standing because their claims were too remote, in part because they were not purchasers of any goods or services provided by the defendants. Southard, 734 N.W.2d at 199-200; Kanne, 723 N.W.2d at 297-99.

The IPPs contend that Southard and Kanne should be limited to their facts. (IPP Opp. 8, Table B.) Based on both courts' discussions distinguishing earlier rulings of the Iowa and Nebraska Supreme Courts that granted antitrust standing to indirect purchasers without applying the AGC factors, Southard, 734 N.W.2d at 195-97 (citing Comes v. Microsoft Corp., 646 N.W.2d 440 (Iowa 2002)); Kanne, 723 N.W.2d at 300-01 (citing Arthur v. Microsoft Corp., 267 Neb. 586, 676 N.W.2d 29 (Neb. 2004))), the IPPs urge me to read the holdings in Southard and Kanne as limited to the proposition that the AGC factors apply to antitrust suits brought by [**117] [*257] non-purchasers, but not to antitrust suits brought by indirect purchasers. (IPP Opp. 8 n.10, Table B.) I decline to do so.

Both Southard and Kanne explicitly held that Comes and Arthur did not eliminate antitrust standing principles. The Southard court held that the decision in Comes stood only for the "narrow" holding "reject[ing] the federal rule barring claims by indirect purchasers" announced in Illinois Brick. Southard, 734 N.W.2d at 196. It did not read Comes to eliminate the need to determine antitrust standing for all suits brought by indirect purchasers. See id. ("[Comes] certainly did not, as suggested by the plaintiffs, determine there were no limits on who could sue under [Iowa's competition law].") (citing Kanne, 723 N.W.2d at 299-301)). Similarly, the Kanne court held that the decision in Arthur "addressed whether the Illinois Brick Co. bar against indirect purchaser suits should apply under the Consumer Protection Act; [the court] did not address the distinct antitrust standing requirements that bar claims based on derivative or remote injuries." 723 N.W.2d at 300. The Kanne court concluded that its "decision in Arthur [did] not eliminate antitrust standing requirements." Id. at 300-01.

Because the courts in Southard and Kanne both held that AGC set forth the appropriate [**118] test to determine antitrust standing, I conclude that the AGC factors apply to the IPPs' Iowa and Nebraska antitrust claims. It is not clear, however, whether the Iowa and Nebraska Supreme Courts apply the AGC factors in the same way as do the federal courts. Both Southard and Kanne held that non-purchasers did not have antitrust standing, but they did not clarify the boundaries of antitrust standing for indirect purchasers, such as the IPPs. Given that both cases discuss and cite favorably Comes and Arthur, which held that the indirect purchaser plaintiffs in those cases had standing,<sup>41</sup> it is not apparent that the highest courts in Iowa and Nebraska would find that the IPPs lacked standing under AGC. I have found no subsequent decisions from any court in Iowa or Nebraska clarifying the application of the AGC factors to indirect purchaser claims. Accordingly, I cannot conclude that the highest courts in Iowa and Nebraska would apply the AGC factors strictly according to federal precedent.

ii. California

Relying primarily on a 1995 case from a California intermediate appellate court, Keurig contends that the Cartwright Act, California's antitrust statute, [**119] requires application of the AGC factors. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing <sup>41</sup> The plaintiff classes in both Comes and Arthur were consumers who had purchased computers pre-installed with the Windows 98 operating system. Comes, 646 N.W.2d at 441-42; Arthur, 676 N.W.2d at 31-32. As such, they were indirect purchasers of Windows 98 because they purchased the software indirectly through retailers or distributors rather than directly from Microsoft. Unlike the IPPs here, the plaintiff classes in Comes and Arthur had a direct relationship with Microsoft because they were end-user licensees of Microsoft as to Windows 98. Comes, 646 N.W.2d at 441-42; Arthur, 676 N.W.2d at 32. Nevertheless, Comes and Arthur are sufficiently analogous to the facts here to create doubt as to how the highest courts in Iowa and Nebraska would apply the AGC factors to the IPP Second Amended Complaint.

Vinci v. Waste Mgmt., Inc., 36 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 337 (1995).) The Vinci court observed that the Cartwright Act has "similar language" to the Sherman Act. 36 Cal. App. 4th at 1814. It noted that "[b]ecause the Cartwright Act has objectives identical to the federal antitrust acts, the California courts look to cases construing the federal antitrust laws [*258] for guidance in interpreting the Cartwright Act." Id. at 1814 n.1. While the court recounted the five AGC factors, it did not perform a factor-by-factor analysis in determining whether the complaint adequately alleged antitrust standing. Id. at 1814-17.

Although Vinci favorably cites AGC, subsequent cases from the Supreme Court of California cast doubt on the applicability of the AGC factors under California law. See Aryeh v. Canon Bus. Sols., Inc., 55 Cal. 4th 1185, 151 Cal. Rptr. 3d 827, 292 P.3d 871, 877 (Cal. 2013) ("Interpretations of federal antitrust law are at most instructive, not conclusive, when construing the Cartwright Act, given that the Cartwright Act was modeled not on federal antitrust statutes but instead on statutes enacted by California's sister states around the turn of the 20th century."); In re Cipro Cases I & II, 61 Cal. 4th 116, 187 Cal. Rptr. 3d 632, 348 P.3d 845, 872 (Cal. 2015) ("The Cartwright Act is broader in range and deeper in reach than the Sherman Act." (internal quotation marks omitted)); see also Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp., 747 F.3d 1199, 1205 n.4 (9th Cir. 2014) (citing Aryeh for the proposition that it "is no [*120] longer the law in California" that "the interpretation of California's antitrust statute [is] coextensive with the Sherman Act"); cf. Knevelbaard Dairies, 232 F.3d at 987 (applying the AGC factors to perform the antitrust standing analysis under the Cartwright Act, but holding that "California law affords standing more liberally than does federal law"). I cannot conclude, therefore, that the Supreme Court of California would apply the AGC factors in accordance with federal precedents, if at all, to determine indirect purchaser antitrust standing under the Cartwright Act.

iii. District of Columbia

Keurig cites a trial court opinion of the D.C. Superior Court in support of the application of the AGC factors to the IPPs' D.C. antitrust claim. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B. (citing Peterson v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., No. Civ.A. 03-8080, 2005 D.C. Super. LEXIS 17, 2005 WL 1403761 (D.C. Super. Ct. Apr. 22, 2005)). At least one other trial court decision, however, rejected an interpretation of the D.C. Antitrust Act that places limitations on indirect purchaser antitrust standing. See Holder v. Archer Daniels Midland Co., No. 96-2975, 1998 D.C. Super. LEXIS 39, 1998 WL 1469620, at *5 (D.C. Super. Ct. Nov. 4, 1998) (holding that indirect purchasers had antitrust standing under the D.C. Antitrust Act without applying the AGC factors). Notably, in addressing the harmonization provision of the D.C. Antitrust Act—which provides that a court "may use as a guide interpretations given by federal [*121] courts to comparable antitrust statutes," D.C. Code Ann. § 28-4515 (West)—the Holder court held that "[s]ince the D.C. [Antitrust] Act was passed to distinguish D.C. antitrust law from federal law with respect to standing for indirect purchasers, there is no 'comparable' federal antitrust statute in this respect." *1998 D.C. Super. LEXIS 39, 1998 WL 1469620, at *3 n.4*. Absent a pronouncement from the D.C. Court of Appeals or more trial court decisions definitively pointing in one decisional direction or another, there is no apparent reason to consider Peterson as more authoritative than Holder, and Keurig has provided none. Keurig has failed to establish that the D.C. Court of Appeals would apply the AGC factors to the IPPs' D.C. antitrust claim.

iv. Kansas

Keurig cites to no state court cases applying the AGC factors to determine antitrust standing under Kansas law. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B.) Rather, it cites three federal district court cases as support for its position. (Id. (citing [*259] In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., 516 F. Supp. 2d 1072, 1094-95 (N.D. Cal. 2007); Orr v. Beamon, 77 F. Supp. 2d 1208, 1211 (D. Kan. 1999), aff'd sub nom. Orr v. BHR, Inc., 4 F. App'x 647 (10th Cir. 2001); In re Refrigerant Compressors Antitrust Litig., No. 2:09-md-02042, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50737, 2013 WL 1431756, at *9-10 (E.D. Mich. Apr. 9, 2013)).)

None of these cases provides a sufficient basis upon which to conclude that Kansas courts would apply the AGC factors. DRAM relies upon two cases to support its application of the AGC factors. [*122] The first case, Wrobel v. Avery Dennison Corp., No. 05-cv-1296 (Kan. Dist. Ct. Feb. 1, 2006), is an unpublished trial court opinion. The second case, Orr—also cited by Keurig—is a federal district court case that applies the AGC factors, reasoning only that it found "no Kansas cases to the contrary" and that federal precedent was "sufficiently persuasive to guide its decision with regard to standing under Kansas law." Orr, 77 F. Supp. 2d at 1211-12. The third case, In re Refrigerant Compressors, relies upon Wrobel, DRAM, and Orr for its conclusion. *2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50737, 2013 WL 1431756, at *9*. These cases do not clearly lead to the conclusion that the Kansas Supreme Court would apply the AGC factors in accordance with federal precedents.

The harmonization provision in the Kansas Restraint of Trade Act does not alter this conclusion. HN68<sup>42</sup> Subsection (b) states, "Except as otherwise provided in subsections (d) and (e), the Kansas restraint of trade act shall be construed in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of federal antitrust law by the United States supreme court." Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-163 (West). Subsection (d) states, "The Kansas restraint of trade act shall not be construed to prohibit . . . actions or proceedings by indirect purchasers pursuant to [Kan. Stat. Ann. §] 50-161, and amendments thereto . . . ." Id. Although it is plausible that [\[\*\*123\]](#) the Kansas courts could interpret the harmonization provision to repeal Illinois Brick but still require application of the AGC factors in accordance with federal precedent, Keurig has provided no persuasive authority or argument supporting that reading. Therefore, the IPPs' Kansas antitrust claim survives.

v. Maine

Keurig cites a state trial court opinion in support of its position to dismiss the IPPs' Maine antitrust claims on antitrust standing grounds. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing Knowles v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., No. CIV.A. CV-03-707, 2004 Me. Super. LEXIS 227, 2004 WL 2475284 (Me. Super. Ct. Oct. 20, 2004).) The Knowles court held that "[i]t is probable that the Maine Law Court . . . would look to the Associated General Contractors factors in determining standing under Maine's antitrust laws and would apply those factors except to the extent those factors cannot be reconciled with the legislature's adoption of the Illinois Brick repealer." *2004 Me. Super. LEXIS 227, 2004 WL 2475284, at *5*. Knowles, therefore, provides a reasonable basis to predict that the highest court in Maine would apply the AGC factors.

However, a complete reading of Knowles makes apparent that its application of AGC is not in lockstep with federal precedents. In particular, the Knowles court held that "[i]n light of Maine's Illinois [\[\*\*124\]](#) Brick repealer, the next factor—directness or remoteness of the asserted injury—should be disregarded entirely in any inquiry as to standing under Maine's antitrust laws." *Id. at *6*.<sup>42</sup> Given that the directness factor weighs particularly heavily [\[\*260\]](#) against the IPPs' antitrust standing under AGC, I am unable to conclude that the highest court in Maine would apply AGC to preclude the IPPs' antitrust standing under Maine law.

vi. Michigan and New Mexico

Keurig cites a state trial court decision and a state intermediate appellate court decision to contest antitrust standing with respect to the IPPs' Michigan and New Mexico antitrust claims respectively. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing Stark v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., No. 03-055030-CZ, 2004 Extra LEXIS 214, 2004 WL 1879003 (Mich. Cir. Ct. July 23, 2004); Nass-Romero v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 2012- NMCA 058, 279 P.3d 772 (N.M. Ct. App. 2012)).) The Stark and Nass-Romero courts analyzed the relevant statutory language and case law and concluded that the AGC factors should apply to the antitrust standing determination. Stark, 2004 Extra LEXIS 214, 2004 WL 1879003, at *3-4; Nass-Romero, 279 P.3d at 780-81. The IPPs do not identify any contrary authority in the case law or statutes of Michigan or New Mexico, and in fact concede that "New Mexico appears to use federal precedent as a guide for interpreting its antitrust laws." (IPP Opp. Tables B-C.) As a result, I conclude that the Michigan [\[\*\*125\]](#) Supreme Court and the New Mexico Supreme Court would apply the AGC factors. In addition, although the Stark court and the Nass-Romero court characterized the plaintiffs there as non-purchasers, see Stark, 2004 Extra LEXIS 214, 2004 WL 1879003, at *4; Nass-Romero, 279 P.3d at 780, there is no authority interpreting Michigan or New Mexico law to suggest that the courts' AGC analyses would be substantially different for indirect purchasers. Because the IPPs lack antitrust standing to assert federal antitrust claims, I conclude they also lack standing to assert antitrust claims under Michigan and New Mexico law.

vii. New York

Keurig cites a New York trial court decision applying the AGC factors to determine antitrust standing under the Donnelly Act to support its argument that the IPPs' Donnelly Act claim should be dismissed. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing Ho v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 3 Misc. 3d 1105[A], 787 N.Y.S.2d 677, 2004 NY Slip Op 50415[U], 2004 WL 1118534 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2004), aff'd, 16 A.D.3d 256, 793 N.Y.S.2d 8 (1st Dep't 2005)).) Keurig also notes that "the Donnelly Act—often called a 'Little Sherman Act'—should generally be construed in light of Federal precedent and given a different interpretation only where State policy, differences in the statutory language or legislative history justify such a result. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Abrams, 71 N.Y.2d 327, 520 N.E.2d 535, 539, 525 N.Y.S.2d 816 (N.Y. 1988). Although the Ho court did not engage in a thorough analysis of whether New York law requires application of the AGC factors, [**126] the First Department upheld the lower court's decision, and the IPPs do not identify any New York case law or statutory authority suggesting the AGC test should not be applied. Therefore, I "see no reason . . . to interpret the Donnelly Act differently than the Sherman Act with regard to antitrust standing," Gatt, 711 F.3d at 81, and I conclude that the IPPs fail to plausibly allege antitrust standing under the Donnelly Act.

viii. North Dakota

Keurig cites a North Dakota trial court case that purportedly applies the AGC factors to determine that plaintiffs did not have antitrust standing under North Dakota law. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing Beckler v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., No. 09-04-C-00030, 2004 WL 2115144, at *3 (N.D. Dist. Ct. Aug. 23, 2004)).) It is not apparent from a reading of Beckler that it applies the AGC factors. Rather, it cites AGC in [*261] passing in addressing an argument put forth by the defendants in that case. Beckler, 2004 WL 2115144, at *3 (citing to AGC in the context of the statement that "Defendants accepts [sic] [North Dakota's repeal of Illinois Brick], but argue the plaintiffs are not really 'indirect purchasers' and that despite the narrow rule of Illinois Brick, an anti-trust plaintiff must always have some legal 'standing' to bring, their claim"). The court's standing analysis does not apply the AGC factors, and its [**127] conclusion simply states "[a]s 'nonpurchasers' of defendants' debit card services to merchants, the Court believes that plaintiffs lack standing to sue for the alleged restraint of trade in such services. Their alleged injury is simply too remote." Id. Because Keurig's only authority from North Dakota is a trial court decision that references AGC in passing but does not actually apply the AGC factors, I cannot conclude that the North Dakota Supreme Court would apply the AGC factors to determine an indirect purchaser's antitrust standing.

ix. Oregon

In support of dismissal of the IPPs' Oregon antitrust claim on antitrust standing grounds, Keurig cites a federal district court case which applies the AGC factors to the plaintiffs' Oregon antitrust claims. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing Or. Laborers-Empl'r Health & Welfare Tr. Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 17 F. Supp. 2d 1170 (D. Or. 1998), aff'd, 185 F.3d 957 (9th Cir. 1999)).) However, as that court noted, "[n]either party [in that case] ha[d] suggested that the analysis for the Oregon antitrust claims should differ from that of the federal." Or. Laborers-Empl'r Health & Welfare Tr. Fund, 17 F. Supp. 2d at 1176 n.2. The question of which standard to apply to determine antitrust standing, therefore, was not raised by the parties or analyzed by the court. HN70[↑] Furthermore, the Oregon antitrust statute states that federal precedents are persuasive, [**128] but not binding. Or. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 646.715(2) (West) ("The decisions of federal courts in construction of federal law relating to the same subject shall be persuasive authority in the construction of [Oregon's antitrust statute].") Absent any authority from the Oregon state courts regarding the application of the AGC factors to determine antitrust standing under Oregon law, I cannot conclude that the Oregon Supreme Court would apply AGC.

x. South Dakota

Keurig cites to an oral bench decision from a South Dakota trial court applying the AGC factors to dismiss antitrust claims under South Dakota law. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing Tr. of Mot. Hr'g 54:4-55:1, Cornelison v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., No. Civ. 03-1350 (S.D. Cir. Ct. Sept. 28, 2004)).) Although the decision itself constitutes less than two pages of the transcript, it followed extensive briefing and oral argument regarding the issue of which standard to apply to determine state antitrust standing. See Tr. of Mot. Hr'g 54:4-54:7, Cornelison, No. Civ. 03-1350 ("[T]he Court has considered the numerous authorities that you have presented and the briefs you have submitted as well as the at least an hour and a half of oral argument."). HN71[↑] The decision is consistent with [**129] the instruction of the South Dakota Supreme Court that "great weight should be given to the federal cases interpreting the federal [antitrust] statute." Byre v. City of Chamberlain, 362 N.W.2d 69, 74 (S.D. 1985). The IPPs have presented no South Dakota authority suggesting the AGC factors should not be applied. As such, I conclude that the South Dakota Supreme Court would apply AGC to determine antitrust standing under South Dakota law.

Although the reasoning of the Cornelison court is not extensive, it is apparent [*262] that the court placed great weight on the risk of duplicative recovery in dismissing plaintiffs' claim. Tr. of Mot. Hr'g 54:13-54:17, Cornelison, No. Civ. 03-1350 (holding that "this suit would only threate[n] to duplicate recovery"). Because the same risk exists here, see supra Part IV.A.1.c, I conclude that the South Dakota Supreme Court would apply the AGC factors to dismiss the IPPs' South Dakota antitrust claim.

xi. Vermont

Keurig relies primarily on a Vermont trial court decision applying the AGC factors to support its argument that the IPPs lack antitrust standing under Vermont's antitrust statute, the Vermont Consumer Fraud Act ("VCFA"). (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing *Fucile v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., No. S1560-03 CNC, 2004 Vt. Super. LEXIS 42, 2004 WL 3030037, at *3 (Vt. Super. Ct. Dec. 27, 2004)* [**130].) However, Keurig's argument is belied by an earlier decision by the Vermont Supreme Court holding that HN72[<sup>1</sup>] "[n]owhere in the [VCFA] is there any requirement that the definition of who may sue under the Act must be consistent with the definition of who may sue under federal antitrust law." Elkins v. Microsoft Corp., 174 Vt. 328, 817 A.2d 9, 17 (Vt. 2002). Rather, "[t]he [Vermont] Legislature clearly intended the VCFA to have as broad a reach as possible in order to best protect consumers against unfair trade practices. This intent underlies a private remedy section that allows suits by 'any consumer' with no suggestion of a distinction between direct and indirect purchasers." Id. at 13. Because Keurig has provided no controlling authority contradicting Elkins, I conclude that the Vermont Supreme Court would not apply the AGC factors.<sup>43</sup>

xii. Wisconsin

Keurig cites a Wisconsin trial court decision in support of its argument that the IPPs lack antitrust standing under Wisconsin law. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing Strang v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., No. 03 CV 011323, 2005 WL 1403769 (Wis. Cir. Ct. Feb. 8, 2005)).) Although the Strang court provides a reasoned analysis for why it applied the AGC factors, it ignores the opinion of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals—the state's [**131] intermediate appellate court—in Obstetrical & Gynecological Assocs. of Neenah, S.C. v. Landig, 129 Wis. 2d 362, 384 N.W.2d 719 (Wis. Ct. App. 1986). See generally Strang, 2015 WL 1403769 (failing to cite Landig and noting that "[t]he parties agree that [the issue of antitrust standing] is an issue of first impression in Wisconsin"). Three years after the United States Supreme Court's decision in AGC, the Landig court held:

HN73[<sup>1</sup>] There is no need to make the direct-indirect distinction under [the Wisconsin antitrust statute]. Section 133.18(1) . . . explicitly allows any person injured directly or indirectly to sue upon this statute. Similar language is not found in the federal law. This, coupled with the legislature's instruction that we give the most liberal construction to achieve the aim of competition, compels us to the conclusion that an ultimate consumer who pays a higher price for goods and services indirectly due to a secret rebate comes within the ambit of the statute.

[*263] 384 N.W.2d at 723-24. In deciding that the end-consumer plaintiff had standing, the Landig court did not consult the AGC factors. Instead, it noted that the state and federal statutes had different wording and refused to draw a distinction between direct and indirect consumers in determining antitrust standing. Because the trial court in Strang appears not to have considered the opinion of [**132] the appellate court in Landig, I cannot conclude as Keurig urges that the Wisconsin Supreme Court would adopt the analysis in Strang.

<sup>43</sup> Even if Fucile controlled, it would not support Keurig's position. The Fucile court clearly stated "that the Vermont Supreme Court would also draw upon the standing factors in Associated General Contractors for guidance, at least to the extent that these factors are consistent with allowing 'indirect purchaser' standing." Fucile, 2004 Vt. Super. LEXIS 42, 2004 WL 3030037, at *3. Applying the AGC factors to dismiss an indirect purchaser suit would be inconsistent with allowing standing to indirect purchasers. Even under Fucile, then, Keurig's position is unavailing.

****

For the remaining states, Keurig concedes that they have not expressly applied AGC, but contends that they have provisions providing for harmonization in the interpretation of state antitrust law with federal antitrust law.<sup>44</sup> (IPP Def. Mem. Table B.) I address each in turn.

xiii. Arizona

HN74[↑] Arizona's harmonization provision permits, but does not require, interpretation of Arizona antitrust law in accordance with federal precedents. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 44-1412 ("[I]n construing this article, the courts may use as a guide interpretations given by the federal courts to comparable federal antitrust statutes."). In 2003, the Arizona Supreme Court considered the question of antitrust standing, and it did not apply the AGC factors. See Bunker's Glass Co. v. Pilkington PLC, 206 Ariz. 9, 16-17, 75 P.3d 99 \(2003\) (refusing to apply federal precedents in finding that the Arizona antitrust statute grants standing to indirect purchasers). I conclude, therefore, that the Arizona Supreme Court would not apply the AGC factors.

xiv. Mississippi

Keurig cites a Mississippi Supreme Court case in support of its argument that the IPPs' Mississippi antitrust claim should be [**133] dismissed on antitrust standing grounds. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing Owens Corning v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 868 So. 2d 331 \(Miss. 2004\).) Owens Corning assesses antitrust standing—specifically, whether plaintiff alleged antitrust injury—but does not review each of the AGC factors. See 868 So. 2d at 339-40. The fact that the court cites federal precedent to interpret "antitrust injury" does not mean that it would necessarily apply the AGC factors.

xv. New Hampshire

HN75[↑] Like Arizona, New Hampshire also has a permissive harmonization provision, N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 356:14 ("In any action or prosecution under this chapter, the courts may be guided by interpretations of the United States' antitrust laws."); however, the New Hampshire Supreme Court expressly adopted the Illinois Brick rule against indirect purchaser suits in Minuteman, LLC v. Microsoft Corp., 147 N.H. 634, 795 A.2d 833, 838 \(N.H. 2002\) (holding that "it is sound to limit antitrust lawsuits to direct purchasers" and that "the trial court did not err in following the Illinois Brick rule when interpreting [the New Hampshire antitrust statute]"). The IPPs cite LaChance v. U.S. Smokeless Tobacco Co., 156 N.H. 88, 931 A.2d 571 \(N.H. 2007\), to support their position that the New Hampshire Supreme Court would not apply the AGC factors. (IPP Opp. Table B.) However, the question before the LaChance court was "whether consumers, as indirect purchasers, may bring a cause of action under the [New Hampshire [**134] Consumer Protection Act]." Id. at 575. The court acknowledged that the question of whether indirect purchasers had standing to bring claims under the state's antitrust statute was decided in [*264] Minuteman. Id. at 576 ("We have, however, held that HN76[↑] indirect purchasers may not bring claims under the state antitrust statute." (citing Minuteman, 147 N.H. 634, 795 A.2d 833)). Because the IPPs bring their claim pursuant to the state antitrust statute, (IPP SAC ¶ 384 ("By reason of the conduct alleged herein, Keurig has violated New Hampshire Rev. Stat. §§ 356:1, et seq."), they lack antitrust standing under the New Hampshire Supreme Court's holding in Minuteman.

xvi. Nevada

Keurig cites the harmonization provision of Nevada as a basis on which to dismiss the IPPs' Nevada antitrust claim. (IPP Def. Mem. Table B (citing Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 598A.050).) HN77[↑] The harmonization provision states "[t]he provisions of this chapter shall be construed in harmony with prevailing judicial interpretations of the federal antitrust statutes." Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 598A.050. The IPPs do not identify any Nevada authority supporting their position on standing. Given the mandatory language of Nevada's harmonization provision and the lack of any contravening state authority, I conclude that the Supreme Court of Nevada would apply the AGC factors in accordance with federal precedent. [**135] The IPPs, therefore, lack antitrust standing under Nevada law.

xvii. West Virginia

HN78[<sup>45</sup>] West Virginia's harmonization provision states that "[t]his article shall be construed liberally and in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes." W. Va. Code Ann. § 47-18-16 (West). In 1990, the West Virginia Attorney General issued a legislative rule providing that "[a]ny person who is injured directly or indirectly by reason of a violation of the West Virginia Antitrust Act may bring an action for damages." W. Va. Code R. § 142-9-2 (internal citations omitted). The legislative rule further provides that "[t]he purpose of this rule is to allow persons who are indirectly injured by violations of the West Virginia Antitrust Act to maintain an action for damages." Id. § 142-9-1. It requires that "[t]his rule shall be liberally construed to effectuate the beneficial purposes of the West Virginia Antitrust Act." Id.

HN79[<sup>46</sup>] The Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia has held that "[o]nce a disputed regulation is legislatively approved, it has the force of a statute itself. Being an act of the West Virginia Legislature, it is entitled to more than mere deference; it is entitled to controlling weight." W. Va. Health Care Cost Review Auth. v. Boone Mem'l Hosp., 196 W. Va. 326, 472 S.E.2d 411, 414 \(W. Va. 1996\). West Virginia's [**136] legislative rule permitting indirect purchaser antitrust suits, therefore, carries the force of a statute. Despite the mandatory language used in West Virginia's harmonization provision, the subsequent controlling legislative rule, liberally construed, suggests that the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia would not apply AGC, or if it did, it would apply AGC more liberally than federal precedent would require.

****

To summarize, the IPPs lack antitrust standing with respect to their claims under the antitrust laws of Michigan, New Mexico, New York, South Dakota, New Hampshire, and Nevada. Keurig's motion to dismiss those claims is granted. For the remaining sixteen states, Keurig's standing-based argument fails because I cannot find that the states' highest courts would apply the AGC factors.<sup>45</sup> I therefore address [*265] Keurig's substantive challenges below.

b. Substantive Challenges to State Antitrust Claims

Of the claims from the remaining sixteen states, Keurig contends that the courts in Arizona, Iowa, Maine, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Vermont, and West Virginia interpret their state antitrust laws "in parallel with" federal antitrust laws. (IPP Def. [**137] Mem. 25.) The allegations in the IPP Second Amended Complaint overlap in relevant part with the allegations in the complaints of TreeHouse, Rogers, and the DPPs. Because Keurig's motion to dismiss the federal antitrust claims in those complaints is denied, see supra Part IV.A-B, I conclude that Keurig's motion to dismiss the state antitrust claims in the IPP Second Amended Complaint under the laws of Arizona, Iowa, Maine, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Vermont, and West Virginia should also be denied.

Keurig contends the antitrust laws of certain states contain additional or narrower requirements than the federal antitrust laws, requiring dismissal of the IPPs' claims under the laws of those states. (IPP Def. Mem. 25.) Keurig argues that the IPPs' antitrust claims under the laws of California, Kansas, and Tennessee should be dismissed because those laws do not permit claims based on a defendant's unilateral conduct. (Id. 25 n.32, Table D.) The IPP Second Amended Complaint, however, adequately alleges concerted conduct in those states. (See, e.g., IPP SAC ¶ 316 (California: "Keurig has entered into contracts, in concerted action with others, where the effect of such [**138] contract was to substantially lessen competition or tended to create a monopoly in a line of trade or commerce in California . . . ."); ¶ 340 (Kansas: "Keurig entered into a trust, a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, for the following purposes . . . ."); ¶ 431 (Tennessee: "Keurig has entered into arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations with persons or corporations . . . .").)

<sup>45</sup> Keurig did not include Minnesota, North Carolina, or Tennessee in Table B, which identified the states in which the AGC factors should be applied. I construe this omission as a concession that the IPPs have antitrust standing under the laws of Minnesota, North Carolina, and Tennessee.

Keurig further argues that the IPPs' antitrust claims under the laws of the District of Columbia, Tennessee, and Wisconsin all fail because the law in each of these states requires a specific nexus between defendant's conduct and intrastate commerce within those states. (IPP Def. Mem. 26.) Keurig contends that the IPPs have failed to plead allegations that establish a "substantial effect on intrastate commerce." (Id.).

HN80 [+] The courts of Tennessee and Wisconsin apply a "substantial effects" standard requiring that plaintiffs allege that a defendant's anticompetitive conduct had a "substantial effect" on intrastate commerce. See Meyers v. Bayer AG, 2007 WI 99, 303 Wis. 2d 295, 735 N.W.2d 448, 461 (Wis. 2007) ("[A] complaint under the Wisconsin Antitrust Act . . . is sufficient if it alleges [anticompetitive conduct] that substantially affected the [**139] people of Wisconsin and had impacts in [Wisconsin]."); Freeman Indus., LLC v. Eastman Chem. Co., 172 S.W.3d 512, 522 (Tenn. 2005) ("[C]ourts must decide whether the alleged anticompetitive conduct affects Tennessee trade or commerce to a substantial degree."). The analysis "does not involve mathematical nicety. Rather, the test is pragmatic, turning on the particular facts of the case." Freeman Indus., 172 S.W.3d at 523 (internal citation and quotation marks omitted).

[*266] The IPPs have alleged that Keurig's anticompetitive conduct had substantial effects on intrastate commerce in Tennessee and Wisconsin. Based on Keurig's internal documents for 2008, Keurig shipped at least forty-five brewers to a distributor in Tennessee and at least eighteen brewers to a distributor in Wisconsin over the span of less than a year. (IPP SAC ¶¶ 432, 445.) The same documents, the IPPs allege, list over 90 distributors of Keurig brewers in the Midwest region, which includes Wisconsin, and over seventy distributors of Keurig brewers in the Southeast region, which includes Tennessee. (Id.) Over a period shorter than one year, Keurig shipped more than 6,600 brewers to these distributors collectively. (Id.) The IPPs also allege that numerous retail outlets sell K-Cups to consumers in both Tennessee and Wisconsin. ([**140] Id.) These allegations raise a sufficient inference that Keurig's allegedly anticompetitive conduct substantially affected intrastate commerce in Tennessee and Wisconsin over the span of the multi-year conspiracy alleged by the IPPs.

Keurig cites a federal decision of the District of Maryland to support its argument that the IPPs have failed to plead a "substantial effect on intrastate commerce" in the District of Columbia. (IPP Def. Mem. Table E (citing Sun Dun, Inc. of Wash. v. Coca-Cola Co., 740 F. Supp. 381, 396 (D. Md. 1990))) Sun Dun, however, does not provide for a "substantial effects" standard, and Keurig has pointed to no relevant authority that does. Rather, the court in Sun Dun evaluated whether the plaintiff alleged a "sufficient nexus to the District of Columbia." 740 F. Supp. at 396. It held that the D.C. antitrust law applied because the plaintiff "asserted that it did much of its business in the District of Columbia, and thus it was possible that plaintiff had suffered harm there." Id.

The IPPs have alleged a sufficient nexus to the District of Columbia. The IPPs allege that based on internal Keurig documents, thousands of brewers were shipped to the Mid-Atlantic region, which includes the District of Columbia, (IPP SAC ¶ 329), and many retailers sell KCups [**141] to people in the District of Columbia, (id.) These allegations are sufficient to establish a nexus between Keurig's anticompetitive conduct and the District of Columbia.

HN81 [+] Unlike Tennessee, Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia, the antitrust law of Mississippi focuses on the location where the anticompetitive conduct occurred rather than the effects of such anticompetitive conduct or the broader nexus between the conduct and the state in question. See *In re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig., No. MDL 1332, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15612, 2003 WL 22070561, at *2 (D. Md. Aug. 22, 2003)* (interpreting a Mississippi Supreme Court case, Standard Oil Co. of Ky. v. State ex rel. Attorney Gen., 107 Miss. 377, 65 So. 468 (Miss. 1914), to hold that Mississippi law requires that "plaintiffs . . . allege[] at least some conduct by [defendant] which was performed wholly intrastate"). Both Keurig and the IPPs appear to agree with this interpretation of Mississippi law, (IPP Opp. Table E), as do I.

The IPPs contend that the IPP Second Amended Complaint "contains allegations of Keurig's significant activity in Mississippi." (Id.) However, the IPPs have failed to allege any intrastate conduct in Mississippi on the part of Keurig. The sole allegations in the IPP Second Amended Complaint with respect to any of Keurig's activity in Mississippi describe that Keurig has distributors across the Southeast region, including in Mississippi, [**142] to which Keurig distributed numerous brewers, and that numerous retail outlets sell K-Cups in Mississippi. (IPP SAC ¶ 367.) These allegations suggest interstate activity on the [*267] part of Keurig that might involve Mississippi as part of the Southeast region, not intrastate. The IPPs do not allege that Keurig itself manufactured or distributed any brewers or K-Cups from locations in Mississippi. Nor do the IPPs allege that they bought any brewers or K-Cups directly from Keurig in Mississippi. Moreover, any conspiracy alleged by IPPs is of an interstate nature:

The scheme alleged [in the IPP Second Amended Complaint] was formulated in and emanated from Vermont. Keurig, from its headquarters at 33 Coffee Lane in Waterbury, Vermont (where its principal executive offices, manufacturing, and distribution facilities are located), formulated, conceived of, and reached unlawful and anticompetitive agreements with its Roaster Competitors, Distributors, and Retailers that were intended to and did harm competition and consumers in every state and territory of the United States.

(Id. ¶ 109.) Because Mississippi law requires "at least some conduct" by Keurig that was performed wholly intrastate, In re Microsoft Corp., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15612, 2003 WL 22070561, at *2, I [**143] find that the IPPs have failed to state an antitrust claim under Mississippi law.

****

To summarize, Keurig's motion to dismiss the IPPs' ninth cause of action is granted with respect to claims brought under the laws of Michigan, Mississippi, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, and South Dakota. Keurig's motion to dismiss the IPPs' first cause of action is denied, and its motion to dismiss the ninth cause of action is denied with respect to claims brought under the laws of Arizona, California, the District of Columbia, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Tennessee, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

5. IPPs' California Unfair Competition Law Claim

Keurig also moves to dismiss the IPPs' ninth cause of action as it relates to their claim under the California Unfair Competition Law. (IPP Def. Mem. 25-26.) Keurig argues that dismissal is required because the claim is based on the same conduct as the IPPs' antitrust claim, which it argues should be dismissed. (Id. (citing Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp., 93 Cal. App. 4th 363, 375, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175 (2001)) (holding that "the determination that the conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade necessarily implies that the conduct is not 'unfair' toward consumers" under the [**144] California Unfair Competition Law).) Because I have concluded that the IPPs have adequately pleaded that Keurig's conduct was an unfair restraint of trade, I also conclude that they have adequately pleaded that it was unfair under the California Unfair Competition Law. Keurig offers no other basis on which to dismiss the claim. As such, the IPPs' California Unfair Competition Law claim survives Keurig's motion to dismiss.

6. IPPs' State Consumer Protection Law Claims

Keurig seeks dismissal of the IPPs' tenth cause of action, (IPP Def. Mem. 27), brought under the consumer protection and unfair trade practices laws of six states: Arkansas, California, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Mexico, and North Carolina, (IPP SAC ¶¶ 448-80). Keurig argues that because the IPPs have failed to allege conduct that violates the antitrust laws, they fail to state a claim under each state's consumer protection laws. (IPP Def. Mem. 27.) The IPPs contend that the state consumer protection laws are intended to be broadly construed [*268] to protect consumers and not to be limited by antitrust concepts. (IPP Opp. 15.)

Keurig does not explicitly state whether it takes the position that each state's consumer protection [**145] laws track, or should be interpreted to track, the antitrust laws of that state or the federal antitrust laws. (See IPP Def. Mem. 27.) Regardless, as discussed above, the IPPs' Second Amended Complaint is substantially similar to the complaints of TreeHouse, Rogers, and the DPPs, and so they have adequately alleged the substantive elements of an antitrust claim under both federal and state laws. See supra Part IV.A-B.<sup>46</sup> Therefore, the IPPs' tenth cause of action under the laws of Arkansas, California, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Mexico, and North Carolina survives.

7. IPPs' State Unjust Enrichment Claims

Keurig seeks dismissal of the IPPs' third and eleventh causes of action, (IPP Def. Mem. 27-28), brought under the unjust enrichment laws of eighteen states,<sup>47</sup> (IPP SAC ¶¶ 245-50, 481-516). HN83↑ The elements required to plead an unjust enrichment claim are generally the same under the laws of each of the relevant states. A claim for unjust enrichment requires 1) a benefit conferred upon defendant; 2) appreciation or knowledge of the benefit by defendant; and 3) acceptance of the benefit by the defendant under circumstances that make such \*\*146 acceptance inequitable. See, e.g., *Haz-Mat Response, Inc. v. Certified Waste Servs. Ltd.*, 259 Kan. 166, 910 P.2d 839, 847 \(Kan. 1996\); *Topaz Mut. Co. v. Marsh*, 108 Nev. 845, 839 P.2d 606, 613 \(Nev. 1992\); *Seegers v. Sprague*, 70 Wis. 2d 997, 236 N.W.2d 227, 230 \(Wis. 1975\).

For each state under the laws of which the IPPs bring an unjust enrichment claim, the IPPs have sufficiently alleged the elements of an unjust enrichment claim. The IPPs allege that through their [\[\*269\]](#) overpayments, they conferred a benefit upon Keurig, which Keurig knowingly accepted under circumstances that made such acceptance inequitable, namely that Keurig obtained the overpayments through unlawful and anticompetitive acts. (See, e.g., IPP SAC ¶ 483.) Keurig argues that the IPPs' unjust enrichment claims fail because the IPPs have failed to allege an antitrust claim. (IPP Def. Mem. 27-28.) As discussed, the IPPs have adequately pled antitrust claims under both state and federal laws. Therefore, their unjust enrichment claims do not fail on that basis.

Even if the IPPs had not alleged a viable antitrust claim, the sole authority on which Keurig relies for the proposition that an unjust enrichment claim hinges on a successful antitrust claim is a New York federal district court case interpreting New York law. (Id. at 28 (citing *Kramer v. Pollock-Krasner Found.*, 890 F. Supp. 250, 257 \(S.D.N.Y. 1995\))). At least one subsequent New York federal district court has interpreted New York law to permit a standalone unjust enrichment \*\*147 claim. *Sergeants Benevolent Ass'n Health & Welfare Fund v. Sanofi-Aventis U.S. LLP*, No. 08-CV-0179 \(SLT\)\(RER\), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 138790, 2012 WL 4336218, at *8 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 17, 2012), report and recommendation adopted in part, *20 F. Supp. 3d 305 \(E.D.N.Y. 2014\)*, aff'd, *806 F.3d 71 \(2d Cir. 2015\)*. Keurig has provided no authority under the laws of any other state supporting its position that the IPPs' unjust enrichment claims cannot survive without a viable antitrust claim. Therefore, even if the IPPs failed to allege an antitrust claim, their unjust enrichment claims would survive.

<sup>46</sup> Neither party has adequately addressed whether each state's consumer protection laws incorporate the principles of antitrust standing under either federal or state antitrust law. In a footnote, without citation, the IPPs assert that "[e]ach of [the six state laws under which they bring consumer protection claims] allows indirect purchasers to bring antitrust claims under their consumer protection laws." (IPP Opp. 15 n.17.) Keurig does not directly address this issue. Instead, Keurig cites to several cases to support the proposition that "[w]here conduct is alleged to harm consumers through its impact on competition, the conclusion that it does not violate the antitrust laws means that it does not harm consumers." (IPP Def. Mem. 27 (emphasis in original).) The IPPs in turn cite to several cases for the proposition that "the laws of each of these six states are intended to be broadly construed to protect consumers and not to be limited by the reach of traditional antitrust concepts." (IPP Opp. 15.) Only one of the cases cited by either party sheds light on whether any of the relevant states' consumer protection laws incorporate principles of antitrust standing. See *Meijer, Inc. v. Abbott Labs.*, 544 F. Supp. 2d 995, 1008 \(N.D. Cal. 2008\). HN82↑ According to the California federal court in Meijer, in order to state a claim under the *North Carolina Unfair Trade Practices Act \("NCUTPA"\)* a plaintiff must allege: "(1) an unfair or deceptive act or practice, or unfair method of competition, (2) in or affecting commerce, and (3) which proximately caused actual injury to the plaintiff or his business." Id. (quoting *Miller v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co.*, 112 N.C. App. 295, 435 S.E.2d 537, 542 \(N.C. Ct. App. 1993\)). The Meijer court applied a proximate cause standard to the plaintiff's NCUTPA claim. Id. (holding that the NCUTPA is a "comprehensive law designed to include within its reach the federal antitrust laws" (quoting *L.C. Williams Oil Co., Inc. v. Exxon Corp.*, 625 F. Supp. 477, 481 \(M.D.N.C. 1985\))).

Keurig next argues that the IPPs' unjust enrichment claims should fail under the laws of Arizona, the District of Columbia, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New York, and Wisconsin because those states require a direct relationship between the allegedly enriched and injured parties. (IPP Def. Mem. 28.) I address that claim with regard to each state in turn.

a. Arizona

Keurig cites City of Sierra Vista v. Cochise Enterprises, Inc., 144 Ariz. 375, 697 P.2d 1125, 1131 \(Ariz. Ct. App. 1984\), for the proposition that Arizona law requires a direct relationship between Keurig and the IPPs. HN84↑ That case is unavailing, as it simply states that a plaintiff must establish "a connection between the enrichment and the impoverishment." 697 P.2d at 1131. The case does not include a direct relationship between a plaintiff and defendant among the elements for \*\*148 an unjust enrichment claim. See id. at 1131-32. Moreover, other courts have noted that "Arizona law does not require either a direct causal connection between the enrichment and the impoverishment, or the transference of a direct enrichment from the plaintiff to the defendant." Doe v. Ariz. Hosp. & Healthcare Ass'n, No. CV 07-1292-PHX-SRB, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42871, 2009 WL 1423378, at \*13 \(D. Ariz. Mar. 19, 2009\) (internal quotation marks omitted). Therefore, the IPPs have alleged a sufficient connection to preserve their claim. (IPP SAC ¶ 483.)

b. District of Columbia

HN85↑ Keurig's lone authority in support of dismissal of the IPPs' D.C. unjust enrichment claim on the basis of a lack of a direct relationship is Fort Lincoln Civic Ass'n v. Fort Lincoln New Town Corp., 944 A.2d 1055, 1076 \(D.C. 2008\). Fort Lincoln holds that an unjust enrichment claim requires only that a plaintiff confers a benefit on a defendant, the defendant retains the benefit, and that retention was unjust. Id. This is nothing more than a recitation of certain of the elements of an unjust enrichment claim. It does not provide for a direct benefit requirement. See [\[\*270\] In re Auto. Parts Antitrust Litig., 50 F. Supp. 3d 869, 898 \(E.D. Mich. 2014\)](#) (rejecting that Fort Lincoln precludes indirect purchaser unjust enrichment claim under D.C. law). Therefore, the IPPs have sufficiently pled their unjust enrichment claim under D.C. law. (IPP SAC ¶ 487.)

c. Kansas

Keurig cites two cases in \*\*149 support of its argument that the IPPs' Kansas unjust enrichment claim should be dismissed for failure to allege a direct benefit. (IPP Def Mem. Table G (citing Babcock v. Carrothers Constr. Co., No. 94,471, 2005 Kan. App. Unpub. LEXIS 874, 2005 WL 3527117, at \*2-3 \(Kan. Ct. App. Dec. 23, 2005\); Spires v. Hosp. Corp. of Am., 289 F. App'x 269, 273-73 \(10th Cir. 2008\)).) The citation to each case is misplaced as neither supports the proposition for which it is cited. HN86↑ Babcock, an unpublished decision, does not stand for the proposition that an unjust enrichment claim requires a direct benefit. Rather, it holds that a sub-subcontractor may not bring an unjust enrichment claim against a contractor without privity of contract except in certain circumstances. Babcock, 2005 Kan. App. Unpub. LEXIS 874, 2005 WL 3527117, at \*2-3. Importantly, it relies upon a decision by the Kansas Supreme Court explicitly acknowledging that a direct relationship is not necessary to establish an unjust enrichment claim. See Haz-Mat Response, 910 P.2d at 847 ("[T]he theory of quasicontract and unjust enrichment . . . does not depend on privity."). Similarly, Spires is inapposite because its holding relies on the court's conclusion that plaintiffs did not allege that they "had actually conferred a benefit" on the defendant. Spires, 289 F. App'x at 273. HN87↑ Finally, other courts interpreting Kansas law have held that failure to plead a direct benefit is not grounds for dismissal of a Kansas unjust enrichment claim. See, e.g., In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., 851 F. Supp. 2d 867, 929-30 \(E.D. Pa. 2012\) (finding that "Kansas \*\*150 law does not mandate the conferral of a direct benefit under an unjust enrichment" (citing Peterson v. Midland Nat'l Bank, 242 Kan. 266, 747 P.2d 159, 166-67 \(Kan. 1987\))). The IPPs have therefore adequately alleged an unjust enrichment claim under Kansas law. (IPP SAC ¶ 491.)

d. Maine

Keurig relies primarily on two cases, one from the Maine Supreme Court and the other issued by the Maine Superior Court (the trial court in Maine), to argue that Maine requires a direct benefit to support an unjust enrichment claim. (IPP Def. Mem. Table G (citing Platz Assocs. v. Finley, 2009 ME 55, 973 A.2d 743, 751 \(Me. 2009); Rivers v. Amato, No. CIV. A. CV-00-131, 2001 Me. Super. LEXIS 296, 2001 WL 1736498, at *4 (Me. Super. Ct. June 22, 2001).) Platz is inapposite because the court's ruling relied upon the lack of any evidence on summary judgment that the defendant had actually received any benefit. Platz, 973 A.2d at 751 ("Indeed, the statements of material facts fail to demonstrate that [defendant] actually received and retained the architectural plans, and thus fail to demonstrate the central element of unjust enrichment, a benefit conferred.").

Rivers, a trial court decision, could be read as being more supportive of Keurig's argument, but I conclude that it does not require dismissal of the IPPs' Maine unjust enrichment claim. In Rivers, the plaintiff had contracted to purchase a parcel of land from the defendants. 2001 Me. Super. LEXIS 296, 2001 WL 1736498, at *1. After the plaintiff [**151] consulted with a third-party developer, the developer offered to purchase the parcel from the defendants for a higher price than the plaintiff had offered. Id. The defendants took the developer's offer, repudiating their contract with the plaintiff. Id. The plaintiff brought an unjust enrichment [*271] claim, arguing that by informing the developer of the parcel of land, he had generated the interest that led to the defendants receiving a higher price to the plaintiff's detriment. *Id. at *4*. The court found that the plaintiff's "indirect benefit theory" was "based on speculation" and thus unpersuasive. Id. While the IPPs here allege an indirect theory of benefit based upon the alleged passing on of overcharges through multiple layers of the distribution channel, I find that the indirect nature of the plaintiff's claim in Rivers is different in kind from the IPPs' claim. Based on the trial court's decision in Rivers, I cannot conclude that Maine's highest court would dismiss the IPPs' unjust enrichment claim based on its indirect nature; therefore, the claim survives.

e. Massachusetts

Keurig cites to two cases in support of its argument that the IPPs' Massachusetts unjust enrichment claim fails for failure [**152] to allege a direct benefit. (IPP Def. Mem. Table G (citing Sweeney v. DeLuca, No. 042338, 2006 Mass. Super. LEXIS 147, 2006 WL 936688, at *8 (Mass. Super. Ct. Mar. 16, 2006); Berry v. Greenery Rehab. & Skilled Nursing Ctr., No. CA923189, 1993 Mass. Super. LEXIS 57, 1993 WL 818564, at *3 (Mass. Super. Ct. Oct. 29, 1993).) Neither case supports Keurig's position, as both decisions dismiss the unjust enrichment claims due to the failure to establish any benefit conferred whatsoever. See Sweeney, 2006 Mass. Super. LEXIS 147, 2006 Mass. Super. LEXIS 147, 2006 WL 936688, at *8 ("The [plaintiffs] have not submitted any evidence indicating that [defendant] stood to benefit individually from the sale of the Woods Road Home."); Berry, 1993 Mass. Super. LEXIS 57, 1993 WL 818564, at *3 (holding that plaintiff was "unlikely to be able to prove a necessary element of her unjust enrichment claim, namely, an uncompensated benefit conferred on [defendant]"). The IPPs have alleged that Keurig actually benefited from the profits resulting from overpayments by the IPPs, (IPP SAC ¶ 495), and therefore, their Massachusetts claim survives.

f. Michigan

Keurig cites to an unpublished decision of the Michigan Court of Appeals—Michigan's intermediate appellate court—to support its argument that the IPPs' Michigan unjust enrichment claim must be dismissed. (IPP Def. Mem. Table G (citing A&M Supply Co. v. Microsoft Corp., No. 274164, 2008 Mich. App. LEXIS 433, 2008 WL 540883, at *2 (Mich. Ct. App. Feb. 28, 2008).) The court in A&M Supply Co. held that a class of indirect purchaser plaintiffs could not maintain a claim for unjust enrichment under Michigan law because "there [**153] was no direct receipt of any benefit by defendant here from the persons seeking class certification." 2008 Mich. App. LEXIS 433, 2008 WL 540883, at *2. The court reasoned that plaintiffs could point to no direct contact between the defendant and the class, nor could they show any direct payments between the two. Id. The IPPs have presented no countervailing authority from the Michigan courts. Rather, they have pointed out that A&M Supply Co. is an unpublished decision. (IPP Opp. Table G.) Although the decision is unpublished and not binding precedent, I conclude that the opinion is a strong predictor of how the Michigan Supreme Court would rule on the analogous facts presented here. Therefore, the IPPs have failed to allege an unjust enrichment claim under Michigan law.

g. Minnesota

Keurig cites to Schumacher v. Schumacher, 627 N.W.2d 725, 729 (Minn. Ct. App. 2001), to support its argument that the IPPs' Minnesota unjust enrichment claim fails. (IPP Def. Mem. Table G.) However, Shumacher is inapposite because it does not state that a benefit conferred must be direct. As such, the IPPs have [*272] adequately alleged a Minnesota unjust enrichment claim.

h. Nevada

Keurig's citations in support of its argument that the IPPs' Nevada unjust enrichment claim fails are similarly unpersuasive because neither requires [**154] a direct benefit. See Topaz Mut. Co., 839 P.2d at 613 (acknowledging that jury's consideration of indirect benefits may increase amount owed to plaintiff on its unjust enrichment claim); *Jack v. Ringleader Boxing Mgmt. Co., No. 2:14-CV-00318-JAD-PAL, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 161628, 2014 WL 6388845, at *2 (D. Nev. Nov. 14, 2014)* (requiring "a benefit conferred on the defendant by the plaintiff," without stating that the benefit must be direct). The IPPs' Nevada unjust enrichment claim therefore survives.

i. New York

Keurig relies on two federal court decisions from this district for its argument that the IPPs' New York unjust enrichment claims should be dismissed for failure to allege a direct relationship. (IPP Def. Mem. Table G (citing *Carmona v. Spanish Broad. Sys., Inc., No. 08 Civ. 4475(LAK), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26479, 2009 WL 890054, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 30, 2009); Redtail Leasing Inc. v. Bellezza, No. 95 Civ. 5191(JFK), 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14821, 1997 WL 603496, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 1997))*. Both cases require plaintiffs to allege "direct dealings or an actual, substantive relationship" with defendants. *Carmona, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26479, 2009 WL 890054, at *6* (internal quotation marks omitted); *Redtail Leasing, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14821, 1997 WL 603496, at *8*. Carmona, in turn, relies upon a New York Court of Appeals case that affirmed the dismissal of an indirect purchaser plaintiff class's unjust enrichment claim because "the connection between [the indirect purchaser plaintiffs and the defendant] is simply too attenuated to support such a claim." Sperry v. Crompton Corp., 8 N.Y.3d 204, 863 N.E.2d 1012, 1018, 831 N.Y.S.2d 760 (N.Y. 2007). Given the direct authority from the highest court in New York on this issue, I conclude that the IPPs' alleged relationship [**155] with Keurig is similarly too attenuated to support a claim of unjust enrichment under New York law.

The IPPs' citation to Cox v. Microsoft Corp., 8 A.D.3d 39, 40, 778 N.Y.S.2d 147 (1st Dep't 2004), does not alter this conclusion and does not negate the subsequent decision in Sperry from the Court of Appeals. In addition, the First Department—the intermediate appellate court in New York—in the Sperry litigation explicitly declined to follow Cox, and that decision not to follow Cox was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. See Sperry v. Crompton Corp., 26 A.D.3d 488, 489, 810 N.Y.S.2d 498 (2d Dep't 2006) ("We decline to follow the decision of the Appellate Division, First Department in Cox . . . ."), aff'd, 8 N.Y.3d 204, 863 N.E.2d 1012, 831 N.Y.S.2d 760.

j. Wisconsin

Keurig cites to a Wisconsin Supreme Court case in support of its argument that the IPPs cannot maintain an unjust enrichment claim under Wisconsin law. (IPP Def. Mem. Table G (citing Seegers, 236 N.W.2d at 231).) Seegers does not stand for the proposition that a plaintiff must confer a direct benefit on a defendant in order to bring an unjust enrichment claim. The court in Seegers concluded that the plaintiffs could not recover because the alleged conduct "ha[d] not left [defendant] enriched." 236 N.W.2d at 231. Here, the IPPs have alleged that Keurig has been enriched by the IPPs' alleged overpayments. (IPP SAC ¶ 515.) Therefore, the IPPs' Wisconsin unjust enrichment [**156] claim stands.

****

In summary, Keurig's motion to dismiss the IPPs' unjust enrichment claims under the laws of Michigan and New York is [*273] granted. Keurig's motion to dismiss the IPPs' unjust enrichment claims under the laws of Arizona, Arkansas, the District of Columbia, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Oregon, South Dakota, Vermont, and Wisconsin is denied.

8. Nationwide Application of Vermont Law

The IPPs bring their Vermont antitrust and unjust enrichment claims on behalf of a nationwide class. (IPP SAC ¶¶ 225-50.) Keurig failed to challenge in its opening brief whether consumers in states other than Vermont may bring claims under Vermont law, only raising the challenge it after the IPPs addressed the issue in their opposition. (See IPP Def. Reply 6.) HN88 [ ] Although "as a general rule, courts will not consider arguments raised for the first time in a reply brief," Estate of Ungar v. Palestinian Auth., 451 F. Supp. 2d 607, 611 (S.D.N.Y. 2006), the IPPs clearly addressed the issue, and therefore were not prejudiced by Keurig's delayed assertion of the challenge in its reply. Nevertheless, whether the IPPs may bring Vermont law claims on behalf of a nationwide class is more properly addressed at the class-certification [**157] stage, and thus, I reserve decision on that issue at this juncture.

V. Conclusion

For the reasons stated herein, Keurig's motions to dismiss:

- (1) the Rogers Amended Complaint is DENIED;
- (2) the TreeHouse Amended Complaint is DENIED;
- (3) the DPP Amended Complaint is DENIED;
- (4) the IPP Second Amended Complaint is DENIED with respect to the IPPs' First, Second, and Third Claims for Relief;
- (5) the IPP Second Amended Complaint is GRANTED with respect to the IPPs' Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth Claims for Relief;
- (6) the IPP Second Amended Complaint is DENIED with respect to the IPPs' Ninth Claim for Relief as to claims brought under the laws of Arizona, California, the District of Columbia, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Tennessee, West Virginia, and Wisconsin;
- (7) the IPP Second Amended Complaint is GRANTED with respect to the IPPs' Ninth Claim for Relief as to claims brought under the laws of Michigan, Mississippi, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, and South Dakota;
- (8) the IPP Second Amended Complaint is DENIED with respect to the IPPs' Tenth Claim for Relief;
- (9) the IPP Second Amended Complaint is GRANTED with respect to [**158] the IPPs' Eleventh Claim for Relief as to claims brought under the laws of Michigan and New York; and
- (10) the IPP Second Amended Complaint is DENIED with respect to the IPPs' Eleventh Claim for Relief as to claims brought under the laws of Arizona, Arkansas, the District of Columbia, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Oregon, South Dakota, and Wisconsin.

[\[\*1324\] ORDER ON MOTION TO DISMISS COUNTS ONE, FOUR, AND FIVE IN PLAINTIFF'S AMENDED COMPLAINT](#)

THIS CAUSE is before the Court upon Defendants CVS Pharmacy, Inc. ("CVS") and Wellpartner, LLC's ("Wellpartner") (together, "Defendants") Motion to Dismiss Counts One, Four, and Five in Plaintiff's Amended Complaint, ECF No. [127] (the "Motion"). Plaintiff Sentry Data Systems, Inc. ("Sentry" or "Plaintiff") filed a response, ECF No. [139] ("Response"), to which Defendants filed a reply, ECF No. [147] ("Reply"). The Court has carefully considered the Motion, all opposing and supporting submissions, the record in this case and the applicable law, and is otherwise [*1325] fully advised.<sup>1</sup> For the reasons set forth below, the Motion is denied.

I. BACKGROUND

The Court set forth a detailed factual background in its previous Order on Defendants' first Motion to Dismiss, ECF No. [115] ("Order"). [***3] For purposes of the instant Motion, the relevant facts are set forth below. Plaintiff is a developer and provider of information technology systems that assist certain hospitals and hospital-like entities—which the parties refer to as "covered entities"—in monitoring compliance with a federal drug pricing program, the 340B Program. ECF No [121] ¶ 1<sup>2</sup>; see also Public Health Services Act, 42 U.S.C. § 256b. Sentry has developed tracking software to assist covered entities in managing their prescription inventory, tracking reimbursements and rebates, and maintaining records of eligible drugs and patients. Id. ¶¶ 69-71. Sentry's products further help covered entities comply with self-auditing requirements of the 340B Program, as well as respond to reporting inquiries from the Health Resources and Services Administration ("HRSA"). This case arises as a result of CVS's acquisition of Wellpartner, one of Sentry's competitors, and the subsequent announcement by CVS that all covered entities seeking to maintain CVS as a contract pharmacy generally, whether for retail or specialty drugs, must use Wellpartner for their 340B tracking and program administration.

In the initial Complaint, ECF No. [1], Sentry asserted [***4] nine causes of action: unlawful tying in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1 (Count I); violation of Florida's Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA") (Count II); breach of contract (Count III); tortious interference with contract (Count IV); tortious interference with business relationships (Count V); misappropriation of trade secrets in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1836 and Fla. Stat. § 688.002 (Counts VI-VII); Florida common law conversion of confidential information and proprietary information (Count VIII); and Florida common law unfair competition (Count IX). CVS moved to dismiss the entire Complaint, ECF No. [43], and following full briefing and oral argument, ECF No. [111], the Court granted the first motion to dismiss in part. See Order, ECF No. [115]. In pertinent part, the Court determined that Plaintiff had failed to clearly allege a relevant geographic market with respect to its unlawful tying claim and dismissed Plaintiff's Sherman Act claim asserted in Count I. Id. Accordingly, the Court granted Plaintiff leave to replead the Sherman Act claim. Id. The Court denied the motion to dismiss with respect to Plaintiff's tortious interference claims, finding that they were not preempted by the Florida Uniform Trade Secrets Act ("FUTSA") and otherwise adequately pled.

Plaintiff filed its Amended Complaint, ECF No. [121], on September 10, 2018, asserting seven causes of action, including unlawful tying in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1 (Count I); breach of contract (Count III); tortious interference with contract (Count IV); tortious interference with business relationships (Count V); and misappropriation of trade secrets in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1836 [***5] and Fla. Stat. § 688.002 (Counts VI-VII).<sup>3</sup> In the instant Motion, [*1326] Defendants seek dismissal of the unlawful tying claim asserted in Count I of the Amended Complaint, and Counts IV and V for failure to state a claim, and the tortious interference claim in Count V for the additional reason that it is preempted by FUTSA.

---

<sup>1</sup> In the Response, Plaintiff requests oral argument. However, because the Court previously heard argument on Defendants' first motion to dismiss, further argument on the issues involved is not necessary.

<sup>3</sup> The Court previously dismissed Plaintiff's claims asserted in Counts II, VIII, and IX based on preemption, and therefore, Plaintiff does not reassert those claims in the Amended Complaint. See Order, ECF No. [115].

To survive a motion to dismiss brought pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\), a claim "must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face,'" meaning that it must contain "factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). While a court must accept well-pleaded factual allegations as true, "conclusory allegations . . . are not entitled to an assumption [**6] of truth—legal conclusions must be supported by factual allegations." Randall v. Scott, 610 F.3d 701, 709-10 (11th Cir. 2010). "[T]he pleadings are construed broadly," Levine v. World Fin. Network Nat'l Bank, 437 F.3d 1118, 1120 (11th Cir. 2006), and the allegations in the complaint are viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, Bishop v. Ross Earle & Bonan, P.A., 817 F.3d 1268, 1270 (11th Cir. 2016). In addition, a court considering a Rule 12\(b\) motion is generally limited to the facts contained in the complaint and attached exhibits, including documents referred to in the complaint that are central to the claim. Wilchcombe v. TeeVee Toons, Inc., 555 F.3d 949, 959 (11th Cir. 2009); see Maxcess, Inc. v. Lucent Techs., Inc., 433 F.3d 1337, 1340 (11th Cir. 2005) ("[A] document outside the four corners of the complaint may still be considered if it is central to the plaintiff's claims and is undisputed in terms of authenticity.") (citing Horsley v. Feldt, 304 F.3d 1125, 1135 (11th Cir. 2002)). Overall, the question is not whether the claimant "will ultimately prevail . . . but whether his complaint [is] sufficient to cross the federal court's threshold." Skinner v. Switzer, 562 U.S. 521, 530, 131 S. Ct. 1289, 179 L. Ed. 2d 233 (2011).

III. ANALYSIS

A. Unlawful tying

As previously stated, the Court dismissed Plaintiff's original Sherman Act claim because it failed to articulate a relevant geographic market. While the Court previously noted that Plaintiff was not alleging a per se tying claim in its original complaint, Plaintiff now contends that Defendants' conduct constitutes a per se unlawful tying arrangement or, in the alternative, is unlawful under the rule [**7] of reason. ECF No. [121] ¶ 107. Regardless, under either theory, Plaintiff must sufficiently allege market power in a relevant geographic market. In the Motion, Defendants argue that the Amended Complaint lacks sufficient factual allegations to plausibly show that CVS has market power in a properly defined relevant geographic market.

"A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461-62, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). "A tying arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act if the seller has market power [*1327] and the tying arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market." Palmyra Park Hosp., Inc. v. Phoebe Putney Mem'l Hosp., 604 F.3d 1291, 1296 n.4 (11th Cir. 2010).

The Eleventh Circuit has noted that "the essence of illegality in a tying arrangement is the wielding of monopolistic leverage [by which] a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next." Kypa v. McDonald's Corp., 671 F.2d 1282, 1284 (11th Cir. 1982) (citation omitted) (quoting Times-Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953))). Thus, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the seller of the products "forced or coerced the buyer into purchasing the tied product" that "he [**8] did not want or would have preferred to buy elsewhere on other terms." Tic-X-Press, Inc. v. Omni Promotions Co. of Ga., 815 F.2d 1407, 1415-16 (11th Cir. 1987); see also Jefferson Par. Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984), abrogated on other grounds by III. Tool Works Inc. v. Indep. Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006) (noting the "essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms").

However, not every tying arrangement violates the Sherman Act's prohibition against restraint of trade. Jefferson, 466 U.S. at 9; see also 15 U.S.C. § 1 ("Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations is declared to be illegal."). "Courts have long recognized that Congress intended to prohibit only unreasonable restraints." Metzler v. Bear Auto. Serv. Equip. Co., 19 F. Supp. 2d 1345, 1360 \(S.D. Fla. 1998\) (citing Southern Card & Novelty, Inc. v. Lawson Mardon Label, 138 F.3d 869, 874 \(11th Cir. 1998\)). "Certain tying arrangements, however, pose a predictable and unacceptable risk of stifling competition and therefore are unreasonable per se . . . [but i]n the Eleventh Circuit, the per se rule is applied reluctantly, and only when experience with a particular type of restraint enables the court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it." [\[\*\*9\] Id.](#) (citations omitted); see also Jacobs v. Tempur-Pedic Int'l, Inc., 626 F.3d 1327, 1334 \(11th Cir. 2010\) ("Examples of such per se illegality include horizontal price fixing among competitors, group boycotts, and horizontal market division—business relationships that, in the court's experience, virtually always stifle competition."). Therefore, most antitrust claims are analyzed using a "rule of reason," which requires a determination as to the reasonableness of the restraint imposed on competition by the practice at issue. Id. (citation omitted).

In support of their claims, Section One plaintiffs must define both (1) a geographic market and (2) a product market. Jacobs, 626 F.3d at 1336. Although the parameters of the relevant market are generally considered a question of fact, a plaintiff "still must present enough information in [its] complaint to plausibly suggest the contours of the relevant geographic and product markets." Id. (citing Thompson v. Metro. Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566, 1573 \(11th Cir. 1991\)). These considerations are tempered by the Eleventh Circuit's determination that "Rule 12(b)(6) dismissals are particularly disfavored in fact-intensive antitrust cases." Spanish Broad. Sys. of Fla., Inc. v. Clear Channel Commc'n's, Inc., 376 F.3d 1065, 1070 \(11th Cir. 2004\) (citing Quality Foods de Centro Am., S.A. v. Latin Am. Agribusiness Dev. Corp., C.A., 711 F.2d 989, 994-95 \(11th Cir. 1983\)); see In re Blue Cross Blue Shield Antitrust Litig., No. 2:13-CV-20000-RDP, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99705, 2017 WL 2797267, at \*2 n.1 \(N.D. Ala. June 28, 2017\) (noting that courts in the Eleventh Circuit continue to apply this rule even after Twombly).

Defendants [\[\*\*10\]](#) do not challenge the sufficiency of the allegations in the Amended Complaint regarding product market. Rather, Defendants argue that Plaintiff fails to adequately allege a relevant geographic market. With respect to the geographic market, a plaintiff must plead a geographic market that "correspond[s] to the commercial realities of the industry, [is] economically significant . . . and include[s] the area in which consumers can practically seek alternative sources of the product." Q Club Resort & Residences Condo. Ass'n, Inc v. Q Club Hotel, LLC, No. 09-CV-60911, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 147051, 2010 WL 11454483, at \*2 \(S.D. Fla. Jan. 6, 2010\) (citations omitted).

The Court previously found that while the allegations in the Complaint demonstrated CVS's power, leverage, and influence over some covered entities, some contract pharmacy markets, and some retail pharmacy markets in certain cities, they nevertheless did not plausibly suggest the contours of a relevant geographic market as required for a tying claim.

i. Plaintiff sufficiently alleges a national market

In the instant Motion, Defendants first argue that Plaintiff's allegations are again insufficient because the relevant geographic market cannot be both national and local, and that in any event, Plaintiff's national market theory is contradicted by allegations regarding customer behavior. Upon [\[\*\*11\]](#) review, the Court disagrees and finds the allegations are sufficient with respect to a national market.

In the Amended Complaint, Plaintiff alleges that there is a relevant national market because CVS operates nationally, competes with other national pharmacy chains, contracts with national and regional health insurers, and contracts with covered entities for provision of 340B contract pharmacy services nationally. ECF No. [121] ¶¶ 33, 112. Plaintiff also alleges that CVS operates an extensive nationwide retail pharmacy, specialty pharmacy, and pharmacy benefits manager operation. Id. ¶ 36. In addition to Plaintiff's allegations regarding CVS's nationwide footprint, Plaintiff also alleges that covered entities seek to contract with contract pharmacies located both in close geographic proximity to their locations and across the country. Id. ¶ 112. Plaintiff alleges further that services of contract pharmacies distant from covered entities' physical locations are complementary, and not substitutes for, contract pharmacies in closer proximity, but that covered entities need contract pharmacies located in close proximity to their patients' location and they cannot turn to contract pharmacies [**12] located outside the relevant local markets. Id. ¶ 115. Defendant contends that these allegations are contradictory, but the Court finds that they are not.

In United States v. Grinnell Corporation, 384 U.S. 563, 575, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966), the Supreme Court found that the relevant geographic market for the services involved was national, noting that despite the local nature of the actual provision of services, "the broader national market [ ] reflects the reality of the way in which [the defendant companies] built and conduct their business." Id. at 575-76. Similarly here, there is not a discrete product involved, but a service—namely 340B contract pharmacy services. As such, Plaintiff contends that some of CVS's contract pharmacy operations are local and that covered entities [*1329] for practical reasons may prefer to deal with contract pharmacies close to their patient populations. Nevertheless, the alleged competitive advantages that CVS enjoys from its national presence in retail, pharmacy benefits management, provision of contract pharmacy services for specialty pharmaceuticals to covered entities located across the country, and CVS's contracts for provision of pharmacy services across state lines with generally applicable price and service terms, serve to knit the alleged local [**13] markets together into a relevant national market. Thus, the allegations of a national market are not incongruous with allegations regarding local markets. At this juncture, construed in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, the allegations regarding a relevant national market are sufficient.

ii. Plaintiff sufficiently alleges local markets

Defendants argue next that the Amended Complaint fails to define relevant local markets. The Court disagrees. Indeed, relevant geographic markets need not be defined by "metes and bounds" and "cannot [ ] be defined with scientific precision . . ." United States v. Conn. Nat'l Bank, 418 U.S. 656, 669, 94 S. Ct. 2788, 41 L. Ed. 2d 1016 (1974). As the Court has already noted, "the parameters of a given market are questions of fact, . . . [and] antitrust plaintiffs . . . must present enough information . . . to plausibly suggest the contours of the relevant geographic and product markets." Jacobs, 626 F.3d at 1336 (internal citation and quotations omitted). Here, Plaintiff specifically alleges that the twenty-two core-based statistical areas or "CBSAs" it identifies in which CVS has a 30% or greater share of contract pharmacy locations as the relevant local markets. ECF No. [121] ¶ 114. In addition, Plaintiff alleges that the "local geographic markets relevant to this [**14] action [ ] are no broader than each of the 22 individual CBSAs" that Plaintiff identifies, and "Sentry has existing covered entity customers in more than half of the identified CBSAs, and potential customers in all of the identified CBSAs." Id. ¶¶ 114, 117. As such, construed in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, the allegations are sufficient to state relevant local markets.

iii. Market power

Defendants contend that Plaintiff fails to plead market power in any relevant market. "[I]n all cases involving a tying arrangement, the plaintiff must prove that defendant has market power in the tying product." III. Tool Works Inc., 547 U.S. at 46. Here, the tying product or services is contract pharmacy services. In order to state a Sherman Act claim based upon unlawful tying, a plaintiff must allege five elements to state a tying agreement: "(1) a tying and a tied product; (2) evidence of actual coercion by the seller that in fact forced the buyer to purchase the tied product; (3) that the seller [has] sufficient market power in the tying product market to force the buyer to accept the tied product; (4) anticompetitive effects in the tied market; and (5) involvement of a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in [**15] the tied product market." Amey, Inc. v. Gulf Abstract & Title, Inc., 758 F.2d 1486, 1502-03 (11th Cir. 1985).<sup>4</sup> "In order to prove this anticompetitive effect on the market, the plaintiff may either prove that the defendants' behavior had an actual detrimental effect [*1330] on competition, or that the behavior had the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition." Spanish Broad. Sys. of Fla., Inc., 376 F.3d at 1072 (quoting Levine v. Cent. Fla. Med. Affiliates, Inc., 72 F.3d 1538, 1551 (11th Cir. 1996)) (quotations omitted). "At a minimum, [showing potential for genuinely adverse effects on competition] requires a plaintiff to define the relevant market and establish that the defendants possessed power in that market." Id. (quoting Maris Distrib. Co. v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 302 F.3d 1207, 1213 (11th Cir. 2002)) (quotations omitted).

<sup>4</sup> The Court notes that Defendants' challenge to the sufficiency of the allegations regarding market power appears to relate to the third element of an unlawful tying claim, while Plaintiff appears to understand the challenge as one relating to the fourth element. However, analysis of both elements requires a showing of market power. As such, the distinction is without a difference for purposes of the instant Motion.

"Market power is the ability to raise price significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business." Jacobs, 626 F.3d at 1339 (citation omitted). However, "[m]arket power, while necessary to show adverse effect indirectly, alone is insufficient. A plaintiff seeking to use market power as a proxy for adverse effect must show market power, plus some other ground for believing that the challenged behavior could harm competition in the market . . ." Spanish Broad. Sys. of Fla., Inc., 376 F.3d at 1073 (citation omitted). In addition, "market share is frequently used in litigation as a surrogate for market power." Id. at 1340 (citation omitted). The relevant markets in the instant case are a national and local [**16] 340B contract pharmacy services markets. The Court considers the sufficiency of the allegations with respect to each in turn.

Defendants argue specifically that Plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged CVS's market share of the national 340B contract pharmacy market, and that Plaintiff's allegations regarding retail market share are insufficient to establish market power in the relevant market. In response, Plaintiff contends that the Amended Complaint alleges direct evidence of CVS's market power as a contract pharmacy nationally and locally, demonstrated by Plaintiff's allegations regarding specific customers who felt they were forced to purchase the tied product, 340B solutions provider services, from Defendants to gain access to the tying product, contract pharmacy services. See ECF No. [121] ¶¶ 94-95, 108-11, 120-21. Plaintiff also argues that it need only allege that CVS has market power over some covered entities, relying upon Tic-X-Press, Inc.

However, the court in Tic-X-Press also noted that "[i]n addition, market power requires a showing that would-be competitors in the tied market cannot themselves offer the tying product on competitive terms: that is, that the seller has some [**17] cost advantage over rivals in producing the tying product or that there are substantial entry barriers into the tying product market." 815 F.2d at 1420. With respect to market power, Plaintiff alleges that CVS is the second largest contract pharmacy and has increased its contract pharmacy locations by 281% since 2013. ECF No. [121] ¶ 34. Plaintiff alleges further that CVS is a dominant firm in the 340B contract pharmacy market due to its leading position in three related markets—retail pharmacy, specialty pharmacy, and pharmacy benefits manager ("PBM") markets. Id. ¶ 36. According to Plaintiff, CVS held approximately 23.8% of the United States retail pharmacy market, id. ¶ 37, and CVS's dominance in the dispensing of specialty pharmaceuticals is growing. Id. ¶ 40. Plaintiff then provides numerous allegations regarding CVS's status as a preferred or exclusive provider of specialty pharmaceuticals for various insurers. Id. ¶¶ 44-61. Furthermore, Plaintiff attaches a list of 365 covered entities, that as of September 2018, are dependent upon CVS for 30% or more of their contract pharmacy network, and states that CVS has market power over each one listed. See id. ¶ 65; Exhibit A, ECF No. [121-1]. Thus, [**18] the inference Plaintiff would have the Court draw from the allegations is that because of CVS's [*1331] position in the retail pharmacy, specialty pharmacy, and pharmacy benefits manager ("PBM") markets, it necessarily possesses requisite market power in the contract pharmacy services market nationally.

However, the inference is belied by other allegations in the Amended Complaint. Plaintiff alleges that CVS competes on a national level to offer 340B contract pharmacy services with other national chain pharmacies, id. ¶ 112, and acknowledges that six retail pharmacy chains, including CVS, Walgreens, Walmart, Rite Aid, Kroger, and Albertsons collectively account for two thirds of 340B contract pharmacy locations. ECF No. [121] ¶ 34. In addition, Plaintiff concedes that Walgreens "is the single largest contract pharmacy" and that covered entities view Walgreens, in addition to CVS, as a "must have" 340B contract pharmacy services provider. Id. ¶¶ 34-35. These affirmative allegations conflict with Plaintiff's contention that CVS wields superior market power in the contract pharmacy market nationally. Indeed, the Amended Complaint contains no allegations giving rise to any plausible barriers to [**19] entry given that five other pharmacy chains, along with CVS, dominate a total of two-thirds of the relevant market nationally.

In addition, Plaintiff's reliance on Exhibit A does not lead to the plausible inference that CVS possesses the requisite market share specifically in a national 340B contract pharmacy services market. Exhibit A to the Amended Complaint does not inform whether CVS holds a significant share of the relevant market—merely because CVS possesses a large proportion of contract pharmacy locations in a contract pharmacy network in any given locality, especially where there are no allegations that 340B contract pharmacy services are provided on an exclusive basis. Indeed, Plaintiff affirmatively alleges that more than 6,000 covered entities participated in the 340B program in 2017, see ECF No. [121] ¶ 12, but the information in Exhibit A pertains to only 365 covered entities nationwide, or a little over 6% of covered entities participating in the 340B program, which belies Plaintiff's assertion that CVS possesses market power nationally. See Jefferson, 466 U.S. at 26-29 (finding 30% market share to be insufficient).

Similarly, considering the disparate allegations in the aggregate do not plausibly [**20] allege national market power. For example, while CVS may enjoy a dominant position in the specialty pharmaceutical business, the allegations in the Amended Complaint acknowledge that four of its competitors also have access to significant numbers of FDA-approved limited distribution drugs. See id. ¶ 41.

Market power can also exist where sellers possess unique products that competitors are unable to offer. Jefferson, 466 U.S. at 17. But, for similar reasons, the allegations regarding CVS's unique position in the market that allows CVS to offer contract pharmacy services that rivals cannot offer are not sufficient to allege the requisite market power in a national market. The "question is whether the seller has some advantage not shared by his competitors in the market for the tying product. Without any such advantage differentiating his product from that of his competitors, the seller's product does not have the kind of uniqueness considered relevant . . ." United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterps., Inc., 429 U.S. 610, 620-21, 97 S. Ct. 861, 51 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1977\). While Plaintiff alleges CVS's superior market power in three related markets, the inference Plaintiff would have the Court draw regarding a national market relevant to its antitrust claim is undercut by Plaintiff's affirmative allegations with respect [**21] to the other pharmacy [*1332] chains specifically in the context of contract pharmacy services. Thus, the Amended Complaint fails to plausibly allege that CVS possesses the requisite market power in a national market.

Nevertheless, the Court finds that at this juncture, the allegations regarding market power in the local contract pharmacy services markets are sufficient. Specifically, Plaintiff alleges that in the twenty-two CBSAs identified in the Amended Complaint, CVS possesses at least 30% of the 340B contract pharmacies. ECF No. [121] ¶ 114. In addition, Plaintiff alleges that covered entities draw from local markets that are limited by their patients' desire to access healthcare in proximity to their homes and workplaces, and therefore contract with contract pharmacies that can serve local patient populations, and more specifically, that covered entities within the CBSAs draw a substantial majority of their patients from within a thirty-mile radius. Id. ¶¶ 114-15. Moreover, Plaintiff asserts that even though covered entities may also deal with contract pharmacies across the country, these services are not a substitute for the local contract pharmacy services, and therefore covered entities [**22] need contract pharmacies in close proximity to their patient populations. Id. ¶ 115. Collectively, these allegations are sufficient to plausibly state that CVS possesses market power in the twenty-two local markets identified in the Amended Complaint.

B. Tortious interference

Finally, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's claims for tortious interference asserted in Counts IV and V should be dismissed for failure to state a claim because tortious interference claims cannot be based on the same conduct underlying a failed antitrust claim,<sup>5</sup> and that Count V is preempted by FUTSA to the extent that it is based upon the alleged theft of confidential information. Defendants previously sought dismissal of Plaintiff's tortious interference claims for failure to state a claim, which the Court rejected. The Court expressly held that because the claims of tortious interference are not comprised of allegations of trade secret misappropriation alone, they are not preempted by FUTSA. See ECF No. [115]. Similarly, in the Amended Complaint, the tortious interference claims are <sup>5</sup> The Court acknowledges that it accepted Defendants' argument at oral argument on the first motion to dismiss that the tortious interference claim rises and falls on the tying claim, see ECF No. [112] at 20; however, the Court did not base its ruling upon this argument, and therefore did not address it in its previous order, ECF No. [115].

not premised solely upon Defendants' purported violations of antitrust law, and in any event, the antitrust claim here survives. [**23]

As such, Defendants' Motion improperly raises arguments which the Court has already considered and rejected, and Defendants' arguments on this point are not well-taken.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth, the Motion, ECF No. [127], is DENIED. Defendants shall file their Answer to the Amended Complaint on or before April 15, 2019.

DONE AND ORDERED in Chambers at Miami, Florida, on April 3, 2019.
